ment so as to be inequitable and unjust to the debtor,[87] although he is not bound to apply it in a way most beneficial to the debtor.[88] The rule does not apply to involuntary payments,[89] nor to other payments where the debtor has had no opportunity to direct the application,[90] nor does it authorize the appropriation of a payment to a debt for which the debtor is not responsible,[91] nor to a fictitious claim.[92] So where a particular debt is to be paid in a particular way, as by the rendition of services, the creditor cannot apply the value of such services to another claim.[93] The creditor cannot apply the payment on the debt of a third person,[94] nor on a debt the payer owes a third person.[95] So if one of the debtor's liabilities is contingent, as where the creditor is his indorser or surety and has not paid the money, the latter cannot apply payments to such account.[96] Of course the creditor cannot apply a payment on a paid obligation.[97]

b. Illegal and Unenforceable Claims. While the creditor may apply a payment on a claim which he cannot enforce,[98] such as an oral one within the statute of frauds,[99] he cannot apply a payment to an illegal claim,[1] a distinction being drawn between claims which are merely unenforceable and those which are malum in se or malum prohibitum.

itor holds a debt payable to himself and another payable to himself and a third person jointly, he must apply the payment ratably on the two debts.[3] So if a debt is owed to two persons jointly, the one to whom part payment is made cannot appropriate it exclusively to his portion of the debt.[4] Where payment is made by one liable individually and also as a trustee, the creditor can apply the payment only to the individual debt.[5]

d. Debts Not Due. A creditor cannot apply the payment on a debt not due to the exclusion of one due or overdue.[6]

e. Debts Arising After Payment. So he cannot apply payment to a debt arising after the payment is made.[7]

f. Payment From Particular Fund. Another exception to the rule that the creditor has the right to apply the payment obtains when the money with which the payment is made is known to the creditor to have been derived from a particular source or fund, in which case he cannot, without the consent of the debtor, apply it otherwise than to the exoneration of the source or fund from which it was derived.[8]

3. What Constitutes and Sufficiency. denced by bringing suit on one claim,[11] or by a receipt,[12] or a statement given the debtor by the creditor.[13] It has been held that an indorsement of a payment on a note without the knowledge or assent of the maker does not constitute an appropriation where the payee holds other obligations against the payer,[14] although there is some authority to the contrary.[15] The mere entry of a credit on a particular account has been held not an appropriation in the absence of notice to the debtor,[16] but when such credit is made and an account rendered to the debtor showing such application the appropriation is complete.[17] It has been held that the creditor need not notify the debtor of the appropriation.[18]

4. TIME FOR APPROPRIATION. By the rule of the civil law the creditor was bound to make his appropriation at the time of the payment,[19] but at common law the creditor is not compelled to exercise his right of application at the time the payment is made.[20] There is much conflict among the authorities, however, as to how long the right exists. Some decisions lay down the broad rule that the creditor's right of application is not limited in time.[21] By other decisions the Running account.— Where a creditor has treated an account as a general and continuous one, and made a general application of payments thereon, he cannot afterward separate the items into two separate accounts, and apply the payments to the later items, since an application of a payment once lawfully made by either party is final and conclusive so that he cannot thereafter change it. 2. Intent of Parties. Payments by the debtor will be applied according to the intention of the parties where that can be determined with reasonable certainty.[29] And the court will not generally exercise the power of appropriating payments when an appropriation has already been made by either debtor or creditor.[30] Where an arrangement has been made that money paid shall be appropriated to the discharge of specified debts, the court may enforce the agreement.[31]

3. Justice and Equity Rule. Under the rules of the civil law, the application must be made to that debt which the debtor at the time has the most interest to discharge, irrespective of its effects on the creditor,[32] and this rule has been adopted in a few of the states in this country.[33] At common law, however, and in most of the states in this country, while there are cases laying down the rule that the creditor should be preferred,[34] yet the general rule is that the court will make the application in such a manner, in view of all the circumstances of the case, as is most in accord with justice and equity and will best protect and maintain the rights of both debtor and creditor.[35] In some states the application

In Quebec this is the statutory rule. Reg. v. Ogilvie, 29 Can. Sup. Ct. 299.

In Mississippi the rule has never been applied except where there has been two or more principal debts of unequal dignity, as bond or simple contract, or where they are unequally onerous, as mortgage and simple contract, or where one bears interest, or a high rate of interest, and the other bears none, or a less rate of interest. Miller v. Leflore, 32 Miss. 634.

If the intention of the debtor can be gathered from the surrounding circumstances of the case, it must prevail where application is made by the court. Conduitt v. Ryan, 3 Ind. App. 1, 29 N. E. 160; Bonaffe v. Woodberry, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 456; Cass v. McDonald, 39 Vt. 65; Robinson v. Doolittle, 12 Vt. 246; Hill v. Gregory, Wythe (Va.) 73.

An obligation as surety is not necessarily less onerous than one as principal, and a payment is not necessarily to be imputed to the latter rather than the former. Whether a debt be more or less onerous depends on the debtor's interest in discharging it. Denis v. Ramouin, 1 Rob. (La.) 318.

When application is beneficial to debtor.— Where a married woman borrowed money to pay for land, on which she gave a mortgage to secure the lender and the money so lent was charged on general account, and unappropriated payments were made sufficient to repay the money expended for the land, a court of equity will apply the payments to other items of the account, so as to preserve the lien, although the mortgage was void. Clark v. Clark, 58 Miss. 68.

But where there is an express agreement between the parties, or a course of business from which an agreement would be implied that another rule shall control, the debtor cannot invoke the principle that appropriations are to be made in the manner most beneficial to him. of payments is governed by statute.[36] It is generally held that the court will apply a payment to interest instead of principal;[37] to an interest-bearing debt in preference to one bearing no interest;[38] to the debt bearing the highest rate of interest;[39] to the payment of legal interest instead of that which is usurious;[40] to a debt that has matured rather than one not yet due;[41] to the payment of Equitable principles enforced at law.— In making the application of payments, the principles of equity are recognized at law, so far as the nature of the proceedings will admit. Thompson v. Phelan, 22 N. H. 339; Merrimack County Bank v. Brown, 12 N. H. 320.

In other cases it is said that the court will not make an application so as to favor either party, but will make such application as that, under all the circumstances, the greatest equity will be done or the mutual intention of the parties at the time of the payment, if it can be ascertained, will be best carried out. Stamford Bank v. Benedict, 15 Conn. 437. The rule which favors the debtor may be applied in proper instances where it will work equity, and the rule which favors the creditor may be applied in proper instances where it will work equity, but neither of these rules should be carried to an extreme or unreasonable length. Thorne v. Allen, 72 Minn. 461, 75 N. W. 706. If the creditor, by any application that may be made for him, can receive all for which the debtor is under an obligation to him, it should be applied in such a mode as will be least onerous to the debtor. When the interest of the debtor cannot be promoted by any particular application of the payment, or when it is a matter of indifference to him in which mode the application is made, the law raises a presumption that the payment was actually received in the way that was of least advantage to the creditor. Murdock v. Clarke, 88 Cal. 384, 26 Pac. 601.

Preservation of homestead right.— The application of payment should be made by the court so as to preserve a homestead right of the debtor where a part of the indebtedness which is the entire unsecured claim was created before the property constituting the homestead became exempt. Exception to rule.— While ordinarily a payment should be applied to the extinguishment of the interest upon the obligation bearing the highest rate of interest, yet where one of the obligations bearing a lower rate of interest provides for compounding of interest, the latter has the most interest and a payment should first be applied thereto, especially where the creditor will suffer no loss but will receive all that the debtor has obligated himself to pay to him. Where several notes, payable in merchandise on the first days of three successive years, were given, the merchandise delivered in the course of each year should be applied in satisfaction of the note falling due the legal items in an account rather than those which are illegal;[42] to an unsecured debt in preference to one for which the creditor is secured;[43] to a debt for which the security is most precarious where the creditor holds more than one security;[44] and, for the purpose of protecting the rights of the creditor, to the earlier items of an account in preference to later ones.[45] A payment will not be applied to a debt owing by the debtor to a third person,[46] nor to debts contracted after the payment,[47] nor to an indebtedness to be incurred in the future,[48] nor to unenforceable demands.[49] Where only one debt is shown to exist, of course the law will apply the payment to that debt.[50]

4. Priority of Debts — a. In General. Except where equitable principles require a different disposition thereof,[51] or where a different application has been made by the parties themselves,[52] it is a well-settled rule that a payment should be applied by the court to the oldest debt where there is more than one debt,[53]

that is, the debt first becoming due.[54] This rule is, however, subject to an exception where there are several bonds with different sureties.[55]

b. Items of Current Account. Likewise, in the case of a running account, where there are various items of debt on one side and various items of credit on the other occurring at different times, and no special appropriation of payments constituting the credits have been made by either party, the successive payments and credits are to be applied in discharge of the items of debit antecedently due, in the order of time in which they stand in the account. In other words each item of payment or credit is applied in extinguishment of the earliest items of debt until it is exhausted.[56] But if the intention of the parties appears other-

Leading case.— The case of Devaynes v. Noble, 1 Meriv. 529, 572, 35 Eng. Reprint 767, decided in 1816, and familiarly known as "Clayton's case," is the leading case on this point and the rule is often referred to as the rule in "Clayton's case."

Reason for rule.— Such an application is proper because it is most just and equitable between the parties and also because it is presumed to be the intention of both parties as being in accordance with the ordinary and usual course of dealing. Pierce v. Knight, 31 Vt. 701.

The interests of the creditor are preferred by this rule. Johnson's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 268.

A change in the method of bookkeeping is not such an interruption of the running of an account current as will prevent the application of the rule that the law will appropriate payments to the earliest items of the account where no appropriation was made by the parties. Goldsmith v. Lewine, 70 Ark. 516, 69 S. W. 308.

Where a note is given for money loaned in the course of the mutual dealings, the note enters into the mutual account. Rogers v. Yarnell, 51 Ark. 198, 10 S. W. 622.

Where debts arise from distinct transactions which are not brought into a common account, the rule does not apply. Cory v. Turkish Steamship Mecca, [1897] A. C. 286, 8 Aspin. 266, 66 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 86, 76 L. T. Rep. N. S. 579, 45 Wkly. Rep. 667.

Maturity of debts.— Where partial payments are on an account current, in case of the failure of the parties to make any appropriation the law will apply them to the different items which bear interest in the order in which they fall due. Scott v. Cleveland, 33 Miss. 447.

Credits growing out of a contract itself do not fall within the rule requiring credits to be applied to the antecedent unsecured indebtedness, or to the first items of debit in an account between the parties, like payments of money on account, but may properly be applied to the payment of indebtedness arising out of the contract from which they spring. Suter v. Ives, 47 Md. 520.

The fact that earlier items are secured by mortgage is immaterial. Buchanan v. Kerby, 5 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 332; Re Brown, 2 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 111.

The rule does not apply to two transactions of the same date.— Cory v. Turkish Steamship Mecca, [1897] A. C. 286, 8 Aspin. 266, 66 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 86, 76 L. T. Rep. N. S. 579, 45 Wkly. Rep. 667.

Mixing fiduciary account.— If a person who trary, the court will give effect thereto,[57] and the rule does not preclude a different application where justice so requires.[58] Where part of the items are illegal, a payment will be applied to the earliest legal items.[59] It is immaterial that the debtor's property is exempt as against all the other items except the first.[60] Where a debtor is indebted on two accounts, credits will be applied on the other account after the complete payment of one account.[61]

5. Secured and Unsecured Debts — a. In General. While in those states where the civil law rule has been adopted, the court will apply a payment to a secured rather than an unsecured debt,[62] the general rule outside of such jurisdictions is that it will be appropriated to the unsecured indebtedness.[63] So where neither the debtor nor the creditor directs the application, the law will apply a payment on holds money as a trustee or in a fiduciary character pays it to his account at his bankers and mixes it with his own money and afterward draws out sums by check in the ordinary manner, the rule does not apply and the drawer will be considered to have drawn out his own money in preference to the trust money. In re Hallett, 13 Ch. D. 696, 49 L. J. Ch. 415, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 421, 28 Wkly. Rep. 732.

Items must be due.— The items to which the payment is applied must be due. Effinger v. Henderson, 33 Miss. 449.

the debt which is least secured or for which the security is most precarious.[64] Of course the intention of the parties governs and this rule will not be applied when it is contrary thereto.[65]

b. Items of Account. Whether a payment on a running account will be appropriated to the earliest items where part are secured and part unsecured is not well settled; a majority of the cases hold that it will be applied to the earliest items,[66] while others hold that the application will be to the unsecured items.[67]

6. Illegal or Unenforceable Demands. Where there are several demands or items, some of which are legal and others illegal, a payment will be applied by the court to the legal charges rather than to unlawful claims.[68]

7. JOINT DEBTS AND DEBTS DUE DIFFERENT PERSONS.[69] Where a debtor is solely liable on one debt and jointly liable on another, a payment by him should be applied to the former.[70] So where, after the death of the debtor, his representative continues the business, and becomes further indebted on account, payments thereon will be applied to the earliest items.[71]

8. PAYMENT FROM PARTICULAR SOURCE OR FUND. When the money is derived from a particular source or fund, the court will apply it to the relief thereof, in the absence of a contrary agreement between the parties.[72] For instance, a payment made from the proceeds of mortgaged property must be applied in payment of the mortgage debt,[73] except where to do so would be inequitable.[74]

Any surplus over the interest due at the time must, in the absence of special agreement, be imputed to the principal. Johnson v. Robbins, 20 La. Ann. 569. Monthly payments by a debtor, in excess of the interest payable on the debt, will be applied to the principal of the debt, and will not be treated as compensation for extensions of time, although they were so denominated by the parties when made. Interest converted into capital.— The rule that payments on account are to be appropriated to interest before principal does not apply where, in the case of bankers' accounts, the interest has, on making up the account half yearly, been converted into capital. Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates, [1898] 2 Q. B. 460, 67 L. J. Q. B. 851, 79 L. T. Rep. N. S. 321, 47 Wkly. Rep. 42.

Notes received as payment.— Where notes are received by a creditor as a payment, he should credit them in the first place to the interest and then to the principal, as other payments. North v. Mallett, 3 N. C. 151.

Where there are several notes, payments will be applied: (1) To the interest due on the note first maturing; (2) to the principal ment must be applied to the principal,[82] but the weight of authority holds that it should be applied to the extinguishment of principal and such proportion of interest as has accrued on the principal so extinguished.[83] Where two or more debts are kept separate and distinct from each other and interest is applied expressly to one particular debt, the balance is to be applied to the principal of that debt.[84] But where there is in reality but one debt represented by different notes maturing at different times, the payment should first be applied to the interest due on the whole debt.[85] Payments of interest by mistake, when no interest was due, are applied as payments on the principal debt at the date of maturity of the obligation.[86] Where payments of interest are made in excess of the legal interest due, the excess will generally be applied to the principal.[87]

E. Rights of Third Persons — 1. In General. The exercise of the right of appropriation of payments belongs exclusively to the debtor and creditor and no third person can control or be heard for the purpose of compelling a different appropriation from that agreed upon by them.[88] But an appropriation by either of such note; (3) to the interest on the note next maturing, and so on. Miller v. Leflore, 32 Miss. 634.

In those states where the civil law rule is adopted as to appropriating a payment for the benefit of the debtor, it has been held that such rule has application solely to a contest between two principal debts, separate and distinct from each other, and does not apply where the question is as to the application between principal and interest. An assignee of a mortgagor cannot insist that money of the mortgagor, in the mortgagee's hands, should be used to pay off the mortgage, unless this was clearly contemplated by the parties, and the assignee made his purchase with the understanding that it should be so. Gordon v. Hobart, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,608, 2 Story 243.

Compliance with preëxisting agreement.— In the absence of fraud, a third person cannot require an imputation of payment between creditors and a debtor to be changed party cannot afterward be changed so as to injuriously affect the rights of third persons.[89] And if no specific appropriation of payments is made by either party until the enforceable rights of third persons holding under the debtor have been created, the creditor cannot so appropriate payments made by the debtor as to affect such rights, if, by a different appropriation, they can be protected.[90] So where the court is called upon to appropriate payments, the equities of third persons, although not controlling, should be considered.[91] Of course the parties cannot apply a payment to an invalid debt to the prejudice of a subsequent creditor.[92]

2. Guarantors, Sureties, Indorsers, and the Like.[93] Third persons, such as guarantors, sureties, indorsers, and the like, secondarily liable on one of the debts, cannot control the application of a payment by either the debtor or the creditor, and neither the debtor nor the creditor need apply the payment in the manner most beneficial to such persons.[94] So where neither party applies the payment,

But where an accommodation note was pledged by the payee as collateral to secure his debts to the pledgee without notice of its nature, the maker is entitled as surety to require the pledgee to first credit his actual payments, and the amount of other collateral which he surrendered without his consent after notice that the note pledged was an accommodation note, before resorting to the accommodation note in the payment of his claim against the pledger. Beacon Trust Co. v. Robbins, 173 Mass. 261, 53 N. E. 868.

Limitation of rule.— This rule applies to cases only where the principal makes the payment from funds which are his own and free from any equity in favor of the surety to have the money applied in payment of the

the court is not required to apply it so as to exonerate such third persons,[95] although their rights will be considered.[96] These rules are subject to the exception that where the payment, with the knowledge of the creditor, is derived from such third person, or from a fund connected with the secured debt, it must be applied thereto.[97] Where once appropriated by either party or both to the secured debt, the application cannot be changed as against the surety.[98]

VII. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

A. Nature of Defense. Payment in full is a valid affirmative defense,[99] although made before the maturity of the debt, the debtor having the privilege of paying the claim before it falls due.[1] It is matter in bar and not a set-off[2] or debt for which he is liable. For instance, where the specific moneys paid to the creditor and applied on a debt of a principal for which the surety is not bound are the very moneys for the collection and payment of which the surety is bound, he is equitably entitled to have the moneys applied to the payment of the debt for which he is surety unless the creditor can show that he has a superior equity to have them applied as they were applied. Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Herber, 68 Minn. 420, 71 N. W. 624.

Application to voidable portion of debt.— Where the principal pays a part of the claim which is applied to that portion which is voidable but not void, the surety cannot object. Allen v. Jones, 8 Minn. 202.

Agreement between payee and surety.— Where a debtor directs an application to a secured debt, it must be so applied irrespective of any agreement between the payee and the surety. Trentman v. Fletcher, 100 Ind. 105.

Where a secured debt is not due, but a payment is directed to be applied thereon, the creditor cannot apply it to an unsecured debt. Wetherill v. Joy, 40 Me. 325. See also supra, VI, C, 2, a.

Where a wife executed a mortgage on her estate to secure advances to be made to her through her husband, the husband being allowed, by the terms of the bond, to use the advances in his own business, the mortgagees may apply payments made by the husband, without special instructions as to their application, to the satisfaction of his own debt to them, rather than to the mortgage of the wife. counter-claim.[3] Part payment cannot be pleaded in bar of the entire cause of action.[4] Payment after suit brought may be pleaded in bar of the further maintenance of the action,[5] but it is too late to plead payment after judgment and an affirmance on appeal.[6] The debtor may be estopped to set up the defense of payment.[7]

B. Pleading[8] — 1. In Anticipation of Defense.[9] Non-payment need not be alleged in the complaint[10] except where failure to pay is an essential element of the cause of action.[11] However, non-payment may be pleaded,[12] but by so pleading plaintiff does not relieve himself from the necessity of replying to a plea of payment.[13] Where there is a presumption of payment from lapse of time, it has been held that facts rebutting such presumption must be alleged in the bill.[14]

Limitations of rule.— A defendant's allegation in her answer that she has "advanced" a stated sum to plaintiff does not amount to a plea of payment. Dickson v. Dickson, 32 La. Ann. 272. An allegation that the sum due has been "substantially, if not wholly" alleged the averments must be definite and certain.[25] The plea need not allege the amount paid,[26] nor the place of payment,[27] nor state by whom,[28] or to whom,[29] the payment was made. So it need not allege the exact date of payment,[30] although it must state, to constitute a bar to the action, that the payment was before commencement of the action.[31] If payment is made other than in money, paid is insufficient. Hardin County v. Weels, 108 Iowa 174, 78 N. W. 908. An allegation of payment in an answer, without showing that it was made on account of the claim sued upon, is insufficient. Esch v. Hardy, 22 Minn. 65.

Plea by intervener.— In an action on a note, a plea by an intervener, setting up that defendant had on a certain day fully accounted with plaintiff and fully discharged the note to the full satisfaction of plaintiff, and any cause of action or right of lien that may ever have existed between plaintiff and defendant by and under the note, is sufficient to admit evidence of satisfaction. Payment of "sum then demanded."— An averment in an answer that defendant, before the commencement of the action, paid the "sum then demanded" to plaintiff's agent, is not a good plea of payment, as the whole sum sued for may not have been demanded at that time. 28. Johnson v. Breedlove, 104 Ind. 521, 6 N. E. 906, holding that it is not necessary to allege that payment was made by the administrator of a decedent's estate, if the answer avers that plaintiff's claim was paid with moneys received from the estate, with the administrator's consent.

At common law the plea of payment must and so pleaded, the particulars should be alleged,[32] and acceptance thereof by the creditor as payment should generally be alleged.[33] Ordinarily the plea, at common law, concluded to the country.[34] The plea must not be inconsistent in itself,[35] as by denying indebtedness,[36] or be contradictory of other pleas.[37] It is not sufficient merely to plead evidence going to show payment,[38] although the inclusion of such allegations, where coupled with an averment of payment, does not make the plea demurrable.[39] Where a complaint alleges non-payment, a denial of such allegation is proper, as a part of the defense of payment,[40] although the negative averment of non-payment cannot ordinarily be put in issue by a mere general denial.[41] The presumption of payment from lapse of time should be raised by a plea of payment,[42] and not by merely stating the facts from which the presumption is claimed to arise,[43] nor by a plea of limitations.[44] The plea of payment may be directed to a particular part of the demand and another plea to the other part.[45] Where a payment is made by an agent of the debtor, it is proper to allege the payment on information and belief.[46] If the facts alleged in the plea constitute in law a payment, it is immaterial that the plea characterizes the legal consequences flowing from those facts as not being a payment.[47] And on the same theory the mere calling a defense of payment a counter-claim does not make it so.[48] If the plea is indefinite and uncertain it should not be stricken out,[49] but should be ordered to be made more specific.[50] allege that the payment was made either on the day the money was stipulated to be paid or on some day between that day and the date of the writing upon which the action is founded. McWaters v. Draper, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 494. By statute, however, a plea of payment after the day when the debt is due must aver payment of the whole sum then due. McWaters v. Draper, supra.

Return of note.—An answer to a complaint for money lent, which alleges merely that a check or bill of exchange was given by defendant for the amount due, and that it has not been returned but is still outstanding, does not make out a perfect defense, unless it also shows affirmatively that it is out of the possession or control of plaintiff. (II) Account or Bill of Particulars. Generally a plea of payment need not include an account, or a bill of items, or particulars.[51]

c. Affidavit of Defense. In those states where an affidavit of defense is interposed, the sufficiency thereof is in general governed by the ordinary rules relating to such affidavits.[52] It seems that more particularity is required than in ordinary pleas, it being held that all the circumstances of the alleged payment must be set forth with certainty and particularity and not generally and inferentially.[53] It is not sufficient to allege that the debt has been paid and that nothing is owing, but the affidavit must state with particularity the time, amount, and manner of payment, and the persons to and by whom it was made.[54] It is not enough to aver that the debtor has a receipt for money without alleging that he made payment, or that it was made for him.[55] If payment other than in money, as by note, bill, or check is alleged, it must be further stated that it was accepted by the creditor as payment.[56]

Statutory provisions.— Ariz. Rev. St. par. 742, requiring a defendant pleading payment to file an account stating the nature of the payment and the several items thereof, is only applicable where defendant proposes to prove items of payment, and hence does not preclude him from proving a single payment in full under the mere allegation that he had fully paid plaintiff. Cheda v. Skinner, 6 Ariz. 196, 57 Pac. 64. An affidavit setting forth that defendant held a due-bill of plaintiff, promising to pay in trade, in the articles for which plaintiff sued, a certain sum, which sum had been offered by defendant to plaintiff as part payment and refused, is sufficient. Jones v. Bely, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 139. An affidavit alleging payment of part, and tender of balance to plaintiff's attorney, is sufficient. Derr v. Coar, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 433.

d. Replication or Reply.[57] Where the complaint alleges non-payment and the answer avers payment, no reply is necessary inasmuch as the plea is in effect a general denial.[58] And in many jurisdictions a reply is not necessary where payment is pleaded as new matter,[59] while in other jurisdictions a reply is necessary.[60] Even after trial, it has been held proper to permit a nunc pro tunc entry of a reply.[61] The sufficiency of the replication or reply is governed by the rules relating to such pleadings in civil actions in general.[62] If one of several replications

In New York plaintiff is not permitted to reply to an answer setting up payment either in whole or in part (Bracket v. Wilkinson, 13 How. Affirmative asserted by defendant.— Plaintiff, in an action on a contract under seal, alleged that defendant had not paid the sum therein agreed upon, and defendant pleaded non est factum, and payment. It was held that issue as to payment could be joined on these pleadings alone, although the affirmative of the issue is asserted by defendant. McCart v. Regester, 68 Md. 429, 13 Atl. 361.

Fraud.— To a plea of payment and set-off, relying upon a note executed by plaintiff to a third person, and assigned to defendant, plaintiff may reply that the assignment was obtained by fraud. Hurd v. Earl, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 39. Where an answer alleges payment, a reply referring for facts to a paragraph of the answer in which satisfaction by way of exchange is pleaded, and alleging that such exchange had been made through fraud practised on plaintiff by defendant, is bad, as it is not a good reply to the allegation of payment. Atchinson v. Lee, 75 Ind. 132.

Receipt used for different purpose than intended.— Where a receipt purporting to be in full of demands is pleaded in bar, it is sufficient replication that the receipt was given for a specified purpose, and was now used for a different purpose, in violation of the intention of the parties. Tucker v. Baldwin, 13 Conn. 136, 33 Am. Dec. 384.

Allegation that payment was part payment.— Where the answer alleges that a certain sum was received by plaintiff in settlement for goods sold, a reply alleging that such sum was not accepted in full, but in part payment only, of which fact defendants had due notice, is not demurrable, although a general denial would have sufficed. Pottlitzer v. Wesson, 8 Ind. App. 472, 35 N. E. 1030.

Verification.— Where a plea of payment is filed, a replication supported by a receipt signed by plaintiff, and alleging fraud or mistake in such receipt, need not be supported by affidavit. Swann v. Muschke, 42 Tex. 342. A plea of payment, on the written order of plaintiff and replication not sworn to, denying the payment, does not put the execution of the order in issue. Early v. Patterson, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 449.

Joining issue on bill of particulars.— A replication to a plea of payment, which only puts in issue matters contained in a bill of particulars filed with the plea, and not the matter stated in the plea, is bad. Vanzant v. Shelton, 40 Miss. 332.

The words, "and the plaintiff doth the like," cannot be taken as a traverse of a plea of payment. Betts v. Francis, 1 Ill. 165.

A general replication to a plea of payment does not of itself constitute an issue, unless to a plea of payment is good, it is sufficient to sustain the action as against such defense.[63]

e. Demurrer. A plea of payment is not subject to general demurrer,[64] and it follows that the objection that the plea fails to specify the time of the payment can be urged only by special demurrer.[65] So a plea of part payment with a prayer for judgment is subject to a special but not a general demurrer.[66]

3. Construction and Operation. The plea of payment does not put in issue the debtor's original legal liability,[67] but admits the cause of action and that the debt once existed,[68] so as to put the burden of proof on the party pleading payment.[69] Specific statements of fact in regard to payment will control the general allegation.[70] The construction and operation of particular allegations in the complaint,[71] answer,[72] or reply[73] is governed by no fixed rules other than those relating to the construction and operation of pleadings in civil actions in general.[74] Plaintiff does not discontinue his action by replying to a plea of part payment, without taking judgment for the part of the debt unanswered.[75]

4. Issues, Proof, and Variance — a. In General.[76] Payment is a material issue,[77] and material matters relating to the payment, alleged by a party, must be proved by him.[78]

b. Evidence Admissible Under Pleadings — (i) In General.[79] Under a plea of payment, while the pleader cannot give evidence tending to disprove the cause of action alleged to have been paid,[80] any matters may be given in evidence which tend to show payment.[81] Evidence of the amount paid and the time and circumstances of its payment is admissible under the general allegation of payment.[82] Likewise, evidence of a partial payment is admissible as a defense pro tanto,[83] as is evidence of payment other than in money,[84] or evidence of application of to apply upon the particular goods for which a recovery is sought. See also infra, VII, C, 1.

particular funds by agreement to the discharge of the debt,[85] or evidence to show that payment is presumed from lapse of time.[86] So payment to the assignor,[87] or to a deputy sheriff on a capias ad satisfaciendum,[88] or to a third person pursuant to an agreement with the creditor,[89] is admissible under a general plea of payment. On the other hand, evidence of accord and satisfaction,[90] or of any special arrangement growing out of independent contracts,[91] or of a set-off,[92] or of a counter-claim,[93] or of a gift,[94] or a discharge,[95] or evidence to excuse non-payment,[96] or evidence of the discontinuance of the suit,[97] or evidence of a payment made after suit brought where the plea did not state when the payment was made,[98] has been held inadmissible under a general plea of payment. Evidence that payment was accepted under duress is inadmissible under a general denial of payment in a reply.[99] Where the plea is payment by the giving of a note, the debtor may show the custom of the creditor in receiving notes to support his contention that the note was accepted as payment.[1] To explain a check introduced by defendant, and alleged by him to have been received by plaintiff in full payment, plaintiff need not file a sworn plea in the nature of a plea of non est factum.[2] A receipt in full may be introduced in evidence under a plea denying the agreement to pay, to show the improbability that such an agreement existed prior to the date of such receipt.[3]

assumpsit,[4] the present rule in nearly all the states, governed largely by code provisions as to pleading new matter as a defense, is that evidence of payment is not admissible under a general denial.[5] And this is equally so where the general denial is contained in a reply.[6] Furthermore, the general rule is that a negative averment of non-payment cannot be put in issue by a general denial so as to authorize evidence of payment,[7] although there are cases holding that where the fact of non-payment is alleged in the complaint as a necessary and material fact to constitute a cause of action, evidence of payment is admissible under a general denial.[8] There is an exception where suit is brought to recover an unpaid balance in which case defendant may prove other payments under a general denial.[9] And in at least one jurisdiction, evidence of payment is admissible under a general denial where the complaint merely alleges the indebtedness in general terms but not where particulars of the claim are stated.[10] So, under a general denial, evidence is admissible to show that no indebtedness to plaintiff ever existed on account of the money received and applied by defendant.[11]

c. Variance.[12] The evidence must correspond with the allegations in the pleadings,[13] and payment must be proved as alleged in the pleadings.[14] So the proof as to payments must be within, and correspond with, the bill of particulars.[15] An averment of payment is not supported by proof of tender,[16] nor that the obligation sued on has become outlawed,[17] nor of an accord and satisfaction,[18] nor of an agreement to set off mutual demands,[19] nor of a counter-claim,[20] nor of a discharge in law.[21] Where payment in full is pleaded and only part payment is proved, the debtor is entitled to credit for that part which he proves to be paid.[22] Where payment on the day the debt became due is pleaded, evidence of payment after the date is not admissible.[23] So where payment is alleged to have been made by one person, evidence that it was made by another is inadmissible.[24] But it has been held that an averment of the place of payment will not preclude the party from showing payment at a different place.[25] is essential to the stating of plaintiff's cause of action, a general denial by defendant places the burden of proof on plaintiff.[29] If payment is made to a third person for the creditor, the burden is upon the debtor to show that such third person was authorized to receive payment.[30] If there is a presumption of payment, either from lapse of time,[31] or from the possession of the evidence of indebtedness by the debtor,[32] the burden of showing non-payment is on the creditor. So where a transaction, on its face, constitutes a payment, the burden of proving the contrary is on the creditor.[33] Where a credit is indorsed on the instrument sued on, the burden of proving it as a payment is nevertheless on the debtor unless the indorsement is in the handwriting of the creditor.[34] The burden is upon the creditor to prove new matter in the reply or an amended complaint in avoidance of the defense of payment.[35] Where a contract calls for the payment of a certain number of dollars, the burden is on the debtor to show that the parties intended the payment should be made in Confederate currency.[36] such as a draft,[38] note,[39] or check,[40] etc., the burden is on the payer to show that it was accepted by the payee as payment. But where a note or bill of a third person is received for a present, and not a precedent debt, it has been held that the presumption is that it was agreed to be taken in payment and the burden of proving the contrary rests upon plaintiff.[41] If the creditor claims that he returned the property, the burden is on him to prove such fact.[42] So if the creditor asserts that what he accepted and received as money was not such in fact, the burden is on him to prove such claim.[43] Where a draft on a third person is accepted in full satisfaction of the debt when paid, the burden is on the creditor to show due diligence in presenting the draft for payment and giving notice of its dishonor.[44]

3. CONTRADICTION OF RECEIPT. It is generally said that the burden of proof is on the party seeking to impeach a receipt,[45] although there are cases holding otherwise on the theory that the burden of proof never shifts.[46] Where the debtor produces a receipt for a sum less than the debt in full therefor, the burden has been held to be on those contesting its sufficiency to show that the debt had not been reduced to the sum stated in the receipt.[47] Where a receipt is expressly stated to be on account, the burden is not on the creditor to show that it was not in full satisfaction of the claim.[48] A debtor alleging payment in full by a check containing the words "in full of all demands," has the burden of showing that the check contained those words when it was accepted by the creditor.[49]

4. APPLICATION OF PAYMENT. The burden of proving a particular application of a payment by either the debtor or creditor is on the party claiming that such application was made.[50] For instance, the burden of proving that a payment of one note by the debtor was by mistake and was intended to be applied on another note is on the debtor.[51] Where payments are applied by the parties, the burden is upon a surety to show that it is inequitable as to him.[52]

D. Presumptions[53] — 1. In General — a. Time of Payment. A debt will be presumed to have been paid, where payment is proved or admitted at the maturity of the debt.[54] So where a person draws an order in favor of another, it will be presumed that the consideration for it was paid or secured at the time it was drawn.[55] And if the time of payment for goods sold is not fixed by the parties, it will be presumed that payment is to be made upon delivery of the goods.[56]

b. Medium of Payment. Where a debt is extinguished, it will be presumed that it was discharged by the payment of money or its equivalent.[57] Generally it will be presumed that payment was made in lawful money.[58] A debt will not be presumed to be payable in gold unless such implication can be found in the language of the contract.[59] Where a payment is indorsed in the same monetary terms which are used in the evidence of indebtedness itself, the presumption is that it was intended to be credited in the same circulating medium.[60]

c. Transfer of Property Other Than Money. Where property other than money,[61] such as a chose in action,[62] is transferred by the debtor to the creditor, it will not generally be presumed that it was accepted as an absolute payment. But it has been held that where a father was indebted to his children and conveyed to them property, the value of which nearly equaled the debt or was in excess thereof, it will be presumed to have been in satisfaction of the debt.[63]

d. Possession of Obligation.[64] The possession by the creditor of a writing providing for the payment of money, after maturity, is prima facie evidence that the debt evidenced thereby is unpaid.[65] On the other hand, its possession by the debtor raises a presumption of payment.[66]

Transfer of property by partner.— Where, in an action against the executor of a deceased partner, there is positive uncontradicted evidence that another partner personally transferred certain realty in payment of one half of a partnership obligation, proof that the true value of the property was sufficient to discharge the whole debt raises no presumption that such transfer wiped out the debt. Payment from fund other than one specially created for the purpose.— If land be conveyed in order that the grantee may sell the same and reimburse himself for certain moneys paid for the grantor, who afterward dies and makes the grantee his executor, who received his personal estate, there is no legal presumption, in the absence of positive proof, that there was any other fund applied to the payment of the debt of the grantee than the one specially created for the purpose. The fact that a bond and mortgage, found among the papers of the mortgagee after his death, are surrendered to the mortgagor by a person who, although thereafter appointed administrator, has at the time of the surrender no authority to represent the estate, does not weaken the presumption, raised by the mortgagee's possession of the papers, that they were still valid and unpaid. e. Cancellation of Obligation. Cancellation by the creditor of the evidence of indebtedness by destruction, mutilation, or otherwise raises a presumption of payment.[67]

f. Dual Obligation to Pay and Authority to Receive. When a dual obligation to pay and the duty and authority to demand and receive payment of a debt coexist in the same person, the law presumes the debt to be paid.[68] But there must be concurrence and coexistence of the legal obligation to pay and of the authority and duty to demand and receive payment.[69]

g. Remittanee by Mail.[70] A remittance by mail will not be presumed a payment in the absence of proof that the creditor requested such remittance or that it was warranted by the course of business.[71] So the depositing a letter containing money in the post-office, properly addressed to the creditor, creates no presumption that he received it in the absence of evidence that he directed it to be so sent.[72]

h. Miscellaneous Presumptions. There are various other miscellaneous presumptions which may arise.[73] Generally it will be presumed that the sum due is drawn on it in favor of complainant or his order, coupled with evidence that it was not its custom to require a payee to indorse the check when paid to him in person, is not sufficient to show payment to him, when denied by him. Assent of creditor to deposit with third person.— Where money is deposited by the debtor with a third person for the payment of a debt, the assent of the creditor thereto, where the arrangement is beneficial for him, may be presumed when he has knowledge of such deposit, but such knowledge will not be presumed merely from proof of the transaction between the debtor and depositary. unpaid.[74] Where money is transferred by a debtor to his creditor it is ordinarily presumed to be a payment,[75] a payment being presumed rather than a loan.[76] So payment may be presumed from the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties,[77] as where the creditor gives his note or makes a payment to defendant after the accrual of the cause of action on which the suit is brought.[78] So it has been held that it will be presumed, where a promissory note is given by a debtor to his creditor, that all demands between the parties were settled at the date of the note and that it was given for the balance due.[79]

i. Conclusiveness and Rebuttal Thereof. The presumptions already referred to are presumptions of fact rather than presumptions of law, and hence are rebuttable by other evidence.[80] For instance, the presumption of payment arising against claims for debts alleged to remain unpaid while subsequent demands are proved or admitted to have been discharged is one of fact liable to be repelled by proof to the contrary.[81]

2. Payment by Bills, Notes, or Checks — a. Bills or Notes of Debtor. While in some of the states the presumption is that a negotiable bill or note given by the debtor to his creditor for a debt due is received in payment,[82] no such presumption arises in most of the states,[83] the presumption being that it is accepted merely as a conditional payment.[84]

the fact that the administratrix gave to a debtor of intestate a check for a sum of money does not create a presumption that the debt to intestate had been paid.

b. Bills or Notes of Third Person. A bill, acceptance, or note of a third person is ordinarily presumed to be a conditional rather than an absolute payment,[85] although where the note of a third person is taken for a contemporaneous debt, there is a presumption, in some states, that the parties agreed it should be taken in payment.[86] The retention of notes for several years may, however, raise a presumption that they were accepted as payment.[87]

c. Checks. Ordinarily the delivery of the check of the debtor,[88] or of a third person,[89] will not be presumed to have been accepted as absolute payment, but the presumption is that it was accepted merely as a conditional payment. But where the debtor draws a check in favor of his creditor and the latter receives the money thereon, it is presumed that it was in payment of the existing debt due from the debtor to the creditor.[90]

d. Conclusiveness and Rebuttal Thereof. Any presumption which may exist that the delivery of a bill, note, or check, whether of the debtor or a third person, is accepted as absolute payment, may be rebutted by evidence showing that such was not the intention of the parties.[91] On the other hand, the presumption existing in most of the states that a bill, note, or check is not accepted as payment is rebuttable.[92]

3. APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS.[93] Generally there is no presumption that a payment was applied to the particular obligation in suit.[94] It has been held that it will be presumed that a payment was applied upon a demand admitted rather than on one in dispute;[95] to principal rather than interest;[96] on an interest-bearing demand rather than on one not bearing interest;[97] on an unsecured rather than a secured debt;[98] to the weaker of two secured claims;[99] on account of the mortgage debt rather than on another debt;[1] to an existing debt rather than to one for which the debtor holds a receipt;[2] and to the oldest items of an account due at the time of payment.[3] Where there is only one indebtedness, it will be presumed that payments were made to apply thereon.[4] Where the payment exceeds the amount due for legal sales and the indebtedness is partly for legal and partly for illegal sales, it will not be presumed that the payments were made in advance to be applied on future legal sales.[5] Application by the creditor on his books does not raise the presumption that the debtor so applied the payment where the latter had no access to the books and no knowledge of the application.[6] Failure of a creditor to indorse payments on a note has been held to justify the presumption that it was understood that such payments were intended to be applied on other indebtedness.[7] It will not be presumed that a payment was intended to be applied on a debt not due,[8] nor that money of the principal drawn from a bank by his agent was applied by the agent to any particular indebtedness,[9] nor, where a creditor appropriates a payment to a particular debt, that the debtor directed the application to another debt.[10]

4. LAPSE OF TIME — a. In General. Independently of statute, a presumption of payment may arise merely from the lapse of time.[11] Payment may be pre-

Rebuttal of presumption.— The presumption that payments made on an account current are to be applied in discharge of the earliest items in the account is not rebutted by the fact that those items are for goods sold on condition that they shall not become the property of the purchaser till paid for, although a memorandum of the condition is entered by the seller in his books containing the account. sumed, although the claim is not barred by limitations,[12] and a statute providing for the limitation of actions does not abrogate the common-law presumption.[13] This presumption of payment, however, while available to a defendant as a shield, cannot be used as a sword for affirmative aggressive actions,[14] nor can it be relied on by third persons.[15] So such presumption, when the statute of limitations has not run, is one of fact and not of law,[16] and is not a bar to the action but is merely a rule of evidence affecting the burden of proof.[17] In some of the states this common-law presumption has been reiterated by statute, or a different time prescribed the lapse of which raises a presumption of payment.[18]

Effect of death of witnesses.— The fact of payment may be inferred from lapse of time, accompanied by circumstances strongly tending to negative the idea that payment has not been made, especially where witnesses have died whose testimony, probably, would tion with other circumstances, although those circumstances in themselves would not establish the fact of payment.[25] Exactly what these circumstances may be is not susceptible of definition.[26] The presumption strengthens as the time approaches twenty years and the circumstances needed to establish it are measured by a diminishing scale.[27] Evidence that the creditor has been constantly pressed for money while the debtor was abundantly able to pay is sufficient, in connection with the lapse of less than twenty years, to justify the presumption of payment,[28] although the mere fact that the debtor was able to pay is not of itself sufficient to cause the presumption to arise in less than twenty years.[29]

c. Indebtedness to Which Rule Applies.[30] The presumption of payment from lapse of time applies to all indebtedness, however evidenced,[31] whether by bond,[32] bill or note,[33] mortgage,[34] judgment,[35] or otherwise. It also applies to legacies or other claims against an executor or administrator.[36]

d. When Time Begins to Run. A presumption of payment from lapse of time arises only where sufficient time has elapsed when computed from the time the cause of action accrued.[37]

e. Conclusiveness and Rebuttal Thereof — (i) In General. The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is not conclusive but is merely a presumption of fact which is rebuttable.[38] Its effect is merely to make a prima facie case in favor of the debtor as to payment and to put the burden of showing non-payment on the creditor.[39] After what lapse of time beyond twenty years, if ever, this disputable presumption will become conclusive has never been determined.[40]

(II) Particular Facts—(A) In General. It has been held that the creditor must prove such facts as are required to take a case out of the statute of limitations;[41] but the weight of authority holds that the presumption may be rebutted not only by such facts but also by any others tending to show that the debt has in fact not been paid.[42] For instance, the presumption may be rebutted by evidence that the debtor was not in condition to pay,[43] or had no opportunity or means of paying,[44] or by showing that the debtor induced such delay,[45] or general circumstances creating an improbability that payment was made.[46] So it has been held that the presumption may be rebutted by evidence of the possession of the written obligation by the creditor,[47] although the fact of possession by the creditor has been held not to rebut the presumption, where he had access to the debtor's papers.[48] Likewise the presumption has been repelled by showing that the creditor was a near relation of the debtor and that an earlier enforcement would have distressed him.[49] But it has been held, although there is a conflict in the decisions, that a demand by the creditor for payment is not alone sufficient to repel the presumption of payment.[50]

(B) Acknowledgment of Debt and Partial Payment. The presumption may be rebutted by evidence of an unqualified acknowledgment or admission, either express or implied, on the part of the debtor, of the justness of the claim and that it is still due and unpaid,[51] although not coupled with a promise to pay,[52] as by making a part payment thereof.[53] But the presumption cannot be rebutted so as to charge a coöbligor by the acknowledgment of non-payment by the other obligor made in the absence of the obligor sought to be charged;[54] although part payment by one obligor before the expiration of the time necessary to raise a presumption of payment will take the case out of the rule of presumptions as to all his coöbligors.[55]

war,[57] or during the time when the statute of limitations was suspended.[58] But coverture of the creditor at the time the cause of action arose and subsequent thereto does not affect the presumption.[59] So, if the creditor is an infant at the time the cause of action accrues, the presumption begins to run from the accrual of the cause of action and not from the time the infant becomes of age.[60]

(D) Absence of Creditor or Debtor From State. Non-residence of the creditor does not affect the presumption.[61] And there is considerable authority holding likewise as to the non-residence or absence of the debtor.[62] There are cases, however, holding that the non-residence of the debtor, or his absence from the state for the greater part of the period relied on to create a presumption of payment, will rebut such presumption,[63] whether his absence is in an adjoining or remote state.[64] At any event, the absence of one of two joint debtors without the state, the other being present and accessible to creditors, does not repel the presumption.[65]

(E) Insolvency of Debtor. The presumption may also be rebutted by showing the insolvency of the debtor,[66] although it has been held that the debtor must be shown to have been insolvent during the entire period.[67] But the insolvency of one of two joint debtors, the other being solvent, does not repel the presumption.[68]

there was no person to whom payment could be made is not to be included.[69] So the want of a person against whom to bring suit, as where an administrator of a debtor's estate was not appointed for some time, rebuts the presumption of payment arising from forbearance to sue.[70]

(G) Institution of Proceedings to Enforce Payment. The pendency of an action to enforce the claim during the period relied on to raise the presumption is sufficient to rebut it, where the action has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence.[71] But the mere commencement of a suit which is subsequently abandoned will not rebut the presumption.[72]

(III) Sufficiency of Evidence in Rebuttal in General. The general rule is that the evidence to overcome the presumption must be clear and convincing and sufficient to satisfy the jury that the debt has not been paid,[73] but it does not require so strong evidence to rebut the presumption as it does to take a case out of the statute of limitations.[74] This presumption gathers strength with each year that is added to the first twenty and the strength of the evidence that will overcome it must be correspondingly increased.[75] To rebut the presumption the creditor must not only produce evidence of indebtedness or satisfactorily account for its absence, but he must also introduce evidence which will convince the court or jury that the debt is still unpaid.[76]

E. Admissibility of Evidence — 1. In General. Any circumstance which tends to make the proposition of payment either more or less probable is relevant and admissible in evidence on the issue of payment.[77] For instance,

In an action against an executor on a note assigned by his testator, evidence that any person had agreed to pay for the testator is not admissible to show payment. Abercrombie v. Sheldon, 8 Allen (Mass.) 532. In an action on a note executed by defendant's testator, evidence that testator had made a list of his debts, in which the note in question was not included, is not admissible to show payment of the note in question. Abercrombie v. Sheldon, 8 Allen (Mass.) 532. In a suit by a banker against the accepter of a bill, the fact that the drawer had an account with the banker, and that after protest of the bill there were balances in favor of the drawer, was not admissible as evidence in favor of the accepter to show a payment or satisfaction by the drawer. Citizens' Bank v. Carson, 32 Mo. 191. Testimony as to the result of computations tending to show payment is not admissible where the testimony shows the data on which the results were based, the results being only arithmetical reckonings. An offer to pay an award of arbitrators within the time allowed for an appeal, partly in bonds and partly in money, is not in the nature of a compromise, but a mode of payment; and therefore, in an action on a bond given in satisfaction of the award, such offer may be given in evidence to show acknowledgment of the validity of the debt. Swan v. Scott, 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 155.

Payment by mistake.— On an issue as to whether payment of a note by the bank at which it was made payable was made by mistake, evidence offered to show that the bank's cashier applied to the maker of the note to have his account made good, so as to cover the payment of the note, and that it was only on discovery of the maker's insolvency that the cashier concluded to protest the note, is admissible. Whiting v. Rochester City Bank, 77 N. Y. 363.

Bond to show payment of interest.—Where a note was given for the interest on a bond, and afterward another bond and note were made in lieu of the former, in an action on the latter note, the first bond is admissible in evidence to ascertain if the interest thereon had been paid otherwise than by the note. Smith v. Taylor, 39 Me. 242.

Where payment in goods is alleged, general evidence of the delivery of goods, etc., by the debtor to the creditor is admissible. Henry v. Scott, 3 Ind. 412.

Payment by third person see Goldstein v. Smiley, 168 Ill. 438, 48 N. E. 203. A direction by letter, from a third person to the payees of a note, to pay the same out of the proceeds of certain property in the hands of the payers belonging to such third person, is inadmissible as evidence of the payment of the note, unless it appears that the request has been complied with. King v. Bush, 36 Ill. 142.

Deposit in bank.— In an action on a note, when defendant asserts that before suit he deposited the amount due on the note, evidence that the money deposited in the bank was withdrawn by him on his own check is admissible to show that it was not deposited to pay the note, but for defendant's own use. Low v. Warden, 77 Cal. 94, 19 Pac. 235.

Disproving payment of claim not in suit.— Where a witness testifies to facts tending to prove payment of the demand in suit and of other demands not in suit, it is not competent to produce one of such claims not in suit for the purpose of disproving payment of such claim. Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 718.

Items of account arising more than six years before suit.— In an action to recover the balance due on a general account containing debit and credit items, it is error to exclude evidence of all items of charge, which arose more than six years before suit, since there is a presumption that the subsequent payments made within six years of the dates of such items were applied to these earlier items. Maloney v. Bartlett, 172 Pa. St. 284, 33 Atl. 553.

Reason for delay in suing.— In a suit on a receipt for money on deposit, when defendant denies receipt of the money, and also pleads payment of what he did receive, plaintiff may testify why she has delayed bringing suit so long. De Vay v. Dunlap, 7 Ind. App. 690, 35 N. E. 195.

Under the scaling ordinance adopted in the southern states after the Civil war, under which, in suits for the enforcement of contracts made within a specified period during

sible.[78] So evidence as to the source of the money which the debtor claims he paid the creditor at a certain time is admissible,[79] as is evidence that the debtor had access to the safe of another with authority to take therefrom money for his needs,[80] or evidence to show that certain amounts of money had been paid to the attorneys of the creditor to be applied on the debt.[81] Where the debtor claims to have discharged the debt by the rendition of services, evidence as to the character of such services is admissible,[82] as is evidence that he had been paid for said services other than by credits on the indebtedness sued on.[83] So the fact that the creditor has failed to include the debt sued on in enumerating his assets is evidence that it has been paid.[84] So the fact that a creditor fails to file a claim against an insolvent estate is admissible as a circumstance determining whether payment has been made.[85] But evidence that the debtor borrowed money to pay a debt is not admissible,[86] nor is mere evidence of a demand of payment to show non-payment.[87] Where the note sued on was pledged as collateral for another note, evidence as to the consideration of the principal note is irrelevant.[88] On an issue as to whether payment was made at a certain time, evidence that on other occasions the creditor had forgotten or was mistaken about the payment made to him is not admissible.[89] Evidence that other employees on the same job at the same time were paid by the employer is not admissible to show payment to the employee seeking to recover therefor.[90]

2. Admissions and Declarations.[91] Admissions of the debtor are admissible to show non-payment,[92] and admissions of the creditor are admissible to show payment.[93] But self-serving declarations of either the debtor or creditor are not admissible.[94] For instance, an entry made by the debtor in his own favor is inadmissible to prove payment,[95] even where offered in evidence after his death.[96] So declarations of a third person not a party to the suit are not admissible.[97] Statements made by the debtor and creditor at the time of the examination of accounts and agreement on a balance due are admissible in a subsequent suit on the debt.[98] So declarations of the partner to the effect that the debtor was a member of the firm are admissible to show that the creditor took a firm note under misapprehension without intending to release the debtor.[99]

95. Schwartz v. Allen, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 5.

An entry made nineteen years previous to the trial, in the debtor's books, that a note of twenty-three years' standing was paid,

3. FINANCIAL CONDITION OF DEBTOR OR CREDITOR — a. In General. Evidence that the debtor was able to pay is not admissible to show payment,[1] but evidence of inability to pay is admissible to show non-payment.[2] So evidence of the bad financial condition of the debtor at the time the contract was made is admissible on the issue as to whether payment was to be made before or after delivery of the property contracted for.[3] The creditor may be asked what money or means he had preceding, at the time of, and within a reasonable period following the transaction when payment was claimed to have been made, and the sources from which he derived money subsequently gained.[4] Evidence that the creditor had funds of the debtor in his possession after the maturity of the debt is admissible to show payment.[5] Where payment is alleged to have been made from the salary of the debtor, evidence as to the amount of salary received by him is admissible to disprove his testimony.[6] Evidence of the amount of money the creditor had shortly before his death is not admissible to show a payment made at that time.[7] To prove non-payment, evidence is admissible to show conduct on the part of the debtor inconsistent with the defense.[8]

b. To Aid or Rebut Presumption From Lapse of Time. In aid of the presumption of payment from lapse of time, any evidence is admissible which tends to show actual payment,[9] such as evidence of the solvency of the debtor,[10] and the financial embarrassment of the creditor.[11] On the other hand, to repel the presumption of payment from lapse of time, the general rule is that evidence is admissible on behalf of the creditor to show that the debtor had not the means[12] or opportunity[13] of paying the debt during the period of time claimed to raise the presumption of payment.

4. Habits of Debtor or Creditor as to Promptness. Evidence that the debtor is in the habit of paying his bills promptly is not admissible.[14] However, in aid of the presumption of payment from lapse of time, it has been held that evidence is admissible to show the character of the creditor for promptness in the collection of his debts,[15] although there is authority to the contrary.[16]

5. To Explain Acceptance of Commercial Paper or Security. Evidence is admissible on behalf of the creditor to show that a bill, note, or check accepted by the creditor was not taken as an absolute payment.[17] On the other hand, to prove that a bill, note, or check was received as an absolute payment, evidence is admissible as to the circumstances surrounding the transaction, including the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties, as well as direct proof of an express agreement.[18] Where the note of a third person is given to the creditor, evidence is admissible to show fraudulent misrepresentations of the debtor that the maker of the note was solvent,[19] or to show his knowledge of such insolvency at the time the note was transferred and his concealment of such fact from the creditor.[20]

6. To Aid or Rebut Presumption From Lapse of Time.[21] Where the lapse of time is relied on to raise a presumption of payment, evidence fairly tending to support or rebut the presumption is admissible, as is testimony explaining and contradicting evidence tending to rebut such presumption.[22] Any evidence, the Insolvency in connection with other circumstances.— Where a debtor relies upon the presumption of payment from the lapse of time, and the creditor endeavors to rebut that presumption by showing his insolvency, the creditor may also offer in evidence the circumstance of the debtor's living at a great distance from him, as tending to show that, although the debtor may have had property for a short time, yet the creditor had not an opportunity of knowing that fact and of getting satisfaction out of that property. Under some of the statutes, however, the evidence which may be given in rebuttal is limited. Morey v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 14 N. Y. 302, holding that where the statute provided that the presumption "may be repelled by proof of payment of some part, or by proof of a written acknowledgment of such right of action," oral evidence of a written acknowledgment of the right of action is not admissible.

Affidavit of defense.—To overcome the presumption of payment from the lapse of time of more than twenty years, the creditor cannot introduce part only of the affidavit of defense. Hart v. Bucher, 186 Pa. St. 384, 40 Atl. 511.

24. Garnier v. Renner, 51 Ind. 372.

Amount of mortgage.— On the issue as to whether lapse of time less than twenty years is sufficient to show payment in connection with other circumstances, where the debtor contends that he was abundantly able to pay the claim for several years before the commencement of the action, a question as to how much of a mortgage was on his premises was relevant. Hasper v. Weipcamp, 167 Ind. 371, 79 N. E. 191.

The account-books of the creditor, although not conclusive, are competent evidence to show the application intended by him of payments by the debtor, where there are several debts. Missouri Cent. Lumber Co. v. Stewart, 78 Mo. App. 456; Van Rensselaer v. Roberts, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 470. See also Smith v. Camp, 84 Ga. 117, 10 S. E. 539; Gardere v. Fisk, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 387.

Self-serving declarations.— The entry of a payment by the creditor on a particular debt is not admissible as evidence in his favor on an issue as to how the debtor directed the application. Craig v. Miller, 103 Ill. 605.

Probability of agreement.— On an issue as to the agreement between the parties, evidence is admissible as tending to show what agreement is probable. Brown v. Cahalin, 3 Oreg. 45.

Recitals in a written instrument as to the balance remaining unpaid on a former indebtedness are admissible as an admission by the debtor that payments had been properly applied. Taylor v. Cockrell, 80 Ala. 236.

Conclusion of fact.— Where defendant, in an action on a non-negotiable note, sets up payment by a deceased joint maker, testimony of plaintiff as to whether the payment was or was not made on the note is competent, under an objection that it called for a conclusion of fact of which the jury are the sole judges. Evans v. Deming, 2 N. Y. St. 349.

26. Snell v. Cottingham, 72 Ill. 124; Bayley v. Wynkoop, 10 Ill. 449; Howland v. Rench, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 236.

Time of declarations.— To show an application of a payment by the debtor, evidence of declarations of the debtor previous or subsequent to the time of payment is admissible. Waters v. Tompkins, 2 C. M. & R. 723, 5 L. J. Exch. 61, 1 Tyrw. & G. 137.

Parol evidence is admissible to show the intent of the debtor, with notice of such intent to the creditor. Wittkowsky v. Reid, 82 N. C. 116; Bray v. Crain, 59 Tex. 649. On the other hand evidence of the intent of the debtor is not admissible unless it is also shown that the intent was at the time known to the creditor. Brice v. Hamilton, 12 S. C. 32.

was sufficient to cancel it.[29] Where the appropriation is to be made by the court, evidence of the debts to which the payment might be applied is admissible.[30]

8. Value of Property. Where property is delivered in part payment of a debt, evidence is admissible on behalf of the debtor to show its value at the place of delivery, in the absence of any agreement as to the price.[31] If the question is whether certain personalty was transferred with land in payment of a debt evidence of the value of the land is admissible.[32] Under the statutes passed in some of the Confederate states after the war making the value of property sold the limit of liability, it is competent to show what estimate was put on the property by the parties themselves at the time of the sale.[33]

9. Medium of Payment. Evidence is admissible to show that the agreement was to pay in a certain medium,[34] or that a certain medium was accepted as payment.[35] But evidence to show that a written instrument is payable otherwise than its terms indicate is inadmissible.[36] Where the obligation was payable in Confederate money and an action was brought after the close of the war, evidence is admissible to show the value of the specified sum in lawful money.[37] So evidence that a certain kind of money was the only currency generally in circulation in a certain locality at the time of a certain payment is admissible to establish a payment in such currency to corroborate other evidence tending to the same end.[38] Evidence that brokers and merchants refused to receive bank-bills, when presented by the creditor, which he had received from the debtor in payment of a debt, is admissible to show that they were not current or available to the creditor as money.[39]

10. Payment by or to Third Person. Evidence of payment by a third person is inadmissible unless it is also shown that it was paid for the debtor and accepted by the creditor as payment.[40] Likewise evidence of payment to a third person not shown to be authorized by the creditor to accept payment is not admissible.[41]

Circumstantial evidence is admissible to show that a contract was to be discharged in Confederate money. Heilbroner v. Douglass, 45 Tex. 402.

Gold or silver.— Where the writing evidencing the indebtedness does not specify the particular kind of money in which it is payable, evidence is not admissible that it was understood and agreed that it should be paid in either gold or silver, nor is evidence of a mercantile usage making it payable in gold or silver. Langenberger v. Krœger, 48 Cal. 147, 17 Am. Rep. 418.

Payment in Confederate money.— Where a written instrument is proved to be payable in dollars, it is error to allow the debtor to show by parol that the parties intended payment in Confederate money. Miller v. Lacy, 33 Tex. 351.

Payment by person receiving goods.— But in an action for the price of goods sold, where the debtor purchased them for the benefit of a third person, evidence that the creditor had been paid by such third person is admissible, although the latter is not a party to the suit and did not act as defendant's agent in making the payment. Gray v. Herman, 75 Wis. 453, 44 N. W. 248, 6 L. R. A. 691.

41. See Hooks v. Frick, 75 Ga. 715.

Deposit in bank.— Evidence that defendant received and drew checks upon certain bankers is inadmissible to show that a deposit with them to his credit was a lawful payment to him. Bluntzer v. Dewees, 79 Tex. 272, 15 S. W. 29.

Authority of employee.— Where a certain employee accepted and receipted payments made to the creditor, it was competent for him to testify whether any other person than himself had anything to do with payments made to the creditor. A. A. Cooper Wagon, etc., Co. v. Barnt, 123 Iowa 32, 98 N. W. 356.

11. Documentary Evidence — a. In General. The rules relating to admissibility of documentary evidence in general govern the admissibility of documentary evidence of payment.[42] Documentary evidence, although not reciting payment, may be admissible as a fact, having some tendency, however slight, to show payment.[43] A book of account is inadmissible to prove, from the absence of an entry therein, that certain money was not paid.[44] Documentary evidence is admissible even though it shows the existence of a debt presumed to be paid from lapse of time, since the presumption may be afterward rebutted by other evidence.[45]

b. Judicial Records. Judicial records bearing on the issue of payment are admissible.[46]

c. Receipts or Other Acknowledgments.[47] Receipts given by a party to the action are admissible against him as evidence of the payment recited therein,[48]

42. See Evidence, 12 Cyc. 296 et seq. See also Dorsey v. Gassaway, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 402, 3 Am. Dec. 557; Roberts v. Cocke, 120 N. C. 465, 27 S. E. 143.

The books of a bank, which do not show whether the checks drawn upon it were payable to bearer or to order, or the names of the persons in whose favor they were drawn, are not competent evidence of money paid to any particular person. Boyd v. Wilson, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,751, 2 Cranch C. C. 525. In an action by the indorser of a note to recover the amount which he has paid thereon of the maker, the books of the bank to which the note was paid are admissible, in connection with plaintiff's check for the amount, to prove the payment. Parker v. Sanborn, 7 Gray (Mass.) 191.

Verified account of executor.— A verified account, filed by an executor for final settlement, in which he charged himself with money collected on a note given for property sold, is admissible to show payment of the note. Wharton v. Thomason, 78 Ala. 45.

Letters.— Fisk v. Fisk, 60 N. Y. 631. On an issue as to whether plaintiff had taken the note of one N as collateral security, or whether he had agreed to take it in payment of the debt, provided N promised to pay the note to him, a letter from N to plaintiff, promising to pay the note, was competent evidence. Bates v. Hazen, 63 N. H. 618.

Will.— Walls v. Walls, 170 Pa. St. 48, 32 Atl. 649, holding a will admissible to show that the creditor, an executor, had sufficient funds in his hands belonging to the debtor to pay the debt.

Order drawn on debtor.— In an action against a debtor for the whole sum originally due under a contract, an order drawn on him by his creditor, and accepted by him, is admissible in evidence. Hillyard v. Crabtree, 11 Tex. 264, 62 Am. Dec. 475.

A contract other than that sued on may be read in evidence to show that payments were made on account of such other contract. Stone v. Talbot, 4 Wis. 442.

Books of the debtor containing entry of payments are immaterial where the only question is as to the amount of wages which plaintiff was to receive. Butler v. Kirby, 53 Wis. 188, 10 N. W. 373. A book-account of a debtor of the date when the debt fell due, showing a balance in his favor, equal to a second instalment of plaintiff's debt, is not admissible to prove payment of that instalment. Clark v. Wells, 5 Gray (Mass.) 69.

44. Schwarze v. Roessler, 40 Ill. App. 474; Riley v. Boehm, 167 Mass. 183, 45 N. E. 84. But see Harbison v. Hall, 124 N. C. 626, 32 S. E. 964, holding that in an action for goods sold, where the defense is payment, plaintiff may show by his bookkeeper, in corroboration of his own testimony, that the amount has not been paid, his usage in regard to his system of entries in his books, when checks and money have been received, and that the books fail to show any evidence of payment.

after proof of execution.[49] The receipt must be one executed by the creditor or his agent authorized to give a receipt,[50] the rule being that receipts by third persons are not evidence, but that the persons themselves should be introduced.[51] So indorsements of credits by the creditor on the instrument sued on are competent evidence against him as admissions of payment.[52] A receipt is not evidence of the payment thereby acknowledged as against strangers thereto.[53] If the creditor alleges that the receipt has been altered and increased, the debtor may show that the receipt was in its present condition soon after it was signed and before the action was brought.[54]

d. Bills, Notes, or Checks. A note is admissible in connection with other evidence to show that it was a payment of the debt sued on.[55] So the note in controversy, from which the signature of the maker has been torn off, is admissible in evidence in behalf of the maker.[56] Bank checks of the debtor payable to the order of the creditor and indorsed by him are admissible in evidence to show payment.[57] So a draft drawn to the order of the drawee himself, and given to

To show payment of purchase-money as recited in deed.— Where a deed has been introduced in evidence without objection, a receipt showing the payment of the purchase-money recited in the deed is also admissible. Farrow v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., 109 Ala. 448, 20 So. 303.

Rejection in former action.— A receipt, which has been disallowed by a jury as evidence of payment on a note, may be given in evidence in an action of assumpsit for the money. Mervin v. Potter, 1 Root (Conn.) 201.

Recepit not tending to show payment.— Receipts tending to prove that the creditor had purchased the land mortgaged as collateral security at sheriff's sale are not competent evidence to prove that the judgment had been paid. Wasson v. Hodshire, 108 Ind. 26, 8 N. E. 621.

Receipts of persons without the state.— The receipts of persons without the commonwealth are admissible, on proof of their handwriting, as evidence of charges in a guardianship account of payments to such persons. Shearman v. Akins, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 283.

A receipt for interest, bearing a certain date, was admissible to raise the presumption that all interest had been paid to that date. Elliott v. Curry, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 281.

Explanation.— Evidence is admissible on behalf of a creditor to show that a receipt was given for a payment represented by a credit admitted in the complaint. Robertson v. Garshwiler, 81 Ind. 463.

Co. v. Best, 3 Head (Tenn.) 701, holding that where a party who has no agency or power in the matter gives a receipt, such receipt is, with the acceptance of the money by the person entitled thereto, competent evidence of the payment of the same; but an admission that it was in full to date is not admissible against the latter.

Nominal party.— Under the rule that the declarations of a nominal plaintiff are not admissible to defeat the action, a receipt executed by him is inadmissible as an admission in favor of defendant. Copeland v. Clark, 2 Ala. 388.

To show payment by third person.— Notes of the debtor and receipts, in the possession of a third person who closed up the business of the debtor, have been held admissible in an action by him against the debtor, to show payment by such third person out of his own moneys. Scott v. Scott, 36 Ga. 484.

Possession.—Notes found among the papers of the debtor in his handwriting and to the order of the creditor are not admissible to prove payment to the creditor where there is no evidence that they were ever in the possession of the creditor. Lamb v. Ward, 114 N. C. 255, 19 S. E. 230.

Note as counter-claim.— Where plaintiff sets up a note as a counter-claim, a note made by defendant in favor of plaintiff shortly before the note counter-claimed became due is not admissible to show that on that date defendant received the amount named in such note to apply in payment of the counter-claim. the creditor, is admissible on the question of payment, without being indorsed by the payee.[58] To explain a receipt "in full up to date, including a note," and rebut any presumption that it was accepted as absolute payment, such note is admissible in evidence.[59]

12. Parol Evidence. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a debt has been paid, although the debt is evidenced by a writing.[60] So parol evidence is admissible to show that an assignment, although absolute on its face, was taken simply as security.[61] Where the statute defines the meaning of "current lawful money," parol evidence is inadmissible to show what kind of money was intended in a contract using such phrase.[62] Where a debtor introduces in evidence a check alleged to have been received by the creditor in full payment, the creditor may show by parol that the check was intended only to pay his expenses.[63]

F. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence — 1. In General.[64] Payment must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence.[65] The same rules as to Mutilated check.— The admission, as evidence of a payment to a particular person, of a check so mutilated that only part of the name of the payee appears on the face of it is not error, where the evidence in respect to the check does not make a case for the application, against the party offering it, of the presumption arising from such mutilation. Ferneau v. Whitford, 39 Mo. App. 311.

Appropriation to debt in controversy.— A check drawn by defendant to plaintiff's order, and paid to the latter, is evidence that the amount of it was paid to plaintiff on account of a debt shown to have existed, and cannot be excluded because the court may think it belonged to a different transaction. Masser v. Bowen, 29 Pa. St. 128, 72 Am. Dec. 619.

Effect of no indorsement.— Where, in an action on account, defendants alleged payment by a check drawn on them to plaintiffs, payable by a certain bank, it was not error to admit in evidence the check, stamped "paid," although there was no indorsement on it, it appearing that the bank had paid other checks drawn by defendants to the payees without requiring indorsement. Baumgardner v. Henry, 131 Mich. 240, 91 N. W. 169.

Rebuttal.— Where defendant, to prove payment, offers checks for a larger amount than plaintiff's bill, plaintiff may show that the checks were in payment of prior transactions, over objection that the evidence was not within the pleadings. Druss v. Rosen, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 174.

Individual check for firm debt.— Where defendant testifies that a debt has been paid with firm money, his individual check is not admissible. Arbuckles v. Chadwick, 146 Pa. St. 393, 23 Atl. 346.

Checks payable to administrator.— Checks drawn by the debtor on a bank, with its stamp of payment thereon, which were payable to the order of the administrator in his own name, and indorsed by him both individually and in his representative capacity, are not admissible in evidence to show payment of such debt, without proof that the checks were given in payment of it, or evidence connecting them with it. Evidence that plaintiffs at some time had in their possession a certain amount of money belonging to defendant does not show payment thereof to them in part payment of their claim against defendant. Simons v. Martin, etc., Mfg. Co., 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 788, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 560. The testimony of a witness that he saw defendant pay plaintiff's intestate some money when trying to make a settlement, but could not tell how much, is insufficient to support an allegation of payment. Magenau v. Bell, 14 Nebr. 7, 14 N. W. 664. Evidence that a debtor ordered her agent to send the money, and, hearing nothing more about it, supposed that it was paid, is not sufficient to show payment, especially where there is inferential evidence to the contrary. McCurdy v. Middleton, 82 Ala. 131, 2 So. 721. The word "settled," written under an account in a book of accounts, and signed by both parties, does not of itself necessarily import payment. Sufficiency of evidence to overcome presumption that payment by person jointly liable on note, not credited on such note, was made on his individual note. Well v. Ayers, 84 Va. 341, 5 S. E. 21.

Number of witnesses.— The testimony of only one witness, where not corroborated, has been held, in some jurisdictions, insufficient to prove payment. Silver v. Hedges, 3 Dana (Ky.) 439. An unexecuted agreement by a mortgagee of realty, with two of the three mortgagors, to take the mortgaged premises in payment of the mortgage notes, is not sufficient evidence to show payment of those notes, in a suit by the mortgagee against the indorser of them. Green v. Davis, 44 N. H. 71.

Remittance by mail.— Proof that money agreed to be paid was sent by mail, in connection with other circumstances, is prima facie evidence of its receipt and payment.

is no preponderance where the evidence is equally balanced, and in such case plaintiff is entitled to recover.[66]

2. ADMISSIONS OF PARTIES. Admissions of the debtor may be sufficient to show non-payment,[67] as are admissions of the creditor or his agents to show payment.[68]

3. TESTIMONY OF PARTIES. The positive testimony of a creditor may be sufficient of itself to show non-payment,[69] as may the testimony of the debtor

Waydell v. Velie, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 277. Evidence that a letter containing a draft was addressed to the creditor in a large city without adding the street and number which was known to the debtor is insufficient to show that it was actually received by the creditor. Fleming, etc., Co. v. Evans, 9 Kan. App. 858, 61 Pac. 503. No presumption that a debt had been paid through the mails was established where there was no evidence that the letters through which the payments were claimed to have been made were ever duly deposited in the United States mail where the payer resided, inclosed in a securely sealed wrapper, addressed to the person alleged to have been paid, and postage duly paid, or that the same ever came to such person. Barnes v. Courtright, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 60, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 203.

Sufficiency of evidence as to amount of payment see Tallman v. Miller, 32 Nebr. 559, 49 N. W. 459; Arnett v. Hill, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 381. One may prove that he had paid a note by partial payments, although he cannot show the exact date and amount of each payment. Fletcher v. Dulaney, 1 Indian Terr. 674, 43 S. W. 955.

A debtor's application of a payment to a particular item may be inferred from circumstantial evidence of his intention. Lauten v. Rowan, 59 N. H. 215. The misapplication of payments cannot be proved by vague and conjectural proof, in opposition to explicit denial and documentary evidence. Vimont v. Welch, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 110. Loan.— But an acknowledgment by plaintiff that he received money from defendant, but at the same time stating that it was as a loan, is not sufficient evidence of payment. Oldham v. Henderson, 4 Mo. 295.

The report of a commissioner that his predecessor had paid him a certain fund is not conclusive in the latter's favor on a plea of payment, although the reporting commissioner may be liable therefor on his bond. Perkins v. Chambers, 49 S. W. 544, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1506.

Possession of funds of debtor.— Where plaintiff admits having money in his hands belonging to defendant, but fails to disclose how much, it will be presumed that he has sufficient to liquidate a balance due by defendant to him. Pulver v. Esselstyn, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 429, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 756.

Conflicting statements.— Testimony of a mortgagee, suing to foreclose, that the debt for which the mortgage was given existed at the execution of the latter, corroborated by testimony of an attorney who has been auto show payment.[70] Where the only testimony is that of the debtor and the creditor, which is in irreconcilable conflict, the possession by the debtor, unexplained, of the obligation evidencing the debt, is conclusive on the question of payment.[71]

4. Payment by Bill, Note, or Check. The evidence to show that a bill, note, order, or check was or was not accepted as absolute payment according to whether payment in such a case is or is not presumed, must be clear and convincing.[72]

G. Trial — 1. In General. The trial, in so far as the issue of payment is thorized to collect the debt, is not overcome by evidence of statements made by the mortgagee prior to taking the mortgage that the debt was paid, and that he and the debtor were "square." Johnson v. Johnson, 101 Iowa 405, 70 N. W. 598.

The character, temperament, and habits of two litigants and the surrounding circumstances may make it more probable that one has forgotten the debt due him by the other than that the other should have paid it and have preserved no record showing how, when, where, or to whom such payment was made. Sigur v. Burguieres, 111 La. 1077, 36 So. 134.

When not conclusive, although uncontradicted.— But testimony of defendant, although uncontradicted as to payment, is not conclusive on the jury, where, on trial, neither the absence of the receipt for such payment nor the check on which the money to make the payment was claimed to have been procured was satisfactorily accounted for, and defendant admitted that the date of the payment as sworn to in his answer was false. A check not being payment unless received as such or cashed, a mere statement of one that he made a payment by a check drawn by him, without production thereof or of the books of the bank, does not prove payment. Tschopick v. Lippincott, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 128. A negotiable promissory note of a third person, entered on plaintiff's books of account as payment of defendant's debt, is not conclusive evidence of such payment. Brigham v. Lally, 130 Mass. 485.

The evidence to rebut the presumption that a check is not accepted as absolute payment must be as clear and satisfactory as is essential to establish the payment of an admitted debt. Lowenstein v. Bresler, 109 Ala. 326, 19 So. 860.

Presumption as rebutted by slight circumstances.— Where the evidence shows that a note received by a creditor, upon his demand, was not the obligation of all the parties who were liable for the original debt, and, a fortiori, when it appears that the note was that of a third party, and if held to have been received in satisfaction, would wholly discharge the party originally liable, the presumption that it was so received, if it can arise at all, may be repelled by slight circumstances indicating a contrary intention. Hudson v. Bradley, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,833, 2 Cliff. 130.

The mere fact that the debtor has failed to indorse the note which is claimed to constitute an absolute payment is not a controlling circumstance. Freeman v. Benedict, 37 Conn. 559.

Evidence of creditor against evidence of debtor.— Where the creditor testifies one way concerned, is governed by the rules relating to the trial of civil actions in general.[73]

2. Questions For Jury — a. In General.[74] Ordinarily the question of payment is one for the jury.[75] But where the material evidence is undisputed, the question whether it shows a payment is one of law for the court.[76]

b. Presumption of Payment From Lapse of Time. Where the evidence is such that the jury must give effect to the presumption of payment from the lapse of twenty years or more, and a contrary verdict would be set aside as against the weight of evidence, a verdict may be directed for the debtor.[77] Ordinarily, however, the question whether a payment is to be presumed from the lapse of time is one of fact for the jury.[78] So the question whether the evidence to rebut the and the debtor to the contrary, the issue will be determined against the debtor, since he has the burden of proof. Freeman v. Benedict, 37 Conn. 559.

Construction of evidence.—Where the debtor requested the creditor not to present a check immediately, as the drawer's account was not good, testimony of the creditor that he took it in payment must be construed to mean as conditional payment. Comptoir D'Escompte v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 Pac. 28.

73. See Trial.

Directing verdict.— If there is no material conflict in the evidence tending to show payment or non-payment as a matter of law, it is proper to direct a verdict. Suppl. 90; Schierl v. Baumel, 75 Wis. 69, 43 N. W. 724.

Striking out evidence.— If the evidence as to payment is insufficient as a matter of law, it may be stricken out. White v. Knowles, 1 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 118, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 579.

Order of proof.— The proper order of proof is for plaintiff to withhold evidence of non-payment, unless it is a necessary part of his cause of action, until defendant introduces evidence of payment, and then put in evidence of non-payment in rebuttal. Frindel v. Schaikewitz, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 214, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 172.

There is a manifest distinction between those cases where length of time operates as a bar to the action, and those in which it can be used only as matter of evidence. In a case coming within the statute of limitations, the lapse of time prescribed by the statute is pleadable as a bar to the action, and the presumption of payment from lapse of time is true is a question for the jury;[79] but whether the facts and circumstances relied on, if true, legitimately give rise to a presumption of non-payment and rebut the presumption of payment from lapse of time is one of law for the court.[80]

e. Mode and Medium of Payment. What is lawful money of the United States other than gold and silver coin is a question of law for the court.[81] On the other hand, the question whether a contract made during the Civil war calling for the payment of dollars contemplated Confederate dollars,[82] or the kind of money in which a bond executed during such time was to be paid, where there was nothing on its face to indicate the medium of payment,[83] is one of fact for the jury. So the question whether a remittance by mail is the usual mode, when a creditor directs his debtor to remit money to him, in general terms, without prescribing the mode, is a question of fact for the jury.[84]

d. Payment Other Than in Money. Whether there was an agreement to receive property other than money from a debtor in payment is a question for the jury.[85] For instance, whether a note,[86] including a note of a third person,[87] or a jury would be concluded by it, although they were convinced that the debt still remained due and unpaid. But where length of time is not per se a bar, but used merely as evidence, it is a matter for the consideration of the jury to credit it or not, and to draw their inference the one way or the other, according to circumstances. bill,[88] check,[89] or order on a third person,[90] was accepted as absolute or conditional payment is one for the jury.

e. Application of Payments. Generally the question of application of payments by the parties as determined by their intention is one of fact for the jury.[91] So where the creditor applies a payment otherwise than as directed by the debtor, the question whether the debtor acquiesced in such application is one for the jury.[92] Of course if there is no conflict in the evidence, the question is one for the court.[93] And the application of payments where neither party has applied the payment is a question of law for the court rather than one of fact for the jury.[94]

Application of payments.— Turrentine v. Grigsby, 118 Ala. 380, 23 So. 666 (holding that where the evidence as to whether a payment was directed to be applied to any one of two accounts is conflicting, it is error to instruct the jury how to apply it, without first requiring them to find whether any direction as to its application was given when it was made); Boyd v. Jones, 96 Ala. 305, 11 So. 405, 38 Am. St. Rep. 100; Lawton v. Blitch, 83 Ga. 663, 10 S. E. 353 (holding proper to instruct that it is a general rule of law that the oldest item of an account will be first paid); Snell v. Cottingham, 72 Ill. 124 (holding charge not open to objection that it directed the jury that they must find the application from the conduct of the parties and excluding the operation of the rule of law making the application in the absence of any being made by the parties); Marshall Dental Mfg. Co. v. Harkenson, 84 Iowa 117, 50 N. W. 559 (holding that charge that if there was an open account between the parties, the creditor could apply thereon a payment made by the debtor unless otherwise directed, is authorized, in an action on a note, where there was evidence of an open account and dealings other than those involved in the action); Hoskins v. Brown, 84 S. W. 767, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 216 (holding that where the determination as to the application of payments by a debtor to his creditor is a question of fact, it is the duty of the court to direct the jury how the payments should be applied on the state of facts found by them to exist); Reed v. Corry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 157 (holding that charge was erroneous as calculated to induce the jury to believe that creditor was not bound to apply the money in the manner agreed on); Lapham v. Kelly, 35 Vt. 195.

Burden of proof.— Crow v. Burgin, (Miss. 1905) 38 So. 625. An instruction stating: "While it is true that the burden of proof is on the defense to establish that fact, still that does not mean that they are required to specifically prove the items or amounts of any or all such payments. It is sufficient if such instructions must be applicable to the issues,[96] and must not be misleading,[97] or invade the province of the jury,[98] or assume as facts matters not proved,[99] or give undue prominence to a slight and inconclusive circumstance.[1]

4. VERDICT AND FINDINGS. The verdict of a jury, or findings by the court or a referee, where there is an issue as to payment, is governed by the general rules relating to verdicts and findings in civil actions in general.[2] Where the evidence from all the evidence, you believe it is more probable that such payments were made, than that they were not made," is erroneous. Boon v. Bliss, 98 Ill. App. 341, 343.

Explanation of meaning of words used.— Failure to explain to the jury what is meant by the words "within a reasonable time" makes an instruction as to the necessity of returning the bills of a suspended bank erroneous. Townsends v. Racine Bank, 7 Wis. 185.

Lapse of time as raising presumption of payment.— Stockton v. Johnson, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 408; Spruill v. Davenport, 27 N. C. 663; Bender v. Montgomery, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 586.

Payment in property other than money.— Pennsylvania Min. Co. v. Brady, 16 Mich. 332; Schilling v. Durst, 42 Pa. St. 126. An instruction that the acceptance of a check of a third person by the creditor's voluntary act as payment and in satisfaction will establish payment is erroneous, as it eliminates the necessity of an express agreement to take the check in absolute payment. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 Pac. 28. The statement in a receipt that a note taken for an indebtedness on open account was taken "in settlement of the account" is not sufficient to authorize an instruction that if plaintiffs agreed to take defendant's note in payment of the demand due them, and did so take it, the jury should find for defendant. McMurray v. Taylor, 30 Mo. 263, 77 Am. Dec. 611.

Presumption from non-production of note.— Where the non-production of a note is not the sole fact in evidence bearing on the question of payment, there is no occasion to charge the jury on any presumption that would or would not arise from that fact alone. Thompson v. Thompson, 77 Ga. 692, 3 S. E. 261.

Receipt as evidence.— Atchison v. Atchison, 67 Conn. 35, 34 Atl. 761.

Instruction as too general.— An instruction that if the jury believed plaintiff had been fully paid as set up in defendant's second plea, he cannot recover, is not erroneous as being too general. Evans v. Collier, 79 Ga. 319, 4 S. E. 266.

Curing error by further instructions.— An instruction which is erroneous because assuming that a receipt in full of "account" is prima facie evidence of payment of notes is not cured by a subsequent instruction that the burden is on the party taking the receipt to prove payment, as, under the first instruction, he had already done that when the receipt was produced. Paid "and" canceled.— Where the issue was whether the note pleaded as a set-off had been paid, an instruction that the jury must find whether it had been "paid and canceled" is not misleading. Garrett v. Robinson, 93 Tex. 406, 55 S. W. 564 [reversing on other grounds (Civ. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 269].

98. Benton v. Toler, 109 N. C. 238, 13 S. E. 763; Gay v. McGuffin, 9 Tex. 501.

Charge on weight of evidence.— In an action to set aside a deed, it was proper to refuse to charge that, if the vendor acknowledged full payment of the purchase-money, it was equivalent to proof that the purchase-money had been paid. English v. English, 69 Ga. 636.

Construction of findings.— A finding that the agent of the owner of mortgage notes, and the mortgagor, "settled and adjusted" the debt represented by the notes, and that the mortgagor gave other notes "in compromise, settlement, and cancellation" of the debt, amounts to a finding that the new notes were given and accepted in payment of the mortgage debt. Wiley v. Dean, 67 Minn. 62, 69 N. W. 629. But a finding by a referee that notes "were duly paid for by the defendants by the delivery by the said defendants to said plaintiffs and the acceptance by said plaintiffs of the note of D. McDonald & Co." is not sufficient to authorize the conclusion of payment. Crane v. McDonald, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 354.

Verdict.— Merrimon v. Norton, 67 N. C. 115, verdict for value of Confederate money. A finding that a debt has not been paid "in full" is insufficient. Barnes v. Brown, 69 N. C. 439. According to practice in actions as to payment is conflicting, the general rule as to the conclusiveness of a verdict based on conflicting evidence is applicable.[3]

H. Judgment, New Trial, and Review. The general rules in civil actions as to the judgment,[4] new trial,[5] and review on appeal[6] are applicable.

VIII. RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS.[7]

A. Voluntary Payments — 1. General Rules. Except where otherwise provided by statute,[8] a party cannot, by direct action or by way of set-off or counter-claim,[9] recover money voluntarily paid with a full knowledge of all the facts, and without any fraud, duress, or extortion, although no obligation to make such payment existed.[10] This rule is an elementary one and in applying it the of debt on simple contract as well as indebitatus assumpsit, the result of inquiry under a plea of payment may be expressed in a general verdict for plaintiff for the amount found due, after deducting all payments admitted or proved. Rohr v. Anderson, 51 Md. 205.

The reason for the rule is that if a claim is to be litigated at all, it ought to be litigated promptly. By delay, the recollection of witnesses is liable to become indistinct, documentary evidence is liable to become lost or destroyed, and witnesses are liable to die. And on many accounts it may be important to the claimant to have the validity of his claim determined promptly and without delay; and if the other party should be allowed to pay a claim first and then litigate it afterward, it would give him the power to select his own time for the litigation; and, by delaying it, to place his adversary at a great disadvantage. Parker v. Lancaster, 84 Me. 512, 24 Atl. 952.

Exception to rule in case of fiduciary relations.— An administrator occupies a fiduciary relation to the widow of his intestate; and, when he procures an excessive amount of fees and costs from the widow, he cannot defend an action for the recovery of the excess on the ground that the payment was voluntary, and that it was her duty to investigate the facts before making payment. Blue v. Smith, 46 Ill. App. 166.

Repayment to third persons.— A creditor who receives payment of his debt in money in due course of business, and in good faith, cannot be required to repay the money to third person.[11] So voluntary payments by a corporation cannot be recovered back.[12] So money which could not be recovered back if it had been paid to the party directly cannot be if it has been paid to an agent for him.[13] And the rule as to voluntary payments applies also to the payment of bills and notes.[14] However, to constitute a voluntary payment, it must be made with the full knowledge of all material facts.[15] And the retention by a debtor of part of a debt due a one from whom the debtor illegally obtained it. Gale v. Chase Nat. Bank, 104 Fed. 214, 43 C. C. A. 496.

If one indicted for larceny voluntarily repays the sum alleged to have been stolen, without any unlawful agreement, he cannot recover it back, although he is afterward tried on the indictment and acquitted. Puckett v. Roquemore, 55 Ga. 235.

Payments which in equity and good conscience should have been made.— The rule with respect to voluntary payments is that if a party has actually paid what the law would not have compelled him to pay, but what in equity and good conscience he ought, he cannot recover it back again in an action for money had and received. Overpayment on running account.— Where plaintiff is in the employ of defendants, who are advancing him money from time to time on his wages, an overpayment by them to him cannot be considered within the rule as to voluntary payments in the sense that they cannot require him to account for it. Farrell v. Burbank, 57 Minn. 395, 59 N. W. 485.

After a mortgage is foreclosed, an action will not lie to recover back money paid by the mortgagor. Fitch v. Coit, 1 Root (Conn.) 266.

Change of application of payments.—Where one pays money on a certain demand, although not legally bound to do so, he cannot afterward have it applied as payment on another obligation, the rule being that he cannot be allowed to apply it as a payment on another debt any more than he could be allowed to sue for and recover it in a distinct suit. Wear v. Schmelzer, 92 Mo. App. 314.

Failure to make change.— Where, for the purpose of making a payment, a person tenders more than the proper amount, asking for the return of the change, there is no voluntary payment except to the amount that he expresses his desire to pay, so that where change is refused an action may be maintained for the balance. Edmonds v. Abeel, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 441.

The mere indorsement of a draft on delivery does not of itself constitute a "voluntary payment" so as not to be recoverable. Rawson v. Bethesda Baptist Church, 221 Ill. 216, 77 N. E. 560, 6 L. R. A. N. S. 448.

creditor, although made with the knowledge of the creditor, is in no sense a voluntary payment of the amount retained.[16]

2. By or to Public Corporations. The rule that voluntary payments cannot be recovered back applies to payments by a private individual or corporation to the United States, state, county, town, city, or other public corporation, or to an officer thereof as such.[17] On the other hand, while the rule has been applied to payments by public officers as such,[18] the general rule is that a payment by the agent of a public corporation, where without authority, is not a voluntary one by the corporation, but may be recovered back.[19]

3. To Officer of Court. The rule does not apply to a payment made to the court through the hand of its officer.[20]

4. Of Interest. So where a party voluntarily and without mistake of fact pays interest in excess of what is legally due, it is governed by the rule applicable to any other voluntary payment and cannot be recovered back,[21] except where the payment is of usurious interest.[22] So one who makes a voluntary payment of interest is not entitled to have the excess over the amount actually due applied on the principal, since to do so would be equivalent to holding that it could be recovered back.[23]

which has not been reversed cannot be recovered back,[24] and it is immaterial that the recovery was fraudulent.[25] Payment of a judgment is voluntary unless made to procure the release of the goods of the party making the payment after seizure, or to prevent their seizure by an officer armed with the authority or apparent authority to seize them.[26] On the other hand, if the judgment or decree has been reversed, money paid thereon can be recovered back.[27]

B. Compulsory Payments[32] — 1. Right to Recover in General. The general rule is that a compulsory payment may be recovered back. That is, the money is recoverable where the payment is obtained by duress, extortion, or oppression, or by taking an undue advantage of the payer's situation, and where the payee ought not to retain it.[33] But, in order to recover moneys paid under duress, it must be shown not only that there was duress, but also that it is against equity and good conscience for the payee to retain the money.[34]

2. What Constitutes — a. In General. A compulsory payment is one made under duress or circumstances virtually amounting thereto. At common law, "duress" meant only duress of the person, and nothing short of such duress, amounting to a reasonable apprehension of imminent danger to life, limb, or liberty, was sufficient to enable the party to recover back money paid.[35] However, the courts of law, in analogy to the rules of the courts of equity as to setting aside contracts for duress,[36] gradually extended the doctrine so as to recognize duress of property as a sort of moral duress which might, equally with duress of the person, entitle a party to recover back money paid under its influence.[37] And the rule was thereafter laid down that payment is not made under duress unless made to release the person or property of the payer from detention, or to prevent a seizure of either by one having apparent authority to seize without resorting to an action.[38] But most of the modern authorities go even further and generally hold that such pressure or constraint as compels a man to go against his will virtually takes away his free agency, and destroys the power of refusing to comply with the unlawful demand of another, constitutes duress, irrespective of the manifestation or apprehension of physical force.[39] Farther than the rules

just stated, the courts have not attempted to lay down any definite and exact rule of universal application by which to determine whether a payment is voluntary full knowledge of the facts, pays a demand that is unjustly made against him, and to which he has a valid defense, and where no special damage or irreparable loss would be incurred by making such defense, and where there is no claim of fraud upon the part of the party making such claim, and the payment is not necessary to obtain possession of property wrongfully withheld, or the release of his person, such payment is voluntary, and cannot be recovered. Virtual or moral duress is sufficient to prevent a payment made under its influence from being voluntary. Robertson v. Frank Bros. Co., 132 U. S. 17, 10 S. Ct. 5, 33 L. ed. 236.

Violence or physical duress.— To constitute a payment under duress which may be recovered back the payment need not be made under actual violence or physical duress. Maxwell v. Griswold, 10 How. (U. S.) 242, 13 L. ed. 405.

A stock-holder in an insurance company assigned his stock to plaintiff, who paid instalments on it, but the company refused to transfer the stock unless plaintiff would pay them the amount of certain notes of the assignor, which they held, and which were not then due. The assignor being insolvent, and plaintiff having no way of indemnifying himself, but by procuring a transfer, he paid the money accordingly. It was held a compulsory payment, which plaintiff might recover back. Bates v. New York Ins. Co., 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 238. Where the county commissioners, while the law then in force authorized them, in granting a ferry license, to impose an annual tax, not exceeding one hundred dollars, gave notice that they would grant a ferry license to the person who would give the largest sum to the county as a donation, and, several offers being made, the person who had previously kept the ferry offered and paid five hundred dollars, such sum may be recovered back. Fear of the committee is not duress. Quincey v. White, 63 N. Y. 370. A payment made in accordance with the provisions of a state constitution, which is in conflict with the federal constitution, is not a payment under duress but is voluntary, and cannot be recovered back. Payment made by a subordinate officer under an order of a superior officer is not a voluntary payment which will prevent its recovery back by the latter. Ellsworth v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cl. 382.

Payment by an agent of a larger sum than authorized by the principal, where the agent informs the payee that he remits the larger sum claimed by the latter to avoid delay "leaving difference to be adjusted later," is not a voluntary one. Carter v. Riggs, 112 Iowa 245, 83 N. W. 905.

Second payment by attorney.— Where an officer pays over money collected to an attorney, and afterward pays it again to the client because he has lost the attorney's receipt, the second payment is not voluntary but may be recovered back on finding the receipt. Bradford v. White, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 26.

Money paid for a city permit illegally demanded under threats that unless the money was paid the workmen would be arrested by or involuntary,[40] and from the very nature of the subject, no general rule can be stated, as each case must depend somewhat upon its own peculiar facts.[41] The real and ultimate fact to be determined in every case is whether or not the party paying really had a choice, whether "he had his freedom of exercising his will."[42] A recovery has been held allowable where the payment has been obtained by taking an undue advantage of the situation of the payer,[43] or where the money was paid to prevent an injury to one's property rights.[44]

b. Business Necessities. Payments compelled by business necessities have been held so far compulsory as to be recoverable,[45] although there are numerous cases where such payments have been held voluntary and not recoverable.[46]

c. Threat or Fear of Loss of Employment. A payment under a threat[47]

the police and the work stopped is compulsory and may be recovered back. Deshong v. New York, 176 N. Y. 475, 68 N. E. 880 [affirming, but reversing on this point, 74 N. Y. App. Div. 234, 77 N. Suppl. 214 [affirmed in 179 N. Y. 580, 72 N. E. 1153], in which case a policeman threatened arrest if the work was continued without a permit and the owner thereupon signed an application for a permit and obtained it on payment of the sum offered in his application, and the payment was held not compulsory. So where an owner of real property applies to the city authorities for a permit to construct vaults under the sidewalk, and pays the amount demanded therefor, the payment is voluntary, and cannot be recovered back, and the fact that he paid the amount demanded under protest, and to avoid delay in carrying out a contract to erect buildings on the land, does not deprive the payment of its voluntary character. or fear[48] of discharge from employment has been held not to have been made under duress.

d. Payments to Obtain Performance of Act. Money paid to one who, because of his position, is under an obligation to discharge certain duties to the public, such as a public officer, but who refuses to discharge such duties without the payment of money to which he is not entitled, can be recovered as money paid under compulsion.[49]

e. Apprehension or Threat of Legal Proceedings. Mere apprehension,[50] or threats[51] of a civil proceeding to enforce a claim, unaccompanied by any act of hardship or oppression, does not render a payment in response thereto involuntary in the sense that it can be recovered back. So money paid under an apprehension,[52] or threat[53] of a criminal prosecution, when no warrant has been issued or proceedings begun, and there is no immediate danger, does not constitute duress

But see Fuerst v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 95 N. Y. Suppl. 155, holding that a threat made by the officers of a union of musicians that, unless a member paid an illegal fine imposed, he would be expelled, causing a member to fear that, unless he paid the fine, he would be expelled and deprived of his means of earning a living, amounts to duress, entitling him to maintain an action for the fine paid.

so as to make the payment compulsory. However, demands and threats of persons clothed with governmental authority to carry them into execution by arrest and prosecution stand on a different footing from demands and threats of private individuals, and money paid because thereof may generally be recovered back.[54] It has been held, however, that the threat of imprisonment may warrant a recovery back because of the age, intellect, or disposition of the person threatened.[55] So a threat to arrest a child,[56] or husband,[57] of the payer, makes the payment involuntary and recoverable, and it is of no consequence whether the threat is of a lawful or unlawful imprisonment.[58]

f. Duress of Person. The general rule is that the payment of a sum to obtain release from imprisonment is compulsory and can be recovered back.[59] This is so not only where the arrest is without just cause,[60] but also where there is an arrest for a just cause without legal authority,[61] and also where there is an arrest for a just cause and under lawful authority but for an improper purpose.[62] However, there is no duress where the imprisonment was by lawful authority for a just cause and for a proper purpose.[63] To authorize a recovery it is not neces-

Imprisonment not illegal.— An action will not lie against an officer to recover back money paid under arrest on a capias, inadvertently issued instead of a fieri facias, ordered by the court, the court having power

g. Payments to Prevent Unlawful Taking or Detention of Property — (i) Personal Property. Where a person unlawfully demanding a payment is in a position to seize or detain the goods or other personal property of a person against whom the claim is made, without a resort to judicial proceedings in which the parties may contest the validity of the claim, payment under protest to recover or retain the property will be considered as made under compulsion, and the money can be recovered back, at least where a failure to get or retain immediate possession and control of the property would be attended with serious loss or great inconvenience.[65] This coercion is generally embraced in the term "duress of goods."[66] The same rule applies where the payment is to retain or obtain the possession of property seized or about to be seized by legal process.[67] And it is immaterial that the acts claimed to constitute duress do not amount to technical duress.[68]

(II) Real Property. In an early case it was stated that the reasons for the rule are wholly inapplicable to real estate and are not applied thereto.[69] But the later cases ignore mere distinction in kinds of property and hold it immaterial whether the duress is of goods or of real property or of the person.[70] For instance, if a mortgagee in possession requires the mortgagor or his assignee to pay more than is legally due in order to redeem, the payment is a compulsory

Where property was taken from plaintiff on process against a third person on the false assumption that the property belonged to defendant in execution, a payment by plaintiff on demand that it would be sold unless payment was made is involuntary and may be recovered back. State v. Slayback, 90 Mo. App. 300. However, a threat to seize the property must at least indicate some present purpose to execute it. State v. Stonestreet, 92 Mo. App. 214. Where a man's goods are in the possession of an officer who has no authority to retain them, yet exacts a payment as a condition of restoring them, the payment, in contemplation of law, is not voluntary, although both parties believe it to be legal; in fact, acting in ignorance of law. De Bow v. U. S., 11 Ct. Ct. 672.

An attachment of goods in an action for which there is a good cause does not constitute a duress of goods (Kobler v. Wells, 26 Cal. 606), although money paid to free goods from an attachment, procured for the purpose of extortion by one who knows that he has no cause of action, is paid under duress and can be recovered back (Chandler v. Sanger, 114 Mass. 364, 19 Am. Rep. 367). Money may be recovered back where it is paid by reason of fear that if not paid the party making the demand will attach his goods, especially where the effect thereof would probably be to destroy the financial credit and reputation of the debtor, and it is immaterial that such payment is not technically made under duress of property. Weber v. Kirkendall, 39 Nebr. 193, 57 N. W. 1026. But the mere fact, there being no element of fraud or other means of oppression, that one is sued by attachment in the state where plaintiff resides, but which is foreign to the residence of defendant, will not of itself make the payment of money to avoid such a judgment compulsory in such a sense that it can be recovered back if it can be shown not to be due. Redemption from judgment sale.— Where one is obliged to choose between making redemption from a judgment sale, and yielding possession of the land, his payment is not considered a voluntary one. Manning v. Poling, 114 Iowa 20, 83 N. W. 895, 86 N. W. 30.

one so as to authorize a recovery back.[71] So where a person entitled to redeem from a real estate mortgage pays, upon the demand of the mortgagee, and under protest, more interest than is due in order to prevent expiration of the time for redemption, he may recover such interest back.[72] So where a purchaser refuses to allow a redemption from a foreclosure sale, except upon payment of more than is due, the amount so paid in excess of what was actually due may be recovered back.[73] On the other hand it has been held that money paid in excess of the amount due on the mortgage to stop foreclosure proceedings is a voluntary payment and cannot be recovered on the ground of duress.[74]

h. Effect of Protest. A payment is not rendered involuntary merely because the payer at the time of payment makes a protest against the payment.[75]

i. Necessity of Protest. If money is paid under compulsion, no protest is necessary to lay the foundation of an action to recover the payment,[76] except perhaps where the payment is to a public officer and he has no notice of the facts which render the demand illegal.[77] But if there is doubt, under the circumstances, whether the payment was voluntary, the protest may be taken into account in determining the question.[78] Whenever a protest is necessary, it has been held that it must state the grounds upon which the party paying the money claims that the payment is illegal.[79]

3. Illegality of Duress. The duress must have been illegal, unjust, or oppressive.[80] For instance, one cannot recover back money paid under compulsion if it is just what he ought to have paid voluntarily.[81] In other words, the money paid cannot be recovered unless it is against conscience for defendant to retain it.[82]

4. Source of Duress and Time Thereof. The compulsion or coercion must come from the party to whom or by whose direction the payment is made.[83] And the duress must have existed at the time the payment was actually made.[84]

5. Existence of Other Remedy. The general rule is that where an unfounded or illegal demand is made upon a person, and the law furnishes him adequate protection against it, or gives him an adequate remedy, instead of taking the protection the law gives him or the remedy it furnishes, he pays what is demanded, such payment is deemed to be a voluntary one.[85] There is a class of cases, however, where, although there is a legal remedy, his situation or the situation of his property is such that it would not be adequate to protect him from irreparable injury, in which case payment will be deemed to have been involuntary.[86]

Payment of lien.— Where one having in his possession property of another demands as a condition of its restoration the payment of a sum for which he is legally entitled to a lien thereon, the owner cannot be said to have made such payment under duress so as to give him any right to its recovery on that ground. In re Meyer, 106 Fed. 828.

What constitutes fraud.— Oil-Well Supply Co. v. Exchange Nat. Bank, 131 Pa. St. 100, 18 Atl. 935. If moneys are obtained from a person when he is in such a state of inebriation as to be incapable of transacting business, or of knowing what he is doing or the force of his acts, it is a clear fraud, and the money may be recovered back. Hayes v. Huffstater, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 530. The mere failure of the judgment creditor and his assignee to inform the judgment debtor of a mistake of the referee in reporting the amount owing is not a fraud entitling the judgment debtor to recover back a payment made on the judgment. Wood v. Amory, 105 N. Y. 278, 11 N. E. 636. It is immaterial to the right to recover back money paid that the payee's counsel represented that the claim was enforceable, and that, in fact, it was barred by the statute, his assertion being merely an expression of opinion; and it is especially unimportant where it was not relied on, and the payer had the advice of counsel. Parker v. Lancaster, 84 Me. 512, 24 Atl. 952. Rule not favored.— The rule that money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back often acts partially and inequitably, and is regarded with so much disfavor by the courts that it will not be extended beyond the limits defined for the scope of its operation. The tendency of the courts is to treat mistakes as to legal rights as mistakes of fact or mistakes of mixed fact and law, wherever it is possible to do so without disturbing well settled precedents. Ward v. Ward, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 59.

sion, extortion, or taking undue advantage of the party's situation are not within the rule,[98] and a fraudulent representation takes the case out of the rule.[99] The rule does not apply to money paid under a mistake of law to an officer of the court,[1] or to a deposit of money as security where the title is not intended to pass.[2]

(II) PAYMENTS BY PUBLIC OFFICER. Although there are cases holding the contrary,[3] the better rule seems to be that payments by a public officer by mistake of law, especially where made to another officer, may be recovered back.[4]

d. What Constitutes Mistake — (I) IN GENERAL. A mistake of law occurs where a person is truly acquainted with the existence or non-existence of facts but is ignorant of,[5] or comes to an erroneous conclusion as to,[6] their legal effect. As already stated, a mistake of law, as the term is here used, includes ignorance of the law.[7] It is often difficult to distinguish between mistakes of law and of fact,[8] both of which may be involved in the transaction without prejudice to the claim for relief.[9] Where, after suit brought, money has been voluntarily paid before the rendition of any judgment, it is paid under a mistake of law so that it cannot be recovered, although judgment is rendered in favor of the party making the payment.[10]

(II) PAYMENT UNDER UNCONSTITUTIONAL OR INVALID STATUTE. Money paid under an unconstitutional or invalid statute, without any circumstances of compulsion, is paid under a mistake of law and cannot be recovered back,[11] except

While a mistake as to title is generally one of law when the facts are known, yet the error may be as to some fact lying at the foundation of the title and necessary to its existence. Barker v. Clark, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 106. See also Varnum v. Highgate, 65 Vt. 416, 419, 26 Atl. 628. In the latter case the following language is used: "Under this rule it may be regarded that it was established upon trial that the contract of sale was made under a mutual mistake of a material fact, viz.: the ownership of the stone, or the right of the plaintiff to sell them. This was an error of fact; it may have arisen because the parties misjudged the law, still it was no less an error of fact. Right of private ownership is matter of fact, although it may result from a question of law."

Mistake as to statute.— A mutual mistake in supposing that a clause governing a penalty in a particular statute had been incorporated into another like statute is not a pure mistake of law, but has been held in one sense a mistake of fact so as to authorize a recovery of money paid because of such mistake. 2 Of Fact — a. General Rule. Subject to the exception that money paid under a mistake of fact cannot be recovered where the payer has derived a substantial benefit from the payment, nor where the payee received it in good faith in satisfaction of an equitable claim, nor where it was due in honor and conscience,[13] a payment made by mistake of fact, which the party is not by law obliged to make, under ignorance of the facts or in misapprehension in regard thereto, may be recovered back.[14] This rule applies to payments made by a pub-

For instance, where a debtor and creditor mistakenly believe that a greater amount is due than really is due, and an amount is paid less than the amount actually due, an action to recover such payment on discovery of the mistake will not lie. Ashley v. Jennings, 48 Mo. App. 142. applies to payments in property other than money, in which case the property, or its value, may be recovered.[16]

b. Nature of Mistake and What Constitutes. An error of fact is ordinarily said to take place either when some fact which really exists is unknown or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not exist.[17] And money paid under a bona fide forgetfulness of facts which disentitled the party to receive it is paid under a mistake of fact and may be recovered.[18] To authorize a recovery, the mistake must be as to a material fact,[19] but need not be mutual.[20] It is immaterial that the mistake of fact was accompanied by a mistake or ignorance of law.[21] The knowledge of the facts which disentitles the party from recovering means a knowledge existing in the mind at the time of payment;[22] and a subsequent discovery of facts showing that the payer had a set-off against the demand does not show such a mistake of fact as to authorize a recovery.[23] Ignorance of the law of a foreign government or of another state is ignorance of fact rather than ignorance of law.[24] A payment made by reason of a wrong construction of the Payment for land for street.— Where a city controller pays by mistake, for land taken in the extending of a street, a greater sum than that awarded by the commissioners appointed to fix the awards, an action lies by the city to recover back the excess; and it is no defense to such action that the land was worth the sum paid, and that information from a clerk of the commissioners that this sum was the sum awarded, prevented defendant from getting the award increased. As examples of mistakes of fact within the rule laid down, may be mentioned the following: Where one entitled to the money on a second execution, assented to its payment to plaintiff on the first execution, on the mistaken assumption that the property sold had been seized by the sheriff on the first execution within the time allowed by law and while the lien of the first judgment existed (Kingston Bank v. Eltinge, 40 N. Y. 391, 100 Am. Dec. 516); where one ignorant of the fact that his claim had been allowed, contracted to pay for services to be performed in procuring its allowance (Allen v. Hammond, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 63, 9 L. ed. 633); and where money was paid in the belief that there was a claim when in fact there was none (Potter v. Everett, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 276).

Money paid by plaintiff for an assignment to him by defendant of accounts against other persons, under an agreement that only good accounts should be included, was not paid by mistake as to accounts which afterward proved to be worthless, and therefore plaintiff cannot recover the amount of the worthless accounts in an action at law. Markowitz v. Messner, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 256, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 512.

When not recoverable.— The drawees are not entitled to recover of the payee the amount of a bill which they have accepted and paid, on the ground that they paid it under a mistake of fact as to the nature or value of their security from the drawer, where the security accompanied the bill, and proved to be fictitious. Note as including amounts of other notes. — Where a bank owning several notes and holding others for collection presses the debtor for security, and, without knowing the exact amount thereof, he gives his note and mortgage for the sum claimed, and afterward pays it in full, such payment is not voluntary as to the amount of a note included among the original claims without his knowledge, and upon which nothing was actually due, and he may recover back the amount thereof. When not recoverable.— The right to recover back money paid by mistake does not exist where the party paying is the maker of a note, who was ignorant that the note, through inadvertence, had not been indorsed by the payee to the holder, the note being transferred, before maturity, for a valuable consideration. Ignorance as equivalent to mistake.— Where a check indorsed to a bank is dishonored because of the bank's failure to present it for payment in due course, and an indorser thereupon takes it up from the bank without knowledge of the facts discharging him from liability as indorser, he is entitled to recover the money so paid. a payment of more than was actually due,[32] may be recovered back by the party making the mistake.

(III) PAYMENT OF ENCUMBRANCE. Generally, one who owns or has an interest in property, and who pays money to a lienor or encumbrancer to satisfy the claim of the latter against the person from whom the payer has acquired his ownership or interest, may recover such payment where made through a mistake of fact.[33] Where a purchaser of land pays a supposed lien when in fact none existed, he may recover the amount paid,[34] although it was paid by the hand of the seller who owed the amount to the payee, without disclosing that it was paid on behalf of the purchaser.[35]

(IV) PAYMENT ON ACCOUNT. A party who, by mistake, pays more than is due upon an account may recover the excess.[36]

(V) PAYMENT TO WRONG PERSON. Where money has, by mistake of fact, been paid to the wrong person, it may be recovered back.[37] But if payment is made to the wrong person, although the payer in fact owes him a debt which is due, and the amount of which is equal to or in excess of the payment, it has been held that no recovery can be had.[38]

d. Diligence and Waiver — (I) IN GENERAL. The fact that a person, when making a payment, had the means of knowing the facts, does not of itself ordinarily preclude him from recovering back the money, if he did not have actual knowledge.[39] But the money cannot be recovered where it is clear that the payer intended to waive all inquiry into the fact.[40] So if the party paying has the means of ascertaining the facts, and is under a legal duty to ascertain them, he cannot recover money paid in ignorance thereof.[41]

stake-holder, or other person acting merely in a representative capacity, it cannot be recovered back if he has settled his accounts or paid it over before notice and the loss would fall on him individually.[44] But in other cases where money is received under a mistake of fact, it is no defense that it has been paid over to another unless the person who received the money was a mere agent or representative of that other person.[45]

E. Payments Upon Consideration Which Has Failed. G. Actions[51] — 1. In General. An action to recover back money paid is one at law, and equity ordinarily has no jurisdiction.[52] Generally, the action being based upon a quasi-contract, the form of action is for money had and received.[53] Where a recovery is permissible, it may be by way of counter-claim or set-off as well as by a direct action.[54] Any fact entitling defendant to retain the money on either legal or equitable grounds is a defense.[55]

2. Conditions Precedent. The safer method of procedure is for the payer to notify the payee of the alleged mistake and demand a return of the money before bringing suit.[56] There is a considerable conflict, however, as to the necessity of a demand as a condition precedent to an action to recover back payments,[57] although ordinarily at least notice of the mistake must be given to the payee, where not known to him, before bringing suit.[58] Generally the payee must be put in statu quo before the action is brought.[59] Notice to an agent not to pay over the money to his principal is not necessary where the payment is compulsory, and is not made expressly for the use of the principal.[60]

3. Parties.[61] Ordinarily the action must be brought by the person actually entitled to the money paid,[62] and against the party actually receiving the payment.[63] The rules applicable in civil actions in general as to the joinder of Payment by master by mistake as defense to action by one employee against another.— A station agent of a railroad company employed an assistant, stating to him that the company would only pay twenty-five dollars per month. He afterward forged a telegram purporting to be from the proper official, stating that such assistant would draw from the pay car forty dollars per month and pay fifteen dollars to such station agent; and, by means of such telegram, procured from the assistant fifteen dollars per month. Where a mistake is alleged there need be no allegations of actual fraud and that the payment was induced thereby. Williams v. Carroll County, 167 Mo. 9, 66 S. W. 955. Where plaintiff sues to recover money paid by him to defendant on the ground that it was paid under a material mistake of fact, induced by the representations of defendant, and does not distinctly allege the non-existence of the supposed fact on which he relied, his petition sets forth no cause of action and is demurrable. Charleston, etc., R. Co. v. Augusta Stockyard Co., 115 Ga. 70, 41 S. E. 598.

Allegations not corresponding with facts.— Alleging that payment was made under an urgent necessity and to prevent an immediate seizure of person and property is insufficient where it appears from the facts that the payment was a voluntary one. Williams v. Stewart, 115 Ga. 864, 42 S. E. 256.

frivolous.[71] The general rules of pleading as to the evidence admissible under the pleadings,[72] and the effect of a variance between the pleadings and proof,[73] are applicable.

5. EVIDENCE.[74] The burden of proving the right to recover back payments is ordinarily on plaintiff.[75] But in a suit to recover a payment made under a contract induced by the false representations of defendant, the burden is on defendant to show that thereafter plaintiff, with full knowledge of the facts, ratified the contract.[76] And if circumstances exist which make such recovery inequitable, the burden of proving that fact rests upon the party resisting the payment.[77] The general rules relating to the admissibility,[78] and the sufficiency,[79] of evidence in civil actions in general, are applicable.

6. TRIAL.[80] Whether a payment was voluntary or involuntary is generally a question for the jury.[81] The necessity and propriety of instructions are governed

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS, AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

A. Nature of Penalty. A penalty is a sum of money which the law exacts the payment of, by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited, or the omitting to do some act which is required to be done.[1] Strictly speaking the term "penalty" involves the idea of punishment,[2] whether corporal or pecuni-

Distinguished from "fine" see FINES, 19 Cyc. 544 note 1.

Substantially synonymous with "forfeiture."— The word "penalty" and the word "forfeiture," as used in statutes, are generally used synonymously. A statute properly designated as penal is one which inflicts a forfeiture of money or goods by way of penalty for breach of its provisions, and not by way of fine for a statutory crime or misdemeanor, and, with reference to penal actions, the word "penalty" means a forfeiture inflicted by a penal statute. Crawley v. Com., 123 Pa. St. 275, 16 Atl. 416; Butler v. Butler, 62 S. C. 165, 40 S. E. 138; Taylor v. The Marcella, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,797, 1 Woods 302. See also Hawkins v. Iron Valley Furnace Co., 40 Ohio St. 507. "Penalty" is not synonymous with "forfeiture," as used in a contract stipulating that a certain amount should be forfeited in the event of the abandonment of a certain trade, although the two words may be used to mean the same thing, for a forfeiture is usually a penalty, although a penalty is not necessarily a forfeiture. Eakin v. Scott, 70 Tex. 442, 7 S. W. 777.

Costs not included.— The terms "fine" and "penalty" signify a mulct for an omission to comply with some requirement of law, or for a positive infraction of law, and do not include the costs which accrue from the prosecution. Lord v. State, 37 Me. 177, 179.

Penalty of death.— When the words "penalty of death" are used, they are understood, in a somewhat figurative sense, to signify the forfeiture of life. It is less usual to say the penalty of imprisonment, or the penalty of whipping. State v. Fields, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 554, 557.

Punishment synonymous.— "Penalty" is synonymous with "punishment," in connection with crimes of the highest grades, and is fixed by the law defining and inhibiting the criminal act. Featherstone v. People, 194 Ill. 325, 62 N. E. 684; Beggs v. State, 122 Ind. 54, 23 N. E. 693; U. S. v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 398, 9 S. Ct. 99, 32 L. ed. 480.

It does not necessarily imply a fixed sum, but anything imposed as a punishment, whether specific, or measured by the value of the interest affected by the act complained of. Merchants' Bank v. Bliss, 1 Rob. (N. Y.) 391, 13 Abb. Pr. 225, 21 How. Pr. 365 [affirmed in 35 N. Y. 412].

A penalty whose benefit is given to a party aggrieved includes the idea of both compensation and punishment. The fact of such gift to the injured party does not make a penalty less one, nor would its extension to the whole value of the interest affected, instead of being limited to a fixed sum. ary,[3] and its character is not changed by the mode in which it is inflicted, whether by a civil action or a criminal prosecution.[4] The term includes also an equivalent by way of damages for a civil wrong,[5] and is in this sense sometimes applied to stipulated damages for breach of private contracts, wholly independent of statutes.[6]

B. Statutory Provisions.[7] It is a well-settled rule that, where a subsequent statute increases or diminishes a penalty,[8] or varies the mode of enforcing the Distinguished from "interest."— Interest is merely compensation for the use or forbearance of money, and is distinguished from penalty, which is a punishment. Distinguished from liquidated damages.— There is an important difference between a penalty and liquidated damages for breach of a contract; and while a court of equity may relieve against a penalty and give in lieu thereof to the injured party the damages actually sustained, it will not relieve against the payment of liquidated damages. Clydebank Engineering, etc., Co. v. Yzquerdoy Castaneda, [1905] A. C. 6, 74 L. J. P. C. 1, 91 L. T. Rep. N. S. 666, 21 T. L. R. 58; Empire Loan, etc., Co. v. McRae, 5 Ont. L. Rep. 710; Ont. Rev. same,[9] it operates as a repeal of any former law on the same subject.[10] Where a statute imposes a penalty for breach of its provisions, that is held to exclude the general provisions of the criminal code.[10a] So where a statute imposes a penalty for doing an act, that act is impliedly forbidden.[10b]

C. Power to Impose. The legislature has power to subject any particular offense to a penalty,[11] provided the imposition thereof does not violate any constitutional provision,[12] or public justice.[13] It may even go further and subject the same offense both to a penalty and to a criminal prosecution, and this is not con-case a fine for the benefit of the county, and is therefore repealed by the latter.

Cumulative remedy.— Where a statute prohibits an act under a penalty to be enforced by indictment, and a subsequent statute gives a qui tam action for such penalty, the latter is merely cumulative of, and does not repeal the remedy given by, the former statute. Bush v. State, 1 Tex. 455. sidered as punishing the same offense twice.[14] To be recoverable, however, a penalty must be expressly imposed.[15]

D. Amount and Extent.[16] The amount of recovery in a penal action depends entirely upon the provisions of the statute imposing the penalty.[17] Where a penalty is given to the party injured, the amount is not affected or controlled by his actual pecuniary loss or damage.[18] Where a penalty is given for failure or neglect to do a certain act, and a further penalty for each day during which such refusal or neglect shall continue, a liability arises for a succession of penalties,[19] to each of the persons injured,[20] which may be recovered in successive actions.[21] Where a second offense subjects one to an accumulated penalty, such offense must be of the same nature as the first.[22]

E. Defenses — 1. In General. Recovery will operate as a bar to any future action for the same penalty.[23] So too the record of a voluntary confession, and payment of the whole penalty, may be pleaded in bar to an action qui tam.[24] Ignorance,[25] or misapprehension,[26] of a penal statute is no excuse for its violation,

One penalty for each offense.— Under the modern rule, if the legislature intends to allow cumulative penalties, the statute authorizing the penalty must so state "in so many words." Hence, as the last amendment to the Domestic Commerce Law, § 29, as amended by N. Y. Laws (1902), c. 482, providing a penalty for buying or selling or having in possession marked milk cans belonging to another, allows a recovery of the penalty "for every violation" of the statute, only one penalty can be recovered for each violation irrespective of the number of cans held by defendant. Previous arraignment.— An action to recover a penalty is not barred by a previous arraignment of the same offense before a magistrate, who, although having plenary jurisdiction of the complaint, bound defendant over to a higher court; such proceedings being a nullity. unless the statute makes knowledge and wilfulness elements of the offense. The violation of the statute consists in doing the prohibited act, or in the refusal or omission to perform the required duty, and not in the intent or motive by which the party is actuated.[27] Nor is it a defense that others violate the statute with impunity;[28] that a former action was settled without leave of court;[29] that an agreement for reference and arbitration was made between the person claiming the penalty and defendant;[30] or that defendant has been acquitted in a criminal prosecution for violation of the statute.[31]

2. SET-OFF. A penalty for breach of a statute is not subject to set-off.[32]

F. Persons Entitled to Enforce[33] — 1. IN GENERAL. The person entitled to recover a statutory penalty is to be determined from the language and intent of the statute.[34] Persons injured,[35] and informers,[36] are frequently expressly named. If the statute omits to specify by whom the action may be brought without naming "common informer," "prosecutor," or "person who will sue," it has been adjudged that the action is limited to the injured party.[37]

2. INFORMERS.[38] A common informer cannot maintain an action for a penalty except when power is given him for that purpose by statute, either in express terms or by implication;[39] and not then unless he sues within the time prescribed

35. Phillips v. Bevans, 23 N. J. L. 373, holding that if a penal statute authorizes a penalty to be sued for by the party injured, any one of several parties jointly injured by the offense may sue for and recover the penalty.

Waiver of right to sue.— The institution of an action to recover a statutory penalty against a street car company for refusal to give a transfer operates as a waiver of plaintiff's right to penalties for prior defaults. Informer must be natural person.— The right to sue as an informer is limited to a person, and the United States cannot sue in that character. U. S. v. Bougher, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,627, 6 McLean 277. The statute authorizing a certain penalty to be recovered by any person in his own name does not authorize a corporation to sue therefor. A county assessor and collector of taxes may sue in a qui tam action as informer, and recover a statutory penalty. Tarde v. Benseman, 31 Tex. 277.

Infant's right to sue see supra, note 34.

Intervention by informer.— An informer cannot thrust himself into a proceeding instituted by the attorney-general for the sole use of the government, when his becoming a party is resisted by such officer, and after

by the statute.[40] If, where a part of a penalty is given to the public and a part to a common informer, the latter fails to commence a suit for the penalty, the state may prosecute for the whole.[41]

G. Persons Liable.[42] The persons liable for a statutory penalty depend upon the language and intent of the statute imposing it. Under a statute making "any person" who violates the statute liable, the penalty is applicable only to the one derelict in duty and personally guilty of the wrong;[43] and it depends on the nature of the offense, as being entire or several, whether several persons, jointly and simultaneously committing it, are to be subjected, the whole to but one penalty or each to the whole penalty.[44] Where the statute requires the prohibited act to have been done "knowingly and wilfully" in order to subject one to the penalty, it must clearly appear that the act was so done.[45]

H. Remission — 1. By Legislature or Executive.[46] Following the principle of the English authorities[47] it is held that, after a judgment vesting a moiety of a penalty in an informer, the power of pardon confided to the president by the constitution is limited to the remission of the share of the government only, and that it is inoperative to divest the share of the informer.[48] So too the power of issue is joined, and proof furnished by other parties. Francis v. U. S., 5 Wall. (U. S.) 338, 18 L. ed. 603.

Corporation.—An indictment will not lie against a corporation under a statute making "any person" liable to a penalty. State v. Cincinnati Fertilizer Co., 24 Ohio St. 611. Unless the word "person" is defined to include corporation, and there is nothing in the act to lead to the conclusion that corporations are not intended to be included. For example see Can. Rev. Remission of penalty to confer jurisdiction see 24 Cyc. 474 note 63.

In Canada.— The dominion parliament may authorize the governor-general in council to remit penalties which are within the jurisdiction of the dominion parliament. Can. Rev. St. (1906) c. 146, § 1084. Provincial parliaments may provide for the remission of penalties which they have power to impose. Ont. Rev. St. (1897) c. 51, § 57 (3); 7 Edw. VII, c. 26 (Ont.). So the provincial parliaments may authorize the lieutenant-governor in council to remit penalties which are within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. 7 Edw. VII, c. 26, § 6 (Ont.). And the provincial legislature may also authorize courts of law to remit such penalties. See statutes referred to infra, note 52.

47. The English authorities are uniform to the effect that the king may discharge his own share in a penalty as well after as before judgment, but that after judgment he cannot remit the share of an informer, because the share of an informer is by the judgment vested in him. No. 16,479, 4 Biss. 336, where it is said that the moiety of the penalty is given to the informer subject to the contingency of a presidential pardon, and the informer is not absolutely vested with the right to the moiety by virtue of the judgment in his favor, but only on the condition that the informer should have a right to the moiety, if the president should never pardon the offense. See also Pardons, 29 Cyc. 1558.

Before judgment, when the prosecution is wholly in the name of the United States, the president has complete power over the whole case. U. S. v. Harris, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,312, 1 Abb. 110.

If an informer could be deprived of his reward after he had earned it, no one would be foolish enough to incur the trouble and expense, or even the ill-will, incident to the prosecution of an action for a penalty, subject to the contingency of having the same remitted or the judgment compromised after the legislature to remit a penalty is too well settled to admit of controversy.[49] And it has been held that congress has the power to authorize the secretary of the treasury to remit any penalty incurred by the breach of the revenue laws, either before or after judgment;[50] and if remitted before the money is actually paid it embraces the share given by law in such cases to the officers of the customs as well as the share of the United States.[51]

2. By Court. A court may relieve against unreasonable penalties in private contracts, but not against those created by law, unless empowered by statute so to do.[52]

I. Payment — 1. Medium of Payment. Under a provision requiring penalties to be paid into the county treasury, such penalties are to be treated as debts due the county, and may be paid in county warrants.[53]

2. To Whom Made and Effect. An informer, to whom a moiety of the penalty is given, may accept payment of the judgment recovered and discharge defendant, although he has no right to discharge the judgment without leave of court.[54]

J. Disposition of Proceeds[55] — 1. In General. The legislature may by statute give penalties and forfeitures to such persons and for such particular purposes as in its wisdom it may deem proper;[56] and such a statute does not violate a constitutional provision requiring all fines assessed for breaches of the penal laws,[57] or it was obtained. U. S. v. Griswold, 24 Fed. 361.

The governor of a state has the constitutional right to remit the part of a penalty due to the state; but it is otherwise as to the part given to the informer. State v. Williams, 1 Nott & M. (S. the "clear proceeds" of fines and penalties,[58] to be paid into the common school fund. If, however, it is provided by the constitution that the proceeds of penalties must be "exclusively" applied to the school fund, a statute otherwise disposing of part of the proceeds is void.[59]

2. RIGHTS OF INFORMERS. In accordance with the principle above stated,[60] it is competent for the legislature, by way of inducement to secure prompt enforcement of the penal laws, to allow a part of each penalty recovered to go to the informer.[61] His title thereto depends upon the recovery, and until then he has no vested right therein.[62] By commencing an action, however, he attaches a right in himself to the penalty, which cannot be divested by a subsequent suit, brought by another individual, even though judgment be first recovered in the second suit.[63] In order to entitle an informer to his moiety of the penalty, it should appear of record that he complained or sued for it;[64] and this within the time limited by the statute;[65] otherwise the whole penalty goes to the state.[66] If no private person is authorized to sue for a penalty, it belongs, when collected, to the state which alone can sue for its recovery.[67]

II. ACTIONS AND OTHER PROCEEDINGS.

A. Nature and Form of Remedy and Conditions Precedent — 1. NATURE OF REMEDY. Actions for penalties, whether regarded as founded upon the implied contract every person enters into with the state to observe its laws,[68] or upon a tort, that is, a wrongful violation of a public duty,[69] are civil actions.[70] In a few cases, however, a distinction seems to be made between penalties given for the indemnity of the party aggrieved, and those merely intended to punish the act as an offense; regarding the former as civil suits,[71] and the latter as not.[72] penalty in whole or in part, recovery may be by an action or information of debt.[78]

(II) INDICTMENT.[79] Where a statute prohibits an act to be done nnder a certain penalty, although no mention is made of indictment, the party offending may be indicted and fined for the amount of the penalty.[80] So where a statute imposing a penalty provides that it shall be recovered by "bill, plaint, or information,"[81] or "by any appropriate form of proceeding,"[82] an indictment will lie.

(III) QUI TAM ACTIONS. Where a penalty imposed is made recoverable, one half to the use of the informer, the remedy by qui tam action is exclusive,[83] unless it is manifest from the whole tenor of the statute that the right to sue by an informer is only a permissive and not an exclusive remedy.[84]

3. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.[85] A previous conviction on an indictment for violation of a statute is not necessary to sustain a qui tam action or action of debt for a penalty.[86]

B. Jurisdiction, Parties, and Process — 1. Jurisdiction[87] — a. In General. Jurisdiction of particular courts in actions to recover statutory penalties is usually a matter of express statutory provision.[88] Where the statute specially prescribes the court in which the action shall be brought, no other court has jurisdiction.[89] If no particular mode of recovery is prescribed, the proceeding must be in the superior court,[90] and no inferior court of jurisdiction can take cognizance of such an action unless the jurisdiction is given to it in express terms.[91]

b. Penalties Incurred, Under Laws of Foreign State. International law prohibits the courts of one country from executing the penal laws of another or enforcing penalties recoverable in favor of foreign states.[92] So also state courts have no jurisdiction of suits arising under the laws of the United States,[93] and such jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon them by act of congress.[94] Nor will the courts of one state enforce a penalty incurred under the statutes of another state.[95]

alty is created, and no particular person is specified to whom it shall be paid, it can only be sued for by the sovereign.[97] In such circumstances in this country the prosecution would be by the state.[98] Where the whole penalty goes to a city or borough, the corporate name of such city or borough should be used as plaintiff.[99] A private person cannot sue in his own name for a penalty unless the same is given to him as the injured party,[1] or any individual is expressly authorized to sue in his own name.[2] Where a penalty is given to any person who will sue for the same, the action is properly brought in the name of such person.[3] Under such a statute a corporation cannot sue.[4] But where power is given to a corporation eo nomine to sue for the purpose of recovering penalties for its own use, there is no legal objection to its suing.[5] So if there be an appropriation of a penalty for the use of a corporation, distinctly made known by the statute, it would appear conformable to the rules of law that it might claim it directly.[6] An infant cannot sue for a penalty by his next friend.[6a] right to sue. It is enough if it be seen that the intent was to confer the right In many cases the formula "who may sue,"[9] "who shall prosecute,"[10] or "one moiety to the prosecutor"[11] has been held sufficient to evidence this intent; but the mere fact that the statute gives part of the penalty to the informer has been held insufficient for this purpose.[12] Some cases hold, however, that such fact is sufficient to confer upon him a right to sue in his own name for himself as well as for the state, town, or borough, as the case may be.[13]

(II) Right to Join. A penal action cannot be maintained by several persons jointly, as common informers,[14] unless the statute imposing the penalty expressly authorizes such a proceeding.[15]

(III) Control of Proceedings: A strictly qui tam action is under the exclusive direction and control of plaintiff who brings it;[16] but it is with this qualification that if discontinued or compounded without leave of court,[17] the cause will stand as if no action had been brought, and will not bar another suit for the same penalty.[18] Where the action is brought by a public officer under a statute making it his duty to sue for and recover certain penalties, he is entitled to control the action, and may settle or discontinue it without leave of court.[19]

When only a moiety of a penalty goes to an informer he cannot sue for it in his own name, he must sue qui tam, although it is otherwise if he is entitled to the whole penalty. See Dexter v. Blackden, 93 Me. 473, 45 Atl. 525.

When, however, the action is prosecuted by others in the name of such public officer, the latter cannot control the action.[20]

3. PARTIES DEFENDANT[21] — a. In General. Where a penalty is imposed on an offense which several may and do jointly commit, the wrong-doers may be sued either jointly,[22] or severally,[23] but plaintiff can have but one satisfaction. Where, however, a statute prescribes a separate penalty against each offender, several defendants cannot be joined in the same action.[24]

b. Misjoinder. In an action to recover a statutory penalty, misjoinder of defendants is not a ground of demurrer.[25]

c. Non-Joinder. Non-joinder of a party defendant, in an action of debt for a penalty, must be taken advantage of by plea in abatement.[26]

4. PROCESS — a. In General. Proceedings to collect a penalty imposed by statute or ordinance should be begun by summons, and not by warrant of arrest.[27] If, however, a defendant is sued by a warrant, instead of a summons, he must make his objection in the lower court, or it will be too late to take advantage of it on certiorari.[28] Statutory requirements in regard to service of process must

Objection to form of summons.— In an action to recover a statutory penalty, the proper way of objecting to the use of a summons "for relief," instead of a summons "on contract," is not by setting aside the summons or complaint, but by an application for relief after judgment, if the judgment obtained be one to which plaintiff is not entitled. be strictly complied with.[29] The process need not conclude "contra formam statuti."[30]

b. Indorsements and References to Statutes — (i) Necessity and Sufficiency. In actions for the recovery of statutory penalties, it is usually required that a general reference to the statute shall be indorsed on the summons,[31] with such a description of the statute as will identify it with convenient certainty,[32] and also specifying the section, if the penalties are given in different sections for different acts or omissions.[33] And it is sometimes provided that the magistrate issuing the original process shall make a minute on the writ under his official signature of the date of his signing the same.[34]

In New Jersey the name of the prosecutor as well as the title of the statute should be indorsed on the process. Miller v. Stoy, 5 N. J. L. 476; Hageman v. Van Doren, 6 N. J. L. J. 310.

N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1897, providing that, in an action to recover a statutory penalty, a general reference to the statute must be indorsed on the summons, applies to all actions for penalties whether brought by a private person or the people. People v. O'Neil, 54 Hun 610, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 123. Contra, Townsend v. Hopkins, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 257, holding that the statute applies only to actions by private persons.

Manner of indorsement.— This requirement must be literally complied with, and the reference indorsed upon, and not embodied in, the summons. Schoonmaker v. Brooks, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 553.

The object of a statute providing that, in actions for the recovery of a penalty, a reference to the statute shall be indorsed on the process issued, is to inform defendant of the nature and cause of the action against him (Bissell v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 385; Cox v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 615; Perry v. Tynen, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 137; Marselis v. Seaman, 21 Barb. (N. Co., 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 615; People v. Bull, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 19; Burdick v. Erie R. Co., 92 N. Y. Suppl. 122; Thayer v. Lewis, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 269).

32. Hitchman v. Baxter, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 271 (holding that an indorsement referring to "the provisions of the several statutes" relating to the subject is insufficient); Prussia v. Guenther, 16 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 230 (holding that where the summons refers to the statute and section imposing the penalty, omitting to refer to an amendatory statute giving the officer, who is plaintiff, the right to sue, does not vitiate the proceedings.)

Such information as complaint would contain.— An indorsement is sufficient if it gives defendant such information as to the offense as would be given by the complaint if served. Prussia v. Guenther, 16 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 230.

It is not necessary that the statute or ordinance should be printed verbatim upon the summons; all that is required is such a reference as will enable the party served with the summons to determine for what offense he has been sued. New York v. Wood, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 341, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 657; New York v. Eisler, 2 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 125.

An action to recover a penalty for receiving a fraudulent conveyance of lands with intent to defraud plaintiff of his debt. Denton v. Crook, Brayt. (Vt.) 188.

(II) Effect of Failure to Indorse. In an action for a statutory penalty, failure to indorse a general reference to the statute is fatal on objection,[35] and the service gives the court no jurisdiction over defendant's person.[36] This defect may, however, be waived by defendant, and is waived by his general appearance without taking the objection, and in some jurisdictions would be amendable.[37]

C. Pleading and Evidence — 1. Declaration, Complaint, or Information — a. In General. In actions to recover penalties, it has been held, the pleadings are construed with the same strictness that indictments are.[38] The facts constituting the gravamen of the action should be clearly and distinctly stated,[39] in order that it may appear that the case is within the statute.[40]

b. Following Language of Statute. In an action on a penal statute it is sufficient to lay the offense in the words of the statute,[41] unless such language is so indefinite, obscure, and uncertain that the statute fails to define what acts shall be deemed an offense.[42]

c. Particular Allegations — (I) Precise Sum Claimed. A declaration to recover a statutory penalty must demand a precise sum,[43] although the statute declares that the penalty shall be "not more than" the sum stated.[44] The demanding of one sum will not, however, prevent the recovery of a smaller sum, where it is diminished by extrinsic circumstances.[45]

(III) Damages. The declaration need not, and ought not, to conclude ad damnum, as plaintiff's right to the penalty does not accrue until the bringing of the action; and he cannot have sustained any damage by a previous detention of it.[49] A declaration so concluding is not, however, bad on demurrer,[50] and it has language.[55] When the action is founded on several statutes,[56] or where one statute creates an offense and another fixes the penalty,[57] the conclusion should be "against the form of the statutes." But when the statute creating the offense is only amended or regulated, or altered in parts thereof which do not relate to the offense or the punishment thereof, a conclusion in the singular is proper.[58] So also where an offense is prohibited by several statutes, but only one is the foundation of the action;[59] where one statute creates an offense and inflicts the penalty and a subsequent statute imposes another penalty;[60] or where one statute creates an offense and fixes the penalty and another statute gives the remedy.[61] A conclusion in the singular when it should be in the plural or vice versa is a substantial defect which is not cured by the verdict.[62]

(II) Under Modern Pleading. Where the modern and simple mode of pleading has been adopted, actions on statutes are brought by simple statements of facts showing a violation of the statute, and it is unnecessary to recite or specifically refer to the statute under which the action is brought. Being a public statute, the court will take judicial notice of it.[63]

Remedial statute.— In an action on a statute which is remedial and not penal (Mitchell v. Clapp, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 278), or remedial as well as penal (Hewitt v. Harvey, 46 Mo. 368), it is not necessary to conclude that the act complained of was done contrary to the form of the statute.

Tennessee — proceeding before justice.— In a proceeding before a justice to recover a penalty given by a statute, it is not necessary that the warrant should conclude against the form of the statute, it being sufficient if the warrant shows what the party is called on to answer. Kirby v. Rice, 8 Yerg. 442; Kirby v. Lee, 8 Yerg. 439.

Omission cured by amendment.— The omission to conclude against the form of a statute may be cured by amendment if plaintiff agrees to claim no costs. Duffy v. Averitt, 27 N. C. 455.

Reason for such conclusion.— Every offense for which a party is indicted is supposed to be prosecuted as an offense at common law, unless the prosecutor, by reference to a statute, shows he means to proceed upon it, and without such express reference, if it be no offense at common law, the court will not look to see if it be an offense by statute. Lee v. Clarke, 2 East 333.

Offense at common law.— Where an offense existed previously at common law, and the statute gives a new remedy, the acts need not be alleged as done against the form of the statute; but the penalty should be claimed as "by force of the statute," etc. Fuller v. Fuller, 4 Vt. 123.

55. See cases cited infra, this note.

e. Joinder of Offenses or Penalties. In an action to recover several penalties for distinct offenses, it is necessary to set out each offense distinctly. It is not sufficient to charge defendant in general terms with the commission of a number of offenses.[64] Where, however, one penalty only is sought, a declaration describing two penal offenses in one count is good, at least after verdict.[65] So also it is competent to embrace in one count several penalties upon one statute.[66] Where the action is for the recovery of a penalty for an offense which is shown to be continuous, the penalty being fixed at so much for each day of its continuance, it is not necessary to declare in separate counts for each day's penalty, but all are properly grouped together in one count covering the entire period.[67]

2. Plea, Answer, or Affidavit of Defense. In an action of debt for the recovery of a penalty, nil debet is the proper general issue;[68] but not guilty is also a good plea, and under it defendant may set up a statute of limitation.[69] As defendant in a penal action cannot be required to furnish evidence against himself, he cannot be required to file an answer specifically denying all the allegations of the petition.[70]

3. Amendments. The pleadings in actions on penal statutes may be corrected and amended by leave of court as pleadings in other civil actions.[71] A useless

Mens rea.— As a general rule no penal consequences are incurred under a statute imposing a penalty where there has been no personal neglect or default, and proof of mens rea is essential (Paul v. Hargreaves, [1908] 2 K. Declarations.— Where, in an action to recover a penalty for cutting trees from plaintiff's land, defendant justified under a purchase from the occupant of the lands, who was in possession under a contract of rent or purchase, the declaration of the occupant that he was authorized by the owners to sell the timber is competent on the question of defendant's good faith. Haley v. Taylor, 77 Miss. 867, 28 So. 752, 78 Am. St. Rep. 549.

Other offense.— In an action to recover a penalty it is error to admit evidence of an

c. Weight and Sufficiency. In an action under a penal statute, plaintiff, to recover, must bring his case clearly within the statute.[80] As to the degree of proof required there is some conflict of opinion. A few cases hold that an action upon a penal statute, being in the nature of a criminal prosecution, must be established by evidence proving defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt;[81] but the better rule is that in this class of cases the same degree of proof as in criminal prosecutions is not necessary, but a clear preponderance of the evidence is sufficient. A slight preponderance, however, will not suffice.[82]

D. Trial, Judgment, and Review — 1. Dismissal Before Trial. In an action for a penalty all the requirements of the statute giving it must be complied with or the case may be dismissed on motion.[83] So if several actions for the recovery of a penalty are simultaneously commenced by different plaintiffs, they will be quashed on motion or all but the first will be stayed unless that is shown to be collusive.[84] The mere fact that defendant does not appear is not, however, ground for dismissal, since the court may proceed to final judgment in his absence.[85] Nor can defendant have the action dismissed under a statute giving an action to certain officers to recover a penalty, and permitting any person to sue in their names if they neglect to sue on receiving notice that the penalty has been incurred, upon the ground that it was brought without the authority of such officers and without the requisite preliminary notice.[86]

b. Assessment of Penalty. Where a statute gives a penalty not to exceed a certain sum, but does not prescribe whether it is to be fixed by the court or the jury, either party is entitled to a jury trial, and the amount of the penalty is for their consideration.[91] In some cases, however, the rule is stated as follows: When nil debet is pleaded, and the issue is found against defendant, the assessment of the penalty is for the jury;[92] when the plea is not guilty, it is for the court.[93]

c. Verdict and Findings. The verdict must be responsive to the issues,[94] and should be for the exact penalty prescribed.[95]

3. NEW TRIAL. The court has full power to grant a new trial, although the verdict was in favor of defendant.[96] A new trial is, however, seldom granted in such actions,[97] and then only when the verdict has been procured by some mistake or misdirection of the judge,[98] by the jury's disregard of the law,[99] or by imposition or fraud.[1] It will not, as a rule, be granted on the sole ground that the verdict is against the evidence.[2]

In an action to recover several penalties a general verdict for defendant is sufficient (Hannibal, etc., Plank Road, etc., Co. v. Bowling, 53 Mo. 311); but, in case of a verdict for plaintiff, the particular offenses for which it is rendered should be specified (Westbrook v. Van Auken, 5 N. 4. Judgment[3] — a. In General — (i) Essentials. When a suit is instituted for the penalty incurred by the violation of a specific law, the judgment should set out the statute or ordinance, or the substance of it,[4] and show in what respect it has been violated.[5] Where there are two penalties imposed, the judgment ought to designate the particular penalty on which defendant is convicted,[6] but where only one penalty is declared for, a judgment in general terms is sufficient,[7] at least if plaintiff is entitled to the whole of the money recovered.[8]

(ii) Amount. Where the action is for a penalty of a fixed amount, the judgment must be for the specific sum fixed.[9] The penalty cannot be increased or diminished by the court.[10] Where the amount of the penalty is not prescribed, the demand is no criterion of the amount to be recovered,[11] and in entering judgment the amount should be for a sum certain.[12] When a joint suit is brought against two persons, the judgment must be joint, the penalty being for a gross sum in satisfaction of the offense charged and proven.[13]

(iii) To Whom Awarded. In a qui tam action the judgment should be in favor of the informer for the uses expressed in the statute,[14] and a judgment in favor of the state will be reversed.[15] It has been held, however, that when the statute makes a definite and specific disposal of the penalty to be imposed, the judgment of conviction need not contain an express award to that effect;[16] but when the court is to exercise a discretion it must appear on the face of the judgment that they have done so.[17] If a statute gives a penalty partly to the use of the state and partly to the use of an informer, and the state prosecutes for the penalty, the judgment should be in favor of the state for the whole penalty.[18]

b. Execution and Enforcement. A judgment in a penal action is not enforceable in a foreign state.[21] judgment of the justice whether upon a summary conviction or in an action for a penalty was final. No review was possible except upon certiorari, and then only of the regularity of the proceeding.[29] This want of uniformity in the manner of enforcing penal statutes and ordinances led to the adoption of the provision of the present constitution.[30] The language employed is general, and embraces all appeals from judgments for penalties or of summary convictions rendered by magistrates or courts not of record.[31] The power to grant an appeal is vested in the court of record, or a judge thereof, to which the appeal is to be taken,[32] and cause must be shown before the appeal will be allowed.[33] It is not a matter of right.[34]

b. Writ of Error. An action of debt to recover a penalty is a civil cause on which a writ of error lies from the district court to the circuit court of the United States.[35]

6. Costs — a. In General. Costs, not being recoverable except when allowed by statute,[36] it is held in some cases that costs are not recoverable in actions for statutory penalties, when, by the statute creating the penalty, no costs are given.[37] In many cases, however, actions for penalties being considered as civil actions, costs are allowed and taxed according to the statute relating to costs in such proceedings.[38]

The act of 1876 which was passed to carry the above provision into effect prescribed the court of quarter sessions as the court of record into which all appeals from summary convictions should be taken, after an allowance; and the court of common pleas as the court of record into which all appeals from the judgment of a magistrate or court not of record in a suit for a penalty should be taken "upon allowance of said court or any judge thereof upon cause shown." Wisconsin.— Laubenheimer v. Mann, 19 Wis. 519, holding that in an action for a penalty, a judgment in plaintiff's favor for nominal damages does not, under our statute, entitle him to costs, but a judgment for costs may be rendered against him.

b. Security For Costs. When costs may be recovered,[39] security for costs may be required to be given in penal actions as in other cases.[40]

E. Compounding Actions For Penalties. By the statute of 18 Elizabeth[41] no penal action by a common informer can be compromised without the leave of the court. Where suit is brought in the name of the people for the recovery of a statutory penalty, if the people recover judgment, they are entitled to costs the same as any other person in like case. Action brought without authority and notice.— A defendant, sued for a penalty to be recovered by certain officers, under a statute providing that, if they do not sue on notice to them of the offense, a private person may do so in their names, may move for security for costs, and a stay of proceedings until security is given, where the action is brought without authority of the nominal plaintiffs, and without notice to them. I. DEFINITION.

A pension may be defined as a periodical allowance of money granted by the government for services rendered, in particular to a soldier or sailor in connection with a war or with military operations.[1]

II. PENSION AGENCIES AND PENSION AGENTS.

A. Pension Agencies — 1. ESTABLISHMENT. The power to establish pension agencies is vested in the president of the United States.[2]

2. DISCONTINUANCE — a. In General. It is discretionary with the president to discontinue an agency at one place and create another in a different locality.[3]

b. Effect. Upon the discontinuance of an agency the functions of the incumbent cease.[4]

3. ENLARGEMENT — a. In General. It is in the discretion of the president to enlarge an existing agency by the transfer thereto of the business of discontinued agencies.[5]

b. Effect. An incumbent of an agency, enlarged by the transfer thereto of Nature.—A pension is in the nature of a bounty or gratuity intended for the personal benefit of him who is, or those who are, beneficiaries of it (People v. Williams, 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 185, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 23; U. S. v. Moyers, 15 Fed. 411; Harrison v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 122); and it involves no claim of right on the part of the pensioner (Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U. S. 160, 15 S. Ct. 586, 39 L. ed. 657; U. S. v. Teller, 107 U. S. 64, 2 S. Ct. 39, 27 L. ed. 352; Walton v. Cotton, 19 How. (U. S.) 355, 15 L. ed. 658; Harrison v. U. S., supra), no agreement of parties (Harrison v. U. S., supra), and no acquired rights of third parties (U. S. v. Moyers, supra; Harrison v. U. S., supra).

Distinguished from "corody" see 9 Cyc. 979 note 32.

Distinguished from salary.— Pension is not synonymous with salary, since the pensioner is not bound to render any services for his pension. In re Higgins, 21 Ch. D. 95, 46 J. P. 805, 51 L. J. Ch. 772, 30 Wkly. Rep. 700.

"Accrued pensions," as used in the pension laws, means the amount of money unpaid by the government to which a pensioner, or one who had a valid pending claim for pension, would be entitled at his death. 19 Op. Atty.-Gen. 1, 2.

the business of discontinued agencies, is competent, without any new appointment, to discharge the duties thereof as well after as before the enlargement.[6]

B. Pension Agents — 1. Appointment. The power to appoint pension agents is vested in the president.[7]

2. Bonds — a. Acceptance. Where there exists a rule of the department requiring an accounting before a new bond is accepted, and a pension agent substitutes by permission a new bond for his official one, the approval of the secretary of the interior, indorsed on the second bond, does not constitute an acceptance of it to stand in lieu of the first bond.[8]

b. Extent of Surety's Liability. The general rule that a surety is never bound beyond the scope of his undertaking applies to a bond given by a pension agent for the faithful performance of his duty.[9]

c. Actions Thereon — (I) Who May Commence. A pensioner cannot maintain an action in his own name on the official bond of a pension agent, in the absence of a covenant in such bond for his benefit.[10]

(II) Amount of Recovery. Where no demand has been made upon the surety to make good his principal's default, interest will be charged only from the date of the service of the writ.[11]

3. Fees — a. In General. No person is entitled to demand or receive for services in procuring a pension more than the sum prescribed by law, and if the services are such as are within the contemplation of the statute they determine the amount of compensation.[12]

b. Payment by Pensioner — (I) In General. Any contract by the pensioner for a sum greater than that prescribed by the statute is void;[13] and by no device or contrivance whatever, such as an agreement, in consideration of services to be rendered in procuring a pension, to apply the pension when obtained toward an existing indebtedness,[14] or to submit to arbitration a demand for an excessive fee,[15] or a gift or loan pursuant to a previous agreement,[16] can the prohibition of the statute be evaded. So too where there is no contract and the person having rendered the services in obtaining a pension demands or receives, or, having come into possession of the pension money, retains or withholds more than the prescribed fee, the statute is violated.[17] But the statute is not violated if the pensioner, after obtaining his pension, voluntarily makes a bona fide gift or loan of a sum in excess of that prescribed, and such gift is not intended or received as a compensation for the donee's services.[18] Nor does the prohibition of the statute as to excessiveness of compensation cover reimbursement for money advanced and actual expenses incurred in prosecuting the pension claim,[19] or services rendered

10. Hughes v. Cotton, 13 Bush (Ky.) 596, holding further that Gen. St. c. 81, § 9, providing that suit may be brought from time to time on the bond of any officer for the benefit of any person injured by a breach thereof, relates only to the bonds of officers of the state, and has no application to bonds of officers of the United States.

for the person claiming the pension after the certificate therefor is issued,[20] or services performed and expenses incurred by a guardian in procuring a pension for his ward.[21]

(II) Lien on Certificate Therefor—(A) In General. One who has been the means of procuring a pension has no right, as of lien, to retain the certificate to secure compensation for his services.[22]

(B) Recovery of Certificate Retained or Damages Therefor. An agent of a pensioner who refuses to deliver the pensioner's certificate upon demand is liable in an action for its value or for damages for its detention.[23]

c. Payment by Third Person. The intention of the statute is to prohibit the recovery from a third person as well as the pension claimant any compensation for services in procuring a pension, other or greater than that provided by statute.[24]

d. Recovery Back. Money taken from the pensioner in excess of the prescribed fee for services in obtaining a pension may, the parties not being regarded as standing in pari delicto, be recovered by the pensioner from the taker by direct suit,[25] or as a set-off in an action against the pensioner.[26]

III. PERSONS ENTITLED.

A. Children. The word "children" in a pension act declaring who shall be entitled to its benefits does not embrace an adopted child,[27] but it does embrace the grandchildren of deceased pensioners, whether their parents died before or after the decease of the pensioner.[28] So too the word "children" in a pension act embraces an illegitimate child, if its parents afterward intermarried and the father acknowledged it, so that it thereby became legitimate under the laws of the state where the parents resided.[29]

B. Widow — 1. Remarriage. A pension act which declares that the widow of any soldier while she remains unmarried shall be entitled to receive the benefit of the act does not include the widow of a soldier who has remarried, although her second husband is also dead.[30] So too a second marriage of a wife deserted by

25. Smart v. White, 73 Me. 332, 40 Am. Rep. 356 (holding further that the right to recover from the taker is unaffected by the fact that the excessive fee was obtained without any wrongful intent on the part of the taker, or by the fact that the pensioner, when paying or allowing the fee, was not aware of the statutory protection); Powell v. Jennings, 48 N. C. 547.

Action against subagent.— However, where a subagent receives from the general government a pension under an agreement with the pensioner that one half of it is to be paid to the agent's principal, and before any demand or objection on the part of the pensioner, one half is accordingly paid to such principal, no action will lie for its recovery from the subagent. one who enters and dies in the service of the United States and her continuing to live with the other party to such marriage after discovering her husband to be alive precludes her from claiming a pension, although she believed her first husband was dead at the time she entered into the second marriage.[31]

2. DIVORCE. Since the term "widow" means a wife that outlives her husband, one who intermarries a pensioner and afterward obtains a decree of divorce absolutely dissolving the marriage is not entitled on the death of the pensioner to be placed on the pension rolls as his widow.[32]

C. Dependents. Under an act providing that, if one has died entitled to a pension leaving persons dependent on him for support at the time of his death, such persons shall be entitled to the pension, one is regarded as a dependent when he requires for his support the use of certain realty in which the pensioner has an interest as heir.[33]

D. Personal Representatives. Unless the law under which a pension is granted otherwise provides, any balance due at the death of a pensioner is payable to his personal representatives.[34] But if the law provides that arrears of pension due at the death of a pensioner shall be paid to his legal representatives for the benefit of his children, such representatives are not entitled to payment of arrears due to their decedent if he left no children.[35]

IV. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE.

A. Jurisdiction. The interior department is the special tribunal of judicial or quasi-judicial powers appointed by law to ascertain all the facts and to Illegality of second marriage.— The widow of a deceased naval officer was allowed a pension from the date of the death of her husband until the date of her remarriage. Subsequently she obtained a divorce from her second husband for intemperance and cruelty. Thereupon she applied for a restoration of the pension on the ground that her second marriage was illegal and her right to the pension was not determined thereby. On such application she alleged that her second husband, at the time of her marriage with him, had a wife living, and that she was cognizant of this fact when she instituted her suit for divorce, but remained silent. It was held that, by permitting the suit against her second husband and procuring a decree which in effect affirmed the validity of her marriage while declaring its dissolution, the claimant rendered the objection of illegality of the second marriage unavailable in support of the claim for pension so long as the decree dissolving the second marriage stands unaffected or judicially unimpeached. 14 Op. But where the statute provides that the pension allowed to any person on account of dependence shall not be paid for any period during which it shall not be necessary as a means of adequate subsistence, an alleged dependent who has made a contract with a third person for her support is not entitled to any pension from the date of such contract. Unclaimed Revolutionary pensions.— The acts of congress granting pensions, or pay in the nature of pensions, to officers and soldiers of the Revolution, and to the widows of such officers and soldiers, do not confer any heritable rights which descend to personal representatives. 8 Op. Atty.-Gen. 198.

When an act granting a pension was the fruit and fulfilment of a treaty granting a pension for disability, and the treaty was a contract with an Indian pensioner during his life, or with his tribe for his benefit, the benefits as well as the responsibilities growing out of it descending, as of course, to his personal representatives, a balance due to the pensioner at the time of his death must be paid to his personal representatives. 4 Op. adjudicate and allow the pension to the party entitled.[36] It is the duty of the commissioner of pensions to consider and determine all questions arising under the pension law, subject only to the direction of the secretary of the interior.[37]

B. Application — 1. IN GENERAL. An application is the first regular, substantial step taken by a claimant to obtain a pension.[38]

2. SUFFICIENCY. If the claimant is identified, and the time and place of his service and the injury or disease which constitute the ground of his claim are substantially set forth, the form is immaterial.[39]

3. PROOF IN SUPPORT OF — a. Necessity. Where the language of the pension law is not explicit on the subject, congress will be presumed to intend proof of indigence as well as of service on the part of those seeking its benefits, and not to intend that inquiry as to the indigence be made by the pension bureau.[40]

b. Rules Governing. After the application is made, the necessary forms and instructions as to the proof of the claim are to be furnished to the claimants by the commissioner of pensions.[41]

C. Decision — 1. EFFECT. Where the commissioner of pensions passes on a claim and finds the claimant to be entitled to the pension, and directs it to be paid, such finding is conclusive as to the rights of claimant,[42] and puts him upon the footing of an acknowledged creditor of the government to an ascertained amount.[43]

2. REVIEW — a. In General. If the proper executive officer decides against one's claim to a pension, there is no appeal,[44] except to congress.[45]

b. Ruling of Former Bureau. The bureau of pensions has the power to review the ruling of a former bureau granting a pension or an increase thereof.[46]

V. COMMENCEMENT AND TERMINATION.

commences with the passage of the act, unless a different intention is either expressed in the act[47] or plainly implied.[48]

2. ACQUIESCENCE OF PENSIONER REGARDING. Whenever a decision fixing the time for the commencement of a pension has been acquiesced in by the pensioner, it cannot after his death be contested by his personal representatives.[49]

B. Termination — 1. IN GENERAL. Pensions being the bounties of the government, congress has the power to recall or terminate them at its pleasure.[50]

2. BY REPEAL OF STATUTE. A pension may be terminated by the repeal of the law under which it was granted and the certificate thereunder issued.[51]

3. BY STRIKING NAME FROM ROLL. The power to strike a name from the pension roll[52] extends to all pensioners and may be exercised on ex parte evidence.[53]

4. COHABITATION BY WIDOW. Open and notorious cohabitation by a widow who is a pensioner shall operate to terminate her pension from the commencement of such cohabitation.[54]

VI. RATE.

A. Discretion of Bureau Regarding. The discretion of the head of the pension bureau to interpret the laws relating to pensions includes the rate due a claimant for a given disability.[55]

B. Total Disability. Under a statute providing that the widow of a pensioner shall be entitled to the pension that he would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled, such widow is thus entitled, without regard to the pension which he was receiving.[56]

C. Double Pension. In the absence of express provision to the contrary, the pension laws will be so interpreted as to prevent any person from receiving a double pension.[57]

D. Modification — 1. DECREASE. A pension bureau may decrease the rate of pension being received by a pensioner under the ruling of a former bureau, on the ground that the proof of disability submitted did not entitle the pensioner to the rate granted.[58]

Restoration of name stricken from roll.— Under an act by congress making it the duty of the secretary of war to strike from the list of pensioners the name of any person who, according to the evidence the schedule required by the act, ought not, in his opinion, to remain thereon, the secretary has no power to restore on subsequent and different evidence the name of any person who may have been stricken off on the evidence of the schedule. 5 Op. Not to be drawn under both general and special acts.— It was competent for congress to pass the act of July 25, 1882, providing that "no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a pension under a special act shall be entitled to receive, in addition thereto, a pension under the general law, unless the special act expressly states that the pension granted thereby is in addition to the pension." 2. INCREASE. Under an act increasing the pensions of all pensioners of a given class, such pensioners are entitled to the increase no matter when they make their application for it;[59] but the benefits of the act cannot be extended to pensioners who do not belong to such class at the time of the passage of the act.[60]

VII. PAYMENT.

A. What Constitutes. The sending of a check to a pensioner, which has been indorsed by him but not transferred in his lifetime, is not a payment.[61]

B. To Whom Made — 1. IN GENERAL. The pension laws expressly provide that no pension shall be paid to any person other than the pensioner entitled thereto.[62]

2. PAYMENT TO WRONG PERSON. One entitled to a pension is not deprived of his right thereto by the fact that a certificate for the pension has been issued and payment made to the wrong person.[63]

C. Forbearance to Demand. Forbearance of one during his life to demand payment of a pension granted to him upon proper application therefor does not extinguish the debt, but it remains due and can only be discharged by payment to his personal representatives.[64]

D. Recovery Back — 1. MISTAKE OF FACT — a. In General. The general rule that a payment made by a mistake of fact may be recovered[65] applies to a payment of pension moneys induced by fraudulent testimony,[66] or made under the mistaken belief that they have accrued since a given date,[67] or made on a check void because the payee was dead at the time it was drawn.[68]

b. Mode of Recovery. Such pension moneys may be recovered back either by direct suit[69] or by way of set-off against a different claim in favor of the pensioner against the government.[70]

2. MISTAKE OF LAW. Pensions moneys, paid to a claimant under mistake of law, cannot be recovered back.[71]

S., 79 Fed. 740, 25 C. C. A. 186 (holding, however, that the government cannot recover back pension money on the ground that it was obtained by false statement on the part of defendant that he contracted a certain disease in service and in line of duty, where it appears that, although defendant might have contracted the disease before he enlisted in the service, yet he was cured of it, so that he was a sound man when he enlisted but subsequently contracted it again while in the service and in the line of his duty); U. The statutory provision that a pension shall be deemed and held by all officers of the United States to be a vested right in the grantee, and that payment thereof shall not be withheld or suspended until the commissioner of pensions after a hearing shall decide to annul or modify the decision by which it was granted, applies only to action by executive officers, and does not affect the right of the United States to proceed through the courts civilly to recover pension money, payment of which was induced by false testimony. VIII. ASSIGNMENT, PLEDGE, OR OTHER TRANSFER.[72]

A. In General. In the absence of express statutory provision,[73] the rule is that a pension granted for past services is assignable;[74] but the rule is otherwise where the pension is granted by the government to one who, although not at the time engaged in active duties, is still liable to actual service, and is therefore to be considered in the service of the government.[75]

B. What Constitutes. Neither a verbal promise by a pension claimant to pay a debt when he receives his pension,[76] nor an agreement for a reasonable compensation for aid in procuring a pension,[77] nor a voluntary gift of a check for pension money,[78] constitutes such a pledge, mortgage, assignment, transfer, or sale of the pension claim as is forbidden by the acts of congress.

C. Recovery of Certificate Pledged. If a pension certificate has been pledged in violation of the statute, the pensioner may maintain an action against the pledgee to recover possession thereof.[79]

Construction.— The acts of congress forbidding the sale, assignment, or transfer of any right, claim, or interest in pensions granted thereby should, like the statute of frauds, receive such a construction as is consistent with the words "and as will suppress the mischief — the mischief of preying upon the necessities of the poor and ignorant." making a false deposition to enable another to procure the payment of a false pension claim, there must be a false claim,[81] a false deposition, and an intent to use the latter in obtaining, or aiding to obtain, the payment or approval of the former.[82] To constitute the statutory offense of procuring the presentation of a false affidavit on an application for a pension, it must appear that the affidavit was transmitted with relation to or in support of a claim against the United States for a pension;[83] but neither intent to defraud the United States,[84] nor a felonious intent,[85] nor the falsity of a claim for a pension,[86] is an essential ingredient of the offense.

2. EXACTING EXCESSIVE FEE. Neither fraud nor extortion[87] nor intent[88] is an element of the offense of demanding or receiving a fee for obtaining a pension in excess of that prescribed by the statute; but the fact of its demand or receipt completes the offense.[89]

3. WRONGFULLY WITHHOLDING PENSION MONEY. To constitute the statutory offense of wrongfully withholding pension money, there must be some unreasonable delay, some refusal to pay on demand, or some such intent to keep the money wrongfully as would constitute an unlawful taking within the meaning of the law.[90]

B. Limitation of Prosecution. The statute of limitations runs from the first day of wrongful withholding from a person of pension money belonging to him.[91]

C. Indictment[92] — 1. FOR MAKING FRAUDULENT CLAIM. An indictment for presenting a fraudulent claim for pension money should aver the fraud with sufficient particularity to enable defendant to prepare his defense and plead the judgment as a bar to a subsequent prosecution.[93]

2. FOR TAKING FALSE OATH. An indictment for taking a false oath to enable another to obtain payment of a false pension claim, which describes the offense in the very words of the statute, is not vitiated by a conclusion which incorrectly

Request to return.— The fact that no demand was made on one who received for his services more than the prescribed fee to return the excess does not affect the question of his guilt. Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U. S. 160, 15 S. Ct. 586, 39 L. ed. 657.

Check or treasury warrants.— The statute extends to holding, against the will of the pensioner, the check or treasury warrants coming into the hands of the agent, its intention being to protect the pensioner against frauds, until the unconditional payment of the money to the pensioner. U. S. v. Ryckman, 12 Fed. 46.

It must also appear that the person from whom it is alleged the pension money is wrongfully withheld is a pensioner of the United States, that the amount wrongfully withheld is the whole or part of a pension or claim allowed and due such pensioner, and that the accused is the person through whose instrumentality the claim was prosecuted. U. S. v. Howard, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,400, 7 Biss. 56.

There must be an actual withholding of the money before it reaches the hands of the pensioner. Ballew v. U. S., 160 U. S. 187, 16 S. Ct. 263, 4 L. ed. 388, holding further that it is not enough that the pension money is fraudulently obtained from the pensioner after it passes under his dominion and absolute control.

91. U. S. v. Irvine, 98 U. S. 450, 25 L. ed. 193; U. S. v. Bennett, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,570, 12 Blatchf. 345.

The running of the statute cannot be avoided by charging in the indictment that the accused withheld the money upon a later day and then proving that on that day he was still retaining the money. U. S. v. Irvine, 98 U. S. 450, 25 L. ed. 193.

denominates the offense.[94] And it need not allege that the false deposition was ever used, or attempted to be used, or set out in full the commission or authority of the notary to administer to the deponent, or aver that the claim had been presented and was pending before the government at the time the deposition was made.[95]

3. FOR PROCURING PRESENTATION OF FALSE AFFIDAVIT. The offense of procuring the presentation of false and fraudulent affidavits on an application for a pension may be couched in the language of the statute, if every ingredient of which the crime is composed be clearly and accurately set forth.[96] It must state the manner of presentation of the affidavit, or the name of the party procured to present it, or that his name is unknown.[97] It must aver that the affidavit was transmitted with relation to, or in support of, a claim against the United States, or facts from which the court can find that the United States could be prejudiced in some way thereby.[98] But the indictment need not charge that the affidavit was made for the purpose of defrauding the United States,[99] that the act was done feloniously or with a felonious intent,[1] or that the pension claim was false.[2]

4. FOR EXACTING AND RECEIVING EXCESSIVE FEE. An indictment for the statutory offense of receiving an excessive fee for obtaining a pension may, in charging the offense, use merely the language of the statute creating it,[3] if the words themselves duly set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense and apprise the accused with reasonable certainty of the charge against him.[4] It is not necessary to allege malice or intent,[5] nor how the accused was instrumental, or what he did, in procuring the pension;[6] nor that the applicant for the pension had been in the military or naval service of the United States;[7] nor that the amount received as a fee was in excess of the sum legally chargeable.[8] The indictment need not negative the existence of a contract in regard to the fee, since under the statute it is unlawful to receive, even by contract, a fee in excess of that prescribed.[9]

5. FOR WITHHOLDING PENSION MONEYS. An indictment for withholding pension moneys which alleges that certain persons are pensioners, but does not allege a withholding of the pension from such persons, is fatally defective.[10]

D. Evidence. The rules of evidence governing criminal prosecutions generally apply to prosecutions for violation of the pension laws.[11]

94. U. S. v. Elliott, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,044, 3 Mason 156, holding further that an indictment describing the offense fully and exactly in the words of the statute is not vitiated where it concludes, "And so the jurors say . . . that the party did commit wilful and corrupt perjury," although the offense is technically perjury.

5. U. S. v. Koch, 21 Fed. 873, holding further that it is sufficient merely to allege that accused did the act prohibited, since the transaction of charging more than the prescribed fee is not inherently vicious, but a statutory offense of which knowledge or intent is not a necessary element.

6. U. S. v. Reynolds, 48 Fed. 215; U. S. v. Koch, 21 Fed. 873, holding further that the gravamen of the offense is not that the accused was instrumental in procuring the pension, but that, having been thus instrumental, he charged and received a fee in excess of that which the statute warrants, and hence, in an indictment therefor, it is only necessary to state that the accused was the person instrumental in procuring the pension.

B. Validity. The constitutionality and validity of such laws have been passed upon and upheld in several cases.[13]

C. Repeal — 1. In General. The fact that one has been placed upon a pension roll under a valid law furnishes no reason why that law should not be repealed and the pension cease.[14]

2. Effect of — a. On Pending Application. An absolute repeal of a pension law leaves unfinished applications without any tribunal to pass upon them.[15]

b. On Pending Prosecution. The well-settled principle that after the repeal of a statute there can be no prosecution of a pending proceeding, unless there be a saving clause in the repealing act,[16] or there be in force a general statutory construction act which provides that the repeal of a statute shall not affect any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such statute,[17] applies to a pending prosecution for taking an illegal fee in a pension case.

St. (1901) p. 3702], for withholding pension money, parol evidence that the person from whom the money is withheld is a pensioner is not admissible, nor are the entries in the local pension agent's books to that effect copied from the certificate of the pensioner. U. S. v. Scott, 25 Fed. 470. Embezzling ward's pension money.—An act of congress making it an offense for a guardian to embezzle or convert to his own use the pension of his ward is not unconstitutional, on the ground that, inasmuch as the state law authorizes the guardian to receive the pension money, the accused could not be subjected to an indictment under an act of congress for embezzling it after he lawfully received it; or on the ground that a guardian is a state officer and as such is not subject to the laws of congress in the performance of his duty; or on the ground that the act is municipal in its character, operating directly on the conduct of individuals, and that it assumes to take the place of ordinary state legislation; or on the ground that matters of police regulation are not surrendered to congress, but are exclusively within the state legislation; or on the ground that it assumes the power of making police regulations which belongs to the state. U. S. v. Hall, 98 U. S. 343, 25 L. ed. 180.

Retaining excessive fee.— An enactment making it an offense for an agent to retain a greater fee than that prescribed for procuring a pension is constitutional, the power to secure to the pensioner the residue of the pension granted being an incident of the power of congress to grant pensions. I. DEFINITION.

A pent road may be defined as a road closed at its terminal points, which is laid out by public authority.[1]

II. NATURE.

All pent roads are public highways,[2] although not open highways.[3]

1. See French v. Holt, 53 Vt. 364; Wolcott v. Whitcomb, 40 Vt. 40. See also Blakeslee v. Tyler, 55 Conn. 387, 11 Atl. 291.

A pent road is one that may be inclosed by gates or bars, and is not an open highway. Bridgman v. Hardwick, 67 Vt. 132, 134, 31 Atl. 33.

III. WHAT MAY BE TERMINI.

A pent road laid out by selectmen may terminate at the farm line of a person for whose special convenience it is laid out, instead of being extended to his buildings.[4]

IV. ESTABLISHMENT.

A. Power to Establish — 1. SELECTMEN. The power is conferred by statute on the selectmen of towns to establish pent roads.[5]

2. COUNTY COURT. The county court can, on appeal from the selectmen, establish a pent road.[6]

B. Proceedings Therefor — 1. NOTICE. It is not necessary to give notice of an intended application for the establishment of a pent road to a mortgagee of the land over which the road, when established, will pass.[7] A landowner who appears before the selectmen and objects to any action by them, but makes no objection to the sufficiency of the notice, waives that objection.[8]

2. PETITION. The selectmen may act without petition, or upon an improper one, and have their action good.[9] On a petition to the county court for a highway, the court has power to lay out a pent road.[10]

3. ORDER. It is not essential that permission to inclose the land shall be included in the order establishing the road,[11] nor does the omission to give such permission in the order change the character of the road from that of a pent road to that of a public highway.[12]

4. OPENING OF ROAD. The opening of a pent road, under the statute, is not a mere taking down of obstructions to travel, but the road is deemed to be opened when the certificate of the opening of the road, signed by the selectmen, has been filed in the town-clerk's office.[13]

5. REVIEW. The judgment of the county court establishing a pent road will be sustained on appeal unless substantial injustice has been done, or unless the county court upon the facts stated could not in law have rendered the judgment it did.[14]

V. DAMAGES TO LANDOWNERS.

When a pent road has been opened in the manner prescribed by statute, the damages occasioned thereby may be recovered by the owner of the land over

Road for winter use.— Selectmen can lay out a pent road for winter use over the land of one person through a wood lot owned by another, although it is laid for the special convenience of such owner. Brock v. Barnet, 57 Vt. 172.

6. French v. Holt, 53 Vt. 364, holding further that, in establishing a pent road, the county court does not exercise its common-law jurisdiction, but the jurisdiction conferred by statute, which is substantially that of an appellate tribunal, from the decision of the selectmen of the town.

7. Brock v. Barnet, 57 Vt. 172.

8. Brock v. Barnet, 57 Vt. 172.

9. Brock v. Barnet, 57 Vt. 172, holding further that the statute providing that three or more freeholders may petition for the road was designed to afford a mode of compelling action by the selectmen, but that their action is the vital thing, however induced.

That one of the petitioners was not a freeholder does not therefore affect the action of selectmen in establishing the road. Brock v. Barnet, 57 Vt. 172.

10. Whitingham v. Bowen, 22 Vt. 317.

11. French v. Barre, 58 Vt. 567, 5 Atl. 568.

12. French v. Barre, 58 Vt. 567, 5 Atl. 568.

13. Warren v. Bunnell, 11 Vt. 600.

14. French v. Barre, 58 Vt. 567, 5 Atl. 568.

Where it does not affirmatively appear from the record what kind of highway was established by the county court, the appellate court will not presume that it was an open highway which could not be legally established of less width than three rods, but will presume that the county court established by its order a pent road which might be legally established of the width of two rods. French v. Barre, 58 Vt. 567, 5 Atl. 568.

Failure to give permission to erect gates and bars.— Where the report of the commissioners does not show that the necessity or convenience of any landowner requires that the road shall be inclosed by gates and bars for a portion of the year, it is not error for the county court to establish a road without making any provision in its order for the

which the road passes.[15] And it seems that the landowner can claim damages of the town, since pent roads are regarded as highways.[16]

VI. MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR.

Towns are bound to keep pent roads in repair, that is, in reasonable repair, taking into consideration their character and importance, and are liable for injuries arising from their not being in such a state of repair[17].

VII. GATES AND BARS.

A. In General. The power to establish a pent road implies the power to fix the place where gates and bars may be erected.[18] If the tribunal establishing the road fails to fix the points where inclosures may be made, the landowner has the right to erect gates and bars for the protection of his crops, if they do not interfere with the reasonable use of such road as a pent road,[19] or with any contract he may be under with any other person to keep his land open and uninclosed.[20]

B. Penalty[21] For Removing — 1. RIGHT OF RECOVERY. The right to recover the penalty given by statute against removing gates or bars across pent roads is not affected by the fact that no copy of the record of the county court establishing the road was recorded in the county clerk's office,[22] nor is the right lost by neglecting for a period of fifteen years to maintain a gate.[23]

2. FORM OF ACTION. The penalty given by the statute against removing gates or bars across a pent road may be recovered in an action of debt.[24]

VIII. USE OF ROAD.

A. In General. No person has a right to use a pent road until it has been legally opened.[25]

B. By Public. The public has a right of access to a legally opened pent road[26] to a reasonable extent.[27] erection of gates and bars. French v. Barre, 58 Vt. 567, 5 Atl. 568.

I. History and Essentials.

Peonage is a form of servitude by which a peon or servant who is indebted to his employer is compelled to remain in the latter's service until the debt is discharged.[1] The system was prevalent in the Spanish American colonies, including Mexico, from which we derived it when we acquired the territory of New Mexico

Peonism is: "The state or condition of a peon; peonage." Century Dict. And see Webster Int. Dict.

Definitions of "peon" are: "A servant; especially, in some of the Spanish American countries, a debtor held by his creditor in a form of qualified servitude, to work out a debt." Webster Int. Dict. [followed in Black L. Dict. (quoted in U. S. v. McClellan, 127 Fed. 971, 976)]. And see 4 Columbia L. Rev. 279 (article by William Wirt Howe).

"A species of serf, compelled to work for his creditor until his debts are paid." Century Dict. [quoted in In re Lewis, 114 Fed. 963, 967].

In New Mexico peons, strictly speaking, were a class of servants bound to personal service for the payment of debts due their masters, but there seems to have been no law regulating their rights and duties under that specific denomination, and the term "peon" was there used as synonymous with "servant." Jaremillo v. Romero, 1 N. M. 190.

The basal fact on which peonage rests is a debt due from the peon to his master. Clyatt v. U. S., 197 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 429, 49 L. ed. 726; U. S. v. Cole, 153 Fed. 801; In re Peonage Charge, 138 Fed. 686.

as the result of the Mexican war.[2] The condition of peonage arose from contract. The peon, male or female, agreed with the master upon the nature of the service, the length of its duration, and the compensation to be paid. The peon then became bound to the master, according to the laws of New Mexico, "for an indebtedness founded upon an advancement in consideration of service."[3] In the earlier stages of the institution there, the person agreeing to perform service could put an end to the relation by paying at any time whatever he owed to the employer.[4] If the peon wished to change masters or service, he might find a new employer who would advance enough to pay the peon's debts to his then master, and the peon would then become bound in the new employer's service. So also the master could sell the service of the peon, for the term, to any one who would pay his debts and assume the duties and obligations of the master. Under later laws the party could not abandon the contract, except by mutual consent or "by some sufficient motive given by one party to another, such as having grievously injured him, or where the master kept the accounts in an ambiguous manner, so that the servant could not understand them." In these cases the contract could be rescinded by paying the amount due by one party to the other. If no such motive should be proven, the contract must be complied with, and the judge or court would order it carried into effect by imposing upon the party failing to comply with the contract, and who should persevere in doing so, that he should indemnify the other party for the injury resulting therefrom; and all resistance was punished by a fine or imprisonment, as the gravity of the circumstances and resistance might require. If the servant refused to comply, and owed any money to the master, and he refused and could not pay it, the court would compel him to pay the principal and interest to the other, and might order the sheriff to contract the services of the peon to the highest bidder.[5] While peonage may be regarded as a form of slavery,[6] it was not chattel slavery as that institution formerly existed in this country. The peon was not a slave; he was a freeman with political as well as civil rights. He entered into the relation from choice, for a definite period, as the result of mutual contract. The relation was not confined to any race.[7] And the child of a peon did not become a peon, nor could the father contract away the services of his minor child except in rare cases.[8]

II. CONSTITUTIONAL AND LEGISLATIVE PROHIBITIONS.

A. In General. The powers of justices of the peace, who succeeded to most of the jurisdiction of the alcaldes in the administration of the law in New Mexico, were not clearly defined, and left very much to their discretion as to the return of peons to service and the mode and quantum of judicial power which could be exercised to compel the service. There was often unscrupulous disregard as to "the legal rights of the unfortunate, the peon, and the feeble, when contesting with the wealthy and influential." The improvidence and the needs of laborers and servants, the greed of employers, and the exercise, often corrupt, of almost irresponsible power of local magistrates, resulted in citizens becoming bound, in constantly increasing numbers and length of service, to compulsory service or labor to coerce payment of debt or compel the performance of real or pretended of a debt. In the latter case the debtor, though contracting to pay his indebtedness by labor or service, and subject like any other contractor to an action for damages for breach of that contract, can elect at any time to break it, and no law or force compels performance or a continuance of the service." obligations of personal service. The evils of the system not only degraded those who were subjected to the system, but exercised a baleful influence upon all other classes, which in innumerable ways fought against the industrial prosperity and moral advancement of the people among whom the system was enforced. It was also wholly out of keeping with the spirit of the thirteenth amendment to the federal constitution, which forbids involuntary servitnde except upon due conviction of crime.[9] The courts of the territory, after the passage of the thirteenth amendment, holding that it destroyed the right formerly existing under the territorial laws to hold to service, released peons from compulsory service on writs of habeas corpus whenever applied to, but made little headway against, the evil. Peons had become so degraded that in many instances they voluntarily returned to the compulsory service, being content to give control over their persons and freedom to masters who in return would feed and clothe them and their families. Masters in many instances resented the new order of things, which deprived them of proper control of their labor, and exercised their old authority in spite of the new amendment, which was not then enforceable by criminal penalty. Officers of the army, particularly in the case of Indians, used the forces of the United States to hold or return them to the system of compulsory labor or service in discharge of their contracts, debts, or obligations. Congress therefore determined not only to destroy the system as it existed in New Mexico, but to prevent in the future in that territory or "in any other Territory or State" of the Union the reappearance or reëstablishment of the evil conditions which the system created. Accordingly it was enacted that "the holding of any person to service or labor under the system known as peonage is abolished and forever prohibited in the Territory of New Mexico, or in any other Territory or State of the United States; and all acts, laws, resolutions, orders, regulations, or usages of the Territory of New Mexico, or in any other Territory or State, which have heretofore established, maintained, or enforced, or by virtue of which any attempt shall hereafter be made to establish, maintain, or enforce, directly or indirectly, the voluntary or involuntary service or labor of any persons as peons, in liquidation of any debt or obligation, or otherwise, are declared null and void;" and that "every person who holds, arrests, returns, or causes to be held, arrested or returned, or in any manner aids in the arrest or return of any person to a condition of peonage, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not less than one year nor more than five years, or by both."[10] This enactment is a valid exercise of the power granted to congress

Peonage as involuntary servitude.— While the thirteenth article of amendment to the federal constitution was intended primarily to abolish African slavery, it equally forbids Mexican peonage or the Chinese coolie trade when they amount to slavery or involuntary servitude; and the use of the word "servitude" is intended to prohibit all forms of involuntary slavery of whatever class or name. by the thirteenth amendment, forbidding slavery or involuntary servitude except as punishment for crime, and declaring that congress shall have power to enforce the amendment by legislation.[11] A federal court may entertain a prosecution for violation of the statute denouncing peonage, although a prosecution of the same acts under the name of kidnapping and false imprisonment might be held in the state courts.[12]

B. Construction of Statutes. The meaning of the terms in the peonage statute must be sought in the light of the history of the institution in New Mexico, and the design of congress interpreted in the light of the evil condition that system developed, which the statute declared should not thereafter exist in any state or territory.[13] Nevertheless the statute is not limited to the territories or other parts of the strictly national domain, but is operative in the states, and wherever the sovereignty of the United States extends;[14] and the statute, like other statutes imposing penalties for the invasion of the rights of the citizen in order to protect him in his liberty and happiness, is not to be construed with the same strictness or on the same footing as those which regulate or restrain the exercise of a natural right or forbid the doing of things not intrinsically wrong.[15] "Peonage," within the meaning of the statute, may be defined as "the holding of any person to service or labor for the purpose of paying or liquidating an indebtedness due from the laborer or employé to the employer, when such employé desires to leave or quit the employment before the debt is paid off."[16] It includes cases of involuntary servitude to work out a debt.[17] However created peonage is denounced and prohibited by the statute. It forbids slavery and involuntary servitude, however attempted, whether created by contract, by criminal individual force, or by municipal ordinance or state law, and in whatever form, or however named.[18] It is immaterial whether the contract whereby the laborer is to work out an indebtedness due from him to the employer is entered into voluntarily or not;[19] and it is immaterial whether such a contract is made in consideration of a prcëxisting indebtedness or for a loan made at the time the contract is made.[20] So it is immaterial whether or not the condition of peonage exists by virtue of a local law or custom creating a system of peonage, or whether it exists in violation, or without the sanction, of law.[21] The condition of peonage, therefore, to which it is forbidden to hold or return any person by the express words of the statute means the situation or status in which a person is placed, including the physical and moral results of returning or holding such person to perform labor or service, by force either of law or custom, or by force of lawless acts of individuals unsupported by local law, "in liquidation of any debt, obligation, or otherwise."[22] The

Illustrations.— A person who hires another, and induces him to sign a contract by which he agrees during the term to be imprisoned or kept under guard, and under cover of such agreement afterward holds the party to the performance of the contract by threats, punishment, or undue influence, subduing his free will, when he desires to abandon the service, is guilty of holding such a person to "a condition of peonage." So a person who falsely pretends to another that he is accused of crime, and offers his good offices to phrase, "condition of peonage," means the actual status, physical and moral, with the inevitable incidents to which the employee, servant, or debtor was reduced under that system when held to involuntary performance or liquidation of his obligation — the effect thereby produced upon the person, liberties, and rights of prevent his conviction if he will pay a sum of money thereby to satisfy the prosecutor, and thus induces such party to sign a contract obligating himself to work to reimburse the amount paid out or pretended to be paid out for this purpose or to pay any other sum on this account, whereby such person agrees to serve him or labor for him and to submit to restraint and deprivation of liberty while he is performing the contract, is guilty of causing such person to be held, or of holding him, in a condition of peonage, whenever such person, believing that the service is necessary to avoid conviction, enters upon the performance of the contract, and is then compelled to remain and perform it, although he desires to leave it, by threats or punishment, subduing his freedom of will. The person who makes such a contract with the person held to service in order that another may get the benefit of his enforced labor, and the person who becomes his custodian, knowing the fact, and enforces the performance of the contract, if the deceived person is compelled to labor against his will, are guilty under the statute. If a person carries another before a magistrate, informing him that he is accused of crime, and the magistrate induces the accused, being of weak mind, or of little intelligence, or confiding, to believe that he is being prosecuted in the court, and that he has been sentenced to hard labor for a fine, and that the party bringing him before the court has confessed judgment for the fine, in consequence of which the person believing himself lawfully sentenced to hard labor for the fine submits to restraint, and his will is subdued by reason of the fraud and the official character of the person before whom he is brought, because he believes himself to be a convict and restrained by the power which the law gives to a hirer over convicts, and he enters upon the service and works under the contract against his will, the persons so concerned are guilty of causing the accused to be held in a condition of peonage, although no warrant issued, no offense in fact was charged, no judgment was rendered, and the person who carried him before the magistrate was only a private citizen. Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671, 682. If a person desiring to have a servant returned to him to work out a debt causes such servant to be arrested on a warrant procured by the master, and after incarceration the master procures the servant's release on his promise to return to his master's employment to continue to work out a debt, the master is guilty of peonage, provided the servant was charged with the crime for the purpose of procuring his arrest and incarceration, and to enable the master to extort from the servant a promise to return and work out the debt. In re Peonage Charge, 138 Fed. 686. Under the statute of Alabama which permits a person convicted of crime to sign a contract in open court, with the written approval of the judge, by which he submits himself to servitude to his surety, on confession of judgment by the latter for the fine and costs, until such fine and costs have been reimbursed by his labor, the provisions of the statute must be strictly followed, and the contract cannot be extended beyond the payment of the fine and costs, nor can it be transferred without the consent of the convict. If he is held thereunder against his will and by force or threats after the fine and costs have been paid, or by another to whom the contract has been transferred without his consent, the person so restraining him is guilty of holding him to a condition of peonage. Peonage Cases, supra. Although one may have confessed judgment for another on his conviction, the surety is not entitled on that account to detain him in custody against his will, as his bail would be before trial, unless the surety has complied with the statutes of the state, and made written contract in open court, approved by the judge in writing. This is a safeguard which the state exacts to prevent abuse and oppression when the surety intends to hold his principal to involuntary service to reimburse him for the payment of the fine and costs. As such an agreement involves personal trust and confidence on the part of the convict in the selection of a keeper, his surety has no authority, without his consent, to transfer the contract and custody of the convict to some other person, who repays to the surety the fine and costs, and enforces the performance of the service. If there is no written contract approved by the court, or if it is transferred without the consent of the convict, the convict cannot be held against his will to perform service to repay his fine and costs. If one holds another convicted of a misdemeanor, against his will, because he has confessed judgment for the fine and costs, without obtaining a written contract in open court, approved in writing by the judge, or holds him against his will, after the fine and costs have been worked out, for advances upon a further term of service, or prevents his leaving by force or threats as above defined, such person is guilty of holding the person in a condition of peonage. Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671, 683.

Liability of officers.—A magistrate or other judicial officer is not criminally liable for an error of judgment or for any act honestly performed under an unconstitutional law; but where he corruptly exercises his functions in order that a citizen may be convicted unlawfully, and sentenced, so that a particular person with whom he has an understanding, express or implied, by becoming surety on a confession of judgment may get the custody of the convict or make a profit out of a contract to be made between the convict and a man held in such a situation.[23] "Otherwise," in contradistinction to "any debt or obligation," cannot mean less than that the debt or obligation upon which the claim to compulsory service is based need not be real or of legal validity, and includes cases when the "obligation" performance of which is coerced by labor against the will of the servitor is unfounded, concocted, or illegal, or arises from agreements or dealings with strangers claiming the right to his service; as where a person having or pretending to have some obligation of the servitor transfers the obligation upon which he claims the right to exact service to a third person, who coerces labor or service against the will of the debtor or person claimed to be bound by the obligation in settlement or "liquidation" of such "obligation" or "otherwise," that is, by like means.[24] The holding or returning to a condition of peonage arises and exists wherever unlawful dominion is exercised over the person and freedom of one, whether he has agreed or not to submit to such control, in order to exact compulsory performance of labor or service against his will; or when, without the agreement, such dominion is used and exercised over him at any time upon a claim of indebtedness or obligation due or claimed to be due from him, directly or indirectly, whether well or ill founded, in consequence of which the service is compulsorily exacted of him against his will.[25] The test often given for determining the influence, force, or threats which deprive a person of freedom of choice and coerce his will is that the force, influence, or threats must be sufficient to overcome the will of a reasonably firm man under like circumstances; but the better rule, which should be applied to these cases is that, as all persons are not of like courage and firmness, the court or jury, as the case may be, must consider the situation of the parties, the relative inferiority or inequality between the person contracting to perform the service and the person exercising the force or influence to compel its performance, and determine in view of all the circumstances whether the service was involuntary — upon compulsion.[26] In some states various statutes "are used in various ways to uphold peonage and other kinds of involuntary servitude. Some of them are vagrancy laws, some contract labor or employment laws, some fraudulent pretense or false promise laws, and there are divers others. Some few of those in question, such as absconding debtor laws, labor enticing, and board-bill laws, were not originally passed to enslave workmen; but, in view of the use to which they are put, need amendment in order that they cannot be so abused. These laws are used to threaten workmen who, having been defrauded into going to an employer by false reports as to the conditions of employment and the surroundings, naturally become dissatisfied as soon as they find how they have been defrauded. They are used before juries and the local public to hold the peons as law-breakers and dishonest persons seeking to avoid their 'just obligations' and to convince patriotic juries that the defendants accused of peonage should not be convicted for enforcing, still less for threatening to enforce, the laws of their State."[27] In so far, however, as they might serve to justify peonage they are of no effect.[28] It is to be observed, however, that there are many persons other than those duly convicted of crime who may be compelled against their will to perform labor or service, and the holding of such persons to service or labor against their will does not fall within the reason his surety in consequence of which the convict is restrained of his liberty and put to hard labor, such magistrate cannot escape criminal liability to the United States for the conspiracy and its natural and designed results in the holding of a citizen to a condition of peonage, because of the official character of his acts. Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671. See, generally, JUDGES, 23 Cyc. 567 et seq. However, a guilty knowledge of the unlawful purpose of the arrest is essential to the making out of the crime against the arresting officer. The arrest must be made knowingly, for the purpose of returning the person to a prior condition of peonage or servitude, or placing him therein to work out a debt. In re Peonage Charge, 138 Fed. 686.

of the peonage statute. Instances where such compulsory service may be enforced arise in the case of parent and child, master and apprentice, and certain services to be rendered the government, as in the army and navy, and also where the state exacts public duties of the citizen, such as service in the militia, working of the public roads, and the like;[29] and the enforced service of seamen likewise forms an exception.[30]

Code (1902), § 357, declaring a laborer under contract to labor on farm lands, who shall receive advances and thereafter wilfully and without just cause fail to perform the reasonable service required by the contract, guilty of a misdemeanor, is in violation of U. S. Const. Amendm. XIII, prohibiting slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, and of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 1990 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901), p. 1266], enacted pursuant thereto, abolishing peonage); Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671 (holding that Ala. Acts (1900–1901), p. 1208, § 1, which makes it a penal offense where any person who has contracted in writing to labor for or serve another for any given time, or who has by written contract leased or rented land from another for any specified time, or who has contracted in writing with the party furnishing land, or the land and teams to cultivate it, either to furnish the labor or labor and teams to cultivate the land, shall afterward, without the consent of the other party and without sufficient excuse, to be adjudged by the court, "leave such other party or abandon said contract, or leave or abandon the leased premises or land . . . and take employment of a similar nature from another person, without first giving him notice of the prior contract," is void, as in violation of the thirteenth amendment, prohibiting involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime, and that its enforcement establishes a system of peonage within the meaning of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 1990 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1266], enacted to carry such amendment into effect).

However, Ga. Acts (1903), p. 90, making it a penal offense for any person to procure money or other thing of value on a contract to perform services with intent to defraud, is not repugnant to the peonage statute, for the intent of the act was not to punish for mere failure to pay a debt but to punish acts which are criminal. I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

A. Definition and Nature of Offense[1] — 1. At Common Law — a. Perjury. By the common law perjury is the wilful and corrupt taking of a false oath, lawfully administered in a judicial proceeding or the course of justice in regard to a matter material to the issue or point of inquiry.[2] At common law it is a misde-

b. False Swearing. In some cases the taking of a false oath was punishable at common law by indictment as a misdemeanor, although the offense did not amount to perjury.[6]

2. By Statute. As modified by statute, perjury may be more accurately defined to be the wilful and corrupt assertion of a falsehood, under oath or affir-

Distinction between "perjury" and "false oath."— There is a difference between a wilful false oath, constituting the crime of perjury, and a false oath which, at common law, might be punishable as a misdemeanor. The one is stubborn and corrupt, while the other is simply not true, lacking the elements which go to constitute the crime of perjury. Miller v. State, 15 Fla. 577, 585.

mation administered by authority of law, in a material matter, the offense being enlarged and made to extend to other false oaths than those taken in the course of judicial proceedings.[7] In some states the statute creates the offense of false swearing, which is totally distinct from that of perjury at common law.[8] To constitute this offense it is not necessary either that the false oath should be taken in a judicial proceeding pending at the time, or in a matter material to any point in question; but it is complete if the false oath is taken knowingly and wilfully on a subject on which the party could be legally sworn, and before a person legally

App. 283. It is only necessary to show, in order to convict defendant of false swearing under Ky. St. (1903) § 1174, that the false statement was wilfully made with a knowledge of its falsity on a subject as to which he might be legally sworn, and that the oath was legally administered. Stamper v. Com., 100 S. W. 286, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 992.

In Texas perjury is a false oath required by law, as distinguished from "false swearing," which is a voluntary declaration or affidavit which is not required by law, or made in the course of judicial proceedings. O'Bryan v. State, 27 Tex. App. 339, 11 S. W. 443.

Repeal of statutes.— Since false swearing and perjury are distinct offenses, a statute defining and punishing false swearing does not impliedly repeal an earlier statute punishing perjury. State v. Coleman, 117 La. 973, 42 So. 471, holding that Acts (1906), p. 200, No. 118, relating to wilful, corrupt, and false swearing, and providing that who-authorized to administer oaths.[9] Under such a statute a false statement made in the course of a judicial proceeding cannot be "false swearing," but may be perjury.[10] Perjury is made an offense by the laws of the United States,[11] and the offense under these laws is punishable by proceedings in the courts of the United States and not in the state courts.[12]

B. Elements of Offense — 1. In General. The elements of the offense of perjury are the falsity of the testimony[13] and knowledge thereof;[14] the proceeding in which the oath is administered, which must be such as to come within the common law or statutory definition of the offense;[15] the jurisdiction or authority to administer the oath;[16] the administration and making of the oath or substitute therefor;[17] and the materiality of the testimony or assertion and the oath.[18] It is not necessary that the false oath be credited, or that the party against whom it is given be prejudiced thereby, for the prosecution is not grounded on the damage to the party, but on the abuse of public justice.[19]

2. Falsity of Testimony and Knowledge Thereof — a. Necessity That Testimony Be False. To constitute perjury the matter sworn to must be either false in fact,[20] or, if true, defendant must believe it to be false, in which case he is ever shall be found guilty of that offense shall be punished, etc., does not repeal Rev. St. § 857, a general statute regarding perjury.

10. Langford v. State, 9 Tex. App. 283; State v. Smith, 63 Vt. 201, 22 Atl. 604.

11. "Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed is true, wilfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury." U. S. Rev. St. § 5392 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3653]. See Caha v. U. S., 152 U. S. 211, 14 S. Ct. 513, 38 L. ed. 415. And see other cases cited infra, I, B, 3, h, (xi), note 89.

To constitute perjury, the party charged must take an oath before some competent tribunal or officer that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly that his written testimony, declaration, or certificate by him subscribed was true, when in fact some material matter so testified, declared, or certified by him was false and untrue, and known by him at the time of taking such oath to have been false and untrue. U. S. v. Richards, 149 Fed. 443.

The word "perjury," in Pension Act (1820), c. 51, § 2, declaring that any person who shall swear falsely in the premises and be thereof convicted shall suffer as for wilful and corrupt perjury, does not mean the technical offense of perjury, but merely refers to it for the purpose of affixing the same punishment as for technical perjury. The word "wilful" means merely that the perjured testimony must have been given with some degree of deliberation. People v. Von Tiedeman, 120 Cal. 128, 52 Pac. 155; Krauskopf v. Tallman, 38 N. Y. (Pa.) 249; Com. v. O'Grady, 4 Pa. Dist. 732.

The word "corrupt" means that the false testimony was given from some improper and corrupt motive; that, at the time the assertion was made, the party had some corrupt purpose in making it. In re Franklin County, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 691, 7 Ohio N. P. 450; Com. v. O'Grady, 4 Pa. Dist. 732.

The knowledge which a witness must have in order to render him guilty of perjury need not be actual knowledge, but may be knowledge with which he is chargeable by reason of association with the transaction which con-

conflict between the testimony of the parties to a suit.[24] It must appear that the false oath was taken with some degree of deliberation; for if, upon the whole circumstances of the case, it appears probable that it was owing rather to the weakness than the perverseness of the party, as where it was occasioned by surprise or inadvertence, it will not amount to perjury.[25] Where a witness remembers certain material facts, and he swears falsely, wilfully, and corruptly to the effect that he does not remember them, he is guilty of perjury.[26]

(II) Rash Statements — (A) According to Belief. There is some difference of opinion as to whether perjury, or false swearing in the nature of perjury, can be committed by mere rash and reckless statements on oath according to one's belief. The better view seems to be that, since corrupt motive is an indispensable element of perjury, one who honestly testifies, however positively, only what he believes to be true, cannot be guilty of perjury, although he is mistaken.[27] Some of the cases, however, are to the contrary.[28]

(B) Contrary to Belief. Where a witness swears to a thing of which he consciously knows nothing, he is guilty of perjury,[29] although it is true.[30] It is not, stitutes the subject of the investigation. State v. Faulkner, 185 Mo. 673, 84 S. W. 967; State v. Smith, 47 Oreg. 485, 83 Pac. 865.

Effect of generality of question.— A wilful false statement in answer to a question propounded constitutes a good assignment of perjury, although the question asked is too general to form a basis for the impeachment of the witness. The generality of the question may, however, be a circumstance to show that the evidence was not given wilfully and deliberately — that it was given under a mistake or misapprehension; but a witness having boldly answered a question and answered it falsely, as well as deliberately and wilfully, cannot afterward avail himself of the generality of the question to defeat a prosecution for perjury. however, necessarily perjury for one to swear to an affidavit of which he does not know the contents. In order to fasten upon him the guilt of perjury, he must have known that he did not know its contents, and made the affidavit notwithstanding.[31] Perjury may also be assigned as to what a man has sworn that he thought or believed; the difficulty, if any, being in the proof of the assignment.[32]

(III) Opinions—(A) As to Matters of Fact. Even in a matter calling for the exercise of judgment and expression of opinion perjury may be predicated if one wilfully and corruptly refrains from exercising his judgment and giving expression to his real opinion when in law he is bound to do so.[33] But in the absence of a showing that there was a wilful failure and refusal to exercise an honest judgment, the charge of perjury cannot be successfully maintained.[34] Where the statement which is the basis of the accusation is a matter of construction, or a deduction from given facts, the fact that it is erroneous, or is not a correct construction, or is not a logical deduction from all the facts, cannot constitute it perjury or false swearing.[35]

(B) As to Matters of Law. A witness cannot be guilty of perjury in giving his opinion as to the legal effect of facts about which he is required to testify.[36] Thus a misconception or mistake in swearing to the construction of a written instrument is not sufficient to warrant a conviction of perjury.[37]

3. Proceeding in Which Oath Is Administered — a. In General — (I) At Common Law. At common law a charge of perjury can be made only upon an oath in a judicial proceeding.[38] It is not necessary, however, that the proceeding shall be before a judicial tribunal, but it suffices to render a false oath perjury that it be taken in a proceeding in a course of justice.[39] Indeed it has been held that the taking of a false oath wilfully and corruptly in any case where the administration of an oath is lawful is perjury at common law.[40]

(II) By Statute. Under some of the statutes punishing perjury the offense is limited, as at common law, to false oaths in judicial proceedings.[41] But false swearing otherwise than in judicial proceedings is punished generally as a distinct offense.[42] Other statutes, as has been seen, extend the crime of perjury so as to include other false oaths than those taken in the course of judicial proceedings, and so as to apply whenever the oath is authorized by law and administered by an authorized officer.[43] A wilful false oath taken in one jurisdiction, pursuant to the laws of another, may be the subject of a prosecution for perjury in the former.[44]

b. Particular Proceedings — (I) Affidavits and Depositions — (A) Affidavits. If a person wilfully and corruptly swears or affirms falsely as to a material matter in any affidavit, in a judicial proceeding, or by statute in many jurisdictions in any affidavit required by law, he is guilty of perjury.[45] Thus it is perjury both at common law and under the statutes to swear falsely to a material point in an affidavit for the continuance of a cause,[46] in support of a petition for a new trial,[47] for the purpose of obtaining a certiorari,[48] for a writ of habeas corpus,[49] for an injunction,[50] to an account for the purpose of having it passed by the orphan's court,[51] in proceedings by a landlord to remove his tenant,[52] or charging an offense against another to procure his arrest or institute a criminal prosecution,[53] or to procure a search warrant.[54] And the making of false affidavits not in judicial proceedings is perjury under many statutes.[55] Before a party may be convicted of perjury, however, in making a false affidavit, he must either use the affidavit for a purpose contemplated by the statute, or deliver it to someone for such use;[56] but it need not necessarily be used in the trial for which it was taken.[57] Whether or not the affidavit is sufficient for the purpose for which it was intended is immaterial.[58] Nor is it essential that the affidavit should be capable of being used as evidence. It is enough that the matter falsely sworn to is material to the point of inquiry at the time it is made.[59]

(B) Depositions. Perjury may also be assigned upon false testimony in the giving of a deposition authorized by law,[60] although not where the deposition is illegal because not taken as authorized.[61] Where a statement made upon oath by a person on his examination for discovery before trial in an action forms part of his evidence at the trial, it is evidence given in a judicial proceeding within the meaning of a statute punishing perjury.[62]

(II) Acknowledgment of Deed. Under statutes it has been held to be perjury for a person to swear falsely to his identity as grantor on examination by an officer authorized to administer the oath on taking the acknowledgment of a deed;[63] or to swear falsely to the execution of a deed as an attesting witness.[64]

(IV) Bankruptcy and Insolvency Proceedings. Taking a false oath under the Insolvent Debtor's Act is perjury both at common law and under the statutes.[69] So one wilfully omitting property from his schedule in insolvency is guilty of perjury.[70] It was held, however, that it was not perjury for a bankrupt, under the bankrupt law of 1841, to swear falsely to his schedule, although if he made false statements in regard to it in answer to interrogatories proposed to him in his examination it was perjury.[71]

(V) Claim to Public Money. A false affidavit to support a claim to public money, not being made in a judicial proceeding, is not perjury at common law, although it is no doubt indictable as false swearing;[72] but perjury is assignable upon such an affidavit under statutes extending the crime of perjury to false oaths other than those taken in judicial proceedings.[73] Sometimes such a false oath is made punishable as a distinct offense and does not fall within the statute punishing perjury.[74]

Claim against United States.— One making a cross affidavit before a justice of the peace of the state, in order to establish a claim against the United States, is indictable under the act of congress passed March 1, 1823, to prevent false swearing touching public money, although such affidavit was not expressly authorized by an act of congress, but allowed by the secretary of the treasury to be made before a justice of the peace. U. S. v. Bailey, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 238, 9 L. ed. 113.

Pension claim.— The offense of perjury as defined by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5392 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3653] (supra, I, A, 2, note 11) may be predicated upon an affidavit to support a pension claim sworn to before a justice of the peace. U. S. v. Boggs, 31 Fed. 337.

Clerk of court.— The account of services rendered the United States by a clerk of the district court is a "declaration" or "certificate" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5392 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3653], making the false verification thereof perjury. U. S. v. Ambrose, 108 U. S. 336, 2 S. Ct. 682, 27 L. ed. 746.

In Texas an affidavit of a deputy sheriff for expenses in conveying a witness from one county to another under Acts (1891), p. 138, providing that for such service the sheriff shall be entitled to his expenses, the amount to be stated by him under oath, is "an oath necessary for the prosecution of a private right," within Pen. Code, art. 188, declaring that a false statement under oath for the prosecution or defense of any private right is perjury, and is not an oath "in a judicial proceeding," within the article 192, providing that a false oath in a judicial proceeding shall constitute perjury. Shely v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 190, 32 S. W. 901.

Where a public school-teacher, on making affidavit as required by law to the check drawn by the trustees on the county treasurer for his pay, makes a false statement, he is guilty of perjury under Tex. Pen. Code, art. 188, defining perjury as a false statement made under the sanction of an oath under circumstances in which an oath is required by law. O'Bryan v. State, 27 Tex. App. 339, 11 S. W. 443. So in Mississippi, where a teacher who had taught a number of days in excess of the regular term, for which he could not legally receive compensation, exaggerated the number of scholars at the next term, so as to entitle him to an amount sufficient to pay for the extra days' teaching, and made oath to such report, it was held that he was guilty of perjury. jury for giving a false answer while being examined under oath as to his competency to sit as juror on the trial of a cause.[75]

(VII) JUSTIFICATION OF SURETY.[76] If a surety on a bail-bond or recognizance testifies falsely and knowingly in an affidavit or on examination as to his ownership of property or other qualifications, he is guilty of perjury both at common law and under the statutes,[77] and the same is true of one who swears falsely on justifying as surety on an appeal-bond or recognizance.[78] So, under the act of congress extending the crime of perjury,[79] one may be guilty of that offense in swearing falsely as to his qualifications to become a surety on a distiller's bond,[80] or a match-stamp bond,[81] before an internal revenue collector.

(VIII) STATEMENT OF OFFICERS AS TO CONDITION OF BANK OR CORPORATION. A false oath in a statement or report required by law of directors or officers of a bank or other corporation as to its condition or affairs, not being in a judicial proceeding, would not be perjury at common law;[82] but it is otherwise in some jurisdictions under particular statutes or under general statutes extending the crime of perjury.[83] A wilful and corrupt false statement under oath by an officer of a national bank, to the controller of the currency,[84] or by an officer of a state bank to the state superintendent of banks,[85] as to the condition of the bank, constitutes perjury.

(IX) NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS. False swearing on a material matter in a naturalization case is perjury both at common law and under the statutes.[86]

(X) PROCEEDINGS BEFORE GRAND JURY. A person who wilfully and knowingly swears falsely as to a material matter in giving testimony before a grand jury having legal authority to inquire into the matter under investigation may be indicted and tried for perjury, both at common law and under the statutes;[87]

4. Reg. v. Chamberlain, 10 Manitoba 261. In this case the prisoner was convicted on an indictment for perjury, in having sworn before the deputy returning officer at an election for membership of the house of commons for the city of Winnipeg, that he was the person whom he represented himself to be, named on the list of electors for the polling subdivision. He was not an elector, nor entitled to vote in the constituency, and at the trial his counsel contended that there was no authority for the deputy returning officer, under the Dominion Elections Act (Can. Rev. St. c. 8, § 45) to administer an oath to any person but an elector, and the judge reserved a case for the opinion of the court as to whether the prisoner had been properly convicted. It was held that the statute must receive a reasonable construction, that authority was intended to be conferred upon the officer to administer the oath to any person presenting himself and claiming to be an elector entitled to vote, and that under Cr. Code (1892), § 148, the prisoner had been properly convicted of perjury.

by a national bank director;[5] provided in all cases that the oath is one required or authorized by law, and that it is administered by an officer or tribunal authorized so to do.[6] And a wilfully false answer by the applicant to a question in an application for civil service examination, as to whether he has ever been in the government employ, and, if so, whether he resigned or was discharged, is perjury under the federal statute.[7]

c. Voluntary, Official, and Promissory Oaths — (I) Voluntary Oaths. The taking of a mere voluntary oath that is nowhere either authorized or required by law is not perjury.[8] A charge of perjury cannot be predicated upon false testimony before a grand jury, where the grand jury had no legal authority to inquire into the particular matter under investigation.[9] Nor can perjury be assigned on the affidavit of an applicant for naturalization as to his residence in a state previous to the application, since as to such matter an oath is not required.[10]

(II) Official and Other Promissory Oaths. Perjury cannot be predicated of an official[11] or other promissory oath,[12] unless by express statutory provision.[13] The rule does not apply, however, where an officer is required by law to take an oath as to his qualifications or other facts, and swears falsely as to such facts.[14]

4. Jurisdiction or Authority to Administer Oath — a. Judicial Oaths — (I) In General. In the absence of statute to the contrary, it is well settled that, to constitute perjury in a judicial proceeding, the false swearing must have been before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the matter under investigation.[15]

Congress cannot confer on the secretary of the interior or commissioner of the land-office power to make rules and regulations, such as prescribing by whom the oath is to be administered to one making preëmption entry, or the facts to be contained in the affidavit, so as to make it perjury for the preëmptor to make a false affidavit, when the facts sworn to are not required by statute to be sworn to, and the statute does not authorize the oath to be administered by the person who administers it. U. S. v. Bedgood, 49 Fed. 54.

(II) Particular Officers or Persons Authorized to Administer Oaths[25] — (A) Justices of the Peace. It is usually provided by statute that justices of the peace shall have power to administer oaths and affirmations to witnesses and others, concerning anything depending, or proceedings commenced, or to be commenced, before them.[26] But oaths administered by justices of the peace beyond their jurisdiction cannot be made the basis of a charge of perjury.[27]

(B) Notaries Public. Notaries public are frequently authorized both by state laws,[28] and the laws of the United States,[29] to administer oaths, and consequently a false oath sworn before a notary public may be perjury.[30] In the absence of a statute, however, a notary has no authority to administer oaths, and perjury cannot be assigned upon an oath administered by him without authority.[31]

(C) Other Ministerial Officers. Where ministerial officers are authorized by statute to administer particular oaths, perjury can be predicated upon such oaths administered by them, if the case otherwise falls within the common law or statutory definition of perjury.[32]

U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 1778 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1211], authorizing notaries public to administer oaths in all cases in which justices of the peace have power to administer them, gives no power to administer an oath in investigation by the post-office department as to the alleged loss of a registered letter, for there is no statute giving justices such power, and hence no indictment for perjury can be based upon false statements in an affidavit made before a notary in such an investigation. U. S. v. Law, 50 Fed. 915.

Proceedings before land-office.— Notaries public are not authorized by any law of the United States to administer oaths to affidavits required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner of the general land-office; and perjury cannot therefore be assigned upon such an affidavit. (D) Deputies and Assistants. Where an officer has authority to appoint deputies, if necessary for the discharge of the duties of his office, a false oath taken before such a deputy is as much perjury as if taken before the officer himself.[33]

(E) De Facto Officers. The decisions are not in accord as to whether perjury can be assigned on an oath administered by an officer de facto. An English case supports the negative of this proposition,[34] and some of the courts of this country have followed the doctrine of this case.[35] In other courts it is repudiated, and it is held that a witness who swears falsely before a de facto officer is liable to punishment for perjury to the same extent as though the oath had been administered by an officer de jure.[36] An officer de facto is one who acts under color of title, which color can only be given by power having authority to fill the office.[37]

5. Administration, Form, and Making of Oath or Substitute Therefor — a. In General. To constitute a valid oath, for the falsity of which perjury will lie, there must be, in the presence of a person authorized to administer it, an unequivocal act by which affiant consciously takes upon himself the obligation of an oath.[38] It is, however, immaterial in what form it is given, if the one testifying professes such form to be binding on his conscience,[39] unless some particular form of oath is prescribed by statute, in which case a substantial compliance with the statute is

An oath may be administered on the Book, or with uplifted hand, or in any mode peculiar to the religious belief of the person swearing, or in any form binding on his conscience. U. S. v. Mallard, 40 Fed. 151, 5 L. R. A. 816. See also McAdam v. Weaver, 4 N. Brunsw. 176.

In Canada perjury may be assigned where sufficient;[40] and it is no defense that the oath was taken or administered in an irregular manner.[41] It will be presumed that the mode which a witness adopted in taking the oath was the one which accorded with his belief, and which he considered binding on his conscience,[42] and where at the time he was sworn he made no objection to the form of its administration, but took it and testified under it, he will not be allowed, in order to escape the penalty for perjury, to claim that it was not administered in strict conformity with law.[43]

b. Verification of Affidavits and Other Writings.[44] If the false oath charged is a written statement sworn to by defendant, it is immaterial whether the oath was administered before or after the statement was reduced to writing, the material point being that defendant was sworn.[45] The mere delivery of an affidavit, signed by the person presenting it, to the officer for his certificate, is not such an act as will constitute a valid oath.[46] It is not necessary that a false affidavit of verification shall itself state the facts sworn to, but they may be stated in the report or pleading to which the affidavit is attached.[47] Nor is the want of signature to the affidavit material.[48] If signed, however, the oath must be taken by the person who signs it.[49]

6. Materiality of Testimony, Assertion, or Oath — a. Materiality of Testimony or Assertion — (i) Necessity That Testimony or Assertion Be Material. To constitute perjury, at common law and under the statutes generally, the matter falsely sworn to must be material to the issue or the question in controversy.[50]

the oath has been administered on the common prayer book of the church of England. McAdam v. Weaver, 4 N. Brunsw. 176. When a witness without objection takes an oath in the form ordinarily administered to persons of his race or belief, he is then under a legal obligation to speak the truth and cannot be heard to say that he was not sworn. Rex v. Lai Ping, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 467, 11 Brit. Col. 102. Therefore, perjury may be assigned in respect of statements given in evidence by a Chinaman who was not a christian where the oath was administered to him by the burning of paper and an admonition to him "that he was to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth or his soul would burn up as the paper had been burned." Irrelevant testimony, although false, cannot be made the basis of a charge of perjury;[51] nor will a false oath as to superfluous and immaterial matter sustain an indictment for this offense.[52] Under some statutes, however, the materiality of the matter with reference to which the offense was alleged to have been committed is not an element of perjury or false swearing.[53]

dence.[55] It is enough if it be circumstantially material,[56] although not in itself sufficient to establish the issue.[57] The guilt of one who has falsely sworn does not depend upon the result of the proceedings in which it occurred,[58] and if a person swears falsely in respect to any fact relevant to the issue, he is guilty of perjury, although the case failed from defect of proof of another fact, and although the other fact alleged had no existence.[59]

(III) Particular Instances — (A) Justification of Surety. When one offers himself as bail, his statements under oath as to the value of his property are material; and, if they are wilfully and corruptly false, he is liable to conviction for perjury.[62] The fact that the testimony alleged to be false caused the court to accept the party as bail will not supply or constitute an equivalent for a want of materiality in the testimony charged to be false.[63]

(B) Testimony Before Grand Jury.[64] On an investigation before a grand jury of an alleged crime, any testimony tending to establish either that such crime has been in fact committed, or that it has not been committed, is material, and perjury may be assigned upon the testimony of a witness before that body which is wilfully false in respect to any fact tending to establish or disprove the commission of such crime.[65] The fact that at the time the testimony was given, the grand jury had already voted to indict in the case under consideration,[66] although they had not actually done so, but were still considering the case,[67] does not render such testimony immaterial, so as to be incapable of supporting the charge of perjury. Nor can a witness who falsely denies before the grand jury any knowledge of a fact material to the investigation defend a charge of perjury on the ground that the evidence sought from him would have been merely cumulative.[68] If the grand jury has no legal authority to inquire into a particular matter false testimony in relation to such matter is immaterial.[69]

(C) Testimony to Prove Alibi. On the trial of an indictment, false testimony tending to prove an alibi is material, and will support a conviction for perjury.[70]

(D) Testimony in Aggravation or Mitigation of Damages. Testimony tending to aggravate or mitigate the damages in an action is material, and, if false, constitutes perjury.[71]

(E) Testimony Going to Credit of Witness. Perjury may be assigned upon testimony going to the credit of a material witness in a cause,[72] although such evi-

Contradictory statements by witness.— Where a witness has given testimony material to the issue, and in answer to a question as to whether he had not previously made a different statement, he denies having done so, the answer affects his credibility as a witness, and a charge of perjury may be founded upon it. dence is legally inadmissible and ought not to be received.[73] So also perjury may be predicated on a false answer of a witness that he had never been convicted of a felony, as such answer affects his credibility, and is therefore material to the issue,[74] provided the evidence of conviction is not too remote.[75]

(F) Incompetency of Witness or Testimony and Waiver Thereof. A party has a right to waive all objections to the competency of a witness produced against him, and, having done so, the evidence becomes as competent and material as though no such objection had existed, and the witness will be guilty of perjury if he testifies falsely.[76] It has been held that, although testimony ought by law to be taken in writing, yet, if it is received orally, perjury may nevertheless be assigned on it.[77]

b. Materiality of Oath. To constitute the crime of perjury the false oath must not only be as to material facts, but it must also in itself be material.[78] If an oath is permitted, although not required by statute, intentional false swearing therein is perjury.[79]

C. Defenses[80] — 1. Truth of Facts Testified To. In a prosecution for perjury the truth of the facts testified to is of course a defense,[81] unless defendant believed his testimony to be false.[82]

Necessity that witness be material.— But where the evidence of a witness is immaterial, perjury cannot be based on his testimony, given on cross-examination, as to matters affecting his credibility only. Stanley v. U. S., 1 Okla. 336, 33 Pac. 1025.

And see supra, I, B, 2, a.

82. See supra, I, B, 2, a.

2. ACQUITTAL IN FORMER PROCEEDING. In a prosecution for perjury, judgment of acquittal of defendant in the cause in which the perjury was committed is not necessarily a bar.[83] It has been held, however, that a person cannot be convicted of perjury in swearing to a state of facts which a jury in another case against him has found to be true.[84]

3. INTOXICATION. Since wilfulness and deliberation are essential elements of the crime of perjury, the accused is entitled to an acquittal, if at the time the false testimony was given he was so intoxicated as to be incapacitated to understand the testimony he gave, or to wilfully and knowingly swear falsely.[85]

4. ADVICE OF COUNSEL. If one accused of perjury fully and in good faith lays the facts before counsel, and upon them is advised, as a matter of law, that a certain statement may be made which will be the truth, and, acting on this advice, the client swears to the statement, believing that he has been correctly advised, it cannot be said that the oath is wilfully and corruptly false, and hence a charge of perjury cannot be predicated upon it.[86] If, however, he fails to communicate all the material facts within his knowledge, advice of counsel furnishes him no defense;[87] nor is such advice a defense where it was sought as a mere cover to secure immunity from the penalty of the crime.[88]

5. THREATS. On indictment for perjury it is no defense that defendant was induced to testify falsely by threats against his life made out of court and sometime before the trial.[89]

6. OTHER DEFENSES. The fact that a continuance was erroneously refused to defendant when on trial for theft is no defense in a prosecution for perjury committed by him when before the examining court on such charge.[90] The fact that the oath was not reduced to writing as required by law is no bar to a conviction for perjury, for the failure of the officer administering the oath to do his duty cannot avail defendant.[91] One indicted for false swearing may be convicted, although the officer who administered the oath knew at the time that it was false and was made to obtain funds to which the affiant was not entitled, and such officer administered the oath for the purpose of instituting criminal proceedings.[92] On an indictment against an officer of a bank for perjury in falsely making affidavit to the truth of the report of the bank's condition, defendant cannot object that the affidavits of other persons to the report are defective, and therefore extrajudicial, so long as his own affidavit was in compliance with the law.[93] Where a person is indicted for perjury in falsely testifying that another person by false pretenses obtained his signature to a paper, it is no defense that defendant's signature consisted in making his mark only.[94]

his own behalf and of his own accord, is guilty of perjury if he swears falsely.[96] So also if a witness who waives his privilege not to give testimony that may tend to incriminate him gives false testimony, perjury may be assigned upon it;[97] and the fact that he is required, against objection, to testify to incriminating matter, does not excuse him for testifying falsely.[98] A corporation aggregate is not liable to a prosecution for perjury.[99]

E. Subornation of Perjury and Attempts — 1. Subornation — a. Definition and Nature of Offense. Subornation of perjury consists in procuring or instigating another to commit the crime of perjury and is a misdemeanor at common law.[1] While accessorial in its nature, subornation of perjury has been made an offense separate and distinct from perjury,[2] and therefore the suborner of perjury may be tried before the conviction of the perjurer.[3]

b. Elements of Offense. To sustain an indictment for subornation of perjury, it is necessary that perjury shall have been in fact committed;[4] that the testimony of the witness claimed to have been suborned shall have been false;[5] that it shall have been given by him wilfully and corruptly, knowing it to be false;[6] that defendant shall have known or believed that the testimony given would be false;[7] that he shall have known or believed the witness would wilfully and corruptly so testify;[8] and that he shall have induced or procured the witness to give such false testimony.[9]

Ann. 460, 4 So. 161. In perjury and subornation of perjury the act of the two offenders is concurrent, parallel, and closely related in point of time and conduct. The two crimes both culminate in the delivery of false testimony. Still the offenses are dual, each having in it elements not common to the other. There is sufficient inherent difference between the two to warrant the law-making power in separating the act into its component parts, making that of the suborner a new and independent offense, punishable with greater or less severity than that inflicted on the perjurer. Procurement by threats.— A person is guilty of subornation of perjury if he procures another, by threats, to knowingly commit perjury. State v. Geer, 48 Kan. 752, 30 Pac. 236.

2. Attempts to Suborn. In some states statutes provide for the punishment of any one who attempts to procure another to commit perjury.[10] A mere general attempt to induce another to swear falsely is not sufficient, but the attempt must have reference to such an act as would be perjury if successful.[11]

II. Prosecution and Punishment.[12]

A. Prosecution Pending Civil Action — 1. In General. In practice the prosecution for perjury is frequently continued until the proceeding in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed has been ended.[13] But it is a rule of convenience only, and the court trying the criminal charge may, in its sound discretion, proceed to trial and final verdict, notwithstanding the other case is still pending.[14]

2. Pennsylvania Rule. In Pennsylvania, however, it has been held that a prosecution for perjury cannot be instituted until the termination of the action or proceeding in which the alleged false oath was made.[15]

B. Indictment and Information[16] — 1. Form and Requisites in General — a. General Rules. An indictment for perjury must, like an indictment for any other offense, allege specifically and with sufficient certainty every fact and cir-

Summary trial before magistrate.— In Canada a person accused of perjury may, with his own consent, be summarily tried before a police magistrate under Cr. Code, §§ 145, 539, 782, 785; and where defendant has sought and consented to be tried summarily under section 785, pleading "not guilty," and the magistrate, upon hearing the evidence, has adjudicated summarily and dismissed the charge under section 787, it is not competent for the magistrate to thereafter bind the prosecutor over to prefer and prosecute an indictment against defendant, as provided for in section 595; for the magistrate has, under section 791, to determine, before the defense has been made, whether he will try the case summarily or not. cumstance necessary to constitute the offense.[17] At common law great particularity was required;[18] but in most of the states perjury has now been made a statutory offense, and the particularity requisite in an indictment for perjury at common law is unnecessary. All that is required is that the indictment shall, in plain and intelligible terms, and with such particularity as to apprise the accused with reasonable certainty of the offense for which he is sought to be punished, state the substance of the controversy upon which the false oath was taken, specify

but a statute cannot make valid and sufficient an indictment in which the accusation does not meet these requirements.[21]

c. Averments as to Time. In an indictment for perjury it is necessary, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, that the day on which the offense was committed shall be truly laid.[22]

2. Description of Proceeding in Which Oath Was Administered — a. In General. See 39 Cent. Dig. tit. "Perjury," § 72.

Specific allegation unnecessary.— An indictment for perjury, setting out the name of the court, its location, term, and the parties to the cause, the nature of the action, the judge before whom the case was tried, and that it was tried in due form of law by a jury taken before the parties and duly sworn, and that defendant there appeared as a witness and swore falsely, sufficiently charges that the alleged perjury was committed in the course of a judicial proceeding, without a specific allegation of that fact. Kizer v. People, 211 Ill. 407, 71 N. E. 1035. An information for perjury, alleging that a certain information was pending against the accused, that issue was joined thereon, that the cause was tried in due form before a jury, and that the accused was sworn to testify as a witness and to testify to certain facts, sufficiently alleges that the testimony was given on the trial of an actual cause. State v. McLain, 43 Wash. 124, 86 Pac. 388.

Showing commission at trial.— An indictment for perjury, which charged defendant with having sworn falsely on certain proceedings before justices, wherein he was examined as a witness, where the allegation of materiality averred that "the said D. R. (the defendant) being so sworn as aforesaid, it then and there became material to enquire and ascertain, etc.," was held bad as not sufficiently showing that the alleged perjury was committed at the said proceedings. Reg. v. Ross, 5 Nova Scotia 683.

If not committed on the trial of an action the indictment should so allege. State v. Peters, 107 N. C. 876, 12 S. E. 74.

other lawful occasion;[25] and the indictment must show that such judicial proceeding was pending in court at the time the oath was taken and the false statement made.[26]

b. Nature of Proceeding and Issues. It is not essential, in an indictment for perjury, that the allegation of issue joined shall show specifically what the issue was. If the indictment, by its allegations, shows that the perjury was committed in a judicial proceeding, in a court of competent jurisdiction, and describes the judicial proceeding with reasonable certainty,[27] it is sufficient to allege in general terms that a certain issue was joined in said proceeding, without stating the issue.[28]

Where the oath itself constitutes a charge of felony, there need be no further allegation that the oath was taken in a judicial proceeding. People v. Robertson, 3 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 180; Rex v. Aylett, 1 T. R. 63, 1 Rev. Rep. 152.

An information for perjury alleged to have been committed in swearing to an affidavit, which does not show that the affidavit was made to be used, or that it was actually used, in any judicial proceeding, is insufficient. People v. Fox, 25 Mich. 492; State v. Lloyd, 77 Wis. 630, 46 N. W. 898.

In a prosecution for statutory false swearing, which is equivalent to perjury not committed in a judicial proceeding, it is not necessary to allege expressly that the oath was not taken in a judicial proceeding, when it is shown unequivocally by the facts set out in the indictment. Thompson v. State, 120 Ga. 132, 47 S. E. 566.

26. State v. Hanson, 39 Me. 337; State v. Oppenheimer, 41 Tex. 82 (holding that an indictment for perjury should state when and where the judicial proceeding was pending in which the alleged false statement was made, and whether it was made during an examination, or on a trial under indictment); Reg. v. Pearson, 8 C. & P. 119, 34 E. C. L. 642.

Perjury in affidavit to hold to bail.—An affidavit to hold to bail may be sworn before the issuing of the writ of summons in the action; and therefore an indictment for perjury committed in such an affidavit need not state that any action was pending. King v. Reg. 14 Q. B. 31, 3 Cox C. C. 561, 18 L. J. Q. B. 253, 68 E. C. L. 31.

27. Bradford v. State, 134 Ala. 141, 32 So. 742; Davis v. State, 79 Ala. 20 (holding that an indictment for perjury, alleging that the offense was committed on the trial of an indictment for burglary, but not stating on whose property the burglary was committed, is uncertain and insufficient); Jacobs v. State, 61 Ala. 448; Com. v. Wright, 166 Mass. 174, 44 N. E. 129 (holding that where the description of the complaint shows that it was a criminal case in which defendant was alleged to have committed perjury, the indictment need not allege that it was in a criminal case); Conner v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 30; U. S. v. Wilcox, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,692, 4 Blatchf. 391 (holding that an indictment for perjury, alleged to have been committed on an examination of a person charged with a crime against a law of the United States, should show what the particular law was). And see Reg. v. Thompson, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 265, 17 Can. L. T. Occ. Notes 295, 2 Northwest Terr. 39, 2 Terr. L. Rep. 383.

Perjury on trial of indictment for larceny.—An indictment for perjury charging that it was committed on the trial of an indictment against A B at the court of quarter sessions for the county of B, on the 11th of June, 1867, on a charge of larceny, is sufficient, and it is not necessary to specify the property stolen, the ownership thereof, or the locality from which it was taken; nor to allege that the indictment was in the name of the queen, as the court must take judicial notice of the fact that her majesty alone could prosecute on a charge of larceny. Reg. v. Macdonald, 17 U. C. C. P. 635.

Under the Kentucky statute an indictment for false swearing need not state the nature of the prosecution on the trial of which defendant swore falsely; it being sufficient to allege in the language of the statute that defendant was sworn by a person authorized by law to administer an oath, and that he deposed and gave evidence in a matter then judicially pending. Cope v. Com., 47 S. W. 436, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 721.

Under the Missouri statute punishing any person who shall wilfully commit perjury on any trial for felony, the indictment should charge that the crime on the trial for which the alleged perjury was committed was either made a felony by statute or was such as, at common law, amounted to felony. Hinch v. State, 2 Mo. 158.

Investigation before grand jury.—An indictment, which charges defendant with swearing falsely in a criminal investigation before the grand jury, need not allege that the person whose offense was under investigation, and about which defendant swore, was or was not guilty, nor the facts in regard to such offense. State v. Schill, 27 Iowa 263.

28. Mississippi.—State v. Silverberg, 78 Miss. 858, 29 So. 761.

New Jersey.—State v. Voorhis, 52 N. J. L. 351, 20 Atl. 26, holding that an averment in an indictment for perjury that it was committed in respect of the question of usury, which had become material on the trial of the cause, charges with requisite certainty the issue in the trial at which the perjury occurred.

New York.—People v. Grimshaw, 33 Hun 505.

e. Setting Out Record or Proceedings. At common law, where the alleged false oath was taken in court, it was necessary to set forth in the indictment with great particularity the pleadings, records, and proceedings on the trial, and the whole evidence.[29] Prosecutions for the offense were embarrassed by this particularity, and the statute of 23 Geo. II, c. 11, § 3, was passed to remove the evil. This act, which has been copied in several of the United States, dispensed with the necessity of setting out in the indictment the pleadings, or any part of the record or proceedings,[30] declaring it sufficient to set forth the substance of the controversy or matter in respect to which the crime was committed.[31]

d. Result or Determination of Issue or Contest. An indictment for perjury need not aver that the action or proceeding in which the alleged false oath was made has been finally determined, or that any final judgment has been entered therein.[32]

3. Jurisdiction and Authority to Administer Oath — a. Jurisdiction of Court — (1) In General — (A) At Common Law. At common law an indictment for perjury committed in a judicial proceeding must affirmatively show the jurisdiction of the court over such proceedings,[33] which may be done either by a direct allegation to that effect,[34] or by the allegation of facts from which the jurisdiction appears.[35]

Rhode Island.— State v. Miller, 26 R. I. 282, 58 Atl. 882, holding that an indictment charging that defendant appeared as a witness on the trial of a certain plea of trespass, and was duly sworn to testify to the truth, etc., and that defendant falsely testified to certain material facts specified, sufficiently describes the issue.

Texas.— Covey v. State, 23 Tex. App. 388, 5 S. W. 283.

See 39 Cent. Dig. tit. "Perjury," § 74.

Grounds of action.—An indictment for perjury committed before a United States land officer need not set forth the grounds on which the contest was based. Peters v. U. S., 2 Okla. 138, 37 Pac. 1081. In an indictment for perjury based on alleged false swearing by defendant as a witness in his own behalf in an action for divorce, it is not necessary to allege that the ground for the divorce was not adultery. Markey v. State, 47 Fla. 38, 37 So. 53.

Joinder of issue.— An indictment for perjury need not aver a joinder of issue in the case in which the alleged perjury was committed in order to sufficiently charge the issue therein. State v. Nelson, 146 Mo. 256, 48 S. W. 84.

(B) Under Modern Statutes. Under the English statute of 23 Geo. II, c. 11, and similar statutes in this country, declaring that it shall be sufficient in an indictment for perjury to set forth the substance of the offense charged, etc., it is not necessary for the indictment to expressly state that the court had jurisdiction of the case in which the alleged false testimony was given, but an allegation that the court had authority to administer the oath is sufficient.[36]

(II) How Jurisdiction Was Acquired. Under the modern rule of pleading in perjury cases, an indictment which alleges the jurisdiction of the court in which the perjury was committed over the offense then on trial need not state whether jurisdiction was acquired by indictment or information.[37]

b. Jurisdiction of Ministerial Officer Sitting as Court. An indictment for perjury in a proceeding before a ministerial officer need not allege the facts showing his jurisdiction, if it charges that he was authorized to administer the oath.[38] So also, when the court can take judicial notice of the fact that an officer had jurisdiction of the proceeding in question, such jurisdiction need not be alleged.[39]

Form of alleging that defendant was sworn see State v. Divoll, 44 N. H. 140.

How testimony given.— It is not necessary that it should appear in the indictment whether the false testimony of the witness was given in answer to a specific question put to him, or in the course of his own relation of the facts; for, in either case, he is equally required by law to depose the truth. Com. v. Knight, 12 Mass. 274, 7 Am. Dec. 72.

Averments held insufficient to show oath administered.— "Made and subscribed in open court, wickedly, falsely, willfully, corruptly and knowingly, the following false and corrupt oath, which is in substance as follows," etc., was held not a sufficient allegation that the party was sworn. State v. Divoll, 44 N. H. 140. But see State v. Scott, 78 Minn. 311, 81 N. W. 3.

The allegation that defendant did "depose and swear" to a deposition set forth is not sufficient. U. S. v. McConaughy, 33 Fed. 168, 13 Sawy. 141.

Oath "before" officer.— While the direct statement that an oath was administered "by" the officer is the better form, an allegation that the oath was taken "before" him is sufficient. In Vermont it is held that a direct averment that defendant was sworn is not necessary; the allegation that defendant committed the crime of perjury being held to imply an oath legally administered. State v. Webber, 78 Vt. 463, 62 Atl. 1018; State v. Camley, 67 Vt. 322, 31 Atl. 840.

which the oath was required and the occasion on which it was made, so as to show that its violation was perjury.[54]

5. Setting Out False Matter. Under the English statute of 23 Geo. II, c. 11, and similar statutes in this country, it has been almost uniformly held that in an indictment for perjury it is not necessary to set out the exact language used by defendant on the occasion of the alleged perjury, but it is sufficient to allege the substance and effect thereof.[55] Of course the indictment should allege the false testimony as nearly as possible in the language of defendant.[56] It is not necessary, however, to set out the whole of the oath; such parts as are alleged to have been false and are material are all that are required.[57] Nor is it necessary to set forth the interrogatories in answer to which the perjury is charged to have been committed.[58] But the matter alleged to be false must be set out sufficiently and with such particularity as to inform the court and the defendant of the particular offense charged.[59]

6. Materiality of Testimony, Assertion, or Oath — a. Necessity of Averment of Materiality of Testimony or Assertion — (i) In General. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is well settled that an indictment for perjury must show conclusively that the testimony given or assertion made by defendant, and charged to be false, was material to the issue on the trial of which he was sworn,[60]

Iowa.— State v. O'Hagan, 38 Iowa 504, holding that an indictment for perjury alleging that defendant was "duly sworn" is not objectionable on the ground that it does not charge the oath to have been administered by any one.

In Indiana it is provided by statute that in an indictment for perjury in swearing to any written instrument, it shall only be necessary to "set forth" that part of the instrument alleged to have been falsely sworn to. Under this statute it is held that an instrument, or a part of it, cannot be set forth in any other way than to give the tenor thereof, or, in other words, an exact copy. Form of express averment.— The usual form, when an express allegation of materiality is made, is to state that it became a material question whether such a thing happened or not. It is improper to state that it became material to ascertain the truth of what the witness stated; the witness' statement itself must be given to ascertain the truth of something which became material to the inquiry before the statement was made. People v. Collier, 1 Mich. 137, 139, 48 Am. Dec. 699; Reg. v. Goodfellow, C. & M. 569, 41 E. C. L. 310. When more than one question is relied on as material, it is usual to aver that certain "questions" became and were material, to wit, whether, etc., "and" whether, etc., or "and also" whether, etc., but this form is not essential, and where the averment is that a "question" became material, several questions may well be set forth without a collective particle. Com. v. Johns, 6 Gray (Mass.) 274.

Express averment lets in evidence.— In an indictment for perjury, an express averment that a question was material lets in evidence to prove that it was so. Reg. v. Bennett, 3

If, however, the facts are also stated, and it clearly appears that the testimony was not material, a formal allegation of materiality will not save the indictment.[64]

(III) Necessity of Express Averment When Facts Alleged. Where, in an indictment for perjury, it is apparent from the averments that the evidence which is charged to be false was material, it is not essential to state the legal conclusion by alleging that the evidence was material. The court, being apprised of the facts, may draw the conclusion without the allegation.[65] So also, where the averments as to the materiality of what is alleged to have been sworn falsely are defective, the indictment is nevertheless good, if such materiality sufficiently appears on its face.[66]

b. Necessity of Averment of Materiality of Oath. Since perjury cannot be assigned on an affidavit which is not required or authorized by law to be made,[67] an indictment for perjury in making an affidavit must allege that it was made to be, or was in fact, used for some lawful purpose.[68] So also an information for

Com. v. Wood, 2 Pa. Dist. 823, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 477, 7 Kulp 141.

Affidavit to obtain payment of money.—An indictment for perjury in making a false affidavit for the purpose of obtaining audit of an unliquidated claim against a city that does not aver that the affidavit was authorized by the charter of the city, or that it was made for the purpose required thereby, or that the claim to which it was appended was ever presented to the common council for perjury charged to have been committed in swearing to a bill in equity, which fails to show that the bill was one of a character required by law to be verified, is insufficient.[69]

c. Necessity of Averment of Competency of Testimony. An indictment or information for perjury need not show affirmatively that the alleged false testimony was admissible and competent, and could not have been excluded on any legal ground.[70]

7. Assignment of Perjury — a. In General — (i) As to Falsity — (a) In General. At common law and under the statutes, it is necessary, in an indictment for perjury, to expressly and positively negative the truth of the alleged false testimony,[71] by setting forth the true facts by way of antithesis.[72] A mere general averment of falsity is not sufficient. The indictment must, by particular averment, negative that which is false, and expressly contradict the matter falsely testified to by defendant, and must specifically, directly and without uncertainty designate the particulars wherein the matter sworn to was false.[73] The rule

law,[78] and some cases hold that where it is alleged that defendant swore wilfully or "knowingly," it is not necessary to employ the word "corruptly,"[79] but most of the decisions require the indictment to allege that the oath was taken "corruptly" as well as "wilfully,"[80] and the omission of both "wilfully" and "corruptly" was never allowed.[81] Perjury being generally made a felony by statute, it is held in some cases that an indictment therefor must allege that it was "feloniously" committed.[82] Other cases, however, hold that the use of the word "feloniously" is unnecessary, and a charge in the words of the statute is sufficient.[83]

(III) As to Knowledge of Falsity. Averment of knowledge of falsity is not necessary to an indictment for perjury,[84] except where the false testimony is given on information and belief,[85] or where knowledge of the falsity of the testimony given is made an element of the offense by statute, in which case it must be averred.[86]

b. Joinder of Assignments. An indictment for perjury may embrace in a single count all the particulars in which defendant is alleged to have sworn falsely;[87] but each fact sworn to should be stated in distinct and separate assignments, and each traversed, so that if either assignment is proved, the indictment may be sustained.[88] If one assignment of perjury is sufficient, an improper assignment in connection with it will not vitiate the indictment.[89] The fact that an indictment charges two distinct false statements under oath does not render the indictment bad, if the statements were both given under one oath and in one proceeding.[90]

8. Subornation of Perjury and Attempts[91] — a. Subornation. An indictment for subornation of perjury must state all the essential elements constituting the crime of perjury,[92] as well as of subornation of perjury. It must set forth the nature of the proceeding in which the alleged perjury was committed;[93] the court,[94] or officer,[95] in which, or before whom, the false oath was taken; that the witness was duly sworn;[96] that the testimony was material,[97] and false;[98] that defendant knowingly and wilfully procured another to swear falsely;[99] that the party did knowingly,[1] and wilfully,[2] swear falsely;[3] that defendant knew that the testimony of the witness would be false;[4] and that he knew that the witness knew said testimony was false.[5] A charge of subornation of perjury may be joined with a charge of perjury in the same indictment, and the perjurer and suborner may both be included in it.[6]

b. Attempts to Suborn.[7] At common law "attempting to suborn perjury" is not the name of any offense, and where an information charges it, without more, the information is insufficient.[8] While an indictment need not particularly specify the perjury which a defendant is charged with having attempted to suborn a witness to commit,[9] it must clearly allege the materiality of the testimony solicited by defendant.[10] In some states the offense has been made a felony by statute. In such case an indictment is generally sufficient if laid in the words of the statute.[11]

9. VARIANCE — a. In General. Strictness of proof is required in all matters which constitute the essence of the offense of perjury;[12] but such proof is not required as to immaterial averments, and those which are not descriptive of the offense.[13]

b. As to Time of Giving Testimony. Strict proof that the perjury charged was committed on the day alleged is not essential,[14] save when necessary to identify the record, deposition, or affidavit in which the oath was taken.[15]

c. As to Description of Proceeding in Which Oath Was Administered. In a prosecution for perjury, it is essential to correctly describe the judicial proceedings in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed and it must be proved substantially as laid.[16] Under the statutes of some states, if the identity of the proceeding is evident, and the purport thereof is given sufficiently to prevent any prejudice to defendant, a variance will not be deemed material.[17]

d. As to Description of Court or Officer Administering Oath. Proof that an oath was administered by the clerk, or some other officer of the court, is sufficient to sustain an allegation that the person was sworn by the court, or in court.[18] Where the indictment specifically avers that defendant was sworn before a certain person, or a particular officer, such allegation is matter of substance, and must be proved as laid; and proof that some other person or officer administered the oath is a fatal variance.[19]

e. As to Administration, Form, and Making of Oath. Although it is not necessary that the indictment should set forth the form of the oath, it being sufficient to allege that defendant was duly sworn,[20] yet if the form of the oath, or the manner of administering it, be set forth, the proof must correspond.[21]

Conversely, defendant may offer evidence in proof of his good faith in making the alleged false statement.[36]

(III) Motive. Evidence to show motive for the alleged perjury is admissible on behalf of the prosecution,[37] and may be rebutted by defendant.[38]

c. Proceeding in Which Oath Was Administered. To identify the case in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed the record of that case is admissible in evidence.[39]

d. Jurisdiction and Authority to Administer Oath. The record of the action or proceeding wherein it is charged in the indictment that the accused committed perjury is also admissible for the purpose of showing the jurisdiction of the court to try or hear the case.[40] So it has been held that any competent evidence tending to show that the court had or did not have authority is admissible.[41] The authority of the officer administering the oath need not be proved by his commission or other written evidence of his right to act as such, but parol evidence is admissible to show that he was an officer de facto.[42] Defend-

Challenger at election.— Since the fact that a person acted as a challenger at an election, and was recognized as such by the managers, other officials and the people, is prima facie evidence of his authority, and dispenses with the production of a commission, it is proper to allow a witness to testify that he was a challenger and acted as such ant may show in rebuttal that the person who administered the oath alleged to be false had no authority to administer it.[43]

e. Administration, Form, and Making of Oath. In a prosecution for perjury, the person alleged to have administered the oath, or defendant himself, or any witness present at such alleged swearing, may be interrogated fully as to the facts connected therewith, that it may be determined whether defendant was sworn.[44] So also the subpœna docket[45] and defendant's signature to affidavits filed in the proceeding in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed is admissible to prove the fact that he was sworn as a witness in the case.[46] Where it appears that defendant was sworn by a particular officer or in a certain county, evidence to show that in fact he was sworn by a different officer[47] or in a different county[48] is admissible.

f. Materiality of Testimony or Assertion. On a prosecution for perjury the materiality of the testimony may be shown by introducing all or so much of the pleadings in the action as show the issues,[49] together with proof of such facts as tend to show the testimony to be on a material issue.[50]

g. Matter Sworn To. Where a witness is indicted for perjury alleged to have been committed while giving evidence at a certain trial, the prosecution may prove by parol evidence what the accused swore to at such trial,[51] although such testimony was not reduced to writing as required by statute.[52] The fact that a witness is unable to give the entire testimony given by defendant does not prevent him from testifying to the particular part of his testimony on which the perjury is assigned.[53] Under some circumstances the affidavit of another party is admissible for the purpose of showing what the prisoner swore to.[54]

Reading stenographic notes.— In a prosecution for perjury the official reporter may properly be allowed to read a typewritten transcript of his stenographic notes taken on a hearing for divorce to prove the testimony of defendant charged as perjurious. Hereford v. People, 197 Ill. 222, 64 N. E. 310.

Perjury before grand jury.— On the trial of one for perjury alleged to have been committed before a grand jury, another witness on the same indictment who was in the grand jury room while such person was under examination is competent to prove what he swore to; and so is a police officer who was stationed within the grand jury room door; these persons not being sworn to secrecy as are the members of the grand jury. Reg. v. Hughes, 1 C. & K. 519, 47 E. C. L. 519. The foreman of the grand jury cannot be called upon to give evidence as to what the defendant swore to. Reg. v. Gazard, 8 C. & P. 595, 34 E. C. L. 911.

False swearing.— Bullitt Cr. Code Ky. § 113, providing that a member of the grand jury may be required to disclose the testimony of a witness examined before the grand jury on a prosecution of the witness for perjury, does not make such testimony admissible on a trial for the statutory offense of false swearing before a grand jury, which is a distinct offense from that of perjury. In a prosecution for perjury for denying the execution of a mortgage, evidence of the genuineness of the signature of an attesting witness who had died, admitted to prove the execution of the mortgage in accordance with falsely,[56] including declarations of the participants made at the time,[57] may be adduced in evidence against defendant. So also positive proof of the guilt of the accused in the trial on which the alleged false testimony was given is admissible;[58] but confessions of guilt by such person made in the absence of defendant,[59] and evidence as to his conduct at and prior to the time of his arrest,[60] are inadmissible. To prove the truth of his alleged false testimony, defendant is entitled to introduce any competent evidence in rebuttal.[61]

i. Subornation of Perjury. On the trial of a charge of subornation of perjury, evidence may be received of other attempts to induce other persons to testify falsely in the same action.[62] So also evidence of the testimony before a grand jury of the witness claimed to have been suborned is admissible as bearing upon the motive of defendant in procuring him to testify otherwise on the trial of the indictment of defendant which was based upon this witness' testimony.[63]

3. Weight and Sufficiency — a. In General. Proof of perjury need not be more positive than that of any other criminal act, and it is sufficient if it be proved to the satisfaction of the jury and beyond reasonable doubt.[64] Guilt may be established by circumstantial evidence, but the circumstances must be consistent with defendant's guilt and inconsistent with his innocence.[65] Where oral evidence is exclusively relied on, there must be two witnesses, or one witness corroborated by circumstances proved by independent testimony.[66] A living witness may, however, be dispensed with altogether, as in a case where the false swearing is directly proved by documentary evidence springing directly from defendant, with circumstances showing his corrupt intent.[67]

b. Intent and Knowledge of Falsity. To convict of perjury it must be shown beyond reasonable doubt that the testimony of defendant was given wilfully and corruptly.[68]

c. Proceeding in Which Oath Was Administered. In order to convict a witness of perjury alleged to have been committed on the trial of a case in a court of record, the record of the case, or a duly authenticated transcript thereof, is necessary to prove the judicial proceeding in the course of which the alleged perjury was committed,[69] unless such formal proof is waived.[70] Where the pendency of the action in which the false testimony was given has been shown by the records, and the trial thereof by oral testimony, the trial and disposition of the case need not be shown by record.[71]

d. Jurisdiction and Authority to Administer Oath. In a prosecution for perjury, the jurisdiction of the court over the proceedings in which the alleged perjury was committed, or the authority of the officer administering the oath, as the case may be, must be proved.[72] As to the authority of the officer administering Cases in which living witness is unnecessary.—A living witness may be dispensed with and documentary or written testimony be relied upon to convict in cases where a person is charged with the perjury, directly disproved by documentary or written testimony springing from himself, with circumstances showing a corrupt intent; in cases where the perjury charged is contradicted by the public record proved to have been well known to defendant when he took the oath, the oath only being proved to have been taken; in cases where a party is charged with taking an oath contrary to what he must necessarily have known to be the truth, and the false swearing can be proved by his own letters, relating the facts sworn to, or by other written testimony existing and being found in the possession of defendant, and which has been treated by him as containing the evidence of the fact recited in it. Proof that defendant was sworn and testified in the case will not dispense with the necessity of legally proving the existence of the case by the record thereof. Heflin v. State, 88 Ga. 151, 14 S. E. 112, 30 Am. St. Rep. 147.

Plea in civil action.— The non-production by the prosecution, on a trial for perjury, of the plea which was filed in the civil suit wherein defendant is alleged to have given false testimony, is not material where the assignment of perjury has no reference to the pleadings; but defendant, if he wishes, may, in case the plea be not produced, prove its contents by secondary evidence. 72. Eighmy v. People, 79 N. Y. 546 (holding, however, that upon an indictment for perjury in testimony given by the accused before a referee, proof of the entry of the order of reference is not required where the granting of the order by the court gave the referee jurisdiction); Reg. v. Gagan, 17 U. C. C. P. 530; Reg. v. Mason, 29 U. C. Q. B. 431 (where, however, upon an indictment for perjury committed upon the hearing of a complaint before a magistrate, the information having been proved, it was held, upon a case reserved, that it was unnecessary to prove any summons issued, or any step taken the oath, it is sufficient to prove that he was acting as such,[73] without putting in evidence his commission or other facts giving jurisdiction.[74]

e. Administration, Form, and Making of Oath. The fact that defendant was sworn must be proved, but not necessarily by positive evidence; circumstantial evidence is sufficient for this purpose.[75] The official certificate of a notary, magistrate, or other officer, together with proof of the authenticity of the signatures of the affiant and the officer, is prima facie proof of the proper execution of an affidavit upon which a prosecution for perjury is founded,[76] and evidence that the oath was never actually administered must be strong and convincing to justify the court in taking the case from the jury.[77]

f. Materiality of Testimony or Assertion. To sustain an indictment for perjury, there must be proof that the false testimony was material to the issue,[78] to bring the person complained of before the magistrate; for so long as he was present, the manner of getting there was immaterial).

Special term of court.— Where the case in which the alleged perjury was committed was tried at a special term of court, it is not necessary to report or prove the order of the judge directing such special term to be held, nor the governor's appointment of the particular judge holding it. State v. Ledford, 28 N. C. 5.

Proof that stenographer taking deposition was sworn.— The fact that the stenographer, who took a deposition in a civil case, on which perjury is assigned, had been sworn as required by statute, must be proved by the record or proceedings in the case in which the deposition was taken. Reg. v. Downie, 3 Montreal Q. B. 360. Compare Reg. v. Leonard, 3 Montreal Leg. N. 211, where the record evidence was held sufficient.

Place where oath was administered.— On the trial of one for perjury in making an affidavit, if the state and county are given in the venue of the affidavit, this is ample evidence, in the absence of contrary proof, to show that the oath was administered in the county named in the venue. Van Dusen v. People, 78 Ill. 645.

Offense on licensed premises.— On a trial for perjury alleged to have been committed before justices on information against a public-house keeper for an offense against the licensing acts, the license must be produced in order to show the jurisdiction of the justices. unless by statute materiality is rendered unnecessary.[79] The record of the case, or a duly authenticated transcript thereof, is necessary for this purpose,[80] and the fact that the testimony was received is not, standing alone, sufficient.[81] Where the alleged perjury was committed on a trial for the violation of a city ordinance, it is essential, in establishing the materiality of the false testimony, to show that such an ordinance creating the offense existed.[82] In no event can the materiality of the testimony or assertion assigned as perjury be established by the opinions of witnesses.[83]

Where a joint affidavit made by defendant and one D stated "Each for himself maketh oath and saith, that, &c.; and that he this deponent is not aware of any adverse claim to or occupation of said lot," and defendant was convicted of perjury on this latter allegation, it was held that there was neither ambiguity nor doubt in what each defendant said, but that each in substance stated that he was not aware of any adverse claim to or occupation of said lot. Reg. v. Atkinson, 17 U. C. C. P. 295.

Jurat of affidavit.— To sustain a conviction for perjury it is not necessary that the jurat of the affidavit upon which the perjury is assigned should contain the place at which the affidavit was sworn, for the perjury is committed by the taking of the oath, and the jurat, so far as that is concerned, is not material. Reg. v. Atkinson, 17 U. C. C. P. 295.

Perjury in deposition taken by stenographer.— On a reserved case arising out of a conviction for perjury had upon the evidence of the stenographer who took the deposition, it was held that while the accused could not be convicted upon the notes of the stenographer, because they were not read or signed by the accused, he was nevertheless prop-of the alleged perjury should be given in evidence; so much thereof as relates to the particular fact on which the perjury is assigned is sufficient.[86]

(II) Proof of One Assignment Sufficient. Where, in an indictment for perjury, there are several distinct assignments, proof of any one of them is sufficient to support the indictment.[87] If, however, the indictment is in one assignment, failure to prove all the statements substantially as alleged is fatal to the prosecution.[88] And where there are a number of allegations of perjury in one affidavit made by defendant, it is error to consider each charge separately, without reference to the other allegations in the affidavit.[89]

h. Subornation of Perjury. Where defendant is charged with subornation of perjury, testimony given at his trial, on behalf of the people, by the person whom he procured to testify falsely, must, if corroborated, be submitted to the jury.[90]

4. Number of Witnesses and Corroboration — a. Early Rule. It was formerly held that a conviction for perjury could not be had except upon the direct testimony of two witnesses.[91]

b. Modern Rule — (I) In General. But this rule has long since been relaxed, and it is now held that a charge of perjury may be sustained either by the testimony of two witnesses, or by that of one witness and corroborating circumstances.[92] Positive and direct evidence is absolutely necessary in a perjury case; circumstantial evidence standing alone is never sufficient.[93] Direct evidence is not limited to a denial in ipsissimis verbis of the testimony given by defendant, but includes any positive testimony of a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by him at the former trial, or which is absolutely incompatible with his evidence, or physically inconsistent with the facts so testified to by him.[94]

(II) Corroboration—(A) In General—(1) Necessity—(a) In General. In no case can a conviction for perjury be secured and sustained on the uncorroborated testimony of one witness. The underlying principle of this rule is, that if there be but one witness to prove the allegation of falsity, then oath is placed against oath and it remains doubtful where the truth lies, the oath of the accused, which is alleged to be false, being sufficient to counterpoise the testimony of a single witness.[95] This requirement applies, however, only to proof of the falsity of the oath. A single witness is sufficient to establish the taking of the oath and the matter sworn to.[96]

Same rule applicable to statutory "false swearing."—Aguierre v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 519, 21 S. W. 256.

Testimony as to admissions by defendant.—The testimony of several witnesses that defendant, while a witness, admitted the falsity of an affidavit made by him, is not proof by two witnesses of its falsity, within the statute. Butler v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 38 S. W. 46.

Where proof is based on circumstantial evidence the rule that there must be two witnesses to prove the charge, or, if only one witness is produced, there must be independent corroborating circumstances, does not apply. People v. Doody, 172 N. Y. 165, 64 N. E. 807 [affirming 72 N. Y. App. Div. 372, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 606].

Competency of witness not affected by rule.—The rule that a prisoner on trial for perjury can be convicted only upon the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness whose testimony is corroborated by circumstances, does not affect the competency of the witnesses to the alleged perjury. State v. Ricketts, 74 N. C. 187.

Confession in open court.—The words "confession in open court" in Tex. Code Cr. Proc. (1895) art. 786, prohibiting a conviction of perjury except upon the testimony of two credible witnesses, or upon confession in open court, mean a conviction in a case against the person confessing, and do not include a confession in another court as a witness in another case. Butler v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 38 S. W. 46.

An accomplice may be the one witness giving direct evidence in connection with corroborating circumstances. People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 Pac. 351. But see Conant v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1907) 103 S. W. 897, holding that under Code Cr. Proc. (1895) art. 786, providing that no person may be convicted of perjury, except upon the testimony of two credible witnesses, or of one credible witness strongly corroborated by other evidence, an accomplice being a discredited witness, to convict of perjury there must be at least one credible witness besides an accomplice.

Directing verdict.—In all cases where two witnesses, or one with corroborating circumstances, are required to authorize a conviction, if the requirement be not fulfilled, the court should instruct the jury to render a verdict of acquittal. Waters v. State, 30 Tex. App. 284, 17 S. W. 411.

(b) Subornation of Perjury. The rule that under an indictment for perjury defendant cannot be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness is not applicable to a case of subornation of perjury.[97]

(2) Degree. Where a conviction is sought on the trial of one charged with perjury on the testimony of one witness and corroborating evidence, the corroborating evidence must corroborate material testimony adduced by the state in support of the charge, and not testimony in regard to some distinct and immaterial matter.[98] It need not be so strong as to equal the positive testimony of another witness,[99] nor so strong that, standing alone, it would justify a conviction.[1] All that is required is that it shall be sufficiently strong to turn the scale against the weight of the oath charged to be false, and to satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused.[2]

W. 22 (holding that, if it is sought to establish the fact that perjury was committed by the testimony of the person committing it, his testimony must be corroborated as to such fact, but the alleged fact that the party was induced to commit the crime by the accused may be established by his uncorroborated testimony if it satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt); Boren v. U. The reason of the rule that the accused cannot be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness does not apply to a case of subornation of perjury, for the reason that in such case the testimony does not consist of that of one person against that of another. The testimony of each witness for the prosecution involves, it is true, the impeachment of his own former sworn testimony, but it is direct evidence against the accused as to the instigation of the perjury. (3) MANNER — (a) IN GENERAL. Corroborative evidence against the accused on a prosecution for perjury means evidence aliunde which tends to show the perjury independent of any declaration or admission of the prisoner,[3] and the person to be corroborated.[4]

(b) BY CIRCUMSTANCES. The corroboration may be by circumstantial evidence consisting of proof of independent facts which together tend to establish the main fact, that is, the falsity of the oath, and which together strongly corroborate the truth of the testimony of the single witness who has testified to such falsity.[5]

(c) BY DECLARATIONS OR ADMISSIONS OF ACCUSED. While proof of contradictory statements by the accused are not sufficient to convict of perjury, the direct testimony of one witness, corroborated by declarations or admissions of the prisoner inconsistent with the oath on which the perjury is assigned, is sufficient to convict.[6]

(B) Corroboration Between Assignments. Where there are several assignments of perjury, the weight of authority is that the testimony of a single witness must be corroborated with respect to the matter of each assignment. Proof of one assignment is not corroborated by proof of another, even though all the perjuries were committed at the same time and place.[7] Where, however, there is one assignment of a continuous nature, the rule is otherwise.[8]

(C) Sufficiency of Evidence as Basis of Corroboration. As a general rule, corroborative facts are insufficient without the direct testimony of one witness as to the falsity of defendant's oath;[9] and the testimony of such witness must be positive and unequivocal.[10] There have been cases, however, in which living witnesses were dispensed with altogether.[11]

D. Trial, Review, and Punishment — 1. QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT — a. Jurisdiction. Whether the court trying the case in which the alleged perjury was committed had jurisdiction thereof is a question of law for the court.[12]

The words "strongly corroborative" mean that the corroborating evidence must relate to a material matter, that is, it must tend to show the falsity of defendant's oath, and, taken altogether, it must be so cogent, powerful, and forcible as to be calculated to make a deep impression upon the mind. b. Materiality of False Testimony. The materiality of the testimony assigned as false is also as a general rule a question of law for the court.[13] But, like any other question of law, the question of materiality may be so mingled with the facts that the court should submit it to the jury, with proper instructions upon the law.[14]

c. Questions of Fact. All questions of fact arising during the trial are for the jury.[15] Whether the oath is knowingly and corruptly false is a question for the jury.[16]

2. Instructions — a. In General. Instructions to the jury should be clear and explicit, easy of interpretation, and not liable to mislead.[17] They should not assume facts not proved,[18] submit issues not in the case,[19] or invade the province of the jury.[20] Where an instruction has once been given, it need not be repeated.[21]

Instructions given and requested corresponding in part.— Because a portion of the requesting charge corresponds in part with the charge given by the court, it does not

b. As to Material Allegations and Facts to Be Proved. The court should inform the jury what the material allegations of the indictment are, and also what facts must be established before they can convict.[22] The jury should be informed as to which assignment or assignments of false testimony are submitted to them as a basis for their verdict.[23] Where the assignments of perjury are severable, it is proper for the court to select some of them to the exclusion of the others, and submit the same to the jury on which to predicate a conviction.[24] When not severable, an instruction submitting all such predicates in solido is proper.[25] It is error to instruct that, if the people prove any of the alleged assignments of perjury in manner and form as charged in the indictment, then defendant should be found guilty, since this instruction ignores entirely the materiality of the testimony.[26]

c. As to Wilfulness and Knowledge of Falsity of Testimony. A corrupt intent being an essential element of the crime of perjury, the court must instruct the jury that, in order to convict, the false testimony must have been given wilfully and corruptly, or other language must be used indicating that the swearing must have been intentionally false.[27] So also it is error to omit the element of knowledge of the falsity of the testimony given, and to fail or refuse to instruct that if defendant testified honestly in the belief of his statements, he would not be guilty.[28] It has been held, however, to be conceivable that the accused might admit the allegation of the indictment as to his knowledge of the falsity of his testimony, and put the prosecution upon proof only of the question as to whether the alleged false testimony was in fact true or false; in which case an instruction omitting the element of knowledge would not be erroneous.[29]

"Knowingly" implies wilfulness and corruption.—An instruction that defendant is guilty if he knowingly swore falsely is not defective in omitting to state that the swearing must have been wilful and corrupt, since the word "knowingly" implies wilfulness and corruption. Morgan v. State, 63 Miss. 162.

"Wilfully" implies corruption.—Where the jury has been instructed that defendant's statement must have been wilfully false, there is no error in refusing to instruct that it must have been corruptly false, since the former implies the latter. Brown v. State, 57 Miss. 424. Compare Cothran v. State, 39 Miss. 541.

Wilfully and deliberately.— Under the Texas statute providing that false swearing, to be indictable, must be done "wilfully" and "deliberately," the court should define the terms "wilfully" and "deliberately." d. As to Effect of Evidence Admitted For Particular Purpose. Where, in a prosecution for perjury, evidence is only admissible on a particular issue, but might be considered for other purposes, it is error to fail to limit the consideration thereof to such issue.[30] Thus where evidence is competent only as impeaching evidence, and is not material as substantive evidence, the court should so instruct.[31] So also, if the judgment in the proceeding in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed is admitted on behalf of the prosecution, the court should give instructions limiting the effect of such evidence.[32] Where evidence is erroneously admitted, it is error to fail to charge that such evidence should be disregarded.[33]

e. As to Degree of Proof Required — (i) In General. Although the rule of evidence in perjury cases differs from that applicable in other criminal prosecutions, it is not error to instruct the jury to find defendant guilty if, from the evidence, they believe him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.[34]

(ii) As to Number and Corroboration of Witnesses. The jury should be informed, in some part of the instructions in a trial for perjury, that, before they can convict, the fact that the oath was false must be shown to their satisfaction by the testimony of two witnesses or of one witness and corroborating circumstances.[35] The necessity for a charge that the falsity of the oath must be the testimony given was false, but that it was wilfully given with knowledge on defendant's part that it was false, and the court charged in terms that all the allegations of the information except the falsity of the testimony were admitted, an instruction that if the jury believed beyond all reasonable doubt by the testimony of two witnesses, or by the testimony of one witness and corroborating circumstances, that the testimony in question was false, they should convict, did not constitute reversible error, on an appeal on the judgment-roll alone.

When record of judgment of conviction not introduced.— Where so much of the record of the trial in which the perjury was alleged to have been committed as will show the organization of the court and the nature of the accusation is introduced in evidence, but not the record of the judgment of conviction, it is not error to omit to instruct the jury limiting the use of such evidence. App. 165, 9 S. W. 461.

35. Haines v. State, 109 Ga. 526, 35 S. E. 141 (holding that where the court, on a trial for perjury, in giving in charge Pen. Code, § 991, relative to the number of witnesses necessary to establish a fact, instead of reading to the jury the concluding clause of that section as written, added the words, "or may not," making it read, "corroborating circumstances may or may not dispense with another witness," this was not error as against the accused, since the interpolation of the words, "or may not," was favorable to him); Brown v. State, 57 Miss. 424.

Two witnesses or one witness and strong corroborating circumstances.— On a trial for perjury it is error to omit to instruct the jury that they could not convict unless they believed that defendant's guilt had been established by the testimony of two witnesses, or one witness and strong corroborating circumstances. Goslin v. Com., 90 S. W. 223, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 683; Wadlington v. Com., 59 S. W. 851, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1108.

Two credible witnesses or one credible witness strongly corroborated.— It is reversible error to omit to instruct the jury that a conviction could not be had save on the testimony of two credible witnesses, or of one credible witness corroborated strongly by other evidence, as to the falsity of defendant's statement on oath. Whitaker v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 479, 36 S. W. 253; Aguierre v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 519, 21 S. W. 256; Grandison v. State, 29 Tex. App. 186, 15 S. W. 174; Brookin v. State, 27 Tex. Credibility of witness.— In such jurisdic-proved by two witnesses or by one witness and corroborating circumstances is not obviated by the fact that more than one witness testified to the perjury.[36]

3. VERDICT. The verdict in a perjury case must be responsive to the issues,[37] and not inconsistent.[38]

4. NEW TRIAL. The general rules governing the granting of new trials in criminal cases apply in prosecutions for perjury.[39] Acquittal of the person charged with perjury entitles a person charged with suborning him to commit it, if already convicted thereof, to a new trial, since, if the testimony given was not perjury, there could not have been a subornation.[40]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR. The usual rules relating to appeal and error in criminal cases are applicable in prosecutions for perjury.[41]

6. SENTENCE AND PUNISHMENT. The crime of perjury was not originally punishable by courts of law. It was deemed in ages past a sin rather than a crime, and its punishment was supposed to reside with the offended deity who had been solemnly invoked and the solemn invocation to whom had been disregarded.[42] But for several centuries past the crime has been triable and punishable in the courts, and the punishment to be inflicted is usually a matter of statutory provision.[43] Under English statutes[44] the practice was to make the disability of defendant to give testimony a part of the sentence.[45] Assuming that such disability is properly a tions as require a conviction for perjury to be based on the testimony of "credible" witnesses, it is error to fail to instruct the jury that a conviction must depend on their belief in the "credibility" of the witnesses. Kitchen v. State, 29 Tex. App. 45, 14 S. W. 392; Smith v. State, 22 Tex. App. 196, 2 S. W. 542. It is not necessary to define the word "credible," it being a word of ordinary significance. 37. Barton v. Com., 32 S. W. 171, 396, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 580, holding that a verdict on a trial for false swearing (there being no degrees thereof), finding defendant guilty, and fixing his punishment, is sufficient, although it does not recite "as charged in the indictment."

A general verdict on two counts for perjury is bad, where the assignment of perjury in the second count is defective in setting up part only of what defendant said and omitting a qualifying statement, and the evidence on the first count is so contradictory as to leave room for doubt whether the jury would have found a verdict of guilty on that count if it had stood alone; and this is so notwithstanding the fact that if the first count had stood alone the verdict could not have been touched. Reg. v. Bain, 23 L. C. Jur. 327.

Where there are several assignments of perjury, a verdict of guilty, without a finding specifying upon which assignment the conviction was had, is bad, unless the evidence is sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty upon each or any one of them. I. GENERAL STATEMENT.

Ownership of property does not carry with it the right to dispose of that property to any person and upon any contingencies that the owner may desire to name. The law, for reasons of public policy, still imposes some restraints upon the right to dispose of property. Some of these restraints deal with the right to transfer present interests in property — thus an owner may not be permitted to sell his land to an alien or to devise it to a religious corporation. Some of these restraints deal with the right to create future interests in property — thus if an owner gives money to A, with a proviso that whenever A and all his issue are dead the money shall go to B, the law may not give effect to such proviso.

The Rule against Perpetuities is by far the most important restraint which the law places upon the right to create future interests in property.[1] It is fundamental that the Rule deals only with future interests. No present interests, whether alienable or not, are objectionable under the Rule against Perpetuities, although restraints upon the alienation of present interests may be objectionable under other rules of the law.[2] Apart from statutory changes,[3] the Rule is that no future interest in property shall be created which must not necessarily vest within twenty-one years, exclusive of periods of gestation, after lives in being. The evolution of the Rule was probably due primarily to the desire of the courts to prevent property from being inalienable. If future interests in property may be created in favor of persons not in being, a title to the property cannot be made; it is taken out of commerce; the Rule therefore restrains, within limits, the creation of such interests.

But the Rule does more. It forbids the creation even of alienable interests in property, if they are dependent upon a contingency which may not be determined until a remote time. When remote, contingent interests in property belong to persons in being, such interests are to-day freely alienable and therefore do not render impossible the making of a good title to the property in which they are limited, but they none the less offend against the Rule. To have property encumbered with such remotely possible interests is a disadvantage to the persons otherwise entitled to the property, greater than is the advantage to the owners of such remote interests. The reasons of policy which require that the cre-

1. In early times the power of an owner to create future interests in his property was greatly restricted. Remainders in property, for example, were known to the law, but their creation was regulated by stringent rules. Equity, however, was liberal in allowing uses in property to be parceled out as the owner wished, and this liberality was carried over into the law by the passage of the Statute of Uses (1536). The law itself was liberal in attempting to give effect to any disposition of property that an owner might make by will, and a similar liberality is to-day shown in most jurisdictions, with regard to a conveyance inter vivos, whether operating by way of use or not — for example with regard to a conveyance inter vivos of a chattel. The result is that to-day an owner may, broadly speaking, create any future interests he pleases, within reasonable limits.

Apart from statutes, there are to-day certainly not more than two restrictions, besides the Rule against Perpetuities, on the creation of future interests, and semble in the United States, except in North Carolina, there is no other restriction whatever. There is authority that no future legal interest, after an interest for life, can be created inter vivos in personalty, whether in a chattel real or personal. This is probably law in England. ation of such interests should be restrained within limits are somewhat similar to the reasons on account of which the law keeps within limits the creation of easements; they are in any event different reasons from those to which the Rule was primarily due.

The reasons of policy underlying the Rule are not stated in all the decisions clearly, or even consistently, but it is settled by the great weight of authority that the Rule does forbid the creation of any future interest, whether alienable or not, which must not necessarily vest within the limits specified by the Rule.[4]

II. ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE RULE.

A. Early Uses of the Word "Perpetuity." The word "perpetuity" appears in the reports as early as 1595.[5] In the following century the word was used by the courts with various meanings, including: (1) An inalienable estate tail;[6] (2) an indestructible remainder to a person not in being;[7] (3) an indestructible executory devise contingent on a failure of issue.[8] In the first

5. Chudleigh's Case, 1 Coke 120*a*, 76 Eng. Reprint 270.

6. Corbet's Case, 1 Coke 83*b*, 76 Eng. Reprint 187. Here an estate tail was given to A, with a proviso that, if he attempted to alien, he should forfeit his estate. A nevertheless suffered a common recovery, and the court held the recovery good. The proviso was held to be repugnant to the grant of the estate tail, and therefore bad. In the course of the judgment an inalienable estate tail is spoken of as a perpetuity. The Statute De Donis, 13 Edw. I, c. 1, authorized the creation of estates tail, and provided that they could not be barred by fine. Later, however, the courts held that they could be barred by a common recovery. Taltarum's Case, Y. B. 12 Edw. IV, 19. Still later parliament provided that they could be barred by fine. St. 4 Hen. VII, c. 24; 32 Hen. VIII, c. 36. By Corbet's Case, 1 Coke 83*b*, 76 Eng. Reprint 187, any attempt to prevent the owner of an estate tail from alienating the land, by levying a fine or suffering a recovery, was held nugatory. The law did not permit owners of estates tail to be restrained from alienating their estates any more than it permitted the owners of estates in fee to be restrained from alienating their estates. Y. B. 13 Hen. VII, 22 pl. 9. And see DEEDS, 13 Cyc. 687.

7. Chudleigh's Case, 1 Coke 120*a*, 76 Eng. Reprint 270. At common law, if A was enfeoffed of land for life, remainder to his unborn son, A could enfeoff X of the land at any time before a son was born to him, and thereby destroy the contingent remainder to such unborn son. Contingent remainders, being destructible, were therefore no bar to the alienation of the land in which they were limited. Chudleigh's Case, supra, came up after the passage of the Statute of Uses. A had made a feoffment to B, C, and others, to their use during the life of D, A's son, and after D's death, to the use of D's unborn children in tail. Before children were born to D, the feoffees enfeoffed D in fee. The court held that this feoffment had destroyed the contingent remainder to the unborn children — in other words, that a contingent remainder raised by use was as destructible as a contingent remainder limited at common law. The court conceived that if a contingent remainder were allowed to be indestructible, it would be a perpetuity, and it avoided this danger by holding the remainder destructible. Contingent remainders, while at that time not alienable, were releasable. The contingent remainders in Chudleigh's case could not even have been released, because they were to persons not in being. The court was therefore dealing with future interests, the indestructibility of which would in fact have prevented the alienation of the property.

8. In Manning's Case, 8 Coke 94*b*, 77 Eng. Reprint 618, A, owner of a term for years in certain land, by his will directed that B, his wife, should have the use and occupation of the term for her life, and that the term should go, subject to B's right, to C. As there could be no life-estate in a chattel real (see supra, note 1), this was construed to be an absolute gift of the term to B, with an executory devise over to C, to take effect on B's death. Was this contingent interest to C destructible by B, the first taker, just as contingent remainders were destructible? It was held that it was indestructible. There was therefore now known to the law such a thing as an indestructible contingent interest in property. Cotton v. Heath, 1 Rolle Abr. 612, pl. 3; Smith v. Warren, Cro. Eliz. 688, 78 Eng. Reprint 924; Lampet's Case, 10 Coke 46*b*, 77 Eng. Reprint 994; Pells v. Brown, Cro. Jac. 590, 79 Eng. Reprint 504. The dicta in Woodruff v. Drury, Cro. Eliz. 439, 78 Eng. Reprint 679, and Wood v. Reignold, Cro. Eliz. 764, 854, 78 Eng. Reprint 996, 1080, that executory devises were destructible, are no longer law. Despite Manning's Case, supra, it was held in Child v. Baylie, Cro. Jac. 459, 79 Eng. Reprint 393, that, upon the devise of a term to A, with a devise over to B, to take effect in case A died without issue living at his death, such executory devise was bad. In Man-sense the word was used to describe a present estate of indefinite duration which, throughout its duration, kept out of commerce the property in which it was limited. This is the popular notion of a perpetuity, and the law to-day holds void, with some exceptions, attempts to restrain the alienation of present interests in property, but this is accomplished by rules of law quite separate and distinct from the Rule against Perpetuities.[9] In the second sense the word was used to describe a future interest, which interest was in fact not releasable. In the third sense the word was also used to describe a future interest. Executory devises were releasable,[10] and, in at least two cases which came before the courts, the devises which were held objectionable were to persons in being, and therefore did not prevent the alienation of the property.[11] Certain future interests therefore, even though not preventing the alienation of the property in which they were limited, were held objectionable, and were conceived of as perpetuities. What then was the test of the validity of a future interest? The remoteness of the time when, if ever, a future interest must vest, had not yet been taken by the courts as the test.

B. The Duke of Norfolk's Case. The Earl of Arundel, having three sons, conveyed a long term to trustees, in trust for his second son, and the heirs male of his body; with a proviso that, if his first son should die without issue male, in the lifetime of the second son, the term should be held in trust for the third son.[12] The first son did die without issue male in the lifetime of the second son. Was this limitation over to the third son good? It was a limitation to take effect upon a failure of issue, and therefore bad as a perpetuity within the earlier authorities;[13] but the chancellor, Lord Nottingham, held the limitation good on the ground that it must take effect, if at all, within the life of the second son. It was established, he reasoned, that a limitation of a term to A, a living person, for life, and then to B on A's death, was good.[14] If a limitation over on A's death was not regarded as a perpetuity, then any limitation over which must take effect at or before A's death ought not to be so regarded. Here was a decision based squarely on the idea that whether a limitation over is to be regarded as a perpetuity or not depends on the time within which such limitation must take effect. Lord Nottingham held that a limitation might be made to take effect on a contingency which must ning's Case, supra, the devise over was contingent on A's death; in Child v. Baylie, supra, on A's death without issue then living. The judges took a distinction. A remainder after an estate tail was destructible. See infra, III, C. Executory devises of terms, however, had now been held indestructible. Manning's Case, supra. The judges felt that if a term could be limited to A, with an indestructible gift over to B, to take effect on the failure of A's issue, the evils of entails would reappear in the settlement of long terms of years, and the devise over to B was therefore held bad. "It would be very dangerous," counsel argued, "to have a perpetuity of a term in that manner." Bennet v. Lewknor, 1 Rolle 356, 81 Eng. Reprint 531; Wood v. Sanders, 1 Ch. Cas. 131, 22 Eng. Reprint 728; Boucher v. Antram, 2 Ch. Rep. 65, 21 Eng. Reprint 617. It is to be noted that in both Manning's Case, supra, and in Child v. Baylie, supra, the devise over would take effect, if at all, on the death of A, the first holder of the term, and that therefore in point of time the two executory devises were equally remote. It is also to be noted that the executory devise was held bad in Child v. Baylie, supra, although it was alienable. B was a person living at the testator's death, and the executory devise was releasable.

happen, if at all, within a life in being, but he refused to try to define precisely the time within which a limitation over must take effect, leaving this to be worked out by future cases. Lord Nottingham's decision was affirmed in the House of Lords, has never since been questioned, and is the foundation of the modern Rule against Perpetuities.

C. Any Number of Lives in Being Allowed. It had been decided before the Duke of Norfolk's case, that a term might be limited for successive life-interests to any number of persons, so long as they were all in being.[15] It was enough if "all the candles were alight at once."[16] Although there is a dictum after the Duke of Norfolk's case that the time limit allowed for executory devises ought not to be longer than the life of one person in being,[17] yet there is no decision to this effect. In Thellusson v. Woodford,[18] a testator had provided that property was not to be paid over until all of his sons and grandsons, and grandsons' children, who were living at his death, were dead. At his death there were nine persons coming within these designations. The House of Lords, on the unanimous opinion of the judges, held the limitation over to be good; and, apart from statute, no limits have yet been placed on the number of lives in being within which a future interest must vest.[19]

D. The Term of Twenty-One Years. Lord Nottingham, in the Duke of Norfolk's case, had not attempted to define precisely the time within which future interests must vest. Subsequently to that case it was held that a limitation to an unborn person upon his reaching his majority was good;[20] that a limitation over to third persons, to take effect if the children of living persons should die before attaining their majority, was good;[21] and finally that a limitation over to take effect within twenty-one years after the deaths of living persons was good, even though the term of twenty-one years or less was not the minority of the person to be entitled, or of any other person.[22]

It is not easy to define the reasons which induced the judges to make these extensions. In Stephens v. Stephens, Cas. t. Talb. 228, 25 Eng. Reprint 751, where the validity of a limitation over to an unborn person upon reaching his majority was in question, the courts said that, as an infant could not, in any event, alienate his property, the power of alienation over property was restrained no longer by creating a future interest in favor of an unborn person when he reached his majority, than by creating it in favor of an unborn person immediately upon his birth. This reasoning was based on the assumption that the Rule was aimed only at inalienable interests, and failed to consider the wider scope of the Rule which had already been established. See supra, II, A. Limitations over to third persons to take effect if persons then unborn should die before reaching their majority were supported by the courts, apparently without their noticing that the reasoning given above did not apply. Limitations over to third persons to take effect a certain number of years, not more than twenty-one, after the death of living persons were at first supported on the idea that a "reasonable

E. The Periods of Gestation. It is sometimes said that a future interest is good if it must vest within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years and nine or ten months thereafter.[23] The period of gestation, however, is not excluded in computing the time within which future interests must vest, unless gestation is in fact taking place.[24] Moreover, if gestation is in fact taking place, more than one period of gestation may be excluded in computing such time.[25] It is therefore more accurate to say that, in computing the time within which future interests must vest, periods of gestation are excluded.

III. INTERESTS SUBJECT TO THE RULE.

A. Present Interests Are Not Subject to the Rule. The Rule only requires that interests shall vest within certain limits. A future interest is vested if it is ready to turn into a present estate of enjoyment whenever the preceding estates determine.[26] A fortiori interests which are being presently enjoyed are vested. No present interests are therefore within the scope of the Rule.[27] A restrictive agreement regarding the use of land made for the benefit time" after lives in being might well be allowed. Marks v. Marks, 10 Mod. 419; Loyd v. Carew, Prec. Ch. 72, 24 Eng. Reprint 35. of neighboring land is held to create, in favor of the neighboring land, an easement enforceable in equity.[28] Such equitable easements are present interests, and unobjectionable as perpetuities.[29] Rights given to the owners of such easements to enter upon the servient tenements and abate any structures erected in violation of the agreement, although exercisable at a remote period, are good.[30]

B. Vested Future Interests[31] Are Not Subject to the Rule — 1. What Is a Vested Future Interest? The law from very early times has allowed the creation of certain future interests in real property. Thus land may be given to A for life, remainder to B for life. Is B's interest vested? He is not enjoying the land now, but merely hopes to enjoy it in the future. His hope is not sure of fulfilment, for he may die before A. And yet his interest is vested, as that term is used in connection with the Rule against Perpetuities. Enjoyment of the property by the owner of a future interest is necessarily conditioned upon the preceding estates coming to an end. It is in the very nature of a future interest that it must await the determination of the preceding estates. If a future interest has, so to speak, fallen into line, and is ready to turn into a present estate of enjoyment whenever the preceding estates come to an end, it is in the best position that a future interest can attain. The law has not confined the word "vested" to present interests, but has applied it also to those future interests which are ready to turn into present estates of enjoyment whenever the preceding estates are determined.[32]

2. Vested Remainders. A vested remainder is a remainder[33] which is ready to turn into a present estate of enjoyment whenever the preceding estates are

30. Tobey v. Moore, 130 Mass. 448. The owner of the easement has a present right to have the servient tenement free from all such structures. If no right to abate were given, and such structures were erected, equity would order their abatement. The right to enter and abate is a right in support of a present interest, making unnecessary any resort to the courts. To the same effect see Heald v. Ross, (N. J. Ch. 1900) 47 Atl. 575.

31. The future interests in realty known to the common law are vested remainders, contingent remainders, reversions, rights of entry for condition broken, possibilities of reverter, escheat, shifting and springing uses and executory devises, curtesy and dower, and future easements and profits. There are also certain similar future legal interests in personalty and certain similar future equitable interests in both realty and personalty. Of these future interests, vested remainders, reversions, possibilities of reverter, and rights to escheat in realty; interests in personalty of the nature of vested remainders or reversions; and equitable interests corresponding to legal vested interests are vested. See infra, III, B, 1–7.

32. See infra, III, B, 2–7.

33. The law governing the creation of remainders originated in feudal conceptions. Freehold land was transferable, under these conceptions, by livery of seizin. The owner of a fee could transfer the whole fee to another by livery; or, if he wished, he could transfer, say, a life-estate to A, remainder to B. In such case livery was made to A, but the seizin was now split up. A was conceived of as seized of the land, yet B was conceived of as seized in remainder. The transfer of the seizin always took effect presently; it could not be made to take effect in futuro. Therefore a remainder always had to be created at the same time as a present estate, called the particular estate; and this particular estate was said to support the remainder. The early law only allowed future interests which followed one another in orderly succession. Thus to A for life, to B for life, to C for life, to D in fee. Here the future interests are to take effect in turn, when the preceding estates run out. They do not cut short the preceding estates. Suppose, however, land is given to A in fee, but, if he dies unmarried, then to B in fee. Here if B awaited the running out of A's interest, he would have to await until A and all his heirs were dead. But if A dies unmarried, B becomes entitled. B's interest then does not await the running out of A's estate, but cuts it short. A remainder always awaits the running out of the preceding estates, and never cuts them short. Interests which cut short the preceding estates were unknown, in freehold estates, until after the passage of the Statute of Uses. As remainders fol-determined.[34] The person entitled must therefore be in being,[35] and such person's right must not be contingent on the happening of any event.[36] The creation of vested remainders has been held unobjectionable from time immemorial. The Rule against Perpetuities has never been applied to them,[37] and the law to-day places no limits on their creation.[38]

3. REVERSIONS. All reversions are vested, and their creation is not subject to the Rule against Perpetuities.[39]

lowed each other in orderly succession, every remainder was bound to be ready to take the present seizin whenever the preceding estates came to an end. If it was not ready, it was destroyed. Thus of an estate to A for life, remainder to B's children for life, remainder to C. A dies, and B now has no children. The remainder to B's children is destroyed, and C takes. If children were born to B later, they would have no rights. Thus too of an estate to A for life, remainder to A's children. A, before children are born, purports to enfeoff X of the land in fee. This tortious feoffment by A forfeited his estate; the present seizin was offered to the remainder-man, and, there being no children to take, the remainder was destroyed. Remainders to unborn persons were therefore easily destroyed. See supra, II, A, note 7. See also DEEDS, 13 Cyc. 647; ESTATES, 16 Cyc. 648; WILLS.

34. See supra, III, B, 1.

35. If land is given to A for life, remainder to A's children, and A has now no children, the remainder is not vested. A future interest is of course not ready to turn into a present estate of enjoyment until the owner of the interest is in being. See DEEDS, 13 Cyc. 647; ESTATES, 16 Cyc. 648; WILLS.

36. If land is given to A for life, remainder to A's surviving children, and A has children now alive, the remainder is not vested. The right of any child is contingent upon his outliving his father. So if land is given to A for life, remainder to B in fee, if B shall have paid A ten thousand dollars in his lifetime, the remainder is contingent until he pays A the ten thousand dollars. So of a remainder to B if he shall enter a certain profession, or shall take the name of the testator. See DEEDS, 13 Cyc. 647; ESTATES, 16 Cyc. 648; WILLS.

38. Suppose land is given for a term of years to A, remainder to B. Unless there is some statutory limit on the length of terms for years, B may be given an interest which may not become a present estate of enjoyment for centuries. But such interest, being vested, is held not to be objectionable as a perpetuity. Todhunter v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 58 Iowa 205, 12 N. W. 267; Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552, 2 N. W. 814; Morris v. Fisher, (Pa. 1900) 46 Atl. 1102 [the judgment below (8 Pa. 39. By the Statute Quia Emptores (1290) it was provided that if A, the owner of a fee, conveyed the fee to another, B, B should hold the land, not of A, but of A's lord. Therefore if A conveyed to B and his heirs, and B died without heirs, A's lord, and not A, was entitled to the land. It followed that if A conveyed the fee to B, either as a present estate or as a vested remainder, there was no reversion in the land remaining in A. For example, if A conveyed the land to B for life, remainder to C and his heirs, there was no reversion left in A. But if A conveyed the land to B for life, without more, then the right succeeding B's life-estate remained in A as a reversion. Whenever a grantor creates estates in land less than a fee simple, there is a reversion remaining in him. Suppose now that A conveyed the fee, not as a vested, but as a contingent, remainder. For example, A conveys the land to B for life, remainder to B's surviving children in fee. A contingent remainder was not conceived of as invested with any part of the seizin; the seizin so far as not disposed of remained in A, and A was therefore seized in reversion, even though he had created a contingent remainder in fee. Suppose further, that A conveys the land to B for life, remainder to B's surviving children in fee, but, if B left no children, then to C in fee. Whether, when B dies, he leaves children or not, A will not be entitled to the land. But both remainders are contingent, the seizin has not been fully disposed of, and therefore A is conceived of as still seized in reversion. Egerton v. Massey, 3 C. B. N. S. 338, 91 E. C. L. 338. A reversion in all cases is a future interest to which the person creating the previous limitations in the land, or his heirs, is entitled. The person or persons entitled are therefore necessarily in being. The reversion is a future interest which arises only when, despite the estates created in favor of other persons, something still remains in the person creating such estates. Upon the determination of the estates created in favor of other persons, the creator of those estates, or his heirs, will again be entitled. This is true, even in such a case as Egerton v. Massey, supra. The reversion is therefore always ready to turn into a present estate of enjoyment whenever the preceding estates are determined. It fol-

4. Possibilities of Reverter. A possibility of reverter is a vested right, being of the nature of a reversion.[40] The creation of such an interest is held not to be subject to the Rule against Perpetuities.[41]

5. Escheat. The right of the lord to land by escheat is a vested right, and not subject to the Rule.[42]

6. Vested Legal Future Interests in Personalty. There may be vested legal future interests in personalty as well as in realty. Such interests are vested remainders, or reversions, strictly so called, or interests similar to vested remainders or reversions.[43] There may be vested legal future interests in both chattels real[44] and lows that all reversions are vested. See Johnson v. Edmond, 65 Conn. 492, 33 Atl. 503. See Deeds, 13 Cyc. 650; Estates, 16 Cyc. 661; Wills.

40. A possibility of reverter is the interest left in the owner of a fee, A, after the creation of a determinable fee in another person, B. In very early times an estate to B and the heirs of his body was regarded as a determinable fee, the name of fee simple conditional being applied to this kind of determinable fee, and the interest remaining in A was not a reversion but a possibility of reverter. By the Statute de Donis 1285, an estate to B and the heirs of his body became an estate tail, and the interest remaining in A therefore became a reversion. The Statute de Donis was never adopted as part of the law of South Carolina, and in that state, and that state only, fee simple conditionals may still be created. The Rule against Perpetuities has never been applied in South Carolina to the possibilities of reverter remaining after the creation of fee-simple conditionals. See Postell v. Jones, Harp. (S. C.) 92, 99 note. After the Statute de Donis, the creation of other kinds of determinable fees continued valid. The classic example is an estate to A and his heirs, so long as they are tenants of the Manor of Dale. But the Statute Quia Emptores provided that if A, the owner of a fee, conveyed the fee to another, B, B should hold the land, not of A, but of A's lord. In other words, A could not retain a reversion in himself, after a conveyance in fee. This would seem to have put an end to the creation of possibilities of reverter, and there is no decision in England, since the Statute Quia Emptores, in which the creation of a possibility of reverter has been held good. See Collier v. McBean, 34 Beav. 426, 11 Jur. N. S. 592, 34 L. J. Ch. 555, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 790, 13 Wkly. Rep. 766, 55 Eng. Reprint 700. There are, however, several dicta assuming that possibilities of reverter may still be created. Y. B. 27 Hen. VIII, 29 pl. 30; Atty.-Gen. v. Pyle, 1 Atk. 435, 26 Eng. Reprint 278; Liford's Case, 11 Coke 46*b*, 77 Eng. Reprint 1206; Ayres v. Falkland, 1 Ld. Raym. 325; Gardner v. Sheldon, Vaugh. 259. The Statute Quia Emptores is not law in South Carolina, and seems not to be law in Pennsylvania, and possibilities of reverter may there be created. Slegel v. Lauer, 148 Pa. St. 236, 23 Atl. 996, 15 L. R. A. 547; Henderson v. Hunter, 59 Pa. St. 335; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Parke, 42 Pa. St. 31; Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. St. 126. Their validity has, moreover, been recognized in a number of other states. Carr v. Georgia R. Co., 74 Ga. 73; Conner v. Waring, 52 Md. 724. See also Dolan v. Baltimore, 4 Gill (Md.) 394; North Adams First Universalist Soc. v. Boland, 155 Mass. 171, 29 N. E. 524, 15 L. R. Appendix E.

41. Wherever the validity of possibilities of reverter has been recognized, the Rule against Perpetuities has not been applied to them. This result would seem correct, as all possibilities of reverter are vested. This is not, however, the reasoning usually employed. North Adams First Universalist Soc. v. Boland, 155 Mass. 171, 29 N. E. 524, 15 L. R. A. 231; French v. Old South Soc., 106 Mass. 479.

42. A right of escheat is of the nature of a reversion after a fee simple. Thus if a lord granted land to A and his heirs, and A died without heirs, the lord took by escheat. After the Statute Quia Emptores A was enabled to convey to B and his heirs and, after such conveyance, the lord would take only if B died without heirs; but, whenever a lord takes by escheat, he takes because the existing estates in the land have run out. The right to escheat is always a vested right. See supra, III, B, 1. Lord Coke said that upon the dissolution of a corporation, its land reverted to the grantors, and that their right was of the nature of an escheat. Windsor's Case, Gobd. 211, 78 Eng. Reprint 128; Coke Litt. 13*b*. This remark has been frequently cited, and there is one decision in accord. Mott v. Danville Seminary, 129 Ill. 403, 21 N. E. 927, 136 Ill. 289, 28 N. E. 54. The court did not consider the question whether such an interest is subject to the Rule against Perpetuities. See also Paris Presb. Church v. Venable, 159 Ill. 215, 42 N. E. 836, 50 Am. St. Rep. 159; Jenkins v. Jenkins University, 17 Wash. 160, 49 Pac. 247, 50 Pac. 785; Gray Perp. (2d ed.) §§ 44–51.

44. Chattels real.— A sublease may be created in a term of years. For example A, owner of a term for twenty years, may sublease to B for ten years. The interest remaining in A is a reversion. Can any vested future legal interest in a chattel real be created except such as follow a term of years within a term? According to the old common law, if A, owner of a term, granted it to B for life, B took the whole term. In legal contemplation, a life-estate is greater than an estate for years; by a piece of scholastic logic, the courts concluded that, where a term is granted for life, the limitation for life is as great as a limitation for all the years and comprehends in judgment of law all the years, for inasmuch as a "time for life is greater than a time for years," therefore the lesser is included in the greater. Welcden v. Elkington, Plowd. 516, 75 Eng. Reprint 763. This old conception has not yet been repudiated. Suppose now that a term is given to A for life, remainder to B. A has the absolute interest. Is B to be protected at all? After some conflicting decisions, it was settled by Manning's Case, 8 Coke 94b, 77 Eng. Reprint 618, that, in the case of a devise, the limitation to B should be construed as an executory devise, A taking the absolute interest subject to this devise. This is still law in both England and the United States. There are no decisions in either country expressly holding that a similar executory limitation by deed would be good, but in Culbreth v. Smith, 69 Md. 450, 16 Atl. 112, 1 L. R. A. 538, there is a reasoned dictum to that effect. It would seem therefore that at the present day if any future legal interest can be created in a chattel real, except such as follow a term of years within the term, such interest is an executory devise, or an executory limitation. Such future interests are not vested. See infra, III, D, 4. It follows that no vested future legal interest can be created in chattels real, except such as follow a term of years within the terms.

45. Chattels personal.—A chattel personal may be bailed for a term of years. For example A, owner of silver plate, may bail it to B for a day or a month, or any definite time. The interest remaining in A is of the nature of a reversion and is vested. Can any vested future legal interest in a chattel personal be created except such as follow a bailment for years? In early times the law distinguished between the gift of the chattel itself, and the use of the chattel. Paramour v. Yardley, Plowd. 539, 75 Eng. Reprint 794. "The gift or devise of a chattel for an hour is forever." Bro. Ab. Dev. 13. So when a chattel was bequeathed to A for life and then to B, it was held that B took nothing. Anonymous, March 106, 82 Eng. Reprint 432. But the use of a chattel could be in one, and the property subject to this use in another. So, if the use of a mass-book was bequeathed to A for life, the book then to go to B, both A and B took legal interests. Y. B. 37 Hen. VI, 30. Later, a bequest of a book to A for life, remainder to B, came to be construed as a bequest of the use to A for life, and of the book, subject to this use, to B. Vachel v. Vachel, 1 Ch. Cas. 129, 29 Eng. Reprint 727. This destroyed the effect of the decision in Anonymous, supra. Woodley v. Findlay, 9 Ala. 716; Tissen v. Tissen, 1 P. Wms. 500, 24 Eng. Reprint 490; Catchmay v. Nicholas, Rep. t. Finch 116, 23 Eng. Reprint 63. See also Doyle v. Bouler, 7 Ala. 246. Where a chattel personal is bequeathed to A for life, and then to B, since B has the property subject to A's use, and will become entitled to enjoy the property whenever A's interest ceases, B's interest is of the nature of a vested remainder. Future interests in chattels personal, to take effect after life-interests therein, were treated as vested in Evans v. Walker, 3 Ch. D. 211, 25 Wkly. Rep. 7, and Loring v. Blake, 98 Mass. 253. See also In re Roberts, 19 Ch. D. 520, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 450; Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. Jr. 357, 2 Rev. Rep. 250, 30 Eng. Reprint 671. In Re Tritton, 61 L. T. Rep. N. S. 301, 6 Morr. Bankr. Cas. 250, however, where the use of pictures was given to A for life, and, subject to this use, to B, the interest of B was treated not as a vested interest, but as an executory bequest. See also Isbell v. Maclin, 24 Ala. 315; McGraw v. Davenport, 6 Port. (Ala.) 319; Tucker v. Stevens, 4 Desauss. Eq. (S. C.) 532; Stone v. Nicholson, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 1. Compare Marston v. Carter, 12 N. H. 159. Where a chattel personal is bequeathed to B for life, without more, B would seem to have only a use for life, and A's representatives a vested interest of the nature of a reversion. Accordingly, on such a bequest, upon B's death, the chattel goes to the representatives of A, not of B. Booth v. Terrell, 18 Ga. 570, 16 Ga. 20; Haralson v. Redd, 15 Ga. 148; Brown v. Kelsey, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 243; Harris v. McLaran, 30 Miss. 533; Vannerson v. Culbertson, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 150; Hoes v. Van Hosen, 1 N. Y. 120; Cresswell v. Emberson, 41 N. C. 151; Black v. Ray, 18 N. Va. 71, 10 S. E. 21, 5 L. R. A. 523. But see contra, Derickson v. Garden, 5 Del. Ch. 323. In most of the United States transfers of chattels personal inter vivos will be construed and upheld in the same manner as bequests of chattels. See supra, note 1. It follows that by bequests of chattels personal in both England and the United States, and by transfers inter vivos in most jurisdictions within the United States, vested future legal interests in chattels personal may be created in the nature of vested remainders and reversions, besides those which follow bailments for years.

46. Reversions after subleases are to be treated in the same manner as any other reversions. See supra, III, B, 3. It seems never to have been suggested that the Rule would apply to those interests in chattels personal which are equivalent to absolute

7. VESTED EQUITABLE FUTURE INTERESTS. Equitable interests are vested whenever the corresponding legal interests would be vested,[47] and vested equitable interests are no more subject to the Rule against Perpetuities than vested legal interests.[48]

C. Destructible Future Interests Are Not Subject to the Rule. If a future interest is destructible at the pleasure of the owner of the present estate, it neither hampers the alienation of the property, nor diminishes the value of the present estate. It is not therefore objectionable within either of the reasons of policy supporting the Rule against Perpetuities.[49] So long as contingent remainders were destructible by act of the owner of the present estate, it is an open question whether or not they were subject to the Rule. But they have ceased to be so destructible. Estates tail may still be created in England and in some of the United States.[50] The future interests expectant on estates tail may be destroyed by the tenant in tail.[51] Are then these future interests within the Rule? If such an interest must vest at or before the determination of the estate tail, it is good; for throughout the time it can remain contingent, it will be destructible.[52] If, however, such an interest must not necessarily vest at, or ownership, excepting as they are subject to a bailment for years. Interests of the nature of vested remainders in chattels personal, which follow life-interests in the chattels, are not subject to the Rule. Loring v. Blake, 98 Mass. 253; Evans v. Walker, 3 Ch. 47. For example, if A conveys land to trustees, in trust for B for life, then for C for life, and then to D in fee, C and D have vested equitable interests in the nature of remainders. So if A conveys land to trustees, in trust for B for life, without more, there is a resulting trust in A. Resulting trusts are of the nature of reversions. So if A conveys land to trustees, in trust for a charity, and the application of the land to the charitable use becomes impossible, there is a resulting trust to A. This interest in A is closely analogous to a possibility of reverter. See Hopkins v. Grimshaw, 165 U. S. 342, 17 S. Ct. 401, 41 L. ed. 739. See also In re Randell, 38 Ch. D. 213, 57 L. J. before, the determination of the estate tail, and if it will be indestructible thereafter, it is bad; for the tenant in tail may not destroy it, and it will then become an indestructible interest which may not vest within the limits of the Rule.[53] In South Carolina executory limitations may be created to follow upon fee-simple conditionals,[54] and semble that such interests are not destructible.[55] Although a contingent remainder may no longer be destroyed by any act of the owner of the present estate, it is still subject to destruction if it is not vested by the determination of the preceding estates.[56] Consequently a contingent remainder which by the terms creating it may not vest, if at all, within the limits of the Rule, but which is to follow estates all of which must end within the limits of the Rule, is good; for unless it does vest by the determination of the preceding estates, it is destroyed.[57]

D. Such Future Interests as Are Contingent and Indestructible Are Subject to the Rule — 1. In General. The Rule applies only to future interests, and not to present interests at all.[58] And it does not even apply to all future interests; if such interests are either vested or destructible, they do not offend the Rule.[59] Broadly speaking, the statement may, however, be made that the Rule does apply to all future interests in property[60] which are both contingent

It was held by the court below that this equitable interest should be treated as though it were a corresponding legal interest, and, as such a legal contingent remainder would be good, the equitable interest was held good. This holding was reversed by the court of appeal, but the court recognized that if the future interest to the children had been legal, rather than equitable, it would have been good. and indestructible. To this broad statement, the only qualifications that need be made are with regard to (1) curtesy and dower,[61] and (2) rights of entry for condition broken.[62]

2. CONTINGENT REMAINDERS. A remainder is contingent unless the owner is in being, and entitled, so long as the remainder continues, to come into the present enjoyment of the property whenever the preceding estates determine.[63] So long as contingent remainders were destructible by act of the owner of the present estate, it is an open question whether or not they were subject to the Rule. But they have ceased to be so destructible,[64] and there would seem to be no sufficient reason to doubt that the Rule now applies to them.[65]

3. RIGHTS OF ENTRY FOR CONDITION BROKEN. The Statute Quia Emptores, which prevented subinfeudation, was held not to affect the right of the owner of a fee simple to grant the fee upon a condition, and to enter, upon breach of the condition.[66] Such a right is held in England to be subject to the Rule.[67]

Reprint 1068. See also Vanderslice v. Royal Ins. Co., 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 233.

61. Curtesy and dower usually arise as rights in realty in which the spouse has an estate in fee simple. Although such fee simple may in its creation have been a remainder expectant on many preceding estates, yet when it is reached the owner of the present estate has the most unrestricted rights of ownership known to the law; for the purposes of computing time within which future interests in the property must vest a fresh start is made; and as the rights to dower and curtesy are vested at, if not before, the death of the spouse, they are clearly not too remote. Suppose, however, that land is given to A, a bachelor, for life, remainder to A's eldest child in tail, remainder to A's heirs. A dies, leaving one daughter, B, who marries C, has issue, and dies. If the land had been given to A, a bachelor, for life, remainder to A's eldest child for life, remainder to the spouse of such child, for life, remainders over, the remainder to the spouse would have been too remote; for the child might not marry a person in being at A's death. Yet it has never been suggested that C's right of curtesy in the case put would be objectionable to the Rule. Semble the reason is that the right of curtesy arises, by act of law, as an incident to an estate of inheritance. And if the estate of inheritance is not too remote, all the legal incidents of such estate are unobjectionable. The same reasoning applies to rights of dower.

B (after the Statute Quia Emptores) would hold the fee, not of A, but of A's lord. Here A's interest does not follow on in orderly succession after B's, being ready to turn into a present estate of enjoyment whenever B's estate is determined. 69. Before the Statute of Uses (1536) if A, owner of land, enfeoffed B to the use of third persons, B was at law as completely the owner as though no use had been declared. But equity would enforce the uses declared, as to-day equity enforces trusts declared. Now the creation of legal estates in land was subject to strict rules of feudal origin, but equity was not bound by these rules. It followed that a use, or equitable interest, in land might be created although a corresponding legal interest was unknown. Thus A, owner of land, could not create a freehold interest to commence in futuro, unless he at the same time created another estate or estates exactly filling in the time until such future estate was to commence. A could enfeoff B of land for life, remainder to C in fee, but A could not enfeoff C in fee, the fee to commence when B died, without any intervening estate. If, however, A enfeoffed X of the land, to the use of C and his heirs, from and after B's death, this was good in equity. There was a resulting use to A until B's death, and then the declared use to C became operative. This interest in C was called a springing use, as it sprang out of, and cut short, the feoffor's own use. Again A could not create any future interest in favor of third persons, which did not exactly follow on after a preceding estate; future interests which did not follow on after preceding estates, but cut them short, were allowed by the law only in the form of rights of entry to the grantor himself, or his heirs, for condition broken. A could not grant land to B and his heirs, but if B died unmarried, then to C and his heirs. If, however, A enfeoffed X of the land to the use of B and his heirs, but, if B died unmarried, then to the use of C and his heirs, this was good in equity. The use to B was enforced until he died unmarried, and then the use to C became operative. This interest in C was called a shifting use. A springing use cut short a use in the grantor; a shifting use cut short a use created in some other person.

By the Statute of Uses it was provided that whoever was cestui of a use, and therefore had an equitable interest in land corresponding to a legal interest should thereafter have the legal estate. The creation of equitable interests remained as unrestricted as before, and the statute now took these equitable interests and converted them into legal interests. Thus the liberality which had prevailed in equity was now carried over into the law.

70. After the Statute of Wills (1540) land was freely devisable. The courts of law, in declaring what interests in land could be created by devise, did not follow the strict rules governing conveyances inter vivos, but were as liberal as equity had been with regard to the creation of uses. See supra, note 69. The term "executory devises" includes such interests created by will as would have been springing uses or shifting uses if created inter vivos by way of use.

The term "conditional limitation" is a convenient general expression, frequently used to cover both springing and shifting uses and executory devises.

71. Suppose property is given to A and his heirs but, if A dies without issue, to B and his heirs. This gift to B is a shifting use, if the limitation is by deed, or an executory devise, if the limitation is by will. Such gifts have frequently been passed upon by the courts and it has never been doubted but that they are subject to the Rule. The gift may be construed to take effect on an indefinite failure of issue — that is, whenever A and all his issue are dead, or it may be construed to take effect on a definite failure of issue — that is, only in case that on A's death there are no issue of A alive.

76. Waldo v. Cummings, 45 Ill. 421. For limitations of personalty to A, but, if A "dies without issue," to B, see cases collected supra, note 73. The doctrine of contingent remainders is confined to legal interests in realty, and limitations which would be contingent remainders in realty are simply executory limitations in personalty, and to them the Rule doubtless applies. See supra, III, D, 2, 4. The only authority against the broad statement in the text is a dictum in Palmer v. Union Bank, 17 R. I. 627, 24 Atl. 109. Here personalty was given to trustees for a charity; if the trustees failed to carry out the trust the bequest was to "cease and determine," and the property was to "descend to and vest" in the testator's heirs at law. The court said that if this limitation to the heirs should be construed as a condition (it was in fact otherwise construed), it would not be subject to the Rule. If this dictum is law, interests in personalty in the nature of a condition are not subject to the Rule. See supra, III, D, 3, on rights of entry for condition broken, as to realty.

On equitable interests that will fall through the destruction of legal interests see supra, note 52. The doctrine of contingent remainders is confined to legal interests in realty, and limitations which would be contingent remainders at law are simply executory limitations in equity. It follows that a limitation which would be good in law may be bad in equity. In Abbiss v. Burney, 17 Ch. D. 211, 50 L. J. Ch. 348, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 267, 29 Wkly. Rep. 449, land was conveyed in trust for A for life, and then for such of the children of A as should reach twenty-five. If the legal interest had been so conveyed, the interest of the children would have been a contingent remainder, and on A's death such remainder would have vested in the children, if any, who were then twenty-five. If there were no children who had already reached that age, the remainder would have been destroyed; if children had reached that age subsequently, they would have had no rights. Consequently the remainder must have vested, if at all, at A's death, and as A was alive at the testator's death, such vesting would not be too remote. See supra, note 57. But in equity where there is no need that a future interest shall exactly follow on after the preceding interest, such a trust would be kept open, if there were children in being under the specified age, and if children later reached the specified age, their interests would be allowed to take effect as springing trusts. See supra, note 69. Since the trust to the children might be applies to contracts for the purchase of land, the performance of which would be specifically enforced.[79] It also applies to covenants for renewal in leases;[80] but, if the covenant is the property of persons who have a vested interest in the lease, containing the covenant, such covenant is not subject to the Rule.[81]

IV. THE REQUIREMENT OF THE RULE.

A. The Rule Stated. The Rule requires that future interests within its scope[82] should vest within twenty-one years, exclusive of periods of gestation,[83] after a life or lives in being.[84]

B. Vesting the Sole Requirement. The Rule does not require that future interests should become present estates of enjoyment within the limits. It is satisfied if the future interests must vest within the limits. Consequently, if an interest is vested at its creation, it is not subject to the Rule at all; this is true, even though such interest may not become a present estate of enjoyment until long beyond the limits of the Rule.[85] So with a future interest which is contingent at its creation. The Rule does not require that this contingent future interest should become a present estate of enjoyment within the limits, but only that it should vest[86] within those limits.[87] If restraints on alienation are imposed upon interests so kept open, it was, in the case cited, too remote, for it might not be determined until more than twenty-one years after A's death which of the children would take. Such a legal interest in the children would be subject to destruction in a way that the corresponding equitable interest would not, and this possibility of destruction would keep the legal interest from being too remote.

82. Interests subject to the Rule see supra, III.

83. Periods of gestation see supra, II, E.

84. The Rule has been stated in many forms, slightly differing from the form used in the text.

85. For example, if land is given, in a jurisdiction which still allows the creation of estates tail, to A and the heirs of his body, remainder to B and his heirs, the remainder to B is vested in its creation, and although it may remain uncertain for centuries, whether or not it will ever become a present estate of enjoyment, it does not offend the Rule. So if land is given, in a jurisdiction where no statutory limit has been placed upon the creation of terms of years, to A for five hundred years, remainder to B and his heirs, B's interest does not offend the Rule. See further, supra, III, B.

86. See supra, III, B, 1.

87. In Craig v. Stacey, Ir. T. R. 249, land was devised to A in fee, but if she died unmarried, then to B and the heirs of her body, and on failure of them, to C and the heirs of her body. C's interest was in its creation an executory devise, but it would become a vested remainder, if ever, upon A's death. It would therefore vest, if ever, within a life in being and was held good. See Gray v. Whittemore, 192 Mass. 367, 78 N. E. 422, 116 Am. St. Rep. 246; Brown v. Brown, 86 Tenn. 277, 6 S. W. 869, 7 S. W. 640; In re Roberts, 19 Ch. D. 520, 45 L. T. Rep. N. Ch. 358, 58 Eng. Reprint 628, an estate was given to A for life, remainder to A's children as tenants in common, and for want of such children, remainders over. Cross remainders for life to the children of A were implied by the court. In Stuart v. Cockerell, L. R. 7 Eq. 363, 38 L. J. Ch. 473, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 573, it was questioned if such cross remainders were not objectionable to the Rule, but it would seem that they were not. Suppose A left three children, B, C, and D. Immediately upon A's death, if cross remainders are to be implied, one third of the estate is in B for life, remainder, as to one half of such third to C, which must vest, if ever, within the limits of the Rule, such interests are valid, regardless of the validity of the restraint; if the provision for restraint is invalid it alone will be rejected.[88]

C. The Future Interest Must Necessarily Vest Within the Limits. It is not enough that the future interest may, or even that it will, in all probability, vest within the limits. It must necessarily so vest.[89] And for the purposes of the Rule a woman is considered capable of child-bearing so long as she lives.[90] The requirement that the future interest must necessarily vest within the limits has, however, in some states not been so strictly interpreted in cases involving the time necessary to settle estates.[91]

D. No Exception in Favor of Alienable Interests. The Rule requires that all future interests within its scope should vest within the limits. Future interests may be alienable; but, if they must not necessarily vest within the limits of the Rule, they are, despite their alienability, void as perpetuities.[92] If property is remainder to D; remainder as to the other half of such third to D, remainder to C. And similarly with the other thirds of the property in B and C. All the life-interests of the children, by way of cross remainders, must vest, if ever, at A's death, and, although contingent in their creation, are therefore good. Compare Doe v. Garrod, 2 B. & Ad. 87, 22 E. given to trustees to hold on trusts which may not vest within the limits the trusts are void, and it is immaterial that the trustees have full power to change investments, and therefore to sell at any time all of the property so held in trust.[93]

E. The Rule Does Not Require That Interests Should End Within Specified Limits. The sole requirement of the Rule is that future interests should vest within specified limits. Once vested the estate may last indefinitely without offending the Rule. The Rule is concerned only with vesting, which relates to the beginning of interests; it is in no wise concerned with the ending of interests.[94] Thus a legal fee simple may last forever, but it of course does not offend the Rule. The cestui of an equitable fee simple may at any time require the trustee to convey the legal estate to him,[95] and semble an equitable fee no more offends the Rule than a legal fee.[96] Thus also a life-estate to an unborn person may last more than twenty-one years beyond the lives in being at the time of the creation of such life-estate; but if the life-estate must vest within the limits of the Rule, it is good. And an equitable life-estate to an unborn person is as unobjectionable as a legal life-estate.[97] Thus also a term for more than twenty-one years is good, although it be a term for a thousand years, if it must vest within the limits.[98]

F. As to Future Interests Created by Will. The validity of future interests created by will is determined by the situation existing at the testator's death. The Rule does not require that future interests created by the terms of a will should have been good if the testator had died immediately after the execution of the will; it is enough if, taking the facts as they exist at the testator's death, the future interests must vest within the limits.[99]

G. As to Future Interests in an Estate For a Life or Lives, or in a Term For Years of Not More Than Twenty-One Years. Semble that no future interests created in an estate for life or lives, or in a term for years of not more than twenty-one years, offend the Rule; for, as the res in which such interests are created must itself determine within the limits of the Rule, the interests themselves must necessarily vest, if at all, within the limits.[1]

V. LIMITATIONS TO CLASSES.

2. Following usage, and for the sake of simplicity, the time within which the ascertainment of the number of shares must necessarily take place will be spoken of as the test of the validity of limitations to classes. See Gray Perp. (2d ed.) § 205 et seq.; Jemison v. Smith, 37 Ala. 185; In re Hunter, L. R.

shares is likely to increase, as where property is given to the children of A, and A is still alive; or because the number of shares is likely to decrease, as where property is given to the children of A who reach twenty-one, and A has some children over twenty-one and some under that age. If the number of the shares may increase or decrease at a time beyond the limits of the Rule, the whole limitation is void. There are four forms of limitations to classes in common use: (1) A limitation to all the children or grandchildren of A;[3] (2) a limitation to all the children or grandchildren of A with a proviso that, if any child or grandchild dies under a certain age, the property shall go over;[4] (3) a limitation to such of the children or grandchildren of A as reach a certain age;[5] and (4) a limitation to such of the children of A as reach a certain age, and to such of the children of children dying under that age as reach the age, the children of the second generation taking their parents' share.[6]

2. Limitation to All Children or Grandchildren of A — a. In General. A limitation to all the children of A, a living person, is good, because the number of children, and therefore the number of the shares into which the property will be divided by reason of the limitation, must be ascertained on A's death. So a limitation to all the grandchildren of the testator is good, because the number of grandchildren must be ascertained at the death of the testator's children, and all his children must be begotten before his death. Similarly a limitation to all the grandchildren of a person already dead is good. But a limitation to the grandchildren of a living person is bad, because children may be born to such person after the limitation is created, and children of the second generation may be born to these children more than twenty-one years after the death of the persons in being at the creation of the limitation.[7]

b. With a Proviso That if Any Child or Grandchild Dies Under a Certain Age, Property to Go Over. Here the limitation over may be invalid under the Rule;

7. Suppose property is devised in trust for A, a person alive at the testator's death, for life, and then for A's children in fee. After B, the first child, is born to A, it is certain that B or his heirs will have some share in the property, and he, or they, are ready to take, whenever the preceding estate determines. But B's share is not yet ascertained; as fast as other children are born, the share of B decreases, and the size of B's share must therefore remain undetermined until A's death. Under these circumstances, is B's interest vested or contingent? The courts speak of B's interest as vested upon his birth. After B is born, the courts conceive of the property as limited to A for life, with a vested remainder in B. When other children are born to A, this vested remainder is said to "open" to receive them, and the size of B's vested remainder is thereby decreased. Field v. Peeples, 180 Ill. 376, 54 N. Such is the language of the courts, and yet a vested remainder liable to open is held subject to the Rule against Perpetuities. In the case put, the limitation is good, because the remainder to the children is not liable to open after A's death, and he was alive at the testator's death. But suppose a devise in trust for A, for life, and then for A's grandchildren in fee, and that A is alive at the testator's death. After B, the first grandchild, is born, he has a vested equitable remainder. But this remainder is liable to open to receive all after-born grandchildren; children may be born to A, after the testator's death, and children of the second generation may be born to these children, more than twenty-one years after the death of the persons in being at the testator's death. B's vested remainder is therefore liable to open at a time beyond the limits of the Rule, and is bad. See Belfield v. Booth, 63 Conn. 299, 27 Atl. 585; Minot v. Doggett, 190 Mass. 435, 77 N. but the invalidity of the limitation over will not affect at all the validity of the first limitation. The validity of the limitation to the children or grandchildren will be determined in the same manner as though there were no limitation over.[8]

3. LIMITATION TO SUCH OF CHILDREN OR GRANDCHILDREN OF A AS REACH A CERTAIN AGE. If property is limited to such of the children or grandchildren of A as reach a certain age,[9] then as soon as one such child or grandchild reaches the prescribed age his interest vests, and he is not obliged to wait on the chance that other children or grandchildren may be born. The class is closed when one member reaches the prescribed age; after-born children or grandchildren have no rights; the class consists of all the children or grandchildren alive at the time when one member reaches the age.[10] The maximum number of shares is therefore ascertained as soon as the class is closed, but the minimum number of shares will not be ascertained until all the members of the class living at the time it was closed either reach the prescribed age or die.[11] A limitation to all the children of A, a living person, who reach twenty-one is good, because the number of such children must be ascertained within twenty-one years after A's death. So a limitation to such of the grandchildren of the testator as reach twenty-one is good, because the number of such grandchildren must be ascertained within twenty-one years after the deaths of the testator's children, and all the testator's children must be begotten before his death. Similarly a limitation to all the grandchildren of a person already dead who reach twenty-one is good.[12] If there is a limitation to such of

In a marriage settlement property may be limited to the children of the parties of the marriage, but not to their grandchildren. Gray Perp. (2d ed.) § 371.

8. Suppose property is devised in trust for A for life, who is alive at the testator's death, and then to A's children in fee, with a proviso that if any child dies under twenty-five, its share shall go to B. Here as each child of A is born, he receives a vested remainder. This vested remainder is liable to open as other children are born (see supra, note 7), and it is also subject to be divested on the happening of a condition subsequent, namely, on the death of the child under twenty-five. See Davenport v. Harris, 3 Grant (Pa.) 164. If a condition subsequent is limited upon a contingency which may not be determined within the limits of the Rule, the limitation over is bad (see "Springing and Shifting Uses and Executory Devises," supra III, D, 4), but the first limitation remains unharmed, in fact, it gains, for it is now freed from the condition subsequent. In the case put above, the limitation over to B is bad, for A may have a child born after the testator's death, and this child may die under twenty-five, more than twenty-one years after the death of the persons in being at the testator's death; but the limitation to the children of A is good, for the remainder to them will not be liable to open after A's death, and he was alive at the testator's death. In re Bevan, 34 Ch. 9. A limitation in this form gives the children or grandchildren of A only a contingent interest. The limitation is not to the children of A with a proviso that if any child dies under a certain age its share shall go over, thus giving to each child a vested interest subject to be divested by the happening of a condition subsequent. See supra, note 7. The description of the persons to whom the property is limited includes only those children who reach the age, and a child's interest must therefore remain contingent until he reaches the age. 11. Suppose there is a devise of property in trust for A, who is alive at the testator's death, for life, and then for such of the children of A as reach twenty-one. A has one child, B, alive at the testator's death. Before B reaches twenty-one, C and D are born to A; and after B has reached twenty-one, E is born to A. The class is closed as soon as B reaches twenty-one; it is composed of B, C, and D; the maximum number of the shares is ascertained as three, according to the rule stated in the text; but whether the number of shares will be less than three cannot be determined until both C and D either die or reach twenty-one.

12. The limitation put in the preceding note is good, for the maximum number of shares must be determined at A's death, and the minimum within twenty-one years thereafter, Otterback v. Bohrer, 87 Va. 548, 12 S. the children of A, a living person, as reach twenty-two, or any other age over twenty-one, and A has a child living at the time the limitation is created, who has already reached twenty-two, the limitation is good; for the class is at once closed, the maximum number of shares is determined, and the minimum number of shares must be determined when the other children, if any, of A, who are alive at the time the class is closed, reach twenty-two or die, and this they must do within their own lives. Similarly, if there is a limitation to such of the grandchildren of the testator as reach twenty-two, and there is a grandchild alive at the testator's death who has already reached twenty-two. Similarly, if there is a limitation to such of the grandchildren of a person already dead as reach twenty-two, and there is a grandchild who has reached that age at the time the limitation is created.[13] But if there is a limitation to such of the children of A, a living person, as reach twenty-two, or any other age over twenty-one, and there is no child of A alive at the time the limitation is created who has reached that age, then the limitation is bad, for all these children may die, and other children may be born to A, so that no child of A may reach twenty-two until more than twenty-one years after A's death. Similarly, if there is a limitation to such of the grandchildren of the testator, or of the grandchildren of a person already deceased as reach twenty-two, and there is no grandchild alive who has reached twenty-two at the time the limitation is created, such limitation is bad.[14] And it is settled that the whole limitation is bad.[15] Since the limitation to all the grandchildren

The class is closed at the testator's death; it is composed of B, C, and D; the maximum number of shares is ascertained as three; the minimum number will be ascertained as soon as C and D reach twenty-two, or die, and they must do one or the other in their own lives. As soon as one of these children reaches twenty-two, the class would be closed. But B, C, and D may die, and another child, E, may be born, and E may not reach twenty-two until more than twenty-one years after A's death. A. 328, a testator provided that property should go to his grandchildren, when the youngest should reach forty. The court molded the gift so as to make it run to the testator's grandchildren when the youngest should reach twenty-one. But see infra, IX, A.

15. If either B, C, or D, in the case put in the preceding note, should reach twenty-two, the class would then be closed, and the maximum number of shares would then be ascertained, and consequently the minimum of a living person is bad,[16] a fortiori the limitation to such of the grandchildren of a living person as reach a certain age is bad.[17]

4. Limitation to Such of the Children of A as Reach a Certain Age, and to Such Children of Children Dying Under That Age as Reach the Age, the Children of Second Generation Taking Their Parents' Share. Such limitations are bad, even if the prescribed age does not exceed twenty-one years; for A might have a child born after the limitation is created, this child might die under the prescribed age, leaving a child, and then the number of the shares could not be ascertained until such grandchild should reach the age or die, and neither event might happen until more than twenty-one years after the death of the persons in being at the time the limitation was created. Therefore the whole limitation is bad.[18]

5. Conclusions With Respect to Permissible Limitations to Classes. It appears from the above that a testator may limit property to such of his grandchildren as reach twenty-one, but not any greater age; and that parties to a marriage settlement may limit property to such of the children of the marriage as reach twenty-one, but not any greater age.[19] A contingent legal remainder to a class may be good, although a corresponding equitable limitation would be bad.[20] For the purposes of the Rule, women are presumed to be capable of child-bearing throughout their lives.[21]

amount to which B, C, or D would be entitled. In other words, if B, C, or D should become entitled to anything, the minimum amount must be ascertained within their own lives, and so not beyond the limits of the Rule, as they were alive at the testator's death. But although the minimum amount, if any, would have to be so ascertained, the maximum would not, for another child, E, might be born to A before the class was closed, and E might not die or reach twenty-two until more than twenty-one years after the deaths of the persons in being at the testator's death. The courts were asked to hold that B, C, and D might be allowed to take these minimum amounts, to which, if to anything, they would become entitled within the limits of the Rule, although they could not take any further amounts; but this the courts refused to do, and held the whole limitation bad. Suppose that A has one child, B, at the time of the testator's death, and afterward C is born to him, and A dies leaving B and C. The maximum number of shares is now ascertained as two, but suppose that C should marry, beget a child, D, and die, before he is twenty-one. 20. Suppose land is devised to A, a person living at the testator's death, for life, remainder to such of the children of A as reach twenty-five. When A dies, those children, or their heirs, who have already reached twenty-five take; if there are no such children, the remainder is destroyed; children who reach twenty-five after A's death have no rights. The remainder must therefore either vest at A's death, or be destroyed, and is good. Similarly a legal remainder might be limited to such of the grandchildren of A as reach forty. 6. Limitations Framed in Language Not Commonly Used. Reference to some decisions on limitations to classes, framed in language not commonly used, is given in the note below.[22]

B. Independent Limitations. If separate limitations are made to each of the members of a class, no question as to the ascertainment of shares arises. The validity of each limitation is therefore determined independently of the other limitations; as where there is a gift of a definite sum of money to each of the members of a class;[23] and also where there is a gift of shares of property, provided the shares are defined by the person making the gift.[24] And thus also where there is a gift of shares of property, provided these shares must become defined within the limits of the Rule.[25]

23. Suppose a testator gives a thousand dollars to each of his grandchildren who reaches twenty-two. The gift to each grandchild would be construed separately; the gift to such grandchildren as were alive at the testator's death would be good, and the gift to such grandchildren as were born after the testator's death would be bad.

24. Suppose a testator directed that his property should be divided into three equal parts, and then proceeded to limit the parts. The limitation of each part would be considered separately. See cases cited infra, note 25.

25. Suppose there is a devise of property in trust for A, who is alive at the testator's death, for life; and on A's death, in trust to pay the income to the surviving children of A in equal shares, and, on the death of each such child, the principal of its share to be paid to its children. Here the shares will be defined at A 's death, which is within the limits of the Rule; after being so defined the validity of the gift of each share will be determined separately. Suppose A had a child, B, born before the testator's death, and another child, C, born after his death, and that both B and C survive him. The property is now divided into two shares. As to one share, there is a gift to B for life, remainder to B's children; this is good because the children of B must be begotten in his lifetime, and B was alive at the testator's death. As to the other share, there is a gift to C for life, and then to his children; this is good so far as the gift to C for life is concerned, because C must have been begotten in A's life. But it is bad so far as the gift to C's children is concerned, because, as C was not alive at the testator's death, he may beget children at a time beyond the limits of the rule. With regard to limitations to classes in wills or marriage settlements the following suggestions are submitted: (1) A devise of either realty or personalty in trust, with a limitation, either presently or by way of remainder, to all the grandchildren of the testator. This is not too remote, and will produce no inequality among the grandchildren. (2) A devise of either realty or personalty in trust, with a limitation, either presently or by way of remainder, to all the grandchildren of the testator, with a proviso that if any grandchild dies under twenty-one his share shall go over. This is not too remote. All grandchildren will be included, and so no inequality will be produced, and the limitation over is also good. (3) A devise of either party or personalty in trust, with a limitation, either presently or by way of remainder, to all the grandchildren of the testator who reach a certain age, not over twenty-one. This is not too remote, but it may produce inequality among the grandchildren, as the class will be closed as soon as one grandchild reaches the prescribed age, and after-born grandchildren will have no rights. (4) A devise of either realty or personalty in trust, with a limitation, either presently or by way of remainder, to all the grandchildren of the testator, alive at his death, who reach a certain age, over twenty-one. This is not too remote, but it may produce inequality among the grandchildren. (5) A devise of realty to A, the testator's child, for life, remainder to A's children who reach a certain age (it is immaterial whether over twenty-one or not) no trust being cre-

VI. LIMITATIONS TO A SERIES.

Property is sometimes limited to a series of persons, as where property is put in trust, the income to be paid to such person as is from time to time the tenant of certain land. There would seem to be no good reason why the validity of the limitation, so far as it concerns each person in the series, should not be considered separately.[26]

VII. POWERS.[27]

A. If It May Remain Uncertain For a Time Beyond the Limits of the Rule Against Perpetuities Either Whether a Power Will Become Operative or Whether It Will be Exercised, It Is Invalid — 1. IN GENERAL. The owner of property, instead of himself making a rigid disposition of the property, may prefer to give to another a power of disposition over it, to be exercised at a future time, as where a testator gives property to B for life, remainder as B shall by will appoint.[28] The title to the property in such case does not remain in abeyance until B exercises the power. A may have expressly disposed of the property in default of B's appointment, as where he has given property to B for life, remainder as B shall by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to B's children; the law then conceives of the property as limited to B for life, remainder to B's children, provided, however, as to the remainder, that if B shall exercise the power, then to the appointees of B. Or A may not have expressly disposed of the property in default of B's appointment, as where he has given property to B for life, remainder as B shall by will appoint, without more; there is then a reversion in A and his heirs, and the law

ated. This legal contingent remainder to the children is good, but only those children will be entitled who have reached the age at the time of A's death. (6) The same remarks apply to limitations in marriage settlements, to the children of the parties to the marriage, as apply to limitations in wills to the grandchildren of the testator. See Gray Perp. (2d ed.) §§ 389-395*a*.

26. Suppose chattels are bequeathed in trust for such person as shall from time to time be tenant of the Manor of Dale. A is tenant at the testator's death. Who A's first successor will be must be ascertained at or before A's death, and such time is within the limits of the Rule. Who the subsequent successors will be may not be ascertained within the limits of the Rule, and the limitation so far as it concerns them is bad. But there would seem to be no good reason why the limitation, so far as it concerns A and his first successor, should not be held good; the interests of A and his first successor are entirely separable from the interests of subsequent successors. In Liley v. Hey, 1 Hare 580, 583, 6 Jur. 756, 11 L. J. Ch. 415, 23 Eng. Ch. 580, 66 Eng. Reprint 1162, Wigram, V. C., held that "where the will declares that objects are to take in succession, there is no reason why I should hold the will void, as to those objects to whom an interest not extending beyond their own lives is given immediately at the testator's death." In Dillon v. Reilly, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 152, there was a gift to such clergyman as should be attached to a certain parish, and the court held that the gift was good as to the clergyman attached at the time of the testator's death, but not good as to successors. In Wainman v. Field, Kay 507, 69 Eng. Reprint 215, land was devised to A for life, B for life, remainder to B's eldest son in tail, remainders over, and chattels were bequeathed in trust for the persons entitled to the realty. It was held that A and B were entitled, but that B's eldest son was not entitled. In Bacon v. Proctor, Turn. & R. 31, 23 Rev. Rep. 177, 12 Eng. Ch. 31, 37 Eng. Reprint 1005, land was devised in trust for such person as should for the time being succeed to the testator's baronetcy. The testator's son, who succeeded to the baronetcy on his father's death, was held entitled for life. No decision was made as to subsequent interests. In Deerhurst v. St. Albans, 5 Madd. 232, 56 Eng. Reprint 883; Tollemache v. Coventry, 8 Bligh N. S. 547, 5 Eng. Reprint 1045, 2 Cl. & F. 611, 6 Eng. Reprint 1285, chattels were bequeathed in trust for A for life, and then "for such person as should from time to time be Lord Vere." A enjoyed the chattels, and died. B became Lord V., enjoyed the chattels, and died. C, son of a person born at the testator's death, became Lord V. The House of Lords held C not entitled, but did not pass on the question as to whether B had been lawfully entitled. See Goldsborough v. Martin, 41 Md. 488; Caldwell v. Willis, 57 Miss. 555; Siedler v. Syms, 56 N. J. Eq. 275, 38 Atl. 424; Moore v. Moore, 59 N. C. 132.

conceives of the property as limited to B for life, reversion to A and his heirs, provided, however, as to the reversion, that if B shall exercise the power, then to the appointees of B. The limitations in default of appointment stand until they are cut short by the interests given to appointees under the power. Such appointees take by force of a shifting use or an executory devise, of the nature of a shifting use.[29] A power may be so framed that it is not to become operative until a certain event has happened, as where property is given to A and his heirs, but, in case A or any of his children cease to bear the name of A, then as the X corporation shall appoint; in such case, until A or some child of A ceases to bear the name of A, the power does not become operative. Moreover, all interests under a power are dependent upon an exercise of the power by the donee. Until (1) the event, if any, has happened, on the happening of which the power becomes operative; and until (2) the donee has exercised the power, it is impossible for any interests under the power to vest. If, then, it may remain uncertain for more than twenty-one years, exclusive of periods of gestation, after lives in being at the creation of the power, either whether the power will become operative, or whether it will be exercised, it is altogether bad.[30] If the donee of the power is a living person, and the event on which the power will become operative might happen in the donee's life, the court will incline to hold that the power was to become operative only in case the event happens in the donee's life, and that therefore it is valid.[31] If the sole donee of a power is a person in being at the time of its creation, the power is valid, so far as the time within which it will be exercised is concerned.[32] If the donee of a power is not in being at the time of its creation, the power is invalid, unless the exercise of the power is expressly limited to a time within the limits of the Rule,[33] or unless such donee has power to appoint the property to himself in fee.[34] That the power in fact does become operative and is exercised within the limits of the Rule does not save it.[35] until B dies unmarried. Then it is cut short and the estate to C and his heirs is substituted. So, if property is limited to B for life, remainder as B shall by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to B's children, the exercise of the power by B cuts short the limitation to B's children, and the estate to the appointees of B is substituted.

29. See supra, III, D, 4. The validity of powers to sell property (see infra, VII, A, 2, 3, 4) is determined in the same manner as that of powers to appoint. The purchasers are appointees under the power.

2. Powers to Sell to Raise Money For Paying Debts or Legacies. Such powers are rarely, if ever, objectionable under the Rule against Perpetuities. The creditors or legatees have by reason of the power a present interest in the property, of the nature of a charge, and may compel the donee of the power to sell at once.[36]

3. Powers to Sell, Exchange, or Lease Settled Property. Powers to sell, exchange, or lease settled property[37] are subject to the Rule against Perpetuities.[38] Thus such a power is invalid if it may, according to its terms, be exercised at any time during the continuance of a life-estate limited to a person unborn at the creation of the power.[39] But if the property is so settled that some person or persons must become entitled to either the legal or equitable fee in possession, within lives in being at the creation of the power, the power will ordinarily be valid. When a legal fee comes into possession, the purposes of the settlement are usually spent,[40] and the power will usually be construed to cease;[41] or, if it is held to continue, as for purposes of division of the property, it will usually be held that it is to continue only for a reasonable time, and that the bounds of such reasonable time fall within twenty-one years.[42] When an equitable fee comes into possesproperty is devised to A and his heirs, but if A or any of his children cease to bear the name of A, then to B and his heirs. A might thereafter have a child, C, who might cease to bear the name of A, more than twenty-one years after the death of the persons in being at the testator's death. The executory devise to B is therefore bad, because dependent on a contingency which might happen at a time beyond the limits of the Rule. If A himself ceased to bear the name of A, this would not save C's interest. The law as to appointments under a power is the same as the law with regard to other interests created by shifting use or executory devise. See supra, IV, C.

36. See supra, III, A. An additional reason in support of the validity of such powers is that the donee must exercise the power within a reasonable time, and that ordinarily the bounds of a reasonable time would fall within twenty-one years after lives in being at the creation of the power. 37. For example, property may be devised to A, testator's widow, for life, remainder to B, testator's son, for life, remainder in fee to B's children, with a power in such person as may for the time being be charged with the execution of the testator's will, to sell the property and reinvest the proceeds in property settled in the same manner. Here the exercise of the power would cut short legal interests. Or property may be devised to trustees, in trust for A for life, B for life, B's children in fee, with a power in the trustees to sell the property and reinvest the proceeds in property held on the same trusts. Here the exercise of the power would cut short equitable interests.

It may be that the court will feel obliged so to construe a power as to hold it is not to cease when an ultimate legal fee comes into possession, or within a reasonable time thereafter. But in such case, if the power could be exercised by the donee only with the consent of the person in possession, it would be destructible, and therefore valid. For the person in possession could at any time convey sion, the power may be construed to cease, but even if not the cestui will be entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal fee; thus in any case where a power would be valid, because an ultimate legal fee must come into possession within a certain time, it is also valid if an ultimate equitable fee must come into possession within that time.[43]

4. Powers to Sell Mortgaged Property. If, in a mortgage, there is a power given to the mortgagee to sell upon default, and the default must occur, if at all, within the limits of the Rule, semble that the power is valid;[44] otherwise it is invalid.[45]

B. A Power Is Not Invalid Because Within Its Terms an Invalid Appointment Might Be Made. Powers are ordinarily framed in terms broad enough to permit an appointment which would be invalid under the Rule, but this does not render the power itself invalid. Only appointments actually made are considered.[46]

C. An Appointment Is Invalid Unless It Must Vest Within Limits of Rule, Reckoning From Date, Not of Exercise, But of Creation, of Power. An appointment under a power is invalid unless it must vest within twenty-one years, exclusive of periods of gestation, after lives in being at the time, not of the exercise, but of the creation, of the power. The owner of property, instead of himself making a rigid disposition of the property, may give to another a power of disposition over it, to be exercised at a future time. The appointment under this power completes and supplements such disposition of the property as the owner has made, and its validity must be determined as though it were a part of the owner's disposition of the property.[47] This, however, does not mean that the lan-

Where property is put in trust, and there is a present equitable fee simple in a certain person or persons, a power in the trustees to sell, exchange, or lease would seem to be valid, because the cestuis may compel the trustees to convey the legal fee to them, and hence the power to sell is destructible. So held in Hart v. Seymour, 147 Ill. 598, 35 N. E. 246; Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 36 Atl. 635.

44. Compare Sioux City Terminal R., etc., Co. v. Trust Co. of North America, 82 Fed. 124, 27 C. C. A. 73. Upon default the mortgagee would have a right to have the property sold by legal proceedings. His right will become a present right to have the property sold. The fact that by the terms of the mortgage deed he may himself sell gives him an additional remedy to enforce such present right. So long as this right must vest within the limits of the Rule the remedies given to enforce that right would seem to be good. See supra, III, A.

45. If the default under a mortgage might occur at a time beyond the limits of the Rule, the mortgagee would seem, on principle, not to have a right to exercise a power of sale given in the mortgage, or, whether such power is given or not, to have the property sold by legal proceedings. 47. Suppose A devises property to B for life, remainder among B's issue, as B shall by will appoint, and B appoints to his child, C, for life, remainder to C's children in fee. To test the validity of the appointment, it is necessary to go back to the date of the creation of the power, namely, A's death, and trace the limitations of the property from that date. The property is then found to be limited to B for life, to C for life, remainder to the children of C. If C was born at the testator's death, this appointment is good, but if not, the remainder to C's children is guage of the donee of the power is to be put literally into the mouth of the creator of the power. The meaning of the appointment is to be determined by what the words meant to the person who used them, namely, the donee; the creator of the power has preferred to give the power of disposition to the donee to be exercised at a future time in the light of the facts then existing; the appointment is, to be sure, to be taken back to the time of the creation of the power, but it is, when taken back, to be read in the light of the facts existing at the time of the appointment.[48] When the donee of the power has the right to appoint the property to himself in fee, without the consent of any third party,[49] he is treated as owner of the fee, and any appointments which he makes are construed as though he had first appointed the property to himself in fee, and then resettled it. In other words in such case the validity of the appointment is determined reckoning from the date of the exercise of the power.[50] When the donee of the power has a life-interest in the property, and a general right of appointment, but by will only, it has also been held that the validity of the appointment should be determined reckoning from the date of the exercise of the power.[51] equity, regarded as holding in trust for A, subject to a charge for the payment of the debts or legacies. Such interests are therefore valid.[54]

C. Trusts to Sell. The law with regard to trusts to sell is, so far as the Rule against Perpetuities is concerned, the same as the law with regard to powers to sell.[55]

D. Executory Trusts. If it may remain uncertain beyond the limits of the Rule whether the execution of an executory trust will take place, the trust is altogether bad. But if it must be executed, if at all, within the limits of the Rule, and if any valid trust can be made in accordance with its terms, it is good to the extent of such valid trust.[56]

E. Charitable Trusts.[57] Where property is given on a charitable trust, with a proviso that on the happening of a certain event it shall go over to a second charitable trust, the gift over to the second charitable trust is good, even though it may remain uncertain beyond the limits of the Rule against Perpetuities whether the event will happen.[58] Where property is given to a corporation on a charitable trust, and no such corporation is in existence at the date of the gift, such corporation will nevertheless, in most jurisdictions, be allowed to take, if it is incorporated within a reasonable time after the date of the gift. 59. The court construes the gift as an immediate gift to charity. The administration of the gift by the named corporation is only the means indicated by the testator for carrying out this gift. When, but not until when, the means indicated by the testator have proven impracticable, the court will find another means. Hence if the corporation named by the testator is incorporated within a reasonable time, it may take.

allowed in some states where the doctrine of cy pres is rejected.[60] There are a few jurisdictions in which a gift to a corporation not in existence is held to be void.[61] Except as above stated, the Rule against Perpetuities applies to charitable trusts. Thus if property is given to an individual, with a gift over to a charity on a contingency which may not happen within the limits of the rule, the gift over is bad.[62] And if property is given to a charity, with a gift over to an individual on a like contingency, the gift over is bad.[63] Property may be given on a determinable charitable trust; when the charitable trust so created terminates, there is a resulting trust to the heirs or next of kin of the person creating the trust. Such a resulting trust is a vested interest and therefore unobjectionable under the Rule against Perpetuities.[64]

F. Trusts For Accumulation. If A, owner of property, gives the property to B to accumulate the income for a stated period, and then to transfer the principal and accumulated income to C, C may, in most jurisdictions, stop the accumulation, and have the property transferred to him at once. The direction to accumulate is an illegal restraint upon C's power of alienation. The law does not allow A to give C the fee, legal or equitable, of property, and then forbid him to alienate it; no more does it allow A to give C the equitable fee in property, and then compel him to allow the property to accumulate. So soon as the rights in property held for accumulation become vested, the direction to accumulate becomes destructible.[65] This is true even of property held on a charitable trust.[66] If therefore the rights in property held for accumulation must become vested within the limits of the Rule against Perpetuities, the direction for accumulation is good, irrespective of the length of time during which the accumulation is directed to go on.[67] Thus if property is directed to be accumulated for the benefit of creditors or legatees, the direction to accumulate is harmless, for the creditors or legatees may at any time stop the accumulation.[68] And if there is an immediate gift to charity, no direction for accumulation will defeat the gift.[69] If, however, the rights in such property may not become vested within the limits of the Rule, the gift of the property is bad, and the direction to accumulate falls also.[70] Whether the gift of the property directed to be held for accumulation is intended to be conditioned on the accumulation actually taking place is a question of construction. The courts incline to hold that it is not so conditioned.[71]

petuities existed. The intention of the owner having been thus determined, the Rule is to be applied.[73] If an instrument, construed without reference to the existence of the Rule, is really ambiguous, the courts will incline to such construction as makes the provisions consistent with the Rule.[74] There are, moreover, cases in which the courts would seem, in the first instance, to have been influenced in their construction of an instrument by their desire to make the provisions of the instrument consistent with the Rule.[75]

B. Cy Pres. Where land is devised to an unborn person for life, remainder to his children in tail, or to his sons in tail male, the unborn person is held to take, in the first case, an estate tail, and, in the second case, an estate tail male.[76] This construction is adopted under the doctrine of cy pres, since remainders to the issue of an unborn person are too remote; the adoption of such construction makes an exception to the rule that the construction of an instrument is not to be affected by the existence of the Rule against Perpetuities.[77]

C. Modifying Clauses. Where there is in an instrument a valid limitation to A, and then in a later part of the instrument there is a clause which modifies the limitation already made, and, by modifying it, makes it in part too remote, the modifying clause will be rejected altogether.[78] The adoption of this construction

77. Suppose land was devised to an unborn person for life, remainder to his children in fee. The unborn person would not be held to take a fee, under the doctrine of cy pres. That doctrine is never applied where the enlarged estate given to the unborn person would allow persons to take the property, who were not within the scope of the gifts marked out by the testator. If a gift to A for life, remainder to A's children in tail, is changed into a gift to A in tail, the persons to be entitled are not changed; but if a gift to A for life, remainder to A's children in fee, is changed into a gift to A in fee, then, if A died childless, his collateral heirs would take and they were not within the scope of the gifts marked out by the testator. 78. Suppose there is a limitation to each of the testator's grandchildren, and then a later clause directing that the share of each grandchild shall be settled on it for life, remainder to its children. The remainder to the great grandchildren is too remote, and makes a second exception to the rule that the construction of an instrument is not to be affected by the existence of the Rule against Perpetuities. Where independent gifts[79] are made to several persons by one description, any modifying clause will be rejected only as to those gifts where the modification would produce an invalid limitation.[80]

D. Separable Limitations. Limitations may be made on separate contingencies, as where property is devised in trust for A for life, and then for such of A's children as reach twenty-two, but if A dies without leaving children surviving, or if none of the surviving children reach twenty-two, then to B. Here the testator has himself stated separately the two contingencies, on the happening of either of which B is to become entitled. The first contingency must be determined within the limits of the Rule, and if A does die without children surviving B takes. This limitation to B is not destroyed, because within the words of the will there is another limitation to B which is too remote.[81] But if the person making the limitations has not himself made the limitations dependent on separate contingencies, the courts will not take his language and evolve from it separate contingencies.[82] To this rule two exceptions are established in England.[83]

therefore the whole modifying clause will be rejected, and the grandchildren will take absolute interests. Land was devised to A for life, remainder to her sons attaining twenty-three; but, in case A died without leaving a son who should attain twenty-three, to B. A died without ever having had any children. Here the court did take the language of the will and separated it into two contingencies; one, that A should die without children, and the other that A should have no son reaching twenty-three. If A died without children, the interest of B would take effect as a remainder; if no son of A reached twenty-three, it would take effect as an executory devise. The court held that the contingencies could be separated in such a case. Later cases in England have refused to extend the doctrine of Evers v. Challis, supra. See Hancock v. Watson, [1902] A. X. CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The law governing the creation of future interests is not the same in all jurisdictions.[84] The validity of limitations in land is determined by the law of the jurisdiction in which the land lies.[85] This applies to limitations in terms for years.[86] The validity of limitations in personalty created by will may be determined solely by the law of the testator's domicile;[87] but there is a considerable body of authority in which, on the determination of the validity of such limitations, the law of the legatee's domicile was allowed to control.[88] The authorities respecting the validity of limitations in personalty created by conveyance inter vivos are scanty.[89] Where the testator has directed an immediate, absolute conversion of property, the validity of the limitations created will be determined as though such conversion had taken place at testator's death.[90]

2. SUSPENSION OF THE ABSOLUTE POWER OF ALIENATION OF REALTY — a. In General. The absolute power of alienation is suspended when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute fee in possession can be conveyed.[92] An absolute fee is a fee not defeasible or conditional.[93] The statute requires, not that the absolute fee with the right of possession shall vest within the statutory limit, but that there shall be no interest which may remain inalienable beyond the statutory limit.[94] At common law it is contingent interests which are obnoxious as perpetuities;[95] under the New York statutes it is inalienable interests.[96]

b. Interests Causing Suspension — (i) Limitations Under Which Persons Not in Being May Become Entitled. Limitations in favor of persons not in being obviously suspend the absolute power of alienation. Any limitation therefore under which a person may become entitled who must not necessarily come into being within the statutory limit, if at all, is invalid. Thus of a limitation to such of the issue of A as may be living at the termination of three or more lives or minorities, or at the termination of a period not measured by lives.[97] Similarly of a limitation to a corporation which must not necessarily be formed within the statutory limit, if at all.[98]

92. N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, § 32, provide as follows: "The absolute power of alienation is suspended, when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute fee in possession can be conveyed. Every future estate shall be void in its creation, which shall suspend the absolute power of alienation, by any limitation or condition whatever, for a longer period than during the continuance of not more than two lives in being at the creation of the estate; except that a contingent remainder in fee may be created on a prior remainder in fee, to take effect in the event that the persons to whom the first remainder is limited, die under the age of twenty-one years, or on any other contingency by which the estate of such persons may be determined before they attain full age. For the purposes of this section a minority is deemed a part of a life and not an absolute term equal to the possible duration of such minority."

93. N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, § 21. A limitation to A and his heirs, without qualification, gives A an absolute fee. A limitation to A and his heirs, but if A dies unmarried, then to B and his heirs, gives A a defeasible fee. See supra, III, D.

94. There may be many interests in the land; the statute is concerned only with the alienability of whatever interests there are. If there are persons in being who by their united action can convey an absolute fee in possession, the absolute power of alienation is not suspended at all. See Thieler v. Rayner, 115 N. Y. But suppose the limitation is to A for life, remainder to her children, if any, or, if she has no children then to the children of B and C. Until the termination of the lives of A, B, and C, persons who may become entitled may come into being, and the limitation is therefore invalid. Du Bois v. Ray, 35 N. Y. 162. To the same effect see Brown v. Evans, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 594. (II) Trusts, the Beneficial Interest in Which Is Inalienable. Express trusts of realty may be created for the following purposes: (1) To sell land for the benefit of creditors; (2) to sell, mortgage, or lease lands for the benefit of legatees, or for the purpose of satisfying any charge thereon; (3) to receive the rents and profits of land and apply them to the use of any person during the life of such person, or any shorter term; (4) to receive the rents and profits of land, and to accumulate the same.[99] The beneficial interest in a trust of the third class is made inalienable by statute,[1] and it has long been settled that such a trust suspends the absolute power of alienation. Any such trust therefore which must not necessarily terminate within the statutory limit is invalid.[2] The courts are liberal in determining what trusts may be created under the provisions for trusts of the third class. It is now held that these provisions authorize not only trusts to receive the rents and profits and pay them to a beneficiary,[3] but also trusts to receive the rents and profits and therefrom to pay an annuity to a beneficiary.[4]

(III) Imperative Powers, the Beneficial Interest in Which Is Inalienable. Where persons other than the grantee of the power[5] have any interest in its execution, the power is held in trust;[6] and every trust power, unless its execution is expressly made to depend on the will of the grantee, is imperative, and imposes a duty upon the grantee the performance of which may be compelled for the benefit of the persons interested.[7] If an imperative power is to be exercised for the benefit of a person not in being, or semble for the benefit of a trustee under a trust of the third class, the power suspends the absolute power of alienation. The power is therefore invalid, if all persons who may become entitled under the exercise of the power must not necessarily come into being within 119 N. Y. 660, 24 N. E. 852]. Semble that these authorities would still control the validity of a limitation to corporations not in existence in cases where the property is not given for charitable purposes.

1. N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, § 83. The inalienability results, not from the fact that the law gives effect to restraints on the alienation of the beneficial interest imposed by the creator of the trust, but from the command of the statute. The creator of the trust cannot make the interest of the beneficiary alienable. Coster v. Lorillard, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 265. E. 431, counsel seem not to have contended that the power in question was valid, and the court therefore did not carefully consider whether the beneficial interest in the power was alienable.

Similarly of a power to be exercised for the benefit of a corporation which must not necessarily be formed within the statutory limits, if at all. Booth v. Christ Baptist Church, 126 N. Y. 215, 28 N. E. 238 [distinguishing Blanchard v. Blanchard, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 287 (affirmed in 70 N. Y. 615)]. The authority of this decision is now restricted to cases where the property is not given for charitable purposes. See supra, note 98.

Under N. Y. Laws (1893), c. 701, as interpreted by Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568 (see supra, note 98), if property is given for charitable purposes to a corporation not yet formed, the courts will consider it as an immediate gift to charity, to be administered in any proper manner. If the corporation intended by the testator can be formed in a reasonable time, it will doubtless be allowed to administer the gift. But it is to be noted that in Garvey v. McDevitt, 72 N. Y. 556, the testator did not make an immediate gift to charity. The courts have not, since the enactment of Laws (1893), c. 701, been called upon to deal with a similar case. See Leonard v. Burr, 18 N. Y. 96. Semble that the principle of Garvey v. McDevitt, 72 N. Y. 556, would control where the property is given on a trust of the third class. See supra, XI, A, 2, b, (II). See also the remarks of Earl, J., in that case, pp. 563, 564.

See Cochrane v. Schell, 140 N. Y. 516, 35 N. E. 971; and supra, XI, A, 2, b, (II). In other words an alienable contingent interest does not suspend the absolute power of alienation.[20] The beneficial interest in trusts is alien-

The court held that there was no illegal suspension; that on the termination of the trust the annuities became a charge on the property, and the present value of the annuities was to be paid to the annuitants before the property was distributed. This decision was followed in People's Trust Co. v. Flynn, 188 N. Y. 385, 80 N. E. 1098. Compare Matter of Charlier, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 71, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 818.

19. "Future estates" is a statutory term which covers interests known to the common law as remainders, springing uses, shifting uses, and executory devises. N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, §§ 26, 27. See supra, III.

20. By the express terms of the statute (N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, § 32) the absolute power of alienation is suspended when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute fee in possession can be conveyed. It may be suspended because the persons entitled to some interest in the property are not yet in being (see supra, XI, A, 2, b, (I)), or because some interest is, by the provisions of the statute, made inalienable (see supra, XI, A, 2, b, (II)). But it is never suspended unless there is an interest in the land which for some reason is inalienable. In Robert v. Corning, 89 N. Y. 225, 235, Andrews, C. J., commenting on the statutory declaration as to when the absolute power of alienation is suspended, said: "The rule declared in this section, constitutes, under our statute, the sole test of an unlawful perpetuity." See also Williams v. Montgomery, 148 N. Y. 519, 43 N. E. 57; Sawyer v. Cubby, 146 N. Y. 192, 40 N. E. 869. No court has ever, on this cardinal point, consciously and expressly decided to the contrary, but there are decisions and remarks even as to realty (and as to personalty see infra, XI, A, 2, b, (II), note 30) which are not in harmony with this statement of Andrews, C. J. Suppose realty is devised to A for life, remainder to such of A's children as reach twenty-five, but, if none reach twenty-five, then to B. Upon A's death, all the persons who may become entitled are in being. Who will become entitled is, however, not yet clear, and will not become clear until all of A's children reach twenty-five, or die. If, then, all contingencies respecting the title must be determined, or, in other words, if all interests must vest within the statutory limit, some at least of these provisions are invalid; for even if A had not more than two children when the testator died, other children might be born to him. But the disability of infancy does not suspend the absolute power of alienation (see infra, XI, A, 2, c, (II)). Upon A's death therefore there are persons in being, namely, all the children of A and B, who by their united action can convey an absolute fee. If, then, it is enough that all interests become alienable within the statutory limit, there is no illegal suspension. Such a devise, by the distinct weight of authority, involves no illegal suspension. See the discussion of this question in Nellis v. Nellis, 99 N. Y. 505, 3 N. E. 59; Beardsley v. Hotchkiss, 96 N. Y. 201; Mott v. Ackerman, 92 N. Y. 539; Everitt v. Everitt, 29 N. Y. 39; Miller v. Emans, 19 N. Y. 384; Morton v. Morton, 8 Barb. (N. See also Sawyer v. Cubby, 146 N. Y. 192, 40 N. E. 869; Hennessy v. Patterson, 85 N. Y. 91; Tucker v. Bishop, 16 N. Y. 402; Eells v. Lynch, 8 Bosw. (N. Is there any limit to the doctrine that the absolute power of alienation is not suspended, provided there are persons in being who by their united able, except in trusts of the third class.[21] Trusts, the beneficial interest in which is alienable, do not cause suspension.[22] Thus also of imperative powers, the beneficial interest in which is alienable.[23] It is settled that an imperative power may be given to A, under which he is entitled to possess and manage realty, to receive the rents and profits, and apply them for the benefit of, or pay them to, one or more persons, and that such power does not necessarily suspend the absolute power of alienation.[24]

(II) Infancy. The disability of an infant to convey his real property does not cause suspension;[25] and an infant is considered to be in being as soon as it is action can convey an absolute fee? Suppose the testator devised Greenacre to A for life, then to A's widow for life, provided A's widow was in being at the death of the testator, then to B upon a trust of the third class to last for the lives of C and D, who were in being at the death of the testator, then to E in fee. The legal life-estate to A does not suspend the power of alienation (see supra, note 11). A legal life-estate to M, provided M proved to be A's widow, would not suspend it (see the preceding paragraphs of this note). If all living females in being at the testator's death joined in the conveyance, a good title could be made to the life-estate limited to A's widow. Consequently, so soon as C and D die, there will be persons in being who can convey an absolute fee, namely, A, all living females in being at the death of the testator, and C. While there are cases in which the courts have proceeded or spoken as though vesting, and not alienability, was necessary to prevent suspension (see the preceding paragraphs of this note), no case has yet arisen in which the court has recognized that alienability is the statutory requirement, and yet has imposed a limit on the doctrine that the absolute power of alienation is not suspended, within the meaning of the statute, provided there are persons in being who by their united action can convey it. But see Dana v. Murray, 122 N. Y. 604, 26 N. E. 21; and supra, II, C, note 19.

1 N. Y. Rev. St. 730, § 63, provided: "No person beneficially interested in a trust for the receipt of the rents and profits of land can assign or in any manner dispose of such interest; but the rights and interests of every person for whose benefit a trust for the payment of a sum in gross is created are assignable." On the construction of this provision see Radley v. Kuhn, 97 N. Y. 26.

The statute now provides: "The right of a beneficiary of an express trust to receive rents and profits of real property and apply them to the use of any person, can not be transferred by assignment or otherwise; but the right and interest of the beneficiary of any other trust [in real property] may be transferred." Similar question as to personalty is discussed infra, note 39.

25. In Beardsley v. Hotchkiss, 96 N. begotten.[26] So far therefore as the statute against suspension of the absolu power of alienation is concerned, any interest limited to a person is regarded as alienable so soon as that person is begotten.

3. Suspension of the Absolute Ownership of Personalty — a. In General. The statute defines the limit within which the absolute ownership of personalty may be suspended, but it provides no test to determine when the absolute ownership is suspended.[27]

b. Interests Causing Suspension — (i) Limitations Under Which Persons Not in Being May Become Entitled. Limitations in favor of persons not in being suspend the absolute ownership. Any limitation therefore under which a person may become entitled who must not necessarily come into being within the statutory limit, if at all, is invalid. Thus of a limitation to such of the issue of A as may be living at the termination of three or more lives or minorities, or at the termination of a period not measured by lives.[28] Similarly of a limitation to a corporation which must not necessarily be formed within the statutory limit, if at all.[29]

(ii) Limitations to Such of a Class as Shall Live to a Prescribed Age or Date. There is authority that a limitation to such of a class as shall live to a prescribed age or date is invalid, if thereunder it may remain uncertain, for a time beyond the statutory limit, what members of the class will become entitled to the personalty.[30]

St. Rep. 400, property given to A for life, then to such children of A as are alive when the youngest reaches twenty-one, or, if none reach twenty-one, then to B and C. Note that all the persons who might become entitled under this gift must come into being, if at all, before A's death. To the same effect are Schlereth v. Schlereth, 173 N. Y. 444, 63 N. E. 130, 93 Am. St. Rep. 616, and Matter of Howland, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 207, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 1025. See also Henderson v. Henderson, 113 N. Y. 1, 20 N. E. 814; Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Suppose personalty is limited to such of the three children of the testator as reach twenty-five, all being under that age, and, if none reach that age, then to X. The three children and X may forthwith convey a perfect title. If, on the question whether or not the absolute ownership is suspended, alienability is the test, the absolute ownership is not suspended at all in the case supposed. Suppose again personalty is limited to such of the children of A, a living person, as reach twenty-five, and, if none reach that age, then to X. All the persons who may become entitled must come into being, if at all, before A's death, and, if alienability is the test, the absolute ownership is suspended for only one life. But in both the cases supposed all the interests in the property are not vested and, even in the first case, they must not necessarily all vest within two lives. For two of the children may die, and it will still remain uncertain who will become entitled to the property.

(III) Trusts, the Beneficial Interest in Which Is Inalienable. A trust to receive the income of personalty, and apply it to the use of, or pay it to, any person, during the life of that person, or for any shorter term, suspends the absolute ownership of the personalty, and is therefore invalid if it may continue beyond the statutory limit.[31] Thus also of a trust to receive the income of personalty and therefrom to pay an annuity to a beneficiary.[32]

(IV) Imperative Powers, the Beneficial Interest in Which Is Inalienable. An imperative power, the beneficial interest in which is inalienable, suspends the absolute ownership.[33]

c. Interests and Disabilities Not Causing Suspension — (I) Alienable Interests. Alienable interests do not suspend the absolute ownership.[34] Thus of present legal estates for life or years,[35] and annuities charged upon a fund, but

Therefore, if vesting is the test, the absolute ownership is unduly suspended. A fortiori it is unduly suspended in the second case. The authorities stated above assume that vesting is the test on questions of the suspension of the absolute ownership. But it is settled by the distinct weight of authority that an alienable contingent interest does not suspend the absolute power of alienation of realty (see supra, XI, A, 2, c, (I), note 20), and the courts have frequently said that suspension of the absolute power of alienation of realty and suspension of the absolute ownership of personalty are produced by the same causes. Cochrane v. Schell, 140 N. Y. 516, 35 N. E. 971; Mills v. Husson, 140 N. Y. 99, 35 N. E. 422; Everitt v. Everitt, 29 N. Y. 39; Emmons v. Cairns, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 243; Kane v. Gott, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 641, 35 Am. Dec. 641; Richards v. Moore, 5 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 278; Ladd v. Mills, 20 Fed. 792. Moreover, in Sawyer v. Cubby, 146 N. Y. 192, 40 N. E. 869, the court has expressly decided that vesting is not the test, and that an alienable contingent interest does not cause suspension. Personalty was given to A if a certain payment was made within one year from the testator's death, and, if not, to B. It might therefore remain uncertain, for a period not measured by lives, who would be entitled to the property, but the court held, overruling the court below (73 Hun (N. Y.) 298, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 426) that the gift was good. "The statutory test of what constitutes a suspension of the power of alienation as to real estate, and of absolute ownership as to personal property, is that it occurs only when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute estate in possession can be conveyed." Murphy v. Whitney, 140 N. Y. 541, 35 N. E. 930, 24 L. R. A. 123, is in accord. The authorities stated above therefore cannot be taken as establishing the broad rule that any contingent interest suspends the absolute ownership, but semble they will be followed, if at all, as authorities for the narrower rule stated in the text. On analogy to the statute as to realty, it would seem that the requirement is, not that absolute ownership shall be vested within the statutory limit, but that within such limit there shall be persons capable of granting an absolute ownership. It is to be noted that in Schlereth v. Schlereth, supra; Matter of Howland, supra; Greenland v. Waddell, supra, trusts had been created which, following Fargo v. Squiers, 154 N. Y. 250, 48 N. E. 509, infra, note 39, made the provisions of the will invalid, and that all these cases could, upon this ground, have been decided as they were. On the other hand, it is to be recognized that this was not the ground on which the court in fact proceeded; and that, in the present state of the authorities, no question in the whole law of perpetuities in New York calls for more careful consideration than the question raised by the reasoning of the court in Greenland v. Waddell, supra.

31. See supra, XI, A, 2, b, (II), and note 1. There is no statute making the beneficial interest in such a trust of personalty inalienable, and it was once doubted if the provisions in the statute as to realty would be applied by analogy. 35. The use of personalty may be given to A for years or life, and the personalty, subject to such use, to B, and such provisions do not suspend at all the absolute ownership. Wilber v. Wilber, 165 N. Y. 451, 59 N. E. 264; In re Conger, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 493, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 933; Matter of Ryder, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 247, 58 N. Y. not supported by a trust,[36] and alienable future legal interests, even if contingent.[37] Thus also of trusts and imperative powers the beneficial interest in which is alienable.[38] It is settled that an imperative power may be given to A, under which he is entitled to possess and manage personalty, to receive the income, and to apply it for the benefit of, or pay it to, one or more persons, and that such power does not necessarily suspend the absolute ownership of the personalty.[39]

36. See cases cited supra, note 14. Compare supra, note 4.

37. Sawyer v. Cubby, 146 N. Y. 192, 40 N. E. 869. Personalty was given to A, if a certain payment was made within one year from the testator's death, and, if not, to B. The court held that alienable contingent interests do not suspend the absolute ownership. Note the manner in which Finch, J., distinguishes the earlier decision of Booth v. Christ Baptist Church, 126 N. Y. 215, 241, 28 N. E. 238. See also cases cited supra, note 20. Compare supra, XI, A, 2, c, (I), and note 30.

38. The purposes of trusts in personalty are unlimited. Cochrane v. Schell, 140 N. Y. 516, 35 N. E. 971. Compare supra, XI, A, 2, b, (II). In support of the text see supra, notes 22, 23.

39. Suppose personalty is given to A, in trust, to possess and manage it, receive the income and pay it to B for life. There is no doubt but that this trust suspends the absolute ownership. See supra, XI, A, 2, b, (II). Can the same practical results be produced without suspending the absolute ownership, merely by using the machinery of an imperative power? It is plain that a very liberal application of the doctrine of the text would practically nullify the statutory command, which has, on analogy, been applied to personalty, that the beneficial interests in trusts of the third class shall be inalienable. Within what limits, then, do the courts confine this doctrine? Suppose a testator gives property to his executors to pay the income to A for life, and on A's death to pay the principal to and among the lawful issue of such child equally, as and when such issue respectively attain the age of twenty-one years. The courts hold that there is a trust during A's life, but that on A's death, the trust ceases, that the executors have a mere imperative power, that this power does not suspend the absolute ownership, and the whole provision is valid. Whatever the reasons for such decisions, so much is now well established. Tiers v. Tiers, 98 N. Y. 568; Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469 [overruling Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 590, in which the court said that A could not be the absolute owner of property if the right of possession was in B]; Smith v. Edwards, 88 N. Y. 92; Tucker v. Bishop, 16 N. Y. 402; Quade v. Bertsch, 65 N. Y. App. Div. 600, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 916 [affirmed in 173 N. Y. 615, 66 N. E. 1115]; Matteson v. Armstrong, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 245; Dupre v. Thompson, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 537; Burrill v. Sheil, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 457; Bascom v. Weed, 53 Misc. (N. Y.) 496, 105 N. Y. Suppl. 459. In Franklin v. Minertzhagen, 39 N. Y. App. Div. 555, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 401, the court, in dealing with a similar question as to realty, noted that an infant cannot control his own property, and that there was no objection, on the ground of public policy, to having his property managed by a person designated by the donor instead of the infant's guardian. Semble that even if the testator had expressly provided that the trust was to continue until each child reached his majority, the court would declare the trust invalid, but allow the testator's intent to be effectuated by holding that the person whom the testator named as trustee should be considered as the donee of a power. Robert v. Corning, 89 N. Y. 225; Quade v. Bertsch, supra. But there are several decisions which cannot be explained by the reasoning of the court in Franklin v. Minertzhagen, supra. Thus in Everitt v. Everitt, 29 N. Y. 39 (by four of eight judges), where the power was to be exercised for the benefit of three children, and was to continue until all the children had reached majority; in Matter of Charlier, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 71, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 818, where it was to continue until the child reached twenty-five; in Vanderpoel v. Loew, 112 N. Y. 167, 19 N. E. 481, where it was to continue until the child reached thirty; and finally in Steinway v. Steinway, 163 N. Y. 183, 57 N. E. 312, and Matter of Dippel, 71 N. Y. App. Div. 598, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 201, where it was to continue for a term of years. See also Oxley v. Lane, 35 N. Y. 340; Matter of Roberts, 112 N. Y. App. Div. 732, 98 N. Y. Suppl. 809; Matter of Farmer, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 639, 6 Dem. Surr. 433. The court called a halt in Fargo v. Squiers, 154 N. Y. 250, 48 N. E. 509. Property was, under an appointment, given to trustees, the income to be paid to A, and the principal to be paid to him, one half at twenty-five, and the remainder at thirty. A was not in being when the creator of the power died. The court refused to treat the trust as a power, noting that such power would continue beyond a minority. This case seems not to have been cited by counsel in Steinway v. Steinway, supra. See also McGuire v. McGuire, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 63, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 497. In considering whether it is proper to regard an authority given to A to collect income and pay it over to B, as a mere power in trust, the courts have carefully considered whether the title was "vested" in B or not. Everitt v. Everitt, 29 N. Y. 39. In other words, if the courts can see that it is not against the intent of the testator to regard the title as being "vested" in B, they are influenced to declare that there is no title, but only a power, in A. The courts have, in determining whether the title is "vested," applied

(II) Infancy. The disability of infancy does not suspend the absolute ownership.[40]

4. Powers of Sale or Revocation Obviating Suspension. If interests in realty or personalty are created which, in themselves considered, suspend the absolute power of alienation or the absolute ownership, but a power is also created under which an absolute title to the realty or personalty may at any time be given, such power will or will not obviate suspension, according to the disposition which is to be made of the proceeds of the sale. If the proceeds are to be limited or held in the same manner as the property sold, the power does not obviate suspension.[41] But if the proceeds are to be disposed of in a manner not causing suspension, then such power does obviate suspension.[42] The power of a judge, in the exercise of his judicial discretion, to authorize a sale, does not obviate suspenrules framed by the English courts to determine whether a legacy was transmissible to the legatee's personal representative. Quade v. Bertsch, 65 N. Y. App. Div. 600, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 916 [affirmed in 173 N. Y. 615, 66 N. E. 1115]; Vail v. Vail, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 226. For example, a testator leaves A ten thousand dollars to be paid to him when he is twenty-five. A dies after the testator, but before he is twenty-five. Is the legacy payable to the personal representative of A? If it is, the legacy is said to be "vested," but this is not the primary signification of the word. See supra, III, B, 1. Under these rules, B's interest will usually be held to be "vested," if he is entitled to all the income from the principal in the interval before payment of the principal. Quade v. Bertsch, supra. And so where B is entitled to all the income which the principal can be expected, by legal methods, to earn (Warner v. Durant, 76 N. Y. 133); where he is entitled to all which the testator has seen fit to regard as the net income (Steinway v. Steinway, 163 N. Y. 183, 57 N. E. 312); or where the amounts spent for the maintenance of certain children to whom a fund was given were to be charged against the income of the fund generally, and not against the income of each child's share (Everitt v. Everitt, 29 N. Y. 39). See also Tabernacle Baptist Church v. Fifth Ave. Baptist Church, 172 N. Y. 598, 64 N. E. 1126; Gilman v. Reddington, 24 N. Y. 9. But if there is no gift to B except by force of a direction to pay at a future time, B's right will usually be held not to be "vested." Shipman v. Rollins, 98 N. Y. 311. All special rules to aid in determining whether or not a gift is "vested" are subordinate to the primary canon of construction that the construction must follow the intent to be collected from the whole will. Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405, 21 N. E. 388, 10 Am. St. Rep. 464. For further authorities in which a question of "vesting" was before the court, not involving any question as to suspension of absolute ownership, see Roosa v. Harrington, 171 N. Y. 341, 64 N. E. 1; Rudd v. Cornell, 171 N. Y. 114, 63 N. E. 823; Dougherty v. Thompson, 167 N. Y. 472, 60 N. E. 760; In re Crane, 164 N. Y. 71, 58 N. E. 47; In re Brown, 154 N. Y. 313, 48 N. Y. 73; Phelps v. Phelps, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 121; Drake v. Pell, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 251. See Matter of Hart, 61 N. Y. App. Div. 587, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 933 [affirmed in 168 N. Y. 640, 61 N. E. 1130], on a question of construction of the acts required by testatrix to be done before a gift of personalty vested. These rules as to "vesting" were relied upon in Matter of Dippel, 71 N. Y. App. Div. 598, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 201, and in Steinway v. Steinway, 163 N. Y. 183, 57 N. E. 312, but in both cases the gifts to B were clearly not transmissible to his personal representative. The New York statutes have declared that suspension is caused by inalienable interests and the introduction of questions as to vesting into the subject of suspension is a source of confusion. It has, however, doubtless become a part of the law with reference at least to this question of determining whether an authority to manage can be construed to be a mere power in trust; but it is to be recognized that the courts here use the word in a special sense, and follow the rules laid down to determine whether a gift is transmissible to the personal representative of the donee.

sion.[43] If a trust is created by deed in favor of the settlor for life, and then over, and the settlor has a power of revocation, there is no suspension during the settlor's life.[44]

5. The Period During Which Suspension Is Allowed. The absolute power of alienation of realty may be suspended during the lives of two persons in being at the creation of the interests, and, in one case, for the further period of a minority.[45] The absolute ownership of personalty can in no case be suspended except during the lives of two persons in being.[46] The suspension must necessarily cease within the statutory limits; it is not enough that it does in fact so cease.[47] Any two lives may be selected as the measure of the suspension; it is not necessary that they should be the lives of persons having interests in the property.[48] If therefore a controlling provision is employed, limiting the suspension in any event to the lives of two persons in being, any interests whatsoever may be created without violating the statute against suspension.[49] The lives selected may be those of persons answering a certain description, as the youngest

See supra, IV, G. In Smith v. Edwards, 88 N. Y. 92, the testator gave one thousand dollars each to all grandchildren born within twenty years after his death, and the gift was held to be valid. A gift to all the children of A, testator's eldest child, born within twenty years after testator's death, would be valid, for all persons entitled must come into being within the life of A; and a gift to all the testator's grandchildren is equivalent to so many separate gifts to the children of each child. In Schermerhorn v. Cotting, 131 N. Y. 48, 29 N. E. 980, a trust, the beneficial interest in which was inalienable, was held to be valid, although the two lives which governed the duration of the trust were not the same in every contingency. Bird v. Pickford, 141 N. Y. 18, 35 N. E. 938, is in accord. Note that the statutes against suspension are not the only limitation upon the creation of future estates. See infra, XI, A, 9.

two of testator's grandchildren living at his death.[50] And it is lawful to provide for a suspension to continue during one life, and then to continue during the life of a person who answers a certain description at the close of the first life, provided such second person must have been in being at the creation of the interests.[51] If, however, such second person must not necessarily have been in being at the creation of the interests, the suspension during such second life would be illegal. Thus of a suspension to continue during the life of A, and then through the life of any widow he may leave.[52] The statute does not permit a suspension which may continue for a term not measured by lives, no matter how short the term.[53] In the single case where suspension of the absolute power of alienation may continue for two existing lives, and then for a minority, the minority must be that of the person entitled to the remainder in fee;[54] but it is not necessary that such person should have been in being at the creation of the interests.[55]

The law formerly was that realty and personalty might be held on a perpetual charitable trust only in case the gift was to a corporation or other body which was expressly authorized to hold property for charitable purposes, and which was already in existence or must necessarily be formed, if at all, within the statutory period. Realty could not be given on any charitable trust except to such a corporation or body. Personalty could be given to any trustee to hold for a charitable purpose, but unless the trustee was such a corporation or body the trust must necessarily cease within the statutory

The law has been changed radically by N. Y. Laws (1893), c. 701, N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, § 93, as interpreted by Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568. If a gift of realty or personalty is made, on a charitable trust, to any trustee, whether to a corporation not yet in existence or to individuals, the gift will be treated as an immediate gift to charity, and will not be allowed to fail for lack of a trustee. If the gift is to a corporation not yet in existence, but such corporation is formed within a reasonable time, such corporation will be allowed to administer the charity, and will take the income accruing prior to its formation as an increment of the principal. St. John v. Andrews Inst., 117 N. Y. App. Div. 698, 102 N. Y. Suppl. 808. Similarly, if the gift is to individuals as trustees, they will be allowed to administer. If no trustee is named, or semble, if the corporation, or body, or individual whom the donor wished to administer the charity is unable to do so, the court will appoint a suitable trustee. Whoever is trustee, the charity may continue in perpetuity. "The ancient law of charitable uses has been restored." In re Watson, 171 N. Y. 256, 63 N. E. 1109; In re Graves, 171 N. Y. 40, 63 N. 57. N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, § 51, provides: "All directions for the accumulation of the rents and profits of real property, except such as are allowed by statute, shall be void. An accumulation of rents and profits of real property, for the benefit of one or more persons, may be directed by any will or deed sufficient to pass real property, as follows: 1. If such accumulation be directed to commence on the creation of the estate out of which the rents and profits are to arise, it must be made for the benefit of one or more minors then in being, and terminate at or before the expiration of their minority. 2. If such accumulation be directed to commence at any time subsequent to the creation of the estate out of which the rents and profits are to arise, it must commence within the time permitted, by the provisions of this article, for the vesting of future estates, and during the minority of the beneficiaries, and shall terminate at or before the expiration of such minority. 3. If in either case such direction be for a longer term than during the minority of the beneficiaries, it shall be void only as to the time beyond such minority."

N. Y. Laws (1897), c. 417, § 4, provides: "An accumulation of the income of personal property directed by any instrument sufficient in law to pass such property is valid: 1. If directed to commence from the date of the instrument, or the death of the person executing the same, and to be made for the benefit of one or more minors, then in being, or in being at such death, and to terminate at or before the expiration of their minority. 2. If directed to commence at any period subsequent to the date of the instrument or subsequent to the death of the person executing it, and directed to commence within the time allowed for the suspension of the abso-

be directed to commence at a future time, but the statutory requirements as to realty and personalty have been construed to differ. It has been held that an accumulation of the rents and profits of realty may commence at the expiration of two lives in being when the accumulation is directed; but an accumulation of the income of personalty must commence at some time during the continuance of two lives in being.[58] The requirement that the accumulation must be "for the benefit" of a minor requires that the total accumulations be paid to such minor when he reaches majority. Thus if property is placed in trust to accumulate the rents, profits, and income during the minority of A, and then to add the accumulations to the original capital, and to pay the rents, profits, and income of such entire fund to A for life, and then to distribute the fund to the children of A, the provision restricting A to a life income from the accumulations is invalid.[59] The application of rents, profits, or income to the payment of debts or encumbrances amounts to an accumulation.[60] Semble that trusts for accumulation do lute ownership of personal property, and at some time during the minority of the persons for whose benefit it is intended, and to terminate at or before the expiration of their minority. All other directions for the accumulation of the income of personal property, not authorized by statute, are void; but a direction for any such accumulation for a longer term than the minority of the persons intended to be benefited thereby, has the same effect as if limited to the minority of such persons, and is void as respects the time beyond such minority."

58. Manice v. Manice, 43 N. Y. 303. See supra, note 57. Suppose there is an accumulation directed for the benefit of all the children of A, a living person, during their minorities, and that A has one child, B. The accumulation begins and is solely for his benefit until another child, C, is born. Thereafter only half the accumulation belongs to B. When a third child, D, is born, only one third of the accumulation belongs to B. When B reaches his majority he takes that part of the accumulations belonging to him, and the accumulation continues for the benefit of the other children. There is therefore a succession of periods of accumulation, but all these periods must begin within the statutory limit, and each accumulation will be for the benefit of minors then in being. not cause suspension, and that the validity of trusts for accumulation is to be determined solely by the special statutory requirements respecting such trusts.[61]

8. Construction — a. In General. If an instrument is capable of two constructions, under one of which an illegal suspension is directed, but under the other of which no illegal suspension is directed, the latter construction will be adopted.[62] If an invalid provision is separable from the valid provisions, and it is fair to presume that the maker of the instrument would prefer a partial to a total failure of the provisions in the instrument, the invalid provision will be rejected and the remaining provisions will be given effect.[63]

b. Separable Beneficial Interests. If a testator leaves property on a trust of the third class[64] to last during the lives of his surviving children, and dies leaving three, or more, children, the trust is invalid.[65] If, however, the words of the will are such that the interests of the beneficiaries may be construed to be separate,

61. Does a trust for accumulation suspend the absolute power of alienation of realty, and the absolute ownership of personalty? There are some dicta to that effect. Radley v. Kuhn, 97 N. Y. 26; Vail v. Vail, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 226; Mason v. Mason, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 432 [affirmed in 2 Barb. 229]. But N. Y. Laws (1903), cc. 87, 88; Laws (1896), c. 547, § 83, now provide that the right and interest of the beneficiary of "any trust" other than a trust of the third class is alienable. See supra, XI, A, 2, c. (II), notes 21, 22. Suppose realty is placed in trust to pay the rents to A for life, then to B for life, then to accumulate during the minorities of B's children, and as each child attains his majority to convey and pay to him his share, with the accumulations. There being no gift over, in case of the death of B's children under age, the absolute power of alienation can be suspended for only two lives. See supra, note 92. If a trust for accumulation does cause suspension, this trust is invalid. But precisely such an accumulation seems to have been contemplated under the special statutory requirements as to accumulation. See Manice v. Manice, 43 N. Y. 303, 374 et seq.

62. This rule of construction is supported by a great number of cases. See Mee v. Gordon, 187 N. Y. 400, 80 N. E. 353, 116 Am. St. Rep. 613; Denison v. Denison, 185 N. Y. 438, 78 N. then the will may be construed, not as creating one trust to last for three, or more, lives, but as creating three, or more, separate trusts, each to last for one life. The courts strongly incline to such construction, and it is well settled that such construction will not be prevented because the trust property is to be kept in solido and under one management.[66]

c. "Youngest Child Reaches Twenty-One." If the creator of a trust directs that it shall continue until the youngest child of A reaches twenty-one, the courts incline to construe this as a direction that the trust shall continue until the youngest child of A reaches twenty-one or dies under that age.[67]

d. Shares Accruing by Survivorship. Where there is a gift to a class, with gifts over in case of death, the courts incline to hold that shares accruing at a death do not again go over at a second death.[68]

67. Suppose suspension is to continue until the youngest of the testator's grandchildren living at his death and attaining the age of twenty-one does in fact attain that age, and that the testator leaves three grandchildren, A, B, and C, all under age. If C, the youngest, should reach twenty-one, his minority would be the measure of the suspension; but C might die under twenty-one before B reached twenty-one, and then the suspension would continue until B reached that age; but B might thereafter die under twenty-one before A reached twenty-one, and then the suspension would continue until A reached twenty-one. 9. Other Statutory Restrictions on the Creation of Future Interests in Realty and Personalty. Suspension of the absolute power of alienation of realty or of the absolute ownership of personalty may be caused by present as well as future interests; in determining whether an interest causes suspension, it is necessary to see if the interest is alienable or inalienable, not whether it is vested or contingent.[69] In addition to the requirement that interests shall not be created which may cause a suspension beyond the statutory limit, there are eight other restrictions, all of which apply solely to the creation of future interests. There is no comprehensive requirement that all future interests shall vest[70] within certain limits, but some of these restrictions bear upon the question of vesting. Two of the restrictions[71] apply even to alienable and vested interests; in other words, a future interest may be objectionable even though it is both alienable and vested.[72] These eight restrictions, which apply to both realty and personalty,[73] are as follows: (1) Successive estates for life shall not be limited except to persons in being at the creation thereof.[74] (2) Where a remainder is limited on more than two successive life-estates, all the life-estates subsequent to those of the two persons first entitled thereto shall be void.[75] (3) If a remainder is limited on more than leaves no issue, then to his surviving brothers and sisters, and to the living issue of any deceased brothers and sisters; or, if there are no such collaterals, then to X. A dies under the prescribed age, without issue, and B and C become entitled to his share. Then B dies without issue. Now if the one third of A's share which accrued to B, on A's death, goes over to C, such one third will be held in trust for a period of three lives, and such provision is invalid. But if the fraction of a share accruing by survivorship is held not to go over, but to have become the absolute property of B, then the trust contains no invalid provision. It is vested, when there is a person in being, who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property, on the determination of all the intermediate or precedent estates. It is contingent while the person to whom or the event on which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain." This section has been construed in In re Lansing, 182 N. Y. 238, 74 N. 75. N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, § 33. This requirement applies to cross remainders for life, given to tenants in common for life. In Purdy v. Hayt, 92 N. Y. 446, land was devised to A and B for life, as tenants in common, with cross remainders for life, and then to C for life, remainder to C's surviving children in fee. The court construed this to be a limitation to A and B for life as tenants in common, remainder, as to the share of the one dying first, to the survivor for life, remainders over. In the share of the one dying first, three successive life-estates were therefore limited; but in the share of the survivor only two successive life-estates were limited. It was held that, as the share in which an excessive number of life-estates had been limited must be ascertained within the period of a single life, the life-estate to C was void only as to such share. Orphan Asylum v. White, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 137, 6 Dem. Surr. 201, is in accord. In Dana v. Murray, 122 N. Y. 604, 618, 26 N. E. 21, land had been limited to A for life, remainder as A by will appointed, and A appointed to her husband, B, and her daughters, C, D, and E, for life, with cross remainders for life, subject to a power of sale, to be exercised on the death of the life-tenants, or upon the marriage of any two daughters. "The case is, therefore, presented where three-fourths of the life-estate devised is void under the statute, whilst the other one-fourth may be valid, but it cannot be determined which is valid, or which condemned, until after the death of three of the life tenants. The person being unknown and the claim contingent, we incline to the view that this is also within the condemnation of the statute." See Haug v. Schumacher, 166 N. Y. 506, 60 N. two successive life-estates, it shall take effect on the death of the persons entitled to the first and second life-estates, in the same manner as if no other life-estates had been created.[76] (4) No remainder shall be created on an estate pur autre vie except a remainder in fee, nor shall any remainder be created upon such an estate in a term of years, unless it be for the whole residue of the term.[77] (5) If a remainder is limited on an estate pur autre vie dependent on more than two lives, the remainder shall take effect on the death of the two persons first named.[78] (6) A contingent remainder shall not be created on a term of years unless the nature of the contingency on which it is limited be such that the remainder must vest in interest during the continuance of not more than two lives in being at the creation of such remainder, or on the termination thereof.[79] (7) No estate for life shall be limited, as a remainder on a term of years, except to a person in being at the creation of such estate.[80] (8) An estate may be limited on a fee, "on a contingency which, if it should occur, must happen within the period prescribed in this article" (Real Property Law).[81]

What is the proper construction of this section? The language, it is to be noted, is permissive in form. Suppose it is construed to mean that "no estate may be limited on a fee except upon a contingency which must happen within the period prescribed in this article." The importance of the section would then be enormous, for it would practically give New York two tests of a perpetuity — one the test of contingency, which is the common-law test, the other the test of inalienability, which is now well recognized by the decisions as being in fact the test intended by the statute. No such far-reaching importance has ever been attached to the section, and it has figured but little in the decisions. The requirements as to suspension, and the test of suspension, are cardinal, and such other statutory requirements as were added were doubtless intended to be consistent with the general policy of these requirements, and not to work confusion by setting up another test. Semble that this section is, as its language implies, permissive and not restrictive in intent, and was introduced out of abundant caution to declare that future contingent estates could be created if such estates conformed to the other provisions of the article.

It is to be noted that in Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, where the New York statutes as to realty have been followed, in the main, with only verbal changes, the corresponding section of the statute reads: "Subject to the rules established in the preceding sections of this chapter, a freehold estate . . . may be created to commence at a future day." Mich. Comp. Laws, § 8806; Minn. Rev. Laws, § 3213; Wis. Annot. St. § 2047.

82. Suppose A devises Greenacre to such of his issue as shall be alive twenty-five years after his death. The whole limitation is invalid. See supra, XI, A, 2, b, (I). Suppose, again, A devises Greenacre on a trust to last for twenty-five years. The whole trust is invalid. See supra, XI, A, 2, b, (II). Suppose, however, that A devises Greenacre to B in fee, but provides that B shall not alienate the land for twenty-five years. The devise is good, and the only question is whether the restraint on alienation is also good. If the restraint on alienation is at-a time of sale may, however, be regarded as merely advisory, and therefore as not preventing alienation prior to such time;[83] and a provision that no sale of property shall be made except after advertisement for a definite period is unobjectionable if it is a reasonable precaution to prevent a sacrifice of the property.[84]

B. Statutes Similar to the New York Statutes. Michigan has statutory provisions closely following the New York statutes on realty, but not on personalty.[85] So of Minnesota[86] and Wisconsin.[87] California has provisions similar to

The divergences from the New York statutes are mostly verbal. But the statutes are more liberal with regard to the creation of express trusts ((§ 8839), and the provision controlling the alienation of the beneficial interest in a trust (§ 8847), follows the New York Revised Statutes and not the Real Property Law (Laws (1896), c. 547). See supra, note 21. The statutes follow the New York statutes both as to the suspension of the absolute power of alienation and as to other restrictions on the creation of future interests in realty. 87. Wis. Annot. St. (1889) §§ 2025–2158.

The divergences from the New York statutes are mostly verbal. But the absolute power of alienation may be suspended for two lives and twenty-one years thereafter (section 2039); the statutes are more liberal with rethe New York statutes, applicable to both realty and personalty.[88] The states of North and South Dakota,[89] the District of Columbia,[90] Idaho,[91] Iowa,[92]

gard to the creation of express trusts (section 2081), and to the accumulation of the rents and profits of realty (section 2061); and the provision controlling the alienation of the beneficial interest in a trust (section 2089) follows the New York Revised Statutes, and not the Real Property Law (Laws (1896), c. 547). See supra, note 21. The statutes follow the New York statutes both as to the suspension of the absolute power of alienation and as to other restrictions on the creation of future interests in realty. C. The Pennsylvania Statute of Accumulations. This statute[95] forbids the accumulation of the income from real or personal property by force of any deed or will or otherwise except until the death of the maker or makers of the instrument providing for such accumulation, and during the minority of a person who is in being or en ventre sa mere at the time of such death, and who would, if of full age, be entitled to such income.[96] This renders invalid a provision for an accumulation to continue during the life of A;[97] or during the life of A, unless his wife predeceases him;[98] or until A marries;[99] or from the death of A until his children shall arrive at the age of thirty years;[1] or for a period of ten years;[2] and likewise a provision for an accumulation during the life of A of such portion of the income of a trust fund as the trustees do not deem necessary for his support.[3] Semble that a provision for accumulation during a succession of minorities would be invalid.[4] There is authority that a discretionary power given to a trustee to accumulate for a period not sanctioned by the statute is valid.[5] A trustee may make such temporary accumulations of income as are a reasonable provision against future payments to be made by him.[6] Where the testator devised encumbered property and directed that the income should be applied to the discharge of the encumbrances, such direction was held to be invalid as amounting, indirectly, to an accumulation of income for a period not sanctioned by the statute.[7] The statute contains no express provision defining the persons for whose benefit the accumulation, during the period allowed, is to be made. But the courts have construed the statute to require that if an accumulation is to be made during the minority of A, the accumulation must be for A's sole benefit, and that, unless A is by the provisions of the instrument directing the accumulation to become entitled upon majority to the corpus of the accumulations, the direction to accumulate is bad.[8] It is therefore not lawful to provide that the share of a minor shall be held in trust, the income, or any part thereof, to be added to the principal, and, upon the child's attaining his majority, the income of such share and the accumulations to be paid to him for life, with remainder to his issue. If a provision for accumulation is objectionable only because it is to continue for a period longer than that allowed by the statute, the provision is void only for the excess.[9] Where a provision for accumulation is invalid, the released income usually passes to the heir, or next of kin, or residuary devisee or legatee.[10] If, however, there is a present gift of the corpus to A, A will be entitled to any accumulations derived from the fund.[11] If a will creates a valid trust of property for A, and a codicil modifies this trust by provisions involving an illegal accumulation, the fund is to be held on the trusts of the will.[12] An accumulation for a charitable purpose is expressly excepted from the operation of the statute.[13]

D. Other Statutory Changes. Except in New York and the jurisdictions which to a greater or less extent follow New York,[14] the statutory changes in the United States are few. They are, except the Pennsylvania statute of accumulations,[15] given in a note.[16] There are also several constitutional or statutory pro-

XII. LAW OF LOUISIANA.

No person is capable of receiving property by donation inter vivos or by last will unless conceived when the donation or will takes effect.[19] Substitutions and fidei commissa are prohibited.[20] This renders invalid provisions limiting property to A for life, remainder to B;[21] or to A, but, if A die before attaining his majority, to B;[22] or to A, but, if A die without leaving issue, to B.[23] It also prohibits a testator from placing property in trust,[24] and this prohibition extends to trusts for charitable purposes.[25] But the property or usufruct may be given depend-

19. La. Code, art. 1489. In Sevier v. Douglas, 44 La. Ann. 605, 10 So. 804, a testator bequeathed property, after a life-interest to A, to the children of A. A had children who were born after testator's death, and it was held that they took nothing in the property.

20. La. Code, art. 1520. To put the matter broadly, and to use terms familiar to the English law, this article prohibits remainders, conditional limitations, and trusts. But as to remainders note that, if apt words are employed, the use of property may be given to one for life and the property, subject to such use, to another. See art. 1522 infra, note 29. And note also that reversions are not prohibited. See art. 1534 infra, note 28; supra, III, B, 2; III, B, 3; III, D, 3.

ent on a condition precedent;[26] and it may be given in the alternative.[27] The donor may provide that the property return to him in case he survives the donee, or in case he survives the donee and his descendants. Such reservation can be made only in favor of the donor.[28] The usufruct of property may be given to one, and the naked property to another.[29] But the donor cannot reserve the usufruct to himself.[30] Even property devoted to charitable uses cannot be made inalienable.[31]

PERQUISITE. A fee to an officer for a specific service in lieu of an annual salary;[1] something gained by place or office beyond the regular salary or fee.[2] (See, generally, OFFICERS.)

PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT. Literally "Whereby he lost the company [of his wife]." A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a husband, for beating or ill using his wife, descriptive of the special damage he had sustained.[3] (See, generally, HUSBAND AND WIFE.)

PER QUOD SERVITIUM AMISIT. Literally "Whereby he lost the service [of his servant.]" A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a master, for beating or ill using his servant, descriptive of the special damage he had himself sustained.[4] (See, generally, MASTER AND SERVANT.)

limited to any one school of practitioners. It therefore includes a homeopath.[4] In its broad sense the term "physician" includes a dentist,[5] but it has been held that a dentist is not a "physician or surgeon" within the meaning of those words as used in various state statutes.[6]

B. Surgeon. A surgeon is a practitioner who treats injuries, deformities, or disorders by mechanical operations.[7]

C. Veterinary Surgeon. A veterinary surgeon is a person lawfully practising the art of treating and healing injuries and diseases of domestic animals.[8]

D. Dentist. A dentist is a dental surgeon;[9] one who performs manual or mechanical operations to preserve teeth, to cleanse, extract, insert, or repair them.[10]

E. Surgery. Surgery is a branch of medical science.[11] It is limited to manual operations usually performed by surgical instruments or appliances.[12]

F. Malpractice. Malpractice, in its ordinary sense, is the negligent performance by a physician or surgeon of the duties which are devolved and incumbent upon him on account of his contractual relations with his patient.[13]

G. Osteopathy. Osteopathy is defined as a method of treating diseases of the human body without the use of drugs, by means of manipulations applied to various nerve centers — chiefly those along the spine — with a view to inducing free circulation of the blood and lymph, and an equal distribution of the nerve forces.[14]

tistry.[19] The authority of the legislature does not end with declaring what qualifications he who enters upon the practice of that profession shall possess. As it has plenary power over the whole subject, it alone must be the judge of what is expedient, both as to the qualifications required and as to the method of ascertaining those qualifications.[20] The only limit to the legislative power in prescribing conditions to the right to practise is that they shall be reasonable;[21] and whether they are reasonable the courts must judge.[22] If the regulations and conditions are adopted in good faith, and they operate equally upon all who desire to practise and who possess the required qualifications,[23] and if they are appropriate to the end in view, to wit, the protection of the public, and attainable by reasonable study or application,[24] then the fact that the conditions may be rigorous will not render the legislation invalid. In the enactment of legislation of this character the legislature may take account of the advance of learning, and impose new conditions and qualifications as increased knowledge may suggest;[25] and to make such legislation effective, one having an established practice and one contemplating practising may be required to conform to the same standard of qualification.[26]

candidate may either present an acceptable diploma, or, if he has no diploma, he may be examined as to his qualifications. (4) The applicant must hold a diploma issued by a reputable medical college, which must be satisfactorily shown to belong to him.[27]

2. License or Certificate — a. In General — (1) Necessity — (A) In General. Formerly no license or certificate was required of a person who undertook the practice of medicine. A diploma of an incorporated medical college was looked upon as furnishing the necessary qualification for a person to engage in the practice of such profession. The result was that many persons engaged in the practice of medicine who had acquired no scientific knowledge with reference to the character of diseases or of the ingredients of drugs that they administered, some of whom imposed upon the public by purchasing diplomas from fraudulent concerns and advertising them as real. This resulted in the adoption of statutes upon the subject, and now in most of the states the medical laws provide that, before any person can practise medicine in any of its departments in the state, he must apply for and receive a certificate of qualification or license from the state board of medical examiners.[28] A license and a certificate have been held not to be the same thing.[29] A statute providing that no person, unless previously registered or licensed to practise medicine or dentistry, "shall begin" the practice of medicine or dentistry without obtaining a license is applicable to one who continued after the act took effect, an illegal practice previously begun.[30]

(B) In County of Residence or Practice. Under some statutes a physician or dentist, changing his residence from one county to another, must obtain a new license in the county where he proposes to reside, and it is unlawful for him to practise in such county without such license.[31] Under other statutes a license from any board of the state will entitle the holder to practise throughout the state.[32]

In Alabama Code (1886), §§ 1296–1298 provide that a graduate of a medical college in the United States, whose diploma is recorded, may practise medicine without a license in any county having only a medical board established by the county commissioners; but where there is a board of medical examiners, organized according to the constitution of the state medical association, and in affiliation with it, a license or certificate of qualification from such board is necessary. Section 4078 provides for the punishment of any person practising medicine without a license, diploma, or certificate, or who is not "a regular graduate of a medical college of this State, having had his diploma legally recorded." It was held that a graduate of a medical college of another state whose diploma is recorded is not indictable for practising without license or certificate from a board of medical examiners in the county, organized under or in affiliation with the state association. (II) Sufficiency. Under a statute requiring a license from some chartered school, state board of medical examiners, or medical society, neither a certificate showing that the holder has passed a limited course of study, nor a limited commission for the practice of medicine within a limited sphere, is sufficient.[33] Where a statute requiring an applicant to obtain a license or certificate further requires that such license or certificate shall be indorsed or countersigned by a particular officer before it shall become valid, a license or certificate not so indorsed or countersigned is insufficient to authorize the holder to practise medicine.[34]

(III) Authority to Issue — (A) In General. The power of the legislature to require an applicant to pass an examination and obtain a license as a condition to his right to practise medicine in the state includes the right to select the particular agency to whom the duty of conducting the examination and granting the license shall be delegated.[35]

(B) Medical Boards — (1) In General. This agency is usually called the state medical board or board of medical examiners. Where the statute does not require that the different schools of medicine shall be represented on the board, its composition cannot affect its jurisdiction or the legality of its acts.[36] A statute creating such a board to be composed of members of a particular school of medicine is not unconstitutional on the ground of discrimination.[37] Nor is an act unconstitutional in not providing that each school of medicine should be represented by equal numbers on the board.[38] The fact that the board was not regularly organized is immaterial;[39] if it is the de facto board its certificate protects the holder from prosecution.[40]

(2) Nature of Power. The authority of a state medical or dental board in granting or refusing licenses to applicants, or in passing on the reputability of colleges, is neither legislative nor judicial, but quasi-judicial, involving the exercise of judgment and discretion.[41] The ascertainment and determination of qualifications to practise medicine by a board of experts appointed for that purpose is not the exercise of "judicial power," as that phrase is used in conferring judicial power upon specified courts,[42] although the statute provides for an appeal therefrom;[43] and therefore a statute authorizing a state medical board to ascertain and determine the qualifications of applicants to practise medicine is not unconstitutional as conferring judicial power on the board.[44]

(3) Authority and Powers — (a) In General. A state medical board has full authority to prescribe rules and regulations governing the issuance of certificates of medical practitioners.[45] An existing board, however, has no power to review the action of a former board.[46]

(b) To Determine Reputability of Institution Granting Diploma.[47] The requirement that a medical or dental board shall issue to the holder of a diploma a certificate entitling him to practise medicine or dentistry is almost universally upon the express condition that the diploma shall be from a "reputable" institution, or an institution "in good standing." Whether a college be reputable or in good standing is not a legal question but a question of fact,[48] and is usually left to the judgment and discretion of the state medical or dental board,[49] unless the status college,[53] and when it has once determined that question in favor of an applicant, it cannot refuse him a license for arbitrary reasons of its own.[54]

(c) To Refuse License or Certificate For Cause. Boards of medical examiners are generally authorized by statute to refuse certificates to individuals guilty of unprofessional or dishonorable conduct.[55] But an applicant for a license who possesses the requisite medical qualifications cannot be denied a license without a hearing on the question of his character and conduct.[56]

(4) Right to Review Decision of Board.[57] State medical laws sometimes contain a provision authorizing resort to the courts for relief, either by way of appeal or writ of review, against the action of a board of examiners in refusing a license to an applicant.[58] The law usually provides the manner of taking this appeal, but failure to do so does not affect the right.[59] Notice of the appeal should be served upon a member of the board,[60] and where the notice so served is sufficient, it is immaterial whether the board was represented at the trial or not.[61] The board, when aggrieved by the decision of the district court, may appeal or move for a new trial.[62] Pending an appeal from a refusal to grant a license, the court has no power to allow the applicant to practise.[63] When no appeal is provided for by statute, the medical or dental board, in passing on a question within its jurisdiction calling for the exercise of judgment, is supreme so long as it proceeds to a

In Idaho the state medical law contains no provision granting the right of appeal from the action of the board of examiners in refusing a license to an applicant, but by the terms of section 9 of the act [Laws (1899), p. 348] it is provided that the action of the board in refusing to grant a license under the provisions thereof may be reviewed by the district court on certiorari, provided proceedings therefor be instituted within ten days after notice of such refusal. Raaf v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 11 Ida. 707, 84 Pac. 33. By conferring this right, the legislature has indicated an intention to limit and confine the authority and jurisdiction of the courts in considering the action of the board to the procedure and scope of investigation and inquiry usually and ordinarily pursued and exercised by the courts in the issuance and consideration of writs of review. Raaf v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, supra. Effect of succession of new board before appeal.— The refusal to grant a license by a state board of medical examiners, which has been succeeded by a new and distinct board, and which refusal was not appealed from as permitted by law, cannot be reviewed on a subsequent appeal from a decision of the new board refusing a license to the same party. Miller v. Medical Bd., 33 Oreg. 5, 52 Pac. 763.

Refusal for incompetency.— When the right to appeal is granted in "all cases of the refusal or revocation of a certificate" by the medical board, the right exists as well where a certificate to practise medicine has been refused by the board for incompetency as where it has been refused for unprofessional, dishonorable, or immoral conduct. reasonable conclusion on evidence bearing on such question.[64] Mandamus will issue, however, to compel action by the board when they fail or refuse to act, and also in case of abuse of discretion.[65]

(IV) REGISTRATION—(A) Necessity. It is a common provision of medical laws that physicians must register their licenses or certificates with some designated county officer in order to be entitled to practise.[66] Such a requirement is mandatory upon all practitioners except such as may be expressly or impliedly exempted.[67] If a civil and a penal statute respecting registration are irreconcilable, as where they require registration with different officers, the penal provision is held inoperative.[68]

(B) Time. A statute requiring registration to take place within a certain time after the passage of the act must be strictly complied with, and registration after the prescribed period has elapsed is ineffectual to bring one within the protection of the statute.[69] The period of limitation has been held to begin to run from the time the law goes into effect, and not from the time of its approval.[70] An attempt to register under an act before it goes into effect is ineffectual.[71]

(C) Place. Under a statute requiring a practitioner to record his certificate in the county where he resides or sojourns, he must, upon changing his domicile to another county, furnish his certificate to the proper officer of the latter county for record.[72] But a statute requiring a physician to register in the county where he is practising or intends to commence the practice has been held not to require a physician who is duly registered and practising in one county to register in another county, so as to authorize him to visit patients in such other county.[73]

Municipal regulation.— While in the exercise of its police power a regulation requiring all persons practising medicine or surgery in a city to register as such would probably be valid, a regulation making the right to register depend on the sanction or approval of an officer of the board of health, and of his view as to the qualifications of such persons to practise, and providing for the punishment of those violating such regulation, is unauthorized and void, the statutes of the state providing as to who shall and shall not practise. (D) Curing Invalid Registration. One whose registration is not legal because of error, misunderstanding, or unintentional omission may, by a subsequent valid registration, validate the original registration from the date of its filing, and thus be relieved of the consequences attendant upon a failure to register or an imperfect registration.[74] A medical register is a public record, over which the court in charge of whose office it is put has summary power of correction or cancellation on its own motion or the suggestion of any one.[75]

(V) Revocation— (A) Authority to Revoke. The state, in the exercise of its police power, may prescribe the qualifications of persons desiring to practise medicine, and may create a board whose duty it shall be to hear and determine any complaint made against any person holding a physician's license or certificate and revoke such license or certificate for any cause provided for in the statute.[76] The power to revoke such licenses or certificates is not a judicial power, which cannot, under the state constitution, be vested in the board of examiners.[77] Whether such a statute authorizes the revocation of a certificate issued prior to its passage depends entirely upon the wording of the statute.[78] The fact that a license is issued to one not entitled to it will not prevent the board from revoking it.[79]

(B) Acts Authorizing Revocation. The grounds commonly designated by the statute upon which the medical board is authorized to revoke a physician's license or certificate are unprofessional, dishonorable, or immoral conduct.[80] Unprofessional or dishonorable conduct is not defined by the common law, and what conduct may be of either kind is a matter of opinion only.[81] For this reason it has been held in several cases that such a statute is void for uncertainty.[82] Similar statutes have been construed in other jurisdictions without the question of validity being raised, the courts merely considering what can be deemed unprofessional, dishonorable, or immoral conduct. Thus it has been held ground for revoking a license to obtain from the medical board, by misrepresentation, a certificate to practise medicine;[83] or to misrepresent to a patient the character of his disease, and obtain money from him upon the strength of such misrepresentation;[84] or to perform a pretended operation upon a woman to enable her to conceal her real condition from her parents.[85] It is held not to be immoral, dishonorable, or unprofessional for a physician to conceal the fact that one of his patients had innocently suffered the accident of a miscarriage.[86] Mere advertising by a physician is not such unprofessional conduct as to warrant the revocation of his license;[87] if, however, the advertisement is false and known to be false, and is a studied effort to impose upon the credulity of the public for gain, the law is otherwise.[88] A statute providing that a license to practise medicine may be

These decisions proceed upon the principle that legislation providing for the revocation of the certificate of a physician for professional or moral unfitness must be reasonable in its provisions, and must apply to matters or conduct on the part of the physician which affect the health, morals, or safety of the community, and the acts or conduct which are made ground of forfeiture must be declared with certainty and definiteness. Test of uncertainty.— The courts cannot uphold and enforce a statute whose broad and indefinite language may apply not only to a particular act about which there would be little or no difference of opinion, but equally to others about which there might be radical differences, thereby devolving upon the tribunals charged with the enforcement of the law the exercise of an arbitrary power of discriminating between the several classes of acts. In the District of Columbia the act of congress of June 3, 1896, chapter 313, section 10, provides that sufficient cause exists for the revocation of a physician's license in the employment of fraud or deception in passing the examinations required, in chronic inebriety, the practice of criminal abortion, or in case of conviction of crime involving moral turpitude. revoked only for unprofessional or dishonorable conduct has no application to a temporary license issued by the board of medical examiners without authority.[89]

(c) Proceedings to Revoke—(1) In General. The action of a medical board in revoking a physician's license or certificate for unprofessional or dishonorable conduct being in its nature judicial, the board has no power to institute such a proceeding without a reasonable notice of the charge against him, and the time and place of the trial thereof.[90] But a board, in conducting such an investigation, is not a judicial tribunal, and is not governed by the technical rules applicable to law courts.[91]

(2) Parties. Where a proceeding to cancel a certificate issued to a physician without authority can be brought only by the attorney-general, it has been held that the board of examiners is a necessary party defendant to the proceedings because it is the official action of the board which is attacked.[92] In a proceeding by a board of medical examiners, on relation of other parties, to revoke the license of a physician for unprofessional conduct, the state is properly made a party thereto.[93]

(3) Complaint. Certainty to a common intent is all that is required in the complaint for revocation.[94]

(4) Evidence. The practice in revocation proceedings before a medical board being more flexible than that allowable in the courts, evidence which tends to prove or disprove the point in issue may be introduced, although not the best evidence which might be had.[95]

A statutory provision that the president or any member of the state board of medical examiners may administer oaths and take testimony on matters relative to their duties does not provide an exclusive mode of proof so as to prevent the consideration by the board of evidence not so taken. revoke a physician's license are conclusive on the courts.[96] But an appeal or writ of review in such case is sometimes provided for to the district or circuit court in and for the county in which the hearing was had;[97] and the right is not nugatory, because the legislature has prescribed no rules of practice to guide the district court in adjudicating such cases.[98]

(6) EFFECT OF FORMER ADJUDICATION. A medical board is not precluded from preferring charges against a physician to revoke his license by the fact that the same charges had been once before passed upon by them, and had not been sustained.[99] Nor are the trial and acquittal of a physician in a court of criminal jurisdiction on the same charges exhibited against him by a medical society a bar to an inquiry under the statute for the purpose of depriving him of the right to practise.[1]

(VI) WHO MAY BE LICENSED. While a corporation is a person in a certain sense, it is not such a person as can be licensed to practise medicine.[2] But licensed physicians may form a corporation, and make contracts for the services of its members and other licensed physicians without thereby violating a statute forbidding the practice of medicine without a license.[3]

full board in the meantime has not refused to license the applicant;[4] but after the board, as such, has refused a license to an applicant, no one member can grant him one.[5] The fact that the board of medical examiners, in issuing a temporary license, used the form of a regular license, which erroneously recited that plaintiff had passed a satisfactory examination in medicine and surgery before the board, and was thereby authorized to practise, and merely limited the duration of the license, does not constitute such license a regular unlimited license to practise.[6]

c. Renewal License. All physicians or dentists licensed by the board or any previous board are entitled to a renewal license each year on application.[7]

d. License From Another State. Under the Colorado statute a license from the board of dental examiners of that state is not necessary to entitle a person to practise dentistry, if such person has a valid and sufficient license from the board of any other state.[8]

3. Proof of Diploma. An applicant for a license or certificate to practise medicine who possesses a diploma must furnish to the medical board satisfactory proof of having received it from a legally chartered medical institution in good standing.[9] A diploma is not per se evidence of that fact;[10] the existence of the college at the date of the diploma must be proved by producing its act of incorporation.[11]

4. Good Moral Character. The legislature has the same power to require, as a condition of the right to practise the profession, that the applicant shall be possessed of the qualifications of honor and a good moral character, as it has to require that he shall be learned in the profession.[12]

5. Privilege or Occupation Taxes.[13] Unless specially restrained by the constitution, the legislature may confer upon municipal corporations the right to tax physicians practising medicine therein.[14] So itinerant physicians are frequently required to pay an occupation tax.[15]

6. Exemptions From Operation of Statutes — a. In General. The statutes in many states except from their operation certain classes of persons, and services rendered in particular cases. Thus it is commonly provided that the statute shall not apply to any commissioned medical officer of the United States army, navy, or marine service; medical examiners of relief departments of railroad companies; members of the staff of hospitals and asylums; physicians called into consultation from another state, or to treat a particular case, and who do not otherwise practise in the state;[16] medical students assisting at operations under the supervision of a licensed physician;[17] or to services rendered gratuitously, or in case of emergency,[18] or to the administration of domestic medicines.[19] These exemptions have been attacked as unconstitutional on the ground of discrimination, but have been upheld by the courts.[20]

b. Prior Practitioners. One who has an established practice as a physician or dentist is not ipso facto exempt from complying with subsequent legislation requiring him to conform to a reasonable standard respecting qualification.[21] Medical laws quite frequently, however, exempt from their operation those who have practised in the state for a prescribed time previous to the passage thereof,[22] and such a provision is not unconstitutional on the ground of discrimination.[23] This exemption applies only to those whose previous practice was lawful.[24]

C. Practising Without Authority — 1. What Constitutes — a. Practising Medicine or Surgery — (I) In General — (A) In Absence of Definition of Term. In the absence of a statutory definition of what acts shall constitute the practice of medicine and surgery, the words "medicine and surgery" and "practice of medicine and surgery" are usually taken to have a meaning in their ordinary sense.[26] Medicine, in the popular sense, is a remedial substance;[27] something which is administered, either internally or externally, in the treatment of disease or the relief of sickness.[28] The practice of medicine, as ordinarily or popularly understood, has relation to the art of preventing, curing, or alleviating disease or pain.[29] Nor is it necessary for one to profess to practise generally either as a physician or surgeon to bring him within the operation of the statute, but it extends to any one engaging in practice in a distinct department of either profession.[30]

(B) When Term Defined by Statute. The state has the right to determine what acts shall constitute the practice of the healing art,[31] and this right has been frequently exercised with a tendency to extend rather than restrict the meaning of the term. What then constitutes the practice of medicine depends upon the language of the particular statute.[32]

(II) Christian Science Treatment. Under a statute making it unlawful to practise medicine without a license, but not attempting to define what constitutes "practising medicine," it is held that the term must be construed to relate to the practice of medicine as ordinarily and popularly understood, and therefore does not include one who gives treatment by the system known as "christian science."[33] Where, however, the meaning of the term "practising medicine"

The words "at the time of the passage of the act" refer to the date when the act takes effect and not when it is approved. Mills v. State Bd. of Osteopathic Registration, etc., 135 Mich. 525, 98 N. W. 19.

"Other agency" does not include christian science.— Under a statute prohibiting any person not having a certificate from the board of medical registration from prescribing, directing, or recommending any drug, medicine, or other agency for the treatment, cure, or relief of any bodily infirmity, the term "other agency" does not include the system known as "christian science." Evans v. State, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 222, 6 Ohio N. P. 129.

In Maine a "christian scientist" may has been extended by statute to cover all treatment of whatever nature for the cure of physical or mental ailments, then giving christian science treatment without a license is in violation of the law.[34]

(III) OSTEOPATHY. Whether or not a person giving osteopathic treatment is to be regarded as "practising medicine" depends either upon the construction placed upon that term by the courts, or upon the comprehensiveness of the definition given by the statute itself.[35] But it has been several times held that an osteopath is not within a statute forbidding the prescribing or applying of any drug, medicine, appliance, or other agency by an unlicensed person.[36] Nor does osteopathy come within an exception in a statute applying to persons treating the sick by mental or spiritual means.[37]

(IV) PROFESSING TO CURE OR HEAL—(A) In General. In many states it is provided that any person shall be held as practising medicine within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the practice of medicine without a license, who shall publicly profess to cure or heal, or hold himself out as a physician, and assume the duties,[38] or who shall prefix the title "doctor" or "professor" or append the letters "M. D." to his name.[39] A mere public profession of an ability to heal will practise the healing art according to that method, on obtaining a certificate of good moral character pursuant to Rev. St. c. 13, § 9. Wheeler v. Sawyer, (1888) 15 Atl. 67.

35. Thus where the statute merely regulates the "practice of medicine" some courts confining the definition of the words "practise medicine" to the mere administration of drugs, or use of surgical instruments, hold that an osteopathist is not within the statute. Statutory provisions.— Under a statute providing that a person shall be regarded as practising medicine who shall treat or profess to treat, operate on or prescribe for, any physical ailment or injury, a person who causes a customer to look at objects on a wall, and therefrom determines what kind of lens he needs to aid his defective vision, and then has glasses ground accordingly and fitted into frames, and delivers such spectacles to his customer, is not required to first take out a license to practise medicine. People v. Smith, 208 Ill. 31, 69 N. E. 810 [affirming 108 Ill. App. 499]. Nor can such a person be required to take out a license because he advertises for those who have headache, dizziness, etc., to call on him, where the advertisement expressly declares that he does not give medical or surgical treatment, and it is apparent from the entire advertisement that all he professes to do is to fit spectacles to the eye. People v. Smith, supra. But under a similar statute one who diagnoses his patient's diseases by a microscopic examination of a drop of blood, and treats them by placing them under the rays of electric arc lights, and also incidentally prescribes certain medicines, for which prescription he makes no charge, has been held to be practising medicine. Under a statute providing that every person prefixing the title "Dr." to his name, or professing to be a physician, or prescribing any drug, medicine, apparatus, or other agency for the cure of any ailment, shall be regarded as practising medicine, a person engaged in fitting glasses to the eye, who prefixes the title "Dr." to his name, and claims to be an ophthalmologist, is practising medicine. (VIII) PRACTISING UNDER LICENSED PHYSICIAN. Liability under a statute prohibiting the practice of medicine without a license is not affected by the fact that the operations were performed and the medicines were administered under the direction and charge of a licensed physician and surgeon.[52]

(IX) PRACTISING AFTER REFUSAL OF LICENSE. Where one admits practising without a license, it is no defense to a prosecution therefor that the medical board had wrongfully refused to issue him a license.[53] But the contrary has also been held.[54]

(X) PRACTISING AFTER REVOCATION OF LICENSE. Under a statute prescribing a penalty for practising "without first having procured a certificate," a conviction cannot be had for engaging in practice after the certificate has been revoked for unprofessional conduct.[55]

(XI) PRACTISING WITHOUT FEE OR REWARD. The penalty for practising medicine without a license is usually limited to the practice for reward or compensation.[56] It is not necessary to show that a separate fee was charged for any specified service or operation, but it is sufficient if a fee was collected for a series of services or operations in violation of the act.[57] Neither is it necessary to show that a charge was made immediately after the service or operation, it being suf-

b. Practising Dentistry. The practice of dentistry has been defined as the treatment of diseases or lesions of the human teeth or jaws, or the correction of malpositions thereof.[59] A statute thus defining dentistry does not prevent a licensed surgeon from treating diseases of the jaws, which may come within the scope both of general surgery and dentistry.[60]

"Practising medicine" equivalent to "practising as a physician."— An indictment which alleged that defendant did "practise medicine" sufficiently charges that he "practised as a physician," within the meaning of a statute which makes it unlawful for any person to so practise without having a license. Whitlock v. Com., 89 Va. 337, 15 S. E. 893.

Practise or attempt to practise.— An indictment for practising medicine without a license, which charges that defendant unlawfully "did practise or attempt to practise medicine or surgery," is not open to the objection that the offenses of practising and attempting to practise are so distinct that the offense is not sufficiently set out. St. § 4403*c*, prohibiting persons from practising medicine, or prescribing, directing, or recommending for the use of any person any drug, medicine, or other agency for the permanent cure or relief of any bodily infirmity, unless a certificate from the board of registers shall be filed, etc., an information charging defendant with having for a fee prescribed, directed, and recommended a system known as "christian science," or other agency of the kind described was recommended or administered, is insufficient. Evans v. State, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 222, 6 Ohio N. P. 129.

Particular branch of medicine.—An information under a statute "to regulate the practice of medicine," and which requires that, before any person engages in the "practice of medicine in any of its branches or departments," he shall comply with certain provisions thereof, need not allege the "particular branch or department" of medicine in which defendant engaged. Antle v. State, 6 Tex. App. 202.

In Texas an indictment for unlawfully engaging in the practice of medicine must allege that it was done without a diploma, or else without having a certificate of qualification from some authorized board of medical examiners, as provided by statute, or without having practised five consecutive years in the profession; and it must be alleged that the accused resided or sojourned in the county where such indictment was presented. tised medicine in violation of the statute, for this amounts to no more than the statement of a mere legal conclusion.[66]

(II) Failure to Qualify. Under a statute making it an offense to practise medicine without complying with the provisions thereof respecting qualification, an indictment must expressly negative the fact of defendant having any of the qualifications requisite to the lawful practice of medicine.[67] Thus an indictment which does not allege in some form a failure to register,[68] or a failure to register and obtain a certificate,[69] or a failure to have the certificate recorded,[70] as the case may be, charges no offense. The negation of defendant's qualification must be broad enough to meet the requirements of the statute.[71]

(III) Person Practised Upon. Since no individual right is infringed by the practice of medicine in violation of the statute, the indictment need not specify on whom defendant practised.[72] Furthermore it has been held that it is not necessary to charge defendant with prescribing medicine for human beings as distinguished from furnishing medicine for domestic animals.[73]

(IV) Reward or Compensation. Where the statute does not contain the words "fee or reward," an indictment for practising medicine without a license need not charge that defendant practised for "fee or reward."[74]

(V) Negativing Exceptions. The general rule as to exceptions, provisos, and the like is that where the exception or proviso forms a portion of the description of the offense so that the ingredients thereof cannot be accurately and definitely stated if the exception is omitted, then it is necessary to negative the exception or proviso.[75] But where the exception is separable from the description and is not an ingredient thereof, it need not be noticed in the accusation, for it is

Even where, by statutory definition, the words "practise medicine" embrace the idea of exacting compensation, an indictment charging that the accused did unlawfully "practise medicine," and expressly negativing his having any of the qualifications essential to the lawful practice of medicine has been held to be good in substance, and sufficient to support a conviction, although there be no allegation that the accused received or intended to receive compensation. Where the statute includes two or more classes which will be affected thereby — such as physicians who remove into the state to practise after the passage of an act to regulate the same, and persons who were residing in the state and practising under a former act — the information must show on its face that the accused does not belong to either class. a matter of defense.[76] The rule as sometimes stated is that, if the exception is found in the enacting clause, it must be negatived; but if found in a subsequent clause, it need not be.[77] The negative averment is taken as true, unless disproved by defendant, since the subject-matter of such averment lies peculiarly within his knowledge.[78]

(VI) JOINDER OF OFFENSES. Where the offense of practising medicine without authority may be committed in one or more of several ways, the indictment may, in a single count, charge its commission in any or all of the ways specified, if they are not repugnant.[79]

b. Defenses. On a prosecution for practising medicine without a license, the defense of discrimination against a particular class of practitioners is of no avail.[80]

c. Evidence[81]—(I) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF. On an indictment for practising medicine without a license from the board of medical examiners, as required by law, the prosecution must show the existence of such board of examiners, legally constituted, and a conviction cannot be sustained where there was no such board de jure.[82] Furthermore the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant did practise medicine without a license.[83] After such proof has been introduced on the part of the prosecution, the burden is on the accused to show that he had a license[84] or other qualification to practise as required by law,[85] as such evidence is not accessible to the state, but is peculiarly within defendant's knowledge, and under his control.[86] So one who seeks protection by reason of an exception contained in the statute has the burden of proving that he comes within the same.[87]

(II) ADMISSIBILITY. Any competent evidence tending to show that defendant held himself out as a medical practitioner is admissible,[88] and such evidence is not

Where respondent exhibited a sign as "Dr. . . . Magnetic Healer," and was called in to visit sick persons, and treated them, and made a certificate of death, and a medical practitioner's sworn statement, there is evi-rendered inadmissible by the rule that the state is not allowed to put in issue the general character of defendant.[89] On behalf of defendant any legal evidence tending to show that he had rightful authority to practise, or that he was not guilty of the offense charged, is admissible.[90] The court will not compel a witness to produce the medicine which he received from defendant.[91]

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.[92] In a prosecution against one for practising as a physician without a diploma, the existence of the diploma is prima facie evidence of a right to it.[93] In some states it is provided by statute that the use by a person of the title "Dr.," "Doctor," etc., or the exposure of a sign, circular, or advertisement indicating the occupation of the person shall be prima facie evidence that he is practising medicine.[94] Proof that defendant attended a single case and held himself out to the community as a physician is sufficient to warrant a conviction.[95] Although defendant, to constitute guilt, must have practised for compensation and reward, the state need not prove the actual receipt of such compensation.[96] Uncorroborated testimony of employees of a dental society may be sufficient to support a conviction.[97]

d. Variance. Proof that defendant acted either as a physician or surgeon is sufficient to support an information charging that he held himself out as a physician and surgeon.[98] So proof that defendant engaged in any branch or department of medicine sustains the allegation that he engaged in the practice of medicine.[99] Since the time of the commission of the offense is not of the essence thereof, it is not necessary to prove that the offense charged was committed on the precise date alleged; proof that it occurred on any day within the period of limitation and before the filing of the information is sufficient.[1]

e. Questions For Jury.[2] Where a statute regulating the practice of medicine does not declare what specific acts shall constitute "practising medicine," or what it is to "publicly profess to do so," both of which are prohibited unless the person so doing has obtained a license, it is for the courts to determine whether the facts and proof in a particular case bring it within the terms of the statute, taking these in the sense in which they are commonly understood.[3] But where the acts which shall constitute the practice of medicine are defined by statute, whether or not defendant has, by his conduct, brought himself within such definition, is a question for the jury.[4]

f. Instructions. The instructions must conform to the pleadings and the evidence.[5] Where, under the statute, the possession of either a license or a diploma would preserve a physician from prosecution, it is error to instruct that if defendant had practised medicine without having a license and a diploma the jury should convict.[6] It is not necessary for the court to instruct the jury as to the law of costs in case of acquittal.[7]

g. Verdict. Upon an indictment under a statute which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to practise medicine for fee or reward without a license, a special verdict which does not find that defendant practised "for fee or reward" will not justify a conviction.[8]

h. Review[9] — (I) In General. The admission of incompetent evidence which could not have harmed defendant is not reversible error.[10] Where the charge of the court is not in the record, it will be presumed that the jury were properly instructed as to the offense for which defendant was on trial.[11]

(II) Record. The record of a summary conviction under the Ontario Medical Act[12] for illegally practising medicine must set out the particular act or acts which constitute the practising;[13] and should, if possible, state the facts necessary to bring it within the statute.[14]

i. Effect of Conviction. Where the offense denounced by the statute is of such a continuous nature as to subject the violator to but one conviction for

III. RELATION TO PATIENT.

A. Nature of Relation. The relation of a physician to his patient is one of trust and confidence, and while such relation does not per se forbid the acceptance of a gift or conveyance by him from his patient,[16] the burden is on the physician to prove that such gift or conveyance was fairly and honestly obtained, and that the transaction was above suspicion.[17] Any settlement made by a patient through his physician, in consequence of advice given mala fide, will be set aside.[18]

B. Degree of Skill and Care Required — 1. General Rule — a. As to Ordinary Practitioners. A physician or surgeon undertaking the treatment of a patient is not required to exercise the highest degree of skill possible. He is only required to possess and exercise that degree of skill and learning ordinarily possessed and exercised by the members of his profession in good standing, practising in similar localities, and it is his duty to use reasonable care and diligence in the exercise of his skill and the application of his learning, and to act according to his best judgment.[19]

b. As to Specialists. A physician holding himself out as having special knowledge and skill in the treatment of particular diseases is bound to bring to the discharge of his duty to a patient employing him as such specialist, not merely the average degree of skill possessed by general practitioners, but that special degree of skill and knowledge possessed by physicians who are specialists in the treatment of such disease, in the light of the present state of scientific knowledge.[20]

2. Necessity of Following Professed or Recognized School, System, or Treatment. Physicians are bound by what is universally settled in the profession;[21] but the mere fact that writers on the treatment of a certain ailment or practical surgeons prescribe a certain mode of treatment does not make it incumbent on a surgeon called to treat the ailment to conform to such system.[22] If the case is a new one, the patient must trust the skill and experience of the physician called, and likewise, if his injury or disease is attended with injury to other parts, or other diseases develop for which there is no established mode of treatment;[23] but where the settled practice allows but one course of medical treatment in the case, any departure of a physician therefrom may be regarded as the result of want of knowledge or attention.[24] Where there are different schools of practice, all that any physician undertakes is that he understands and will faithfully treat the case according to the recognized rules of his particular school.[25] To constitute a school of medicine under this rule, it must have rules and principles of practice for the guidance of all its members, as respects principles, diagnosis, and remedies, which each member is supposed to observe in any given case.[26]

3. Depending on Nature or Character of Injury or Disease. Whatever may be the character of the injury or disease a physician is called on to treat, he is only held to employ reasonable care and skill, to exercise only that degree of skill which is ordinarily possessed by members of the profession in like localities. He is not required to exercise care and skill proportionate to the character of the injury or disease he treats, and he is not liable if he does not treat a severe injury with such skill as its severity reasonably demands.[27]

4. Depending on State of Profession. In determining the degree of learning and skill required of a physician, regard must be had to the state of medical science at the time.[28] It has been held erroneous, however, to charge that the skill required is such as thoroughly educated physicians ordinarily exercise, as this lays down too high a test.[29]

5. Depending on Locality of Practice. Although there are some authorities which tend to support the rule that a physician is bound to exercise only such a degree of care as is ordinarily exercised in his profession in the particular locality in which he practises,[30] the better and more correct rule is that a physician and surgeon is required to exercise that degree of knowledge, skill, and care which physicians and surgeons practising in similar localities ordinarily possess.[31]

6. Depending on Compensation. The fact that a physician or surgeon renders his services gratuitously does not absolve him from the duty to use reasonable and ordinary care, skill, and diligence.[32] But if one does not profess to be a physician, or to practise as such, and is merely asked his advice as a friend or neighbor, he incurs no professional responsibility.[33]

7. Insurance of Cure or Benefit. In the absence of a special contract to that effect,[34] a physician does not warrant or insure that his treatment will be successful or even beneficial,[35] and he is not responsible in damages for want of success, unless it be shown to result from a want of ordinary skill or diligence.[36]

8. In Determining Nature of Injury or Malady and Mode of Treatment. A physician or surgeon is bound to use reasonable knowledge and care in learning the condition of his patient, in ascertaining if an operation is necessary, in determining whether the time and place are proper, and in making a diagnosis of the case.[37]

9. In Discontinuing Attendance. A physician, responding to the call of a patient, thereby becomes engaged, in the absence of a special agreement, to attend to the case, so long as it requires attention, unless he gives notice to the contrary

37. Quinn v. Donovan, 85 Ill. 194 (holding that an instruction, in an action against a surgeon for mistreatment of a fracture, that or is discharged by the patient;[38] and he is bound to use ordinary care and skill not only in his attendance, but in determining when it may be safely and properly discontinued.[39] But if the patient goes to the office of the physician, from whom he receives proper treatment, and then fails to return for further treatment, in consequence of which he suffers, he has no right of action against the physician.[40]

10. In Using Anesthetics. Where a patient is put under the influence of an anesthetic, depriving him of the use of his faculties, physicians, surgeons, and dentists are required to use the highest professional skill and diligence to avoid every possible danger.[41] But they are only bound to look to natural and probable effects,[42] and are not answerable for results arising from the peculiar condition or temperament of a patient, of which they had no knowledge.[43]

11. In Giving Instructions. It is the duty of a physician or surgeon, in taking charge of a case, such as a broken limb, to give his patient all necessary and proper instructions as to what care and attention the patient should give the limb, in the absence of the physician, and the caution to be observed in the use of the limb before it is entirely healed,[44] and for failure to discharge his duty in this respect he may be liable in damages.[45]

12. To Avoid Communicating Contagious Diseases. It is the duty of physicians who are attending patients afflicted with contagious diseases, when called to attend other patients, to take all such precautionary means as experience has proved to be necessary to prevent its communication to them.[46]

IV. Liability For Negligence or Malpractice.[47]

A. Practitioners Subject to Liability. A physician need not be qualified to practise in order to render himself liable for negligence or malpractice. If, by treating, operating on, or prescribing for physical ailments, a person holds himself out as a physician to persons employing him, and they believe him to be a physician, he will be chargeable as such.[48] But one who does not profess to be a physician, and volunteers to attend a sick person merely as an act of kindness, and without expectation of reward, incurs no liability, although his treatment of the case is improper.[49]

B. Acts or Omissions Constituting Negligence or Malpractice — 1. In General. It being the duty of a physician or surgeon to possess a reasonable degree of learning and skill, to exercise ordinary care and diligence, and to use his best judgment in all cases of doubt,[50] he will be liable for a failure to conform to the proper standard whereby injury results to a patient;[51] but mere lack of skill or negligence without injury gives no right to recover even nominal damages.[52] If a physician follows the established practice, and no gross error is shown, he is not liable for injuries caused by the treatment.[53] Nor is he liable for want of success.[54]

2. Refusal to Take Case. A physician, not being bound to render professional services to everyone who applies, is not liable for arbitrarily refusing to respond to a call, although he is the only physician available.[55]

3. Failure to Discover Nature of Injury or Ailment. A patient is entitled to an ordinarily careful and thorough examination, such as the circumstances, the condition of the patient, and the physician's opportunities for examination will permit.[56] If there is reasonable opportunity for examination, and the nature of the injury or ailment can be discovered by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, then a physician is answerable for failure to make such discovery;[57] otherwise not.[58] So too it has been held that if a physician, by the exercise of reasonable care and skill, ought to discover that an ailment is incurable, that it will not yield to usual treatment, and that the patient will not be benefited, and fails to make such discovery and advise the patient thereof, he is guilty of negligence.[59]

4. Wrong Diagnosis. A wrong diagnosis of a case, resulting from a want of skill or care on the part of the physician, and followed by improper treatment, to the injury of the patient, renders the physician liable in damages;[60] and the fact that the same results would have ensued even without the improper treatment is immaterial on the question of the physician's liability.[61] But unless improper treatment follows, a wrong diagnosis gives no right of action.[62] The fact that information and not medical treatment was sought does not excuse negligence in making the diagnosis.[63] But a general practitioner will not be held liable for making a wrong diagnosis of a very rare disease, which can only be detected by a skilled expert.[64] Nor does a mere omission by a patient's attending physician to

64. Wohlert v. Seibert, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 213, holding that a physician who is merely a general practitioner cannot be held liable in damages to a patient for diagnosing and treating a disease of the eye as conjunctivitis, when it was in fact glaucoma, where the evidence shows that glaucoma is a very rare disease; that it is incurable in character; that its certain diagnosis could be made only by the skilled expert, of special training, skill, and experience; that it should be treated with remedies and appliances which are never expected to be within the reach of the general practitioner of medicine; that its promi-

5. Failure to Follow Established Practice.[66] It has been broadly stated that any deviation from the established mode of practice is sufficient to charge a physician with liability in case of any injury arising to the patient.[67] When a particular mode of treatment is upheld by a consensus of opinion of the members of the profession, it should be followed by the ordinary practitioner; and if a physician sees fit to experiment with some other mode he does so at his own peril.[68] If, however, the character of the injury or disease is such that the patient cannot endure the most approved method of treatment in such cases, then a failure to resort to such treatment does not show a want of skill or negligence.[69] When the treatment adopted is not in accordance with established practice, but is positively injurious, the case is not one of negligence, but of want of skill.[70]

6. Abandonment or Neglect of Case — a. Unwarranted Abandonment. The unwarranted abandonment of a case at a critical period, resulting in increased pain and suffering on the part of the patient, will render the physician liable in damages.[71]

b. Failure to Attend With Sufficient Frequency. A physician is not chargeable with neglect on account of the intervals elapsing between his visits, where the injury requires no attention during the intervals; but is negligent where attention is required.[72]

c. Temporarily Leaving Practice. A physician has a right to leave temporarily his practice if he makes provision for the attendance of a competent physician upon his patients.[73] If he notifies a patient that he is going away, and indicates who will attend him in his stead, no neglect can be imputed to him.[74] But a physician who leaves a patient in a critical stage of the disease, without reason, or sufficient notice to enable the party to procure another medical attendant, is guilty of a culpable dereliction of duty, and is liable therefor.[75]

nent symptoms were so nearly identical with those of conjunctivitis that the diagnosis made by defendant was one reasonably to be expected from a general practitioner; and that the treatment given was not found faulty by any general practitioner or expert who testified in the case.

is in possession of his faculties and in such physical health as to be able to consult about his condition, and where no emergency exists making it impracticable to confer with him, his consent is a prerequisite to a surgical operation by his physician.[76] If, however, a patient voluntarily submits to an operation, his consent will be presumed, unless he was the victim of false and fraudulent misrepresentations.[77] Where an emergency arises calling for immediate action for the preservation of the life or health of the patient, and it is impracticable to obtain his consent or the consent of any one authorized to speak for him, it is the duty of the physician to perform such operation as good surgery demands, without such consent.[78] And again if, in the course of an operation to which the patient consented, the physician discovers conditions not anticipated before the operation was commenced, and which, if not removed, would endanger the life of the patient, he will, although no express consent be obtained or given, be justified in extending the operation to remove and overcome them.[79]

b. Of Husband or Father. Whether or not the consent of the husband or father to the performance of an operation upon a married woman or child is necessary is not well settled. One case holds that surgeons are justified in performing an operation upon a married woman with her consent, when they deem it necessary, whether her husband consents or not.[80] Other cases, apparently assuming that the husband's consent is necessary, hold that, by placing his wife under the care of a surgeon for treatment, a husband impliedly consents to such operations as may be found necessary or expedient.[81] A father's consent to the performance of an operation upon a child seventeen years of age has been held unnecessary.[82]

8. Failure to Give Instructions. Although a physician may have exercised a proper degree of skill and care in his treatment of a case, still if he fails to give the patient or his attendants proper instructions as to the care and attention best calculated to effect a cure, he is guilty of negligence for which he may be held liable.[83]

9. Communicating Contagious Disease. A physician who, knowing that he has an infectious disease, continues to visit a patient without apprising him of the fact and without proper precautions on his own part, and communicates to him this disease, is responsible for the consequent damage, including as well the suffering, danger, and loss of time, as the expense necessarily occasioned by the second disease, thus produced by his own wrongful act.[84] So also where a surgeon, while in attendance on a patient, directs the latter's wife to assist in dressing a wound, knowing that there was danger of infection, but negligently assuring her that there was no such danger, and she relies on his advice, and becomes infected with poison, the surgeon is liable.[85]

10. Intrusion of Unprofessional Assistant. Where a physician takes an unprofessional, unmarried man with him to attend a confinement case, when there was no emergency, both are liable in damages to the woman.[86]

11. Mistake in Prescription. Where a physician, by a lapsus calami, makes a mistake in a prescription, as the result of which the patient dies, the fact that the druggist who fills the prescription is also negligent is no defense in an action against the physician for malpractice.[87] But a physician is not liable for the druggist's negligence in putting up a prescription properly written by the physician.[88]

12. Malpractice Resulting in Death. A physician is liable for malpractice resulting in death, if it was the proximate cause thereof.[89] But if death was caused by a disease not resulting from a surgical operation in question the surgeon is not liable.[90]

13. Errors of Judgment. A physician entitled to practise his profession, possessing the requisite qualifications, and applying his skill and judgment with due care, is not ordinarily liable for damages consequent upon an honest mistake or an error of judgment in making a diagnosis, in prescribing treatment, or in determining upon an operation, where there is reasonable doubt as to the nature of the physical conditions involved, or as to what should have been done in accordance with recognized authority and good current practice.[91] Whether errors of judgment will or will not make a physician liable in a given case depends not merely upon the fact that he may be ordinarily skilful as such, but whether he has treated the case skilfully or has exercised in its treatment such reasonable skill and diligence as is ordinarily exercised in his profession.[92] There is a fundamental difference in malpractice cases between mere errors of judgment and negligence

The reasons for excepting malpractice cases from the rule that the exercise of defendant's best judgment is no defense to an action for negligence are to be found in the character of emergencies physicians meet which often preclude deliberation; in the nature of their undertaking which contracts for individual judgment and skill; in the peculiarity of the human constitution, which presents difficulties not arising from insensate matter; in the nature of medical science, which is based on progressive knowledge; and in the inherent uncertainty of the expert testimony involved. in previously collecting data essential to a proper conclusion, or in subsequent conduct in the selection and use of instrumentalities with which the physician may execute his judgment. If he omits to inform himself as to the facts and circumstances, and injury results therefrom, then he is liable.[93]

14. FRAUD AND DECEIT.[94] It is the duty of a physician to act with the utmost good faith toward his patient, and if he knows that he cannot accomplish a cure, or that the treatment adopted will probably be of no benefit, it is his duty to advise his patient of these facts, and if he fails to do so he is guilty of a breach of duty.[95] But to recover on account of deceit based on his statement that he could and would cure plaintiff, the latter must not only prove that the representation was false, but also that it was made with a fraudulent intent.[96]

15. WRONGFUL CERTIFICATE OF INSANITY.[97] Without statutory provisions to that effect, a civil action for damages against a physician for certifying to a person's insanity cannot be based on the insufficiency of the methods which he pursued in reaching and certifying a correct conclusion.[98] In an action against a physician for falsely certifying, through malice or negligence, to the insanity of plaintiff, the falsehood, and not the insufficiency of the certificate, is the ground of action against defendant.[99] Therefore a physician who signs a certificate of insanity which is false, without exercising ordinary care and prudence in making his examination, and without making due inquiry into the question of sanity, is liable to an action for damages.[1] Nor is he the less liable for the want of such due care and inquiry because he has acted bona fide.[2] But a physician who signs a certificate of insanity when the patient is sane is not liable therefor where the certificate was signed after making an examination, and the mistake was due merely to an error of judgment, provided the physician brings to the case the learning, care, and diligence required by law.[3] In such an action the burden is on plaintiff to show negligence,[4] and also to show that at the time the certificate of insanity was given he was in fact sane.[5] Defendant may show under what circumstances and on what information he acted in making such certificate.[6] If such evidence does not go to the extent of a justification in case the certificate is found to be false, it is proper evidence to be considered in awarding damages.[7]

16. EFFECT OF CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. It is the duty of a patient to coöperate with his physician and conform to the necessary prescriptions and treatment, and follow all reasonable instructions given.[8] Therefore it is a good defense to

For there may be responsibility where there is no neglect if the error of judgment is so gross as to be inconsistent with the use of that degree of skill that it is the duty of every physician to bring to the treatment of a case. an action for malpractice, where the physician or surgeon is charged with negligence or the non-observance of proper care or the want of skill in performing the services undertaken, that the patient was guilty of negligence at the time which conduced or contributed to produce the injury complained of;[9] but it will not suffice to defeat the action that the patient was subsequently negligent, and thereby conduced to the aggravation of the injury primarily sustained at the hands of the physician or surgeon, and such conduct on the part of the patient is pertinent only in mitigation of damages.[10]

Failure to return to physician.— In an action for malpractice, an instruction that, if plaintiff was told by defendant to visit him again as soon as he felt any pain, and, although feeling pain for a week, he neglected to call, he was guilty of contributory negligence preventing recovery was correct. Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 376.

Refusal to permit proper treatment.— Where a patient is delirious, and the members of his family having him in charge refuse to allow the proposed treatment, the physician or surgeon will not be required to use force, and will not be liable for any injury to limb or health resulting from a failure to use the proposed treatment. Littlejohn v. Arbogast, 95 Ill. App. 605. Where a surgeon is prevented from reducing a dislocation by the refusal of his patient to submit to the operation, the surgeon cannot be held liable for damages resulting therefrom. Littlejohn v. Arbogast, supra.

Operation performed at instance of patient.— If a surgeon, when called on, advises the patient, who is of mature years and of sound mind, that the proposed operation is unnecessary and improper, and the patient still insists on its performance, and the surgeon thereupon performs it, he cannot be held responsible to the patient for damages, on the ground that the operation was improper and injurious, as in such case the patient relies on his own judgment, and not on that of the surgeon, as to the propriety of the operation; and he cannot complain of an operation performed at his own instance and on his own judgment. Gramm v. Boener, 56 Ind. 497.

Information given to patient must be considered.— The information given by a surgeon to his patient concerning the nature of his malady is a circumstance that should be considered in determining whether the patient, in disobeying the instructions of the surgeon, was guilty of contributory negligence or not. Geiselman v. Scott, 25 Ohio St. 86.

"Directly" contributed proper.— In an action for malpractice, an instruction requiring the jury to find that plaintiff's own negligence directly contributed to the injury, before they could on that ground find for defendant, is not erroneous for using the word "directly," instead of "proximately." The natural temperament or weakness of a patient contributing to produce the injury primarily caused by the unskilful treatment of a physician is no bar to an action against such physician for malpractice, but may be shown in mitigation of damages. Mullin v. Flanders, 73 Vt. 95, 50 Atl. 813.

17. Effect of Admission of Want of Sufficient Skill. If a practitioner frankly informs a patient of his want of skill, or the patient is in some other way fully aware of it, the latter cannot complain of the lack of that which he knew did not exist.[11]

C. To Whom Liable — Gratuitous or Charity Patient. A physician may decline to respond to the call of a patient unable to compensate him; but, if he undertakes the treatment of such a patient, his liabilities for negligence or malpractice are the same as in the case of any other patient.[12] So a physician employed by a city to treat patients at the city almshouse is liable to one of such patients who is injured through the physician's negligence, although there is no contractual relation between such patient and the physician.[13]

D. For Whose Acts or Omissions Physician Liable — 1. Assistant. A physician is responsible for an injury done to a patient through the want of proper skill and care in his apprentice or assistant.[14]

2. Substitute. If a family physician or railway surgeon, on leaving town, recommends, in case of need, some other physician, who is not, however, in any sense in his employment, it does not make him liable for injuries resulting from the latter's want of skill.[15]

3. Partner. Partners in the practice of medicine are all liable for an injury to a patient resulting from the negligence, either of omission or commission, of any one of the partners, within the scope of their partnership business; but, for an injury resulting from the act of one partner outside of the common business, the offending partner is alone responsible.[16]

4. Nurse or Attendant. Physicians are not as a rule liable for the negligence of hospital nurses or attendants of which they are not personally cognizant.[17]

E. Actions For Negligence or Malpractice — 1. Nature and Form of Remedy. Where a physician or surgeon is employed to treat a patient without any express contract defining the character and extent of his duty and undertaking, either an action in contract or in tort may be maintained for the breach of the implied obligation arising from such employment caused by unskilful, negligent, and improper treatment.[18] When the action is in tort, case is the proper form of action,[19] and, although an operation is performed with malice, the patient having consented thereto, no recovery in trespass can be had therefor.[20] Where an express promise on the part of the physician is alleged and counted upon, the action is in contract, and not in tort.[21]

2. Time to Sue and Limitations. The particular statute of limitation applicable in actions for malpractice depends upon whether the action is in contract or in tort.[22] As the gist of an action to recover damages for unskilful treatment is the negligence of the surgeon, the statute begins to run from the time of the alleged negligence.[23] In some jurisdictions limitation of one year is expressly provided by statute in malpractice cases,[24] to run from the date of the termination of the professional services.[25]

3. Survival of Action. At common law an action for an injury to the person caused by the want of skill or negligence of a physician or surgeon does not survive the death of either party.[26] In many states, however, statutes provide for the survival of the action in such cases.[27]

4. Defenses.[28] A medical practitioner may perhaps protect himself from liability for malpractice by a special contract that he shall not be so liable.[29] Consent of the patient to the abandonment of the case by a physician may be a defense to a subsequent action for malpractice,[30] if such consent was not obtained by false representations.[31] It is no defense to a suit for malpractice that defendant was practising in violation of a statute making it an offense to practise physic without certain preliminary qualifications,[32] unless perhaps where the patient knew, when employing the physician, that he had not the qualifications.[33] Nor can a physician not belonging to one of the regular schools of medicine, such as a clairvoyant, relieve himself from liability by the contention that the patient was negligent in employing him with full knowledge of his methods of diagnosis and prescription.[34]

5. Pleading[35] — a. In General. It is ordinarily sufficient for plaintiff, in an action for malpractice, to aver that defendant was a physician and surgeon; that plaintiff retained and employed him as such to attend upon him; that he accepted and entered upon such employment, yet conducted himself in an unskilful and negligent manner, whereby plaintiff was injured, to his damage, etc.[36] Want of skill and care on the part of the physician must be alleged,[37] and also the specific acts of commission or omission concerning which negligence is imputed.[38] It is not necessary to aver expressly that it was the physician's duty to act skilfully,[39] or that any consideration was to be paid for the services rendered,[40] since these facts will be implied from the employment. Since an action for malpractice is founded on contract, although sounding in tort, it is unnecessary for the complaint to aver expressly that there was no negligence on the part of plaintiff.[41] To a complaint for malpractice, sounding in tort against two surgeons, an answer that each was separately employed is bad.[42]

b. Amendment. A plaintiff in an action to recover damages for malpractice by a physician may be allowed to amend his complaint to correspond with the proof.[43]

6. Issues and Proof. Plaintiff in an action for malpractice must recover, if at all, in accordance with his allegations; the evidence must be restricted within the issues as made by the pleadings.[44] Where the language of a complaint implies no more than the duty imposed by law to exercise reasonable skill and care, evi-

Illustrations.— In an action against a surgeon to recover damages for injuries alleged to have ensued from his want of ordinary care and skill in the treatment of a fracture, proof that he gave assurances to plaintiff that he possessed and would exercise extraordinary skill, and effect a cure, is not admissible to support the declaration. Goodwin v. Hersom, 65 Me. 223. In an action by a husband and wife against a physician for malpractice in treatment of the wife, there being no allegation of loss of the wife's services, evidence that the husband was dependent on his wife for support is inadmissible. Twombly v. Leach, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 397. Where the declaration in an action against a physician for malpractice does not allege general incompetency in defendant, plaintiff cannot recover on that ground, but must show that defendant did not properly exercise the skill which he in fact possessed. Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32, 29 N. W. 832. Where a complaint in an action for malpractice alleged that by reason of defendant's negligence in the treatment of plaintiff's fractured limb it became necessary to amputate it, and that by reason of the said negligence plaintiff suffered pain and anguish, this limited defendant's liability to neglect causing loss of the limb, and no recovery could be had for pain or anguish if dence of an express promise to cure is not necessary to sustain it.[45] One holding himself out as a surgeon is liable as well for want of skill as for negligence; and an injured party may sue for damages resulting from both, and recover, on proving damages resulting from either.[46]

7. Evidence[47] — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — (i) As to Negligence or Want of Skill. In an action against a physician for malpractice, no presumption of negligence or want of skill can arise from the fact that defendant failed to effect a cure.[48] The burden of proof in such a case is on plaintiff to show the physician's want of reasonable care, skill, and diligence in his treatment of the case,[49] and also that the injury complained of resulted from a failure to exercise these requisites.[50] Consent to an operation will be presumed from volun-

such loss was not caused by his negligence. Jacobs v. Cross, 19 Minn. 523. On a complaint for malpractice, charging negligence and want of skill in treating a fractured limb, by reason of which the same had to be amputated, evidence of the manner in which such amputation was performed is not competent, no lack of care or skill in that respect being charged. Jacobs v. Cross, supra. Where, in an action against a surgeon for alleged malpractice, the petition alleged unskilfulness in the treatment of the broken limb, and the answer traversed such allegation, without averring any hereditary peculiarity as a special defense, evidence as to the weakness of the bones of plaintiff's family was inadmissible. West v. Martin, 31 Mo. 375, 80 Am. Dec. 107. Where, in an action for malpractice, the character of the wound is stated in the answer, and not disputed by the replication, plaintiff will not be permitted to prove that it was not of the character alleged. Williams v. Poppleton, 3 Oreg. 139. The averment, in an action against a physician for malpractice, that defendant was employed at his special instance and request, is technical, and is sufficiently proved by showing that defendant held himself out as a practitioner soliciting public patronage, and that the employment was by mutual consent. Musser v. Chase, 29 Ohio St. 577. In an action for malpractice, plaintiff cannot give evidence that the physician abandoned the patient, and refused to prescribe, unless it is so laid in the declaration. tary submission to it, and the burden is on plaintiff to prove the contrary.[51] Where the physician sets up an affirmative defense, the burden is on him to prove it.[52]

(II) As to Contributory Negligence. The general rules as to the burden of proving contributory negligence in negligence cases are applicable in actions for negligence of a physician or malpractice.[53]

b. Admissibility — (I) Knowledge and Skill of Defendant. While there is some difference of opinion in the cases, the weight of authority is to the effect that, although the skill of defendant, or the want of it, is put in issue in a suit for malpractice, his reputation in that respect is not a defense, and evidence to establish it will be excluded.[54] Other cases hold that, where the action is for negligence, and the skill of the physician is not put in issue, he cannot show his general reputation for skill;[55] but where both negligence and want of skill are charged, it is competent for defendant to show his skill and reputation in that behalf.[56] Specific acts, however, are never competent to prove skill and competency.[57] Nor can the fact that a physician is reputed to be negligent and unskilful be allowed as proof to establish negligence or unskilful treatment in a particular case.[58] It has been held competent, however, for plaintiff to show, as affecting the skill and knowledge of the physician placed in charge of the case, that he was engaged largely in pursuits other than his profession of medicine and surgery.[59] But it is proper to exclude, on the ground of remoteness, testimony as

52. Chase v. Nelson, 39 Ill. App. 53, holding, however, that in an action against a physician for malpractice alleged to have caused the death of plaintiff's intestate, where defendant pleads the general issue, he may show the condition of the patient's health, and that death would have resulted in any event, without assuming the burden of proving that the negligent act of his own did not produce death.

Discharge by patient.— If a surgeon, called to attend one who has long been his employer, leaves his patient before he has been properly cared for professionally, or while he needs further attention, and relies on an alleged discharge by the patient as a defense to a suit brought for the abandonment, this being a new substantive matter of defense, the burden of proving it is on defendant. Evidence of prior good character.— Evidence of good character as a physician, several years prior to the time of injury, caused by malpractice, is inadmissible to rebut the charge of negligence at the time of the injury. Smith v. Stump, 12 Ind. App. 359, 40 N. E. 279.

In rebuttal.— In an action for malpractice, it is competent for plaintiff to show that defendant was not a regularly bred physician and surgeon, for the purpose of rebutting evi-to how defendant's treatment of like cases differed from that of other physicians.[60] So also evidence that defendant procured his certificate of proficiency from the state board of examiners without examination, by means of diplomas irregularly obtained from medical schools, is irrelevant, as are also defendant's statements concerning such diplomas.[61]

(11) NEGLIGENCE. In an action for malpractice evidence on the question of negligence, forming a part of the res gestæ, is admissible.[62] Plaintiff may show, by any legal evidence, that the method of treatment followed by the physician was improper.[63] Defendant may give in rebuttal any proper evidence tending to show want of negligence on his part.[64] Defendant may state what, from his study and experience, he deems proper treatment of the case in question,[65] and may show by experts that the treatment he gave was such as a physician of ordinary knowledge and skill would have given.[66] Evidence that he employed another skilful physician to assist him is competent,[67] but not to prove either dence introduced by him to support his general professional character. Grannis v. Branden, 5 Day (Conn.) 260, 5 Am. Dec. 143.

Exclamations of pain.—In an action against a surgeon for malpractice in treating a broken leg, evidence as to complaints made by plaintiff in regard to the pain suffered is admissible (Spaulding v. Bliss, 83 Mich. 311, 47 N. W. 210; Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32, 29 N. W. 832; Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; Link v. Sheldon, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 815 [affirmed in 136 N. Y. 1, 32 N. Intoxication of defendant.— Defendant's condition, as to being intoxicated, at the time he treated plaintiff, may be shown. Merrill v. Pepperdine, 9 Ind. App. 416, 36 N. E. 921.

Remarks of bystanders at time of examination.— Where, in an action for injury, resulting from a surgeon's unskilfulness in treating a dislocation as a fracture, it was shown that, if his diagnosis was correct, a grating sound would have been heard on manipulation of the limb, evidence may be given of remarks made by bystanders at the time of the examination that they heard such a sound. Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

Illustrations.— Where the manner of the treatment is in issue, defendants may properly be asked if therein they exercised their best judgment and skill. The answer may rebut the charge of negligence. Fisher v. Niccolls, 2 Ill. App. 484. A physician, sued for negligently applying to plaintiff's ankle liquid glass made by W, a druggist, and not so compounded as to neutralize the caustic elements, whereby the ankle was burned, may testify to his knowing of W holding himself out and advertising himself as a manufacturing chemist, at the time the solution was obtained; as in such case, in the absence of some circumstance which should have put the physician on his guard, he would not be chargeable with negligence in using the solution. Ball v. Skinner, 134 Iowa 298, 111 N. W. 1022. In an action for negligently performing a surgical operation on plaintiff's eye, alleged to have caused a loss of plaintiff's sight, evidence that the disease from which plaintiff was suffering generally resulted in a loss of sight is competent. Peck v. Hutchinson, 88 Iowa 320, 55 N. W. 511. In an action for malpractice in treating a cut on plaintiff's thumb, defendant may show that it is good medical treatment in some cases to withhold from a patient the extent of the disease and his actual condition. Twombly v. Leach, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 397. Defendant may testify that he refrained from making further visits on plaintiff because defendant was told by a third person that he (defendant) had been discharged, but he cannot detail the conversation with such third person unless held in the presence of plaintiff. skill or diligence on his part.[68] It is not proper, in making out a case for plaintiff, to show negligence in other cases by proving the results of defendant's treatment in such cases;[69] but the treatment received by the patient after defendant gave up the case may be shown.[70] The opinion of a physician is admissible, as a general rule, upon questions peculiarly within his knowledge as such.[71] A non-expert witness should not be permitted to testify as to the existence of a particular injury, but he may testify as to the actual condition of the injury, no opinion being expressed.[72] Immaterial[73] and hearsay[74] evidence is of course inadmissible.

(III) Contributory Negligence. In an action for injury from a physician's negligence, it is proper for the defense to show that it resulted from plaintiff's negligence;[75] but that fact cannot be shown by the statements of one who had no personal knowledge of it.[76]

(IV) Demonstrative Evidence. On a trial against a physician for malpractice, it is proper to allow plaintiff to exhibit his injured limb to the jury.[77]

c. Weight and Sufficiency — (I) In General. A mere preponderance of evidence is sufficient to prove an issue in an action for malpractice.[78] Although the fact that a patient fails to recover, or suffers injury, is not in general evidence of negligence on the part of the physician,[79] yet the injury may be of such a nature that negligence must be assumed from the unexplained fact of its happening.[80]

Illustrations.— That plaintiff was severely burned by X-rays while being treated by defendant for appendicitis is of itself evidence that the treatment was improper. Shockley v. Tucker, 127 Iowa 456, 103 N. W. 360. Evidence showing that after a broken ankle was reset the ankle and foot were crooked, and the ankle joint stiff, tends to prove negligence on the part of the physician in replacing the broken bones, and should be submitted to the jury. Hickerson v. Neely, 54 S. W. 842, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1257. Unex-

It is not necessary, to sustain a verdict for plaintiff, that all the expert witnesses called should consider the treatment pursued by defendant improper, nor will the fact that all such witnesses agree that a portion of the treatment is proper under some circumstances in itself defeat a recovery.[81] In determining the relative value of the evidence of medical experts in an action for surgical malpractice, the jury are to consider their professional knowledge and experience, freedom from bias, and the reasons they are able to give for their conclusions.[82]

(II) To Require Submission to Jury. Where the evidence is as consistent with the absence as with the existence of negligence, the case should not be left to the jury.[83]

8. Questions For Jury. What constitutes ordinary skill, care, and diligence on the part of a physician and surgeon is a question of law, in this view at least, that it must be stated by the court as defined by the books;[84] but when considered in connection with the facts which it is necessary for the jury to understand in order to be able to apply it to a particular case, it becomes a mixed question of law and fact.[85] Where the evidence is conflicting as to the facts on which the opinions of expert witnesses are based, and where the opinions of such witnesses, on a given state of facts in the case, materially differ, it is for the jury to determine, and their finding is conclusive.[86] If the treatment is in accordance with a recognized system of surgery, it is not for the court or jury to undertake to determine whether that system is the best, nor to decide questions of surgical science on which surgeons differ among themselves.[87]

9. Instructions — a. In General. In an action for malpractice, the court should make an adequate presentation of the case to the jury, explaining the precise questions at issue, and directing attention to the material evidence on both sides.[88] The jury should be instructed as to the necessity of the employment of plained, the fact that the physician attending a woman at child-birth failed to remove all of the placenta, thereby occasioning blood poisoning, justifies a conclusion of negligence. Moratzky v. Wirth, 67 Minn. 46, 69 N. W. 480.

See 39 Cent. Dig. tit. "Physicians and Surgeons," § 44.

But see Woodward v. Hancock, 52 N. C. 384, holding that what is reasonable skill and due care in a physician in the treatment of a patient is a question of law; and it is error to leave it to be determined by the jury.

the physician,[89] and as to the duty of the physician to exercise reasonable skill and care in his treatment of the case.[90] Instructions should be given relative to the burden of proof,[91] and, if the issue is raised, as to the care required of plaintiff, and the effect of his contributory negligence.[92] It is not sufficient to give a general instruction on the subject.[93] The instructions given should be confined

89. Miller v. Dumon, 24 Wash. 648, 64 Pac. 804, holding that a charge that, in order to recover for malpractice, the jury must be satisfied by a preponderance of evidence that defendant, acting as a surgeon, unskilfully and negligently treated plaintiff, followed by a charge to the effect that the fact that a physician responds to a call for his professional services does not necessarily constitute an employment unless some act is done or advice given by him which indicates an intention on his part to enter on the employment, sufficiently submits the issue as to whether the physician was employed.

90. Akridge v. Noble, 114 Ga. 949, 41 S. E. 78; Aspy v. Botkins, 160 Ind. 170, 66 N. E. 462 (holding that an instruction relating to the degree of skill required by a person holding himself out as a physician and surgeon was not erroneous for failure to state that he must have had a license to practise); Carpenter v. Blake, 50 N. Y. 696 [reversing 60 Barb. 488] (holding that it is error to instruct the jury that it is immaterial whether defendant was or was not skilful in his profession); Lawson v. Conaway, 37 W. Va. 159, 16 S. E. 564, 38 Am. St. Rep. 17, 18 L. R. A. 627 (holding that an instruction that defendant was bound to use the ordinary degree of care and skill of the "profession" in his community is not objectionable because the word "profession" is used instead of the more accurate term, "physician in good standing."

Degree of skill and care.— There is no substantial difference in the use of the words "ordinary" and "reasonable" in defining the care and skill required of a surgeon or physician in his employment. Kendall v. Brown, 74 Ill. 232. The words "fair" and "reasonable" are synonymous. Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 376.

As dependent on locality.— An instruction that defendant was required to use only the degree of care and skill of the physicians in his neighborhood is not ground for reversal, where there was evidence that there were other physicians in the neighborhood presumably of average ability, when compared with similar localities. Pelky v. Palmer, 109 Mich. 561, 67 N. W. 561. See also Whitesell v. Hill, 101 Iowa 629, 70 N. W. 750, 37 L. R. A. 830, Robinson, J., delivering the opinion of the court, and Kinne, C. J., dissenting.

Continuance of attention.— Instructions that it was the duty of defendant to give the patient such continued attention after the operation as the necessity of the case required, in the absence of special agreement or reasonable notice to the contrary, are correct, although the declaration only alleges a want of care and skill with reference to the operation itself. Williams v. Gilman, 71 Me. 21.

Departure from approved methods.— An instruction that "a departure from approved methods in general use, if it injures the patient, will render him (the physician) liable, however good his intentions may have been," is not improper, notwithstanding the rule may render a physician liable in case he adopts new methods, although improved ones. Allen v. Voje, 114 Wis. 1, 89 N. W. 924. An instruction that it is incumbent on surgeons to conform to the established system of treatment of a particular disease is not erroneous or misleading on the ground that the treatment referred to is one prescribed by some writers and surgeons, and not that universally commended, where there is no conflict as to the proper mode of treatment. Jackson v. Burnham, 20 Colo. 532, 39 Pac. 577. Such an instruction is not misleading, where there is no claim that the case was one involving doubt as to the proper mode of treatment, and the issue and testimony relates solely to the question whether defendant neglected to follow the ordinary and clearly established practice in treating plaintiff. Jackson v. Burnham, supra.

91. Swanson v. French, 92 Iowa 695, 61 N. W. 407 (holding that a charge that, if plaintiff disobeyed defendant's orders, he cannot recover, does not shift to defendant the burden of proof as to contributory negligence, when a former instruction clearly placed the burden on plaintiff); Vanhooser v. Berghoff, 90 Mo. 487, 3 S. W. 72 (holding that an instruction is erroneous which is open to the construction that the burden is on defendant to show the possession and exercise of skill and care).

92. Whitesell v. Hill, (Iowa 1896) 66 N. W. 894; O'Hara v. Wells, 14 Nebr. 403, 15 N. W. 722; Carpenter v. Blake, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 488 [reversed on other grounds in 50 N. Y. 696]; Beadle v. Paine, 46 Oreg. 424, 80 Pac. 903.

Necessity of following instructions see Whitesell v. Hill, (Iowa 1896) 66 N. W. 894.

Evidence of disobedience by the patient of the instructions of the physician may properly be referred to by the court in its instructions, in directing the attention of the jury to the question of contributory negligence. Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 376.

93. Reber v. Herring, 115 Pa. St. 599, 8 Atl. 830, holding that the jury should be distinctly charged that if the patient was guilty of contributory negligence in producing the injury complained of he cannot recover.

Refusal to charge on contributory negligence is cured by the subsequent giving of an instruction on the subject. Link v. Shelto the issues as made by the pleadings and the evidence,[94] and should not assume facts not proved,[95] or be inconsistent or misleading.[96]

b. As to Damages. An instruction that the measure of damages is full, complete, and ample compensation to the injured person is erroneous, since compensation is all that is required, and the use of the adjectives "full," "complete," and "ample" may lead the jury to believe that more than compensation is required.[97]

10. DAMAGES[98] — a. Nominal. Where it is impossible to distinguish between the consequences of the trouble for which a physician was called and the consequences of the maltreatment, only nominal damages can be given.[99] Acceleration of the death of a patient is more than a mere technical injury, and demands an award of more than nominal damages.[1]

b. Compensatory. Where a patient is injured by a physician's negligent and unskilful treatment, the loss or injury directly and naturally resulting from his fault or negligence is the measure of damages.[2] The amount is to be determined by the jury from the facts and circumstances of the case,[3] and the pecuniary loss, resulting from inability to labor,[4] bodily and mental pain and suffer-don, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 815 [affirmed in 136 N. Y. 1, 32 N. E. 696].

Illinois.— Wenger v. Calder, 78 Ill. 275, holding that, in an action against a surgeon for malpractice, where there is no evidence tending to prove wilful negligence, it is error to instruct the jury that they may find for plaintiff in any amount they deem proper, under the evidence, if they believe from the evidence that defendant was wilfully negligent.

Pennsylvania.— Richards v. Willard, 176 Pa. St. 181, 35 Atl. 114.

Texas.—Payne v. Francis, 37 Tex. 75, holding that in an action against a physician for damages alleged to be due to his unskilful treatment of a patient, it was error to instruct the jury that, if plaintiff was injured by unskilful treatment, ignorance, carelessness, or neglect, he might recover; no allegation being contained in the complaint as to carelessness or neglect.

Vermont.— Wilmot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 447, 94 Am. Dec. 338.

Wisconsin.—Prahl v. Gerhard, 25 Wis. 466, holding, however, that it was not error to instruct the jury that "if the injury was purely an accident, or from some other cause, while the defendant used and exercised a proper degree of skill, then the defendant is not liable," although there was no positive evidence of such accident or other cause.

A married woman who is not carrying on business or performing labor on her sole and separate account cannot, in an action against a physician for malpractice, recover for loss

ing,[5] loss of time,[6] and actual expenses incurred,[7] if resulting from or through the want of skill or care of the physician, may be taken into account, as so likewise may the character of the injury, as whether it is permanent or temporary,[8] and the condition or circumstances of the injured party.[9] Where the defense of contributory negligence is interposed, the jury should be warned to allow nothing for any aggravation of injury or new injury caused by plaintiff's own imprudence,[10] and evidence that another physician subsequently treated plaintiff improperly is competent to reduce the amount to be allowed.[11]

c. Exemplary or Punitive. While it has been held that exemplary damages for malpractice can be recovered only where the evidence shows an evil motive in the act complained of,[12] the weight of authority is to the effect that such damages may also be recovered where a physician has been guilty of gross negligence amounting to reckless indifference in treating a patient.[13]

Action by husband for wife's injury.— For injuries inflicted on a wife during a surgical operation, which resulted in her death, the husband is entitled to recover only for the actual damage caused to him by the injury, and which accrued prior to her death; and he can have no action for his or her mental suffering, as such action must be restricted to the person who received the physical injury. Rep. 292, holding that, in an action against a surgeon for malpractice, plaintiff's expectancy of life had nothing to do in estimating the damages he was entitled to recover, although his arm had become useless as the result of defendant's negligence; and it was error to admit life-tables as evidence, for the purpose of showing his expectancy of life.

Prospective damages.— Recovery for malpractice by a physician may embrace prospective as well as accrued damages. Howell v. Goodrich, 69 Ill. 556; Becker v. Janinski, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 675, 27 Abb. N. Cas. 45.

Operation by unlicensed dentist.— Exemplary damages are recoverable from defendants who, in conducting the business of dentistry, caused plaintiff to be operated on by an employee who was unlicensed as a dentist, and through whose negligence and want of skill he suffered a severe injury. Mandeville v. Courtright, 142 Fed. 97, 73 C. C. A. 321, 6 L. R. A. N. S. 1003 [reversing 126 Fed. 1007].

11. New Trial.[14] Where the verdict in a malpractice case is manifestly against the great preponderance of the evidence, it is an abuse of discretion not to grant a new trial.[15] A new trial on account of excessive damages for malpractice will only be granted where they are so excessive as to indicate that the jury acted from prejudice, partiality, or corruption, or were misled as to the proper measure of damages.[16]

12. Review. The admission of evidence,[17] or the giving of an instruction,[18] not prejudicial to either party, is not fatal error. Where there is a conflict in the testimony of the experts, and no great preponderance either way, the verdict of the jury will not be disturbed.[19] Where, however, the evidence greatly preponderates against the verdict, it will be set aside.[20]

V. COMPENSATION.[21]

A. Right to Compensation[22] — 1. In General. In England, under the common law, a medical practitioner had no remedy at law to recover a remuneration for his services. He was presumed to act with a view only to an honorary reward.[23] He might, however, recover on an express contract to remunerate him for his attendance.[24] This rule has never been in force in this country, and a physician is entitled to recover for his services in the same manner as any other person who performs services for another.[25] And since 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, a physician may also recover for his services in England without an express contract.[26] An employment of a physician by a party, without express agreement as to compensation, raises an implied agreement on the part of the employer to pay what the services are reasonably worth.[27] Physicians and surgeons can recover for the services of their students in attendance on their patients,[28] and also for the services of such assistants as they may require.[29]

2. As Dependent on Right to Practice — a. In General. In the absence of a statute requiring a license, or prohibiting the practice of medicine without it for a fee or reward, an unlicensed physician is entitled to recover for his services.[30] Every state has now enacted statutes regulating the practice of medicine,[31] and in several unqualified practitioners are expressly prohibited from recovering for their services.[32] In the majority of the states, however, no express provision on the subject exists, but the courts have held, almost without exception, that even in the absence of an express prohibition, a physician may not recover for professional services unless he shows compliance with the requirements of the statute as to qualification.[33] Where the statute further requires that the certificate of qualification be registered, a physician who has not complied with such requirement is not entitled to recover his fees,[34] unless such registration is not made a

St. (1838) c. 353, § 2. Thompson v. Hazen, 25 Me. 104. Assumpsit lies on an express promise to pay for services rendered by one practising the healing art according to the methods of those calling themselves "Christian Scientists," plaintiff having complied with Me. Qualification at time of trial sufficient.— In England it has been held that a physician may recover for his services, although not registered at the time they are rendered, if he appears to be duly registered at the time of the trial. prerequisite to the right to practise.[35] These decisions apply the principle that where a statute has for its manifest purpose the promotion of some object of public policy, and prohibits the carrying on of a profession, occupation, trade, or business, except in compliance with the statute, a contract made in violation of such statute cannot be enforced.[36] The mere fact that the practice of medicine is not punishable under the penal code, but is in violation of a civil statute, will render the contract void.[37]

b. Excuse For Failure to Qualify. A physician is not prevented from recovering for attendance before he had registered, where his delay in registering was owing to the registry clerk's negligence.[38] So also a physician practising without a license may maintain an action at law for his services, if, during the time of those services, there was no existing board of examiners.[39] But it has been held that a physician cannot recover for services rendered before the issuance of his certificate by the board, although he made application therefor before his employment began.[40]

c. Effect of Repeal or Amendment of Disqualifying Act. Where a disqualifying statute not only takes away all right of action for services performed by an unlicensed physician, but renders a contract to perform such services void in its inception, the repeal of such statute does not validate prior transactions, so as to enable the physician to recover compensation for services rendered by him before the passage of the repealing act.[41] The same rule applies where the disqualifying statute is amended so as to permit a certain excepted class of physicians to practise without a license.[42] Where, however, the disqualifying statute merely deprives an unlicensed physician of legal remedy for recovering compensation for his services, without preventing the accruement of a valid debt, then when such statute is repealed, which imposes this restraint upon the physician's remedy, he may maintain his action for services rendered prior to such repeal.[43]

d. Effect of Revival of Disqualifying Act. The revival of an act which invalidates the contracts of unlicensed physicians revives also the exception of the former act as to physicians practising at the time of its enactment; and hence a physician practising at the time of the revival may collect his fees, although not qualified thereunder.[44]

3. As Dependent on Beneficial Result of Services. In the absence of an express agreement, the right of a physician to be compensated for his services does not depend upon the measure of his success in effecting a cure by the means employed, but upon diligent exercise, under his employment, of the skill which commonly pertains to his profession. Such services are regarded as beneficial in a legal sense, and the right to adequate compensation arises upon their rendition, whether the outcome be in fact beneficial to the patient or otherwise.[45]

4. As Dependent on Want of Skill or Negligence. Whether a physician is entitled to compensation for his services when he has failed to exercise ordinary skill or has been negligent in the treatment of a case is a question upon which there is a conflict of authority. One line of decisions takes the position that if a physician fails in his duty to exercise ordinary skill and care in treating a patient, he is guilty of a default in his undertaking, and can recover nothing for his services.[46] Other authorities hold that the fact that a physician was guilty of negligence in the treatment of his patient, resulting in damages to the latter, does not necessarily preclude him from recovering any compensation whatever for his services; the amount of his recovery, if anything, depending on the amount of damages suffered because of his negligence; in other words he may recover the value of his services less the amount of damages suffered by reason of his negligence.[47]

5. As Dependent on Place of Residence or of Performance of Services. The provisions of a statute regulating the practice of medicine and surgery apply to practitioners living without the state, as well as to those within it; and hence no physician or surgeon, although he may live without the state, will be entitled to recover fees for services rendered within it, unless previously licensed in the manner prescribed thereby.[48] An exception to this rule exists in the case of an emergency,[49] but the right to recover is not to be extended beyond the necessity of the actual emergency.[50] A statute prohibiting a recovery for medical services rendered by an unlicensed physician does not prevent a recovery in that state for services rendered in another;[51] but a contract by a physician duly qualified to practise in the province of Quebec, where he has his domicile, to render professional services in one of the United States, by the laws of which he is prohibited from practising, is illegal, and no recovery therefor can be had in the courts of such province.[52]

physician's services shall be deemed a gratuity or constitute a claim for compensation must be determined, it has been held, by the common understanding of both parties. If they were intended to be and were accepted as a gift or act of benevolence, they cannot at the election of the physician create a legal obligation to pay.[53] But their character is not controlled by the inexpressed and revocable intentions of plaintiff, although his purposes subsequently asserted may aid in ascertaining it.[54] Where a physician renders services upon an understanding between the parties that he was to be remunerated by a legacy, this amounts to an agreement that he was to make no charge;[55] but if the services are performed under the mere expectation of a legacy, the physician is entitled, on being disappointed in his expectation, to recover compensation therefor.[56]

7. Under "No Cure No Pay" Contract. If a physician commence attending on a patient, under a contract that if there is no cure there shall be no pay, he cannot recover for his services or medicines, unless he shows a performance of the terms of the contract on his part.[57] When, however, a cure has been fairly effected, the contract cannot be evaded by the fact that the patient subsequently suffers a recurrence of the same disease.[58] Where the contract contains a condition that if a cure is not at first effected, the patient shall submit to further treatment, the physician is entitled to the agreed compensation, even though a cure is not effected, if the patient refuses or neglects to submit to further treatment.[59]

8. For Medicine Furnished. Under a statute which prohibits the practising of medicine by persons who have not complied with the provisions of the statute, it is unlawful for such unauthorized person to furnish medicine to another; and he is not entitled to recover for medicine so furnished.[60] Yet if he sells drugs and medicines apart from his professional business as a physician, he may recover for them.[61]

B. Liability For Compensation[62] — 1. Liability of Patient[63] — a. In General. White v. Mastin, 38 Ala. 147. states it is held that one who requests a physician to attend another professionally, without indicating that he acts as agent or messenger, is liable for the physician's charges.[71]

b. For Subsequent Visits. If one engages a physician to attend an urgent case, and makes no limitation as to time, he is liable to such physician for all subsequent visits, until his services are dispensed with.[72]

3. Third Person Assuming Liability After Services Begun. There is nothing in the ordinary relation between a physician and his patient which will prevent the former from discontinuing his services on the account of the latter, and entering into a contract with another for the payment of the charges for his subsequent attendance, and the assent of the patient to the making of such contract is not necessary.[73]

C. Amount of Compensation — 1. In General — a. In Absence of Contract. Where the services of a physician are performed on request, and no agreement is made in respect to them, the law raises an implied promise to pay so much as the services are reasonably worth.[74] There is no presumption of law as to the value of a physician's services,[75] nor that a jury can ascertain their value without testimony from persons knowing something about it.[76] The question of what is reasonable is peculiarly within the province of the jury;[77] but they have no right to ignore the testimony, and form an independent conclusion.[78] A physician canthe surgeon's bill for such attendance should not be set aside as unsupported by the evidence. Till v. Redus, 79 Miss. 125, 29 So. 822.

Intention communicated to physician.— Where the physician is aware of the fact that one requesting his services acted merely as a messenger, and did not intend to make himself personally liable for the services to be rendered, there can of course be no recovery against the messenger. not sustain a claim for larger compensation for non-expert services than an ordinary man would be entitled to for the same services, on the ground alone that, as an expert in his profession, his time is more valuable than that of ordinary men.[79]

b. Under Contract. When a valid contract has been made as to the amount of the compensation to be paid for medical services, no question as to the actual value of the services can arise.[80]

2. Elements to Be Considered in Estimating Amount — a. Customary Charge. A physician is entitled to recover the ordinary and reasonable charges usually made for such services by members of the same profession of similar standing.[81] Therefore, to prove the value of such services, customary charges of physicians for like services in the same locality or neighborhood may be shown;[82] but proof of what plaintiff charged another person for similar services is not admissible,[83] except in connection with proof that such charge was made at his usual rate, and that this rate was known to defendant.[84]

b. Nature of Disease or Injury. It is competent for a physician to show the nature of his patient's disease or injury and its mode of treatment, in order to prove the value of his services.[85]

c. Professional Standing. In an action by a physician for professional services, he may show that his professional standing is high, as bearing on the value of his services,[86] provided his general professional reputation is drawn in question.[87]

d. Skill and Learning. Evidence of a physician's learning and skill is competent to be shown in estimating the value of his services.[88]

e. Daily Income. In determining the value of a physician's services it is immaterial what his average daily income from his profession was or had been.[89]

A promise not to charge more than a certain amount is binding. Thomas' Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 642.

A contract in the alternative is valid and enforceable. Doyle v. Edwards, 15 S. D. 648, 91 N. Money or certificate of skill.— Where a contract for medical treatment called for five thousand dollars in cash or a certificate of plaintiff's skill, it was held that the five thousand dollars was not a penalty for refusal of the certificate, and therefore, no certificate being given, such amount could be recovered as compensation for the services. f. Loss of Other Practice. In determining the compensation of a physician for services rendered in compliance with a patient's request to give them exclusively for a time, to the abandonment of other practice, the probable but not the actual loss in other practice may properly be considered.[90]

g. Financial Condition of Patient. There is a conflict in the authorities as to whether it is proper to prove the value of the estate of a person for whom medical services have been rendered, or the financial condition of the person receiving such services, to affect the reasonableness of the physician's charge. In some jurisdictions such evidence is held to be admissible for this purpose.[91] In others the financial condition of the patient may not be considered,[92] except in rebuttal of evidence from the other side attempting to show the custom of a lower standard,[93] or where there is evidence of a recognized usage, which has grown into a custom, to graduate professional charges in reference to the financial condition of the patient, so that it may be considered that the services were rendered and accepted in contemplation of it.[94] Whatever may be the true principle governing this matter in contracts, the financial condition of a patient cannot be considered where there is no contract and recovery is sustained on a legal fiction which raises a contract in order to afford a remedy which the justice of the case requires.[95]

3. Opinion Evidence. Physicians may give their opinions as experts as to the value of the services rendered in an action for compensation.[96] But one not a physician is not competent to express his opinion as to the value of such services.[97] Nor does it make any difference that a competent witness has previously, in his hearing, testified as to such value.[98]

D. Actions For Compensation[99] — 1. Nature and Form of Remedy. Indebitatus assumpsit lies on a physician's bill for medicines, travel, and attendance.[1]

2. Defenses. In a suit for services rendered by a physician to his patient, a showing that plaintiff's services were of no value, and that the treatment used was worthless and could not produce a cure, will in some jurisdictions defeat a recovery.[2] On this same ground a plea of recoupment or counter-claim, springing out of the contract, may be filed;[3] but a plea of set-off, based on a tort in giving defendant an overdose of medicine, has been held improper as matter of defense.[4] Intoxication sufficient to render a physician incompetent to perform his duty is a defense to an action for compensation; but one who, knowing of the intemperate habits of a physician, continues to employ him, cannot set up such defense.[5] The fact that a physician was unable, from illness, to render future professional services for which a note was given is a complete defense to an action on the note.[6] A statute prohibiting an unauthorized practitioner from recovering his fees may of course be pleaded in defense to an action therefor;[7] but the failure of a physician to register, under an ordinance imposing a penalty for practising in the city without having registered, is immaterial in such an action.[8]

3. Pleading[9] — a. Declaration or Complaint. In an action by a physician for services rendered, it is almost uniformly held that it will be presumed that he has complied with all statutory requirements essential to his authority to practise medicine, and the complaint need not allege such compliance.[10] An allegation of qualification at the time of filing the pleading is not a sufficient allegation of qualification and authority to engage in practice and recover compensation for services performed months before the commencement of the action.[11]

b. Plea or Answer. Want of authority to practice need not be specially pleaded in defense to an action for medical services rendered.[12] But to authorize the defense of recoupment or counter-claim, defendant should either plead the matter specially, or else plead the general issue, and, at the same time that plea is interposed, give notice of the special matter relied on.[13]

4. Issues and Proof. Malpractice, if given in evidence to defeat entirely a physician's claim, is admissible under the general issue without notice; if merely to reduce the claim, then notice should be given.[14] So where the answer in an action for medical services admits the services, but denies the value alleged, defendant may show under such allegation that the treatment by plaintiff was unskilful.[15] Under the common counts for a quantum meruit, it is competent for defendant to prove the real value of the services, or that they were of no value.[16] In an action by a physician for services, under an allegation that "plaintiff rendered professional services," he cannot prove services rendered by another physician acting for him.[17]

5. Evidence[18] — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — (I) In General. In an action by a physician to recover his fees, the burden is on him to prove that he is a physician, that he was employed as such by defendant, that he rendered the services alleged, and the value of such services. He need not prove their value to defendant.[19] decided weight of authority seems to be in favor of the rule that in a suit for professional services a license or due qualification under the law will be presumed, and the burden of proving want of authority is upon defendant.[20]

(III) As to Employment. In an action for fees, the burden is on the physician to prove his employment.[21]

(IV) As to Necessity of Visits. In an action by a physician to recover the value of professional services, plaintiff is deemed the best and the proper judge of the necessity of frequent visits; and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the court will presume that all the professional visits made were deemed necessary, and were properly made.[22]

(V) As to Skill and Care. In an action by a physician to recover for professional services the presumption is that such services were performed in an ordinarily skilful manner, and where want of such skill in their performance is alleged as a defense, the burden of proof is on defendant.[23] Furthermore, where want of skill and care is set up in defense to his action for services, the burden of proof is on defendant to show that no want of care on his own part tended to consummate the injury complained of by him.[24]

(VI) As to Change of Liability For Services. Where a physician in the beginning renders his services solely on his patient's responsibility, in the absence of a special contract, he has the right to discontinue, and enter into a contract with another to become responsible for his subsequent services, and in such case the burden is on him to show, not only a discontinuance, or a proposal to discontinue, but also an agreement on the part of the third person to become responsible.[25]

The reason why the license will be presumed, where there is no evidence to the contrary, rests upon the principle that, when an act is required by positive law to be done, the omission of which would be a misdemeanor, the law presumes that it has been done, and therefore the party relying on the omission must make some proof of it, although it be a negative. (VII) As to Promise to Compensate. Medical attendance being valuable, the law presumes a promise to pay,[26] unless it clearly appears that the services rendered were intended to be gratuitous.[27]

b. Admissibility. In an action by a physician for professional services, evidence is admissible to prove or disprove the existence of a special contract;[28] to show want of skill on the part of the physician,[29] and that his treatment was of no benefit;[30] to show the understanding of the parties as to the person liable for the services rendered;[31] and to prove or disprove a promise to pay.[32] Evidence as to the result of the treatment by a physician subsequently employed is inadmissible, as his treatment cannot alter the value of plaintiff's services.[33] Irrelevant and immaterial evidence is of course inadmissible.[34]

c. Weight and Sufficiency. In an action by a physician for his fees, the customary rules as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence apply.[35] It is not, however, necessary that all the items of a physician's account should be strictly proved;[36] he may recover by establishing the fact of his habit of keeping correct books of account, and that the account sued upon had been correctly copied from his books.[37] But evidence that plaintiff practised in defendant's family, and was seen going and returning from defendant's house, coupled with proof that the

29. McDonald v. Harris, 131 Ala. 359, 31 So. 548, holding that evidence by the patient's wife that plaintiff had stated that he would effect a permanent cure in three months is admissible, but only for the purpose of showing a want of ordinary skill.

Worthlessness of medicine used.— In an action by a physician to recover an agreed fee under a contract to cure defendant "or no pay," where it is shown that defendant refused to submit to treatment, defendant may prove that the medicine used was worthless, and to do so may compel plaintiff, on cross-examination, to testify as to the ingredients of which it was composed. items, as charged, were according to customary rules, will not create a legal presumption of indebtedness by defendant.[38] Conceding that a physician must prove his right to practise before he can collect his bill, slight evidence is sufficient as against one who called him.[39] A receipt "in full for medical services" is prima facie a satisfaction of the claim against the patient,[40] and the presumption of payment in full thus raised is not overcome by expert testimony that the services were worth more than the account receipted for.[41]

6. QUESTIONS FOR JURY.[42] It is for the jury to determine whether or not a physician has exercised reasonable care and skill in the treatment of his patient.[43]

7. INSTRUCTIONS. The instructions in an action by a physician for his fees must conform to the pleadings and the evidence,[44] and once given need not be repeated.[45] Where malpractice is relied upon as a defense, it is reversible error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury that, if they find as a fact plaintiff was guilty of malpractice, he cannot recover for such services.[46] An instruction is erroneous which confines the jury, in the determination of the value of the services rendered, to a consideration of the benefits resulting to defendant therefrom;[47] but in some jurisdictions an instruction that if the patient received no benefit, and the result was due to the physician's lack of skill or care or failure to exercise the same, he was entitled to no compensation, is proper.[48]

8. REVIEW. A verdict plainly against the evidence will be set aside.[49] Where the evidence is sufficient to raise an inference of malpractice, a verdict for defendant will not be disturbed.[50] Conceding the necessity of proof of due qualification by a physician in an action to recover for his services, the question cannot be raised for the first time in the appellate court.[51]

VI. MEDICAL SOCIETIES.[52]

A medical society, incorporated under the laws of the state, has the power to make by-laws, even in the absence of express authority, to regulate the conduct of its members, and provide for their admission and expulsion.[53] This power, even when conferred by statute, is not an arbitrary, unlimited power. cannot be made contrary to or inconsistent with the laws of the state.[54] Furthermore, the code of medical ethics adopted is obligatory on members alone, and its non-observance previous to membership furnishes no legal cause either for exclusion or expulsion.[55] A medical society, being a body corporate, has the power of removal or expulsion of its members as an incident to its constitution; but it cannot be exercised without a previous conviction or indictment in a criminal court for the offense charged, except where the offense relates merely to the official or corporate character of the accused, and amounts to a breach of the conditions expressly or tacitly annexed to his franchise or office.[56] Whether or not a member has violated a by-law providing for expulsion for "unprofessional conduct" is a question to be determined by the corporation; and the courts cannot sit as appellate tribunals to review the judgments of the corporate authorities, unless their authority be transcended, or fraud or bad faith be shown.[57] A member of the medical society of a county who is expelled cannot resort to a court of law for relief until he has appealed to the state medical society, where such a method of procedure is provided for.[58]

I. DEFINITION.

The term "pilot" includes two classes of persons: (1) Those whose duty it is to guide vessels into or out of ports; and (2) those intrusted with the navigation of vessels on the high seas.[1]

1. Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450, 17 L. ed. 805; Abbott Shipp. 195.

A pilot is also defined as "one who steers a ship or vessel, a guide." Dean v. Healy, 66 Ga. 503, 504 [quoted in Adams v. McCaughey, 21 R. I. 341, 345, 43 Atl. 646].

Twofold meaning of term.—A "pilot" is defined to be: (1) An officer serving on board of a ship during the course of a voyage, and having the charge of the helm and of the ship's route; and (2) an officer authorized by law, who is taken on board at a particular place for the purpose of conducting a ship through a river, road, or channel, or from or into a port. State v. Turner, 34 Oreg. 173, 178, 55 Pac. 92, 56 Pac. 645; Chapman v. Jackson, 9 Rich. (S. C.) 209, 212; The Wave v. Hyer, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,300, 2 Paine 131, 147 [citing Abbott Shipp. 148]; Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in People v. Francisco, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 30, 32].

As a public officer.—"A pilot . . . in no sense exercises or discharges the functions of a public office. No portion of the sovereignty of the country attaches to his position or duty. It is neither legislative, executive nor judicial, and does not therefore fall legitimately within the scope of a quo warranto information as to public officers." Atty.-Gen. v. McCaughey, 21 R. I. 341, 345, 43 Atl. 646 [citing Dean v. Healy, 66 Ga. 503]. A pilot is not an officer, within the meaning of the constitution and statutes of Florida, but he is a person invested by law with peculiar powers and privileges connected with commerce, for the exercise of which a qualification is required by the state. The privileges and powers which he has being of a public nature, resulting from legislative grant of franchise, if he exercise such franchise without the qualifications described by statute, an information in the nature of a quo warranto may be brought by the attorney-general. State v. Jones, 16 Fla. 306, 310. Pilots of the harbor of San Francisco are public officers. They are appointed by virtue of an act of the legislature for a fixed term to their employments, have definite duties prescribed, fixed rules of compensation, and are required to give bond, and are entitled to do all the business of pilots for the harbor of San

II. POWER TO REGULATE AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A. In General. The power to regulate commerce conferred on congress by the United States constitution [2] does not exclude the exercise of authority by the states to regulate pilots. It is exclusive only when exercised.[3] And while congress in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce between states and foreign nations can legislate upon the subject of pilotage as well in ports and harbors as on the high seas, yet by so doing it does not repeal, but simply suspends, the state law upon the subject in conflict therewith; and when the act producing this result is repealed, or so modified as to permit the operation of the state law, it becomes again valid and in force.[4]

B. Conflict Between Federal and State Laws. Where, however, a state statute is in conflict with the constitution and laws of the United States, it is null and void;[5] and where a United States statute is enacted in relation to pilotage, it supersedes all state laws covering the same, so far as it goes.[6] The United Pilotage is compensation for services performed by a pilot. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 212, 5 S. Ct. 826, 29 L. ed. 158; Southern Steamship Co. v. New Orleans Port Wardens, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 31, 18 L. ed. 749.

"Pilot's cruising ground" and "pilot's water or pilotage ground" are not synonymous. "By pilot's cruising ground, is meant that distance out in the sea along a certain extent of coast that pilots cruise for vessels bound to ports, inlets, harbors, rivers or bays into which a pilot may take them by his commission. By pilot's water or pilotage ground, is meant the access to a bay, inlet, river, harbor or port, beginning at the exterior point, where a pilot may take leave of an outward-bound vessel, and extending to the places fixed upon by law or usage for the anchorage or mooring of inward-bound vessels." Lea v. The Alexander, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,153, 2 Paine 466, 468 [quoted in The Whistler, 13 Fed. 295, 298, 8 Sawy. 232].

S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4236 [U. S. Comp. States Revised Statutes[7] prohibit states from discriminating in the rates of pilotage or half-pilotage between vessels sailing between ports of the same state and vessels sailing between ports of different states.[8] However, a state law requiring masters of vessels bound to ports in that state to accept the services of the first licensed pilot offering is not unconstitutional.[9] No inherent rights guaranteed by the federal constitution are infringed by state regulations providing for the appointment of pilots and restricting the right to pilot to those duly appointed;[10] and only the discriminatory features of state pilotage laws are abrogated by the provision of the United States Revised Statutes[11] forbidding such discrimination, and annulling and abrogating all existing regulations or provisions making any such discrimination.[12]

C. Conflict Between Laws of Different States. A state statute which prohibits any one not licensed under authority of the state from piloting a vessel to a port within the state is void so far as it interferes with the employment on public waters of pilots licensed by other states bordering thereon.[13] However, a (holding that the act of congress of Aug. 30, 1852, for appointing inspectors in certain districts, and authorizing them to license engineers and pilots, takes the place of any state law, and a license protects the holder against penalties inflicted by a state law for not obtaining a license under its provisions); The Alameda v. Neal, 32 Fed. 331, 12 Sawy. 479 [affirming 31 Fed. 366, 12 Sawy. 429]; The Panama, 18 Fed. St. at L. 411), which requires that a sea-going steam vessel, subject to the navigation laws of the United States, when navigating any of the waters thereof, shall be in charge of a pilot licensed by the inspectors of steam vessels, is cumulative, and does not annul or supersede a state law requiring that such pilot, when piloting such vessel within the limits of the state, should always be licensed by the pilot commissioners of the state. See, however, Sturgis v. Spofford, 45 N. Y. 446, holding that an action to recover a penalty for violating chapter 467, section 29, regulating pilotage in the port of New York, is not barred by the act of congress of August, 1866, regulating pilotage in harbors as well as at sea, where the act for which the penalty is sought was done before the passage of the act of congress, although the action therefor was brought afterward.

St. (1901) p. 3037], interferes with such laws only so far as they relate to these vessels, as the section expressly declares that nothing in this title shall be construed to annul or affect any regulation established by the laws of any state, requiring all vessels leaving a port in any such state, other than coastwise steam vessels, to take a pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of such state.

pilot of one state, although authorized by act of congress to pilot vessels into the ports of another state, cannot recover the pilotage fees allowed by the laws of the latter state on the refusal of a vessel to employ him.[14] A state can establish a compulsory system of pilotage as to vessels coming from the sea into inland ports, and as to vessels going from her inland ports to the sea, without establishing a compulsory system of pilotage as to vessels trading between her inland ports respectively, and no discrimination in state pilotage laws forbidden by the United States statutes is thereby made.[15]

III. PILOT COMMISSIONERS.[16]

By legislative enactment in many states, boards of pilot commissioners have been created who are empowered to make rules for the government of pilots and pilot boats, and they are subject to such proper and legal rules as the boards may see fit to make;[17] and state laws conferring upon local boards power to fix rates of pilotage are not void as granting powers which may not be delegated;[18] and they are enacted by a power originally within the states, and not by that conferred by the United States.[19] They need not be general and uniform throughout the state, but may be regulated according to local needs.[20] However, the public has no interest in the government of pilots or their boats, except so far as it is conducive to the public good, and any rule or set of rules which shall have any other purpose than this, even though they may be made for the benefit of and may be lawful for the master or commander of any vessel coming into or going out of any port situate upon waters which are the boundary between two states, to employ any pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of either of the states bounded on the said waters to pilot said vessel to or from said port, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding); The Alzena, 14 Fed. 174. See also The Charles A. Sparks, 16 Fed. 480, holding that where by a statute of one state vessels bound to a port of that state were free from the obligation of compulsory pilotage when not spoken outside of a certain line, such a statute has no application to pilot services tendered by a pilot licensed under the laws of another state situate on the same river. IV. LICENSES.

A. In General. Pilot commissioners are usually empowered to make such rules and regulations in regard to examinations for, and the issuance of, pilots' licenses as they may see fit, provided they do not contravene some positive provision of statute, either state or federal.[22] The exhibition by a person of a warrant or license to act as pilot raises the presumption that he has the right to act as such,[23] and entitles him upon showing it to be recognized as a licensed pilot, and requires the ship to receive him as prima facie a pilot.[24] Since the commissioners have only the powers conferred by the act, they must appoint pilots from the classes of persons named therein.[25]

B. Revocation or Suspension. The pilot commissioners may revoke or Renewal of license.— Hill Annot. Laws Oreg. § 3904, provides for the granting of licenses to pilots by the pilot commissioners, on the pilot grounds of the Columbia and Willamette rivers, and, as amended by Laws (1893), p. 11, authorizes the board to limit the number of such pilots. Section 3907 provides that licenses granted shall be annually renewed unless for good cause, to be determined by the board, in which case the holder of a license shall be notified ten days before the expiration of his license, and shall be entitled to a hearing, and it was held that, without such notice, the board has no power to withhold a renewal on the ground that it has determined to reduce the number of pilots. See also Joslyn v. Nickerson, 1 Fed. 133, holding that a document certifying that the person named therein is qualified to act as master and pilot, and that "he is hereby licensed to act as such master," the phrase quoted being printed, and there being no room after it for the insertion of the words, "and pilot," is a sufficient license as pilot.

Parol proof of licensing.— Section 2 of the Oregon Pilot Act, as amended by Sess. Laws (1868), p. 28, which provides that the pilot commissioners "may appoint a secretary" and prescribes his duties, is mandatory in its nature; and parol evidence is not admissible to prove the meeting and action of such commissioners concerning the licensing of a pilot, when the act requires a record of the same to be made by the secretary. VI. OBLIGATION TO TAKE PILOT.

A. In General. Under many of the statutes relating to pilotage, it is made compulsory upon certain vessels, or classes of vessels, approaching or departing from a harbor to employ or pay a pilot;[35] and the offer of pilot service, if refused, will entitle the pilot to full fees or half pilotage, according to the provision of the particular statute,[36] which liability may be enforced in admiralty.[37]

B. Vessels Exempt. The tender which is by statute made in certain cases equivalent to performance must be a tender to a vessel subject by law to pilot fees, and therefore presumed to require the service tendered.[38] For example, under some statutes, a steamship with a master licensed as a pilot is exempt from the payment of compulsory pilotage.[39] By act of congress, no vessel regularly employed in the coasting trade, declining the services of a pilot, shall be obliged

Absence of pilot at high water.— Upon a claim of fees for pilotage, against a vessel which had left before the pilot arrived, it was held to be the duty of the pilot to be on hand at high water, and that, in his absence at that time, the vessel was justified in departing without him. The libel was therefore dismissed. The Ocean Express, 22 Fed. 176.

Being actually bound for a port imposes upon the vessel the obligation to pay pilotage fees. Merely being cleared for the port imposed no such obligation. Nash v. The Thebes, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,022.

Vessels engaged in plaster trade.— Under Mass. The words "regularly employed," in Mass. St. (1853) c. 284, § 1, exempting a vessel "regularly employed in the coasting trade" from compulsory pilotage, include the case of a vessel actually and legally so employed at the time the services of a pilot are tendered, even though the vessel is sailing under a register and is not continuously so employed. Wilson v. Gray, 127 Mass. 98.

Registry and license of vessel.— In Tilley v. Farrow, 14 Mass. 17, it was held that a registered vessel, authorized to proceed from one port in the United States to another therein, and thence to a foreign port or place, is entitled to the privileges of a coasting vessel, and is not obliged to take a pilot on board, as provided by the statute in other cases. But in Sturges v. Spofford, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 436 [reversed on other grounds in 45 N. Y. 446], it was held that it is not sufficient for a vessel to be merely registered in order to entitle it to the exemption, but that it must have taken out a coasting license.

The protection of a coasting license does not extend beyond the vessel licensed, and does not authorize the towing of other vessels. People v. Sperry, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 170. See, however, Francisco v. People, 4 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 139, holding that steamboats have a right to tow vessels through Hell Gate without being subject to the law relating to pilotage, being excepted from its operation by section 10 of the act of 1847.

A coastwise sea-going steam vessel not sailing under register, within the meaning of Act Cong. Feb. 28, 1871, § 51, U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4401 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3016], in relation to pilotage for steam vessels, is one that is enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade in the manner provided by law, whose license is renewed annually. A vessel sailing from one part of the coast of the United States to another, or which is employed in the whale or coast fisheries. The casual circumstances of such a vessel stopping at a foreign port from stress of weather or other justifiable cause, not in the way of business or traffic, does not affect her specific character as a "coastwise sea-going steam vessel," under the United States act. Murray v. Clark, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 468 [affirmed in 58 N. Y. 684].

Domestic vessels from Porto Rico to New York.— In Bigley v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 105 Fed. 74, it was held that under the provisions of both U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4444 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3037], and N. Y. Cons. Act (1882), § 2119, domestic steam vessels, licensed by the United States since the passage of the Porto Rico act of April 12, 1900, and entering the port of New York from Porto Rican ports, are exempt from the payment of pilotage charges imposed by the state statute.

Vessel laden with domestic coal.— The provision in the Md. Acts (1896), c. 40, exempting from the compulsory pilotage law vessels "laden either in whole or in part with coke or coal mined in the United States," applies only to vessels which, in a commercial sense, are coal laden, or carry a reasonable quantity to constitute a cargo, and not to one which carries only a small quantity (twenty-five tons) as ballast. However, a helpless and unnavigable vessel which has sprung a leak, so as to require the use of two steam pumps, and is without master, commander, or crew, having but a dozen laborers abroad, working the pumps, and which has only a temporary rudder, and is in tow of a steam tug, is not within the provision of Ga. Pol. Code (1895), § 1656, requiring compulsory pilotage. The Sachelm, 99 Fed. 456, 39 C. C. A. 600.

In Canada — Barges towed by tugs.— Barges used in transporting coal from Parrsboro to Saint John, registered as schooners, having a crew on board and masts rigged with sails so as to be capable under favorable circumstances of being navigated by sailing, but which are in fact navigated by being towed by tugs, are exempt from pilotage dues under Can. miles, or the outward limit of the pilot ground.[43] However, a tender of services by a pilot at an unreasonably long distance from port, and long before his services would be needed, is not such a tender as will subject the vessel to pilotage fees in case of declining his services.[44]

B. Manner and Sufficiency[45] — 1. In General. The United States statute does not prescribe any signal to be used on a pilot boat when making an offer of pilot services, and the light required by the statute to be carried by a sailing pilot vessel at night is only used to prevent collision, and incidentally to give notice of the character of such craft.[46]

2. Display of Signals. The display of the customary pilot signals on the usual cruising ground of pilot boats at sea, and the visible approach of the boat toward an incoming vessel, are a sufficient tender of off-shore pilotage;[47] although some statutes require the pilot commissioners to declare by rule what shall constitute a valid offer of pilot service by a signal addressed to the eye, and in so doing may prescribe the distance within which such signal must be made from the vessel signaled.[48]

3. Exhibition of License or Warrant. Under some statutes the exhibition of a pilot's license or warrant to the master of the vessel is a necessary part of the tender of services, in order to enable the pilot to recover for such tender.[49]

4. Tender to or in Presence of Master. Some statutes require that the pilot shall offer to the master to take charge of the vessel, or make such offer in his

Without jurisdiction of state.— In Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 26 L. ed. 234, it was held that a pilot may recover pilotage, although his services were tendered to, and refused by, the master of the vessel when she was without the jurisdiction of the state.

"It is the policy of most pilot laws to induce the pilots to make an early tender of their services to inward bound vessels. . . . State boundaries have been sometimes considered as furnishing the outward limit (Peterson v. Walsh, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 182, 185), although Sandy Hook pilots are sought for, and their services taken, much farther out than a marine league. In France it has been adjudged, in regard to vessels bound to Havre, that the pilots may board such vessels at any time or distance out, and the liability to take a pilot has been adjudged to attach to a French ship, although she was at the time in English waters, as at the Downs (Courcy Cass. D. 1866, p. 303; Caumont, Traité Pilote 31). Horton v. Smith, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,709, 6 Ben. 264, 267, per Benedict, J.

Small, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,291*b*, 8 Ben. 523 (holding that the tender of services by a Hell Gate pilot as far east as Block Island is not legal, and a refusal and subsequent settlement with him will not prevent a pilot, who tendered his services off Oak Neck, from recovering half pilotage, where they were refused).

The Ullock, 19 Fed. 207, 9 Sawy. 634, holding that the usual signal by which an offer of pilot service is made is the jack set at the main truck in the daytime, and "flare-ups" at night, and this jack is usually the ensign of the country in which the services are offered. In the United States it is a blue flag charged with a star of every state then in the Union, and called the "Union Jack."

presence and hearing, in order to render it a sufficient tender of services within the law.[50]

5. Notice of Effect of Refusal to Accept. As a condition precedent to the right to hold a vessel for pilotage fees for services tendered but not accepted, it is sometimes provided that the pilot must inform the vessel that she will be held to pay the regular fees, whether his services are accepted or not.[51]

VIII. Compensation.[52]

A. In General. Pilots, only licensed by state authority, are entitled to claim off-shore pilotage, when they comply with the regulations prescribed, by performing or tendering their services at sea, to vessels about to enter port.[53]

B. On Refusal to Take Pilot — 1. In General. Where the statute makes it compulsory upon a master to take a pilot, upon his refusal to accept a tender of services, the pilot becomes entitled to half pilotage,[54] or full pilotage,[55] according to the provisions of the statute.[56]

2. Acceptance of Another Pilot. Under such statutes a subsequent acceptance

See also Chandler v. Doody, 101 Mass. 267 (under St. (1862) c. 176); The Francisco Garguilo, 14 Fed. 495 (where there was held to have been a sufficient tender of services). But compare Com. v. Ricketson, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 412, set out infra, this note.

Merely asking the master about to sail, at the custom-house, if he desired a pilot, and an answer that he did not know, is not such a speaking of a ship and declining of services as entitle a pilot to half pilotage under Cal. Pol. Code, § 2466, providing that when a vessel is spoken to, outward or inward bound, and the services of a pilot declined, half pilotage shall be paid. The Australia, 36 Fed. 332, 13 Sawy. 200.

Tender at night.— In Com. v. Ricketson, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 412, it was held that under Rev. St. c. 32, § 24, it is a sufficient offer of a pilot's services in the night, to a master of a vessel bound into Boston harbor, if the pilot approaches such vessel, and hails her, and makes all the tender which the time and circumstances permit, and his hail is heard on board, although it is not answered. It is not necessary in such a case that there should be an actual offer to the master, and that he should have actual knowledge of such offer.

51. Chandler v. Doody, 101 Mass. 267, holding that under the regulations concerning pilotage in the schedule annexed to St. (1862) c. 176, that "every vessel inward bound," with certain exceptions, "shall receive the first pilot, holding a commission for her port of destination, that may offer his services, and shall be holden to pay such pilot the regular fees for pilotage, whether his services be accepted or not . . . and in case any vessel liable to pilotage should refuse to take a pilot, it shall be the duty of the pilot to inform said vessel that she will be holden to pay the regular fees for pilotage, whether his services are accepted or not," the giving of the information by the pilot to the refusing vessel is in every case a condition precedent to his right to hold her liable for fees; and that it is immaterial what her master knows of the provisions of the statute by information from other sources.

No. 129, 3 Ben. 391, it was held that where a pilot on going aboard a vessel assented to the proposition of the master that his employment should not commence until the vessel reaches pilot ground, he is only entitled to in-shore pilotage, where he did not actually take charge of the vessel until it reached pilot ground.

Obligation to take pilot see supra, VI.

Nature of obligation to pay.— "The supreme court, in the cases of Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450, 457, 17 L. ed. 805, and of Ex p. McNiel, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 236, 242, 20 L. ed. 624, has expressly declared that the obligation to pay these pilotage fees under state statutes, where the pilot's services are tendered and refused, is a liability upon a contract implied by the statute." The Edith Godden, 25 Fed. 511. The compensation allowed for pilotage fees when a pilot tenders his services and the same are refused are not considered as a duty (Cooley v. Philadelphia, 12 How. (U. S.) 299, 314, 13 L. ed. 996), an impost duty (State v. Penny, 19 S. C. 218, 222), or an of another pilot does not destroy the master's obligation to pay the fees of the pilot first tendering his services.[57]

3. On Outward-Bound Vessel. Under some statutes the qualification is made that a pilot tendering his services to an outward bound vessel is entitled to no compensation if his services are refused,[58] unless he is the pilot who brought her into port, or tendered his services and was refused.[59]

C. Persons Liable. The statutes usually provide that pilotage fees are to be paid by and are recoverable from the master or owners of the vessel;[60] and they sometimes make the agent[61] or consignee[62] liable.

D. Amount — 1. In Absence of Statutory Provisions. Where no rate is fixed by statute for fees payable to pilots, they are entitled to be paid a reasonable reward for the services performed by them.[63]

2. Fixed by Statute. Where the rate of pilotage is fixed by law, pilots are not allowed to make contracts for fees at other rates.[64] Some statutes provide that for every day of detention in the harbor of an outward-bound vessel, after the pilot has been engaged, and for every day of detention of an inward-bound vessel, by ice, longer than two days for passage from sea to wharf, a designated amount shall be added to the pilotage.[65]

No requirement to take first pilot.— In Gillespie v. Zittlosen, 60 N. Y. 449, it was held that N. Y. Acts (1857), c. 243, § 29, do not require a vessel to take the first pilot offering his services, or, in case of refusal, to pay him pilotage, but states only when no pilot is taken that this liability is imposed. Where therefore after refusal to take the first pilot another is taken, the former cannot recover pilotage under the statute.

3. Extra Allowance. Pilots are entitled to a reasonably extra compensation, to be fixed by the court, for the increased responsibility and effort incurred in consequence of the crippled condition of a vessel.[66] So for services rendered in moving or transferring vessels in the harbor, pilots may by statute be allowed a designated extra compensation.[67]

E. Actions[68]— 1. Jurisdiction. Admiralty has jurisdiction of suits for pilotage fees.[69]

2. Nature of Action. Admiralty has jurisdiction to enforce the obligation to pay pilotage fees by any appropriate form, whether in rem or in personam.[70]

3. Defenses. On a libel by a pilot for wages, where the services were rendered under several distinct contracts, the right to set up damages caused by the pilot's negligence as a defense is confined to the wages earned under the particular contract during the performance of which the negligence occurred.[71] In a suit to recover half pilotage by a pilot on offer of services and a refusal thereof, it cannot be shown as a defense that the pilot does not keep a sufficient boat on the bar to cruise for vessels, or to supply vessels in distress with provisions and water.[72]

4. Parties.[73] An action to recover pilotage fees, where the pilot's services are refused, may be brought by the pilot in his own name.[74]

5. Pleading.[75] In a suit for pilotage fees against the owner of a vessel who has refused to accept the pilot's services, the petition is not defective because it fails to allege whether the vessel was coastwise or foreign; and if the vessel is exempt from the payment of such fees, it is a matter of defense, to be set up by plea.[76]

6. Evidence[77] — a. Burden of Proof. In an action for pilotage, where the right of action is claimed to have arisen by reason of a tender of services and a refusal thereof, the libellant must show a tender of services and that no pilot was employed.[78]

b. Admissibility. The situation of a ship at the time the pilot takes charge of her is a matter of fact, and may be proved by parol.[79] Parol evidence is likewise admissible to show the boundaries of a harbor or port.[80]

c. Weight and Sufficiency. The admiralty court will determine facts upon principles which govern trials by jury.[81]

F. Lien[82] — 1. In General. By the general maritime law a pilot has a lien upon a vessel for services actually rendered.[83] However, in the absence of stat-

Slight circumstances, however, will be sufficient to warrant the inference that no pilot was employed. The Nellie Husted, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,098, 9 Ben. 42.

Two witnesses contradicting one.— Where the sole question arising on a libel by a pilot for wages is as to when the charterers informed the libellant that he was to look to one of the charterers individually for payment, and the two charterers directly contradict the libellant, there being no other witnesses on that point, the witnesses being equally worthy of credit, the weight of evidence is against the libellant. Clark v. The Ruth, 39 Fed. 128. A claim for pilotage for a tender and refusal of services, supported only by the oath of the pilot, and contradicted by two witnesses from the other vessel, cannot be sustained where the pilot might have produced other witnesses to corroborate his testimony, whose absence he did not account for. The Thomas Turrall, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,932, 6 Ben. 404.

Insufficient to show usage.— In Love v. Hinckley, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,548, Abb. Adm. 436, the proofs were held not to show a usage of charging and paying double fees as a legal right, even for services rendered to a vessel in distress.

ute,[84] in case there has been no service rendered, and no contract for service, but merely a case of volunteered services tendered and refused, no lien is created on the vessel.[85]

2. DELAY IN ENFORCEMENT. The delay to enforce a maritime lien which will warrant its being postponed to subsequent liens acquired without notice is governed by the same rule which applies to claims for repairs and supplies.[86] And, as in case of other maritime liens, where such lien is not enforced after reasonable opportunity, it is waived as against an innocent purchaser.[87]

G. Recovery of Fees Illegally Collected. Pilot commissioners are liable in their corporate capacity in an action for money had and received for pilotage dues illegally collected.[88]

IX. AUTHORITY AND FUNCTIONS.

A pilot is an officer of the ship when on board in the exercise of his duty, and the crew are bound to obey his orders as such; but when the captain is on board he is master, and the orders of the pilot are considered the master's.[89] And a pilot employed to take a ship out of port and remain with her and bring her in on the return voyage, for an agreed compensation, is as much subject to the authority of the master as to discipline as any member of the ship's company, although he is not liable to do ship's duty except when in charge of her as pilot.[90]

Pilots of coal boats, in Arkansas, in the absence of the owners or supercargoes, exercise the powers and duties of captains or commanders. Their authority over the boat and cargo is, under ordinary circumstances, limited to the mere duty of transportation and preservation; but under circumstances of great emergency, as in the case of wreck and imminent danger of an entire loss, they have authority to dispose of the boat and cargo from the very nature and necessity of the case. The relation between the owner or master and pilot, as that of master and employee, is not changed by the fact that the selection of the pilot is limited to those who have been found by examination to possess the requisite knowledge and skill, and have been licensed by the government inspectors. Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819, Field, J., delivering the opinion of the court.

Recovery by pilot for personal injuries.— There is no implied contract between the owners of a ship and a pilot whom they are compelled to employ that the pilot shall take upon himself the risk of injury from the negligence of the ship-owners' servants; and an action will lie by the pilot against the ship-owners for injuries, caused to him, whilst acting as pilot on board their vessel, by the negligence of their servants. Smith v. Steele, L. R. 10 Q. B. 125, 2 Aspin. 487, 44 L. J. Q. B. 60, 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 195, 23 Wkly. Rep. 388. Where a pilot was ordered by the master to leave the quarter-deck, and he refused to do so, and the master undertook to put him off, but he used force enough to throw him on the deck, this was a trespass for which the master is liable to the pilot in damages, and the master was not justified in ordering the pilot ashore thereupon and leaving him, and the latter was entitled to recover his full agreed wages. Beataugh v. Nicholson, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,194.

When a pilot takes charge of a vessel at sea, to bring her into port, his duty is to stay by her, unless discharged, until she reaches her destination or some place of safety.[91]

X. DEGREE OF CARE AND SKILL REQUIRED.

A pilot should have a thorough knowledge of navigation, charts, and the significance of fixed and permanent lights, and the peculiarities of wind and tide in the waters in which he is licensed.[92] When a pilot, in piloting his vessel, has used his best skill and judgment, he is not liable for her loss, although the result shows that his best judgment was wrong.[93]

XI. LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.[94]

A pilot is responsible to the owner of a vessel for negligence or default in performance of his duty.[95] Such negligence is a marine tort within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty.[96] A pilot, however, is not an insurer. He is only

Thus a constant and familiar acquaintance with the towns, banks, trees, etc., and the relation of the channel to them, and of the snags, sand-bars, sunken barges, and other dangers of the river as they may arise, is essential to the character of a pilot on the navigable rivers of the interior. Towing in a gale.— In The William Cox, 3 Fed. 645, it was held that it is negligence in both the pilot of a tug and the master of an open, loaded boat to attempt to tow such a boat across the bay of New York in a gale of wind.

No negligence shown.— See The Wallace, 32 Fed. 672 (where it was held that no negligence on the part of the pilot was shown, and that he was entitled to his pilotage fees); The Governor Newell, 31 Fed. 362, 12 Sawy. 457 (where the charge of negligence was held not to have been proved).

Contributory negligence.— The master of a towed boat is not chargeable with contributory negligence in acquiescing in the exposure of such boat to an unnecessary peril by the tug-boat pilot, unless the danger about to be incurred is very obvious. White v. The Lavergne, 2 Fed. 788.

chargeable for negligence when he fails in due knowledge, care, or skill, or to avoid all obstructions where they were known, or ought to be known, to him.[97]

XII. PENALTIES FOR VIOLATION OF REGULATIONS.[98]

Under the various pilotage acts, a person undertaking to pilot a vessel into a port or harbor, who has not been duly licensed as a pilot for such waters, incurs a designated penalty imposed by the statute.[99] However, under such statutes, where no regularly licensed pilot seasonably offers his services, the master may employ any other person to pilot his vessel in, and such person may do so without incurring any penalty.[1]

XIII. OFFENSES.[2]

In some jurisdictions a person acting as a pilot without being duly licensed to act as a pilot in such waters is guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be proceeded against by indictment or information.[3]

In Mason v. Ervine, 27 Fed. 459, it was held that the association of branch pilots of the port of New Orleans did not constitute what is known in Louisiana as a commercial partnership, in which the partners are liable to their creditors in solido; that the association was not an insurer of the experience, skill, judgment, or conduct of any of its members; and therefore, when without fault itself, it was not liable for the negligence, want of skill, or fault of any branch pilot, belonging to the association, resulting in damage to any vessel such pilot may undertake to pilot into the Mississippi river from the sea. Compare Wilson v. Charleston Pilots' Assoc., 57 Fed. 227, where a libel in personam against a pilot association was dismissed.

I. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

A. Piracy Jure Gentium — 1. In General. Piracy has two aspects: (1) As a violation of the common right of nations, punishable under the common law of nations by the seizure and condemnation of the vessel only in prize courts; and (2) its liability to punishment criminally by the municipal law of the place where the offender is tried.[1] Accordingly the definitions of piracy, aside from statutory piracy, fall naturally into two classes, according as the offense is viewed more especially as it affects the right of nations, or as amenable to criminal punishment under the municipal law.[2] Piracy, by the common law, consists in committing those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas, which, if committed on shore, would amount to felony there.[3] Piracy under the law of nations is a robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas without lawful authority, done animo furandi, in the spirit and intention of universal hostility.[4]

2. Intent — a. In General. It is said that the piratical act, to come within the meaning of the law, must be done animo furandi. By this nothing more is meant than that, as in robbery on the land, it must be done with a felonious intent, that is, wilfully, with intent to injure, and without legal authority or lawful excuse.[5]

b. Commissioned Privateers. Since a felonious intent is necessary to constitute the crime, it has been held that one acting in good faith under a commission from a foreign power cannot be held guilty of piracy, even though such commission is not genuine.[6] If, however, seizures are made, not jure belli, but animo furandi, a commission is no defense to a charge of piracy.[7]

B. Statutory Piracies — 1. Murder, Robbery, Etc., Upon High Seas — a. Act of April 30, 1790. By the act of April 30, 1790,[8] it is declared that every person

The distinction between privateering and piracy is the distinction between captures jure belli, under color of governmental authority, and for the benefit of a political power organized as a government de jure or de facto, and mere robbery on the high seas, committed from motives of personal gain, like theft or robbery on land. In the one instance the acts committed inure to the benefit of the commissioning power, and in the other to the benefit of the perpetrators merely. A capture of a vessel and cargo by a Confederate privateer was held not to be within the terms of the insurance policy against perils of the sea, fires, pirates, assailing thieves, jettison, etc., but to be included in the exception "that said company shall not be liable for any claim for or loss by seizure, capture, or detention." who commits upon the high seas,[9] or in any river, harbor, basin, or bay, out of the jurisdiction of any particular state,[10] murder[11] or robbery,[12] or any other offense, which, if committed within the body of a county, would be punishable by death by the laws of the United States, is a pirate, and shall suffer death.[13] This section consists of three different classes of piracy: (1) Offenses which, if committed within the body of a county, would be punishable by death; (2) and (3) particular offenses which are enumerated.[14] It extends to all persons on board all vessels which throw off their national character by committing piracy on other vessels;[15] but robbery committed on board a vessel belonging exclusively to subjects of a foreign state, sailing under the flag of a foreign state, whose authority is acknowledged, is not piracy within the intent of this act, nor punishable under it in the courts of the United States.[16]

b Act of May 15, 1820. The act of May 15, 1820,[17] declares the person a pirate, punishable by death, who commits the crime of robbery upon the high seas, in or upon any vessel, or upon any ship's company of any vessel, or the lading thereof.[18] The interpretation given to the words of this act applies the crime to the case of depredation upon any American vessel or property, on the high seas under circumstances that would constitute robbery, if the offense were committed on land,[19] which is the felonious[20] and forcible taking from the person of another, of goods or money, to any value, by violence or putting him in fear.[21]

2. Running Away With Vessel. To constitute the offense of piracy within the

9. The words "high seas" mean any waters on the sea coast which are without the boundaries of low water mark (U. S. v. Ross, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,196, 1 Gall. 624, 627); although such waters may be in a roadstead or bay within the jurisdictional limits of a foreign government (U. S. v. The Pirates, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 184, 5 L. ed. 64; U. S. v. Ross, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,196, 1 Gall. 624). See 21 Cyc. 436 notes 48, 49. Foreign jurisdictional limits, although neutral to war, are not neutral to crimes. U. S. v. The Pirates, supra.

10. The words "out of the jurisdiction of any particular state" mean out of any one of the United States. U. S. v. The Pirates, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 184, 199, 5 L. ed. 64; U. S. v. Ross, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,196, 1 Gall. 624, 627.

11. To constitute murder within this section, the death, as well as the mortal stroke, must happen on the high seas. U. S. v. McGill, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,676, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 426, 1 Wash. 463. See, generally, Criminal Law.

12. The term "robbery," as used in the statute, must be understood in the sense in which it is recognized and defined at common law. U. S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 610, 4 L. ed. 471; U. S. v. Jones, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,494, 3 Wash. 209. A robbery, as defined by the common law, committed on the high seas, is piracy, by the act of 1790, c. 36, § 8, even if not punishable with death by the laws of the United States, if committed on land. U. S. v. Palmer, supra. See Robbery.

13. This act is not repealed by the act of June 26, 1812 [2 U. S. St. at L. 759] (U. S. v. Jones, 26 Fed. Cas. Commission to vessel as defense.— Since a nation at war may commission private armed vessels to carry on war against the enemy on the high seas, such a commission is a good defense to a charge of piracy under this act. U. S. v. Baker, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,501, 5 Blatchf. 6. The United States courts will, however, treat as pirates all persons engaged in plundering vessels of United States citizens under authority of a government set up by insurgents against whom a civil war is being waged. U. S. v. Smith, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,318.

20. A "felonious" taking, means a taking with a wrongful intent to appropriate the goods of another; but the taking need not be such as amounts to piracy according to the laws of nations. U. S. v. Baker, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,501, 5 Blatchf. 6; U. S. v. Durkee, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,009, McAllister 196.

act of April 30, 1790,[22] by "piratically and feloniously" running away with a vessel, personal force and violence is not necessary; but the intent must be animo furandi.[23]

3. Confederating With Pirates. The act of April 30, 1790,[24] provides for the punishment of any one who combines, confederates, or corresponds with pirates, knowing them to be guilty of piracy or robbery.[25]

4. Piracy Under Color of Commission From Foreign Power. The act of April 30, 1790,[26] declares that every citizen who commits any murder or robbery against the United States, or any citizen thereof, under color of a commission from a foreign power, shall be considered a pirate.[27]

5. Engaging in Slave Trade — a. In General. The slave trade is not piracy, unless made so by the treaties or statutes of the nation to whom the party belongs.[28]

b. Act of May 15, 1820 — (i) Elements of Offense. Under the power to define and punish piracies, given by the constitution,[29] congress may declare to be piracy the service of a citizen or resident of the United States on a vessel used in kidnapping the inhabitants of a foreign country for the purpose of making them slaves, or the use of a vessel owned in the United States in such kidnapping.[30] This power was exercised in the act of May 15, 1820.[31] There are four descriptions of the offense to be found in this act: (1) Landing and seizing the negroes; (2) forcibly bringing or carrying them on board; (3) decoying them; (4) receiving them on board of the vessel.[32] The first two acts comprehend force as an ingredient; the latter two do not.[33] Intent and acts, tending to make someone a slave, are both necessary.[34]

23. U. S. v. Tully, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,545, 1 Gall. 247, holding that the piratically and feloniously running away with a vessel, within the act, is the running away with a vessel with the wrongful and fraudulent intent thereby to convert the same to the taker's own use and to make the same his own property against the will of the owner.

25. Any intercourse with pirates, however inefficient or remote, which has a reference to the offense with which they are chargeable, and which has a tendency to promote or is in any manner intended to promote their views, is an offense under this section. An endeavor by a mariner to corrupt the master of a vessel and to induce him to go over to pirates is within the provisions of this section. U. S. v. Howard, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,404, 3 Wash. 340.

Past confederation.— The language of this section implies compact and association with the pirates, as well in relation to the past, as to the future. U. S. v. Howard, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,404, 3 Wash. 340.

Moral restraint and fear.— To sustain an indictment under this act for "forcibly" confining negroes, it is not necessary to prove that there was physical or manual force. It is sufficient that the negroes were under moral restraint and fear — their wills controlled by superior power exercised over their minds and bodies; and any person participating in such forcible detention is a principal in the offense. U. S. v. Gordon, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,231, 5 Blatchf. 18.

34. U. S. v. Libby, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,597, 1 Woodb. & M. 221.

It is the intent to make a slave which constitutes the essence of the offense; neither the seizing, nor forcibly bringing, or carrying, or receiving a negro on board, is any offense without such superadded intent. U. S. v.

(II) Who May Commit. Any citizen, being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel, whether foreign or American, may commit the crime.[35] If the accused is not a citizen, ownership of the vessel by a citizen is an essential ingredient of the offense.[36]

II. PUNISHMENT.

A. Power to Punish — 1. By Nations Generally. As general pirates are deemed enemies of the human race, making war upon all mankind indiscriminately, the crime being one against the universal laws of society, the vessels of every nation have a right to pursue, seize, and punish them.[37] It is by confounding general piracy with piracy by statute that indistinct ideas have been produced respecting the power to punish offenses committed on the high seas. A statute may make any offense piracy, committed within the jurisdiction of the nation passing the statute, and such offense will be punishable by that nation. But piracy, under the law of nations which alone is punishable by all nations, can only consist in an act which is an offense against all. No particular nation can increase or diminish the list of offenses thus punishable.[38]

2. By United States. There are two distinct provisions of the constitution by which congress is empowered to punish piracy. By the first article of the constitution congress is authorized "to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offences against the law of nations."[39] Furthermore the constitution in express terms gives authority to regulate commerce and to pass all laws necessary to carry that power into effect. The authority thus conferred upon congress has been exercised by a great variety of legislative enactments, and various offenses are denominated and punished as piracy.[40]

B. Seizure and Condemnation of Vessels — 1. Under Law of Nations. Under the law of nations a vessel captured for engaging in piracy becomes a prize on account of the universal war presumed to have been declared by the pirate against commerce and human kind at large.[41]

2. Under Act of March 3, 1819. Under the act of March 3, 1819,[42] to protect the commerce of the United States and punish the crime of piracy, any armed vessel may be seized and brought in, or any vessel the crew whereof may be armed, and which shall have attempted or committed any piratical aggression, search, restraint, depredation, or seizure upon any vessel; and such offending vessel may be condemned and sold, the proceeds whereof to be distributed between the United States and the captors, at the discretion of the court.[43] The act extends to all armed vessels which commit the unlawful acts specified therein.[44] It is not necessary that there should be either actual plunder or an intent to plunder; if the act be committed from hatred, or an abuse of power, or a spirit of mischief, it is sufficient.[45] The innocence or ignorance on the part of the owners of the prohibited acts will not exempt the vessel from condemnation.[46] The condemnation of the cargo is not authorized by this act;[47] nor does the law of nations require the condemnation of the cargo for petty offenses, unless the owner thereof coöperates in and authorizes the unlawful act.[48]

3. Under Act of August 5, 1861. The supplementary act of 1861[49] subjects to capture on the high seas, and to seizure in port, vessels built, purchased, fitted out, in whole or in part, or held for the purpose of being employed in the commission of any piratical aggression, search, restraint, depredation, or seizure.[50]

The piratical acts contemplated in this act and the act of 1819 are the same, the only difference being that the earlier act extends only to vessels which have committed or attempted them, while the later act includes vessels intended to be employed in committing them. committed "on the high seas, and within the jurisdiction of the court, within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, and out of the jurisdiction of any particular state," is a sufficient statement of venue, without any other specification of place.[51] Where the offense is such that the court has jurisdiction, although the vessel has no national character, no national character need be alleged in the indictment.[52] Since the offense of piracy is one which may be committed by one or more persons, an indictment charging three persons with committing the crime jointly is sufficient, and proof of the guilt of either one will authorize his conviction and the acquittal of the others.[53]

2. Evidence. Upon a prosecution for piracy, where there is no proof that in the first instance any unlawful acts were meditated by the commander of a vessel and her crew, it is not sufficient to prove piratical acts committed by the commander and his crew generally; but it must be proved that each defendant participated in the taking, and did it feloniously.[54] It is unnecessary, on the trial of an indictment for piracy, to produce a merchant vessel's register, or documentary evidence, to prove her national character.[55] Such evidence is, however, admissible, and is prima facie sufficient to establish the nationality of the vessel.[56]

PLATE-GLASS INSURANCE

For Matters Relating to:

Insurance in General, see Insurance, and Cross-References Thereunder.

I. DEFINITION.

Plate-glass insurance is a contract whereby the insurer, for a valuable consideration, agrees, subject to certain conditions, to indemnify the insured against loss occasioned by destruction of or injury to plate-glass.[1]

II. GENERAL NATURE AND STATUS OF SUCH INSURANCE.

A. Whether Legal Insurance. Such a casualty as an accident damaging plate-glass, arising from causes other than fire, is a contingent event which may be the subject of legal insurance.[2]

B. Casualty Insurance. A company engaged in the business of insuring against injuries to plate-glass from causes other than fire transacts the business of "accidental insurance," within a statute imposing a license upon companies doing such business.[3]

III. PLATE-GLASS INSURANCE COMPANIES.

A. Organization and Status. Companies organized to insure against loss from the breaking of plate-glass are insurance companies, within a statute pro-

Plate-glass insurance may be defined as a form of indemnity on fixed plate-glass against loss or damage originating from any cause whatsoever not excepted in the policy. viding for the organization of insurance companies.[4] Companies organized under the Casualty Insurance Act of Illinois are authorized to engage in the business of insuring plate-glass.[5]

B. Penalty For Doing Business in Another State. Companies organized under the laws of another state, for the purpose of insuring plate-glass against damage, are subject to a penalty for a failure to comply with the provision of the insurance law, requiring companies organized in another state to file a certificate with the insurance department of this state.[6]

IV. INSURABILITY OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

In the absence of a provision in the policy of plate-glass insurance that the glass must be without hole or perforation when insured, a hole through a pane of glass does not render it uninsurable under such policy.[7]

V. CONDITIONS AND EXCEPTIONS IN THE POLICY.

A. In General. Some policies expressly limit the risk to plate-glass vertically placed and immovable.[8]

B. As to Causes of Loss. In a policy insuring the plate-glass in the front of plaintiff's premises from loss or damage, excepting loss or damage from fire, the insurance company was held liable where the glass was destroyed by a mob, attracted by a fire on the premises, which broke the glass while trying to plunder the premises, it being held that the fire was only the remote cause of the loss;[9] and so it has been held that the breaking of plate-glass in a store by the explosion of gas in a room, generated from gasoline being used to clean clothes, prior to the fire in the building, is not caused by the "blowing up of the building" within the exception to the policy, nor by fire, within another exception, although the gas was ignited by a match or light in the room.[10]

C. As to Right of Insurer to Replace Glass — 1. In General. A policy of plate-glass insurance may expressly provide that in case of damage the insurer may replace the damaged glass.[11]

2. Effect of Election to Replace — a. In General. Where the insurer elects to replace the broken glass, there is an implied obligation to perform within a reasonable time.[12] Where the insurer elects to repair, and the contract of insurance is thereby superseded by the contract to repair, negligence which consists merely in the breach of the contract to repair affords no ground for an action by any one except a party to such contract, or a person for whose benefit the contract was avowedly made.[13]

Suppl. 164, where the court in applying this rule held that a tenant as assignee of the rights of the landlord who owned the policy could not recover for damages suffered by him caused by the negligent delay on the part of the company to replace the broken glass after it had elected to do so.

b. Subrogation.[14] Where an insurance company replaces a broken window, it is subrogated to the rights of the insured with respect to a recovery from the party causing the damage.[15]

VI. EVIDENCE.

A. Burden of Proof. The burden of proof is on the party causing damage to a plate-glass window to show that he was not in fault, the presumption being that the window was broken through his negligence.[16]

B. As to the Condition of Glass. That a pane of glass had a hole in the center at the time of the issuance of insurance thereon is not evidence that a break in the glass from top to bottom one week thereafter was in consequence of or connected with such hole.[17]

C. As to Non-Existence of Glass Insured. In an action on a policy of plate-glass insurance, evidence that the company's inspector viewed the glass upon the day when the policy was issued and discovered a hole near its center does not show that the glass was not in existence at the time of the issuing of the policy.[18]
