To

more than to any other man is due the existence of the Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure. His was the idea; his was the plan; and his has been the business ability and energetic management, as organizer and president of The American Law Book Company, which have made possible the successful publication of these volumes, which are therefore respectfully dedicated to him.

William Mack.

I. WHO MAY BE A PARTY PLAINTIFF.[1]

A. In General. It is a broad but classic statement in our books that "as the law grants redress for all injuries and gives a remedy for every kind of right, so it is open to all kinds of persons and none are excluded from bringing an action."[2] This general principle, however, is subject to important limitations. Three things in the main are requisite for a successful stand as party plaintiff in a litigated case: (1) The action must be brought in the name of one possessing a legal entity.[3] (2) The person appearing as plaintiff must have and show an existing remedial interest in the cause of action asserted.[4] (3) If the action shall be proof against a possible dilatory objection, plaintiff must have a legal capacity to sue.[5]

B. The Requisites Specifically Considered — 1. Requisite of Legal Entity — a. Statement of Rule. A civil action can be maintained only in the name of a person in law — an entity which the law of the forum can recognize as capable of possessing and asserting a right of action.[6]

b. Different Forms of Legal Entity — (I) In General. The common law knew only two kinds of persons in law, the natural person, and the artificial person or corporation.[7] Under modern statutes permitting an action to be brought in the name of an unincorporated association, a third class must be added, the class of the quasi-artificial person.[8] Unless the would-be plaintiff comes within one or the other of these three classes, the action as brought is a nullity.[9]

(II) Natural Person as Plaintiff — (A) Rule in General. As a rule every natural person has a legal entity, and as such may appear as party plaintiff. The rule holds whether the natural person is citizen or alien, sane or insane, adult or minor.[10] If an adult or a minor, or if a married woman under common-law disabilities, plaintiff may indeed be without capacity to sue; but lack of capacity to sue is essentially different from lack of legal entity. At most the lack of capacity is ground only for a dilatory objection at the threshold.[11]

(B) Exception to Rule; Civil Death — (1) In General. To the rule that every natural person has a legal entity as party plaintiff, there was, in the earlier common law, a notable exception, which still influences our legal doctrine. A person in natural life might yet, through the doctrine of civil death,[12] be deemed to be dead in law. When this occurred he had no longer an entity which the courts could recognize.[13] Of the different forms of civil death at common law — banishment from or abjuration of the realm, entering into religion and becoming a monk professed, conviction of felony[14] — only one now raises a possible question in the doctrine of parties to action: May a convict appear as party plaintiff?[15]

(2) Convict as Plaintiff — (a) Rule at Common Law. Lord Coke was clear that "besides men attainted in a præmunire, every person that is attainted of high-treason, petit-treason, or felony, is disabled to bring any action; for he is extra legem positus, and is accounted in law civiliter mortuus."[16] As late as 1820 Chancellor Kent was of the opinion that a similar rule prevailed in America.[17] When, however, the question came before him for decision, he held that a conviction of felony, even with a sentence to life imprisonment, did not of itself cause civil death at common law.[18] A felon's disability to appear as plaintiff was due rather to the forfeiture of his estate, resulting in a lack of a remedial interest in the cause of action.[19] It follows on principle, and it has been so held, that where there is no forfeiture of estate for felony, the felon can still appear as plaintiff in his own name, unless some statute forbids.[20]

I. 590, 591, 30 Atl. 470, 26 L. R. A. 232 (where Stines, J., remarks: "Undoubtedly under the common law of England a person convicted of a felony could not

(b) Civil Death as a Statutory Disability. Although Lord Coke's doctrine[21] that a convict has no standing as party plaintiff has been generally rejected by American courts as a rule of our common law, it has had a partial survival in our statute law. Express enactments in several states declare that a person convicted of felony and sentenced to imprisonment for life shall be deemed and taken to be civilly dead.[22] One effect of such legislation, it would seem, is to disable the convict from appearing as plaintiff in the courts of the state having such a statute, and this, irrespective of the question whether the convict is in confinement or has escaped.[23]

(3) Extraterritorial Effect. Civil death, whether by common law or by statute, exists as a penal effect. On general principles the resulting disability is not recognized in the courts of another nation.[24] And the rule prevails, it has been held, as between the states of the Union.[25]

(iii) Artificial Person as Plaintiff—(a) In General.—(1) Power to Sue in Corporate Name. As a rule any existing corporation may come into court as party plaintiff in its corporate name.[26] This power, although often expressly declared by the charter of the corporation, by general statute, or by a state constitution,[27] exists as one of the incidental powers of a corporation at common law.[28] It is assimilated, in the main, to the ability of a natural person to appear as party plaintiff.[29]

(2) No Power to Sue in Names of Individuals Composing. As a person in law, the corporation is distinct from all the individuals composing it.[30] Not only may the corporation appear as plaintiff in the corporation name, but a cause of action belonging to the corporation cannot as a rule be asserted in any other name; if asserted in the names of all the stock-holders the action fails.[31]

(3) When Power to Appear as Plaintiff Is Lacking. A corporation, however, has only the powers which are granted it, expressly or by inference. It sometimes happens, although rarely, that the power to appear as a party plaintiff in the corporate name is not conferred on the corporation. This may arise either maintain an action. This rule was founded upon the reason that as the conviction worked a forfeiture of goods to the crown, he had no longer any property to sue for. But under our law, R. I. Pub. St. c. 248, § 34, no conviction or sentence for any offence whatsoever works a forfeiture of estate. The reason for the common law rule does not here exist, and an enforcement of it might practically work a forfeiture of estate. . . . A convict is neither civilly dead, nor deprived of his rights of property; and, if this be so, he should be entitled to enforce such right when it is necessary to do so").

from the nature of the corporation itself,[32] or because the legislature has expressly or by necessary inference declared that as respects a given corporation the faculty to sue shall be exercised, not by the corporation but by or in the name of some other person, as by certain trustees.[33]

(B) Foreign Corporation as Plaintiff. Although a corporation is a mere creature of the law, the fact that a particular corporation claiming as plaintiff in the courts of a state has not been created by the laws of that state does not contravene its legal entity there. A foreign corporation may have a standing as plaintiff, very much as a natural person who is an alien.[34]

(C) Corporation as Plaintiff After Expiration of Charter — (1) AT COMMON LAW. At common law a corporation which has completed the period fixed by its charter or the general law, for its duration, or has been legally dissolved by judicial decree or otherwise, has no longer a legal entity which the court can recognize.[35] The effect of its dissolution is comparable to the effect of the death of a natural person.[36]

The subordinate lodges cannot so sue. They must sue and be sued, in the name of the trustees, and in no other mode and by no other name. A corporation can have no faculty not given by the act creating it. The faculty of suing is a most important one, and has not been specially conferred, and since it has been directly conferred on the trustees by special grant, it cannot be claimed as incident to the corporation under the general power conferred. Had not the faculty to sue been conferred on the trustees, then indeed, would this corporation have had the right to sue under the grant, in the sixth section, of all the powers incident to corporations."

34. The point was directly raised in Massachusetts as late as 1813, in Portsmouth Livery Co. v. Watson, 10 Mass. 91. Here defendant, pleading in abatement, contended that as a corporation was entirely indebted to the law for its existence, "this corporation, not having been created by our law, can have no legal existence here," and therefore that the action should have been brought by the members of the corporation in their private capacities and names as individuals. The court ruled that the principle thus suggested was without foundation. The question was again raised in 1843, with reference to a corporation created by the laws of a foreign nation. See also Dutch West-India Co. v. Van Moses, Str. 612 (where the power of a foreign corporation to appear as plaintiff was affirmed, it appearing that plaintiffs "had never sued by this name before, or ever had any particular name given them by any act of the States; but upon the dissolution of an old West-India company, it was declared, that there should be still a general West-India company, the members of which should be privileged to trade to the West-Indies, and that all others should be prohibited"); Henriques v. Dutch West India Co., 2 Ld. 36. MacRae v. Kansas City Piano Co., 69 Kan. 457, 460, 77 Pac. 94, where it is said: "The dissolution of a corporation operates, as to it, the same as the death of an individual; all its powers, prerogatives and authority — its life — ceased, and all legal proceedings then pending were at once suspended. At the common law this termination of corporate powers became so radical that a corporate debtor was entirely discharged of his obligation, and all actions by or against it were at once and forever abated."

Effect in equity see Kelly v. Rochelle, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 93 S. W. 164. Here a corporation had sued in equity upon an equitable cause of action which could survive the death of plaintiff. Pending the suit the corporation was dissolved. Thereafter judgment was rendered in its favor. The president and directors of the corporation, acting as trustees, then assigned this judgment and the original cause of action to a new corporation. It was held that as the suit was in equity and the cause asserted was one which survived, the original suit did not upon the dissolution of the corporation abate in the sense that it was destroyed and became absolutely dead, but that it was "only suspended for the want of a party plaintiff, subject to re-

(2) By Statute. But by statute in many states, and sometimes by the terms of its charter, a corporation may have an extension of legal entity, through a more or less limited time, for the purpose of winding up its affairs.[37] At the expiration of this period, however, the common-law rule, it has been held, comes again into effect, and the corporation is then without further standing in court for any purpose.[38] A like result follows, it has also been held, if there is a statute extending the time within which the defunct corporation may act but this statute, from whatever cause, is unconstitutional.[39]

(D) De Facto Corporation as Plaintiff—(1) In General. If a corporation exists de facto, although not de jure, the question of its legal entity can, as a rule, be raised only by the state.[40] It follows that a mere de facto corporation has still to a wide extent an entity as party plaintiff which the courts can recognize.[41]

(2) Limits of the Doctrine. If, however, a legal entity may be claimed by a corporation de facto it must be possible for this body to be a corporation de jure.[42] A further limitation is sometimes made. When the would-be plaintiff appears as a corporation possessing extraordinary power, as the power of eminent domain, some courts,[43] but not all,[44] have held that an existence de jure is essential to the maintenance of an action.

(E) Body Politic as Plaintiff. A nation, a state, a county, is a person in law, and as such may come within the cognizance of the courts as a party plainvival; and therefore the judgment rendered . . . was not void, but only voidable."

37. See Corporations, 10 Cyc. 1314, 1323, and cases there cited. Compare Lindemann v. Rusk, 125 Wis. 210, 104 N. W. 119.

38. Accordingly when a corporation was created in 1837 for a period of fifty years, and the statutes of the state allowed an extension of three years, the corporation, it was held, could not be recognized as plaintiff after the year 1890, not even as a de facto corporation. Clark v. American Cannel Coal Co., 165 Ind. 213, 73 N. E. 1083, 112 Am. St. Rep. 217 [reversing 35 Ind. App. 65, 73 N. E. 727]. Compare Lindemann v. Rusk, 125 Wis. 210, 104 N. W. 119.

St. Rep. 217, where Monks, J., says: "It necessarily follows that there can not be a corporation de facto under an unconstitutional statute, for such a statute is void, and a void law is no law." And see, generally, Corporations, 10 Cyc. 1314.

40. See Corporations, 10 Cyc. 251 et seq., 1334, 1357, and cases there cited. Compare Society Perun v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 481, 490, 3 N. E. 357, where Owen, J., remarks: "The theory that a de facto corporation has no real existence, that it is a mere phantom, to be invoked only by that rule of estoppel which forbids a party who has dealt with a pretended corporation to deny its corporate existence, has no foundation, either in reason or authority. A de facto corporation is a reality. It has an actual and substantial legal existence. It is, as the term implies, a corporation."

41. See, generally, Corporations, 10 Cyc. 251 et seq., 1334, 1357; and in particular Cozzens v. Chicago Hydraulic-Press Brick Co., 166 Ill. 213, 215, 46 N. E. 788. In this case plaintiff sued as a foreign corporation. Under a plea of nul tiel corporation, defendant insisted that plaintiff had not proved its corporate existence. Said the court: "When this plea is interposed, the burden of proving corporate existence is cast on the plaintiff corporation (Bailey v. Valley Nat. Bank, 127 Ill. 332, 19 N. E. 695). But this plea does not impose the burden upon the plaintiff of proving, that it was in all respects a perfectly legal corporation. It is sufficient, for a recovery upon the issue presented by that plea, to make proof that the plaintiff corporation had a de facto existence."

In actions for torts.—The doctrine is recognized not merely in the case of actions on contracts, but in torts as well. Thus in Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 137 U. S. 568, 11 S. Ct. 185, 34 L. ed. 784, a de facto corporation sued successfully on a cause of action growing out of a nuisance.

42. See Corporations, 10 Cyc. 252, 255, 260 et passim, and cases there cited. And see Clark v. American Cannel Coal Co., 165 Ind. 213, 216, 73 N. E. 1083, 112 Am. St. Rep. 217, where Monks, J., remarks: "It is essential to the existence of a de facto corporation, however, that there be (1) a valid law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might be incorporated; (2) a bona fide attempt to organize a corporation under such law; (3) and an actual exercise of corporate powers. . . . If there is no law under which a corporation de jure might exist, its nonexistence may be set up even in a collateral proceeding." See Corporations, 10 Cyc. 253. Compare Huber v. Martin, 127 Wis. 412, 105 N. W. 1031, 1135, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1023, 3 L. R. A. N. S. 653.

44. In McAuley v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 83 Ill. 348, and Reisner v. Strong, 24 Kan. 410, a de facto corporation maintained its standing as plaintiff in an action to condemn land.

tiff.[45] The principle extends to an action by a foreign nation or sovereign;[46] its standing before the court is that of "a person residing without the state"; nor has the foreign state or sovereign any special privilege as plaintiff.[47]

(IV) Quasi-Artificial Person as Plaintiff—(A) Origin of Doctrine. The common law recognized only the two forms of legal entity already noticed, that of the natural person and that of the artificial person or corporation.[48] A partnership or other unincorporated association had no legal entity distinct from that of its members. It was therefore accorded no recognition in the courts of the common law if it appeared as plaintiff in its association name.[49] Modern statutes, however, show a growing tendency to modify this common-law doctrine, and in greater or less degree to recognize a legal entity in unincorporated associations.[50]

(B) Scope of Doctrine—(1) Partnerships Generally. Thus it is now provided in a considerable number of states that an action may be brought by any partnership as such.[51]

(2) Partnerships of a Designated Class. In other states the strictness of the common-law rule has been moderated in favor of partnerships formed for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business in the state, or holding property there.[52]

Formal recognition not necessary.—On principle it is not essential that the foreign nation or state should have been formally recognized by the country in which the action is brought. See the remarks of Best, C. J., in Yrisarri v. Clement, 3 Bing. 432, 11 E. C. L. 213, 2 C. & P. 223, 225, 12 E. C. L. 538, 4 L. J. C. P. O. S. 128, 11 Moore C. P. 308. "If a foreign state is recognized by this country, it is not necessary to prove, that it is an existing state; but if it is not so recognized, such proof becomes necessary. There are hundreds in India, and elsewhere, that are existing states, though they are not recognized. I take the rule to be this—if a body of persons assemble together to protect themselves, and support their own independence, and make laws, and have Courts of Justice, that is evidence of their being a state." It will be observed that the enactment is permissive.—In other words, while a corporation must claim as a legal entity, the partnership may claim either as such, or through its individual members.

52. See Partnership, post, pp. 560, 580.

The Ohio enactment is typical here. Bates Rev. St. § 5011 reads: "A partnership formed for the purpose of carrying on a trade or

(3) UNINCORPORATED CLUBS AND SOCIETIES. This exception to the common-law doctrine has been occasionally extended to voluntary associations other than partnerships, as to unincorporated clubs and societies.[53] To claim this legal entity, the unincorporated association must bring itself within the scope of the statute.[54] Nor will the fact that a statute expressly authorizes an action against an unincorporated association in its association name warrant an action in this name by the association.[55]

c. Effect if Plaintiff Is Without a Legal Entity — (I) LEGAL ENTITY AND LEGAL CAPACITY DISTINGUISHED. There is a very material difference between the lack of legal entity and the lack of capacity to sue. In the latter case the defect does not go to merits; it is waived unless a specific objection is taken at the threshold.[56] But if there is a lack of legal entity the whole action fails.[57]

(II) NO ENTITY, NO ACTION. If an action is brought in the name of that which under the lex fori has no legal entity, it is as if there was no plaintiff in the record, and therefore no action before the court.[58] Nor, it has been held, will a statute providing that an action founded upon a written instrument may be brought by a party thereto in the name or description by which he is designated in the instrument authorize an action in the name of that which has no legal entity.[59]

(III) WHETHER DEFECT CAN BE REMEDIED BY AMENDMENT — (A) In General. In strictness of principle, if there is no legal entity in plaintiff, there is no foundation upon which to base an amendment. And this principle is definitely recognized and enforced in some cases.[60] business in this state, or holding property therein, may sue or be sued by the usual or ordinary name which it has assumed, or by which it is known; and in such case it shall not be necessary to allege or prove the names of the individual members thereof."

So in Wyoming see Rev. St. (1899) § 3485.

For other statutes see Colo. Code, § 14; Conn. Gen. St. (1902) § 588; Utah Rev. St. (1898) § 2927.

53. See Mich. Comp. Laws (1897), § 10,025, which reads: "Whenever any unincorporated voluntary association, club or society, shall be formed in this state, composed of five members or more, having some distinguishing name, actions at law or in chancery may be brought by or against such association, club or society by the name by which it is known."

The legal entity thus created was given emphatic recognition in the case of Detroit Light Guard Band v. First Michigan Independent Infantry, 134 Mich. 598, 96 N. W. 934. Here "a voluntary association performed services under a contract for an agreed price. By agreement among its members, each was to receive an aliquot part of the agreed price as his compensation. The association brought suit on the contract, and certain members appeared by attorney in court, and stated that they were satisfied, and did not wish to pursue their claim. It was held that as the contract was with the association, and for its benefit, such action by the individual members could not affect the association's right to recover the full contract price of the services."

The common-law rule that the parties to an action must be either natural or artificial persons has been modified in this state, therefore, only as respects actions against unincorporated associations." And see Moore v. Burns, 60 Ala. 269. Compare The Pembinaw v. Wilson, 11 Iowa 479, holding that a statute which permits a suit against a steamboat in the name as such does not permit an action in the name of the steamboat as plaintiff.

(B) Misnomer and Lack of Legal Entity. The principle referred to in the foregoing paragraph is, however, subject to a distinction which greatly moderates, if it does not destroy, its effect in the general run of cases. Although an action brought in the name of that which has no legal entity is a nullity, an action in which a legally existing plaintiff has been misnamed is still a true action, to which the court can give full effect, subject only to defendant's right to object at the threshold for misnomer.[61]

(IV) Fictitious Plaintiff. A further relaxation of the principle is found in the well-established rule that a plea that there never was any such person in existence as the alleged plaintiff was a plea in abatement and not in bar.[62]

d. Typical Instances of Lack of Legal Entity — (I) In General. The cases in which an action fails because of a want of a legal entity in plaintiff show several distinct classes. The following are the most important: (1) An action brought in a trade-name, or the name of a mere business interest;[63] (2) an action brought in the name of a partnership or unincorporated association, when not authorized by statute to sue;[64] (3) an action brought in the name of an artificial or quasi-artificial person formed for an illegal purpose.[65]

(II) Action In Trade-Name, or in Name of a Mere Business Interest. If it appears that the name in which the action is brought is merely a trade-name, or the name commonly applied to a mere business interest, or the name of an estate, not importing a corporation, there is an apparent lack of legal personality in the claimant, and the action is defective beyond hope of amendment.[66]

Works, 122 Ga. 774, 50 S. E. 978 (where the court held that as the suit was a nullity, being without a plaintiff, there was "nothing to amend by"); New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Inman Park Presb. Church, 111 Ga. 677, 36 S. E. 880; Mexican Mill v. Yellow Jacket Silver Min. Co., 4 Nev. 40, 44, 97 Am. Dec. 510 (where it is said: "In this instance no person, natural or artificial, is named as plaintiff; and if an amendment were allowed to supply the omission the effect of such an amendment would necessarily be to make a plaintiff where there was none such at the inception of the action").

61. See the distinction recently drawn by the supreme court of Georgia between the case of the Western, etc., R. Co. v. Dalton Marble Works, 122 Ga. 774, 50 S. E. 978, where an amendment was refused, and such cases as Adas Yeshurun Soc. v. Fish, 117 Ga. 345, 43 S. E. 715; Smith v. Columbia Jewelry Co., 114 Ga. 698, 40 S. E. 735; St. Cecilia's Academy v. Hardin, 78 Ga. 39, 3 S. E. 305, where the amendment was permitted because the names used imported a legal entity. Compare Bijou Advertising Co. v. Dickenson, 27 Nova Scotia 443.

This distinction is often very far reaching. — See for instance Robinson v. Magarity, 28 Ill. 423, 426, where it is said: "There is no presumption of law or fact, that any firm name includes any number of persons more than one. . . . Where a defendant comes in voluntarily, or pleads by the name alleged by the plaintiff, he is estopped to allege anything against it. And the same is the rule if he does not deny the names in which a plaintiff sues. They are both equally in abatement." Compare McGruder v. Belt, 12 App. Cas. (D. C.) 15; Porter v. Cresson, 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 257, 258, where Duncan, J., remarks: "From the time of the year-books to this time, misnomer might be pleaded in abatement, when the plaintiff misnames himself, 22 Edw. III, c. 34, and we ought not to be more strict than in the days of the year-books; and in Brooke Misnomer 73, it is said, that in an action by a corporation, or a natural body, misnomer of the one or the other goes only to the writ. But if there was no such company as Cressou, Wistar & Co., then there could be no person in rerum natura to maintain the action; that would be in bar, for there could be no one to maintain the action by any name."

62. Doe v. Penfield, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 308; Campbell v. Galbreath, 5 Watts (Pa.) 423, 428, where Kennedy, J., says: "In order to prevent all unnecessary delay in bringing a cause to trial on its merits . . . if an action be commenced in the name of a fictitious person, the defendant may plead in abatement that there never was any such person in rerum natura. . . . But then he will not be permitted to plead those matters after pleading in bar to the action, nor even after a general imparlance."

The same argument of convenience gave the fictitious "John Doe" a secure place even as against a plea in abatement at least within the local jurisdiction. See Doe v. Penfield, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 308.

(III) ACTION IN NAME OF AN UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATION NOT AUTHORIZED BY STATUTE TO SUE. However numerous a partnership or an unincorporated association may be, or however widespread its business, it cannot at common law claim recognition in the courts as plaintiff in its association name alone.[67] If the action is brought merely in the name of an unincorporated association, the fault, at common law, is in strictness not the misnomer of a party plaintiff but rather the omission of plaintiff. On principle, according to the doctrine of a number of cases, defendant's right to object in such a case is not waived by his failure to demur specially or to plead in abatement, but can be taken at any stage.[68] But the trend of authority has been to moderate this doctrine, through an application of the distinction, already noticed, between the misnomer of plaintiff and the omission of plaintiff.[69] Accordingly it has been held that the objection at common law to an action in the name of an unincorporated association is of a dilatory nature and is waived if not made in limine.[70]

(IV) ACTION IN NAME OF AN ARTIFICIAL OR QUASI-ARTIFICIAL PERSON ATTEMPTED TO BE FORMED FOR AN UNLAWFUL PURPOSE. Although apparently organized as a corporation, or apparently authorized to sue in an association name, a society or association formed for an unlawful purpose is unable, when that fact appears, to maintain its standing in court as a person in law.[71]

shows, if it be true, that the 'Dalton Marble Works' was neither a partnership nor a corporation, but merely the name of Colvard's property." It was held that the case must be dismissed. To the same effect see The Pembinaw v. Wilson, 11 Iowa 479; Columbus v. Monti, 6 Minn. 568.

Pollock v. Dunning, 54 Ind. 115, where it is said that a complaint by an unincorporated company in its firm-name and style alone, not setting out the individual names of the members thereof, is bad, both on demurrer and on motion in arrest of judgment. See also Hughes v. Walker, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 50: "If an unincorporated company sue in the name of the firm, the suit will be dismissed on motion."

An Indiana statute provided that an action at law for the recovery of a specific sum of money upon a promissory note could be instituted by filing the note, without a formal declaration. A note made payable in a firm-name was filed under this statute, and a writ of summons was issued in the same name without designating the individual members of the firm. It was held that the firm could not thus sue. "The statute," said the court, "dispenses with a formal declaration, but it does not dispense with the parties to the suit." Hays v. Lanier, 3 Blackf. Chase & Co. to be the names of real persons, where the contrary does not appear"); Porter v. Cresson, 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 257 (which was an action in the name of Cresson, Wistor & Co. on a single bill; the plea was non est factum. Association formed for an unlawful purpose appearing as a corporation.— Detroit Schuetzen Bund v. Detroit Agitations Verein, 44 Mich. 313, 6 N. W. 675, 38 Am. Rep. 270. In this case plaintiff declared "as a body corporate organized and existing under the laws of the State." It appeared in the record that its purpose was "by all lawful means to oppose the temperance law" passed by the last legislature. It was held that a society could not be incorporated to resist the enforcement of a law, and that judgment in favor of plaintiff must be reversed.

Partnerships formed for an unlawful purpose.— Jackson v. Akron Brick Assoc., 53 Ohio St. 303, 305, 41 N. E. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 638, 35 L. R. A. 287, where the action

2. Requisite of Remedial Interest — a. Statement of Rule. For a standing as party plaintiff it is necessary, not only that plaintiff be a person in law,[72] but also that this person have and show, in the cause of action asserted, an existing interest which the law of the forum can recognize and enforce.[73]

b. Nature of Remedial Interest — (i) Distinguished From Beneficial Interest. This remedial interest is commonly found in the person who has the beneficial ownership of the cause of action. But the one is not the test of the other. The remedial interest may be entirely separate from the beneficial ownership.[74]

(ii) Right of Action Essential. The remedial interest essential for the position of a party plaintiff is a technical rather than a merely beneficial interest. Its characteristic is that of a right of action, and this whether the question arises in common-law pleading,[75] in equity pleading,[76] or under the codes.[77] He who is vested with a right of action on a given cause of action may sue upon it in his own name, although the whole beneficial interest is in another.[78] On the other was brought in the name of the Akron Brick Association, claiming as a partnership. By the terms of the Ohio statute "a partnership formed for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business in this state, or holding property therein, may sue or be sued by the usual or ordinary name which it has assumed, or by which it is known." Defendant answered that the alleged partnership was formed for the purpose of preventing fair competition in the brick trade, and to enhance prices. Said the court: "A partnership is an association with certain incidents recognized by law for the convenient transaction of legitimate trade and business; it cannot, therefore, be formed for an illegal purpose, or one contrary to public policy." And it was held that as it appeared that the Akron Brick Association "was organized for a purpose contrary to public policy" it had no right under the Ohio statute to sue by the name assumed in its business — "it is not a partnership within the meaning of the statute," per Minshall, C. J.

Pl. §§ 72, 76*a*: "The general rule, in courts of equity, as to parties, is that all persons materially interested in the subject-matter, ought to be made parties to the suit." And see Crocker v. Higgins, 7 Conn. 342, 346, where Hosmer, C. J., remarks: "It [the word interest as defining the person entitled to sue in equity] implies a right in the subject of controversy, which a decree, more nearly or remotely, may affect." See also Carter v. Carter, 82 Va. 624.

77. As to code pleading see First Rep. N. Y. Com'rs Pr. and Pl. (1848) p. 124, where it is said: "The true rule undoubtedly is, that which prevails in the courts of equity, that he who has the right is the person to pursue the remedy. We have adopted that rule." Compare the remarks of Willes, J., in Gray v. Pearson, L. R. 5 C. P. 568, 574, 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 416: "I am of opinion that this action cannot be maintained, and for the simple reason,— a reason not applicable merely to the procedure of this country, but one affecting all sound procedure,— that the proper person to bring an action is the person whose right has been violated." See also Webb v. Hayden, 166 Mo. 39, 65 S. W. 760.

78. The distinction between the person having the right of action and the person having the beneficial interest is familiar enough in common-law pleading, and of settled importance wherever the administration of law and the administration of equity is through separate tribunals. See the remarks of Mitchell, J., in Usher v. West Jersey R. Co., 126 Pa. St. 206, 214, 17 Atl. 597, 12 Am. St. Rep. 863, 4 L. R. A. 261. W. 33; McLean v. Dean, 66 Minn. 369, 69 N. W. 140; Willison v. Smith, 52 Mo. App. 133; Allen v. Brown, 44 N. Y. 228; Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389; Brown v. Cherry, hand, he who is without a right of action on a given cause of action cannot assert this cause in his own name, even when the whole beneficial interest is in him.[79]

(III) RIGHT OF ACTION AND CAUSE OF ACTION. The right of action is to be distinguished from the cause of action. In the ordinary run of cases, the distinction is in no way important, the two coexisting as a normal condition.[80] But they do not necessarily coexist. It happens now and again that plaintiff's first pleading sets up an unquestionable cause of action existing only in the right of one not a party to the suit.[81]

(IV) RIGHT OF ACTION AND CAPACITY TO SUE. The right of action is to be distinguished also from the capacity to sue. The former is of the essence, the latter is waived if not objected to on that specific ground.[82]

(V) RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFECT OF PARTIES. By the same token, the want of a right of action is essentially different from a defect of parties plaintiff, and is not waived by a failure to demur on that ground.[83]

e. Effect if Remedial Interest Is Lacking. It follows that the effect of a want of remedial interest is far reaching. It is no less essential than the statement of the facts of a cause of action that plaintiff's first pleading show a cause of action in his favor. If it fails in this, although stating the facts of a complete cause of action in someone else, plaintiff cannot claim a judgment even if defendant has contested the case on its merits.[84] The defect is treated as analogous to a failure

80. So frequent is this that the code demurrer upon the ground that the complaint or petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action reaches two different kinds of defects: (1) When the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in any one; (2) when the complaint does state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, but this cause of action does not appear to exist in favor of plaintiff. See Ervin v. State, 150 Ind. 332, 48 N. E. 249; Farris v. Jones, 112 Ind. 498, 503, 14 N. E. 484 (where it is said: "A demurrer to a paragraph of complaint, for the alleged insufficiency of the facts stated therein, calls in question not only the sufficiency of the facts . . . to constitute a cause of action, but also the right or authority of the particular plaintiff to institute or maintain a suit"); State v. Karr, 37 Ind. 81. See cases cited infra, this note.

Various instances of this separation between the right of action and the cause of action will be found in the cases following. 82. Cutshaw v. Fargo, 8 Ind. App. 691, 34 N. E. 376, 36 N. E. 650. In Pence v. Aughe, 101 Ind. 317, 319, it is said: "It has often been decided by this court, that a demurrer to a complaint assigning as cause 'that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue,' has reference only to some legal disability of the plaintiff, such as infancy, idiocy or coverture, and not to the fact that the complaint fails to show a right of action in the plaintiff." And see infra, I, B, 3.

83. "The objection to the plaintiff's maintaining the action is not waived, as is claimed in argument, by the failure to demur, on the ground of a defect of parties plaintiff. The objection is not that there is a defect of parties, but that no right of action is shown to exist in the plaintiff." Galpin v. Lamb, 29 Ohio St. 529, 536. In Pelham v. Edelmeyer, 15 Fed. 262, 264, 21 Blatchf. 188, Wallace, J., remarks: "The objection is not that there is a defect of parties, but that the complainant has no interest in the subject of the controversy. As to all merely formal defects in the bill the objection must be taken by demurrer. So, also, when there is a defect of parties appearing upon the face of the bill, the defendant must resort to a demurrer or the court is at liberty to make a decree saving the rights of the absent parties. . . . The complainant has failed to show himself possessed of any legal or equitable interest in the letters patent on which the suit is founded. If the bill were perfect the court could not decree for complainant upon the proofs.

to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It may be reached therefore by general demurrer.[85] Or it will be searched out by plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's answer.[86] Or if there has been a trial with a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, the case may still be dismissed by the reviewing court.[87]

d. Remedial Interest Under Different Systems of Procedure — (I) In General. Although the three systems of common-law pleading, equity pleading, and code pleading agree in the general principle that the action must be brought in the name of the person whose right has been violated,[88] they are not at one on the proper test of this right.[89]

(II) In Common-Law Pleading. Common-law pleading looked to the entire legal interest, and did not directly recognize the beneficial interest or the equitable title.[90] The test which it applied was that of the strict legal title in its entirety. In the view of common-law procedure he who was clothed with this legal title had the exclusive right of action, although the entire beneficial interest, with the equitable title, was in someone else.[91]

(III) In Equity Pleading. The courts of equity looked rather to the beneficial ownership. The claimant must, it is true, be clothed with a title which the court could recognize,[92] but an equitable title was sufficient.[93]

(IV) In Code Pleading. Under the codes of civil procedure, the substitution of the one form of civil action for the action at law and the suit in equity rendered necessary a test of the remedial interest which would be applicable both to the legal and the equitable cause of action. The general principle that he who has the right should have the remedy was avowedly adopted by the framers of the first code.[94] But they did not expressly define this right either as a legal or as an equitable right. The earliest code, the New York code of 1848, provided merely that "every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest," except as otherwise specially provided,[95] and left it for the courts to determine who is "the real party in interest" within the scope of the one form of civil action. This vague and convenient enactment has been copied by the later codes without substantial variation or addition. The result for the code states, and some of the others, has been therefore that the primary test of the remedial interest sufficient for a standing as plaintiff is found in the judicial interpretation of the phrase "real party in interest."[96]

(where it is said: "As the petition itself disclosed the fact that the plaintiff was not entitled to the debt sued for, but that the right of action was in another, no valid judgment could have been rendered against the defendant"); Weidner v. Rankin, 26 Ohio St. 522, 525 (where it is said: "A good petition must contain a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff, and when it does not show such cause of action, the objection is not waived by the failure of the defendant to demur, although the facts stated may constitute a cause of action in favor of a person not a party to the suit").

85. Under the codes, the defect of a remedial interest lacking in the would-be plaintiff is customarily reached by a demurrer upon the ground that the complaint or petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. e. Different Aspects of Remedial Interest — (i) Legal Owner as Plaintiff — (A) At Common Law — (1) In General — (a) The Test. The test of remedial interest in a court of law, if there is no statute to the contrary, is the test of the legal title.[97]

(b) Legal Title Sufficient. If plaintiff, suing at law, has a legal title, in whatever form, to the cause of action which he has pleaded, he has a sufficient remedial interest.[98]

(c) Legal Title Necessary. On the other hand if a plaintiff in a court of law shows no legal title to the cause which he has pleaded, the fact that the entire Recovery depends on proof of the legal plaintiff's claim, and the right to its fruits is a matter resting between the legal and equitable plaintiffs to be determined, if necessary, by the court; and this in no way concerns defendant. Sentinel Printing Co. v. Long, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 608.

The application of the doctrine in special cases — Promisee not expressed.—"Although it is not in this contract expressly stated to whom the promise is made, yet it appears, that the money, which constituted the consideration for the promise of the defendant's testator, was received by him of the plaintiff; and also, that it was money, the legal title to which was in the plaintiff. He, therefore, is to be considered the person to whom the promise is made, and the party to the contract in whom is vested the legal interest in it. Hence it results, that the alleged violation of it is an injury to his legal rights, for which he is the proper person to bring this suit." Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445, 452.

Owner for collection.— F, the owner of a promissory note, indorsed and delivered it to P, for collection. Before P collected the note, F died. Thereafter P sued upon the note in his own name. It was held as the indorsement and delivery for the purpose of collection passed the legal title in trust, and the trust was not terminated by the death of F, that the action might be brought in the name of P. Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 143, 11 N. W. 844.

"Agent" for collection.— Defendant was summoned to answer A B, "agent of the Providence Hat-manufacturing Company" in assumpsit for that defendant "by his note of hand of that date, for value received of the Providence Hat-manufacturing Company, promised the said A. B., as agent thereof, to pay to him or order the sum," etc. After a verdict for A B, defendant objected that if any action lay on the promise, it must be brought in the name of the company, "whose agent only the plaintiff is, and from whom alone the consideration moved." It was held that as the contract was with the agent personally, he had the legal title and could sue in his own name. Buffum v. Chadwick, 8 Mass. 103. And see Lobdell v. Merchants', etc., Bank, 33 Mich. 408; Brigham v. Gurney, 1 Mich. 349.

Effect of a blank indorsement.—Assumpsit upon a promissory note payable to the order of B and indorsed by him in blank. The action was in the name of P, S and H, "Trustees of the Kensington Savings Institution." Defense, that P, S, and H are only some of the copartners trading under the name of the Kensington's Savings Institution, and that all the copartners are necessary. It was held that as the blank indorsement could be filled up with the names of the partners on the record, they had the legal title, and the names of the other partners were unnecessary. Bacon v. Sanders, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 148. And see Boyd v. Corbitt, 37 Mich. 52. Compare Kerrick v. Stevens, 58 Mich. 297, 25 N. W. 199, to the effect that where the payee of a note sues upon it in his own name, and it appears that the note is indorsed in blank by the payee, as the mere indorsement does not divest the payee of the legal title, he may sue in his own name.

beneficial ownership appears in him does not warrant an action at law in his name as plaintiff.[99]

(2) In Case of Separation Between Legal and Beneficial Ownership. In the view of a court of law, if plaintiff is vested with the legal title it is immaterial whether he is or is not the individual who would generally be considered most interested in maintaining the action.[1] A court of law "will not inquire whether the plaintiff sues for himself, or as trustee for some other person."[2]

(3) In Case of Special Property. Although a legal title is necessary for a standing as plaintiff in a court of law, it does not follow that the complete legal title is necessary. Thus, any person may sue for an interference with the possession if he has the right to the immediate possession as against defendant.[3]

(B) In Equity Pleading—(1) In General. It is sometimes said that a suit in equity not only may but must be brought in the name of the beneficial owner.[4] The underlying principle, however, is, not that equity refuses to recognize the legal owner, as courts of law refuse to recognize the equitable owner, but rather that courts of equity are not confined to the recognition of one kind of ownership.[5] Regularly an equitable interest is to be asserted by the equitable owner in his own name, and not in the name of the legal owner.[6] But there is a wide class

There was an outstanding encumbrance at the time when the deed was delivered. It was conceded that the right of action thus arising did not run with the land. of cases in which the legal owner, without beneficial interest, has a claim of an equitable cognizance, in his right as legal owner, against some third person; in such cases a court of equity does not refuse admission to the legal title.[7]

(2) LEGAL OWNER SUING WITH BENEFICIARY. As a rule, when the legal owner sues in equity, his beneficiaries also must be parties to the suit.[8]

(3) LEGAL OWNER SUING ALONE IN EQUITY. But in some cases the legal owner may not only sue in equity but may sue there alone.[9] A trustee, for instance, may appear as complainant without joining his beneficiaries when the object of the suit is to recover the lost property or to reduce it to possession, and it in no wise affects his relation with the cestui que trust.[10]

(4) LEGAL OWNER AS A REAL PARTY IN EQUITY. In these cases the complainant, being vested with the legal title in trust for another, is looked upon by courts of equity not as a merely formal and nominal party but as a real litigant.[11]

9. The general principle was well stated by Waite, C. J., in Kerrison v. Stewart, 93 U. S. 155, 160, 23 L. ed. 843, as follows: "It cannot be doubted, that, under some circumstances, a trustee may represent his beneficiaries in all things relating to their common interest in the trust property. He may be invested with such powers and subjected to such obligations that those for whom he holds will be bound by what is done against him, as well as by what is done by him. The difficulty lies in ascertaining whether he occupies such a position, not in determining its effect if he does. If he has been made such a representative, it is well settled that his beneficiaries are not necessary parties to a suit by him against a stranger to enforce the trust (Ashton v. Atlantic Bank, 3 Allen (Mass.) 217; Shaw v. Norfolk County R. Co., 5 Gray (Mass.) 162; Campbell v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,366, 1 Woods 368; Bifield v. Taylor, Beatty 23, 1 Molloy 193); or to one by a stranger against him to defeat it in whole or in part (Winslow v. Minnesota, etc., R. Co., 4 Minn. 313, 77 Am. Dec. 519; Wakeman v. Grover, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 23; Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 379; Campbell v. Watson, 8 Ohio 498). In such cases, the trustee is in court for and on behalf of the beneficiaries; and they, though not parties, are bound by the judgment, unless it is impeached for fraud or collusion between him and the adverse party."

10. See cases cited infra, this note.

The legal owner, without beneficial ownership, suing alone in equity.—Ashton v. Atlantic Bank, 3 Allen (Mass.) 217; Boyden v. Partridge, 2 Gray (Mass.) 190; Adams v. Bradley, 12 Mich. 346; Tavenner v. Barrett, 21 W. Va. 656 (where an agent for the purchase or sale of real estate has such a relation to the transaction as to make him a trustee, as where the bonds for the purchase-price are made payable to him, he may sue for the specific performance of the contract); Dodge v. Tulleys, 144 U. S. 451, 455, 12 S. Ct. 728, 36 L. ed. 50 (an action in a federal court to foreclose a trust deed, executed to Tulleys, trustee, to secure payment of a bond of ten thousand dollars to Hesse. It was objected that the citizenship of Hesse, the obligee in the bond, was not alleged. It was held that this was unnecessary. "The suit," said Brewer, J., "is in the name of Tulleys, trustee, to whom the legal title was conveyed in trust, and who was, therefore, the proper party in whose name to bring suit for foreclosure. It happens in this case that there was but one party beneficiary under the trust deed; . . . But whether one or many, the trustee represents them all, and in his name the litigation is generally and properly carried on"); Carey v. Brown, 92 U. S. 171, 23 L. ed. 469; Hunter v. Robbins, 117 Fed. 920 (where complainant, as treasurer of a corporation, brought an action in his own name against his predecessor in office, for an accounting and to recover money of the corporation alleged to have been wrongfully withheld by defendant); Ross v. Ft. Wayne, 63 Fed. 466, 11 C. C. A. 288; Smith v. Portland, 30 Fed. 734; Wescott v. Wayne Agricultural Works, 11 Fed. 298.

11. Accordingly diversity of citizenship between the legal owner suing alone in equity and defendant is sufficient for jurisdiction by a federal court, although the cestui que trust is a citizen of the same state as defendant. Dodge v. Tulleys, 144 U. S. 451, 12 S. Ct. 728, 36 L. ed. 501; Susquehanna, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Blatchford, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 172, 20 L. ed. 179; Hunter v. Robbins, 117 Fed. 920; Pennington v. Smith, 78 Fed. 399, 24 C. C. A. 145; Griswold v. Bacheller, 75 Fed. 470; Morris v. Lindauer, 54 Fed. 23, 4 C. C. A. 162.

Nor is the rule changed when the trustee refuses to sue and the beneficiary brings the suit making the trustee a defendant. If the trustee and defendant are citizens of the same state, a federal court is without jurisdiction from diversity of citizenship, although the complainant is a citizen of a different state, for the trustee, although a defendant, is really on the same side of the case as the beneficiary. Shipp v. Williams, 62 Fed. 4, 10 C. C. A. 247.

The rule here, however, is to be distinguished from that which applies when plaintiff is a "mere conduit through which the law affords a remedy to the parties aggrieved," as when, by some positive law, the litigant is compelled to use the name of the state or of some public officer, who has neither title to nor control over the cause asserted.[12]

(c) In Code Pleading. It is a fundamental doctrine of code pleading[13] that the distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity are abolished, that there shall be but one form of civil action, and that this one form of action must be brought, with a few exceptions, in the name of the real party in interest.[14] But this doctrine, as construed by the courts, does not eliminate the legal title as a test of remedial interest under the codes. To a wide extent it is still sufficient for the position of plaintiff in the civil action. The doctrine will be developed under the topics referred to in the note.[15]

(II) Nominal and Use Plaintiffs—(A) The Rule at Common Law. When one person held the legal title to tangible property or a chose in action and another person had the beneficial ownership of the same property, the common-law rule required that any action respecting the property should be in the name of the legal owner.[16] It might be that the beneficial ownership appeared on the face of the instrument creating the legal interest,[17] it might be that plaintiff's declaration expressly alleged that he was suing as trustee for another;[18] but in either case the historic rule of the common law was to look to the legal title and disregard the equitable ownership.[19]

(B) Its Evasion Through Device of Use Plaintiff. Notwithstanding a growing recognition of equitable rights by the substantive common law, this rule of the common-law procedure which excluded the beneficial owner from a place as plaintiff in the law courts,[20] continued unchanged, in point of form and theory, until a comparatively recent time.[21] In point of substance, however, the rule

21. In Master v. Miller, 4 T. R. 320, 341, Buller, J., referring to the common-law rule which required the action to be in the name of the assignor of a chose in action, that is, of its legal owner, and not in the name of its assignee, had remarked: "I see no use or convenience in preserving that shadow when the substance is gone; and that it is merely a shadow, is apparent from the later cases." Twenty-five years later, in Skinner v. Somes, 14 Mass. 107, 108, the assignee of a bond, made to the obligee, "his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns," ventured to sue upon it in his own name, urging that "courts of law have become more liberal in later times in supporting and protecting the rights of assignees of choses in action." But it was held that notwithstanding the mention of "assigns" in the bond itself, the assignee could not sue in his own name. "This is the first attempt," said the court, "to maintain an action of debt by the assignee of a bond in his own name. . . . We have gone as far was largely abrogated by the device of the use plaintiff. The beneficial owner, although denied the right to sue in his own name, was permitted to sue in the name of the legal owner, and to control the action as thus brought.[22] In most respects, but not in all, the equitable owner became in effect the master of the action at law.[23]

(c) Nature and Aim of Device—(1) Its Main Purpose. The doctrine of the use plaintiff came as a device of convenience, in an attempt to evade the spirit while preserving the letter of a hard and fast rule of procedure. Its purpose was to safeguard the substantial interests and the convenience of the beneficial owner.[24] In strictness its use was proper only when reasonably necessary to this end.[25]

(2) Designation of Beneficial Owner. When a common-law action is thus brought, in the name of one person for the benefit of another, it is usual, and the better practice, to show this fact explicitly, either in the body of the declaration or by indorsement on it, or on the writ of summons.[26] But this is not necessary. Even when the beneficial ownership is expressly alleged in the declaration, the allegation forms no material part of the pleading. Both the cause of action and the right of action are complete without it.[27]

(d) Nominal Plaintiff as a Party—(1) In General. The device worked no change in the formal record of the action as asserting a claim by a legal owner, and it caused no risk of loss to him.[28]

(2) As Respects the Record. Accordingly, when the question turned only on the record of the case, the court still looked to the legal, or nominal, plaintiff.[29] in favor of assignments as the authorities or the reason of them would justify us. But to support the present action would be to disregard settled and established rules, founded on sound principles of law, and the highest reason." So it was remarked by the supreme court of Connecticut, as late as 1841: "No case has been cited, nor is it believed that any can be found, where, on a promise made to one sustaining the character of a trustee, the cestuy que trust, or person ultimately interested, has been permitted to bring an action upon it. In such case, the obligation and legal responsibility is exclusively to the trustee, and must be enforced by him in a court of law." Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445, 454, per Storrs, J.

Statutory alteration.—The rule has been greatly altered by statute here and there; see notably, the requirement of the codes that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. See infra, I, B, 2, e, (II), (F).

Prior to the codes there were various alterations of the rule by special statutes. See Chitty Pl. (10th Am. ed. 1847) 15, 16.

And see Berry v. Gillis, 17 N. H. 9, 43 Am. Dec. 584, 589, for another illustration of the court, in a cause at law, looking to the rights of the real parties.

24. "The words 'for the use, etc.,' are unnecessary for any purpose other than to protect the interest of the usee against the nominal plaintiff." Tedrick v. Wells, 152 Ill. 214, 217, 38 N. The general principle was recognized in Hargraves v. Lewis, 6 Ga. 207, 211, a suit in equity, where Nisbet, J., said: "A man has no right to make another a party to his litigation capriciously, but where it is necessary to the assertion of his rights in a Court of Justice, he may do so upon indemnifying him for costs. . . . It must be necessary to the assertion of the party's rights, or else he cannot use the name of another against his consent."

26. See remarks of Moncure, J., in Clarksons v. Doddridge, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 42, 46: "And it is useful and convenient to do so, to give notice to the defendant of the rights of the substantial plaintiff, and to enable the court to protect them by its orders." And see Bentley v. Standard F. Ins. Co., 40 W. Va. 729, 23 S. E. 584.

Nomenclature of the device.—In the doctrine on the point, the beneficial owner is distinguished from the legal owner by various names—the "use plaintiff," the "beneficial plaintiff," the "equitable plaintiff," the "substantial plaintiff," the "real plaintiff," the "cestui que use," the "usee." The legal owner has been called the "legal plaintiff," the "nominal plaintiff," the "record plaintiff."

28. See cases cited infra, note 29 et seq.

29. "Courts of law can only recognize him [the nominal plaintiff] as the plaintiff, although in modern practice, as a matter of

He was a necessary party in every stage of the action;[30] for the purposes of the record, he alone had the right of action.[31] It was error to permit a declaration to be amended so as to show that the legal title was not in the nominal plaintiff but in the use plaintiff.[32] If the action was brought in the name of one for the use of another, it was irregular and erroneous to enter the judgment in favor of the beneficiary alone.[33] If a statute gave a right of appeal to "the plaintiff," the appeal must be prosecuted in the name of the nominal plaintiff.[34] In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the nominal plaintiff was as a rule liable for the costs taxed against plaintiff.[35]

(3) Rights of a Nominal Plaintiff. Again, the use plaintiff's control over the action does not go so far as to expose the nominal plaintiff to risk of loss.[36] To control the action at law the use plaintiff must have the entire beneficial ownership.[37] And in such case the nominal plaintiff may require indemnity against costs and possible damages,[38] or sue the use plaintiff, upon an implied assumpsit for reimbursement.[39]

(E) Use Plaintiff As a Party—(1) In General. Within the limits set by the established forms of procedure at law,[40] the tendency in the law courts has long been to recognize the rights of the beneficial owner, and to protect him convenience, they will declare and protect the trust." McCormick v. Fulton, 19 Ill. 570, 571, per Walker, J.

Altered by statute.—Under Ala. Code (1896), § 29, "in all cases where suits are brought in the name of the person having the legal right for the use of another, the beneficiary must be considered as the sole party on the record." 34. "The beneficial plaintiff is not authorized to appeal in his own name, and every step taken must be in that of the nominal plaintiff. And when the defendant perfects his appeal, the nominal plaintiff becomes the appellee, and as such, must be served with a summons as in other cases; and until he is served or otherwise properly in court, it is error to proceed to render a judgment in the case." McCormick v. Fulton, 19 Ill. 570, 571, per Walker, J. So where an order allowed an appeal to the "plaintiff," the appeal-bond must be in the name of the nominal plaintiff; the usee cannot file the bond and perfect an appeal. Bank, 111 Mass. 285, or by operation of law, as in Hart v. Western R. Corp., 13 Metc. (Mass.) 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 277, 5 L. ed. 87.

38. "In this Commonwealth, the assignee of a chose in action has an adequate and complete remedy at law, in the right to maintain an action thereon in the name of his assignor, or of his executor or administrator, without his consent, and even against his protest, at least upon giving him, if seasonably demanded, a bond of indemnity against costs." Walker v. Brooks, 125 Mass. 241, 247, per Gray, C. J.

39. Henderson v. Welch, 8 Ill. 340, 342, where Treat, J., said: "Henderson having the beneficial interest only had to sue in the name of Welch, who thereby became the plaintiff on the record, and as such, liable in the first instance for the costs. The action failing, the whole of the costs were adjudged against him. If he has paid them, he has a clear cause of action against Henderson for so much money paid for his use."

as the substantial plaintiff, both against the naked legal interest and against merely technical defenses, whenever this can be done without impairing the substantial rights of defendant.[41]

(2) Beneficial Owner as Master of the Suit — (a) Use of Legal Owner's Name. When a sufficient indemnity for costs was tendered,[42] neither the legal owner nor his executor or administrator had the right to refuse the use of his name as plaintiff, to the beneficial owner.[43] And if the consent of the legal owner was not obtained at the outset of the action, his consent at a later stage related back to the commencement.[44]

41. Thus, as early as 1816, it was remarked by Mr. Justice Story, in Welch v. Mandeville, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 233, 236, 4 L. ed. 79, that "courts of law, following in this respect the rules of equity, now take notice of assignment of choses in action, and exert themselves to afford them every support and protection not inconsistent with the established principles and modes of proceeding which govern tribunals acting according to the course of the common law." "It seems to be the tendency of modern decisions to recognize the rights of the beneficial party, and to protect him against the acts of the party possessing the naked legal interest, whenever it can be done without injuriously affecting the rights of the debtor; and subject to this qualification, we are inclined to adopt the rule in its fullest extent." Dacey v. Mills, 10 Ill. 67, 70, per Treat, C. J. See also State v. Layman, 46 Md. 190; Clarksons v. Doddridge, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 42, 46, where Moncure, J., said: "He [the beneficial owner] has a right to bring an action at law in the name of his assignor, and he will be regarded, even by a court of law, as the substantial plaintiff in the action. The court will protect his rights, and will not permit the nominal plaintiff to receive the money, nor to release the debt, nor to dismiss the action." Compare in the Louisiana procedure Dayton v. Commercial Bank, 6 Rob. 43. Connecticut.— Townsend Sav. Bank v. Todd, 47 Conn. 190, 212, where it is said: "It is a well settled rule that in any case where a bare legal title is held in trust, as where a grantor has conveyed to a grantee while the land was adversely held, the grantee may sue in law for the possession in the name of the grantor. He could of course go into a court of equity, if the case admitted of it, in his own name, but an action at law could be brought only in the name of the party holding the legal title; and the name of such party, the cestui que trust has a right to use."

Georgia.— Calhoun v. Tullass, 35 Ga. 119, 123 (where the purchasers of notes secured by mortgage were allowed to foreclose the mortgage at law by using the names of the mortgagees for his use, the court saying: "If the mortgagees object to such use of their names, the complainants may indemnify them against costs, &c., and use their names, even against their consent, in favor of the ends of justice"); English v. Register, 7 Ga. 387 (applying the principle to an action of ejectment); Hargraves v. Lewis, 6 Ga. 207; Fain v. Gartright, 5 Ga. 6.

Massachusetts.— Fay v. Guynon, 131 Mass. 31; Walker v. Brooks, 125 Mass. 241; Foss v. Lowell Five Cents Sav. Bank, 111 Mass. 285; Bates v. Kempton, 7 Gray 382 (where the donee causa mortis of a negotiable note, not indorsed, was allowed to maintain an action thereon in the name of the administrator of the donor, although such administrator, when the case comes on for trial, appears and protests against it); Rockwood v. Brown, 1 Gray 261, 262. See also Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261, 35 Am. Dec. 319, S, in this case the payee of a note, having the same in his possession, said to B: "I will make a present of this to you, if you will accept [it]." B thereupon took the note, put it into his pocket, and said that he would accept it. Afterward, but at the same meeting, B handed the note back to S, saying, "You may keep [it] until I call for [it] or collect [it] for me." No assignment was made on the note, and it was found among the papers of S when he died. B took the note, and caused action to be brought upon it in the name of the administrator of S, but without the consent of the administrator. It was held that the action could be maintained as brought.

New Hampshire.— Pike v. Pike, 24 N. H. 384; Berry v. Gillis, 17 N. H. 9, 15, 43 Am. Dec. 584, 587, where Parker, C. J., said: "Where a demand is in a situation that the bankrupt could have instituted a suit in the name of a third person, the assignee may do the same."

Virginia.— Clarksons v. Doddridge, 14 Gratt. 42. In this case commissioners appointed by a court of equity to sell lands made the sale and took bonds for the purchase-money; the bonds were made payable to the commissioners. Before the bonds were paid the commissioners were removed, and others appointed. It was held that the new commissioners could maintain an action at law on the bonds in the names of the old commissioners to whom the bonds were made payable; for "the right of the new commissioners to receive the money, does not imply a right to bring an action therefor in their own names."

Survival of the rule in this respect under the codes see infra, I, B, 2, e, (II), (F).

(b) Control of the Suit. Even when the nominal plaintiff is apparently the only plaintiff,[45] the practical control of the action, if he is secured against possible costs and damages, is still not with him but with the beneficial owner.[46] The latter's control, indeed, was so full and complete that a court of equity did not hesitate to recognize his relief as adequate at law.[47] A retraxit entered by the nominal plaintiff, or a dismissal of the suit by him, without the knowledge or consent of the beneficial owner, may be vacated within the term,[48] and is no bar to a subsequent action at law in the name of the same nominal plaintiff.[49] So a satisfaction of judgment entered of record by the nominal plaintiff may be vacated on motion in behalf of the equitable owner of the judgment.[50] For a like reason the declarations of a mere legal owner are not admissible to defeat the action.[51]

(c) No Discharge by Nominal Plaintiff. When the beneficial ownership is known to defendant, the nominal plaintiff cannot prejudice the equitable ownership by receiving payment from defendant or by giving him a formal discharge.[52] In 12 S. E. 177; Craig v. Twomey, 14 Gray (Mass.) 486, 487. The latter case was an action of contract by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note. At the trial plaintiff on cross-examination testified that the action was not conducted for his benefit, and at his expense, but in his name for a third person, who in turn testified that he had nothing to do with it. Defendant thereupon moved to dismiss the action. Plaintiff's counsel then announced "that there might have been some misapprehension, but that the plaintiff now adopted the action as his own." It was held that the motion to dismiss was properly overruled. As plaintiff had a good legal title as indorsee and had declared by his attorney that he adopted the action, this "made him liable for costs and a good plaintiff."

45. See supra, I, B, 2, e, (II), (C), (2).

46. Cunningham v. Carpenter, 10 Ala. 109, 112, where Goldthwaite, J., said: "Courts of law are every day in the practice of giving effect to the assignment of choses in action, and will not permit a mere nominal plaintiff to dismiss a suit, or otherwise interfere with the just rights of the equitable owner."

47. Carter v. United Ins. Co., 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 463, 464, where a bill in equity was filed by C as assignee of a policy of insurance issued to Gibbs and Titus, and it was held that the bill must be dismissed. "The demand," said Chancellor Kent, "is properly cognizable at law, and there is no good reason for coming into this Court to recover on the contract of insurance. The plaintiffs are entitled to make use of the names of Gibbs and Titus, the original assured, in the suit at law; and the nominal plaintiff would not be permitted to defeat or prejudice the right of action."

48. Sloan v. Sommers, 14 N. J. L. 509. In this case Sommers, plaintiff, had entered a retraxit, without application to the court or leave. So soon as this was discovered, and within the term, the counsel for plaintiff suggested to the court that Thomas Astley was the assignee of the note in question, and the real plaintiff in the suit, and in his behalf moved for, and upon the facts then shown to the court, obtained a rule to show cause why the retraxit should not be expunged from the minutes, or otherwise vacated. It was held that the retraxit ought to be expunged and vacated, with the costs of the motion to be paid by Sommers.

49. Welch v. Mandeville, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 233, 4 L. ed. 79. In this case while an action under the title of Welch v. Mandeville was pending, Welch caused this entry to be made upon the record: "This suit is dismissed, agreed." In fact Welch was only a nominal plaintiff, the beneficial owner being Prior. This fact was known to defendant. The dismissal was without the authority, knowledge, or consent of Prior, and had been obtained through collusion between defendant and Welch. Prior did not discover the dismissal until after the adjournment of court. In these circumstances, Prior instituted another action in the name of Welch, for the use of Prior, against Mandeville. The latter pleaded the dismissal. Prior, in the replication, set up the facts of the dismissal as procured without his knowledge or consent and in fraud upon him as beneficial owner. On demurrer the replication was held good. And see Tate v. New York Bank, 96 Va. 765, 32 S. E. 476.

50. Wardell v. Eden, Col. Cas. (N. Y.) 137, 1 Johns. 531 and note, 2 Johns. Cas. 121.

51. "The party who has ceased to have any substantial interest in the subject matter of the action, and whose name is used as a matter of necessity to satisfy a technical rule of the law, ought not to be permitted by his acts or declarations to defeat or disparage the title of his innocent assignee." Dazey v. Mills, 10 Ill. 67, 71, per Treat, C. J.

52. Thus, in Andrews v. Beecker, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 411, 3 Johns. 426 note, it was held that a release by the obligee of a bond after an assignment and notice of such assignment to the obligor was a nullity.

An officer who, after receiving an execution with notice that the claim on which the judgment had been recovered had been assigned to another person and was prosecuted at his cost, collects the amount of the execution and pays it to the nominal plaintiff, is liable in tort to the assignee for the amount of the costs in the action on the claim. Riley v. Taber, 9 Gray (Mass.) 372.

such a case, if defendant pleaded a payment to or a release by the nominal plaintiff, a court of law did not find it necessary, at least in some jurisdictions, to resort to extraordinary methods of setting aside the obnoxious plea, as to an interlocutory order on affidavits, but could entertain a replication setting up the matter in avoidance, and permit the action in the name of the nominal plaintiff to continue in that name against defendant who had paid him.[53]

(3) Rights of Defendant — (a) In General. The device of the use plaintiff was not permitted to impair any of the just rights of defendant in the cause,[54] nor to disturb him unnecessarily.[55]

(b) His Rights Against Beneficial Owner. At one time courts of law looked only to the relation between defendant and the nominal plaintiff; if there was a defense against him there was a defense against the beneficial owner using his name.[56] But while preserving the form of the ancient rule, courts of law early began both to protect the use plaintiff from defenses which were good only against the nominal plaintiff,[57] and, on the other hand, to permit defendant to avail himself of any defense which he might have set up against the beneficial owner if the action had been brought in his name.[58]

53. Littlefield v. Storey, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 425, which was an action of debt on an obligation under seal. Defendant pleaded payment to plaintiff. Plaintiff replied that before the commencement of the suit he sold and assigned the obligation to R, to have and receive the money due thereon to his own use, and did authorize him, in the name of him, plaintiff, to demand and receive the same to the use and benefit of him, the said R, of which defendant had notice, and plaintiff averred that this action was commenced for the sole use and benefit of the said R, for the purpose of enabling him to collect and receive the money due on the obligation. A general demurrer to this replication was overruled, with judgment for plaintiff. See the remarks of Taft, J., in Wagner v. National L. Ins. Co., 90 Fed. 395, 403, 33 C. C. A. 121, and cases there cited. See also the procedure in Welch v. Mandeville, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 233, 4 L. ed. 79, and in Lamb v. Vise, 8 Dowl. P. C. 360, 4 Jur. 341, 9 L. J. Exch. 177, 6 M. & W. 467, 55 Rev. Rep. 694.

54. Stone v. Hubbard, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 595, 597, where it was said: "The principle on which these decisions [permitting an action in the name of the nominal plaintiff by the beneficial owner] rest is, that the purchaser of the note has a right to recover all that is due upon it; that the rights of the promisor cannot be in any way prejudiced by a suit in the name of the payee, and if the latter does not interpose and object, the mode of enforcing the contract is wholly immaterial to the defendant, and constitutes no valid ground of defence."

55. Shanks v. White, 36 Ga. 432. Compare Berry v. Gillis, 17 N. H. 9, 17, 43 Am. Dec. 584, where it was said: "As the court has authority to protect the rights of the plaintiff in interest when the writ is in the name of a nominal plaintiff, so we may protect the defendant against a suit by one person in the name of another, where the plaintiff on the record has no interest, and the real plaintiff has no right," per Parker, C. J., holding that evidence on the point is admissible under the general issue.

56. "If the question that has been made in this case," said Lord Kenyon, in Bauerman v. Radenius, 2 Esp. 663, 7 T. R. 663, 668, "had arisen before Sir M. Hale, or Lords Holt or Hardwicke, I believe it never would have occurred to them sitting in a court of law, that they could have gone out of the record and considered third persons as parties in the cause." So in Gibson v. Winter, 5 B. & Ad. 96, 2 N. & M. 737, 27 E. C. L. 50, Lord Denman remarked: "The plaintiff, though he sues as a trustee of another, must, in a court of law, be treated in all respects as the party in the cause: if there is a defence against him, there is a defence against the cestui que trust who uses his name."

57. Thus, the transferee by parol of a negotiable promissory note was permitted, as early as 1816, to sue in the name of the promisee, notwithstanding payments by the maker to the promisee after notice of the transfer. Jones v. Witter, 13 Mass. 304. And see Lamb v. Vice, 8 Dowl. P. C. 360, 4 Jur. 341, 9 L. J. Exch. 177, 6 M. & W. 467, 472, 55 Rev. Rep. 694, where Lord Abinger, C. B., said: "Nothing is more common than for a cestui que trust to sue on a bond in the name of his trustee. If the defendant has pleaded the bankruptcy of the plaintiff, it would have been a good replication that he was suing merely as trustee."

58. Merrill v. Randall, 22 Ill. 227; McHenry v. Ridgely, 3 Ill. 309, 310, 35 Am. Dec. 110, where Wilson, C. J., said: "That no injustice may result from this rule, it is also settled, that, when the plaintiff on the record is a mere trustee for another, the defendant may avail himself of any defence, which he might set up against the real owner of the instrument, provided the action had been brought in his name."

name of the real party in interest[59] has for the most part made a resort to nominal and use plaintiffs, in an action at the instance of the beneficial owner, both unnecessary and improper.[60] But there are a few classes of cases in which the historic device still holds a place under the codes.[61]

(2) Grantee Suing in Name of Grantor. It is a well-settled doctrine of the common law in some states, and recognized by statute in some, that a conveyance of land, although by the rightful owner, while it is in the adverse possession of another, is absolutely void as to the person in possession and his privies.[62] In such a case the grantee, having no title as against the adverse holder, cannot on principle bring an action in his own name to recover the land from the person thus in possession.[63] In states where the grant, although void as against the adverse holder, is valid as between the grantor and the grantee,[64] there is no difficulty, under the common-law doctrine of the use plaintiff, in permitting an action against the adverse possessor by the grantee in the name of the grantor;[65] but in code pleading it was early claimed that the provision requiring every action to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest[66] precluded the grantee from bringing the action in the name of the grantor.[67] The doubt was met in New York by an amendment authorizing the grantee of land held adversely to the grantor to sue in the name of the grantor.[68] The same result has been reached on principle in the few cases under the code in which the question has been carefully considered by the courts.[69]

69. The point was argued on principle and authority in Steeple v. Downing, 60 Ind. 478, 490, the court reaching the conclusion "that, under our code, where land has been conveyed, which at the time was in the adverse possession of another, an action may be maintained to recover it from the party thus in possession, in the name of the grantor in such conveyance as plaintiff," notwithstanding the requirement of the real party in interest. See also Roszell v. Roszell, 105 Ind. 77, 4 N. E. 423; Burk v. Andis, 98 Ind. 59. Compare Hamilton v. Wright, 37 N. Y. 502; Smith v. Long, 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. The interests of the defendant can be litigated and determined only in an action prosecuted in the name of the plaintiff's grantor."

Contra by statute.— By an amendment of the Indiana code in 1881, "any person having a right to recover the possession of real estate, or to quiet title thereto in the name of any other person or persons, shall have the right to recover possession or quiet title in his own name." Ind. Laws (1881), p. 60; Burns Rev. St. § 1085 (1073). Although permissive in terms, this provision is construed as requiring the action to be brought in the name of the grantee. rule that an action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest[70] do not always give the rule its full range of application; where it ceases to apply, a court of law, if there is a separation of the legal and the beneficial ownership, will recur to the doctrine of a nominal plaintiff.[71]

(4) In Assignments Pendente Lite — (a) In General. If a chose in action is assigned while the action is pending, in a state where actions must be prosecuted in the name of real parties in interest, the assignee may be substituted as plaintiff;[72] but it is a common provision of the codes, and well established by the courts in these same states, that the action may continue in the name of the original plaintiff, under the control of the assignee, without change on the record.[73] As construed in the light of other provisions of the code, the rule "that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest" has been held to mean that every action must be commenced in the name of the real party in interest, but that plaintiff's subsequent transfer pendente lite of his interest, wholly or in part, will not prevent the further prosecution of the action in his name, for the benefit of the assignee.[74] In these cases the assignee's control over the further prosecution of the action in the name of the original plaintiff is very complete; indeed, it may be said that the assignee's control over such further

So in Alabama.— Here the code required that "the party really interested whether he have the legal title or not" shall sue in his own name when the action is on a promissory note, bond, or other contract, "for the payment of money." It was held that the assignee of a penal bond conditioned to be void if the obligor should make title to certain lands could not sue on it in his own name. "So far as this contract imposed an obligation to make titles to the land . . . it was a contract for the performance of an act, not a contract for the payment of money, and, therefore, not susceptible of suit in the name of one destitute of the legal title." prosecution of the action is closely analogous to the control exercised under the older procedure by the use plaintiff.[75]

(b) In Case of Original Plaintiff's Death. A question has arisen in some states whether the rule applies if plaintiff assignor dies after the assignment. At common law the beneficial owner had the right to use the name of the legal owner's representative,[76] but there is some authority under the code that the action cannot be continued by the assignee in the name of the assignor's personal representative.[77] In this contingency it has been thought that the action, notwithstanding the rule of the real party in interest, may continue even in the name of the deceased plaintiff.[78]

(c) Control of Representative Actions. The rule has been applied also when the original plaintiff is ostensibly suing in behalf of himself and others similarly situated. If such a plaintiff assigns his claim while the action is pending and before others join in, it may continue in the name of the original plaintiff, but the assignee is the master of the suit.[79]

(III) The Real Party in Interest — (A) In General. The phrase "the real party in interest" employed in referring to a party plaintiff belongs to the terminology both of equity pleading and of code pleading. It was current in the equity reports, before the enactment of the codes, to describe the proper party plaintiff in equity.[80] It has been given a wider scope in the most of the states of the Union, and notably in the code states,[81] by the statutory provision that "every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest,[82]

Walker v. Felt, 54 Cal. 386 (where plaintiff transferred his interest to others, whose attorneys thenceforth took charge of the case, but without any change of the title of the action, or of the attorney of record, and it was held that a stipulation signed by the original plaintiff and his attorney for the disimssal of the action was a flagrant breach of good faith, and that an order of dismissal entered upon such stipulation should have been promptly vacated on discovery of the fraud); Ashby v. Winston, 26 Mo. 210 (holding that defendant, having notice of the assignment pendente lite, has no right to compromise the suit without the consent of the assignee). In Hirshfeld v. Fitzgerald, 157 N. Y. 166, 177, 51 N. E. 997, 46 L. R. A. 839, it is said that when the action is continued in the name of the assignor, "he is deemed to act for and on behalf of his assignee, and to represent his interest in the litigation. In no case to which our attention has been called has the plaintiff been allowed to continue the action after he has assigned his cause of action in opposition to the wishes and interests of his assignee," per Haight, J., holding accordingly that the assignor, the original plaintiff, in whose name the action was continued, could not prevent its dismissal by his assignee. That is in the states and territories of Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Indiana, Indian Territory, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

82. So in N. Y. Code (1848), § 91, the terms of which have been closely followed in the codes of the other states named above. A similar enactment appears in several states which are not generally classed as code states.

This general provision of the code is overlapped, in a number of the states, by statutes which declare certain choses in action assignable, or expressly authorize an assignee to sue in his own name. See in general Assignments, 4 Cyc. 96 et seq. The code provision, however, is independent of these particular enactments and their disappearance from the statute book does not affect the rule of the except as otherwise specially provided";[83] or a similar provision appearing in the statutes of some of the states not generally classed as code states.

(B) When Both Legal Title and Beneficial Ownership Are in One Person. In this, the normal case, plaintiff may of course be without capacity to sue;[84] but his remedial interest is not open to question, either in common-law pleading, in equity pleading, or under the codes. It is only when the legal title has been separated from the beneficial ownership, or equitable title, that difficulties as to the real party in interest have arisen.

(C) Beneficial Ownership as a Sufficient Test of Remedial Interest— (1) In General. It may happen, in a variety of ways, that one person is vested with a full legal title to the cause of action set up in the pleading, while another has the entire beneficial ownership. When this occurs, the selection of the proper party plaintiff raises various questions. The leading characteristic of the doctrine of the real party in interest is that it recognizes the beneficial ownership as per se a sufficient test of remedial interest.[85] In this respect it has to do chiefly with the questions whether a court can recognize as plaintiff in his own name, either the equitable assignee of a chose in action, or the assignor of a chose who has retained a beneficial ownership, or the third person beneficiary of a contract.[86]

(2) The Equitable Assignee of a Chose in Action as Plaintiff — (a) In Common-Law Pleading. Even after the substantive common law had attained to a recognition of the beneficial ownership of the assignee of a chose in action, the common-law procedure, reflecting the ancient theory that choses in action were not assignable, refused all direct recognition of the assignee's remedial interest.[87] Although the substantive law had changed, the rule of procedure kept its ancient form. If the chose in action was assignable but its assignment did not transfer the legal title, the assignee could indeed enforce his beneficial ownership, and to this end was given control of the action;[88] but he must sue as if the chose had not been assigned, and therefore in the name of the assignor.[89] code as to the real party in interest. Long v. Heinrich, 46 Mo. 603.

83. The exceptions to the requirement of the real party in interest originally included only three classes of persons, who were permitted to sue "without joining with him the persons for whose benefit the suit is prosecuted" — an executor or administrator, a trustee of an express trust, and a person expressly authorized by statute. N. Y. Code (1848), § 93.

The terms of this provision reappear in the other code states named above. Later amendments or enactments, in all the code states, have added to the list "the person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another"; and in several states a guardian is now expressly included. See the statutes of Arkansas, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Nebraska, Ohio, Oklahoma, Washington, and Wyoming.

84. Plaintiff's want of requisite capacity to sue is discussed. infra, I, B, 3.

85. The beneficial ownership is to be distinguished, not only from the mere legal title but also from the mere beneficial interest. See supra, I, B, 2, b, (I). It should also be noticed that while the beneficial ownership is recognized as a sufficient test, it is not necessarily an essential, test of the remedial interest. See infra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (D), (4), (b).

Rockwood v. Brown, 1 Gray (Mass.) 261, 262, per Merrick, J. And see, generally, Assignments, 4 Cyc. 94; and supra, I, B, 2, e, (II).

89. Congress Constr. Co. v. Farson, etc., Co., 199 Ill. 398, 65 N. E. 357 [affirming 101 Ill. App. 279]. In this case a chose in action belonging to an insolvent was sold by his assignee for the benefit of creditors to W. Under an Illinois statute an assignee for the benefit of creditors had a right to sue and recover in his own name as fully as his assignor might have done if there had been no assignment. It was held that the statutory right did not extend further than to the assignee for the benefit of creditors, and therefore, under the common-law rule, that a suit by W must be, not in his name but in the name of the insolvent assignor. And see, generally, Assignments, 4 Cyc. 92; Dicey Parties, Rule 6.

(b) In Equity Pleading — aa. In General. The courts of equity, on the other hand, recognize both the substantive right of the assignee of an assignable chose in action and also his remedial interest. If he could sue in equity, the suit should be in his name;[90] he could not sue in the name of the assignor, either alone or to the use of the assignee.[91] But while the assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action was commonly described as an "equitable assignee" he was not recognized as plaintiff in equity upon the mere ground that he could not sue in his own name at law; for his right to use the name of his assignor gave him a remedy at law which, although indirect, was still in most cases complete and adequate.[92] To give a court of equity jurisdiction the nature of the relief asked must be equitable, even when the suit is based on an equitable title.[93]

bb. Special Circumstances Necessary. It followed that the equitable assignee could sue in his own name, under the older procedure, only upon a showing of special circumstances creating a right to equitable relief;[94] as when the assignee showed that notwithstanding the right which he had obtained to sue in the name of the assignor, the latter would interfere and prevent the exercise of this right;[95] or when the assignor was dead and there was no personal representative within the state;[96] or when the assignor was a corporation, and its charter had expired or been dis-

It is quite new to me that, in such a simple case as that, this court allows, in the first instance, a bill to be filed, against the debtor, by the person who has become the assignee of the debt."

A contrary view was expressed by Story, who was of opinion that in America "every assignee, who has an equitable assignment or right, may sue in his own name, and need not use the name of his assignor either at Law or in Equity, and this without any special circumstances whatsoever." Story Eq. Pl. § 153 and note. And see Story Eq. Jur. 1057*a*. solved;[97] or when the assignee had equitable rights existing independently of his rights as assignee.[98]

(c) In Code Pleading — aa. Wide Scope of the Principle. This restricted principle of equity procedure has been given the fullest effect by the provision of the codes as to the real party in interest. Under it the assignee of an assignable chose in action sues in his own name, not only when there are special grounds of equitable relief but also when he is the assignee of the mere legal title.[99] It obliterates, in the main, the procedural distinction between the legal and the equitable title of the assignee.[1] As a rule, whenever the assignment of a chose in action vests the assignee with the ownership of the claim, the action is to be brought in the name of the assignee, as the real party in interest, and this whether the title of the assignee be regarded as legal or equitable.[2] The question does not relate either to the formal sufficiency of the assignment or to the existence of equitable grounds. If the assignment is by mere delivery, with intent to pass the title, and this is sufficient in substantive law to transfer the title to the assignee, as against defendant, so that the latter is protected in case of a subsequent claim

But not entirely so.— Thus in Cushman v. Welsh, 19 Ohio St. 536, the legal title, as distinct from the equitable title, is still of vital importance under the Ohio code. Compare Clements v. Hull, 35 Ohio St. 141. bb. Imperative Nature of the Rule. The rule of the codes noticed above is not merely content with the beneficial ownership of the chose, but unlike the statutory rule now or formerly found in several states,[4] it demands the beneficial owner-

Parol assignments.— Hoffman v. Smith, 94 Iowa 495, 498, 63 N. W. 182, where Kinne, J., remarked: "No particular form is necessary to constitute the assignment of a debt. All that need appear is an intent to effectuate the assignment of the debt, and that intent may appear from the writing, or it may be shown otherwise." And see Newby v. Hill, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 530. In Pease v. Rush, 2 Minn. 107, 111, a promissory note payable to order was transferred by mere delivery. The court said: "The only question under our practice is, in whom is the real substantial ownership and property of the note? In whomsoever it is found, there the cause [right] of action is also." So in Riker v. Curtis, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 134, 136, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 340, McAdam, J., said: "No formality is necessary to effect the transfer of a chose in action. Any transaction between the contracting parties which indicates their intention to pass the beneficial interest in the right from one to the other is sufficient for that purpose. A debt or claim may be assigned by parol as well as by writing."

Illustrations.—P sued as assignee of a judgment. The assignment had not been made on the record of the judgment, as required by statute. It was held that P was the equitable owner of the judgment and therefore the real party in interest. Kelley v. Love, 35 Ind. 106. One to whom a bill of lading had been transferred by delivery without indorsement sued upon it in his own name. The court said: "We think the plaintiff's title was perfect and complete without such indorsement. . . . Bills of lading are choses in action, and no rule is better established than that instruments of this character may be transferred for a valuable consideration by delivery only." Merchants' Bank v. Union R., etc., Co., 69 N. Y. 373, 379. S, the proprietor of a water-power, employed P to make repairs upon the dam and raceway. D held a portion of the power under S, and by the terms of the grant from S to D the latter was liable for his portion of the expense of said repairs. After the repairs had been made S put his account against D, for his share of the repairs, into the hands of P, with directions to collect the same. There was no formal assignment of the account to P. The court, finding that "it was in fact given to him with directions to collect and apply the money to the payment of his claim," held that the action was properly brought in the name of P as real party in interest. Wooliscroft v. Norton, 15 Wis. 198. A bank issued a certificate of deposit to C "payable to Jerry Cassidy or his order, upon the return of the certificate properly indorsed." The money deposited belonged to C's wife, who had handed it to C, for deposit in his or her name as he saw fit. Upon receiving the certificate C handed it to his wife. It was held that as the real owner of the debt evidenced by the certificate, the wife of C, could sue upon it, although it had never been indorsed to her. Cassidy v. Faribault First Nat. Bank, 30 Minn. 86, 14 N. W. 363. Promissory notes secured by collateral were placed in the hands of B, an attorney, for collection. He placed them in the hands of other attorneys for the same purpose. Afterward, by an oral contract, B purchased all his client's interest in the notes and took a written assignment of the collateral, but there was no indorsement of the notes, nor any further delivery of them in fact. It was held that as the oral contract vested B with the beneficial ownership of the notes, no other assignment or delivery of them was necessary, and B could sue as the real party in interest. Hancock v. Ritchie, 11 Ind. 48. Part of an entire demand was assigned to P without the assent of the debtor. P sued upon this assignment but the holders of the remainder of the demand were not made parties in his action. It was held that P as the beneficial owner of the portion assigned to him is the real party in interest, and while there was a defect of parties in that the holders of the remainder of the demand are not parties, this defect is waived by a demurrer for want of facts. Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 514, 99 Am. Dec. 423. S, a loan agent who owned and possessed a non-negotiable note secured by mortgage, charged the amount of the note to P, a client whose money, exceeding the amount of the note, was held by S with authority to invest it in his discretion. S also attempted to assign the mortgage to P but failed to execute the assignment properly. It was held that S had transferred the beneficial ownership of the note to P, that this transfer carried the mortgage with it as an incident of the debt, and therefore that an action to foreclose the mortgage was properly brought in the name of P. Nor did it affect the result that P knew nothing of the transfer until long after it had been made; for the relations between P and S were such that S "could lawfully make the transfer without consulting the plaintiff." Lane v. Duchac, 73 Wis. 646, 41 N. W. 962.

4. Where the assignee of a chose in action is or was permitted to sue in his own name see ASSIGNMENTS, 4 Cyc. 98, and cases there cited. See also Congress Constr. Co. v. Farson, 199 Ill. 398, 65 N. E. 357.

ship. The effect of the assignment being to divest the assignor of his ownership, an action on the chose can no longer be brought in his name, either alone or for the use of the assignee.[5] Nor is the rule affected by the fact that the assignor, in making the assignment, has expressly authorized an action in his name upon the assigned chose in action,[6] or has expressly stipulated that if an action is necessary he will bring it in his own name and turn over all the proceeds to the assignee.[7] Nor will the fact that the consideration for the assignment of the chose has failed permit an action in the name of the assignor, unless he has recovered the title.[8]

cc. Assignor Not a Necessary Co-Plaintiff. When the assignment did not pass the legal title but only the beneficial title, it was usual, in equity pleading, to make the assignor, holding the legal title, a party to the suit.[9] But it was not fatal if the assignor was not joined as plaintiff; the necessary plaintiff was the assignee, as being the beneficial owner.[10] This equity rule reappears, with various modifications, in several of the codes.[11] But an omission of the assignor as a party is

5. See cases cited infra, this note.

Action cannot be brought in the name of assignor.— Bartholomew County v. Jameson, 86 Ind. 154, 163. In consideration of the payment to him of the amount of his claim against a third person, J agreed to assign to an insurance company such judgment as J might receive in the claim. Said the court: "It seems to us that he thus divested himself of all beneficial interest in the claim, and vested it in the company. If he retained no substantial interest, then his assignee became the real party in interest, and, under our code, was the only proper plaintiff." See also Reynolds v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 143 Ind. 579, 619, 40 N. E. 410 (where it is said: "There is no right of action shown in the appellant under any of the contracts . . . because the right of action, if any were shown, is alleged in the complaint to have been assigned as collateral security to Porter Skinner"); Lytle v. Lytle, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 127, 128 (where the action was in the name of the assignor, but the caption and the body of the complaint named the assignee as the person for whose aid the action was brought. Said the court: "He [the assignee] did not thereby become, either substantially or formally, a party to the action. Under the law, as it stood prior to the adoption of the Code, a different rule of practice prevailed, because no one but the legal owner of a chose in action could prosecute an action at law for its recovery; and in cases where another person was the equitable owner of the demand, the suit was usually and properly brought for the use of such equitable owner. This rule exists no longer, and the requirements of the Code, by which it has been superseded, are imperative, and must be pursued"). And see Carpenter v. Miles, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 598.

6. Van Doren v. Relfe, 20 Mo. 455. Here P had conveyed to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and in the conveyance had appointed the trustees his "true and lawful attorneys irrevocable, in his name or otherwise, to ask, demand and recover and receive of and from all and every person or persons all goods, chattels, debts and demands, due, owing or belonging unto him, and in default of delivery or payment, to sue for the same." An action was accordingly brought in the name of P, and it was held that the action could not be sustained. Compare MacVeagh v. Continental Trust Co., 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 600, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 198.

But when plaintiff is in legal effect the real party in interest, he is not prevented from recovering in the action because it has been entitled in his name to the use of another. Key v. Continental Ins. Co., 101 Mo. App. 344, 74 S. W. 162.

7. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Carnahan, 63 Ohio St. 258, 266, 58 N. E. 805. In this case after the destruction by fire of the insured property, and before suit brought the assured assigned to the H. B. Claflin Company all the assured's right, title, and interest to the money to be paid in satisfaction of the loss; but it was stipulated in the assignment that the assured "are to proceed to collect all said moneys in their name, but the same, when ready to be paid over, shall be paid directly to said The H. B. Claflin Company, or their authorized agent." The court, per Davis, J., said: "The stipulation . . . makes the Carnahans [the assured] agents of the Claflin Company for the purposes of mere collection; but it does not authorize suit to be brought in their name, although it so says; because the code is imperative that the action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest . . . and the Carnahans have reserved no substantial interest whatever in the money to be paid under the designated policies. . . . Under both of these assignments the H. B. Claflin Company became the real party in interest."

11. See the codes of Arkansas, Indiana, Kentucky, and Oklahoma.

The rule varies.— In Kentucky, if the assignment is not authorized by statute, as in the case of bonds, bills, and notes for the direct payment of money or property, the assignor must be a party, as plaintiff or defendant. In Indiana, "when the action is brought by the assignee of a claim arising ground only for a dilatory objection, the essential remedial interest being recognized as in the assignee.[12] Most of the codes are without this special provision, and the courts are clear that, in its absence, if the assignee is entitled to receive all the fruits of the action he alone is the real party in interest.[13]

dd. Effect if Assignor Lacks Capacity to Sue. For a like reason the fact that the assignor is without capacity to sue does not impair the assignee's capacity to sue; the question is rather whether the assignor had capacity under the substantive law to transfer his ownership and has transferred it.[14]

ee. Assignment Must Be Valid as Against Defendant. Ordinarily a transfer of title which is effective between the parties to the assignment is equally effective as against defendant. But it happens now and then, under a rule of the substantive common law, that an assignment of a chose in action is valid between the parties but invalid as against defendant.[15] In such cases it would seem that the assignee, having no title or ownership against the grantee, cannot appear as plaintiff in the claim; and this view has been adopted in a number of decisions, when no statute intervenes.[16] On the other hand it has been questioned whether the doctrine of the real party in interest does not preclude an action in the name of the assignor, since he has no beneficial interest.[17] The doubt has been settled in a number of jurisdictions by statutory amendments, which declare, in some states, that the grantee may sue in the name of the grantor,[18] and in some that the grantee may sue in his own name.[19] In the absence of express statutory declaration on the point, the courts, recurring to the familiar rule of the common law, have permitted the grantee to sue in the name of the grantor, and control the action thus brought.[20] The grantee having no title as against defendant, but hav-out of contract, and not assigned by endorsement in writing, the assignor shall be made a defendant, to answer as to the assignment." Ind. Rev. St. § 277. But the courts construe this in effect as preserving the equity rule and permitting the assignor to be a co-plaintiff. Singleton v. O'Blenis, 125 Ind. 151, 153, 25 N. E. 154.

12. Carskaddon v. Pine, 154 Ind. 410, 56 N. E. 844. Compare Lytle v. Lytle, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 127, to the effect that the omission of the assignee as party plaintiff is fatal upon demurrer to the answer, although the action was in the name of the assignor for the use of the assignee.

13. Shamhaugh v. Current, 111 Iowa 121, 82 N. W. 497.

14. Quan Wye v. Chin Lin Hee, 123 Cal. 185, 55 Pac. 783. Action in this case was upon an instrument in writing given by defendant to Quan On Wing, and assigned to plaintiff before the commencement of the action. It was objected that Quan On Wing was the fictitious name of a partnership and did not show the person interested, that there was accordingly no capacity to sue in the assignor until a certificate showing the name of the partners had been filed, as required by statute, and that the assignee of the partnership had no better right than the assignor. It was held that there was nothing in the point.

For the reason see Wing Ho v. Baldwin, 70 Cal. 194, 11 Pac. 565; Cheney v. Newherry, 67 Cal. 125, 126, 7 Pac. 444, 445. See also Citizens' Bank v. Corkings, 9 S. D. 614, 70 N. W. 1059, 62 Am. St. Rep. 891.

15. Thus the rule still holds in a considerable number of states that a grant of land which at the time is in the adverse occupancy of another is void as against the adverse occupant, but good as between the grantor and the grantee. See Galbraith v. Payne, 12 N. D. 164, 96 N. W. 258, and cases there cited. See also, generally, ASSIGNMENTS, 4 Cyc. 98.

17. See Hamilton v. Wright, 37 N. Y. 502.

18. Thus in New York, in 1866, by amendment of the general provision as to plaintiffs: "But an action may be maintained by a grantee of land in the name of a grantor, or his or her heirs or legal representatives, when the grant or grants are void by reason of the actual possession of a person claiming under a title adverse to that of the grantor at the time of the delivery of the grant, and the plaintiff shall be allowed to prove the facts to bring the case within this provision." N. Y. Laws (1866), p. 1836, § 111. That the grantee's right of action in the grantor's name, under this statute, is grounded on the grantor's title and fails with it see Dever v. Hagerty, 169 N. Y. 481, 62 N. E. 586 [reversing 43 N. Y. App. Div. 354, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 181]. And see S. C. Code Civ. Proc. § 132.

19. Ind. Rev. St. (1881) § 1073; N. C. Code (1883) § 179. In North Carolina the statute achieves the inconsistency of permitting the grantee to sue in his own name while recognizing as void the grant under which he claims.

20. See cases cited infra, this note.

ing a good title as against the grantor, the latter has been deemed to be the real party in interest, within the requirement of the code.[21]

(3) Assignor Retaining a Beneficial Ownership as Plaintiff — (a) In General. When the assignment of a chose has divested the assignor of his entire beneficial ownership, he cannot claim as a real party in interest even if the assignment does not vest the legal title in the assignee;[22] but when the assignor retains a portion of the beneficial ownership, the general principle of the real party in interest gives him a standing as plaintiff.[23] As a rule the assignee also should be a party to the suit, as co-plaintiff or as defendant.[24] His omission, however, is ground, under the codes, only for an objection because of defect of parties.[25]

(b) Application of the Principle. The principle applies not only when there has been an assignment of a portion of a chose in action[26] but also where the entire chose has been conditionally assigned as collateral security.[27] In the latter

Grantee may sue in the name of the grantor.— Such was the rule independently of the code requirement as to the real party in interest. McMahan v. Bowe, 114 Mass. 140, 145, 19 Am. Rep. 321 (where Morton, J., said: "It is now held that such deed is good against the grantor, and that it entitles the grantee to an action to recover the land, in the name of the grantor but to his own use, even against the disseisor"); Livingston v. Proseus, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 525, 529 (where Bronson, J., said: "As against the person holding adversely, the deed is utterly void — a mere nullity. There was an attempt to convey, but the parties failed to accomplish the object. The title still remains in the original proprietor, and he may — indeed, must — sue to recover the land. It is true that the recovery will inure to the benefit of the grantee in the deed; but that is a matter between him and the grantor, and with which the person holding adversely has nothing to do. It is enough for him that the deed does him no injury."

The same result has been reached under the codes, where no specific enactment intervenes. Galbraith v. Payne, 12 N. D. 164, 172, 96 N. W. 258, where Young, C. J., said: "While it is true that the grantee may not maintain an action in his own name against the adverse possessor unless expressly authorized by statute, for the reason that as to the latter the deed is void, yet an action may be maintained in the name of the grantor for his use." So on principle in Roszell v. Roszell, 105 Ind. 77, 4 N. E. 423; Burke v. Andis, 98 Ind. 59; Steeple v. Downing, 60 Ind. 478. But in 1881 the doctrine of Steele v. Downing, supra, was changed in Indiana by the statute referred to in the previous note. See Chapman v. Jones, 149 Ind. 434, 47 N. E. 1065; Peck v. Sims, 120 Ind. 345, 22 N. E. 313. Galbraith v. Payne, supra, and Steeple v. Downing, supra, are in line with the conclusions reached by the New York courts, independently of statute, in Hamilton v. Wright, 37 N. Y. 502.

21. See the reasoning in Steeple v. Downing, 60 Ind. 478; Galbraith v. Payne, 12 N. D. 164, 96 N. W. 258. But see Van Hoesen v. Benham, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 164. Here the court, having held that the deed was void as against the adverse occupant but valid as between the grantor and the grantee, admitted the testimony of the former, because "if the deed operated to divest the title of the grantor, he had no legal interest in the event of the suit."

E. 783], where Laughlin, J., remarks: "It is also contended that the plaintiffs are not the real parties in interest. This claim is based upon the fact that, prior to filing the lien, the plaintiffs assigned their contract as collateral security to the Phœnix Iron Company for materials to be furnished to them for use on this work. This was not an absolute sale of the interests of the plaintiffs, or an assignment of the contract, but a conditional transfer, the plaintiffs remain-case the assignor, it has been held, may sue in his own name even when the face value of the assigned chose is not greater than the face of the debt for which the chose has been assigned as collateral.[28]

(4) Undisclosed Principal as Plaintiff — (a) In General. When one who is an agent enters into a contract for his principal but makes the contract in his own name without disclosing his principal, although the fact of his agency is disclosed, the agent, as will appear later,[29] may sue upon the contract in his own name alone. The same thing is true a fortiori when the agent has made the contract in his own name without disclosing even the fact of the agency, and the other party supposes that the agent is the principal.[30] As such, his right to sue in his own name is in general not open to question wherever the doctrine of the real party in interest prevails.[31] But in many states the rule here, instead of ing the owners until some default by which the transfer was to become absolute, and this never occurred." Compare Reynolds v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 143 Ind. 579, 40 N. E. 410, where the court was of the opinion that the assignment, although as collateral, was an absolute assignment and prevented the assignor from suing.

28. Graham v. Light, 4 Cal. App. 400, 402, 88 Pac. 373. Here the facts were as follows: P, the owner of a promissory note for five hundred dollars, assigned it as collateral security for five hundred dollars loaned P by a bank. Afterward, and before there had been a reassignment of the note to P, he sued upon it in his own name. It was objected that he had no right of action. The court, per Smith, J., said: "The plaintiff at the time of the commencement of the suit was still the owner of the note and had a substantial interest therein. The bank, indeed, held it in pledge, and might, therefore, have maintained an action to collect the same. (Civ. Code, § 3006.) Nor under the express provision of the code cited would it have been necessary to make the plaintiff party. But it does not follow that there was not also a right of action in the plaintiff to protect his rights or interest in the note. . . . It cannot be doubted that under the principles of equity the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action to enforce his rights or protect his interests. Indeed, the right to maintain an action is given him by the provisions of section 367, Code of Civil Procedure [requiring actions to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest]."

The principal, in every such case, is 'the real party in interest,' and under our Code the rule is that 'every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.' Code, § 26. Every action allowed to be prosecuted in any other manner constitutes an exception to a general rule." See also as applying the test of the real party in interest the following cases:

standing on this ground, is treated as a survival of an anomalous rule of common-law procedure; and the remedial right of the undisclosed principal is recognized only under technical limitations which attached to the common-law rule.[32]

(b) Rule in Common-Law Procedure. That an undisclosed principal had a remedial interest in his own name, both when the fact of the agency was disclosed and when it was not, was strikingly recognized in common-law pleading.[33] As a rule a common-law action for breach of contract lay only in the name of the person to whom the promise was made.[34] When a contract was made by an agent in his own name, without disclosing either his principal or the fact of his agency, it would seem that in strictness the promise was made to the agent, and that the action, at common law, lay in his name, and not in the name of his principal.[35] That the agent in such cases could sue in his own name alone was abundantly established;[36] and in certain classes of cases the remedial interest here was definitely limited to him.[37] But for the most part the undisclosed principal also could sue on the contract, in his own name alone.[38] In theory this worked no

The undisclosed principal a party to the contract.—"If an agent makes a contract in his own name, the principal may sue and be sued upon it; for it is a general rule, that whenever an express contract is made, an action is maintainable upon it, either in the name of the person with whom it was actually made, or in the name of the person with whom, in point of law, it was made." Barry v. Page, 10 Gray (Mass.) 398, 399, per Bigelow, J.

Common-law recognition of the real party in interest see the remark of Lord Abinger, C. B., in Beckham v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 79, 92, 60 Rev. Rep. 678: "So it is in a vast variety of other cases which frequently occur, all establishing the principle, that the parties really contracting are the parties to sue in a court of justice, although the contract be in the name of another." So in Skinner v. Stocks, 4 B. & Ald. 437, 23 Rev. Rep. 337, 6 E. C. L. 560. "The action may be maintained either in the name of the person with whom the contract was actually made, or in the name of the parties really interested." Compare Dicey Parties 136. "The agent can sue because he has been treated by the other party as the party to the contract. The principal can sue because he is the person really interested in the contract, for whose benefit it is made, and with whom the law considers it to be made; for though a person who has expressly contracted with A. can not treat the contract as not being with A. on the ground that another person, P., is really interested, yet when a contract is made expressly with A., either by word of mouth or in writing (provided the written instrument be not a deed), it is allowable for P., the person really interested, to show that the contract is, though on the face of it with A., yet in reality with him, and that he, therefore, has a right to sue upon it." And see Huntington v. Knox, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 371, 374: "He [the undisclosed principal] is not named or alluded to in the contract; yet as the contract is shown in fact to be made for his benefit, and by his authority, he is liable. So, on the other hand, where the contract is made for the benefit of one not named, though in writing, the latter may sue on the contract, jointly with others, or alone, according to the interest." In Story's view (Agency, § 418) the governing principle in all such cases is that the undisclosed principal, "as the ultimate party in interest, is entitled against third persons, to all advantages and benefits of such acts and contracts of his agent," and therefore may sue in his own name. This explanation is adopted in terms in Dodd Grocery Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 112 Ga. 685, 689, 37 S. E. 981; and Warder v. White, 14 Ill. App. 50.

Illustration.—A written order was in these words: "Give Mr. D. A. Neale, president of established at common law had a very wide application. Its authority was recognized when the agent's contract was in writing, but not under seal, as well as when it was merely by word of mouth;[41] when the agent's written contract was within the scope of the statute of frauds;[42] when the principal had contracted as agent, without naming or identifying any principal;[43] and when there was no agency in fact at the time of the making of the contract, but a profession of agency by the person contracting in his own name and a subsequent ratification by this unnamed principal.[44] It was long undecided whether the rule extended the Eastern Railroad Company, stock in the Salem Gas Company, at par, to the amount of seven thousand dollars, and place the same to my account." On this, an action of contract was brought by the Eastern Railroad Company. Defendant objected that the action could not be maintained in the name of the Eastern Railroad Company, but only in the name of Neale, and that parol evidence was inadmissible to show a consideration for the order moving from the Railroad Company. It was held that "in a case like the present, of an instrument not negotiable, given in the form in which this is, the plaintiffs, the real parties in interest, may maintain an action thereon in their own name." Eastern R. Co. v. Benedict, 5 Gray (Mass.) 561, 566, 66 Am. Dec. 384.

41. See cases cited infra, this note.

Agent's contract in writing.— The point that the rule differed according as the contract was oral or in writing, but not under seal, was definitely raised in Beckham v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 79, 92, 60 Rev. Rep. 678, and denied. Said Lord Abinger, C. B., delivering the opinion: "The law makes no distinction in contracts, except between contracts which are and contracts which are not under seal. I recollect one of the most learned judges who ever sat upon this or any other bench being very angry when a distinction was attempted to be taken between parol and written contracts, and saying, 'they are all parol unless under seal.' . . . There is nothing affirmative on the face of the contract to show an intention to exclude everybody but themselves [the ostensible parties]. It is open to the defendant Drake to show such an intention, but unless it be shown, the objection does not arise." See also the cases cited in the notes immediately preceding and following.

Not affected by the rule against parol testimony.—"All the authorities, both English and American, concur in holding that, as applied to such contracts executed when the principal was unknown, parol evidence which shows that the agent who made the contract in his own name was acting for the principal does not contradict the writing, but simply explains the transaction. Barbre v. Goodale, 28 Oreg. 465, 471, 38 Pac. 67, 43 Pac. 378, per Wolverton, J. "It does not deny that it is binding on those whom, on the face of it, it purports to bind, but shews that it also binds another, by reason that the act of the agent, in signing the agreement, in pursuance of his authority, is in law the act of the principal." Higgins v. Senior, 11 L. J. Exch. 199, 201, 8 M. & W. 834, 58 Rev. Rep. 884, per Parke, B. See also the cases in the preceding note, and in particular. Not affected by the statute of frauds.— "The statute of frauds does not change the law as to the rights and liabilities of principals and agents, either as between themselves, or as to third persons. The provisions of the statute are complied with if the names of competent contracting parties appear in the writing, and if a party be an agent, it is not necessary that the name of the principal shall be disclosed in the writing." When the principal has contracted as agent. — If the professed agent was his own principal he could sue in his own name. Schmaltz v. Avery, 16 Q. B. 655, 658, 15 Jur. 291, 20 L. J. Q. B. 228, 83 Rev. Rep. 653, 71 E. C. L. 655. In this case the facts were as follows: A charter-party stated in terms that it was made by G. Schmaltz & Co., as "agents for the freighters"; it then stated the terms of the contract and concluded thus: "This charter being concluded on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all responsibility on the part of G. Schmaltz & Co. shall cease as soon as the cargo is shipped." Afterward G. Schmaltz & Co. sued upon the contract, as principals, the declaration taking no notice of the concluding memorandum; oral evidence was given showing that they were in truth the principals. It was held that notwithstanding the terms of the charter-party, plaintiffs might prove that they were the freighters, and their own principal. Compare Paine v. Loeb, 96 Fed. 164, 37 C. C. to a case in which there was at the time of making the contract neither agency in fact nor profession of agency, but the person contracting in his own name intended to act for another who subsequently "ratified" the contract. The weight of authority and of principle is against such an extension of the rule.[45]

(c) Limits of Common-Law Rule — aa. In General. Extensive as was the right of an undisclosed principal to sue in his own name for a breach of a contract made in the name of his agent,[46] it was subject at common law to important limitations.[47] Some of these grew out of the substantive nature of the contract itself, as when the right to sue was by the terms or the nature of the contract, or the circumstance of its making, restricted to the agent.[48] Others held a prominent place among the technical rules of parties to actions, as in the two classes of cases which follow.[49]

bb. When Agent Appeared as a Party to a Contract Under Seal. It was an early doctrine of the common law that "no one can sue on a covenant in an indenture who is not mentioned among the parties to the indenture."[50] If therefore an agent, contracting with another under seal, executed the deed in his own name, although in reality he was acting as agent for someone else, an action on the deed, under

After ratification by an undisclosed principal see Foster v. Bates, 1 D. & L. 400, 7 Jur. 1093, 13 L. J. Exch. 88, 12 M. & W. 226, 67 Rev. Rep. 311. It was sometimes said that the principal, although unnamed at the time of the making of the contract, must be reasonably designated. Compare Watson v. Swann, 11 C. B. N. S. 756, 771, 31 L. J. C. P. 210, 103 E. C. L. 756, where it was said: "The law obviously requires that the person for whom the agent professes to act must be a person capable of being ascertained at the time. It is not necessary that he should be named; but there must be such a description of him as shall amount to a reasonable designation of the person intended to be bound by the contract." But there was definite authority that the application of the rule was not limited by the fact that the actual person who afterward ratified as principal was unknown at the time of the contract to both the contracting parties; it was sufficient that the class to which he belonged was designated. In this aspect the facts of Foster v. Bates, 1 D. & L. 400, 7 Jur. 1093, 13 L. J. Exch. 88, 12 M. & W. 226, 67 Rev. Rep. 311, are of value. Here it appeared that goods which P had sent from England to Africa had been sold after P's death and before the grant of letters of administration, by A, who had been P's agent in Africa, and that A sold them avowedly on account of P's estate. After this sale letters of administration on P's estate were issued to F, who then brought assumpsit for goods sold and delivered by him as administrator. It was held that as the act of A was ratified by P after he became administrator, it was no objection that the intended principal was unknown at the time to the person who intended to be the agent, and that the action was therefore maintainable. See Dicey Parties 133. And compare Hull v. Pickersgill, 1 B. & B. 282, 3 Moore C. P. 612, 21 Rev. Rep. 598, 5 E. C. L. 636; and, generally, on the substantive law applicable, Principal and Agent.

After ratification by an undisclosed principal when there was at first no agency in fact nor profession of agency see Dicey Parties 132; Wilson v. Tummon, 1 D. & L. 513, 12 L. J. C. P. 306, 6 M. & G. 236, 6 Scott N. R. 894, 64 Rev. Rep. 770, 46 E. C. L. 236; the dissenting opinion of Smith, L. J., in Durant v. Roberts, [1900] 1 Q. B. 629, 633, 69 L. J. Q. B. 382, 82 L. T. Rep. N. S. 217, 48 Wkly. Rep. 476, discussing the authorities, and Keighley v. Durant, [1901] A. C. 240, 70 L. J. K. B. 662, 84 L. T. Rep. N.S. 777. Even such an extension was, however, permitted by the late decision of the English court of appeal in Durant v. Roberts, [1900] 1 Q. B. 629, 631, 69 L. J. Q. B. 382, 82 L. T. Rep. N. S. 217, 48 Wkly. Rep. 476. Here it was held, although by a divided court, that "a contract made by a person intending to contract on behalf of another, but without his authority, may be ratified by that other, and so made his own, although the person who made the contract did not profess at the time of making it to be acting on behalf of a principal." But in this the court of appeal was reversed in the house of lords (Keighley v. Durant, [1901] A. C. 240, 70 L. J. K. B. 662, 84 L. T. Rep. N. S. 777), which held that "a contract made by a person intending to contract on behalf of a third party, but without his authority, cannot be ratified by the third party so as to render him able to sue or liable to be sued on the contract, where the person who made the contract did not profess at the time of making it to be acting on behalf of a principal."

the common-law rule just referred to, lay in the name of the agent, but not in the name of his principal.[51]

cc. When Agent Was Party to a Bill of Exchange. A similar limitation was early imposed upon the doctrine of bills of exchange by the law merchant,[52] and from the law merchant was imported into the common-law doctrine of parties. It was long accepted on both sides of the Atlantic that "no person can claim upon a bill of exchange or promissory note except the parties named in the instrument."[53]

(d) Limits of Rule in Code Pleading — aa. In General. The affirmative applications of the common-law rule that an undisclosed principal may sue in his own name on his agent's contract are in point whenever the principle of the real party in interest prevails.[54] Whether those limitations of the rule which are rather technical than substantial[55] are still valid has been questioned.

bb. When Agent Appears as Party to a Contract Under Seal. The technical limitation of the common law here[56] has a ready explanation in the restrictions which the historic action to recover damages for the breach of a contract under seal, the action of covenant, imposed upon common-law procedure;[57] but it is of present-day significance that this same technical limitation is recognized and enforced in current cases even in states where the action of covenant, with the whole formulary system of common-law actions, has been abrogated, and the principles of one form of action and a real party in interest are required by express enactments.[58]

51. Dicey Parties 134; Beckham v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 79, 95, 60 Rev. Rep. 678, where it is said: "Those parties only can sue or be sued upon an indenture, who are named or described in it as parties." And see Southampton v. Brown, 6 B. & C. 718, 5 L. J. K. B. O. S. 253, 30 Rev. Rep. 511, 13 E. C. L. 322; Berkeley v. Hardy, 5 B. & C. 355, 8 D. & R. 102, 4 L. J. K. B. O. S. 184, 11 E. C. L. 495. The facts in the latter case are significant. An indenture of lease began in these words: "Agreed the 24th day of July, 1822, between James Simmonds, for and on behalf of W. F. Berkeley (the plaintiff), on the one part, and J. Hardy, of the other part, as follows: the said W. F. Berkeley agrees to let, and the said J. Hardy agrees to take, all those messuages, tenements, farms, and lands," etc. The reddendum was to Berkeley, plaintiff, the covenants were expressed to be made by Hardy to Berkeley, and by Berkeley to Hardy. The name of Simmonds did not occur in the lease, after the commencement given above, until the conclusion, which ran thus: "In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals the day and year above written. J. Simmonds (L. S.) J. Hardy (L. S.)." One of the covenants in the lease being broken by Hardy, an action of covenant was brought in the name of Berkeley. It was held that the strict technical rules of the common law of England "applicable to deeds under seal" had been "laid down and recognized in so many cases" that the court was bound to say that no action could be maintained by Berkeley upon the deed in question. On the survival of this technical rule in statutory pleading see infra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (C), (4), (D), bb.

"By the law merchant . . . each party who receives the bill is making a contract with the parties upon the face of it, and with no other." Beckham v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 79, 92, 60 Rev. Rep. 678, per Lord Abinger, C. B. And see Arlington v. Hinds, 1 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 431, 12 Am. Dec. 704, where, in a hard case, the supreme court of Vermont assumed that the law merchant was not adopted in that state in order to permit an undisclosed principal to sue. Compare Johnson v. Catlin, 27 Vt. 87, 62 Am. Dec. 622.

53. See Dicey Parties 134, where it is said: "Hence, though the party entitled upon such instrument be an agent, the action must be brought in his name, and can not be brought in the name of the principal, who is not a party." And see the remark of Metcalf, J., in Fuller v. Hooper, 3 Gray (Mass.) 334, 341: "The rule is general, if not universal, that neither the legal liability of an unnamed principal to be sued, nor his legal right to sue, on a negotiable instrument, can be shown by parol evidence. When an agent signs such an instrument, without disclosing his agency on its face, the holder must look to him alone. And when such an instrument, which is intended for the benefit of the principal, is given to the agent only, he only, or his indorsee, can sue on it. In other simple contracts the rule is different." Compare National L. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 116 Mass. 398. As to survival of this doctrine in modern procedure see infra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (C), (4), (D), cc.

covenants, therein contained, except those who are named as parties to the instrument and who signed and sealed the same." Henricus v. Englert, 137 N. Y. 488, 494, 33 N. E. 550, per Earl, J. The leading case is Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 378. See infra, this note, and the cases following. Anderson v. Connor, 43 Misc. (N. Y.) 384, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 449; McColgan v. Katz, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 136, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 291, holding that when an agent executes in his own name as lessor a sealed lease of premises belonging to an estate and it does not appear from the lease who is the principal, the executrix of the estate cannot sue thereon, although the agent has appended the word "Agent" to his signature; for such words are descriptio personæ); Smith v. Pierce, 60 N. Y. 343, 345, 25 Am. Rep. 199, where it was said: "The covenants in a deed can only be enforced against the party who, upon the face of the instrument, is the covenantor, although it appears by extrinsic proof that he acted as the agent for another." And see Evidence, 17 Cyc. 709 et seq.

Whether real party in interest.— The point that the undisclosed principal may appear as plaintiff in these cases, because of the statutory requirement that a civil action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest, was distinctly raised in Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 378, 384. But the court was of opinion that "the parties whose signatures and seals are affixed to such an instrument, and who alone are named therein, are the real parties in interest, for they only are bound thereby." In this case plaiutiffs sought to recover for rent due under a lease executed by "J. Romaine Brown, agent." Brown was described as agent in the body of the lease. He signed it "J. Romaine Brown, agent." The lease was under seal, but a seal was not necessary to its validity. Plaintiffs did not sign the lease; their names did not appear in it; there was nothing in the instrument itself showing that they had anything to do with it, or that it was executed in their behalf. In fact, however, it could be established by parol that plaintiffs were the actual owners of the lease, that Brown had oral authority from them to make the lease, and that he had acted as their agent in the transaction. It was held that in an action on the lease Brown was the only real party in interest, for the reasons indicated above. For a distinction in the doctrine of Schaefer v. Henkel, supra, this note see Kernochan v. Wilkens, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 596, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 236. Compare Moore v. Granby Min., etc., Co., 80 Mo. 86. That the rule applies even when the instrument would have been good without a seal see also Van Dyke v. Van Dyke, 123 Ga. 686, 51 S. E. 582 (a promissory note under seal); Lenney v. Finley, 118 Ga. 718, 45 S. E. 593 (a lease for a term of less than two years, which under the law of Georgia would have been valid without any seal). Contra, Stowell v. Eldred, 39 Wis. 614. And compare Kirschbon v. Bonzel, 67 Wis. 178, 29 N. W. 907.

When private seals have been abrogated by statute the distinction does not apply. J. B. Streeter Co. v. Janu, 90 Minn. 393, 96 N. W. 1128. Here the contract was under a private seal, but a statute of Minnesota provided that the addition of a private seal to an instrument in writing "shall not affect its character in any respect." Compare, however, Sanger v. Warren, 91 Tex. 472, 44 S. W. 477, 66 Am. St. Rep. 913.

59. See supra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (C), (4), (C), cc.

60. However, the analogous doctrine that in suits upon negotiable instruments no evidence is admissible to charge any person as a principal thereto unless his name is in some way disclosed in the instrument itself is widely recognized in this country. See, generally, Commercial Paper, 7 Cyc. 664 et seq., 8 Cyc. 251 et seq.; Evidence, 17 Cyc. 589 et seq.; and in particular Sparks v. Despatch Transfer Co., 104 Mo. 531, 15 S. W. 417, 24 Am. St. Rep. 351, 12 L. R. A. 714; Ranger v. Thalmann, 84 N. Y. App. Div. 341, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 846 [reversing 39 Misc. 420, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 19, and affirmed without opinion in 178 N. Y. 574, 70 N. E. 1108]; Cragin v. Lovell, 109 U. S. 194, 3 S. Ct. 132, 27 L. ed. 903.

In some cases it seems to have been taken for granted that the right to charge an undisclosed principal applies as well to negotiable paper as to other simple contracts. Baker v. Gregory, 28 Ala. 544, 65 Am. Dec. 380; Raymond v. Mann, 45 Tex. 301; Sessums v. Henry, 38 Tex. 37; Edwards v. Ezell, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 276.

But on the other hand there is a tendency to reaffirm the distinction, when the point is definitely made, on the ground that the limitation as to negotiable paper, although apparently technical, really "arises from the nature of such paper and the uses for which it is intended." See Richmond Locomotive, etc., Works v. Moragne, 119 Ala. 80, 24 So. 834; McGregor v. Hudson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 489.

A counter distinction is sometimes taken between an action on the note and an action against "an undisclosed principal upon the special facts of the case, making it inequitable and unjust for him to retain the money." See, in general, Principal and Agent; and in particular Harper v. Tiffin Nat. Bank, 54 Ohio St. 425, 44 N. E. 97. Compare Edmunds v. Bushell, L. R. 1 Q. B. 97, 12 Jur. N. S. 332, 35 L. J. Q. B. 20. And see Pollock's remark: "Modern decisions of authority, however, appears to be against it, recognizing the right of the undisclosed principal to maintain an action upon the instrument in his own name.[61]

(5) Third Person Beneficiary as Plaintiff — (a) In General. The statutory rule that an action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest has given new life to a question which held a prominent place in our earlier doctrine of parties plaintiff: Can one who, although neither an ostensible party to a contract nor privy to its consideration, is yet a beneficiary of the contract, sue upon it in his own name?[62] It is clear on principle, and established by the weight of authority, that when the benefit to a third person is merely incidental to the performance of a contract between others he has no remedial interest in it.[63] But there are two distinct classes of cases in which the third person is in closer touch with the contract than a mere incidental beneficiary. In the first class the promisee owes to the third person who will be benefited by the performance of the promise no legal or equitable obligation which the performance of the promise will discharge, but the whole benefit of the performance goes to the third person.[64] In the second class of cases, the sole promisee is under a distinct legal or equitable obligation to the third person, and the performance of the contract, while benefiting the third person, will also discharge the promisee from his obligation.[65] In both these classes of cases the American courts have reached results seem to show that when an agent is in a position to accept bills so as to bind his principal, the principal is liable though the agent signed not in the principal's name but in his own, or, it would appear, in any other name. It is the same as if the principal had signed a wrong name with his own hand." Williston's Wald's Pollock Contr. 100.

61. Nave v. Hadley, 74 Ind. 155, 156, where it was said: "There is some conflict in the cases as to whether a principal may sue upon a promissory note, payable to the agent, which does not indicate or disclose the principal. The weight of authority is, however, pretty decidedly in favor of the doctrine, that the action may be maintained by the principal." And see McConnell v. East Point Land Co., 100 Ga. 129, 134, 28 S. E. 80, where the objection that the undisclosed principal of the payee of a promissory note could not sue in his own name is met by the court with "[the principle] that all civil contracts made by an agent in the execution of his agency, though made in his own name without disclosing his principal, may be enforced by the principal by appropriate action brought in his own name." As the agent who is named as the party to a negotiable instrument can transfer his right to the principal by assigning to him the bill or note, the distinction is rarely of consequence. Its possible importance as a practical question in pleading is, however, illustrated in Smelser v. Wayne, etc., Turnpike Co., 82 Ind. 417, 420: "It is no doubt true that the principal may sue upon a note in fact belonging to him, although written payable to the agent. Nave v. Hadley, supra. This rule avails the appellee nothing, for the reason that the complaint does not proceed upon the theory that the note belongs to the corporation because executed to its agent. On the contrary, the title is explicitly alleged to have been acquired by indorsement from a stranger, and this prohibits a recovery upon the ground that the appellee was, in fact, the real owner. A plaintiff cannot lay one species of title and recover upon an altogether different one."

62. The question arises, at least as a question of substantive right, in other systems of law than our own. See 15 Harv. L. Rev. 767; 16 Harv. L. Rev. 43 (articles on "Contracts for the Benefit of Third Persons" by Professor Williston). In our own legal system the problem has aspects which lie outside the range of procedure; on the other hand some of the aspects are distinctly procedural. See infra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (C), (5), (b) et seq.

The historic case on the point is Dutton v. Poole, 2 Lev. 210, 83 Eng. Reprint 523, 1 Vent. 318, 86 Eng. Reprint 205.

A typical instance is a contract of life insurance for the benefit of some one other than the assured and not his creditor.

which cannot be distinctly marked without reference to the earlier common-law doctrine.

(b) Rule at Common Law — aa. In Actions For Breach of Covenant. When the contract between A and B for the benefit of C was under seal and inter partes, it was unquestioned law that the third person beneficiary could not sue in his own name; the action of covenant lay only in the name of the covenantee.[66] So the action of debt did not lie in the name of the sole beneficiary of an indenture for the payment of a sum certain.[67]

bb. In Actions For Breach of Parol Contract. When the contract between A and B for the benefit of C was not under seal, an action for its breach — an action of assumpsit — was regularly brought in the name of one of the contracting parties.[68] But in the earlier development of assumpsit a doctrine which the later law of parties branded as very anomalous[69] became current[70] — that assumpsit lay also in the name of the beneficiary of a simple contract, although he was not a contracting party. "If one person," remarked an English judge in 1787, "makes a promise to another for the benefit of a third, that third person may maintain an action upon it."[71]

cc. Anomalous Doctrine in Assumpsit. This broad doctrine, now associated by a multitude of American cases with Lawrence v. Fox,[72] never obtained definite recognition in the settled law of parties in England.[73] Ultimately it was rejected by the English courts, and by some American courts, as an anomaly.[74] In its origin, however, the doctrine was not entirely anomalous; for the action of assumpsit, in its earlier development,[75] reached, and long retained, a wider scope than was possible for an action based exclusively on contract, in the modern sense of that term.[76] In this wider view the action included not only cases of actual

A typical instance is where A agrees with B on a consideration moving from B to pay to C a debt which B owes C. The historic case on the point is Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268.

66. See Dicey Parties, Rule 12, where it is said: "The person to bring an action for a breach of the covenant must be the covenantee. . . . A covenant, again, is not a covenant with any person except the covenantee. . . . Suppose an indenture to which the parties are A. of the one part and X. of the other part, and that this indenture contains a covenant by X. with M. to pay M. £20, M. cannot sue X. because M. is not a party to the indenture." Compare Southampton v. Brown, 6 B. & C. 718, 5 L. J. K. B. O. S. 253, 30 Rev. Rep. 511, 13 E. C. L. 322. See the application of this limitation in the case of contracts for an undisclosed principal supra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (C), (4).

P. 23, 6 E. C. L. 170 (where the facts were similar to those of Ross v. Milne, supra. The administrator of the beneficiary brought debt. It was admitted that the administrator of the promisee could sue, but it was urged that the burden of the suit should not be thrown on him, since "he had no interest for which to sue." But it was held that the action lay only in the name of the administrator of the promisee.

68. See Dicey Parties, Rule 10, where it is said: "No one can sue for the breach of a contract who is not a party to the contract. . . . In whatever words expressed it [the rule quoted] embodies the principle that 'rights founded on contract belong to the person who has stipulated for them' (Alton v. Midland R. Co., 19 C. B. N. privity between defendant and plaintiff but also cases of debt and accountability to plaintiff, without actual privity.[77] Whatever the cause, the so-called anomaly, by which the third person beneficiary could sue in assumpsit had the support of more than respectable opinion in England until a comparatively recent day.[78] And these opinions, with others, were all current in America, and very influential in shaping our common-law rule.[79] There was also definite authority in England, recognized there for more than a century, that assumpsit lay if plaintiff's beneficial interest was combined with a near relationship to a party to the contract.[80] In America early decisions, acting on the supposed authority of the English rule, but going farther than the English decisions had ventured to go,[81] although not farther than the current opinion in England had gone,[82] definitely permitted assumpsit to be brought by the third person beneficiary, whether he appeared as sole beneficiary or as creditor claiming under a promise to his debtor to discharge the debt.[83]

77. It will be remembered that a debt was "originally conceived of, not as a contract, in the modern sense of the term, that is, as a promise, but as a grant." 2 Harv. L. Rev. 55. And see 56 Am. L. In this view, the third person beneficiary of the contract was apparently deemed to be the person who sustained the injury arising because of the breach of the contract; and in a tort action the proper party plaintiff is "the person who sustains an injury." Third person beneficiary as plaintiff, in the earlier English doctrine.—However anomalous in our present view, the doctrine referred to in the text was accepted, without modification or question, by Lord Chief Baron Comyns, whose opinion, even without decisions supporting it, was regarded, at the close of the eighteenth century, as "of great authority; since he was considered by his contemporaries as the most able lawyer in Westminster Hall." Lord Kenyon in Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 51, 64, 1 Rev. Rep. 634. The doctrine which now prevails in most American states, the doctrine of Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268 (see infra, note 85), could be illustrated in both its aspects from the examples in Comyns Digest of the proper party plaintiff in actions of assumpsit. Thus, "An action upon assumpsit may be brought by him to whom the promise was made, though the benefit accrues to another." . . . "So, it may be brought by him likewise, to whom the benefit." "Upon a promise to the father to give so much with his daughter in marriage, the daughter may have the action; for she is the meritorious cause." . . . "Upon a promise to B to pay $20 to an infant at his full age, and to educate him in the meantime, the infant shall have the action." Comyns Dig. "Action upon the Case upon Assumpsit Ea, By Whom it Shall be Brought." So, in the earlier editions of Chitty on Pleading: "When a contract not under seal, is made with A, to pay B a sum of money, B may sustain an action in his own name." Chitty Pl. (4th Am. ed.) 4. See 1 Viner Abr. "Assumpsit" 333. See also the remark of Lord Holt in Yard v. Eland, 1 Ld. Raym. 368; and the remark of Buller, J., in Marchington v. Vernon, 1 B. & P. 101 note.

Reprint 5, to the effect that the daughter of a physician might maintain assumpsit upon a promise made to her father to give her a sum of money if he performed a certain case for "the nearness of the relation gives the daughter the benefit of the consideration performed by her father." Considerable hesitation, however, was shown, by some of the judges in Dutton v. Poole, supra. But Lord Mansfield, a century later, approved its doctrine as hardly open to question. Martyn v. Hind, Cowp. 437. Although definitely discarded in England (see the case of Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 393, 8 Jur. N. S. 332, 30 L. J. Q. B. 265, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 468, 9 Wkly. Rep. 781, 101 E. C. L. 393; Dicey Parties 84), the doctrine of Dutton v. Poole, supra, survives in a number of American cases (see infra, note 83; and in particular Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co., 183 N. Y. 330, 337, 76 N. E. 211, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 958). That Dutton v. Poole, supra, did not apply when the contract was under seal see Ross v. Milne, 12 Leigh (Va.) 205, 37 Am. Dec. 646.

81. In Feltmakers v. Davis, 1 B. & P. 98, 101, plaintiff's counsel urged upon the common pleas, that "if a promise be made to A. for the benefit of B., B. may maintain an action on that promise." But the court evaded the point, Eyre, J., expressing the opinion that in such a case "the promise must be laid as being made to B., and the promise actually made to A. may be given in evidence to support the declaration."

Third person beneficiary as plaintiff, in early American decisions; origin of the prevailing American rule.— In Schemerhorn v. Vanderheyden, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 139, 140, 3 Am. Dec. 304, the sole beneficiary was plaintiff, the court, on the authority of Dutton v.

These early American cases, reiterating in the broadest terms a doctrine which the best known English law-books in our courts presented as unquestioned law,[84] had a very great influence in shaping the permanent rule in many American states.[85] The later decisions in England[86] and to some extent in America[87] rejected this doctrine in both its aspects.

Poole, 2 Lev. 210, 83 Eng. Reprint 523, 1 Vent. 318, 86 Eng. Reprint 205, supra, was of the opinion that "where one person makes a promise to another for the benefit of a third person, that third person may maintain an action on such promise." In Felton v. Dickinson, 10 Mass. 287, 290, another case where the sole beneficiary was plaintiff, the court said: "When a promise is made to one, for the benefit of another, he for whose benefit it is made may bring an action for the breach. This principle was settled as early as Rolle's time, in a case quite analogous to the present; and, it being cited by Lord C. B. Comyns, in his Digest, without any question of its authority, it is to be presumed that it continues to be received as a sound principle." Compare Cumberland v. Codrington, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 229, 254, 8 Am. Dec. 492 (where Chancellor Kent laid it down as an established principle that "if one person makes a promise to another, for the benefit of a third person, that third person may maintain an action at law on that promise"); Arnold v. Lyman, 17 Mass. 400, 405, 9 Am. Dec. 154 (where the creditor of promisee, sued on an express promise to pay the debts of the promisee and the court reaffirmed the doctrine of Comyns Digest that "he for whose interest a promise is made, may maintain an action upon it, although the promise be made to another and not to him"); Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 575, 579 (where the creditor of promisee sued on an implied promise and the court declared it to be well settled that "if A promises B for a valuable consideration, to pay to C, the latter may maintain assumpsit for the money. . . . The principle of this doctrine is reasonable, and consistent with the character of the action of assumpsit for money had and received"). In Carnegie v. Morrison, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 381, 402, where the creditor of promisee was plaintiff, the court notices the doubt which had arisen in England as to the true common-law rule (see pages 404, 405 of the report), but reaffirms the right of the creditor to bring assumpsit on the promise to his debtor. In this case Shaw, C. J., said: "It seems to have been regarded as a settled point, ever since reports have been published in this State, rather than as an open question to be discussed and considered. The position is, that when one person, for a valuable consideration, engages with another, by simple contract, to do some act for the benefit of a third, the latter, who would enjoy the benefit of the act, may maintain an action for the breach of such engagement." In Brewer v. Dyer, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 337, 340, where the creditor of promisee was plaintiff, the court permitted plaintiff to sue in assumpsit "upon the principle of law, long recognized and clearly established in this commonwealth, that when one person, for a valuable consideration, engages with another, by simple contract, to do some act for the benefit of a third, the latter, who would enjoy the benefit of the act, may maintain an action for the breach of such engagement." This rule, declares the court, "does not rest upon the ground of any actual or supposed relationship between the parties, as some of the earlier cases would seem to indicate. Dutton v. Poole, 2 Rev. 210, 83 Eng. Reprint 523, 1 Vent. 318, 86 Eng. Reprint 205; 2 Walford on Parties 1144; nor upon the reason that the defendant, by entering into such an agreement, has impliedly made himself the agent of the plaintiff; by Coleridge, J., in Lilly v. Hays, 5 A. & E. 548, 551, 2 Harr. & W. 338, 6 L. J. K. B. 5, 1 N. & P. 26, 31 E. C. L. 726; but upon the broader and more satisfactory basis, that the law, operating on the act of the parties, creates the duty, establishes the privity, and implies the promise and obligation, on which the action is founded."

Dec. 327: "These cases [the earlier English and American cases], and also those referred to by Chancellor Kent, are doubtless subject to some of the criticisms which have since been applied to them. Some of the opinions were pure obiter dicta, and in others, the cases though presenting the point were decided upon other grounds. It cannot however be denied, that the doctrine had been so often asserted, that it had become the prevailing opinion of the profession, that an action would lie in such a case in the name of the creditor for whose benefit the promise was made."

dd. Later Rule of the English Common Law. It was finally settled, at a comparatively recent day, as the common-law rule in the English courts that a third person beneficiary cannot sue, even in assumpsit, upon a contract made between others for his benefit,[88] that the fact of a near relationship on the part of the beneficiary to one of the contracting parties worked no modification of the rule,[89] and that an agreement between the contracting parties expressly authorizing an action in the name of the beneficiary was without effect.[90]

(c) SURVIVAL OF LATER COMMON-LAW RULE IN ENGLAND. This common-law rule, settled in England by 1861,[91] was not affected by the English Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875,[92] and their assimilation of legal and equitable procedure.[93] Whatever its inconvenience in practice, the present English rule goes definitely to the point that the third person beneficiary cannot sue, either at law or in equity.[94] The rule is indeed subject to various limitations,[95] but its admitted range of

88. Price v. Easton, 4 B. & Ad. 433, 2 L. J. K. B. 51, 1 N. & M. 303, 24 E. C. L. 193. The declaration in this case stated that W P owed plaintiff £13, and that in consideration thereof, and that W P, at defendant's request, had promised defendant to work for him at certain wages, and also, in consideration of W P leaving the amount which might be earned by him in defendant's hands, he, defendant, undertook and promised to pay plaintiff the said sum of £13. Averment that W P performed his part of the agreement. There was a verdict for plaintiff, but judgment was arrested. "It is quite clear," said Patterson, J., "that the allegations in this declaration are not sufficient to shew a right of action in the plaintiff. There is no promise to the plaintiff alleged." The case is to be compared with the leading American case of Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268. And see Crow v. Rogers, Str. 592.

89. Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 392, 8 Jur. N. S. 332, 30 L. J. Q. B. 265, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 468, 9 Wkly. Rep. 781, 101 E. C. L. 393. See the facts set out infra, note 90. See Dicey Parties 84 et seq.

90. The last two points both appear in Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 393, 8 Jur. N. S. 332, 30 L. J. Q. B. 265, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 468, 9 Wkly. Rep. 781, 101 E. C. L. 393. There the action was upon the following written but unsealed agreement: "Memorandum of an agreement made this day between William Guy . . . of the one part, and John Tweddle . . . of the other part. Whereas it is mutually agreed that the said William Guy shall and will pay the sum of £200 to William Tweddle, his son-in-law; and the said John Tweddle, father to the aforesaid William Tweddle, shall and will pay the sum of £100 to the said William Tweddle, each and severally the said sums on or before the 21st day of August, 1855. And it is hereby further agreed by the aforesaid William Guy and the said John Tweddle that the said William Tweddle has full power to sue the said parties in any Court of law or equity for the aforesaid sums hereby promised and specified." After the 21st day of August, 1855, William Tweddle brought an action on this agreement, against the executor of William Guy, the declaration averring his relationship to the parties, and their intention to provide him with a marriage portion. It was held on demurrer, that plaintiff could not maintain the action.

91. Tweddle v. Atkinson, 1 B. & S. 392, 8 Jur. N. S. 332, 30 L. J. Q. B. 265, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 468, 9 Wkly. Rep. 781, 101 E. C. L. 393.

93. In America, on the other hand, the assimilation of legal and equitable procedure has been deemed sufficient to warrant a direct action by the third person. Johns v. Wilson, 180 U. S. 440, 21 S. Ct. 445, 45 L. ed. 613. Compare Willard v. Wood, 135 U. S. 309, 10 S. Ct. 831, 34 L. ed. 210. And see infra, p. 65.

94. "An agreement between A. and B. that B. shall pay C., gives C. no right of action against B. I cannot see that there is in such a case any difference between Equity and Common Law, it is a mere question of contract." In re Rotherham Alum, etc., Co., 25 Ch. D. 103, 111, 53 L. J. Ch. 290, 50 L. T. Rep. N. S. 219, 32 Wkly. Rep. 131, per Lindley, L. J.

95. Thus, the third person beneficiary is to be distinguished from a principal claiming as such on a contract made by his agent, from a party claiming under a novation, from the cestui que trust, in whatever form. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; TRUSTS; and the like titles.

The distinction between the third person beneficiary and the cestui que trust is sometimes overlooked in England as in America. Thus, in Gandy v. Gandy, 30 Ch. D. 57, 66, 54 L. J. Ch. 1154, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 306, 33 Wkly. Rep. 803, Cotton, J., remarks: "As a general rule, a contract cannot be enforced except by a party to the contract. . . . That rule, however, is subject to this exception: if the contract, although in form it is with A., is intended to secure a benefit to B., so that B. is entitled to say he has a beneficial right as cestui que trust under that contract; then B. would, in a Court of Equity, be allowed to insist upon and enforce the contract." The language is possibly broad enough to suggest that any clearly defined sole beneficiary of a contract may claim as a cestui que trust. The decision in the case, however, and other decisions, establish that a third person beneficiary and a cestui que trust stand on very different grounds. See in par-application shuts out the beneficiary in many cases where most American courts admit him, without question, as the proper plaintiff.[96]

(d) Survival of Later Common-Law Rule in a Few American States. The settled common-law rule noticed above,[97] as distinguished from the so-called anomalous rule in the earlier development of assumpsit — above referred to, discussed, and explained[98] — is enforced, in both its branches,[99] by a few American courts. Thus, the third person beneficiary, whether as sole beneficiary of the contract, or as creditor claiming under a promise to his debtor to discharge the debt, is denied a standing as plaintiff in Connecticut,[1] in Georgia,[2] in Massachusetts,[3] in ticular the distinction by Jessel, M. R., in In re Empress Engineering Co., 16 Ch. D. 125, 129, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 742, 29 Wkly. Rep. 342. It is remarked by the court in Touche v. Metropolitan R. Warehousing Co., L. R. 6 Ch. 671, 677, that "where a sum is payable by A. B. for the benefit of C. D., C. D. can claim under the contract as if it had been made with himself"; but this remark ignores distinctions which later English decisions insist on as essential. It cannot be regarded as expressing the present English rule, however near it may be to expressing the prevailing American rule.

96. As where the contract between A and B was made for the sole benefit of C, for example, a contract of life insurance payable to some one other than the insured. In Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc., [1892] 1 Q. B. 147, 153, 56 J. P. 180, 61 L. J. Q. B. 128, 66 L. T. Rep. N. S. 220, 40 Wkly. Rep. 230, Lord Esher, M. R., remarks: "If the Married Women's Property Act had not been passed, or if the policy had made the money payable to some person other than the insured's wife or children, I should say that, on the true construction of the policy, the only persons who could claim under it, and give a valid receipt for the money insured, were the executors of the insured." And see In re Empress Engineering Co., 16 Ch. D. 125, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 742, 29 Wkly. Rep. 342; Eley v. Positive Government Security L. Assur. Co., 1 Ex. D. 88, 45 L. J. Exch. 451, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 190, 24 Wkly. Rep. 338. Compare Gandy v. Gandy, 30 Ch. D. 57, 54 L. J. Ch. 1154, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 306, 33 Wkly. Rep. 803. So also, when B has promised A to pay A's debt to C, as when the grantee of land subject to a mortgage promises the mortgagor to pay the mortgage debt. Under the English rule, the mortgagee cannot sue on this promise. Bonner v. Tottenham, etc., Permanent Invest. Bldg. Soc., [1899] 1 Q. B. 161, 68 L. J. Q. B. 114, 79 L. T. Rep. N. S. 611, 47 Wkly. Rep. 161. A similar doctrine prevails in Ireland (Barry v. Harding, 7 Ir. Eq. 313, 1 J. & L. 475); and in Canada (Frontenac Loan, etc., Soc. v. Hysop, 21 Ont. 577; Aldous v. Hicks, 21 Ont. 95). But the only American state "where it has definitely been decided that the mortgagee cannot proceed against the grantee is Massachusetts." 15 Harv. L. Rev. 787.

By express legislation, this rule is departed from in Connecticut, where a grantee in a deed conveying real estate subject to mortgage or lien agrees to assume and pay the encumbrance. Gen. St. § 983. And see Morgan v. Randolph, etc., Co., 73 Conn. 396, 47 Atl. 658, 51 L. R. A. 653.

Sole beneficiary cannot sue. Cooper v. Claxton, 122 Ga. 596, 50 S. E. 399. The court follows Gunther v. Mooney, 72 Ga. 205, but here the contract was under seal. See also Fowler v. Athens City Water-Works Co., 83 Ga. 219, 9 S. E. 673, 20 Am. St. Rep. 313. Compare Wilson v. Savannah First Presb. Church, 56 Ga. 554.

Sole beneficiary cannot sue. Wright v. Vermont L. Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 302, 41 N. E. 303 (where the action was upon a policy of life insurance issued by defendant on the life of W and payable to his wife, and it was held that the wife could not sue. "The promise to pay the plaintiff was by intendment of law made with Alexander H. Wright, and his administrator was the proper party." The rule was changed by statute, in such cases, in 1894, as to policies thereafter issued. See Wright v. Vermont L. Ins. Co., supra. Compare McCarthy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 162 Mass. 254, 38 N. E. 435); in Marston Bigelow, 150 Mass. 45, 22 N. E. 71, 5 L. R. Michigan.[4] And it is noteworthy that in reaching this conclusion the courts of Connecticut and Massachusetts, like the courts of England, have reversed their earlier doctrine, which recognized a remedial interest in the third person beneficiary.[5]

(e) PREVAILING RULE IN AMERICA — aa. In General. Although now rejected by the courts from which its chief authority was supposed to come,[6] the anomalous doctrine that assumpsit lay in the name of the third person beneficiary has been accepted as sound law by a great majority of American courts.[7] And in a considerable number of our states, especially in the code states, which have the principle of one form of civil action, a remedial interest in the third person is recognized even when the contract is under seal.[8] In most jurisdictions the rule is the

469. This latter case was one of an agreement between two parties, upon sufficient consideration, it may be, between them, that one will pay, out of funds in his hands belonging to the other, a specific sum to a third person, who is not a party to the agreement, and from whom no consideration moves. It is well settled in this state that no action lies in such a case in favor of such third party to recover the money so held of the party holding it. Exchange Bank v. Rice, 107 Mass. 37, 9 Am. Rep. 1, per Morton, J. And see CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 375. The rule holds in Massachusetts even in the case of a promise by a grantee in a deed conveying real estate subject to mortgage to assume and pay the mortgage debt, at least when the action is at law. Creesy v. Willis, 159 Mass. 249, 34 N. E. 265; Prentice v. Brimhall, 123 Mass. 291. The grantee had expressly agreed to apply the money retained by him as a part of the consideration to the payment of the mortgage. It was held that no action lay by the mortgagee. Compare Clare v. Hatch, 180 Mass. 194, 62 N. E. 250.

4. See cases cited infra, this note.

Sole beneficiary cannot sue. Ebel v. Piehl, 134 Mich. 64, 95 N. W. 1004, where a son, on receiving property from his father, promised him that at his death four hundred dollars should be paid his daughter. "This," said the court, "created a chose in action . . . which belonged to the father. Though intended for plaintiff's benefit, it could not be enforced by her. . . . The father might, however, transfer it to her; and if so transferred, she could, as her assignee, enforce it." See also Linneman v. Moross, 98 Mich. 178, 57 N. W. 103, 39 Am. St. Rep. 528; Wheeler v. Stewart, 94 Mich. 445, 54 N. W. 172. Compare Pipp v. Reynolds, 20 Mich. 88.

Creditor of promisee cannot sue. Edwards v. Clement, 81 Mich. 513, 45 N. W. 1107. And see CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 375.

But the principle of these cases is confined in Michigan to actions at law.—"In a suit in equity a person for whose benefit a promise is made may enforce it in his own name." Palmer v. Bray, 136 Mich. 85, 88, 98 N. W. 849. See also Corning v. Burton, 102 Mich. 86, 62 N. W. 1040, per Carpenter, J.

5. As late as 1846 the supreme court of Connecticut regarded it as "now settled, that where a promise is made to one man for the benefit of another, the latter may sustain a suit upon that promise." Steene v. Aylesworth, 18 Conn. 244, 252, per Williams, C. J. In Baxter v. Camp, 71 Conn. 245, 41 Atl. 803, 71 Am. St. Rep. 169, 42 L. R. A. 514, this doctrine is expressly rejected as unsound.

In Massachusetts the later decisions (see supra, note 3) overrule Brewer v. Dyer, 7 Cush. 337; Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 575; Felton v. Dickinson, 10 Mass. 287; and some kindred cases which were often cited in other states and are typical of the third person beneficiary. Thus in Felton v. Dickinson, supra, the facts were as follows: F had placed his son, P, in the service of D, upon D's promise to F that when D reached the age of twenty-one, D would pay him two hundred dollars. It was held that P could bring assumpsit upon D's promise to F, for "when a promise is made to one, for the benefit of another, he for whose benefit it is made may bring an action for the breach." In Hall v. Marston, supra, and Brewer v. Dyer, supra, plaintiff claimed as creditor of the promisee, and was permitted to maintain assumpsit upon "the principle of law, long recognized and clearly established in this commonwealth, that when one person, for a valuable consideration, engages with another, by simple contract, to do some act for the benefit of a third, the latter, who would enjoy the benefit of the act, may maintain an action for the breach of such engagement." Brewer v. Dyer, 7 Cush. 337, 340, per Bigelow, J. Although rejected at home these decisions have had no slight influence in shaping the doctrine of other states. See Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268.

6. Notably by the courts of England and Massachusetts. See supra, pp. 63, 64.

7. Ochs v. M. J. Carnahan Co., (Ind. App. 1907) 80 N. E. 163. "The right of a party to maintain assumpsit on a promise not under seal, made to another for his benefit, although much controverted, is now the prevailing rule in this country." Hendrick v. Lindsay, 93 U. S. 143, 149, 23 L. ed. 855, per Davis, J. See "Creditor of the Promisee as Plaintiff," infra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (C), (6); and CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 378 note 7.

8. "This technical rule of the common law [that an action on a covenant will lie only in the name of the covenantee] does not prevail in states that have adopted the reform procedure. Under our code the action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest; and certainly the beneficiary, or person for whose benefit the promise is made, creation of the courts; but it now has statutory support, wholly, or in part, in the states mentioned in the note.[9]

bb. Twofold Nature of Doctrine. This so-called "American rule" is often asserted in the broadest possible terms.[10] In many instances it is apparent that the terms of the rule are much broader than the facts of the case require.[11] The courts indeed which recognize the authority of the rule are not agreed either as to its legal soundness, its extent, or the reasons for it.[12] Evidently, however, when the term "beneficiary" is taken in its broad and popular sense, the doctrine of the third person beneficiary embraces two distinct classes of cases. Where it rests upon decisions which permit an action in the name of the sole beneficiary of the contract, the doctrine is essentially one of substantive law with various applications under different aspects of the law of contracts.[13] In this aspect the doctrine is the real party in interest, whether the promise is evidenced by a simple contract, or one under seal." Starbird v. Cranston, 24 Colo. 20, 27, 48 Pac. 652, per Goddard, J. But compare Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 378, supra, p. 58, note 61, for a different result when plaintiff claims as undisclosed principal. And see Williams v. Magee, 76 N. Y. App. Div. 512, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 550.

The common-law rule has been rejected or ignored in the following code states: Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New York, Ohio, Oregon, and Wisconsin. See CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 385. See also COVENANTS, 11 Cyc. 1138, 1139. West Virginia.— Code, c. 71, § 2.

10. For instance: "Whenever two persons make a contract for the benefit of a third, the third may maintain an action thereon for any breach thereof to his injury." Mumper v. Kelley, 43 Kan. 256, 259, 23 Pac. 558, per Valentine, J. In Smith v. Pfluger, 126 Wis. 253, 262, 105 N. W. 476, 110 Am. St. Rep. 911, 2 L. R. A. N. S. 783, before the supreme court of Wisconsin, in 1905, that tribunal, per Marshall, J., approved the following statement of the doctrine: "If a person makes a contract with another for the benefit of a third person, the latter may enforce it at law regardless of his relations with the first person or whether he had any knowledge of the transaction between such person and such other at the time of its occurrence, and regardless of any formal assent thereto on his part prior to the commencement of the action."

11. As notably in the leading case of Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268.

So in the long line of Illinois cases which recognize the rule of Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268. See cases cited infra, note 31.

12. The supreme court of Colorado has adopted the rule as "confessedly an anomaly," but "more convenient" and doing no harm. Lehow v. Simonton, 3 Colo. 346.

The confusion in the present doctrine is reflected in the opinion of Marshall, J., in Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 116 Wis. 517, 522, 93 N. W. 440, 96 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 61 L. R. A. 509: "It is useless to endeavor to review the authorities touching the subject before us [the party plaintiff on a contract for the benefit of a third person] with a view to harmonizing them upon any one single theory as to the principle upon which the liability to the third person is based, or as to what are the essential elements to effect it. There is as much confusion, probably, in the judicial holdings in respect to the matter, as on any question of law that can be mentioned." And see 15 Harv. L. Rev. 767, where it is said: "In no department of the law has a more obstinate and persistent battle between practice and theory been waged than in regard to the answer to the question: Whether a right of action accrues to a third person from a contract made by others for his benefit? Nor is the strife ended; for if it be granted that the scale inclines in favor of practice, yet the advocates of this result are continually endeavoring to extend the territory which they have conquered and to apply the doctrine thereby established to cases which should be governed by other principles." Professor Williston, quoting from the German treatise by Busch, entitled "Doctrin and Praxis."

13. See CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 374 et seq.; requires the recognition in some form of a primary contractual interest, on the part of the third person, in a contract between others.[14] But when the rule rests upon decisions which permit the creditor of the promisee to sue the promisor because of the latter's promise to pay the debt,[15] no such interest on the part of the third person, the creditor, is necessary. The creditor's right to sue the promisor[16] is not primary but derivative, not substantive but procedural.[17]

(6) Creditor of Promisee as Plaintiff — (a) In General. When A has agreed with B, on a consideration moving from B, to pay to C a debt which B owes C, the prevailing American doctrine permits C, if his debt is still unpaid, to bring an action in his own name against A, for the breach of A's contract with B.[18]

(b) Not a Beneficiary. The current explanation of the rule is that the creditor of the promisee, in such a case, is a third person beneficiary, and can sue as such.[19] Manifestly, however, the creditor cannot claim as sole beneficiary; in any normal case the promisee, whose debt will be discharged by the performance of the contract, is at least the primary beneficiary.[20] In strictness indeed there is no legal ground on which the creditor of the promisee, as such, can claim a standing before the courts as beneficiary under the promise to his debtor.[21] If a debt already exists from one person to another, a promise by a third person to pay this debt is for the benefit of the original debtor to whom it is made.[22] At the most

14. The ultimate question here is briefly: If there is a valid contract between A and B for the sole benefit of C, does the substantive law give C, although he is not in fact a party to the contract nor privy to its consideration, a right of action on this contract? Compare the stipulation pour autrui under the law of Louisiana, and the discussion of its nature in Allen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980, 104 Am. St. Rep. 525, 68 L. R. A. 650. The right of the person was thus defined, in 1903, by the supreme court of Wisconsin: "Where one person, for a consideration moving to him from another, promises to pay to a third person a sum of money, the law immediately operates upon the acts of the parties, establishing the essential of privity between the promisor and the third person requisite to binding contractual relations between them, resulting in the immediate establishment of a new relation of debtor and creditor, regardless of the relations of the third person to the immediate promisee in the transaction; that the liability is as binding between the promisor and the third person as it would be if the consideration for the promise moved from the latter to the former and such promisor made the promise directly to such third person, regardless of whether the latter has any knowledge of the transaction at the time of its occurrence; that the liability being once created by the acts of the immediate parties to the transaction and the operation of law thereon, neither one nor both of such parties can thereafter change the situation as regards the third person without his consent." Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 116 Wis. 517, 526, 93 N. W. 440, 96 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 61 L. R. A. 509, per Marshall, J.

18. See cases cited infra, note 19 et seq. See also supra, note 10.

21. Tiernan v. Martin, 2 Rob. (La.) 523 [as approved in Allen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980, 104 Am. St. Rep. 525, 68 L. R. A. 650], where it is said that a stipulation that a certain sum shall be paid to a third person, toward the extinguishment of a debt due to him from one of the parties to the contract, is not properly a stipulation pour autrui. It is for the exclusive benefit of the stipulating party. And see cases cited infra, note 22.

22. Freeman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 173 Pa. St. 274, 33 Atl. 1034 [following Blymire v. Boistle, 6 Watts (Pa.) 182, 31 Am. Dec. 458, as establishing the distinction]. And see Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 10 S. Ct. 494, 33 L. ed. 667; St. Louis Second Nat. Bank v. Grand Lodge F. & A. M., 98 U. S. 123, 25 L. ed. 75.

A typical illustration of the remedial interest of a creditor in the promise to his debtor is where a mortgagor selling the mortgaged property contracts with the purchaser that he shall assume and pay the mortgage debt. The courts repeatedly speak of this contract as one made for the benefit of the creditor, the mortgagor, as its object. See Eddy v. Roberts, 17 Ill. 505; Simson v. Brown, 68 N. Y. 355; Burr v. Beers, 24

the creditor of the promisee is but an incidental beneficiary under the promise to pay his debt, and on principle and the weight of authority the incidental beneficiary cannot claim as plaintiff.[23]

(c) Basis of Creditor's Right as Plaintiff. But although the creditor of the promisee cannot appear as a beneficiary, he can proceed against his debtor's promisor upon another ground. If the creditor can sue the promisee for his debt, and the promisee can sue the promisor for breach of his promise to pay this debt, it is evident that unless the procedure of the forum presents some obstacle there is no good reason why the creditor should not proceed directly against the promisor. The result is to accomplish through one action what would otherwise require two actions. But in this there is no need to assume a contractual interest in the creditor as against his debtor's promisor; the creditor of the promisee is "allowed, by a mere rule of procedure, to go directly as a creditor against the person ultimately liable, in order to avoid circuity of action."[24]

(d) Distinguished From Sole Beneficiary. The remedial interest of the creditor of a promisee, under a promise to pay the debt, is often treated as of the same nature as the remedial interest of the sole beneficiary.[25] The two interests, however, are essentially different;[26] nor is there any necessary connection between a rule that the sole beneficiary of a contract may sue upon it and a rule that the creditor of one to whom a promise has been made to pay his debt may sue the promisor.[27]

N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327. Yet it is evident that the mortgagor's real purpose is his own benefit. So in Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 621, 10 S. Ct. 494, 33 L. ed. 667, where it was said, by Gray, J.: "In the case at bar, the promise of Ashford [the grantee] was to Thompson [the mortgagor] and not to the mortgagees, and there was no privity of contract betwen them and Ashford. The consideration of the promise moved from Thompson alone. The only object of the promise was to benefit him, and not to benefit the mortgagees, or other incumbrancers."

23. See supra, I, B, 2, b.

24. Crowell v. St. Barnabas Hospital, 27 N. J. Eq. 650, 656 [quoted and followed in Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 10 S. Ct. 494, 33 L. ed. 667], per Depue, J.

25. Thus in Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 179, 80 Am. Dec. 327, a typical case of a mortgagee suing the grantee of the mortgagor upon the grantee's promise to the mortgagor to pay the mortgage debt, the court professes to place a judgment for plaintiff "upon the broad principle that if one person makes a promise to another, for the benefit of a third person, that third person may maintain an action on the promise." The same inaccurate language appears in other cases, as defining the principle of Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268, cited infra, note 30.

26. See supra, I, B, 2, b, (I). And see the reasoning of the court in Blymire v. Boistle, 6 Watts (Pa.) 182, 31 Am. Dec. 458.

27. Accordingly, the creditor of the promisee may sue, in some states, although the sole beneficiary may not sue; occasionally the sole beneficiary may sue, although the creditor may not.

Illinois.— The creditor of the promisee may sue (see infra, note 31); but the sole beneficiary theory is apparently not recognized. See 3 Mich. L. Rev. 508–511, 21 Harv. L. Rev. 109 note. In Lawrence v. Oglesby, 178 Ill. 122, 52 N. E. 945 [affirming 75 Ill. App. 669, 671], the sole beneficiary doctrine was apparently conceded, but the supreme court cited in its support only cases involving the right of the creditor of the promisee.

Louisiana.— The interest of the sole beneficiary, under a stipulation pour autrui, has statutory recognition. See Civ. Code, art. 1890; Code Pr. art. 35; Allen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980, 104 Am. St. Rep. 525, 68 L. R. A. 650. Recent decisions tend to place the creditor of the promisee upon a very different basis. See Peoples' Homestead Assoc. v. Garland, 107 La. 476, 31 So. 982. And see Allen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 113 La. 1091, 37 So. 980, 104 Am. St. Rep. 525, 68 L. R. A. 650.

Minnesota.— The creditor of the promisee may sue (see cases infra, note 31); the sole beneficiary cannot sue. Jefferson v. Asch, 53 Minn. 446, 55 N. W. 604, 39 Am. St. Rep. 618, 25 L. R. A. 257; Union R. Storage Co. v. McDermott, 53 Minn. 407, 55 N. W. 606.

New Hampshire.— The creditor may sue, at least in equity (see infra, note 31); but the sole beneficiary cannot sue. Curry v. Rogers, 21 N. H. 247.

New York.— The creditor of the promisee may sue (see infra, note 31), but the sole beneficiary cannot sue (Sullivan v. Sullivan, 161 N. Y. 554, 56 N. E. 116; Townsend v. Rackham, 143 N. Y. 516, 38 N. E. 731; Durnherr v. Rau, 135 N. Y. 219, 32 N. E. 49), except in special circumstances, not easy to define (Buchanan v. Tilden, 158 N. Y. 109, 52 N. E. 724, 70 Am. St. Rep. 454, 44 L. R. A. 170. Compare Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co., 183 N. Y. 330, 76 N. E. 211, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 958 [recognizing Dutton v. Poole, 2 Lev. 210, 83 Eng. (e) Authority of Rule. As a working rule of procedure, the doctrine of the creditor of the promisee[28] is now abundantly established in most American states.[29] The leading case on the point is Lawrence v. Fox,[30] decided in 1859; and the general result reached in that case has been reached in many other cases,[31]

86 Eng. Reprint 205, cited supra, note 83, as good law in New York].

North Carolina.— The creditor of the promisee has been denied a standing as plaintiff (Woodcock v. Bostic, 118 N. C. 822, 24 S. E. 362; Peacock v. Williams, 98 N. C. 324, 4 S. E. 550; Morehead v. Wriston, 73 N. C. 398); but the sole beneficiary has been permitted to sue even in cases where the facts carry the doctrine to the extreme (Gastonia v. McEntee-Peterson Engineering Co., 131 N. C. 363, 42 S. E. 858; Gorrell v. Greensboro Water Supply Co., 124 N. C. 328, 32 S. E. 720, 70 Am. St. Rep. 598, 46 L. R. A. 513). In Gastonia v. McEntee-Peterson Engineering Co., supra, it is expressly declared that the North Carolina cases cited above "have not been overruled." But they appear to be inconsistent with Shoaf v. Palatine Ins. Co., 127 N. C. 308, 310, 37 S. E. 451, 80 Am. St. Rep. 804, where the court adopts the principle that "if A, on receipt of a good and sufficient consideration, agrees with B to assume and pay a debt of the latter to C, then C may maintain an action directly on such contract against A, although C is not privy to the consideration received by A." And compare Porter v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 97 N. C. 46, 2 S. E. 374.

Rhode Island.— The creditor of the promisee may sue (see infra, note 31; and Bethlehem Iron Co. v. Hoadley, 152 Fed. 735), but the sole beneficiary cannot sue (Wilbur v. Wilbur, 17 R. I. 295, 21 Atl. 497). But see Adams v. Union R. Co., 21 R. I. 134, 42 Atl. 515, 44 L. R. A. 273.

Washington.— The creditor of the promisee is permitted to sue. See the cases cited infra. The right of the sole beneficiary is apparently not established. It is significant that the first decision on the point by the state supreme court places the rule upon the doctrine of Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 10 S. Ct. 494, 33 L. ed. 667.

United States.— The sole beneficiary may apparently sue in assumpsit. See St. Louis Second Nat. Bank v. Grand Lodge F. & A. M., 98 U. S. 123, 125, 25 L. ed. 75, where Strong, J., remarks: "Another exception [to the rule that privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant is necessary to the maintenance of an action of assumpsit] is where the plaintiff is the beneficiary solely interested in the promise, as where one person contracts with another to pay money or deliver some valuable thing to a third." The creditor of the promisee cannot sue in assumpsit, nor otherwise at law. Willard v. Wood, 135 U. S. 309, 10 S. Ct. 831, 34 L. ed. 210; Goodyear Shoe Mach. Co. v. Dancel, 119 Fed. 692, 56 C. C. A. 300. But in a jurisdiction having the common-law procedure, the creditor of the promisee may by a bill in equity avail himself of the right of the promisee against the promisor, "because in equity a creditor is entitled to avail himself of a security which his debtor holds from a third person for the payment of the debt." See the remark of Gray, J., in Willard v. Wood, 135 U. S. 309, 314, 10 S. Ct. 831, 34 L. ed. 210, and the decisions in Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 10 S. Ct. 494, 33 L. ed. 667, and the cases following it. In jurisdictions having the statutory principle of one form of civil action, the creditor may pursue that remedy in the ordinary civil action. Johns v. Wilson, 180 U. S. 440, 21 S. Ct. 445, 45 L. ed. 613. Compare Barker v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 124 Fed. 555; Central Electric Co. v. Sprague Electric Co., 120 Fed. 925, 57 C. C. 30. Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268. The facts were as follows: One Holly, at the request of the defendant, loaned him three hundred dollars, stating at the time that he, Holly, owed that sum to plaintiff for money borrowed of him, and had agreed to pay it to him the next day; defendant in consideration thereof, at the time he received the money, promised Holly to pay it to plaintiff the next day. Holly's creditor, not being paid, brought a civil action in his own name, without joining Holly, directly against Holly's promisor. It was held that the action could be maintained.

Boistle had a judgment against Gladstone. In a conversation between one Blymire and Gladstone, the former, in consideration that Gladstone would convey a lot of ground to him, promised Gladstone to pay to Boistle the judgment which Gladstone owed him. Gladstone conveyed the lot, but Blymire did not pay the judgment. An action was brought in the name of Boistle against Blymire upon his promise. The lower court permitted a judgment for plaintiff; the supreme court reversed this, holding that where a debt already exists from one person to another, a promise by a third person to pay that debt is for the benefit of the promisee, and that the action upon the promise must be in his name. But to this rule the Pennsylvania courts have made important exceptions, as when the promise to pay the debt of the third person "rests upon the fact that money or property is placed in the hands of the promisor for that particular purpose. Also when one buys out the stock of a tradesman and undertakes to take the place, fill the contracts, and pay the

they do not include cases in which plaintiff was the sole beneficiary of the promise.[32]

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Parties," § 6.

When a grantee of land subject to a mortgage agrees with his grantor, the mortgagor, to assume and pay the mortgage debt, the general principle of the doctrine permits the mortgagee to sue the grantee on his promise to the mortgagor. The cases on this point, however, have been separately grouped in Contracts, 9 Cyc. 383, note 14, and as a rule are not included in the list supra, this note.

32. See supra, note 30; and Contracts, 9 Cyc. 378 note 7.

to pay the debt was not distinctly recognized in the case which has given its name to the doctrine in our later law;[33] and in the cases which follow it the doctrine is often placed very vaguely, or is put on the erroneous ground that the contract is for the benefit of the creditor.[34] That the rule exists as a short cut in procedure has, however, been distinctly marked in a number of jurisdictions.[35]

bb. In Actions at Common Law. As the rule in question concerns the distinct interests of three parties — the creditor, the promisee, and the promisor — it is properly excluded, because of its very nature, from courts which follow the hard and fast procedure of common-law actions.[36]

cc. In Actions in Equity and Under the Codes. No such limitation affects the procedure in equity,[37] nor under codes which assimilate legal and equitable procedure.[38]

(g) JOINING PROMISEE AS A PARTY. It follows from the nature of the rule, and because the obligation of the promisee to the creditor and of the promisor to the promisee remain distinct,[39] that the promisee should be joined as a party in the action

Minnesota.— Barnes v. Hekla F. Ins. Co., 56 Minn. 38, 42, 57 N. W. 314, 45 Am. St. Rep. 438, where it is said to be "an equitable rule, adopted for convenience, and to avoid circuity of action."

Nebraska.— Barnett v. Pratt, 37 Nebr. 349, 351, 55 N. W. 1050, where Irvine, C., said: "The purpose of the American rule seems to have been largely to avoid circuity of action."

Vermont.— Green v. McDonald, 75 Vt. 93, 97, 53 Atl. 332, where it is said that the rights of the creditor of the promisee "do not arise from the contract of assumption, but result from an application of the doctrine of subrogation."

36. For the common-law doctrine of parties contemplated only two sides to a case, and could not safeguard the promisee in an action by the creditor against the promisor. This aspect of the rule, although often ignored in later cases, was clearly pointed out in Blymire v. Boistle, 6 Watts (Pa.) 182, 184, 31 Am. Dec. 458, where Sergeant, J., remarked: "When a debt already exists from one person to another, a promise by a third person to pay such debt, being for the benefit of the original debtor, and to relieve him from the payment of it, he ought to have a right of action against the promisor for his own indemnity; and if the promisor were also liable to the original creditor, he would be subject to two separate actions at the same time, for the same debt, which would be inconvenient, and might lead to injustice. . . . The equity of the case would be, and chancery would decree, that Blymire [the promisor] should pay but once, and that the money should go to Boistle [the creditor] on his releasing Gladstone [the debtor of Boistle and promisee of Blymire]. But in two common-law suits against Blymire it might be difficult to effect this equity."

by the creditor against the promisor.[40] Failure to join him results, however, only in a defect of parties, the objection to which is waived if not made in due season on that ground.[41]

(h) Promisee's Obligation to Third Person. The rule assumes that the promisee owes to the third person some duty which the law can recognize, and which the third person, although not in privity with the promisor, can make the basis of a claim against him.[42] If this "essential relation of debtor and creditor" between the promisee and the third person seeking to enforce the promise[43] is lacking, the rule in question fails,[44] and the plaintiff, on principle, should not be permitted to sue.[45] This principle of the rule has, however, been ignored in a number of cases,[46]

41. In Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 626, 10 S. Ct. 494, 33 L. ed. 667, the promisee was not made a party; the court said: "Although the mortgagor (the promisee) might properly have been made a party to this bill, yet as no objection was taken on that ground at the hearing, and the omission to make him a party cannot prejudice any interest of his or any right of either party to that suit, it affords no ground for refusing relief." In Bell v. Mendenhall, 71 Minn. 331, 73 N. W. 1086, defendant, in consideration of the conveyance to it of certain real estate, had covenanted with the grantors to pay their debts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred and thirty thousand dollars. It was held that even if the aggregate of the debts exceeded one hundred and thirty thousand dollars, a creditor of the grantors could sue on the promise and recover his pro rata share; that the company was entitled to have all creditors made parties; that a failure to join all the creditors was a defect of parties, and not available under a demurrer for lack of facts. apparently through a failure to discriminate between the doctrine of the sole beneficiary and that of the creditor of the promisee.[47]

(7) Beneficial Owner in Other Respects as Plaintiff. The short principle which underlies the test of beneficial ownership in the aspects of the rule already considered[48] is that plaintiff, although without a legal title to the cause of action asserted, does have a claim to it under the substantive principles of equity.[49] The principle excludes those cases in which plaintiff has an actual interest in the result of the suit but is without any title, either legal or equitable, in the cause asserted.[50] On the other hand the principle includes a numerous body of cases in which plaintiff shows a beneficial ownership of a different aspect from any of those which have been noticed.[51] The scope of the underlying principle of these cases includes the general field of primary rights recognized by courts of equity. Its final test is in the question, Does the substantive law of equity recognize the plaintiff as owner of the cause of action pleaded?

(D) Whether Legal Title, Without Beneficial Ownership, Is a Sufficient Test of Real Party in Interest — (1) In General. Granted that beneficial ownership is sufficient for a standing as real party in interest,[52] there is still a frequent question whether beneficial ownership is essential under the statutory rule that an action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest; or is it

Arkansas.— St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, 57 Ark. 136, 20 S. W. 1083, where plaintiff had a special property in the chattel destroyed by defendant, but was not then vested with a full legal title. And see St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Biggs, 50 Ark. 169, 6 S. W. 724.

California.— Page v. Garver, 146 Cal. 577, 80 Pac. 860. In this case H, a widower, was induced by fraud and through undue influence to convey his land to D. Three years later he married again, and died in six months, his second wife surviving. The widow may sue as real party in interest for a cancellation of his conveyance to D; for when H died he was the equitable owner of the property with a right to assert his interest and attack his conveyance to D; and as H died intestate his widow succeeded, under the substantive law of California (Civ. Code, § 1386, 2, 7) to an interest in his equitable estate. And see Trubody v. Trubody, 137 Cal. 172, 69 Pac. 968.

Iowa.— Des Moines v. Polk County, 107 Iowa 525, 78 N. W. 249, holding that when the fees earned by a salaried officer of a city are to be paid into the city treasury, the city, under the general principles of the code, is the real party in interest in a suit to recover the fees from a county owing them. In Phillips v. Bush, 15 Iowa 64, where D, in selling certain lands to P, made fraudulent representations as to the lands, and where at P's request the title was conveyed by D to C, who by agreement with P was to hold the lands as security for a debt due from P to C, it was held that P is the real party in interest in an action against D for damages because of his fraudulent representations.

Kentucky.— Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Matthews, 114 Ky. 973, 72 S. W. 302, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1766, 102 Am. St. Rep. 316, 60 L. R. A. 846, holding that a traveling salesman of a wholesale house, although not the owner of the goods which he checks as his baggage, may sue the railway company as carrier for their loss if the damage will in effect fall on him.

Missouri.— Union Nat. Bank v. Hill, 148 Mo. 380, 394, 49 S. W. 1012, 71 Am. St. Rep. 615, where it is said: "If the assignee [of an insolvent bank] refuse to sue, the stockholders, who are the real parties in interest, may maintain an action in their own names, making the corporation a defendant." In Dodson v. Lomax, 113 Mo. 555, 21 S. W. 25, a sheriff, by mistake, inserted a wrong description in his deed for land sold by him under a mortgage foreclosure. It was held that as the sheriff would be liable in damages for the consequence of the mistake, he might sue to have the deed corrected.

enough if plaintiff, although without beneficial ownership, is clothed with the full legal title to the cause of action set up in the pleading?

(2) Rule in Common-Law Pleading. As the action at law, whether in contract or in tort, was regularly brought in the name of the person whose legal right had been affected,[53] it was no defense that the beneficial ownership was in another, or that plaintiff, if he recovered, would be bound to account for the entire proceeds.[54]

(3) The Rule in Equity Pleading. While equity did not ignore the legal title, the chancellor had regard primarily to the beneficial ownership, and the question of complete justice.[55]

(4) Conflicting Rules in Code Pleading — (a) Beneficial Ownership Necessary. A number of cases in the code states,[56] following a natural inference from the phraseology of the rule in question,[57] have expressed the opinion, and sometimes have held that, although a plaintiff is vested with the entire legal title to the cause of action set up in the pleading, he cannot on this ground claim recognition as the real party in interest, but must show a beneficial ownership in the cause.[58] The framers of the code, it is urged, having adopted the equity rule as to

53. Chitty Pl. 1, 2, 69.

54. See the remarks of Chief Justice Shaw in Fairfield v. Adams, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 381, 383. Here a bill of exchange to the order of S had been indorsed by him to "F., Cashier." It was held that as the indorsement vested the legal title in F, he could sue in his own name, although bound to account for the proceeds. So in Buffum v. Chadwick, 8 Mass. 103, where the action was upon a promissory note to the order of A B, "as agent of the Providence Hat-manufacturing Company," and it was held that A B had the legal title and could sue upon the note in his own name. A different aspect of the same principle appears in Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445. And see Illinois Steel Co. v. Preble Mach. Works Co., 116 Ill. App. 268, 270 [affirmed in 219 Ill. 403, 76 N. E. 574], where Baker, J., said: "If the interest of the Preble Company [the plaintiff] in the contract in question had been expressly sold by the receiver, such sale at most would have amounted to an equitable assignment of such interest. An action for the breach of the contract must even in that case have been brought in the name of the Preble Company."

So in tort for injury to property, the action at law lay regularly in the name of the person "who was legally interested in the property at the time the injury thereto was committed; for he is impliedly the party injured by the tort." 1 Chitty Pl. (16th ed.) 69.

Indiana.— Deuel v. Newlin, 131 Ind. 40, 30 N. E. 795; Bostwick v. Bryant, 113 Ind. 448, 16 N. E. 378; Gillispie v. Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co., 12 Ind. 398; Swift v. Ellsworth, 10 Ind. 205, 71 Am. Dec. 316.

Kansas.— Stewart v. Price, 64 Kan. 191, 199, 67 Pac. 553, 64 L. R. A. 581 and note. The majority of the court in this case would define the real party in interest as "the person who is actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter, as distinguished from one who has only a nominal, formal or technical interest in it or connection with it." But see the dissenting opinion and the decision in Manley v. Park, 68 Kan. 400, 75 Pac. 557, 66 L. R. A. 967, rejecting this definition as unsound.

Ohio.— Brown v. Ginn, 66 Ohio St. 316, 321, 64 N. E. 123, where the ruling on the point was, however, not necessary to the result. In this case the court, per Spear, J., remarked: "We are aware that the tendency of some courts has been to uphold actions brought upon negotiable instruments, transferred for collection only, on the ground that the plaintiff is the real party in interest . . . it may be admitted that the trend in some of the code states is in that direction. But we have found no case which goes to the extent of holding that an assignment of an open account for the mere purpose of collection, one which gives the assignee a contingent interest only, constitutes him the real party in interest within the meaning of the statute."

the party plaintiff thereby required the action to be brought in the name of the real party in interest — the party entitled to the fruits of the action, the beneficial claimant.[59] This doctrine is open to serious question. In point of principle it would seem that, however far reaching the rule of the codes requiring the action to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, it cannot properly be construed so as to destroy a substantive legal title.[60] In point of authority this doctrine is discredited by a growing array of decisions.[61]

(b) Legal Title Sufficient. After some vacillation,[62] the courts of the code states have very generally rejected or refused to adopt the doctrine that beneficial ownership is necessary for a standing as real party in interest. Without denying that beneficial ownership is sufficient, in connection with the corresponding cause of action,[63] the prevailing view now entertained by these courts recognizes the legal title also as sufficient.[64] The sounder view is rather that it is enough to entitle plaintiff to maintain the action, as real party in interest, if he has the legal title to the demand, and defendants will be protected in a payment to or recovery by him.[65] A third person, not a party to the action, may, it is true, be entitled to claim from plaintiff a portion of the fruits of the action, or all its fruits, as the case may be; but as against the defendant a plaintiff is the real party in interest if he has and shows the complete legal title to the cause of action asserted, so that he can legally discharge the defendant from his obligation.[66]

59. Hoagland v. Van Etten, 23 Nebr. 462, 463, 36 N. W. 755, per Maxwell, C. J. But see infra, note 60.

The same view is responsible for a current definition of the real party in interest. See for instance Dennison v. Soper, 33 Iowa 183, 185, where Miller, J., remarks: "The 'real party in interest' is the party having the beneficial interest; the party having the beneficial ownership."

60. See the outcome of Hoagland v. Van Etten, in its third appearance before the supreme court of Nebraska, 31 Nebr. 292, 47 N. W. 920, where the court was in effect forced to recognize the legal title of plaintiff, after every effort to ignore it. See also Alexander v. Overton, 36 Nebr. 503, 54 N. W. 825. It is to be noted also that the theory that the codes have adopted the equity rule of parties and therefore require the action to be in the name of the beneficial owner ignores the fact that equity did not disregard the legal title but as a rule assumed that the legal title could find protection in the courts of law.

61. See infra, I, B, 2, (III), (D), (4), (b).

62. See the change of judicial opinion on the point in Knadler v. Sharp, 36 Iowa 232, 236, where the court, per Cole, J., remarked that the provision of the Iowa code as to the real party in interest was "first construed . . . to mean the party having the legal title or interest. Farwell v. Tyler, 5 Iowa 535. But, afterward, it was held to mean the party having the beneficial interest, as contradistinguished from the mere holder of the legal title. Conyngham v. Smith, 16 Iowa 471. And subsequently it was held that the party holding the legal title of a note or instrument may sue on it though he be an agent or trustee, and liable to account to another for the proceeds of the recovery, but he is open in such cases to any defense which exists against the party beneficially interested; or, the party beneficially interested, though he may not have the legal title, may sue in his own name." The doctrine of Krapp v. Eldridge, 33 Kan. 106, 5 Pac. 372, that the legal title is sufficient, was rejected, by a divided court, in Stewart v. Price, 64 Kan. 191, 67 Pac. 553, 64 L. R. A. 581, in favor of the doctrine that the beneficial ownership is necessary. The latter doctrine was in turn rejected, by a unanimous court, in Manley v. Park, 68 Kan. 400, 75 Pac. 557, 66 L. R. A. 967, and the earlier doctrine restored to favor. In Killmore v. Culver, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 656, it was held that plaintiff, who had the legal title, could not maintain the action, "[because] not the real party in interest." The same doctrine appears in Clark v. Phillips, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 87, and has the approval of the supreme court in Eaton v. Alger, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 179. It is rejected in Allen v. Brown, 44 N. Y. 228, in Eaton v. Alger, 47 N. Y. 345, and in other New York cases, in favor of the doctrine that a legal title is sufficient.

63. When the beneficial owner sets up a mere legal cause of action, the objection is in strictness not that the beneficial owner cannot sue, but that, in the case as brought, he has set up a cause to which he has no title. Richardson v. Means, 22 Mo. 495.

65. See Hunter v. Allen, 106 N. Y. App. Div. 557, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 880, where the sole contention before the court was that plaintiff was not the real party in interest.

Arizona.— Sroufe v. Soto, (1896) 43 Pac. 221, which was an action upon an account assigned to plaintiff for the purpose of collection. It was held that, although it was in fact understood by the parties that the beneficial interests to pass by the assignment were limited, still plaintiff, as holder of the legal title of said accounts, could sue for and recover the whole amount.

California.—Los Robles Water Co. v. Stoneman, 146 Cal. 203, 79 Pac. 880; Cortelyou v. Jones, 132 Cal. 131, 64 Pac. 119 (where notes and mortgages were assigned to P "to be collected, and the proceeds to be held in trust" for certain purposes; P brought a foreclosure suit in his own name individually; defendant objected that P could sue only in his representative capacity, as trustee of an express trust; that he should have set up in his complaint the fact creating the trust, and that he was not entitled to a judgment in his favor individually, and it was held that this objection could not be sustained, for the reason that a legal title was vested in P, and payment to him or satisfaction of a judgment in his favor would exonerate defendant); Herman v. Hecht, 116 Cal. 553, 48 Pac. 611; Ingham v. Weed, (1897) 48 Pac. 319; Giselman v. Starr, 106 Cal. 651, 40 Pac. 8; Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. Co., 98 Cal. 490, 497, 33 Pac. 550 (where it was said: "A trustee to whom a chose in action had been transferred for collection is, in contemplation of law, so far the owner that he may sue on it in his own name"); O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 435, 440, 16 Pac. 236 (where it was said: "Plaintiff is the real party in interest. . . . It is sufficient, under the code, if he holds the legal title to the demand"); Anson v. Townsend, 73 Cal. 415, 419, 15 Pac. 49 (where it was said: "As the plaintiff had the legal title, it did not concern the defendant whether he [the plaintiff] held it in trust for Mrs. Townsend or not. So far as concerned the defendant, he was the real party in interest, and might sue in his own name"); Walker v. McCusker, 71 Cal. 594, 12 Pac. 723; Ginocchio v. Amador Canal, etc., Co., 67 Cal. 493, 8 Pac. 29; McPherson v. Weston, 64 Cal. 275, 30 Pac. 842; Wetmore v. San Francisco, 44 Cal. 294; Gradwohl v. Harris, 29 Cal. 150 (which case marks the further point that intervention by the beneficial owner is permissible but not necessary); White v. The Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 462, 471, 65 Am. Dec. 523 (where it is said: "The insurance company may have the equitable right to the proceeds, or a part of them, but the legal right to bring the action remains with the plaintiff, and this constitutes him in the view of the law as much the real party in interest as if he were entitled to the proceeds").

Colorado.— Central City First Nat. Bank v. Hummel, 14 Colo. 259, 23 Pac. 986, 20 Am. St. Rep. 257, 8 L. R. A. 788 (where it is said: "The 'real party in interest' is held to mean the person in whom the legal title to the claim in suit is vested"); Bassett v. Inman, 7 Colo. 270, 273, 3 Pac. 383 (where it is said: "The plaintiff, as assignee of the note and account sued upon, was the 'real party in interest,' within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure, even though the consideration of the assignment may have been a payment to the assignor after recovery in the suit by the assignee"); Gomer v. Stockdale, 5 Colo. App. 489, 39 Pac. 355, 356 (where it is said: "It is no infraction of this statute [the provision of the code that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest] to bring the suit in the name of the person to whom the claim has been assigned, whether it be an open account or otherwise, although there may be annexed to the transfer the condition that, when the sum is collected, the whole or some part of it must be paid over to the assignor").

Indiana.— Hardin v. Helton, 50 Ind. 319; Robbins v. Cheek, 32 Ind. 328, 2 Am. Rep. 348; Robbins v. Dishon, 19 Ind. 204. Compare Butler v. Sturges, 6 Blackf. 186, giving the rule prior to the code. But see Indiana cases contra, cited supra, note 58.

Iowa.— Dorr Cattle Co. v. Jewett, 116 Iowa 93, 89 N. W. 109 (where P had sold property to D upon his promise to P to credit the price upon the note of Y, which was held by D); Abell Note Brokerage, etc., Co. v. Hurd, 85 Iowa 559, 52 N. W. 488; Vimont v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 64 Iowa 513, 17 N. W. 31, 21 N. W. 9; Searing v. Berry, 58 Iowa 20, 11 N. W. 708 (where a judgment had been assigned to P for the benefit of S, and it was held that as P had the legal title to the judgment, "the law regards him as the real party in interest to prosecute this suit to enforce the collection of the judgment"); Cassidy v. Woodward, 77 Iowa 354, 357, 42 N. W. 319 (where S bought land and had it conveyed to P who was the servant of S, and at the time had no knowledge of the conveyance; the beneficial ownership continues in S, but an action to recover the land lies in the name of P, and said the court: "The party holding the legal title to a cause of action, though he be a mere agent or trustee, with no beneficial interest therein, may sue thereon in his own name"); Knadler v. Sharp, 36 Iowa 232 (where open accounts had been assigned to plaintiff upon his agreement

to pay over the net proceeds, and it was held that plaintiff, having the legal title, could sue as real party in interest); Cottle v. Cole, 20 Iowa 481, 486 (where Dillon, J., said: "Holding, as the plaintiff did, the legal title to the judgment, by assignment, he could sue upon it; and his right to recover could not be defeated by simply showing that Cluff was the party beneficially interested in the action."

Kansas.— Greene v. McAuley, 70 Kan. 601, 79 Pac. 133, 68 L. R. A. 308; Manley v. Park, 68 Kan. 400, 401, 815, 75 Pac. 557, 1134, 66 L. R. A. 967, 971, where it was said: "When the owner of a note, for reasons satisfactory to himself, assigns it to another, thereby vesting in him the full legal title, the assignee becomes, so far as the debtor is concerned, the real party in interest. The original owner is still the person to be finally benefited by the litigation, but his legal demand is no longer against the maker of the note, but against the person to whom he has assigned it." This case expressly overrules Stewart v. Price, 64 Kan. 191, 211, 67 Pac. 553, 64 L. R. A. 581, where a divided court held that beneficial ownership is essential for the real party in interest under the code. In the dissenting opinion of Stewart v. Price, supra, concurred in by two other judges, Greene, J., after reviewing the authorities, stated their result thus: "The principle running through and controlling in all of the foregoing decisions is that the person in possession and holding the legal title to the evidence of indebtedness sued on is the real party in interest, within the meaning of the code, notwithstanding the entire beneficial interest is in another." This dissent is recognized as sound law by a unanimous court in Manley v. Park, supra. The cases of Krapp v. Eldridge, 33 Kan. 106, 5 Pac. 372, and Linney v. Thompson, 3 Kan. App. 718, 45 Pac. 456, which were overruled by Stewart v. Price, supra, have apparently been restored to favor by Manley v. Park, supra.

Minnesota.— Struckmeyer v. Lamb, 64 Minn. 57, 65 N. W. 930 (and see "Trustee of Express Trust," infra, I, B, 2, e, (IV)); Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. v. Heipler, 49 Minn. 395, 52 N. Missouri.— Guerney v. Moore, 131 Mo. 650, 32 S. W. 1132 (holding that when the assignment of the chose in action vests the entire apparent legal title in the assignee, he is the real party in interest, and it is immaterial what arrangements have been made between him and the assignor in respect to the proceeds); Young v. Hudson, 99 Mo. 102, 12 S. W. 632; Ely v. Porter, 58 Mo. 158. In Peters v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 24 Mo. 586, five distinct claims, by as many laborers, against a railway company were assigned to P, that he might collect them, either by suit in his own name, or otherwise; for his services P was to receive one fourth of the amount collected; the remainder he was to pay over to his assignors. P was to pay all costs and charges which might accrue in the collections of the claims, or in their attempted collection. It was held that P can sue in his own name. In Webb v. Morgan, 14 Mo. 428, the action was in the name of the assignee of promissory notes. On the trial plaintiff admitted that he "had no interest in the notes" and was acting "merely as agent" of the promisee. It was held that plaintiff could sue in his own name, the assignment having passed to him the legal title to the note. Here plaintiff was not, in the eye of the law, a mere agent, but an agent clothed with a title. That the naked agent cannot sue see "The Limits of Remedial Interest," infra, I, B, 2, e. In Willison v. Smith, 52 Mo. App. 133, P sued in replevin under a chattel mortgage securing a note to order of M, who, through an agent, had indorsed and delivered the note to P, for purposes of collection. It was held that P, having legal title to the note, had legal title also to the mortgage, and therefore could sue in his own name. Compare Buddington v. Mastbrook, 17 Mo. App. 577.

Nebraska.— Huddleson v. Polk, 70 Nebr. 483, 97 N. W. 624 (where plaintiff an attorney, to whom numerous creditors of defendant had assigned their claims, and who was to receive one half the amount recovered, sued in his own name alone); Chamberlain v. Woolsey, 66 Nebr. 141, 92 N. W. 181, 95 N. W. 38; Meeker v. Waldron, 62 Nebr. 689, 87 N. W. 539; Alexander v. Overton, 36 Nebr. 503, 504, 54 N. W. 825 (where Maxwell, C. J., remarks: "Suppose a brother should take the title to a tract of land in the name of his sister — the deed being made to her, would it be seriously contended that an action of ejectment could not be maintained in her name to recover the possession? In law, she would hold the legal title and would be the real party in interest"); McWilliams v. Bridges, 7 Nebr. 419; Commercial State Bank v. Rowley, 2 Nebr. (Unoff.) 645, 89 N. W. 765 (where as indorsee of a check plaintiff had the legal title to it, and sued in his own name).

Nevada.— Smith v. Logan, 18 Nev. 149, 1 Pac. 678. Here in an action to determine water-rights, it appeared that, although the lands had been conveyed to P, he had agreed orally to reconvey the land to his grantors upon the termination of the action. It was held that P, having the legal title, is the real party in interest.

Y. Suppl. 120. Compare Welsh v. Rheinhardt, 21 Misc. 22, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 866. In Friedman v. Schulman, 46 Misc. 572, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 801, plaintiff sued as assignee of a claim for breach of contract of employment; the assignor testified that he was a non-resident, that he did not know the plaintiff personally, and that he expected to receive the entire recovery if plaintiff succeeded. It was held that as plaintiff had a valid transfer as against his assignor and held the legal title, he could sue in his own name. "While the transaction as between the parties appears to have been merely colorable, yet that would constitute no defense on the ground that the assignee was not the real party in interest." In Brown v. Powers, 53 N. Y. App. Div. 251, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 733, P sued as assignee of a judgment; the defense was that while the judgment had been in form assigned to P, it was nevertheless in fact owned by the assignor, a bank, and it was held that P, under the assignment, "was the legal owner of it [the judgment] and, therefore, was the real party in interest."

North Dakota.— Commercial Bank v. Red River Valley Nat. Bank, 8 N. D. 382, 79 N. W. 859; Seybold v. Grand Forks Nat. Bank, 5 N. D. 460, 67 N. W. 682.

Oregon.— Falconio v. Larsen, 31 Oreg. 137, 48 Pac. 703, 37 L. R. A. 254, where plaintiff was assignee of a claim for wages, assigned for collection only.

South Carolina.— Wylie v. Ohio River, etc., R. Co., 48 S. C. 405, 26 S. E. 676. Here the owner of a cow mortgaged her to P, with other chattels, to secure a note for fifty dollars. After the maturity of the mortgage debt, the cow, while still in the possession of the mortgagor, was killed, through the negligence of the defendant railway. It was held that P may bring the action against the railway company, because "upon breach of the conditions of a chattel mortgage, the mortgagee becomes the legal owner of the mortgaged property."

South Dakota.— Citizens' Bank v. Corkings, 9 S. D. 614, 70 N. W. 1059, 62 Am. St. Rep. 891.

Utah.— Wines v. Rio Grande & Western R. Co., 9 Utah 228, 33 Pac. 1042, where P, being the assignee of various distinct claims for cattle, belonging to different owners, which had been killed through the negligence of the defendant railway, it was held that it was immaterial whether any consideration was paid for the assignment, or whether or not the assignment was merely for the purpose of the suit.

Washington.— Riddell v. Prichard, 12 Wash. 601, 41 Pac. 905 (holding that an attorney to whom a note is assigned, for a nominal consideration and the purpose of collection, may sue in his own name); McDaniel v. Pressler, 3 Wash. 636, 29 Pac. 209 (where the point is covered in part by a specific provision in the code to the effect that the assignee of a chose in action may, by virtue of the assignment thereof, in writing, maintain an action in his own name, "notwithstanding the assignor may have an interest in the thing assigned," provided defendant may assert any counter-claims or offsets against the original owner).

Wisconsin.—Brossard v. Williams, 114 Wis. 89, 89 N. W. 832; Chase v. Dodge, 111 Wis. 70, 86 N. W. 548; Anderson v. Johnson, 106 Wis. 218, 82 N. W. 177; Crowns v. Forest Land Co., 99 Wis. 103, 105, 74 N. W. 546, per Bardeen, J. In the last case plaintiff, as mortgagee, was "vested with and held the legal ownership of the demand sued upon. The appellant [defendant] had no legal interest to inquire whether the respondent's interest was actual or colorable, or whether a consideration was paid therefor or not."

67. See cases cited infra, this note.

The "colorable" transfer of title.— In Sheridan v. New York, 68 N. Y. 30, 32, per Church, C. J., the court had charged the jury that if they believed that the assignment to plaintiff was a "sham transaction" they should find for defendant. It was held to be error, for it appeared that the assignment had conveyed the legal title to plaintiff, and even if "the circumstances were such as to justify the jury in finding that it was colorable as between the parties, yet that would constitute no defence on the ground that the plaintiff was not the real party in interest." And see the remark of Judge Severens in Kent v. Dana, 100 Fed. 56, 64, 40 C. C. A. 281: "Where, as in Ohio, the code of procedure requires that the suit shall be brought by the real party in interest, it is nevertheless held that, when the plaintiff is the lawful holder of the note, it is no defense to the maker to face of plaintiff's claim,[68] that the beneficial owner has agreed to meet the costs of the suit,[69] or that the vesting of the legal title in plaintiff gives him a procedural right which the beneficial owner would not have been able to claim if suit had been brought in his name.[70] But on a possible limitation in such cases because of a right in the trial court to go behind the legal title of plaintiff, in order to protect the process or the rulings of the court, see a following topic.[71]

(E) Double Aspect of Real Party in Interest. Under the prevailing doctrine noticed above,[72] it is clear that the phrase "real party in interest" has acquired a double meaning. In states which administer law and equity through the one form of civil action the phrase may mean the person having the beneficial ownership;[73] but it may also mean a person who, although without the beneficial ownership, is clothed with the entire legal title.[74] This result is the natural outcome of the adoption of one form of civil action for the administration of distinct substantive rights at law and in equity.[75] As the historic legal cause of action and the historic equitable cause of action remain unchanged by the codes and either may be asserted, without a merely procedural distinction, in the complaint or petition,[76] so both the historic plaintiffs in our doctrine of parties, the "legal plaintiff" and the "equitable plaintiff,"[77] come within the scope of the phrase "real party in interest."[78] The effect of this ambiguity, however, is minimized show that the transfer under which the plaintiff holds it is without consideration, or subject to equities between him and his assignor, or colorably, and merely for the purpose of collection, and that it is sufficient if he have the legal title, either by written transfer or delivery, whatever may be the equities of his relation with his assignor." See also Friedman v. Schulman, 46 Misc. (N. Y.) 572, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 801; Crowns v. Forest Land Co., 99 Wis. 103, 74 N. W. 546.

68. In Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. v. Heipler, 49 Minn. 395, 396, 52 N. W. 33, plaintiff sued upon an accepted draft containing this clause: "It is hereby expressly understood and agreed that the Minnesota Thresher Manufacturing Company takes this order for collection only; the net proceeds of such collection to be applied on the indebtedness of the drawer of said order to the said Minnesota Thresher Manufacturing Company." The court said, per Mitchell, J.: "Clearly the plaintiff held the legal title to the demand, and was the real party in interest."

69. Allen v. Brown, 44 N. Y. 228, where A, B, and C, having each a distinct claim against D, assigned them to P; there was no consideration for the assignment; the proceeds of the contemplated suit were to be paid over to A, B, and C. It was further agreed that if P lost the suit "it should not trouble or cost him anything." It was held that as the assignment had transferred the legal title of the claims to P, he was the real party in interest.

70. In Vimont v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 64 Iowa 513, 17 N. W. 31, 21 N. W. 9, it appeared that a claim for a personal injury, assignable under the lex loci, had been assigned in due form to plaintiff, a citizen of the same state as defendant railway, in order to prevent a removal of the action into the federal courts. It farther appeared that the assignor was to receive all but fifty dollars of the expected recovery. It was held that as plaintiff held the legal title to the claim he could sue upon it in his own name. And see Citizen's Bank v. Corkings, 9 S. D. 614, 70 N. W. 1059, 62 Am. St. Rep. 891, where a non-resident corporation, which was not entitled to sue in South Dakota, because it had failed to file its articles and appoint a resident agent, transferred its claim to P, by an assignment absolute on its face; there was no consideration for the assignment, and it was understood that the assignee should collect and pay the net proceeds to the corporation. It was held that P, having the legal title, can sue in his own name as real party in interest.

The equitable plaintiff is he who, not having the legal title to the right of action, is in equity entitled to the thing sued for."

78. As a further result, the "legal plaintiff" may often claim either as "real party

by the principle that a plaintiff must always show a right of action in the very cause of action which he asserts.[79] The ambiguity is relieved also by the fact that, under either aspect of the phrase, the final test of "the real party in interest" is substantially the same — the practical test which is found in the question whether a judgment for or against a plaintiff will safeguard the defendant in the event of any other claim on the same cause.[80]

(F) Final Test of Real Party in Interest — (1) As Respects Right of Defendant. The statutory principle of the real party in interest is imperative;[81] defendant has the right to require that the action against him, if not in name of a plaintiff within one of the express exceptions,[82] must be brought in the name of the real party in interest.[83] Even when a plaintiff shows a prima facie title, defendant has the right to show, if he can, that plaintiff is not "the real party in interest."[84] But defendant's right to object is limited by the purpose of the statute;[85] and its evident purpose is not to allow defendant to demand the adjudication of equities which exist wholly between plaintiff and third persons.[86] So far as defendant is concerned, the purpose of the statute is fully attained if, in the suit as brought, defendant is not shut out from his proper defenses and counterclaims and will be fully protected by the judgment, whether for or against plaintiff, in the event of any other claim on the same cause.[87] In all such cases there

On principle the action fails if plaintiff, having only a beneficial ownership, sets up merely the naked legal cause of action existing in the right of his trustee. Richardson v. Means, 22 Mo. 495. In this case a chattel had been conveyed to T in trust for P. The chattel is converted by D. Thereupon P sued to recover the chattel setting up only the legal title and without joining T. It was held that P "had stated [himself] out of court."

84. In Eaton v. Alger, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 179, this right of defendant was recognized, and he was permitted to show, if he could, that plaintiff, although having a prima facie right of action, was not the real party in interest. Defendant failed in his effort, because it appeared that plaintiff did have a legal title. See the second appearance of Eaton v. Alger, 47 N. Y. 345. In Hays v. Hathorn, 74 N. Y. 486. this right of defendant was again recognized and enforced, because the scope of defendant's offer was to show that plaintiff, although appearing with a prima facie title, had in fact no title either legal or equitable. A similar offer was successfully carried through by defendant in Bell v. Tilden, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 346, where the prima facie title arising from plaintiff's possession was completely rebutted by evidence that plaintiff had "no legal title to the paper in suit, and no interest whatever therein." Kansas.— Greene v. McAuley, 70 Kan. 601, 607, 79 Pac. 133, 68 L. R. A. 308, where Mason, J., remarks: "This suggests what we conceive to be the true rule, of general, if not of universal, application, that so far as affects the question of the right of the plaintiff to maintain the action the only inquiry open to the defendant is whether the plaintiff has such title to the note that a payment made to him would be a complete protection to defendant from any further liability."

is an end of defendant's concern, and with it of his right to object.[88] So far as he is interested, the action is being prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.[89] It follows that the test of the real party in interest, as respects defendant, is not found in the question whether plaintiff is the person who is actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter of the action, but rather in the question whether a payment to or a recovery by the plaintiff will fully protect defendant in the event of another action upon the same cause.[90]

(2) As Respects Right of Trial Court. But while defendant is not concerned with a simulated interest on the part of plaintiff, if his title is in fact legally sufficient to protect defendant in any other action upon the same cause, and defendant's subsisting counter-claims and defenses are available, it sometimes

W. 970, where Mitchell, J., remarks: "A recovery by plaintiff will fully protect the defendants, and they have no interest in the equities between him and his assignor, unless an inquiry into the subject had become material upon the right of interposing some defence or counterclaim against the assignor."

Missouri.— Chouteau v. Boughton, 100 Mo. 406, 13 S. W. 877, holding that an action by the assignee of the beneficiaries on a cause accruing to a trustee is brought by the real party in interest so far as defendant is concerned, because a judgment on the merits in their suit or that of their assignee would bar an action by the trustee.

New York.— Hays v. Hathorn, 74 N. App. Div. 557, 559, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 880 (where it is said: "This transfer [to the plaintiff] being valid, and the plaintiff holding the legal right to the demand, the defendants have legally no interest to inquire further, as a payment to or recovery by the plaintiff, occupying this position, would protect them against any other claim based on the notes that might be made either by the bank or by another party"). And see the test applied in Moppar v. Wiltchik, 56 Misc. 676, 677, 107 N. Y. Suppl. 594. The question arose upon an objection for defect of parties; the court said: "The rule is well settled that to maintain an action it must appear that the plaintiff is the only person possessed of any ownership or interest in the demand; so that, on a recovery and subsequent payment, all rights of action in respect thereto will be barred as against the defendants."

North Dakota.— Seybold v. Grand Forks Nat. Bank, 5 N. D. 460, 467, 67 N. W. 682, where it is said: "All that the debtor is interested in is protection against a second action on the same claim."

But if not cut off from any just offset or counter-claim against the demand, and a judgment in behalf of the party suing will fully protect him when discharged, then is his concern at an end. This is the test as to whether such a defense is properly interposed."

Wisconsin.— Chase v. Dodge, 111 Wis. 70, 72, 86 N. W. 548, where Bardeen, J., says: "The rule that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest . . . is imperative, but is satisfied when it is shown that the party suing is the one who has the right to control and receive the recovery."

88. "Where the plaintiff shows such a title as that a judgment upon it satisfied by defendant will protect him from future annoyance or loss, and where, as against the party suing, defendant can urge any defenses he could make against the real owner, then there is an end of the defendant's concern and with it of his right to object." 90. "The defense sought to be proved would not, if established, be available, because payment of the judgment to the plaintiff will fully protect the defendant against claims by third parties. This, under the authorities, is the test as to whether or not the plaintiff is the real party in interest." St. James Co. v. Security Trust, etc., Co., 82 N. Y. App. Div. 242, 246, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 739 [affirmed in 178 N. Y. 560, 70 N. E. 1108], per O'Brien, J. In Gross v. Heckert, 120 Wis. 314, 320, 97 N. W. 952, it was remarked by Marshall, J., "[that] the test of whether one is the real party in interest within the meaning of the statute is, Does he satisfy the call for the person who has the right to control and receive the fruits of the litigation?" The action here was successfully maintained by the beneficial owner. The further remark of the court that the real party in interest is one who is "actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter" is evidently sound as a description of plaintiff in the case at bar, but the court does not decide that one who is not actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter is not a real party in interest. That the legal title is sufficient in Wisconsin see supra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (D), (4), (b) [p. 81 text and note 66].

happens, although rarely, that the court, on its own account, will go behind plaintiff's legal title and investigate the question of his beneficial ownership.[91]

(IV) Trustee of an Express Trust—(A) In General. The prominence of the trustee of an express trust in our present doctrine of parties is due to the codes of civil procedure. In the earlier systems a trustee of an express trust had no distinctive place as plaintiff;[92] he could regularly sue in his own name as holder of the legal title.[93] But in code pleading, since the year 1848, the "trustee of an express trust" has stood in all the codes as one of the few express exceptions to the rule that a civil action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest.[94] This provision has given rise to an extensive and important doctrine in code pleading.[95]

(B) Meaning of "Trustee of an Express Trust"—(1) Its Original Meaning. In expressly permitting the civil action to be brought in the name of a "trustee of an express trust" the codes did not attempt to define the meaning of the term. In other connections, however, it had acquired a narrow and technical meaning.[96] It was commonly defined as a trust created by the direct and positive act of the parties by some writing, or deed, or will.[97] As an existing statutory term, it was limited in some states to trusts of land.[98]

(2) Its Extension by Judicial Construction. A similar narrow construction was urged upon the courts when they were first called upon to define the phrase as a term in the codes of procedure.[99] But the practical inconvenience of thus restricting the remedial interest of the legal owner was so apparent that the courts at an early day rejected this narrow meaning of the phrase, so far as the doctrine of parties to actions was concerned, and held that the phrase "trustee of an express trust" as a term of code pleading is capable of a more extensive signification, so as to include all contracts in which one person acts in trust for or in behalf of another.[1]

(3) Its Extension by Statute. This extension of the term was speedily adopted by the legislature. The statute took two forms. In a large number of states[2] the technical term "trustee of an express trust" was declared, as a term

91. In Philbrook v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 111 Cal. 31, 35, 43 Pac. 402, a claim had been assigned to one who had been disbarred by the supreme court from practising as an attorney; the court said: "It matters not to the defendant whether in truth the transfer be genuine or simulated, so long as in law it is sufficient to protect him. But the concern of the trial court, under the circumstances, is quite different. It is bound to give due effect to the judgments of this tribunal [disbarring the assignee]. Its duty, therefore, is not alone to determine whether or not the transfer is such as will protect the defendant, but equally to determine whether the transfer be genuine, or simulated to evade the judgment of the court. To a genuine transfer, as has been said, the judgment of this court has no application."

92. Thus, Chitty and Dicey, in treating of parties to actions, have no such distinctive topic.

93. See supra, I, B, 2.

94. By the terms of N. Y. Code Proc. (1848) § 93, these exceptions were three in number: (1) A trustee of an express trust; (2) an executor or administrator; and (3) a person expressly authorized by statute. The same exceptions reappear in the terms of the other codes (see supra, p. 36, note 13, for the "code states"), but with some expansion, here and there.

In New York it was generally supposed, at first, that the words "express trust," in this section of the code, referred "to trusts of land authorized by the Revised Statutes, and which are in the statutes themselves termed 'express trusts,' and to them alone." Y.) 706, 710, where it was said: "Mercantile agents and factors who, according to the usage and custom of merchants, do business in their own names, but for other parties, are trustees in the strict sense of the term. They are so in fact, and they have always been held liable as such, to account in a court of equity. The trust, though not created by a formal deed or instrument, yet appears upon the face of every order contained in the correspondence of their principals, in pursuance of which they act, and may therefore well enough be called an 'express trust.'" of pleading, "to include a person with whom, or in whose name, a contract is made for the benefit of another."[3] In other states the technical term "trustee of an express trust" was left untouched, but there was added to the provision of the code, as a coördinate clause, "the person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another."[4]

(c) Nature and Scope of Enactment — (1) Its Permissive Character. The enactment in question stands as a permissive exception to the general rule that the civil action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest. The trustee of an express trust or the person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another may sue in his own name alone,[5] or he may sue with the beneficiary as a party;[6] or the beneficiary may sue in his own name as real party in interest.[7] In the last case, however, it does not follow that the mere legal cause which exists in the right of the trustee, and could have supported an action in his name, will alone support an action in the name of the beneficiary; the complaint must show the equitable cause existing in the right of plaintiff as beneficial owner.

(2) Its Wide Scope — (a) In General. Although an exception to a fundamental rule, the enactment has been most liberally interpreted by the courts. Its terms evidently include others than those who in equity are regarded as technical trustees,[8] and the courts construing the provision have in the main given it a free field.[9] The guiding principle is not often defined, the courts in most instances holding merely that the case at bar does or does not come within the exception permitted by the statute.[10] But when one case is compared with another, it is evident that the courts under the code, acting in behalf of a more convenient administration of justice,[11] have in the main sought to preserve measurably the common-law rule that he who has the legal right is a proper plaintiff.[12]

(b) Typical Instances. The general result is a numerous and varied class of cases in which a person without direct beneficial interest in the cause of action asserted, and sometimes ostensibly so, is permitted to sue in his own name, notwithstanding the rule as to the real party in interest.[13] The permission of the statute evidently reaches the case of one to whom the title to tangible property

4. See the forms of the enactment in the codes of Arkansas, Iowa, Kentucky, Ohio, Washington, and Wyoming.

The distinction here made, whatever its importance in the law of trusts, has been without practical consequence in the law of parties to actions. The two forms of the enactment appear to have had precisely the same effect. They may be considered together, and under the head of "the trustee of an express trust," as a new, composite, statutory term describing one aspect of the remedial interest recognized in code pleading. 22. Clark v. Fosdick, 118 N. Y. 7, 12, 22 N. E. 1111, 16 Am. St. Rep. 733, 6 L. R. A. 132, where it is said: "By the express terms of the agreement of separation the defendant . . . agrees to pay the plaintiff for and towards the support and maintenance of his [defendant's] wife, the said Jennie P. Fosdick and their children, the yearly sum of two thousand five hundred dollars for and during the period of her natural life unless she remarries, etc., and the plaintiff and the said Jennie agree that said sum so paid shall be in full satisfaction of the support and maintenance of said Jennie P. Fosdick and children and all alimony whatsoever. This clearly constitutes the plaintiff the trustee of an express trust."

23. D entered into a contract with the United States to do certain work, and executed to the United States as obligee a bond conditioned that D would promptly pay all persons supplying him with materials for the work. Subsequently S supplied D with materials for the work. An action on the bond, in behalf of S, can be maintained in the name of the United States, as trustee of an express trust. U. S. v. McCann, 40 Oreg. 13, 66 Pac. 274. To same effect see U. S. v. Rundle, 27 Wash. 7, 67 Pac. 395. In the latter case the caption formally recited for whose use and benefit the action was brought, and it was held that if this could be deemed improper in any case, it would be disregarded as mere surplusage.

25. Stillwell v. Hurlbert, 18 N. Y. 374, 375. In this case a deputy sheriff, holding an execution, took a bond in the name of the sheriff, conditioned that defendant should indemnify the sheriff and "all and every person and persons aiding and assisting him in the premises." The deputy having been sued for the conversion of a wagon sold under the execution, an action on the bond was brought in the name of the sheriff. It was held that the action was properly brought. "In respect to the deputy who held the execution, and who in fact received the bond, the plaintiff became the trustee of an express trust."

Rep. 1169, where P, an employer, made two contracts of insurance, one for his own benefit, the other for the benefit of his operatives. S, an operative, was injured within the scope of the latter policy, and it was held that the action on S's claim against the insurance company could be brought in the name of P, as a trustee of an express trust.

In this case a common carrier agreed with P to transport a carload of goods, described as the property of P, and consigned to P. In fact the goods were the property of N, for whom P was acting, and who paid a certain overcharge in the freight. It was held in an action to recover this overcharge that P could sue as a trustee of an express trust for N.

29. The leading case on the point is Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389. The facts were as follows: Brisbane had signed and delivered to Considerant certain promissory tracts in his own name in behalf of the named principal is apparently not personally bound for the performance of the contract.[30]

(D) Test of a "Trustee of an Express Trust"—(1) IN GENERAL. In the prevailing doctrine of parties plaintiff under the codes the test of the relation described by the composite term "trustee of an express trust and person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another" is appar-

notes payable to Considerant "as executive agent" of a foreign corporation named in the notes. There was no assignment to Considerant of the corporation's interest in the notes. Upon their maturity, Considerant sued upon the notes in his own name alone. His complaint alleged that the notes had been issued upon defendant's application to plaintiff "acting as the executive agent" of the corporation, for certain shares of stock in the corporation; that plaintiff was authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, and had been ready and willing to deliver the certificates to defendant, and on the maturity of the notes had tendered him the certificates. Defendant demurred, contending that an action on the notes could not be brought in the name of Considerant. It was held by a majority of the court that Considerant could sue as a trustee of an express trust. See also Leach v. Hill, 106 Iowa 171, 76 N. W. 667. Here the petition was entitled, "S. M. Leach, Cashier," as plaintiff, and showed that the check in suit was purchased by Leach as cashier of a certain bank, with its funds, and for the bank, and that whatever was due on the causes of action belonged to the bank. It was held that as plaintiff's authority as cashier of this bank was undisputed, he held the claim as trustee of an express trust for the bank, and could sue in his representative capacity as cashier without joining the bank. In Albany, etc., Iron, etc., Co. v. Lundberg, 121 U. S. 451, 454, 7 S. Ct. 958, 30 L. ed. 982, Lundberg entered into a contract in his own name with the Albany Iron Company, but in the body of the contract Lundberg described himself as "agent for N. M. Hoglund's Sons and Co. of Stockholm." For a breach of this contract, Lundberg sued in his own name alone. It was contended that the action could not be maintained in his name, but should be brought in the name of Hoglund Sons and Co. The court said, per Mr. Justice Gray: "If . . . the agreement must be considered as made by Lundberg, not in his individual capacity, but only as agent and in behalf of the Swedish firm, and for their benefit, then the price is payable to him as their agent, and for their benefit, in the same sense in which an express promise to pay money to him as the agent of that firm would be a promise to pay him for their benefit, and therefore, by the law of New York, which governs this case, an action may be brought in his name." Contra, It was a current doctrine in common-law procedure, but not beyond dispute there, that an agent "with whom a contract is expressed to be made on behalf of another, and who has no direct beneficial interest in the transaction, cannot support an action thereon." Chitty Pl. (16th Am. ed.) 8, and cases there cited. The ratio decidendi was that in such a case the contract, notwithstanding its terms, is in legal effect, not with the agent but with the principal. The point was urged upon the court both in Considerant v. Brisbane, supra, and Albany Iron Co. v. Lundberg, supra. See the dissenting opinion in the former case, where Denio, J., remarks that "where it appears that the duty which the instrument acknowledges is due to a corporation, whose agent or officer is by the contract appointed to receive the thing promised, and nothing appears to show that he has any interest apart from his principal, or that there was any motive for interposing the agent as a contracting party betwen the promisors and the party equitably entitled, it ought to be held, that the promise was made to the latter." Such a construction, if adopted in Considerant v. Brisbane, supra, or Albany Iron Co. v. Lundberg, supra, would have excluded the agent as one with whom the contract was made. It is significant that the construction was rejected in both these leading cases.

30. Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389, the court pointing out that the facts stated in the complaint showed that plaintiff who made the contract had no beneficial interest in it, was not bound by it, and furnished no part of the consideration for it.

Scope of the principle.—The very wide effect of the principle in the case is shown in the following passage from the majority opinion: "It is conceded, as it must be, that the complaint states a cause of action in the corporation, for whom the plaintiff acted as executive agent, against the defendant. . . . The company, and not the plaintiff, was the party beneficially interested, and the duty or obligation, to issue the stock (which was the sole consideration for the defendant's agreement and promise) rested upon, and could only be performed by, such company. Had the corporation, on the first day of July, or the 1st of September [when the notes matured], refused to issue the stock, no action could have been maintained by anybody on the instruments . . . set out in the complaint. On the other hand, the defendant's remedy would be against the corporation, and not against the person professedly acting as its agent. Thus, the corporation had the exclusive beneficial interest in the subject of the defendant's promises. The plaintiff was not personally bound by the contract; and the corporation was bound, unless the contract was a nudum pactum," per Wright, J. Nevertheless, it was held, by five judges, that the action could be prosecuted in the name of plaintiff. Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389, 391.

ently twofold. The trustee must have a legal title to the cause which he asserts;[31] the relation must be "express."[32]

(2) A Legal Title Essential. A few cases, disregarding alike the significance of the term "trust,"[33] and the legal effect of making a contract with a person, or in his name, have apparently deemed it unnecessary that a plaintiff standing on this provision of the codes should be vested with a legal title.[34] But the weight of authority, and the test of principle require that if plaintiff sues as a trustee of an express trust or as one with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another, he must have title to the cause which he asserts.[35] A trustee of an express trust may sue in his own name, but then the legal title, and, where possession is in controversy, the right of possession, if any, are in him, and not in the beneficiaries of the trust.[36] Accordingly it has been held that an action cannot be brought in his own name, as trustee of an express trust, by the person by whom, but not with whom, the contract in suit was made;[37] or by the mere custodian of a chattel, when the cause does not turn upon the right of possession;[38] or by a curator or guardian, unless expressly authorized by statute, as respects the property of the ward;[39] or by a receiver standing merely on the order

Legal title unnecessary.— The most notable instance of this erroneous doctrine is found in the view that a receiver, standing only on an order of a court authorizing him to sue, may sue in his own name in another state — for reasons of comity. See Iowa, etc., Land Co. v. Hoag, 132 Cal. 627, 64 Pac. 1073. In Henning v. Raymond, 35 Minn. 303, 29 N. W. 132, an action pending in Illinois, P was, by order of the Illinois court, appointed receiver with authority "to collect the outstanding debts." P sues in his own name in Minnesota to collect one of these debts. There is no statute in either Illinois or Minnesota authorizing a receiver to sue in his own name. It was held that P has a standing in the Minnesota court as trustee of an express trust. For contra doctrine see the following note. See also Receivers.

Trustee for the sole purpose of suit see Weaver v. Wabash, etc., Canal, 28 Ind. 112. Here a number of persons mutually promised to pay severally a certain sum for a designated purpose, the payment to be made to a committee of an association. It was further agreed that if any of the contracting parties failed to pay, an action on the agreement might be brought by P, who was not one of the contracting parties, nor a member of the association. In short, P was a third person empowered to sue for the convenience of the parties. It was held that P could sue as a trustee of an express trust. But see the later doctrine of the Indiana courts in Campbell v. Fichter, 168 Ind. 645, 81 N. E. 661. See, however, the remarks of Pollock (Williston Wald Pollock Contr. 216): "It is quite clear that the most express agreement of contracting parties cannot confer any right of action on the contract by a person who is not a party. Various devices of this kind have been tried in order to evade the difficulties that stand in the way of unincorporated associations enforcing their rights, but have always failed when attention was called to them. This has happened in the case of actions brought by the chairman for the time being of the directors of a company, by the directors for the time being of a company, by the purser for the time being of a cost-book company, and by the managers of a mutual marine insurance society."

38. Mitchell v. St. Mary, 148 Ind. 111, 115, 47 N. E. 224, holding that the treasurer of an association, to whom a note indorsed in blank had been transferred as a mere custodian of the paper, without the intention of vesting him with title to the note, cannot maintain his case as trustee of an express trust. Compare State v. Karr, 37 Ind. App. 120, 76 N. E. 780.

39. Dennison v. Willcut, 3 Ida. 793, 35 Pac. 698; Anderson v. Watson, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 509. In Dixon v. Cardozo, 106 Cal. 506, 507, 39 Pac. 857, H D, a plaintiff, became insane after the commencement of the action; his guardian, J D, was substituted as plaintiff, in an amended complaint entitled, "John R. Dixon, as guardian of the person and estate of H. S. Dixon, an insane person." It was held that the complaint was open to demurrer, of a foreign court.[40] And in the last case the rule is not affected by the fact that the receiver is expressly authorized, by the order of the foreign court appointing him, to sue outside the state of his appointment, has express leave from the local court to institute the suit, and alleges in his bill that there are no local creditors.[41]

(3) WHETHER AN "EXPRESS TRUST" MUST BE IN WRITING. It is occasionally suggested in the cases that the "express trust" of the code of civil procedure, even in its wider signification, as including the person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another, must be declared in writing.[42] But in permitting an action to be brought in the name of one "with whom a contract is made for the benefit of another," the codes do not in terms, or by reasonable intendment, require that the contract shall be in writing. On principle there appears to be no good reason for such a limitation in the law of parties to for plaintiff's appointment as guardian "did not vest the cause of action in him," and "it is not sufficient that the complaint states facts showing a cause of action in somebody; it must show a cause of action in the plaintiff, or a general demurrer will lie." In Campbell v. Fichter, 168 Ind. 645, 649, 81 N. E. 661, it was said: "It is clear, however, that the mere existence of the relationship of guardian and ward does not constitute the guardian of an infant the trustee of an express trust," per Gillett, J., reviewing the authorities. The reason for this, as pointed out by the court, is that "the title to the property of the ward does not pass to the guardian. He has its care and management only. His possession is that of an agent or attorney, not that of an assignee or trustee." In Webb v. Hayden, 166 Mo. 39, 50, 65 S. W. 760, Valliant, J., remarks: "A curator can not, in his own name as such, maintain a suit to recover money or property due or belonging to his ward. In this respect a curator differs from an administrator . . . for the purposes of administration, and by force of that title he may maintain a suit to recover assets of the estate. But no title vests in a curator, he has only the care and management of his ward's property; the title is in the ward."

Limitation.— The rule reaches its limitation when the guardian has title to the general property of the ward (see discussion in Perkins v. Stimmel, 114 N. Y. 359, 363, 21 N. E. 729, 11 Am. St. Rep. 659) or to the particular cause which the guardian is asserting. Thus, a guardian may sue in his own name on a note payable to himself, although the consideration paid for it was funds of the ward and the note was purchased by the guardian for the benefit of the ward. Ct. 787, 36 L. ed. 632, 637. Contra, for a different view prevailing in some cases see supra, note 34. See also RECEIVERS.

Limitation.— The reason for the rule ceases when the receiver, by statute or assignment, is clothed with a title. Bernheimer v. Converse, 206 U. S. 516, 534, 27 S. Ct. 755, where it is said: "In this case the statute confers the right upon the receiver, as a quasi assignee, and representative of the creditors."

41. Fowler v. Osgood, 141 Fed. 20, 72 C. C. A. 276. Here, in an action pending in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Iowa, F was appointed receiver and, by the order of the court appointing him, was authorized to institute and prosecute outside of the southern district of Iowa, in other courts of competent jurisdiction, such action or actions at law or suit or suits in equity as in the judgment of said receiver might be necessary or expedient to institute or prosecute in order to collect and reduce to his possession all such rights, debts, equitable interests, property and assets of said corporation so that the proceeds of the same might be applied to the payment of the debts of the said corporation. Thereafter, this receiver, upon leave granted, brought suit in the United States circuit court for the District of Colorado, alleging in his bill that there were no creditors in the jurisdiction of the forum. It was held that the receiver could not maintain his suit in Colorado. And see Hayward v. Leeson, 176 Mass. 310, 324, 57 N. E. 656, 49 L. R. A. 725. Here the the forum. It was held that the receiver appointed by that court to sue in the courts of Massachusetts "either in his own name as receiver or in the name of" his corporation. It was held that as this order did not operate as an assignment of the choses in action to the receiver he could not sue in his own name in Massachusetts. But see Hale v. Tyler, 104 Fed. 757.

42. See the definitions given in Weaver v. Wabash, etc., Canal, 28 Ind. 112, and Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389, 395. In State v. Hawes, 177 Mo. 360, 381, 76 S. W. 653, 657, the supreme court of Missouri applies directly to this provision of the code (Rev. St. (1899) §§ 540, 541) the provision of the Missouri Revised Statutes (Rev. St. (1899) § 3416) that "all declarations or creations of trust shall be manifested and actions, however important it may be in the law of trusts;[43] there is also good authority against the doctrine.[44]

(E) "Trustee of an Express Trust" and "Real Party in Interest." In a number of code states the legal title has been recognized by the courts as a sufficient, although not the necessary, test of the "real party in interest."[45] With the further recognition of the legal title as the test of a trustee of an express trust,[46] it follows that a person who is clothed with the full legal title to a given cause of action has a twofold character, in the doctrine of parties plaintiff under the codes; he is both the real party in interest and the trustee of an express trust.[47] It is possible that this result was not anticipated in the earlier doctrine of the codes;[48] but it may be more reasonable to interpret their provision permitting the trustee of an express trust to sue, as meaning that the legal owner may sue even when another's beneficial ownership is apparent on the face of the claim.[49] In this view the term "trustee of an express trust" would properly proved by some writing signed by the party who is, or shall be, by law enabled to declare such trusts, or by his last will, in writing, or else they shall be void."

43. See TRUSTS.

44. See cases cited infra, this note.

Express trusts by parol.— See the remarks of Sherwood, J., in Snider v. Adams Express Co., 77 Mo. 523, 526: "It is claimed by counsel for defendant that there is no express trust in this case, because such trust . . . cannot be proved by parol, and can only be manifested or proved by some writing. Whatever of truth there may be in this position regarding trusts as to realty, it is not true regarding personal property; for such property is not within the terms of the statute, and such trusts, consequently, may be declared and proved by parol." And see Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Ballard, 105 Ky. 253, 48 S. W. 1074, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1169 (where the contract sued upon by the trustee in his own name alone was a parol contract for the insurance of the workmen employed by the contracting party); Brown v. Cherry, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 635; Hays v. Galion Gas Light, etc., Co., 29 Ohio St. 330, 336 (where the court, however, evades the doctrine in part, through the suggestion that, although it did not affirmatively appear on the face of the notes or mortgage in suit that plaintiff was a trustee for the holders of the notes still it did not appear that he was not such trustee, or that "some other instrument in writing, properly executed, did not fully evidence the appointment of the trustee and define his duties"); Arcade Hotel Co. v. Wiatt, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 55, 57, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 34. In the last case a guest at a hotel deposited with the clerk a sum of money for safekeeping. The clerk fled with the money. On the hotel's refusal to reimburse the guest he sued in his own name for the whole sum. It appeared that the money was in his possession as trustee, and not in his own right. It was held that the action was properly brought in the name of the guest. The court said: "It is claimed . . . that to constitute an express trust, there must be an instrument in writing declaring the trust. But this is not required in this state."

It was held that the assignee was not only "the real party in interest" but entitled to sue as a "trustee of an express trust." Citizens Bank v. Corkings, 9 S. D. 614, 70 N. W. 1058, 62 Am. 48. See supra, I, B, 2, e, (III), (D), (4).

49. McLaughlin v. Deadwood First Nat. Bank, 6 Dak. 406, 43 N. W. 715. Here an agent of a corporation had deposited money with a bank in his own name as "agent." In holding that he could sue the bank in his own name for a balance alleged to be due on this account, the court, per Spencer, J., remarked: "Whether the word 'agent' is to be considered as mere description of the person, or as indicating that he is acting in a representative capacity for another, his right to maintain the action is not defeated. In the former instance, the promise was to him individually; and in the latter, the promise was to him, and with him, for the benefit of another, and necessarily involves a trust, and apply only to those cases in which the beneficial ownership is thus disclosed.[50] In other cases the person vested with the legal title can conveniently be classed as a "real party in interest."[51]

(v) Executor or Administrator—(a) At Common Law—(1) In General. Vested with the title to so much of the deceased's personal estate as survived his death,[52] an executor or administrator held the only remedial interest in respect to that estate which a court of law would recognize.[53] His right of action could not be transferred to another by any terms, however express, in the contract or obligation in suit.[54]

(2) Representative Character. The remedial interest of an executor or administrator did not always require that his pleading make a showing of his representative character. Such a showing, it is true, was imperative when his action was on a cause which had accrued wholly or in part in the lifetime of the deceased.[55] But when the cause of action arose wholly after the death of his decedent, the executor or administrator in suing for the assets of the estate might claim either in his representative character or in his personal character.[56]

(b) In Code Pleading—(1) In General. By the terms of the codes of civil procedure an executor or administrator is classed with the trustee of an express trust as a permissive or representative plaintiff, "who may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the suit is prosecuted."[57] The suggestion of the statute is that the beneficiary also may sue.[58] But in the main the result under the provisions of the code is very close to that reached at common law. The title to the surviving personal estate of the decedent is in his personal representative, and the action as a rule not only may, but must, be brought in his name.[59] As at common law also the personal representative must sue in his repre-

brings him within the purview of the statute. . . . The object of the legislature, by the enactment of these provisions, was evidently to preserve the right of action in all cases of express trusts; and this, whether the trust was declared in the instrument, or was necessarily to be inferred from it."

So, when a promise was made to the deceased for the exclusive benefit of a third person, the action upon it, under the settled common law in England, lay in the name of the executor or administrator of the promisee. See Dicey Parties 208.

55. Dicey Parties 216 et seq. So, if the contract was made with the deceased, whether broken before or after his death, the executor or administrator could sue only in his representative character. Dicey Parties 217.

The other representative plaintiff, in the original code, besides "the trustee of an express trust" is "the person expressly authorized by statute." See infra, I, B, 2, e, (v).

59. Ives v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 129 N. C. 28, 39 S. E. 631; and cases cited infra, under the following topic.

The remedial interest of the personal representative may extend to the realty of the deceased, as when he has devised land to the executor in trust, or when a statute gives an executor or administrator a right to the possession of the decedent's real estate as part of the assets. In the former case the personal representative is properly classed as a sentative character on causes which arose in the lifetime of his decedent, but may sue either in his representative or in his personal character on causes accruing since the death.[60]

(2) Remedial Interest of Beneficiary. Pleaders in code states have sometimes brought the action in the names of the beneficiaries of a decedent's personal estate, on the theory that they are the real parties in interest in getting in the assets of the estate, and therefore the proper plaintiffs under the code.[61] As a rule, however, the courts have refused to recognize these beneficiaries as real parties in interest within the meaning of the code.[62] However material his interest, the beneficiary of the personal estate has, in a normal case, no title which the court can recognize; at the most he is but an inchoate real party in interest.[63] Until his interest accrues he has no right of action.[64] But the rule is subject to this limitation: If, in the special circumstances of a case, the beneficiaries of the personal estate show an equitable title to a cause which normally belongs to the personal representative the courts of a code state may recognize them as real parties in interest.[65] The grounds for the exception are substantially those which have been established in equity procedure.[66] And in the civil action of the code, as in the suit in equity, if the beneficiaries sue instead of the personal representative, the facts which take the case out of the rule must appear in the complaint or petition, and all the beneficiaries must be parties.[67]

(vi) Person Expressly Authorized by Statute—(a) In General. With the "trustee of an express trust" and the "executor or administrator," the codes of civil procedure place also, as a third class of representative plaintiffs, "the person expressly authorized by statute" to sue.[68] Neither the codes nor the cases define the limits of this class. It includes evidently those public officers who, as such, are authorized by some statute to sue in their own names and official characters.[69] It may include also the holder of a private office, as the president or treasurer of a private association, whether incorporated or not, and whether formed for business or pleasure, who as such is authorized by statute, in the exercise of trustee of an express trust. See supra, I, B, 2, e, (iv). In the latter case he is rather "a person expressly authorized by statute to sue." See infra, I, B, 2, e, (vi). 65. Thus the heirs have been permitted to sue when they show that there are no debts of the estate, and no personal representative, and that the time for appointing a personal representative has passed. 69. The official character must appear by distinct allegation in the pleading. Atkinson his personal authority, to sue in his own name.[70] A private citizen, as a taxpayer, may sometimes sue by virtue of the enactment;[71] and sometimes the state may appear as plaintiff in a civil action, suing for the benefit of a private citizen.[72]

(B) Distinguishing Characteristic. The "person expressly authorized by statute" differs from other plaintiffs, and in particular from "trustees of an express trust" and executors or administrators, in that he needs no title under the substantive law to the cause of action which he sets up;[73] his right of action arises directly out of the remedial statute, and exists by virtue of it.[74]

(VII) GUARDIAN AS PLAINTIFF—(A) At Common Law. At common law a guardian, having no title to his ward's property, could not sue in respect to it in his own name alone, either individually or as guardian.[75]

(B) Under the Codes. Under the codes there has been a tendency in some courts to treat a guardian as a trustee of an express trust,[76] but the position is

73. See supra, I, B, 2, e, (IV), (V).

74. Illustration.—A New York statute provided that "any joint stock company or association, consisting of seven or more shareholders, or associates, may sue and be sued in the name of the president or treasurer for the time being." It was held that when a complaint alleged that the Forestville Division No. 411, Sons of Temperance, was an association composed of seven persons and upward, that the note in suit was given for the benefit of the association, that it was the property of the members of the association, and owned by them in common, the statement was sufficient to authorize an action in the name of the treasurer of the association for the time being, without making the associated parties or even naming them in the complaint. Tibbetts v. Blood, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 650, 654.

75. "At common law there was no warrant, nor authority for a suit by a guardian in his own name for the benefit of the infant, although he might disclose his fiduciary character and purpose. . . . At law the action must have been brought in the name of the party having the legal right. The guardian could of course sue upon contracts made with himself; but not generally, for property or money of the infant." Turner v. Alexander, 41 Ark. 254, 257, per Eakin, J. "A guardian can not sue at law or in chancery as plaintiff or complainant, in his own name alone, to recover the ward's estate from either an administrator or executor, or from a former guardian who may be removed from office, or from any other person who may have adverse possession of the ward's real or personal estate; the suit must be in the name of the infant entitled, by his guardian or prochein ami." McChord v. Fisher, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 193, 194, per Hise, J. And see Hoare v. Harris, 11 Ill. 24; Mee v. Fay, 190 Mass. 40, 76 N. E. 229; Lombard v. Morse, 155 Mass. 136, 137, 29 N. E. 205, 14 L. R. A. 273, where it is said: "The title to the property of the ward does not pass to the guardian. He has its care and management only. His position is that of an agent or attorney, not that of an assignee or trustee. . . . There is, therefore, no good reason for making a general exception allowing a guardian to sue in his own name, to avoid the deed of his insane ward; and there is the grave objection that, the ward not being a party, the decree would not bind him, should he recover his reason, nor those who would succeed to his estate upon his death."

That this common-law rule survives in the code states unless the guardian is expressly vested by statute with title or is expressly authorized by statute to sue in his own name see Campbell v. Fichter, 168 Ind. 645, 81 N. E. 661; Perine v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 48 Minn. 82, 50 N. W. 1022.

Y.) 157; Thomas v. Bennett, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 197; Bayer v. Phillips, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 425; Buermann v. Buermann, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 391; Hauenstein v. Kull, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 24. Compare Person v. Warren, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 488, discussing the analogous question whether a committee of a lunatic is a trustee of an express trust. The doctrine proceeds in part upon the supposition that the committee ac-untenable in principle, except when the guardian has been vested with some title or estate in the ward's property.[77] The decisions are not at one on what constitutes this title or interest in a general guardian.[78] A considerable number of the codes, however, expressly class the guardian with "trustees of an express trust," executors or administrators, and "persons expressly authorized by statute" as a representative plaintiff who may sue in his own name without joining his beneficiary.[79] The apparent legal effect of this is to permit the guardian to sue as a person expressly authorized by statute.[80]

3. REQUISITE OF CAPACITY TO SUE — a. Statement of Rule. In addition to a showing of legal entity,[81] and of remedial interest,[82] a plaintiff, to maintain his standing against a possible dilatory objection, must have a legal capacity to sue.[83]

b. What Meant by Capacity to Sue — (I) IN GENERAL. Although sometimes confused with the question of plaintiff's right of action,[84] the rule requiring a capacity to sue is of an essentially different nature.[85] Irrespective of the question whether plaintiff has title to a valid cause of action, it raises the question whether plaintiff, even if he has a right to relief in court, is under any personal disability — as insanity, infancy, coverture, or the like — which in legal effect impairs his right to come into court and there demand, in his own name alone, the presence of defendant.[86]

(II) DISTINGUISHED FROM RIGHT OF ACTION. It is sometimes said that the test of capacity to sue involves not only the question of personal disability in plaintiff but also the question of plaintiff's "title to the character in which he sues."[87] This, however, has no proper application to any question of plaintiff's right of action.[88] A plaintiff having a right of action may yet be without a quired some right to the ward's estate. See the remarks of Barker, J., in Lombard v. Morse, 155 Mass. 136, 137, 29 N. E. 205, 14 L. R. A. 273.

Suppl. 1000, where Patterson, J., remarks: "It is undoubtedly the rule that where a cause of action exists directly in favor of an infant, the action should be brought through a guardian ad litem; but there are cases, and this we think is one of them, in which the general guardian may sue as the trustee of an express trust."

78. Under a statute declaring that it shall be the duty of the guardian of a minor "to collect all debts due such ward," it has been held that a guardian may bring suit in his own name to collect such debts. Kinsley v. Kinsley, 150 Ind. 67, 70, 49 N. E. 819. But see Campbell v. Fichter, 168 Ind. 645, 81 N. E. 661.

On the other hand it has been held that a statute requiring every guardian to "demand, sue for, and receive all debts due his ward" does not permit an action in the name of the guardian. Perine v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 48 Minn. 82, 50 N. W. 1022. The statute, declared the court, is "merely a re-enactment of the common-law rule that a suit by an infant must be brought by his guardian. The statute does not say that the guardian shall bring suit in his own name." And see GUARDIAN AND WARD, 21 Cyc. 202.

There must be a present right of action in the person, but some want of capacity to sue." And see Ward v. Petrie, 157 N. Y. 301, 311, 51 N. E. 1002, 68 Am. 88. See cases cited infra, this note.

Illustrations.— P, administrator of B, sued D upon his promissory note to B. Defendant demurred upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and sought to sustain this demurrer by the objection that the complaint did not directly aver that B was dead or that P had been appointed her administrator. In support of his complaint P insisted that an objection that plaintiff sued in a personal capacity when he should have sued in a representative capacity was available only under a demurrer challenging his capacity to sue;[89] a plaintiff with capacity to sue may have no right of action.[90] The two things are essentially different in their natures, and in their results; the right of action is of the substance, the capacity to sue is necessary only as against a dilatory objection.[91] For the same reason an objection that plaintiff is not the real party in interest does not amount to an objection that plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue.[92] So, when the objection to plaintiff's legal capacity is properly made and sustained, a judgment dismissing the case on that ground is not a judgment upon the merits, and will not bar a future action.[93]

(III) Typical Instances. That plaintiff is without capacity to sue is a proper objection when an action is brought in his own name alone by an insane

legal capacity to sue. But the court was clear that if it appeared that plaintiff sued in his personal capacity to collect a debt due an estate, then the complaint "does not show a right of action in him, but in an administrator of such estate," and that this question was properly presented by a demurrer for want of facts. Toner v. Wagner, 158 Ind. 447, 449, 63 N. E. 859. A quo warranto was brought on the relation of B against M claiming as mayor. Under the procedure of the lex fori, quo warranto could be maintained either by the prosecuting attorney or by the person claiming the office. B was not the prosecuting attorney but was the previous incumbent of the office. On a rehearing it was objected that B could not hold over until his successor was qualified, and therefore could not bring quo warranto as claiming the office. B, however, insisted that if valid at all the objection was now too late, since it went to the question of his legal capacity to sue, and therefore should have been raised at the outset. It was held that a failure to state a cause of action in his own favor goes to the sufficiency in substance of the petition and not to plaintiff's legal capacity, and therefore could be raised at any stage. "The right of the relator to maintain the action depends upon his own right to the office. The statement of that right is essential to the statement of a cause of action." person,[94] or by an infant,[95] or, in some states still, by a married woman.[96] These classes are sometimes referred to as if they included all instances of disabilities to sue;[97] but the principle has been recognized in other connections,[98] as when a partnership sues in a collective name, under a permissive statute, without alleging compliance with certain statutory conditions;[99] when a foreign corporation sues upon a domestic cause of action, without alleging compliance with a statute prescribing the conditions upon which foreign corporations may do business within the state;[1] or when the action is brought in the name of an alien enemy.[2]

c. When Rule Applies. From the nature of legal capacity to sue, it is evident that the rule requiring it, unlike the rules requiring legal entity and remedial interest in plaintiff, is not a rule of the first instance. Plaintiff need make no affirmative showing of his legal capacity at the threshold of the case.[3] If in fact the capacity is lacking, the defect must be insisted upon, through proper pleading in due season, by defendant.[4]

II. WHO MAY BE A PARTY DEFENDANT.[5]

A. In General. That a court may recognize and hold a party as a defendant in a personal action, three things in the main are requisite: (1) The party defendant must have an entity which the court can recognize;[6] (2) defendant, in the eye of the law, must have infringed the right of action set up by plaintiff;[7] and (3) defendant must be amenable to the process of the trial court.[8]

B. Requisites Specifically Considered — 1. Requisite of Legal Entity — a. At Common Law — (I) Distinguished From Legal Entity of Plaintiff. For the most part the legal entity required for defendant is the same as the legal entity required for plaintiff.[9] Whether plaintiff or defendant, a party to a suit must be a person in law — a natural person, an artificial person, or a quasi-artificial person.[10] But the limits of the rule are less strictly drawn when the question concerns the party defendant than in the case of the party plaintiff. A firm or unincorporated association may sometimes be sued in its collective name, although it has no standing as plaintiff in this name.[11] So, while the civil death which attaches to a person as an incident of his conviction of an infamous crime destroys his right to sue,[12] it does not destroy the right of others to prosecute suits against him.[13] And while an action cannot be brought in the name of an inanimate thing as plaintiff,[14] it may sometimes be brought against an inanimate thing as a defendant.[15]

(II) Typical Instances. The principle has an important application in actions against partnerships, societies, clubs, and other unincorporated associations. In the absence of a specific statute to the contrary, the rule stands, at common law and under the codes, that an unincorporated association is not recognized as having a legal existence apart from its members.[16] The action lies against the members individually,[17] but not against the unincorporated association in its collective capacity and name.[18] There is no such entity known to the law as an unincorporated association, and consequently it cannot be made a party defendant.[19] Nor is the court bound to recognize an unincorporated association as a legal entity capable of being sued, merely because the statute of another state permits it to be sued in the association name,[20] or because, under the lex fori, an action may be brought against an officer of the association as such;[21] or because the members of the association, or some of its officers, are made parties along with the association.[22]

b. Statutory Modifications — (i) In General. The common-law rule noticed above,[23] as to the proper party defendant in actions against unincorporated associations, was too rigid for practical purposes in the conditions of modern life.[24] To prevent a failure of justice the courts of equity adopted a modified doctrine, which permitted a suit to be brought against some of the members of a numerous unincorporated association as representative of themselves and all others having the same interest.[25] The later tendency has been to relax the rule through specific statutory enactments which either expressly or impliedly impose upon unincorporated associations, or some of them, a liability to be sued in a collective name.[26]

Power to enact and validity.—Although the natural person and the corporation are the only entities known to the common law who can be sued, it is competent to the legislature to give to an association of individuals, which is neither a corporation nor an individual, a quasi-personality, and with it to impose a liability of being sued as if the unincorporated association were a person. See the reasoning of Farwell, J., in Taff Vale R. Co. v. Amalgamated R. Servants Soc., [1901] 1 K. B. 170, 175, 70 L. J. K. B. 219, 83 L. T. Rep. N. S. 474, 49 Wkly. (II) Express. For the most part, where this statutory modification of the common-law rule exists at all it is found in the form of a specific enactment permitting a suit to be brought against an unincorporated association in its firm or association name.[27] The scope of the enactment varies greatly. It may be so wide as to reach nearly every instance of the unincorporated association.[28] It may reach only unincorporated associations engaged in business enterprises.[29] It

Heater Co. v. Iron Molders' Union of North America, 129 Mich. 354, 362, 88 N. W. 889. A Michigan statute of 1897 provided "that whenever any unincorporated voluntary association, club, or society shall be formed in this State, composed of five members or more, having some distinguishing name, actions at law or in chancery may be brought by or against such association, club, or society by the name by which it is known: Provided, that this act shall not take away the right of the litigant to proceed against all the members of such association, club, or society, if such litigant shall so elect to proceed." In an action against a labor union in its collective name, it was contended by defendant that this statute was beyond the constitutional limits of legislation. Can the law-making power, it was asked by defendant, "authorize suits to be maintained against nothing?" "This law," it was claimed, "does not give these associations, clubs, or societies any legal standing, nor make them persons or legal entities." The court held the act constitutional. "The law," said Moore, J., delivering the opinion, "deals with conditions as they exist. It recognized that there may be unincorporated voluntary associations, clubs, and societies in this State which do or may do things which make it desirable for them to have the right to bring actions at law or in chancery, and also that it may be necessary or desirable to make them defendants in an action at law or a proceeding in chancery. . . . Any rule or regulation in regard to the remedy which does not, under pretense of modifying or regulating it, take away or impair the right itself, cannot be regarded as beyond the proper province of legislation," referring to Cooley Const. may apply to partnerships or associations "formed for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business in this state, or holding property therein." [30] Although these statutes do not convert an unincorporated association into a corporation,[31] they have the effect, to the extent to which they apply, of enabling the court to recognize the unincorporated association as a legal person, distinct from its members.[32] But it is only as the association comes within the scope of the statute that it can be so recognized.[33] And in some American cases it has been held that this statutory permission is in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed.[34]

(III) Implied. The common-law rule that natural persons and corporations are the only entities known to the law as capable of being sued can be modified not only by express enactment,[35] but also by statutory implication.[36] What suffices for this modification by implication is a more difficult question, which has given rise to some conflict of judicial opinion.[37] "If the Legislature," it has been shortly said, "has created a thing which can own property, which can employ servants, and which can inflict injury, it must be taken . . . to have impliedly given the power to make it suable in a Court of Law for injuries purposely done by its authority and procurement." [38]

I am clearly of opinion that these and the provisions generally of the statutes imply a liability on the society to be sued in its trade union name, and a privilege of thus suing." Compare Karges Furniture Co. v. Amalgamated Woodworkers Local Union No. 131, 165 Ind. 421, 75 N. 40. When the question concerns the joinder of defendants the rule is subject to various modifications. See infra, IV.

41. Pollock Contr. 198 note, where it is said: "Contracts for the sale of land are enforceable in equity by and against the heirs and devisees of the parties. But here the obligation is treated as attached to the particular party."

"infringed upon the right in respect of which the action is brought."[42] The form which this infringement may take is as varied as the body of substantive obligations at law and in equity.[43]

b. Applications of Rule — (I) In Actions on Contract. If the action is based upon a contract, whether plaintiff seeks damages for its breach or sues for its specific performance, the only proper sole defendant is the person who, in the eye of the law, is the promisor, or his representatives.[44] The test is not the existence of an interest in the subject-matter of the contract, but of a contractual obligation.[45]

(II) In Actions For Tort. In an action based on a tort defendant is the person who, in the eye of the law, is the cause of the grievance complained of by plaintiff.[46]

42. Dicey Parties, Rule 7.

"As the ground of an action is always an interference with some right of the person aggrieved, every plaintiff must, in order to support his case, prove that his rights have been interfered with, by showing that the defendant has by his acts or omissions either broken a contract made with the plaintiff, i. e. violated a right which the plaintiff had acquired by an agreement with the defendant, or interfered with some right of the plaintiff, existing independently of any contract." Dicey Parties 30.

43. It follows that the application of the principle in the selection of the party defendant, turning as it does upon distinctions of substantive law, yields only the most general rules of procedure.

44. When an obligation is founded upon a real contract, the assent to be bound "is at the root of the matter and indispensable." "No person can be sued for a breach of contract who is not a party to the contract." Dicey Parties 223.

In the case of a contract under seal, the "party to the contract" was the covenantor. See the illustrations in Dicey Parties 229, 230.

In simple contracts the "party to the contract" is "the person who promises or who allows credit to be given to him." Dicey Parties 225.

Implied contract.—In legal theory the term includes also the person upon whom the law imposes the obligation of an "implied contract." "Difficulties frequently occur in deciding who should be made defendant in an action upon a promise created or implied by law from a particular state of facts. In this case it must be ascertained who is the party subject to the legal liability; for he is the person who should be sued." Chitty Pl. 39.

45. At one time there was some authority in equity procedure for holding as defendant a person interested in the subject-matter of an award but a stranger to its promise. Govett v. Richmond, 7 Sim. 1, 40 Rev. Rep. 56, 8 Eng. Ch. 1, 58 Eng. Reprint 737. But the doctrine is discarded in later decisions, which refuse to recognize such a person as a proper party defendant. See Tasker v. Small, 5 L. J. Ch. 321, 3 Myl. & C. 63, 68, 14 Eng. Ch. 63, 40 Eng. Reprint 848, 6 Sim. 625, 9 Eng. Ch. 625, 58 Eng. Reprint 728, 45 Rev. Rep. 212, 215, where the principle was thus stated by Lord Chancellor Cottenham: "It is not disputed, that, generally, to a bill for a specific performance of a contract of sale, the parties to the contract only are the proper parties; and, when the ground of the jurisdiction of courts of equity in suits of that kind is considered, it could not properly be otherwise. The court assumes jurisdiction in such cases, because a court of law, giving damages only for the non-performance of the contract, in many cases does not afford an adequate remedy. But, in equity, as well as at law, the contract constitutes the right, and regulates the liabilities of the parties; and the object of both proceedings is to place the party complaining as nearly as possible in the same situation as the defendant had agreed that he should be placed in. It is obvious that persons, strangers to the contract, and, therefore, neither entitled to the right, nor subject to the liabilities which arise out of it, are as much strangers to a proceeding to enforce the execution of it as they are to a proceeding to recover damages for the breach of it."

Stranger procuring breach of contract.—In some jurisdictions an action may be brought against a stranger to a contract, for procuring its breach, but the action is a tort. See Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216, 17 Jur. 827, 22 L. J. Q. B. 463, 1 Wkly. Rep. 432, 75 E. C. L. 216, and the development of its doctrine in America. 46. "Any person who causes an injury to another is liable to be sued by the person injured." Dicey Parties, Rule 97 et seq.

"In personal or mixed actions, in form ex delicto, the person committing the injury, either by himself or his agent, is in general to be made the defendant." Chitty Pl. 86 et seq.

Not limited to principal or agent.—The person causing the injury is not always limited strictly to the principal or his agent. 3. Amenable to Process of Trial Court — a. Statement of Rule. As a rule any one who is a person in law[47] may be made a defendant in a civil action.[48]

b. What Persons Are Exempt. To this rule, however, there is an important class of exceptions, of no less consequence now than formerly.[49] A foreign sovereign cannot be made a defendant against his will;[50] a state cannot be sued in its own courts, either directly or indirectly, without its consent.[51] The rule has a wide and liberal application. Not only are the direct representatives of the state or foreign sovereign, as ambassadors, ministers, and other public officers, included;[52] but the state or foreign sovereign cannot be held as defendant through indirection, by process against property,[53] even when the property has the aspect of a corporation.[54]

c. Consent to Process. This immunity, however, may be waived;[55] but the Defendant on the record was the Intercolonial Railway of Canada. Defendant made no appearance, but a member of the Massachusetts bar, as amicus curiæ, suggested the dismissal of the action. It being shown to the court that the so-called defendant was the property of the king of England, and not a corporation, and was operated through his government for the public purposes of Canada, it was held that the action must be dismissed.

55. See remarks of Kay, L. J., in Mighell v. Sultan of Johore, [1894] 1 Q. B. 149, 162.

courts construe any alleged waiver with some strictness.[56] The fact that the foreign sovereign was personally living within the jurisdiction of the court, ostensibly in the capacity and with the name of a private individual, does not per se waive his exemption.[57] In a claim against a state the mere presence of a constitutional provision declaring that suits may be brought against the state in such manner and in such courts as the legislature may by law direct is not a sufficient warrant for making the state or its public officer a defendant.[58] And when the state, through proper legislative enactment, has consented to be sued in certain courts, or in a certain manner, it cannot be made a defendant by a suit filed in another court or in a different manner.[59]

III. JOINDER OF PLAINTIFFS.[60]

A. Remedial Interest. As the sole plaintiff must have and show a remedial interest in the cause of action which he asserts,[61] so also it is a primary rule in the joinder of plaintiffs that each co-plaintiff must have an interest which the trial court can recognize and enforce,[62] and must disclose this interest in the record.[63] The test here, as in the case of the sole plaintiff, is ultimately one of a right of

"For the purposes of my judgment," said Lord Esher, M. R., "I must assume that the Sultan of Johore came to this country and took the name of Albert Baker, and that the plaintiff believed that his name was Albert Baker, and I will go so far as to assume for the present purpose that he deceived her by pretending to be Albert Baker, and then promised to marry her, and that he broke his promise." It was held by the court of appeal that "the Courts of this country have no jurisdiction over an independent foreign sovereign, unless he submits to jurisdiction," that "such submission cannot take place until the jurisdiction is invoked," and therefore that "the fact that a foreign sovereign has been residing in this country, and has entered into a contract here, under an assumed name, as if a private individual, does not amount to a submission to the jurisdiction, or render him liable to be sued for breach of such contract."

action — of a title, in some form, to the cause of action asserted,[64] and not one of mere beneficial interest in the outcome of the suit.[65] The rule holds at common law, in equity, and under the codes, but with material distinctions in its application, according as the question arises under one system or the other.[66]

B. In Common-Law Pleading — 1. Test of Joint or Several Interest — a. In General. The rule governing the joinder of plaintiffs in a common-law action turned on the distinction between joint and several interest.[67] Whether the action arose from a contract or from a tort, if defendant was legally answerable to two or more jointly they should all, at common law, join as plaintiffs in the action,[68] unless a valid excuse for the non-joinder appears on the face of the pleading.[69] The interest, being joint, existed as an entirety; and one person ought not to be allowed to sue alone for the whole of that of which he is entitled only to a part.[70] The right of action was in the promisees collectively, and only so;[71] no agreement between the promisees enabled them to sue separately.[72] On the other hand, when the interests were several, there could as a rule be no joinder, even when the rights of all the plaintiffs had been violated by one and the same wrongful act on the part of defendant,[73] or had arisen ex contractu out of one and the same transaction with defendant.[74]

Death of a joint obligee. The principle had a striking application in the case of the death of a joint obligee. In the absence of an enabling statute, his personal representative cannot join with the survivor, but the latter must sue alone; for at common law the remedial interest rests exclusively in the survivor. "The remedy survives in favor of the surviving obligees in all cases, notwithstanding the right to the thing recovered may descend pro rata to the representatives of the decedents or deceased." Thus the death of one of the joint owners will excuse his non-joinder for on his death his interest survives to the others. See supra, III, A.

But a refusal by one joint owner to join as plaintiff will not excuse, at common law; for his name can be used by the other joint owners. See Sweigart v. Berk, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 308.

b. In Assignments by Joint Owners. As a chose in action, in the theory of common-law procedure, was not assignable, the fact that a joint promisee or joint owner had transferred his interest did not affect the rule of joinder; the action must still be brought in the name of all, even when the transfer was to one of their number.[75]

c. Device When a Joint Owner Refused to Join. If one of the several owners of a joint interest refused to join as a plaintiff, the common-law procedure, reverting to the device of "nominal and use plaintiffs,"[76] permitted the other owners to use his name as a co-plaintiff.[77]

d. Severance of a Joint Interest. An interest which exists at first in two or more jointly may be severed, either through the concurring act of all the parties,[78] or through the act of defendant in settling pro rata with one of the joint owners or joint promisees.[79] When this occurs, the fact will serve, at least in some jurisdictions, as a valid excuse for a non-joinder.[80]

2. In Actions Ex Contractu — a. Persons With Whom Contract Was Made — (i) In General. At common law an action to recover damages for the breach of a contract must be brought in the name of all those with whom, in the eye of the law, the contract in suit was made,[81] unless it appears that the omitted prom-of assumpsit against H. It was held that the contracts were separate; and plaintiffs were accordingly nonsuited. Smith v. Hunt, 2 Chit. 142, 18 E. C. L. 553. And see Brand v. Boulcott, 3 B. & P. 235.

75. Jarman v. Howard, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 383. In this case a promise was made to three; one transferred his interest to the other two; defendant had complete knowledge of the fact and promised to pay the two, who thereafter sued in their own names alone upon the original promise. It was held that the action on their promise was maintainable only in the names of the three promisees. See also Assignments, 4 Cyc. 1.

The principle continues under the code if the right is not assignable. See Zabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 322, 64 Am. Dec. 551, where one partner assigned to the other members of the firm his right of action for damages caused by a false and fraudulent representation of the solvency of a vendee. On the theory that this right is not assignable under the code, it was held that the assigning partner was a necessary party to the action.

Wilson had no right to compromise the suit, and dismiss it, without the consent of his co-plaintiffs. In Baker v. Jewell, 6 Mass. 460, 4 Am. Dec. 162, plaintiff sued alone; defendant pleaded in abatement that the promise was made to plaintiff jointly with one B, and not to the plaintiff alone; plaintiff replied that B had sued defendant for the damage sustained by B and recovered a judgment. On demurrer it was held that defendant in permitting B to proceed alone had agreed to a severance and could not now object to P suing alone.

81. Scott v. Godwin, 1 B. & P. 67, 73, where Eyre, C. J., said: "I take it to have been solemnly adjudged in several cases, and to be the known received law, that one co-covenantee, one co-obligee, or one joint contractor by parol, cannot sue alone." And see remark of Bowen, L. J., in Hannay v. Smurthwaite, [1893] 2 Q. B. 412, 422, 63 L. J. Q. B. 41, 69 L. T. Rep. N. S. 677, 42

isee is dead or that there has been a valid severance.[82] And at common law a contract could not be so framed as in legal effect to be made with the same persons both jointly and severally.[83] The contract was either a contract with all the promisees or covenantees collectively, or it was with each of them separately.[84]

(II) Special Features. It was not decisive of the question of joinder if the contract in suit was in fact made by one of those with whom, in point of law, it was deemed to be made;[85] or that one of the covenantees had not in fact signed the contract.[86] Nor was it material that the whole benefit of the contract would Illustrations.—A bond was executed to "Miers Reynolds & Son." In an action by Miers Reynolds evidence of the bond was objected to because the action was not in the name of "Miers Reynolds & Son." The objection was sustained and plaintiff took a nonsuit. Reynolds v. Grier, 7 Houst. (Del.) 329, 32 Atl. 172. P, a partner of a manufacturing house in Scotland and their agent for exporting goods to America, consigned carpets to a commission merchant in Boston, by whom they were sold to D. An action in the name of P alone was brought to recover the price. The court, under the general issue, ordered a nonsuit, because of the nonjoinder of the other owners of the goods, observing that the action should have been in the names of all the owners or in the name of the agent who made the contract. Exch. 330, 14 M. & W. 559, 573, per Parke, B. But "it may well be that what would appear to an ordinary reader but one covenant, is in fact two covenants; e. g., first, a joint covenant with A. and B., and next a separate covenant with A. and B., separately." Dicey Parties 111.

Contrasted with rule as to promisors.—The rule as to promisees is to be contrasted with the rule as to promisors. The latter, by one and the same contract, could make themselves both jointly and severally liable, but they could not by the same contract give the promisees both joint and several rights of action. "Thus, X. and Y. may covenant with A., so as to enable A. on the same covenant to sue either X. and Y. jointly, or X. and Y. separately. But X. can not covenant with A. and B. so as to enable them to bring on the same covenant, at choice, either a joint action in the names of A. and B., or separate actions in the name of A. or of B." For example, L, a member of an orchestra, signed the following proposal: "The gentlemen of the orchestra . . . are willing, and hereby pledge themselves, to continue their services . . . provided Mr. Beale will guaranty the payment of the thirteen nights due on the 15th ultimo (Signed, on behalf of the gentlemen of the orchestra)." B accepted the proposal, as "made by Mr. Lucas on behalf of the gentlemen of the orchestra." It was held that the contract, although actually made by L alone, was not in legal effect with L alone, but with L and the other members of the orchestra, and therefore that all the members must join in an action for the breach of the contract. L. 165, where in covenant against the executors of A B, plaintiff declared that A B covenanted with him and two others that his executors, etc., should pay to them an annuity for the use of a third person, and averred that the other two never sealed the deed, and it was held, on demurrer, that it was a general rule that all joint covenantees or obligees must sue, and that as it did not appear that any of the covenantees had not assented to the deed, although they did not seal it, the declaration was bad. In Smith v. Kerr, 3 N. Y. 144, 148, Jewett, C. J., said: "The defendants covenanted with the three plaintiffs, and if it was admitted that one of them, Abner Potter, did not sign or seal the instrument, the law would not convert it into a covenant with the other two. All the covenantees must sue, although they did not all sign and seal the agreement. . . .

go to some only of those with whom the contract was made;[87] that the payment required by the contract was to be made to one of the expressed promisees;[88] that after the contract was made but before it was formally signed one of the contracting parties had parted with his interest in it to the other;[89] or that a contract made with two jointly contemplated an ultimate severance in the results, as between the promisees.[90] If the promise was in legal effect a promise made with two or more, one of them could not sue alone without showing some special title.[91]

b. Characteristic of "Person With Whom Contract Was Made" — (i) In Contracts Under Seal. If the contract sued upon is a covenant, the persons with whom, in the eye of the law, it was made are those, and only those, with whom the contract is expressed by the deed to be made.[92] But to be expressed in the deed as a party, it was not necessary as a rule that one appear as formally signing or sealing the instrument.[93] Nor is it necessary, at least in the later view of the common law,[94] that a party be designated by name among the covenantees; it is enough if the class to which he belongs is clearly described as among the parties.[95]

(ii) In Simple Contracts. If the contract in suit was not under seal, the earlier technical rule at common law looked to those from whom the consideration proceeded, and to them alone, as the persons with whom the contract was made.[96] To this rule, however, there were several admitted exemptions at common

In this case A, B, and C agreed with D and with each other that they would enter into the Chinese trade, A, B, and C furnishing the capital to send two ships a year, and D furnishing his services in selling the goods in China, and investing the proceeds in return cargoes. The proceeds from sales in China were to be divided there and the share of each partner, estimated in proportion to his share without regard to the existing state of the partnership accounts, was to be invested for him on separate account, in Chinese goods, separately invoiced and consigned to him. It was held that A, B, and C could join in a suit against D to recover money had and received by him to their use. "It is clear," said Gibson, C. J., "that several actions could not be maintained on the special contract, as it was made with the plaintiffs jointly . . . what matters it, then, that the proceeds were to be divided at Canton, and the share of each partner separately consigned to him without waiting for a settlement of the partnership accounts? That arrangement was a matter betwixt the partners themselves, and for their private convenience." In the case of Vaux v. Draper, Style 203, 82 Eng. Reprint 646, it appeared that defendant, in consideration of £10 paid by plaintiffs to defendant had promised plaintiffs to procure certain cattle of plaintiffs which had been taken from them by a third person to be redelivered to plaintiffs by such a time. In an action for a breach of this promise, defendant objected that "[the plaintiffs] ought to have brought two several actions, in regard that the promise upon which the action was founded was not an entire promise, but was a several promise made to each of the plaintiffs." It was held, by a divided court, that the action could be maintained as brought. And see Vaux v. Steward, Style 156, 82 Eng. Reprint 607.

law;[97] and in some jurisdictions the general principle was largely qualified in favor of permitting the action in the names of the promisees as such, irrespective of any question whether the consideration moved from them.[98] On the other hand, if the promisees are not expressed, by name or sufficient class description, the law, reverting to the older technical rule, declares that the promise is made to the persons from whom the consideration proceeded.[99]

c. Contracts Joint in Form, Several in Effect. It does not follow that because defendant has contracted at one time and in one instrument with two or more, he has contracted with them jointly; although the terms are joint, the legal effect of the transaction may be a several contract with each.[1] The rule of joinder follows

Civ. Code, § 3664.

Illustration.— In Cabot v. Haskins, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 83, 91, the promise was to A, B, and C, upon a consideration moving from them and D, who, however, was no party to the promise. It was held that the action could be maintained by A, B, and C, without joining D. "We think it immaterial," said the court, "from whom the consideration, if it be a sufficient foundation for a valid promise, passed."

This case is sometimes treated as if the promisee was expressed; in fact only the beneficiary was expressed. 1. See cases cited infra, this note.

Illustrations.— In Ford v. Bronaugh, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 14, 15, F and S covenanted with D to build him a house, consisting of a front building and an ell, on the completion of which D bound himself to pay to F and S seven hundred and fifty dollars, "it being the sum agreed on by the parties for the above named work, four hundred and fifty dollars due to the said Ford when the work of the front is complete, and the rest due to Shanklin when the work of the ell is complete." Upon this contract F sued in his own name alone, for the four hundred and fifty dollars due him on completion of the front of the building. It was held that the action was properly brought. "If the provision for payment," said the court, "had stopped with the stipulation to pay $750 on completion of the work as previously described, the necessary construction would have been that the covenant was to pay the entire sum to both builders jointly and only upon completion of the entire work. They must have therefore sued jointly for the price, and must have averred and proved the completion of both parts of the building. But this general covenant to pay $750 on completion of the whole work, is explained and materially qualified by the words immediately following, which divide the work and the price, and create or show a separate interest in the covenantees in the different parts of the price. Instead, therefore, of there being one entire debt or duty due to both jointly, or only one entire duty due to one of the builders, there are two distinct duties or payments, one of which is due upon a certain condition to one of them, and the other upon a different condition to the other. In such a case the rule or the exception to a more general rule is expressly and well settled, 'that although the covenant be in its terms joint (as with A and B to pay them £10 each), yet the distinct interest of each in a separate subject matter shall attract to each covenantee, an exclusive right of action in regard to his own particular damage.'" Per Marshall, C. J., citing 1 Chitty Pl. (ed. 1833) 11. In Carter v. Carter, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 424, 431, H and G signed the same subscription paper, by the terms of which they agreed to pay the nature of the interest; where the interest of the covenantees is several they may maintain separate actions, although the language of the covenant be joint.[2] But when a covenant is in its terms expressly and positively joint, the tendency is to regard the interest as joint so far as defendant is concerned, and to require that the covenantees join in the action, although, as between themselves, their interest is several.[3]

d. Contracts Several in Form, Joint in Effect. By the same showing, when the contract is in terms several, or joint and several, but its legal effect is to create a joint interest in the promisees, they must all, if living, join in the action.[4]

3. In Actions Ex Delicto — a. Flexibility of Common-Law Rule. When the action sounded in tort, the common-law rule as to the joinder of plaintiffs was less rigid than in actions on contract.[5] For a contract with A and B jointly was, in the theory of the common law, a different thing from a contract with A alone;[6] but a tort to A was no less an injury to him because it was an injury to A and B jointly.[7] Where a tort has been done, the tort is a separate tort to each

D the sums written opposite their names, provided he would cause a normal school to be established in a certain town. H and G paid D the amounts of their subscriptions, each in the sum of two hundred dollars, and D gave a receipt which set forth that the four hundred dollars was received of H and G in payment of a subscription made by them to encourage the establishment of a seminary. D failed to establish the school, and H brought assumpsit to recover the two hundred dollars which he had paid. It was objected that G should have joined in the suit. It was held that the action was properly brought. The court said, per Shaw, C. J.: "Had this payment been made on account of a joint debt, this [objection] would have been a good ground of defence. But the nature and effect of this payment must be ascertained, by those of the debt. The payment is on account of their subscriptions, which were several. . . . We are therefore of opinion, that the payment must be taken to have been made for account of each separately, and therefore that the plaintiff may maintain his action severally, to recover the amount paid for his account." In Woodward v. Sherman, 52 N. H. 131, A, B, and C intrusted a horse dealer with one horse each, belonging to them individually. The horse dealer sold the three horses together to D, on credit, for six hundred and fifty dollars, no separate price being made for either horse in the trade. A, B, and C afterward joined in an assumpsit against D. It was held that the action could not be maintained. In Gray v. Johnson, 14 N. H. 414, it is held that if a lessee covenants with several lessors jointly that he will pay to each lessor severally a specified proportion of the rent, although the covenant be in terms joint, the interest of each lessor will be several and each may maintain a separate action for his part of the rent. L. 123, where the court further remarks: "Looking only to the language of the covenant in this case, it would appear to be a joint covenant; but the interest of the covenantees is several, each of them having a distinct interest in the annuity payable to him."

4. Capen v. Barrows, 1 Gray (Mass.) 376, 379, where Metcalf, J., said: "It is a settled rule of construction, that when the legal interest in a covenant and in the cause of action thereon is joint, the covenant is joint, although it may, in its terms, be several or joint and several." "If A conveys land to B and C jointly, and covenants with both and each of them, thus making the covenant joint and several, that he is well seised, etc., B and C must join in an action on the covenant. For when the interest of the covenantees is joint, the right of recovery is so." Gould Pl. c. 4, § 108.

5. Dicey Parties 11, where it is said: "In an action on contract, all the persons with whom the contract is (in the eye of the law) made, should join as plaintiffs, since A. cannot recover damages for the breach of a contract made with A. and B. In an action for tort, on the other hand, it is frequently a matter of choice whether the persons injured should sue separately or jointly, and in any case the non-joinder of a plaintiff is a matter of comparatively small importance. For if, in such an action, where A. and B. ought to sue jointly, A. sues alone, he may, it is true, be forced (by a plea in abatement) to join B. with him. But if the non-joinder of B. is not objected to at the proper stage of the proceedings before the trial, A., though it may appear that B. ought to have been joined, will recover damages in proportion to the injury which he himself has suffered, and no objection can be taken to the subsequent action by B. alone for the injury which B. has sustained."

6. "It is an answer to an action by A. that the contract sued upon was a contract, not with A., but with A. and B." Dicey Parties 11. Hence in an action on contract, a non-joinder of plaintiffs was, unless amended, a fatal error. Dicey Parties 502.

7. "If A. sues alone for an injury, e. g., man who complains,[8] whether the injury be to a joint interest or to a several interest of the complainant.

b. Tort to a Joint Interest. If the injury was to the joint interest of two or more, all were bound, at least as against a dilatory objection, to join as plaintiffs.[9] It was not necessary that the interest of each plaintiff should be of the same degree or kind in order to permit a joinder.[10]

c. Tort to a Several Interest With Joint Damage. It was early established at common law, by decisions, the modern bearing of which has been distinctly recognized,[11] that persons with separate interests, and who therefore might sue severally, may join in an action ex delicto if they have sustained a joint damage.[12] And so, although tenants in common could not join in real actions or in ejectment, yet in personal actions, in which damages only are recoverable,[13] they might join because, although their estates are several, yet the damages survive to all, and it would be unreasonable when the damage is thus entire to bring several actions for a single trespass.[14] to the joint property of A. and B. (though it may be possible by proper pleading to compel A. to join B. with him as plaintiff), it is no answer to the action by A. for the injury to him that the tort committed was a tort against A. and B. jointly." Dicey Parties 11. Hence in an action for tort a nonjoinder of plaintiffs gave rise only to a plea in abatement. Dicey Parties 507.

Thus partners generally and the joint owners of a chattel could join in an action for an injury to their common property. Dicey Parties 382.

When two joint owners of a sum of money, traveling together on the highway, were robbed of the money, they were permitted to join in an action against the hundred. Coryton v. Lithebye, 2 Saund. 112. And see Glover v. Austin, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 209.

Accordingly, although a slander of two or more does not ordinarily warrant a joint action at common law (see the following note), yet when the defamatory words were spoken of two partners respecting their trade, they might join in an action to recover their joint damage because of the slander. 10. Russell v. Stocking, 8 Conn. 237, where several persons joined in an action of trespass for entering upon their fishery; it appearing that some of the plaintiffs had an absolute title to the fishery and others were in possession under a parol agreement, defendants insisted that the latter could not join in the suit and it was held that the action was properly brought; for possession, even of incorporeal property is sufficient title against a wrong-doer.

12. Thus, in the elaborately argued case of Weller v. Baker, 2 Wils. C. P. 414, 423, the case of the dippers at Tunbridge Wells, it was held that all the dippers, and their husbands, might join in trespass on the case, against one who exercised the office of dipper without being duly appointed; "for although the dippers are severally entitled to receive for their own several use such voluntary gratuities as the nobility and gentry are pleased to give them respectively, yet with regard to a stranger's disturbing them in their employment, they are all jointly concerned. . . . It is a tort as done to them all." See also Hunt v. Holton, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 216.

So in the earlier case of Coryton v. Lithebye, 2 Saund. 112, 116, C and H, two several owners of certain mills, sued a tenant of the manor, who, as such, must grind at these mills or one of them, because he had ground elsewhere, whereby plaintiffs had lost certain tolls. Defendant demurred "because both the plaintiffs had joined in an action. But Chief Justice Hale and all the court were "of opinion, that they might well join in the action, for though their interests are several, yet the not grinding at any of their mills is an entire joint damage to both the plaintiffs for which they shall have their joint action." See also on this point the note to this case in 2 Saund. 116*a* note 2.

J., remarks: "In personal actions tenants in common must join, and also parceners, when damages are to be recovered for a tort done to their lands, although the estate in the lands be several. Co. Lit. 198. The rule by which joinders in actions are governed is stated in the case of Weller v. Baker, 2 Wils. C. P. 414, as extending to all cases where the damages to be recovered are joint. The same rule is also laid down in the case of Coryton v. Lithebye, 2 Saund. 112. Thus tenants in common must join in trespass, and also in nuisance [That the joinder is

d. Tort to a Several Interest With Separate Damage. But if two or more persons had several interests and sustained separate damage from defendant's violation of these rights, they could not at common law join as plaintiffs.[15]

C. In Code Pleading — 1. Terms of the Statute. The provisions of the New York code of 1848 relating to the joinder of plaintiffs were copied in many other codes, with little change in the language and none in the substance. After the lapse of more than sixty years the words of the original statute still stand as the accepted form of the enactment in most of the states.[16]

2. Scope of Code Provision — a. When Plaintiffs Are United in Interest. When, under the substantive law of a code state, two or more are united in interest as joint promisees in a contract or as joint owners of property, real or personal, the theory of code procedure follows, in the main, the theory of common-law procedure; the joint interest is looked upon as a unit and can be asserted only in the names of all its owners, as parties to the action.[17] permissible see 1 Chitty Pl. 75]. But they cannot join in an action for forging false deeds, for that concerns the inheritance, which is several." It was held that tenants in common had properly joined in an action in the case for the destruction of the title deeds. So, while tenants in common could not join in a real action of waste to recover the place wasted, they could join in a personal action of tort in the nature of waste to recover the damages. Bullock v. Hayward, 10 Allen (Mass.) 460. And see Decker v. Livingston, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 479; Austin v. Hall, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 286, 7 Am. Dec. 376 (marking the distinction in the rule when tenants in common brought debt for rent against their tenant, and when they were joined in an avowry for the rent, since "the avowry savors of the realty"); Porter v. Bleiler, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 149.

15. "For an assault, false imprisonment, and generally for all injuries to the person, each person injured must sue separately." Dicey Parties 381. So, "if a man says to two persons, 'you have murdered J. S.' . . . they cannot join in one action against him for speaking these words, but each of them must bring a separate action, for the wrong done to one is no wrong done to the other." Sergeant Williams Note to Coryton v. Lithebye, 2 Saund. 112, 117.

The common-law doctrine is illustrated by the remarks of Lord Bramwell, delivering the judgment of the court of appeal in Booth v. Briscoe, 2 Q. B. D. 496, 497, 25 Wkly. Rep. 838. Plaintiffs, the eight trustees of certain charities, joined in an action for libel contained in a letter, written and published by defendant, commenting on the improper management of the charities by "the trustees." The question being raised whether these eight plaintiffs could join in an action, Bramwell, L. J., remarked: "If indeed there were a joint tort, for instance, slander of several persons in partnership, the persons injured, would have joined and maintained the action, but could have maintained the action for the joint damage only. Here there is no joint damage. Each man's character, if there is a libel, has been separately libelled. There is no doubt, therefore, that prior to the Judicature Act this proceeding would have been erroneous."

Summary.— In Hannay v. Smurthwaite, [1893] 2 Q. B. 412, 422, 63 L. J. Q. B. 41, 69 L. T. Rep. N. S. 677, 42 Wkly. Rep. 133, Bowen, L. J., summed up the older doctrine thus: "With regards to torts, I think the law may be properly summed up as follows: persons who had a joint interest were bound to sue jointly, while persons who had several interests were bound to sue separately; but where persons, although they might have several interests, had sustained joint damage, they might sue jointly also."

16. N. Y. Code Proc. (1848) §§ 97, 99. Section 97 reads as follows: "All persons having an interest in the subject of the action, and in obtaining the relief demanded, may be joined as plaintiffs, except as otherwise provided in this title." Section 99 reads as follows: "Of the parties to the action, those who are united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs or defendants; but if the consent of any one, who should have been joined as plaintiff, cannot be obtained, he may be made a defendant, the reason thereof being stated in the complaint." The codes which adopted and still have the enactment in this form, or with immaterial changes, are those of Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

The English statutory rule, designed for a system based, like code pleading, upon the principle of one form of action, provides that "all persons may be joined in one action as plaintiffs, in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate actions, any common question of law or of fact would arise." Order XVI, rule 1. And see Stroud v. Lawson, [1898] 2 Q. B. 44, 50, 67 L. J. Q. B. 718, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 729, 46 Wkly. Rep. 626.

b. When Plaintiffs Have Separate Interests — (I) Limited Liberty of Joining. When plaintiffs are not united in interest but stand on separate rights of action, the tendency of the code is to require a separate suit by each plaintiff.[18] It is only when peculiar facts exist, and are shown in the pleading, that the convenience of a joint action is permitted to plaintiffs who are without a joint interest.[19] The cases present the question in three distinct aspects, according as the several rights of action are attended with a community of interest in the subject of the action and in the relief demanded.[20]

(II) Plaintiffs With Separate Rights and No Community of Interest. In this, the ordinary case of different plaintiffs with separate rights, a joinder of parties is not permitted.[21] That defendants combined in the wrong against several plaintiffs, and caused their loss only through a conspiracy, will not of itself warrant a joinder by plaintiffs.[22] Although in most code states all causes of action which have arisen out of the same transaction and exist in the right of one plaintiff may be joined in one action,[23] the fact that the separate rights of different plaintiffs have all arisen simultaneously or out of one act of defendant will not per se warrant a joinder of parties.[24] The rule holds even when the con-

be held in trust for them and to pay such sums as should be needed for the future payments on the land, they were, in the eye of the law, "united in interest," and must join as plaintiffs. George v. Benjamin, 100 Wis. 622, 76 N. W. 619, 69 Am. St. Rep. 963. So, when D contracted with S and W to deliver to them certain pieces of furniture, an action against D for failure to deliver cannot be brought by S alone, but W must be joined as a party. Lemon v. Wheeler, 96 Mo. App. 651, 70 S. W. 924. So, when a number of persons have jointly contributed to procure a right of way for a railroad through a city, in consideration of the company's agreement to give certain rates, an action to rescind the contract for failure by the company to comply must be brought in the names of all the contributors. Clark v. Great Northern R. Co., 81 Fed. 282.

18. The reason for the rule is exemplified in Gray v. Rothschild, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 596, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 299, 14 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 320.

19. "Persons having distinct and independent claims to relief cannot, unless the case is a peculiar one, join in the prosecution of one action." Gray v. Rothschild, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 596, 600, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 299, 14 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 320, per Daniels, J.

So the English statutory rule of joinder (see supra, note 16), liberal as it is, confers only "a limited liberty of joining plaintiffs with separate causes of action." Stroud v. Lawson, [1898] 2 Q. B. 44, 52, 67 L. J. Q. B. 718, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 729, 46 Wkly. Rep. 626.

tract as to each plaintiff is evidenced in the same instrument.[25] Nor is the rule modified by an agreement between the different plaintiffs that they will sue their common debtor at their joint expense and divide the recovery.[26]

(III) Plaintiffs With Separate Rights, But With a Community of Interest — (A) When Community of Interest Is Only in the Subject of Action. When plaintiffs, although not united in interest, have a community of interest in the general subject of action, so that the evidence for any one of plaintiffs will be, in the main, the evidence for all, the codes do not, on this ground alone, permit plaintiffs to join in one action.[27] There must be also a community of interest in the relief demanded.[28] The rule has a ready application when one and the same tort invades simultaneously the rights of several.[29]

(B) When Community of Interest Is in Both Subject of Action and Relief Demanded — (1) Joinder Permitted. In this case, and in this case only, among plaintiffs who are not united in interest, a joinder in an action is permitted by the codes.[30]

(2) Origin of the Enactment. Both in its origin and in its present application, this provision of the codes is closely related to the older procedure.[31] There

L. & H. E. Jewett." The court said that the legal effect of the written contract was the same as if there had been three several and separate written contracts in favor of each of the three several firms or groups of attorneys. was a partial precedent for it even in the law courts, where several plaintiffs in actions ex delicto might join, although not united in interest, if their damage was joint.[32] But the precedent which has been chiefly followed by the codes is the liberal doctrine of joinder that prevailed in courts of equity. These tribunals had no hard and fast rule on the subject.[33] Much was left to the discretion of the court.[34] In general a joinder was permitted, in the case of separate complainants having separate interests, if they would all be affected by the decree,[35] and under the doctrine of formal parties complainants who were but indirectly affected might join.[36] But even equity tended to refuse a joinder to complainants having separate interests, unless a common object was to be secured in the decree.[37] The historic provision of the codes noticed above,[38] in permitting a joinder of plaintiffs who have "an interest in the subject of the action and in obtaining the relief demanded," apparently adopted, in a more precise form, the current doctrine of the courts of equity;[39] and the courts construing this enactment have repeatedly recognized equity decisions in the joinder of complaints as of high persuasive authority under the code.[40]

(3) Its Permissive Character. Unlike the rule of the code in the case of plaintiffs with a joint interest,[41] the provision in question is entirely permissive.[42] The interests being several, the separate plaintiffs may sue separately,[43] maintain-

38. See supra, III, C, 1, text and note 16.

39. The two features of the code provision, its community of interest in the subject of the action and in the relief demanded, are both apparent in the test which Chief Justice Shaw applies, under the rules of equity, in Ballou v. Hopkinton, 4 Gray (Mass.) 324, 328, where he says: "Although the plaintiffs are several owners of separate and distinct mills, injured by the alleged stoppage, diversion and waste of the water of Mill River, and to recover damages for which each owner must bring his several action at law to obtain a remedy for his particular injury, yet they have a joint and common right in the natural flow of the stream, and in the reservoir by which its power is increased, and a joint interest in the remedy, which equity alone can afford."

40. Home Ins. Co. v. Gilman, 112 Ind. 7, 9, 13 N. E. 118, where the court, per Mitchell, J., remarks that the effect of the provisions in the code "is, substantially, to adopt the equitable rules of the chancery courts in regard to these subjects [the joinder of parties], and they require the application of those rules to each case as it arises, whether it be of a legal or equitable character." And see Goodnight v. Goar, 30 Ind. 418 (holding that as plaintiffs could not formerly have joined in chancery, they could not properly join under the code); Trompen v. Yates, 66 Nebr. 525, 530, 92 N. W. 647 (where it is said: "The truth seems to be that the equity practice of taking into the action everybody who claims an interest in its subject-matter, was the object aimed at in these Code provisions, and this court seems to have carried them out according to their letter and spirit"); Gray v. Rothschild, 48 Hun (N. ing separate actions, or they all may join,[44] in one action or some may sue without joining the others in the action.[45]

(4) Test of Permission. Under the terms of the enactment, and as construed by most courts, the test of the statutory permission for the joinder of plaintiffs is twofold; plaintiffs must all have an interest both in the subject of the action and in the relief demanded.[46] The rule is a rule of convenience, and the tests which it requires are those dictated by practical convenience in the trial of cases.[47]

(5) Extent of Permissive Joinder — (a) In General. Although the joinder of separate plaintiffs having separate interests is an exception to the rule,[48] and notwithstanding the specific limitations indicated above,[49] the permissive joinder under the codes has a very wide range of application.

(b) Includes Both Legal and Equitable Causes. Less flexible than the equity doctrine of joinder,[50] the code provision, on the other hand, reaches somewhat further. Under the principle of the one form of action, the permission of the statute applies, in most states, not only to actions which were formerly classed as "equitable," but also to actions which were formerly classed as "legal," including those for the recovery of money only or for specific property.[51] On principle it is clear that the rule in code states is free from the limitation which some courts of equity have insisted upon, namely, that community of interest in both subject of action and relief demanded will not suffice unless the questions involved are of equitable cognizance.[52]

(c) Includes Interests of Different Degrees and Kinds — aa. In General. At common law it was essential that those who appeared on the record as plaintiffs should have an interest in the whole of the recovery, so that a judgment in

46. See the terms of the statute supra, note 16; and the previous topic.

47. Its underlying reason is that which lay at the foundation of the equity doctrine of multifariousness, "the inconvenience of mixing up distinct matters, which may require very different proceedings or decrees by the court, and embarrass the defendant in equity in his proper defence against each." Story Eq. Pl. § 280. And see Cumberland Valley R. Co.'s Appeal, 62 Pa. St. 218, 228, where, on a question of the joinder of complainants, Thompson, C. J., remarked: "A bill is not to be treated as multifarious because it joins the causes of complaint growing out of the same transaction, when all the defendants are interested in the same right, and where the relief sought is of the same general nature. The best authorities concur in the test, that the reason a bill is multifarious is in consequence of the joinder of distinct, independent and separate causes of complaint requiring different defences and different decrees." This reason loses nothing of its force when the equity rule of joinder is extended by the codes to cases involving jury trials. Gray v. Rothschild, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 596, 600, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 299, 14 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 320 [affirmed in 112 N. Y. 668, 19 N. Any other rule would be attended with so much perplexity, intricacy and confusion at the trial, as to render the jury before which the action must necessarily be tried next to incapable of deciding and disposing of it."

solido could be rendered in favor of all the plaintiffs.[53] But in the one form of action required by the codes and under their elastic judgment, it is not essential that the interests of the separate plaintiffs should be of the same degree,[54] or of one kind.[55] It is sufficient if all the plaintiffs have some common interest in respect to the subject-matter of the suit and each is interested in the same relief asked by the other or some part of it.[56]

cc. Plaintiffs With Several and Distinct Ownerships. That several persons have each a separate and distinct ownership, with no property interests in common, will not necessarily prevent their joining in one action; they may still have the requisite community of interest in the subject of action and in the relief demanded.[59] This community of interest has been often recognized in joint actions by different owners of distinct tracts of land, to abate or enjoin a nuisance which affects them all, whether in the same degree or in different degrees,[60] as in an action by different owners of distinct parcels of riparian land, to restrain a defendant from diverting or polluting the water, or flooding the lands;[61] or in an action by owners of separate and distinct tenements to enjoin the construction, in their common locality, of a wooden building, contrary to an ordinance establishing fire limits;[62] or in an action by the owners of lots of various widths and locations abutting on a street, to enjoin the unlawful construction or operation of a railway along this street;[63] or in a similar action when the track has been unlawfully or improperly constructed, to require its removal, or its alteration.[64] It is evident that the underlying principle in all these cases has a wider application. In general, it applies whenever separate owners of distinct property rights have, in the circumstances of a given case, a common interest that will be fully protected by a decree in favor of one or all.[65] Throughout its applications, the doctrine of the codes on this point is a very complete survival of the equitable doctrine as to the joinder of complainants.[66]

(c) Community and Severalty of Interest. The decisions which permit and those which deny the joinder of plaintiffs often turn on states of fact which have much in common.[67] The same case, and especially under the codes, may call for a direct decision on both sides of the doctrine.[68] The characteristic difference is found, not in the existence of a common occurrence, but in the existence of the community of interest, already noticed.[69] Although several owners of separate tracts cannot join to recover their individual damages caused by a nuisance created by one and the same act of defendant,[70] yet they may join to abate the nuisance.[71] Several plaintiffs may not join to recover their individual damages arising from one conspiracy on the part of defendants;[72] but these plaintiffs may join to set aside a release obtained from them through the fraud of defendants.[73] A and B, entitled each to an aliquot part of an ascertained and definite fund in the hands of a common debtor, cannot join in an action to recover their respective shares;[74] but they may join in an action for an accounting from this debtor.[75] Three persons, not partners, who have contracted with defendant, in a written instrument signed by them all, to serve defendant for a sum certain, each to receive one third from defendant, cannot join in an action to recover their respective thirds;[76] but they may join to avoid a settlement obtained from them through the fraudulent representation of defendant.[77] So, while the separate owners of distinct personal properties cannot join in an action against one who has converted the property,[78] yet when the mortgagees of two chattel mortgages, executed, delivered, and filed simultaneously upon the same personal property, agree that the liens thereof shall be concurrent, the mortgagees may join in an action for the conversion of the property.[79]

IV. JOINDER OF DEFENDANTS.[80]

A. General Principles — 1. Joinder and Substantive Obligation. In the established doctrine of the common law, the rules for the joinder of defendants were cast in the mold of the substantive obligation which plaintiff sought to enforce. If that obligation, as defined by the substantive law, was several, the common law permitted no joinder of defendants; for there was no entirety of obligation as against the several contractors or the several tort-feasors. In all such cases plaintiff's claim against each defendant was in the nature of a separate

69. The difficulty in defining this community of interest is well illustrated in the elaborate discussion in Ellis v. Bedford, [1899] 1 Ch. 494, 503, 514 et seq., 519 et seq., 521 et seq., 68 L. J. Ch. 289, 80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 332, 47 Wkly. Rep. 385. claim.[81] If the obligation was defined by the substantive law as "joint," plaintiff might bring one action against all the living obligors, and in contract cases could not maintain his action in another form.[82]

2. Entirety of Obligation in Contracts and in Torts — a. Joinder in an Action Ex Contractu — (I) In General. The nature of a joint obligation in the common-law theory of contracts was essentially different from its nature in the theory of torts,[83] the result being a marked difference in the rules of joinder at common law, according as plaintiff sued ex contractu or ex delicto. Three distinct forms of obligation were recognized in the common-law theory of contracts, the joint,[84] the several,[85] and the joint and several[86] obligation.[87]

(II) On Joint Contract. If the contractual obligation was defined as joint, it could be treated in procedure only as an entirety; plaintiff was bound to bring his action against all the living obligors.[88] If any joint contractor was dead, the action lay only against the survivor or survivors.[89]

(III) On Several Contract. If the obligation was defined as several, there could be no action against the obligors, or any of them, collectively, but plaintiff must proceed as if he had a separate claim against each.[90]

(IV) On Joint and Several Contract. If the obligation was defined as "joint and several,"[91] the rules of joinder treated it accordingly. Being jointly bound, the obligors could all be sued collectively;[92] being severally bound, each obligor could be sued separately.[93] But as there was no partial entirety, there could be no joinder of a less number than all.[94]

b. Joinder in an Action Ex Delicto — (I) In General. The entirety of obligation which existed in the law of contracts was not recognized in torts. The tort might be joint[95] or several,[96] but the joint tort was very different from the joint contract.

(II) On a Joint Tort. If the tort was classed as joint,[97] plaintiff had the option of joining all the tort-feasors in an action,[98] but he was not bound to join them.[99] Neither was he bound to treat the obligation as "joint and several" in the contractual sense, and either sue all jointly or proceed against them severally.[1] The fundamental rule of joinder in the case of a joint tort was that plaintiff might join one, or any, or all, of several joint wrong-doers.[2]

(III) On a Several Tort. Unless the tort as pleaded was a joint tort, in the sense above explained,[3] the tort-feasors, however many and although acting simultaneously, could not be joined in one suit.[4]

B. Special Features — 1. Adverse Interests — a. (Ky.) 98, 99, where the replication alleged that after the action was commenced and before defendants appeared, S, the party appearing on both sides, had died and the action as to him had abated. It was held, however, that the action was "erroneous in the origin," because of the presence of S as both plaintiff and defendant, and that the error was not cured by the replication.

The theory of the common law on the point is clearly put by Henderson, J., in Pearson v. Nesbit, 12 N. C. 315, 316, 17 Am. Dec. 569, where he says: "A suit at law, person appearing in the same capacity as sole plaintiff and sole defendant,[6] but even when he was one of several plaintiffs or of several defendants,[7] as in the claim of co-trustees against a fellow trustee in relation to the trust property,[8] or in the claim of a partner against his firm,[9] or of a firm against one of its members and other defendants,[10] or of one firm against another firm when each had a common member,[11] or in an action by one heir against all the heirs, to revive a judgment owned by plaintiff against the common ancestor and subject the land to it.[12] Nor did it affect the rule that the appearance of the party on one side of the record was in a personal character and on the other in an official character.[13]

(II) Presumption From Identity of Name. The rule noticed above[14] has been recognized and enforced in a recent case on a mere showing of identity of name between a plaintiff and one of defendants.[15] is a contest between two parties in a court of justice; the one seeking, and the other withholding, the thing in contest. The same individual cannot be, at the same time, both the person seeking, and the person withholding. For it involves an absurdity, that a person could seek from himself, or withhold from himself. Between a corporation and the individuals composing it, this identity does not exist, and the absurdity above stated is avoided; but where the same person is both plaintiff and defendant, in different rights, as for himself on the one side, and as executor on the other, this absurdity is involved. When adversary rights, as creditor and executor, or debtor and executor, meet in the same individual, the law considers the contest as settled — at least as long as the union exists. As soon therefore, as it appears to the court, that the same individual is both plaintiff and defendant, any judgment entered up in the cause is, to say the least, erroneous, and should be reversed."

Among defendants was one of the trustees. It was held that a judgment for plaintiff must be reversed, the court saying: "A party can have no right of action against himself, either as debtor or tort-feasor."

9. Holmes v. Higgins, 1 B. & C. 74, 2 D. & R. 196, 1 L. J. K. B. O. S. 47, 8 E. C. L. 33. In this case a number of persons formed an association and subscribed money for the purpose of securing the building of a railway. P, one of the subscribers, was employed by the association as surveyor, P sued for his services thus rendered. It was held that the subscribers were partners in the undertaking, and that "it is perfectly clear that one partner cannot maintain an action against his copartners for work and labor performed, and money expended on account of the partnership." And see PARTNERSHIP, post, p. 560 et seq.

P became H's assignee in bankruptcy and as such brought debt against himself and S, and it was held that the action could not be maintained. In Pearson v. Nesbit, 12 N. C. 315, 17 Am. Dec. 569, P was a member of the firm of Nesbit & Co., which brought an action against P and another as executors of R. It was held that a judgment in favor of the firm must be reversed.

15. Sweetland v. Porter, 43 W. Va. 189, 27 S. E. 352. In an action by a partnership one of plaintiffs was named in the writ as "J. S. Sweetland," and in the declaration as "John S. Sweetland"; one of defendants was named in both writ and declaration as "J. S. Sweetland." It was held on demurrer to the declaration that in the absence of proof to the contrary the presumption must be that defendant J. S. Sweetland is identical with plaintiff J. S. Sweetland. The demurrer was accordingly sustained.

Contra.— In the earlier case of Wilson v. Benedict, 90 Mo. 208, 213, 2 S. W. 283, however, it was held that "the rule that, from identity of name identity of person may be presumed, has no application to this case, and cannot be extended so far as to uphold as an inference that when a plaintiff sues a

(III) Limits of Rule. The rule under consideration applied to actions on joint obligations;[16] and in these cases it cannot be successfully evaded by the omission of plaintiff's name from the list of defendants; for under another rule of joinder[17] all joint obligors must be made defendants.[18] But the rule could be evaded whenever the obligation of defendants was several, or joint and several.[19]

b. Doctrine Under the Codes — (I) Statement of Rule. In code pleading, as at common law, the primary test for the joinder of defendants is found in the existence of an interest adverse to plaintiff.[20] But the codes, following the lead of equity procedure,[21] have modified this principle in favor of the general rule that it is sufficient if all the parties interested in the subject of the action are before the court either as plaintiffs or defendants.[22]

(II) Defendants Without Interests Adverse to Plaintiff — (A) Joint Interests. In the assertion of a joint interest, the codes expressly provide that if the consent of one who should have been joined as a plaintiff cannot be obtained, he may be made a defendant, the reason thereof being stated in the complaint or petition.[23] It follows that the rule in hand can readily be evaded in the class of cases where it is most frequently applied, that is, when the same person is at once a joint obligor and a joint obligee.[24] But in jurisdictions which retain the doctrine of joint contracts in its strictness,[25] this rule of the common law, defendant having the same name as that of plaintiff, that both persons are one and the same person."

17. See supra, IV, A, 2, a, (II).

18. Illustration.— A promissory note read thus: "On demand, for value received, we promise to pay D. C. Y. Moore, or order, two hundred fourteen dollars, and seventy-five cents, with interest."

(signed) D. C. Y. Moore,
Wm. J. Denslow,
Oliver Tillotson.

It was held that Moore could not sue Denslow and Tillotson because the obligation was joint; neither could Moore sue all the joint obligees, because of the rule in question. Moore v. Denslow, 14 Conn. 235. P, B, and C were members of a partnership. After the dissolution of the partnership, B and C were sued by creditors of the company and retained P, who was an attorney, to defend the actions. In the course of making this defense, a bill of costs was incurred. P now sues B and C to recover the amount of this bill. It was held that the action cannot be maintained, for P, as a member of the company, was jointly liable to contribute to the expense of the defense. Milburn v. Codd, 7 B. & C. 419, 1 M. & R. 238, 14 E. C. L. 191. See also Partnership, post, p. 560 et seq.

19. See the discussion of the doctrine in Faulkner v. Faulkner, 73 Mo. 327, 339, where Sherwood, C. J., remarked: "A party bound in a contract with others, whereby he becomes both obligor and obligee, cannot maintain on such contract an action at law. . . . This principle, however, does not apply, even at common law, except where the contract is joint, and not where it is (as are all contracts in this State) both joint and several."

Illustration.— A promissory note contained these words: "On demand we jointly and severally promise to pay to William Pain Beecham and Richard Smith, or order, the sum of 1000£, for value received."

(signed) Henry Smith, Tilson Smith,
Richard Smith.

An action was brought upon the note by Beecham and Richard Smith against Henry Smith, no other defendant being joined. Defendant insisted that the action could not be maintained in this form. The court said: "As a joint contract, this note undoubtedly, would not be enforceable at law. But the plaintiffs are at liberty to sue on it as a several note by any of the makers. The defendant who is so sued is not at liberty to claim to have the note treated as a joint note." Beecham v. Smith, E. B. & E. 442, 445, 4 Jur. N. S. 1018, 27 L. J. Q. B. 257, 6 Wkly. 20. Thus the general enactment in the code states declares that any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy "adverse to the plaintiff." See the statutes of states named infra. And see Allen v. Miller, 11 Ohio St. 374, 378, where the court, construing these enactments, remarked: "It seems to us, that the words 'defendant' and 'defendants' as employed in those sections of the code to which reference has been made, in so far as they affect the question of jurisdiction, must be held to mean not nominal defendants merely, but parties who have a real and substantial interest adverse to the plaintiff, and against whom substantial relief is sought."

however technical, has been recognized as still in force under the codes, unless the excepting provision is followed.[26]

(B) Plaintiff's Assignor as a Co-Defendant. When an assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action sues in his own name as a real party in interest,[27] the general rule of the codes is that an assignor who has parted with all his interest should not be made a party, either as co-plaintiff or as co-defendant;[28] but a few codes expressly require or permit the assignor, in such a case, to be joined as a defendant.[29]

2. Responsibility of Interest. It is not a sufficient reason for joining a person as a defendant that the adjudication of the case at bar may determine points of law adversely to his interest.[30] As a rule the record must show a responsible interest in every defendant.[31]

3. Community of Responsibility — a. Historic Principle. In order that a plaintiff may join two or more persons as defendants in an action, it is not sufficient for him to show a valid cause of action against each defendant,[32] or even to show a union of consequences from wrongful acts pleaded as committed at the same time by all defendants,[33] or to show a liability in the alternative as between two defendants,[34]

26. Baron v. Lakow, 121 N. Y. App. Div. 544, 106 N. Y. G was the other member of the firm of B & Co. He was made a defendant but the record showed no reason why he was not joined as plaintiff. It was held that a judgment for plaintiff must be reversed.

E. 159, P sued the Richmond R. Co. and the Richmond Railway and Electric Co. to recover for an injury caused by the former company. The declaration alleged "consolidation" of the two companies, by virtue of which the latter company became responsible for the liabilities of the former. It was held or to show a liability in each defendant as respects the same subject-matter.[35] But plaintiff must show, as against all whom he makes co-defendants, some community of responsibility.[36] The principle, with important modifications, holds not only at common law,[37] but in equity procedure,[38] and under the codes.[39] It is materially modified, however, by broad distinctions between the cause in contract and the cause in tort;[40] and its application is affected by the restrictions imposed through the rules as to the joinder of causes.[41]

b. In Common-Law Procedure. The only community of responsibility which the common law recognized as sufficient for a joinder of defendants was that which arose from a joint tort or from the breach of a joint or a joint and several contract.[42] If the contract was joint and several, plaintiff might join all, or sue severally; he could not join less than all.[43] If the contract or the tort was several, there could be no joinder.[44]

c. In Code Pleading — (i) Terms of the Codes. The terms of the New York code of 1849 as to the joinder of defendants[45] were copied by the framers of most of the other codes, and still endure as the standard form of the statutory provision on this point in a majority of the American states.[46] This approved enactment provides for a permissive joinder, at the option of plaintiff, in certain wide classes of cases, and for a required joinder when the defendants "are united in interest."[47] By the terms of the statute "any person may be made a defendant, who has or claims an interest in the controversy, adverse to plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of the questions involved therein."[48] It is further enacted that "persons severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument, including the parties to bills of exchange and promissory notes, may, all or any of them, be included in the same action, at the option of the plaintiff."[49] that while plaintiff might have sued either company, he could not sue both in the same action at law. "They are not jointly liable. One is liable for committing the alleged injury; the other is liable by reason of the consolidation proceedings."

36. For most purposes the phrase "community of wrong-doing" is sufficiently exact, even under the liberal doctrines of the code.

The rule in code states is subject to the modification noticed above (see supra, note 22), by which one without an adverse interest to plaintiff may be placed among defendants.

Same provision in other states.— The enactment is now found, with slight modifications in phraseology in a few states, in the codes of Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

49. N. Y. Code (1849), § 120. The provision was an exact copy, without addition,

(II) Leading Purpose of the Codes. In permitting plaintiff to join as defendant, any person who has or claims an adverse interest "in the controversy," the codes evidently design a less restrictive rule for the joinder of defendants than for the joinder of plaintiffs.[50] The purpose of the enactment, as declared by courts construing the codes, is to prevent multiplicity of suits about the same subject-matter, and when practicable, to settle complicated controversies in one action.[51]

(III) Influence of Historic Principle. On the other hand the restrictive effect of the historic principle already noticed[52] has been distinctly recognized and enforced under these liberal provisions of the codes.[53]

(IV) Tendency to a Readier Joinder — (A) Under American Codes. In other cases, however, and notably in recent cases, these enactments have been interpreted as permitting a very full joinder of defendants.[54] This tendency is especially marked in actions seeking equitable relief.[55] The provisions of the code, it is declared, adopt the rule of equity joinder in its most liberal form.[56] of the terms of the original N. Y. Code (1848), § 100.

In other states.— The provision reappears, with some variations, in the present enactment of Arizona (but in different form), California, Colorado, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri (in somewhat different form), Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming (in different form).

A still more liberal rule of permissive joinder is found in the codes of Iowa and Kentucky.

E. 879; Draper v. Brown, 115 Wis. 361, 91 N. W. 1001, where the reasons for the difference are very elaborately discussed.

56. The difference between the strict rule of the old equity practice and the more liberal rule of its present practice is pointed out as decisive of the question under the code in Fairfield v. Southport Nat. Bank, 77 Conn. 423, 59 Atl. 513.

That the code follows the modern equity rule is the basis of the decision also in

A community of interest among defendants is necessary, but it is a community of interest in something wider than a precise "subject of action" between plaintiff and each defendant — it is a community of interest "in the controversy."[57] There is a noticeable tendency under the code, as in equity pleading,[58] to treat the rule, not as an inflexible rule of practice or procedure, but as a rule founded in general convenience, which rests upon a consideration of what will best promote the administration of justice without multiplying unnecessary litigation on the one hand or drawing suitors into needless and unnecessary expenses on the other.[59]

(B) Under English Judicature Acts. A similar liberty of joinder has recently been established under the English judicature acts.[60] Notwithstanding the rule that claims for damages against two or more defendants in respect to their several liability for separate torts cannot be joined,[61] the court of appeal has permitted a joinder of two or more defendants against each of whom "a different species of relief" was demanded on distinct claims, which, however, all arose out of one "grievance."[62] Apparently the "grievance" of the 57. "The word 'controversy' is exceedingly broad and comprehensive, and for that reason not easily susceptible of any precise general definition." Fairfield v. Southport Nat. Bank, 77 Conn. 423, 428, 59 Atl. 513, per Torrance, C. J. For its application in this case see infra, this note.

It is not essential, in this doctrine, that defendants, as between themselves, have a "joint" or "mutual" interest in the claim of each against plaintiff or in the claim of plaintiff against each, or that they have a "common title," or a "community of interest in the subject matter of the action"; it is sufficient if the complaint or petition shows that defendants have a community of interest in the questions of law and fact involved in the general controversy. See the opinion of the court in Fairfield v. Southport Nat. Bank, 77 Conn. 423, 430, 59 Atl. 513. The facts were these: In an action by a town against several banks, the complaint alleged that the selectmen of the town without authority borrowed money from defendant S, giving therefor at different times twenty negotiable notes; that these notes were all paid in full; that S agreed to cancel the notes and deliver them to plaintiff, but failed to do so; that the other defendants claimed to be bona fide holders of some of these notes by transfer from S. The prayer was for a decree determining what right if any the several defendants had in the notes claimed by them, that the notes be canceled and delivered to plaintiff, and that plaintiff recover of S, the amount paid on the unauthorized notes. Defendant demurred for misjoinder of parties, insisting that the complaint showed no such joint or mutual interest between defendants as warranted their joinder in one action. A judgment of the trial court sustaining the demurrer was unanimously reversed on appeal, because "the respective rights which the defendants claim against the plaintiff, under the notes held by each, depend substantially and for all practical purposes upon the decision of the same questions of law and of fact; and no good reason appears why these rights cannot be protected and enforced in one comprehensive proceeding." 59. Following the lead of equity procedure, the supreme court of Indiana has recently remarked that "where the subject of the action has become so complicated and entangled that the rights of the parties are involved in doubt, and it is difficult to determine who is liable, and who is not, except upon a full hearing in which all the persons in any way affected or interested are before the court, equity [and therefore the code] permits the joinder of all those so related to the controversy, and who have a common interest in some one or more branches of it." Demarest v. Holdeman, 157 Ind. 467, 473, 62 N. E. 17, per Dowling, J. The court had previously held that the code had adopted the equity rule of joinder (see same case, page 473). Compare the opinion of Clark, C. J., in Oyster v. Iola Min. Co., 140 N. C. 135, 52 S. English doctrine is synonymous with the "controversy" of the American codes.[63]

(v) Limits of Doctrine. However wide this liberty of joinder,[64] it does not annul the general principle that when a plaintiff asserts claims against two or more persons in respect of their several liabilities for separate wrongs, he cannot sue these persons as co-defendants.[65] The distinction is marked in the difference between an action for an injunction and an action for pecuniary damages when both actions turn upon an injury arising out of the acts of different defendants between whom there has been no common design or concert of action, but whose independent acts have in fact united, as their common result, in an invasion of plaintiff's rights. When plaintiff seeks an injunction against the continuance of this common result, he may join all the defendants in one action.[66] But when he sues to recover his damages because of his injury from these separate, independent wrong-doers, he cannot join them as defendants in one action.[67] In the

Q. B. 147, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 684, 7 Manson 347. The facts were as follows: P, the holder of one hundred shares in a certain company, sued the company and its directors in one action. As against the company, P claimed the cancellation of his allotment of shares and the return of the £1000 which he had paid for them. As against the directors P claimed £1000 damages. An objection for misjoinder on the part of the directors was sustained by the trial court and the case dismissed as to them. On appeal the ruling below was disapproved. "If these orders [dismissing the action] were to stand," said Lindley, M. R., for the court of appeal, "substantial justice would be sacrificed to a wretched technicality."

63. See the remark of Lindley, M. R., in Frankenburg v. Great Horseless Carriage Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 504, 509, 69 L. J. Q. B. 147, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 684, 7 Manson 347. "In substance, the shareholder has one grievance, call it a cause of action or what you like; and in substance he has one complaint, and all the persons he sues have, according to him, been guilty of conduct which gives him a right to relief in respect of that one thing which they have done, namely, the issuing of a prospectus. . . . The whole case turns upon the issue of the prospectus, and there is nothing more than a complaint against a number of people who have done the plaintiff one wrong by issuing a prospectus which they had no right in point of law to issue."

Special statutory modifications.— The rule, however, has been modified by the enactment, noted in the text, as to joining "persons severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument" (see supra, pp. 127, 128). It is modified also in a number of other special cases by enactments which vary in the different codes — as in actions against the owners or occupants of land, suits to quiet title, foreclosure suits, partition suits, etc.

Wisconsin.— Draper v. Brown, 115 Wis. 361, 91 N. W. 1001. This was an action to restrain the lowering of the level of a lake. Plaintiffs joined as defendants the persons who owned a dam at the outlet of the lake and two other persons, one of whom, by means of a lock in a river running into the lake, diminished the flow into it, while the other, by means of a dam at the outlet of a tributary lake, obstructed the flow from it. It was held that the joinder was permissible, for the only right sought to be enforced was the right to have the water level of the lake maintained, and defendants, although acting independently, all contributed to the impairment of this right.

It is well established also that the rule, in this latter respect, is not changed by the fact that plaintiff's damage has arisen because the acts of the independent defendants were simultaneous and concurring.[70] Nor is it decisive, in the view of some joint action for damages, although the consequences of the several torts have united to produce an injury to plaintiff); Miller v. Curry, 53 Cal. 665 (an action to enjoin the sale of land levied on under two executions, issued one upon a judgment in favor of defendant A, the other upon a judgment in favor of defendant B, to which a demurrer upon the ground that defendants were not jointly affected by the two judgments was sustained).

The limitation is the more notable in England because of the wide terms of the rule as to joinder. By the terms of Order XVI, rule 4, under the Judicature Acts, "All persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative."

70. This point was elaborately argued, under the liberal terms of the English Judicature Acts, in the recent case of Sadler v. Great Western R. Co., before the court of appeal in [1895] 2 Q. B. 688, 65 L. J. Q. B. 26, 73 L. T. Rep. N. S. 385, 44 Wkly. Rep. 50, and before the house of lords in [1896] A. C. 450, 65 L. J. Q. B. 462, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561, 45 Wkly. Rep. 51. The facts of the case were as follows: Plaintiff, a dealer in cycles, occupied a shop on a public street. A railway company occupied the premises immediately adjoining plaintiff's shop on the north; another railway company occupied the premises immediately adjoining the shop on the south. Each company used its premises as a receiving office for parcels and goods. The two companies were separate and independent, carrying on separate and independent businesses. Each company brought its own carts opposite its own premises, for the purposes of its own business. Neither company had any control over the other. Plaintiff, claiming damages and an injunction, name of the other company as defendant. The statement of claim specifically alleged that each defendant frequently caused access to plaintiff's shops to be blocked by vans and carts while access to the shop was blocked on the other side by the vans and carts of the other defendant, and that "by their respective combined acts the defendants thus prevent all access to the plaintiff's premises by vehicle or cycle." One of the companies obtained an order staying the action unless the claim was amended by striking out the name of the other company as defendant. The court of appeal divided on the question whether this order was right. The house of lords, without dissent, sustained the order, and held that the case, as pleaded, presented "not only a claim for an injunction, but a claim for damages against each of two several defendants," and therefore, that the two companies were improperly joined. Whether authorities, if in determining whether one defendant has wronged plaintiff it becomes necessary to take into consideration the acts of the other defendant.[71] The test which has been followed in these cases, the test of sole responsibility,[72] is not always of easy application.[73] There is a tendency to find a community of responsibility whenever plaintiff's injury has arisen wholly because of the concurrence of the independent acts of several defendants.[74]

4. JOINDER IN THE ALTERNATIVE — a. General Rule. Neither in common-law procedure nor in equity was a plaintiff permitted to join two or more as defendants upon the ground that one of them was liable to him upon the several cause which he had pleaded but he was in doubt which one was liable.[75] It was necessary for him to bring one action against one, another action against the other, and to run the risk of the jury taking a contrary view of the evidence in the two cases.[76] And such is still the rule under the codes generally.[77]

b. Statutory Innovation. A departure from this historic restriction in our procedure was made in 1873, under the English judicature acts, by a provision that when a plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to recover, he may join two or more defendants with a view to ascertaining which is liable.[78] And the same or a similar change has been made by statute the action could have been maintained if an injunction only had been demanded was questioned (see [1896] A. C. 450, 455, 65 L. J. Q. B. 462, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561, 45 Wkly. Rep. 51), but not decided.

71. Of the acts of the two defendants in Sadler v. Great Western R. Co., [1895] 2 Q. B. 688, 693, 65 L. J. Q. B. 26, 73 L. T. Rep. N. S. 385, 44 Wkly. Rep. 50 [affirmed in [1896] A. C. 450, 65 L. J. Q. B. 462, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561, 45 Wkly. Rep. 51 (see supra, note 70) Smith, L. J., remarked: "These two torts, if they are torts, are independent torts by the different companies, although as I have already stated, the acts of each company can be taken into account in considering the acts of one company and deciding whether they amount to a nuisance or not. The acts of the other company must be taken into account because it may be that the one company ought not to be doing what it was when the other company was doing what it did. But that does not make these two causes of action a joint cause of action, or give any right to join one company with the other in one action."

72. That "each of the defendants is [from the nature of the cause as pleaded] called upon to answer for his own acts, and for his own acts only." Sadler v. Great Western R. Co., [1896] A. C. 450, 455, 65 L. J. Q. B. 462, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561, 45 Wkly. Rep. 51, per Lord Shand.

73. "The reports are bristling with precedents of varying degrees of strictness [on this question of joinder] and it is a matter of no inconsiderable difficulty to discover a right of way through them." Draper v. Brown, 115 Wis. 361, 368, 91 N. W. 1001, per Bardeen, J.

Story found the same difficulty with the equity rule.— Story Equity Pl. § 76c.

74. Hillman v. Newington, 57 Cal. 56, 64. Here P, who was entitled to use a certain quantity of water flowing in Willow creek, brought an action against eight separate property-owners to recover damages for an alleged diversion of the water. An injunction also was asked. It was objected that there was a misjoinder of defendants, because they did not act jointly or in concert in diverting the water. It was held that the joinder was proper. "Each of [the defendants]," said the court, "diverts some of the water. And the aggregate reduces the volume below the amount to which the plaintiff is entitled, although the amount diverted by any one would not. It is quite evident, therefore, that without unity or concert of action, no wrong could be committed; and we think that in such a case, all who act must be held to act jointly." Compare Sellick v. Hall, 47 Conn. 260.

78. Order XVI, rule 7, which reads: "Where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to redress, he may, in such manner as hereinafter mentioned, or as may be prescribed in any special order, join two or more defendants, to the intent that the question as to which, if any, of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all parties." A joinder was permitted under this provision by the court of appeal in Bennetts v. McIlwraith, [1896] 2 Q. B. 464, 8 Aspin. 176, 65 L. J. Q. B. 632, 75 L. T. Rep. N. S. 145, 45 Wkly. Rep. 17. This was an action for breach of warranty of authority. It ap-in at least two states in this country, namely, the states of Rhode Island and Connecticut.[79]

c. Limits of Innovation. The tendency is to a liberal construction of these rules of joinder in the alternative, as embodying a device of convenience;[80] but as applied by the courts, the device is subject to the fundamental limitation already noticed,[81] that there can be no joinder of defendants when plaintiff is asserting a separate cause against each.[82]

V. PARTIES BY CLASS REPRESENTATION.[83]

A. Origin of the Doctrine. The rule at common law and in equity required that all the parties to an action should appear in it, as plaintiff or defendants, and by their individual names.[84] From this rule equity procedure, in the interest of convenience, permitted a number of deviations, and among them the two following: One or more persons might sue or defend for all "where the question is one of a common or general interest," or when "the parties are very numerous . . . and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court."[85] This exemption, in peared that defendants had assumed to act as agents in entering into a charter-party for loading plaintiff's vessel with a cargo which was not supplied. Plaintiffs being in doubt as to whether defendants had or had not authority applied to add the alleged principals as defendants. It was held that plaintiffs were entitled to do this. And see Massey v. Heynes, 21 Q. B. D. 330, 57 L. J. Q. B. 521, 36 Wkly. Rep. 834; Child v. Stenning, 5 Ch. D. 695, 46 L. J. Ch. 523, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 426, 25 Wkly. In this case, decided in 1900, the court expressed the opinion that "apparently this is the only State which has adopted the provision of joining defendants in case of doubt."

But see the Connecticut Rev. Rules (1890), § 3, which reads: "Persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to relief is alleged to exist in the alternative, although a right to relief against one may be inconsistent with a right to relief against the other." Found in 58 Conn. 561.

80. "The rules ought to be interpreted fairly to carry out the intention of the legislature in making them. There can be no question that the intention of the legislature was that it should not be necessary for a plaintiff to bring an action first against A., and then against B., and to run the risk of the jury taking a contrary view of the evidence in the two cases, but that he should have both defendants before the Court at once, and try it out between them." I. 556, 45 Atl. 546, in an action against A and B plaintiff set up in one count a cause against A for goods sold and in another count a cause against B on the ground that he had assumed the payment of the debt. It was held that the joinder was not authorized by the Rhode Island statute permitting joinder in the alternative. In Thompson v. London County Council, [1899] 1 Q. B. 840, 68 L. J. Q. B. 625, 80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 512, 47 Wkly. Rep. 433, P sued D for negligently excavating near P's house and thereby damaging it. D in his pleading denied liability and attributed the damage to the negligence of S in leaving a water main open. P applied to add S as a defendant in the alternative. It was held that the permission of the statute did not apply.

Illustration.—The principle was thus illustrated by Romer, L. J., of the court of appeal, in Frankenburg v. Great Horseless Carriage Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 504, 512, 69 L. J. Q. B. 147, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 684, 7 Manson 347: "If you have suffered a wrong it may be that A is the person who has committed it, but perhaps you are not certain that it may not be B who has committed it, and if so, B is liable. As between A and B they are strangers to each other in the matter." In such a case there can be no joinder of A and B, for the causes are separate and distinct.

its current terms in the equity reports, was carried bodily into the New York code of 1848, and there added to the general rule for the joinder of those "united in interest." [86] The provision now appears, with little or no material change, in almost every code state.[87]

B. Terms of Statutory Exception. As enacted in 1848 and copied in the other codes this statutory exception to the rule of joinder declares "that when the question is one of a common or general interest of many persons; or when the parties are very numerous and it may be impracticable to bring them all before the court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of the whole." [88]

C. Nature and Purpose — 1. In General. The enactment has been judicially recognized as an adoption into code procedure of a characteristic device of equity procedure, "in its breadth and substance," [89] and as permitting code pleaders, when considering the extent of the exception, to rely upon the decisions of courts of equity.[90] The purpose of the statute is, not only to prevent a practical failure of justice in extreme cases,[91] but to avoid as far as may be a multiplicity of suits, and settle in one the rights of all parties having a common or general interest.[92]

2. As a Cumulative Privilege. The privilege granted by the statute is not conditioned upon an inability of the many to sue collectively by means of a trustee;[93] nor is its exercise dependent upon the previous granting of an order of court,

86. N. Y. Code (1848), § 99. The exception was not expressly recognized in the original code, as first reported, but was added by the legislature. See for a history of the enactment McKenzie v. L'Amoureux, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 516; Tobin v. Portland Mills Co., 41 Oreg. 269, 68 Pac. 743, 1108.

Church, 119 Cal. 477, 51 Pac. 841, where an incorporated church was divided, by the proper ecclesiastical authority, into two organizations, the Central church and the Westminster church, both unincorporated. Two members of the Central church brought an action for themselves and all other members of the Central church, to compel a division of the funds of the corporation. It was objected that the board of trustees of the Central church was the proper party to inaugurate the proceedings. It was held that even if there was a board of trustees authorized to sue, the action was properly inaugurated, because of the statute permitting one to sue for many. So, when there is a question as to the legal title of the trustees as such, they may sue under the privilege of the statute, if the question is one of common or general interest of many persons, and they are members of this general body. even when an order is apparently contemplated by the statute or some rule of court.[94]

D. Extent of Statutory Exception — 1. To Legal as Well as Equitable Causes. It has been urged under the code, in recent as in early cases,[95] that as the statute has merely copied the equitable provision without addition in terms, the exception can have no greater extent under the codes than it had in equity procedure.[96] But the terms of the enactment and its context suggest no such restriction, and the weight of authority adopts the exception as applicable, under the code, to actions of a legal as well as to those of an equitable nature.[97]

2. Whether to Joint Interests. The language of the court in a recent opinion under the code and in some earlier equity cases suggests that this exception extends even to joint interests.[98] But this construction is in the teeth of the express requirement of the codes that persons who are "united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs or defendants."[99]

98. According to the language of the court in Tobin v. Portland Mills Co., 41 Oreg. 269, 68 Pac. 743, 1108, cases in which persons have a "joint and indivisible interest" are within the scope of the exceptions. "So where some of the partners in a very numerous company (500 and more) filed a bill on behalf of themselves and all the other partners to rescind a contract entered into on behalf of the partnership, where it was manifest, from the circumstances of the case, that it could be for the benefit of all the partners that the contract should be rescinded, it was held by the court, upon an objection for want of parties, that the bill was maintainable." Story Eq. Pl. § 115; Small v. Attwood, Younge 407, 408.

99. See supra, III, C, 2, a. It is to be observed also that in the original code of 1848, and in its standard form to-day, the statutory exception forms part of this enactment requiring a joinder of persons who are "united in interest." And there is, in recent decisions under the code, direct authority that "joint" interests are not within the scope of the exception, at least as against an objection for defect of parties. George v. Benjamin, 100 Wis. 622, 630, 76 N. W. 619, 69 Am. St. Rep. 963, where the court, on a demurrer for defect of plaintiffs, refused to permit one to sue for many, because it appeared from the complaint that there was a "joint" interest, and therefore no "common or general" interest, among the associates, Bardeen, J., saying: "The fact that all the parties to the contract are united in interest affords a sufficient reason for holding that they are necessary parties to the action." And see Day v. Buckingham, 87 Wis. 215, 58 N. W. 254, permitting one to sue for many, because the interests were "common or general" and not "joint." Compare McMahon v. Rauhr, 47 N. Y. 67. In Platt v. Colvin, 50 Ohio St. 703, 36 N. E. 735, the president of a joint stock association organized under the laws of New York and consisting, as alleged in the petition, of about one thousand shareholders, "all of whom have a joint interest and ownership in the cause of action set forth," was permitted to sue in Ohio, in behalf of all the shareholders; but defendant had demurred upon the ground that plaintiff was without capacity to sue, there was apparently no demurrer, as in the Wisconsin case, supra, this note, for "defect of parties." So Hilton Bridge Constr. Co. v. Foster, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 338, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 140 [affirmed in 42 N. Y. App. Div. 630, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 1106], has been distinguished from Bear v. American Rapid Tel. Co., 36 Hun (N. (N. Y.) 152, 103 N. Y. Suppl. 822. Compare in this connection Foster v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., 91 Tex. 631, 45 S. W. 376, opinion delivered by Brown, A. J.

more to sue or defend for all in two classes of cases:[1] (1) When the question is one of common or general interest to many persons;[2] and (2) when the parties are very numerous and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court.[3] Although often overlapping, these two classes are theoretically and sometimes actually distinct.[4]

b. "Common or General Interest" — (I) CONTROLLING FEATURE. When the question is one of common or general interest to many the controlling feature is not the number of the persons interested but the quality of the interest.[5] In this class the requirement of "many persons" is so easily satisfied that one person has been permitted to sue for four,[6] or even for three.[7] The test is substantially the convenient test of a community of interest, which permits but does not require the owners to join as plaintiffs.[8]

(II) RANGE OF APPLICATION. The "question of general or common interest to many" which will permit one or more to sue or defend for all appears in a great variety of cases.[9] No definite limits have been set to the permission of the statute. It has been recognized in the case of claims on behalf of unincorporated associations and societies of widely different kinds,[10] on behalf of creditors, in

It would be a proper use of the term within these definitions, for instance, to ask: How many persons are similarly situated with the plaintiff? and correct to answer, two besides the plaintiff." The question as to the legality of this conspiracy is certainly one of common and general interest to all persons against whom it was directed and is being enforced."

whatever way, who have a common interest in the questions of law and fact involved in the general controversy,[11] on behalf of heirs or legatees with reference to an alleged claim or liability affecting the property,[12] and on behalf of taxpayers from whom a tax has been illegally collected.[13] The permission holds even when the claims are several in their nature if there appear in the case special circumstances creating a community of interest in both the law and the facts of the controversy, as when creditors with claims in severalty have an insolvent corporation for their common debtor and seek, on behalf of themselves and others, to enforce the statutory liability of its stock-holders,[14] or policemen have several claims against the municipality for compensation for the time they were illegally suspended under a void order,[15] or owners in severalty of water rights in a certain stream demand the restoration of a dam, the wrongful removal of which has cut off their common source of supply.[16]

c. Impracticable Number of Parties — (i) Controlling Feature. In the second class of cases within the statute permitting one to sue or defend for all,[17] the controlling feature is not the community of interest but the number of persons who, by the general rules of joinder, should appear as parties.[18] If the record shows not only that these persons are numerous but also that it is impracticable to bring them all before the court,[19] the code permits one or more to sue or defend for the benefit of the whole.

(ii) What Amounts to an Impracticable Number. The test of what amounts to an impracticable number, permitting one to sue for all, varies with the circumstances of each case. In the absence of a showing of difficulty in bringing them all before the court, the mere fact that there are many parties is not sufficient; an able court has declined to recognize the exception in the case of two hundred and fifty persons.[20] On the other hand, the same court has

This contention cannot be sustained. It is not shown that it is impracticable to bring all the owners into the suit. We shall not assume that it is because they are numerous."

For other cases holding or suggesting that the parties were not impracticably numerous see Bird v. Lanphear, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 613, recognized seventy-five persons as a sufficiently impracticable number in the circumstances of another case.[21]

(III) Whether Community of Interest Is Necessary. The statute makes no mention of any community of interest as a requisite to a suit by or against one for all, but the same facts of the cases which recognize and apply the exception all show some interest in common among the parties represented.[22] The established doctrine in equity recognized it as essential that there should be at least "a common interest, or a common right . . . or a general claim or privilege;"[23] and the fundamental tenets of sound procedure require it.[24]

(IV) Nature of the Community of Interest. The cases, however, have not defined this community of interest. It may be very general, as in an action by a few citizens of a town, suing in behalf of themselves and all their fellow citizens, to compel a railway company to comply with provisions of its charter which affect the town as a whole.[25] But, however general, the interest must be common to all with reference to some distinguishable subject-matter of action.[26]

E. Limits of Exception — 1. Interests Several Without Community. Although the interests of those who may be represented as plaintiffs or defendants under the exception noticed above are several and not joint interests,[27] the permission of the exemption is not available if the grounds of action or defense are entirely distinct and unconnected.[28] It must appear that the parties represented are in the same class with the representing party.[29]

2. Interest in Legal Question. Nor is it sufficient that this class interest is

23. "In this class of cases [where the parties are very numerous and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court], there is usually a privity of interest between the parties; but such a privity is not the foundation of the exception. On the contrary, it is sustained in some cases, where no such privity exists: However, in all of them there always exists a common interest, or a common right, which the bill seeks to establish and enforce, or a general claim or privilege, which it seeks to establish, or to narrow, or take away." Story Eq. Pl. § 120. The case of Ayers v. Carver, 17 How. (U. The interest being common to all as a community, and the citizens being numerous (of which fact we can take judicial notice from public statistics), we think the case is provided for by a well-recognized rule which has long prevailed in equity, and that some, as representatives of the class, may sue for all."

29. "It is plain that the suit was brought on the idea that the two classes were interested in common, and on this ground Myers assumed to represent 200 of them, without distinction; and the final decree of the court shows that he was permitted to represent both classes. It is shown above that the two classes did not necessarily have a common interest in the subject-matter of the suit; and in the absence of a statement of facts showing that there existed some other ground for permitting one to sue in his own name . . in this case, in behalf of himself and others of his own class." Quinlan v. Myers, 29 Ohio St. 500, 508, per Gilmore, J.

in the question of law before the court; the community of interest must exist in the subject-matter of the suit,[30] or in the questions of law and fact involved in the general controversy.[31]

3. TEST OF JOINDER. As the exception in question was interpreted by the courts of equity, the limit of the right to sue or defend as representative of a class was fixed by the limit of the right of joinder of parties;[32] and there is nothing under the code to change this historic test.[33] In permitting the exception, however, the court will exercise care that the record parties represent the interest of the others sufficiently for an honest and fair trial.[34]

F. Control of Suit and Responsibility — 1. RIGHTS OF PLAINTIFF — a. Inchoate Parties. When a plaintiff sues for himself and all others who are similarly situated, the action in possible effect is the same as if all had joined as plaintiffs.[35] They are inchoate parties, in the sense that with the bringing of the original action they acquire rights which may indeed fail but may also be perfected by the decree.[36] According to some authorities they are so far virtually parties from the beginning that as respects the amount in controversy and the question of jurisdiction the court will look to the aggregate sum sued for and not merely to the amount of plaintiff's individual claim;[37] and as respects the statute of limitations the court will treat the action as if originally brought in the names of all those who subsequently come in.[38]

33. The rudimentary nature of the test is illustrated in the remark of Ingraham, J., in O'Brien v. Fitzgerald, 6 N. Y. App. Div. 509, 514, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 707, where he said: "A man having 100 promissory notes, made by different individuals might as well ask to sue all of them in one action, because if he had to bring the 100 actions against the 100 individuals he would be required to bring and maintain a multiplicity of suits."

b. Master of the Suit. But until an inchoate plaintiff has come into the record, or a judgment has been reached, the control of the action remains with the active plaintiff;[39] he may at pleasure continue, compromise, abandon, or dismiss the action.[40] If he fails in the action those whom he represents will also fail, for their rights rise no higher than his.[41]

c. Limits of Sole Control — (I) Effect of Intervention. On the other hand, as soon as a person similarly situated with the original plaintiff has come into the record in some proper way as a party plaintiff, he becomes vested with an interest in the subject-matter of the action, and thereafter nothing can be done by the original plaintiff in derogation of the rights and interests of the added co-plaintiff.[42] The original plaintiff still has the right to prosecute the action in good faith, but he cannot, without the consent of his added co-plaintiff, abandon or discontinue it, or unreasonably delay its prosecution.[43]

(II) Effect of a Judgment. The record plaintiff's right of control ceases when he has prosecuted his action to a judgment, whether interlocutory or final, which declares the rights and liabilities of the various parties interested.[44]

39. In some cases the active plaintiff is not necessarily the record plaintiff, as when the original plaintiff of record has transferred his entire cause of action after action begun and before judgment. Here the action may go on in the name of the original plaintiff but under the control of his assignee. Hirshfeld v. Fitzgerald, 157 N. Y. 166, 51 N. E. 997, 46 L. R. A. 839.

He may dismiss or compromise it, or make any other disposition of it which he sees fit; and as a correlative right to this, the defendant may tender satisfaction, and compel him to accept it." And see Piedmont, etc., L. Ins. Co. v. Maury, 75 Va. 508, 513. In this case it is said: "It is conceded, so far as the petitioners are concerned, that up to the very instant of the application to be made parties, Maury [the original plaintiff] had the indubitable right to dismiss his bill. When they made their application to come into the cause, Maury at once announced his purpose to dismiss, and asked liberty to do so." It was held that this liberty was properly granted.

2. RESPONSIBILITY OF DEFENDANTS BY REPRESENTATION. When those who are made defendants by representation all stand in the same situation as members of one class and are in fact fairly represented by the parties on the record, it is within the power of the court to make its judgment effective not merely upon the individuals in the record, but also upon the class represented by them.[45]

VI. DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS, AND AMENDMENTS.

A. Want of Capacity to Sue. Where it appears from the face of the complaint that plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue, the objection may be taken by demurrer; otherwise it must be taken by way of answer or a plea in abatement.[46] It cannot ordinarily be taken advantage of under the general issue.[47] As a general rule want of capacity to sue is not ground for dismissal or nonsuit.[48]

B. Misnomer. As a general rule a misnomer or misdescription of a party must be raised by a plea in abatement and not by a demurrer,[49] or motion to dismiss or for a nonsuit.[50] It cannot be taken advantage of in arrest of judgment,[51] or as a ground for new trial.[52] In some cases it may be taken advantage of as a variance.[53]

C. Misjoinder or Non-Joinder of Parties — 1. PERSONS ENTITLED TO OBJECT. — a. As to Defendants. Under the codes and practice acts of the several states the rule generally prevalent is that an objection for misjoinder of defendants may be made only by a defendant asserting that he is improperly joined.[54] Under the cause the rights of the other stockholders would at once have attached thereto." And see Collins v. Taylor, 4 N. J. Eq. 163.

common law, however, where it appears from the face of the complaint that there is a misjoinder of defendants, in an action ex contractu any of them may urge the misjoinder.[55] Plaintiff is not entitled to urge that defendants are not proper parties after his own act in joining them.[56] In case there is an improper joinder of causes of action[57] as well as of parties, either of the defendants may take advantage of the misjoinder.[58] But where defendants have agreed that a joint action may be brought against them, they cannot afterward question the regularity of such a proceeding.[59] Under the codes a demurrer for non-joinder of parties will not be sustained unless it appears that the demurrant has an interest in having the omitted party made defendant, or is in some way prejudiced by the omission.[60] So a nominal party against whom no personal judgment is sought cannot set up as a defense the non-joinder of necessary parties.[61] Defendants cannot object to the non-joinder of other defendants where they have secured the dismissal of the action,[62] or have consented to a discontinuance as to them.[63] Nor can they object where they have resisted an application to make the persons in question defendants,[64] or where, having been applied to, they have not correctly informed plaintiff as to the parties.[65]

b. As to Plaintiffs. As a general rule, under the codes a defendant is not entitled to object to the joinder of too many parties plaintiff unless he shows that he has been prejudiced thereby.[66]

2. Action of Court Sua Sponte. Where it appears that a necessary party has been omitted, the court should of its own motion require the omission to be corrected before proceeding farther.[67] The court, however, will not refuse to try an issue between parties because other unknown persons may be interested.[68] and in case the error is apparent from the face of the pleading it may be urged upon demurrer,[70] in arrest of judgment,[71] or on error.[72] In case the objection does not appear upon the face of the pleadings it may be urged as a ground for a plea in abatement,[73] or at the trial by a motion for a nonsuit,[74] or as a variance,[75] under the general issue. A misjoinder is likewise fatal,[76] and may be likewise availed of under the general issue.[77] The burden is on defendant to show that too many persons are joined as plaintiffs, and this cannot be shown by cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses.[78] or motion in arrest of judgment. Upon the trial the objection can only be urged to secure an apportionment of damages.[1]

(B) Defendants. Misjoinder of defendants will not as a rule defeat an action ex delicto,[2] and the error cannot be reached by demurrer,[3] or plea in abatement,[4] unless it appears from the face of the complaint that the tort could not be joint, in which case a demurrer will lie;[5] but the error may be cured by the fact that plaintiff takes a verdict against one only,[6] or enters a nolle prosequi.[7] A nonjoinder of defendants is not fatal,[8] and cannot be pleaded in abatement or in bar, or given in evidence under the general issue;[9] nor is it ground for demurrer.[10] A distinction is, however, made in the case of a cotenant sued in respect to the joint estate.[11]

b. Under the Codes.[12] Under the codes a misjoinder of plaintiffs[13] or defendants[14] is not as a rule material and, although in some cases it may be presented by answer[15] or demurrer[16] or by motion,[17] it will not prevent the rendition of a judgment according to the merits for or against those parties properly joined.[18] A misjoinder of plaintiffs cannot be reached by demurrer to the evidence.[19] A defect of parties is, however, usually a ground for demurrer,[20] or, where not apparent from the face of the complaint, available by answer.[21] It cannot be urged by motion for a new trial.[22] A misjoinder of plaintiffs under the codes is ground for dismissal only with respect to plaintiffs improperly joined, and in some jurisdictions a misjoinder of defendants is not a ground for nonsuit. A defect in parties likewise in some jurisdictions cannot be urged as a ground for dismissal or nonsuit.[23]

D. Amendments. Under the codes and practice acts of the several states much latitude is now permitted with regard to amendments affecting parties, and it is usual that the court be permitted, on motion of either party at any time, in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper to permit an amendment adding or striking out the name of a party, or correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or changing the character in which he is sued.[24] Under the strict rules of common law, however, amendments were rarely permitted, except in merely formal matters.

E. Waiver. As a general rule a defect in the pleading with reference to the parties is waived unless urged at the time and in the manner first available.[25] For example it cannot first be taken advantage of upon appeal.[26] The rules as to waiver do not, however, apply to indispensable parties.[27]

I. DEFINITION AND CLASSIFICATION.

Anciently the word "partition" was employed only with reference to a division of lands by parceners or coheirs which had descended to them by common law or by custom.[1] The word has long ceased to be used in this restricted sense. Herein it is intended to include every means by which property held by two or more persons in cotenancy is converted into estates in severalty and thereby divided among them, either by assigning parts to be held in severalty or by making a sale of the whole and awarding to each his share of the proceeds.[2] It is true that partition

2. "The object of the action of partition," said the supreme court of Iowa, "is to effect a division of real property among several joint owners, so that each may hold his respective share in severalty." Clark v. Richardson, 32 Iowa 399, 401. It is, however, by no means essential that each shall take his share in severalty, for by consent one may be given his share in severalty and the others continue to hold in cotenancy. As applied to homesteads, the word "'partition' is evimay be made without either selling the property or dividing it into specific parts, as where, being indivisible, the cotenants agree to possess the whole of it in turn for a specified period,[3] but this mode of partition is so rare as not to require extended consideration. Partition is accomplished either (1) by the act of the parties, as where the cotenants in person or by their agents agree upon the property to be awarded to each, or select persons to make partition for them,[4] or (2) by the courts on their interposition being sought by one or more of the cotenants.[5]

II. BY THE ACT OF THE PARTIES.

A. Of What Property May Be Made. It is difficult to conceive of any one class or item of property susceptible of being held in cotenancy which may not be divided by the cotenants. It may be of personal property,[6] as well as of real estate; of several parcels as well as of a single parcel, and on non-contiguous as well as of adjacent tracts;[7] or of part only of the lands of the cotenants as well as of the whole.[8] With respect to a single tract, the land may be divided and some interest left therein to be held in cotenancy, as when, on partitioning a tract, riparian rights,[9] or the right to mine,[10] are allowed to remain undivided. If there is any property which is not subject to partition by the act of the parties, it must be of the same class as is not subject to partition by the courts, namely: "Those things the division of which would be against the public right or policy, or would tend to impair some paramount right existing in a stranger to the cotenancy, or would outrage the public sense of propriety or good morals." Nor is the character of the estate held by the cotenancy material unless it is one which some statute forbids to be partitioned. Thus, it may be an estate in possession, whether in fee or in tail,[11] or for life,[12] or for years or any other conceivable period; and doubtless of estates not in possession,[13] and especially where, as in some of the states, partition of such estates can be compelled by resort to the courts. It is always essential to a partition that the property be held in cotenancy, and, although a parol partition is valid under the laws of the state, it cannot be operative where the property was owned in severalty so as to vest title in an allottee who, before the partition, held no title to the allotment in cotenancy or otherwise.[14]

dently used in the Constitution in its legal sense, and means the act or proceeding through which two or more co-owners cause the thing to be partitioned to be divided into as many shares as there are owners, and which vests in each of such persons a specific part with the right to possess it free from a like right in other persons who before partition had an equal right to possess." Hudgins v. Sansom, 72 Tex. 229, 231, 10 S. W. 104. A partition "is a separation between joint owners or tenants in common of their respective interests in land, and setting apart such interests, so that they may enjoy and possess the same in severalty." Meacham v. Meacham, 91 Tenn. 532, 535, 19 S. W. 757. It always implies an interest in different persons in the property to be divided. Brady v. McCosker, 1 N. Y. 214. Very strangely it was said in a recent case "the object of partition is a division of the estate between the legal owners of it regardless of equitable claims." Longley v. Longley, 92 Me. 395, 398, 42 Atl. 798 [citing Tilton v. Palmer, 31 Me. 486]. Doubtless that was the effect of a partition at law; but in equity, and under the American statutes equitable claims and titles may be considered and are generally controlling. B. Devices For Making the Allotment. As partition by act of the parties rests on their agreement, it is obvious that they may resort to any method which to them seems best, and that it must be impossible to specify all the methods that may be resorted to, for human ingenuity may devise ways not hitherto employed and which nevertheless satisfy all the interested parties. When partition was spoken of only as an act of the parceners, it was said that they might effect it: (1) By an agreement to which all were parties designating the parcel to be held in severalty; (2) by appointing someone to divide the lands in equal parts which the sisters had the right of selecting in the order of their seniority; (3) by having the elder sister make division in equal parts, in which event, she must choose last for her part; and (4) by dividing the lands into as many tracts as there were parceners and putting the name or other designation of each tract in a scroll covered with wax and then requiring these scrolls to be drawn by the sisters in the order of their seniority.[15] The parties may, instead of dividing the property in specie, provide for its sale and the division among them of the proceeds,[16] or they may agree upon the value of a moiety and make payment therefor to a consenting cotenant in any manner acceptable to him, dividing the balance among the remaining cotenants,[17] or may provide that specified sums shall be paid by the persons receiving the more valuable allotments, and that, until paid, such sums shall be secured by a lien thereon.[18] The partition may also result from the adoption by the parties of an invalid judicial proceeding.[19] The authorities may not always agree as to whether a transaction by which lands theretofore held in cotenancy came to be held in severalty is a partition or a sale. If the cotenants execute conveyances the result of which is that each of them becomes seized in severalty of a part of the property and ceases to have an undivided interest in every other part, the transaction may safely be regarded as a partition.[20] A contract by which one cotenant takes all the common property at a stipulated price has also been said not to amount to a partition,[21] but to a transfer by one cotenant of all his interest in the common property to another,[22] or of all the interests of the several cotenants to a third person is usually regarded merely as a sale.[23] As hereinbefore stated, a partition need not include the whole property. If it is of personal property or slaves, it may result from a sale of a part only, which may be regarded as a severance from the cotenancy of the portion sold.[24] If lands contain minerals, the partition may be restricted to the surface, leaving the rights to the minerals unaffected, the presumption being, however, until the contrary is shown, that the partition included the minerals as well as the surface.[25] There can, however, be no partition which leaves all the cotenants interested in every part of the common property. By their partition some one of them must cease to be a cotenant in some part of such property.[26]

C. Persons Who May Make and Be Bound by a Partition — 1. Generally. If partition was ever restricted to coparceners, such has long ceased to be the case, and every cotenant, other than by the entireties, may be a party to, and bound by, a partition effected by the act of the parties. It is not necessary that he should have been one of the cotenants at the creation of the cotenancy, for each cotenant may transfer his interest, and when he does so, he can no longer effectively join in a voluntary partition,[27] and such partition, to be effective, must be concurred in by his grantee.[28] None but cotenants can make partition. Although owners in severalty of different parcels of land might by an agreement operating as a conveyance set off to one another different parcels of land and thus give to each grantee a tract in which he before had no interest, the transaction would not be a partition.[29]

2. Incompetents and Persons Under Disability — a. Married Women. Where the rule is maintained that partition by act of the parties must be consummated by conveyances, it follows that an incompetent person cannot be bound by such partition at all, and that a person under disability can be bound only by conveyances executed in such manner as would be sufficient to transfer a title in severalty. A married woman may be a cotenant or the wife of a cotenant, and therefore a partition may be sought to be asserted against her either as one of the owners or for the purpose of preventing her assertion of any right of dower in the parcels not set off to her husband. In those states where parol partitions are sustainable, a married woman may be bound by a partition, although she does not undertake to execute any conveyance pursuant thereto, or attempting to make such a conveyance, does not acknowledge it in the manner required to make it operate against a married woman.[30] And where by law a wife is by statute incompetent to convey certain of her lands, she may join in and be bound by a deed of partition, because if she does not consent to partition, she may be compelled to do so by suit.[31] When a husband and wife are cotenants of the same parcel of land, it is doubtful whether they may directly partition it otherwise than

See 38 Cent. Dig. tit. "Partition," § 3.

In Ohio the voluntary partition of lands of which a married woman was a cotenant was valid if assented to by her husband, during the continuance of his estate by the curtesy, but was not binding on her or her heirs after the termination of that estate. Foster v. Dennison, 9 Ohio 121; Doe v. Dugan, 8 Ohio 87, 31 Am. Dec. 432; Seawell v. Berry, 55 Fed. 731.

So in North Carolina it is said that a parol partition cannot be sustained where there are interested in the land a feme covert and infants incapable of making the partition. Camp Mfg. Co. v. Liverman, 123 N. C. 7, 31 S. E. 346.

In making partition of real property of which a married woman was a cotenant, both courts and conveyancers were often careless, and their carelessness frequently resulted in allotments or conveyances to her husband, or to him and her, which should have been to her only. The courts go very far in construing both allotments and conveyances as if they had been made to her, and treat both her interest and her husband's in the property precisely the same as it was in the moiety before the allotment or conveyance. Foster v. Hobson, 131 Iowa 58, 107 N. W. 1101; Hays v. Marsh, 123 Iowa 81, 98 N. W. 604; Brown v. Humphrey, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 95 S. W. 23. The last case cited supra involved and sustained a partition by a husband assuming to act for and on behalf of his wife.

by the intervention of the courts, unless the common law has been so abrogated as to permit each of them to convey to the other.[32] Probably, however, they may join in a conveyance to a third person for the purpose of having him execute conveyances which will vest a distinct parcel in each, to be held in severalty. The usual mode of effecting a partition by which married women are sought to be bound is by the execution of appropriate conveyances in which they and their husbands join executed in the mode prescribed for conveyances in severalty. Sometimes for want of due care in drafting such conveyances, both husband and wife are named as grantees of the parcel assigned to her. Generally the conveyance will nevertheless be construed merely as a deed in partition creating no title and only as vesting in her an estate in severalty corresponding in value to the estate before held by her in cotenancy and as conferring no additional title on her husband.[33] If, by mistake, he is named as the sole grantee, a court of equity will correct the mistake so as to protect the interest of the wife and her heirs.[34]

b. Infants. An infant may be compelled to make a partition, and hence it has been inferred that he may do so voluntarily and be, to some extent at least, bound by the partition.[35] We think, however, that the utmost that can be affirmed of a partition as against a minor cotenant is that he cannot avoid or disregard it capriciously and without reason, nor can he apparently affirm it for some time after reaching his majority and subsequently escape from it. While partition may be made on behalf of a minor by his prochein ami,[36] or his regularly appointed guardian, its effect is not generally any greater than if made by the minor personally, and may be avoided for inequality.[37] In truth, guardians are rarely, if ever, authorized to make partition on behalf of their wards, and general language in a statute purporting to authorize guardians to transact business appertaining to minors will not be construed as including partitions by act of the parties.[38] Of course, in those states wherein partitions by parol are not recognized, it is obviously impossible for a minor acting either by or without a guardian to become bound by a voluntary partition in the absence of some statute authorizing his guardian or some other person to act for him in executing the conveyance essential to the transfer of his title.

c. Lunatics. While we have not discovered any judicial consideration of the matter, we think it may be safely affirmed that if one of the cotenants is a lunatic, a partition by act of the parties must have the same and no greater effect against him than if he were an infant, and, even when he is represented by his committee or guardian, that the resulting partition may be avoided if not fair and equitable, and especially when the consent of the committee was induced by the false representations of the other cotenants.[39] assigned to each becomes at once subject to all liens existing against his moiety preceding the partition.[40] This would be the result of a partition by the courts, and it is fairly inferable that the parties have the right to do what the courts would do for them and the encumbrancers, namely: Make partition, to be followed by a transfer of all liens existing against their respective moieties to the parcels set apart to each in severalty. Hence, generally speaking, it may be said that a lien-holder is bound by the partition made by the cotenants,[41] although this rule has been denied in at least one state.[42] It is probable that a lien-holder will not be allowed to disturb and avoid a partition to which he was not a party merely because he chooses to do so and without any reference to whether it is, as against him, equitable or inequitable, and it is certain that such a partition will not be permitted to disturb his lien or seriously impair its value. On being informed that a partition is about to be made which will imperil his lien, the lien-holder may resort to equity and thereby prevent the threatened injury.[43] If he holds a judgment or attachment lien, he may proceed to enforce it by appropriate process notwithstanding the partition.[44] If the interest of the cotenant has been sold under execution, a subsequent partition to which he is not a party cannot prejudice his rights.[45] Where three cotenants orally agreed to partition their lands, and that a particular lot should be assigned to R, and conveyances were accordingly made to the other two cotenants, but no deed to R, and it appeared that he had never become entitled to a conveyance because he failed to perform the provisions of the agreement for equality of partition, and that there had been no acts of exclusive ownership by him of the lot in question, it was held that he had at most only an equitable interest in the shares of his cotenants, and that a sale of his interest under execution passed title to an undivided one-third only as against the grantee of the other two cotenants.[46] As the result of an agreement for a partition certain charges may be imposed against one or more of the parties on the tract assigned to him in the nature of owelty, in which event such charge constitutes a lien enforceable against the purchaser with notice at an execution sale.[47]

b. Wife's Inchoate Right of Dower. Upon the making of a partition, if any one of the cotenants was a married man, his wife's inchoate right of dower attaches to the parcel assigned to him and is released as to the parcel assigned to the other cotenants. Hence it is generally held that she need not join in a proceeding for partition nor in any conveyance necessary to consummate it.[48] She is bound by the partition if it is fair and equitable, for if this be conceded respecting it, it does not and cannot operate to her prejudice. Probably actual fraud on the part of the husband would enable his wife to avoid or disregard the partition as against persons holding the property with notice thereof.[49] If the property is not divided into equal parts, but, on the contrary, the parcel assigned to the husband is of less value than that assigned to his cotenant, and on account of this inequality the latter pays the former a sum of money, the wife's right of dower is not restricted to the parcel conveyed to her husband, and she may, after his death, maintain a proceeding to recover her dower in the parcel conveyed by him to his cotenant.[50] If a husband makes a conveyance of his moiety and his grantee and the other cotenants subsequently partition the property, assigning a parcel in severalty to each grantee, this proceeding appears to have no effect on the wife and leaves her at liberty, after her husband's death, to have her dower assigned out of the whole tract.[51]

D. The Binding of Cotenants by Their Agents and Other Representatives — 1. By the Action of Arbitrators or Commissioners. Where the cotenants are unable to agree upon a partition, they sometimes select one or more persons to make it for them, and when the persons so selected, whether styled commissioners or arbitrators, make the partition, it has the same effect as a partition made by the parties themselves.[52] Whether a statute providing that no submission to arbitration shall be made respecting the claim of any person to any estate in fee or for life of real estate forbids partition by arbitrators seems to be doubtful, one decision apparently holding the affirmative,[53] and another and more carefully considered decision the negative.[54] The award, if by arbitrators, may be set aside on grounds applicable to other arbitrations and awards.[55] The award or division made by the arbitrators probably does not of itself transfer title, unless, as is sometimes the case, some statute has been enacted on the subject recognizing the proceeding, directing what shall be done as evidence of the award, and apparently attaching conclusive effect to it.[56] Otherwise conveyances should be executed by the cotenants conforming to the award,[57] and, if they refuse, equity may compel them to do so.[58] A submission to arbitration may be in the form of a deed executed by the cotenants mutually releasing and conveying to each other the parts which shall be allotted to each, in which event, on the happening of the conditions prescribed, the conveyance takes effect as a deed of partition and release vesting in each of the cotenants the premises allotted to him.[59] Any irregularity in the action of the arbitrators necessarily becomes immaterial if the cotenants, by a proper conveyance, confirm the award made.[60] Although the person appointed to make a partition does not give his personal attention thereto, but, by agreement with one of the cotenants, submits the partition to disinterested persons, whose arbitrament he confirms by executing the necessary indenture, there is no valid objection to the partition.[61]

A partition by arbitration is binding on adult parties who submitted thereto in writing and their mutual agreement for such submission is based upon a sufficient consideration where all are cotenants of estates of like character, but if one of them is a widow having a life-estate only, this will not support a partition giving her a fee. 2. By the Acts of Other Agents. The title to property may be vested in trustees or even in executors under such circumstances or by such an express delegation of authority as to warrant their making partition thereof among the persons who become entitled thereto or joining in a partition with other cotenants when the interest over which the authority is given is that of a cotenant only.[62] There can be no doubt that a cotenant having power to join in a partition by act of the parties may delegate his power to an agent selected for that purpose, and that such agent may bind his principal as to all matters falling within such delegation. Furthermore, although a professed agent had not authority at the time he purported to act for his principal, the latter may ratify the action and bind himself by it.[63] A delegation of authority to sell property does not authorize the agent to join in a partition of land of which his principal is a cotenant;[64] but if the agent is authorized to exchange, or sell and exchange, or to dispose of property and invest the proceeds, he is authorized to join in a partition in behalf of his principal.[65]

3. By the Act of Persons Other Than Their Agents. In England it has been held that a tenant in tail may make a partition and that it will bind the issue.[66] It may be that this position is sustainable, but if it is, it constitutes, we believe, the only exception to the general rule that those who join in a partition cannot prejudice others having independent estates and not parties thereto. The courts of the United States, so far as they have spoken on the subject, dissent from the English decision and maintain that an heir in tail may, upon the death of the tenant in tail, refuse to recognize the partition and claim all the rights to which he would have been entitled had no partition been made.[67] As a general rule no person who is not a party to a partition is affected thereby unless he subsequently ratifies it.[68] If partition can be made in any case by an act of the legislature, the effect of such act cannot extend to one who had no agency in procuring and is not mentioned in it.[69] Although the cotenants joining in the partition hold the whole legal title, yet if one of them has previously agreed to convey to a third person, the latter cannot be deprived of the benefit of his agreement by the partition.[70] The rule that a cotenant not joining in a partition is not affected thereby has an apparent exception in the case of "personal property, severable in its nature, and existing in common bulk and being of the same quality throughout." In the United States, "as to all property of which the share of each cotenant can be ascertained by weight or measurement without the assistance or consent of the others," either may take any portion thereof not beyond his share, and this is regarded as a lawful severance or partition giving him title in severalty to the part thus taken by him and extinguishing or diminishing his interest in the remainder.[71] Whenever a cotenant is authorized to make such severance or partition, his creditors, acting under an execution or attachment against him, may lawfully seize and sever his share, and thereby in effect accomplish a partition thereof.[72]

E. Evidence of the Partition — 1. Parol — a. Legal Estates. At the common law, joint tenants, except when their estate was for years only, could not make partition otherwise than by deed, but tenants in common or parceners could partition by parol, which in the case of a tenant in common must have been accompanied by livery of seizin.[73] The courts have never been able to agree whether this rule of the common law is wholly abrogated by the statute of frauds. A large minority of the authorities, however, maintains the affirmative. Under them a parol partition, even when followed by possession taken under and in harmony with it, does not vest title in severalty.[74] On the other hand, in the United States a majority of the authorities, constantly increasing, practically disregards the statute of frauds when a parol partition has not only been directly agreed upon by the parties in interest, but further, been consummated by taking possession in accordance with it. Probably it may not be affirmed that such partition is generally deemed operative as a transfer of the legal title, but, whether so regarded or not, it protects all persons holding under it in their right of possession and assures to them every other right of beneficial ownership.[75] Even in Kentucky, where "it is a well-settled principle under repeated adjudications that a verbal division of land is invalid, under the statute of frauds, and invests the purchaser with no title whatever," if followed by fifteen years' continuous and exclusive possession, it ripens into a title which will entitle the holder to possession if illegally dispossessed.[76] In New Jersey, where it is denied that parol partition accompanied by possession thereunder of less than twenty years can be effective, it is conceded that there may be circumstances under which "co-tenants may be estopped by their acts from asserting that there was no partition, although there is no technical estoppel by record or any written conveyance."[77] Where the rule prevails that partition may be by parol, it necessarily follows that it may be established by any evidence, whether oral or not, which satisfies the court or jury that the cotenants actually agreed upon a partition or assented to a partition made by others,[78] and it is not indispensable that any corporeal boundaries be marked or established if the agreement proved furnishes all the data requisite for establishing them.[79]

b. Trust or Equitable Estates. Where an estate is so far exempt from the operation of the statute of frauds that it may be created by parol, it may be divided among the coöwners in like manner. Therefore property held in trust where no writing is necessary to create the trust or to show the rights of the cestui que trust may, when held in cotenancy, be divided by parol by the persons interested as beneficiaries.[80]

c. Aiding Parol Partition in Equity. In equity a parol partition followed by possession in accordance therewith has always been regarded as vesting the several allottees with the title in severalty to their respective allotments. The result of this is not only that they are entitled to be treated in equity as the owners thereof, but further that they may there obtain such relief as is necessary for their protection, including specific performance of the agreement for partition, or, in other words, the conveyance to them of the legal title, for, notwithstanding the partition, it may still be regarded as not vested in harmony therewith.[81] It is essential to warrant the interposition of equity that the partition should have been completed. Hence, if three cotenants agree to divide their property into three parcels, one of which is taken possession of by one of their number with the consent of the others, and all agree respecting the other elements and details of the partition, except as to which of the others shall take either of the remaining parcels, and, before this latter is agreed to, one of them dies, the partition remains incomplete at his death, and equity cannot decree the conveyance of the parcel of which possession had been taken.[82]

2. WRITTEN — a. Agreements. An agreement in writing for a partition has little, if any, greater effect than a parol agreement, except that it is more easily proved and, if properly executed, cannot be affected by the plea of the statute of frauds. If it does not contain words purporting to convey, transfer, or release to the respective cotenants the parts allotted to them, it is probably not good at law as a transfer of the legal title, but is respected in equity. An agreement will there be recognized as a complete partition and will preclude the assertion of claims founded on any previous agreement.[83] Agreements for partition will be liberally construed.[84] But the fact that a mother and son join in the execution of a conveyance, the purchase-money of which was paid to him, will not of itself establish a partition.[85] One who refuses to abide by an agreement for partition cannot afterward obtain the benefit of it.[86] An agreement declaring that the owners of a farm agree to any division which the majority in interest shall decide upon as just and equitable refers to the manner of partition only, and does not authorize such majority to set off to any cotenant a portion of the land to which he does not assent.[87] If an agreement provides that one of the parties shall erect and maintain a fence at his own expense, the obligee cannot require the giving of a mortgage to secure the performance of the agreement, but only the recording of the covenant.[88] If there are five cotenants, and the agreement declares that the lands cannot be divided into as many parts as there are cotenants, and that three of them shall take specified parcels at stated prices, and the lands or proceeds shall be divided among the five so as to equalize their respective portions, it has been held to be an agreement for a sale and not for partition.[89]

b. Mutual Conveyances. In England cotenants desiring to make a partition usually joined in conveying the entire property to a trustee and his heirs, and on this seizin transmitted the use of each particular allotment to the party for whom it was intended.[90] In America partition is usually made either by a single writing in which all the parties join, and containing apt words to vest the title in the persons to whom the respective allotments have been made,[91] or by separate conveyances in which each of the cotenants, other than the grantee, unite. When the latter method is adopted, all the writings must be regarded as a single instrument.[92] A partition need not include all the lands of the cotenancy.[93] Conveyances by two tenants in common respectively by which the one conveys to the other the north half and the latter to the former the south half of the tract operate as a complete partition.[94] It has even been held that if each of the conveyances specifies as a boundary "land this day deeded" by the grantor to the grantee, that the deeds are not void for uncertainty, and that the boundary between them thus referred to may be established by parol evidence.[95] A partition between the widow and children of a decedent may convey to one child an allotment excepting the life claim of the widow, in which case it reserves to her a life-estate with remainder in fee to such grantee.[96]

c. Conveyances to Strangers. If each of the cotenants conveys to a stranger in severalty a tract designated as being equal in amount to the moiety of the grantor, as where, there being two cotenants, one conveys the north half of the tract to A, and the other the south half to B, these conveyances probably operate as a complete partition,[97] or as evidence of a partition made by the parties before their execution.[98]

d. Location Made Pursuant to a Conveyance. If an owner of a tract of land conveys a designated number of acres therein and by his conveyance gives his grantee the right to locate the part which he shall choose to take, the grantor and grantee are thereby made tenants in common, with a power on the part of the latter to locate his part to be held by him in severalty, and his location pursuant to this power operates as a complete partition between him and his grantor.[99]

e. Partition by Proprietors. In the New England colonies, and also in New York, proprietors of large grants of land exercised the power of partition by vote or ballots, whereby at a meeting of such proprietors, the share of one of them was set off to him to be held in severalty.[1] It was not material that the allottee was misnamed if, from all the proceedings, he could be identified.[2] In New York the proprietors had, under the colonial act of 1762, the power of appointing commissioners to proceed to make partition and put on file their proceedings, which, it was declared, should be good evidence of the partition. was held, however, that the recital in these proceedings that certain members, styled proprietors, appointed such commissioners was not evidence of their lawful appointment, and until such appointment was otherwise proved, the validity of the partition was not established.[3]

F. The Presumption of Partition. Rarely, if ever, can the court find, as a proposition of law, that a partition has been made in the absence of direct evidence of that fact, and the difficulty will be greater in those states which insist that an agreement for partition is within the statute of frauds than in those which concede the validity of parol partition.[4] But even if a conveyance in writing, duly executed, be regarded as necessary to a complete partition, it is evident that such conveyance may, after being made, be lost, and hence it cannot be said that partition cannot be inferred in the absence of the deed. Whether a partition has been made is a question of fact for the decision of the jury, or of the court when it is authorized to discharge the functions of a jury. A partition may be established by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence, and whenever there has been separate and distinct possession in severalty, maintained for a considerable time, with conveyances or a claim of title in severalty, the fact of such possession and the attendant circumstances are admissible in evidence and may justify the jury in presuming a partition, although there is no direct evidence on the subject, and perhaps even where the evidence shows an attempted partition which on its face, as a matter of law, must be declared insufficient and void.[5]

G. Ratification and Estoppel. Although a partition is for some reason not binding on all the parties essential to its complete operation, it may become fully effective at some subsequent period, as where all the parties enter upon and occupy the parts severally set aside to them, or otherwise claim the benefit of the partition, or assume a position relative thereto from which they cannot equitably be permitted to recede. In all of such cases the partition may become complete through the operation of the doctrine of ratification or estoppel.[6] Therefore, upon the question whether a partition has been made, any evidence is admissible which tends to show either the ratification of the partition, or conduct from which the party seeking to disregard it must be held to be estopped from so doing. Although acts are proved tending to show ratification, this evidence may be rebutted by declarations of the party at the time of doing them, as where it appears he erected a division fence corresponding to the line of the partition, evidence is admissible that he at the same time notified the other party in interest of an intention to commence a suit for partition.[7]

H. Partition Void as to Some of the Parties or Some of the Property. The object of partition being to terminate the cotenancy and vest in severalty the several parcels assigned to the respective cotenants, if it fails in this object, the consideration for it fails, and it does not operate at all or to any extent. Although it is made by deed, if it appears that some of the persons intended to be bound did not execute the deed, and hence are not bound by the partition, those executing the deed are not affected by it and hold their moieties as before its execution was attempted;[8] and it is said that the same result must follow when the parties undertake to partition more land than they own, and the title to some of the allotments must therefore fail.[9] There is no doubt that a cotenant who did not join in a partition may generally ratify or adopt it,[10] but we apprehend that he must do so while all the other parties treat it as valid, for he surely is not at liberty to remain free from the obligation of a partition until his pleasure or interest moves him to adopt it and then bind them by his adoption.

I. The Effect of the Partition by Act of the Parties — 1. The Parties Who May Be Considered as Bound Thereby. It seems almost superfluous to state that the parties to a partition are bound thereby as well as by any conveyance or other writing which they may execute in connection therewith and cannot afterward assert, with success, that partition should not have been made,[11]

Hence, if there is a partition by agreement among the surviving children of a decedent, an administrator of a deceased child cannot, after the lapse of many years, avoid the partition, because, in the absence of creditors, he can only take in trust for the next of kin, and they, by retaining the allotments, have ratified and bound themselves by the partition. because it violated some trust,[12] or that the will upon which the title of the cotenants depended, although probated in another state, had not been probated in the state where the partition was made,[13] or that the interest of one of the cotenants was embraced in an interest set apart prior to the partition and not yet terminated,[14] or that the part set off to one to be held in severalty was worthless,[15] or that the partition was unjust,[16] or the survey on which the partition was based was incorrect.[17] A bona fide purchaser from one of the allottees is protected by the partition as against any claim of the other parties.[18] The effect of the registration laws upon parol partitions is not well settled. In one case they were said not to apply to such partitions,[19] while in another it was held that a purchaser at an execution sale was not bound by a partition of which he had no notice.[20] A cotenant not a party to a partition is not bound thereby.[21] If there exists any exception to this rule, it arises in the case of personal property, like grain, severable in its nature, existing in common bulk and being of the same quality throughout, in which event, as we have heretofore shown, a coöwner or his creditors, acting under the authority of a writ of execution or attachment, may take from the common mass a quantity not in excess of his moiety and thereby vest in him title in severalty thereto.[22] Lien-holders and the wives of cotenants, as we have heretofore shown, although not parties to a partition, are to a qualified extent bound thereby,[23] and so are persons under disability who participate therein in person or by their guardians.[24]

2. Upon the Title and the Liens Thereon. A partition by act of the parties does not create any new, additional, or different title, nor remove any restrictions or burdens thereon.[25] Each of the allottees is deemed to hold the same title which he held before the partition, the undivided interest which he held in the whole tract being by the partition severed from the interests of his cotenants and concentrated in the parcel set apart to him, and their interests being excluded therefrom and his parcel becoming subject to all liens which existed against his moiety and freed from all liens existing against the moieties of his cotenants.[26] If one of the allottees has before the partition conveyed a part of the lands allotted to him, he acquires no new title thereto, and hence cannot disturb his grantee.[27] If the grantees of an allotment are husband and wife and his interest before the partition that of a tenant by the curtesy, it remains of the same character afterward.[28] If the title to a moiety was taken and held by descent, its character is not changed in this respect by the partition, and, on the death of the allottee, the title will be distributed among his heirs in the mode provided for title acquired by descent rather than in the manner applicable to title acquired by purchase.[29] So, it is said, if some of the parties to a partition own moieties in fee and others lesser estates, the latter acquire no new title by the partition to the portion assigned to them in severalty and will hold such portion only by the limited title under which they held their moieties.[30]

3. In the Event of a Failure of Title. At the common law, as we have hereinbefore shown, as cotenants could be compelled to make partition, it was held that they ought not to lose anything thereby, and hence, upon the failure of title to the part allotted to one of them, he was entitled to relief as against his late cotenants. In other words, in partition by the courts there is an implied warranty which, on the failure of title, must be made good by the other cotenants. With respect to partition by act of the parties, as it is not compulsory, it has been claimed, with some reason, that the warranty implied in the case of partition by the courts does not exist, and hence that there is no such warranty, and that, on failure of title to an allotment, the allottee is not entitled to redress unless his right thereto can be supported by the express covenants of his deed.[31] At the common law, however, an implied warranty existed on a voluntary partition between coparceners.[32] There is in the United States a tendency to extend this rule to all cotenants, and especially to those claiming title by descent,[33] and to hold that, on the failure of title to his allotment, the allottee is entitled to a new partition.[34] Where partition is by deed, it may well be held to be an affirmance of title on the part of the grantors, estopping them from denying that their respective grantees were invested with title in fee and in severalty in the parts allotted to them.[35] Whether a deed amounts to an affirmance of title or not, on the failure of title to any part, there may be a new partition in which all the parties in interest may be brought before the court, which will at least do all in its power to protect the title of the party whose allotment has failed against the party to the original partition, the defect in whose title has caused the failure.[36] If the deed of partition does not contain words adequate for the transfer of the fee, its effect may be limited to the lines of the allottees, and hence the heirs of one of them may not be able to rely upon a warranty expressed or implied therein.[37] Where by statute or otherwise a warranty is implied in partition, it is not broken until eviction, and the statute of limitations does not, prior to that time, run against the person damaged by the breach of the warranty.[38] A vendee of a cotenant, on being evicted, is restricted to an action against his vendor and cannot insist that the deficiency in his title be made good out of lands of the vendee of another of the original cotenants.[39] If the parties making partition are tenants for life only, it may well be held that, on one of them acquiring an additional title, it will not pass to the other allottees by virtue of the partition,[40] and this rule has been held applicable in ordinary cases;[41] but this holding seems inconsistent with the authorities already cited in this subdivision.

4. As Dependent on Conveyances. Probably the estoppel arising from receiving a deed exists when its object is to partition property. It has hence been held that the grantee is estopped from denying that he took title thereunder.[42] Where the partition of property has been accomplished by conveyance, its effect may be dependent on the special provisions or covenants therein and, to some extent, on the covenants, which, although not specially expressed, are necessarily implied, for we apprehend that the construction of the conveyance and the covenants implied from it are the same as of other conveyances, except in so far as they are modified by the circumstances of the case and the purposes for which the deed is executed. Here, as in the case of other conveyances, although the consideration may not be disputed for the purpose of avoiding the conveyance, its true nature may be shown in opposition to the language of the deed. Thus, although the conveyance purports to be for a consideration in money, extrinsic evidence is admissible, whether parol or written, to show that it was in fact a deed in partition, and, when this is shown, the deed is to be given the same effect, at least when it will not prejudice bona fide purchasers, as if its purpose had been declared on its face.[43] A husband joining in a deed of partition with his wife and named with her as a grantee of the part assigned to her is not thereby estopped from denying that no title passed to her and showing that he held title from an independent source.[44] As a general rule, however, if the deed of partition contains covenants or admissions, the parties are bound thereby and precluded from denying the truth of the admission,[45] or claiming title contrary to their warranty.[46] Where a deed of partition contains express covenants, they supersede all implied covenants or warranties.[47] Questions of construction or interpretation arise under partition as well as under other deeds, but they are to be resolved by considering the peculiar terms of each conveyance and the rules of construction applicable to all conveyances.[48]

J. Vacating or Rescinding. Under the civil law prevailing in Louisiana a partition could be rescinded for lesion or inequality beyond one fourth,[49] but the parties might by agreement provide that their partition should be irrevocable, in which event it could not be avoided for lesion in the absence of fraud.[50] An eviction subsequent to partition did not constitute any ground for rescinding it.[51] Where the partition was of certain bills receivable, constituting the whole of an estate, and bad notes were allotted to one of the parties, he had a right to maintain a subsequent proceeding to ratably apportion the deficiency among the others.[52] Under the common law, both as prevailing in England and as it is understood and administered in the United States, we think there is no ground for rescinding a partition or for relief therefrom in equity which would not be equally effective in rescinding or obtaining relief from any other agreement or conveyance;[53] and, on the other hand, that causes which were adequate to obtain relief from other agreements and conveyances are equally sufficient to warrant relief from partition.[54] The failure of one of the parties to pay a sum agreed by him to be paid to equalize the partition appears not to be a sufficient ground for setting it aside.[55]

III. By Suit or Action.

A. Jurisdiction — 1. In England — a. At Law. Although the courts of law in England from a date as early as the thirteenth century entertained actions to partition estates held in coparcenary, their jurisdiction over estates held in joint tenancy and by tenancy in common did not exist until conferred by the statutes of 31 Henry VIII, c. 1, and of 32 Henry VIII, c. 32, the former extending to estates of inheritance, and the latter for terms of life or years.[56] By comparatively recent statutes the jurisdiction of the courts of law over partition was withdrawn and confined exclusively to chancery.[57]

b. In Chancery. Possibly even before, but certainly soon after, the enactment of the statutes of 31 and of 32 Henry VIII, referred to above, the English courts of chancery commenced to entertain suits for partition.[58] Not until the assumption of jurisdiction by chancery was it possible to compel the partition of personal property. The jurisdiction so assumed was exclusive. Therefore, both in England and in the United States, chancery will partition personal property and courts of law will not, unless authorized by statute.[59]

2. In the United States — a. Of the National Courts. Such of the courts of the United States as possess general equity powers have jurisdiction over suits for partition. Hence the circuit courts of the United States may entertain suits in equity for that purpose.[60] These courts in civil actions, other than suits in equity and admiralty proceedings, are controlled by the rules of practice applicable to the courts of the state in which they sit, and when by statute or otherwise jurisdiction over actions in partition is vested in the courts of the state, it is also vested in such circuit courts.[61]

b. Of the State Chancery Courts. The several state courts possessing general equity or chancery powers have jurisdiction of suits for partition unless their authority has been abrogated or restricted by statute, and a statute or other law merely authorizing some other court to act will be construed as creating a concurrent jurisdiction, and not as interfering with the powers or modes of action of courts of equity.[62] In Georgia, however, resort may be had to equity when the statutory or legal remedy is inadequate, but not otherwise;[63] and in Massachusetts probably the jurisdiction of equity over partition has been entirely withdrawn.[64]

c. The Discretion of Courts of Chancery to Refuse to Act. Some doubt was created in England as to whether a court of chancery had not a discretion to refuse partition based on the legal title.[65] This doubt no longer exists, and in the United States it was never entertained.[66]

d. Of Probate and Orphans' Courts. In a number of the states courts having jurisdiction of the settlement and distribution of the estates of decedents have, in connection therewith, been given power to make partition. It is not material, for our present purpose, whether these tribunals are styled orphan or probate courts, or given some other name. Their partition is a part of the settlement and final disposition of the estates committed to their care, and, when it is such, will be treated elsewhere in this article.[67] The power to partition, as ancillary to the disposition of estates, may, constitutionally, be conferred on probate and like courts.[68] This jurisdiction is usually concurrent, and, when so, does not preclude resort to other courts.[69]

e. Of the State Courts of Law Generally. In the states which have adopted the common law, it must follow that those of their courts, irrespective of the names by which they are called, which are given general common-law jurisdiction have, in the absence of constitutional or legislative provision to the contrary, jurisdiction of actions for partition.

f. State Courts Designated by Statutes. In many of the states what is commonly known as the reformed procedure has been adopted, committing jurisdiction of what were formerly actions at law and what were formerly suits in equity to the same judicial tribunals. In other states statutes have been enacted confiding jurisdiction of partition to the courts designated therein, but such statutes, as we have already shown, are generally construed as not withdrawing the authority otherwise vested in courts of chancery.[70]

Alabama.—The probate court, but its jurisdiction does not prevent a resort to any other legal mode of obtaining partition.

3. Territorial Limits of. As the authority of the courts of each state and nation is restricted to the real property within its limits, it must follow that no court can partition lands situate outside of the state, if it is a state court, nor outside of the district if it is a court of the United States.[71] This is clearly so where the proceeding is in rem or at law. If, however, the suit is in equity and the court has authority to complete the partition by decreeing conveyances, there is some reason for insisting that it may partition lands in another state where all the parties are in court,[72] but the only authorities we have discovered hold otherwise.[73] What are the territorial limits, within the state, of the respective state courts must be ascertained by examining the state constitutions and statutes. Ordinarily the action of the court is restricted to lands within the county,[74] but if they are situated in two or more counties, the proceeding can generally be maintained in either.[75] In a few of the states partition cannot include any land lying beyond the county where the petition is filed,[76] although in Maine, if the proceeding is in the supreme judicial court, it may be instituted in any county, but, when an issue of fact is formed, the cause must be remitted for trial to the county where the lands lie.[77]

4. Limitation of by the Assumption of Jurisdiction by Another Court. If two or more courts in the same state have concurrent jurisdiction of a proceeding for partition, the one in which the proceeding is first commenced acquires exclusive jurisdiction which cannot be withdrawn or destroyed by any action subsequently instituted in another court.[78]

5. Waiver of Objections to. If a court has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter, consent cannot confer it. Failure to object will not impart force to its judgment.[79] But in the absence of want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter, a partition cannot be avoided because of some proceeding to which a party had the right to object, which he failed to exercise.[80] of waters or a mill-dam and waters.[86] While doubtless a cotenant of the right to take oil and gas from beneath a tract of land may compel partition of his right, such partition should be by sale, and it has been held that a partition by metes and bounds is void.[87]

3. Standing Timber. If two or more persons, as cotenants, own the timber standing on a parcel of land, no reason is perceived why any of them may not compel a partition. If an owner in severalty of land grants a moiety of the timber thereon, he may maintain a suit against his grantee for its partition.[88] If, however, one of the cotenants grants to a third person the timber on his moiety, the grant cannot, as against the cotenants of the grantor, create a cotenancy in the timber distinct from that in the land which will require them to submit to partition of the former not including the latter. The grantee therefore cannot maintain a suit for the partition of the timber only.[89] He nevertheless has the right to the timber on such part of the land as may be set apart to his grantor, and for the maintenance of this right must be allowed to prosecute a suit against the grantor and the other cotenants, or in case of their conveyance to a third person, then against such person, to compel the segregation of a parcel from which he may take timber.[90]

4. Incorporeal Hereditaments. Incorporeal hereditaments of every character,[91] if subject to voluntary transfer, are proper subjects of partition by suit, unless perhaps when such partition must prejudice the rights of third persons.[92] Hence it is said that reasonable estovers, corodies uncertain, piscaries uncertain, and a common sans nombre cannot be partitioned, because their division would increase the persons entitled to participate therein and make more grievous the burden imposed thereby,[93] which reasons, it must be admitted, do not seem valid as against a partition by sale.

5. Personal Property. In England courts of chancery entertained exclusive jurisdiction of the partition of personal property. In the United States the same rule must prevail in those states, if any there be, which have not given their courts of law jurisdiction over the subject. Without stopping to inquire to which class of courts jurisdiction has been confided, it suffices our present purpose to state that personal property of every class may be subjected to compulsory partition.[94] Rents are not real estate, and, if subject to partition at all, it must be as personal property.[95] The right to partition patents has been denied in Pennsylvania.[96]

6. WHETHER SHOULD INCLUDE ALL THE PROPERTY OF THE COTENANCY. Strangely, and apparently irrelevantly, it has been said that there is nothing in the law requiring the whole of a Mexican grant to be included in a partition suit brought by the claimants thereof,[97] from which, as there is nothing in the fact that title rests on a Mexican grant to exempt it from the law of partition, the inference might well be indulged that a cotenant might maintain as many suits to partition the property as his caprice dictated. Such surely is not the law, although it is doubtless true that a suit to partition any part of the lands of a cotenancy would confer jurisdiction on a court, and require such of the parties in interest as were before it to object to any partition which would not determine and make due provision for the rights of all the cotenants.[97a] It is now practically settled that a cotenant may convey to a third person an interest in a specific part of the common property, whether it consists of two or more separate parcels or of a single tract only, but that such a conveyance will not operate to the prejudice of the cotenants not joining therein, and that the grantee may lose his title if the parcel so conveyed to him should not be set off to him or his grantor on partition. There is, it must be admitted, a decision to the effect that if one cotenant conveys in severalty distinct parts of the common property to different persons, the other cotenant cannot obtain partition by a single suit against all such grantees.[98] The reverse of this is true, for a cotenant may include in one suit all the lands of the cotenancy, although grants in severalty of specific parts thereof have been made by his cotenant;[99] and a grantee in severalty of a cotenant cannot maintain a suit in partition embracing only the parcel conveyed to him.[1] In truth, where two or more persons become cotenants either of a single or of several distinct tracts of land, each of them is entitled to partition of all of their common property, within the jurisdiction of the court, by a single proceeding, and cannot be deprived of this right by any act or conveyance of any of his cotenants, and if any of such cotenants makes any conveyance in severalty, his grantee also has a right to a partition of the whole property, for thereby his rights are more likely to be respected. Every suit in partition should bring before the court all persons having any right or equity in the property.[2] Therefore such suit should include all the lands of the original cotenancy, and if it does not do so, any party, whether his interest extends throughout all such lands, or is restricted to some specific part thereof, may insist that the omitted land or lands be included in the suit, and that all persons be made parties thereto whose presence is necessary to a partition with such lands included.[3]

7. Difficulty, Inconvenience, or Pecuniary Loss Does Not Limit. When the remedy by partition was less ample and varied than at present, it was occasionally denied on the ground that the character of the property was such that it could not be divided into parcels without so far impairing its usefulness or value as to amount to a substantial destruction of the property interests of the parties,[4] and, when the application was at law, the courts sometimes declined to act, because the complainant, by resorting to chancery, could obtain relief less destructible and therefore more equitable.[5] In those states where separate courts of law and of chancery still exist and have concurrent jurisdiction of partition, we doubt not that either might refuse to proceed if its powers were so restricted that its proceeding must result in serious loss, from which a proceeding in a tribunal of the other class would be exempt. But the right to partition in some tribunal is ordinarily absolute, and not to be denied because it will result in great loss or inconvenience to some, or even to all, of the parties. This has always been the rule in England.[6] There can be no objection to it in the United States, where there can be no real difficulty in making partition, for the reason that if the value of the property is seriously diminished by its separation into as many parcels as there are moieties, the court may order a sale or sales. Partition will not therefore be denied either because of any supposed difficulty, nor on the suggestion that the Separate mortgages to different parcels.— In Cheney v. Ricks, 168 Ill. 533, 48 N. E. 75, it was held that if the complainants seeking partition had executed separate mortgages to different parcels, each parcel should be partitioned separately and independently of the others, but this referred merely to the action of the commissioners, and was not intended to require separate suits.

The joining of two or more parcels in partition, we must admit, was formerly looked upon as exceptional and doubtful, and, in some instances, expressly restricted to cases in which the same persons were cotenants of all the parcels. The better view, however, is that the omission of any parcel belonging to the cotenancy should be regarded as exceptional and presumptively erroneous, and not to be tolerated unless it clearly appears that partition, omitting such parcel, cannot prejudice any one in the assertion of any right he may have, whether legal or equitable. interest of the cotenants will be promoted by refusing the application or temporarily postponing action to secure the advantages to result from a raise in market values.[7]

8. PROPERTY, THE PARTITION OF WHICH IS AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY, OR WILL OUTRAGE THE PUBLIC SENSE OF PROPRIETY AND DECENCY. Partition may be denied on the ground that well-established public policy will not permit it. The instance which Lord Coke suggested, of a castle used for the necessary defense of the realm, although it would seem not subject to partition, in kind, could apparently be partitioned by sale. Railroads are sometimes, although rarely, owned in cotenancy. Public policy clearly forbids their partition otherwise than by sale. Their sale is also often forbidden by public policy, and where such is the case it cannot be brought about by an action or suit in partition.[8] The only instance in which partition has been denied on the ground that it would outrage the public sense of propriety and decency arose where two religious corporations had, as cotenants, procured and held land on part of which they had erected a church, and the remainder they used as a cemetery. The court refused to divide the property into parcels, or to put it up for sale.[9]

In all such cases there can be no compulsory separation. To any judicial proceeding seeking such separation, it is a sufficient answer, although several estates exist and are vested in many persons, none of such estates is held in cotenancy.[11] Plaintiff in the proceeding must fail, no matter what his interest in the property may be, if that interest is not the interest of a cotenant.[12] On the other hand he must succeed irrespective of the interests of defendants in so far as he is a cotenant of the property,[13] although none of them is interested in all the lands in which plaintiff is interested as a cotenant.[14]

2. The Combined Estates Must Equal an Estate in Severalty. There can be no partition of an undivided interest. The estate sought to be partitioned must be such that, if a parcel is assigned to any party, his estate therein will be an estate in severalty, and, if a sale is directed, its effect must be to transfer to the purchaser a like estate.[15]

3. Estates in Severalty Paramount to the Estate Held in Cotenancy — a. Dower Rights in the Whole Property. Although there is an estate held in cotenancy, there may also be an estate in severalty in the same property, as where, when a husband owned the whole, his wife's inchoate right of dower attached thereto, and by his subsequent conveyance or death the property vested in cotenancy subject to her right. Her interest, whether before or after his death, and, after his death, whether before or after the assignment of dower, is not an estate in cotenancy. She cannot compel partition, nor can partition be compelled against her. The cotenants may proceed to partition the estate held by them.[16] To this partition she is not a necessary nor a proper party,[17] and therefore, on principle, she should be held unaffected by it,[18] although a dictum asserts that, if she does not have her dower assigned prior to such petition, she must accept separate assignments out of the parcels set aside to the respective cotenants.[19]

b. Other Rights in Severalty. In every instance in which there is an estate in severalty, it must be exempt from partition unless the right has been expressly conferred by statute, although there are other estates in the same property held in cotenancy and subject to compulsory partition.[20] Thus, if the whole lands are subject to oil leases, the court will refuse to partition the oil under the land;[21] the heirs of a deceased wife cannot have partition of her realty as against her surviving husband in possession and entitled thereto as tenant by the curtesy,[22] nor can she, in the lifetime of her husband, maintain partition against his grantee;[23] nor can a husband surviving his wife have partition against her heirs, for they are remainder-men, and he as tenant by the curtesy is entitled to exclusive possession for life.[24] The rule here considered cannot defeat the right of a cotenant to the partition of an estate in possession, although he owns the remainder or reversion in fee. In such case the estate in possession is paramount and will be partitioned without considering or in any manner affecting the estate not in possession.[25]

4. Estates in Possession — a. The General Rule. The English statutes on the subject of partition first restricted the right to estates of inheritance, and subsequently extended it to estates for life or years.[26] Equity, while assuming general jurisdiction over the subject of partition, did not, it seems, extend that jurisdiction, as to real property, over estates not subject to partition at law, except that it always recognized equitable titles, and it was by statute 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, § 85, granted jurisdiction over copyhold estates. The general rule is that all estates in possession are subject to partition, with the exception of copyholds or mere estates at will. These neither the law nor the chancery courts undertook to partition unless expressly authorized by statute.[27]

b. Estates Held in Joint Tenancy. The statutes of 31 and of 32 Henry VIII extended the right of partition to joint tenants as well as to tenants in common. We believe that in every part of the United States estates held in joint tenancy are subject to compulsory partition, and that it is not a sufficient objection to such partition that it destroys the right of survivorship.[28]

c. Estates Held by Tenancy by the Entireties. An estate held by a husband and wife as tenants by the entireties is regarded as in severalty rather than in cotenancy, and not subject to partition.[29] Its partition may probably be compelled as part of the relief grantable in a suit for divorce.[30] If, however, a divorce is granted, the unity of the parties is thereby destroyed. As a consequence the tenancy by entireties is changed into a tenancy in common, either cotenant of which may sustain a suit for partition.[31]

d. Community Property. During the continuance of the legal relation of husband and wife, there can be no compulsory partition of the community property. After the death of either husband or wife, if the law does not vest the whole property in the survivor, either of two or more persons who become cotenants thereof may compel partition.[32] In a suit for divorce the court may make proper division of the common property and thereby convert husband and wife into cotenants, or set aside to each a share to be held in severalty.[33] If no action is taken in the court granting the divorce, it is probable that either of the late spouses may subsequently maintain a suit for partition.[34] and held in cotenancy, the right to partition may be affirmed in the absence of some paramount trust or agreement.[35]

5. Estates Not in Possession. It was the rule both at common law and in chancery that none but estates in possession were subject to compulsory partition.[36] This rule prevails in the United States except where it has been abrogated or modified by statute. The rule may be considered: (1) When an estate in remainder or reversion is sought to be partitioned without affecting the estate in possession; (2) when a reversioner or remainder-man seeks a partition which will also include the estate in possession; (3) when a cotenant of an estate in possession seeks partition which will include both it and the estate in reversion or remainder; and (4) when a cotenant of the fee seeks partition which will include all other estates whether in possession or not. In cases of the first class, neither actions nor suits for partition can be sustained,[37] except in a few states where the rule has been changed by statute allowing partition among remainder-men and reversioners subject to the preceding estate in possession.[38] The right, although created by statute in Illinois, cannot be exercised if the interest of the parties cannot be ascertained until after the death of the life-tenant.[39] In New York the right of a remainder-man to partition, first affirmed,[40] and subsequently denied,[41] was by statute extended to cotenants of vested reversions or remainders.[42] We believe no statute has yet conferred on a cotenant of an estate not in possession the right to compel a partition which will include and affect the estate in possession or any cotenant thereof.[43] A cotenant of an estate in possession less than in fee, although entitled to partition, cannot by his partition affect estates in reversion or remainder unless authorized to do so by statute.[44] Such right has been created in some of the states and therein a tenant for life in possession may compel a partition binding all interests, whether in possession, reversion, or remainder.[45] If several persons are cotenants of the fee, each therefore having the right to compel partition, it would be unreasonable to hold that any of his cotenants by creating an estate in reversion or remainder could defeat the right to a complete partition which would vest a title in fee. The more difficult question is, where there are two cotenancies, one of an estate in possession and the other of an estate in remainder or reversion, whether a cotenant of either by acquiring a moiety of the other, and thus becoming an owner of a moiety in fee, may compel partition of both estates and thus acquire title in fee and in severalty. In some of the states he can.[46] His right to do so is manifestly statutory, and, in the absence of statutes creating it, does not exist.[47] Of course partition may be made by suit where all the parties consent, although some of them might, from the nature of their estate, resist with success.[48]

D. Property and Estates Subject to Trusts and Agreements — 1. Property Held in Partnership. In personal property belonging to a partnership neither of the partners can be said to have any interest as a cotenant — the interest of each being only his share of the property which may remain after the settlement of the partnership affairs and the satisfaction of its obligations. Doubtless therefore such personal property is not subject to a suit for partition. Real estate, although acquired for partnership purposes and with partnership funds, is held in cotenancy where the title is taken in the names of the partners. It is nevertheless in equity regarded for some purposes as partnership property, and in England is very properly held not subject to partition.[49] We have met with no American decision denying the right to partition partnership real estate. In one case such partition was decreed, although the real property involved seemed to constitute the whole of the assets of an active partnership, and the partition must therefore have resulted in its dissolution.[50] Whether in any case partition may be denied because the realty involved is in equity partnership assets has not yet been determined in this country; but it seems quite certain there will be no such denial unless it can be shown that the property is required to satisfy partnership obligations.[51] If one has an interest merely entitling him Express and implied prohibitions of partition.— If a testator by his will gives property to his wife for her use and to receive the rents and profits during life or widowhood, and after her decease to be divided among his children, no trust is created, but a valid condition against partition prior to the extinguishment of her estate is imposed.

of the property is postponed to some future date, or, where, although there is no express direction for such postponement, the objects of the trust must be made impossible or difficult of accomplishment by a partition, such partition, if applied for, must be denied.[55] Where the trust is merely to secure the payment of loans or other debts, a partition is not subversive of it, and need not be denied.[56]

3. HOMESTEADS. Lands occupied as a homestead may well be regarded as subject to a trust imposed by law, which would necessarily be defeated by their partition. It must therefore be denied, although the title is vested in two or more persons as cotenants, as long as they or any of them remain entitled to occupy the

"Equity will not award partition at the suit of one in violation of his own agreement or in violation of a condition or restriction imposed upon the estate by one through whom he claims." The right to partition may be waived by implication, as where one purchases an undivided interest in realty for a sum to be repaid within a time specified from the rents and profits and the sale of iron ore therefrom. Roberts v. Wallace, 100 Minn. 359, 111 N. W. 289, 117 Am. St. Rep. 701. General provisions authorizing property to be partitioned do not justify a court in disregarding a provision in a deed under which the property is held that it shall not be sold until the youngest grantee arrives at maturity (Young v. Young, 49 S. W. 1074, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1741), nor any other valid provision by which the property is not to be sold until some future date, although the proceeds are then to be divided among testator's children (Hill v. Jones, 65 Ala. 214; Fischer v. Butz, 224 Ill. 379, 79 N. E. 659, 115 Am. St. Rep. 160; Cubbage v. Franklin, 62 Mo. 364; Serena v. Moore, 69 N. J. Eq. 687, 60 Atl. 953; Cahill v. Cahill, 62 N. J. Eq. 157, 49 Atl. 809; Outcalt v. Appleby, 36 N. J. Dec. 208; Wells v. Houston, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 233). The principle has obtained statutory expression and sanction in Missouri, by a declaration of Rev. St. (1899) § 4383, providing that no partition of lands can be had contrary to the terms of a will thereof. McQueen v. Lilly, 131 Mo. 9, 31 S. W. 1043; Stevens v. Larwill, 110 Mo. App. 140, 84 S. W. 113. This statutory rule cannot be avoided on the ground that the will was executed in another state (Stevens v. Larwill, supra), nor on the suggestion that partition will relieve the beneficiaries against an unfortunate condition not foreseen by the testator (Stevens v. De la Vaulx, 166 Mo. 20, 65 S. W. 1003). But a provision in a devise to testator's daughter and her children that the property is to be kept for the sole use of herself and children free from all debts and control of her husband is construed merely as excluding his interest and control and not as limiting the right of partition. Gordon v. McLeroy, 115 Ga. 768, 42 S. E. 68. If heirs, contrary to the terms of a will, voluntarily partition the property devised to them thereby, the partition is valid, and on one of them becoming bankrupt, his trustee cannot compel a new partition. Rapier v. O'Donnell, 106 La. 98, 30 So. 256. We doubt not that the delegation by a testator to his executors of the power to make partition may operate as an exclusion of the power of the court and prevent his heirs from maintaining an independent suit for partition, unless the executors unreasonably and capriciously refuse to exercise their power (Fischer v. Butz, 224 Ill. 379, 79 N. E. 659, 115 Am. St. Rep. 160), but the courts are apparently loath to construe directions made by a testator respecting the division of his property as intended to be exclusive (Marshall v. Rench, 3 Del. Ch. 239; Chouteau v. Paul, 3 Mo. 260). So the conferring of an irrevocable power of sale excludes the right to partition. Selden v. Vermilya, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 568. The exclusion of the right to partition, whether contained in a will or a conveyance, may be implied as well as express, and is implied by any valid direction for the use or disposition of the property which must be thwarted if a partition is permitted. property as a homestead.[57] A judgment directing a partition by sale is not, however, void, and the purchaser, all parties interested being before the court and making no contest except as to the distribution of the proceeds of the sale, is not entitled to have it set aside.[58] The statute of limitations does not run against the right of children to partition a homestead during the time the surviving widow is entitled to occupy it, nor is laches imputable to them for not seeking partition within such time.[59] In Illinois a statute has conferred the right to partition a homestead by setting off a parcel to each of the cotenants in severalty, but it remains subject to the homestead estate,[60] and a sale cannot be made except subject to such estate unless consented to in writing.[61] In Texas, by statute, the homestead is declared not subject to partition among the heirs of the decedent during the lifetime of the widow, or so long as she may elect to use or occupy it, or so long as the guardian of the minor children may be permitted to use and occupy it under order of court. Adult children, although living on the homestead after the death of the widow, therefore, cannot prevent its partition.[62] It often happens that the persons entitled to a homestead do not own the whole of the land, as where it exceeds in value the amount which they can hold as a homestead, or their interest extends to a moiety only, leaving a moiety in some other person and not subject to the homestead claim. In the case first supposed, a proceeding may, in some of the states, be maintained to segregate from the whole property a parcel which will not exceed in value the amount the claimants are entitled to hold as a homestead.[63] In the other supposed case there can be no doubt that the owner of a moiety of real property may compel its partition, although a homestead right or estate exists in the other moiety.[64]

4. Property Subject to Agreements Not to Partition. We incline to the opinion that an agreement never to partition lands may be denied effect as unreasonable.[65] There is not, however, any doubt that cotenants may agree to postpone partition, or to hold the property without partition for some reasonable purpose, or until it can be sold to advantage, and that a party joining in such agreement and his successors in interest with notice thereof will be denied partition.[66] The agreement may be implied as well as express, and is implied when the purpose for which the property was acquired must be defeated by its partition.[67] The agreement may be canceled by the parties thereto,[68] and ceases to be operative when the purposes for which it was made become impossible of accomplishment.[69] An agreement not to partition is not presumed from the fact that proceedings in partition were once instituted, but did not result in partition.[70]

E. Who May Maintain Suits For Partition — 1. The General Rule Includes Cotenants of Every Class. Subject to the limitations already stated respecting the estates which may be partitioned, suits therefor may be maintained by cotenants of every class, to wit: by coparceners, tenants in common and joint tenants,[71] but not by tenants by the entireties, nor by a husband or wife as to their community property, for with respect to property of either of the two tenancies last designated, although two persons may have equal interests in it, it is by fiction of law held in severalty, and furthermore the tenancy must continue unchanged until the marital relation terminates.[72] The fact of the cotenancy is essential; the mode of its creation immaterial.[73] The complainant's title may be

Thus plaintiff may be a woman who has acquired her moiety from her husband by descent (Longley v. Longley, 92 Me. 395, 42 Atl. 798); or by a decree of divorce (Keith v. Mellenthin, 92 Minn. 527, 100 N. W. 366, 104 Am. St. Rep. 679); or a man whose title rests on a decree for specific performance (White v. Smith, (N. J. Ch. 1905) 60 Atl. 399); or on a statute changing an estate tail to an estate in fee (Palethorp v. Palethorp, 8 Pa. Dist. 135, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 622); or giving an after-born child not provided for in a will the same share of an estate as if the testator had died intestate (Weiland v. Muntz, 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 185); or on a mortgage executed by a tenant for life and a founded on disseizin or a purchase at a tax-sale,[74] or he may be a grantee of one of the original cotenants.[75]

2. Preliminary Demands and Other Acts. The right to partition is absolute, and dependent on the part of plaintiff only on his being a cotenant entitled to possession as such of the land sued for. Under an early Kentucky statute, a request that the other cotenants make partition and its refusal were conditions precedent to the right to sue for partition.[76] Certainly, in the absence of a statute requiring it, neither such demand or refusal is necessary.[77] If plaintiff is in sole possession, he need not surrender it nor submit to an ouster.[78] If the other cotenants have liens against the common property or his moiety, he need not first discharge them,[79] nor await the termination of a pending suit for an accounting between the cotenants.[80] What is here said does not apply to acts neeessary to ereate or complete plaintiff's title as a cotenant.[81] reversioner, the foreclosure of which has vested plaintiff with an estate in fee (Toledo Loan Co. v. Larkin, 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 209).

74. A cotenant by disseizin or tax title may of course compel partition. Ross v. Cobb, 48 Ill. 111; Jockheck v. Davies, 45 Kan. 630, 26 Pac. 36; Saco Water Power Co. v. Goldthwaite, 35 Me. 456.

75. See cases cited infra, this note.

A grantee of a cotenant.— A cotenant conveying his whole moiety terminates his right to compel partition (King v. Howard, 27 Mo. 21), and such right vests in his grantee (Hill v. Jones, 65 Ala. 214; Tindal v. Drake, 51 Ala. 574; Hamby Mountain Gold Mines v. Calhoun Land, etc., Co., 83 Ga. 311, 9 S. This was not true at the common law as to coparceners. Partition could be compelled against, but not by, the grantee of a coparcener. Allnatt Partition, 54, 55; Coke Litt. 174*b*, 175*a*. If, however, a parcener or her husband purchased the moiety of another parcener, partition could be enforced against the remaining parceners. Call v. Barker, 12 Me. 320; Colton v. Smith, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 311, 22 Am. Dec. 375; Wotten v. Copeland, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 140.

An assignee for the benefit of creditors, if his title is absolute and gives him a present right of possession, is entitled to partition if his assignor would be but for the assignment. Van Arsdale v. Drake, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 599; Hortsman v. Ritter, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 413, 6 Ohio N. P. 470.

A purchaser at an execution or judicial sale of the moiety of a cotenant must, as soon as he acquires his deed if his title is indefeasible, be entitled to partition. In some of the states such purchaser acquires a present right of possession and perhaps the legal title subject to its being divested on a redemption made by the judgment debtor. Probably during the time his title and right of possession are subject to being destroyed by such redemption, the purchaser cannot sustain partition. Newton Bank v. Hull, 10 Allen (Mass.) 144; Phelps v. Palmer, 15 Gray (Mass.) 499, 77 Am. Dec. 378.

A grantee of a specific parcel.— A conveyance by a cotenant of a specific part of the common property vests in the grantee the moiety of his grantor in the property conveyed, and entitles the grantee to such property should it be set off to him or his grantor on partition. But may the grantee himself maintain a suit for partition? As against the cotenants of the grantor, the grantee cannot compel them to submit to a partition including only the parcel in which the grantee has an interest. Sutter v. San Francisco, 36 Cal. 112; Markoe v. Wakeman, 107 Ill. 251; Duncan v. Sylvester, 16 Me. 388. If the decision in Mee v. Benedict, 98 Mich. 260, 57 N. W. 175, 39 Am. St. Rep. 543, 22 L. R. A. 641, is maintainable, and we are not inclined to assail it, although made by a divided court, it would appear that such grantee may in equity proceed against all the cotenants and compel them to make partition of all the realty subject to the cotenancy, and in which, if otherwise equitable, the share of his grantor may be so assigned as to make good the conveyance executed by him.

80. Pomeroy v. Pomeroy, 55 N. J. Eq. 568, 37 Atl. 754.

81. Thus the right to enter for condition broken, although it relates to a moiety only of the property, is not equivalent to a title as cotenant and will not support a suit for partition. Robbins v. Gleason, 47 Me. 259; Whitten v. Whitten, 36 N. H. 326; Bouvier v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 67 N. J. L. 281, 51 Atl. 781, 60 L. R. A. 750; O'Dougherty v. Aldrich, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 385.

The right to redeem when the title is vested in another who is entitled to possession until the redemption is made has been held not to sustain a suit for partition (Kissel v. Eaton, 64 Ind. 248; Reed v. Reed, 122 Mich. 77, 80 N. W. 996, 80 Am. St. Rep.

3. Only Cotenants Entitled to Possession. We have already shown that, except when authorized by statute, estates not in possession are not subject to partition.[82] Therefore plaintiff must show that he is a tenant in common of an estate in possession.[83] It is fatal to his suit that his interest is monetary merely, entitling him on the sale of the property to share in its proceeds,[84] or that the conveyance to him reserved the right of his grantor to remain in possession during life.[85] If plaintiff's estate is that of a trustee, he may maintain his suit if the trust gives him a right of possession.[86]

4. Laches and the Statute of Limitations as Affecting the Right. Adverse possession maintained by one cotenant against the other may create title by prescription in favor of the former and thus end the right of the latter to partition;[87] but until such prescriptive title is created, neither laches nor the statute 541), and certainly will not if the right to redeem is barred by laches (Fitch v. Miller, 200 Ill. 170, 65 N. E. 650).

Vendor's suit against vendee.— If one cotenant agrees to sell his moiety to the other and receives notes for the purchase-price, he must tender a deed and demand payment of the notes, and, if payment is refused, must cancel the notes before he can maintain a suit for partition. In other words, must do equity before he can obtain relief in equity. King v. Cooper, 134 Ill. 183, 24 N. E. 768.

82. See supra, III, C, 5. But if plaintiff has an estate in possession it is no longer necessary, in most of the states, that he be in actual possession, nor fatal to his suit that he is disseized. Lessor cotenants having a right both in the reversion and in the rents reserved by the lease are usually regarded as cotenants in possession and as entitled to compel partition (Cook v. Webb, 19 Minn. 167; Oliver v. Lansing, 50 Nebr. 828, 70 N. W. 369; Woodworth v. Campbell, 5 Paige (N. Right to possession acquired pendente lite. — To the maintenance of his action it is indispensable that plaintiff's cause be perfect when he begins his suit. If a reversioner files his bill and subsequently becomes the owner of the estate in possession, or if by any means a plaintiff not entitled to possession when he commences his action acquires the right to possession during its pendency, or if, having a defeasible estate, it becomes indefeasible before the hearing, in all these cases he must fail and seek his remedy by a new action. In Vermont it is sufficient that plaintiff's title becomes perfect and indefeasible before process is served (Hawley v. Soper, 18 Vt. 320), and in South Carolina where the bill was prematurely filed the rights of the parties were declared with leave to them to apply for partition at a subsequent date (Cole v. Creyon, 1 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 311, 26 Am. Dec. 208).

of limitations will prevent the maintenance of proceedings to compel partition.[88] When, as authorized by the laws of California, an action of partition is brought for the benefit of all persons interested in the estate, all are actors from its commencement, and limitations do not run as to any of them thereafter.[89]

5. Cotenants Entitled to Possession but in Fact Disseized — a. Of Real Property. It was never indispensable that plaintiff should be in the actual occupation of the property at the commencement of his suit or action. In contemplation of law, the possession of one cotenant is the possession of all, unless in fact held adversely, and if no one was in possession it was constructively imputed to those holding the legal title. Therefore it was never any answer to a demand for partition that the property was not in fact occupied by any person, or was occupied by a third person, or exclusively by defendants, neither having been guilty of an actual or constructive ouster of plaintiff.[90] But neither an action at law nor a suit

The statute of limitations, of course, can neither be creating title by prescription nor operating against the right to sue for partition while the cotenant's right to possess the property or maintain the action is for some reason suspended, as where by its devise he was required to become a temperate and prudent man, and so remain for five years. Millsaps v. Shotwell, 76 Miss. 923, 25 So. 359.

The statute applicable is that relating to suits for the recovery of real property; and where complainant's title is dependent on a patent, the statute does not run until the patent issues. The section of the code barring actions "for relief not otherwise provided for" after the lapse of four years does not apply to suits for partition. Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 77 Pac. 712.

But in Illinois, where a complainant claimed to be a cotenant on the ground that a will giving the land to defendant was obtained by fraud and undue influence, it was held that the statute relating to bills in chancery to contest wills controlled, and that the application for partition must be within three years after the probate of the will. in equity for partition was intended as a substitute for ejectment, and plaintiff, in the absence of some statute to the contrary, must fail if shown to be disseized, irrespective of whether the adverse possession is that of another cotenant,[91] or of an entire stranger to the cotenancy.[92] The common-law and chancery rule upon this subject is gradually disappearing under the influence of the state statutes controlling the subject and the code system committing jurisdiction of actions at law and suits in equity to the same court. Hence, in many of the states, all issues respecting title and possession may be tried and determined in the same proceeding for partition, and therefore, if plaintiff has a right of possession, he may suc-

against whom possession is held, although adversely, has always been permitted to maintain a suit against his cotenant for partition.[96] When the property was held adversely by a stranger to the cotenancy, it was probably necessary for the cotenants to recover possession before either could maintain partition.[97]

c. Where Equity Otherwise Has Jurisdiction and Proceeds to Grant Complete Relief. When jurisdiction in equity once attaches, it will be made effectual for the purposes of complete relief. Therefore, if a complainant goes into equity and there establishes an equitable cause of action entitling him to relief, and it further appears that he and defendant are cotenants of the property respecting which the relief is established, the court may proceed to partition the same, although the party demanding the partition was disseized at the commencement of the suit.[98] Hence, where complainant relies on an equitable title, and it would therefore be impossible for him to recover in ejectment, his suit in chancery will be sustained, although he was disseized when it was begun.[99]

6. Cotenants Holding Legal Titles Only — a. The General Rule. Where a cotenant holds a legal title merely, the equitable ownership being wholly in another, the right of the former to partition depends on whether he has a present right of possession. If so, he may maintain an action or suit for partition.

b. Mortgagees. By the common law, mortgagees were vested with the legal title, but not with a right of immediate possession. The right of mortgagees to maintain partition may be considered with reference: (1) To those cases in which two or more persons are mortgagees and undertake to compel a partition which will affect only their interest as mortgagees; and (2) to those cases in which, a cotenant having executed a mortgage, his mortgagee undertakes to compel a partition which will include an estate equivalent to that held by the mortgagor before the mortgage. In the case first supposed, the partition must be denied, if for no other reason, because, as against the mortgagor, the indebtedness to secure which the mortgage was given cannot be split into fragments, nor can his right of redemption be thus divided.[1] In cases of the second class partition has been ordered;[2] but it is believed that this position, if ever maintainable, has been judicially abandoned.[3]

c. Holders of Conveyances Taken as Security. A conveyance absolute on its face, but taken to secure the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation, is a mortgage merely, and hence the persons named as grantees are not entitled to partition.[4]

d. Trustees. A trustee holding a moiety of lands as such may sue for and compel partition if he holds an estate in possession and the partition will not be in contravention of the trust.[5] It is not essential that the cestuis que trustent be made parties to the proceeding.[6] There are, however, many trusts which do not give the trustee such an absolute right or present interest as entitles him to compel partition. The common practice of conveying property to a trustee as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation equitably puts him in the position of a mortgagee, and neither confers on him, nor on him and the creditor combined, the power to compel partition;[7] but if the trust relates to personal property only, the trustee may, after condition broken, maintain a proceeding for partition.[8]

7. Cotenants Holding an Equitable Title Only — a. General Rule. At law the insuperable difficulty to granting a partition to the holder of an equitable title lies in the fact that courts of law, for most purposes, refuse to recognize or consider any but the legal title. In courts of chancery this difficulty does not exist, nor does it interpose any sufficient objection to the proceeding authorized by statute in most of the states. The true test for determining whether the holder of an equitable title may compel partition should, and we think does, depend on whether he has a present right of possession. If he has, he may maintain partition.[9] A claimant relying on an equitable title should allege its true character and not rely upon a purely legal interest.[10]

b. Mortgagors. Even at law a mortgagor, at least before entry for condition broken, is regarded as the owner and entitled to the possession of the property. He may therefore compel partition thereof if he is a cotenant.[11] In those states where a mortgage conveys the legal title and is held by a cotenant of the mortgagor, the right of the latter to partition against the former has generally been denied.[12] If a mortgagee has entered for condition broken, the mortgagor ceases to have either possession or the immediate right to possession, and cannot compel partition.[13]

c. Cestuis Que Trustent. We have already shown that partition may be compelled by one holding an equitable title only. From this it follows that one who is a cestui que trust in the sense that the legal title is held for his benefit, so that he is entitled to a conveyance thereof, or, without such conveyance, is entitled to possession as though he were the owner of the legal as well as the equitable title, may compel partition. But the fact that one is a beneficiary under a trust, although it relates to a moiety of realty only, or is one of several persons equally entitled to share in the advantages of a trust under which real property is held in severalty, by no means entitles him to a partition. He cannot, by suing for partition, put an end to an active trust or otherwise thwart its lawful purposes, nor usurp the functions of the trustee, nor control a discretion vested in him by the terms of the trust or necessarily implied therefrom.[14]

8. Persons Under Disability — a. Married Women. At law a married woman who was a cotenant with her husband could not sue him for partition.[15] She probably can under the married women's acts in this country, especially if the proceeding is in equity.[16] Where she is a cotenant with others, she may sue for partition. Usually her husband should be joined with her, because the statutes in many of the states require such joinder or give him an interest in the property which would make ineffectual, or at least imperfect, any partition to which he was not a party.[17] In England, if a suit in behalf of a married woman seeks a sale of the property, a request for a sale made by her counsel is not sufficient. It must be made in writing, signed by her, and probably it must appear that she was separately examined.[18]

b. Infants. A minor cotenant must, upon principle, be regarded as entitled to partition under the same circumstances as an adult; but, because of his minority, he may be regarded as incompetent to determine whether he desires a partition, and if a suit is brought on his behalf, it must necessarily be by his next friend or guardian, as in other cases. It was once decided in Missouri that a suit for partition on behalf of an infant would not be entertained,[19] but the decision was soon overruled.[20] There is, we believe, now no denial of the right of an infant coten-

In Watkins v. Williams, 21 L. J. Ch. 601, it was held that tenants in common who were plaintiffs in a suit to redeem were not entitled in such suit against the will of the mortgagee, to a partition. In Waite v. Bingley, 21 Ch. D. 674, 51 L. J. Ch. 651, 30 Wkly. Rep. 698, it was said that a tenant in common of realty subject to a mortgage in fee could not by obtaining an assignment of such mortgage and taking possession under it take away the right of the cotenant to a decree for sale, subject to the encumbrance. But in Sinclair v. James, [1894] 3 Ch. 554, 63 L. J. Ch. 873, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 483, 8 Reports 637, it was determined that a mortgagor cotenant cannot maintain a suit for partition against his cotenants, until he has redeemed the encumbrance or his share. In this case, however, the mortgage appears to have been of the entirety and hence, on partition, it could not have attached separately to the different allotments, but must have been enforceable in the same manner as if partition had not been attempted.

19. Johnson v. Noble, 24 Mo. 252.

Similar views were expressed in Davidson v. Bowden, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 129, but the question was not necessarily involved.

In New York it was also declared at an early day that all petitioners for partition must be adults (Postley v. Kain, 4 Sandf. Ch. 508), and that proceedings in the name of a minor were coram non judice and void (Gallatian v. Cunningham, 8 Cow. 361), although it was said an adult husband might file a bill in chancery for partition of his wife's lands in her name, although she was an infant (Sears v. Hyer, 1 Paige 483).

ant to sue for and compel partition.[21] The suit, if the infant has no guardian, may be instituted on his behalf by his next friend,[22] or by a guardian ad litem.[23] If he has a guardian of his estate, the institution of the suit falls within the duties and powers of guardianship;[24] but an infant cannot appear in such suit as plaintiff by attorney.[25] In Indiana the action may be brought by the guardian in his own name.[26] Doubtless a court may refuse to grant partition on application made by, or on behalf of, an infant, because not, in the judgment of the court, for his best interest.[27] In New York the commencement of the suit must first be authorized in writing by the surrogate, who is forbidden to grant such authority "unless satisfied by affidavit or other competent evidence, that the interests of the infant will be promoted by bringing the action."[28] Probably the commencement of an action by a disqualified guardian,[29] or without first obtaining an order from the court, is not fatal to the action, if a qualified guardian is appointed, or a proper order of court procured during the pendency of the action.[30] At chancery it was necessary to the vesting of a complete legal title that conveyances should be executed by the several cotenants conforming to the partition decreed. Such conveyance an infant party could not make. The difficulty was met by decreeing that the title of the parties be quieted to their respective allotments, and that the conveyances be respected until plaintiff came of age,[31] or by declaring the minors trustees of the portions not allotted to them,[32] or, in the event of partition by sale, by declaring the minors to be trustees for the purchaser and appointing a next friend to convey their shares to such purchaser.[33]

c. Lunatics. Proceedings by lunatics to compel partition have been infrequent. There is no reason, however, for not applying the rules applicable to infants,[34] and permitting such action to be brought by a next friend when no guardian has been appointed, and by the guardian after his appointment.[35] Where a husband signed his own and his wife's name to a petition for a partition by sale, without disclosing the fact of her insanity, it was held that the proceedings and sale resulting therefrom were void as against her.[36]

when his interest therein was that of a cotenant, must have been authorized to compel partition. As to real property, neither at the common law nor under any statute does an executor or administrator take any title, although in many of the states they are entitled to possession during the pendency of the administration. Neither can compel partition,[37] in the absence of a statute authorizing it. But in Louisiana, if the deceased was in community or partnership with any one who has survived him, it is the duty of the administrator to compel partition.[38] In New Jersey executors vested with a power of sale are by statute given the right to maintain suits for partition, but the right is lost if the power of sale terminates before the suit is brought.[39]

10. Heirs and Devisees During Pendency of Administration. Both at common law and, so far as we are aware, under the various American statutes, the real property of a decedent vests at his death in his heirs and devisees, who ordinarily become cotenants thereof. It is nevertheless subject to be taken to satisfy his debts if necessary, and sometimes the executor is entitled to possession and to the rents and profits during the pendency of the administration, or at least until it can be known that the realty will not be required for any of the purposes of administration. Heirs or devisees may seek partition: (1) When the decedent was an owner in severalty and the cotenancy commenced with and resulted from his death; or (2) when the decedent was in his lifetime the owner of a moiety only, and defendants in the suit, or some of them, do not claim title under him. If partition can be maintained in either of these cases, it is clearly subject to the contingency of the destruction or impairment of the purchaser's title if the property is found to be required to satisfy the decedent's debts or the expenses of administration. Furthermore, any court assuming jurisdiction of the proceeding for partition must undertake to determine to whom the estate of the decedent has passed either by inheritance or devise, and this is a question jurisdiction over which is confided in some of the states only to the court having jurisdiction of his estate, and is not to be exercised until that estate is fully settled, and the time has expired within which a contest of his will may be made. It must be confessed that these considerations have not been sufficiently potent, in most of the states, to overcome what is often spoken of as the absolute right of a cotenant to partition.[40] In a few of the states the settlement of the estate of the decedent seems to be a condition precedent to its partition,[41] while in others the application for partition can only be made within a time specified after the death of the decedent or after the grant of letters testamentary or of administration.[42] In several others, while it cannot be said that the pendency of administration and the possibility of the property being required to pay the debts of the decedent constitute a bar to partition, still the right is not so absolute that the court may not delay its final action,[43] or take other proceedings necessary to safeguard the rights of parties or of purchasers.[44]

11. TENANTS FOR LIFE OR YEARS. We have already shown that an estate for life or for years, if it entitles the cotenants thereof to possession, is the subject of compulsory partition.[45] It follows therefore that a tenant either for life or for years may compel a partition.[46] In the absence of some statute to the contrary, the partition does not include any estate greater than the complainant's. Thus, he may have an estate for life or years, and defendants, or some of them, may have an estate in fee, in which case, while he is entitled to partition against them,[47] it does not affect their estate beyond the term of life or years belonging to plaintiff.[48] In some of the states, however, a tenant for life may, in proceedings for partition, bring the remainder-men, reversioners, and all parties having any interest in the premises before the court, and if partition cannot be made without great prejudice otherwise than by sale, he is entitled to a decree of sale under which the purchaser will become an owner in fee as well as in severalty.[49] The estate for life need not be for the life of the complainant. It may be for the life of another,[50] or so long as the complainant may remain a widow or unmarried.[51]

12. Tenants by the Curtesy. A tenant by the curtesy, either initiate or consummate, of a moiety of lands necessarily falls within the rule that partition may be compelled by a tenant for life.[52] N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1538, declares that "no person, other than a joint tenant, or a tenant in common of the property, shall be a plaintiff in the action." The obscurity in the report and opinion in Reed v. Reed,[53] warranted the conclusion that it had been conceded in that case that a tenant by the curtesy was neither a joint tenant nor a tenant in common, and hence could not be plaintiff in partition; but it is probable in that case that plaintiff, instead of being a tenant of a moiety, was a tenant in severalty, in which event there could be no doubt of his inability to compel partition.[54]

13. Widows of Deceased Cotenants. Where the common-law rule prevails entitling the widow to dower in lands of which her husband was seized during the marriage, she appears not to be entitled to maintain a suit for partition after his death, irrespective of whether he was a tenant in severalty or of a moiety only.[55] If a widow is by statute given a moiety in the lands of her deceased husband, although "in lieu of dower," or he devises a moiety to her, she becomes on his death a tenant in common with his other heirs, and, as such entitled to partition.[56] Although she is by statute prohibited during a subsequent coverture from alienating lands inherited from her former husband, she may enforce partition thereof.[57]

14. Aliens. An alien cotenant may maintain a suit for partition, although, because of his alienage, he is not entitled to hold real property should the state object,[58] or his interest therein will terminate unless within three years he exercises his power to sell it.[59]

15. Holders of Contingent and Uncertain Interests. In North Carolina, although plaintiff is in possession and entitled to the possession of a moiety of the property, he will be denied partition if his estate is held subject to contingencies to occur in the future rendering it impossible for the court to determine who may become entitled after plaintiff's death or after some other future event.[60] These considerations may doubtless influence the action of the court in its final judg-

16. Joinder of Applicants. There is no doubt that two or more persons, each of whom might separately maintain a proceeding for partition, may properly be joined as plaintiffs therein.[62] Nor do we see any impropriety in joining with a plaintiff entitled by himself to maintain the action other persons who, although they could not by themselves compel a partition, are necessary or proper parties defendant because they have some interest or lien which may be affected by the final judgment, and their presence in court is necessary to vest a complete title in the purchaser or allottees.[63] It is true there are courts wherein this view does not prevail and which will not permit the joining as plaintiff of one who could not by himself have maintained the action,[64] and especially object to the joinder of persons whose interests may be adverse or conflicting.[65] If several persons entitled to compel partition may join as complainants, why may not all such persons? It is true this proceeding might result in the anomaly of a suit or action in which there was no defendant, and this has been thought a sufficient reason for refusing to entertain it.[66] The reason, being purely technical, seems unworthy of serious consideration, and has been overruled whenever recently presented for judicial consideration.[67]

F. Of Parties Defendant, and the Persons Bound by the Partition — 1. The Effect of Omitting a Necessary Party. It is of the utmost importance that plaintiff make parties defendant all persons necessary to a complete and final partition of the estate or interest sought to be partitioned. If he does not do so, the court, whenever its attention is called to the defect, will either refuse plaintiff relief, or suspend the proceedings until the necessary parties are brought in.[68] If it does not do so and the non-joinder appears by the record, so that an appellate court may take cognizance of it, it will reverse the judgment, whether the attention of the trial court was called to the defect or not;[69] and the judgment, although never reversed or otherwise vacated, cannot affect the title of any party omitted therefrom, and he, notwithstanding the attempted partition, may assert his title or interest against any allottee or purchaser.[70]

2. The General Rule as to Parties Defendant. A suit for partition is but a compulsory method of acquiring title in severalty to the property subject thereto, which, without such suit, might have been acquired by voluntary conveyances and releases. The only safe course for plaintiff to pursue is to ascertain from what persons he would desire conveyances and releases, if he were not proceeding by suit, and, having so ascertained, to make them all parties defendant.[71] And if relief in addition to partition is sought, it may be necessary to include the parties required to make that relief effective, even though no conveyance or release from them is essential to vesting an unencumbered title in fee in the allottee or purchaser.[72]

3. Persons Interested in the Property in Different Capacities. A person may hold interests in the same realty in two or more capacities, in which event a judgment against him in one capacity does not bind him in the other. If, holding under distinct trusts in favor of different persons, he is made a defendant, one only of the trusts being disclosed by the pleadings, he is not affected by the judgment in so far as the other trust is involved.[73] Therefore, if any party is interested in different capacities, he must be made a party in each capacity; but this is probably accomplished when he is merely once named as a party in the caption of the complaint, if it fully discloses the title to the property and its allegations therefore show fully every capacity in which he holds or is interested.[74]

4. The Limitations of the Parties Defendant to the Estate Sought to Be Partitioned — a. The General Rule. If the estate sought to be partitioned is less than the fee, it is of course not necessary to make any person a party defendant whose title or interest does not relate to such estate.[75] An exception to this rule has been held to exist when the owners of the equitable title seek partition thereof, in which event, it was said, they must make the holders of the legal title parties defendant.[76]

b. Trustees and Beneficiaries. If any estate or interest in the property sought to be partitioned is held by one person in trust for another, there is no doubt that both are proper parties defendant.[77] There are apparently exceptional circumstances in which the one or the other, while a proper, is not a necessary, party.[78] If trustees who have never acted as such put in a disclaimer, it is said that the court may proceed, where the beneficiaries are already before it, to make the partition without first appointing new trustees.[79] But as a general rule, if there is any case in which a trustee or his cestui que trust may safely be omitted as a party, it must be one where he has no substantial interest in, or control over, the property, and to hold him bound by the judgment could not deprive him of any substantial right, or by any possibility thwart any purpose of the trust. In a court of equity "the cestui que trust is regarded as the owner of the property, and his own representative in reference thereto. He is there separate and distinct from the trustee, and, in a sense, the adversary of the latter. He prosecutes and defends his own interests, and shapes, through the decrees of the court, the conduct of the trustee. Hence, unless there be something special in the terms of the trust, which confers upon the trustee the power and duty to represent in courts of equity the beneficial interest; unless a power of attorney, so to speak, is conferred upon him to represent these interests, in those forums, a decree in equity affecting the trust estate, rendered against the trustee, in the absence of the cestui que trust, is not binding on the latter."[80] These general principles relating to the law of judgments seem equally applicable to judgments and decrees in partition,[81] unless it can be truly affirmed that the alleged cestui que trust has no interest in the property,[82] or unless the proceeding is purely at law, where the equitable title of the beneficiary cannot be recognized, in which event, although he cannot be made a party, he is not bound by the judgment, unless in the exceptional case described above, when the trustee must be deemed to have power to represent both. It is not essential that one be designated as a trustee in the proceedings, if he is made a party and his interest correctly disclosed therein.[83]

5. Adverse Claimants. Independently of some statute authorizing it, a person claiming adversely to plaintiff and the cotenancy is not a proper party defendant,[84] nor can he intervene in the proceeding.[85] But the statutes of many of the states permit plaintiff to make a party defendant any one who claims any interest, whether adversely to plaintiff or not, and the proceeding, in addition to partitioning the property, operates to quiet the title against all the parties thereto.[86] Such claimants are not, however, necessary parties. If omitted, they are not bound by the judgment, but a defendant cannot insist with success that the proceeding is defective for want of necessary parties and must hence be stayed until they are brought in.[87] Therefore it is never a sufficient answer to a suit in partition that one not a party thereto claims an interest in the property, unless it further appears that such claim is well founded,[88] although the claimant is in possession as a trespasser,[89] or has a prima facie title which it is necessary to rebut by proving fraud in the conveyance to him.[90] But an outstanding adverse title, if paramount, defeats the partition, if held by one not a party to the suit, although the allegations of the complaint and answer unite in averring title in plaintiff and defendant.

6. Disseizors. The remarks made in the preceding section are equally applicable to persons holding adverse possession of the property, but in fact having otherwise no right therein. They may in many of the states be made parties defendant and compelled to present and litigate their claim. In such states they are proper, but not necessary, parties defendant unless their possession has ripened into title by prescription.[92]

7. Owners of Estates Not in Possession. Ordinarily estates not in possession are not subject to partition, but this rule has been changed in some of the states, and whenever the purpose of the proceeding is to affect estates in reversion or remainder, and such purpose is susceptible of accomplishment under the statutes of the state, all persons interested in the reversion or remainder must be made parties.[93] Where the interest is contingent or uncertain, there are decisions indicating that the holder thereof need not be made a party defendant;[94] but we apprehend that this position is not maintainable.[95]

Whether an adverse claimant may, in those states where he is a proper party defendant, but has been omitted, have himself brought before the court in any way and thereby compel a determination of his claim is doubtful. That he can is denied in McIntire v. McIntire, 82 Ky. 502, and affirmed in De la Vega v. League, 64 Tex. 205. 8. PERSONS NOT IN BEING. Persons not in being when the suit is brought, of course, cannot be named as parties defendant, and, in so far as they can be bound by the judgment, it must be because someone before the court may be regarded as representing them. Who may be so regarded is a question in dispute. Unquestionably if some person is brought before the court having an estate of inheritance, he may be representative not only of his own interests, but further of the interests of all who may claim after his death. If, however, there is no such person, then the tenant for life may be brought before the court and treated as the representative of all persons who may, by their subsequent birth, acquire interests in the estate.[96] On the other hand are decisions in effect denying that the life-tenant represents persons not yet in esse, and making partition impossible when none but the life-tenants are before the court,[97] for unless the person entitled to represent the interest of persons not in esse is a party to the suit, the judgment, confessedly, cannot bind them when they do come into being.[98] In England, if the person otherwise to be regarded as representing persons not in being has a seizin liable to be defeated by a conditional limitation or an executory devise, he cannot be deemed their representative.[99] This exception has been repudiated in New York.[1] In that state, however, it is essential in addition to the person not in esse being represented by the holder of the requisite antecedent estate that the court shall by its decree recognize and make some order for the protection of the interests of the person not in being.[2] This in effect makes jurisdiction depend on the action of the court rather than upon its having acquired power to act. Whether a child en ventre sa mere can be regarded as not in esse, so as to come within the foregoing rules, must be regarded as subject to serious doubt. The decisions of the state courts, while perhaps they have not agreed upon the grounds on which their conclusions rested, have uniformly, so far as we are aware, maintained that a child en ventre sa mere when an action was begun or a judgment pronounced was not bound by such judgment on its subsequent birth alive. If so, a judgment in partition to which an heir en ventre sa mere is not a party cannot be affected by such judgment.[3] On the other hand the supreme court of the United States, in the only case decided by it bearing directly upon the subject, sustained a partition sale as against a child en ventre sa mere, on the ground that it was represented by its mother and sisters, who were parties to the action.[4] But a recent case in North Carolina dissents from this view, on the ground that the mother, brothers, and sisters are necessarily adverse parties, and therefore incompetent to represent a child en ventre sa mere.[5] If it can be said that there is any one who might properly have been made a party to an action, but was not, and if made a party, he might, although acting in a representative character, have been regarded as a representative of the child en ventre sa mere, the failure to make such person a party, makes the judgment, as against such child, unquestionably void.[6]

9. Unknown Owners. In many of the states a complainant in partition may make unknown owners parties defendant, and thus convert the proceeding into one in rem, and thereby bind persons not named as parties.[7] Safe practice therefore requires him to consider carefully whether by any possibility any one whom he cannot name has under any contingency any interest in the property, and if so, to make him a party under the general designation of unknown owners, and to insert in the pleadings such allegations as may be necessary to support such designation, and to follow this by such proceedings as may be required to obtain jurisdiction over all unnamed persons.

10. Persons Whose Title or Right Is Dependent on That of a Cotenant — a. Grantees. The grantees of a cotenant, if their grant is coextensive with the the cotenancy, become cotenants, and as such, must be made parties defendant in place of their grantor, if his grant divested him of all interest in the property.[8] Otherwise both he and they must be made parties. In no case does the grantor represent the grantee so as to give effect against the latter to a judgment to which he was not, although his grantor was, a party.[9] A conveyance made by a cotenant may assume to dispose of some specific part of the property or some right in severalty therein. Whether such grantee must be made a defendant depends on whether the grant to him is valid as against the other cotenants. If it is of a mere easement, they need not respect it and may partition without making the grantee a party.[10] If, on the other hand, it is of a specific parcel of the land itself, the grantee acquires an interest which his cotenants cannot ignore. He is entitled to have his conveyance considered by any court which is called upon to partition the whole property,[11] although he cannot, to their prejudice, require the court to set aside to himself or his grantee the part so conveyed.[12] Courts have proceeded without requiring such a grantee to be made a party.[13] Of course, if all the cotenants have made conveyances in severalty to the same parcel, it has ceased to be held in cotenancy, and the grantee is not a proper party to any suit to partition the residue of the property.[14] The same result may be reached by the cotenants ratifying a conveyance in severalty made by one of their number.[15] Where the conveyance made in severalty by one cotenant has not been ratified by or otherwise become binding on the others, both the grantor and the grantee are proper parties defendant to a suit for partition.[16] Indeed, notwithstanding the decisions hereinbefore cited to the contrary, we must regard both as necessary parties, because while neither has an interest extending to all the lands of the cotenancy, each has a vital interest in their partition and a right to insist that, in so far as this may be done without inequitably prejudicing the interests of the other cotenants, the allotments made shall operate to make effective the conveyances of the specific parts.[17]

b. Heirs. A living cotenant has no heirs. Hence, those who will become his heirs on his death need not be made defendants.[18] After the death of a cotenant, his heirs become cotenants in his place and must be made parties.[19] Although an heir is missing and has long been unheard of, he should be made a party. Certainly, if living, he cannot be bound by proceedings in which nothing has been done to obtain jurisdiction over him;[20] but if he still remains absent under such circumstances that his death is presumed, perhaps a purchaser at a sale in partition will not be released from his bid because the absentee was not made a defendant.[21] A child born after his father's death is nevertheless one of his heirs, and therefore must be made a party to any subsequent suit for partition.[22] If one of the cotenants dies during the pendency of the suit, it cannot proceed so as to bind his heirs or devisees unless and until they are made parties. The executor or administrator does not represent them, and the revivor or continuance of the suit against him will not bind them.[23] If, however, the status of a case at the death of a party justifies the entry of judgment nunc pro tunc as of a date preceding such death, it, when entered, binds his heirs.[24] If a cotenant dies apparently testate, devising his real property so as to exclude some or all his heirs therefrom, and the suit is begun during the time within which the will may be contested, the heirs, as well as the devisees, should be made defendants, for, although a suit brought within such time cannot be successfully resisted as premature,[25] no judgment which may be rendered therein can be binding against any one not a party thereto who successfully contests the will.[26]

c. Husband or Wife of Cotenant. If a cotenant has a husband who, as such, is entitled as a tenant by the curtesy, he must, like any other tenant for life, be made a party.[27] The relation of husband and wife and his interest in her real property have been so modified by statute in some of the states that he is not therein a necessary,[28] although perhaps he is a proper, party defendant.[29] After the death of a female cotenant, her husband may acquire an interest in her property as heir, and, if so, must be made a party defendant.[30] The interest of the wife of a cotenant may consist: (1) Of her right to dower in the event of his death before her; (2) of her interest in their homestead; and (3) of her interest as his widow when by his death she has become entitled to have dower assigned to her, or has acquired an interest analogous to that of an heir. In cases of the first class she need not be made a defendant.[31] In those of the second class she has such a present interest under most of the statutes that her presence as a defendant is indispensable.[32] In cases of the third class, if her interest is merely that of a dowress before her assignment, she need not be made a party defendant,[33] unless a sale is sought, in which case she is at least a proper party.[34] If a widow of a deceased cotenant has any interest in the property other, or in addition to, that of the right to have dower assigned out of it, she must be made a defendant to reach such other interest.[35]

Partition by sale.— By statute, in Kentucky, every woman having either a vested or contingent dower in land sought to be sold in partition must be made a party. Reed v. Reed, 80 S. W. 520, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2324. The omission of a wife as a party defendant where the partition is by allotment cannot ordinarily operate to her prejudice, because her right, such as it is, is extended over the whole of the allotment made to the husband. If, however, as must frequently be the case, the property must be sold and his interest therein converted into personalty, her right is completely terminated, and she would seem, upon constitutional principle, to be entitled to be heard, both respecting the necessity of the sale and the disposition to be made of the proceeds. The weight of authority, however, maintains that she need not be made a defendant, and nevertheless that she is bound by the partition. Haggerty v. Wagner, 148 Ind. 625, 48 N. E. 366, 39 L. R. cotenant does not affect the right to partition.[36] Theoretically a mortgagee or other encumbrancer has no interest in the partition, because his encumbrance, on partition, fastens upon the allotment of his mortgagor;[37] hence the many decisions maintaining that the lien-holder need not be made a party to a suit for partition.[38] There are decisions not in harmony with this rule, and some affirming that a lien-holder is a necessary party,[39] or is at least entitled to notice when the property has been ordered sold and the proceeds are to be distributed.[40] Although the holder of a lien on the whole property need not be made a party defendant, yet if he is brought before the court, it may determine the amount and validity of his lien,[41] but cannot change its terms nor compel him to accept land in place of it.[42] Because plaintiff cannot always determine whether a sale may not be found necessary to accomplish an equitable partition in which a distribution of the proceeds must follow and the extent and validity of alleged liens be drawn in question, it is certainly the safer practice to make all lien-holders parties defendant, although, in the absence of statutes requiring this to done, it cannot be affirmed that they are necessary parties.[43] If the holder of a lien is a party to the suit, he cannot, after a partition sale, proceed to enforce his lien;[44] but if he is not, he must ordinarily be deemed exempt from the operation of the judgment and the purchaser's title must be subordinate to the lien,[45] unless it is paid out of the proceeds of the sale. To these proceeds the lien is transferred, at least to the extent of entitling the lien-holder to payment therefrom;[46] and in some of the states a partition sale necessarily frees the land from all preëxisting liens, and deprives the lien-holder of all remedy save that of seeking payment out of such proceeds.[47]

e. Executors, Administrators, and Creditors. By the common law real estate descended to the heirs or devisees, and in no case to the executor or administrator; and hence it was often said that he was neither a necessary nor a proper party defendant in a suit for partition.[48] It has ever been held, and still is true, that an executor or administrator does not represent the heir or devisee so as to bind the one by a judgment to which only the other was a party.[49] Whether an executor or administrator is a proper or necessary party defendant depends on whether he represents rights or interests to be affected by the judgment. If so, they cannot be affected in his absence. He may, under the statutes of the state, be entitled to the possession of the property or to its rents and profits either until the close of the administration or for some other period, or the relief sought may include an accounting, or may otherwise establish a claim against the decedent, and thereby affect the interests of creditors or of others of whom the executor or administrator must be deemed the representative. If so, he is both a proper and a necessary party defendant.[50] Otherwise he is not even a proper party.[51] General creditors of a deceased cotenant are, however, so far represented by his administrator or executor that they are neither proper nor necessary parties.[52] One who becomes an administrator pendente lite cannot complain of his not being made a party, if he made no application to have this done;[53] and if an error is made in substituting an executor in place of a deceased party, this is cured by an amendment substituting the heirs.[54] If an heir at law is also the administrator, and being sued in his personal, answers in his representative, capacity, he thereby makes himself a party defendant as administrator.[55]

f. Lessees. A lessee of a cotenant obtains for the term of the lease the same right of possession that his lessor had. The cotenants may, if they choose, proceed to partition without making such lessee a party.[56] In this sense a lessee is not a necessary party defendant.[57] If the partition is made by allotment, doubtless his right is transferred to the assignment made to his lessor, although it is easy to conceive instances in which the lessee would be prejudiced by, and hence unwilling to accept such assignment, and it is scarcely possible to maintain that he is bound by a judgment which he had no opportunity to resist. Furthermore, a partition by sale may result which, if enforceable against him, must sweep away his interests, leaving him to seek indemnity out of the proceeds. Hence we judge that a lessee of any of the cotenants is both a proper and a necessary party, in the sense that the cotenant of his lessor is not obliged to proceed without him.[58] Any plea, however, intending to raise the question of defect of parties due to the omission of a lessee must show, not merely that a lease has been made, but, in addition, disclose enough of its terms to support the inference that it still continues, and therefore that the title or right of possession of an allottee or purchaser may be impaired by the lease.[59] In exceptional circumstances the lease may prevent the partition, as where, although made by one only of the cotenants, it is of the whole property and the other cotenants have accepted rent under it, and the object of the proceeding is apparently to prejudice and defraud the lessee.[60]

g. Purchasers or Encumbrancers Pendente Lite. Purchasers or encumbrancers pendente lite are bound by the judgment in partition to the same extent as are purchasers in any other proceeding affecting, or transferring title to, property of like character, and hence none of such purchasers need be made parties defendant.[61] Statutes in some of the states expressly permit such purchasers and encumbrancers to be made defendants.[62] Purchasers pendente lite may, in partition, as in other suits, be relieved from the operation of the judgment, by laches in the prosecution of the cause.[63] Although a mortgage is executed pendente lite and the mortgagee is therefore bound by the judgment, his rights are not necessarily destroyed, for he may still seek and be entitled to payment out of the proceeds of the judgment if the property is sold,[64] or may assert his lien against the allotment made to his mortgagor.

h. Holders of Easements. Holders of easements or persons exercising rights of way over the lands of a cotenancy are not ordinarily either necessary or proper parties to suits for its partition.[65] The rule must be otherwise if the object of the suit is to challenge the right to the easement or transfer title paramount to it.

11. Persons Incompetent or Under Disability — a. Married Women. A married woman may be a cotenant, and therefore a proper and necessary party defendant in partition whenever thereby it is sought to affect her interest as such cotenant. That a judgment in partition to which she is a party binds her admits of no doubt.[66] Her husband is also usually a necessary party defendant because of his estate as tenant by the curtesy,[67] and further, because the statutes of many of the states require a husband to be joined as defendant with his wife when the action relates to her separate real property.

b. Infants. The fact that one of the cotenants is an infant does not deprive the others of the right to compel partition.[68] He may hence be made a party defendant and bound by the judgment, whatsoever be the mode of partition adopted,[69] and partition will not be ordered until he is made such party.[70] In Louisiana and Maine it appears that absent minors need not be made defendants and served with process, but may be represented by guardians.[71] Doubtless it is always the duty of the court, especially in chancery, to look after the interests of infants;[72] but this, in our judgment, does not dispense with the necessity of making them parties defendant and serving process on them as such. Where they have a guardian, the latter is sometimes said to also be a proper party defendant,[73] and a proceeding after his death was held void.[74] Whether a guardian may be a party or not, the process should be served on him when the statute so directs. Any irregularity in the appointment of, or the service of process upon, a guardian may be waived by the receipt of the proceeds of a sale in partition after the infants have reached their majority.[75] Although an infant has a guardian, the former must be made a party.[76] Any mere irregularity in appointing a guardian ad litem does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, nor make void its partition.[77] The failure to obtain jurisdiction by the service of process on an infant is not a mere irregularity, but is a condition precedent to appointing a guardian ad litem or exercising any other authority over him.[78] The fact that a defendant was an infant when a partition was made, while it does not ipso facto entitle him to a new partition, inclines any court to which he may apply to give him relief from any advantage taken of him in making such partition.[79]

c. Lunatics. Cotenants who are insane or of weak mind may also be compelled to make partition.[80] Hence they must be made parties defendant.[81] An attempt to set aside partition because of the insanity of a party, if otherwise grantable, must fail if the insanity is not established by a preponderance of the evidence.[82] When the proceeding was in chancery and a conveyance of the legal title was necessary, the lunatic or minor defendant not being able to execute such conveyance, the courts adopted a number of expedients to complete the partition, such as decreeing the lunatic to hold in trust for the purchaser or the respective allottees, or authorizing his committee to convey,[83] or, in the case of a minor, respiting the various conveyances until he became of full age.[84]

12. REMEDY FOR DEFECT OF PARTIES. If someone who is not a party to the action ought to have been such, and this fact appears by the complaint, the remedy of an objecting cotenant or other interested party is by demurrer for such defect of parties; but if the defect does not appear by the complaint, relief must be sought by pleading that fact in the answer. Whenever, during the progress of the cause, it appears, whether by the complaint, the answer, or the evidence, that the presence of some party not before the court is essential to a complete determination of the action and the granting of the relief necessary thereto, the court should and will require such person to be added as a defendant.[85]

G. The Applicant's Pleadings — 1. GENERAL RULES RESPECTING. In those states which have adopted the reformed codes, a proceeding for partition, whether provided for therein or by some independent statute, must be regarded as an action governed by the rules of proceeding applicable to other actions.[86] Whether the proceeding is at law or in chancery, or under the code or some special statute, it is not conceivable that it can be maintained except upon some pleading amounting to a complaint,[87] whether it be so styled or called a bill or petition, or that relief can be granted thereunder against any person,[88] or for any cause or respecting any property not designated therein.[89] A statute specifying what the complaint or petition must contain is mandatory, and a petition stating a different cause of action, as to quiet title, cannot support a judgment in partition.[90]

2. IN CHANCERY. The contents of a bill for partition, except where some special relief is sought, are substantially the same as those of a complaint at law seeking the same purpose.[91]

3. THE PARTIES. A complaint, petition, or bill for partition must make parties thereto and name as such all persons whose presence in court is essential to confer authority on it to grant the relief sought. The names of the parties seeking the partition must be stated,[92] and also the names of defendants against whom partition is sought. Some statutes also require their address and place of residence to be disclosed.[93] Not only must the plaintiff's pleading name the parties defendant, but its allegations must make it clear that the parties so named, with plaintiff, are all the parties whose presence is necessary to enable the court to make the partition and to grant the other relief sought,[94] and failing to show this, the complaint must be defective.[95] Therefore, if the complaint shows that a cotenant has died, it must proceed farther and state who are his heirs and make them parties defendant.[96] If the complaint shows that there are other cotenants of the property, plaintiff cannot excuse himself from making them parties on the ground that he does not know who they are and it would take an immense amount of time and labor to ascertain.[97] On the other hand a complaint which states all the facts necessary to authorize a partition and shows that all the persons necessary thereto are made parties thereby must be sustained.[98]

4. THE ALLEGATION AS TO HOLDING TOGETHER AND UNDIVIDED. Complaints in partition always contained the allegation that plaintiff and defendants held together and undivided. This allegation may be considered as an affirmance: (1) That plaintiff and defendant are cotenants; and (2) that as such they are in possession of the property. Both were formerly essential. It is still everywhere true that there can be no partition where there is no cotenancy;[99] but we have already shown that in many of the states proceedings may be sustained to partition property adversely held. Where this rule does not prevail, the fact that plaintiff is disseized is fatal to his suit,[1] and the complaint should negative his disseizin.[2] This it may do by employing the averment that he and the defendant "hold" the property,[3] or are seized in common,[4] or are seized and possessed.[5] If persons dispossessed of property are entitled to sue for partition in special circumstances only, such circumstances must be alleged.[6] In some of the states the absence of disseizin will be presumed from the allegation of ownership. In truth the weight of authority favors the position, at the present time, that the possession of the parties alleged to be the owners in cotenancy will be presumed and need not be alleged;[7] and furthermore that the allegations of the complaint will not be construed as disclosing the disseizin of plaintiff unless no other inference can be drawn therefrom.[8]

5. THE ALLEGATION OF TITLE HELD IN COTENANCY AND OF THE MOIETIES OF THE PARTIES. As there can be no partition except of property which is owned in undivided moieties, the complaint must show that the parties, at the institution of the suit, own such property, or some partitionable estate therein, as cotenants, and allegations which do not directly affirm this or disclose facts from which it necessarily follows are insufficient.[9] The complaint may, however, either directly affirm the cotenancy, and state the moieties of the several cotenants, or it may allege that at a time specified some designated person was the owner or seized of the property, and that by his death or otherwise his title has become vested in others who are named as parties to the suit.[10] But the complaint must, in addition to the cotenancy, allege the moieties of the respective parties. It is not sufficient for plaintiff to disclose his own moiety, leaving defendants in the pleading to disclose theirs.[11] While the complaint may also disclose circumstances excusing plaintiff from making a definite allegation respecting the moiety or interest of a defendant, such cannot be the case as to his own moiety. He must always allege precisely what it is.[12] A misstatement of a defendant's interest cannot defeat plaintiff's right to partition.[13]

6. The Deraignment of Title. At the common law, if plaintiff claimed as a coparcener or joint tenant, it seems to have been necessary for him to show how the joint tenancy or tenancy in coparcenary arose, and this was done by alleging the ownership in severalty of the property by the common grantor or ancestor and its grant by or descent from him. Otherwise no deraignment of the title was necessary. Many of the statutes relating to partition expressly require the complainant to set forth the title of all the parties. Whether proceeding under statutes of this character or not, we believe it is entirely unnecessary to set out in the

13. De Uprey v. De Uprey, 27 Cal. 329, 87 Am. Dec. 81. A complaint or bill for partition, instead of employing the formal averment that the parties hold together and undivided may allege other facts from which the holding must be inferred, as where it states ownership in their ancestor, his death intestate, and that the parties are his heirs at law. Richmond v. Richmond, 62 W. Va. 206, 57 S. E. 736. In adopting this form of pleading the allegation used must make it certain that the complainant has an interest in the property and that it continued up to the time complaint any deraignment of the title, or any deeds or other matters constituting the evidence of such title, and that it is not only good, but the best, pleading to allege in general terms that the parties are cotenants of the property, and to state in like general terms the share or moiety of each.[14] The complaint is therefore not to be held bad for omitting to state some fact in the chain of title.[15] And generally allegations of evidentiary facts, if made, may be disregarded.[16] But if plaintiff undertakes to state all the facts upon which his title rests, and his statement omits some indispensable fact, his complaint must be held insufficient.[17] A like result may follow his statement of some fact necessarily contradicting, or inconsistent with, his general allegations of title.[18]

7. Exhibits. Exhibits may be filed in connection with, or as a part of, plaintiff's pleading. The filing of them is generally unnecessary,[19] and does not make their consideration proper in determining the sufficiency of the complaint.[20] But if they show trusts affecting plaintiff's title, his complaint is not subject to the objection that it ignores such trusts.[21] In some of the states the petitioner must file with his complaint or petition the written evidences of his title or copies thereof.[22]

8. Adverse Claims. Where, as in many of the states, all persons claiming any interest in the property, whether in possession or not, may be made parties defendant and required to present their claims, it is the duty of plaintiff to allege the nature of such claim if known to him, and he obviously cannot state it if unknown, no matter what may be the statutory requirement. An averment that certain defendants, naming them, "have, or claim to have, some interest in the land the character and extent of which is unknown to plaintiff" is sufficient to bring such claims before the court and to make its judgment conclusive of any title or interest held by such defendants.[23] The fact that plaintiff misconceives

the nature and effect of a trust cannot make his complaint insufficient if the facts relating thereto are correctly stated.[24]

9. As Against Unknown Owners. There are numerous decisions showing that, under statutes authorizing the proceeding to be against unknown owners, persons not named in the pleadings and not appearing in the suit may be bound by the judgment, if it purports to determine the claims of unknown as well as of known owners, and the steps prescribed by the statute for acquiring jurisdiction over unknown owners have been taken.[25] Unless the statute authorizes in every case some notice addressed to all persons, or otherwise makes the proceeding one in rem, it is evident that when the pleader wishes to reach persons unknown, his complaint must contain some averment showing the desire and necessity of proceeding against persons not named in the complaint. Upon this subject we have been unable to discover any decision considering what must be the form or substance of such averment, and can refer only to those cases in which the complaint has been held sufficient, although the question was not specially discussed.[26]

10. Describing the Property. It is obviously essential that the complaint so describe the property sought to be partitioned as to show that it is within the jurisdiction of the court,[27] and also as to enable the commissioners appointed for that purpose to make partition thereof.[28] We know of no reason why any less or greater effect should be accorded to descriptive words in a complaint in partition than if employed elsewhere with respect to property of like character.[29] It is certain that the court is without authority to partition property not described in the pleadings.[30] There is indeed authority for the position that the description in a complaint in partition may properly be less precise than elsewhere.[31]

all matters arising out of the cotenancy, such as an accounting for moneys paid for improvements or received by defendants as rents and profits, or the ascertainment and satisfaction of liens, or the assertion of some equity not recognizable or not enforceable at law.[32] It is sufficient for our present purpose to say that for whatsoever relief plaintiff seeks other than that of the partitioning of the property, he must in his complaint make the allegations necessary to sustain it.[33] If no allegation is made, no relief can be granted, and if an allegation is made, it must fail unless it would be sufficient if it were employed in an independent action.[34] Although there is a decision indicating that the claim for relief may not be entertained if it is against one only of defendants,[35] this position appears wholly indefensible if the character of the claim is such that the court must have entertained it and all defendant cotenants are liable thereto.[36] Whatsoever claims to relief a party may be entitled to assert as an incident to the partition he may join in a single pleading.[37]

12. Preliminary Matters or Conditions Precedent. If there is any preliminary matter or condition essential to plaintiff's right to partition, it should be alleged.[38] It was formerly customary to allege that plaintiff had demanded, and defendants had refused to make, partition. No demand appears, however, to be required.[39] All allegations respecting it must hence be superfluous. Nor need plaintiff allege an offer on his part to pay for his use and occupation of the property, or the doing of any other act not requisite to completing his right to any particular character of relief demanded by him.[40]

13. Variance Between the Complaint and the Evidence. The sufficiency of the complaint does not depend on the evidence offered at the trial. It is not fatal to plaintiff that the interest proved by him differs from that alleged, if it still shows him to be a cotenant and as such entitled to partition.[41]

14. Prayer For Relief. Whatever be the name given by the plaintiff to the paper by which he commences his proceeding, it should contain a demand or prayer for relief.[42] Although the suit is for the sale of the property, it has been said that the prayer should be for the partition as well the sale,[43] but the position is absurd and cannot be maintained where the allegations show that a division by allotment is impracticable.[44] Plaintiff's relief, at least when the judgment is not by default, is not restricted by his prayer. Thus, although he prays for partition by allotment, it may be made by sale;[45] and generally the court may grant any relief proper on the facts alleged and established, whether or not it be other, or in addition to, the relief in fact prayed for in the complaint.[46] If the complaint shows an agreement entitling plaintiff to a conveyance of a moiety, the prayer, it is said, should be for specific performance, to be followed by a partition.[47]

15. BILL OF PARTICULARS. In New York plaintiff may be required to furnish a bill of particulars respecting some fact which, owing to the generality of the pleadings, may result in the surprise of defendant, if he has not the benefit of such bill;[48] but plaintiff cannot by such a bill be required to disclose on what ground he claims a devise to one of defendants to be void.[49]

16. SIGNATURE AND VERIFICATION. We know of nothing making either the signature or the verification to a complaint in partition subject to any rule not applicable to other suits or actions. If plaintiff is a married woman, it is said a bill for partition on her behalf must be signed by her, or she must have signed a warrant of attorney for the special purpose of authorizing the suit.[50] In the absence of a statute expressly requiring it, the complaint need not be verified.[51] The failure to sign the complaint by plaintiff or his attorney, as required by statute, is not a matter of substance, and does not avoid the judgment.[52] Nor does the fact that the complaint purports to be signed by plaintiff "as administratrix" where it alleges her claim as widow, and prays for partition between herself and the children.[53]

17. AMENDMENTS. Cases are conceivable where the insufficiency of the complaint may justify a judgment for defendant dismissing the action.[54] This can, however, rarely be so. For, irrespective of the character of the defect, it may generally be removed by amendment, and leave to amend, if sought, should be granted[55] at any stage of the proceedings prior to the entry of the final judgment within the discretion of the court.[56] of the action, perfecting or otherwise affecting plaintiff's cause of action, and of which he desires to avail himself at the trial, or perhaps at any time before final judgment, he should assert it by a supplemental complaint.[57]

19. Responding to Defendant's Pleadings. Plaintiff may challenge defendant's answer by demurring thereto either for insufficiency of the facts pleaded to constitute a defense, or for any other defect therein which may be urged as a cause of demurrer.[58] In many of the states, although the answer is sufficient both in form and substance, plaintiff may file a replication thereto denying such allegations as he may choose to controvert.[59] In Indiana plaintiff may file a reply to the answer, which itself is subject to demurrer if it purports to be a reply to the whole answer when it is but a partial reply.[60] A demurrer to an answer is waived by proceeding with the partition without asking for any hearing on the demurrer.[61] If defendant files a cross bill, cross complaint, or counter-claim, plaintiff may demur thereto on the same grounds as if it were the original pleading in the action; but an answer denying the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, or some of them, is not a counter-claim, and a demurrer thereto on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is bad.[62] Plaintiff cannot file a cross complaint, and if he does so, it may be struck out on motion, or a demurrer may be sustained thereto.[63]

H. Process — 1. Necessity For. There can be no doubt that in a proceeding for partition, jurisdiction over defendants can be acquired only by the issuing of process against and its service upon them, and that a judgment rendered without such issuing and service must be void, unless defendants have in some way voluntarily submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court.[64] There is indeed a decision from which the inference might well be drawn that a voluntary consent to partition is not sufficient to support a partition based thereon,[65] and in another case it was held that a paper signed by a defendant and filed in the cause, stating that he wished to waive notice of the division of the real estate, could not be considered either as a service on or appearance by him.[66] Nevertheless, there can be no serious doubt that defendants may voluntarily appear in a proceeding for partition as well as in any other suit or action, and that the acts amounting to an appearance in the one do not differ in substance from those amounting to an appearance in the other.[67]

2. The Form and Contents of the Process. The form and contents of the process are usually prescribed by statute, and, except in so far as controlled by special statutory directions, should be the same as in other cases relating to real property. In Florida, if in chancery, the subpœna need not contain a description of the premises.[68] In New York the notice of the presenting of the petition and of a motion to appoint commissioners need not mention the place where the court will be held, and if it does, and mentions a wrong place, this may be regarded as surplusage.[69] In Massachusetts the court formerly might prescribe the notice to be given.[70] Although the statute declares that the summons shall be addressed by name to all the owners and lien-holders who are known, "and generally to all persons unknown, having or claiming an interest in the property," it is sufficient that the writ be addressed to the persons named in the complaint, where it does not appear that any one except they and plaintiff has any interest in the property.[71]

3. By Whom May Be Served. The service of process in partition must be by a person authorized to make such service in a civil action, and if not so served, jurisdiction is not acquired, and the judgment based on the service may be reversed,[72] unless defendant has voluntarily appeared or otherwise waived the irregularity.[73]

4. Mode of Service — a. Generally. The mode of serving process may be specially prescribed by the statute relating to partition, and, where not so specially prescribed, is doubtless controlled by the rules applicable to other civil cases, and may hence be by leaving a copy of the writ at the residence of defendant where that mode is authorized in other civil actions.[74]

b. By Publication. Any statute providing for partition and omitting to authorize the service of summons by publication as against non-residents would be so lamentably defective that it would not long be allowed to remain in that imperfect condition. As a matter of fact, in every state, we believe, service of the summons by publication is specially authorized in the statute relating to partition, or by other statutes so comprehensive in their terms that they must be deemed to include proceedings in partition.[75] The publication must generally, if not invariably, be preceded by an affidavit showing the facts relied upon to justify the publication,[76] and an order of the court or judge based on such affidavit directing the publication to be made. The general tendency is to exact a strict compliance in partition proceedings with statutes requiring notices to be given,[77] and especially is this true of the service of process by publication and the steps necessary to support it.[78]

5. Against Unknown Owners. The statutes authorizing a proceeding in partition to be against unknown owners must intend,[79] if they do not expressly provide, that process shall be served on them in some manner, and, as they are not known, this must be by publication; and the publication, if made, must be supported by such affidavits on the part of plaintiff and such orders of the court or judge as the statute may prescribe.[80]

6. Against Incompetent Persons — a. Minors. The service of process upon minors, or other incompetent persons, is as indispensable in suits in partition as in other judicial proceedings, and must be made in the same manner, in the absence of some statute providing otherwise. A minor, notwithstanding his minority, must ordinarily be served personally,[81] and such additional service must be made as the statute prescribes, as where it, in addition to requiring service on the infant, provides for service on one of his parents, or on his guardian, if he has any, or on the person with whom the infant resides.[82] If such guardian is plaintiff, a service on the infant alone is sufficient.[83] If the person on whom service is to be made is also a party defendant with the infant, it is sufficient that the infant and his guardian each be personally served, and not indispensable that the guardian further be served as such.[84] If the minor has a general guardian, process should be served on him.[85] Many decisions hold such service to be sufficient, although the infant is not served.[86] As in the absence of a general guardian, a guardian ad litem should be appointed for a minor defendant, the misapprehension has often arisen that this appointment of itself gave the court jurisdiction over such defendant, and decrees and judgments have been sustained where a guardian ad litem had been appointed, although no service of process had been made on the infant.[87] But this is a mistaken view. The authority to appoint a guardian ad litem depends on the previous acquisition of jurisdiction over the infant, and if that jurisdiction has not been previously acquired, the appointment is void and can impart no validity to a judgment founded upon it.[88] Probably the general guardian of an infant may appear for him without first requiring the service of process on him, and thereby subject him to the jurisdiction of the court.[89] We think this rule must be restricted to those cases in which the general guardian is not himself a party to the action, representing claims hostile to his ward.[90]

b. Lunatics. The rules applicable to minors are equally so to lunatics, including the power of their committee or general guardian to appear for them and thereby render the service of process unnecessary.[91]

7. Amendments. The rules and statutory provisions respecting the amendment of process and of the returns thereof apply to proceedings in partition.[92]

8. Collateral Attacks. Notwithstanding a few authorities apparently to the contrary,[93] the better view is that judgments and decrees in partition are supported by the same jurisdictional presumptions and entitled to the same immunity from collateral attack on jurisdictional grounds as are other judgments and decrees of courts of general jurisdiction.[94]

I. Defendant's Pleadings — 1. The General Rule. In the absence of any statute to the contrary, the general rule applicable to pleadings on behalf of defendants must be equally applicable to proceedings for partition.[95] The pleadings on the part of defendant ordinarily may therefore: (1) Call in question the sufficiency of the complaint; (2) assert matter in abatement of the action; (3) deny the right of the complainant to partition, or to some other redress sought by him; or (4) aver facts entitling defendant to some special relief other than, or in addition to, that allotting him his share of the property to be held in severalty.

2. The Demurrer. Defects in the complaint, unless they involve the jurisdiction of the court or the right to maintain the action at all on the facts stated are waived if an answer is filed without in any manner urging them.[96] Such defects should therefore, where there is no intention of waiving them, be suggested by demurrer. As in other cases, the ground of demurrer must appear on the face of the complaint,[97] and every matter of defense not apparent on the face of the complaint must be presented by the answer, and if not so presented is waived.[98] On the other hand defendant has the right to demur to the complaint,[99] and if the facts alleged do not entitle plaintiff to any relief, a general demurrer, if interposed, must be sustained.[1] The rule is otherwise if such facts entitle plaintiff to some relief, although less than, or different from, that sought.[2] Grounds of demurrer other than that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or to show that the court has jurisdiction of the cause, must be specially stated, and where the objection to the complaint consists of its uncertainty in description or in any other matter, the remedy of defendant in some of the states is by motion to make the complaint more certain,[3] but in others by demurrer for indefiniteness.[4] The pendency of a prior suit for partition may be urged under a special demurrer,[5] but not when the second suit covers the matters in dispute more completely and adds other and proper parties.[6] Where tenants are made parties defendant, it is said that allegations respecting their rights cannot be the grounds of demurrer by any of the parties other than such tenants when they only can be affected by the allegation.[7]

3. PLEAS IN ABATEMENT. By the statute 8 & 9 Wm. III, c. 31, the right to interpose a plea in abatement in partition was denied, and the declaration was made that no suit in partition should be abated by the death of any tenant. This statute was reënacted in Illinois.[8] Elsewhere in the United States it does not prevail, and the death of a party so abates the action that his heirs must be made parties and brought before the court.[9] The right to have the action continued after the death of plaintiff seems to depend upon statutes, which have been somewhat strictly construed. Thus, where the statute purported to give the right to an heir of plaintiff, it was denied his devisee.[10] It has been held that after the entry of the interlocutory judgment, the death of plaintiff does not abate the action.[11] If one of the parties alienates his interest during the pendency of the suit, his alienee, by virtue of the law of lis pendens, is bound by the judgment. There is no abatement of the proceeding. It may go on without taking any notice of the transferee,[12] or the alienee may be substituted as a party in place of his grantor.[13] Any objection which in effect concedes that partition is maintainable but for some impediment which is temporary or may be removed should be made by plea in abatement, such as, that the attorney or other person instituting the action in behalf of plaintiff had no authority to do so;[14] that one made a defendant is not a proper party;[15] that certain necessary parties have not been made defendants;[16] that plaintiff has not capacity to sue; that there is another action pending between the same parties to partition the same property;[17] or that the application for partition is premature.[18]

4. THE GENERAL ISSUE. The plea of non tenent insimul constituted the general issue in actions of partition at common law.[19] Every allowable plea which could be interposed amounted to non tenent insimul.[20] This plea put in issue all the material allegations of the complaint, and seems to have been so adequate as to authorize defendant to place in evidence every conceivable fact which, if proved,

B. at the time of the commencement of the proceedings in this cause, as alleged in said petition of the said A. B.; and of this he the said C. D. puts himself upon the country; and the said A. B. doth the like, etc. G. H., Attorney for Defendant C. D." In Hunt v. Hazelton, 5 N. H. 216, 20 Am. Dec. 575, it is said that the general issue in partition is "that the respondents do not hold, nor on the day of the exhibition of the petition in this behalf, nor ever afterwards, did hold the said premises, nor any part or parcel thereof, together and undivided with the petitioner, as he, in his said petition, has supposed." But not now sufficient in New Hampshire see Morrill v. Foster, 25 N. H. 333.

would prevent plaintiff's recovery.[21] Under the code rules of pleading, the general issue is made by a general denial. Therefore such a denial or any form either of allegation or of denial which necessarily negatives the idea that plaintiff and defendant were cotenants at the commencement of the action must be sufficient where the only object of the pleader is to defeat plaintiff's claim to partition;[22] and anything less than this must be insufficient.[23] Of course defendant may, without tendering the general issue, deny some allegation of the complaint upon which plaintiff bases a claim for special relief, as for instance that the premises are not partible,[24] or that plaintiff is entitled to an accounting for rents and profits.[25]

5. DEFENSES ALLOWABLE IN THE UNITED STATES. So far as we are aware there is no rule prevailing in the United States to prevent defendant from urging any matter which will defeat plaintiff's demand for partition. In hereinbefore treating of the estates and property subject to, and the persons entitled to, demand, partition, we have necessarily shown what property and estates are not subject to partition and what persons are not entitled to demand it; and whatsoever denial or allegation necessarily asserts facts from which it follows either that the property sought to be partitioned is not subject thereto, or that plaintiff has no right to a partition, must be permissible and sufficient as an answer where its sole purpose is to prevent any partition,[26] and no matter which does not negative or undermine plaintiff's claim can be sufficient.[27] If the proceeding is at law, or where for any reason an equitable title is not available, an equity disclosed by the answer cannot be considered.[28]

6. Setting Out Defendant's Claims—a. His Title. The statutes regulating partition, especially in the states which have adopted a reformed code of procedure, generally require defendant in his answer to set out his title as fully as plaintiff is required to set out his in the complaint.[29] It is usually assumed that defendant must answer, and therein must plead his title as fully as if he were plaintiff seeking partition, and yet if the complaint states the defendant's title correctly and fully, we can think of no reason for his answering, for his default admits only the facts alleged by plaintiff and cannot warrant his taking any judgment inconsistent therewith. If defendant claims any title different from that conceded to him by the complaint, he must certainly fully disclose it by his answer.[30] Under a denial of plaintiff's title or an averment of title in himself, defendant is entitled to produce any evidence responsive to the issue, and may therefore, to disprove plaintiff's title, where plaintiff claims as heir, prove an unprobated will of his ancestor devising the property so as to exclude plaintiff.[31] If defendant avers himself to be the owner, he may, in support of the averment, show title by adverse possession.[32] It is said that a plea which simply avers title in defendant is bad as argumentative.[33] However this may be, it must be that an answer setting out defendant's title in a manner sufficient for a complaint in partition must be sufficient in an answer. If a will is relied upon, its substance, so far as material, is all that need be stated.[34] An answer asserting a claim of title may admit facts so inconsistent with the claim as to demonstrate that the answer is bad.[35] If an agreement is pleaded in bar of a partition, the answer must allege facts sufficient to establish the validity of such agreement.[36] Defenses not pleaded before the entry of the interlocutory judgment will be considered as waived.[37] An answer presenting an issue respecting plaintiff's title does not call in question the advisability of partition, should this title be established, on account of the pendency of an appeal in another suit involving complainant's title.[38]

b. His Equities. In hereinafter considering the relief which may be granted in connection with, and as incidental to, a suit for partition, we shall show that in such a suit issues may be formed and determined involving every matter relating to the common property on account of which any of the cotenants may equitably demand anything of the other, whether consisting of an adjustment of their accounts, or the enforcement of their liens, or the assertion of equities to control, or require the transfer of, the legal title. These equities, irrespective of their character, although formerly proper subjects for cross bills, may now generally be asserted in the answer;[39] and when attempted to be so asserted, must be so stated that they would support a cross bill, or an original bill seeking like relief.[40] An equity in favor of defendant, not disclosed by his pleadings, cannot be considered.[41] Answers seeking relief against co-defendants must be served on them.[42]

7. Cross Bills and Cross Complaints. If defendant wishes to assert some matter, not for the purpose either of defeating plaintiff's demand for partition, or of procuring the allotment to defendant of his moiety of the property, but to enforce some equity in favor of defendant or to obtain some other affirmative relief, he should, where the suit is in chancery, resort to a cross bill, or if the proceeding is controlled by the code system of procedure, to a cross complaint.[43] Cross complaints have also been sustained whose sole purpose was the asserting of title in severalty in favor of defendants,[44] but this is entirely unnecessary,[45] and not within the usually understood functions of a cross complaint. It is necessary whenever one defendant seeks relief against another.[46] There is no necessity for filing a cross bill to obtain relief obtainable under an answer, and a cross bill filed for such a purpose is usually treated as an answer.[47] The complaint may assert matters which, if not so asserted, would constitute proper subjects for a cross bill in favor of defendants. If so, there appears to be no necessity of their resorting to a cross bill to obtain such relief as may properly be awarded against plaintiff under the allegations of the original bill or complaint,[48] and this rule seems applicable to a co-defendant.[49] A cross bill is not abandoned by a statement in the answer that the cross bill will not be insisted upon if defendant can obtain the same relief under the original bill.[50] A cross bill is not permissible to obtain relief which defendant can procure by insisting on the filing of a proper original bill and specifically answering it,[51] nor can it be filed after the dismissal of the original bill.[51a] It is said in Indiana that no single pleading can perform the functions both of an answer and a cross bill.[52] The matters attempted to be introduced by a cross bill must be germane to the relief asked in the original bill;[53] and the allegations of the cross bill must be such as would entitle defendant to relief if asserted by him in an original bill.[54] Sometimes it has been held that the right and claim for partition may first be disclosed by a cross bill filed in a suit brought for entirely different relief, as where, in a suit to set aside a deed, defendant by cross petition seeks partition of the premises and an assignment of the widow's dower,[55] but we know not how to reconcile the holding with the rule recognized by the court that the cross bill must be germane to the original bill.

8. AMENDMENTS. Defendant is entitled to amend the pleadings to the same extent as are defendants in other proceedings, and an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in refusing leave to amend may be corrected by appeal.[56]

9. SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWERS. Matters occurring after the filing of the original answer the court should permit to be made available to defendant by supplemental answer.[57]

10. BILLS OF PARTICULARS. In New York, where the practice prevails in proceedings for partition of requiring a bill of particulars as to matters so alleged in a pleading as to leave the adverse party without sufficient knowledge of the matter intended to be relied upon, a defendant, notwithstanding he has answered, may be required to file a bill of particulars.[58]

J. Intervention. The general rules controlling intervention apply to proceedings for partition. Persons interested in the property and not made parties may apply to the court, obtain leave to intervene, and thereupon, by appropriate pleadings, assert their claims, resist those of plaintiff, and obtain relief to the same extent as if originally made parties.[59] Perhaps a distinction must be drawn between those who were necessary, and those who were only proper, parties defendant. Thus, persons claiming liens against the cotenants, or some of them, and persons holding or claiming in hostility to plaintiff are not necessary parties defendant. The partition might be made and such lien-holders or adverse claimants be left unaffected by it. Therefore they probably have no right to intervene where the relief prayed for might be granted without prejudicing them. One claiming all the property adversely to plaintiff and defendant may properly be refused leave to intervene.[60] If, however, the judgment in partition will operate as a cloud on his title, he may intervene.[61] Lien-holders may intervene when necessary for the protection of their liens or to their obtaining adequate remedies for their enforcement.[62] It is otherwise as to creditors having no liens.[63] Interveners ordinarily will not be permitted to set up title adverse to that held by plaintiff and the persons whom he has made defendants;[64] but if they wish to assert a paramount adverse title, they must do so by an independent proceeding.[65] The application for leave to intervene should be made before final judgment, and at all events at a date so early that the intervention will not prejudice the rights of any persons who have regularly appeared in the action.[66] If a purchaser pendente lite may at any time intervene, it must be only when he shows some special equity entitling him to be exempted from the effect of the proceedings.[67] As to the extent and character of the issues he may tender and the relief he may seek in a partition suit, an intervener is no more restricted than any other party to the action.[68]

K. Relief Granted in Connection With, and as Incidental To, Partition — 1. General Adjustment of Equities. As the final result of partition is to terminate the cotenancy theretofore existing, it ought not to leave any of the cotenants under the necessity of prosecuting any further proceedings either to perfect the title to his allotment, or to compel any of his late cotenants to perform any act the performance of which is due because of the cotenancy and the obligations resting on them as cotenants. Hence "when a suit for partition is in a court of equity, or in a court authorized to proceed with powers as ample as those exercised by courts of equity, it may be employed to adjust all the equities existing between the parties and arising out of their relation to the property to be divided."[69]

2. Limitations Upon the Power to Adjust Equities. Every party to a proceeding for partition may be regarded as seeking some relief therein, and therefore as an actor maintaining a suit in equity, and as such subject to the general rule that he who seeks equity must do equity.[70] This rule does not, however, impose the obligation to do equity with respect to every conceivable transaction or matter, but only with respect to the subject-matter before the court. Therefore none of the cotenants can be required to do equity with respect to any matter, or to satisfy any demand disconnected from the property of the cotenancy.[71] But the disclosure in the complaint of an equitable or any other cause of action which cannot be entertained in partition does not entitle defendants to a dismissal nor otherwise preclude plaintiff from securing such relief as his other allegations warrant.[72]

3. Accounting. The consideration of the subject of partition does not require, or even entitle, us to treat of the liability of one cotenant to another, nor to disclose the precise circumstances under which one may with success demand an accounting with and a contribution from the other. It is sufficient for our present purpose to state that when the liability to an accounting or contribution exists arising out of the property of the cotenancy, it may be enforced in a suit for partition if the facts upon which the claim is founded are properly alleged in his pleading by the party making the claim.[73] Advances made by any of the cotenants for the care or benefit of the common property or the protection of the title thereto may be asserted and contribution therefor obtained from the other cotenants.[74] This rule is especially applicable to payments made to discharge liens for taxes,[75] or assessments,[76] but not for water rates, where they could not have added to the salable value of the property and were chargeable against the tenant paying them.[77] So while doubtless one cotenant may be required to recompense another for insurance procured for the benefit of all, this principle cannot apply in favor of a cotenant procuring insurance only for his own benefit.[78] The accounting in favor of a cotenant may include interest,[79] but generally the rule is otherwise.[80] If a sale has been made and distribution of the moneys ordered, it is too late to apply to be reimbursed for taxes paid, as the petition cannot be allowed without conflicting with the previous order.[81]

4. Accounting For Rents and Profits, and Use and Occupation. The liability of a cotenant who has received more than his share of the rents and profits to account therefor to the others has never been questioned, nor is there any doubt that his liability to so account may be enforced in a suit for partition.[82] Where, however, a cotenant has not received the rents of the property, but has been in exclusive possession of more than his share thereof, there has always been doubt whether he was liable to his cotenants because thereof, many of the authorities claiming that no liability existed in such circumstances, and others contending that he must account for any profits realized or for the value of his use and occupation in excess of his share.[83] This difference of judicial opinion must affect suits for partition. The right of recovery is maintained in several states,[84] especially where the possession has been exclusive,[85] or preceded by an ouster of the cotenants.[86] In others it is denied when the exclusive possession has been taken and held in good faith.[87] The better view, we think, in the absence of any statute to the contrary, is, that a cotenant cannot be called to account in partition where he has neither ousted his cotenants, nor denied their right or title to any part of the premises.[88] The right to an accounting may be lost by the statute of limitations,[89] or waived expressly or impliedly by the parties,[90] and when a claim is made therefor it must be supported by appropriate pleadings and adequate evidence.[91] The right to recover terminates with the judgment in partition, for, as the result of that judgment, it passes to the purchaser, if the property is sold,[92] and otherwise as to the respective allotments to the several allotees thereof.[93] The right to an accounting is not restricted to rents and profits, the value of the use and occupation, or expenditures made for the improvement of the property, but may extend, apparently, to all matters for which a cotenant is equitably under the duty of accounting, and arising out of, or connected with, the property of the cotenancy, as for advancements,[93a] or for the use made of the waters of a stream,[93b] or for moneys used in the payment of taxes.[93c]

5. Respecting Improvements — a. Awarding the Property on Which They Stand to the Person Making Them. Where improvements have been made by a cotenant on some portion of the property of the cotenancy, the court will if possible avoid the question of compensating him therefor by allotting to him the lands on which they stand, if such land, independently of the improvements, does not exceed in value the moiety to which he is entitled and no other circumstance makes this mode of allotment inequitable.[94] Nevertheless it may be mentioned in this connection that there are a few cases in which the courts very strangely appear to disapprove the rule just stated.[95]

b. Allowing Their Value to Offset or Otherwise Diminish a Demand in Favor of Another Cotenant. If a cotenant is sought to be made accountable for rents received by him, or for the value of the use and occupation of the property, it is so manifestly inequitable that his liability should be increased by improvement in the condition of the property due to him and to which the other cotenants have not contributed, that no court will require him to account for a sum greater than that which the property would have yielded if his acts had not increased its rental value.[96] The next step beyond this is to allow the value of improvements as a set-off against a claim for rents, and this, we believe, is nowhere denied.[97]

c. Allowing Compensation Out of the Proceeds of Sale. If the property is found to be of a character requiring its partition to be accomplished by a sale thereof and the distribution of the proceeds, such proceeds must probably, if not inevitably, be augmented by improvements if they have been placed upon the property by one of the cotenants. As his title to his improvements as well as to his moiety must be divested by the sale, it is clearly inequitable that such part of the purchase-price as represents the enhanced value of the property should be added to the fund to be divided among the non-contributing cotenants. attempt to do equity, however, the obstacle to be met is the difficulty of ascertaining what portion of the proceeds represents the value of the property without the improvements, and what portion the enhancement of the proceeds due to the improvement. Generally this difficulty does not deter the courts from adopting some means, either by appraisement or otherwise, of fixing the value of the improvements, and, when they have been so fixed, from directing that it be paid to the cotenant, and that the balance only be distributed among all the cotenants.[98]

d. Charging the Value of the Improvements Against the Respective Allotments. In many cases no sale of the property is proper, no demand exists against the cotenant making the improvements which can be set off against their value, and no allotment can be made under which the land on which the improvements are can be set off to him and thus permit him to enjoy their value and thereby excuse his cotenants from contributing therefor. In these contingencies either the non-contributing cotenants must be allowed to receive and retain the improvements without making any compensation therefor, or the cotenant who made them must be compensated either by making an allotment in his favor of greater value than his moiety of the property, or by ascertaining how much the improvements enhance the value of the property and imposing in his favor a charge on the respective allotments equitably corresponding to their pro rata of such enhancement. The subject is one of great difficulty, but we believe a majority of the courts will now require compensation to be made in some of these modes,[99] unless the circumstances under which the improvements were made clearly prejudice their maker in the eyes of a court of equity by indicating a purpose on his part to oppress, or obtain some inequitable advantage of, his cotenants.[1] Against this immense array of authorities, there is a persistent, although feeble, opposition, either wholly denying the right to compensate the tenant making the improvements,[2] or restricting it to very exceptional circumstances.[3] One cotenant who prefers so to do always has the right to pay in money his share of the value of the improvements made by another, rather than to suffer any diminution of his interest in the property.[4]

6. Because of Waste. If one of the cotenants has been guilty of acts amounting to waste, as where he has cut, removed, and sold timber, he may be required, in partition, to account for the proceeds;[5] or decreed to compensate his cotenants for any deterioration resulting from waste or cultivation;[6] or the portion wasted by him may be allotted to him without taking into consideration the diminution in its value due to such waste.[7] Preventive relief is also available in a suit in partition, and thereby further waste may be enjoined.[8] The court will not, however, in opposition to the tenant in possession, order the sale of standing grass and the payment of the proceeds into court unless it is necessary for the interest of all the cotenants.[9]

7. Imposing Liens. The right to compel an accounting in a suit for partition is of little value unless the judgment or decree finding the amount equitably due to the cotenant may direct its payment out of the proceeds in the event that the property is ordered sold, or, in case the partition is otherwise made, may impose on each allotment a lien for the share equitably due from it. If the advancement on account of which the allowance was made was for the discharge of a lien, as where one cotenant has paid more than his just proportion of the taxes on the common property, or in satisfaction of a mortgage thereon, we think there can be no difficulty, in effect, of subrogating the one making such payment to the lien he has removed, and hence of declaring a lien in his favor against the parts which have not made contribution.[10] On the other hand, the amount found to be due may be for rents and profits, or for moneys expended in constructing improvements, making repairs, or for some other expenditure, which, however meritorious and worthy to be recompensed, did not remove any preëxisting liens. That a lien may be created and enforced in partition in such cases has been denied by some courts,[11] but affirmed by others.[12] We judge the rule as maintained by the former is the more reasonable, especially when applied against purchasers and encumbrancers without notice. If a sale of the property is ordered, and it is found to the interest of all the parties, in order to bring about such sale, to purchase certain outstanding leaseholds, the amount expended for such purchase may be made a lien on, and directed to be paid out of, the proceeds of the sale, but not the commissions paid real estate agents for negotiating the sale.[13] If improvements are made during the pendency of the suit, no lien will be imposed to recompense their maker.[14] Where one cotenant under an oral contract for the purchase of the interest of another paid him on account of the purchase-price, but the contract was not enforceable because of the statute of frauds, the court, in partition, decreed that the amount so paid should be regarded as secured by a lien on the moiety of the cotenant receiving it.[15]

8. Adjudicating and Enforcing Preëxisting Liens. Under statutes which permit the holders of liens to be made parties defendant, they must, if brought before the court, disclose their liens, and with respect to such liens and also as to any lien alleged by any of the cotenants, the court has ample jurisdiction to determine its extent and validity, and thereupon to make such order as will respect the lien, if established, and give to the holder all the remedy to which he is equitably entitled.[16]

9. Declaring and Perfecting the Title of a Party. Under the modern system of partition, the court may determine every issue respecting the title presented by the pleadings.[17] It may further grant any relief respecting or perfecting his title which any of the parties might obtain by an independent suit, such as the correcting or reforming of a deed or other muniment of title,[18] the specific performance of a contract to convey,[19] the setting aside of a deed,[20] the annulling of a sale,[21] declaring a deed absolute in form to have been intended and received as a mortgage,[22] correcting a preëxisting decree,[23] declaring a resulting trust,[24] adjudging that a mortgage was forged and ordering the recorder to expunge it from the records,[25] or finding a will void.[26] If, however, the complainant cannot sustain his bill for partition, he cannot obtain the relief which might have been awarded as an incident, had the bill been sustainable,[27] nor can he in any case obtain relief where the necessary parties are not before the court.[28]

10. Equalizing the Partition by Granting and Enforcing Owelty. Sometimes where the property is not susceptible of partition by allotments representing the moieties of the several cotenants, their interests may nevertheless not be capable of promotion by its sale, and resort must be had to a partition which will give some of them an allotment whose value is in excess of his moiety, and justice may be done to the others by requiring the payment to them of a sum by the one receiving the more valuable allotment. The amount thus directed to be paid to equalize the partition is called owelty. There is no doubt of the power of the courts to award it,[29] although formerly the power was possessed by courts of equity only, and the necessity for awarding owelty was a reason for resorting to those courts rather than to the tribunals of the law.[30] When owelty is ordered, its amount may be regarded as in the nature of a sum due to the vendor of land from his vendee, and therefore as secured by a lien in the nature of a vendor's lien, for the satisfaction of which the allotment on account of which the owelty is awarded stands as security.[31] This lien may be enforced by proceedings in the suit. In North Carolina a writ of venditioni exponas issues for its enforcement.[32] Where a cotenant is a minor, the courts are disinclined to subject his share to the payment of owelty,[33] and equally disinclined to compel him to accept less than his moiety on being compensated therefor by the payment of owelty.[34] In Maine and New Hampshire a cotenant cannot be compelled to accept his allotment subject to a charge for owelty,[35] nor in Tennessee, except in a case of necessity.[36] If a party in whose favor owelty is awarded has encumbered his moiety, payment should be made to the encumbrancer so far as may be necessary to satisfy his lien.[37] In Kentucky the statute providing for the sale of property when it cannot be divided without materially impairing its value has been construed as taking away the power of courts to provide for and to compel the acceptance and payment of owelty.[38] Whether this extreme view is maintainable or not, the existence of statutes of this character must much diminish the necessity for awarding owelty, and disincline the courts to making such awards against reluctant cotenants. Although one is not a party to the suit in which owelty is awarded, he may accept the terms of the decree awarding it, and thereupon become entitled to enforce the lien.[39] Owelty does not impose nor create a personal liability, and its enforcement is restricted to the property against which it is awarded.[40] If property is awarded to a cotenant on his paying a specified sum of money, its payment is a condition precedent to the vesting of title in him.[41] As against a demand for owelty, a cotenant may set up by way of counter-claim damages suffered by his eviction from the land awarded to him.[42]

11. PARTIAL PARTITION. A partial partition cannot be compelled against cotenants who do not consent thereto.[43] But if some of the cotenants desire to continue holding their moieties together and undivided, the court may permit them to do so, and, instead of making a separate allotment to each, set apart to all who desire such action an allotment to be held by them as tenants in common.[44] If it appears, however, that all the defendants have already received all that is equitably due them, the whole remaining may be allotted to plaintiff.[45] This is not partial, but complete, partition.

12. Proceedings to Preserve the Property — a. By Injunction. In the event of waste, in progress or threatened, the court may by injunction prevent further injury during the pendency of the suit in partition.[46] If by proceeding with a partition at law, equities which the legal tribunals cannot recognize will be sacrificed, a court of equity may, in addition to entertaining a suit for partition, enjoin all proceedings for partition at law which must, if persisted in, operate to the substantial prejudice of some of the parties to the suit in equity, either because the court at law cannot recognize and protect equitable titles, or because its remedies are not adequate to the accomplishing of substantial justice, as where it has no power to order a sale of the property.[47] So, after final judgment in partition, the court may aid any allottee thereunder by enjoining any other party to the suit from interfering with or molesting him in the possession of his allotment.[48]

b. By Receivers. Of the power of a court in a partition suit to appoint a receiver there is no doubt.[49] Although courts have been somewhat reluctant to make such appointments, there is no reason to believe that a receiver will be denied in a partition suit when the circumstances are such as, according to the rules of equity practice, would justify the appointment of a receiver in any suit in equity. The mere fact that one of the cotenants is in exclusive possession of the property, or in the exclusive receipt of the rents, will not generally be regarded as requiring the appointment of a receiver, where there is no suggestion of insolvency.[50] The rule is otherwise when the property of which partition is sought is a mine. A receiver may be appointed and authorized to take possession of and to work the mine.[51]

13. Limitations. Although the authorities cannot be said to be unanimous upon the subject, the majority inclines to the view that, as to claims of which cognizance can be taken, and on account of which relief may be given, in suits for partition, the statute of limitations does not constitute any obstacle. Hence the right to contribution for improvements made and to an account for rent received may be enforced regardless of the lapse of time.[52] So an award of owelty was formerly not within the statute of limitations, and could hence be enforced at any time after it was made;[53] but we apprehend the rule is now generally otherwise.[54] One occupying premises and making a claim for improvements during a specified period cannot successfully assert the statute of limitations against a claim for rents during the same period.[55]

L. The Trial — 1. The Issues — a. Their Restriction by the Pleadings. There is little, if anything, peculiar to the trial of actions and other proceedings for partition. The subject-matter of the trial, as in that of all other proceedings in which written pleadings are required, is limited to and by those pleadings. Plaintiff hence, in the first instance, has no right to offer evidence of any title or matter not alleged in his complaint, nor defendant evidence of any title or matter not put in issue by his denials, or specially pleaded as an affirmative defense or ground for relief, and plaintiff in rebuttal must be restricted to meeting the evidence thus offered by defendant.[56]

b. Their Expansion to Correspond to the Pleadings. In what we have hereinbefore written we have shown the extent of the jurisdiction of courts in partition, both with respect to the subject-matters of jurisdiction, and the variety of relief which may be granted. It seems almost superfluous to state that, as the result of the trial, the court may be required to determine every variety of issue which may be material to consider in reaching its conclusion whether to order a partition or to grant any relief in connection with it, and hence that the only limitation of the issues in the modern proceeding for partition must be sought in the pleadings. Whatever may be pleaded as a ground either of action or defense may, if pleaded, become a triable issue in the cause.[57]

2. Issues Requiring a Resort to Other Tribunals — a. Disseizin of Plaintiff. Neither at law nor in equity was partition intended as a substitute for ejectment.

Hence if defendant denied that he and plaintiff held as cotenants and pleaded sole seizin in himself, the only issue that could be tried in the first instance related to plaintiff's disseizin, and, if this issue was found against plaintiff, no further trial was necessary or proper at least until he recovered possession.[58] But in the United States, and especially in the states which have adopted reformed codes of procedure, a disseized cotenant may in one suit obtain possession and compel the partition of the property of the cotenancy.[59]

b. Disputed or Doubtful Title. If the suit for partition is in chancery and the complainant's title is denied, the issue is triable to the extent of determining whether the title is doubtful, and if found to be so, proceedings will be suspended and the complainant left to establish his title at law, if it is of legal cognizance. Equity will not exercise jurisdiction where the legal title is doubtful.[60] It should be observed that we do not say that equity will not determine a disputed title. The dispute may not be in good faith. If it is not and the court of equity sees this and that there is no real doubt, it will often proceed without requiring plaintiff to try the title at law.[61] The court may also proceed to determine the legal title on the ground that none of the parties objected to its exercise of this jurisdiction.[62] If the doubt or controversy concerns the equitable title, a court of chancery will determine it.[63] If it relates to the title of some only of the parties, the shares not in dispute may be allotted and the parties disputant be left to determine at law the controversy existing between them.[64] In many of the states the courts given jurisdiction over the subject of partition have powers so ample that there is no necessity for recourse to any other tribunal to try any issue which may be presented in a partition. If the complainant is disseized, he may be put in possession; if his title is equitable only, it may sustain his recovery and the award to him of such relief as in equity is due him; and, whether legal or equitable, the court may try and determine any and every question which may be presented concerning it.[65]

3. The Evidence — a. Burden of Proof. The rule with respect to the burden of proof is the same as in other legal proceedings, to wit: plaintiff must establish every essential allegation of the complaint which is denied by defendant, whether it relates to the deraignment of his title or to any other material matter.[66] So as to any matter in avoidance pleaded by defendant, and every matter asserted by him as a ground for affirmative relief, he must assume the burden of proving it.[67]

b. Evidence of Title. Every issue respecting the title must, by the party on whom the burden of proof rests, be met by evidence of the same character which would be required in an action of ejectment, or any other action involving the title or the right to the possession of the property.[68] A patent or some other source of title must be shown, together with each subsequent act necessary to establish the transmission of the title from such original source to the person relying upon it.[69] If a party relies on an agreement which appears to be illegal, he must fail.[70] If two deeds made by the same grantor for the same property are put in evidence, the one bearing the later date may be disregarded in the absence of any evidence of the invalidity of the conveyance first executed.[71] One who in his pleadings admits the title of his adversary, or any other material fact, is not entitled to call for evidence thereof.[72] If, from the pleadings or the evidence, it appears that there is a common source of title, or in other words, a grantor or ancestor under whom all the parties claim, it is sufficient to prove title from or under him and not at all necessary to show the source of his title.[73] In the absence of any allegation in the pleadings specially referring to equities or to an equitable title, it must be assumed that only the legal title is in issue, and that it, when established, must prevail.[74] Under the general issue at common law, and the general denial under the codes, defendant is entitled to offer and have received any evidence tending to show that he and plaintiff did not hold as cotenants when the suit was brought,[75] but not evidence of any matter occurring after the filing of his answer unless pleaded by a supplemental answer.[76] Although the presumption that a tenant in common in possession of the common property holds for his cotenants as well as for himself makes it difficult for him to establish title by prescription,[77] yet there is no doubt he may do so under proper and sufficient evidence,[78] and that such evidence is admissible under a general allegation or denial of title without specially referring to the statute of limitations.[79] Although defendants are in default and the title of plaintiff stands confessed thereby, courts seem to require the same evidence as to title on the part of plaintiff as if he were maintaining a contested action of ejectment.[80]

c. Variance. Evidence offered by any of the parties may, as in other cases, be rejected because of variance between it and the pleadings;[81] but not where the variance is immaterial,[82] or merely tends to show that the interest of the party, although entitling him to relief, is less than that claimed.[83]

d. Respecting the Necessity For a Sale. Although the complaint where plaintiff seeks a partition by sale usually tenders an issue upon that subject which is often denied by the answer, and this authorizes the reception of evidence by the court responsive to the issue, describing the situation of the property and giving the opinion of the witnesses,[84] still the question is generally submitted, in the first instance, to the referees who report thereon after inspecting the property,[85] and the propriety of their action is litigated upon some motion to set aside their report or their sale made in pursuance of it.

4. Before Whom the Trial May Take Place; Jury Trial or Reference. If the suit is in chancery, the manner of taking the evidence may be the same as in other chancery proceedings, and this is generally by depositions and papers offered before an examiner or master in chancery.[86] In many of the states the first trial or taking of evidence is of a ministerial rather than judicial character, sometimes taking place before a notary,[87] auditor,[88] or clerk.[89] Where an issue of title is presented by the pleadings which the court is incompetent to try, it may refer the trial to a jury to take place before a court of law.[90] Under the modern system some of the issues presented in a suit for partition are proper to be tried before a jury only, as, for instance, those relating to the title and right of possession of the property, and cannot be referred for trial except by consent of all the parties.[91] A trial by jury may be waived by not demanding

As to jury trial.— Whether a party is, under the modern suit or action for partition, entitled to a jury trial, is a question which has received very little attention, and in some of the cases bearing upon it, it is difficult to ascertain whether the decision of the court was not merely by the way of construing some statute. If the right to the partition is conceded and the only question is whether it should be by sale or by allotment, we apprehend neither party is entitled to trial by jury. Brown v. Mooney, 108 Ga. 331, 33 S. E. 942. Among the cases affirming in general terms, without showing whether the court was controlled by some statute, that upon all questions of title the parties are entitled to trial by jury are: Allen v. Hall, 50 Me. 253; Covington v. Covington, 73 N. C. 168; Swayze v. Ormsby, 2 Watts (Pa.) 494; Glover v. Gasque, 67 S. C. 18, 45 S. E. 113; Sumner v. Harrison, 54 S. C. 353, 32 S. E. 572; Barnes v. Rodgers, 54 S. C. 115, 31 S. E. 885; Tyler v. Williams, 53 S. C. 367, 31 S. E. 298; Kuteman v. Carroll, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 563. On the other hand, the cases cited above from Missouri, New York, and Wisconsin were controlled by statutes expressly requiring trials by jury. All that can be affirmed, therefore, with any confidence, is that in nearly every state in the Union it is, for some reason, deemed erroneous not to submit all it.[92] If there is a default by defendant, or the answer filed by him does not controvert plaintiff's title, the remaining questions may be tried by the court,[93] or sent by it to a referee for trial before him.[94] The reference authorized by the statutes of Pennsylvania does not take effect until after the trial and relates wholly to the carrying out of the decree directing partition,[95] while that authorized in New York is restricted to cases where defendant is in default or is an infant.[96]

5. DISMISSAL WITHOUT TRIAL. Nothing which defendant can plead in his answer entitles him to a dismissal of the action without a trial,[97] provided the complaint is sufficient; but if the complaint is wholly insufficient, the action may be dismissed on demurrer, or even without any pleading by defendant.[98] This course will rarely be pursued, for by amendment the alleged defect may be supplied.[99] Hence a petition will not be dismissed because of the death of some of the parties.[1] It may, however, be dismissed as to some of the parties who have ceased to be interested,[2] or who were never proper parties,[3] or as to one of the tracts described in the petition as to which it appears that plaintiff and defendants are not cotenants.[4] Plaintiff has the right, as in other actions, to voluntarily dismiss his suit at any time prior to the submission of the cause for decision;[5] but it has been held that the court has a discretion to refuse leave to dismiss after the evidence has been taken, although defendant has not filed a cross bill.[6]

6. THE FINDINGS. The findings in actions or other proceedings for partition need not extend beyond the ultimate facts, and may omit all probative facts involved in the finding respecting the ultimate facts.[7] A finding that two of the parties have an equal interest in the property is not an adjudication that one of them has not mortgaged his interest.[8] The findings must dispose of all the issues, and there is no authority to enter the interlocutory judgment without such findings[9] issues relating to title to a jury if requested. In Virginia a statute exists dispensing with a jury trial in partition, and its constitutionality has been affirmed on the ground that, at the adoption of the present constitutional provision affirming the right to trial by jury, this mode of trial was not required in that state in partition proceedings. Pillow v. Southwest Virginia Imp. Co., 92 Va. 144, 23 S. E. 32, 53 Am. St. Rep. 804. except when a decree pro confesso is properly entered in the action or proceeding.[10]

M. The Interlocutory Judgment or Decree — 1. The Purpose and Substance of. At common law the first, or interlocutory, judgment in partition determined the moieties of the parties, directed that partition be made between them, and commanded that the sheriff go upon the premises and make such partition in the presence of the parties "if they be willing to be present after being first forewarned" by the oath of good and lawful men of the county, etc.[11] The interlocutory decree in chancery differed from the like judgment at law: (1) In appointing commissioners and directing them to make the partition; (2) in requiring all writings, surveys, and muniments of title to be produced before such commissioners; (3) in authorizing them to examine witnesses; (4) in directing the parties to execute conveyances to each other respectively; and (5) frequently a direction in reference to title deeds, and another as to costs.[12] Under the more modern practice by virtue of which the issues in partition are greatly varied and enlarged, the interlocutory judgment is correspondingly varied and enlarged. It must necessarily determine the moieties of the respective parties,[13] and all other questions within the issues and relating to the title to the property,[14] although in equity, in this determination, the services of a master in chancery may be employed.[15] As to lien-holders not made parties to the suit, or if made parties, not served with process, this judgment can make no adjudication,[16] and they must, as to the enforcement of their lien, pursue the property set off to the person against whom the lien was operative.[17] It is not indispensable to declare that the parties take subject to a mortgage or other lien.[18] The modern practice permits lien-holders who have been made parties defendant to present their claims and to insist upon a determination by the interlocutory judgment of the existence, validity, and amount of their liens.[19] Respecting every other question presented by the issues, and upon which any of the parties becomes entitled to relief, the interlocutory judgment must contain the provision and direction essential to the appropriate relief, such as directing an accounting for rents and profits,[20] deducting lands sold for taxes from the shares of the cotenants guilty of delinquency in payment,[21] directing a specific performance,[22] canceling a conveyance,[23] declaring a deed absolute in form to be a mortgage and the amount due thereon,[24] finding the amount of taxes paid by one of the parties with interest and fixing a period within which such amount must be repaid,[25] or fixing the amount chargeable against one of the cotenants as an advancement, and, on account thereof, making the proper deduction from his share.[26] As all questions involving the title of the parties and their right to any relief within the issues are necessarily judicial in character, and must be determined by the court, such determination must ordinarily be made by the court and incorporated in the interlocutory decree before any partition is made or directed.[27] This judgment should contain a description of the property to be partitioned, either in such terms as to render unnecessary a resort to any extrinsic writings, or by reference to the pleadings in the cause, or to other writings and records, or maps and plats, so that there can be no doubt as to what property is subject to the judgment and is, by the commissioners or referees, to be assigned to the parties to be held in severalty. The rules respecting the construction of descriptive words is doubtless the same as in other writings.[28] In two states the power of the court to make partition directly and without the aid of commissioners has been affirmed,[29] and in another that the court may direct the mode of partition.[30] These decisions stand alone. The general rule is to the contrary. Therefore the interlocutory decree can neither partition the property, nor designate the manner in which partition must be made,[31] further than to declare the rule of law necessarily implied, whether stated in the decree or not, that each party must be assigned a parcel equivalent in value to his interest as stated in the judgment.[32] Under the modern practice, issues may be presented beyond those relating to the right to partition and to the moieties of the several parties, and where such issues are proper to be determined and they are determined before, or contemporaneously with, the entry of the interlocutory judgment, the determination may be a part thereof. Thus, an issue may be presented as to whether the property should be partitioned in kind, or by a sale thereof and a division of the proceeds, and where the propriety of the latter mode is conceded by all parties, or found by the court after a trial of the issue, the sale may be directed by the interlocutory judgment.[33] The more usual course, however, is to await the determination of the commissioners on this subject, and a direction to them to make partition is never regarded as an adjudication that partition is to be made in kind only.[34] One who goes into possession under a deed made by a life-tenant cannot, by an interlocutory judgment in a suit between the remainder-men after the death of the life-tenant, be required to surrender possession. The court, not having required in advance that the possession should be surrendered, must await the commissioners' report,[35] although the interlocutory decree is conclusive of the matters determined by it, if not appealed from nor set aside, it is not until after the partition has been made and confirmed that title vests under it.[35a]

2. Necessity For. As the interlocutory judgment, and it only, authorizes the partition, such judgment is indispensable, and no proceeding toward the partition should be made in advance of such judgment.[36] Still it is not indispensable that the judgment contain all the several elements hereinbefore referred to as constituting parts thereof. Probably in extreme cases it need only appoint the commissioners,[37] and these being agreed upon by the parties, it has been held that the whole purpose of the judgment was accomplished,[38] if no issue is presented by the pleadings and remains undetermined. At all events, a judgment or decree making partition directly and without the aid of commissioners is not for that reason void, and cannot be avoided collaterally.[39]

3. At What Time May Be Entered. When defendants have been served with process and their time to plead has expired, and they are in default for not appearing or answering, interlocutory judgment may be entered against them.[40] Prior to this time the entry of the judgment is unauthorized.[41] Where the chancery practice still prevails, a decree pro confesso must be entered.[42] To authorize any species of judgment by default, a return or other proof of the service of process must have been made.[43] A judgment by default is never proper when a plea has been filed on behalf of the person against whom the judgment is entered and remains undisposed of,[44] unless, as in the case of a cross

W. 520), nor as a ground for setting it aside (Yates v. Gridley, 16 S. C. 496).

bill to recover for improvements, it concedes the right to partition and the claim attempted to be asserted by it may be determined and proper relief granted at a subsequent stage of the proceedings.[45] Plaintiff is not entitled to judgment until after he has offered evidence establishing his right to partition, and although there is a decree pro confesso against some of the defendants or their default has been otherwise regularly entered, yet plaintiff's complaint will be dismissed if there is no evidence upon which a decree in his favor can be predicated.[46] Of course the entry of an interlocutory decree, as it directs a partition, cannot properly be made in any case where the facts as disclosed do not entitle any party to partition. The decree proper in such case is one of dismissal and is hence not an interlocutory but a final decree.[47]

4. Must Conform to the Pleadings and the Findings or Verdict. The judgment must conform to the pleadings and not extend beyond them. It must not extend to property not designated in them,[48] nor grant relief not warranted by them.[49] If the answer admits certain allegations of the complaint they must be taken as true, and the court is not warranted in granting or refusing relief inconsistent with such admissions.[50] The same rule applies to allegations in an answer or cross complaint.[51] If there has been a trial and a verdict or finding has resulted, the judgment must conform thereto.[52]

5. Construing. A judgment in partition should be read and construed as a whole and in connection with the allegations of the pleadings, and errors and contradictions thereby reconciled.[53] If the aggregate length of the several allotments as stated in the decree exceeds the actual length of the tract partitioned, pro rata deductions must be made from the several allotments.[54] A decree setting apart a strip of land as a passageway to be held in common and undivided "by the parties, abutters thereon, their heirs and assigns," gives the fee in the soil or the strip opposite each allotment to the owner of the lot.[55] An allotment giving the parties the right to maintain branch railroads for a certain coal road will be construed to be merely for the purposes of removing coal and not as appurtenant to the land in general, and, if the coal becomes exhausted, the right to construct or maintain the railroad terminates.[56]

6. Amending. Because the judgment is interlocutory, it must, in the absence of any statute expressly or impliedly changing the rule, be regarded "as in the breast of the judge" until final judgment is entered, and therefore subject to amendment.[57] In many of the states the first judgment in partition has been made so far final as to authorize an appeal without waiting for the final judgment.[58] The question then arising is, does this make the judgment final so as to restrict the power of amendment. The only decision we have discovered bearing on the subject maintains that, until an appeal is taken, the judgment remains within the control of the trial court and may be amended or modified, although after the close of the term at which it was entered.[59] We doubt this decision, and believe that in partition where the parties have a right of appeal from an interlocutory judgment, such judgment cannot be purged of any error, except by appeal or motion for a new trial,[60] unless the amendment would be permissible for like cause if applied to a final judgment in other cases.

7. Vacating. The principles applicable to the amendment of an interlocutory judgment in partition must, we think, be equally applicable to motions or proceedings to set it aside,[61] but it should not be set aside because of a mistake or error which might be cured by a motion to amend.[62]

8. Conclusiveness of. Subject to the power to amend or vacate hereinbefore referred to, an interlocutory judgment in partition must be regarded as an adjudication fixing the rights of the parties, and until vacated or amended, as conclusive upon them as to every matter adjudicated therein, and the court should not take any action or make any inquiry at variance therewith.[63] The judgment concludes the rights of all the parties before the court, although the judge in directing its entry declares that the rights of a party claiming an exclusive title shall not be affected.[64] But persons not made parties, or not served with process, are not bound.[65] So, it is said, that where two or more parties are in default and a judgment is entered in favor of each according as his interests are alleged in the complaint, such judgment is not conclusive as between them respecting their titles.[66]

N. The Commissioners or Referees — 1. Their Appointment. The persons authorized by the court to make the partition are sometimes called referees, sometimes commissioners, and yet more rarely partitioners. In speaking of them hereinafter we shall employ the term "commissioners." They must be appointed by the court.[67] The parties to the suit have no right to designate the commissioners nor to insist that the partition be made by persons chosen by such parties,

although all concur.[68] In some of the states, however, by statute, plaintiff and defendant respectively are authorized to nominate an equal number of commissioners, and the court must designate the remainder,[69] the result naturally being that where the appointees of the parties disagree, the vote of the appointee of the court must determine all disputed questions. In England, it is said, that the usual course, where the parties do not agree, is for each side to name a certain number, generally two, and for a portion of them to be struck out by the opposite side, and, if necessary to secure an uneven number, for one commissioner to be appointed by the court.[70] Any irregularity in the appointment of a commissioner to which no objection is made is waived.[71]

2. THE NECESSITY FOR THEIR APPOINTMENT. At the common law, as we have already shown, the duty of making the partition was by the interlocutory judgment committed to the sheriff, but in chancery it was delegated to commissioners.[72] Under the equity practice, the duties ordinarily performed by commissioners are sometimes assigned to masters in chancery,[73] and by statutes in some of the states are occasionally imposed on other officers, as, for instance, notaries public and clerks of court. The name given to the officer is not material, but whether at the common law or in chancery, or under modern statutes, the general rule seems to be established that partition shall not be directly made by the court, but, in the first instance, must be made or recommended by commissioners or other persons having analogous powers, and the function of the court is restricted to confirming or refusing to confirm the partition as made or recommended.[74] Although the appointment of commissioners is usually part of, or contemporaneous with, the interlocutory judgment, yet it may be delayed when so delaying will aid the partition. Thus, if the property to be divided is part of the estate of a deceased person, the appointment of commissioners may be suspended until the writ of dower is terminated, in order that the partition, when made, may not be subject to disturbance by a subsequent assignment of dower.[75]

But this rule does not prevent the court from giving proper directions to the commissioners respecting the discharge of their duties and the matters proper to be considered by them; but such directions will not be given at the instance of a stranger to the cotenancy, nor for the purpose of aiding dealings between a stranger and a cotenant. 3. The Appointment of New Commissioners. The appointment of the commissioners is but a part of an interlocutory judgment or order, not binding on any one as an adjudication, nor giving any right to any of the parties to insist that the partition shall be made only by the persons so appointed, nor depriving the court of the power to revoke the appointment.[76] If a person named as commissioner dies or refuses to act, or his appointment is revoked, or any other cause arises which, in the opinion of the court, makes such action proper, it may appoint a new commissioner.[77] So, if there are an even number of commissioners, one half of which make a report and the other half a different and inconsistent report, the court, instead of acting on either report, may appoint a new commission.[78]

4. The Qualifications For Appointment. The statutes of some of the states contain a provision whose object is the disqualification from appointment as commissioner of any person who has any bias or prejudice for or against any of the parties, or any interest which might improperly affect his action.[79] Probably this disqualification is implied where not expressed. If an objection to the appointment of a person exists, it should be interposed before the appointment is made, if notice of the intention to make it is given; but it is said that a mere objection is not sufficient, but such objection must be judicially considered and determined, and that a refusal to appoint a designated person, or a setting aside his appointment already made, is not warranted merely because of the objection, there being nothing to show whether the objection was well founded or that the court considered that question.[80] The fact that a person has examined the land for the purpose of qualifying him as a witness does not make him incompetent to subsequently act as commissioner,[81] nor does his previously acting as an appraiser of the same property.[82]

5. The Writ or Commission. Independently of any statute, the persons appointed to make partition do not proceed until the issuing to them of some writ or other equivalent authorization. At law, it was the writ partitione facienda issued to the sheriff.[83] In chancery, it was a commission stating the names and respective interests of the persons entitled to allotments, authorizing the summoning and examining of witnesses on oath, and commanding a certificate or return of the proceedings by and before the commissioners, together with the interrogatories and examinations, "and also this writ closed up under the seals of you, any three or two of you."[84] In some of the states commissions must still issue containing directions provided by statute and referring to the manner of performing their duties,[85] and, when the lands to be divided are situated in several districts, separate writs properly issue to each district.[86]

6. THE OATH OF OFFICE. The commissioners are usually required, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, to take their oath of office;[87] and where the statute prescribes the form of the oath, it must be substantially complied with,[88] and the record must show such compliance.[89] But the fact that the commissioners, or some of them, enter upon the performance of their duties before taking their oath, does not disqualify them from subsequently taking it and further performing their duties and reaching a final conclusion,[90] and it is probably sufficient that the oath is taken at any time before making their final report.[91] The failure of the commissioners to take their official oath would seem to require the setting aside, or the refusal to confirm, their report.[92] A misapprehension respecting the officer before whom the oath should be taken does not seem to be material, provided he was in law authorized to administer oaths.[93] The fact that the oath and the report of the commissioners bear date prior to that of the decree appointing them, although their action is confirmed by the court, requires the reversal of its judgment.[94]

7. NUMBER OF, AND THE NUMBER WHO MUST ACT. The number of the commissioners is regulated by statute in the several states, and is generally three,[95] but sometimes five.[96] The court is by some statutes authorized to appoint a less number or even a single commissioner. If so, the guardian of a minor may consent to the appointment of the lesser number.[97] In general, although all need not concur in the final result,[98] yet all must join in the deliberation;[99] and a report which shows that less than the whole number joined in the deliberation, or that it was shared with a stranger not authorized to act as one of the commissioners, should be set aside.[1] But the proceedings are not invalidated if one of them is not present at a view of the property or at some conference relating thereto, there being no improper motive, and all being present at the conference when the report was agreed upon.[2]

perform all the duties hereinbefore or hereinafter specified, and also such other acts as, although not duties in all cases, may be necessary or incidental to the performance of their duties, such as obtaining possession of the property to be partitioned when such possession is necessary to enable them to perform their duties,[3] determining the location and boundaries of the estate to be divided and distinguishing personal property from real estate,[4] appointing surveyors to make surveys and maps and plats thereof,[5] and examining witnesses brought before them.[6] In a general sense, it may be said that the powers of the commissioners terminate with the filing of their report.[7] This probably means no more than that they have no power to set it aside and make a new partition, but if for any reason not amounting to misconduct on the part of the commissioners, or indicating a disqualification to act, the partition is not complete or valid, they may supply the omission or correct the error, and thereby complete or validate the partition, and hence it cannot correctly be said that they are functus officio.[8]

9. Equities Which May Be Recognized in Making Allotments. Various equities may exist in favor of a cotenant which are not so absolute in character that they can be enforced against the other cotenants to the prejudice of their rights, but which the commissioners are at liberty to consider and protect. Indeed, we may now regard them as under the duty of so doing unless their action in favor of one cotenant must operate inequitably to another. Among these are allotting parts to cotenants in possession thereof or who have erected improvements thereon,[9] making allotments in such mode as to render effective conveyances purporting to be in severalty, but when made, operating to convey undivided interests only, because the grantors held only such interests,[10] or giving a cotenant a parcel adjoin-

10. Their Duties — a. Are Not Judicial. The sole duty of the commissioners is restricted to obeying the law and the interlocutory judgment by making partition as directed thereby. They cannot determine title and hence their functions are usually declared not to be judicial.[15] Nor have they the right to surrender their own judgment for the purpose, in effect, of carrying out a family settlement.[16]

b. Notice to Be Given By. In England the proceedings before the commissioners are to some extent analogous to a trial, the question at issue being the mode of the allotments, upon which all the parties are entitled to be heard and to offer evidence.[17] Such trial necessarily involves notice to the parties and an opportunity to present their evidence, and the duty of the giving of notice by the commissioners is said to be implied when not expressed in the statute.[18] It is, however, usually expressed.[19] If the notice can be given by mail, it must be mailed a sufficient length of time to allow a reasonable period of time before the hearing, taking into consideration the distance between the place of hearing and that to which the notice is directed.[20] There is no doubt that the failure to give notice is a serious irregularity, entitling the party not notified, if not represented before the commissioners, to an order setting aside the subsequent action of the commissioners.[21] In truth, such notice has been held jurisdictional when the proceeding

c. Making Inventories and Appraisements. In Louisiana the persons who make the partition must also make an inventory and appraisement of the property divided,[23] unless it consists of a single tract.[24] In other states, while there is a duty to appraise, it is restricted to special circumstances in which the appraisement would seem to be of some value either in aiding the commissioners to better discharge their duties, or the court in determining whether the partition as made is fair and impartial.[25]

d. Going Upon the Land. Ordinarily it is the duty of the commissioners to go upon, and examine, the land to be partitioned, whether or not they are commanded to do so by the statute or the writ or commission issued to authorize and require them to act. But this requirement is obviously for the purpose of better qualifying the commissioners to perform their duties, and if, at the time of forming their judgment and concurring in the return, they have in fact made themselves fully acquainted with the character and value of the land, their report will not be set aside because they did not, after their appointment, actually go upon such land.[26]

e. Making a Report. The statutes universally, as we believe, impose on the commissioners the duty of making a written report of their proceedings.[27] In considering what must be set forth in this report, we may distinguish between that part of it which shows their ultimate action, and that part which merely discloses the several steps prior thereto. As to the first, namely, the several allotments, it is of course indispensable that they be set out in writing showing their several boundaries and the persons to whom the allotments were made.[28] As to the preceding steps, whether they must be disclosed in the report or not depends on whether, in the absence of any disclosure, the court will presume that the commissioners have performed their duty in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Generally the presumption is indulged that official duty has been regularly performed, and there is no reason why this presumption should not be applied to commissioners in partition.[29] We fear this principle has often been overlooked, and we know that the failure to disclose acts necessary to be done by the commissioners has been held fatal when objections were timely interposed.[30] Generally, when such commissioners are required to report on any subject, the courts have not been satisfied by a general report of their conclusion, but have insisted on the setting forth of the facts on which it was based.[31] Usually, if the commissioners take and act upon testimony, they must make it a part of their return.[32] In addition to the facts specially designated in the statute, it is always proper, and sometimes essential, for the commissioners to report other facts contributing to control their action, or to aid the court in determining whether such action should be approved or set aside.[33] Like every other writing, a report may require construing, and many cases are evidence of this fact, but they do not seem to have resulted in rules different from those applicable to other writings.[34]

f. Amending or Correcting Their Report. It is often claimed that the commissioners, on filing their report, become functus officio, and, if so, they cannot subsequently amend or correct such report.[35] We doubt their power to do so except by permission of the court, but permission being granted, their power to act is not seriously disputed.[36]

11. Methods of Allotment — a. Without Designating the Allottees. Formerly in making partition the duty of the commissioners, in the first instance, was to divide the land into parcels corresponding in their judgment, in value, to the several moieties as designated in the interlocutory judgment, leaving the persons to whom each allotment should ultimately be assigned to be determined by further proceedings. The principal of these are: (1) An assignment to the eldest son, where the partition is among heirs, of the allotment which he may prefer, and, in the event of his death, or the other termination of his interest, to his heirs;[37] (2) giving a preference to the cotenant whose title has priority in date;[38] and (3) requiring the cotenants to draw lots and thereby determine, or enable them to choose, their respective allotments.[39] Where the commissioners were unable to make allotments, in their judgment of equal value, among the parties entitled thereto, they were formerly, and perhaps in some of the states still are, allowed or required to fix a valuation upon the several parts allotted, and thereupon the heirs or other cotenants made bids for the privilege of accepting allotments at the valuation so fixed.[40] So, if the property was in the opinion of the commissioners

In making allotments to be bid for, the commissioners were not required to divide the land into the same number of purparts not susceptible of partition without great prejudice, they might make an appraisement of the whole and permit the ones entitled to precedence to take it at the valuation so fixed, or if the law did not entitle any one of them to precedence, that right might be acquired by the highest bidder therefor.[41]

b. Where Property Is Indivisible. Its partition might formerly have been accomplished by assigning to the parties the right to use and occupy it for alternating periods of time;[42] but this method of allotment is probably now obsolete,[43] or the whole property might be decreed to one of them at a valuation.[44] The remedy now existing of ordering a sale of the property and the distribution and application of its proceeds as the parties are entitled under the interlocutory judgment has made unnecessary the devices formerly resorted to when the property was incapable of being divided so as to correspond with the interests of the respective parties.

c. Making Partial Partition Only. If two or more of the parties entitled to allotments wish to remain cotenants, the commissioners may respect the wish by allotting to them, to hold together and undivided, a parcel equivalent in value to the aggregate of their moieties.[45] This right has very strangely been wholly denied in a few instances,[46] and cannot be recognized by the commissioners in opposition to the terms of the interlocutory judgment, nor where the parties claiming it, being infants, have not capacity to make their election to remain cotenants.[47] Sometimes partition may be made partly by the sale of property and partly by a partition of the balance in kind.[48]

d. Making Allotments Equal in Value and Herein of Owelty. It is not essential and in truth it can rarely be proper, even where the interests of two or more parties are equal, to allot each an equal area. The duty of the commissioners to consider quantity and quality is but a step in their ultimate duty, which is to make a partition so that each allotment shall bear the same proportion to the aggregate value of the whole property partitioned that the moiety of its allottee bears to the whole property.[49] The allotment of shares in the property to be partitioned of equal value may, in the judgment of the commissioners, be impossible, and yet the circumstances or the character of the property may not be such as that the interests of the parties will be promoted by its sale. Then the usual course is to make the allotments as nearly equal in value as is practicable, and require compensation to be made by every party receiving an allotment whose value is in excess of his share, and to be paid to every party the value of whose allotment is less than that of his share. The amount so to be paid or received is called owelty. Of the power of the court to award it there is no doubt,[50] but the functions of the commissioners are left in doubt. Of course every recommendation they may make, like everything else they do, must for its final effect depend on the subsequent judgment of the court. We apprehend, however, it is within their province, whenever they find themselves unable to make allotments corresponding in value to the interests of the respective allottees, to reach that result as nearly as may be, and to suggest what contributions in money ought to be made by the parties favored by their allotments and the persons to whom it should be paid.[51]

e. Where the Property Consists of Different Parcels or of a Large Tract Which Must Be Divided Into Many Parcels. Where there are several separate tracts, no duty is imposed by law on the commissioners to make as many partitions as there are tracts. They may therefore make an allotment restricted to one tract only, if the allotment corresponds in value to the interest of the allottee in the whole property subject to the partition.[52] If there is any presumption on the subject, it is that the interest of an allottee will be promoted by restricting his allotment to one parcel rather than by extending it over two or more parcels. This is certainly true when the property consists of a single large tract.[53] If the property consists both of personal and of real estate, the court may order the different classes of property to be partitioned separately,[54] and the commissioners may doubtless pursue the same mode unless it appears that by so doing they have greatly prejudiced the owners.[55] Where, however, the lands to be partitioned were acquired partly from the father of the cotenants and partly from their mother, and some or all of such parties were infants, and, in the event of an infant dying under age, a particular course of descent is prescribed, and inconvenience might result from blending the lands in partition, an allotment which so blends them by assigning the whole of an allotment to one of the parties out of the lands acquired from his father only, or from his mother only, cannot be sustained, unless it is shown to the court that the mode adopted will promote the interest of the parties, and this, although the statute of the state expressly provides that partition may be made of several parcels of land, although such title may be derived from different sources, "by allotment of part in each parcel or of parts in one or more parcels, or of one or more undivided parts, with or without the addition of a part or parts of other parcels, as shall be most for the interest of the parties in general." On the other hand, if the tract is a large one out of which many allotments must be made, the commissioners, in making allotments, are not obliged to give any allottee a single parcel only, or even contiguous parcels, but may, to satisfy his interests, assign him non-contiguous parcels.[56]

f. Creating Easements and Servitudes. The commissioners, if in their judgment necessary to the accomplishment of an equitable partition, may create an easement in favor of, or impose a servitude upon, one or more of the allotments.[57]

g. Of Mineral Lands. If the land to be partitioned is underlaid with minerals, the ownership of the surface may, by the court, be separated from the mineral, and the mineral given to one cotenant to hold in severalty and the surface to another.[58] In the partition of oil land demised by a lease reserving a royalty, the oil severed must be treated as income and the oil in place as real estate.[59] If a defendant is the owner of the right to mine on lands owned by plaintiffs in common with third parties, which right is appurtenant to defendant's undivided interest in the land, such right must be taken into consideration in the partition proceedings and will pass with his interest.[60]

h. Avoiding Unnecessary Injury. We have heretofore shown that the commissioners may respect equities existing in favor of one of the parties by assigning him property of which he is already in possession, or upon which he has erected improvements, and may promote his interest even by taking into consideration his ownership of property adjacent to that to be divided and make him an allotment to adjoin his land not subject to the partition.[61] The principle applicable to these cases goes somewhat farther and requires the commissioners in their allotment to seek to avoid inflicting any and every hardship to the parties or any of them which may be avoided and an allotment of parcels of equivalent value be made. Thus, if some of the parties are infants, an allotment should not be made to them of lands encumbered by the widow's dower and from which, during her life, they can acquire nothing for their support.[62]

i. Designating the Allotments. The allotments, in addition to being described in the report, should contain references to known public monuments or surveys, where these either constitute boundaries to an allotment, or will point out its location, and the existence of such monuments or surveys may excuse the commissioners from erecting monuments, although the statute provides therefor, for such statute may be construed as directory only.[63] Where such public surveys and monuments do not exist, the commissioners should by stones or monuments attest their several allotments.[64] If one of the cotenants is a married woman, the allotment should be so made as to recognize and preserve her interest, and not in such a manner as to leave doubt whether the allotment is to her husband or to her and him as cotenants.[65] If two or more of the cotenants are infants, their share may be set off to be held together and undivided by direction of the court or of their guardian,[66] and in some states by direction of the statute if there is no prayer for an allotment in severalty.[67]

12. Assailing the Action of the Commissioners — a. Waiver of Right to. If there is any irregularity in the action of the commissioners, or the result reached by them is deemed partial and prejudicial to any of the parties, he must, if not content to abide by their allotment or other action, take some measure to prevent its becoming unassailable by being approved by the court, and ratified by its final judgment. Before such judgment, he must except to or move to vacate or set aside the report. Otherwise he waives all right to assail it.[68] Where no objection is made to a report, it will be held sufficient.[69] Irregularities in the proceedings of the commissioners must be corrected, or their consequence avoided, by opposition in some form to the confirmation of their report.[70] But the right to avoid a report may be waived or lost before it is presented to the court, as where a party causes the action of which he complains to be taken, or, knowing that it has been or is about to be taken, acquiesces therein or seeks to acquire rights thereunder and thereby causes further action to be taken, or expenses to be incurred.[71]

b. Objections to Report, When, How, and By Whom Must Be Made. We have already shown that objections to the report or to the action of the commissioners may be waived by acquiescence. It is therefore advisable that one knowing of any unfairness or irregularity in the action of the commissioners should at once object to or protest against it, or at all events, should give no ground for the contention that he consented to or had the intention of acquiescing in it. In Louisiana the code provides for an officer to make a "process verbal of the objections and declarations of the parties,"[72] but usually neither the commissioners nor any other officer is charged with the duty of making objections or of preserving evidence of those made. The party aggrieved may file exceptions to the report or move to quash, vacate, or set it aside, or to suppress the return,[73] or appear in opposition to a motion for its confirmation.[74] Sometimes, as in North Carolina, the time within which exceptions may be filed is limited by statute,[75] and if not filed within that time they are waived, and it is the duty of the court to hear and act upon the report, and the parties must take notice of such orders and decrees as may be made.[75a] It is perhaps rarely material by what name the paper disclosing objections is called, provided it informs the court that an interested party objects to the proceedings and wishes denial of their confirmation,[76] and also points out the ground on which his objection rests.[77] If a report is set aside and a new partition made, any party deeming that he has good cause therefor may object or except to it as if it were the first or original report.[78]

c. Grounds of Objection. By whatever mode interposed, the objection to the report must be either irregularity in the proceedings of the commissioners,[79] undertaking to dispose of questions not submitted to them,[80] error in the conclusions reached by them and disclosed by the report or otherwise,[81] or partiality or unfairness.[82] But whatsoever be the ground of the objection, it must be one which at least might have operated to the prejudice of the objector,[83] and was not consented to by him.[84] In North Carolina, to prevent the confirmation of the report of commissioners, a motion, based upon the professed ground of newly discovered evidence, was made and granted, and plaintiff permitted to amend his complaint. On examination, the proceeding will be found, in substance, to have been one to vacate the interlocutory judgment.[85] Defects in the report itself may be ground for vacating it, unless the defect can be cured by amendment, as that the report is uncertain.[86]

d. Trial of Exceptions or Objections. The exceptions or objections may be supported or overthrown by the report itself,[87] or by other writings in the case, in which event an issue of law only is presented to be determined by the court. As to issues of fact, the parties are not entitled to trial before a jury.[88] The court may doubtless proceed with their trial as upon the trial of an issue of fact presented upon any other motion, which is usually upon affidavits, although sometimes by the oral examination of witnesses in open court. Upon the trial the party objecting or excepting must be regarded as plaintiff and bound to assume

82. The partiality referred to and urged as a ground for setting aside the report may be (1) in a course of conduct from which bias or prejudice is inferable, or (2) in reaching a conclusion which is unjust to the parties, or some of them, by which one of them is allotted property of less and another of greater value than his moiety. the burden of proof.[89] It is not sufficient, however, that the preponderance of evidence is in his favor. The proceeding is somewhat analogous to a motion for a new trial, in which the report of the commissioners is treated as if it were the verdict of a jury, and rarely set aside if there is any evidence to sustain it.[90] Furthermore, every reasonable presumption is indulged in favor of the fairness of the commissioners.[91] Nevertheless the report will be set aside if inequality in the allotments is very great, although neither fraud, partiality, nor gross error of judgment is shown.[92]

13. Action Which May Be Taken on the Report of the Commissioners. When the report of the commissioners comes on for hearing before the court, whether objected to or excepted to or not, the court may, (1) set aside the report in toto, or modify it, and as modified, confirm it and make the partition final, or (2) confirm it and thus make it final, without modification. The idea that the court may modify or correct the report appears to be inconsistent with the other rule that the court cannot directly make the partition. Nevertheless, if the proceeding is in equity, or of an equitable nature, the court may probably modify the partition as reported;[93] but we doubt the existence of the power unless restricted to the correction of errors and mistakes obvious from an inspection of the whole proceedings and where it is clear that the modification as directed by the court will only make the final judgment express what the commissioners intended. If the report is set aside, partition remains to be made and the duty of making it may be recommitted to the original commissioners, or a new commission may issue to other commissioners selected by the court.

14. Confirmation of Their Report. In Canada the report of commissioners in partition is not required to be specially confirmed by the court, but before it will be acted upon it will be examined by the court to see whether there is manifest error therein.[94] We do not know whether this means that the report of the commissioners may of itself operate as a partition. If so the rule is entirely different elsewhere. The report is in no sense a final or judicial action, and does not become such until confirmed by the court.[95] Its confirmation may be denied because of any irregularity in the proceedings.[95a]

15. Compensating. The commissioners are entitled to be compensated for their services, and some courts have undertaken to specify a per diem beyond which the compensation should not go.[96] But we apprehend that, in the absence of any controlling statute, it must be impossible to fix any per diem or other rate of compensation applicable to all cases, and that the court must be left in each case in its discretion to make such allowance as it may deem reasonable,[97] and, in advance of such allowance, no suit or other proceeding to collect for the commissioners' services can be maintained.[98] The fact that their report was not accepted does not deprive them of their right to compensation if they acted with fidelity and impartiality.[99]

O. Partition by Sale — 1. Power to Require Is Statutory. The power to direct the partition of property by sale and a division of the proceeds is statutory, and the circumstances under which it can be exercised depend upon the statutes in force in England,[1] and the different states of the United States.[2] The constitutionality of the American statutes upon this subject has not been very seriously questioned, and, so far as questioned, has been affirmed, and we doubt not correctly.[3]

2. The Grounds For the Sale — a. Under the English Statutes. We shall not enter into any detailed description of the English statutes, nor point out, except in a few particulars, the important differences between them and the American statutes. under some circumstances such inquiry may be omitted.[5] If persons owning more than one half of the property unite in a demand therefor, the sale must be ordered unless the court sees "good reason to the contrary."[6] Persons owning less than one half of the property may also demand its sale, and the court has a discretion to grant or deny the demand, provided the demand must not be granted "unless it appears more beneficial to the parties interested than a partition."[7] In some cases the persons dissenting from the sale may prevent it by executing an undertaking, as provided in the statutes, to purchase the shares of the others.[8]

b. Under American Statutes. The American statutes antedate those of England on this subject. Under all of them, we believe, the presumption prevails that partition in kind should be made, and it is incumbent on any person seeking partition by sale to show some cause therefor justifying it under the statute of his state.[9] These causes, although expressed in different language in the various statutes, are very similar, and all, or nearly all, sanction a partition by sale when proceeding otherwise must substantially prejudice the parties. Among the causes designated why partition should be made by sale are that partition by allotment will operate to the "great prejudice of the owners";[10] that the property ordinarily, and perhaps always, a question of fact only,[24] although there are classes of cases in which the propriety of partition by sale appears so obvious that, on a request for partition in that mode, the resistant may well be deemed to be called upon to assume the burden of proof, such, for instance, as cases calling for the partition of a single house and lot in a city,[25] of a factory,[26] or of a water right,[27] although such right is sometimes partitionable otherwise than by sale.[28] If a tract of land is valuable chiefly for oil, or gas, or both, beneath its surface its partition must be by a sale and a division of the proceeds.[28a] procuring the order of sale are ordinarily the same as when partition by allotment is sought, for many of the statutes, especially in the code states, do not require any allegation in the pleadings respecting the mode of partition,[29] but this is not universally true.[30] When the complaint undertakes to make an allegation on this subject, it seems sufficient to allege the ultimate fact substantially in the language of the statute, without going into details by disclosing the evidentiary facts from which the pleader draws his conclusion.[31] When any of the parties in his pleading makes the allegation necessary to require a sale, this tenders an issue, which, unless confessed by the other parties in interest, requires a trial before the court. In the absence of any tender of an issue of this character, the court must enter its interlocutory judgment declaring the interests of the respective parties and appointing commissioners to make partition in accordance therewith. In other words, the sale may be ordered on the allegation of one party and the admission of the other either in express terms or by his failure to deny,[32] and it is said in one case that the matter of procedure is left to the discretion of the court.[33] Whether there shall be partition by sale or by allotment is doubtless a judicial question to be ultimately determined by the court,[34] in solving which, in the absence of express or controlling statutory provisions, it may pursue any method of inquiry appropriate to judicial proceedings. Thus if it is, strictly speaking, a court of chancery, it may pursue the chancery practice and refer the inquiry to a master in chancery,[35] or, at least in Louisiana, may appoint experts to examine the property and make reports embodying the conclusions reached by them.[36] But whether a reference is made before the appointment of commissioners or they are left to undertake the partition and subsequently report that they cannot do so, the court must pass on the question, and either by its interlocutory judgment or by some order subsequently entered, authorize the sale,[37] and the entry of a formal order after a sale is not sufficient to validate it.[38] The master, commissioner, referee, or

And, unless restrained by statute, the court may determine the question for itself, on evidence adduced before it, and without calling to its aid any master, expert, or commissioner (Green v. Cannady, 77 S. The court sometimes proceeds directly on the evidence without making any reference or requiring any report on the question (Saunders v. Saunders, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 62 S. other person charged with the duty of inquiring and reporting must, in his report, state the facts on which his conclusion is founded,[39] and whether the question is presented on or in connection with a report, the evidence should establish the necessity for a sale to warrant or support an order directing it.[40] Quite frequently, when the question is presented to the court before the appointment of commissioners is made, even though a master has reported upon it, and the evidence does not remove doubt, commissioners are appointed and directed to make partition, but this is rather a step in the inquiry than a determination that a sale shall not be resorted to.[41] Although the interlocutory judgment is often entered in advance of any inquiry as to the mode of partition, we believe it is never the practice to direct a sale, unless as a part of such judgment, until after its entry, the theory being that the first judicial inquiry must relate to and result in declaring the rights of the parties in the property.[42] The commissioners, although appointed to make partition, having reported their inability to do so otherwise than by sale, any party interested in their further action may by appropriate motion present the question to the court, which, if it agrees with the conclusion of the commissioners, will direct them to make a sale either of the whole property or of such part as they have declared their inability to otherwise partition.[43] Although the report of the commissioners is not conclusive,[44] but may be contested, in which event it may be regarded, where the facts disclosed as requiring a sale sustain that conclusion, as prima facie establishing the necessity for a sale and as requiring those resisting the sale to assume the burden of proof.[45] Not only is the action of the court required in all cases, but some of the decisions place so much emphasis on such action and the necessity of evidence to support it as to warrant the conclusion that the order of sale may at a remote time be assailed on account of the absence or insufficiency of the evidence.[46]

4. For and Against Whom a Sale May Be Ordered. Any cotenant is obviously entitled to ask for a sale unless under some disability. It is therefore no objection that he holds as a trustee,[47] nor, in England, that he is a mortgagee only.[48] The request for a sale may be by a married woman.[49] Application for a sale may also be made by, or on behalf of, an infant; but the court will doubtless take more care than in the case of an adult to ascertain whether his interests will be promoted by a sale.[50] It is said that a life-tenant of an undivided one fourth of the property is not entitled to an order for its sale,[51] but no reason is given for so saying, and probably none can be given. For the sale is but a mode of partition, and when a party is entitled to partition, he, if the other facts require it, is to the extent of his estate, entitled to partition by sale;[52] and, on the other hand, where he cannot maintain the proceeding for partition, a sale on his demand cannot be supported.[53] As to the persons against whom an order of sale may be granted, we apprehend there can be no limit, provided they are, in the proceeding before the court, compellable to make partition, although as to infants and other incompetents and persons under disability, the court will take special care to protect their interests,[54] and in some of the states statutes are in force intended to specially safeguard such interests.[55] The existence of mortgages or other liens does not prevent the sale,[56] nor do outstanding leases.[57] In North Carolina a sale will not be authorized against a tenant by the curtesy.[58] Usually an estate in possession cannot be sold at the instance of a remainder-man.[59] The court may, however, when that course seems equitable, except certain estates or interests from the sale.[60] Except in so far as the English statutes may have given their courts a discretion,[61] and in so far as the American courts interpose on behalf of minors,[62] the right of a party entitled to a partition to have it made by sale seems to be absolute, and not to yield to considerations of special hardship operating, or which may properly operate, against another party, and which his peculiar circumstances may render him unable to avoid.[63] No prohibition or condition imposed by one of the cotenants can impair the right as to the others.[64]

5. Proceedings After Ordering the Sale — a. Appraisement to Prevent Sale. In a few of the states, before proceeding to sell, the commissioners must make an appraisement of the property which, being returned to court, any of the parties willing to do so may take the property by paying such appraised value, and if no offer to so take it is made, the sale must proceed, and, in some of the states, must realize a specified portion of the appraisement;[65] but generally no appraisement is required to precede a sale in partition, and, if such appraisement exists, the property may be sold regardless of it.[66]

b. Inquiry Respecting Liens. Under the practice now generally prevailing, especially in the states which have adopted codes of procedure, plaintiff takes care to make lien-holders parties to his suit and to have the nature and amounts of their liens declared by the interlocutory judgment, thus relieving the commissioners or other persons making the sale from all duty in respect thereto other than of satisfying such liens as so declared or as may be required by the final judgment. Still, some of the statutes require a reference to ascertain and report liens held by persons not parties to the suit,[67] and the omission of the referee to give, as to such persons, the notice required by statute leaves them unaffected by the proceeding.[68]

c. Proceedings Preparatory For, and in Making the Sale. The statutory provisions in the several states relating to sales in partition of estates held in cotenancy are too numerous and varied to warrant us either in attempting to disclose them in detail, or in undertaking a general résumé of them. It may safely be assumed that these proceedings are subject to the general rules controlling judicial sales, and should be preceded by an order or judgment commanding, or at least authorizing them,[69] a fixing of the terms of sale either by the judgment or order directing it, or by law,[70] the exposing of the property for sale by a duly authorized commissioner or other officer,[71] a giving of notice of the sale in the mode prescribed by law, or the order of sale,[72] the offering of the property at public Terms of the sale.— These should be fixed by the court and not left to be filled in by the master or clerk (McLain v. Van Winkle, 46 Ill. 406), and the officers making the sale have no power to change them (Eshelman v. Witmer, 2 Watts (Pa.) 263; Murphy v. Bedford, 35 Leg. Although minors are interested, there is no necessity for a family meeting to fix the terms of the sale. Shaffet v. Jackson, 14 La. Ann. 154. In Louisiana, although adult heirs had an absolute right to sales for cash (Dickson v. Dickson, 33 La. Ann. 1370), minors by their tutor might assent to a sale on credit, and upon the advice of a family meeting (Morgan's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 153). A judgment creditor has no power to dictate the terms of a sale. Stern v. Epstin, 14 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 5. Good reason must be shown for directing a sale on credit (Saunders v. Saunders, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 62 S. W. 797), or for selling as two lots property used as one (Kiernan v. Lynch, 112 La. 555, 36 So. 588).

Who may make the sale.—Although the officer authorized to make the sale is usually the commissioner, or one of them, or the sheriff, yet the court may commit this authority to another (Gauthreaux v. Girardey, McGloin (La.) 5; Phelps v. Stewart, 17 Md. 231); but it is said if the proceeding is in the orphans' court the administrator must be appointed (Arble's Estate, 161 Pa. St. 373, 29 Atl. 32), and in some cases the administrator de bonis non (Rawle's Appeal, 119 Pa. St. 100, 12 Atl. 809). In the event of the death or removal of the commissioner, the court may fill the vacancy, and thereupon a successor may make the sale. Coggeshall v. State, 112 Ind. 561, 14 N. E. 555. Sales in parcels or en masse.— The presumption is that a sale in parcels will be the more likely to produce the best price and hence that mode should be resorted to (Meeker v. Evans, 25 Ill. 322; Loyd v. Loyd, 23 La. Ann. 231), but if resorted to without success the property may then be offered en masse (Ward v. Ward, 174 Ill. 432, 51 N. E. 806), and even without a preliminary offering in parcels a sale en masse may be proper, and, with evidence to support it, entitled to confirmation (Walker v. Killian, 62 S. C. 482, 40 S. E. 887; In re Westervelt, 10 Can. L. J. 15). If one of the cotenants owns the improvements in severalty, they and the realty must be sold separately. White v. Lefoldt, 78 Miss. 173, 28 So. 818. A sale where the property was divided into parcels, and at which the auctioneer announced that he would offer one lot first, and that the purchaser might have the privilege of taking the others at the same price, and the sale was made accordingly, is not a compliance with the law requiring the property to be sold in separate parcels. Borde v. Erskine, 33 La. Ann. 873.

Time of sale.— The time for the sale must obviously be the time stated in the notice or some other time to which the sale has been regularly adjourned. It must also be at a time when the order to sell remains in force, and if the life of such order is restricted to the term at which it issues, the sale cannot take place afterward. Hughes v. Hughes, 72 Mo. 136.

78. See cases cited infra, this note.

Place of sale.— The notice of sale must designate the place where it is to take place. In England this is ordinarily in court (Strugnell v. Strugnell, 27 Ch. D. 258, 52 L. J. Ch. 1167, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 512, 33 Wkly. Rep. 30), but it may by the court be directed to take place elsewhere (Hayward v. Smith, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 70), in which case the reserved bid and the auctioneer's commission should first be fixed (Pitt v. White, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 650). In the United States unless the statute declares otherwise, we apprehend that the place for a sale in partition is the same as that of an execution or judicial sale of property of like location and character. Morris v. Wayne Cir. Judge, 130 Mich. 336, 89 N. W. 963.

79. See cases cited infra, this note.

Who may bid at the sale — Generally.— The cases considering this question are chiefly those in which the claim was made either that the purchaser was not entitled to bid at all, or, if accepted as a bidder, he must be declared to hold as a trustee of some person to whom he stood in a fiduciary relation. Under the practice prevailing in England the court may by its decree allow a party to bid. Pennington v. Dalbiac, 18 Wkly. Rep. 684. In truth, unless those interested in the sale are allowed to bid, their property might often be sacrificed when they were willing and able to protect it. Hence we apprehend that all the parties and all persons beneficially interested are entitled and should be allowed to bid, and that too for their own exclusive benefit. Thompson v. Frew, 107 Ill. 478; Bayhi v. Bayhi, 35 La. Ann. 527; Porter v. Depeyster, 18 La. 351; Hopper v. Hopper, 79 Md. 400, 29 Atl.

and finally, the proceedings, including the sale, may be discontinued and the property withdrawn at any time prior to the final acceptance of the bid;[80] but as long as any of the cotenants wishes the sale to be made, the commissioner may properly proceed with it, although the other cotenants wish it stopped.[81]

6. The Report. The officer or officers conducting the sale are required to make a return or report thereof, and generally to file it with the clerk of the court in which the partition suit is pending. If the sale was made by a sheriff, he is not, in Missouri, compellable to sell and make the return at a specified term.[82] In California the referees must report the sale "with a description of the different parcels sold to each purchaser; the name of the purchaser, the price paid or secured, the terms and conditions of the sale and the securities taken, if any."[83] The report need not be under seal.[84] This language does not appear to exact any history of the proceedings anterior to the sale, but the practice generally prevailing is to give such history so fully that, if the report is not assailed, the court may determine therefrom whether to set aside or confirm the sale. In some states the tendency is to regard the report somewhat strictly and not to sustain the sale when the report omits any fact necessary to its support, and as to some facts, such as the giving of the notice of sale, to require extrinsic evidence in confirmation of the report.[85]

7. Proceedings to Vacate the Report and Sale — a. By the Parties to the Suit. The report having been made and filed, the question whether it shall be set aside or confirmed next presents itself. There is no doubt of the general power of the court to vacate or refuse confirmation of the sale whether the parties be infants or adults.[86] The application to set it aside may come either from the parties to the suit or some of them, or from the purchaser seeking to be released from his bid. We have hereinbefore considered the proceedings preparatory for, and in making the sale; and we may safely state that each of the matters there stated to be irregular or improper may, if promptly asserted by a person interested in the property sold, constitute a sufficient reason for vacating or denying confirmation of the sale.[87] Thus the sale may be vacated for want of proper notice or because made at an improper time,[88] or for misconduct of the officer making it,[89] or because made en masse,[90] or to a commissioner or other officer conducting the sale,[91] or because of devices to suppress bidding,[92] or the sale was made contrary to the terms of the decree.[93] A sale may be set aside because of any fraud practised on a party and operating to his prejudice.[94] We have elsewhere said, "the grounds upon which a motion to vacate a sale may properly be granted are so various as to defy complete enumeration."[95] We apprehend that the only ground which here needs special consideration is that of the inadequacy of the price realized at the sale. There are many judicial declarations that judicial sales will not be vacated for mere inadequacy of price.[96] Strictly speaking, there is no sale, but only a proposal or offer for one, until it is confirmed, and the majority of courts will refuse to confirm a sale as against the objections of parties whose property must be divested thereby, if the price realized is seriously and undoubtedly inadequate,[97] and when an advance bid of ten per cent or more has

The form in which the objection or exception is made is not material, provided it discloses to the court who is the objector and what is the ground of his objection. Thus, it may be in the form of a telegram addressed to, and filed by, the clerk of the court (Compton v. McCaffree, 220 Ill. 137, 77 N. been offered, or it satisfactorily appears that such a bid can be obtained, if a resale is ordered.[98] It is true that in some jurisdictions a mere offer of an advance bid, standing alone, does not justify the vacating of a sale.[99] But generally extreme inadequacy of itself entitles the parties prejudiced thereby to resist the confirmation of a sale.[1] This is sometimes put upon the ground that such inadequacy of itself is sufficient evidence of fraud or misconduct.[2] In the majority of the cases in which the confirmation of a sale is resisted on account of alleged inadequacy of price, the parties are able to point to some irregularity in the proceedings, or some accident or other cause preventing a fair attendance at the sale, or otherwise probably diminishing by the bidding, and, where such is the case, any considerable inadequacy will result in an order for a resale rather than a confirmation.[3] If a resale is ordered and a second sale made, the court will not vacate that sale when the inadequacy does not exceed fifteen per cent.[4] The burden of proof must always be assumed by the person seeking to vacate the sale for partition purposes or seeking to have its confirmation refused,[5] and where the ground for vacation or for refusal of confirmation is inadequacy of price the courts will generally sustain the report of the commissioners unless a very clear or extreme case is made

If a decree of sale is subject to impeachment by infants when they come of age, for want of proof of some fact the purchaser need not accept the title (Earle v. Turton, 26 Md. 23), or because a guardian ad litem had not been appointed (Crouter v. Crouter, 133 N. Y. 55, 30 N. E. 726 [affirming 17 N. Y. Suppl. 758]). But a mere irregularity in appointing as a guardian ad litem a person connected in business with the attorneys of the life-tenants does not avoid the sale. Parish v. Parish, 175 N. Y. 181, 67 N. equitably requires him to be released from his bid,[8] but the delay necessarily resulting from the filing of exceptions and the time required to hear and determine them does not entitle the purchaser to a release.[9] If the proceedings are adequate to transfer title to the purchaser, irregularities which do not impair his title cannot entitle him to a release from his bid.[10] Nor can he successfully complain of matters known to him at the time of his purchase and which thereby he must be deemed to have waived,[11] or which could remain unknown to him only through his extreme negligence or inattention to his business.[12] On the setting aside of a sale at the instance of the purchaser, he must be allowed all moneys paid by him on account thereof, to which, in England, must be added interest thereon from the time it was advanced until it is restored to him, and his costs.[13] The failure of title in whole or in part, or the existence of encumbrances held by persons not parties to the suit, constitutes one of the most familiar grounds upon which to resist the confirmation of a sale, or to move that the sale be set aside. Of course, if the bid was made in ignorance of the true title and the making of it resulted from any misrepresentation of the parties or of the officer making the sale, we apprehend that no court of equity would hesitate to refuse confirmation.[14] There is no doubt generally speaking that there is no warranty, and that the rule of caveat emptor applies at execution and judicial sales, including those made in partition,[15] and there are general expressions in the opinions indicating that it may control, and result in the denial of, requests that such sales be set aside or denied confirmation. "The better opinion is, that the rule of caveat emptor will not be applied in chancery sales while the court retains control of the proceedings; and that the purchaser will be released, and any payments made by him and remaining within the control of the court will be returned if the condition of the title is such that he would not be required to accept it were the contract between him and a private individual. The court is the vendor, and will not enforce a contract in its own favor of which it would refuse to decree the execution if the vendor were a private person."[16] This rule applies not only where there is a complete failure of title, but also when it is partial and when the property is in a condition making it less valuable, as where it is subject to an adverse claim or is adversely possessed,[17] or the purchaser bids under a mistake as to its identity,[18] or is subject to some servitude diminishing its value,[19] or is of less area than was supposed at the time of the sale, or is subject to encumbrance not removed thereby,[20] the purchaser is entitled to be released or to a diminution in the purchase-price. If of two lots purchased, the title to one is unmarketable, the purchaser cannot be compelled to take the other if both are necessary to the use for which he designed them.[21] If the condition of the title or the existence of a servitude, or a deficiency in the area, is known to the purchaser at the time of the sale, it will be presumed to have been irrevocably waived by him,[22] and his knowledge may sometimes be presumed from the general notoriety of the fact or its being obvious to any one examining or giving any attention to the property.[23] The confirmation of the sale is in effect an adjudication that the purchaser ought to comply with his bid. Hence any action, motion, or defense thereafter sought to be maintained on the ground of failure of title or any other ground which was presented, or ought to have been presented, in opposition to the confirmation should fail because the question is res judicata.[24]

c. Because the Sale Was Made to, or in the Interest of, One Not Entitled to Bid. This cause is rarely, if ever, asserted by the purchaser. Nevertheless, if he should, through an error of law, become the purchaser at the sale, we see no reason why he may not withdraw therefrom by making his disqualification known to the court. In the event of his doing so, and the parties in interest seeking to hold him as purchaser, and the court refusing to release him, his disqualification would doubtless be waived, and the parties would become estopped from subsequently urging it.[25] The parties, other than the purchaser, may always resist the confirmation of the sale on the ground that it was made to or in the interest of the officer conducting it, or of any other person whom the law or public policy forbids acquiring title thereby.[26] But a party entitled to object to a sale on the ground here under consideration cannot retain the benefits of it for a considerable time, knowing of the ground for objection, and afterward avoid it.[27]

8. Proceedings to Collect the Bid — a. Making the Proper Entry of the Bid. There is doubt whether a judicial sale is within the statute of frauds.[28] Therefore, the first step toward collecting the bid is either to require it to be made in writing signed by the bidder, or to make such a memorandum as will satisfy the statute of frauds.

b. Taking Security. Formerly, and to some extent at present, statutes relating to partition permitted or required persons making partition sales to take security for the fulfilment of the bid.[29] Where statutes of this character exist, the next step after making a proper memorandum of the sale is to exact the security authorized by the statute. If by agreement between all interested, some of the heirs take part of the land after an appraisement and others do not, and so much is left that it is supposed that on final settlement all will get equal value, but, owing to a decline in the real estate before the sale, such proves not to be the case, interest cannot be recovered on the recognizances, none having been expressly stipulated for therein.[30] The statute requiring the execution of a refunding bond before judgment against a defendant constructively served does not apply to proceedings in partition.[31]

c. Obtaining Confirmation. Payment of the bid made at a judicial sale does not become due until it is confirmed.[32] Prior to that time the sale in contemplation of law has not been made. Therefore such confirmation is indispensable to sustain proceedings to compel the payment of the bid or to authorize the execution of a conveyance to the purchaser.[33] In the absence of any objection, the sale will be confirmed.[34] Although no formal order is entered, confirmation may sufficiently appear from the whole record.[35] Confirmation will be refused only with a just regard to the rights of all concerned,[36] and for some substantial reason, involving either a whole or partial failure of title, because the requisite parties were not brought before the court, or title was not vested in them, or because of some unfairness on account of which the confirmation must operate inequitably, but not for mere irregularity of proceeding, nor because of any defect which may yet be remedied before the final judgment is entered.[37]

9. The Effect of Confirmation — a. As Res Judicata. Upon principle, an order confirming a judicial sale must be regarded as a judicial affirmance that no reason exists why it should not be carried out, and therefore, as a final adjudication binding alike on the purchaser and all the parties in interest within the jurisdiction of the court, estopping the former from refusing to pay his bid and otherwise carry out the terms of the sale as confirmed, and the latter from resisting such further steps as may remain to be taken to vest him with the title.[38] To this rule, as we shall hereafter show, an exception exists, where the proceeding is strictly speaking in chancery and application is there made for relief. The confirmation of the sale, although the officer making it reports that he has paid the purchase-price to those entitled thereto, does not establish such payment, for this is not one of the issues involved in the proceeding for confirmation.[39]

b. Upon Further Motions to Set Aside and Upon Suits in Equity For Relief. "The court of chancery seems to have proceeded upon the principle that the parties and the purchaser, having been brought within its jurisdiction, remained and were subject to such orders as it saw proper to make, though after a great lapse of time. The sale may have been confirmed, the money paid, and the property conveyed to the purchaser. Nevertheless, a petition may be filed suggesting some fraud, mistake, misapprehension, surprise, or other adequate ground for equitable relief; the purchaser brought before the court by some appropriate notice; and, if the facts asserted in the petition are established by evidence satisfactory to the court, the sale may be vacated."[40] This practice, if it prevails at all in the United States, does so to a very limited extent. Grounds for avoiding the sale must be urged before confirmation,[41] unless circumstances exist warranting an independent suit in equity for relief,[42] in which case relief can be secured by such a suit.[43] If, however, there was no authority for the sale, as where the court had not acquired jurisdiction, or its judgment or order did not include the property sold, or did not authorize any sale at all, the order of confirmation cannot impart any validity to the sale and it may be assailed collaterally, or by motion to vacate it, regardless of the lapse of time.[44] Infants are, in Kentucky, entitled within one year after coming of age to avoid a partition sale on doing equity with respect to the share of the purchase-money received by them.[45]

10. Notice of Proceedings to Confirm or Set Aside. By his bid and its acceptance the purchaser becomes a party to the suit and is placed within the jurisdiction of the court, which may proceed to determine all questions which come before it in the ordinary progress of the cause and bind him by its determination without giving him any further notice, unless when expressly required by statute. He must anticipate that the court will be called upon to confirm or to set aside the sale when the report thereof is made, and he, as well as other parties to the action, is bound by whatsoever action the court may take without being given any special notice of the hearing, or any notice whatever unless the statute requires one to be given.[46]

11. Resale to Charge the Purchaser. If the decree directs the sale to be for cash, the officer making it may demand that payment be then made, and upon the refusal or inability to comply with the demand, may then resell, and the sale may be confirmed to the second bidder.[47] In such a case, however, no proceedings can be taken against the purchaser, for, in contemplation of law, there is no sale until it is confirmed by the court. Where a resale at the risk of the purchaser is sought, it is not necessary to first tender him a conveyance;[48] but the order may be procured by a motion for such resale, notice of which should be served on such purchaser.[49] The purchaser may appear in response to such notice and urge any matter occurring since the confirmation of the sale showing that he ought not to be held answerable.[50] Upon the resale being ordered, the property must then be exposed for sale on the same terms as before, for if the terms are different, there can be no recovery of the deficiency resulting from the resale.[51]

12. Remedies to Compel the Payment of the Bid, or of the Deficiency Resulting From a Resale — a. By Action. If notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness have been given on account of a judicial sale, they may be enforced by actions at law.[52] Even in the absence of the giving of such evidences of indebtedness, the purchaser is personally liable, and an action may be sustained against him in the nature of a suit for specific performance or to recover a judgment for the amount for which he remains liable, whether it be on his original bid, or for the deficiency resulting from a resale.[53] Before any action can be sustained against the purchaser, every proceeding should be taken requisite to putting him in default. Hence a conveyance should be tendered to, and payment of the purchase-money demanded of, him.[54] The action is usually in the name of the officer or officers who made the sale, although it is said to be maintainable by the parties.[55] In several of the states a lien exists for the unpaid portion of the bid at a partition sale. Such lien, whether resting on the statute only, or reserved in some writing expressly providing for it, is generally enforceable by an independent suit.[56]

b. By Summary Proceedings. The remedy more usually resorted to is by summary proceedings in the court under whose order the sale was made, by motion or rule against the purchaser requiring him to show cause why he should not comply with his bid, or pay the amount remaining due after a resale. On the hearing of the motion, the court may require payment to be made, and enforce its order either by execution or by proceedings for contempt.[57]

c. Defenses to Proceedings to Compel Payment. If the purchaser has been brought before the court on motion or rule to show cause, and after being heard or given an opportunity for a hearing, an order has been made directing a resale on his account, or at his risk, such order must be conceded effect as res judicata and must exclude all matters of defense except those arising after its entry, and the want of jurisdiction of the court in directing the sale, and in all other cases must exclude all matters arising anterior to the confirmation and which might have been urged in opposition thereto.[58] In apparent forgetfulness of these principles, the defenses of unsoundness of a slave at the time of the sale,[59] and of a lease of real property executed during the pendency of the suit,[60] have been entertained.

13. Payment, Necessity For, and What Amounts to. There is no doubt that the payment of his bid either in money, or in some mode sanctioned by the order of court, is indispensable to entitle the purchaser to a conveyance or to vest in him any title in the property, equitable or otherwise;[61] but a sale will not be set aside because the payment was not all made at the day fixed therefor if it was afterward consummated when the deed was executed.[62] Both at execution and chancery sales the bid must be paid in money,[63] except when the parties in interest waive that mode of payment,[64] or the statute controlling provides for the giving of credit,[65] or the purchase is by a party entitled to share in the proceeds, in which event he is usually entitled to have his share regarded as paid on account of his bid,[66] but he must pay the residue the same as any other purchaser.[67] The payment is due whether the purchaser gets, or can get, immediate possession. He is presumed to regulate his bidding with a view to the known powers and rules of the court as to delivering possession.[68] An order of court obtained by a purchaser and authorizing him to make payment to a receiver, to be invested in bonds, is void as against parties who had no notice of the proceedings resulting in such order.[69] If, under a statute authorizing a sheriff to take securities for deferred payments, he takes such securities in his own name and receives payment thereof, this does not bind the parties, nor release the purchaser. He remains liable for the unpaid amount of his bid upon the securities executed by him.[70] But if a master in chancery forges a portion of the decree and thereby it purports to authorize him to sell notes received in part payment, the parties to the suit are chargeable with notice of such forgery; and if they receive a portion of the money realized by a sale of notes, they are estopped from recovering any balance remaining due thereon which has been received and embezzled by such master.[71]

14. The Conveyance — a. Its Execution. Upon the payment of the purchase-price, and not before, the purchaser becomes entitled to a conveyance.[72] And this right appears to continue indefinitely, no presumption of its abandonment arising from lapse of time.[73] Its execution is indispensable to transmit the legal title;[74] but even prior thereto the purchaser may be regarded as vested with the equitable title, and therefore enabled to defend in ejectment,[75] and to recover under a policy insuring the property against destruction by fire.[76] The conveyance may be executed by the officer or officers who made the sale,[77] and in the event of their death, resignation, or other termination of their office, may be executed by their successor in office,[78] or by such ex-officers.[79] The decree or order of confirmation of sale need not contain any formal direction or authorization to the selling officer to execute the conveyance;[80] and it has been held to be delivered, in contemplation of law, from such confirmation, although he retains manual possession of it.[81]

b. Its Effect. If the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties to the suit, the conveyance must be regarded as their deed and having as great an effect as if executed by all of them personally;[82] and where they represent other persons, such persons, although then unborn, may be regarded as parties to, and bound by, the conveyance.[83] To confer this effect on the conveyance, it must have been authorized under the judgment or order on which it purports to rest. If it purports to convey land or some interest therein, the sale of such land or interest must have been authorized by the court,[84] and confirmed by it after being made.[85] Being in law the conveyance of all the parties, it vests in the grantee the same title and rights as would their conveyance equally comprehensive in terms,[86] in which is necessarily included the right to the possession of the property

if the parties, or any of them, had such right, and to recover the value of the use and occupation during the time such possession is wrongfully withheld,[87] and if withheld through and by the aid of an undertaking on appeal, to recover upon such undertaking.[88] The construction of the conveyance must be in favor of the purchaser and for the purpose of accomplishing the manifest purpose of the suit and other proceedings.[89] The purchaser's rights are limited by the terms of his deed, and he is bound by restrictions therein, although not mentioned at the sale.[90] If, however, a reservation is made at the sale, it has been held to control, although not mentioned in the deed.[91] The decree of sale may provide that it and the sale shall not affect the mineral rights, in which event none of the minerals pass to the purchaser.[92] Growing crops pass to the purchaser when not reserved in the order of sale or the conveyance.[93] The title of the purchaser is paramount to any lien held by any party to the suit, or acquired by any party during its pendency,[94] but may be subject to the lien, if any exists, for unpaid purchase-money.[95] Taxes accruing after the sale are prima facie chargeable against the purchaser.[96] He is entitled to subsequently accruing rents.[97]

c. Collateral Attack Upon. As a partition sale is a judicial sale, an attack upon it is governed by the same principles as an attack upon any other judicial proceeding, among which are: (1) The court must have had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, with power to grant the relief granted;[98] the proceedings being usually those of courts of general jurisdiction, all presumptions in favor of them are indulged not absolutely inconsistent with the record;[99] (3) where jurisdiction exists, no irregularity in its exercise,[1] and no erroneous conclusion or action on the part of the court exercising it, can deprive the judgment of its conclusive effect;[2] and (4) that the effect of any order or judgment cannot be avoided or mitigated by showing that some question ought to have been decided differently.[3]

d. Its Protection to Innocent Purchasers. A purchaser at a partition sale may be entitled to the protection due to an innocent purchaser,[4] and as such entitled to rely on the record in the case. On the other hand, he is bound by such record and chargeable with notice of its condition and of all the facts disclosed thereby, and is justly treated as though he had actual knowledge of such facts.[5] The purchaser is not bound to see to the proper application of the purchase-money, and his title cannot be impaired by proving that an officer, or other agent of the law to whom the money was properly paid, misappropriated it.[6]

Thus, if the property sold belongs to the estate of a decedent, the purchaser must know of its liability to be appropriated, by means of sale, to the payment of debts, Trimmier v. Winsmith, 41 S. C. 109, 19 S. E. 283.

15. Remedies of the Purchaser. As the purchaser acquires the title and rights of the parties to the action, there is no reason why he should not be entitled to avail himself of each and every remedy to which they would have been entitled had no sale been made.[7] When the proceeding is in equity, he may doubtless call on the court for relief when entitled thereto either against a party or against an officer making the sale,[8] or against a party or a stranger for a writ of assistance to be placed in possession.[9] As the rule of caveat emptor applies to judicial sales, the circumstances must be very exceptional, if they can exist at all, when the purchaser can sustain an action to recover for a defect in the title, or for any act or omission on account of which his title is destroyed or diminished.[10]

16. Remedies Against the Purchaser. For the enforcement of his bid the remedies against a purchaser are by motion or action, as hereinbefore stated. In no other case now occurring to us is there any occasion to seek any remedy against a purchaser except where, for some reason, he is sought to be held as trustee of another, or the sale to him is void, and he is therefore called upon to surrender possession and to pay for the value of the use and occupation, or to account for rents received.[11] He is said not to be entitled to the protection of the law providing that a person recovering land must pay the value of improvements placed thereon by defendant.[12] After the execution of the deed, it constitutes color of title,[13] and the purchaser and those acquiring and possessing under him may be protected by the general statute of limitations, or those statutes devised expressly for the protection of persons whose rights are founded on judicial sales.[14] The purchaser may also, although the sale was void, be protected by the principles of estoppel, as where those whose title was intended to be divested by the sale brought it about, or participated in its benefit, or otherwise permitted themselves to assume an attitude toward it, in consideration of which they cannot equitably be allowed to deny its validity.[15]

17. Effect of the Sale as a Conversion. Although real property is sold in partition and the title of the parties therein is thereby divested and transferred to the purchaser, and the parties become respectively entitled to their distributive shares thereof, such shares are said to retain their character of realty, and not to be converted into personalty, and therefore, on the death of the persons entitled thereto, to descend and be subject to distribution according to the law controlling real property.[16]

18. Collecting the Proceeds From the Selling Officers. The referees or other officers by whom the sale is made are usually required to give bonds for the performance of their duties, among which is that of paying over all moneys received by them; and they and their sureties, if such moneys are not so paid over within a reasonable time, are subject to actions to enforce such payment.[17] They are also liable for any unauthorized acts, such as surrendering securities or evidences of indebtedness without receiving lawful money in payment,[18] or being guilty of a negligent act resulting in the loss of a mortgage which had been discharged by the sale.[19] A mistake made by a commissioner in charging himself with a sum greater than that received may be corrected by the court or its auditor.[20] If he is by the court directed to make payments, he is protected in so doing as long as the order of the court remains unvacated and unreversed.[21]

19. THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS. Out of the proceeds of the sale must first be paid the costs of the action, including such attorney's fees as have been allowed by the court.[22] The balance is the sum remaining for division. Its distribution is usually a very simple matter, for the interlocutory decree must, when possible, fix the moieties of the respective cotenants, and the liens or charges existing against each, or against the whole property, and the priority of the different liens, when there is any conflict between them. The final judgment or order distributing the proceeds of the sale therefore follows, and gives effect to, and is controlled by, the interlocutory judgment; that is to say, to each cotenant must be given a sum corresponding to his moiety, if it is free from liens,[23] and diminished by the amount of such liens if any exist.[24] This right to distribution does not vest at the sale, but only when such proceedings have been taken as result in ascertaining its net proceeds, or, more properly speaking, the fund remaining for distribution.[25] For the court having jurisdiction may deem that the interest of all the parties will be promoted by extinguishing claims against the whole property, as where a lease of the whole is outstanding and must greatly diminish its market value, in which event the acquisition of the leasehold may be brought about and the amount expended in such acquisition be deducted from the amount to be distributed.[26] There are questions, however, which sometimes cannot be determined in the interlocutory decree. Thus, there may be estates in the property which, although declared in such judgment, it can furnish no absolute test for fixing the value of, as where the fee is sold and some of the parties have estates less than in fee, as for life or years, or in remainder or reversion, in which case the court must, in disposing of the proceeds, either fix the value of each estate less than in fee, or keep control of the proceeds so that a due proportion shall be paid to each claimant when his estate becomes absolute and in possession.[27] So one or more of the parties may have substantially added to the amount realized at the sale by placing improvements on the property, and the court may make him an equitable allowance therefor out of the proceeds.[28] All these and kindred questions the court may inquire into and determine either directly or by aid of referees,[29] but if a method of inquiry is provided by statute, that method must be pursued.[30] Thus of the many equities which one cotenant may assert against another, all, if susceptible of measurement and compensation in money, may be presented to the court and provided for in its order making distribution of the proceeds of a sale.[31] It has even been held that equities between a party and the purchaser may be thus adjusted, as where after the sale a party enters and removes fixtures, in which case he may be required to compensate the purchaser out of the wrong-doer's share of the purchase-price,[32] or when the sale to him is void, he may be repaid out of the proceeds of a subsequent sale.[33] But the equities so recognized and provided for must appear by the pleadings or be supported by the papers or other evidence upon some motion the court is authorized to consider, and the relief granted must be within the powers of the court.[34] Sometimes the necessity for the present distribution either of the whole of the moneys or of some share therein is postponed by directing payment to be made into court, or the money to be otherwise retained within its control.[35] Liens not finally provided for by the interlocutory order may be against the whole property, as when for taxes or assessments, or against the share of some of the parties only. property subject thereto, or the officer making the sale be directed to pay them from the proceeds.[36] In some of the states execution and judicial sales pass the title to the property free of all liens.[37] When this rule prevails and also when all the lien-holders are parties to the suit and bound by the decree, the effect of a partition sale is to remove all liens from the property and attach them to the proceeds of the sale.[38] In determining how these liens shall be enforced, it is sometimes material to consider whether such proceeds, although in money, are to be treated as personal or as real property. Although for some purposes they have been deemed personalty,[39] we apprehend the better view is that with respect to all questions relating to their distribution, and especially to the enforcement of liens against them, they remain real estate.[40] It was formerly said that, on partition, the right of encumbrancers would not be settled,[41] and more recently that a motion asking that the proceeds of the sale of the interest of a cotenant be paid to one not a party to the suit cannot be sustained.[42] Neither proposition is now true. Persons having claims or liens against the property sold may present them to the court and have their payment provided for out of the proceeds of the sale.[43] The commissioner or other officer having the moneys in his hand should distribute them as directed by the court and has no authority to pay them over to some person other than the distributee.[44] If the persons entitled to distribution are married women, some special order may be necessary, owing to that fact, for the better protection of their interests as between them and their husbands.[45] In the event of the death of a party, care must also be taken, as between his heirs and executors or administrators, so as not to imperil the rights of either.[46] The distribution of the proceeds of land sold in partition is controlled by the law of the state where it is situate.[47] The order distributing the proceeds of the sale is the final judgment in the proceeding and, as such, conclusive on the rights of the parties, and cannot be modified except by some appellate or revisory proceeding.[48] It may include securities taken as well as moneys actually paid,[49] and is a complete protection to the commissioner in paying over the moneys as therein directed.[50]

P. Costs and Attorney's Fees — 1. General Right to. Independently of any statute upon the subject, the rule respecting costs in partition must be the same as in other cases, namely, a party plaintiff establishing his claim must recover his costs as an incident to his judgment,[51] and the same must be true as to a defendant who either maintains his demand for affirmative relief,[52] or shows that no relief should be awarded against him in the proceeding.[53] Statutes have been enacted limiting the right to costs in partition. They are somewhat strictly construed and are not applied, although the right to partition exists, unless the proceeding is one in partition.[54]

2. Items Allowable as. Doubtless the rules applicable to the items of expense allowable as costs in other cases of an equitable nature are equally applicable to suits and other judicial proceedings for partition.[55] Many things are necessary in a suit for partition for which expense must be incurred which can rarely or never arise in other suits or actions, and when necessary they may be procured and paid for, and the amount so paid be allowed to the party making payment, such, for instance, as the drawing of the commissioners' return and the making of all books and plats required as a part thereof or in connection therewith,[56] the expenses of procuring the services of neeessary surveyors and the making of surveys,[57] of giving notice of and conducting sales,[58] of the services of the commissioners or referees, which, however, must be restricted to the amount specified by statute, where the statute has undertaken to control the subject,[59] of procuring the attendanee of witnesses,[60] or the services of auctioneers,[61] or of guardians ad litem.[62] Where it was advisable, before offering property for sale, to purchase outstanding leasehold interests, the amount required for and expended on such purchase was allowed as costs.[63] We cannot see that the principles controlling the allowance of costs are, or ought to be, different when partition is by sale than when it is by allotment. Nevertheless some statutes have been enacted applying specially to sales, in effect giving the court a discretion as to the charges which it may order paid out of the proceeds,[64] and specially including both defendants and plaintiffs within the benefit of the statute.[65] Those who agree to the doing of acts in connection with a partition sale not required by law, such as giving extra notice thereof, estop themselves from resisting an allowance therefor.[66]

3. Limiting the Right to Costs to Those Incurred After the Hearing or Arising From a Trial. In England the rule formerly prevailed in partition that each party paid his own costs up to the hearing and perhaps up to the issuing of the commission,[67] but this rule has apparently been abrogated by the Partition Act.[68] Even before that enactment the courts seem to have imposed costs on a party who resisted the partition or otherwise caused the incurring of an expenditure in establishing a title or making some other inquiry.[69] In Massachusetts plaintiff's right to costs was denied in partition unless an issue had been joined and tried,[70] while in Maine it excluded all costs incurred after the interlocutory judgment.[71]

4. General Rules as to Allowance of — a. Where a Party Has Been the Cause Of or to Blame For. The costs which are incurred in the course of a proceeding in partition may be considered with reference: (1) To those which take place in the assertion of the common title and are necessary to complete the partition in conformity with the interlocutory decree; and (2) those involved in undertaking to assert some claim or defense which proves not to be maintainable and which therefore cannot be said to be in aid of the common title, and to the payment of which none of the holders of that title can equitably be called to contribute. On the contrary, so far as they have been required to make expenditures to meet such claim or defense, they ought to be indemnified by the party who has wrongfully or mistakenly asserted it. Hence, as a general rule, he who in partition makes an unfounded claim not only cannot recover his costs in so doing, but is further liable for the costs which his adversaries have reasonably incurred in resisting his claim.[72] Therefore, if the complainant is shown to have no interest in the property, he must pay all the costs.[73]

b. The Discretion of the Court. When the proceeding is in equity, or of an equitable nature, the court in which it takes place has a discretion to allow, or to refuse the allowance of, costs, and when allowed, to apportion them as it may deem equitable.[74] This discretion is not arbitrary and unreviewable. Hence the amount allowed may be reduced on appeal.[75]

c. Apportioning the Costs According to the Moieties of the Parties. Ordinarily a proceeding for partition should be regarded as in the interest of all the cotenants and each required to contribute to the expense thereof accordingly. Therefore the costs allowed will, unless special circumstances render this rule inequitable, and therefore inapplicable, if the property is sold, be deducted from the proceeds of the sale before making any division thereof, and if no sale takes place will be charged against the allotment of each allottee in the proportion which his moiety bears to the whole property.[76] If certain improvements are part of the property partitioned by sale, their value must be taken into consideration in apportioning the costs, and such improvements must be charged with their share.[77] If there are two or more parcels sold in partition, no part of the proceeds of the sale of one can be appropriated to pay the costs of proceedings for the partition of the other.[78]

5. Mode of Compelling Payment of — a. By Personal Judgment and Execution. Although this course is not the one usually pursued, there may be circumstances justifying a judgment in personam for costs in partition against a party thereto and its enforcement by execution against him,[79] but this can only be when he is within the jurisdiction of the court and has been served with process therein.[80] An order taxing a certain part of the costs against each of the parties, and directing that execution issue in default of payment, does not authorize a single writ against all the parties.[81]

b. By Sale of the Property Partitioned or Retention Out of Proceeds of Sale. Usually the costs allowed in partition are by the final judgment apportioned against the different allottees and their allotments, and in effect constitute a charge or lien against the latter,[82] which lien may be enforced by taking out an execution or order of sale against the allottee and selling his allotment thereunder;[83] but in some of the states a special motion is requisite to obtain this writ and relief,[84] and in Virginia the proceeding must be by bill in equity as in case of other judgment liens.[85] Where the property, instead of being partitioned by allotment, is sold, and the net proceeds divided, it is proper, in the final judgment, which is the one disposing of the moneys, to make provision for the payment of all allowable costs, including attorney's fees, where such fees are allowable;[86] but such allowance should not interfere with, or displace mortgage and other liens on the property.[87]

c. By Pursuing Purchasers Pendente Lite. One who during the pendency of a suit for partition buys and receives a conveyance of the interest of a cotenant thereby so far makes himself a party to the suit that he can be held personally liable for costs previously incurred therein,[88] although there are circumstances in which the grantee may be held to acquire his interest in the pending suit, "cum onere, entitled to the benefit and subject to the liabilities incurred in the action by the assignor."[89]

6. For and Against Whom Costs May Be Awarded. Any party to a partition suit may recover his costs incurred therein either for the benefit of the common property, or in meeting any issue tendered to him and which he is thereby compelled either to confess or meet; and, on the other hand, may be subject to costs incurred for the benefit of the common estate when he is found to be an owner therein, or in meeting some issue which he has tendered and been unable to maintain. If he has been improperly made a party and is not bound to appear and plead, he is not liable for costs,[90] and a like result follows when, although properly a party, he is not entitled to and does not claim any relief.[91] When a sale is made in partition, the purchaser becomes thereby a party to the suit and may institute and be subjected to motions and other proceedings relating to his bid, and may thereby recover or be subjected to costs as if originally a party.[92] In New York a guardian ad litem of infant plaintiffs has been held liable for costs.[93] Very strangely, it was determined in Pennsylvania that if defendants prevail under the plea of "non tenent insimul" and thereby wholly defeat plaintiff, they cannot recover their costs.[94] Where plaintiff died after the judgment had been rendered, and the case continued on the question of costs, it was held that his administrator, although erroneously permitted to prosecute, could not recover costs.[95]

7. Attorney's Fees — a. The Right to Must Be Specially Conferred. In the United States, attorney's fees are not ordinarily recoverable as costs. Therefore in suits for partition they cannot be recovered unless their recovery is specially and clearly authorized. General expressions in statutes authorizing the allowance of costs, or of costs and expenses, are not sufficient to support an allowance to any of the parties on account of necessary disbursements to obtain the services of attorneys.[96] From this position it must be admitted that there is strong judicial dissent.[97]

b. The Allowance of by Statute. In a very great majority of the states attorney's fees are now proper subjects for consideration and allowance in suits for partition as part of the costs thereof.[98] If a statute provides that there shall be taxed in favor of plaintiff, as costs in the case, an attorney's fee, it is error for a court to order that each party pay his own attorney.[99] Such a statute is constitutional.[1]

c. The Class of Services For Which Allowable. The general principle underlying the statutes authorizing allowances to be made in partition suits for the services of attorneys is that, irrespective of the person in fact employing the attorney, his services were necessary to the conduct of the proceeding and therefore were beneficial to all the parties; and, so far as they were such, are equitably chargeable against all. This is ordinarily true of the services of plaintiff's attorney who, in bringing the action and in his antecedent investigations and in every step he takes, unless it be in the trial of contested issues as to title, works for the benefit of all the parties. If a defendant has, or in good faith believes he has, a good and substantial defense to the action and employs an attorney to present it, such defendant is not answerable for any part of the fees of complainant's attorney.[2] Generally one litigating any issue is not chargeable for the services of any attorney who acted in hostility to him.[3] The result of this is that the services of attorneys in litigating disputed titles are not proper subjects for compensation in partition,[4]

except in New York.[5] Where it was necessary for two or more, or for all, of the parties to employ counsel, the court refused to undertake to determine, as between them, whose counsel most promoted the general welfare, but left each party to settle with his own counsel and did not grant any allowance in favor of either, except that as the attorney of plaintiff necessarily performed services preliminary to the suit, in examining the title, and also in preparing the pleadings and bringing the case to trial, an allowance was made for his services up to the time when, because the parties were represented each by his own attorney, the attorney of plaintiff could no longer be regarded as acting for all.[6] The language of some of the statutes is sufficiently comprehensive to warrant the allowance of compensation for the services of the attorneys of a defendant,[7] but we know of no reported case in which such allowance was made. In fact, the question can rarely arise, for the employment of counsel by defendant implies a litigated case, and in cases of that class, as we have already shown, the courts do not award counsel fees, even though counsel has appeared as an actor by filing a cross complaint;[8] but if defendant succeeds on his cross complaint, it may relieve him from liability to contribute to the payment of complainant's counsel.[9] Certainly the mere fact that a defendant appeared by an attorney and paid, or became answerable for, his fees does not require an allowance to be made therefor where the partition was not opposed and the services of the attorney were merely in disclosing and thereby protecting his client's interest, which, however, was not assailed by any of the parties.[10]

d. The Amount of the Allowance. What is a reasonable sum to be allowed for counsel fees is a question of fact, but not necessarily determinable solely on evidence adduced before the court, for the judge from his presiding at the trial and other proceedings may have a better conception of the amount and character of the services than can result merely from the hearing of testimony descriptive of them. Doubtless the elements to be considered are the same as in any other cause presenting the issue of the proper compensation for the services of an attorney, namely, the skill, experience, and standing of the lawyer, the nature of the controversy, the amount involved, etc.[11] The compensation should be according to the services performed, and not as a commission on the fund in court.[12] If there is a fee bill fixing the amount of attorney's fees, the allowance should be restricted to the amounts so fixed.[13]

e. Where an Attorney Is Complainant. If plaintiff cotenant is an attorney at law and performs in the suit the services usually required of a complainant's attorney, no allowance can be made for such services and enforced as part of the costs of the suit.[14] He is not, however, bound to act as attorney in the cause. He may, to the same extent as if he were not competent to act for himself, employ counsel to commence and conduct the proceeding. Nor is it fatal to his claim for an allowance for their services that they are his partners.[15]

f. The Allowance Must Be in Favor of a Party — Not of His Attorney. The allowance for attorney's fees is to indemnify a party for an expense incurred in the action. It does not warrant the introducing of a new party therein and the entry of a judgment in his favor. The allowance therefore should not be in favor of the attorney, but of the party who has paid, or is liable to pay, his compensation.[16]

8. In Which Judgment the Provision For Must Be Made. The fixing of the amount of the costs and of the sum to be allowed for attorney's fees and the imposition and assessment of these charges upon the persons and property subject thereto are matters not for the interlocutory but for the final judgment, and any proceeding undertaking to allow either attorney's fees or costs prior to such final judgment is unauthorized.[17] If, however, the final judgment omits any provision on these subjects, the matter may, in Vermont, be brought up at a subsequent time by petition.[18] In Illinois the court directed the master to pay the complainants' solicitor a reasonable fee, without fixing the amount. The master thereafter made payment to such solicitor, and in his report stated the fact of payment and its amount. The court subsequently approved the report, and this was held to be a sufficient fixing of the amount.[19] It is safe to say that not until the costs are fixed by the court has any referee or other officer into whose possession the proceeds of a sale have come the right to pay them over to any party or other person on the assumption that he is entitled thereto as costs or attorney's fees.[20]

Q. The Final Judgment — 1. Necessity For. To the termination of an action or proceeding in partition the final judgment is indispensable. It is true, if the partition has been by sale, the title of the parties may be divested from them and vested in the purchaser, although no final judgment has been given distributing the proceeds. But if the partition is by allotment, the parties remain cotenants until the final judgment confirming and making effective the allotments.[21] The direct evidence of such final judgment is not, however, always capable of being produced; and in the absence of such evidence, the judgment may be presumed from possession taken and long held in severalty.[22]

2. When May Be Rendered. Obviously the final judgment ordinarily should not be rendered until all the issues involved in the proceeding have been determined, nor until the court can finally dispose of all the matters before it by directing the proper disposition of the fund, if any has been realized from a sale of property, or by vesting the title in severalty to each allotment in the respective allottees and making all provisions that are to be made concerning charges in favor of or against any allottee;[23] but, under exceptional circumstances, where some right cannot be determined or provided for until the happening of some future event, the court may enter a judgment final as to all other matters, but leaving in abeyance the matters which cannot be determined, or properly provided for until some future time.[24] If there is a failure to enter judgment in partition due to the delay of the court, or to any cause which in a case of another class would justify the entry of judgment nunc pro tunc, it will equally justify such an entry in an action or suit for partition.[25]

3. The Form and Substance of the Judgment. If the partition is not in kind, but is by a sale of the property, the final judgment disposes of the proceeds of such sale by directing the payment of the costs or ratifying payments already made, and distributing the residue to and among the parties entitled thereto. If the proceeding is at law, the final judgment refers to the report of the commissioners, and orders and adjudges "that the said report stand, in all respects, ratified and confirmed, and that the partition so made be firm and effectual forever," and it also contains an adjudication respecting the costs and a direction that execution issue therefor.[26] If the proceeding is in chancery, strictly speaking, the final decree, as it does not of itself affect the title, should further provide for and direct the execution by the requisite parties of such conveyances as are necessary to vest in severalty in each allottee the title to his allotment.[27] In England, under the recent equity practice, especially when the shares of the parties are minute and complicated, the court may declare each of the parties trustees as to the shares allotted to them, and then vest the whole trust estate in a single new trustee, with directions to him to convey to the respective parties their several allotments.[28] In various other emergencies the court also appoints a trustee and directs him to execute the conveyance necessary to consummate the partition.[29] If a party is a minor, and therefore not competent to execute a conveyance, the final decree may declare him to be a trustee of the parts allotted in severalty to the other parties.[30] In the United States the necessity for conveyances to vest

the title in harmony with the partition has generally been dispensed with.[31] In some of the states, it is, however, essential that the decree on its face show that the title is to be vested without any precedent conveyance, and, where the decree is silent, a conveyance must be made.[32] In various parts of this article we have shown how by the modern practice, and especially under the reformed codes of procedure, the action of partition has been broadened until thereby almost every conceivable question of title may be determined, and every equity of any of the parties may be presented and recognized and due provision made for its enforcement. From this it follows that the final judgment may contain, in addition to the mere confirmation of the partition, such other and further provisions as may be requisite to clearly express all adjudications which the court has made and all the directions which it intends to have carried into effect. Thus, if equities have been established, due provision may be made for their enforcement;[33] if owelty is found to be due from one party to another, that fact may be stated and liens imposed and means authorized for their enforcement;[34] if the sale of the property or some part thereof is necessary on account of some lien, such sale may be ordered,[35] although generally one holding a lien will be left to enforce it by his ordinary remedies;[36] if the due protection of the parties, or of any of them, requires some provision respecting the deposit or custody of the title deeds, such provision should be inserted in the judgment;[37] if some of them are liable to others for rents received or for any other matter connected with the common property, the liability should be declared and its enforcement provided for.[38] The final judgment is in a sense based upon the interlocutory judgment, and the former may aid in the construction of the latter; and if the latter is inconsistent with it there is generally a pre-

Setting apart "to the estate of."— Although the judgment should show to whom property is allotted, yet where the heirs and representatives of a deceased petition that his interest in an estate be set off to them as an entirety, a judgment setting apart such interest "to the estate of," naming the decedent, is not void for uncertainty. Richardson v. Loupe, 80 Cal. 490, 22 Pac. 227.

Under a statute authorizing a formal divestiture of title in and by a decree, this authorization must be regarded as directory merely, and failure to formally divest the interests of two of the parties does not make the decree any the less binding on them. Johnson v. Britt, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 756. While this is not necessary, there is nothing improper in a decree declaring that if either of the parties is legally evicted from any part of his land, the other shall reconvey a proportionate quantity. Devour v. Johnson, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 409.

The provision of the statute of New York that if the persons entitled to any estate be unknown, the court shall make such order for the protection of their rights as if they were known and had appeared, has no application to unknown or after-born persons adjudged to have no interest. Fox v. Fee, 24 N. Y. App. Div. 314, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 292.

Insertion of findings of fact.— While it is unusual to insert in the final judgment or decree a finding of facts, yet when persons not in possession have established their title to a certain interest in lands by proving their heirship to a remote owner, the court may permit the findings as to their pedigree to be recited in the decree, when this course may probably prevent further questioning as to the rights of the parties, and this, although a rule of court declares that neither any part of the pleadings, nor the report of any master, nor any prior proceeding shall be recited or stated in the decree. McClaskey v. Barr, 48 Fed. 130.

Other affirmative relief.— When a party seeks and shows himself entitled to affirmative relief independent of that of the partition, such, for instance, as the annulling of a conveyance described in the pleadings, no doubt the judgment ought to specifically declare the annulment or cancellation of such conveyance, but a finding of facts by the court necessary for such annulment may, it is said, accomplish the same purpose. Sullivan v. Lumsden, 118 Cal. 664, 50 Pac. 777.

sumption of error sufficient to support an appeal.[39] If the final judgment purports to confirm a partition of land, described differently from that described in the interlocutory judgment, it will be assumed that a clerical error has been committed which the court has power to correct.[40] Although the final judgment may, by referring to and approving the commissioners' report on file, practically make it a part of such judgment, as if it were formally copied therein, and hence it cannot be said to be necessary that the judgment contain the matters set out in such report, yet it is the safer practice, because the judgment is more apt than the report to be preserved and recorded, to insert in the judgment a complete description of each allotment and a designation of the person to whom it is made, so that by referring to the judgment alone one may ascertain each parcel, the person to whom it has been assigned, the liabilities and burdens to which it is subject, and the easements and other rights to which its allottee and his successors are entitled. The descriptive words in a final judgment in partition, like those in every other writing, may require construction, but we are not aware that the principles applying to and controlling such construction differ from those applicable to other writings.[41]

4. Modes of Enforcing. If a party entitled to an allotment is not in possession thereof, and the proceeding is in chancery or in a court exercising the powers of a court of chancery, he is entitled to a writ of assistance.[42] He may also, where that remedy will prove efficient, procure an injunction against any of the parties proposing to intermeddle with, or obstruct the enjoyment of, his rights.[43] If a party refuses to do something which the judgment requires of him, he may be coerced by attachment for contempt.[44] A person holding title under the final judgment may also enforce his rights by appropriate actions at law,[45] and suits in equity.[46]

5. Relief From. After the final judgment has been entered, it may be found unjust to some of the parties, who may then seek relief therefrom. This relief they may seek by appeal or motion to vacate under substantially the same circumstances and for substantially the same causes as if the judgment related to some other matter.[47] Relief may also be sought and secured by an independent suit in

By appeal or by suit in equity.— The practising of vacating or modifying judgments after they have become final, and after the lapse of the term, unless they are shown to be void by the record, is a dangerous one, and not less so in suits for partition than in other proceedings, and a party deeming himself entitled to relief should be required to seek it by appeal or by a suit in equity. equity, for any cause justifying relief in equity from any other judgment affecting the title or the right to the possession of real property,[48] such as mistake,[49] or fraud resulting in inequitable allotment.[50] The right to relief in equity is subject to the same limitations as in other cases where relief is sought from judgments, namely, the party seeking relief must not have been guilty of carelessness and inattention to his business,[51] nor of acquiescence in the judgment complained of or of laches in seeking relief from it,[52] nor must the suit for relief be a mere attempt to relitigate matters which are res judicata,[53] nor attempt to urge errors or irregularities which ought to have been urged in the original suit.[54] Neither will relief be awarded against an innocent purchaser,[55] but one is not an innocent purchaser with respect to matters which he must have ascertained by reading the recorded conveyances through which he claims title or the pleadings and other records in the partition suit.[56]

6. Collateral Attack Upon. The rule with respect to collateral attacks upon judgments and decrees in partition must, upon principle, be precisely the same as that controlling collateral attacks upon other judgments and decrees, which is, that they are impregnable to such an attack unless they can be assailed for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter, or the person of a party, or the court has granted some relief not within its power to grant. No alleged fraud,[57] no mere irregularity or error in the proceedings, or in any action taken by the court, can on a collateral attack, impair its judgment or the partition authorized or confirmed thereby.[58] Decisions may be found inconsistent with this rule and which are worthy of being cited only as phenomenal instances of error or forgetfulness.[59] Instances of judgments in partition subject to collateral attack, although the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, because the court had no jurisdiction to give the relief which it assumed to grant, must be rare.[60] Possibly the decreeing of a sale for costs when only a partition in kind was prayed for,[61] or allowing an attorney's fee where the court had no power to do so,[62] or in undertaking to vest in strangers to the suit, as trustees, the title to a portion of the land, with power to bring ejectment and enforce compromises,[63] may serve as illustrations. As to when a judgment may be collaterally assailed for want of jurisdiction by the court over a party is a question upon which the courts are at variance, but whatever rule prevails in any state as to other judgments is equally applicable to judgments and decrees in partition. If the record shows the manner in which process was served, another, different, and better service will not be presumed.[64] On the other hand, if the record is silent respecting some jurisdictional step, that it was taken and in a manner entitling the court to act as it did will be conclusively presumed,[65] and recitals or statements of jurisdictional matters are equally unassailable.[66] The presumption of regularity is not, on collateral attack, rendered less applicable by the fact that the proceeding is under a special statute instead of being under the common law.[67] The fact that defendant was incorrectly named

Want of space excludes all analysis of these decisions for the purpose of showing what, within the meaning of the rule above stated, may be classed as errors and irregularities. It is safe to state, in a general way, that the former term includes all incorrect conclusions expressly or impliedly reached by a court on some question it had authority to decide, and the latter term the omission of some act prescribed by law, or the doing of it at a different time or place, or in a different manner or by a different person, or a greater or less number of persons than required by law. See cases cited supra, this note.

A mere recital "now at this day come the said parties, by their respective attorneys," following the title of a cause in which the name of a defendant appears with others will not, it has been held, support the judgment on collateral attack if the record does not show the acquisition of jurisdiction over him either by summons or by publication. in the proceedings and judgment does not deprive the court of jurisdiction or lessen the effect of the judgment if he was duly cited.[68]

7. Ratification and Estoppel. We have hereinbefore shown in section II not only that the cotenants may make partition without the aid of any court; but furthermore that this may be by parol followed by possession taken and held under it, and that where such parol partition and the possession under it were not recognized as affecting the legal title, they yet were conceded to vest in the allottees a paramount equity entitling them to control such legal title and require its transfer to them if needed to fully consummate the partition. If proceedings taken in court to partition property go so far that allotments are made and possession is taken and held under them, any party so taking and holding possession or otherwise knowingly receiving the benefit of the partition thereby ratifies it and becomes estopped to assail it or to deny its validity.[69] An exception to this rule must be allowed in favor of minors and other persons who are incompetent to act.[70]

8. The Effect of the Partition — a. Is Only the Possession Bound? No doubt partition at law was a mere possessory action, and hence the judgment confirming it merely placed each allottee in possession of his allotment to hold in severalty by the same title which he had before held in cotenancy. The cases affirming this are numerous.[71] Many of them are misleading, in that they reiterate statements which, although undoubtedly true at the common law, are entirely false where made because the statutes of the state controlling the courts making them have changed the character of the action and sanctioned the interposition of issues therein which not merely authorize, but necessarily require, the determination of questions of title. But where no statute of this character has been enacted, the partition does not involve questions of title and leaves any party thereto at liberty to assert any title he may have had, and which he did not hold in cotenancy with the other parties,[72] and even at liberty to establish that an allottee had no interest in the property before partition and therefore could have none after it in the parcel allotted to him.[73]

b. All Issues Involved and Determined Become Res Judicata. In chancery the effect of the partition upon the title was dependent on the conveyances required by the court and executed in obedience to its requirement,[74] while at law its effect was limited by the fact that the only issue tendered by the complaint was that the parties were in possession as cotenants, and perhaps what were the moieties of each in their possessory title. But it has never been susceptible of successful affirmance that the decision of the court on any issue tried and triable before it, whether proceeding at law or in equity, was any less conclusive in partition than in any other judicial proceeding.[75] Hence, if on an accounting in partition an alleged liability is established or disproved,[76] or a partition is made awarding owelty to any party,[77] or granting him compensation for improvements,[78] the judgment or decree is conclusive that he is entitled to any sum which is awarded him and not entitled to any sum for which no award is made. A judgment or decree giving a party a right of way from a part of the premises allotted to him to a public road is conclusive against his claim of a right of way by necessity to pass over another tract assigned to another party.[79] But, on the other hand, the judgment or decree cannot be conclusive upon any issue not involved within the pleadings,[80] nor as to any issue not determined, as for example where the court, being unable to determine some matter, reserves its determination for some future time,[81]

Conveyances made by commissioners and other officers.— Sometimes, where a conveyance is still deemed necessary in partition, commissioners or other officers acting under authority of the court are directed to make them. or commits it to some other court which alone is the tribunal competent to determine it.[82]

c. The Title Is Concluded Under Modern Statutes. We have hereinbefore shown that in many of the states title may be put in issue and determined in suits for partition. We may assume that, even in those states, the title is not put in issue merely by the allegations necessary for a declaration in partition at common law,[83] and that where nothing is known about the pleadings in such a suit, it will be presumed that title was not put in issue by them, nor determined in any judgment based on them.[84] We apprehend, however, that whenever plaintiff alleges himself to be the owner in fee, or of any specified estate, or avers any other ultimate fact under which he is entitled to relief, it becomes the duty of defendant either to concede or take issue with the allegation or averment, and that the judgment in the action will be as conclusive as it would be upon a like issue in any other action. "The truth is, that a judgment in partition is as conclusive as any other. It does not create nor manufacture a title, nor divest the title of any one not actually or constructively a party to the suit; but it operates by way of estoppel; it prevents any of the parties from relitigating any of the issues presented for decision, and the decision of which necessarily entered into the judgment; and it divests all titles held by any of the parties at the institution of the suit."[85] The allottee may justly be regarded as if he had received a conveyance of his allotment and of the easements, incidents, and appurtenances thereto belonging from all the parties to the suit, but without any covenants for title.[86] It seems almost superfluous to state that the final judgment and other proceedings in partition are not conclusive against, and do not affect the title of, persons who are not parties to the suit, either because they are not named as such, or, being named, have not been served with process or appeared therein, or

A statute may, as in Missouri, provide for the allotment of lands to which there are adverse claims "subject to the claims of parties against each other," in which event the allotment and its confirmation do not determine their claims of title. Martin v. Trail, 142 Mo. 85, 43 S. W. 655.

So a decree may merely dismiss a bill as to one of the parties, and such dismissal may not be final, because neither a sale nor an allotment has been made, in which event the dismissal is not a final determination of the title. Roller v. Clark, 19 App. Cas. (D. C.) 539.

if served or appearing, they have been served in one capacity and the judgment is sought to be used against them in another capacity.[87]

d. On the Right to Rents and Profits and to Growing Crops. The right to rents and profits is affected by the partition so far only as to give each allottee the right to such as may subsequently accrue for or upon his allotment. If by the terms of a lease executed prior to the commencement of the suit, rent becomes due to a cotenant prior to the entry of the decree, he still continues entitled to collect such rent notwithstanding the property subject to the lien may have been allotted to another.[88] But as to emblements, or crops growing on the land, they pass with it to the allottee, although planted and cultivated by another.[89]

e. On the Running of the Statute of Limitations. Until the entry of the final judgment it cannot be known to whom any particular parcel of land will fall, and hence there cannot be any adverse holding of such parcel by any party to the action against any other party thereto. Therefore, during the pendency of the action the statute of limitations cannot be running for or against either of them.[90]

9. Implied Warranty and the Right to Contribution. After partition, it may be found that some person not a party to the action, and therefore not bound by the judgment, had an interest in, or a lien upon, some part of the property which had been enforced or remains capable of enforcement against one or more of the allotments, or that some allotment either did not exist at all, or was of less area than supposed. In all of these cases and of every other practical failure of title the rule seems to be to let the partition stand, but to sustain such a proceeding of an equitable character as will compel the other parties to the partition to contribute in some manner to the one injured, and thereby indemnify him for his loss.[91] The implied warranty in compulsory partition and the consequent right to contribution have been held to be available by a party against an alienee,[92] but probably do not extend to, nor operate in favor of, purchasers from the original parties to a partition.[93] Precisely the opposite of contribution is called for when it is found that the tract partitioned is of greater area than supposed, and the allotments may be fully satisfied and a parcel remain undisposed of. The partition in such a case must, it seems, stand, leaving such surplus to be subsequently partitioned among the parties.[94] The allottees are not entitled to a decree reforming the partition by adding the surplus to their respective allotments.[95]

10. Effect on Subsequently Acquired Title. The effect of a judgment usually relates to the commencement of the action and is conclusive against any title which a party then had, but leaves him free to assert any title subsequently acquired. We think the same rule must apply in partition; that nothing is divided therein except the present title of the parties; that no allottee is in any better position than if he had received a conveyance by quitclaim from all the parties to the suit at the moment it was commenced, and possibly also of any interest acquired by them pendente lite. If this be true, any of them is at liberty to subsequently acquire, and, on acquiring, to assert, a paramount title.[96] But, as we have already shown, the failure of title in whole or in part to an allotment entitled the allottee to contribution from the other parties. Hence the question may be presented, if one of the others acquires the adverse paramount title, may he assert it, while subject to liability for contribution should he do so. We think not.[97] But we suppose the liability to contribution depends upon the complainant having lost something through the partition. If none of the parties at the time of the partition had any title to the property, or if they all had some title which has since terminated, then none has lost anything on account of which he can call for contribution. Still, even then, because of the supposed cotenancy, none of the parties may have been at liberty to acquire and assert a paramount adverse claim, and, if so, his incompetency should continue after the partition.

IV. Partition as Part of the Settlement and Distribution of the Estates of Decedents.

A. The Subject-Matter of the Jurisdiction. The courts of a majority of the states, in addition to the administration and settlement of the estates of decedents and the disposition of their personal property, have jurisdiction also over realty to the extent of determining who have succeeded thereto as heirs, devisees, or otherwise, and of making a distribution accordingly, and, as an incident of this jurisdiction, when it is found that property has vested in two or more persons as cotenants, of partitioning such property by allotting to each coöwner some specific part to be held in severalty, and if such allotment cannot be made without prejudice to their interests, then of directing a sale and dividing the proceeds. It is of such partition of the estates of decedents that we wish here to speak. The courts to which jurisdiction of it is confided are sometimes styled probate, sometimes surrogate, and at other times orphans' courts. In the absence of some constitutional limitation either of these courts might be given jurisdiction of partition in other cases, which has doubtless been done in several of the states; and in many instances the opinions of the courts are so vague that it is difficult and often impossible to determine whether the proceeding is a part of the settlement and distribution of the estate of a decedent, or one not connected with such settlement or distribution, although taking place in a court having jurisdiction of the estates of decedents. In either case the jurisdiction of the court is more limited than that of a court of chancery, or of any other court having general jurisdiction of the subject of partition.[98] The first essential to the jurisdiction now being considered is that the property belong to the estate of the decedent. The authority of the court is restricted to that estate, and it can hence partition nothing which does not belong to it; nothing to which a decree of distribution entered in the estate might not give a distributee a title in severalty.[99]

The result of these decisions is that if the title to property was vested in two or more persons, it cannot be partitioned in the estate of either. This rule has been abrogated by statute in Pennsylvania (Sander's Estate, 16 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 190), and overlooked in Texas, although there does not appear to be any special statutory provision on the subject (Penn v. Case, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 81 S. W. 349). But the Pennsylvania statute does not authorize the partition in one proceeding in the orphans' court of a tract of land in which some of the parties have an interest in one part and some in another, and

B. Time When May Be Petitioned For. Whenever partition is made as a part of the jurisdiction of the court over the estate of a decedent, it is obvious, in the absence of some statutory direction to the contrary, that the petition must be filed while the court has power to exercise its jurisdiction over the estate, and hence cannot the partition is said to be void, even as to the land in which all are interested. Sander's Estate, 16 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 190.

The questions which may be litigated and determined are restricted by the limited jurisdiction of the court, and, in some of the states, by the manifest fear that the jurisdiction cannot be safely exercised in any but the most simple cases. In the first place, the jurisdiction of a court of probate is necessarily confined to the estate of a decedent, and while it may be authorized to determine who has succeeded to such estate as heirs, devisees, or otherwise, it has no authority to consider or determine adverse claims to the property made by persons whose title was not acquired from or under the decedent. In re Walker, 136 N. Y. 20, 32 N. E. 633; Stewart v. Lohr, 1 Wash. 341, 21 Pac. 457, 22 Am. St. Rep. 150. This rule remains applicable, although the court having jurisdiction over the estate of the decedent is also possessed of general common law and equity jurisdiction, for, while acting in a probate proceeding, it is not exercising, and cannot exercise, its general jurisdiction either as a court of chancery or of common law. Haas' Estate, 97 Cal. 232, 31 Pac. 893; Smith v. Westerfeld, 88 Cal. 374, 26 Pac. 206; In re Allgier, 65 Cal. 228, 3 Pac. 849; Theller v. Such, 57 Cal. 447. In some of the states, if the decedent was a cotenant with others, the court is given authority to set off his share from that of the living cotenants (Mass. St. (1882) § 60, p. 1035; Vt. St. (1880) § 2259; In re Parson, 64 Vt. 193, 23 Atl. 519), and in others the court may proceed to make complete partition between a deceased and surviving cotenant (Stewart v. Alleghany Nat. Bank, 101 Pa. St. 342; Brightly's Purdon Dig. § 152, p. 538; Tex. St. (1879) § 2132). Sometimes the court is authorized to act only when the shares or interests of the parties are not in dispute, and do not seem uncertain. Me. St. (1883) §§ 8, 9, p. 550; Mass. St. (1882) § 59, p. 1035; Kelly v. Kelly, 41 N. H. 501; Gage v. Gage, 29 N. H. 533.

In such cases the jurisdiction of the court is not ousted or suspended by the mere claim of one of the parties that there is a dispute or uncertainty. "To deprive the probate court of its jurisdiction in a matter of this kind in any particular case, it must be made to appear that there is a real doubt and uncertainty in relation to the legal rights of the parties. The mere fact that they do not agree what those rights are, or that they are in controversy in respect to them with each other, is not of itself sufficient and conclusive. It must first be by some means affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that there is an actual dispute and uncertainty concerning their shares or proportions, which can be definitely determined only by submitting some controverted question of fact to a jury, or some doubtful and contested question of law to a legal tribunal competent to decide it. If the facts in reference to which the alleged dispute or uncertainty arises are all known to and expressly admitted by the parties, and the law applicable thereto is clearly settled and established, and if these show that the court has jurisdiction, it is the duty of the judge to proceed and cause the partition to be made, although one of the parties should insist that there is a dispute and controversy concerning their relative shares and proportions of the estate." Ballard v. Johns, 80 Ala. 32; Marsh v. French, 159 Mass. 469, 34 N. E. 693; Dearborn v. Preston, 7 Allen (Mass.) 192; Blackwell v. Blackwell, 86 Tex. 207, 24 S. W. 389. If, after the court has assumed jurisdiction and appointed commissioners, there arises a dispute or uncertainty, the court will proceed with the partition. Potter v. Hazard, 11 Allen (Mass.) 187. The fact that the decedent did not die seized of the lands sought to be partitioned sometimes ousts the court of its jurisdiction. McMasters v. Carothers, 1 Pa. St. 324; Law v. Patterson, 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 184; Galbraith v. Green, 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 85. In Pennsylvania a partition can be made only when the course of descent has not been altered by the provisions of the last will and testament of the decedent. Hence, if he devises all of his property to a portion of his heirs, thereby excluding others from their inheritance, no partition in probate can be made, although such of the heirs as are not excluded from the will hold the estate in cotenancy in equal moieties. Vowinckel v. Patterson, 114 Pa. St. 21, 6 Atl. 470. As the proceeding is merely ancillary to the settlement of the estate of the decedent, it cannot involve any title not held by him at the time of his death (Dresher v. Allentown Water Co., 52 Pa. St. 225, 91 Am. Dec. 150), nor determine the title of one of the heirs who claims to be the sole owner of the property (Eell's Estate, 6 Pa. St. 457). Generally, questions of title, so far as they can arise in probate proceedings, are disposed of before the commissioners are appointed to make the partition by a decree of distribution conclusively fixing the share of each heir or devisee in the estate of his ancestor or testator (Freeman v. Rahm, 58 Cal. 111; Garraud's Estate, 36 Cal. 277), and the office of the proceedings for partition is merely to segregate the shares so fixed from one another, and to transform them from undivided interests to estates in severalty. The title which is within the jurisdiction of the court is the legal title only, and partition may be made in accordance with such title without affecting or prejudicing equitable rights or titles dependent thereon, except where sales are made in pursuance of precede the valid appointment of an executor or administrator,[1] nor be after the closing of the estate by the formal discharge of the executor or administrator,[2] nor after the entry of the final decree of distribution.[3] In Maine and Pennsylvania, however, the petition may be filed, although after the distribution and the discharge of the executor or administrator, irrespective of the lapse of time, and is not barred unless the applicant's title has been lost by prescription.[4] The jurisdiction here under consideration is not exclusive, but is concurrent with that of courts having general jurisdiction of partition,[5] and when one of such courts acquires jurisdiction, it becomes exclusive and bars the right to institute proceed-such partition to bona fide purchasers having no notice of any equitable right or interest attaching to the legal estate. Caperton v. Hall, 83 Ala. 171, 3 So. 234. From the proposition hereinbefore asserted, that the jurisdiction of the court is confined to the estate of the decedent, it results, in the absence of express statutory provision to the contrary, that partition cannot be made except when he held an estate in severalty. Therefore, if he was merely a cotenant with others, there cannot be any partition in probate between him and them, and such attempted partition, even though made with the acquiescence or consent of all the parties in interest, must necessarily be void, because the court is without jurisdiction over the subject-matter (Richardson v. Loupe, 80 Cal. 490, 22 Pac. 227; Dresher v. Allentown Water Co., 52 Pa. St. 225, 91 Am. Dec. 150; Snyder's Appeal, 36 Pa. St. 166, 78 Am. Dec. 372; Eell's Estate, 6 Pa. St. 457; Romig's Appeal, 8 Watts (Pa.) 415; Feather v. Strohoecker, 3 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 505, 24 Am. Dec. 342); nor can any exception to this rule be maintained by showing that one of the heirs of a decedent was a cotenant with him in his lifetime, and therefore he and the other heirs of the decedent own the entire property sought to be partitioned. As to interests which he did not acquire as heir or devisee of the decedent, he is not a party before the court, and the court has no jurisdiction to make any inquiry or determination respecting, or any disposition of, such interests (Buckley v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 102 Cal. 6, 36 Pac. 360, 41 Am. St. Rep. 135. The case of Brannan v. Hill, decided in 1838 by the court of appeals of South Carolina, the opinion in which is printed by way of note to Gates v. Irick, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 593, has been cited as in opposition to the views here expressed. The language of the statute in question was, however, essentially different from that usually employed in statutes authorizing proceedings in partition in connection with the settlement and distribution of the estates of decedents. The orphans' court of South Carolina was apparently vested with authority to act independently of there being any proceeding before it respecting the administration of an estate. A statute, enacted in 1824, purported to give the court "full power and authority, upon the application of any person or persons interested therein, to make sale or division of the real estate of any person or persons who may have died or who shall hereafter die intestate or leaving a will." The purpose of this act was apparently to have a sale of lands made in all cases where they belonged to a decedent and could not be divided, and therefore the appellate court in the case cited sustained a sale of the interest of a decedent consisting of a moiety only of the property. In other words, the orphans' court was given general authority to sell the property in which a decedent had an interest, upon the application of any person interested therein, and this jurisdiction was not a part of its special jurisdiction to administer upon and settle the estates of decedents. If the statute under which the proceedings are conducted authorizes the commissioners to segregate the interests of a deceased tenant in common, and to then make partition thereof, and they, at the suggestion or with the consent of the other cotenants, undertake to partition the whole property, and the court, upon the report of their proceedings, undertakes to confirm them, such confirmation is absolutely void, because it cannot, even by their consent, exercise jurisdiction over the estates or interests of the cotenants of the decedent. Parson's Estate, 64 Vt. 193, 23 Atl. 519. In some of the states the authority of the court is limited to lands within the county in which it is held, and where such is the law, any attempted partition of lands outside of that county is absolutely void. Turnipseed v. Fitzpatrick, 75 Ala. 297. But the power of a court to do an act involves and includes the authority to decide all questions essential to the exercise of the power (King's Estate, 215 Pa. St. 59, 64 Atl. 324), and the making of all orders necessary to make its exercise effective (Gatewood v. Toomer, 14 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 139).

ings in the probate or orphans' courts.[6] On the other hand, if the latter courts acquire and assume jurisdiction, it becomes exclusive and no other court will interfere.[7]

C. Who May Petition For. The petition may be filed by any person entitled to a partition. If a minor, he may appear by his guardian; if a married woman, her husband may petition in her right.[8] If a conveyance has been made by any of the heirs, his grantee is usually entitled to make application for partition.[9] In Pennsylvania the application may be made by a widow of an heir who has an estate in remainder after the life of his mother who died before the petition was filed,[10] and may probably also be by a tenant for life.[11] In Alabama the personal representative of a deceased tenant in common may maintain the proceeding in the probate court for the partition of the property of the decedent.[12] As an interest in the property and a right to have a partition are indispensable elements of the applicant's claim, the fact that the court has found that he is not an heir of the decedent, nor otherwise entitled to an interest in the estate, is conclusive against his claim for this relief.[13]

D. The Petition. A petition or application in writing is essential, and a partition will be adjudged void unless such written petition is established, except when the proceedings are questioned after so great a lapse of time that the court may reasonably presume that such petition has existed in due form, but has been lost.[14] In the majority of the states the statutes are either wholly silent or else speak in general or vague terms respecting the contents of the petition for partition. When any such petition is required, it seems to be obvious that it ought to at least set forth the facts upon which the court is called to act sufficiently to inform the court of the names of the interested parties so far as known;[15] the respective moieties and interests of each, and the property sought to be divided among them. These proceedings are viewed with strictness by the courts, and there is a general tendency to exact at least a substantial compliance with every requirement of the statute upon the subject, and, in the absence of such compliance, to avoid them, even when collaterally assailed. Thus, in Alabama, among the other requirements of the petition, is that it state the names and residences of the persons interested in the estate. The failure to disclose the names of the heirs is fatal to the proceeding.[16] This rule was applied where the petition had been filed by the personal representative of a deceased tenant in common, as authorized by the statute, but it failed to disclose who were the heirs or other successors in interest of such decedent.[17] The omission to state the place of residence of interested parties, although their names were disclosed, has also been held fatal to the proceeding.[18] The petition may be amended, and by amendment made to include property originally omitted therefrom, and such amendment, it has been held, may be made even after the return of the inquest, to conform therewith.[19] The failure to set forth the interest of each owner, when required by statute, is fatal.[20] The real property, it has been held, need not be described in the petition, if the law requires the executor or administrator to file in court an inventory thereof.[21] If the court can exercise jurisdiction only in the event of some of the coöwners being minors, the petition must name them and allege their minority.[22] In Pennsylvania the petition must show the heirs of decedent, their relation to him, and their last known place of residence.[23] If decedent owned but two lots in a certain town, and they were commonly known as her lots, the description of them in the petition as "two lots in" such town, designating it, is sufficient.[24]

E. The Parties. The parties to the proceeding must include all persons having any interest in the property derived from and under the decedent, and if any of such persons are not made parties, whether infants or adults, their interests cannot be affected by the partition.[25] By property derived from and under a decedent we mean such only as was acquired from him by descent, devise, or bequest, for if he, in his lifetime, conveyed the property, or any part thereof, the part so conveyed constitutes no part of his estate in probate, and cannot be there partitioned.[26] If any of his heirs or devisees has conveyed his share, the conveyance must be recognized and protected, and the part conveyed set off to his grantee.[27] A conveyance made during the pendency of the proceedings does not impair the effect of the partition.[28] A known vendee must be made a party or the proceedings cannot affect his interest.[29] It is not necessary, to entitle a person to be made a party to the proceeding for partition in probate, that his estate be one in fee. Hence, if he or she has a life-estate by reason of being the surviving husband or wife of a deceased cotenant, his or her interest as such cannot be affected, unless he or she is made a party to the proceeding.[30]

F. Jurisdiction Over the Person — How Acquired. Probably the legislature might have provided for the partition of the property of a decedent without the giving of any notice other than that required to authorize the appointment of an executor or administrator and the assumption of general jurisdiction over the estate, but it has not so provided. We believe that some special notice of the proposed partition is everywhere required. It may doubtless be presumed where the court is of general jurisdiction and the presumption is not inconsistent with the facts otherwise shown.[31] But if it appears that, as to any person interested in the property, the notice required by statute was not given, and that he did not appear or otherwise waive it, the proceeding is, as against him, void.[32]

G. The Commissioners — 1. Their Appointment. Jurisdiction having been acquired over the parties interested, the court may proceed to appoint persons to make the partition. The number to be appointed differs in the different states.

When appointed, they are generally known as commissioners;[33] but are sometimes styled distributers,[34] appraisers, or partitioners.[35] When the estate of the decedent consists of real property situate in different parts of the state, one set of commissioners may generally be appointed for each county. Where the estate consists solely of money, no distributers need be appointed.[36] In some of the states they may be appointed by the testator in his will.[37] Otherwise the power to appoint is vested exclusively in the court having jurisdiction to settle the estate of the decedent.[38]

2. THEIR QUALIFICATION. In most of the states the appointment of commissioners is preceded by a decree of distribution, wherein the property to be divided among the heirs and devisees is described, and the respective shares or moieties of each is designated. This corresponds to the interlocutory judgment or decree of partition in other cases. A certified copy of this decree, and of the order appointing the commissioners, is issued by the clerk of the court as their warrant, and they are required to take and have indorsed on such warrant their oath that they will faithfully discharge the duties of their office.[39] Upon taking and indorsing such oath, they are qualified and may enter upon the discharge of their duties.

3. NOTICE TO BE GIVEN BY. Before the commissioners make the partition, "notice must be given to all persons interested in the partition, their guardians, agents, or attorneys, by the commissioners, of the time and place when and where they shall proceed to make partition."[40]

4. THEIR DUTIES GENERALLY. The duties of commissioners are rarely, if ever, distinctly specified in a statute, and are to be inferred from the purpose for which they are appointed and the means obviously essential to fully and equitably accomplish that purpose.[41]

40. Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1683; In re Ragan, 7 Watts (Pa.) 438. We know of no decision determining the effect of an omission of this notice. It occurs to us, however, that this notice is not jurisdictional, because the parties in interest have already been brought into court by the notice required to be given when the application is made for the appointment of commissioners. The failure to give this notice is unquestionably a very grave irregularity, justifying, or even requiring, that confirmation of the partition be refused, and that the commissioners be directed to begin de novo, by giving the proper notices. While the statutes require notice to be given to "all persons interested," we think these words are here used, and must be understood, in a qualified sense. The decree of distribution is the warrant of the commissioners and the order of their appointment. This decree is their sole guide. They have no authority to set off property to any person not named in such decree, nor in proportions variant from the shares or moieties there described. The persons named in the decree ought therefore to be deemed "all the persons interested in the partition," and a notice to them sufficient to sustain the subsequent proceedings of the commissioners. By establishing this rule the commissioners know, from consulting their warrant, to whom notice must be given, and persons called to examine the title may readily ascertain whether all the persons have received notice who are entitled thereto. By construing the words "all persons interested in the partition" in their literal sense, the commissioners are required to assume the judicial function of ascertaining who are persons interested, a function which we think belongs exclusively to the court. If the commissioners must make this investigation, the means at their command are so inadequate that the conclusions reached by them must often be tainted with some error of law or fact, and their proceedings rendered nugatory from failure to give notice to parties who do not appear by the record to have any interest in the transaction. Whether the commissioners may rely upon the decree for information with respect to parties entitled to notice or not, it seems to be certain that they need not give notice to persons not in possession, and whose claim of title does not appear from the county records. Merklein v. Trapnell, 34 Pa. St. 42, 75 Am. Dec. 634.

5. Their Duties When the Property Cannot Be Divided Into Equal Allotments. The commissioners are not required to make a division of the property into equal shares when it cannot be divided without prejudice to the owners, or when, although susceptible of some division, it cannot be conveniently divided into as many parts as there are shares without making such parts of unequal value. In the latter case the commissioners are sometimes authorized to divide the estate into unequal parts, and to appraise each part, and "award that one or more purparts or shares shall be subject to the payment of such sum or sums as shall be necessary to equalize the value of the said purparts, according to the said appraisement thereof, which sum or sums shall be paid, or secured to be paid, by the several persons accepting purparts."[42] If the real estate cannot be divided, "without prejudice or inconvenience to the owners, the court may assign the whole to one or more of the parties entitled to share therein who will accept it." This action of the court must, however, be based on the report of the commissioners showing that the estate cannot be divided, and appraising its value. The person who accepts it must pay the amount of the appraisement.[43] When two or more be subject to the payment of owelty, it could not be imposed on any other cotenant (Pickering v. Pickering, 20 N. H. 541); and another declaring that the shares of two cotenants could not be set off to them to hold together and undivided, although they had so agreed (In re Parson, 64 Vt. 193, 23 Atl. 519).

The duties and powers of the commissioners are probably coextensive with those of commissioners in an ordinary suit for partition. They "may take testimony, order surveys, and take such other steps as may be necessary to enable them to form a judgment upon the matters before them." Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1683. We find no decision or statute directly adopting for the guidance of the commissioners, or of the court, the principles regulating partition in other proceedings, yet we apprehend that these principles are necessarily involved in the grant of power to make partition. The partition authorized is evidently one conducted according to the equitable rules long recognized in like proceedings in other courts. Thus, some of the heirs may have conveyed portions of the common property, or enhanced their value by permanent and costly improvements. If partitions were enforced at law or in equity, it would be the duty of the commissioners and of the court, as far as might be done without prejudice to the interests of the other heirs, to set apart to the heir thus conveying or improving some part of the common property, the part so conveyed or improved. We think the same duty arises under like circumstances when the partition is merely ancillary to the settlement and distribution of the estate of a deceased person. To hold otherwise would be to make the proceeding grossly inequitable, and render the rights of the parties dependent upon the court which happened first to acquire jurisdiction, rather than upon the established principles of jurisprudence. In making partition, it is often necessary, to preserve equality in value, or to afford some convenient mode of ingress and egress to and from some of the allotments over the others. The power to charge one of the allotments with this burden in favor of another exists when the partition is made in the distribution of the estate of a decedent. "The authority to give such rights and privileges . . . is believed to have been long and generally exercised by courts of probate in this State; and we think the authority is necessarily implied in the grant of jurisdiction to make partition and division of estates; because, in numerous cases, a judicious and convenient partition could not be made without it. In other jurisdictions the power to create such rights and privileges, on partition, by legal proceedings, has been often recognized. . . . We are, therefore, of opinion that the probate court, upon division of a deceased person's estate, may, in a case where necessity or convenience requires it, give to one share a right of way over land assigned to the other shares." Cheswell v. Chapman, 38 N. H. 14, 17, 75 Am. Dec. 158.

Where the aid of chancery was sought on the allegation that one of the heirs of a decedent, being insolvent and deeply indebted to the estate, had conveyed his share, by which means his debt to the estate would be lost unless there was some interference by a court of equity, the court held that the remedy in probate was ample, because that court could distribute to the heir as his share of the estate his own debt thereto. Bailey v. Strong, 8 Conn. 278.

Questions of advancements may be presented to the court and taken into consideration, and when ascertained and established, must be taken into account in making a final partition of the property of the estate. persons elect to take the same parcel of land when it is assigned in several unequal parts, or to take the whole even when the property is found to be indivisible, the elder heirs are given a preference over the younger, and males over females.[44] In Pennsylvania any one or more of the heirs may, in writing, offer a sum in excess of the appraised value as fixed by the commissioners, and the one offering the highest price above such valuation is entitled to have the property allotted to him.[45] This preference given to the eldest heir seems on his dying or conveying to vest in his heir or alienee.[46] A guardian may accept an allotment for his ward, and give a recognizance binding on the ward for the amount awarded to make the partition equal.[47] The right of an heir to accept an allotment is waived by his not appearing and making his election known on the day fixed by the court for the heirs to refuse or accept the allotments.[48]

6. THEIR REPORT. The commissioners must report their proceedings to the court by which they were appointed.[49] When they find in favor of a partition by sale, they must report that fact to the court, and must generally set forth the facts from which their conclusion has been drawn, in order that the court may judge of its correctness and determine whether to assent thereto. If, on the other hand, they make an actual division of the property, their report ought to describe, with as much particularity as in other partition proceedings, the allotments made to the respective parties among whom they were directed to make partition. In Texas the report must be signed by the commissioners, or a majority of them, and have attached their sworn statement that the partition "made by them as set out in their report is just and fair to the best of their knowledge and information; that they have no interest in said partition, and that they are not of kin to any of the parties to the partition."[50] In construing the report, the plain intent of the commissioners, although appearing only by recital, will be given effect, especially if the parties have acquiesced.[51]

7. VACATING OR CONFIRMING THEIR REPORT. When the commissioners have made their report, it is next brought before the court for final action. It may, for any proper reason, be set aside and the partition recommitted to the same or other commissioners. Notice of the motion to set aside the sale should be given the purchaser.[51a] The grounds for moving to set aside the report necessarily resolve themselves into two classes, namely, for irregularities in the proceedings, or because the partition or other action of the commissioners is unequal or unjust. Thus, the partition may be set aside because the commissioners were not sworn as required by law,[52] and doubtless because of any other substantial departure from the requirements of the statute.[52a] The court will rarely interfere with the action of the commissioners where there is no accusation of intentional misconduct, because it prefers to rely on their judgment as practical men who have been selected on account of their ability and experience, and who have, upon personal inspection, made themselves acquainted with the property in question. Nevertheless the court will refuse to confirm their action whenever satisfied of its unjustness or partiality,[53] as where the price realized is grossly, and perhaps even where it is substantially, inadequate.[53a] "Where an estate is manifestly and greatly undervalued, I have no doubt but it is the duty of the court to set aside the inquest. But it ought to be a clear case. The jury are intrusted by law with the valuation, and they act upon oath. Besides, it is generally to be supposed that they are better judges of this matter than the court. Great regard should therefore be paid to their opinion."[54] "An inquest may be set aside where the jury has made a plain mistake of fact or law, or where fraudulent acts have been practiced by an interested party to procure such a report as he desires. A valuation of land at a grossly inadequate price may be evidence of mistake or fraud."[55] "The orphans' courts proceed on chancery principles; and if it appears that the inquest acted on erroneous principles, or if it appeared that there was a great inequality in the division or valuation, their powers are sufficiently extensive to afford relief."[56] If, for any cause, the proceedings are vacated and there has been any charge of misconduct on the part of the commissioners, the general practice is to appoint new commissioners instead of recommitting the partition to those first appointed.[57] If no sufficient cause is shown for setting aside the report, the court makes an order confirming or approving it, and thereupon the partition becomes final, and the parties are invested with title in severalty to their respective allotments. If the partition has been consummated and long acquiesced in, it is difficult to conceive of any irregularity requiring it to be set aside when not absolutely void.[58]

H. The Effect of the Partition. When land has been awarded to one of the heirs on payment of a sum of money, the payment must be made or secured in the manner designated by statute, before the title vests in such heir.[59] In Pennsylvania the security must be "by recognizance or otherwise to the satisfaction of the court." When security by recognizance is taken, it operates as a lien on the lands.[60] "The persons to whom, or for whose use, payment or satisfaction shall be so made, in any of the cases aforesaid, for their respective parts or shares of such real estate, shall be forever barred of all right or title to the same."[61] Proceedings for partition in connection with the settlement of the estates of deceased persons must, upon principle, be regarded as binding and conclusive to the same extent as other legal proceedings. When the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and of the persons of its owners, its final judgment operates to vest the title to the several allotments in the persons to whom they were respectively allotted.[62]

Conclusiveness of decree.—"There is no reason why a decree of partition in the probate court should be any less conclusive upon the parties to it than a judgment in a real action. To permit one claiming under a party to such partition again to litigate the title would manifestly violate the maxim which declares that public interest requires an end to litigation." I. Sale Instead of an Allotment. When proceeding in probate, as well as when proceeding in courts of general jurisdiction, it may be found that partition by allotment is impractical, or, at least, that partition by sale and the division of the proceeds should be preferred. We believe the statutes upon the subject generally, if not universally, authorize a sale under the same, or substantially the same circumstances and conditions which authorize sales in suits for partition.[63] The appointment of commissioners is usually required who report to the court either that they have made a partition by allotment or that it cannot be equitably made in that manner nor otherwise than by a sale.[64] Upon the hearing of this report, an order of sale may be made. Whether the property should be sold is a judicial question, and to support its sale an order of court is indispensable.[65] The statutes authorizing and controlling these sales are vague and the decisions thereunder infrequent. It may, however, we think, be safely affirmed that the general rules hereinbefore stated respecting sales in partition apply[66] to sales in partition

N. H. 558); and his title is paramount to any conveyance made by any of the coheirs (Holcomb v. Sherwood, 29 Conn. 418; Steel's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 222).

The partition is binding on minors, and cannot be disaffirmed by them on attaining their majority. Gelbach's Appeal, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 205.

It may be impeached for fraud.— Thus, in Mitchell v. Kintzer, 5 Pa. St. 216, 217, 47 Am. Dec. 408, in determining that evidence ought to have been received to impeach a partition for fraud, it was said: "The evidence so offered by defendant was rejected by the court below, and the learned counsel for Kintzer contended here that the court below were right, because the proceedings and decree of the Orphan's Court could not be impeached by parol, or for any cause, but imported absolute verity, and vested the title in James Mitchell and his heirs, irrespective of, and beyond all the circumstances which might have attended the transaction. But in the eye of the law, fraud spoils every thing it touches. The broad seal of the Commonwealth is crumbled into dust, as against the interest designed to be defrauded. Every transaction of life between individuals, in which it mingles, is corrupted by its contagion. Why then, should it find shelter in the decrees of courts? There is the last place on earth where it ought to find refuge. But it is not protected by record, judgment, or decree; whenever and wherever it is detected, its disguises fall from around it, and the lurking spirit of mischief, as if touched by the spear of Ithuriel, stands exposed to the rebuke and condemnation of the law."

Legal title only, not equitable rights considered.— If, as we have hereinbefore stated the rule to be, the probate court considers the legal title only, a decree of partition cannot affect equitable rights or interests, nor defeat their subsequent assertion against parties whose legal titles were subject thereto before the partition was made. Caperton v. Hall, 83 Ala. 171, 3 So. 234.

Effect of lapse of time, etc., upon void proceedings.— There may perhaps be cases in which, although the proceedings for partition were in themselves absolutely void, the title of parties taking and holding possession thereunder cannot be assailed because great lapse of time or other circumstances may indicate that all the parties in interest either agreed upon, or acquiesced in, the partition made for them. Such partition may therefore be treated as of equal dignity and force with a partition by parol, which, it is well known, will not be disturbed if the parties have taken and long held possession pursuant thereto. Time to apply for order to sell.— The application for the order to sell may be made at any time after filing the report of the commissioners recommending it. If the statute declares the application may be made at any regular term, it may be made at a special day expressly ordered by the court sometime previously to be a day of court for all purposes. Guido's Estate, 10 Kulp (Pa.) 150.

Taking property at appraised valuation.— In some of the states valuations or appraisements of the property are made, and the heirs, or certain of them, given the right to prevent a sale by taking the property at its appraised valuation. Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1680; Corrothers v. Jolliffe, 32 W. Va. 562, 9 S. E. 889, 25 Am. St. Rep. 836; Kline v. Grayson, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 225; Walton v. Willis, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 351, 1 L. ed. 171. Cas. 182, 13 Atl. 550.

Person designated or appointed to make sale.— More usually than otherwise the sale, when ordered, is directed to be made by the executor or administrator, although it may generally be by a commissioner or other person appointed by the court for that purpose. Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1682; Arble's Estate, 161 Pa. St. 373, 29 Atl. 32; Rawle's Appeal, 119 Pa. St. 100, 12 Atl. 809.

Terms, time, place, and manner of sale.— The person designated or appointed to sell has no power to change the terms of the sale. Eshelman v. Witmer, 2 Watts (Pa.) 263; Schneider's Estate, 11 Kulp (Pa.) 201. The land may be divided into purparts for the purpose of selling, although it had been reported indivisible. Schneider's Estate, supra. The officer conducting the sale may avail himself of the services of an auctioneer. Guido's Estate, 10 Kulp (Pa.) 150. The time for the sale lies in the discretion of the court. In re Neel, 28 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 395. A sale made at a place different from that designated by the statute, as where it is at the court-house of the county wherein administration was granted, when it should have been at that wherein the land is situated, is not void. Calloway v. Kirkland, 57 Ala. 476. Payment of his bid by the purchaser is indispensable, but if he is an heir, he may retain, or be credited with, a sum equivalent to his share. Townsend v. Rees, 2 Harr. (Del.) 324; Bayhi v. Bayhi, 35 La. Ann. 527; Hollier v. Gonor, 13 La. Ann. 591; McRee's Estate, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 75.

If a wife is a cotenant and the sale is to her husband or the bid is transferred to him, and all the heirs are paid but her, her heirs cannot require a new partition. It will be presumed that the non-payment of her share by her husband was with her consent. Hurt v. Jones, 75 Va. 341.

Confirmation or setting aside of sale.— The sale must be reported to the court, which must act upon it either to confirm or set it aside. It will be set aside for any irregularity in the proceedings actually or presumptively prejudicial, as for failure to give a security required by statute to be given (Guido's Estate, 10 Kulp (Pa.) 150), or an unfair valuation of lands in their appraisement (Horne's Estate, 10 Pa. Dist. 226, 8 Del. Co. 146; Stark's Estate, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 525); but not for any irregularity in which the objecting party acquiesced and with knowledge of it permitted the sale to be confirmed (Backentoss v. Stahler, 33 Pa. St. 251, 75 Am. Dec. 592), nor on account of an advance bid, unless the additional value was inherent in the property at the time of the sale (McRee's Estate, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 75). Notice should be given interested persons of proceedings to vacate a sale (Louisiana Bank v. Delery, 2 La. Ann. 648); but one who bids at a second or resale cannot afterward object that he had no notice of the proceedings to set aside the first sale (In re Hamilton, 51 Pa. St. 58). Confirmation is not absolute until the money is paid and the deed delivered. McRee's Estate, supra. While confirmation is indispensable, it must be presumed, although not otherwise evidenced, from an order of court distributing the proceeds of the sale. Rye v. J. M. McGuffey Petroleum Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 95 S. W. 622.

Refusal to comply with bid.— If the purchaser refuses to comply with his bid, the same remedies exist as in other cases of partition sales, namely, by suit for specific performance (Hore's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 63), and by resale and actions for the deficiency (Hutton v. Williams, 35 Ala. 503, 76 Am. Dec. 297), and the order for resale must be in writing (Pratt v. Bentley, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 19).

Effect upon existing liens.— Whether the property sold remains subject to liens existing against it must be ascertained by consulting the local law. As to liens against the decedent, in some of the states, they are still enforceable against the land if the sale is made within two years after his death or after the issuing of letters of administration, and the purchaser cannot require their payment by the administrator nor out of the assets of the estate. McArtan v. McLaughlin, 88 N. C. 391; Wilson's Appeal, 45 Pa. St. 435; Henry v. Horstick, 9 Watts (Pa.) 412; Bricker's Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 12. As the sale must sweep away the title of the heirs, all liens against them personally must be transferred to, and become payable out of, their shares of the proceeds. When the proceeds of the sale are paid to the officer making it, they come within the control of the court and must be distributed by it, or otherwise disposed of, according to the rights and equities of the heirs and of persons having liens or claims against them or against the estate. The administrator, or person making the sale, cannot decide this question and is not authorized to make payment until, nor otherwise than as, directed by the court. Todd v. Flournoy, 56 Ala. 99, 28 Am. Rep. 758; Jouffret v. Loppin, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 455, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 810; Matter of Dusenberry, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 666, 70 N. Y. V. APPELLATE PROCEEDINGS.[67]

A. Classification of. The appellate proceedings resorted to in suits and actions for partition are certiorari,[68] writ of error,[69] and appeal.[70]

B. Certiorari.[71] There is no doubt that certiorari has been successfully employed in partition as an appellate remedy.[72] The functions of this writ differ much in the different states.[73] Doubtless they are neither more nor less active or comprehensive in partition than in other judicial proceedings. Generally certiorari lies only when a court has acted without jurisdiction and this appears by the record. Hence it is rarely available as an appellate proceeding, and, when available, can do no more than to annul the judgment.

C. Writs of Error.[74] In the absence of some statute limiting the functions of this writ or creating some other remedy, the writ of error is an appropriate, and in the absence of statutes creating cumulative remedies, the only proceeding to review, and to obtain the reversal or modification of judgments at law in partition.[75] Although the action was commenced as the result of a suit in partition and an order therein entered directing the parties to have a disputed legal title settled by a legal tribunal, its judgment must be reviewed on writ of error.[76]

D. Appeal.[77] The term "appeal" was not originally applicable to the tribunals questions of advancements, but not a claim made by one heir against another arising out of the latter's failure to comply with his bid for realty descended from the decedent and exposed for sale by the court in partition proceedings. Matter of Landis, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 217. Persons may also appear and show that they have succeeded to the interest of an heir and are entitled to his share of the proceeds. In re Coombs, 8 N. J. Eq. 78.

The purchaser obtains all the title and interest of the decedent in the property (Ward v. West, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1895) 35 S. W. 563; Guilford v. Love, 49 Tex. 715), which, unless there is a reservation, includes growing crops (Burns v. Cooper, 31 Pa. St. 426; Hancock v. Caskey, 8 S. C. 282); and his title is as free from collateral attacks as are other titles based on judicial proceedings. If there is any heir, however, over whom the court did not acquire jurisdiction, his title is not divested, and he cannot be required before recovering his property to repay the purchase-money of the void sale (Perrine v. Kohr, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 36).

The cost of the proceeding must be borne by the estate. Phelps v. Stewart, 17 Md. 231.

67. Bills of review.— These proceedings are often spoken of as revisory. Whether they are ever properly so spoken of need not be here considered. The functions of these bills are considered in the note to Brewer v. Bowman, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 492, 20 Am. Dec. 160, and they are doubtless as applicable to partition as to other suits in equity. They are not, however, appellate proceedings, but take place in courts of the same rank as that whose decree is reviewed, and generally in the same court. The relief formerly obtained by them is by the more modern practice obtainable by a simple suit in equity, such as is within the decisions hereinbefore cited in supra, III, Q, 5. In some of the states these bills are specially provided for by statutes giving the right to persons not personally served with process and to minors and incompetents whose guardians did not properly defend for them to appear within a time stated and obtain a review of the partition. The bill or other mode of applying for such review does not, however, institute an appellate proceeding. of the law, but was always applicable in chancery, and there meant the removal of the cause to a higher revisory tribunal for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the latter therein, notwithstanding any judgment which might have been entered in the subordinate court. Therefore, where the partition is in chancery, strictly speaking, the appellate remedy is by appeal only. But in the greater part of the United States the remedy by appeal has, by statute, been extended so as to include a variety of proceedings, and often so as to supplant that by writ of error. Wherever statutes of this character are in force, the appellate remedy in partition is by appeal.

E. What Is Appealable or Reviewable — 1. Generally Only a Decision Designated by Statute. By the English law, the right to appeal, or in other words, to prosecute any appellate proceeding is purely statutory, and except in the cases where the right is given by statute, every litigant must content himself with the decision of the tribunal having original jurisdiction of his cause.[78] The same rule must prevail in the United States, except where the constitution of the state has created appellate tribunals and given them jurisdiction of causes. Therefore, to ascertain what decisions in partition are subject to review, one must consult the constitution and statutes of the state in which the question is presented, for, if the right of appeal has not been created by the one or the other, it does not exist.[79]

2. Final Judgment or Decree Is Generally Required. Both at law and in equity, whether the proceeding was by writ of error or by appeal, and also under statutes where the latter remedy practically included all that had formerly been obtainable by both, there was an approach to unanimity in withholding the remedy until there had been a final judgment or decree. Probably this had its foundation in the theory that, until a final decision in the trial court, the higher tribunal could not know but the lower would, either on its own motion or at the suggestion of a party, correct the error complained of and thus make resort to the appellate tribunal unnecessary. Whatever be the reason, it may be regarded as settled in partition, in the absence of some statute to the contrary, that no appellate proceeding can be maintained, whatsoever its name or character, anterior to the final judgment or decree.[80]

Applicability of general statutes.—Although proceedings in partition are not specially named in the statutes providing for appeals, they may fall within some class designated therein, and whether they do so is sometimes a question of contention and doubt. Thus, in Ohio, the right of appeal having been allowed in all civil cases, the court was first of the opinion that this included statutory proceedings in partition (Mack v. Bonner, 3 Ohio St. 366); next that it did not (Barger v. Cochran, 15 Ohio St. 460); and finally that it did (McRoberts v. Lockwood, 49 Ohio St. 374, 34 N. E. 734; Elstner v. Fisher, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 517, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 597; Swihart v. Swihart, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. 338, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 624; Stone v. Doster, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. 8, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 637).

Amount in controversy.— Often the jurisdiction of a court to exercise appellate jurisdiction is made dependent on the amount in controversy. When such is the case and the proceeding is in partition, such amount is not measured by the value of the whole property, but only by the value of that in dispute. Hence, if the dispute respects one moiety only, jurisdiction cannot be entertained if the value of such moiety is not shown to equal or exceed the amount fixed as essential. 3. WHAT JUDGMENTS OR DECREES ARE FINAL. The first or interlocutory judgment was the one declaring the parties to hold the property as cotenants, stating the moieties of each, and directing partition to be made accordingly. It was not final, and hence not directly reviewable by either appeal therefrom or writ of error thereto.[81] This view, although supported by the weight of authority, has not passed unchallenged. The minority insists that when a judgment is entered declaring the interests of the parties and directing partition to be made accordingly, nothing remains to be done except to carry out such judgment, and therefore that it is final and appealable.[82] Let us suppose that the interlocutory Order confirming report.— Therefore the appeal or writ of error is usually from the order confirming the report of the commissioners making the partition. Bull v. Pyle, 41 Md. 419. This is also the order usually appealed from when the proceeding is in the orphans' court or elsewhere as a part of the settlement and distribution of the estate of a decedent. Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 414, 58 Am. Dec. 714; Cozens v. Dickinson, 3 N. J. L. 507.

Under the modern or statutory proceeding for partition many questions are determinable in addition to what are the moieties of the parties, and what allotments fairly and impartially correspond to them, and whenever the determination of one of such questions so establishes and declares the liability of a party that it may be enforced by the sale of specific property or by an execution leviable on his property generally, the judgment is so far final against him as to sustain his appeal therefrom. Taylor v. Dawson, 65 Ill. App. 232; Holloway v. Holloway, 97 Mo. 628, 11 S. W. 233, 10 Am. St. Rep. 339; Fredericks v. Davis, 6 Mont. 457, 13 Pac. 124.

Orders entered after final judgment.— The statutes controlling appeals, in most of the states, expressly specify, as subjects of appeal, orders made after final judgment; and perhaps, even in the absence of such statutes, many of such orders are appealable when they are in the nature of final judgments because enforceable against a party, and their enforcement must deprive him of property or of its possession, or subject him to personal liability. Hence an appeal may be prosecuted from an order setting aside a sale (Comstock v. Purple, 49 Ill. 158; Hollett v. Evans, 28 Ind. 61), or from an order allowing an attorney's fee (Draper v. Draper, 29 Mo. 13). No appeal can, however, be sustained to review or reverse an order made after final judgment, if it is merely obeying or carrying into effect an order of the appellate court in a prior appeal. In Indiana a middle or compromise position is maintained. It is that where the action is primarily for partition, "an appeal will not lie from the interlocutory order of the court appointing commissioners to make partition judgment, in addition to fixing the moieties of the parties, directs a sale of the property, or that, commissioners having been appointed, they have reported that partition shall be made by sale, and the court has directed accordingly. We here reach the point where, not only is no further determination required to fix the rights of the parties, but the judgment, if executed, must divest them of their property. There is therefore still more reason for declaring it appealable, and it has been so declared,[83] but from this reasonable declaration there is dissent.[84]

4. STATUTES GRANTING APPEALS FROM INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENTS. A very obvious inconvenience attending the rule that the judgment declaring the rights of the parties and directing partition accordingly is not so final as to support an appeal is, that, although there is serious doubt of the freedom of the judgment from error, the parties must proceed to have the allotments made and the whole partition consummated, and suffer great delay and expense subject to the risk of having all their labor undone and their expense rendered profitless by an appeal, which, although succeeding the final judgment, must, upon a reversal, set aside the interlocutory judgment also. Hence enactments in a few of the states expressly granting the right of appeal from judgments or decrees in partition.[85] Under these statutes the judgments declaring the moieties of the parties and appointing commissioners to make partition are interlocutory and subject to appeal,[86] and the failure to appeal from interlocutory judgments precludes the party from reviewing them, notwithstanding his subsequent appeal from the final judgment.[87] A like result must follow in those states where the courts hold that the final judgment, for the purposes of appeal, is the one declaring the interests of the parties, between the parties," but if there is real litigation as to the title or any other right or matter, its decision is a sufficient foundation for an appeal, although the court has proceeded no further than to appoint commissioners. Jackson v. Myers, 120 Ind. 504, 22 N. E. 90, 23 N. E. 86.

To illustrate the rule that an appeal does not lie from an interlocutory order or judgment, we may mention that in Louisiana all rulings of court and orders before the notary are interlocutory (Marionneaux v. Marionneaux, 28 La. Ann. 392), that the same ruling applies to orders of court refusing to confirm a partition made by commissioners (Boyce v. Wheeler, 133 Mass. 554), refusing to set it aside, there being no order of confirmation (Papin v. Blumenthal, 41 Mo. 439), stating the opinion of the court on the nature of the estate created and as to the rights of the parties, ordering the taking of testimony on the question of adverse possession and reserving the right to determine therein and as to the relief to which a tenant in tail might be entitled (Wickes v. Wickes, 98 Md. 307, 56 Atl. 1017), confirming a commissioner's report, where the plan adopted is dependent on a sale of part of the property which has not taken place (Clark v. Roller, 199 U. in which case an appeal from the final judgment confirming the partition made by the commissioners will not enable the appellant to question the correctness of the prior judgment.[88]

F. Who May Appeal. In partition, as in other cases, the right of appeal exists in favor of any person prejudicially affected by the judgment or order appealed from.[89] On the other hand, one not beneficially interested cannot appeal.[90] If a party has accepted the benefit of the judgment, as by selling the parcel allotted to him on partition, he waives and loses his right to appeal.[91] He may by his express agreement, or by his gross laches, or by any course of conduct creating an estoppel against himself, lose his right of appeal.[92] When a sale in partition has been made and the question subsequently arising is whether it shall be confirmed or set aside, the order entered thereon, if appealable, may be appealed from by either party or by the purchaser.[93]

G. Notice of Appeal. The appeal or writ of error institutes a new proceeding for the maintenance of which it is necessary that a notice or writ be served to give the appellate court jurisdiction. The appellant, or plaintiff in error, must cause this service to be made upon every other party who might be prejudiced by the reversal or modification of the judgment.[94] Otherwise the appeal will be dismissed. If, however, the appellate proceeding is directed against specific parts of the judgment only, it is sufficient to make service only on the parties interested in those parts.[95] The notice of appeal must not precede the order or judgment from which the appeal is taken,[96] but must be filed within the time thereafter designated by the statute.[97]

H. General Principles Applicable to Appellate Proceedings — 1. ERROR MUST BE AFFIRMATIVELY SHOWN. Whether the proceeding is by appeal or writ of error, the presumption will be indulged that the action of the lower court was free from error or irregularity, and he who assails it must show affirmatively what was the action taken, and that such action was erroneous or irregular. Error will not be presumed.[98] In applying this principle to a discretionary action of Persons under disability.— Under many statutes the time within which an appeal may be taken or a writ of error sued out does not run against persons under disability, such as infants, incompetents, and married women. To the application of the rule it is essential that the person having the right of appeal be at the time it accrues under disability. If he is not, and the time having commenced to run against him, he dies, and the right passes from him to persons under disability, they are not protected thereby, but must take their appeal or sue out their writ of error within the time which would have been available to him had he not died. the lower court, the assumption must be indulged that the discretion was not abused.[99]

2. A Party Cannot Urge an Error Caused or Consented to by Himself. One who induces a court to pursue any mode of proceeding, to make any order, or to render any judgment, cannot afterward assail it for error or irregularity.[1]

3. The Error Must Be Prejudicial. Although an error may have been, or indubitably was, committed, it will not warrant any action by the appellate court if it did not injuriously affect any one. Whether and when prejudice will be presumed from error, we shall not consider. It suffices our present purpose to state that when, notwithstanding an error, it appears that no substantial right has been denied, the judgment must be affirmed.[2] Error, although prejudicial, may be so insignificant in its consequences as not to require a reversal.[3] But if partition is denied on the erroneous conclusion that an infant plaintiff had no such interest in the property as entitled him to a partition, reversal will not be denied on the ground that the trial court might have denied the partition for the reason that it was not for the best interest of plaintiff.[4]

4. The Error Must Affect the Appellant. We have shown that the error assigned must, to support the appeal or writ of error, have been prejudicial. To this must be added that it must have been prejudicial to the party complaining of it. It is not sufficient that it operated prejudicially to another person, who does not complain of it, nor assign it as error.[5]

5. The Right of Appeal May Be Waived. This may result from an express waiver, from a consent to or acceptance of the benefits of the judgment, or from failing to take some action within the time allowed by law necessary to inaugurate or to sustain the appeal,[6] and in every other mode in which the right to appeal may be waived in actions of any other class. But where the waiver is by failure to do some act necessary to obtain jurisdiction over the respondent, he may, in turn, waive such implied waiver by appearing at the hearing without interposing any motion to dismiss.[7]

I. Manner of Preserving or Taking Advantage of Errors. Although the trial judge cannot, strictly speaking, be deemed to have any personal interest in a judicial proceeding taking place before him, nor in the subsequent reversal or affirmance of his action therein, there is a feeling that he ought to have a fair opportunity to act advisedly and to escape the danger of inadvertent error, and, to this end, that a party present in court should object, or in other words, call the attention of the court to any action which he deems prejudicial to his interests and which he thinks ought not to be taken. Failing to so object, it may be assumed that he consents. Partly from these reasons has arisen the general rule that an objection not interposed or a privilege not sought may be deemed waived; and, at all events, that it cannot be interposed for the first time on the appeal.[8]

Therefore, at every stage of the proceeding, due attention must be given to it, and objection interposed to every act to which the party does not assent and which may be erroneous or irregular. Commencing with the complaint, every objection thereto should be made promptly, unless the statute expressly provides that the failure to make it is not a waiver. In truth, there is an inclination, even when an objection going to the sufficiency of the complaint is one not waived by failing to demur, not to consider it on appeal when it does not appear to have been insisted on in the trial court.[9] When the issues are formed and the court proceeds with the trial of the cause, the same measures should be taken as in other cases to prevent the introduction of incompetent and the rejection of competent evidence, and for an error in either respect, or in a finding or a verdict not sustained by the evidence, there is generally redress by a motion for a new trial and by an appeal from any order denying it, and the failure to pursue this mode of redress generally prevents the assertion of these matters on appeal.[10] Newly discovered evidence and other grounds allowable in other cases are equally potent in obtaining new trials in actions for partition.[11] At least when the proceeding is at law, the appellate court will not undertake to determine as between conflicting evidence, but will affirm the judgment or order denying the new trial, unless upon some material issue the verdict or finding is not supported by any evidence, or is against all of the evidence.[12] So in the proceedings subsequent to the interlocutory judgment, objections should be made and exceptions taken to all acts deemed prejudicial. If the appointment of a referee is proposed to which a party has objection, he should, if he has opportunity, make the objection known; and on the other hand, if a party has the right to suggest and wishes to insist upon the appointment of a person as referee, his name should be presented to the court, and in either event the action of the court should be excepted to if in erroneous denial of a right. When the commissioners present the report of their proceedings, any party not satisfied therewith may file exceptions thereto, assailing it either for inequality or other error of judgment in making the allotments, or for any other error or irregularity in the proceedings, bring such exceptions on for hearing, support them with such evidence as may be available, and except to any action of the court thereon which he deems both erroneous and prejudicial, and then only may he hope for redress by appeal.[13] For in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be presumed, both in the lower court and on appeal, that the action of the commissioners was fair and proper,[14] and in the presence of conflicting evidence, the trial court will be sustained,[15] nor will it be reversed for established or confessed error of such slight consequence as to not substantially injure any party.[16]

Thus if the partition is made by a sale of the property, due objection must be interposed to any irregular or erroneous action of the commissioner or officer making it, and supported by competent evidence, and exception taken and error assigned to any errone-

J. The Judgments or Orders Reviewable on an Appeal. This question depends for its answer upon the statute or rule of practice allowing appeals in the state wherein it is presented for decision. As a general rule, if the statute allows appeals at different stages of the proceeding, there must be presented under each appeal the questions pertinent to it, and the failure to so present them, or to take any appeal at all, irrevocably waives them. If the interlocutory judgment is appealable, and such appeal has not been taken, or the judgment appears to have been consented to, it cannot be assailed for error under any subsequent appeal.[17] On the other hand, if an appeal or writ of error is allowed only from the final judgment, it, when prosecuted, brings up for review with such final judgment every antecedent order or judgment respecting which an appropriate objection has been made and exception taken, and an error in any of them may require the reversal of such final judgment, unless it appears that such judgment must have resulted had the error not been committed.[18] If the suit is in equity, strictly speaking, the appeal brings up the whole case to be tried anew upon the same evidence and record as in the trial court, and this without the necessity of any exceptions there.[19] Otherwise it brings up for review only matters and questions of law appearing on the face of the record.[20]

K. The Effect of an Appeal. The effect of an appeal, prior to any action thereupon by the appellate court, is in many respects a question of very serious doubt, and there is no reason to believe that there is anything in the law of the subject giving it an exceptional or peculiar character or operation in the case of proceedings in partition. The appeal so far removes the case from the lower or trial court that it no longer has power to proceed therewith or to make any order therein,[21] unless the appeal merely assails the judgment upon some point permitting of its enforcement without impairing the appellant's right, should he succeed in his appeal.[22] So far as the judgment is for costs or is for other relief enforceable by fieri facias, the appeal, followed by the requisite security, stays the execution.[23] It also deprives the trial court of the power to compel a party to ous action of the court either in vacating or refusing to vacate the sale. Black v. Black, 206 Pa. St. 116, 55 Atl. 847. make an election or to do any other act required of him by the judgment appealed from;[24] but it probably does not deprive him of his right to rely on the judgment as a muniment of title in any proceeding to recover thereunder.[25] If the appeal is from some non-appealable order or judgment, it is ineffective to stay any subsequent proceeding.[26]

L. The Judgment or Order Which May Be Entered Upon. So far as the question of allotment is concerned, the only judgment of the appellate court must be of affirmance or reversal, for if it finds the allotment unfair or unequal, or that it must be set aside for some error or irregularity, it cannot equalize the allotment either by imposing some charge against one allotment in favor of another, or by making new allotments, but must, after declaring the principles controlling, remit the cause to the trial court, which must proceed with the aid of commissioners as in the first instance.[27] But the appellate court may, when such action would have been proper on the part of the trial court, give the commissioners directions, or at least indicate what directions to them will be proper respecting their mode of proceeding.[28] The higher court may also act with reference to any charge which the trial court erred in imposing, or refusing to impose, upon any parcel of land, and instead of entering a general reversal direct such modification of the judgment as it deems proper.[29] If the judgment is erroneous because of a clerical mistake in the description of land, it may be reformed and affirmed.[30] If the judgment is erroneous as to one defendant, it must generally be reversed as to all.[31]

M. The Effect of the Reversal. The effect of the reversal of the judgment is doubtless the same as of other judgments involving the title to real estate, namely, as to the parties to the action, it ceases to exist, and places them, in a legal sense, where they were before the error causing the reversal was committed.[32] Third parties, on the other hand, are protected in acts done under the judgment while it remained in force.[33] If, because of the failure to give a stay bond, a sale is made under the judgment, the title of the purchaser is not divested by its subsequent reversal.[34] As to the general effect of reversals on purchasers from a party to a suit, we have expressed the principle elsewhere that if the purchase is made during the pendency of an appeal or writ of error, the purchaser accepts title subject to the pending proceeding and liable to be swept away if it results in a reversal, and that the same result ought to follow even where the purchase is made prior to the taking of the appeal or writ of error, but that, with respect to the latter proposition, the weight of authority is the other way.[35] With respect to partition, the decided tendency is to exempt from the annulling operation of a reversal any title acquired by an innocent purchaser prior to the taking of the appeal or the suing out of the writ of error.[36] Whether this be conceded or not, if upon a new partition following a reversal, any parcel is allotted to the same person as on the former partition, his grantee under a purchase preceding such reversal is entitled to a confirmatory deed from his vendor.[37] If the reversal expressly or impliedly directs a new trial, the same liberality of proceeding applies as in other cases, namely, each party is at liberty to proceed as if no trial had ever taken place, except in so far as he may be restricted by the rule of stare decisis. He may move to amend his pleadings to enable him to give evidence of some fact not admissible under his pleading prior to the amendment,[38] or to supply a defect of parties.[39]

N. The Effect of the Affirmance. By the affirmance of the judgment or decree, its effect is in no respect changed, except that whatever stay or suspension attended the appeal or writ of error is terminated, and obligations by their terms dependent on the affirmance become unconditionally obligatory and enforceable.[40] Thus, if a bond or undertaking on appeal has been given, the respondent, or defendant in error, may pursue such remedies as are expressly or impliedly within its stipulations. The sureties become liable for the costs accruing after the appeal, but for none other,[41] unless the bond or undertaking was for the staying of execution upon the money judgment, in which case the sureties are liable for the amount of such judgment, whether made up from costs or from some other charge, or from both. If such bond or undertaking included the stay of any part of the judgment entitling respondent to demand or take possession of the land, the sureties are answerable for the rents and profits or the value of the use and occupation of the land after the giving of the bond,[42] provided the effect of the appeal and the security given thereon prevented the respondent from maintaining proceedings to be let into possession.[43]

I. DEFINITION.

The definition of a partnership which seems to be most accurate and comprehensive is that of Chancellor Kent, as follows: "A contract of two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, and to divide the profit and bear the loss in certain proportions."[1]

Other definitions are: "An exhaustive definition of partnership is not easy. So far as the facts in the case present the question of partnership it is sufficiently accurate to say that there is a partnership between two or more persons whenever such a relation exists between them that each is as to all the others, in respect to some business, both principal and agent. Partnership a relation or status.— A partnership, while often called a contract, is rather a relation, a status, somewhat as marriage is a relation or status. Haggett v. Hurley, 91 Me. 542, 40 Atl. 561, 41 L. R. A. 362.

General and special partnerships.— Partnerships are divided into general and special or limited. Dwinel v. Stone, 30 Me. 384; Bigelow v. Elliot, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,399, 1 Cliff. 28. "General partnerships are properly such where the parties carry on all their trade and business for the joint benefit and profit, and it is not material whether the capital stock be limited or not, or the contributions of the parties be equal or unequal." Bigelow v. Elliot, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,399, 1 Cliff. 28, 32. See infra, X.

Non-trading partnership.— There is no accurate definition of what is or is not a trading or non-trading or commercial or non-commercial partnership. A non-trading partnership is one engaged in the prosecution of some occupation or calling not of a commercial character. A partnership may be engaged in manufacture, and at the same time may be engaged in buying and selling manufactured articles not produced by themselves. As to the business exclusively relating to manufacture, the law as to the non-trading partnership will apply, while, as to business of buying or selling the manufactures of others, the law of commercial or trading partnership will apply. McNeal v. Gossard, 6 Okla. 363, 50 Pac. 159. Non-trading partnerships are those not engaged in trade, such as those engaged in farming (Ulery v. Ginrich, 57 Ill. 531; Benton v. Roberts, 4 La. Company and partnership distinguished.— "A company . . . is the result of an arrangement by which parties intend to form a partnership which is constantly changing, a partnership to-day consisting of certain members, and to-morrow consisting of some only of England.[2] The earliest cases relating to partnership found in the English law reports deal with a partner's right to an account,[3] and with the maxim "Jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet."[4] In deciding these cases the courts of common law and of equity take judicial notice of the law merchant, and apply its rules to the questions before them.[5] The fact that but few cases involving partnership law are recorded in the reports prior to the seventeenth century is due to the existence of staple courts and kindred tribunals, in which the controversies between merchants were tried expeditiously and in accordance with the rules of the law merchant.[6] Upon the decay of these courts, during the latter part of the sixteenth and the early part of the seventeenth centuries, partnership disputes came more and more frequently before the English courts of common law and of chancery for determination.[7] Not until the close of the eighteenth century, however, did any one attempt the publication of a legal treatise on partnership.[8]

III. THE RELATION.

A. Between the Parties — 1. CONTRACT OF PARTNERSHIP — a. Necessity For Contract. Our law has always treated the partnership relation as founded in voluntary contract.[9] It does not surprise parties into a partnership against their will,[10] although it does not require an express agreement between them,[11] nor is it bound by their statements of intention in associating themselves together for business transactions.[12] It will regard their conduct rather than their language of those members along with others who have come in. An ordinary partnership is a partnership composed of definite individuals bound together by contract to continue combined for some joint object, either during pleasure, or during a limited time, and is essentially composed of the persons originally entering into the contract." Morrison v. Earls, 5 Ont. 434.

in determining whether their voluntary association in a business enterprise amounts to a partnership or not.[13]

b. Form and Requisites of Contract. At common law no particular form of contract is necessary to the creation of a valid partnership. It can be oral or written, and it can result from the conduct of the parties or from the verbal communications between them.[14] In some jurisdictions, however, statutes require a writing, duly executed and recorded.[15] And as has been stated elsewhere in this work the statute of frauds has also modified the common-law rule as to partnership contracts in two important particulars.[16]

c. Capacity of Parties. The capacity of particular persons, natural and artificial, such as married women,[17] infants,[18] alien enemies,[19] corporations,[20]

In this case seven persons associated themselves together to manufacture cheese at a factory owned by three of them, who received a certain sum for the use of the factory. The association adopted no name, and was known by several different names. The expenses and also the losses, if any, were to be first paid, and then the net profits were to be divided among the seven persons, each to receive his proportionate share. This, the court held, was a partnership within all the authorities.

d. Subject-Matter and Purpose — (i) Legal. A partnership contract has for its subject-matter the association of parties in carrying on a trade or adventure for their common benefit, with their mutual contributions of property and services.[22] An association of persons to preserve the property of others from destruction by fire is not a partnership;[23] nor is any other association organized for charitable, philanthropic, or social purposes and not existing as a common business enterprise for pecuniary profit.[24] A partnership may be organized for the prosecution of a single adventure as well as for the conduct of a continuous business.[25] When parties agree to purchase certain real estate, fit it up for certain purposes and sell it, courts are not inclined to treat the contract as creating a partnership, unless the enterprise contemplated by the contract is of such a character and purpose that it cannot result in a successful issue, if the parties are treated as tenants in common,[26] or unless they have clearly evinced their intent to become partners.[27] The presumption is against the existence of a partnership in lands, but this presumption may be overcome by the terms of the partnership contract, or by the purposes for which the land is acquired, or the manner in which it is employed.[28] It is not overcome by an agreement between a real estate agent and another that the latter shall have a dollar an acre for assisting in the sale of a farm.[29] Contracts for farming on shares rarely have for their object the creation of a partnership between the landowner and the cultivator,[30] although the terms of the contract and the conduct of the parties under it may warrant the conclusion that a partnership exists between them.[31] Agreements between the creditors of a failing debtor on the one side, and the debtor or his general assignee on the other, for the conduct of the business with a view to paying the debts, will constitute such creditors partners, if they become thereby the proprietors of the business;[32] but not if they become only the mortgagees, or the agents of the debtor or his assignee.[33] Arrangements between a number of persons, firms, and corporations engaged in the same line of business, having for their object the maintenance of a uniform scale of prices, and an equitable distribution of business patronage,[34] or the pooling of profits, or the division of earnings in agreed proportions,[35] do not create a partnership between the contracting parties if they retain the several ownership of their properties, and there is no common plant or fund which they own and manage jointly. Cotenancy in a vessel is the general relation between ship-owners, and partnership the exception. Hence one who alleges that ship-owners are partners must establish this relationship by clear evidence.[36] In the absence of evidence showing an intention to become partners, that relationship does not exist between the owner template building upon it or making other improvements, but simply to hold it for sale at advanced prices, which it was supposed would be obtained within a short time. There was therefore no necessity for a partnership to accomplish this end. Ownership as tenants in common was equally effective. (II) Illegal. If a partnership is formed for the prosecution of an illegal business, or for the conduct of a lawful business in an illegal manner, the courts will refuse to recognize its existence, either by enforcing its claims against others, or by compelling either partner to account to the others for capital or profits in his hands, or by forcing either to contribute his share of the losses to the others.[40] Even though the illegality of the partnership contract is not set up as a defense, the court may inquire into its nature, and if its illegality appears may refuse to adjudicate upon alleged rights which are dependent upon it. Parties cannot compel a court of justice to enforce a contract, appearing by evidence to be illegal, by the simple device or inadvertence of omitting from their pleadings the charge of such illegality.[41] It has been held that it is not illegal for the assignee of a partnership for the benefit of creditors to agree to pay off the creditors and form a partnership with the members of the assigning firm,[42] nor for a son to accept an option to succeed his deceased father as a partner, although concealing this fact from the other legatees of the father,[43] nor for partners to contract not to carry on the same trade for their private benefit.[44]

e. Assent of Parties. The mutual assent, required of parties to every enforceable contract, is necessary to the formation of a partnership. Hence if the so-called articles of partnership are vague and indefinite with respect to such important matters as the amount of capital to be furnished, the extent of business to be transacted, the duties of the several partners, and the manner in which it is to be carried on, the articles will not be enforced by a court.[45] Nor is a partnership created by an offer by one party which is not accepted according to its terms by the other;[46] nor by an acceptance on behalf of that other by an unauthorized agent.[47] In the latter case, if such acceptance is thereafter ratified, the partnership contract dates from the original acceptance.[48] As between the parties themselves, the one who alleges a partnership must show not only his own voluntary assent to the relation, but the like assent of every other alleged partner.[49] It is not enough that he proves an agreement in which they call themselves partners. The term may have been used in a popular rather than a legal sense, or as a matter of business convenience, and hence no partnership may have been intended by the parties.[50] On the other hand they may not have intended to take upon themselves the liability of partners, and yet they may have created a partnership.[51]

Statement of rule.— "It is nevertheless possible for parties to intend no partnership and yet to form one. If they agree upon an arrangement which is a partnership in fact, it is of no importance that they call it something else, or that they even expressly declare that they are not to be partners." Beecher v. Bush, 45 Mich. 188, 193, 7 N. W. 785, 40 Am. Rep. 465.

Attempt to organize corporation.— The most frequent cases of this sort grow out of ineffectual attempts to organize corpora-

f. Consideration. The consideration of the contract of partnership consists in the mutual covenants and promises of the copartners; each engaging to contribute capital, or services, or credit, and to subject himself to the duties and liabilities of a partner, in consideration of the like engagements of his copartners.[52] Accordingly if the partnership agreement provides simply that one of the parties is to give and the other is to receive a half interest in the profits of an enterprise started by the former, without anything being promised by the latter toward the accomplishment of its object, no enforceable contract exists.[53] But if the latter takes part in carrying on the enterprise, and thus subjects himself to partnership liability to outsiders, he furnishes a sufficient consideration for the former's promise, and acquires all the rights of a copartner.[54] Moreover the assumption of a partner's liability for the debts of the firm, or the continuance of that liability beyond the originally stipulated period, is ample consideration for special provisions in the partnership contract securing to such partner unusual advantages or exemptions, as regards his copartners.[55]

g. Executory Agreements — (1) In General. Persons who have entered into a contract to become partners at some future time, or upon the happening of some future contingency, do not become partners until the agreed time has arrived or the contingency has happened. Whether a partnership exists is determined by ascertaining from the terms of the agreement whether any time has to elapse or any act remains to be done before the right to share profits accrues; for the parties will not be partners until such time has elapsed, or the act has been performed.[56] The mere agreement to form a partnership does not of itself create a partnership; nor does the advancement by one party of his agreed share of the capital. The entire agreement and all the attending circumstances are to be taken into consideration, in determining whether a partnership has been actually launched.[57] Undoubtedly the performance of a condition precedent by either party to an executory agreement for a partnership may be waived by the other; but a waiver is not to be presumed.[58] Although, as between the parties, the agreement is executory, and no partnership exists, their conduct may amount to a "holding out" as partners; and if it does they will be liable in that capacity to those who have been induced by such conduct to deal with them as a partnership.[59] The death of either party to an executory agreement for partnership prevents the formation of a firm, as such agreement is based upon the continuance of the life of each.[60]

tory contract for a partnership will sustain an action for damages,[61] a court of equity will rarely decree the specific performance of such a contract,[62] although it will not hesitate to require the execution of a deed, or similar instrument, when the refusal to execute it would operate as a fraud upon the other party.[63]

h. Intention of Parties and Construction of Contract. When a court is called upon to determine whether a particular contract constitutes a partnership between the parties thereto, its controlling purpose is to ascertain their intention as that is disclosed by the entire transaction.[64] But the intention which controls in determining the existence of a partnership is the legal intention deducible from the acts of the parties, and, if they intend to do a thing which in law constitutes a partnership, they are partners, although their purpose was to avoid the creation of such relation.[65] Particular clauses in the contract, or even express statements that it does or does not constitute a partnership, are not conclusive upon the subject.[66] If the entire agreement between the parties has been committed to writing, every clause is to be considered, and effect given to each, if possible. compensation for services does not constitute a partnership.[72] The same is true of an honest agreement to share profits for the use of money loaned to the business owner,[73] or of property leased to him,[74] even though the agreement secures to the lender or the landowner extensive powers of control over the debtor's business.[75] Oftentimes the partnership contract contains peculiar provisions, imposing upon one or more of the partners obligations differing from those which the law ordinarily infers from the partnership relation, or conferring unusual rights and powers. In all such cases the courts will strive to construe these provisions so as to effectuate the honest intentions of the parties, as shown by the language of the contract and their conduct under it.[76]

i. Modification of Contract. The contract under which a partnership is organized may be varied at any time by the consent of all the partners, and such consent may be proved, either by express agreement, or by the conduct of the parties.[77] If the change is limited to business methods and practices, or, in other words, to the collateral, as distinguished from the fundamental, provisions of the contract, it may be made by a majority of the partners; otherwise unanimity is required.[78] While even the most important articles may be waived by a partner, his waiver is not to be presumed from the mere disregard of such articles by a copartner; his conduct must be such as to show a habitual assent to the copartner's violation of the original provisions, and to the substitution of new terms therefor.[79] When the rights of third persons are involved, the conduct of the waiving partner to be considered is that which is displayed to them; not the private dealings and conversations between the partners themselves.[80] In some cases the terms of a partnership may be varied by judicial decree.[81]

Variations evidenced by conduct.—"Partners may make constant variations in the terms of their partnership agreement which may be evidenced not only by writing but by their conduct." England v. Curling, 8 Beav. 129, 50 Eng. Reprint 51.

Partners may modify, alter, or dissolve the copartnership contract, as between themselves, either in whole or in part, pro-

j. Effect of Mistake, Misrepresentation, or Fraud in Contract. Parties, when treating for a contract of partnership, are bound to exercise the utmost good faith toward each other. They are contemplating a relation, in the highest degree confidential, and which puts each party at the mercy of the other. The contract is often spoken of as uberrimæ fidei.[82] And to sustain an action for rescission of vided they do not violate any principle of law or public policy, and this may be done by written or oral agreement, or by conduct which shows consent to the change. Solomon v. Solomon, 2 Ga. 18.

Nature of changes.— The change may relate to the nature of the partnership enterprise (Boisgerard v. Wall, Sm. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 404; Roberts' Appeal, 92 Pa. St. 407; Jennings' Appeal, (Pa. 1888) 16 Atl. 19), to the share of either partner in the proceeds or the profits of the business (Askew v. Springer, 111 Ill. 662; Robbins v. Laswell, 27 Ill. 365; Ex p. Thompson, 8 Jur. 633, 13 L. A. 238 ("Where a firm consists of more than two persons, the majority, acting fairly and in good faith, may direct the conduct of its affairs as long as they keep within the purposes and scope of the partnership").

Statement of rule.— The articles agreed on to regulate a partnership cannot be altered without the consent of all the partners; but the continuance or discontinuance of a practice not stipulated for, nor made the subject of covenant, must be decided by the majority of the partners. The negative of the minority, in such cases, is of no avail, if they have had a proper opportunity of considering the matter. Const v. Harris, Turn. & R. 496, 24 Rev. Rep. 108, 12 Eng. Substitution of new terms.— The original terms of a partnership may be waived or tacitly changed by the conduct of the partners, so as to substitute new terms and conditions. . . . But before the terms of the original agreement can be considered as waived . . . it must appear that some new terms have been agreed upon as a substitute. McGraw v. Pulling, Freem. Fraud need not be wilful.— Accordingly it may be rescinded and the partnership dissolved, not only for wilful fraud, or deliberate overreaching, or intentional falsehood, practised by one partner upon his copartner (Fogg v. Johnston, 27 Ala. 432, 62 Am. such a contract plaintiff need not show that he has suffered pecuniary damage. He is entitled to be released from the hazardous tie of partnership relations with one who has failed to observe the highest standard of honor in their confidential association.[83] The fact that defendant has been guilty of fraudulent conduct toward other persons will not, however, entitle plaintiff to be released from partnership connection with him.[84] Even when a partner has a right to rescind the partnership agreement, he may lose it by ratifying the transaction with full knowledge of the facts,[85] or he may waive it and sue for such damages as he can show

Rights of creditors.—When a person has been induced by fraud to become a partner of another, and to agree that the firm shall assume the debts of the business, he may rescind the partnership contract; and if he does his liability to the creditors of the old business is also annulled. Craig v. Huber, 3 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 108, holding that the consideration of defendant's agreement to become a debtor to the old creditors had failed. he has sustained by defendant's misrepresentations.[86] The duty of a partner to observe the utmost good faith toward his associates, and his liability for innocent misrepresentations which are relied on by them to their harm, extend to all agreements between partners, during the existence of the firm, including agreements for the sale or purchase of a copartner's share in the business.[87]

2. COMMUNITY OF INTEREST — a. General Principles. Mere community of interest, even as owners of specific property, or of the profits from a particular adventure or business, does not necessarily constitute the coöwners partners.[88] The community of interest must be such as to show that the coöwners have bound themselves together as a single association, by a contract which is joint as between themselves, which renders them jointly liable to persons dealing with the association, which entitles them jointly to maintain actions against debtors, and which creates a joint fund for division among them.[89]

b. Application of General Principles. When two persons, by a contract in writing, become associates in a mercantile business, one contributing cash, and the other contributing labor to the joint stock, and stipulating that all the net profits shall be equally divided among them, there can be no doubt that a partnership exists between them.[90] But little if any doubt can arise as to the existence of a partnership when builders jointly contract for the construction of a house, or when persons contract to manufacture chattels, or to engage in the purchase and sale of lands as a speculation, or when they own and run a sawmill jointly, or a gristmill, with a view of dividing between them the profits realized from such transactions.[91] Ordinarily the owners of a ship are not partners;[92] but when it is

Community of interest and mutual agency. — Partnership involves community of interest in some lawful commerce or business for the conduct of which the parties are mutually agents for each other — but with general powers within the scope of the business, which powers they can restrict by agreement to the extent of making one the sole agent of the rest of the business. built under a special agreement, whereby one of the owners is to be master and the other to be ship's husband, and the vessel is to be employed on joint account as a regular packet between certain stations, it is a partnership affair, both as to ship and freight.[93] When a business, together with the real estate, implements, mechanism, and fixtures used therein, is bequeathed to two persons, who continue the business, they become partners, without any formal agreement upon the subject, and the property is partnership capital.[94] The loan of money to be invested in trade, the lender to have one-half the net proceeds therefor, does not make the lender and the borrower partners.[95] Joint purchasers of real or personal property, who do not acquire it for the purpose of carrying on a common business with it, or as incidental to such a business, are not partners simply because of their community of interest.[96] Indeed the presumption is against a partnership in such cases, especially if the transaction relates to agricultural lands,[97] animals and crops,[98] or to property acquired and held by religious and social organizations,[99] or by families,[1] for mutual benefit, but not for trade profits. So too arrangements for farming on shares are presumed not to create partnerships.[2] The same presumption has been applied to leases of fishery grounds,[3] and to agreements for dividing the reward offered for the apprehension of criminals.[4] Organizations for the maintenance of savings funds of depositors, or mutual insurance, are not partnerships, although the members have a community of interest.[5]

(II) Existence of Business. The partnership relation was first instituted by and between merchants for their convenience and profit in carrying on a trade adventure.[8] It is still confined by our law to persons who are co-principals in a business. Hence, if persons are associated in an enterprise, not as co-principals of a business, but as tenants in common of certain property; or, if it appears that the business is owned by one of the associates only, the fact that the associates share in the profits does not raise even the presumption of a partnership between them.[9] The individual rights, property interests, and powers of the associates, so far as the enterprise in question is involved, must be merged in a common business association.[10]

The tendency of the more modern authorities is toward the doctrine that the sharing of profits is evidence that he who shares them is a partner, but not conclusive evidence; the true test being whether there is such a participation in or sharing of the profits as to constitute the relation of principal and agent between the person taking the profits and those actually carrying on the business. The intention of the parties must control. The relation of partners is formed by contract, or by the acts of the parties which amount to a contract. If there is no partnership inter se, there can be none as to third parties, unless a party by his acts has put himself in such a position that he is estopped from denying that he is a partner. (v) Sharing Profits in a Single Transaction. The courts have agreed that there may be a partnership between persons who contemplate but a single business transaction, such as the shipment and sale of but one lot of goods, or the joint purchase and sale of but one chattel, or of one piece of land.[13] When the common business is limited to a single venture, however, pretty clear evidence of an intent by all of the associates to create the partnership relation is required. If the parties have not expressly provided for a partnership, it becomes important to inquire whether they have contributed to a common fund with which the purchase is made, or the transaction is carried forward; or whether, on the other hand, their contributions have been for the purchase of several interests, as tenants in common, or pursuant to some special agreement as individuals. In the former case a partnership will be inferred;[14] in the latter case no such inference will be drawn.[15] Clearly there is no ground for holding a partnership to exist between persons who jointly undertake to sell a piece of land and to divide the excess received over the price the owner has agreed to take.[16]

(vi) Sharing Profits as Interest—(a) In Lieu of Interest. An agreement between the proprietor of a business and his creditor that the latter shall have a share of the business profits in lieu of interest on the debt is radically different from the agreement for a partnership. It is founded upon the assumption of opposition of interests, while a partnership agreement is based upon the assumption of community of benefit and of loss.[17] The creditor is not a proprietor of the business, and his claim upon the profits is not in the capacity of owner. Although he is interested in having the business successful, the business

(c) Option to Receive Profits or Interest. An agreement which secures to the lender the option to receive a share of the borrower's net profits, or to receive interest on the loan, never operates as a contract of partnership. At most it can be but an executory contract for a partnership, until the lender exercises the option of sharing the profits.[20]

(vii) Sharing Profits as Consideration For Sale of Property. A person who is to receive a share of the profits as a part of the purchase-price of property sold to the proprietor of a business is not a partner in the business,[21] and persons who are to share the profits resulting from the sale of property effected by their several efforts are not partners.[22]

(viii) Sharing Profits as or in Addition to Rent. Agreements, whereby one party leases to another real or personal property, and is to receive as rent, or as an addition to a specified rent, a share of the profits gained by the lessee from a business in which the property is used, do not make the contracting parties partners.[23] Transactions of this sort are to be carefully scrutinized, however; and, if Illinois.— Adams v. Funk, 53 Ill. 219, lender to have five per cent interest and half of the profits.

Iowa.— See Richards v. Grinnell, 63 Iowa 44, 18 N. W. 668, 50 Am. Rep. 727, holding that the parties were partners, because they had agreed that they "should have equal interest, and shares in the common venture," which was conducted with money advanced by plaintiff, after his investment with interest was repaid.

Michigan.— Wells v. Babcock, 56 Mich. 276, 22 N. W. 809, 27 N. W. 575, holding that the agreement was a partnership because what purported to be an advance was a contribution to the capital of a business belonging to both parties to the agreement. See Corey v. Cadwell, 86 Mich. 570, 49 N. W. 611.

New York.—Gibson v. Stone, 43 Barb. 285, 28 How. Pr. 468, no partnership, although lender was to have seven per cent interest on loan and one per cent on the amount of gross sales.

Sharing crops.—A partnership is not created by an agreement between one having no interest in land and the owner thereof whereby the former is to work the land for a share of the crops. Romero v. Dalton, 2 Ariz. 210, 11 Pac. 863. No partnership exists where there was no trading, no risks, no contingent profits, but simply an arrangement for joint tillage, and a division of the produce of the farm in kind. Gurr v. Martin, 73 Ga. 528. An agreement between two parties that one shall furnish a farm with a certain amount of teams and labor and the other shall manage the farm and give certain labor, the crops to be divided, does not constitute a partnership. Blue v. Leathers, 15 Ill. 31. In North Carolina it is expressly provided by statute that a landlord and his tenant shall not be regarded as partners because of an agreement under which the landlord is to have a share of the crop. not clothed with the usual powers, rights, or duties of a partner, but is subject to the orders of the owner of the business, and he has nothing to do with the losses, except as they affect the amount of his remuneration.[26] A stipulation in the contract, however, that one party is to receive a share of the profits, not as partner, but in lieu of wages, is not conclusive proof that a partnership does not exist. If the entire transaction discloses an arrangement by which the parties are co-principals in a business carried on for their mutual profit, they are partners therein.[27]

(x) Sharing Gross Receipts. A stipulation, for sharing gross receipts, or gross profits, as a general rule discloses an intention not to carry on a partnership business, for the reason that an ordinary partnership has for its ultimate object the division between the partners of net profits. Before such profits can be ascertained, the expenses and losses must be paid out of the gross receipts.[28] But while a stipulation for sharing commissions, or the gross proceeds of a venture or business, is so inconsistent with the usages of ordinary partnerships as to indicate an absence of intent to enter that relation, this presumption may be overcome by other provisions of the contract, or by the conduct of the parties, showing that they are carrying on a common business for profit. In such event the courts will not hesitate to declare the sharers to be partners, although their contract may provide for a division of the proceeds before the stage of net profits has been reached.[29]

A joint adventure in which the parties purchase jointly, agreeing to share the profits and losses, is a copartnership as to the adventure. Solomon v. Solomon, 2 Ga. 18.

Contribution of capital unnecessary.—A person may become a member of a partnership without contributing equally to the capital or even without advancing any portion thereof. If he agrees to furnish his labor to the management of the business and shares in the profits and losses this is sufficient to an arrangement to avoid competition, or to conduct a litigation in the results of which they are severally interested, or to secure greater activity or skill on the part of a servant or agent, or to accomplish some similar purpose, the mere sharing of profits and losses will not make them partners.[32]

(B) Sharing Profits Only. Ordinarily partners share the losses as well as the profits of the partnership. If the contract contains no provision on the subject, each partner is entitled to a share of the profits and is bound to bear a share of the losses.[33] And it has been decided in a number of cases that to constitute a partnership inter sese there must be a community of losses as well as of profits.[34]

(c) Sharing Losses Only. Agreements between partners that they shall share the losses of a business, but not the profits, are made occasionally;[35] but an arrangement of this kind between business associates generally indicates that they are not partners.[36]

3. Estoppel to Allege or Deny Partnership. The doctrine of estoppel is not invoked as frequently in litigations between partners, as in suits by outsiders against the apparent members of partnerships. It will be applied, however, against a plaintiff who alleges a partnership with defendant, whenever such plaintiff has repudiated the relationship and has thus forced or induced defendant to so change his position that a partnership would now operate as a fraud upon him.[37] It will also be applied against one who has availed himself of all the advantages arising from an apparent partnership relation, including the services and contributions of the one whom he now denies to have been a partner.[38]

4. Subpartnership. When a partner contracts with a person outside the firm to share with such person the profits and losses of his own interest in the firm, their relationship is often described as that of subpartnership.[39] This, however, does not seem to be an accurate or desirable term; for such joint owners are not engaged in carrying on a business in common with a view of profit. Share in losses limited.— To constitute a partnership it is not essential that all the parties should be liable to share indefinitely in the losses. If they participate in the profits and are liable to be affected by the losses only to a limited extent it will be sufficient. Brigham v. Dana, 29 Vt. 1.

Exemption from losses showing no partnership.— "The doctrine that persons cannot be partners as between each other, unless they agree to participate in the losses, is founded on the language of the judges in many cases, and in some is the apparent ground of the decision. . . . But the result of all the cases and the modern doctrine seems to be, that the exemption from losses is a fact which, though not conclusive, is strong evidence that the party thus exempted is not an actual partner; and, taken in conjunction with other circumstances, may clearly show that fact." relations are generally those of creditor and debtor. It follows from the doctrine already stated[40] that a partnership cannot be created between persons without their voluntary assent that a subpartner is not a member of the firm.[41] Even the knowledge of one partner that his copartner has agreed to share his share with an outsider, and his assent to such arrangement, does not introduce such outsider into the firm.[42] The fact that a subpartner takes a portion of the firm's profits has never been held enough to render him liable for the firm's debts; for he has no joint proprietorship with all the partners in the profits before division, he has no right to an account as a partner, and he has no lien on the partnership assets to secure his claim to a "share of a share" of the profits.[43] His claim is against the individual partner who has contracted with him. So his liability is limited to such individual, and to that individual's separate creditors; unless indeed he has held himself out as a member of the firm, and induced persons to give credit to the firm on the strength of such holding out.[44] While a subpartner has no right to an account as a partner, he may be entitled to maintain an equity action against all the members of the firm, in order to have determined his share in the interest of the partner who contracted with him.[45] But such an action does not operate to force plaintiff into the firm as a member thereof. On the other hand it subjects plaintiff to all the defenses, set-offs, and counter-claims available against the partner whose interest he seeks to share.[46]

B. As to Third Persons — 1. Contract of Partnership — a. In General. Persons who are associated in business pursuant to a contract which makes them partners inter se are partners as to third persons, even though they have attempted to prevent, or to conceal, the existence of a partnership.[47]

What intention necessary.— Even when the intention of the parties is treated as the test of partnership, it is not the specific intention to incur partnership obligations that is required. All that is necessary is the intention to organize an association, which the law regards as a partnership. Wells v. Gates, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 554, 557. "It is very probable, indeed, that many of the defendants [subscribers to the stock of a newspaper association] did not, at the time, realize the consequences of their act, and the extent of the responsibility which they incurred. The want of forethought and circumspection, especially on occasions of this kind, is very common; but although the result is to be regretted, the law will not allow it to be escaped."

Applications of rule.— A contract by which B and C bind themselves jointly as parties of the second part to pay to D as party of the first a share of the profits of a transaction to be managed by B and C indicate that B and C are partners in the particular transaction, and that D is not a partner but a creditor. Drake v. Reed, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 192. view that a partnership may be created by construction of law has been repudiated in England.[54] And, in order that persons between whom there is no actual partnership be held liable as partners to third persons, a case of estoppel must be made out against them. If they have held themselves out as partners, and have thereby misled third persons, they are liable as partners to such persons,[55] and to no others.[56] This modern rule has been acted upon in a number of cases decided in the United States[57] and in Canada.[58]

3. Community of Interest[59] — a. In General. The joint ownership of property by several parties, or their community of interest in it, will not of itself make them partners, or warrant third persons in believing that a partnership exists.[60] If, however, two or more persons become the joint owners of property and thereafter employ it in carrying on a joint business for their mutual profit, they render themselves liable as partners to those dealing with them in the business.[61]

b. Sharing Profits — (i) In General. According to the rule now generally prevailing both in England and in America, when there is no partnership in fact, merely sharing the profits of a venture does not create one as to third persons, who have not been legitimately led to believe that one exists.[62] The older English doctrine[63] has been applied, however, in some American decisions; and he who takes a part of the profits indefinitely is, by operation of law, liable for losses as a partner, on the principle that, by taking a part of the profits, he takes from the creditors a part of that fund which is the security for the payment of their debts.[64] In all jurisdictions the fact that a person shares the profits of a business tends to show that he is a partner therein.[65]

(II) Sharing Profits in Lieu of Interest. One who makes a bona fide loan of money or credit to the owner of a business, in consideration of a share of its profits in lieu of interest, does not thereby become liable to the creditors of the business, in England,[66] or in most of the American jurisdictions.[67] It has been

(VI) Sharing Gross Receipts. The general rule is that an agreement between persons to share the gross receipts of a business, or to divide the products of an enterprise in gross, will render them liable as partners to third persons,[75] whenever it constitutes them partners inter se;[76] but only in such cases, unless they hold themselves out as partners.[77]

No proprietary interest or lien on the profits.—A stipulation that the compensation for the services of an agent or servant shall be proportioned to the profits of a business, without giving him a proprietary interest in, or specific lien upon, the profits, has never been held to constitute him a partner. Form of stipulation.— For a time it was thought important for the stipulation to provide that the compensation should be "a sum equal to a certain share of the profits" and not that it should be "a certain share"; for, if the latter form of expression were used, it was deemed to convert the agent into a partner, as to third persons, however clear was the intent of the parties that he should have no proprietary interest in or control over the business. In Georgia the rule is "that if one is to receive a certain proportion of the profits, as one third or one half, as profits, he is a partner. If a certain sum is agreed to be paid out of profits, and the party does not look to that alone for payment, he is not a partner; but if the sum to be paid is not fixed, but may be increased or diminished by the amount or accidents of the business, then the receiver is a partner." (VII) SHARING LOSSES ONLY. Agreements by which persons, interested in an enterprise, bind themselves to share its losses, but not its profits, cannot constitute a true partnership; for they do not provide for the conduct of a common business with a view of profit.[78] Still the parties will be liable as partners to third persons, who are induced to deal with them by their representations that they are in partnership.[79]

(VIII) SHARING PROFITS ONLY. It has been held that to constitute one a partner, as to third persons, it is not necessary that he should agree to share in the losses of the business; sharing in the profits is sufficient.[80]

(IX) SHARING BOTH PROFITS AND LOSS. The normal partnership divides its profits and its losses between all of its members. Accordingly an agreement between business associates that they shall share ratably in the profits and loss of an adventure indicates that they are partners therein; and will make out a case of partnership against them, in behalf of third persons, unless they show that they shared the profits and loss in some other capacity than that of partners.[81]

United States.— McGowan v. American Pressed Tan Bark Co., 121 U. S. 575, 7 S. Ct. 1315, 30 L. ed. 1027, holding that a partnership existed where it was shown that defendants held themselves out to plaintiff's agents as a partnership, had been partners up to a short time previous to the making of the contract in suit, had signed what purported to be a firm-name to a portion of the correspondence out of which the contract had arisen, and that plaintiff had dealt with them under the belief that they were part-one's name as a part of the firm style. Such use is a virtual representation that the person thus named is a member of the firm.[87] The addition of "& Co." to the name of an individual does not indicate that any particular person is designated by those words.[88] Still a person may be held out as a partner, without having his name appear in the firm style, or being disclosed in any way.[89]

c. Assent of the Party Held Out. In order to render one liable as a partner who is not a partner in fact, it must appear that the alleged act of holding out was done by him or with his assent express or implied.[90] But undoubtedly, if a person learns that his name is being used as that of a member of a firm, he is under a duty to prohibit such use, and it is the general rule that when one knows that he is held out as a partner in a particular business he is bound to take such steps as an ordinarily prudent person would take in the circumstances to notify the public as well as individuals to whom he knows the holding out has been given that he is not a partner.[91]

d. Knowledge and Reliance of Third Person. It has been held on the ground of public policy that a person who holds himself out as a partner becomes, as against all the rest of the world, a partner, and that the fact that a person who is seeking to establish a partnership had no knowledge of or did not rely upon such holding out is immaterial.[92] But the rule now generally recognized is that, although one holds himself out or permits himself to be held out to be the partner of another, that does not make him so in fact or render him liable as such, except as to those who are misled by such holding out and who have extended credit on the strength of the supposed relation.[93] But it is to be borne in mind

When persons have held themselves out to the public as partners, others are entitled to act upon the presumption that this relationship continues, until notice is given of its discontinuance[95] precisely as in the case of an actual partnership.[96] While one who holds himself out as a partner or permits himself to be so held out cannot escape the personal liability of a partner,[97] on the other hand an estoppel arising from such holding out cannot be used by the creditor as a means of perpetrating a tort or wrongful act.[98] Although there is some conflict as to whether the property of a holding-out firm should be administered as partnership estate or as the individual property of the true owner, the view which seems to be sustained by the weight of authority is that, as there is no true partnership in such case there is no partnership estate.[99] Of course, if the owner has held out his individual property as belonging to the firm, he will be estopped, as against the firm creditors, from taking advantage of the provisions of an exemption statute, by asserting that it is individual property.[1] It has been decided that a holding out, or nominal, partner can be adjudged a bankrupt as a member of the firm.[2]

5. SUBPARTNERSHIP. One who is not in fact a member of a firm and who has not held himself out as a member does not become liable for the firm's debts, by reason of a contract which entitles him to divide with one of the partners the latter's share of the firm profits.[3] One who holds himself out as a partner and who has signed the partnership articles as a member of the firm cannot escape liability for firm debts by showing that he has acted as a mere dummy for another;[4] but such a transaction should not be dealt with as one of partnership. It is clear that not even a subpartnership exists where one loans money to a firm and acts as agent for it in consideration of receiving one third of its gross profits;[5] nor, where two persons by a written contract agree to carry on a particular busi-

Rights of partnership creditors and creditors of alleged partner.— In a contest between the partnership creditors of an alleged partnership and the individual creditors of one of the alleged partners, if it appears that no partnership actually existed between the parties, although they held themselves out to the world as partners, there is no equity to support the claims of the partnership execution creditors as against the prior execution creditors of the individual partner who is the real owner of the assets. Bixler v. Kresge, 169 Pa. St. 405, 32 Atl. 414, 47 Am. St. Rep. 920.

Property in hands of actual partnership not bound.— "Where a person is ostensibly, but not actually, a member of a partnership, and is therefore under a personal estoppel to deny his liability, it follows that a creditor who by reason of this estoppel can maintain a personal action against him cannot extend this estoppel so as to bind the property which was in the possession and use of the actual partners. The ostensible partner himself has no equity to have this property applied to the payment of the claims upon which he is liable; and therefore the creditors holding those claims, who are merely subrogated to his rights and equities, have no such equity." ness, and in the same instrument one of them and a third person agree to carry on a distinct business.[6]

6. Dormant or Secret Partners — a. Who Are. According to one line of authorities a dormant or secret partner is one who is not known to be a partner, although he may be an active participant in the firm's affairs, and his connection with the business may have contributed to its credit.[7] According to the other line of authorities, a dormant partner is one who takes no part in the business, and whose connection with it is unknown. Both secrecy and inactivity are implied by the term.[8]

b. Necessity For Contract. One cannot be charged as a dormant partner who has not entered into an agreement for that relationship,[9] unless his conduct estops him from showing the absence of a valid contract.[10]

c. Liability. As a dormant partner is one of the proprietors of the business, he is liable to any creditor of the firm, for an obligation incurred during his connection with it, being subject to the rule governing undisclosed principals.[11]

d. Escaping Liability by Retirement. A dormant partner does not need to give notice of his retirement from the firm to escape liability for its obligations thereafter incurred. As his connection with the partnership has never been known, there is no basis for the presumption that the public will be misled by his omission to give notice of his withdrawal.[12]

7. Associations, Defective Corporations, and Promoters — a. Associations. Business associates who have not attempted to become incorporated are partners, if they are the common proprietors of a business carried on by them for profit,

Illustrations.— Where an agreement forming an association stated that it was formed for the mutual benefit and profit of the parties, that the business should be buying, selling, renting, leasing, and mortgaging real estate, and that each of the parties thereto should have a specified interest therein, the legal effect of the agreement was to constitute the parties partners. Kelley v. Bourne, 15 Oreg. 476, 16 Pac. 40. A partnership includes an association of separate owners of several steamboats into a joint concern to run their boats and collect and receive the earnings in a common fund, out of which expenses of all the boats are to be paid. The Swallow, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,665, Olcott 334.

Joint stock companies are generally treated as, and have all the attributes of, a common partnership, yet a mere joint ownership or community of interest in property does not necessarily constitute a partnership, although the income from it is divided. Consolidated Canal Co. v. Peters, 5 Ariz. 80, 46 Pac. 74, 76. A partnership association commonly but inaccurately called a "joint stock company" is the creation of the statutes, and, while it is assimilated in some respects to a corporation, it is nevertheless essentially a partnership. Carter v. Producers' Oil Co., 200 Pa. St. 579, 50 Atl. 167.

How distinguished from partnerships.—A "voluntary unincorporated association," composed of a great number of persons whose interests are evidenced by certificates of stock, and which transacts its business and manages its affairs through named trustees with prescribed powers, is uniformly held to be a partnership, subject to be sued as such, and governed by the laws fixing partnership responsibility. Such associations are distinguishable from "partnerships," as that term is ordinarily used, only in the respect that the death or withdrawal of one or more members does not effect a dissolution, and stock can be bought and sold without affecting the integrity of the concern. Industrial Lumber Co. v. Texas Pine Land Assoc., 31 Tex. Civ. App. 375, 72 S. W. 875.

Public purpose necessary.—An unincorporated association of individuals formed for a public purpose, who received money from the public as a gift, is not a partnership as between themselves, whatever may be its relation as to third persons; but where the association is for private and individual profit or pleasure, with no public object, it is a copartnership, and where the association is for private emoluments or for benevolence, confined exclusively to the association, and in which none others participate, it is then, as between the members, a partnership. Thomas v. Ellmaker, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 98.

b. Defective Corporations.[15] According to one line of decisions, if business associates attempt, but fail, to incorporate themselves, their association is a partnership, although it professes to be a corporation and deals with persons as such,[16] unless they expressly stipulate that they will be liable only as a corporation.[17] Another line of decisions holds that if persons make a bona fide attempt to incorporate under a constitutional statute, and assume and exercise the powers which the pretended corporation was authorized to exercise, and do this unchallenged by the state, they are not liable as partners to those dealing with them as a corporation.[18]

Attempt to change name of corporation.— If the stock-holders of a corporation change its name without complying with the formalities required by law, and continue the business under a new name, they become liable as partners, regardless of whether they intended to become such or not; and in such case it is entirely immaterial that the credit extended to them was to a corporation rather than to a partnership. If, however, the statute under which the incorporation is attempted is unconstitutional,[19] if there is an assumption of powers which a constitutional statute does not confer upon the particular association,[20] if the pretended corporation is a fraud upon the law,[21] or if the defects in the incorporation proceedings are very great[22] there is but little hesitation, even on the part of courts, whose decisions generally are in this second line, to hold those who are associated as such pretending incorporators and stock-holders liable as partners. Still a third class of decisions holds that persons who have united to form a corporation and believe that they have accomplished their purpose, and who thereafter do business as a corporation, are not to be held liable as partners, even though there is no corporate liability, because they never intended to enter into that relation.[23] As between themselves the rights of the stock-holders in a defectively incorporated association should be governed by the supposed charter and the laws of the state relating thereto.[24]

c. Continuance of Business After Expiration of Charter. Stock-holders who carry on the business in the corporate name after the charter has expired are partners if this is done with knowledge that the corporation has ceased to exist, and pursuant to a new agreement between them.[25]

d. Promoters. Persons who act together in organizing corporations, or in conducting the negotiations preliminary to the launching of business associations, See 38 Cent. Dig. tit. "Partnership," § 58.

Reason for rule.— Allowing suits against the stock-holders of defective corporations as partners "involves judicial nullification of franchises and powers enjoyed and exercised by a de facto corporation as a distinct entity recognized by the law, acquiesced in by the State; defeats the corporate character of the contract, changes the relation from that of stockholders to that of partners; substitutes other and new parties to the contract, effects the imposition of an enlarged liability, which they did not assume, but intended to avoid; so understood by the creditor, when he contracted the debt with the corporation as such. The contract is valid and binding on the corporation, which the creditor trusted. No injustice is done him, for all his rights and remedies are preserved by the principle that the corporation and the share-holder are estopped from denying its legal existence, as against him. It will not answer to say that he is not repudiating, but enforcing the contract. He repudiates the party — the corporation — with which he made the contract, and seeks its enforcement against parties who never entered into contractual relation with him." 25. National Union Bank v. Landon, 45 N. Y. 410 [affirming 66 Barb. 189].

Ignorance of charter's expiration.— It has been held that stock-holders are not partners, if the business is continued as that of the are not to be treated as partners, for they are not the proprietors of a common business.[26] Of course they may render themselves liable as partners by holding themselves out as such, during this period, and they may even become true partners, by actually carrying on a common business before incorporating.[27] But the fact that some of them carry on the business, intending to turn it over to the corporation when it is formed, does not create a partnership between all the subscribers for stock, in case a corporation is never organized.[28]

8. What Law Governs. What constitutes a partnership, not only as between the parties, but as to third persons, is a question of law,[29] which is to be determined by the legal rules of the jurisdiction where the business association involved is organized;[30] but any contract made by such a firm and performable in another jurisdiction will be construed and enforced by the legal rules there prevailing.[31] Whether a person has held himself out as a partner is a question to be decided by the law of the place where the acts alleged to constitute the holding out were done.[32]

9. Estoppel of Persons Dealing With a Partnership. One who has dealt with and become indebted to an association, as a partnership, upon being sued therefor, cannot defend upon the ground that the association is not a partnership. Such a defense would operate as a fraud upon them and would enable him to escape the payment of a just obligation.[33] And the maker of a negotiable prom-issory note payable to the order of a firm is estopped from denying to a holder in due course the existence of the payee firm; and the accepter of a bill of exchange is estopped from denying to such a holder the existence of a partnership drawer.[34] By estoppel too a creditor of a firm may lose his right against a retired partner. This result will ensue whenever the creditor induces the retired partner to settle with the continuing partner, on the basis that the creditor has accepted the continuing partner, as his sole debtor, or otherwise misleads the retired partner to his injury.[35]

10. Individuals Doing Business in a Firm-Name. At common law a person may do business in his true name, or under the title of a firm containing his individual name, or under a designation purely fanciful. In either of these cases he may sue, or be sued, upon an obligation connected with the business, in his individual name.[36] In jurisdictions where statutes permit suits by and against a partnership in the firm-name an action will lie against the reputed firm, although but one person is interested in the business.[37] Again, as against creditors such a reputed firm has no claims to recognition. The assets are to be treated as those of the individual proprietor, and the creditors of the business and the creditors of the individual outside the business form but a single class.[38] One who engages in business in a firm-name must give notice of his retirement therefrom, in the same manner in which he would notify his withdrawal from an actual firm, or he will be estopped from denying liability for the debts of his successor.[39]

C. Evidence of Partnership — 1. Burden of Proof and Presumptions — a. In General. The burden of proving a partnership is upon him who alleges its existence.[40] If a person is shown to have been a servant of a firm, the presumption is that such relationship continues, and clear evidence is needed to establish the claim that he has become a partner.[41] A presumption of partnership arises from the use of a name such as is commonly employed when a partnership exists, as "C. & Co.," or "A. & Son";[42] but the presumption is not very strong, unless there is other evidence that these terms designate certain persons who are known to give personal attention to the business or to be financially interested in it.[43] Certainly the presumption from the use of such a style is not necessary and conclusive.[44] The fact that persons are coöwners of property, or that they make a joint contract, does not warrant the infereuce of their partnership.[45] When a partnership is shown to exist, the presumption is that it continues until dissolution is proved.[46]

b. As Between Partners. The burden of proof is on the complainant to establish the existence of a partnership between himself and another.[47] If an agreement for a partnership to be entered upon at once is proved, it will be presumed that acts of the parties relating to the business thus agreed upon are acts done in the prosecution of the partnership; and their rights and duties will be treated as those of partners under such agreement.[48]

c. As Against Third Persons. Persons who sue in the capacity of partners have the burden of proving that they are in fact partners; especially if their right of action is upon commercial paper, of which their partnership is payee or indorsee.[49] If, however, joint plaintiffs establish a cause of action against defendant, without proving a partnership between them, an allegation that they are partners may be treated as surplusage.[50]

d. As Against Partners. While the burden of proving a partnership rests upon a plaintiff, who sues defendants as partners, the partnership relation or liability being denied by any of defendants,[51] he is not bound to do more than make out a prima facie case against them.[52] The burden is then cast upon them of showing that there is no partnership and that they have not held themselves out as partners.[53]

2. ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE — a. In General. The existence of a partnership may be established by oral evidence.[54] If, however, the partnership contract has been reduced to writing, such writing is the best evidence of the contract provisions.[55] Evidence as to the understanding which business associates have of their oral contract is admissible whenever it tends to show that they did not intend to become partners.[56] The business intimacy between persons, and their conduct in connection with a particular enterprise, may be admissible as tending to prove a partnership between them, although each item of such evidence may have lent but slight weight, when separately considered.[57] A belief on plaintiff's part that defendants were partners is inadmissible, unless such belief has a reasonable foundation in defendants' conduct.[58] Nor is hearsay evidence as to the existence of a firm admissible.[59] A judgment duly taken by default against certain persons as partners may be given in evidence against the same persons, when sued by another plaintiff, as an admission of the partnership by them, although an explainable admission.[60] On an issue as to the existence of a partnership, one of the partners is competent to prove that a partnership existed.[61]

b. As Between Partners. Persons may make themselves liable as partners to those who deal with the business without being partners in fact. On the other hand they may be partners in fact, while concealing their true relationship from the world. In either case, when the issue of partnership is raised in a suit between such business associates, evidence is admissible which tends to show that one of the parties was the sole proprietor of the business, while the other was a mere employee,[62] that while title was taken in the name of one, the property was owned by them as partners;[63] or that their conduct of the business was such as to indicate that they were, or that they were not, partners.[64] The answer of a defendant cannot be read as evidence on the question of partnership between him and a deceased person, whose personal representative is a co-defendant.[65] The fact that one who after severance of his business relations with another, on being sued as an individual by a third person, made an affidavit of defense individually is not admissible in a suit between them as to whether they were partners.[66]

c. As Against Third Persons. Persons who sue in the capacity of partners are not compelled to show a written contract of partnership, even when their business consists in buying and selling land;[67] but the articles of partnership, disclosing an agreement for the transaction of a lawful business, each partner sharing in the profits and losses, are admissible as showing a partnership.[68] They may establish the existence of the partnership by the evidence of those who have done business with the firm as such.[69] On the other hand when persons are sued as partners they may show that the partnership had ceased to exist before plaintiff had any dealings with the business.[70] But declarations of one sued as a partner that he was never a member of the firm are inadmissible in his behalf against plaintiff,[71]

unless brought to the latter's knowledge before he became a creditor.[72] A person cannot escape partnership liability by showing that he has never received a share of the profits, if his contract entitled him to such a share.[73]

d. As Against Partners — (i) In General. The existence or non-existence of a partnership is not to be established by the opinions or the belief of parties to a litigation or of their witnesses.[74] It is competent, however, to ask a witness whether defendants were associated together for a described purpose;[75] and also whether they had entered into a described agreement, and were carrying on a business under it.[76] That persons were associated as partners when dealing with others may also be shown by statements or conduct on their part which fairly warrant the inference of their partnership.[77] The fact that persons are partners

Posting hand-bills.— The fact that printed hand-bills with the name of the firm signed thereto were posted at various places in the town where defendant was residing, and that one of them was posted on the door of the house where he boarded, is competent evidence to be submitted to the jury in determining the fact whether or not a partnership existed. Tumlin v. Goldsmith, 40 Ga. 221.

Newspaper article.—A person having knowledge of a newspaper article asserting that he is a member of a partnership, published after an interview with him, who fails to publish a denial must be regarded as holding himself out as a partner and the article is admissible on the issue of his membership in the firm. Stevens v. Walton, 17 Colo. App. 440, 68 Pac. 834.

Letter written before debt created.— A let-

in one place or in one line of business does not tend to prove them partners elsewhere, or in a distinct trade or venture.[78] A defendant is a competent witness to deny a partnership or to explain circumstances indicating that he is a member in a particular firm.[79]

(II) General Reputation. Evidence of general reputation is inadmissible to prove a partnership,[80] except in connection with evidence that such report was known to the persons sought to be charged.[81] Evidence that a particular person has the general reputation of being a partner in a specified firm may be admissible, however, in connection with duly established facts, to show that he has per-

ter to plaintiff from the attorneys of defendant written before the debt was created and without reference to crediting him as a partner is inadmissible on the question of partnership. Phillips v. Trowbridge Furniture Co., 92 Ga. 596, 20 S. E. 4.

Reason for rule.— To admit such evidence would be to open a door to fraud; for a trader in poor credit would be tempted to circulate the rumor that a man of wealth was a member of his firm in order to help his credit, and his creditors would be tempted to further it, so that they might collect their debts. Brown v. Crandall, 11 Conn. 92. Moreover, whether a particular contract between business associates creates a partnership is often a difficult legal question, and one certainly upon which common rumor is most untrustworthy. Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 81 [reversed on other grounds in 22 Wend. 264].

The reports of a commercial agency are not admissible to prove a partnership, unless knowledge or means of knowledge of them is brought home to the party attempted to be charged. Campbell v. Hastings, 29 Ark. 512.

Evidence that it was not generally known, in the place of the partnership, that defendant was a partner of a certain house is admissible, where the question is whether plaintiff knew that defendant was a partner in order to make him liable. Bernard v. Torrance, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 383.

mitted himself to be held out as a partner, and that such holding out induced plaintiff to become a creditor of the firm.[82]

(III) Admissions—(A) In General. An admission of the existence of an alleged partnership is always a relevant fact against the one by whom it was made;[83] and the several admissions of the persons sued as partners are equivalent to a joint statement by all that they are in partnership.[84] The conduct of a party in connection with a particular business may amount to an admission of his part-

Existence of partnership articles.—Partnership may be proved by the admissions of parties, whether there are articles of partnership or not. Widdifield v. Widdifield, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 245; Cutler v. Thomas, 25 Vt. 73. A partnership may be proved by parol evidence that the alleged partners severally admitted the fact, or held themselves out as such, although it appears on the trial that there was a written agreement, and no notice to produce it is proved. nership therein.[85] Ordinarily an admission is not conclusive evidence of a partnership, even against the person making it;[86] but if it is contained in a written instrument executed by him he will not be allowed to contradict it by oral evidence;[87] nor can he disprove an admission by a declaration of a contrary character.[88] While admissions are receivable against a person making them, they are not available in his behalf,[89] nor in behalf of one set of creditors against another.[90] partner to disprove a partnership.[98] And it has been held that in a suit by a partnership against an indorser, the ledger of a firm is evidence of the partnership.[99]

e. As to Dormant Partners. If the existence of the firm is proved, evidence of general reputation is competent on the issue whether a particular member was a dormant partner.[1] Evidence that one has entered into a conspiracy with others to defraud the creditors of a firm does not tend to show that he is a dormant partner;[2] nor is an admission by one person that he is a secret partner of another evidence of a partnership as against the latter.[3]

3. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence — a. In General. Although the existence of a partnership is a fact, to be proved by him who alleges it, and not to be established by mere surmise or innuendo,[4] it may be proved by one witness,[5] and it may be inferred from indirect evidence.[6] When the party alleging the partnership claims to have been a partner, he is in a position to establish its existence by direct evidence, and is generally required to furnish such proof,[7] while a third person is not under such a duty.[8] Even third persons, however, are bound to do more than show that the alleged partners were jointly interested in certain property,[9]

dead.[16] Parties who have admitted that they are in partnership, either by express statement or by conduct, will be held to that admission,[17] in the absence of fraud or mistake.[18] An agreement for a partnership, so long as it remains executory, is not evidence of a partnership.[19] Nor is an agreement which provides simply for joint ownership of property,[20] or joint interest in a contract or venture.[21] But if the agreement relates to a going business enterprise, to which the parties mutually contribute capital or service or both, and in the profits of which they are mutually to share, it makes out at least a prima facie case of partnership.[22] The fact that persons are not partners may be proved by the introduction of a written agreement in which it is expressly stated that such relation does not exist between them.[23] The use of the word "partnership" by a person, in his testimony in describing the arrangement between himself and another, is not conclusive against him of the existence of a partnership; but he may show that he used it as a popular and not as a technical term.[24]

c. As Against Third Persons. When a suit is brought by a partnership, or where a defense is based on the fact that the obligation sued upon is that of a firm and not of the individual defendant, the partnership relation must be established by such evidence as is generally sufficient to prove material allegations in civil actions.[25] A prima facie case of partnership is established by evidence that the members of the alleged firm held themselves out as partners,[26] or that the other party to the suit contracted with them as a firm.[27]

d. As Against Partners. In determining whether as against partners a partnership exists the general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence[28] are applicable. A prima facie case of partnership is made out against persons, associated in carrying on a particular business, by evidence that they are sharing its profits pursuant to an agreement between them,[29] by evidence that they have partnership between them and thus defeat an action for such services brought by the attorney alone. Bishop v. Hall, 9 Gray (Mass.) 430.

common proprietor with his associate of a business which they carry on for mutual profit.[35]

D. Commencement and Duration[36] — 1. Time When Partnership Begins. So long as a mere agreement to form a partnership exists between parties the partnership itself has not commenced,[37] although the conduct of the parties may be such as to estop them from denying that it has begun.[38] When the agreement between the parties provides for a present partnership and contemplates an immediate commencement of a firm business, the relationship is presumed to arise at the time of the execution of the agreement,[39] although some matters of detail are thereafter to be adjusted.[40] This is especially true when capital has been paid in and expended preparatory to the prosecution of the partnership enterprise.[41] When, however, the agreement provides for a partnership at a fixed date, in the future, or upon the performance of certain conditions precedent by any of the parties, the partnership will not commence, until that time arrives,[42] or until the conditions are performed or waived.[43]

2. Term Fixed by Agreement. When the parties have clearly expressed their intention that their partnership shall last for a definite period, no question of difficulty can arise as to the term for which it is organized;[44] and a stipulation is valid which calls for the continuance of the firm during a specified term, even though one of the partners dies.[45] Oftentimes, however, the parties do not state their intentions explicitly. In such event the term of the partnership is a matter of inference from the contract provisions and surrounding circumstances. If the partnership has for its object the completion of a specified piece of work,[46] or the conduct of a business which ordinarily continues through a particular season,[47] it will be presumed that the parties intended the relation should continue until the object has been accomplished.[48] The mere fact, however, that a firm has taken a lease of property for a period of years, or has contracted debts payable at the end of a period of years, does not warrant the inference that the partnership has been formed for that period.[49] When no term is fixed by the parties, the partnership is deemed one at will, and any partner may determine the partnership at any time by giving notice of his intention so to do to all the other partners.[50]

3. EXTENSION OR RENEWAL. A partnership under written articles may be renewed by an oral agreement of the parties.[51] An extension or renewal of a partnership beyond its original term, although binding upon the partners, is not, however, binding upon their sureties, unless assented to by the latter.[52]

4. CONTINUATION AFTER TERM. In case a partnership for a fixed term is continued thereafter, without any new agreement between the parties, the original partnership contract remains in force,[53] so far as its provisions are consistent with the incidents of a partnership at will.[54] If a partnership is continued as a going business, after the term for which it was organized, it is not to be treated as resting on the daily reiterated consent of the parties, but as a continuing partnership, subject to termination only after notice and under the rules of law relating to the dissolution of partnerships.[55] Whether a partnership is continued after the expiration of the prescribed term, or whether the parties are engaged in settling up the firm business only, is a question to be determined by the conduct of the parties.[56] Generally speaking the articles of partnership do not operate to introduce the executors of a deceased partner into the firm, or to secure to his estate the benefits of the partnership relation after his death, without express provision therefor;[57] and a trade duly continued by surviving partners to wind up the business is not the partnership trade, but in the nature of a trust.[58]

5. Evidence. The burden of proving that a partnership was organized for a definite term is upon him who alleges it.[59] In case, however, a partnership is shown to exist, there is a presumption of its continuance, until notice of its dissolution is given to those dealing with it.[60] Even as between the partners, there is a presumption that the partnership continues to exist, until the object for which it was organized has been accomplished.[61] When the partners continue to act after the agreed term as though the partnership relation continued, they will ordinarily be bound by such appearances.[62] On the other hand, if their conduct indicates that a dissolution has taken place, they will be treated as though the dissolution were actual.[63] The declarations of a partner that the relation has been dissolved, or that it still continues, are admissible against himself, but not against his copartner, unless the latter has acquiesced therein.[64]

IV. THE FIRM, ITS NAME, POWERS, AND PROPERTY.

A. Firm-Name — 1. In General. At common law a partnership may be validly organized, without any provision in the agreement as to the name under which it is to do business.[65] When a firm-name is fixed upon, it may be the full individual name of any partner;[66] the surnames of all the partners;[67] or the surname of one or more of the members with the addition of "& Co.";[68] or it may consist of individual names, wholly distinct from the names of any of the members;[69] or it may be a name purely fanciful.[70] But whatever the firm-name may be, it is simply a convenient abbreviation of the individual names of the partners; and hence the signature of the firm-name is in law the signature of the several partners' names;[71] and the several signatures of the partners to a firm contract has the same legal effect as the signature of the firm-name thereto.[72] Partnership contracts are perfectly valid when made in the firm-name, even though such name does not contain the names of any of the partners.[73] A bill of sale, or a mortgage of personal property, to or by a partnership in its firm style is as valid and effective as though made to or by an individual in his proper name.[74]

2. STATUTORY PROVISIONS AS TO FIRM-NAME. In some jurisdictions by statute it is made an offense to transact business in the name of a partner not interested in the firm, or to use the designation "and Company" or "& Co." when it does not represent an actual partner.[75] Other statutes provide that every partnership transacting business under a fictitious or assumed name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, must file in a designated clerk's office a certificate stating the names in full of all the partners, and publish the same in a prescribed manner.[76] Still other statutes require designated kinds of partnership associations to register and publish either a certificate of the partnership, or a declaration of the names of the members.[77] These statutes differ in the consequences attached to their violation.[78] As a rule these statutes are strictly construed in favor of the partners, especially those which are highly penal.[79] These statutes are generally held not to apply to partnerships which are organized and have their principal place of business outside of the enacting jurisdiction.[80]

3. Changing Name. The mere change in the name of a firm does not affect its rights or liabilities.[81] When a firm-name has been agreed upon it cannot be changed without the consent of all the partners.[82] If no name has been fixed by agreement, the partner charged with the duty or clothed with the authority to sign contracts for the firm may bind all the members by such signature as he may choose to employ.[83]

4. ship.[85] The law does not permit persons to monopolize the use of their names in any business.[86] At the same time the law does protect a firm against the dishonest use of its firm style, even by persons of like name. Such a use is made of the firm style, where that had come to indicate the source of manufacture of particular goods, and it is employed by the new firm in such a way as to pass off its own goods as those of the old firm.[87]

B. Scope and Extent of Partnership — 1. Universal Partnership. Doubt has been expressed as to the existence of a partnership which is strictly universal.[88] A partnership not embracing all the property of each partner is not a universal partnership.[89] The relation of husband and wife, under Mexican law, is said to be that of partnership.[90]

2. Determining the Scope of Partnership. It may be said in general terms that the scope of a partnership is determined by the language of the partnership agreement, and the ordinary usages of the business in which the firm is engaged.[91]

3. The Firm as an Entity. While it has been stated broadly that a partnership is but a relation and is not a legal being distinct from the members who compose it,[92] still the law does take note on a wide scale of partnership as a legal entity and regards it as a unit both of rights and obligations,[93] and there is a general tendency at this day to complete the recognition of a partnership as a body of itself with its own means appointed to its own debts.[94] It is the scheme of the United States Bankruptcy Act[95] to treat partnership as an entity, which may be adjudged a bankrupt, irrespective of any adjudication of the individual partners as bankrupts.[96]

4. CONSTRUCTION OF AGREEMENT. In determining what acts are within the scope of the partnership business, a court will first examine the articles of agreement with a view of discovering the objects which the partners have declared they wished to attain by the partnership. If these declarations are open to different interpretations, the court will treat the language of the agreement as having been used in the sense in which it is generally understood by those engaged in like business.[97] If the language is unequivocal, the court will act in accordance with

C. Powers of Firm as a Body. While, as we have seen,[2] the law does not recognize the firm as a legal entity, it does deem it capable of exercising powers as a body, and gives effect to contracts made in the firm-name, and to transactions entered into by the firm in its partnership capacity.[3] A partnership is so far a distinct entity that it may as such become a member of another firm,[4] and a partnership as a body may act as agent for other persons.[5]

D. What Is Firm Property — 1. In General. Everything which is contributed by any partner to the capital stock of the firm, either upon its organization or thereafter, becomes firm property;[6] and so do the profits of the business as well purchase of real property for the account of others rather than in buying and selling for the firm, and affords a presumptive limitation on the scope of the firm business); Alston v. Sims, 3 Eq. genius.[10] A clear engagement on his part for such a result must be shown.[11] The fact that one partner sells property, or interest therein, to his copartner, or mortgages it to secure his individual debt to his copartner, or becomes indebted to his copartner, does not make the purchase-price, or the mortgage or the debt a firm asset.[12] If the firm is solvent, firm property may be used, with the consent of all the partners, to pay the individual debts of a partner.[13]

2. PERSONALTY HELD BY A PARTNER. Whether personal property, which is owned by one of the partners when the partnership is formed and which is used thereafter for firm purposes, has been contributed to the firm capital, and has thus become firm property, or remains the individual property of the said partner, is to be determined by the partnership agreement and the conduct of the parties thereunder.[14] Personalty, purchased with partnership funds, or upon which partnership money or service has been expended, even where taken in the name of one partner, will be presumed to belong to the firm,[15] although such presumption may be rebutted.[16]

3. INTENT OF PARTIES. In the absence of a statutory provision regulating the title, or of a fraudulent purpose in taking title in a particular manner, the intention of the parties, if clearly disclosed, will determine whether property connected with a partnership business is owned by the firm, or by its individual members.[17]

been purchased with firm funds, or the firm has expended labor or money in improving it, or in putting it into its present condition, especially if the property is useful to the firm in its ordinary operations and is employed therein, it is generally to be regarded as partnership property.[18]

5. Use of Property. When a partner puts into the partnership only the use of certain property, its ownership is not vested in the firm;[19] but if the firm has or exercises the right of using the property up in the ordinary course of the partnership, or of disposing of it and using its proceeds, there is ample evidence of an intent that it shall become firm property.[20]

2. Title in One Partner. Where title to real property, acquired by or for a partnership, is taken in the name of one of the partners, there is a resulting trust in favor of the partnership, which may be established by parol evidence, so that the land may be charged with the interest of the partnership.[23] But where land is purchased in the name of one partner and not used for partnership purposes,[24] or is purchased by one partner in his own name and leased to the partnership,[25] or where a lease taken by a member of a partnership is not taken by him expressly for the firm, but demises the premises to him individually,[26] the partnership has no interest in the land so purchased or leased. And it has been held that, as between a partnership and individual creditors, a deed to one only of several partners confers on him both equitable and legal title, although it may be established by his admissions that the title was taken for the partnership.[27]

In Pennsylvania the general rule is "that in order to affect the title or possession of land it is not competent to show by parol that a deed to two persons as tenants in common was purchased and paid for by them as partners and was partnership property. Purchasers and creditors alike may rely upon the title to real estate as shown by the record, and having done so the law will not permit their rights acquired on the faith of the title as thus disclosed to be defeated by parol evidence. When parties take title to land as tenants in common and place it upon record, the act, so far as it may affect purchasers and creditors without notice, must be considered as a declaration by the owners of the character in which they intend to hold the property." Presumption when title in one partner.— Where a firm occupies land, the record title to which is in one of the partners, the presumption is that the firm's occupation is subordinate to such partner's title, and a mortgage given by such partner upon real and personal property occupied by the firm and which the firm accepts the benefit of without questioning the right of the partner and record owner to execute it, may be enforced against the property of the firm embraced therein. Rep. 508 (holding that where the partners used their premises as nursery gardeners, the land became, necessarily from the nature of the business, a part of the firm stock).

tion in the firm's name, as well as used for firm purposes, the intention of the parties to make it firm property becomes clear.[52] On the other hand, if the land is used by the partners for their individual benefit and enjoyment, such use will indicate their intention not to make it firm property, although there may be apparent confusion of their interests.[53]

8. FIRM REAL ESTATE AS PERSONALTY — a. English and Canadian Rule. In England the rule as laid down in a number of cases[54] that partnership realty is to be considered as converted into personalty for all purposes has been enacted into a statute,[55] and the doctrine of the English cases has been approved in Canada.[56]

b. American Rule — (I) IN GENERAL. The rule prevailing in this country is that partnership real estate, unless it is otherwise expressly or impliedly agreed, retains its character as realty between the partners themselves and also between a surviving partner and the personal representatives of a deceased partner, except to the extent that it may be required to pay partnership obligations or to pay any balance due from one partner to another; but that, to the extent that partnership real estate is required for these purposes, the share of each partner is embraced in a trust implied by law, which equity in enforcing treats as converted into personalty.[57]
