Reasons for rule.— The holder of negotiable securities, indorsed in the usual manner, if he has acquired them fraudulently, will be enjoined from negotiating them, because if negotiated the maker or indorser must pay them. So a transfer of stock will be restrained in favor of the person having the real property in the article. In these cases the injured party would have his remedy at law, but it is the province of a court of equity to arrest the injury and prevent the wrong. The remedy is more beneficial and complete than the law can give. Osborn v. U. S. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 6 L. ed. 204, per Marshall, C. J.

Statutes.—A proceeding to enjoin the negotiation of notes until the validity of their consideration can be tested at law is not a suit to enjoin the "payment of money" within the meaning of Paschal Dig. Tex. 3935. Bedwell v. Thompson, 25 Tex. Suppl. 247.

Transfer of a chattel mortgage obtained in consideration of a claim whose validity is doubtful will be enjoined until final action in the cause. Jones v. Diederich, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 177.

Mere indebtedness is not a sufficient ground

(II) Failure of Consideration. Complete or partial failure of consideration constitutes ground for restraining the transfer of negotiable securities to prevent their falling into the hands of a bona fide purchaser.[82]

(III) Defense Available at Law. If the complainant's defense can be presented in a suit at law, an injunction against the negotiation of the securities will not be granted.[83] This rule applies inter alia to defenses on past due notes,[84] to the defense that the note was altered,[85] or where the instrument is invalid on its face or its invalidity will appear upon the proofs of the party claiming under it.[86]

5. Collection or Payment of Money — a. In General.[87] Courts of chancery cannot be appealed to to take original cognizance in the mere collection of debts.[88] As a general rule equity will never interfere to restrain the collection or payment of money where there is an adequate and complete remedy at law.[89] But where the remedy at law is inadequate,[90] or when the party about to receive or collect the money is insolvent,[91] an injunction may be granted. For the purpose of preventing fraud,[92] and as ancillary relief to suits in equity,[93] the payment of money has been enjoined.

tion to prevent the consummation of fraud, equity will enjoin the holder or indorsee from collecting notes or other negotiable securities which he has obtained or holds fraudulently.[94]

6. TRADE OR BUSINESS — a. Trade Secrets — (I) DEFINITION. A trade secret is a plan or process, tool, mechanism, or compound, known only to its owner and those of his employees to whom it is necessary to confide it. It is a property right which equity, in the exercise of its power to prevent a breach of trust, will protect. It differs from a patent in that as soon as the secret is discovered, either by an examination of the product or in any other honest way, the discoverer has the full right to use it.[95] A process commonly known to the trade is not a trade secret and will not be protected by injunction,[96] but the mere fact that there are secret processes of a different kind accomplishing the same result will not prevent the granting of an injunction.[97] It is immaterial whether the process is patentable.[98]

(II) PARTIES PROTECTED — (A) Inventor or Discoverer of Secret. One who invents or discovers and keeps a secret process of manufacturing, whether patentable or not, has a property therein which equity will protect against one who in violation of contract and breach of confidence undertakes to apply it to his own use or disclose it to a third person;[99] but a complainant who is not the dis-

Source of knowledge.— "By a careful reading of the various decisions upon this subject, it will be seen that some are made to depend upon a breach of an express contract between the parties, while others proceed upon the theory that, where a confidential relation exists between two or more parties engaged in a business venture, the law raises an implied contract between them that the employé will not divulge any trade secrets imparted to him or discovered by him in the course of his employment, and that a disclosure of such secrets, thus acquired, is a breach of trust and a violation of good morals, to prevent which a court of equity should intervene. It may also be observed in this connection that the word 'property' as applied to trade secrets and inventions, has its limitations; for it is undoubtedly true that when an article manufactured by some secret process, which is not the subject of a patent, is thrown upon the market, the whole world is at liberty to discover, if it can, by any fair means, what that process is, and, when discovery is thus made, to employ it in the manufacture of similar articles. In such case the manufacturer's or inventor's property in his process is gone. But the authorities all hold that, while knowledge obtained in this manner is perfectly legitimate, that which is obtained by any breach of confidence cannot be sanctioned." O. & W. with it, equity will restrain the use of information acquired in violation of that contract by a person having notice or knowledge of it.[6]

b. Unfair Trade.[7] The fraudulent use or imitation of names, labels, wrappers, signs, or advertising devices so like those of complainant as to be calculated to deceive the incautious or the unwary into believing they are buying the goods of or dealing with another manufacturer is a fraud on the manufacturer and on the public, and will be enjoined.[8] A person will be restrained from holding himself out as a partner, where such representation may cause injury to the complainant, and such claim has no foundation in fact.[9] So persons falsely representing to the public that they are successors of a going concern will be enjoined;[10] but a vendor of a business, after he has ceased to do business for a long time, cannot enjoin another from holding himself out as his successor.[11] Nor will a vendor be enjoined from setting up a rival business, where the sale of the business and good-will was without any restrictive agreement.[12] A former employee may inform the public that he has been in such employment,[13] or may use his familiarity with the business and his knowledge of the customers to the advantage of a rival manufacturer.[14]

C. Contracts — 1. Injunction and Specific Performance Compared. Classifying contracts as either affirmative, where one agrees that something has been or will be done, or negative, where one agrees that something has not been or will not be done, the equitable remedy for breach of the first is a decree for specific performance, and for breach of the second is an injunction. An injunction against the breach of a negative contract is in effect enforcing specific performance.[15]

The general principles upon which the two remedies are granted are in the main the same, and where a contract is one of a class that will be specifically enforced, equity will enjoin a breach.[16] But, on the other hand, the remedy by injunction may be obtainable even though a decree for specific performance is not. Where such a decree is proper the right to an injunction follows as a matter of course; but since the purpose of an injunction is the prevention of irreparable injury, it will be granted in many cases where performance of the entire contract could not be specifically enforced.[17] A contract will not be specifically enforced in part only, but the breach of a part of a contract will in many instances be enjoined. If the contract contains both affirmative and negative terms, breach of the latter may be enjoined, even though the former cannot be enforced by decree.[18] The difficulties inherent in enforcing an affirmative contract, such as to perform personal services or to carry on an extensive business, are not met with in preventing the breach of a contract not to do something;[19] but a court will not attempt to overcome such difficulties and enforce such an affirmative contract specifically by issuing an injunction mandatory in its nature.[20] And so too where the contract is one that will not be specifically enforced for the reason that the remedy at law is regarded as adequate, as in the case of sales of ordinary marketable chattels, the contract will not be indirectly enforced by injunction even though it contains a distinct negative term.[21]

2. AFFIRMATIVE AND NEGATIVE CONTRACTS — a. Express Negative. Where the contract is negative in form, requiring a party to refrain from doing certain things, injunction is the appropriate equitable remedy. Thus a contract not to disclose information,[22] not to remove machinery,[23] or pillars of coal[24] from a mine, or not to remove fixtures[25] or placards and advertisements[26] will be enforced by enjoining a breach. So also in the case of an agreement not to ring church bells[27] or not to manufacture and sell a patented article.[28] But the breach of a contract will not be enjoined merely because it is negative in form in case it is affirmative in substance.[29] It has been said that where the contract contains a direct negative stipulation, the breach thereof will be enjoined, even though no special damage can be proved, and even though damages at law would be an adequate remedy.[30] Generally, however, it is necessary to show affirmatively that damages are not an adequate remedy, even though the contract is negative in terms and substance.[31] Where, however, defendant has expressly agreed not to do the act in question, he will ordinarily be enjoined irrespective of the relative inconvenience to be caused to the parties. If the complainant's damage is irreparable, courts usually do not investigate whether defendant will be more greatly injured by being enjoined.[32] A negative agreement will be enforced by injunction only in those cases where the court would enforce an affirmative agreement if it had the power.[33]

b. Implied Negative — (1) In General. A contract affirmative in form often involves a negative in substance, and in such case the court will import the negative quality and enjoin acts in breach of the contract, in cases where an injunction is otherwise proper. The test is not in the form of the language used, but in the quality of the acts required.[34] Where one has agreed to do a thing in a certain manner, the negative may be imported that he will not do it otherwise;[35] as for example, in the case of a contract to cultivate in a certain manner,[36] or to construct a building according to certain plans.[37] Where one has agreed to perform services for another and to devote his time thereto some cases have held that by implication the promisor has agreed not to work for anyone else and have prevented such work by injunction;[38] but the doctrine cannot be said to be well established, and in any case the implication must be clear and its limits very definite, or an injunction will not be granted.[39]

(II) Contracts For Exclusive Privileges. Injunctions have been granted in many cases where the complainant had an exclusive contract right to some privilege, to prevent such privilege from being extended to and being enjoyed by others. These are nearly all cases where the negative agreement must be implied from the fact that the right is agreed in positive terms to be exclusive. Such an implied negative will be enforced by injunction when the remedy at law is not sufficient.[40] In some instances the court, where the legal remedy has been deemed adequate, has refused an injunction.[41] The remedy at law is adequate in the case

3. Breaches of Contract in General — a. Propriety of Injunction Generally. In general the granting of an injunction to restrain a breach of contract rests largely in the sound discretion of the court,[43] and relief will be refused when the injured party may obtain adequate redress at law in case the breach should be committed.[44] However, the general principle applied by all courts is that where the breach of a contract consists in the doing of acts that a court of equity can prevent by injunction, and when it further appears that damages at law are not an adequate remedy, because the damage cannot be computed or is otherwise irreparable, such acts will be enjoined.[45] Whether or not the damage

b. Adequate Remedy at Law. Since the jurisdiction of equity to enjoin a breach of contract depends upon the inadequacy of the remedy at law, no injunction will be granted when the damages can be exactly ascertained, and no irreparable injury will be inflicted, and there is nothing that will give rise to a multiplicity of actions.[50] The complainant must make an affirmative showing that the remedy at law is not adequate, except in cases where the very nature of the subject-matter has led courts to presume that damages would not compensate, as in the case of contracts affecting the use and enjoyment of real property and contracts not to open up a competing business.[51]

e. Contracts For Water-Rights. Since the law can usually afford no adequate remedy in case of a breach of contracts for a supply of water for domestic, manufacturing, or other purposes, the shutting off of the supply will be enjoined.[52] So also the user will be enjoined from taking more than he is entitled to when he cannot otherwise be prevented and the excess cannot be measured.[53] Injunction is also the proper remedy to prevent acts in breach of contract destructive of or injurious to water or steam power.[54]

d. Contracts For Supply of Gas. The shutting off of gas by one under contract to supply it will be enjoined, since the remedy at law is not adequate.[55]

e. Corporate Franchises. Where a franchise amounts to a contract between a corporation and a municipality, the latter will be enjoined from interfering with the enjoyment of the franchise and contract rights.[56]

f. Rep. 874, where the court refused to enjoin a transfer of stock by defendant, which stock was by contract to go to plaintiff upon his constructing a certain number of miles of railway.

Rule restated.—It is a general principle that when, from personal incapacity, the nature of the contract, or any other cause, is applied where plaintiff is asking a decree for specific performance against defendant, but there is doubt as to how far it should be applied when plaintiff asks only the negative remedy of the court and not its positive remedy.[58]

(II) Of Benefit—(A) Inequitable Contracts. If a contract is palpably unfair and inequitable and the complainant is attempting to enforce an unconscionable bargain he is not entitled to the equitable remedy of injunction.[59]

(B) Adequacy of Consideration. On the other hand a court of equity will not undertake to determine, any more than a court of law would, whether the complainant gave an adequate consideration for the right he claims. The consideration must be valuable, otherwise there is no contract either in equity or at law, but its adequacy is for the parties to determine and an injunction issues without investigating whether defendant used poor judgment.[60] However, if the inadequacy is evident and so great as to shock the chancellor's conscience and lead to a conclusion of fraud or mistake, an injunction will be refused.[61]

g. Incapacitating Oneself, or Preventing Others, From Performing. A party to a contract will be enjoined from doing acts that will prevent himself from performing his contract,[62] and from doing acts that will prevent the complainant from performing his part of the contract,[63] where irreparable injury will result.

Under some circumstances also injunctions have issued against persons not parties to the contract to prevent them from doing acts and making threats and inducements to prevent parties to a contract from carrying it out.[64]

h. Mandatory Injunction. The court has power to prevent irreparable injury by issuing mandatory injunctions, where property or privileges have been taken away in violation of contract.[65] For example a contract for a water-supply may be enforced by mandatory injunction,[66] and a gas consumer can force a reconnection with the gas mains.[67]

4. Parties — a. Persons Not Parties to Contract. Although the party asking an injunction must usually be a party to the contract itself,[68] yet assignees and grantees may also obtain an injunction to prevent the breach of contract, when the contract right was intended to be thus transferable and to inure to their benefit.[69]

b. Conduct of Complainant as Affecting Right — (i) Breach by Complainant. A party is not entitled to enjoin the breach of a contract by another unless he himself has performed what the contract required of him so far as possible. If he himself is in default or has given cause for non-performance by defendant, he has no standing in equity.[70] Where several lots have been sold subject to the same restrictive covenant intended for the benefit of all, the owner of one who has himself broken the covenant cannot obtain an injunction to prevent similar breaches by others.[71] Small and insignificant breaches by the complainant will not, however, bar his right to an injunction.[72] Of course the complainant is subject to the rule that equity will not grant relief unless he comes in with clean hands.[73]

(II) ACQUIESCENCE. A party may lose his right to an injunction through his own acquiescence in the breach by the other party. This acquiescence may be indicated in various ways, as by delay in making any objection and in seeking the injunction,[74] or by consenting to the breach in question, whether the consent be express or implied from acts inconsistent with an intention to enforce the terms of the contract.[75] Complainant's own acts inconsistent with the contract may amount to an acquiescence in similar acts by others,[76] and acquiescence may be shown also by allowing third persons under the same contract relations with the complainant as is defendant to break their contracts without objection from him.[77]

But acquiescence in a mere trifling breach does not bar the right to enjoin some subsequent substantial breach.[78]

c. Persons Who May Be Enjoined. Not only are parties to the contract liable to be enjoined from breaking it, but other persons with notice may sometimes be also enjoined. For instance, where property, either movable or immovable, has been conveyed subject to certain restrictions, a subsequent transferee with notice must observe them or he may be enjoined.[79] So third persons may be enjoined from assisting a party to a contract to commit a breach thereof.[80]

d. Rights of Third Persons. Defendant will not be restrained by injunction from breaking his contract with the complainant, when such action would necessarily compel him to break a contract with an innocent third person to the injury of such third person.[81] The public interest is also to be considered, and it may be given sufficient weight to cause the injunction to be refused.[82]

6. Contracts For Personal Services — a. Breach by Employer. Under ordinary circumstances an employee, whether classed as an agent or as a servant, cannot enforce a contract for service by enjoining a breach on the part of his employer. So the employer will not be enjoined from dismissing an employee or from refusing to continue to employ him, even though such action is a direct violation of contract.[88] A fortiori no injunction will be granted when the complainant has given cause for dismissal.[89] And if there is any doubt as to the existence of the contract right or as to the fact of a breach on the part of the employer, the case against the complainant is all the stronger.[90] So the appointment of a successor and the assumption by him of the duties of the position cannot be prevented by injunction.[91] Nor is injunction the proper remedy to prevent employers from continuing a conspiracy not to employ complainant.[92] For reasons similar to those given for refusing to enjoin the dismissal of an employee, the breach of a contract to employ only members of a certain union will not be enjoined.[93]

b. Breach by Employee — (I) In General. A court of equity will not attempt to enforce specifically a contract to render personal services,[94] and it was formerly held that the court would not attempt to do indirectly by injunction that which it could not do directly by a decree for specific performance.[95]

(II) Services Requiring No Special Skill. In the case of contracts to render services requiring no special skill or qualification, the rule still holds that a breach by the employee will not be enjoined, even though he has expressly agreed to work for no one else or to devote all his time to the service of the complainant; but the reason for this is that other employees can be found to do the work and damages at law are adequate compensation for the breach of contract.[96] Upon this general proposition the courts are substantially agreed, but variations will be found in determining whether certain positions do or do not require special qualifications.[97]

(III) Services Requiring Special Skill — (A) In General. Where one contracts to render special, unique, or extraordinary personal services requiring special merit or qualification, or where the services to be rendered are purely intellectual, or are peculiar and individual in their character, and where in case of default the same service is not to be obtained from others, although equity will not interfere to enforce specific performance of the whole contract, yet

Modern rule.— This doctrine is correct in so far as it is applied in cases where a decree for specific performance would be improper because the remedy at law is adequate; but in so far as it is applied in cases where a decree for specific performance would be refused only for the reason of the difficulties inherent in its enforcement, the attitude of the courts has in large measure changed, and if the remedy at law is inadequate an injunction may be granted, even though direct specific performance cannot be enforced.

because the damage will be irreparable it will exert its preventive power and enjoin the employee from working for others or doing positive acts in violation of the contract.[98]

(B) Negative Agreement. Although the affirmative part of the contract cannot be specifically enforced, yet the breach of an express negative agreement may be enjoined. When the employee expressly agrees not to work for any other, the specific enforcement of such a negative is possible.[99] Where there is no express negative agreement, but the contract is such that its due performance must necessarily prevent any service for others, the weight of authority is to the effect that a negative will be implied and will be enforced by injunction;[1] and where the contract provides that the employee shall devote his whole time to the business or shall work exclusively for the employer, a negative may be implied and the employee enjoined,[2] although practically the contrary has been held in English cases requiring the implication to be very clear and definite.[3]

not to be duplicated by others, so that the damage caused by the breach is irreparable, the weight of authority now is that a specific negative agreement not to perform for another will be enforced by injunction;[5] and so too where the agreement not to perform elsewhere is not express but can be implied from the impossibility of performing in two places at once.[6]

Covenantee the sole judge of his injury.— The owner of land, selling or leasing it, may insist upon such covenants as he pleases, touching the use and mode of enjoyment of the land; and he is not to be defeated when the covenant is broken, by the opinion of any number of persons, that the breach occasions him no substantial injury. He has a right to define the injury for himself, and the party contracting with him must abide by the definition. Steward v. Winters, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 587.

e. Covenants by Lessees. A lessee who has agreed to use the demised premises only in certain ways will be enjoined at the suit of the lessor from using them contrary to the covenant, since the remedy at law is not regarded as adequate even though no substantial injury can be proved.[20]

f. Enforcement as Against Grantees of Covenantor. It is a general rule that where one by gift or purchase acquires property from another, with knowledge of a previous contract made by him with a third person affecting the use of such property, injunction will lie to prevent such acquirer of the property from using it inconsistently with the contract to the injury of the third person.[21] Such agreements are valid, and capable of being enforced in equity against all those who take the estate with notice of them, although they may not be strictly speaking real covenants, so as to run with the land, or of a nature to create a technical qualification of the title conveyed by the deed.[22] It follows therefore that a bona fide purchaser without notice of a restrictive covenant not running with the land will not be enjoined from acting contrary to its terms.[23] Constructive notice of a restrictive covenant is sufficient in equity to bind a purchaser to observe it, and hence such purchaser must observe the terms of a covenant contained in a deed to some of his predecessors in title, even though remote, and even though such limitation is not contained in the deed to the purchaser himself.[24] Subsequent purchasers with notice of a covenant not running with the land are bound only when the covenant is restrictive, and not when it is affirmative and requires the expenditure of money or some positive act, as for example a covenant to repair.[25]

g. Enforcement by Grantees of Covenantee. When a restrictive covenant inserted by the grantor in the deed of a particular lot is part of a general scheme for the benefit and improvement of all the lands included in a larger tract, it may be enforced by injunction against the purchaser of such lot or his grantees, at the suit of a holder of another lot in the tract who bought with notice of the general scheme and on the faith of the covenants inserted in the several deeds to carry it out.[26] But although it is not necessary that the complainant should be a direct party

h. Restriction Must Concern the Estate Itself. While there are cases to the contrary,[28] the general rule is that equity will not enforce a restriction as to the use of land unless it concerns the thing conveyed and is for the benefit of the estate.[29]

i. Conduct of Complainant as Affecting His Right. As in the case of other contracts, the breach of a restriction as to the use of premises may be acquiesced in so as to bar the right to an injunction, or the right may be abandoned or lost by breach on the part of the complainant himself.[30]

Rule restated.— When it appears by a fair interpretation of the words of a grant that it was the intent of the parties to create or reserve a right, in the nature of a servitude or easement, in the property granted, for the benefit of other land owned by the grantor, and originally forming with the land one parcel, such right will be deemed appurtenant to the land of the grantor and binding on that conveyed to the grantee, and the right and burden thus created will respectively pass to and be binding on all subsequent grantees of the respective lots of land. injunction to prevent their erection, if they were erected deliberately with knowledge that the complainant insisted on the observance of the contract, so that there is no estoppel.[32] The granting of the injunction does not depend upon the relative inconvenience to the parties or to the public, except in cases where the damage caused by the breach is very minute.[33] On the other hand it has been said that a mandatory injunction to remove a building will not be issued when it will operate inequitably and oppressively, or when there has been unreasonable delay by the party asking it, or when the injury complained of is not serious and substantial and may be readily compensated in damages, while to restore things to their original condition would subject the other party to great loss.[34] The court may in its discretion refuse the injunction and assess damages instead.[35] A mandatory injunction will not be granted when its enforcement would require too great an amount of supervision by the court.[36] But while a court will not ordinarily order and supervise the erection of a structure, yet under some circumstances it may do so, either by direct mandate, or indirectly by an injunction prohibiting the enjoyment of privileges until the work is done.[37]

8. Contracts in Restraint of Trade and Business — a. contract will not be enjoined. If a contract in restraint of trade is divisible and valid as to one part, although invalid as to the other, an injunction against a breach of the valid part is proper.[41] If a contract in restraint of trade is regarded by the court as not against public policy, a breach of such contract will be enjoined.[42] The damage is presumed to be irreparable and an injunction will be granted in most cases without requiring any specific showing as to the amount of damage.[43] Not only the promisee but also his assignee is entitled to an injunction to restrain a breach of the contract.[44]

b. Doubtful Right. Before the court will enjoin a breach, there must be no doubt about the validity of the contract, and its terms must be clearly proved and the fact of breach established beyond doubt.[45]

c. Restrictions as to Particular Lines of Business — (1) In General. The commonest instance of a contract in restraint of trade is a contract for the sale of a business with its good-will, with an agreement on the part of the vendor not to open up a competing business of the same kind for a certain time within a certain space. If the restraint is reasonable and is no greater than is necessary for the proper protection of the purchaser in enjoying his property a breach will be enjoined.[46]

practice, he will be enjoined from practising again within the agreed limits, if they are reasonable,[49] or even from answering special unsolicited calls,[50] even though a penalty for a breach is fixed in the contract.[51] It is not necessary for plaintiff to prove that the consideration was adequate,[52] or that defendant is insolvent or the damage irreparable.[53]

(v) Miscellaneous Lines of Business. The rule has been applied to the sale of many other kinds of business.[54] For instance a teacher will be prevented from opening up a rival school contrary to his contract.[55] So the vendor of a published work will be enjoined from publishing a rival work of the same nature in violation of the contract of sale.[56]

d. Agreement Not to Use the Same Business Name. A contract not to open up a competing business under the same name and style is valid and will be enforced by injunction,[57] and even though there be no term in the contract to that effect, if the good-will of the business is a part of the subject-matter of the sale, the vendor will be enjoined from using the former name in such a way as to injure the enjoyment by the vendee of the rights he purchased.[58]

a business substantially similar to the one transferred or to do acts in violation of the spirit and intent of the contract, even though not of its letter.[61] Serving former customers and patients may be a breach, even though defendant did not solicit their business.[62]

(II) Engaging in Business in Name of Another. A contract not to engage in a certain business may be broken as well by engaging in it under the name of another person as in one's own name. If the use of the new name is not bona fide, but is a mere subterfuge to escape the penalty for breach of contract, the carrying on of such business under the new name will be enjoined.[63] Although the carrying on of the business by one under color of his wife's name will be enjoined,[64] there is nothing to prevent the other spouse or a near relative from carrying on such business if it is conducted in good faith and not really on behalf of the one who was a party to the contract.[65] So a contract may be broken by permitting acts of a third person contrary to it.[66] In some cases third persons may be enjoined from assisting a party to such a contract to break it.[67]

f. Adequacy of Consideration. An injunction against the breach of a contract in restraint of trade will not be refused on the ground that the consideration was inadequate,[68] unless the inadequacy is so great as to shock the conscience of the chancellor and to indicate that unfair and fraudulent advantage was taken.[69]

9. Effect of Providing For Penalty or Damages — a. Penalty. The fact that a sum of money is named in a contract as payable upon its breach as a penalty and not as liquidated damages does not prevent equity from granting an injunction.[70] In the case of restrictive covenants as to the use of land it is no objection to an injunction that forfeiture of the premises is fixed as a penalty for a breach or that a right of entry is reserved in case of a breach.[71]

b. Liquidated Damages. If liquidated damages are provided for in case of a breach, and it appears that the intention was to give the party the alternative to perform or pay, the breach will not be enjoined.[72] Where the contract is an absolute one, and cannot be construed as meaning that defendant shall have the right to do the prohibited acts on paying the sum named, an injunction will be granted to restrain him, whether or not the sum to be paid be regarded as liquidated damages.[73]

10. Restraining Execution of Contract. It is seldom that a party to a contract will be prevented by injunction from carrying it out, since the complainant's remedy at law is adequate. He can refuse to perform his part, can defend when sued for such non-performance, and, if damaged, can sue for compensation.[74]

But where defendant is attempting to carry out a contract when he has no right to do so, and is doing acts likely to cause irreparable injury to the complainant, the doing of those acts will be enjoined.[75] So a court of equity will interpose by injunction to prevent the several members of an illegal combination from enforcing an agreement to the injury of one engaged in a competing business.[76]

D. Corporate Franchises, Management, and Dealings[77] — 1. Doubtful or Disputed Rights. The invasion of a corporate right or franchise will be enjoined only when the existence of such right or franchise is clear or has been established at law.[78] So the interference by the corporation with the rights of a member of the corporation,[79] or with the rights of third persons or the public,[80] will be enjoined only when such rights are free from doubt. The existing doubt should first be cleared up in a court of law.[81] Much less will interference with a right be enjoined where there is no such right, as where the statute under which the right is claimed is unconstitutional.[82] But an injunction may be issued to restrain a corporation from acting illegally, even though there is doubt as to its committing the acts charged, where, if true, irreparable injury would be done and where the injunction will work no injury in any event.[83]

2. Protection of Corporate Franchises and Rights. Corporate property is entitled to the same protection as the property of natural persons, and the remedy by injunction on behalf of a corporation is to be obtained on the same principles and for the same reasons as in other cases. An injunction is held to be the

3. Exceeding or Misusing Corporate Franchises and Powers — a. Injunctions in Behalf of Public and Third Persons[93] — (I) Restraining Corporate Action. When a corporation is acting or threatening to act in excess of its corporate powers, or is misusing the franchise it possesses, to the injury of others, an injunction to restrain it is the proper remedy.[94] So where a railroad or a turnpike company is locating its road in a manner beyond its corporate authority it will be enjoined.[95] The injunction may be obtained by the public if the injury is public,[96] even without making an affirmative showing of any special or definite injury;[97]

(c) Preventing Shareholders From Voting. An injunction is the proper remedy to restrain a corporation or its officers from preventing a shareholder from voting as his ownership of shares entitles him.[30]

(d) Mandatory Injunction. A stock-holder may compel corporate action by a mandatory injunction where mandamus is not a proper remedy.[31]

4. Elections of Corporate Officers[32] — a. Injunction to Prevent Voting of Stock. When stock in a corporation is transferred without consideration, for the purpose of fraudulently obtaining more votes than the real owner of the stock might otherwise cast, in order to control an election, the transferees may be enjoined from voting.[33] In order to prevent one from voting, it must be clearly shown that he is not entitled to vote,[34] and an injunction will not be granted where its real purpose is to control an election by keeping the majority from ruling,[35] nor to restrain a stock-holder from voting a certain way.[36]

b. Injunction Against Holding Election. The holding of an election will rarely be enjoined,[37] although equity has power to do so;[38] nor is an application for an injunction the proper method of trying the right to an office or settling a disputed election.[39]

5. Officers Not Enjoined From Acting as Such.[40] Officers of a corporation will not be enjoined from acting as such within their chartered powers and in the exercise of discretion, for malfeasance in office or other reasons,[41] even though tiorari,[55] appeal,[56] mandamus,[57] or writ of prohibition,[58] or where another remedy is provided by statute,[59] no injunction should be granted.

2. Particular Officers — a. Officers of the Land Department. The acts of the officers of the United States land department, so long as within the scope of their powers as conferred upon them by statute, will not be enjoined.[60] The determination as to what person is entitled to certain land scrip,[61] to a patent to certain public land,[62] to a right of preëmption,[63] or to the right to make entry in the office of the register and receiver,[64] is a judicial function that has been intrusted to the land department, and in its performance the land officers will not be enjoined. The same has been held as to the decision whether or not certain land is open for settlement,[65] and as to the cancellation of an entry for lands.[66] On the other hand, when the officers of the land department go beyond their jurisdiction, they are liable to be enjoined just as are other public officers.[67]

b. State Officers.[68] Although a state itself cannot be enjoined, yet when state officials are acting in an unconstitutional or otherwise illegal manner, they are not regarded as acting for the state, and they may be enjoined.[69] An injunction has been held proper to prevent treasurers from receiving worthless paper in payment of taxes,[70] or to control the state auditor,[71] the secretary of state,[72] health officers and boards,[73] and even the governor of a state may be enjoined from doing an illegal act merely ministerial in nature and not a part of the governor's duties as such.[74]

c. County and Town Officers[75] — (i) In General. The officers of a county or town may be restrained by injunction when they are proceeding illegally to the irreparable injury of the complainant. Thus county commissioners may be enjoined from interfering with a railway franchise,[76] from laying out a road over private property,[77] from removing books and records,[78] or from changing the county-seat.[79] A county treasurer may be enjoined from wrongfully levying on property for taxes,[80] and a county court may be enjoined from proceeding in an illegal manner to levy and collect a tax,[81] or from illegally selling a public square.[82]

(ii) Discretionary Powers of Officers. Where the county commissioners are vested with discretionary power, an injunction will not issue in the absence of fraud or an abuse of discretion.[83] This rule applies inter alia to fixing the amount of a tax levy;[84] the location of a jail,[85] bridge,[86] or ditch;[87] or the choosing a county depository.[88]

(iii) Compelling Performance of Duty. A county officer will not be compelled by injunction to perform his duties, the remedy, if any, being either by mandamus or by an action on the officer's bond.[89]

or the improper removal of trees and fences,[5] will be enjoined. Such officers, however, have discretionary power over the grading, draining, and repair of highways, and when such discretion is not abused they will not be enjoined from exercising their power in such matters.[6] So where the injured party's remedy at law is adequate, no injunction will issue.[7] And the right to an injunction may be precluded by complainant's acquiescence in the proceedings.[8] Injunction lies to prevent a proposed vacation of a highway,[9] although not before some action has been taken by the proper officers.[10]

f. Canal and Drainage Officers.[11] Officers acting without authority of law may be enjoined from diverting a stream,[12] or from constructing drains or drainage systems,[13] so as to cause irreparable injury or a multiplicity of suits. But an injunction will not be granted when they are acting in good faith and within their statutory powers.[14]

3. Injunction to Prevent Action Under Void Statutes. An injunction is proper to restrain an officer from acting under an unconstitutional or otherwise invalid statute, where irreparable injury to complainant will result therefrom.[15] So

The attorney-general of a state may be enjoined from enforcing a law fixing railway rates in such a way as to be obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment to the consti-equity has power to prevent the enforcement of a law impairing the obligation of a prior contract.[16] Taxpayers have sufficient interest to maintain a suit to enjoin action by public officers under an invalid law which will affect the property of the state or the amount of taxes to be paid.[17] So a creditor of a city whose rights are impaired by an issue of bonds under an unconstitutional statute may sue.[18] The unconstitutionality of the law must be clearly established to authorize an injunction.[19] No injunction will be granted to prevent the enforcement of an unconstitutional law, when the remedy at law is adequate either by way of an action for damages or by way of an action to compel the performance of acts forbidden by the unconstitutional law.[20]

4. Elections and Election Officers — a. Injunction Against Holding Election. Equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin the holding of an election legally and properly called.[21] Nor will the court ordinarily issue an injunction to prevent the holding of an illegal election, since the legality of an election and the title of persons chosen thereat to their respective offices is a question for a court of law in quo warranto proceedings.[22] It has been held, however, that the hold-

b. Injunction to Prevent Canvass of Votes. Election officers will not be restrained from canvassing the vote and declaring the result,[25] even though there was fraud and illegality in the election.[26] Election officers will not be enjoined from giving a certificate of election to the successful candidate, since this is not the proper method of trying title to office.[27] Nor is injunction the proper remedy to prevent election registrars from proceeding in an irregular or illegal manner.[28]

5. Appointment and Removal of Officers. While injunctions have been granted to prevent the improper removal of an officer where there was no doubt as to the illegality of the action and where the removal had not already taken place but was threatened,[29] the general rule is that equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin the appointment or removal of public officers, whether the power court of equity, on application for injunction, will not try and determine a contested election or the title to an office, yet, when there is no controversy as to the vote cast, the court will inquire into its legal effect, when set up to defeat a right or pecuniary interest.

of appointment or removal is vested in executive or administrative boards or officers or is intrusted to a judicial tribunal.[30] It is immaterial that the appointee is within the protection of the civil service rules.[31] Furthermore a board of officers will not be restrained from hearing and acting upon charges against an officer, on the ground that it is prejudiced and will proceed illegally.[32] But equity will interfere in behalf of an officer de facto, claiming to be the officer de jure, to prevent another, especially an intruder, from wresting the office from him without process of law.[33]

f. Injunction Against Enactment of Ordinances — (i) Power to Enjoin. The general rule is that a municipal corporation, in the exercise of legislative power in relation to the subjects committed to its jurisdiction, can no more be enjoined than can the legislature of the state.[49] There are exceptions, however, to this doctrine of non-interference, as where the mere passage of the ordinance would immediately occasion, or would be followed by, some irreparable loss or injury beyond the power of redress by subsequent judicial proceedings, or where it would cause a multiplicity of suits.[50] So a distinction has been drawn between a case where the municipality is acting in its governmental or public character with discretionary authority and where it is acting as the owner of property.[51] Furthermore if the ordinance, the passing of which is sought to be enjoined, is 51. Roberts v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 95, 107, 17 S. W. 216, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 406, 13 L. R. A. 844. In this case the following statement is made: "The general proposition that a court of equity may not enjoin passage of a municipal ordinance, must be confined in its application to subjects over which the corporation in its governmental or public character has discretionary authority. And if it be conceded taxable inhabitants have a right to resort to equity, at all, to restrain a municipal corporation and its officers from making an illegal or wrongful disposition of corporate property, whereby disposition will be injuriously affected, it reasonably follows the power exists to enjoin passage of the ordinance authorizing the act whenever irreparable injury will be done to the plaintiffs, and they have no adequate remedy at law; for, from its nature, a preventive remedy not within the legislative discretion of the municipal body, there is no question as to the jurisdiction to grant an injunction.[52]

(II) Grounds For Refusing. An injunction will not issue to prevent the passing of an unconstitutional or otherwise void ordinance where it will not result in any irreparable injury.[53] Moreover, the injury threatened must be impending as a direct result of the voting on and passing of the ordinance as distinguished from injury that may result from the carrying out or enforcement of the ordinance.[54] Where it is the enforcement of the ordinance that will cause the injury it is the enforcement that must be enjoined.[55]

(III) Ordinance Violating Prior Contract. Under ordinary circumstances the passing of an ordinance will not be enjoined on the ground that its enforcement will violate the obligation of a prior contract.[56]

g. Injunction Against Enforcement of Ordinances — (I) Void Ordinances. A municipality and its officials will be enjoined from acting under and enforcing a void ordinance, when the proposed enforcement will deprive the complainant of his property or property rights and will cause him injury which cannot be compensated by damages,[57] or where the illegal action will give rise to a multiplicity of actions at law if it is not prevented.[58] This principle applies even though the ordinance under which the action is taken is criminal or quasi-criminal in character, and the action consists of arrests and criminal prosecutions.[59] Where damages at law would afford adequate compensation, the enforcement of an ordinance will not be prevented by injunction.[60]

(II) Valid Ordinances. When the action of the municipality is within its charter powers, and raises mere questions of expediency, the decision of which is within the discretion of the municipal body, no injunction will be granted.[61] Where a valid ordinance requires a license as a prerequisite to carrying on a certain business, the enforcement of the ordinance will not be enjoined merely because the license is wrongfully withheld.[62]

(III) Validity of Ordinance a Legal Question. The validity or invalidity of a municipal ordinance, being a purely legal question, a court of equity will not assume to determine it on an application for an injunction where no irreparable injury is impending and no multiplicity of suits threatened.[63] In such case the invalidity of the ordinance must be established at law.[64]

8. Unauthorized Contracts and Expenditures — a. In General. Equity has jurisdiction to prevent public officers and boards from letting or carrying out unauthorized and illegal contracts for public buildings, bridges, and other improvements, when such action may cause the levy of illegal taxes, the expenditure of public funds in an improper manner, or a complication of the public business that will bring about many actions at law.[65]

b. Suit by Taxpayer. It is generally proper for the application to be made in such cases by a taxpayer;[66] but he must show that he is interested in the matter and will be damaged if the improper action is not prevented by injunction,[67] and in addition to these facts it is also necesary for him to show that he has no other adequate remedy.[68]

c. Necessity of Injury and Illegality. Where the action sought to be enjoined is not contrary to law, no injunction will issue,[69] as where the making of the proposed contract is within the discretion of the officers in charge and no fraud is alleged.[70] It has been held that where the proposed contract would be void and no rights could be acquired under it, no injunction will be granted.[71]

d. Letting Contracts to Lowest Bidders. Where the statute requires a contract to be let to the lowest bidder, the letting of it to one not the lowest bidder will be enjoined;[72] but not in case the matter is in the discretion of the officers sought to be enjoined.[73] The disappointed bidder, unless he is also a taxpayer,[74] is not the proper party to sue for an injunction.[75]

e. Issuance of Bonds. When bonds or other evidences of indebtedness are about to be issued by public officers illegally or without complying with the statute authorizing their issue, equity has jurisdiction to grant an injunction.[76]

pality whose officers are about to make the illegal expenditure may sue for an injunction.[92]

(B) Taxpayers.[93] As a general rule resident taxpayers are proper parties to sue for an injunction to prevent an illegal payment of public funds, and it is not generally required that the complainants show an injury to themselves other than that which they will suffer in common with the public at large.[94] There are, however, some decisions holding that the complainant must show a special injury to himself different from that suffered by the general public.[95] In a few cases it has been required that the taxpayer should bring the suit, not for his own benefit alone, but also on behalf of all the other taxpayers.[96]

(C) Creditors. Where his remedy at law is adequate,[97] or where he can compel by mandamus the application of public funds to the payment of the debt,[98] an injunction is not the proper remedy of a creditor to prevent the misapplication of such funds. Under some circumstances, however, the holder of bonds, for the payment of which certain funds were to be set aside, may be entitled to an injunction against the misapplication of such funds, on the ground that he is entitled to a specific enforcement of the agreement with him.[99]

F. Public Welfare, Property, and Rights[1] — 1. In General. An injunction is frequently a proper remedy for the protection of the rights and property of the public as such, where one of the grounds for equitable jurisdiction exists.[2] So injunction may be proper to prevent a railroad company from buying up a

3. Protection From Physical Injury. A court of equity has no jurisdiction to prevent mere threatened physical injury, since the remedy at law by an action for damages or a criminal prosecution is adequate.[18]

4. Personal Privacy. In the absence of a breach of confidence or contract, equity will not restrain the publication of a photograph of either a living or deceased person so long as it does not amount to a libel.[19] Neither will it restrain the publication of a biography,[20] nor the making and exhibition of a statue of a deceased person,[21] nor the assumption of the family name of another where no trade rights are involved.[22]

7. Slander of Title. The mere fact that an injury may result to property does not take the case out of the general rule that mere slander or libel will not be enjoined.[29] However, in some of the cases a distinction is taken between false statements made maliciously, and those made in good faith, and this class of cases hold that the injunction will be granted where malice or a wilful purpose to inflict injury is present.[30] An injunction will not be granted to restrain a per-no property liable to an execution. Life Assoc. of America v. Boogher, 3 Mo. App. 173, 176.

Reason for rule.— Redress for mere personal slander or libel may perhaps properly be left to the courts of law, because no falsehood, however gross and malicious, can wholly destroy a man's reputation with those who know him; but statements and charges intended to frighten away a man's customers and intimidate them from dealing with him may wholly break up and ruin him financially, with no adequate remedy if a court of son from notifying the public that a patent infringement suit has been brought,[31] or that an injunction has been granted to restrain another from using a patent,[32] except where the decree has been obtained by fraud.[33]

8. PUBLICATION OF COURT PROCEEDINGS. Publications concerning a pending trial, where false or unfair, have been enjoined.[34]

H. Criminal Acts and Prosecutions — 1. CRIMINAL ACTS AND OMISSIONS. Equity has no criminal jurisdiction, and acts or omissions will not be enjoined merely on the ground that they constitute a violation of law and are punishable as crimes.[35] For instance injunctions will not be granted to restrain violation of city ordinances, where the acts complained of do not amount to such a nuisance as equity would restrain.[36] Nevertheless the rule is well settled that where the intervention of equity by injunction is warranted by the necessity of protection to civil rights or property interests, the mere fact that a crime or statutory equity cannot afford protection by its restraining writ. Emack v. Kane, 34 Fed. 46.

Chancellor no criminal jurisdiction.— In the celebrated Debs case it was held that something more than the threatened commission of an offense against the laws of the land is necessary to call into exercise the injunctive power of the courts; that there must be some interferences, actual or threatened, with property or rights of a pecuniary nature, but that when such interferences appear the jurisdiction of a court of equity arises and is not destroyed by the fact that they are accompanied by or are themselves violations of the criminal law. In re Debs, 158 U. To protect corporate franchises.—When the damages would be irreparable if the threatened injury is not prevented, equity, if properly appealed to, will not permit valuable vested corporate franchises granted by the state to be seriously impaired or practically destroyed by a prosecution instituted under color of municipal ordinances which are wrested from their legitimate purposes and fraudulently used, in a matter to which they cannot apply, as a means to prevent the exercise of these franchises. b. Pendency of Suit in Equity as Affecting Right. In the federal and English courts, when the parties sought to be enjoined have as plaintiffs submitted themselves to the court by a bill of equity as to the matter or right affected by or involved in the criminal proceeding, an injunction will be granted restraining the criminal proceedings, since a court of chancery has general authority to control the conduct of parties who seek its aid in furtherance of their civil rights.[41]

c. Rights as Affected by Oppressiveness of Litigation. In a few cases criminal proceedings have been held to be properly restrained to prevent oppressive and vexatious litigation.[42]

Identity of parties and controversy.— The exception comes under the general authority of chancery to control the conduct of parties who seek its aid in furtherance of their civil rights. It is the double harassing by the equity suit and by the criminal procedure that the equity court interrupts. The pursuer and pursued must be identical in the case, i. e., defendant in the bill and in the indictment must be the same person, and the person preferring the bill and the criminal charge must also be the same. As to parties and controversy, the inquiry is analogous to that in regard to the plea of lis pendens. Spink v. Francis, 20 Fed. 567. Unless the cases raised and the objects sought are identical, the court will not prevent a plaintiff in the court of chancery from proceeding in a criminal court against defendants to the suit in chancery. VI. SUITS FOR INJUNCTIONS.

A. Jurisdiction — 1. As Affected by Parties and Interest Involved. Since a decree in equity acts upon and is enforced against the person and not the property involved,[46] a court having jurisdiction of the parties may grant and enforce an injunction, although the subject-matter affected is beyond its territorial jurisdiction,[47] as where it is outside the county[48] or state[49] or in a foreign country.[50] In some cases, however, in apparent exception to this rule jurisdiction of the res has been held to confer jurisdiction of the parties.[51] Where neither defendants nor the subject-matter are within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, an injunction cannot issue.[52] Jurisdiction must exist as to all indispensable parties;[53] but jurisdiction as to co-defendants resident within the state and outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the court may, under the statutes of some states, be acquired by the issuance and service of process, where jurisdiction has been obtained of one defendant;[54] or where the res is within the state, jurisdiction of the person may be acquired by constructive service in the manner prescribed by statute generally.[55] The court may also obtain jurisdiction by a voluntary appearance,[56] or from the fact that defendants have submitted to its jurisdiction in a pending suit with relation to the same subject-matter.[57] An injunction against the acts of a receiver should be sought in the court appointing him.[58] An injunction will not issue to control matters of internal management of a foreign corporation,[59] although, where a corporation has been incorporated in each of two states, an injunction may issue in either of such states against an improper expenditure of funds in the other.[60] An injunction granted by the court without jurisdiction is void.[61]

2. As Depending on the Amount in Controversy. A general power conferred upon a court to issue injunctions is not subject to a limitation as to the amount in controversy applicable to other powers of the court unless the intent to provide such a limitation is thoroughly apparent.[62]

3. Particular Courts — a. In General. Since the jurisdiction of particular courts is as a general rule expressly defined by the laws creating them, their jurisdiction of matters relating to injunctions as a rule must be determined by the existence and construction of such laws.[63] Injunctions, however, being matters that a portion of the subject-matter was within the county at the time the suit was begun, and the acts of the parties with respect to such subject-matter is a part of the controversy, the circuit court of the county has jurisdiction if process is served on some of defendants within the county); Toledo Tie, etc., Co. v. Thomas, 33 W. 63. See the constitutions and the statutes of the several states. And see also Ex p. Jones, 2 Ark. 93; New York, etc., R. Co. v. New York, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 562, holding that under Code Proc. §§ 33, 123, 124, Laws (1847), p. 279, § 7; Laws (1854), p. 464, the court of common pleas had jurisdiction of a motion for an injunction to restrain the enforcement of an ordinance of a municipal corporation.

Exclusive jurisdiction is not conferred upon a court by a provision that it shall have original jurisdiction in certain cases. McGeorge v. Hancock Steel, etc., Co., 11 Phila. (Pa.) 602, holding that the jurisdiction of the supreme court was not exclusive of that of the common pleas in case of an injunction against a corporation.

In case the injunction is sought upon behalf of the state jurisdiction is by statute sometimes conferred upon a particular court. McMullen v. Ingham Cir. Judge, 102 Mich. 608, 61 N. W. 260, holding that a statute proof purely equitable cognizance,[64] are, in the absence of express statutory provision, within the jurisdiction only of courts possessing general equitable powers.[65] For example they cannot as a general rule be granted by courts limited to probate jurisdiction.[66] Where a court has power to issue a temporary injunction, it has also the power to make such an injunction permanent.[67]

b. Appellate Courts. Appellate courts as a rule are granted no original jurisdiction to issue writs of injunction,[68] and where such jurisdiction is granted it cannot be exercised with regard to actions still pending and undetermined in other courts,[69] nor in cases not of equity jurisdiction.[70] Authority given to a judge of an appellate court cannot be exercised by the court collectively.[71]

c. Federal Courts. Federal courts are prohibited by statute from interfering with parties prosecuting suits in state courts.[72] The circuit court may issue an injunction to restrain the prosecution of a suit pending before it without regard to the citizenship of the parties. In such cases the jurisdiction depends on cognizance of the original case.[73]

4. Preliminary Injunctions — a. In General. The power to issue temporary or preliminary injunctions is usually a matter as to which statutory provision is made, and may be vested in courts of general chancery jurisdiction,[74] or in a judge thereof;[75] or in some states in court commissioners,[76] or surrogates.[77] So viding that such proceedings might be begun in the county court of a particular county was within the power of the legislature to enact.

A statute which authorizes the judge of a particular court to allow injunctions does not confer a similar power upon the court. Cummings v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 36 Iowa 173.

In Pennsylvania the orphans' court has authority to issue injunctions in all cases coming within the meaning of the act of May 19, 1874, § 7, which provides that they "shall have power to prevent by order, in the nature of writs of injunction, acts contrary to law or equity, prejudicial to property over which they shall have jurisdiction." judges of courts of limited jurisdiction may be granted power to award injunctions with respect to actions in courts of more general jurisdiction.[78] A requirement that equity cases shall be heard in the county where defendant resides does not demand that an application for a temporary injunction made ex parte to the judge at chambers must be made in such county.[79] A preliminary injunction will be refused where the jurisdiction of the court is doubtful.[80]

b. Appellate Court. It seems that in a proper case a court may in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction issue a temporary injunction.[81] A judge of an appellate court may have a power to grant an injunction which cannot be exercised by the court.[82]

c. Judge Absent or Under Disability. In the event of the absence or disability of the proper judge, an injunction may usually be issued, under statutes, by some other officer, such as the clerk of the court,[83] a court commissioner,[84] or another judge called for the purpose.[85]

B. Venue — 1. In General. Generally the residence of the parties determines the county in which the action should be brought.[86]

2. Injunctions to Protect Interests in Lands. In some jurisdictions statutes defining local actions have been interpreted to include applications for injunctions when their essential purpose is the protection of an interest in lands. Under these circumstances the injunction must be sought in the county where the land lies.[87]

3. Injunctions to Stay Proceedings at Law. In some jurisdictions, by statute, suits for injunction to stay proceedings at law must be brought in the county in which the suit at law is being tried.[88] This rule does not apply when the application for the injunction is a mere incident to other relief.[89]

C. Parties[90] — 1. In General. If the injunction is sought to protect an interest in lands, all persons who have a beneficial interest in the land which is the subject-matter of the suit should be made parties.[91] Where an injunction is sought relating to rights in a private or municipal corporation, all persons should be made parties whose legal or equitable interests will be affected by the decree prayed for.[92]

2. Complainants — a. In General. An injunction suit can be maintained only by one whose special or personal interest is affected by the wrongful act, and hence where an interest is neither greater nor of a different character than that of all citizens of the same community, or all citizens of one class, it is insufficient to maintain an injunction.[93] It has been held, however, that liability to pay taxes is sufficient interest to enable a taxpayer to sue to enjoin an illegal expenditure of public funds.[94] The interest may be either legal or equitable.[95]

b. Suits to Stay Proceedings at Law. Generally a suit to enjoin a proceeding at law should be brought by the person who has the beneficial interest in the property which is the subject of the action at law.[96] For instance a vendee who has paid but part of the purchase-price may enjoin a stranger from foreclosing a pretended lien.[97] Likewise a purchaser of property who many years after the purchase discovered that his deed was defectively executed may enjoin the person who fraudulently obtained a deed from the heir from bringing ejectment.[98] When an injunction is sought as ancillary to an action at law suit must be brought by the same plaintiff in the same capacity.[99]

c. Suits Relating to Corporate Rights. Relief by injunction against the illegal or fraudulent proceedings of corporate officers should be sought by a stock-holder[1] or other person whose pecuniary interest is affected.[2] Stock-holders who have failed to comply with the terms of their stock subscription have no interest which will enable them to sue for an injunction.[3] The state, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, is not a necessary party to a suit to enjoin a corporation from making an improper use of a corporate name.[4] Such a suit may be maintained by a private party.[5]

d. Attorney-General or Other Public Officer. A suit to restrain a public wrong when the individual complaining suffers such injury only as is common to the other members of the community should be brought by the attorney-general.[6] Relief will not be granted in such a suit if not brought in fact for the protection of public rights but in aid of a private enterprise.[7] The right to sue to protect rights under the charter of a municipal corporation and to enjoin violations of ordinances is sometimes vested exclusively in the city.[8] So similar authority is sometimes vested in state or county officers.[9]

So where an assignee for the benefit of creditors is sought to be enjoined on account of illegal preferences in the assignment, the creditors alleged to be preferred should be joined.[18]

b. Public Officers. Where a suit is brought to restrain action in behalf of a municipality, the officers whose duty it is to perform the acts sought to be enjoined are proper,[19] and usually necessary,[20] parties.

c. Municipal Corporations. The municipality is usually a necessary party where it is sought to enjoin officers thereof from the performance of acts apparently within the scope of their authority.[21] In any event the municipality is a proper defendant.[22]

d. Private Corporations or Associations or Officers Thereof. A corporation or its officers must be joined where injunctive relief is sought against the corporation or its officers.[23] When a part of the stock-holders seek to enjoin a corporation from paying an extra dividend, the other stock-holders are necessary parties.[24] Where several defendants who have incorporated are sued as individuals, and the acts complained of are threatened by the corporation, the corporation is a necessary party.[25] So where a corporation has a de facto but not a de jure existence, suit may be brought against it in its corporate name.[26] A religious corporation should be made a party to a bill to restrain unauthorized acts of its trustees; but where an injunction has issued the failure to make it a party is not necessarily a fatal defect.[27] An action by policy-holders against a mutual insurance company to enjoin it from buying land, when such purchase is a violation of its charter, should be brought against the officers and trustees of the company and not against the company itself.[28] The acts of an unincorporated association cannot be enjoined in a suit against the officers alone, in the absence of a statutory provision authorizing such procedure.[29]

e. Persons in Representative Capacity or Represented by Others. It is unnecessary to join persons who are fully and legally represented by another when the act to be enjoined affects the representative in his official capacity.[30] This proposition assumes that there is no conflict of interest between the representative and the person he represents, and that the representative has duly qualified.[31] Where, however, the act to be enjoined does not affect him in his representative capacity he need not be joined as a party.[32] The trustee of a resulting trust does not represent the cestui que trust within the meaning of this rule.[33]

f. Principal, Agents, or Employees. The action should be brought against the person doing or causing the wrong to be done and not against his agents and servants.[34] Where, however, the agent or servant is permitted to exercise an independent judgment or discretion, he should be made a party.[35]

is a unity of interest in the subject-matter of the suit and a common right to the relief sought may join as plaintiffs.[36] Persons having similar but separate and distinct rights cannot join as plaintiffs.[37] In order to prevent a multiplicity of suits and as a matter of convenience courts sometimes make an exception to the rule by permitting persons to join as plaintiffs who seek the same object but between whom there is no common interest in the subject-matter.[38]

b. Of Defendants. Where the act sought to be enjoined is threatened or being performed by more than one, all may be joined as defendants.[39] So where it is sought to restrain the payment of claims allowed by a single resolution of town supervisors, all the claimants are properly joined as defendants.[40]

equity will not join a person as plaintiff if by doing so it will be ousted of jurisdiction where he may be joined as a defendant.[45] A stranger to a suit whose rights have been affected unfavorably by an injunction may appear by petition and request a construction or modification of the injunction.[46]

6. Defects, Objections, and Amendments. Where a misjoinder occurs the court may allow an amendment by striking out the parties improperly joined,[47] but when the action is brought by one not entitled to sue an amendment cannot be allowed to bring in the proper plaintiff.[48] In the case of a non-joinder of a necessary party, the court will not proceed until the necessary party is joined, the usual order being for the case to stand over with liberty to amend by adding the proper party.[49] It has been held that necessary parties may be joined by amendment after an injunction has been granted.[50] Where, however, a suit is brought by the wrong parties, and the injunction granted is void for want of jurisdiction, an amendment inserting a correct party does not validate the injunction.[51] If the proper parties to a bill for an injunction are not before the court, a decree may for this defect be reversed on appeal.[52]

D. Process and Appearance[53]— 1. In General. Unless defendant voluntarily appears and submits himself to the jurisdiction, it is necessary that process issue and service be made upon defendant before the court grants a final injunction.[54] The English chancery practice permitted service of process, by leave of court, upon an attorney, to restrain proceedings at law, when the client was out of the jurisdiction.[55] In this country the federal courts have recognized and applied this rule,[56] and have extended it to permit the service of a cross bill on the

Illustrations of cases where bond not necessary.— A statute requiring a bond does not apply to cases where the right to the injunction is itself given by statute and the case is absolutely within the latter statute. Hutchinson v. New York Cent. Mills, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 394. Nor does it apply to an injunction restraining all actions against an insolvent company or interference with its assets until further order of court, where such injunction is incidental to a receivership. Phœnix Foundry, etc., Co. v. North River Constr. Co., 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 106. And it is not necessary to require an injunction bond when the answers have come in and show on their face the propriety of a personal injunction. Alexander v. Ghiselin, 5 Gill (Md.) 138. So it has been held that the exemption is not operative in the case of receivers,[78] or trustees.[79]

3. SUFFICIENCY OF THE BOND — a. Form and Terms. All that is required is that the bond should afford the security required by law or by the court.[80] When the terms of the bond are prescribed by the court the bond must comply with the court's order.[81] When the terms are prescribed by statute, the bond must at least substantially comply therewith.[82] Defects and irregularities of form are not ordinarily fatal to the injunction, for they may be cured by construction, or amended, or even overlooked when unimportant.[83] So a bond will be sustained, although it does not literally comply with the statute in naming the obligee.[84]

b. Amount. The amount to be named as penalty in the bond should be fixed by the judge,[85] and is very generally left wholly to his discretion.[86] It should be large enough to cover all costs and damages that may reasonably be expected to accrue in case the complainant is not entitled to the injunction.[87]

4. SURETIES. It is generally held that the complainant himself need not sign the bond.[88] And it is discretionary in some states whether to require sureties.[89] The sureties may be required to justify on notice or request,[90] the amounts in which they must justify varying from the amount of the penalty in the bond to double that amount.[91]

5. Execution and Approval of Bond. The statutory and other requirements as to execution and acknowledgment of the bond must be complied with;[92] and it must be approved by the proper officer.[93]

7. Effect of Failure to Give Bond. Where the statute requires that the party applying for an injunction shall, as a condition precedent to its issuance, execute a bond or undertaking, with sufficient sureties, an injunction issued without such bond or undertaking is inoperative and void and may be discharged without danger of punishment for contempt.[98] But where the granting of a

Injunction against judgment at law.— An restraining order without a bond is merely an irregularity which does not render it void, the subsequent execution of a proper bond will cure the irregularity and render the proceedings valid.[99] While the bond is mandatory, if the complainant offers to supply it, this may be allowed even in the court of last resort.[1] The want of a bond or undertaking is good ground for a motion to dissolve the injunction, but the proper order in such case is that a bond be executed within a reasonable time or the injunction be dissolved in default thereof.[2] And if defendant waits an unreasonable time before making his objection, he will be presumed to have waived the irregularity.[3]

G. Pleading — 1. Bill or Complaint — a. Necessity. Since a permanent injunction can only be granted when the facts stated in the complaint show that plaintiff is entitled to the relief sought, a complaint is necessary.[4]

b. Sufficiency — (i) In General.[5] As the granting of an injunction rests in some degree in the discretion of the chancellor, allegations in the complaint should show candor and frankness.[6] Omission of material facts known to plaintiff will preclude the granting of relief.[7] An injunction will be denied if the allegations of a bill are inconsistent and contradictory,[8] or if the allegations are in the alternative.[9] An injunction may be refused because the allegations are argumentative and inferential.[10] If an action at law is sought to be enjoined, the complaint, in addition to alleging facts showing that the remedy at law is inadequate, order from the chancellor granting an injunction to a judgment at common law upon the usual terms is not sufficient to stay the proceedings until the complainant has complied with the terms of the order by giving bond and security; and in such case it is no contempt of court for plaintiff or the sheriff to proceed to sell under the execution, notwithstanding the chancellor's order was shown to them. (iv) Averments on Information and Belief.[20] An injunction will not ordinarily be granted when the material allegations are made upon information and belief.[21] This rule is strictly applied when the statements are those of the people.[22] An injunction may be granted, however, when the information is alleged to have been obtained from defendant,[23] or where the facts alleged on information are charged to rest within defendant's knowledge and not within the knowledge of plaintiff.[24]

c. Particular Averments — (i) Description of Plaintiff. Plaintiff must clearly allege his status so that his right to sue can be determined.[25] It is not sufficient that it may be inferred from an exhibit attached to the bill.[26]

(ii) Title or Right of Plaintiff.[27] The complaint must show the title or right of plaintiff,[28] although it is usually sufficient to allege that title is vested

(VI) Doing and Offering to Do Equity. Plaintiff must allege that he has done or is willing to do everything which is necessary to entitle him to the relief sought.[40]

d. Prayer.[41] The bill or complaint must contain a prayer for process against defendant; and an injunction will not ordinarily be granted under a prayer for general relief, but it must be expressly prayed. The rule applies both to perpetual[42] and temporary[43] injunctions. The reason assigned is that defendant might by his answer make a different case under the general prayer from what he would if an injunction were specifically prayed.[44] So the bill or complaint should contain a prayer for injunction in the prayer for process as well as in the prayer for relief,[45] and if it does not it is demurrable.[46] The complaint is not subject to attack because of a prayer for relief to which plaintiff is not entitled,[47] nor is a prayer for relief in the alternative objectionable,[48] although inconsistent relief cannot be prayed for.[49] It is proper to ask at the same time for both an injunction and for damages.[50] Relief by injunction may be sought as ancillary relief, but in such case if the right to the main relief falls the right to injunctive relief also falls.[51]

e. Verification — (i) In General.[52] Where a preliminary injunction is asked the bill or complaint must be verified. It will not be sufficient either alone or in connection with affidavits where it is not verified or the verification is defective.[53] But an objection on these grounds cannot be raised on final hearing or thereafter to raise the objection.[54] Verification, however, is not necessary where only a perpetual injunction is demanded.[55] It is not necessary to verify a bill for an injunction in order to give the court jurisdiction.[56]

(II) Who May Verify.[57] The complaint need not always be sworn to by plaintiff.[58] Generally any person having personal knowledge of the facts contained in the complaint may verify it.[59] Plaintiff's attorney, if acquainted with the facts, may make the affidavit.[60] One of several complainants may verify the bill.[61]

(III) Sufficiency. The verification must be definite and positive.[62] It must be of such a character as to render the affiant liable for perjury if the facts sworn to are untrue.[63] When averments are made on information and belief that fact should be stated,[64] and it should clearly appear in the affidavit itself which allegations are sworn to of personal knowledge and which on information and belief.[65]

(IV) Amendment and Waiver of Defects. When the verification is defective it may be amended.[66] Defects in the verification are waived by the failure to formally object.[67]

f. Filing Bill. A bill may be so manifestly unwarranted that the court will not permit it to be filed.[68] Leave of court to file a bill where otherwise necessary, is not required if a temporary injunction is not requested;[69] and the granting of a temporary injunction cures the failure to obtain consent of court to file the bill.[70]

relief or materially supports that claim should, if its existence is stated or assumed in the bill, be filed as an exhibit or its non-production explained.[71] Documents which are not the basis of plaintiff's claim, but are remote or collateral, need not be filed.[72] So failure to file exhibits is not fatal where the bill incorporates or sets out all that the exhibits would show.[73]

2. Answer[74] — a. In General. Defendant must set up every ground on which he intends to rely.[75] The answer must be complete in itself,[76] but need not answer all of the complaint.[77] It should be free from uncertainty, ambiguity, and evasion.[78] The matter alleged in the answer must be relevant and must either deny or avoid the allegations of the complaint or show a want of equity therein.[79] Immaterial matter may be stricken out.[80] The answer must be that of defendant and not his attorney.[81] The time to answer is governed by the rules prevailing in the forum where the action is brought.[82] A motion to dissolve, where putting in issue the truth of the allegations of the complaint, may be ordered to stand as a part of the answer.[83]

b. Admissions. A failure to deny the material allegations of a verified bill justifies the court in considering them proved.[84]

c. Verification.[85] The general rule is that a verified complaint requires a verified answer,[86] although, by statute in some states, a verified answer is not required unless requested in the complaint.[87] Defects in the verification of an answer are waived by not taking a formal objection,[88] or by proceeding to trial on the merits.[89]

3. Demurrer or Exception[90] — a. In General. Where the prayer and scope of a bill shows that its chief purpose is to obtain an injunction it will be held bad on demurrer if insufficient for that purpose, although it may be sufficient to warrant other relief.[91] A complaint for an injunction is not demurrable if, on any state of proof which its allegations justify, the court could grant an injunction.[92]

b. Grounds.[93] Demurrer is the proper remedy for such defects as multifariousness,[94] want of equity appearing on the face of the bill,[95] and misjoinder or non-joinder of necessary parties.[96] A bill which is improperly verified or entirely lacks verification is not demurrable, because the demurrer admits the truth of the allegations.[97]

c. Form.[98] The demurrer should specify the defects complained of.[99]

d. Admissions.[1] The demurrer admits all facts well pleaded.[2] The allegation of "irreparable injury" is regarded as a conclusion of law which is not admitted by a demurrer.[3]

e. Hearing.[4] A demurrer to a bill must be decided before a motion for an injunction can be heard.[5] When a demurrer to a bill for an injunction and a

4. Amended and Supplemental Pleadings — a. Amendments[8] — (i) Purposes For Which Amendments Permissible. The pleadings may be amended to correct a formal defect or mistake,[9] or to add necessary allegations.[10] Thus the prayer for relief may be added by amendment.[11] However, no amendment will be permitted which changes the essential nature of the action.[12] Furthermore, no amendment should be allowed unless the interests of justice manifestly require it.[13] An amendment should never be allowed when its manifest purpose is delay.[14] In the case of verified bills the right of amendment is granted with greater caution than in case of unverified bills.[15]

(ii) Leave of Court. After a bill in equity has been filed it cannot be amended without leave of court, and a motion for an injunction based upon an amendment made without leave will be dismissed.[16]

(iii) Time to Amend.[17] An amendment may be made, in the absence of a rule of court to the contrary, at any time within the discretion of the court.[18] Amendments are usually allowed before an answer is filed;[19] but they may be allowed after the answer is filed and before the hearing,[20] or after the dissolution of a temporary injunction and before the final hearing,[21] or even after the final hearing and before the final decree.[22]

(iv) Procedure. In some jurisdictions an amendment will be permitted only by special order granted upon notice to the adverse party.[23] The causes necessitating the amendment should be stated and sworn to.[24] The amendment, when short, may be interlined; but if the amendment is of considerable length it should be on a separate sheet of paper and annexed to the bill.[25]

(v) Operation and Effect. An amendment of a bill relates back to the time the bill was filed.[26] If the bill as amended states a good ground for injunction it is immaterial that the original bill did not.[27] If the amendments do not change the aspect of the bill a new motion for injunction will be denied.[28] If the court had no jurisdiction of the bill as filed any amendment is a nullity.[29] An amendment to a bill on which an injunction has issued may be filed by leave of court without invalidating the injunction.[30]

b. Supplemental Pleadings.[31] Whenever facts occurring after the original bill is filed are to be presented to the court, it must be done by a supplemental bill.[32] A defense consisting of facts arising after issue joined must be alleged in a cross bill in the nature of a plea.[33]

5. Issues, Proof, and Variance. Evidence not tending to support allegations in the pleadings will be rejected on the ground of variance.[34] Plaintiff must prove all the essential allegations of his bill which are not admitted,[35] and defendant all his defenses.[36]

6. Waiver of Objections to Pleadings. Formal defects in a bill for an injunction are waived by failing to demur and filing an answer.[37] If, however, a bill is clearly bad because of substantial defects failure to demur is not a waiver, and objection may be made at the hearing.[38]

H. Evidence — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — a. Presumptions. It will be presumed that all facts not fully and candidly disclosed by a party praying for an injunction are detrimental to him;[39] and that all legal proceedings are regular, in the absence of a specific designation of irregularities.[40] An execution of an act of the legislature authorizing an erection will not be presumed to be impossible.[41] The intention of defendant to perform the acts sought to be enjoined will, if such intention is essential to the maintenance of the action, be presumed.[42]

b. Burden of Proof. By analogy to the rules of procedure in actions generally, the burden of proving the right to injunctive relief is on complainant,[43]

Erection of telephone poles.— In an action for injunction to prevent the placing of poles in front of plaintiff's house on which to support electric wires, a presumption that the electric lighting company intends erecting poles at a certain point arises from the fact that it has received permission to do so, and has already erected poles at intervals on the line of streets approaching the point. 3. Weight and Sufficiency — a. In General. Plaintiff in an action praying for injunctive relief must establish the facts necessary for the granting of such relief by a preponderance of evidence,[56] what constitutes a preponderance of evidence being a question for the court trying the case, taking into consideration all the circumstances.[57] If the evidence is hopelessly conflicting[58] or doubtful,[59] an injunction will not be granted. If an unverified bill is met by the sworn denial of defendant, evidence of at least two witnesses or of one witness and corroborating evidence equal to the testimony of one witness is generally necessary.[60] If, however, the bill is verified,[61] or the answer is upon information and belief,[62] or fails to deny important material allegations,[63] the testimony of one witness may be sufficient. A jurisdictional fact necessary to the allowance of an injunction must be established prima facie before the court can proceed further.[64]

b. For Preliminary Injunction. On an application for a preliminary injunction, it is not necessary that a case should be made out that would entitle the complainant to relief at all events on the final hearing. If the complainant has made out a prima facie case or if from the pleadings and the conflicting affidavits it appears to the court that a case is presented proper for its investigation on a final hearing, a preliminary injunction may issue to maintain the status quo.[65] Where the evidence on material points is conflicting, it is within the discretion of the court either to grant[66] or refuse[67] the injunction. It will nearly always be refused where the preponderance of the evidence as to the complainant's right or as to the existence of an impending irreparable injury is on the side of defendant.[68]

An order to show cause may be refused and an injunction denied where it appears to the chancellor upon a mere inspection of the bill that it is clearly without equity. Remshart v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 54 Ga. 579.

An apparent misnomer of defendant is not sufficient ground for refusing an injunction on ex parte application. Bosley v. Susquehanna Canal, 3 Bland (Md.) 63.

Waiver.— The defect may be waived by setting up a counter-claim and seeking a counter injunction. Marshfield Land, etc., Co. v. John Week Lumber Co., 108 Wis. 268, 84 N. W. 434.

Where the complaint is demurred to it is not available error to issue a restraining order without first disposing of the demurrer. Morey v. Ball, 90 Ind. 450. And the court has the right to have all the defenses of defendant put in before disposing of the demurrer. Hambrick v. Crawford, 55 Ga. 335.

evidence,[77] but the complainant may introduce other proper evidence if he sees fit.[78] If it appears that the facts are evidenced by documents, a mere affidavit of those facts is not sufficient without accounting for the absence of the better form of evidence.[79]

(B) Sufficiency of Affidavits. Mere statements of conclusions are not as a rule sufficient.[80] The affidavits must contain all the facts material to the complainant's case,[81] and should be entitled in the cause and show that they were

In Louisiana, on hearing of the rule to show cause, affidavits may not be read, since the object of the rule as there regarded is to test the sufficiency of the petition. Heyniger v. Hoffnung, 29 La. Ann. 57.

Affidavits filed at the time of procuring a rule to show cause are not evidence on the hearing of the rule, but the averments in the bill must be supported by testimony. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Armstrong, 9 Del. Co. (Pa.) 301.

The replication has no effect upon an application for an injunction, and the application will be considered upon the bill and the answer, so far as responsive thereto. Dougherty v. Piet, 52 Md. 425.

Affidavits in support of title have been excluded on a motion for injunction to prevent waste. U. S. v. Parrott, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 15,998, McAllister 271.

In New York, where the right to an injunction depends on the nature of the action, the complaint must be one of the moving papers. Woodburn v. Hyatt, 34 N. Y. App. Div. 246, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 597; Sanders v. Ader, 26 N. Y. App. Div. 176, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 964; Rondout First Nat. Bank v. Navarro, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 900; Roosevelt v. Edson, 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 5; Central Cross-Town R. Co. v. Bleecker St., etc., Ferry R. Co., 49 How. Pr. 233. But where an action was commenced by the service of a summons, without complaint, and a motion for an injunction was made based on an affidavit which contained all the essential facts of a complaint, an objection to the form was held insufficient. Morgan v. Quackenbush, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 72.

78. Davis v. Covington, etc., R. Co., 77 Ga. 322, 2 S. E. 555; Cox v. Garrett, 7 Okla. 375, 54 Pac. 546; Schermerhorn v. L'Espenasse, 21 Fed. Cas. To show irreparable injury the affidavits must state the facts constituting the injury; an allegation in general terms is not sufficient. Waldron v. Marsh, 5 Cal. 119.

General objections to the introduction of affidavits on the ground that the facts set out are irrelevant will be overruled if any of the facts are relevant. Davis v. Covington, etc., R. Co., 77 Ga. 322, 2 S. E. 555.

Aider by documentary evidence.— It is not necessary that the affidavits should of themselves make a sufficient showing. They may be supplemented by documentary and record evidence. Oil Run Petroleum Co. v. Gale, 6 W. Va. 525.

All facts within the knowledge of the applicant and material to the application must be disclosed, on a motion ex parte. Sprigg v. Western Tel. Co., 46 Md. 67; Stewart v. Turpin, 1 Manitoba 323.

Agents are competent to make the necessary affidavits in the absence of their princimade for use in the particular case.[82] Independent affidavits are not necessary, it being sufficient to attach an affidavit to the bill or complaint, and thus make it answer a double purpose.[83]

(c) In Rebuttal. The court may refuse to allow the filing of affidavits in rebuttal of defendant's affidavits,[84] but it is within the court's discretion to allow such affidavits to be filed.[85] New matter set up in defense may, however, be contradicted or explained by affidavits.[86]

(III) Allegations on Information and Belief. Allegations of facts upon information and belief without giving the sources of the information and the grounds for the belief, and without the affidavit of any person having actual knowledge of the facts, are ordinarily insufficient, whether contained in the complaint or in other affidavits.[87] But statements on information and belief may be pals, if they know the facts. Long v. Kasebeer, 28 Kan. 226; Wilson v. Curtis, 13 La. Ann. 601.

Applicability to complaint.— The affidavits must be founded solely upon the allegations in the bill. Stull v. Westfall, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 1.

An ordinary affidavit of verification of a bill praying an injunction is not sufficient evidence to establish as a fact the positive allegations in the complaint. Bostwick v. Elton, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 362.

An affidavit of a third person that what he has stated in the complaint is true, when no complaint has been filed by him, is not sufficient. Martin v. Sloan, 69 N. C. 128.

84. Day v. Boston Belting Co., 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,674, Brunn. Col. Cas. 585. See Boyce v. Burchard, 21 Ga. 74, holding that further affidavits, notice of which has not been given to defendant, should not be allowed to be read.

After argument.— It is not an abuse of discretion on an application for an injunction to refuse to allow plaintiff to file an additional affidavit after defendant has submitted its affidavits, and closed its argument. Where the rights of third persons are involved, the injunction will not be granted where the complainant's affidavits are merely sufficient in exceptional cases where positive knowledge is not attainable and the danger of injury is immediate.[88]

b. For Defendant — (I) Counter Affidavits in General. Affidavits may be used in opposition to the motion for an injunction;[89] but the counter affidavits are of no avail unless they contradict the material allegations of the complaint.[90]

(II) Use and Effect of Answer[91] — (A) In General. Upon an application for a preliminary injunction, defendant may at once file his answer which must be considered and given its proper effect in deciding as to the propriety of issuing a temporary injunction.[92] If properly verified it must be given effect as an affidavit of and for defendant.[93] On motions for an injunction made on bill court has discretion to grant a preliminary injunction, and it will not be denied as of course,[97] especially where the evidence of disinterested witnesses supports the complainant or the court is otherwise satisfied that his allegations are true,[98] or where a denial of the preliminary injunction would cause embarrassment if the issue should be ultimately decided in the complainant's favor and would amount to a denial of the entire relief sought.[99]

(B) Character of Verification and Denials. For the answer to be given such weight as to cause the denial of the motion for an injunction, it must be sworn to positively and not on information and belief,[1] and it must be responsive to the bill and contain a denial of the facts therein, and not a mere denial of conclusions or mere allegations of new matter in avoidance which can be established only by evidence.[2]

Exception to rule.— As a general rule a complainant in an original bill has the right at any time upon payment of costs to dismiss his bill; but this later rule is subject to a distinct and well settled exception, namely, that after a decree whether final or interlocutory has been made by which the rights of a party defendant have been adjudicated, or such proceedings have been taken as entitle defendant to a decree, the complainant will not be allowed to dismiss his bill without the consent of defendant. Dismissal by representative plaintiff.— Where proceedings for an administration of assets are in behalf of all creditors, the original complainants had no power to discon-

plaintiff will not be allowed to dismiss his suit except on terms.[4] If plaintiff withdraws his suit before a final determination of the issues, he is not concluded from pursuing another remedy,[5] from bringing a new suit for injunction for the same cause,[6] or from making an application for reinstatement.[7]

2. INVOLUNTARY DISMISSAL — a. Grounds — (I) WANT OF JURISDICTION. Where the court is without jurisdiction,[8] as where the amount involved is not within the court's jurisdiction,[9] the suit will be dismissed. So a dismissal is proper where the action is brought in the wrong county,[10] or where a court of concurrent jurisdiction has secured prior jurisdiction of the cause of action.[11]

(II) WANT OF EQUITY ON FACE OF BILL. If the allegations of the petition do not show plaintiff to be entitled to equitable relief,[12] as where it is apparent that he has an adequate remedy at law,[13] the bill will be dismissed.

(III) DEFECT OF PARTIES. The failure to join necessary parties is ground for dismissal.[14] Where only part of plaintiffs have been served with process the bill should not be dismissed on motion of those who have appeared.[15]

(IV) FAILURE TO PROSECUTE. The bill may be dismissed for failure of the complainant to use due diligence in prosecuting his suit.[16]

may be dismissed.[17] For instance, when the act enjoined is subsequently legalized by statute, the bill may be dismissed.[18]

(VI) Dissolution of Preliminary Injunction. While by consent of the parties the cause may be heard on its merits at the hearing on the temporary injunction, and the bill dismissed in a proper case,[19] it is improper to dismiss the bill where defendant moves only for the dissolution of the injunction.[20] If the injunction is the principal relief asked, and the hearing of the motion to dissolve is on bill, answer, and affidavits, the bill itself may be dismissed if it appears that the complainant is not entitled to the relief asked.[21] In some states the dismissal

Motion as equivalent to demurrer.— "The only relief sought by the bill, was to enjoin the sale of the property under the executions, and when defendants entered their motion to dissolve the temporary injunction, it was for the want of equity appearing on the face of the bill. The motion operated precisely as a demurrer, and by it the defendant admitted the truth of all the allegations relied upon to entitle the complainants to an injunction. The practice is to allow either a demurrer to the bill, or a motion to dissolve the injunction, and either course produces precisely the same result, so far as the injunction is concerned. On sustaining the demurrer, or allowing the motion, the temporary injunction is in either case dissolved, and if no other relief is sought, the case is virtually at an end. If the bill were retained, and full proof of all the allegations which it contained was made, the result would not be changed. It would only be to prove what is admitted by the demurrer or the motion." Titus v. Mabee, 25 Ill. 257. And see Gardt v. Brown, 113 Ill. 475, 55 Am. is proper only where plaintiff fails to move for leave to amend,[22] or that the bill be continued over to trial on its merits as an original petition.[23] On the other hand, if the injunction is ancillary to other relief, the bill should not be dismissed or the dissolution of the injunction, but will be continued for a hearing upon the merits of the other relief demanded.[24] In some jurisdictions statutes require that the bill shall be dismissed of course at the next term after the dissolution of the injunction, unless cause is shown why the case should be retained.[25]

(VII) Miscellaneous Grounds. Grounds for dissolving a temporary injunction, such as the failure to file an injunction bond,[26] defects in the bond,[27] or want of an affidavit or a defective affidavit,[28] do not warrant a dismissal of the suit. If defendant in his answer concedes plaintiff's claims and disavows any purpose or intention to commit the acts which plaintiff seeks to restrain, the suit may be dismissed at the discretion of the court or retained with leave to plaintiff to move for an injunction on defendant's disregarding his avowed intentions.[29]

held improper for a court before answer or demurrer to dismiss a bill on a hearing, on the bill and affidavits, of a motion to continue the preliminary injunction.[32] In general a bill may be dismissed for want of equity upon demurrer,[33] motion to dismiss,[34] upon the dissolution of a temporary injunction,[35] or by the court upon its own motion, where it appears that it has been improperly issued,[36] or at or after hearing on the application for a preliminary injunction.[37] Where the answer has been filed and the case called for trial on its merits, it is too late for defendant to move to dismiss a bill on the ground that complainant has an adequate remedy at law.[38] Upon the death of a party a reasonable time for the appointment of his personal representative and making him a party in the case by amended bill and bringing him into court by proper process will be allowed, and the bill will not be dismissed until such reasonable time shall have passed unheeded.[39] A necessary party to an injunction suit who has not been joined has the right to have the dismissal set aside and the suit reinstated.[40]

c. Operation and Effect. The dismissal of a bill ipso facto dissolves a temporary injunction already allowed.[41] So the dismissal from a petition of all charges upon which the injunction was issued dissolves the injunction.[42] A dismissal not on the merits,[43] such as a dismissal for want of prosecution,[44] or for want of jurisdiction,[45] is not res judicata. So a voluntary dismissal does not preclude an action at law.[46] A dismissal by stipulation or consent is not conclusive upon a defendant who was not brought in and was not a party to the stipulation.[47]

J. Trial or Hearing[48] — 1. Right to Trial or Hearing. A court of equity will not make a decree for a perpetual injunction, which is to operate directly upon the parties in interest, without giving them an opportunity to be heard.[49] The parties are entitled to a trial in open court.[50] It is not proper to issue a permanent injunction upon the hearing of an order to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not issue or upon motion to dissolve heard before answer. A permanent injunction should issue, or a temporary injunction should be made permanent, only upon final hearing after the parties are at issue[51] and after notice to defendant.[52]

2. Time For Hearing[53] — a. In General. In some states statutes provide for the prompt and summary trial of suits involving injunctions.[54] The court may proceed to hear the cause on its merits before it is formally set for hearing, on a

See also Johnson v. Holt, 3 Ga. 117, holding that a statute requiring injunction suits to be disposed of at the second term of court held in and for the county in which the suit originated means the second term after the parties are served and the cause set down for trial.

Trial at term of appearance.— Under Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 5505, relating to injunctions and providing that after answer is filed motion may be made at any time in term to dissolve the injunction, and upon such motion the parties may introduce testimony, etc., section 2013, relating to suits in general and providing that they may be instituted by filing a petition and the voluntary appearance of the adverse party, or by the filing of a petition and suing out process thereon, and section 2024, relating only to cases in which defendant has been served with process and making actions triable at the return-term, the court has power to order an injunction suit in which no temporary injunction has been asked, and in which defendant has voluntarily appeared at the term preceding the return-term, to be tried at the term of appearance. Harding v. Carthage, 105 Mo. App. 16, 78 S. W. 654.

motion to dissolve a temporary injunction, if defendant is present in court and offers no objections.[55]

b. Continuances. The rules relating to continuances in general[56] apply to continuances in injunction suits.[57]

3. Papers and Evidence on Hearing.[58] A cause before the court for final decree, although seeking for special injunction, should be heard on bill, answer, replication, and proofs; and the bill should not be treated as an affidavit in plaintiff's behalf.[59] An affidavit tendered and received in evidence on the hearing of an application for an injunction, where no objection is made on the ground of incompetency of the witness, and no motion made to withdraw or rule out the affidavit, may be considered whether the witness was competent or not.[60]

4. Inspection of Subject-Matter.[61] In a proper case in an injunction suit an order for an inspection of the subject-matter of the suit may be granted on motion after issue has been joined,[62] but not before.[63]

5. Scope of Inquiry — a. Preliminary Injunction — (i) In General. On the hearing of a motion for a preliminary injunction or an order to show cause the court may go into the merits of the case, but is limited to the issues that are raised by the bill, answer, and affidavits, and cannot go into outside or collateral matters.[64] The merits of the case, however, will not usually be determined on

What are grounds.— Where plaintiff applies to the clerk and master for a dedimus to take testimony within two terms after the dissolution of the injunction the cause will not be dismissed or heard, but continued on his application (Dawson v. ——, 3 N. C. 296); and where, since the granting of a temporary injunction, the statute on which it was based has materially changed, and the case is not ready for final judgment, and the term of court is about to close, the cause will be continued to the next term (Atty.-Gen. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 38 Wis. 69). The hearing may be postponed until the issues are made specific. Wilkesbarre, etc., R. Co. v. Danville, etc., R. Co., 29 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 373.

What are not grounds.— But it has been held to be no ground for continuance that defendant on answering had failed to produce certain papers which plaintiff believed were in his possession (Dunson v. Pitts, 67 Ga. 767); or, when a case is set for hearing by one defendant, that the issues have not been framed with a co-defendant who lives in an adjoining parish and whom plaintiff has neglected for eleven months to cite (Adams v. Dupuy, 2 La. 259); or that a witness is absent (Soderberg v. Pierce, 33 Mo. App. 60).

Statutes.— Mo. Rev. St. § 2718, providing that "if, after a motion for a dissolution of an injunction is made, either party will satisfy the court, by his own affidavit . . . that any material specified part of the bill or answer . . . is untrue, that he has witnesses whose testimony he believes he can procure at the next term, or other material testimony which will disprove the same, and that he has not been able to procure such testimony by using due diligence, the court may continue the motion until the next term," applies only to the motion for dissolution, and an application for a continuance of the cause on the ground of absent witnesses, which complies with such section only, is insufficient and properly denied. The motion for continuance of the cause must conform to section 3595, which contains additional requirements. Soderberg v. Pierce, 33 Mo. App. 60.

Continuance pending trial of title.— Where the title to land has been tried in a court of law and the case is pending in a higher court on a writ of error, an equity suit involving such title should be continued pending the hearing on the writ of error. Ct. 600, holding that in a suit to restrain county commissioners from erecting a bridge brought by one whose property will be damaged thereby, the question of the commissioners' authority can be raised as an incidental question necessarily involved.

Right of possession.— In an action to restrain defendant from interfering with plaintiff's use of property in his possession, where the parties are at issue upon plaintiff's right of possession and the validity of the authority for defendant's acts, the court must examine into plaintiff's right of possession. Pride v. Weyenberg, 83 Wis. 59, 53 N. W. 29.

Injunction against breach of contract after expiration.— In an action for an injunction to restrain defendant from carrying out a contract with a third party, in violation of a previous contract with plaintiff, where an arrangement was made by which defendant, on giving an undertaking conditioned to pay a certain sum as liquidated damages if it should be finally determined that plaintiff was entitled to an injunction, was permitted to fulfil her contract with such third party, it was held that the rights of both parties having been expressly reserved, the court, even after plaintiff's contract had expired, would determine plaintiff's original right to relief by injunction. Duff v. Russell, 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 80, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 134 [affirmed without opinion in 16 N. Y. Suppl. 958, which was affirmed without opinion in 133 N. Y. 678, 31 N. E. 622].

Damages assessed by jury.— Where a perpetual injunction is prayed for, and also damages, the complaint stating a single cause of action, the court must try the issue raised as to the injunction, and, on demand of either party, submit the question of damages to a jury, and thereafter enter the proper judgment; and it is error to try the issue as to the injunction, enter judgment thereon, and continue the question of damages to a subsequent term of the court. Stocker v. Kirtley, 6 Ida. 795, 59 Pac. 891.

Reasonableness of ordinance.— In a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a city ordinance making it a misdemeanor to bury human bodies within the city limits except in certain localities, as being unreasonable, the facts going to show the unreasonableness of the ordinance, if controverted, must be determined by the jury. Austin v. Austin City Cemetery Assoc., (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 28 S. W. 1023.

75. Harris v. Mackintosh, 133 Mass. 228.

Existence of verdict in action at law.— Where a bill, asking an injunction and other relief, charges defendants with sinking a deep well, and thereby diverting the plaintiff's water-course, and the fact is denied by the answer, issues may be framed for a jury, although plaintiff has obtained a verdict in an action at law; it being shown by defendant that this verdict was founded on very unsatisfactory evidence, and materially affected by new evidence. Dexter v. Providence Aqueduct Co., 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,864, 1 Story 387.

Existence of injury.— On an application to restrain the building of a railroad on the ground that it would cause material and irreparable injury to a preëxisting corporation, the interest involved being important, an issue may be directed to ascertain whether the building of the road would be productive of such injury. Hudson, etc., Canal Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 9 Paige (N. Y.) 323.

that the perpetual injunction be granted.[78] But such a verdict must contain a finding on all the issues submitted.[79] The verdict is not conclusive on the court.[80] Findings of the court, master, or jury will be construed, if possible, to sustain the judgment or decree granted.[81] The findings of course must be within the issues made by the pleadings.[82]

8. Rehearing or Second Application. The refusal of an application for a preliminary injunction does not necessarily bar complainant from making a second application.[83] The court is not bound to adhere to its former ruling, nor is it bound, in case the former application was in another court, to follow the ruling of that court,[84] although it will generally do so by way of comity.[85] As a general rule the second application will be denied merely on a showing that the first one was denied, unless complainant presents new and additional matter discovered since the former hearing.[86]

See Belcher v. Murphey, 81 Cal. 39, 22 Pac. 264, holding that, in an action to enjoin defendant from destroying a levee alleged to have been built by plaintiff on land belonging to her, a finding that "said levee is upon the line dividing the lands of plaintiff and defendant, and is built partly upon the lands of each," is a sufficient finding that said levee was built upon land owned by plaintiff to sustain a judgment for her.

Finding as to injury from railroad.— The finding of the judge, on an application for an injunction against a street railroad company, that the railroad "will be especially injurious to the property of plaintiffs, and other property similarly situated" means that, although the cause of the injury would be common, the special injury to each plaintiff would be several and direct. Milhau v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. 611, 84 Am. Dec. 314.

Fraud.— In a suit to enjoin foreclosure of a mortgage because of false and fraudulent representations, a master's finding that plaintiff was entitled to the relief demanded, and that the representations were made, were material, and were relied on, is equivalent to a finding that the representations were false and fraudulent, although there was no specific finding to that effect. Russell v. Bryant, 181 Mass. 447, 63 N. E. 927.

82. Thus under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 526, authorizing the granting of an injunction only where the complaint shows that plaintiff is entitled to a decree restraining the act complained of, or where it appears that the commission of some act will produce irreparable injury to plaintiff, where, in a suit by a grantee of the use of an undivided one fourth of the waters of an irrigation ditch to restrain the diversion of the water by the grantor, the latter in his answer denies the diversion and admits the grantee's right to the use of an undivided one eighth, a finding outside of the issues that the grantor denied the grantee's right to the use of any of the water, conceding the right of the court to make it, is insufficient to sustain an injunction restraining the grantor from interfering with the grantee's right to use the water.

Immaterial findings.— In a suit to enjoin the transfer, foreclosure, or collection of a mortgage given to secure the purchase-price of property, the purchase of which by plaintiff from defendant was alleged to have been induced by a false and fraudulent representation that defendant's lessor had consented to the assignment of the lease of the realty where the property was located to a responsible party, a finding that no such consent was given rendered a finding as to whether or not plaintiff was a responsible party immaterial. the judge sitting at chambers, upon an application for injunction, to reopen the case for more testimony, upon discovery of additional witnesses by one of the parties after argument, and while holding the matter for decision.[87]

10. Reference.[88] In injunction cases proof may be taken before any one agreed upon, to be used at the hearing;[89] or the court may in a proper case order a reference to take testimony.[90] The court may also, subject to statutory provisions, order a reference in a proper case to take an account, assess damages, determine title, etc.,[91] or to determine other questions and report upon the form of decree.[92] A reference, however, should not be ordered to determine an account before evidence has been adduced tending to prove the material allegations of the bill;[93] and in actions involving the title to land, the legal issues should be tried before a reference of equitable issues.[94] The master should report the form of decree, and, when specifically directed, any means or schemes by which the injury could be remedied.[95] If the report is not sufficiently specific, it will be referred back to the master for further action.[96] If the master finds the bill to be scandalous, the court will not grant an injunction until the scandalous matter has been stricken out.[97]

K. Writ, Order, or Decree — 1. Writ or Order — a. Issuance.[98] The injunction will not usually issue prior to the service or filing of the bill or complaint;[99] but in England and some of the United States, whenever the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter and parties in a proceeding, an injunction may be issued before the bill or complaint has been filed.[1] As a rule a preliminary injunction cannot be granted before issuance of the summons or subpœna;[2] but

In a very urgent case an injunction may with the terms of the prayer of the bill,[12] but a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient.[13] It must be specific and definite.[14] It should not impose a greater restraint than is asked or is necessary.[15] Jurisdictional facts need not be recited.[16] Minor irregularities do not vitiate the order.[17] In some states the order need make no reference to an injunction bond,[18] while in other states the order must direct the kind and amount of the bond.[19]

(II) Mandatory Injunction. Mandatory injunction should be framed in a positive and not an indirect form.[20] In most cases they have been issued in prohibitory form, either commanding defendant thereafter not to omit to do certain acts, or commanding him not to continue a certain course of action when his only means of discontinuing is to perform some positive act.[21] It is not necessary, however, that the negative form should be used, but the injunction may be expressed in positive terms commanding the performance of an act.[22] The court may decree that the operation of the mandatory injunction shall be suspended until after a certain fixed time,[23] but it is not the duty of the court to suggest to defendant ways and means of carrying out the injunction.[24]

c. Conditions on Granting or Refusing[25]—(i) In General. The court may impose such terms as seem proper as a condition to the granting of a preliminary injunction,[26] or as a condition to its refusal.[27]

(ii) Giving of Bond as Condition of Refusal. Defendant may be required to keep accounts in cases where otherwise the amount of the complainant's loss would be uncertain.[28] The injunction may be denied, particularly where defendant will be caused greater inconvenience by the injunction than the complainant by its refusal, on condition that defendant give bond to secure the complainant against loss.[29] But if complainant has a clear right to the injunction itself, and a bond would not provide an adequate reparation, it is error to withhold it on the giving of a bond by defendant, or to provide for its dissolution on the giving of such bond.[30]

d. Service of Writ or Order and Return — (I) Necessity For Service.[31] To make a temporary injunction effectual, it is generally necessary to serve a copy of the writ or restraining order on the parties enjoined.[32] But actual notice of the granting of an injunction is sufficient to bind a party against whom it is issued, without service upon him.[33]

(II) Time For Service. The writ or order of injunction should be served within a reasonable time.[34] Where the writ or order issues before the service of the summons or subpœna to appear and answer, the injunction and process may be served together;[35] and although service of the writ or order before or without the service of the summons is irregular, the injunction is not rendered void but is binding until dissolved.[36]

(III) Mode of Service. Independent of statutory provisions, to effect a regular service of a writ of injunction, the writ itself, under the seal of the court, must be shown to defendant, and a true copy delivered to him.[37] By statute in some jurisdictions service by delivery of a copy of the writ or order is sufficient, and the original need not be shown.[38] The moving affidavits must also be served with the order, in some states.[39] It is not necessary that agents of defendant be served with a copy,[40] but, on the other hand, service on an agent may be sufficient to bind the principal.[41] The courts are inclined to disregard mere technical defects in the service,[42] and a strictly regular service of an injunction order is not necessary to entitle plaintiff to proceed by attachment as for a contempt against defendant.[43]

(IV) Personal or Substituted Service. Personal service may be dispensed with, by order of court, where defendant avoids the service of the writ or other circumstances render such order necessary and proper.[44] Service by leaving a copy at the residence of defendant may constitute a good service.[45] Constructive service, by publication, however, is not sufficient to make an injunction binding on a person who is a non-resident of the state.[46]

(v) Return. Writs of injunction are usually returnable to the county in which the action is pending.[47]

(vi) Waiver. The parties may by agreement waive personal service.[48] So defects in service may be waived by defendant appearing and contesting the right to an injunction.[49]

e. Operation and Effect of Order[50] — (i) In General. The order of the court granting or refusing a preliminary injunction is not an adjudication of the rights of the parties and is not conclusive upon the court on subsequent hearing.[51] A temporary injunction must be obeyed until set aside, even though it was improperly issued, provided the irregularity is not such as to make the order void.[52] The presumption is that where an injunction may have been regularly issued it was so issued.[53] The order relates back to the date of the decision granting the injunction,[54] and continues in force until dissolved or modified or until final judgment is entered.[55] Transfers and contracts or agreements in violation of an injunction are invalid and may be set aside,[56] except as against an innocent third

Service outside state.— Whether an injunction served beyond the borders of the state upon an individual not personally under the jurisdiction of the court will bind him depends on the nature of the suit. (II) Effect on Actions at Law. An injunction restraining a person from commencing or further prosecuting an action at law does not operate as a prohibition to the law court in the exercise of its jurisdiction, but only prevents plaintiff therein from proceeding.[60] Before judgment in the suit at law it does not operate as a release of errors therein.[61] Nor does an injunction restraining persons from doing certain acts prevent a court of law from compelling them by mandamus to perform such acts.[62] knowledge or notice of the injunction, provided they are agents or servants of defendant, such as the officers or agents of a private or municipal corporation.[64]

f. Objections and Waiver. Objections to the granting of a preliminary injunction must usually be taken before final hearing.[65] The right to object may be waived by the acts of defendant.[66]

2. Final Judgment or Decree[67] — a. Against Whom Entered. A final decree should not be granted against one not made a party and not in court,[68] but the fact that the injunction cannot be granted against some defendants does not preclude granting it against others who have been properly summoned.[69] An injunction is properly issued against all of a number of joint wrong-doers,[70] but it should be limited to the parties to the suit where no conspiracy with others is charged.[71]

b. When Entered. A final decree may be granted against a complainant upon the granting of a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction granted in the cause, when an injunction is the only relief sought;[72] but not against defendant on the denial of such a motion.[73] A decree may be entered against a defendant where he fails to answer and the bill states a good cause of action.[74] But where no answer is required, or a rule to show cause is equivalent to an answer,[75] or where a verified answer is filed which is in effect a general denial,[76] a final decree should not be entered until after a hearing.[77]

c. Decree as Substitute For Writ. In some states it is not necessary or proper to issue a writ of injunction; the function of the writ may be served by an order contained in the decree itself.[78] One result of the abolition of the writ and the substitution of relief by order or decree is that an injunction cannot be granted subsequent to the final decree or judgment, on motion and affidavits.[79] The decree, however, must be definite and explicit and based upon sufficient findings of fact.[80]

d. As Dependent on Bill or Complaint — (I) In General. A permanent injunction is not ordinarily justifiable, unless the bill or petition therefor sets out facts that are a sufficient basis for granting the relief asked;[81] but if a preliminary injunction, although granted upon an insufficient bill, has been allowed to stand till final hearing, it may be perpetuated if the showing then made is sufficient.[82]

(II) Prayer For Relief. As a general rule an injunction can only be granted where the bill prays for relief by injunction.[83] So defendant cannot have relief by injunction unless his answer prays for it.[84] When relief by injunction is prayed for, the injunction should be confined to the issues raised by the pleading and should not be allowed in broader terms than prayed for in the bill.[85]

e. Effect of Granting or Denying Temporary Injunction. The fact that a preliminary injunction was granted or continued should not influence the court on final hearing, but the relief granted should be in accordance with the rights as they then appear.[86] The same is true in case the preliminary injunction was temporary injunction). Nor does failure to dissolve an injunction granted to preserve the status quo pendente lite affect the validity of a final decree. Musgrave v. Staylor, 36 Md. 123.

denied or was dissolved.[87] So the decree may afford complete relief as to injuries that have been consummated since the suit was begun; for even though no temporary injunction was obtained, defendant acts at his peril in doing pendente lite the acts sought to be enjoined.[88]

f. Scope of the Restraint.[89] The permanent injunction should not extend beyond the necessities of the case.[90] It should not cover more property or extend over a greater time than does the right of the complainant for the protection of which the injunction is asked.[91] Where the bill covers more than plaintiff's interest, the decree should be limited to his interest.[92] Furthermore the injunction should not be so broad as to prevent defendant from exercising his rights,[93] or rights that he may acquire in the future.[94] The injunction should be broad enough to cover the whole case,[95] but it may be granted as to part of the bill and refused as to the rest.[96] It may, in a proper case, provide for a modification of the injunction when changed conditions require it.[97]

may provide that the injunction shall be made perpetual, or that a permanent injunction shall issue, only upon the performance of some condition by the complainant, as for example the payment of money due;[99] but on final decree it is not necessary or proper to require the complainant to file a bond as in the case of temporary injunctions.[1] Likewise an injunction may be refused, conditioned upon the doing of certain things by defendant.[2]

h. Alternative or Additional Relief — (I) In General. Where the court has jurisdiction to issue a permanent injunction, further appropriate relief may be granted in the decree.[3] For instance equity, while enjoining defendant, has decreed the execution of a deed,[4] an accounting,[5] or a personal decree against defendant for money due.[6] Likewise, in addition to enjoining the commission of future injuries, equity may in proper cases prevent by mandatory injunction a continuing injury from acts already committed.[7] Where an unsuccessful complainant has been allowed to keep property pending the litigation, the court can compel him to return it, or to pay its value;[8] and where complainant fails to make out his case, the bond given to stay an action at law may be ordered delivered to the person entitled for prosecution.[9] If, however, the court is not a court of general chancery jurisdiction, but merely has power to enjoin in certain cases, it has no power to retain the case for the granting of other equitable relief when the right to the injunction asked is not established.[10] Although equity may enjoin the prosecution of an action at law or the execution of an order of sale, it should not attempt in its decree to nullify the order of the court of law or to direct that certain further steps be taken in the action at law.[11]

(II) Damages as Alternative or Additional Relief — (A) Incidental Relief.[12] In order to avoid a multiplicity of suits, and to dispose of the entire matter at once, equity may, in addition to an injunction, decree that defendant pay damages to the complainant for all past injury,[13] and in addition to this grant an injunction conditioned to be dissolved upon the giving of a sufficient bond by defendant to pay all damages that may be assessed against him.[16] On the other hand where equitable principles clearly entitle the complainant to an injunction, even though his damage is small in amount, it is error to decree damages in lieu of the injunction asked.[17]

(c) Damages Where Injunction Improper. The general rule is that where the right to an injunction is not established, equity has no jurisdiction to retain the case for the purpose of awarding damages;[18] but in some courts where the equity practice is not sharply distinguished from the law, cases have been retained for the purpose of giving damages, even though an injunction was held not to be a proper remedy.[19] Where the injury has been wholly completed prior to the bringing of the suit for an injunction, equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin and hence will not give damages;[20] and the same rule must of necessity be followed where the injury is merely threatened. In such case equity cannot

Discretion of court.— If defendant, in the injury he is inflicting, is doing an act which will render the property of the complainant absolutely useless to him unless it is stopped, then, inasmuch as the only compensation which could be given to the complainant would be to compel defendant absolutely to purchase the property, the court will not, in the exercise of its discretion, withhold an injunction. Where, however, the injury is less serious, and the court considers that the property may yet remain the property of the complainant, and be still substantially as useful as it was before defendant's acts, and that the injury therefore is of such a nature as can be compensated by money without taking away the property from the complainant, the court has and will exercise a discretion to award damages in place of an injunction. give damages, although it refuses to enjoin.[21] But where, at the time of bringing his bill, complainant was entitled to equitable relief, defendant cannot deprive equity of its jurisdiction over the case by hastening the injurious acts to completion before the hearing. In such case equity may give damages.[22]

i. Relief to Defendant. Not only may equity grant relief indirectly to defendant by issuing an injunction against him on a condition to be performed by complainant, but it is proper to grant him direct relief. For instance, when he shows himself entitled to such relief, defendant may be granted an injunction against complainant.[23] Such affirmative relief will generally not be granted, however, except upon defendant's cross bill and prayer therefor.[24] Generally equity will not compel a transfer of possession in favor of defendant.[25]

j. Stay or Suspension of Decree. The court may in its discretion suspend the operation of an injunction.[26] It may in the very decree itself provide that the operation of the injunction shall be stayed for a certain length of time or until the happening of a condition,[27] and it is within the discretion of the court to stay the operation of the decree pending an appeal therefrom, until the hearing of the appeal on the merits.[28] After one such stay or suspension it is within the power of the court to extend it further or to grant a second suspension.[29] A bond may be required of defendant, as a condition of suspending an injunction, k. Effect as Res Judicata. In determining whether a final decree operates as res adjudicata, the same rules apply as in case of any other decree.[33]

l. Opening Final Decree. A final decree awarding an injunction will not be opened except on good cause shown,[34] such as mistake or surprise.[35] Where, after the decree, facts arise which show that it ought not to be executed, the decree may be vacated.[36] And where a default has been taken improperly and final judgment entered,[37] or where defendant has misunderstood the meaning of the papers served on him,[38] the court may open the decree.

L. Enforcement of Decree. The writ or decree may be enforced by contempt proceedings,[39] and sometimes a writ of assistance is proper.[40] Where an injunction has been violated an order may be granted compelling the party violating it to restore the status quo.[41] The injunction will not ordinarily be enforced at the instance of a third person who is not himself entitled to the restraint.[42]

dence is so conflicting that the bill is retained with leave to renew the application for an injunction, each party may be compelled to pay his own costs.[52]

VII. CONTINUING, DISSOLVING, AND MODIFYING.

A. Right to Continuance — 1. In General. When a preliminary injunction was properly obtained, the complainant is entitled to have it continued until its purpose is attained, where nothing has occurred subsequently to render its dissolution proper. If it is still reasonably necessary to protect the complainant's rights, or if some of the questions involved are so important that they should await the final hearing, or depend upon testimony that is to be given on final hearing, the injunction will not be dissolved prior thereto.[1]

2. Reasonable Probability of Success. To be entitled to a continuance, the complainant must show a reasonable probability that he will be able to establish his case at the hearing, and if this appears very doubtful the injunction will be dissolved.[2]

3. Pending Determination of Right. Where the right for the protection of which the injunction was obtained is in process of determination in either the same or another court it is proper to continue the injunction until such determination is had to stand or fall at that time according to the event.[3]

4. Pending Appeal. In the absence of any statutory rule on the subject, the better opinion is that an appeal from a decree dissolving the injunction does not have the effect of continuing or reviving the injunction.[4] But a preliminary injunction may be continued pending an appeal from a decree dismissing complainant's bill, or from a judgment at law deciding the disputed right adversely to the complainant, in case such continuance is necessary to protect the complainant and to maintain the subject-matter in such condition that the complainant will not be deprived of relief in case of his success on the appeal,[5] but not otherwise.[6]

5. INJUNCTION RESTRAINING ACTION AT LAW. It is proper to continue an injunction restraining the prosecution of an action at law until the equitable rights involved are determined on final hearing.[7]

B. Grounds For Dissolving — 1. IRREGULARITIES — a. In General. Mere technical informalities in the injunction itself or in the proceedings therefor are not generally sufficient ground for dissolving an injunction on motion.[8] If, however, the irregularities are not merely technical, but are substantial, the rule is that the injunction should be dissolved.[9]

b. Irregular Service. The injunction will not be dissolved for mere irregularities in the service of the injunction or the subpœna,[10] although a total failure to serve may be sufficient ground.[11] A failure to make a return of the service is ground for dissolving.[12]

c. Verification. An injunction will generally be dissolved for lack of or material defects in the verification;[13] but it has been held that even in case of such defects an opportunity to amend should be allowed.[14]

d. Amendable Defects. The injunction should not be dissolved because of defects that have been or may be amended.[15]

2. Want of Equity in the Bill. In cases where the injunction was improvidently granted because of the want of equity in the bill, it will be dissolved on motion either before or after answer.[16] And it is immaterial that the answer

An injunction to restrain an action at law will not be continued when it is based merely or his action at law for the determination of his right,[21] especially where defendant is being deprived of the use of property or is otherwise suffering loss because of the restraint.[22] So the injunction may be dissolved because of neglect to serve the subpœna,[23] of failure to file or to serve a copy of the bill,[24] or of delay in taking testimony.[25] However, if there is a reasonable excuse for the delay, a dissolution will not be granted on the ground of laches.[26]

4. Fraud and Misrepresentation. The injunction will be dissolved without any showing of other grounds, when it appears to the court that the complainant's suit is collusive or in bad faith,[27] that the complainant's previous conduct does not entitle him to equitable consideration,[28] or that he has obtained the preliminary injunction by either careless or intentional misrepresentation of the facts,[29] or by suppressing facts which good faith required him to disclose.[30] ground for a motion to dissolve.[31] And a defect of parties is not necessarily ground for dissolving,[32] although in case it appears to the court that justice cannot be done in the absence of certain parties, the injunction will be dissolved unless those parties can be and are brought in.[33]

C. Grounds For Refusal to Dissolve. Where it is apparent that the complainant, in case his injunction is dissolved, would be immediately entitled to the same remedy upon a new application, the motion to dissolve should be denied.[34]

D. Balance of Convenience — 1. In General. In continuing and dissolving injunctions, the relative inconvenience to be suffered by the parties may be of controlling weight. For instance, although the answer denies all the equity of the bill, yet the injunction will be continued in case its dissolution might thwart the object of the litigation and render a subsequent victory by the complainant of no avail.[35] So where the dissolution would work irreparable injury to the complainant, or greater injury to him than its continuance would cause defendant, the injunction should be continued.[36] If the continuance will work no injury but

2. The Public Interest. The interests of the public and third persons will be given weight in considering a motion to dissolve.[40] For instance, where a public improvement is being interfered with by the continuance of the injunction a dissolution will be favored;[41] while if the dissolution of an injunction would cause interference with and confusion in the public schools, the injunction will be continued.[42]

E. Dissolution by Reason of Subsequent Events — 1. In General. A preliminary injunction will be dissolved when the reasons for granting it have ceased to exist and it can no longer serve any useful purpose.[43] So it will be dissolved in case the complainant has subsequently obtained in some other way all that he asked in his bill.[44] An injunction against an official is not dissolved merely upon the official's ceasing to hold the office.[45]

2. Death of Party. The abatement of a suit by the death of a party thereto does not ordinarily dissolve a preliminary injunction theretofore granted,[46] although in some cases the injunction has been held to fall with the death of defendant.[47] The proper procedure is for defendant, or his representatives in case of his death, to obtain an order that the complainant, or his representatives in case of his death, revive the suit by a fixed time or that the injunction be dissolved.[48]

3. Amendment of Bill. The filing of an amendment to the bill may operate to render a temporary injunction ineffective, unless filed after leave of court and without prejudice to the injunction.[49]

4. Dismissal or Discontinuance. Upon the dismissal of the bill or the discontinuance of the suit the temporary injunction will be dissolved.[50]

5. Denial of Principal Relief. If the temporary restraint is merely ancillary to protect pendente lite a right of the complainant, it will be dissolved on motion upon a determination in another action that the complainant has no such right, or upon a finding in the suit for an injunction in favor of defendant.[51]

6. Entry of Final Decree. The entry of a final decree in the injunction suit renders a temporary injunction ineffective,[52] even though an appeal has been taken therefrom,[53] and a formal order of dissolution is not required.[54]

On an uncontradicted showing that the complainant was guilty of gross misconduct as an employee, an injunction restraining his dismissal should be dissolved. Miller v. Warner, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 208, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 956.

showing of abuse, the discretion of the chancellor will not be controlled by an appellate court.[60] The court has discretion to dissolve the injunction upon security to be given by defendant, even though complainant has sworn that an irreparable injury will occur.[61]

G. Dissolution of Court's Own Motion. The court may of its own motion, without notice, dissolve a temporary injunction where it is satisfied that it was improperly allowed.[62]

H. Authority of Court or Officer.[63] The court or judge who issued the temporary injunction has also the power to dissolve or modify it.[64] Motions to dissolve should, when it is convenient, be heard by the judge who issued the injunction and no other, although it is not necessary.[65] It is proper for the regular judge to dissolve or modify an injunction granted by another temporarily called in from another court.[66] In fact the outside judge has no authority over the matter after he ceases sitting in the court of issuance.[67] The motion to dissolve must generally be heard in the district and in the same court in which the suit is pending.[68]

The relative inconvenience to be suffered by the parties should largely control the exercise of the court's discretion. Mabel Min. Co. v. Pearson Coal, etc., Co., 121 Ala. 567, 25 So. 754.

I. Parties Entitled to Move to Dissolve — 1. In General. In general only a party to the suit can move to dissolve the injunction,[69] and he must have a substantial interest;[70] but a defendant who has not been served may appear and move to dissolve.[71]

2. Parties in Contempt. One who is in contempt of court for disobeying its injunction cannot move to dissolve until he purges himself of the contempt.[72] However, the mere fact that the moving party has violated the injunction, where he has not been adjudged guilty of contempt, does not preclude the motion.[73] Especially is this so where the nature and extent of the punishment to be inflicted for the contempt must depend somewhat upon the determination of the motion to dissolve.[74] However, the fact that defendant is in contempt will influence the court against granting his motion in so far as the decision is discretionary.[75]

J. Parties Entitled to Oppose Dissolution. Aside from the original complainants, the dissolution of an injunction may be opposed by new parties who have been properly brought in as complainants;[76] but interveners cannot oppose unless they show that they themselves would have been entitled to the issuance of the injunction.[77]

K. Time For Motion.[78] A motion to dissolve may be made before an answer is filed.[79] Of course the injunction will not be dissolved on motion before answer

L. Successive Motions. A second motion to dissolve, made on the same papers, is improper without leave of court.[86] But where such leave has been granted, as where the denial of the first motion is without prejudice to a second motion, a second or further motion is proper.[87] A second motion to dissolve is proper after an amendment of the answer.[88] The fact that the court has erroneously refused to dissolve on the first motion requires a dissolution on a second motion where the facts are the same.[89]

M. Notice of Motion — 1. Necessity. As a general rule an injunction will not be dissolved or modified on motion unless notice has been given to the complainant,[90] and this is so, although the injunction was obtained ex parte.[91] Courts have power, however, to dissolve an injunction on motion without notice where delay will result in serious loss,[92] and in some states where the face of the bill shows a lack of equity,[93] or where the motion is made in term and in open court.[94]

2. Form. A general notice setting up want of equity in the bill as ground for the motion is sufficient,[95] but if there are other special grounds they should be set out in the notice.[96] The proper court or judge must be specified with certainty,[97] but immaterial mistakes do not vitiate the notice;[98] and it is not necessary to specify in detail the affidavits that are to be used in support of the motion.[99]

3. SERVICE. Service should usually be made on plaintiff's attorney.[1] In the absence of a statute fixing the time, the notice must be served a reasonable time before the day fixed for hearing.[2]

4. WAIVER. The want of, or defects in, the notice are waived by appearing and contesting the motion.[3]

N. Use and Effect of Bill or Complaint. Upon a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction before answer, or at any time, for want of equity in the bill, the allegations of fact properly made therein will be taken as true.[4] In this respect the motion operates the same as a demurrer.[5] All amendable defects in the bill may be considered, for the purposes of the motion, as having been amended.[6] After the filing of the answer the bill may be read as an affidavit to contradict the answer.[7]

O. Use and Effect of Answer — 1. GENERAL RULE. The general rule is that on a motion to dissolve an injunction made upon the filing of a verified answer, the allegations of the answer, so far as they are responsive to the bill, will be taken as true;[8] and in case such allegations meet and deny all the equities of the

This rule as to the effect of the answer does not apply if the injunction was granted after hearing, defendant having filed affidavits.[17]

b. Sufficiency of Answer in General. The injunction will not be dissolved on the coming in of the answer in case it does not appear to be entitled to as much credit as the bill.[18] The denials of the answer must be clear, explicit, positive, and unqualified.[19] They must not be argumentative,[20] evasive,[21] or mere denials of legal conclusions.[22] If, after the answer comes in, there remains a reasonable doubt as to whether the equity of the bill is sufficiently negatived, the court may continue the injunction to the hearing.[23] Allegations of the bill not has been held to be applicable even though the bill for the injunction did not require a sworn answer.[27]

d. Denials on Information and Belief. The answer is insufficient as ground for dissolving if its denials are not positive and of personal knowledge, but are merely on information and belief,[28] except where the allegations of the bill or complaint are upon information and belief.[29] Much less is a mere denial of all knowledge on the part of defendant sufficient,[30] even though defendant is an executor or administrator and could not have personal knowledge of his decedent's transactions.[31] But where, without the knowledge in question, defendant would be a bona fide purchaser, with equities equal or superior to those of the complainant, a denial of such knowledge is a sufficient answer and justifies dissolution of an injunction.[32]

e. Where Fraud Is Involved. Where the substance of the bill upon which the injunction was granted is fraud on the part of defendant, the court will as a usual thing retain the injunction until the question can be investigated on final hearing, even though the answer denies the fraud and meets the whole equity of the bill.[33]

f. New Matter in Answer. An injunction will not be dissolved on the coming in of the answer if defendant entitles himself to such dissolution only by setting out new matter, not responsive to the bill.[34] The burden of proving such new matter is on defendant, and to support this burden he must produce evidence.[35] But the presence of new matter in the answer is no ground for refusing to dissolve, if, in addition, the entire equity of the bill is negatived.[36]

3. Answers to Bills For Discovery. Where the bill merely asks discovery in aid of a defense at law, the injunction will be dissolved of course upon the coming in of the answer, even though the charges of the bill are not denied;[37] but if the bill prays for relief also, as well as discovery, the injunction is not to be dissolved as of course.[38] required;[43] nor are the answers of those who would have no knowledge of the facts and are not charged with such knowledge.[44]

5. EFFECT OF EXCEPTIONS TO ANSWER. The filing of exceptions to an answer does not prevent dissolution of the injunction on motion of defendant. The exceptions and the motion may be considered together,[45] and if, despite the exceptions, it appears that the equity of the bill has been fully answered, as where the exceptions are not well taken or are too immaterial or unresponsive portions of the answer or are for impertinence merely, the motion to dissolve may be granted.[46] Further the injunction may be dissolved on motion even though the exceptions have not been disposed of.[47]

P. Affidavits and Other Evidence in Support of Motion. Defendant may generally introduce affidavits in support of his motion to dissolve.[48] In some jurisdictions affidavits may be used before answer with much the same effect that the answer itself would have, so that the injunction may be dissolved on affidavits fully and positively denying the equities of the bill;[49] but they must contain a specific denial of the facts and not a mere general denial of the equity.[50] Affidavits may also be filed after answer, in support thereof, and may be read on a motion to dissolve,[51] although the contrary has been held in earlier cases.[52] Such affidavits cannot aid an answer whose denials are insufficient.[53] Where supporting affidavits are filed with the bill by the complainant, they may be rebutted by evidence in support of the answer.[54] Even though the bill does not require a sworn answer, such an answer may be used as an affidavit on behalf of defendant, upon the hearing of his motion to dissolve.[55] Supplemental affidavits cannot ordinarily be filed where the opposing affidavits merely rebut, and set up no new matters.[56]

Q. Affidavits and Other Evidence in Opposition to Motion. While there are early decisions in some states, and the rule is apparently adhered to in other states, that affidavits are inadmissible in opposition to the motion to dissolve, at least to contradict the answer,[57] the rule in most of the states is to the contrary

Disputed facts proper for the consideration of a jury will not be determined on mo-

long as his report is not set aside the court will determine the motion in accordance with it.[75]

4. Weight of Evidence. On the hearing of a motion to dissolve, it cannot be said that any particular amount of evidence is necessary either to dissolve or to sustain the injunction. It will be dissolved if the evidence is clearly in favor of defendant,[76] but the complainant is not required to make out as strong a case as he must on final hearing.[77] The injunction will be continued if the preponderance is with the complainant,[78] or if defendant's evidence is weak and unsatisfactory.[79] If the evidence is evenly balanced, the injunction may be continued;[80] and it has been said that the burden of showing cause for dissolving is on defendant.[81]

S. Order. On dissolving an injunction affirmative relief cannot ordinarily be granted to defendant in the absence of a cross bill asking it,[82] although where the injunction has taken property from defendant the order should grant restitution thereof.[83] So, on a mere motion to continue, the court has no power to grant relief to defendant for which he has not moved,[84] nor should the complainant be granted relief for which he has not prayed.[85] An injunction may be dissolved in part only,[86] and should be dissolved only as to such defendants as move for dissolution.[87] It may be dissolved conditionally,[88] or without prejudice.[89] The order is not final on the merits even though the merits are involved,[90] although a dismissal of the bill on the merits has been held proper as a part of the order.[91] The entry of a formal order or decree is not usually necessary to effect the dissolution or the continuance of an injunction.[92] But a decree should

T. Dissolution on Giving Bond. If the right is doubtful and the continuance of the injunction will cause defendant much greater damage than its dissolution will cause the complainant, or if whatever damage the complainant will suffer may be amply compensated in money, it is proper to dissolve the injunction on the giving of a proper indemnity bond by defendant.[94] If the right is not doubtful,[95] or if the complainant is likely to suffer an irreparable loss not to be adequately estimated or compensated in money in case the injunction is dissolved, a dissolution will not be granted on the giving of a bond.[96] The matter rests largely in the discretion of the court.[97]

A motion to quash a defective writ in an action at law may be made in that action, even though an injunction based upon such defect has been dissolved. Waters v. Duvall, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 76; Henley v. Cottrell

It does not amount to a dismissal of the bill,[99] nor does it prevent the granting of a permanent injunction.[1] On the other hand an order refusing to dissolve is not conclusive; on final hearing the complainant may be refused relief.[2] Only such matters as are properly at issue on the question of dissolving become res adjudicata.[3] The dissolution is prima facie evidence that defendant has suffered damage,[4] but it is not an adjudication that the injunction was wrongfully obtained.[5]

V. Modifying and Suspending Injunction. An injunction will be modified on motion when it is made to appear that its restraint is broader than is necessary for the complainant's protection,[6] or where a modification is necessary in order to allow defendant to maintain his property in its then existing condition by repair or otherwise,[7] or to establish his rights at law.[8] In case defendant has obtained certain rights by statute or ordinance, an injunction theretofore granted should be so modified as to allow the exercise of those rights.[9] An unnecessary modification will not be made, nor will one be granted when there is no sufficient showing that the restraint as originally ordered is improper.[10] As a condition of modifying the injunction defendant may be required to give a proper indemnity bond.[11] Where the injunction will cause defendant great loss, it may be temporarily suspended in the discretion of the court, on terms that will properly protect the complainant.[12]

reinstatement.[19] An order reinstating an injunction does not relate back so as to render invalid proceedings in the interim.[20]

X. Damages on Dissolution or Modification — 1. Power to Assess. In the absence of statute a court of equity will not, upon dissolving an injunction, enforce payment of damages in the original cause, but will remit the parties aggrieved to their action on the bond, if one has been given, or to their action at common law.[21] But in some states, by statute, damages may be assessed in the injunction suit,[22] where the injunction was issued to restrain a judgment or final order of court.[23] But even where this is the case, the granting of damages rests in the discretion of the court.[24]

2. Nature and Grounds of Liability — a. Necessity For Final Adjudication. Defendant is not entitled to a decree for damages or to an order of reference to ascertain damages until there has been a final adjudication in his favor that the complainant is not entitled to an injunction.[25] There is no final adjudication in case the injunction is merely dissolved upon the coming in of the answer.[26] A dissolution which follows a dismissal of the complaint is to be regarded as a final adjudication.[27]

b. Injunction Ineffective or Harmless. In case defendant has never actually been restrained, he has suffered no damage because of any injunction, and he is not entitled to damages on dissolution. Such would be the case where no injunction actually existed,[28] or where the injunction issued was void for want of jurisdiction,[29] was suspended pendente lite,[30] or was granted on condition and the condition was never complied with.[31] So where the injunction actually caused no damage defendant should not be allowed damages by decree.[32]

c. Injunction Rightfully Obtained. Damages will not be allowed on dissolution of an injunction on grounds accruing since its issuance, when it was rightfully obtained in the first place;[33] nor in case it has been sustained in part and there was no abuse of the remedy.[34]

3. Parties Liable. In case of an injunction obtained by one acting in a representative capacity, damages on dissolution, if any, are to be assessed against the representative personally;[35] but damages are not to be assessed against him in case he acted disinterestedly and in good faith.[36]

4. Method of Ascertaining — a. Suggestion of Damages and Hearing. In some states the practice, as regulated by statute, is to file, upon dissolution of the injunction, a suggestion of damages. Unless this suggestion is filed in writing and in due time, stating the nature and amount of the damages, the court has no jurisdiction to hear evidence and assess damages.[37] The suggestion must be so framed as to inform the other party with reasonable certainty of the nature and amount of the damages claimed.[38] Upon the filing of such suggestions the court will proceed to hear evidence and to assess the damages.[39] This proceeding by way of a suggestion of damages may be continued from time to time on a proper showing made to the court.[40]

b. Reference. In some states it is proper to order a reference to ascertain the damages caused to defendant by an injunction, upon dissolution thereof.[41]

c. Assessment by Jury. In at least one state the damages must be assessed by a jury unless it is otherwise agreed by the parties,[42] while in other states the trial by jury is within the discretion of the court.[43]

5. Elements of Damage — a. In General. In assessing damages the court will allow only such damages as are the direct and proximate result of the injunction between the time of its issuance and its dissolution.[44] Proper elements of damage include expenses and losses due to the injunction,[45] such as interest on money tied up by the injunction,[46] rental or interest value of property, the use of which has been lost to defendant;[47] depreciation in the value of personal property during the restraint,[48] and loss of time.[49] But no depreciation or loss should be estimated in case it might equally well have occurred had no injunction been granted,[50] nor should trifling or remote damages be allowed.[51]

b. Counsel Fees. In most of the states counsel fees are allowed as a part of the expenses incurred.[52] The counsel fees are limited, however, to those incurred in procuring the dissolution of the injunction on motion.[53] Furthermore defendant is not ordinarily entitled to fees of counsel for services upon unsuccessful applications to dissolve, but only for services upon the application that is granted.[54] Counsel fees will not be allowed in case counsel are acting ex officio for a public corporation,[55] nor in case defendant has acted as his own attorney.[56] It is not necessary for defendant to show that he has paid the fees, it being sufficient that he has become liable to pay them.[57]

6. Amount of Damages — a. In General. The amount which defendant is entitled to have assessed as damages is the amount of the damage actually sustained by him and no more.[58] The damages allowed should not exceed the amount of the bond, if a bond was given.[59] The question of amount of damages is in some states regulated by statute.[60] Where a judgment bearing interest has been enjoined, such interest must be considered in awarding interest allowed by law, and in no case should the amount allowed bring the total interest up to more than the highest conventional rate.[61] The amount to be assessed as damages on dissolution of an injunction must be reduced by any receipts, benefits, and improvements that accrue to defendant pending the injunction.[62]

b. Counsel Fees. The amount to be allowed by way of counsel fees is the usual and customary fee paid by clients for such services when they have no hope of being reimbursed.[63] Such fees cannot be allowed at all unless there is evidence

Opinions of witnesses.— The court may that they are reasonable and customary,[64] and the opinion of the attorney himself is not sufficient evidence.[65] In no event can defendant recover more than he has paid or has become bound to pay.[66]

7. EXEMPLARY DAMAGES. While it is doubtful whether in any case it is proper to award exemplary or punitive damages on dissolution of an injunction,[67] it is certain that no such damages will be allowed in the absence of any showing that the injunction was applied for with malice and without probable cause, or that the remedy has been abused.[68] If such a showing is made, however, it has been held proper to award as damages the highest amount or per cent allowed by statute.[69]

8. DECREE AND RECORD. The decree for damages on dissolution should fix the amount thereof;[70] and the record must show the evidence upon which the decree for damages is based, or it must contain a finding of the facts amounting to more than mere statements of conclusions.[71]

Y. Costs on Dissolution.[72] While the costs of proceedings to dissolve an injunction are largely in the discretion of the court,[73] and while they may be left to abide the event of the final hearing,[74] costs will generally be awarded to defendant upon granting his motion to dissolve.[75] Defendant is entitled, however, only

A. Writ or Mandate Violated — 1. In General. Where the injunction is void, and not merely voidable, as where the court had no jurisdiction, disobedience thereof is not punishable.[81] Where, however, the court had jurisdiction, the fact that an order of injunction is merely erroneous, or was improvidently granted or irregularly obtained, is no excuse for violating it,[82] the remedy in such a case being by appeal or writ of error from the order or decree.[83] So, although the injunction is broader than authorized by the bill, it must be obeyed.[84]

2. INDEFINITE OR UNCERTAIN INJUNCTION. An injunction should contain within itself sufficient to apprise the party upon whom it is served what he is restrained from doing, without the necessity of his resorting to the bill on file; and if the party does not in fact know to what the injunction applies he will not be punished for contempt.[85]

3. INJUNCTION GRANTED ON CONDITIONS. Where an injunction is ordered to issue upon the performance of certain acts by plaintiff, there can be no contempt until the acts are performed.[86]

4. EFFECT OF PENDENCY OF AN APPEAL. In jurisdictions where an appeal from an order granting an injunction does not stay the operation of the writ,[87] a violation thereof pending the appeal will be punished as a contempt.[88] An appeal with supersedeas from a judgment perpetuating an injunction does not have the effect of dissolving or suspending the injunction, and a party against whom a judgment

5. Effect of Modification. Where the injunction has been modified, defendant therein cannot be punished for contempt in violating the order as originally granted where the act does not violate the injunction as modified.[90]

6. Effect of Dissolution. The fact that an injunction has been dissolved is no protection to a defendant in a proceeding against him for its violation while it was in force.[91] And where the injunction has been dissolved by a court without jurisdiction to dissolve, a violation thereafter will be a contempt.[92]

B. Persons Liable[93] — 1. Liability of Particular Persons — a. Agents and Employees in General. Agents and other employees who have knowledge that an injunction has been served upon their principal must obey the injunction while continuing in the employment,[94] although they themselves were not served;[95] but after the relation of master and servant has ceased to exist they are not bound by the injunction.[96] guilty of contempt in doing acts prohibited by the court and are punishable therefor.[97]

c. Private Corporations. A private corporation is subject to punishment for a contempt.[98] While it cannot be imprisoned, it may be fined.[99]

d. Municipal Corporations. While a municipal corporation cannot be guilty of contempt, yet its officers and agents, through whom alone it acts, may be punished.[1]

e. Persons Not Parties. A person may be guilty of a contempt of court in doing an act which he knows the court has prohibited by injunction, although he was not a party to the suit.[2] In such a case he is not technically guilty of a violation, but of an independent act of disrespect to the court, which constitutes a contempt of the court, and may be punished as such without reference to its effect upon the rights of the suitors.[3]

f. Complainants. Unless the injunction in terms restrains the person who obtains its allowance, he is not liable in contempt for doing the acts enjoined.[4]

2. Liability For Acts of Others — a. In General. One against whom an injunction order has been issued is bound not only to abstain from violating it in person, but also to endeavor in good faith to prevent its violation by his agents or assignees.[5] But one who in good faith has made an earnest effort to secure obedience to the injunction will not be held in contempt for disobedience by

b. Attorneys. An attorney who deliberately advises his client to disobey an injunction is guilty of contempt.[9]

c. Partners and Receivers. A partner,[10] or a receiver,[11] may be guilty of contempt by acquiescence in the acts of his associates.

d. Officers or Agents of Corporation. Officers or agents of a corporation are not liable for the breach by the corporation if they neither do anything contrary to it nor conduce to its violation by concealing the fact that it has been issued.[12]

C. Knowledge or Notice. One cannot be punished for violating an order of injunction, unless it is made to appear that such order was personally served upon him, or that he had notice of the making of such order.[13] Where, however, a party has actual notice of an injunction, clearly informing him from what he must abstain, he is bound by the injunction from that time, and will be punished for a violation thereof, although it may not have been served, or be defectively served on him.[14] And where an injunction has been ordered, a party hav-

Injunction against interference with business.— Where defendant is restrained from interfering with the business of another, except for a clear violation of the law, he is justified when he has facts on which to base a sound judgment that the law has been violated. Stage Horse Cases, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 51.

Injunction against acts of assignee for benefit of creditors.— An assignee for the benefit of creditors, enjoined from "intermeddling with, or receiving or collecting" any of the property of the assignor, may sue the sheriff for taking the assigned property out of his possession. McQueen v. Babcock, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 337.

If defendant who is enjoined from corresponding with complainant's customers answers letters written by them to him, he violates the injunction. Loven v. People, 158 Ill. 159, 42 N. E. 82.

Injunction against public officer.— An injunction against the incumbent of an office restraining the doing of an official act will be construed with reference to the case made, and if it appears that the ground of attack is the personal disability of the officer, the injunction will bind him alone; but, if it ap-of an order of injunction should not be extended to cover acts not fairly and reasonably within its meaning.[21] An injunction decree is to be construed with reference to the nature of the proceeding and the purpose of the injunction.[22] Although the command of an injunction must be implicitly obeyed, yet it is the spirit and not the letter of the command to which obedience is required.[23] But one who violates the letter of an injunction in reliance on his judgment that he does not violate its spirit acts at his peril, and if mistaken, his good faith is not a defense.[24]

2. Acts Constituting Evasion — a. In General. No subterfuge amounting to a substantial violation of an injunction will be allowed to succeed simply because not contrary to the letter of the prohibitory clause.[25]

Denis v. Leclerc, 1 Mart. (La.) 297, 5 Am. Dec. 712. Where a judgment enjoins defendants from using the system of numbers devised by plaintiffs, or any similar numbers based thereon, to enable customers to order goods from samples by number, they should be punished for contempt in telling cus-

b. Procuring or Permitting Violation by Another. The obligation to obey an injunction cannot be avoided by procuring or permitting a third person to violate it.[26]

3. Acts Acquiesced in or Provoked by Complainant. The party at whose instance an injunction issued cannot have the party enjoined punished in contempt proceedings for breach of the injunction when the breach was committed with his consent or acquiescence,[27] or where the breach was provoked by plaintiff.[28]

4. Acts of Bodies, Boards, or Associations, and Officers Thereof. An injunction restraining a corporation from the commission of certain acts is violated by the performance of such acts by the officers of the corporation as individuals.[29] An injunction restraining a city and its officers from making a certain grant is violated by a vote of the city council to make such grant.[30] Where the enforcement of an ordinance has been enjoined on the ground that certain provisions of the ordinance are invalid, the passage and enforcement of a new ordinance on the same subject, without such invalid provisions, is not a violation of the injunction.[31]

5. Particular Acts — a. Bringing or Continuing Legal Proceedings. Where the bringing or continuing of legal proceedings is prohibited by injunction, any steps, although merely preliminary or incidental, taken for the purpose of bringing or continuing such proceedings, constitute a violation of the injunction.[32]

b. Interference With Property. Whether or not particular acts constitute a Showing cause against a rule for a new trial is not a breach of an injunction. Whitmore v. Thornton, 3 Price 241.

Proceeding to judgment in pending suit.— Where defendant in a creditor's suit, after the service of the ordinary injunction on him, proceeds to judgment in a suit which he had previously commenced against a third person, there is not such a breach of the injunction as would authorize complainant to proceed against him for a contempt. Parker v. Wakeman, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 485.

An injunction against obtaining preference over creditors is violated by obtaining such preference by means of proceedings instituted in a lower court. Winn v. Albert, 2 Md. Ch. 42.

33. An injunction prohibiting the setting up of title to property is violated by a suit asserting a different title than was set up in the original suit. Texas v. White, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 157, 22 L. ed. 819.

Enjoining claim of title under certain deeds. — An injunction enjoining a party holding certain deeds from setting up any claim of title or possession under them does not prevent him from maintaining ejectment for the land and claiming under such deeds. Wildy v. Bonney, 35 Miss. 77.

In creditor's suit.— While it would not be a breach of the usual injunction issued in a creditors' suit for the debtor to sue and recover damages for injury in relation to exempt property, it would be a contempt for him to sue for injury to property not exempt. Hudson v. Plets, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 180.

An injunction prohibiting interference with possession is violated by driving plaintiff's cattle from the land. Ex p. Vance, 88 Cal. 281, 26 Pac. 118. Where an injunction restrains an owner of property from interfering with the possession of another pending an appeal to the supreme court, such owner cannot institute proceedings to obtain possession pending such appeal. Restraining use of a machine so as not to endanger plaintiff's mill by sparks or interfere with their business by smoke does not require defendants to cease operating where they can continue to use the machine without doing the injury specified. Bancroft v. Russell, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 95, 22 S. W. 240.

Cutting timber.— An injunction enjoining the life-tenant "from cutting down any timber, trees, or wood, standing or growing upon the premises . . . or in any way disposing of the same (except what might be cut in a husbandlike manner for firewood, and timber for fencing and ordinary repairs upon the premises)," and from committing waste or spoil, restrained not only the commission of waste but also the cutting of timber for any purpose save those noted in the exception, although it would not be in violation of the rules of good husbandry. Lillie v. Lillie, 55 Vt. 470; Loder v. Arnold, 15 Jur. 117.

Interference with waters.— One enjoined from preventing waters of specified springs from flowing into a certain creek is not prevented from availing himself of percolations on his own land, even though he might thereby diminish the water which would otherwise issue from the springs. Huston v. Leach, 53 Cal. 262. A decree which enjoins interference with the waters of a creek which rise above a dam does not prohibit the use of the waters in the creek below the dam. American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 360.

An injunction against obstructing the use of a towing path as a highway is not violated by obstructions to the use of such path for other purposes. Bosley v. Susquehanna Canal, 3 Bland (Md.) 63. Bringing a suit to recover choses in action of a company is a violation of an injunction against disturbing or interfering with the property of the company. Smith v. New York, etc., Co., 18 Abb. made prior to the injunction,[35] or a delivery of the property sold before the injunction issued,[36] or an offer to sell,[37] constitutes a violation. Where a party is enjoined from disposing of property, he will not be permitted to obtain a transfer by means of collusive proceedings at law.[38]

d. Execution Sales. Where the enforcement of an order of sale or the collection of a judgment has been enjoined, a sale of the property under execution is a violation of the injunction.[39]

e. Construction of Buildings or Other Works. An injunction against "constructing" is not violated by repairing property constructed before the injunction was granted.[40] So an injunction against building on an alley is only technically violated by putting additional stories on a building formerly erected.[41]

E. Excuse and Justification[42] — 1. In General. Lack of jurisdiction of the court granting the injunction is a good excuse for violating it.[43] If a person against whom an injunction is issued by a judge or court having jurisdiction has doubts as to its extent, significance, or validity, he should not disregard it but should apply to the court for a vacation, modification, or construction of it.[44] Therefore, although the form of the writ is irregular, violation thereof will not be excused where defendant has knowledge of what is required of him,[45] although the court would on motion vacate the injunction.[46] Neither the fact that there is not sufficient equity on the face of the bill to support an injunction nor the fact that the injunction was improvidently granted will justify a violation thereof.[47] Defendant is not thereby justified in violating the decree, although the equities of the case have materially changed since the granting of the injunction.[48] That the injury complained of was done before the service of the injunction upon defendant, and that his acts since the service of the injunction have done the complainant no further injury, will not, when those acts were intended to make the injury complete, and the obvious intention of the interdict was to prohibit him from continuing the injury, relieve the defendant from the effects of his violation of the injunction.[49] A violation of an injunction cannot be justified upon the ground of public convenience.[50] Where a court of law allows a party to violate an injunction against proceeding with an action before it, the disobedience may nevertheless be punished as contempt.[51]

2. Good Faith. Good faith, or the absence of an intention to violate the injunction, is no defense in a contempt proceeding.[52] Nor is failure or inability to understand the scope of the injunction a defense.[53] But absence of intent to violate the injunction will be considered in mitigation of punishment.[54]

3. Advice of Counsel. It is no defense to the party violating the injunction that he acted under advice of counsel,[55] although such fact will be considered in mitigation of punishment.[56]

4. Authority Granted by Legislature. Authority granted by a legislature,[57] or a city council,[58] is no defense. A defendant cannot protect himself against punishment for disobeying an injunction on the ground that he acted by authority and direction and for the benefit of a third person.[59] A person can only be relieved from the operation of an injunction absolutely prohibiting a certain act by the court granting the injunction.[60]

5. Protection of Property. A party will not be punished for contempt for acts done in violation of an injunction, when such acts are necessary to the preservation of the property in controversy.[61]

F. Power to Punish.[62] The power to punish the violation of an injunction as a contempt is incident to the power to grant a restraining order,[63] and such power is generally vested alone in the court granting the injunction.[64] The violation of an injunction after a writ of prohibition has been issued by the supreme court directing the lower court to take no further action is, however, punishable by the supreme court.[65] After a dissolved injunction has been reinstated by the appellate court, the lower court has authority to punish for a breach thereof.[66]

G. Procedure[67] — 1. Right to Bring Proceedings. The court will not entertain contempt proceedings where plaintiff's purpose is to coerce defendant into making a contract.[68] Contempt proceedings cannot be resorted to to adjudicate and settle title to property in no way affected by the decree; otherwise a party might be summarily deprived of his property without due process of law.[69] Seeking a second injunction to prevent new and additional wrongs to the same property does not prevent complainant from instituting proceeding for acts constituting a violation of the first injunction granted to protect the property.[70]

2. Who May Institute Proceedings.[71] When an injunction has been granted to protect a purely private right, only those who have a present interest in the right or property protected can institute contempt proceedings; that is the offense complained of must be injurious to the rights of plaintiff in the action.[72] When, however, the injunction forbids acts which are in themselves against the criminal law of the state, any one knowing the facts may institute proceedings.[73]

3. Time For Bringing. The complainant is entitled to a reasonable time in which to proceed for a violation of the injunction and lapse of time since the commission of such violation is not necessarily fatal to its punishment.[74] Contempt proceedings begun after the dissolution of the injunction, on the ground of an infringement of it while in force, cannot be sustained.[75]

4. Attachment, Rule to Show Cause, Etc.[76] Contempt proceedings for violation of an injunction may be instituted by attachment,[77] rule to show cause,[78] information, or complaint,[79] or in England, by motion to commit.[80] The affidavit for an attachment should state the specific acts which constitute the alleged contempt,[81] it not being sufficient to make the charge argumentatively.[82] The affidavit must also show that the wrong charged has been injurious to complainant.[83] A reference to the injunction violated is sufficient without setting out a copy of it.[84] It need not set forth the pendency of the proceeding in which the injunction

84. Silvers v. Traverse, 82 Iowa 52, 47 N. W. 888, 11 L. R. A. 804.

In Iowa it is provided by statute that the basis for a precept for violating an injunction is an authenticated copy of the injunction and satisfactory proof that it has been vio-issued.[85] Service of the writ,[86] or full knowledge of the contents of the writ,[87] should be alleged. An attachment will not issue unless the violation of the injunction is clearly proven,[88] and when the damages cannot be calculated the attachment will be refused.[89] Counter affidavits may be used by defendant, but he cannot read his answer to the injunction bill as evidence.[90] When the proceedings are begun by a rule to show cause, no interrogatories need be filed to enable a party to purge himself of the contempt alleged;[91] nor is it necessary that the matter alleged as the ground of the charge of contempt should appear on the face of the rule to show cause.[92] But a rule to show cause should always be accompanied by a copy of the affidavits and other papers upon which it is founded.[93] When the rule is against the person enjoined in the injunction, its terms should be that he show cause why he should not be punished for disobedience or breach of the injunction;[94] but as against a person not enjoined, it should be that he show cause why he should not be punished for aiding and abetting or knowingly assisting in the violation.[95] Defendants should be allowed a reasonable time in which to make defense.[96]

5. Evidence. The burden of proving defendant guilty is upon defendant, but if an affirmative defense is set up the burden is upon defendant to sustain it.[97] The evidence of a breach of the injunction must be clear to authorize punishment therefor.[98] Neither defendant's denial of a violation of the injunction, by affidavit or otherwise,[99] nor his answers to interrogatories[1] are conclusive, but may lated, and this proof may be established by affidavit. Iowa Code, § 3403. And see State v. Myers, 44 Iowa 580.

the equities of the case require it, the court may order an imprisonment of defendant until he manifests a willingness to fairly comply with the order.[10]

b. Damages. In some jurisdictions by statute where defendant has been guilty of contempt in violating an injunction, thereby causing pecuniary loss or injury to plaintiff, the court, in imposing punishment upon defendant, may do so for the benefit of plaintiff, who is entitled to recover sufficient damages to indemnify for the loss and injury occasioned by the violation,[11] including costs[12] and counsel fees.[13] But exemplary damages will not be awarded where defendant has acted in good faith.[14] Where money has been paid out,[15] or collected,[16] in violation of an injunction, the court may in the same proceeding render judgment against defendant for the amount so obtained by him.

c. Undoing the Wrong. Where defendant has interfered with property in violation of an injunction, he may be required to restore the property to its former condition.[17] Where defendant has obtained a divorce in violation of an injunction he cannot be ordered to have it set aside, as he has no power to do so.[18]

court may refuse to hear his motion to dissolve the injunction,[20] or to discharge a ne exeat.[21] So his appeal may be dismissed.[22] But the violation cannot be punished by instructing that his testimony in his own behalf is not to be considered.[23]

2. MATTERS CONSIDERED IN MITIGATION. The fact that the injunction was erroneously issued may be considered in mitigation of punishment,[24] as may the fact that the acts in violation were without intention to disobey the injunction,[25] that they caused no substantial injury to the adverse party,[26] or that they were performed by advice of counsel.[27] The fact that the violation was a merely technical contempt should also be considered in mitigation.[28] A compliance subsequent to the breach of an injunction may be considered in mitigation.[29]

I. Review. The general rules as to the review of contempt proceedings, which are fully discussed elsewhere,[30] are applicable to such proceedings for the violation of an injunction.

What is a final decision.— The decision of the court of appeals, affirming the decision of the courts below, that plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction, is the final decision of the court, within the meaning of the undertaking to pay defendant's damages if the court shall finally decide that plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction. decision.[40] A dismissal or discontinuance of the suit by plaintiff has the same effect as a decision of the court that the injunction was improperly sued out,[41] except where the discontinuance was corruptly induced,[42] or was by stipulation of the parties.[43] So liability accrues upon the granting of a motion to dissolve

3. Dissolution of Injunction. Liability upon such a bond attaches upon the rendition of a judgment for defendant on the merits,[49] whether or not an order of dissolution has issued.[50] But dissolution of the injunction on motion does not necessarily of itself create a liability on the bond.[51] No liability accrues where the dissolution was by a judge without jurisdiction,[52] nor where the dissolution was for matters done or arising subsequent to the issuance of the injunction, where the original issuance was proper.[53] So if the dissolution is conditional no liability arises until the condition is complied with.[54] But a dissolution in part is ordinarily a breach of bond as well as a total dissolution.[55]

4. Effect of Appeal. It has been decided that upon a final judgment dissolving an injunction a right of action upon such bond immediately follows, unless the judgment is superseded.[56] But according to some decisions an action on the bond is premature, where an appeal taken without supersedeas from the order dismissing the bill is pending and undetermined.[57] A suit cannot be dismissed, on exception of prematurity, because the year for a devolutive appeal has not expired, defendant filing the exception not having appealed from the judgment dissolving the injunction.[58]

B. Nature of Liability and Discharge — 1. In General. Under the terms of most bonds the extent of liability of the sureties is measured by the liability of their principal.[59] The undertaking of the surety in an injunction bond, where there are several complainants, is, in law, for the principals severally as well as jointly; that is, the surety is bound in effect that each and all of his principals shall perform and fulfil whatever decree may be rendered in the cause against all or either of them.[60] The usual rules[61] that a surety cannot be liable except in accordance with the strict terms of the undertaking,[62] and that his liability cannot be extended by implication beyond the express terms of his contract,[63] apply. The terms of the undertaking are construed by the statute in force at the time it was given.[64]

2. Persons Liable and Extent of Liability. Only those who sign the bond or undertaking are liable on it.[65] Where an administrator is required as a condition to the grant of an injunction applied for by him, to execute an injunction bond, if he does so, it will be binding on him and his sureties in their individual capacity.[66] Where the suit is in the name of the state, on the relation of certain persons, who are required to give security for the costs, it is the suit of the relators, and not of the state, so that they and the sureties on their injunction bond are liable to defendant for any damages consequent on the wrongful suing out of the injunction.[67] Where the surety in the bond is held insufficient, and a new bond is executed with other sureties, the sureties on both bonds are equally liable upon a dissolution of the injunction.[68] In the State of Louisiana the rule seems to be

56. Alexander v. Gish, 88 Ky. 13, 9 S. W. 801, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 989. See also Woodbury v. Bowman, 13 Cal. 634, holding that for defendant to offer an order of the supreme court to the court in which the injunction was obtained, directing that court to fix the amount of a suspensive appeal-bond, is insufficient to show that the injunction had not been decided, without proof that the appellant took the necessary steps to, and actually did, prosecute his appeal.

well settled that the principal and sureties on an injunction bond are liable in solido.[69]

3. Release or Discharge of Liability — a. In General. A dismissal of the action as to one of defendants has been held not to be such a change in the action as to relieve the parties to the bond from liability thereunder.[70] A surety's liability is not changed by a suit to recover damages in the names of the obligors for the use of their attorneys.[71] A judgment sustaining the injunction on a motion to dissolve before a trial on the merits does not release the surety who may be liable in damages if the injunction is finally dissolved.[72] Although the judgment enjoined has been reversed since the decree against the injunction plaintiff, the sureties on the bond are not entitled to relief so long as the decree stands.[73] A surety cannot be relieved from his obligation on the bond by showing that his signature was affixed thereto as an escrow, unless his proof on petition be as clear, satisfactory, and demonstrative as that required to set aside a decree or judgment of a court of record upon the ground of fraud.[74] The surety is not exonerated by the compliance of defendant in equity with the condition upon which the injunction is to be dissolved.[75] Where the bill for injunction was at the same time a creditors' bill, the obligation of the surety on the injunction bond on which suit is brought is not discharged by the admission of other parties as complainants to prosecute the cause in which the injunction was issued.[76] A release of the surety by part of the obligees does not release him from all liability.[77] A court should not release the surety from liability unless he, or someone for him, asks to be released.[78] A surety may have the bond canceled in a proper case.[79]

b. Stipulation of Principals. The parties to an injunction bill cannot vary the liability of the sureties on the bond by stipulation.[80] A stipulation entered into with the principal obligor on an injunction bond, which in no way changes the contract, cannot affect the sureties' liability under the bond.[81] In the absence of fraud a mere dismissal of the bill will not release the surety on the bond, although the dismissal is the result of an agreement with defendant in the bill.[82] A dissolution upon consideration of the payment of a sum of money by defendant to complainant has been held to release the surety, although there was an express agreement to retain the surety's liability on the bond.[83] to it, whereupon a third bond was given with the same names as the first and second bonds, and two additional names, the penalties of all the bonds being the same, and it was held that the parties to the last bond were the ones who were liable for the penalty of the bond for the wrongful suing out of the injunction.

80. Mix v. Vail, 86 Ill. 40. See also Baker v. Frellsen, 32 La. Ann. 822, holding that a surety on an injunction bond is discharged by an agreement entered into, without his consent, by plaintiff and defendant, to have the case tried at chambers and decided after court term.

c. Giving New Bond. If the injunction be continued on complainant's application, upon the giving of a new bond with security, the first bond is discharged;[84] but an order continuing an injunction upon the giving of "further bond" does not discharge the first bond.[85] An appeal-bond given upon the appeal from the order of dissolution does not supersede the injunction bond.[86]

d. Arrest. The arrest of a judgment debtor under a capias is not a satisfaction of the judgment and does not discharge an injunction bond entered into on a bill being filed to enjoin the judgment.[87]

4. Remedies of Surety. A surety becomes a party to the record by judgment being rendered against him on the bond and may therefore appeal from the judgment.[88] Of course the sureties on an injunction bond are not parties to a judgment which is enjoined and have no right to interfere with the conduct of the original suit.[89] In a jurisdiction [90] where by statute the surety is a plaintiff in the injunction suit, if he has neither appeared nor answered nor has been notified of the judgment, his right to appeal is not affected by defects in the transcript, through the fault of the other appellant;[91] but the fact that the judgment includes the surety, although the principal alone is named in the verdict, does not authorize a reversal on account of this variance in favor of the surety who appeals.[92] A surety can have no right of action against his principal so long as the suit in which an undertaking was given is still pending, since until the suit is determined no liability on the bond arises on the part of either principal or surety.[93] In a jurisdiction where a bond made in accordance with the statutory provisions has the force of a judgment when the injunction is dissolved, the surety on a bond not executed according to the statute and therefore not having the force of a judgment, who voluntarily discharges the apparent liability on the bond, has no equity of subrogation for his relief.[94]

C. Assessment of Damages Before Action on Bond — 1. As Condition Precedent to Action on Bond. Generally an assessment of damages is not a condition precedent to a suit on the injunction bond.[95] The rule that an assessment is a necessary preliminary to an action on the bond is usually confined to cases where the injunction issued to stay proceedings on a judgment.[96]

2. Mode of Assessment. Where an assessment is necessary or proper, the damages are in some jurisdictions determined by the court, or by a referee appointed by the court.[97] In others the court may in its discretion cause a jury to be impaneled to find the damages.[98] And in others the parties to the bond have an absolute right to a jury if they wish one.[99]

3. Time For Making Motion and Order For Assessment. It is sometimes required that the motion to assess damages be filed at the same term of court at which the judgment dissolving the injunction is entered.[1] If plaintiff appeals from the judgment of dissolution, the motion for the assessment of damages on the injunction bond may be made by defendant on the affirmance of the judgment by the appellate court on due notice to plaintiff.[2] An order to ascertain the damages cannot be made until it has been determined by judgment or other decision of the court that plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction.[3] Hence it cannot be made where the injunction has been dissolved on the coming in of the Marthaler v. Druiding, 58 Ill. App. 336; Linington v. Strong, 8 Ill. App. 384. The irregularity may be waived by permitting the referee to proceed to a final report answer,[4] or pending an appeal.[5] But a dissolution upon the matter of the bill only may be regarded as a final adjudication,[6] or a dissolution which follows a dismissal of the complaint.[7]

4. Who May Move and Parties to Motion. A defendant, even though he obeys the injunction before being served, may have a reference to ascertain damages, since the undertaking is for the benefit of all defendants who are enjoined.[8] If separate motions are filed by the joint obligees who are the real parties in interest, the motions should be treated and tried as one motion, and at the same time, to the end that all the parties plaintiff therein who are united in interest should be before the court, and that one final judgment should be rendered on the bond.[9] Defendants in the injunction suit, who have no interest in the litigation and are only formal parties, need not join in the motion.[10]

5. Scope of Inquiry. It is not generally competent to go into the merits of the proceedings restrained.[11] The inquiry is only as to the amount of damages, if any, and not as to the right to recover them.[12] If the conditions of the bond are sufficient to cover any damages for waste committed during the pendency of the injunction, the inquiry should be so extended as to determine whether there has been any waste or destruction of the property.[13]

6. Determination and Effect Thereof. On a reference, in at least one state, findings of fact and conclusions of law need not be reported by the referee.[14] The order confirming the report of the referee or the decision of the court as to the amount of the damages is conclusive upon all persons who have executed the undertaking, unless the decision or order is reversed on appeal,[15] or unless it is shown that the decision was reached by fraud or mistake.[16] And it is none the less conclusive because no notice of the motion for the reference or of the motion to confirm the referee's report was given.[17]

D. Enforcement of Liability in Injunction Suit — 1. Power of Court — a. In General. arising thereon;[18] and it is firmly settled in the federal courts that the court which grants an injunction, and takes an injunction bond, to save defendant from loss caused thereby, may, in an ancillary proceeding, summarily enforce this bond against the sureties.[19] But according to the English practice, until it was changed by statute,[20] and according to the weight of American authority, in the absence of legislation on the subject, a court of chancery has no power to award damages to the aggrieved party upon the dissolution of an injunction, but must remit the party aggrieved to an action at law upon the injunction bond.[21]

b. Under Statutes. c. As Against Sureties — (i) In General. In some jurisdictions judgment, on the dissolution of an injunction, cannot be rendered against the sureties on the injunction bond,[25] except by an action on the bond.[26] But in other jurisdictions it is held that the court has inherent[27] or statutory[28] power to render a judgment against the sureties on dissolution of the injunction.

(II) Jurisdiction of Parties and Notice. In some jurisdictions the sureties are not regarded as parties to the injunction suit and judgment for damages therefore cannot be rendered against them, on dissolution of the injunction,[29] unless they have notice and their day in court before the amount of damages is fixed against them.[30] But in some of the states the surety is considered a party plaintiff,[31] or a quasi-party plaintiff,[32] to the injunction suit, and therefore notice is unnecessary.[33]

2. Exclusiveness of Remedy. Although a court of equity may have power to assess the damages, yet it is in its discretion to exercise it or to leave the parties to an action of law;[34] where the power to assess damages is granted by statute, defendant in the injunction suit is,[35] or is not,[36] confined to this remedy, according to the terms of the particular statute. If the equity court has exercised its function, the obligee in the bond is precluded from subsequently maintaining an action on the bond for damages.[37] E converso if the injunction defendant sue and obtain judgment at law upon the bond, he cannot afterward have execution out of the court of chancery upon the bond.[38]

When damages are pleaded in reconvention, they may be adjudged against the sureties without their being cited (Smith v. Wilson, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 24, 44 S. Parties.— Damages should not be assessed in favor of one not a party to the suit. Rice v. Goldberg, 26 Ill. App. 603.

A claimant for damages may be estopped by his own conduct, as by disobeying the injunction. Heck v. Bulkley, (Tenn. 1886) 1 S. W. 612, holding that where an injunction has been granted against the treasurer of a corporation restraining him from collecting certain royalties or dividends of stock due the corporation, and to prevent such income from being distributed and paid out as dividends among the stock-holders, and the injunction was disregarded and the income received, on dissolution the corporation will not be suffered to recover damages for the deteninjunction and their obedience thereto have suffered loss,[40] can claim and recover damages.

4. Reference to Ascertain Damages. Damages may be ascertained after a final decision by reference, under some statutory provisions,[41] and the amount so assessed is conclusive upon the parties and sureties; but payment thereof, in some jurisdictions, can be enforced only by action on the bond or undertaking,[42] or, as has been held, by order of court.[43] The procedure on the reference, except as controlled by statute or order of court, is the same as on other like references.[44]

5. Judgment. After fixing costs on the complainant, the court may content itself with an order that no further damages can be recovered against him.[45] A joint judgment against all of a number of creditors who sued out separate injunction writs is erroneous, although all the writs affected the same property.[46]

E. Bond Having Force of Judgment. In some jurisdictions it is provided

tion of the funds in their own treasury; and the treasurer will not be allowed to recover interest on his own dividends as damages for the wrongful suing out of the injunction.

that the bond shall have, upon dissolution of the injunction, the force and effect of a judgment.[47] A judgment follows without an order of the chancellor,[48] but it is not error to enter up judgment.[49] This statutory resulting judgment is a judgment against the surety as well as the principal.[50] Where the injunction is against the collection of a judgment, the bond has the effect of a judgment only where the injunction suit was brought by persons who were parties to the proceedings which resulted in the judgment which was enjoined;[51] where the injunction actually issued;[52] and where the bond substantially complies with the requirements of the statute.[53] If the bond describes a different judgment from that sought to be enjoined, it will not have the force and effect of a judgment.[54] If the execution issued on the bond which misdescribes the judgment sought to be enjoined pursues the judgment, the execution cannot be so amended as to make it conform to the judgment described in the bond, and thus vary from that which it was intended to describe.[55]

F. Actions on Bond — 1. Demand Of, or Proceedings Against, Principal. Neither the issuance of execution,[56] a suit against the principal obligor,[57] nor a demand for payment of the principal debtor[58] or his sureties[59] is a condition precedent to an action on the bond.

2. Leave to Sue. An action on the bond may be brought without an order granting leave to sue.[60]

3. Successive Actions. If the bond is made payable to the state, actions thereon may be prosecuted from time to time for the benefit of the person injured

47. See the statutes of the different states. And see Halsey v. Murray, 112 Ala. 185, 20 So. 575; Dubberly v. Black, 38 Ala. 193; Wiswell v. Munroe, 4 Ala. 9; Dunn v. Mobile Bank, 2 Ala. 152.

49. Western v. Woods, 1 Tex. 1.

A judgment on a scire facias against the obligor in an injunction bond will not be reversed for error, since the issuance of the writ, by notifying defendant, operated to his benefit, and cannot be complained of by him, and although unnecessary was not erroneous. Indemnity of surety.— A surety on an injunction bond, having paid the judgment against his principal and himself, which resulted by operation of law from the dissolution of the injunction, may maintain a summary proceeding against his principal, under section 2644 of the code; and under section 2650 the motion may be made in the county of defendant's residence. Vacation of order.— The order granting leave to sue may be rescinded if the equities of the parties were not considered at the time by the breach thereof, until damages are recovered, in the aggregate, equal to the penalty of the bond.[61]

4. Jurisdiction and Venue. An injunction bond given in a federal court may be sued on in a state court,[62] and an injunction bond given in a state court in one county may be sued on in another county where some of the defendants reside.[63]

5. Defenses — a. Good Faith. It has been held where the bond protects, not from malicious injuries only, but from any injury, that the existence or non-existence of probable cause for the issuing of the injunction is immaterial,[64] and the fact that the obligor proceeded in good faith is no defense to an action on the bond.[65] There are, however, authorities to the contrary.[66]

b. Matter Constituting Defense to Injunction Suit. In an action on an injunction bond, an answer setting up matter which would have been merely a defense to the action for an injunction is insufficient.[67] In other words the dismissal of the bill and the dissolution is conclusive as to the improper issuing of the writ.[68] Want of jurisdiction to grant the injunction is no defense,[69] nor is the fact that the suit in which the injunction issued was not brought against the proper party,[70] or that no such suit was pending as that the prosecution of which was enjoined.[71]

c. Want of Injury. Where defendant in the injunction suit was not, or could not possibly have been, injured, he is precluded from recovering damages on the bond.[72]

d. Issuance of Another Injunction. It cannot be shown either in bar,[73] or in mitigation of damages,[74] that an injunction was afterward obtained in another suit.

e. Violation of Injunction. The fact that an injunction was violated in part does not prevent a recovery on the bond to the extent that it was observed;[75] but no recovery is proper where there is evidence of frequent sales in violation of an injunction, and practically none of any failure to make sales.[76]

f. Defects in Injunction. The obligees cannot escape liability on the ground that the injunction was ambiguous and should not have been obeyed,[77] or that it was broader in its commands than the order of the court would authorize.[78]

g. Defects in Bond. The law court can look into the proceedings in equity in order to determine the validity of the bond.[79] It is a good defense to an action thereon that the bond was procured by fraud,[80] or that no injunction ever issued.[81] The obligors cannot, however, question the mere form of the bond after obtaining an injunction on the strength of it.[82] Hence the injunction defendant can recover thereon notwithstanding irregularities in the form of the undertaking,[83]

A misrecital as to the amount of the judgment enjoined may be corrected by the bill, where the injunction bond contains a plain even where the injunction is dissolved on the ground of insufficient security,[84] and notwithstanding it is unusual in its terms,[85] or is more[86] or less[87] extensive in its terms than the statute or order for the injunction requires. No recovery can be had, however, for breach of such part of the condition as is not provided for by the statute or order.[88]

h. Miscellaneous. Among the facts held not to constitute a defense to an action on an injunction bond, are the following: That the business which was enjoined and for which damages are claimed was a public nuisance;[89] that plaintiffs had offered to give up all claim to the money whose payment to them had been enjoined, the offer having been made by way of compromise;[90] that plaintiff's damages had been paid by the county, which was bound to indemnify him against loss;[91] that plaintiff held title to the property, the sale of which was enjoined, in fraud of the creditors of the true owner;[92] that, until after the disreference to it, on the principle that that is certain which can be made certain. Williamson v. Hall, 1 Ohio St. 190. But see Hamner v. Cobb, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 383. That a bond is in a larger sum than that prescribed by order of the court is not prejudicial to the sureties in an action thereon, where the damages recovered are for a smaller amount than the penalty in the bond as fixed by the court. Quinn v. Baldwin Star Coal Co., 19 Colo. App. 497, 76 Pac. 552. A plaintiff and his sureties in an injunction bond given in a suit to enjoin the collection of a money judgment cannot complain that it was executed for less than the amount of the judgment, instead of being for double that amount, where judgment was rendered against them on dissolution of the injunction for only such amount of the principal debt as was covered by the bond. Miller v. Clements, 54 Tex. 351.

Approval of bond.—It is not necessary to the maintenance of an action on an injunction bond that in the proceedings to obtain the injunction the approval of the court or judge should be indorsed on the bond. Griffin v. Wallace, 66 Ind. 410. See also Farni v. Tesson, 51 Ill. 393.

Defects as to obligors.—To maintain an action on an injunction bond it is not essential that the name of the surety should appear in the body of the bond. Griffin v. Wallace, 66 Ind. 410. And the officers of a corporation who have sued out an injunction in the name of the corporation, and signed their names to the bond, cannot escape liability because the corporation did not sign the bond. Failure to bind obligors to pay costs.—Where a bond does not bind the obligors to pay such costs as may become due, this is not a defect of which the obligors can complain. Gillespie v. Thompson, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 132.

Failure to name court granting injunction.—A bond entitled: "State of Indiana, Clinton County. A. v. B.," is not void for failure to state the name of the court by which the injunction was issued. Winship v. Clendenning, 24 Ind. 439.

Repugnant expressions will be rejected as void (Connon v. Paxson, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 207), and the bond will be so construed as to give effect to the intention of the parties (Nichol v. White, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 257).

Where there is no statute prescribing the condition the chancellor has discretion as to the form of the bond (Newell v. Partee, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 325), and a clause inserted in such bond rendering it insensible will be stricken out as surplusage introduced by mistake (Gully v. Gully, 8 N. C. 20); but where there was no order of court prescribing the conditions of the bond, and no statutory provision for such a condition as was inserted, the sureties upon the bond incur no liability (Baxter v. Washburn, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 1).

solution of the injunction, no permit had been obtained to erect the building whose erection was enjoined;[93] that execution issued on the judgment enjoined and a forthcoming bond was executed and forfeited;[94] that defendant paid the costs of the original bill;[95] that the injunction was allowed by consent of the parties, where the entry of such consent was conditional on the execution of the injunction bond;[96] that a justice of the peace had no jurisdiction of forcible entry and detainer where the bond was given to prevent the prosecution of a forcible entry and detainer action against plaintiff before a justice, or in any way interfering with his possession;[97] that no order of court had been obtained for the sale of a minor's property, the sale of which by the minor was enjoined;[98] that the injunction plaintiff was misled by defendant's statements into bringing suit, unless it can be shown that defendant instigated or desired the institution of the suit;[99] or that a remedy other than an injunction afforded to a class of which defendant was not a member was inadequate.[1] Where the bond was given to prevent the sale of land under a deed of trust, the cestui que trust is the only person who can execute a sufficient release for damages, and a release by a naked trust is no defense.[2] Where an answer sets up a settlement, but the evidence fails to show that the matter in litigation was included therein, or that more than one of several plaintiffs participated or consented, or that any one who acted was empowered to bind them, a verdict for defendants cannot stand.[3] Where an injunction bond is required before the injunction is granted, the obligors on such a bond may show that no injunction issued, although it recites that an injunction was prayed for and obtained.[4]

6. Parties — a. Plaintiffs — (i) Generally. At the common law, the rule is that actions upon injunction bonds are required to be prosecuted in the name of the obligee in the bond.[5] In some jurisdictions, however, such a suit may be brought by the real party in interest.[6] Suit on the bond may be maintained by an assignee;[7] but where the injunction defendant has assigned part of his interest in the subject-matter of that suit, but has not assigned the undertaking, the assignee is not considered a necessary party plaintiff to an action on the bond.[8] The action, it has been decided, may be brought by an injunction defendant not named in the bond,[9] by one not served in the injunction suit,[10] or by one of a class enjoined;[11] but one who is not a defendant is not named in the undertaking, and does not belong to a class who ought to have been made defendants, cannot maintain an action on the bond.[12] One whose title to land, the enjoyment of which has been enjoined, is merely possessory, has a sufficient interest to enable him to maintain an action on the bond.[13] Where the bond runs to certain persons as officials, they cannot maintain an action thereon as individuals.[14]

(II) JOINDER. Suit may be brought in the name of the obligee without joining the person or persons for whose benefit the suit is prosecuted.[15] The obligees of a joint bond may sue jointly, although their damages are several,[16] or they may sue severally unless the damages are joint.[17] Although the bond is in terms executed to but one of defendants, all may unite in an action thereon.[18]

b. Defendants. Ordinarily all the obligors on the bond should be joined in defendants;[19] but where, although the injunction proceedings are begun in the name of the state as plaintiff, the relator is the real complainant, suit may be maintained against him and the sureties on the bond, without making the state a co-defendant.[20]

Nature and extent of plaintiff's right.— A petition alleging that plaintiff had a right to remove a building and suffered damage by reason of being enjoined from so doing is sufficient to entitle him to the damages sustained by reason of the wrongful issuance of the injunction, it being unnecessary to allege the nature and extent of plaintiff's right in the building. Williams v. Ballinger, 125 Iowa 410, 101 N. W. 139.

Legality of contract enjoined.— When the action was brought on a bond given on enjoining the carrying out of a contract between the individual defendant and the city of Indianapolis, it was held that plaintiff should show that the contract was a legal one. Macey v. Titcombe, 19 Ind. 135.

Right of part to sue for all.— Where plaintiffs allege the granting of an injunction against the funding and payment of county conditions.[23] It should of course appear that an injunction issued and was served, although an express allegation to that effect is unnecessary where facts are alleged which of necessity imply such issuance and service.[24] Plaintiff need not, however, allege that the judge had authority to grant the injunction,[25] that any petition for the injunction was ever presented to the judge by the injunction plaintiffs in the suit in which the same is alleged to have been granted,[26] that any cause was shown for granting the same,[27] or that the injunction was granted in vacation, where the date on which it was granted is stated.[28] Nor need he set out specifically any part of the record of the suit in which the injunction on which the bond is given was granted,[29] nor file the same with the complaint,[30] nor allege the validity of the judgments whose collection was enjoined.[31] Plaintiff need not allege the existence of an order of the court of equity authorizing a withdrawal of the bond and permitting suit to be brought upon it.[32] The bond declared on must be described with such precision, certainty, and clearness as fully to apprise defendants of the cause of action which they are required to answer;[33] and when the action is brought against plaintiff in the injunction suit it must be alleged that he was a party to the bond.[34] Plaintiff should allege a final determination of the injunction suit,[35] bonds, execution of the bond and final judgment dissolving the order, and that, by reason thereof, plaintiffs and those whom they represent have been damaged, it sufficiently shows that they have a right to sue for all the bondholders. Want of allegation not cured by answer.— Where the petition is defective for failure to allege a final determination of the injunction suit, it is not cured by an allegation in the

and should show that the injunction was wrongfully issued,[36] although an express averment to that effect is unnecessary if facts are pleaded which show it to be a fact.[37] Plaintiff must also clearly assign a breach of the conditions of the bond or undertaking,[38] but it is sufficient to set forth such facts as constitute a breach.[39] Unless damages have been awarded by the decree dissolving the injunction,[40] or otherwise, plaintiff must specify the particular injuries sustained with such clearness that they may be understood by defendants.[41] He must also aver facts showing how the issuance of the injunction caused the particular damages set out.[42] In order to recover special damages, they must of course be alleged.[43]

b. Answer or Plea. Affirmative defenses must be pleaded, in order to be available.[44] As a bar defendant may deny the dissolution of the injunction;[45] but he cannot deny that the injunction was granted,[46] or allege that there was no injunction in existence when the bond was acknowledged,[47] or that the court granting the injunction was without jurisdiction.[48] The motive in suing out the injunction cannot be pleaded in bar,[49] nor can a settlement of all matters in controversy in the injunction suit.[50] An answer setting up that defendants did not cause the bond to be filed is bad, since it is immaterial whether they or someone else caused it to be filed.[51] Where plaintiff alleges that he lost his debt by reason of the injunction, a plea that defendant was insolvent at the time is a good answer;[52] but a plea that if the injunction defendant was damaged it was by reason of his own wrong is bad, since the question of whether the injunction was wrongfully sued out is then res judicata.[53] A plea alleging merely the want of consideration is bad.[54] A plea that defendant has performed the conditions of a bond payable on dissolution of the injunction amounts to an admission that the injunction has been dissolved, since until that time there can be no conditions to perform.[55] A verified answer denying execution of the bond requires plaintiff to prove its execution.[56]

c. Replication or Reply. The replication must be responsive to the plea,[57] and not depart from the material allegations of the complaint.[58]

8. Evidence — a. Burden of Proof and Presumptions.[59] As in other civil actions, the burden of proving a right of recovery is on plaintiff;[60] but he

of the injunction the stock had become and continued valueless, evidence is warranted that he had a purchaser who could and would have bought, such proof not being of special damage. Slack v. Stephens, 19 Colo. App. 538, 76 Pac. 741.

makes out a prima facie case by establishing the dissolution of the temporary injunction, and the dismissal of the original suit, and the burden is then on defendant to show that the injunction was rightfully issued.[61] Defendant has the burden of proving the performance of the conditions of the bond.[62] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that delivery of the bond was unconditional;[63] and where the law authorizes an injunction only upon bond for debt and costs it will be presumed that the bond was executed for the debt and costs,[64] but a plea of non est factum casts on plaintiff the onus probandi as in other cases.[65] It will also be presumed that the petition for injunction contained the necessary allegations to entitle the injunction plaintiff to the writ,[66] and that delay in the prosecution of the equity cause arose because all the parties were willing that the hearing should be postponed.[67]

b. Admissibility and Sufficiency.[68] In a suit on an injunction bond, the record of the suit in which the injunction was issued is admissible.[69] Where the execution of the bond is admitted by the pleadings, it is properly admitted in evidence, although slightly defective in form,[70] and a surety cannot object to its admissibility on the ground that it does not appear that the order for the injunction required a bond to be given, since he is estopped by the recitals of the bond.[71] A recital therein that plaintiff had obtained an order for an injunction is not evidence of the issuing of the injunction,[72] and it may be shown aliunde that the bond erroneously recites the name of the nominal defendant in the suit sought to be restrained, and that there was a suit pending in which the person so recited as defendant was the real party in interest, although others were the nominal defendants.[73] On the question of damages plaintiff may introduce evidence to prove the payment of fees to counsel for defending the chancery suit in which such bond was given, and any costs paid by him during the progress of such suit,[74] or to show the increase or decrease in the value of the property during the existence of the injunction.[75] So evidence that the damages claimed did not result from the injunction,[76] or were excessive,[77] or that their assessment was procured by fraud,[78] is admissible. G. Damages[82] — 1. In General. Plaintiff can recover only such proximate damages as he can establish with reasonable certainty.[83] He cannot recover for damages caused by his voluntary act or his omission to act when he should do so.[84] Where a receiver of defendant's property is appointed at the same time the injunction is granted, damages arising from the receiver's misconduct and negligence are not recoverable.[85]

Duty to decrease damages.— Defendant should do nothing to enhance the damages, and it is his duty to do all that he reasonably can to diminish them; but he is not bound to incur any hazard or assume unusual risks, and if he adopts such a course as experienced and prudent persons under similar circumstances would regard proper, he is not responsible if another course might have been adopted which would have been equally safe and proper, and which would have reduced the damages. weight of authority is that nominal damages are recoverable without any showing of actual damage.[87]

3. Punitive Damages. Punitive damages may be recovered where the suing out of the writ amounts to an abuse of process,[88] or where it was obtained maliciously.[89]

4. Time When Damages Accrued. Damages sustained after the issuance of the injunction but before the giving of the bond may be recovered if within the terms of the bond.[90] So a second bond may be broad enough to cover all damages under both bonds.[91] And damages incurred pending an appeal from an order dissolving the injunction may be recovered where the injunction continues in force during such time.[92] Damages accruing after the preliminary injunction is made permanent cannot be recovered, although the decree should be afterward reversed and the action dismissed, because the order for a preliminary injunction is merged by a decree for a perpetual injunction.[93]

5. Damages as Limited by Scope of Bond. Where a bond is given only such damages are recoverable as are clearly embraced within the terms of the injunction bond.[94] Ordinarily the liability does not extend to the amount of a judgment which is enjoined unless expressly provided for in the bond.[95]

Where there is no evidence of malice in suing out an injunction,[3] the damages therefor should be measured by simple compensation for the loss sustained,[4] and defendant himself is bound to follow such a course as not to enhance the damages, although if he acts reasonably the amount assessed in his favor will not be decreased because he might have acted differently and prevented some loss.[5] Where the injunction deprives defendant of his right to act as owner, the loss actually incurred thereby,[6] such as net profits lost,[7] or loss of rent,[8] is the measure of damages. So where the removal or sale of property is enjoined the measure is the loss to the party enjoined during the time the injunction is in force.[9]

8. Particular Items — a. Attorney's Fees. While in some jurisdictions attorney's fees are not a proper element of damage in an action, or assessment of damages, on an injunction bond,[11] the rule in most jurisdictions is to the contrary.[12] While no hard and fast rule can be laid down on the subject, and the right to, and the amount of, recovery depends upon the facts of each case,[13] it appears to be the general rule that when the injunction is merely ancillary or in aid of the relief sought, or is relied on to secure the relief when obtained, or to prevent the commission of a wrongful or tortious act that would result in irreparable injury before the termination of the main action, a recovery may be had on the bond for the payment of reasonable counsel fees where defendant, prior to the determination of the main action, has succeeded in dissolving the injunction, or has made an effort to obtain its dissolution.[14] But where an injunction rendered for a certain sum, an appeal was taken, the sum was reduced on appeal, judgment for the reduced sum entered in the court below, a sale made, and a deficiency left after sale, the amount of the deficiency is recoverable in an action on a bond conditioned to pay the obligees any amount decreed to them. however, the main suit is so blended with the temporary injunction proceedings that it is impossible to separate the two, expenses incurred by defendant in the injunction suit in preparation for the final hearing should be included.[31] The obligors on an injunction bond are also liable for such costs as are occasioned by the writ;[32] but here, as with expenses, recovery is limited to such as may have accrued from the time of the issuing of the injunction down to the affirmance of the order for its dissolution,[33] and to such as were the result of the temporary injunction.[34] There can be no recovery of costs imposed on plaintiff, in an action on the bond, as the condition of a continuance,[35] nor of costs incurred on an order to show cause why a restraint should not be continued.[36] So the costs of an unsuccessful motion to dissolve are not recoverable,[37] even though the action was eventually dismissed.[38] Likewise the costs on an appeal from an order dissolving the injunction,[39] or in a suit or proceeding to which the injunction was a mere

c. Interest.[42] Where a person is enjoined from paying over money in his hands, the legal rate of interest during the period of detention may be recovered as damages;[43] but where suit on a note is enjoined interest on the note cannot be recovered unless it be shown that the person liable thereon has become insolvent since the injunction, or that plaintiff, without his fault, has suffered some damage equal to such interest.[44] Where the collection of a judgment is enjoined, interest thereon, during the existence of the injunction, may be recovered;[45] but the interest can be allowed only to the date of dissolution,[46] and on the amount actually due,[47] and cannot exceed the rate permitted by law.[48] But where an execution or foreclosure sale is enjoined, interest on the purchase-price for the period during which the sale is enjoined cannot be recovered as it is impossible to know what the result of the sale, if made, would have been.[49] Nor can interest be allowed on the amount of the debt for the period the sale was delayed, at least in the absence of evidence that the property would probably have been sold at the time first fixed for a sum equal to, or greater than, that for which the sale was finally made.[50] Interest on the damages sustained is usually held to be allowable.[51]

Where the erection of a building was enjoined, an instruction excluding from the com-

mortgagee is not entitled to damages by reason of an injunction restraining the assignee from collecting the rents, unless on a sale of the land under the mortgage it failed to satisfy the mortgage.[59]

f. Miscellaneous. The damages recoverable in an action on the bond, in proper cases, include loss of materials,[60] loss of time,[61] increased cost in building[62] or manufacturing,[63] and loss of sales of land.[64] The damages assessed by the court on dissolving the injunction are also a proper element of damages.[65]

9. Deductions and Set-Offs. The general costs of an injunction are not part of the damages awarded on the undertaking and, where they have been paid, cannot be deducted from the damages allowed.[66] Nor are sureties entitled to credit for what has been paid on a judgment in the action enjoined where it appears that the unpaid balance exceeds the penalty.[67] So where a third person has wrongfully enjoined a landlord from prosecuting summary proceedings against his tenant for possession, he is not entitled to any deduction on the damages on his bond by reason of repairs or improvements unless they were allowed by him to be deducted from the rents collected by him, and for which he was held liable.[68] And where a lessee enjoined from erecting an engine has obtained an order allowing him to do so under certain restrictions, damages caused by preventing such erection cannot be counter-claimed without showing that the order permitting it has been violated.[69] But damages caused by the entry of one who had been enjoined from taking possession of land, caused by his entry and removal of growing crops, may be counter-claimed.[70]

H. Judgment. The judgment on an injunction bond must recite the facts giving jurisdiction.[73] The judgment may be for the full penalty of the bond, although in excess of the amount of damages demanded in the complaint.[74] The general rules as to collateral attack apply.[75]

X. WRONGFUL INJUNCTION.

A. Nature and Grounds of Liability. Where an injunction has been wrongfully issued there is no liability for damages in an action other than the injunction suit except in an action on the injunction bond, unless the party against whom the injunction was issued can make out a case of malicious prosecution by showing malice and want of probable cause on the part of the party who obtained it.[76] The remedies by suit on the bond and by an action for damages may both exist where a bond has been given on obtaining the injunction.[77] The action does not lie where an injunction is prayed for but none is granted,[78] but it is no defense that the injunction was void.[79] The action does not lie until the injunction suit has been finally disposed of.[80]

B. Procedure — 1. PLEADING. In an action for damages against a party for wrongfully suing out an injunction, it is essential that the complaint should allege malice and want of probable cause,[81] and that this allegation should be specific.[82]

2. PARTIES. All persons directly concerned in the issuance of the wrongful injunction may be joined as defendants.[83] A sheriff, who together with a judgment creditor has been enjoined from making a sale under execution, need not be joined as a plaintiff.[84]

C. Damages — 1. PERSONS ENTITLED TO, OR LIABLE FOR, DAMAGES. One enjoined, although not a party to the injunction suit, may recover damages,[85] as may a partnership which has suffered damages from one of the firm being enjoined from carrying on business;[86] but a person restrained from doing what he had no legal right to do has no right of action for damages even though the injunction has been wrongfully issued.[87] Only the party who was instrumental in obtaining a wrongful injunction is liable for damages.[88]

2. WHAT DAMAGES RECOVERABLE. In an action for damages for the wrongful suing out of an injunction, plaintiff can recover only such damages as naturally and approximately result therefrom, and remote or speculative damages cannot be taken into consideration.[89] A party against whom a wrongful injunction is issued is entitled to nominal damages, although he sustains no actual damages.[90] Reasonable attorney's fees are recoverable as an item of damages in an action for damages for the wrongful suing out of an injunction, and it is not necessary that they should have been actually paid if the liability has been incurred,[91] nor is it necessary to prove a specific contract of hiring to justify the recovery of the fees.[92] But such fees are limited to fees for services connected with the motion or other similar proceeding for dissolution of the injunction.[93]

I. DEFINITIONS AND GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

A. Inns — 1. WHO ARE INNKEEPERS. An innkeeper is a person who publicly professes that he keeps an inn, and will receive therein all travelers who are willing to pay an adequate price, and who come in a situation in which they are fit to be received.[1]

2. WHAT IS AN INN. A house where a traveler is furnished, as a regular matter of business, with food and lodging while on his journey;[2] or a house of

1. This definition may be extracted from the opinions in Thompson v. Lacy, 3 B. & Ald. 283, 22 Rev. Rep. 385, 5 E. C. L. 169.

Another definition is: "One who keeps a house publicly, openly and notoriously, for the entertainment and accommodation of travelers and others, for a reward." State v. Stone, 6 Vt. 295, 298.

The innkeeper is the person who really owns and carries on the business. Dixon v. Birch, L. R. 8 Exch. 135, 42 L. J. Exch. 135, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 360, 28 Wkly. Rep. 443. And this, although the license is taken out and the advertisements published in the name of a person who was really merely the manager. McKay v. Brown, 5 Can. L. J. 91. But the manager, even though not the innkeeper, might be indicted for illegally carrying on the inn; since although not the person principally concerned he would be a party to the offense. Winter v. State, 30 Ala. 22.

A hotel-keeper is a person who receives and entertains as guests those who choose to visit his house, and it does not include one who merely keeps a restaurant where meals are furnished. People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311, 316. The keeper of a private lodging-house, who also furnishes her guests with provisions at a profit, is subject to the bankrupt laws as a "hotel keeper," although the provisions were set apart as the separate property of each guest. Smith v. Scott, 9 Bing. 14, 2 Moore & S. 35, 23 E. C. L. 465.

Restaurant proprietor.— To constitute an innkeeper, a tavern-keeper, or hotel-keeper, the party so designated must receive and entertain as guests those who choose to visit his house; and a restaurant where meals are furnished is not an inn or tavern. People v. Jones, 1 Cow. Cr. (N. Y.) 381.

A lodging-house keeper is not an innkeeper because he may send out and procure cooked food for his guests. Kelly v. Excise Com'rs, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 327.

Failure to obtain a license, as required by law, does not prevent one from being an innkeeper. Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 587; Lyon v. Smith, Morr. (Iowa) 184; Atwater v. Sawyer, 76 Me. 539, 49 Am. Rep. 634; Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 163; State v. Wynne, 8 N. C. 451.

Hotel, tavern.— The words "hotel" and "tavern" are usually used as synonymous with "inn"; and a hotel or tavern which is maintained for the accommodation of travelers is an inn. Foster v. State, 84 Ala. 451, 4 So. 833; Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296; Fruchey v. Eagleson, 15 Ind. App. 88, 43 N. E. 146; Com. v. Shortridge, 3 J. J. Marsh. W. 106; Jones v. Osborn, 2 Chit. 484, 18 E. C. L. 748; Reg. v. Salter, 8 N. Brunsw. 321.

An inn or hotel is a house where all who conduct themselves properly and who are able and ready to pay for their entertainment are received, if there is accommodation for them, or who, without any stipulated engagement as to the duration of their stay or as to entertainment for travelers,[3] is perhaps as good a definition of what constitutes an inn as can be found among the many definitions given of the term.

3. What Wants an Inn Must Supply. An innkeeper must be prepared to entertain the traveler; that is, to supply him with both food and lodging.[4] For this reason a house which supplies only food or drink, like a restaurant,[5] a coffee-house,[6] or a drinking saloon,[7] or only lodging, like a lodging-house,[8] or apartment hotel,[9] or a sleeping-car[10] is not an inn. On the other hand it is not necessary that the inn should be perfectly equipped to supply all that a traveler might desire.[11]

the rate of compensation, are, while there, supplied at a reasonable charge with their meals, their lodging, and such services and attention as are necessarily incident to the use of the house as a temporary abode. Matter of Brewster, 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 689, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 666, 667; Cromwell v. Stephens, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 26. Where the occupants of a building fitted up one side of a room with several stalls, where oysters, cooked and raw, pies, cheese, etc., were served to persons who might call for the same, mostly to teamsters and others who were stopping in the village for a short time, the building is used for "hotel purposes," within the restriction of a deed prohibiting the use for such purposes. Stevens v. Pillsbury, 57 Vt. 205, 52 Am. Rep. 121.

Hotel on European plan.— A hotel is no less an inn because it is conducted on the "European plan," so-called; the fact that food is separately paid for does not alter the legal character of the house. Bullock v. Adair, 63 Ill. App. 30; Johnson v. Chadbourn Finance Co., 89 Minn. 310, 94 N. W. 874, 99 Am. St. Rep. 571; Bernstein v. Sweeny, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 271; Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 200; McClure v. Krumbholz, 9 Pa. Dist. 544, where it was said that a hotel of this character is not a restaurant or eating-house because some of the guests pay for their lodgings and meals at different times.

Hotel at watering-place.— A hotel to which persons resort for health and pleasure only, not for entertainment in the course of a journey, is not an inn. Therefore a hotel at a watering-place is a boarding-house, and may reject guests at pleasure. Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296; Southwood v. Myers, 3 Bush (Ky.) 681; Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 72, 48 Am. Dec. 416.

Hôtel garni.— A species of establishment once common in Paris in which furnished apartments were let by the day, week, or month. Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 15.

The words "regular hotels and eating-houses" as used in a statute designate places, the principal and not the subordinate business of which is the carrying on of a hotel or an eating-house. Lederer v. State, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. 623, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 303.

The facts that the house stands upon inclosed grounds reserved for the exclusive use of guests, that the gates are closed at night, and that the house is thus rendered attractive as a pleasure resort does not prevent its being an inn, if it is held out as a place of public entertainment for travelers. Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198, 16 L. R. A. 188.

"The word hotel, in France, has long ceased to be confined to its original signification, and has become a word of a most extensive meaning. It is the term for the mansion of a prince, nobleman, minister of state, or of a person of distinction, or of celebrity. It is applied to a hospital, as Hotel Dieu; or to a town hall, as Hôtel de Ville; to the residence of a judge, to certain public offices, and to any house in which furnished apartments are let by the day, week, or month." Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 15, 19.

Boarders.— A house is none the less an inn, although boarders as well as travelers are entertained there. Wintermute v. Clark, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 242.

3. Foster v. State, 84 Ala. 451, 4 So. 833.

9. Davis v. Gay, 141 Mass. 531, 6 N. E. 549.

10. See Carriers, 6 Cyc. 656.

11. Thus one may be an innkeeper, although he does not supply accommodation for horses (Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 72, 48 Am. Dec. 416; Com. v. Wetherbee, 101 Mass. 214); so one may be an innkeeper, although he does not sell wine or liquor (Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657; People v. Murphy, 5 Park.

B. Boarding-Houses. The distinction between an innkeeper and the keeper of a boarding-house is that the latter, not having made a profession of willingness to serve the public, is at liberty to choose his guests, and to make special arrangements with them.[12]

C. Private Houses of Entertainment. A person is not an innkeeper who receives guests out of mere hospitality, or from motives among which gain is at most incidental, and not because he has regularly entered into the business of receiving guests.[13]

D. Proof of Character of Inn.[14] The question whether a house of entertainment is a public inn, a boarding-house, or a private house is a question of fact, to be determined, like any fact, upon all the evidence.[15] The profession of serving the public is often made by displaying a sign, but that is not necessary;[16] the profession may be made by any method of soliciting the patronage of the public.[17]

II. CONTROL AND REGULATION OF INNS AND OTHER HOUSES OF PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENT.

A. Power to Regulate. The regulation of inns and other houses of public entertainment (such as boarding and lodging-houses) is a matter which is concerned with health and morals, and is therefore within the police power of a state.[18] The power to regulate is commonly committed to local bodies such as municipal corporations.[19]

B. Regulations. All houses of public entertainment may be regulated by statute or ordinance; those most commonly so regulated are inns, boarding-houses,[20]

Difference in character of contracts.— In a boarding-house the guest is under an express contract at a certain rate for a certain period of time, but in an "inn" there is no express agreement; the guest being on his way, is entertained from day to day according to his business on an implied contract. 20. Statutory regulations of "boarding-houses" apply to houses in which persons are taken to board as a regular business, and not to a house where one or more boarders are kept occasionally upon special occasions. Cady v. McDowell, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 484. Where two adjoining houses are connected by a door, and used as a single establishment for boarders, with a single entrance, sitting-room, and dining-room, they constitute a single boarding-house; and if there are more than fifteen sleeping-rooms in all, they must under the regulation be provided with fire-escapes. and lodging-houses.[21] The regulations may cover the safety of the house itself[22] or the conduct of the business.[23]

C. Licenses.[24] The power to regulate inns and other public houses includes the power to license them.[25] The granting of a license is usually confided to some legal municipal administrative or quasi-judicial body.[26] And the procedure by which the license is obtained is solely a matter of statutory regulation.[27] Such a body in granting or refusing a license is exercising a public duty, and may be indicted for exercising it corruptly,[28] and if it refuses to act at all may be compelled to do so by writ of mandamus.[29] The licensing body, however, has discretion, which ordinarily cannot be controlled by the courts.[30] Where a board is given by statute power to license public houses, it cannot legally refuse to grant licenses enough to serve the requirements of public convenience, if proper persons apply; the power to license is not the power to prohibit.[31]

D. Penalty[32] For Unlicensed Dealings. Where a license is required for carrying on a public house, one who carries on such a house without a license cannot sue for damage to his business,[33] or as a general rule recover compensation for board furnished,[34] or establish a lien on property of the guest;[35] but failure to obtain a license will not protect the innkeeper from the responsibilities of his occupation.[36]

21. If the entire control over part of the house is given up to the occupant, as in the case of an apartment house, the house is not a lodging-house, and the relation between owner and occupant is that of landlord and tenant. E. Offenses Against Public Regulations.[37] For illegally keeping a public house without a license, or for other breach of public regulation, the ordinary method of punishment is by indictment or other criminal proceeding,[38] and the punishment may be inflicted as often as the offense is repeated.[39] It is no defense that defendant was ignorant of the fact that he had no license,[40] or that he carried on the business on account of an employer, and not for himself.[41] The ordinary rules of criminal pleading apply to the indictment.[42] If drawn substantially in the language of the statute which embraces in its terms the material ingredients of the offense it is sufficient.[43]

III. DUTY TO RECEIVE GUESTS.

A. Extent of Duty to Receive. An innkeeper, as one carrying on a public employment, is obliged to receive all travelers who properly apply to be admitted, provided he has room, and they pay his reasonable charges.[44] If called upon to do so, the guest must tender the price of his entertainment as a condition of being received; but if payment is not demanded by the innkeeper, he need not make tender.[45] This obligation to serve the public attaches to every one professing the trade of innkeeper.[46] The innkeeper must provide such accommodation as he may reasonably foresee to be necessary. He must for instance keep on hand food for a sufficient number of guests.[47] When the innkeeper's accommodation is exhausted, he may refuse to receive an applicant as a guest.[48] The innkeeper is not obliged to admit a guest to any particular room; so long as the accommodation provided is reasonable, the guest must occupy the room chosen for him.[49] An innkeeper who combines with his public business another in which he is under no obligation to serve the public need not serve a guest in the latter business.[50]

broadly that persons may be refused admission if they would be so objectionable to the patrons of the house that it would injure the business of the innkeeper to admit them.[51] While this is doubtless too broadly stated as a common-law proposition, a person who is in himself reasonably objectionable may be excluded.[52]

C. Punishment For Refusal to Receive Guests.[53] An innkeeper is indictable for illegally refusing to receive a guest.[54]

D. Justification For Exclusion of Guests After Acceptance. A guest who has been admitted to the inn may afterward be excluded by the innkeeper if he refuses to pay his bill,[55] or if he becomes obnoxious to the guests by his own fault.[56] If, however, he becomes obnoxious through no fault of his own (as by illness), while the innkeeper may probably under some circumstances eject him from the inn, it must be done reasonably, and in such a way as to avoid injury to him.[57] If in the lapse of time the guest has ceased to be a traveler and has become a resident, being no longer in the class of those who may legally demand entertainment, he may be excluded.[58]

E. End of Duty to Receive. An innkeeper may put an end to his duty to receive travelers by definitively going out of the business, and this he may do at any time.[59] But he does not avoid the requirements of his business merely by taking down his sign and ceasing to advertise his inn, so long as he really conducts the business he remains subject to its obligations.[60]

IV. LIABILITY TO GUESTS.

A. Beginning of Liability — 1. Creation of Relation of Host and Guests — a. Reception by Innkeeper Necessary. To establish the relation of host and guest the traveler must visit the inn or hotel for the purpose of availing himself of the entertainment offered, that is, to obtain refreshments or lodging.[61] But when a traveler comes to an inn and is received by the innkeeper for the purpose

Rep. 415); on the other hand it is not a sufficient excuse for refusal to receive a person as guest that he came on Sunday, or late at night, or that he refused to give his name and address (Rex v. Ivens, supra) or that other members of a military company to which he belonged had previously misconducted themselves at the inn (Atwater v. Sawyer, 76 Me. 539, 49 Am. of entertaining him, the relation of host and guest is thereby established.[62] Everyone received by the innkeeper for entertainment is a guest, whether he is himself responsible for his board bill or another pays it for him.[63] The liability as innkeeper and the right to make charges enforced by the innkeeper's lien are concurrent.[64]

b. Entertainment During Day Only. One may become a guest at an inn without remaining over night; a traveler who resorts to an inn merely for food during the day is a guest.[65]

c. Reception of One Not a Traveler. Since no one but a traveler has a right to be received as a guest,[66] it is often said that one who lives in the same town with the innkeeper cannot be a guest.[67] This statement is probably too broad. If such a person is received into the inn on the footing of a guest, the innkeeper is liable to him as to a guest.[68] And it is clear that one need not be taking a long journey in order to be regarded as a traveler.[69]

d. Illegal Conduct or Purpose of Guest. The relation of host and guest is not affected by the fact that the guest is acting illegally in a matter outside the actual relationship.[70] Although perhaps if the illegality is connected with his conduct in the inn, he may not be entitled to the rights of a guest.[71]

e. Guest Must Be Personally Present. One who is not personally entertained at the inn cannot be a guest there.[72] On this principle it has been held

Necessity for communication with innkeeper or agent. — The relation is usually established by registration, but it may be by other communication with the innkeeper or his proper agent. There must, however, be some communication. Thus one who enters the dining-room of an ordinary inn and calls for food without notice to the innkeeper does not thereby become a guest; a waiter is not a servant authorized to receive guests. Gastenhofer v. Clair, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 265.

Immediate continuance of journey. — Where a traveler came to an inn intending to become a guest, but on arriving there received a telegram in consequence of which he continued his journey at once, he never became a guest, and the innkeeper was not responsible as such for the luggage he brought to the inn. Where the innkeeper refuses, whether rightfully or not, to admit an applicant as guest, the applicant cannot become a guest by insisting on leaving his goods in the inn (Centlivre v. Ryder, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 273; Bird v. Bird, 1 And. 29, Benl. 60; Bennett v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273, 2 Rev. Rep. 593), or by inducing a guest to share his bed (White's Case, 2 Dyer 158*b*).

72. It is, to be sure, sometimes said that where a man's servant or minor child is received at an inn, the master or father is the

that a traveler who sends his horse to an inn while he himself lodges at a private house is not a guest, and the innkeeper is not responsible as such for the horse.[73] But in other jurisdictions the innkeeper is held liable as such for the horse, although the owner does not lodge in the inn, since he is paid for keeping the horse.[74]

f. Reception in Another Capacity Than as Guest. One admitted to an inn becomes a guest only if he is received to be treated as a guest. A person who is invited by the innkeeper as his friend does not become technically a guest at the inn.[75] On this principle one who goes to an inn merely to attend a banquet or a ball held there does not become a guest at the inn.[76] Even if the attendant at the ball buys liquor or stables his horse he is still not a guest.[77]

g. Guest or Boarder. An innkeeper may, and commonly does, entertain not only merely transient guests, but other persons who stay at the inn for a considerable period, making in fact their residence there; such persons are boarders, not guests.[78] If a person is at an inn for entertainment, the question whether he is a guest or a boarder is a question of fact.[79] The determination of this question may depend upon a number of considerations; whether the person is a resident or a stranger might, for instance, have a bearing on its solution.[80] If he is staying at the inn under a contract by which he is to remain there a certain considerable time, and in return gets a special rate for board, he is presumably a boarder.[81] But the mere fact that he has stayed for a week or longer, and that he is paying the weekly rather than the daily rate, does not prove that he is a boarder.[82]

2. CREATION OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR GOODS OF GUEST — a. By Bailment to Innkeeper — (I) BEFORE ESTABLISHMENT OF RELATION OF HOST AND GUEST. The innkeeper may become responsible for the goods of a guest, even before the relation of host and guest is established, by a delivery to him and an acceptance by him, thus creating a bailment. This often happens when the innkeeper sends a conveyance to a railroad station to bring guests and their baggage to the inn. In such a case when the intending guest gives baggage to the porter or other person authorized by the innkeeper to receive it, the innkeeper becomes liable for it as innkeeper.[83] So where goods of an intending guest are sent to an inn and received by the innkeeper, the liability of the innkeeper begins from the moment the goods are received.[84] In these cases, however, the innkeeper's responsibility as such is conditioned on the owner becoming a guest within a reasonable time. Even though the owner intends to become a guest at the time of delivery, still if he changes his mind and does not do so the responsibility of the innkeeper for the goods becomes ab initio that of a mere bailee.[85]

(II) AT TIME OF ESTABLISHMENT OF RELATION OF HOST AND GUEST. Goods are ordinarily delivered to the innkeeper or his servant at the time the guest comes to the inn. When the goods are delivered to a servant, if he is at a proper place and clothed with the appearance of authority to receive the goods, the innkeeper is liable from the time of delivery to the servant.[86] If goods are delivered

(III) After Establishment of Relation of Host and Guest. The innkeeper who receives goods for the guest after the relationship has been established is responsible as innkeeper.[88]

b. By Acceptance Without Bailment — (I) Possession in the Guest. In order for the innkeeper to become responsible as such for the goods of the guest it is not necessary that possession should be given up to the innkeeper; if the guest takes the goods to his room and keeps them there, the innkeeper is responsible for the safety of the goods.[89] So where a guest places his overcoat or other outer garment in the place provided for them in the inn the innkeeper's liability attaches to them, although the innkeeper has no notice.[90] And where the goods of the guest are placed in a public room in the inn, even where it is done by special request of the guest, the innkeeper is liable for them as innkeeper.[91]

(II) Control in the Innkeeper. But while the goods may remain in the possession of the guest, the general control must be in the innkeeper if he is to be held responsible; if the guest himself undertakes the entire care and control of the goods the innkeeper is not responsible.[92] So where a guest by arrangement with an innkeeper displays merchandise in a room of the inn and invites customers there, the control of the room and the goods for this purpose being in the guest, the innkeeper is not responsible for the goods.[93]

(III) Goods Within the Precincts of the Inn. The innkeeper is not liable as innkeeper for the goods of his guest unless they are brought within the precincts of the inn, and only while they remain within the inn.[94] If at the request of the guest or by his act the goods are placed outside the inn, the innkeeper is not liable.[95] If, however, the innkeeper himself directs that the goods be placed outside the inn, he is liable as innkeeper for the goods when his directions are followed.[96]

B. Extent of Liability — 1. Liability For Personal Injury to Guest — a. Nature of Duty to Guest. It is the duty of an innkeeper to take reasonable care of the persons of his guests, so that they may not be injured while in the inn by want of such care on his part.[97] He is not, however, an insurer of the guest's safety; his responsibility is limited to the exercise of reasonable care.[98]

b. Reasonable Accommodations. A guest is entitled to reasonable accommodations, but not to any particular room in an inn.[99] A landlord has the sole right to select a room for a guest, and he may even change the room assigned and assign the guest to another.[1]

c. Injury by Other Persons. The innkeeper must protect his guest against third persons, where it is within the power of himself or his servants to do so.[2] A fortiori the innkeeper is liable for injury to his guest committed intentionally or negligently by a servant, since it is the servant's duty and it is within the servant's power to prevent the injury.[3]

d. Injury by Defective Premises. The requirement of reasonable care for the safety of the guests extends to the buildings and appliances of the inn, which both in construction and in maintenance must be such as reasonably to secure the safety of the guest. For any injury to the guest caused by lack of due care in this respect the innkeeper is liable.[4] If, however, the defect is an obvious one, the guest must use reasonable care on his own part; and if he is himself negligent, he cannot recover from the innkeeper.[5] The duty of securing safe premises and appliances cannot be delegated to another, even though the latter is a proper person, so as to avoid responsibility; the innkeeper is liable if the guest is injured by his delegate's negligence.[6]

e. Injury by Bad Food. An innkeeper or restaurant keeper is not an insurer of the quality of the food he provides, although he would be liable for knowingly or negligently furnishing bad and deleterious food.[7]

f. Injury by Fire. It has been held that an innkeeper is not liable for injuries sustained through failure to warn his guests when a fire breaks out on the premises.[8]

2. Liability For Goods of Guest — a. Nature of Obligation — (i) Extent of Liability — (a) The Rules Prevailing. Different theories have been advanced as to the law governing the innkeeper's liability for the goods of his guest.[9] The prevailing view is that he is liable, like the carrier, for all goods of the guest lost in the inn, unless the loss happened by act of God or a public enemy or by fault of the owner.[10] According to this view the innkeeper is liable if the goods are burnt by an accidental fire[11] or are stolen without his fault;[12] a fortiori if they are stolen by the innkeeper's servants.[13] Even if the goods are injured by an excepted cause, an act of God, the innkeeper is liable if he negligently failed to provide against the loss from this cause.[14] According to another view frequently held an innkeeper is responsible only if he is negligent. He owes the highest possible degree of care to his guest, but if he has been as careful as possible, and the goods have been injured without his fault, he is not liable.[15] Another view, which is perhaps best in accord with the history of the law and the language of the leading case,[16] holds the innkeeper liable only for actual default in his undertaking, which is to provide at his peril absolute protection against the dangers of the road, and to use the utmost care to protect against loss from other causes. The innkeeper would, according to this view, be absolutely liable for loss of the goods by robbery or theft in the inn; but he would be excused if without any default on the part of himself or his servants the goods were lost or injured by accidental fire or by the act (other than theft) or the negligence of a third person. This appears to be the rule adopted in a few jurisdictions, as may be seen by an examination of their decisions.[17]

(B) Presumption of Negligence. Whatever view is adopted, it is agreed that upon loss or injury to the goods being shown the innkeeper is prima facie liable, and the burden is on him of establishing such facts as will exonerate him.[18]

(c) Safety of Premises. The innkeeper is bound to provide safe premises and is absolutely liable if the goods are injured by a defect in the premises.[19]

(ii) For What Goods the Innkeeper Is Responsible. The innkeeper's liability is not confined to goods of any particular kind, but extends to money[20] and to all other personal property brought by the guest to the inn.[21]

(iii) Notice to Conform to Rules. The innkeeper may by notice require the guest to conform to reasonable rules. The commonest rule enforced is that valuable packages must be left at the office to be placed in the safe. So far as this may reasonably be required of a guest, failure by the guest to observe it will exonerate the innkeeper from liability for the goods.[22] But the notice is effective only as to property which can conveniently be left in the safe, not as to property which the guest needs to keep by him; if applied to such property it would be unreasonable. Clothing and articles of daily use are therefore not covered by the notice.[23] Reasonable notice of the rule must be given to the guest;[24] and the terms of the notice must be construed strictly.[25]

b. Contributory Negligence of the Guest. The guest cannot recover for loss of his goods if his own negligence contributed to the loss.[26] And in order to keeper.[30] If subsequently to the guest's negligence the innkeeper could have avoided the effect thereof but failed to do so, he will be responsible for the loss.[31] Upon this general principle, where an innkeeper acts in accordance with the definite instructions of the owner, and the goods are thereby lost without negligence of the innkeeper, he is not liable.[32]

3. Liability to One Not a Guest. Where goods are put into the innkeeper's possession by one who is not a guest, he is not liable for the goods as innkeeper, but only as ordinary bailee.[33] As ordinary bailee, the innkeeper is liable in such a case if the goods are lost by neglect of due care on his part,[34] or by misdelivery.[35]

his own negligence or that of his servants acting within the scope of their employment he is of course liable.[37]

b. Restaurant Keeper. A restaurant keeper is bailee of a guest's coat taken by a waiter or other servant to hang up, and is responsible for its misdelivery or negligent loss.[38] But where the customer himself hangs up his coat without notice to the restaurant keeper or his servants, there is no bailment, and the restaurant keeper cannot be held responsible for its loss unless it is shown that he was remiss in his general supervision of the restaurant.[39]

5. Statutory Liability of Innkeepers. Statutes regulating the innkeeper's liability and providing means by which he may protect himself from liability have been frequently passed. These statutes are in derogation of the common law and are to be strictly construed.[40] And all notices required by the statute must be given exactly as provided.[41] The burden is on the innkeeper to show compliance with the statute,[42] and whether he has complied is a question for the jury.[43] Where compliance with the statute is shown by the innkeeper, and he is by the terms of the statute liable only for the theft or negligence of himself or his servants, the burden of proving such theft or negligence is on the guest.[44] Decisions upon the statutes of several states are cited in the note below.[45]

Maine.— The statutory limitation excepts "wearing apparel, articles worn or carried upon the person, to a reasonable amount, personal baggage, and money necessary for traveling expenses and personal use." A gold watch, a pair of gold bracelets, a gold thimble, three gold rings and a gold neck-pin, all for the owner's personal use, and forty dollars for traveling expenses come within the exception, and the innkeeper is liable for their loss, although they were retained by the guest. and jewels must be deposited with the innkeeper. This does not include personal baggage (Treiber v. Burrows, 27 Md. 130), or a watch, or money necessary for traveling expenses (Maltby v. Chapman, 25 Md. 310).

Massachusetts.— The guest must by statute deposit goods other than personal baggage with the innkeeper; but after the arrival of the guest the innkeeper, in spite of the statute, remains under his common-law liability until a reasonable time has elapsed for depositing the goods. Becker v. Haynes, 29 Fed. 441. The innkeeper is relieved from liability by statute when the loss is attributable to the guest's negligence or non-compliance with reasonable regulations of the inn which are brought to his notice. Burbank v. Chapin, 140 Mass. 123, 2 N. E. 934.

Missouri.— An innkeeper is not liable for loss of merchandise for sale or sample belonging to the guest, unless written notice of the fact is given; if no such notice is given, actual knowledge of the innkeeper that such goods are in the guest's room will not render him liable. Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383, 7 S. Ct. 929, 30 L. ed. 930.

Nebraska.— An innkeeper who fails to provide his office with an iron safe is responsible as at common law, and can take no advantage of the statute. Dunbier v. Day, 12 Nebr. 596, 12 N. W. 109, 41 Am. Rep. 772.

New York.— Although the innkeeper does not post a notice as required by the statute, he is entitled to the benefit of the statute if he has given actual verbal notice to the guest (Purvis v. Coleman, 21 N. Y. 111 [affirming 1 Bosw. 321]); but knowledge of the rule must be brought home to the guest by affirmative evidence (Kellogg v. Sweeney, 1 Lans. 397); and the verbal notice given him must be unmistakable (Van Wyck v. Howard, 12 How. Pr. 147). According to the statute, money, jewels, or ornaments are to be deposited with the innkeeper. A watch is not a jewel or ornament (Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 3 Am. Rep. 728 [reversing 6 Rob. 358]; Becker v. Warner, 90 Hun 187, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 739; Bernstein v. Sweeny, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 271), even though the state coat-of-arms is engraved on the cover of the watch, and a picture of the owner's mother is inside the case (Briggs v. Todd, 28 Misc. 208, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 23); silver table forks and a ladle are not jewels or ornaments (Briggs v. Todd, supra). All money must under the statute be deposited, without deducting a reasonable amount for traveling expenses. Ramaley v. Leland, supra; Hyatt v. Taylor, 42 N. Y. 258 [affirming 51 Barb. 632, and overruling Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly 200, and Gile v. Libby, 36 Barb. 70]. If the innkeeper or his authorized agent waives a deposit of valuables as called for by the statute, and authorizes the guest to take them into his own room, he is liable in case of loss (Friedman v. Breslin, 51 N. Y. App Div. 268, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 5 [affirmed in 169 N. Y. 574, 61 N. E. 1129]); but this will not be the case where the innkeeper was not informed that the package was valuable, and there was nothing about it to indicate that fact (Bendetson v. French, 46 N. Y. 266 [reversing 44 Barb. 31]). So if the innkeeper customarily permits guests to hang their coats behind the office desk, although the statute requires wearing apparel to be "specially intrusted" to his care (Bradner v. Mullen, 27 Misc. 479, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 178); if the guest deposits a package which in fact contains a large sum of money, and the innkeeper, although ignorant of the contents, receives it without objection, he is liable in case of loss for the whole amount (Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172, 4 Am. Rep. 655); the deposit required by the statute need not be made by the guest until a reasonable time after arrival (Rosenplaenter v. Roessle, 54 N. Y. 262); and the exemption ceases when the goods are packed for departure and the innkeeper is so informed (Bendetson v. French, supra). Failure by the guest to fulfil the statutory requirement that the guest should lock the door at night does not exempt the innkeeper, when the loss occurred by theft of a room-mate put into the room by the innkeeper. Gile v. Libby, supra.

Ohio.— The statute requires the deposit of a watch and money for traveling expenses; and the innkeeper is not liable for the loss of them if they are retained by the guest. Lang v. Arcade Hotel Co., 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 372, 12 Cinc. L. Bul. 250. "Baggage" as used in the statute includes a gold watch, chain, and seal. Prescott v. Bruce, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. 58.

Pennsylvania.— Although notice is not posted on the door, as required by statute, if the guest has actual knowledge of a regulation requiring the deposit of valuables it might be negligence for him to carry a large sum of money into his room. Shultz v. Wall, 134 Pa. St. 262, 19 Atl. 742, 19 Am. St. Rep. 686, 8 L. R. A. 97. The statute excepts from its operation such amount of money and such goods as it is common and prudent for a guest to keep with him. As to such articles the common-law liability of the innkeeper remains. Turner v. Whitaker, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 83, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. 375.

Tennessee.— A watch and fob is within the phrase "jewels and ornaments," and must under the statute be deposited with the innkeeper in order to hold him liable for loss. Rains v. Maxwell House Co., 112 Tenn. 219, 79 S. W. 114, 64 L. R. A. 470.

Wisconsin.— A watch and fob is within the phrase "jewels and ornaments," as in Tennessee. Stewart v. Parsons, 24 Wis. 241.

England.— A material error in the terms of the posted printed notice will prevent the innkeeper from taking advantage of the statute. Spice v. Bacon, 2 Ex. D. 463, 46 L. J. Exch. 713, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 896, 25 Wkly. Rep. 840. Unless the loss of goods not de-

2. Liability For Goods Pending Removal. After a guest pays his bill and departs, leaving goods to be at once removed, the innkeeper's liability for the goods continues for a reasonable time pending removal.[50]

3. Goods Left to Be Removed at a Later Time. If the guest pays his bill and departs without any intention of returning, but leaves goods, with the consent of the innkeeper, to be kept until called for, the relation of host and guest is at an

Squire v. Wheeler, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 93. Jewels were not deposited according to the act, and were lost; failure of the innkeeper's servants to search the premises when the loss was reported did not constitute such negligence as would make the innkeeper responsible. Huntley v. Bedford Hotel Co., 56 J. P. 53. The fact of a notice in the guest's room that articles of value if not kept under lock must be deposited did not constitute a special bargain with the guest that the jewels need not be deposited if they were kept under lock in the room. (N. Y.) 451, 35 How. Pr. 180); and where a traveler was told that he could have a room only until an expected guest who had engaged it should arrive, and on these terms he took the room and put his goods in it, and when the expected guest arrived the innkeeper's servants put the goods in the corridor, where they were lost, the innkeeper's liability continued after the goods had been placed in the corridor (Medawar v. Grand Hotel Co., [1891] 2 Q. B. 11, 55 J. P. 614, 60 L. J. Q. B. 209, 64 L. T. Rep. N. end, and the innkeeper is responsible for the goods as a gratuitous bailee only ;[51] and this is true a fortiori when the goods are left without the consent of the innkeeper,[52] or by a guest who does not pay his bill.[53]

4. Goods Received After Departure of Guest. Where goods are received by the innkeeper for the guest after the relation has terminated and the guest has departed, the innkeeper is responsible for the goods only as an ordinary bailee,[54] even though the innkeeper may have agreed while the guest was at the inn to receive and forward the goods.[55]

V. Compensation of Innkeeper.

The innkeeper can charge for entertaining a guest only a reasonable compensation[56] at rates made by the innkeeper[57] or by agreement of the parties.[58] As soon as the guest is accepted, the right of the innkeeper to charge compensation for his services begins.[59] And the innkeeper may demand payment in advance before he receives the guest.[60] An undertaking to board and lodge a guest implies an engagement to pay without extra charge the usual and reasonable attentions to the health and comfort of the guest, but not to provide the services of a nurse in a severe or protracted illness.[61] Before being entitled to compensation the innkeeper or boarding-house keeper must perform his whole obligation. If the obligation is to furnish both room and board, the innkeeper cannot recover compensation, although he furnishes the room, if he has failed to provide proper board.[62]

innkeeper.[64] This lien is properly speaking not created by a contract, but by law; the innkeeper being obliged by law to receive the guest is given the lien by the law as a protection. Consequently an innkeeper may maintain his lien even against a guest who is not legally capable of making a binding contract.[65] The lien is restricted to charges as between innkeeper and guest.[66] Thus an innkeeper has no lien at common law on the goods of a boarder,[67] unless there is a special agreement for such lien with the boarder.[68] So an innkeeper taking horses to board for one who is not a guest has no lien at common law.[69]

B. To What Property It Extends — 1. Nature of the Property. The lien extends to all property brought to the inn, whether technically baggage or not; and holds each article of property for the whole bill.[70] The lien cannot be exercised over the person of the guest, or over his wearing apparel actually on his person,[71] nor in such a way as to violate the law.[72] The lien may be exercised over property exempt from execution.[73]

2. Property of Third Person. Where a guest brings to an inn goods ostensibly his, the lien of the innkeeper attaches to the goods, although they were in fact the goods of a third person.[74] If, however, the innkeeper knows that the guest has no right to the goods he brings to the inn, there will be no lien on the goods;[75] but if the innkeeper knows that the guest is a servant or agent of the owner of the goods, employed to deal with the goods he brings to the inn, the lien may be enforced against the master in spite of the knowledge of the innkeeper.[76]

3. Property of Guest Not Chargeable. Where a person goes to an inn under such circumstances that he is not chargeable because the bill is to be paid by another, the goods of the guest who is not chargeable cannot be held on lien.[77]

a future day.[79] A sale of the property by the guest to a third person does not terminate the lien; the innkeeper may retain the goods against the purchaser for all charges accrued (even after the sale) until notice of the sale is received by the innkeeper.[80] The lien is not lost by taking the goods into another state, even if no such lien would be created by the law of the latter state; for the lien, once having attached to the goods, remains, wherever they may be taken by the innkeeper.[81]

D. Care of Goods Held on Lien. An innkeeper holding goods on lien is bound to take due care of the goods, which is said to be the care which he takes of his own goods of a similar description.[82] He may make reasonable use of the goods, if such use is beneficial to the owner, as for instance in the case of live animals, but in that case he is bound to account for the value of the use.[83]

E. End of Lien. The lien is at an end when the innkeeper voluntarily delivers the goods to the guest,[84] unless he is induced to give up the goods by fraud, in which case he may recover the goods and the lien will again attach to them.[85] Therefore an innkeeper cannot claim a general lien, that is, a lien to cover services rendered previously on another occasion.[86] The innkeeper may allow the guest to take the goods temporarily without parting with his lien; as for instance, where a horse is put up at an inn and the guest drives it out from time to time, the innkeeper does not lose his lien.[87] In such a case the lien continues even while the guest has temporary possession.[88] The lien is of course destroyed by payment of the debt.[89] But a mere agreement to accept security for the bill if it is not inconsistent with the lien does not put an end to it.[90] Conversion of the goods or wrongful dealing with them by the innkeeper while he holds them on lien puts an end to the lien.[91] The fact that the innkeeper claims a lien for a greater amount than he has a right to do does not, however, destroy his lien for the rightful amount.[92]

F. Enforcement of Lien. At common law an innkeeper holding goods on lien cannot sell the goods to reimburse himself, without legal process, even though the care and keeping of the goods is expensive;[93] nor can he pledge the goods.[94] The proper method of enforcing the lien, in the absence of statute, is by a bill in equity, to foreclose the lien; and on such a bill the court may order the sale of the goods.[95] If, however, there is an adequate statutory remedy, a bill in equity will not lie.[96] The lien may be set up in an answer to a suit in replevin brought by the owner of the goods.[97] Statutory methods of enforcing the lien are provided in several states.[98]

G. Statutory Liens. Boarding-house keepers, lodging-house keepers, and livery-stable keepers, and innkeepers as to the goods of boarders, and as to horses standing at livery, are often given a lien by statute;[99] and other statutes subject wages to a lien for board.[1]

A recognizance must be given by plaintiff; a bond will not take its place. Thomas v. Glasgow, supra. The record must show that plaintiff was the proprietor of an inn or boarding-house (Walker v. Kennedy, 7 Pa. Dist. 516, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 433; McCourt v. Brenaman, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 645); and that the debt was for wages (Leiss v. Engard, 8 Pa. Dist. 608).

A horse left at an inn by a thief was subsequently claimed by the owner, who refused to pay for his keeping. The landlord filed his bill, asserting a lien on the horse, and that the amount was more than his value. The owner filed a bond, under order of the court, conditioned to abide by the decree of the court, and took away the horse, and sold him. It was held that the owner was not bound for more than the value of the horse, and that for the balance, if any, the landlord must look to the party from whom he received the horse. Hunter v. Sevier, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 127.

VII. DUTY OF INNKEEPER TO STRANGERS.

A. Duty to Permit Access to the Inn. One who is not a guest has in general no legal right to enter the inn or remain in it against the will of the innkeeper.[2] A stranger who actually has business with a guest might perhaps have a legal right to be admitted if the guest so requested;[3] but one who comes merely to make a social call upon a guest has no right to enter the inn and may be excluded.[4] A fortiori one who comes merely upon his own business may be excluded, even though a business rival is admitted by the innkeeper.[5] But where to exclude such a person would subject the guest to a monopoly in a necessary service, the innkeeper, it seems, has no right to deprive the guest of the benefit of competition by the admission of one person and the exclusion of his rivals.[6]

B. Liability to Strangers For Acts of Guests. The innkeeper is not generally liable to strangers for the acts of his guests;[7] but may be made so by statute.[8]

VIII. REMEDY.

A. Procedure — 1. Form of Action. An action against an innkeeper for injury to a guest may be brought either in tort or in contract,[9] but the gist of the action is tort.[10] Under the ordinary form of statute, an action for personal injury to a guest does not survive against an innkeeper's executor, being an action for a mere personal tort;[11] but an action for loss of the guest's goods survives against the representative of the innkeeper.[12]

2. Parties. An innkeeper may be sued as such for loss of goods only by the guest. If one lends his property to another and the bailee comes with it to an inn and it is there lost, the guest alone may enforce the innkeeper's peculiar liability.[13] If, however, the guest is a member of the owner's family the owner may sue; so a father may sue the innkeeper for the loss of his goods taken to an inn by his minor son,[14] and a master may sue for his goods lost at an inn by his servant.[15] So it has been held that both partners may sue for goods of the firm taken to an inn by one partner and lost there.[16] In several cases it has been said that a bailee stands in the same position as a servant, and the bailor may sue the innkeeper for loss of the goods;[17] but these decisions must be confined to cases where the innkeeper was negligent, and they are therefore based on the ordinary liability to an owner of goods for a tort by which the goods are injured.

3. Pleading. The declaration need not set out the customary liability of innkeepers, since the custom is part of the law of the land.[18] The declaration for injury to a guest must show the relation of host and guest at the time of the injury.[19] So a petition to foreclose a lien must allege that the petitioner keeps an inn or tavern.[20] Contributory negligence of the guest must be set up in the answer.[21]

4. Evidence. At common law the guest, being an interested party, could not testify in his action for goods lost at the inn.[22] By an exception, however, in the case of a carrier, founded on necessity, which was in some states extended to the case of the innkeeper, the owner could testify to the contents and value of his personal baggage.[23] Evidence of declarations or conduct of a servant, outside the master's business, is not admissible;[24] nor of defendant's character for honesty.[25] Questions of relevancy of evidence are settled on the general principles of the law of evidence.[26]

B. Damages. Damages for injury to health by refusal to receive one as guest may be recovered,[27] but not for loss of reputation or for mental anguish.[28] Exemplary damages cannot be recovered where there is no actual damage.[29] The measure of damages for loss of goods is the market value, of which the cost price is some evidence.[30] In an action by the innkeeper for his charges, the guest may recoup the value of goods lost from his room.[31]

C. What Law Governs. The obligation of the innkeeper is to be determined by the law of the country where the inn is.[32]

IX. Offenses Against Innkeepers.

In several states, by statutes varying in their terms, frauds upon innkeepers have been made criminal offenses; the construction of these statutes is shown in the notes.[33]

2. Century Dict.

"Innocent agent" is one who does the forbidden thing, moved thereto by another person, yet incurs no guilt, because not endowed with sufficient mental capacity or not made acquainted with the necessary facts (1 Bishop Cr. L. § 310 [quoted in Smith v. State, 21 Tex. App. 107, 132, 17 S. W. 552]. See also State v. Carr, 28 Oreg. 389, 397, 42 Pac. 215); one who is ignorant of the unlawful intent of his principal, and is merely the instrument of the guilty party in committing an offense (Smith v. State, 21 Tex. App. 107, 132, 17 S. W. 552). See, generally, CRIMINAL LAW; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

"Innocent possession" is not convertible in legal terminology with the term "lawful possession." Purpose of foundation.—"Here in Term time the students of the law attend in great numbers, as it were to public schools, and are there instructed in all sorts of law learning and in the practice of the Courts. There belong to it ten lesser Inns, and sometimes more, which are called the Inns of Chancery, in each of which there are an hundred students at the least, and in some of them a far greater number, though not constantly residing. The students are for the most part young men. Here they study the nature of original and judicial writs, which are the very first principles of the law. After they have made some progress here and are more advanced in years, they are admitted into the Inns of Court properly so called; of these there are four in number. In that which is the least frequented there are about 200 students . . . for the young student, which most commonly cometh from one of the Universities, for his entrance or beginning were first instituted and erected eight houses of Chancery, to learn there the elements of the law, that is to say (inter alia) 'Clifford's Inn, and each of these houses consists of forty or thereabouts.' . . . It is a technical term, taken from the Roman law, and there used to distinguish an action against the thing from one against the person, the terms in rem and in personam always being the opposite one of the other; an act in personam being one done or directed against a specific person, while an act in rem was one done with reference to no specific person, but against or with reference to a specific thing, and so against whom it might concern, or "all the world." I. PRELIMINARY CONSIDERATIONS.

A. Nature and Forms of Insanity — Definitions. The terms "lunatic,"[1]

1. "Lunatick is a technical word, coined in more ignorant times, as imagining these persons were affected by the moon; but discovered by philosophy and ingenious men, that it is entirely owing to a defect of the organs of the body." Ex p. Barnsley, 3 Atk. 168, 174, 26 Eng. Reprint 899 [quoted in Piper v. Stinson, 3 McCord (S. C.) 252], per Lord Hardwicke.

The term may include a person of unsound mind (In re Browne, [1894] 3 Ch. 412, 416, 63 L. J. Ch. 729, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 365, 7 Reports 580, 43 Wkly. Rep. 175), whether such unsoundness results from old age or intemperate habits (Robertson v. Lyon, 24 S. C. 266).

Previous sanity.— In North Carolina it is said that a lunatic is one who has possessed reason, but through disease, grief, or other cause has lost it. The term is especially applicable to one who has lucid intervals and may yet in contemplation of the law recover his reason. In re Anderson, 132 N. C. 243, 246, 43 S. E. 649; Millison v. Nicholson, 1 N. C. 549, 551 [both citing 1 Blackstone Comm. 304]. But in Pennsylvania the word is construed to mean every person of unsound mind, whether so from nativity, as an idiot, or subsequently becoming so. McLaughlin's Estate, 8 Pa. Dist. 113.

Failure of memory and decay and feebleness of the intellectual faculties are the natural concomitants of old age, and are not evidences of that unsoundness of mind which constitutes a man a lunatic. To render him such there must be a total deprivation or suspension of the ordinary powers of the mind. In re Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. 186.

"insane,"[2] "of unsound mind,"[3] and "non compos mentis"[4] are convertible and generic terms, and include all the specific forms of mental disease recognized by the

2. Insane means "exhibiting unsoundness of mind; mad; deranged in mind; delirious; distracted." Hawe v. State, 11 Nebr. 537, 538, 10 N. W. 452, 38 Am. Rep. 375 [quoting Webster Dict.]. And see Nicewander v. Nicewander, 151 Ill. 156, 165, 37 N. E. 698; Crosswell v. People, 13 Mich. 427, 435, 87 Am. Dec. 774. It "implies every degree of unsoundness of mind." Seitsinger v. M. W. of A., 204 Ill. 58, 65, 68 N. E. 478. And see Nicewander v. Nicewander, supra.

Insane person may include idiot, non compos, lunatic, or distracted person (St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 593, 595; Bliss v. Connecticut, etc., R. Co., 24 Vt. 424, 425; Hiett v. Shull, 36 W. Va. 563, 565, 15 S. E. 146. And see Cundall v. Haswell, 23 R. I. 508, 513, 51 Atl. 426), and the term has been held to include even an intoxicated person (Bliss v. Connecticut, etc., R. Co., 24 Vt. 424). A man may be insane, although neither a raving maniac nor an absolute imbecile; and it is not necessary that his delusion operate at all times with the same force, or that his self-control be at all times entirely lost. Haviland v. Hayes, 37 N. Y. 25.

3. Of unsound mind imports a total deprivation of sense. Witte v. Gilbert, 10 Nebr. 539, 541, 7 N. W. 288; In re James, 35 N. J. Eq. 58, 59 [citing Ex p. Barnsley, 3 Atk. 168, 26 Eng. Reprint 899]; Matter of Bush, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 23, 25, 1 Connoly Surr. 330; Stewart v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255, 301; Jackson v. King, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 207, 217, 15 Am. Dec. 354; Foster v. Means, Speers Eq. (S. C.) 569, 575, 42 Am. Dec. 332. By statute the term includes every species of insanity or mental unsoundness. McCammon v. Cunningham, 108 Ind. 545, 547, 9 N. E. 455 [citing Eggers v. Eggers, 57 Ind. 461; Willett v. Porter, 42 Ind. 250]. And see Hamrick v. State, 134 Ind. 324, 34 N. E. 3; Fiscus v. Turner, 125 Ind. 46, 24 N. E. 662. "Every person is to be deemed of unsound mind who has lost his memory and understanding, by old age, sickness, or other accident, so as to render him incapable of transacting his business and of managing his property." Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 531, 537, 84 Am. Dec. 97.

A person of unsound mind means, by statute, any idiot, non compos, lunatic, monomaniac, or distracted person. Teegarden v. Lewis, 145 Ind. 98, 102, 40 N. E. 1047, 44 N. E. 9; Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 231, 244.

Monomaniacs.— One who is controlled by an insane delusion on a certain subject is as to that subject a person of unsound mind, although his reason as to other subjects is unimpaired. Schuff v. Ransom, 79 Ind. 458; Riggs v. American Tract Soc., 95 N. Y. 503.

Convertible terms.— "Of unsound mind" and "non compos mentis" are convertible terms. Blanchard v. Nestle, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 37, 41; Foster v. Means, Speers Eq. (S. C.) 569, 575, 42 Am. Dec. 332. Contra, Delafield v. Parish, 1 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 1.

4. Non compos mentis means "not of sound mind. This is a generic term, and includes all the species of madness, whether it arises from: 1, idiocy; 2, sickness; 3, lunacy; or, 4, drunkenness." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 231, 244]. To the same effect see Greenwade v. Greenwade, 43 Md. 313; Johnson v. Phifer, 6 Nebr. 401; Blanchard v. Nestle, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 37, 41; Delafield v. Parish, 1 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.). A person non compos mentis is one "who was of good and sound memory, and by the visitation of God had lost it," or "he that by sickness, grief, or other accident, wholly loseth his understanding." Jackson v. King, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 207, 217, 15 Am. Dec. 354 [quoting Coke Litt. 247*a*]. And see Sprague v. Duel, Clarke (N. Y.) 90, 93 [quoting Matter of Barker, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 232, 233].

Convertible terms.— Non compos mentis is a term convertible with "of non-sane memory" and "not of sound memory." Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 33, 41 [citing 2 Coke Litt. § 405].

Business incapacity.— The fact that a man has not sufficient intelligence and understanding to manage his affairs and transact business in a proper and prudent manner does not necessarily show him to be non compos mentis. Hovey v. Chase, 52 Me. 304, 83 Am. Dec. 514. One is non compos mentis so as to be liable to guardianship, however, when he cannot manage property himself. Gray v. Obear, 59 Ga. 675.

Necessity of total deprivation of sense.— Formerly the words "non compos mentis" were regarded as words of determinate signification implying a total deprivation of sense. Lackey v. Lackey, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 107; Nailor v. Nailor, 4 Dana (Ky.) 339; Witte v. Gilbert, 10 Nebr. 539, 541, 7 N. W. 288; Mulloy v. Ingalls, 4 Nebr. 115; In re James, 35 N. J. Eq. 58, 59; In re Mason, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 436; Matter of Barker, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 232; Matter of Bush, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 23, 25, 1 Connoly Surr. 330; Stewart v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255, 301; Jackson v. King, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 207, 217, 15 Am. Dec. 354; In re Beaumont, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 52, 29 Am. Dec. 33; Foster v. Means, Speers Eq. (S. C.) 569, 575, 42 Am. Dec. 332; Ex p. Barnsley, 3 Atk. 168, 26 Eng. Reprint 899; Beverley's Case, 4 Coke 123, Fitzh. N. Br. 532, Reg. Brev. 267. But under the influence of modern legislation this construction of the term has been practically abrogated, and the words "non compos mentis" are generally construed to intend the subject's inability to manage himself and his ordinary affairs, from whatever cause such inability may arise. In re Carmichael, 36 Ala. 514; Shapter v. Pillar, 28 Colo. 209, 63 Pac. 302; Gray v. Obear, 59 Ga. 675; Titcomb v. Vantyle, 84 Ill. 371; Hamrick v. State, 134 Ind. 324, 34 N. 6. Delusion as element of insanity.— Formerly insanity was held not to be established unless delusion had at some time prevailed (Wheeler v. Alderson, 3 Hagg. Eccl. 574); but it is now well settled that loss of mental power to a certain degree, although not accompanied by delusion, may constitute insanity within the view of the law (American Seamen's Friend Soc. v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 619; Reg. v. Shaw, L. R. 1 C. C. 145, 11 Cox C. C. 109, 37 L. J. M. C. 112, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 583, 16 Wkly. Rep. 913; Nichols v. Binns, 1 Swab. & Tr. 239).

An idiot is "a natural fool; a fool from birth; a human being in form, but destitute of reason, and of the ordinary intellectual power of man." Webster Dict. [cited in People v. Crosswell, 13 Mich. 427, 435, 87 Am. Dec. 774]. An idiot is "a person who has been defective in intellectual powers from the instant of his birth, or at least before the mind had received the impression of any idea." Chitty Med. Jur. [cited in People v. Crosswell, supra]. "An idiot is known by his perpetual infirmity of nature; a nativitate, for he never had any sense or understanding." Ewell Lead. "A man is not an idiot, if he have any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents, his age, or the like common matters." 1 Blackstone Comm. 303 [quoted in Clark v. Robinson, supra]. And see Chitty Contr. 130 [quoted in Somers v. Pumphrey, supra]. A man may be of imbecile mind and yet not be an idiot. Odell v. Buck, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 142. A person ordinarily denominated an "idiot," but who became such only after reaching the age of nine years, is not an "idiot," but an "insane person," under Miller Iowa Code, § 1434, which restricts the term "idiot" to persons foolish from birth. Speedling v. Worth County, 68 Iowa 152, 26 N. W. 50.

Idiocy is "that condition of mind in which the reflective, or all, or a part, of the affective powers, are either entirely wanting, or are manifested to the least possible extent. Idiocy generally depends upon organic defects." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 231, 244]. It "consists in a defect or sterility of the intellectual power" (Chitty Med. Jur. [cited in People v. Crosswell, 13 Mich. 427, 436]) "and not a perversion of the understanding" (Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Somers v. Pumphrey, supra]. And see Owing's Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 370, 17 Am. Dec. 311). Complete idiocy is defined as "total fatuity from birth." Browning v. Reane, 2 Phillim. 69.

Idiotism is a total want of reasoning powers, growing from a malformation of the organ of thought at the time of birth. People v. Lake, 2 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 215.

An imbecile is a person destitute of strength, either of body or mind; weak; feeble; impotent; decrepit. Campbell v. Campbell, 130 Ill. 466, 477, 22 N. E. 620, or a person subject to one or more specific delusions.[8] The term "lunacy," has been judicially defined as that condition in which the mind is directed by the will but is wholly or partially misguided or erroneously governed by it or it is the impairment of any one or more of the faculties of the mind accompanied with or inducing a defect in the comparing faculty.[9] "Insanity" has been judicially defined to be such a derangement of the mental faculties that the individual has lost the power of reasoning correctly.[10] "Unsoundness of 6 L. R. A. 167 [citing Webster Dict.]. Those designated as imbeciles in law may make use of their senses; may have ideas, memory, and some judgment; and may read and articulate words with more or less clearness; and even calculate, when the calculation is not difficult. Calderon v. Martin, 50 La. Ann. 1153, 1155, 23 So. 909.

Imbecility is that feebleness of mind which, without depriving entirely the person of the use of his reason, leaves only the faculty of conceiving ideas the most common and which relate almost always to physical wants and habits. Delafield v. Parish, 1 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 1, 115. "Imbecility, as distinguished from idiocy or lunacy, is usually incident to extreme age, and is generally the result of a gradual decay of the mental faculties." Messenger v. Bliss, 35 Ohio St. 587, 592. Corporal imbecility see DIVORCE; IMPOTENCY.

An inquisition of lunacy finding a person "of unsound mind" is no evidence that he is an idiot. Christmas v. Mitchell, 38 N. C. 535.

Deaf and dumb and blind persons.— A person who is deaf, dumb, and blind is considered in law as incapable of any understanding. Brown v. Brown, 3 Conn. 299, 8 Am. Dec. 187. But blindness alone does not constitute incompetency (Griffin v. Collins, 122 Ga. 102, 49 S. E. 827); neither at the present time does the fact that a person is deaf and dumb raise a presumption of idiocy or insanity (Brown v. Brown, supra; Hebert's Succession, 33 La. Ann. 1099; Badineau v. Bendy, 7 La. 248), although formerly the rule was otherwise (see Browner v. Fisher, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441). Even where a presumption of idiocy arises from physical infirmity, it is rebuttable. Com. v. Hill, 14 Mass. 207; Brower v. Fisher, supra; Barnett v. Barnett, 54 N. C. 221; Christmas v. Mitchell, 38 N. C. 535; Rex v. Dyson, 7 C. & P. 305, 32 E. C. L. 627; Rex v. Pritchard, 7 C. & P. 303, 32 E. C. L. 626; Dickenson v. Blisset, Dick. 268, 21 Eng. 9. Owing's Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 370, 386, 17 Am. Dec. 311.

Lunacy "consists in a perversion of the intellect." Chitty Med. Jur. [cited in People v. Crosswell, 13 Mich. 427, 436]. It includes mania and dementia. In re Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. 186. By statute the term "lunacy" embraces every description of unsoundness of mind except idiocy, but it does not embrace mere weakness of mind or lack of business capacity, and still less want of business experience. In re Brugh, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 193, 197, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 551.

10. Waters v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 2 Fed. 892, 893.

Scope of term.— Insanity, etymologically, signifies unsoundness; lexically, it signifies unsoundness of mind or derangement of the intellect. Johnson v. Maine, etc., Ins. Co., 83 Me. 182, 186, 22 Atl. 107. And see Cundall v. Haswell, 23 R. I. 508, 513, 51 Atl. 426. It is "a chronic disease of the brain inducing chronic, disorded mental symptoms." Encycl. Brit. [quoted in Matter of Brugh, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 193, 197, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 551]. It is "the state of being unsound in mind, derangement of intellect, madness. . . . the word is applicable to any degree of mental derangement from slight delirium or wandering to distraction." Meyers v. Com., 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 506, 508. Whether mental unsoundness be congenital or a result of arrested mental development, of religious excitement, of physical disease, of old age, or of unknown causes; whether it be casual, temporary, or permanent; whether it be personal or hereditary; whether it be manifest in the mildest dementia or the wildest mania, it is expressed by the term "insanity." Johnson v. Maine, etc., Ins. Co., supra. As used in statutes it may include every species of organic mental derangement, whether of a mild or violent form, and excludes every other condition of the mind. Sage v. State, 91 Ind. 141, 145. Insanity may be divided into (1) mania, (2) monomania, (3) dementia, (4) idiotism. People v. Lake, 2 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 215, 218. Definition of insanity as a defense to crime see CRIMINAL LAW.

Illustrations.— Mere sexual perversion, high temper, and immoral tendencies will not alone constitute insanity (Schick v. Stuhr, 120 Iowa 396, 94 N. W. 915); nor will old age and feebleness conjoined (Emerick v. Emerick, 83 Iowa 411, 49 N. W. 1017, 13 L. R. A. 757; Fairfield Overseers of Poor v. Gullifer, 49 Me. 360, 77 Am. mind" has been judicially declared to be synonymous with insanity.[11] Insane delusion consists in such an hallucination or false conception in regard to facts or objects as cannot fairly be supposed to exist in a healthy mind, and of which the subject cannot be disabused by reason or evidence.[12] Definitions of other forms of his property under the influence of profligate children (Darling v. Bennet, 8 Mass. 129), or conveys away his property for a nominal or inadequate consideration (In re Shelleig, 11 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 81, 11 Ohio N. P. 399; In re Welch, 108 Wis. 387, 84 N. W. 550). Mere thriftlessness or want of success in business is not proof of insanity (Dominick v. Randolph, 124 Ala. 557, 27 So. 481); but a person's absurd contracts or investments continued for a series of years may authorize the appointment of a guardian for him (In re Emswiler, 11 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 10, 8 Ohio N. P. 132); and it has been held that one who is unable correctly to multiply simple numbers is incompetent (Calderon v. Martin, 50 La. Ann. 1153, 23 So. 909; Frantz v. Frantz, 6 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 555, 4 Ohio N. P. 278).

General and partial insanity.— A man may be mad on all subjects, and then, although he may have glimmerings of reason, he is not a responsible agent. This is general insanity. Com. v. Wireback, 190 Pa. St. 138, 147, 42 Atl. 542, 70 Am. St. Rep. 625; Com. v. Mosler, 4 Pa. St. 264; Com. v. Sayre, 5 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 424. Partial insanity is the derangement of one or more of the faculties of the mind which prevents freedom of action. Thomas v. Carter, 170 Pa. St. 272, 283, 33 Atl. 81, 50 Am. St. Rep. 770 [citing Taylor v. Trich, 165 Pa. St. 586, 30 Atl. 1053, 44 Am. St. Rep. 679]. It means "not some intermediate stage in the development of mental derangement, but disturbance at some particular point not involving the mind at any other point. A person thus affected is said to be under the influence of a delusion." Taylor v. Trich, supra. "Partial insanity is confined to a particular subject, the man being sane on every other." Com. v. Wireback, 190 Pa. St. 138, 147, 42 Atl. 542, 70 Am. St. Rep. 625 [quoting Com. v. Mosler, supra]. See further as to partial insanity infra, note 12.

Habitual insanity is such insanity as is, in its nature, continuous and chronic. Wright v. Market Bank, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 60 S. W. 623, 624.

Moral insanity is usually applied to those mental disorders which are confined to the affective faculties, or where the derangement of the affective faculties is the striking feature of the disorder. Denson v. Beazley, 34 Tex. 191, 214. No perversion of the moral nature or mere disorder of the moral affections and propensities, unless accompanied by such delusion as indicates the subversion of the will and reason, will in law amount to insanity. An ignorant man, duped to a fixed and unchangeable belief of things which do not exist, is not therefore insane. In re Rubright, 3 Pittsb. (Pa.) 299. And see Griffin v. Collins, 122 Ga. 102, 49 S. E. 827, holding that limited education is not incompetency.

Mere weakness of mind is not insanity (Francke v. His Wife, 29 La. Ann. 302; Odell v. Buck, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 142; Ekin v. McCracken, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 534); and although a man may not have, in the judgment of his fellows, sufficient intelligence to manage his affairs properly, yet he may not be legally speaking non compos mentis (Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 231; In re Rush, 53 N. Illustrations.— Delusion may consist in the belief of things impossible as being against the laws of nature, or of things possible but so improbable that no sane man would give them credit; but mere belief, however absurd, is not delusion unless it amounts to a perversion of reason. Dr. Lushington in Prinsep v. Dyce Sombre, 10 Moore P. C. 232, 14 Eng. Reprint 480. Insane delusion does not relate to mere sentiments or theories, or abstract questions in law, politics, or religion. All these are the subject of opinions, which are beliefs founded on reasoning and reflection, and however absurd are not insane delusions. Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. 161, 171. Thus a belief, however preposterous, as to the conditions of the future state, as in the transmigration of human souls into animals, is not evidence of insanity, since it is to be refuted only by advancing some other belief which itself can have no foundation in positive knowledge. Bonard's Will, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 128; Chafin Will Case, 32 Wis. 557. So a belief in spiritualism is not necessarily an insane delusion. Brown v. Ward, 53 Md. 376, 36 Am. Rep. 422; Middleditch v. Williams, 45 N. J. Eq. 726, 17 Atl. 826, 4 L. R. A. 738. See, however, Matter of Beach, 23 N. Y. App. Div. 411, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 437. Weakness shown by vacillation, shiftlessness, occasional despondency, and a religious hobby does not of itself prove the subject incompetent for business dealings. West v. Russell, 48 Mich. 74, 11 N. W. 812. Mere opinions, antipathies, or prejudices as to other persons do not constitute insane delusions. Hall v. Hall, 38 Ala. 131; Barnes v. Barnes, 66 Me. 286; Trumbull v. Gibbons, 22 N. J. L. 117. Generally insane delusions are either of the physical senses or such as relate to facts or objects. Chafin Will Case, 32 Wis. 557; Reg. v. Burton, 3 F. & F. 772. For illustrations of these rules as applied to cases of testamentary capacity see Thompson v. Thompson, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 107; Lee v. Lee, 4 McCord (S. C.) 183, 17 Am. Mistaken belief distinguished from insane delusion see In re Kendrick, 130 Cal. 360, 370, 62 Pac. 605.

Partial insanity.— The degree of insanity as partial or total is to be measured by the extent and number of the delusions existing in the mind of the person in question, who, if his delusion exists as to one subject only, is to be deemed sane upon other subjects (Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274) and so capable of transacting business the matter of which is not within the scope of his delusion (Banks v. Goodfellows, L. R. 5 Q. B. 549, 39 L. J. Q. B. 237, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 813; Jenkins v. Morris, 14 Ch. D. 674, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 817; Smee v. Smee, 5 P. D. 84, 44 J. P. 220, 49 L. J. P. & Adm. 8, 28 Wkly. Rep. 703). And the mere existence of a delusion not connected with the act done will not excuse an unlawful act committed by one partially insane. State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. L. 196; McNaghten's Case, 10 Cl. & F. 200, 8 Eng. Reprint 718. See Criminal Law. In a few English cases it was considered that, the mind being an integer, the existence of a single delusion should be conclusive of such general unsoundness of mind as to render all the civil acts of the subject invalid and his unlawful acts excusable. Expressions in Dyce Sombre v. Troup, D. & Sw. 24; Groom v. Thomas, 2 Hagg. Eccl. 433; Waring v. Waring, 12 Jur. 947, 6 Moore P. C. 341, 13 Eng. Reprint 715. C. Evidence as to Insanity[26] — 1. Rebuttal of Presumption of Sanity — a. In General. A party alleging insanity is bound to establish it by a preponderance of the evidence.[27] The ordinary rules of evidence apply as to the relevancy of evidence offered on the issue of insanity.[28] In the trial of a question of insanity evidence of hereditary taint is competent to corroborate direct proof.[29] Insanity is shown by the proof of acts and conduct inconsistent with the character and previous habits of the person in question.[30] Where insanity at a particular time is in issue, evidence of insanity before or after that time will be received,[31]

Gardner, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 526, 34 Am. Dec. 340), and so as to delirium tremens, which is generally a short madness (State v. Sewell, 48 N. C. 245). It has been held that where the paroxysms of insanity are periodical, the party generally recovering from them in a few days, the presumption of insanity does not apply. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 8 Bush (Ky.) 283. And the same has been held where the insanity was due to a violent disease. 2. Rebuttal of Presumption of Continuance of Insanity. When insanity has once existed and it is sought to be proved that a subsequent act of its subject was done in a lucid interval, capacity must be shown as of the very time of the doing of the act in question; it is not sufficient to show a lucid interval before and after the day of the act.[36] Where the testimony of unprejudiced experts of high standing is that the person is not restored to mental soundness, their conclusion will not be rejected as erroneous, although from the evidence of physicians, and the appearance of the patient under examination in court, and his condition for some time past, the court might reasonably infer that no mental disorder existed.[37]

D. Province of Court and Jury.[38] Capacity to do an act is always a question of law; the condition from which such capacity may be deduced is a question of fact.[39] It is for the court to decide whether sufficient evidence appears to justify the submission of the issue of insanity to the jury;[40] and that, the issue being submitted, it is the exclusive province of the jury to determine the weight and effect of the evidence.[41] A court of full chancery powers may direct an issue to be framed for a jury upon the question of the sanity of a party not judicially found insane, where the question arises collaterally.[42]

II. INQUISITION AND GUARDIANSHIP.

A. Jurisdiction[43] — 1. Generally. In England the king is considered to assume the care of insane persons and their property; and the discharge of this function is committed to the lord chancellor by warrant under the sign manual of the king.[44] The English chancery jurisdiction in lunacy is therefore in theory distinct from the general chancery jurisdiction under the great seal, although the fact of insanity having once been adjudicated, the chancellor thereafter acts, in the superintendence of the lunatic's custodians, not under the king's sign manual, but by virtue of his general equity powers.[45] In the United States it seems to be clear that the courts of equity, in the absence of statutory provisions investing them with a lunacy jurisdiction, derive such a jurisdiction not from a personal sovereign but from the commonwealth ex necessitate, for the protection of the persons and property of the citizens;[46] but generally in the United States, the jurisdiction over insane persons and their estates is committed by statute either to the courts of equity as such, or to other courts exercising general probate jurisdiction.[47] To whatever tribunals, in different states, the

The finding of the jury is not conclusive upon the court, which may decide the collateral issue without submitting it to a jury. Alexander v. Alexander, 5 Ala. 517.

The finding, whether by court or jury, concludes only the matter in dispute; and the issue cannot be directed as to the insanity of the party at a particular time, upon an ex parte petition brought to determine that issue merely. jurisdiction in insanity may be committed, it is everywhere to be exercised by the application of the equitable principles which govern the courts of chancery under like circumstances; and generally the character of the committee, guardian, or conservator in the American courts is assimilated to that of the committee under the English system;[48] but a much wider jurisdiction as to the property of insane persons is vested in those American courts in which the authority over insane persons and their estates is derived from statute provisions than was exercised by the lord chancellor of England by virtue of his delegated prerogative, for the possession of the committee appointed by the chancellor was that of a mere bailiff or curator, and in the absence of statutory authority neither the court nor the committee could alienate the lunatic's property or satisfy the claims of his creditors, while the courts in most, if not all, of the United States may sell the lunatic's property and satisfy his debts.[49] An application for the appointment of a conservator for a lunatic domiciled in the state is not affected by proceedings pending in another state to inquire into his mental condition and set aside his conveyance of real property in the latter state.[50]

B. Venue.[54] The rule of the courts of chancery was that the commission in lunacy should be executed at or near the residence of the party,[55] and the principle of this rule is recognized in the modern statutory provisions that the proceedings are to be had in the county of the party's residence. But when the commission is to ascertain the insanity of one not a resident of the state the rule yields to necessity, and the commission may be executed in such county as may be most convenient.[56] Where the proceedings are not had under commissions, but the statute commits the insanity jurisdiction to the probate or other courts, the venue of the proceedings will generally be determined by the place of residence of the party.[57]

C. Lunacy Proceedings[58] — 1. In General. In the English court of chancery commissions in the nature of the ancient writs de lunatico inquirendo or de idiota inquirendo[59] issue upon a petition to the lord chancellor filed by the attorney-general or by a friend of the party and supported by affidavits;[60] and the practice is substantially the same in those American courts of chancery having insanity jurisdiction.[61] The issuing of a commission out of chancery is always discretionary, and the commission will be withheld if its execution would produce consequences detrimental to the party;[62] and mere weakness of mind or mere occasional or temporary unsoundness of mind arising from fortuitous causes is not ground for a commission,[63] unless its issuance is necessary for the protection of the public,[64] or of the person or estate of the party in question.[65] It seems that a

2. Who May Institute Proceedings. The proceedings may be instituted by a relative of the alleged lunatic,[67] or his legal guardian, if he has one;[68] but in the absence of enabling statutory provisions,[69] a mere stranger cannot sue out a commission, or be made a party to the proceedings.[70]

3. Notice and Appearance. Under the early English practice, notice of the commission in lunacy was not given as a matter of right to the party alleged to be insane, the proceedings being ex parte and not conclusive and the party having a right to traverse them; but on application notice might issue;[71] and since the general orders in lunacy of Nov. 7, 1853, an alleged lunatic is entitled to notice of proceedings as a matter of right.[72] In the United States, whatever the form of the proceedings for determining the direct issue of insanity, even though these be by an inquisition which the party may traverse, and whether or not the statute provides in terms for notice, it is said that "so important a proceeding as that of declaring a party a lunatic, and taking charge of his person and estate, should not be consummated without personal notice,"[73] and this view is sanctioned by the great weight of authority.[74] It is frequently required that notice

Contra.— Martin v. Motsinger, 130 Ind. 555, 30 N. E. 523; Medlock v. Cogburn, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 477.

An ex parte inquisition is invalid (Stafford v. Stafford, 1 Mart. (La.) 551), even must be served on the alleged lunatic's relatives, friends, guardian ad litem, or others.[75] In many states it is held that notice is a jurisdictional requisite of a where no notice is required (Martin v. Hotsinger, 130 Ind. 555, 30 N. E. 523).

If the alleged lunatic is not present in court, want of notice to him renders the judgment void on direct attack (Arrington v. Arrington, 32 Ark. 674; Taylor v. Moore, 112 Ky. 330, 65 S. W. 612, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1572), and this is so even though his personal presence has been dispensed with by the oath of two physicians as provided by statute (Stewart v. Taylor, 111 Ky. 247, 63 S. W. 783, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 577).

Although the party is not a resident of the state in which the commission issues, the court may require notice. Matter of Petit, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 174.

Presumption of notice.— On collateral attack it will be presumed that the court acquired jurisdiction of the person of the alleged incompetent, although the record does not show notice or appearance. Soules v. Robinson, 158 Ind. 97, 62 N. E. 999, 92 Am. St. Rep. 301 [reversing (App. 1901) 60 N. E. 726]; Gillespie v. Hauenstein, 72 Miss. 838, 17 So. 602; Gridley v. St. Francis Xavier College, 137 N. Y. 327, 33 N. E. 321; Willis v. Willis, 12 Pa. St. 159. Contra, McCurry v. Hooper, 12 Ala. 823, 46 Am. Dec. 280; Hathaway v. Clark, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 490.

Sufficiency of notice see Fore v. Fore, 44 Ala. 478; McGee v. Hayes, 127 Cal. 336, 59 Pac. 767, 78 Am. St. Rep. 57; Kelly v. Gardner, 76 S. W. 531, 25 Ky. L. Dispensing with notice.— Although in cases of confirmed and dangerous madness notice may be dispensed with, an order of court should be obtained dispensing with it. In re Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. 186. If notice is dispensed with, the reasons therefor must be fully spread upon the record. In re Marquis, 85 Mo. 615; Dutcher v. Hill, 29 Mo. 271, 77 Am. Dec. 572; State v. Jackson, 93 Mo. App. 516, 67 S. W. 880. The failure of the court to require notice to be given to the husband, wife, or one or more of the relatives of the lunatic, where sufficient reasons for dispensing therewith are not set forth in the petition or accompanying affidavit, does not deprive it of jurisdiction over the matter, but is a simple irregularity which may be cured or disregarded; and it is sufficient if, upon the hearing of a motion made by the alleged lunatic to set aside the order appointing the commission, all the parties interested have an opportunity to be heard. In re Demelt, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 480. Although the statute provides that production of the party in court may be dispensed with if the court is satisfied that he cannot be produced without injury to his health, it is still necessary that process be served on him in order to give the court jurisdiction. Jessup v. Jessup, 7 Ind. App. 573, 34 N. E. 1017. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2325, requiring notice to be given to the husband or wife of the party, or to one or more relatives, or to an officer named, unless reasons are shown for dispensing with it, does not do away with the necessity of notice to the party himself. In re Blewitt, 131 N. Y. 541, 30 N. E. 587, semble.

Subsequent notice after adjournments.— Where the party has due notice of the original proceedings and attends thereon and resists the application, and the case is adjourned from time to time, he is not entitled to further notice before passing a decree in the case. Davison v. Johonnot, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 388, 41 Am. Dec. 448.

Right to object to want of notice.— One who alleges that he is interested in lunacy proceedings by virtue of the fact that the alleged lunatic had transferred to him certain securities within the time overreached by the finding of lunacy cannot object to want of notice of the inquisition to the lunatic. Huidekoper's Case, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 394.

A recital in a finding and judgment that "due notice" was given is sufficient, if nothing appears to show that the notice was defective. Crow v. Meyersieck, 88 Mo. 411.

Amendment of record.— Where, on the application for the appointment of a guardian of an imbecile, a judgment is entered finding imbecility and appointing the guardian, but omitting to show notice to such imbecile, the omission may be supplied by an order nunc pro tunc, even after the term. In re Dickson, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 6, 18 Cinc. L. Bul. 37, Ohio Prob. 118.

75. In Georgia notice must be given to the three nearest adult relatives of the alleged lunatic; if the three nearest relatives are themselves petitioners for the appointment of a guardian, notice should be given to three of the next nearest relatives; if there are no adult relatives within the state except petitioners, then the ordinary should either require notice to be given to the alleged lunatic himself or designate by order a guardian ad litem to receive the notice for him. Morton v. Sims, 64 Ga. 298.

In Maine, where proceedings may begin by written complaint addressed to the municipal officers of a town, notice to one of such officers is sufficient (Gray v. Houlton, 65 Me. 521), and the town need not be notified (Insane Hospital v. Belgrade, 35 Me. 497).

In Michigan both the alleged lunatic and his next of kin must have notice of the hearing, but the proceedings will not be void merely because notice is not given to nonresidents, or to the guardian of a minor heir, valid inquisition of lunacy, and that the inquisition may accordingly be attacked in a collateral proceeding for want of notice;[76] but there are cases to the contrary.[77] It has been held that notice cannot be waived;[78] but want of notice is generally deemed cured where the party appears and contests the proceedings;[79] and an appearance of the party has been held to be a waiver of all irregularities in the proceedings.[80]

the minor himself being served with notice, and competent to understand it. Munger v. Kalamazoo County Prob. Judge, 86 Mich. 363, 49 N. W. 47. A brother of an alleged incompetent person who holds a mortgage belonging to the incompetent under an unrevoked power of attorney must be notified of an application for an appointment of a guardian for the incompetent. Partello v. Holton, 79 Mich. 372, 44 N. W. 619.

In New York the jurisdiction in lunacy of the county judge does not depend upon notice to all the next of kin of the party where there is no suggestion that he has suffered by want of such notice. In re Cook, 3 Silv. Sup. 2, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 720. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2325, when the application for the appointment of a committee is made by the husband or wife of the party, notice to a relative need not be given. Matter of Parke, 15 Misc. 662, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 1067, 25 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 196.

In Pennsylvania, Act June 13, 1836, § 6, requiring notice either to the party or to some near relatives or friends not concerned in the application, is not complied with when only relatives known to be hostile to the party are present at the hearing and none others were notified (Matter of Hinchman, Brightly 181 note, 7 Pa. L. J. 268); and a notice served upon one who is a friend of the alleged lunatic but a stranger to the proceedings is insufficient (Com. v. Groh, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 557). The act is mandatory in its requirement of notice to the party or to some other persons named, although it is discretionary with the court to decide whether notice other than to the party is necessary; but it is said that, when practicable, notice should be required to some of the next of kin or friends of the party. Brooks' Estate, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 430.

In Utah all persons interested in the proceeding are to be notified in such manner as the probate court shall order, and the order must specify the manner in which notice is to be given. Moshy v. Gisborn, 17 Utah 257, 54 Pac. 121.

76. Molton v. Henderson, 62 Ala. 426; McCurry v. Hooper, 12 Ala. 823, 46 Am. Dec. 280; Behrensmeyer v. Kreitz, 135 Ill. 591, 26 N. E. 704; In re Wellman, 3 Kan. App. 100, 45 Pac. 726; Hathaway v. Clark, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 490.

If the alleged lunatic is not present in court, want of notice to him renders the inquisition void on collateral attack. Arnett v. Owens, 65 S. W. 151, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1409.

77. Jordan v. Dickson, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 332, 20 Cinc. L. Bul. 360; Rogers v. Walker, 6 Pa. St. 371, 47 Am. Dec. 470.

Estoppel to attack.— Inquisition of lunacy cannot be objected to in a collateral proceeding as void for want of notice to the alleged lunatic after he has applied to the court to be relieved from the custody of the guardian appointed under the inquisition, on the ground that he has been restored to reason. Dutcher v. Hill, 2 Mo. 271, 77 Am. Dec. 572.

78. McGee v. Hayes, 127 Cal. 336, 59 Pac. 767, 78 Am. St. Rep. 57; Allen v. Barnwell, 120 Ga. 537, 48 S. E. 176; Yeomans v. Williams, 117 Ga. 800, 45 S. E. 73, holding that the required notice to the adult relatives of the party cannot be waived by them.

Waiver by appeal.— By executing a supersedeas bond and appealing to the circuit court from a judgment of the county court appointing a committee for a person found to be incompetent, the alleged lunatic waives invalidity of the process in the county court. Hendricks v. Settle, 107 Ky. 344, 53 S. W. 1051, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1058. Although proceedings commenced before a clerk of the superior court for the appointment of a guardian for an alleged lunatic are void for want of notice, yet where the alleged lunatic appeals to the superior court, that court acquires jurisdiction to determine his incompetency and appoint a guardian. In re Anderson, 132 N. C. 243, 43 S. E. 609.

W. 810; In re Whitenack, 3 N. J. Eq. 252.

This is especially true on collateral attack. Crow v. Meyersieck, 88 Mo. 411; Jordan v. Dickson, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 332, 20 Cinc. L. Bul. 360; Rogers v. Walker, 6 Pa. St. 371, 47 Am. Dec. 470.

Appearance by counsel.— The appearance of a lunatic by attorney is sufficient, it not being claimed that the appearance was unauthorized; and even an unauthorized appearance by the alleged lunatic in the circuit court is binding on the lunatic until set aside. An alleged lunatic cannot, on appeal from the decree of lunacy wherein he was represented by counsel, claim that he was incompetent to employ counsel. The prosecuting attorney is unauthorized to represent a lunatic in lunacy proceedings. Martin v. Motsinger, 130 Ind. 555, 30 N. E. 523. Compare Morton v. Sims, 64 Ga. 298.

4. Death of Party Pending Proceedings. Proceedings to have a party declared a lunatic abate on his death.[81]

5. Provisional Orders as to Person or Property of Party. The court may make provisional interlocutory orders, pending lunacy proceedings, to protect the party's person[82] or property,[83] or to provide for his support pending the proceedings,[84] or to allow him the means of defending the inquisition.[85] It has been held that lunacy proceedings are "pending," within this rule, as soon as the complaint is filed, although process has not been served.[86] Affidavits upon which the lunacy proceedings are founded may be used in aid of an application for a provisional order;[87] but counter affidavits negativing the sworn allegations of the applicant will not be received.[88] Such a provisional order cannot coexist with an order prohibiting the prosecution of the lunacy proceedings.[89]

6. Hearing or Trial. Unless the proceeding is otherwise regulated by statute,[90] when a commission in lunacy issuing out of chancery is to be executed, the commissioners issue their precept to the sheriff requiring him to summon a jury of the county to come before them at a certain time and place to inquire upon oath into the matters and things which shall be given them in charge.[91] The commission must have a return-day named therein.[92] A commission to ascertain the lunacy of a non-resident cannot be executed out of the state.[93] The court or commissioners and jury have a right to examine the party and to compel those having him in charge to produce him.[94] The court is not, however, confined to a trial by inspection and examination of the person but may admit other Eligibility of commissioners.— Under a statute which provides that one of the commissioners appointed to examine an alleged insane person "shall be a physician," the physician must be one who has been licensed as such by the state board of physicians. Norwood v. Hardy, 17 Ga. 595.

Number of commissioners.— Under the act regulating proceedings de lunatico inquirendo, which requires the commission to be directed to eighteen persons, any twelve of whom shall execute it, the report of the commission is not vitiated by the fact that thirteen of the members act thereon. Field v. Lucas, 21 Ga. 447, 69 Am. Dec. 465.

The commission is subject to the direction of the court as to the manner in which it shall proceed. Matter of Baird, 8 N. Y. St. 493.

Practice in regard to jury.— The number of jurors is not limited to twelve. In re Comfort, 63 N. J. Eq. 377, 53 Atl. 133. If twelve out of a greater number concur, the verdict will be sufficient (Ex p. Wragg, 5 Ves. Jr. 450, 31 Eng. Reprint 677); but where proceedings are begun before a greater number of jurors than is necessary, it is irregular to continue them before a part of the jury only (Tebout's Case, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 211). If one juror refuses to sign the report, this is equivalent to a disagreement. Marple's Case, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 310. Where the statute prescribes a jury of six, but on appeal trial was had in the circuit court before a jury of twelve, according to the practice in that court, this was held not to be error. Return of evidence.— The evidence taken before a jury sitting under a commission of lunacy need not be taken in writing and returned with the inquisition. In re Covenhoven, 1 N. J. Eq. 19. See, however, Davis v. Norvell, 87 Tenn. 36, 9 S. W. 193.

The fact that a part only of the jurors visit the party for personal examination of him does not render the proceedings invalid. De Hart v. Condit, 51 N. J. Eq. 611, 28 Atl. 603, 40 Am. St. Rep. 545.

evidence.[95] In some states it is necessary that the alleged lunatic be present at the trial,[96] except in certain cases when his presence may be dispensed with.[97] The party has a right to be present at the execution of the commission,[98] and make his defense by counsel,[99] and examine witnesses,[1] and testify in his own behalf.[2] The inquiry in some states is simply as to whether there is incompetency at the time of executing the commission.[3] One who has instituted a proceeding to declare another of unsound mind and to procure the appointment of a guardian is not entitled to dismiss the proceeding at his pleasure.[4]

7. Return and Finding. The commission, verdict, and return must be consistent on the face of the record, and so the verdict must be in the words of the commission or equivalent words.[5] The return should find distinctly in order to be valid that the party is insanæ mentis, either by the use of the generic words "unsound mind," or the specific words "lunatic," "idiot," or the like, or the defining words of the statute which confers the jurisdiction.[6] Whatever the statutory definitions of incapacity in different jurisdictions, in all cases in which the procedure is in the form of inquisition and jury finding thereon, it is essential that the verdict or finding shall define, substantially in accordance with the statutory definition, the disability with which the party is found to be affected.[7] In some states the return must state of what the lunatic's estate consists;[8] and in some cases the jury are required to return the inquisition under their hands and seals.[9] It has been held that a statute providing that the proceedings of the county court shall be kept and entered in separate books is only directory; and an order or judgment of said court in an inquisition of lunacy, entered in any of its books of record, is valid.[10]

In Missouri the reason why such attendance was not required must be fully specified in the record. State v. Jackson, 93 Mo. App. 516, 67 S. W. 880.

Presumption of regularity.— Although the record of a lunacy proceeding does not show whether the alleged lunatic was produced in court or whether on account of probable injury to his health his personal appearance was dispensed with, yet on collateral attack it will be presumed that he was either produced in court or that his personal appearance was duly dispensed with. Hutts v. Hutts, 62 Ind. 214.

Estoppel.— One who allows nearly six years to elapse without objection after having been adjudged an incompetent is not entitled to a writ of mandamus to compel the setting aside of such adjudication on jurisdictional grounds, thus affecting injuriously those who have acted in reliance upon the jurisdiction; but he is entitled to a hearing on the merits, as that he has since become competent. J. The fact that only part of the jurors visited the alleged lunatic for personal examination of him is not sufficient ground for setting aside the inquisition. De Hart v. Condit, 51 N. J. Eq. 611, 28 Atl. 603, 40 Am. St. Rep. 545.

Although the affidavits do not come quite up to the rules and practice in a court of chancery, an inquisition under a writ de lunatico inquirendo by which the affidavits are entirely confirmed will not on that ac-or unsatisfactory;[15] and the same is true where material error occurred in the admission or rejection of evidence,[16] where unavoidable casualty or misfortune has prevented the party from defending,[17] where the jury have disagreed,[18] or where, after the lapse of a reasonable time, an evident change appears in the subject's condition,[19] or where the original commission has been abandoned.[20] The refusal to grant a commission is no bar to an application for another commission on matters since appearing.[21] A person not interested in the proceedings cannot move to quash the inquisition.[22] A petition by an adjudged lunatic to set aside the adjudication will be dismissed, where he refuses to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court.[23] In some states, on the granting of a new trial, the procedure may be changed from a trial before a commissioner and a jury to a trial by jury at a trial term of the court.[24]

Right to object to refusal to vacate proceedings.— The lunatic's motion to vacate proceedings adjudging him insane having asked for alternative relief, namely, that the proceedings should be vacated or that petitioner be permitted to traverse the inquisition, which latter relief or a relief more favorable was awarded him, he cannot object to the refusal of the court to vacate the proceedings. In re Blewitt, 131 N. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.— If a finding is against the weight of the evidence, the court may set it aside (In re Lindsley, (N. J. Ch. 1886) 3 Atl. 515; Lawrence's Case, 28 N. J. Eq. 331; In re Collins, 18 N. J. Eq. 253. Contra, In re Weaver, 116 Pa. St. 225, 9 Atl. 323), or refuse to confirm it (Matter of Preston, 43 Misc. (N. Y.) 550, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 517). If the testimony upon the question of insanity is contradictory, the finding will not be set aside as against the weight of the evidence, there being testimony which, if believed, would justify the finding. In re Davenport, 63 N. J. Eq. 342, 50 Atl. 441. In passing on the issue of interdiction the court will not be controlled by the opinions of experts, but, giving to them a respectful consideration, and to every fact bearing on the issue its legitimate weight, will form and decree its own conclusions; and the court will guard with peculiar care the alleged lunatic from interference springing from a hostile motive, and will weigh with more precision the evidence of lunacy if the person by whom it is tendered appears to be actuated by a sinister intent. Francke v. His Wife, 29 La. Ann. 302.

Where no change has taken place in the situation of the lunatic since the execution of the commission, it must be a very clear case of mistake or of undue prejudice on the part of the jury to authorize the court to discharge an inquisition. Matter of Russell, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 38.

Necessity of traverse or feigned issue.— The court of chancery has a right to discharge an inquisition of lunacy upon a mere examination of the alleged lunatic in connection with the evidence produced before the jury, without subjecting him to the expense of an issue or a traverse, where, upon such an examination and evidence, it is evident that the jury erred. Matter of Russell, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 38. But the court of common pleas cannot set aside an inquisition finding the fact of lunacy on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding; the only method by which the validity of the inquisition on such question may be contested is by a traverse and trial by jury. In re Weaver, 116 Pa. St. 225, 9 Atl. 323.

The court will not discharge an inquisition upon ex parte affidavits contradicting the finding of the jury, without any excuse being given by the party for neglecting to produce the deponents as witnesses before the commissioners. Matter of Russell, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 38.

16. In re Dey, 9 N. J. Eq. 181; Miller's Case, 27 Pa. Co. Ct. 49.

Harmless error.— A court of chancery will not interfere with the verdict of a competent jury under a writ de lunatico inquirendo, even when unlawful evidence was adduced before them, provided that it appears that such evidence did not probably influence them in finding their verdict. In re Dey, 9 N. upon the inquisition were ex parte, the alleged lunatic had the right to traverse the inquisition,[25] and it is held that any party in interest has the same right.[26] But generally in the United States, since the proceedings are not ex parte and the refusal of the traverse cannot abridge the constitutional rights of the party, it is within the discretion of the court to permit a traverse or feigned issue in lunacy proceedings,[27] the court being first satisfied, when the application for the traverse is in the name of the lunatic, that he is capable of understanding the nature and object of the application;[28] and when the traverse is petitioned for, whether by the alleged lunatic or another, the party is to be brought into court or examined by a master in order that the court may be satisfied that the application is made in good faith and that the traverse is desired by him.[29] Upon a traverse being granted, the court will proceed to inform its conscience, either by inspection of the lunatic or by ordering an issue to be made up for trial in a court of law, the latter being the most usual and proper course.[30] It is discretionary with the court,

Who may file traverse.—The right has been said to be within the discretion of the court to grant (Yauger v. Skinner, 14 N. J. Eq. 389); but a mere stranger has no right to traverse the inquisition (Rorback v. Van Blascom, 20 N. J. Eq. 461; In re Covenhoven, 1 N. J. Eq. 19; Armstrong v. Short, 8 N. C. 11). A brother of the party has been permitted to traverse (In re Dickinson, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 96), and so has one claiming as grantee of the lunatic whose title was overreached by the finding of insanity (Matter of Christie, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 242). By statute in Pennsylvania "every person aggrieved" may traverse the inquisition, and this has been held to include the lunatic's grantee whose title was affected by the finding (Wolf's Case, 195 Pa. St. 438, 46 Atl. 72; Davidson's Appeal, 170 Pa. St. 96, 32 Atl. 561; In re Gumaer, 5 Lanc. L. Rev. St. 514, 54 Atl. 328).

Death of lunatic.— Where a person, after having been adjudged a lunatic, conveys land, his subsequent death is no bar to a subsequent traverse of the inquisition by the grantee. In re Owens, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 850 [affirmed in 19 N. Y. Suppl. 472].

Although it is not a matter of course to allow a feigned issue in a lunacy case when asked for, it is proper to allow it whenever the court entertains a reasonable doubt as to the justice of the finding of the jury upon the execution of the commission. De Hart v. Condit, 51 N. J. Eq. 611, 28 Atl. 603, 40 Am. St. Rep. 545; Matter of Russell, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 38.

Laches.— In proceedings by traverse of the inquisition (Hambright's Case, 10 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 161) the court may in its discretion allow it to be filed after the expiration of the time within which, under the statute, it may be filed as matter of right (In re Benedict, 3 Kulp (Pa.) 96); but a traverse will not be allowed on petition of respondent filed two years after the verdict and without satisfactory explanation of the delay in making the application (In re Slater, 33 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 144).

The court of probate has no jurisdiction in cases of lunacy to give relief to persons aggrieved by the inquisition by granting leave to traverse the same. Such jurisdiction is in the court of common pleas. Walker v. Russell, 10 S. C. 82.

28. Matter of Christie, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 242.

Right to open and close.— On the hearing of a traverse, as the burden of proof is on pending the traverse, to let the original proceedings stand until the inquiry is finished.[31]

10. Conclusiveness and Effect of Adjudication — a. Adjudication of Sanity. A finding in lunacy proceedings that a person was sane on a particular day does not, in an action on a note subsequently made by that person wherein he pleads insanity as a defense, cast on him the burden of showing that he became insane after that day, since it is immaterial when the insanity commenced, the issue being whether the person was insane when he executed the note;[32] nor is a verdict finding that a person was sane when a petition for a guardian was filed and that he is sane at the time of the verdict conclusive evidence of his sanity in the interval.[33]

b. Adjudication of Insanity[34] — (I) As Between Parties to Proceeding. An inquisition of lunacy is conclusive proof, as between the parties to it, of the existence of insanity at the time of the finding;[35] but not of the existence of insanity at a later time.[36]

(II) As Against Strangers to Proceeding — (A) Insanity at Time of Finding. It has been both asserted[37] and denied[38] that an inquisition finding a person insane at the time thereof is conclusive, as against third persons, of the fact of insanity at that time.

(B) Insanity Before Time of Finding. An inquisition finding that a person is insane at the time of the finding has been held to afford no evidence that he was insane at a previous time.[39] In any event it raises no presumption of insanity at an earlier date.[40] If, however, the inquisition overreaches an anterior period of time during which the person is found to have been insane, it raises a presumption of the existence of insanity during that period,[41] which presumption, the commonwealth and the presumption is in favor of sanity, relator has the right to open and close. Com. v. Haskell, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 491.

(c) Insanity After Time of Finding.[43] An adjudication of insanity substitutes for the general presumption of sanity a presumption of insanity, and accordingly the party's subsequent civil acts are prima facie invalid.[44] This presumption is rebuttable at common law;[45] but in some states, by force of statute, evidence of sanity at a later time during the continuance of the adjudication is not admissible, and civil acts transacted by the lunatic before he has been adjudged to be restored to reason or allowed by court to resume control of Conclusiveness as to title to lunatic's lands. — The title to lands is not involved in lunacy proceedings, and consequently an inquisition overreaching an anterior period which finds that the title to lands conveyed by the lunatic within that period remains in him is of no effect as against the grantee. Rebuttal of presumption.— It requires the clearest and most satisfactory proof to show that a person was of sound mind at a time subsequent to an inquisition declaring him insane. Field v. Lucas, 21 Ga. 447, 68 Am. Dec. 465. Where a man who has been adjudged of unsound mind afterward marries a woman with whom he lives for more than thirty years in the relation of husband and wife, the presumption of continued insanity will not prevail as against the presumption in favor of the legality of the marriage. Castor v. Davis, 120 Ind. 231, 22 N. E. 110. If the record does not show the jurisdictional facts, the adjudication of a county judge on an inquisition of lunacy is a nullity, and as the jurisdiction in such proceedings is special and limited no presumption in favor of the jurisdiction will be indulged on collateral attack.[53] Members of an inquest cannot be permitted to explain away the legal effect or to contradict the tenor of the report in which they joined.[54]

11. REVIEW. The mode of reviewing a finding of lunacy which has been confirmed by the court out of which the commission issued is governed by statute and varies in the different states.[55] It has been held accordingly that the adjudication may be reviewed on appeal,[56] writ of error,[57] certiorari,[58] or action to review the proceedings.[59] An appeal does not lie from the refusal of the commissioners to entertain a motion for rehearing in a case where they have adjudged a person insane;[60] and the refusal of the court to issue a commission

cannot be reviewed by a court of appellate jurisdiction, in the absence of a statute providing for such a review;[61] nor can a petitioner in a proceeding to have a person adjudged insane appeal from a judgment of sanity,[62] although costs are taxed against him.[63] A judgment of the common pleas quashing an inquisition of lunacy is revisable on certiorari, but not on writ of error.[64] An order directing a new trial after a verdict in favor of the alleged lunatic will not be reversed on appeal where the evidence is conflicting.[65]

12. Costs.[66] In the absence of statutory regulation,[67] the matter of the allowance of costs in original lunacy proceedings rests in the equitable discretion of the court having jurisdiction,[68] and the same rule obtains in respect of costs upon a traverse[69] or supersedeas[70] of the inquisition. Where there is a finding of insanity, the costs of the inquiry are ordinarily to be paid by the insane person or his estate, it being considered that these are in the nature of necessary expenses incurred for the benefit of the party and for which he or his estate is impliedly bound.[71] Where the proceedings result in a finding of sanity, costs will not be allowed as of course against the prosecutor, if the proceedings were commenced in good faith and for the supposed benefit of the alleged lunatic;[72] but where

Apportionment.— Where the jury do not find that respondent is a lunatic, but by reason of age, ignorance, and feebleness of mind and body deem her unfit to manage her estate judiciously, no committee should be appointed, and it is not an abuse of the court's discretion to divide the costs between relator and respondent. Com. v. Reeves, 140 Pa. St. 258, 21 Atl. 315.

A finding of lunacy is prima facie evidence that petitioner proceeded in good faith, although a jury subsequently, upon the trial of a feigned issue, finds the other way; and the costs of the first proceeding will not be assessed against petitioner. Matter of Giles, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 638.

D. Guardianship[81] — 1. Appointment, Eligibility, and Qualification of Guardian — a. Persons For Whom Guardian May Be Appointed. Generally speaking the test of whether a guardian should be appointed for the estate of a person is whether mental unsoundness exists to such a degree that he is incapable of conducting the ordinary affairs of life, so that to leave his property in his possession and control would render him liable to become the victim of his own folly or of the fraud of others.[82] It is not necessary in most states that the person should be an idiot or a lunatic in the strict sense of those terms;[83] but in some states the law is otherwise.[84] The fact that a person is married does not prevent the appointment of a guardian for him or her on the ground of insanity.[85]

b. Eligibility and Qualification — (i) Who May Be Appointed.[86] Any competent person may be appointed guardian of an insane person.[87] In choosing a guardian there is no rule of law which prefers relatives over strangers, or the reverse, but the court will do whatever is best for the lunatic.[88] If it appears that the heirs at law or next of kin of the party are most likely to protect his property from loss, one of these will be appointed;[89] but it is discretionary with the court to appoint a stranger.[90] Where the lunatic is a married woman and her husband is a suitable person for the office of guardian, he is usually preferred for the office to a third person,[91] and the same consideration will favor the appointment of the wife as guardian of her insane husband.[92] The father of the lunatic, having the custody of his estate, will be preferred.[93] Generally a person non-resident in the state of the lunatic's domicile will not be appointed his guardian or committee;[94] but this rule does not obtain when there are substantial reasons for making such an appointment, as where a foreign guardian seeks to obtain appointment as guardian of his ward's property within the state, and no objection appears.[95]

d. Procedure[99] — (I) Conditions Precedent to Appointment — (A) Adjudication of Incompetency. To authorize the appointment of a guardian for an alleged incompetent person, his incompetency must in most states first be adjudicated by the tribunal having jurisdiction in such cases.[1] Accordingly a motion to appoint a certain person committee of an alleged incompetent will be denied where it appears that a commission is in force at the time of the hearing.[2]

the alleged incompetent;[10] but authorizes any near heir presumptive to make the application.[11]

(III) PETITION OR APPLICATION. A petition for the appointment of a guardian must allege facts showing that the person in question is a proper subject for guardianship;[12] and in some states it must disclose who are the relatives and next of kin of the alleged incompetent.[13] It must be verified.[14] An amendment of the petition may be allowed in a proper case.[15] A petition in probate by a friend of a non compos, alleging an adjudication by the court of the person's insanity, and that the person appointed guardian refused to qualify, gives the court jurisdiction after notice and hearing to appoint another guardian.[16]

(IV) HEARING OR TRIAL.[17] A temporary guardian may be appointed without a hearing.[18] It is no objection to a petition for the appointment of a committee of a person confined in a state institution that it was not noted for the first day of the term.[19] In order to determine upon the choice of a guardian the court may take proof[20] or order a reference.[21] In proceedings to have a guardian appointed on account of extreme old age and incapacity to manage affairs, mental incapacity must be alleged and proved in order that the court may acquire jurisdiction; the jury must be directed to find upon the specific issues touching this question, and it is error in the court to instruct them to find a general verdict for or against the petition.[22]

(V) ORDER OF APPOINTMENT—(A) In General. The omission of the name of a guardian for the incompetent person in the decree appointing him is a mere clerical error, which may be corrected by the court at any time.[23] It is no ground for vacating a decree appointing a guardian of a wife as insane that her husband, after making the application and before the decree, joined with her in a conveyance of land, and represented in conversation that the application was abandoned;[24]

and a petition in the circuit court alleging that defendant, "by hook or crook," and "without her knowledge and consent," was appointed plaintiff's committee in the county court is insufficient to warrant the setting aside of the order of appointment.[25] An appeal lies from an order rescinding the appointment of a temporary administrator for an insane person.[26]

(B) Conclusiveness and Effect[27]—(1) GENERAL RULES. A decree appointing a guardian for an alleged incompetent person is a determination of his incompetency,[28] and is usually held conclusive as to the insanity[29] both at the time of the decree[30] and subsequent thereto.[31] The disability arising from a decree of appointment, so far as it depends upon the action of the court, begins only upon the qualification of the guardian.[32] A trustee holding funds for the benefit of an idiot is not ipso facto substituted by the appointment of a committee of such idiot.[33]

(2) COLLATERAL ATTACK.[34] The appointment of a guardian may be attacked in a collateral action on jurisdictional grounds,[35] but not on the ground of error or irregularity in the guardianship proceedings.[36]

2. Termination of Guardianship — a. Resignation of Guardian. While the court has power to accept the resignation of a guardian or committee,[41] yet he will not be discharged as a matter of course, upon his own application, merely because the execution of the trust has become unpleasant to him,[42] even though the parties in interest consent.[43] A guardian who wishes to resign his trust must give notice thereof.[44]

b. Removal of Guardian — (I) Jurisdiction. The probate court has original jurisdiction, in some jurisdictions, of an action for the removal of the guardian of an insane person.[45]

(II) Grounds. The committee or guardian of a lunatic may be removed for any reason which renders his retention in the trust harmful or dangerous to the person or estate of the ward, or inimical to his best interests.[46]

(III) Procedure. Where a guardian is sought to be removed, he must be in a pending habeas corpus proceeding, and that the committee should pay costs of the proceedings in which the order was made, the acceptance of funds under such order by the counsel did not waive the right to appeal from the order. Matter of Magin, 100 N. Y. App. Div. 230, 91 N. Y. Suppl. 814.

Who may appeal.— One who claims the property of an alleged incompetent by virtue of a transfer from her is a person aggrieved by the appointment of a guardian for her, within Wis. Rev. Where a sister appeals from a decree of the probate court appointing a guardian to her sister as a person of unsound mind, and does not allege that she is an heir of the ward, it not appearing affirmatively that she is interested in the ward's estate, she is not a person "aggrieved," and hence is not entitled to appeal. Discretion of lower court.— The power to appoint a committee for a lunatic is a discretionary one, and its exercise by the chancellor is not reviewable, whether he regards the wishes of those interested in the lunatic's estate or not. In re Colvin, 3 Md. Ch. 278. The discretion vested in the district judge in relation to fixing the bonds of a curator of an interdicted person is a legal discretion, and may in a proper case be revised by the supreme court on appeal; but if parties wish to question the exercise of this discretionary power by the district judge, they should place on file testimony to show that the judge was governed by an unnecessary caution toward the party giving bond. In re Rochon, 15 La. notified thereof,[47] and be allowed to answer and contest the case on the hearing.[48] The court may in its discretion act on information given it by one who is not entitled to petition for the removal of a guardian.[49] It has been held that an appeal lies from an order removing a guardian,[50] but an order denying a motion to remove a guardian is not appealable.[51] One who petitions for the removal of a guardian may be allowed costs even though the petition is denied.[52]

c. Revocation of Letters on Restoration of Ward to Reason[53] — (i) In General. Restoration of an adjudged lunatic to reason is ground for revoking the letters of guardianship and discharging his committee or guardian and restoring to him his liberty and estate.[54] The disability imposed on a person by the appointment of a guardian for him as an incompetent is removed by an order discharging the guardian on proof of the ward's restoration to sanity;[55] and in some states the guardianship is terminated ipso facto by an adjudication of restoration to reason.[56]

Test of restoration to reason.— The guardianship of a person of unsound mind cannot be discontinued unless he is so far restored to reason as to be capable of understanding the ordinary affairs of life (Cochran v. Amsden, 104 Ind. 282, 3 N. E. 934; Matter of Brugh, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 193, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 551); and the burden is on petitioner to show such restoration (Ex p. Thompson, 17 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 183). A commission in lunacy will not be superseded where the testimony shows that petitioner is liable at any moment to be excited beyond his control, that he requires constant supervision and care, that his property may at any time be squandered, and that he is in fact an insane man with lucid intervals. Matter of Helmbold, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 424.

Rights of creditors of estate.— When an insane person regains his health and becomes capable of managing his affairs, the guardian may be discharged, and a settlement had between him and his ward, notwithstanding a pending claim against the estate; and the guardian need not retain any portion of the funds in his hands for the payment of the same. (11) Procedure. The lunatic himself may institute a proceeding for revocation of the letters of guardianship on the ground that he is restored to reason.[57] Such an application is not a new proceeding; it is a continuation of the original guardianship proceeding;[58] but notice of the application must be given.[59] The mode of trial of the issue of restoration to sanity varies in different jurisdictions.[60] If the trial is before a jury, and they find against petitioner, they should state in their verdict that he is of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his estate.[61] If it appears that the former lunatic is restored to sanity, the court may restore his estate to him without superseding the commission;[62] and the court may in a proper case suspend the commission temporarily.[63] But a commission cannot be superseded as to the person of the lunatic on the ground of his restoration to sanity, and at the same time be continued in force as against persons accountable for the lunatic's estate;[64] and it has been held that where separate committees have been appointed for a lunatic's person and estate respectively, a petition does not lie to obtain a discharge of the committee of the person alone.[65] The death of a lunatic is a bar to a proceeding to supersede the commission on the ground of his recovery prior to his death;[66] and if such proceeding has been commenced before his death, it abates on that event.[67] An appeal lies from an order refusing to revoke letters of guardianship on the ground of restoration to sanity.[68] The costs of an application to supersede the commission on the ground of the ward's restoration to sanity may be allowed in the discretion of the court.[69]

d. Death of Guardian. Where two or more persons are appointed a joint committee of a lunatic, their trust ceases on the death of any one of them.[70]

e. Death of Ward.[71] Upon the death of the insane person, the functions of his committee or guardian cease so far as the active management of his estate is concerned,[72] and no order or direction will thereafter be made by the court except as incidental to its authority to compel an accounting and take the fund into custody, if necessary.[73] Chancery will not administer the fund even for the benefit of creditors or opposing claimants,[74] but will order it to be paid over to the personal representative of the deceased lunatic.[75]

(holding that on an application, at the instance of a lunatic, to supersede the commission, where the court is convinced that there is probable cause, or even a doubtful case, it has discretionary power to award reasonable costs and expenses to be charged upon the lunatic's estate, although the application proves unsuccessful); Matter of McClean, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 440 (where the court directed a feigned issue to try the question of lunacy, but, being convinced of the lunacy of petitioner, directed the expense to be paid by the lunatic or his friends, and not by his estate, principally acquired by the skill and industry of his wife and barely sufficient for the maintenance of herself and her children).

Attorney's fees.— The court may allow attorney's fees incurred on a hearing of the insane person's application to supersede the commission to be paid out of his estate. Kelly v. Kelly, 72 Minn. 19, 74 N. W. 899. But where an attorney was retained by a person who had been insane a number of years to institute proceedings to supersede a commission of lunacy, and the attorney, who had known the insane person for a long time and knew him to be insane and his mental condition not improved, commenced proceedings without consultation with the committee of the lunatic or any member of his family, and the proceedings were unsuccessful, the court refused to allow the attorney any sum in payment of his services. In re Beckwith, 3 Hun (N. And the supreme court, as successor of the chancellor and the court of chancery, has, under its general authority over the persons and estates of lunatics, jurisdiction to compel the committee of a lunatic, on the latter's decease, to account to his administrator, although such committee was appointed by the court of common pleas of New York city; any jurisdiction that may have been conferred on the latter court by statute over the committee does not extend beyond the death of the lunatic. 3. Authority of Guardian.[76] The powers of a guardian of an insane person appointed by a court of probate are very generally assimilated, both by statute and judicial construction, to those of the guardian of an infant.[77] He generally becomes substituted for his ward, with reference to all his interests.[78] However, he cannot bind the ward by a personal contract.[79] A conservator has a right to enter the dwelling-house of his ward, without his permission and against his will, to take an inventory of the property of the ward, or to attend to any other duties of his office that require such entry.[80]

4. Accounting and Settlement by Guardian — a. Judicial Account and Settlement — (i) General Rules. The duty of a committee of an insane person appointed by a court of chancery in respect of accounting is generally like that of a receiver or trustee in equity,[81] and the liability of guardians, conservators, or curators appointed by the probate courts, in the matter of their accounts, is assimilated to that of guardians of minors.[82] In the settlement of accounts, whether in the courts of equity or of probate, equitable rules will be applied. The accounting party will not be allowed to make any profit, as such, out of his trust; nor will he be accountable for losses not arising out of his negligence, malversation, or fraud.[83] He may be charged simple interest upon balances found against him;[84] but not upon sums for the detention of which he is not responsible, as pending controversies between creditors as to their disposition.[85] A committee or guardian may, on the one hand, include in his account a debt due from the lunatic to himself,[86] and he must, on the other hand, return in his inventory a debt due from him to the ward.[87] The guardian should be allowed his proper disbursements,[88]

(II) PROCEDURE.[92] Where lunacy jurisdiction is vested in the probate court, that court has jurisdiction of an action to require the guardian to account,[93] even after he has gone out of office;[94] and where a minor's guardian becomes insane, his guardian may settle his accounts in the probate court.[95] A committee of the estate of a lunatic, like a receiver, is an officer of the court, and cannot, during the lifetime of the lunatic, be called upon to account in another court.[96] Where the commission has issued out of chancery, the proper mode of proceeding for an accounting is by petition.[97] The personal representative of a deceased lunatic is entitled to petition for an accounting by the guardian.[98] Heirs[99] or next of kin[1] ward was found to be sane); Davidson v. Pope, 82 Va. 747, 1 S. E. 117.

Allowances for support of ward and family. — Where the committee, by authority of the court, applies the estate in support of the persons named in the finding as the wife and children, the fact that such persons are in reality the mistress and illegitimate children of the lunatic does not disentitle the committee to credit for the amounts so expended. Halsey's Appeal, 120 Pa. St. 209, 13 Atl. 934. So a charge made by a guardian for his ward's board at an insane asylum is proper if the ward's estate is sufficient to justify the expenditure; and such charge should not be disallowed because the asylum bill has not been paid, as the guardian is personally liable for such bill. Corcoran v. Allen, 11 R. I. 567. Where, however, on a mesne accounting, it appeared that a trust fund for the lunatic's support, in the hands of the committee, was not exhausted, a claim by the committee for the lunatic's support was disallowed. Clark v. Crout, 34 S. C. 417, 13 S. E. 602. And an account receipted for the board of the lunatic is not a sufficient voucher, without proving that the services were rendered, the money paid, and the charge reasonable. Disbursement before appointment. — Necessary and proper disbursements made by the guardian or committee before his appointment may be allowed upon his accounting. Matter of Forkel, 8 N. Y. App. Div. 397, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 847.

Resisting revocation of guardianship. — The reasonable expenses reasonably incurred in good faith by the guardian of an insane person in resisting the application for a revocation of the guardianship on the ground of his restoration to sanity are to be allowed to him in the settlement of his guardianship account. Palmer v. Palmer, 38 N. H. 418.

In transporting the lunatic from place to place, it is for the guardian to select the cheapest mode consistent with the comfort and safety of the lunatic. If the public conveyance is suitable, and cheaper than a private one, it is his duty to take it. Alexander v. Alexander, 8 Ala. 796.

The value of the board of a lunatic depends upon his condition and the care, attention, and watchfulness necessary to be bestowed upon him, to be ascertained by proof. Declarations of persons "that they would not board him for five hundred dollars a year" is not proof that it was worth that sum. Alexander v. Alexander, 8 Ala. 796.

Sufficiency of evidence. — In an action to settle the account of the guardian of a lunatic, the facts as to each item must be shown, and it must appear that all expenditures were legal. McLean v. Breese, 109 N. C. 564, 13 S. E. 910.

Credits for payments by committee after lunatic's death. — Where the committee had paid one of the persons entitled his share out of the fund remaining on the lunatic's death, it was held, in an action by the lunatic's administrator against the committee, that the latter should be credited in his account with the sum so paid (Davidson v. Pope, 82 Va. 747, 1 S. E. 117); and so where a curator had paid out of the fund just debts incurred for his interdict (In re Onorato, 46 La. Ann. 73, 14 So. 299).

are not entitled to file the petition, unless the personal representative refuses to do so.[2] They may be necessary parties to the accounting under some circumstances, however,[3] and they may except to the guardian's account.[4] The next of kin and creditors of a deceased lunatic are not entitled to representation on an application by the committee for an accounting, where an administrator of the lunatic's estate has been appointed.[5] Ordinarily the statute of limitations does not run against a proceeding by a guardian for an accounting and for the collection of moneys due him from the estate until he has been discharged from his trust.[6] An order of the court of equity appointing a committee for a lunatic and authorizing the committee to retain the entire annual interest of the lunatic's estate for his support and maintenance is no bar to an action to require the committee to account for profits subsequently made by the labor of his ward;[7] but an order of court made after judgment against an idiot directing the committee to pay it will prevent the judgment creditor from thereafter maintaining an action against the committee for an accounting as to the estate under his control.[8] An agreement in compromise of an action brought by the next friend of a lunatic against his committee for an accounting of the trust estate, which was not submitted to and approved by the court, is not a bar to an action by the administrator of the lunatic against the administrator of the committee involving the same matter.[9] Where the widow and children of a deceased insane person did not appeal from the settlement of the account of his guardian by the probate court, they cannot afterward, upon objection to the same person's account as administrator of the deceased, have it reopened.[10] In some states an order settling the accounts of a guardian or committee is appealable.[11] Ordinarily the costs of an accounting, even after the decease of the lunatic, are to be borne by his estate.[12]

(III) Conclusiveness and Effect.[13] It has been held that while the settlement of the final account of a committee or guardian is conclusive, in an action against him, of the amount in his hands,[14] it is not a judgment such as will support

In New York the order of the court of common pleas, made on the referee's report, closing the accounts as they were found at that time, being a matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of that court, is binding and conclusive, and the accounting in the supreme court must be limited to the transactions of the committee subsequent to that order. Butler v. Jarvis, 51 Hun 248, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 137.

In Pennsylvania the confirmation of a committee's triennial statement is conclusive only as to the distribution then made; and the allowance, without objection, of a payment on a claim barred by limitation is not equivalent to a judgment of law, so as to prevent the lunatic, when restored to reason, from pleading the statute on audit of the committee's final account for distributing the funds on hand. In re Raeder, 7 Kulp 275.

In Virginia a confirmed report of an ex parte settlement of the accounts of a committee of a lunatic can be surcharged or falsified only by a direct action within the proper time for that purpose. Carter v. Edmonds, 80 Va. 58.

Fraud vitiates a settlement (Warfield v. Warfield, 74 Iowa 184, 37 N. W. 144, semble), but only so far as the fraud extends to the different items of the account (Bonner v. Evans, 89 Ga. 656, 15 S. E. 906).

Pleading.— A petition against a guardian of a lunatic attacking returns made by him to the court of ordinary which have been examined and allowed by the court should point out specifically the items of the returns on which the attack is made, and as to each should disclose the cause or ground of the attack, and not merely allege that the return for such and such a year is unlawful as to a specific amount. Bonner v. Evans, 89 Ga. 656, 15 S. E. 906.

Limitations.— In West Virginia there is no statute of limitations as to actions to falsify the report of the committee of a lunatic. Trowbridge v. Stone, 42 W. Va. 454, 26 S. E. 363.

And where, in a settlement by the agent of a lunatic with her committee, a certain sum is found due the lunatic, and in less than three months thereafter the committee settles with the lunatic for a smaller sum, without a reasonable explanation for such settlement, the committee will be held accountable for the difference. d. Liability of Intermeddlers. Chancery has jurisdiction to compel an accounting by one who, without authority, assumes to act as guardian of an insane person.[26]

5. Compensation of Guardian[27] — a. General Rules. Under the English chancery practice, the committee of a lunatic received no compensation as such for his services, and any allowance made to him was for the benefit of the lunatic's estate.[28] In America, however, the committee or guardian is generally allowed compensation for his services in the discretion of the court,[29] although the ward delivers to his successor a bond due to the lunatic's estate by the successor, he is discharged, by the latter's acceptance of the bond, from all liability for having originally taken insufficient security for or granted undue indulgence on the debt. Joyner v. Cooper, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 199.

24. Matter of Killick, 4 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 89, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 360, holding that it is the duty of the committee to turn over to the administrator of the ward his own notes found among the papers of the lunatic, although barred by limitation at the time of his appointment as such committee.

25. Asley v. Holman, 15 S. b. Procedure. The compensation of a committee for services rendered the lunatic's estate in an action prosecuted or defended is to be determined only upon the committee's accounting in the court which appointed him.[39] The general rules of evidence apply in regard to establishing the right to compensation.[40] The court has power to appoint counsel to represent the lunatic's estate where a large claim for compensation is presented by the guardian.[41]

6. Lien of Guardian For Disbursements and Compensation. A guardian or committee has no lien on the estate of the lunatic for disbursements or compensation.[42]

7. Foreign and Ancillary Guardians.[43] The appointment of a committee or guardian for an insane person has no extraterritorial force, and gives the appointee no legal status in another state[44] or power over property of the ward situate therein.[45] To entitle himself to the possession and control of such property as a matter of right he must, in the absence of statute to the contrary,[46] obtain an appointment as committee or guardian in the state where it is located.[47] The courts of the state in which the property is situated may, however, surrender it to a foreign appointee as a matter of comity.[48] Where a person was appointed guardian in one state for the person of the ward, and afterward in another state for his estate, the second appointment was ancillary to the first, although all the estate of the ward was situated in the state of the second appointment, and accordingly the guardian must account in the state where he was first appointed.[49]

If the appointment of a general guardian is unauthorized, the appointment of a special guardian as ancillary thereto must also be set aside.[50]

8. Guardianship Bonds[51] — a. Requisites and Validity. If a person signs, seals, and delivers a guardian's bond as surety, he is liable thereon, although his name does not appear in the body of the instrument.[52] Recovery can be had on a conservator's bond, although it was not filed by the clerk until after the conservator's removal, if it was delivered prior thereto.[53]

b. Construction and Effect. A guardian's bond should be construed in connection with the order requiring security.[54] Where one indebted by specialty to the estate of a lunatic is appointed committee of his estate, and the specialty is transferred and received by him as committee, the debt is extinguished, and the sureties on his bond as committee are liable as for so much money received by him.[55] The sureties may insist that a charge be made by the guardian for boarding the ward, where there would otherwise be a deficit for which they would be liable.[56] Sureties on the bond of a guardian are not liable for his failure to account for moneys which came into his hands unlawfully.[57] The renewal bonds required of a guardian on making his financial statements are cumulative.[58] The sureties on a new general bond are liable, not only for the failure of the guardian to account for all moneys and property received by him as such after the execution of the bond, but also for all money belonging to the ward which was in the hands of the guardian at the time the bond was executed.[59]

c. Discharge or Release of Sureties. The probate court may make a final decree discharging a guardian and his sureties from all liabilities already incurred, or to be thereafter incurred, except as to liability to persons laboring under some legal disability.[60] A discharge obtained by the guardian without giving the statutory notice does not bar an action against the sureties on his bond;[61] nor does an order revoking the guardianship upon condition that the guardian make a full settlement with the ward.[62] A receipt signed by a ward acquitting her guardian of all claims against him does not "increase the risk" of the sureties on the guardian's bond, so as to release them from liability.[63]

d. Conclusiveness of Appointment of Guardian. Neither the guardian of an insane person nor his sureties can escape liability on the bond by showing the invalidity of the guardian's appointment;[64] nor can they escape liability by show-

Presumption of regularity.— Where a person was appointed and qualified as guardian of one who was an infant and a lunatic, but the record was silent as to the grounds of the appointment, and the ward was of unsound mind when she arrived of age and so continued, and for more than seven years after she came of age the guardian acted as such and was repeatedly so recognized by the court in settling his accounts, in requiring and approving a new bond, and in accepting his resignation and settling his

ing the invalidity of the appointment of a succeeding guardian who sues them on the bond.[65]

e. Conclusiveness of Settlement by Guardian. A decree settling the accounts of a guardian is ordinarily conclusive on his sureties as to the matters involved in the adjudication.[66]

f. Action on Bond. It has been held that no action can be maintained on a guardian's bond in the name of the ward while the guardianship subsists;[67] and that an accounting in the court having jurisdiction of the guardianship proceedings is also a condition precedent to an action on the bond.[68] However, the bond may be sued on without first obtaining a judgment at law against the guardian.[69] Where the final report of a conservator has been approved, and he has turned over to his ward, who has recovered, all property in his hands, and has been discharged, he is not liable to an action on his bond by a creditor of the ward for not paying the debt due such creditor.[70] The time within which suit must be brought on a guardian's bond varies in the different states.[71] Process in a suit on a guardian's bond must conform to the statutory requirements.[72] Where all the sureties are made parties in the summons and bill, and no process has final account, it was held that as the court had jurisdiction to appoint a guardian on the ground of lunacy as well as infancy, the presumption was that the appointment covered both grounds, and that the court had authority to take the new bond after the ward arrived of age, but while still of unsound mind. In California the probate court may make a final decree discharging a guardian and his sureties from all liabilities already incurred, or to be thereafter incurred, except as to liability to those persons laboring under some legal disability, whose rights subsist until two years after their disability ceases, whether so expressed in the decree or not. Racouillat v. Requena, 30 Cal. 651.

In Georgia the period of limitation is twenty years; and this is not affected by Civ. Code (1895), § 565, the effect of which is to provide that in the absence of a full exhibit of the guardian's accounts and full knowledge by the ward of his rights, receipts in final settlement of the guardian's account will be prima facie binding upon the ward only after the lapse of four years. Griffin v. Collins, 122 Ga. 102, 49 S. E. 827.

In Montana, under Prob. Pr. Act, § 404, declaring that action against the sureties on a guardian's bond must be commenced within three years from the "discharge or removal" of the guardian, the statute commences to run from the death of the ward, not from the accounting by the guardian. But even if the cause of action does not accrue till accounting by the guardian, the administrator of the deceased ward is not for that reason under "disability" between the ward's death and such accounting, within Prob. Pr. Act, § 404, requiring action against the sureties on a guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from discharge of the guardian, unless at the time of the discharge the person entitled to bring the action is under "legal disability" to sue. Berkin v. Marsh, 18 Mont. 152, 44 Pac. 528, 56 Am. St. Rep. 565.

Fullor v. Wing, 17 Me. 222, holding also that where, in a suit on a guardian's bond to a judge of probate, it is not alleged in the writ for whose benefit it is instituted, and that it is sued out for his benefit in the name of the judge, as required by statute, there being merely an indorsement thereof on the back of the writ as required before the been served on some of them, it is error to render a decree against the others.[73] The bond may be sued on by the guardian's successor in office,[74] and in some states by a creditor of the estate.[75] If sureties can maintain, in an action at law on the bond, an equitable cross action to surcharge and falsify the guardian's accounts, the cross complaint must point out the specific mistakes or errors in the account of which they complain, and also offer to pay what is correct.[76] In a suit on a guardian's bond for the benefit of a creditor, where the only breach is the guardian's neglect to return an inventory of the estate within three months, and the estate is not subject to the payment of debts, the damages are but nominal.[77] Upon the lapse of more than twenty years after the death of the ward and the filing of an account by the guardian, it may be presumed that liability on the guardian's bond was discharged.[78] Where questions of law and fact are submitted to an auditor in an action on the bond, and exceptions of fact are filed to the auditor's report, such exceptions should be submitted to a jury for determination.[79] A bond of a committee conditioned that the committee shall and do well and faithfully execute and perform all and singular the duties appertaining to said trust, and duly account, according to law, for all property and funds that may come into his hands, is not an instrument for the payment of money, within the meaning of a statute authorizing judgment for want of an affidavit of defense.[80] The estate of the sureties should not be resorted to on account of money for which the committee is liable until his estate has been exhausted therefor.[81]

III. CUSTODY AND SUPPORT.[82]

restricted to resident lunatics; it applies as well to non-resident lunatics found within the state.[86]

3. Proceedings and Review. The statutes usually authorize an application for the commitment of an insane person to an asylum to be made by a relative,[87] friend,[88] or guardian of the lunatic,[89] or his or her spouse,[90] and in some states by any respectable person.[91] The court or judge to whom the application is made may proceed by citation or rule to show cause to bring in the proper parties for a hearing;[92] but want of notice does not render the commitment subject to collateral attack,[93] although it is good ground for vacating the order of commitment.[94] The proceeding for commitment may be commenced by petition;[95] and a commission may issue to try the question of insanity.[96] There must be a public investigation of the question of insanity,[97] and in some states it is triable before a jury.[98]

Criminal insane.— The recital in an order of commitment of an insane person to the asylum for the insane that such person was a "resident" of the industrial home for girls does not show that the order was made without authority, although it purports to be made under Mich. Pub. Acts (1885), No. 135, § 23, which does not authorize the commitment of insane persons serving sentence in that or any other penal institution. Palmer v. Kalamazoo County Cir. Presumption of regularity.— As the Pennsylvania act of April 20, 1869, regulating the practice as to the commitment of insane persons to a state hospital, makes no provision as to the mode of proceeding by the commission to be appointed under the act or before it, the court is bound to presume that the court below was satisfied, when acting upon their report, that everything essential was properly done. A physician's certificate of insanity is made the basis of the order of commitment in some states.[99] It has been held that the order of commitment need not be made in open court or be recorded,[1] but that the record must show the cause of commitment.[2] The commitment is not vitiated by irregularities or harmless errors.[3] The costs of the proceeding for commitment are not as a rule taxable against the estate of the insane person.[4] An order of commitment is not appealable.[5]

4. Conclusiveness and Effect of Commitment.[6] An order committing a person to an asylum as insane is not conclusive, in collateral proceedings, of his insanity at that time;[7] and it has been held that the commitment does not fix the person's status as a lunatic, so as to create, in collateral actions, a presumption of his subsequent incapacity.[8]

5. Restraint and Treatment in Asylum. The superintendent of an insane hospital, acting in good faith and with sole reference to the welfare of the patient, may, with the assent of the trustees of the hospital, permit a temporary removal of the patient from the state.[9] In New York the statutes create the office of commissioner of lunacy, and empower the commissioner to inquire into all cases of alleged or suspected wrongful confinement, neglect, cruelty, or lack of proper treatment of persons in institutions for the insane, and to order such remedy or change of treatment as is proper.[10] When an asylum superintendent has reasonable

Sufficiency of certificate.— In Maine it is essential to the validity of the commitment of an insane person to an asylum that the physicians' certificate should state that they have made due inquiry and personal examination of the patient. Kittery v. Dixon, 96 Me. 368, 52 Atl. 799. N. H. Gen. Horne v. Bancroft, 62 N. H. 362. Jurisdiction.— Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1766, authorizing the court to restore an incompetent to capacity, does not apply to persons committed to asylums, but only to those under guardianship. Aldrich v. Alameda County Super. Ct., 120 Cal. 140, 52 Pac. 148. The functions of the state commissioner in lunacy upon the formal inquest as to one's being wrongfully deprived of liberty are similar to those of a grand jury; and he may take both evidence obtained by compulsory process and evidence voluntarily laid before him. Matter of Kings County Insane Asylum, 7 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 425.

Venue.— A petition under the Pennsylvania act of June 15, 1897, for an issue to try the question of restoration to sanity must be made in the court which adjudged the person a lunatic and not in the court of the county in which he is confined. In re Hunt, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 417.

An issue will be awarded, upon cause shown, under the Pennsylvania act of May 8, 1874 (Pamphl. Adjournment.— Where an alleged lunatic has been in confinement for upwards of three years, and has been visited principally by those who petitioned for his confinement and who are prosecuting the proceeding before the commissioners, and by physicians who were employed by them, the commission should be adjourned for a reasonable time to enable the alleged lunatic to procure evidence as to his present condition and competency to transact his own business. Matter of Baird, 8 N. Y. St. 493.

Verdict and finding.— On the trial of an inquisition as to the lunacy of a person who has been confined in an insane asylum, where the jury found the person sane, their verdict is not invalid by reason of a recommendation for a temporary guardianship, owing to said person having been out of the business world for so long. Duty of court to issue warrant of removal. — Under the Ohio act of April 7, 1856, regulating state asylums and authorizing the board of trustees to discharge patients whenever they shall deem it expedient, the power of the trustees is plenary, and the probate judge is bound to issue a warrant for the removal of the patient on being notified of their order of discharge. Pleading.— A town, having paid the expenses incurred for restraining and confining a destitute lunatic under proceedings instituted on a complaint to a justice of the peace founded on the thirteenth section of the statute concerning idiots, lunatics, and spendthrifts, brought an action against the father of the lunatic, who was of sufficient ability to pay the expenses, to recover therefor. The declaration alleged that complainant informed the justice of the peace that the lunatic then was a resident of the town, and that it was unsafe for him to go at large; and from the entire proceedings before the justice, set forth in the declaration, it appeared that they were founded on the thirteenth section of the act. It was held that the declaration was not insufficient either on the ground that it did not aver that the lunatic was going at large in the town, or because it did not state in terms under which section of the act such expenses were incurred. So if one person acting for another takes the insane wife of a third person to an asylum and contracts for her maintenance there, his principal may recover the expenses from the husband, although the authorities of the asylum gave credit to the agent. But if one person takes the insane wife of another to an asylum and contracts for her maintenance there, a third person who voluntarily pays therefor cannot recover the expenses from the husband. California.— St. Vincent's Insane Inst. v. Davis, 129 Cal. 20, 61 Pac. 477 (holding that the fact that a husband did not know that his insane wife was being cared for in an institution for the insane did not relieve him from liability for her board and clothing therein); Watt v. Smith, 89 Cal. 602, 26 Pac. 1071 (holding that the directors of the asylum may maintain an action for such recovery as trustees of an express trust).

Maine.— Bangor v. Wiscasset, 71 Me. 535 (holding that the husband is primarily liable for the wife's support "if able"); Alna v. Plummer, 4 Me. 258 (holding that where a husband well able to support his insane wife neglected to provide for her, and she wandered into an adjoining town, where she received support, the expenses of which were reimbursed in the first instance by the town where she was relieved and then repaid by the town of the husband's settlement and abode, the latter town might recover against the husband the expenses thus incurred, the payment not being voluntary but an enforceable charge against the town of the husband's settlement). United States.— Davis v. St. Vincent's Insane Inst., 61 Fed. 277, 9 C. C. A. 501, holding that an institution which supports an insane wife, abandoned by her husband, may maintain an action against him to recover the reasonable value of such support and care, without expressly averring that they were furnished on his credit.

And see Richardson v. Stuesser, 25 Wis. 66, 103 N. W. 261, 69 L. R. A. 829, holding that, there being no express statute extending the common-law liability of a husband to support his wife where she has been removed from his home by due process of law and maintained at an insane asylum, he is not liable under such circumstances.

Liability for support of insane pauper wife see PAUPERS.

Willingness to take charge of and support wife.— If the husband of an insane wife who is in an asylum demands that she shall be delivered into his custody by the authorities of the asylum, the authorities cannot recover of him for the subsequent maintenance of the wife; and the burden is on the authorities of the asylum, in an action by them against the husband to recover for the wife's subsequent maintenance, to show that the husband's demand was not made in good faith. St. Vincent's Inst. v. Davis, (Cal. 1900) 61 Pac. 476. So a county which pays the expenses of an insane wife's maintenance at an asylum cannot recover therefor from the husband, if he has at all times been able, ready, and willing to support her in a suitable manner at his own house or in the or elsewhere;[26] and in some jurisdictions a similar liability is imposed on the wife of a lunatic.[27]

E. Powers, Duties, and Liabilities of Guardian — 1. As to Custody and Control of Ward. Unless the ward has been committed to an asylum by the court,[28] the guardian is entitled to his custody, and may care for and control him in any reasonable manner.[29] He may accordingly fix or change the domicile of the ward.[30]

2. As to Support of Ward.[31] It is the duty of the guardian to look after the wants and comforts of his ward and provide for his maintenance according to the condition of the ward's estate;[32] and he may make contracts for the care and support of the ward, and charge the estate of the latter therewith, either by the direction of the court or subject to its approval.[33] The extent of the provision to be made the ward is largely within the reasonable discretion of the guardian;[34] but ordinarily he has no authority to expend the principal of the estate for the maintenance of the ward without leave of court first obtained,[35] or, in Louisiana, the authority of a family meeting.[36] The guardian is not personally liable for the ward's support,[37] unless he makes himself so by contract.[38]

However, a contract between the county commissioners and the guardian of an insane ward stipulating that the guardian will pay the county, out of the ward's estate, a certain compensation for the care and support of the ward in the county asylum provided for the poor cannot be enforced, the county asylum being a charitable institution; nor can there be a recovery by the county on a quantum meruit, since a benevolent institution, while ostensibly dispensing charity, cannot create an obligation against one to whose necessities it administers. by statute upon various public authorities upon certain conditions. These statutes vary in the different states and must be looked to in order to determine what public authorities are liable and the conditions upon which their liability depends.[39]

39. In Illinois, Rev. St. c. 50, § 6, providing that the overseers of the poor in each county shall take charge of the body of any insane person or lunatic, and confine and support him, and make an account thereof and return the same to the county commissioners' court, whose duty it shall be to make an order requiring the treasurer of the county to pay the same out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, does not apply to insane persons who have adequate means of support. Hence where a city voluntarily supports an insane person possessed of means adequate to that purpose, there is no implied promise by the county to repay the city therefor, as no legal obligation rests on the city or county for the maintenance of such person. Alton v. Madison County, 21 Ill. 115.

In Indiana, Rev. St. (1881) § 2856, provides for the payment by the county auditor for clothing purchased by the clerk for insane persons, on presentation of the clerk's certificate. Morris v. State, 96 Ind. 597.

In Iowa, where an adult insane woman who should have been received as a public patient in the asylum was committed to her father's care, he is entitled to be remunerated by the county, notwithstanding informalities in his appointment as her custodian. Speedling v. Worth County, 68 Iowa 152, 26 N. W. 50.

In Maine, where the officers of a town have committed an insane person belonging to another town to the hospital, a right of action to recover the expenses for maintenance therein does not accrue until the sums due to the hospital are paid. Bangor v. Fairfield, 46 Me. 558.

In Massachusetts, if money paid by the commonwealth for the support of a lunatic at the state lunatic hospital on the mistaken supposition that he had no settlement within the commonwealth is retained by the commonwealth, on discovery of the mistake, out of money due to the hospital, the treasurer of the hospital may recover under Rev. St. c. 48, § 9, and St. (1837) c. 228, § 7, from the town in which the lunatic resided at the time of his commitment, unless defendant proves that he had no settlement in the commonwealth for such support during the six years previous to the commencement of the action, and for that only. Jennison v. Roxbury, 9 Gray 32. Where an insane person who is not able to pay for his own support is confined in a house of correction, under St. (1836) c. 223, the town in which he has a settlement is liable for his support in such house, if he has no parent, master, or kindred liable by law to maintain him. Watson v. Charlestown, 5 Metc. 54. The provision of Rev. St. c. 48, § 9, that expenses for the support of lunatics committed to the state lunatic hospital shall be paid by the town in which such lunatics have their settlement at the time of their commitment extends to cases where the commitment was made before the Revised Statutes or St. (1834) c. 150, went into operation. Foster v. Medfield, 3 Metc. 1. Without the knowledge of the trustees of the hospital, an agreement was made between A and the town in which a lunatic had his settlement that A should pay for the support of the lunatic, who had been committed to the hospital, and save the town harmless; and A afterward requested the treasurer of the hospital to send to him the bills for the lunatic's support as they should become due, and several bills were sent to him and paid by him, and he then declined to make any further payments. It was held that the town was not exempted by Rev. St. c. 48, § 9, from liability to pay for the subsequent support of the lunatic, "no other sufficient security, to the satisfaction of the trustees" having been taken for such support. Foster v. Medfield, supra. The repeal of St. (1833) c. 95, under which lunatics were committed to hospitals, did not operate as a discharge from their commitment, so as to relieve the town from their support. Foster v. Medfield, supra. Where, prior to the passage of St. 1832, regulating the state lunatic hospital, a lunatic was committed to the house of correction in a town in pursuance of St. 1797, and such lunatic was removed to the state lunatic hospital previous to St. 1834, no action could be maintained against the town by the treasurer of the hospital for the support of such lunatic, the statute of 1834 having repealed those of 1797 and 1832. Foster v. Worcester, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 71.

In Michigan, under 3 Howell Annot. St. § 1930, c. 8, providing that an unrecovered patient temporarily removed from the insane asylum shall forfeit his right to state support unless returned within a year, an indigent person removed from the asylum as an unrecovered patient, and not returned within one year, can only be returned as a county charge. Lockton v. Edwards, 118 Mich. 419, 76 N. W. 969. Persons not having a settlement become a state charge; but if the statute allows state maintenance "provided he is a citizen of the state," the effect is that the state refuses to care for any insane not citizens thereof. Porter v. Edwards, 114 Mich. 640, 72 N. W. 614.

In Missouri, Rev. St. (1879) § 5830, provides that the expense of confining a person who has been adjudged a lunatic "shall be paid by the guardian out of his estate, or by the person bound to provide for and support such insane person, or the same shall be paid out of the county treasury, upon the order of the county court, after the same shall be duly certified to them by the probate court." Section 5831 provides that the amount so paid out may be recovered by the county from the person bound to provide for the support of such lunatic, "if there be any of sufficient ability to pay the same." It was held that when the probate court certifies to the county court the expense of maintaining in confinement a person who has been adjudged a lunatic, and recites in its order that such lunatic is entirely without means, and that there is no one whose duty it is to support him, the county is bound to pay such expenses. Cox v. Osage County, 103 Mo. 385, 15 S. W. 763. Rev. St. § 4140, provides that pay patients in the state lunatic hospital shall become county patients if the county court shall so order. It was held that there need not be an express finding that the patient's estate is insufficient for his support, but an order that he become a county patient from the date of the order is enough to bind the county. State v. Cole County Ct., 80 Mo. 80.

In Nebraska a statute may constitutionally require a county to pay for the maintenance in an insane asylum of a person having a legal settlement in the county. But under Comp. St. c. 40, § 27, providing that if the insane person has no legal settlement, or if the settlement cannot be ascertained, he shall be supported at the expense of the state, and section 23, making it the duty of the commissioners of insanity of each county to ascertain the legal settlement of insane persons sent therefrom, a county is not chargeable with the support and maintenance of insane persons sent to the hospital therefrom, where the legal settlement is not found to be in such county. State v. Douglas County, 18 Nebr. 601, 26 N. W. 378.

In New Hampshire, under Gen. Laws, c. 10, §§ 16, 21, which provide that any insane person committed to the asylum shall be supported by the county from which he is committed, and that such county shall be entitled to recover the amount so paid of any town, county, or individual by law liable for his support, the liability of a town for the support of persons who have acquired a settlement therein is not absolute, but embraces only those who subsequently become destitute and unable to support themselves. Merrimack County v. Concord, 66 N. H. 389, 23 Atl. 87. A pauper notice is not required to sustain an action by a county against a town to recover sums paid for the support at the New Hampshire asylum for the insane of a person committed to the asylum by the judge of probate. Merrimack County v. Concord, 39 N. H. 213.

In New Jersey the county in which a lunatic not a pauper actually resides when he is sent to the asylum is primarily liable for his support, without reference to his settlement under the poor laws, and cannot look to any other county for reimbursement. Mercer County v. Warren County, 23 N. J. L. 415.

In New York the town of which an indigent insane person not a pauper is a resident when committed to the asylum on certificate of the county judge, acting under Laws (1874), c. 446, tit. 1, § 14, is not liable for his maintenance while there, under section 16 of title 1, and section 31 of title 3 of that act, providing that the expenses of a lunatic in a state asylum shall be defrayed by the town to which he is "chargeable," and that the expense of any patient received on the order of any court or officer shall be paid by the county from which he is sent, but such county may require the individual town that is "legally liable" for the support of such patient to reimburse the amount; for such indigent insane person not a pauper is not legally chargeable to the town of his residence. People v. Herkimer County, 122 N. Y. 652, 25 N. E. 853 [reversing 46 Hun 354 (affirming 20 Abb. N. Cas. 123)]; People v. Schoharie County, 121 N. Y. 345, 24 N. E. 830 [reversing 49 Hun 308, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 142]. Where a resident of a town is admitted to the state lunatic asylum on the certificate of the first judge of the county, pursuant to St. (1842) p. 148, § 26, providing for support in the asylum at the expense of the county, the county cannot charge the expense to the town, if the insane person, although in indigent circumstances, is not a "pauper" or "furiously mad." People v. Genesee County, 7 Hill 171. Where it appeared that all the estate of a lunatic had been expended in his necessary maintenance, the court, on petition of the committee and a report of a master, ordered the lunatic to be delivered to the overseers of the poor of the town. Matter of McFarlan, 2 Johns. Ch. 140. Under the direct provisions of Laws (1896), p. 508, c. 545, § 101, as amended by Laws (1899), p. 461, c. 260, when an insane inmate of a state hospital, committed thereto on the order of a court of criminal jurisdiction, is transferred to the Matteawan state hospital, his expenses are to be paid by the county in which the criminal charge arose, if he was then a resident of that county, and in other cases are a charge against the state. Jefferson County v. Oswego County, 102 N. Y. App. Div. 232, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 709. Where a county board of supervisors audited and caused to be paid, pursuant to express statutory liability of their county, a claim against the county for the care and maintenance of an indigent insane resident thereof confined in a hospital in another county, there was not such an admission of liability on the part of the county as affected its right to discontinue the payments on the repeal of the law under which payments had previously been made. Jefferson County v. Oswego County, supra. Laws (1874), p. 566, c. 446, § 14, imposed on counties the duty of caring for and maintaining resident indigent insane persons, but was repealed by Laws (1896), p. 471, c. 545, section 65 of which devised a new scheme whereby such persons were to be maintained at the expense of the state. Code Cr. Proc. § 662, provides that, when a person pleading insanity in criminal proceedings is sent to a state lunatic asylum, the expenses incident thereto are in the first instance chargeable to the county from which he was sent, but that such county may recover from the estate of defendant, if he have any, or from a relative, town, city, or county bound to provide for and maintain him elsewhere. It was held that where an indigent resident of one county is chargeable with crime in another county, and is committed by the court to a state lunatic asylum on a plea of insanity, there is no general liability on the part of the county of his residence, under section 662, to reimburse the county from which he was sent for sums paid by it on account of his expenses while kept in a state asylum after the repeal of section 14, assuming that there was a liability under such section prior to its repeal. Jefferson County v. Oswego County, supra.

insane is expressly authorized by statute in some states to recover the expenses

In North Carolina, under a statute providing for the support in an asylum of the "indigent insane," these words were held to intend insane persons who have no income over and above what is sufficient to maintain those who are legally dependent on them. In re Hybart, 119 N. C. 359, 25 S. E. 963.

In Ohio, Rev. St. § 700, providing that insane patients, after admission to the state asylums, should be clothed at the expense of the state, was so amended as to make the expense of their clothing chargeable to them. Section 632 provides that on failure of the proper parties to furnish clothing the institution may do so and charge the same to them. It was held that a steward of the institution so furnishing may recover from the state. State v. Kiesewetter, 37 Ohio St. 546.

In Pennsylvania, under Act 1861, § 4, the county from which an indigent insane person was sent to the state hospital was primarily liable for his support, with a right of recovery over against the township legally liable, when such liability was ascertained. It was held that this provision is applicable to one committed to the Danville hospital, and the commissioners of the county from which he was committed can recover from the township of his last legal residence. Clearfield County v. Cameron Tp. Poor Dist., 135 Pa. St. 86, 19 Atl. 952. Under Act 1861, the liability for the maintenance of an insane person as between the hospital and the district liable under existing laws for the whole cost was transferred to the county, and the county was given a remedy over against the district. It was held that Act 1883, which provides that the expense of the indigent insane in the state hospital shall be divided between the state and the county, the maximum charge to the county not to exceed two dollars a week per capita, thus reducing the amount to be paid by the county, reduces to the same extent the amount which the district has to pay. Danville v. State Hospital, 2 Pa. Cas. 409, 4 Atl. 380. Where a person abandons his settlement in the state and acquires a settlement in another state, and thereafter returns and resides in his old township without acquiring a new legal settlement, and becomes insane, the county in which he became insane is liable for his support, under Act 1854 (Pamphl. Laws 85), imposing the burden of supporting an insane person who has been committed to the state lunatic hospital, and who has no legal settlement in the commonwealth, on the county where he was found a lunatic. Juniata County v. Delaware Tp., 107 Pa. St. 68. The town where an insane person who has been committed by order of the quarter sessions to the state lunatic hospital has his settlement is liable for his maintenance. Franklin Tp. v. Pennsylvania State Lunatic Hospital, 30 Pa. St. 522. Suits may be brought, under the act of May 8, 1889, against poor districts which are delinquent in payment for maintenance of insane patients. In re Danville Asylum, 29 Pa. Co. Ct. 122. Where a patient is committed to the Norristown state hospital, and his friends or estate, under the order of the committing court, pay the cost of his maintenance to the directors of the poor of the county, he is not "indigent," and no cost of his maintenance should be charged to the state. In re Norristown Insane Hospital, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 38. Where the court has committed an insane person to a state lunatic hospital, and notice has been given, under Act 1849, to the township or district alleged to be the place of settlement or residence of such person, such township or district may come into court, under Act 1854, and show that some other district was the true place of settlement of such lunatic, and thus escape liability, or that the lunatic was not settled in such district, but only resided therein, in which case the liability for care and maintenance falls upon the county. Ex p. Blewett, 11 Phila. 652.

In Tennessee a husband has the right to place his insane wife in a state hospital for the insane as a state or free patient, where he, by reason of his age or inability to pursue his calling, or from any cause, is unable to pay for her support in the institution and support himself and the other members of his family dependent upon him; it is not required that he be destitute of all property. Tennessee Insane Hospital v. McReynolds, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 349. There being a statute for the admission from counties of state patients into the state hospitals for the insane upon the transfer of a patient from the pay list to the free list by the officials of the institution, the court will presume, there being no proof to the contrary, that at the date of the transfer the patient was properly admitted as a state patient, although there is no statute authorizing the officials of the hospitals to make the transfer on their own motion on mere personal information communicated to them. Tennessee Insane Hospital v. McReynolds, supra.

In Wisconsin, Laws (1881), c. 229, § 1, require the board of supervision of insane legally incurred by it in the commitment from the town in which the insane person had his legal settlement at the time thereof.[40]

G. Judicial Allowances For Support.[41] A court of chancery jurisdiction has power to make allowances for the support of a lunatic found such by inquisition,[42] and an allowance so decreed cannot be exceeded without its sanction.[43] It has been held, however, that the court has no authority to make an order directing in advance how much the guardian shall expend annually for the support of the lunatic out of his estate;[44] and that a court can charge neither the lands of a lunatic in another state, nor its proceeds in the hands of his heir in the state where the court sits, for his support.[45] In the management of the lunatic's estate the paramount rule is that his health and comfort shall be provided for, and to this end a liberal application of the whole property may be made,[46] and the sum to be expended for his support is not necessarily limited to the amount of the annual income.[47] The mere question of expense is not controlling, but the court will direct that to be done hospitals to determine on application whether an inmate has been improperly charged to a county or to the state. Section 2 provides that whenever any error is committed in the accounts between a state hospital and any county for the support of any inmate, and the error shall be made to appear from the certificate of the board of trustees of state insane hospitals, the secretary of state shall correct the error. It was held that section 2 imposes the duty on the board to grant the certificate to a county which has duly proved the existence of such an error; but that where the question is determined by appeal to the court, the board may not grant a certificate by which the county can recover costs of the appeal or interest on the sums erroneously advanced. State v. Wisconsin Charitable, etc., Insts., 72 Wis. 108, 39 N. W. 350. The "proper residence" of a person, within the meaning of a statute providing that the support of an insane person shall be charged to the proper county when his residence shall have been ascertained, is the place where he has voluntarily fixed his abode, not for a mere special or temporary purpose, but with the present intention of making it his home. State v. Dodge County, 56 Wis. 79, 13 N. W. 680.

Res judicata.— The court made an order committing a lunatic in proceedings therefor, and ruled P township to show cause why it should not pay expenses of the proceedings. Thereafter the court discharged the rule, the order reciting that it was made "without prejudice to the county as to proceedings against the township of last settlement, when ascertained." It was held a conclusive settlement that P township was not liable. Armstrong County v. Plumcreek Tp., 158 Pa. St. 92, 27 Atl. 842.

Review.— A proceeding by a wife against a town to compel it to support her lunatic husband, under Vt. IV. PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCES.

A. Capacity to Take and Hold Property.[57] An insane person may, it seems, take property by inheritance,[58] and where a share of premises partitioned is set off to a lunatic, the title is vested in him, and not in his committee.[59] So a deed delivered to an insane grantee, if for a valid preëxisting consideration, as in

Application of principal to support.— In applying the estate of a lunatic for the payment of expenses, the principal of the estate should be sacrificed only to necessity, and such necessity should be determined in each specific instance by the court itself, having before it all the circumstances, including the nature and value of the property, the age, condition of health, and situation in life of the lunatic, the effect of loss of accustomed comforts, the prospect of increasing infirmities, etc. It is the duty of the court to see that the future comfort of the lunatic should be made as secure as the circumstances permit, and for that purpose to keep present expenses within reasonable bounds. Estoppel of grantee to deny insanity of grantor.— Where a husband is induced to execute a deed of property to his wife on ac-

sion of the grantor affecting the transaction in question;[64] but it has been held that the deed is valid if the delusion exists only with reference to an extraneous matter so that it cannot be reasonably supposed to have influenced the grantor in making the conveyances.[65] A person insane on all subjects may make a valid conveyance in a lucid interval.[66]

C. Validity of Conveyances.[67] A lunatic cannot bind himself absolutely by a conveyance of his property,[68] and the fact that the grantee was not aware of the insanity of the grantor does not validate the deed.[69] The weight of authority is in favor of the rule that the deeds of persons in fact insane, but not so adjudicated, in whatever form such deeds are made, are merely voidable and not abso-

count of the marital relations existing between them, and afterward the wife, on evidence furnished by herself, secures an annulment of the marriage on the ground that the husband was insane at the time the marriage contract was entered into, she cannot deny the insanity of the husband in an action brought to set aside the deed on account of such insanity. Conveyance by matter of record.— By the common law the conveyance of an insane person, if made by matter of record, was neither void nor voidable (Snowden v. Dunlavey, 11 Pa. where the committee or guardian of the insane person is considered as invested with the full legal estate of the ward, or where the ward is by statute made incapable of making a valid contract, all conveyances made by him after adjudication of insanity and the appointment of a guardian or committee are absolutely void.[72] Generally a lunatic's conveyance will be set aside when it was the result of undue influence, unfair advantage taken, or fraud on the part of the grantee, when the consideration was lacking or wholly inadequate,[73] or when the grantor was obviously or notoriously insane and incapable of managing his affairs and the grantee had notice of that fact.[74] Equity will set aside conveyances made without consideration by an insane person, although made to one dealing with him in good faith,[75] and by a parity of reasoning, in the absence of a statutory provision on the subject, it is held as a rule of the common law that a surrender or conveyance of lands by an insane person, executed without any consideration, or for an inadequate consideration, is absolutely void,[76] especially where the grantor had notice of the insanity,[77] so that even an innocent purchaser from the lunatic's

Mortgages.— It is held that a mortgage executed by an insane person is valid and enforceable so far as the consideration was for the benefit of the grantor, but that the lien of the mortgage should be diminished by so much as the consideration of it had been used for other purposes. Mahoney v. Goepper, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 154, 6 Cinc. L. Bul. 33. grantee can take no title to the property conveyed, as against the grantor's heirs.[78] Since the material circumstance in such cases is the inadequacy of the consideration, the rule will be enforced, although in the transaction there was no fraud or undue advantage taken of the lunatic.[79] The facts that a conveyance from an insane person was obtained without fraud,[80] and was based on an adequate consideration,[81] do not prevent an avoidance thereof; neither does the fact that property conveyed by an insane person has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser.[82] The conveyance of one who was actually insane at the time may be avoided after his death, although he was never judicially declared insane.[83]

D. Affirmance of Conveyances. The deed of an insane person, where it is voidable only, may be ratified by him upon his restoration to sanity;[84] but such ratification must be his intelligent act, he knowing that he is acting under the contract contained in the deed and intelligently availing himself of its provisions in his favor.[85] Proof of express and formal ratification is not, however, necessary, and such ratification may be inferred from the grantor's taking advantage of the agreements in the contract of conveyance beneficial to him, as by accepting either the agreed price or payment of notes given therefor while he was insane.[86] The guardian or committee cannot ratify the deed of the insane person under his guardianship,[87] unless by order of the court appointing him, acting under its inherent or statutory authority to make conveyances of the lunatic's property.[88]

E. Avoidance of Conveyances[89] — 1. Who May Avoid. The voidable conveyance of an insane grantor may be avoided by himself on his restoration to reason,[90] or by his guardian or committee for him while he remains insane,[91] and after his death it may be avoided by his personal representatives,[92] or his heirs or privies in blood.[93] But the right to avoid does not exist in favor of strangers,[94] or mere privies in estate of the lunatic.[95] During the lifetime of the grantor his deed cannot be attacked on the ground of insanity by his wife,[96] or his wife and children.[97]

2. Return of Consideration.[98] According to some authorities a conveyance of lands by an insane person, without fraud, or notice to the grantee of the grantor's incapacity, and for a fair consideration, will not be set aside, either at law or in equity, in favor of the grantor or his representatives, unless the consideration be restored and the parties reinstated in the condition in which they were before the transaction;[99] but other cases hold that the lunatic or his guardian

F. Claims and Liabilities — 1. In General. In England and Canada the court of chancery, in managing the estates of lunatics, will have regard to the maintenance and comfort of the lunatic in preference to the claims of his creditors,[2] although the estate be insolvent;[3] but the court will not refuse to assist creditors where it can be done without prejudice to the lunatic.[4]

Petition in suit for amounts paid for support.— Under Iowa Code, § 1433, authorizing the auditor, subject to direction of the board of supervisors, to collect from estates of insane persons sums paid by the county for their support, the auditor's petition need not allege that the board has authorized him to sue. Cedar County v. Sager, 90 Iowa 11, 57 N. W. 634.

Notice of direction to auditor to collect.— The estate being liable for the insane person's support unless relieved by action of the board of supervisors, no notice of the board's action in directing the auditor to collect the amount due need be served on the insane person or his guardian. Cedar County v. Sager, 90 Iowa 11, 57 N. W. 634.

To whom liable.—The liability of the estate of an insane person for the expense of his care in the state asylum is to the county, and not to the state. Harrison County v. Dunn, 84 Iowa 328, 51 N. W. 155. A decree for part payment of the expenses of maintaining a lunatic by the state should be directly in favor of the commonwealth. Coleman v. Lunatic Asylum, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 239. Where a duly appointed guardian of the person and estate of a lunatic was charged with goods bought by him for the maintenance of the lunatic, and before the account was paid the lunatic was declared of sound mind, and the guardian restored to him his property, without retaining any indemnity for the account, but the creditor did not participate in the change of circumstances, and had no transaction with the lunatic, the subsequent events did not make the lunatic legally liable to the creditor on an implied assumpsit, but he would be liable to reimburse the guardian should he pay the debt. Westmoreland v. Davis, 1 Ala. 299.

The probate court has jurisdiction to make an order directing the guardian of a lunatic to pay, as a preferred claim, a debt incurred by a former guardian for the support of the lunatic and his family. Loudon v. Patterson, 41 Ohio St. 206.

Property in another state.— A court of equity in one state can neither charge his land in another state, nor its proceeds in the hands of his heir within the state, for when he is maintained in an asylum,[10] hospital,[11] or infirmary.[12] But it has been held that there can be no recovery for board and care furnished in a county poorhouse,[13] or where the lunatic has been supported at the county insane asylum as one of the county poor.[14] The estate is also liable for necessary his support. Allison v. Campbell, 21 N. C. 152.

Jurisdiction of equity courts.— The superintendence and care of equity courts is exercised only during the period of mental incapacity, when the lunatic is unable to provide maintenance for himself and family. After the restoration of such person to a condition of sanity, the courts cannot properly allow the expense of past maintenance, although his capacity for self-support and the incidental expenses necessarily incurred during the lunacy had greatly diminished his estate, and the damages claimed were caused by him while he was a lunatic. An account ordered as to such damage cannot take the past maintenance of the lunatic into consideration, after the establishment of his sanity. Avery v. Wilson, 20 Fed. 856.

Evidence of amount expended.—Certificates of the superintendent of the state hospital, and notices of the state auditor, being presumptive evidence of the correctness of the sums stated, are competent evidence against the insane person's estate of the amount of the county's payments, although only recently certified for use in the action against the estate. Cedar County v. Sager, 90 Iowa 11, 57 N. W. 634.

Evidence insufficient to warrant recovery. — Although a city may recover of one the expenses incurred by it for his support in the county receptacle for the insane, yet as Mass. Pub. St. c. 87, § 49, provides that inmates of such receptacles shall be governed or employed as the county commissioners may deem best, and leaves it to the commissioners to fix the amount to be paid for such support, the city, to entitle it to recover, must first prove that the commissioners have so determined the amount to be paid; and evidence that for several years the city has paid a certain amount per week for each inmate, if admissible, does not require the reversal of a holding of the trial court that the city has failed to make such proof. Newburyport v. Creedon, 148 Mass. 158, 19 N. E. 341.

Support of lunatic takes precedence of pre-existing debts. Adams v. Thomas, 81 N. C. 296. Jurisdiction of probate court over claim.— Under Howell Annot. St. Mich. § 6332, which authorizes a guardian to ask a probate judge to pass on a question whether a debt of the ward should be paid, the probate court has jurisdiction to pass on a claim by the state against the guardian of an insane person for his expenses at an asylum, where the guardian has stipulated that the claim should be heard before such court. But where a lunatic asylum brought action against the trustee of an inmate to recover for his support, and the answer to plaintiff's petition stated that defendant applied to the assembly to pass a special act plac-nursing[15] and care[16] furnished the lunatic in good faith under justifiable circumstances.[17] The reasonableness of the claim is a question for the court after hearing and considering the evidence.[18] Where the statute provides a special procedure for reimbursement out of the estate, there can be no reimbursement unless those formalities are complied with.[19]

3. Support of Family.[20] The estate of an insane person is liable for the support of his wife and family for whom, by law, he is bound to provide.[21] If allowances are made to adult children competent to support themselves, this will generally be on condition that such allowances shall be considered as advancements

ing the lunatic on the pauper list, that he had been advised to apply instead to the board of commissioners, and had been informed that the board had placed the lunatic on the pauper list, the answer was no defense to the action, where the lunatic had not been adjudged a pauper as provided by law, and in fact owned land worth ten thousand dollars. Amount of compensation.— Where an insane person is cared for by plaintiff under a contract to care for her for one dollar per day till a week after notice of a refusal to keep her longer at such rate, plaintiff is entitled to a reasonable compensation for keeping the ward after terminating the contract by notice. Removal of lunatic.— Where a lunatic who has come within the jurisdiction of the court is by order of the court removed by a committee, the expenses of such removal and a proper compensation for the personal services of the special committee are chargeable upon the estate in the hands of the committee of the estate. The value of the board of a lunatic must depend upon his condition and the care, attention, and watchfulness necessary to be bestowed upon him, which is a matter of proof. Alexander v. Alexander, 8 Ala. 796, holding that statements of witnesses that they would not board him for less than five or six hundred dollars a year is not proof that it was worth that sum.

Where the estate of a lunatic is ample to maintain him and his household in the manner he has chosen for himself before his lunacy, and such maintenance is best adapted for his comfort and care after his lunacy, the court should authorize the committee to expend a sufficient amount of the lunatic's estate for that purpose. Illegitimate children.— An allowance has been made to the lunatic's illegitimate children, but refused to their mother. Ex p. Haycock, 5 Russ. 154, 29 Rev. Rep. 16, 5 Eng. Ch. 154, 38 Eng. upon the final distribution on the lunatic's death.[22] Although the fact that the estate may be exhausted is not in itself a sufficient reason for refusing to make allowances,[23] the court will preserve, so far as possible, the interests of the succession,[24] and ordinarily will refuse an allowance from the principal of the estate when this would endanger an interest chargeable upon it.[25]

4. Debts of Insane Person. Subject to the reasonable maintenance of the lunatic[26] and of those whom he is bound to support,[27] his estate is liable for his just debts contracted when he was able to understand the transaction,[28] and it is the lunatic, it appeared that these were in fact his mistress and illegitimate children, it was held that this fact was not of consequence to invalidate advances actually made. Halsey's Appeal, 120 Pa. St. 209, 13 Atl. 934.

Brothers and sisters and their children.— In England the general rule has been extended, with some reluctance, to include the brothers and sisters of the lunatic and their children (In re Frost, L. Cousins.— The court has refused to make an allowance out of the lunatic's surplus income to his first cousins in indigent circumstances, although the lunatic was aged, and there was a large surplus of income, saying that different considerations would apply where the lunatic is entitled to landed property and the collateral is his heir at law. In re Darling, 39 Ch. D. 208, 57 L. J. Ch. 891, 59 L. T. Rep. N. S. 761.

Invalidity of marriage.— Where, in an action brought against the committee of a lunatic to recover for necessaries furnished to one claiming to be his wife, it appeared that a marriage was duly solemnized between the lunatic and a woman, which was followed by cohabitation continuing down to the appointment of the committee, when the woman was obliged to leave and live apart from him, the committee could not set up as a defense that the marriage was void because the husband was at the time of the marriage, and ever since had been, a lunatic without lucid intervals. Stuckey v. Mathes, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 461.

Where the estate is insolvent the Iowa statute does not authorize an allowance for the support of the lunatic's family to be made out of that portion of his estate which would be subject to execution for the satisfaction of his debts. Dutch v. Marvin, 72 Iowa 663, 34 N. W. 465. Half-pay of retired officer.— Although the one-half pay of an officer of the government cannot be taken for his creditors, yet where such officer is a lunatic, the surplus not needed for his support may be applied with the sanction of the court to the payment the duty of the committee to pay such debts.[29] Property of a lunatic in the hands of his guardian or committee is to be regarded as in custodia legis,[30] and no creditor can reach it except through the order of the proper court.[31] Neither the committee of an insane married woman nor a court of equity can charge her land with debts with which it would not be chargeable if she were sane.[32]

5. Counsel Fees and Costs. Reasonable counsel fees for services rendered the committee or guardian in defending and protecting the estate of his ward may properly be allowed against the estate,[33] and counsel fees may also be allowed for

Suit against committee.— A committee of a lunatic appointed by the chancellor is a mere commissioner of the court, managing the person and estate of the lunatic, under the direction of the chancellor, and is responsible to the court as a receiver, removable in its discretion, and not liable to be sued at law on claims either against the lunatic himself or his estate, as in case of a committee appointed under the statute. The supreme court may entertain a petition by an attorney for payment out of the estate of an insane person for services rendered in its behalf on the employment of the committee. Matter of Horton, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 406, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 775.

Amount.— A guardian cannot charge his ward's estate with any counsel fees he may choose to pay; it must appear that the services were required, and the compensation such as is usual and customary for such services. Where no proof is made, it is competent for the chancellor to determine the services rendered directly to the lunatic in good faith and on reasonable grounds, as in opposing[34] or attempting to supersede the inquisition of lunacy,[35] or prosecuting habeas corpus proceedings to investigate the grounds of the detention of one restrained as a lunatic.[36] Costs incurred by the guardian or committee of a lunatic in good faith in the prosecution and defense of suits on behalf of the lunatic may be charged upon the lunatic's estate.[37]

6. Gifts and Benefactions. The court of chancery, acting for the lunatic as it is supposed he would have done in like circumstances, may make allowances from the surplus income of his property for the support of persons whom the lunatic would naturally wish to support, although under no legal obligation to do so,[38] and may also permit the lunatic to make reasonable and proper gifts and contributions to charity, he being possessed of sufficient property and competent to understand the acts and form a reasonable purpose respecting them.[39]

What fees not allowed.— Fees paid to counsel for conducting a controversy as to whether the lunacy of the lunatic commenced at an earlier date than the filing of the petition for the appointment of a committee cannot be allowed out of the estate, nor can counsel fees paid by the committee in carrying on a controversy after the death of the lunatic in regard to the appointment of an administrator be so allowed. In re Colvin, 4 Md. Remedy of guardian who has paid costs.— Where the guardian of a lunatic gives a bond for the prosecution of a suit by him on behalf of his ward, and on failure in the action judgment for costs is collected out of his personal estate, he cannot recover from the ward the amount so collected, under N. C. Code, § 2093, giving one who pays money on the account of another for whom his is surety a summary remedy for its collection, but his remedy is to have the amount so paid allowed by the clerk of the superior court who issued the letters of guardianship in his settlement with his ward. Stepdaughter.— A court of chancery has power to direct an allowance out of the estate of a lunatic for the support of his stepdaughter, if the income of his estate is sufficient after supporting those whom he is legally bound to support, and it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the lunatic would, if he had retained his reason, have provided for such stepdaughter's support. In re Willoughby, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 257, where, however, an allowance was refused because it did not appear probable that the lunatic, under the circumstances of his estate, would have continued to support such daughter of his wife if he had retained his reason and the control of his property.

The tendency of the later English decisions is to narrow rather than to extend the practice of granting allowances out of a lunatic's property to relations for whom he is under no legal obligation to provide. In re Evans, 21 Ch. D. 297, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 785, 30 Wkly. Rep. 645.

G. Expenditures. The guardian or committee may make reasonable and proper expenditures for the benefit of the lunatic;[40] but he cannot, without permission of the court, exceed the annual income of the estate in such expenditures.[41] Where an expenditure which could have been authorized by the court is made without permission, the court may afterward ratify it,[42] such ratification being equivalent to an order authorizing the expenditure.[43] Even persons other than the guardian or committee who have made proper expenditures for the benefit of the lunatic may be given credit or allowed to recover therefor.[44]

The committee will not be allowed personally to expend any part of the estate of the lunatic for general charity or objects of benevolence or of piety for which the lunatic himself had not been in the habit of contributing specifically and regularly while he was competent to manage his own affairs. Allowance to guardian for rent. — The guardian of an insane person who had been engaged in a manufacturing business continued to carry on the same, either at the request or with the concurrence of all parties interested in the ward's estate, the result of which was advantageous thereto. The business required storage room, and the guardian erected a building for such purpose on land of the ward's wife. In Pennsylvania it appears that the committee may lease the realty. And it has been held that the fact that the committee of a lunatic occupies and farms the property of the lunatic is not a sufficient reason why the terms of his occupancy, which were based upon a lease of the same premises by a former committee, and were practically agreed to by the family, should not be carried out, the terms being such as were customary in leases, and the committee being found faithful in all respects. Assignment of chose in action.— The laws of Ohio, which authorize the guardian of an insane person to sell personal property without an order of court, "when for the interest of the ward," do not empower him to assign the ward's part interest in a chose in action then in course of litigation by the other part owner in consideration of the assignee's promise to pay all costs and expenses of such litigation, it appearing that the guardian has been made a defendant therein because he refused to join as plaintiff; for as the guardian would not be liable to costs, and would be entitled to share in any recovery, the assignment is without any consideration and against the interest of the ward. Where the guardian of a lunatic purchased real estate for him, and the lunatic upon his restoration to reason took possession of the land and retained it for two years and then sold it to a third person and delivered possession, this was an affirmance of the purchase by the guardian.[68]

2. Liabilities[69] — a. In General. The guardian of a lunatic cannot be held personally liable for goods furnished him for the use of a lunatic's estate, where no misrepresentations were made, and the seller had full knowledge of all the facts;[70] but services rendered to a lunatic at the request of his guardian, or under a contract with the guardian, constitute a good cause of action against the guardian personally.[71] A bond given by the guardian of a lunatic, on a sale of the ward's real estate, against liens and encumbrances, must be binding on him, if at all, in his personal, and not in his representative, character.[72] Where the committee of a lunatic takes possession of land leased to the lunatic he becomes personally liable for the rent,[73] but he is not liable for the rent where he does not take possession of the demised premises.[74] The committee is not liable for losses caused without fault on his part,[75] but if he permits an agent to manage the estate in a negligent manner he must account for the money paid to the agent for the estate.[76] A conservator of an incompetent is liable on an express agreement made during his tenure after he is out of office, he having a remedy against the estate of the incompetent.[77] A committee appointed to carry on the business of a lunatic is not personally liable on contracts made in the course of such business, unless he has pledged his personal credit.[78]

b. For Interest. A guardian of an insane person is chargeable with interest where he allows his ward's money to lie idle in his hands for an unreasonable time,[79] or mingles the same with his own.[80] The guardian or committee is responthe same validity that a previous authorization would have given. Spaulding v. Bullock, 206 Pa. St. 224, 55 Atl. 965 [affirming 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 301].

c. On Investments. The guardian or committee is responsible for the propriety of his investments,[85] and if he invests in a manner not authorized by the court or the statute he is liable for a resulting loss.[86] He is also liable for any loss due to his negligence.[87] But he is not liable for losses which occur without any fault, negligence, or violation of duty on his part.[88]

I. Jurisdiction of Courts.[89] The question as to what court has the supervision and care of the estates of lunatics is one depending entirely upon the constitution, statutes, and practice of the particular state or country.[90] This jurisdiction is vested sometimes in courts of equity,[91] sometimes in the courts of common pleas[92]

exercising chancery jurisdiction,[93] and sometimes in the probate courts.[94] The jurisdiction in lunacy is strictly territorial.[95] After the committee has been discharged and the property of the lunatic restored to him on his becoming able to manage his affairs, the court has no further authority over his property except to pass the accounts of the committee.[96]

J. Rule Against Alteration in Succession. It has been laid down as a rule not to vary or change the property of the lunatic so as to effect any alteration in the succession,[97] but this rule yields to the paramount rule which makes the lunatic's welfare the first consideration.[98] So ordinary repairs upon the realty may be paid for out of the personalty,[99] or the personalty may be applied to the improvement of unproductive real estate, as by the erection of buildings thereon.[1]

Limits of jurisdiction.— In those states in which the lunacy jurisdiction is vested in the courts of probate and exercised through guardians or curators appointed by the court, the power of the court over the property of the ward is generally the same as that exercised over the property of minors and spendthrifts; that is, upon notice and for cause shown, the court may decree a sale of so much of the ward's property as is necessary for the payment of his debts or the maintenance of himself and his family. But this jurisdiction is purely legislative, limited and special; that is, so far as the statute confers jurisdiction the court may go, but no further. Modawell v. Holmes, 40 Ala. 391. And see State v. Wilcox, 24 Minn. 143; H—— v. S——, 4 N. H. 60.

Land held in trust by lunatic.— Equity has no power to order the guardian of a lunatic, on a bill by the guardian to which his ward is not a party, to transfer real estate which the lunatic held in trust to the beneficiaries or their nominees. Cooper v. Wallace, 55 N. J. Eq. 192, 36 Atl. 575.

III, c. 75, the chancellor was authorized to order sales, leases, or encumbrances of the lunatic's property in certain cases, and this authority was further extended by the statutes 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, § 124, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 124, § 38.

3. NOTICE OF APPLICATION. The alienation of the lunatic's property being solely for his benefit or that of his family, it is held that he is not strictly entitled to notice of the proceedings therefor;[16] but in some states notice to the lunatic[17] or to other persons interested in the property[18] is required. Where notice is required, it must be given for the time specified in the statute;[19] but as against the lunatic the proceedings are not rendered invalid by an imperfect publication of a notice required for other persons.[20]

4. PROCEEDINGS. The petition for an order of sale may be filed by the guardian or committee of the lunatic,[21] and in such case the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the lunatic is not necessary.[22] Where a reference is required by statute it cannot be dispensed with.[23] In a proceeding by a committee of an insane person to sell the undivided interest of such person in the oil and gas underlying a tract of land, the cotenants of such person are not necessary or proper parties.[24] The wife must be made a party to a proceeding under a statute providing that if a husband of an insane wife wishes to sell real estate and have her right of dower released he may petition the court for an order for the execution of such release.[25] On an application by the guardian of a lunatic for an order authorizing the sale of land to pay debts, it may be interposed as an affirmative defense that the guardian mismanaged the estate and should account to it for a certain sum lost through his negligence.[26] A claim of title adverse to the lunatic cannot be tried in proceedings for the sale of the lunatic's interest in land.[27]

5. By Whom Sale Made. The sale may be ordered to be made by the guardian or committee;[28] and a master in chancery or other person may be joined with the committee for that purpose,[29] or may be ordered to conduct the sale alone if the committee refuses to unite therein.[30]

6. Terms of Sale. A conservator, on selling land of his ward under order of the court, may reserve in favor of the estate damages awarded for the construction of a highway, although such reservation is not mentioned in the order of sale.[31]

7. Mode of Sale. Where the statute requires a public sale, a private sale is invalid;[32] but in the absence of any statutory prohibition the sale may be private if clearly for the best interest of the estate.[33] It has even been held that it is not necessary, in order to bind a lunatic, that the court should go through the form of a sale, if a result equally advantageous to the lunatic can be attained by adopting a fair and informal one already made.[34]

8. Who May Purchase. Where property of an insane person is sold under order of court the guardian or committee cannot become the purchaser, either directly or through a colorable purchase by a third person who in fact purchases for him.[35]

9. Confirmation. The approval of a sale of land of an insane person, made by his guardian under an order of the court, need not necessarily appear by formal entry of record, but it is sufficient if it appears from the clerk's minutes.[36] Where the order authorizes a mortgage only, and the committee makes a sale thereunder, such sale is void notwithstanding it has been confirmed by the court.[37] The county court has power to disapprove a conservator's sale made subject to approval, and order a resale of the property, where it appears that such resale is for the best interests of the estate.[38]

Validating act.— The Pennsylvania act of April 28, 1876, validating certain sales made by persons in a fiduciary capacity in the event of any irregularity or defect existing in the appointment or qualifications of such trustees, cures only defects in the proceedings of such courts as have jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and does not validate a sale under order of court made by a trustee of an insane person who was irregularly and defectively appointed by a court which had no jurisdiction to make such appointment. 36. Moore v. Davis, 85 Mo. 464.

37. Reals v. Weston, 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 67, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 807, holding further that where the order confirming the sale recites that the committee had presented a report that he had sold the premises, making no reference to any order of sale, but referring to an order of a certain date, which was an order to mortgage, these recitals create no presumption that there was any order of sale.

38. Jennings v. Dunphy, 174 Ill. 86, 50 N. E. 1045, although the sale was regularly and fairly conducted and the amount bid was a fair price for the property.

10. Setting Aside. A person under guardianship as being of unsound mind cannot maintain an action to impeach sales of property made by his guardian;[39] but where after a commission of lunacy in his case was superseded, the ward, with the aid of counsel, examined his guardian's accounts and settled with him, and received and retained the balance, and these accounts and balance included proceeds of a sale of his land, which, however, was invalid, for the reason that sufficient publication of notice of application for an order of sale was not made, he was not estopped from impeaching the sale, although he could not impeach the settlement.[40] The sale will not be set aside merely because a third person has offered a trifling advance over the price realized;[41] but a sale made subject to the approval of the court may be disapproved before confirmation where it appears that a resale will be advantageous to the estate of the lunatic.[42] A bill to set aside a decree ratifying a sale of a lunatic's property is demurrable where it is apparent from the face of the proceedings in which the assailed decree was passed that the matters relied on for setting it aside were presented and considered in that case.[43]

11. Effect and Validity. A decree for the sale of the estate of a lunatic for the payment of debts is a decree in rem, and the creditors are bound by it, although not parties to the proceedings.[44] Where under order of court the guardian sells in fee simple an estate tail of his ward, during his life, for the payment of his debts, the estate tail is extinguished and the remainder legally barred.[45] Where the committee of an insane married woman files a petition to sell her land for debts with which it is not chargeable, he is guilty of constructive fraud, and all the proceedings of the court in relation thereto are void for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter.[46] Where the committee of a lunatic sold his real estate under a decree of court, and diverted the proceeds to the payment of his own debt to the purchaser, the sale was held voidable.[47] Where the conservatrix of the estate of her insane husband, having obtained an order for the sale of real estate and sold the same, afterward made a written agreement with the purchaser for the borrowing of a sum of money, and with reference to the land being reconveyed to the estate, this agreement had no effect upon the sale, and a contention that it showed that the sale was merely colorable, and hence conveyed no title to the purchaser, was of no merit.[48] Where land of a lunatic is sold by his guardian under an order of court, and the lunatic, whose insanity does not then affect his capacity to transact business, knowingly accepts the proceeds of the sale or the benefit thereof, he is estopped from thereafter denying its validity.[49]

12. Title and Rights of Purchaser. A license to a guardian of a lunatic to sell real estate for payment of his debts is sufficient to protect the purchaser, although the record does not show by whom the debts were contracted.[50] The title of the lunatic passes to the purchaser at a sale by the guardian,[51] but the sale is subject to all existing liens or encumbrances.[52] Where the proceedings are defective, the purchaser may be allowed to have the title perfected on motion to amend the proceedings,[53] or to have the purchase-money refunded on the sale being set aside.[54]

An innocent purchaser is entitled to an equitable lien for the entire amount of pur-

13. Proceeds. Where land of a lunatic is sold the resulting fund is under the direction of the court,[55] and no creditor can claim a priority.[56] The proceeds of the sale of a lunatic's real estate are considered real estate until the incompetency is removed.[57] If the purchaser pays the purchase-money to a commissioner appointed to sell but who has not given bond as required by the decree, he does so at his own risk.[58]

14. Review. In Pennsylvania, contrary to what appears to be the general rule,[59] it is held that an appeal can be taken only from the decree confirming the sale, and not from the order of sale, this not being a final decree.[60] On a bill of review no presumption favorable to the court's action will be indulged.[61]

15. Collateral Attack. Where the court ordering the sale had jurisdiction the order or decree of sale cannot be collaterally attacked for errors or irregularities.[62]

L. Sale Under Special Statute. The legislature may by special statute authorize the guardian or committee of an insane person to sell his real estate or a part thereof.[63]

V. CONTRACTS.

A. Validity — 1. In General. Although it seems to have been formerly held that one could not plead insanity in avoidance of his contract, on the ground that he should not be allowed to thus stultify himself,[64] this, if it ever was the law, is no longer so; but it is well settled that, subject to limitations hereinafter explained, a contract entered into by a person who at the time is so insane as to be incapable of understanding what he is doing is at least voidable at his option, and in some jurisdictions absolutely void.[65] Nor can a third person other than a

A note indorsed as an accommodation, while the indorser was of sound mind, and left with the maker to be used in renewal of a similar note, and afterward presented and accepted by the bank for such purpose, is a valid charge on the estate of the indorser, although at the time of its acceptance by the bank he was in a comatose condition and incapable of transacting business. Transfer of note.— According to this view it has been held that the transfer of a note

even the deed of an insane person[71] or his power of attorney or other appointment of an agent,[72] if he has not been judicially declared insane and placed under guardianship,[73] is not void, but merely voidable at the option of himself or those representing him;[74] and it is almost universally held that this is the rule as to simple contracts.[75] According to this view the contract is binding on the other party.[76] And it has been held that a statute providing that contracts of insane by an insane payee, as it involves the making of a contract, is absolutely void, and may be impeached by the payer on the ground of the payee's insanity at the time of the transfer. Contra.— But in Ohio, where an insane person, after a guardian was appointed to obtain a pension for him, remained in the control of his property, and entered into a contract for repairs of the same — a mill, to operate which such repairs were necessary — and there was no fraud or misrepresentation in the transaction, and the repairs were done judiciously, and well worth the money, it was held that such contract would be enforced. Kimball v. Bumgardner, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 587, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 409.

After inquisition and before confirmation. — The contracts of an insane person after inquisition found and before its confirmation are void. Clark v. Caldwell, 6 Watts (Pa.) 139.

Contract by agent.— The rule applies to a contract by one acting as agent for an insane person. Thus a note executed by the son of an adjudged lunatic as the latter's agent is void. Lee v. Morris, 3 Bush (Ky.) 210. See also supra, V, A, 1, text and note 66.

Consent of guardian or committee.— Under Mo. Rev. St. (1879) § 5816, (Rev. St. (1889) § 5542), which provides that no contract of any person found to be of unsound mind, which shall be made without the consent of his guardian, shall be binding, a guardian cannot authorize his ward to transact business as if he were sane, nor can those who have notice of the adjudication obtain the consent of the guardian to trade with the ward without limitation. was made in another state.[79] Elsewhere such adjudication and guardianship merely raise a presumption of incapacity to contract, which may be rebutted by clear proof of capacity.[80] It has been held that a mere adjudication of lunacy is not conclusive of incapacity to contract where no guardian or committee has been appointed,[81] or where, although appointed, he has been discharged or the guardianship has otherwise terminated;[82] but in some states there are decisions to the 79. American Trust, etc., Co. v. Boone, 102 Ga. 202, 29 S. E. 182, 66 Am. St. Rep. 167, 40 L. R. A. 250, holding that under Civ. Code, § 3652, which provides that a lunatic cannot contract, a bank will be liable in paying a check of a person who had been lawfully adjudged to be insane, although the fact was unknown to the bank, and although the adjudication of insanity was made in another state.

80. Parker v. Davis, 53 N. C. 460. And see Blaisdell v. Holmes, 48 Vt. 492, holding that defendant was liable to plaintiff where, being under guardianship as an insane person on account of some mismanagement of his property, he hired plaintiff to do his housework, and she did it for a year, and where defendant managed his farm, property, and household affairs in his own way, without interference on the part of his guardian; and soon after plaintiff commenced work, the guardian told her to stay, and he would see her paid.

Presumption of representation by guardian. — It has been held that, although a complaint shows that plaintiff was of unsound mind when the contract under which she claims was made, it will be presumed that she was efficaciously represented in the transaction by a guardian. Knight v. Knight, 113 Ala. 597, 21 So. 407.

81. See McCormick v. Littler, 85 Ill. 62, 28 Am. Rep. 610, holding that, although a person may have been adjudged insane, yet, if no conservator has been appointed, and he is in the management of his business, and there is nothing about his appearance to indicate his incapacity to contract, if he purchases an article at a fair and reasonable price, necessary and useful in his business, the seller having no notice of his being adjudged insane, he will be liable to pay the price he agreed to pay, and it will be error to enjoin a judgment on a note given for the price.

Inquisition for admission to hospital. — The rule that an adjudication of lunacy is conclusive does not apply to statutory proceedings merely to determine whether a person is insane and in need of care and treatment for the purpose of admitting him to a hospital for the insane, and not for the purpose of determining his status with respect to managing his own affairs. Knox v. Haug, 48 Minn. 58, 50 N. W. 934; Wagener v. Harriott, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 283. And in Indiana, under Burns Annot. St. (1894) §§ 3209, 3211, 3216, 3233, 3234, relative to the examination by justices of the peace of persons alleged to be of unsound mind, to determine whether they shall be admitted to the state hospital for the insane, it is held that the fact that a person has been declared of unsound mind by two justices of the peace and sent to an insane asylum, from which he is discharged as cured, is not, after his discharge, and in the absence of conduct that would lead a prudent man to think him otherwise than sane, notice to persons dealing with him in good faith that he is incompetent. Leinss v. Weiss, 33 Ind. App. 344, 71 N. E. 254.

Necessity of adjudication as to restoration of sanity. — Where one was adjudged insane, but no guardian of her person and estate was appointed, and she was afterward discharged from the asylum in an improved condition, and thereafter recovered her reason, it was held that a contract subsequently made by her, seven years after the adjudication of insanity, was valid, without an adjudication of restoration to reason. Topeka Water-Supply Co. v. Root, 56 Kan. 187, 42 Pac. 715.

Adjudication in an action. — In an action for sick benefits claimed to be due on account of plaintiff's insanity, where there was a finding that plaintiff "was insane and disabled from following his usual business," and another that a release which he signed after the action was commenced was void because he was non compos mentis, it was held that such findings were not such a judicial determination of his insanity as to make his contract engaging the attorney to prosecute the action void, and thereby cause the action to fail. Runberg v. Johnson, 11 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 283.

82. Willwerth v. Leonard, 156 Mass. 277, 31 N. E. 299 (holding that the removal of a guardian by a decree of the supreme judicial court terminates the guardianship, and the sending of the case back to the probate court for further proceedings does not qualify the terminating effect of the removal, and that, when the guardianship of an insane person has terminated, and a controversy has arisen between third parties, one of whom claims under a contract made with the ward after the termination of the guardianship, the reason ceases for regarding the decree of the probate court as conclusive on the question of the ward's sanity); Elston v. Jasper, 45 Tex. 409 (holding that, although the deed of an insane person while actually under legal and subsisting guardianship is void, yet where, as an actual fact, the guardianship had been practically abandoned at the time of the sale, and the person who had been insane was of sound mind when the deed was executed, the contract, if fair, will be sustained).

contrary.[83] Where the appointment of a guardian for defendant is set up to escape liability on a contract, plaintiff may show that the proceedings were absolutely void.[84] A deed or other contract made prior to an inquisition of lunacy is not necessarily, but only prima facie, invalidated by a finding that the party was insane when it was made.[85]

4. Valid Contracts — a. Contracts Created by Law. The general rule that a person cannot be held liable on contracts entered into when he was insane does not prevent an insane person from being held liable quasi ex contractu — that is, on contracts implied or created by law, and for which the consent of the party is not necessary.[86]

83. Redden v. Baker, 86 Ind. 191 (holding that the disability of insanity once established by an adjudication under the statute continues and is conclusive until restoration to sanity is established in the manner prescribed by the statute, and that the adjudication has no less force before than after the appointment of a guardian, and is not affected by a discharge of the guardian upon a final settlement of his accounts); Kiehne v. Wessell, 53 Mo. App. 667 (holding that the adjudication of lunacy renders subsequent contracts by the lunatic invalid, whether he has a guardian or not; and while it stands, that is, in the absence of a decree of restoration, it is conclusive, so that its effect on the contracts of the insane person cannot be overcome by proof that he has become capable of managing his own affairs); Carter v. Beckwith, 128 N. Y. 312, 28 N. E. 582 (holding that, under the New York statute (2 Rev. St. p. 55, § 24), providing that, in case any lunatic against whom an inquisition has been found shall be restored to his right mind, and become capable of conducting his affairs, his estate shall be restored to him, has no effect on the status of the lunatic until the inquisition and commission are superseded).

84. Sears v. Terry, 26 Conn. 273. But it has been held that under a statute invalidating contracts of persons found to be of unsound mind, which are made without their guardian's consent, the other party to the contract cannot object that the verdict of the jury of inquiry was informal, and did not warrant the appointment of a guardian. Kiehne v. Wessell, 53 Mo. App. 667.

A bond and warrant of attorney executed by one who, by a subsequent inquisition, was found to have been a lunatic at the time, is not absolutely void, but may be set aside, on terms, in the discretion of the court, on hearing and considering all the facts of the case. In New York, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2335, limiting the question of insanity on an inquisition of lunacy to the time when the inquiry is being made, a finding on inquisition that a lunatic had been insane for eight months preceding cannot be used to attack the validity of mortgages executed by the lunatic within that time. Reals v. Weston, 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 67, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 807.

86. Reando v. Misplay, 90 Mo. 251, 2 S. W. 405, 59 Am. Rep. 13. Thus it has been held that if one enters into a contract with a lunatic without a knowledge of his lunacy, and, in pursuance of his contract, renders him important services, whereby he is greatly benefited, although the contract be void, the party rendering the services is entitled to just and reasonable compensation. Ballard v. McKenna, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 358. Although no contract, either express or implied, in the sense that both parties should assent thereto, can arise where one of the parties is non compos, yet a legal obligation, independent of contract, may exist, arising out of the duty of the committee to charge himself with the value of the services received by him at the hands of the ward, upon which an action may be sustained. Ashley v. Holman, 15 S. C. 97, 25 S. C. 394, 1 S. E. 13, 60 Am. Rep. 512. Where a committee having control of a non compos, who is unable to contract, yet able to render valuable services, enforces those services for his own benefit, he is liable to the ward for their value. But if the services have been enforced by the committee, not for his own profit, but for the proper discipline and healthful exercise and employment of the ward, although with incidental benefit to the committee, there is no ground for accountability, and the ward cannot recover. Ashley v. Holman, 25 S. C. 394, 1 S. E. 13, 60 Am. Rep. 512. But it has been held that the law will only imply a contract for a lunatic where it is necessary. Hines v. Potts, 56 Miss. 346. See also Bicknell v. Spear, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 389, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 920. No action can be maintained against a lunatic for money received by his guardian, without an application of it to the use and benefit of the lunatic. Hines v. Potts, 56 Miss. 346.

b. Necessaries. So also an insane person, like an infant,[87] is liable for necessaries suitable to his state and condition in life furnished to himself or to his wife or children.[88] And it has been held that this rule applies notwithstanding the fact that he has been judicially declared insane and placed under guardianship, if the guardian consents or fails to provide him with necessaries,[89] but not

Contract with attorney.— Where an attorney made a contract with a party to bring a suit without knowledge of the party's insanity, and before he had been declared incompetent, and the attorney prepared a complaint, which was never served, and received his fee in advance, it was held that the committee of the lunatic, on rescinding the contract, had a cause of action to recover the fee as money received. otherwise.[90] Such liability, however, is created by law, and therefore only quasi ex contractu, so that the amount to be recovered is the value of the necessaries furnished and not what the insane person may have promised to pay.[91] It has been held, however, that there may be a recovery on an express contract to pay for necessaries to the extent of their value,[92] and that one who lends an insane person money on his note or otherwise may recover thereon to the extent that the money is used for necessaries.[93] In determining the liability of insane persons for necessaries substantially the same rules apply as in the case of infants,[94] except that, unlike an infant,[95] he is liable for labor and materials furnished in the necessary preservation of his estate.[96] Whatever is reasonably necessary for the support, maintenance, care, and comfort of the insane person and his family according to their state and condition in life is to be regarded as necessaries.[97]

The cost of the erection of an addition to a dwelling-house, at an expense of six thousand dollars, for the comfort and convenience of a lunatic, was held a necessity, and recovery allowed therefor in Cantrill v. Cecil, 60 S. W. 16, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1121. Where a person is so insane as to attempt injury to himself and the destruction of his property, the services

To render an insane person or his estate liable for necessaries furnished they must have been furnished with intent to charge therefor and not as a mere gratuity,[98] and the credit must have been extended to the insane person or his estate and not to a third person.[99]

c. Ignorance and Good Faith of Other Party. The contract of an insane person may be avoided so long as it is wholly executory, notwithstanding the fact that the other party entered into the same in good faith and in ignorance of his infirmity;[1] and some of the courts have applied the same rule in the case of contracts which have been executed by the other party, and even though the contract was fair and the parties cannot be placed in statu quo.[2] According to

of a nurse and guard fall within the class of necessaries, as defined by law. Richardson v. Strong, 35 N. C. 106, 55 Am. Dec. 430. An insane person is liable for tuition furnished his children (Harris v. Davis, 1 Ala. 259), and for medical and surgical services to his wife (Pearl v. McDowell, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 658, 20 Am. Dec. 199).

Luxuries furnished in good faith to an insane person, as the expense of a pleasure journey, have been treated as necessaries. Kendall v. May, 10 Allen (Mass.) 59.

Services of counsel.— Where one who is restrained of his liberty against his will, and without legal process, as an insane person, employs counsel to prosecute a writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of investigating the grounds of the restraint, the counsel will be entitled to recover a reasonable compensation for his services, provided they be rendered in good faith and upon due inquiry into the causes of the confinement, and the condition of the party be such that an investigation before a judicial tribunal is proper. But to authorize the recovery of attorney's fees under an employment by a person of unsound mind to defend him in proceedings to have a trustee and committee appointed for him, it must be shown that the services rendered were reasonably necessary for the proper protection of the rights of the client. See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Insane Persons," § 125 et seq.

Illustration.— Thus where a lunatic had purchased annuities of a society, paid the money, and died, it was held that his administratrix could not recover back the money so paid on the ground that the contract was void, where the jury, although they found that the deceased was insane when he entered into the contract, also found that there was nothing to indicate this to defendant, and that the transaction was in good faith. Moulton v. Camroux, 2 Exch. 489 [affirmed in 4 Exch. 17].

Injunction bond.— Insanity is no defense to

It is otherwise if the sane party knew of the other's insanity,[4] or if the circumstances were such that as a reasonable and prudent person he should have known of it;[5] and it has been held that if the insane person has received no benefit under the contract, he may avoid it and recover what he has parted with, notwithstanding the other party's good faith.[6] So also, where the parties can be an action for damages on an injunction bond, if plaintiff was ignorant thereof, defendant being in the habit of transacting his own business. Behrens v. McKenzie, 23 Iowa 333, 92 Am. Dec. 428.

The presumption, however, is that the contract is invalid and the other party has the burden of proving the facts to bring it within the rule stated in the text. Hosler v. Beard, 54 Ohio St. 398, 43 N. E. 1040, 56 Am. St. Rep. 720, 35 L. R. A. 161.

In Louisiana, by statute, an act done by a party prior to the petition for his interdiction cannot be annulled except on proof that the cause of such interdiction notoriously existed at the time when the act was done, or that the person who dealt with the party of unsound mind could not have been deceived as to the state of his mind. Wolf v. Edwards, 106 La. 477, 31 So. 58. See also Smith's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 24; Laloire v. Lacoste, 4 La. 114; Kenney v. Dow, 10 Mart. 577, 13 Am. Dec. 342; Louisiana Bank v. Debreuil, 5 Mart. 416. Under this statute (Civ. Code, art. 1788), which provides that where there has been no interdiction, a contract will not be void on the ground of insanity unless the party is notoriously insane, the evidence of five witnesses that a man is of feeble intellect, when contradicted by that of seven witnesses, there being no evidence that the purchaser knew of the vendor's incapacity, is not sufficient evidence of notorious insanity to avoid a contract. Martinez v. Moll, 6 Fed. 724.

Contestation after death.— In Louisiana, by statute, insanity, which of itself is sufficient to strike an act with nullity, cannot be set up unless the interdiction of the insane person had been pronounced or petitioned for previous to the death of such person, except in cases in which the mental alienation manifested itself within ten days previous to the decease, or when the want of reason results from the act itself which is contested. Chevalier v. Whatley, 12 La. Ann. 651. See also Daunoy v. Clyma, 11 Mart. 557. But although no sentence of interdiction may have been pronounced, yet it will be sufficient to vitiate a contract if it can be shown that insanity or imbecility of mind has been taken advantage of. Halley v. Troester, 72 Mo. 73 (holding that where a person is of so unsound a mind that his want of mental capacity should be apparent to any one of ordinary prudence and observation conversing with him, an exchange of property made by him is invalid, and a guardian afterward appointed may recover his ward's property without tendering back that which was received in exchange for it); Matthiessen, etc., Refining Co. v. McMahon, 38 N. Contract of subscription.— Where to a complaint on a note given to erect and endow an institution of learning defendant pleaded that at the time of the execution of the note he was of unsound mind, and plaintiffs replied that at said time defendant was apparently of sound mind, and not to them known to be otherwise, and that in reliance upon his promise, before any disaffirmance by him, just debts and obligations had been incurred in purchasing property, erecting buildings, and endowing said institution, and thereby defendant was estopped from averring that he was not of sound mind, it was held that the reply was bad. Musselman v. Cravens, 47 Ind. 1.

Suretyship or guaranty.— An insane person is not bound by his contract of guaranty or suretyship even though the creditor accepted him as guarantor or surety without knowledge of his incapacity. Van Patten v. Beals, 46 Iowa 62. And see Edwards v. Davenport, 20 Fed. 756, 4 McCrary 34; Re James, 9 Ont. Pr. 88.

Renewal of note indorsed for accommodation while sane.— But it has been held that an accommodation indorser on a note given in renewal of a note on which he was also accommodation indorser, at its maturity, is not relieved of liability because of his insanity at the time of signing it, where the bank taking it in renewal had no notice of his insanity, and he was sane when the prior note was executed. Memphis Nat. Bank v.

placed in statu quo, the good faith of the sane party will not prevent the avoidance of the contract.[7]

B. Nature and Extent of Incapacity — 1. In General. The mental defect or disease necessary to entitle one to avoid his contracts on the ground of insanity need not be so great as to dethrone his reason or as to amount to an entire want of reason, but it is sufficient if he is insane to such an extent as to be incapable of comprehending or understanding the subject of the contract and its nature and probable consequences.[8] He must be insane at least to this extent; mere weakness of intellect not being enough.[9] The incapacity may result from

First stage of paresis.— Where it appeared that a party to a contract was suffering from the first stages of paresis at the time the contract was made, this was held not to show his incompetency to contract, there being no evidence to show what effect the first stage of paresis has upon one's ability so to do. Old age, however, is not of itself evidence of incapacity to enter into a binding contract. Suttles v. Hay, 41 N. C. 124; Buckey v. Buckey, 38 W. Va. 168, 18 S. E. 383. Nor is mere mental weakness accompanying old age ground for avoiding a contract, if it was of the mind, whatever the cause,[13] including that resulting from habitual drunkenness.[14]

2. Deaf and Dumb Persons. A person is not rendered incapable of entering into a binding contract merely because he is deaf and dumb, even though he has been so from his birth, if it is shown that he actually has sufficient mental capacity;[15] but prima facie such a person is incompetent.[16]

3. Temporary and Periodical Insanity. The rule avoiding the contracts of an insane person applies to a contract entered into by one who is temporarily insane.[17] On the other hand a contract is binding if it is entered into in a lucid interval,[18]

not so great as to render the party incapable of understanding the subject, nature, and probable consequences of the contract, and if there was no fraud or undue influence. Where it was objected to the validity of an agreement that one of the contracting parties was incapable of making a valid contract by reason of his faculties having become impaired through age, and it appeared that in making the agreement he was aided by his agent, who assisted and advised him in all his business transactions, the court refused to interfere to relieve against the contract. Contracts in anticipation of death.— Where a party, in anticipation of death, makes final disposition of his property by bill of sale, the test of mental capacity to do so is the same as that applicable in case of wills. Young v. Otto, 57 Minn. 307, 59 N. W. 199. The courts will jealously scrutinize contracts claimed to have been made by aged and infirm persons, to be enforced after their death, such as an alleged oral contract by a man ninety-six years old to give his property, worth nearly eight thousand dollars, to his brother's family if they would thenceforth support him, although he had made a will giving his property to his granddaughter, his only heir at law; and where the testimony is conflicting, the existence of such contract should be held not established. 14. Menkins v. Lightner, 18 Ill. 282; Bliss v. Connecticut, etc., R. Co., 24 Vt. 424. But it has been held that, although a person's mental faculties may be so far prostrated by long continued habits of intoxication as to render him, for a considerable part of the time, incompetent to make a contract, yet contracts made by him at intervals when he appears sober and rational cannot be avoided on the ground of imbecility alone, unless so unreasonable and unequal as to afford evidence that his appearance was deceptive, and his intellect really clouded and confused. Presumption and burden of proof.— But it has been held that one claiming to avoid a contract by reason of a temporary hallucination resulting from disease that existed prior to the making of the contract must show its continued existence when the contract was made, and that it was of a character affecting his capacity to make the contract. Staples v. Wellington, 58 Me. 453. So where defendant's insanity is only temporary, caused by drunkenness or excessive dissipation, the presumption is in favor of sanity, and in such case defendant must prove that insanity existed at the time of the contract. unless, in most jurisdictions, the party has been judicially determined to be insane and is under guardianship at the time of the contract.[19]

4. Monomania or Insane Delusions. A person may avoid a contract entered into by him when laboring under monomania or an insane delusion, although in other respects sane, provided the delusion is so connected with the subject-matter of the contract as to render him incapable of understanding its nature and probable consequences,[20] but not otherwise.[21]

C. Ratification and Avoidance — 1. In General. The void deed or other contract of a lunatic cannot be ratified by his guardian, or, it would seem, even by himself on restoration to sanity or by his heirs or personal representative.[22] But if the contract or deed is merely voidable,[23] it may be either ratified or disaffirmed by the party himself after he becomes sane or during a lucid interval,[24]

Presumption and burden of proof.— But where habitual insanity is shown its continuance is presumed, and the burden of proving that a contract was entered into at a lucid interval is on the other party seeking to enforce it. And proof of the lucid interval must be clear. In re Gangwere, supra. Proof of a lucid interval after derangement of the mind, adduced in support of a contract made in such interval, must be as strong and demonstrative as would be required to show insanity, and must go to the state and habit of the mind, and not merely to an accidental conversation, or behavior on a particular occasion. Ricketts v. Jolliff, 62 Miss. 440. been held that the voidable contract or deed of an insane person cannot be avoided, where the other party acted in good faith and in ignorance of his insanity, without restoration of the consideration,[34] at least where a beneficial consideration has been received by the insane person.[35] The consideration need not be restored if the other party knew of the insane person's infirmity and took advantage of it.[36]

therefore intention, actual or implied, is a necessary ingredient, as in the case of libel, slander, and malicious prosecution.[40] And this liability, it has been held, is not affected by the fact that plaintiff knew the mental condition of defendant and might have prevented the act,[41] or that defendant was under guardianship at the time.[42]

B. Liability For Libel or Slander.[43] The question whether or not an insane person is liable to an action for his libel or slander is somewhat unsettled. It has been held that he is liable for the actual damage done by his slanders and libels, the same as for his other torts.[44] On the other hand it has been held that in an action for slander insanity is a good plea in defense,[45] or might be shown under the general issue in such an action either in excuse or in mitigation of damages.[46]

C. Measure of Damages.[47] Since an insane defendant is supposed to be incapable of criminal intent, in an action against him for tort, the damages are limited to compensation for the acts or injury sustained by plaintiff, and punitive or vindictive damages cannot be recovered.[48] And this is so even in those jurisdictions where punitive damages are recoverable in actions of tort against sane defendants.[49]

2. INSANITY AFTER COMMISSION OF ACT — a. In General. At common law, and in some jurisdictions by express statutory provision, if a person is insane when arraigned for a crime, he cannot be required to plead or to be tried, whether he was insane when he committed the act or not;[52] but the court, provided there are indications or a showing of probable insanity, should determine such issue, either

In Florida a plea in a criminal prosecution that at the time of the finding of the indictment defendant was and still is adjudged insane by a court of competent jurisdiction is properly overruled on demurrer, as Acts (1895), p. 125, c. 4357, § 6, provide that the provisions of the acts prescribing the mode of procedure in adjudging persons to be insane shall not apply to persons charged with criminal offenses who plead insanity. Reyes v. State, (1905) 38 So. 257.

The test of insanity, when it is set up to prevent a trial, is whether the accused is mentally competent to make a rational defense, and not whether he is able to distinguish between right and wrong. Freeman v. People, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216. See also In re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 330, 61 Pac. 1120, 50 L. R. A. 378; Guagando v. State, 41 Tex. 626; Youtsey v. U. S., 97 U. One capable of rightly comprehending his own condition in reference to the proceeding against him, and of conducting his defense in a rational manner, is not insane within the meaning of the rule, itself or by a jury or commission, according to the statute or practice,[53] and if he is found to be insane, remand him to jail, or, when authorized by statute, commit him to an asylum or hospital until his recovery.[54] So also if the accused becomes insane during the trial, the proceeding must stop;[55] and if he becomes insane after conviction, judgment cannot be given or sentence pronounced so long as he is in such condition;[56] nor can he be executed if he becomes insane after judgment and sentence.[57]

b. Restoration to Sanity. Such insanity, however, does not abate or otherwise dispose of the prosecution, except to delay it, and the accused may be tried if he afterward becomes sane again.[58]

3. Arrest, Commitment, and Bail. The fact that a person is insane does not exempt him from liability to arrest if he commits an act which would be a crime if committed by a sane person,[59] unless he is exempted by express statutory provision.[60] And the fact that a person is in fact insane, where he has not been judicially adjudged insane and placed under guardianship or in an asylum or hospital, does not prevent his being committed or held to bail until he is tried or discharged according to law.[61] In some states by statute one who has been

When two persons are jointly indicted, and one of them has been adjudged insane on a separate trial of that issue, and ordered to be confined in the insane hospital and his trial postponed until he becomes sane, and the other is subsequently arraigned and tried alone, there is a severance of the cases of the two defendants. The test is whether the accused is "by reason of a disease of the mind unable to understand the nature of the indictment upon which he was convicted, his plea thereto, and the verdict thereon, when explained to him by the court, and is unable to comprehend his own condition in reference to such proceeding, and by reason thereof might not make known to the court or the attorneys in charge of his defense the facts within his knowledge, if any, which would show that judgment should not be pronounced against him," but "ignorance of the law is not competent or sufficient to show such incapacity." State v. Helm, 69 Ark. 167, 173, 61 S. judicially adjudged insane cannot be held to bail or imprisoned on a criminal charge.[62]

4. INDICTMENT. A grand jury, it has been held, has no authority by law to ignore a bill of indictment on the ground of insanity, but it is their duty to find the indictment, leaving the question of insanity to be properly raised and determined afterward.[63]

B. Examination and Determination as to Sanity — 1. IN GENERAL. Where, when a person charged with crime is arraigned, or after he has been convicted, but before judgment and sentence, it is suggested or appears to the court that he may be insane, the question of his sanity may be inquired into and determined by the judge himself or by aid of a jury summoned and impaneled for that purpose;[64] and so in the case of insanity after judgment and sentence and before execution thereof.[65] In most jurisdictions special provision for examination and determination of this question is now made by statute.[66] Provision is also made for examination into the sanity of persons charged with crime before their arraignment or after judgment and sentence,[67] as in the case of persons who have been indicted or who are in confinement under indictment, before or after conviction,[68] or who Comp. Laws (1885), c. 60, § 35) providing that "no insane person or habitual drunkard shall be held to bail, nor shall his body be taken in execution on any civil or criminal action," and that an insane person committed by a magistrate in default of bail must be discharged from custody on habeas corpus on the application of the guardian of his person and estate.

Motion for new trial.— It has been held that the insanity of defendant at the time of his trial may be made the ground of a motion for a new trial, and an inquisition then had. U. S. v. Lancaster, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,555, 7 Biss. 440.

Practice in appellate court.— It has been held in Tennessee that where no plea of present insanity has been interposed in defendant's behalf in the lower court, and there is anything in the record or conduct of defendant to raise a just suspicion of his present insanity, the supreme court will, of its own motion, make inquiry into his present mental state; and if he is found to be insane will make proper recommendation for commutation of his sentence, and for his removal to the asylum for the insane. Green v. State, 88 Tenn. 634, 14 S. W. 489.

Persons "in confinement."— A person indicted in the circuit court for a felony, and enlarged on bail to answer, is not in confinement, within the meaning of the Alabama statute, which authorizes the circuit judge to order an inquiry as to the sanity of persons "in confinement under indictment," etc., and to direct their discharge from imprisonment and removal to an insane asylum. Ex p. Trice, 53 Ala. 546.

Jurisdiction in court or in judge.— The jurisdiction given by the Alabama statute to the circuit judge to order an inquiry as to the sanity of persons in confinement under indictment, and direct their removal to an insane asylum, vests in the judge, and not in the court. Ex p. Trice, 53 Ala. 546.

Notice to the person affected by the proceeding is indispensable to its validity, and the record must recite the existence of every fact on which the jurisdiction is based; otherwise the judgment is a mere nullity. Ex p. Trice, 53 Ala. 546.

Discretion of court.— Under that portion of N. Y. Code Cr. Proc. § 658, which gives the court power "if a defendant in confinement under indictment appears to be at any time before or after conviction insane," to appoint a commission to examine him and report "as to his sanity at the time of the examination," it is only when the necessity of such an examination is made to appear that the court is bound to order an examination, and whether such necessity does appear is left to the discretion of the court. People v. McElvaine, 125 N. Y. 596, 26 N. E. 929. See also People v. Tobin, 176 N. Y. 278, 68 N. E. 359. The court may review the findings of the commission, and adopt or reject them, as the evidence and law requires. People v. Rhinelander, 2 N. Y. Cr. 335. Under the statutes of Georgia, however, where a petition and proper affidavits of defendant's insanity are presented to the judge, it is his imperative duty, and not merely a matter of discretion, to order a trial of the question. Sears v. State, 112 Ga. 382, 37 S. E. 443. And see Lee v. State, 118 Ga. 5, 43 S. E. 994.

Res adjudicata.— It is not error for the court to refuse to grant an application after conviction for an inquisition of lunacy involving, if granted, a consideration of the question of insanity at a time prior to the trial by the jury of a plea of insanity, and not involving a question of insanity arising after conviction. State v. Potts, 49 La. Ann. 1500, 22 So. 738. And see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 509 note 78. But the fact that after a conviction and sentence for murder a motion for a new trial on the ground that defendant was insane when the offense was committed and at the time of the trial has been overruled after a hearing of the same and the judgment has been affirmed on appeal does not bar an application for a trial of the question of defendant's insanity since conviction as provided for by statute. Sears v. State, 112 Ga. 382, 37 S. E. 443. And see Lee v. State, 118 Ga. 5, 43 S. E. 994.

69. In Maryland, under Code (1889), art. 59, §§ 4–11, providing for judicial proceedings to pass upon the alleged insanity of persons charged with crime, and requiring the court, or judge in vacation, to commit defendant, if found to be insane, to a suitable asylum, and to appoint a trustee of his estate, who shall give bond for his support, etc., and declaring that the statute shall apply "to the case of any person who may be arrested on any process issued by any Court or Judge of this State, founded on oath, requiring security to keep the peace, and who shall fail to give such security," it was held that where an application to a judge of the circuit court in vacation shows that the person alleged to be insane is in the custody of the sheriff under a peace warrant issued by a magistrate, the judge may proceed under the statute to ascertain the fact of insanity, commit the insane person to the asylum, and appoint a trustee of his estate, etc., without going through the useless formality of issuing a new process to the sheriff for the arrest of the person already in his custody, and ascertaining that no one would become his security to keep the peace. Devilbiss v. Bennett, 70 Md. 554, 17 Atl. 502.

In England see In re Maltby, 7 Q. B. D. 18, 14 Cox C. C. 609, 45 J. P. 681, 50 L. J. Q. B. 413, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 711, 29 Wkly. Rep. 678.

In Canada it was held in Re Sarault, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 448, that a magistrate, on preliminary inquiry after an arrest upon a warrant, could not remand the accused for eight days for the purpose of a medical examination as to his sanity on the mere suggestion of the police officer and without the personal presence of the accused.

70. See Sears v. Candler, 112 Ga. 381, 37 S. E. 442 (under sentence of death); Clarion County v. Western Pennsylvania Hospital, 111 Pa. St. 339, 3 Atl. 97 (convict in prison).

In Pennsylvania, however, under the acts of May 14, 1874, and May 8, 1883, permitting an application to the courts on the part of the persons in charge of a penitentiary, prison, or hospital for the insane, to inquire into the sanity of any person convicted of a crime, have no application to the case of a person convicted of murder in the first degree, the remedy in such case being by application to the governor. By whom application must be made. Under the Pennsylvania acts of May 14, 1874, and May 8, 1883, permitting an application to the courts on the part of the authorities of any prison, penitentiary, or hospital for the insane, to inquire into the sanity of any person convicted of a crime, such application must be made by the authorities named in the statute and not by counsel for the convict or others. Baranoski's Case, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 264.

Judicial proceeding; review.— Under Ga. Pen. Code, § 1047, providing for an inquisition by a jury to determine the sanity of a convict sentenced to death, the proceeding is a judicial one, and the refusal of a judge have been acquitted on the ground of insanity.[71] In the absence of a statute a court or judge has no authority to inquire into the sanity of a person who has been indicted and is at large on bail.[72]

2. As to Restoration to Sanity. Since the insanity of a defendant at the time of arraignment, during trial, after conviction, or after judgment, does not prevent his trial, sentence, or punishment, as the case may be, if he subsequently becomes sane,[73] the court may at any time, even without the aid of a statute, cause him to be brought before it for an inquiry as to his sanity with a view to further proceedings if he be found to be sane, and such inquiry may be had as often as the court may deem necessary.[74] In many jurisdictions provision for such inquiry is now made and the practice regulated by statute.[75] to take any action upon an application therefor is reviewable by the supreme court. Sears v. Candler, 112 Ga. 381, 37 S. E. 442. Under the former statute it was held that the proceeding was not a judicial one, so that the verdict or finding therein could not be reviewed on certiorari (Carr v. State, 98 Ga. 89, 27 S. E. 148), and refusal of the judge to enter upon such investigation could not be reviewed (Baughn v. State, 100 Ga. 554, 28 S. E. 68, 38 L. R. A. 577).

71. See infra, VII, C, 3.

72. Ex p. Trice, 53 Ala. 546, holding also that such authority is not conferred by the fact that the property of persons in the neighborhood of the alleged insane person is in danger at his hands.

73. See supra, VII, A, 2, b.

74. State v. Pritchett, 106 N. C. 667, 11 S. E. 357.

In North Carolina, under Code (1883), § 2255, directing judges to commit insane persons charged with crime to an insane asylum, but making no provision for the discharge and bringing to trial of persons so confined when restored to sanity, it was held that the court did not lose jurisdiction of an insane defendant by committing him to an asylum until he should be restored to sanity, when the authorities of the asylum were directed to notify the court, that he might be returned for trial, and that the court had authority, without any discharge or other formal action on the part of such authorities, to cause him, by a writ of habeas corpus or order, to be brought before it from time to time for examination, and to put him on trial whenever it should be ascertained that he was competent to plead. And it was held that a defendant so committed could, after his escape from the asylum and recapture, be brought directly to trial, if found to be sane, without any certificate or action by the asylum authorities. State v. Pritchett, 106 N. C. 667, 11 S. E. 357. Since this decision special provision has been made for such cases by Laws (1899), c. 1, § 64 (Code (1906), § 4621).

The opinion of the superintendent of the asylum as to the mental condition of the prisoner while under his charge is competent evidence upon the question whether such insanity was feigned. State v. Pritchett, 106 N. C. 667, 11 S. E. 357.

75. See In re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 330, 61 Pac. 1120, 50 L. R. A. 378.

The superintendent of an insane asylum is not the sole and final judge of restoration to sanity under Cal. Pen. Code, §§ 1370, 1372, providing that when a defendant in a criminal case who is pronounced insane pending trial and committed to the state insane asylum becomes sane, the superintendent must give notice of that fact, and thereupon the sheriff shall take defendant into custody until he is brought to trial or judgment, and if the superintendent fails to give such notice, a prisoner may assert his right to a speedy trial by means of the writ of habeas corpus, and if the court, after a hearing, concludes that he is sane, it has the power, and it is its duty to order him into the custody of the court where the charge against him is pending in order that the court may bring him to trial or pronounce judgment. In re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 330, 61 Pac. 1120, 50 L. R. A. 378; Gardner v. Jones, 126 Cal. 614, 59 Pac. 126.

Test of restoration to sanity.— In determining whether one has become sane so that he may be tried for a crime, the question is not one of absolute sanity in the medical sense, but the test is whether he is sufficiently sane to make a rational defense. See supra, VII, A, 2, a, notes 52, 56. Under Cal. Pen. Code, §§ 1370, 1372, providing that a defendant in a criminal case who is pronounced insane pending trial shall be committed to the state insane asylum, and that upon his becoming "sane" the superintendent must give notice of that fact, whereupon the sheriff shall take defendant into custody until he is brought to trial or judgment, a defendant who has been thus committed to the asylum is to be deemed sane within the meaning of the statute when his memory is unimpaired, and he is in possession of every faculty requisite to the defense of the accusation against him, although suffering from a chronic and latent disease of the brain, which, under the excitement of intoxicating drink, to which he is predisposed, will lead him to the commission of criminal acts. In re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 330, 61 Pac. 1120, 50 L. R. A. 378.

Trial of question of insanity.— The fact that the accused had been in the insane asylum, and that his discharge as recovered was not entered till after his escape from the asylum is insufficient to warrant submitting to trial the question of his present insanity, under Cal. Pen. Code, § 1368, authorizing such submission "if a doubt arises as to the

C. Custody and Confinement — 1. In General. When it is determined before or during trial or after conviction that defendant is insane, so that he cannot be tried, sentenced, or punished, the only thing the court can do in the absence of a statute is to remand him to jail or prison.[76] In most jurisdictions, however, provision is now made by statute for his commitment to an asylum or hospital until recovery.[77] Statutes also provide for removal to an insane hospital or asylum of convicts who have become insane before execution or expiration of their sentence.[78]

2. On Restoration to Sanity. Provision is very generally made by statute for the transfer of insane persons under indictment or conviction from the asylum or hospital to the custody of the sheriff of the proper county for trial or judgment, or for the transfer of insane convicts to prison, on their restoration to sanity.[79] sanity of the defendant." People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 440, 48 Pac. 389.

Record.— Where it appears in the record of a criminal case that the accused has been regularly found by a jury to be insane and committed to an asylum, before he can be put upon trial on the indictment the record must be made to show by an entry of the court that the steps prescribed by statute (Ohio Rev. St. § 7243) have been taken by the superintendent having him in charge and the prosecuting attorney, in the matter of notice, issuance of a capias and commitment to jail, and that the condition of the accused has changed from insane to sane. It is not enough that this appears from the affidavit of the prosecuting attorney made after trial and conviction. Brock v. State, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. 364, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 467.

In Louisiana, where a party under indictment is found to be insane, and the judge of the criminal district court remands him to the parish prison, without a commitment to the insane asylum, the judge of the civil district court has authority, under Rev. St. § 1768, to inquire into the facts and circumstances of the case, and if, in his opinion, the prisoner is dangerous to the citizens and the peace of the state, to commit him to the state insane asylum. State v. Uniacke, 48 La. Ann. 1230, 20 So. 749.

In Maine, Rev. St. (1903) c. 144, § 19 (Rev. St. (1891) c. 143, § 15), providing that two justices of the peace may remove an insane person to the hospital on refusal of the municipal officers of the town to comply with section 16 (12) authorizing them, on the petition of any relative of an insane person, to examine into his condition, and send him to the insane hospital, does not give them jurisdiction so to make removal where such person is legally confined in jail. Gray v. Houlton, 63 Me. 566.

In Pennsylvania it was held that the fact that the state hospital for the insane was organized after the passage of the act of March 31, 1860, relating to the custody and control of the criminal insane, did not prevent the act from applying to such hospital, as the change of place of custody did not change the method of government. Clearfield County v. Cameron Tp. Poor Dist., 135 Pa. St. 86, 19 Atl. 952. The acts of April 14, 1845, and April 8, 1861, relating to the government and control of the criminal insane, would apply to the Danville hospital for the insane without reënactment by the act of March 27, 1873, organizing it; and their application was not affected by the fact that their reënactment was attempted in section 4 of the act of organization by a simple reference to them, contrary to the provisions of Const. (1874) art. 3, § 6. Clearfield County v. Cameron Tp. Poor Dist., supra. Under the act of May 14, 1874, giving jurisdiction to commit insane criminals to insane hospitals to any court having cognizance of the crime, or the court convicting the prisoner, only the courts of the county where the prisoner was tried have jurisdiction. In Tennessee the act of 1871 (Code (1896), § 2631 et seq.), providing for confining in the asylum a defendant whom the jury "believe" to be insane, refers to his mental condition at the time of the trial, and not at the time of the offense. Firby v. State, 3 Baxt. 358.

And even in the absence of such provision, where the court has committed a person under indictment or conviction to an asylum under statutory authority, it has the power, on his subsequently becoming sane, to order his discharge into the custody of the sheriff for the purpose of trial or judgment.[80]

3. AFTER ACQUITTAL ON GROUND OF INSANITY. Even when a defendant is acquitted by the verdict of a jury on the ground of insanity, the court may and should remand him to the custody of the sheriff or marshal on being satisfied that he is still insane and that it would be dangerous to permit him to be at large, unless some other provision for such cases is made by statute.[81] Express provision, however, is generally made for such cases by a statute authorizing the court to commit such a defendant to an asylum until he becomes sane, if his discharge shall be deemed dangerous to the public peace or safety.[82] A statute providing cian, who had intended to discharge him in a few days, and who believed that the patient was then restored to reason, caused his discharge to be recorded as "recovered," it was held that this was a valid exercise of the physician's authority, under Cal. Acts (1875–1876), p. 135, to discharge such patients as, "in his opinion," have recovered. People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 440, 48 Pac. 389.

Expiration of term of imprisonment.— Under N. H. Gen. Laws, c. 10, § 22 (Pub. St. (1901) c. 10, § 27), providing that any person committed to an insane asylum may be discharged when the cause of commitment ceases, but any person so discharged, who was under imprisonment when committed, and whose period of imprisonment has not expired, shall be remanded to prison, a person discharged from the asylum cannot be remanded to prison if at the time of his discharge the term of his imprisonment has expired. In Canada it was held in Reg. v. Martin, 2 Nova Scotia 322, that it was the duty of the executive government of the province to assume the custody and care of persons acquitted of criminal charges on the ground of insanity, which by the common law of England was vested in the crown; and that a person acquitted of murder on the ground of insanity at the time of the deed, and kept in confinement by order of the governor would not be released by the court on habeas corpus.

Jurisdiction.— In Pennsylvania the court or law judge of that county only in which there could be a lawful trial of the prisoner has jurisdiction to appoint a commission for the removal to the hospital of one acquitted of a crime on the ground of insanity. Clarion County v. Western Pennsylvania Hospital, 111 Pa. St. 339, 3 Atl. 97.

Periodical insanity; epilepsy.— Under Miss. Code, § 1468, providing that when any indicted person is acquitted on the ground of insanity, and the jury certify that he is still insane, and dangerous, he shall be confined in a state asylum for the insane, where defendant was acquitted of murder on the ground of insanity, and the jury so certified, the judgment sentencing him to the insane asylum should be affirmed, although he was an epileptic, and his fits and insanity occurred only at irregular intervals, he at other times being sane. Caffey v. State, 78 Miss. 645, 29 So. 396.

Effect of discharge as sane prior to trial.— Where an adjudication of present insanity against an indicted person and consequent commitment to an insane asylum under a statute is followed by a discharge as of sound mind and an order of court thereon to put the accused on trial, this determination that the accused is now sane does not preclude his commitment to the asylum again, on the ground that he is a dangerous person, as authorized by statute, if the verdict acquits him on the ground of insanity at the time of the offense. People v. Walsh, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 299.

Order of commitment.— Under Ballinger Annot. Codes & St. Wash. § 6959, declaring that when any person is acquitted of an offense by reason of insanity the jury shall so state in their verdict, and, if the discharge of such insane person shall be deemed dangerous to the community, the court may order him to be committed to prison, an order of commitment "to await the further order of the court" is proper, and is not void for uncertainty. Ex p. Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 81 Pac. 552, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 540.

Restoration to sanity; discharge.— Where a person has been acquitted of a crime upon the ground of insanity and committed to a for restraining prisoners who are acquitted on the ground of insanity contemplates insanity existing at the time of the trial or acquittal.[83] The legislature cannot constitutionally authorize confinement of a defendant who is acquitted on the ground of insanity when he committed the act, unless he is also insane at the time of his commitment.[84] The statute must also, to be constitutional, properly safeguard against restraint after restoration to sanity.[85] An order committing a defendant to an asylum under such a statute is not a judgment or sentence on hospital for the insane, under the Pennsylvania acts of March 31, 1860, and May 14, 1874, and his sanity has been restored, the court has power under the latter act, upon petition filed on his behalf and after notice to the district attorney and the prosecutor and full investigation in open court, to discharge the prisoner from confinement; and it is not necessary to sue out a writ of habeas corpus. In re Lukens, 11 Pa. Dist. 146, 27 Pa. Co. Ct. 3.

Effect of verdict; subsequent inquiry.— In Pennsylvania, where the jury in a criminal case has found the prisoner not guilty by reason of insanity, the verdict is conclusive as to that fact; and a subsequent application by the prisoner to be discharged as no longer of unsound mind cannot be supported by mere evidence of experts or others that the prisoner is not now of unsound mind; there must be evidence of a change of mental condition. Com. v. Bennet, 15 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 515. Where an application is made to discharge a prisoner who has been acquitted of homicide on the ground of insanity, the evidence must be sufficient to show not only that his mental condition has changed and his sanity been restored, but also, under the act of April 20, 1869, that he is now safe to be at large. Com. v. Bennet, supra.

Presumption.— Where it was established in a prosecution for homicide by a verdict of the jury, rendered in accordance with 2 Ballinger Annot. Codes & St. Wash. § 6959, that defendant was insane at the time of the homicide, and he was acquitted on that ground, it will be presumed on a petition by defendant for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain a discharge from commitment for insanity under the statute that the same condition continues until the contrary is affirmatively proven by him. Ex p. Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 81 Pac. 552, 1 L. But 2 Ballinger Annot. Codes & St Wash. § 6959, providing that, when any person indicted for an offense is acquitted by reason of insanity, the jury shall so state in their verdict, and if his discharge be deemed dangerous to the community, the court may commit him to prison, does not prevent the insane person from demanding an investigation by the court at any time of the question of his restoration to sanity, so as to be held invalid on that ground. Ex p. Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 81 Pac. 552, 1 L. D. Support and Maintenance — 1. In General. Where a statute authorizes commitment to an insane asylum or hospital of insane convicts or persons charged with crime, the county from which he is sent, or the county of his residence, is sometimes made liable to the asylum or hospital for his support and maintenance;[88] but is allowed to recover the amount paid for such maintenance, and for the removal, from any other county, town, city, or district, as the case may be, liable for his maintenance elsewhere under the poor laws.[89] To render a county, town,

In Massachusetts, St. (1862) c. 223, providing that the support of lunatics in state hospitals shall be paid by themselves if able, and by the towns of their settlement if they are not able, does not apply to sane persons acquitted of homicide because of insanity at the time of the homicide and committed to a hospital for life under St. (1873) c. 227. Gleason v. West Boylston, 136 Mass. 489.

In New Hampshire the county from which a pauper prisoner is sentenced does not become liable for his support at the asylum for the insane after the expiration of his sentence, he having been transferred, as insane, from the state prison to the asylum, under N. H. Pub. St. c. 255, par. 4, providing that a prisoner may be transferred, when insane, to the asylum, to be kept there at the expense of the state, when it will be for the benefit of the person and the welfare of the public. New Hampshire Insane Asylum v. Belknap County, 69 N. H. 174, 44 Atl. 928.

In New York under Laws (1874), c. 446, tit. 1, art. 2, § 32, providing that when a poor insane criminal should be committed to a state lunatic asylum the expense should be paid by the county from which he should be sent, and might be recovered from any town, city, or county liable for his maintenance elsewhere, and under the charter of the city of Kingston, providing that the city shall not be liable for the support of paupers or lunatics of the residue of the county, and that the residue of the county shall not be burdened with the maintenance of those of the city, it was held that a county in whose jail a poor insane criminal, a resident of Kingston, was confined, and whence he was removed to an asylum for insane criminals by order of the county judge, might recover the expense of his removal and maintenance from the city. Suffolk County v. Kingston, 50 Hun 435, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 221 [affirmed in 115 N. Y. 650, 21 N. E. 1118]. But since Laws (1874), c. 446, § 14, imposing on counties the duty of caring for and maintaining resident indigent insane persons was repealed by Laws (1896), c. 545, § 65, devising a new scheme whereby such persons are to be maintained at the expense of the state, it has been held that where an indigent resident of one county is charged with crime in another county, and is committed by the court to an insane asylum on a plea of insanity, there is no general liability of the county of his residence to reimburse the county from which he was sent for sums paid by it for his maintenance in the asylum after such repeal, under Code Cr. Proc. § 662, providing that, when a person pleading insanity in criminal proceedings is sent to a state lunatic asylum, the expenses incident thereto are in the first instance chargeable to the county from which he was sent, but that such county may recover from the estate of defendant, if he have any, or from a relative, town, city, or county bound to provide for and maintain him elsewhere. Jefferson County v. Oswego County, 102 N. Y. App. Div. 232, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 709. Under the direct provisions of Laws (1896), c. 545, § 101, as amended by Laws (1899), c. 260, when an insane inmate of a state hospital, committed thereto on the order of a court of criminal jurisdiction, is transferred to the Matteawan state hospital, his expenses are to be paid by the county in which the criminal charge arose, if he was then a resident of that county, and in other cases are a charge against the state. Jefferson County v. Oswego County, supra.

In Pennsylvania, under the act of April 14, 1845, providing that where an insane person charged with an offense is committed to the asylum, the expenses shall be paid by the county to which he belongs by residence, and the poor district to which the insane person belongs be chargeable with his maintenance, when a lunatic is committed to the state lunatic hospital the county is primarily liable to the hospital for the expenses of maintenance, city, or district liable for the removal, support, and maintenance of an insane person under the statutes, the commitment must have been authorized,[90] and the mandatory provisions of the statute must have been complied with.[91]

2. LIABILITY OF ESTATE OF INSANE PERSON. The statutes sometimes provide for the appointment of a trustee for the estate of persons charged with crime and found insane and for their support out of their estate,[92] or render their estate, if any, liable to the county, town, city, or district which has paid for their maintenance.[93]

VIII. ACTIONS BY OR AGAINST INSANE PERSONS OR THEIR REPRESENTATIVES.[94]

A. In General — 1. ACTIONS BY INSANE PERSONS. While anciently the rule was otherwise,[95] it is now well settled that an insane person for whom no guardian or committee has been appointed has, in the absence of a statute, the same right to sue as a sane person,[96] although generally suits are required to be brought in his

91. Certificate of settlement or residence. — In Pennsylvania to render a poor district liable, under the acts of May 14, 1874, and June 25, 1895, to the county for the expense of the removal and maintenance of an insane criminal committed to a state hospital for the insane, it is necessary that the committing court should certify to the trustees of the hospital, on notice to the poor district, that such poor district was the legal settlement or place of residence of the insane criminal, as required by the act of April 14, 1845. Montour County v. Danville, etc., Poor Dist., 12 Pa. Dist. 357. He acted in good faith, and on being asked by plaintiff about her money, he replied that he had it

name by some person as next friend.[97] A judgment at law is neither void nor voidable merely because plaintiff is a lunatic.[98] Where, however, an insane person has a guardian or committee, every suit respecting his person or estate must, with certain exceptions, be brought by and in the name of the guardian or committee,[99] or in the name of the insane person by the guardian or committee.[1] But a petition may be filed by a next friend in the name of an insane person for removal of his guardian,[2] unless some other remedy is prescribed by statute.[3]

2. Actions in Behalf of Insane Persons.[4] Subject to some exceptions and limitations, the committee or guardian of an insane person is generally authorized to enforce, in behalf of the ward, any cause of action, whether legal or equitable, which the ward himself might enforce if sane.[5] An insane person's wife as such and that he was saving it for her. There was no claim that defendant ever had any other money of plaintiff than that collected on the notes, and no objection was raised by plaintiff to his possession of the money. It was held that there was such a ratification of defendant's action that a demand on him was essential to the bringing of an action for the recovery of the money collected on the notes after plaintiff's restoration to reason. Biren v. Hall, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 747.

Bastardy proceeding.— It has been held that an unmarried woman who is an imbecile and incompetent to testify as a witness cannot institute and prosecute a proceeding in bastardy under a statute which requires that such a proceeding shall be instituted by a complaint on oath by the woman, and does not allow the proceeding to be instituted by any other person. Mere weak-mindedness.— Whether one absolutely non compos mentis can or cannot bring and maintain an action, in his own name, one who, although very weak in mind, has enough capacity to understand the nature of a particular cause of action and will enough to desire to bring suit thereon may do so without a next friend or guardian. The committee may maintain trover for the taking of property from the ward under the terms of a mortgage executed before the appointment of the committee but within the time for which the lunatic's insanity was judicially determined, where the mortgagee had knowledge of the disability. Recovery for injuries to estate.— Under W. Va. Code, c. 58, § 37, it is the duty of the committee of an insane person to sue for injuries done to the corpus or income of the real or personal estate of his ward. Johnson v. Chapman, 43 W. Va. 639, 28 S. E. 744.

Recovery of ward's will.— Cal. Code Civ.

has no authority to maintain an action on his behalf;[6] nor have his prospective heirs such authority.[7]

3. ACTIONS AGAINST INSANE PERSONS.[8] An insane person not under guardianship may be sued the same as a sane person.[9] At common law the rule was the same after inquisition of lunacy and the appointment of a guardian or committee;[10] but now if there be a committee or guardian it is generally necessary to join him as a party defendant,[11] and in some states plaintiff is required to obtain leave of Proc. § 1800, providing that a guardian may recover "money, goods, or effects, or an instrument in writing, belonging to the ward or to his estate," from any person who has "concealed, embezzled, or conveyed away" the same, refers to such "instruments" only as the guardian is entitled to as assets or evidence of his ward's title to property; and it does not authorize the guardian of a lunatic to recover the will of his ward from a person in whose custody the ward had placed it before she was declared insane. Mastick v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 94 Cal. 347, 29 Pac. 869.

Right to avoid conveyances made before guardianship.— The committee or guardian may in a proper case sue to set aside conveyances made by the lunatic before the committee or guardian was appointed. Effect of appeal in lunacy proceedings.— A bill for discovery and delivery of the property of a lunatic may be filed by the committee notwithstanding the removal of the record of the lunacy proceedings to the supreme court by appeal from the order of commitment. Equitable Trust Co. v. Garis, 190 Pa. St. 544, 12 Atl. 1022, 70 Am. St. Rep. 644.

Suit to set aside guardian's sale.— Equity has jurisdiction to set aside a colorable sale by a guardian of an incompetent of his ward's land, whereby the property passed into his own hands, although the sale was made under the jurisdiction of the probate court. Goodell v. Goodell, 173 Mass. 140, 53 N. E. 275.

Conditions precedent to bringing suit.—The committee of a lunatic cannot trench upon the corpus of the lunatic's estate for the bringing of a suit, unless he first obtains leave of court, or unless he shows that there was great necessity for bringing the suit, or advantage to accrue to his beneficiary from bringing it. A suit for divorce must abate, where it appears that defendant is and has been adjudged a lunatic, for the court can take no jurisdiction of or obtain service upon an insane person. Rhude v. Rhude, 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 684.

Suit by guardian against ward.— Equity will not entertain a bill against a lunatic by a person acting as his guardian de facto for payment of what may be found due him. The proper proceeding in such case is by petition. Tally v. Tally, 22 N. C. 385, 24 Am. Dec. 407.

Foreign committee.— An appointment of a committee of the person and estate of a court before instituting suit against an adjudged incompetent.[12] After restoration to sanity the former lunatic may of course be sued the same as any other person.[13]

4. Actions Against Representatives of Insane Persons.[14] The committee or guardian of an insane person is subject to suit for breach of his own duties and obligations,[15] but a guardian or committee cannot be sued on claims against the lunatic by a court of competent jurisdiction of another state does not divest the courts of this state of their ordinary jurisdiction to proceed against the lunatic by action. Bayard v. Scanlon, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 487.

Reversal of order of appointment.— A decree of the probate court appointing a guardian for defendant as an insane person which has been reversed on appeal is not a sufficient objection to the maintenance of a suit commenced against him after the appeal but before the reversal. 13. Harris v. Davis, 1 Ala. 259 (where a wife filed a bill for divorce and alimony on the ground that the husband was a lunatic, and the chancellor made an order allowing one thousand dollars per year for the support and maintenance of herself and children, and the husband was afterward restored to sanity, and the bill dismissed, and it was held that assumpsit would lie against the husband to recover the money due for the tuition of the children on a contract made by the wife during the pendency of the suit for divorce); Smith v. Davis, 45 N. H. 566 (where A, who had given a promissory note to B, had subsequently, as an insane person, been placed under the guardianship of the latter, but the guardianship had ceased, and the note was in no way connected therewith, and it was held that it was not necessary to the maintenance by B against A of an action on the note, commenced after the termination of the guardianship, for B to show that his account as such guardian had been settled in the probate court). See, however, Westmoreland v. Davis, 1 Ala. 299, holding that where the guardian of the person and estate of a lunatic is charged with goods bought by him for the maintenance of the lunatic, assumpsit cannot be maintained by the creditor against the lunatic after his restoration to reason.

14. Action on guardian's bond see supra, II, D, 8, f.

15. See cases cited infra, this note.

Failure to pay over estate.— If the committee or guardian fails to account for and pay over the estate to the person entitled to it he may be sued therefor. Straight v. Ice, 56 W. Va. 69, 48 S. E. 837. Thus on the restoration of a lunatic to his right mind, it is the duty of the guardian to restore to him the funds belonging to him, and if he fails to do so he is liable in an action of assumpsit. The bond given the guardian of an insane person is collateral merely, and does not preclude a remedy against the guardian himself. Shepherd v. Newkirk, 21 N. J. L. 302. And an order authorizing the committee of a lunatic to retain the interest of the estate for his support does not bar an action for profits made by the committee through the labor of the ward. Ashley v. Holman, 15 S. C. 97. Where a guardian fails to account for and pay over the estate of his deceased ward, the remedy of the person entitled to the estate is by an action against the guardian personally or on his bond. Stumph v. Pfeiffer, 58 Ind. 472. However, an action will not lie on a decree of the orphans' court to recover the balance declared by the decree to remain in the hands of the guardian of a lunatic, after the commission of lunacy has been superseded. Shepherd v. Newkirk, 20 N. J. L. 343. And an order of the probate court directing the guardian of an insolvent insane person to set apart one thousand dollars for the support of the ward and his family and the education of his children, if not attacked, is a sufficient defense to an action against the guardian for breach of duty in not distributing the fund among the ward's creditors, although the court had no power to make it. Frost v. Redford, 127 Mo. 492, 30 S. W. 179.

Action by wife for support.— An action by a wife against the guardian of her insane husband for support is in effect against her husband, and will not lie, as the common law gives no such right, and the statute gives it only where the husband has de-ward[16] in the absence of statute to the contrary.[17] In some states a committee or guardian cannot be sued without leave of court first obtained.[18] If an insane defendant dies pending a suit against him in which he is represented by guardian or committee, the suit abates and all proceedings had before its revival are void.[19]

serted his wife, or is in the state prison, or is a habitual drunkard, or has renounced the marital relation and refused to live with his wife by joining a sect requiring such renunciation. Hallett v. Hallett, 8 Ind. App. 305, 34 N. E. 740.

Action for fund not a part of ward's estate. — Where the committee of an insane person has obtained and holds a fund, in his representative capacity, not belonging to his ward's estate, an action to determine the ownership thereof is maintainable against him in the same capacity. Dunham v. Fitch, 48 N. Y. App. Div. 321, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 905.

Action for waste. — If a next friend suing in behalf of the ward can maintain an action for waste committed by the guardian or recover money in his hands, it can be done only in connection with a proceeding to remove the guardian and revoke his letters. Bonner v. Evans, 89 Ga. 656, 15 S. E. 906.

The heir or administrator of the committee may be sued by the administrator of the lunatic in any county in which he may be found, and jurisdiction is not confined to the courts of the county where the custody of the lunatic belonged. Hardin v. Smith, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 390.

Debts contracted before guardianship. — An action will not lie against the conservator of an insane person for a debt due from the latter, contracted before the appointment of the conservator. Holdom v. James, 50 Ill. App. 376.

17. Morgan v. Hoyt, 69 Ill. 489; Bolling v. Turner, 6 Rand. (Va.) 584.

Petition for payment or leave to sue. — A claim against the estate of a lunatic under the care of a committee should be pursued by a petition for payment or leave to bring a suit. Williams v. Cameron, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 172; Matter of Hopper, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 489. And see Brasher v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 242, 400; Matter of Heller, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 199. If the chancellor is satisfied that the debt is justly due, the committee will be ordered to pay it, and in a case of doubt the claim will be referred to a master, or the claimant will be allowed to sue at law. Matter of Hopper, supra. Where there is a right of action, preference will be given to a reference under direction of court over a suit at law. Williams v. Cameron, supra.

Action to have proceeds of sale applied to debt.—Although N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2361, requires the avails of a lunatic's property to be disposed of by the "order" of the court, yet an action to apply the proceeds of a sale of the lunatic's land to the satisfaction of plaintiff's mortgage may be maintained, because the judgment of the court will be as authoritative as its order. Parmerter v. Baker, 5 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 167, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 69, 24 Abb. N. Cas. 104.

Jurisdiction. — The court of probate being a court of limited jurisdiction, La. Code Pr arts. 924, 983, giving it jurisdiction of claims due by testamentary executors, administrators, and successions under the management of curators, does not vest it with jurisdiction of an action against the curators of an interdicted person to recover a claim against the person interdicted. Hyde v. Erwin, 12 Rob. (La.) 536.

18. See cases cited infra, this note. See also supra, note 17.

Committee appointed pendente lite. — If, pending suit against a lunatic, a committee is appointed for him, leave to substitute the committee as defendant must be applied for. Carter v. Burrall, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 395, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 30; Matter of Delahunty, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 395, 28 Abb. N. Cas. 245.

Granting leave nunc pro tunc. — Ordinarily leave to sue will not be granted pendente lite nunc pro tunc. Matter of Delahunty, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 395, 28 Abb. N. Cas. 245. See, however, Carter v. Burrall, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 395, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 30.

Presumption of leave. — Where it is not alleged that an action at law against the committee of a lunatic was authorized by the court granting leave to bring an action in the supreme court, such authority will not be presumed. Kent v. West, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 112, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 244.

Effect of leave.—Permission granted by the county court to bring an action against the committee of a lunatic in the supreme court is not a determination that petitioner has a cause of action. Kent v. West, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 112, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 244.

When granted. — Leave to sue the committee should be granted when the party applying shows a case in which a court of equity would grant relief if the claim should be established on the trial. And where the affidavits of the moving and opposing parties are conflicting and irreconcilable, it is not proper to decide the conflict upon a motion, and leave should be given to sue. In re Wing, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 671, 5 Thomps. & C. 205.

19. Paxton v. Stuart, 80 Va. 873.

Effect of revival. — Where an action is brought on a claim against an insane person who is represented by a guardian appointed in another state, and the insane person dies before judgment, and his executor is made defendant, the guardian ceases to be a party, and the district court has jurisdiction. Findley v. Cowles, 93 Iowa 389, 61 N. W. 998.

The administrator of the ward may be sued in a proper case instead of his guardian or committee.[20]

B. Parties[1] — 1. In General — a. Plaintiffs — (I) At Law. In an action at law on behalf of an insane person to enforce his rights both the insane person[2] and his committee or guardian should be joined as plaintiffs.[3]

(II) In Equity. Where a bill is instituted on behalf of a lunatic it must be by his guardian or committee, if one has been appointed and is competent to act,[4] in which case the lunatic and not the guardian or committee is the real party plaintiff;[5] and although it is the general practice to join a lunatic with his guardian or committee on such bill,[6] yet such joining is merely a matter of form and in general it is immaterial whether or not the lunatic be made a party to the suit.[7] In some cases a relator[8] or the attorney-general[9] should be party plaintiff.

b. Defendants — (I) At Law. In actions at law to enforce rights against an insane person the lunatic should be made a party defendant,[10] and his guardian or committee should at least be notified of the action, so that he may appear and defend.[11] In an action by a guardian or committee other persons interested should be made parties defendant.[12]

(II) In Equity. In a suit in equity relating to an insane person's interests, his guardian or committee is a proper party defendant.[13] But the insane person himself, where properly represented,[14] is not in general a necessary party to the suit, although he may be properly made defendant.[15] But where his committee or guardian has a personal interest in the controversy antagonistic to that of the lunatic, the latter should also be a party to the suit in order that the court might assign him a guardian or other proper representative to appear and protect his rights against the committee.[16] Other persons interested in the subject-matter of the suit should also be joined.[17]

2. In Whose Name Action Should Be Brought — a. In General. In the absence of statute declaring otherwise, an action either at law or in equity to enforce the rights of an insane person under guardianship should in general be in the name of such insane person by his guardian or committee and not in the name of the guardian or committee,[18] or in his own name alone if no guardian or committee has been appointed.[19] Thus in the absence of statute a suit should be in the name of the insane person and not in the name of the guardian or committee, in ejectment,[20]

Suppl. 657); and since such action was properly commenced, it is unnecessary to make the appointment of the committee nunc pro tunc as of the time of the commencement of the action, or to allow the substituted plaintiff to generally amend his complaint (Callahan v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., supra).

C. Representation by Guardian or Guardian Ad Litem or Next Friend — 1. General Guardian or Committee. In proceedings on behalf of or against an insane person under guardianship, subject to some exceptions,[29] his interests whether as plaintiff or defendant should be represented by his general guardian or committee, who should conduct the proceedings on his behalf,[30] and it is not essential to his appearance for the lunatic that personal service should first have been made upon the latter.[31] Such guardian or committee may do or consent to any act in the course of the proceedings in protecting his ward's interests which does not change the nature or condition of his estate.[32] Thus it has been held that he may with the sanction of the court compromise a doubtful claim,[33]

2. Guardian Ad Litem or Next Friend[37] — a. In General. It follows from the rule stated in the preceding section that where a general guardian or committee has been appointed for an insane person, an action on behalf of or against such person should be brought or defended by such guardian or committee and cannot be prosecuted or defended by his next friend or guardian ad litem,[38] except where the appointment of a special guardian, guardian ad litem, or next friend for that purpose is permitted by statute;[39] and except where the interests of the general guardian or committee are adverse to those of his ward,[40] the guardian fails to act,[41] or the insane person is a non-resident.[42]

b. Where There Is No General Guardian or Committee — (i) By Next Friend. But where no guardian or committee has been appointed, or if appointed refuses to qualify or has been removed, the action may be prosecuted or defended in his name, with the sanction of the court, by any competent person as the insane person's next friend,[43] even though the lunatic has not been judicially declared but not so as to change the nature and condition of the estate of the insane person.

A "person of unsound mind" within the meaning of a statute permitting a person of unsound mind having no committee to sue by his next friend embraces not only lunatics but persons whose minds have become so impaired by disease or other cause as to be unable to take care of their own interests. Howard v. Howard, 87 Ky. 616, 9 S. W. 411, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 478, 1 L. R. A. 610.

A "next friend" does not mean a committee or trustee of a lunatic but one who, without being a regularly appointed guardian, acts for the benefit of such lunatic. Mackey v. Peters, 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 341.

An actual appointment is not necessary to authorize one as a next friend to prosecute a suit for an insane person, and until removal such prosecution is valid. Gray v. Parke, 155 Mass. 433, 29 N. E. 641.

A failure to allege that the lunatic has no guardian nor any sufficient reason why she does not appear by guardian if she has one does not prevent a suit by a next friend for a lunatic from being maintained unless the failure to allege this fact is made a ground for objection in special demurrer or raised by plea in abatement; but if such demurrer or plea is not met by appropriate amendment the action should be dismissed. Collateral impeachment.— Where the next friend of an insane person is regularly appointed, the appointment cannot be impeached collaterally by demurrer in an action by the next friend. Abbott v. Hancock, 123 N. C. 99, 31 S. E. 268.

If a suit is brought in the name of a lunatic by her next friend, without the sanction of the court against her former committee, who has been removed, for an account, and he objects to the parties, the court may make an order for the cause to proceed in the name of the lunatic by some fit person as her next friend, if the one named in the bill is not such a one; or the court may direct the appointment of a committee, and the amendment of the bill by making such committee a co-plaintiff or defendant in the suit. Bird v. Bird, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 712.

Where a nominal plaintiff is mentally incapacitated by disease, decrepitude, or other infirmity, a court of equity has jurisdiction to entertain an action brought by next friends in his name and behalf, although he is not in such condition as to be adjudged a lunatic by a special tribunal provided by law for such purpose, and although he denies the insanity and repudiates the acts of those bringing the suit. Edwards v. Edwards, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 87, 36 S. W. 1080.

If the party alleged to be insane repudiates or moves to dismiss a suit brought by a next friend, the court is not thereby ousted of jurisdiction, but it has a right to determine for itself the question whether it should retain jurisdiction by investigating the mental condition of complainant. D. Process and Appearance[54]— 1. In General. Where an insane defendant has been judicially declared insane and is under guardianship, actual service of notice or process on such defendant is unnecessary; service upon or appearance by his guardian or committee is generally sufficient,[55] except where the guardian is a foreign one.[56] In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that in the absence of statute permitting the service of process against an insane person under guardianship to be made on the guardian, such service is insufficient,[57] although the appearance of the guardian in the name of his insane ward cures a want of service on the latter.[58] But where defendant has not been judicially declared insane or has no lawful guardian or committee, process must be served on him personally;[59] and under some statutes additional service must also be made upon, or there must be an appearance by, certain persons enumerated by statute[60] or by order of court.[61] Personal service of process on an insane defendant is necessary as a prerequisite to the appointment and appearance of a special guardian or guardian ad litem.[62]

An inquisition of insanity is not necessary before the appointment of a guardian ad litem, but the issue of insanity may be determined as one of the issues in the case. Pyott v. Pyott, 90 Ill. App. 210 [affirmed in 191 Ill. 280, 61 N. E. 88]. It is within the power of the court apart from any statutory provision to appoint a guardian ad litem for a defendant who is non compos mentis, although he is of age, has not been judicially declared insane, and no committee has been appointed, where the court has jurisdiction of the subject of the action and has acquired jurisdiction over the person of defendant by a personal service of process. Effect of appointment.— The appointment by the court, under Mass. Rev. St. c. 76, § 18, of a guardian ad litem for a respondent to a libel on the ground of insanity is prima facie evidence of respondent's insanity in any subsequent stage of the cause. Little v. Little, 13 Gray (Mass.) 264.

2. Manner of Service. In the absence of statute providing otherwise, service of process on an insane defendant or his guardian or committee must be made in the same manner as on other persons,[63] as by exhibiting or leaving a copy at the place where he resides,[64] or if he is a non-resident by publication[65] or by delivering to him personally a copy of the process without the state.[66] If the insane defend-

3. Appearance and Representation by Attorney. In the absence of statute, at least where there has been no adjudication of insanity and no guardian or committee appointed, an insane defendant of full age must, in an action at law, appear by attorney, to be appointed by the court if necessary, and the failure to appoint a guardian ad litem is immaterial;[70] and it has been held that an insane adult plaintiff may bring an action in his own name and appear by attorney therein.[71] In equity, however, it is held that an insane person of full age cannot answer by attorney without the appointment of a guardian ad litem.[72]

4. Discharge From Arrest in Civil Cases. At common law a defendant cannot be discharged from arrest and imprisonment in a civil suit on the ground that he was insane at the time of the arrest or became so afterward;[73] but under some statutes the court may discharge an insane defendant from the civil arrest and order him sent to an asylum for the insane.[74]

E. Pleading[75] — 1. Complaint. A complaint by one who has been adjudged insane must contain allegations showing that he has regained his capacity to sue.[76] So a complaint filed by one as guardian of a lunatic must allege plaintiff's appointment and qualification as guardian.[77] Where the guardian of an insane person sues in his own name, the complaint should show that the right of action is in the insane person, and should not allege the cause of action to be in the guardian.[78] In some states a complaint against an adjudged insane person should allege that leave of court has been obtained to sue him.[79] A petition by the committee of a lunatic in relation to the estate, although signed by the committee, should describe him as petitioner.[80] An allegation in a petition against a person of unsound mind which declares that a co-defendant is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting guardian, is sufficient as to the appointment.[81] Where the act of a person is sought to be avoided on the ground of his insanity, the complaint must allege his incapacity,[82] and negative subsequent affirmance of the act.[83] A bill filed by the guardian of a lunatic heir to an entire tract, part of which has been assigned to the widow as dower, praying a partition of the residue and a sale of his ward's undivided interest in the reversion, is multifarious;[84] but a bill for partition filed by the guardian of a lunatic is not repugnant in seeking an

Issues.— A complaint alleging that a person, "being of unsound mind, and incompetent to manage herself or her affairs, in consequence of the influence exerted over her" by another, executed certain conveyances, does not allege that the grantor was of unsound mind, but the issuable fact is the "influence exerted over her." E. 80 (holding that a complaint in an action to set aside a deed by plaintiff's ancestor on the ground that the grantor was of unsound mind should allege disaffirmance of the deed by plaintiff before beginning the action); Hoke v. Applegate, 88 Ind. 530 (holding that a complaint alleging that defendant obtained a large sum of money from plaintiff's ward while of unsound mind by fraudulent contract, and after the appointment of plaintiff as guardian refused to repay is bad in not alleging that the ward continued of unsound mind, and did not affirm his contract); Hardenbrook v. Sherwood, 72 Ind. 403 (holding that a complaint by a guardian of an insane person to have an act of such person set aside as void must aver that the unsoundness of mind existed at the time of the commission of the act sought to be set aside, and was a continuing disability, or that upon removal of the disability the act had not been ratified). And see cases cited infra, VIII, E, 3, note 3. See, however, Sheets v. Bray, 125 Ind. 33, 24 N. E. 357.

Aider by verdict.— In an action by heirs to annul a conveyance made by their ancestor on the ground of insanity at the time of its execution, he not having been under guardianship at that time, a complaint which does not allege any act in disaffirmance of the deed is good after verdict and against a motion in arrest of judgment. account of the rents and profits, and also a sale of his ward's interest.[85] A petition to set aside the appointment of a guardian for plaintiff and regain possession of her property which alleges that defendant was in possession of the property under an order of court appointing him her committee, but containing no showing that would warrant an adjudication that the order was void, is bad on demurrer.[86]

2. Answer. The incapacity of a person to maintain an action independently because of insanity is properly raised by plea in abatement.[87] Where an insane person sues by his guardian, a plea in abatement alleging the pendency of a prior suit between the same parties for the same cause of action but not denying the guardianship is insufficient in that it does not allege either that the first action was commenced before plaintiff was placed under guardianship, or, if after, that it was commenced by the procurement of the assent of the guardian.[88] Want of authority to maintain an action as guardian must be specially pleaded.[89] The answer of a defendant of unsound mind should be by committee,[90] and he has power to make admissions in the answer.[91] An answer by a guardian admitting that a note sued on was executed by his wards but alleging that they were then insane is equivalent to a plea of non est factum.[92] In some states the execution of an instrument by a lunatic is not admitted by the failure of the guardian to deny its execution under oath.[93] An answer that the maker of the contract sued on was insane when he made it need not allege that the disability was a continuing one.[94] Where, in error to reverse a default judgment on the ground of insanity of plaintiff in error, defendant in error relies upon the fact that the suit was brought to recover for necessaries, he should plead it in bar of the action;[95] and the fact that necessaries were furnished by a city to an insane person as an insane pauper is a matter of defense to be pleaded by his guardian when his estate is sued therefor by the city.[96] In a suit against a lunatic's committee for services, the lunatic being a ward of the court and her committee subject to its control, it is the duty of the court, in case of a formal defect in the pleading

Sufficiency of plea.— N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 55, provides that a party who is of full age may sue in person or by an attorney, unless he has been judicially declared to be incompetent to manage his affairs. Section 2320 provides for the appointment of a committee of such person, and that after the appointment such person shall be designated an "incompetent person." It was held that an answer which alleges that plaintiff is now, and was when the action was commenced, "of unsound mind, and totally and utterly incapable of understanding or transacting any business whatever, and is utterly incapable of maintaining this action," will be stricken out as frivolous. Williams v. Empire Woolen Co., 7 N. Y. App. Div. 345, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 941. It is not necessary to set forth in the plea the proceedings previous to the guardian's appointment. of the committee, to order an amendment, and to find the facts according to the proof.[97] Judgment will not be entered in scire facias on a mortgage for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, it being averred that the mortgagor was insane before the date of the mortgage as shown by an inquisition, although no fraud is charged.[98] If a guardian interposes in behalf of the ward a complete answer to a petition for payment of a claim incurred by the ward before guardianship, judgment cannot be rendered against the guardian on his electing to stand on a demurrer previously interposed by him and overruled.[99]

3. Reply. A reply is bad if it constitutes a departure.[1] In some states the allegations of the answer are not admitted by a failure to reply.[2] So far as matter of substance goes the reply is generally governed by the rules applicable to complaint and answer.[3]

F. Evidence[4] — 1. Burden of Proof.[5] The burden is on one suing as guardian to prove his appointment[6] and qualification.[7] Where the defense of insanity is proved in an action on a note, the burden is on plaintiff to prove the consideration for the note, and other facts necessary to overcome the defense;[8] but one who

App. 555, 39 N. G. Trial[14] — 1. In General. Where the defense is that complainant was at the time of the commencement of the suit non compos mentis, the proper practice is by an application to the court to strike the bill from the files because filed without authority, or to apply for a stay of proceedings until a committee or next friend may be appointed.[15] A bill filed by the next friend of a lunatic will not be stricken from the files on motion of the lunatic accompanied by affidavits of restoration to reason, but the chancellor will require the lunatic to appear before him for examination as to his intelligent desire to withdraw the bill or select a master to make such examination.[16] An irregular trial will not bind a lunatic defendant in the absence of the consent of his guardian.[17] It is proper to refuse an instruction intimating that the plea of insanity has led to abuse in the administration of justice, and advising the jury that it must be examined with care.[18] Where insanity is urged as a defense in a civil action based on a crime of defendant, the issue is the same as if defendant were being prosecuted by the state for the offense, and instructions thereon applicable in the latter case are applicable in the former.[19] In an action for money received, which defendants claim for services under a contract which plaintiff alleges was made when he was insane, error in the instructions as to the effect of insanity is not fatal to a verdict for defendants, where the question of the reasonable worth of the services was properly submitted to the jury.[20] If the evidence on an issue of fact is conflicting, or inconclusive, the issue should be submitted to the jury.[21] If error in the trial is cured, it affords no ground for objection.[22]

2. Trial of Issue of Insanity. When the suggestion of the respondent's insanity is made in an equitable proceeding, the court may order a reference to a master to report as to his condition, and physicians may be called in to assist in the inquiry,[23] or the court may order an inquisition.[24] In a suit to enjoin an

was legally appointed, he must prove his appointment by the record of the county court, and such record must show a finding by the court that notice of his application for the appointment was given, as required by statute; the officer's return on the writ showing the requisite notice, although a part of the files accompanying the record, is not sufficient without such finding.
