I. DEFINITION AND CLASSES.

An improvement, or betterment, as it is otherwise known, is an improvement on realty which is more extensive than ordinary repairs, and enhances in a substantial degree the value of the property.[1] Improvements have been divided into three classes: (1) Necessary improvements, or those made to prevent loss or deterioration of the property; (2) beneficial improvements, or those that are not designed to preserve the property, yet enhance its value or rent; (3) voluntary improvements, or those which serve merely for ornament.[2] But when the term "improvements" is used, reference is generally had to those only which are permanent or beneficial.[3]

II. NATURE AND INCIDENTS.

A. Nature and Effect — 1. In General. Improvements for which compensation may be claimed by a bona fide occupant of another's property[4] are such only as are made in good faith,[5] and are permanent,[6] and enhance the value

1. See Anderson L. Dict. tit. "Betterment"; Black L. Dict.; Bouvier L. Dict.; Vaughan v. Cravens, 1 Head (Tenn.) 108, 73 Am. Dec. 163; U. S. v. Budd, 43 Fed. 630; Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park v. Colt, 22 Ont. App. 1.

An "improvement" under the Arkansas land system does not mean a general enhancement of the value of the tract from the occupant's operations. All works which are directed to the creation of homes for families, or which are substantial steps toward bringing lands into cultivation, have, in their results, the specific character of improvements. Canada.— Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park v. Colt, 22 Ont. App. 1; Morton v. Lewis, 16 U. C. C. P. 485.

See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Improvements," § 1. See also EJECTMENT, 15 Cyc. 221.

Permanent improvement defined.— A permanent improvement is something done or put upon the land by the occupant which he cannot remove, either because it has become physically impossible to separate it from the land, or, in contemplation of law, it has been annexed to the soil and become a part of the freehold. Stark v. Starr, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,307, 1 Sawy. 15.

Particular improvements for which compensation may be claimed.—A sidewalk alongside the property which is necessary or ordered by statute or ordinance (Hentig v. Redden, 38 Kan. 496, 16 Pac. 820. But see Stark v. Starr, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,307, 1 Sawy. 15); a well (Morton v. Lewis, 16 U. C. C. P. 485); an apple orchard (Donehoo v. Johnson, 113 Ala. 126, 21 So. 70); the erection of a house on the land (Schmidt v. Armstrong, 72 Pa. St. 355); the erection of newer and better buildings in the place of old ones (Beers v. St. John, 16 Conn. 322; Stevens v. Melcher, 152 N. Y. 551, 46 N. E. 965); the erection of fences (Beard v. Morancy, 2 La. Ann. 347; Croskery v. Busch, 116 Mich. 288, 74 N. W. 464; Morton v. Lewis, 16 U. C. C. P. 485. But see Hunt v. Pond, 67 Ga. 578; Wood v. Krebbs, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 685; Cullop v. Leonard, 97 Va. 256, 33 S. E. 611, holding that fences may or may not constitute permanent improvements according to their character and purpose. And see Effinger v. Kenney, 92 Va. 245, 23 S. E. 742); digging ditches or levees (Beard v. Morancy, 2 La. Ann. 347; Jones v. Jones, 4 Gill (Md.) 87; Devine v. Charles, 71 Mo. App. 210. Compare Cullop v. Leonard, 97 Va. 256, 33 S. W. 611); an oil well (Phillip v. Coast, 130 Pa. St. 572, 18 Atl. 998); clearing land (Beard v. Morancy, 2 La. Ann. 347; Pearee v. Frantum, 16 La. 414; Croskery v. Busch, 116 Mich. 288, 74 N. W. 464. But compare Peters v. West, 70 Ga. 343; Cullop v. Leonard, 97 Va. 256, 33 S. E. 611); clearing brush and removing rocks and stumps from the land (Devine v. Charles, 71 Mo. App. 210); raising house and repairing it, rendered necessary because of filling in of adjacent land (Cosgrove v. Merz, 19 R. I. 278, 37 Atl. 370); and all valuable improvements not ornamental in their character (Wilson v. Williams, 52 Miss. 487). Expense of drainage incurred by way of payment of a drain tax imposed upon the land may be recovered as a part of an occupant's compensation for improvements. Sherman v. A. P. Cook Co., 98 Mich. 61, 57 N. W. 23.

of the land for rental purposes or for the other ordinary purposes for which it is used.[7]

2. As Creating Liability For Rents and Profits. Improvements made on property under an honest conviction of ownership do not create a liability for rents and profits due to such improvements.[8]

Improvements for which compensation cannot be claimed.— Ordinary cultivation or reduction of the soil by use (Hawkins v. King, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 161; Cullop v. Leonard, 97 Va. 256, 33 S. E. 611. Compare Thompson v. Buckner, 40 S. W. 915, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 431, allowing for a stand of clover and meadow-grass as improvements); commercial fertilizer, lime, etc., used on the land (Crummey v. Bentley, 114 Ga. 746, 40 S. E. 765; Effinger v. Kenney, 92 Va. 245, 23 S. E. 742; Wood v. Krebbs, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 685); ordinary repairs to buildings, fences, etc. (Citizens Bank v. Miller, 44 La. Ann. 199, 10 So. 779; McKenzie v. Bacon, 41 La. Ann. 6, 5 So. 640; Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park v. Colt, 22 Ont. App. 1. Contra, Cullop v. Leonard, 97 Va. 256, 33 S. E. 611); fences erected for purposes other than improvement (Hunt v. Pond, 67 Ga. 578); a church built on the land by popular subscription (Crummey v. Bentley, 114 Ga. 746, 40 S. E. 765); money expended in experimenting for profits (Noble v. Biddle, 81* Pa. St. 430); disclosure of granite quarry by operations on land (Peabody v. Hewett, 52 Me. 33, 83 Am. Dec. 486); improvements which have been destroyed by casualty (Holt v. Adams, 121 Ala. 664, 25 So. 716; Nixon v. Porter, 38 Miss. 401); or a ferry obtained to be established by the occupying claimant on the land (Fisher v. Higgins, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 140).

In considering the words "valuable and permanent improvements" as used in statutes allowing an evicted occupant to recover therefor, reference must be had to the purposes for which the lands are or may be used. Paequette v. Pickness, 19 Wis. 219.

Kentucky.— Clay v. Miller, 2 Litt. 279; Leavison v. Harris, 14 S. W. 343, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 488, boundary wall out of the true course, thereby damaging the property.

Louisiana.— George v. Delaney, 111 La. 760, 35 So. 894; Citizens' Bank v. Miller, 44 La. Ann. 199, 10 So. 779.

Michigan.— Petit v. Flint, etc., R. Co., 119 Mich. 492, 78 N. W. 554, 75 Am. St. Rep. 417, holding, however, that defendant cannot be denied recovery for improvements on the ground that they are not adapted to the use to which plaintiff asserts it to be his intention to devote the property upon recovering it.

B. Ownership — 1. As Between Occupant and True Owner — a. Improvements Without Owner's Permission — (i) At Law — (a) In General. At common law, in the absence of a statute, any permanent improvement placed upon the land of another, by one having no interest or title therein, without the owner's consent, prima facie becomes a part of the realty and belongs to the owner of the fee, although it was placed thereon by mistake,[9] or with a view of enforcing an adverse right in the land.[10] In some jurisdictions, however, this rule has been changed by statute.[11]

A fence placed upon land by the occupant is part of the realty. Seymour v. Watson, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 555, 36 Am. Dec. 556. See Fences.

Riparian improvements under a statute regulating riparian rights belong to the riparian owner, in front of whose lot they are made. Baltimore v. St. Agnes Hospital, 48 Md. 419. See Waters.

The intention of a party at the time he erects a building has been held to fix its character, in the absence of an agreement. If he then intends it to be permanent, it will form a part of the realty. Dooley v. Crist, 25 Ill. 551.

Right of forced heirs to improvements.— Under the Indiana statute giving a child's widow the fee in a certain portion of her deceased husband's land, where there are children of the husband by a former marriage, and making such children her forced heirs on her death, such children are entitled to improvements placed on the land by the widow, and the same is true of improvements by a third person in possession under a conveyance by her taken with knowledge of the facts. 11. See Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256, holding that the effect of an Iowa statute, providing that where an occupant of land has color of title thereto and in good faith has made any valuable improvements thereon, and is afterward in a proper action found not to be the rightful owner thereof, he is entitled to payment or credit for the value of his improvements, is to make such occupant practically

(B) On Adjoining Land. Where an improvement is made in good faith partly on one's own land and partly on the land of an adjoining owner, without his consent, the latter does not become the owner thereof because it is not entirely on his soil.[12]

(II) In Equity. Where, however, the owner has been guilty of some act whereby he has induced or encouraged another to expend money in making improvements on his land, and which would make it a fraud for him to insist upon his legal right, he may be compelled in equity to surrender his title on receiving compensation.[13] But mere silence on the part of the owner will not be sufficient to relieve one who is perfectly acquainted with the rights or has the means of becoming so and yet wilfully insists on spending money in such improvements.[14]

b. Improvements With Owner's Permission. It is now well settled that where an improvement, such as a building, is put upon the land of another, by his permission, under an agreement or understanding that it may be removed at any time, it does not become a part of the real estate, but continues to be personalty, and the property of the person making it; and it is immaterial what is the purpose, size, material, or mode of its construction.[15] And if the improvement is made by the owner's permission, an agreement that it shall remain the property of the person making it is implied in the absence of any other facts or circum-

the owner of his improvements, even though he be not the owner of the land on which they have been made. See also infra, III, A, 4.

Under an Arkansas statute the owner of an improvement on land donated by the state is the one who has made it. Worthen v. Ratcliffe, 42 Ark. 330; Surginer v. Paddock, 31 Ark. 528.

Under the Louisiana statute the owner of the soil has the right to have the buildings removed at the expense of the person who erected them, or to keep them on paying the value of the materials and the price of workmanship; but until this election be made, such works, although subject to the right of acquisition given to the owner of the soil, continue to belong to, and are at the risk of, the party who erected them. stances showing a different intention.[16] But this is not a necessary implication from such permission, and will not be drawn when a different intention is indicated by an express agreement between the parties,[17] or from the interest of the party making the improvement or his relation to the title to the land.[18]

2. As Between Occupant and Third Persons. An actual occupant of lands is entitled to the improvements he has made thereon, as against any one who cannot show a better title.[19] But he cannot claim them as against a bona fide purchaser from the owner of the land if he could not have claimed them as against the owner,[20] nor as against a judgment creditor of the owner, of whose judgment he had notice at the time of making the improvements.[21]

C. Right of Removal — 1. In General. If, in accordance with the rules heretofore considered, certain improvements are regarded as personalty or as belonging to the person making them, they may be removed by him;[22] and his right of removal cannot be affected by a recovery of the land by the owner, or his grantee with notice.[23] On the other hand if the improvements, such as buildings, are regarded as part of the realty, they cannot be removed; and if the party making them does remove them he is guilty of a trespass, although they were placed on the land by mistake.[24] It also follows from the above rules that one who is a mere trespasser cannot remove improvements made by himself on the land of which he was in wrongful possession.[25]

2. By Agreement. The right of removal may be given by express agreement,[26] or by an agreement implied from circumstances, as from the owner's permission to make them.[27]

3. Of Improvements on Adjoining Land. An occupant who by mistake has made improvements partly on his own land and partly on adjoining land may remove the part so made on adjoining land;[28] and it has been held that the adjoining landowner cannot keep the improvements extending upon his land by paying the costs of construction.[29]

4. Time of Removal — a. In General. If the agreement providing for the removal of improvements fixes the time of removal, it must be complied with in this respect.[30] But where no time is fixed,[31] or where, although it has been fixed, the owner of the land withdraws his consent that they shall remain longer,[32] they may be peaceably removed within a reasonable time. If allowed to remain an unreasonable time, or if the occupant's right to continue them is terminated by his own act, he is liable for damages done by him to the owner of the land in removing them, but not for the value of the improvements.[33]

b. Revocation of Right to Continue Improvement. If the owner of the land conveys his interest to a third person, it operates as a revocation of a license to continue the improvement upon it; but the owner of the improvement will not be affected thereby until notice, actual or constructive, is given to him.[34] And a license to make an improvement cannot be revoked so as to make the owner thereof a trespasser for entering and removing the improvement after the license is revoked.[35]

5. Waiver of Right. A waiver of the right of removal will not be presumed from the mere fact that the owner of the improvement allows it to remain on the land after he had parted with possession.[36]

6. Resisting Removal and Conversion. If, where the person making an improvement has a right to remove it, the owner of the land resists its removal, or otherwise converts it to his own use, he will be liable in trover to the maker of the improvement or his assignee,[37] or an action of replevin will lie for its recovery.[38] But a mere refusal or neglect to deliver it, or to remove it from his premises, upon a demand for that purpose, will not be evidence of a conversion.[39] Likewise if the occupant after eviction enters and removes permanent improvements which he has no right to remove, although made by him, the landowner may maintain replevin therefor.[40]

III. OCCUPANT'S RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.

A. In General — 1. At Common Law. By the rigid rule of the common law, on the principle that a person is under no obligation to pay for unauthorized improvements made on his land, one making such improvements without the owner's knowledge or consent was not entitled to compensation therefor, even though he acted under a bona fide belief of ownership.[41] In many jurisdictions, however, this doctrine has been modified, on equitable grounds, by allowing the bona fide occupant to set off the value of his permanent improvements, in an action by the owner of the land for rents and profits, to the extent of such rents and profits.[42] This right of set-off is personal to the defendant, and cannot be exercised by the court unless the defendant desires it.[43]

2. Under the Civil Law. Even prior to this it was the rule under the civil law, upon the broad principle of equity that no one ought to enrich himself at the expense of another, that where one made permanent improvements on land in his possession under a bona fide belief of ownership he was entitled to full compensation therefor, less a fair compensation for rents and profits during the period of his occupancy, before the owner of the property could recover the same.[44]

3. In Equity — a. In Suit by Landowner. Courts of equity, following the civil law rule, held that where an owner of land is required to come into a court of equity to seek relief, as for instance to recover the land or to obtain an accounting for rents and profits, he must make compensation to a bona fide occupant for his permanent improvements as a condition to his obtaining the relief sought, on the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity.[45] This right to compensation exists under the principles of equity independent of statutory provisions allowing its assertion in certain actions,[46] although it has been held that if no claim is made for rents and profits, no allowance can be made for improvements.[47]

b. In Suit by Occupant. Although there are some cases to the contrary,[48] this doctrine has not generally been extended to giving the occupant the right to recover the value of his improvements after eviction by a direct affirmative suit against the owner of the property, although he made them innocently or through mistake;[49] or to file a cross bill or complaint in the nature of a cross bill to enforce his claim when he is sued at law for possession,[50] unless the owner of the land has been guilty of fraud, or of acquiescence after knowledge of his legal rights,[51] or unless the parties have agreed upon compensation for the improvements.[52]

4. Under Statutory Provisions — a. In General. In many jurisdictions statutes generally known as "betterment acts," or as "occupying claimant laws," have been passed enlarging the rights of bona fide possessors with respect to improvements.[53] It is generally the object of these laws to recognize the existence of the equitable right to compensation for improvements and to give a legal remedy for its enforcement where none existed before;[54] and it has been held that as they are in derogation of the common law, they must be strictly construed,[55] and the remedy provided thereby strictly followed.[56] These laws generally follow the civil law rule, and compel the owner of the land to pay to the bona fide occupant the amount due for improvements over and above the value of rents and profits during the period of occupancy, as a condition to his recovery value of permanent improvements made under color of title is not governed as to time of recovery by a limitation upon the right of the owner of the land to recover for the value of rents and profits.[61]

d. Validity and Extent of Occupant's Claim. The existence and validity of the occupant's claim under such statutes, although subject to the statute, viewed in the light of the general principles of equity, must be tested by the statute.[62] It is not generally dependent upon the claim for rents and profits or limited to cases where rent is claimed or compensation for the use and occupation is allowed;[63] nor is it dependent upon estoppel of the owner of the fee.[64] It extends to improvements made in good faith before the occupant's color of title commences as well as those made after;[65] and to improvements made by himself and those under whom he claims.[66]

e. Assignment of Claim. The claim of an occupying claimant for improvements, made under color of title, is a subject of sale and transfer, and the assignee takes all the rights of the assignor.[67]

f. Survival of Right to Compensation. A person's statutory right to compensation for improvements put on land survives to his heir or personal representative.[68] Payment therefor may be received by the deceased's administrator in trust for his creditors and heirs.[69]

g. Retroactive Operation of Statutes. It is generally held that the occupying claimant or betterment acts may operate retrospectively without being unconstitutional as impairing contracts or disturbing vested rights.[70] But they cannot affect suits begun before their passage.[71]

The sole test of the right of an evicted occupant to recover for betterments is the fact that he (and those under whom he claims, so far as improvements by them are concerned) purchased, supposing that they thereby obtained a good title in fee, and this right does not depend upon the nature or kind of title which the real owner may have, nor upon his having had a right to the immediate possession at the time the betterments were made, nor upon his negligence in asserting title. Where a party has settled on land the title to which is in litigation, asserting a mere equity under the title of one of the parties, and not under an adverse claim, he is concluded by the decree in that cause, against the party under whom he claims, and is not entitled to any compensation for his improvements. (E) Reversal of Judgment of Title. If one enters upon land under a judgment and order for a conveyance thereof and makes permanent improvements he is entitled to compensation therefor upon a reversal of such judgment and order.[96]

c. Possession — (I) Necessity of Possession. It is also necessary that the occupant shall have been in bona fide possession of the property at the time he made the improvements thereon.[97] This right to compensation does not depend upon the intrinsic goodness of the occupant's title, but upon the good faith of his possession and claim of title.[98] A mere possessor of land not in good faith is presumed to have made any improvements in its condition for his own amelioration and to have received a sufficient reward in the immediate benefit which he reaps from the enhanced production of the soil.[99]

(II) Character of Possession. Except where actual possession is required by statute,[1] it is not necessary that the occupant should have actual personal possession, but constructive possession is sufficient.[2] Under some statutes the possession must be adverse for a certain length of time to the holder of the paramount title.[3] And under these statutes if possession is for a less time than that

or at will,[23] or where he is the holder of a merely conditional or determinable estate in the land.[24]

6. Estoppel of True Owner. The right to compensation for improvements may also arise by estoppel, even though the occupant is one not entirely in good faith, where the owner has by his conduct encouraged him to make such improvements or has so conducted himself while they were being made as to make it a fraud in him to take them without paying therefor;[25] and under some circumstances a court of equity will deny him the right to recover the land.[26] Mere silence or acquiescence, however, on the part of the owner will not give rise to such estoppel if he had no knowledge of the fact before or at the time the improvements were made;[27] or if the occupant himself knew at the time of making the improvements that the land belonged to another, and that he had no title to it.[28]

7. Effect of Contract to Purchase on Right to Compensation. An occupant claiming by virtue of possession and improvement may contract to purchase the title without altering the character of his occupancy or his right to compensation for improvements, if the terms of the contract show that the intention was to purchase and sell a title encumbered by such claim.[29] But a claim for improve-sufficient to uphold a claim for betterments against the reversioner. Maddocks v. Jellison, 11 Me. 482.

B. Amount of Recovery — 1. In General. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the general rule is that the amount which a bona fide occupant of lands is entitled to recover for improvements made thereon is not the cost of the improvements to him, but the amount which they enhance the value of the property to the owner,[31] without interest,[32] except on necessary repairs or improvements;[33] and in some jurisdictions not exceeding the rents and profits accruing during his occupancy.[34]

2. Determination of Amount — a. In General. The enhanced value is generally found by deducting from the present value of the land, with the improvements, its estimated present value without the improvements, plus any increase in value from any other causes than such improvements.[35] But only such permanent improvements as enhance the value of the property may be taken into consideration.[36] The mode of determining the value of the improvements or of the enhanced value is regulated by statute in many states.[37]

b. Time of Determination. It is variously held that the enhanced value of the land, or the value of the improvements, shall be estimated at the time of eviction or recovery of the land,[38] at the date of commencement of the action,[39] at the time of trial,[40] or at the time of audit[41] or appraisement.[42] If the owner elects to take the value of the land exclusive of improvements, the date of its valuation may be fixed at the date of entry by the occupant.[43]

C. Who Liable For Compensation. The person directly liable for com-earnings, or fruits, received from the improvements.

although the period for which rents are charged extends beyond the time within which the rents could have been recovered in a direct action for that purpose.[50] The occupant is also liable for waste and injury to the property;[51] and to a set-off for the costs in a prior suit in which the owner recovered the land,[52] but not for attorney's fees therein.[53]

E. Owner's Right of Election After Judgment. By statute in some jurisdictions the owner of the land after a judgment for its recovery has the right of electing either to keep the property with the improvements on paying to the occupant the enhanced value of the soil, or to take the value of the land in money without improvements, thereupon making a conveyance of the land to the occupant.[54] These statutes, however, do not give to the occupying claimant the option of keeping the land;[55] nor does the right exist in favor of the owner of the land, in the absence of a statute.[56]

F. Liens — 1. In General. In the absence of a statute a bona fide occupant has no such lien at law as entitles him to be secured the value of his improvements before being compelled by suit to surrender possession to the true owner;[57] but in some jurisdictions a statutory lien exists against the land for a balance due for improvements made by an occupant in good faith,[58] although the land may belong to a purchaser for value without notice,[59] and it has been held that in equity a lien or charge on the land may be decreed for improvements.[60] But an occupant in bad faith has no right to a lien for his improvements;[61] nor can a lien exist in favor of the occupant as against a third possessor in good faith,[62] or for money spent in making improvements.[63]

IV. PROCEDURE.

A. Remedies[66] — 1. IN GENERAL. Since under the common law one who had made improvements on the land of another had no right of action upon eviction to recover compensation for such improvements,[67] one who desires to recover thereafter must proceed in the mode directed by statute;[68] in which case all the statutory requirements must be followed,[69] except in the federal courts.[70] But, as such proceeding is remedial in its character, it should be liberally construed in order that an equitable and fair adjustment of the rights of the parties may be had.[71] In the absence of a statute, or in cases to which the statutes do not apply, the occupant's remedy is by way of set off in a suit or action by the owner,[72] or in equity.[73]

(U. S.) 492, 7 L. ed. 496.

An injunction suit in a federal court when it has jurisdiction against the execution of a writ of possession is a proper remedy to enforce an occupying claimant's right to compensation for improvements, and it may be instituted at any time before he is dispossessed of the premises after they have been adjudged to the true owner; where the statute provides for the protection of his rights after such judgment. 2. Accrual of Action. A statutory action to recover for improvements upon land accrues when the occupying claimant is adjudged not to be the rightful owner thereof and recovery of the premises awarded to the owner; or when he has been evicted from the premises.[74]

3. Parties. A statutory action or proceeding, after eviction, for compensation for improvements may be brought by the party making them,[75] or by his heir or personal representative,[76] or assigns,[77] against plaintiff in the original action.[78]

4. Defenses. It is a good defense to an action for compensation for improvements that defendant was merely the agent of plaintiff's assignor,[79] or that the improvements did not benefit the property or enhance its value.[80] But it is no defense that the owner of the land is an infant.[81]

B. Pleading[82] — 1. In General. An occupant's pleading for compensation should set forth the grounds on which the relief is sought, stating the making of the improvements in good faith, and their value as well as the value of the land without them,[83] and should be filed in the prescribed time.[84] But the fact that an occupant neglects to pray for compensation in his answer to a petitory action does not deprive him of his right thereto.[85]

2. Amendments. An amendment not altering the nature of the pleading may be allowed in the discretion of the court.[86]

C. Evidence — 1. Burden of Proof.[87] The burden of proof is on one seeking to recover compensation for improvements to show every fact essential to the right.[88]

A grantee occupies no better position in regard to improvements made by his grantor than the latter himself occupied; and to recover for such improvements he must show that his grantor was within the provisions of the statute when he made the improvements. Wheeler v. Merriman, 30 Minn. 372, 15 N. W. 665.

He must show that the improvements were permanent;[89] that the value of the land has been enhanced thereby;[90] and that they were made in good faith under a bona fide belief of title,[91] or under some mistake concerning his rights,[92] or because he was induced to do so through the fraud or deception of the owner.[93] But if the owner of the land elects to avail himself of the privilege of keeping the improvements by paying the enhanced value of the land by reason thereof,[94] the burden is on him to show the amount of such enhanced value.[95]

2. Admissibility. The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil cases apply to a claim for improvements made on another's land,[96] to show the occupant's good faith,[97] or possession.[98] On the question of value testimony should be admitted to show the value of the improvements, the value of the land without improvements, its value with improvements, and all facts tending to prove what its value would have been if the improvements had never been made.[99] But evidence of the value of improvements irrespective of their effect upon the value of the land is inadmissible.[1]

C. 338, holding that the court will presume, in the absence of contrary proof, that the title to land under which improvements were made was colorable, and that the improvements were made in good faith.

In Kentucky he must show himself to be the owner of the land by reason of a claim, in law or equity, founded upon a grant from the commonwealth; and in order to do so he must connect himself with the grant by showing that he held the title which it granted. Fairbairn v. Means, 4 Metc. 323.

An evicted claimant, not a bona fide purchaser, cannot recover compensation for his improvements unless he shows that the owner has been guilty of fraud or gross laches in not notifying him to desist when he knew that the improvements were being made under a mistaken belief in ownership. St. Rep. 911], holding a power of attorney of a married woman to sell her separate real estate, even if invalid because her husband did not join therein, and a deed from the attorney in fact, admissible as a basis for a claim for improvements made in good faith by the grantees.

Evidence of improvements made in bad faith is properly excluded. Welles v. Newsome, 76 Iowa 81, 40 N. W. 105.

The record in a former action establishing that the occupant's title was fraudulent and void is admissible in a subsequent suit for betterments to show that such was the finding of the jury (Thompson v. Gilman, 17 Vt. 109); and the occupant, in such case, is not entitled to give in evidence any facts which tend to show that such title was not fraudulent; nor to show that plaintiff in the real action had no title to the premises in question (Thompson v. Gilman, supra).

98. Lamar v. Minter, 13 Ala. 31, holding parol evidence of owner's intention admissible to show adverse possession by the occupant under the Alabama statute.

3. Weight and Sufficiency. The general rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil cases apply to evidence introduced on an occupant's claim for compensation for improvements.[2]

D. Questions of Law and Fact.[3] Whether or not an occupant has made improvements in good faith while in bona fide possession under color of title,[4] the nature of the improvements,[5] and his right of recovery,[6] are questions of fact for the jury. But what constitutes color of title in a particular case is a question of law for the court.[7]

E. Judgment.[8] A judgment rendered upon a trial at which the occupant's right to compensation is in issue is conclusive of that right in a subsequent proceeding,[9] although it is otherwise if such right was not in issue at the former trial.[10] A personal money judgment cannot be rendered in favor of an occupant making improvements.[11]

IMPROVIDENCE. A want of care and foresight in the management of property.[1] (Improvidence: Creation and Operation of Spendthrift Trust, see Trusts.)

IMPRUDENT. A word sometimes used as the equivalent of "neglect."[2]

2. Fletcher v. Brown, 35 Nebr. 660, 53 N. W. 577; House v. Stone, 64 Tex. 677. See, generally, Evidence.

On an issue of good faith, an occupant's knowledge of facts which, as a matter of law, renders his title defective, is a circumstance to be considered, but is not conclusive. Templeton v. Lowry, 22 S. C. 389. A possessor's good faith is not conclusively established by his uncontradicted testimony. Molitor v. Robinson, 40 Mich. 200.

Evidence tending merely to show that improvements of some considerable value have been put on the land does not warrant sending the case to the jury nor save a nonsuit. Hall v. Boatwright, 58 S. C. 544, 36 S. E. 1001, 79 Am. St. Rep. 864.

Thus it is a question of fact whether a purchaser of land supposed at the time of his purchase that he had a good title in fee (Templeton v. Lowry, 22 S. C. 389); whether an occupant of land claimed it as owner, and believed himself to be such when he made improvements thereon (House v. Stone, 64 Tex. 677); or whether a possessor had reasonable grounds to believe himself the true owner (Carolina Cent. I. DEFINITION.

Incest, where statutes have not modified its meaning, is sexual commerce, either habitual or in a single instance, and either under a form of marriage or without it, between persons too nearly related in consanguinity or affinity to be entitled to intermarry.[1] But since incest was not known to the common law, and

"When the parties by whom it [carnal connection] is done are related to one another within certain degrees of consanguinity or affinity, it becomes incest." Dinkey v. Com., 17 Pa. St. 126, 129, 55 Am. Dec. 542.

Other definitions are: "Criminal sexual intercourse between persons related within the degrees wherein marriage is forbidden by the law of the country." Encyclopædic is therefore a statutory crime, its definition will be found to be as various as the statutes themselves.[2]

II. ORIGIN OF OFFENSE.

Although incest was punishable as an offense in the ecclesiastical courts of England[3] it was not a crime at common law.[4] Incest is, however, very generally defined and punished as a crime by statute in the different jurisdictions in this country.[5]

Instruction defining offense.— In People v. Barnes, 2 Ida. (Hasb.) 161, 162, 9 Pac. 532, an instruction in the following language: "Persons being within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriages by law are declared to be incestuous and void, who shall intermarry with each other, or who shall commit fornication or adultery with each other, are guilty of incest," was held to be correct.

Distinguished from adultery, fornication, and rape.— "The crimes of incest, adultery and fornication . . . differ only as to the persons; while the crime of rape differs from the other crimes against chastity both as to the persons and the manner of the sexual connection, as by force and against the will of the woman." State v. Shear, 51 Wis. 460, 462, 8 N. W. 287. See also People v. Rouse, 2 Mich. N. P. 209.

An incestuous cohabitation or sexual intercourse is a cohabitation or sexual intercourse between persons related within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriage is prohibited. Territory v. Corbett, 3 Mont. 50.

Incestuous marriage.— The term "incestuous" is a proper term to apply to a marriage which is contracted between parties related to each other in the degrees within which such contracts are prohibited by law. Territory v. Corbett, 3 Mont. 50. A marriage between persons within the degrees of consanguinity prohibited by statute must necessarily be incestuous, and no use of the precise word "incestuous" in the statute is necessary. State v. Herges, 55 Minn. 464, 57 N. W. 205.

An incestuous person is one guilty of incest. Territory v. Corbett, 3 Mont. 50.

III. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

A. In General. The gravamen of the offense is carnal knowledge, unlawful because of consanguinity or affinity; but owing to differences in the various statutes defining incest, the elements thereof are not the same in all jurisdictions.[6]

B. Carnal Knowledge. Carnal knowledge is, as a general rule, a necessary element of the offense.[7] A single act of unlawful sexual intercourse has been held sufficient, however, to establish incest.[8] But incest will not be committed if actual penetration of the private parts of the female is wanting,[9] and indeed it has been held that emission is an essential ingredient of the crime.[10]

C. Intermarriage. By statute in many jurisdictions intermarriage between persons related within the prohibited degrees is declared to be incest,[11] and it has been held under statutes of this character in some jurisdictions that the offense becomes complete upon the intermarriage, and that to sustain a conviction it is unnecessary to establish carnal knowledge.[12] So a statute defining incest to be the intermarrying or carnal knowledge of persons within the forbidden degrees does not require proof of marriage to sustain conviction, provided carnal knowledge is shown.[13]

D. Cohabitation. Cohabitation of persons related within the forbidden degrees is prohibited by the terms of some of the statutes,[14] and the term "cohabitation" in this connection is generally construed in its technical sense as meaning the living together as man and wife.[15]

E. Prohibited Degrees of Relationship — 1. CONSANGUINITY[16] — a. In General. The prohibition against intermarriage or carnal knowledge between percest, nowhere did the law define it, and that while the statutes directed that certain enumerated crimes should be construed by the common law of England, incest was not a common-law crime, and that as incest means a totally different thing in different states and countries, the statutes of Louisiana did not define the crime, and, therefore, defendant could not have been convicted without it. But the crime of incest has been defined by subsequent legislation in Louisiana. State v. De Hart, 109 La. 570, 33 So. 605.

Statute authorizing prosecution in court of chancery.—In Atty.-Gen v. Broaddus, 6 Munf. (Va.) 116, it was held that a prosecution under the thirteenth section of the Virginia act of 1792, concerning incestuous marriages was a criminal prosecution and that the direction in the statute that such prosecution should be instituted in the high court of chancery was unconstitutional.

The elements of incestuous adultery are: marriage of the defendant, the fact of sexual intercourse, and the relation of the parties within the Levitical degrees. Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410.

W. 126, holding that the word "cohabit" in a statute reading: "If a father shall rudely and licentiously cohabit with his own daughter," etc., taken in connection with other sections of the statute, did not mean to live together as husband and wife, but to live in the same place and family.

16. Consanguinity defined.— Consanguinity means the connection or relation of persons sons related by consanguinity, unless expressly extended by statute, applies only to those related within the Levitical degrees.[17] The question is, however, very generally regulated by statute.[18] The prohibited degrees have been held to include father and daughter,[19] brother and sister,[20] uncle and niece,[21] and even first cousins.[22]

b. Legitimacy of Relationship. The legitimacy of the relationship between the parties is not essential to the commission of incest.[23]

c. Relationship by Half Blood. The prohibition against intermarriage or carnal knowledge between persons related within the prohibited degree of consanguinity extends to those of the half blood as well as to those of the whole blood.[24]

2. Affinity[25] — a. In General. A statutory prohibition expressly relating to degrees of consanguinity will not by implication extend to degrees of affinity.[26] However the statutes in many jurisdictions expressly extend to relationships by affinity.[27] Accordingly it has been held under statute that sexual intercourse between a stepfather and his stepdaughter,[28] or between a brother-in-law and sister-in-law,[29] is punishable as incest. But affinity within the meaning of statutes against incest does not arise between one of the parties to a marriage and a person related only by affinity to another party.[30] It has been held that the legal descended from the same stock or common ancestor, and it is either lineal or collateral. Lineal is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between son, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Collateral kindred agree with the lineal in this, that they are descended from the same stock or ancestor, but differ in this, that they do not descend one from the other. marriage of the stepfather and the mother must be established before carnal intercourse between the stepfather and a stepdaughter can constitute the offense of incest.[31]

b. Effect of Death or Divorce. It has been held that affinity ceases upon the death of the blood relative through whom the relationship was created.[32] So it has been held that in a prosecution for incest between a stepfather and a stepdaughter, it will be a good defense to show that the sexual intercourse took place after the divorce of the accused from the stepdaughter's mother.[33]

F. Knowledge of Relationship — 1. On Part of Accused. Knowledge on the part of the accused is sometimes made an element of the offense by the express terms of statute.[34] Indeed it has been intimated that knowledge of the relationship between the parties is an essential element of the crime of incest apart from any express statutory provision to that effect.[35] But where the knowledge of the relationship is not incorporated in the statute as a part of the definition of the offense, such knowledge need not be alleged and proved affirmatively.[36] And a statute defining incest is not in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States because of the omission of the word "knowingly" or any equivalent word or phrase making knowledge of the relationship an element of the crime.[37]

2. On Part of Both Parties. In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary[38] the rule is that knowledge of the relationship on the part of both parties to the incestuous act is not essential to a conviction of one of the parties.[39]

G. Consent of Parties. Sexual intercourse between persons related within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity, if it takes place with the consent of both parties, constitutes incest.[40] In some jurisdictions it is held that the crimes of rape by forcible ravishment and incest cannot be committed by the same act, but that the crime of incest requires the concurring assent of both parties.[41]

Rape generally see RAPE.

But under the statutes of other jurisdictions it is held that the consent of the female is not necessary to constitute the crime of incest by the male.[42]

H. Age. It is sometimes required by statute that in order to warrant a conviction for incest the parties to the alleged incestuous act must have arrived at a specified age.[43]

IV. DEFENSES.

A. Bad Reputation of Female For Chastity. The bad reputation for chastity of the woman with whom the alleged incest was committed is not a defense to the charge of incest.[44]

B. Specific Acts of Unchastity. Nor is it a defense that the female was guilty of specific acts of unchastity with other men.[45]

C. Voluntary Drunkenness of Accused. So the crime of incest cannot be palliated or excused on the ground of the voluntary drunkenness of the accused.[46]

D. Moral Insanity. Moral insanity or uncontrollable impulse has been held not to be a defense to an indictment for incest.[47]

E. Use of Force. In some jurisdictions the fact that the sexual intercourse was accomplished by force or without the consent of the female is a defense to an indictment for incest, although a different rule obtains in other jurisdictions.[48]

F. Acquittal of Rape as Former Jeopardy. It has been held that an acquittal of rape does not bar a prosecution for incest with the same party, growing out of the same transaction, as the offenses are distinct and each requires a different character of proof.[49] On the other hand it has been held that if on a former trial for rape the state was permitted to prove all acts of intercourse covering the entire period included within the indictment and then elected to stand upon a certain one, defendant, on his subsequent indictment for an act of incest included within the acts proven but not elected, may plead his former acquittal as a bar.[50]

G. Ignorance of Relationship. In some jurisdictions knowledge of the relationship is an element of the offense, and therefore ignorance of such relationship is a defense.[51]

H. Effect of Acquittal of One Party. Under a statute in Indiana making the guilty participation of both parties to the act a necessary ingredient of the crime, it has been held that if one be tried and acquitted, the other must be discharged.[52] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the guilt of both parties is not necessary to warrant the conviction of one of the parties, and this although it be conceded that the consent of both parties to the sexual intercourse is necessary to constitute the crime of incest.[53]

I. Intermarriage of Parties. In England under the canon law the intermarriage of the parties has been held not to render the connection any less incestuous.[54] And in this country the rule has been laid down that sexual commerce between persons related within the prohibited degrees is incest, whether they have gone through the form of intermarriage or not.[55] Nor is it material that the marriage was celebrated in a country where it was valid, for a state is not bound upon principles of comity to permit persons to violate its criminal laws, adopted in the interest of decency and good morals, because they have assumed in another state or country where it was lawful, the relation which led to the prohibited act.[56]

J. Conspiracy of Third Persons. A person who commits incest cannot excuse himself by showing a conspiracy on the part of the prosecutrix and third persons to entice him into the incestuous act.[57]

V. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION.[58]

A. In General. In charging the crime of incest it is generally sufficient for the indictment or information to follow the language of the statute defining the offense.[59] Indeed it has been held to be sufficient if the language of the statute is substantially followed and the facts are stated in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.[60]

B. Charging Carnal Knowledge. It has been held not to be necessary to charge carnal knowledge in so many words.[61] In the jurisdictions in which the concurring assent of both parties is not essential to the crime of incest, it has been held that the indictment need not allege that the parties had carnal knowledge of each other.[62] But in a jurisdiction in which the concurring assent of both parties is required to constitute incest, it has been held that the indictment should allege the act as the joint act of the parties.[63]

C. Description of Act. It has been intimated that the indictment should contain a particular description of the specific act relied upon as constituting the crime of incest.[64]

D. Date of the Act. The rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that the omission to state in an indictment for incest the date of the commission of the offense[65] or the imperfect statement of the date[66] does not render the indictment invalid. It has been held that an indictment for incest charging its commission on a day certain and on divers other days and times is sufficiently specific as to time and that the continuando may be rejected as surplusage.[67] On the other hand it has been held that an indictment for incest which charges the criminal act to have been committed continuously through a specified period of years is to be regarded as charging several distinct offenses and therefore bad for duplicity.[68]

E. Charging Adultery or Fornication. On the principle that the gist of the crime of incest is the act of sexual intercourse between persons within the prohibited degrees of relationship, it has been held that an indictment charging an act of sexual intercourse between persons related within the prohibited degrees is sufficient, although it does not follow the statute by alleging that defendant committed fornication or adultery,[69] or although it alleges the commission of fornication instead of adultery by defendant who was a married man.[70] negative the fact that the crime was committed by the intermarriage of the parties where the statute applies equally to married and unmarried persons.[71] But where the prohibition of the statute does not extend to intermarriage, the indictment must negative the fact of a legal marriage.[72]

G. Identification of Female. The failure to state the true name of the female in full will not invalidate the indictment, if there is no question as to her identity, she being present at the trial.[73]

H. Charging Relationship. When the relationship between the parties is definitely alleged in the indictment[74] it is unnecessary to allege further the conclusion of law that the parties were within the prohibited degrees of relationship,[75] or that the relationship was by blood or affinity.[76] Nor, if the relationship is alleged and the female is sufficiently identified, is it necessary to state the name of the person or persons through whom the relationship is traced.[77] So an indictment for incest with one's stepdaughter sufficiently describes the relationship of the parties by alleging it to be that of stepfather and stepdaughter, without setting forth the marriage of defendant to the mother or the subsistence of the marriage relation at the time of the commission of the crime.[78]

I. Charging Knowledge of Relationship. It is unnecessary to allege knowledge on the part of the accused of the relationship between the parties[79] unless such knowledge is by statute made a part of the definition of the offense.[80]

J. Charging Incest as Felony. The rule has been laid down that incest being a felony, an indictment failing to aver that the criminal act was "feloniously" done is invalid.[81] On the other hand it has been held that since incest is a statutory offense an indictment need not state that the offense was feloniously committed in the absence of statutory requirement.[82]

K. Charging Attempt to Commit Incest. An information charging an attempt to commit incest is not bad because it does not specifically allege the purpose and intent of the parties to carnally know each other if such intent is the necessary and irresistible inference to be derived from the language employed.[83] So it has been held that an information charging an attempt to commit incest need not negative the presumption that the attempt failed of commission through the volition of the actors, since the mere fact of abandonment would not prevent a conviction.[84]

L. Joint Prosecution of Parties. It is not necessary in charging the crime of incest that the parties shall be jointly indicted,[85] or that both shall be indicted separately.[86]

M. Joinder of Counts For Rape and Incest. As rape and incest are offenses of a kindred nature, it has been held that they may be joined in the same indictment, when they arise out of the same transaction.[87]

N. Election of Offenses. If different counts in an indictment for incest charge incestuous acts upon different days, the state may be compelled to elect upon which count it shall proceed.[88] So it has been held that where a single act of sexual intercourse is charged as committed on a specified date, the time stated is not material and the prosecutor may select as the basis of the prosecution any one act of sexual intercourse which occurred within the jurisdiction of the court prior to the indictment and within the period of the statute of limitations applicable to the offense.[89] But it has been held that when evidence has been introduced tending directly to the proof of one act and for the purpose of procuring a conviction upon it, the state will be deemed to have made an election, and thereafter it will be considered that this act is the one charged, upon which defendant must be found guilty.[90] The proper practice is for the accused to move that the court require an election and the court cannot by an instruction make an election for the prosecuting officer.[91]

VI. EVIDENCE.[92]

A. Admissibility — 1. Prior Acts of Parties. When incest is charged prior acts of sexual intercourse between the same parties or previous familiarities not amounting to actual intercourse are admissible, not as affording proof of a substantial offense in themselves, but as corroborating other evidence of the act charged and as tending to show the relations existing between the parties as bearing upon the probability of the commission of the crime charged.[93] And this rule is applicable to prior acts of intercourse, although a prosecution therefor has been barred by the statute of limitations.[94] But when evidence of prior acts of intercourse is admitted in evidence it is held to be error not to instruct the jury that such evidence is to be considered only as corroborating other evidence of the commission of the crime.[95]

2. Subsequent Acts of Parties. In some jurisdictions acts of familiarity or intercourse subsequent to the time of the alleged offense are inadmissible;[96] but in other jurisdictions the rule is laid down that acts of improper familiarity or illicit intimacy or relations between the parties, subsequent as well as prior to the act charged, are admissible as corroborative evidence, when they tend to show a continuous illicit relationship.[97] Such acts are never admissible, however, as independent subsequent offenses or until the prosecution has selected some particular acts of a certain date, and has elected to rely upon proof of such fact for a conviction.[98]

3. Cruel Treatment of Female. Acts of the accused tending to prove his cruel treatment of the female for the purpose of forcing her to submit to his embraces are admissible.[99] So the denial by the accused to the prosecutrix, his

b. Dying Declarations. The dying declarations of the woman with whom the alleged incest was committed are not admissible in the evidence against the accused, the general rule being that the admission of dying declarations forms an exception to the law of evidence and is confined to cases of homicide.[13]

8. Declarations of Third Persons.[14] The general rule as to the inadmissibility of the acts and declarations of third persons as being hearsay is applicable in prosecutions for incest.[15]

9. Character of Defendant.[16] It has been held that in a prosecution for incest, evidence may be introduced in defendant's favor to show his general reputation for gentlemanly deportment and moral character.[17]

10. Physical Condition of Female. It has been held competent for medical experts to testify as to the abnormal condition of the private parts of a young girl with whom the offense was alleged to have been committed as shown by an examination subsequent to the commission of the offense.[18] So testimony of a physician that the sexual organs of a girl with whom incest was alleged to have been committed were in the condition of those of a married woman has been held admissible for the purpose of corroborating her testimony as to the frequent acts of intercourse to which she had been subjected.[19] On the other hand testimony of a physician to the effect that he had found the prosecutrix upon examination suffering from some irritation of the vagina caused by some recent violence has been held inadmissible in a prosecution for incest, although it was intimated that it might be admissible in a prosecution for rape.[20] Evidence of the pregnancy of the woman with whom the alleged incest was committed is inadmissible as an independent fact,[21] although evidence thereof may be admitted as inseparably connected with other facts, which, if true, tend strongly to show the act of intercourse in controversy.[22]

11. Evidence of Relationship — a. In General. It has been held under statute that relationship must be established by the production of the extracts from the registers of civil status and that oral evidence is not admissible to prove relationship on a charge of incest where the absence of such record evidence is not shown.[23] But record evidence of relationship is not as a general rule required.[24] against him to prove the relationship existing between him and the female participant.[25] So when for the purpose of establishing the relationship between the parties it becomes material to prove the marriage of the accused, his admission of the fact is admissible.[26]

c. Reputation and Declarations of Third Persons. In some jurisdictions it has been held that in prosecutions for incest the relationship and pedigree of the parties may be established by general reputation.[27] On the other hand it has been held that pedigree cannot be proven by general reputation in the neighborhood and that while hearsay evidence is admissible to prove pedigree, the rule is limited to declarations made by a deceased relative or member of the family.[28]

12. Evidence of Intermarriage. Under statute it has been held that in a prosecution for an incestuous intermarriage, the register of marriages kept by the officer designated for that purpose is admissible to prove that the marriage took place,[29] and the identity of the persons accused and of the persons named in the marriage record can be established by admissions, identity of names, and by the absence of evidence showing that other persons of the same name did the acts of which the defendants stand charged.[30] So it is held that the marriage may be proved by the witnesses of the ceremony.[31]

13. Testimony of Particular Persons — a. Accomplices. It has been held that in a prosecution for incest an accomplice may be called upon to testify against his accomplice, whether the latter gives his consent or not.[32]

b. Wife Against Husband. It has been held under statute that the wife may be a witness against her husband in a criminal prosecution for incest on the ground that it is a crime against the wife within the meaning of the statute.[33] But in Texas it has been held that the wife cannot testify against the husband in a prosecution of this character.[34]

c. Physicians. It has been held that a physician may testify as to information acquired by him while attending the prosecutrix as his patient, provided she gives her consent to the testimony.[35]

2. Confessions of Accused. The accused cannot be convicted of incest upon his mere confession of guilt made out of court, uncorroborated by facts or circumstances.[37]

3. Corroboration of Testimony of Female[38] — a. In General. The rule has been laid down that apart from statute a conviction may be had in a prosecution for incest upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, although she is an accomplice,[39] the circumstances of her being an accomplice affecting, it has been held, her credibility only.[40] But under statute in other jurisdictions a person indicted for incest cannot be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix if she consented to the incestuous act, since in such case she is regarded as an accomplice,[41] and this it has been held, although the consent of the female may have been reluctantly given.[42] On the other hand it is very generally held that where the prosecutrix is not an accomplice, or in other words if she is a victim of force, or fraud or undue influence, or is too young to be able to give legal assent, so that she does not wilfully or willingly join in the incestuous act, her testimony alone will be sufficient to sustain a conviction of incest,[43] unless the jurisdiction is one in which the crime would under such circumstances constitute rape and not incest.[44] Whether or not the prosecutrix is an accomplice is generally a question of fact for the jury.[45]

b. Extent of Corroboration Necessary. No rule can be laid down as to the precise amount of evidence which is requisite to sustain the testimony of the accomplice,[46] the question whether the evidence is sufficient corroboration being for the jury to determine.[47] It may be stated generally, however, that it is sufficient if it tends to connect defendant with the commission of the offense.[48] But it has been held that the testimony of the prosecutrix need not be corroborated in every item.[49] Such corroboration need not be furnished by direct and positive evidence, but circumstances or facts proved or admitted, legitimately tending to show the existence of material facts, will be sufficient, if they satisfy the jury of the truthfulness of the accomplice's story.[50] But the corroboration must come from some source or sources other than the testimony of the accomplice.[51]

4. EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH RELATIONSHIP. Proof of the relationship within the prohibited degrees must be clear and unequivocal.[52] But it has been held that the name by which the daughter with whom the incest was alleged to have been committed was known is immaterial, if her identity is established beyond dispute.[53]

5. EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH MARRIAGE.[54] Under statute it has been held that the register of marriages kept by an official designated by law for that purpose is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, sufficient proof of a marriage between the parties.[55] So it has been held that proof of the performance of the marriage ceremony by an officer authorized to perform it raises a presumption of its legality.[56] Under a statute in Texas it is held that when incest is charged in an indictment alleging intermarriage, proof of cohabitation is sufficient without proof of marriage.[57]

VII. ACCESSARIES.[58]

Under statute in Texas providing that relatives within designated degrees cannot be accessaries, it has been held that defendant's grandmother and brother-in-law cannot be accessaries to the crime of incest committed by him.[59]

VIII. ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT INCEST.[60]

To constitute an attempt to commit incest, something more than mere intention to commit the offense is necessary; there must be a step taken toward the commission of the crime.[61] So a bare solicitation to commit the offense has been held not to constitute an attempt.[62] The rule has been laid down that conceding that the consent of both parties is necessary to constitute the crime of incest, it does not follow that a man may not be guilty of the crime of attempting to commit incest without the consent of the woman.[63] The intent to commit the crime of incest and concurrent overt acts in the use of means adapted to the immediate perpetration and consummation thereof are sufficient to constitute a criminal attempt to commit the crime of incest and the failure of such means to effect the purpose intended will not exculpate him.[64] Moreover it is held that to justify a conviction for an attempt to commit incest it is not essential that the attempt charged should have failed in commission by reason of the intervention of circumstances independent of the will of the accused, and that if the elements of an attempt have existed the subsequent voluntary abandonment thereof cannot avail the accused.[65] and may include salary.[68] It may include the earnings or interest on the actual capital and share of a deceased as partner in the firm property while the firm business is carried on after his death, in accordance with the terms of the partnership agreement.[69] The usual and ordinary meaning of the word, when used alone, is "net income;"[70] and, in the ordinary commercial sense, the term may, especially when connected with the word "rent," mean net or clear income.[71] It is also said to mean the gross revenue of an individual, whether it arises from rents of real estate, interest on money loaned, dividends on stocks, or compensation for personal services rendered in any trade, profession, or occupation.[72] The word has been said to be synonymous with emolument;[73] the profit or emolument, the revenue coming in.[74] However, the meaning of the word must generally be determined by the intention of the parties as deduced from the context,[75] the subject-matter of the contract, and the character of the person contracting.[76] It may mean "money," and not the expectation of receiving or the right to receive money at a future time.[77] When applied to the affairs of individuals, it expresses the same idea that revenue does when applied to the affairs of a state or nation.[78] (Income: Bequest, see WILLS. "How does one incur a disability? Not by being exposed to that prejudice; not by being so placed that it may chance to befall him, but according to the plain and incontrovertible import of language, by being already in the condition the supposed disability would produce. . . . ment;[73] a term applied to a party when he enters into an obligation to pay another.[74] Sometimes it is equivalent to DUE,[75] q. v. (See DEBT; INDEBTEDNESS.)

INDEBTEDNESS.[76] The state of being indebted,[77] without regard to the ability or inability of the party to pay the same;[78] the condition of owing money; also the amount owed;[79] something due a person,[80] of which payment is liable to be exacted;[81] the state of being by voluntary obligation, express or implied, under legal liability to pay in the present or at some future time for something already received, or for something yet to be furnished or rendered.[82] It is a word of large meaning,[83] and must be construed in every case in accord with its context.[84] When used in its strict legal significance, the word applies only to a pecuniary obligation arising from a contract, expressed or implied;[85] but given its plainest and most literal signification, it includes every obligation[86] by which one person is bound to pay money, goods, or services to another.[87] As the equivalent to "obligation,"[88] the term may include county warrants and bonds;[89] or the bonds and mortgages of a corporation.[90] As applied to municipal corporations, the term means what the corporation owes,[91] irrespective of the demands it may hold

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A. Definition. In a broad and general sense indemnity is that which is given to a person to prevent his suffering damage.[1] More specifically it may be defined as the obligation or duty resting on one person to make good any loss or damage another has incurred while acting at his request or for his benefit.[2]

1. Bouvier L. Dict. See also Peck v. Wakely, 2 McCord (S. C.) 279, 284, where the following definition is given: "To make sure, to protect from injury, &c."

2. Vandiver v. Pollak, 107 Ala. 547, 19 So. 180, 54 Am. St. Rep. 118.

A contract of indemnity is given to a person against his sustaining loss or damage, and cannot properly be called one that insures the thing, it not being possible so to do. Cummings v. Cheshire County Mut. F. Ins. Co., 55 N. H. 457.

Indemnity distinguished from loss.— In Rice v. National Credit Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 285, 41 N. E. 276, it was held that the word "loss" or "losses" occurring in a bond to indemnify a person against losses in his business was distinguishable from the word "indemnity" also used in the bond in that the former meant the loss sustained by the

B. Of Contractual Origin. Indemnity springs from contract express or implied.[3]

C. Distinguished From Guaranty and Suretyship. Contracts of indemnity are distinguished from those of guaranty and suretyship in that in indemnity contracts the engagement is to make good and save another from loss upon some obligation which he has incurred or is about to incur to a third person, and is not as in guaranty and suretyship a promise to one to whom another is answerable.[4]

D. Distinguished From Contract to Pay. A clear distinction is made also between bonds or contracts conditioned to pay a certain sum of money or to do a certain act and bonds or contracts conditioned to indemnify. A cause of action accrues on a bond or contract to do a certain act as soon as there is a default in performance, whether the obligee or promisee has suffered damage or not, whereas in the case of a bond or contract conditioned to indemnify damage must be shown before the party indemnified is entitled to recover.[5]

E. Original and Not a Collateral Undertaking. The promise in an indemnity contract is an original and not a collateral undertaking.[6]

II. EXPRESS CONTRACTS.

A. Requisites and Validity — 1. FORM OF CONTRACT — a. In General. If the intention to indemnify is reasonably clear it is not necessary that the contract should be drawn in any particular form of words or be technically expressed.[7] indemnitee in his dealings with customers while the latter referred to the amount for which the indemnitor might be liable under the bond.

3. Vandiver v. Pollak, 107 Ala. 547, 19 So. 180, 54 Am. St. Rep. 118. Accordingly where a party to a contract is aware of the injury that may result to him from a compliance with his part of the contract, and yet voluntarily enters into it, he cannot afterward require an indemnifying bond, and if a bond was given at the time of the contract he can require no other even if its amount is insufficient to protect him against loss. Contract to give indemnifying bond see Hall v. Stewart, 58 Iowa 681, 12 N. W. 741; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Schiff, 74 Fed. 674.

Distinguished from contribution.— Indemnity is distinguished from contribution in that the latter is not contractual but is an equity founded in acknowledged principles of natural justice. Vandiver v. Pollak, 107 Ala. 547, 19 So. 180, 54 Am. St. Rep. 118.

Distinguished from promissory note.— In Jenckes v. Rice, 119 Iowa 451, 93 N. W. 384, it was held that an instrument which promises to pay a certain sum of money but contains an express condition that it shall be void and non-payable upon the happening of a certain event, and in addition thereto states that it was given to indemnify the promisee against loss, is not a promissory note, but a contract of indemnity, although in a clause of the contract the instrument is spoken of as a note; a promissory note being defined as an unconditional written promise to pay absolutely and at all events a sum certain in money.

St. Rep. 271 (holding that an undertaking to pay the obligees upon a fixed basis a certain share of any indebtedness they might have to pay as sureties was an original promise and not a collateral undertaking of suretyship); Manary v. Runyon, 43 Oreg. 495, 73 Pac. 1028 (holding that where the president of a corporation orally agreed to reimburse plaintiff for expenses and attorney's fees incurred in certain negotiations between plaintiff and the corporation if a contract was not consummated such promise to reimburse was original and not a promise to pay the debt of the corporation). Contracts construed to be contracts of indemnity see Townsend v. Atwater, 5 Day

b. Parol Contracts. As a general rule a contract of indemnity is not within the statute of frauds and need not be in writing.[8]

2. Offer and Acceptance. As in the case of other contracts there must be an offer and acceptance to constitute a binding contract of indemnity.[9] The acceptance will be good and the contract binding even though the indemnitee had knowledge of some irregularities on the part of the third person against whose acts the indemnity was given, in the absence of any showing of fraudulent concealment of the facts.[10]

3. Consideration — a. In General. The general rule requiring a consideration for the support of a contract[11] is applicable to contracts of indemnity.[12] But as in the case of contracts generally, while the consideration may consist of a benefit to promisor or indemnitor,[13] it is not necessary to the binding effect of the promise

Transfer of property.— South Side Planing Mill Assoc. v. Cutler, etc., Lumber Co., 64 Ind. 560; Shattuck v. Adams, 136 Mass. 34.

Release of property from foreclosure proceedings.— In Cliff v. Dawkins, 138 Ala. 232, 35 So. 41, it was held that the release by plaintiffs of certain property on which they had a mortgage, and which they had seized under process, was a valuable consideration sufficient to support a promise to hold plaintiffs harmless in the sale of the remaining property held by them under their mortgage.

that the promisor should derive any advantage from it, it being sufficient if the promisee has encountered trouble, assumed a burden, or sustained a loss.[14] Incurring liability at the request of another is a sufficient consideration for a promise of indemnity.[15] Moreover a promise by the indemnitee to forego steps for his own protection or to exercise a forbearance which may be of benefit to the indemnitor may constitute a sufficient consideration as well as a promise to do some positive act.[16]

14. White v. Baxter, 71 N. Y. 254; Richardson v. Gosser, 26 Pa. St. 335, holding that when a vendor who conveys to his vendee by deed of general warranty promises to indemnify him for any improvements he may make upon the premises in the event of the title proving worthless, such promise is not nudum pactum but will support an action of assumpsit.

15. Alabama.— Bestor v. Roberts, 58 Ala. 331.

Iowa.—Seeberger v. Wyman, 108 Iowa 527, 79 N. W. 290; Mills v. Brown, 11 Iowa 314.

Kentucky.— Lucas v. Chamberlain, 8 B. Mon. 276; McLaughlin v. Board of Education, 83 S. W. 568, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1126.

New Jersey.— Warren v. Abbett, 65 N. J. L. 99, 46 Atl. 575.

New York.— White v. Baxter, 71 N. Y. 254 (promise of indemnity in consideration of refusal of promisee to furnish to third person margin in stock transaction); James v. Libby, 44 Misc. 210, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 812 (holding that where the buyer and seller of sausages under a written contract on tendering delivery thereof differed as to the quality of the sausages, and especially as to whether they were too fat to satisfy a particular customer, and thereupon the seller wrote out and handed to the buyer a contract of indemnity for any claim that should be made for too much fat by the customer, there was a sufficient consideration for the contract, in that the buyer waived his objections and accepted the goods); Allaire v. Ouland, 2 Johns. Cas. 52.

United States.— Diamond Match Co. v. U. S., 31 Fed. 271, 24 Blatchf. 442.

See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Indemnity," § 4.

Purchase of land on which judgment may operate as lien.— Where a person promised another that if the latter would purchase a parcel of land the former would save him harmless from a judgment held by a third person in case it was declared a lien on the land, it was a sufficient consideration for the contract. Patton v. Mills, 21 Kan. 163.

Indemnity bond given to person in official position.— An indemnity bond given to obtain an accommodation which a commissioner might properly extend but was not legally required to give is not void upon the ground that it was executed colore officii or for want of consideration. Diamond Match Co. v. U. S., 31 Fed. 271, 24 Blatchf. 442.

Incurring costs of suit.— The rule of the text has been applied where the indemnitee agrees to incur the costs and expenses of a suit (Brooks v. Hildreth, 22 Ala. 469; Albro v. Merritt, 97 Mass. 517; Wells v. Mann, 45 N. Y. 327, 6 Am. Rep. 93); as for instance, where he grants permission to the indemnitor to prosecute or defend a suit in the name of the indemnitee (Inhabitants of Industry v. Starks, 65 Me. 167; Goodspeed v. Fuller, 46 Me. 141, 71 Am. Dec. 572; Knight v. Sawin, 6 Me. 361).

Agreeing to become bail.— Marshall v. Cobleigh, 18 N. H. 485. See also Bestor v. Roberts, 58 Ala. 331.

Indorsing notes.—Allen v. Rundle, 45 Conn. 528; Mills v. Brown, 11 Iowa 314; Williams v. Hagar, 50 Me. 9; Kent v. Lyles, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 73; Gardner v. Webber, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 407; Kempton v. Coffin, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 129.

Renewal of note by maker.— Turner v. Crigler, 8 Mo. 16.

Incurring liability as surety.— Seeberger v. Wyman, 108 Iowa 527, 79 N. W. 290; Lucy v. Price, 39 Iowa 26 (suretyship on bond for costs); Barker v. Boyd, 71 S. W. 528, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1389 (suretyship on guardian's bond); Esch v. White, 76 Minn. 220, 78 N. W. 1114 (agreement by attorney to protect sureties on appeal-bond). And indemnity taken by one surety inures to the benefit of all jointly bound. Barker v. Boyd, 71 S. W. 528, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1389. But in Gorman v. Williams, 117 Iowa 560, 91 N. W. 819, it was held that where a liquor bond was void in its inception because not required by law, a promise of indemnity to a surety thereon is not enforceable.

Purchase of property subject to mechanic's lien.— In Frank v. Jenkins, 11 Wash. 611, 40 Pac. 220, it was held that where a vendor of real estate gave a deed with covenants of warranty, a bond given by him to protect the vendee against a mechanic's lien on the property is based on a valid consideration.

Removal of personalty subject to adverse claim.— In Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174, it was held that where one employed to remove personal property claimed by his employer, after learning of an adverse claim, proceeded with the work upon an express promise of indemnity made by one who claimed no interest in the property, the danger thereby incurred was a good consideration for the promise of indemnity.

16. White v. Baxter, 71 N. Y. 254; Manary v. Runyon, 43 Oreg. 495, 73 Pac. 1028 (promise not to revoke offer to purchase); Oliver v. Markes, 1 Head (Tenn.) 536 (promise of indorser of note not to confess judgment and take judgment over against maker).

b. Past Consideration. The general rule that a past consideration, if it imposed no legal obligation at the time it was furnished, will support no promise whatever[17] has been held applicable to contracts of indemnity.[18] On the other hand there are authorities to the effect that a moral obligation founded on previous benefits received by the indemnitor at the hands of the indemnitee will support a contract of indemnity.[19] A formal contract of indemnity will be valid where it is executed in pursuance of a prior understanding at the time the consideration was furnished.[20]

4. Legality of Contract.[21] A contract of indemnity, the manifest object or tendency of which is the compounding of an indictable offense,[22] or the interference with the due course of public justice,[23] is illegal and void. So, as a general rule, a contract to indemnify against liability for publishing a libel,[24] for committing a wilful and malicious trespass,[25] or for illegal acts generally is illegal and void.[26] But in construing a contract of indemnity no presumption will be

18. Bulkley v. Landon, 2 Conn. 404 (where the expression "in consideration of your having indorsed" was held to import a past consideration); Jones v. Shorter, 1 Ga. 294, 44 Am. Dec. 649 (holding that a promise upon no new consideration to execute a bond of indemnity to a cosurety against loss is void if made after the liability of all the parties to the instrument has been incurred); Peck v. Harris, 57 Mo. App. 467 (holding that where land had been conveyed by warranty deed, the purchase of the land did not constitute a consideration for an indemnity bond subsequently given to the grantee to protect him from an encumbrance discovered after the conveyance); Coffin v. Lockhart, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 262, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 1025. See also McMillan v. Frank, 30 Mont. 61, 75 Pac. 685; Rix v. Adams, 9 Vt. 233, 31 Am. Dec. 619. Compare Stocking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 519.

Recital held no evidence of a past consideration.— In Mulford v. Estudillo, 17 Cal. 618, it was held that the mere fact that a bond recited that an agreement had been made does not show that the bond was induced by a past consideration.

Past and continuing consideration distinguished.— Where, eight days after the execution of an administration bond, defendant wrote to a surety on the bond agreeing to indemnify him against loss or injury in consequence of his having become surety, it was held that the consideration was a continuing one and sufficient to sustain the contract of indemnity. 20. Grim v. Semple, 39 Iowa 570, holding that a bond to indemnify a surety upon a bond for costs was sustained by a sufficient consideration, although not executed until after the bond for costs, where it appeared that the latter was signed under a promise that the former should be given.

Burden of proof as to prior understanding. — Where a note was signed by a surety on March 29, and a mortgage to indemnify him was made by the principal debtor and wife on April 1, following, it was held that the courts will not presume that there was no consideration for the mortgage and that the execution of the mortgage was not agreed upon at the time the note was signed. indulged that a contract contrary to law and public policy was intended.[27] If the illegal act is not the consideration of the contract and is entirely disconnected from it, the contract is valid, although the occasion for making it arose out of the existence of the illegal act.[28] It has been held that the legality of a contract of indemnity which is dependent upon the legality of a transaction in another state to which it relates is to be determined by the law of the latter state.[29]

contracts are to be so expounded as to effectuate the intention of the parties.[32] Thus in ascertaining the intention of the parties, the court must take into consideration not only the language of the contract but the situation of the parties and the circumstances surrounding them at the time the contract was made.[33] Where a doubt arises from any ambiguity or obscurity in the language the court will incline against the party whose words are the matter to be construed.[34] So in determining the meaning of a provision in a contract, the contract must be read in its entirety.[35] The extent of the condition of an indemnity bond may be restrained by the recitals, although the words of the condition import a larger liability than the recitals contemplate.[36] Contracts will not be construed to indemnify a person against his own negligence unless such intention is expressed in unequivocal terms.[37] So no presumption will be indulged that the parties intended to make a contract contrary to law and public policy.[38]

2. Persons For and Against Whom Contract Available. The indemnitee alone, or someone in his right, is entitled to avail himself of the benefit of the contract of indemnity.[39] Thus when several persons are liable for the same debt and one of them covenants that he will indemnify another, the other obligors not parties to the indemnity contract cannot claim any advantage from it.[40] Two or more persons may bind themselves as indemnitors either severally[41] or jointly.[42]

Partnership liabilities not covered by contract see Holmes v. Hubbard, 60 N. Y. 183; Lothrop v. Blake, 3 Pa. St. 483; Case v. Cushman, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 544, 39 Am. Dec. 47.

Indemnity against liability of individual not extending to firm indebtedness.— In Donley v. Liberty Imp. Bank, 40 Ohio St. 47, it was held that a bond to save harmless "from all loss, damage and expense, by reason of said or any indebtedness incurred by D" does not extend to an indebtedness by a firm of which D is a member. But see Quickel v. Henderson, 59 N. C. 286.

Extension of indemnity for indorsement to subsequent renewals.— A contract conditioned to indemnify an indorser of a note from any failure to pay it and against any liability that may fall on him in consequence of his indorsement has been held to extend to a subsequent note given and indorsed by the same parties in renewal of the first note. Sutton v. Mulford, 2 Harr. (Del.) 72. See also Boswell v. Goodwin, 31 Conn. 74, 81 Am. Dec. 169; Pond v. Clarke, 14 Conn. 334. Liability as to trustee and individual.— In Beekman v. Van Dolsen, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 288, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 414, it was held that a guaranty of indemnity with a recital that whereas the guarantors as trustees of the estate and as individuals did make a certain instrument and that therefore "we hold ourselves responsible," etc., binds the guarantors both as trustees and as individuals.

42. Lankford v. Broadhead, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 290; Forgy v. McWilliams, 127 Pa. St. 453,

So it is held that where persons subject to a joint and several liability are indemnified, the contract of indemnity will, in the absence of contrary provision in the contract, be construed to be joint and several.[43]

3. Defects in Titles, Adverse Claims, Liens, Etc. Indemnity contracts frequently relate to defective titles, adverse claims, liens, etc.[44] An indemnity promise given by vendors of land against disturbances in possession is not broken by the mere existence of an outstanding right; there must be an actual interruption or disturbance in the possession.[45] But where on a sale of land, the grantor gives a bond to make the grantee safe and secure not merely in the possession of the land conveyed, but in the title, the grantee may maintain an action on the bond, upon the failure of title, although he may not be evicted,[46] and although the grantee has conveyed a part of the land by deed of general warranty he may still recover on the indemnity bond to the full extent to which the title is defective.[47] A contract to indemnify and save harmless from all actions to be brought for the recovery of land has been held to extend to actions founded on lawful claims only.[48] In order that a judgment or an award of arbitrators establishing an adverse claim of title may be conclusive against an indemnitor, notice of the claim must be given to him so that he will have an opportunity to make defense.[49]

4. Liability Under Construction Contracts. A class of indemnity contracts on which damages have been frequently recovered are those containing a covenant to indemnify and save harmless from injuries to the person or property growing out of the performance of contracts for the construction of buildings or other improvements and other similar contracts.[50] But to justify a recovery it must be Damages accruing after suit brought.— In Spear v. Stacy, 26 Vt. 61, it was held that where before suit there was a breach of a contract of indemnity to hold plaintiff harmless for all damages on his contracts to build, assumed by defendant, the damages were to be assessed down to the time of trial, although accruing after suit brought. See also Gennings v. Norton, 35 Me. 308. Compare Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 94, 18 L. ed. 752.

Loss arising from groundless suit or invalid claim.— In Newburgh v. Galatian, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 340, it was held that a bond to save harmless and indemnify against the cost and expenses of a certain act extends to costs of defending a groundless suit for the act in which the obligee succeeded. So in Niagara Falls Paper Co. v. Lee, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 217, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 1, it was held that where a bond was given to the purchaser of a vessel, indemnifying him "against any damage or loss in consequence of any debt or contract, maritime or otherwise," and the vessel was libeled and detained in consequence of a maritime contract in existence at the time of the purchase, the purchaser could recover on the bond for the delay without showing that the detention was based upon a valid claim. See also Home Ins. Co. v. Watson, 59 N. Y. 390. An agreement to save harmless another from any judgment that might be rendered against unless the amount of recovery is limited by a stipulated penalty or is otherwise fixed by the terms of the contract.[56] The penalty named in the contract limits the liability of the indemnitor, although the contract purports to indemnify the promisee against any loss or damage he may sustain.[57] But although the sum introduced into a penal obligation may fix the maximum amount of recovery, yet where it is evidently a mere indemnity for pecuniary loss, the indemnitee's remedy is confined to the pecuniary loss actually sustained.[58] Where, however, the contract is not a mere contract to indemnify and save harmless, but a contract to save from a legal liability or claim, the legal liability and not the actual damage sustained is the measure of damage.[59]

b. Interest. A person who has been compelled to pay a debt or liability against which he is indemnified may, in the action on the contract of indemnity, recover interest on the amount paid,[60] and this it has been held although no interest him in a pending suit does not render the indemnitor liable for a sum offered by him in compromise of the suit, where the offer was refused and the suit determined in favor of the indemnitee. Redford v. Blythe, 74 Miss. 720, 21 So. 919. If land be sold for part cash and in part for indemnity to the vendor from liability in a certain pending suit, and the suit be decided, contrary to the expectation of both contracting parties, in favor of the indemnitee, he cannot charge the lands sold to the indemnitor with any sum on account of the indemnity. Interest in addition to penalty.— In an action of debt on a bond, in form a bond of indemnity, although in truth a bond for the payment of money only, interest accruing after the breach of the condition of the bond is recoverable as damages beyond the stipulated penalty of the bond, when the sum actually due by the creditor without interest equals the penalty of the bond. Lyon v. Clark, 8 N. Y. 148 [affirming 1 E. D. Smith 250]. In Griffiths v. Hardenbergh, 41 N. Y. 464, it was held that on a contract of indemnity stipulating for a penalty, interest upon its amount from the time of recovery against the indemnitee to the trial in the action by the indemnitee against the indemnitor is recoverable. See also Stafford v. Jones, 91 N. C. 189, a mortgage to indemnify one against loss by reason of becoming a surety.

was claimed in the declaration the general rule being that where the law gives interest as a matter of course, a special count for interest is unnecessary.[61]

c. Attorney's Fees and Costs. An indemnitee is entitled to recover legal costs, including reasonable counsel fees which he has been compelled to pay as a result of suits against him, to enforce the liability indemnified against, provided such suits were defended in good faith and with due diligence.[62] Sometimes the contract of indemnity includes attorney's fees and legal costs in express terms[63] and contracts expressly indemnifying a person against the costs and expenses incident to a certain act or arising from a certain claim have been frequently construed to extend to the costs and expenses of defending groundless suits.[64] It has been held that an indemnitor will be liable to an indemnitee for counsel fees

Claims for personal services not included.— In Beekman v. Van Dolsen, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 288, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 414, it was held that an indemnity against costs and damages incurred in ejecting a trespasser from certain where the employment of counsel was with the knowledge of the indemnitor.[65] But an indemnitee cannot recover against the indemnitor for payment of counsel fees or costs voluntarily made.[66]

6. Accrual of Liability. A distinction has been made, in numerous decisions, between a contract of indemnity against a liability, and a contract to indemnify or save harmless from the consequences (damage or loss) of such liability, it being very generally held that in the former case the cause of action is complete when the liability is established, although payment of the liability or actual damage arising therefrom is not shown;[67] whereas in the latter case no right of action property does not include claims for personal services of the person indemnified. See also Magruder v. McCandlis, 3 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 269, 5 Wkly. L. Gaz. 188.

Indemnity against judgment.— Ordinarily where a bond of indemnity is given against a judgment, the breach of the covenant takes place immediately upon the rendition of the judgment. New York v. Sexton, 96 N. Y. App. Div. 184, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 190. As a general rule, the obligation of a bond of indemnity against a judgment will be enforced against the obligor, whether the judgment was obtained by default or consent, provided no fraud or deceit was practised. accrues until actual damage or loss has been sustained.[68] If the covenant or promise be to perform some act for plaintiff's benefit, as well as to indemnify ton, 2 U. C. Q. B. 487. But the condition of the bond must be construed in connection with the recitals of the bond and may be restrained thereby so that a breach will not occur until there has been a trial on the merits. New York v. Sexton, 96 N. Y. App. Div. 184, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 190.

Indemnity against debt incurred and indemnity against future debt distinguished.— In Lewis v. Crockett, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 196, a distinction was drawn between a covenant or condition to indemnify against a debt or duty already incurred and a covenant or condition to indemnify against a debt or duty which may accrue in the future, it being held that in the former case the covenant or condition is not broken without suit; but in the latter case a mere liability to suit is a breach of the covenant or condition.

and save him harmless from the consequences of non-performance, the neglect to perform the act, being a breach of contract, will give an immediate right of action.[69] This rule has been applied to a contract containing a promise to pay a debt or liability.[70] In some of the earlier cases the courts were governed strictly by precise terms of the instrument, and held that non damnifactus could not be pleaded in an action on a bond conditioned for the doing of a certain act, even though it appeared that the bond was given by way of indemnity.[71] But the tendency of the modern authorities is to construe bonds as contracts of indemnity only, and to attach more importance to the general purpose of a bond, as shown by its provisions as a whole, and the interests of the parties in the subject-matter, than to the precise form of words employed.[72] The indemnitee may discharge a claim or demand against him and bring his suit for indemnity without waiting for its legality or validity to be ascertained by legal proceedings, where his liability is clear and a defense to the suit would be unavailing.[73] Nor, it has been held, will a failure to interpose a purely technical defense, although known to the indemnitee, prevent his recovery from the indemnitor.[74] An indemnitee cannot, however, recover from the indemnitor for a payment made gratuitously and in the absence of any legal obligation.[75]

nitee,[81] and the question whether the covenant is dependent or independent is to be determined by a consideration of the contract in its entirety.[82] The indemnitee must also act in good faith in the performance of the conditions.[83] It has been held that where a proceeding to establish the loss of the indemnitee is rendered impossible or impracticable or facts appear showing that such proceedings would be futile, and the loss can be otherwise established, an action is unnecessary to establish the same unless the parties have by precise language stipulated therefor.[84] Payment or performance of an act not required by the terms of the contract will not justify a recovery.[85]

10. DISCHARGE OF INDEMNITOR. The indemnitor will be discharged for liability if the indemnitee, when sued, fails to set up a defense which would probably have been successful;[86] or if by his action he impairs the right of defense by the indemnitor.[87] And the same rule has been applied where the indemnitee by releasing from responsibility a third person ultimately liable deprived the indemnitor of his proper recourse.[88] So when an indemnified surety voluntarily releases the property of the principal debtor from an execution lien, and as a consequence becomes personally liable for the debt, the indemnitor is exonerated, since the liability assumed by the indemnitee is not a necessary consequence of the original obligation as surety.[89] But the conduct of the indemnitee, in order to operate as a discharge or release of the indemnitor from liability, must have been wrongful and prejudicial to the interests of the indemnitor, as for instance, by enlarging his obligation or increasing his risk.[90] If the indemnitor waives the grounds of discharge he continues liable.[91] A contract of indemnity between persons engaged in a joint enterprise, providing in effect that if in the exercise of his personal judgment the promisee advanced money for which he was not bound, the promisor would indemnify him, is a personal contract and is terminated by the death of the promisee.[92]

11. Right of Indemnitor to Return of Securities. On the fulfilment of this contract the indemnitor is entitled to a return of any securities deposited by him as indemnity.[93] But if securities are held as indemnity against certain liabilities the indemnitor cannot obtain them until the liabilities are fully discharged.[94]

12. Operation of Contract as Estoppel. The general rule that if in making a contract the parties agree upon or assume the existence of a particular fact as the basis of their negotiations they are estopped to deny the fact so long as the contract exists[95] is applicable to contracts of indemnity.[96] But a person not a party to a contract of indemnity and wholly unaffected by its stipulations cannot rely upon it as giving rise to an estoppel.[97]

C. Assignability.[98] A covenant or written promise of indemnity has been held assignable under statute in Indiana.[99] The pledgee of a contract of indemnity held as collateral security for a debt cannot sell or assign a greater interest than he possesses therein unless the contract so provides.[1] In the absence of fraud and conspiracy to hurt the indemnitor, he is not entitled to inquire upon what consideration his contract of indemnity has been assigned to another.[2]

act, provided such act is not apparently illegal in itself and is done honestly and bona fide in compliance with defendant's directions.[3] So a person who has been exposed to liability and compelled to pay damages on account of the negligence or tortious act of another has a right of action against the latter for indemnity,[4] provided plaintiff and defendant are not joint tort-feasors in such sense as to prevent plaintiff from recovering.[5] Thus it is well settled that a municipal corporation which has been compelled to pay a judgment recovered against it for damages sustained by an individual by an obstruction, defect, or excavation in the sidewalk or street of such corporation has an action over against the person who negligently or unlawfully created the defect that caused the injury.[6]

B. Existence of Primary Liability. But to sustain an action of this character it is essential that the original liability of defendant should be established. In other words defendant must have been under a legal liability to do or not to do the thing for which damages were recovered in the first suit.[7] On this principle it has been held that the violation of a city ordinance which requires the owner of property fronting on a street to keep the sidewalk free from snow and ice and prescribes a penalty for such violation does not make such owner liable to the city for damages paid to one who received injuries by reason of the property owner's failure to keep the sidewalk clean.[8]

Where a contractor agrees to erect a building for the owner of a city lot and make a cellar extending under the sidewalk of a public street requiring excavation, and receives full possession of the property and has entire control of the work under the contract which contains no direction as to the manner of guarding the excavation, and the owner is subjected to the payment of damages on account of the negligence of the contractor, the manner in which he leaves such excavation open and exposed so that a person without negligence falls into the excavation and is injured, the contractor will be liable to the owner to make good the damages the latter is compelled to pay on account of such injury. Pfau v. Williamson, 63 Ill. 16. But if there is no provision in the contract that the contractor shall have exclusive possession of the lot or that he shall keep the area properly guarded during the progress of the work there is no implied obligation that the contractor shall keep it so guarded; if he has performed his work according to the contract he is not liable over to the owner for damages recovered against the latter for injury resulting from the area being left unguarded. indemnitor has notice of the suit and opportunity to defend, hold him liable not only for the amount of damages recovered but for all reasonable and necessary costs and expenses incurred in such defense,[9] including counsel fees.[10] And the same rule is applicable where the person ultimately liable appears and defends the action.[11]

D. Accrual of Liability — 1. In General. The right to sue for indemnity for damages resulting from the negligence, misfeasance, or malfeasance of defendant does not accrue until payment has been made by plaintiff.[12] On the other hand it is held that where plaintiff contracts with defendant to do work for a third person which plaintiff had contracted to do, the liability of plaintiff for damages incurred in consequence of defendant's failure to perform his contract will give rise to a right of action against defendant, although plaintiff has not paid the judgment recovered against him.[13]

2. Necessity of Compulsory Payment. A plaintiff who is liable for injuries caused by the neglect of defendant may adjust and pay the claim therefor and need not wait the result of a suit in order to be entitled to indemnity from defendant.[14] In the event of an adjustment without suit, the amount claimed must be reasonable and just, and payment must have been made in good faith.[15] The party seeking indemnity must have been legally liable to the injured party.[16]

In New Hampshire under a statute providing that the town shall recover the damages and costs they may have been compelled to pay the person sustaining the injury by reason of an encumbrance or obstruction upon a highway does not include the expenses of defending a suit instituted by the persons suffering the injury or the expenses of removing the encumbrance. Littleton v. Richardson, 32 N. H. 59.

Recovery of several damages.— In Newbury v. Connecticut, etc., R. Co., 25 Vt. 377, it was held that a town is not precluded by one recovery against defendants for damages sustained by their neglect from all future recovery for damages sustained by reason of the same neglect, and hence that a railroad negligently causing a highway to be defective is liable to indemnify a town for what it has been compelled to pay a husband for injury to his wife, although the company had previously paid the town for what it had been compelled to pay the husband for injuries to his carriage occurring at the same time as the injuries inflicted on the wife.

Double damages held not recoverable against indemnitor.— By a statute in Massachusetts making a municipality liable for double damages for injuries received on its highways, it has been held that the municipality can only recover single damages against defendant for his neglect in placing obstructions in the highway. E. Notice. The liability of the indemnitor does not, as a general rule, depend upon the fact of his receiving notice of the action brought against the indemnitee.[17] The omission to give notice in such case does not go to the right of action, but simply changes the burden of proof and imposes upon the party against whom the judgment was recovered the necessity of again litigating and establishing all of the actionable facts. But the indemnitor is concluded by the judgment if he has notice that the suit was pending and had any opportunity to defend it.[18] Such notice may be implied from his knowledge of the pendency of the suit, and express notice is unnecessary.[19]

F. Joint Tort-Feasors. It is a well established rule of law that there can be no indemnity among tort-feasors.[20] But this rule does not apply to a person seeking indemnity who did not join in the unlawful act, although he may thereby be exposed to liability or to one who did not know and was not presumed to know that his act was unlawful; it must appear that the parties are in pari delicto as to each other before plaintiff's recovery will be barred.[21] The burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that the damages in the first recovery were not occasioned by his own neglect.[22]

IV. ACTIONS.[23]

A. Form of Remedy. Contracts of indemnity like other contracts may be the ground of an action ex contractu.[24] But an action of debt will not lie on a contract of indemnity against unliquidated damages.[25] So it has been held that cases: 1st. Where the party claiming indemnity has not been guilty of any fault except technically or constructively, as where an innocent master is held to respond for the tort of his servant acting within the scope of his employment; or, 2d. Where both parties have been in fault, but not in the same fault, towards the party injured, and the fault of the party from whom indemnity is claimed was the primary and efficient cause of the injury."

Where the neglect of plaintiff is constructive only the rule that one wrong-doer cannot recover damages from the other does not apply. New York v. Dimick, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 241, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 46; Rochester v. Montgomery, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 394. To the same effect see Old Colony R. Co. v. Slavens, 148 Mass. 363, 19 N. E. 372, 12 Am. St. Rep. 558; Brookville v. Arthurs, 130 Pa. St. 501, 18 Atl. 1076. Thus a person who places an obstruction in a highway cannot resist the claim of a municipality to indemnity for damages paid, on the ground that the neglect of the municipality to remove the obstruction contributed to the injury. Waterbury v. Waterbury Traction Co., 74 Conn. 152, 50 Atl. 3; Woburn v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 109 Mass. 283; Atkinson v. Chatham, 26 Ont. App. 521. See also Wickwire v. Angora, 4 Ind. So where a coal hole was constructed in a sidewalk with the consent of a village and afterward reconstructed without its consent, it was held that the village might recover over for damages paid for injuries received as a result of the improper reconstruction of the coal hole. Canandaigua v. Foster, 81 Hun (N. Y.) 147, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 686. But when it appeared that the municipality had affirmatively assented to the maintenance of a pole in the street, in such a position as to amount to a nuisance, it was held that the municipality had no right of action over against the electric company setting up the pole, for damages paid out by the municipality to a person injured by the obstruction in question. Geneva v. Brush Electric Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 581, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 595 [affirmed in 130 N. Y. 670, 29 N. E. 1034].

If a note is held as indemnity against the act or default of a third person a suit may be had directly upon it without reference to the special agreement. Wagman v. Hoag, 14 Barb. (N. Successive recoveries on promise of indemnity.— On a promise by A to pay an indemnity to B against three notes payable in three successive years, if B is obliged to pay as each falls due, he may recover on each payment and one recovery is no bar to the others. Hosford v. Foote, 3 Vt. 391.

Action at law and not in equity.— In Hall v. Thayer, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 130, it was held that when defendant with a number of other persons as subscribers to a fund to build a church agreed to hold plaintiffs harmless from any liability in the erection of the church, plaintiffs could maintain an action at law against defendant and were not compelled to resort to a bill in equity, with a view of making the other subscribers parties, since the subscribers were not partners in the erection of the church, but merely shareholders, and their promise of indemnity was not joint but several, the proportionate share of each being distinctly divided.

Cross petition against indemnitor in action against indemnitee.— The obligors in a bond given to indemnify a railroad company against liability for damages to property by reason of the location of its road through the streets of a town are not proper parties to an action by the owner of abutting property against the railroad company for damages and a demurrer will lie to a cross petition filed against them in such action by the railroad company. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Miers, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 640 [following Frey v. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co., 86 Tex. 465, 25 S. W. 609]. Compare Ft. Worth v. Allen, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 488, 31 S. an action for money paid will not lie against a person who has engaged to indemnify another against the costs of an action brought against him, but that the declaration should be specially upon the undertaking to indemnify.[26] On the other hand it has been held that where there is an express contract of indemnity and by its terms it contains nothing more than the law would imply, it is optional with plaintiff to declare in general indebitatus assumpsit for money paid or upon the general contract.[27]

B. Parties. The indemnitee alone, or someone in his right, can enforce the contract of indemnity.[28] Where two persons are named as indemnitees in a bond and only one is damaged a joint action may be brought for the benefit of the person damaged.[29] If the contract is several one may maintain the action without joining the others.[30] If a party sues alone on a bond of indemnity made to

Where a purchaser of land takes from the vendee a bond of indemnity against outstanding liens on the land, and the purchaser conveys the land to another, who is compelled to pay the claims which were a lien on the land, such grantee of the purchaser may maintain an action on the indemnity bond. Smith v. Peace, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 586.

Right of creditor to sue on bond indemnifying debtor.— Where a contract to indemnify a debtor was made by a third person for whose benefit the debt was incurred, it was held that the principal creditor not being a party to the contract could not sue on it in his own name. Knap v. Duncan, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 514. Compare Pulver v. Skinner, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 322. So where an assignee in bankruptcy under an order of court sold real estate of the bankrupt, taking from the purchaser a bond of indemnity conditioned for the payment by the purchaser of outstanding liens and encumbrances on the property and to save the vendor harmless therefrom, it was held that one holding a lien against the property had no right of action upon the bond. Young v. Schlosser, 65 Ind. 225. Where a mortgagor conveyed the premises to one who assumed and agreed to pay the encumbrance and save the mortgagor harmless therefrom, and this agreement was assigned by the mortgagor to the holder of the note and mortgage, it was held that since the assignee took all rights held by his assignor he could maintain an action on the agreement in his own name to recover of the grantee the amount of the note. Foster v. Atwater, 42 Conn. 244.

Action by assignee of indemnity mortgage see Carper v. Munger, 62 Ind. 481.

Action by administrator of indemnitee.— Where the contract of indemnity does not name the indemnitee's executor or administrator, and the indemnitee dies before breach of condition the administrator may maintain an action for a breach happening after his death. Leber v. Kauffelt, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 440, where it was also held that if one entitled to letters of administration pay a claim against intestate and afterward takes out letters of administration he may maintain an action on a bond of indemnity given to the intestate to indemnify him against the claim thus paid.

Parties defendant.— Creditors secured by a trust assignment, who have filed a bill against the trustee and his surety for an account, are neither necessary nor proper parties defendant to a bill by the surety against the maker of the trust upon an alleged promise of indemnity by him, and this although it be charged that the bill of the creditors was filed at the instance of the maker of the trust or his attorneys, or both, in order to throw the burden of the trustee's default on the surety. Cross v. Williams, 72 Mo. 577.

himself and others he must show that he alone received the injury resulting from the breach of the bond.[31]

C. Conditions Precedent to Recovery. A request or demand of the indemnitor to indemnify according to the conditions of the contract is not necessary before suit,[32] and this, it is held, although the promise is to indemnify "on demand," the bringing of suit being regarded as a sufficient demand.[33] In the absence of express agreement it is not a condition precedent to recovery on a contract of indemnity that the indemnitee should first seek reimbursement for the damages sustained from a third person liable to him,[34] and this, it has been held, although the indemnitor might have no remedy over against such third person.[35]

D. Defenses — 1. In General. It is a good defense that plaintiff has not complied with the essential conditions of the contract.[36] The fact that an execution on which money had been paid by an indemnitee was issued in violation of a prior agreement has been held to be no defense in an action by the indemnitee against an indemnitor, provided the indemnitee was not a party to the agreement and did not know of its existence.[37] The fact that a person has received a consideration for assuming the risk of becoming an indorser of paper does not preclude him from resorting to a contract of indemnity for his liability as indorser.[38] In a suit on a bond to indemnify a person against certain notes which he had signed as surety, it is no defense that he is insolvent and cannot be damnified through his liability on the notes.[39] Failure to appear and defend a suit is no defense unless it can be shown that such failure was the result of negligence or that an appearance would have availed defendant.[40] The indemnitee's delay in notifying indemnitor of his liability in a suit on a continuous indemnifying bond will not release the indemnitor unless he can show that the delay was prejudicial.[41] Payment in full of a contractor's claim for work in constructing a pavement for a city, without retaining the amount of a judgment against it for injuries received from the alleged negligence of the contractor, does not operate as a satisfac-

Prior resort to securities unnecessary.— In Batchelder v. Wendell, 36 N. H. 204, it was held that when obligors agreed to indemnify and secure the obligees against any and all loss or damage growing out of a particular transaction and it was at the same time agreed that certain securities should be taken for the benefit of the obligees, the latter might maintain their bill, without showing that they had attempted to make the securities available.

36. See supra, II, B, 9, text and note 80 et seq.

Matters not required by contract.— In an action on a contract to indemnify a city for damages paid on account of injuries occasioned by a certain society to whom a license had been granted, it was held that the fact that the society using a street did not give a written agreement to a city as required by ordinance was no defense in the absence of an agreement to that effect in the indemnity undertaking. Failure to take case to court of last resort. — In Grant v. Lawrence, 79 Hun (N. Y.) 565, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 901, it was held that in an action for breach of contract to indemnify plaintiff by reason of the insufficiency of certain patent rights sold by defendant to plaintiff, plaintiff need not show that he caused the litigation in regard to the patents to the court of last resort, where it appeared that theretofore suits involving the same matter had been decided adversely to the position of defendant.

tion of the contract and bond which he had executed to the city to save it harmless.[42]

2. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.[43] The limitation of actions on contracts of indemnity express or implied is regulated by statute in the various jurisdictions.[44] In the case of a mere promise of indemnity the statute of limitations begins to run from the time the promisee actually pays the money, and not from the time he becomes liable for the payment of it.[45] So the right to sue for indemnity for money paid by plaintiff on account of the negligence of defendant does not accrue until payment is made, and therefore the statute of limitations does not begin to run until payment.[46]

E. Pleadings[47] — 1. BY PLAINTIFF. The declaration or petition may set out in full the bond or contract of indemnity.[48] But this is not always required.[49] In a case where a consideration is not implied, the consideration must be averred and proved.[50] A request to the indemnitor to indemnify according to the terms of the contract need not be alleged.[51] Plaintiff must allege that actual damage has been sustained and in what manner and to what extent he has been damnified; a general averment of loss is not sufficient.[52] Where one person or corpora-

The person indemnified.— On a promise to indemnify against expenses incurred by plaintiffs or their agents a declaration that one of plaintiffs as agent of all had been damnified is good on general demurrer. Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 434. So in an action on a bond of indemnity, given by one person to two, brought by the two for the use of the one who had been damnified, the declaration is not vitiated by a particular statement of the case or by the conclusion that the refusal of defendant to pay was to the damage of one. Mehaffy v. Lytle, 1 Watts (Pa.) 314.

Where an indemnity bond is conditioned for the payment of a debt, as well as the indemnification of plaintiff, it is a sufficient allegation of breach of the bond that the debt became due and was not paid without showing that plaintiff had been actually damnified. Thomas v. Allen, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 145 [overruling Douglass v. Clark, 14 Johns. 177].

Petition held sufficient see Hirt v. Hahn, 61 Mo. 496.

In an action by an agent against his principal on an implied promise of indemnity against losses sustained in the execution of the agency, it was held that an allegation in the complaint that defendant had notice of the losses and damages sustained by plaintiff, set forth in the declaration, and failed to pay the same was a sufficient averment of a breach. Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633, 34 Ala. 147, 73 Am. Dec. 448. In an action against a principal for damages

tion has been compelled to pay damages to a third person by reason of an injury caused by the negligence or wrongful act of another in an action for indemnity for such damages the pleadings must contain not only an allegation of defendant's negligence or wrongful act,[53] but an averment of the liability of the party seeking indemnity to the person injured.[54] If the indemnitor promises to pay only at the end of a specified period after notice of loss, the complaint is demurrable if it fails to allege the lapse of the period.[55] In an action on a bond to indemnify against a suit or demand the declaration must show either that the obligors had notice of the action against the obligee and an opportunity to defend it or that the person bringing the suit had a good cause of action on which he recovered or might have recovered against the obligee.[56]

2. By Defendant. In an action on an indemnity contract the proper plea is non damnificatus,[57] unless the declaration particularly specifies the breaches.[58] Where there is a breach of any of the conditions of the bond sued on which will release defendant from obligation it is for him to set up the conditions and aver the breach thereof.[59] A plea that the indemnitees had suffered a judgment by default has been held to be defective in not averring that there was a legal defense which they might have made.[60]

F. Evidence.[61] In actions on contracts of indemnity express or implied the general rules governing the admissibility and weight and sufficiency of evidence apply.[62] recovered in trespass against the agent by the true owner of property taken, the declaration must negative the existence of any knowledge on the part of the agent at the time of the taking that he was committing a trespass, although the onus of proving such notice may be on the principal. Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633.

Sufficient allegations in reply.— Where, in an action on a contract to indemnify plaintiff on failure of a corporation to perform its contract, the indemnitor denied liability on the ground that no suit had been instituted to enforce the contract against the corporation, and that plaintiff's damages had never been ascertained, etc., a reply alleging that plaintiff's failure to institute such proceedings was due to the corporation's insolvency was sufficient. In an action on a contract of indemnity, express or implied, against the claim of a third person, the record of a judgment recovered by such third person is admissible.[63] A verdict settled without judgment is also admissible to show a recovery.[64] If the contract is uncertain as to the contingencies upon which the indemnity is to be paid, parol evidence is admissible if such evidence is consistent with the terms of the contract.[65] But, if a contract of indemnity contains no direct undertaking to any designated person, an outside party who assumes liability, relying on the instrument, cannot show by parol that it was to indemnify anyone becoming liable.[66]

G. Issues, Proof, and Variance. In suits upon contracts of indemnity the ordinary rules relating to variance between pleading and proof are applicable.[67] Thus in a suit upon a bond of indemnity made to plaintiff and other obligees, plaintiff cannot set up a bond as running to himself alone and give in evidence an instrument made to himself jointly with other obligees.[68]

H. Trial. In actions upon contracts of indemnity the ordinary rules governing the trial of actions ex contractu generally are applicable.[69]

Evidence admissible see Guarantee Co. of North America v. Mutual Bldg., etc., Assoc., 57 Ill. App. 254 (statement of account); Creamer v. Stephenson, 15 Md. 211 (holding that in a suit on a bond to save harmless against anticipated litigation, the obligee could show that it was agreed that the obligor should take care of the suit, as bearing on the fact that the obligee was not negligent in suffering a default); Littleton v. Richardson, 34 N. Evidence inadmissible see Laing v. Hanson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 116, holding that when a contractor liable to another for damages caused in the performance of his contract by his subcontractor, which the latter has agreed to indemnify him against, being sued for the damages, compromises the suit, without the knowledge or consent of the subcontractor, after the latter has neglected the opportunity offered him to defend, the amount compromised for is no evidence against the subcontractor of the amount of damages for which he is liable, but merely fixes a limit beyond which damages cannot be shown against him.

Instructions held not to be erroneous.— In Bauer v. Roth, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 83, it was held that in an action on a bond of indemnity there is no error in charging the jury that they might give plaintiffs the full amount due on the obligation when it was also recommended to the jury that in case they should find for the plaintiffs, they should regulate the amount of damages by the

I. Conclusiveness and Effect of Judgment Against Indemnitee. One who is notified of the pendency of an action and is given an opportunity to defend is concluded as to all questions determined therein which are material to a recovery against him, in an action for indemnity brought by defendant in the original suit.[70] So in a suit to recover the amount of a judgment paid by plaintiff for damages caused by defendant's negligence or wrongful act, defendant is precluded, if he had notice of the former suit, from making a defense which he could have made in the first suit.[71] The verdict and judgment are conclusive on the questions of the existence of the defects causing the damages, the injury to the individual, his freedom from contributory negligence, and the amount of damages,[72] but is not conclusive as to defendant's liability.[73] The person against whom indemnity is sought is not precluded by the judgment from showing that he was under no obligation in the premises and that it was not through his fault that the injury occurred.[74] So it has been held that a judgment against two persons for personal injuries which showed a joint liability and was paid by them in equal proportions is not sufficient alone to authorize a recovery of indemnity by one against the other and does not dispense with proof that the person against whom indemnity was sought was alone guilty of the negligence causing the injuries.[75] It has been held that it is unnecessary that the indemnitor should have notice in writing or even express notice, but that notice may be implied from his knowledge of the pendency of the action or his participation in its defense.[76] The omission to give notice to the indemnitor does not go to the right of action against him but simply changes the burden of proof and imposes upon the indemnitee the necessity of again litigating and establishing all of the actionable facts.[77] The judgment is also conclusive upon defendants in the first action in their character of plaintiffs, in the second as to the facts therein determined. Hence, if it appears that the judgment in the first action was based upon a finding of fact fatal to the recovery in the second, the action over cannot be maintained.[78] But all questions which were not determined in the first suit are open.[79] When it is not clear from the record upon what ground damages were recovered, parol evidence is admissible to ascertain whether the facts in controversy have been so determined as to settle the rights of the parties in the second suit.[80] Where one is employed under a promise of indemnity to do an act which turns out to be a trespass on another's property and employer and employee are sued, a recovery against the employee alone will not preclude him in a suit by him on the promise of indemnity from showing the facts and the liability of defendant.[81]

I. DEFINITION.

"Indians" is the name given by the European discoverers of America to its aboriginal inhabitants.[1] The term "Indian," when used in a statute without any other limitation, should be held to include members of the aboriginal race, whether now sustaining tribal relations or otherwise.[2]

II. STATUS AND DISABILITIES.

A. Who Are Indians[3]— 1. By Birth — a. Half Breeds. The question of the status of half breeds which usually arises in the case of the offspring of a white father and an Indian mother has been the subject of conflicting decisions; the weight of authority is, adopting the common-law rule, that the child follows the condition of the father.[4] But the child of a white citizen and of an Indian mother, who is abandoned by his father, is nurtured and reared by the Indian mother in the tribal relation, and is recognized by the tribe as a member of it, falls under an exeeption to the general rule that the offspring follows the status of the father, and becomes a member of the tribe of the mother.[5]

b. Mixed Bloods. The term "mixed bloods," used in treaties and statutes, includes persons of half, or more or less than half, Indian blood, derived either from the father or from the mother. Such persons, if they live with the tribe, are Indians.[6]

2. By Adoption — a. Of Individuals. A tribe of Indians may admit aliens to membership in the tribe,[7] and a person so adopted acquires all the rights and incurs all the obligations of a member of the tribe.[8] He does not, however, lose his status as a citizen of the United States;[9] nor does he become an "Indian" within the meaning of the statutes.[10] The ordinary occasion for adoption is the marriage of one not an Indian to an Indian woman; but such marriage does not of itself make one a member of the tribe.[11]

b. Collective Adoption of Freedmen. The freedmen of the Cherokee nation[12] and of the Choctaw nation[13] have become members of the respective tribes by adoption; but the Chickasaw freedmen have never been adopted by that nation.[14]

Act of congress.— It is provided by act of congress that all children born of a marriage heretofore solemnized between a white man and an Indian woman by blood and not by adoption, where said Indian woman is at this time, or was at the time of her death, recognized by the tribe, shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belongs, or belonged at the time of her death, by blood, as any other member of the tribe. 30 U. Colored persons never held as slaves in the Indian country have no more rights in the Indian country than other citizens of the United States.[15]

B. Personal Rights and Disabilities — 1. Personal Liberty. An Indian is not, by reason of his tribal relations, deprived of personal liberty.[16] He cannot in time of peace be transported from one section of the country to another nor confined to a reservation against his will.[17]

2. Citizenship — a. In General. An Indian is not a citizen of the United States by birth, because not born "subject to the jurisdiction thereof."[18] He cannot make himself a citizen without the consent and coöperation of the government.[19] He may be naturalized, either individually[20] or through collective naturalization effected by treaty or statute.[21]

b. By Allotment of Lands. By statute every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States to whom an allotment of lands in severalty has been made, or who has voluntarily taken up his residence apart from any Indian tribe and adopted the habits of civilized life, is now declared to be a citizen of the United States.[22] Citizenship acquired by becoming an allottee under such

7. Actions — a. Actions by Indians — (I) In General.[31] A tribal Indian, not being a citizen of the United States, may not maintain suit as such in the federal courts;[32] but may sue in such courts when authorized by statute.[33] He may sue in a state or territorial court as may all persons irrespective of race or color.[34] He may maintain ejectment,[35] or an action for the diversion of water on the public domain,[36] or, in the Indian Territory, for the recovery of land belonging to the tribe, where the chief fails to act,[37] or to recover an allotment of land unlawfully denied him,[38] or to redress any wrong committed outside the limits of his reservation against his person or property.[39] In New York a Seneca Indian may bring suit to enforce a decree of the peacemaker's court.[40] An Indian may assign his right of action to a white man.[41] The United States may maintain an action in his behalf for property which has been issued to him by the government.[42] He cannot sue to enforce the operation of a treaty,[43] or to compel a public representative or agent of an Indian nation to pay the debts of his nation.[44]

(II) Limitations and Laches. It has been held that a statute of limitations will run against an Indian,[45] and according to a lately decided and well considered case, the fact that a litigant is a tribal Indian is not a complete bar to the defense of laches, although it is to be taken into account in determining the effect of his inaction.[46] Civilized Indians entitled to participate per capita in a certain fund of which they have constructive notice are bound to ascertain whether their names are on the pay-roll, if ample time is given them to do so, and when they do nothing and the fund is paid to Indians whose names are on the roll, payment a second time will not be required.[47]

congress, the treaties which have been made retain their validity.[58] They may levy war and conclude peace.[59] The several states of the Union and the United States have recognized in Indians a possessory right to the soil, but they have asserted an ultimate title in the land itself by which the Indian tribes are forbidden to sell or transfer it to other nations or peoples, without the consent of this paramount authority.[60]

c. Supervision. They are not amenable to the laws of the state or territory in which they reside.[61] They are, however, subject to the plenary authority of the United States.[62]

2. Change of Tribal Status — a. Expatriation. It is one of the consequences of the imperfect sovereignty of the Indian nations that they cannot alter or suspend their political relation as wards of the United States by removing from its boundaries.[63]

b. Consolidation. Two or more tribes may consolidate and become merged into one,[64] and their action in so doing binds the Indians,[65] and the United States government[66] in dealing with lands, property, and trust funds belonging to the tribe. A tribe may also admit individual members of another tribe into its membership,[67] and Indians so admitted are thereafter bound by the constitution and laws of their adopted tribe.[68]

c. Division. A tribe may also be divided into separate bands by agreement among themselves or by act of the government.[69] The policy of the government has been to accept such subdivisions as were adopted by the Eastern band of Cherokees.— The Cherokee Indians east of the Mississippi do not form a nation. As individuals they severed their connection with the Cherokee nation. Their organization by the Indian office under the name of the Eastern band was for the purpose of facilitating business with the government, and is at most a social organization. Cherokees v. U. A. 592, holding that the political departments of the government have recognized the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians as constituting a tribe; at least, as that word is used in the United States constitution.

Indians,[70] and when so recognized by the proper executive officers, the courts are bound by their action.[71]

d. Dissolution. A tribe may cease to exist by the complete withdrawal of its members from tribal relations;[72] but tribal relations are not terminated by the mere lapse of time and the allotment of a portion of the tribal lands in severalty,[73] nor by the emigration of even a majority of the tribe, if the organization remains intact.[74] So long as the tribal organization is recognized by the national government, the fact that the habits and customs of the Indians have been changed by intercourse with the whites does not authorize the courts to disregard the tribal status.[75]

3. Validity and Effect of Indian Laws and Customs — a. In General. Except when prohibited by statute, the Indian laws and customs control in all internal affairs of the tribes.[76] Their laws and proceedings are on the same footing as those of other territories of the United States.[77] The United States courts may not without express authority from congress, inquire into the method by which their laws are adopted;[78] but such courts will not take judicial notice of the Indian laws; they must be pleaded and proven.[79] United States courts are by act of congress prohibited from enforcing, either at law or in equity, any laws of the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory; but where rights have vested under such laws these courts are authorized to enforce those vested rights.[80]

b. Descent and Distribution. The law governing the descent of lands and the distribution of the personal property of an intestate, where the tribal organization is still recognized by the government, is the law of the tribe.[81]

c. Taxation by Tribal Government. A tribe has the ordinary powers of taxation over persons and property within its limits.[82] It may require a license before permitting non-citizens to engage in business or in the practice of a profession within its territorial limits.[83]

d. Courts. Except where otherwise provided by statute the tribal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over suits between members of the tribe and over crimes committed by Indians against Indians.[84] The construction of statutes of the tribe is solely within their jurisdiction.[85] Their jurisdiction extends to members of the tribe by adoption.[86] While it does not extend to citizens of the United States, such exemption is waived if not specially pleaded.[87] The judgments of the tribal courts stand on the same footing and are entitled to the same faith and credit as the judgments of territorial courts of the United States,[88] but they may be impeached collaterally on the ground of lack of jurisdiction.[89]

4. Actions By and Against Tribes. It is generally held that an Indian tribe cannot sue or be sued in the courts of the United States or in a state court, except Abrogation by treaty with another government.— The treaty of the Creek nation with the rebel government abrogated the treaty with the United States, and the provisions of a later treaty reaffirming and reassuming all obligations existing under the earlier treaty, do not cover the period when the Creeks were in rebellion. Connor v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 675.

Time of taking effect.— Where a treaty provides that it should take effect when ratified by the president and senate, it did not take effect until signed by the president, although it had been previously ratified by the senate and accepted by the Indians. Shepard v. Northwestern L. Ins. Co., 40 Fed. 341. By the treaty of July 16, 1862, the tribal relations of the Ottawa Indians were to cease, and they were to become citizens of the United States, in five years. A subsequent treaty, negotiated before, but finally ratified as amended after, the expiration of the five years, related back to the date of negotiation, and was a valid treaty with an Indian of the land, to be enforced by the courts,[99] and cannot be disregarded by state legislation.[1] By such treaties the Indians may sell or acquire lands.[2] When rights have vested under treaties congress has no power to impair them.[3] A prior treaty may, however, be superseded by an act of congress.[4]

2. CONSTRUCTION. The construction of an Indian treaty belongs to the courts as a matter of law.[5] Its language is construed, not according to the technical meaning of its words to learned lawyers, but in the sense in which they would naturally be understood by the Indians.[6] As between the United States and the Indians, treaties are liberally construed in favor of the Indians;[7] but grants and reservations claimed under such treaties are strictly construed against the grantee or beneficiary.[8] An admission in a treaty as to the limits of the territory occupied by the Indians is not conclusive on those who have previously acquired rights.[9] A treaty declaring a general amnesty of all past offenses against the United States effects a pardon of all offenses against citizens of the United States.[10] And where it specifies offenses against citizens of the Cherokee nation it includes offenses against a white man who had been adopted into that tribe.[11]

3. RATIFICATION. A treaty is valid, even though not formally ratified and proclaimed, where it has been acted upon and recognized by both parties.[12] A proviso added to a treaty by the senate is void if it was not included in the published copy or in the president's proclamation promulgating the treaty, and if there is no evidence of the assent of the president and the Indians thereto.[13] A state or its agent is authorized to enter into a treaty or convention with an Indian tribe within its borders, for the extinguishment of the Indian title to land, pro-

4. Claims Under Treaties. In the adjustment of claims made by Indians or other beneficiaries under treaties or agreements with Indian tribes, the general principles of construction above set forth are observed.[15] Where the government pays out treaty funds without authority it may be held responsible for repayment,[16] but where payment is made to legally constituted representatives of the tribe the United States is not liable for their misappropriation of the funds.[17] Where the parties to a treaty agree upon an arbitrator of claims arising under it, the courts will not review his decisions.[18]

III. Indian Lands.

A. Title and Rights — 1. Nature of Title — a. In General. Indian tribes hold their right to the soil by virtue of aboriginal occupancy and possession.[19] To sustain the title, their use and occupancy must have been actual, not merely desultory or constructive.[20] Their title is a perpetual right of possession and occupancy, the fee remaining in the United States or in the state where the land is situated[21] as

b. Reservations and Grants to Tribes. Where tribal Indians have been assigned lands and reservations as places of domicile, they have no vested rights therein, but simply a right to occupy at the will of the government.[24] Where they hold by grant, their title does not depend upon aboriginal possession, but its nature and extent are measured by the terms of the grant.[25]

c. Land Grants Conflicting With Indian Title. The United States, or a state holding the fee, may, before a cession by the Indians, convey an unencumbered title in fee simple or a title subject to their right of possession;[26] but such intenreservations is defined by the act of May 18, 1845, declaring that they hold and possess such reservations as a distinct community. Seneca Nation v. Tyler, 14 How. Pr. 109.

tion is not to be presumed; and Indian lands are not affected by an act giving the right of preëmption,[27] or a grant in general terms.[28]

d. Rights of Individual Indians in Tribal Lands. All Indian lands were originally communal property.[29] Where land is conveyed to a tribe individual members of the tribe can acquire no vested interest in any specific tract,[30] but they may have a right of perpetual occupancy in lands improved and occupied by them, under the laws of the tribe;[31] and such interest may be transferred to another member of the tribe.[32] A lease of pasture lands made by the Creek council to an Indian conveys a leasehold estate of all lands included within its exterior boundaries; and one taking up a farm therein is a trespasser.[33]

2. Rights Incident to Indian Title — a. Mines and Mining Rights. One who enters a mining claim within an Indian reservation acquires no rights thereby.[34] But where such entry is authorized as to a particular reservation by act of congress such claims as may be entered are thereby segregated from the reservation, and the Indian title is extinguished.[35] Under the Choctaw constitution, any citizen of that nation who discovered a coal mine acquired an exclusive right to all coal within a radius of one mile;[36] and the laws of the Chickasaw nation provided for the formation of corporations to develop coal and other mines, with authority to contract with capitalists to develop and work the mines.[37] Under these provisions leases were made; but congress abrogated existing leases and prohibited all persons from receiving royalties from such mines, and provided that all coal within the nation should remain the common property of the tribes.[38] Such leases are now expressly prohibited by act of congress.[39] All leases of mineral lands must now be made under regulations promulgated by the secretary of the interior, and the royalties paid into the United States treasury for the benefit of the tribes.[40] In Canada the Indians have no rights to the royal mines and minerals; and the Dominion government can make no stipulation with the Indians which would affect the rights of the province in which the lands are situated.[41]

b. Ferry and Water Rights. Where by treaty a reservation was made of certain rights of ferriage, to be sold and the proceeds paid over to the Indian tribe, the Indians retained equal rights with other persons to a landing at the mouth of a public highway.[42] The Seneca nation can convey the right to use the waters of streams on their lands without consulting the persons owning the right of preëmption to the reservation.[43]

c. Cutting Timber and Hay. Timber standing on lands occupied by Indians cannot be cut by them for the purpose of sale alone; but they may sell timber cut for the purpose of improving the land.[44] The common-law doctrine that the cutting of standing trees is waste does not apply to Indians in the use of a large tract of land within a state, granted to them by the United States.[45] Other persons may not cut timber on Indian lands[46] even when authorized by the Indians.[47] Where a statute empowers the president to authorize the Indians to cut and sell the dead timber on a reservation, the amount which can be removed is limited by the president's order.[48] Where a contract has been made under such law, the

What is dead timber.—"Dead timber, standing or fallen," within the meaning of 25 U. S. St. at L. 673, includes trees which are so vitally injured that a prudent landowner would cut them to preserve their value; it does not include uninjured trees merely because they stand among dead trees. U. S. v. Pine River Logging, etc., Co., 89 Fed. 907, 32 C. C. A. 406.

White labor prohibited.—A rule of the commissioner providing that "no white labor shall be employed" in cutting and removing timber will not prevent a white man from recovering an agreed compensation for hauling logs sold to his employer under a contract government is bound by the acts of its superintendent or agent where his duty required the exercise of judgment and discretion as to what constituted "dead and down" timber,[49] but not where he allows the delivery of an amount in excess of the contract.[50] Payments made for timber received in excess of the amount stated in the contract do not give the purchaser title thereto.[51] A member of the Creek nation who is entitled to cut hay from the common lands may employ a non-citizen for that purpose in consideration of receiving an interest therein.[52] Under a statute prohibiting the removal of hay from the Indian lands, the word "hay" includes hay from grass sown and cultivated, as well as from natural grass.[53]

d. Eminent Domain and Right of Way. The United States may exercise the right of eminent domain in respect to Indian lands,[54] and so may a state having the ultimate property in land within an Indian reservation.[55] There can be no prescriptive right of way over Indian reservations, since a prescription implies a grant and cannot exist where there is no power to grant.[56] An act of congress conferring on the secretary of the interior full authority to grant a right of way to telephone lines in the Indian Territory, and providing that no lines shall be constructed across Indian lands until authority is obtained from such secretary, is not unconstitutional as impairing vested rights as to a company, previously granted by an Indian nation, the exclusive privilege of erecting telephone lines therein, respecting territory not occupied by it and on which it has expended no money.[57]

3. Sale and Lease of Tribal Lands — a. In General. An Indian tribe or nation in the United States has no power of alienation of lands, except to the United States or the state in which the lands are situated, or with the consent of the United States or such state.[58] Nor can the individual members of the tribe convey to a foreigner their interest in lands belonging to the tribe.[59] A white man long enough to compensate him for the improvements made.[64] The same statute provided, however, that any Indian in possession of such amount of land as would be his reasonable share of the lands of his tribe may use it or rent it until allotment is made.[65] In Canada the right of Indians to alienate their lands is also restricted.[66]

b. Judicial Sales. A sale of tribal lands under execution is void unless specially authorized by act of congress.[67] In the Indian Territory improvements on real estate may be sold, but only to citizens of the tribe in which the property is situated,[68] and only on judgments rendered by the tribal courts.[69]

4. Trespass and Settlement.[70] Settlement upon lands belonging, secured, or granted by treaty to any Indian tribe is prohibited by statute.[71] In the Indian Territory a person not a member of one of the Indian tribes or nations has no right to occupy land except by the consent of one who is a member.[72] A tribe is authorized to bring suit to recover the possession of lands held by one wrongfully claiming to be a member of the tribe,[73] and if the chief of the tribe fails to act, then any member of the tribe may bring suit.[74] In a suit so brought it must appear by the complaint that the chief or governor has failed or refused to bring it.[75]

The suit is based primarily on the right of the tribe, and it may be substituted as plaintiff.[76] The tribal government cannot forfeit improvements made on lands within the nation by a non-citizen.[77]

5. Town Sites. An exception to the general laws relating to lands in the Indian Territory is established by statute[78] in the case of town sites which may be held by white men under lease[79] or sold to them, the proceeds being paid to the Indians.[80] The creation of such cities and towns, and the extinguishment of the Indian title to the land, do not affect the governmental rights of the Indians.[81]

6. Taxation of Tribal Lands. Lands secured to Indians by treaty cannot be taxed for any purpose by the state in which they lie.[82] And where the tribe agrees to sell its lands and give possession at a future date there can be no taxation of the lands prior to the delivery of possession.[83]

B. Cession by Treaties — 1. Cession by Indians to Government — a. In General. By treaties made with Indian tribes, the tribes have conveyed, and the state or general government has acquired, the tribal lands or a portion of them.[84]

c. Title and Rights Acquired. The title acquired by the government is absolute and extinguishes all rights and interests of the Indians in the lands, unless there is an express reservation in the treaty.[86]

d. Grants to Individuals. A good title to parts of the lands of an Indian tribe may be granted to individuals by a treaty between the United States and the tribe, without an act of congress or a patent from the executive.[87]

2. Cession of Lands to Tribes by Treaty.[88] Under treaties made with the government Indian tribes have at various times secured grants or reservations of land.[89] Where a treaty contains a grant or reservation to Indians it operates as a grant in præsenti, and the title vests by operation of the treaty;[90] and a clause authorizing forfeiture on failure of condition can be taken advantage of only by legislative or judicial action.[91] Both parties to the treaty are bound by its recognition of territorial rights,[92] and by the boundaries described and the restrictions imposed by the terms of the treaty.[93]

3. Sale Under Treaty Provisions. Under treaties made with Indians the government has in some instances accepted cessions of land to be sold for the benefit of the tribes making such treaties,[94] and in such case the United States acts simply

Manner of making sale.— The United States having undertaken by treaty to "expose to public sale to the highest bidder" the lands ceded to them by certain Indians and having disposed of a large part of the same at private sale are guilty of a violation of

as the agent or trustee of the tribe of Indians by which such a cession of land was made.[95]

C. Lands Held by Individual Indians — 1. Allotments and Grants — a. In General. Allotments of tribal lands have been acquired by individual Indians under treaties[96] or by acts of congress.[97] Individual Indians may also acquire rights in state or other lands, by special enactment;[98] and, if they have abandoned their tribal relations, may avail themselves of the homestead laws.[99] Lands belonging to Indians in common, where the tribal organization is extinct, may be partitioned and sold in accordance with the laws of the state where they are situated.[1]

b. Who Entitled to Allotments — (i) In General. All members of a tribe by blood, whether full blood, half breeds, or "mixed bloods," are entitled to share in the allotment of the tribal lands.[2]

Subsequent acquirement of membership in tribe.— A person of mixed blood who did not reside on the reservation at the time of the passage of the allotment act, but who came there prior to the time when the tribe gave the consent required to render the act effective, was not entitled to the benefit of the act unless his application for membership or allotments to the "heads of Indian families,"[3] such designation includes a white man married to an Indian woman.[4] Where allotments are limited to Indians, but the amount to be allotted depends upon whether the allottee is the head of a family, the amount is determined by his status at the time of the allotment, and not at the date of the act.[5]

(III) Remedy For Denial of Right. Any person of Indian blood unlawfully excluded from an allotment of land may maintain an action therefor in the circuit court of the United States,[6] and the judgment of such court has the same effect as the allowance of the allotment by the secretary of the interior.[7] The United States is by statute[8] a necessary party to the suit.[9]

c. Location and Patent. Reservees under a treaty take by the treaty, not by patent from the government.[10] The title is complete when the location is made,[11] and relates back to the date of the treaty.[12] A patent thereafter issued confers no new rights,[13] and is void if issued to another than the Indian making the location.[14]

d. Possession and Residence. Actual possession and residence upon the lands reserved is necessary in order to acquire title.[15] The residence of an agent thereon is not sufficient, where the treaty requires residence.[16]

e. Abandonment or Forfeiture. Where a treaty or statute requires residence on the lands located, voluntary removal therefrom without the intention of returning works a forfeiture,[17] and title reverts to the United States without entry or other act on the part of its agents.[18] But a temporary absence does not cause forfeiture,[19] nor does a removal by force.[20]

f. Title and Rights Acquired. The title and rights of an Indian to whom land has been allotted under a treaty depend upon the terms of the treaty and of the patent executed in accordance therewith.[21] A title in fee simple absolute may be vested in him,[22] or a title in fee subject only to conditions subsequent.[23] He may take a vested estate which cannot be taken away or affected by any subsequent action of the executive department of the government, so long as he complies with the conditions,[24] or he may take only a title of occupancy, the fee remaining in the United States.[25] Where an allotment is made under the statute[26] which provides that the United States shall hold the land in trust for twenty-five years, or longer at the option of the president, and then convey the land in fee, the land remains the property of the United States during the trust period;[27] and the Indian's rights as a citizen, acquired by reason of the allotment, are not impaired by the restriction of his power to alienate the land or its proceeds.[28] Under a statute allotting lands to Indians in quantities varying according to the size of the family, and providing that the allotment could be declared abandoned if they failed to occupy it, and forbidding alienation, the children of the wife by a former husband inherited no interest in the lands on her death before that of her husband, since the only right of the husband or wife was the enjoyment of the family right of possession held by the husband for the family.[29] The grant Mexican Indians.— Under the constitution and laws of Mexico an Indian was as competent to have, hold, and convey real estate as any other citizen. U. S. v. Ritchie, 17 How. (U. S.) 525, 15 L. ed. 236.

In Canada the statute (13 & 14 Vict. c. 74) which prohibits the sale of land by Indians, applies only to lands reserved for their occupation, title to which is still in the crown, and not to lands to which any individual Indian has acquired a title. Totten v. Watson, 15 U. C. Q. B. 392. The locatee of Indian lands can assign his interest therein, or in the timber thereon; and actual notice of such an assignment, even if there has been a failure to register as provided by the Indian Act, is sufficient to prevent a subsequent assignee from obtaining priority. Bridge v. Johnston, 8 Ont. L. Rep. 196.

A conveyance of allotted land, made by the allottee before his application was acted upon by the president and patent issued, is void, and conveyed no title, either directly or by estoppel, to the grantee. Baldwin v. Letson, 6 Kan. App. 11, 49 Pac. 619.

Assignment presumed.— An assignment of a house and lot by an Indian, as permitted by Me. Rev. St. c. 9, § 22, will be presumed from actual and undisturbed possession by the assignee for more than forty years. John v. Sebattis, 69 Me. 473.

Removal of general restrictions.— The omission, in 4 U. S. St. at L. 729, § 12, of the words "any Indian" from the prohibition of purchases and leases "from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians," while the former statutes had prohibited purchases or leases from "any Indian," shows the intention of congress to remove the general restriction upon the alienation by individual Indians of land reserved to them by treaty. Unauthorized restriction in patent.— A restriction on alienation in a patent, which is not required by the law under which the title was acquired, is void; and the patentee takes a title in fee simple, without any restriction as to alienation. U. S. v. Saunders, 96 Fed. 268.

Computation of time.— Where alienation is restricted for a period of years from the date of the patent, the day of issue of the patent should be included in computing the time. Taylor v. Brown, 5 Dak. 335, 40 N. W. 525 [affirmed in 147 U. S. 640, 13 S. Ct. 549, 37 L. ed. 313].

even though the patent was on its face an absolute conveyance, and did not show that the patentee was an Indian ;[35] and notwithstanding the fact that such Indians have become citizens of the United States.[36]

(II) Effect of Deed When Alienation Restricted. A deed by an Indian in contravention of a treaty or grant withholding or restricting the power of alienation is not color of title,[37] and a vendee cannot acquire any right under such deed by adverse possession or estoppel.[38]

b. Mode and Validity of Conveyance. Where a treaty or statute prescribes a particular mode of conveyance, one independent of that mode is forbidden by implication and is void ;[39] the removal of disabilities after the sale does not render it valid.[40] Deeds by Indians, although approved as required by statute or treaty, are open to the same objections as to infancy or coverture as deeds executed by others ;[41] and they must conform in other respects to the requirements necessary to a valid deed.[42]

c. Approval of Officer. Where the approval of the secretary of the interior or other officer is required to a conveyance,[43] it is a condition subsequent, and if given at any time after the date of the conveyance it is retroactive in effect and validates the original contract and intermediate conveyances.[44] When it is once given the power of the officer is exhausted; the permission or approval cannot be revoked;[45] the Indian title is extinguished, and the land may thenceforth be conveyed as other lands.[46]

3. Leases. The validity of leases executed by Indians depends generally upon statutory or treaty provisions,[47] and where alienation is prohibited, leases made by the Indians are void;[48] a state legislature has no power to authorize such leases.[49] When leases are made in accordance with law, and with the approval of the proper officer, the lessee acquires a vested right, and the lease cannot be canceled or annulled by congress or the executive.[50]

4. Descent and Distribution. Lands reserved to individual Indians by treaty descend according to the laws of the state.[51] But where the tribal organization is still recognized by the government, inheritance is, as has been already stated, controlled by the laws, usages, and customs of the tribe.[52] Land held in trust for an Indian, to whom a patent has not been issued, does not descend to his heirs, but remains a part of the tribal property;[53] except where the law provides that on the death of the original allottee a patent shall be issued in his name, in which case the title passes at once to his heirs.[54]

5. Exemption From Taxation and Judicial Sale. Lands held in severalty by individual Indians under restrictions regarding alienation are not taxable by the state.[55] But lands held in fee simple, without restriction as to alienation, are not exempt from state taxation;[56] nor are any Indian lands after the title has passed from the Indian to a citizen.[57] Lands exempt from "levy, sale, or forfeiture" by the terms of the treaty or statute under which they are granted cannot be sold for unpaid taxes[58] nor to enforce payment for improvements placed upon the land by another.[59] Such exemption is a personal privilege, and does not pass with the land to a grantee of the Indian.[60] Mere restrictions upon alienation, however, do not exempt land from sale under execution.[61] By act of congress improvements upon the public domain owned by Indians by blood cannot be reached or put into the hands of a receiver to pay judgments against them.[62]

6. Indian Scrip. Where scrip is issued to Indians in exchange for lands ceded by them, the provisions of the statute or treaty under which it is issued must be followed in the location of land with such scrip.[63] Where, however, location is restricted by the statute to "unoccupied lands"[64] a valid location may be made upon occupied land with the consent of the occupant.[65] After a location is made in conformity to law, the holder acquires a vested right, and a patent subsequently issued to another is void.[66] Even though scrip issued in lieu of lands is not assignable,[67] the land entered on such strip is alienable as soon as located;[68] and the holder of the scrip may give a valid power of attorney for the location of the land,[69] for the erection of improvements upon it,[70] and for its conveyance.[71] Actual possession or occupancy by the holder of the scrip is not necessary.[72]

IV. Government of Indians and Indian Country.

A. Indian Country Defined. Many statutory regulations regarding Indians are applicable only in the "Indian country," and considerable difficulty has been experienced by the courts in defining and applying that term. It was defined by an early act of congress,[73] but that definition was omitted from the United States Revised Statutes.[74] It has been held, however, that the omitted section may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of the term.[75] It now applies to all the country to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, within the limits of the United States, even when not within a reservation expressly set apart for the exclusive occupancy of Indians,[76] excluding, however,

Country inhabited or occupied by Indians. — "An Indian country is a portion of territory subject to an Indian title, inhabited by Indians. A mere solitude, or a country without Indians, could hardly be considered an any territory embraced within the exterior geographical limits of a state, not excepted from its jurisdiction by treaty or by statute, at the time of its admission into the Union, but saving, even in respect to territory not thus excepted and actually in the exclusive occupancy of Indians, the authority of congress over it, under the constitutional power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes, and under any treaty made in pursuance of it.[77] It of course includes reservations set apart for Indian tribes by treaty, executive order, or act of congress.[78]

B. Regulation of Intercourse With Indians — 1. Authority Over Reservations and Trade With Indians — a. In General. An Indian reservation is a part of the public domain set apart by a proper authority for the use and occupation of a tribe or tribes of Indians. It may be set apart by an act of congress, by treaty, or by executive order; but it seems that a reservation cannot be established by custom or prescription. The fact that a particular tribe or band of Indians has for a long time occupied a particular tract of country does not constitute such tract an Indian reservation. government may invoke the aid of the courts to effect such removals and to enjoin further violations of the law.[92]

b. To Enforce Collection of a Tax. The remedy for non-payment of a tax imposed by an Indian nation is the removal of the offender or his property from the tribal limits by the secretary of the interior;[93] and where a person is not subject to removal, the secretary may, through the agent or a tax-collector of the Indian nation, close the place of business of such persons.[94]

c. Grazing Cattle. Driving or otherwise conveying horses, mules, or cattle,[95] to range and feed on land belonging to any Indian or Indian tribe, without the consent of the tribe, is forbidden by statute, under a penalty of one dollar for each animal,[96] and the secretary of the interior is empowered to remove such intruders and their property by force.[97]

3. Right to Hunt and Fish. Where Indians are by treaty given the right to hunt and fish on their reservation, the state game laws do not apply to them;[98] but where the reservation has been included within the limits of a state formed since the treaty, without reserving the rights of the Indians, such laws may be enforced.[99]

Technical failure to account.— The failure of an Indian agent, through clerical errors, to account for property does not justify a recovery of the value thereof, where it is shown that the property actually remains at the agency. Nominal damages only can be recovered. U. S. v. McClane, 74 Fed. 153; U. S. v. Patrick, 73 Fed. 800, 20 C. C. A. 11; U. S. v. Young, 44 Fed. 168.

The burden of proof of the amount of loss is on the United States. U. S. v. Young, 44 Fed. 168.

Failure to account for property cannot be proven, in an action against bondsmen, upon an allegation of failure to account for moneys received. U. S. v. McClane, 74 Fed. 153.

Evidence.— A treasury transcript, showing the value of property unaccounted for, is not admissible as evidence under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 886 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 670]. U. S. v. Smith, 35 Fed. 490.

19. Adultery is a crime under the laws of the United States when committed on an Indian reservation. Goodson v. U. S., 7 Okla. 117, 54 Pac. 423. It is included in the term "misdemeanor," as used in the rules promulgated by the secretary of the interior on Dec. 2, 1882, for the government of Indians on the Umatilla and other reservations. U. S. v. Clapox, 35 Fed. 575, 13 Sawy. 349.

Cutting timber.— The Cherokee lands are not "lands of the United States" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5388 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3649], providing a penalty for cutting timber on such lands. U. S. v. Reese, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,137, 5 Dill. 405.

Forgery.— An Indian may be convicted for forging and presenting an order for intoxicating liquors, although it is against the law to sell them to Indians. People v. James, 110 Cal. 155, 42 Pac. 479.

Homicide.— Murder is punishable by death under the laws of the United States (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) §§ 2145, 5339; U. S. v. Martin, 14 Fed. 817, 8 Sawy. 473); and this law includes the murder of one Indian by another, since the passage of 23 U. S. St. at L. 385, and the provision of that statute was not repealed by 29 U. S. St. at L. 487 (Good Shot v. U. S., 104 Fed. 257, 43 C. C. A. 525). A pagan Indian who, believing in an evil spirit in human shape called a Wendigo, shot and killed another Indian under the impression that he was the Wendigo, was properly convicted of manslaughter. Reg. v. Machekequonabe, 28 Ont. 309. An assault with intent to kill, by an Indian upon an Indian, on a reservation in a state, is indictable under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5346 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3631], since the passage of 23 U. S. St. at L. 385 (U. S. v. Logan, 105 Fed. 240); but it was not prior to that statute (U. S. v. Terrel, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,453, Hempst. 422). When such an assault is committed by an Indian upon a white person, or vice versa, it is not necessary under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2142, to show malice (Jennings v. U. S., 2 Indian Terr. 670, 53 S. W. 456); and this statute does not require that the act would be murder if death had ensued (Ex p. Brown, 40 Fed. 81).

Larceny and receiving stolen goods.— Larceny, committed on an Indian reservation, is punishable under the laws of the United States, and by the federal courts. Oats v. U. S., 1 Indian Terr. 152, 38 S. W. 673; In re Ingram, 12 Okla. 54, 69 Pac. 868; U. S. v. Ewing, 47 Fed. 809; U. S. v. Bridleman, 7 Fed. 894, 7 Sawy. 243; Anonymous, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 447, Hempst. 413. In Canada an Indian cannot be indicted for larceny for cutting and removing wood from land on the reservation. Recourse must be had to the summary proceedings provided by the Indian Act (Can. Rev. St. c. 43). Reg. v. Johnson, 8 Can. L. T. 334. The United States statute U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5357 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901) p. 3639] defining the offense of receiving stolen goods and prescribing its punishment is in force in the Indian Territory. Bise v. U. S., (Indian Terr. 1904) 82 S. W. 921.

Rape, by an Indian man upon an Indian woman, punishable by death under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5345 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3630] and 23 U. S. St. at L. 385, is made punishable by imprisonment at the discretion of the court by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5325 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3620]. Assault

b. Selling or Furnishing Liquor — (I) In General. Selling or furnishing intoxicating liquors to Indians is a criminal offense by act of congress,[20] and by statutory enactment in some of the states and territories of the Union[21] and in Canada.[22] Under such statutes an Indian, as well as any other person, is chargeable with the commission of this crime.[23]

(II) What Indians Protected. It has been held that under the various statutes on the subject are included Indians to whom allotments of land have been made, so long as the title thereto is held in trust by the government;[24] every Indian under the charge of a superintendent or agent,[25] wherever he may be;[26] and all Indians, including mixed bloods, over whom the government exercises guardianship.[27]

with intent to commit rape, committed by an Indian man upon an Indian woman, both residing on a reservation, is not cognizable as a crime by any statute of the United States, and the federal courts have no jurisdiction. U. S. v. King, 81 Fed. 625.

Robbery, committed in the Indian country, was not punishable as such under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2145. Anonymous, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 447, Hempst. 413. Under 25 U. S. St. at L. 787, a conviction of assault with intent to rob may be had, although the robbery is actually accomplished. The crime is not merged into the crime of robbery, for the reason that the United States statutes do not provide any punishment for the crime of robbery in the Indian country. Axhelm v. U. S., 9 Okla. 321, 60 Pac. 98.

Using a deadly weapon in resisting an Indian agent who was making a search for spirituous liquors on the reservation is not an offense under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5447 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3678]. Mackey v. Miller, 126 Fed. 161, 62 C. C. A. 139.

(III) Intent and Knowledge. Under an indictment for selling liquor to an Indian it is not necessary to prove criminal intent.[28] And a claim that defendant did not know that the person to whom he sold was an Indian is no defense.[29]

c. Introducing Liquor Into the Indian Country — (I) In General. Introducing liquor into the Indian country is prohibited by act of congress, and is subject to the same penalties applicable to the crime of selling or giving liquor to an Indian.[30] The transportation of liquors as an article of commerce across a reservation is not a violation of the statute.[31]

(II) Seizures and Forfeiture. Where liquor is introduced into the Indian country in violation of law, the liquor itself, the instruments or means used in conveying it thither, and the goods found in company with the liquors, are subject to seizure and forfeiture.[32] The seizure can be made only when the liquors are found in the Indian country.[33]

2. Criminal Jurisdiction — a. In General. Up to the year 1885 crimes committed in the Indian country were within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States courts, except crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another, which were punishable solely by the laws of the tribes.[34] The state courts had no jurisdiction.[35] By a statute enacted in that year jurisdiction over murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, and larceny when committed by an Indian, was vested in the United States and territorial courts.[36]

b. On Reservations in a State — (I) OVER INDIANS. A state has no jurisdiction over crimes committed by Indians within a reservation, such jurisdiction being in the United States or the tribal courts.[37]

(II) OVER PERSONS NOT INDIANS. Crimes committed by white persons on a reservation within a state, except where jurisdiction over such reservation has been expressly reserved to the United States courts upon admission of the state to the Union, are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the state courts.[38] If the jurisdiction of the United States is so reserved by any treaty or statute, the United States courts have exclusive jurisdiction.[39]

mission of any offense specified in the act of March 3, 1885,[41] must be tried in the territorial courts and under territorial laws.[42] It is improper to try him before the district court of the territory while sitting as a United States court.[43] In regard to offenses not named in that act, and punishable under the laws of the United States, the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction.[44]

(II) Over Persons Not Indians. The United States courts in a territory have exclusive jurisdiction over all crimes punishable by the laws of the United States, when committed by persons other than Indians, on an Indian reservation.[45] Territorial laws which attempt to punish acts made criminal by the laws of the United States have no force within an Indian reservation.[46]

3. Procedure — a. In General. The rules of the common law govern as to procedure in criminal cases arising in the Indian country, except where other provision is made by statute.[47]

b. Warrant. An officer at an Indian agency has no authority to arrest a resident on such reservation without a warrant, on a charge of misdemeanor not committed in his presence.[48]

c. Indictment or Information[49] — (I) In General. Where jurisdiction over offenses by one Indian against another is reserved to the tribal courts, an indictment in a federal court must aver that either defendant or the party injured was not an Indian.[50] An information filed in the state court of a county containing within its limits a part or the whole of an Indian reservation, against a person described as an Indian, need not in order to confer jurisdiction, aver either that such person does not sustain tribal relations or that the offense was not committed within the limits of such reservation.[51] Under the constitution of the Creek nation, requiring the prosecuting attorney to indict all offenders, the finding of an indictment by a grand jury is not necessary.[52]

Variance.— Under 29 U. S. St. at L. 506, where an indictment alleged that the Indian to whom the liquor was sold was a ward of the government, and the proof showed also that he was an Indian to whom an allotment of land had been made, there was no variance. Mulligan v. U. S., 120 Fed. 98, 56 C. C. A. 50.

Names of witnesses.— On an indictment

Indians it is not necessary to name the Indians to whom the liquor was sold.[54] An indictment charging that defendant "did give and sell" intoxicating liquors to an Indian,[55] or did introduce into the Indian country certain "ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine and intoxicating liquors"[56] is not bad as stating two offenses.

d. Bail. The giving and forfeiture of bail in the Indian Territory is governed by the provisions of the Arkansas statute,[57] and the United States statute relating thereto[58] has no force therein.[59]

e. Venue. To entitle an Indian to a change of venue under the act of congress[60] his citizenship in the tribe must be shown.[61]

f. Burden of Proof. Where the jurisdiction depends upon the status of one of the parties, his status is a question of fact for the jury, and the burden of proof is on the government.[62]

g. Appeal.[63] In the prosecution of an Indian for crime, the jurisdiction of the state courts can be challenged for the first time on appeal.[64]

E. Civil Jurisdiction of State and Territorial Courts. State courts have jurisdiction over controversies respecting lands lying within the state and belonging to or claimed by Indians,[65] other than tribal lands.[66] They have jurisdiction generally over actions on contracts made with Indians[67] and actions sounding in tort.[68] The property of a tribal Indian on a reservation does not, on his death, become subject to the state laws of distribution, but descends in accordance with the custom of the tribe; and the state courts have no jurisdiction to appoint an administrator.[69] Nor have they jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for minor children on a reservation.[70]

F. Taxation[71] — 1. Of Indians. Although Indians maintaining tribal relations within the Indian country cannot be taxed by a state,[72] yet where a reservation within a state has been extinguished and the Indians have taken allotments of land in fee simple and become citizens, their personal property is subject to taxation.[73] A state cannot, however, tax personal property furnished to Indian allottees by the government to enable them to maintain themselves while the title to their allotments is held in trust by the United States, nor can it tax improvements on allotted lands so held.[74]

2. Of Other Persons. Unless a reservation is expressly excepted from the jurisdiction of a state when admitted, or of a territory when organized, the property of all persons within the limits of the reservation, except that of Indians, is subject to taxation by the state or territory.[75]

V. INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

A. Jurisdiction and Liability — 1. In General — a. Jurisdiction. The United States court of claims has jurisdiction over claims against the United States and Indian tribes for depredations committed by members of the tribe upon the property of citizens of the United States.[76] The statute is jurisdictional only, and does not create new liability.[77] Jurisdiction as to depredations committed by others upon the property of certain members of the Pottawatomie nation of Indians is conferred by statute upon the United States court of claims, and under this statute are included depredations by other Indians as well as by whites.[78]

b. Basis of Liability. The liability of the tribe and of the United States for depredations committed by Indians depends upon statutes prior to the jurisdictional act.[79] Such liability may, however, be assumed under a treaty by a tribe to which the statutes would otherwise not apply.[80]

c. Amnesty. A general amnesty declared in a treaty bars the prosecution of a claim for a prior depredation committed by members of the tribe.[81]

2. Nature of Depredations — a. In General. A depredation, within the meaning of the statute, is a voluntary and wilful act; and where there was neither malice nor gross negligence on the part of the Indians causing the damage there can be no recovery.[82] The term "depredation" involves one or more of the following conditions: Force, trespass, violence, a physical taking by force, or destruction.[83] No remedy is afforded for the conversion of property not in the legal possession of the owner or his agent;[84] nor for the acts of Indians done under the direction of an officer of the United States.[85]

b. Property Losses Only. The statute contemplates indemnity only for property taken or destroyed. It does not include compensation for consequential damages,[86] or for personal injuries.[87]

3. Place of Depredation. The offense must have been committed within the territorial limits of the United States,[88] and, if within the Indian country, upon the property of one who was lawfully there.[89]

4. Limitations. All limitations prescribed by previous statutes are waived. Claims must be filed within three years from the date of the statute; but no claim is to be considered which accrued after the date of the passage of the act.[90] A claim accruing prior to July 1, 1865, is barred, unless it has been presented, with evidence to support it, before the date of the jurisdictional act.[91]

B. Parties — 1. Claimants — a. In General. The Indian Depredation Act authorizes an action by, and judgment for, the owner of property taken or destroyed.[92]

The wrong-doer was never demanded as provided by the treaty, and no tribe ever offered or refused to surrender one. b. Citizenship. The claimant must have been a citizen of the United States at the time of the depredation.[93] The primary declaration of intention to become a citizen is not sufficient, although naturalization was afterward completed.[94]

c. Partners. The interests of partners are separable under the statute, and a partner who was a citizen may maintain suit for his interest, although the other partners were aliens.[95] Where suit is brought for the same property by a surviving partner and the heirs of the deceased partner, the surviving partner is entitled to recover for the whole amount.[96]

d. New Parties by Amendment. When an action arising from the loss of partnership property has been erroneously brought by one partner in his own name, the other partners may come in by amendment, although the time for filing new claims has expired.[97] A claim "presented to the court by petition" as required by statute, within the jurisdictional period, by an attorney in ignorance of the death of the party in whose favor the claim existed, is not a cause pending and cannot be used as a basis for reviving the case in the name of the administrator after the expiration of the jurisdictional period. The common-law rule that a suit begun in the name of a dead man is a nullity is applicable to cases under the Indian Depredation Act.[98] Where an Indian depredation suit was instituted in due time by the children of a deceased owner, they being the parties really in interest, but not authorized by the law of the state in which they resided, to maintain an action, the administrator of the estate may be substituted, at their consent, as party plaintiff, after the jurisdictional period has expired.[99]

2. Defendants — a. Indians — (i) In General. The Indian tribe, members of which are charged with the commission of a depredation, is a necessary party to the suit.[1] Where, however, the tribe is unknown, suit may be maintained against the United States alone.[2] Where there is no tribal organization there is no liability under the statute.[3]

(ii) Band, Tribe, or Nation — (A) In General. The suit is to be brought against the "band, tribe or nation"[4] to which the depredating Indians belonged.

4. Nation, tribe, and band distinguished.— The word "nation," as applied to Indians, indicates little more than a large tribe or a group of affiliated tribes possessing a common government, language, or racial origin. By a "tribe" we understand a body of Indians of the same or a similar race, united in a community under one leadership or government, and inhabiting a particular, although sometimes ill-defined, territory. A "band" is a company of Indians not necessarily, although often, of the same race or tribe, but united under the same leadership in a common design. How large a company must be to constitute a band it is unnecessary to decide. It may be doubtful whether it requires more than independence of ac-

In construing this provision the court will recognize such subdivisions of Indians as are indicated by treaty,[5] by act of congress,[6] by executive recognition,[7] or as have been adopted by the Indians themselves.[8] If a suit is commenced against a tribe, all the separate bands composing that tribe are in court, and judgment may be rendered against the particular band responsible for the depredation, or against the tribe, if the particular band to which the depredators belonged cannot be identified.[9]

(B) Amity — (1) IN GENERAL. The court is without jurisdiction, and there can be no recovery under the statute, unless the band, tribe, or nation to which the depredators belonged was in amity with the United States at the date of the depredation.[10] An engagement by treaty to pay for depredations committed by members of the tribe does not extend to acts of war committed with the sanction of the tribe.[11]

(2) WHAT CONSTITUTES. The presumption of amity arising from the existence of a treaty, or its continued recognition by the officers of Indian affairs, is not conclusive upon the court.[12] The inquiry is whether the tribe was in a state of actual peace with the United States.[13] Actual engagements with troops of the United States are not necessary.[14] The fact that a band or tribe is engaged in general hostilities with settlers is sufficient to establish a state of war.[15] The cause or occasion of carrying on hostilities is immaterial as to the question of amity.[16]

(3) Beginning and Termination of Hostilities. No formal declaration is necessary to mark the beginning of an Indian war. It is sufficient that hostilities exist.[17] Amity is restored from the date of any authorized and observed agreement to cease hostilities, although the formal treaty may be of later date.[18]

(4) Liability For Hostile Bands. A tribe in amity with the United States is not responsible for depredations committed by a distinct band previously a part of that tribe, which is at war with the United States;[19] nor for depredations committed by individual members of the tribe who have affiliated with another band or tribe which is at war.[20] But a band which is in amity is liable for depredations committed by its members, although another band of the same tribe be at war.[21]

(iii) New Parties by Amendment. A tribe of Indians not named in the the petition cannot be substituted as defendants by amendment after the expiration of the time for filing new petitions; and a petition naming the wrong tribe, or one naming no tribe, must be dismissed if the tribe is known.[22]

b. The United States. The liability of the United States was rescinded by statute in 1859,[23] but was reassumed in certain cases by the jurisdictional act.[24] The United States is solely liable only where the tribe to which the depredating Indians belonged is unknown.[25]

C. Allowed Claims —1. In General. In the case of claims which had been allowed by the secretary of the interior, but not paid, prior to the passage of the jurisdictional act, the claimant is entitled, with the consent of both parties, to a judgment for the amount allowed. The court determines no question applicable to the original controversy, but simply enters judgment upon the award of the secretary.[26]

Plunder and robbery.— The fact that the paramount purpose of the band was plunder and robbery and not hostility does not establish a condition of amity. Allred v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 280.

17. Marks v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 147.

A band of disaffected Indians from different tribes, confederated for the purpose of hostility against the United States without the consent of their respective tribes, and maintaining that status for several years, constituted a band within the meaning of the statute, and there can be no recovery for depredations committed by its members while the hostility continued. 2. Basis of Allowance. An allowance upon which judgment can be rendered under this provision of the statute must have been made by the secretary under the provisions of the act of 1885,[27] and his jurisdiction under that act extended only to cases in which the tribe was liable under a treaty.[28] Such liability arises only from an express undertaking to pay for depredations; a general stipulation to keep the peace did not authorize the secretary to make awards.[29]

3. Effect of Reopening. If either party elects to reopen the award, the whole case is thereby reopened, and must be tried de novo.[30] The party electing to reopen assumes the burden of proof.[31]

D. Evidence — 1. In General. The claimant must establish his case by competent and sufficient evidence. If the attorney-general fails to plead, the claimant is not entitled to judgment by default.[32] Ex parte affidavits filed with the claim in the interior department are competent evidence under the statute, but they are received with caution and are entitled to little weight.[33] Where the claimant has delayed for a long period before filing his claim, the court will not

Effect of allowance.— The allowance by the secretary has not the sanctity of a judicial finding, binding upon the rights of the parties. Its only effect is that where made with authority it may be made, by the consent of both parties, the basis of a judgment. Crow v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cl. 16.

When the claimant has accepted payment of the amount allowed by the secretary, although it was less than the amount claimed, he cannot maintain suit in the court of claims for the remainder. Brice v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cl. 23.

Reopening claim.— When defendants have not signified their election whether they will reopen the case, a motion for judgment on the secretary's award is premature. Mitchell v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 316. When both parties have elected not to reopen and submitted the case to the court, it will not be remanded for the purpose of argument. Wynn v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 15.

Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent, and the attorney-general's election not to reopen does not estop him from moving for a new trial on grounds going to the jurisdiction of the court. McCollum v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cl. 469.

What constitutes allowance.— A claim allowed under a prior statute, but subsequently reëxamined and allowed under the statutes referred to in the jurisdictional act, is an allowed case. And a claim allowed on the merits, but disallowed because barred, is also an allowed case within the meaning of the law. Mitchell v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 316. The transmission of a list of cases, after the passage of the act (March 3, 1885), which had been allowed prior to that date, without reëxamination, was not an allowance under that statute. Buchanan v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 127. Where the secretary refers a case to congress without recommendation, the case is not an "allowed" one within the meaning of the statute. Hegwer v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cl. 405.

Consequential damages.—The secretary had no power under this statute to allow a claim for consequential damages. Brice v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cl. 23.

31. Montoya v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cl. 71; Cox v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 349.

New evidence not necessary.— The statute does not imply that the party assuming the burden of proof must introduce new and additional evidence. Sufficient proof may be found in the record. But the court will not lightly disturb the award of the secretary; and will not take up conflicting evidence which was before the secretary and from it draw conclusions different from those reached by him. Price v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cl. 106; Montoya v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cl. 71; Woolverton v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 107.

render judgment on the unsupported testimony of the parties in interest, nor on the testimony of one witness.[34]

2. OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS. The court of claims may examine official documents on file in any of the departments of the government, or the courts, to determine whether a tribe of Indians was in amity with the United States.[35]

E. Pleadings and Judgment—1. JURISDICTIONAL FACTS. The jurisdictional facts of citizenship of the claimant and amity of defendant Indians are put in issue by a general traverse.[36] If either party asks for a severance of issues, these jurisdictional facts must be first tried and determined.[37]

2. TIME FOR PLEADING. If the attorney-general fails to file a plea within the sixty days prescribed by the statute, it is within the discretion of the court to allow him to file it afterward.[38]

3. JUDGMENT. Where a judgment has been entered against a nation or tribe of Indians, and it appears that the depredation was chargeable to a band, a subdivision of that tribe or nation, the judgment will not be disturbed, but an additional finding will be entered, for the guidance of the executive departments.[39] Where the government recovers a judgment on its counter-claim, the court will not deduct the amount from the judgment rendered against the Indian tribe, but will certify both judgments.[40]

F. New Trial. The statutory provision, authorizing the court to grant a motion for new trial, made by the attorney-general under certain circumstances, within two years after the final disposition of a case, is applicable to Indian depredation claims.[41]

G. Attorney's Fees. There must be a judicial finding and judgment upon the question of attorney's fees in every case. An attorney cannot waive the allowance of fees by the court, unless he waives all compensation from his client.[42] Contracts for attorney's fees made before the passage of the jurisdictional act, in excess of the amount awarded by the court, are void.[43]

I. NECESSITY FOR AND FORMS OF ACCUSATION.*

A. In General — 1. NECESSITY FOR FORMAL ACCUSATION. There can be no conviction or punishment for a crime without a formal and sufficient accusation. In the absence thereof a court acquires no jurisdiction whatever, and if it assumes jurisdiction, a trial and conviction are a nullity.[1] The accusation must charge an offense;[2] it must charge the particular offense for which the accused is tried and convicted;[3] and it must be made in the particular form and mode required by law.[4] This is true, not only at common law,[5] but also under constitutional or statutory provisions in all jurisdictions.[6]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS — a. In General. In most jurisdictions, if not in all, a formal accusation, or an accusation in a particular mode or form, is expressly required by constitutional or statutory provisions, or by both, and these provisions must of course be followed.[7] The constitution of the United States declares that "in all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to . . . be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation,"[8] and there are similar provisions in the state constitutions.[9] There are also provisions in both the federal and state constitutions against depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.[10] Under these provisions the respective legislatures can neither dispense altogether with the necessity for a formal accusation, nor, by prescribing a particular form or undertaking to do away with the necessity for particular allegations, render sufficient an accusation which fails to charge the offense for which the accused is tried or fails to set it forth with such certainty as is reasonably necessary to inform him of the nature and cause of the accusation.[11] In many jurisdictions the constitution also provides that offenses, or offenses of a particular grade or class, shall be prosecuted by a particular form of accusation, and in such cases a prosecution in any other mode, even with legislative sanction, is a nullity.[12] Subject to these restrictions, however, it is within the power of the legislature to prescribe the mode and form of accusation in criminal cases, although in doing so it may depart from the mode or form prescribed by the common law.[13]

before their adoption or enactment, if such appears to be the intention, and if such a construction does not violate the prohibition of the federal constitution against ex post facto laws; but not otherwise.[14]

c. Whether Constitutional Provisions Are Self-Executing. Constitutional provisions requiring or authorizing a particular form or mode of accusation in criminal prosecutions are usually self-executing.[15] Sometimes, however, such provisions cannot become operative until a statute has been enacted to carry them into effect.[16]

3. Consent, Waiver, and Estoppel. According to the weight of authority, the absence of an accusation in the form prescribed by the constitution or statute cannot be cured, so as to confer jurisdiction and validate a conviction, by consent, waiver, or estoppel on the part of the accused, or by stipulation on the part of his counsel.[17]

4. Prosecution in Moot Form. A defendant cannot frame the indictment or other accusation under which the prosecution is had and thus present questions for determination in moot form.[18]

B. Particular Forms of Accusation — 1. In General. The particular forms or modes of accusation now recognized are: (1) Indictment or presentment by a grand jury;[19] (2) information by the public prosecutor on behalf of the state;[20] (3) complaint or affidavit by a private individual;[21] and (4) coroner's inquisition.[22] Formerly there were certain other modes of accusation which are now obsolete.[23]

2. INDICTMENT AND PRESENTMENT — a. Definition and Nature of Indictment. An indictment is a written accusation of a crime drawn up by the public prosecuting attorney and submitted to the grand jury, and by them found and presented upon oath or affirmation as a true bill.[24] In some states it is substantially so defined by statute.[25] The term, however, is sometimes used in a broader sense, and so as to include other accusations.[26]

a person could be put upon his trial on the verdict of a jury in a civil action, as upon an indictment; as on the verdict in a civil action for taking and carrying away goods, where the jury found that they were taken and carried away feloniously, so that the act constituted larceny; and on a verdict in an action for libel or slander in charging plaintiff with a criminal offense, where defendant pleaded the truth in justification and the jury found the plea to be true. 1 Chitty Cr. Derivation.— Lord Coke says: "Indictment cometh of the French word enditer, and signifieth in law an accusation found upon an inquest of twelve or more upon their oath." 2 Coke Litt. 126*b* [quoted in Mose v. State, 35 Ala. 421, 425]. See also State v. Tomlinson, 25 N. C. 32, 33; Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Williams v. State, 12 Tex. App. 395, 398], where it is said: "This word, indictment, is said to be derived from the old French word inditer, which signifies to indicate; to show, or point out. Its object is to indicate the offense charged against the accused."

"Before the grand jury have found the accusation to be true, it is merely a bill," and not an indictment. 1 Chitty Cr. L. 163. And see Arapahoe County v. Graham, 4 Colo. 201 (holding that since an indictment is not strictly speaking so called until it has been found a true bill, the provision made in a statute for fees to the district attorney for drawing each "indictment" could not be held to include compensation for drawing bills ignored by the grand jury); State v. Tomlinson, 25 N. C. 32; State v. Ray, Rice (S. C.) 1, 4, 33 Am. Dec. 90 [citing 2 Hawkins P. C. c. 25, § 1].

25. Thus in New York an indictment is defined by statute as "an accusation in writing, presented by a grand jury to a competent court, charging a person with a crime." Code Cr. Proc. § 254. See People v. Dumar, 106 N. Y. 502, 509, 13 N. E. 325; Jones v. People, 101 N. Y. App. Div. 55, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 275; People v. Flaherty, 79 Hun (N. Y.) 48, 50, 29 N. Y. "Indictment" and "information."— "Indictment" is sometimes used for "information," as in the act of South Carolina of December, 1866 (13 S. C. St. 493), providing

b. Definition and Nature of Presentment. A presentment is the notice taken by a grand jury of an offense from their own knowledge or observation, or of their own motion on information from others, without any bill of indictment having been submitted to them by the public prosecutor.[27] A presentment is regarded, in the practice at common law and under some of the statutes, as nothing more than instructions by the grand jury to the public prosecutor for framing a bill of indictment, which, being prepared by him, is submitted to them and found a true bill.[28] The presentment, merged in the indictment, ceases and becomes extinct, and the indictment becomes the basis of the prosecution.[29] It has been held that the public prosecutor, who is the representative of the sovereign or state, and whose concurrence and coöperation in the prosecution is required, is not bound to submit a bill of indictment, and if he declines to do so the presentment ceases to exist for any purpose.[30] In some of the cases, however, it has been held that a prosecution may be based on the presentment, without any indictment or information; and this is or has been the rule in some states by statute.[31] On the other hand statutes sometimes expressly provide the contrary that "no presentment of a grand jury shall be necessary in any case" in the district court, "but it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General and solicitors, after enquiring into the facts of each case, to prepare bills of indictment and present the same . . . to the District Judge for his examination, who shall order the same to be docketed for trial, if in his judgment the prosecution thereof be advisable." State v. Starling, 15 Rich. (S. C.) 120, 122, holding that the words "bills of indictment" meant "information."

The word "indicted" in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 1032 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 722], authorizing the court to enter a plea of not guilty when defendant stands mute includes a prosecution by information. U. S. v. Borger, 7 Fed. 193, 19 Blatchf. 249.

The words "subject to indictment" in a statute declaring that any person violating its provisions shall be subject to indictment do not exclude prosecution by information authorized by a general statute. See infra, I, B, 3, b, (II), text and note 97.

"Prosecution" and "indictment" are sometimes used as synonymous. Com. v. Haas, 57 Pa. St. 443, in a statute limiting the time for commencing prosecutions.

Libel or slander.— Although a prosecution before a justice of the peace is not in a technical sense an indictment, yet the term "indictment" is used in ordinary conversation and often in judicial opinions to denote any criminal prosecution; and therefore in an action for libel in which it was alleged that defendant had published that plaintiff was under "indictment" for malfeasance in office as justice of the peace, it was held that the allegation was sustained by proof that he had been prosecuted and convicted before a justice of the peace for not paying over an assault and battery fine collected by him as justice, which conviction was afterward affirmed at circuit. In Georgia, under the code, all special presentments by the grand jury, charging defendants with violations of the penal laws, and require that in case of a presentment the prosecuting attorney must prepare a bill, and that it must be found by the grand jury to be a true bill.[32]

c. When Indictment Will Lie.[33] At common law an indictment will lie for all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors.[34] An indictment will also lie for any offense created by statute, whether a felony or merely a misdemeanor,[35] unless the statute points out some other mode of prosecution or proceeding.[36] If a statute pro-are required to be treated as indictments, and it is provided that the public prosecutor need not frame bills of indictment on such presentments, but may arraign and try defendants on the presentments in like manner as if they were bills of indictment. Code, § 931. This section in effect does away with the distinction between indictments and presentments. Groves v. State, 73 Ga. 205; Conner v. State, 25 Ga. 515, 71 Am. Dec. 184. The form is the same whether the jury indict or present. Foster v. State, 41 Ga. 582. Although an indictment is founded on a presentment, it is sufficient if the jury be impaneled on the indictment alone. Conner v. State, 25 Ga. 515, 71 Am. Dec. 184. When an offense is tried upon an indictment founded upon a special presentment of the grand jury, it is not indispensably necessary that the presentment should be read to the jury as a part of the proof in the case. Hatcher v. State, 23 Ga. 307. "Bill, plaint, or information."— Under a statute providing for recovery of a fine by "bill, plaint, or information," it has been held that an indictment to recover the same will not lie. State v. Corwin, 4 Mo. 609; Journey v. State, 1 Mo. 428; State v. Mathews, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 82. The contrary was held in State v. Helfrid, 2 Nott & M. (S. C.) 233, 10 Am. Dec. 591, on the ground that the word "bill" included a bill of indictment.

Action of debt.— If a statute prescribes a penalty or forfeiture to be recovered by an action of debt, an indictment will not lie. 1 Chitty Cr. L. 162. And see State v. Maze, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 17. But where a statute declares that persons guilty of certain offenses shall be liable to "all the penalties" imposed by a previous statute, which provides both for a pecuniary penalty and also for indictment, an indictment will lie against persons guilty of offenses under the later

hibits a matter of public grievance or commands a matter of public convenience, all acts or omissions contrary to the prohibition or command, being misdemeanors at common law, are the subject of an indictment, if the statute specifies no other mode of proceeding.[37] If the statute specifies a mode of proceeding other than by indictment, then, if the matter was already an indictable offense at common law, and the statute does not expressly or by necessary implication exclude indictment, the statutory remedy is merely cumulative.[38] Usually an indictment will lie even though an information is also permitted;[39] but sometimes the statutes require certain offenses to be prosecuted by information, or in some other special mode, and an indictment therefor will not lie.[40] In many jurisdictions prosecutions for misdemeanor may either be by indictment or information;[41] and in some jurisdictions the same is true of felonies.[42] The fact that an indictment is found for an offense for which a presentment would lie does not render the indictment bad.[43]

d. When Presentment Will Lie.[44] In some states grand jurors are by statute expressly empowered to make presentments of offenses which are within their own knowledge or observation or are of public notoriety and injurious to the entire community;[45] and in some states they have such power, as at common law, independently of any statute.[46] In other states they have no power to present

On appeal from justice of the peace.— The provision of the North Carolina statute that "in all cases of appeal" from a justice's judgment "the trial shall be anew" (N. C. Code, § 900), and the statutory provision that no person shall "put on trial before any court but on indictment" (N. C. Code, § 1175), do not require an indictment on appeal from a justice of the peace, as the provision in section 1175 is subject to the constitutional provision defining the jurisdiction of justices of the peace. State v. Quick, 72 N. C. 241.

56. See Cornshock v. People, 56 Ill. App. 467, in the county courts. As to this case see supra, note 55.

Laws (1889), c. 140, amending Wis. Rev. St. § 2545, and providing that grand jurors shall be summoned to attend each term of the circuit court, unless the judge shall make an order directing them not to be summoned, does not purport to nor does it affect the provisions of law authorizing prosecutions by information, so as to make a prosecution by information illegal on the ground that, although no order was made by the judge that a grand jury should not be summoned, none was summoned, and no indictment preferred against the accused. Baker v. State, 80 Wis. 416, 50 N. W. 518.

In Washington, where all crimes may be prosecuted either by indictment or by information, the statute (2 Ballinger Annot. Codes and St. § 6813) which provides that "the grand jury shall inquire into the cases of parties in custody or under bail, charged with commission of offenses . . . and duly returned by a committing magistrate, or upon a complaint . . . presented by the prosecuting attorney, or under the instructions of the court," does not apply to a case where one is in custody under an information. State v. Croney, 31 Wash. 122, 124, 71 Pac. 783.

As to constitutional limitations and the validity of statutes see infra, I, B, 2, e, (II), (B), (C).

58. In Connecticut the statute allows prosecution by information of all crimes, including felonies, not punishable by death or imprisonment for life. See Romero v. State, 60 Conn. 92, 22 Atl. 496 (holding that, under such a statute, assault with intent to murder, which by statute is punishable by imprisonment for not less than ten years, may be prosecuted by information, since the latter statute, although it fixes no maximum limit, does not authorize a sentence for life); State v. Danforth, 3 Conn. 112. And see infra, I, B, 2, e, (II), (B), text and note 70.

In Vermont it is provided that no person shall be held to answer in court for an alleged crime or offense, unless upon indictment by a grand jury, except in proceedings before a justice and when a prosecution by information is authorized by law. St. (1894) c. 93, p. 368. But it is also provided that state's attorneys may prosecute by information all crimes, except those which are punishable by death or by imprisonment in the state prison for more than twenty years. Laws (1898), No. 46. See State v. Leach, 77 Vt. 166, 59 Atl. 168, holding that statutory rape may be prosecuted by information. Prior to this amendment of 1898 the limitation was seven instead of twenty years. St. (1894) c. 94, p. 368. See State v. Dyer, 67 Vt. 690, 32 Atl. 814 (holding that conspiracy, being a misdemeanor at common law, might be prosecuted by information); State v. Magoon, 61 Vt. 45, 17 Atl. 729 (holding that grand larceny for which the court might impose imprisonment for ten years could not be prosecuted by information); State v. Haley, 52 Vt. 476.

In Indiana all public offenses except treason or murder may be prosecuted by information based upon affidavit in certain cases specified in the statute. See Rev. St. (1897) § 1771; and infra, IV, A, 2, b, (V), (VI).

Possible punishment the test.— Where a statute requires indictment for offenses punishable by imprisonment for a certain period, sentment by a grand jury is expressly required in the case of certain crimes by constitutional provision, and in such cases a prosecution in any other mode, even under legislative sanction, is unauthorized and an absolute nullity for want of jurisdiction.[59] Such is the case under the declaration in the constitution of the United States that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime,[60] unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in the punishment which may be imposed and not that which is imposed in particular cases is the test. State v. Magoon, 61 Vt. 45, 17 Atl. 729. See infra, I, B, 2, e, (II), (C).

Effect with respect to finding and form of indictment.— A constitutional provision that no person shall be held to answer certain offenses unless upon a presentment or indictment must be construed with reference to the common-law meaning of the term "indictment;" and, while the legislature may dispense with mere matters of form, the substance of a good common-law indictment must be preserved. Suspension of privileges for rebellion.—The Minnesota act of Feb. 14, 1862, suspending the privilege to all persons aiding in the rebellion against the United States, of prosecuting and defending actions and judicial proceedings in the state (Laws (1862), c. 11), in so far as it was applicable to citizens of Minnesota, was held to be in violation of the constitutional provision that no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense unless on presentment of a grand jury. See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Indictment and Information." § 5 et seq.

The provision of some of the state constitutions that "the constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land," relates only to matters wherein the general state from authorizing prosecutions, even for capital felonies, by information instead of indictment.[66] Some of the state constitutions, however, have or have had a similar provision,[67] or else require an indictment or presentment, and thus preclude informations and the like, in the case of a capital crime or other felony,[68] or of a crime punishable by death,[69] or by death or imprisonment for life.[70] In some states an indictment or presentment is required by the constitution for every criminal offense except those petty misdemeanors cognizable by justices of the peace, or in every case in which an indictment will lie.[71] When there is no government assumes to control the states, and does not make the fifth amendment of the federal constitution a part of the state constitution, so as to prevent the state from providing for prosecutions by information instead of indictment. People v. Nolan, 144 Cal. 75, 77 L. ed. 774; In re Rafferty, 1 Wash. 382, 25 Pac. 465.

Enabling acts of congress.— Since the requirement of the fifth amendment of the federal constitution that certain criminal prosecutions be begun by indictment of the grand jury do not apply to prosecutions for crimes against state laws, the constitution of Washington permitting prosecutions to be begun by information does not contravene the enabling act of congress, which provides that the state constitution shall not be repugnant to the federal constitution. State v. Nordstrom, 7 Wash. 506, 35 Pac. 382. The admission of Nebraska into the Union "upon an original footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever," by the act of congress of Feb. 9, 1867, although made subject to the condition that the people adopt the constitution of the United States, did not make the said fifth amendment of that constitution applicable to procedure in the courts of the state. prosecution is not in violation of the constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law,[73] or a provision giving the accused the right to be informed of the charge against him and to a copy of the indictment.[74] Whether a constitutional provision applies to a particular offense depends upon the punishment which may be imposed — the possible punishment, and not upon the punishment which is imposed in the particular case.[75]

(c) What Are "Infamous Crimes." Although there has been some conflict of opinion on the question, it is now practically settled that the punishment by which an offense may be visited, rather than the nature of the act itself, determines whether it is an "infamous" crime within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring indictment, and that the term includes any crime which may be punished by death or by imprisonment in a state prison, either with or without hard labor.[76] It is the possible punishment and not the punishment actually indictment, an indictment is essential to the jurisdiction of the court and cannot be waived by the accused.[80] In the absence of such a provision, the legislature may give the accused the right to elect whether he will be prosecuted by indictment or by some other form of accusation, and in some jurisdictions such a statute exists,[81] as for example in Georgia[82] and New Jersey.[83]

3. INFORMATION[84] — a. Definition and Nature. An information is a written accusation of crime preferred by the district attorney or other public prosecuting officer without the intervention of the grand jury.[85] The practice of filing infor-

80. See supra, I, A, 3.

81. See the notes following.

Denial of right by statute.— In the absence of a constitutional limitation the legislature may provide that the accused shall have no right to demand an indictment. Thus in Georgia statutes providing that in cases within the jurisdiction of certain city courts the accused shall not have the right to demand an indictment are constitutional as relating to misdemeanors. See Green v. State, 119 Ga. 120, 45 S. E. 990; Daughtry v. State, 115 Ga. 819, 42 S. E. 248; Turner v. State, 114 Ga. 421, 40 S. E. 308; Gordon v. State, 102 Ga. 673, 29 S. E. 444. See supra, I, B, 2, e, (II), (B).

82. County courts.— Thus in this state it is provided in substance that when a misdemeanor case is called for trial in the county court, the judge shall ask defendant whether he demands an indictment or presentment by the grand jury, and if he shall, in a writing signed by him, demand indictment or presentment, the fact shall be recorded, and he shall be committed or bound over to the next superior court, to which the case shall be transferred. Ga. Code (1895), § 751. When an indictment is not demanded in the county court the judge is required to frame a written accusation based upon the affidavit charging defendant. Ga. Code (1895), § 753. See Cunningham v. State, 80 Ga. 4, 5 S. E. 251. An indictment may be demanded by defendant in a criminal case in any county court. Johns v. State, 68 Ga. 293.

City courts.— There are also provisions allowing the accused to demand an indictment when arraigned for misdemeanor in a city court, and providing for a trial on accusation based on affidavit, where he waives an indictment. Ga. Code (1895), §§ 783–785. See Butler v. State, 97 Ga. 404, 23 S. E. 822. On the other hand it is provided that in certain city courts the accused shall not have the right to demand an indictment. See the cases referred to supra, note 81.

Waiver of indictment and withdrawal thereof.— The county court may proceed to try the prisoner for a misdemeanor on written accusation based upon affidavit, unless the prisoner in writing demands indictment by a grand jury. No express waiver of indictment is necessary. Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168. And where a prisoner waives his right to an indictment, but demands a jury to try him on accusation, and his waiver is recorded, a jury drawn, and at the trial term a motion to continue made and overruled, it is too late to withdraw his waiver. McConnell v. State, 67 Ga. 633. And a person who waives indictment and is convicted by the county court of a misdemeanor, but on certiorari to the superior court obtains a reversal, cannot, on return of the case to the county court, withdraw his waiver of indictment, since thereby he would divest the county court of jurisdiction for the time being. Brown v. State, 89 Ga. 340, 15 S. E. 462. When, on being arraigned on an accusation in a city court, accused waives indictment by the grand jury, he cannot thereafter, in that court, withdraw the waiver. Butler v. State, 97 Ga. 404, 23 S. E. 822.

The accusation and affidavit.— By the county court act above referred to, when indictment and trial by jury are waived, and the trial is by the county judge, the same affidavit on which the warrant issued may be the basis of accusation. The accusation is to be specific and particular, but the affidavit need not be more so than is necessary to uphold a warrant. Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583. A valid affidavit, however, is essential; and if the affidavit be void, objection to it may be taken after conviction and sentence. In such case the whole trial is a nullity, and the conviction should be set aside by the superior court on certiorari. Scroggins v. State, 55 Ga. 380. An affidavit neither attested by an officer authorized to administer oaths, nor purporting to be sworn to in open court, is void as the basis of a criminal proceeding. Scroggins v. State, supra.

83. Edwards v. State, 45 N. J. L. 419, holding that one who has waived in writing his right to be prosecuted by indictment, as provided by N. J. Laws (1867), p. 463, cannot retract the waiver after he has pleaded to the accusation.

By statute in Texas an information is defined to be a written statement filed and presented on behalf of the state by the district attorney accusing defendant of an offense mations for the prosecution of misdemeanors existed at common law and may be traced to the earliest period.[86]

b. When Information Will Lie — (I) At Common Law. At common law an information will lie for any misdemeanor, but not for a felony.[87]

(II) Under Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.[88] As has been seen, in many jurisdictions there are constitutional provisions which prevent prosecutions by information for capital or otherwise infamous crimes, or for felonies, or for crimes subject to a certain punishment, and in some states there are such provisions preventing prosecution by information for any crime, whether a felony or a misdemeanor, except certain petty offenses cognizable by justices of the peace or police magistrates;[89] but if there is no constitutional provision in the way, the legislature may authorize any crime to be prosecuted by information.[90] In all jurisdictions the subject is now regulated by statute. Under some statutes an information will lie, as at common law, for misdemeanors but not for felonies.[91] Under others it will lie for misdemeanors and also for felonies not capital,[92] or not punishable by death or imprisonment for life[93] or for a certain term of years.[94] Under others it will lie for any offense, whether a felony or a misdemeanor,[95] or which is by law subject to be prosecuted in that way. Code Cr. Proc. art. 402. See State v. Corbit, 42 Tex. 88.

An affidavit or complaint of a private individual is not an "information" within the meaning of a constitutional provision or statute requiring prosecution by information or indictment. An indictment will lie, although a statute authorizes an information unless prosecution by indictment is excluded, as is sometimes the case.[4]

4. Complaint or Affidavit[5] — a. Definition and Nature. A complaint or affidavit, as distinguished from an information, is a written accusation of crime made by a private individual, or by an officer other than the public prosecutor.[6]

b. When Complaint or Affidavit Will Lie. In most jurisdictions a complaint or affidavit is the proper form of accusation for the prosecution of petty misdemeanors or violations of municipal ordinances before justices of the peace and similar magistrates;[7] but it will not lie for a felony, nor as a rule for misdemeanors in the higher courts of criminal jurisdiction.[8] Sometimes, however, by statute, such a mode of prosecution is authorized for misdemeanors under certain circumstances even in the higher courts.[9] But, as has been seen, in many states constitutional or statutory provisions require all offenses, except petty misdemeanors cognizable by justices of the peace, to be prosecuted by indictment or information, and in such case a complaint or affidavit by a mere private individual will not lie.[10] On appeal from a conviction before a justice of the peace or like

"Complaint" or "affidavit" not an "information."— A complaint for a breach of Sabbath exhibited by a tithing-man to a justice of the peace was held not to be an information within the provision of the constitution of Connecticut relating to trial by jury. Goddard v. State, 12 Conn. 448. See also Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328. In Alabama, under the provision of the constitution authorizing the general assembly to pass laws dispensing with a grand jury in cases of misdemeanors (Const. art. 1, § 9), the general assembly has full power, under an act to regulate the trial of misdemeanors in a particular county, to provide that, where a prosecution for misdemeanors is begun by affidavit in a county court, upon demand for a trial by jury the case shall be be transferred to the circuit court, and there be tried on the complaint as made by the affidavit, and without action by a grand jury; and under such an act so regulating the trial of misdemeanors it is no objection to a trial by jury in the circuit court that an indictment was not preferred against defendant. Witt v. State, 130 Ala. 129, 30 So. 473. And since the constitution does not forbid the legislature from dispensing with indictments in cases of misdemeanors, a trial for carrying a concealed weapon may be legally had in the city court of Talladega, without indictment under Acts (1894–1895), p. 1222, giving that court jurisdiction of "all prosecutions for misdemeanors which may be instituted or commenced in said court by complaint and warrant." Frost v. State, 124 Ala. 71, 27 So. 550.

10. State v. Shortell, 93 Mo. 123, 5 S. W. 691; State v. Russell, 88 Mo. 648; State v. Thompson, 81 Mo. 163; State v. Briscoe, 80 Mo. 643; State v. Kelm, 79 Mo. 515; State v. Sebecca, 76 Mo. 55; State v. Rockwell, 18 Mo. See also supra, I, B, 3, c. But it has been held in Colorado that under Const. art. 2, § 8, providing that "no person shall, for a felony, be proceeded against criminally, otherwise than by indictment," and that "in all other cases offenses shall be prosecuted criminally by indictment or information," the legislature may provide for prosecuting misdemeanors before justices of the peace upon officer, a trial de novo is usually had on the original complaint, affidavit, or warrant.[11]

c. When Complaint or Affidavit Is Necessary. As a rule in prosecutions before justices of the peace and the like a complaint or affidavit is essential.[12] And sometimes under particular statutes it is the only proper form of accusation for certain prosecutions, so that an indictment will not lie.[13]

5. Coroner's Inquisition. At common law a coroner's inquisition charging one with homicide had the same effect as an indictment, and the accused could be arraigned and tried thereon.[14] In the United States, however, this mode of prosecution is not now recognized; but after the inquest and return an indictment must be found or information filed, according to the practice in the particular jurisdiction.[15]

II. Finding, Return, Filing, and Record of Indictment or Presentment.

A. Jurisdiction — 1. In General. In order that an indictment or presentment may be valid the grand jury must of course have jurisdiction.[16] As a general rule its jurisdiction is coextensive with that of the court in which it is impaneled and for which it is to make inquiry.[17] Therefore, to render an indictment or presentment valid, the court in which the grand jury is acting must have jurisdiction;[18] and this includes jurisdiction of the offense, both with respect to territorial limits and with respect to the character of the offense.[19] If the court had no jurisdiction, or in a particular manner.[28] Regularity and legality in the organization and constitution of the grand jury is generally presumed in support of an indictment in the absence of a showing in the record to the contrary.[29]

4. Arrest and Custody of Defendant. In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, a grand jury has the power to indict or present for a crime whether the accused has been arrested and is in custody or not, jurisdiction not being in any way dependent upon his arrest or custody.[30] Sometimes, however, a statute makes the apprehension of the accused a ground of jurisdiction.[31] The validity of an indictment is not affected by the fact that the accused was illegally arrested or that his custody is illegal.[32]

5. Preliminary Examination and Commitment or Binding Over. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, an indictment may be found and presented without a prior preliminary examination and commitment or binding over of the accused,[33]

It has been held, however, that the fact that the indictment charges a simple assault and battery, while the complaint in the police court, on which the preliminary hearing was had and on which defendant was committed or bound over, charged an aggravated assault, is not a fatal variance. State v. Bean, 36 N. H. 122; State v. Stevens, 36 N. H. 59. A mistake of a justice in the date of the warrant of commitment, or of the warrant summoning the justices, is no ground for quashing the indictment. Com. v. Murray, 2 Va. Cas. 504.

39. Com. v. Carson, 166 Pa. St. 179, 30 Atl. 985. After an information has been made a preliminary examination, or he may waive his right to object on the ground that there has been no sufficient examination, by failure to raise the objection by motion to quash or plea in abatement.[40]

6. Pendency of Habeas Corpus Proceedings. The fact that when an indictment is found in a court of competent jurisdiction proceedings are pending in another court for the discharge of the accused on a writ of habeas corpus is not ground either for quashing the indictment or for arresting judgment after a conviction.[41]

7. Joint Indictments. An indictment against two may be good as to one, although void as to the other for want of jurisdiction.[42]

B. Leave of Court or Prosecuting Attorney. At common law a private person could appear as prosecutor before the grand jury and prefer an accusation against another,[43] and such practice has to some extent obtained in the United States.[44] At the present time, however, in most jurisdictions, accusations cannot be preferred before the grand jury by a private individual;[45] but, except where the grand jury are authorized to make presentments without any bill of indictment being preferred,[46] bills of indictment can be submitted to them only by the public prosecutor, variously termed the attorney-general, district attorney, etc.[47] In some jurisdictions, under particular circumstances, leave or sanction of the

for seduction under promise of marriage, the indictment therefor may include a count for fornication and bastardy, although no information had been made for that offense. Nicholson v. Com., 91 Pa. But it has been held that a commitment on an affidavit charging defendant with conspiring with certain persons named to commit election frauds will not support an indictment charging him with conspiring with "unknown persons" for such purpose (Com. v. Hunter, 2 Pa. Dist. 707, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 573); and that an indictment charging defendant with arson, which is a felony, should be quashed where it appears that the original information was against defendant and another for conspiracy, which is a misdemeanor, as the indictment should charge the same or a similar offense to that charged in the information (Com. v. Edwards, 5 Kulp (Pa.) 192). For other cases of fatal variance see Com. v. Morningstar, 2 Pa. Dist. 41, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 34 (offer of rebate of premium on insurance policy); Com. v. Moister, 3 Pa. Co. In Pennsylvania, except where there has been a previous complaint or information and examination before a magistrate the grand jury can only act upon and present offenses of public notoriety, and such as are within their own knowledge, such as are given them in charge by the court, and such as are sent up to them by the district attorney. So where a grand jury made presentment of a defendant for keeping a hawdy-house, acting upon the testimony of certain witnesses examined before them upon an indictment for an assault and battery preferred against another defendant, it was held that an indictment preferred thereon by the district attorney, even with leave of court, and returned a true bill, would be quashed. Com. v. Green, supra. Charges not presented before the committing magistrate or on presentment cannot be included in an indictment without the official sanction of the prosecuting attorney. court is required;[48] but ordinarily this is not necessary.[49] Leave of court on resubmission of a charge to the grand jury is elsewhere considered.[50]

C. Term of Court and Time of Finding and Filing — 1. Term of Court. An indictment found by a grand jury at a term of court held at a time unauthorized by law, or at a term at which no grand jury is authorized, is a nullity, and so are all proceedings thereon.[51] The term of court for which a grand jury is to be summoned and organized and the duration of its existence for the purpose of finding indictments are regulated by statute.[52] Generally a grand jury may be organized and an indictment found and presented at any regular term of a court having jurisdiction,[53] and at any time during the term,[54] or at a special term,[55] or

In Pennsylvania bills of indictment can be sent before the grand jury only by leave of the court or with its subsequent sanction unless there has been a previous information or complaint and preliminary hearing before a magistrate. Rowand v. Com., 82 Pa. St. 405; Brown v. Com., 76 Pa. St. 319 (sanction of court presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary); Com. v. Brown, 23 Pa. Super. If the court refuses to quash, this is ordinarily equivalent to giving its sanction. If the court sustains the motion to quash, this is tantamount to refusing its approval of the action of the district attorney. Com. v. Brown, supra. A prosecution against a county commissioner for being concerned in public contracts may be instituted by the court, of its own motion, directing the grand jury to investigate the matter, and, after a presentment by them, directing the district attorney to submit an indictment. Com. v. Hurd, 177 Pa. St. 481, 35 Atl. 682. An indictment may be presented to the grand jury in pursuance of an order of court, made on petition of the district attorney and private counsel of the prosecutor, and without notice to defendant. Com. v. Kaufman, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 310.

In Tennessee, under Code, § 5097, subs. 9, authorizing the filing of an indictment upon an order of the court to be made when it appears to the court that an indictable offense has been committed, an indictment so filed is not objectionable because the court did not, previous to issuing the order, examine witnesses, and take proof formally in regard to the facts. Lawless v. State, 4 Lea 173. An order to file a bill of indictment ex officio need not recite the grounds upon which it is made. It is sufficient where it appears to the court that the person has committed the offense, and the order need not state upon whom it was committed. State v. Kitrell, 7 Baxt. 167. Arkansas.— The validity of an indictment found at a special term ordered to be held for the trial of the person indicted cannot be an adjourned term.[56] An indictment may be found for an offense committed after commencement of the term.[57] Where a term of court is ordered by constitutional authority and a grand jury is regularly drawn, the fact that in appointing such term the law was not strictly complied with will not vitiate a conviction under an indictment found at such term.[58] Statutes providing for organization of the grand jury on the first day of the term have been held directory, so that an indictment is not rendered invalid by failure to conform thereto.[59] It has been held that where the accused is held to bail to answer at the next session, an indictment found before the commencement of the next session should be quashed on motion, unless defendant has waived his right to make the motion or been guilty of laches.[60]

2. During Vacation. In the absence of a statute an indictment found or presented in vacation or by a grand jury convened in vacation will be quashed on motion or plea in abatement.[61] Sometimes, however, the judge is authorized by statute under special circumstances to draw a grand jury in vacation.[62]

3. Within Certain Time After Commitment or Binding Over. Provision is sometimes made by statute for the discharge of a prisoner or the dismissal of the prosecution, if an indictment is not found against him at the next term of the court at which he is held to answer,[63] or before the end of the second term at which he is attacked on the ground that, had the case been tried at such term, it would have interfered with the regular term. Hamilton v. State, 62 Ark. 543, 36 S. W. 1054.

Where a grand jury is unauthorized at a special or extra term no indictment can be found. Thus under N. C. Acts (1899), c. 593, providing an extra term of the superior court, without a grand jury, at which only cases against incarcerated defendants should be tried, it was held proper to quash an indictment returned by a grand jury at such term, charging defendant, who was in jail, with carrying a concealed weapon, since there could be no legal grand jury, and the extra term could only try criminal cases where indictments had already been found. In Nebraska, by statute, where no informaheld to answer,[64] unless good cause to the contrary is shown.[65] The object of such a provision is to protect persons from imprisonment on insufficient cause, and it does not render invalid an indictment found at a subsequent term.[66] In the absence of a statute, a person may be indicted at a later term than the one following his arrest and commitment or binding over, and he is not entitled to a discharge because he has not been indicted at the first term.[67]

D. Prosecutor or Informer and Indorsement — 1. Necessity For Prosecutor or Informer. In England criminal prosecutions were generally instituted by private persons, although in the name of the king and conducted by counsel employed by them;[68] and the prosecutor was required to enter into a recognizance to pay costs if the court should so direct.[69] In this country prosecutions are usually instituted by the public prosecuting officer;[70] but private prosecutors may make complaints for the purpose of starting prosecutions;[71] and sometimes, by statute, prosecutions for certain misdemeanors cannot be instituted except by tion or indictment is filed against one charged with the commission of a crime during the term at which he was held to answer, his further detention is unlawful and he is entitled to be discharged. Glover v. Com., supra [overruling Hall v. Com., 78 Va. 678]. It is a sufficient reason under this statute for refusing to discharge a prisoner that he has been indicted at every term of court, although for a different crime from that for which he is finally tried. 65. Ex p. Bull, 42 Cal. 196; Ex p. Job, 17 Nev. 184, 30 Pac. 699. The facts constituting good cause are in a great measure left to the discretion of the court, but the mere recommendation of a grand jury that the accused be held to answer before another grand jury is not of itself sufficient cause for his detention. Ex p. Bull, supra.

66. State v. Lambert, 9 Nev. 321. Where, before indictment found, the accused moves for his discharge on the ground that two terms have elapsed without any indictment and the motion is improperly overruled, his remedy is by habeas corpus and not by writ of error after conviction, and after final judgment application for discharge on writ of habeas corpus will be too late. Mittimus becoming functus officio.— Where a person charged with a felony is under confinement on a mittimus issued by a justice of the peace in default of bail, and no indictment is preferred against him by the grand jury at the next term of court, and no continuance is entered on the records of the court, the prosecution is discontinued and the mittimus becomes functus officio, and the accused is entitled to a discharge, notwithstanding a continuance entered on the docket of the grand jury. State v. Graham, 136 Ala. 134, 33 So. 826; Ex p. Stearnes, 104 Ala. 93, 16 So. 122. the private individual particularly injured,[72] or private prosecutors are made liable for costs under certain circumstances and their names are required to be indorsed on the indictment.[73] An informer or private prosecutor is not necessary to an indictment except in so far as one may be required by statute.[74]

2. Indorsement of Name of Prosecutor or Informer — a. In General. In the absence of a statutory requirement the name of the prosecutor or informer need not be indorsed on the indictment;[75] but, as stated above, statutes sometimes provide that the name of the prosecutor shall be written or indorsed on the indictment, in order that he may be held liable for costs if it appears that there was no probable cause for instituting the prosecution.[76]

b. In What Cases Necessary. The statutes vary as to the offenses for which such an indorsement is required.[77] As a rule such a statute does not prevent the public prosecuting attorney from preferring an indictment on his own motion or after a presentment by the grand jury, or in such case require the name of a

77. All offenses other than those excepted. — Some of the statutes require indorsement of a prosecutor on an indictment for every offense unless otherwise provided. Thus in Tennessee it is declared in Code (1896), § 7058, that "no district attorney shall prefer a bill of indictment to the grand jury without a prosecutor marked thereon, unless otherwise expressly provided by law." Section 7059 then expressly excepts certain cases. The statute has been applied to larceny (Wattingham v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 64; Medaris v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 239), and to bigamy (State v. Tankersly, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 582). The statute excepts, among other cases, "a charge of violating the laws against tippling" (subd. 15), and retailing on Sunday is within this exception. Neideiser v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 499.

Misdemeanors.—Other statutes require such indorsement in every case of misdemeanor, if there is a prosecutor. Under such a statute of course the indorsement is not required on an indictment for felony. Thompson v. Com., 88 Va. 45, 13 S. E. 304, robbery.

"Any trespass or misdemeanor." — Other statutes require such an indorsement in the case of "any trespass or misdemeanor." This not only includes a trespass, such as an assault and battery (Allen v. Com., 2 Bibb (Ky.) 210; Com. v. Hutcheson, 1 Bibb (Ky.)

private prosecutor to be indorsed on the indictment;[78] but it requires such indorsement when there is a private prosecutor;[79] and some statutes require a prosecutor in certain cases by providing that an indictment shall not be preferred without a prosecutor marked thereon.[80]

c. Effect of Omission. It has been held that some of these provisions were mandatory and that a failure to comply therewith rendered the indictment bad on motion to quash, plea in abatement, or other timely objection;[81] and in some cases, although not in others, the indictment has been held bad even on motion

"Any trespass against the person or property of another, not amounting to felony." — Other statutes require such an indorsement on an indictment for "any trespass against the person or property of another, not amounting to felony." This includes an assault and battery (State v. McCourtney, 6 Mo. 649); and it has been held to apply to petit larceny (State v. Hurt, 7 Mo. 321), and to riot, where a trespass upon the person or property of another is charged (McWaters v. State, 10 Mo. 167; State v. McCourtney, supra. But see, as contra, Com. v. Bybee, 5 Dana (Ky.) 219). Such a statute does not apply to an indictment for felony (State v. Sears, 86 Mo. 169; State v. Rogers, 37 Mo. 367), even though, under such an indictment, defendant may be convicted of an offense which is merely a misdemeanor (State v. Sears, supra, indictment for felonious assault). Nor does it apply to indictments for misdemeanors not involving a trespass, such as keeping a hawdy-house (State v. Bean, 21 Mo. 267), passing counterfeit coin in violation of a statute (Gahe v. State, 6 Ark. 540), carrying concealed weapons (State v. Stanford, 20 Ark. 145, although the prosecutor or informer was entitled to half the fine), or disturbing the peace of a family in the night-time by loud noises merely (State v. Moles, 9 Mo. 694); or for misdemeanors not involving a trespass on the person or property of another person, as in the case of an indictment for maiming, heating, and torturing defendant's own animal (State v. Goss, 74 Mo. 592); and it has been held that it does not apply to a trespass on public property (State v. Brown, 10 Ark. 104; State v. Roberts, 11 Mo. 510, trespass on school lands), or to high misdemeanors, such as cutting, stabbing, etc., with malice (Hayden v. Com., 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 125), or to official misconduct or oppression, as by maliciously issuing a warrant of arrest (State v. Allen, 22 Mo. 318).

"Assault, battery, or any other trespass." — Other statutes require such indorsement on an indictment for "assault, battery, or any other trespass." It has been held that horse-stealing is not a trespass within the meaning of such a statute. U. S. v. Flanakin, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,119*a*, Hempst. 30.

in arrest or on writ of error or appeal.[82] Others have been regarded as merely directory, so that non-compliance therewith does not affect the validity of the indictment.[83]

d. Indictment Preferred by Order of Court. The statute sometimes dispenses with a prosecutor and permits the prosecuting attorney to prefer an indictment without one upon an order of the court to file an indictment, which may be made when it appears to the court that an indictable offense has been committed and that no one will be prosecutor.[84]

e. Sufficiency of Indorsement. The indorsement of the prosecutor on the indictment must be sufficient to show that the person indorsed was intended as the prosecutor,[85] or it must be sufficient to bring the case within an exception to the rule requiring such indorsement;[86] but no particular form of words is Discretion of court.— "The power thus conferred upon the trial courts is in its very nature discretionary, and not subject ordinarily to revision." Rodes v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 414, 416. And see Lawless v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 173.

How facts must appear to the court.— Although the statute requires that it shall appear to the court that an offense has been committed, it is not necessary that the facts shall appear by the examination of witnesses in open court, nor by proof formally taken. Thus it is sufficient if the court acts upon its own knowledge or upon the fact that an indictment has been found against defendant at a previous term. Lawless v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 173, holding a plea in abatement bad.

What the order of court must show.— The order need not show cause; that is, that it has been made to appear to the court that an offense has been committed or that no one will be prosecutor, but this will be presumed. State v. Kittrell, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 167; Bennett v. State, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 118; Simpson v. State, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 456. Nor need the order name the person upon whom the offense has been committed. State v. Kittrell, supra.

Time of making order and time of objection.— Under the statute of Tennessee providing that after a trial on the merits judgment shall not be arrested or reversed "because the attorney general or clerk or grand jury omitted to mark a prosecutor on the indictment" (Code (1896), § 7217), defendant cannot, after a trial on the merits, object that an indictment without a prosecutor marked thereon was found before the order of the court directing prosecution without a prosecutor by the attorney-general ex officio. Rodes v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 414. And see Parham v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 498; Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 348. Indeed it seems that it is immaterial whether the order is made before or after the indictment is found. Parham v. State, supra; Rodes v. State, supra.

85. Medaris v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 239, holding insufficient the fact that a name was indorsed on the indictment in the place where the name was usually marked, with a black line under it, and then again indorsed with others as witnesses sent to the grand jury, there being nothing further to show that the first indorsement was intended as the prosecutor. See also State v. Denton, 14 Ark. 343, holding that the indorsement that "this indictment is preferred upon the testimony of the party injured, who was summoned on presentation, and by order of the grand jury," was not a compliance with the statute requiring the indorsement of a prosecutor; and also that it did not imply that the indictment was preferred on the information of any of the grand jury.

86. Under a statute requiring indictments to be indorsed with the name of the prosecutor, unless found on testimony sworn to and sent to the grand jury by order of the court, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, or the grand jury, an indorsement, "Found on the testimony of witnesses, sworn and sent to the grand jury by order of the court," was held not sufficient to put on defendant the onus of showing that the indictnecessary.[87] When required by the statute, however, the indorsement must give, not only the name, but also the title or profession and the residence of the prosecutor,[88] unless the provision is regarded as merely directory.[89] The indorsement is generally required to be written at the foot of the indictment,[90] but this is not essential; it may be elsewhere, either on the face or back.[91]

f. Time of Indorsement. The indorsement should be made before the indictment is sent to the grand jury,[92] or before it is returned by them,[93] according to the requirement of the statute. It cannot be made after verdict,[94] or even pending a motion to quash or dismiss or a plea in abatement.[95]

g. Who Are or May Be Prosecutors. A "prosecutor" within the meaning of the statutes under consideration is the person who appears as such, and not merely one who makes a complaint and appears as a witness before the grand jury.[96]

Coroner's inquest.— In Tennessee where an indictment was marked "no prosecutor necessary," evidently because there was a coroner's inquest and verdict, in which case the statute (Code (1896), § 7059, subd. 2) dispenses with the necessity for a prosecutor, it was held that the indictment was good, whether the inquest was valid or invalid, since if valid, no prosecutor was necessary, and if invalid, the omission to mark a prosecutor was cured by section 7217 (former section 5242), providing that after plea and trial on the merits omission to mark a prosecutor on the indictment shall be no ground for a new trial, arrest of judgment or reversal. Haught v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 3. The fact that the abbreviation "pros." was used after the prosecutor's name, instead of "prosecutor," is not ground for motion in arrest of judgment. McGuire v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 621. The statement, indorsed on an indictment that it was found on the testimony of several persons, naming them, whose property was not injured, and signed by the prosecuting attorney, was held a substantial compliance with the statute requiring that the name of the prosecutor should be indorsed on the indictment, or that the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony it was found, other than the party injured, should be stated, and that a statement of the fact should be made at the end of the indictment. State v. Scott, 25 Ark. 107. So, where the name of a person preceded by the words "good for costs," was found indorsed on an indictment for a misdemeanor when presented to the court as a true bill by the grand jury, it was held not error to overrule a motion to quash such indictment on the ground that the person whose name was indorsed did not affirmatively appear to have been the prosecuting witness, as the name so indorsed would be presumed to be that of such witness. 96. A "prosecutor," within the meaning of the Alabama statute (Code (1896), § 5040) providing that "if a prosecutor appears, his name must be indorsed by the foreman on the indictment; and if no prosecutor appears, the words 'no prosecutor' must be indorsed thereon," is one who appears before the grand jury and has his name entered as prosecutor, and undertakes the prosecution of a particular case, and the term does not include one who merely complains and makes known to the grand jury that an offense has been committed and asks that the complaint be investigated. Blackman v. State, 98 Ala. 77, 13 So. 316, holding therefore that Ala. Code (1896), § 5055, which makes it a misdemeanor to take an animal or vehicle for temporary use without authority, and provides that no prosecution shall be commenced or indictment found except on complaint of the owner or person having control, does not require such person to become a "prosecutor," within the meaning of section 5040, so that his name must appear on the indictment to give it validity. See Ashworth v. State, 63 Ala. 120.

Governor.—In an early North Carolina case it was held that the prosecuting officer had a discretionary power to indorse the gover-

A person cannot be made an indorser or prosecutor without his consent.[97] One who is summoned by the grand jury to appear and testify, or who is otherwise compelled to become an informer or prosecuting witness, does not thereby become a prosecutor;[98] and even the voluntary appearance of a person as a witness before the grand jury does not necessarily make him the prosecutor.[99] The prosecutor must generally be a person competent to become liable for the costs and for damages in case of false imprisonment or malicious prosecution; and if the person marked on an indictment as prosecutor is incompetent, it is the same as if no prosecutor at all were indorsed.[1] Except as stated above, and subject to any special statutory restrictions, any person may become a prosecutor.[2]

h. Death of Prosecutor. Where the name of the prosecutor is indorsed on the indictment, his death will not render the indictment invalid on plea in abatement.[3]

Married women.— In the absence of a statute, however, it has been held that a married woman is not liable for costs nor amenable to defendant for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution, and therefore that she is not competent to become a prosecutor. Wattingham v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 64; Moyers v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 40. But the rule may be otherwise under statutes rendering married women liable. See State v. Shaw, 45 Mo. E. Finding of Grand Jury[5] — 1. In General. It is of course essential to an indictment that it shall appear on the record that it was found by the grand jury to be a true bill,[6] for which, at common law and under constitutional or statutory provisions in most states, a concurrence of at least twelve jurors is necessary.[7]

2. Limitation of Grand Jury by Bill of Indictment Submitted — a. In General. The general rule is that when a bill of indictment is submitted to the grand jury, their power to find as to the charge is limited by the bill as submitted, so that they must either find a true bill or not a true bill.[8]

b. Finding Specially, Conditionally, or Partially. It follows that when a bill of indictment is submitted to the grand jury they cannot find specially or conditionally, or find a true bill as to part of the charge and not a true bill as to the residue.[9]

Where the foreman of the grand jury wrote his name in blank across the back of a bill of indictment, under the proper date, without more, and no finding by the grand jury was either reduced to writing or publicly announced in court, it was held that after plea of not guilty, trial, and conviction, judgment must be arrested for want of a finding. U. S. v. Levally, supra. The evidence required to show the finding of an indictment is the indorsement thereof as "A true bill" and its signature by the foreman. Laurent v. State, 1 Kan. 313. A recital in the record that the grand jury came into open court and presented the following presentments, among which was included an indictment containing nothing to show that it was found a true bill, is insufficient. Gunkle v. State, supra.

State v. Beebe, 17 Minn. 241; State v. McCartey, 17 Minn. 76. The indorsement on an indictment by its foreman, its return to court, and the addition of the prosecutor's name by order of court, are sufficient evidence that the indictment was found by the grand jury on the testimony of the witnesses whose names were indorsed by the district attorney, and who were fully sworn. c. Several Counts. This rule does not prevent the grand jury from finding a true bill as to one or more counts of a bill of indictment, and not a true bill as to other counts, for each count is a separate and complete charge.[10]

d. Several Defendants. And where a bill of indictment is preferred against several defendants it may be found a true bill as to one or more, and not a true bill as to the others.[11]

3. Evidence[12] — a. In General. In some jurisdictions it is held that the court cannot go behind the action of the grand jury to inquire as to what evidence they had or did not have when considering a bill of indictment;[13] but in other jurisdictions it is held that if it is shown that an indictment was found entirely upon illegal evidence, it will be quashed upon a plea in abatement.[14] And so it has been held where an indictment is found without any evidence at all, as where no witnesses are examined, or the evidence which was before the grand jury is wholly inadequate proof of the offense charged,[15] except in cases where a first degree, and all other kinds of murder deemed of the second degree, but that the form of indictment shall remain unchanged, and the jury before whom the offender is tried shall determine the degree, refer to the petit, and not the grand jury; and where an indictment in one count charged murder, the grand jury had no authority to return "A true bill for murder in the second degree." State v. Ewing, 127 N. C. 555, 37 S. E. 332.

The rule does not apply, it has been held, to an indictment for breaking into a house in the daytime and stealing money therefrom, indorsed by the grand jury, "An indictment for larceny. A true bill." Hall's Case, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 593.

presentment is properly made by the grand jury on their own knowledge or observation, or their own testimony.[16] But if there was any legal evidence before the grand jury, the court will not inquire into its sufficiency; nor will it quash the indictment in such a case because some illegal evidence was also received.[17] In some states it is held that if the accused is compelled to testify before the grand jury in violation of his constitutional privilege the indictment will be quashed,[18] but others hold that this is no ground for quashing if there was other and legal evidence before the grand jury.[19]

b. Finding on Evidence Before Committing Magistrate. Sometimes by statute an indictment may be found by the grand jury upon the minutes of the evidence given by witnesses before the committing magistrate,[20] provided the minutes of such testimony are sufficiently authenticated as required by the statute.[21]

4. Presumption as to Regularity of Proceedings. When an indictment is duly returned as a true bill, properly indorsed and with the signature of the foreman, the presumption is that it was regularly found, on legal and sufficient evidence, with due deliberation, and by the concurrence of the requisite number of jurors, and that the proceedings of the grand jury were otherwise regular and legal.[22]

Where minutes of testimony were taken in shorthand in a proceeding before a committing magistrate, and a transcribed copy thereof made by the reporter, who was not sworn to correctly take the testimony, nor to the correctness of the transcribed copy, and such copy was certified and returned to the clerk of the court by the magistrate, it was held that an indictment might be founded upon such copy, under Iowa Code (1873), § 4241, requiring the examining magistrate to write out, or cause to be written out, the substance of the testimony taken before him, but not requiring that the magistrate's minutes shall be verified by his oath, or signed by the witnesses, nor that the person taking the testimony shall be sworn. 6. Effect of Negative Finding. In the absence of a statute,[30] the fact that a grand jury has refused or failed to find a bill of indictment does not prevent the submission and finding of another bill for the same offense by the same or another grand jury.[31] As a rule, however, defendant is entitled to be discharged from Sufficiency of evidence to rebut presumption.— Where twelve of the grand jury are required to return an indictment, and the party accused claims that the indictment against him was returned by a less number, his proof must be sufficiently clear and satisfactory to control the strong presumption arising from the certificate of the foreman to the truth of the bill. C. 595, holding that if an indictment is indorsed "A true bill" by mistake of the clerk of the grand jury, the finding having really been "Not a true bill," defendant may show that fact either upon a motion to quash or upon a plea in abatement; and, upon the fact appearing to be so, defendant will be entitled to a discharge.

28. Thus it is held in many states that it may be shown by evidence other than the testimony of the grand jurors themselves that the indictment was found on no evidence or illegal evidence (Sparrenberger v. State, 53 Ala. 481, 25 Am. Rep. 643; State v. Lanier, 90 N. C. 714; Noyce v. Territory, 5 Okla. 61, 47 Pac. 1083; U. W. 497; State v. Symonds, 36 Me. 128; Low's Case, 4 Me. 439, 16 Am. Dec. 271; and supra, II, E, 1).

29. Com. v. Leisenring, 2 Pearson (Pa.) 466, holding that on a motion to quash an indictment it may be shown that more than the lawful number of persons served on the grand jury, although the irregularity does not appear of record. And see the cases cited supra, II, A, 3.

30. In Georgia two returns of "No bill" by grand juries, on the same charge or accusation, is a bar to any future prosecution for the same offense, either under the same or another name, unless such returns have been procured by the fraudulent conduct of the person charged, on proof of which, or of newly discovered evidence, the judge may allow a third bill to be presented, found and prosecuted. Code, § 930. But this does not contemplate that the person charged is entitled to a judgment of acquittal or to a discharge from the offense charged. Christmas v. State, 53 Ga. 81.

custody in the absence of a showing of cause for holding him for another grand jury;[32] and, as has been seen, defendant is sometimes entitled to be discharged from custody because of failure to find an indictment against him at the next term or the next two terms after his commitment or binding over.[33]

7. Reconsideration and Resubmission — a. Reconsideration. After presenting an indictment, the grand jury cannot reconsider and withdraw it.[34] And after returning a bill "Not a true bill" they cannot reconsider it and return "A true bill."[35] But the mere vote of a grand jury not to find an indictment does not prevent it from reconsidering its decision before reporting to the court and finding a true bill, even without hearing any new evidence.[36]

b. Resubmission. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a charge of crime may be resubmitted to the same or a subsequent grand jury after a bill of indictment has been ignored,[37] or after an indictment has been held bad or quashed on demurrer, motion, or plea.[38] After a bill of indictment has been returned "not a true bill," the same bill cannot be resubmitted and returned "a true bill," but a new bill must be submitted.[39] But it has been held that even after plea and over the objection of defendant an indictment may be resubmitted to the same grand jury for a material amendment.[40]

c. Leave of Court. It has been held, even in the absence of a statute, that where a bill of indictment has been ignored or returned "Not a true bill" by the grand jury, the prosecuting attorney cannot submit another indictment for the same offense without leave of court,[41] which will not be granted unless adequate cause is shown.[42] In some states such a rule is prescribed by express statutory

42. Com. v. Whitaker, 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 42; Com. v. Allen, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 546, holding that where an indictment is ignored by the grand jury, and there is no proof that it was

In New York, where the statute expressly authorizes the court to permit a charge which has been dismissed by the grand jury to be again submitted to another grand jury, the power "should be sparingly and discriminatingly used"; and it has been held that it will not be exercised on the affidavit of the district attorney that he is of the opinion that the grand jury misunderstood the law, and that if the charges are resubmitted an indictment may be found, without giving any facts on which such opinion is based. Order of resubmission.— A resubmission of an indictment "to the same or another grand jury" is sufficiently definite and certain, in view of Nev. Comp. Time of motion to dismiss and waiver of objection.— Where a statute provided that a person committed or held to bail for the grand jury should be discharged if the first grand jury should refuse to find an indictment against him, and provided that dismissal of a charge should not prevent its being again submitted to a grand jury as often as the court might direct, but further provided that it should not be resubmitted without such direction of the court, it was held that where the first grand jury failed to find an indictment, and the case was again submitted to a subsequent grand jury without the direction of the court and an indictment was found, the indictment was properly dismissed as to one of the defendants who moved to dismiss before pleading to the indictment, but that a motion made by the other defendant for the first time after there had been a trial and failure of the jury to agree came too late and was properly overruled. 44. People v. Warren, 109 N. Y. 615, 15 N. E. 880, holding that where, during the life of a person assaulted, the grand jury, upon the case being presented to them, failed to find an indictment against the assailant, an indictment for manslaughter found after the person assaulted had died from the injuries was not bad because found without leave of court, as provided in Code Cr. Proc. § 270, providing that a charge once dismissed by a grand jury cannot again be submitted without direction of the court.

45. Com. v. Sargent, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 116, where, after a trial had commenced, it was discovered that the indictment was not signed by the foreman of the grand jury, and it was held that the grand jury could not find another bill against the same persons for the same offense without the authority of the court.

Second resubmission.— When a case has been resubmitted to a grand jury by direction of the court on sustaining a demurrer to an indictment, the operative power of the direction ceases, and the case cannot be afterward submitted to another grand jury by virtue of that direction. Where, in such case, a new indictment is found under the first resubmission, and the case is subsequently resubmitted to another grand jury without direction of the court, and another indictment found for the same offense, such latter indictment will be quashed. People v. Clements, 5 N. Y. Cr. 288.

46. State v. Reinhart, 26 Oreg. 466, 38 Pac. 822, holding that if a pending indictment returned by the grand jury is defective, they may return a new indictment for the same offense without the submission of the case to them by the court, unless some proceeding has been had on the first indictment which bars further prosecution. Other courts, however, have held that even where the case is resubmitted to the same grand jury, witnesses must be reëxamined.[48]

F. Return, Filing, and Record — 1. Return or Presentment. The finding by the grand jury of a true bill and an indorsement thereon to such effect are not alone sufficient to render it valid as an indictment; but it is further necessary that the bill shall be presented or returned by the grand jury in open court,[49] and as a general rule this must appear from the record.[50] The return or presentation should be made by the grand jury.[51] A finding of the grand jury on a bill of indictment presented by them is sufficiently returned and published, although it is not read in open court, where it is handed to the clerk in open court and properly indorsed or an entry made by him on the record.[52]

2. Filing and Indorsement Thereof — a. In General. Where an indictment is returned or presented by the grand jury in open court, it must generally be filed as part of the record.[53] But in the absence of a statute, it is not necessary that the clerk shall file the indictment in open court, or that the act of marking it filed shall be done in open court.[54] It has also been held that where an indictment is returned into open court by the grand jury and becomes a part of the record, its validity is not affected by the omission of the clerk to place his file-mark thereon,[55] or by a mistake in the date of his indorsement of the filing or

51. The grand jury as a body should return their indictments. They should not be carried into court by the foreman alone. State v. Bordeaux, 93 N. C. 560. But it has been held that where the record shows that an indictment was presented by the grand jury in open court and filed, although the law requires it to be presented by the foreman, it will make no difference if handed in by some other member of the body in their presence, the defect, if it be one, being too technical to be regarded. b. Filing Away and Reinstatement of Indictment. Where the accused has not been apprehended and is not before the court, it is permissible for the court to file away an indictment and reinstate it upon the docket upon the subsequent arrest of the accused; but this is not permissible where the accused is before the court and objects to the order, as it would violate his constitutional right to a speedy trial.[60]

3. Record[61] — a. Showing as to Finding, Presentment or Return, and Filing — (I) Necessity in General. By the weight of authority, it is essential to the validity of an indictment and the proceedings thereon that it shall in some manner appear affirmatively from the record that it was found by the grand jury to be a true bill,[62] that it was presented or returned by them as such in open court,[63] and that it was filed as a part of the records of the court.[64]

(II) Sufficiency — (A) As to Finding. That an indictment properly appearing in the record was found a true bill by the grand jury is sufficiently shown by an indorsement thereon to that effect signed by the foreman;[65] but, in the absence of a statute, such an indorsement has been held unnecessary where the order book or minutes of the court contain an entry of the finding.[66] The filing of an indictment together with an entry on the order book or minutes of the court showing its return are sufficient, without copying out the indictment on

In Mississippi the act of Feb. 6, 1878, providing that the filing of an indictment by the clerk shall "be evidence of the proper and legal return into court of such indictment," renders it unnecessary to have any entry made on the minutes of its return. Cook v. State, 57 Miss. 654. See also Smith v. State, 58 Miss. 867. Under Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 4092, providing that indictments by a grand jury "shall be presented by their foreman, in their presence, to the court, and shall be there filed and remain as records of such court," and section 4099, providing that, unless defendant is in custody or on bail, the indictment shall not be open to inspection, "nor shall it be docketed or entered upon the minutes or records of the court until the defendant therein shall have been arrested," it was held that where an indictment is signed by the prosecuting attorney, and is indorsed "A true bill," and "Filed" (with date of filing) by the foreman of the grand jury and the clerk of the court respectively, but no record entry is made that defendant was in custody or on bail, there is a sufficient record that the indictment was duly returned and presented in open court, although the clerk made no separate minutes of the filing. State v. Lord, 118 Mo. 1, 23 S. W. 764.

75. Mose v. State, 35 Ala. 421; Chelsey v. State, 121 Ga. 340, 49 S. E. 258, holding that failure to make an entry was an irregularity which was cured by the testimony of the bailiff and his clerk. See also Wrocklege v. State, 1 Iowa 167.

California.— It will be presumed that an indictment was presented by the foreman of the grand jury and in their presence, where the record shows nothing to the contrary, although the fact is not indorsed on the indictment. People v. Blackwell, 27 Cal. 65.

Florida.— Westcott v. State, 31 Fla. 458, 12 So. 846, holding that an indictment properly signed and indorsed as required by statute, and marked "Filed in open court," by the clerk, is sufficient to show that it was properly returned into court.

Louisiana.— State v. Mason, 32 La. Ann. 1018, holding that proof that an indictment was indorsed "A true bill," and was signed by the foreman, and that "the court ordered the finding to be recorded," raises a presumption that the indictment was duly presented in open court, as the rule omnia rite acta praesumuntur applies. Arkansas.— Robinson v. State, 33 Ark. 180, holding that the fact that the record in a criminal case fails to show that the indictment was returned into court by the foreman of the grand jury, "in the presence of" the other grand jurors, is not ground for reversing a judgment of conviction, where it appears from the record that the indictment was in fact returned into court by the grand jury through the foreman.

Where it appeared from the record that a foreman was appointed, and the indictment was returned signed by him, and the caption stated that the grand jury returned the hill into court by their foreman, there was sufficient to show that the bill was returned by the authority of the grand jury. Greeson v. State, 5 How. 33. Although by statute an indictment must be in fact presented in open court by the foreman of the grand jury, in presence of at least twelve of their number, yet the circumstances of this presentation need not be indorsed on the indictment. See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Indictment and Information," §§ 68–70.

In open court.— A recital in the record that the grand jury returned into "open" court an indictment shows that the court was in session when it was returned. State v. Cunningham, 130 Mo. 507, 32 S. W. 970. But such a recital is not necessary. The entry of record of the return of the indictment into court is sufficient, without showing it was into "open" court. Maples v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 408.

By whom indorsed.— The indorsements required by law to be made on an indictment may be made by a person who is neither the clerk of the court nor a deputy, if made under the directions and in the presence of the clerk. Jackson v. State, 55 Miss. 530.

78. Nichols v. State, 46 Miss. 284.

79. See Cooper v. State, 59 Miss. 267; State v. Clark, 18 Mo. 432. Where an indorsement on an indictment stated that it was presented to the court "at the May term thereof, 189—," and filed by the clerk "this 8th day of May, A. D. 1891," it was held that the failure to fill in the date of the finding did not vitiate the indictment; the presumption being that it was found at the term at which it was filed. State v. McGuire, 87 Iowa 142, 54 N. W. 202.

80. Williams v. State, 55 Ga. 391, holding that if it appears from the minutes of the court that a bill of indictment was found in the present year, an entry at the conclusion of the bill giving it date in a future year will be disregarded. See also State v. Jackson, 106 La. 189, 30 So. 309, where an indictment was indorsed as received and filed "January 24th, 901."

Time of return and discharge of grand jury.— Where the minutes of court show the return of bills of indictment and their presentation to the court before the discharge of the grand jury, it is immaterial that the clerk entered the fact that the judge had directed the discharge of the jury before he entered the title of the cases against those indicted. State v. Starr, 52 La. Ann. 610, 26 So. 998.

81. Com. v. McKinney, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 589.

Omission of name or misnomer.— Where an indictment was found against A and B, but the clerk, in making a minute of the finding, accidentally omitted the name of B, it was held that the record could not be amended at a subsequent term, and that the indictment as to B must be quashed, but that the record was sufficient as against A. Drake's Case, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 665. See to the same effect Blevins v. State, Meigs

(D) Identification of Indictment. It is essential of course that the record shall in some way identify the indictments found and returned by the grand jury,[82] unless there is some statutory provision to the contrary.[83]

(E) Time of Objection. If the record fails to show that the indictment was returned or presented by the grand jury in open court the objection may be raised, not only by motion to quash,[84] but also, in most jurisdictions, by motion in arrest of judgment[85] or on writ of error or appeal.[86] Elsewhere it has been held that an objection that an indictment copied into the record, properly signed and indorsed, was not presented by the grand jury in open court must be made in the trial court, where the record is made up and can be made to speak the truth, and that it is too late to urge such objection for the first time in the appellate court.[87]

b. Showing as to Court. The record must in some way show the court in which the indictment was found, so as to show jurisdiction.[88] This usually and properly appears from the caption of the indictment.[89] The record should also show that the court was in session when the indictment was found.[90]

(Tenn.) 82; State v. Compton, 13 W. Va. 852. So where an indictment against three persons was returned indorsed a true bill, but the finding as entered on the order book varied from the indictment as to the name of one of defendants, it was quashed as to him, but held good as to the others. Com. v. McKinney, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 589. On the other hand, however, it has been held that if it appears, from the whole tenor of the proceedings, that an indictment against several persons, therein charged jointly with an offense, properly indorsed as against "A. and als.," was presented in open court by the grand jury, the fact that, in his minutes of the day, the clerk erroneously copied the title so as to make it read as against "A" only, cannot vitiate the proceedings. State v. Banks, 40 La. Ann. 736, 5 So. 18. And under Mo. Rev. St. (1899) § 2519, expressly forbidding the clerk of the court in which an indictment for felony or misdemeanor is found from making any entry on the minutes or records of the court in reference to such indictment when defendant is not in actual confinement or under recognizance, it was held that an indictment cannot be held invalid because of the failure of the record entry thereof by the clerk on its presentation by the grand jury to show that it was against two defendants, especially when the indictment shows on its face that it is against both of them, and the record shows its number, and, as properly amended nunc pro tunc, that it was filed on the day of its presentation. State v. Bell, 159 Mo. 479, 60 S. W. 1102.

Where the record stated that on Nov. 4, 1853, "it being a day of the October term of the court," the grand jury returned an indictment against the accused for the murder of deceased, and the indictment on which the accused was tried purported to have been found at the November term, 1853, it was held that the identity of the indictments did not sufficiently appear. Hague v. State, 34 Miss. 616. And where a caption said, "The foregoing bills of indictments are true bills," without its appearing upon the record that the indictment which they set out was one of them, the omission was held fatal. Cruiser v. State, 18 N. J. L. 206.

Sufficient identification.— The fact that a general minute entry and indorsements on an indictment correspond in number, date of filing, and the name of the foreman of the grand jury is sufficient to identify the indictment. Cannon v. State, 57 Miss. 147. And where the record recites that the grand jury came into "open court and returned the following indictment," giving its number and setting it out, it sufficiently identifies the indictment. Willey v. State, 46 Ind. 363. Where the record shows that an indictment was returned by the grand jury, and the proceedings appear to be founded on such indictment, it is immaterial that the number of the case as stated on the indictment is different from that stated elsewhere in the record. c. Showing as to Grand Jury.[91] The decisions are conflicting as to what the record must show with respect to the grand jury. It has been held that it must in some way show the names of the grand jurors,[92] that the indictment was found by at least twelve jurors,[93] and in the absence of a statute, that the grand jury were duly impaneled and sworn.[94] The record need not affirmatively show that shows that the court was in session the day the indictment was found, which was one day after the time fixed by law for its opening, it is not necessary that a formal order opening court be shown. Wells v. State, (Ark. 1891), 16 S. W. 577.

Clerical errors.— Where the minutes of the court show that the grand jury was regularly formed, and that certain errors in the names of grand jurors as they appear in the record were clerical errors, made by the clerk in transcribing the names of jurors regularly drawn and summoned by the sheriff, as shown by his return, such errors do not affect the validity of an indictment returned by such grand jury. Germolgez v. State, 99 Ala. 216, 13 So. 517. See also State v. Mahan, 12 Tex. 283.

The omission of the name of one of the grand jurors from the list of those shown by the record to have been "duly impaneled, sworn, and charged according to law" is cured by Ala. Code, § 4445, providing, among other things, that "no objection can be taken to an indictment on the ground that any member of the grand jury was not legally qualified, or that the grand jurors were not legally drawn or summoned, or on any other ground going to the formation of the grand jury, except that the jurors were not drawn in the presence of officers designated by law." (Miss.) 27.

Contra.— State v. Watson, 31 La. Ann. 379; State v. Guglielmo, (Oreg. 1905) 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103, under a statute. It was decided in accordance with the text in Roe v. State, (Ala. 1887) 2 So. 459, where it was held that a grand jury was not legally organized, and that an indictment was invalid, where the record showed that the foreman was not sworn, and that this was shown where the record recited that W. B., "one of said persons, was by the court appointed foreman of said grand jury, after which each of the other persons so selected as grand jurors was duly sworn." The opinion above cited was afterward withdrawn, and another opinion filed holding that the defect in the record was rendered not fatal by a special statutory provision. See Roe v. State, 82 Ala. 68, 3 So. 2.

Sufficiency of record.— Where the record states that the grand jurors were duly sworn, it will be presumed that the legal oath was administered. Brown v. State, 10 Ark. 607; Pierce v. State, 12 Tex. 210; Russell v. State, 10 Tex. 288; Arthur v. State, 3 Tex. 403. And if it appears from the record that the grand jury were sworn, it will be presumed that they were "then and there" sworn Woodsides v. State, 2 How. (Miss.) 655. Where the record states at what court, at what term, and in what county the grand jury were impaneled and sworn, there is a sufficient statement of the venue, although the words "then and there" are not used before the word "sworn." Greeson v. State, 5 How. (Miss.) 33. While it should be shown in the record that the indictment was found by a grand jury which was duly impaneled and sworn, it need not be shown by an entry made by the clerk and entered on the minutes of the court at the beginning of the term, when the grand jury is impaneled and sworn, but if the fact is made to appear anywhere in the record, it will be sufficient. Bailey v. State, 39 Ind. 438, holding that where an indictment recited the style of the court, the name of the county and state, the time and place of the session of the court, the names of the parties, and that the grand jurors were of the proper county, good and lawful men, duly and legally impaneled, charged, and sworn to inquire, etc., and the accompanying record, upon a change of venue, recited that such indictment was returned into open court, the record was sufficient. Where the record shows that the grand jury returned the indictment into open court, and the indictment itself states that the grand jury was duly impaneled, sworn, and charged, the impaneling of the grand jury is sufficiently shown. Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 144. See also Stout v. State, 93 Ind. 150; Lovell v. State, 45 Ind. 550; Howell v. State, 4 Ind. App. 148, 30 N. E. 714.

Clerical errors.— Where the record of the impaneling of the grand jury stated that the jurors "were sworn a grand jury of inquest upon the body of Mineral county," it was held that the word "upon," being clearly a clerical error, should be read "for," and that the indictment might be upheld as showing on its face that it was found by the grand jurors for Mineral county. State v. Gilmore, 9 W. Va. 641.

the grand jurors were qualified, but this will be presumed unless the contrary appears from the record or evidence.[95] And it has been held that the record need not affirmatively show the appointment of a foreman,[96] or the selection or drawing and summoning of the grand jury,[97] or the award of process to summon them.[98]

d. Statement as to Offense Charged. Sometimes, by statute, the record is required to specify the offense charged;[99] but even when this is so, it need not contain every element of the offense,[1] and mere clerical errors will not necessarily be fatal.[2] In the absence of a statute omission to state the offense charged in the entry on the minutes is not fatal, even if necessary at all;[3] nor is a misnomer of the offense fatal.[4]

e. Aider and Variance Between Portions of Record. An omission or defect in one part of the record of an indictment may be supplied or aided by other parts, as the record is to be taken as a whole.[5] Where there is a variance as to

95. Stone v. State, 30 Ind. 115; Weinzorpflin v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 186. The fact that the record does not recite that the court performed its imperative legal duty to ascertain whether the grand jurors, shown to have been impaneled and charged, possessed the statutory qualifications, does not render an indictment found by such grand jury invalid. James v. State, 53 Ala. 380. See also GRAND JURIES, 20 Cyc. 1303.

96. People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 214; Yates v. People, 38 Ill. 527; McGregg v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 101; State v. Gouge, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 132. A statement in the record that a person was sworn as foreman implies his appointment as such by the court. Woodsides v. State, 2 How. (Miss.) 655; Byrd v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 247.

97. State v. Carney, 20 Iowa 82; State v. Howard, 10 Iowa 101. But see State v. Conner, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 325. To sustain an indictment it is not necessary that the record should show the mode in which the jurors for the term were drawn. This sufficiently appears from the venire, which is presumed legal. Collier v. State, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 388. And, where it appears from the record that the indictment was found and returned into court by a grand jury, and was treated by the prisoner in the court below as a valid indictment, so found and returned, the judgment cannot be reversed because the record fails to show that the grand jury was regularly selected and summoned. Shaw v. State, 18 Ala. 547.

98. Curtis v. Com., 87 Va. 589, 13 S. E. 73.

99. In Texas, previous to the amendment of 1876, Code Cr. Proc. art. 389, provided that the fact of the presentment of an indictment should be entered on the minutes of the court, "noting briefly the style of the criminal action and the offense charged," and it was held that an entry describing the offense as "A. to kill" was not sufficient. Denton v. State, 3 Tex. App. 635. This is no longer necessary in this state. See the cases cited infra, note 3.

1. Tefft v. Com., 8 Leigh (Va.) 721 (holding that the record of the finding of an indictment for retailing ardent spirits without a license, which stated that the grand jury presented an indictment against A for "retailing liquors," a true bill, was sufficient); State v. Geyer, 44 W. Va. 649, 29 S. E. 1020 (holding that the record of an indictment, in these words: "An indictment against Charles Gibson and Dana Geyer for obtaining property by false pretense. No. 1. A true bill. H. F. Jones, Foreman," was sufficient, although the language used did not contain every element of the offense charged). See also State v. Fitzpatrick, 8 W. Va. 707; Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510.

2. Where an entry in the record stating that the grand jury "returned into Court and among other things, presented an indictment against Thomas Nutter for felonious assault and battery," a true bill, and the words "presented an indictment against" were stricken out by the clerk with the intention of interlining them, which he failed to do, but the words were legible, it was held a sufficient entry of a finding for assault with felonious intent to commit murder. Com. v. Nutter, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 699.

3. Goodwyn v. State, 4 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 520 (holding that, in the entry on the minutes of the court that an indictment had been found against A B, an omission to state the offense charged was not error, especially where the defect was supplied by a subsequent part of the record); State v. Cook, Riley (S. C.) 234 (holding that it was no ground for quashing an indictment that there was no specification of any offense on the docket).

In Texas the entry of a presentment of the court need not show what offense was charged in the indictment. Tellison v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 388, 33 S. W. 1082; Steele v. State, 19 Tex. App. 425; Spear v. State, 16 Tex. App. 98; Hasley v. State, 14 Tex. App. 217.

4. Since the clerk is not required to enter upon his minutes the name of the offense charged against an accused, the fact that he misnames the offense on his minute book cannot vitiate the indictment. Rowlett v. State, 23 Tex. App. 191, 4 S. W. 582.

5. Com. v. Stone, 3 Gray (Mass.) 453.

Illustrations.— Thus where an indictment showed that it was indorsed "A true bill," and signed by the foreman of the grand jury, it was held that a demurrer to it on the ground that the record did not show that it was so indorsed and signed was properly an essential matter between different parts of the record, that part which by statute is made evidence of the fact will control.[6]

f. Amendments and Subsequent Entries. Where the record fails in a particular part to show a necessary fact as to the selection, drawing, summoning, impaneling, or organization of the grand jury,[7] or as to the finding, presentment, or return, or filing of the indictment,[8] it may be amended by a nunc pro tunc entry by order of the court, if sufficient facts otherwise appear on the record to support the order of amendment,[9] and if, according to some of the cases, defendant is present in court when the amendment is made, but not otherwise.[10] The amendment must be in fact made.[11] It has been held in some states, however, overruled, since the indictment was itself a part of the record. Pickerel v. Com., 30 S. W. 617, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 120. And an indictment which purports in its caption to have been found on the first day of the term, but charges an offense of a later date, may be shown, by reference to the clerk's certificate indorsed thereon, to have been actually returned into court after this date. Com. v. Stone, 3 Gray (Mass.) 453. The record entry of presentments is admissible to show the true date of an indictment. It was so held where it charged the offense to have been committed August 18, and the clerk's indorsement represented it to have been filed on that date, but the record entry showed it was returned August 19. Kennedy v. State, 11 Tex. App. 73.

Omission to record finding.— But where a bill of indictment was found by the grand jury, and indorsed "A true bill" by the foreman, and brought into court, it was held that an omission to record the finding, as required by statute, could not be supplied by a paper purporting to be an indictment with an indorsement "A true bill" signed by the person who was foreman of the grand jury at that time. Com. v. Cawood, 2 Va. Cas. 527. Nor can such omission be supplied by a recital in the record that defendant stands indicted, or by his arraignment, or by his plea of not guilty. Com. v. Cawood, supra.

Mistake in record.— So where an indictment against J M was indorsed by the grand jury as a true bill against T M, and so entered on the record, it was held that it could not be amended to conform to the indictment. Com. v. McKinney, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 589. See also Drake's Case, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 665.

The indorsement on an indictment may constitute part of the records of the court. People v. Myers, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 6.

6. Holland v. State, 60 Miss. 939, holding that the legal evidence of the date when an indictment marked "Filed" was found and presented was the date of the entry signed by the clerk, as provided by Code, § 3006; and that such entry controlled an averment in the indictment that it was presented on a different date.

A variance between the christian name of a grand juror as signed to an indictment and as given in the entry upon the record, setting forth and showing the impaneling of the grand jury, cannot be made available as the subject-matter of a plea in abatement to the indictment. In Texas it is held that Rev. St. (1895) art. 1120, requiring that all proceedings of the district court shall be read and corrected and signed in open court by the judge, prevents an entry by the clerk or the signing by the judge after the adjournment of the court. Moore v. State, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 520, 81 S. W. 48.

9. Collier v. Com., 110 Ky. 516, 62 S. W. 4, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1929. Where the record shows that the grand jury, as a body, made a report, and returned into open court certain indictments, which were properly indorsed as true bills and filed and placed on the docket, and that the indictment in the case at issue was properly indorsed and filed, and placed on the docket with other cases returned at the same time, the facts of record are sufficient to authorize the court to amend the record so as to show the return of the indictment in such case into open court by the grand jury in a body. Gore v. People, 162 Ill. 259, 44 N. E. 500.

10. Felker v. State, 54 Ark. 489, 16 S. W. 663; Green v. State, 19 Ark. 178, amendment to show return.

11. Where on motion of defendant, made on retrial, to set aside an indictment for theft because its presentment in open court did not appear on the minutes of the court as required by law, the state introduced testimony of the clerk and the foreman, and moved to amend, and the motion was granted, that where a statute requires the finding of the grand jury to be recorded, and the clerk omits to do so, or omits the name of one of several defendants or enters it erroneously, the omission or mistake cannot be cured by amendment at a subsequent term.[12] And statutes sometimes provide that no entry of an indictment found shall be made at the term at which the same is found, unless defendant is in actual custody, or on bail or recognizance to answer such offense, but such entry may be made on the minutes of the court at any time after the appearance of defendant.[13]

G. Return and Filing of Evidence or List of Witnesses.[14] In the absence of a statute the grand jury are not required to return into court the evidence on which they have found an indictment or a list of the witnesses, but sometimes a statute requires this to be done, and renders non-compliance therewith ground for motion to set aside the indictment.[15] But it has been held that a person indicted by a grand jury has no such personal interest in a compliance by the foreman with a statute requiring him to return to the court a list of all witnesses sworn before the grand jury during the term as will cause a non-compliance with the statute to affect his rights under the indictment.[16]

H. Loss or Destruction of Indictment — 1. New Indictment. When an indictment is lost or destroyed after it has been duly found and returned or presented in court, there can be no question but that the court may on motion of the prosecuting officer order a new bill to be sent to the grand jury.[17]

but no amendment of the minutes was in fact made, it was held that notwithstanding defendant's plea of not guilty and the other proceedings, the conviction at the second trial could not stand. Cox v. State, 7 Tex. App. 495.

The proper mode of amending a record in regard to an indictment would be by an order at the time when the amendment is made, and not by erasing and altering an order entered on the minutes of the previous term of the court. Rhodes v. State, 29 Tex. 188.

13. See Cook v. State, 57 Miss. 654. Under such a statute it has been held that where a person indicted is in custody or on bail when the indictment is returned, and the court makes an insufficient entry, it cannot at the next term amend the entry, so as to cure its defect. Cornwell v. State, 53 Miss. 385. But where the court has the right to make an original entry at a term subsequent to that at which the indictment is found, an invalid entry made at a preceding term may be ignored, and the correct entry made at a succeeding term will be good as an original entry. Cornwell v. State, supra.

15. Under the Iowa statute see State v. Hasty, 121 Iowa 507, 96 N. W. 1115 (holding that Code, § 5276 et seq., requiring a motion to set aside an indictment to be sustained when the minutes of the evidence of the witnesses examined are not returned therewith, includes witnesses whose testimony was taken in shorthand and subsequently extended and filed by the committing magistrate; but that defendant cannot complain of the omission from the return of evidence having no bearing on the trial against him); State v. Turner, 114 Iowa 426, 87 N. W. 287 (holding that the fact that the transcript of the evidence of the examination before the committing magistrate, instead of a minute thereof made by the clerk of the grand jury, was returned with the indictment, is not prejudicial to defendant); State v. Doss, 110 Iowa 713, 80 N. W. 1069 (holding that the statute does not require that the minutes of the testimony of each witness and each exhibit returned with the indictment be separately marked "Filed" by the clerk, but one indorsement, so made as to indicate all papers to which it refers, is sufficient); State v. Wrand, 108 Iowa 73, 78 N. W. 788; State v. Hurd, 101 Iowa 391, 70 N. W. 613 (holding that the statute does not require the return of documentary evidence, or require such minutes to be returned in the handwriting of the grand jury's clerk); State v. Briggs, 68 Iowa 416, 27 N. W. 358; State v. Little, 42 Iowa 51; State v. Guisenhause, 20 Iowa 227. The statute does not require return of the testimony which is immaterial (State v. Lewis, 96 Iowa 286, 65 N. W. 295), or testimony which did not contribute to the finding of the indictment although it is material (State v. Miller, 95 Iowa 368, 64 N. W. 288).

2. Substitution of Copy. According to the weight of authority, however, a new indictment is not necessary; but the court may, even though the judge has no personal recollection, allow the substitution of a copy made from the records or clearly proved by affidavits or otherwise to be an exact copy. It has been so held, not only under statutes expressly providing therefor,[18] but also independently of such a statute or under a statute providing generally for the reëstablishment of lost or destroyed papers, records, files, proceedings, etc.[19] The rule also applies where an indictment has become unintelligible by mutilation or obliteration.[20] The copy must be clearly shown to be correct,[21] and there must be a tion of a new prosecution, in which the limitation will run up to the time the new indictment is returned into court. Com. v. Keger, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 240. A contrary rule is sometimes prescribed by statute. State v. Elliott, 14 Tex. 423.

Restoring original.— But an indictment torn into three pieces, which may be so united without the omission of any material word as to restore it substantially to the form in which it was presented in court by the grand jury, is sufficient as a basis for further legal proceedings. Com. v. Roland, 97 Mass. 598.

21. Roberson v. State, 45 Fla. 94, 34 So. 294; State v. Thomas, 97 Iowa 396, 66 N. W. 743 (holding the evidence insufficient to show that a substitute was a substantial copy); State v. Simpson, 67 Mo. 647; Rogers v. State, 11 Tex. App. 608. Where the copy of an indictment cannot be certified by the clerk of the court to be a true copy because of the loss of the original, but the evidence, which is not controverted, shows that the paper presented is in fact a true copy, this will be sufficient. State v. Stevisiger, 61 Iowa 623, 16 N. W. 746. And it has been held that where an indictment is lost, and another regular motion for substitution and an order substituting and identifying the copy.[22] A person cannot be put upon trial on a lost or destroyed indictment of which there is no record.[23]

3. Loss or Destruction After Trial or Plea. According to the weight of authority the court has power to order the substitution of a copy of an indictment which is lost or destroyed after a trial thereon or after arraignment and plea.[24]

4. Discovery After Substitution or New Indictment. Where a paper has been by a proper order of court established as a copy of a lost indictment or presentment, the copy, until such order has been set aside, stands in lieu of the original. If such order is not revoked, the mere finding of a paper purporting to be the lost original cannot in any manner affect the legal status of the case.[25] On the other hand it has been held that there is no error in substituting an indictment, and then allowing the trial to proceed on the original indictment after it is found, where there has been no order substituting the indictment, and the original has been found pending the substitution.[26] Where an indictment has been found against a party and has been lost or not accounted for, and another is found against him for the same offense, it is immaterial upon which one he is tried.[27] It has been further held that where during the progress of a trial the original indictment substituted, and defendant confesses to the correctness of the copy, he cannot complain on appeal that no evidence was offered as to the copy. Watson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 340.

Contest.— Under a statute providing that when an indictment or information has been lost, etc., the state's attorney may suggest the fact, and another pleading may be substituted on his statement that it is substantially the same, the allowance of the substitution is a judicial act, and the accused has the right to contest it, and cannot be relegated to a motion to quash the substituted papers. Bowers v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 185, 75 S. W. 299.

Presumption.—Where the record of a court having power to substitute a copy for a lost indictment states that the indictment is lost or mislaid, and that the instrument substituted is a copy thereof, it will be presumed that such facts were established by proper and sufficient proof. Com. v. Becker, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 430.

Indorsements.— Where defendant has been tried on a copy of an indictment which was established in lieu of the lost original, after conviction it is no ground for a motion in arrest of judgment that the copy had on it no indorsement of "True bill," or other finding by the grand jury, as such defect does not affect the merits of the case. Hughes v. State, 76 Ga. 39.

22. Strong v. State, 18 Tex. App. 19; Rogers v. State, 11 Tex. App. 608; Beardall v. State, 9 Tex. App. 262; Turner v. State, 7 Tex. App. 596; Clampitt v. State, 3 Tex. App. 638. But compare Epperson v. State, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 291. Under Tex. Code Cr. Proc. art. 470, providing that when an indictment is lost, mislaid, etc., the county attorney may suggest the fact to the court, and the same shall be entered on the court's minutes, and another indictment may then be substituted on the written statement of the county attorney that it is substantially the same as the original, it was held that a mere certificate of the county attorney that the substituted writing is substantially the same as the original, accompanied by the written consent of defendant's attorneys to regard it as a properly substituted indictment, does not show a valid substitution under the act, since to constitute such substitution the record must show a formal motion for permission to substitute, accompanied by a copy of the indictment, an order of the court substituting the new indictment for the original, and the proper certificate of the county attorney that the substituted indictment is substantially the same as the original. Carter v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 608, 58 S. W. 80. Where an indictment was lost, and the district attorney asked permission to substitute a copy, presenting an instrument to the court which he stated was a substantial copy, an order of the court directing the clerk to file the substituted indictment, followed by the filing thereof by the clerk, was held sufficient as an order of substitution. Magee v. State, 14 Tex. App. 366.

23. Buckner v. State, 56 Ind. 210, holding also that defendant in a criminal prosecution cannot be put upon trial on a nunc pro tunc entry, made by the order of the court, showing the return into court by the grand jury of an indictment against defendant and that it has been destroyed.

on which defendant has been arraigned is lost, and another indictment, identical with it, is returned by the same grand jury then in session, and substituted, and afterward the original, being found again, is handed to the jury on its retirement, there is no error.[28]

I. Successive Indictments[29] — 1. Effect as to Subsequent Indictment. A grand jury may find a valid indictment notwithstanding the fact that another indictment is pending against the accused for the same offense, and the pendency of the other indictment, where there has been no conviction or jeopardy thereon, is not ground for a plea either in abatement or in bar of the second indictment, or for motion in arrest of judgment thereon,[30] although as a rule the accused can be tried or put in jeopardy only on one.[31] It has been so held even though defendant has been arraigned and a plea of not guilty entered on the first indictment,[32] or although he has been tried thereon, where the jury have failed to agree,[33] or where a verdict of guilty has been set aside or judgment arrested on his motion,[34] or although a change of venue has been taken to another court.[35] And it is also well settled that the fact that an indictment is pending does not prevent the finding of another indictment for the same act as constituting another or a higher or less offense.[36] The court may, however, in its discretion, quash one of two pending indictments for the same offense, whenever justice requires this in order to prevent prejudice to the defendant.[37]

2. Effect as to First Indictment — a. In General. In the absence of a statute, where two indictments are pending against a person for the same offense, the second does not supersede or abate the first, and the state may elect on which it will prosecute;[38] but defendant cannot be tried on both, and if the state elects to proceed on the second the court may in its discretion quash the first.[39]

b. Under Statutory Provisions. It is sometimes expressly provided by statute that if two indictments are pending against a person for the same offense, or for the same matter, although charged as different offenses,[40] the indictment first found shall be deemed to be suspended or superseded by the second and shall be quashed.[41] Such a statute does not affect the validity of the second indictment, but on the contrary recognizes its validity.[42] Nor does the second indictment ipso facto supersede and quash the first, but it merely suspends the same and renders it liable to be quashed;[43] and therefore if the second is quashed by the court the first is revived.[44] The second indictment, to supersede the first, must be a valid indictment.[45]

40. This statute only applies when the two indictments are for the same offense or matter; and it does not apply therefore where they are so diverse that the same evidence will not sustain both, and when each sets out an offense differing in all its elements from that charged in the other, although both indictments relate to the same transaction. 3. After Change of Venue. A new indictment may be found and the defendant arraigned thereon, notwithstanding a change of venue has been taken on the first indictment to another county, where the first indictment is quashed or dismissed.[46] It has also been held that, if authorized by statute, a new indictment may be found in the county to which the venue has been changed;[47] but elsewhere it has been held that such a statute violates the constitutional requirement of indictment on the ground that the constitution contemplates a common-law indictment, which can be found only in the county in which the offense was committed.[48]

4. Procedure by Grand Jury as to Second Indictment. In some cases it has been held that where an indictment is quashed or dismissed the same grand jury can properly find and return a new indictment without reëxamining witnesses,[49] while in other cases this has been denied.[50] A grand jury, however, cannot properly find a new indictment merely on the fact of a former finding of a true bill by another grand jury.[51] When an indictment has been quashed the grand jury may find a new indictment without another binding over.[52]

5. Indictments For Different Offenses; Splitting Offenses. Several indictments may be found and prosecuted for different offenses, although they relate to the same transaction,[53] except in so far as this may be prevented by the doc-vote had been taken by the grand jury as to whether it should be found, it was held that the county court had power thereupon to order the first indictment reinstated. People v. Mosier, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 5, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 65.

J. Second Trial on Same Indictment. The fact that there has been a trial on an indictment does not render it functus officio, so as to prevent a second trial after a conviction has been set aside,[69] or a trial for an offense included in the charge after an acquittal of the higher offense charged.[70]

III. FORMAL REQUISITES OF INDICTMENT.

A. In General. An indictment must, in some states by express statutory provision, be in writing;[71] but it may be partly in handwriting and partly printed or typewritten or wholly typewritten or printed, for the words "writing" and "written" include printing and typewriting.[72] Perhaps, however, an indictment written with a lead pencil would not be tolerated because of the liability to erasure and obliteration.[73] Words, figures, or other marks or matter appearing on a bill of indictment but forming no part of it are mere surplusage and will not affect its validity.[74] The fact that an indictment has been accidentally cut or torn into several pieces does not invalidate it, if no material words are destroyed and it is legible.[75]

B. Caption — 1. In General. The caption of an indictment is merely a formal statement of the proceedings, describing the court in or before which the indictment was found, the time when and the place where it was found, and the grand jurors by whom it was found, and is no part of the indictment itself.[76]

case in open court, the consent of the court is conclusive on the validity of a nolle prosequi which the court has allowed the solicitor-general to enter before putting accused on trial; and the latter, when arraigned on an indictment subsequently found and returned by the grand jury for the same offense, cannot, by plea in abatement or motion to quash, draw in question the rightful disposition of the former bill by nolle prosequi. Its purpose is to show, for the use of a superior or appellate court to which the indictment may be removed, the authority by which it was found.[77] The practice in some jurisdictions, as at common law, is for the clerk to make up the caption from the records of the court after the indictment has been found and returned, and when it is taken or sent to a superior or appellate court;[78] but in some states each bill of indictment is framed with its own special caption before it is submitted to the grand jury.[79] It has been said that the record of an indictment would not be perfect without a caption, and would not be admissible in evidence, as it would not show by what authority the indictment was found;[80] but on the other hand it has been held that the omission of a caption will not render an indictment bad if the omission can be supplied from other parts of the record;[81] and in other cases a caption has been held unnecessary.[82] But a caption should accompany every indictment removed into a superior court.[83] In the indictment itself, however, it has been held that the caption may be entirely omitted.[84]

2. Defects in or Omission of Caption; Aider by Indictment or Record. affect the validity of the indictment, but in such case the language of the indictment will control.[86] Nor will omissions or misrecitals in the caption, even in material matters, render the record fatally defective, where the omission or misrecital is supplied or corrected by the indictment itself, or other parts of the record, for it is well settled that omissions and defects in the caption of an indictment, either in the description of the court, or in the statement of the time of finding the indictment, or in any other respect, may be supplied or corrected by other parts of the record, including the certificate of the clerk on the back of the indictment.[87] It has even been held that the entire omission of a caption may be supplied by the minutes of the clerk on the bill and the general records of the term.[88] On the other hand if the caption of an indictment fails to show some matter which is essential, and the omission is not cured by any other part of the record, the defect is fatal and the indictment or a conviction thereunder cannot be sustained.[89] In any case, however, only reasonable certainty is required;[90] and where the essential matters are set out with sufficient certainty to a common intent, legal niceties will be disregarded.[91] Matter which may be rejected as mere surplusage will not render a caption defective.[92] Defects which might otherwise be fatal are in many jurisdictions rendered immaterial by statutes providing that no indictment shall be deemed invalid for any defect in form which does not prejudice the substantial rights of defendant on the merits;[93] and generally defects and omissions in a caption may be cured by amendment.[94]

surplusage.[4] It is not necessary to set forth the foundation of the court's authority or the facts which give it jurisdiction, where it is exercised in the course of ordinary jurisdiction and the court is one of general criminal jurisdiction,[5] although it seems otherwise where the indictment is found in a special court.[6]

(II) NAME AND DESCRIPTION OF JUDGES. It has been held that, in addition to the description of the court, the caption must name the judges or justices, or so many of them as the law requires to constitute the court, and allude to the rest by the words "and others their fellows";[7] but in other jurisdictions it has been held that this is no longer necessary.[8] If the record elsewhere shows who were the judges, it is immaterial that they do not appear in the caption;[9] and mere clerical errors in describing the judges or formal inaccuracies which cannot prejudice the accused will be disregarded.[10] It is not necessary to show their appointment.[11]

b. Place of Holding Court and Finding of Indictment. The caption should show the place at which the court was held and the indictment found, including the name of the county or district, and, in the case of city courts, of the city, in order that it may appear that the court was properly held and that the place is within the limits of the jurisdiction of the court and the grand jury;[12] but

The grand jury which found an indictment being impaneled in the district court, and having returned the indictment in that court, and all the proceedings thereafter being had therein, an order remitting the indictment from the circuit to the district court was neither necessary nor proper, notwithstanding it was entitled "In the Circuit Court," as that is merely a formal imperfection, not necessarily prejudicial to accused, nor having the effect to return it to that court, or vitiating the same. A. 452, holding that the entitling of an indictment returned in the district of Alaska, "In the District Court of the United States for the District of Alaska," although inaccurate, was merely a clerical or technical error, which did not vitiate the indictment, either upon general principles, or under the statute of Oregon in force in the territory.

Presumption.— Where the caption to an indictment showed that the court was opened on the first day of the term, by the clerk, at the time and place prescribed by law, and adjourned by him from day to day until the appearance of the judge, it was presumed that the court was held on each day at the same place. Smith v. State, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 9. And where an indictment recited that it was found by the grand jury of Lincoln county at the August term, 1888, of the Lincoln circuit court, without specifying in which of the two districts it was found, it was presumed to have been returned by a grand jury legally impaneled in the Star City district, it appearing from the term at which it was found and the clerk's indorsement thereon that it was returned at a time when that district of the court could alone have been legally in session, and proof showing that the offense was committed and defendant tried and convicted there. Byrd v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 163. See also Woodsides v. State, 2 How. (Miss.) 655. The heading of an indictment, "Georgia, Liberty County," sufficiently shows for what county the grand jurors who found the indictment were chosen, selected, and sworn. Stevens v. State, 76 Ga. 96. An indictment purporting to have been found by the grand jury of F county, which states that the alleged crime was committed at a certain town in said F county, sufficiently shows that the grand jury had jurisdiction of the offense. People v. Rockhill, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 241, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 222. The omission of the words "body of the county," in an indictment the caption of which recites that the grand jury were sworn and charged, "inquiring in and for the county of," etc., is not an informality which prejudices defendant or vitiates the indictment. Fizell v. State, 25 Wis. 364.

Alaska.— The designation of the grand jurors in an indictment found in the district court for the district of Alaska as "the grand jurors of the United States of America, selected, impaneled, sworn, and charged within and for the district of Alaska," is not a substantial error which vitiates the indictment; and under the code of Oregon (Hill Annot. Laws, § 1280) also, such defect must be disregarded as not tending to the prejudice of the substantial rights of defendant on the merits. Jackson v. U. S., 102 Fed. 473, 42 C. C. A. 452.

Mere clerical errors are not fatal. Williams v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 376, substitution of the word "impounded" for "impaneled."

Defects in this respect may be cured by a statute providing that no motion in arrest of judgment or writ of error shall be sustained for any matter not affecting the real merits of the offense charged in the indictment. Kruger v. State, 1 Nebr. 365, holding that the omission of the word "chosen" in using the form, "the grand jurors chosen, selected, and sworn in and for the county," etc., prescribed by Nebr. Cr. they were sworn.[32] It is not necessary to state the qualifications of the jurors otherwise than by describing them as "good and lawful men," for these words include every qualification required by law for grand jurors.[33] It has even been held that such a description of the jurors, although usual, is unnecessary.[34] The caption or some other part of the record should show that there were the number of jurors required by law;[35] but the caption need not show that twelve jurors concurred in finding the indictment, if this appears elsewhere on the record.[36] Either the caption or the commencement of an indictment must show that the grand jury were sworn and that it was found upon oath, or upon oath and affirmation, where some of the jurors were affirmed,[37] unless the omission is supplied (Tenn.) 451, holding that a caption to a record which does not state that a grand jury was impaneled is defective, and the judgment must be arrested. Omission of such a statement has been held a defect of form within a statute requiring demurrer or motion to quash. Engeman v. State, 54 N. J. L. 247, 23 Atl. 676.

Captions held sufficient.— Seal v. State, 13 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 286. A statement in a caption that the grand jurors were "balloted for, elected, tried, and sworn" was held a satisfactory statement that the jury was composed of qualified men. Turner v. State, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 119. And it has been held that the declaration in an indictment that the grand jurors have been "duly summoned, impaneled, and sworn" is sufficient to show, on the face of the indictment, that they were the lawful jurors, duly qualified to serve as grand jurors in the district court in which the indictment was presented. Keith v. Territory, 8 Okla. 307, 57 Pac. 834.

35. Thus it has been held that a caption declaring that it was found by "the grand jurors of the state of Wisconsin, to wit, 12 good and lawful men," the statute of the state requiring that there shall be not more than twenty-three nor less than sixteen persons sworn on any grand jury was bad; and that the indictment would not support a conviction. It has been held that where the records of the court disclose that a grand jury appeared in open court, and their foreman, in their presence, presented to the court a true bill properly indorsed, it sufficiently appears that the indictment was found by the concurrence of at least twelve jurors, as by statute required. Watts v. Territory, 1 Wash. Terr. 409; McAllister v. Territory, 1 Wash. Terr. 360. And in the federal courts an objection that an indictment fails to recite that it was found by the concurrence of twelve jurors is immaterial under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 1025 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 720], where the record shows that at a term of the district court the grand jurors of the United States came into open court and through their foreman presented the bill of indictment, with the indorsement "a true bill" followed by the signature of the foreman. See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Indictment and Information," § 110 et seq.

But compare Bram v. U. S., 168 U. S. 532, 18 S. Ct. 183, 42 L. ed. 568, holding that the fact that an indictment recited that it was presented "upon the oath" of the grand jurors, when in fact it was presented upon the oath of all but one, who affirmed instead of making oath, was a merely formal defect, without prejudice, and cured by the provisions of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 1025 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 720].

Presumption.— In some cases, however, it has been held that if the caption omits to state that the grand jury in a superior court was sworn it will be presumed that they were sworn. Melton v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 389; State v. Long, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 386; McClure v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 206. See also State v. Guglielmo, (Oreg. 1905) 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103; Hart v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 1105.

Omission of the words "then and there," before the words "sworn and charged," has been held not material. Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 290. But to the contrary see People v. Guernsey, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 265, holding their omission fatal on motion in arrest of judgment.

Commencement see infra, III, C, 4.

38. It need not appear in the caption that the jury were sworn, if such fact appears in the body of the indictment returned by them. State v. Long, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 386. Defect of form.— But it has been held that such an omission is a defect of form, which, under a statute, is waived if the objection is not raised by demurrer or motion to quash. Engeman v. State, 54 N. J. L. 247, 23 Atl. 676.

In some states the statement in an indictment that the presentment of the jury is "upon their oaths" is held to be a part of the caption, so that, if it has been omitted, it may be inserted even after conviction. State v. Creight, supra. Elsewhere, however, this is regarded as part of the commencement of the indictment. See infra, III, C, 1, 4.

Iowa.— An indictment alleging the presentment to be made "in behalf of said state of Iowa," the caption being "State of Iowa, M. county," shows that the prosecution is conducted "in the name and by the authority of the state," according to Const. art. 5, § 6. Baurose v. State, 1 Iowa 374; Wrocklege v. State, 1 Iowa 167.

Kentucky.— An indictment in the name of the commonwealth, and concluding against its peace and dignity, although it does not express that it is found by the authority of the commonwealth, is sufficient. Allen v. Com., 2 Bibb 210.

Missouri.— State v. Cutter, 65 Mo. 503 (holding bad an indictment purporting to be found by "the grand jurors of the county of Wayne, in the state of Missouri," as the constitution requires all prosecutions to be conducted in the name of the state); State v. Foster, 61 Mo. 549 ("State of Mo.," instead of "State of Missouri," is sufficient).

New York.— Phelps v. People, 72 N. Y. 334, holding sufficient the words "the State of New York," instead of "the people of the State of New York."

North Dakota.— When an indictment is properly entitled "State of North Dakota v. A. B.," and shows on its face that it was properly presented by "the grand jury of the state of North Dakota in and for the county of G.," it sufficiently appears that the prosecution is in the name, and by authority, of the state of North Dakota. State v. Kerr, 3 N. D. 523, 58 N. W. 27.

South Carolina.— An indictment beginning this respect may be supplied or cured by other parts of the record,[45] and the omission of such a recital or defects therein, even when required by the constitution or by statute, is a defect of form within a statute requiring exceptions for defect of form to be made before trial.[46] It is usual to set out the names of the parties in a formal title, and this is sometimes required by statute;[47] but the omission of a formal title is not fatal if the names of the parties sufficiently appear elsewhere in the indictment or record,[48] and a statute requiring the title of the cause to be set out has been held merely directory.[49]

f. Description or Statement of Offense. The caption of an indictment need not state or describe the offense charged, and if it does so any misstatement therein or variance from the indictment will be immaterial.[50]

4. Separate Counts. The caption of an indictment is equally applicable to each one of several counts,[51] and need not be repeated in each count.[52] And where the first count is quashed or held bad on demurrer, or the prosecution elects to proceed on the second or a later count only, the caption still remains as to the other counts.[53]

5. Amendment of Caption. As the caption is no part of the indictment itself, but merely a ministerial act to make up the record of the court, it may be amended at any time, even after conviction, so as to cure omissions or defects therein by making it conform to the other records of the term.[54]

"South Carolina," instead of "The state of South Carolina," and concluding "against the peace and dignity of the said state," is good. State v. Anthony, 1 McCord 285.

Although the caption is no part of the indictment, yet, where it is prefixed to the bill when submitted to the grand jury and considered by them, the indictment proper may refer to it for the name of the county, just as it may refer to the county in the margin;[55] and so in other respects the caption may aid the indictment proper.[56]

C. Commencement — 1. In General. The commencement is that part of the indictment which immediately precedes the statement of the offense, and its object is to show the county for which the grand jury are inquiring and from which they have been summoned, and the fact that they present the indictment upon oath or affirmation.[57] An indictment is not vitiated by mere clerical or grammatical errors in the commencement,[53] by mere surplusage,[59] by omissions or defects which are supplied or cured by other parts of the indictment or record,[60] or by amendment.[61]

2. VENUE. The commencement should state the county from which the grand jury has come and for which they are inquiring;[62] but it is sufficient if the county appears in the margin, or in the body of the caption, and the commencement refers to and incorporates it by use of the words "the county aforesaid,"[63] or, it seems, if the county from which they were summoned and for which they are inquiring elsewhere appears in the record.[64]

3. BY AUTHORITY OF THE STATE. It is usual to set forth the state in the commencement, either by stating it or by reference to the margin or caption as "the state aforesaid," so as to show that the indictment is found by the authority of the state;[65] but it has been held that a failure to do so does not render the indictment bad, if it otherwise appears that the prosecution is in the name and by authority of the state.[66] In Texas the constitution requires all prosecutions to be carried on "in the name and by authority of The State of Texas," and the Territories.— An indictment which described the grand jury which found it only as "the grand jury of the people of the United States in the territory of Utah" was held fatally defective under the act of Jan. 21, 1853, which required that the grand jurors should be residents of the county for which they were summoned. statute provides that indictments must commence, "In the name and by the authority of the State of Texas," and there are similar provisions in other states.[67]

4. Averments as to Grand Jury. The commencement of an indictment as distinguished from the caption and record need not give the names or number of the grand jurors,[68] or recite that they were summoned, impaneled, and sworn to inquire of crimes committed in the county, or that twelve concurred in the finding.[69] And it is sufficient to use the word "jurors" instead of "grand jurors."[70]

5. Presentment or Accusation. The fact of presentment must be expressed by the use of the word "present" or some other appropriate word showing that the grand jury charge defendant,[71] and it must be expressed in the present tense.[72] And by the weight of authority a commencement will be fatally defective if it fails to recite that it is presented upon oath, or upon oath and affirmation.[73] It has

67. Compliance with this requirement is essential. Therefore an indictment beginning with the words, "In the name and authority of the state of Texas," instead of the words, "In the name and by authority of the state of Texas," as required by the constitution, has been held fatally defective. And see Brown v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 12. In Louisiana the fact that an indictment complying with the provision of Const. art. 86, that "all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana, and conclude 'against the peace and dignity of the same,'" is preceded by "State of Louisiana, Parish of Natchitoches, December Term, A. An indictment reciting that the grand jurors were "impaneled, sworn, and charged" need not state when and where they were so impaneled, etc. Vaughn v. State, 4 Mo. 530. And the omission of the words "then and there," before the words "duly summoned, impaneled, tried, sworn, and charged, inquiring in and for the county," in an indictment, is held immaterial. Fizell v. State, 25 Wis. 364. The recital in an indictment that the grand jury was "duly elected, tried, impaneled, and sworn," warrants the presumption that the oath taken was the oath prescribed by the code. Thomason v. State, 2 Tex. App. 550.

Special grand jury.— Since the caption, although no part of an indictment, is a part of the record on appeal, and may be looked to in ascertaining whether the inferior court had jurisdiction, it is immaterial that an indictment, drawn at a special grand jury term, fails to show on its face that it was drawn by a special grand jury, when that fact appears in the caption. been held, however, that a defect in this respect in the commencement may be cured by amendment.[74]

6. Separate Counts. Although when there are several counts in an indictment each count is in effect a separate indictment,[75] it is not necessary to repeat the commencement verbatim in each count, but it is sufficient for the other counts, instead of repetition, to commence thus: "The jurors aforesaid, upon their oath (or oath and affirmation) further present that," etc.[76] That the indictment is presented upon oath, or oath and affirmation, must appear in each count, either by direct recital or by reference to a preceding count.[77]

D. Charge or Body of Indictment. After the commencement comes the charge or statement, or, as it is sometimes called, the body of the indictment, in which it is alleged that the accused, naming him, committed the offense, describing it, with proper averments as to time and place. This part of the indictment is treated at length in subsequent sections.[78] The body of an indictment need not set forth or allege matters which are not necessary to the charge but belong to the caption or record, as the names of the grand jurors,[79] their selection, summoning, or organization, etc.,[80] where the session of the court or grand jury was held,[81] that the indictment was properly found and returned into court,[82] and the like.[83]

Sufficient showing of oath.— It has been held that an indictment which declares that the jurors, being "duly summoned, and then and there impaneled, sworn, etc. . . . do present," etc., without adding the words "upon their oaths," sufficiently avers that the presentation is upon oath. Byam v. State, 17 Wis. 145. See also Potsdamer v. State, 17 Fla. 895; State v. Smith, 26 La. Ann. 62; Huffman v. Com., 6 Rand (Va.) 685.

The words "on their oath" are equivalent to the words "on their several oaths," and are sufficient. Com. v. Johnson, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 284.

Affirmation.— In some cases it is held that where an indictment purports to be on the affirmation of some of the grand jurors, it must appear that they were persons entitled by law to take affirmations in lieu of oaths, or the indictment will be fatally defective. State v. Harris, 7 N. J. L. 361. See also State v. Fox, 9 N. J. L. 244. And if what properly belongs to the caption or record only is inserted in the body of an indictment, it may be rejected as surplusage.[84]

E. Conclusion of Indictment — 1. Against the Peace of the State — a. At Common Law. At common law and in the absence of a statute to the contrary, every indictment, whether at common law or under a statute, except for mere non-feasance,[85] must, after charging the offense, allege by a formal conclusion that it was "against the peace of the state," or "of the commonwealth," or "of the people of the state," or "of the United States," etc., according to the practice in the particular jurisdiction. This is absolutely essential at common law.[86] In England the conclusion was "against the peace of the king."[87] It is usual to use the words "against the peace and dignity of the state," etc., but the latter term is not essential.[88] The words "against the peace," omitting "of the state," etc., have been held insufficient.[89] When the state is named in the caption or commencement, it is sufficient to conclude "against the peace of the state," without again naming it.[90]

b. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.[91] In some jurisdictions a formal conclusion is expressly required and the form thereof prescribed by constitutional or statutory provision, and at least a substantial compliance with the requirement is essential.[92] In some of the cases a strict compliance seems to have been required, but the better opinion is that a variance from the constitutional or statutory form in immaterial particulars will not be fatal.[93] A conclusion of an indictment following the form prescribed by statute is sufficient if no constitutional provision is violated.[94] The words, "contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof," appearing at the conclusion of an indictment, although apparently, in their grammatical connection, referring to a preceding statement therein not relating to the commission of the act constituting the offense charged, will be held to apply to that act.[95]

Dec. 601); or against the peace and dignity of this state," instead of "the said state" (State v. Yancey, 1 Treadw. (S. C.) 237). On the other hand it has been held insufficient to conclude "ainst," instead of "against," the peace and dignity of the state (Bird v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 408, 35 S. W. 382), "against the peace and dignity of the statute," instead of "state" (State v. Lopez, 19 Mo. 254; Cox v. State, 8 Tex. App. 254, 34 Am. Rep. 746), "to the great damage of the said L. C. P. c. Against What Sovereignty. One who commits an offense indictable either at common law or by statute offends against the peace of that government which exercises jurisdiction for the time being over the place where the offense is committed, and the conclusion therefore must be against the peace of that government.[96]

2. Against the Form of the Statute — a. In General. Every indictment on a statute, in addition to the conclusion "against the peace of the state,"[97] must also conclude against the statute — contra formam statuti — by the words "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided," or other words to that effect, to show that it is based upon a statute,[98] or it will be fatally defective as an indictment on the statute,[99] unless, as is now the case in some jurisdictions,

Non-feasance.— An indictment against a municipal corporation for not keeping the streets in repair properly concludes as at common law, as its liability is not created by its charter, but exists upon general principles such a conclusion is rendered unnecessary or its omission declared immaterial by statute.[1] In the absence of a statute dispensing therewith such a conclusion is necessary where the offense is created solely by statute and does not exist at common law;[2] where the statute repeals the common law either expressly or impliedly by revising the whole subject;[3] where an act which was an offense at common law is by statute raised to a higher nature or grade of crime, as where a common-law misdemeanor is made a felony, or the offense is otherwise changed by statute;[4] or where an increased punishment is prescribed by statute for a common-law offense, accompanied by certain circumstances of aggravation.[5] The rule does not apply, however, where a statute merely changes or prescribes punishment for a common-law offense without enlarging or changing the offense; of the common law. State v. Murfreesboro, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 217. But when, by statute, the duty of building and keeping in repair a public bridge is imposed on any person or corporation, such person or corporation is liable to indictment at common law for the neglect of such duty, and the conclusion of the indictment, contra formam statuti, is good in such case, as the neglect is a violation of a statute, although the indictment is by common law. but in such case the indictment may be based either upon the common law,[6] or upon the statute.[7] Nor is a conclusion against the statute necessary where it merely takes away a benefit or privilege from a common-law offense,[8] or, it seems, where a common-law offense committed abroad is made punishable here,[9] or where a statute merely changes a rule of evidence as to a common-law offense.[10] And where a statute defining and punishing an offense is merely affirmative or declaratory of the common law, an indictment may be based either upon the statute or upon the common law.[11] An unnecessary conclusion against the statute may be rejected as surplusage.[12]

cient.[14] An indictment concluding "contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided" must be intended to mean the statute of the state, for the criminal statutes of no other government are cognizable, properly speaking, by the courts of a state.[15] a later statute.[21] According to some authorities, where an indictment is founded on a single statute, a conclusion in the plural is fatal;[22] but the weight of authority is to the contrary.[23]

3. Other Special Conclusions. It is not necessary, although it was formerly customary, for an indictment to conclude "to the great damage of" the person injured by the crime, or "to the evil example of all others," or "to the great displeasure of Almighty God."[24] Nor need an indictment for libeling a judge conclude "to the great scandal and disgrace of the administration of justice," etc.[25] As is elsewhere shown, special conclusions are in some jurisdictions necessary in indictments for murder,[26] for perjury,[27] for nuisances,[28] and perhaps for some other offenses.[29] The conclusion of an indictment need not restate the time or place of the commission of the offense.[30]

4. Separate Counts. By the weight of authority, where an indictment contains several counts, each count, being a separate charge, must have a proper conclusion, and the conclusion of one count cannot supply the omission of a conclusion in another.[31] In some states, however, the rule is otherwise.[32] Where the statutes permit a count for a statutory offense, as receiving, etc., to be joined with one for an offense at common law, as larceny, it is not fatal to the indictment that each does not conclude "against the form of the statute," etc.[33]

5. Rejection of Surplusage. When an indictment improperly or unnecessarily concludes against the form of the statute and may be sustained at common law, such conclusion may be rejected and disregarded as mere surplusage, and judgment be given as at common law.[34] So also in the case of a necessary conclusion, words which are mere surplusage may be disregarded and will not render bad an indictment having a proper conclusion without them.[35]

within a statute providing that no indictment shall be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of defendant, and other statutes to the same effect.[38] On the other hand, as has been seen, the constitution of some states expressly requires a formal conclusion, so that a statute cannot cure its omission.[39]

7. Amendment. It has been held that the conclusion of an indictment against the peace of the state, or against the form of the statute, being matter of form, is within the rule of law or statutes allowing amendments,[40] so that omissions thereof or defects therein may be cured by amendment.[41]

F. Signatures — 1. By Foreman or Members of Grand Jury. By the weight of authority, in the absence of a statute, it is not necessary that an indictment or presentment shall be signed either by all the grand jurors or by the foreman.[42] In some jurisdictions, however, the signature of the foreman is expressly required by statute and is essential to the validity of an indictment.[43] In other jurisdictions, although required by statute, its omission is not fatal.[44] When the foreman's signature is necessary, it is immaterial, in the absence of special provision to the contrary, on what part of the bill it appears.[45] The foreman's signature is sufficient, although he uses initials only for his christian name,[46] and although his signature is not followed by the word "foreman," if it can be ascertained from the records that he was foreman.[47] An indictment may be signed by a foreman appointed by the court pro tempore in the absence of the first foreman.[48]

public prosecutor is usually attached to an indictment, it forms no part of it, and in the absence of a statute is in no manner essential to its validity;[49] and if it be signed by any one without authority, the signature is mere surplusage and cannot vitiate it.[50] Nor is the signature of the public prosecutor necessary to a special presentment, unless required by statute.[51] Statutes, however, sometimes expressly require that bills of indictment shall be signed by the public prosecutor, and the omission of his signature is ground for demurrer on motion to quash.[52] Under other statutes, although his signature is required, its omission does not affect the validity of an indictment.[53] Omission of the public prosecutor's signature is not fatal under a statute providing that no indictment shall be deemed invalid for any defect or imperfection which does not tend to prejudice the substantial rights of defendant upon the merits.[54]

b. Sufficiency of Signature — (i) IN GENERAL. The public prosecutor need not himself attach his signature to an indictment, but it is sufficient if it be done by another under his express directions or by his express authority.[55] And it has been held sufficient if the signature appears in print on the indictment,[56] or in typewriting.[57] Signing the surname in full and the christian name by its initials is sufficient.[58] The word "Attest," written before the prosecuting attorney's signature to an indictment is surplusage, and without effect.[59] The want of the public prosecutor's official signature to an indictment is not cured by his signature to an indorsement thereon.[60]

(ii) ADDITION OF OFFICIAL TITLE. When the public prosecutor is required to sign an indictment, he must sign it officially;[61] but signatures have repeatedly been held sufficient notwithstanding the omission or erroneous designation of the Necessity — (i) In the Absence of a Statute. At common law after the grand jury considered the evidence in support of a bill of indictment submitted to them, they either threw out or ignored the bill or found it a true bill, in the latter case indorsing it with the words "A true bill," and if they ignored it, with the words "Not a true bill" or "Not found." Formerly the Latin words "billa vera" and "ignoramus" were used. At common law such indorsement was essential to the validity of an indictment.[70] In the United States some of the courts have followed the common-law rule and held that this indorsement is necessary, even in the absence of a statute,[71] and that the signature of the foreman without the indorsement "A true bill" is insufficient.[72] In other jurisdictions it has been held, in the absence of a statute, that such an indorsement, although advisable in practice, is not essential, as the finding of the indictment is sufficiently shown by its return into court and the record thereof,[73] or that the signature of the foreman without the indorsement "A true bill" is sufficient.[74] In some jurisdictions it has been held that the signature of the foreman of the grand jury is necessary, even in the absence of a statute;[75] but the weight of authority is to the contrary.[76]

(II) UNDER STATUTORY PROVISIONS. In some states the indorsement "A true bill," or both such indorsement and the signature of the foreman of the grand jury, are expressly required by statute, and omission thereof will render an indictment fatally defective on demurrer or motion to quash, or in some states even on motion in arrest of judgment or writ of error.[77] Under a statute requiring both the indorsement "A true bill" and the signature of the foreman, the latter without the former,[78] or the former without the latter,[79] is insufficient. Where the statute merely requires the indorsement "A true bill," such indorsement is essential, but the signature of the foreman thereto is not.[80] In some of the cases a statute requiring the indorsement "A true bill" or the signature of the foreman, or both, have been held to be merely directory, so that its omission is not fatal.[81]

b. Sufficiency. Where by the common law or by statute the indorsement "A true bill" and the signature of the foreman are required, it is clearly sufficient if an indictment is indorsed "A true bill" and this indorsement is immediately followed by the signature of the foreman;[82] but a variance from these words will not be fatal, if they are followed in substance,[83] and it is immaterial, in the absence of express provision in the statute, on what part of the indictment the indorse-

But where an indictment contained the indorsement: "Those marked 'X' sworn by the undersigned foreman and examined before the grand jury, and this bill found, W., Foreman Grand Jury," it was held that judgment should be arrested, as such indorsement failed to show that the grand jury returned the indictment as "A true bill," according to the immemorial practice in the state. are not insufficient because the word "Foreman" after the signature is not followed by the words "of the grand jury,"[94] or because it is misspelled,[95] or even because it is omitted altogether, for the records may be examined to ascertain who was foreman.[96] Anything else added, by way of description of the offense, to the indorsement of "A true bill," on an indictment signed by the foreman of the grand jury, is to be regarded as surplusage, and its falsity will not vitiate the indictment.[97]

c. Time of Objection. When it is required, either by statute or by recognition of the common-law rule, that an indictment shall be indorsed "A true bill" and signed by the foreman of the grand jury, the omission of the indorsement must in some jurisdictions be objected to before trial by motion to quash or demurrer; the objection is waived by pleading to the indictment and cannot be afterward raised by motion in arrest of judgment, or on writ of error or appeal.[98] In other cases the defect has been held fatal even on motion in arrest or writ of error or appeal.[99]

d. Amendment. It has been held that defects in the indorsement "A true bill" are defects in mere matter of form and amendable.[1] It has also been held that the signature of the foreman may be supplied by amendment;[2] but there is at least one decision to the contrary.[3]

e. Effect. The indorsement "A true bill" with the signature of the foreman is evidence that the indictment was found by a legal grand jury,[4] and that the requisite number concurred in the finding.[5] The indorsement "A true bill" on an indictment charging in different counts two persons with a crime applies to both defendants.[6]

2. Statement of Offense. In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, it is not necessary that the name or nature of the offense charged be indorsed on the indictment, and if it is so indorsed and there is a mistake therein or variance from the offense charged, the indorsement is no part of the indictment and may be rejected as surplusage.[7]

4. Presentment. An indorsement by the grand jury on an indictment as founded upon "presentment" is not erroneous because not founded on their own knowledge, but on testimony heard by them.[9]

It is not necessary at common law that the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury shall be indorsed or otherwise appear on the indictment,[10] but this is sometimes required by statute.[11] As a general rule it is held that these statutes are merely directory, and that a failure to comply with them will not render an indictment invalid;[12] but in some states the statute is held mandatory,[13] or else it expressly provides that if not complied with Sufficiency of naming.— That a witness who was examined before the grand jury was designated in the indorsement of the indictment as "Dr." F, instead of giving his first name, is not sufficient ground for quashing the indictment, where it appears that both defendant and his counsel knew who was intended to be designated, and that defendant was not misled thereby nor prejudiced. State v. Phelps, 5 S. D. 480, 59 N. W. 471.

Signature of clerk.— An indictment will not be quashed because the indorsement on the indictment shall be set aside.[14] The objection, it has been held, must be raised by motion to quash and not by demurrer,[15] and must be made before pleading and going to trial or it will be too late.[16] It has been held that it is not necessary to indorse the name of a person who is called by the grand jury, but who refuses to testify,[17] or whose testimony is immaterial,[18] or whose testimony does not contribute to the finding although it is material,[19] or the name of the accused although he testified before the grand jury;[20] and mere surplusage may be disregarded.[21] The names of the witnesses need not be written by the foreman or by any member of the grand jury.[22] It is no objection to an indictment that the prosecutor indorsed additional names of witnesses on the indictment after it was returned into court.[23] An indictment presented without the name of witnesses indorsed may properly, by order of court, be returned to the grand jury to supply the omission, and entered on the following day.[24]

IV. FILING AND FORMAL REQUISITES OF INFORMATION OR COMPLAINT.

A. Informations — 1. IN GENERAL. An information, as has been seen, is a written accusation of crime preferred by the public prosecuting officer, and will lie at common law for any misdemeanor, and by statute in some states even for felonies.[25]

2. FILING OF INFORMATIONS — a. In England. At common law in England there were two kinds of information for crime, one of which was filed by the attorney or solicitor general, and the other by the masters of the crown office upon the complaint or relation of a private subject. The former were generally for offenses more immediately against the king or the public safety, but could be filed also for offenses more particularly against individuals, and the latter were, aside from indictment, the usual mode of proceeding for misdemeanors against individuals.[26] Formerly both of these informations could be filed without leave of court and without further oath or affidavit than the oath of office of the officer preferring it;[27] but by an English statute old enough to be a part of our common law if applicable to our conditions, it was provided that informations by masters of the crown office could only be filed by leave of court, and that they must be supported by the affidavit of the person at whose suit they were preferred.[28] Informations by the attorney or solicitor general could still be filed without leave of court and without affidavit or verification.[29]

b. In the United States — (I) IN GENERAL. In the United States the right of the prosecuting attorney to file informations has been recognized as at common law,[30] but the practice is now very generally regulated by statute. A constitutional provision requiring prosecution by "information" means the information of the common law preferred in England by the attorney or solicitor general without leave of court, and upon his own allegation and without his oath, which right in the United States is vested in the prosecuting attorneys by virtue of their office;[31] and the legislature cannot authorize any other information.[32]

(II) AUTHORITY TO FILE. An information may and must be preferred by the county attorney, district attorney, or other public prosecuting officer who has with us succeeded to the powers and duties of the attorney or solicitor general in England,[33] and it must show on its face that it was so preferred;[34] but an information may in a proper case be filed by a deputy or assistant prosecuting attorney,[35]

Gallagher v. People, 129 Ill. 179, 11 N. E. 335.

Discretion of court.— Even where a statute authorized prosecution by information "with the consent of the court first obtained," it was held in Louisiana that the court had no right to refuse leave to the district attorney to file an information "except in extreme cases, not likely to occur" (State v. Cole, 38 La. Ann. 843), and therefore that the court could not withhold its consent on the ground that the statute under which the prosecution was instituted was unconstitutional (State v. Judge Tenth Judicial Dist., 33 La. Ann. 1222). Elsewhere it has been held that leave to file an information without a previous examination of the accused before a committing magistrate should not be granted as of course, but rests in the sound discretion of the court on a proper showing. State v. Martin, 29 Mont. 273, 74 Pac. 725.

that it was filed with leave of court, but it is sufficient if this appears on the record.[45] And an order granting leave need not be in writing or entered at the time it is made.[46]

(iv) Jurisdiction of Court. An information, to have any validity, must of course be preferred in a court having jurisdiction of the offense and of prosecutions by this mode,[47] and in some states by statute this must affirmatively appear on the face of the information.[48]

(v) Arrest and Custody of Accused. In the absence of a statute it is not necessary to authorize the filing of an information that the accused shall be in custody or on bail;[49] but this is sometimes required by statute in certain cases or in particular courts, and it is then necessary;[50] and the offense charged in the information must be substantially the same as that for which the accused is in custody or on bail.[51] In such case the fact that the arrest of the accused was illegal does not affect the right to file an information.[52] The fact that defendant was arrested on a complaint before the information was filed is no ground for quashing the information.[53] Indeed this is sometimes required by statute.[54]

(vi) When Grand Jury Is in Session. In the absence of a statute the authority of the prosecuting attorney to file an information is not affected by the fact that the grand jury is in session so that a bill of indictment might be preferred;[55] but it is otherwise in some states by statute in certain cases.[56]

tion to an information that it was filed pending an indictment for the same offense.[57] In some jurisdictions, however, it is otherwise by statute.[58] An information may be filed at common law, or in some states by express statutory authority, after an indictment has been quashed,[59] or after a nolle prosequi has been entered,[60] or where a conviction has been reversed on appeal because of a defect in an indictment.[61]

(VIII) AFTER FAILURE OF GRAND JURY TO FIND INDICTMENT. An information may be filed, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, although the grand jury have investigated the case and refused or failed to find an indictment;[62] but under some statutes the rule is otherwise.[63]

(IX) CONSENT OF ACCUSED AND ELECTION. Statutes sometimes require the consent of the accused to authorize prosecution by information for particular offenses or in particular courts;[64] and in such case the offense charged in the information must be substantially the same as that on which the accused has submitted to the jurisdiction.[65] But consent of or election by the accused is not necessary when not required by statute.[66]

(X) PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS—(A) Preliminary Examination and Commitment or Binding Over.[67] In the absence of a statute a preliminary examination and a commitment or binding over by a magistrate is not necessary before the filing of an information.[68] In some states, however, a preliminary examination

Effect of information pending trial on indictment.— On the trial of one indicted for a crime, where the prosecuting attorney, believing that there has been a variance, interrupts the trial, and draws an information, on which defendant is arraigned, but refuses to plead, and the original action is proceeded with, a plea in the original action of another action pending, based on the preparation of the information and defendant's arraignment thereon, is properly overruled, since he has not been placed in jeopardy under the information. It has been held that a statute authorizing an information for felony to be filed "when an indictment has been found by the grand jury, and has been quashed" (Ind. A judgment of conviction will not be reversed because of an order denying a motion to set aside the information on the ground that it was filed before the record of the preliminary examination or order of commitment had been filed, where the order of commitment had been in fact made and entered of record by the magistrate. People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 Pac. 896. Under Howell Annot. St. (Mich.) §§ 9470, 9471, which require a justice, before whom a person charged with crime is brought for examination, to hold him to answer when he is of the opinion that an offense has been committed and that there is probable cause to believe the accused guilty thereof, the decision of justice on these points is a judicial determination, necessary to the jurisdiction of the circuit court; and an information filed in the circuit court, before any return has been made showing such a decision by a justice, should be quashed, even though a proper return is made pending the motion to quash. accused;[75] but if the offense is substantially the same it is sufficient.[76] It has been held that, since an information cannot go beyond the charge made in the complaint and to which the accused has been held to answer, where a complaint this statute the information filed by the district attorney against one who has been thus committed or held to bail need not be for the offense charged in the complaint before the magistrate, but may be for any offense shown to have been committed by the accused by the testimony taken on the examination; and the district attorney is not bound by the opinion, or even the adjudication, of the magistrate as to what crime has been committed, but may exhibit an information as for felony if, in his opinion, the testimony so taken proves the accused guilty thereof, although the magistrate may have found him guilty of a misdemeanor only. State v. Leicham, 41 Wis. 565. Second preliminary examination.— A plea in abatement grounded on the fact that defendant had two preliminary examinations, and that on the first he was held for a lower grade of crime than upon the one which is the basis of the information filed against him, is demurrable, as the fact that he was held on such lower grade of crime did not entitle him to immunity from prosecution for the higher. Where a complaint before a magistrate charged defendant with fraudulently procuring money by mortgaging property to which he had no claim or title, while the information filed in the district court charged him with fraudulently procuring money by mortgaging certain specific property of which he fraudulently claimed title, it was held that the charges were substantially the same, and a plea of want of preliminary examination would not avail. Cowan v. State, 22 Nebr. 519, 35 N. W. 405. Where a preliminary examination was had on a warrant charging an assault upon "—— Bert," and the information filed charged an assault on "Joseph Burt," it was held that a plea in abatement, because defendant had had no preliminary examination, was properly overruled. State v. Johnson, 70 Kan. 861, 79 Pac. 732. And where defendant was committed by a magistrate for stealing sheep owned jointly by ten individuals, while the information filed in the district court alleged a several ownership in six of the same ten men, it was held that the variance was not fatal, it appearing from the statements in the commitment and those in the information that both were intended to describe the same offense. State v. McKee, 17 Utah 370, 53 Pac. 733.

If the identity of the offense is preserved, the statement of it in the information may be varied from that of the complaint. Mills v. State, 53 Nebr. 263, 73 N. W. 761.

That an offense was committed jointly need not appear from the return of the examining fails to charge any offense, no valid information can be based upon it.[77] But it has been generally held that the validity of an information filed after a preliminary examination and commitment is not affected by defects in the complaint filed in the magistrate's court or the warrant issued thereon.[78]

(B) Complaint, Affidavit, or Warrant.[79] At common law an information can be filed by the attorney-general or by the prosecuting officer having his powers without any affidavit or complaint.[80] Under statutes, however, an affidavit or sworn complaint is sometimes required as a condition precedent to the right to file an information, and a valid and sufficient affidavit or complaint is essential to its validity.[81] And it has also been held that an affidavit or sworn complaint is necessary under a constitutional provision against the seizure of any person with-magistrate to give the right to file an information as for a joint offense. Stuart v. People, 42 Mich. 255, 3 N. W. 863.

Included offenses.— A charge of manslaughter is included in a charge of murder, and therefore a count for manslaughter in committing an abortion may be added in an information for murder, where defendant has had an examination for murder before a justice of the peace. People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 26 N. W. 291.

Several counts.— Where a person charged with a crime is bound over to the superior court by a lower court upon a complaint filed in such lower court, the attorney for the state may file a new information charging the offense in several counts, and with various descriptions adapted to the proof as he finds it. State v. Pritchard, 35 Conn. 319. A motion to quash an entire information for want of a preliminary examination as to a part only of the counts cannot be granted. Date of offense.— Informations have been held invalid because of a material variance from the affidavit or complaint as to the date of the offense. Dyer v. State, 83 Ind. 525 (December and January); Taylor v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 1015 (November 1 and 7); Little v. State, (Tex. App. 1892) 19 S. Where an information purporting to be founded on a complaint describes an offense committed after the day of the filing of the complaint it is invalid. State v. Fuser, 75 Mo. App. 263. Variance between an information and the complaint on which it is founded as to the date of the offense is not only fatal to the information, but cannot be amended. Little v. State, (Tex. W. 133 (where the complaint alleged the surname of the accused to be McDevro, and the information alleged it as McDero). But an information against "Daniel Harrison," upon an affidavit designating him as "Daniel Harrison, alias Bud Harrison," was held not to be a fatal variance. Harrison v. State, 6 Tex. App. 256. And an information against "Louis Girous" is supported by an affidavit against "Lewis Geroux." Girous v. State, 29 Ind. 93.

Grades of offense.— An affidavit charging an offense may be used as the basis of an information charging a lower grade of the same offense. State v. Washington, 78 Mo. App. 659.

Date of offense.— Where an affidavit alleged that defendant lived in open fornication from October 20, 1858, to Sept. 25, 1859, and the information based thereon alleged the time to be from Sept. 20, 1858, to Oct. 25, 1859, it was held that, whatever the effect might have been on motion to quash, the information was good on motion in arrest. State v. Record, 16 Ind. 111. And there is no variance where a complaint alleges an offense to have been committed on a certain date, and the information alleges it to have been committed on or about the same date (Whitley v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 69), and vice versa (Drye v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 65). Compare the cases of fatal variance cited supra, note 83.

Venue.— Where an affidavit charged that the offense described was committed in the county of Lucas, Ohio, but afterward the prosecuting attorney of the police court of Toledo filed an information in which he charged that the offense was committed in the city of Toledo, it was held that the police court had jurisdiction. Krowenstrot v. State, 15 Ohio Cir. Ct. 73, 8 Ohio Cir. Dec. 119.

Amended affidavit and information.— There is no variance between the charge in an affidavit before a justice of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen and an amended affidavit and information in the circuit court charging, in the first count, that defendant received stolen goods, and, in the second, the larceny of the goods. Kennegar v. State, 120 Ind. 176, 21 N. E. 917.

86. State v. Burnett, 119 Ind. 392, 21 N. E. 972 (false pretenses); Engle v. State, 97 Ind. 122 (sale of liquor to habitual drunkard); Brunson v. State, 97 Ind. 95 (affidavit for frecing one under legal arrest, not charging force or knowledge); Strader v. State, 92 Ind. 376 (referred to infra, this note); State v. Beebe, 83 Ind. 171; State v. Cuppy, 50 Ind. 291 (affidavit failing to negative exceptions in statute); Luther v. State, 27 Ind. 47; State v. Gartrell, 14 Ind. 280; State v. Downs, 7 Ind. 237 (sale of intoxicating liquors); State v. White, 55 Mo. App. 356; State v. Cornell, 45 Mo. App. 94 (failure of affidavit for exhibiting a weapon to allege, as in the information, that it was exhibited in any one's presence); Robinson v. State, 25 Tex. App. 111, 7 S. W. 531 (complaint for aggravated assault on a female failing to allege, as in the information, that defendant was an adult male). An affidavit, to authorize an information, must conform substantially to the language of the statute alleged to be violated. It must plainly distinguish the offense. U. S. v. Strickland, 25 Fed. 469.

An agreement between the prosecuting attorney and counsel for the accused as to what objection is made to an affidavit cannot be regarded on motion to quash for insufficiency. State v. Burnett, 119 Ind. 392, 21 N. E. 972.

Certainty.— In Indiana it has been held that the affidavit required as the basis of an information must charge the offense with the same certainty as an indictment. Strader v. State, 92 Ind. 376 (holding therefore that an affidavit for an information for rape, charging that defendant at, etc., "upon one A., a female child, . . . did then and there unlawfully, feloniously and forcibly make a violent assault upon her, the said A., then and there, unlawfully and feloniously did ravish and carnally know," was fatally defective in having no connectives between the clauses); State v. Beebe, 83 Ind. 171; and other Indiana cases cited supra, this note. Elsewhere it is held that while the affidavit need not be as formal and definite as the information, it must state the elements of the offense. State v. Cornell, 45 Mo. App. 94. And in Georgia the affidavit on which an accusation is based need not minutely describe the offense, but may charge it generally, and the accusation based thereon may charge a specific criminal act included form;[87] but it is not insufficient as the basis of an information merely because it is ungrammatical.[88] Under some statutes it has been held that the affidavit as well as the information[89] must state the jurisdictional facts or existence of the conditions authorizing prosecution by information and affidavit.[90] The affidavit or complaint must be made by a competent person,[91] and must be properly verified.[92] within the offense named. Murphy v. State, 119 Ga. 300, 46 S. E. 450; Brown v. State, 109 Ga. 570, 34 S. E. 1031; Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583.

Several counts.— An affidavit on which an accusation is founded may charge two misdemeanors of the same class as committed by the same person, and the accusation founded thereon may consist of two counts, each charging one of the offenses set forth in the affidavit; and the prosecutor will not be compelled to elect between these counts at the trial, where it appears from the evidence that both of them relate to the same transaction. Hathcock v. State, 88 Ga. 91, 13 S. E. 959.

87. Venue.— The affidavit or complaint, as well as the information, must correctly lay the venue, and if it fails to do so the defect is not cured by a correct statement of the venue in the information. State v. Beebe, 83 Ind. 171 (it must in some manner name with certainty the county and state in which the offense was committed); Rice v. State, 15 Ind. App. 427, 44 N. E. 319; Smith v. State, 3 Tex. App. 549. But an affidavit sufficiently lays the venue where the county and state appear in the caption, and in the body of the affidavit it is charged that the offense was committed "at said county" or "in the county aforesaid." Hawkins v. State, 136 Ind. 630, 36 N. E. 419. The venue need not be repeated to every material allegation in the affidavit. Thayer v. State, 11 Ind. 287.

Joinder of counts.— Under the Indiana statute providing that a felony or misdemeanor may be charged in separate counts in the indictment or information to have been committed by different means, the affidavit on which the information is based in a prosecution for producing an abortion causing the woman's death, commenced by affidavit and information, may contain counts alleging that the abortion was committed by different methods. Diehl v. State, 157 Ind. 549, 62 N. E. 51.

Title and commencement.— The affidavit or complaint need not, as required in an indictment or information, contain the title of the cause and name of the court. Hawkins v. State, 136 Ind. 630, 36 N. E. 419. See also White v. State, 28 Nebr. 341, 44 N. W. 443. Nor need it begin, as required by the constitution or statute for an indictment or information, "In the name and by the authority of the state," etc. Johnson v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 464, 20 S. W. 980.

"Credible person."— The statutory provision that an information must be founded on the affidavit of some "credible person" means at least that the affiant must be a competent witness; hence a husband cannot make the affidavit on which to found a prosecution of his wife for adultery. Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 70.

Actual knowledge of facts see infra, this section, text and note 94.

The county attorney cannot, on "information and belief," make the necessary affidavit to support an information for assault on another person; although it seems that where the attorney was the only witness he may himself make the affidavit. Daniels v. State, 2 Tex. App. 353.

Insufficiency of evidence.— An information filed in a court of record, signed by the prosecuting attorney, and supported by the affidavit of a competent witness, as required by statute, cannot be impeached by showing that it is based on insufficient evidence. State v. Pitts, 70 Mo. App. 446.

Statement of competency.— Although in a prosecution by information the statute may require the affidavit to be in positive terms and not upon information or belief, and that the affidavit shall be made by some person competent to testify as a witness in the case, he need not state his competency in the affidavit. State v. Downing, 22 Mo. App. 504.

92. Swiney v. State, 119 Ind. 478, 21 N. E. 1102 (holding an affidavit not sworn to bad on motion to quash); Cantwell v. State, 27 Ind. 505; State v. Lewis, 70 Mo. App. 40; Johnson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1905) 85 S. W. 274, 1198; Dishongh v. State, 4 Tex. App. 158.

Objection.— An information which is verified in different parts by different persons cannot be attacked for insufficiency of verification, without specifically assigning the cause of insufficiency. Hawkins v. State, 126 Ind. 294, 26 N. E. 43.

Authority to administer oath.— The officer or person before whom the affidavit was verified must have had authority to administer the oath. Thomas v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 142, 38 S. W. 1011, holding that a complaint sworn to before the county attorney of one county

In some states it may be verified upon information and belief,[93] but in others the verification must be positive and by one who has actual knowledge of the facts.[94] The name of the affiant need not be set out in the body or commencement of the affidavit or complaint;[95] and if it is so set out it may be rejected as surplusage, so that the validity of the affidavit or complaint will not be affected by a variance between the name set out and that signed.[96] The affidavit or complaint must be filed, as required by the statute, and either before or at the time of filing the information.[97] Where a preliminary affidavit is required verification of the information cannot be used as the basis of an information in another county. See also Johnson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1905) 85 S. W. 274, 1198, holding that a city attorney is not authorized to take an affidavit to a complaint for use before any other court than the corporation court.

The jurat must be authenticated by the official signature of the officer before whom the affidavit or complaint was verified. Neiman v. State, 29 Tex. App. 360, 16 S. W. 253 (holding that a jurat signed "Win Greer, J. P." was insufficient); Robertson v. State, 25 Tex. App. 529, 8 S. W. 659 (illegible pen and ink scrawl following signature not sufficient to designate official signature); Micau v. State, (Tex. App. 1892) 19 S. W. 762; Dishongh v. State, 4 Tex. App. 158; Morris v. State, 2 Tex. App. 502. However, in Brooster v. State, 15 Ind. 190, objection that the signature to the jurat was not followed by the designation of the signer's office was not sustained, where it otherwise appeared that he was an officer authorized to administer oaths. See also Hawkins v. State, 136 Ind. 630, 36 N. E. 419 (holding the letters "J. P." suffieient to designate the signer's office as justice of the peace); Mountjoy v. State, 78 Ind. 172; Hipes v. State, 73 Ind. 39 (both holding that where the word "clerk" follows the signature to the jurat it is sufficient, as courts take judicial notice of the names and signatures of their officers, and that it would be presumed that the signer was the clerk of the court); Buell v. State, 72 Ind. 523 (to substantially the same effect).

See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Indictment and Information," § 165.

Seal.— The seal of the court or clerk need not be attached to the jurat of an affidavit sworn to before the clerk (Qualter v. State, 120 Ind. 92, 22 N. E. 100; Mountjoy v. State, 78 Ind. 172) or before the judge (Rosenstein v. State, 9 Ind. App. 290, 36 N. E. 652, police judge); but under a statute providing that "no notary shall be authorized to act until he shall have procured a seal," and that "all notarial acts not attested by such seal shall be void," an information based on an affidavit to which the seal of the notary before whom it was verified is not attached, should be quashed, and the error in overruling the motion to quash is not cured by permitting the notary thereafter to attach the seal. Miller v. State, 122 Ind. 355, 24 N. E. 156.

A clerical error in the jurat as to the day or month on or in which the affidavit or complaint was made will not vitiate the same or the information based thereon. Noble v. People, 23 Colo. 9, 45 Pac. 376; Allen v. State, (Tex. App. 1890) 13 S. W. 998.

The jurat may be amended at the proper time by the officer who administered the oath, but not after verdict. Neiman v. State, 29 Tex. App. 360, 16 S. W. 253.

"Reason to believe" instead of belief.— A complaint on which an information is based is insufficient, where it states merely that complainant has good reason to believe the facts alleged, instead of that he believes. Tompkins v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 800.

94. Holt v. People, 23 Colo. 1, 45 Pac. 374 (holding, however, that under a statute providing that, if a preliminary examination has not been held, the district attorney may, by leave of court, and upon affidavit of any person who has knowledge of the commission of an offense and who is a competent witness to testify in the case, file an information setting forth the offense, it is not necessary that the person making the affidavit of probable cause should have been an eyewitness of the offense, or should have actual knowledge thereof based on personal observation); State v. Luman, 2 Mo. App. Rep. 1337; State v. Davidson, 46 Mo. App. 9; State v. Harris, 30 Mo. App. 82; State v. Downing, 22 Mo. App. 504; Johnston v. U. S., 87 Fed. 187, 30 C. C. A. 612; U. Showing want of personal knowledge.— It has been held, however, under the Colorado statute above referred to, that an information charging a crime cannot be attacked on the ground that it appears on trial that the person who made the affidavit supporting it did not have personal knowledge of the commission of the offense. itself only will not suffice;[98] but under the express provisions of some statutes an affidavit is not necessary where the information itself is verified by the prosecuting attorney or some competent witness.[99] If the accused is in custody it is immaterial that no warrant issued on the affidavit used as foundation for the accusation.[1]

(c) Presentment of Grand Jury. In Virginia where informations may be based upon a presentment of a grand jury, a presentment, to be a proper foundation for an information, must contain every matter necessary to render the act imputed to defendant unlawful, and the supposed offense must be described with at least reasonable certainty.[2]

(d) Coroner's Inquisition. Where a preliminary examination and commitment are required by statute, and under the laws of the state coroners are not committing magistrates, the inquisition of a coroner's jury is not a sufficient basis for an information.[3]

(xi) Filing and Record. While an information must be filed,[4] it need not be filed in open court, but may be filed in the clerk's office.[5] In the absence of a mandatory statute the validity of the filing of an information or of proceedings thereon is not affected by failure to enter the filing on the order book or on the

L. R. A. 381, and other cases cited infra, this note. But it has been held that refusal of the court to quash an information on the ground that there was nothing in the case to show that any complaint was filed at the filing of the information will be sustained, where the complaint was filed on the day of trial by order of the court, and, for aught that appears, it was among the papers of the case, and was perhaps attached to the information. Castleman v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 43 S. W. 994.

Filing with information.— It is generally held that it is sufficient if the affidavit or complaint be filed at the same time as the information. Noble v. People, 23 Colo. 9, 45 Pac. 376 (presumed that affidavit filed on the same day as the information was filed with it); Walker v. People, 22 Colo. 415, 45 Pac. 388 (affidavit attached to the information is sufficient); State v. Lauderman, 89 Ind. 600; State v. De Long, 88 Ind. 312; Castleman v. State, (Tex. If an information and its supporting affidavit be attached to each other, or if both be written on the same sheet of paper, and the clerk's file-mark be put upon the outside fold, it is a substantial compliance with the statutory requirement that the affidavit "shall be filed with the information." Schott v. State, 7 Tex. App. 616.

Error in date of jurat.— Where it appears that the affidavit was filed on the same day as the information, it will be presumed that it was filed with it, although the jurat is dated the day following. Noble v. People, 23 Colo. 9, 45 Pac. 376. See also as to clerical errors in the date of the jurat supra, note 92.

Amended information and affidavit.—Where an amended information and amended affidavit were filed at the same time before a justice, the amended information will be presumed to have succeeded the amended affidavit on which its context shows it was based. State v. Adams, 80 Mo. App. 293.

Filing.— Depositing the affidavit with the clerk of the proper court is a sufficient filing under a statute requiring affidavits in support of informations to be filed therewith. State v. Coleman, 186 Mo. 151, 84 S. W. 978, 69 L. R. A. 381.

Indorsement of filing.— The fact that an affidavit found among the papers in a case, and upon which the information presented by the county attorney is apparently based, does not bear the indorsement of filing by the clerk is not ground for quashing the information. State v. Elliott, 41 Tex. 224. Where the information alleges that it is based on an affidavit "herewith filed," the affidavit itself need not bear the clerk's file-mark. Goss v. State, (Tex. Cr. Ann. 1207, 22 So. 327 (holding that where an information was presented and received in open court, and the accused was arraigned thereunder, the minutes of court showing the same, it was in effect and in law a filing, even though the clerk neglected to make the formal indorsement of filing thereon, and prescription was interrupted); State v. Plummer, 55 Mo. App. 288.

8. That an information was not filed at the first term after defendant's arrest is not ground for quashing it. State v. Baird, 10 Kan. 58. The Michigan statutes do not forbid the filing of an information at the same term in which complaint is made, and there is nothing to prevent filing it as soon as convenient, unless, where respondent has given bail, there may be some question as to the time when his sureties must produce him. People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495, 12 N. W. 671. Although defendant has been examined for an offense before the police court, and has been bound over for his appearance for trial at the next term of the recorder's court, an information may be filed against him at the term of the recorder's court which had commenced when the complaint was made and examination had. People v. Mason, 63 Mich. 510, 30 N. W. 103.

9. In California the code provides that the district attorney shall file an information within thirty days after the examination and commitment of defendant (Pen. Code, § 809); and that if not filed within that time, the court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution dismissed (Pen. Code, § 1382). This provision is mandatory and the court has no discretion where no good cause for the delay is shown (People v. Morino, 85 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. 892), and the burden of showing good cause for delay is on the prosecution (People v. Wickham, 113 Cal. 283, 48 Pac. 123; People v. Morino, supra). It is not good cause that the committing magistrate failed to file the papers with the clerk of court within said time, since the information might have been filed before a return of such papers. People v. Wickham, supra. Compare People v. Ah Sing, 95 Cal. 657, 30 Pac. 797. The statute does not apply to the filing of a new information after the sustaining of a demurrer to the original one. People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, 76 Pac. 1028.

In Montana the statute provides that when defendant has been examined and committed or admitted to bail, as provided by law, or upon leave of court, the county attorney must, within thirty days after the delivery of the complaint, warrant, and testimony to the proper district court, or after such leave, file in such court an information, etc. Pen. Code, § 1730. Under this statute an information can be filed at any time within thirty days after the grant of leave therefor, independently of the time when the examination took place. State v. Smith, 12 Mont. 378, 30 Pac. 679. Under other provisions in this state the objection that an information was not filed at the proper time must be raised by motion to dismiss, which must be made before demurrer or plea, and the objection is waived, therefore, if it is not made until motion in arrest of judgment. State v. Smith, supra.

In Nebraska, under Cr. Code, § 389, where no information or indictment is filed against a defendant charged with the commission of a crime during the term at which he is held to answer, his detention is unlawful, and he is entitled to be discharged, and it makes no difference that such term adjourned on the day following that upon which the preliminary examination was held. Leisenberg v. State, 60 Nebr. 628, 84 N. W. 6. See also State v. Miller, 43 Nebr. 860, 62 N. W. 238; Ex p. Two Calf, 11 Nebr. 221, 9 N. W. 44. But if at a subsequent term of the court an information is filed and defendant pleads not guilty, the court has power to try the issue raised; and, after verdict of conviction has been rendered, it is not error to deny a motion in arrest of judgment. Leisenberg v. State, supra. And see Cerny v. State, 62 Nebr. 626, 87 N. W. 336.

In Florida, if an information is filed by the prosecuting attorney in vacation, the law does not authorize the clerk to issue a warrant thereon for the arrest of the accused or expressly sanction and provide for filing them in vacation;[11] but by statute in some states they are required to be filed during term-time or when the court is in session, and under such a statute they cannot be filed in vacation.[12]

(XIII) NECESSITY FOR FILING OF INFORMATION. Where by the constitution or by statute an information is required, the official information of the prosecuting attorney is necessary, and the prosecution cannot proceed upon the affidavit of a private individual required and made for the purpose of the information.[13]

3. LOSS OR DESTRUCTION.[14] The court has power to permit any part of the record or files to be supplied in case of loss or destruction, and, when an original information has been lost from the files or destroyed, the state's attorney may properly supply a copy, and defendant may be tried thereon,[15] or, under some statutes, another information may be filed in the place of the one lost or destroyed.[16] give the judge in vacation power to fix bail, or authorize the sheriff to detain the accused in custody. Sims v. State, 26 Fla. 97, 7 So. 374.

11. In Illinois, in counties where the offices of county judge and probate judge are vested in one person, a filing of an information with the county clerk during a probate term, or with the judge at such term, is a filing in vacation within the sanction of the statute. Burns v. People, 45 Ill. App. 70.

In Kansas, by express provision, informations may be filed during term-time or in vacation in any court having jurisdiction of the offense. See In re Eddy, 40 Kan. 592, 20 Pac. 283. Under the former statute informations could be filed during term-time or within twenty days preceding the term except in the case of informations against fugitives from justice, which could be filed with the clerk in vacation. State v. Babbitt, 32 Kan. 253, 4 Pac. 367.

In Louisiana the district attorney is authorized to file an information in the office of the clerk of the district court when the court is not in session in all cases where the penalty is not imprisonment at hard labor or death; and his duty in filing such informations is not limited to those held in custody of the sheriff. State v. Jackson, 45 La. Ann. 975, 13 So. 342.

In Missouri the statute provides that informations shall be filed by the "prosecuting attorney as informant during term time, or with the clerk in vacation, of the court having jurisdiction," etc. (Rev. St. (1899) § 2477), and that a warrant issued on filing an information in term-time shall be made returnable forthwith, or if issued in vacation, it shall be made returnable at the next term (section 2484). The words "in vacation," as used in both sections, have reference to vacation between one term of court and another. State v. Derkum, 27 Mo. App. 628.

12. In Indiana, where the statute authorizes a prosecution by affidavit and information where the accused is in jail or on bail and the court is "in session," and the grand jury is not or has been discharged, no jurisdiction is conferred over a prosecution by affidavit and information filed during vacation, and after-acquired jurisdiction cannot be made to relate back and cure the defect. Hoover v. State, 110 Ind. 349, 11 N. E. 434. This statute, however, does not mean that the court must be actually open for the transaction of business, or require an information, like an indictment, to be filed in open court, but the word "session" is equivalent to the word "term," and an information may therefore be filed with the clerk at any time during the term of court, whether the court is actually open for the transaction of business or not. Masterson v. State, 144 Ind. 240, 43 N. E. 138; Stefani v. State, 124 Ind. 3, 24 N. E. 254.

In Nebraska Laws (1885), c. 108, requires that all informations shall be filed during term, in the court having jurisdiction of the offense specified therein. The statute is mandatory, and an information upon which the accused is to be tried for felony is void if filed in vacation. In re Vogland, 48 Nebr. 37, 66 N. W. 1028.

4. Successive Informations. In the absence of a statute the validity of an information is not affected by the fact that another information is pending against the accused for the same offense,[17] and so long as defendant has not been put in jeopardy,[18] a new information may be filed where a former information is withdrawn as defective,[19] or where it has been quashed or dismissed on motion or demurrer because defective,[20] or because of want or insufficiency of a preliminary examination or proper return by the magistrate,[21] or after arrest of judgment or reversal on appeal because the first information was bad,[22] or after a mistrial.[23] If the preliminary examination or the affidavit, complaint, or other papers on which the former information was based are sufficient, they may be used as the basis of the new information.[24] It is not proper practice to file case of the loss of an information, the prosecuting attorney may file another, and the prosecution shall proceed, and trial be had without delay from that cause, it is not necessary that an information filed in place of one lost shall be a copy of the first information. Goodman v. State, 161 Ind. 629, 69 N. E. 442. So also in Kansas (Cr. Code, § 118); and this in all cases where the original has been duly and legally filed and has afterward been lost or destroyed, although no preliminary examination may have been had in the case, and although no copy of the original information may have been preserved (State v. Plowman, 28 Kan. 569).

In Texas when an information has been lost, mislaid, mutilated, or obliterated, the district attorney may suggest the fact to the court, and in such case another information may be substituted upon his written statement that it is substantially the same. Code Cr. Proc. art. 470. The only remedy in a case of mutilation of the complaint or information by the fraudulent alteration of the date of the offense alleged in either, or otherwise, is by the substitution of the complaint and information, as provided by the statute. Huff v. State, 23 Tex. App. 291, 4 S. W. 890. See also Perez v. State, 10 Tex. App. 327, destruction of line of information. Where a copy of an information is substituted for the lost original, but by inadvertence of the county attorney is indorsed with a different number from that by which the cause was docketed, and the substituted information is objected to by defendant on that ground, the court, on the motion of the county attorney, or on its own motion, should correct such number. 5. Formal Requisites of Information — a. In General. In the absence of a statute prescribing the form of an information, it is governed by the common law. It is in its structure similar to an indictment except in so far as the difference in their nature renders particular matters necessary or unnecessary.[26] An information must clearly purport on its face to be made or preferred by the prosecuting officer,[27] but it need not disclose the source of his knowledge of the crime or its perpetrator,[28] or state that he informs under his official oath.[29] The word "information" need not be contained in the body of the pleading.[30] An information, like an indictment, may be in several counts.[31] In some states the form of an information is prescribed by statute, and if such form is sufficient to meet constitutional requirements,[32] it is always sufficient to follow the statute.[33]

If this sufficiently appears, however, objections because of mere clerical errors or informality will not avail on motion in arrest of judgment or appeal, even if they would be available at an earlier stage. Billings v. State, 107 Ind. 54, 6 N. E. 914, 7 N. E. 763, 57 Am. Rep. 77, holding that the use of the word "affiant," instead of the words "prosecuting attorney," in the body of the information, where the context shows that the error was a clerical one, is not such an error as will render an information fatally defective on a motion in arrest of judgment. And even if this be regarded as necessary, the failure of an information to give the name of the prosecuting attorney at the beginning of the second and third counts is not a substantial objection, where his name is properly given in the first count. State v. Looker, 54 Kan. 227, 38 Pac. 288.

Mistake as to name of prosecuting attorney. — Where an information stated in the body thereof that "B., county attorney, makes information," but was signed by C as county attorney, and the record showed that C prosecuted and was recognized as county attorney, it was held not necessary to quash the information under the statute requiring presentation to be by the county attorney. In Georgia, under Code, § 753 (former section 299), "the requisites of the accusation are only that it shall be in the name of the state and signed by the prosecutor, and that it shall distinctly set forth the nature of the offense charged, the time and place of its commission, the person by whom committed,

On the other hand failure to follow the statutory form in immaterial particulars will not be fatal.[34] An information or a conviction thereon will not be invalidated by unauthorized erasures which are unprejudical.[35]

b. Caption or Title and Commencement.[36] The title, caption, or commencement of an information, sometimes by express statutory provision, should state the names of the parties — the state and the accused — the county, the court, and the date of the information;[37] but it is generally held that technical defects in this respect not affecting the substantial rights of the accused will not be fatal;[38] and an information will not be vitiated by surplusage.[39] An information, like an indictment,[40] must by its caption or commencement show that, as required by constitutional or statutory provisions, the prosecution is conducted in the name and by authority of the state, or the people of the state, or in most jurisdictions it will be fatally defective.[41] and the fact that it is based upon an affidavit, referring thereto." Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168. An accusation under the county court act may declare that the "state of Georgia charges," etc., and need not employ the formula that the "prosecutor, in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia, charges," etc. Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583.

M." was withdrawn against the latter, someone connected with the court, after arraignment and before trial, erased the words "and J. M." by drawing a black line through them, and it was held that while the act of erasing was unauthorized, yet, as it did not prejudice defendants, it was not ground for reversal.

District of Columbia.— An information under Act Cong. March 3, 1893, relating to the sale of liquors in the District of Columbia, is properly filed in the name of the District. Dempsey v. District of Columbia, 1 App. Cas. (D. C.) 63.

38. It is not an error fatal to the jurisdiction of the court that, in the recital of venue in the information, the characters "ss" were omitted from the allegation as to venue. Seay v. Shrader, (Nebr. 1903) 95 N. W. 690.

Defect in the title of an information is not ground for quashing it. Malone v. State, 14 Ind. 219. See also State v. Mathis, 21 Ind. 277.

Omission of title and name of court.— An affidavit and information which do not contain the title of the cause and the name of the court as required by Ind. Rev. St. (1894) § 1800, are cured by section 1825 which provides that no information shall be deemed invalid for "any defect or imperfection which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits." Rivers v. State, 144 Ind. 16, 42 N. E. 1021. Omission to state in the caption of an information the name of the court in which it is filed is merely a defect in form, and cannot be assigned as error on appeal. State v. Brennan, 2 S. D. 384, 50 N. W. 625. In Texas, however, it is held an indispensable requirement that an information shall affirmatively show on its face that it is presented in a court having jurisdiction of the offense, as required by statute. Bowen v. State, 28 Tex. App. 498, 13 S. W. 787.

Misnomer of term of court.— Where the record proper shows that an information was filed in open court during a term, the clerical error of misnaming the particular term at which it was filed, in the caption of the information, constitutes no ground for reversing a judgment of conviction thereon. Williams v. State, 42 Fla. 205, 27 So. 898.

Misnomer of court.— An information stating that it was presented to the "count court," instead of the "county court," is not defective, since the county court is the only court where an information can be filed. Whitley v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 69. Mistake in describing the superior court of the county as the superior court of the state is of no avail to defendant. State v. Costello, 29 Wash. 366, 69 Pac. 1099.

Name of county.— Where the information designates by what district attorney it is filed, the omission in the title of the action of the name of the county is not a fatal error, as it does not affect the substantial rights of defendant. People v. Biggins, 65 Cal. 564, 4 Pac. 570. The statement in the caption of the title of the court to which the information is presented is sufficient, without naming the county. A. 150; Saine v. State, 14 Tex. App. 144, holding an information fatally defective in departing from the constitutional requirement by omitting the words "of Texas" after the commencement, "In the name and by the authority of the state." It has been held, however, that where, in the caption of an information,

c. Body or Charge. The charge or body of an information is like that of an indictment and its sufficiency is determined by the same rules.[42] An information must charge the offense with the same certainty as is necessary to an indictment.[43] It must contain all the substantial requirements of an indictment at common law.[44] No offense is charged by an information which, without itself alleging the inculpatory act, refers to the "affidavit which is herewith filed and shows" the commission of the act by the accused.[45]

d. Conclusion. In some states an information, like an indictment,[46] must conclude "against the peace of the state," etc.,[47] and "against the form of the statute," etc.;[48] but in other states a formal conclusion is held to be unnecessary or its omission is cured by statute.[49] In some states each count of an information must have a proper conclusion,[50] but in others it is sufficient if there is a proper conclusion at the end of the information.[51] An information for murder must have the proper special conclusion necessary in an indictment, except that it must be on the oath of the prosecutor instead of the grand jury.[52]

the case is entitled the "State of Washington" against the defendants, naming them, it sufficiently appears that the prosecution is in the name of the state. State v. Devine, 6 Wash. 587, 34 Pac. 154. And in Indiana it has been held that it is no ground of objection that an information does not contain a specific allegation that the prosecution is carried on in the name of the state, if this otherwise appears. Snodgrass v. State, 13 Ind. 292. And see Cronkhite v. State, 11 Ind. 307. So, under Nebr. Const. art. 6, § 24, requiring that all process shall run in the name of the state of Nebraska, and the prosecution shall be conducted in the name of the state of Nebraska, an information filed in the district court with a caption of "The State of Nebraska," and prosecuted in the name of the state of Nebraska, is sufficient. Alderman v. State, 24 Nebr. 97, 38 N. W. 36.

E. 486; Gould v. People, 89 Ill. 216; Parris v. People, 76 Ill. 274; State v. Hinton, 49 La. State v. Stickney, 29 Mont. 523, 75 Pac. 201. See also People v. Biggins, 65 Cal. 564, 4 Pac. 570.

A constitutional provision that all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state or people of the state, and shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the same, applies to informations as well as indictments. e. Statement of Jurisdictional Facts. In most jurisdictions it is held that it is not necessary that an information shall allege or show on its face the existence of the conditions or prerequisites necessary to authorize prosecution by information,[53] as, for example, that the court is in session,[54] that the grand jury is not in session or has been discharged,[55] that the information is filed by leave of court,[56] that it is based upon a proper affidavit or complaint,[57] that it is made by a credible resident,[58] or that there has been a preliminary examination and commitment or finding of probable cause, or the existence of causes rendering the same necessary.[59]

f. Signatures. It is generally essential to the validity of an information that the same be signed by the proper prosecuting attorney.[60] And it has been held that where he fails to sign before the commencement of the trial the defect can-

In Texas, however, want of the official signature of the county or district attorney is not a fatal defect, where it otherwise appears that the information was made by him, although the code requires such signature, as it further provides that exception not be cured by subsequently signing nunc pro tunc.[61] An information may be signed by an assistant or deputy prosecuting attorney, if authorized, in the name of the prosecuting attorney,[62] or, where he presents the information, in his own name as assistant or deputy,[63] or by a duly appointed special or pro tempore prosecuting attorney.[64] Where an information contains several counts it is sufficient to sign at the end without signing each count.[65] An information need not be signed by the individual on whose complaint it is preferred by the public prosecutor.[66]

g. Indorsements. In the absence of a statute the name of the prosecuting witness or other witnesses for the state need not be indorsed on an information;[67] but in some states this is required by statute in order that the witnesses

Statute relating to indictments.— A statute requiring indorsement of the names of witnesses before the grand jury on indictments (as to which see supra, III, G, 5) does not apply to informations. People v. Sherman, (Cal. 1893) 32 Pac. 879; Bartlett v. State, 28 Ohio St. 669.

Federal courts.— It is not necessary to the validity of an information in a federal court that the names of witnesses for the prosecution should be indorsed thereon, even though a state statute makes such provision, as criminal proceedings in federal courts are not governed by state laws, except as provided in may be called at the trial.[68] Unnecessary indorsements on an information will not invalidate it.[69]

h. Verification. At common law an information could be filed by the attorney or solicitor general simply on his oath of office and without verification,[70] and it has been held therefore in this country, that verification of an information by the prosecuting attorney is unnecessary unless required by statute.[71] It is sometimes required by statute, however, that an information either be verified by the prosecuting attorney or supported by the affidavit of some witness, and in such case compliance with the statute is essential.[72] And it has been held that a prosecution under an information not supported by the oath or affirmation of any person is in violation of a constitutional prohibition against the seizure of any person without probable cause supported by oath or affirmation.[73] But an information by the prosecuting officer need not be verified unless required by statute, if it is based upon an affidavit or complaint on oath by a private person,[74]

In Illinois, under Rev St. c. 37, § 117, which provides for the filing of informations by the state's attorney or the attorney-general or some other person, and requires a certification only in the latter case, an information made in the name of the state's attorney, and presented by him, but verified by the affidavit of a third person, is an information by the state's attorney and requires no further verification. Long v. People, 135 Ill. 435, 25 N. E. 851, 10 L. R. A. 48. "Prosecuting" and "county" attorney.— Under Nebr. Cr. Code, §§ 579, 580, providing that all informations shall be filed and verified by the oath of the prosecuting attorney of the proper county, an information verified by the oath of the county attorney for the county is sufficient, since the words "prosecuting attorney" in such sections mean county attorney. or on a preliminary examination and commitment by a magistrate after arrest on an affidavit or sworn complaint.[75] And if an information is sworn to positively by some person, it is not necessary for the prosecuting attorney to also verify it.[76] When an information is required to be verified it must be sworn to before an officer authorized to administer the oath,[77] and that it was sworn to must appear from a proper jurat signed officially by the officer.[78] It is very generally held, even when verification of an information is required, that the prosecuting attorney may verify on information and belief;[79] but when the verification is by a private person it must be positive and by one having actual knowledge of the facts.[80] An information may in a proper case be verified by a deputy, assistant,

By prosecuting attorney.— An affidavit that affiant is the prosecuting attorney in and for the county, that he knows the contents of the foregoing information, and that the same are true, when subscribed and sworn to before the clerk of court, sufficiently verifies the information. State v. Regan, 8 Wash. 506, 36 Pac. 472. Under Mo. Laws (1901), pp. 138, 139, requiring an information to be signed by the prosecuting attorney and verified by his oath or by the oath of some person competent to testify as a witness in the case, an information signed by the prosecuting attorney, and in which the clerk of the court certifies that the prosecuting attorney makes oath that the facts stated are true, is a substantial compliance with the statute State v. Hicks, 178 Mo. 433, 77 S. W. 539.

Jurat.— A jurat to the verification of an information signed by "J. C. Jeffers, Clerk," is sufficient, as the court takes judicial notice of its clerk. Trimble v. State, 61 Nebr. 604, 85 N. W. 844. See also supra, IV, A, 2, b, (x), (B). The signature of the clerk of the court is not insufficient because he uses initials for his christian name (Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9), or because of clerical errors in the designation of his official character (State v. Derkum, 27 Mo. App. 628, "circuit court" instead of "circuit clerk"). Where the jurat attached to the verification of an information stated that the same was "sworn to and subscribed in my presence," it was held that the omission by the certifying officer of the words "before me" after the words "sworn to" in the jurat was not a fatal objection to the information. State v. Smith, 38 Kan. 194, 16 Pac. 254.

The fact that a deputy clerk of court signs the jurat to the verification of an information in the name of the clerk by himself as deputy does not render the information insufficient. State v. White, 12 Wash. 417, 41 Pac. 182.

An affidavit that the facts stated in an information are true and correct is a positive verification of the information, and sufficient to sustain a warrant issued thereon. State v. Watson, 6 Kan. App. 897, 50 Pac. 959. The fact that an information charging an offense was verified positively by a private person, and on information and belief by the county attorney, does not weaken the charge, nor operate to the prejudice of the or pro tempore prosecuting attorney.[81] An information by the prosecuting attorney will not be invalidated by an unnecessary verification by the prosecuting witness.[82] When an information is amended it need not necessarily be again verified.[83] Failure to verify an information may be corrected at any time before trial.[84]

B. Complaint — 1. In General. Complaints by a private person or officer other than the prosecuting attorney, as distinguished from an information, are ordinarily used only for the purpose of procuring an arrest and preliminary proceedings before a magistrate,[85] or in summary prosecutions before a magistrate or police court;[86] but they are sometimes used under statutes in prosecutions in other courts.[87] Such a complaint in charging the offense is governed by substantially the same rules as an indictment or information, and must charge the offense with the same certainty.[88] A grand juror's complaint must show on its face that it is properly addressed by him and under his oath of office.[89] A caption is not necessary to a complaint if the court and the venue otherwise sufficiently appear.[90]

2. Conclusion.[91] In some states a complaint must conclude like an indictment "against the peace and dignity of the state,"[92] and "against the form of the statute," etc.;[93] but elsewhere this is not necessary.[94]

3. Signature.[95] A complaint must be properly signed or subscribed by the complainant as required by the statute.[96]

defendant; neither does it make the information subject to a motion to quash for indefiniteness. State v. Gill, 63 Kan. 382, 65 Pac. 682. The fact that the testimony discloses that the party who verified an information did not have personal knowledge of the guilt of the accused does not impair the sufficiency of the verification or information, since its statements cannot be thus attacked by extraneous evidence. Bergdahl v. People, 27 Colo. 302, 61 Pac. 228.

Presumption.— Where an information is verified by the oath of a private person, it will be presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that he has actual knowledge of the facts stated therein. State v. Lund, 51 Kan. 1, 32 Pac. 657.

It is also necessary that a complaint shall be properly verified or accompanied by an affidavit as required by the statute;[97] and the verification must be before an officer authorized to administer the oath, and be shown by a proper jurat or certificate over the signature of the officer.[98]

5. Loss or Destruction. Where, in a prosecution by complaint, the complaint is lost, it may be supplied, under a statute providing that all kinds of lost records may be replaced by substitutes, even if the statute as to lost criminal accusations relates only to supplying lost indictments and informations.[99]

complainant below the description of the goods stolen and above the charge of larceny, is not "subscribed by the complainant" as required by Mass. Rev. St. c. 135, § 2, which provides that the magistrate must reduce the complaint to writing and cause the same to be subscribed by the complainant. Com. v. Barhight, 9 Gray (Mass.) 113, where Chief Justice Shaw said: "It is not certain that this complaint was reduced to writing before it was sworn to. It cannot be ascertained that this signature was made for the purpose of authenticating the whole complaint. . . . Such looseness and carelessness in instituting criminal proceedings are not to be encouraged."

Signing by mark.— A complaint signed by the complainant's mark, and certified by the magistrate to whom it is addressed as "taken and sworn to" on a certain day, is sufficiently certified without an attesting witness to the mark. Com. v. Sullivan, 14 Gray (Mass.) 97, where it is said: "This mode of having an attesting witness to a signature of a party by making his mark, to insure greater certainty of proof of the execution, if the same should be controverted, is a very usual and proper one. But it by no means follows that the signature is not valid without such attesting witness, although the proof may not so easily be made of the signature. And in reference to complaints to a justice of the peace, presented by the complainant personally, and accompanied by taking the usual oath to the complaint before such justice, that the same is true, there can be no such necessity. The party virtually acknowledges the complaint as duly signed by him. This must clearly obviate all necessity of further proof to the signature."

Idem sonans.— That an accusation appears to have been made by "Gittings," and is signed by "Giddans," is immaterial, it appearing that the names refer to the same person, as such names are idem sonans. Woody v. State, 113 Ga. 927, 39 S. E. 297. See, generally, Names.

97. If a positive charge, verified by the complainant's oath according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is made in the complaint before a magistrate, it will be sufficient. State v. Hobbs, 39 Me. 212. See, generally, Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 325.

Verification on information and belief.— Where the verification to a complaint in a criminal case is made on information and belief, it is not sufficient to authorize a court to put the defendant on trial for the offense charged therein; but such complaint should be sworn to positively; or the facts on which the warrant should issue be presented to the court by affidavit or by competent evidence. Filing depositions.—N. D. Rev. Code, § 7601, requiring that where a state's attorney makes complaint of violations of the prohibition law, verified on information and belief, he must file with the magistrate the depositions of some witness on which such information is based, is sufficiently complied with where such deposition is attached to the complaint when handed to the magistrate, and the complaint is marked, "Filed," although the deposition is not. State v. Rozum, 8 N. D. 548, 80 N. W. 477.

98. Com. v. Bennett, 7 Allen (Mass.) 533; Com. v. Wallace, 14 Gray (Mass.) 382. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 325. A complaint to a police court for an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, signed by the complainant, and certified as subscribed and sworn to before the justice, is properly subscribed and sworn to. Com. v. Dillane, 11 Gray (Mass.) 67. A certificate of a magistrate that the complaint was "taken and sworn before me" is sufficient against the objection that it should be "taken and sworn to," etc. Com. v. Bennett, 7 Allen (Mass.) 533. A certificate, signed as clerk by one who is actually clerk of a police court, that "the aforesaid complainant made oath to the truth of the foregoing complaint before said court," sufficiently shows that the complaint in question, purporting to be made by "John H. Newton," and signed "J. H. Newton," was signed and sworn to by "John H. Newton," within the commonwealth. Com. v. Quin, 5 Gray (Mass.) 478. A complaint made by "Samuel W. Richardson, city marshall of Cambridge," signed "S. W. Richardson," and certified by the judge or justice to whom it is addressed, to have been "received and sworn to before said court," sufficiently shows that it was signed and sworn to by the complainant. V. THE ACCUSATION OR STATEMENT OF THE OFFENSE.*

A. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions — 1. IN GENERAL. Under the constitution of the United States[1] and by like provisions in the constitutions of the various states, the accused is entitled to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him.[2] These provisions, being based on the presumption of innocence, require such certainty in indictments and informations as will enable an innocent man to prepare for trial;[3] but no greater particularity of allegation than may be of service to the accused in understanding the charge and preparing his defense;[4] and while all the elements of, or facts necessary to, the crime charged must be fully and clearly set out,[5] it is not necessary to allege matters in the nature of evidence,[6] or to set out the means by which the crime is accomplished, unless the act is one which may be criminal or otherwise, according to the circumstances under which it is done.[7]

2. POWER OF THE LEGISLATURES. It is within the power of the legislatures under such a constitutional provision to prescribe the form of the indictment or information,[8] and such form may omit averments regarded as necessary at common law;[9] but the legislature, while it may simplify the form of an indictment accused to be informed of the nature of the charge when the accused is entitled to secure a specification of the particular acts relied on by the government through a bill of particulars.[20]

3. Modifications of Common-Law Rules. The essentials of an indictment or information are in many states prescribed by statute, and, subject to constitutional restrictions on the power of the legislatures,[21] it is by the tests afforded by such statutes rather than by the rules of the common law that its sufficiency is to be determined.[22] These statutes have removed much of the nicety of technical pleading and the indictment is made little more than a simple statement of the offense, couched in ordinary language and with due regard for the rights of the accused.[23] But they do not change the requirement that the indictment must, as at common law, contain every averment that is necessary to inform defendant of the particular circumstances of the charge against him.[24] The federal cases abundantly illustrate how the courts of the United States, in construing statutes relating to criminal procedure, strictly adhere to the rules of substance and certainty, but liberally discard niceties of form only and requirements that are not material to the right of defendant to be informed of the nature of the offense, and to be enabled to plead the judgment in bar of a second prosecution.[25] In the case of statutory misdemeanors it is frequently stated that less certainty is required than in the case of felonies.[26] By statute it is sometimes provided that where an act is criminal both by statute and at common law, the indictment may follow either the statutory or the common-law form;[27] or that an indictment good at common law for a common-law offense is sufficient under the statutes.[28] But such statutes do not apply in a case where the offense is a misdemeanor at common law and is made a felony by statute.[29] The fact that a statute specifies a description of an offense which shall be regarded as sufficient does not demand that such description be followed without deviation,[30] and a code provision that an indictment may be substantially in a given form does not require a strict adherence to that form.[31]

B. Language, Spelling, and Clerical Requirements — 1. Composition in General. Under the statutes now generally adopted, providing that it is necessary only that the indictment shall contain a clear and concise statement of the offense, and that formal defects are not fatal, indictments which sufficiently make the averments required by statute are sufficient, although clumsily and inartistically drawn.[32] While the better rule in preparing indictments and informations is to follow approved precedents when it can be done, they are not necessarily

An unmeaning accumulation of words, such as occurs in an indictment charging the theft of certain property from the possession of the owner "without his consent, intent to deprive him, the owner, of the value of the same, and to appropriate the same to the use himself, the said" is insufficient. Sparks v. State, 35 Tex. 349.

Selection of words and expressions.— "It is not necessary that the words or terms used in framing indictments should be always such as have been adopted and approved by the best authors and lexicographers; it is sufficient if they have received from common use a fixed, precise, and definite meaning, and according to such meaning import clearly what is sufficient to make out the charge, and to render it certain." defective because they fail to do so, and if they contain all the necessary averments they will be held good.[33]

2. Use of English Language. In England it was at one time necessary that the indictment should be entirely in Latin,[34] but this rule having been abolished by statute[35] before the general adoption of the English common law in the United States has apparently never obtained therein. Under the constitutions of the various states, or by statutes therein, it is frequently provided that indictments shall be in English;[36] but this rule does not exclude the use of terms which have become literally English by adoption.[37] An indictment is not invalidated as not wholly in the English language by reason of the fact that from the omission of letters in a word it becomes a word of a foreign language.[38] Where it becomes necessary to set out an instrument in a foreign language, there should also be a translation thereof or statement of its meaning so that the accused may know what is intended.[39]

3. Abbreviations, Numerals, and Symbols. Arabic numerals may be employed in indictments to express numbers[40] or dates,[41] as may all well defined and well understood abbreviations,[42] such as the dollar sign,[43] the character "&,"[44] or the letters "A. D."[45] But the better practice is to avoid abbreviations.[46] Abbreviations of words employed by men of science or in the arts will not answer without full explanation of their meaning in ordinary language.[47] The use of an abbrevia-

Effect of continued use of form.— Where a form of indictment for assault with intent to kill has been in use for years, and has received frequent judicial approval, nothing short of an apparent danger that it might operate to the prejudice of the accused would justify a disturbance of the settled practice in drafting such indictments. tion may not be ground for a motion in arrest of judgment, although fatal perhaps on a motion to quash.[48]

4. ERASURES AND INTERLINEATIONS. If an indictment is conveniently legible it is not bad simply because it contains interlineations.[49] Interlineations which it is apparent were made before the indictment was presented by the grand jury do not vitiate it,[50] and in the absence of anything apparent on the face of the indictment, or shown extrinsically, which tends to prove that interlineations have been made subsequent to the finding of the indictment, it will be presumed that they were made before or at the time of such finding;[51] and the same is true of erasures;[52] but the insertion of a material word after the finding of the indictment renders it fatally defective,[53] and the indictment does not import such absolute verity that it cannot be shown by the accused that the alteration was in fact made after the indictment was found and the grand jury was discharged.[54] Pencil memoranda, however, made on the indictment without an intention to alter will not, it seems, vitiate it.[55] When an alteration in an indictment comes to the knowledge of either party, it is the duty of such party to bring it to the attention of the court promptly, and at the earliest opportunity at which it can be done;[56] but although a defendant does not move promptly, the court does not thereby acquire jurisdiction to try him for any crime other than such as was charged in the indictment when it was filed by the grand jury.[57] It has been held that, although interlineations may have furnished a proper ground for a motion to the discretion of the court for quashing an indictment, they are not sufficient ground for arresting judgment;[58] and that an alteration in the description of defendant, made when he is arraigned, is not ground for motion in arrest of judgment.[59]

48. Com. v. Desmarteau, 16 Gray (Mass.) 1, holding that the use of the abbreviation "sd." for "said" in an indictment is no ground for arresting judgment.

49. Cook v. State, 119 Ga. 108, 46 S. E. 64 (holding that an interlineation in a different ink and handwriting of another name in lieu of the given name of the person alleged to have been murdered, which was crossed out, would not support a demurrer on the ground that the person alleged to have been murdered was not sufficiently identified); French v. State, 12 Ind. 670, 74 Am. Dec. 229; Rex v. Davis, 7 C. & P. 319, 32 E. C. L. 634 (holding that if an indictment has an interlineation and has a caret at the proper place where the interlined words are to come in, the court will take notice of the caret, and read the indictment correctly).

W. 1111, holding that the fact that one word in writing the year in an indictment was wrong and was blotted out, and the correct word written over it, is not sufficient to authorize the court to quash the indictment on the ground that it alleges an impossible date.

53. State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 796, holding that the insertion of the word "feloniously" was such an interlineation.

54. State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 796.

55. Bostock v. State, 61 Ga. 635, holding that pencil memoranda inserted in blanks by the prosecuting attorney for his own guidance after the indictment has left the grand jury are not ground for arrest of judgment where there was no intention to alter the indictment and the insertions are ordered by the court to be erased before the taking of evidence.

57. People v. Granice, 50 Cal. 447 (holding that where an indictment for manslaughter was by interpolation altered to a charge of murder, and defendant, after being informed of such interpolation, pleaded not guilty, he was still entitled to prove the interpolations on the trial); State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 796.

58. Com. v. Desmarteau, 16 Gray (Mass.) 1.

59. State v. Turner, 25 La. Ann. 573, holding that the erasure of the name "Albert," and the interlineation of that of "John" in the description of accused is not a good ground in arrest of judgment. But see Myatt v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 523, 21 S. W. 456, holding that an alteration in the name of accused made by the clerk of the court to which the indictment was returned was a nullity and did not affect the indictment.

5. Errors in Writing, Spelling, and Composition. If the sense of an indictment is clear, nice or technical exceptions are not to be favorably regarded;[60] and therefore verbal inaccuracies,[61] or clerical errors which are explained and corrected by necessary intendment from other parts of the indictment,[62] or errors in spelling which do not obscure the sense,[63] are not fatal. The same rule applies to errors

The substitution of the name of deceased for that of accused in an indictment for homicide, whereby it is made to appear that deceased killed himself, is fatal. State v. Edwards, 70 Mo. 480. But compare State v. Craighead, 32 Mo. 561, holding that an error in an indictment for assault, by which it appeared that the life of the accused instead of the person assaulted was endangered, was cured by statute as a clerical error not prejudicial to defendant.

in grammar.[64] But where an essential word is so misspelled as to be meaningless, the indictment is bad.[65] Bad punctuation will not vitiate an indictment;[66] nor will chirography where it is possible to ascertain the words used and the meaning of the sentences.[67]

6. Omissions. The omission of a word which is not descriptive of the offense and which does not affect the plain meaning of the indictment is not fatal;[68] but words which denote an integral part of the offense, if omitted, cannot be supplied by intendment,[69] such as the word "did" or its equivalent in charging the Use of verbs in the wrong tense is not necessarily fatal. People v. Haagen, 139 Cal. 115, 72 Pac. 836.

The use of a pronoun of the wrong gender to denote the person whose property was taken is not fatal after verdict where there was no surprise. State v. Willis, 16 Mo. App. 553.

Error in relation of pronouns.— Use of plural instead of singular (Jackson v. State, 88 Ga. 784, 15 S. E. 677; Snow v. State, 6 Tex. App. 284); or singular instead of plural pronouns (Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583; State v. Parks, 61 N. J. L. 438, 39 Atl. 1023; Hollins v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 69 S. And see Goodson v. State, 32 Tex. 121, holding that in an indictment for the theft of two animals, the singular pronoun "it" was properly used in referring to them in charging the intent, since it was the property in the animals and not the animals themselves that was referred to.

Repetition of direct accusation.— Where an indictment for false swearing in one count alleges at the outset that the "grand jury present and that accused did," etc., and the following minor allegations are connected by "then and there" and by "and," it is not necessary that it should charge in relation to each minor allegation that "the grand jurors do further say," etc. Campbell v. State, 43 Tex. Vermont.— State v. Collins, 62 Vt. 195, 19 Atl. 368; State v. Freeman, 15 Vt. 723, holding that where an indictment, in describing a certain term of court, averred that it was held before a judge named, it was insufficient without further averments of the facts authorizing such judge mentioned to sit individually.

See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Indictment and Information," § 192.

Other statements of this rule.— An indictment ought to be certain to every intent, and without any intendment to the contrary (State v. Hand, 6 Ark. 165; Com. v. Miller, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 480; Long's Case, Cro. Eliz. 489); must possess that degree of certainty which is sufficient to exclude every other intendment (Riggs v. State, 26 Miss. 51); certainty to a common intent (State v. Messenger, 63 Ohio St. 398, 59 N. E. 105; U. S. v. Fero, 18 Fed. 901); certainty to a reasonable extent (State v. Nutwell, 1 Gill (Md.) 54); reasonable certainty (Keller v. State, 51 Ind. 111); ought to have the same certainty as a declaration, for all the rules that apply to civil pleadings are applicable to criminal accusations (State v. Hand, 6 Ark. 165; State v. McCormack, 2 Ind. 305; Sherban v. Com., 8 Watts (Pa.) 212, 34 Am. Dec. 460; Rex v. Greep, Comb. 459; Rex v. Lawley, 2 Str. 904). Compare Noble v. State, 59 Ala. 73, holding that while this latter statement is to a certain degree correct, it is nevertheless customary to require a stricter adherence to established rules in the case of criminal pleadings.

App. 448; People v. Logan, 1 Nev. 110; State v. Haven, 59 Vt. 399, 9 Atl. 841 (holding that an indictment which alleged that the person to whom stock was issued did not own, nor have standing in his name, and was not entitled to, any share or shares of the stock, was an argumentative way of saying that he did not own and was not entitled to the shares assigned to him, and was therefore bad); Vaux's Case, 4 Coke 44*a*; Reg. v. Collingwood, 6 Mod. 288; Rex v. Knight, 1 Salk. 375.

An indictment for murder, which, after describing the mode of the commission of the crime, charges the killing by the words, "and so the jurors say," did kill and murder is not bad for argumentativeness. Com. v. Desmarteau, 16 Gray (Mass.) 1. See HOMICIDE, 21 Cyc. 847.

76. State v. Keerl, 29 Mont. 508, 75 Pac. 362, 10 Am. St. Rep. 579, holding that averments concluding an information for murder, "and so the said [defendant] did kill and murder the said [deceased]," do not cure or aid a defective allegation of the cause of death. See HOMICIDE, 21 Cyc. 833.

Minnesota.— State v. Nelson, 79 Minn. 388, 82 N. W. 650, holding that an indictment which alleges that defendant is accused of having committed an offense (stating it), but which does not directly charge that defendant committed the offense, is insufficient.

Mississippi.— Shanks v. State, 51 Miss. 464, holding that a charge that A B, assessor, etc., was not equivalent to a charge that A B was the assessor of a certain county.

England.— Rex v. Crowhust, 2 Ld. Raym. 1363; Rex v. Whitehead, 1 Salk. 371.

"Whereas" does not necessarily indicate a recital if it is used in a sense synonymous with "when in fact," or "while the contrary," etc., as shown by the context. People v. Ennis, 137 Cal. 263, 70 Pac. 84; People v. Fitzgerald, 92 Mich. 328, 52 N. W. 726.

ever, under which an allegation may be direct, although in a qualified form.[80] And indictments may be sufficient, although they contain expressions in the participial form;[81] and it has been stated that the use of a verb is not necessary in all cases, and that an adjective form of expression which expresses in plain and positive terms the necessary charges is sufficient.[82]

2. CERTAINTY AND PARTICULARITY. The indictment should contain such a specification of acts and descriptive circumstances as will on its face fix and determine the identity of the offense[83] with such particularity as to enable the accused to know exactly what he has to meet,[84] and avail himself of a conviction or acquittal as a bar to a further prosecution arising out of the same facts.[85] Such certainty

An indictment applicable to two offenses which are different and definite offenses, and which does not specify which, is bad. State v. Messenger, 58 N. H. 348 (indictment containing in one count so much of the language of two sections of a statute as to leave it uncertain which of two different crimes of the same nature was charged); Rex v. Marshall, 1 Moody C. C. 158.

The true test of the sufficiency of an indictment is not whether it might possibly have been made more certain, but whether it sufficiently apprised defendant of what he must be prepared to meet; and in case any other proceedings should be taken against him for a similar offense, whether the record shows with accuracy to what extent he might plead a former acquittal or conviction. is also required that the court, on an inspection of the indictment, may determine that an offense has been committed,[86] and may confine the evidence on the trial to the issues presented,[87] and in case of conviction may determine what punishment should be imposed,[88] and that a reviewing court may determine from the record whether or not error has been committed.[89] The omission of a material averment in an indictment cannot be supplied by an instruction,[90] or by the proof,[91] or by the finding by the jury of a fact not alleged.[92] Whatever is indispensably necessary to be proved to warrant a conviction must as a general rule be alleged.[93] laid in the alternative are synonymous, the indictment is good;[95] and where a statute, in defining an offense, uses the word "or" in the sense of "to wit," that is, in explanation of what precedes, making it signify the same thing, the indictment may follow the words of the statute.[96] An indictment is not vitiated by an alternative statement in matter which may be rejected as surplusage,[97] or which is not connected with the charge or definition of the offense,[98] or is merely in aggravation;[99] and use of the disjunctive "or" is proper in pleading negative averments.[1] It is sometimes provided by statute that offenses of the same character and subject to the same punishment may be charged in the same count in the alternative.[2] But offenses of the same character which are not subject to the

"certain house or out-house" (Whiteside v. State, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 175), "barn or stable" (Horton v. State, 60 Ala. 72); "did take . . . or cause to be taken" (State v. O'Bannon, 1 Bailey (S. See also Wein v. State, 14 Mo. 125, holding that an indictment for stealing five red cows, five black cows, and five white cows of the value of fifteen dollars each, is not open to the objection that the offense is charged in the alternative.

When the alternative is not misleading the charge may be held good. Sublett v. Com., 35 S. W. 543, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 100 (holding that although the statutes provide different punishments for arson and barn-burning, an indictment charging defendant with "arson or barn-burning" was in substantial compliance with the criminal code, requiring an indictment to be direct and certain as to the offense charged); State v. Van Doran, 109 N. C. 864, 14 S. E. 32. And see U. S. v. Potter, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,077, 6 McLean 182, holding that it is not charging an offense in the alternative where the language describes the same offense, as "cutting, or procuring to be cut."

Other illustrations.— "Steers" and "working cattle" are of the same meaning (Wessels v. Kansas, McCahon (Kan.) 100); as are the expressions "play" and "roll" (Cobb v. State, 45 Ga. 11); "store" and "shop" (Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 432); "violent" and "tumultuous" (Bonneville v. State, 53 Wis. 680, 11 N. But "wines," "spirituous liquors," and "other intoxicating beverage" are not synonymous (Smith v. State, 19 Conn. 493); nor are "trunk" and "chest" (Potter v. State, 39 Tex. 388).

Allegations showing offense not within the statute relied on are fatal. State v. Mahan, 2 Ala. 340.

Other examples of repugnancy.— An indictment which states that one of the accused did "assist and abet" the killing and murdering, and then charges that he was "accessory before the fact to the killing and murdering," is fatally inconsistent, since he could not be both present and absent. State v. Sales, 30 La. Ann. 916. A charge that defendant "wilfully" and with "culpable negligence" killed deceased is inconsistent (State v. Lockwood, 119 Mo. 463, 24 S. W. 1015); and the same is true of an allegation of a fraudulent issue of a certificate of the ownership of one thousand shares of stock "in bank," and "of the following tenor" (State v. Haven, 59 Vt. 399, 9 Atl. 841); and of an indictment which lays the commission of a felony at a day later than the compounding thereof, although the compounding is stated to have been afterward (State v. Dandy, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 395); and of a charge of embezzling and stealing by one and the same act (McCann v. U. S., 2 Wyo. 274).

Expressions held consistent.— "Bank notes, usually known and described as greenbacks" (State v. Hockenberry, 30 Iowa 504); description of a writing sent by mail inclosed in an envelope, as a "letter and communication" (Larison v. State, 49 N. J. L. 256, 9 Atl. 700, 60 Am. St. Rep. 606); charge that defendant did "remove and destroy" a certain fence (Phillips v. State, 29 Tex. 226); uttering a "false, forged, and counterfeited bank note" (Mackey v. State, 3 Ohio St. 362; Stoughton v. State, 2 Ohio St. 562 [overruling Kirby v. State, 1 Ohio St. 185]); charging the corrupt acceptance of a bribe for a vote for "a question which was and might be, by law, brought before" defendant as state senator (State v. Smalls, 11 S. C. 262); charging one with perjury in swearing, in July, that he had witnessed a transaction in October of the same year (State v. McKennan, Harp. (S. C.) 302). A charge in an indictment for perjury before a grand jury that a certain fact had been "developed" before the grand jury and that it had "become material" to the issue to ascertain defendant's knowledge of such fact is not repugnant on the theory that the fact having been "developed" it ceased to be an issue before the grand jury. State v. Faulkner, 175 Mo. 546, 75 S. W. 116. And the fact that a more complete description of an officer is given in one portion of an indictment than in another is not a repugnancy. 9. State v. Hand, 6 Ark. 165; State v. Austin, 113 Mo. 538, 21 S. W. 31 (holding bad an indictment from which it appeared that at the time a larceny was committed defendant was imprisoned in a penitentiary); Jane v. State, 3 Mo. 61; State v. Hardwick, 2 Mo. 226; Hickman v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 533, 72 S. W. 587; U. S. v. Dow, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,990, Taney 34 (holding that the ment is bad which alleges the name of a person to be to the jurors unknown, and subsequently states the name of such person.[10] But an indictment is not repugnant because an act is alleged to have been committed in an improbable but not in a physically impossible manner.[11] In those cases in which a repugnant allegation may be rejected as surplusage, the repugnancy is not material.[12] Under the statutes of some states repugnancy is not fatal when sufficient matter is alleged to indicate the crime and person charged.[13] In those states in which the distinction between principals and accessaries before the fact has been abolished, an indictment of an accessary may, without repugnance, charge the fact to have been committed by him.[14]

5. Use of Technical Expressions.[15] At common law certain technical terms were essential to the statement of certain offenses in an indictment, as in murder, the word "murdered"; in rape, the word "ravished"; in larceny, the words "feloniously took and carried away," and no other words were regarded as equivalent.[16] Under statutory modifications of the common-law rules, however, the use of many technical expressions formerly regarded as essential has become unnecessary;[17] for instance, in some jurisdictions the term "murder" may be omitted in charging murder,[18] or "maim" in charging mayhem,[19] and the use of the expression vi et armis is now regarded as unnecessary,[20] especially where the forcible nature of the act is indicated by other expressions.[21]

6. Videlicet and Scilicet. A general expression may be restricted and con-introduction of a repugnant place by the phrase "then and there" was fatal).

10. Jones v. State, 63 Ala. 27, holding that an indictment against "Douglas Jones, alias Dug Jones, whose true Christian name is to the grand jurors unknown" was bad. But compare Taylor v. State, 100 Ala. 68, 14 So. 875, holding that an indictment charging an offense against Matt Taylor, "whose Christian name is . . . otherwise unknown," is not bad for repugnance, since the statement that such other name is unknown is unnecessary.

Stating that the name of the person is supposed to be as given in an indictment is not repugnant to an allegation that the name is unknown. Reese v. State, 90 Ala. 624, 8 So. 818.

11. Evans v. State, 58 Ark. 47, 22 S. W. 1026 (holding an indictment charging two defendants with having held only one gun, with which it was alleged a murder was committed, sufficient); Coates v. People, 72 Ill. 303 (indictment which charged that three persons, named, with a stick of wood which each severally had and held in their several right hands, inflicted a mortal wound, causing death). See also State v. McDonald, 67 Mo. 13, holding that an indictment for an assault with intent to kill, alleging that the offense was committed with three weapons, a pair of tongs, a hammer, and an ax handle, was not bad as charging an impossibility.

fined to a precise and definite fact by a description under a videlicet or scilicet.[22] Matter which is not essential in its nature may be laid under a videlicet, in which case it need not be proved as alleged;[23] but essential matters, although laid under a videlicet, are to be regarded as positive, precise, and traversable.[24]

7. MATTERS OF INDUCEMENT.[25] It is not necessary to describe matters of inducement with the degree of minuteness and particularity which is requisite in setting out the material allegations which constitute and give character to the offense charged,[26] and such facts need not be directly charged, but it is sufficient that they be necessarily implied from the matter alleged.[27]

D. Rules of Construction — 1. IN GENERAL. Except in particular cases where precise technical expressions are required to be used, words employed in indictments or informations may be such as are in ordinary use and should be given the construction which they ordinarily receive;[28] and it is sometimes provided by statute that words are to be construed according to their common acceptation, except where they are otherwise specifically defined by law.[29] When technical words are used they must be taken to have been intended to have their technical meaning,[30] and a description found in an indictment or information which uses common-law phrases and references is to be given its common-law interpretation;[31] but words of common use will be construed according to their common acceptation, although under certain circumstances they have a technical, legal meaning, unless the context is such as to show that the technical use was intended.[32] Since an indictment is to be construed fortius contra proferentem,[33] the language used must necessarily import the offense charged, and if susceptible of a different interpretation the indictment is bad.[34] The language of a statute,

34. People v. Williams, 35 Cal. 671; State v. McIntyre, 19 Minn. 93; State v. Parker, 43 N. H. 83, holding that where the words used in an indictment to describe an offense are commonly used in a sense which does when employed in an indictment, should be construed as the statute has been.[35] Words clearly capable of different meanings should be so construed as to avoid repugnancy.[36] Interlined words will be read so as to make sense, without regard to the position in which the caret is placed.[37] A relative or word of construction, such as "there" or "said," is to be referred to the nearest antecedent,[38] unless the sense is obviously to the contrary.[39]

2. Reference to Caption. The caption or commencement of the indictment cannot be referred to for the purpose of making more certain any of the essential averments relating to the accusation.[40]

3. Reference to Affidavit or Complaint. An information, although founded upon an affidavit or complaint,[41] must be sufficient in itself, and if on its face it is substantially defective, the defect cannot be remedied by reference to the affidavit or complaint;[42] but the complaint or affidavit may be resorted to as an aid in deciphering the handwriting of the information.[43]

E. Necessity and Propriety of Particular Averments in General — 1. Jurisdiction. While it must appear from the indictment or information that the court in which it is found or filed has jurisdiction of the offense,[44] when the offense comes within the general jurisdiction of the court, it is not necessary to exclude by descriptive terms every possible exemption of defendant from that jurisdiction.[45] In indictments in the federal courts, where the offense is not clearly within the federal jurisdiction, every fact essential to such jurisdiction must be clearly and distinctly averred.[46] In a case of concurrent jurisdiction of the not necessarily import an offense, and they are used without any qualification, the indictment will be bad, although the same words, in a more strict and techical sense, may describe a criminal act.

courts of either of two counties for an offense committed near the boundary line between them, it is not necessary, in an indictment in one county, to aver that no prosecution of accused for the crime charged has been instituted in the other.[47]

2. Name of Offense. The statutes of some states provide that the name of the offense shall be stated in the accusatory part of the indictment or information.[48] Under such statutes, where the offense has no specific name, a brief general description should be given;[49] and where it is required that the indictment shall state both the accusation of the crime and the facts whereby it was committed, a substantial variance between the crime charged and the facts has been held fatal.[50] Generally, however, indictments or informations for statutory offenses, although they give an erroneous appellation,[51] or fail to give any appellation to the offense,[52] if the facts constituting the offense as defined by the statute are sufficiently stated are good.[53]

3. Character or Grade of Offense. It is not necessary to allege that the offense is a felony or a misdemeanor,[54] or to state the degree charged.[55]

Public statutes.— In an indictment under Act April 5, 1866, c. 24, § 2 (14 U. S. St. at L. 12), which provides that when an offense shall be committed in any place which has been ceded to the United States, which offense is not punished by the law of the United States, such offense shall be punished according to the law of the state in which such place is situated, etc., it is not necessary to aver that the offense is not punishable by any law of congress, and is punishable by the state laws. U. S. v. Wright, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,774. And an indictment for denial of equal rights to a negro need not aver that white persons possess the rights denied where they are conferred by statute. U. S. v. Rhodes, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,151, 1 Abb. 28.

58. People v. Bates, 61 N. Y. App. Div. 559, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 123, 15 N. Y. Cr. 469, holding that, although the court might perhaps take judicial notice of the fact that the electors of a certain town had voted not to issue certificates to sell liquor, it was nevertheless necessary to allege whether an illegal sale of liquor in a certain town was through a sale without a certificate, or through selling in a prohibited manner, or to prohibited persons, or during prohibited times, or, if the electors had voted to limit the persons to whom, or the purposes for which, a certificate might be given, by selling in violation of their determination, as declared by that vote.

59. Arkansas.— State v. Graham, 38 Ark. 519.

Illinois.— Rank v. People, 80 Ill. App. 40, holding that an averment that defendant threatened to accuse a person of a misdemeanor was an averment of a mere conclusion of law.

Indiana.— State v. Record, 56 Ind. 107 (holding that in an indictment against a clerk of a circuit court for failure to pay over fines and fees collected by him, an allegation that such funds are "due and owing to the state of Indiana" cannot supply necessary allegations as to when such funds were collected); Butler v. State, 17 Ind. 450 (averment of duty to keep a bridge in repair); State v. Trueblood, 25 Ind. App. 437, 57 N. E. 975 (allegation that an allowance was made to a county auditor, "such allowance being illegal and unwarranted").

the facts averred need not be alleged;[60] nor, where the facts are alleged, is it necessary to aver the conclusions of law resulting therefrom.[61]

6. Matters of Evidence. Matters of evidence, as distinguished from the facts essential to the description of the offense, need not be averred.[62] But the unnecessary insertion of evidentiary matters does not vitiate an indictment.[63]

7. Matters of Defense. The prosecution is not bound to anticipate defenses and aver facts rendering them unavailing,[64] or negative every conceivable fact

Missouri.— State v. Meysenburg, 171 Mo. 1, 71 S. W. 229.

Nebraska.—Lamb v. State, (1903) 95 N. W. 1050, holding that an information which, after charging larceny in the usual form, alleges that defendant procured the thief to commit the crime is not demurrable as stating a mere legal conclusion.

New Hampshire.— State v. Fitts, 44 N. H. 621.

New York.— People v. Weston, Sheld. 555 (indictment against a constable for failure to execute a warrant issued by a justice of the peace); People v. Cooper, 3 N. Y. Cr. 117 (allegation that a person assaulted was in the execution of a lawful process or mandate).

Texas.— Lasindo v. State, 2 Tex. App. 59, charge that the accused was "guilty of the offense of keeping" a disorderly house, instead of "did keep," etc.

that may change the character of the offense;[65] but the conclusions to which the accused is entitled under the presumption of innocence should be excluded.[66] A mitigating as distinguished from a differentiating circumstance need not be alleged.[67] So if murder is charged and the killing is excusable or justifiable it must be brought out by way of defense and need not be negatived.[68] Matter which is necessary to show the commission of the offense must be averred, although negative in form.[69]

8. Matters in Avoidance of Bar of Statute of Limitations[70] — a. Necessity of Averments. By the federal courts,[71] and by the courts of several of the states, it is held that it is not necessary to anticipate a defense of the statute of limitation and negative it by setting forth facts which avoid the statute;[72] but the more general rule is that the true date of the offense must be averred and the facts set forth which avoid the operation of the bar of the statute.[73] Some cases have held that the offense may be laid within the statute and proved outside of it, together with the exception;[74] or that where the statute does not impose an absolute bar, the offense may be laid outside the period and it may be proved without averment that defendant was within an exception.[75]

b. Sufficiency of Averments. In averring the facts which cause the particular case to fall within a statutory exception, it is not necessary to follow the words of the statute.[76] It is necessary to allege the facts as to a former indictment, its dismissal and the re-reference of the prosecution to a grand jury in order that the indictment may show that it is a continuation of the former prosecution.[77] Where concealment of the offense is relied on to toll the statute, it is necessary that the specific acts constituting the concealment shall be stated.[78] Where the words of the statute describing the exception are synonymous, they may be alleged in the alternative.[79] The exception may be averred in a count separate from the charging count.[80]

9. Matters Within Knowledge of Accused. Where the particular facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the accused, it has been held that the offense may be averred generally.[81]

74. State v. English, 2 Mo. 182 (holding that where an indictment has been quashed, and the period within which a prosecution should be commenced has elapsed, the second indictment may lay the offense on a day within the time limited by law for the prosecution thereof, and the state may show on the trial the facts which except such prosecution from the operation of the statute of limitations); Blackman v. Com., 124 Pa. 76. State v. Hinton, 49 La. Ann. 1354, 22 So. 617, holding that an allegation that the offense has "just" come to the knowledge of an officer with authority to prosecute is sufficient.

Sufficiency of miscellaneous averments.— An indictment stating that, after the commission of the offense and before the finding of the indictment, defendant absented himself from the state and so continued for a certain time, sufficiently avers the exception to the statute of limitations. People v. Montejo, 18 Cal. 38. And it is sufficient, to negative prescription, to aver that the crime was never made known to any officer of the state of Louisiana, qualified and authorized to direct a prosecution. State v. Wren, 48 La. Ann. 803, 19 So. 745; State v. Strong, 39 La. Ann. 1081, 3 So. 266. But an information averring that accused, "within the space of six months last past," committed a specific offense is insufficient to show that the offense was committed within a period of six months before the laying of the information. Rex v. Breen, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 146; Rex v. Boutilier, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 82.

77. Com. v. T. J. Megibben Co., 101 Ky. 198, 40 S. W. 694, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 291; Combs v. Com., 84 S. W. 753, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 273; Com. v. G. W. Taylor Co., 43 S. W. 399, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1334; Newport News, etc., Co. v. Com., 14 Ky. L. Rep. 196 [approving Tully v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 154]. Where the date alleged is within the period of limitations, however, the facts showing the indictment to be a continuation of former proceedings need not be averred. Com. v. C. B. Cook Co., 102 Ky. 288, 43 S. W. 400, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1336. See also Rouse v. State, 44 Fla. 148, 32 So. 784, holding that where a prior information before a justice is relied on, it must be shown that the information in issue is based on or connected with such prior prosecution. See also Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 258.

The proceedings had under the first indictment need not be set out. State v. Duclos, 35 Mo. 237 [overruling State v. English, 2 Mo. 182, which held that such proceedings must be stated with all the certainty required in charging the offense].

78. Colvin v. State, 127 Ind. 403, 26 N. E. 888 (holding that there must be an averment as to how long accused remained concealed); Randolph v. State, 14 Ind. 232; Jones v. State, 14 Ind. 120 (averment merely that accused "did conceal the fact" of the crime aforesaid not sufficient). But see State v. Rook, 61 Kan. 382, 59 Pac. 653, 49 L. R. A. 186, holding that an information which contains an averment that "ever since the commission of the offense herein charged, the defendant has continuously so concealed himself that process could not be served upon him" contains a sufficient averment of concealment.

79. State v. Snyder, 182 Mo. 462, 82 S. W. 12, holding that it was proper to allege that defendant since a certain time had not been "an inhabitant of or usually resident within the state of Missouri."

80. Rosenberger v. Com., 118 Pa. St. 77, 11 Atl. 782.

81. State v. McCormack, 2 Ind. 305, holding that an indictment against a justice of the peace for failing to return a list of fines assessed by him need not contain the names of the persons against whom the fines were assessed. See also Rex v. Holland, 5 T. R. 607; 2 Hawkins P. C. c. 25, § 112.

10. Matters Unknown to Grand Jurors. Facts not vital to the accusation and constituting merely matter of description may be stated in an indictment as unknown to the grand jury if such is the case.[82] So when the names of third persons are unknown to the grand jury, it may be so alleged in the indictment.[83] Under the same rule it is sufficient to describe the subject of larceny with the certainty made possible by the knowledge possessed by the grand jury.[84] So also the mode and means by which a homicide was committed may be alleged to be unknown.[85] But a statement of inability to give a more particular description is essential.[86] Where the expression "to the grand jury unknown" is omitted after the first reference to third persons in the indictment, it has been held that the defect may be supplied by the use of the words in a subsequent portion of the indictment.[87] If a name subsequently become known to the prosecutor, defendant may secure information by a motion for a bill of particulars.[88]

F. Averments of Place and Time — 1. Allegations of Place[89] — a. In General. It is in general necessary to state the place at which every issuable and triable fact mentioned in the indictment or information occurred, in order that it may appear to have been within the jurisdiction of the court,[90] unless the necessity for such averment has been removed by a statute, as is the case in many states, which dispenses with the allegation and requires merely proof of venue on the trial,[91]

It is as essential in an information as in an indictment that a proper venue be laid. People v. Higgins, 15 Ill. 100; and other cases cited supra, this note.

An indictment of an accessary must lay the venue of the accessorial act according to the fact. State v. Ellison, 49 W. Va. 70, 38 S. E. 574.

An averment that the act was done within the jurisdiction of the court, without a statement of the place, is not sufficient. Early v. Com., 93 Va. 765, 24 S. E. 936.

91. Toole v. State, 89 Ala. 131, 8 So. 95 (holding that an indictment in a court of limited jurisdiction need not show that the or which provides that the indictment cannot be quashed or judgment stayed for want of a statement of the venue if the court, from the indictment or statement of venue in the margin, appears to have had jurisdiction.[92] Place need not be averred with regard to qualifying or limiting averments, the purpose of which is to show that the object acted upon was a proper subject of complaint, unless place is essential and would be susceptible of question if not averred.[93]

b. Sufficiency of Statement — (I) IN GENERAL. Place must be charged in an indictment with such clearness and certainty as to afford full notice of the charge and enable the accused to make his defense with reasonable knowledge and ability,[94] and to plead the judgment rendered upon the indictment in bar of any second indictment for the same offense.[95] Place must also be alleged with such certainty that it may be seen that the court has jurisdiction of the charge.[96] The common-law rules as to particularity of venue do not apply to offenses upon the high seas, since it was never possible that a jury should be drawn from the vicinity of the offense,[97] and it is sufficient, in the federal courts, to allege that an offense was committed on board an American vessel on the high seas within the jurisdiction of the court and the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, and not within the jurisdiction of any particular state of the Union, without more specific averment of locality.[98]

(II) STATUTORY PROVISIONS. Under the statutes of some states technical exactness of language is not required, but it is sufficient if it be understood from the allegation that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the court.[99] Where a form of allegation of venue is indicated by statute, the indictment is sufficient if the statute is followed.[1] An indictment is bad which lays the juris-

A direct averment that the offense was within the jurisdiction is not necessary where the court is of general jurisdiction and the offense is charged to have been committed diction in two vennes, one outside of the jurisdiction of the court, and leaves it uncertain in which jurisdiction it is intended to charge that the offense was committed.[2] Certainty to a reasonable extent is sufficient in allegations of place;[3] and such allegations may be aided by the necessary implications from other facts alleged,[4] or by matters of which the court will take judicial notice,[5] and will not be vitiated by matter which may be regarded as surplusage.[6] Repugnancy as to venue will vitiate the indictment.[7]

(III) AVERMENTS AS TO STATE. It is usually held unnecessary to mention the state in which the offense was committed,[8] such fact being regarded as supplied by other averments of the indictment from which the state appears,[9] or else as being matter of which the court will take judicial notice.[10]

which such term is equivalent to county.[12] In the federal courts, since the fact that an offense against the statutes of the United States was committed in a particular county is not essential to their jurisdiction, it is not in such cases necessary to aver the particular county, but it is sufficient to allege the district and state.[13] In some cases it has been held unnecessary to state the county where a more particular local description has been given,[14] as where the town is alleged;[15] but in such case it must be judicially known that the entire town lies in one county.[16]

(v) AFTER ORGANIZATION OF NEW COUNTY OR CHANGE OF BOUNDARIES. Where, after commission of the offense, and before the finding of the indictment, the place at which it was committed is incorporated into a new county, or becomes a portion of a different county through a change in the boundaries, it is proper to charge the offense as committed at such place with the further description that it is in the county in which the indictment is found.[17] Where an unorganized county is attached to an organized county for judicial purposes, the venue of the offense committed in the unorganized county should be there laid.[18]

(vi) MINOR DESCRIPTIONS WITHIN COUNTY OR PARISH. Where the place is alleged for the purpose of establishing venue merely, a statement of the county or parish is sufficient,[19] unless the territorial jurisdiction of the court is not as extensive as the county or parish, in which case the fact must be shown to be within the jurisdiction;[20] but when the place is essential to the description of the offense, it must be stated with such certainty as to make it appear that the offense has been committed.[21] In these cases, although the description is unnecessarily minute, it must be proved as laid.[22] During the period when the jury was drawn from the immediate neighborhood, it was necessary in England to add to the statement of the county the addition of the parish, vill, chapelry, or the like;[23] but under the present rule it is unnecessary, since the jurors come from the body of the county.[24] A place within a county which is unincorporated, but which has a name and limits known and recognized by the people of the county, may be described by such name.[25] It is not necessary that the town shall be stated if the place mentioned is equally specific.[26]

the federal courts, in which case possible exemptions of defendant from such jurisdiction need not be anticipated;[30] but if a federal court has jurisdiction only if the offense is committed outside the jurisdiction of any state, it must be averred that the offense was so committed.[31]

(B) Offenses Near Boundary Lines. In cases of offenses on or near the boundary lines between counties, concurrent jurisdiction is frequently conferred by statute upon the courts of either county, in which case an indictment in one county may aver the offense to have been committed in the other, but within the statutory distance from the line.[32]

(C) Offenses Begun in One County and Consummated in Another. In those cases in which acts going to make up the complete offense are performed in different counties, it would appear to be the better rule to lay the venue of the facts as they actually were committed,[33] otherwise where the offense is regarded as complete in the county in which the indictment is found, in which case it may be so laid. Of this character are indictments for the bringing into the county of goods stolen in another county.[34]

(D) Offenses on Vessels or Railroad Trains. By statute it is sometimes provided that offenses upon vessels or railroad trains may be charged as having been committed in any county through which the vessel or train passes.[35] Where an extraterritorial jurisdiction is conferred upon the courts of the counties of a state with regard to offenses committed on vessels or railroad trains, the indictment must set out the facts upon which such jurisdiction is invoked.[36]

(IX) REFERENCE TO CAPTION, MARGIN, OR COMMENCEMENT. Where the venue has been well laid in the margin, it is regarded as sufficient to refer to it in the body of the indictment by such words as "in the county aforesaid" or "then and there,"[37] and the same is true when the county has been mentioned in the offense itself, it is sufficient to lay it on any day previous to the finding of the indictment, and during the period within which the offense may be prosecuted.[45] In the federal courts a failure to state the particular day on which the offense was committed is regarded as a defect in form merely, if time is not of the essence of the offense, and hence not material under the statute providing that no indictment shall be held insufficient for formal defects.[46] The line of attendant circumstances imposing criminality should be laid as of the time of the offense and not of the time of the finding of the indictment.[47] When the time becomes material, either as constituting an element of the crime or as affording to the accused a bar to the proceeding, it must be accurately stated, and a variance between the allegations and the proof is fatal.[48] So an act prohibited by statute on certain days only must be charged as having been committed on one of such days.[49] Where an act is by statute made criminal if committed within a certain period, it is sufficient that the date alleged appears to be within such period, although there is no specific averment of such fact.[50] Where time is to be proved by record, as on an indictment for perjury, the date must be truly laid, and a variance will be fatal.[51] However, in perjury, where the charge is not based on a record or other writing, and the statement alleged to have been false would have constituted perjury whether made on the date laid or on the date proven, the allegation of time is immaterial.[52]

b. Statutory Provisions. By the statutes of some states it is provided that no indictment shall be deemed invalid or otherwise affected by omission to state the time at which the offense was committed, unless time is of the essence of the offense. Under such statutes an entire omission of a statement is not fatal.[53] Other statutes, variously worded, agree in effect that an indictment shall be regarded as sufficient if it shows the offense to have been committed prior to its finding.[54] Under such statutes some time must be alleged,[55] although some courts hold it sufficient to state the year only,[56] or to charge generally that the offense was committed before the return of the indictment.[57] Under such statutes it is also decided that an imperfect statement of time will not vitiate an indictment.[58]

that where the laying of a date after the finding of the indictment is apparently a clerical error it may be rejected, and the defect is not fatal,[61] or that the defect is cured by a specific allegation that the offense was committed prior to the finding of the indictment.[62] Where a day certain is laid before the finding of the indictment, a later date may be rejected as surplusage.[63]

(II) "On or About." At common law, since it was held necessary to allege the offense to have been committed on a day certain, an allegation that an offense was committed "on or about" a certain day was regarded as insufficient.[70] But under the statutes now generally prevalent rendering a statement of the precise time of the offense immaterial, save where the time is an ingredient of the offense, together with statutes providing that the indictment shall not be held invalid for formal defects, it is usually sufficient to state that the offense was committed on or about a particular day,[71] some of the cases holding that the words "or about" may be rejected as surplusage,[72] even in the absence of statute.[73] Where the day is essential to the description of the offense, however,

(III) IMPOSSIBLE OR FUTURE DATES. Where the date is laid on an impossible day the indictment is, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, insufficient;[75] and under this rule an indictment laying the offense on a future day is fatally defective.[76] The indictment will not, however, be vitiated if the date may be rejected as surplusage.[77]

(VI) INDICTMENTS OF ACCESSARIES. On an indictment of an accessary the time of commission of the offense by his principal must be laid with the same certainty as in the indictment of the principal.[83]

f. Continuing Offenses. Where the offense consists of a succession or continuation of acts not limited to any particular day, it is proper to allege it as having been committed on a certain day named, and on divers days and times between such day and the day of finding the indictment, or any other specific subsequent day prior thereto;[84] but the period within which the acts are charged to have been committed must be precisely limited by the indictment[85] and the evidence confined to such period.[86] Although a continuando is employed, the offense must be charged as of a particular date,[87] except where the act cannot be logically and correctly described as having been done on some particular day or on some continuous days.[88] If the continuando is improperly laid, the indictment is not invalidated for that reason, where a day certain is alleged, and the continuando may be rejected as surplusage.[89]

g. Allegations Where Recent Statutes Define or Alter the Offense. Where the prohibiting statute was recent, it was, at common law, usual to allege expressly that the offense was committed after the making of the statute; but where the statute was ancient it was not usual, and apparently in no case necessary.[90] Where, however, within the period of limitations prescribed for an offense, its definition or punishment is changed by statute, the time of commission of the acts charged becomes of the essence of the offense and must be averred, although a statute may provide that where not of the essence an averment of time is immaterial';[91] and the same rule applies where there are two statutes in effect in reference to the same offense, the later of which changes the nature of the offense or its punishment.[92] In the case of offenses laid with a continuando, the indictment is not invalidated by the fact that during the period laid the statute on which the indictment is based has been repealed or altered, since the time laid during which the statute relied on was not in effect may be disregarded;[93] and the same rule applies where the offense is laid as beginning before the taking effect of the statute punishing it.[94] But a specific date alleged must not be prior to the taking effect of the statute on which the indictment is based,[95] even where, by statute, the omission of the date or an imperfect statement thereof is immaterial.[96]

3. Repetition of Place and Time — a. Necessity — (1) In General. In indictments for serious offenses, particularly those which at common law are felonies, the averments of time and place must be repeated to every issuable and triable fact,[97] but the same nicety is not required in indictments for minor offenses.[98] If time and place are formally laid to all the acts charged to have been done, the averment need not, however, be repeated to the effect of such acts,[99] or the conclusions drawn therefrom;[1] nor need time be averred with regard to qualifying or limiting averments, the purpose of which is to show that the object acted upon was a proper subject of complaint, unless time is essential and would be susceptible of question if not averred.[2] In case certainty results from the grammatical construction of the language employed, making possible no other construction, it

(II) STATUTORY PROVISIONS. In many jurisdictions it is provided that time and place, when once laid, need not be repeated.[5]

b. Sufficiency — (I) IN GENERAL. Certainty to a common intent is sufficient in a repetition of time and place,[6] it being in general sufficient to employ the expression "then and there,"[7] or to refer to a time or place mentioned as "said"[8] or "aforesaid,"[9] or to a time as "then."[10] In some cases it is sufficient to employ the conjunction "and,"[11] although the earlier authorities are to the contrary,[12] and the safer practice is to employ the phrase "then and there," although in some cases equivalent expressions have been used.[13]

11. Smith v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 442, 37 S. W. 743, holding that "then and there" need not be repeated in the charge as to intent, where the charge as to intent was coupled with the charge as to the act by the conjunction "and."

(II) Acts to Be Charged as Simultaneous. In case the acts charged must be alleged to have been done simultaneously, the words "then and there" must be employed instead of repeating the time and place.[14]

(III) Effect of Double Antecedents. If two times or places have been previously mentioned, and afterward a part only is laid "then and there," the indictment is defective because it is uncertain to which it refers,[15] the rule being equally applicable in case uncertainty results as to place[16] or time[17] alone; and in case "aforesaid" or "said" is used as an expression of reference instead of "then and there."[18] But the mere fact that two times[19] or two places[20] have been mentioned will not invalidate the indictment where the reference must obviously refer to but one of them.

G. Description of the Person Accused[21] — 1. In General. The indictment or information must describe the accused by his true name, if known,[22] including his christian name,[23] in the absence of a statute dispensing with the necessity;[24] and it must be directly charged that the person named committed the offense,[25] although in some jurisdictions it is held that the formal charge need not be in the commencement of the indictment or information where the allegations point out accused with due certainty as the party committing the offense.[26]

2. Name by Which Defendant Is Commonly Known. A description of defendant by the name by which he is commonly and generally known is sufficient,[27] although it may be a nickname;[28] and a person may be indicted under his ordinary name, although it be alleged that his true name is unknown.[29] A christian name employed need not be the first, if it be the one selected by accused as that by which he will be known.[30]

3. MIDDLE NAMES.[31] Since the law knows of but one christian name, the improper insertion or omission of middle names[32] or initials of other names[33] may be disregarded.[34] The same theory has led to an indictment being held bad which set out merely the middle name.[35]

4. INITIALS. The common-law rule was that the use of initials, instead of the full christian name of defendant, was insufficient,[36] unless the accused had no other name;[37] but this rule is now departed from,[38] and especially where statutes provide for the correction of misnomer, the question has become immaterial in many jurisdictions,[39] although in some jurisdictions it must be averred that the christian name is to the jurors unknown.[40]

5. USE OF ALIAS. Where there is doubt as to which of two names is the one by which the accused is usually designated, they may be laid under an alias dictus, this rule applying to christian as well as surnames.[41] The incorrectness

This case, however, held that defendant was not prejudiced by the reading of an indictment which charged his former convictions under various names, although the convictions were admitted. Construction of alias.— Where, in an indictment, the name of accused is given, followed by "alias" and another name, "alias" stands for "alias dictus," and indicates, not that the person referred to bears both names, but that he is called by one or the other. Ferguson v. State, 134 Ala. 63, 32 So. 760, 92 Am. St. Rep. 17.

of the alias is not material,[42] and the addition of other names under an alias will not render the indictment uncertain.[43]

6. Where Name Is Unknown. In case either the surname or the christian name of the accused is to the grand jury unknown, such fact should be stated and a fictitious name supplied.[44] In such case it should appear that the name could not have been discovered by the use of reasonable diligence,[45] and some matter of description by which accused may be identified must be averred,[46] showing that the grand jurors are able to identify the person whom they are indicting.[47] This rule, however, does not apply under some statutes where only the given name is averred to be unknown.[48] A name cannot be charged both as known and unknown.[49]

7. Additions and Descriptions. Where an offense may be committed by persons of a certain description only, defendant must be shown to have been of that description at the time of the act;[50] otherwise matter of description is unnecessary.[51] The accused need not be distinguished from other persons of a similar name.[52] While the "statute of additions,"[53] requiring the addition to be given defendant of his estate, degree, or mystery, is held by some authorities to have been adopted as a part of our common law,[54] in most jurisdictions, however, it has been abrogated or is not regarded,[55] although similar statutes have been in force in several states.[56] Where this or similar statutes are in force the degree or mystery must be stated as of the time of the indictment.[57] Where an addition is unnecessarily employed, it is held that it must be proved as laid.[58]

8. Residence. The residence of accused need not be stated save in cases where it is necessary in order to show the jurisdiction of the court in which the indictment is found.[59]

9. Municipal Corporations. A municipal corporation may be indicted in its own name, and not in that of its inhabitants,[60] or it may be indicted in the name of its officers as such.[61]

10. Public Officers. In indictments of public officers, as such, for malfeasance, the territorial division over which their authority extends should be so described as to distinguish them from others of like kind.[62] Members of a public board indicted for misdemeanor in office may be described as a board, although the entire membership thereof is not indicted.[63]

11. Private Corporations.[64] An indictment against a corporation should be against it in its corporate name.[65] A distinct and positive averment of its existence is generally all that is necessary, and it is not necessary to state the time and place of its becoming a corporation.[66]

12. Partners. Members of partnership should be indicted as individuals,[67] but they may be described as members of a partnership.[68]

13. Joint Defendants.[69] In the indictment of persons jointly, their names should be so separated by the use of the conjunction "and," or a similar connective, as to remove all uncertainty as to the individual names;[70] but the use of a comma may supply the omission of a connective.[71]

14. Errors in Repetition of Name. Variance in the name of defendant, as stated in other parts of the indictment, is immaterial where the name is correctly stated at the beginning of the charge and the identity of defendant meant is certain.[72]

Repetition of alias.— An indictment against

H. The Gist or Substance of the Offense — 1. Necessity of Specific Statement. From the rules of particularity and certainty already noted,[73] the indictment or information must state specifically all the facts and circumstances necessary to constitute the offense charged.[74] It is not sufficient to charge generally that defendant committed a certain offense.[75] For example, a charge of corruption in office,[76] or of extortion,[77] must state the facts in which the corruption or extortion consists. From this rule it follows that defendant cannot be charged generally with having committed a felony[78] or misdemeanor[79] without a statement of the facts and circumstances. The omission of material matter in the description of an offense cannot be supplied by a charge that the act was committed "contrary to law,"[80] or "unlawfully,"[81] or "against the peace," etc.[82] In case an offense is defined by generic terms, the species must be stated in the indictment.[83]

2. Manner and Means. The particular manner or means employed in the perpetration of the offense need not be averred,[84] unless it is the manner in which[85] or the means by which the act is done that imposes criminality,[86] or unless the means must be averred in order that it may be seen which of two or more distinct offenses is charged.[87]

3. Offenses Composed of Multiplicity of Acts. Where the charge is of a complicated nature composed of a number of minute acts, or where the offense includes a continuation of acts, it is unnecessary to set them out in the indictment.[88]

A M, which in the beginning alleges that defendant, under a certain alias, committed the crime charged, is sufficient, although in succeeding statements the alias is omitted, but defendant is described as "the said A. M." Moree v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 83 S. W. 1117.

4. Acts Criminal by Reason of Special Circumstances. When the act as to which the offense is predicated is not in itself unlawful, but becomes so by reason of other facts connected with it, such facts must be alleged.[89] So when a statute enacts that any one of a certain class of persons who shall do or omit a certain act, under certain circumstances, shall be guilty of a crime, the indictment must describe the person indicted as one of that class and aver that he did or omitted the act under the circumstances making it criminal.[90] Where an indictment is based upon violation of a duty imposed against common right, it is necessary to state specifically the facts upon which such duty arises, unless it is imposed by a law or circumstances of which the court will take judicial notice.[91] For example, where a corporation is indicted for failure to maintain a ferry, it must be shown how defendant, under its charter, became subject to the duty.[92]

5. Knowledge, Notice, and Request — a. Necessity of Averment of Knowledge. Where a particular knowledge is essential to the commission of an offense, it must be averred that accused had such knowledge,[93] unless the statement of the act itself necessarily implies a knowledge of its illegality.[94] So where knowledge is part of a statutory description of an offense it must be alleged,[95] although it is otherwise when a statute prohibits generally and is silent as to knowledge,[96] or where the gist of the offense is neglect or carelessness.[97] Under these rules guilty knowledge must be averred in indictments for uttering forged instruments,[98] or obtaining property under false pretenses,[99] or illegal voting,[1] or, in some jurisdictions, but not in all, sale of liquor to minors,[2] or obstructing an officer,[3] or sale of unwholesome food,[4] and many similar offenses,[5] unless, under the particular statute, lack of knowledge on the part of defendant is no defense.[6] When a man commits an offense, and in pursuing his criminal purpose does that which constitutes another and different offense, it seems that it is not necessary to aver a guilty knowledge as to the resulting offense.[7]

gist of the offense form a sufficient averment of knowledge;[9] but the averment must be clearly referable to the facts as to which knowledge is essential.[10]

c. Necessity of Averring Notice and Request or Demand. In those cases in which the violation of a duty based upon notice is the gist of the offense, the giving of the notice must be averred.[11] The same rule applies where a request or demand is necessary to raise the duty.[12] Where a public officer is charged with breach of a duty arising from certain facts which, from his position, he will be presumed to know, it is not necessary to aver notice of such facts.[13]

6. INTENT — a. Necessity of Allegation of Intent. Although an evil or malicious mind or will is necessary to the commission of most offenses, it is not necessary in all cases to aver a guilty intent as a substantive part of the crime in giving its technical description in an indictment or information.[14] In those cases in which the act necessarily includes the intent, it is sufficient to aver the act in apt and technical terms and the intent will be inferred.[15] But where the common law or statute makes a particular intention essential, or there is an attempt, not accomplished, to do a criminal act, and the evil intent only can be punished, it is then necessary to allege the intent with directness and precision,[16] although there are cases in which an attempt to commit a wilful and malicious crime imports ex vi termini an intent to commit that crime.[17] A specific intent which is made part of the offense by the statute creating it must be charged;[18] as where the intent with which an act is done brings it within a statute punishing as a felony that which at common law was but a misdemeanor,[19] or where an act is criminal only if done with a particular intent.[20] So where the act forbidden by a statute is not necessarily criminal, and there are no express words in the statute making it so, there must be a charge in the indictment that it was committed with an evil intent or wilfully.[21] As a rule, if the statute creating the offense is silent concerning the intent, no intent need be alleged.[22] In indictments of principals in the second degree or accessaries before the fact in case of crimes requiring a specific intent, it is necessary to ascribe that intent to the acts of the principal in the second degree or accessary in aiding, abetting, inciting, etc.[23]

b. Wilful or Malicious Nature of Act. In all cases of felony in which malice is the gist of the offense, the malice must be averred in the indictment.[24] This is the case whether the offense exist at common law, or be one of statutory creation,[25] and it is not necessary that the malicious intent be made an essential ingredient in the constitution of an offense created by statute by the express words of the act.[26]

c. Sufficiency of Allegations of Intent. It is sufficient to state in general and appropriate words the intent essential to the existence of the particular crime charged.[27] Where the intent is described in a statute by different terms, stated disjunctively, the indictment may employ them all conjunctively.[28] In charging an intent to defraud, it is not necessary to set out the evidentiary facts going to prove the intent by which the fraud was to be effected.[29] The word "wilfully" is not of necessity inserted in the accusatory part of the indictment.[30] Statutes frequently employ such words as "wilfully" or "maliciously" as descriptive of the offense, in which case such words must be employed in the indictment,[31] or words of equivalent import.[32] It has been held that words which import an exercise of the will will take the place of the word "wilfully."[33] As a general rule the lack of consent of the person injured need not be averred.[34]

7. Felonious or Otherwise Unlawful Nature of Act — a. Necessity of Charging Act to Have Been Felonious. In general, in all indictments for felonies, the criminal act must be alleged to have been feloniously done,[35] unless the necessity has been removed by statute.[36] This is true, although the act was not a felony at common law, and is made so by statute,[37] unless by statute it is provided that the common-law form of indictment may be retained.[38] In some states it is now held that the term "felony," having lost its ancient English signification and acquired the meaning of a crime punishable by death or imprisonment in a state prison, the reason for the rule requiring the use of the word "feloniously" has ceased, and with it the necessity of such employment;[39] and it has been said that where, under the statute defining an offense, felonious intent is made no part of the crime, but the crime is complete without it and depends upon another and different criminal intent, it is not necessary to aver that the act was feloniously done.[40] In some jurisdictions it is held under statutes abolishing technicality of criminal pleading that "feloniously" need not be employed in an indictment where it is omitted from the statutory definition of the offense.[41] In others it is held still necessary wherever the offense is a felony.[42] An indictment of an accessary to a felony must allege that he "feloniously" aided and abetted,[43] and in charging a conspiracy to commit a felony, the word "feloniously" must be employed to characterize the intended act.[44] "Feloniously" need not be laid to matters of proof which may be omitted from the indictment[45] or to matter of aggravation.[46]

b. Necessity of Charging That Act Was Unlawful. Unlawfulness, when an essential element of the definition of the offense, must be averred either expressly or by the use of such terms or such a statement of facts as conclusively imply it;[47] but where the term is not contained in the definition of a statutory offense, it need not be employed in an indictment.[48]

another statute.[62] It makes no difference under what particular section of a statute the indictment may have been drawn, nor are the infirmities of such section or of the indictment thereunder material, provided the indictment be good under some other section of the statute which is valid.[63] The fact that the circumstances under which a particular offense is committed render it punishable under a statute applicable to other offenses does not render it necessary to charge the crime as committed under such statute;[64] and it is sometimes provided by the statute defining an offense that, when the facts constituting the offense defined also constitute an offense under other statutes, they shall be punishable under such other statutes.[65]

b. What are private statutes.— While the distinction between public and private statutes in this regard is not well defined, a private statute is, it seems, one which relates to a breach of public duty, punishable by an indictment according to the general law, but which imposes the duty in that particular instance on the individuals charged by law against common right, and confined in its operation to particular persons and places. State v. Cobb, 18 N. C. 115, holding an act making it an indictable offense to fell timber in the channel of a particular creek in a particular county is a public law. The mere fact that the statute appears in, and as a section of, a private one, does not make it private. It is well settled that one part of the statute may be private, while another part may be public and general, or local. It not infrequently happens that public statutes contain provisions of a private nature, and vice versa. State v. Wallace, 94 N. C. 827, holding that an act prohibiting the sale of liquor within a certain distance of a locality named in the act is a public local statute, and need not be specially averred in an indictment under the act. A statute which forbids any person to sell or give away intoxicating liquors within a certain county is a public statute, although of local application, and need not be specially pleaded in an indictment. Powers v. Com., 90 Ky. 167, 13 S. W. 450, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 964. And see, generally, STATUTES.

on.[68] The date of the taking effect of the statute need not be averred in order to show that the offense was committed before its enactment.[69]

(II) SUFFICIENCY. It is not necessary to employ the technical designation of the legislature in referring to its enactments.[70] A reference to a section of the statute will be construed as meaning the section then in force.[71]

(III) EFFECT OF MISRECITAL. A misrecital of a statute may be rejected as surplusage where the conclusion is generally as "contrary to the statute in such case made and provided,"[72] although a material variance has been held fatal where the conclusion is "contrary to the form of the said statute."[73] And where reference to a statute is made for the purpose of supplying a description of the offense, an error in the reference is fatal.[74] The misrecital must be material.[75] Where the title of a public statute is misrecited so as to make it meaningless, the defect is fatal.[76]

c. Sufficiency of Statement — (I) NECESSITY OF STATING ESSENTIALS. An indictment for an offense created by statute must be framed upon the statute, and this fact must distinctly appear upon the face of the indictment itself; and in order that it shall so appear, the pleader must either charge the offense in the language of the act, or specifically set forth the facts constituting the same.[77] The general rule is that the charge must be so laid in the indictment as to bring the case precisely within the description of the offense as given in the statute, alleging distinctly all the essential requisites that constitute it.[78] Such facts must be forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished,[8] and must state all the material facts and circumstances embraced in the definition of the offense.[9] Ingredients which do not enter into the statutory definition must be added.[10] In case a material error occurs in the language of the statute as published, an indictment is not sufficient which follows the published statute.[11]

(B) Identification of Offense. The same certainty is required in indictments on statutes as at common law,[12] and where the statute does not define the act or acts constituting the offense so as to give to the offender information of the nature and cause of the accusation, other averments conveying such information must be added,[13]

even when the offense is not capital.[14] The indictment must also be framed with such certainty that a judgment may be pleaded in bar to any subsequent prosecution for the same offense.[15] So, where a statute is elliptical and the true intent must be ascertained from a consideration of the other portions thereof, or other statutes, the indictment must allege the crime according to the true intent of the statute.[16]

(c) Statement of Manner, Means, and Other Circumstances. Particulars as to manner or means, place or circumstance, need not in general be added to the statutory definition,[17] except as necessary to distinguish one instance from another,[18] and in certain other cases where the rule of strict certainty has been applied when the common law furnishes a close and appropriate analogy.[19] The language of the statute cannot be followed with regard to offenses analogous to common-law libel, in which the substance of the words or writing must be set out.[20] Such are the cases of false pretense when pretenses are required to be set out;[21] or of sending threatening letters where the letters must be set out,[22] or embezzlement, in which it is usual to allege the species, number, and value of the articles embezzled.[23] Such averments as to time, place, person, and other circumstances as are necessary to identify the particular transaction are of course necessary.[24]

Where a statute creates an offense composed of different ingredients, and in the same statute makes each one of those constituents a distinct offense, it is necessary, in defining and making out the offense in a charge, that the particular constituent or constituents relied on be specified with sufficient accuracy to enable defendant to meet the charge and raise it as a bar to a subsequent prosecution. The rule is that while in framing an indictment on a statute, all the circumstances which constitute the definition of the offense in the statute itself, so as to bring the accused precisely within it, must be stated, yet no other description of the thing in which the offense was committed is necessary to be stated than that contained in the statute itself unless necessary to fix the grade of the offense. with common-law forms;[25] and where a statute neither creates an offense nor increases its penalties, but divides a common-law offense into degrees and diminishes the punishment, an indictment in the common-law form is sufficient without the addition of the circumstances which determine the degree.[26]

(E) Where Statute Employs Technical or Generic Terms. Where technical terms or legal conclusions are used, there should be a specification of the facts to inform the accused of the charge which he must meet;[27] and where the definition of the offense includes generic terms the indictment must state the species.[28] Where a general term used is succeeded by words more precise and definite, the indictment must charge the offense in the more particular words,[29] and the same is true when the general term follows the particular terms,[30] although when the offense is prohibited in general terms in one portion of the statute, and in another portion, entirely distinct, the acts of which the offense consists are specified, it is not necessary that anything but the general description should be set out in an indictment.[31] It is not necessary to explain the meaning of words used in the statute.[32]

(F) Where Statutory Language May Include Innocent Acts. It is not sufficient to charge an offense in the language of the statute alone, where by its generality it may embrace acts which it was not the intent of the statute to punish.[33] If the statute is confined to certain classes of persons or to acts done at some particular time or place, the indictment must show that the party indicted, and the time and place when the alleged criminal acts were perpetrated, were such as to bring the supposed offense directly within the statute.[34] And where a statute makes various classes of persons subject to its provisions, the indictment should aver the facts showing in which class defendant lies.[35] But it is not necessary to describe particular classes of persons further than in the terms of the statute.[36]

(G) Where Statutory Language Is Indirect or States Conclusion. Where a charge in the language of the statute charges a mere legal conclusion,[37] or where it connects the accused with the crime by mere inference or argument,[38] a more particular statement of the facts is necessary.

(H) Presumption in Favor of Sufficiency of Statutory Language. Since as a general rule a description of the offense in the words of the statute defining it is sufficient, it has sometimes been held that the duty rests upon defendant to show that from the obvious intention of the legislature or known principles of law the particular case forms an exception to the general rule.[39]

d. Exceptions and Provisos in Statute — (I) NECESSITY OF NEGATIVING EXCEPTIONS. It is necessary to negative an exception or proviso contained in a statute defining an offense where it forms a portion of the description of the offense, so that the ingredients thereof cannot be accurately and definitely stated if the exception is omitted.[40] Where, however, the exception or proviso is separable from the description and is not an ingredient thereof, it need not be noticed in the accusation, being a matter of defense.[41] As the rule is frequently ing that the simple use of the word "broker" is a sufficient description of an offender to bring him within a statute making certain acts by bankers, brokers, etc., misdemeanors.

But this is not an accurate statement, since the rule is to be determined, not by the position of the exception or proviso, but by its nature as constituting an element of the description of the offense.[43] An exception in a subsequent section or statute may be so clearly connected with the description contained in a preceding section that it must be negatived;[44] and conversely, matter in the enacting clause may be so independent of the description that it will form a matter of defense.[45] While it has been held that a reference from the enacting clause to a clause containing the proviso will demand that the latter be negatived,[46] such rule has not been generally followed and a reference will not render it imperative to negative a proviso not a portion of the description.[47] A proviso which withdraws a case from the operation of the statute need not be negatived.[48] Where there are several species of the same general crime with varying circumstances of aggravation and subject to a gradation of punishments, it is not necessary to negative such circumstances.[49]

(II) Sufficiency of Negation. As a rule any words which exclude the exception with certainty are sufficient;[50] but where the negative is unnecessarily particular, the state is concluded by it if it fails to specifically negative all the exceptions.[51] An express negation is not necessary where the charge preferred, from its nature, conclusively imports a negation.[52] Where exceptions are enumerated disjunctively in the statute, they should not be charged conjunctively in case the effect will be to alter the statutory description of the offense.[53] An exception containing an affirmative limited by a negative may be negatived by placing the word "not" before it, although the result is apparently a double negative.[54]

e. Validity of Indictment Upon Statute as Indictment at Common Law. It may be regarded as well settled that an indictment which describes an offense punishable at common law only may be regarded, if otherwise sufficient, as a valid indictment for the offense at common law, although it concludes "against the form of the statute."[55] The conclusion may be rejected as surplusage.[56] This rule cannot of course apply to indictments for acts made punishable specially by statute and for which an indictment at common law no longer lies.[57] An

Where there are two persons of the same name residing in the same town, such as father and son, and the latter employs the addition of "junior" to his name, such addition should be used to distinguish him from his father, and in its absence it will be presumed that the father is intended. State v. Vittum, 9 N. H. 519; Rex v. Bailey, 7 C. & P. 264, 32 E. C. L. 604. But compare Rex v. Peace, 3 B. & Ald. 579, 5 E. C. L. 334, holding that an indictment for an assault of the person injured is by statute in some states rendered immaterial when the indictment is otherwise sufficient to identify the act.[77] When the name of a person injured has been once correctly stated, an error in its subsequent repetition is usually regarded as immaterial,[78] particularly where, by the use of the connectives "said" or "aforesaid," it is evident that the same name is intended.[79]

2. Corporations, Associations, Partnerships, Etc. Where the name is that of a corporation, partnership, joint stock company, or other association of individuals, such fact should be stated;[80] and in the case of partnerships or joint owners, the rule at common law is that the names of the individual partners or owners should be set out.[81] By statute this rule is altered in some jurisdictions, and the name of a partnership is sufficient without the names of its members.[82] In describing a corporation a statement of the name by which it is commonly known is usually regarded as sufficient.[83] At common law there is some conflict as to whether, on E was sufficient, although there were two persons of that name, mother and daughter, and the assault was on the daughter.

when a corporate name is pleaded, the fact of incorporation must be averred. Some cases hold it unnecessary;[84] but the better rule apparently is that it should be averred,[85] although it need not be averred whether incorporation was under a general or special act.[86] And where the insertion of the corporation's name is material only as a portion of the identification of the res affected, it is not necessary to make any allegation of the legality or regularity of the corporate organization.[87] Proof of a corporation de facto will support an averment of corporate existence.[88]

J. Description and Ownership of Property — 1. Real Property. In charging those offenses which must be committed with relation to real property, it is necessary to describe the property with such particularity that it may be identified, and that it may be seen from the face of the charge that it is the subject of the offense.[89] Certainty to a common intent is necessary.[90] In many cases no greater particularity is required in the description of real property than the statement of the town in which it is located. This has been held to be sufficient in indictments for keeping or maintaining as a nuisance a particular building,[91] or for an attempt to destroy a dam.[92] So in an indictment for obstructing a way,[93] or in an indictment for not repairing a highway,[94] it is not necessary to set out the termini of such highway or ways.

2. Personal Property — a. In General. A description of personal property must be given whenever the particular kind, quantity, number, or value of the property enters into the nature of the offense,[95] or where the property must be that since the court will take judicial notice of the names of corporations chartered by the legislature, a misnomer is fatal on demurrer or motion to quash.

described in order to inform the accused of the particular offense with which he is charged.[96] Such certainty only is required as the nature and circumstances of the case will permit;[97] and while the description must be certain as to a common intent,[98] it need not be minute,[99] especially where minuteness might be impossible and might occasion a fatal variance between the allegations and the proofs,[1] in which case it may be stated that a more particular description than that given is not in the power of the grand jurors.[2] Under this rule coin or bank-notes may be generally described,[3] it being especially so provided by statute in some jurisdictions.[4] The description should be that which is commonly used.[5] A mere mechanical mixture should be described by the names of its ingredients;[6] but not so, it seems, of a mixture which is commonly known by an individual name.[7]

b. Value, Number, and Amount. The value of property must be stated where it forms an element of the offense.[8] Where articles are of different kinds, their value should be alleged separately, otherwise a conviction cannot be had on failure of proof as to any article.[9] But the value may be alleged collectively where the articles are all of one kind.[10] Money being in itself a measure of value, it is not necessary to add to its description an averment of its value.[11]

3 Ownership. As an element of the identification and definition of the offense, it is usually necessary to name the owner of the property affected.[12]

Where the owner is deceased the ownership of personal property should be laid in his representative and not his estate.[13] By statute it is sometimes rendered proper to lay a married woman's property in herself or her husband.[14]

K. Description of Written or Printed Matter — 1. Necessity of Setting Out Exact Words. Where a writing is of the gist of the offense, it must be set out verbatim,[15] and it is not sufficient to state merely its effect.[16] This is the case in common-law indictments for forgery,[17] threatening letters,[18] libel,[19] counterfeiting,[20] and other offenses the gist of which consists of the writing. But where the writing is regarded merely as an incident which enhances the punishment,[21] or is relied on as proof or evidence of the fact charged, and not as in itself constituting the offense,[22] it may be described in a general manner and need not be so set out. So where a writing is employed as part of a false pretense, it need not be set out unless a legal description is given it in the indictment, the correctness of which it is essential for the court to decide.[23] In some cases, although the writing is of the substance of the offense, it need not be set out in hæc verba, as where it is too obscene to be placed upon the records;[24] or where, as may be the case in forgery, the forged instrument has been destroyed or has remained in the possession of the accused, or for other good reasons cannot be produced.[25] In these cases the matters in excuse must be averred in the indictment.[26] The question of what is fit to be set out in the record is within the discretion of the trial court.[27] Where the indictment is on a lost or destroyed instrument, it is necessary that the substance be set out.[28]

2. Averments Introductory to Description. Where it becomes necessary to set out an exact copy of an instrument, the copy should be introduced by words importing that it is such.[29]

3. Sufficiency of Description or Incorporation. Only that part of the writing in which lies the offense need be set out, unless the residue is essential to the true sense.[30] Matters which do not form a part of an instrument need not be set out,[31] such as indorsements,[32] revenue stamps,[33] marginal letters and marks used to render forgery more difficult,[34] or ornamentations.[35] It has been held sufficient, at least as against demurrer, that the writing be attached to the indictment as an exhibit instead of being set out in the body thereof.[36] The meaning of misspelled words in the matter set out may be explained by innuendos.[37] Where such fact is otherwise sufficiently apparent, it is, it seems, unnecessary to allege that an instrument is under seal.[38]

4. Writings in Foreign Language. Where the writing is in a foreign language its tenor should be set out in English, and it is not sufficient to incorporate it in the indictment untranslated.[39]

5. Errors in Description. Where an instrument is described with unnecessary particularity, the proof must correspond to the allegations.[40] So, although it may be unnecessary to set an instrument out in hæc verba, yet if the pleader

Sufficiency of allegation.— The words "in substance and to the effect following" do not require a verbatim recital (People v. Warner, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 271); nor do the words "in manner and form following" (Rex v. May, 1 Dougl. (3d ed.) 193, 1 Leach 227), nor "following effect" (Rex v. Bear, 2 Salk. 417). A description that an instrument purports a particular fact means that what is stated as the purport appears on the face of the instrument. Downing v. State, 4 Mo. 572, holding that where a note is described as purporting that a certain sum would be paid the holder, the indictment was not supported by proof of a note payable to bearer, although the legal effect was the same.

attempts to do so he must do so correctly.[41] The earlier cases apply the rule of requiring the instrument to be exactly set out with great strictness,[42] but the more modern rule is that a slight variance in setting out a written instrument according to its tenor is not fatal.[43] So where the omission or addition of a letter does not change the word so as to make it another word, the variance is not material.[44] If a count in an indictment for perjury undertakes to set out continuously the substance and effect of what defendant swore when examined as a witness, it is necessary, in support of this count, to prove that in substance and effect he swore the whole of that which is thus set out as his evidence, although the count contains several distinct assignments of perjury.[45]

L. Aggravated Offenses — 1. Statement of Offense. In charging those offenses which become offenses of greater degree or subject to a greater punishment by reason of having been committed under aggravating circumstances or with particular intent, it is necessary first to charge the minor offense with its appropriate description, and then allege the matter of aggravation.[46]

2. Aggravation by Former Offenses or Convictions — a. Necessity of Alleging Former Conviction. Where, in case of repeated convictions for similar offenses, the statute imposes an additional penalty, an indictment for a subsequent offense must allege the prior convictions, since such convictions, although they merely affect the punishment, are regarded as a portion of the description of the offense.[47] Hence when there are two or more counts in an indictment charging similar offenses and a conviction is had on each, the additional punishment cannot be assessed as to the offenses described in the subsequent counts, as if the conviction on the first count was a previous conviction.[48] But where the punishment for Constitutional requirements that crimes shall be fully and plainly described to the accused render invalid a statute making it unnecessary to allege previous convictions on which the extent of the punishment depends (Com. v. Harrington, 130 Mass. 35); but such provisions do not render it necessary to set forth the record of a former conviction with particularity (Com. v. Holley, 3 Gray (Mass.) 458).

the second offense does not exceed that which may be legally imposed for a first conviction, allegation and proof that defendant has previously been convicted or sentenced would be prejudicial to him and need not be made.[49] Where the prosecution is for the first offense, such fact need not be stated.[50]

b. Form and Sufficiency of Allegation — (i) In General. It is necessary that the allegations bring the accused clearly within the intent of the statute prescribing the additional punishment.[51] So, if such is a statutory element, it must appear that the offense was committed after a prior conviction.[52] Where the statute merely imposes an increased punishment on a second conviction of felony, it is not necessary to charge the particular offense on which the first conviction was based.[53] After setting up the prior convictions, it is not necessary to also allege the conclusion of law that defendant was a habitual criminal.[54]

(ii) Record of Prior Conviction. At common law it was necessary to recite the record of the first conviction and to show that it was a conviction by judgment;[55] but this rule is now modified by the statutes of the various states, and it is generally unnecessary to set forth the record with particularity,[56] although there must be such a statement of the record as to enable the accused to find it and to prepare for a trial of the question whether he is the convict,[57] and the sentences should be set forth with such exactness as to show that they bring the con-

(III) DISCHARGE AFTER SERVICE OF SENTENCE. Where the discharge of the accused after his prior conviction, either by pardon or the expiration of his sentence, is made material by the statute imposing the increased punishment for a subsequent conviction, it is necessary to aver a discharge in one of such manners.[60]

3. EFFECT OF DEFECTIVE ALLEGATION OF MATTERS IN AGGRAVATION. Where a count contains a full and precise charge of the lesser offense, a defect as to matter alleged in aggravation affords no ground for quashing the indictment or arresting judgment thereon.[61] So the insufficiency of an allegation of a prior offense does not vitiate the indictment as to the main offense.[62] But it has been held that an indictment filed with the intent of charging a third offense, but insufficient as to one of the prior offenses, could not be used to support a conviction or sentence as of a second offense.[63]

M. Joint Indictments. Where defendants are indicted together for a joint offense, it need not be alleged in terms that they acted together,[64] nor that they acted severally.[65] After a joint charge, counts containing individual charges need

Where a nolle prosequi is entered after verdict as to the matter in aggravation, it would seem that judgment will not therefore be arrested, if an offense formally and sufficiently charged remains after the matter in aggravation is stricken out. An indictment of one as accessary before the fact is, as in the case of other indictments,[86] good under the modern statutes of criminal procedure, if sufficiently certain to notify defendant and the court of the nature of the crime charged, and to enable defendant to plead the judgment in bar of the subsequent prosecution.[87] In the absence of statute authorizing a contrary procedure, an accessary must be indicted as such, whether he is indicted with the principal felon or separately.[88] All the material averments of an indictment against the principal must be embodied in the indictment of an accessary before the fact,[89] and the same par-ticularity is required.[90] The commission of the offense by the principal must be alleged,[91] and his name must be stated where known;[92] but if unknown it is sufficient that such fact be alleged.[93] It is not necessary to set out the conviction of the principal.[94] The use of the word "accessary" is not necessary.[95] It would seem that in the same indictment a person cannot be charged as accessary both before and after the fact;[96] such a charge being, in case different punishments are provided, a charge of distinct offenses.[97] The charges against the principal and the accessary may be included in the same count, the offense by the principal being first stated and then the charge against the accessary.[98] Although the distinction between principals and accessaries before the fact is retained, an indictment is not vitiated by a conclusion charging an accessary before the fact as having committed the principal offense, in case the punishment is the same and the facts showing him to have been an accessary are set out.[99]

2. Under Statutes Abolishing Distinctions. In many jurisdictions the distinctions between principals and accessaries before the fact have been abolished by statute, and where such statutes exist, an accessary before the fact may be indicted as if he were a principal[1] without setting out the facts by which he aided and Averment of intent.— In an indictment of an accessary before the fact, where intent has been properly charged as to the principals, it is a sufficient averment as to the accessaries that they be charged with having wilfully and feloniously advised and encouraged the principals to commit the crime "in manner and form as aforesaid." Jones v. State, 58 Ark. 390, 24 S. W. 1073, holding such reference sufficient to incorporate the technical words as to murder "with malice aforethought, and with premeditation and deliberation."

An ambiguous expression in the indictment charging defendant with having conspired to procure a murder, and that the murder was done by someone who was counseled and procured by him to do the act, will not render the indictment bad where the meaning is plain to a person of ordinary intelligence. 98. Com. v. Glover, 111 Mass. 395 (holding that the use of the phrase "contrary to the form of the statute" in the statement of the acts of the principal did not cause the indictment to contain two counts, one against the accessary before the fact and the other against the principal); U. abetted,[2] or advised and procured[3] the commission of the crime. In some cases the statutes particularly provide that an accessary before the fact may or shall be indicted as a principal;[4] but even, in the absence of such a provision, in case the distinctions between principals and accessaries have been abolished, the indictment, it has been held, may properly be drawn as against a principal.[5] The effect of these statutes is to place felonies in the status at common law occupied only by treasons and misdemeanors,[6] in which case accessaries before the fact were not recognized, but persons aiding and abetting or advising and procuring were punished as principals.[7] Under statutes of the kind just considered it is usually held that the indictment may allege the matter according to the fact or charge the accessary as principal.[8] Whichever of such methods is adopted, the accessary before the fact may be convicted without alleging or proving the prior conviction of the principal.[9] An indictment charging an accessary before the fact as a principal should be as full, specific, and complete as if the charge were against the principal;[10] and in case the charge against the accessary is in a single count of an indictment containing other counts, nothing needed should be embraced by words of reference to the preceding count.[11] The circumstances of the offense may be described as they actually occurred, as in the case of indictments of accessaries at or before the fact. But the conclusion should be for the actual offense of which the principal is charged.[12] If defendant is not charged, in general terms, as a principal, but it is attempted to allege the facts showing that he aided and abetted, or encouraged and advised, the perpetration of the crime by another, such facts must be stated as would formerly have constituted defendant an accessary.[13] If the pleader is doubtful as to whether the accessary was present aiding and abetting or was absent, both of such modes should be alleged.[14]

P. Indictments of Accessaries After the Fact. In an indictment charging a person with being an accessary after the fact to a felony, it must be alleged that a felony was committed by the principal, and the facts constituting such felony must be alleged with the same certainty as if the principal alone were indicted;[15] and after such allegation knowledge of the principal offense on the part of the accused must be averred.[16] Such averment may be by reference to the count in which the principal offense is charged.[17] In stating the facts showing that defendant was an accessary after the fact, the statutory definition of such accessaries may be followed.[18] Exceptions to such definition should be negatived,[19] but not such as are contained in separate sections of the statute.[20] The more general rule is that it is sufficient to state merely that the accused did aid, etc., the principal offender without setting forth the particular acts or alleging the character of the aid rendered.[21] The time and place at which the aid was rendered must, however, be shown.[22]

Q. Indictments For Attempts.[23] Although it has been said that an indictment for an attempt need not set forth the attempt with as much exactness as would be required in an indictment for the commission of the offense,[24] such is not a general rule.[25] Both the criminal intent[26] and an overt act adapted and intended to effectuate the purpose must be specifically alleged and proved,[27]

together with facts showing the particular crime attempted.[28] This rule is, however, departed from in many cases based upon statutes punishing attempts, in which case it is held sufficient to follow the language of the statute without an averment of the particular manner in which the attempt was made.[29] It is not necessary to allege that the act attempted was prohibited by law if, from the face of the indictment, such fact appears.[30] An indictment charging a completed offense is usually regarded as sufficient to sustain a conviction for an attempt.[31]

R. Indictments For Solicitation. In some jurisdictions solicitation to commit an offense is regarded as an attempt and indictable as such, while in others the solicitation must be indicted as a distinct offense.[32] Where a solicitation is indictable as such, it has been held that it need not be alleged that the solicitation was successful.[33] On indictment of a solicitation as an attempt, the particular manner in which the attempt was made need not be pointed out by the indictment;[34] but the solicitation must be alleged as an overt act.[35] An indictment for an offense may combine in one count the acts which accused did himself toward the commission of the crime and his solicitations of another to aid in the crime, and the state cannot be compelled to elect.[36]

S. Construction and Form of Separate Counts[37] — 1. In General. Where several counts are employed in the indictment to describe the same transaction in different ways, each count should charge defendant as if he had committed a distinct offense,[38] the counts being regarded as separate indictments.[39] For this reason defects in some of the counts in an indictment will not affect the validity of the others,[40] and any repugnancy between two counts may be removed by a nolle prosequi as to one.[41] Failure to charge as a distinct offense, however, is regarded as a defect in form not vitiating the indictment under statutes providing that formal defects may be disregarded,[42] and while the offense should be described as if the count were a distinct indictment, it should not be charged that the offense itself is distinct and separate from those described in the other counts.[43]

2. Introduction, Conclusion, and Connection of Separate Counts. As has been seen, each count should allege that it is presented upon the oath of the grand jurors, and is properly introduced with the statement that the "jury, upon their oath, do further present;"[44] but indictments have been sustained, although two counts were inartistically run together in one sentence without such punctuation as would indicate the end of one and the beginning of the other.[45] The use of the words "against the peace," etc., or "against the form of the statute," or as it is called, the "contra formam" clause, does not itself convert a recital into a separate count;[46] nor does the fact that a paragraph begins, "and the jurors, etc., on their oath aforesaid do further present," where facts sufficient to constitute a complete charge have not been averred.[47] The caption and venue need not be repeated in each count.[48] In some states the words "against the peace and dignity," etc., need not be repeated in the conclusion of each count if the whole indictment so concludes,[49] and each count of an indictment or information need not be signed by the prosecuting officer.[50] It is not necessary that the counts be numbered,[51] nor need they be upon the same sheet of paper,[52] and when prepared on separate leaves, they need not be fastened together.[53]

3. Aider by Other Portions of the Indictment. Each count must be a complete charge of crime in itself,[54] and must contain a complete description of the Introduction of a charge against accessaries after an allegation possessing the requisite particularity and formality as to the principal in his commission of the offense does not cause the indictment to consist of two counts. State v. Hopper, 71 Mo. 425.

offense,[55] since in the absence of express reference, one count is not aided by others.[56]

4. Reference From One Count to Another — a. Propriety. One count may refer to another to save unnecessary repetition.[57] Thus an averment of the impaneling and oath of the grand jury,[58] or an averment of time and place,[59] may be supplied by reference to preceding counts. The same is true of an allegation of the value[60] or ownership[61] of goods stolen.[62]

b. Necessity. In order that one count of an indictment may be aided by another, there must be an express reference thereto.[63]

c. Sufficiency. Reference must be made with such definiteness and specificness that the matter referred to is clearly and accurately incorporated in the count;[64] hence qualities and adjuncts averred to belong to a subject in one count of an indictment, if separable from it, are not sufficiently alleged in a subsequent count merely introducing the subject by reference as the same subject "before mentioned,"[65] or "said,"[66] and the same insufficiency results in such a case

T. Surplusage — 1. Effect — a. In General. The fact that an indictment contains immaterial and unnecessary matter will not render it bad where such matter may be rejected as surplusage,[72] the rule being that if, after the rejection of surplusage, enough remains to constitute a valid charge of the offense, the indictment will be sustained.[73] In larceny, where there is but one count alleging the taking of several articles, and portions of the count are invalid by reason of failure to allege the value of the articles, such portions may be rejected and the

Ct. 651, holding that when the first count of an indictment properly charges the larceny of specific chattels, alleging the value and ownership thereof, and the second count charges the felonious receiving of "the said" chattels, enumerating them, the words "the said" refer to the first count, and the allegations as to ownership and value set forth in that count are to be read into the second count. indictment sustained as to the residue.[74] An indictment is not vitiated by tautology or repetition,[75] and unless an indictment is so prolific as to prejudice a defendant in making his defense, the prolixity cannot be urged as a defect.[76] An entire count in an indictment may be rejected as surplusage where the indictment is complete without it.[77] Statutory provisions that no indictment shall be deemed invalid for any surplusage or repugnant allegation, if sufficient is alleged to indicate the crime and person charged, are common;[78] but such statutes do not authorize the rejection of portions of an indictment in such a way as to alter its meaning and render it sufficient.[79]

b. Matter Rendering Indictment Uncertain. In some instances an indictment may be made good by rejecting as insensible and useless such words as obstruct its sense,[80] if it is not contradictory.[81] So objection cannot be made to an indictment on the ground of the insufficiency or uncertainty of allegations which may be rejected as surplusage.[82] For example, where an indictment charges a specific sale of intoxicating liquors sufficiently, and then avers sales to "divers other persons," such latter allegation may be rejected.[83]

c. Disjunctive Statements. An indictment will not be held bad, as in the disjunctive or alternative, where the alternative statement may be rejected as surplusage.[84]

d. Repugnant Statements. In case repugnant and inconsistent averments may be stricken out as surplusage, the indictment is not vitiated thereby.[85] So an indictment is not vitiated by repugnancy in non-traversable matter laid after a scilicet.[86] Under the same rule the term "feloniously" used in charging a misdemeanor may be rejected as surplusage;[87] or a conclusion contra formam statuti, where a common-law and not a statutory offense is described.[88] A description of the manner in which an offense was committed, which shows that in fact there was no offense, cannot, however, be rejected to sustain a good general charge.[89]

b. Unnecessary Matter of Description. Allegations which, although unnecessary, are descriptive of the identity of that which is legally essential to the charge cannot be rejected as surplusage.[4] So when the color or brand of an animal stolen is unnecessarily stated, it cannot be rejected as surplusage.[5] But there are apparent exceptions to this rule, as where the term "goods and chattels" has been rejected in an indictment describing bank-notes erroneously as "goods and chattels" instead of "property."[6] Allegations of value are not usually regarded as descriptive of identity.[7]

d. Contradictory Averments. A material allegation which is sensible and consistent in the place where it occurs, and is not repugnant to any antecedent matter, cannot be rejected as surplusage for the reason that there is, in a subsequent portion of the indictment, an inconsistent allegation which cannot be rejected.[10]

U. Bill of Particulars. Where the charges of a valid indictment are nevertheless so general in their nature that they do not fully advise the accused of the specific acts with which he is charged, so that he may properly prepare his defense, the court has power to order a bill of particulars to be furnished him.[11] In some states, however, the practise of allowing bills of particulars in criminal cases is not recognized.[12] A bill of particulars will not supply the omission of an essential averment in the indictment,[13] although it may remove an objection upon the ground of uncertainty.[14] A motion for such bill must be made before plea to the merits;[15] it should be in writing,[16] verified by affidavit,[17] and should specifically point out all the particulars desired.[18] The granting or refusal of such a motion rests within the discretion of the court to be exercised with reference to the circumstances of the particular case,[19] and the ruling of the trial judge upon the motion will not be disturbed by an appellate court where such discretion has not been abused.[20] Where a bill of particulars is granted, the state should be required to furnish one as definite as it has the means of doing;[21] but the state is not bound to furnish a specification of the evidence which it will produce.[22] The determination of whether the bill is sufficient rests within the discretion of the trial court.[23] The bill not being a part of the record is not subject to demurrer.[24] Hence an indictment good upon its face is not rendered demurrable[25] or subject to a motion to quash[26] thereby. VI. JOINDER OF PARTIES.

A. In General. Save in the case of those offenses which cannot be committed singly,[29] parties jointly concerned in the same offense may be indicted jointly or separately.[30] Separate indictments for the same offense need not allege that the offense was joint.[31]

B. Statutory Provisions. Statutes requiring the finding of but one indictment against two or more persons jointly concerned in the same offense are not construed to prevent the bringing of separate indictments when good reason exists.[32]

C. Necessity of Joint Indictments. There are some offenses which cannot be committed by one person, and hence cannot be made the basis of an individual indictment.[33] But as a general rule in the prosecution of a single crime the state may charge the perpetrators severally or jointly.[34]

D. Propriety of Joint Indictments — 1. IN GENERAL. The rule is well settled that several may be jointly indicted for offenses arising wholly out of the same joint act or omission.[35] Of this nature are indictments for larceny[36] and many other offenses which may be committed by persons acting in concert.[37] But where the offense charged does not wholly arise from the joint act of all the defendants, but from such act joined with some particular act or omission of each defendant, without which it can be no offense, the indictment must charge them severally.[38]

2. Offenses Which Cannot Be Committed Jointly. Where an offense is of its nature several and distinct to such a degree that it cannot be committed by two or more jointly, it of course follows that there can be no joinder of defendants in the same indictment.[39] This rule does not, however, prevent the joinder of principals in the first and second degree in those cases in which the actual criminal act must be done by a single individual.[40]

3. Different and Distinct Offenses. Defendants who merely commit similar crimes and not the same crime cannot as a rule be joined in the same indictment.[41] There should be no joinder in the absence of concert of action or common design,[42] although in some cases it is held that several offenders may be charged with different offenses of the same or kindred nature in separate counts

Burglary and larceny.— Com. v. Darling, 129 Mass. 112; Rex v. Butterworth, R. & R. 387.

41. Alabama.—Townsend v. State, 137 Ala. 91, 34 So. 382; McGehee v. State, 58 Ala. 360; Lindsey v. State, 48 Ala. 169; Elliot v. State, 26 Ala. 78.

Missouri.— State v. Bridges, 24 Mo. 353.

North Carolina.— State v. Hall, 97 N. C. 474, 1 S. E. 683, holding that an indictment charging two distinct boards of officers sustaining distinct relations to a municipal government, with distinct offenses, could not be maintained.

Pennsylvania.— See Com. v. Ziert, 5 Lanc. L. Rev. 138.

England.— See Reg. v. Devett, 8 C. & P. 639, 34 E. C. L. 936.

See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Indictment and Information," § 332.

42. State v. Edwards, 60 Mo. 490 (holding, however, that where it appeared that defendants so jointly indicted were guilty of acts which would have sustained a conviction against them upon separate indictments, the supreme court would not interfere with a of the same indictment,[43] or even in the same count in case the charge is indicated to be several as to each, by the use of some such word as "severally" or "separately."[44]

4. Joinder of Principals and Accessaries, or Principals in the Second Degree.[45] A charge against a principal and an accessary before the fact may be included in the same indictment[46] and in the same count.[47] The same rules are applicable to the joinder of principals in the first and second degrees.[48] In misdemeanors, although there are in law no accessaries, the actual perpetrator and those aiding and abetting him may be charged together in the same count.[49] In any case the accessary cannot complain of a joinder if he is awarded a separate trial.[50] judgment against them under a statute providing that defects or imperfections in the indictment are to be regarded as immaterial, unless to the prejudice of the substantial rights of defendant upon the merits); State v. Nichols, 12 Rich. (S. C.) 672.

5. Joinder of Husband and Wife.[51] Husband and wife may be joined in the same indictment.[52]

43. Redman v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 429 (sustaining an indictment charging a defendant in one count with larceny, and, in another, another defendant with receiving stolen goods); Com. v. Mullen, 150 Mass. 394, 23 N. E. 51; Com. v. Gillespie, 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 469, 10 Am. Dec. 475; Reg. v. Cox, [1898] 1 Q. B. 179, 18 Cox C. C. 672, 67 L. J. Q. B. 293, 77 L. T. Rep. N. S. 534; Rex v. Kingston, 8 East 41, 9 Rev. Rep. 373 (holding such joinder not ground for demurrer, but that the indictment might be quashed in the discretion of the court). And see U. S. v. Dietrich, 126 Fed. 664, holding, however, that two persons could not, in a single count, be charged, one with agreeing to receive a bribe as a member of congress, and the other with agreeing to give it.

Larceny and receipt of stolen goods.— Redman v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 429; Com. v. Mullen, 150 Mass. 394, 23 N. E. 51; Com. v. Darling, 129 Mass. 112; Com. v. Adams, 7 Gray (Mass.) 43; State v. Woodard, 38 S. C. 353, 17 S. E. 135; Vaden v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1894) 25 S. 46. California.— People v. Cryder, 6 Cal. 23.

Georgia.— Loyd v. State, 45 Ga. 57.

Idaho.— Territory v. Guthrie, 2 Ida. (Hasb.) 432, 17 Pac. 39, holding that such a joinder may be permitted, although the statutes require an indictment to charge but one offense.

Maine.— State v. Carver, 49 Me. 588, 77 Am. Dec. 275.

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Devine, 155 Mass. 224, 29 N. E. 515.

Montana.— State v. King, 9 Mont. 445, 24 Pac. 265.

Ohio.— Hartshorn v. State, 29 Ohio St. 635, so holding, although the statute provided that the aiding, abetting, or procuring of the commission of a crime was a distinct offense.

United States.— U. S. v. Berry, 96 Fed. 842.

52. Massachusetts.— Com. v. Tryon, 99 Mass. 442 (liquor nuisance); Com. v. Murphy, 2 Gray 510 (selling liquor).

E. Operation and Effect of Joint Indictments. An indictment, although joint in form, is regarded as a several charge against each defendant,[53] save in those cases where the agency of two or more is of the essence of the offense,[54] and all or part may be convicted or acquitted,[55] or the several defendants may be convicted of different degrees of the offense if its nature permits.[56] In case no joint offense is established, the prosecution may be compelled to elect as to which defendant it will proceed.[57] An improper joinder may be cured by a nolle prosequi as to all but one defendant, in which case the indictment will stand as to him as if it had been a separate indictment.[58]

VII. JOINDER OF OFFENSES.

A. In the Same Count — 1. In General. An indictment or information must not in the same count charge defendant with the commission of two or more distinct and substantive offenses, and in case it does so it is bad for duplicity,[59]

Missouri.— State v. Bentz, 11 Mo. 27, bawdy-house.

New York.— Goldstein v. People, 82 N. Y. 231.

Virginia.— Com. v. Ray, 1 Va. Cas. 262, assault and battery.

53. Connecticut.— State v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 55.

Indiana.— State v. Winstandley, 151 Ind. 316, 51 N. E. 92, holding that where two defendants joined in a false affidavit for a continuance, signing it together, being sworn together, and one certificate of oath being attached, an indictment charging both with perjury is not joint only, but joint and several.

Kentucky.— Shelbyville, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 9 Ky. L. Rep. 244, an indictment not vitiated by a charge against a defendant who was not guilty. See also Weatherford v. Com., 10 Bush 196, holding that judgment would not be arrested on the ground that the offense charged could not be jointly committed if the sole defendant convicted was properly charged.

Canada.— Reg. v. Blackie, 1 Nova Scotia Dec. 383.

See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Indictment and Information," §§ 334, 335.

Illustrations.— For example an indictment is bad which charges gaming, and keeping a public place or house used as a place for gaming (State v. Howe, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 260); selling spirituous liquors on Sunday and giving spirituous liquors on Sunday (Com. v. Fleece, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 429); a sheriff with refusing to execute process and with making a false return (State v. Walworth, 58 Vt. 502, 3 Atl. 543); taking a female under eighteen, without her father's if the offenses are either inherently repugnant, or so distinct that they cannot be construed as different stages in one transaction, or involve different punishments.[60] A substantive offense is one which is complete of itself and is not dependent upon another.[61] An involved or complicated statement of facts constituting but one offense will not, however, invalidate the indictment;[62] nor will the unnecessary repetition of the same substantive charge in different forms,[63] or in a more direct manner,[64] or matter merely in amplification of the charge,[65] or synonymous terms,[66] nor a description of one place in different manners.[67] So also a count is not rendered bad by matters merely in aggravation.[68] In some consent, for the purpose of prostitution "and" concubinage (State v. Goodwin, 33 Kan. 538, 6 Pac. 899); behaving rudely in a meeting-house and interrupting public worship (Com. v. Symonds, 2 Mass. 163); assault with intent to maim, and assault with intent to kill (State v. Leavitt, 87 Me. 72, 32 Atl. 787); stabbing with intent to commit murder, and also the inflicting with a dangerous weapon of a wound less than mayhem (State v. Johns, 32 La. Ann. 812); theft of a horse and theft of property of the value of twenty dollars (Hickman v. State, 22 Tex. App. 441, 2 S. W. 640; Heineman v. State, 22 Tex. App. 44, 2 S. W. 619); two fraudulent dispositions of mortgaged personalty (Wood v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1905) 84 S. W. 1058); destroying another's real property, and also pulling down a fence and injuring vegetables (Ellis v. Com., 78 Ky. 130); two distinct nuisances (State v. Wester, 67 Kan. 810, 74 Pac. 239; Chute v. State, 19 Minn. 271); two distinct statutory breakings (Hawkins v. Com., 70 S. W. 640, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1034; State v. Huffman, 136 Mo. 58, 37 S. W. 797); a common-law nuisance and a violation of a regulation of a board of health (Reed v. People, 1 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 481); distinct offenses against election laws (State v. Brown, (Miss. 1900) 28 So. 752); a riot and an assault (State v. McCormick, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 572, 10 West. L. J. 408); taking part in auditing and payment of fraudulent claim against a county and presenting such a claim for audit and payment (People v. Stock, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 147, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 94, 12 N. Y. Cr. 420); or grand larceny in the first degree, by taking property of the value of more than five hundred dollars in any manner whatever; and grand larceny in the second degree, by taking property of any value from the person of another (People v. Frazier, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 280, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 446).

And see Com. v. Tiernan, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 545, sustaining an indictment charging that defendant "did unlawfully gamble by playing at a game of cards, and then and there unlawfully did bet and wager on the sides and hands of those that then and there did play."

63. California.—People v. Montejo, 18 Cal. 38, holding that an indictment charging that defendant did receive and buy stolen property did not charge two offenses.

Connecticut.— State v. Teahan, 50 Conn. 92, count charging "selling and exchanging" intoxicating liquors.

Louisiana.— State v. Buford, 52 La. Ann. 539, 26 So. 991 (count for stabbing with intent to kill which charged defendant with "stabbing Alce Mazerac with intent to murder," and with "cutting and thrusting with intent to murder"); State v. Bogan, 2 La. Ann. 838; State v. Fant, 2 La. Ann. 837 (did sell, give, and deliver in payment intoxicating liquors).

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Farren, 9 Allen 489 (allegation that defendant sold "adulterated milk, to which a large quantity, that is to say, four quarts, of water had been added") Com. v. Brown, 14 Gray 419.

Missouri.— State v. Jones, 106 Mo. 302, 17 S. W. 366, indictment charging that defendant set fire to and burned a certain barn.

64. Traylor v. State, 101 Ind. 65, holding that an indictment charging the procuring an abortion, and closing "in manner and form and by the means aforesaid, did then and there . . . kill and murder her, the said Anna Poe," was not bad for duplicity as charging also involuntary manslaughter.

65. State v. June, 62 Kan. 866, 61 Pac. 804; Van Syoc v. State, (Nebr. 1903) 96 N. W. 266.

66. People v. McLaughlin, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 691, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 1108, 15 N. Y. Cr. 302, sustaining an indictment for libel which alleged that the libel was published in a "circular and handbill," since in the ordinary use of terms "circular" and "handbill" are synonymous. See also Saylor v. Com., 57 S. W. 614, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 472, indictment burning of a "barn and stable."

67. Rawson v. State, 19 Conn. 292 (sustaining an allegation that defendant kept a "house, store, and shop" for the purpose, etc.); Conley v. State, 5 W. Va. 522 (sustaining an indictment for a sale of liquor at defendant's "storehouse and dwelling house," as meaning a sale at one place which was both a storehouse and a dwelling).

68. State v. Dearborn, 54 Me. 442 (charge that defendant assaulted a deputy sheriff and hindered him in the performance of his official duties); State v. Brown, 8 Humphr.

cases it has been held that where two distinct offenses are charged to have resulted from one act, the indictment may be sustained.[69] The rule that distinct misdemeanors may be charged in separate counts of an indictment[70] has in some instances been relied on by the courts to sustain indictments charging such misdemeanors in the same count where they were of the same nature and description;[71] but the authority of such cases as establishing a general rule may be well doubted. A felony and a misdemeanor cannot be charged in the same count.[72]

2. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. By statute it is sometimes provided that offenses may be joined in one count.[73] In some states it is provided that where several offenses are of the same character and subject to the same punishment, defendant may be charged with either in the same count in the alternative;[74] but under such a statute separate offenses cannot be charged conjunctively.[75]

3. DISTINCT FACTS CONSTITUTING SINGLE OFFENSE. If the facts charged constitute but a single offense, the indictment is not duplicitous;[76] hence acts of omission or commission which form component parts of or represent preliminary stages of a single transaction may be charged together,[77] and the same is true of acts enter-

Aiding escape of prisoner charged with a felony, and aiding the escape of one charged with a misdemeanor, where made respectively a felony and a misdemeanor, cannot be charged together; hence a count that defendant aided in the escape of a person who was at the time under arrest for both a felony and a misdemeanor is bad for duplicity. State v. Harrison, 62 Mo. ing into a single and continuous transaction.[78] So, although the deposit of a single letter concerning a lottery in the mails is a distinct offense, the deposit of numerous letters at about the same time, and constituting a single transaction, may be charged in one count.[79] As analogous to cases of conspiracy, in which it is held that an indictment is not double, although it is alleged that the conspiracy was to commit two or more specific offenses,[80] it has been held that an indictment against a police officer for failure to suppress disorderly houses within his district is not duplicitous by reason of the fact that it is alleged that he failed to suppress numerous houses;[81] or that in amplification of the charge it is further alleged that he failed to arrest the keepers of such houses or to arrest the inmates as vagrants.[82] So also a public officer may be charged with having accepted a single fund formed from joint contributions of persons seeking protection from criminal prosecution.[83]

4. SAME OFFENSE IN OR BY DISTINCT WAYS OR MEANS. Where a single offense may be committed by several means or in several ways, it may be charged in a single count to have been so committed, if the ways or means are not repugnant;[84] and by statute it is sometimes provided that the different means may be

5. Alternative Phases of Same Statutory Offense. It is a well settled rule of criminal pleading that when an offense against a criminal statute may be committed in one or more of several ways, the indictment may, in a single count, charge its commission in any or all of the ways specified in the statute.[86] So where a penal statute mentions several acts disjunctively and prescribes that each shall constitute the same offense and be subject to the same punishment, an indictment may charge any or all of such acts conjunctively as constituting a single offense.[87] Or as the same rule is frequently stated, where a statute makes either

Other illustrations.— Where a murder may have been committed by two different means, its commission by both means may be charged in one count of the information, and proof of either one will sustain the allegation (State v. Hewes, 60 Kan. 765, 57 Pac. 959); so an indictment may charge that the death of the deceased was caused by defendant's beating and starving her, and by hanging her with a rope (Medina v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 380); or that accused killed deceased by striking him with a hand ax and some hard instrument, a better description of which was unknown to the grand jurors, and by drowning deceased and placing him in water (Hughes v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 60 S. W. 562), or that shooting with a pistol and with a shotgun caused death (State v. Kirby, 62 Kan. 436, 63 Pac. 752). See also Homicide, 21 Cyc. 843.

although a disjunctive particle is not employed in the statute, but a conjunction is used which is disjunctive in sense.[89] But the rule does not apply if repugnancy results from charging the acts conjunctively,[90] or where each act enumerated in the statute is complete in itself and punishable by a distinct and specified penalty, the penalty for one act not being applicable to all the acts mentioned in the statute;[91] or where the acts are distinct and are performed at different times.[92]

to kill,[5] or an assault upon several at the same time,[6] or a breach of the peace,[7] or an attempt to kidnap.[8] But it has been held that the malicious wounding of two persons should not be charged in one indictment, although the wounding may have been contemporaneous;[9] and the killing of two persons as distinct transactions cannot be joined in one count.[10] These rules are not altered by a statute providing that in case of several charges against any person for the same act or transaction, or for two or more acts or transactions connected together, or for two or more acts or transactions for the same class of crimes or offenses which may be properly joined, the whole may be joined in one indictment in separate counts instead of several indictments.[11] So a defendant may, under a statute punishing the solicitation of contributions for political purposes from public employees, in one count be charged with either receiving or soliciting contributions from more persons than one.[12]

b. Offenses Involving Distinct Articles of Property. The indictment may allege without duplicity a single act affecting more than one article of property.[13] Thus two animals may be alleged to have been injured,[14] or the cutting of trees on distinct tracts of land if, in point of time and circumstances, done as a single act,[15] may be charged in one count. Under this principle larceny of several articles at one time and place may be charged in one count,[16] and likewise taking of several articles in robbery,[17] or the embezzlement of distinct articles[18] of the property of several owners.[19] But in one count defendant cannot be charged with having received different articles of stolen property from different individuals.[20] The larceny,[21] or embezzlement,[22] or robbery[23] of different articles may be charged, although a different punishment follows the taking of them severally. Where larceny is a continuing transaction there may be several distinct asportations, but they may be joined in one count for the final carrying away.[24]

8. Offense Composed of Continuous Acts. In those cases in which the offense is of a continuing nature and properly laid under a continuando,[25] it may be so laid without being duplicitous.[26] Thus a series of embezzlements may be charged where the separate offenses form steps in a continuing and systematic plan of peculation.[27] So where an offense consists in keeping a gaming-house, and not in each separate act of gaming committed therein, an indictment is not double which charges the keeping of a house upon a certain day and alleges several distinct acts of gaming before and after the day stated.[28] But a series of acts cannot be charged together in one count of an indictment where each of such acts constitutes a distinct offense.[29] So if an offense is not continuing in its nature and is laid upon successive days, the averments as to successive days cannot be rejected if constituting complete charges of distinct crimes.[30] An exception to this rule exists in some cases of indictments for a sale of intoxicating liquors, in which it has been held that where a sale constituting a distinct offense is sufficiently charged, allegations of other sales do not invalidate the indictment;[31] and in some states sales to several at one time and place in violation of liquor laws may be charged in the same count.[32]

9. Offenses Including Other Offenses. An indictment is not double because it charges several related acts, all of which enter into and constitute a single offense, although such acts may in themselves constitute distinct offenses.[33] An indictment for an assault is not rendered double by reason of the fact that the assault is described with additional incidents of aggravation, such as a battery, or an allegation that it was with a dangerous weapon or an intent to commit a great bodily injury;[34] but the common-law offense of assault and battery cannot be charged with a statutory aggravated assault when not an element of the statutory offense.[35] In the case of crimes in the commission of which an assault is involved, both the assault and completed crime may be charged.[36] There are some instances in which two crimes are of the same nature and so connected that when both are committed they must constitute but one legal offense, in which case both may be charged in the same count.[37] Of this nature are indictments for burglary, which offense includes both the breaking and entering with intent to commit a felony, and the actual felony, such as larceny,[38] arson,[39] rape,[40] or an assault.[41] So in indictments for robbery, the assault and putting in fear may be alleged in connection with the taking and stealing of the property.[42]

10. Conspiracy and Overt Act. As a general rule an indictment for conspiracy to commit a crime is not regarded as duplicitous because the overt act is alleged as well as the acts constituting the conspiracy.[43]

the act as to which the offense is predicated, where the doing or causing or procuring it to be done is by the statute defining the crime made an offense of equal degree;[44] or where, in contemplation of the law, the doing and the causing or procuring are regarded as but different modes of committing the same offense.[45] But where the doing and the causing or procuring are separate and distinct offenses, they cannot be charged together in the same count without duplicity.[46] So on the principle that both acts are but different modes of proceeding in the commission of the same offense, it has been held proper to charge the promotion of a lottery and the aiding in its promotion,[47] keeping and assisting in keeping a nuisance,[48] or forging and wittingly assenting to forgery.[49]

description or inducement,[58] or which is merely indicative of the manner in which the offense was committed,[59] does not create duplicity. The same is true of averments incidentally describing an offense for which a conviction is not sought,[60] and which is not charged.[61] Hence an indictment will not be regarded as charging two similar statutory offenses where words are used which unmistakably designate the charge as for one of them, and which would have to be rejected were the charge held to be of the other.[62] So the fact that one offense is named in the indictment and another described is not duplicity.[63] But the fact that but a single offense is named will not remedy the fact that the indictment actually charges two offenses.[64]

14. Averments of Former Convictions. An allegation of a prior conviction, made for the purpose of increasing the penalty which may be imposed, does not render the indictment duplicitous, since defendant is not to be tried on such former charges.[65]

15. Construction of Count. In determining whether an indictment is duplicitous, an averment will be construed according to the context.[66] An indictment will not be made duplicitous through punctuation,[67] or a purely clerical error.[68]

16. Compelling Statement of Charge in Separate Counts. There seems to be authority authorizing a motion to compel the prosecution to separately state in separate counts all offenses which have been charged together in a single count of an indictment.[69]

permitted the pleader in setting out the same offense in different ways,[72] or the same transaction as different offenses[73] in separate counts of the same indictment to meet the possible proof.[74] In such case the necessary repugnancy between the separate counts is not an objection to the indictment.[75] By statute in some states it is provided that different offenses and degrees of the same offense may be joined in one information in all cases where the same might be joined by different counts in the same indictment.[76] There may be a misjoinder of counts, although some of the counts are defective.[77] This rule, however, would not prevail where the part supposed to produce the duplicity or misjoinder is mere surplusage.[78]

2. Different Descriptions of Same Offense — a. In General. It is proper to charge in various counts of an indictment the same offense as committed in various ways in order to meet the evidence which may possibly be adduced at the trial;[79] and a provision to such effect is frequently made in statutes which require the indictment to charge but a single offense.[80] An indictment so framed to meet the evidence may be sustained as against an objection made in any form, and whether the statute does or does not permit more than one offense to be charged in the indictment,[81] and the state will not be compelled to elect between the various counts before proceeding to trial,[82] nor will the indictment be regarded as charging a distinct and substantive offense, and any question as to its sufficiency is to be determined by its averments alone, the same holding is made.[93]

c. Charging Defendant as Principal and as Principal in the Second Degree or Accessary. At common law, under the rule that an accessary could not be tried without his consent until the conviction of the principal, it would seem that a joinder of counts charging defendant separately as principal and as accessary would be improper;[94] but under the statutes now generally prevalent, which have abolished the distinction between accessaries before the fact and principals with regard to the grade of the offense and the punishment, it is proper to charge defendant in separate counts both as principal and as an accessary before the fact,[95] or as principal in the first and in the second degree,[96] or, it has also been held, as accessary after the fact;[97] such an indictment being regarded as charging the same offense in different ways;[98] and for that reason the prosecution will not be compelled to elect upon which count it will proceed to trial;[99] nor is the indictment demurrable.[1] So also it is permissible, where defendants are tried jointly upon the same indictment, to charge them in separate counts alternative as principals and as accessaries before the fact;[2] or as principals in the second degree.[3] But when, by statute, the distinction is preserved between the principal and those who are accomplices to a crime, and they are regarded as guilty of separate offenses, the state may be compelled to elect as to which charge it will proceed, in case evidence would be admissible upon the count charging defendant as accomplice which would be inadmissible against him as principal.[4] So also under a statute making the burning or causing to be burned of a building punishable as arson, it has been held that the joinder of both charges in separate counts is improper.[5] A defendant cannot be charged as a principal and as accessary after the fact when the charges are for distinct degrees of an offense and require different proof.[6]

d. Different Descriptions of Third Persons. As a general rule the names of third persons affected by the criminal act or otherwise entering into its description may be stated differently to meet contingencies of the proof.[7] Thus it is proper to allege the name of a person murdered differently in separate counts.[8] Different ownerships may be laid to property stolen,[9] where the time and place are the same and the property such that it might have been taken at the same time.[10] The same rule applies in embezzlement[11] or arson,[12] or to the persons to whom false representations are made.[13] So also the possession of goods stolen may be variously laid.[14] In such case the state will not be compelled to elect as to the particular count upon which it will proceed to trial.[15] On a demurrer for the purpose of compelling an election, the state should make a showing that but one offense is intended to be charged.[16]

e. Necessity of Showing Relationship of Counts. It is proper that various counts charging the same transaction in different forms should be apparently for distinct offenses,[17] and for this purpose, and to obviate the technical objection of duplicity, it is usual to insert the word "other" before the subject of the offense in a second count,[18] but it is not indispensably necessary,[19] particularly where defects of form are by statute made immaterial;[20] and it is held that where the counts do not necessarily appear to be for the same offense, they will not be construed to be so in the absence of any necessity therefor.[21] Where, however, statutes require the indictment to state but one offense, but permit the same offense to be stated in different forms in separate counts, it should be apparent from the face of the indictment that the averments of the separate counts are descriptive of the same transaction;[22] and it has been held that an indictment apparently charging distinct offenses is demurrable.[23] For this purpose it is usually necessary to employ "said," "aforesaid," or similar relatives to connect the identifying facts of the succeeding counts with those first stated;[24] but the use of such connectives is not in all cases necessary where it is evident from the general structure of the indictment that the same offense is intended.[25]

Under the New York code of criminal procedure it is provided that where acts complained of constitute different crimes, such crimes may be charged in separate counts in one indictment. it develops at any time during the trial that the prosecution is in fact establishing different transactions, the court may at any time compel an election or quash the indictment.[29] Under this rule a count for stealing and a count for receiving stolen goods may be joined when they relate to the same goods,[30] such joinder being in some states specially sanctioned by statute,[31] or burglary and larceny may be joined;[32] but where an indictment charges counterfeiting and uttering it has been held that an election should be compelled.[33] So also an offense included in another[34] or incidental thereto[35] may be charged in conjunction with it. The same act may be alleged to have been actuated by different intents.[36] So in an indictment for burglary it may be charged that the breaking and entering was with intent to commit distinct felonies, such as larceny and murder.[37] When the procedure prescribed by statute concerning a particular offense shows that the prosecution is to be single, a joinder of other offenses is improper.[38] When it is provided by statute that specific offenses may be charged together it is of course unnecessary that the state elect when the offenses relate to the same transaction.[39]

b. Different Degrees of Same Offense. Where the different counts relate to the same transaction, the offense may be charged to have been committed in different ways for the purpose of meeting the evidence that may be adduced,[40] although the offenses are of different grades and call for different punishments.[41] So the different degrees of assault, as defined by statute, may be united in separate counts, provided they are charged to have been the result of the same act.[42] The fact that by statute homicide has been divided into degrees does not prevent the joinder in the same indictment of the common-law counts for murder.[43] At common law an objection to an indictment upon the ground of a misjoinder of charges of distinct degrees of the same offense cannot be made by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment, but may be raised only by a motion to quash or to compel an election.[44]

c. Completed Offense and Attempt. A completed offense and an assault with intent to commit such offense may be charged in separate counts when relating to one transaction,[45] and an election cannot be compelled.[46]

d. Conspiracy and Overt Act. A conspiracy and an overt act committed in pursuance of such conspiracy may as a general rule be joined,[47] especially where both are misdemeanors.[48]

4. Charging Common-Law and Statutory Offense. Where offenses are of the same character and spring from the same transaction they may be joined, although one is a common-law and the other a statutory offense.[49]

5. Offenses For Which Punishment Is Different. At common law there can in general be no joinder of counts upon which the legal judgment or punishment is materially different;[50] and in case of such a joinder the indictment is demurrable,[51] or a judgment thereon will be arrested,[52] at least unless the verdict specifies the offense of which defendant is convicted;[53] or but one count is sufficient to charge an offense, in which case the verdict may be referred to the good counts.[54]

6. Distinct Offenses — a. Felonies. While at common law there can be no joinder of separate and distinct felonies in the same indictment,[55] such a joinder does not render the indictment bad as a matter of law,[56] or furnish a ground for demurrer,[57] arrest of judgment,[58] or writ of error.[59] The rule now generally accepted is that, subject in most instances to the discretion of the trial court to compel an election, separate felonies of the same general nature may be charged in separate counts of the same indictment[60] in case they are triable in the same

In case, however, felonies of a distinct nature which do not arise from the same transaction are joined, an election must as a general rule be compelled,[69] or the indictment quashed.[70] The compelling of an election between felonies of the same general nature rests within the sound discretion of the trial court,[71] under the special circumstances of the case in which the question arises.[72] An election should be ordered when it is apparent that defendant will be embarrassed in his defense by the joinder of counts;[73] and where it may be seen from the indictment or from the evidence that an attempt is being made to prosecute for distinct felonies not arising from the same transaction, the court should compel an election upon its own motion.[74] An election should not be

Prejudice as to selection of jury.— A defendant cannot be said to be prejudiced by the joinder of distinct offenses in the same indictment, where, by the joinder, he becomes entitled to the greatest number of challenges to jurors permitted under the statutes, and to a greater number than he would be entitled to if he were charged merely with the crime of which he is convicted. compelled in a case in which it is apparent that it will be difficult for the state to decide as to which of the counts it will be able to establish.[75] In some cases, upon grounds similar to those in which an election will be compelled, it has been held that the indictment may be quashed.[76]

b. Misdemeanors. At common law several distinct offenses may be joined by different counts in an indictment where they are misdemeanors in grade,[77] as where they are of the same nature and require similar punishments,[78] or are parts of the same act,[79] and the state will not be compelled to elect,[80] but may have a judgment upon the counts supported by the evidence.[81] In such case the indict-counts upon which they found their verdict, the general verdict of guilty will apply to each count (Benson v. Com., 158 Mass. 164, 33 N. E. 384; Com. v. Carey, 103 Mass. 214).

Continuing offenses.— Under statutes punishing the keeping of disorderly houses it is sometimes made proper to charge each day for which a conviction is sought in a separate count and a conviction may be had on such counts as are established by the evi-

ment will not be quashed,[82] or a demurrer sustained.[83] This rule has been held applicable, although different punishments attach to the offenses.[84] But in some decisions it is held that where distinct misdemeanors in no wise connected are joined an election may be compelled.[85] The rule that an election will not be compelled where several misdemeanors are joined does not apply to a case where both offenses and defendants are joined, and in case there is no evidence tending to connect one of the defendants with certain of the charges, he is entitled to require an election.[86]

c. Felonies and Misdemeanors. In some jurisdictions it has been held that a felony cannot be joined with a misdemeanor,[87] the rule arising from a practice which forbids a conviction for a misdemeanor on an indictment for felony;[88] or from the reason that it might embarrass defendant in the selection of a jury.[89] In such jurisdictions the indictment is demurrable[90] or is bad on a motion in arrest of judgment.[91] But in those states where there can be a conviction for a misdemeanor upon an indictment for felony, cognate offenses of the different characters may in some instances be joined,[92] as where the charges relate to the same transaction,[93] except where the offenses are repugnant in their nature and the trial and

d. Statutory Provisions. In some cases provision is made for the joinder of specific offenses by statute.[95] It is also frequently provided by statute that in case defendant is acquitted of a portion of the offenses charged and convicted of the rest, judgment and sentence may be imposed as to such offense as shall appear to have been substantially charged by the portion of the indictment as to which a conviction was had.[96] Under such statutes counts for related offenses may be joined,[97] or several counts which are required to meet the evidence as it may be adduced.[98] The common-law rule as to joinder of offenses is practically embodied in the statute of the United States providing that whenever there are several charges against a person or persons for the same act or transaction, or for two or more acts or transactions connected together, or for two or more acts or transactions of the same class of crimes or offenses, which may be properly joined, the whole may be joined in one indictment.[99] The phrase "may be properly joined," however, does not continue the common-law rules as to what offenses may be joined, but vests in the trial court a discretion as to what joinders may be permitted without depriving accused of a fair and impartial trial.[1] Under statutes requiring the indictment to charge but a single offense a demurrer may be sustained for a misjoinder,[2] and such is sometimes made the only proper method of attack.[3] A misjoinder cannot be objected to as a mere matter of form under statutes providing that indictments shall not be affected by imperfection in form unless they prejudice defendant.[4] In some jurisdictions it is provided that a mis-

joinder of offenses shall not be cause for quashing the indictment, arrest of judgment, or granting a new trial, unless the accused has been embarrassed in his defense or will be exposed to a substantial danger of a second prosecution.[5] Under a statute providing that a motion in arrest of judgment may be made upon any ground which would be good on exception to an indictment or information for any substantial defect therein, it is proper to raise an objection to an indictment on the ground of misjoinder of counts by a motion in arrest.[6]

7. EFFECT OF ACQUITTAL AS TO SUPERFLUOUS COUNTS. A misjoinder of counts is cured by an acquittal as to all but one.[7]

VIII. ELECTION.

A. Between Offenses Charged in Same Count. Duplicity in an indictment may be cured, where the offenses charged are similar and the only objection to their joinder is the embarrassment which will be caused the accused in his defense, by an election by the prosecution to proceed on one charge only and entering a nolle prosequi as to the others.[8]

B. Between Counts — 1. IN GENERAL. As a general rule an indictment is not, as a matter of law, invalid because of a misjoinder of counts, and is therefore not subject to demurrer or arrest of judgment, nor is the objection available on writ of error.[9] The usual effect of a misjoinder is merely to render the indictment or the objectionable portions thereof subject to quashal upon a timely motion,[10] or to authorize the court in its discretion to compel the state to elect as to which charge it will rely upon.[11] Where a statute provides that in charging certain offenses, distinct offenses to a certain number, if committed within a prescribed limit of time, may be joined in the same indictment, an indictment which joins more than the statutory number of specific offenses is not for that reason invalid, but a nolle prosequi may be entered as to the additional offenses over the statutory number.[12]

2. TIME FOR ELECTION. In some of the state courts a motion to compel an election is too late when made after plea,[13] but in the federal courts it may be made at any time before the conclusion of the trial.[14] According to the weight of authority, where distinct and separate felonies of the same character, punishable in the same manner, and to be established by the same evidence, are charged together, the court may in its discretion refuse to compel an election before the introduction of evidence by the state, but may reserve its decision until the close of the state's evidence and before the accused is placed upon his defense.[15]

3. Discretion of Trial Court. The granting or refusal of a motion to compel the prosecution to elect as to which of several counts it will proceed is within the sound discretion of the trial court,[16] and the ruling thereon will not be reviewed, except in a clear case of abuse of such discretion.[17] Hence the refusal is not the subject of exceptions,[18] nor a ground for a writ of error,[19] or for a motion for a new trial.[20] If from the inspection of the entire record it is apparent that no prejudice resulted to the accused, the refusal of an election which might properly have been granted is no ground for reversal,[21] and conversely where the state has not been prejudiced by having been compelled to elect, such compulsion is no ground for reversal in those jurisdictions in which the state has an appeal.[22]

4. Sufficiency of Election. A formal election is not in all cases requisite[23] and its place may be supplied by a charge of the court withdrawing the objectionable counts from the consideration of the jury,[24] at least so far as to prevent a motion in arrest of judgment on the ground of misjoinder.[25] A misjoinder of counts is cured by the entry of a nolle prosequi before trial, where no evidence is offered to establish the improper counts, although the instructions do not direct the attention of the jury to the fact of such entry.[26] So also a misjoinder of counts may be cured by the entry of a nolle prosequi before the jury is impaneled, and while such is not directly speaking an amendment of the indictment, it has the effect, for the purposes of trial, of placing defendant in the position he would have occupied had the indictment contained only the proper counts.[27]

5. Effect of Election. The mere finding of an indictment which improperly charges distinct offenses does not prejudice defendant, and any defect is cured by dismissing the counts which are wrongfully joined before the introduction of evidence.[28] So where before the determination of a demurrer upon the ground of a misjoinder, the state elects to proceed as to but a single charge, the indictment will not be dismissed.[29] The election withdraws the objectionable count from the indictment[30] in the same manner as if a nolle prosequi had been entered with regard thereto or as if it had been quashed.[31] Where an included offense is charged in a separate count from the graver offense, an election to proceed to trial on the greater charge has been held to preclude a conviction for the minor offense.[32] Where a defendant is found guilty of an included offense and obtains a new trial, the court's refusal to place him upon trial for the graver offense does not have the effect of quashing the indictment as to the graver offense, although the state is erroneously required merely to proceed to trial for the lesser offense.[33]

C. Between Transactions Developed by the Evidence — 1. In General. In the case of offenses in which the precise time is not a material averment in the indictment, where on the trial the commission of two similar offenses at different times is developed, the state may elect as to which it will seek a conviction.[34] In those cases in which defendant is entitled to require an election, such requirement must be by motion, and the purposes of an election cannot be obtained by objections to evidence.[35] Defendant cannot compel an election for the state by seeking an instruction confining the evidence to be considered to that bearing upon a particular transaction.[36]

2. Necessity For Election — a. In General. When one offense is charged and the evidence tends to show that more than one has been committed within the period of limitations prior to the presentation of the indictment, the state must elect upon which it will rely for a conviction,[37] although the charges are only misdemeanors.[38] Since, while the different acts may be proper as evidence in aid of the particular charge in the indictment, defendant is entitled to know which specific act is relied on for a conviction in order that he may properly meet the charge, and in order that a conviction shall not be a matter of choice between offenses.[39] But the principle of election is applicable only where there is evidence of separate and distinct transactions.[40] Where the evidence is directed to one particular class of offenses under a statute and no other is admitted, there need be no election.[41]

b. Connected Facts Forming Single Transaction. Where separate acts shown by the evidence are so related as to constitute but one entire transaction, there need be no election.[42]

c. Various Manners and Means. Where the same criminal act is involved, the state is not bound to elect on proof of its commission in different manners[43] or by different means.[44]

d. Continuing Offenses. Where an offense is continuous in its nature, evidence with regard to its commission at different times within the general charge does not demand an election.[45] An election, however, cannot be avoided by the fact that an offense not continuing is charged as continuing.[46]

e. Series of Related But Individually Complete Offenses. Where distinct criminal acts form a series which is readily susceptible of proof, while proof of any particular act might be difficult, it is held that the state need not elect.[47] For example, an election need not be made to rely on a particular embezzlement from a series committed by a person in a confidential relation.[48]

3. Time For Election — a. In General. Some conflict exists as to when an election should be compelled, some authorities holding that it should be as soon as the evidence of distinct offenses is developed,[49] and others that the court may in its sound discretion permit proof of several offenses;[50] but the authorities agree that an election will be required before defendant is required to introduce his proof.[51]

b. Necessity For Identification of Distinct Transactions. A motion to elect cannot be sustained until the evidence has developed the existence of distinct offenses,[52] and under some authorities it must be sufficient to identify them;[53] and it seems that if the evidence is not sufficient to cause a danger of conviction of another offense not charged to appear, an election need not be required.[54]

4. Sufficiency of Election — a. By Introduction of Proof. When evidence has been introduced tending directly to the proof of one act and for the purpose of procuring a conviction upon it, an election is regarded as made.[55] The first act as to which the prosecution introduces evidence will be presumed to be that to which the indictment refers;[56] and if the prosecutor wishes to introduce evidence of other offenses, he should frame the indictment accordingly.[57] After such election, evidence of other offenses is held inadmissible,[58] except in those cases which are exceptions to the usual rule requiring the evidence to be confined to the offense charged in the indictment.[59] The state will not be held to have elected by reason of an unintentional introduction of evidence as to a distinct transaction, as where a witness mistakes the matters as to which he is being questioned.[60] Where the state has attempted to identify a transaction by a witness and failed, it is not precluded from identifying a different transaction by another witness.[61] The prosecutor is entitled to some latitude in his preliminary examination of a witness to determine the act to which the witness refers; but if, after the transaction has been identified, the prosecutor pursues the inquiry to bring out the details of the transaction, he must be held to have elected.[62] A prosecutor may by a qualification in his opening statement prevent the introduction of evidence as to an attempt from constituting an election to try the accused for that, and not the completed offense.[63] Inadmissible evidence will not demand an election, although admitted without objection.[64]

b. Formal Election. The election should be such as to definitely fix the transaction relied on,[65] but its sufficiency to some extent at least is discretionary with the trial court.[66] It is enough that it be as definite as is possible from the evidence where, from the information, the evidence, and the election, defendant is informed as to the transaction.[67]

acts proved,[68] and would seem to be binding upon the state in a second trial on the same indictment.[69] An election to proceed as to an act committed on a certain date, which is further identified by certain specific circumstances, will not prevent the state from relying on the act identified by such circumstances, although the evidence discloses that it did not take place upon the elected date.[70] Where a single count in an indictment charges both an offense and an included offense, there being no necessity for an election, an attempted election is a nullity, and in case the state elects to go to trial upon the graver offense, a conviction of the lesser offense is not precluded.[71]

D. Between Indictments. Where separate indictments are found for distinct offenses the prosecution cannot be compelled to elect between them,[72] but the practice of drawing several indictments for the same offense is to be disapproved[73] and the state may be compelled to elect on which it will proceed, and an acquittal directed as to the others.[74] Where the prosecution elects to proceed upon one indictment it is equivalent to an acquittal upon the rest.[75] In case indictments charge different offenses, the state will not be permitted to substitute one for the other.[76]

IX. OBJECTIONS TO INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION; MOTION TO QUASH AND DEMURRER.

A. In General — 1. Form of Objection. Some forms or modes of raising objections to indictments and informations have been treated elsewhere.[77] It is proposed here to treat chiefly of objection by demurrer or motion to quash or set aside. An objection to the sufficiency of an indictment cannot as a general rule be made by objection to the reception of evidence thereon at the trial,[78] but must

2. Statutory Provisions. Under the modern statutes of criminal procedure it is usually provided that objections to the indictment upon the ground of formal defects must be made at a certain time and in a certain manner, and that if not so made, they cannot afterward be insisted upon,[85] and the enactment of such statutes is within the power of the state legislatures.[86] The statutes variously provide that such objections must be urged before plea,[87] before the jury is sworn,[88] or before going to trial,[89] which is equivalent to before pleading to the Matters not available on motion to quash. — Mass. St. (1864) c. 250, § 2, providing that any objection to an indictment for any formal defect apparent on its face shall be taken by demurrer or motion to quash, assigning specifically the objections relied on, before the jury are sworn, does not apply to an indictment consisting of a single count, which duly charges an offense against defendant, but contains a defective allegation of an aggravation of the offense. public at large,[1] such as nuisance,[2] selling by false weights,[3] riot or unlawful assembly,[4] or perjury,[5] will not be quashed, but defendant will be put to his remedy by demurrer or by motion in arrest of judgment or writ of error,[6] unless the plainest grounds exist,[7] as where no judgment could be rendered on the indictment,[8] or the court has no jurisdiction,[9] or no indictable offense is charged,[10] or where other remedies are inadequate.[11] In some jurisdictions the statutes as to criminal procedure provide for no motion to quash but provide for a motion to set aside the indictment for stated grounds which has practically the same effect.[12] A motion may be entertained to set aside a presentment in the same manner as if it were an indictment.[13] An indictment or presentment will not be quashed or set aside after a nolle prosequi has been entered to it.[14]

2. Discretion of Court. A motion to quash an indictment is ordinarily addressed to the discretion of the court,[15] the accused not being entitled to demand a quashal as a matter of right.[16] A refusal to grant the motion is for this reason not usually assignable as error,[17] although in some states, the motion being regarded as in the nature of a general demurrer, it is held that the action thereon may be reviewed, although resting in the sound discretion of the trial court.[18] The state in some jurisdictions has an appeal from an order of quashal.[19]

3. Necessity of Custody or Appearance of Accused. It has been held that a motion to quash cannot, in the absence of statute, be heard when defendant is not in custody,[20] or after forfeiture of his recognizance.[21] Nor can an indictment be set aside on special appearance.[22]

4. On Motion of Prosecution or of Court. Under the English practice it was held that in some cases an indictment might be quashed on motion of the prosecution as well as of accused,[23] as where it was fatally defective,[24] or where two indictments were pending for the same offense.[25] So where an indictment was clearly bad the court might on its own motion refuse to try it.[26]

5. Time For Motion — a. In General. Ordinarily a motion to quash must be made before arraignment[27] or plea.[28] The court may, however, permit a plea to be withdrawn to allow a motion,[29] in its discretion,[30] a withdrawal in some jurisdictions being held necessary,[31] although in others the motion may be made without be withdrawn and the motion made.[43] Failure to discover the grounds in time to move in proper course may in some cases authorize the motion to be made later;[44] but defendant must have exercised reasonable diligence to ascertain the facts.[45]

6. Form and Sufficiency of Motion. A motion to quash must specify distinctly the defects in the indictment.[46] A motion based upon a misnomer should state defendant's true name.[47] In some cases an oral motion may be made.[48]

7. Grounds — a. In General. As a general rule a motion to quash must be founded on defects which would render a judgment against defendant on the indictment erroneous.[49] Only such propositions may be considered as raise clear points of law.[50] The motion cannot be upon grounds invading the province of the jury.[51] In case no irregularity is shown the court possesses no discretionary power to quash.[52] At common law quashing was frequently refused where objections were tenable on demurrer.[53] Under statutes of some states grounds which at common law should have been presented by demurrer are made grounds for quashing.[54]

b. Restriction by Statutory Provisions. In many jurisdictions the specific grounds upon which a motion to quash may be urged are enumerated by statute, and are held to be exclusive of all others.[55] Such statutes, however, where the question has been presented are held not to be exclusive of other constitutional grounds,[56] and not to curtail the power of the court to prevent oppression or prosecution.[57] So where a defendant has had no prior opportunity of raising the objection, he may notwithstanding such a statute move to quash because of race discrimination in the selection of grand jurors,[58] and likewise the courts may set aside an indictment found without evidence or upon illegal evidence.[59]

c. Matters Not Apparent on Face of Record. The rule as generally stated is that an indictment or information will not be quashed for matters not apparent on its face or shown by the record,[60] a motion to quash being regarded as partak-

The New York code of criminal procedure enumerates certain grounds and provides that for them and no other the indictment may be set aside. This provision is held to exclude all but constitutional grounds other than those mentioned (People v. Glen, 173 N. Y. 395, 66 N. E. 112 [affirming 64 N. Y. App. Div. 167, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 893]; People v. Bills, 44 Misc. 348, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 1091; People v. Connor, 31 Misc. 668, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 126; People v. Willis, 23 Misc. 568, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 808). In some of the lower courts, however, a discretionary power of dismissal for other grounds was held to be conferred by section 671 allowing the court to order a dismissal on its own motion in the furtherance of justice (People v. Spolasco, 33 Misc. 530, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 924, 15 N. Y. Cr. 293; People v. Stern, 33 Misc. 455, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 732, 15 N. Y. Cr. 295; People v. Thomas, 32 Misc. 170, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 191, 8 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 36, 15 N. Y. Cr. 81; Matter of Gardiner, 31 Misc. 364, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 760, 14 N. Y. Cr. 519; People v. Vaughan, 19 Misc. 298, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 959, 11 N. Y. Cr. 388), some opinions limiting this discretionary power to constitutional grounds (People v. Winant, 24 Misc. 361, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 695. And see People v. Willis, 23 Misc. 568, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 808). Before the addition of the words "and no other" to the statutory enumeration by amendment it was held not exclusive (People v. Price, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 414, 6 N. Y. Cr. 141; People v. Clements, 5 N. Y. Cr. 288).

And see Palmore v. State, 29 Ark. 248, holding that a statute prohibiting exceptions to the rulings of inferior courts in refusing to set aside an indictment for a defect in the formation of the grand jury is unconstitutional, since while the legislature may prescribe the time and manner of determining objections to the qualifications of jurors, it cannot take away the right of objecting.

ing of the nature of a demurrer in this respect.[61] There are, however, certain well recognized exceptions to this rule which permit matters going to the summoning or qualifications of the grand jurors,[62] or to irregularities in their proceedings and deliberations,[63] or to the illegality or insufficiency of the proof upon which they have acted,[64] to be raised by a motion of this nature.

d. Former Jeopardy. Former jeopardy furnishes no ground for quashing an indictment, but must be urged by special plea.[65]

e. Quashing or Pendency of Other Indictments. An information will not be quashed because an indictment previously found for the same offense has been quashed for insufficiency.[66] In case two indictments are pending for the same offense, it has been held that the first will be quashed.[67]

f. Irregularities in Preliminary Examination or Proceedings. In the absence of a statute, defects in the information or complaint upon which the committing magistrate acted are not, after indictment found, ground for a motion to quash.[68]
