g. Accidental Production of Invention. Prior, accidental production of the same thing does not amount to anticipation, where the operator does not recognize or understand the means by which the accidental result is accomplished,[2] and no knowledge of them or of the method of employment is derived from it by any one.[3] "A chance operation of a principle, unrecognized by any one at the time, and from which no information of its existence, and no knowledge of a method of its employment, is derived by any one, if proved to have occurred, will not be sufficient to defeat the claim of him who first discovers the principle, and, by

Stimpson, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,979, 3 Fish. Pat. Cas. 98.

Combinations of similar elements which could not be successfully used to produce the effect produced by the patented machine do not anticipate the patent. Turrill v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,270, 3 Biss 66, 3 Fish. Pat. Cas. 330.

A single experimental use of an apparatus, afterward destroyed, in such way as to involve the practice of a certain process, does not prevent a subsequent original inventor or discoverer of the same process from having a valid patent therefor. Piper v. Brown, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,180, 4 Fish. Pat. Cas. 175, Holmes 20.

Mere failure to use invention will not prevent anticipation. McNish v. Everson, 2 Fed. 899; Sayles v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,414, 1 Biss. 468, 2 Fish. Pat. Where a patent has been granted for improvements which, after a full and fair trial, resulted in unsuccessful experiments, and have been finally abandoned, if any other person takes up the subject of the improvements and is successful he is entitled to the merit of them as an original inventor. putting it to practical and intelligent use, first makes it available to man."[4] It has been held, however, that to constitute anticipation of a later patent it is enough that such a construction had been in well-established use, whether it originated in design or by accident;[5] and an invention will not be deemed accidental because all the advantages thereof were not understood[6] or because the new form of result had not been before contemplated.[7] While as already shown an accidental and unnoted use does not amount to an anticipation, the mere discovery in an old combination of a new property however beneficial is not patentable.[8]

h. Lost Art. An invention which was never made public and which has been forgotten will not anticipate.[9] But an invention merely concealed by the inventor is not a lost art.[10]

i. Combination of Old Elements.[11] The fact that the various elements of a combination are old will not anticipate a claim to the combination.[12] To anticipate a combination it must be shown that the same or equivalent elements have been combined in substantially the same way to produce substantially the same result.[13]

j. Non-Analogous Use. The fact that the same thing in form is old in a non-analogous art where it is used to perform different functions will not constitute an anticipation or negative novelty.[14]

k. Evidence — (I) Presumptions and Burden of Proof. A patent is prima facie evidence that the patentee was the original and first inventor of the device patented,[15] and whoever controverts or denies his claim in this respect has the burden of proof upon him to establish the contrary.[16] This presumption of originality, in the absence of the application for the patent, extends back only to the date of the patent,[17] and in no case does it extend further back than to the time of the filing of the original application.[18] Where defendant has shown knowledge and use of the invention prior to the patent, the burden of proving a still prior invention is thrown on plaintiff.[19]

In other words, when the patentee desires to show that his invention was of a date prior to his original application he takes the burden upon himself, and must prove by competent and sufficient evi-sumption of the validity of a patent, evidence is admissible to prove that the device was previously made and reduced to practice by another in this country;[20] that it had been previously known to, and used by, others here before it was invented by the patentee;[21] or that it had been patented or described in some printed publication prior to the supposed invention by the patentee.[22] Evidence of an acknowledgment that the patentee was the original inventor is also admissible.[23] In rebuttal of evidence to show anticipation, it is competent, as bearing on the state of the art, to introduce the testimony of persons whose business and experience were adapted to bring to them a knowledge of all improvements therein to the effect that no such improvement as that covered by the patent in suit had previously come to their knowledge.[24] In determining whether one invention anticipates another, evidence may be, and in a difficult case ought to be, heard concerning the construction and actual operation of the devices respectively.[25] So too the jury may take into consideration the fact that the prior invention was known to persons who experimented to produce the subsequent invention but failed to do so.[26]

(B) Application For Patent. Mere applications for patents cannot be considered on the question of novelty. To make the things described in them available, there must be evidence that such things were actually constructed in working form.[27] Rejected specifications and drawings may be received in evidence that he made the invention at the period suggested, and that he reduced the same to practice in the form of an operative machine. Johnson v. Root, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,409, 2 Cliff. 108, 2 Fish. Pat. Cas. 291; Jones v. Sewall, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,495, 3 Cliff. 563, 6 Fish. Pat. Cas. 343, 3 Off. Gaz. 630 [reversed on other grounds in 91 U. S. 171, 23 L. ed. 275]; Wing v. Richardson, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,869, 2 Cliff. 449, 2 Fish. Pat. Cas. 535.

20. Direct evidence of reduction to practice and use necessary.— The reduction to practice and use of inventions claimed to be prior to the patent in suit, so as to invalidate such patent, must be shown by direct evidence of the construction and use of the machine or device. Howes v. McNeal, 4 Fed. 151, 17 Blatchf. 396. Nothing from the patent office can be admitted in evidence of earlier dates than the patent. All such evidence would be hearsay and secondary. Howes v. McNeal, supra.

File wrappers of patents alleged to anticipate are not competent as evidence to show the reduction to practice and use of the inventions therein claimed at a date prior to the invention of the patent in suit. Howes v. McNeal, 4 Fed. 151, 17 Blatchf. 396.

21. Evidence of prior use in a foreign country is inadmissible where such prior use is not shown in a patent or printed publication. Hurlbut v. Schillinger, 130 U. S. 456, 9 S. Ct. 584, 32 L. ed. 1011.

22. The court must first construe the patent offered in evidence, and if by its true construction it has a tendency to support the issue for which it is offered, it is admissible, but if it has no such tendency, it must be excluded. Cahoon v. Ring, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,292, 1 Cliff. 592, 1 Fish. Pat. Cas. 397.

A certified copy of a patent afterward surrendered and canceled may be given in evidence to show that a device subsequently patented is not original. Delano v. Scott, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,753, Gilp. 489, 1 Robb Pat. Cas. 700.

A certificate of the commissioner of patents of a copy or translaton of a French volume in the patent office is inadmissible to prove the existence of an invention prior to the patent in suit, such evidence being merely hearsay. The production of the book itself or a duly sworn and proved translation is the only way its contents can be shown. Gaylord v. Case, 5 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 413, 5 Am. L. Rec. 494.

A drawing exhibited in a mere trade circular, unaccompanied by any evidence that it was ever actually published, or intended for general use, or accessible to the public, is not admissible as a printed publication for the purpose of showing an anticipation. Britton v. White Mfg. Co., 61 Fed. 93. But drawings exhibited for the purpose of showing anticipation of a design patent are not rendered irrelevant by the fact tbat they are unaccompanied by a written description. This objection merely affects their weight as evidence and not their admissibility. Britton v. White Mfg. Co., supra.

dence, however, after the invention is perfected, to ascertain the date of the invention, the design of the inventor, and the principal intended functions and mode of operation.[28] And it has been held that the defense of prior invention by, and patent to, a third person may be met by producing the application of, and the patent to, such third person, with his accompanying or contemporaneous declarations.[29]

(III) Weight and Sufficiency. In order to defeat a patent on the ground of want of novelty, the proof of prior use or knowledge must be clear and convincing,[30] and sufficient to establish the fact beyond a reasonable doubt.[31] Anticipation may be established by testimony entirely from recollection of the existence and use of a prior device, when the witnesses are numerous, disinterested, and unimpeached,[32] but not where such testimony is indefinite and contradictory.[33] The bare recollection of one witness in regard to the peculiar construction of a piece of machinery, especially if the structure is one of complex character, is not ordinarily sufficient evidence to defeat a patent;[34] but it may be sufficient where the invention sought to be anticipated is of simple character.[35] Much less testi-

D. Utility[37] — 1. In General. To warrant the allowance of a patent it must be capable of some beneficial use, in contradistinction to what is pernicious, frivolous, or worthless.[38] An invention will be deemed useful when it will operate to perform the functions and secure the result intended, and its use is not contrary to public health or morals.[39] While utility is essential, any utility, however slight, will be sufficient.[40] It is not essential that the invention should be the best of its kind or incapable of improvement,[41] or that it should accomplish all that the inventor claimed for it;[42] and it is of no consequence whether the utility of an invention be general or limited to a few cases.[43] Every patent as to utility depends on the state of the art at the time of the claim made or patent issued;[44] and if the invention was useful when the patent was granted, the patent is valid, and the fact that it has become useless since by the discovery of some other method which dispenses with it gives no right to others to use it.[45]

Limitation of rule.— The rule that when an invention is useful for some purpose the degree of usefulness is not a subject for consideration is applicable only when the validity of a patent already issued is attacked

2. EVIDENCE OF UTILITY. Extensive use is evidence of utility;[46] and where an invention involves reflection and experiments to bring it to practical maturity, its evident utility, indicated by its prompt displacement of other devices and extensive use, strongly attest its patentable merit.[47] While the issuance of a patent is not conclusive evidence on the question of utility,[48] it is prima facie evidence thereof.[49] The presumptions of the law are in favor of a patent[50] and the burden is on defendant to show that it is not useful in any degree.[51] An infringement of an invention amounts to an admission of utility[52] because use implies utility. It in a court of law; but when the question is as to the issuance of a patent the rule is that prescribed by the statute (Acts (1836), § 7), namely, that "the Commissioner shall deem it to be sufficiently useful and important." In re Cushman, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,513, McArthur Pat. Cas. 569.

is fair to presume that the person using an invention would not do so if he thought it of no utility,[53] and he is estopped to deny that it possesses utility.[54]

E. Invention — 1. Necessity. The subject-matter of patents must be of such a character as to have called for an exercise of the inventive or creative faculties of the mind[55] as distinguished from the mere exercise of the knowledge and judgment expected of those skilled in the particular art,[56] although the right to a patent does not depend upon the quantity of thought, ingenuity, skill, labor, or experiment which was bestowed upon the production.[57]

2. Nature. While attempts have been made to define invention,[58] the courts and text writers have found it impossible to so define it as to furnish a test for determining whether a particular act or discovery called for an exercise of the inventive faculties.[59] It is a matter resting in judgment and therefore no fixed rule for its determination is possible. Certain controlling principles are, however, settled and assist in reaching the proper conclusion in particular cases. Thus it is declared that an act of invention is primarily mental and involves the conception or mental construction of a means not previously known for accomplishing a useful result.[60] It is not the mere adaptation of old means by common reasoning,

The fact that the patented article has superseded all others before in use, and that the party charged with infringing has adopted it in the place of those before made and sold by him, constitutes strong evidence of usefulness. but is the construction of new means through an exercise of the creative faculties of the mind.[61]

3. INVENTION AND DISCOVERY SYNONYMOUS. There is no distinction in patent law between invention and discovery.[62] The discovery of a new substance or element of nature or a new principle or force is not patentable, but the invention or discovery of a new means for making them practically useful may be.[63]

4. PRIOR ART CONSIDERED. In determining whether there was invention in a particular case everything previously known in the art through patents, publications, or use must be taken into consideration,[64] since the patentee is in law presumed to have known of everything in the prior art.[65]

5. NOVELTY AND SUPERIORITY NOT INVENTION. A party has not necessarily made an invention merely because he has done what no one had done before. Mere novelty and utility are not enough to sustain a patent, since there must also be invention.[66] He must do something which the ordinary person skilled in the art would not know how to do if the occasion for it arose.[67] He has not made an invention merely because he was the first to see the occasion or appreciate the advisability of doing the thing,[68] or because he has done it better. An article is not patentable merely because it is better, cheaper, or more merchantable,[69] although novelty combined with superiority may show invention.[70]

6. Simplicity Does Not Negative. Simplicity of the means employed does not show that there was no exercise of the inventive faculty in devising it,[71] but on the contrary the highest order of inventive genius may have been required to perceive that such simple means might be used to accomplish the desired result.[72]

7. Complexity Not Proof of Invention. Mere multiplicity of elements in the means employed does not show that invention was required to devise it.[73] Multiplicity of elements may go on indefinitely without making invention.[74]

8. Mechanical Skill. Where the ordinary person skilled in the particular art advised of the end to be accomplished would spontaneously think of or produce the means for accomplishing it, the production of the means involves mere mechanical skill and not invention.[75] The design of the patent laws is to reward

those who make some substantial discovery or invention, which adds to our knowledge and makes a step in advance in the useful arts. It was never their object to grant a monopoly for every trifling device, every shadow of a shade of an idea, which would naturally and spontaneously occur to any skilled mechanic or operator in the ordinary progress of manufacture.[76] Mere mechanical skill can never rise to the sphere of invention. The latter involves higher thought and brings into activity a different faculty. Their domains are distinct. The line which separates them is sometimes difficult to trace; nevertheless, in the eye of the law, it always subsists.[77]

9. Superior Finish or Form Not Invention. It is well settled that an article of manufacture is not patentable because means have been devised for making it more perfectly than before.[78] It must be new in itself and not merely in

As already shown, if the new use be so nearly analogous to the former one that the applicability of the device to its new use would occur to a person of ordinary mechanical skill, it is only a case of double use; but if the relations between them be remote, and especially if the use of the old device produce a new result, it may at least involve an exercise of the inventive faculty.[89] "Indeed, it often requires as acute a perception of the relation between cause and effect, and as much of the peculiar intuitive genius which is a characteristic of great inventors, to grasp the idea that a device used in one art may be made available in another, as would be necessary to create the device de novo. And this is not the less true if, after the thing has been done, it appears to the ordinary mind so simple as to excite wonder that it was not thought of before; . . . but the decisive answer is that with dozens and perhaps hundred of others laboring in the same field, it had never occurred to any one before."[90] equivalent of a thing is, in the sense of the patent law, the same as the thing itself. Two devices which perform the same function in substantially the same way and accomplish substantially the same result are therefore the same, although they may differ in name and form.[93]

b. Superiority of Substituted Part No Test. The fact that the substituted part performs the function better does not make the act of substitution an invention,[94] unless some new or added function or result is secured which would not be obvious to one skilled in the art.[95]

15. Substitution of Material. The mere substitution of one material for another in an old article where it performs substantially the same functions is not an invention,[96] although the substituted material may be better for the purpose.[97] The rule applies even where the material is new and was invented by the one claiming the substitution as his invention. He should claim the material only unless the act of substitution after the production of the material call for inventive thought.[98] Where, however, the substituted material performs new functions and its adaptability for the purpose was not obvious there may be invention in the substitution.[99] And substitution may be considered on the issue of invention where it makes possible changes in other elements of a combination to produce improved operation.[1] extend the use of an old combination of elements, where no new result is produced and no new method of producing the old result.[12]

b. Lack of Novelty in Elements Immaterial. The invention in such case has nothing to do with the novelty or lack of novelty in the separate elements, but resides in the particular way in which the elements have been combined.[13] When a combination is claimed it is said that there is an implied concession that the elements are separately old.[14]

c. Coaction of Elements Necessary. It is not necessary that each element should perform its own function and also modify the function performed by every other,[15] but there must be such coaction and modification that a result is

An aggregation is the mere bringing together of separate elements without changing the function performed by them or producing any result other than the added result of the separate operation of the elements and is not a patentable invention.[17] A combination, to be patentable, must produce a different force, effect, or result in the combined forces or processes from that given by their separate parts.[18] No one, by bringing together several old devices without producing a new and useful result, the joint product of the elements of the combination, and something more than an aggregate of old results, can acquire a right to prevent others from using the same devices, either singly or in other combinations, or, even if a new and useful result is obtained, can prevent others from using some of the devices, omitting others, in combination.[19] Superiority does not make aggregation patentable.[20]

b. Multiplication of Elements. The multiplication of elements may go on indefinitely without producing a patentable invention,[21] since no exercise of the inventive faculty is involved in merely collecting at one place or in one machine a lot of elements which do not so modify the actions of each other as to produce a new result.[22]

c. Novel Elements. Novelty in one or more of the separate elements does not justify a claim to the collection of those elements unless there is coaction between them producing a new result.[23] The novel element in such case may be patentable if claimed separately.[24]

22. Evidence of Invention — a. Unsuccessful Efforts of Others. Proof that others skilled in the art had previously sought to accomplish the results of the patented device and that their efforts and experiments were unsuccessful may be and ordinarily is evidence that invention and not mere judgment and skill was required in conceiving and producing it.[25] It has been held, however, that the scope of mechanical skill not being restricted to the skill of any particular mechanic, it is not conclusive that more than mechanical skill was involved in producing a particular device, that, prior to the application for the patent thereon, a device has been produced by another person for the same purpose which was different from and inferior to that of the patent;[26] and simultaneous suggestion by many is evidence that invention is lacking.[27]

b. Supplying Long-Felt Want. A long-felt want and unsupplied need for means accomplishing the results of the patented device is evidence tending to show that its production called for an exercise of the inventive faculties.[28]

c. Popularity of the Supposed Invention. The fact that the patented device meets with immediate public favor and displaces others for the same purpose on the market is evidence of utility and some evidence of invention,[29] but will not be

F. Statutory Forfeiture Regardless of Intent — 1. In General. Since the purpose of the patent system is to secure for the public of this country a knowledge of and the right to use new inventions and discoveries the inventor is required to proceed diligently in securing his patent under penalty of a forfeiture of his inchoate right.[32] There are provisions in the statutes by which this forfeiture may occur contrary to the inventor's intent and without his knowledge.[33]

2. Publication Two Years Before Application. If the invention is described in a patent or printed publication in this country or abroad, with or without the knowledge or consent of the inventor, more than two years before his application for patent is filed, no valid patent can issue.[34]

3. Foreign Patent. If the inventor first secures or allows his representatives to secure a patent upon the invention abroad on an application filed more than twelve months before his application in this country no valid patent can issue here.[35] The limitation is four months in case of design patents.[36]

4. Concealment of Invention. If the inventor conceals the invention from the public for a long period of time after he has perfected it, and in the mean time some other party makes the invention, the invention becomes public property and cannot be patented by any one,[37] or is to be patented to the one who was really second to invent, but first to give to the public.[38]

5. Date of Application. The date of application controlling in considering public use or sale and publication is the date of application in this country,[39] or the date of application abroad within twelve months of the application here, provided the foreign country is a member of the international convention or has similar treaty relations with this country.[40]

6. Renewal or Substitute Application. Where an application here is forfeited and renewed,[41] or is filed as a substitute for and continuation of a prior application,[42] the original filing date controls; but to obtain the benefit of the original

b. Nature of Use Sufficient to Bar Patent — (i) In General. The bar of public use arises from use by the inventor himself or by others,[48] but in either case it must be such as makes the invention accessible to some members of the public.[49] Public use, however, does not mean a general adoption or use by the public, but a use in public, as distinguished from a secret use.[50] Exhibition of a design is a public use.[51]

(ii) Single Instance Sufficient. A single instance of public use by a single individual will operate as a bar.[52] General and continuous use is unnecessary.[53]

(iii) Knowledge or Consent of the Inventor. The bar arises whether or not the inventor knows of or consents to the public use.[54]

(iv) Invention Must Be Complete. To constitute public use the invention must have been complete.[55] This does not mean, however, that the machine embodying it must have been perfect, but merely that it shall be sufficiently perfect to be practically applied to its intended purpose.[56]

(v) Experimental Use. Use for purposes of experiment having in view the perfection of the invention is not a public use, although it occurs in public,[57] and such experimental use may continue for many years without operating as a bar,[58] according to the character of the particular invention and the time necessary to develop and perfect it and determine its practical efficiency.[59]

(vi) Secret Use. Use of the invention in secret either by the inventor or his agents under an injunction of secrecy is not a public use.[60] But permitting another to use the invention without any injunction of secrecy is public use, although the use may have been concealed from others.[61]

(vii) Natural and Intended Use. Use of an invention in public, however, in its natural and intended way is a public use,[62] although from its nature it is concealed from the general view of the public.[63]

experiment it is not rendered a public use by the fact that a profit was derived from its use.[64] But where profit was the controlling cause of the use and the experiment was merely incidental the grant of a patent is barred.[65]

(IX) USE IN A FOREIGN COUNTRY. Use abroad is not a public use which will invalidate a patent in the United States. To constitute a bar the use must be in this country.[66] In Canada public use abroad before the invention by the patentee invalidates the patent.[67]

c. On Sale — (I) IN GENERAL. An invention is on sale when articles or machines embodying it are made and offered for sale or are sold,[68] but an offer or agreement to make and deliver an invention not already made and tested does not place it on sale.[69] An assignment of the right to secure a patent is not placing the invention on sale.[70]

(II) SINGLE SALE SUFFICIENT. A single unrestricted sale is sufficient to constitute placing the invention on sale.[71]

(III) OFFER FOR SALE. An offer to sell articles previously made and tested embodying the invention places it on sale, although no actual sales were made.[72]

(IV) SALE FOR EXPERIMENT. There may be an actual sale without placing the invention on sale within the meaning of the law where done for the purpose of securing an adequate test of the invention.[73] There is a clear distinction between sales for the purpose of testing the market and sales to test the invention itself. The former is a trader's and not an inventor's experiment and does not carve an exception out of the statute.[74]

(v) Conditional Sale. The sale must be absolute to constitute a bar, and where the inventor retains a certain control over the machine for purposes of test it is not on sale.[75]

(vi) Perfected Invention. It is not necessary that the machine sold shall be perfect or well made mechanically but it is sufficient that it is operative.[76]

(vii) Burden of Proof. The presumption is against two years public use or sale, and the burden is upon the one alleging it to establish it by proof beyond a reasonable doubt.[77] Where, however, the use or sale is established the burden is upon the patentee to show that it was for experiment.[78]

G. Abandonment of Invention— 1. In General. The abandonment of an invention is the relinquishment by the inventor of the inchoate right to secure a patent upon an invention made by him and the consequent dedication of that invention to the free and unlimited use of the public.[79] An invention may be abandoned at any time before or after application;[80] and the right once abandoned cannot be resumed.[81] The benefit of the abandonment, however, inures to the public and not to a later inventor.[82] Abandonment to the public is not confined to reissues, but statute applies to all patents.[83]

2. QUESTION OF INTENT. Abandonment involves a consideration of the inventor's intent, but the intent may be presumed from conduct as well as from words.[84]

3. EXPRESS ABANDONMENT. Declarations by the inventor manifesting an intent not to secure a patent upon his invention amounts to abandonment.[85]

4. ABANDONMENT BY CONDUCT. Where the inventor acquiesces in the use of his invention by others and his conduct is such as to lead the public to believe that he does not intend to secure a patent he has abandoned it.[86] So the acceptance of a patent with claims narrowed to exclude matter cited by the patent office as an anticipation is an abandonment thereof to the public;[87] and one who retires from an interference proceeding and withdraws his claim for the specific element forming the subject of the interference is thereafter precluded from claiming such element under his patent.[88] Publication is not abandonment,[89] and merely permitting others to use an invention before application for a patent does not amount to abandonment.[90] And mere delay in applying for a patent is not abandonment.[91]

5. Necessity of Disclosure to Public. There can be no abandonment to the public unless the complete invention has been disclosed to the public.[92]

6. Abandoned Experiments. An abandonment of experiments upon an incomplete and imperfect invention is not a dedication of that invention to the public.[93]

7. Failure to Claim in Patent. What is disclosed in a patent and not claimed therein is presumedly not novel or is dedicated to the public by the patentee.[94] The presumption, however, is rebutted if the patentee has another application pending in the patent office claiming it,[95] or if he files such application promptly.[96] Matter erased from one application and presented in a second after grant of a patent is not abandoned.[97]

8. Abandonment of Application. A party may abandon a particular application for patent without abandoning the intent to secure a patent at some time and therefore without abandoning the invention claimed therein. He may file a subsequent application and secure a patent.[98] Nevertheless where an application for a patent has been filed and withdrawn, lapse of time is a fact which may give great point and force to testimony disclosing what was done in the interval.[99]

9. EVIDENCE OF ABANDONMENT. Abandonment is never presumed;[1] on the contrary the presumption is against abandonment and the burden is upon the one asserting it to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt.[2] The issue of letters patent is prima facie evidence that there has been no abandonment.[3] Where the evidence raises a presumption of abandonment, it may be rebutted by showing acts prosecuting or asserting the discovery, as the filing of drawings in the patent office.[4] Where the undisputed acts of an inventor furnish evidence of abandonment, his testimony that he did not intend to abandon his invention is not entitled to much weight.[5]

IV. PERSONS ENTITLED TO PATENTS.[6]

A. Original and First Inventor[7]—1. IN GENERAL. No valid patent can issue in the United States except upon the application of a person who made the invention by his own original thought,[8] or if he is dead upon the application of his executor or administrator.[9] As between two original inventors of the same thing, the one first to make it in this country or bring it to this country is entitled to the patent.[10] A patent granted upon the application of one who is not the inventor is void.[11]

2. First Inventor. The first inventor is the one who first has a mental conception of the invention provided he exercises diligence thereafter in adapting and perfecting it, but as against a rival claimant who first reduced the invention to practice the burden is upon the first conceiver to show diligence.[12] The party first to reduce to practice is prima facie the first inventor;[13] but the man who first conceives and in a mental sense first invents a machine, art, or composition of matter may date his particular invention back to the time of its conception, if he connects the conception with its reduction to practice by reasonable diligence on his part so that they are substantially one continuous act.[14]

3. Originality of Invention. A person is not an original inventor unless the ideas embodied in the invention originated in the creative faculties of his mind. If he merely adapts and gives effect to the ideas of others he is not an original inventor and is not entitled to obtain a patent.[15]

The rules of law as to what constitutes a prior use and what constitutes a reduction to practice are the same. Gilman v. Hinson, 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 409.

The device constructed must be fashioned out of a material capable of actual use for the intended purpose in order to constitute a reduction to practice. Gilman v. Hinson, 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 409.

Models and drawings.—A model is not a reduction to practice (Howell v. Hess, 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 194; Hunter v. Stikeman, 13 App. Cas. (D. C.) 214; Mason v. Hepburn, 13 App. Cas. (D. Cas. 107), unless the invention belongs to that class of simple inventions which require no other proof of their practicability than the construction of a model (O'Connell v. Schmidt, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77). Models and drawings constituted a reduction to practice under the act of 1836. Heath v. Hildreth, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,309, Cranch Pat. Dec. 96, 132, McArthur Pat. Proof of various experiments in search of a particular process, and an approximation to that process, does not sufficiently show a reduction to practice. Bourn v. Hill, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 291.

Voting machine must work with accuracy. McKenzie v. Cummings, 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 137.

Process.— A process is reduced to practice only when used. Croskey v. Atterbury, 9 App. Cas. (D. C.) 207.

Later manufacture on larger scale.— If an experimental machine completely embodies the invention, and is capable of testing its efficiency to the full extent of its power, the mere fact that later manufactures to fill orders may be on a larger scale cannot impair its effect as constituting reduction to practice. Robinson v. Thresher, 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 22.

Long delay in making use of an invention claimed to have been reduced to practice, or in applying for a patent, is a potent circumstance tending to show that the alleged reduction to practice was nothing more than an unsatisfactory or abandoned experiment; and this is especially the case where, in the meantime, the inventor has been engaged in the prosecution of similar inventions. Gilman v. Hinson, 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 409.

Where the inventor is already engaged in disposing of a large stock of devices manufactured under former patents relating to the same subject-matter, of which the new invention is an improvement, a failure immediately to manufacture and put on the market the newly invented device does not afford any reasonable foundation for denying the date claimed for its conception. Laas v. Scott, 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 354.

The dismantling of an experimental machine by a large and prosperous company has more weight as showing the lack of success of the trial than it would have if done by a poor inventor whose necessities compel him to utilize the parts for other purposes. Robinson v. Thresher, 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 22.

Delay in filing application as effective weight of proof of actual reduction to prac-

is not necessary.[19] A perfect invention does not necessarily mean a perfectly constructed machine, but one so constructed as to embody all the essential elements of the invention in a form that would make them practical and operative, so as to accomplish the result in a practical way.[20] Demonstration of the success by actual use is usually necessary,[21] although some devices are so simple that the mere construction without use is sufficient.[22] The same act, or set of acts, may or may not constitute a reduction to practice, modified, as they may be, by the special circumstances of the particular case.[23] The reduction to practice must be by the applicant himself, or by his authorized agent, and not by some other third party.[24] It is not enough to entitle an applicant to a patent that someone else has shown the practicability of the invention by reducing it to practice. The work of such third party will not be taken as sufficient to relieve the applicant of the consequences of his own want of diligence.[25]

b. Constructive Reduction to Practice. The filing of an allowable application for a patent is a constructive reduction to practice of the invention at the date when it was filed.[26] So also is a description of the invention in a foreign patent or a printed publication.[27] Where an application for a patent is first made abroad in a country having the requisite treaty relations with this country, the date of the application, if within twelve months before the application here, controls.[28] In case of designs the foreign application must be within four months.

6. DILIGENCE.[29] The person who is first to conceive the invention but later than his rival in reducing it to practice is not regarded as the first inventor unless he exercised due diligence in efforts to perfect the invention,[30] at and continuously after the time that his rival entered the field against him.[31] Knowledge of the entry of the rival in the field is not necessary in order to impose the duty of diligence.[32] The question of due diligence is not a matter of comparative diligence as between the two parties,[33] but it is merely required that the last to reduce to practice shall show that he was exercising reasonable diligence under all of the surrounding circumstances.[34]

9. Invention Made Abroad. Acts performed abroad, whether by a citizen of this country or a foreigner, are not pertinent to the question of his right to a patent, since under the statute knowledge or use of the invention abroad is no bar to the grant of a patent to an original inventor who firsts makes or discloses the invention here.[38]

10. Evidence as to Originality and Priority[39] — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The presumption is that the person who obtained the patent was the first and original inventor,[40] and the burden is upon the person seeking to show the contrary to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt.[41]

b. Admissibility and Sufficiency. The admissibility of evidence in actions to establish priority between inventors is governed by the rules applicable in civil actions generally.[42] The weight and sufficiency of the evidence in actions to establish priority between inventors is governed by the rules applicable in civil cases generally.[43]

B. Joint Inventors — 1. In General. Two or more parties may by mutual contributions or suggestions so aid in developing the idea of each as to produce an invention which must be regarded as the result of the joint mental efforts of both, and not as the separate invention of either, and in such case they must apply for and receive the patent jointly.[44]

2. Joinder in Grant. A patent issued to two parties as joint inventors is invalid where it appears that one of them is the sole inventor,[45] or where different

42. See, generally, Evidence.

Verbal declarations of a person that he has made an invention, coupled with a description of the nature and objects of the invention, are a part of the res gestæ, and admissible to prove priority of invention (Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 448, 10 L. ed. 535; Gibbs v. Johnson, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,384; Stephens v. Salisbury, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,369, McArthur Pet. Cas. 379) and such verbal descriptions, without drawing or model, are admissible for the purpose of proving priority of invention, when the invention is of great simplicity and the time is not so long as to make the recollection improbable (Stephens v. Salisbury, supra). But it seems that conversations and declarations by one of the parties describing a device by which he has already constructed a model is inadmissible, if such model is not produced or its non-production accounted for (Richardson v. Hicks, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,783, McArthur Pat. Cas. 335); and it has been held error to allow a witness testifying to such conversations and declarations to testify that a model shown to him and not claimed to be the one that the inventor had then constructed corresponds to the description given, and that he could have made it from such description (Richardson v. Hicks, supra).

A certificate of a commissioner of patents of the correctness of a copy or translation from a French volume in the patent office is inadmissible to prove the existence of an invention prior to plaintiff's patent, as the book itself, or a duly proved translation, is the only way its contents can be shown. Gaylord v. Case, 5 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 413, 4 Am. L. Rec. 494.

On testimony which is vague and wanting in precision in respect to the essential features of the device for which priority is claimed, priority of invention will not be adjudged. Cornell v. Hyatt, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,237, McArthur Pat. Cas. 423.

Acknowledgment or admission of priority. — On a question of priority between two inventors, the fact that one of them participated in the application of the other would seem to constitute a conclusive acknowledgment of priority. National Co. v. Belcher, 71 Fed. 876, 18 C. C. A. 375. But the fact that one who claims to be the first and original inventor of a device has taken into partnership with himself the assignees of another, who also claim to be the original inventor, instead of litigating with them the question of priority, is not to be regarded as an admission by the former patentee of the validity of the patent claimed by the latter, if the arrangement was induced either directly or indirectly by fraud or misrepresentation. Where each has invented a distinct improvement on the same machine, the object sought to be attained being a unit, a joint patent may be issued. Wilson v. Singer, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,835.

Mutual suggestions and improvements are sufficient to constitute a joint invention. Worden v. Fisher, 11 Fed. 505.

Filing a sale caveat is no estoppel to secure joint patent. Hoe v. Kahler, 25 Fed. 271, 23 Blatchf. 354, 12 Fed. 111, 20 Blatchf. 430.

When a claim covers a series of steps or a number of elements in a combination, the invention may well be joint, although some of the steps or some of the elements may have come as the thought of one. Quincey Min. Co. v. Krause, 151 Fed. 1012, 81 C. C. A. 290.

45. Bannerman v. Sanford, 99 Fed. 294, 39

improvements on the same machine were invented by each separately without the participation or knowledge of the other,[46] and a patent issued to a party as sole inventor is invalid where it appears that he made the invention jointly with another.[47] One of two joint inventors cannot make application and secure the patent upon assignment from the other. Both must join.[48] In an action for the infringement of a patent, the burden of showing as a defense that the patentee was a joint inventor with some other person, of the thing invented, is upon the patentee.[49] The issuance of a patent to two persons as joint inventors constitutes prima facie proof that the invention was joint.[50] And to invalidate a patent granted to two jointly the evidence must be clear and convincing.[51]

C. Employer and Employee[52] — 1. In General. The statutes of the United States require that the patent issue upon the application of and in the name of the real inventor, although he was employed and paid to make it for the benefit of the one employing him.[53] In such case the employer may be entitled to the ownership of the patent and may compel its transfer by assignment, but this depends upon the nature of the agreement between them.[54] A company that employs a skilled workman to make improvements on its machinery is not entitled to a conveyance of the patents secured by the workman on improvements so made in the absence of agreement to that effect.[55] An employee, performing all the duties assigned to him in his department of service, may exercise his inventive faculties in any direction he chooses, with the assurance that whatever invention he may thus conceive and perfect is his individual property.[56] The company, however, has an implied license to make, use, and sell the invention.[57]

2. PERFECTION OF EMPLOYER'S IDEAS. Where the employer has a preconceived plan of an invention, and while engaged in experiments to perfect it the employee makes suggestions ancillary to the plan and preconceived ideas of the employer, the invention as a whole including the improvements is to be regarded as the invention of the employer.[58] It is otherwise, however, if the suggestions of the employee amount to a new method or arrangement which is in itself a complete invention. To enable the employer to claim the invention he must have, not merely the idea of the end or result to be accomplished, but a definite idea of the means which the employee amplifies or improves in details.[59]

3. PRESUMPTIONS AS TO INVENTORSHIP. Where a party employs another to assist in giving practical effect to his ideas, the presumption is that the employer is the inventor of the thing produced by their joint effort, and the burden is upon the employee to show clearly that he made the invention.[60] On the other hand where a party is employed to exercise his inventive skill because of his supposed ability as an inventor, the presumption is in favor of the employee.[61]

D. Government Employees. Government employees in general may secure patents upon inventions made by them during their employment and are entitled to own the patents upon the same conditions as other employees.[62] The government may have an implied license to use the invention, but has no title to the patent except by express agreement.[63] Employees of the patent office cannot receive or own a patent except by inheritance or bequest;[64] but after their employment ceases they may secure a patent upon an invention made during their employment.[65]

E. Assignees. Patents may be issued and reissued to assignees upon applications made by the inventors.[66] It is not necessary, however, for the patent to issue in the name of the assignee in order that he shall acquire title, since it vests in him by operation of law when the instrument of transfer is made.[67] Assignees as well as inventors may transfer title to patents owned by them since the right of transfer is unlimited.[68]

F. Personal Representatives. Upon the death of the inventor before issue of patent, the right of applying for and obtaining the patent devolves upon the executor or administrator.[69] The personal representatives take the patent with other property in trust for the heirs.[70] A foreign executor or administrator may apply for and receive the patent, but his authority must be proved by a certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States.[71]

G. Heirs. If after applying for a patent the inventor dies and the patent issues in his name after his death, it goes by operation of law to the heirs.[72]

H. Guardian of Insane Person. Where an inventor becomes insane before securing a patent, his legally appointed guardian, conservator, or representative may apply for and obtain the patent in trust for him.[73]

V. APPLICATION AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.[74]

A. In General. The application for a patent must be made to the commissioner of patents,[75] and the statutory requirements must be complied with in making application and in the proceedings thereon or the patent is void.[76] The proceedings upon applications are governed by rules adopted by the commissioner of patents with the approval of the secretary of the interior under section 483 of the Revised Statutes.

B. Requisites of Application — 1. In General. An application for patent in the United States comprises a petition, specification, claims, oath, fee of fifteen dollars, drawings if the nature of the inventions admits of illustration, and a model if required by the patent office.[77] Models are seldom required and are never necessary as a prerequisite to the entry of the application as complete.[78] All parts save the model must be filed in the patent office before the application will be given a filing date.[79] The application must be signed by the inventor if alive and two witnesses.[80] Copies of the specification, claims, and drawings are attached to the patent and form a part thereof.[81]

2. Specification or Description — a. In General. The word "specification," when used separately from the word "claim," as used in the statute, means the written description of the invention and of the manner and process of making, constructing, compounding, and using it and the claims made.[82] While it is said that courts are reluctant to declare patents void for insufficient description,[83] the applicant must nevertheless describe not merely the principle of his invention, but the best mode in which he contemplates applying the principle and must describe the means to be employed in such full, clear, and exact terms as will enable those skilled in the art without other aid to make and use the invention.[84] If this is not done the patent is void.[85] It has been decided that nothing should be left to

Reasons for rule.—Exactitude in the description of an invention is required in order that the government may know what they have granted, and what will become public property when the patent expires; that licensees may know how to use and practice the invention during the term of the patent; and that subsequent inventors may know what portion of the field of an invention is unoccupied. experiment.[86] A specification is sufficient, if a mechanic skilled in the art can from the descriptions and drawings make and use the invention;[87] and sufficiency is to be determined by knowledge possessed at the time of the grant.[88] By "skilled in the art" is meant those of ordinary skill and not the very expert.[89] Whether the description is so full, clear, and exact as to enable any one skilled in the art to make and use it is a question for the jury to determine[90] upon the evidence of persons skilled in the art to which the patent appertains.[91]

b. Matters of Common Knowledge. It is not necessary to describe matters of common knowledge which those skilled in the art would understand without description.[92]

c. Uses of Invention. It is not necessary to describe all uses to which the invention may be put, but it is necessary to describe some intended use.[93] The inventor is entitled to all uses of his invention whether he foresaw them or not.[94]

d. Philosophical Principles. If the inventor does not know the philosophical principles upon which his invention works or what takes place during its operation, the failure to describe them does not render the patent void so long as the description is sufficient to enable those skilled in the art to practice the invention and get the results desired.[95]

e. Improvements. The general rule governing description of the thing for which a patent is asked[96] applies in the case of improvements.[97] The description should show clearly in what the improvement consists.[98] It should be confined to the specific improvement and such parts of the old mechanism as necessarily coöperate with it.[99] It should distinguish between the old and the new.[1] If this is not done the only mode of obviating the difficulty is either by an amended specification or a new patent.[2] It is usually unnecessary to describe the old machine,[3] a general reference thereto being sufficient,[4] unless a description of the whole machine as it operates with the improvement is essential to make the description understood by a person of the trade to which it belongs.[5] A description in a patent for an improvement is sufficient if a practical mechanic acquainted with the construction of the old machine in which the improvement is made, can, with the aid of the patent and diagram, adopt the improvement.[6]

f. Concealment and Deception. Where the inventor in his patent intentionally conceals facts about his invention or attempts to deceive or mislead the public in regard to it, the patent is void.[7] An untrue statement of a material fact invalidates a patent, although a skilled workman might avoid it.[8] Mere defects in the description not intended to deceive will not invalidate a patent;[9] and if fraud is charged it must be proved.[10]

3. Claims[11] — a. In General. The specification must conclude with a definite and distinct claim or claims pointing out the feature or features of the device disclosed which the applicant regards as his invention or discovery.[12] The claims fix the extent of the protection furnished by the patent.[13] The protection afforded by the patent does not extend to all that is shown but only to what is set forth in the claim.[14] While the specification may be referred to to limit the claim, it can never be made available to expand it.[15] The claims are essential parts which the public are to look to and scrutinize to ascertain their rights, and must control;[16] and the courts should be careful not to enlarge by construction the claim which the patent office has admitted, and which the patentee has acquiesced in, beyond the fair interpretation of its terms.[17] If a patentee describe and claim a part only of his patent he is presumed to have abandoned the residue to the public.[18]

b. Vague, Indefinite, and Inaccurate Claims. The claim must be definite and clear so as to inform the public with certainty just what it is that the patent secures as a monopoly,[19] and it must be accurate.[20] If it is vague and indefinite it is void.[21]

c. Must State Means, Not Function or Result. The claim must state the physical structure or elements of mechanism by which the function desired is attained or the end or result produced,[22] and is not valid if it merely states the function, end, or result.[23]

d. Breadth of Claim. While the claim should include such elements as are necessary to produce the desired result,[24] it is not necessary that the claim specify in detail mechanism which constitutes the invention;[25] but it may refer to the elements of mechanism by broad terms of description which will include equivalent mechanism for the purpose.[26] The inventor may make a generic claim including many specific forms.[27]

e. Alternative Claims. Claims should not seek to include two elements by referring to them in the alternative but should use some broad term of description applicable to both.[28]

f. Multiplicity of Claims. While a number of claims may be made in a single patent,[29] they should contain material differences and should not consist of mere repetitions in varying phraseology of the same thing.[30] A needless multiplicity of claims calls for a limited construction of them,[31] and the patent may be invalid because of ambiguity.[32]

must clearly show the invention.[34] They are not required to be working drawings or made to an exact scale, but it is sufficient if they disclose the inventor's idea so that one skilled in the art may make it.[35] They may be signed by the applicant or his attorney, but there must be two witnesses to the signature.[36]

5. Oath — a. Necessity. It is provided by statute that the applicant must make oath that he believes himself to be the original and first inventor of the thing for which he solicits a patent; that he does not know and does not believe that the same was ever before known or used and shall state of what country he is a citizen.[37] In construing this statute it has been held that the taking of the oath is but a prerequisite to the granting of the patent and in no sense essential to its validity.[38] The patent office also requires that he shall state that the invention has not been in public use or on sale in this country or described in a printed publication in this country or abroad more than two years before the application was filed and shall give the date of foreign patents granted upon the invention.[39]

b. By and Before Whom Made. The oath must be made by the inventor if living and sane,[40] and if dead, by the executor or administrator.[41] It may be made in the United States before any officer authorized to administer oaths; and if made abroad before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States or before any notary public, judge, or magistrate having an official seal and authorized to administer oaths[42] the authority of the foreign officer shall be proved by a certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States.[43]

c. Absence of Written Oath. A patent is not invalid merely because no written oath appears among the papers of the record, since it is to be presumed that an oath was taken.[44]

6. Fees. In the United States the first fee of fifteen dollars must be paid upon filing the application;[45] and the final fee of twenty dollars must be paid within six months after the application is passed and allowed by the patent office.[46] This means six calendar months.[47] The patent, however, is not subject to collateral attack upon the ground that the fee was not paid.[48]

7. Subject-Matter or Scope. An application for a patent should relate to a single subject and should claim only one invention, or if more than one only such as are related and dependent. The application cannot include independent inventions,[49] although it may include related inventions.[50] The doctrine of the patent office that applications for patents shall not be severable except on structural lines must be held to mean upon physical lines which actually divide the machine into separate parts,[51] but his decision is not conclusive and may be passed upon by the courts.[52]

C. Examination and Proceedings in Patent Office — 1. In General. The commissioner of patents is required by law to make or cause to be made by the primary examiner an examination for each application for patent and to determine whether the applicant has complied with the law and discloses a new invention which is sufficiently useful and important to warrant the grant of a patent.[53]

The statutory requirement that he shall give the applicant such reasons and suggestions as will enable him to judge of the experience of abandoning or modifying his application is directory merely and his action in the premises is not reviewable.[54] He should decide not only questions of law, but also of fact,[55] and his action in awarding or refusing a patent is judicial.[56] The decision of the examiner or board of examiners is not conclusive upon him, and he may refuse a patent allowed by the examiner.[57] So it is his duty, if there be within his knowledge or cognizance any substantial or reasonable ground why a patent should not issue, to refuse the patent, whether the specific objection be raised and acted upon by the examiners or not.[58] The applicant being given the right of appeal, the commissioner will not determine doubtful questions in his favor.[59]

2. REJECTION. If upon such examination it appears that the applicant is not entitled to a patent as claimed the application will be rejected and the reasons therefor will be stated.[60] The application may be rejected for want of diligence and abandonment.[61] The rejection will be reconsidered upon request supported by proper argument pointing out the supposed errors therein.[62]

3. EVIDENCE AT HEARING. The patent office is not confined to technical evidence in rejecting applications but may base its action upon anything which shows the facts with reasonable certainty.[63] The burden is on the applicant to be opposed by one interested but not refused where there is doubt. Ex p. Sheffield, L. R. 8 Ch. 237, 42 L. J. Ch. 356, 21 Wkly. Rep 233; In re Bailey, L. R. 8 Ch. 60, 42 L. J. Ch. 264, 27 L. T. 4. Amendment — a. In General. Where objection is made to the form of the application, amendment may be made by the applicant or his attorney to correct the error,[66] and where a claim is rejected the applicant or his attorney may amend it to avoid the references cited or reasons for rejection given.[67] He may amend at any time prior to the entry by the primary examiner of a final order of rejection.[68]

b. New Matter. All amendments must be within the scope of the original disclosure and must not introduce new matter.[69] An improvement upon the invention disclosed must be claimed in a separate application.[70] A claim made by amendment to matter not disclosed in the application as originally filed is invalid.[71] The description of the functions, operation, or advantages of the invention may be changed so long as there is no change in the disclosure of the invention itself.[72] ceding action by the patent office. Further delay works an abandonment of the application unless shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner to have been unavoidable.[73]

d. Oath. An amendment which is within the scope of the original specification does not require a new oath.[74] Otherwise, however, where the specification as well as the claim is enlarged so as to include an invention not before described.[75]

5. Allowance. If the invention is found to be patentable the application must be passed and allowed.[76] The applicant must pay the final fee within six months thereafter and the patent must issue within three months after the payment of the final fee or the application is forfeited.[77]

6. Forfeiture and Renewal. A case forfeited by failure to pay the final fee within six months after allowance may be renewed by any one having an interest in the invention at any time within two years after the original notice of allowance.[78] The right of renewal, whether more than one renewal be asked, must be exercised within the two years.[79] The original papers may be used in the renewal application but a new fee is required.[80]

7. Abandonment. Upon the failure of the applicant to complete his application and prepare it for examination within one year after the filing of the petition, and upon his failure to take proper action in prosecution of it within one year after action by the patent office, the application is abandoned unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the delay was unavoidable.[81] The commissioner's ruling upon the question of abandonment of an application is final and conclusive.[82]

a patent upon substantially the same patentable invention an interference is declared to exist, and the parties are permitted to present proofs in support of their claims.[84] The question to be determined is that of priority of invention.[85] Priority is ordinarily the only thing at issue.[86] The right of one of the parties to make a claim may be considered as an ancillary question.[86a] The question of patentability is not involved.[87] The proceedings are conducted under rules established by the commissioner,[88] but are analogous to proceedings in equity and the same rules of evidence are applicable.[89] The issue is construed in accordance with the specification of the party who first made the claim.[90]

b. Between Applicants and Patentees. An interference must always involve an application for a patent, but may be declared between an application and a patent previously granted to another for the same thing, for, although the patent office cannot cancel the patent already issued, it may issue a second patent to the real inventor.[91]

c. Evidence — (1) Burden of Proof. The burden of proof in an interference case is upon the party last to file his application,[92] and where his opponent has a patent granted before that filing date he must prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt.[93] But a preponderance of evidence will be sufficient where the question involved is to which one of the two parties making separate applications for patent does the right of original invention or discovery of the subject-matter in issue belong,[94] or where the application of the junior party was pending when a patent was granted to his adversary.[95] Where each of two parties to an interference claims a disclosure to the other, the presumption is in favor of the one who has a practical knowledge of the art, and against the one who has not such knowledge.[96]

When burden shifts.— Where the junior party to an interference shows by his evidence a disclosure and reduction to practice prior to the filing date of the senior party's application, the burden of proof is shifted to the senior party to establish a date of invention and reduction to practice prior to that of the junior party. A limitation on this doctrine is that where a patent was inadvertently granted to one party during the pendency of his opponent's application both parties are to be treated as if they were applicants. Failure to rebut sworn statement of disclosure.— The rule that the failure of a party to an interference to rebut the sworn statement of his adversary that he had fully disclosed the invention to him furnishes strong evidence that the latter is not the prior inventor does not apply where there is no evidence of a complete disclosure, and merely unsatisfactory evidence of a partial disclosure. Podlesak v. McInnerney, 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 399, 120 Off. Gaz. 2127.

invention before his application date, he must file in the patent office a statement within a time fixed and before seeing his opponent's case setting forth the dates of his conception and development of his invention.[1] Such statements correspond to the pleadings, and the party will not be permitted to prove a date earlier than alleged therein.[2] The statements are not considered as proofs.[3]

e. Second Interference. The power of the commissioner is not exhausted by once deciding a question of interference;[4] but where cause is shown, he may permit the unsuccessful party to withdraw his application, and refile it and then declare anew an interference between the same parties.[5]

9. APPEAL — a. In General. A party dissatisfied with the rejection of his claims by the primary examiner or with the decision in an interference case may appeal to the board of examiners-in-chief;[6] if dissatisfied with their decision he may appeal to the commissioner in person;[7] and if dissatisfied with his decision he may appeal to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia.[8] No appeal lies to the supreme court from the court of appeals, in a case brought up from the patent office.[9] There is no appeal to the secretary of the interior from the commissioner's action granting or refusing patents and he cannot control in any way such action.[10]

The rule will not be ignored, with the consent of the counsel, unless expressly approved by the commissioner of patents or his representatives. While cases may often arise where the interest of the parties to interference proceedings and the public will be best subserved by permitting dates earlier than those set forth in the preliminary statements to be proved, this should be done under the supervision of and with the approval of the patent office. Appeal not a proceeding in equity.— An appeal to this court in an interference case is not a proceeding in equity, and the provisions of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4915 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3392], providing for relief by a bill in equity where the patent has been finally refused, do not apply. for appeal.[11] There is a conflict of authority as to whether a patentee may appeal from an adverse decision in interference proceedings; while there are some decisions affirming the right of appeal,[12] the weight of authority is against it,[13] it being said that a decision awarding priority to the applicant and granting him a patent does not invalidate the existing patent.[14]

c. Formalities and Proceedings. The appellant must file in the patent office within a fixed time a notice of appeal to the court of appeals together with his reasons of appeal specifically set forth in writing and within a fixed time thereafter must file in court a certified copy of all the original papers and evidence in the case.[15] The commissioner must furnish the court with a statement in writing of the grounds for his decision touching the points involved in the reasons of appeal.[16] The commissioner and examiners may be examined orally by the court.[17] Officers of the patent office may attend the hearing and advise the court.[18]

d. Appealable Decisions. An action which amounts to a final refusal of a patent as requested is to be regarded as a rejection and appealable whatever form that action may take.[19] The refusal to entertain an application is a rejection,[20] and the requirement that an application be divided is a rejection and appealable.[21] Mere interlocutory or preliminary rulings or orders are not appealable but only final decisions.[22] A rejection or decision by the commissioner is appealable even where there has been no decision in the case by the examiner or examiners-in-chief.[23] A refusal of a rehearing is not appealable;[24] nor is a decision dissolving an interference.[25] The reasons for a decision are not appealable, but only the decision itself.[26]

e. Review. On appeal from the decision of the commissioner of patents the court is limited to the points involved in the reasons of appeal.[27] And the exercise of the discretion of the commissioner of patents should not be disturbed save where that discretion has palpably been abused.[28] Except in extraordinary cases, the court will not disturb the findings of fact of the patent office. Nevertheless the court is not bound by the conclusions drawn from such facts, unless convinced that such conclusions are correct.[29] The question of identity of invention is in general one which should be settled by the experts of the patent office, and not by the court.[30] And the question of the operativeness of the device cannot be considered by this court as an incident of the main question of priority.[31] So the court will not consider the patentability of the invention, the question in interference cases being one of priority and not of patentability.[32] The unanimous decision of the patent office will not be reversed except for clear error.[33] It will not be reversed on any mere question of doubt whether it be correct or not.[34] If the decision of the commissioner is correct the fact that his opinion is erroneous is immaterial.[35] The court has no power to send the case back to take further proofs.[36]

f. Time For Appeal. Appeals must be taken from the patent office within one year,[37] or within a shorter period fixed in the decision.[38] Notice of appeal to the court of appeals from decisions of the commissioner must be given to the commissioner of patents within forty days from the date of the decision exclusive of Sundays and holidays.[39] A transcript of the record must be filed in the court of appeals within forty days thereafter.[40]

10. Caveats — a. In General. A caveat is simply notice that the one filing it claims to be the inventor of the subject-matter disclosed.[41] It entitles him to notice from the patent office if any one files an application for the same thing within the life of the caveat which is one year,[42] but it does not entitle him to notice of applications filed previously or subsequently.[43] Its purpose is to prevent the issue of a patent to another while the caveator is perfecting his invention.[44] But the fact that a patent is inadvertently granted while a caveat is pending does not of itself vacate the patent, or authorize the granting of a patent to the other party unless he shows priority of invention.[45] The caveat is not conclusive evidence that the invention is in part perfected; a person may chose to file a caveat while he is going on and making improvements upon an invention which he has already completed so as to be of practical utility.[46]

b. By Whom Filed. A caveat can be filed only by the actual inventor but may be filed by a foreigner as well as a citizen of the United States.[47]

11. SECRECY OF APPLICATIONS AND CAVEATS. Applications for patents and caveats are preserved in secrecy by the patent office because of the express provisions of the federal statutes[48] that an inventor cannot be compelled to disclose a secret invention made or owned by him.[49]

12. RIGHT TO INSPECT AND OBTAIN COPIES OF PATENT OFFICE RECORDS. Any one making proper application therefor and paying the fees provided by law may obtain copies of all public records of the patent office;[50] but they cannot obtain copies of pending applications to which they are not parties except upon a proper showing made to the commissioner of the right to and necessity for the copies or upon the order of a competent court.[51]

13. COPIES OF RECORDS. Certified copies of records, books, papers, or drawings belonging to the patent office are received as evidence in all cases where the originals could be evidence;[52] and certified copies of the specifications and drawings of foreign letters patent in the United States patent office constitute prima facie evidence of the fact of the granting of such letters patent and of the date and contents thereof.[53]

14. RULES OF PATENT OFFICE. The rules of procedure established for the patent office have the force of law where not inconsistent with law and are binding upon the commissioner as well as upon applicants for patents.[54]

15. CONCLUSIVENESS AND EFFECT OF PATENT OFFICE DECISIONS[55]— a. In General. The decision of the commissioners of patents in the allowance and issue of a patent creates only a prima facie right, and is subject to examination by the courts;[56] but the commissioner of patents must abide by the decision of his predecessor, granting a patent, so long as it is unreversed by a competent court.[57] Such being the prima facie presumption the burden of proof to establish a contrary conclusion is upon the opposite party.[58] If the proofs do not overcome this presumption, and the device is of such a character, or relates to such special and peculiar subject-matters, that it does not come within the range of common experience or judicial knowledge, the prima facie showing must stand.[59] This presumption in favor of the validity of a patent does not, however, obtain where the records and papers of the patent office show conclusively that the commissioner has acted without authority or has exceeded it,[60] or where his decision is impeached for fraud.[61] It cannot be shown, however, that the commissioner who granted the patent exceeded or irregularly exercised his authority, except by matter apparent on the face of the patent. The patent is conclusively valid until it is successfully impeached in a direct proceeding properly instituted for that purpose.[62] If there was fraud practised in obtaining the patent, that is a matter between the patent office and the patentee. The patent, although obtained by fraud, must be respected and enforced until reversed or annulled by some proceedings directly for that purpose. It is not exposed to the attacks of strangers or third persons for such reason.[63]

b. As to Application and Procedure in Obtaining Patent. In the absence of fraud, the issue of a patent is conclusive evidence that the statutory requirements as to the application and procedure in the patent office have been complied with.[64]

c. As to Patentability. The decision of the patent office, upon an application for a patent, is never final upon the question of the novelty and utility of an invention. Upon reason and authority, the new patent granted after a hearing merely makes out a prima facie case for the successful applicant,[65] and the original presumptions of novelty and utility arising from the grant of a patent are strengthened by its extension.[66] Even where an interference is claimed, and as against the parties to the hearing, the commissioner's decision is not conclusive.[67] But while the decision of the commissioner of patents is not res judicata on the question of novelty, it is entitled to the highest respect,[68] and where patentable novelty has been denied by all the tribunals of the patent office, it will require a very clear case to obtain a reversal.[69] On the question of usefulness and cost of an invention, it has been held that the testimony of machinists and manufacturers having practical knowledge of the subject-matter is of greater weight than the opinion of the commissioner of patents.[70]

d. As to Originality and Priority. The issuance of a patent establishes prima facie the patentee's title as the original and first inventor.[71] So a previous decifirmed in 62 Fed. 404, 10 C. C. A. 441], holding that the action of the patent office in allowing a separation of claims into divisional applications is not conclusive, and the question whether the severance was proper and valid may be passed upon by the courts. See also McKay v. Dibert, 5 Fed. 587.

As to giving notice and paying fees.— A patent once granted cannot be subsequently impeached by evidence tending to show a want of compliance with the law as to giving notice, or paying fees, etc. Lamprey Boiler Furnace Mouth Protector Co. v. Economy Feed Water Heater Co., 62 Fed. 590 [affirmed in 65 Fed. 1000, 13 C. As to taking of oaths.— Recitals in letters patent in the absence of fraud are conclusive evidence that the necessary oaths were taken before the patent was granted. Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 516, 20 L. ed. 33; Hancock Inspirator Co. v. Jenks, 21 Fed. 911; De Florez v. Raynolds, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,742, 3 Ban. & A. 292, 14 Blatchf. 505. sion by the commissioner of patents in interference proceedings upon the question of fact as to priority of invention must be accepted as controlling, unless the contrary is established by testimony which, in character and amount, carries thorough conviction.[72] Much more is this effect to be given to the decision of the commissioner when it has been affirmed by the court of appeals of the District of Columbia.[73] While the decision of the patent office on this question is never final,[74] even as against the parties to an interference proceeding,[75] it is nevertheless entitled to sufficient weight in an infringement suit to cast the burden of proof on the party against whom it was rendered.[76] When the prima facie force of a patent as to priority of invention on the part of the patentee has been once destroyed by evidence of prior invention on the part of another, it cannot be restored by the patent itself, but only by specific testimony from witnesses.[77]

e. As to Abandonment. The action of the commissioner of patents in granting letters patent does not conclude the question whether there has been an abandonment.[78]

ing is original in its nature and not appellate,[80] and new evidence may be presented.[81] In interference proceedings, whether a party not involved in the suit was the first inventor is not in issue.[82] The complainant is not entitled to a decree as a matter of right but must establish it.[82a] Where there is no interfering claimant a copy of the bill must be served upon the commissioner of patents, and in such case all costs and expenses of the proceedings must be paid by the complainant whether the decision is in his favor or not.[83] The court has no power to enjoin the commissioner from issuing a patent pending suit.[84] A judgment of the court that the applicant is entitled to a patent will authorize the commissioner to issue.[85]

b. Time and Place of Suit. The suit must be brought within one year,[86] and must be brought in the district in which defendant is an inhabitant or may be found.[87] The commissioner of patents is a resident of the District of Columbia and the suit must be brought there against him where there is no interfering party,[88] unless he consents to be sued in another district.[89]

c. Burden of Proof. In a suit in equity to obtain a patent, the burden is upon the complainant to prove his right beyond a reasonable doubt.[90]

VI. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF LETTERS PATENT.[91]

A. Form and Contents — 1. As an Instrument. A patent is an instrument issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the patent office, signed by the commissioner of patents, containing a short title or description of the invention or discovery indicating its nature and design, and a grant to the patentee, his heirs or assigns, for the term of seventeen years of the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention or discovery throughout the United States and the territories thereof, and must refer to the specification for the particulars thereof.[92] So, by the provisions of the statute, it is necessary that a

Questions of fact.— Where the question which of two applicants for a patent for the same invention was the true inventor depends on questions of fact, the court, in an action brought under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4915 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3392], by the unsuccessful applicant to compel an issuance of the patent to him, must be very clearly satisfied that the decision of the patent office tribunals between the two was erroneous before it will be justified in reversing the same. 2. RECORD. The patent together with the specification must be recorded in the patent office in books kept for that purpose.[94]

3. DATE OF ISSUE. Every patent shall issue within three months from date of payment of final fee, which fee must be paid within six months from date of allowance and notice to applicant or to his agent.[95] A patent cannot be antedated.[96]

B. Validity — 1. IN GENERAL. Where the statutory requirements in the issue of the patent have not been complied with the patent is invalid and this may be shown at any time,[97] although as a general rule a patent is not subject to collateral attack for defects not appearing on the face of the patent.[98] As has already amended April 11, 1902, 32 U. S. St. at L. 95 [U. S. Comp. St. Suppl. (1905) p. 662]; U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4884 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3381]. Prior to the amendment of April 11, 1902, patents had to be signed by the secretary of the interior or an assistant secretary and had to be countersigned by the commissioner of patents, and a failure to comply with the statutory provisions, such as the omission of the signature of the secretary of the interior, is fatal to the validity of the patent. b. Excessive Claims. Where claims are so broad as to include prior inventions they are invalid,[13] and where they do not identify the invention of the patentee they are invalid.[14]

8. Delay of Application in Patent Office. A patent is not rendered invalid by delays in the patent office where the applicant for patent takes proper action in prosecution of his application within the time fixed by statute.[15]

9. Jurisdiction to Determine Validity. A patent is merely prima facie valid, and the United States courts have jurisdiction to declare them invalid in whole or in part, where the issue as to their validity is raised in a proper proceeding.[16] In a suit for infringement of a patent the court may give judgment for defendant on the ground that the patent is invalid, but it cannot in such a proceeding annul the patent, and in the case of interfering patents may declare one void; but it is only by suit instituted by the government that the United States courts can annul and cancel a patent.[17]

C. Correction or Amendment of Patents.[18] The officials of the government have authority to correct errors made by them in the issue of patents,[19] and errors made by the applicant may be corrected by disclaimer or reissue.[20]

D. Interfering Patents[21]— 1. In General. Interfering patents are those which claim the same invention in whole or in part.[22] Where two patents are issued, some or all of the claims of which are substantially the same, any one interested in either patent or any one interested in the working of the invention claimed under either of them may have relief against the interfering patentee by suit in equity and the court may adjudge either patent invalid.[23]

2. Proceedings. The suit is governed by ordinary equity rules,[24] and must be brought in the district where defendant may be found.[25] If the bill fails to show that defendants are the owners of the alleged interfering patent it is bad on special demurrer.[26] Suit to annul an interfering patent may be joined with suit for infringement.[27] It is not necessary for defendant to file a cross bill to obtain affirmative relief.[28] The better opinion is that the evidence should be confined to the question of priority of invention between the patentees,[29] although there are authorities to the effect that evidence as to the state of the art is admissible.[30] The suit is independent of any interference in the patent office, and the depositions there taken are not ordinarily admissible in evidence.[31] Where two patents interfere there is a rebuttable presumption that the patentee who first filed his application is the first inventor.[32]

3. JUDGMENT. If there is no interference in fact the bill of complaint will be dismissed.[33] If there is an interference the court will declare the patent of the later inventor void in whole or in part, or as inoperative or invalid in a specified part of the United States in accordance with the interest of the parties,[34] and may grant relief by injunction when necessary to protect the rights of a party.[35] The judgment does not affect the rights of persons not parties to the suit unless they acquire title from one of the parties subsequently.[36]

E. Annulment or Repeal. The United States government can maintain a suit in the United States courts to annul or cancel a patent on the ground that it was obtained through fraud, but no individual can bring or maintain such a suit.[37] The matter of instituting suit is within the control of the attorneys for the government, and they are not required to institute such suit at the request of a party who declares the patent to be invalid.[38] Suit may be maintained by the government not only when it has a proprietary and pecuniary interest in the result, but also when it is necessary in order to enable it to discharge its obligations to the public, and sometimes when the purpose and effect are simply to enforce the rights of an individual;[39] and prayers for cancellation of two patents relating to the same subject and owned by the same party may be joined.[40] It cannot maintain a suit to repeal on grounds that have been sustained in a suit for infringement,[41] nor ask an injunction restraining the commencement or prosecution of suits for infringement of a patent for the repeal of which they have begun an action.[42] The appropriate remedy is by bill in equity,[43] and actual fraud must be alleged and proved.[44]

When the bill to annul a patent is really in the interest of private parties, who have given bond to indemnify the government from

F. Estoppel to Dispute Validity — 1. In General. The issuance of a patent does not estop the patentee from proving that the invention claimed therein is not novel in the absence of bad faith in procuring such patent.[45] Nor, as a general rule, will a contest in the patent office upon the question of priority of invention foreclose the defeated applicant for a patent from assailing the validity of the patent upon other grounds.[46] A patentee is, however, estopped to deny the correctness of the description in the specification of the existing art.[47] So also a patentee, who secures a correction limiting the life of his patent, is estopped, as against infringers, to deny the validity of the limitation.[48] Furthermore other persons associated with him in the ownership of rights under the patent are also estopped, in the absence of an affirmative showing that they were ignorant of his acts in procuring the limitation.[49] An answer in an infringement suit asserting the validity of a patent granted to defendant estops him to deny on the hearing the validity of a similar patent granted to plaintiff.[50] In a suit upon a license or contract, which contains a covenant upon the part of the licensee, by which the validity of the patent is admitted, and the licensee has had the benefit of the license, he is estopped to deny the validity of the patent by setting up anything contrary to the admissions in his contract.[51] So a covenant or agreement not to infringe estops the parties thereto from controverting the validity of the patent.[52] But it has been held that an arrangement made by two patentees, by way of compromise to avoid litigation, will not be construed as an acknowledgment by either of the validity of the other's patent, so as to estop him or his assigns or licensees to deny its validity.[53] Nor does a mere mercantile agreement not to deal in certain patented machines operate as an estoppel to deny the validity of the patent.[54]

2. Estoppel of Infringer. An infringer cannot deny the utility of the invention, although he may deny its novelty.[55] But it has been held that one all costs and who could have set up the matters on which the suit is based as a defense in a suit against them by the patentee, it must be dismissed. U. S. v. Frazer, 22 Fed. 106.

Estoppel to deny title of licensee.— The owner of a patent who grants an exclusive license thereunder is estopped to deny that the licensee took good title to the privilege which he undertook to convey. Seal v. Beach, 113 Fed. 831.

The foundation of the estoppel against a vendor patentee is the fact that he has received and retained a valuable thing in consideration of the statements contained in the application for, or specification of, the patent. Therefore, when an assignment is made pending the application for a patent, it is immaterial whether or not the vendor may have made representations to the purchasers concerning the probability of obtaining a patent. Nor is it material that the purchasers knew that the thing sought to be patented was old, when they understood that the patent was sought for a new application and use of it. National Conduit Mfg. Co. v. Connecticut Pipe Mfg. Co., 73 Fed. 491.

Corporations.— The rule applies to corporations as well as to natural persons. Marvel Co. v. Pearl, 114 Fed. 946; Force v. Sawyer-Boss Mfg. Co., 111 Fed. 902 [affirmed in 113 Fed. 1018, 51 C. C. A. 592]; Edison Electric Light Co. v. Buckeye Electric Co., 64 Fed. 225. The estoppel against the assignor of a patent operates against a corporation subsequently formed by him, and which is entirely owned and controlled by him. The corporation will be estopped, even if another party has a substantial interest therein, where it appears that at the time of acquiring his interest he had known of the patent and its assignment and had been associated with the assignor in the line of business to which the patent relates. National Conduit Mfg. Co. v. Connecticut Pipe Mfg. Co., 73 Fed. 491. The mere fact, however, that an inventor, who has assigned his patent, subsequently becomes an officer in a corporation which is alleged to be an infringer does not render applicable to such corporation the estoppel which operates against him personally. A limitation on this doctrine, however, is that he cannot insist on a construction that would render the patent valueless. Hurwood Mfg. Co. v. Wood, 138 Fed. 835.

4. ESTOPPEL OF ASSIGNEE, GRANTEE, OR LICENSEE. A licensee or grantee cannot dispute the validity of the patent unless it has been pronounced invalid by a court of last resort.[60] An assignee or licensee cannot dispute the validity of the patent for the purpose of avoiding carrying out the conditions of sale or license.[61] A mere offer to take a license will not operate as an estoppel,[62] and there is no estoppel where an implied license is alleged.[63] A corporation is not estopped by a personal license to a stock-holder.[64] In the absence of any specific agreement not to contest the validity of the patent, the estoppel of a lessee or licensee is confined to the particular article covered by the lease or license;[65] but a party may bind himself generally not to dispute the validity of the patents embodied in those articles.[66]

5. EXPIRED LICENSE. The fact that a party once operated under a license will not estop him from disputing the validity of the patent, unless there was some agreement by him to that effect.[67]

VII. TERM.[68]

A. In General — 1. Mechanical Patents. All mechanical patents granted in the United States upon applications filed after December 31, 1897, have a term of seventeen years from the date of the grant.[69] The term of seventeen years was fixed by the act of 1871;[70] but between that date and the time the act of March 3, 1897, went into effect, patents were limited to expire with foreign patents upon the invention. Under section 8, the act of 1897 applied only to patents granted on applications filed after December 31, 1897.[70a]

2. Designs. The term of a design patent is three and one-half, seven, or fourteen years, as elected in the application for patent.[71]

3. Reissues. A reissued patent is operative only for the unexpired part of the term of the original patent.[72]

4. Limitation by Foreign Patent — a. In General. Patents granted upon applications filed before January 1, 1898, are by statute limited to expire at the same time as any foreign patent previously procured by or for the United States patentee having the shortest term to run.[73] The question of secrecy or publicity in the Assignment of right to patent.— The fact that an applicant for a patent assigned his right thereto to another before applying for and obtaining a foreign patent for the invention which was issued before the one in this country will not prevent the latter from being limited to the term of the foreign patent. John R. Williams Co. v. Miller, etc., Mfg. Co., 115 Fed. 526.

foreign patent does not prevent the limitation.[74] To act as a limitation, however, the foreign patent must be procured by the United States patentee or by his consent or be ratified by him.[75] It would be manifestly unjust that a patentee should lose the full fruits of his patent by the fact that some intermeddler had caused the invention to be patented abroad.[76] A provisional patent issued in a foreign country which merely secures the applicant against the effects of publication for three years and entitles him to a definitive patent on making the required proofs of the existence of either the article itself or a model thereof within that time is not such a patent as is referred to in the statute,[77] and a foreign patent void ab initio will not limit or invalidate the United States patent.[78] The rule is otherwise, however, as to a patent issued by virtue of the recognized lawful authority vested in the king of a foreign country, although there was no patent law in the shape of a legislative enactment.[79] Failure to limit the patent on its face so as to expire at the same time with the prior foreign patent having the shortest time does not affect its validity.[80] Although the patentee procures the "correction" of a patent limiting it to expire with a foreign patent, which attempted "correction" is void for want of jurisdiction of the commissioner to make it, he is not estopped to claim that the patent was in force for the full term of its life as originally fixed.[81]

b. Identity of Invention. It is not necessary that the patents be identical in all particulars, or that the inventions disclosed therein be identical, since it is sufficient if upon examination of the two instruments it appears that substantially the same thing is intended to be covered thereby.[82] A difference in mere detail does not avoid identity,[83] unless such difference affects the essence of the invention in a patentable sense.[84] And a foreign patent and a subsequent American patent are not for different inventions because the latter contains a more genuine claim, which covers the specific form of device described in the former, and other forms as well.[85] But a prior patent in a foreign country for a minor part of a broad or basic invention is not for the same invention as a subsequent United States patent covering both the minor parts and the broad main invention.[86] When American letters patent are issued covering the same invention described in foreign letters patent of an earlier date, the life of the American patent is not prolonged by the fact that it also covers improvements upon the invention as patented in a foreign country.[87] It is necessary that the foreign patent claim the same invention; it is not sufficient that it disclose the invention of the later United States patent, where it is not claimed therein.[88]

e. Date of Foreign Patent. To limit a United States patent the foreign patent must have been actually sealed and issued before the date of the United States patent, and the antedating of a foreign patent will not make it limit a patent here which was actually granted first.[89] Dates of actual issue and not the dates of application control.[90]

d. Term of Foreign Patent. The term of a foreign patent is the time which the patentee may as a matter of right keep it in force under the law of the country.[91] It includes not merely the term mentioned in the grant, but any extension thereof which may be procured at the option of the patentee, and it is immaterial whether or not such extension is actually procured.[92] The judgment of the courts of the foreign country as to the meaning of its laws and the term of the patents is controlling.[93]

e. Lapse or Expiration of Foreign Patent. Where, at the time that the United States patent is granted, a foreign patent is in force, granted for a certain term, and that patent subsequently lapses through failure to pay fees or taxes or for similar cause, the United States patent does not lapse with the foreign patent, decisions, has authority to extend the term of patents either by general law or special act.[99]

VIII. REISSUES.[1]

A. In General — 1. Definition. A reissued patent is in effect an amendment of the original patent made to cure some defect or insufficiency in the original;[2] a patent which merely secures the patent rights more definitely in some particular wherein the original patent was defective.[3]

2. Power to Reissue and Grounds. The statutes of the United States authorize a reissue of a patent where the original is inoperative or invalid by reason of a defective or insufficient specification, or by reason of the patentee's claiming as his own invention or discovery more than he has a right to claim as new, provided the error arose by inadvertence, accident, or mistake and without any fraudulent or deceptive intent.[4] The statute is mandatory and gives the commissioner no discretion as to cases within its provisions.[5] While it is to be construed liberally according to its spirit,[6] a reissue cannot be granted except as provided therein.[7] To warrant a reissue it is necessary that there should be a bona fide mistake or accident and not merely an error in judgment,[8] and the patent must be inoperative and invalid.[9] Claims that are too narrow render the patent inoperative and justify a reissue.[10] So where the patent claims too much there may be a reissue.[11] The reissue is not invalid because the error corrected was immaterial.[12]

3. PERSONS ENTITLED TO REISSUE. A reissue may be granted to the inventor, his executor or administrator, or in case of assignment recorded in the patent office may be granted to the assignee.[13] Joint owners must all join in a surrender for reissue or ratify a reissue, otherwise it is invalid.[14] In regard to reissues citizens and aliens have the same rights.[15]

4. Term. The reissue is granted for the unexpired part of the term of the original patent.[16]

B. Time For Application — 1. In General. Application for reissue should be made with promptness,[17] and while the length of delay which is permissible depends on the circumstances of the particular case,[18] it has been said that where claims are broadened a delay of two years will ordinarily be regarded as too long unless excuse is shown therefor.[19]

2. Intervening Rights of Third Persons. Where a reissue is sought merely to expand the claims of a patent, so as to embrace structures or devices brought into use since the issuance of the original, and which were not infringements of the claim of the original, there being no proof of mistake or inadvertence, the right to a reissue is lost by unreasonable delay, and the reissue, being made, is void.[20]

Application to enlarge monopoly.— Where the reissue was obtained, not for the purpose of correcting a mistake, but for the mere purpose of enlarging the monopoly of the patent, it is immaterial that the application for reissue was made within two years from the time of the original grant. Even if the claim is technically narrowed instead of broadened, a reissue after long delay, during which adverse equities have arisen, cannot be sustained, when the original patent did not indicate, or even hint at, the invention of the reissue.[21] What is not claimed in an original patent is dedicated to the public unless the patent is surrendered and reissued within a reasonable time and before adverse rights have accrued.[22] It will not do for the patentee to wait until other inventors have produced new forms of improvement and then, with the new light thus acquired, under pretense of inadvertence and mistake, apply for such an enlargement of his claim as to make it embrace these new forms.[23] Such a process of expansion carried on indefinitely, without regard to lapse of time, would operate most unjustly against the public and is totally unauthorized by the law.[24] No matter how valuable and meritorious an invention may be, a patentee has no right, by reissuing his patent, to gradually widen the scope of his claims so as to keep pace with the progress of invention.[25] But a reissued patent is not void, because the things claimed in the original had been in public use in the interval between the original and the reissued patent. Such a publication is not an abandonment or dedication.[26]

3. Excuses For Delay. The applicant may excuse delay in applying for reissue by showing good reasons for failing to make the application sooner.[27] The question whether delay is unreasonable is a matter of law for the court.[28]

C. Identity of Invention[29] — 1. In General. The reissued patent must be for the same invention as the original patent and no new matter can be introduced.[30] The invention may be differently stated, but must remain the same.[31] The "same invention" as used in the reissue statute refers to whatever invention was described in the original letters patent and appears to have been secured have been claimed originally may be included in the reissue.[36] Where the reissue omits several devices which were essential to the original purpose, the reissue is void.[37]

2. New Matter — a. In General. The rule is otherwise, however, where the omission does not constitute an essential or material change but is only an incidental feature.[38] The reissue cannot include matter which formed a part of the patentee's real invention unless that matter was actually included in the original patent.[39] A failure to include it through inadvertence, accident, or mistake does not justify its inclusion by reissue.[40] Where the claims of the reissue contain new patentable matter which is so interwoven with other elements specified in the original that they cannot be separated, the entire reissued claim must be taken together and a patent issued thereon is void.[41]

b. Intention to Claim. It must furthermore appear from the face of the papers that the subject-matter covered by the claims of the reissue was not merely disclosed in the original patent, but was sought and intended to be claimed therein.[42] Matter abandoned or disclaimed on the original application cannot ordinarily be claimed on reissue.[43] This doctrine does not apply, however, if the disclaimer was made by accident, inadvertence, or mistake.[44]

c. Apparatus, Process, and Product. A patent for an apparatus cannot generally be reissued to claim the process, since a process and the apparatus are not necessarily one and the same invention.[45] A process patent cannot generally be reissued to cover the apparatus.[46] There is no hard and fixed rule, however, and in some cases such a reissue may be allowed.[46a] A process patent may, however, in some cases be reissued to cover the product produced by the process.[47]

3. Reinsertion of Canceled Claim. The patentee cannot obtain by reissue claims inserted in the original application and canceled therefrom in view of objection or rejection by the patent office.[48]

D. Surrender of Original Patent. To obtain a reissue, the applicant must surrender the original patent, but the surrender does not take effect until the reissue is granted, and if the reissue is refused the original patent is in force.[49] The so-called surrender is nothing but a preliminary offer prior to the issue of the new patent;[50] the original patent is extinguished by reissue.[51] Whether, if the reissue be void, the patentee may fall back on his original patent has not been decided by the supreme court, although the question has been raised.[52] It has been held in the circuit court that, if the reissue is void for want of authority to make it, the surrender is ineffective for want of authority to accept it.[53] Suit cannot be maintained on the original after application for reissue and before the grant.[54]

E. Applications and Proceedings Thereon — 1. In General. Where the application should put forth facts entitling the patentee to a reissue[55] it is not indispensable that the petitioner should use the exact phraseology of the statute if he employs language which actually conveys its legal meaning.[56] It must be signed and sworn to by the inventor if he is alive and must be acquieseed in by assignees.[57] The proceedings thereon are the same as in the case of original applications except that a filing fee of thirty dollars is charged and no final fee is required.[58]

2. Divisional Reissues. Several reissues may be granted for parts of the thing patented upon the payment of separate fees and other due proceedings had.[59]

F. Reissues of Reissued Patents. A reissue may be granted of a reissued patent as well as of the original,[60] and a second reissue may return to the language of the original patent and be identical therewith.[61]

G. Conclusiveness and Effect of Patent Office Decisions — 1. In General. The grant of a reissue by the patent office raises a presumption that the patentee was entitled to it and therefore the reissue is prima facie valid.[62] Except as to matters appearing on the face of the papers showing excess of jurisdiction by the patent it is conclusive.[63]

2. As to Grounds For Reissue. The conclusion of the patent office officials as to inadvertence, accident, or mistake and as to regularity of proceedings is conclusive in the absence of a showing of fraud.[64]

3. As to Identity. The grant of a reissne raises a presumption that it covers the same invention which was sought and intended to be claimed in the original, but such presumption is not conclusive and is to be decided from the face of the papers.[65]

H. Validity, Construction, and Operation of Reissues[66] — 1. Validity. Aside from the questions of new matter and estoppel, the validity of a reissue is determined by the same considerations as the original patent,[67] and, upon the questions of anticipation and public use and sale, relates back to the date of the original application for patent.[68] Fraud will invalidate the reissue,[69] but clerical error,[70] or irregularities of procedure in matters not vital,[71] will not. One claim in a reissue may be void without necessarily invalidating the other claims, and in such case it is proper to disclaim the void claim,[72] and a reissue is not invalid merely because the claim of the original patent was valid.[73]

2. Construction and Operation — a. In General. As respects the construction and operation of reissues the same rules apply as in original patents.[74]

If possible the reissue will be sustained. Brainard v. Cramme, 12 Fed. 621, 20 Blatchf.

b. Retroactive Operation. An infringer of the claims of a reissue can be held only for acts committed after the reissue is granted.[75] But the fact that he was using the invention before the reissue was granted does not relieve him from liability for using it subsequent to the reissue.[76]

IX. DISCLAIMERS.

A. In General. The patentee, his heirs or assigns, whether of the whole or any particular interest therein, may upon payment of the fee fixed by law make his disclaimer of such parts of the thing patented as he shall not choose to claim or hold under the patent.[77] It must indicate the interest of the disclaimant,[78] and must be in writing attested by one or more witnesses and must be recorded in the patent office.[79]

B. Subject-Matter of Disclaimer. The separate claims of a patent may be eliminated by disclaimer, but they cannot be amended and transformed into other claims, and matter cannot be added to the specification under guise of disclaimer.[80]

A disclaimer may extend to a part of the specification as well as to a claim or one feature of a claim,[81] and part of a reissued patent may be disclaimed.[82] A disclaimer can eliminate only matter which is clearly severable from the balance, and which can be removed without changing the balance.[83] Elements of a combination claim cannot be eliminated.[84] Where a reissue is void because too broad the original patent cannot be revived by merely filing a disclaimer of all extensions thereof.[85]

C. Time For Disclaimer. Disclaimer should be filed without unreasonable delay, and, unless filed before suit is brought, no costs can be recovered by the patentee.[86] Disclaimer may, however, be made after as well as before suit;[87] the failure to file before suit affecting costs only and not the decree.[88] Whether a delay in filing a disclaimer is unreasonable is a question of law.[89]

D. Effect of Failure to Disclaim. It is not necessary to enter disclaimer except as to substantial or material parts.[90] The failure to disclaim invalid claims will not prevent recovery of damages for the infringement of valid claims in the patent where the patentee was not guilty of fraud and where there was no unreasonable neglect or delay in entering disclaimer.[91] Unreasonable delay, however, will be a good defense to the suit.[92]

E. Effect of Disclaimer. In determining the meaning of a disclaimer, the same rules are to be observed as in construing any other written instrument, the purpose being to carry out the intention of the person executing it as indicated by its language when construed with reference to the proceedings of which it forms a part.[93] A disclaimer limits the patent in so far as the disclaimant is concerned to the matter therein which is not disclaimed.[94] It is effective only as to the party filing it,[95] and a disclaimer in one patent does not affect another.[96]

X. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF LETTERS PATENT.[97]

A. In General — 1. General Rules of Construction Relating to Contracts Applicable. A patent is subject to the same general rules of construction that apply to other contracts.[98] The entire instrument, including the drawings and specifications, is to be considered in arriving at its intent and meaning.[99]

2. Liberally Construed. Patents are to be liberally construed so as to secure to the inventor the real invention which he intends to secure by his patent, and technical defects or inaccuracies will not be permitted to prevent this result.[1] The description of the patent, however, must be so certain as to be understood by those acquainted with the subject-matter.[2] There should not be a liberality of construction which permits the inventor to couch his specification in such ambiguous terms that its claims may be expanded or contracted to suit the exigency;[3] and where an inventor divides up his invention so as to present certain elements in different patents, he is thereby limited to a more strict and narrow construction than might have been otherwise necessary.[4]

4. Intention of Inventor. The intention of the parties in formulating the patent is entitled to great consideration when it can be determined from the record.[7] The court will look to the manifest design in order to remove any ambignity arising from the terms employed; but this ambiguity must not be such as would perplex any ordinary mechanic in the art to which it applies.[8]

5. Proceedings in Patent Office. The proceedings in the patent office pending an application are not as a general rule admissible as evidence tending to enlarge, diminish, or vary the language of the claim of the patent.[9] An amendment of the claim which comes in incidentally and in reference to an incidental matter does not necessarily exclude a liberal interpretation when the invention is a broad one.[10] Matters which have been duly disclaimed after issue of the patent cease to be a part of the invention, and the patent is then to be construed as though they had never been included in the description of the invention or the claim of the specification.[11] Any correspondence between the inventor and the patent office prior to the grant of the patent is inadmissible to enlarge, diminish, or vary the language of the patent afterward issued,[12] at least where its terms are not ambiguous.[13] But it has been held that when the patent bears on its face a particular construction, such a construction may be confirmed by what the patentee said when he was making his application.[14] Formal admissions imposed upon the applicant as a condition precedent to the allowance of a patent are binding.[15] Argumentative statements of counsel in the course of proceedings in the patent office do not estop the patentee from claiming what is clearly granted by the patent.[16] Mere remarks by the examiner in the course of the proceedings do not estop the patentee from claiming the construction shown by the specification and original claim.[17] Where it is in evidence from the record of the patent office that a certain construction was there contemplated, and that the patent would not otherwise have been granted, no objection can be made to the same construction of it by the court on the ground that such construction is narrow, and will render the patent practically useless.[18]

6. Opinion of Experts. The court is not bound by the opinions of experts in patent cases and may reject them where they do not seem reasonable.[19]

7. State of the Art. A patent is to be construed in the light of the state of the art at the time it was granted,[20] and it has been very generally held that in Argumentative suggestion.— The language of the patent as issued may not be contradicted by mere argumentative suggestions made by the applicant in his communications to the patent office, especially where no change is made in the claim. Language of solicitor employed to obtain patent.— Where the specifications of the application and of the letters patent are not ambiguous and are capable of a definite construction, the language of a solicitor employed to obtain the patent, used in a communication with the patent office to convey an idea of his own, will not override the language of the patent, especially where there is no evidence to show that the idea was ever adopted by the patent office. A. 145, holding that when claims are rejected on references cited against them, the applicant is called upon to exercise his election between insistence and appeal, or desistance and acquiescence, and, if he acquiesces, the public is entitled to the benefit of the limitations and admissions imposed upon him as a condition precedent to the allowance of the patent.

Where the patent is not for a broad invention but merely for a change of form, admissions contained in a file-wrapper and its contents in respect to amendments made upon the citation of references involving the issue of novelty constitute an estoppel against the patentee in the interpretation of his claims. 8. Patent as Notice. Everyone is bound to take notice of a patent, since the record thereof in the patent office is legal notice to all the world.[22]

9. Questions For Court and Jury. The scope and meaning of a patent is a matter of law for the court, and the application of the law to the facts of the case is for the jury.[23] It is for the court to construe the patent and instruct the jury as to its meaning.[24]

3. EFFECT OF WORDS "SUBSTANTIALLY AS DESCRIBED" IN CLAIM. Such words as "substantially as described" placed at the end of a claim do not have the effect of limiting the claim to precisely what is described and shown,[34] but mean merely that the specification and drawings are to be looked to in determining the meaning and scope of the terms used.[35] The words do limit the claim if necessary to sustain it or to cover the real invention.[36] They are implied in all claims whether they are actually present or not.[37]

4. REFERENCE LETTERS. The use in the claims of letters of reference appearing in the drawing as representing parts of the apparatus is not to be regarded as limiting the claim to the precise form of those parts unless such limitation is necessary in order to make the claim patentable over the prior art.[38]

5. EQUIVALENTS. A patentee is entitled to hold as infringer not merely one who makes or uses a device having the specific elements disclosed and claimed by him, but any one who makes or uses a device having elements which are known equivalents of those claimed.[39] The things, however, must be known equivalents

Improvements of narrow character.— The use of letters in a claim to describe a patented invention, which is merely an improvement of a narrow character, will limit the inventor to the elements so designated, as shown in the drawings and specifications to which the letters refer, which are by such reference, in effect, incorporated in the claim. of each other at the time of the patent.[40] What is regarded as an equivalent depends upon the circumstances of the particular case.[41]

6. PIONEER INVENTIONS.[42] Where the invention is broad and meritorious and makes a radical advance in the art, the field of equivalents is equally broad and the claim will receive a broad and liberal interpretation.[43] A patent original in its character is entitled to a broader construction than one which is for a mere improvement.[44]

7. IMPROVEMENTS. Where the invention is a narrow specific improvement upon prior inventions, the field of equivalents is restricted and the patent must be narrowly construed.[45] One who merely makes and secures a patent for a slight improvement on an old device or combination, which performed the same functions before as after the improvement, is protected against those only who use the very device or improvement he describes or claims, or mere colorable evasions of it.[46] The term "mechanical equivalent," when applied to a slight and almost immaterial improvement in the progress of an art, has a very narrow and limited meaning.[47]

8. Combination. Every element included in a combination claim must be regarded as material, and therefore the claim covers nothing less than the entire combination.[48]

9. Amendment in Patent Office. Limitations placed in a claim by amendment in response to rejections by the patent office must be regarded as material, and therefore the claim cannot be given the meaning which it would have had without amendment.[49] The rule applies to cases in which the original claim is narrower than the patent as well as to cases in which it is broader.[50] So it applies, although the objections to the claim were unfounded and the limitation unnecessary.[51] Mere formal amendments, however, will not limit the patent;[52] and in any event the patent will not be limited by the amendment beyond what is necessary,[53] nor construed as a disclaimer of the patentee's actual invention, if

Liberal construction of claim as granted.— While it is settled law that a patentee who has acquiesced in the rejection of a broad claim by substituting a narrower one cannot insist upon a construction of the latter to cover that which was rejected, yet such rule does not debar him from a liberal construction of the claim as granted, nor from the benefit of the doctrine of equivalents. such construction can be avoided without doing violence to the obvious meaning of the language used.[54]

10. Separate Claims Distinguished. The several claims of a patent must be so construed where possible as to give them different meanings.[55]

11. Designs. Design patents govern not merely the identical design disclosed, but such as so nearly resemble it in appearance as to deceive ordinary observers.[56] The ordinary principles of construction apply.[57]

XI. TITLE, CONVEYANCES, AND CONTRACTS.[58]

A. Assignments and Other Transfers[59] — 1. In General — a. Assignability. Under express statutory provisions patents and interests therein are assignable.[60]

b. Who May Assign[61] — (I) In General. The patentee, his assigns or legal representatives, may transfer interests in or rights under the patent.[62]

(II) Joint Owners.[63] Where two or more parties own a patent jointly, either may make, use, and sell the invention, or grant to others the right to do so, and this is true without regard to the proportionate interest which the parties own.[64]

But a part owner of a patent has no right to use an infringing device. If he does he is liable to his coöwner for the wrong done.[65] A coöwner cannot maintain a suit for infringement against the grantee.[66] Nor can one joint owner be held accountable to his coöwners for any part of the profits he may make from the manufacture and sale or use of the patented article.[67] The rights of the coöwners may, however, be limited by an express contract.[68]

2. Agreements to Assign[69] — a. In General. An agreement to assign a patent is an executory contract which may be enforced in a court of equity.[70] The agreement to assign may be oral, such an agreement not being within the statute of frauds, nor within section 4898 of the Revised Statutes requiring assignments of patents to be in writing.[71] Specific performance of such an agreement will, however, be refused where the patent is void.[72]

b. Future Patents. An agreement to assign patents not yet secured may be enforced if it is sufficiently definite as to the subject-matter. If the parties intend to contract for future inventions, language plainly expressing such a purpose must be used.[73] An assignment of a patent with future improvements passes only improvements on the particular machine secured by the patent and not unrelated inventions.[74] An agreement to assign all future inventions cannot be enforced.[75] An instrument of transfer identifying the invention and requesting the commissioner of patents to issue the patent to the assignee therein operates as an absolute assignment.[76] If the assignment contains no request that the patent issue in the name of the assignee, his title is equitable merely.[77]

c. Recording. The law does not require that agreements to assign patents be recorded, and therefore their record is not constructive notice.[78]

d. Actions. An agreement to assign may be enforced by suit in equity to compel specific performance,[79] and if the patentee has parted with title and is unable to carry out his contract damages may be recovered.[80]

3. Requisites and Validity — a. In General. The monopoly granted by the patent laws is one entire thing, and cannot be divided into parts except as authorized by law.[81] A patentee or his assigns may by instrument in writing assign, grant, and convey, either: (1) The whole patent, comprising the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention throughout the United States; or (2) an undivided part or share of that exclusive right; or (3) the exclusive right under the patent within and throughout a specified part of the United States.[82] A transfer of either of these three kinds of interests is an assignment, properly speaking, and vests in the assignee a title in so much of the patent itself.[83] Any assignment or transfer short of one of these is a mere license giving the licensee no title in the patent.[84] Whether a transfer of a particular right or interest under a patent is an assignment or a license does not depend upon the name by which it calls itself, but upon the legal effect of its provisions.[85] Such an assignment may be either absolute, or by way of mortgage, and liable to be defeated by non-performance of a condition subsequent.[86]

b. Form and Contents. The assignment of a patent must be an assignment in writing signed by the patentee, his assigns or legal representatives,[87] and like any deed must be free from ambiguity;[88] but no particular form of written instrument is required.[89] An instrument worded as a mere license may, on account of the actual interest conveyed, amount to an assignment.[90]

c. Validity. The validity of an assignment of a patent is determined by the same considerations as apply to other deeds and contracts.[91]

4. Recording[92] — a. In General. By statute, an assignment, grant, or conveyance must be recorded in the patent office within three months, or it will be void as against any subsequent purchaser without notice.[93] Within that period, the three months, an unrecorded prior assignment will prevail.[94] This statute is merely directory for the protection of bona fide purchasers without notice, and does not require the recording of an assignment within three months as a prerequisite to its validity.[95] Hence, as between the parties and as against everyone except a subsequent purchaser without notice, an unrecorded assignment is good.[96] The assignment of a patent not yet issued need not be recorded.[97] Nor is it necessary that an assignment of a patent by a bankruptcy court to the assignee of the owner of the patent be recorded.[98]

b. Notice. An unrecorded written assignment is good against a subsequent purchaser having actual or constructive notice of it.[99]

c. Acknowledgment Before Notary. If the assignment is acknowledged before a notary public or certain other officers, the certificate of the notary or other officer is prima facie evidence of execution.[1] The acknowledgment of an assignment of a patent relates to the date of the assignment.[2]

5. Construction and Operation — a. In General. Assignments and grants of patent rights are subject to the same rules of construction as other contracts.[3]

b. Warranty. The assignment of a patent creates an implied warranty of title in the assignor,[4] but no warranty that the patent is valid,[5] or that the invention does not infringe prior patents.[6]

c. Rights and Interests Conveyed — (i) In General. Within the limits of the grant the assignee has the same rights as were formerly possessed by the patentee.[7] An assignment of all the grantor's right, title, and interest in and to a certain patent carries only the existing interest of the grantor at the term of the assignment.[8] Words restricting the grant to such patents as the grantor "holds in his own right" do not exclude patents of which his tenure is not exclusive.[9] An assignment of an invention as described in the specifications filed covers all the devices claimed therein to be patentable, and not merely such as are covered by the patent as ultimately issued.[10] But an assignment of all right, title, and interest in an improvement of a machine already patented conveys no interest in the original patent.[11] An assignee may bring suit in his own name and may transfer the whole or a part of his interest.[12]

(II) Rights in Extended Term.[13] The extent to which an assignee may enjoy the benefits of an extended term of a patent depends entirely upon the stipulations of the contract.[14] The operation of such an instrument is not limited to the term specified in the patent where the instrument contains apt words to show that the parties intended that its operation should be more comprehensive;[15] but in the absence of a specific provision to that effect an assignment of letters patent does not carry with it any interest in a subsequently extended term.[16] Where, however, the conveyance is of the invention, before the issue of letters patent therefor, the assignee is entitled, unless the instrument of assignment shows a different intention, to obtain a renewal at the expiration of the original term.[17]

(III) Rights in Reissue. Where after assignment a patent is reissued the rights of the assignee are the same under a reissued patent as under the original.[18] But the assignee must consent to or ratify such reissue.[19]

(IV) After-Acquired Title. Where an instrument of transfer is made when the assignor has no title, an after-acquired title inures to the benefit of the assignee.[20]

(V) Rights of Action For Past Infringement. The assignee of a patent does not acquire a right of action for past infringement unless so specified in the assignment.[21] But when the assignment includes, expressly or impliedly, all claims for past infringements, the assignee may sue therefor.[22] Mere intention, however, not signified in the assignment, to include therein claims for infringements previously committed, will not suffice to invest the assignee with any title to those claims.[23]

d. Covenants, Conditions, and Restrictions — (I) In General. Covenants and conditions in an assignment do not prevent it from operating as an absolute assignment where they are conditions subsequent, such as a stipulation as to division of royalty or profits.[24] But conditions precedent must be performed before an assignment will become operative.[25]

(II) Remedy For Breach of Conditions — (A) Rescission or Cancellation. For the non-payment of royalties or other non-performance of conditions, a forfeiture may be enforced; but in the case of a condition subsequent, the title which had theretofore vested remains in the assignee until the forfeiture is enforced.[26] If it is so stipulated, however, the title will revert to the assignor by operation of law, upon the breach of a condition.[27] The general rules governing the rescission and cancellation of written instruments are applicable to contracts for assignment of patents.[28] A patentee may, by his acquiescence, estop himself to claim the cancellation of an assignment.[29]

(B) Recovery of Damages. Either party may recover damages for a breach of a condition or covenant.[30]

6. Rights, Remedies, and Liabilities of Parties[31] — a. In General. The assignee acquires no other or greater rights than were possessed by the assignor and is bound by the legal consequences of the assignor's acts.[32]

b. As to Each Other — (I) In General. In the absence of warranty equity can give no relief to the assignee of a patent found to be void unless fraud is shown.[33] To rescind a contract of sale of a patent right on the ground of false and fraudulent representations, such representations must have been of material facts, constituting an inducement to the contract, whereon the purchaser had a right to rely, and did rely, and was thereby misled to his injury.[34] Fraudulent representations, in order to afford a ground for relief, must be of facts then existing or preëxisting, as distinguished from an opinion, a promise or an assumed future fact. Furthermore these facts must be of a concrete character, as distinguished from a truth or principle.[35] Representations by the seller of a patent that the same is valid and does not interfere with any prior patent must be regarded as matters of opinion, and not as statements of facts,[36] unless it appears that there was a prior patent covering the identical invention, and that the seller was aware thereof.[37] So a statement that letters patent are new and useful, if untrue, is not cause for avoiding a sale of the letters made in reliance on such statement.[38] Nor is a mere false assertion of value, when no warranty is intended, ground of relief to a purchaser, because the assertion is matter of opinion.[39] But a gross misrepresentation of the capacity of a machine and the success in selling and operating it, of which the purchaser was ignorant, has been held sufficient to warrant the rescission of a contract induced thereby.[40]

(II) Liability For, and Recovery Of, Consideration.[41] In the absence of fraud or warranty the assignee of a patent right cannot refuse to make the payments agreed upon merely because the patent is found to be invalid,[42] or because the patented device infringes another patent;[43] but he may refuse where there is a total failure of consideration flowing from the assignor, as where the patented device is inoperative or useless.[44] But in order to sustain the defense of want of consideration it is not enough that the practical utility of the patent be limited, or that the manufactured article cannot be manufactured and sold at a profit, if it be capable of use.[45] A breach of a warranty given on the sale of a patent right is equivalent to a failure of consideration and furnishes a good defense to an action for the price.[46]

(III) Recovery Back of Consideration by Assignee. Since no warranty is implied in the sale of a patent right the purchaser of such a right cannot, in the absence of fraud, and without an express covenant, recover of his vendor the price paid for it, because it is found to be invalid.[47] He may, however, recover back the purchase-money if the patent right was not that which he agreed to buy, unless he has accepted a deed describing the patent.[48] If a patentee elects to rescind a contract of sale for non-payment of the whole purchase-price the vendee is entitled to recover back the amount paid on the contract.[49]

7. Transfer by Succession or Inheritance.[53] Upon the death of the patentee the patent vests in the administrator or executor and not in the heirs.[54]

B. Licenses and Contracts[55] — 1. Licenses — a. In General. A license is any right to make, use, or sell the patented invention which is less than an undivided part interest in the patent itself.[56] A license operates only as a waiver of the monopoly as to the licensee, and estops the licensor from exercising his prohibitory powers in derogation of the privileges conferred by him upon the licensee.[57] It gives no right to bring suit upon the patent and has been defined as the right not to be sued.[58]

b. Requisites and Validity — (1) In General. A license may be express or implied. An express license may be oral or in writing.[59] If in writing no particular form of words is necessary. Anything which confers upon another the right to do an act which otherwise would be illegal is sufficient.[60] Its validity is determined by the same principles that apply to other contracts.[61] A license to use an invention may be given before it is patented,[62] and if without restrictions, and if acted on by applying the invention to machines or mechanisms constructed before the granting of the patent, will protect the licensee in its use afterward.[63] It must conform to the requirements of state laws,[64] and not be in restraint of trade.[65]

(II) Implied License[66] — (A) In General. The conduct of the owner of the patent may be such as to create an implied license to make, use, or sell the invention.[67] Mere acquiescence, if founded on a valuable consideration, is sufficient of itself to amount to a license.[68]

(B) From Sale of Patented Article. The sale of a patented article by one entitled to sell it carries with it the right to use the particular article anywhere desired, and to sell it to others unless there was an agreement to the contrary when the sale was made. By virtue of the contract of sale and the unconditional delivery the article sold is released from the monopoly.[69] The sale of a patented article without condition or restriction carries with it dominion over the article so sold, and the purchaser may use it in any manner and for any purpose,[70] so long as such use does not violate the vendor's exclusive property in another invention.[71]

A sale, in order to have this effect, however, must be by one entitled to sell.[72] The purchaser has no right to make another machine or structure like it, nor to buy one from an infringer.[73]

c. Recording.[74] The law does not require that a license be recorded in the patent office even as against subsequent purchasers.[75]

d. Construction and Operation — (I) In General. Licenses are to be construed like other contracts,[76] according to the intention of the parties.[77] If the license is in writing, all previous parol agreements are merged therein,[78] and oral evidence is not admissible to explain its provisions,[79] unless it is capable of two interpretations and a doubt exists as to its true meaning.[80] Several licenses constituting one transaction may be construed together.[81]

(II) Rights and Interests Conveyed — (A) In General. The rights conferred by a license must be taken subject to the conditions therein made by the licensor.[82] The licensee has, however, the right to do those things which are necessary to the enjoyment of his license, such as to make a machine which he has been licensed to use.[83] Conversely a conveyance of the right to make and sell a patented article includes the right to use it.[84] So one licensed to make and use may add improvements.[85] But the right to use a composition does not carry the right to use the process.[86]

(B) Place For Exercise of License—(1) EXPRESS LICENSE. A license to use a patented device in a particular territory,[87] or at a particular establishment,[88] or on a particular railroad,[89] is binding upon the licensee and its use elsewhere is unlawful. But a license to use and sell a machine within a specified territory authorizes the licensee to sell the product of the machine out of the said territory.[90] And a license to use a patented device in a particular shop does not prevent its manufacture elsewhere.[91]

(2) IMPLIED LICENSE. It is well settled that the sale of a patented article by one authorized to sell it carries the right to use it anywhere,[92] even in the territory of another assignee or licensee.[93] The right to sell, as distinguished from the right to use, in the territory of another, was formerly denied;[94] but the recent decisions have overruled this doctrine, holding that the sale of patented articles by the patentee or a territorial assignee confers upon the purchasers of such articles the right to carry the same into the territory of another assignee, and there sell them, in the usual course of trade, without the consent or license of the latter assignee.[95]

(C) Duration of License[96]—(1) IN GENERAL. A license not expressly limited in duration continues until the patent expires or the license is forfeited through some act of the licensee, if not terminated by mutual consent.[97] However an express stipulation in the contract as to the duration of the license will of course control.[98]

(2) In Extended Term. The presumption of law in regard to every license under a patent is that the parties deal in regard only to the term existing when the license is given, unless an express provision is inserted looking to a further interest; and unless there be such a stipulation, showing that the parties contemplated an extension, the provisions of the license will be construed as relating to the then existing term only.[99] There is, however, a distinction between the grant of the right to make and vend the patented article, and the grant of the right to use it. Purchasers of the exclusive privilege of making or vending the patented article hold the whole or a portion of the franchise which the patent secures, depending upon the nature of the conveyance, and the interest which the purchaser acquires at the time limited for its continuance by the law which created the franchise, unless it is expressly stipulated to the contrary.[1] But the purchaser of the implement or machine for the purpose of using it in the ordinary pursuits of life stands on different grounds. Where such a sale is absolute, and without any conditions, the rule is well settled that the purchaser may continue to use the implement or machine until it is worn out in spite of any and every extension subsequently obtained by the patentee or his assigns.[2] But a licensee who, having machines in use at the end of an original term of a patent, takes a license for another year under the extended term, waives any rights which he had to use such machines when the first term ended.[3] If before the extension the right to use was limited to a particular district or to a specified number of machines, it continues during the extension subject to the same limitations.[4]

him an infringer of the patent.[6] A party selling patented machines may impose any conditions desired upon the use or further sale of those machines, and a purchaser with notice is bound by those conditions.[7] But a purchaser without notice of any private agreements between the patentee and his licensee is not bound thereby.[8]

e. Rights, Remedies, and Liabilities[9]—(i) In General. The rights and liabilities of the parties arise from the license contract and are to be determined from its terms and conditions.[10] Where a licensee violates his express covenants or repudiates the license, the licensor may sue either for breach of the agreement or for infringement.[11] Where the licensee has exclusive right within certain territory the patentee cannot invade that right and the licensee may maintain suit against him for infringement.[12]

(ii) Enjoining Use of Invention. A provisional injunction will be granted against a licensee to restrain his use of a patented machine in violation of restrictions contained in the license.[13] But such an injunction will be refused where it appears that the licensee violated the restrictions under a misapprehension of his rights, and had discontinued the violation.[14] So where a licensee undertakes to use a patent without paying the license-fee, the use will be enjoined whether or not the license becomes voidable at law.[15] The exercise of a license to build a certain number of patented machines will not be restrained until such number of machines has been completed.[16] A bill by a licensee to enjoin the licensor from manufacturing the goods contrary to his agreement cannot be maintained where it appears that the licensee himself has ceased to manufacture any goods under the license.[17]

(III) Liability For, and Recovery Of, Consideration For License.[18] The grant of a license to make, use, or sell a patented article is a sufficient consideration to support a promise to pay the price of such license if the patent is valid, although it may not be a profitable one.[19] Where the compensation for the use of the patent is not fixed by the contract, and where there is no established license-fee, the licensor is entitled to the reasonable value of such use.[20]

f. Assignments and Sublicenses — (I) In General. Generally a license by a patentee is personal to the licensee, and not transferable.[21] In order to give the quality of assignability to a mere license it must contain express words to that effect, must run to the licensee and his assigns, or by other equivalent language indicate the intention to make the privilege transmissible by the licensee.[22] A licensee cannot apportion his license by assignment, unless a manifest intent to confer such a right appears in the contract of license;[23] and such intent cannot be inferred merely from the grant to him and his "assigns."[24] But where such a license runs to the executors and administrators of the licensees as well as to their assigns, it is apportionable and divisible by assignment, and may be transferred in severalty by one of the licensees.[25]

originally unassignable, by facts and circumstances and the conduct of the parties during the continuance of the license.[26] Even where a license contains a stipulation that it should be non-transferable, it may be assigned with the assent of the licensor, since such a stipulation is for his sole benefit.[27]

(III) Rights and Liabilities of Parties. In the case of an assignment of a license, the assignee is bound to perform the conditions of the license, or the license will become forfeited.[28] But in the absence of any statutory provision the owner of a patented invention is not required to give notice to a voluntary purchaser of a licensee's right in order to enable him to hold such purchaser to the restricted use and enjoyment of the invention stipulated in the license.[29] It is the duty of the purchaser to inform himself of the nature of the licensee's ownership, and the extent of his right.[30]

g. Revocation, Forfeiture, or Other Termination[31] — (I) By Licensor. Where a license contains no power of revocation it cannot be annulled by the licensor without the consent of the licensee,[32] but he must proceed at law for breach of contract.[33] A breach of covenant does not per se work a forfeiture of a patent license,[34] even if the license contains an express stipulation to that effect.[35] It will remain in force so as to defeat a suit against the licensee for infringement until it has been rescinded by decree of a court having jurisdiction.[36] Where the licensor has an adequate remedy at law, equity will not interfere.[37] Where stipulations as to termination are included in the license they must be followed, and when performed end the agreement.[38] An agreement that upon failure of a party to a license to perform his covenant it may be forfeited by a written notice served on him is valid, and may be enforced.[39]

(II) By Licensee. In the absence of a stipulation to that effect, a license is not revocable by the licensee, except by mutual consent, or by the fault of the other party.[40] When so stipulated a licensee may terminate the license by giving written notice, and he will no longer be liable for royalty under it;[41] but the notice given must be clear and unequivocal.[42] The surrender of a license by part of the licensees does not avoid the license as to the remainder of the licensees.[43]

(III) By Death of Licensee. A mere personal license is immediately terminated by the death of the licensee, and no rights thereunder pass to his personal representatives.[44]

(IV) By Dissolution of Partnership or Corporation. The dissolution of a partnership or corporation exercising a patent license extinguishes the license, in the absence of language importing transferability,[45] except as to a continuing partner.[46]

b. Infringement of Design Patents. One who knowingly infringes a design patent is liable in the amount of at least two hundred and fifty dollars and if his profits are greater he is liable for the excess.[73] The owner of the patent may recover the amount at law or in equity.[74]

B. By States. The owner of a patent himself cannot make and sell his patented articles in violation of the laws of the state prescribed for the general welfare.[75] The right conferred by statute to make, use, and vend his invention throughout the United States and the territories thereof is not granted or secured without reference to the general powers which the several states of the Union unquestionably possess over their purely domestic affairs, whether of internal commerce or police.[76] The manufacture and sale of patented articles is subject to state legislation enacted in pursuance of the police power inherent in the state,[77] to the taxing power of the states,[78] if there is no discrimination in such taxation as between the patented article and the sale of other similar articles in the state,[79] and a license-fee can be required for selling in the state patented articles.[80] With respect to the power of states to regulate the transfer or sale of patent rights themselves, there is a very considerable conflict of authority. Sale of patent rights and patented articles distinguished.— There is a manifest distinction between the right of property in the patent, which carries with it the power on the part of the patentee to assign it, and the right to sell the property resulting from the invention or patent. When the fruits of the invention or the article made by reason of the application of the principle discovered is attempted to be sold or used within the jurisdiction of a state, it is subject to its laws, like other property. of cases, both state and federal, the right has been upheld,[81] while in others, both state and federal, the constitutionality of such regulations has been denied,[82] and it has been held that a license-tax cannot be imposed upon the right to vend patent rights.[83] In a very recent decision of the United States supreme court, however, it was held that a "state has the power, certainly until congress legislates upon the subject, with regard to the provision which shall accompany the sale or assignment of rights arising under a patent, to make reasonable regulations concerning the subject, calculated to protect its citizens from fraud," and a state law providing that before barter or sale of patent rights an authenticated copy of the letters patent and the authority of the vendor to sell the right patented shall be filed in the office of the county within which the rights were sold was sustained as a reasonable regulation.[84] And in another recent decision of that court the validity of a state statute making void a note given for a patent, if the note fails to show on its face for what it was given, was upheld.[85]

XIII. INFRINGEMENT.[86]

A. What Constitutes — 1. In General. The infringement of a patent is the unauthorized making, using, or selling of the invention during the life of the patent.[87] The use of what was old prior to the patentee's invention will not infringe.[88] The patent must be a valid one, otherwise there is no basis for a suit for infringement.[89]

Use by the government see supra, I, B, 4.

2. MAKING, USING, OR SELLING. Infringement may consist either in making, using, or selling the invention, or in all three.[90]

3. ARTICLE MADE BEFORE PATENT. Any person who purchases of the inventor, or with his knowledge and consent, constructs an article embodying the invention prior to his application for patent has the right to use and sell the particular article after a patent is granted.[91]

4. EXPERIMENTAL USE.[92] The making of the patented invention for amusement or scientific investigation with no intent of using it practically is not an actionable infringement; but it is otherwise where the thing made is sold or put into actual use.[93]

5. KNOWLEDGE OR INTENT OF INFRINGER.[94] A party is no less an infringer because he did not intend to infringe or because he did not know of the patent.[95] His lack of knowledge or intent can have no effect save possibly on the amount of damages.[96]

6. IDENTITY OF INFRINGING DEVICE[97] — a. In General. It is not necessary that every feature of the invention disclosed in the patent be used in order to constitute infringement, but it is sufficient that the essential features as set forth in the claim are taken. Substantial identity is all that is required. If the essence of the invention is taken, variations in detail will not avoid infringement.[98] Mere differences in form are immaterial,[99] unless the invention claimed resides in the form. Where this is the case substantial identity of form is necessary.[1] To constitute infringement the principle of operation must be the same,[2] and there must be substantial identity of means and not merely of function or result.[3]

b. Limitation of Claims. Each claim of the patent is separately considered in determining infringement,[4] and while a claim describing the invention in broad terms may be infringed by devices differing in many respects from that of the patent,[5] a claim including a distinct limitation to a particular feature is not infringed unless that feature is used.[6]

c. Diversity of Use. The use of an invention for an analogous purpose is infringement,[7] but use for a non-analogous purpose where invention is necessary to procure its adaptability is not infringement.[8]

d. Combination. A claim to a combination of old elements, materials, or parts is not infringed unless every element, material, or part mentioned in the claim, or its equivalent, is used in the same relation;[9] and in the application of this rule it is immaterial that one or more of the elements specified in the claim are not of

of course obvious that an invalid design patent will not support a claim of infringement.[61]

8. Infringement After Expiration of Patent. Articles illegally made during the life of a patent cannot be lawfully sold after the patent has expired.[62] The illegality attaches to the things themselves. The person making them has no right to make them, no right to them when made.[63] But the part manufacture of articles not constituting an infringement, with intent to complete into the patented article immediately on the expiration of the patent, is not infringement, as the monopoly only exists during the life of the patent.[64]

B. Contributory Infringement — 1. In General. Contributory infringement is the intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making or selling or using of the patented invention,[65] and this is usually done by making or selling a part of the patented invention with the intent and purpose of so aiding.[66] The essence of contributory infringement lies in concerting with others in an unlawful invasion of the patentee's rights.[67] The burden of proof is on complainant to show an intention on the part of defendants to aid others in such infringement.[68]

2. Selling Parts of Patented Invention. Selling parts adapted and intended for use in making the patented invention in violation of the patent is contributory infringement.[69] The mere fact that they might be so used, however, will not Selling the ingredients of a composition with the expectation and intent that they be used in making it is infringement. Rum-make the seller an infringer if they are capable of other use,[70] and the seller did not intend that they should be used for purposes of infringement.[71] It is not contributory infringement to make and sell parts to licensees under the patent for legitimate purposes of repair,[72] or to make and ship parts abroad,[73] and there is no infringement if the parts are never put into actual use in the patented combination.[74] So the doctrine of contributory infringement has no application where the thing alleged to be contributed is one of general use, suitable to a great variety of other methods of use,[75] and especially where there is no agreement or definite purpose that the thing sold shall be employed with other things so as to infringe a patent right.[76]

a person, partnership, or corporation, shall have committed acts of infringement, and has a regular and established place of business.[97] In the last case subpœna or process may be served upon the agent conducting the business.[98]

4. GROUNDS.[99] To constitute a basis for an infringement suit, there must have been an unauthorized use[1] by defendant of an invention covered by a valid patent owned by plaintiff.[2]

5. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT. Under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4900 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3388], a patentee or his assignee cannot in a suit against infringers recover damages, without alleging and proving either that patented articles made and sold by him, or the packages containing them, are marked "patented," or else that it gave notice to defendants of his patents and their infringement;[3] and in the event that direct notice to defendants is alleged and proved neither damages nor profits are recoverable, except for infringement after such notice was given.[4] The owner of a patent who has obtained an interlocutory decree adjudging its validity and infringement is not required to wait until it has become final before bringing suit against defendant for infringement by the same device in another district; nor is he precluded, by the fact that evidence has been taken in the second suit, from pleading therein the final decree when obtained in the first suit as an adjudication.[5]

d. Limitations and Laches — (i) Limitations. By express provisions of a recent federal enactment no damages can be recovered for acts of infringement occurring more than six years before suit is brought.[14] So by express provision this statute applies to all existing causes of action;[15] and it is held to apply to actions at law as well as to suits in equity.[16] In all cases where a federal statute of limitation exists, state statutes of limitation can have no application.[17] But prior to 1870,[18] and subsequent to 1874,[19] no federal statutes existed limiting the time within which actions for infringement of patents must be brought, and the question frequently arose whether actions at law were subject to state statutes of limitation, there being considerable conflict in the decisions.[20] This question was finally set at rest by the supreme court of the United States, which held that in the absence of federal legislation the statutes of limitation of the several states were applicable.[21]

(ii) Laches — (a) In General — (1) As Bar to Permanent Injunction. Mere delay in bringing a suit for infringement, unaccompanied by such deceitful acts or silence on the part of the patentee, and by such circumstances as amount to an equitable estoppel, will not warrant the application of the doctrine of laches to such a suit within the time fixed by statute for the commencement of the analogous action at law.[22] Thus mere delay in bringing suit for infringement of a patent will not prevent the owner thereof from obtaining relief in a court of equity when the infringement has been persisted in with knowledge of the patent, and there have been no acts of commission or omission on the part of the patentee to encourage its use,[23] nor where it appears that during the delay another suit was pending for infringement by a machine substantially the same as defendant's.[24] An injunction will not, however, be granted in any case where the party applying for it has not shown good faith, conscience, activity, and diligence, nor where there is any doubt or uncertainty as to the facts.[25] So where a patentee, with knowledge of a device made by defendant, makes no claim of infringement for several years, he will be held estopped to thereafter place a different construction on his patent, for the purpose of making out a case of infringement.[26] A patentee cannot maintain an action of infringement against a mere user who, in common with the public generally, has used the patented device for a period of eleven years with the full knowledge of the patentee and without objection.[27] Where there is no acquiescence on the part of the patentee, nor conscious infringement on the part of the defendants, there is no moral delinquency on either side, or an actual estoppel; and both parties being innocent, diligence will be required of him whose property is to be protected, and the patentee will be left to his action for damages.[28]

(2) As Bar to Preliminary Injunction. The granting or withholding of a preliminary injunction in an infringement suit is within the proper discretion of the court. Where a patentee has known of infringement of his patent, and has acquiesced therein for a considerable length of time, a preliminary injunction will not be granted without an explanation of such acquiescence.[29] It will be withheld when apparently sought for the purpose of obtaining an undue advantage,[30] for the purpose of creating mischief,[31] or of coercing a compromise.[32] But mere forbearance to sue for a reasonable time, after notice given, will not, in the absence of any affirmative encouragement to defendant, affect plaintiff's right to a preliminary injunction in a plain case.[33] Nor will a delay of several years, after knowledge of defendant's infringement, affect the right to a preliminary injunction, where his proceedings had been the subject of dispute and negotiation during the whole period.[34] And where it seems apparent that an injunction at the final hearing is inevitable, an injunction pendente lite will be granted, notwithstanding laches of the complainant in asserting his rights.[35]

(3) As Bar to Accounting For Profits. Mere delay in seeking relief against infringers is in general sufficient to preclude a patentee from the right to an account for past profits, although it may not prevent an injunction.[36] A fortiori where the infringers have acted in good faith, and there has been acquiescence and inexcusable laches on the part of the patentee, a decree for an accounting will not be granted.[37] It has been held, however, that there must be something more than mere lapse of time to bar an accounting.[38]

(B) Excuses For Delay—(1) Ignorance of Infringement. Long acquiescence and laches on the part of a patentee may be excused by satisfactory proof that he had no knowledge or means of knowledge that his patent was being infringed.[39] But a patentee cannot stand by with "easy indifference" when there are facts sufficient to put him on notice, and then plead ignorance as an excuse for his laches.[40] Where the complainant's suspicions of infringement are allayed by the direct misrepresentations of defendant, delay in applying for an injunction does not constitute laches.[41]

(2) Other Excuses. Delay in prosecuting other infringers while the validity of the patent is in active litigation does not constitute laches.[42] So delay in suing an infringer may be excused on the ground that the infringing article, as at first constructed by defendant, was not believed by complainant to be commercially harmful, the grounds for such belief being reasonable.[43] Nor is laches to be imputed to a patent owner because of his failure to prosecute to judgment a suit against an infringer after the latter has become totally insolvent,[44] or when it appears that the complainant was disabled from carrying on litigation by lack of brought by the patentee and the exclusive licensee together.[54] Indeed, an exclusive licensee may join the patentee with him as party complainant even against his will.[55] But a simple licensee has no such interest as to make him either a necessary or a proper party to an infringement suit.[56] Nor is a licensee whose license is not such as to amount to an assignment of the patent a necessary party complainant in such a suit.[57]

(II) In Suits Against Patentee. Where, however, the patentee himself is the infringer, the licensee may, to prevent an absolute failure of justice, sue him in equity in his own name.[58]

8. Persons Liable and Parties Defendant[59] — a. In Actions at Law. The general principle of law is that all who participate in the infringement of a patent are liable in an action at law for damages which may have been sustained by the patentee by reason thereof.[60] If one joint owner of a patent for a machine uses or sells such patentee's machine without the authority of his coöwner as respects the right of the latter, he is liable to an action at law by such coöwner for an infringement of the patent.[61] The rule is, both on principle and authority, that servants and agents who make use of or sell for another a patented article are liable in an action at law to the patentee for damages sustained by him.[62] A mere purchaser of infringing articles is not liable in an action at law as an infringer.[63] Whenever an agent of a corporation proceeding within the general scope of his powers and of the powers delegated to it by him infringes a patent, the corporation is liable to the patentee in an action at law for damages.[64] So too where a private corporation, as a principal, coöperates with another corporation in the infringement of a patent, it is directly responsible to the patentee in an action at law for the resulting damage.[65] As to whether an action at law may be maintained by a patentee against officers of a corporation which infringes his patent, there is a conflict of authority; some cases holding that such an action is not maintainable, even where such officers personally conducted the business which constituted the infringement,[66] while other cases hold that such officers, whenever they actually participate in the infringement, are liable.[67]

b. In Suits in Equity[68]—(I) Persons Liable—(A) Private Corporations and Their Officers. A private corporation is liable in a suit in equity to recover profits resulting from the infringement of a patent by one of its agents while proceeding within the scope of its powers.[69] A suit for an accounting cannot be maintained against an individual who is not alleged to have infringed the patent except in his official capacity as an officer of the corporation charged to have committed the infringement where it is not shown that the corporation is insolvent,[70] or that there is any other obstacle in the way of obtaining full relief against the corporation.[71] But one who in his capacity as officer of a private corporation actively participates in an infringement of a patent by it will be restrained by injunction.[72]

(B) Officers of United States. An officer of the United States is personally liable to be sued at law for his own infringement of a patent, notwithstanding all of his acts in relation thereto were performed under orders of the government; but a suit in equity will not lie as no injunction can be granted.[73]

(c) Joint Owner of Patent. A joint owner of a patent who uses an infringing device is liable in equity to his coöwner for the wrong done.[74]

(d) Agents and Servants. One who as agent for another person sells an article which is an infringement of a patent may be restrained by injunction,[75] even where he had no pecuniary interest in the sale;[76] but such an agent is not liable to be compelled to account to the patentee for the profits of the sale of the infringing article,[77] unless it appears that he was pecuniarily interested in the sale.[78] And the use by one as the agent of another person of a patented device does not render him liable to account for infringement of the patent.[79]

Where there is a privity of connection between the different defendants with reference to the subject-matter of the action, they are jointly liable on a bill for infringing a patent. Wells v. Jacques, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,398, 1 Ban. & A. 60, 5 Off. Gaz. 364.

Although when it comes to an accounting, complainant must prove that a given defendant is liable to him in profits or damages, under risk of which the court may possibly order concerning costs, yet an injunction should go against all of the defendants participating in the infringement. Defendants held not jointly liable.— Contractors laid a pavement for a city which infringed the patent of one A, and the city paid them as much therefor as it would have paid to A had he done the work, thus realizing no profits from the infringement. It was held that in a suit in equity to recover profits against the city and the contractors, notwithstanding the latter answered jointly, the latter alone were responsible, although the former might have been enjoined before the completion of the work and would undoubtedly have been liable in an action for damages. be joined as defendants in a suit for infringement.[86] And a corporation and an individual may be joined as defendants in a suit for infringement of a patent, where it is alleged that the individual defendant owns practically all the stock of the corporation and personally directs its affairs, and that they conspired together to commit the acts of infringement.[87] A party alleged to be encouraging the manufacture and sale by the other defendants of the infringing device and who was closely connected with the transactions complained of is a proper party to the bill.[88]

(B) Receivers of Private Corporation. A private corporation and its receiver may be joined as defendants in a bill for the infringement of a patent.[89]

(C) Agents and Servants. One who is pecuniarily interested in the manufacture of an infringing article and acts as agent for its sale may be joined with the manufacturer as a defendant in a suit for the infringement.[90]

c. Addition or Substitution of Parties. The ordinary rules apply as to the addition or substitution of parties.[91]

9. Joinder of Causes of Action. A single suit may be brought for the infringement of several patents where the inventions covered by those patents are embodied in one infringing process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter.[92] In the absence of such conjoint use, a single suit cannot be maintained.[93]

expire.[7] And an injunction may be refused where the granting thereof would work great injury to defendant and its refusal would injure plaintiff in a much less degree.[8] It is not a ground to deny an injunction that defendant has discontinued infringement and promised not to renew it.[9] An injunction will not be refused because of mere inconvenience to the public or to defendant,[10] but where the granting thereof would injure the public and defendant gives security it may be refused.[11] It is not a ground for denying an injunction that it may be used for advertising purposes to injure defendant.[12]

(II) Issuance and Validity of Patent. No injunction can be granted before issuance of a patent,[13] and the fact that the complainant owns a patent and the defendant infringes it will not ordinarily justify a preliminary injunction.[14]

17. Limitations of rule.— The rule, it has been said, applies only when there is some question as to the validity of the patents. Fuller v. Gilmore, 121 Fed. 129; Foster v. Crossin, 23 Fed. 400. It does not apply where the invention is both new and useful and there is no evidence assailing the validity of the patent (Fuller v. Gilmore, supra; Wilson v. Consolidated Store-Service Co., 88 Fed. 286, 31 C. C. A. 533; Hussey Mfg. Co. v. Deering, 20 Fed. 795); where defendant has for three years been making and selling the patented article under a license subsequently terminated, and since the termination of the license has been marking the articles sold by him as made under the patent (Adam v. Folger, 120 Fed. 260, 56 C. C. A. 540); where it clearly appears that the patent has been intentionally infringed under a patent procured for that purpose (Plimpton v. Winslow, 3 Fed. 333); or where there is no prior patent or publication submitted, nor any statement as to the prior state of

(III) Public Acquiescence in Validity. A long continued and public acquiescence in the claims of the patentee may justify the acceptance of the patent as valid for the purpose of a preliminary injunction[18] without an adjudication of validity.[19] What constitutes acquiescence depends on the facts of each particular case.[20]

(IV) Previous Adjudications[21]—(A) As a Prerequisite to the Allowance of Injunctions. A prior adjudication at law sustaining the patent is not an absolute prerequisite to an injunction,[22] although the court in its discretion may require it.[23] While the right should be clear, it may be made to appear otherwise than by a judgment or decree.[24] A preliminary injunction may be granted without the art, the presumption induced by the granting of the patent being sufficient to warrant the issuing of an injunction (Seidenberg v. Davidson, 112 Fed. 431). appeals[31] is not controlling upon the judgment of the court but merely persuasive.[32] The prior adjudication will not be followed where the points involved were not fairly in issue and decided,[33] or where there was collusion,[34] and an adjudication without contest is not sufficient upon which to base a preliminary injunction.[35] There is some conflict of authority as to whether an injunction will be granted where there are conflicting prior adjudications.[36]

any person, except perhaps a defendant served with the bill of complaint, where it refers merely to the bill for a description of the thing enjoined.[52]

(II) Knowledge or Notice. According to the modern practice, actual service of an order of injunction upon the person sought to be restrained from infringing a patent is not requisite to lay the foundation of a proceeding against him for contempt,[53] actual notice of such order of injunction being deemed sufficient.[54]

(III) Who Liable. Defendants as individuals are in contempt if they organize a company and continue infringement,[55] and it is the duty of a defendant enjoined from making or selling a patented article to take such steps as will prevent violation of the injunction by employees, and a fine will be imposed for contempt where the injunction is violated by employees.[56] One who knowingly assists another in violating an injunction is guilty of contempt.[57] An officer of defendant corporation who continues infringement individually after injunction is guilty of contempt.[58] A person pending suit is not bound to obey an injunction not directed to him.[59]

(IV) Acts or Conduct Constituting Violation. Although the command of an injunction against the infringement of a patent must be explicitly obeyed, yet it is the spirit and not the letter of the injunction which must be obeyed;[60] hence, no subterfuge amounting to a substantial violation of the injunction will be allowed to succeed merely because not contrary to the letter of the prohibitory clause.[61] Advertising for sale articles which have been adjudged infringements

Injunction ordered but not issued.— The rule is that where an injunction against the infringement of a patent has been ordered, a party who, having knowledge of that order, deliberately violates the injunction ordered, although not yet issued, is guilty of contempt of court. A. 122], holding, however, that, in order to convict a person of contempt under such circumstances, it must be shown clearly that he had knowledge of the order of the injunction in such a way that it can be held that he understood it, and with that knowledge committed wilful violation of the order.

Illustrations.— Where the principle involved in a patent is the point in issue in a suit to restrain its infringement, defendant of complainant's patent, and the sale of which has been enjoined, does not in itself constitute a breach of the injunction;[62] but advertising the articles enjoined, in defiance of the precise terms of the injunction, is strong evidence of the violation of the injunction, and requires positive proof on the part of defendant to the contrary.[63] An injunction against the sale of an infringing article is violated by the sale of such article outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the court granting the injunction, whether the article was sent within such jurisdiction or not.[64]

(v) Defenses. The fact that the writ was erroneously granted furnishes no excuse for its violation,[65] the remedy in such case being by appeal or writ of error.[66] Temptation due to financial straits is no excuse for violation of an injunction,[67] nor is the advice of counsel,[68] nor good faith or absence of intention to infringe,[69] nor a misnomer in the injunction.[70] So the fact that the infringing machine is made according to a junior patent is no excuse.[71] That the injunction was granted upon a patent which has since been materially altered by disclaimer constitutes a defense to the proceeding.[72] And an injunction against the infringement of a patent for an invention consisting of the combination of known appliances is not violated by using the combination after the expiration of the patent.[73]

(vi) Proceedings to Punish—(a) Notice. Generally the rule obtains that, before a party who has violated an injunction against infringing a patent can be punished for contempt, it must appear that he has been served with notice of the proceedings therefor.[74]

commits a breach of a preliminary injunction and is punishable for contempt where, for the purpose of evading the injunction, he continues to manufacture articles involving the same principle, with but slight modifications of structure. Burr v. Kimbark, 29 Fed. 428. Sending infringing article to foreign country or selling it there.—A sale in Canada, to be there used, of articles patented by letters patent of the United States, Canada being a territory in which the patentee had no exclusive right, cannot be regarded as in contempt of an injunction not in future to make or sell in violation of the patent. Gould v. Sessions, 67 Fed. 163, 14 C. C. A. 366. And the making and selling of a single element of a patented combination, with the purpose and expectation that such element should be sent to a foreign country, and be there used in combination with other elements, or in the practice of a method covered by the patent, is not contributory infringement, inasmuch as there was no intent that the elements should be put to an infringing use, the protection of the patent not extending beyond the limits of the United States. (B) Evidence. The rules of evidence governing in proceedings to punish the violation of injunctions in general apply to proceedings to punish the violation of injunctions in patent cases.[75]

(C) Hearing and Determination. On the hearing of the motion the question as to whether the machine constructed is the same as the old one enjoined is one of fact to be determined on the evidence.[76] Where a court issues an injunction to prevent the infringement of a patent solely upon the authority of a decision in another circuit, in a suit between the same parties, it will, on the hearing of a motion for an attachment for contempt in violating the injunction, follow the construction which was placed upon the patent in such other circuit.[77] If the violation of an injunction against the infringing of a patent, either as to its character or the fact of its commission, is doubtful upon the proofs, the court will remit the party to his right to file a supplemental bill in the original suit,[78] or to institute a new and plenary action.[79] However, where the violation of an injunction is wilful, the summary method of correction is imperative, and will not be arrested by the fact that the proofs of violation are conflicting, or that the things used by defendant are in some respects different from those interdicted.[80] A

C. C. A. 476, holding, however, that where notice of the commencement of contempt proceedings was properly given to defendant's attorney, and, under order of court, notice of the application for attachment and a copy of the affidavits to be issued thereon, were sent to defendant by registered mail and returned marked "Refused," defendant not having controverted the charge of contempt, an objection that the notice of the proceeding was not properly served is not well taken.

75. See INJUNCTIONS, 22 Cyc. 1023.

Presumptions.— Machines designated by the same name and made by the same company as the machines containing infringing devices, the manufacture and sale of which were enjoined, will be presumed to be the same, in the absence of any denial, in proceedings to punish a violation of the injunction. Stahl v. Ertel, 62 Fed. 920. Defendant, four months before the service of an injunction on him, executed a bond to plaintiff, acknowledging the validity of his patent and his right to all that was granted by it. It was held that the bond was no evidence of a breach of the injunction further than the recital that defendant had infringed the patent might have a tendency to establish such breach, and that the inference of presumption arising from it might be overcome by credible and positive testimony, proving no infringement. Byam v. Eddy, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,263, 2 Blatchf. 521, 24 Vt. 666.

Admissibility.— On a motion for attachment for contempt for violating an injunction issued to restrain the infringement of a patent, after a construction has been given to a patent by the court, no testimony is admissible to vary such construction. Burdett v. Estey, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,146, 4 Ban. & A. 141, 16 Blatchf. 105. Affidavits to show that the patentee was not the first and original inventor of the thing patented are immaterial and irrelevant. Whipple v. Hutchinson, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,517, 4 Blatchf. 190. motion for an attachment may be denied without prejudice to the rights of the same question of infringement on the accounting under the interlocutory decree.[81]

(VII) PUNISHMENT—(A) Matters Considered in Mitigation. The fact that the injunction was erroneously issued may be considered in mitigation of punishment,[82] as may the fact that the acts in violation were without intention to disobey the injunction.[83]

(B) Amount of Fine. The amount of the fine assessed for the violation of the injunction is within the sound discretion of the court.[84] As contempt in the violation of injunctions in a patent case is a criminal offense, the fine should bear a just proportion to the magnitude of the offense, and ought not in general to exceed such amount as would ordinarily be imposed as a fine when paid over to the government.[85] A light fine will be imposed where the violation was probably unintentional.[86]

(C) Distribution of Fine. The court may direct payment to the complainant of a part or all of the fine imposed, as a compensation for his time and outlay in prosecuting the application;[87] but the court will not compensate complainant for any profits or damages resulting from the infringement involved in the violation of the injunction.[88]

(VIII) COSTS. Where the injunction has been violated, and defendant is protected from the consequences only by a defect in the service of the writ, no costs will be allowed to him on denial of a motion for an attachment for such violation.[89]

12. DAMAGES AND PROFITS[90]—a. Damages in Actions at Law—(I) RIGHT TO RECOVER AND FORM OF ACTION. Damages for the infringement of a patent may be recovered by an action at law,[91] the proper action being trespass on the case.[92]

but it is not the controlling consideration. The test is what plaintiff lost and not what defendant gained.[1]

(B) Counsel Fees and Expenses. Counsel fees and expenses of the litigation cannot be included in the damages.[2]

(C) Interest. Interest upon the amount due plaintiff may be included in the verdict.[3]

(D) Double and Treble Damages. The verdict at law must be for the actual damages but the court may in its discretion enter judgment thereon for any sum above the verdict not exceeding three times the amount of the verdict.[4] Damages may be increased to recompense plaintiff, where the circumstances of the infringement are aggravated and the litigation expensive.[5]

(III) DESIGNS. Damages for the infringement of design patents may be recovered in the same manner as other patents,[6] except that where the infringement was wilful after notice, a minimum amount of two hundred and fifty dollars may be collected for each offense.[7]

An allegation that the invention was not in public use or on sale for two years before application is necessary. Hayes-Young Tie Plate Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., 130 Fed. 900 [affirmed in 137 Fed. 80, 70 C. C. A. 1]; Krick v. Jansen, 52 Fed. 823; Coop v. Dr. Savage Physical Development Inst., 47 Fed. 899; Consolidated Brake-Shoe Co. v. Detroit Steel, etc., Co., 47 Fed. 894; Nathan Mfg. St. at L. 692 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3382]; Elliott, etc., Book-Typewriter Co. v. Fisher Typewriter Co., 109 Fed. 330.

An allegation that the invention was not abandoned is unnecessary since that is matter of defense. Warren Featherbone Co. v. Warner Bros. Co., 92 Fed. 990.

Proceedings in patent office.— The filing of application for patent in due form is presumed from grant of patent and need not be alleged, any defect therein being matter of defense (Bowers v. Bucyrus Co., 132 Fed. 39); nor is it necessary in a suit for infringement of a reissued patent to allege specifically the ground on which reissue was obtained (Spaeth v. Barney, 22 Fed. 828).

The fact that some patents in suit have expired does not render the bill bad. Where the inventions covered by several patents enter into and constitute one compact machine, it is necessary in suing for infringement to complain upon all the patents. Russell v. Kern, 58 Fed. 382 [affirmed in 64 Fed. 581].

Separate affidavit as to inventorship is unnecessary. Consolidated Brake-Shoe Co. v. Detroit Steel, etc., Co., 47 Fed. 894.

An allegation of prior adjudication sustaining patent is impertinent unless injunction is prayed. Haarmann v. Lueders, 109 Fed. 327; Wirt v. Hicks, 46 Fed. 71. But prior litigation may be recited where injunction is sought. American Bell Tel. Co. v. Southern Tel. Co., 34 Fed. 803; Steam-Gauge, etc., Co. v. McRoberts, 26 Fed. 765.

Immaterial matters alleged in the bill will be stricken out on motion. Western Electric Co. v. Williams-Abbott Electric Co., 83 Fed. 842.

and should include a prayer for an accounting together with a prayer for equitable relief such as discovery or an injunction.[53] The bill should be verified.[54]

(II) Plea or Answer—(A) Plea—(1) In General. A plea in equity is a special answer urging some particular defense by which the issue is reduced to a single point. Any defense which brings forward new matter in opposition to the equity of the bill may be presented by plea.[55] A mere denial of the allegations of the bill without any averment of new matter cannot be made by plea.[56]

Objection to the jurisdiction of the court may be taken by plea. Edison Electric Light Co. v. U. S. Electric Lighting Co., 35 Fed. 134.

Reissue departing from original.—The defense that a reissue sued on is invalid because it covers an invention not included in the original may be presented by a special plea. Hubbell v. De Land, 14 Fed. 471, 11 Biss. 382.

The defense of laches may be presented by plea. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 55 Fed. 478.

Date of patent.—A defense to a suit for infringement on the ground that the patent bears date more than six months later than the notice given to the applicant of the allowance of the application may properly be taken by plea. Western Electric Co. v. North Electric Co., 135 Fed. 79, 67 C. C. A. 553.

(2) Requisites and Sufficiency. The allegations of the plea should be direct and distinct,[57] and must be limited to a single defense or issue, unless, by permission of the court, defendant is allowed to plead double.[58] A plea may contain an averment of several facts, but they must all conduce to a single point of defense.[59] If the plea contains more than one defense, the practice is not to confine defendant to his first ground of defense by striking out the others, but to allow him either to set down the pleas as an answer, or to put him to his election as to which of the pleas he will abide by.[60]

(3) Effect of Setting Down For Argument. By setting down pleas for argument, a complainant admits the facts, but not the conclusions, pleaded therein.[61]

(b) Answer—(1) Matters Required to Be Raised by Answer. Defenses which go to the merits and relate in no wise to matters in abatement or in bar must be raised by answer.[62] But where the infringement complained of has not been committed by defendant but by another person, this issue may be tendered by plea.[63] So also the defenses mentioned in the statute[64] must be set up by answer and not by plea.[65]

(2) Requisites and Sufficiency. The allegations of the answer must be sufficiently definite and precise to inform plaintiff what defense he has to meet.[66] It must include all matters of defense on which defendant intends to rely, except

The defense of prior patent is insufficient without a distinct averment that the invention had been before patented. Saunders v. Allen, 53 Fed. 109.

A denial of the novelty of the invention described in the patent named in the bill, specifying it by number, is sufficient to raise the issue of invention, although the title of the patent as stated in the answer may be technically inaccurate. Robinson v. Ameri-

such as are proper subjects of a plea or a demurrer.[67] Defenses not set up in the answer will not be considered by the court in rendering its decision.[68] More than one defense may be presented in an answer in equity,[69] provided they are not inconsistent;[70] but each should be separately and clearly alleged without condition or qualification.[71] They ought not to be blended in the same allegations where they depend upon different principles.[72]

(3) AMENDMENT. The general rules governing the allowance of amendments to answers in equity cases are applicable in suits for the infringement of patents.[73] An amendment will not be allowed where it appears that the matter of the proposed amendment could, with reasonable diligence, have been sooner introduced into the answer[74] where it would be inconsistent with the answer as filed;[75] or where, upon the state of facts shown by the movant's affidavits, plaintiff's patent would not be defeated.[76] Nor will a motion to amend be regarded favorably where the new defense is dependent wholly on parol evidence.[77] Authority to grant the amendment being established, the court may properly allow it to be entered nunc pro tunc.[78]

(4) ADMISSIONS IN ANSWER. An allegation of infringement in the bill should be answered distinctly and unevasively, and if defendant does not deny or disprove it the fact of infringement is admitted.[79] The fact thus admitted must be accepted as established,[80] but the admission need go no further than its terms necessarily imply.[81]

(5) Notice of Special Matter — (a) Necessity. Under the statute[82] persons sued as infringers in a suit in equity, if they give the required notice in their answer, may prove at the final hearing the same special matters in defense to the charge of infringement as those which defendant, in an action at law, may set up under like conditions.[83] Notices of the kind, when the suit is in equity, may be given in the answer or amended answer,[84] and must be filed fully thirty days before trial.[85] Under such a pleading and notice, the respondent in an equity suit may prove that the patentee was not the original and first inventor of the alleged improvement, or that it had been patented or described in some printed publication, or that the invention had been in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years prior to the application; and the provision is that the judgment or decree must be in favor of the defending party if he proves any one or more of these special matters.[86] Where the defenses of prior invention, knowledge, or use is set up, the answer must allege the names and places of residence of those whom they intend to prove have possessed prior knowledge of the thing, and where the same has been used.[87] Testimony of witnesses examined in a case as to alleged prior use, etc., by parties of whom no notice was given in the answer, is incompetent;[88] such testimony is admissible only for the purpose of showing the state of the art at the time of the patentee's invention.[89] But notice of the names and places of residence of the witnesses by whom it is intended to prove such prior knowledge and use is not required.[90] The defenses authorized by statute[91] are separate and independent defenses; and each requires its appropriate notice or answer in order to let in evidence to establish the defense.[92]

(b) SUFFICIENCY. In giving such notice, the respondent is not bound to be so specific as to relieve the other from all inquiry or effort to investigate the facts. If he fairly supplies his adversary with the means of verifying his proof it is all that can be required;[93] and he is not bound by his notice to impose an unnecessary and embarrassing restriction on his own right of producing proof of what he asserts.[94]

doubt.[12] But the burden is on plaintiff to prove infringement,[13] and that notice of his rights was given by marking the patented article.[14] He must also prove facts which will show the amount of damages.[15]

e. Evidence as to Invalidity of Patent. Evidence of any fact tending to show that the patent is invalid is admissible,[16] provided proper basis for it is laid in the pleadings or under the general issue and provided thirty days' notice in writing is given to plaintiff or his attorney. To prove previous invention, knowledge, or use of a thing patented defendant must state the names of the patentees, dates of the patents, the names and residences of the alleged prior users, and where and by whom the invention was used.[17]

d. Expert Witnesses. It is proper in patent cases to produce the testimony of expert witnesses to explain the inventions and the differences between inventions;[18] but their testimony is not necessarily accepted as controlling contrary to the judgment of the court,[19] nor is mere opinion evidence admissible.[20]

e. Estoppel. Disclaimers[21] and admissions made in the prosecution of the application in the patent office are binding upon the patentee and copies of the office records are admissible to prove them.[22] Defendant cannot as against his assignee produce evidence to show that the patent assigned by him is invalid or that the assignee's title is not good.[23]

f. Evidence as to Infringement. Evidence is admissible which tends to show whether or not the claims of the patent properly construed apply to the alleged infringing device. Prior patents and publications are admissible as bearing upon the scope but not the validity of the patent in suit, even where they are not set up in the pleadings or formal notice.[24]

g. Secret Inventions. A witness is not required to disclose a secret invention or discovery made or owned by himself.[25]

patent may be received in evidence in place of the originals.[26] A copy of a foreign patent certified by the commissioner of patents of the United States will be accepted as prima facie evidence of the fact of the granting of such patent and of the date and contents thereof.[27] The printed copies of specifications and drawings of patents deposited in the capitols of the various states and territories and certified by the commissioner of patents will be received as evidence of all matters therein contained.[28]

i. Judicial Notice. Courts may properly take judicial notice of facts that may be regarded as part of the common knowledge of every person of ordinary understanding and intelligence.[29] The court is permitted to avail itself of common knowledge in regard to matters of science, and by that knowledge to define the scope of the patent.[30] The court may take judicial notice of a thing in common use throughout the country.[31] The court may refer to dictionaries and encyclopedias for the definition and scope of scientific terms or names, when necessary to go outside of the record, or where the testimony of experts is conflicting.[32] For the purpose of ascertaining the state of the art the court may take judicial notice of what is disclosed by its own records in a previous case involving devices appertaining to the same art.[33] The courts will not take judicial notice of patents or inventions.[34]

15. Issues, Proof, and Variance. The issue of fraud in the reissue of a patent can only be raised by distinct and special allegations in the plea or answer.[35] The general rule that the proof and pleading must correspond applies to actions at law and suits in equity for infringement of patents.[36] In actions at law for infringements of patents the defendant may, under the general issue, show the prior state of the art,[37] or that the patentee is not the original inventor,[38] or give in evidence the act of congress relating to his rights.[39] So too defendant may give evidence of the use of a machine by other persons in other places than those mentioned in a notice of special matter, where the general issue is pleaded.[40] An averment in a declaration in an action for infringement that disclaimers were duly and legally executed in writing and accepted by the commissioner is sufficient to enable plaintiff to give evidence of their execution as required by statute.[41]

16. TRIALS IN ACTIONS AT LAW — a. In General. The ordinary rules of practice and procedure in civil actions apply.[42]

b. Questions For Court and Jury. It is for the court to instruct the jury as to the law,[43] and this includes a definition of the scope and meaning of the patent,[44] and it is for the jury to find the facts and apply the law as expounded.[45]

Slightest variance fatal.— When a declaration in an action for the infringement of a patent right professes to set forth the specification in the patent as part of the grant, the slightest variance is fatal. Tryon v. White, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,208, Pet. C. C. 96, 1 Robb Pat. Cas. 64.

The jury must determine the question of identity of the alleged infringing device,[46] the question of the validity of the patent,[47] and the amount of damages.[48] In a clear case the court may direct the jury to bring in a verdict for defendant.[49]

17. Hearing in Suits in Equity — a. Questions Determined. Where defendant denies the infringement and avers that the alleged infringing article was made under a later patent than that sued upon, the court may, in a plain case, determine the question of infringement by an inspection and comparison of the two patents.[50] The construction placed on the claims of a patent by the court on

Unless the character of the invention has so little complexity that expert evidence is not necessary to aid the court in understanding whether one patent, or several patents considered together, describe the devices or combination of devices which are the subject-granting a preliminary injunction should be followed at the final hearing, where there has been no substantial change in the cause so far as it relates to the question of construction.[51] The court will not determine a moot question at the final hearing, as where no infringement is found the court will not pass upon the question of the novelty of a patented invention.[52] Where the patent is recent, the specification obscure, and the proof of infringement meager and unsatisfactory, the court will not grant an injunction, even upon a final hearing, but will retain the bill for a certain period and require complainant to bring an action at law, in which case the bill will stand dismissed, unless the action at law is brought within the time limited.[53]

b. Submission of Issues to Jury. The circuit court may impanel a jury of not less than five and not more than twelve persons and submit to them such questions of fact arising in the cause as the court shall deem expedient.[54]

c. Reception of Evidence. Documentary evidence set forth in defendant's answer will not be received after the cause has been submitted upon plaintiff's evidence;[55] but it has been held that, where it is an important point in the defense that a reissued patent is broader in its scope than the original, the case will be reopened to enable defendant to introduce testimony tending to show that fact, it being alleged that such testimony is newly discovered.[56] The court will not, on complainant's motion, compel defendant to file an exhibit in a form different from that already filed by him.[57] Complainant is entitled as a matter of right to introduce evidence in rebuttal,[58] but not after the argument has com-matter of the subsequent patent, the court will examine a large number of patents prior in date to that of complainant, which patents have been offered in evidence to sustain the defense of want of novelty. Waterman v. Shipman, 55 Fed. 982, 5 C. C. A. 371.

In a suit upon design patents, the absence of evidence of identity does not make it improper for the court to compare such patent and the alleged infringing articles offered in evidence, the designs being of a simple character. Jennings v. Kibbe, 10 Fed. 669, 29 Blatchf. 353.

On the ground of surprise leave may be granted to complainant to introduce evidence in rebuttal. Pouopard v. Fardell, 18

menced.[59] Under a general denial of the patentee's priority of invention, evidence of prior knowledge and use, taken without objection, is competent at the final hearing, not only as demonstrative of the state of the art, so as to limit the construction of the patent,[60] but also on the question of the validity of the patent.[61] So too where an objection was not distinctly made when the evidence was taken such evidence is deemed waived and is competent at the final hearing.[62]

d. Dismissal — (I) At What Stage of Cause Allowable. The court may, in its discretion, permit defendant at the close of complainant's proofs to present by a motion to dismiss a jurisdictional question,[63] or a question of the legal sufficiency of the proof of title to the patent,[64] without requiring defendant to abide by the case as then made in the event that his motion shall be overruled.

(II) Grounds. The bill will be dismissed,[65] without regard to the answer,[66] where it appears that letters patent are void on their face because the process or device described therein is not patentable. That defendant has, by his action in selling his alleged patent, necessarily abandoned his intention to infringe is no sufficient ground, after the testimony has been taken, for dismissing the bill and remanding plaintiff to his remedy at law.[67] If a suit commenced to restrain from infringing letters patent and to recover profits and damages be begun so late that under the rules of the court no injunction can be obtained before the expiration of the patent, the bill should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.[68]

(III) Dismissal Without Prejudice. Where the alleged infringement has been disproved, an application for dismissal without prejudice, as to one of the defendants, will be denied.[69]

(IV) Operation and Effect. Dismissal of the bill for failure to show an infringement does not estop plaintiff or his assigns from again suing the same defendant for infringing the same patent.[70]

18. Interlocutory Decree and Accounting — a. Interlocutory Decree. Where the finding is in favor of the validity and infringement of the patent, an interlocutory decree for the complainant is entered and the cause is referred to a master to ascertain the amount to be recovered.[71]

72. Mode of procedure.— The master appoints a day for proceeding with the reference, and gives notice, by mail or otherwise, to the parties or their solicitors. The solicitor should be notified, whether the party is or not; although, probably, under rule 75, notice to the party is a good notice. If defendant does not appear, the master proceeds ex parte and makes out the profits and damages, if he can, from the evidence produced by plaintiff. If it appears that an account of profits is necessary to a just decision of the cause, and is desired by plaintiff, he makes an order that defendant furnish an account by a certain day, and adjourns the hearing to that day. Defendant should be served personally with a notice of this adjournment, and of the order to produce his account, if it is intended to move for an attachment in case he fails to appear. The service may be made by any disinterested person, and need not be by the marshal. If defendant then fails to appear and account, he will be in contempt. given precedence in the appellate court.[88] Supersedeas on appeal will be granted only under special circumstances.[89]

21. Rehearing. The ordinary rules against rehearings except under exceptional circumstances are strictly applied in suits for infringement,[90] and the granting thereof rests in the discretion of the court.[91] Whether a rehearing will be granted depends on the facts of each case and the effect which the granting or refusal of the application will have on the rights of the parties respectively.[92] While under certain circumstances a rehearing may be granted upon discovery of new evidence,[93] it will not be granted upon discovery of new evidence which as far as appears was accessible and should have been produced originally,[94] nor where the new evidence is not clear and satisfactory and such as would have changed the decision.[95] As a condition of granting a rehearing the court may require the court of competent jurisdiction in a suit on letters patent is conclusive upon the parties to such suit and their privies.[2] The character of conclusiveness attaches only to final judgments or decrees,[3] and to those in which the validity of the patent was decided,[4] and it must appear that the judgment or decree was rendered after full consideration of the merits of the case.[5] While a judgment sustaining the validity of a patent does not operate as res adjudicata in a suit on the same patent against a different defendant,[6] respect for the stability of a judicial deci-

Effect of sale of interest pending suit.— The finding of the decree is binding upon the respondent in an infringement suit where he sold out his interest in the infringing business pending the hearing and gave up to his vendee the control and management of the suit. Gloucester Isinglass, etc., Co. v. Le Page, 30 Fed. 370.

Where a suit for infringement against a dealer is defended by the manufacturer at his own cost, the latter is bound by the decision in the case (Sacks v. Kupferle, 127 Fed. 569; National Folding-Box, etc., Co. v. Dayton Paper-Novelty Co., 95 Fed. 991), not only upon all the questions that were raised and determined in the suit, but also upon all that might have been raised and determined therein (Eagle Mfg. Co. v. David Bradley Mfg. Co., 50 Fed. 193). But it has been held that the defense of prior adjudication is not available to a defendant, dismissed from a suit for infringement on its own application, on the ground that it employed counsel and defrayed the costs of the defense made by its co-defendant, unless it appears by clear and definite evidence that such fact was known to plaintiff. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Cramer, 109 Fed. 652, 48 C. C. A. 588.

If a reissued patent is for the same invention as that described in the original patent, a former decision is conclusive on the question of infringement. Cammeyer v. Newton, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,344, 4 Ban. & A. 159, 16 Off. Gaz. 720. Contra, Wells v. Jacques, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,398, 1 Ban. & A. 60, 5 Off. Gaz. 364.

The authority of a prior decision by an appellate court is not limited to the facts and defenses discussed in its opinion, but extends to all that were before it in the record. Badische Anilin, etc., Fabrik v. Klipstein, etc., Co., 125 Fed. 543.

A decree as to what is an infringement is conclusive upon the parties and upon the master, and extends to everything substantially like the infringement decreed against. Wooster v. Thornton, 26 Fed. 274.

3. An interlocutory decree in an infringement suit does not render the validity of the patent res adjudicata. Rumford Chemical Works v. Hecker, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,133, 2 Ban. & A. 351, 10 Off. Gaz. 289, holding, however, that it does not follow that the controversy between the litigants remains open as it would have remained if there had been no previous adjudication. A decree in a prior suit for the infringement of a patent is none the less conclusive between the parties on the issues of validity and infringement because it was merely interlocutory, when the second suit was commenced, where it is set up therein as an adjudication by a supplemental bill, after having ripened into a final decree. Bredin v. National Metal Weatherstrip Co., 147 Fed. 741 [affirmed in 157 Fed. 1003].

Where, in a suit for infringement, the bill is dismissed because of failure to show any infringement, the decree dismissing the bill will not estop plaintiff or his assigns from again suing the same defendant for infringing the same patent. Steam-Gauge, etc., Co. v. Meyrose, 27 Fed. 213.

A suit dismissed without prejudice is not a bar to a second suit, nor conclusive of any issue joined in favor of the complainant. Robinson v. American Car, etc., Co., 135 Fed. 693, 68 C. C. A. 331.

The overruling of a demurrer which defendant refused to argue is not an adjudication in favor of patentability. Wollensak v. Sargent, 33 Fed. 840.

A decree pro confesso on a bill for infringement is conclusive so far at least as it is supported by the allegations of the bill. Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 104, 5 S. Ct. 788, 29 L. ed. 105. Compare Everett v. Thatcher, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,578, 3 Ban. & A. 435, 2 Flipp. 234, 16 Off. Gaz. 1046.

A judgment for infringement against a manufacturer is not conclusive upon a subsequent purchaser and user of the manufactured articles either as to the validity of the patent or infringement. Van Epps v. International Paper Co., 124 Fed. 542.

sion and a proper regard for the security of property in the same patent require that it shall not be disturbed, unless there was very palpable error.[7]

2. RECOVERY BY PATENTEE AS VESTING TITLE IN INFRINGER. A recovery of the profits for the use of a patented article does not vest the title in defendant;[8] but the recovery of profits and damages from the manufacturers of an infringing machine vests the title to the use in the purchaser of the article and debars the patentee from recovering from a user for the use thereof.[9] But this can only be held on a clear showing that the purchaser was using the same patented article as that involved in the suit between the patentee and the infringing manufacturer, and that the user was a vendee of such manufacturer;[10] and it would seem that to effect such a result it must further appear that the patentee's claim to profits and damages against the manufacturer has been actually paid and satisfied.[11]

I. DUTY OF RELIEF IN GENERAL.

A. Who Are Paupers[1] — 1. In General. A pauper is defined to be one so poor that he must be supported at the public expense.[2]

2. Ability of Self-Support. Where a family is in want, they are poor and unable to support themselves, within the meaning of the various statutes, although the head of the family earns enough for their partial support.[3] However, a person who has always been able to support himself is not a pauper within the purview of the various statutes making provision for the relief of that class of persons, although the wages earned by him are barely suffieient for that purpose,[4]

Other definitions are: "One so poor as to be unable to provide for him or herself, and having no one of sufficient pecuniary ability to care for them." Whiting's Case, 3 Pittsb. (Pa.) 129, 133.

"The word 'pauper' . . . does not necessarily imply a person who has actually received support from the town, as the word in this chapter is used indiscriminately to designate poor and indigent persons standing in need of relief, and poor persons likely to become chargeable, as well as such poor persons as have actually received support from the town." Walbridge v. Walbridge, 46 Vt. 617, 625.

"A poor person; especially one so indigent as to depend on charity for maintenance; or one supported by some public provision." Webster Dict. [quoted in Saukville v. Grafton, 68 Wis. 192, 195, 31 N. W. 719].

In Iowa the statutory definition of a poor person is "one who has no property exempt or otherwise and is unable because of physical or mental disability to earn a living by labor." Monroe County v. Abegglen, 129 Iowa 53, 57, 105 N. W. 350.

"Poor," as used in the statute providing for the relief of the poor, means persons so completely destitute of property as to require assistance from the public. State v. Osawkee Tp., 14 Kan. 418, 422, 19 Am. Rep. 99.

"Poor of the county."— Judge Breese, defining what is meant by the phrase "poor of the county," said that they are those who are "in legal contemplation . . . dependent upon public charity; in other words, they are the paupers who are maintained by taxes levied on the people, or by the income from the public property." See also St. Johnsbury v. Waterford, 15 Vt. 692, holding that the ability of paupers to maintain themselves is a pecuniary ability, and is not affected by the manner in which they have previously disposed of their property, if the disposition has been so made as to be binding on them.

No person can be chargeable to a town while he has the means of supporting himself. — The question whether a person is chargeable to a town as a pauper does not depend merely upon the fact that such person has been furnished relief, but upon the town's legal obligation to do so. Stewart v. Sherman, 5 Conn. 244; Handlin v. Morgan County, 57 Mo. 114; Ludlow v. Weathersfield, 18 Vt. 39; Randolph v. Braintree, 10 Vt. 436; Londonderry v. Acton, 3 Vt. 122; Holland v. Belgium, 66 Wis. 557, 29 N. W. 558.

When any temporary support is given to a poor person, it is in all cases a question of fact, whether such poor person was, at the time the support was so furnished, a pauper within the meaning of the statute. and a fortiori is he not a pauper where his earnings are more than enough for his support.[5]

3. Ability of Person Liable For Support. A child having parents of sufficient ability to support it is not a pauper, within the meaning of the various statutes,[6] and the same is the case where the child has grandparents of sufficient ability to support it, under a statute making them liable for such support.[7] On the other hand, a minor child does not necessarily become a pauper by reason of the mere pauperism of his parents.[8] Nor can the wife of a man owning a valuable equity of redemption which can be made available for her support be chargeable to a town as a pauper.[9]

4. Amount of Property Owned. The rule has been laid down in some cases that, where a person is possessed of property not absolutely indispensable for daily use, he must apply it to his support by sale or by way of security, and cannot, while possessing such property, be regarded as a pauper, in the sense that the word is used in the statutes.[10] However, the better rule, and one most in consonance with the spirit actuating the enactment of such statutes, seems to be that it is not necessary, in order to entitle a person to relief as a pauper, that he should be altogether destitute of property, but that all that is necessary to entitle him to such relief is to show that he does not possess sufficient property for his maintenance and support.[11]

5. Receiving Aid or in Need of Relief From Public Authorities.[12] Adult persons of sound mind cannot be made paupers against their will; and to constitute pauper supplies, the supplies must be applied for, or received with a full knowledge of their nature.[13] But the fact of a person knowingly or voluntarily receiving support from a county, town, or municipality will constitute him a property with which to pay the expense of that sickness, is not a pauper within the meaning of Gen. St. § 1988, providing that one county may recover from another county for assistance given a "pauper" resident of the latter); Wood v. Simmons, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 325, 4 N. Y. The families of absent soldiers, in the service of the United States, when standing in need of assistance, do not incur the disabilities of pauperism by receiving supplies from the cities or towns where such soldiers technical pauper;[14] and where necessary aid is furnished one, by the public authorities, with his knowledge, for the support of a person, the burden of whose support the law imposes upon him, he is himself a pauper.[15] The question whether a person is chargeable to a town as a pauper does not depend merely upon the fact that they have furnished him relief, but likewise upon their legal obligation to do so.[16]

6. Transient Poor Persons. In many adjudicated cases the distinction existing between paupers and non-resident persons falling sick within a county, not having money or property with which to support themselves, is fully recognized and sustained, the latter not being considered paupers within the meaning of the poor laws.[17]

B. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.[18] Legislative bodies, in the exercise of the power of taxation and police regulation, may impose upon counties, towns, and municipalities the burden of the relief and support of all sick, infirm, and disabled paupers within their limits.[19] They may likewise impose such burdens upon individuals.[20] In some jurisdictions it is held that statutes providing for the maintenance of paupers, being enacted in the interests of humanity, must be liberally construed to effectuate the benevolent policy of the legislature.[21] Such statutes, like constitutional provisions, always operate prospectively, and not retroactively, unless the words used or the objects to be accomplished indicate

Determination of pauperism.— Before overseers of the poor can make an adjudication, under Mass. Estate of decedent without relatives.— The New Jersey statute (Revision, p. 397, § 9) requires an administrator of one dying without relatives to pay the interest on his estate annually to the overseer of the poor for the use of the poor of the township, and, if at the expiration of seven years no relatives claim the money, to pay the principal and accumulated interest to the overseer of the poor for the use of the township, and it has been held that these last words must be construed to mean for the use of the poor. In re Jones, 8 N. that a retroactive operation was intended.[22] Since repeal by implication is not favored,[23] an intent to repeal a pauper statute must be clearly expressed, or necessarily implied, to effect such repeal.[24]

C. Duties of Public Authorities. At common law the public authorities were not liable for the support of paupers. The liability of a county or municipal corporation for the relief and support of its indigent poor is purely statutory, and to render a county or municipality liable, the case must come fairly within the terms of the statute.[25] In practically every jurisdiction, statutes have been enacted requiring counties, towns, and municipal corporations to furnish necessary relief to paupers resident or having a legal settlement therein.[26] Likewise, in many jurisdictions, the statutes require counties, towns, and municipal corporations to furnish adequate and immediate relief to any pauper temporarily residing therein, without reference to the ultimate liability of any other county, town, municipality, or person for such pauper's support.[27]

In Connecticut it is provided by statute (Laws (1878), c. 94, § 3), that all persons needing relief, and having no settlement in any town in the state, shall be state paupers, and shall, when needing relief, be provided for by the controller "for the period of six months after they come into this state," and it has been held under this statute that the period intended was the first six months of their pauperism, and not the first six months after their arrival in the state. Marlborough v. Chatham, 50 Conn. 554.

A transient pauper, under the Vermont statute, is a person who is suddenly taken sick, or lame, or is otherwise disabled and confined at any house in any town, or is committed to jail, and is in need of relief, away from the town in which he resided. New Haven v. Middlebury, 63 Vt. 399, 21 Atl. 608. And see Vershire v. Hyde Park, 64 Vt. 638, 25 Atl. 431; Macoon v. Berlin, 49 Vt. 13, where poor in a designated county, or throughout the state, local statutes, repugnant thereto, providing for the maintenance of the poor in a county, town, or borough, are thereby repealed, and the management and control of the poor of such borough is vested exclusively in the boards and officers designated by the later act,[28] unless expressly, or by clear implication, exempted from repeal.[29]

B. Appointment and Election of Officers — 1. In General. Matters relating to the election[30] or appointment[31] of officers of a poor law district depend for the most part upon the particular statutory provisions.

2. To Fill Vacancy. Sometimes a vacancy is required to be filled by election,[32] and sometimes by appointment.[33] In order to justify an election[34] or appointment[35] it is of course necessary that a vacancy exist. Hence an election[36] or appointment[37] to fill a supposed vacancy, caused by the expiration of the incumbent's term, when in fact such term has not expired, is invalid. Likewise an appointment to fill a supposed vacancy, caused by an unlawful removal of an existing officer, is invalid.[38] A statute conferring the power to appoint and fill a vacancy must be strictly construed when the power is exercised, and a failure to observe a mandatory requirement of the statute renders the appointment invalid.[39]

C. Eligibility and Qualification. The question of eligibility of a person to be officer of a poor law district depends upon the same principles that apply to other public officers.[40] The disqualification of a person for the office of superintendent of the poor by reason of his holding another office must be determined the pauper was held not to be "transient," within the meaning of the statute.

By Spec. Laws (1885), c. 71, this duty devolved "upon the several town boards, boroughs and village councils," and it was held that each village or borough thus became a separate district, liable for the support of its own poor.

Laws 501), April 11, 1866 (Pamphl. Laws 608), and April 10, 1873 (Pamphl. County physician.— The words, "suitable by his status at the time of the election held to fill the office of superintendent, and hence his subsequent resignation from such other office will not remove his disability.[41] Although the statute provides that honorably discharged Union soldiers shall be preferred for appointment, the appointment of another applicant as poor officer by a board having the selection of a fit person to fill such office, after a determination in good faith of his superior fitness as compared with a discharged soldier, is not reviewable.[42] It is usually provided that before entering upon the discharge of his duties the overseer of a poor law district shall give an official bond.[43]

D. Term of Office. The terms of officers of the poor law district are regulated by statute,[44] and are liable to be changed at any time by the legislature.[45] When the law provides that a poor officer shall hold office until his successor is qualified, the period between the expiration of his regular term and the qualification of his successor is as much a part of the incumbent's term of office as the fixed statutory term.[46]

E. Removal[47] — 1. Power to Remove. A general authority to remove a poor officer will not be implied as a consequence of the power to appoint.[48] Usually the power to remove is regulated by statute,[49] and where such is the case can be exercised only within the prescribed limits.[50]

2. Grounds of Removal. Where express provision of law is made for removal, the power so to do can be exercised for no other causes than those specified.[51] It is misfeasance in office, authorizing the removal of a poor officer, to use his official power and the poor fund to coerce the recipients of his favor to vote under his direction;[52] or not to refund to the treasurer of the poor law district money which has been paid to him by persons to whom he has afforded temporary relief;[53] or to draw orders on the treasury of the poor law district in favor of persons without whose knowledge he himself draws the money, and compel the payees to take from himself at exorbitant prices such goods as he sees fit to give them.[54]

3. Proceedings to Remove. The proceeding for removal of an officer of a poor law district is of a quasi-judicial nature.[55] The officer is entitled to notice of the charges against him.[56] While the rule is, in the absence of express provision of law, that the charges preferred against the officer must be sufficiently specific to apprise him of what he is to meet, yet the technical rules of pleading are not to be applied.[57]

F. Authority and Power of Officers and Boards — 1. In General. The acts of overseers, or other officers of the poor, within the scope of their authority, will bind the town or county they represent,[58] and may furnish grounds for presumptions and inferences against a town which they represent in the same manner as such presumptions and inferences may arise against natural persons from their acts.[59] They are not empowered, by virtue of their office, to pass upon or submit to arbitration a question regarding the settlement of a pauper which involves the rights or liabilities of the town in respect to such pauper;[60] nor have they authority, as such officers, to intermeddle with the property of paupers, or to collect and discharge their debts.[61] In some jurisdictions, the township overseers or supervisors of the poor are made subordinate to the county board of supervisors, and their action subject to review for confirmation or repudiation by such board.[62]

2. As to Indebtedness and Expenditures — a. For Relief and Support — (1) In General. The powers of poor officers as to incurring indebtedness and making expenditures for the care and support of paupers are strictly limited by the statutes relating to the maintenance of the poor, and, except in rare and special cases, they cannot step beyond the letter of those acts.[63] Being public officers, who have the care and oversight of paupers, by necessary implication, they have the power to bind their town or county by any contracts made within the scope of their authority.[64] To the extent of their authority it is a discretionary power to be exercised according to their judgment,[65] and unless it is so provided by statute they are not restricted to the confines or instrumentalities of the poor-house in making provision for the poor.[66] Where so provided by statutes overseers of the poor have no right to appropriate the moneys of their town for the support of the poor without an order from a justice of the peace or superintendent,[67] at least where the expenditure is greater than a sum fixed by statute.[68]

(II) Of Paupers Resident in Another Town. Where there is nothing in the statute which expressly or by implication restricts the power of the overseers to furnishing relief within the limits of their town, it is within the scope of their powers to pay expenses incurred for the support of one of their paupers by another town.[69] And the power to pay the expenses embraces that of settling an action commenced to recover them.[70] But if the method of ascertaining and collecting such expenses is expressly provided by statute, then a contract to pay them is beyond the scope of the overseers' authority and void.[71] If a pauper have not a settlement in a town, the overseers cannot make the town chargeable therefor by their agreement with another town to pay for his support.[72]

b. For Medical Services. In some jurisdictions the county commissioners are authorized to employ physicians for the poor throughout the county.[73] Where the board of county commissioners or supervisors have made adequate provision for medical attendance to paupers within the county, a township trustee or overseer of the poor has no authority to employ medical or surgical services for paupers within his township.[74] Where a statute expressly prohibits payment by a county board for medical services to poor persons unless done under contract with such board, a physician cannot recover for such services whether rendered voluntarily or at the request of the township board.[75] But where the county board of supervisors or commissioners have failed to provide proper medical attendance for the poor of a township, or where the physicians so employed fail or refuse to render proper medical attention to such poor, the overseers of the poor are authorized to employ medical and other necessary services, and to bind the county therefor.[76] Upon the same principle, if the county physician lacks the skill and experience necessary to render reasonably efficient services in any case, the poor officers are authorized to employ special medical assistance.[77] The question as to the necessities of the person relieved is a matter for the determination of the trustee, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion, his determination is conclusive.[78] So whether or not the township is otherwise provided for is a question of fact to be determined by the trustees.[79] When a city overseer of the poor is provided for by statute as well as township trustees, the city overseer has exclusive control of the city poor, and there can be no recovery for medical attendance furnished a city pauper on the order of the township trustees.[80] Poor officers cannot bind a town or county for unusual or extraordinary medical services rendered the poor of such town or county at the request of such overseers, or subsequently ratified by them, such as the conduct of post mortem examinations,[81] or the treatment of a pauper to cure him of habitual drunkenness as a disease.[82]

3. Power to Audit Accounts. A statute requiring superintendents of the poor to audit and allow all accounts of overseers of the poor, justices of the peace, and all other persons, for services relating to the support, relief, or transportation of county paupers, does not require the audit and allowance of accounts in favor of individuals dealing with the overseers in the several towns. Such accounts may be very numerous and occasionally trifling and should be first adjusted by the overseer, and charged by him in general account.[83] Nor does their auditing power extend to their own contracts.[84] It is not necessary that an account for the support of a pauper in a county having a county poorhouse should be audited by the town auditors.[85]

4. Powers of Part of Officers.[86] The general rule is that a minority of the board of overseers or superintendents of the poor cannot bind the county or town by their acts or contracts, even concerning matters within the scope of the board's authority, but at least a majority of the board must act in order to validate such proceedings,[87] unless one of them has been empowered to act by the rest of the board.[88] And it has been held that overseers of the poor not being a corporate body, the act of one overseer does not bind another in his official character.[89] However, the action of one, or less than the majority of the overseers of the poor, may thereafter be ratified by a majority of the board, so as to validate the same.[90] Some statutes confer power to act on a single member of the board,[91] and under others, in giving relief, or in determining the proper persons for it, a single member possesses the power of the whole board, limited only by an express dissent of the majority in a particular case.[92]

G. Actions By and Against Officers. An overseer, supervisor, or superintendent of the poor, in discharging his duty as such, acts not in his natural but in his official capacity, and is sub modo a corporation. He has the capacity of suing and being sued so far as his trust is concerned,[93] and such right to sue and liability to suit, being incident to his office, passes to his successor.[94] Moreover it has been held that he has power to submit to arbitration,[95] and he may sue his predecessor in office for moneys officially received by him and unaccounted for.[96] A superintendent of the poor may sue either in his corporate name alone,[97] or in his individual name with the addition of his name of office.[98]

H. Poorhouses and Poor-Farms.[99] In many jurisdictions the statutes creating poor districts provide for the purchase of lands, and the erection of buildings for housing paupers, designating the officers who shall have the control and management thereof.[1]

I. Local Taxation For Relief of Poor. In many jurisdictions statutes provide for local taxation for the relief and support of paupers, and designate the courts, officers, or boards who shall have power to levy the tax, and in some instances prescribe the method of levy and the amount which may be levied.[2]

J. Custody and Disposition of Proceeds of Taxation and Poor Funds. The overseers or other officers of the poor are usually made by the statutes the proper custodians of money raised for the support of the poor, and where such officer pays out money for the support of a pauper, or contracts for his support, he is entitled to appropriate the money in the first case, and retain it in his own hands in the other.[3] Such officers, however, are not jointly liable for money collected by them severally in their official capacity.[4]

K. Liability of Officers and Their Sureties — 1. Civil Liability — a. Of Officers on Contracts. Fund for alien paupers.— Mass. St. (1839) c. 156, imposes on counties the expense of supporting all prisoners in jails and houses of correction who have no settlement in the commonwealth. Mass. Under these acts it has been held that vagrants sent to the house of correction are not "foreign paupers," although they have no settlement in the commonwealth; and hence money received under the act cannot be appropriated for their support. is superadded in clear and explicit terms.[6] And where the res gestæ and the attending circumstances show the contract to be on the public account, it is not necessary, in order to screen himself from personal liability, that the officer should expressly say that he contracts in his official capacity.[7] But if the officer makes a contract without sufficient authority legally to bind the poor law district, he is personally responsible thereon;[8] and this is true even where the officer in making the contract acts upon the subject-matter within the scope of his authority, if, because of his failure to take a prerequisite step to clothe himself therewith, he has no power to bind the public.[9]

b. Of Officers For Negligence or Misconduct. A poor officer who is negligent in the performance of a duty imposed on him by law,[10] or is guilty of misconduct in office,[11] is personally liable in damages therefor.

c. Of Officers and Sureties on Official Bond. The liability of the sureties on an official bond of a poor officer is dependent in a large measure upon the intention of the statute under which it is drawn.[12] The engagement of the sureties is for the future, and, in the absence of special stipulation to that effect, they are not liable for moneys actually received by their principal prior to the term for which they are bound.[13] A statute providing that an action against an overseer for the non-payment of money collected on execution must be brought within three years does not apply to an action on the official bond of an overseer of the poor to recover money alleged to have come into his hands as such overseer.[14] An action on the bond in behalf of the county must be brought in the name of the county officer who is the payee of the bond.[15] An action against a collector of poor taxes upon his bond by the overseers of the poor cannot be maintained without averment in the complaint that plaintiffs are overseers at the time of the institution of the suit.[16] The official verified reports, filed by the overseer of the poor from time to time as required by statute, are competent against his sureties Instances of liability.— The keeper of a county poor-farm who receives a poor person into the poorhouse, and undertakes to care for him, is liable for neglect to give him proper care, even though such person was brought to the poor-farm without proper authority and the keeper was not required by law to receive or take care of him there. Meier v. Paulus, 70 Wis. 165, 35 N. W. 301.

Who may sue.— If an overseer wholly neglects his duty, in providing for a pauper, the latter may maintain an action for the injuries sustained by such neglect, but this gives no right of action to a third person to prosecute for such neglect. Flower v. Allen, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 654.

Burden of proof.— When plaintiff seeks to charge an overseer of the poor, in a civil action, for omission of duty, the burden rests with him to prove it affirmatively and clearly. Minklaer v. Rockfeller, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 276.

12. Omission of statute to provide that officer shall be liable on a bond for non-performance of a given duty.— Where the statute requires an officer to collect the poor tax, and that he shall give a bond to the effect that he will pay over all moneys so collected, and the bond given by him so provides, the fact that the statute does not provide that the officer shall be liable on his official bond for the non-performance of his official duty in collecting the taxes does not affect the liability of the sureties on his bond. Meagher County v. Gardner, 18 Mont. 110, 44 Pac. 407. Where a former statute providing for the collection of a poor tax by the county assessor also provided that he should be liable on his official bond for the money so collected, was practically reënacted in a subsequent act, with the exception of the provision in respect to the liability on his bond, this omission does not release the sureties on his bond from liability for taxes collected and embezzled by him subsequent to such reënactment, where the condition of the bond was that the officer should pay over all the moneys coming into his hands as such. in an action against them on his official bond, as proof of the condition of his accounts both as to receipts and disbursements.[17] But evidence that certain members of the town board knew before the bond in question was executed that the overseer of the poor of the town was short in his accounts is not competent for the purpose of relieving sureties on the latter's bond from liability.[18]

2. Criminal Liability of Officers. Overseers, supervisors, and superintendents of the poor are public officers, and as such are liable to indictment at common law, and by statute, for neglect of duty or abuse of powers,[19] even after their terms have expired.[20] If, however, the duty imposed upon such officers is a discretionary one, an omission of such duty is not indictable.[21] The indictment must allege that the overseers wilfully neglected their duty as such or must contain other terms equivalent thereto,[22] and should name the paupers neglected or injured, or state a reason for not doing so.[23] Where the indictment charges merely neglect and omission of duty, evidence of acts of positive misfeasance is inadmissible.[24]

III. Settlement and Removal.[25]

A. Nature of Legal Settlement — 1. In General. The word "settlement" is used by the courts in a technical sense in construing pauper acts, and when it is said that a person has a settlement in a particular county or town, the meaning is that he has, in case of need, a right to support from the inhabitants of that town.[26] And where a settlement is once legally gained in any county or town, it must necessarily remain there until one is subsequently established in some other county or town.[27]

2. Estoppel to Deny.[28] In several jurisdictions it is provided by statute that a town or county may, in certain specified cases, become estopped to deny the settlement of a pauper therein. One case is where a town has recovered judgment against another town for the maintenance or removal of a pauper alleged to belong to the latter town; such judgment is conclusive between the parties as to all future charges of maintenance.[29] Another case is where notice that a pauper has become a public charge has been given by one town to another, and, no objection being made within the time limited, the town giving the notice has actually removed the pauper to the town to which notice was given.[30] A third case is where notice and a request to remove, given by one town to another, is not answered within the period designated by statute, and the pauper is not removed.[31] This last estoppel is confined to the notice upon which the action is founded. For if that action be compromised and another brought on a new notice, the omission to reply to the former notice will not preclude defendant from trying the question of settlement.[32] And where the controversy has proceeded to suit, a notice given by plaintiff town, although unanswered, will not operate as an estoppel.[33] A notice, not objected to, is a bar to the question of settlement, although the pauper may in fact have no legal settlement within the state,[34] but not where the settlement can be shown to be in the town giving the notice.[35] A town or county may by its acts and admissions estop itself to deny the settlement of a pauper therein,[36] but neither the acts nor the admissions of overseers of the poor will estop a town to deny the settlement of a pauper.[37] Nor will a town be estopped to contest a settlement by the mere fact that it has furnished supplies and support for the pauper.[38]

B. Statutory Provisions[39] — 1. Construction and Operation in General. In construing statutes in reference to the removal and relief of paupers, the general rule of construction of statutes that they are to have effect according to their obvious import applies.[40] Where an act is passed dividing a town, incorporating a part of it into a new town, and providing for the proportional support of the paupers then chargeable, the object of the provision is held to be to divide the expense of supporting such paupers, and not to affect their settlement.[41] The word "residents" as used in many of the statutes creating new towns and providing for the support of paupers is held to import a domicile only, in contradistinction to such a residence as would by the general law be necessary to confer a settlement.[42]

2. Retroactive Operation of Statutes. There is no constitutional objection to general laws which alter the rules of settlement, although they may operate to transfer from one town to another the duty of supporting particular persons,[43] or may give a settlement in some particular town to a person who previously had none in the state.[44] Unless a statute relating to the settlement of paupers contains a retroactive provision, it does not take away a settlement acquired before it went into effect.[45] Unless the act is made retroactive by its terms,[46] it will not be construed to give, on the strength of residence prior to the act, a settlement to a person who had none prior thereto;[47] and such an act, although made retrospective by its terms, does not give a settlement to a person who died before its passage, and by derivation to his children;[48] nor does it apply to a person who had ceased to become a resident of the state many years before its passage, so as to give a settlement by derivation to his sons and their wives.[49] Under an act operating retrospectively, so as to give an unsettled woman a settlement upon the completion of a term of residence therein mentioned, the words "unsettled woman" mean a woman unsettled at the time the statute takes effect,[50] and does not apply to a woman who has derived a settlement through her father[51] or husband[52] before the passage of the act.

Children born out of the state after their father had abandoned his domicile therein, and returning hither after his death, are come by showing a different derivative settlement from the father, or a different settlement subsequently acquired.[54]

2. Bastards. The place of birth of a bastard ordinarily fixes its settlement,[55] unless fraud or collusion has been practised to cause the birth to happen at that place,[56] or the mother has been transported or conducted thither under legal authority.[57]

D. Acquired Settlement[58] — 1. Who May Acquire — a. In General. Where a statute provides that all persons dwelling and having their homes in a certain place for a given time, and complying with certain specified conditions, shall thereby gain a legal settlement, the words "all persons" must be regarded as applying to those persons who are legally capable of gaining a settlement in their own right in any other mode.[59]

b. Aliens.[60] Under the provisions of some statutes an alien can gain no settlement by commorancy.[61] So it has been held that statutes which provide, under foreigners so far as the poor laws are concerned, since the place of settlement of children of extra state parentage is the place of their birth. Limestone Tp. v. Chillisquaque, 87 Pa. St. 294.

Loss of birth settlement.— In England, where a parish partly within and partly without a rural sanitary district has been divided by the operation of statute, a pauper loses his birth settlement acquired there before the passing of the act, because the place of such settlement has ceased to exist, and he cannot be treated as having a birth settlement in the new parish which originally formed a part of the old parish where he was born. certain conditions, a settlement for persons coming directly from some foreign place apply only to persons coming from some place without the United States without passing through a sister state,[62] and do not apply to persons who have acquired a legal settlement in the United States prior to complying with the conditions of the statute.[63] A naturalized alien can thereafter acquire a settlement by compliance with statutes relating to the acquisition of settlements by citizens.[64] But in the absence of statutory authority naturalization combined with prior residence does not confer a settlement upon an alien.[65]

c. Citizens and Inhabitants of Same or Different States. Statutes generally prescribe conditions under which citizens and inhabitants of the same state[66] or different states[67] may obtain settlements.

d. Married Women.[68] In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that a married woman shall have the settlement of her husband if he has any in the state; otherwise her own at the time of her marriage shall not be lost.[69] Where her husband has no settlement it is generally held that she may acquire a settlement in her own right, by complying with the provisions of the statute which would entitle any other person to a settlement.[70]

e. Deserted and Divorced Women. A married woman divorced a mensa et thoro from her husband can acquire a settlement in her own right.[71] So also the general rule is that a deserted wife stands in the same position with respect to her husband as if she were divorced from him a mensa et thoro, and can acquire a settlement in her own right distinct from that of her husband.[72] If, however, an

h. Insane Persons.[82] An insane person or idiot cannot acquire a settlement in any place by virtue of acts requiring his own volition.[83] But where insanity occurs after legal residence is once commenced, it does not interrupt the gaining of a settlement.[84] Such a person is, however, capable of gaining a settlement by any mode not requiring any act of volition of his own.[85] Therefore, under the statutes of a number of jurisdictions, a person non compos mentis may acquire a settlement in a town by continuous residence therein for a designated period.[86] But a person non compos mentis and not emancipated, although of full age, cannot acquire an independent settlement by residence, but will follow the settlement of his father.[87] When the question of the degree of the mental capacity of a pauper has arisen, it is held that, to disqualify a person from making a choice of a settlement, by insanity, the mental derangement need not amount to complete madness. If the mind is diseased to such an extent as to deprive the person of volition, free-will, and power of choice, or deprive him of self-control as to matters involved in a choice of settlement, this is sufficient.[88]

2. MODE OF ACQUIRING[91] — a. Ownership or Interest in Property — (I) IN GENERAL. One of the modes of gaining a settlement prescribed by many of the statutes is the ownership or interest in property of specified value within the town, and occupation and payment of taxes thereon for a designated period.[92]

(II) WHAT INTEREST OR TITLE NECESSARY — (A) In General. In order to gain a settlement by this mode it is usually required that the person possess a vested inheritance or freehold in possession.[93] These statutes refer to such an estate as the party has a right to occupy, and not to an estate in expectancy, where there is a preceding estate of freehold in another.[94] Nor is occupancy by tenants at will or sufferance sufficient to confer a settlement.[95] But an estate of freehold or inheritance in trust is an estate of freehold within the intent of the statutes.[96] It has been held, however, that a trust by mere implication, not arising by deed, nor established by any previous decree, is not sufficient to confer a settlement under a statute requiring seizin of a freehold estate.[97] So a statute requiring property to be held by a person "in his own right" excludes all property to which the person has but a right of temporary possession, as in the case of property held by an executor, administrator, guardian, agent, bailee, trustee, or tenant.[98] Unless the statute requires that the interest in the property must be an indefeasible interest, derived from a grantor having title,[99] the settlement does not depend upon the question whether the title is good against all persons; although it may be defeasible, it is good until defeated.[1] Nor does the want of record of the deed, at the time of the occupation, prevent the acquisition of a settlement.[2]

(B) Curtesy and Dower Interests. Under some statutes possession of a freehold estate in the right of one's wife is a sufficient interest to confer a right of settlement;[3] although possession by the husband as tenant by the curtesy initiate of land held by his wife to her sole and separate use is not sufficient.[4] Where, however, the statute requires the person to hold "in his own right," real estate held jure uxoris is not sufficient to confer a settlement.[5]

(III) Value of Estate. The value of the estate necessary to gain a settlement is fixed by statute.[6] In the absence of language in the statute requiring a different construction, this value will be estimated without regard to encumbrances.[7] Under a statute requiring the estate to be of a certain clear, yearly income, the words "clear, yearly income" mean income free from all charges on the estate,[8] not the sum actually received yearly by the owner of the estate, but the yearly value thereof as a rentable estate.[9] The property must be valued as if it had been subjected to taxation, when the forbearance to tax it has been on account of the poverty of the occupant.[10] The assessors' valuation of the estate is not conclusive as to the value thereof.[11]

(IV) Occupation. The statutes as a rule require actual occupation of the real property for the full period designated in the statute, in order to acquire a settlement under this mode.[12] The personal occupation of lands includes an occupation by others under the direction and control of the owner.[13] But it is otherwise if the lands are leased.[14] Nor is it sufficient for a pauper to dwell in the neighborhood or near to his estate; he must dwell upon it.[15]

(V) Payment of Consideration. Some of the statutes require the payment of at least a designated portion of the consideration in order to perfect a person's right to acquire a settlement.[16] But under some provisions a mortgage back to secure a part, or even all, of the purchase-money has been held not to defeat a settlement.[17]

b. Payment of Rent. Some of the statutes provide that a person may acquire a settlement in a town by leasing premises therein of a specified yearly rental value, and living thereon, and paying rent for the period designated in the statute.[18] That the pauper resided in different tenements is immaterial.[19] Nor is it material whether he paid all the rent which he contracted to pay, so long as the amount paid exceeded the sum required by the statute.[20] But two tenancies under rent separated by an interval cannot be joined to acquire a settlement.[21] Nor may the rent of one year be tacked to the rent of a former year so as to make the required amount.[22] The renting need be bona fide only as between the landlord and tenant, and the whole rent need not be paid by the person renting the tenement; it is sufficient if it was actually paid,[23] provided it was not paid with the fraudulent intention of fixing the pauper's settlement upon the town or parish.[24] But payment of rent after the death of a pauper will not complete a settlement partially acquired in his lifetime.[25] The lease need not be in writing,[26] and the rent need not be paid in money, but may be paid in labor or other services equivalent to money.[27]

as a mode of acquiring a settlement by a person residence in any place in the state, and payment of all duly assessed taxes on his poll or estate during the period prescribed by the statute.[29]

(II) LEVY AND ASSESSMENT. Such statutes have usually been construed to mean that these taxes must have been actually assessed against the estate of the person claiming a settlement, and that it is not sufficient that he had an estate liable to taxation in the town, and was able to pay taxes for that period of time.[30] A person's right to a settlement under this mode cannot be defeated after the assessment and payment of the tax, on the ground that it was illegally assessed, or because of some defect in the tax lists.[31]

(III) PAYMENT. The assessment of taxes, it is held, is generally not alone sufficient, under these statutes, but there must be a full payment thereof for each successive year of the period prescribed by statute, in order to entitle a person to a settlement; and failure to demand, or abatement of the tax, does not alter the rule.[32] The full amount assessed must be paid,[33] and neglect to enforce

After abatement of tax.— Under the statute enacting that any person who shall have resided in any town in this state, and shall have paid all taxes legally imposed on his poll and estate, etc., after a tax has been abated it cannot be paid so as to give the person paying a settlement within the act. Plymouth v. Andover, 49 N. H. 86 note.

Statutes not requiring assessment.— Some statutes provide several methods of obtaining settlement under some of which assessment is sufficient without payment. Templeton v. Sterling, 15 Mass. 253; Westbrook v. Gorham, 15 Mass. 160.

33. Lisbon v. Bath, 21 N. H. 319, holding that the payment of three cents less than the whole town taxes assessed upon an in-payment,[34] or remission of payment by special vote of the town or by action of the selectmen[35] will not operate as payment. Under some statutes payment in money is necessary;[36] under others payment in labor will suffice.[37]

(IV) Persons Making Payment. It is immaterial by whom the tax is paid, provided it is done at the instance of, or with the consent of, the person to be taxed.[38] On the other hand the unauthorized and unratified payment of such taxes by a third party will not entitle the person taxable to a settlement by reason thereof.[39]

d. Service — (I) In General. In one jurisdiction at least it is provided by statute that a settlement may be gained in any poor district by any unmarried person, not having a child, who shall be bound or hired as a servant, within such district, and shall continue in such service during one whole year.[40] By an unmarried person the statute is construed to include a minor child who goes out to work because of the death or desertion of his parents;[41] and the word "child," as used in the statute, means a legitimate child, so that an unmarried woman having a bastard child may gain a settlement by hiring and service for one whole year.[42]

(II) Contract of Hiring. To obtain a legal settlement under the act, there must be a contract of hiring, express or implied, which is binding on both parties.[43]

When contract will be implied.— Where one who is not a relative and not an object of charity, but able to earn wages, is employed in the service of another for a year, the law implies a contract of hiring, so as to confer a settlement. Moreland v. Davidson Tp., 71 Pa. St. 371; Kelly Tp. v. Gregg Tp., 2 Walk. (Pa.) 383.

It need not be entire,[44] it being sufficient if there has been a continuous service for a whole year under one or more contracts.[45] So too the contract of hiring may be for an indefinite time, or at will, if the service is continuous for a year.[46] A money consideration is not necessary to support the contract of hiring, but any other valuable consideration will suffice.[47]

(III) THE SERVICE. The service must be by virtue of a hiring; service alone, without a hiring, will not give a settlement.[48] It is not necessary that the service be menial or rendered in performance of household duties.[49] The service must be for the whole year, and the criterion for determining whether absence from service breaks its continuity and prevents its being a whole year's service as contemplated by the statute is whether during the intervals of absence the contract of hiring is continued.[50]

(IV) EFFECT OF RESIDENCE ELSEWHERE. The settlement is gained where the services are performed under a contract of hiring, although the pauper may reside elsewhere.[51]

e. Apprenticeship — (I) IN GENERAL. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that a settlement may be gained in any poor district by any person who shall be duly bound and apprenticed by indenture, and shall inhabit in the district with his master and mistress, for the whole of the period prescribed by the statute.[52]

A minor may gain a settlement by service under an indenture of apprenticeship only, where it appears that he was emancipated at the time of the commencement of the service (Milo v. Harmony, 18 Me. 415; Leeds v. Freeport, 10 Me. 356), and a minor is not emancipated from the time he has been indentured as an apprentice, so as to gain a settlement, but his settlement follows that of his father (Frankfort v. New Vineyard, 48 Me. 565; Oldtown v. Falmouth, 40 Me. 106; Benson v. West Haven, Brayt. (Vt.) 187).

(II) Indenture. If the indenture of a pauper contains a clause of indemnity, in case the pauper becomes chargeable to that district, a new settlement cannot, under the indenture, be gained in another district.[53]

(III) Service. Subjection to indenture, without service under it, fulfils neither the words nor the design of the statute.[54] An apprentice to gain a settlement must serve with his master for the period required by the statute, and if he absents himself and roves abroad he does not gain a settlement.[55] The service required by the statute to give a settlement must be under the indenture of apprenticeship.[56] Service for the term required by the statute with a second master will give a settlement, so long as the service is under the indenture;[57] but, to constitute a service with a second master, there must be an assignment, express or implied.[58] An apprentice gains a settlement in a poor district where the master with whom he serves resides, although the master has none.[59] Although the indenture must comply with all the provisions of the statutes relating to apprentices,[60] yet service under an indenture which is merely voidable is sufficient to support a settlement.[61]

f. Holding Public Office. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that a settlement may be gained in any poor district by any person who shall come to inhabit in the same, and who shall, for himself and on his own account, execute the duties of any public office, being lawfully placed therein, during a specified period.[62] When the statute requires service of one whole year in a given office to give a settlement, it means a political year, or from one election to another;[63] and hence if a person chosen to the office voluntarily removes from the town or parish, as the case may be, within the year,[64] or is removed therefrom by compulsion,[65] so as to render himself incapable of performing the duties of his office for a whole year whenever lawfully required so to do, he gains no settlement by virtue of such choice. A statute providing merely that one who holds a given office in the town for two years shall have a settlement does not necessitate a holding of such office for two years in succession.[66]

Where the statute exempts from its provision persons sent into a poor district for education, a person sent into the district under indenture to learn the art of husbandry is a person sent for education. Barrington v. Gilmanton, 3 N. H. 83.

g. Military Settlement — (I) In General. In one jurisdiction the statute provides that any person duly enlisted and mustered in the United States military service, as part of the quota of a city or town, under any call of the president during the Civil war, and who fulfils the other requirements of the act, shall be deemed to have acquired a settlement in such city or town.[67]

(II) Considerations Affecting. The fact that a person has been, as part of the quota of a city or town, enlisted and mustered under a false name, does not prevent him from acquiring a settlement.[68] A settlement may be acquired under statute, by reason of service in the navy as part of the quota of a town, although the person so serving was at the time of his enlistment a resident of another town.[69] The statute not limiting its provisions to those who had attained their majority at the time of enlistment, one who was a minor at the time of his enlistment upon the quota of a town, acquired, together with his wife and minor children, the same settlement therein as if he had been of full age at the time of his enlistment.[70] To give a settlement by reason of military service, such service must have been as part of the quota of some city or town in the state;[71] but to give a settlement the person for whom it was claimed need not, at the date of his enlistment, have been actually credited to the town or city under the then existing provisions of law, as part of some quota which it was then liable by law to furnish, and it is sufficient if at any time he was credited as a part of such quota, although his term of service may have ended before any legal recognition and assignment,[72] the service as a drafted man is not for that reason deprived of the benefits of the statute.[73] Although the statute provides that the person for whom the settlement is claimed must have continued in the service for a term not less than one year,[74] yet the length of his service is immaterial if he died or was disabled by disease contracted while engaged in the service.[75] One who has left the service otherwise than by an honorable discharge does not acquire a settlement.[76]

(III) Replacing Settlement by Acquiring Another. One who has acquired a military settlement under the statute can, like any other person, gain, in any of the modes prescribed by the ordinary law, a new settlement in another for any period, he acquires no legal settlement.

A soldier discharged for disability does not thereby acquire a settlement under the statute, unless it appears that the disability arose from wounds received or disease contracted in the service. Ashland v. Marlborough, 106 Mass. 266.

Desertion during second enlistment.— Since the statute excepts from its benefits a soldier guilty of wilful desertion, it does not enable a soldier who was guilty of wilful desertion during his second enlistment to gain a settlement which, but for this, he might have acquired by virtue of his first enlistment. Cambridge v. Paxton, 144 Mass. 520, 12 N. E. 188.

Discharged as illegally drafted.— The fact that a person after having been in due form enlisted and mustered, and having served the town or city, and thereby replace the military one.[77] So too a military settlement gained by a person in one town may be replaced by a military settlement gained by him in another town, although both settlements were acquired before the passage of the act.[78]

h. Residence[79] — (I) In General. It is generally provided by statute that a person who shall in his own right reside in any poor district, for a given period, and fulfil the other requirements of the statute, shall thereby acquire a legal settlement therein.[80]

(II) Necessity of, in Connection With Payment of Taxes. Payment of taxes during the period prescribed by the statute, without a residence, throughout the same entire term, does not establish the same.[81]

(III) Necessity of Obtaining Approbation of Town to Acquire Settlement Thereby. Under the earlier statutes of the New England states, no person coming to reside or dwell in a town could thereby gain a settlement without obtaining the approbation of the inhabitants of the town given at a general town meeting.[82] Under such a statute it was held that a person cannot gain a settlement by an implied approbation by the town of his residing therein.[83]

(IV) Nature and Requisites. The residence requisite to the gaining of a settlement in a poor district is a residence therein in one's own right.[84] The residence must be open and notorious, and attended with such circumstances as to lead the authorities of the poor district, in the exercise of proper vigilance, to the conclusion that there is an intention to gain a settlement.[85] That residence must be of a fixed and permanent character as distinguished from transient or temporary.[86]

The fact of residence in a poor district for the full statutory period is not alone sufficient,[87] but it must be attended with the intention on the part of the resident of making such district his fixed present place of abode.[88] But a person who moves into a district with the intention of making it his fixed residence, for an indefinite time, and resides for the statutory period, gains a legal settlement,[89] and such settlement is not defeated by the fact that he may have entertained a floating intention of leaving the district at some future time.[90] The residence requisite to gain a settlement is one of choice, not of legal coercion.[91] The residence must be on the actual territory within the legal limits of the poor district sought to be charged.[92] A residence on disputed territory, claimed by two towns, and over which both exercise jurisdiction, is gained in that town within whose true boundaries the territory resided on is ultimately found to be situated.[93] A settlement is gained in a town by a residence within the limits over which it exercises actual and exclusive jurisdiction, although those limits are afterward found not to be within its true boundaries,[94] and that settlement is not defeated, or in any wise affected, by the subsequent acquisition of rightful jurisdiction by such other town.[95]

(v) DETERMINATION. As to a person having a family his residence is usually determined by the place where his family resides;[96] but, as to a single person whose business or employment calls him away from home a great part of the time, or who is from time to time living with his friends or connections, his residence is usually determined by inquiry as to the place where he has kept his clothes or what little property he may have possessed, and to which he resorts as his home when out of employment.[97]

(vi) CONTINUITY—(A) In General. To acquire a settlement by residence in a particular poor district, the person must actually have resided there continuously for the period prescribed by the statute, intending to make that his home and residence.[98] But where a residence has once been established by the concurrence of intention and personal presence, continuous personal presence thereafter is not essential to a continuous residence,[99] especially when he whose residence is in question has a family between whom and him mutual family relations are in full force.[1] Continuity of residence is not broken by absence for a longer or shorter period, without any definite intention of abandoning such residence,[2] or with a continued intent to return when the purpose of the absence has been accomplished.[3]

(B) Interruption by Imprisonment. As to whether imprisonment in a state prison under a conviction for a crime does of itself interrupt the continuity of residence requisite to the prisoner's acquisition of a legal settlement by residence in a poor district, there is an apparent conflict of authority, it being held flatly in some jurisdictions that the continuity of the residence is interrupted by such an imprisonment,[4] while in other jurisdictions the rule obtains that such an imprisonment does not interrupt the continuity of the residence of a prisoner in a district where he had his home and was supporting his family when imprisoned,[5] especially where the evidence shows a purpose on his part to continue such residence and to return to it as soon as he is liberated.[6] Imprisonment upon a bailable criminal offense merely, in one district, has not the effect to make a break in the continuity of the residence of a man who has at the time a home and family in another district to which he intends to return when the regains his liberty.[7]

(C) Interruption by Commitment to Insane Asylum. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that the time any person shall be a patient in a hospital for the insane, except inhabitants of the town in which such hospital is situated, shall not be computed as part of the time required by law to gain a legal settlement;[8] but, independently of statute, the commitment of an insane person to a hospital for the insane and his stay there do not interrupt his residence commenced in the district from which he is removed, and prevent his acquirement of a legal settlement at the expiration of the statutory period.[9]

Dexter v. Sangerville, 70 Me. 441, holding further that where the friends of such insane person, without filing the bond required by statute and in the first instance pay all his expenses of commitment and support, and the poor district makes no payment, the time of commitment and stay at the hospital is to be included in the period of residence, in the district where the insane person had his home, necessary to change his settlement under the pauper law.

once established in a poor district is in part one of intention;[10] to retain it, there must be both a definite intention to return and a place to which the person has a right to return,[11] and where a departure from an established place of residence and an intention not to return concur,[12] or where a departure or absence therefrom without any present intention of returning coexists,[13] the established residence is deemed to be changed.

3. Annexation, Consolidation, Division, and Incorporation of Towns[14] — a. Annexation and Detachment. Where a part of an existing town is by statute annexed to another existing town, the inhabitants living upon the part detached and having a settlement in the former town will acquire a settlement in the town to which they may be annexed.[15] However, such annexation does not transfer the settlement of any persons except those who actually dwell and have their homes upon territory set off at the time of its separation.[16]

b. Consolidation or Division of Towns or Districts. It is a well-established principle that on the division of a town, in the absence of a different rule prescribed by the act of division, those who have settlements in the old town become settled respectively in the towns embracing the territory where they reside at the time of division.[17] Where a portion of the territory of one town is annexed to

The furnishing of supplies to a minor child, who is not a member of his father's family, but is away from his care and protection, either through his own fault or his father's neglect, without the knowledge or consent of the father, by a distant town where he may happen to fall into distress, he being of sufficient ability and willing to support him at his own home, is not considered a furnishing of supplies to him as a pauper, so as to prevent his acquiring a settlement to which he would otherwise be entitled. Bangor v. Read-is deemed to embrace all the persons whom it is the right of the head of the family to control, and his duty to support.[27] Relief furnished and accepted when the person or his family was not in need of it does not affect the settlement.[28] But if the necessity for relief exist, it is not essential to show that the recipient called for it, or that the party whose settlement is thereby affected should have assented to the furnishing of it by the town.[29]

(II) WHAT CONSTITUTES. In order to prevent the gaining of a settlement the relief must be actually furnished by the town,[30] and must be received as a pauper.[31] If supplies are furnished by the town because the pauper is in distress and in need of relief, the character of the relief is immaterial.[32] Supplies which have been furnished gratuitously or on the individual credit of the recipient thereof have no effect.[33] So it is held that aid rendered in discharge of a duty assumed by contract, and not in discharge of a duty imposed by statute, will not prevent a person from acquiring a settlement in a town.[34] A promise to repay and the actual repayment do not change the nature of the relief,[35] unless the relief is

Where the father has deliberately abandoned his family and taken up his residence in another town, emancipating them from all duty to him and renouncing all obligations to them, supplies furnished, even under such circumstances as imply a knowledge of the fact upon his part, will not be construed as supplies furnished to him, so as to prevent his gaining a settlement in his new place of residence. Applications of rule.—If supplies, furnished bona fide by overseers to a person destitute, are in fact used for the relief of his destitution, or are received for the purpose of such relief, his unwillingness to receive them as pauper supplies, or his protest against so regarding them, or his declaration that he shall not so regard them, cannot prevent them from being so regarded, and from drawing after them all of their legal consequences. Veazie v. Chester, 53 Me. 29.

Case not within rule.— But if, when supplies are furnished, the overseers distinctly agree that the supplies are not and shall not be regarded as pauper supplies, but as a gift or loan to one in need, whether to be returned in kind or paid for, or not, and they are thus received, the party so receiving will not be legally affected thereby, nor will the town acquire any rights thereby in its relation to other towns. furnished to the pauper on a pledge of sufficient property to secure a remuneration.[36]

b. Warning Out[37] — (i) In General. The process of warning individuals to leave town, in order to prevent their gaining a settlement, is analogous to the English practice of orders of removal, by justices of the sessions. The design in both cases is to impose the burden of maintenance on the town or parish where the pauper has his legal settlement. The mode of warning out is merely a milder form of effecting this object.[38] The power to warn out new settlers in any town is not designed to operate as a general act of exclusion against all who may come within the bounds of any town to reside, but is placed in the hands of the selectmen to be exercised or not, in peculiar circumstances, according to their discretion. This discretion they have no right to depute to any third person to exercise for them, and the warrant must be the direct act of the selectmen, and be specific in its character.[39]

(ii) Requisites and Sufficiency. A warning to prevent a pauper from gaining a settlement in a town must follow strictly the statutory requirements.[40] Mere formal errors will not, however, invalidate a warning if the matter intended appear with sufficient certainty from the whole.[41] Unless expressly required by the statute, a warning need not be under the seal of the selectmen or signed by them.[42]

(iii) Service. The warning must be served by the delivery of a true and attested copy thereof on the person or persons to be warned, with the officers' return thereon; or by leaving such copy at the house of his or their usual abode with some person of sufficient discretion then resident therein.[43] If there be no such person with whom a copy can be left, it may be left at the usual abode of the person to be warned in such manner that he will most probably receive it. The right of the officer to adopt this method of service depends upon his inability to serve it in either of the first two methods named.[44] If the service is not personal it should be certified to have been on "one then residing" where the pauper did.[45]

(iv) Return and Record. The officer's return must recite every material fact necessary to show a complete legal service.[46] Thus the return must show on what persons the process was served,[47] and recite the particular mode of service of the warning order.[48] The time of residence of a pauper in a town must be shown in the warrant, or the return of the officer.[49] The return of the officer must be recorded in the clerk's office within the period designated by statute, in order to be valid against him.[50] The return cannot be amended after the expiration of the period required for acquisition of a settlement by the persons warned.[51]

(v) Operation and Effect. Under the various pauper statutes, the warning of a person, in conformity with the statute, prevents the person warned from gaining a settlement, and all others who derive their settlement from him.[52] But a child born to one who was warned to depart the town gains a settlement in such town by residence for the statutory period, after coming of age, without being warned to depart.[53] Where a person has been warned to leave a town, he cannot gain a settlement by any residence, however long;[54] nor, it seems, by returning after a temporary absence too short to enable him to gain a settlement by residence elsewhere.[55] But if, after the warning, he left the town and returned after an absence sufficiently long to acquire a settlement elsewhere, a new warning is necessary to prevent a settlement,[56] unless the statute extends the effect of the warning to all subsequent, although distinct, periods of residence.[57]

(vi) Evidence. The burden of proving the issuance, service, return, and recording of the warning order is upon the party claiming the benefit of such proceeding, and if not shown by the party objecting to the settlement, it is presumed not to exist;[58] and, in the absence of all proof save that a warning order was issued, it is not to be presumed that the return was made in conformity with the provisions of the statute.[59] The best evidence of the return is a memorandum made by the clerk of the court of the time when the return was received, and where such memorandum is made it is conclusive evidence of such time,[60] but this is not the sole evidence.[61]

settlement at the time of the child's birth, if he subsequently acquired one.[68] A child not emancipated follows the settlement of the father, although not residing in the father's family at the time he changes his place of settlement,[69] and the settlement of minor children born after the desertion of their mother by their father follows during their minority the settlement of the father.[70]

b. Alien Born Children and Children Born in Other States. A father's right of settlement in a state is transmitted to children born in another state so as to be available to the children on their coming to the state where the father has a settlement.[71] In one state the same rule has been held to apply in respect of children born in a foreign country and brought during infancy to the state where the father had a settlement.[72] In another state, however, an alien born takes no right to a settlement by derivation, whether he comes to this country during or subsequent to his minority, and whether his parents return with him or not.[73]

f. Adult and Emancipated Children.[82] A minor child, who has been emancipated, gains no settlement through the settlement of his parent, acquired after such emancipation.[83] In most jurisdictions a child is held to be emancipated upon reaching his majority, even though he continues to be a member of his father's family, and takes no derivative settlement from a settlement subsequently acquired by the father.[84] However, by the English rule,[85] which has been followed in some of the United States, so long as a child continues single; enters into no contract inconsistent with the idea of his being a member of, and in a subordinate situation in, his father's family; acquires no settlement for himself, and makes his father's house his home, so long, whatever may be his age, he will follow any newly acquired settlement of his father.[86]

And the settlement of a woman acquired by marriage is not, by the common law, communicated to her child by a former marriage, even where such child has no domicile in the state.[92] But in some jurisdictions the common law has been so altered in this regard that a minor child, having the settlement of its mother, follows the settlement which its mother acquires by her second marriage.[93]

thereby acquiring that settlement,[3] loses absolutely her own former settlement.[4] A woman who marries a man who has no settlement or none within the state retains her former settlement,[5] and by the weight of authority her former settlement is not suspended but remains in full force and effect.[6]

5. Divorce. A settlement gained by marriage is not lost by divorce,[7] unless the divorce be for such cause as shows the marriage to be void ab initio.[8] If the husband has no settlement the wife is remitted to her maiden settlement on divorce.[9]

6. Fraud in Procuring Change. Under some statutes, where the authorities of the town in which a woman has a settlement procure her marriage to a man having a settlement elsewhere, for the purpose of relieving the town of her support, she does not lose her settlement.[10] And if the town in which her husband lives supports her as a pauper, it may recover the amount expended from the town of her original settlement.[11] It has also been held that if poor officers procure a woman to go into another town to be delivered, the child will be considered as born in the town from which she is so procured to depart.[12]

of the word "home," under the pauper statutes.[13] So under some statutes a pauper and those deriving their settlement from him lose their right of settlement by living five years beyond the limits of the state without receiving pauper supplies from any source within the state.[14] Under others settlement is lost by continuous residence in another town for a year,[15] and it is immaterial whether during that year he was self-supporting or was aided in part by the town of his former residence.[16] However continuous absence for the statutory period without proof of residence does not forfeit a settlement;[17] nor does the statute apply to a person residing in a county wherein each town supports its own poor, where he has been supported for many years in the town of his residence on the guarantee of the town of his settlement to repay the former town the amount expended for his support.[18]

G. Evidence of Settlement[19] — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. In an action to recover for the support of a pauper, as in other civil cases, the burden is on plaintiff town of proving every disputed fact that constitutes an element of its right to recover,[20] and the burden of proving affirmative defenses rests with defendant.[21] The burden of proving the acquisition of a new settlement is always on the party alleging it,[22] since a settlement once acquired is presumed to continue until another is subsequently acquired,[23] and such party must show everything necessary to the acquisition thereof.[24]

2. Admissibility — a. In General. The admissibility of evidence in actions for the maintenance of a pauper is governed by the same rules that apply in civil actions generally.[25] To prove the fact of settlement certain things stated in deeds,[26] wills,[27] and other solemn instruments in writing[28] are competent evidence, although the same facts in verbal declarations are inadmissible.[29] Town records,[30] assessment lists,[31] voting lists,[32] and books of the selectmen[33] are also admissible for this purpose. So the acts of the selectmen in paying bills incurred by other towns for the support of a pauper may be shown in evidence as tending to prove any fact necessary to establish the settlement of such pauper in that town.[34] But this evidence, being merely presumptive, it is proper for the opposite party to offer proof of facts and circumstances which have a tendency to rebut the presumptions arising from it.[35] Defendant town is not confined, like plaintiff, to a single proposition. It need not prove that the pauper had a settlement in any particular town. It may set up and support by testimony any number of propositions to establish alternatively a settlement in either of several towns, or in either of several modes of acquisition.[36] So it is permissible to prove by witnesses

Declarations of pauper to prove change of settlement see infra, III, G, 2, b.

Ground of admissibility.— This species of evidence is different from the mere verbal declarations of a pauper as to his residence which are not admissible. The designation of his residence in a solemn instrument, such as a deed or a will, is in the nature of a fact rather than a declaration, being made when there was no controversy, and when no possible interest could exist to give a false designation. 36. Abington v. Duxbury, 105 Mass. 287, holding that in an action by one town to recover from another the expense of supporting as a pauper a married woman alleged to have her settlement with defendants, it is competent for them to prove that her husband has a settlement in the commonwealth elsewhere than with them, derived from his mother, without first proving that he derived no settlement from his father.

nnder what agreements of hire or employment, or terms as to time or as to board, a pauper entered the town, where the question is as to the nature of his residence there, and whether temporary or not,[37] provided the evidence so offered is not hearsay.[38]

b. As to Change of Residence. On the question of a person's intent to change his residence, any of his acts[39] or words[40] which tend to show his intention are admissible in evidence. Thus the declarations of a pauper, accompanying the act of leaving a town, expressing the object and purpose of making a home in another town, are admissible in evidence on the question of intention as part of the res gestæ.[41] While on the other hand his declarations of his future hopes or expectations, not carried into execution, are inadmissible in evidence.[42]

3. Weight and Sufficiency. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence in an action for the maintenance of a pauper is governed by the general rules applicable to civil cases generally.[43] The fact of settlement may be proved by circumstantial or presumptive evidence, as well as by direct evidence.[44] A pauper's birthplace is prima facie the place of his settlement;[45] but this may be overcome by showing a different derivative settlement from the father or mother, either communicated at birth or acquired while the child is unemancipated.[46] Proof that a person has resided for the statutory period in a town is prima facie sufficient to establish his settlement therein;[47] but if it is shown that such person is a married woman, it may be necessary to prove further that her husband resided in that town, or else that she was deserted by him.[48] The residence of the wife is evidence of the domicile of the husband on the question of settlement, but it is not conclusive.[49] Where the settlement of a pauper is derived by descent from his father, evidence of his father's marriage is essential;[50] but where the descent is shown, slight evidence is sufficient in the first instance to establish the legitimacy.[51] Voting,[52] and taxation, acquiesced in and affirmed by the payment of the tax,[53] are important evidence, but not conclusive. Where a town attempts to prevent the legal effect of a residence, by proving that the person whose settlement is in question has received supplies as a pauper, it is not enough merely to show that supplies have been furnished by the officers of the town. It must also appear that the person supplied, or his family, was in need of the relief furnished.[54] Support of a person as a pauper by a town is not conclusive on the question of settlement.[55] Nor are the acts and declarations of a pauper in making a change of domicile conclusive on that point.[56]

H. Persons Removable[57] — 1. Persons Chargeable or Likely to Become Chargeable. A person may be removed to the town of his settlement or to the town liable for his support, when he is chargeable or likely to become chargeable as a pauper in another town.[58] The mere possibility, however, that a person will become chargeable as a pauper is not sufficient to authorize his removal; there must be a prospect or strong probability.[59] The general rule is that a person cannot be removed as a pauper from lands he occupies as a freehold estate.[60]

2. Persons Fraudulently or Wrongfully Brought Into Place. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that where paupers are wilfully and fraudulently brought into a town or county where they do not belong, through the wrongful agency of the town or county actually chargeable with their support, the courts may order the removal or return of such paupers to the place from which they were brought.[61]

3. TRANSIENT PAUPERS. In Vermont an order for removal of a pauper can be made only when the pauper has come to reside in the town procuring such order, and cannot be made in the case of a transient pauper.[62]

4. INDIVIDUAL MEMBERS OF FAMILIES. It is contrary to the policy of the law to separate families, or sunder family ties; thus a pauper husband cannot by an order of removal be separated from his wife, who is living with him, or vice versa;[63] nor children of tender age from their mother.[64] However, when the husband, having no settlement within a state, has abandoned his wife and left the state, the wife may be removed to the place of her own proper settlement before marriage.[65]

I. Place to Which Removable. The removal of a person who becomes or is likely to become chargeable as a pauper from a town or county not liable for his support must be to the place of his last legal settlement if he has one within the state.[66] If he has no legal settlement in the state the statutes variously prescribe either that he be removed to the town in which he first became chargeable,[67] or to that town within the state, in which he last resided continuously, for the period fixed by the statute.[68] Whether a pauper may be removed to his place of settlement in another state the authorities in the several jurisdictions differ, some holding that he may,[69] others holding that such a provision is nugatory for want of power by which the order can be enforced in the other state.[70]

J. Authority to Remove. The authority to remove paupers to the towns of their legal settlement or to the towns liable for their support is conferred entirely by statute, and proceedings thereunder must be in strict conformity with the terms of the statute.[71] The various statutes agree generally in conferring the authority to remove upon two justices of the peace to whom application has been made by an overseer of the poor or other person exercising his functions.[72]

K. Proceeding For Removal — 1. Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the various courts in regard to the settlement or support of paupers is fixed as a rule by the statute regulating such proceedings.[73]

2. Application For Removal and Proceedings Thereon.[74] Proceedings upon application for removal of paupers are regulated entirely by statute, are exceedingly technical, and must be prosecuted strictly according to the statute under which they are taken.[75] The usual mode of proceeding is by complaint or application of the overseer of the poor, or the officer exercising his functions, to one or more justices of the peace,[76] who must thereupon, either by summons or warrant, notify the pauper to appear,[77] and who if justified by the facts may order the pauper's removal to the town or county chargeable with his support.[78]

L. Judgment or Order of Removal[79] — 1. Form and Requisites — a. In General. An order for the removal of a pauper should show on its face that all the facts which are requisite by statute actually exist, that the officers making the order acted within their authority, and that the facts necessary to authorize the order were duly proved before the officers making the same,[80] that there was a complaint and an adjudication that the person removed was likely to become chargeable,[81] and an adjudication of the place of last legal settlement.[82] It is not necessary that an examination should appear upon the order.[83] Where a pauper is to be sent out of the state, the order of removal should designate the route by which he is to be transported.[84] While several persons having independent settlements cannot be removed by the same order,[85] an order may include the members of a family, provided they have the same settlement,[86] and the names of the different persons constituting the family need not be set forth.[87]

b. Amendability. Defects in form in an order of removal may be amended,[88] but not defects in substance.[89] A defect apparent on the record and in no way affecting the jurisdiction or the merits of the case is a defect in form and not in substance.[90] The omission to state matter necessary to give jurisdiction is matter of substance.[91]

2. Discharge or Quashing. An order of removal is discharged, or, as is sometimes said, vacated, after a successful objection to it on the merits.[92] It may be quashed for informality or irregularity of the proceedings.[93] The fact that the pauper in question is not liable to be removed may be taken advantage of on a motion to quash.[94] Where an order is made to remove several, and the order is bad as to part, either for some informality, or on the ground that they were not liable to be removed, the order as to them may be quashed and affirmed as to the residue.[95] Where an order has been appealed it is not quashable. The case is then before the court on the merits and both parties are entitled to a final decision.[96]

3. Conclusiveness — a. When Order Unappealed From or Confirmed on Appeal. An order of removal of a pauper, unappealed from, is conclusive evidence of the settlement of the pauper,[97] and as to all derivative settlements under him.[98] So is an order affirmed on appeal.[99] Such order is not only conclusive between the towns which are parties thereto, but upon all other towns,[1] and no other removal can be made except to a subsequently acquired settlement.[2] Furthermore such order is conclusive not only as to the facts directly decided, but also as to all facts necessary to uphold the order.[3] To give an order of removal conclusiveness, it must be executed, that is, the pauper must be actually removed, unless prevented by sickness or death;[4] or the order must be perfected by giving legal notice of the same.[5] In some jurisdictions this notice is given by serving upon the other town a true and attested copy of such order within thirty days after making it.[6] This notice cannot be waived, so as to affect the settlement of the pauper, by any agreement of the overseers of the town entitled to receive it.[7]

10. The words "notice," "order," and warrant" are used very loosely in decisions construing the laws relating to the removal of paupers. "Notice" is variously used to mean either a notice to the pauper to appear before the justice, or to leave, or a notice to the town liable for his support to remove him; "order" is used in all these three senses and also to mean the process issued to the constable to remove the pauper, while "warrant" may mean either the summons to appear before the justice or the order of removal.

Physical transfer of the pauper is unnecessary when the pauper is too sick to be removed, and in such case service of the order of removal upon the overseers of the town to be charged is complete without it (Tunkhannock v. Montrose, 3 Lack. Jur. (Pa.) 345); nor is physical transfer requisite to the validity of an order of removal and its binding force upon the town to which the removal is ordered (Poultney v. Sandgate, 35 Vt. 146).

That removal of a pauper cannot legally be made before the day fixed upon for the pauper to remove himself see Barnet v. Concord, 4 Vt. 564.

N. Review of Order of Removal — 1. Right of Review. The right to appeal from orders of removal is frequently conferred by statute.[23] No appeal lies, however, upon a mere vagrant pass made by a justice, although it contains some expressions resembling an order of removal.[24]

2. Who May Appeal. The statutes usually give the right of appeal to the party aggrieved. Therefore a town receiving a pauper under a void order of removal has no right of appeal, having acted in its own wrong.[25]

3. Manner of Taking Appeal. Where no special mode is provided for appeal from orders of removal of paupers, it is held in some jurisdictions that such appeal may be made by notice to the town or county from which the removal is made and petition to the court to allow the appeal without previous declaration of appeal to the magistrate making the order.[26] In other jurisdictions all that is necessary is that notice of the appeal be given to the justices, or one of them, and if, after such notice, the justice refuses to certify the appeal, mandamus will lie.[27] If seasonable notice of an appeal is not given, the appeal should be continued.[28]

4. Time For Taking Appeal. The time for taking an appeal from an order of removal is prescribed by statute. In some jurisdictions it must be to the next term of court after the order is made,[29] and this whether notice of the order was given or not.[30] In other jurisdictions the appeal is given to the next term after the parties find themselves aggrieved, which is not until the removal of the pauper.[31]

5. Scope and Extent of Review. It is sometimes provided that, on appeal from an order of removal, the order shall be no evidence of the facts therein stated; but the respondents must begin de novo, and substantiate the order, before the appellants can be called upon to impeach it.[32] The scope and extent of the review is regulated by statute.[33]

St. 484. Compare Londonderry v. Windham, 2 Vt. 149, holding that one town cannot recover of another the costs of removal of a pauper, except where the sickness of the pauper prevents a removal after an order is made.

Necessity for appeal.— The act of June 13, 1836, relating to costs in removal proceedings, allowed costs and charges only in cases where appeals were taken from orders of removal, and no provision was made for costs when the pauper was accepted and no appeal was taken. Blair County v. Clarion Borough, 91 Pa. St. 431; Schuylkill v. Montour, 44 Pa. St. 484; Sugarloaf Tp. v. Schuylkill County, 44 Pa. St. 481; Lawrence v. Tioga, 2 Pa. Dist. 786. The act of April 15, 1867, remedies the defect, however, and makes the accepting district liable for costs where the pauper is accepted and the order of removal is unappealed from, in like manner as if appeal had been taken. Blair County v. Clarion Borough, supra; Lawrence v. Tioga, supra; Bedford County v. Licking Creek Tp., 2 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 310.

at the time of trial the pauper has been removed, the action may still be prosecuted to recover costs and expenses.[35] In an action by the overseers of a town for the removal of a pauper they act as mere agents for the town, and costs, if recovered, must be taxed against the town they represent.[36]

2. COUNSEL FEES. A reasonable counsel fee may, by the weight of authority, be allowed the successful party in removal proceedings.[37] There are other decisions, however, which hold that counsel fees are not to be allowed, and that costs must be limited to those which a party could win in any other successful litigation.[38] So it has been held that counsel fees are allowable only where the losing party prosecuted the appeal vexatiously or frivolously,[39] and whether the appeal was taken with or without reasonable cause may, in the discretion of the court, affect the liberality of the allowance.[40] Counsel fees will not be allowed where the litigation might have been avoided by the allowance of proper credits.[41]

3. MAINTENANCE PENDING REMOVAL OR ON UNLAWFUL REMOVAL. A district not liable for the support of a pauper who becomes chargeable therein may recover from the town which is liable all necessary sums expended for his support pending his removal.[42] The relieving district must, however, employ due diligence in notifying the district liable for the pauper's support and in obtaining an order for his removal thereto.[43] And if it neglect to do so it cannot claim reimbursement for maintenance afforded during the delay.[44] If the district liable refuses to accept the pauper, delay on the part of the relieving town in obtaining an order of removal will not prevent it from recovering all expenses incurred up to the time of actual removal.[45] And refusal, on the part of the district liable, to receive

Where there is no appeal and pauper is not accepted there can be no recovery for costs. Renors v. Half-Moon, 78 Pa. St. 301. the pauper after being served with an order of removal will render it liable for all expenses incurred up to the time of final acceptance.[46] The improper removal of a pauper into a town not liable for his support is actionable,[47] and the district to which the improper removal is made may recover from the removing district the necessary expenses of maintenance of the pauper incurred up to the determination of the appeal from the undue removal.[48]

P. Bringing Pauper Into State, County, or Town[49] — 1. Wrongful Removal in General. Some statutes make the removal by any person of a pauper from one town or county to another, or from without the state to a county or town within the state, with intent to make the latter chargeable with his support, actionable, and also prescribe a penalty therefor.[50]

2. Necessity of Intent and Knowledge. The penalty for bringing a pauper into a town or county, imposed by statute, cannot be recovered, unless the act appears to have been done with the intention of leaving him a charge and burden upon such town or county.[51] Nor is the removing of a pauper from one town or county to another actionable unless it is done with the intent of subjecting such town or county to the charge of supporting him.[52] Even where a person brings a pauper from any place out of the state into a town or county within it, he is neither subject to the penalty, nor to the maintenance of the pauper, without the existence of an intent to charge such town or county.[53]

3. REMEDIES — a. Penalty — (I) GROUNDS FOR IMPOSITION. The penalty given by statute for bringing a pauper into a town or county with intent to make such town or county liable for his support is incurred as well by bringing such pauper from one town or county to another town or county within the state as by bringing him from without the state.[54] In some jurisdictions it is held that no penalty can be recovered for bringing a person to his domicile and usual place of abode, or to the place of his settlement.[55] Under other statutes the penalty may be recovered by the town or county into which the pauper is brought, although the pauper had his settlement in such town or county.[56]

(II) PERSONS LIABLE. Statutes subjecting to a penalty "whoever" brings a pauper into any town, etc., are held to apply to public officers as well as to private individuals;[57] but the penalty cannot be recovered against an officer acting under an order of removal regularly made.[58] Carriers of passengers are within the letter, but not within the spirit, of the statutes, and cannot be charged, unless, in bringing paupers into a town, they act fraudulently.[59]

(III) PARTIES. When no mode of recovering the penalty is designated and no appropriation made, it accrues to the use of the state and should be prosecuted in the name of the state.[60]

b. Damages — (I) FORM OF ACTION. The removal of paupers having no settlement in the state from the town in which they reside and to which they are chargeable to another town, thereby throwing the burden of their support upon the latter town, is an actionable injury, for which the appropriate remedy is an action on the case.[61] But such an action cannot be maintained against a town for neglect or breach of its duty whereby its paupers stroll into another town in which they have no legal settlement, and there become chargeable to the latter.[62] In some jurisdictions an action for damages is expressly given by statute against the person unlawfully bringing a pauper into a town or county.[63]

(II) MEASURE OF DAMAGES. The measure of damages in such actions is the amount necessarily in good faith expended by the town or county in supporting the pauper from the time of his removal to the time of trial.[64]

4. EVIDENCE. To warrant an infliction of the statutory penalty for bringing poor persons from one town or county to another with intent to charge the latter town or county with their support, the guilt of defendant must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.[65] But a statute providing that a person so removing a pauper shall be liable to pay all damages for his support accruing to the town into which the removal is made is merely remedial, and no such strictness of proof is requisite for a recovery thereunder.[66]

IV. SUPPORT, SERVICES, AND EXPENSES.[67]

A. Compelling Support by Relatives — 1. Liability For Support — a. Nature and Extent — (I) In General. At common law the duty of a person to support even his natural relations is of imperfect obligation only, and cannot be enforced.[68] Beyond this the liability is created by statute, and is enforceable only pursuant to the statutory provisions.[69] Such statutes in nearly every jurisdiction require kindred by consanguinity in a certain degree, who are of sufficient ability, to contribute to the support of paupers.[70] The provisions of the statute are entirely prospective,[71] and become operative when the necessity of providing for a pauper by the town in default of other means arises, and is not delayed until the town has actually furnished necessaries.[72] Such a statute does not embrace an illegitimate child who has become chargeable as a pauper, but only the family relation as constituted and recognized by law.[73] Funeral expenses,[74] and necessary expenses incurred during the sickness,[75] are within a statute requiring persons to "relieve and maintain" indigent relatives.

(II) Manner of Support. When an order is made requiring a relative of a person to support him, and fixing a sum to be paid weekly, the relative may provide for the support of the pauper at such place and in such manner as he shall deem proper, provided the place and manner are approved by the overseer, and it is not until he has neglected or refused to do this that he is liable for the sum directed to be paid.[76] The right of the relative to determine the place and manner of support is unrestricted, except that they must be such as the overseers or the superintendent approve.[77]

(III) As Dependent on Ability. Persons of the requisite kinship may be charged with the support of their relatives only where they are of sufficient ability.[78] In interpreting the words "sufficient ability," as used in the statutes, each case of the kind must depend upon its own special circumstances, and to a large extent also upon the discretion of the court.[79] It is to be judged of with reference to the existing state of things, and to the present state of defendant's property and debts, his income and probable earnings, and his present reasonable expenses;[80] and liability is not to be restricted to such persons only as have a surplus income over and above their own reasonable maintenance according to

It is not necessary that a person be in a state of affluence in order to be liable for the support of a pauper relative; it is sufficient that he has the ability to labor and support him. Bernadus v. Williamson, 1 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 234.

their respective stations and needs.[81] If, in the present state of his family and means, one cannot afford the assistance without reducing his property below the amount required, with his labor, to afford a comfortable support for his family, he is not to be deemed a person of sufficient ability within the meaning of the statute.[82] Yet if the required contribution would not cause present deprivation of reasonable and comfortable support of defendant and his family, or interfere with the fulfilment of his obligations to others, the fact that such contribution might impair his capital is not of itself a sufficient reason why such contribution should not be ordered.[83]

b. Persons Liable.[84] A statute requiring kindred who are of sufficient ability to contribute to the support of paupers applies to blood relations only and not to relations by affinity.[85] In some jurisdictions grandparents, if of sufficient ability, are made liable for the support of grandchildren,[86] and, under like circumstances, grandchildren are made liable for the support of their grandparents.[87]

c. Exemption From Liability. In some jurisdictions bad conduct on the part of the pauper will exempt relatives otherwise liable from the duty to support such pauper.[88] A statute thus providing does not contemplate remote acts of indiscretion, or inability of such pauper to deal wisely in business affairs, but bad conduct involving some element of moral delinquency, occasioning his poverty.[89] The bad conduct must also have an immediate bearing upon, and be the material and proximate cause of, the poverty of such poor person.[90] to obtain an order compelling the kindred of a person who has become, or is liable to become, a public charge, to furnish the necessary support.[92] To fix liability against a delinquent relative, it is necessary that an order be made by the court directing him to discharge the duty imposed upon him and that such direction has been ignored.[93]

(II) By Requiring Bond. Unless authority therefor is expressly given by statute,[94] the court cannot require the relative who is directed to maintain the poor person to enter into bond for the performance of the order.[95] A bond executed to a poor district, conditioned to indemnify it against the maintenance of a person who has a legal settlement in such district, whether he be, or be likely to become, chargeable or not, is a legal contract,[96] and not without consideration.[97]

(III) Seizure of Property of Person Liable For Support. In one jurisdiction at least the statute provides for the issuance by magistrates, upon the application of the overseers of the poor, of a warrant for the seizure of the personal property of a person alleged to have absconded leaving a wife or children chargeable to the public, and for the sale from time to time of such property, and the application of the proceeds of such sale toward the maintenance of the wife or children of the person so absconding.[98]

b. Persons Entitled to Maintain Proceedings. In one jurisdiction at least the statute provides that the proceedings may be instituted by any person having an interest in the support of the poor person named.[99] Where the statute does not provide the manner in which the action of the court shall be invoked, it may properly be done by complaint or petition of the overseer of the poor of the district liable to support the pauper;[1] but if it acts upon a petition showing jurisdiction to make an order, its action will not be invalidated because the petition was presented by the pauper.[2] In one jurisdiction at least the statute provides that the proceedings shall be brought in the name of the city or town where the poor person has a legal settlement, by their proper officers.[3] Where the statute declares the application may be made by any person having an interest in the poor person, but is silent as to the kind or extent of the interest, the application may be made by such poor person himself.[4] A statute empowering a poor district, that performs its duty of relieving a poor person, to enforce the liability of his kindred, does not authorize a volunteer to enforce it.[5] By statute in some jurisdictions the right to institute the proceedings is given to any kindred who shall have been at any expense for the relief and support of the poor person.[6]

c. Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of summary proceedings to compel the kindred of a poor person to contribute to his support is dependent upon statute.[7]

d. Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard. The kindred against whom the order is applied for must have notice of the application and a reasonable opportunity to be heard;[8] and where the statute is silent on the subject of the manner of giving notice, it may be made by summons or rule to show cause.[9]

e. Petition or Complaint. The petition or complaint should of course aver all the essential jurisdictional facts.[10] When the act provides that a person presenting a petition must have an interest in the support of a poor person, but is silent as to the kind or extent of the interest, a petition is fatally defective which fails to aver that the person making it has any interest in the support of the deposit in any savings bank of the county. Bourgeois' Case, 7 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 260. Under an old statute in Pennsylvania relating to the seizure of property of a person absconding and leaving his wife and children likely to become a charge on the public, it was held that the share of the person so absconding, as distributee in a decedent's estate, could be attached. poor person named.[11] Unless the duty to make a demand on defendant is imposed by statute, no demand by the pauper, or any one in his behalf, need be alleged.[12] A petition alleging that defendant is of sufficient ability to relieve and maintain a poor person is sufficient; it need not set forth in detail the income and property of defendant.[13] A complaint which charges failure to support a poor person "then and there being a pauper," sufficiently avers that such person is or will be a charge on the poor district.[14] It is a sufficient allegation that the poor district has incurred expenses, where the complaint sets forth that the poor person has been supported by the complainant district since a certain day named therein.[15]

f. Order For Relief — (I) Requisites. The order or decree, to be valid, must be complete in itself and self-sustaining.[16] The order for relief must declare and adjudge the existence of the statutory grounds for its existence.[17] The order must in its provisions as to relief and maintenance strictly follow the statute which is its foundation.[18] Thus an order is fatally defective for failure to direct the manner of relief and maintenance, as required by the statute.[19] Likewise an order is invalid if, when not so authorized by the statute, it directs payment of a given sum,[20] or fixes the place or manner of support,[21] or embraces several poor persons in a joint provision.[22]

(II) Enforcement. When the statute directs that the sum ordered to be paid shall be levied by the process of the court issuing the order, and prescribes no other or further remedy for its enforcement, it cannot be enforced by attachment and commitment.[23]

(III) Appeal From. Unless expressly given by statute,[24] the right to appellate review does not exist in proceedings of this character.[25] A defendant present on the hearing of the application and consenting to the making of the order will Specifying names of kindred and apportioned sums.—An order requiring members of a poor person's family to pay a certain sum per week for his support should specify the names of each such person, and the apportioned sum each is required to pay for such purpose. O'Connor's Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 437, holding further that an order that A. & B. As to costs.— Upon a complaint to compel kindred of a poor person to contribute to his support, the superior court has a discretionary power, under Gen. St. c. 70, § 11, to award costs, and no appeal lies from its decision. South Reading v. Hutchinson, 10 Allen (Mass.) 68.

not on appeal be allowed to object that the person making the application is not the proper party.[26]

g. Costs. The right of the successful party to costs in proceedings of this character depends entirely upon the statute;[27] and unless authority therefor can be found in the statute,[28] it is erroneous for the court to award costs.[29] An action of debt lies to recover the costs awarded on granting an order against the kindred of a poor person for his support.[30]

B. Support of Pauper Slaves.[31] Prior to the abolition of slavery in the United States, the statutes in most jurisdictions made a master liable for the maintenance of decrepit slaves, or those manumitted, who thereafter became paupers.[32] His personal representatives were also liable,[33] and his heirs,[34] to the value of the real estate descended.[35] But it seems that a bona fide purchaser of such real estate without notice was not liable.[36] The town where the emancipated slave belonged, or had a settlement, was the town empowered to recover from the master, or his heirs, executors, or administrators, for expenditures incurred for the support of such slave.[37]

C. Local Authorities Liable[38] — 1. In General — a. State Paupers. In some jurisdictions the statute provides that all persons needing relief, who have no settlement in the state, shall be state paupers, and be supported by the state for a period fixed by the statute, and, after the expiration of such period, all such paupers shall be sent back to the town where they resided when they first applied for relief, and thereafter be a town charge.[39] Where the state is in charge of a quarantine, the expense of the burial of paupers who die in their charge rests upon the state.[40]

b. Liability of Counties. The obligation of a county to support the poor is statutory, and it can be held liable in no case except as prescribed by statute.[41]

41. Cooledge v. Mahaska County, 24 Iowa

It is frequently provided that all counties except those in which the poor are supported by the towns shall be liable for the relief and support of all poor and indigent persons lawfully resident therein, and for aid and assistance to transient persons, falling sick therein, and having no money or property to pay for board, nursing, and medical aid.[42] Another frequent provision is that where a poor person has not gained a settlement in any town or city in the county in which he has become poor, sick, or infirm, he shall be supported and relieved by the superintendent of the poor at the expense of the county.[43] A county cannot relieve itself from this statutory liability by refusing or neglecting to make any rules and regulations on the subject.[44] The facts that proceedings have been instituted against the relatives of a pauper, and that they have been required to contribute to his support, will not relieve the county from its primary liability to provide for the support of such person.[45]

c. Liability of Place of Residence. Under the pauper statutes generally, a town or county is liable in the first instance for the support of a pauper who resides therein,[46] although the town or county in which he has his legal settlement

Lunatic not pauper.— The county in which a lunatic not a pauper actually resides when he is sent to the asylum is primarily liable for his support, without reference to his settlement under the poor laws, and cannot look to any other county for reimbursement. Mercer County v. Warren County, 23 N. J. L. 415.

In Vermont, section 3171 of the statutes provides that if the pauper, when in need, has not resided in the town furnishing the support "for three years supporting himself and family," such town may recover the expense thereof from the town where he last resided for the space of three years supporting himself and family. Granville v. Hancock, 69 Vt. 205, 37 Atl. 294. Under the act of 1886, the town where a pauper resides and comes to want must provide for him, notwithstanding he has not resided there for three years; and such town has no remedy against the town where he last resided for three years, maintaining himself and family. One town has no right of action against another town for maintaining a pauper, unless the pauper is strictly a transient person, away from home, his abiding place, and the town where he resides. Leicester v. Brandon, 65 Vt. 544, 27 Atl. 318; Chittenden v. Stockbridge, 63 Vt. 308, 21 Atl. 1102; New Haven v. Middlebury, 63 Vt. 399, 21 Atl. 608.

In New Hampshire, under Gen. Laws, c. 83, § 15, residence within a county for not less is ultimately liable therefor.[47] And the fact that the relief is furnished by another town or county into which the pauper goes for a transient purpose only does not affect the liability of the place of his residence.[48] In several jurisdictions, however, the place of a person's residence is liable for relief furnished to him in another town or county only where such person was a pauper at the time of his departure from his place of residence.[49] Where a person has no residence in the state, it is the duty of the town where he resides to support him;[50] but where such a pauper moves to another town, the town of his prior residence is no longer liable for his support.[51]

d. Liability of Place of Settlement. In most jurisdictions the town or county of a pauper's legal settlement is liable for his support, and where relief has been given to such pauper by another town or county, or by the state, it is entitled to reimbursement by the place of his settlement.[52] But since the obligation to support the poor and indigent is purely statutory, no reimbursement from the town or county of a pauper's settlement can be had, in the absence of a provision of the statute authorizing such recovery.[53]

e. Alteration, Consolidation, Annexation, or Detachment of Territory[54] — (i) In General. By a separation of a part of its territory and inhabitants, by annexation or a new incorporation, the liability of a town to support the paupers having a legal settlement therein remains unaltered.[55] But as this separation must be made by the legislature, the act authorizing it may impose conditions or limitations to relieve the town which is to be deprived of a part of its inhabitants; and provisions of this nature are very frequently, although not always, introduced into acts incorporating a new town, composed of the fragments of one or more old towns.[56] But if no legislative provision be made, the settlement of than one year renders it liable for the support of a poor person, whether relief was furnished to him within the time of such residence or not. Merrimack County v. Grafton County, 63 N. H. 550, 4 Atl. 390.

any person in the old town is not affected by the new incorporation, unless at the time of the new incorporation he shall dwell within the limits of it, and, as a party to it, acquire a new settlement in the new town.[57] Unless it is apparent that the legislature intended to prescribe a rule for all pauper cases liable to arise between two sections of a divided town and to supersede the general law by the specific provision, cases which do not fall within the specific provision will be governed by the general law.[58]

(II) AGREEMENTS ON ALTERATION. Where a new town is formed from a part of the territory of an existing town, an agreement between them as to the future support of paupers, not inconsistent with the act of incorporation, or with the general pauper statutes, is enforceable as between the parties thereto,[59] although such agreements between towns cannot affect the settlement by their inhabitants, or the rights of third parties in relation thereto.[60] expenditures have been incurred.[62] The adjudication as to settlement, although valid until impeached, may be set aside for fraud or mistake.[63]

b. Adjudication of Poverty. In some jurisdictions, in order to charge a town or county with relief and maintenance of a poor person, he must first have been adjudged a pauper by the tribunal designated by the statute, usually the county court, or a justice of the peace.[64] There is no distinction in regard to a county's liability for funeral expenses and its liability for services rendered to the pauper in his lifetime. In both cases a previous adjudication of poverty is necessary to fix that liability.[65]

c. Removal and Order Therefor. Under the statutes of some states there can be no recovery against the town in which a pauper has a legal settlement by a town in which he is a resident for expenses incurred in his support prior to an order of removal,[66] except in the case of extreme sickness or death.[67] An exception to the rule is made in the case of transients.[68] In some jurisdictions it is provided that if the town of a pauper's settlement shall, within a designated period after notice, remove the pauper from the town giving notice, it shall be charged only at a specified rate per week, regardless of the actual expense incurred by the town giving notice. However, the actual removal is a condition precedent which must be strictly performed within the time limit.[69] The voluntary removal of the pauper,[70] or the removal of the pauper after his decease, although before burial,[71] is not sufficient to absolve the town of settlement from payment of the actual expenses incurred. Refusal of the pauper to return or to be taken back does not discharge the town of his settlement from liability.[72]

d. Notice — (i) Introduction. By common law a town or district affording relief to a pauper for whose support it was not liable must, in order to recover the expenses incurred, give to the town of his settlement or to the town liable for his support, reasonable notice of the facts and make demand before suit for the amount claimed.[73] The question of notice is, however, governed almost entirely by statutes in the several states.[74] Many statutes make the giving of notice a condition precedent to the commencement of an action for the recovery of expenses incurred in the relief of a pauper.[75]

(II) Form and Sufficiency—(A) In General. No particular form of notice is necessary,[76] it being sufficient that the notice convey the necessary information to the proper person.[77] Reasonable care and diligence must be exercised in obtaining and communicating the fact;[78] and if this is done a mere inaccuracy will not vitiate the notice.[79] A notice containing misstatement of a material fact, however, is void.[80] It has been held that notice need not be an entity, and that if all the facts necessary to constitute legal notice are severally communicated within the proper time it is sufficient.[81]

(B) Writing. It is generally prescribed by statute that the notice must be in writing.[82]

It is to be inferred from the language of the court in Newtown v. Danbury, 3 Conn. 553, and counsel state that written notice is not necessary in Connecticut. This case seems, however, to have been decided before the passage of the statute requiring written notice. It is now necessary in Connecticut as elsewhere that notice be in writing. See cases cited above in this note.

When notice need not be in writing.— Where an inhabitant of a town incurs expense for the relief of a pauper, for which the town is liable after notice and request to

(c) Name or Description of Pauper. A pauper notice should state the names of the paupers or otherwise so describe them that the authorities of the town notified may know with reasonable certainty whom to remove.[83] If this is done the notice will be sufficient.[84] So if the identity of the pauper is sufficiently established a slight error in the name does not render the notice defective.[85] And a woman is sufficiently named as the wife of a man whose name is correctly given.[86] A misnomer, however, without further means of identification will render the notice defective.[87] A defect in designating the pauper cannot be supplied by oral information.[88] Nor, upon trial, will evidence be admitted to prove that the designation could apply to only one person in the district.[89]

(d) Allegation of Settlement. A pauper notice must allege the settlement of the pauper to be in the town sought to be held liable.[90]

"Pomeroy and family (wife and two children), whose legal settlement is in your town, but now residing in this town" sufficient, although P had four children only two of whom, however, lived with him. The following have been held insufficient: "The daughter of Sally Benson." Chichester v. Pembroke, 2 N. H. 530. "The family of James Savage." Embden v. Augusta, 12 Mass. 307. "Adeline Shurtleff and three children," there being five children living with S. Carver v. Taunton, 152 Mass. 484, 25 N. E. 965. "Charles Reed, his wife and four children," there being more than four. Northfield v. Taunton, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 433. "Eliza Snell and her three children" insufficient, there being four. "Elijah Hubbard 2d, wife and children," insufficient as to children. Middletown v. Berlin, 18 Conn. 189. "Samuel Staple and family have been chargeable to Bangor for several months . . . occasioned by severe sickness of himself, wife and several children," insufficient as to children, sufficient as to S and wife. Bangor v. Deer-Isle, 1 Me. 329.

85. Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. H. 505, where a notice calling the pauper "Joan" and "Joanna" was held sufficient, her real name being "Joann," she being otherwise identified as the child of parents sufficiently described. Shelburne v. Rochester, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 470, in which "Sarah or Sally" was held sufficient, her name being "Sally."

The omission of, or the substitution of an initial for the middle name of the pauper will not vitiate the notice if the identity of the pauper is otherwise sufficiently certain. Hamden v. Bethany, 43 Conn. 212 (in which a notice calling the pauper William Hall was held sufficient, his real name being William E. Hall, his identity being further indicated by the statement that he had a broken leg; and the notice was not rendered defective by the fact that in the town named there actually lived a William Hall, whose leg, however, was not broken); Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. A notice describing the pauper as having a residence instead of a settlement in the town notified does not render the notice defective

(E) Allegation of Chargeability. The notice must contain an allegation that the pauper is chargeable to the town sending the notice.[91] Notice that a pauper has become chargeable is not notice that his wife and children have become chargeable.[92]

(F) Statement of Expenses Incurred. The notice should contain a statement of the amount expended in the relief of the pauper,[93] although by the weight of authority the account need not be itemized to show the several amounts expended.[94] If several individuals constituting one family are supported together the notice need not specify the sums expended for each individual,[95] and if a notice for the support of several paupers is bad as to some of them recovery can be had for the expense of the others.[96] If the amount claimed in the notice be too great and the mistake is made in good faith recovery may be had for what is proved to be reasonably due;[97] but if the officer giving notice knows that some of the items are much larger than the town has paid or assumed to pay nothing can be recovered on such items.[98] And if the amount in the writ be smaller than the amount claimed in the notice, recovery must be limited to the former sum.[99] Denial of liability by the town sought to be held is waiver of itemized particular notice.[1]

if it appears plainly that it is claimed that the town notified is liable, and that it is requested to remove the pauper. La Crosse v. Melrose, 22 Wis. 459.

Means of acquiring settlement.— The notice need not contain an allegation of the means by which settlement was obtained. Quincy v. Braintree, 5 Mass. 86. And if an erroneous statement be made of the manner of acquiring settlement in the town notified, the town giving notice is not estopped to prove in an action to recover expenses incurred that the settlement was acquired in a different manner, unless the statement in the notice was meant to mislead. In New Hampshire it has been held, under a statute requiring that the sums expended for the relief of a pauper shall be stated, that, where a lump sum is named as incurred for several paupers, and the notice is defective as to one or more of the paupers, recovery cannot be had, unless the particular sum expended for each of the remaining paupers is stated. Chichester v. Pembroke, 2 N. H. 530.

In Maine, however, it has been held that it is improper to instruct the jury that the notice would be bad as to all the paupers included in the notice if they could not distinguish between supplies to paupers as to whom the notice was bad and the others; if the jury could not ascertain what supplies had been furnished the latter it would be a defect of proof but would not affect the validity of the notice. (G) Request to Remove. A pauper notice must contain a request that the town notified remove the pauper to their own jurisdiction.[2]

(III) NOTICE, BY WHOM SIGNED. The pauper notice should be signed by a majority of the board of overseers of the poor, or by one of their number in their behalf.[3] And a notice signed by some other person in their behalf is not sufficient,[4] even though this is done under instructions of the overseers.[5] If there are no overseers of the poor the notice must be signed by the officers who exercise their functions. Thus a notice may be signed by a majority of the selectmen or one of them in behalf of the others,[6] or by the mayor of a city,[7] or by the auditor of a county.[8]

(IV) SERVICE OF NOTICE— (A) Upon Whom Served. Overseers of the poor are the proper officers to receive a pauper notice, and it should therefore be directed to and served upon one of them.[9] If, however, there are no overseers the notice may be served upon one of the officers who exercise their functions with respect to the poor, such as selectmen [10] or supervisors of a town,[11] or the auditor of a county.[12]

delivery thereof to the proper officer[13] by leaving it at his usual place of abode, with a person of discretion,[14] or by mail.[15] The fact of putting the notice into the mail must be proved like any other fact, and evidence may be introduced to repel proof of mailing.[16] The presumption is that a notice mailed was received in the due course of mail.[17]

(v) Time of Giving Notice. It is very generally prescribed by statute that a pauper notice must be given within three months after the expenses for which recovery is sought were incurred.[18] The notice must be given within three months after expenses were incurred, not within three months after they were paid.[19] A notice which by mistake includes some items arising before the three months, giving means of distinguishing what came before, is not invalid.[20]

(vi) Waiver—(a) Of Notice. A town liable for the support of a pauper may waive statutory notice and demand from the town incurring expenses in the relief of a pauper.[21] And if the waiver prevents the notice being given, the ordinary doctrine of estoppel applies.[22] A denial of liability by the poor officer of the town liable, and refusal to support the pauper, is an implied waiver of written particularized notice.[23] So the receipt of bills for support without objection is a waiver of a more formal notice.[24] A new notice is not a waiver of a former notice nor of any rights acquired thereunder.[25]

(B) Of Defect in Notice. A defect in a notice may be waived by the town upon which the notice is served.[26] The waiver may be implied.[27] And an answer denying liability upon some ground other than the defect in the notice waives a defect, such as misnomer or indefinite designation of a pauper,[28] calling a district a town,[29] want of particularization or itemizing of expense,[30] or the want of signature of the overseers in their official capacity;[31] but an objection that the notice is signed by a person having no authority to do so is not waived by an answer asking particulars concerning the pauper.[32] Defects in a notice are waived by the town notified acting upon the notice, paying the costs thereof, and contributing to the support of the pauper.[33]

(VII) NEW NOTICE, WHEN NECESSARY. If the town notified complies with the notice either by paying for the supplies furnished,[34] by removing the pauper,[35] or by otherwise providing for his relief,[36] a new notice is necessary to enable the relieving town to recover for supplies subsequently furnished.[37] A new notice is necessary for each new cause of action, and if the town furnishing supplies sues for them it cannot without a new notice recover for expenses incurred after the commencement of the first action.[38] And a new notice is necessary even though the former action between the same parties in respect to the same pauper is still pending at the commencement of the second suit.[39] If, however, the town receiving notice does not comply therewith no new notice for after-supplies is necessary, up to the time within which, according to the statute of limitations, action may case of Hanover v. Weare, 2 N. H. 131, holds that an agreement made by the selectmen of a town before action commenced, by which they engaged to waive the statutory notice, does not, at the trial of the action, bar the town from objecting to the want of due notice, but that an action lies upon it for damages, if made upon a sufficient consideration. In Lyman v. Littleton, 50 N. H. 42, the court in discussing this case point out that the time for notice had elapsed, when the agreement was made, and that therefore plaintiff was not induced by the agreement not to give notice, but that the agreement was a mere executory one concerning the conduct of a trial at some indefinite future date. The doctrine of estoppel was therefore not involved, and the case does not deny that doctrine as at first appears.

be brought.[40] Where supplies are furnished occasionally and not continuously a new notice is not necessary for each new lot of supplies.[41] A new notice is not a waiver of a notice previously given nor of any rights acquired thereunder.[42]

e. Answer to Notice[43] — (I) Necessity and Requisites. It is generally provided by statute that a town upon whom a pauper notice has been served must in order to contest liability serve an answer upon the notifying town within a period prescribed by the statute.[44] The answer should be in writing,[45] although this requirement may be waived by the overseers of the town giving notice.[46] The answer should be signed by one of the overseers, or selectmen, or by one of their number in behalf of a majority.[47] And an answer signed by some other person will not be sufficient.[48] If an answer neglects to deny that the settlement of the pauper is in the town notified, that town is estopped, in an action to recover the expenses, to deny that fact.[49]

(II) Effect of Failure to Serve. A town which fails to answer, within the time prescribed by statute, a pauper notice, is estopped, in an action to recover the expenses incurred for the relief of the pauper, to deny that the person named in the notice is a pauper,[50] or that his settlement is the town notified.[51] A notice not sufficiently certain and definite, however, will not, although unanswered, conclude the town notified.[52]

This is not the general rule.

That this estoppel operates only in an action to recover expenses incurred previous to giving notice and does not apply to an action for after expenses see Ellsworth v. Houlton, 48 Me. 416; Leicester v. Rehoboth, 4 Mass. 180.

Failure to answer a pauper notice concerning "S., his wife A., and their children," does not estop the town notified to deny the settlement of the woman and children unless it appears that they are in fact the wife and children of S, and evidence to negative this is admissible. Failure to answer notice given pending an action no estoppel.— A notice from one town to another claiming reimbursement for the expense of supporting the pauper, given during the pendency of an action for the recovery of that expense, or after final determination, although unanswered, operates no estoppel to deny the settlement of the pauper with the town notified. Newton v. Randolph, 16 Mass. 426.

public policy for a pauper to voluntarily indemnify the public authorities against expenses incurred on his account,[54] and while he may bind himself by special contract to do so,[55] he is nevertheless under no obligation to make reimbursement in the absence of such contract or of some special statute so providing.[56] It makes no difference that the pauper owned property at the time the relief was furnished, in the absence of fraud[57] or deception on his part as to his ability to support himself,[58] or that he subsequently became of sufficient ability to repay.[59] By the provisions of some statutes expenses incurred in support of a pauper may be recovered from him or his estate.[60] The statutes do not apply to a Reason for rule.— The provision made by law for the relief of the poor is a charitable provision (Bennington v. McGennes, 1 D. Chipm. So it has been held that under an act authorizing the directors of a county infirmary, as soon as any person is committed to such infirmary as a pauper, to take possession of any property he may own, and apply the proceeds thereof to his maintenance, the directors are not authorized to apply property acquired by a pauper after he enters the infirmary to the payment of his board for the time prior to the acquisition of such estate. No expense is shown to have been incurred for a pauper's support for which there can be a recovery, where it appears that he has purely officious payment of expenses which a town was under no legal obligation to make.[61]

E. Application For Relief. According to some decisions, where relief is furnished in good faith, no application is necessary to the validity of the act of the poor officer in furnishing it.[62] Where application is made, an application by someone in behalf of the pauper will be sufficient; it is not necessary that the pauper should make the application himself.[63] Application to the individual members of the board of supervisors satisfies a statutory provision that application shall be made to the board of supervisors.[64] Where a pauper is residing in a town other than that in which he has a settlement, application for relief should be made to the poor officers of the town in which he resides, as the duty of providing relief is imposed on them in the first instance.[65]

F. Order of Relief and Order of Approval — 1. Order of Relief — a. Necessity and Form. Except in cases of emergency, where relief may be extended without an order therefor, and recovery had, provided an order of approval be afterward obtained,[66] a previous order therefor is always indispensable to a recovery for the relief furnished to a poor person.[67] The order of relief must be direct and positive in its terms, and not in the alternative.[68] A rule adopted by the county that no medical supplies shall be furnished any pauper, except on the order of the overseers of the poor, is satisfied by a verbal order merely.[69]

b. Nature and Extent of Relief. An act providing that the justices are to give such allowance weekly, or otherwise, as the necessities of the pauper shall require, gives a reasonable discretion to such justices as to the nature and extent of relief.[70]

Order held not to charge district with costs and expenses of removal.— When the order on its face does not show, and there is no evidence in the case tending to show, that the pauper or any one in his behalf ever

c. Validity. The order, to be valid, must conform strictly to the statute on which it is founded.[71] Pure matters of form in the order of relief, however, are to be overlooked, and the order liberally treated;[72] and where no formal evidence of a given fact is required by the statute, and such evidence is to be reasonably implied from the order, it is enough.[73] But where the substance of what is required by the statute is absent, the order will of course not be upheld.[74]

d. Conclusiveness. The order is conclusive only when the statute on which it is founded has been strictly followed;[75] and if the statute has not been strictly followed in making the order, it creates no liability on the poor district in which the alleged pauper resides,[76] nor on the district to which he is subsequently removed.[77] When the statute has been strictly followed in making an order of relief, the overseers receiving it are bound to obey it; otherwise not.[78] The order is conclusive only of the fact that at the time of its use the person therein named is entitled to maintenance as a pauper, but is only prima facie evidence of the continuing necessity of relief.[79] If want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record, it can be taken advantage of at any time and in any court where the conclusiveness of the order is the subject of a judicial inquiry.[80]

e. Appeal. Unless expressly authorized by statute no appeal lies from an order of relief.[81]

2. Order of Approval. The fact that the order of approval may be obtained after relief has been extended, so as to charge the poor district,[82] does not render the need of a subsequent order any the less imperative.[83] If the statute fixes no time within which the order of approval may be obtained, it is not for the court to prescribe the limits.[84] An appeal lies from a decision giving an order of approval;[85] and it seems that an appeal will lie also from a decision refusing an order of approval.[86]

G. Furnishing Aid and Support in General — 1. Transients. By statute in one jurisdiction at least the overseers of the poor of the town in which a transient person is suddenly taken sick or lame, or otherwise disabled and confined in any house in the town and in need of relief, are bound to afford him relief.[87] Under such a statute any person, not having come to reside in the town, is regarded as transient,[88] and the overseers of the poor are bound to provide for his support, when disabled and in need of personal relief,[89] without regard to his ability to defray the expenses thereof.[90]

2. Necessity of Relief. When the act of the poor authorities of a town or county in affording relief to a pauper may affect the rights or obligations of another town or county, the law requires that a case of necessity and need should be established, before the relief is furnished, and those rights or obligations changed.[91] And the liability of the town or county sought to be charged for relief furnished to a pauper by the poor authorities of another town or county does not depend upon the opinion or adjudication of the latter that the relief is necessary, although made in good faith;[92] but upon the fact that the person provided for has fallen into distress and stands in need of immediate relief.[93] But the fact that a person is actually destitute and in need of relief authorizes and requires the proper poor authorities to provide such relief,[94] and the obligation to act in the premises is not affected by the circumstance that the person to be relieved may have property of his own, not available for his immediate relief,[95] or by the question upon whom the burden shall ultimately fall.[96]

3. Unauthorized and Voluntary Aid. There is no implied contract on the part of a town or county to pay a third person who voluntarily affords relief to a pauper;[97] and no action therefor will lie by him against the town or

90. Danville v. Sheffield, 50 Vt. 243, holding further that the question of the ability of a transient person to defray the expense of his support arises as between the town rendering the support, and the town in which such person is legally settled, after the support is furnished.

Facts taking case out of rule.— That a county has a regularly employed physician to attend its poor does not affect a physician employed by township trustees, where it is not shown that the physician employed by the county was under any obligation to attend the poor of such township. Taylor v. Woodbury County, 106 Iowa 502, 76 N. W. 824. An order of the county commissioners, under Gen. Laws, c. 25, § 6, for the removal of a county pauper to the county almshouse, which is not complied with because of the pauper's refusal to be removed, does not discharge the county from liability to the town in which the pauper resides for support afterward furnished him upon a new application, a new necessity having arisen. Winchester v. Cheshire County, 64 N. H. 100, 5 Atl. 767. The statutory liability of the county for medical services furnished to persons falling sick within the county without money or property with which to pay for such services is not affected by the fact that there is a poorhouse in the county for the care of paupers, since such persons are not paupers within the meaning of the statute. La Salle County v. Reynolds, 49 Ill. 186.

notice of such prior provision,[4] is deemed to be voluntary, and no action will lie therefor.

b. After Notice to Town to Give Relief. In some jurisdictions towns are, by statute, bound to furnish actual relief, after notice, to persons in need thereof;[5] and when the town fails to do this, any person not liable for the pauper's support may provide the necessary relief, and recover the expenses thereof against the county.[6] And such action will not be defeated by proof of knowledge by plaintiff that the town bound to support the pauper had made, at another place, suitable provision for that purpose, if the pauper, while supported by plaintiff, was too sick to bear a removal,[7] or, being a minor of tender age, was not reasonably able to reach the place provided for him;[8] nor will such action fail because the town had contracted to have the relief afforded by one who failed so to do.[9]

5. Nature and Extent of Relief. It is only for necessaries that a town or county furnishing relief to a pauper can recover from the town or county ultimately liable.[10] The situation of a pauper admits of such infinite varieties that no arbitrary rule can be laid down as to what constitutes necessaries for him;[11] but generally plaintiff must establish that the amount[12] and kind[13] of supplies, under all the circumstances, were suitable and proper. There are certain items, however, such as expense of commitment to an asylum,[14] and support there,[15] clothing destroyed by an insane pauper, without fault of asylum overseers or keeper,[16] expense of nursing a sick pauper,[17] and burial expenses of a pauper,[18] which in their nature are necessaries, and, when reasonable as to amount, a legal charge on the town or county ultimately liable; and there are other items, such as the expense of the overseers of the poor in providing for the abode and support of a pauper,[19] the services of the overseers of the poor,[20] debts of a pauper, paid at his request,[21] and the expense of redeeming a pauper's clothes,[22] which in their nature are not necessaries and therefore not a legal charge.

H. Contracts For Support[23] — 1. Requisites and Validity — a. In General. Except where a statute makes provision for such support, a town or county can be held liable to third persons for the support of its paupers only by contract.[24] Such a contract a town or county is authorized, expressly or impliedly, to make.[25] A contract between a town and an individual for the support of a pauper may be either express or implied. If relief be afforded to a pauper at the request of the overseers of the poor, the law implies a promise to pay for the same, and there is no more need of an express promise than between private persons.[26] And such request may also be implied.[27] But no promise can be implied to pay expenses which the poor officers are not authorized to incur.[28]

b. Consideration. A contract for the support of a pauper requires a valid consideration to support it the same as any other contract.[29]

2. Construction and Operation. Where a person contracts for the support of all the poor of a town or county for a stipulated period, he is liable for the support of all transient paupers chargeable to such town or county, and of all paupers having their legal settlement therein residing elsewhere, the burden of whose support is ultimately cast upon such town or county.[30] Under such a contract no liability exists on either side for the support of persons not paupers.[31] Nor can one who has bid off the keeping of a county poorhouse at a certain sum for each pauper recover for paupers supported by the county outside such poorhouse.[32] Where a contract is

Indemnity against contingent liability.—A town may indemnify itself, by proper contract, against a contingent liability of furnishing supplies to a pauper; and this, without regard to whether he is in present need or not, and whether he knows that he is receiving pauper supplies or not. made for the support of the poor of a town or county for an indefinite period, payment for such support to be made at stipulated periods, either party to the contract may rescind the same at the expiration of such stipulated period.[33] Where one contracts to support a pauper for a certain period, he is under no obligation to support him for a longer period.[34] But if he continues the support of a pauper after the expiration of the period covered by his contract, without a renewal thereof, the town is not liable on the ground of failure to remove the pauper at the end of the time limited by the contract.[35] Where a person has performed his engagement in part, and has been prevented from fulfilling it by inevitable accident, he is entitled to compensation for the part performed, on an implied promise.[36]

I. Support in Poorhouses — 1. In General. Unless the statute expressly confers on overseers of the poor the power so to do, they cannot remove and maintain a poor person, against his will, in a poorhouse outside of the poor district to which such poor person belongs.[37] It is provided by statute in some jurisdictions that the county poor shall be sent to and kept in the county poorhouse at the expense of the county;[38] and where the statute does so provide and a person is duly

Removal of pauper from town during life of contract.— Where one under contract with a town to support a pauper for a year removes the pauper during the year to another town, such removal does not terminate the contract, and the town, not having taken the pauper back, is liable for his support until the end of the year (Newton v. Waterford, 67 Vt. 372, 31 Atl. 782; Durfey v. Worcester, 63 Vt. 418, 22 Atl. 609); but the town is not liable for support furnished the pauper after the expiration of the year, since it is the plaintiff's duty to return the pauper at the end of the year (South Burlington v. Worcester, 67 Vt. 411, 31 Atl. 891; Newton v. Waterford, supra; Baldwin v. Worcester, 67 Vt. 285, 31 Atl. 413).

Pomeroy v. Wells, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 406.

Refusal of steward of poorhouse to receive pauper.— Where the provision of the statute with regard to proceedings fixing the settlement of a pauper and his commitment to the poorhouse have been substantially complied with, the refusal of the steward of the poorhouse to receive such pauper amounts to a waiver of his actual delivery to him by the overseer of the poor of the town, and the county thereby becomes charged with the expense of thereafter maintaining him. Rockaway Tp. v. Morris County, 68 N. J. L. 16, 52 Atl. 373.

Support of persons entitled to temporary relief.— 1 Rev. St. p. 405, § 24, makes it the duty of the overseers of the poor to grant temporary relief to persons not inhabitants of their township, lying sick therein or in distress without money or friends. Section 13 provides that, whenever any person entitled to temporary relief as a pauper shall be in any township in which he has not a legal settlement, the overseers of the poor thereof may grant such relief by placing him temporarily in the poorhouse of such county. It was held that persons entitled to relief, under section 24, may be properly placed in admitted into the county poorhouse and supported there, the county cannot recover the value of such support either upon an express[39] or implied[40] contract.

J. Services and Earnings of Pauper — 1. Right Thereto — a. Of Town. A town has the right to the services and earnings of a pauper to aid in his support.[43]

b. Of Persons Becoming Liable For Support by Contract With Town. Any person who may have become liable for the support of a pauper by virtue of a contract with the town is entitled to his moderate services and the benefits thereof.[44]

c. Of Pauper Himself. A person having a right to ordinary and moderate services from a pauper by virtue of a contract with the town may bind himself by special contract to pay him wages for particular services.[45] And if the keeper of a county poorhouse employs one of the paupers therein for his individual benefit, upon a promise of compensation, he is liable in an action for work and labor performed.[46] But where the value of the services performed for the town exceeds the amount expended for his relief, the pauper cannot recover the excess in an action against the town for work and labor.[47]

Services of person no longer a pauper.— Where a person who had been supported by his town as a pauper had bodily health and strength, although of small mental capacity, and was able to earn more than enough to support himself, and had found an employer, he was no longer a pauper, and consequently where the town made a contract with plaintiffs that they should take care of all the paupers belonging to the town, and be entitled to their services, it was held that they were not entitled to his services. Wilson v. Brooks, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 341.

45. Wilson v. Church, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 23, holding further that it is too late for such person after entering into a special contract with a pauper, and after the latter has complied with his engagement, to say that he had a right to all the pauper's services.

putes that may arise concerning it, and in the absence of fraud a settlement made between the overseer and the other contracting party is conclusive.[48]

K. Support in Asylums[49] — 1. Local Authorities Liable. The general policy of the statutes seems to be that the expense of supporting insane paupers committed to the state lunatic asylum shall be paid by the town in which they had their residence at the time of the commitment, if they had a settlement in the state, and such town may recover the amount so paid from the town in which they had their legal settlement,[50] or from their relations if of sufficient ability.[51] The statutes are generally held to apply to any insane pauper found in a town regardless of his fixed residence or of the length of time he has been in the town.[52] In some jurisdictions notice is not required to be given to the town to be charged before commencing an action for reimbursement.[53] In other jurisdictions such a notice is necessary.[54]

2. Validity of Commitment. The proceedings for the commitment of a pauper must show a substantial compliance with the statute, and where such commitment is irregular, the expenses of the pauper's commitment and maintenance in the asylum cannot be recovered from the place of his settlement.[55] Under some statutes a commitment by overseers of the poor without an adjudication by any court or magistrate is irregular, so that the town cannot recover the cost of the lunatic's support from the place of his settlement.[56] In other jurisdictions such a commitment is within the meaning of the statute, and a recovery is permitted.[57] to pay the county for his maintenance in a reformatory.[58] But by statute in two jurisdictions at least the town where a pauper, committed to the house of correction, has his legal settlement is made liable to the master of such house of correction for the expense of his support, allowed by the overseers of such house.[59] Under such a statute the town in which the pauper has a settlement at the time the expense of his support is incurred is liable therefor, although he gains a settlement in another town before the account of such expense is audited and certified by the overseers of the house of correction.[60] Nor is the town of a pauper's settlement relieved from liability for his support by the neglect of such overseers to perform their statutory duty of establishing rules to govern the persons committed, of providing the materials for their employment, and of keeping account thereof.[61] But the town of a pauper's settlement is not liable for his support in the house of correction, unless the account thereof be audited and certified by the overseers of such house within the time prescribed by the statute.[62] For the support of a person while confined in jail neither the town of his legal residence[63] nor the town where the jail is situated[64] is liable, independently of statute or contract. Frequently, however, the statute imposes on the town where the jail is situated the duty to support such a prisoner, when in need thereof, and gives it the right to recover therefor against the town of his legal settlement.[65] And a person confined in jail is regarded as a pauper within the meaning of a statute requiring that every town shall be liable for any expense which shall be incurred for the relief of any pauper by any inhabitant, not liable by law for his support, after notice and request made to the overseers of such town, and until provision made for him.[66] While it has been held that the invalidity of the commitment of a person to jail or workhouse is a defense to an action against the town to enforce its liability for his support while there,[67] yet the rule undoubtedly is that actual commitment to jail or workhouse, and support there, suffice to fix such liability.[68]

renders medical services to the poor of a county or town is entitled to recover therefor where such services were performed under employment by officers having requisite authority to contract, or were subsequently ratified by them.[70] If the officers are without authority, however, there can be no recovery by him for services rendered.[71] And it has been held that where the physician employed to attend the poor of the county refuses to attend a sick pauper, and the township trustee declines to employ a physician, who thereafter renders medical services to the pauper, he cannot recover therefor.[72] In some jurisdictions it is held that in the absence of a request from the poor officers for the rendition of medical services to a pauper, there can be no recovery by a physician for such services, even though an emergency existed for the rendition thereof.[73] So in one jurisdiction it is held that there is no implied promise to pay for services rendered by a physician to a poor person, even though an emergency existed, if there had been no judicial ascertainment that the person treated was a pauper;[74] and in another there can be no recovery for medical services rendered in an emergency to one not judicially ascertained to be a pauper, even though such services were requested by a member of the board of supervisors.[75] On the other hand it is held in one jurisdiction that a physician who attended an indigent sick person in an emergency, without request from the poor officers, may recover therefor provided they subsequently approve the acts.[76] So in some jurisdictions it has been held that a physician who renders services to a pauper in an emergency may recover therefor, although there was no request by the poor officers for the rendition of such services,[77] or notice given them that the persons to whom the services were rendered were in need thereof.[78] And it has been held that where a statute provides that paupers shall be maintained at the county poorhouse, or at such place as the county commissioners shall agree upon, the county cannot be held liable for the care of sick and indigent persons, unless there is a contract by the county officers, or unless the services are rendered by request and under circumstances from which a contract can be inferred.[79]

2. Against Local Authorities Liable[85] — a. Nature and Form of Remedy. An action will not lie at common law against a town, for the support of a pauper, by any other town.[86] Nor can such action be maintained on a general statutory provision declaring it to be the duty of each town to support its own paupers, where the statute points out in what cases one town shall be liable to another, and what steps must be taken to render it liable.[87] It is necessary that an action be brought on the statute making out a case within some of its provisions.[88] Where the statute provides a particular remedy such remedy is usually held to be exclusive.[89] Where two statutory remedies are not antagonistic both may exist at the same time.[90]

b. Right of Action — (I) By Town or County — (A) In General. Pauper supplies furnished by a town or county create a cause of action against the town or county of the pauper's settlement, although actual payment for them has not been made; the liability to pay for them being sufficient.[91] A town is not the less entitled to recover the amount expended because it will inure to the benefit of a contractor who by agreement furnished the supplies.[92] Nor is the right of recovery affected by the residence of the pauper during the pendency of this action.[93]

(B) To Recover Money Paid Under Mistake. An action will lie by one town to recover money voluntarily paid to another town to reimburse it for the support of a pauper under the mistaken belief that it was liable for such support.[94]

(II) By Individuals. Where so provided by statute an action may be maintained against a town or county by an individual to recover the expenses incurred by him in supporting or relieving a pauper, who was legally entitled to relief, after notice and request made to the proper poor officers, and their refusal or neglect to provide for the pauper.[95] The fact that one incurring expense for the relief of a pauper is indebted to the pauper will not preclude him from recovering from the town the full amount of expense incurred.[96]

(III) Certificate of Correctness of Charges. In some jurisdictions the statute requires as a condition precedent to the recovery of expenses incurred for pauper supplies that all such claims and bills shall be certified to be correct by the proper officers of the poor of the town or county sought to be charged.[97] This certificate of correctness is conclusive on the county. The determination of the poor officers partakes of a judicial character, and settles the relations of the parties, in the absence of fraud.[98] The board of supervisors may, however, waive such certificate, if satisfied of the truth of all the certificate would show,[99] as well where the relief furnished is on behalf of another county, as where it is furnished to one having a settlement in that county.[1]

c. Conditions Precedent.[2] The liability of towns and counties for the support of the poor is strictly statutory, and, however equitable the claim, there can be no recovery without compliance with the statutory prerequisites.[3] In an action by one county against another to enforce a liability for relief furnished by the former to a pauper chargeable to the latter, it must be shown that such person was a pauper.[4] A town suing the town of a pauper's settlement or residence for his support need not first assert its claim against the pauper's relatives.[5] Nor need an individual exhaust the pauper's estate before presenting his demand against Persons entitled to sue.— The right to institute an action for supplies furnished to poor persons in need of relief, where the overseers of the town refused or neglected to furnish the same, is usually restricted to persons who were inhabitants of the town against which the suit was brought. See the statutes of the several states, notably Maine. But when the statute substitutes the words "any person" for the word "inhabitant," one not an inhabitant of such town is entitled to sue. Underwood v. Scituate, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 214. A grandfather not of sufficient ability to support his grandchild, in whole or in part, stands in the same position as other inhabitants of the town in which he resides. Hall v. Clifton, 53 Me. 60. If of sufficient ability to contribute partial support, he can recover only that part of the support which he cannot supply. Hall v. Clifton, supra.

97. Sloan v. Webster County, 61 Iowa 738, 17 N. W. 168, holding that a certificate signed properly, and stating that the trustees "ordered the above services," is not sufficient without also certifying as to the correctness of the charges. Mansfield v. Sac County, 60 Iowa 11, 14 N. W. 73 (holding that a certificate of township trustees to a medical bill that they "recommend the payment of the above named bill for treatment of Mrs. Jeff. Johnson and family, as a pauper," does not comply with the statute); Gilman v. Portland, 51 Me. 457 (holding that the certificate, "examined and allowed" by the county commissioners, is sufficient to support the account rendered by the master of a house of correction).

Affidavit.— In proceedings by one county against another to recover for relief furnished a pauper, the objection that plaintiff has not made the affidavit required by N. H. Pub. St. c. 27, § 11, forbidding county commissioners to allow a bill for the support of a pauper unless accompanied by an affidavit, can be obviated by permitting plaintiff to supply the omission. the town or county.[6] And it is not necessary that a claim presented to one town by another for expense incurred in the support of a pauper should be itemized.[7]

d. Defenses[8] — (I) To Action by Town or County. In an action by one town against another to recover for pauper supplies, a deliberate and voluntary settlement, made without misrepresentation or concealment, is conclusive between the parties.[9] The only effect of the failure of defendant town to answer within the statutory period a notice given by plaintiff town of supplies furnished a person is to estop the former to deny the place of the pauper's settlement; it is not estopped to deny that the person to whom the supplies were furnished was in need of immediate relief.[10] Nor will support of a pauper estop a town from contesting the question of its liability for his support.[11] And a poor district is not precluded from defending a suit brought by a county to recover for the support of a pauper on the ground that he did not reside in the district.[12] In an action for pauper supplies the ability of kindred to contribute to the support of a pauper,[13] or the fact that the application to the town for aid was not under the oath of two credible persons, as provided by law,[14] or the fact that a town not chargeable with a pauper's support agreed with the town by which he had been maintained to pay for his support for a specific period,[15] or the fact that plaintiff had previously given notice to another town, and claimed the same sum as that in suit,[16] or proof that since the commencement of the suit plaintiff town had claimed and received from the county pay for the same supplies,[17] or that a marriage, upon which the question of settlement turned, was invalid,[18] or the determination of the town of the pauper's residence not to support him while in another town, uncommunicated to the latter town,[19] cannot be set up as a defense.

(II) To Action by Individuals. In an action by an individual against a town or county to recover for supplies furnished to a pauper, the fact that such person persuaded the pauper to return to defendant town in which he had a legal settlement, for the purpose of compelling such town to support him, is no defense.[20]

e. Jurisdiction. The particular court or courts in which actions to recover for the support of paupers shall or may be brought is a matter of statutory regulation.[21]

6. Christian County v. Rockwell, 25 Ill. App. 20, holding that a physician who has, in an emergency, rendered services to an eleven-year-old boy, whose mother is dead, and whose father is wholly without means, will not be compelled to exhaust the boy's estate, consisting of an interest in land worth seventy-five dollars, in order to hold the county liable for such proportion of his claim as it would ultimately be liable to pay.

In Iowa the circuit court is given exclusive jurisdiction where the county sought to be charged gives notice denying the pauper's settlement (Cerro Gordo County v. Wright County, 59 Iowa 485, 13 N. W. 645); while the district court has concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court where no such notice is given (Winneshiek County v. Allamakee County, 62 Iowa 558, 17 N. W. 753).

In Ohio, where township trustees furnish necessary temporary support to a pauper whose legal settlement is in a township in another county, an action to recover therefor may be brought in the court of common pleas of the county in which the support was

f. Time to Sue — Limitations and Laches. In some states special statutes of limitations have been enacted for actions for the recovery of expenses incurred in the relief of a pauper, against the town ultimately liable.[22] Special statutes usually provide that the action must be commenced within two years after the expenses were incurred, or after notice thereof has been given, and recovery is limited to expenses incurred within three months next before giving notice.[23] And the limitation must be computed from the delivery of notice, not from its date.[24] The limitation for actions for recovery of expenses incurred in supporting a pauper at the state institution for the insane is generally two years from the date of payment thereof to such institution, recovery being limited to expenses paid within three months next preceding the giving of notice.[25] If no special statute exists the general statute of limitations applies.[26] And the special statute may furnished, provided the amount in controversy exceeds the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace (Jerome Tp. v. Darby Tp., 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 685, 4 West. L. Month. 586), but where the directors of a poorhouse furnish temporary support to a pauper having a settlement in a township in another county, suit to recover therefor must be brought in the county where the township of settlement is situated (Perry Tp. v. Perry County Infirmary, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 382, 2 West. L. Month. 573).

In Pennsylvania the court of quarter sessions has exclusive jurisdiction in controversies between townships in pauper cases (Rouse v. McKean County Poor Dist., 169 Pa. St. 116, 32 Atl. 541; Delaware Tp. v. Greenwood Tp., 66 Pa. St. 63; Versailles v. Miffin, 10 Watts 360); while jurisdiction is given to the court of common pleas in actions by individuals to recover expenses incurred for pauper supplies (Chester County v. Malany, 64 Pa. St. 144; Redmond v. West New Castle Poor Dist., 5 Pa. Dist. 731, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 276).

22. See the statutes of the various states and cases cited in the following notes.

For an action for supplies furnished by an individual there is usually no special limitation. Warren v. Islesborough, 20 Me. 442; Watson v. Cambridge, 15 Mass. 286. See Blakeslee v. Chester County, 102 Pa. St. 274, holding that a physician who renders emergency services upon the credit of a person who several years thereafter becomes a pauper cannot recover from the directors of the poor.

A town furnishing relief is not required to wait until it has stopped before bringing action against the town ultimately liable. Worcester v. Northborough, 140 Mass. 397, 5 N. E. 270. Nor is it compelled to wait until it is determined whether the pauper acquires a settlement in plaintiff town by reimbursing the cost of such relief within five years from the time it is furnished, under St. (1879) c. 242, § 2. Dedham v. Milton, 136 Mass. 424.

23. In Massachusetts the action must be brought within two years after the expenses were incurred and recovery can be had only for such expenses as were incurred within three months before notice thereof was given. Hallowell v. Harwich, 14 Mass. 186; Harwich v. Hallowell, 14 Mass. 184; Needham v. Newton, 12 Mass. 452; Readfield v. Dresden, 12 Mass. 317.

In Maine the action must be brought within two years after the answer to the notice is served, or if no answer be returned, before the expiration of two years after two months from the service of notice. Veazie v. Howland, 53 Me. 39, in which Cutler v. Maker, 41 Me. 594, holding that the statute runs from the delivery of notice, is overruled, and Augusta v. Vienna, 21 Me. 298, holding that a notice becomes inoperative two years after it is given, is explained as having been decided on other grounds. Robbinston v. Lisbon, 40 Me. 287; Camden v. Lincolnville, 16 Me. 384. In Belmont v. Pittston, 3 Me. 453, it is held that an action brought before the expiration of two months after notice is premature. Sanford v. Lebanon, 26 Me. 461, in explaining this case, states that this is the rule only where no answer is returned, and that where an answer is returned action may be brought immediately. This is the well-settled rule in Maine.

In New York the action must be commenced within three months after answer, which must be returned within thirty days after notice. Stilwell v. Coons, 122 N. Y. 242, 25 N. E. 316 [affirming 12 N. Y. St. 745].

In Pennsylvania there is no special statute, and the courts there hold that the town affording relief must use due diligence to ascertain the settlement of the pauper and notify the town liable. Failure to do this will constitute laches and bar recovery. Lawrence Tp. v. Tioga County, 2 Pa. Dist. 786, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 305; Homer Poor Dist. v. Austin Poor Dist., 19 Pa. Co. be waived by an express promise to pay the expenses incurred, in which case the general statute will apply.[27]

g. Pleading.[28] The declaration or complaint in an action against a town or county to recover for pauper supplies or medical care should allege the settlement or residence of the pauper in defendant town or county.[29] It should likewise allege the service of notice upon defendant within the period required by the statute, usually three months.[30] It is sometimes held that the complaint should aver that the pauper was indigent and needed relief.[31] In some jurisdictions, in an action against a town or county under the Pauper Act, a declaration containing the common counts is sufficient.[32] In an action against a town or

See 38 Cent. Dig. tit. "Paupers," § 225.

Settlement of husband.— The declaration in an action to recover for pauper supplies furnished to a wife need not allege that her husband's settlement was in the defendant town, it being sufficient to allege hers to be there. Fryeburg v. Brownfield, 68 Me. 145.

For complaints sufficiently alleging settlement see Burke County Com'rs v. Buncombe County Com'rs, 101 N. C. 520, 8 S. E. 176; Pine Valley v. Unity, 40 Wis. 682.

Laws (1818), as amended by Acts (1886), No. 42, § 4, providing for the recovery of expenses incurred in the relief of a transient indigent prisoner.

For complaints sufficiently alleging that relief was needed see Autauga County v. Davis, 32 Ala. 703; Pine Valley v. Unity, 40 Wis. 682.

That the complaint should allege all facts necessary to constitute a cause of action under the statute see Wrentham v. Attleborough, 5 Mass. 430.

32. Clinton County v. Pace, 59 Ill. App. 576; Gilman v. Portland, 51 Me. 457, holding that in an action by the master of a house of correction to recover the expenses incurred for the support of a pauper therein, a declaration upon an account annexed to the writ is sufficient, and there need be no special count under the statute.

For complaints held to be sufficient see Autauga County v. Davis, 32 Ala. 703; Bremer County v. Buchanan County, 61 Iowa 624, 16 N. W. 720; Rouse v. McKean County Poor Dist., 169 Pa. That the prayer is for a mandamus instead of an order is immaterial in a petition under Act (1836), § 23, to compel payment by the poor district of money expended on one of its paupers. Rouse v. McKean County Poor Dist., 169 Pa. St. 116, 32 Atl. 541.

Complaint need not allege statute.—A complaint is not demurrable because not alleging any statute making defendant liable for the maintenance of its paupers, it being only necessary to allege facts, and not public laws. Burke County Com'rs v. Buncombe County Com'rs, 101 N. C. 520, 8 S. E. 176.

A declaration which fails to aver that there are no relatives of the pauper able to support him is bad on special demurrer, but not in arrest of judgment. Walpole v. Marlow, 2 N. H. 385.

Allegation that the order of relief and notice to depart were actually made at a meeting of the trustees is sufficient to show that relief was properly and legally furnished, although it does not appear that the order and notice were recorded. Bremer County v.

county for supplies furnished to a pauper, a plea in bar alleging the ability of such person to maintain himself is not good on a special demurrer assigning for cause that it amounted to the general issue.[33] The omission from a declaration of an allegation of notice can be taken advantage of only by demurrer.[34] The allegations and the proof must correspond, and a material variance will be fatal to the action,[35] but an immaterial variance will be disregarded.[36] When the establishment of the whole allegation is essential to the right of recovery, such allegation should be proved in toto.[37]

h. Evidence — (I) Presumptions and Burden of Proof. In an action against a town or county for the recovery of expenses incurred for the support or relief of a pauper, the burden of proof, as in other civil actions,[38] is upon the party having the affirmative of the issue, as determined by the pleadings.[39] In such actions the legal presumption will as a rule be that the officers of the poor have done their duty.[40]

(II) Admissibility. The admission of evidence in actions to recover pauper supplies is governed by the same rules that apply in civil actions generally.[41]

Buchanan County, 61 Iowa 624, 16 N. W. 720.

33. Freeport v. Edgecumbe, 1 Mass. 459. And see Warren County v. Saunders, 16 Ind. 405, where, in a suit for medical services rendered to a temporary pauper at the request of a township trustee, an answer that the board had a rule, known to plaintiff, that they would pay for only one visit to a pauper, if he were in condition to be removed to the county asylum, and that the pauper in question was in such condition, and that plaintiff was the physician of the asylum, was held to be good. Morristown v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 33, holding that an allegation in the plea in an action for support of a pauper that the pauper was unduly removed, and that defendant town was not chargeable with his support, did not present the question whether the pauper being a minor and residing with his mother was subject to removal without her.

34. Com. v. Dracut, 8 Gray (Mass.) 455.

35. Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. H. 505 (where the notice required to be given of sums expended for the maintenance of the paupers stated that supplies were furnished to "James," and the declaration was for the maintenance of "Jane," and it was held that there was a fatal variance); Howe v. Royalton, 32 Vt. 415 (holding that a declaration in assumpsit, counting upon the neglect of a town to provide for the support of a transient poor person, brought by the person supporting him against the town in which he is found, in accordance with Comp. St. p. 133, c. 18, § 16, is not supported by proof that the town, on being requested to provide for said person's support, promised to do so and failed to keep the promise).

36. Berlin v. Gorham, 34 N. H. 266, where a notice of supplies was signed by the selectmen as such without adding "overseers of the poor," no overseers having been chosen, and the declaration alleged notice signed by the selectmen and overseers there was no variance. Colebrook v. Stewartstown, 28 N. H. 75. In this case the allegation was for support of the family of A, the writ naming his wife and four children, and the evidence showing five children, and it was held there was no variance.

37. Barnstead v. Alton, 32 N. H. 245, where, in a suit for the support of a pauper, plaintiff relied on the settlement of a wife, and alleged that her husband had no settlement in the state at their intermarriage, and did not afterward acquire any, and it was held that they were bound to prove the truth of this negative allegation, as well the want of any settlement at marriage as the subsequent non-acquisition of one. See Vermilion County v. Knight, 2 Ill. 97, holding that in an action by a physician against a county for medical attendance on a person who was a pauper, at the request of the county commissioners, it need not be proved, to support the action, that the person was in fact a pauper, this fact not being essential to the right of recovery.

39. Warren County v. Osburn, 4 Ind. App. 590, 31 N. E. 541; New Bedford v. Hingham, 117 Mass. 445.

40. State Hospital v. Bellefonte Borough, 163 Pa. St. 175, 29 Atl. 901, holding that in an action by the state hospital for the insane against overseers of the poor of the borough, to recover the expenses of maintaining therein insane paupers received from defendants, plaintiff is not bound to prove that, as between defendants and the poor district, they had such paupers in charge by means of an order of relief or a subsequent order of approval, but such fact would be conclusively presumed. And see Evidence, 16 Cyc. 1076.

That such presumption may not be indulged in, as to a vital jurisdictional fact, in favor of the officer or the principal he represents see Albany v. McNamara, 117 N. Y. 168, 22 N. E. 931, 6 L. R. A. 212 [reversing 49 Hun 356, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 127].

41. Connecticut.— Litchfield v. Farmington, 7 Conn. 100, where plaintiff town, in an action for the support of a pauper, offered a witness to testify that on a certain day he deposited a letter in the post-office,

(III) Weight and Sufficiency. The rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally apply in actions in which it is sought to recover for supplies or relief furnished a pauper; [42] and, as in other directed to the selectmen of the town, informing them of the situation of the pauper, and it was held that defendant might introduce its selectmen to prove that no such letter was received by them during that year.

Indiana.— Orange County v. Ritter, 90 Ind. 362, holding that it is not error to admit in evidence a conversation between one of the claimants for medical services and the members of the county board, while in session on the presentation of such claim, where its tendency was to show that the county at the time recognized its liability to claimants for their services to paupers, nor is it error to exclude evidence to show that during the time claimants' services were rendered the county had contracted with another physician for regular medical care of the poor.

Maine.— Lisbon v. Winthrop, 93 Me. 541, 45 Atl. 528 (holding that where, in an action for pauper supplies furnished a pauper and his family, an amendment is filed to the writ, adding a new count for the same supplies furnished the pauper alone, it is not error to admit evidence of the whole amount of supplies furnished the family); New Portland v. Kingfield, 55 Me. 172 (holding that testimony as to the manner of the alleged pauper showing his distress and need of relief, and as to his physical condition, was admissible in an action by one town against another for supplies furnished, also parol evidence that certain named persons were overseers of the poor when the relief was furnished); Cornville v. Brighton, 39 Me. 333 (holding that upon an issue as to a question of settlement the pauper's declarations are admissible as to his purpose in taking a journey to the town of his former settlement).

Minnesota.—Albion v. Maple Lake, 71 Minn. 503, 74 N. W. 282, holding that where a general law recognizes and amends special laws relating to counties having the town system of caring for its poor, such special laws are admissible in evidence to show that a certain county was under the town system of caring for its poor.

New Hampshire.— Hempstead v. Plaistow, 49 N. H. 84, holding that the acts of a town, after service on another town of a notice of supplies furnished to a pauper, which purports to be signed by its officers, may be shown on the issue whether it ratified the notice.

Vermont.— Tufts v. Chester, 62 Vt. 353, 19 Atl. 988 (where a verdict for plaintiff was held to be supported by evidence, and that the testimony objected to was competent); Pawlet v. Sandgate, 19 Vt. 621 (holding that under Rev. St. c. 16, § 6, which provides that the town procuring the order for the removal of a sick pauper must support him until he can be removed, parol testimony is admissible to prove that the pauper was sick at the time the order of removal was made, and continued so, so that he could not be removed without endangering his life, until the time of actual removal).

See 38 Cent. Dig. tit. "Paupers," § 229.

For cases where evidence was held to be inadmissible see South Scituate v. Stoughton, 145 Mass. 535, 14 N. E. 744 (an action for a pauper's support in which evidence that the overseers of defendant town had upon notice from another town removed and supported the pauper and paid the other town its expenses incurred was declared incompetent); Topsham v. Harpswell, 1 Mass. 518; Freeport v. Edgecumbe, 1 Mass. 459 (in these cases it was held that where a request to remove the pauper had not been objected to within two months, evidence by defendant of the pauper's ability to support himself was inadmissible in an action to recover for his expense of support and burial, as was also evidence contesting the settlement of the pauper); Eckman v. Brady Tp., 81 Mich. 70, 45 N. W. 502 (holding that, although certain evidence was admissible, it was not reversible error to exclude it); Albion v. Maple Lake, 71 Minn. 503, 74 N. W. 282 (holding that in an action against a village corporation to enforce its liability for refusal to care for its poor under the town system, evidence of general reputation as to the pauper's place of residence is inadmissible; it was competent, however, for the pauper to testify directly as to the place he intended as his home or residence); South Burlington v. Worcester, 67 Vt. 411, 31 Atl. 891; Tufts v. Chester, 62 Vt. 353, 19 Atl. 988.

Res gestæ.— In an action for the value of supplies furnished a pauper, his declarations explaining any acts of his tending to establish the issue, made at the time of the performance of the acts, are admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ. Cornville v. Brighton, 39 Me. 333.

42. Illinois.— Macon County v. Newell, 81 Ill. 387, holding that in a suit against a county for goods delivered to different parties upon the order of a supervisor, the verdict disallowing a large portion of the claim would not be disturbed, where there was evidence that in some instances they were properly furnished to the parties on order, under the law in regard to paupers, and in others there was no evidence whether the parties supplied were or were not paupers.

Pennsylvania.— Salsbury v. Philadelphia, 44 Pa. St. 303, where no express contract to board minor pauper grandchildren was proved, nor any evidence thereof, except a book, in which plaintiff had made charges against the city and credited the amounts received from the guardians of the poor, it was held that the instruction of the court on the trial that there was no evidence upon which he could recover was proper.

ordinary civil actions, a fact is sufficiently proved by a preponderance of evidence.[43]

i. Amount of Recovery. In an action by one town or county against another for pauper supplies, they may recover for all such charges and expenses as they have paid and such as they are legally bound to pay at the time of the commencement of the suit, unless barred by the statute of limitations;[44] but they cannot recover an exorbitant sum paid for the support of paupers, although incurred in good faith, where no opportunity was given to the town of settlement to save such expenses by removing the pauper, or otherwise providing for his support.[45] However, if the notice required to be given for sums expended for the maintenance of paupers be of a larger sum than that declared for, no more than the sum declared for can be recovered.[46] Where no amount has been fixed or agreed upon as compensation for services or supplies furnished by an individual to a pauper, such person is entitled to recover a reasonable compensation therefor from the town or county chargeable.[47] The amount of recovery may include costs and counsel fees.[48] In the case of a pauper wrongfully brought into the state, county, or town, a statutory penalty may sometimes be recovered.[49]

j. Trial — Questions of Law and Fact. In actions for the recovery of expenses incurred in the support, relief, or medical care of a pauper the rules governing the trial of civil actions generally apply,[50] including the rules governing ques-

Verdict set aside.— Where, in a suit to recover for supplies furnished to persons alleged to be paupers, it was shown that the persons relieved were in need of immediate relief, and that the supplies were necessary, although rendered necessary by the misconduct of the husband and father, a verdict for defendants will be set aside and a new trial granted. In this case it was further said that "the ordinance provided that the property-owners might select the material to be used from asphalt, vitrified brick or macadam. It is claimed that the ordinance is void because the board of public works did not designate two kinds of macadam, for the property-owners to select from. It is likewise true that the board did not specify two kinds of asphalt or two kinds of brick. The ordinance did specify the kind of asphalt, the kind of brick and the kind of macadam, which should be used, and gave the property-owners the right to make a selection therefrom. Asphalt, brick and macadam are all materials used for making streets. There are many kinds or manufactures of each kind of material. The requirements of the city charter are fully met when the board designates at least two kinds of material, each material to be of a kind, quality or make determined upon by the board. The charter never contemplated that the ordinance should give the property-owner a selection between two or more kinds, qualities or makes of each material specified."

Such a road is artificial, improved, it may be, but not paved in the technical or natural sense of the word." I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Pawn. The word "pawn" or "pledge" is used both as a noun and as a verb. As a verb it means to deliver personal property to another as security for the return on a day certain of money lent.[1] In its substantive sense it may be defined to be a deposit with another of personal property as security for some debt or engagement, with an implied power of sale on default.[2]

B. Pawnbroker. A pawnbroker is a person who makes it his business or occupation to loan money at interest, the repayment of the loan and the payment of the interest being secured by a pledge or pawn of personal property.[3]

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

A. Rights of Pawnee — 1. Rate of Interest. The maximum rate of interest for the use of money lent which a pawnbroker has the right to charge is usually fixed by statute;[10] and the pawnbroker cannot acquire the right to charge interest in excess of the maximum rate charged by statute by treating a loan for a longer period as a monthly contract.[11]

2. Retention of Pledge or Pawn — a. As Against Pawner. By force of statute the pawnee may, as against the pawner, lose his right, by exacting unlawful interest, to hold the pledge as security for the debt.[12] But it is held that the right to hold the pledge is not affected by the exaction of unlawful interest for an extension of time for the payment of the loan,[13] or by an exaction of such interest by an employee of the pawnbroker, without the latter's knowledge.[14]

b. As Against Pawner's Assignee in Bankruptcy. Where the statute makes compliance by the pawnee with certain regulations a condition precedent to the validity of the pawn, a pawnee not complying with the specified regulations cannot, as against the assignee of the pawner who subsequently becomes a bankrupt, retain possession of the pledge or pawn.[15]

c. As Against True Owner. The pawnee has no right to retain possession, as against the true owner, of an article pawned without the latter's consent or authority,[16] even where the pawner is in possession for a specific purpose, such as to sell the article on commission,[17] or to sell it to a particular person.[18] But the rule is after a given hour of the day (Butte v. Paltrovich, 30 Mont. 18, 75 Pac. 521, 104 Am. St. Rep. 698), or require them to keep a record of the transactions and to furnish a statement thereof to the police department (Launder v. Chicago, 111 Ill. 291, 53 Am. App. 203).

See also, generally, Interest, 22 Cyc. 1459; Usury.

Charge for memorandum furnished to pawner.— Under the Pennsylvania statute, while no more than a given rate of interest can be exacted, a pawnbroker may make a charge for the memorandum or certificate furnished to the borrower, stating the amount of money lent, the nature of the article pawned, and other particulars. otherwise where an article is pawned by one to whom the true owner has intrusted it with a general power to sell.[19]

d. As Against Landlord Distraining For Rent. A pawnbroker with whom goods have been deposited in the way of his trade is entitled to retain possession as against a landlord attempting to distrain them for rent.[20]

e. As Against Judgment Creditor — (I) Of Pawner. The pawnee has the right to retain possession of the pawn as against a judgment creditor of the pawner until the amount of his lien is paid.[21]

(II) Of Pawnee. As against his own execution creditor, however, the pawnee is not entitled to retain possession of the pledge, whether or not the period for redemption has expired.[22]

3. Use of Pledge or Pawn. Where the article pawned may be the worse for use, the pawnee cannot use it while in pawn, but the rule is otherwise if the nature of the article is such that it will not be injured by use.[23]

4. Sale of Pledge or Pawn — a. In General. A contract of pawn implies a right in the pawnee, upon default of the pawner, to sell the pledge for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the debt secured thereby.[24]

b. When Right Accrues. The pawnee, however, has no right to use or dispose of the pledge to satisfy the debt until the time fixed by the contract of pawn for redeeming has expired.[25]

c. Manner of — (I) In General. The right of the pawnee to sell the pledge to satisfy the debt must, in the absence of a statute,[26] or an agreement[27] prescribing the manner of sale, be exercised by a public sale after due notice of the pawnee's intention to sell and of the time and place of sale.[28]

(II) Special Agreement Controlling. A special agreement between the parties to a contract of pawn controlling the manner of selling the pledge, after default on the part of the pawner, is valid, and a sale made in pursuance of such agreement does not constitute wrongful conversion of the pledge.[29]

d. Surplus Arising on Sale. Where the statute so provides, the surplus arising on the sale of a pawn shall be paid over to the person entitled to redeem.[30] Under such a statute a particular pawn stands as security only for the amount advanced in that transaction and interest thereon, and the pawnee has no right to apply a surplus arising on the sale of the pawn in payment of any deficiency arising on the sale of an article pawned by him at different time by the same person.[31]

S. 552, holding that each act of pawn must be regarded as a complete and independent transaction, and that the overplus belongs to the pawner upon and in respect of each separate pledge, without any deduction in respect of deficiency upon the sale of an article pawned at a different time; and that the effect of a contrary construction where several articles were pawned by the same person at different times would be to defeat the right of an assignee coming into possession of the pawn-ticket by delivery.

31. See cases cited supra, note 30.

5. After Loss of Pledge or Pawn. The pawnee loses his right to recover the debt for which a pawn lost by him stood as security, unless he can show that the loss of the pawn was in no wise attributable to any want of necessary care on his part.[32]

6. Assignment of Debt Secured by Pawn. The assignment by the pawnee of the debt secured by the pawn, unaccompanied with delivery of the pawn or pledge, either actual or constructive, will not carry with it, and vest in the assignee the lien upon the property.[33]

B. Rights of Pawner — 1. Redemption of Pledge or Pawn — a. Who May Redeem. The owner of the pawn-ticket, whether he is the pawner,[34] or an assignee or a purchaser of the same,[35] is entitled to redeem within the legal period of redemption.

b. Period For. The period of redemption may be fixed by statute,[36] express agreement,[37] or custom.[38] And even though the statute provides that a pawn not redeemed within a given time is deemed to be forfeited and may be sold by the pawnee, yet the pawner, even after the expiration of that time, is entitled to redeem if the pawnee has not exercised his right of sale.[39]

c. Tender of Money Lent — (I) Amount. A pawner who agrees to pay interest on a loan in excess of the legal rate is, if he tenders principal and lawful interest, entitled to the possession of the pledge, although the statute fixing the rate of interest provides only a penalty for charging more than lawful interest.[40] So too where the pawner agrees to pay a given sum as a bonus for the use of the money loaned, a tender of the principal sum with the amount of the bonus, without interest, is a sufficient tender to redeem.[41]

(II) When Not Necessary. Where the statute expressly invalidates the lien upon the pledge if the pawnee charges usurious interest, the pawner is entitled to redeem the property without tendering the amount of the debt.[42]

d. Effect of Death of Pawnee. If the pawnee dies the pawn does not become absolute and irredeemable by the pawner merely because the goods were pawned generally, without any specified day for redemption.[43]

2. Sale of Interest in Pledge or Pawn. Subject to the claim of the pawnee the pawner has the same right over the article pawned as he had after the pawn was made, and may sell and transfer his interest therein.[44]

C. Liabilities of Pawnee — 1. To Pawnee For Loss of Pawn — a. In General. All that is required by the common law on the part of a pawnee in the protection of property intrusted to him is ordinary care and diligence,[45] and consequently, unless a failure to exercise such care and diligence is shown,[46] a pawnee is not answerable for the loss of the article pawned.[47]

b. After Timely Tender of Money Lent. However, the pawnee is liable at all events for any loss or damage which happens after the amount of the debt has been tendered to him, and he should have returned the pawn in pledge.[48]

c. While Using Pledge. So too if the thing pawned is being used by the pawnee and while so being used by him is lost and damaged, he is liable to the pawner therefor.[49]

2. To Third Party For Defect in Title to Forfeited Pawn. The rule in England is that a pawnbroker who sells to a third party a chattel as a forfeited pledge merely undertakes that the subject of the sale is a pledge and redeemable, and that he is not cognizant of any defect of title to it.[50]

D. Liability of Pawner For Deficiency After Sale. The common-law rule is that the pawner is liable, under a contract of pawn, to the pawnee for any deficiency arising on the sale of the article pawned.[51] But the rule is otherwise where the statute controlling pawnbrokers provides that the person producing the pawn-ticket is, as against the pawnee, entitled to possession of the pawn,[52] or provides that the surplus arising from the sale of the pawn belongs to the person entitled to redeem.[53]

IV. ACTIONS.

A. By Pawner Against Pawnee. In actions for conversion of the pledge or pawn, instituted by the pawner against the pawnee, the rules of evidence are the same as those applicable to civil actions generally.[54] The course and conduct Pledge delivered to third party.—A pawnee is not liable to the pawner for the value of a pledge delivered to a third person who produced and surrendered up the pawn-ticket, where it appears that the pawner was in the habit of sending to pawn and receiving therefrom articles by the hand of third persons. of the trial in actions for conversion [55] or in replevin,[56] instituted by the pawner against the pawnee, are governed by the same rules applicable to civil actions generally.

B. By Pawnee Against Third Person. A pawnee may maintain an action against a landlord to recover the value of goods deposited with him in the way of trade and which have been distrained for rent.[57]

V. PENALTIES FOR VIOLATION OF REGULATIONS.[58]

A. Who Liable. Under a statute defining a pawnbroker to be one who engages in the business of receiving property in pledge for money advanced to the pawner, a person is not liable to the penalty denounced by the statute unless he is engaged as his regular business or occupation in loaning money at interest and receiving personal property in pawn as security therefor.[59]

B. When Liable. To render a pawnbroker amenable to the penalty provided by statute for taking or receiving, directly or indirectly, unlawful interest, the excessive interest must have been actually received by him.[60]

C. At Whose Instance. Under a statute providing for a penalty where a pawnbroker does not conduct his business in accordance with its provisions and giving a moiety of the penalty to the party informing, a common informer, although not the party aggrieved, may lay the information.[61]

VI. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.[62]

A. Against Pawnee. A complaint in a criminal prosecution for carrying on the business of a pawnbroker without a license is sufficient if it charges the offense in the words of the statute.[63] The rules of evidence prevailing generally in criminal prosecutions are applicable to prosecutions for the violation of the statute regulating pawnbrokers.[64]

55. See, generally, TRIAL; TROVER AND CONVERSION.

Instructions.— The question as to the legal effect of a special agreement between the pawner and pawnee purporting to deprive the former of all equity in the surplus proceeds of a sale of the article pawned is impertinent to the issues, and a charge thereon is properly refused. Under a statute making it an indictable offense to obtain money by making false representations as to an article offered for pawn, one is subject to indictment under the statute who misrepresents the species of the article;[65] but the rule is otherwise if the misrepresentation extends only to the quality of the article.[66]

PAY. As a noun,[1] a fixed and direct amount given by law to persons in consideration of and as compensation for their personal services.[2] As a verb,[3] to discharge a debt, to deliver a creditor the value of the debt, either in money or in goods, to his acceptance or satisfaction, by which the obligation of the debt is discharged;[4] to discharge a duty created by a promise, or by custom, or by the moral law; to fulfil, to perform what is promised;[5] to discharge an obligation[6] by a performance according to its terms or requirements,[7] whether the obligation be for money, merchandise, or service;[8] to discharge one's obligation to another;[9] to render that which is due;[10] to satisfy;[11] to make new return to; to compensate;

broker and failed to comply with the statute by filing with the county clerk a copy of the advertisement of sale, or a report thereof, is competent. Heitzelman v. State, supra. The reasonableness and legality of an ordinance do not depend upon information of witnesses as to the probable effect it may have on a party's business; and hence in the prosecution of a pawnbroker for not giving information of his business transactions to the chief of police, as required by an ordinance, testimony of a witness as to the probable injurious effect such disclosure would have on the pawnbroker's business is properly excluded. Launder v. Chicago, 111 Ill. 291, 53 Am. Rep. 625.

Weight and sufficiency.— Where it appears in a prosecution for doing business as a pawnbroker without a license, in violation of a city ordinance, that defendant frequently loaned money to divers persons on personal effects and accorded to such persons the right to redeem them on repayment of the loan with interest and that defendant admitted the transactions, the evidence justifies a conviction. As compensation for services.—As used in a promise by a contractor that he would see that the men at work for a subcontractor should have their pay in the spring, "pay" means not only that which was subsequently earned, but all that would be due them whenever earned. In its ordinary usage the term includes satisfaction, discharge, compensation. Marriner v. John L. Roper Co., 112 N. C. 164, 166, 16 S. E. 906.

I. DEFINITION.

Payment is the delivery of money or its equivalent by one person from whom it is due to another person to whom it is due.[1] In its most general acceptation, however, it means the fulfilment of a promise, the performance of an agreement, the accomplishment of every obligation, whether it consists in giving or doing.[2]

Statutory definition is: "The performance of an obligation for the delivery of money only." Borland v. Nevada Bank, 99 Cal. 89, 94, 33 Pac. 737, 37 Am. St. Rep. 32; Green v. Hughitt School Tp., 5 S. D. 452, 460, 59 N. W. 224. And see the statutes of the several states.

Affirmative act of debtor.— In order to constitute a payment in its broadest sense, the debtor must have given something either in money, property, or right or performed some service. White v. Black, 115 Mo. App. 28, 90 S. W. 1153.

"Payment" in an affidavit of defense see Ridings v. McMenamin, Pennew. (Del.) 15, 39 Atl. 463.

Distinguished from set-off.— A set-off or cross demand, no matter how clearly proved, does not constitute a payment. McCurdy v. Middleton, 82 Ala. 131, 2 So. 721; Wharton v. King, 69 Ala. 365; Hill v. Austin, 19 Ark. 230; Meyer v. Johnson, 122 Ill. The distinction between payment and set-off is that a payment is by consent of the parties, express or implied, appropriated to the discharge of the debt, whereas a set-off is an independent demand, calling for its own action, which the parties have not applied on the debt. St. Louis, etc., Packet Co. v. McPeters, 124 Ala. 451, 27 So. 518; McDowell v. Tate, 12 N. C. 249; Kennedy v. Davisson, 46 W. Va. 433, 33 S. E. 291. Payment, while a defense, is not a set-off which may be used or omitted at the pleasure of defendant. Broughton v. McIntosh, 1 Ala. 103.

Distinguished from other transactions see ACCORD AND SATISFACTION, 1 Cyc. 307 note 1; COMPOSITIONS WITH CREDITORS, 8 Cyc. 412; COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT, 8 Cyc. 501; TENDER.

The essential difference between paying a debt and buying it consists, not in what is done, nor even in the manner of doing it, but in the intention with which the payment is made and accepted. The consideration, the party to whom, and the party from whom it moves may be the same, whether the object is to extinguish, or to buy and keep alive. But it is not the less true that a payment made by a stranger to the obligation of a debt, or even by one whose liability is like that of a surety, merely secondary, is prima facie a purchase, without evidence that the party by whom it was made meant to put an end to the debt, and not to acquire dominion over it as an assignee and purchaser. Lithcap v. Wilt, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 64.

Double meaning.— "Payment" as well as "discharge" is used in two senses: (1) Performance of a contract to pay money according to its stipulations; (2) extinguishment of a cause of action arising from breach of the contract. "Payment" as generally used in the books has the latter meaning, and "the defense of payment" is usually of the same

As used in its strict legal sense, there must be (1) a delivery,[3] (2) by the debtor or his representative,[4] (3) to the creditor or his representative,[5] (4) of money or something accepted by the creditor as the equivalent thereof,[6] (5) with the intention on the part of the debtor to pay the debt in whole or in part,[7] and (6) accepted as payment by the creditor.[8]

Money of debtor in hands of creditor.— The fact that the creditor receives money of the debtor as his agent or otherwise does not constitute payment unless the debtor consents to the application of the money. II. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

A. What Law Governs. The mode and amount of payment is governed by the laws of the state or country in which the payment, by the terms of the contract, is to be made.[9] But where no place for payment is mentioned in the contract, the place where the contract is made governs the medium of payment.[10]

B. Who May Make.[11] Payment may be made by the primary debtor or by any other person from whom the creditor has the right to demand it.[12] Thus a debt may be discharged by a payment made by the debtor's authorized agent or attorney,[13] and any one of several joint obligors may pay the debt for which they are jointly liable.[14] A stranger, however, who is under no obligation to pay the debt of another cannot, according to the weight of authority, without the debtor's request or ratification, pay such debt and charge the debtor therewith;[15] but in 81 (holding that the failure of a creditor's agent, who had been employed by the debtor to make collections to discharge the debt, before a distinct act of appropriation, cast the loss upon the debtor); Randall v. Pettes, 12 Fla. 517 (deposit in creditor bank by debtor of proceeds of sale to be applied to notes held by the creditor, where creditor not directed to make application of the deposit on the notes); Bronson v. Rugg, 39 Vt. 241; Boardman v. Blizzard, 36 Fed. 26 (holding that where the agent of the creditor, with power to collect the interest and principal of a mortgage debt against the debtor, procured a loan at the instance of the debtor to be used in paying the mortgage, but himself embezzled the money, its receipt by the agent was not a payment, especially where the debtor did not know when the agent received the money and never expressly directed him to apply it to the mortgage). But see Grandy v. Abbott, 92 N. C. 33, holding that if the debtor places claims due him in the hands of his creditor, agreeing that collections shall go to the discharge of the debt, money colected is deemed applied eo instanti. A direction by the debtor to one who is the agent both of the debtor and of the creditor, to apply money in the agent's hands to the payment of the debt, does not of itself constitute an application of the money. Moore v. Norman, 52 Minn. 83, 53 N. W. 809, 38 Am. St. Rep. 526, 18 L. R. A. 359. But see O'Conner v. Bernard, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 572.

Payment, like a sale, can result only from the mutual agreement of the parties that the transaction shall have that effect, and without such consent the transaction cannot be treated by the court as a payment. Borland v. Nevada Bank, 99 Cal. 89, 33 Pac. 737, 37 Am. St. Rep. 32.

The acceptance of any valuable thing in discharge of the debt amounts to payment, but it is the distinct agreement of the creditor to accept the thing in discharge of the debt that gives it the character of payment. Without this the transaction is regarded either as furnishing matter of set-off or as security collateral to the original debt, according as the subject received is in possession or in action. Borland v. Nevada Bank, 99 Cal. 89, 33 Pac. 737, 37 Am. St. Rep. 32; Covely v. Fox, 11 Pa. St. 171.

The delivery of money which the debtor has stolen from the creditor, although accepted by the creditor in discharge of the debt, where he had no knowledge of the theft, does not constitute a payment. State Bank v. Welles, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 394.

some cases the creditor must receive a payment tendered by a third person,[16] and where the creditor accepts payment from a stranger to the contract, such payment operates as an extinguishment of the debt so far as the creditor is concerned.[17]

C. To Whom Payment May Be Made — 1. In General.[18] Payment of a debt to a third person not authorized to receive it is not a defense to an action for the debt;[19] but it is otherwise where the third person is expressly or impliedly authorized by the creditor to receive payment,[20] as where the payment is made to the third person by the request[21] or with the consent[22] of the creditor, or where the original agreement is to pay the third person.[23] Payment to one of the joint

Effect of payment so far as debtor is concerned.— If the debtor ratifies the payment by a third person, made without the request of the debtor, the debt is discharged and he becomes liable to the third person for money paid to his use. If he refuses to ratify it, he disclaims the payment and the debt stands unpaid as to him (the debtor). In the one case the stranger would, at law, sue the debtor for money paid to his use; in the other, enforce the debt in the creditor's name for his use. If his payment is not ratified he may go into equity, praying that if the debtor ratify it he may be decreed to repay him, or if he does not ratify the payment, that the debt be treated as unpaid as between him and the debtor, and that it be enforced in his favor, as an equitable assignee. obligees to a contract is sufficient,[24] but payment to a third person has been held insufficient without authority from both of the joint obligees.[25] So payment to one of two trustees, of a debt owing to the estate, is sufficient.[26] Payment to the person with whom or in whose name the contract was made is ordinarily sufficient,[27] as is payment to an assignee of the creditor,[28] or to an assignee of the claim,[29] or to the personal representatives of an infant.[30] But payment to an administrator is insufficient where an order of court required payment to the heirs.[31] Where a receipt is conditioned that the cost incurred in the collection of the debt shall be paid, the condition is complied with where paid to the officer serving the writ.[32] Payment to the holder of an overdue, numbered coupon after notice that it had been stolen, where made without inquiry, is insufficient.[33]

2. Person to Whom Creditor Is Indebted. Except where authorized by statute,[34] a payment by a debtor of a debt which his creditor owes is not a payment to the creditor unless made with his consent,[35] or pursuant to an agreement between all the parties,[36] or unless the creditor has ratified the payment.[37]

3. Deposit in Bank or With Third Person. Merely depositing money due a creditor in a bank or with a third person for the creditor does not ordinarily constitute a payment before the creditor receives notice of the deposit,[38] nor where the one with whom it is deposited otherwise appropriates it as he has a right to do,[39] nor where there is no agreement pursuant to which the deposit is made and the creditor takes no steps to appropriate it.[40] A deposit in a bank to the account of the creditor is not a payment unless the creditor consents to the deposit[41] as a payment.[42]

time agreed upon,[44] yet mere default in the payment of money at a stipulated time generally admits of compensation, and hence the time of payment is seldom treated as of the essence of the contract,[45] although it may be.[46] Where no time is fixed for payment the debt is payable immediately or upon demand.[47] If a promissory note is given, the debt is not due until the maturity of the note.[48] Where the debt is payable upon a day specified, if demanded, the debtor has a reasonable time to pay after demand.[49] Where it is agreed that payment may be made by depositing the amount of the debt in a bank, a deposit before the debt is due is sufficient.[50] If the debtor has been led to suppose by the creditor that a certain medium would be received as payment, he is entitled to time to convert such money after rejection into the kind of coin called for by the contract.[51]

within the state when the payment is due.[57] But it has been held that, where payment is to be made in specific articles rather than money and no place is fixed, the usual residence of the debtor is the place for performance.[58] Where the debt is payable at one certain place or another, payment must be wholly made in one place or the other, and cannot be discharged by the payment of a part at each place.[59] A refusal to receive payment offered at a place other than the stipulated place of payment, except upon certain conditions, is an implied waiver of the right to have the payment made in the place agreed upon.[60]

(2) REMITTANCE BY MAIL. A remittance by mail may constitute payment if expressly or impliedly authorized by the creditor or such payment is according to the usual course of dealing between the parties,[61] or if the usage and dealings with the creditor give reasonable grounds to believe that the creditor expected the remittance to be made by mail,[62] although the creditor never receives it; but authority to remit by mail under specified precautionary observances does not protect a remittance by mail when such precautions are not observed,[63] and a mere general direction by a creditor to his debtor to remit money to him does not authorize a remittance by mail at the risk of the creditor,[64] unless that is the usual course of business and known by the creditor to be so.[65] A direction as to a single remittance does not apply to future remittances.[66]

ment therefor, to accept partial payments.[68] But a right reserved to pay all or any part of the debt in certain funds during the current year does not restrict the privilege of payment to a single occasion.[69] A part payment operates as such, although returned after acceptance.[70] A creditor cannot deny that he received a mortgage in part payment where he has exercised acts of ownership over it.[71]

G. Conditional Payment. If a payment is made upon any condition, such condition must be accepted before it operates to discharge the debt.[72] So if the condition upon which a receipt is given is not fulfilled the transaction does not operate as a payment.[73] And a payment upon condition is no defense to an action to recover the debt where the condition has not been fulfilled.[74] If money is advanced to the debtor by a third person to pay the debt, on the debtor's note on which the creditor is a surety, the payment is a conditional one, so that if the creditor is compelled to pay the note the debt is not discharged.[75]

H. Estoppel to Assert Illegality of Payment. The creditor may be estopped by his acts to assert the illegality of a payment in order to enforce a second payment.[76]

I. Fund From Which Payment to Be Made. The intention of the parties governs the question as to the fund out of which the payment is to be made where there are several funds applicable thereto.[77] Where payment is to be made by representatives of the debtor, at the direction of the debtor, out of funds in their hands, it will be considered as paid out of a fund over which the debtor had control rather than from a fund as to which he had relinquished all control to such representatives.[78]

J. Date as of Which Credit to Be Given. Where a payment is shown to have been made in a certain year, but the day and month cannot be shown, credit will be directed to be given as of the last day of the year.[79] And where, although a partial payment was refused, the creditor consented to receive the sum offered to be applied in payment when the residue should be paid, and, on receiving such sum, applied it to his own use, the debtor was entitled to have the money so received applied as a payment as of the time it was received and used by the creditor.[80]

Acceptance.— An agreement that defendant would sell and plaintiff would buy certain property, and that a promissory note theretofore given by defendant to plaintiff should be received in part payment of the purchase-price, does not, although such property is tendered to plaintiff, constitute a payment of such note, and therefore is no defense to an action thereon. Dennett v. Short, 7 Me. 150, 20 Am. Dec. 356. Where defendant sold plaintiff shares of the stock of a certain company, for which he was to be paid in goods, fraudulently representing the company to be solvent, and plaintiffs executed their notes or agreements to deliver the goods at a future period, and afterward delivered them, on discovering the insolvency of the company, plaintiffs were entitled to recover for the goods, as the fraud vitiated the contract as to the payment. Pierce v. Drake, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 475. Where A sells land to B, to receive payment in cash and certificates of discharge in the army, estimated at a certain value, which certificates are assigned to A, and the certificates are of no value, he may treat them as no payment, and sue for the original consideration, quo ad hoc those certificates. Taft v. Wildman, 15 Ohio 123. Where a party to a barter is bound to future payment of goods, payment is not completed until the goods tendered are expressly or impliedly accepted by the obligee. Jenkins v. Mapes, 53 Ohio St. 110, 41 N. E. 137. But where the drawer of notes payable in grain, to be delivered at his mill at a fixed price at their maturity, set apart a sufficient quantity to meet the demand, it was held that the property in the grain was changed and the notes paid. Retaking on execution against debtor.— Where the goods, after delivery to the creditor, are seized on execution against the debtor, and it is decided that the property is subject to execution against him, and thereafter the debtor pays off the execution and obtains the goods, but does not redeliver them to the creditor, such facts do not show a payment. Sherwood v. Elslow, 5 Ind. 218.

Merchantable condition.—Where goods were to be received in payment if delivered in merchantable order, to be sold by the creditor, and the surplus refunded to the debtor, acceptance by the creditor of the goods, although not in good merchantable condition, operated as a discharge of the debt pro tanto. Application of deposits in bank.— Where the debtor had ordered his bankers to transfer the amount of a payment, from his own money on deposit, to the credit of the creditor, and the transfer had actually been made, and the creditor had given a receipt, and applied the amount on the subscription, there was a payment. In re Rochester, etc., R. creditor;[90] the acceptance of a third person as the debtor;[91] or the creation of an annuity.[92]

b. Order on Third Person For Money or Goods. An order drawn by the debtor upon a third person in favor of the creditor for the payment of money or goods is not a payment of the debt unless such order has been actually paid,[93] or accepted by the creditor as a discharge of the debt pro tanto.[94] It is not enough that the creditor accepts the order unless he accepts it as a payment.[95] On the other hand, if the order is accepted by the creditor as payment,[96] or is actually paid to the creditor,[97] or if the creditor agreed to accept such order when the debt was created,[98] the debt is extinguished pro tanto. At any event, where due diligence is not used in collecting or enforcing the accepted order, whereby the claim is lost, the order is deemed a payment.[99]

c. Collateral Security or Obligation of Higher Nature.[1] Of course, where one security is accepted by the creditor in satisfaction of another, the debt evidenced by the latter is discharged.[2] But the mere taking a security as collateral Different parties and different sum.— But a higher security for a debt given by different parties for a different sum will, in the absence of proof of the intention of the parties, be presumed to have been accepted as collateral security, and not in satisfaction of the debt. McIntyre v. Kennedy, 29 Pa. St. 448.

A specialty executed by one or more partners, but not by all, for the payment of a partnership debt, is an extinguishment of such debt. Williams v. Hodgson, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 474, 3 Am. Dec. 563; Clark v. Lindeke, 44 Minn. 112, 46 N. W. 326; Tom v. Goodrich, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 213; Clement v. Brush, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 180; Chalmers v. Turnipseed, 21 S. C. 126. But see Nicholson v. Leavitt, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 252 [reversed on other grounds in 6 N. Y. 510, 57 Am. Dec. 199] (holding that a simple contract partnership debt is not extinguished by the creditor's taking a higher security for it from an individual partner unless there is positive proof that it was accepted by the creditor in full satisfaction of the existing debt); Hoskinson v. Eliot, 62 Pa. St. 393 (holding that a sealed note in the name of the firm, made by one partner, is not a satisfaction of the firm debt, unless accepted as the individual note of the partner); Chamberlain v. Madden, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 395 (holding that the sealed individual note of an ostensible partner does not extinguish the original cause of action as against a dormant partner, whose connection as partner was unknown to the creditor at the time the note was executed); Fleming v. Lawhorn, Dudley (S. C.) 360. Where a partner executes a note under seal for a debt of the firm without such as a bond,[9] given to the creditor by the debtor otherwise than as collateral security, constitutes a payment where the original indebtedness was of lower dignity, provided the intention of the parties was not otherwise.[10] This rule does not apply, however, where the bond of a third person is transferred, in which case the presumption is that it was received as collateral security.[11] Where the security transferred in payment of a debt was at that time worthless, of which fact neither party had knowledge, the transfer does not discharge the debt.[12]

d. Application of Collateral Security. Payment to the creditor of collateral held as security for the debt, or a sale of it and the appropriation of the proceeds by the creditor, operates as a satisfaction of the debt;[13] and where the amount received is less than the debt it will be considered as satisfaction pro tanto.[14] So where the creditor transfers the security he will be presumed to have substituted it for the debt;[15] and if the creditor converts the security so as to be unable to deliver it when the debtor is willing to pay, the amount thereof must be credited upon the debt.[16] On the other hand, if the security is not collected or converted, although the creditor could have realized upon it, there is no payment.[17]

e. Municipal Securities. In the absence of a statute to the contrary,[18] or an agreement therefor,[19] municipal warrants or like securities do not constitute a authority from the other partners, the partnership debt is extinguished and it becomes the individual debt of the partner. Brozee v. Poyntz, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 178; Calk v. Orear, 2 B. Mon. Giving of a note, with a waiver of exemptions, for the amount of an open account, raises the presumption of payment inasmuch as the waiver of exemptions is an agreement independent of and in addition to the original promise and is a higher security, or better assurance of payment, and more beneficial to the creditor than a book-account or debt of like nature. ment of the original demand. And the same rule applies to the bill, note, order, or acceptance of a third person given by the debtor to the creditor.[33]

b. Minority Rule. In Indiana, Maine, Massachusetts, and Vermont the rule

Higher form of security.— A promissory note may constitute a payment of the original debt because of provisions therein waiving exemptions which make it a higher security. Lee v. Green, 83 Ala. 491, 3 So. 785. But it has been held that the giving of a promissory note for an open account, while it merges the account in the higher form of security, does not deprive the creditor of his rights as to the original cause of action. Hoodless v. Reid, 112 Ill. 105, 1 N. E. 118. See, generally, supra, III, A, 1, c.

Note payable to third person.— Where a vendee's note for the purchase-price of land was made payable to a third person, by direction of the grantor, and was not delivered to the payee, but was retained by the grantor, it would not operate as a payment of the purchase-price. Hughes v. Isreal, 73 Mo. 538.

Note payable in Confederate money.— Where a note payable in Confederate money is given for the agreed price of property, the original liability is merged into the special obligation to pay in Confederate money, and a recovery can be had only upon the note. Stroud v. Rankin, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 74.

Note to assignee of partnership.— Where a debt due to a firm is assigned to one of the partners, a note of the debtor, given to the assignee for the amount of the debt, extinguishes it as to the partnership. Lamkin v. Phillips, 9 Port. (Ala.) 98.

Effect of receipt.— Receipting an account for advances made the debtor upon receiving his note does not operate to satisfy the claim until the note is paid. Starling v. Wyatt, (Miss. 1900) 27 So. 526.

Conditional payment.— Where notes are given to the creditor's agent, not as collateral security, but as payment on certain conditions to which the creditor refuses to accede, so long as they are retained, he cannot sue on his claim. Dixon v. Ford, 1 Rob. (La.) 253.

Compromise with maker of note.— Where a creditor receives the note of a third person from his debtor, with authority to collect and apply the proceeds to the payment of his debt, but by a compromise advantageous to all parties releases the third person on receiving one half of the debt, this will not operate as a payment of the debt beyond the

as to the effect of giving a bill or note as constituting a payment is different from the common-law rule prevailing in England and in the other states of this country. The minority rule is that the taking a bill of exchange or a promissory note governed by the law merchant, by the creditor from his debtor, for an existing debt, is a payment of the debt, unless it is otherwise agreed by the parties, the presumption being that the debt is thereby paid and the burden of proving a contrary agreement being upon the creditor.[34] On the other hand, if the note is not governed by the law merchant, that is, is not negotiable, it is not a payment of the debt unless it is so agreed by the parties, and the burden of proving such agreement is upon the debtor.[35] This rule applies equally well where the bill or note is that of a third person.[36] This presumption of payment may be rebutted, however, not only by evidence of an express agreement of the parties but also by evidence of the circumstances of the transaction itself showing that it was not the intention of the parties to accept the bill or note as payment.[37] amount received by the creditor, although the compromise was made without authority. Exeter Bank v. Gordon, 8 N. H. 66.

Other security.— The fact that such presumption of payment will deprive the creditor taking the note of the substantial benefit of

c. Contemporaneous Indebtedness. While in many cases the rule that a bill or note does not constitute payment unless accepted as payment and not merely as security has been applied to contemporaneous indebtedness, without any question being raised as to whether the rule applies to a contemporaneous debt as well as to a preëxisting debt, there are cases which distinguish between an antecedent and a contemporaneous indebtedness where the bill or note of a third person is given, and hold that the giving of a bill or note of a third person, upon a purchase of property or for an indebtedness contracted at the time, is presumably a payment pro tanto of the agreed price.[38] On the other hand, there is express authority for the proposition that there is no difference between a preëxisting and contemporaneous debt, at least where the bill or note is that of the debtor.[39] Such presumption of payment, where it exists, is rebuttable;[40] and the indorsement of the note, so as to make the purchaser liable therefor, overcomes the presumption and casts the burden upon the debtor to establish an actual agreement that the bill or note was received as payment.[41] Of course a bill or note may constitute a payment where delivered pursuant to an agreement for a payment in such mode made at the time the debt was created.[42]

d. Agreement to Accept as Payment. Where there is an agreement to take some security, such as a mortgage, guaranty, or the like, is sufficient to meet and repel the presumption. Scott v. Edgar, 159 Ind. 38, 63 N. E. 452; Titcomb v. McAllister, 81 Me. 399, 17 Atl. 315; Bunker v. Barron, 79 Me. 62, 8 Atl. 253, 1 Am. St. Rep. 282; Crosby v. Redman, 70 Me. 56; Paine v. Dwinel, 53 Me. 52, 87 Am. Where the note of a third person is obtained for a special purpose other than payment, which was made known to the agent of the debtor, and the creditor did not give the debtor credit for it on his book, nor include it in a written statement of credits subsequently rendered, and the agent several times told the creditor, after the failure of the maker of the note, that the debtor would pay it, and where at the time the note was given the creditor had a lien for all that was then due him, it is sufficient to prevent a ruling as a matter of law, that the note was received as payment. Quimby v. Durgin, 148 Mass. 104, 19 N. E. 14, 1 L. R. A. 514.

Mistake.— So the presumption may be rebutted by showing that the note was taken under a misunderstanding of the facts. Wemet v. Missisquoi Lime Co., 46 Vt. 458. When the party takes the note supposing that other parties are bound by it who are not, then the intention of treating it as payment is rebutted, and the party may sue upon the original debt. Bunker v. Barron, 79 Me. 62, 8 Atl. 253, 1 Am. St. Rep. 282; Wait v. Brewster, 31 Vt. 516. If there is any deception or fraud in the giving of the new security, or if it was accepted without a full knowledge of the facts, or under a misapprehension of the rights of the parties, the creditor is not bound by the acceptance of the note, but may tender it back or produce it at the trial, to be canceled, and seek his remedy on the original contract. e. Note of One or More Co-Debtors. The taking a note of one or more joint debtors for a preëxisting debt is not a payment thereof unless it is expressly agreed that it shall be so regarded.[49] But where such note is accepted as payment it is regarded as such,[50] and where the creditor receives separate notes of his joint debtors for their respective shares of the debt as payment, it operates as a discharge of the original joint indebtedness.[51]

f. Validity and Value of Bill or Note and Misrepresentations — (I) Of Debtor. The acceptance of an invalid note of the debtor is not a payment,[52] as where the note is usurious.[53] So, where the creditor is induced by fraud or imposition to accept the note of a debtor as payment, the creditor may recover upon the original indebtedness.[54] So a note is not payment, so as to preclude a recovery upon the original indebtedness, where the note is destroyed while in the debtor's possession.[55] Likewise, where a note is accepted as payment under a mistake of law as to its effect as binding a copartner, the debt is not discharged.[56] And when a negotiable note, although received as money, has no value, it does not constitute payment.[57]

(II) Of Third Person. Similarly, the bill or note of a third person, even where it would otherwise constitute an absolute payment, is not a payment where it is invalid,[58] as where it is forged.[59] So it does not constitute a payment where

In the absence of proof of a special agreement, the giving up or retention of the original security will in general be a decisive circumstance in determining the intention of the parties as to whether a bill, note, or check was accepted as an absolute payment. Agreement to accept notes for contemporaneous debt.— If one sells goods to another, agreeing to receive in payment certain promissory notes of a third person, he has no remedy if these are afterward found to be forged, although, if he had sold for cash, and had received the notes to accommodate its acceptance is induced by false representations,[60] such as misrepresentations or concealment of the financial responsibility of the maker of the note.[61] So, where the note could not be enforced against the maker in consequence of a contract made by the payee with him, the creditor may resort to his original demand.[62] In the absence of fraud, where the bill or note is accepted as payment, it has been held that the insolvency of the drawer or maker does not prevent it operating as payment,[63] although other cases held that, where the drawer or maker is insolvent at the time of the transfer, and neither party has knowledge thereof, the paper does not constitute payment because of the mutual mistake of facts.[64]

g. Effect of Transfer of Bill or Note. Where a bill or note has not been accepted as absolute payment, the fact that the creditor has transferred it to a third person does not of itself bar an action upon the original indebtedness or show that the paper was accepted as an absolute payment,[65] unless the bill or note is outstanding in the hands of a third person at the time the action on the original indebtedness is commenced.[66] But the original cause of action on an account is destroyed where a note given in settlement of the account is transferred by the payee, together with the collaterals securing it, and such collaterals are afterward sold by the transferee.[67]

h. Indorsement or Guaranty of Note by Debtor. It has been held that the omission of the creditor to have the bill or note of a third person indorsed by the debtor from whom he received it is prima facie evidence of an agreement to take it at his own risk.[68] On the other hand the assignment of a note of a third person by a debtor to his creditor, with a guaranty thereof, shows that the note was not accepted as payment,[69] even though the guaranty is void.[70]

i. Use of Due Diligence in Collecting.[71] Where a creditor has received from his debtor the bill or note of a third person, the debt may be extinguished by the laches or negligence of the creditor in collecting the bill or note, by which the amount due thereon is lost,[72] inasmuch as the creditor is bound to use ordinary means and diligence to collect the amount thereof.[73]

not discharge the debt,[74] unless the creditor expressly agrees to receive it as payment.[75] So a draft of an agent is not payment of the debt so as to prevent an action upon the original consideration.[76] Likewise a draft given by a purchaser, accepted by his agent, and received by the seller is not necessarily an absolute payment.[77]

(II) PAYMENTS BY PARTNERSHIP OR INDIVIDUAL PARTNER—(A) Note of Firm For Private Debt. While it would seem ordinarily that a note given by a firm for the private debt of a partner is not an absolute payment, yet, if it has been the usual habit of all the parties in previous similar transactions to consider such notes as payment, they will be regarded as such.[78]

(B) Bill or Note of Partner For Debt of Firm.[79] The giving by a partner of his individual note,[80] or a draft,[81] or his acceptance of a draft,[82] for the debt of the firm, does not extinguish the firm indebtedness, although done after the dissolution of the partnership,[83] except where there is an agreement that it shall operate as payment.[84] So the surrender of the partnership note and the acceptance of the individual note of a partner in place thereof does not of itself constitute a payment of the firm's indebtedness,[85] except where there are special circumstances, as where such act prejudicially affects the rights of other partners who may be considered as sureties.[86]

(c) Note Executed by Partner in Name of Firm After Dissolution. Where a note is executed by the continuing partner or partners, in the firm-name, after the dissolution of the partnership, it is not, in the absence of an agreement therefor, a payment of the firm indebtedness where it is not binding on the retiring partner.[87] Nor is such note a payment where received through a mistake in fact, as where the creditor was ignorant of the dissolution of the firm.[88] But where the note prejudices the rights of the non-assenting partners as against the partner executing it, it has been held that their liability is extinguished.[89]

Note of partner who has assumed payment of firm debts.— Where a creditor, after dissolution of the firm, knowing that one or more of the partners have agreed with the others to assume and pay the debts of the firm, takes the negotiable notes of those who should pay, in payment of his debt, and thus extends the time of payment, he thereby discharges the other partners. Millerd v. Thorn, 56 N. Y. 402; Dodd v. Dreyfus, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 319; Paul v. Ellison, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 67, 1 West. L. J. 452; Townsends v. Stevenson, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 59.

Acceptance of the notes of each partner individually.— Where, pending or after the dissolution, the creditor receives the individual notes of each of the partners in satisfaction, he is no longer a firm creditor. W. 811, 5 N. W. 745.

Effect of fraud.— Where a creditor, induced thereto by fraud or misrepresentations, accepts the note of a partner in payment of an account against the firm, and upon discovering the fraud, instead of rescinding the agreement of acceptance and surrendering the note within a reasonable time, pursues the note to judgment, so that he cannot place the parties in statu quo, he cannot then maintain an action upon the original indebtedness. Retiring partners as sureties.— Where the creditor, after dissolution, accepts a time note in the firm-name from the partner continuing the business with knowledge that such partner has assumed the debts of the firm, the retiring partners occupy the position of sureties and are released by the time given. Smith v. Shelden, 35 Mich. 42, 24 Am. Rep. 529.

90. See cases cited infra, this and notes 91–94.

Renewals of bank loans as sui generis.— Where a bank loans money to a firm, and takes the firm note therefor, and, after the creation of a new firm, composed of the same members and another, accepts its notes in renewal, with knowledge that one of its members, who was a member of the old firm, has retired, the renewal operates as a payment of the old note, precluding the bank from recourse against the property of such retired member. A fortiori a check drawn in favor of the debtor's agent is not prima facie evidence of the payment of the debt, even if the creditor assents that it be so drawn. Mullins v. Brown, 32 Kan. 312, 4 Pac. 305.

Check lost or fraudulently obtained from creditor.— When a debtor pays his debt by a check to the order of his creditor, or of one nominated by the latter, and the check is lost by, or fraudulently obtained from, the creditor, and is paid to the finder or fraudulent holder on a forged indorsement of the payee, the debtor is not discharged, and may again be called upon to pay his debt, at least unless the check was taken in absolute payment and extinguishment thereof. Thomson v. British North America Bank, 82 N. Y. 1.

A check is not payment even if it is given for a note which is surrendered (Olcott v. Rathbone, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 490), nor although a receipt is given for the old debt upon the delivery of the check (Bradford v. Fox, 38 N. Y. 289), or, on presentment of one check, the holder receives from the drawer the check for the amount of his check (Kelty v. Erie Second Nat. Bank, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 328).

Invalid check.— The delivery of a check, on which the place where it is not drawn is not stated, and which is not stamped, does not amount to a payment. Bond v. Warden, 1 Coll. 583, 14 L. J. Ch. 154, 28 Eng. Ch. 583, 63 Eng. Reprint 553.

Return of worthless check.— Where the drawee is insolvent and the check worthless, it is not necessary to return it to the drawer; and its retention indicates no intention of appropriation as payment of the debt. Herider v. Phœnix Loan Assoc., 82 Mo. App. 427.

The intent of the parties is to be determined by their express agreement, or the facts and circumstances of the transaction. Kirkpatrick v. Puryear, 93 Tenn. 409, 24 S. W. 1130, 22 L. R. A. 785. There need be no express words or writing of the parties agreeing that the check is to be an absolute payment, but the circumstances and the conduct of the parties may show an express understanding that the check is taken in satisfaction of the debt or estop the creditor from claiming the contrary. Conde v. Dreisam Gold Min. Co., 3 Cal. App. 583, 86 Pac. 825. For instance, where a check is sent for the express purpose of payment and is retained for an unreasonable time under circumstances implying that it was so accepted, it will be construed to have been accepted as an absolute payment. Conde v. Dreisam Gold Min. Co., supra; Bloomquist v. Johnson, 107 Ill. App. 154.

If the acceptance of the check was induced by fraudulent representations it does not constitute payment. Martin v. Pennock, 2 Pa. St. 376.

Absence of funds.— A check does not constitute payment where drawn in the absence of funds and with no reasonable expectation debt as well as for one given in payment of a preëxisting debt.[1] But where the check is in fact paid the debt is extinguished,[2] and it is immaterial that the payment was to an authorized agent of the creditor.[3]

b. Diligence in Collection. The acceptanee of a check implies an undertaking to nse due diligence in presenting it for payment and giving notiee of dishonor, and if the parties from whom it is received sustain loss by want of such diligenee it will be held to operate as actual payment.[4] But where the bank on whieh the check is drawn fails before the expiration of a reasonable time in which to present the check,[5] or it is prohibited by injunction from making any more pay-of funds in the hands of the drawees to meet it, and no reasonable expectation that it would be honored. Holmes v. Fall River First Nat. Bank, 126 Mass. 353; Taylor v. Wilson, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 44, 45 Am. Dec. 180; Fleig v. Sleet, 43 Ohio St. 53, 1 N. E. 24, 54 Am. Rep. 800. Where the debtor gives in payment his check with knowledge that he has no funds in the bank to meet it, there is such a false representation of a material fact as to entitle the seller to rescind the contract even though the purchaser at the time believed, and had reasonable ground for believing, that the check would be paid. Loughnan v. Barry, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 457.

Where a check is received as conditional payment the payment becomes absolute and relates to the date of the delivery of the check when its recipient actually cashes it. Hooker v. Burr, 137 Cal. 663, 668, 70 Pac. 778, 99 Am. St. Rep. 17.

The acceptance of a check from the drawee of a bill for the amount thereof, where the bill is given up, operates as a payment of the bill, in favor of the debtor delivering such draft of a third person to his credit. Whitney v. Esson, 99 Mass. 308, 96 Am. Dec. 762. And see Russell v. Hankey, 6 T. R. 12.

Check of third person.— Where the debtor directs the creditor to send a bill for goods bought to a third person, and the creditor accepts the check of the third person and notifies the debtor that the goods have been paid for, and on the same day the third person fails, leaving the check unpaid and in debt to said debtor, the check constitutes a payment by the debtor. White v. Howard, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 81.

Agent's check.— Where goods are bought to be delivered to a special agent of the buyer, with whom he agrees to leave cash for payment, which he does, and the seller, on delivery, accepts part cash, and the agent's check for the balance, which he holds until after the buyer settles his accounts with the agent, and the latter becomes insolvent, the buyer is released from liability. B. Particular Kinds of Money[7] — 1. Where No Provision in Contract. In the absence of any provision in the contract, or of any circumstances excluding it, contracts for the payment of money refer to the ordinary and usual currency in which business is transacted.[8] In such a case payment may be made in any legal tender.[9]

2. Where Fixed by Contract — a. In General. If a particular kind of currency is contracted for, payment can only be made in that currency,[10] except where the creditor consents to payment in a different medium.[11] If the obligation is to pay in such funds as the banks receive and pay out at the maturity of the debt, it is payable in such medium, although the loan was of another kind of currency.[12] If the obligation is payable in a certain kind of coin, the fact that such coin afterward ceases to be a legal tender is immaterial.[13]

b. Gold and Silver. The earlier decisions held that a provision in a contract for payment in coin or a particular kind of coin was of no effect, and that payment could be made in any medium that was a legal tender, such as treasury notes after the federal enactment of 1862.[14] There were, however, cases to the con-

in any legal tender,[21] but the better rule would seem to be that the payment must be made either in the particular coin or in other legal tender equal in value to such coin.[22]

3. LEGAL TENDER — a. In General. What constitutes legal tender is to be determined from the federal statutes. Fractional silver currency was formerly legal tender to any amount,[23] but now it is a valid tender only for a limited sum.[24] So a silver dollar was formerly a legal tender for its nominal value on debts of any amount.[25] Gold dust is not a legal tender,[26] nor is it cash within the meaning of a contract specifying that payment shall be made in cash.[27]

b. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. The constitutionality of the federal statutes of 1862 and the subsequent enactments making treasury notes a legal tender, in addition to gold and silver, is well settled,[28] whether applied to debts contracted before or after the passage of the statute.[29] State statutes cannot interfere with the federal constitution and statutes by authorizing as legal tender currency other than that provided for by the federal constitution and statutes.[30] But a state statute providing that contracts for specific kinds of money may be enforced is constitutional,[31] while a state statute providing that such a provision is of no effect is unconstitutional.[32]

c. Treasury and Legal Tender Notes. At an early day payment in paper money was sufficient, in the absence of any agreement as to the medium of payment,[33] and by the federal statutes of 1814 treasury notes were made a legal tender to a very limited extent.[34] But for a long time before the passage of the legal tender acts of 1862, only gold or silver coin was a legal tender in payment of private debts.[35] After the legal tender acts of 1862, treasury notes, commonly payment is made in bank-bills and accepted, it is a good payment at their nominal par value.[42] But in the absence of a statute providing therefor,[43] bank-notes,[44] although considered as money in ordinary business transactions,[45] are not a legal tender,[46] although they constitute payment if the tender is not objected to upon that ground.[47] Where the agreement is to pay in current bank-notes, it means such as are current without discount in ordinary business at the time the debt becomes due.[48]

b. Validity of Paper and Failure of Bank. A debtor paying in bank-notes impliedly warrants the validity thereof.[49] Payment in the bills of a bank which has failed is insufficient,[50] although neither the debtor nor the creditor knew of the failure.[51] But if the bills of a bank which has failed are received in payment, they must be returned within a reasonable time after the creditor discovers that they are valueless, to enable him to recover upon the original debt.[52]

5. Counterfeit Money. Even though the person paying counterfeit money was ignorant of the fact that it was counterfeit,[53] a payment in such money is a nullity,[54] provided the money is returned by the creditor to the debtor within a reasonable time after his discovery of the fact that it is counterfeit.[55]

6. Confederate Money or Securities.[56] Payment in the southern states during the war in Confederate money, although accepted, was held, in some cases, not a valid payment.[57] The general rule, however, was that while the creditor could not be compelled to accept payment in Confederate notes,[58] unless the contract expressly provided therefor,[59] yet if the Confederate money was accepted in good faith, at a time and place where it was current, it discharged the debt.[60] But

Mere unwillingness to receive Confederate currency in payment of a debt will not, if the currency was actually received in payment, be enough to invalidate the acceptance of the currency. The unwillingness necessary to invalidate the payment must be of the degree and character authorizing the courts to treat the acceptance and payment as void or voidable, upon the principles applicable to payments not tainted with Confederate currency. Jones v. Thomas, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 465.

Who may object.— A vendor, seeking to enforce his lien on the land against a subpurchaser, who claims as a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, cannot question the validity of the payment by such subpurchaser because made in Confederate currency. Kinsey v. Howard, 47 Ala. 236.

Conditional acceptance.— Where a Confederate bond was transferred in payment of a debt and the debtor promised that if the manner of the transfer was not correct and valid he would make it so, or would pay the money, and the transfer was in fact invalid, the duty of ascertaining the defect and remedying it was upon the debtor, so that if he failed so to do he became absolutely liable to pay the amount in money without any notice of the defect from the other party. Bryan v. Heck, 67 N. C. 322.

Payment after close of war.— A payment after the surrender of the Confederate army was held invalid (Sirrine v. Griffin, 40 Ga. 169), especially where the debtor knew of the surrender and induced an acceptance of payment by false statements (Blalock v. Phillips, 38 Ga. 216); but such a payment was held good where both parties were ignorant of the surrender (Ellis v. Hammond, 57 Ga. 179).

Return of Confederate money as condition precedent.— Where a payment in Confederate notes was received under duress, the creditor cannot recover the debt in authorized currency, unless he has retained and tendered back the identical money received by him, and not merely money for an equal amount. Emerson v. Lee, 18 La. Ann. 134, 89 Am. Dec. 648.

What constitutes duress.— Davis v. Mississippi Cent. R. country to pay in Mexican dollars, it was held that the value of the Mexican money may be allowed at its value in our money at the time the debt was due instead of its value at the time of the trial.[67]

8. DEPRECIATED CURRENCY OR SECURITIES. As a general rule payment cannot be made in depreciated currency or securities,[68] unless the creditor consents thereto.[69] But where the contract reserves the right to pay in current paper funds a tender in notes current at the time, although greatly depreciated, is good.[70] Where credits in currency are indorsed on an obligation payable in specie, such credits are payments only to the amount of the value in specie of such credits at the respective dates of payment.[71] If the debtor is ignorant of the depreciation in the parties to a settlement have agreed on the value in United States currency of a certain sum in foreign money, the jury may, without further evidence, make a like estimate in readjusting or ascertaining what amount was overpaid. Turnbull v. Watkins, 2 Mo. App. 235.

Debts payable in sister state.— The rule stated in the text applies to debts payable in a sister state where the currency of one state is below par in another state. Howe v. Wade, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,777, 4 McLean 319.

Where the value of a pound sterling is in issue, it has been held that the amount fixed by the federal statutes governs rather than the current rate of exchange. Murphy v. Kastner, 50 N. J. Eq. 214, 24 Atl. 564. But see Robinson v. Hall, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 342, holding that where a loan of money, in English currency, is made in England, to be paid in this state, the pound sterling is to be estimated here at its real market value, and not at its par value.

Porto Rican contract.— United States currency at the rate of exchange prescribed by congress in the act of April 12, 1900 (31 U. S. St. at L. 77, 80, c. 191), § 11, and not at the rate of one dollar for each peso of indebtedness, must be accepted in discharge of the obligation on account of a purchase in 1894 of a plantation in Porto Rico, which was to be satisfied with money current in the province at the rate of one hundred centavos for each peso, since this provision evidently contemplated only such change in coins as might occur while Porto Rico remained under the same political power. Redemption from execution sale.— A purchaser at an execution sale of mortgaged property, who pays for the same in depreciated currency, on the redemption of the property is only entitled to receive his purchase-money in currency of the same kind, or its equivalent in value at the time of payment, with interest. Sandford v. Farmers' Bank, 1 Bush (Ky.) 335.

Construction of provision in will.— A bequest was of an annuity of fifteen hundred dollars United States currency, to be calculated at the rate of one hundred and ten dollars currency for every one hundred dollars United States gold, "if at the time when the above payments commence, specie payments should have been resumed, and also if gold should have gone higher." When the will was executed gold was at 114, and when the first amount was paid specie payments had been resumed. It was held that the annuity was sixteen hundred and fifty dollars in currency. In re Stutzer, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 481.

Loan of shares of stock.— A borrower of shares of stock, "to be returned on demand," may make payment in discharge of the loan by returning on demand an equal number of similar shares, although the stock had become greatly depreciated after the loan was made. Fosdick v. Greene, 27 Ohio St. 484, 22 Am. Rep. 328.

Demand payable in currency.—A certificate of deposit, payable in "Illinois currency," cannot be satisfied by depreciated paper. It must be met by bills passing the locality in the place of coin. Chicago F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keiron, 27 Ill. 501; Hulbert v. Carver, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 62.

Acceptance at real value.— Where a creditor is entitled to the payment of his debt in coin, and on an offer by the debtor to pay in depreciated paper money declares he will receive the latter only at its value, or on account, and retain his claim for the difference, and the debtor without objection allows him to do so, the latter impliedly assents to the creditor's proposal. value, or if both parties know or have the same means of knowing the value of the depreciated paper, and the payment is made in good faith, a payment in depreciated paper is good.[72] Where the contract provides that the debt shall be paid in certain bonds, it will be construed as binding the creditor to accept payment in such bonds at the maturity of the debt only, and he is not compelled to accept them a considerable time afterward when they have greatly depreciated in value.[73]

9. Appreciated Currency. Where the debt is payable in current funds, the creditor cannot claim the right to be paid in an appreciated medium of payment, such as gold.[74] Where the contract is to pay at a future date in the currency then in circulation an amount equivalent to the amount of the debt as it was valued at the date of the contract, the debtor has the benefit of the appreciation of gold up to the expiration of the credit but not of that which occurs after default in payment.[75] Where, after the debt was created, but before it became due, the value of a dollar in currency became appreciated, the creditor was entitled to receive payment in current money at its value when the debt was due.[76]

10. Uncurrent or Unlawful Money or Notes. By the agreement or consent of the parties payment may be made in uncurrent money or notes[77] or even in unlawful money.[78]

C. Election as to Medium of Payment — 1. In General. Where the contract provides for payment in either of two or more mediums, a debtor may elect to make either mode of payment at the time fixed therefor.[79] But where a debtor has the election, either to pay in a particular kind of money,[80] or in money or some other way,[81] the right of election does not exist after the day when the payment becomes due, and if the promise is to pay in property or money the creditor is thereafter entitled to payment in money.[82]

Stephens v. Howe, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 133.

Revocation of election.— Where a promissory note is given with an option to the payee to take a conveyance of land in lieu of the money promised, and he elects to take the land, and the maker does not then consummate the bargain by conveying the land, the payee may revoke his election, and hold the maker for the money on the note. a certain medium may be waived,[84] as by the acceptance of another medium,[85] or the failure to specifically object to a tender on the ground of the medium.[86]

IV. EFFECT.

A. In General. Payment discharges the debt pro tanto.[87] It is immaterial that the creditor at the same time is owing the debtor an equal or greater amount on other obligations.[88] But payment of an obligation does not conclusively establish that the party paying was indebted to the payee at the time of the payment.[89] Where a party voluntarily allows his adversary a credit on his claim, which the latter refuses to accept, the former is not bonnd thereby.[90]

B. Part Payment. As a general rule part payment of a debt raises in law an implied promise to pay the balance.[91] But part payment will not change what is originally a mere moral obligation into a legal debt.[92] On the other hand the payment of a part of a sum which is due does not create an equity in favor of the payer to entitle him to an indefinite delay for the payment of the balance.[93] A part payment, pending suit of the claim sued on, is not equivalent, as an admission of the cause of action, to a payment of money into court.[94]

Payment to proper person by mistake.— When money is paid to a person to whom it properly belongs, although under a mistake as to the right in which it accrues to him, the debt is extinguished, and he cannot again enforce payment of his claim in his lawful right. Hemphill v. Moody, 64 Ala. 468.

C. Payment by One or More Co-Debtors.[95] A payment made by one of two joint debtors extinguishes the debt pro tanto.[96] On the other hand a payment of his share of the debt by one of two joint and several debtors does not release him.[97]

D. Payment by Third Person.[98] Although there are some early authorities to the contrary,[99] it is now well settled that payment of a debt by a stranger, although without the debtor's request, if accepted as such by the creditor, discharges the debt so far as the creditor is concerned.[1]

E. Payment Under Duress. Ordinarily a payment made under duress may be recovered back.[2] It has been held, however, that money extorted by a creditor from his debtor by an unlawful execution should be considered a payment of the debt.[3]

F. Rescission of Payment and Return of Medium Received.[4] After its dishonor a creditor may surrender paper, such as a bill or note, where not received as an absolute payment, and sue upon the original indebtedness.[5] On the other hand if the paper was received as absolute payment, its non-payment gives no right of action upon the original indebtedness.[6] The general rule that a party who seeks to disaffirm a contract must return, or offer to return, whatever he has received upon it[7] is applied to payments by bills, notes, checks, etc., by holding that a creditor cannot recover upon the original indebtedness unless he returns or produces the paper given in payment, or shows that it is lost, or otherwise satisfactorily accounts for it,[8] or where it appears that it cannot be enforced in the hands of a third person.[9] But in case of fraud, when nothing is parted with by the fraudulent vendor but his own promissory notes, such a return or offer to

Where failure to return not prejudicial.— Where a note of third persons is received in payment of a debt on the faith principally of one signature, which proves to be forged, assumpsit can be maintained on the original consideration without previously returning the note, where it is shown that the other makers are involvent and that no injury can be sustained by defendant because of a failure to return the note. Where the note of a third person had been paid prior to its transfer the creditor need not show an offer to return the note to the payee debtor. Campbell v. Ayres, 9 Iowa 108.

return is not necessary before action brought; it is enough if the notes are produced on the trial ready to be canceled.[10] On the other hand, where the debtor signs a receipt in full, believing it is only a receipt for a part payment, he need not return the money received in order to enable him to recover the balance due.[11]

V. RECEIPTS.[12]

A. Nature and Contents. Ordinarily a receipt does not amount to a contract but it may be so drawn as to be a contract.[13] No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a valid receipt, although ordinarily it must show the amount paid,[14] and the time.[15] It may consist of a separate writing, a recital in a deed or other instrument, or an indorsement of payment thereon.[16] To be evidence of payment, it ought to be in the possession of the party who paid the money. A receipt in the possession of the opposite party certainly proves nothing more than his willingness to receive the money and give a receipt therefor.[17]

B. Construction. Ordinarily a receipt is to be construed the same as any other writing.[18] Where the receipt is written and signed by the creditor, any ambiguous language therein should be taken most strongly against him, and most favorably for the debtor.[19] A receipt in full for a particular demand is not conclusive evidence of a general settlement of accounts between the parties.[20] For instance, a receipt for so much money specified to be for certain goods or property purchased will not be construed or presumed to be a satisfaction in full.[21] A receipt in full of all demands against one is no evidence of the payment of a joint

Omission of word "dollars."— A written instrument in form of a receipt, having in the margin the figures "1100" which acknowledges the receipt on a certain day of "eleven hundred on . . . asylum contract of fifty-five thousand dollars," is sufficient as a receipt for eleven hundred dollars. Butler v. Bohn, 31 Minn. 325, 17 N. W. 862.

Stating money was received.— A receipt in full need not expressly state that money was received in order to make it a receipt for money. State v. Dalton, 8 N. C. 3.

Payments of interest.— Where a receipt covered several payments of interest on different debts and at the close of the receipt were the words "in full," such words applied to each payment. Bogart v. Van Velsor, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 718.

Partial payment of note or payment in full. — The language of a receipt which recites that the sum acknowledged was received "on the within note," together with the fact that a credit for the amount was indorsed on the note referred to, shows conclusively that it was intended as a partial payment. Hill v. Erwin, 60 Ala. 341.

Where payment is made by check, which recites on its face, "in full of all demands," such words will constitute a receipt in full, as against the payee, only when it is shown that he had knowledge of the presence of such words, or facts are shown which in law would charge him with such knowledge. Rapp v. Giddings, 4 S. D. 492, 57 N. W. 237.

As including note.— The fact that at the time of a settlement of accounts between parties a note made by one to another was not given up does not show that a receipt given by the payee, stipulating to be in full of all demands, did not include such note. Cunningham v. Batchelder, 32 Me. 316.

Construction of particular receipts.— A receipt for money, recited to be "in full settlement of account as follows: 40 cubic yards demand against him and others.[22] So a receipt in full of all claims from its date up to a certain future date does not cover claims existing prior to the date of the receipt.[23] It seems that the payment will be presumed to have been made on the day that the receipt is dated.[24]

C. Operation and Conclusiveness — 1. In General.[25] Ordinarily a receipt raises a presumption and is prima facie evidence of payment as recited therein.[26] However, neither an ordinary receipt acknowledging a payment,[27] nor a receipt in

VI. APPLICATION OF.[39]

A. In General — 1. SCOPE OF RULE. "Application of payments," also referred to as "appropriation of payments," and in the civil law as "imputation of payments," is the application of a payment made by the debtor to his creditor to one or more of several debts owing the creditor by the debtor.[40] But while it has been said that the rule applies only where there are two debts,[41] it is extended to Subsequent statements.— The presumption of payment arising from a receipt in a deed, and from subsequent releases, is sufficiently rebutted by the testimony of disinterested and credible witnesses as to subsequent statements to them by the grantee of his indebtedness to the grantors. Eshelman's Estate, 143 Pa. St. 24, 21 Atl. 905.

Where genuineness of receipt disputed.— The rule that a receipt's effect can only be done away with by clear and unmistakable evidence does not apply when the receipt's genuineness is disputed. cases where there is really only one debt made up of different items, as in the case of a current account,[42] and to appropriations between principal and interest.[43] The rule is not confined to payments made in money but is extended to payments made in commodities or services.[44]

2. ORIGIN OF RULE. The rules governing the application of payments have their origin in the civil law, but in this country, in so far as the common law prevails, the rules of the civil law have been greatly modified and in many respects entirely repudiated.[45]

3. APPLICABILITY TO INVOLUNTARY PAYMENTS. A voluntary payment, within the meaning of the rules as to application of payments, is one made by the debtor on his own motion and without any compulsory process.[46] Involuntary payments are such as result from an execution[47] or judicial[48] sale or where there is no direct payment with the consent of the debtor. Neither the debtor[49] nor the creditor[50] has a right to make an application of an involuntary payment, and the rules governing the application of voluntary payments by the court where neither party have applied them do not govern involuntary payments.[51] Usually the application by the court will be pro rata,[52] but in some jurisdictions involuntary payments insufficient to pay all claims are applied by the court so as to pay the unsecured rather than the secured claims.[53]

B. By Debtor — 1. RIGHTS OF DEBTOR. A debtor paying money to his creditor has the primary and paramount right to direct the application of his money to such items or demands as he chooses,[54] provided the payment is a voluntary to principal to the exclusion of interest,[57] or may direct that the payment be applied equally on several obligations.[58]

2. TIME FOR APPROPRIATION. The weight of authority holds that the debtor must direct the application of his payment at or before the time of payment and that he cannot do so afterward.[59] But the debtor may designate the application after suit, if such payment was made upon an agreement which the creditor had repudiated.[60] So if the creditor procure possession of the money of his debtor, without his consent, unless it be by a legal proceeding binding upon the debtor, the latter does not thereby lose his right to make application of the funds so obtained to any one of several demands held by the creditor against him.[61]

3. WHAT CONSTITUTES, AND SUFFICIENCY. Plaintiff held two notes against defendant, one as executor, the other in his own right as assignee, without defendant's knowledge, and in answer to his request for positive refusal to pay one debt, and the acknowledgment of another, with the delivery of the sum due on it, evidences an appropriation by the debtor.[65] If the direction is given in words, these words must be communicated to the creditor,[66] and if circumstances are relied on as indicating the appropriation, knowledge of these circumstances must be traced to the creditor, since the mere intent of the debtor, not communicated to the creditor, nor attended by any act or declaration manifesting it to him, is insufficient.[67]

4. EFFECT. Where a debtor directs the manner in which his payment is to be applied, the creditor, if he accepts the payment, must apply it accordingly.[68] The money made on the ground that "one of the heirs" needed it, defendant remitted a check. It was held that the same should be applied on the note held by plaintiff as executor. Moose v. Marks, 116 N. C. 785, 21 S. E. 561.

application of the payment cannot be diverted without the consent of the debtor,[69] but where the creditor applies the payment differently from the direction of the debtor, the latter may be bound thereby by his acquiescence or other acts showing a ratification of such application.[70] On the other hand, the debtor has no right, after the payment has been made, to change the application without the consent of the creditor.[71] For instance, the direction of the debtor, or his consent, to

Payment by draft.— If a debtor delivers to his creditor a draft for money, with directions to apply the proceeds to a particular liability, the creditor is bound by the application as much as if the payment had been in money instead of by draft. Moorehead v. West Branch Bank, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 550.

A refusal to return drafts after explicit direction as to their application will be regarded as an election to accept them for the purpose for which they are offered. Christman v. Martin, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 568, 42 Wkly. Notes Cas. 573.

Principal and interest.— If a debt consists of both principal and interest and the debtor directs the payment to be applied on the principal, or it is mutually agreed that the payment shall be so applied, the creditor, after receiving it, cannot apply the payment to the interest. Tooke v. Bonds, 29 Tex. 419; Pindall v. Marietta Bank, 10 Leigh (Va.) 481.

Demand not due.— If payment is offered on an account not due, the creditor need not receive it, but if he does receive it, he is bound to apply it in accordance with the directions of the debtor. Wetherell v. Joy, 40 Me. 325.

Joint indebtedness.— When a payment has been made on a debt which is due by one of two joint debtors, it cannot be afterward applied, even by the agreement of the creditor and paying debtor, to any other indebtedness. Thayer v. Denton, 4 Mich. 192.

Direction to pay part to third person.— A creditor who receives a bill of exchange from his debtor, with directions to pay a part of its value to another creditor, has no right to appropriate all the money collected from the bill to the payment of his own debt. Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 575.

Cause of action for misapplication.— If the creditor fails to carry out the debtor's direction, he is answerable only to the debtor for a breach of contract, and another person cannot maintain an action against him, there being no privity. Sims v. Lester, 55 Ga. 620, 96 Am. St. Rep. 49.

Constructive notice of change of application.— Where a debtor, before paying a number of notes, has directed part of the money to be applied on a certain note, the delivery to him by the creditor of a roll of notes tied together, which does not contain such note, with the remark that they are the notes taken up, does not constitute constructive notice of the creditor's application of the payment to others than the note in question, so as to create an estoppel against the debtor. Fargo First Nat. Bank v. Roberts, 2 N. D. 195, 49 N. W. 722.

A receipt stating that money was received on "general account" does not estop the debtor from insisting on the appropriation as directed on a particular account. Eylar v. Read, 60 Tex. 387. So the fact that a debtor accepts receipts for payments as having been made "on account" does not estop him from showing that he directed the credits to be placed on a mortgage note given to secure a part of the account. Cas. 534, 4 Atl. 383, holding that one of two principals in an obligation, after having directed the application of a fund to the payment of the obligation in question, has a right to withdraw such order and have the fund applied to another indebtedness.

Mistake of debtor.— The application by a receiver of a payment in accordance with the direction of the debtor will not be disturbed, after the receiver's death, on the ground of mistake of the debtor in the direction, in the absence of clear and convincing proof of such mistake. May v. Burns, 44 S. W. 83, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1595.
