of the claimants to the land depended upon the nicest observance of every legal formality.[50] A confirmation was limited to the extent of the claim made, and the decree could not be used to maintain title to other land embraced within the boundaries of the grant;[51] but a decree of the district court confirming a claim could be amended in advance of the official survey, so as to give only the quantity of land granted.[52]

6. Court of Private Land Claims. In 1891 congress established a court called the court of private land claims, to hear and decide on private claims under Spanish and Mexican grants to lands in territory ceded to the United States by Mexico.[53] This court was a mere creature of statute with prescribed and limited powers,[54] and its jurisdiction did not extend to claims which had been theretofore lawfully acted upon and decided by congress or under its authority,[55] or to the determination of questions of right or title between individuals.[56] It had no general equity jurisdiction,[57] and the fact that congress had repeatedly confirmed similar grants could not operate to justify the court in the adjudication of a case not coming within the terms of the law of its creation.[58] The holder of a complete title under the former sovereignty had the right to present his title for confirmation, although he was not bound to do so;[59] but unless imperfect claims were presented to the court within the time limited by statute they were barred.[60] It was the intention of congress that before a decision by the court all those asserting claims in the land adverse to the United States, under the grant relied on, should be made parties and heard in support of its validity.[61] It must appear, in order to the confirmation of a grant by the court of private land claims, not only that the title was lawful and regularly derived, but that if the grant was not complete and perfect the claimant could, by right and not by grace, have demanded that it should be made perfect by the former government had the territory not been acquired by the United States,[62] and the court could not confirm a grant made upon any condition or requirement either precedent or subsequent unless it appeared that such condition or requirement had been performed within the time and in the manner stated in the grant.[63] Where the papers and other evidence failed to show the existence of any Mexican grant, perfect or imperfect, at the time of the acquisition of the country by the United States, the court of private claims was not entitled to confirm to the petitioner any land whatever.[64] The court could confirm a grant only to the extent of eleven square leagues or so much land as could lawfully be granted under the laws in force at the time of the grant.[65] Confirmation of a grant to persons claiming to derive title by conveyances and legal succession from the grantee might be made to the claimants alone, without making it more generally to the "assigns and legal representatives of the original grantee."[66] The decrees of the court confirming claims were defined by a survey under the direction of the land department, and title to an imperfect grant did not pass out of the United States until confirmation by the court of such survey.[67] Testimony lawfully and regularly received by the surveyor-general or the commissioner of the general land office upon any claim presented to them was admissible in evidence in the court of private land claims when the person who testified was dead.[68] If it appeared that the land decreed to the claimant or any part thereof had been granted by the United States to another person, the title of such person remained valid notwithstanding the confirmation,[69] but the court could render judgment in favor of the claimant against the United States for the value of such land.[70] This indemnity could not be adjudged when no such claim was made by the petition;[71] but although the statute contemplated that the names of the adverse claimants should be set forth in the original petition, that notice should be given them, and that the claim for a money judgment for the lands

Release of interest of government to person apparently having good title.—A personal judgment against the United States was authorized only when such lands had been sold or granted as public lands for a consideration which equitably belonged to the owner of the land, and not where the government had merely released its interest to one apparently holding a good title under a Spanish or Mexican grant which subsequently turned out to be invalid by reason of an older or better title. given to them should be incorporated therein, relief asked by a subsequent petition would not be refused solely on the ground that these things were not done if sufficient excuse for the omission were shown.[72] An appeal lay from the court of private land claims to the supreme court of the United States;[73] but the decision as to the sufficiency of the evidence of possession under a Spanish land grant would not be reviewed merely because the evidence was such that different inferences might be drawn therefrom.[74] The court of private land claims was to exist for a very limited time only, but its existence was extended from time to time until it finally ceased to exist on June 30, 1904.[75]

7. Location and Survey. The acts of congress generally required a survey of the land by officers of the United States land office as an essential step in the completion of title to lands claimed under grants from former sovereignties.[76] The survey should conform to the decree of confirmation,[77] and correspond with the concession,[78] and could not be extended to other lands because of a deficiency Boundaries should be located in accordance with testimony of attesting witnesses.— U. S. v. Graham, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,246, Hoffm. Dec. 67, Hoffm. Op. 60.

A junior grantee has no right to insist that his land shall be surveyed so as to overlap an older grant for which a patent has been issued by the United States where the land patented lies within the exterior boundaries of the senior grant as shown by the diseño thereof; and especially where the junior grantee, without such overlapping, will obtain the full quantity granted by the former government. U. S. v. Soto, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,354.

Discrepancy as to mark.— In view of the well-known looseness and inaccuracy with which business was transacted in California under the Mexican government, the fact that a decree of concession made by a Mexican governor referred to a certain tree as a live oak, when in fact the only tree reasonably answering the other calls of the description was a white oak, is not sufficient ground for overthrowing a survey based on such white oak, especially when there is other evidence identifying it as the one referred to in the act of possession. U. S. v. Enwright, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,054.

General recognition of boundary.— Where a grantee reserved to himself a given quantity of the lands granted and sold the excess, and the purchasers of the excess themselves laid off the quantity reserved, and in so doing extended the line beyond the limits of the grant to include a strip of which the grantee had long maintained possession, the ancient possession and cultivation of this strip, the general recognition of the boundary by the grantee's neighbors, and impliedly by the former government in granting the adjoining ranch according to such boundary, and the act of the purchasers of the excess in making the location, together with the fact that the United States did not complain thereof, were sufficient to warrant the court in confirming a survey which adopted the boundary in question. U. S. v. Narvaez, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,855.

Conformity to act of juridical possession.— The survey should conform to the measurements contained in the record of juridical possession, which, under the Mexican law, established the location. Graham v. U. S., 4 Wall. (U. S.) 259, 18 L. ed. 334.

When non-conformity not cause for setting aside.— Where on confirmation of a Mexican grant a survey is made of half a league from a larger quantity, as selected by the claimant, it will not be set aside upon the application of his grantee, because it did not conform to one of the calls of the grant, where the overplus has been surveyed into lots and settled and improved by parties claiming under the government. Protection of existing rights.— Where a decree locating a grant rested on the idea of conforming as near as might be, and in a general way, to the supposed intention of the grantor, the court was not precluded from thereafter modifying in a slight degree the directions of the lines so as to obtain a location by which existing rights acquired in good faith might be protected. Deeds as opposed to residence and improvement.— The mere execution by a grantee from the Mexican government of deeds of parts of the tract within the exterior boundaries does not show a location of the grant as including the land so conveyed, to be adopted in prefer-such a grant should be located.[84] As a general rule the survey should locate the land in one body,[85] in a compact form,[86] so that the surplus left to the United States should be in one connected piece,[87] and in conformity to the lines of the public surveys,[88] although allowance was to be made for the character of the country,[89] and a large discretion was left to the surveyor.[90] If no particular limits were given in a grant, the land should be surveyed so as to interfere as little as possible with the rights of others.[91] An exclusion of a bay from the survey of a Mexican grant embraces not only the land covered by the navigable waters of the bay but all the land within its exterior lines, including an island almost covered with water at high tide.[92] A survey caused to be made by the owners of a grant under the Texas statute confirming land titles was void as to any excess over the grant,[93] and on the other hand the surveyor was not authorized to include less land than that embraced in the original grant.[94] The survey and location of a grant confirmed by the court were under the control of such court.[95] At first the district courts had no jurisdiction to supervise the action of the surveyor-general in surveying claims confirmed by the commissioners,[96] but such jurisdiction as to pending and future claims was given them by the act of 1860.[97] Where a decree of confirmation had been entered, and a survey under it had been made, on which a patent was about to issue, which survey was objected to as erroneous, it was the duty of the court to direct the survey to be returned to it, that it might hear and determine the questions of location and boundary which might be raised,[98] and when the court had ordered a survey into court for exam-ence to an election of location shown by the previous erection of a house and corrals on another part of the tract, and by the cultivation of the adjacent land, and residence thereon for a number of years. U. S. v. Castro, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,750.

ination, its jurisdiction over such survey and any new survey directed by it continued until the survey of the claim was finally disposed of.[99] In a proceeding to correct a survey, the federal district court had no jurisdiction to review and reverse the final decree, whereby the genuineness and validity of the claim was established,[1] nor could it assume the invalidity of the original grant.[2] When the dividing line between two ranchos has been fixed in proceedings for the confirmation of one of them, to which the claimant of the other was a party, such line should not be disturbed on exceptions to the official survey of the latter rancho, when this would involve the issue of overlapping patents creating certain litigation, and a possible loss by the claimant of the former rancho of part of the land confirmed to him in such proceedings.[3] Proceedings to confirm surveys of Mexican grants by the federal district court were of a judicial nature, and in the nature of proceedings in rem, and the judgments therein are conclusive upon all parties thereto, and those who were required to make themselves parties.[4] The approval of the survey by the court established the fact that it was in conformity with the decree of confirmation,[5] or if the decree was for quantity only, that the survey was authorized by it,[6] and the survey was then conclusive as to the location of the land,[7] as against all floating grants not previously located.[8] The approval of a final survey of a Mexican grant by the United States courts was not equivalent to, and could not have the force of, a patent, unless such effect was expressly given to it by statute.[9] A special statute authorizing persons to "contest the correctness" of surveys gave the court no authority to vacate its decrees or to determine the correctness of the survey by any other rules or upon any other considerations than those by which it was governed in ordinary cases.[10] On an appeal from a decree of the district court, confirming the survey of a private land claim, the only question was whether the decree of the land commissioners con-

Where the board of commissioners, in confirming a claim, were misled by the compass marks, or by any other accurate representation on the diseño, so that they described boundaries, which, when run upon the ground, were found to include a different tract from that described in the grant and delineated on the diseño, the error should be rectified by the court when the survey was submitted for approval. firming the claim was fairly carried into effect by the survey and the decree of the district court.[11] On appeal the order of the court permitting an appearance and contest of the survey should be set forth in the record, and only those persons who by such order are made parties contestant will be heard on appeal.[12] Pending an appeal from an order confirming a survey of a grant of a specific quantity within a larger area, the grantee was entitled as against third persons without title to possession of all the land within the exterior boundaries.[13] Under the act of 1851 the commissioner of the general land office had jurisdiction to revise or set aside a survey made by the United States surveyor-general.[14] Where a survey appeared to be incorrect, it was proper to reject it and order a new one,[15] and while the survey proceedings remained in fieri in the land department, the courts could not enjoin the obliteration of an old survey or the making of a new one.[16] On a final determination in favor of the validity of a French or Spanish grant of lands in Louisiana the secretary of the interior had authority to set aside former surveys of the land made by the land department, and to cause a new survey of the grant to be made.[17] Previous notice of the making of the survey directed by a decree of confirmation was not necessary;[18] but under some statutes, after completion of the survey, notice of the fact was required to be published in the newspapers for a certain time,[19] and the plat was required to remain in the land office, open to inspee-

Under the act of congress of June 14, 1860, relating to public lands in California, the publication and approval by the surveyor-general of a plat and survey of a Mexican grant has the same effect as a patent, in the

tion for a designated period.[20] If no application was made within such time for a return of the survey into the district court for examination and adjudication, or if application was made and refused, the survey became final;[21] but if the survey was ordered into court it did not become final until it was approved, modified, or reformed by the decree of the court.[22] A person having no title could not question the correctness of the location of a confirmation made by the United States surveyor;[23] but where the original grantee of lands had parted with his entire interest, parties who had obtained derivative titles pendente lite from such original grantee were entitled to contest a survey, although the United States, the original grantee and the purchasers of two-thirds of the original grantee's interest, consented to its approval.[24] Individuals could object to the location of the grant only through the United States district attorney and in the name of the United States.[25] The United States could not object to the correctness of a boundary line in an approved survey if it had not appealed from the decree approving the survey.[26] Any objections to the survey were waived by accepting a patent for the land,[27] and the claimants of a grant were estopped to object that parts of the land, which they had sold and conveyed as part of their rancho, were not within its limits, for the purpose of completing their quantity by embracing in the survey lands not conveyed by them.[28] Where notice was given to all parties having or claiming to have any interest in the survey and location of the claim, to appear by a day designated and intervene for the protection of their interests, and on the day designated certain parties appeared and the default of all other parties was entered, the opening of such default with respect to any party subsequently applying for leave to appear and intervene was a matter resting in the discretion of the district court, and its action on the subject was not subject to revision on appeal.[29] The official survey of a land grant made after it had been confirmed by congress was binding upon the owner of the grant[30] and the United States,[31] and conclusive as against any collateral attack in the courts.[32] But under a statute relating to the location of private land grants, and providing that the surveyor-general of the district where the claim was located, on satisfactory proof, should issue to the claimant or his legal representative a certificate of location, his decision was not conclusive of the rights of the real owner.[33] Where a survey ordered by the land office was executed according to the order, it gave a prima facie title and the United States was bound by it until it was set aside at the general land office,[34] but the title derived its validity and vitality from the confirmatory act itself, and not from the subsequent location and survey.[35] Where the statute prescribed proceedings after the survey, by which it was to be made final, such survey was of no binding force until established in the mode prescribed;[36] but a survey duly returned and approved or confirmed fixed conclusively the boundaries and location of the land, as to the parties to the proceeding.[37] Limits established by the surveyor and commissioners of the United States could not, however, affect individual rights having a previous existence,[38] nor could a plat of survey, never returned to the proper office, bind third persons.[39] A survey and its approval by the surveyor-general did not conclude the government as to title, but until a patent issued the title was still in the government unless the claim has precise boundaries and has been confirmed by congress, which confirmation was equivalent to a patent.[40] The survey and location of a claim, after the death of the person to whom it had been confirmed did not defeat the confirmation, but was cumulative evidence of title inuring to the benefit of his heirs.[41] Where the decree of the board of commissioners, of the district court, or of the supreme court, locating a grant, was specific and plain, and it had long been accepted as finally and definitely locating the land, and large interests had been acquired on the faith of this finality, the location ought not to be disturbed, except in the case of manifest error, and on clear proof of the incorrectness of the location.[42] The confirmation by the commissioners appointed to ascertain the rights of persons, of a claim for a specified number of acres between certain boundaries, could not be reduced by errors committed by officers of the government, in surveying and locating the claim.[43] Where a surveyor surveyed and platted a tract of twice the area which he was directed to survey, it was held that the error could be corrected by the courts even after the issue of a patent.[44] Error in the survey is not shown by a mere discrepancy between the quantity of land as surveyed and the quantity as claimed before the recorder, nor by the mere fact that there is a deficiency of land in a block to satisfy all the claims proved before the recorder;[45] neither does the fact that confirmations are represented by surveys to embrace the same land impeach the correctness of the surveys, but in case of such conflict the proper locations must be determined by the history of the claims.[46] A survey which was disapproved had no binding effect.[47] The survey of a claim, made by the surveyor-general after the final confirmation of the claim by the supreme court, on which a patent had issued, was not invalid because the mandate issued by such court, directing further proceedings to be had in the district court, was not filed in the latter court;[48] nor was the validity of a survey affected by the interest in the grant of the deputy surveyor who made it, where the survey had been subsequently approved by the proper officials.[49]

App. 413, and following Langlois v. Crawford, 59 Mo. 456; Aubuchon v. Ames, 27 Mo. 89] (holding that under the terms of the act of congress of April 29, 1816, confirming certain land titles in Louisiana and Missouri, the legal title passed to the confirmee without the aid of a patent); Fenwick v. Gill, 38 Mo. 510 (holding that when an act of congress confirming land grants authorized the commissioner to issue patents, the patents were not absolutely necessary for the purpose of showing title); Snyder v. Sickles, 98 U. To what cases statute applicable.— The act of congress of June 6, 1874, entitled "An Act to obviate the necessity of issuing patents for certain private land-claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes," established, the patent should issue as a matter of course;[53] but as such issuance was an official act the confirmee could not be regarded as in default because of delay therein.[54] It was, however, the duty of the land officers to see that the grant had been properly confirmed or the survey become final,[55] and they might withhold a patent where the statute did not appear to have been complied with.[56] So a patent issued while an appeal to the supreme court from the decree of the district court confirming the grant was pending was void.[57] Two patents could not issue on one grant.[58] The patent must conform to the act or decree of confirmation,[59] and the survey.[60] The patent was in the nature of a conveyance by way of quitclaim,[61] passing whatever interest the United States possessed in the prem-applied only to cases where the party interested was by law entitled to a patent. Snyder v. Sickles, 98 U. S. 203, 25 L. ed. 97.

53. King v. Martin, 5 Mart. (La.) 197, holding that the passage of the act of congress of March 2, 1805, eo instanti gave the settlers within its purview a title to their lands, and their right to a patent depended on no contingency, but it was to issue as a matter of course on their showing themselves to be within the act.

Opposition to patent.—A bill in equity by certain heirs and in behalf of the other heirs of the original beneficiaries under a Mexican land grant to enjoin the commissioner of the general land office and the secretary of the interior from issuing a patent for the lands to a town, or, if a patent has been issued, for a decree declaring its invalidity, is demurrable for want of proper parties, the town and its inhabitants being necessary parties to the bill. Maese v. Hermann, 17 App. Cas. (D. C.) 52 [affirmed in 183 U. S. 572, 22 S. Ct. 91, 46 L. ed. 335], holding further that where such town has not been incorporated, a sufficient number of the proprietors claiming under the grant embracing the town as will fairly represent the common interests of all interested should be made parties defendant.

Confirmation unfairly obtained.—The commissioner of the general land office might withhold a patent when satisfied that confirmation of a grant had been unfairly obtained from the commissioners, and might perhaps order a new survey when that for the basis of a patent varied from the boun aries in the original title. 59. Doe v. Greit, 8 Ala. 930 (holding that if a patent issued under an act of congress describes the land by other metes and bounds than the act designates, it is void as to the excess which it professes to convey); United Land Assoc. v. Knight, 85 Cal. 448, 23 Pac. 267, 24 Pac. 818 (holding that the officer who issued a patent which covered land not included in the decree of confirmation, but included within the metes and bounds of the survey, could not by the issuance of such patent conclusively adjudicate on his power over such land, and the patent could not overcome evidence that the land was not within the decree).

60. U. S. v. Hancock, 30 Fed. 851, holding that in the absence of satisfactory proof of fraud in procuring the survey, or its approval, or the issue of the patent based upon it, where the decree of the board of land commissioners created by the act of congress of March 3, 1851, confirming a Mexican grant, was for a tract of land with designated boundaries, and not for a specific quantity, a patent based upon a survey following the boundaries of the decree was not void because it embraced a tract containing more than thirty thousand acres, or very nearly seven Mexican leagues, while the grant was for one square league and no more.

Including lands covered by prior patent.—Where a patent issued on a survey of a grant was returned by the grantee to the commissioner of the general land office, who ordered another survey, the patent issued on the last survey was not rendered invalid because it purported to convey lands covered by the prior patent as well as those not covered thereby. Adam v. Norris, 103 U. S. 591, 26 L. ed. 583.

Land included in two surveys.—A patent for lands under a confirmed grant and final survey, showing on its face that it includes lands embraced in a previously approved final survey of another confirmed grant, is not void as to that portion of the lands included in both surveys. Yates v. Smith, 40 Cal. 662.

Discrepancy between survey and decree of confirmation.—If a decree of confirmation of a Mexican grant does not accord in its description of the land with the approved survey, and the patent conveys the land as described in the survey, the claimant's title is confined to the land as therein described, even if the decree of confirmation is inserted in the patent. The patent is only evidence of the preëxisting title made perfect by the confirmation

ises;[62] but it was merely documentary evidence, having the dignity of a record, of the existence of the grantee's title or of such equities respecting the claim as to justify its recognition and confirmation, and was not to be viewed exclusively as vesting title anew.[63] A patent issued to a person and his "representatives" included representatives by contract as well as by operation of law, the question as to whom the patent should inure being left open for settlement by law.[64] A patent took effect when issued,[65] and delivery was not essential to its taking effect as a conveyance,[66] acceptance being presumed in the absence of an express dissent where no personal obligation was imposed.[67] But if a patent was issued without the required survey the grantee was not precluded from objecting to it because he had made application for it.[68] A patent established the title of the patentee to the land as of the date of the original grant,[69] but as the deed of the United States such patent took effect only from the date of the commencement of the proceedings for confirmation.[70] The patent was to be considered as if made at the time when title vested by the confirmation and survey, and, although the patentee died in the interim, yet the patent inured to the benefit of his heirs or assigns.[71] A state had no authority to provide by statute when patents issued by the United States for land granted under former sovereignties should take effect.[72] Patents issued on the confirmation of land grants should be construed like other grants from the government,[73] and a patent for lands granted within the limits of a pueblo should have the same operation and effect as any other United States patent regular upon its face, issued to confirm a claim under a Mexican grant.[74] The patent was not subject to collateral attack,[75] and individuals could resist the conclusiveness of the patent only by showing that it conflicted with prior rights vested in them.[76] Proceedings to vacate a patent might be instituted by the United States;[77] but equity would not cancel a patent issued on confirmation and survey. Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 373.

9. Evidence of Title. A certificate of confirmation issued by the recorder is prima facie, but not conclusive, evidence of all the facts necessary to a confirmation and of the confirmation itself,[79] and a final certificate of title issued by the register and receiver of the land office on confirmation of a claim by the commissioners has been held sufficient evidence of title as against one having no claim to land other than that of mere occupancy.[80] A certified copy of the opinion of the recorder, recommending a claim to congress for confirmation, is evidence that the claim is embraced within a statute confirming all claims so recommended.[81] A plat of survey certified by the surveyor-general of the Spanish province of Louisiana, and afterward recognized by the United States commissioners and registered in the land office, is legal evidence of title.[82] Proof of inhabitation, cultivation, or possession was sufficient to establish a title to land by virtue of a confirmation under the act of 1812.[83] A survey under one statute was admissible in evidence to show the description of the same claim confirmed under a prior statute.[84] A survey certified in the handwriting of a deputy surveyor and recognized in a patent certificate has been held admissible in evidence, although not shown to have been made under a previous order for a survey.[85] A certificate made by the register of a land office of the proper district, within the appropriate sphere of his duties, to enable a claimant of a Spanish grant to receive a patent, is admissible evidence on proof of its genuineness.[86] The tabular statement of the books of an old Mexican grant had obtained a patent, which by a fraudulent extension of the survey was made to include valuable mineral lands, the United States had a direct pecuniary interest, which would enable it to maintain a suit to set aside the patent.

Junior grantees were remediless unless the government interfered.— Leese v. Clark, 18 Cal. 535.

Duty of United States to proceed for cancellation of patent.— Where a patent issued pursuant to an old Mexican grant was made according to a survey which was fraudulently extended so as to include a town where the inhabitants held possession by the indefinite and unrecorded titles of dwellers in Mexican villages, the United States, in view of the stipulation to respect existing rights contained in the treaty of cession, was under obligation to set aside the patent, even though the same expressly recited that it was not to affect the claims of third persons, for the government owed at least a moral obligation not to burden the equitable rights of the villagers by an apparently adverse legal title. Limitations.— A suit to set aside on the ground of fraud a patent issued to one claiming land in California under a Mexican grant could not be maintained by the United States after the lapse of nineteen years since the survey was made, fifteen since the patent was issued, and thirty-six since the passage of the act of congress of March 3, 1851. Such a suit was at least a sequel to the compulsory litigation forced upon claimants by that act and part of the same suit, and, as the government consented to appear therein as an equal litigant, and impliedly waived all rights peculiar to it as a sovereign, it could not subsequently assert rights which but for its sovereignty would be forever barred. the former sovereignty.[6] Where two persons claim the same land under confirmations of grants of former sovereignties and patents issued pursuant thereto, and one or both of the grants was complete at the time of the cession, the earlier confirmation or patent is not conclusive, but the court must look to the original source of title and to the character of the title as it existed under the former government;[7] but as between claimants of inchoate rights, which were of imperfect obligation on the United States at the time of the cession and have since been confirmed, the elder confirmee has the better title without reference to the date of the origin of the respective claims.[8] Where, however, two inchoate claims are confirmed by the same act of congress, or the confirmations otherwise balance each other, the better title under the former sovereignty will prevail,[9] although it has been held that a confirmation by act of congress and a patent constitutes a better legal title than a confirmation by the same act of congress without a patent.[10] If the claim of a pueblo to a tract of land in California under the laws of Mexico was confirmed, and the decree excepted from the confirmation such parcels of land within the limits of the pueblo as had, by grants from lawful authority, vested in and been confirmed to parties claiming thereunder, and such parcels as should thereafter, in proceedings then pending, be confirmed to such parties, the confirmation of such excepted parcels gave to the confirmees a title against claimants under the pueblo confirmation.[11] The confirmee of a Mexican grant, who has been decreed to be entitled to a certain amount within larger exterior limits, has, until official segregation is made, a right to the possession of the whole tract embraced within the exterior limits, and may maintain ejectment against persons in possession of any part of it;[12] but where such confirmee selects a location and quantity, uses, leases, sells, or mortgages it, and disclaims title to the remainder, the selection is obligatory on him, until the government overrules his selection and assigns him land elsewhere within the designated tract.[13] Where two persons have been granted a certain quantity of land within the exterior limits including the same land, the issuance of a patent to one grantee gives the other no ground of complaint, where there still remains sufficient land within his exterior limits to satisfy his grant.[14] When an incomplete grant from a former sovereignty is perfected either by act of congress or by patent, the United States, and not the previous government, must be regarded as the source of title.[15] While the confirmation and the issuance of the patent fixed the legal title in the grantee [16] they did not cut off the equitable rights of third persons in the land;[17] but on the other hand the confirmation might be made to inure to the benefit of the persons equitably entitled to the land,[18] and after a confirmation and the issuance of a patent to the grantees, his assignees might enforce their rights in the ordinary tribunals.[19] Under some statutes where a claim was confirmed but the government had already sold the land or a part thereof, or the land could not be located, the claimant was entitled to an equal extent of other public lands.[20] Where a colonist lost title to part of his grant, by a suit, because that part was outside the limits of the colony, and by subsequent acts of the legislature his grant was validated except as to the adverse rights of third persons theretofore acquired, and a certificate for other land was granted him in compensation for the land lost by

12. Statutory Rights of Unsuccessful Claimants. The act of 1886 in reference to land titles in California [22] gave to bona fide purchasers for value [23] of lands from Mexican grantees [24] or their assigns, where the grants were subsequently rejected,[25] or the lands purchased were excluded from the final survey of the grant,[26] the right to purchase such lands from the United States at the minimum price established by law,[27] provided they had used, improved, and continued in the actual possession of the lands,[28] and no valid adverse right or title except that of the United States existed.[29] This right of purchase did not, however, extend to land containing mines of gold, silver, copper, or cinnabar,[30] and the statute contained other exceptions. This preferred right of purchase was assignable so as to transfer all the purchaser's rights, although the assignee took with notice of the final rejection of the original claim.[31] The decision of the land department with refer-

Purchase after rejection of claim and pending appeal therefrom.— The fact that a purchase was made from the Mexican grantees after the claim had been rejected by the board of land commissioners and by the district court, and while it was pending on appeal in the supreme court, did not, as matter of law, prevent the purchaser from being a bona fide purchaser within the meaning of the statute. Constructive notice of purchaser.— The fact that a Mexican grant fixed a definite base line, and that the grant was only a quarter of a league wide, did not affect the grantee with notice that all lands lying more than that distance from the base line did not belong to the grant, so as to deprive him of the right to purchase such lands. The fact that the land in question was never a portion of the grant did not affect the right to purchase the same under the statute. Watriss v. Reed, 99 Cal. 134, 33 Pac. 775.

Grant of specific quantity within larger tract.— The statute applied to lands included within the exterior boundaries of a Mexican grant for a specific quantity within a larger tract described by outside boundaries, commonly known as a "float"; the land so purchased having fallen outside the tract as the specific quantity was afterward officially located and surveyed. ence to the existence of the facts entitling a person to the benefit of this statute was conclusive and not open to review by the courts,[32] but the courts could review an erroneous application of the law to the undisputed facts.[33] Prior to this statute similar privileges had been extended by special statutes to purchasers under particular grants.[34] The act of 1832 in reference to land claims in Missouri [35] gave to holders under rejected land claims who were actual settlers and housekeepers on the land [36] or claimants who waived their grants before a decision thereon [37] the right to preëmpt lands, including their improvements, not exceeding the amount of their claims, and not exceeding in any case six hundred and forty acres.[38] The act of 1858, authorizing the issuance of certificates or scrip to holders of deferred land claims confirmed under the treaty of cession of Louisiana, which should be receivable in payment for land by the land department of the United States, inured to the benefit of a grantee who had previously located under such a claim, where such location failed or became ineffectual by reason of some prior grant or location.[39]

VI. DISPOSAL OF CANADIAN CROWN LANDS.

A. In General — 1. POWER TO GRANT. The crown may make a valid grant of land although it is out of possession.[40] But where a crown grant contains a condition that it should be void if not settled within a certain time, a breach of the condition must be established by an inquest of office found before the crown can make a second valid grant of the same land.[41] And so also, while a crown grant may be attacked by the crown for excess in quantity, in the absence of such proceedings the land included cannot be regranted to a stranger.[42]

2. Presumption of Grant. Under proper circumstances a grant may be presumed.[43]

3. Contracts For Sale of Government Lands. In government contracts for the sale of lands, time is of the essence of the contract.[44]

4. Actions on Contracts to Make Grants. The exchequer court of Canada has jurisdiction in respect of a claim arising out of a contract to grant a portion of the public domain in aid of a railroad, made under the authority of an act of parliament,[45] and such a claim may be prosecuted by a petition of right.[46]

5. Receipts For Payments. Receipts or certificates of deposits to the credit of the receiver-general on a purchase of certain land import a sale to the person from whom the money is expressed to have been received, although no purchaser is named.[47]

6. Performance of Conditions. Where a person purchases crown land subject to a condition to be performed within a given time, failing in which he is to forfeit all rights under the sale, he is not entitled to a patent until such condition is performed.[48]

7. Lien For Indebtedness to Crown. Under a statute providing that indebtedness of a patentee to the crown shall be entered by the registrar "in the proper register or other record book in his office" and thereafter the indebtedness shall remain a charge on the land until paid, an entry in the proper book is necessary to create the charge.[49]

Section 14 of the Land Act, as amended by the Land Amendment Act (1891), § 1, "That occupation in this Act required shall mean a continuous bona fide personal residence of the preëmptor or family on the land recorded by him," relates to section 13, which provides for cancellation of the record of a settler "if he shall cease to occupy such land," and does not govern the question of what lands are "unoccupied" for the purposes of preëmption by others. Hereron v. Christian, 4 Brit. Col. 246.

tenant-governor in council it does not again become open for settlement until cancellation of the reservation by the same authority.[51]

2. Persons Entitled to Free Grants For Homesteads. Under the Ontario statute,[52] free grants of lands for homesteads are authorized to be made only to men.[53]

3. Proceedings to Obtain Grant. A person acquires no homestead interest in land until he is entered or permitted to enter for the land in the proper books or records of the land department,[54] and no such interest is acquired by merely making the required application and affidavit and depositing the office fee with the land agent.[55]

4. Jurisdiction to Pass Upon Claims to Free Grants. The statute giving authority to the governor in council to adjudge upon claims to free grants of land under any order in council then in force applies to located lands on which improvements have been made, as well as other lands.[56]

5. Effect of Location Ticket. A location ticket is prima facie evidence of title and possession under the statute.[57]

6. Cancellation of Location Ticket. The crown has always the right to cancel a location ticket;[58] but the statutory power given to a commissioner of crown lands to annul a location ticket[59] is judicial, and before exercising such power proceedings must be had to establish the default of the occupant, under such ticket.[60] If, before the time allowed for the performance of the conditions of settlement, the location ticket is canceled through error, the commissioner can revoke such cancellation and put the party in his former position, and disallow a second location ticket granted in the interval by a local agent.[61]

7. Occupation, Residence, and Clearance. The clearing of an acre or more of land on a government lot, without residing thereon,[62] or the occupying of and dwelling upon such lot without a government permit,[63] is not an occupation within the meaning of the act for the encouragement of colonization, and does not therefore confer any of the privileges thereof. The occupation required by the British Columbia Land Act means a continuous bona fide residence of the preëmptor or of his family on the land recorded by him.[64] Under the terms of a sale from the crown in 1857, the grantee was obliged to perform all the obliga-

Waiver of right.— The registration by the commissioner of crown lands of a transfer of the settler's rights in the land is a waiver of the right of the crown to cancel the location ticket for default to perform settlement duties. Holland v. Ross, 19 Can. Sup. Ct. 566 [reversing 2 Montreal Q. B. 316].

tions contained in ordinary location tickets, and without residence and clearance upon the lot the grantee could not become the incommutable owner or acquire letters patent.[65]

8. Rights of Locatee. Until the conditions are performed the standing timber on the land remains the property of the crown,[66] and a locatee is not entitled to sell or otherwise dispose of standing timber until he has obtained a grant or patent.[67] But as a location ticket is virtually a sale conveying ownership, the holder has a right to recover the value of timber cut by others upon the land, notwithstanding the condition that he should not cut the timber himself.[68] A settler who takes up a lot included in a timber license takes it subject to the rights of the timber licensee;[69] but has a right of joint possession from and after the date of his location ticket, with the right to begin clearing thereon provided he does so in good faith.[70] A person in possession of crown land before patent issued cannot dedicate any portion of the same;[71] but he may so far bind himself by his acts that when a patent issues the lands granted would be bound by any right or easement to which his sanction has been obtained.[72] The court will not decree a partition of unpatented lands among the heirs of a deceased locatee,[73] but in a suitable case it may give declaratory relief which will work practically the result of a partition subject to the crown being willing to act on the judgment of the court.[74] A person holding land under a license of occupation from the crown is entitled to a demand of possession before ejectment brought by a grantee of the crown in fee.[75]

9. Restrictions on Alienation. The Ontario Free Grants and Homesteads Act provides that "neither the locatee, nor any one claiming under him, shall have power to alienate (otherwise than by devise) or to mortgage or pledge any land located as aforesaid, or any right or interest therein before the issue of the patent";[76] but this does not prevent an agreement being entered into before the issue of a patent for the grant of land after the issue thereof, and such an agree-

Prohibition against cutting timber.— The regulations of the governor prohibit an applicant for land from cutting any timber or lumber, except for clearing, until he has transmitted to the surveyor-general a certificate from the labor act commissioner that he has performed the necessary amount of labor, and if timber is cut by the applicant in violation of the statute and the regulations it may be seized by the crown officers. Extent of right.— This right of clearing does not necessarily interfere with the licensee's right to cut timber anywhere on the lot, so long as the latter does not "interrupt" the settler's clearing operations, but the right of the licensee to cut could not be prevented by the locatee simply marking out, by blazing trees, a certain area which he intended to clear. Price v. Leblanc, 11 Quebec Super. Ct. 30.

The ownership of wood cut by the settler in the bona fide process of clearing the land for cultivation rests in him and not in the timber licensee. Price v. Leblanc, 11 Quebec Super. Ct. 30.

ment may be enforced after the issue of the patent, where all the requisites of the statute have been complied with by the locatee.[77]

10. Abandonment of Preëmption. A preëmption is abandoned by absence from the province for ten years without at any time leaving an address with the land office so that the preëmptor could be notified of a survey by the government or of a demand for the money due in the event of a survey.[78]

11. Remedy of Defeated Preëmptor. Where a valid preëmption has been defeated by a grant to another, issued by mistake, and not by reason of any fraud on the part of the grantee, a petition of right against the crown is the appropriate, if not the only, remedy of the party aggrieved.[79]

C. Patents and Grants — 1. Form and Requisites. A grant from the crown must be under the great seal [80] and a matter of record,[81] and must, in order to pass any legal interest, name a grantee or grantees, properly described and capable of holding.[82]

2. Construction. Grants from the crown, either for a valuable consideration or of special favor, are to be construed in the same manner as deeds from subject to subject,[83] and recitals in a grant must be taken and construed together.[84] In case of doubt, a patent from the crown is generally to be construed most favorably for the crown,[85] but there are exceptions to this rule.[86] Ascertained objects fixed upon in the grant as marks of boundary control courses and distances,[87] and the quantity purporting to be granted.[88] But the expression of quantity is descriptive and may aid in finding the intent where the boundaries are doubtful.[89] When the course of a line is not expressed, protraction on the plan of the grant may be resorted to as an element for ascertaining the course;[90] but where the position of the natural boundaries described in a grant cannot be ascertained, and there is no proof of the original survey, the limits of the grant cannot be extended by implication beyond the courses and distances mentioned in it.[91] A grant giving as a boundary the bank or edge of a lake is intended to express the margin, and makes the water's edge the boundary,[92] and a grant bounded by the shore of a tide river does not convey any title to the land below high-water mark.[93] The grantee of a water lot, bounded on the shore, is entitled to take up to high-water mark; and that line of his grant changes with the gradual encroachment or retirement of the sea.[94] The marks of the original survey are to be sought for and adhered to in determining the boundaries of a grant,[95] and parol evidence is admissible to show the actual position and survey of lands included in grants of wilderness and woodlands.[96] But in order to correct an error in the descriptive part of a grant by parol evidence, the evidence must be such as to leave no doubt of the intention of the grantor.[97] Where a plan is attached to a grant and referred to in the usual terms it is to be considered as incorporated with the instrument and must be construed along with it.[98] If the bounds are clearly ascertained by the grant, they cannot be extended or limited by subsequent grants;[99] but if there is any uncertainty as to the lines of a grant, subsequent grants of the crown to other persons of adjoining lands in which the lines of the prior grant are described may be referred to, in order to show where the crown considered the lines of the prior grant to be.[1] The courses and distances of the exterior boundaries of a grant are rather adhered to than those of the interior division of the tract into lots, where both cannot be reconciled, and the dispute relates to the exterior boundary.[2] Where the crown, after discovering an error in running one of the lines of a grant, took no steps to rectify it, it may be presumed to have adopted it, and such line fixes the boundary between the grant and subsequent grants referring to the line as a boundary.[3] A grant to a corporation will inure to its benefit notwithstanding a mistake in the name as stated in the grant.[4] A grant of a certain lake, eo nomine, with all profits, hereditaments, etc., reserving to the crown all mines and minerals, conveys the soil of the lake.[5]

3. Effect. A patent of land from the crown is to be upheld rather than avoided,[6] and has the legal effect of giving the patentee an absolute title in possession.[7] When the crown has issued the letters patent in view of all the facts, the grant is conclusive, and equities behind the patent cannot be set up.[8] Neither can an objection that the crown was misled in making a grant be made by a third person in a collateral proceeding.[9] A grant from the crown is not conclusive

D. Setting Aside Patents and Grants. A crown grant or patent should be set aside where issued through fraud or in error and improvidence,[12] but the courts have no jurisdiction to set aside a grant or patent of land made by the crown upon a deliberate view of all the circumstances of the case and in the absence of fraud or mistake.[13] Proceedings for the annulment or repeal of a patent are properly brought in the chancery [14] or superior [15] court by the attorney-general,[16] or by a private individual having an interest in the land.[17] Where plaintiff's case, if successful, would establish a claim on the part of defendants, other than

Possession of crown lands by a person who entered under an agreement with another to clear and improve for the latter, on stipulated terms, is not such possession as entitles

the attorney-general, upon the justice of the crown for compensation, the attorney-general is at any rate a proper party;[18] but the attorney-general is not a necessary party where the bill alleges that the patentee obtained his title by false representations to the crown, and shows a case in which the patentee would not be entitled to compensation if the patent were set aside and the land given to another.[19] Summons in matters of scire facias or actions to annul letters patent is made by writ issued in the usual manner, without affidavit of the petitioner, order of a judge, or fiat of the attorney-general.[20] It is not necessary that an action to annul letters patent should be preceded or accompanied by a tender or deposit of the dues paid to the crown in order to obtain the issue of the letters patent.[21] The information of the attorney-general for annulling letters patent is simply a statement of the claim with conclusions as in the declaration in an ordinary action.[22] A bill by a private individual must show that he has some interest in the land,[23] and that such interest arose before the patent was issued.[24] If upon the allegations of a bill to repeal a patent plaintiff is entitled to a decree for such repeal, although he may be entitled to nothing more, a demurrer to the jurisdiction of the court on the subject-matter of the bill will not lie.[25] Where a private individual files a bill to repeal a patent on the ground of error, the onus of proof is on him, although it may to some extent involve proof of a negative,[26] and in order to the repeal of a patent on the ground of mistake such evidence must be laid before the court as will convince the mind of the court to a reasonable degree of certainty that the patent was issued in mistake.[27] Where the crown sought to forfeit two grants for non-performance of conditions as to improvements, etc., but none of the evidence on which the crown relied went further back than fifty years, while the grants were ninety years old, the evidence was not sufficient to forfeit the grants.[28] Where a bill impeaching a patent as having been obtained wrongfully was filed against the patentee and his vendee, who had not paid all his purchase-money, and the patentee answered denying the equity claimed the occupant to maintain a bill to set aside a patent to the person under whom he held possession, on grounds of fraud or error unconnected with his own interest. Cosgrove v. Corbett, 14 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 617.

Mahon v. McLean, 13 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 361.

Costs on dismissal.— Where a bill was filed to set aside a patent, on the ground that the same had been issued in ignorance of the opposing claim of plaintiff, upon the fraudulent misrepresentations of the patentee, and the concealment of the facts by him from the crown lands department, the court, although unable to afford the relief sought because plaintiff was not entitled to demand it, dismissed the bill without costs as against defendant who had thus dealt with the department. but his vendee allowed the bill to be noted pro confesso, it was held that, plaintiff failing to establish his case against the patentee, the bill should be dismissed as against both defendants.[29]

E. Rights of Grantees — 1. In General. The purchaser from the government of a clergy reserve, upon which he has paid an instalment and obtained the usual receipt from the department, has a right to obtain possession against any one in occupation.[30] A purchaser holding a receipt for the purchase-money or an instalment thereof, and having actual possession, may, before receiving a patent, maintain trespass against all strangers, although not against the crown;[31] but a receipt for a payment without a license of occupation or a patent does not entitle the purchaser to maintain ejectment.[32] The patentee of the crown may maintain trespass without entry against a person in actual possession before and at the time of the issuing of the patent.[33] Although a patent contains a clause saving and reserving to the crown all white pine trees, a person claiming under the patentee can maintain trover for white pine trees cut by a trespasser.[34]

2. Exemptions. The exemption under the Ontario Free Grants and Homestead Act[35] extends to the land or any part thereof or interest therein, so long as it is held by the original location title, whether before or after patent;[36] but where there has been a valid alienation, a mortgage taken by the original locatee does not vest in him qua locatee, and hence such mortgage is not exempt.[37]

F. Squatters. Ordinarily mere squatters on public lands acquire no rights;[38] but the Vancouver Island Settlers' Relief Act of 1904,[39] providing that settlers who had occupied or improved land within the railway belt with the bona fide intention of living thereon, might obtain crown grants in fee simple thereof, applied to squatters, who were therefore entitled to the benefit thereof.[40]

PUBLIC SCHOOL. See SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL-DISTRICTS.

PUBLIC SCHOOL-HOUSES. Such as belong to the public; such as are designed for the schools established and conducted under the authority of the public;[36] those school-houses, which belong to our system of free schools, and are used for carrying out the purposes of that system.[37] (See, generally, SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL-DISTRICTS.)

PUBLIC SECURITY. A certificate or instrument issued by the proper officer, under the authority of law, evidencing a pecuniary indebtment or liability of the government to the holder.[38]

PUBLIC SENTIMENT. Another name for public opinion, or harmony of thought — idem sentire.[39]

PUBLIC SERVANT. See OFFICERS, 29 Cyc. 1356.

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION. A term used in a state constitution to include all transportation and transmission companies, all gas, electric light, heat and power companies, and all persons authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain, or to use or occupy any street, alley, or public highway, whether along, over, or under the same, in a manner not permitted to the general public.[40]

In reference to public squares in Pennsylvania it is said: "In this state there are few ancient towns in which squares, such as this, do not form part of the plan. They are generally located at the intersection of the streets; and are intended as sites for the erection of buildings for the use of the public; such as court houses, market houses, schoolhouses and churches; sometimes they are designed for ornaments; and at others they are intended for the promotion of the health of the inhabitants by admitting of air. The squares as well as the streets, and for the same reason, are placed under the superintendence of the local authorities, who have full power to regulate them, so as more effectually to answer the purposes to which they have been dedicated." The uses and purposes of a public square or common are, in some respects, different from those of a public highway. Thus, a street or highway cannot be inclosed by the local authorities. But a public square or common in a town or city, where the dedication is general and without special limitation or use, may be inclosed, notwithstanding it has remained open many years, and be improved and ornamented for recreation and health. But the place must, for the purpose of the dedication, remain free and common to the use of all the public. Dillon Mun. Corp. [quoted in Guttery v. Glenn, 201 Ill. 275, 284, 66 N. E. 305].

48. Black L. Dict.

PUBLIC TRUST. A term which includes every agency in which the public, reposing special confidence in the particular persons, appoint them for the performance of some duty or service.[49] (See CHARITIES, 6 Cyc. 895; OFFICERS, 29 Cyc. 1361.)

PUBLIC TRUSTS. See CHARITIES, 6 Cyc. 895; PERPETUITIES, 30 Cyc. 1464; TRUSTS.

PUBLIC USE. A use which concerns the whole community, as distinguished from a particular individual or a particular number of individuals;[50] public usefulness, utility, advantage; or what is productive of general benefit;[51] a use by or for the government, the general public or some portion of it.[52] (Public Use: Adverse Possession of Land Dedicated or Acquired For, see ADVERSE POSSESSION,

As used in a constitutional guarantee that every person accused of crime shall have the right to public trial, the term is used in opposition to secret. People v. Swafford, 65 Cal. 223, 224, 3 Pac. 809.

The meaning of the term, as used in a statute providing that a person accused of crime shall be entitled to a speedy and a public trial, depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. "In a time of political or local excitement, if the trial judge permitted the court room to be packed exclusively with men opposed to the defendant on trial, the trial would not be public in fairness to the defendant. Every seat and all the standing room might be occupied, but the character of the spectators present and the friendliness to the accused of those who failed to gain admittance, perhaps through the connivance of the court, are to be considered in deciding whether the rights of the defendant have been trampled upon. The exclusion of a dozen school girls or boys of no particular prediliction for the defendant on trial can work no harm to him. The statute is for his benefit, and such an expulsion does not harm or aid him. It is apparent therefore, that while the defendant is entitled to a public trial, good morals or the exigencies of the situation may make that a relative term without injury to the defendant and without infringement upon the sanctity of the rights granted to him; that such discretion is vested in the presiding judge, and the test is whether or not it has been abused." It may mean the worship of God, conducted and observed under public authority; or it may mean worship in an open or public place, without privacy or concealment; or it may mean the performance of religious exercises under the provision for an equal right in the whole public to participate in its benefits; or it may be used in contradistinction to worship in the family or the closet. Atty.-Gen. v. Merrimack Mfg. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 586, 602, where it is said: "In this country, what is called public worship is commonly conducted by voluntary societies, constituted according to their own notions of ecclesiastical authority and ritual propriety, opening their places of worship, and admitting to their religious services such persons, and upon such terms, and subject to such regulations, as they may choose to designate and establish."

As applicable to a church of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of North America, which accepts the doctrine of the inspiration of the Old and New Testaments and the divinity of Jesus Christ, this term means the assembling together of the members of that church in a congregation, together with others who may choose to come, for the purpose of worshiping God in accordance with the rules and regulations and religious forms of that organization. In re Walker, 200 Ill. 566, 573, 66 N. PUNISH. To impose a penalty upon; to afflict with pain or loss or suffer for a crime or fault; to inflict a penalty for (an offense) upon the offender;[93] to impose a penalty for the commission of a crime.[94] (See PUNISHABLE; PUNISHMENT, and Cross-References Thereunder.)

PUNISHABLE. Liable to punishment;[95] deserving of or liable to punishment,[96] which may be, not only which must be, punished.[97] (See PUNISH; PUNISHMENT, and Cross-References Thereunder.)

PUNISHMENT. Pain, suffering, or loss inflicted on a person because of a crime or offense;[98] the penalty for the transgression of the law;[99] a term frequently used as synonymous with "forfeiture,"[1] "liability,"[2] or "penalty."[3] (Punish-statements in the statute, but in construing statutes, punctuation cannot be accorded a controlling influence. Courts do not hesitate to repunctuate, when it is necessary to arrive at the true meaning." Cook v. State, 110 Ala. 40, 46, 20 So. 360. "The law-maker may not punctuate correctly, and yet may clearly express his meaning. . . . Statutes in the course of legislative procedure are read to the General Assembly, and, as is said, they apprehend them by the ear, not by the eye, which alone can take cognizance of punctuation. . . . The punctuation is not their work; to it their attention is not directed. It is most often the work of the draftsman, and not infrequently of the clerk entrusted with the duty of copying, or of the printer in publishing. The ancients were unacquainted with it, and it varies now according to the tastes of scholars and of writers. Resort to it is never had in the construction of statutes, and it is of very doubtful use in the construction of writings between individuals. In 3 Dane Abr. 558, it is said: 'Stops are never inserted in statutes or deeds, but the courts of law in construing them must read them with such stops as will give effect to the whole.' The legislative intention, expressed in the clearest words, would often be defeated if the courts did not disregard the punctuation, and read their enactments as if they were properly pointed." Danzey v. State, 68 Ala. 296, 298. "Punctuation is a most fallible standard by which to interpret a writing; it may be resorted to, when all other means fail; but the court will first take the instrument by its four corners, in order to ascertain its true meaning; if that is apparent, on judicially inspecting the whole, the punctuation will not be suffered to change it." Contrasted.— In the provision "no purchase shall be made of stock of any company which has not regularly paid dividends," etc., the word is not used in the broad sense of "acquire," but in the more popular sense which makes it the correlative of the word "sell," and does not include subscription to unissued stock. Robotham v. Prudential Ins. Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 673, 683, 685, 53 Atl. 842. In common parlance the word "has a much more restricted meaning than in its legal or technical sense, according to the common law, when applied to the acquisition of an estate or interest in land." Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 338, 349.

Of personalty, as distinguished from realty. — "There is a technical meaning given in the law to the word 'purchase,' as applied to real estate, wider than its general signification; it is the acquisition of lands by other means than descent or inheritance. As applied to personalty, it is the acquisition of anything for a price, by the payment of money or its equivalent." Berger v. U. S. Steel Corp., 63 N. J. Eq. 809, 817, 53 Atl. 68.

By occupancy or reclaiming.— "Britton speaks of purchasing by occupancy. He says purchase may be made even by shutting up bees, fish, or other wild animals." Kinne v. Kinne, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 61, 65.

Purchase for value see McCartee v. Orphan Asylum Soc., 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 437, 491, 18 Am. Dec. 516, the following passage: "But it is said that the word 'purchase' has another meaning, and is understood in its popular sense to be the acquisition of property by one person from another for a valuable consideration; and it is contended that the term is to be taken in that limited sense as being the common acceptation of it. One answer to this may be, that the legislature has not indicated any intention to confine the signification of the word to such narrow limits; and being used without explanation, the rule is, that it is to be understood in the sense the law attaches to it. Besides, what reason is there for limiting it to purchases for value?"

Contract for purchase.— Within Tex. Rev. St. art. 4691, providing that property held under contract for the purchase thereof shall be taxed as of the holder, the word is not used in the broad sense of all manner of acquisition except inheritance. Taylor v. Robinson, 34 Fed. 678, 681.

12. Anderson L. Dict. [quoted in Cobb v. Webb, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 467, 470, 64 S. W. 792].

In its vulgar and confined acceptation it is "applied only to such acquisitions of lands as are obtained by way of bargain and sale for money, or some other valuable considera-goods and chattels;[13] that which is obtained for a price in money or its equivalent;[14] acquisition for a valuable consideration;[15] bargain.[16] In its technical and larger sense, in case of land, the act of obtaining or acquiring title to lands and tenements by money, deed, gift or any means, except by descent;[17] the acquisition of land by any lawful act of the party, in contradistinction to acquisition by operation at law, including title by deed, by matter of record, and by devise;[18] a method of acquiring title vested in a man by his own act or agreement

tion." 2 Black Comm. 241 [quoted in Purcell v. Smidt, 21 Iowa 540, 546; Enterprise v. Smith, 62 Kan. 815, 817, 62 Pac. 324]. The word in its common sense means "no more than when a man gives money for anything." Martin v. Strachan, 1 Wils. K. B. 66, 2 Rev. Rep. 552 note.

In connection with bona fide purchaser "the term . . . is ambiguous; it may be understood as alluding to the time of the agreement to purchase, and not to the time of executing the deed." Dean v. Anderson, 34 N. J. Eq. 496, 504.

Purchaser of a note or bill.— The person who buys a promissory note or bill of exchange from the holder without his indorsement. Black L. Dict.

37. See Morris v. Daniels, 35 Ohio St. 406, 413.

As defined by a recording act (1 N. Y. Rev. St. 756, § 37) the term embraces "every person to whom any estate or interest on real estate shall be conveyed, for a valuable consideration, and also every assignee of a mortgage or lease, or other conditional estate." New York Sav. Bank v. Frank, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 404, 411.

"Purchaser for a valuable consideration" is one who has paid a fair value, or something approaching a fair value (Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 219, 223); not in a technical sense as referring to one who comes to an estate by his own act but in the popular sense denoting one who buys for money, buys fairly and of course for a fair price (Fullenwider v. Roberts, 20 N. C. 420 [cited in Collins v. Davis, 132 N. C. 106, 111, 43 S. E. 579; Worthy v. Caddell, 76 N. C. 82, 86]).

38. So defined as used in the English Bankruptcy Act of 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), § 91, where it is held that "in this section the word 'purchaser' means a 'buyer' in the ordinary commercial sense, not a purchaser in the legal sense of the word." Ex p. Hillman, 10 Ch. PURCHASE SCALE. A term used in lumber trade and which has been held to mean the scale made at the time of the purchase, and not the scale made at the mill as the lumber was cut.[43]

PURE. Clear; simple; unmixed or unqualified;[44] free from all foreign substance; less strictly, free from any defiling or objectionable mixture;[45] free from mixture or contact with that which is deleterious, impairs, vitiates, or dilutes.[46] (See PURELY; PURE OBLIGATION; PURE PLEA.)

PURE FOOD LAWS. See ADULTERATION, 1 Cyc. 939; FOOD, 19 Cyc. 1085.

PURELY. A word sometimes construed as equivalent to wholly;[47] completely; entirely; unqualifiedly.[48] (See PURE.)

PURELY PUBLIC CHARITY. See CHARITIES, 6 Cyc. 898 text and note 3.

PURE OBLIGATION. One which is not suspended by any condition, whether it has been contracted without any condition, or when thus contracted, the condition has been accomplished.[49] (See OBLIGATION, 29 Cyc. 1308; PURE.)

PURE PLEA. In equity pleading, one which relies wholly on some matter outside those referred to in the bill; as a plea of a release on a settled account.[50] (See PLEA, 30 Cyc. 1643; PURE.)

PURGATORY. A state of suffering after this life, in which those souls are for a time detained who depart this life after their deadly sins have been remitted as to the stain and guilt, and as to the everlasting pain that was due to them; but who have on account of those sins still some debt of temporal punishment to pay; as also those souls which leave this world guilty only of venial sins.[51]

Pac. 186, where in construing a resolution empowering the president of a corporation to convey land to "purchasers" such authority was held in its broadest sense to include "the power to donate land, to execute a conveyance by gift, and all other modes of the personal acquisition of real property, except by descent or inheritance."

Heir as purchaser.—"In a legal sense every man is purchaser of an estate who does not take it by descent; and whenever a man gains a new estate he is said to take it by purchase; so a man may take as heir of another and yet be a purchaser; as if lands to be granted to A., remainder to the right heirs of B., the heir of B. takes by purchase and not by descent, because B. had nothing in him; for nothing can descend to a man from a father who had no estate in him." We have in chemistry pure products, but in the various uses the chemical standard is modified to a great extent. For instance, we speak of pure water, meaning by that water that is not contaminated, not defiled, not vitiated, although it may have mineral salts in solution. It may have in solution any product not deleterious; yet, strictly speaking, the only water that can be said to be chemically pure is distilled water. Still, in the various legislative acts providing for pure water . . . it has never been contemplated that absolutely chemically pure, distilled water was to be procured."

Of mortgage, distinguished from consideration.— "Purpose," as used in a statute requiring a mortgage to express the purpose for which it is given, means the effect which the instrument is intended to have upon the rights of the contracting parties and the status of the subject-matter, and is not the "consideration." Ford v. Burks, 37 Ark. 91, 94.

"Benevolent purposes," although a broader term than "charitable purposes," must be confined to the latter in the construction of a will, otherwise a trust for such purposes would be too vague to execute. James v. Allen, 3 Meriv. 17, 19, 17 Rev. Rep. 4, 36 Eng. Reprint 7.

"For all purposes whatsoever" in a policy of maritime insurance, authorizing a ship to touch and stay at any ports for all purposes whatsoever, would be limited in meaning to the purposes of the voyage if they were previously ascertained — where they are not, and the adventure includes obtaining information in the Baltic as to ports of discharge along its shores in an unsettled state due to war, it includes staying in Baltic ports to obtain such information and is not limited by the subsequent clause permitting the ship to wait "off" such ports for information. As used in an ordinance forbidding persons to quarrel, the term is very comprehensive and would include a difficulty in which the owner of a store engaged in an attempt to eject a person from his premises who refused to go when ordered, though the ancient law would have given him a right to use force. Metcalf v. People, 2 Colo. App. 262, 30 Pac. 39.

Within the meaning of an accident policy providing that if death occurs from assault provoked by quarreling no recovery can be had, the term cannot be held to mean every frivolous controversy which might, in some sense, be termed a "quarrel," although it was not a dispute or quarrel from which the insured might reasonably have expected anger to be provoked or injury to result. As defined by the lexicographers, it is similar to a mine, in the sense that the material removed, be it mere rock, or stone, or valuable marble, is removed because of its value for some other purposes, and in the sense that it is not removed for the purpose of improving the property from which it is taken. It is distinguished from a mine in the fact that it is usually open at the top and front (see Century and Standard Dictionaries), and, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, in the character of the material extracted, but these distinctions are not material here. In re Kelso, 147 Cal. 609, 610, 82 Pac. 241, 109 Am. The term includes all offenses not crimes or misdemeanors, but that are in the nature of crimes — a class of offenses against the public which have not been declared crimes, but wrongs against the general or local public which it is proper should be repressed or punished by forfeitures and penalties (Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 372, 375); the act of doing damage or evil involuntarily (Wharton L. Lex. [quoted in Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 372, 375]).

The term embraces all qui tam actions and forfeitures imposed for the neglect or violation of a public duty, but would not embrace an indictable offense, whatever might be its grade. Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 372, 375. See also People v. Bradley, 60 Ill. 390, 402.

to prevent a threatened cloud,[3] is an ancient and well-established head of equity jurisprudence. Likewise a statutory action to determine adverse claims to real estate is of equitable cognizance.[4]

B. Grounds — 1. In General. The broad grounds on which equity interferes to remove a cloud on title are the prevention of litigation, the protection of the true title and possession, and because it is the real interest of both parties, and promotive of right and justice, that the precise state of the title be known if, all are acting bona fide.[5]

2. Lack of Remedy at Law. The rule is that a court of equity has jurisdiction to quiet title or remove a cloud thereon where no remedy at law exists.[6] Simi-

Cas. No. 8,513, McAllister 360.

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Quieting Title," § 14 et seq.

The principle on which equity will lend its aid to remove a cloud on title is that one in the rightful possession of realty is entitled to the full, quiet, and peaceable possession of the same without present annoyance and harassment, or threatened molestation. Thompson v. Etowah Iron Co., 91 Ga. 538, 17 S. E. 663.

Equity will not allow a title to real estate, otherwise clear, to be clouded by a claim which cannot be enforced at law or in equity, and consequently will interfere in behalf of the holder of a legal title to remove a cloud on the same, or an impediment in the way of an effectual assertion of his rights at law. Holland v. Baltimore, 11 Md. 186, 69 Am. Dec. 195; Steam Stone-Cutter Co. v. Jones, 13 Fed. 567, 21 Blatchf. 138.

Where a cloud on title has existed so long as to render it questionable whether the title of defendant is not prima facie better than that of plaintiff, a court of equity will interpose to remove the same in behalf of the latter. Gibbons v. Duley, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 320.

A court of equity having jurisdiction of the parties has also jurisdiction to compel defendant to release and discharge an apparent cloud on title to land in another state. Remer v. Mackay, 35 Fed. 86.

Only forum.— A court of equity is the only forum qualified, under our system of jurisprudence, to afford relief where another person has obtained a deed for the possession of land, which it is against conscience for him to use or enforce, and which operates as a cloud on the title of the owner. Shell v. Martin, 19 Ark. 139.

Jurisdiction limited by statute.— The jurisdiction of a court of equity to remove a cloud from the title to real estate is restricted to the special cases and particular relief contemplated by the statute, and does not draw to it the powers incident to the exercise of general equity jurisdiction to take cognizance of the whole controversy in relation to title, right of possession, and rents, issues, and profits. On the same principles governing in its intervention to remove a cloud on title, equity will interfere, in advance, by injunction, to prevent a cloud being cast on title. Moore v. McNutt, 41 W. Va. 695, 24 S. E. 682.

To prevent defendant from proceeding in an illegal act from which a cloud on title will necessarily arise, a court of equity, in an otherwise proper case, will interfere. Oakley v. Williamsburgh, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 262.

An action to cancel a forged deed as a cloud is maintainable by one out of possession against one in possession, since the only remedy available to him at law would be an action in the nature of ejectment to recover possession of the land, in which the court could not decree a delivery of the deed, nor cancel the record of the same. Hamilton v. Batlin, 8 Minn. 403, 83 Am. Dec. 787.

A court of equity may, without remitting the action to a court of law, proceed to quiet the title when a multiplicity of suits will be avoided thereby. Huntington v. Nicholl, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 566, holding further that equity will retain jurisdiction for such purpose, although it may be necessary to establish the title by its decree.

9. Whitehouse v. Jones, 60 W. Va. 680, 55 S. E. 730. See also Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 402, 18 L. ed. 925.

The equity asserted in such case had its origin in the prolonged litigation which the action of ejectment permitted. That action being founded on a fictitious devise between fictitious parties, a recovery therein constituted no bar to a second similar action, or to any number of similar actions for possession of the same premises. With slight changes in these fictions a new action might be instituted and conducted as though no previous action had ever been commenced. Thus a party in possession although successful in every instance, might be harassed, if not ruined, by continued litigation. To prevent such litigation after one or more trials, and to secure peace to the party in possession, the courts of equity interposed upon proper application and terminated the controversy. Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 402, 18 L. ed. 925.

The institution of repeated ejectment suits, if the same are abandoned before trial, can-action of ejectment is regarded as a mere possessory action, the rule is that equity will not interfere to prevent harassment by continued assertion of defeated title, unless plaintiff has vindicated his title in successive actions of ejectment;[10] but if the title is satisfactorily established, it is not material what number of trials have taken place, whether two or more.[11] However, in those jurisdictions where ejectment is regarded as a real action, one trial and judgment in ejectment is conclusive, and when a party defeated in ejectment keeps on denying its effect and disquieting his adversary in possession, equity has jurisdiction to quiet the latter's title.[12]

C. Subject-Matter. The subject-matter of equitable jurisdiction to quiet title or remove cloud is generally held to be confined to land,[13] including the surface of the ground and everything that is on it[14] and under it,[15] and not to extend to personal property.[16]

D. Matters Affecting Exercise — 1. In General. The jurisdiction in actions to quiet title or remove cloud does not rest on arbitrary rules; much depends on the facts of the particular case, and in the exercise of the jurisdiction the court is clothed with a large discretion.[17]

2. Adequacy of Legal Remedies — a. In General. When the estate or interest to be protected is equitable, the jurisdiction to quiet title or remove cloud should be exercised whether plaintiff is in or out of possession;[18] but when the estate or interest is legal in its nature, the exercise of the jurisdiction of equity to quiet a title or to remove a cloud therefrom depends upon the adequacy of legal remedies.[19] Thus for example a plaintiff out of possession holding the legal title will be left to his remedy by ejectment under ordinary circumstances;[20] but not furnish a foundation for the maintenance of a bill of peace to restrain vexatious litigation. Patterson v. McCamant, 28 Mo. 210.

b. When Title or Interest of Plaintiff Is Legal — (I) In General. The general rule, when the title or interest of plaintiff is legal in its nature, is that equity will not entertain jurisdiction where there is an adequate remedy at law.[22] But to deprive equity of jurisdiction to quiet title or remove a cloud, it is not enough that there is a remedy at law; it must be plain and adequate, or, in other words, as practicable and efficient to the ends of justice as the remedy in equity.[23] of statutes providing a legal remedy where formerly the remedy was in equity by bill to quiet title, or remove cloud thereon, undoubtedly is that the antecedent jurisdiction of equity is not ousted by such statutes,[25] at least where the language used therein does not limit the remedy to the one therein provided.[26]

(B) Enlarging Equitable Jurisdiction — (1) IN GENERAL. If the effect of a statute enlarging equity jurisdiction in respect to actions to quiet or remove cloud on title is to deprive parties of the right to trial by jury, the statute will not be sustained; in other words, the remedy, thus given by statute, must yield to the remedy at law.[27]

(2) PARTICULAR STATUTES — (a) PERMITTING ACTION BY PARTY IN POSSESSION. Statutes have been enacted in many states providing, in substance, that an action may be brought by any person in possession, by himself or his tenant, of real property, against any person who claims an interest therein adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim, estate, or interest, and to quiet title.[28] These statutes operate on the old action to quiet title, which, under the common law, could not be maintained until the party in possession had been harassed by repeated actions at law, and they give an additional remedy in equity;[29] but since they give it only to the party in possession, they have no effect on the rule that the aid of equity cannot be invoked where an adequate remedy at law exists.[30]

(b) Permitting Action by Claimant to Vacant Lands. Another group of statutes permits the action to quiet title, or remove cloud thereon, to be brought by a person in possession, and also, if the land is wild or unoccupied, by a person not in possession.[31] These statutes, in extending equitable relief to claimants to unoccupied lands in no wise interfere with the general rule that equitable jurisdiction cannot be invoked where an adequate remedy at law exists; for, where lands were unoccupied, ejectment would not lie at common law.[32]

(c) Permitting Action by One Not in Possession. In several states equitable jurisdiction has been enlarged by statute so as to permit actions to quiet title, or remove cloud thereon, to be maintained even where plaintiff is not in possession.[33] If these statutes be regarded as giving an absolute right to the equitable remedy where an adequate remedy at law exists, the effect is to deprive the party in possession of the right to trial by jury,[34] and they are therefore unconstitutional.[35] Some of the decisions follow the statute, without raising or discussing the question of its effect upon the right of trial by jury, where, under the common law, the remedy would have been at law,[36] while others hold, where the question is squarely presented, that, although equitable in form, the action is not strictly equitable, and that, where there are legal issues, the parties demanding it may have such issues framed for a jury.[37]

(3) Effect of State Statutes in Federal Courts. As to the effect on the chancery jurisdiction of the federal courts, of statutes enlarging equitable jurisdiction in the various states, it is settled that the constitutional provision as to trial by jury,[38] and the statutory provision forbidding equity from entertaining jurisdiction where an adequate remedy at law exists,[39] are controlling. Where the bill shows that the parties claim title from different sources and through different chains of conveyances, defendant being in possession, there is a plain and speedy mode of settling the question of title by an action at law in the nature of ejectment, and that fact is fatal to the jurisdiction of equity. Whitehead v. Entwhistle, 27 Fed. 778.

Where it appears that the parties are each in possession of part of the property claiming title to the whole, plaintiff might, by an action in the nature of ejectment, put the title asserted by defendant as an entirety to the test, and procure an adjudication settling the title to the whole tract, and not merely to that part of which he is in possession; and therefore the statutory action to quiet title will not lie. Albro v. Dayton, 50 N. J. Eq. 574, 25 Atl. 937.

Adverse party has constitutional right to trial by jury.— Where the title is purely a legal one and defendant is in possession, the remedy at law in plain, adequate, and complete, and an action of ejectment cannot be maintained under a guise of a bill in equity to quiet title or remove a cloud. In such case the adverse party has a constitutional right to trial by jury. Mathews v. Marks, 44 Ark. 436; McGuire v. Pensacola City Co., 105 Fed. 677, 44 C. C. A. 670.

held, however, that a bill to cancel a forged instrument as a cloud on title should not be dismissed on the ground that there is an adequate remedy in the nature of an action of ejectment, since in such an action the court could not decree the delivery of the deed, nor cancel the same.[46]

(II) Trespass to Try Title.[47] Generally, where there is nothing to prevent an action at law in the nature of trespass to try title, this remedy is regarded as plain, adequate, and complete, and, in such case, a court of equity will decline to interfere.[48]

(III) Writ of Entry.[49] If plaintiff may resort to the remedy at law by a writ of entry, that remedy is regarded as plain, adequate, and complete, and equity will decline to interfere.[50]

(IV) Defenses Available at Law. The owner of land in possession may sue to quiet his title, notwithstanding he may have a defense in a court of law,[51] unless such defense is as practical and efficient as the remedy in equity.[52]

3. Pendency of Action at Law. The rule is that if there is already an action pending in a court of law wherein the parties can fairly present their respective titles and obtain an adjudication thereof,[53] and no special reason is shown for equitable interference,[54] a court of equity will decline to exercise jurisdiction to quiet title or remove cloud. But the court is not deprived of jurisdiction by the pendency of an action at law, where it is between other parties and only extends to a portion of the controversy.[55]

4. Previous Establishment of Title at Law. The general rule is that equitable jurisdiction to quiet or remove cloud on title will not be exercised where the parties are not numerous, unless it clearly appears that plaintiff has fully and fairly established his title in an action at law.[56] This rule, however, is held to be abro-

II. What Constitutes Cloud on Title Justifying Interference of Equity.

A. Existing Cloud — 1. In General. A cloud, such as equity will undertake to remove, is the semblance of a title, either legal or equitable, or a claim of an interest in lands appearing in some legal form, but which is in fact unfounded, and which it would be inequitable to enforce.[58]

Sufficiency of establishment of title at law. — The decision of a commissioner of the land office denying a patent, on the ground that the land sought to be patented was made land, and as such belonged to a riparian proprietor and was not subject to warrant, was not a judicial determination of the legal title to the land sought to be patented as between the applicants for the patent and the county caveator, who claimed the made land by virtue of his title as a prior patentee of an island, to which he asserted the made land became attached by accretion. A right of way over land which is created by the owner of the title, and exists by his grant, cannot be considered a cloud on his title. Bresler v. Pitts, 58 Mich. 347, 25 N. W. 311.

When, after the conveyance of real estate, a commission of lunacy is taken out and executed against the grantor, by the finding in which it appeared that the grantor had been a lunatic without a lucid interval from a time anterior to the date of the conveyance, and such finding has been confirmed by the court, the circumstance casts such a cloud on the title of the purchaser that he may ask for equitable relief by a bill in the nature of a bill quia timet. Yauger v. Skinner, 14 N. 2. Necessary Attributes — a. Must Be Apparently Valid. Equity will not interfere to remove a cloud on title where the invalidity of the instrument or claim complained of appears on its face;[59] where extrinsic facts must be proved for the purpose of establishing its validity;[60] or where the party claiming under it must, in order to recover thereon, necessarily offer evidence inevitably showing its invalidity and destroying its effect.[61] But whenever the instrument or claim of defendant appears to be valid on its face, but for some reason or matter that can only be shown by extrinsic evidence is in fact void,[62] and especially if such evidence be in possession, accompanied by declarations of the invalidity of his deed, are not to be deemed a cloud on the title.

Instrument not entitled to record.— Since an interest or agreement may be valid between the parties and those having actual notice, although not entitled to be admitted to record, the owner of property whose title is clouded by the recording of an instrument may maintain a suit to have the record canceled, although the instrument was not entitled to go on the record. Question of construction.— Where both parties are claiming under the same instrument, and the question is purely one of construction, no case is presented for the removal of a cloud on the title. Ecton v. Smith, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 224; Brown v. Austen, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 341, 22 How. Pr. 394.

Compare Stevens v. Ryerson, 6 N. J. Eq. 477 (holding that equity may decree the cancellation of an instrument, although it is a nullity, on the ground that its existence may be a cloud on the complainant's title, or subject him to litigation at a future period when the facts become involved in obscurity); Day Land, etc., Co. v. State, 68 Tex. 526, 4 S. W. 865 (holding that a defendant who asserts a claim, even under an instrument void on its face, cannot be heard to say that it has not such a semblance of validity as to create a cloud on the title of the property which it professes to convey, which will prejudice the right of the real owner if it be not removed, and in such case the court has power, which it must exercise, not only to declare the instrument void, but to cancel it).

Special circumstances must be shown.— If the instrument against which relief is prayed for be void on its face, so that an action based thereon must fall by its own weight, then the title of the party plaintiff is not necessarily clouded thereby, and he ought, if he would maintain an action to have it removed, show some special circumstances which entitle him, in the view of a court of equity, to a decree for that purpose.

A tax deed purporting to convey one vigintillionth part of a lot is void upon its face and does not constitute a cloud on title, since the portion of the lot purporting to be conveyed is not susceptible of possession and has no practical existence. oral,[63] equity will entertain a bill to remove such claim or instrument as a cloud on title. And where the deed or other instrument sought to be set aside is a mere nullity, but, left in an uncanceled state, may be a cloud on title, it is immaterial whether it was originally invalid by reason of extrinsic facts,[64] or has become insufficient by reason of subsequent events not impeaching its original validity, but only destroying its future operation.[65]

b. Must Be Capable of Embarrassing Title. In order to maintain an action to remove a cloud on title, the instrument or claim complained of must not only be clearly invalid or inequitable, but must be such as may, either now or in the future, embarrass the real owner in controverting it;[66] and whenever the instrument or claim complained of is not one which, presently, or in the future, will embarrass plaintiff or endanger his title, equity will refuse to entertain the bill.[67]

3. Particular Instruments or Matters — a. Deeds — (i) Void on Face — (a) In General. It is always assumed, when a court of equity interferes, that the title of the party complaining is affected by a hostile title, apparently good, but really defective and inequitable by something not appearing on its face.[68] Hence the court never intervenes to cancel or remove, as a cloud on title, a deed void on its face;[69] and the same is true, although the invalidity does not appear on the

If the estate of a grantee in a deed procured by fraud is postponed until the death of a given person, a bill in equity lies to set aside the deed as a cloud on title. Martin v. Graves, 5 Allen (Mass.) 601.

Circumstances not showing fraud.—A patentee of military boundary land conveyed the land to E and the deed was duly recorded. Forty years afterward C purchased and obtained a deed of the same from the heirs of the patentee, claiming that the deed to E was made before issuance of the patent. It was held that no such fraud could be predicated of the deed from the heirs as to give equity jurisdiction of a bill to cancel the same. Comstock v. Henneberry, 66 Ill. 212.

(D) Based on Illegal Consideration. If a deed, apparently valid on its face, is in reality based on an illegal consideration, it constitutes a cloud on title.[78]

(E) Rescinded by Redelivery and Acts of Abandonment. After a conveyance of land has been rescinded by redelivery of the deed to the grantor and unequivocal acts of abandonment on the part of the grantee, the deed constitutes a cloud on the grantor's title which equity will remove.[79]

(F) Executed by Agent After Principal's Death. A deed executed by an agent under a power not coupled with an interest, after the death of the principal, but antedated, constitutes a cloud on title which a court of equity will remove.[80]

(G) Containing Conditions Precedent That Have Not Been Performed. When an instrument in the form of a conveyance on condition precedent has been recorded by the grantee, who is asserting rights thereunder, although no estate ever vested in him because the condition was not performed, these facts resting on extrinsic evidence, equity will decree a cancellation at the instance of the grantor.[81] So too where the grantee in a deed containing a condition precedent has failed to comply with the terms of the grant, or has abandoned the estate, and the grantor is in possession, the latter may maintain a bill in equity to cancel the deed as a cloud on title.[82]

(H) Including Lands by Mistake. Equity will quiet title to that part of a tract of land included by a mistake in a conveyance regular on its face,[83] at least where complainant and his grantors have remained in possession ever since the conveyance was made.[84]

(III) Not Capable of Being Used to Injure Owner. Equity will not interfere where the purpose of the deed is clear and it cannot operate presently or in the future to the injury of the true owner.[85]

b. Letters Patent For Land. Although, where evidence dehors letters patent for land is required to show the invalidity thereof, the patent can be avoided only by a direct proceeding by the state to review the action of the commissioners of the land office, or by action in equity to vacate the patent, yet an individual may bring an action in equity to remove from his title a cloud consisting of a patent from the state.[86]

c. Mortgages. A mortgage which is invalid on its face,[87] or whose invalidity will appear from the proof which the mortgagee must reasonably make in order to establish it,[88] does not constitute a cloud on title justifying the intervention

Evidence not going to the validity of mortgage.— The right to have a mortgage canceled as a cloud on title will not be denied because the mortgage is not enforceable with-

of equity. But a mortgage, valid on its face, and requiring proof of extrinsic circumstances to show its invalidity, constitutes a cloud on title which equity will remove; [89] and this is so whether the mortgage was, in its inception, not a valid lien on the property covered by it,[90] or has since ceased to be a valid lien.[91] An action to quiet title against the holder of a mortgage, on the naked ground that the right to foreclose the mortgage is barred by limitations, is not maintainable,[92] unless the right to such an action is given by statute.[93] However, one seeking to quiet his title to realty may interpose the bar of the statute against a mortgagee defendant seeking to foreclose in such action his mortgage lien.[94]

d. Leases. Whenever proof of extrinsic facts is necessary to establish that an outstanding lease, regular on its face, was invalid at its inception,[95] or, although originally valid, has, by subsequent events, become functus officio,[96] it constitutes a cloud on title.

Cloud rightfully existing.— Where a vendee, knowing of an adverse claim against his vendor, took a deed with covenant of title, and gave a mortgage not to be due until the vendor should procure a quitclaim deed from the adverse claimant, which was not done within the time stipulated, the mortgage was not a cloud on the vendee's title. Although the statute provides that the payment of a mortgage divests the title passing by the mortgage, yet a mortgagor of land, in possession, who has fully paid the debt, may sue to have the payment established and the mortgage canceled as a cloud on his title. Kelly v. Martin, 107 Ala. 479, 13 So. 132, where the court says that the payment, resting in parol, the evidence of it may be readily lost by death, removal, or failure of recollection of witnesses, or other causes, while the mortgage outstanding contains in itself enduring evidence, prima facie, that the legal title has passed to the mortgagee, and still remains in him, and it is manifest therefore that the mortgagor is subjected to the danger of the loss of his estate, unless some remedy is afforded him of establishing the payment, and withdrawing from the mortagee the instrument of such possible loss with which he is armed.

Unrecorded mortgage.—A mortgage constitutes a cloud on title which equity will remove, where it is apparently valid on its face, but has ceased to be a valid lien on the lands covered by it, although such mortgage has never been recorded. e. Mechanics' Liens. Equity will remove a cloud on the title caused by the record of a mechanic's lien which has become forfeited by the lien claimant's failure to institute foreclosure proceedings.[97]

f. Trusts — (i) In General. A paper recorded in a registry of deeds, giving notice that certain realty is claimed to be a trust, in favor of the signer and others, and that he will dispute any title which the holder of the present title will attempt to give, is not a cloud on his title.[98] But a devise to a husband in trust during his life, in conflict with his life-estate as tenant by curtesy, will be removed as a cloud on title, where the facts necessary to show the invalidity of the devise must be shown by extrinsic evidence.[99]

(ii) Nominal Trusts. Although the court will ordinarily refuse to decree a conveyance from a nominal trustee in cases where the legal estate is executed in the trustee by force of law,[1] yet when a nominal trust beclouds the title and embarrasses the rights of alienation, a conveyance will be decreed.[2]

g. Wills. Disposition of property by will which the testator may not own does not give a court of equity jurisdiction to cancel the alleged will before its probate as a cloud on the title of one averring himself to be the true owner.[3] But where a will devising land is executed under such conditions as to be irrevocable, a subsequent will, inconsistent therewith, may be adjudged void as a cloud on title at the suit of those claiming under the original devise.[4]

h. Claims of Dower. When the invalidity of a claim of dower in land does not appear upon record, but can only be shown by extrinsic evidence, a bill in equity to remove such claim as a cloud on title will lie.[5]

i. Contracts For Sale of Land — (i) Unrecorded. An unrecorded contract for the sale or exchange of lands is not a cloud on the title.[6]

(ii) Recorded. If a recorded executory contract for sale of land is void on its face,[7] or its invalidity will necessarily appear in the proceeding by one claiming

Rights of lessee of vendee of lands terminating with latter's rights.—A vendee drew a draft for the amount of the purchase-money and placed it in the hands of a banker for collection, and the owner of the land placed his deed to the purchaser in the hands of the same banker, to be delivered on condition that if the draft was duly paid, and the purchaser agreed that if the draft was not duly paid he would relinquish all his rights to the land under the contract, and the draft was returned protested for non-payment. It was held that no title passed by the deed and the claim of the grantee to the land under the contract was extinguished, and all rights of those claiming under him ceased, and hence that a lease from him which stood on the record was a cloud on the title of the owner which would be removed by a court of equity. Assignment of claim of dower.— In an action by the owners of a deceased husband's land against the assignee of a wife's dower interest, it appeared that no consideration passed for the assignment; that it was recorded, and appeared regular on its face; that complainants were in possession of the land affected by it, and could not establish their rights by any proceeding at law; and that it was a cloud on their title. It was held that equity had jurisdiction to enjoin the assignee from transferring his interest, and to compel the surrender and cancellation of the assignment. Lewis v. Parrott, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. under it and attempting its enforcement,[8] it constitutes no cloud on title; but where the contract is not void on its face, and its invalidity can only be shown by extrinsic evidence, it constitutes a cloud on title which equity has jurisdiction to remove.[9]

j. Sales — (i) Judicial Sales — (a) Under Execution — (1) In General. A bill in equity will lie to remove as a cloud on title a sale of land under execution, where the invalidity of the sale can be shown only by extrinsic proof;[10] but equity will not interfere to remove such a sale as a cloud on title when the complainant's title is not affected thereby, and he is not under the necessity of resorting to extrinsic proof to show its invalidity.[11]

(2) Of Exempt Property. The sale of a homestead under an execution forms a cloud on the title to the homestead which a court of equity will remove.[12]

(B) In Foreclosure. A sale under a decree in suit to foreclose a mortgage does not constitute a cloud on title where the foreclosure proceedings are void on their face;[13] but the rule is otherwise where the foreclosure proceedings are apparently valid on their face, and their invalidity can only be shown by resort to extrinsic evidence.[14]

(II) Sale of Estate Lands by Administrator. Where a sale of estate lands by an administrator is void and the conveyance discloses its invalidity, it casts no cloud on title of which equity will take cognizance.[15] Nor is a sale of land by an administrator without an order of the probate court,[16] or under an order which is void for want of jurisdiction,[17] such a cloud on title as will justify the interference of a court of equity.

k. Assessments — (I) In General. An assessment which is really invalid, but apparently authorized and regular, may be set aside as a cloud on title, if extrinsic proof must be made to show the invalidity of the assessment,[18] and such extrinsic proof in aid of the action affects the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities;[19] but the contrary rule obtains where the invalidity of the assessment appears on the face of the proceeding,[20] or where the defect will necessarily appear in any proceedings which the party claiming under the lien of the assessment must produce to establish his title.[21]

(II) Sale Thereunder — (A) In General. Equitable intervention to set aside an assessment sale is not authorized where the record is void on its face,[22] or where the defect relied on to render it valid would necessarily be exposed by the proof required from one claiming under it in proceedings to establish his claim.[23]

(B) Certificate of. The owner of land may not maintain an action in equity to cancel as a cloud on his title a certificate of sale, made under an assessment, when such certificate is void on its face,[24] or where it is defective for want of preliminary proceedings which the party claiming under it would be bound to show.[25] But where the certificate is made presumptive evidence that such proceedings were had, the action lies, if the certificate be in fact void for a defect in the proceeding.[26] So too the action lies if it is necessary to resort to extrinsic evidence to show that the certificate is inoperative and void.[27]

(C) Lease Given on. Where the statute makes a lease given on the sale of land for assessments presumptive evidence of the regularity of the sale and all proceedings prior thereto, such a lease, although in fact invalid for irregularity in the prior proceedings, is an apparent cloud on the title of the land which it purports to lease, and the owner may maintain a suit in equity to set it aside.[28]

l. Judgments or Decrees — (I) In General. An action in equity will lie to cancel an invalid judgment or decree which is an apparent cloud on the title to land.[29]

(II) Must Be Apparently Valid on Its Face. A judgment or decree, void on its face, carries its own condemnation with it, and it is not such a cloud on

A decree affecting land in a suit between strangers to the true title does not constitute a cloud on the title of the true owner. Haggart v. Chapman, etc., Land Co., 77 Ark. 527, 92 S. W. 792.

A bill brought by a third party holding an equitable title to the land conveyed to a creditor to secure a debt, and also claiming under an execution sale antedating a judgment obtained by the creditor on reconveying the land, seeking to have such judgment declared a nullity, and to enjoin the marshal from dispossessing him thereunder, will not be dismissed on demurrer. Alexander v. Scotland Mortg. Co., 47 Fed. 131.

A judgment against one who has previously made a general assignment for creditors, valid by state laws, recovered before an assignee in bankruptcy has procured the assignment to be set aside, is not a cloud on title of the assignee under the general assignment. Belden v. Smith, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,242, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 302.

Decree virtually wiped out.—A decree setting aside a conveyance as made to defraud grantor's creditors may in a proper case be construed to leave the same in force as between the parties, and in such case, if the creditors were satisfied without a sale of the land, the decree is virtually wiped out, and thenceforward is no cloud on the title claimed under the deed. Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200.

title as to justify the interposition of a court of equity;[30] but the rule is otherwise where a judgment or decree is valid on its face, and its invalidity can only be shown by proof of extrinsic facts.[31]

m. Proceedings at Law — (i) In General. Where a valid objection appears on the face of the proceedings at law through which the adverse party can alone claim title to plaintiff's land, there is not in law such a cloud on the title as to force him to apply to a court of equity to set aside such proceedings;[32] but where the claim of the adverse party to the land is valid on the face of the proceeding sought to be set aside, and extrinsic facts are necessary to show their invalidity, a case is made out for the interference of equity.[33]

(ii) Attachment Proceedings. Where the parties seek to remove all liens and encumbrances, if any, created by proceedings in attachment, and so to quiet their title, equity has jurisdiction.[34] But an action to remove a cloud on title will not lie in favor of one claiming perfect title to lands against another attaching it as the property of a third person, since it does not constitute a cloud on title.[35]

n. Lis Pendens. An owner of real estate is entitled to maintain a suit to set aside a lis pendens as a cloud on his title,[36] and this without waiting for a termination of the suit in which the lis pendens was filed.[37]

B. Apprehended or Threatened Cloud — 1. In General. To authorize an action to prevent a cloud being cast on title, it must be made clear that there is a fixed determination on the part of defendant to create a cloud,[38] and it is not sufficient that the danger is merely speculative.[39]

Where a bill claiming title under a destroyed deed was dismissed for want of prosecution, and the proceedings appeared on record, it is a semblance of title appearing in a legal form which cannot be enforced either at law or in equity; and therefore constitutes a cloud on the owner's title. Shultz v. Shultz, 159 Ill. 654, 43 N. E. 800, 50 Am. St. Rep. 188.

Amended return to process.— The statutes prohibit the sheriff from executing process in a case in which he has an interest. Service of summons was made by a deputy sheriff, but the return was insufficient to confer jurisdiction of the person of defendant; the sheriff having become interested as a warrantor of the property in issue after his term of office had expired, amended the return so as to obviate the objection to the jurisdiction. It was held that the amendment operated as a cloud on defendant's title to the land, justifying the interference of a court of equity. O'Conner v. Wilson, 57 Ill. 226.

Contract for conveyance.—A husband conveyed his farm to his wife and the two joined in a mortgage thereof, the wife thereafter executing to the husband a contract to reconvey on his paying the mortgage, and also giving him a right to hold possession during the time the mortgage was to run. Attachments against the husband were levied on the farm as his real estate, and the attachment debtor made assignments of his contract and quitclaimed the farm to his wife. Bankruptcy proceedings were instituted against him, resulting in an adjudication of bankruptcy. It was held that the husband could maintain a bill to quiet his title against the attachment. There is a threat to create a cloud which equity will interfere to prevent, whenever an instrument or claim exists which the holder might so utilize as to convert it into a cloud on title by action of his own, and he refuses to surrender it, and thus put an end to this power. 2. Levy — a. Under Execution. A court of equity will restrain a threatened levy of execution on realty which is not subject to levy, and thus prevent a cloud being cast on title.[40] So too equity will enjoin a creditor, who has consented to an assignment for the benefit of creditors, from levying on the assignee's realty.[41]

b. For Taxes. A court of equity has power to enjoin the taxing authorities from making an unlawful levy which will result in casting a cloud on title.[42]

3. Sale — a. In General. It is well settled that equity will interfere by injunction to prevent the wrongful sale of land where such sale will result in casting a cloud on the title of the real owner of the property,[43] although no title would in fact pass to the purchaser at the sale.[44]

b. By Conveyance Under Pretense of Right. Equity will interfere to prevent the giving of a conveyance of realty, under pretense of right, which will operate as a cloud on title.[45] But to constitute such a cloud on title as would warrant equity in restraining the giving of a deed, it must appear that the owner of the property in an action by the adverse party, founded on the deed, would have to offer evidence to defeat a recovery.[46] Thus where a deed has never been recorded because of its destruction or loss,[47] or because of defects in the acknowledgment which prevent its being recorded,[48] a sale by the grantor or his legal representative will be restrained at the instance of the grantee in whom title has vested. But where complainant is in possession and has a good record title,[49] where his rights depend upon the construction of recorded instruments,[50] where the party sought to be enjoined has apparent title to the property on which he resides,[51] or where purchasers buy at their peril,[52] the injunction is unnecessary. Likewise, where the filing of a lis pendens will protect complainant, no injunction will be granted against a threatened wrongful sale of land on the ground of preventing a cloud on title.[53]

c. Under Execution. Equity will enjoin an execution sale which, although ineffectual to pass title, would be sufficient to cast a cloud on the complainant's title,[54] the jurisdiction so to do being coextensive with the jurisdiction to set aside and order to be canceled a deed of the property.[55] But if the judgment on which an execution issues,[56] or the execution itself,[57] is void on its face, equity will not interfere to restrain a sale of realty levied on under the execution.

d. Under Void Decree. A sale of land under a decree void on its face will, it has been held, be enjoined when necessary to prevent a cloud on plaintiff's title.[58]

e. Under Void Municipal Assessment. Equity will intervene to prevent a cloud being cast on title by a sale and conveyance of lands for the payment of municipal taxes levied under a void assessment, by statute such conveyance being presumptive evidence of title.[59]

f. Of Land Purchased at Tax-Sale. An injunction to prevent, as a threatened cloud on title, the sale of land previously purchased at a tax-sale, on the ground that the tax-sale passed no title, will be refused, since such mischief has already been done by the first sale.[60]

Execution issued on judgment against holder of legal title, as trustee.—A bill to restrain a sale of land on the ground that it would cast a cloud on plaintiff's title will lie where it appears that defendant, having a judgment against P, levied an execution on real estate, the legal title to which is in P, as trustee for the use of plaintiff, a religious association and sole owner of the land, and that plaintiff's equitable title is not a matter of record, but depends upon matters resting largely with the association. g. Under Mortgage — (i) In General. A sale under a mortgage of land not included therein cannot cast a cloud on the title of the owner, and will not therefore be restrained as a threatened cloud on title.[61]

(ii) Deed Intended as a Mortgage. A party who has by fraud obtained possession of land by a deed absolute on its face, but intended only as a mortgage, will be restrained from selling it.[62]

4. Making of Lease. Injunction will not lie to prevent one in possession of land under claim of title as against another claimant, who is in no way connected with him in estate, from executing a lease on the ground that it will be a cloud on such other claimant's title.[63] But if a lease made pursuant to a sale for an unpaid street assessment is by law evidence of the regularity of the sale, the making of such lease will be restrained in case of substantial irregularity.[64]

Where defendants are not trespassers, plaintiff in an action to be quieted in his title to a tract of land must make out his title. Phelps v. Hughes, 1 La. Ann. 320.

b. Sufficiency — (I) In General. To maintain the action to quiet title, or remove a cloud thereon, plaintiff must have a good and valid title, legal [67] or equitable,[68] or, as held in a few jurisdictions, a legal and equitable title, connected with possession [69] to the lands in controversy.

(II) Paramount Title. The rule is that plaintiff must succeed only on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of his adversary.[70] plaintiff.[74] And it is held in some jurisdictions where the statutory action for determining adverse claims exists that one in possession,[75] and claiming title to the land,[76] has a sufficient estate therein to maintain such an action.

(iv) Title Derived From Common Source. It is sufficient for plaintiff to deraign his title from the grantor under whom both parties claim.[77]

(v) Record or Paper Title. The general rule is that when reliance is placed solely upon paper title, the chain thereof must be from the original patentee [78] or some grantor in possession.[79] The action may be based on a quitclaim deed from one in possession, where at the time of the giving the deed there was an existing statutory provision that such deed should be sufficient to convey all the estate which could lawfully be conveyed by a deed of bargain and sale; [80] upon an unrecorded deed, when such facts are shown as to have put any one who was dealing with the estate on notice; [81] or upon a defective deed which is the result of a mistake, against which the law would afford relief.[82]

(vi) Extent of Interest. If the interest of plaintiff is a title in fee, such interest may be quieted; if a less interest, the less interest may likewise be quieted.[83]

A quitclaim deed from another who is not shown to have been in possession when he made the deed does not suffice as a basis for a suit to quiet title. Hamilton v. Beaudreau, 78 Wis. 584, 47 N. W. 952.

Where, in a suit to remove a cloud, plaintiff claims under a quitclaim deed from persons never in possession, while defendant claims by warranty for value from persons under whom plaintiff claims, the fact that plaintiff secured his quitclaim deed immediately before the institution of the suit does not defeat his right to maintain it. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Oreg. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491.

Neither grantee nor grantor in possession. —A quitclaim deed implies an adverse title in the party who executes it and cannot be treated as passing anything more than a doubtful title to the releasee, who, as complainant, cannot maintain a bill to remove clouds on his title, especially when it is not shown that either he or the person from whom he claims was in possession of the land at the time the deed was executed. (B) Of Administrators. Beyond the naked power to sell to pay debts, in the mode provided by statute, an administrator has no concern with the lands of his intestate,[86] and, having no interest, cannot, in the absence of express statutory authority,[87] maintain an action to remove a cloud on, or quiet the title to, the lands of which his intestate died seized.[88]

The fact that a vendor has contracted to convey land to another does not prevent his bringing an action to quiet title as against his vendee, who has abandoned the contract, as he is still the owner of the legal title, and has the right to protect it.[89]

Agreement to procure discharge of lien.—A grantor who has no longer any interest in the land cannot maintain an action to remove an apparent lien thereon as being a cloud on his title, on the ground that he agreed with his grantee that he would procure the lien to be discharged. Townsend v. Goelet, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 187.

Whole interest not parted with.— In an action to remove a cloud on title, it appeared that plaintiff, since the commencement of the suit and before the hearing, conveyed the premises by warranty deed to a third person, the grantee retaining part of the consideration, to be paid on the clearing of the title. It was held that plaintiff had not parted with his whole interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and had sufficient interest therein to entitle him to relief. to be lost, or the vendee's inertia would result in the perfecting of an adverse title.[92]

(D) Of Purchasers — (1) RECEIVING DEFECTIVE CONVEYANCE. A purchaser for value to whom a defective conveyance has been made and who has a right to call for the legal title may maintain a bill to quiet his title as against a subsequent purchaser for value, with notice of the prior equitable right.[93] So the vendor in such a case may be restrained from reclaiming the land by reason of the defect by a bill in the nature of a bill to quiet title.[94]

(2) HOLDING EXECUTORY CONTRACT OF PURCHASE. In those jurisdictions where none but a legal title suffices, a vendee under an executory contract of sale cannot maintain a bill to quiet title;[95] but where an equitable title is sufficient, a vendee under such a contract, being considered as having the equitable estate, may maintain the action.[96]

(3) AT JUDICIAL SALE — (a) IN GENERAL. A person deducing his title to lands through a judicial sale may maintain an action to quiet title to such lands,[97] except where the proceedings which were the basis of such sale, and on which the validity of complainant's title depends, are, for jurisdictional defects,[98] or for fraud,[99] shown to be void; or where the sale was on a judgment, and it is shown that the debt on which the judgment was obtained had been fully paid before the commencement of the action.[1]

Bank v. Cochran, 9 Dana 395, holding that the fact that the purchasers at a judicial sale, to whom an equitable title passes, sold their estate, does not preclude them from maintaining a bill to perfect the title of the vendees, to whom they are responsible and who are before the court.

If the warrantor of a title executes at the request of the warrantee an instrument which may injure the title, the warrantor is not thereby made liable on his covenant of warranty, and hence cannot maintain a bill in equity to clear the title from such instrument, without allegation and proof that such warrantee has, on request, refused to move in the matter. Cobb v. Baker, 95 Me. 89, 49 Atl. 425.

Part of purchase-price not to be paid until removal of cloud on title.— One who conveyed land by warranty deed with full covenants, and delivered possession to the grantee under an agreement that part of the purchase-price should be deposited with a third person, and should not be paid to the grantor until a cloud on the title was removed, has sufficient interest to maintain a bill to remove the cloud. out proving his title, may maintain an action to quiet his title against strangers to the equity of redemption.[2] But where a mortgagor has no title to the land, and the purchaser at foreclosure sale takes with notice, an action by the latter to quiet title must fail,[3] irrespective of any question whether the rights of the owner's representatives are barred by the statute of limitations by virtue of their having discovered the fraud by which mortgagor secured the apparent title.[4]

(c) Partition Sale. Where a sale in partition has not been reported nor confirmed, and no deed has been delivered, a purchaser at such sale is not entitled to maintain an action to remove a cloud on the title to the lands purchased.[5]

(e) Of Creditors — (1) Judgment Creditors. One who has recovered judgment at law, and levied his execution on the only realty of defendant, is entitled to a bill in chancery to remove a cloud on the title of such real estate.[6]

(2) Estate Creditors. A creditor of an estate has no interest such as will enable him to maintain an action to quiet title to the estate lands,[7] except by leave of court, after refusal of the administrator to bring suit.[8]

(f) Homestead Interest. An action may be brought by the holder of a homestead interest to quiet title thereto.[9]

(k) Interest as Mortgagee. In those jurisdictions where a mortgage is regarded as passing the whole legal title to the estate pledged to the mortgagee, and legal title in plaintiff is regarded as sufficient for the maintenance of an action to quiet title, a mortgagee may maintain suit to quiet title preparatory to sale under the mortgage.[14] But the rule is otherwise in those jurisdictions where a mortgage is

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Quieting Title," § 8.

The reason for the rule is that when the title is a purely legal one and defendant is in possession, the remedy at law is plain, adequate, and complete, and an action of ejectment cannot be maintained under the guise of a bill in equity. Tyson v. Brown, 64 Ala. 244; Organ v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 51 Ark. 235, 11 S. W. 96; Alton M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Buckmaster, 13 Ill. 201.

Hardship of taking possession no excuse.— A bill which is defective as one to quiet title because the complainant is not in possession will not be sustained on the ground of the extensive land possessions of the complainant under a land grant, and the hardship of taking possession of all such land before bringing suit. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Amacker, 49 Fed. 529, 1 C. C. A. 345.

Both parties out of possession.— Where a suit to quiet title presents, in effect, a suit by one out of possession (there being nothing, so far as appears, to prevent either from taking possession) to have a determination between them as to who is and who is not the heir at law of the former owner, equity will not take jurisdiction. Marks v. Main, 4 Mackay (D. C.) 559. But where neither party is in possession, and the person in possession claims through and by virtue of plaintiff's title, a bill to quiet title may be maintained. Heppenstall v. Leng, 217 Pa. St. 491, 66 Atl. 991, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 652.

An alleged necessity for an accounting does not confer jurisdiction and equity of an action to quiet title, where plaintiff is not in possession. Bearden v. Brenner, 120 Fed. 690; Hanley v. Kansas, etc., Coal Co., 110 Fed. 62.

Defendant's possession subordinate to plaintiff's legal title.— Where the facts stated in a bill show that the legal title claimed by plaintiff is not disputed by the claimant in possession, but that such defendant sets up some equity not affecting the legal right of possession, but which operates as a cloud and the removal of the cloud is prayed for only as an incident to that relief.[19] Hence equity will entertain a bill to have canceled as a cloud on title an instrument, the execution of which is shown by proper averments to have been procured by fraud, notwithstanding the fact that plaintiff is out of possession.[20]

(B) Exceptions — (1) In Favor of Holder of Future Estate. An exception to the general rule is recognized in favor of the holder of a future estate, such as a remainderman, who, pending the possession of the life-tenant, can maintain an action to quiet his title.[21]

(2) Where No Adequate Remedy at Law Available. The general rule that a bill to quiet title or remove cloud can only be maintained when plaintiff is in possession is subject to the exception that, when plaintiff holds the legal title under such circumstances that there is no adequate remedy at law available, equity gives relief.[22]

(II) When Title or Interest Equitable. Where plaintiff's title or interest is an equitable one, possession by him is not necessary to equitable jurisdiction.[23]

on the legal title, then equity has jurisdiction, because an action at law would not afford an adequate remedy, and in such case the possession by defendant, in subordination to plaintiff's legal title, will not defeat the jurisdiction. Holden v. Holden, 24 Ill. App. 106.

(III) STATUTES DISPENSING WITH — (A) In General. In several states jurisdiction in equity has been enlarged so as to permit actions to quiet title, or remove cloud thereon, to be maintained even where plaintiff is not in possession.[24]

(B) As to Vacant or Unoccupied Lands. By provision of statute in many states necessity of possession by plaintiff is dispensed with when vacant or unoccupied lands form the subject-matter of the action.[25]

(IV) WAIVER OF — (A) In General. The objection that the complainant in a suit to quiet title is not in possession, if not taken by demurrer, plea, or answer, is deemed waived.[26]

(B) By Filing Cross Bill. A defendant who files a cross bill to quiet title thereby gives the court jurisdiction of the whole controversy, although plaintiff is not in possession.[27]

b. Sufficiency — (i) In General. Whenever possession is a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action, possession in fact, as distinguished from constructive possession simply by virtue of legal title, is contemplated.[29] Hence the rule is that one having the legal title, and in constructive possession only, cannot maintain the action.[30] To this rule, however, an exception is recognized in some jurisdictions, as where the lands forming the subject-matter of the action are vacant and unoccupied, in which case the constructive possession arising from legal ownership is regarded as sufficient to support the action.[31] It has been held also that constructive possession will support the statutory action to determine adverse claims, where the plain intent of the statute, by merely using the word "possession," is to dispense with actual possession.[32]

(II) Possession of Agent. In some jurisdictions possession of land by plaintiff's agent is, by statute, sufficiently the possession of plaintiff to sustain an action to quiet title;[33] and, independently of statute, it has been held that possession of a duly authorized agent, having charge of the land and engaged in keeping off trespassers, is sufficient to sustain an action to quiet title in favor of the owner of the legal title who is himself a non-resident.[34]

"Peaceable possession" refers to the character of the possession, and so long as one's possession is so clear that no one is denying the fact of his actual or constructive possession it is peaceable, although some other person may be denying his right to possession. George E. Wood Lumber Co. v. Williams, (Ala. 1908) 47 So. 202.

The possession in defendant which will defeat an action to quiet title need not be technically adverse, so as to ripen into title in time; but may be merely a disputed or scrambling possession. Crabtree v. Alabama State Land Co., (Ala. 1908) 46 So. 450.

That the adverse claimant is a tenant in common with complainant does not qualify the peaceable possession of the latter under claim of title. Powell v. Mayo, 24 N. J. Eq. 178.

Charles A. Warren Co. v. All Person, etc., 153 Cal. 771, 96 Pac. 807.

Possession held not to be peaceable.— Where defendants asserted title to an easement in a watercourse across plaintiff's premises, and had gone on the premises without plaintiff's consent, to repair the stream actual or constructive,[39] as distinguished from disputed or scrambling possession. Under such a statute it is held that plaintiff need only be in peaceable possession of the locus in quo as against defendant, without regard to the claims of third persons.[40]

(VII) POSSESSION OF PART OF TRACT. Actual possession by plaintiff of the particular tract is sufficient possession of the adjoining ground, held under the same title and used in connection therewith,[41] at least where no one is in actual adverse possession of such adjoining ground.[42]

(VIII) POSSESSION MUST BE LAWFUL. The possession that gives jurisdiction in actions to quiet title, whenever possession is a jurisdictional fact, must be such as was acquired in a legal manner,[43] and hence possession wrongfully every year since 1879, and had destroyed a gate erected by plaintiff to lessen the flow of the water, equity has no jurisdiction, prior to the settlement of the question of defendant's rights at law, to quiet title to the easement, under an act conferring jurisdiction in case plaintiff is in peaceable possession of the property. De Hanne v. Bryant, 61 N. J. Eq. 141, 48 Atl. 220.

Possession held to be peaceable.— Possession of complainant is peaceable, where defendant setting up a claim of title has not interfered with plaintiff's possession by an act which is suable at law, and suit upon which will or may involve the title of defendant. Allaire v. Ketcham, 55 N. J. Eq. 168, 35 Atl. 900. The easement in a public square acquired by dedication is an interest falling within the protection afforded by Code (1896), §§ 809–813, giving the right to file a bill to settle title to any one in peaceable possession of lands, claiming to own the same. Oates v. Headland, (Ala. 1908) 45 So. 910. Under the statute authorizing a bill to quiet title by one in peaceable possession of lands, claiming to own the same, whose title thereto is disputed, acts of possession, done without dispute, under a belief and claim on the part of the complainant that she owned the premises, and showing an occupation and use of the property for all of the purposes for which its nature enabled it to be used, are a sufficient exhibition of the peaceable possession under claim of ownership required by statute. Blakeman v. Bourgeois, 59 N. J. Eq. 473, 45 Atl. 594.

39. George E. Wood Lumber Co. v. Williams, (Ala. 1908) 47 So. 202, holding that one having a legal estate in fee in the land has the "constructive" possession, unless there is an actual possession in someone else.

Where one in possession of a tract of land purchases an adjoining tract, he will be presumed to have extended his possession over the part so acquired, and may maintain a bill to quiet title as to it. Cates v. Loftus, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 439.

Possession of detached parcel.— Where one has a patent to all unappropriated lands within a certain boundary, possession of certain detached parcels of unappropriated land, separated from the land in dispute by land all appropriated, is not such possession as will extend over all lands unappropriated when the patent issued, so as to enable him to maintain a suit to quiet title. See also Gentile v. Kennedy, 8 N. M. 347, 45 Pac. 879, holding that one having a deed and good title to a tract of land, and actual possession of part of it, has constructive possession of the remainder, enabling him to maintain a suit to quiet title thereto against one who, although having a deed giving him color of title thereto, being in possession of other lands included in his deed, has done nothing but irregular, occasional or equivocal acts to oust the true owner.

Adjoining lands susceptible of occupation for part of year only.— If one who has a paper title to a tract of salt marsh tide land, which is not susceptible of occupation except during three months in the year, and in which there is a dry knoll, has actual possession of the knoll, and there is no adverse possession to the remainder, he may resort to his title deeds to extend his possession to the remainder of the tract, so as to enable him to sue in equity to quiet his title. The statute gives the right of action to any person in possession, irrespective of the mode by which he acquired possession. Reed v. Calderwood, 32 Cal. 109; Scorpion Silver Min. Co. v. Marsano, 10 Nev. 370.

Possession held to have been lawfully ac-obtained,[44] whether by force [45] or fraud,[46] will not suffice. But it has been held immaterial that possession was taken for the purpose of instituting the suit, if it was not tortious or in violation of the prior possession of another.[47]

3. Adverse Claim or Interest of Defendant — a. Necessity. In order to maintain the statutory action to determine adverse claims to realty, there must be a showing that defendant asserts a claim which is adverse to plaintiff's title or possession.[48]

b. What Constitutes — (i) In General. Whenever the statute provides broadly for the determination of adverse claims to realty, it embraces any adverse claim or interest whatever asserted by a person out of possession.[49] The adverse quired.— The complainant acquired title to lands in suit by conveyance from one who had purchased them under a decree for taxes. At the date of the conveyance defendant was in possession by a tenant. The complainant procured the tenant to yield possession to her without process. It was held that, as defendant's title had terminated by operation of law, the complainant's possession, necessary to enable her to maintain a bill to quiet title, was not wrongfully obtained. Lillie v. Snow, 118 Mich. 611, 77 N. W. 241.

Possession acquired by sharp practice.— Where a purchaser out of possession can resort to ejectment, but instead makes an agreement with a tenant in possession by which the latter takes a lease from him in order to proceed in chancery to prevent the jury from passing on the good faith of his purchase, such a possession acquired by sharp practice will not entitle him to maintain a bill to quiet title. Instances.—An action lies in favor of one in possession against a purchaser of the land at execution sale who has served on plaintiff a notice to quit. Lovelady v. Burgess, 32 Oreg. 418, 52 Pac. 25. An attempt to sell land on execution against a third party, even though such claim would not be deemed a cloud on the title under the rule governing courts of equity, is regarded as an adverse claim. Wilhelm v. Woodcock, 11 Oreg. 518, 5 Pac. 202; Murphy v. Sears, 11 Oreg. 127, 4 Pac. 471. A purchaser at an execution sale of land, conveyed by the debtor to defraud creditors, may sue a vendee, with knowledge of the fraudulent intent, to quiet title, under the statute providing that an action may be brought by any person against another, who claims an estate or interest in land adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such claim. Judson v. Lyford, 84 Cal. 505, 24 Pac. 286. Where an exception sale is void, one acquiring title from the execution debtor after the sale can maintain a suit to quiet title on a complaint generally asserting title in himself and that defendant claims some interest in the lands adverse to him. Stumph v. Reger, 92 Ind. 286.

claim or interest contemplated is not, however, simply with reference to the possession, but it must be in the legal sense the assertion of an adverse claim or interest in the property.[50]

(II) Must Be of Present Interest. A claim is not adverse within the meaning of the statute unless it is of a present interest.[51] Accordingly the proceeding will not lie against a remainderman pending possession of the life-tenant,[52] or against one claiming a remainder contingent on the death of plaintiff without issue.[53]

(III) Lien Claims. Under a statute which provides for the determination of adverse estates and interests in land, mere liens are not within the purview of the statute;[54] but where the statute provides broadly for the determination of adverse claims to land, it is applicable to lien claims.[55]

B. Defenses — 1. Particular Defenses — a. Title in Defendant. Plaintiff's right to recover may be defeated by defendant's showing a paramount title in himself,[56] but not if plaintiff acquired his title subsequent to the commencement of the action.[57]

b. Want of Title in Plaintiff. The weakness of plaintiff's title is a good defense in an action to quiet title, whether defendant is in or out of possession,[58] unless both parties derive their title from a common source.[59]

c. Title in Third Person. When plaintiff is in the actual possession of the land in controversy, defendant cannot defeat the action by showing an outstanding paramount right or title in a third person,[60] at least where such outstanding title is not a valid and subsisting one.[61] Nor will the holder of a naked legal title to land, as against a plaintiff in possession thereof, be permitted to set up a counter-

It is unnecessary for plaintiff to wait until he has been disturbed in his possession by an action and judgment against him; it is sufficient if, while he is in possession, a party out of possession claims an adverse estate or interest. Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 259.

A judgment recovered against a grantor, after he had conveyed his land in fraud of his creditors, ceases to be a lien on such land when it is conveyed by the fraudulent grantee to a bona fide purchaser; and therefore a claim by the judgment creditor that his judgment is still enforceable against the land is not a claim adverse to such purchaser, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1638, authorizing a person in possession of land under a claim of title to sue "any other person to compel the determination of any claim adverse to that of the plaintiff." vailing equity in a third person, with whom he is not in privity, and who, being also a party defendant to the action, by his default confesses plaintiff's title.[62] But a defendant in adverse possession may defeat the action by showing a title outstanding in a third person,[63] without connecting himself with that title.[64]

d. Defendant in Possession. Irrespective of his title, possession in defendant is a sufficient defense, where plaintiff shows no title in himself.[65] But possession in defendant, obtained by a forcible entry on the lands, will not defeat plaintiff's right of recovery.[66]

e. Adequate Remedy at Law Available. Generally when the title or interest of plaintiff is legal in its nature, it is a good defense that he has an adequate remedy at law.[67]

f. Existing Agreement by Plaintiff to Dispose of Interest in Lands. The right of plaintiff cannot be defeated by showing that he has entered into an agreement to dispose of the property, where such agreement in no wise affects plaintiff's title.[68] But where plaintiff contracts to sell land to defendant, the contract entitling defendant to possession, and subsequently contracts to sell the land to another party, defendant's contract is, in the absence of the second vendee as a party, a complete defense to an action to quiet title.[69]

g. Limitations.[70] Limitations may be invoked as a defense to the action,[71] except where plaintiff is in the actual possession of the land, claiming to be the owner thereof.[72] But the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of defendant, so that he may invoke its running for the prescribed period as a defense, until some assertion of right or title to the premises has been made by him,[73]

If the outstanding title be barred by the statute of limitations, it will not defeat plaintiff's recovery. Harney v. Morton, 36 Miss. 411.

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Quieting Title," § 47.

Plaintiff is not precluded by laches from maintaining a suit, unless by reason of his course defendant has been misled to his injury, or the property has, at defendant's risk and expense, been greatly enhanced in value, while plaintiff lay by awaiting the turn of events to assert his claim, or unless some other facts exist showing inequity in plaintiff's possession. Costello v. Mulheim, 9 Ariz. 422, 84 Pac. 906.

Laches will not be imputed to one from a mere failure to watch the record to guard against the recording of a forged or undelivered deed purporting to be a conveyance of his real estate. Palmer v. Mizner, 2 Nebr. (Unoff.) 899, 90 N. W. 637. See also Hodges v. Wheeler, 126 Ga. 848, 56 S. E. 76.

A grantee who enters suit within five months from the time of receiving his deed to quiet title as against a cloud prior to his deed is not guilty of laches. Bland v. Windsor, 187 Mo. 108, 86 S. W. 162.

Where a suit to quiet title is brought by the owner of the land within a year of learning of the cloud thereon, he is not guilty of laches. Gilbreath v. Dilday, 152 Ill. 207, 38 N. E. 572.

Until there is interference with the possession of land, no occasion arises for resort to legal remedies, and where land has remained wild until shortly before the commencement of the plaintiff's action, his claim is not stale. Penrose v. Doherty, 70 Ark. 256, 67 S. W. 398.

The fact that the heirs of a record owner of land had become widely scattered is not sufficient to excuse a delay of sixteen years in bringing a suit in equity to quiet title to the land, in the absence of any fraudulent concealment from them of their rights, and of any fiduciary relations between them and defendants in possession or any one under whom the latter claim, and where the land claimed has increased enormously in value during an adverse possession of seventy years, and everyone having actual knowledge concerning ancient transactions regarding the title is dead. Peck v. Haley, 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 224.

Where one is vested with legal title to land, laches will not defeat a suit for it when the right is not yet barred by limitation. Waldron v. Harvey, 54 W. Va. 608, 46 S. E. 603, 102 Am. St. Rep. 959.

such case, to a decree to quiet title to that portion of the property to which the estoppel does not apply.[78]

3. Inconsistent Defenses. Defendant cannot rely on a defense inconsistent with a title, which, by his answer, he sets up in himself.[79]

IV. Proceedings and Relief.

A. Venue.[80] The venue of the action is determined by the situation of the premises,[81] and not by the residence of the party.[82]

B. Process.[83] The process or notice should accurately describe the property and state in general terms the nature and extent of plaintiff's claim.[84] A suit to quiet title being in rem, and the court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, jurisdiction of defendant may be acquired by any reasonable method of imparting notice provided by statute, such as publication,[85] or personal service outside of the state.[86]

C. Parties[87] — 1. Fundamental Rules — a. All Parties in Interest Must Be Joined. Following the practice with respect to parties in civil actions as a general rule all the parties in interest should be joined either as plaintiffs or defendants[88]

Where a tract of land lies partly in one county and partly in another, the circuit court of one county has jurisdiction to try an action to quiet title involving the question of whether a judgment rendered by the circuit court of the other county for the conveyance of the land is absolutely void. Howe v. Anderson, (Ky. 1890) 14 S. W. 216.

The answer is not to be considered in determining whether the action is to quiet title to land within Cal. Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that such actions shall be commenced in the county where the land is situated; the provision referring solely to the time of the commencement of the action. Action transitory.— Ky. Rev. St. § 11, providing that any person holding both the legal title and possession of land may sue in equity in the county where the lands, or some part of them, may lie, any person setting up claims thereto, etc., does not authorize a suit to quiet title against mortgages executed by plaintiff himself, on the ground that they were procured by fraud, to be brought in by the county where the land lies, but the action is a transitory one, to be brought in the county of defendant's residence. Shouse v. Taylor, 115 Ky. 22, 72 S. W. 324, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1842.

Where an action is brought in one of several counties in which the lands are situated to quiet title against several defendants, a disclaimer of the land situated in the county in which the suit is brought will not entitle a defendant who resides in another county, in which alone he alleges that he claims lands adversely to the plaintiff, to a change of the place of trial to the county of his residence. Failure to name heirs.—An action to quiet title will not lie to remove an uncertainty as to whether plaintiff is the only heir of a deceased person, when the proceeding is begun by publication, and is against the heirs of the deceased, without even naming them, since the judgment in such an action could not affect the title of any one. in the bill. And the rule is applicable whether the interests of such parties be equitable merely or legal.[89]

b. Interest Must Be Material and Subsisting. One should not be made a party who has no material, subsisting interest in the realty in controversy.[90]

c. Interest Must Be Such as May Be Affected by Decree. While it is not always necessary to join all who have an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, those who have an interest in the object to be obtained by the suit must be joined.[91]

2. Parties Plaintiff. The suit cannot be brought in the name of one party for the use and benefit of another;[92] it not only may,[93] but must,[94] be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.

3. Parties Defendant — a. Necessary — (i) Persons Who Have Parted With Interest in Property. Generally one who has parted with all his interest in the land in controversy is not a necessary party defendant.[95] It has been held, however, that in a suit to remove a cloud consisting of an alleged fraudulent conveyance, the parties executing such conveyance, against whom fraud is charged, are necessary and indispensable parties, especially where such conveyance contains the covenants of general warranty.[96]

(ii) Common Grantors. The grantor under whom both parties to the action claim is not a necessary party defendant.[97]

The United States is a necessary party to an action to remove a cloud from the title to lands, the right of recovery in which depends on the validity of a government grant of the lands, where two of the questions involved and necessary to a complete determination are as to whether the manner in which the certificate of sale was obtained did not render it void, and whether such conveyance did not work a forfeiture of the grantee's rights to the United States as his grantor. The wife of grantee in a deed alleged to constitute a cloud on title is neither a necessary nor a proper party defendant to a bill to remove the same, on the theory that, being the wife of grantee, she has an inchoate dower interest; for, if the deed is in fact no more than a cloud, no right of dower could arise therefrom against the true owner. (iii) Grantor's Heirs in Suit by Grantee. In a suit by a grantee to remove a cloud on his title cast by the conditions of his deed, the grantor's heirs are necessary parties defendant, in the absence of a personal representative of the deceased grantor.[98]

b. Proper — (i) Persons Who Have Parted With Interest in Property, and Their Heirs. Persons who have parted with their interest in the property,[99] and likewise their heirs,[1] are proper, although not necessary, parties defendant.

(ii) Heirs at Law in Action Against Estate. In an action against an estate to quiet title the heirs at law are proper parties defendant.[2]

4. Joinder of Plaintiffs — a. In General. Those persons whose interests are in harmony, and only those, should be joined as parties plaintiff.[3]

b. Tenants in Common. A tenant in common of realty may maintain an action to quiet title to his independent interest therein, without joining his cotenant as party plaintiff.[4]

c. Joint Tenants. Joint tenants may join in an action to quiet their joint title.[5]

d. Owners in Severalty. Parties claiming land in severalty under a common source of title may quiet their title as against an adverse claim equally affecting the lands of all.[6]

e. Husband and Wife. Husband and wife may join as plaintiffs, it has been held, if the land be owned solely by the wife, and evidence of such ownership will not vitiate a finding for plaintiffs jointly;[7] but the rule is otherwise if the legal title to the land is in the husband solely.[8] And a husband and wife, claiming to own different tracts of land separately, cannot join as plaintiffs in an action to quiet title of all the tracts.[9]

f. Heirs. Where one dies intestate, leaving no debts, and there is no administration on his estate, all the heirs of such decedent may jointly maintain an action to cancel a deed of their ancestor, upon the ground that it is illegal and void, and is a cloud upon their title.[10]

5. Joinder of Defendants. All persons claiming an interest in the land may be joined as defendants,[11] although each claims a separate parcel of the land, under a distinct right.[12] But defendants who do not, in every instance, claim interest adverse to plaintiffs in the same tract of land, cannot be joined in an action to quiet title of all the tracts.[13]

6. Intervention. The general rule is that a stranger will not be permitted on his own application to become a party,[14] except on a proper showing that he is interested in the property in question.[15]

7. Objections as to Parties — a. In General. If the omission to make certain persons parties is vital to the relief asked, the objection may be made at the hearing, and if the objection is so made and the court proceeds to a decree without an order bringing such parties in, it will be reversed on this ground.[16]

Intervention by state.— In an action to quiet title to land in plaintiff's possession, a petition of intervention by the state asking relief against plaintiff should be dismissed if the state has no title, although plaintiff fails to show title, as plaintiff's possession is a sufficient defense against the petition of intervention. Bills held sufficient.— A bill describing certain lands, and alleging plaintiff's ownership and possession thereof, and that defendant claims or is reputed to claim some right, title, or interest therein, and asking that plaintiff's title be quieted, is sufficient. Bledsoe v. Price, 132 Ala. 621, 32 So. 325. A petition to quiet title alleged, in substance, that plaintiff and one L contemplated forming a partnership, and that, for the benefit of the firm, plaintiff purchased the real estate described, with his own means, but, to avoid any further expense in conveying the title to the new firm when formed, he caused the deed to be made so as to convey directly to it; that the partnership was never created and therefore did not take title; that defendants now claim title, the nature and extent of which is unknown to plaintiff, in and to said premises, by virtue of a partnership formed between said plaintiff and defendant and one G, but said partnership was formed long after the purchase of said lands by plaintiff; and that neither of the defendants has any title or interest in said lands. The petition was held to state a cause of action. Fritz v. Grosnicklaus, 20 Nebr. 413, 30 N. W. 411. Where plaintiff alleges that he is the equitable owner in fee simple of the land in suit and entitled to possession; that he and his grantors were in peaceable adverse possession from 1837 until six years before the beginning of the action, at which time defendant unlawfully took possession; and that he has since wrongfully kept plaintiff out of possession, to his damage, a cause of action is stated. Cargar v. Fee, 140 Ind. 572, 39 N. E. 93. A petition, in an action to quiet title, which alleges that plaintiff is the owner in fee and in possession of the real estate in controversy, describing it, and that the defendants claim some interest therein, which claim is entirely unfounded, and prays that title to said premises be quieted in plaintiff, and that defendants be barred, sufficiently complies with Code, § 4224, requiring that petitions in such actions must describe the property and set forth the nature and extent of plaintiff's estate therein, and that he is credibly informed and believes that defendant makes some claim adverse to the petitioner, and pray for the establishment of plaintiff's estate, etc. Richards v. Moran, 137 Iowa 220, 114 N. W. 1035. A bill which alleges that complainant is the absolute owner of certain lands, that defendants were in possession thereof as tenants of complainant under written leases and having no other right or title thereto, and that they conspired together

By statute it is sometimes provided that the pleadings should conform to those in an ordinary civil action.[20]

b. Particular Allegations — (i) As to Title or Interest of Plaintiff— (A) Necessity — (1) In General. It is well settled that the complaint, by appropriate allegations, must show title in plaintiff to the lands in controversy.[21] to defraud complainant of such lands, and in pursuance of such conspiracy executed deeds to one another purporting to convey title to specific parts of such lands, which deeds they caused to be recorded, states a cause of action cognizable in a federal court of equity for the cancellation of such deeds as clouds upon complainant's title. Acord v. Western Pocahontas Corp., 156 Fed. 989. A complaint in a suit to quiet title, which stated that plaintiff was in possession of the land, set up his title, and asked to have the same quieted, was sufficient to give jurisdiction, as it did not affirmatively show that defendants were in possession. Earle Imp. Co. v. Chatfield, 81 Ark. 296, 99 S. W. 84. Under Burns Rev. St. Ind. (1901) § 1082, declaring that an action to quiet title may be brought by any person, either in or out of possession, against one who claims title to or interest in real property adverse to him, although defendant may not be in possession thereof, averments in a complaint that plaintiff is owner and in possession of the land, and that defendant claims an interest therein which is adverse and unfounded, are sufficient against demurrer for want of facts. Huntington v. Townsend, 29 Ind. App. 269, 63 N. E. 36.

Bills held not sufficient.— A complaint alleged that plaintiff's father purchased land in which they, as heirs, claim an undivided half interest; that at the date of such purchase the land was "vacant and unimproved, and the same is still vacant and unimproved"; that plaintiffs have not ceased to be owners of such interest, and have not been divested of possession; that defendant claims the whole of such property under designated deeds, based on a pretended tax-sale,— but contained no direct allegation that plaintiffs or their ancestor ever had actual possession, and no admission of such possession in defendant. The prayer was for a decree quieting plaintiffs "in the possession" of an undivided half, and prohibiting defendant from setting up ownership under his deeds. It was held that the complaint did not state a cause of action. Michel v. Stream, 48 La. Ann. 341, 19 So. 215. A bill to quiet title, which alleges that complainant has title to land as tenant in common as heir of a decedent, and that defendant claims title under a void conveyance from a third person, which conveyance casts a cloud on complainant's title, but which fails to show the facts as to the validity of the conveyance to defendant, and which fails to show the interest of any of the parties in the land or when decedent died, or how any of the parties is heir to him, is demurrable. Thames v. Duvic, 89 Miss. 9, 42 So. 667. A bill which attacks and seeks to set aside a decree rendered in another suit as a cloud on the title to complainant's land, which does not allege that the decree was obtained by fraud so as to give jurisdiction to a court of equity, or that complainant's title was equitable, or the lands were wild and uncultivated, or that he was in possession of them, shows no grounds for equitable relief. Ropes v. Goldman, 52 Fla. 630, 42 So. 322.

A bill under Ala. Code (1896), § 809, to quiet title to land, may be dismissed for failing to aver that there was no other suit pending regarding the same. Corona Coal, etc., Co. v. Swindle, (1907) 44 So. 549; Bolen v. Allen, 150 Ala. 201, 43 So. 202.

Alleging title of common grantor.— If the complaint and answer each show that the parties to the action claim under a common grantor, it is not essential that the complaint should allege the title of the common grantor. Fudickar v. East Riverside Irr. Dist., 109 Cal. 29, 41 Pac. 1024.

(2) Allegation of Possession as Dispensing With. In one jurisdiction the rule seems to be that an allegation that plaintiff is in possession does away with the necessity of alleging title,[22] and in another jurisdiction the statute has so enlarged the equitable jurisdiction that an averment of title is not necessary, an averment of possession in the words of the statute being sufficient.[23]

(B) Sufficiency — (1) In General. The complaint must allege clearly and directly, and with certainty to a common intent, title in plaintiff.[24]

(2) Averring Ultimate Fact of Title. An averment of the ultimate fact of title to the land,[25] such as an averment that plaintiff is the owner,[26] or the owner in fee simple,[27] or the owner of a complete equitable title,[28] without setting out specifically the character of the title, is sufficient.

(3) Averring Facts Showing Title. If the facts stated in the complaint show title in plaintiff, a direct averment of title is unnecessary.[29] Nor is such a complaint insufficient by reason of the inclusion of unnecessary allegations concerning plaintiff's title.[30] But if it avers generally that plaintiff is seized in fee

Where the prime object of a bill is to appoint a partition of land between the complainants and defendants as tenants in common, the fact that the bill also asked for a cancellation of certain conveyances between some of the cotenants as clouds on the title does not render it necessary that the bill should allege that the complainants are in possession, as it would have been had the removal of the cloud been the sole ground of equitable jurisdiction. Gore v. Dickinson, 98 Ala. 363, 11 So. 743, 39 Am. St. Rep. 67.

Rule in federal courts.— In federal courts, sitting in states where the local statutes have dispensed with possession by complainant as a prerequisite to maintaining the suit, a bill in equity to quiet title to land is demurrable, which fails to allege affirmatively that complainant is in possession (Boston, etc., Consol. Copper Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 188 U. S. 645, 23 S. Ct. 440, 47 L. ed. 634; Boston, etc., Consol. Copper, etc., Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 188 U. S. 632, 23 S. Ct. 434, 47 L. ed. 626; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Goodrich, 57 Fed. 879); or that both complainant and defendant are out of possession (Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Goodrich, supra).

Time of possession.— In an action to determine adverse claims to real property under Code, § 449, the complainant must show that plaintiff has been in actual possession of the lands or tenements for three years. Austin v. Goodrich, 49 N. Y. 266.

tiff if it states facts sufficient to show that the estate or interest to be protected is equitable in its nature.[37]

(B) Sufficiency. The fact of possession in plaintiff must be clearly stated in the bill, and not left to inference merely.[38] A bill alleging that complainant was the owner of the land described, setting forth particularly the chain of title, and charging that defendant claimed an adverse interest or estate in the premises, which so affected complainant's title as to render a sale or other disposition of the property impossible, and disturbed complainant in its right of possession, etc., sufficiently showed that complainant was in actual possession of the premises.[39]

(III) As to Establishment of Title at Law. A bill averring that complainant's title has been fully adjudicated in his favor by a court of competent jurisdiction in suits brought against persons in like situation with defendant is, in that regard, sufficient.[40]

(IV) As to Inadequacy of Remedy at Law. Unless required by statute,[41] it is not necessary for the complainant to allege that he has no adequate remedy at law.[42]

(V) As to Adverse Claim. In a suit to remove a cloud on title, it must be shown in the bill that such a cloud exists before relief can be given against it,[43] and, in such a case, the bill must, in addition to specifying the writing or matter which constitutes the alleged cloud, state the facts which give it apparent validity, as well as those which show its invalidity.[44] The rule prevails in some jurisdic-

Sufficient averment.— An averment of possession in the words of the statute is sufficient. Lusby v. Jones, 1 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 292, 31 Cinc. L. Bul. 70. An averment that plaintiff is seized in fee simple is a sufficient allegation that he has possession of the land. District of Columbia v. Hufty, 13 App. Cas. (D. C.) 175; Andrus v. Wheeler, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 646, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 525; Gage v. Kaufman, 133 U. S. 171, 10 S. Ct. 406, 33 L. ed. 725. An allegation that, since their purchase of the premises, complainants "have resided on the same, and are now in possession thereof," is a sufficient averment of possession. Liddell v. Carson, 122 Ala. 518, 26 So. 133. Where the bill alleges that plaintiff is in peaceable possession of the land, the presumption is that he is in the actual possession, which need not be alleged in so many words. Douglass v. Huhn, 24 Kan. 766; Cartwright v. McFadden, 24 Kan. 662. A complaint alleging that "plaintiff is now, and for more than fifteen years next prior to the date of this complaint has been, the owner in fee simple absolute, and in the actual, notorious and open possession," sufficiently alleges plaintiff's actual possession. Maggs v. Morgan, 30 Wash. 604, 71 Pac. 188. Under the act to quiet title (Revision, p. 1189), an allegation that complainant is the owner in fee of the land and in possession sufficiently states that he is "in peaceable possession, claiming to own" the land. Ludington v. Elizabeth, 32 N. J. Eq. 159.

Insufficient allegation.— An averment that plaintiff's grantor, when he executed the conveyance under which plaintiff claims, was seized and in possession of the premises, does not suffice as an averment of plaintiff's present possession. Shaffer v. Whelpley, 37 Wis. 334. An allegation in a bill to remove clouds from title, complainants claiming under an execution sale, that defendant in execution "'yielded up possession' of the lands 'after'" the sale, is insufficient to show to whom or when possession was yielded, or that the purchaser, or any one claiming under him, ever had actual possession. Jones v. Rogers, 85 Miss. 802, 38 So. 742. When it is necessary to allege actual possession of the land, an allegation that plaintiff "is legally in possession, and entitled to the possession" is not sufficient. Smith v. Gatliff, 5 S. W. 558, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 553.

An allegation that plaintiff's tenant is in possession of the premises is not a denial of plaintiff's possession, since the possession of a tenant is the possession of the landlord. King v. Townshend, 78 Hun (N. Y.) 380, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 181.

Sufficient compliance with rule.— Where in a suit to remove a cloud, it appears from an abstract of title made a part of the complaint, that the conveyances under which defendant claims were received and recorded by him after the deeds under which plaintiff claims, there is a sufficient compliance with the rule requiring the complainant to allege the facts constituting the invalidity of the instruments which cast a cloud on the title. McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Oreg. 260, 71 Pac. 795, 74 Pac. 491.

that it is wrongful,[51] and call upon defendant to set it forth in his answer,[52] and submit its validity to the judgment and determination of the court.[53]

(VI) As to Residence of Parties. It is the better practice to aver the residence of the parties, and it is sometimes necessary to do so in order to show jurisdiction;[54] but a bill which alleges that the premises in controversy are located in the county in which the suit is brought is sufficient, although the bill does not allege the residence of the parties.[55]

(VII) Describing Land — (A) Necessity. A bill to quiet title must contain a pertinent description of the land in controversy;[56] otherwise it is fatally defective.[57]

(B) Sufficiency. The description of the property, contained in the bill, must be definite and accurate.[58] But a description as definite as can be in the nature of things,[59] or which is sufficiently definite to identify the property,[60] suffices.

(VIII) Offering to Do Equity — (A) Necessity. Whenever the object of the action is the removal of a cloud on plaintiff's title, which is created by a contract or agreement executed by him, he must expressly offer in his bill to do equity by restoring or repaying whatever he may have received under the contract or agreement sought to be canceled.[61] Likewise plaintiff must offer in his bill to do equity by offering to reimburse defendant for taxes or other charges on the property

Not sufficiently definite.—A complaint which describes the land as the west half of a certain quarter section, "except 10 acres around well number one," is demurrable because of indefiniteness of the description of the land. Jones v. Mount, 30 Ind. App. 59, 63 N. E. 798. The description of a lot as on the south side of a certain street, between two other streets named, giving the dimensions of its front and its depth, and as being next east of S's lot, is insufficient, because, although S's lot might now be ascertained by parol, and the lot in question located, S's possession and ownership will not necessarily continue, and the description should be certain enough to always identify the property. paid by him.[62] But where the complaint alleges that no taxes were due upon which the land could be sold,[63] or where it does not appear on the face of the bill, either expressly or by implication of law or fact, that any taxes were due,[64] a bill to remove a cloud, created by a tax deed, need not offer to pay any taxes as a condition of relief. Nor is it necessary for the complainant in his bill to offer to do equity by satisfying any claim or encumbrance which defendant may have had on the lands.[65]

(B) Sufficiency. While better pleading demands a direct and unconditional offer to repay such sums as plaintiff must pay as a condition of relief,[66] yet an offer by plaintiff to pay defendant whatever sum may be due on account of the matters set forth in the bill is a substantial offer to do equity and is sufficient.[67]

c. Prayer For Relief — (I) Necessity — (A) When Complaint States Facts Entitling Plaintiff to Relief, and There Is No Answer. Where the complaint states facts which entitle plaintiff to a judgment quieting his title, the suit may be regarded as an action to quiet title, and if the complaint is answered, such relief may be granted, although the complaint contains no such prayer.[68]

(B) When Service on Defendant Was Constructive Only. If service on defendant was not personal, but by publication alone, the complaint must set out exactly the relief sought.[69]

(II) Uniting Prayer For Possession With Prayer For Removal of Cloud. It has been held that when an action to quiet title lies at the instance of one not in possession, a prayer to recover possession may be united with a prayer that the cloud on title be removed.[70]

(III) Including Special Prayer For Cancellation of Defendant's Muniment of Title. If upon the facts stated the bill has equity a special prayer for the cancellation of the muniment of title under which defendant claimed will not destroy such equity.[71]

d. Joinder of Causes of Action. A complaint attempting to quiet the title under separate deeds of different tracts of land, formerly owned by different owners, is bad on demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action.[72] But there is no misjoinder of causes of action in a complaint to determine adverse claims to several tracts of land not contiguous, if such adverse claims are the same.[73] Nor is a complaint to cancel an instrument as a cloud on title bad on demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action, because it names several reasons why such instrument is invalid.[74]

e. Multifariousness. A bill to quiet title is not rendered multifarious by the fact that plaintiff seeks to quiet the title to several different pieces of property, deed, alleged to be void by reason of the grantor's insanity, and to remove a cloud created by it, contains equity, although it does not offer to restore the consideration, since the payment of adequate consideration for the land is defensive matter.

The purpose of the rule requiring the offer to be made in the bill is to test the good faith of complainant; to require that he purge himself as far as possible of the guilt of complicity in the unlawful transaction, by declaring his purpose and readiness to do complete equity by restoring, as far as in his power, the other party to his original status. 72. Turner v. Duchman, 23 Wis. 500, holding further that the fact that one of the defendants is alleged to have been a former owner of some of the parcels in each deed renders the complaint none the less demurrable for an improper joinder of causes of action. where the adverse title is in the same party;[75] or for joining as defendants persons who claim title from different sources when all the titles put in issue were once in the same defendant.[76] Nor is a bill to quiet title rendered multifarious by reason of the prayer for the cancellation of the muniment of title under which defendant claims.[77]

f. Waiver and Cure of Defects — (I) By Admissions in Answer. The omission of a material fact in the complaint is cured by its admission or averment in the answer;[78] and the fact that there is a demurrer to the complaint reserved in the answer does not take the case out of the rule of express waiver.[79]

(II) By Not Taking Timely Objection — (A) In General. It is too late to object for the first time at the trial or hearing,[80] or on appeal,[81] that the complaint omits a material fact, where the objection should have been raised by demurrer or answer.

(B) Allegation of Possession. The necessity of alleging possession in plaintiff may be waived by failure, either by demurrer or answer, to raise an objection, on that ground, to the jurisdiction of the court.[82]

(III) Aider by Proof. Failure to allege a material fact is not error after judgment, where the proof establishes the existence of such fact.[83]

g. Demurrer or Exceptions Thereto — (I) Grounds — (A) Want of Possession by Plaintiff. Want of possession by plaintiff is a good ground of demurrer to a bill which fails to show who is in actual possession of the lands in controversy;[84] but want of possession is not a good ground of demurrer to a bill by a party out of possession, claiming title to the realty as remainderman, pending possession of the life-tenant.[85]

(B) Want of Title in Plaintiff. Where, in a suit to remove a cloud from title, in addition to alleged ownership in fee, the facts which constitute the title are also set out and such facts do not show title, a demurrer to the bill will lie.[86] Where complainant is seeking affirmative relief, based upon a patent to land, defendant may attack the validity of such patent by demurrer, on the ground that it is void on its face, without first showing that he has an interest in the land.[87]

(C) Want of Proper Averments as to Cloud. A bill in a suit to remove a cloud on title is demurrable for failure to allege the facts that show the apparent validity of the alleged cloud, and also the facts showing its actual invalidity.[88]

The filing of a cross bill in a suit to quiet title, alleging possession in defendant, and praying that his own title be established and quieted, confers jurisdiction on a court of equity to determine the question of title as between the parties and grant relief to the one entitled to the same, although the fact that plaintiff was not in possession would have defeated jurisdiction upon the original bill. (D) Want of Necessary Parties. A demurrer lies where a want of necessary parties is disclosed by the bill itself.[89]

(E) Multifariousness. In an action to quiet title, plaintiff's pleadings are not demurrable because they show that there are other persons holding outstanding titles, and that making them parties would result in a multifariousness of properties and parties, for it is no concern of defendant that there are other outstanding titles that might constitute a cloud.[90]

(F) Defects in Form — (1) IN GENERAL. A bill which shows complainant to be entitled to relief is not demurrable because it is imperfectly drawn.[91]

(2) PRAYER FOR RELIEF. A demurrer to the bill for want of sufficient facts will not reach a defect, if any exist, in the prayer for relief.[92]

(G) Plaintiff's Equity Barred by Time. Where the bill fails to show clearly when complainant acquired title, a special demurrer, on the ground that complainant's equity is barred by time, will be overruled.[93]

(II) FORM OF — (A) In General. It is improper practice, where the bill gives a history of plaintiff's claim, to demur to a part and answer to part thereof; but, as a whole, it either does or does not show title, and, as a whole, should be demurred to or answered.[94]

(B) Necessity of Stating Grounds. The objection that complainant is not alleged in the bill to be in possession of the realty in controversy, to be available on demurrer, should be especially pointed out in the demurrer according to the practice in chancery.[95]

(III) DEMURRER TO PLEADING GOOD IN PART. A demurrer to the entire bill should be overruled, if the bill shows a right to any relief.[96] Accordingly a bill will not be held bad on a general demurrer, if it is maintainable as to part of the lands described in the complaint.[97]

(IV) WAIVER OF. Where in a suit defendant tenders a peremptory exception that there is no cause of action because defendant was not in possession, and the exception is referred to the merits without prejudice, it is not waived by an answer in which it is expressly reserved.[98]

(V) HEARING. On demurrer to a bill involving a question of boundaries, or what lands were intended to be conveyed by a certain description, which might be more or less affected by oral evidence or circumstances difficult to set forth in detail in the bill, plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of all such extrinsic evidence as might be introduced in support of his theory on the question under the case made by the bill.[99]

2. PLEA — a. In General. Where the allegations of the plea, being taken as true, do not, so far as it purports to go, make a full and complete defense,[1] or where the necessary facts are to be gathered by inference alone,[2] it will not be sustained. It must be perfect in itself, so that if true, it will make an end of the case,[3] or of that part of the case to which it applies.[4]

b. To Whole Bill. If the plea undertakes to answer the whole bill, but extends only to a part thereof, it is bad.[5]

c. Partial Pleas. The plea may be to the whole bill or to some distinct portion thereof,[6] and if partial must definitely and exactly express to what part it extends.[7]

3. Answer — a. In General. The answer must of course state facts sufficient to constitute a defense.[8]

b. Denials — (i) In General. A denial of a material allegation of the bill or complaint,[9] such as title [10] or possession,[11] is sufficient to raise an issue. Defendant need not allege his own title.[12]

(ii) Matters Not in Bill. The general rule of equity pleading, that a defendant who claims protection as a bona fide purchaser without notice must deny such notice, although not distinctly alleged in the complaint, applies in actions to quiet title,[13] and the pleader must deny fully, in the most precise terms, every circumstance from which notice could be inferred.[14]

c. Admissions — (i) In General. A direct admission in the answer that plaintiff is in possession binds defendant, and the binding force of such admission is not avoided by a special averment that plaintiff obtained possession by fraud.[15]

(ii) By Failure to Deny. The fact of possession is susceptible of a direct denial, and if not so denied, it is admitted.[16]

(iii) By Pleading General Issue. If plaintiff alleges title by devise, and the answer contains only a general denial, the effect of the answer is to admit that plaintiff acquired such interest in the land as the devisor had at the time of his death.[17]

Rule applied.— Thus, where a bill seeks to remove a cloud on title, a plea to the entire bill, denying none of the allegations on which relief is sought, but which merely sets up that plaintiff is not entitled to relief, for the reason that he has not offered to refund the taxes paid by one under whom defendant claims, on the sale of the property for taxes, is bad. d. Pleading Defenses — (I) Particular Defenses — (A) Title or Ownership in Defendant — (1) In General. If plaintiff makes an alleged ownership in land his sole basis of action to quiet title, an answer is not demurrable where it makes a specific denial of such ownership with positive, affirmative averments showing fee simple title in defendant, although it does not recite all the evidence by which such defense is to be established.[18]

(2) Equitable Title. Defendant, to avail himself of an equitable title as against plaintiff's legal title, should specifically plead it.[19]

(3) When Claim of Title in Separate Defenses Not Inconsistent. Allegations of tax title and the facts by which it was acquired, in one defense in an answer, are in no wise consistent with a claim of title antecedent to it, and do not qualify the allegation of such antecedent title in a previously stated separate defense.[20]

(B) Adverse Possession. An answer purporting to set up the defense, that defendant was in adverse possession of the lands when plaintiff took conveyance, is bad for failure to aver that defendant entered, believing in good faith that he had title.[21]

(C) Adverse Claim. It has been held that in statutory proceedings to determine adverse claims, defendant relying on an adverse claim in himself must, as a condition precedent to the right to try the issue of plaintiff's possession, plead the nature of his claim.[22]

(D) Adequate Remedy at Law. A defendant in an action to remove a cloud on title, in order to avail himself of the defense that an adequate remedy at law exists, must plead that defense in his answer.[23]

(II) Partial Defenses. An answer which confesses that the fee is in plaintiff may pro tanto defeat the action where, by appropriate and adequate averments, it sets forth that defendant holds a lien;[24] that is to say, it may at least secure a lien hold and provision in the decree, reserving, protecting, or enforc-

An answer in an action by a railroad company to remove a cloud on its title to a part of its road equipment and appurtenances, which alleges that the property was placed in the hands of a receiver and sold by order of court, that defendant became the purchaser at the receiver's sale, and that title vested in him by reason of the sale, is sufficient as against a demurrer. Answer held not to show equitable title.— An answer alleging that defendant claims under an agreement with plaintiff's mortgagor whereby defendant is to receive a conveyance of an undivided one half of the land on the payment of the purchase-price, and that an action pending between defendant and the mortgagor's personal representative, to which plaintiff is a party, to settle partnership accounts, and sell the land without alleging payment of the price, or any excuse for failure to pay it, or that, on settlement of the accounts, defendant will be entitled to any interest in the land, is demurrable. Pleading such defense under code.— Where adverse possession under color of title is relied on in an action to quiet title, it is proper to plead the section of the code establishing the period of limitations, omitting all references to the explanatory sections. Answer held to show claim to some extent adverse.— The answer in a suit to quiet title to an undivided three-fourths interest in the land shows a claim to some extent adverse to plaintiff's interest, and therefore should not be stricken out; plaintiff claiming a three-sixteenths interest through M, and defendant claiming a one-tenth interest through M, and it appearing from the pleadings that M originally owned not exceeding a one-fifth interest. Colburn v. Dortic, 18 Colo. App. 96, 70 Pac. 151.

ing his lien.[25] But this rule cannot apply where the answer confesses that the fee is in plaintiff, and does no more than show that a stranger to the action holds an outstanding lien.[26]

(III) JOINDER OF DEFENSES. The fact that defendant's right to relief arose after the complaint was filed does not support a claim of misjoinder of defenses, where there is no repugnance or inconsistency in the several grounds of defense, the new matter pleaded affects all the parties and no others, and the transaction out of which defendant's right to relief arose is connected with the subject-matter of the action.[27]

(IV) CONSOLIDATION OF DEFENSES. If certain defenses, repeated in separate denials of the answer, are, in substance specifications of sources of title, the court may properly order them consolidated, and hence commits no error in merely striking out the repetition of the denials.[28]

e. Pleading Counter-Claim — (I) IN GENERAL. Under the code provisions governing pleading, it is generally held that, in actions to quiet title or remove cloud, matter may be pleaded as a counter-claim if it constitutes a cause of action in favor of defendant against plaintiff, and is connected with the subject of plaintiff's action;[29] and even where such matter is set up in the answer and may be a complete defense to the cause of action alleged in the complaint, it may also be pleaded as a counter-claim.[30] Thus defendant may set up by way of counter-claim an equitable title in himself,[31] or that the deed under which plaintiff holds was fraudulently procured.[32]

(II) FOR MONEY DEMAND. In an action to quiet title, defendant cannot interpose a counter-claim for a mere money demand, and obtain a personal judgment therefor.[33]

f. Pleading Matters in Confession and Avoidance. It is proper, if not absolutely necessary, that defendant should specially plead all matters in confession and avoidance of the complaint.[34] It is held, however, in one jurisdiction at least, that no answer is necessary but a general denial, as under that answer all defenses, legal or equitable, partial or complete, may be shown.[35]

4. REPLICATION OR REPLY — a. Necessity — (I) IN GENERAL. Following the general rules of pleading to new matter, properly pleaded by way of defense[36] or counter-claim,[37] and not demurred to, plaintiff must respond by a reply; but matters put in issue by the complaint and the general denial thereof in the answer are not required to be denied by a reply.[38]

(II) WAIVER OF. Defendant, by his conduct, may waive a reply.[39]

b. Requisites. The reply must not depart from the cause of action stated in the complaint.[40]

c. Effect of Failure to File. If no replication to an answer containing new matter is filed, the answer is taken as true.[41]

5. DISCLAIMER — a. Necessity of, to Relieve From Liability. A defendant claiming no interest in the land which is the subject-matter of the action must, in order to save himself from liability for costs, appear and file an absolute and unqualified disclaimer.[42] And if defendant does not claim a part of the land, he should specify the part disclaimed, failing to do which he must be treated as claiming the whole.[43]

b. Constitutes Good Answer When Defendant Out of Possession. A disclaimer is a good answer when defendant is out of possession.[44]

c. When Answer Amounts to. Where the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action under the statute are the actual possession of the land by plaintiff, and some claim on the part of defendant, adverse to him, of an estate or interest in the land, an answer denying any interest thereunder other than a lien on the land amounts to a disclaimer.[45]

d. Effect. A disclaimer by a defendant operates as an estoppel, and between the parties and their privies is an absolute bar to any other assertion of the right renounced.[46]

40. Neve v. Allen, 55 Kan. 638, 41 Pac. 966, holding, however, that where defendants in an action to quiet title pleaded facts showing they were tenants in common as to a one-third interest, a reply admitting that they held the naked legal title to the extent of such interest, and that a deed was given therefor with their consent by one supposed by all parties to have authority as trustee to convey the land, did not constitute a departure.

be had on the averments of his answer, a cross bill to quiet title is unnecessary,[47] and may be stricken out,[48] yet the right of defendant to file a cross bill, urging a superior title in himself, and to be fully heard,[49] especially where full relief cannot be given to defendant upon answer,[50] is generally recognized. But the cross bill can only be sustained in respect to matters germane to those of the original bill,[51] and hence will not lie to quiet a title distinct from that which plaintiff in his original bill prays to have quieted.[52]

Except that he need not show the grounds of equity to support the jurisdiction of the court, a party defendant seeking specific relief in an equitable action to quiet title must, in his cross bill, state the grounds upon which he relies for affirmative relief with the same strictness required of the complainant in the original bill. Tucker v. McCoy, 3 Colo. 284.

The cross bill must be good within itself, without aid from other pleadings in the cause. Conger v. Miller, 104 Ind. 592, 4 N. E. 300.

Cross bills held sufficient.— A cross complaint alleging, in substance, that the cross complainant is the owner of the realty described in the complaint, and that the complainants claim an interest therein adverse to him, which is unfounded and casts a cloud on his title, is sufficient. Johnson v. Taylor, 106 Ind. 89, 5 N. E. 732. A cross complainant alleged that defendant turned out to the sheriff a certain piece of land on execution; that the sheriff by mistake sold the land in controversy which also belonged to defendant; that defendant then sold the land turned out to the sheriff, the consideration being that the grantee redeem the land sold by the sheriff; that the grantee borrowed money with which to redeem the land and assigned the sheriff's certificate as security; that the loan was thereafter paid, but the grantee neglected to have the certificate reassigned, and a sheriff's deed was issued to the lender of the money, who subsequently gave plaintiff a quitclaim deed. It was held that the cross complaint stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Allen v. Adams, 150 Ind. 409, 50 N. E. 387. A counter-claim by way of cross complaint, alleging that defendant was the owner and in possession of the land, and that plaintiff, by virtue of the pretended deed, set forth in his complaint or "by some other paper writing, the character or nature

(II) Title in Defendant. The cross bill should contain adequate averments to show title in defendant.[54]

(III) Possession in Defendant. Possession in defendant need not be alleged.[55]

(IV) Plaintiff's Claim Adverse. Although it is not averred in express terms that plaintiff's claim of title is adverse to that of cross complainant, it is sufficient, on demurrer, if facts are alleged showing such to be the case.[56]

e. Effect on Cross Bill of Dismissal of Original Bill. The rule is that a dismissal of the original bill carries with it the cross bill,[57] unless the latter has some independent equity which springs from matters germane to those of the former, and can uphold the jurisdiction of the court.[58]

d. Waiver of Objection Regarding. Where a cross complaint is filed, praying that title be quieted in defendant, a plaintiff who does not attack it by demurrer or motion to strike out, but answers it and goes to trial on the merits, waives his right to object that such cross complaint is not a proper method of procedure in an action to quiet title.[59]

e. Answer to Cross Bill. Where an answer to a cross bill is required, and none is filed, it is proper to enter an order taking the cross bill as confessed.[60]

7. Amended or Supplemental Pleadings — a. Discretion of Court as to Allowance. The question as to the allowance or refusal of an amendment is ordinarily one for the court to determine in the exercise of its discretion; [61] and its ruling will not be reversed by the appellate court,[62] unless there appears to have been an abuse of discretion.[63]

b. Character of Amendments — (I) In General. So long as the subject of the action remains substantially the same, an amendment may be permitted to adapt the relief to the facts relied on for recovery.[64] But a new and different of which is unknown" to him, claimed a title which was unfounded, and was a cloud on his, defendant's, title, and asking that the title thereto be quieted in him as against such plaintiff, is sufficient. Cooper v. Jackson, 71 Ind. 244. A cross complaint alleging that the property had been devised to defendant, and that plaintiff's claim was under a deed procured by undue influence, was not demurrable as not stating a cause of action. Curtis v. Burns, 27 Ind. App. 74, 60 N. E. 963.

Pleading denominated "counter-claim."— Where, in an action to quiet title, defendant's right constitutes the basis of a cross action for the same purpose, and her pleading contained all the essential elements of a cross complaint, the fact that such pleading is called a counter-claim does not determine its character or affect the rights of the litigants. cause of action cannot be substituted for the original by amendment, or be brought in by a new and separate count.[65]

(II) Amendment as to Title or Interest. If at the commencement of the action plaintiff had the equitable title, a supplemental complaint may be filed setting up that plaintiff has since acquired the legal title.[66]

(III) Correcting Mistake in Description of Lands. A mistake in the complaint in the description of the property may be corrected by amendment.[67]

c. At What Stage of Proceedings Allowable. So long as the nature or character of a proposed amendment to the complaint is unobjectionable, it is allowable after issue joined,[68] or at the trial or hearing [69] or after judgment,[70] or even after reversal on appeal.[71]

d. Waiver of Objections Regarding. Where the supplemental complaint is objectionable on the ground that the original complaint is wholly defective, such objection is waived by answer.[72]

8. Issues, Proof, and Variance — a. Issues — (I) Of Law. A denial that the realty in controversy is plaintiff's homestead, and that the sale thereof made under defendant's judgment, which is a pure money judgment, is void or a cloud on title, raises an issue of law, and not of fact.[73]

(II) Fact — (A) Title of Plaintiff. In an action to remove a cloud from title, the real controversy is as to that which creates the cloud, and not the title of plaintiff, unless the latter is put in issue by the pleadings.[74] But in the statutory action to determine adverse claims a general denial in the answer of all allegations of the complaint, "except that which is hereinafter admitted, specifically denied or qualified," puts in issue an allegation of title in plaintiff, the specific averment of the answer being that defendant is in actual possession of the premises, and is the owner thereof.[75]

(B) Possession of Plaintiff — (1) In General. A denial of plaintiff's possession raises a material issue.[76]

Issue raised as to sufficiency of levy of attachment to affect plaintiff's title held.— Where in an action to remove a cloud on title, defendants claiming a lien by attachment, ask affirmative relief by cross complaint by reason of their attachment, and bring in grantees of plaintiff as parties, and an amendment to plaintiff's original petition contains averments as to the pretended levy of such attachment, and denies that any interest was acquired thereby, plaintiff's grantees in their answer to the cross petition denying the levy of attachment, the issue as to the sufficiency of the levy to affect the title of plaintiff's grantees is thereby raised. the land at the commencement of the action is immaterial, where the action is brought under a statute dispensing with the necessity of possession as a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action.[77]

(c) Adverse Claim of Defendant. Where the complaint alleges that defendant claims some estate or interest in the land adverse to plaintiff, but that his claim is without right, and that he has no right, title, or interest, therein, and the answer admits the former, and denies the latter, allegation, such answer raises a material issue of fact.[78]

(d) Forgery and Fraud. If it is alleged that defendant holds a deed to the property which is a fraud and a forgery, and a cloud on plaintiff's title, and, unless canceled, will operate as an irreparable injury to plaintiff, the only issues tendered to be considered on the trial are the questions as to forgery and fraud.[79] But where the answer alleges that a deed made by plaintiff's vendor was without consideration, and to hinder, delay, and defraud a certain creditor of vendor, which allegation is denied, no issue is raised as to whether the deed was made to delay or defraud the creditors of the vendor generally.[80]

b. Matters to Be Proved — (i) Title in Plaintiff. If the chain of title is specifically set forth in the bill, and not specifically denied, evidence thereof need not be produced.[81] Thus it has been held that where one defense filed to the complaint consisted solely of admissions and denials, and another consisted solely of assertion of title in defendant and his grantees, plaintiff is not required to prove his title or possession.[82] But plaintiff must, when his title is put in issue by the answer, prove by competent evidence the legal or equitable title in himself,[83]

W. 319, holding that where both parties claim under the same person, and an abstract of title exhibited with the petition shows a regular chain of title from the government through such person to plaintiff, and, by the answer or oral evidence introduced without objection, it is either admitted or plainly shown that plaintiff holds by a regular chain of conveyances, and throughout the trial it is conceded that the conveyances were made as shown by the abstract of title, it is immaterial whether the deeds in plaintiff's chain of title are formally introduced in evidence or not.

Where both parties claim from the same common source, complainants in bill to remove cloud on title need not prove a grant. Patton v. Dixon, 105 Tenn. 97, 58 S. W. 299.

The admissions of an infant defendant in an answer cannot be taken against him, but plaintiff is required to prove title in himself with the same certainty and clearness as would be required of him if an answer had been filed denying positively the allegation of title (Holderby v. Hagan, 57 W. Va. 341, 50 S. E. 437), and a fortiori an admission in the answer of a co-defendant that title is in plaintiff cannot bind the infant, although the interest of himself and his co-defendant is joint. Holderby v. Hagan, supra.

Defendants who deny plaintiff's title not bound by default of co-defendant.— Plaintiff alleged in her bill that she had the equitable title to certain land by virtue of an unsealed instrument of conveyance given by her deceased husband to one of the defendants, and a similar instrument given by said defendant to her. She prayed that the other defendants, heirs of her husband, be required to convey to her the legal title. The grantee defendant made default, but the heirs answered, denying execution of the instruments. It was held that the complainant could not recover without proof of the execution of the instrument alleged to have been executed by her husband's grantee. Head v. Thurber, 142 Ill. 430, 32 N. Issue of title immaterial.— When the statute under which the action is brought was or at least that he has some interest in the land in controversy superior to that of defendant.[84]

(II) Plaintiff in Possession, and Land Vacant and Unoccupied. If possession is necessary to the maintenance of the action, plaintiff cannot prevail without proof of such possession, where the allegation of possession is denied in the answer.[85] Likewise in an action by one not in possession to quiet title to lands alleged to be vacant and unoccupied, such allegation, being material, must be proved in order to entitle plaintiff to recover.[86] But if defendant, in the ordinary statutory action to determine adverse claims, alleges title in himself, and demands affirmative relief against plaintiff, it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove the allegation that the land is vacant and unoccupied,[87] or that he is in possession,[88] as the case may be.

(III) Recitals in Instrument Constituting Cloud Untrue. Where plaintiff alleges that defendant makes an adverse claim of title under a certain deed which he offers in evidence, he is not bound to show that the recitals in the deed are untrue before he can recover.[89]

c. Evidence Admissible Under Pleadings — (I) In General. The parties are confined to matters contained in their pleadings, and therefore no evidence will be considered except that relating to matters alleged in the bill or answer.[90] intended to enable the party to quiet his title by proof of an actual, peaceable possession, with claim of title, the fact that plaintiff's title in fee is alleged in the complaint and denied in the answer does not render it necessary for plaintiff to prove title in himself. Where the title of plaintiff as stated in his bill depends on the performance of a condition, and the proof shows that the condition was not performed according to its terms, plaintiff will not be entitled to the relief he seeks by showing an excuse for the non-performance of the condition; there being no allegation in the bill on which an issue is to be taken of the facts relied on to justify or excuse the non-performance of the condition. Le Baron v. Shepherd, 21 Mich. 263. Under an averment of ownership in fee, defendant will not be permitted to show on the trial that he has succeeded to an equitable title or interest. Either or both of titles pleaded.— Where plaintiff's petition alleges a record generally of title from the sovereignty of the soil, and in addition alleges title under several statutes of limitation, he is entitled to prove either or both of the titles pleaded. Alford v. Williams, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 436, 91 S. W. 636.

Matters not necessary to plead.— It is not necessary for plaintiff to plead deraignment of title, it being a matter of evidence purely, and hence in an action against an executor to quiet title plaintiff may put in evidence a

(II) Under General Denial. Defendant may, it has been held in some jurisdictions, under general denial, give in evidence all defenses, either legal or equitable.[91]

d. Variance Between Allegations and Proof — (I) In General. The averments and proofs should correspond.[92]

(II) As to Title. If the complaint alleges that complainant has title in fee and the proof shows an equitable title, the variance is fatal.[93] A defense, consisting merely of a denial of plaintiff's title and an assertion of title in defendant, is not established by proof that, while plaintiff is the owner of the legal title, defendant has an equity entitling him to a conveyance.[94]

(III) As to Possession. An averment of possession in plaintiff is sustained by proof of possession in plaintiff's tenant at the time of bringing suit; [95] but proof showing property to be vacant constitutes a fatal variance.[96]

Under the general denial defendants may show an outstanding title in a third person by proving the facts on which it is based, and invoking the legal or equitable principles applicable thereto. Rogers v. Clark Iron Co., 104 Minn. 198, 116 N. W. 739. Where defendant's adverse interest is claimed under a lease containing a misdescription, proof of a mistake in the description is admissible by way of equitable defense, under a general denial. Allen v. Indianapolis Oil Co., 27 Ind. App. 158, 60 N. E. 1003. Where a petition is filed, alleging among other things ownership and possession by plaintiff, and the answer, without any denial to the allegations of plaintiff, only sets up a specific title, it is error to admit evidence of any other than the title pleaded; but where the answer contains, besides the plea of the specific title, a general denial of the allegations of the petition, it is not error to admit in evidence a voluntary conveyance from plaintiff, a sheriff's or a tax deed, or any other legal testimony tending to show that plaintiff is not the owner as alleged, whether specifically set up in the answer or not. Morrill v. Douglass, 14 Kan. 293. So too a general denial in a mortgage foreclosure suit in which defendant files a cross complaint to quiet title, is sufficient to admit proof of all the legitimate matters of defense to the cross complaint. Fitzpatrick v. Papa, 89 Ind. 17.

92. Glos v. Archer, 214 Ill. 74, 73 N. E. 382.

Material variance.— Where a bill to set aside a conveyance as a cloud on the equitable title of the complainant is framed upon the theory that the land was purchased by A alone, from a voluntary grantee, and the evidence shows that the purchase was by A, B, and C, but the conveyance made to A alone for convenience, to hold and convey as directed by the purchasers, the variance is fatal. O'Neal v. Boone, 82 Ill. 589.

No variance.— In a suit to quiet title a deed offered in evidence which describes the survey of the land by a different number from that used in the pleading, the land being otherwise identified with reasonable certainty, is admissible; there is no variance, the number of the survey being unnecessarily used. Berrendo Stock Co. v. Kaiser, 66 Tex. 352, 1 S. W. 257. In a bill seeking to have a cloud removed from certain land, it was alleged that the land was bought of A and B. It appeared in evidence that complainant only negotiated with A but was informed that B had an interest in the land as well, which was a fact; that A acted as agent of B; that B conveyed his interest to A, expecting the whole to be eventually conveyed to complainant. It was held that there was no variance between the allegations and the proofs. Walsh v. Wright, 101 Ill. 178.

Rule varied by statute.— Under a statute providing that an action to determine and quiet title to real estate may be brought by any one claiming an interest, whether in or out of possession, against one claiming an interest or estate adverse to him, it is held that, where the complaint alleges plaintiff to have title in fee, and the proof shows an equitable title, there is no variance precluding a recovery. 94. Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 90 Pac. 521.

95. Krebs v. Dodge, 9 Wis. 1.

96. Glos v. Archer, 214 Ill. 74, 73 N. E. 382, holding, further, that the variance is none the less fatal because either an allegation that the complainant is in possession of the property or that it is vacant and unoccupied is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction.

(iv) As to Lands Being Vacant or Unoccupied. An allegation that the land was vacant and unoccupied at the time of the filing of the bill is not sustained by proof that the land was vacant and unoccupied at a given time after the filing of the bill.[97]

(v) Waiver of Objection Regarding. A variance between an allegation and proof which might have been obviated on the trial by other evidence or amendment if it had been expressly objected to on that ground will be deemed waived, and will be disregarded.[98]

E. Evidence[99]— 1. Burden of Proof — a. On Plaintiff — (i) As to Title in Himself. The burden is on plaintiff to establish that he himself has a perfect legal or equitable title,[1] without reference to and regardless of whether defendant's title be valid or invalid.[2] But on the principle that a status, once established, is presumed by law to remain until the contrary appears, plaintiff, after proof of title in himself, need not show that he has not parted with it.[3]

(ii) As to Possession in Himself. The burden rests with plaintiff of proving possession on his part,[4] and he is not relieved from the burden of proving it by the fact that the allegation of possession in the complaint is not denied by the answer.[5] But by proof of title in himself, plaintiff meets the burden of proving possession.[6]

(iii) As to Adverse Claim. Plaintiff must show a prejudicial assertion of claim by defendant,[7] and that in fact defendant has no claim on the property,[8] or any right to subject it or any part of it.[9]

b. On Defendant. Whenever plaintiff sufficiently proves his case, the burden of proof will be shifted to defendant;[10] and where defendant substantially asserts

Mere proof of possession or title with possession is not sufficient to throw the burden of proof on defendant to produce his claim, but plaintiff must show a prejudicial assertion of claim by defendant before the latter and relies upon a fact as an affirmative issue, he must establish the same.[11] So the burden of a particular issue may rest with defendant, even if plaintiff be required to prove his whole case.[12]

2. Presumptions — a. In General. In order to quiet title after a lapse of more than twenty years, presumptions will be made against the known facts of the case, and in favor of one in possession in good faith.[13]

b. As to Possession. Proof of title raises a presumption of right to possession.[14] Where plaintiff's possession of the premises is shown, its continuance for a requisite time will be inferred in the absence of evidence to the contrary.[15]

3. Admissibility — a. As to Title — (i) Extrinsic Evidence. Extrinsic evidence bearing on title may be given.[16]

(ii) Documentary Evidence. Under the general rules of evidence the evidence admissible to show title includes grants, conveyances, or deeds generally,[17]

can be called on to move. Blasdel v. Williams, 9 Nev. 161. But see Stackhouse v. Stotenbur, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 312, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 940.

Where defendant relies for his title on a constable's sale under execution on a judgment from a justice of the peace, he must show affirmatively that the justice had jurisdiction to render the judgment. Eltzroth v. Ryan, 89 Cal. 135, 26 Pac. 647.

A defendant, relying on possession, actual or constructive, to oust the jurisdiction of the court, must establish it without requiring the court, on an application for the issue, to first sustain the validity of his title. Titus v. Bindley, 210 Pa. St. 121, 59 Atl. 694.

Heirship between defendant's ancestor and the patentee under which plaintiff claims.— A defendant in a suit to quiet title who claims title through an ancestor alleged to have been an heir of the patentee, under whom plaintiff claims, has the burden of proving heirship between his ancestor and the patentee. Common reputation.— In a suit to determine an adverse claim to real estate, wherein plaintiff claimed title by adverse possession, evidence by defendant to establish her ownership by common reputation, referring principally to discussions among her neighbors, is inadmissible. Cooper v. Blair, (Oreg. 1907) 92 Pac. 1074.

Assessment of premises.— In a suit to quiet title, based on plaintiff's title by prescription, it was proper to show the assessment of the premises, so that the court might determine whether plaintiff had paid the taxes required by statute to obtain title by prescription. Spotswood v. Spotswood, 4 Cal. App. 711, 89 Pac. 362. In an action to quiet title to lots, claimed by defendant city as a public park, evidence by the city to show how the property was assessed on the assessment roll of the city was properly excluded. W. 875, holding, however, that where defendant sets up title in himself, and it does not appear that both parties claim from a common source, evidence of a deed to plaintiff's grantor is inadmissible, without showing that the grantor in that deed deraigned his title from the government.

Washington.— Lohse v. Burch, 43 Wash. 156, 84 Pac. 722, holding, however, that where it was shown that the land had been patented to the heirs of the decedent, without naming them, a deed by the heirs executed sixteen years before the commencement of the action and mortgages.[18] And so also judgments and other records may be admitted as tending to show title to the premises in question.[19]

b. As to Possession — (I) Payment of Taxes. Evidence that taxes on the land in controversy are paid by a person, in connection with evidence of actual possession, is admissible to show the character of his possession.[20]

(II) Inclosure of Land. The inclosing of uncultivated, although not wild, land, on three sides by a wire fence, and on the other side by a stone fence, is evidence of possession.[21]

(III) Execution of Lease. Possession in plaintiff may be shown by a lease whereby the person occupying the land holds under him.[22]

c. As to Adverse Claim. Defendant's answer in a former suit showing that he then claimed an interest in the same land, adverse to plaintiff, is admissible on the question whether he claimed such adverse interest at the commencement of the present action.[23]

4. Weight and Sufficiency — a. As to Possession. It may be stated generally that to support a bill to quiet title the evidence must show a possession so open, visible, notorious, and exclusive as to be calculated in its very nature to inform persons in the vicinity, and those seeing the property, that some person has approwas inadmissible in evidence without proof that they were the only heirs of the decedent, the recital of that fact in the deed being insufficient.

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Quieting Title," § 9.

Deeds procured pendente lite.— Deeds procured by plaintiff to all the land in controversy pendente lite are admissible, where he had a tax title to the land when the action was commenced, and was in actual possession of a part of it. Ne-Ha-Sa-Ne Park Assoc. v. Lloyd, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 207, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 108 [affirmed in 45 N. Y. App. Div. 631, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 1143].

A tax deed which appears upon the face thereof to have been altered in a material respect after its execution is not admissible in evidence to show title in the holder thereof. Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 257, 22 Pac. 195.

Joint deed by defendant and plaintiff's grantor.— Defendant answered, claiming title to an undivided one third, under a deed from plaintiff's grantor, and alleging possession under the deed for twenty years. On the trial defendant offered in evidence a deed executed jointly by himself and plaintiff's grantor for a part of the property. It was held that the evidence was admissible as tending to show defendant's claim of title, and a recognition of it by plaintiff's grantor. Dumont v. Dufore, 27 Ind. 263.

Plat.—Where, in a bill to remove a cloud on title, complainant claimed title under a deed from a grantor holding under a deed not embracing the land in controversy, but attempted to show by reference to an old plat containing a memorandum that the land in controversy belonged to him, it was held that the plat with the memorandum was admissible in determining the boundaries and title, but did not in itself constitute title. Judgment in former action.— In an action to quiet title, where defendants introducing a tax deed under which they claimed, a judgment in a former action by plaintiff against defendants in which the title was adjudged in plaintiff was properly admitted to show that defendants' claim under the tax deed had been adjudicated against them. Records in mortgage foreclosure suits.— Nathan v. Dierssen, 146 Cal. 63, 79 Pac. 739; Stevens v. Overturf, 62 Ind. 331.

Record held inadmissible.— Where, in an action to quiet title to land which is a part of the public domain, plaintiff, neither in person nor by his predecessor in interest, ever filed a possessory claim on the land to which he seeks to quiet the title, and was never in possession thereof, it is error to admit the record of the foreclosure proceedings through which he claims title, when defendant is in possession. priated it and is using and occupying it as his own.[24] But it has been held that where the answer relies on an adverse right depending entirely on the location of the description, the proof of possession is not required to be as strong as where there is a defense distinctly set up and relied on.[25]

b. As to Title. To authorize a recovery, plaintiff must establish title in himself by a preponderance of evidence.[26] It is sufficient prima facie if complainant

24. Glos v. Archer, 214 Ill. 74, 73 N. E. 382.

Evidence of possession held sufficient.— Evidence that plaintiff, the legal owner of a large tract of land in a body which included a large quantity of large mountain land, paid the taxes thereon for many years, and occupied parts of it by tenants, shows sufficient possession to support the action. Davis v. Hinckley, 141 Fed. 708. Evidence of the exercise of acts of ownership over unimproved land, such as hauling gravel, sand, and dirt therefrom, sinking wells and making streets there, shows sufficient possession on the part of one claiming to be the owner in fee to maintain an action to quiet title thereto. Dayton v. Cooper Hydraulic Co., 10 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 192, 7 Ohio N. P. 495. Testimony of complainant that he is in peaceable possession and is the owner of the land, without more, is sufficient evidence of possession. Southern R. Co. v. Hall, 145 Ala. 224, 41 So. 135. Evidence that plaintiff, vested with the legal title to the lands in controversy, once went upon the land and directed another to put up a fence, which was done, although the fence was not a substantial one, sufficiently shows possession entitling him to maintain the suit. Bland v. Windsor, 187 Mo. 108, 86 S. W. 162. Where the agent of a landowner has completed the foreclosure of the land by closing with bars an opening in the fence, and putting on the land a notice that he held the land for sale as agent of the owner, these facts, in the absence of actual adverse holding, show possession sufficient to entitle the owner to maintain a bill to quiet his title. Gage v. Williams, 119 Ill. 563, 9 N. E. 193. Where plaintiff's grantor staked off land including that in dispute, caused it to be surveyed and graded, and streets to be laid out, had a map issued showing it to belong to him, and had a movable tramway put over a portion of it, and complainant, after taking it, kept it in constant repair, and made numerous extensive and plainly visible improvements, and was the only one except his grantees to exercise acts of ownership, plaintiff has such possession as will enable him to bring a bill to quiet title. Oberon Land Co. v. Dunn, 56 N. J. Eq. 749, 40 Atl. 121. See also Alexander v. Hill, 108 S. W. 225, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1147; Brown v. Dunn, 135 Wis. 374, 115 N. W. 1097.

Evidence of possession held insufficient.— Where lots were vacant and unineloscd, evidence of a lease of them to a person living across an alley therefrom, with nothing done under the lease, was not sufficient to sustain an allegation of possession in a bill to remove a cloud on title, filed by the lessor. Glos v. Archer, 214 Ill. 74, 75 N. E. 382. Testimony of one that plaintiff placed the property in charge of his firm six days prior to the suit to rent and collect the rents for him, and that thereafter his firm paid plaintiff some money received from the rent is insufficient to support a finding that plaintiff was in possession. Reid v Robrecht, 102 Cal. 520, 36 Pac. 875. Evidence of mere payment of taxes, cutting timber, and protecting the land by driving off trespassers does not establish the actual possession of land necessary to support an action to quiet title. Cantlin v. Holladay-Klotz Land, etc., Co., 151 Mo. 159, 52 S. W. 247. Evidence showing the construction on a tract of land, by a claimant, of a structure of rough boards eight or ten feet square, with a flat roof, having no foundation, chimney, or windows, and a door with no lock, not intended for a dwelling, or for any other use so far as shown, and which was in fact never used, fails to establish such possession or occupation of the land as will support a suit to quiet title. Jackson v. Simmons, 98 Fed. 768, 39 C. C. A. 514. There is an entire absence of evidence of possession essential to support a suit to set aside deeds as a cloud on title, where the only evidence on the subject is that plaintiff's father had tenants on the land before his death, and plaintiff had leased the land to a tenant who did not take possession. Kane v. Virginia Coal, etc., Co., 97 Va. 329, 33 S. E. 627. Plaintiff cannot recover judgment when all the evidence he produces is the tax deed under which he claims title, since such deed does not prove, or tend to prove, actual possession of the premises in plaintiff. One who relies on a lost deed to show title in himself must establish its original existence, its loss, and the material parts thereof, by clear and convincing evidence. Garland v. Foster County State Bank, 11 N. D. 374, 92 N. W. 452.

Proof of title with the strictness required in actions of ejectment is not necessary in actions to quiet title to realty. Glos v. Randolph, 138 Ill. 268, 27 N. E. 941.

Evidence held sufficient.—Where a deed from a patentee from the state was not produced in an action to quiet title, but the evidence tended to show that it had been lost, and that plaintiff and his grantor had claimed title since 1848, without any objection on the part of the patentee or his heirs, a finding that such lost deed covered the land in con-makes out a title apparently good as against defendant.[27] Where an assault on a troversy is proper. Combs v. Combs, 72 S. W. 8, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1691. Where, in a suit to remove a cloud on title, it was shown that the complainant, claiming the premises under a deed, had exclusive possession, had paid taxes, built fences, made repairs, etc., there was sufficient evidence of title, in the absence of any countervailing proof, to entitle complainant to maintain the bill. Glos v. Gerrity, 190 Ill. 545, 60 N. E. 833. It is not necessary for plaintiff to establish a chain of title from the government, where the only claim asserted by defendant to the land is through tax proceedings against plaintiff's deceased husband; but, in such case, it is sufficient for plaintiff to introduce the deed to her husband, showing a record title in him, and to prove that at the time of the tax proceedings her husband was dead, so that the tax proceedings were void; that he died intestate, and that plaintiff was the next of kin surviving him. Gage v. Campbell, 191 Mo. 698, 91 S. W. 119. Where it appears that the land in controversy was given by a father to his son by way of advancement, but no deed was given, although the son was in possession and made improvements, a decree vesting the title in the son's heirs is just, especially where there is evidence that the son once had a deed to the land which was afterward destroyed. Fuqua v. Fuqua, 16 S. W. 353, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 130. Where a deed not properly acknowledged is introduced in the evidence to show title to land, but this evidence is supplemented by uncontradicted testimony to the effect that the party claiming under the deed has paid a valuable consideration for the land, such evidence is sufficient to establish the claim of the latter as against parties who had no rights in the land. Bowen v. Duffie, 66 Iowa 88, 23 N. W. 277. Where the bill alleged that complainant had conveyed the land to defendant, who had reconveyed it to complainant by an unrecorded deed that had been lost, and complainant swears that the lost deed was executed and delivered, and another witness testifies that defendant had admitted its execution, and defendant testifies that he did not execute the deed, a decree for complainant will not be reversed on appeal as unsupported by the evidence. Springfield Homestead Assoc. v. Roll, 137 Ill. 205, 27 N. E. 184, 31 Am. St. Rep. 358. Plaintiff claimed that the property in controversy had been purchased for her by defendants' father, the title being taken in his name as security. He had repeatedly declared it to be hers. The deed to him was recorded, without his knowledge, by one of the defendants. There was ample evidence of payment in full by plaintiff. There was some evidence to show illicit relations between defendants' father and plaintiff, and defendants testified that they, at the request of their father, had notified her to quit the premises, and that she said she would. It was held that plaintiff had established title in himself. Wilson v. Orr, (Mo. 1894) 27 S. W. 394. Where an allegation of the fee in plaintiff is not denied, but the evidence shows a conveyance by two of the defendants to plaintiffs, a decree to quiet title and awarding possession as against defendants will be sustained. Wyland v. Mendel, 78 Iowa 739, 37 N. W. 160. In an action to set aside an invalid deed as a cloud on title, oral testimony, not objected to, that complainant is the owner of the land, together with an introduction in evidence of the trustee's deed under which he claims title, and the trust deed pursuant to which such trustee's deed was given, is sufficient evidence of complainant's title. Glos v. Randolph, 138 Ill. 268, 27 N. E. 941. Where the undisputed evidence shows that plaintiff was in the actual possession of the premises, claiming to be the owner in fee by virtue of a certain deed and certain judicial proceedings, such possession and claim of ownership were sufficient evidence of the title to justify a recovery as against a defendant who failed to establish any title in himself. Weeks v. Cranmer, 18 S. D. 441, 101 N. W. 32. See also Dickson v. Sentell, 83 Ark. 385, 104 S. W. 148; McLean v. Baldwin, 150 Cal. 615, 89 Pac. 429; Hodnett v. Stewart, 131 Ga. 67, 61 S. E. 1124; Scherer v. Judson, 100 Mich. 539, 59 N. W. 234.

Evidence held insufficient.— Where the parties did not claim title from the same grantor, and plaintiff was not in possession, and failed to connect himself with the paramount title, and defendant was in actual possession, a judgment in favor of defendant is proper. Harmon v. Goggins, 19 S. D. 34, 101 N. W. 1088. In order to make out a title under a sheriff's deed under a sale upon execution against the heirs of A, the facts of his death and that defendants were his heirs must be shown, as well as the sheriff's authority to sell, and a failure so to do is fatal. Stevens v. Robertson, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 97. Where plaintiff conveys land to defendant in trust for herself, which defendant is to reconvey at the end of five years, the fact that at the expiration of that time plaintiff is in possession of the land does not authorize a finding that the legal title is in him. Harrigan v. Mowry, 84 Cal. 456, 22 Pac. 658, 24 Pac. 48. Where, at the time of the trial, plaintiff only owned an easement of a right of way over the land in controversy, the fee of which belonged to defendant's grantees, subject to such easement, a finding that the title to the land is in plaintiff is not sustained by the evidence. Galletly v. Bockius, 1 Cal. App. 724, 82 Pac. 1109. Evidence of a deed from a third person to complainant, in an action to remove a cloud on title, without proof as to possession or title, does not establish title. Glos v. Miller, 213 Ill. 22, 72 N. record title is made by attempting to establish a title in a third person by secondary proof of a lost muniment of title, a high degree of proof is required.[28]

c. As to Adverse Claim. Plaintiff's proofs must clearly show that the claim set up by defendant is in fact in hostility to plaintiff's title.[29]

F. Trial or Hearing — 1. Scope of Inquiry and Power of Court. The question of title between the parties may be fully litigated and determined,[30] and a decree rendered assigning the title to the realty in controversy,[31] or any part of it,[32] to the party entitled thereto. But where defendant denies a jurisdictional fact. the rule is that the court will try in the first instance the issue of jurisdiction, and will not go into the question of the respective titles of the parties until the jurisdiction in question has been decided.[33] Where the statute permitting the action prescribes the extent to which the judgment or decree may go in adjusting the rights of the parties, the court is limited thereby.[34]

2. Questions For Court and Jury. The general rule applies in actions to quiet title that the questions of law are for the determination of the court,[35] and that questions of fact are for the determination of the jury, especially where the evidence

Claims of third persons.— Where two persons, claiming to be joint owners of accretions, agreed on a boundary between their property, in an action between their successors in interest to quiet their title, the claims of a third person not a party to the action to a portion of the accretions between those which belong to the parties was immaterial, since the judgment could not affect his right. Abandonment or forfeiture of grant.— On a bill by a grantor in possession against a grantee in a deed containing a condition subsequent, which he has failed to comply with, to remove the deed as a cloud on title, the court may try the question whether there be an abandonment or forfeiture of the grant. Collateral attack on proceedings in other courts.— In proceedings to quiet title to certain realty, the title to which was a right from an administrator's sale, the heirs of intestate sought to show the invalidity of the appointment of the de facto administrator who made the sale. It was held that the probate court, having jurisdiction to grant such administration, and having recognized the validity, and licensed such administrator to sell the estate and confirm the sale, this court would not inquire into the irregularity of the appointment in this collateral proceeding. Peaceable possession in complainant is a jurisdictional fact in a bill to quiet title to lands; and if defendant, in his answer to such a bill, deny that complainant is in peaceable possession of the premises in question, he is entitled to have the issue thereby raised tried in the chancery court before the granting of an issue to be sent to a court of law to try the question of title or no title. Instances.—Questions as to the construction of writings are for the determination of the

is conflicting.[36] Where there are both equitable issues and issues of fact the court should first determine the equitable issue, and then submit the issues of fact to a jury on proper instructions.[37]

3. INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY. When an issue as to title or possession is raised, it should be submitted to the jury, and refusal to do so, or to charge the jury as to the same, is error.[38] An instruction that, if the jury find plaintiff has no title to the premises, they may determine whether defendant has title to the whole or any portion thereof is proper.[39] So too where a record is admitted in reference to a claim that the land in dispute is the site of a highway, an allusion, in the instruction, to the record as describing a highway, not taken out of the common, but beginning at and running from it, is not error, such being the legal construction of the record.[40]

4. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT — a. Grounds — (I) FAILURE OF PLAINTIFF TO PROVE TITLE OR POSSESSION. Failure to prove title,[41] or possession,[42] in the plaintiff is held to be ground for dismissal or nonsuit. It is error to sustain a motion to dismiss, where plaintiff's evidence shows that the title in him is complete and perfect.[43]

(II) DISCLAIMER BY DEFENDANT. If defendant disclaims any title or pretension thereto, the suit will be dismissed.[44]

(III) SALE OF PROPERTY IN CONTROVERSY DURING TRIAL. Where, after the commencement of the action, both parties convey all their interest in the lands in dispute to a stranger, the bill should be dismissed.[45] Where, however, the proceeds of the sale is deposited in court under a stipulation by which it is to be subject to the adjudication of the question as to who is entitled thereto, the bill should not be dismissed.[46]

(IV) TIME OF MAKING MOTION. A motion for dismissal for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter may be made at any time before final judgment or decree.[47]

(V) OPERATION AND EFFECT — (A) On Cross Complaint. Where plaintiff is nonsuited after filing an answer to the cross complaint, defendant is entitled to have the issues made by the cross complaint and answer thereto tried and disposed of.[48]

(B) Nonsuit of One Plaintiff as Affecting Co-Plaintiffs. A nonsuit by a plaintiff who is not a necessary party to the suit does not affect the right of his co-plaintiff to have an adjudication.[49]

5. VERDICT AND FINDINGS — a. Verdict — (I) SUFFICIENCY. If a special verdict states such facts as sustain the substance of the issues, it is sufficient;[50] but if the cause has been submitted generally to the jury, and the jury returns a verdict which determines in favor of plaintiff only one of several material issues, the verdict will not sustain a judgment for plaintiff.[51]

(II) DISREGARDING. It is held that a statute authorizing an action to determine adverse claims does not change the jurisdiction of the court in an action to quiet title, but such jurisdiction remains purely equitable, justifying the court in treating the verdict of a jury in such case as advisory merely, and finding contrary thereto.[52]

b. Findings — (I) NECESSITY OF CERTAIN FINDINGS — (A) As to Plaintiff's Title. In an action to quiet title, there is no occasion for a finding as to any alleged title of plaintiff not set up in the complaint.[53]

(B) As to Defendant's Title. A finding in a suit to quiet title on the issues raised by denial of the allegations of the complaint, if adverse to plaintiff, is sufficient, without finding defendant's title.[54] So where the complaint alleges ownership in plaintiff, and the evidence is insufficient to establish such ownership, and the court finds as a conclusion of law that defendant is entitled to judgment, and that plaintiff is not the owner, an omission to find as to defendant's title is not error.[55] If defendant in his answer claims no interest in the lands in controversy, a finding that he has no interest therein is not necessary.[56]

(C) That Land Vacant and Unoccupied. In the ordinary statutory action to determine adverse claims, a finding that the land is vacant and unoccupied, as alleged in the complaint, is not necessary to support the judgment, where defendant in his answer sets up his own claim to the land for the determination of the court.[57]

(II) SUFFICIENCY — (A) In General. The findings must of course be sufficient to support the judgment.[58]

Possession as tenant.—In an action to quiet title, the statement of the special verdict that, relying on the contract of defendant's ancestor to convey certain land to him, and in pursuance thereof, and with the knowledge and consent of the deceased, plaintiff and wife entered into possession of the premises and had been in peaceable, uninterrupted, and exclusive possession thereof up to the death of the deceased, and to the present time, excluded the inference that plaintiff's possession was that of tenant of the deceased. Findings held insufficient.—In an action to quiet title by a purchaser at foreclosure sale, findings which show that the legal title did not pass to him unless he was a purchaser without notice of defective title in the mortgagor, and which, instead of showing want of notice, show merely that the mortgagee had no notice when he took the mortgage, are insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff. Randall v. Duff, 79 Cal. 115, 19 Pac. 532, 21 Pac. 610, 3 L. R. A. 754, 756. Where the pleadings admit that the fee is held by plaintiff, a finding that an undivided half interest is owned by another, without finding the facts from which such legal conclusion is drawn, is insufficient to support a judgment against plaintiff for half the land. Traverso v. Tate, 82 Cal. 170, 22 Pac. 1082. In an action to quiet title by the grantee of a deed against a judgment creditor of the grantor, who had purchased the land at execution sale, a finding that the deed, made by a mother while ill, and in the expectation of an early death, to her daughter, was made with the intention on the grantor's part that it should not take effect except in case of her death, and, in such case, that it should operate in lieu of a will, and take effect after her death, will not support a defense that it was made

(B) Must Cover Material Issues. The findings should cover all the material issues;[59] but want of a finding on a particular issue is not cause for reversal, if the omission is in no wise prejudicial.[60]

(C) Must Be Responsive to Issues. The verdict or finding should be responsive to the issues.[61]

(D) Need Recite Only Ultimate Facts. Only the ultimate facts should be contained in the findings,[62] and it is improper to insert therein evidential facts.[63]

(E) As to Ownership of Property. A finding that plaintiff was [64] or was not [65] the owner of the realty in controversy is a finding of the fact in issue, and is sufficient without a finding of the facts respecting such ownership.

6. New Trial of Issues. If on the trial of an issue submitted, defendant claims a title substantially different from that set up in his answer, and objection is made, a new trial will be granted as a matter of course, if the verdict is in his favor.[66]

G. Judgment [67] or Decree [68] — 1. Nature. Although a decree quieting to defraud creditors, although coupled with a finding that after the grantor's recovery it was placed on record for the purpose of defrauding creditors. Mowry v. Heney, 86 Cal. 471, 25 Pac. 17.

Findings held sufficient.— The complaint merely alleging that defendant claims to hold a judgment lien against the land, but that the claim is without any foundation or right, a finding that the judgment, although recorded, is not and never has been a lien on the land, is sufficient to sustain a judgment quieting plaintiff's title, without finding the reason why the judgment is not a lien, as that the land is plaintiff's homestead. Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 91, 44 Pac. 331. When a water right consisting of a continuous flow of water and the canal or pipe line through which it passes are owned by the same person, a finding that the canal or pipe line is realty is a sufficient finding that the water right being appurtenant thereto was realty, to quiet title to which an action would lie. Fudickar v. East Riverside Irr. Dist., 109 Cal. 29, 41 Pac. 1024. A finding of fact that realty sold on execution "had in all things been duly appraised according to law" sufficiently shows the appraisement of the rents and profits before sale, although the finding also recites that the "appraisement returned that the execution contains only an appraisement of the real estate." Lytton v. Baird, 141 Ind. 446, 40 N. E. 1063. An allegation that plaintiff was the owner and in possession of land was an allegation of ownership in fee simple, and hence a finding that the allegation was true was sufficient to support a decree in plaintiff's favor on the theory that his ownership was in fee simple. Meyer v. O'Rourke, 150 Cal. 177, 88 Pac. 706.

Immaterial issues.— Whenever the statute has so enlarged equitable jurisdiction as to permit the action by one out of possession, an issue as to the possession of plaintiff at the commencement is immaterial, and no finding need be made thereon. Pearson v. Creed, 78 Cal. 144, 20 Pac. 302.

60. Callahan v. James, (Cal. 1902) 71 Pac. 104; Daly v. Sorocco, 80 Cal. 367, 22 Pac. 211, holding further that as the right to maintain an action to quiet title is based wholly on the ownership and right to possession, a failure to find on certain other issues is not prejudicial.

61. Dem v. Zink, 112 Cal. 91, 44 Pac. 331; Mowry v. Heney, 86 Cal. 471, 25 Pac. 17; Tompkins v. Sprout, 55 Cal. 31 (holding, however, that, although the answer should set out the nature of defendant's claim, yet where no demurrer or objection was interposed, it cannot be objected on appeal that the finding is not within the issue).

Finding held to be within the issue.— Plaintiffs claimed title under a grant of one hundred and eighty acres of their grandfather. Defendants claimed the same land under a subsequent overlapping grant to their remote grantor. Plaintiffs also claimed under a still later grant of five thousand acres to their grandfather, overlapping both the earlier grants. Plaintiffs sued to have their title quieted as to the overlap between their five-thousand-acre grant and defendants' grant. It was held that a finding that plaintiffs were entitled to have their title quieted as to the one-hundred-and-eighty-acre grant was within the issue raised by the pleading. Still v. Armstrong, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 60 S. W. 509.

title is not in rem, strictly speaking, it fixes and settles the title to realty, and to that extent partakes of the nature of a judgment in rem.[69]

2. Form and Requisites — a. In General. The decree must fix and settle the rights of the parties.[70]

b. Describing Lands. In a suit to quiet title, in order to give stability to a judgment for plaintiff the judgment and the corresponding findings should describe the land with such definiteness as to enable the parties to know from such description the precise limits or the location of the boundary lines thereof.[71] But the description is sufficient, if the land is capable of identification from such description by resorting to extraneous evidence.[72]

3. Judgment by Default — a. Not Entered of Course. Defendant's default for omitting to appear and plead cannot be entered of course, but defendant must move the court for it, showing by affidavit or otherwise on what proof the rule to appear and plead was entered.[73]

b. Validity. A judgment by default in an action to quiet title as against a non-resident is not unauthorized and void, where there was only constructive service of the summons on him by publication and defendant did not answer and appear in the action.[74]

4. Judgment on the Pleadings. If the denials in the answer are insufficient, or in effect amount to an admission of the averments of the complaint, a motion on that ground for judgment on the pleadings should be granted.[75] But plaintiff is not entitled to judgment on the pleadings where the answer denies his asserted title,[76] although it fails to set forth an adverse interest,[77] or a valid interest,[78] in the lands. Nor can plaintiff recover judgment on the pleadings for that portion of the lands not admitted to be in his possession, where the answer admits that he is in possession of a portion of the lands, and denies possession of the remainder.[79]

5. Judgment on Disclaimer. Where, in the ordinary statutory action to determine an adverse claim, defendant files a disclaimer, plaintiff is entitled to judgment that defendant has no interest in the land in question,[80] although the answer puts in issue material allegations of the complaint.[81]

In an action to quiet title to land sold under various judgments, some of which had been partly satisfied from other property, a decree determining the relative interests of the judgment creditor, which did not show the value of such other property nor the amount for which sold, is erroneous. Rule applied.— A party seeking relief from a cloud on a title created by a void mortgage may be compelled to do equity as a condition precedent to relief, although the holder of the mortgage could not enforce the same by foreclosure. Henry v. Henry, 73 Nebr. 746, 103 N. W. 441, 107 N. W. 789. See also Burns v. Hiatt, 149 Cal. 617, 87 Pac. 196, 117 Am. St. Rep. 157; Hall v. Hooper, 47 Nebr. 111, 66 N. W. 33. Where a mortgage lien has been extinguished, and the mortgagor borrows money and agrees that the mortgage shall stand as security, which it might ostensibly do until discharged of record, he may not sue in equity to remove the mortgage as a cloud upon his title without first doing equity, by repaying the money received upon the faith of the supposed security. Krugmeier v. Hackett, 134 Wis. 57, 113 N. W. 1103. In an action by a vendor to cancel the contract of sale as a cloud on the title of the land sold, plaintiff must tender performance of the contract as a condition precedent to obtaining the relief sought. Kane v. Borthwick, 50 Wash. 8, 96 Pac. 516. But where a vendor is ready and willing to perform the contract of sale, and the vendee refuses to perform, on the ground of defects in the title, the vendor need not, in an action to cancel the contract as a cloud on the title, tender performance of the contract, where the objections to the title are technical and frivolous, and nothing could be accomplished by the making of a tender. Kane v. Borthwick, 50 Wash. 8, 96 Pac. 516. A vendee of a judgment debtor who has received a deed from such debtor but not paid the purchase-money, cannot sustain a bill to quiet his title, as against one who has bought the land under a judgment rendered subsequently to the vendee's contract, without first paying the purchase-money into court. Butler v. Brown, 5 Ohio St. 211. Although assessment of any rear parcel of the first one hundred and fifty feet back from a street may be enjoined until the front parcel or parcels have been exhausted, title to none of them can be quieted against the lien of the assessment until it is paid. Woodruff Place v. Raschig, 147 Ind. 517, 46 N. E. 390. To quiet one's title as against a purchaser, at a sale to enforce a drainage assessment, who, by reason of his purchase, was subrogated in part to the state's lien, one must tender the amount of the purchaser's lien. Reed v. Kalfsbeck, 147 Ind. 148, 45 N. E. 476. A bill to quiet title to an undivided interest in land will not lie, as against the grantee of one who has advanced money to acquire the property, and taken a deed in the nature of a mortgage as security for the lien, without payment or tender of the proportionate part of the money loaned. Tripp v. Duane, (Cal. 1887) 13 Pac. 860. Plaintiff executed a mortgage to secure certain bonds executed and delivered to him by a county to aid him in building a grist mill. It was held that an action would not lie to set aside such mortgage and remove it, as a cloud on title to plaintiff's land until he should pay the same, or restore the consideration which he received thereunder. Brewer v. Merrick County, 15 Nebr. 180, 18 N. W. 43. Where the commissioner, under an order to sell real estate to pay debts of an estate, becomes the purchaser at his own sale, the heirs in an action to quiet title in them will be required to refund to the commissioner's grantees his purchase-money with interest, before being entitled to a decree. Penn v. Rhoades, 100 S. W. 288, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 997.

Rule held not applicable.— Where plaintiff purchased mortgage property and attempted to pay the amount of the mortgage, with interest, but the mortgagee evaded him and procured title to himself under a foreclosure sale, in bad faith, for the purpose of defeating plaintiff's title, and canceled the mortgage of record, plaintiff, in an action to quiet title to land, is entitled to have the title decreed to be in him, without the payment of the amount of the mortgage; the maxim that he who comes into equity must do equity not being applicable. Nugent v. Stofella, (Ariz. 1906) 84 Pac. 910. The purchaser of the equity of redemption of real estate, which is encumbered by mortgage liens of different priorities, if he be in possession under such purchase, may maintain an action to quiet his title, against the holder of a junior mortgage, without having paid off the senior. Holten v. Lake County, 55 Ind. 194. Where defendant claims under a void guardian's deed and sets up no claim for repayment of the money paid, and it does not appear that he paid any for the land, a judgment quieting the title in plaintiff is not erroneous, although no offer of repayment is made. Ybarra v. Sylvany, (Cal. 1893) 31 Pac. 1114. Where a vendee of land voluntarily abandons his contract of purchase, and becomes the tenant of the vendor, the latter may maintain an action against

7. Nature and Extent of Relief Granted — a. Conformation to Pleadings as Well as Proof. The relief afforded by the decree must conform to the case made out by the pleadings as well as to the proofs.[83]

b. Relief as Affected by Prayer — (i) In General. The relief granted must conform to the prayer of the bill, and cannot extend beyond that prayed;[84] but the fact that plaintiff has prayed for relief in excess of that to which he is entitled forms no objection to awarding him such part thereof as is warranted by the pleadings and proof.[85]

(ii) Prayer For General Relief. Under the prayer for general relief any decree, warranted by the allegations of the bill, may be made,[86] if plaintiff's equities be clear on the facts.[87]

c. Relief to Plaintiff — (i) In General. As a general rule the relief to plaintiff must be confined to perfecting his title to the land in controversy.[88] Thus the former to quiet his title and to cancel a mortgage given by the vendee to a third person, without first rescinding the contract, and delivering up the vendee's notes for the purchase-money. Snodgrass v. Parks, 79 Cal. 55, 21 Pac. 429. Payment of the debt for which a mechanic's lien was claimed will not be required as a condition to removing the cloud on title caused by the record of the lien which has become forfeited by failure to institute foreclosure proceedings on demand. Sheets v. Prosser, 16 N. D. 180, 112 N. W. 72. Payment or tender of all just taxes paid by a party is not necessary before suing to quiet title, when there was no assessment of the land on account of a failure to properly describe it in the assessment roll. State Finance Co. v. Halstenson, (N. D. 1908) 114 N. W. 724. Where plaintiffs gave a lessee an option to purchase, and the lessee gave defendant an option to purchase from him, pursuant to which defendant made a payment to the lessee, who turned it over to plaintiffs, they were not required to return it to defendant in order to maintain a suit against defendant to remove its claim as a cloud on the title. Merk v. Bowery Min. Co., 31 Mont. 298, 78 Pac. 519. Where, in a suit to quiet title, the holder of a mortgage barred by limitations is made defendant and asks for affirmative relief on the mortgage, the court may, on proper proof, declare such mortgage barred, without requiring the holder of the legal title of the mortgage premises to do equity by tendering payment of the amount due thereon. Stivers v. Gardner, 88 Iowa 307, 55 N. W. 516.

Foreclosure of interest by a nominal holder of the equity of redemption of mortgaged premises may be decreed under a general prayer for relief in a petition praying to have quieted plaintiff's title, acquired under prior foreclosure by adjudging the conveyance from the mortgagor to defendant fraudulent and void as to plaintiff. Where a vendor and his vendee join in a suit to remove a cloud from the title, it is error to make a decree vesting and confirming title in the vendor instead of the vendee. Andrews v. Palmer, 9 Tex. 491.

Where neither party proves any right or title in or to the land, but title was quieted in plaintiff as to a part thereof, it was not error to deny plaintiff further relief. Smith v. Thomas, 120 Iowa 12, 94 N. W. 259.

Judgment adjudging one half of land to plaintiff and one half to an intervener.— Defendants in an action to quiet title, having shown no title to the land, are not prejudiced in a suit to set aside an instrument as a cloud on title it is generally regarded as sufficient, the facts warranting it, to simply set the instrument aside,[89] and as erroneous to decree a conveyance by defendant to plaintiff of the title derived through such instrument.[90] And it has been held that a decree pronouncing that an instrument is fraudulent and void has the effect to remove any cloud resulting from its execution, without an express direction that it be set aside.[91]

(II) Incidental Relief — (A) In General. The relief authorized in a suit to quiet title is equitable, and consists in a judgment quieting title to the land in dispute, and includes such incidental relief as may be proper to make the main relief complete.[92]

(B) Delivery of Possession of Property. Incidental to a bill to quiet title the court cannot decree a delivery of the possession of the lands,[93] or require the defendant to convey them to complainant.[94]

(C) Damages For Wrongfully Withholding Possession. Damages for wrongfully withholding possession cannot be awarded to plaintiff as incidental relief.[95]

(D) Taking Account of Mesne Rents and Profits. The court may grant complete relief to plaintiff by taking an account of the mesne rents and profits.[96] But by a judgment adjudging one half of the land to plaintiff, and one half to an intervener who claims under purchase from plaintiff after the commencement of the action, where plaintiff would otherwise be entitled to the whole of the land. Pearson v. Creed, 78 Cal. 144, 20 Pac. 302.

Plaintiff having title to only part of land claimed.— Under Acts (1892–1893), p. 42, authorizing any person in peaceable possession of land, claiming to own any part thereof, to quiet title thereto, when it appears that the title to only the part claimed by complainant is in him, the court should ascertain the facts, and decree accordingly. Limiting effect of deed.— On a bill to set aside a certain deed as a cloud, if the circumstances under which defendant obtained the title are such that he holds the fee in trust for plaintiff, subject to a life-estate in himself, free from any trust, plaintiff is entitled to have the effect of the deed limited by decree. Decreeing conveyance in fee and a reconveyance of life-estate.—A, for a valuable consideration, conveyed land to B in fee, but retained a life-interest in the premises conveyed. In an action by A against B to quiet the title, it was held that, it being questionable whether the statute of uses is in force in California, a formal conveyance in fee from A to B, and a reconveyance from B to A for the life of the latter, should be decreed. Chandler v. Chandler, 55 Cal. 267.

Aiding a defective execution of power coupled with a trust by directing conveyance.— Land was devised for the payment of a certain debt, and the executor was empowered by the will to sell it for that purpose, and the executor assumed and paid the debt, and afterward sold the land. (E) Lien For Taxes Paid. Where plaintiff has paid taxes on the land in question, and judgment goes against him as having no title, he is entitled to a lien on the land for the amount of taxes so paid.[98]

d. Relief to Defendant — (I) In General. If defendant's title be found to be superior to that of plaintiff, he is entitled to a decree to that effect.[99]

(II) Incidental Relief — (A) Damages. Damages sustained by a defendant in an action to quiet title cannot be recovered unless pleaded in the answer.[1]

(B) Reimbursement For Moneys Expended — (1) For Improvements — (a) In General. Quieting title in defendant without cross bill.—As to whether the court can decree that the superior title to the land is in a defendant who files no cross complaint, but merely an answer consisting of denials of plaintiff's allegations, and containing none of the elements of a cross complaint, there is a conflict of authority, it having been held in some jurisdictions that the court is powerless so to do (Hungarian Hill Gravel Min. Co. v. Moses, 58 Cal. 168; Spradlin v. Patrick, 64 S. W. 840, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1156); and in other jurisdictions that such a decree is proper, and in accordance with the purpose of a bill to quiet title (Collier v. Alexander, 138 Ala. 245, 36 So. 367; Miller v. Steele, 146 Mich. 123, 109 N. W. 37).

Time of petitioning for value of improvements.— A claimant of land, who is ousted from the possession thereof on an adverse determination of his claim, loses his right to petition for the value of improvements under the occupying claimant's act by failing to petition therefor before surrendering possession of the property, as such right is in the nature of a lien, which is lost by a surrender or loss of possession. Nor does the rule apply to improvements so made upon the land where defendant acted in bad faith.[5]

(b) Amount of Recovery. The value of defendant's recovery is the amount the real estate increased in value by reason of the improvements,[6] less the value of the rents and profits during defendant's occupancy.[7]

(2) For Lien Paid Off — (a) In General. Where defendant has paid off a lien on the property, both valid and prior to plaintiff's claim, the latter will be granted relief only upon terms of paying to the former the amount of the lien.[8]

(b) Tax Lien. As a condition to granting relief the court will require plaintiff to reimburse defendant, with interest, for all taxes properly chargeable upon the land and paid by him;[9] but defendant is not entitled to have taxes paid by him refunded where he has not made a claim therefor in his pleadings,[10] and proved the amount of taxes paid by competent evidence.[11] It has been held, however, that a plaintiff who has offered to pay all taxes legally due, as a condition precedent to relief, is estopped to deny the right of the court to decree payment by him according to the offer;[12] and that where plaintiff alleges that he is able and willing to pay all legal taxes due on the land, it is error for the court not to take an account of such taxes and decree their payment as a condition of the relief prayed for.[13]

(3) Mortgage Debt. A court of equity will require a plaintiff, suing to have a mortgage canceled as a cloud on his title, to do equity by paying to defendant the amount of the mortgage debt, even where such debt is barred, or alleged to be barred, by the statute of limitations;[14] or where the mortgage is unenforceable because taken by a loan association doing business in defiance of the statute.[15] Likewise where the interest of the mortgagor escapes being bound by a decree in foreclosure, through a slip in the proceedings, and he subsequently comes into equity to be relieved of the cloud cast upon his interest by reason of such proceedings, he will be required to pay defendant his proportion of the mortgage debt.[16]

(4) Purchase-Price at Judicial Sale. A court of equity setting aside a judicial sale under a void execution, as a cloud on title, should decree that the purchase-money be refunded.[17]

8. Operation and Effect — a. In General. Where a decree is rendered on the

made by defendant during possession taken and held in good faith, and in making proof of the rental value the witnesses for plaintiff increased their estimate year by year, as they themselves stated, because of the increased improvements, which, meanwhile, had been made, it was proper, under all these circumstances, to allow defendant the fair value of such improvements, even though some of them were made after the suit was instituted.

merits by a court of competent jurisdiction, it precludes and bars subsequent litigation between the same parties or their privies on the same cause of action.[18]

b. Conclusiveness as to Issues Determined. A decree is conclusive between the parties and their privies not only as to the issues actually involved and determined, but also as to such issues as might have been raised upon the cause of action set up in the complaint.[19] But the decree is conclusive only as to the matters capable of being controverted at the time and as to conditions then existing, and cannot operate as an estoppel as to after-occurring facts not involved in the suit in which the decree was rendered.[20]

c. Transferring Defendant's Title to Plaintiff as Against Stranger to Suit. The effect of an ordinary decree to quiet title is only to preclude defendant, or any one claiming under him, from asserting against plaintiff, or his successors, any title to or interest in the real property affected,[21] and such a decree does not have the effect of transferring to plaintiff, as against a stranger to the suit, the title theretofore held by defendant.[22] But where the decree includes an order for defendant to convey to plaintiff whatever interest he may have in the realty involved, it of course affects a transfer of title as effectually as a voluntary conveyance.[23]

d. Destroying Liens. A decree quieting title destroys all liens not protected by proper provisions in the decree, if the lien-holders were made parties defendant;[24] but the decree does not bind a lien-holder not made a party defendant, since the action is in rem only so far that personal service of process is not required to give jurisdiction.[25]

9. Enforcement of — a. In General. When the decree declares the rights of the respective parties, the court may subsequently direct such process, or make such order, as may be necessary to carry the decree into execution.[26]

b. Mode. Where title has been quieted by decree against one in possession, a mandatory injunction is a proper remedy to enforce it.[27]

H. Appeal and Error. The general rules of appeal and error apply in determining by or against what parties error or appeal lies in actions to quiet title;[28] to the necessity and sufficiency of the presentation and reservation in the lower court of grounds of review;[29] to waiver of and estoppel to allege Estoppel to claim right to possession.— In an action brought by a vendor against his vendee who has abandoned the contract and become a tenant of the vendor, the vendee, having failed to allege the fact that he was tenant of the vendor, and therefore entitled to possession, cannot contend on appeal that for that reason a judgment in favor of the vendor is erroneous. Snodgrass v. Parks, 79 Cal. 55, 21 Pac. 429.

Estoppel to claim that complaint should have been dismissed as to certain defendants. —Where both the lessor and the lessee corporation are made parties defendant to an action under the statute for the determination of adverse claims to realty, and both appeared, and neither disclaimed, by their pleadings or in any manner on the trial, and no motion has been made at any time to dismiss the complaint, defendant cannot, on appeal, urge that there was nothing to show that the lessee company made a claim against plaintiff, and that therefore, as to it, the complaint should have been dismissed. Waiver of proof of possession.—Defendant's seeking by cross complaint to have his own title quieted to a portion of the land embraced in the complaint, and his failure to raise any question in the trial court as to plaintiff's failure to prove possession, is a waiver of such proof. For example, an instruction that, if land was owned individually by a partner in whose name title was taken, and he sold the same to his copartner, who took and retained possession, the latter's grantee might have his title quieted against the partner who took title and his wife, is harmless error, where the jury specially find that the land was partnership property. Supplemental decree.— After an appeal by defendant from a decree quieting title in plaintiff on condition that he pay defendant a certain sum, the trial court has no jurisdiction to make a supplemental decree barring plaintiff of his interest because of his failure to pay the amount as ordered. Affirmance.— Where plaintiff shows a clear legal title and defendant's title is based on a partially executed parol contract of purchase with plaintiff's grantor, the evidence as to the existence of which being conflicting, a judgment for plaintiff will be affirmed. Barr v. Vermilya, 130 Ind. 512, 30 N. E. 698.

Reversal.— Where the bill alleges and the answer denies possession, if, on appeal from a decree for complainants, the evidence is not brought up, and the decree does not find the fact of possession, it must be reversed. Rutz v. Kehn, 143 Ill. 558, 29 N. E. 553.

Modification.—A complaint alleged that plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the property. The findings were that plaintiff was the owner, but that defendant was in possession, and judgment was rendered that plaintiff's title be quieted and that defendant be removed from possession. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 380, the action may be maintained by one not in possession. It was held that, although the judgment was in direct contradiction to the complaint, it would be modified on appeal so as to omit the part relating to possession, and would be thus affirmed without costs to either party. Bryan v. Tormey, (Cal. 1889) 21 Pac. 725. A decree for plaintiff, including a tract not claimed in the bill, will be modified by omitting it therefrom. Hess v. Adler, 67 Ark. 444, 55 S. W. 843.

Remand.— Where a complainant alleges ownership and possession by plaintiff, a judgment in his favor, based on proof that he is the owner, and that defendant had verbally dispossessed him will be reversed and the cause remanded, in order that the complaint may be amended so as to conform to the proof. Bryan v. Tormey, 84 Cal. 126, 24 Pac. 319. Where, after the answer of the statute of limitations, and denial of the incorporation and title of plaintiff, a supplemental answer denying plaintiff's possession, and setting up the statute of limitations, was filed, but not in accordance with Nebr. Code, § 149, allowing such answer for the purpose of setting up facts occurring after the former answer: after which a supplemental bill was filed, alleging that plaintiff was in possession at the time of

I. Costs [36] — 1. Right — a. In General. The rule of equity, that the allowance of costs is within the court's discretion,[37] applies in actions to quiet title, so that costs are awarded or refused according to the justice of each particular case.[38] This rule, however, has been abrogated in many jurisdictions by statutes giving costs, as of right, to the successful party.[39]

b. Where Each Party Successful in Part. Where plaintiff brought suit to remove a cloud on his title, consisting of a certain instrument, and defendant having equities by reason of which there is judgment that the property be sold, and any proceeds above plaintiff's claim be applied to defendant's claim, it has been held that costs should not be awarded to either party.[40]

c. Previous Demand For Quitclaim Deed as Condition Precedent. If it is a condition precedent to his right to costs that plaintiff shall have made demand of the holder of the adverse claim for a quitclaim deed before suit, and that it shall have been refused, no costs can be taxed against defendant from whom no demand has been made.[41]

d. On Disclaimer. In some jurisdictions costs, by express provision of the law, cannot be adjudged against a defendant who, by his answer, disclaims all title or interest adverse to plaintiff in the land forming the subject-matter of the suit,[42] bringing the suit, but that defendant had since forcibly taken possession — the case being then treated as ejectment at law, by court and counsel, and there appearing to have been much uncertainty as to the course of proceeding, and the evidence being unsatisfactory, the case will be remanded for trial on the merits after amending the pleadings. If defendant resist the relief sought in an action to quiet title, brought under the act of March 9, 1854, plaintiff is entitled to costs, as of right, in the event of his success in the action, by express provision of the act. Moore v. Boner, 7 Bush (Ky.) 26.

Defendant not shown to have violated plaintiff's rights.— W sued B to quiet title to land, in which it was held that W did not own the land, but had merely a right to pass over it. B then brought suit against W and S, to quiet title to the same land, in which S, having disclaimed title, judgment was rendered against him. It was held that the court properly refused to enter judgment for costs against W, as it was not shown that he had violated any of B's rights. Browning v. Wayland, 85 S. W. 211, 27 Ky. L. Demand held sufficient.— Plaintiff showed that he had sent a letter to defendant, requesting him to execute the quitclaim deed inclosed. A draft payable to defendant for one dollar and twenty-five cents was inclosed. Defendant's agent received the letter, opened it as he was authorized to do, and answered it by demanding five dollars for the execution of the deed. Defendant was not advised of the contents of the letter until commencement of the suit, more than twenty days after the receipt of the letter. It was held that defendant was sufficiently requested to give a deed entitling plaintiff to recover the costs authorized by Code, § 4225, where, in an action to quiet title, defendant, disclaiming any interest, fails to execute a deed within twenty days. A defendant who claims to be the owner of and entitled to possession of a portion of the land embraced in the complaint cannot avail himself of a statute providing that if defendant disclaims any interest or estate in the property, plaintiff shall not recover costs. Relenden v. Riggs, 20 Colo. App. 423, 79 Pac. 328.

Disclaimer and giving of release.— Where defendant disclaimed, but gave no release, he did not bring himself within the exception to St. (1898) § 3186, providing that if, in an action to quiet title, plaintiff shall substantiate his title, defendant shall be ad-and in other jurisdictions, such a disclaimer, if true, entitles defendant to recover costs.[43]

e. On Default. A defendant who is alleged to be in possession and withholding the realty and who suffers judgment to be taken against him without answer, is not, in the absence of express provision of law to the contrary, entitled to recover costs.[44]

f. On Settlement Out of Court. Where, on a bill to quiet title, a feigned issue was awarded to try the legal title to the lands in dispute, and, after judgment for defendants, plaintiff and defendants settled the litigation by conveying their interest in the lands in dispute to a third party, each party should pay his own costs.[45]

2. Amount. A party defendant filing a disclaimer cannot recover costs against plaintiff in a sum exceeding the amount which was necessary to enable him to file such disclaimer.[46]

V. Statutory Proceedings to Compel Bringing of Action to Quiet Title.

A. In General. In several jurisdictions a statutory proceeding exists, the design of which is to enable a party in actual possession of land, claiming it as his own, to compel a party out of possession, who also claims to be the owner, to bring an action at law or in equity to settle the question of title between them.[47] The proceeding is purely statutory, and possesses none of the features of an equitable suit to quiet title;[48] nor is it intended as a substitute for the action of ejectment.[49]

B. Who May Maintain. Who may maintain the proceeding is entirely dependent upon the language of the statute.[50]

C. Conditions Precedent to Maintenance[51] — 1. Possession by Petitioner[52] — a. Necessity. In order to maintain the proceeding, the petitioner must, at the time of filing his petition, have possession of the realty in question.[53]

Statute held constitutional.— Me. Rev. b. Sufficiency — (i) Must Be Actual. The possession of the petitioner must be actual;[54] and therefore constructive possession, which follows what is termed the paper title, will not suffice.[55]

(ii) Must Be Substantially Exclusive. As between himself and the respondent, the possession of the petitioner must be substantially and practically exclusive.[56] Accordingly it is not sufficient that the petitioner has mere formal or nominal possession which he may abandon and then bring the action himself,[57] especially if obtained by an act of trespass, for the sole purpose of instituting the proceeding, so as to shift the burden of establishing title on respondent.[58] Nor is it sufficient that petitioner may be treated as a disseizor at the election of a respondent.[59]

2. Adverse Claim on Part of Respondent[60] — a. Necessity. To authorize the proceeding, it must appear that respondent is asserting some claim adverse to the petitioner's title.[61] The proceeding cannot be maintained when it appears that the respondent, after the filing of the petition, conveyed his interest in the real estate.[62] It is a prerequisite to the maintenance of the proceeding that the respondent is, at the time of the filing of the petition, making a claim to the premises adverse to the title or interest of petitioner.[63]

b. Nature — (i) Must Be of Immediate Interest. The claim made by respondent must be one which can be presently asserted.[64] Thus where the Possession held exclusive.— The petitioner claiming under a quitclaim deed made in 1870 by a corporation which had filled flats in 1867, which had previously been partially covered by water, offered evidence that down to the time of the deed the land remained vacant and unoccupied; that soon after the petitioner put some building stone on the premises, and a short time prior to the filing of the petition caused a fence to be put upon the lot and ordered a fence erected by some one else to be removed; that he had paid the taxes from the date of the deed to him. The evidence of the respondent who claimed under a quitclaim deed from a third person, given in 1871, was to the effect that he had fenced the land twice after his deed, and that his fences were removed before the petition was filed; and that the corporation of which he was president had filled the land at a small cost, for the purpose of facilitating the filling of other land. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to show exclusive possession on the part of the petitioner. Brown v. Matthews, 117 Mass. 506.

Possession held not exclusive.— A religious society occupying a building originally erected by a town on a portion of the town common, to be used as a town house and for religious worship, but to which the town still continued to have access for the purpose of ringing the bell at noon and tolling it when deaths occurred, has not such an exclusive possession as will entitle it to bring a petition against the town to compel it to bring an action to try its alleged title to the premises. Orthodox Cong. Soc. v. Greenwich, 145 Mass. 112, 13 N. E. 380. Evidence that petitioner had leased the premises to the city for one year, and that the city covenanted to deliver up the premises to the lessor at the end of the term, is insufficient to show the petitioner's possession was exclusive where respondent executed a lease of his interest in the premises to the city for the same term, and both leases were delivered to the city at the same time. adverse claim is merely of a remainder, and does not conflict with petitioner's possession or right of possession, the case is not within the purview of the statute.[65]

(II) Must Be Capable of Being Immediately Tested at Law or in Equity. The claim made by the respondent must be one enforceable by an appropriate remedy at law [66] or in equity.[67] But when defendant asserts an immediate and adverse interest in the property, capable of being tested at once by appropriate proceedings in the courts, the form of action in which such adverse interest is to be asserted is immaterial.[68]

c. Particular Claims — (I) Claim Invalid on Face. The fact that a claim is invalid on the face of the record does not prevent it from being such an adverse claim as authorizes the proceeding.[69]

(II) Assigned Dower. Although an unassigned dower interest is neither a title nor an estate, yet it is an adverse claim within the purview of the statute.[70]

(III) Claim Under Mortgage. A petition by one in possession of realty, claiming the fee, will not be sustained when the respondent's claim is merely under a mortgage of the premises.[71]

D. Defenses.[72] It is a good defense to the proceeding that respondent can bring no action at law or in equity to settle the title,[73] that he claims only a future interest in the realty adverse to the petitioner,[74] or that he has already brought suit to try his title in the United States court.[75] But it is no defense that the practical effect of ordering respondent to prosecute an action to settle his title is to curtail the time allowed by the statute of limitations within which he might bring such an action.[76] Nor is it a defense that respondent is a feme covert, and so under disability and incapable of suing alone, and that her husband might refuse to join in the appropriate action to vindicate the rights of his wife.[77]

E. Parties.[78] Tenants in common may be joined as respondents in a petition to compel them to try their titles to the land, although their alleged titles are several.[79]

F. Process.[80] Actual notice is required to give the court jurisdiction, notice by publication to a non-resident not being sufficient.[81]

G. Pleading [82] — 1. Petition — a. In General. The foundation of the proceeding is the petition, which must contain averments of the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction, and asking that respondent be summoned to show cause why he should not bring an action to try his title.[83]

b. Particular Averments — (I) As to Title or Interest of Petitioner. The petition need not allege ownership in the petitioner, it being necessary only to allege that he is in actual possession of the land, claiming either an estate of freehold or an unexpired term of not less than ten years.[84]

(II) As to Adverse Claims. As to adverse claim the petition need only allege that petitioner is credibly informed and believes that respondent makes some claim adverse to his title.[85]

(III) Describing Property. The petition should contain a description of the land sufficiently definite to apprise the respondent of the land to which the petition refers.[86]

2. Disclaimer. An answer disclaiming all title adverse to petitioner estops respondent from denying the title, and the court should not enter on the trial.[87]

H. Hearing[88] — 1. Questions Considered. The court should confine its inquiries to the questions whether petitioner is in possession of the property claiming an estate of freehold, or an unexpired term of not less than ten years,[89] and whether respondent is making some claim to the premises adverse to that of claimant.[90] If the petitioner has, in addition to the record title, possession, the question whether he has a better title or not does not arise in this proceeding, but in the action which respondent may be ordered to bring.[91]

2. Determination. Petitioner must establish to the satisfaction of the court that he is claiming title to the realty involved.[92] And a rule on respondent to bring an action of ejectment will not be made absolute where there is nothing to show that petitioner is in possession of the property but the averments of the petition, denied by the answer.[93]

I. Decree.[94] It is only when a respondent ordered to show cause why he should not bring an action to establish his title defaults in appearance,[95] or, having appeared, disobeys a decree to prosecute such action to final judgment,[96] that the court is authorized to enter a final judgment forever debarring respondent from claiming adverse title. Hence when the petitioner is forced by motion of court to take a nonsuit, and files the usual motion to set the same aside, the court errs in sustaining the motion and then entering a judgment forever debarring petitioner from claiming any rights adverse to respondent.[97]

J. Costs.[98] If one of the respondents files a disclaimer founded on a partition of the land between respondents subsequently to the filing of the petition, he will take costs only from the date of the answer.[99]

K. Review. Since the proceeding involves the title to realty, it comes within the reviewing power of the supreme court.[1]

Superior title.—As between a petitioner claiming title by disseizin, and a respondent claiming paper title, it is not necessary for the court to determine who has the superior title, but only to determine whether petitioner has shown such a title as, in its discretion, entitles him to have the validity of his title settled. I. INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT.

Quo warranto in its broadest sense is a proceeding to determine the right to the use or exercise of a franchise or office and to oust the holder from its enjoyment, if his claim be not well founded, or if he has forfeited his right to enjoy the privilege.[1] The term is used variously to describe proceedings under the common-law writ,[2] or under the information in the nature of the writ,[3] or in the United States to describe similar remedies prescribed by statute.[4]

II. NATURE, ORIGIN, AND SCOPE OF REMEDY.

A. The Common-Law Writ — 1. DEFINITION AND NATURE. The common-law writ of quo warranto was in the nature of a writ of right for the king, against him who claimed or usurped any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supported his claim, in order to determine the right; and lay also in the case of non-user or long neglect of a franchise, or misuser or abuse of it; being a writ commanding defendant to show by what warrant he exercised such franchise, never having had any grant of it, or having forfeited it by neglect or abuse.[5] The procedure under the writ was civil, and not criminal,[6] the writ being prosecuted by the king's attorney-general at the suit of the king without any relation whatever, to try the mere civil right to some public office, franchise, or liberty of, or belonging to the crown, which was claimed or exercised by some person in opposition to, and in violation of, the prerogative right of the sovereign; and in case of judgment for defendant he was allowed the franchise, but when the king had judgment it was that the franchise be seized into the hands of the king.[7]

2. Origin and Historical Development. Little is known of the origin of this remedy, its history being obscured in antiquity. It was used at least as early as Richard I, during whose reign it appeared apparently for the first time in the courts,[8] and it first appeared upon the English statute books in the statute 6 Edward I, known as the Statute of Gloucester.[9] The writ has been obsolete in England for centuries, having been abandoned probably because of the length of its process, and of the nature of the judgment which was conclusive even against the crown. An information in the nature of a quo warranto was substituted.[10]

B. Information in the Nature of Quo Warranto — 1. Origin. The exact time when the ancient writ [11] came into disuse, or when the more important proceeding in the nature of quo warranto was introduced, is uncertain.[12] Infor-

Other definitions are: "The most appropriate remedy for the King, by which he may at pleasure require any subject exercising a public franchise or authority which he cannot legally exercise without some grant or authority from the crown, to show by what warrant or authority he exercises it, and thereupon demand and have a judicial trial and determination of the legal right of the defendant to exercise such office or franchise." mations as the basis, or institution of a criminal prosecution, are said to have existed coeval with the common law itself, but as a mode of investigating and determining civil rights between private parties, they seem to owe their origin and existence to the statute of 9 Anne, chapter 20, which expressly authorized the proceeding in all cases of intrusion into, or usurpation of, corporate offices in corporate places.[13] The proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto was designed principally to punish offenders who were guilty of usurping the prerogative rights of the crown, yet, upon conviction or disclaimer, the right of the crown being thereby established, there was, besides the fine or imprisonment, a judgment of ouster against defendant, or that the franchise be seized into the king's hands, thus affording incidentally, a civil remedy for the king.[14]

2. Nature — a. Civil or Criminal. Information in the nature of quo warranto differed from the writ of quo warranto[15] in that originally it was essentially a criminal method of prosecution;[16] but long before the American Revolution it lost its character as a criminal proceeding in everything except form and was applied to the mere process of trying the civil right, seizing the franchise, or ousting the wrongful possessor, the fine being nominal merely;[17] and such has always been its character in many states of the Union.[18] In some states, however, it has been held criminal in form to the extent that matters of jurisdiction[19] and pleading[20] are governed by the rules applicable to criminal and not civil proceedings.

v. Ashenfelter, 4 N. M. 85, 12 Pac. 879; Rex v. Marsden, 3 Burr. 1812, W. Bl. 579 (holding that the writ of quo warranto probably dropped with the judge in eyre because the quo warranto was to be determined in eyre under statute 18 Edward I).

b. Legal or Equitable. Quo warranto proceedings are not of an equitable but of a legal nature.[21]

3. Exclusiveness of Remedy. In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary,[22] quo warranto proceedings are held to be the only proper remedy in cases in which they are available. Thus they are held to be the exclusive method of questioning the legality of the organization or a change in the territory of a quasi-public corporation, such as a school-district,[23] or a drainage district,[24] or of determining the right to hold and exercise a judicial or other public office,[25] or to enforce the forfeiture of a corporate franchise,[26] to attack the validity of the organization of a corporation,[27] or to try title to an office therein;[28] and when the remedy by quo warranto is available, it is held that there is no concurrent remedy in equity unless by virtue of statutory provision.[29]

4. Synonymity of Terms. In American practice the terms "quo warranto" and "information in the nature of a quo warranto" are used as synonymous and convertible terms, the object and end of each being the same,[30] the constitutional provisions[31] in several of the states providing for the issuance of writs of quo warranto being construed as authorizing proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto.[32]

C. Statutory and Constitutional Provisions in the United States. In a majority of the states the remedy has been the subject of statutory enactment.[33] The general effect of this legislation is to relieve the old civil remedy of the burden of a criminal form of procedure with which it had become encumbered, and to restore it to its original character [34] as a civil action for the enforcement of a civil right,[35] and it is almost universally held in the United States that, regardless of the precise form of the action, proceedings by quo warranto or by information in the nature thereof, or statutory remedies substituted therefor, are civil and not criminal.[36] But even where a statutory proceeding or civil action is substituted it is held that only the forms of the older remedies are abolished, the substance remaining the same.[37]

D. Effect of Existence of Another Adequate Remedy — 1. General Rule. As a general rule quo warranto will not lie if another adequate remedy exists at law or in equity.[38] This rule must, however, be understood to be applicable merely to cases wherein the redress of the relator's private injury is the main object, and not to affect proceedings brought by the state or its officers. The state has the right, by virtue of its sovereignty, to inquire into the authority by which any one assumes to exercise the functions of a public office or a franchise. That the relator, or other individuals aggrieved, can seek their remedy in another manner, is no bar to proceedings by the state.[39] The right reserved by the legislature to repeal a charter which it has granted does not impair the right to proceed by quo warranto in case the legislature does not exercise its power,[40] and it is no bar to quo warranto against a corporation for misusing its franchise that the acts constituting such misuser have rendered its officers criminally liable.[41]

2. Where the Other Remedy Is Provided by Statute. In the absence of a constitutional prohibition, the legislature has power to provide other remedies and thereby to supersede that by quo warranto, and an intention so to do, if clearly manifested, will be given effect, and the courts will recognize the statutory remedy as exclusive.[42] Unless, however, the contrary intention clearly appears, the statutory remedy will be considered cumulative.[43]

3. Trial of Title to Office — a. In General. Upon the question whether, where a special proceeding for contesting elections is provided by statute, or where the determination of the validity thereof or of the title to office is vested in a specified officer or court, the remedy by quo warranto is thereby excluded, the cases are in direct conflict. Some hold that the statutory proceeding is exclusive;[44] but, by the weight of authority, the statutory remedy is held to be cumulative and not exclusive, in the absence of express provision to the contrary in the statute,[45] and although it be held that quo warranto is superseded by statutory proceedings for contesting elections, the courts will entertain quo warranto in those instances where the statutory remedy is inapplicable or insufficient.[46] The use of quo warranto to inquire into the validity of an election to public office is not limited by statutory provisions for canvassing ballots and declaring the result of an election.[47]

b. Legislative Bodies Empowered to Decide Qualification of Members. Upon the question whether, where the charter of a municipality gives the common council power to determine the qualifications and election of its members, the existence of such power and the action of such body prevent the courts from examining the question by quo warranto, there is also a direct conflict of authority, some cases holding that the courts may nevertheless entertain quo warranto proceedings,[48] and that the decision of the council does not bind the state, although it is conclusive on the contestants,[49] while others hold that quo warranto by the state will not lie under these circumstances.[50] Similarly, where the constitution provides that the legislature shall be the sole judge of the qualifications of its members, the judicial department is held to be prohibited from proceeding by quo warranto to try title to a seat in the legislature.[51]

III. PROPRIETY AND GROUNDS OF REMEDY IN PARTICULAR CASES.

A. Determination of Private Rights. Where an action is grounded on an alleged usurpation or misuser of a franchise or privilege, it must be made to appear that the franchise or privilege is of a public nature; the whole community must be affected in order that the remedy may be appropriate, for a state will not interfere by quo warranto to determine mere private rights in which the public has no interest.[52]

Under a statute providing that any person whose private right or interest has been injured or has been put in hazard by the exercise by any private corporation of a franchise or privilege not conferred by law shall have leave to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto against such corporation, it has been held that an information pursuant to that statute should be allowed to be filed where it appeared that the petitioner was injured in his business and prevented from obtaining credit, by reason of proceedings taken by the respondent corporation, in excess of its lawful powers, in procuring sellers of goods of the kind used by petitioner to refuse credit to him. of the statutory election contest which exists in many states, and is in some cases concurrent with the statutory proceedings, and in others exclusive.[55] Although the proceeding is in the name of the state, the action is personal as to the parties claiming the office, the issue between them being the right to the office.[56] The claimant who appears as relator must show that he is eligible, duly elected, or appointed and qualified in order to maintain the proceeding and oust the respondent who is in possession of the office.[57] In this respect the proceedings differ from quo warranto by the state merely to oust the possessor, wherein the respondent's right to hold depends entirely on the strength of his own title and the relator's title is not involved.[58] As a means of trying title to an office, a proceeding by quo warranto offers an advantage over the statutory contest, in that the latter does not preclude separate inquiry by the state while the former is conclusive upon all the parties interested, the state as well as the contestants.[59]

b. Nature of Office. To justify the employment of quo warranto to try title to office it is essential that the office be such as the law deems of a public nature,[60]

warranto lies to remove him; [68] and where there was no office when an appointment was made, the appointee has thereby no title, although such office be afterward created and quo warranto will lie to oust him.[69]

d. Possession and User. In order to maintain a proceeding by quo warranto to try the right to public office, it must appear that the respondent is in actual possession of the office.[70] Hence, although defendant was once an unlawful incumbent of the office, he cannot be ousted therefrom if at the time of filing the information he was not exercising or claiming title to the office.[71] It is sufficient user of an office to warrant an information that the respondent claimed the office by appointment, and took the oath required, whereby he obligated himself to discharge the duties of the office.[72]

2. Grounds For Employment of Remedy — a. In General. The title to an office, the existence of which is not disputed, may be questioned or contested in quo warranto proceedings on any legal or equitable grounds which show the incumbent disqualified or not entitled to exercise the powers he claims. Thus it may be shown that the respondent is a mere usurper, having intruded into the office without color of title,[73] or that his supposed title is worthless because of illegality in the election or appointment whereby he claims the office; [74] and in the absence of limitations upon its common-law jurisdiction, the court may investigate the entire matter of the conduct, validity, and result of a popular election.[75] If the respondent was regularly elected but lacks a statutory qualification,[76] or failed

Acts done out of term.— Anything done by a judge of a district court in a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, so far at least as it is treated as a civil cause which will be valid if done in term-time, is not invalid because done outside of a regular term of such court. General power over corporations.— Under an act giving a court superintending authority over all civil corporations, it may take jurisdiction of an information in the nature of a quo warranto against a city council to test its power to pass an ordinance imposing a tax on bonds. State v. Charleston, 1 Mill (S. C.) 36.

Upon the repeal of a statute abolishing writs of quo warranto, the common-law remand is restricted on the other hand, to the political division for which they are established.[21] Inferior courts, and those of limited jurisdiction, such as city courts, do not usually have jurisdiction of quo warranto proceedings,[22] although it may be conferred upon them by constitutional provisions or statutes.[23]

3. Appellate Courts. It is usual for courts of appellate jurisdiction to be given original jurisdiction of quo warranto proceedings for certain purposes;[24] but, although an appellate court may have jurisdiction concurrent with that of circuit courts, it will not ordinarily exercise the same unless some good reason is shown why the application should not be made to the circuit court.[25]

4. Venue — a. In General. The place where quo warranto proceedings should be instituted is generally governed by statutes, which vary in the different states.[26] A state court of last resort has jurisdiction throughout the state, and edy is revived, and district courts under their common-law jurisdiction may hear proceedings on such writs. State v. Otis, 58 Minn. 275, 59 N. W. 1015.

E. 563 (holding that a county court may entertain a quo warranto proceeding to try title to the office of sheriff of the county); State v. Bowen, 8 S. C. 400 (holding that this principle prevents state courts from taking jurisdiction over proceedings to determine title to federal offices).

Jurisdiction over foreign corporations.—For the same reason a state cannot forfeit the charter of a foreign corporation (Hudson v. Green Hill Seminary Corp., 113 Ill. 618); nor can the courts of one state inquire into the regularity of the election of an officer of a foreign corporation, although an office is kept within the state, and most of the directors are residents thereof (Com. v. Leisenring, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 215).

In Pennsylvania, under the act of June 14, 1836, giving courts of common pleas jurisdiction by quo warranto over the subject-matter of forfeiture by a corporation of its franchise for non-user of misuser of corporate rights, the court of one county has jurisdiction in such proceeding against a corporation organized and doing business in another county, provided the corporation appears in court. Com. v. Order of Solon, 166 Pa. St. 33, 30 Atl. 930. In the same state, by the act of April 7, 1870 (Pamphl. Laws 57), the common pleas court of Dauphin county is given jurisdiction throughout the state for the purpose of hearing and determining all suits, claims, and demands whatever, at law or in equity, in which the commonwealth may be party plaintiff, etc.; and it was held that thereby such court has power to issue a writ of quo warranto, in which the commonwealth is the real plaintiff, against a railway corporation having neither its place of business, nor exercising or claiming any powers, privileges, or franchises in said county, for the purpose of inquiring into its authority for exercising the franchise and liberties of a corporation within the commonwealth. may issue a writ to a defendant anywhere within its boundaries, and he must appear in the county where the court sits, regardless of the county of his domicile.[27]

b. Change of Venue. A change of venue will, in some states, be allowed in quo warranto proceedings brought for the protection of the rights of a private person as in ordinary civil cases.[28] Statutes relating to change of venue in criminal cases do not apply to quo warranto.[29]

B. Preliminary Questions and Proceedings — 1. Time to Sue — a. In General. Quo warranto proceedings may in some cases be barred by the statute of limitations,[30] or by laches.[31] The objection that the proceedings are begun too late may in some cases be made on presenting a petition for leave to file an information,[32]

In Indiana proceedings by quo warranto to try title to office should be brought in the county where defendant resides. Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 79, 10 N. E. 582, 643.

In Massachusetts an information may be filed in any county of the state, but must be made returnable to the county where respondent resides. Com. v. Smead, 11 Mass. 74.

In Mississippi, the code, section 3521, relating to the venue of quo warranto proceedings, does not provide for a case where several corporations domiciled in different counties are to be joined in one action for violation of the act against trusts brought in a county where three of the defendant corporations were domiciled; but it was held that the circuit court of such county had no jurisdiction, by reason of the joinder of corporations not domiciled in that county, which were not subject to proceedings for forfeiture of their charter except in the county of their domicile. State v. Mississippi Cotton Oil Co., 79 Miss. 203, 30 So. 609.

In Ohio, where relator prosecutes the proceeding in his private right, it may be brought in the county in which defendant resides or may be summoned, as in civil actions generally. State v. Thompson, 34 Ohio St. 365.

If the charge is that defendants have usurped corporate powers, they may be ousted by the court of the county where they reside (Com. v. Morris, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 411); or where the office of the pretended corporation or of its president is located (State v. Buckland, 5 Ohio St. 216).

Proceedings based on illegal combination.— Quo warranto proceedings, brought by the attorney-general under the provisions of the Valentine Anti-Trust Act (Bates Annot. St. §§ 4427-1 to 4427-12) and of Rev. St. § 6762, to oust certain domestic corporations from their corporate franchises on the ground that they have entered into an illegal agreement or conspiracy in restraint of trade, may be brought in any county in which any one of such corporations is situated or has a place of business, and process may issue thence to any other county where any other of the defendant corporations may be situated. For purposes of prosecution, an illegal combination between corporations in restraint of trade exists in each and every county where its constituent members exist and act; hence, the contention is erroneous that quo warranto proceedings based upon such illegal combination must be brought in a county where the combination does business as a separate entity. State v. King Bridge Co., 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. 147.

27. State v. Frazier, 28 Nebr. 438, 44 N. W. 471, holding that the case is not altered by a statute relating to the county in which actions must be brought, which provides that actions "must be brought in the county in which the defendant, or some of the defendants, reside or may be summoned."

If, however, the court sits in various counties, including that of defendant's residence, the writ must be returnable in the latter county, although application therefor may be made anywhere in the state. In re Mt. Pleasant Bank, 5 Ohio 249.

In Vermont an order to show cause cannot be made returnable to the general term of the supreme court, as that is not a term appointed by law to be held at any prescribed time and place; and a cause is not in the supreme court until it has been entered at a fixed county term of the court, and cannot go to the general term except by order of court made at such fixed term. or if not made at that time, such objection may be raised subsequently by plea or answer.[33]

b. Limitations.[34] A plea of the statute of limitations is not available against the state,[35] in the absence of an express or implied provision to the contrary;[36] but a statute barring civil actions, not otherwise provided for, after a lapse of five years, applies to quo warranto proceedings brought to enforce private rights.[37]

c. Laches[38] and Estoppel.[39] Some lack of harmony among the authorities has resulted from the application of the doctrines of laches and estoppel to quo warranto proceedings. This is partly due to a breaking down of the old rule that the court's discretionary power over quo warranto is limited to the question of granting leave to file the information,[40] there being a recent tendency to exercise a like discretion throughout the proceedings and in the final disposition thereof.[41] Upon the application for leave to file an information, the court may properly consider the lapse of time since the cause of complaint occurred, in connection with all the circumstances, although the law does not fix a period within which the information shall be brought.[42] The court will lay down no universal rule in such cases, but will decide whether the delay has been unreasonable or not from the circumstances of each case.[43]

d. Proceedings to Try Title to Public Office. Proceedings to try title to a public office cannot be brought before the term of office commences,[44] nor after the term has expired, or when it is so nearly expired that the inquiry would be of no effect;[45] but an action commenced during the term of office may be prosecuted to final judgment after the expiration of the term, for the recovery of damages or costs which plaintiff has sustained or incurred by the wrongful assumption of authority.[46] Where, however, no substantial benefit would inure to plaintiff, the proceeding will not, as a general rule, be continued after the term has expired, merely to try the abstract title to the office.[47] An officer elected or appointed under a statute conferring a franchise on a city cannot be ousted, nor can his official acts be attacked, on the ground of the invalidity of the statute, if proceedings against the city itself to prevent its exercise of the franchise are barred by a statute of limitations.[48]

2. Consent of State Officers. The right to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto belongs to the state, and the institution of the action is a matter within the discretion of the attorney-general;[49] and the attorney-general or other authorized state officer must institute quo warranto proceedings for the redress of injuries to the public right. Statutes abrogating the common-law rule have not usually affected it so far as it concerns proceedings essentially public in purpose.[50] A refusal by the attorney-general to prosecute in such cases does not give a private person the right to proceed, nor can the state officer be compelled to bring quo warranto proceedings.[51] Under statutes which authorize the attorney-general or state's attorney to petition for a writ of quo warranto at the instance of private persons, if private rights are involved, the consent of the state officer is essential, and the writ cannot otherwise be issued for the redress of the private injury.[52] Provision has been made by statute in several states for quo warranto proceedings to redress private injuries, whereby an applicant may obtain the writ upon showing an interest distinct from that of the public, such as a right in himself to an office. Discretion of officer.— Where an individual seeks relief of a private nature under Hurd Rev. St. (1905) c. 112, § 1, providing that, when a person unlawfully holds an office in a corporation created by the state, the attorney-general or state's attorney, either of his own accord or at the instance of an individual, may petition the court for leave to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto, the only discretion vested in the prosecuting officer is to determine whether the documents presented to him are in proper legal form, and whether evidence is presented sufficient to establish the person's prima facie right to the relief. People v. Healy, 230 Ill. 280, 82 N. E. 599.

a writ in the nature of quo warranto being addressed to the discretion of the court.[56]

(B) Exercise and Extent of Discretion of Court.[57] The discretion which the court must exercise is not an arbitrary personal discretion of the judge, but a sound judicial discretion according to law, the exercise of which is reviewable,[58] and which extends as a general rule only to the question whether or not the information should be allowed to be filed, for, after having permitted the filing, the discretionary powers of the court are exhausted and issues of fact and law presented must then be tried and determined in like manner as in other suits.[59] It has been held, however, that when the writ was improvidently issued and the case made by the pleadings is such that leave to file would have been refused in the first instance had the court been fully cognizant of the nature and grounds of the proceeding, the court may decline to proceed to judgment.[60] In the exercise of its discretion, the court may regulate the scope of the inquiry upon the application for leave and thereon may hear either the petition alone or affidavits on both sides so as to determine not merely whether there is a probable ground for the proceeding but also whether there is a preponderance of evidence in support of the allegations of the petition.[61] The writ may be denied on the ground of public policy or in consideration of general justice, all the circumstances being considered and the question determined from the standpoint of public interest,[62]

and thus the court may deny an application for leave to file an information, although the facts are such that if the proceeding was entertained judgment would have to be given against the respondent.[63] In a proceeding brought for the benefit of the relator primarily, the court's discretion is much greater than where purely public interests are involved,[64] and in any event the writ will not be granted upon the relation of a claimant to an office, unless he shows himself clearly entitled to it, or at least that there is strong ground for questioning the respondent's title.[65] The court may deny an application for a quo warranto, if the facts show such conduct on the part of the applicants as precludes them from making the inquiry,[66] or if the harm will be done before relief can be granted, as where the term of office is so short that it will expire before the question could be decided,[67]

In Texas, although the statute contemplates that the petition for leave to file and the information shall be separate, yet as the pro-

is by the attorney-general, it is not required to be verified or accompanied by affidavits, but if by a private person, it must be under oath, or accompanied by affidavits as to all material facts.[77] On application by a private relator for leave to bring quo warranto proceedings, no notice to defendant is necessary.[78] The court will not readily grant leave to file a quo warranto to determine the right to a public office after statutory election contest proceedings have been dismissed.[79] The matter of granting leave to a private relator to bring an action in the nature of quo warranto is merely a preliminary question addressed to the discretion of the court or judge, and when it is decided that the relator has sufficient interest, the ruling is not to be reviewed on motion to set aside or dismiss.[80] Nor is an order granting leave to bring quo warranto subject to collateral attack;[81] but if the court grants leave to file an information, it may reconsider the matter and vacate the order at any time during the term, if convinced that leave should not have been granted.[82] An order granting leave to sue to annul a charter should specify the grounds on which the action is to be brought.[83]

c. Rule to Show Cause — (i) In General. Upon application duly presented, showing proper ground and reason, the court will grant an order or rule upon defendant to show cause why the information should not be filed.[84] Such an order is granted as of course, without notice, and does not determine any question of legal right either as to subject-matter or procedure.[85] A private person may serve a rule to show cause why an information should not be filed, and proof of the service may be made by affidavit showing the essential facts.[86]

(ii) Necessity For Rule. On application by a private person for leave to file an information, defendant is entitled to be heard on the question of filing,[87] and the granting of a rule to show cause is an essential preliminary step.[88]

(iii) Return of Rule and Proceedings Thereon. A rule to show cause may be made returnable at such time as the court shall fix, its discretion governing the question unless otherwise provided by statute.[89] Respondent may answer the petition, and file counter affidavits to support his allegations.[90] Upon the hearing, the court may discharge the rule and dismiss the petition if its allegations are insufficient, or if defendant has answered the same satisfactorily;[91] but if the facts relied upon in the answer are disputed, or if new and doubtful questions of law are involved, requiring time for the determination thereof, the rule for the

Sufficiency of rule.— Where a rule nisi was obtained on the ground of an undue removal of one person from, and of an undue election of defendant to, the office of town clerk of a borough, and the rule did not mention, and the affidavit did not distinctly disclose, the objection that the removal and election had taken place at a meeting without due notice that such was the business of the meeting, it was held that the objection of the want of such notice could not be taken in support of the rule. Reg. v. Thomas, 8 A. & E. 183, 2 Jur. 347, 7 L. J. Q. B. 141, 3 N. & P. 288, 35 E. C. L. 543. Discretion of court.— The court may issue such a rule upon an application by the attorney-general, although by a statute applicable in such a case the court is authorized to order the information to be filed without such rule on any previous notice, the choice of methods of procedure being within the discretion of the court. People v. Golden Rule, 114 Ill. 34, 28 N. E. 383; People v. Moore, 73 Ill. 132.

In Pennsylvania the omission of such a rule, although notice was given, has been held sufficient ground for a motion to quash the writ (Com. v. Jones, 12 Pa. St. 365); but in later cases this position appears to have been abandoned, the court holding that if defendant had sufficient opportunity to be heard before being compelled to answer, the omission to proceed by way of a rule to show cause was immaterial (Murphy v. Farmers' Bank, 20 Pa. St. 415; Com. v. Jackson, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 561).

information to be filed should be made absolute.[92] Where a party who is elected to an office is disqualified and another claims the office as having the only legal votes, the party so elected cannot, by merely resigning his office, deprive the other party of his right to the advantage which a judgment of ouster upon a quo warranto will give him.[93]

4. Process For Appearance. When leave is granted to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto, and the same is filed, process should be issued against defendant requiring his appearance and answer. At common law the first process was a venire facias or subpœna, and if defendant failed to appear in response thereto, a distringas or attachment was next issued.[94] The modern practice varies with the statutes. Where the common-law practice prevails, the rule is that the court can acquire jurisdiction to render judgment only by service of a writ under the seal of the court, in the name of the people, or by voluntary appearance.[95] Where a civil action under the code is substituted for quo warranto, the nature of the process is the same as in other civil actions.[96] If the statute fixes a time for pleading in quo warranto, the court will quash a writ issued contrary to such provision.[97] A rule upon defendant to appear and plead within a time fixed is not regular, in the absence of statute, and confers no jurisdiction over defendant;[98] but in some states the statutes authorize the entry of a rule to appear and plead, and provide for the method of service thereof.[99] In the absence of statute the Rules relating to process in civil suits.— Quo warranto proceedings are not generally held to be governed by rules of practice relating to civil suits, such as a provision that all original process shall be returnable on the first day of the term next after its issuance (Territory v. Ashenfelter, 4 N. M. 85, 12 Pac. 879); but the summons may be made returnable forthwith, or at a short day within the same term (Lindsey v. Atty.-Gen., 33 Miss. 508: State v. Buchanan, Wright (Ohio) 233). A statute prescribing that the first process in personal actions shall be a summons does not apply to an information in the nature of quo warranto, and the rules for the mode and time of pleading, appearing, etc., contained in such a statute, do not affect the court's discretion in entering such rules therefor as the justice of the case requires. Atty.-Gen. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 38 N. J. L. 282.

J. 1907) 67 Atl. 1036, holding that since a quo warranto proceeding is an inquisition which the sovereignty by its courts institutes to ascertain whether its prerogative rights have been invaded, a statute providing for the service of a copy of the information and the rule to plead is valid. and service on a non-resident defendant either personally or by mail is sufficient.

In New York, under an act relating to fraudulent bankruptcies by corporations, it was held that the provisions therein for compelling appearance without process extended to quo warranto against a corporation, so that the court might rule defendant to appear and plead at once. People v. Tibbets, 4 Cow. 384.

In Vermont it seems to be proper to enter a rule upon respondent to appear and plead, and in case he does not do so voluntarily, manner of notifying defendant to appear and the length of notice is within the discretion of the court.[1]

5. ABATEMENT.[2] Proceedings by quo warranto may be abated by the court when it appears that the public interest is not involved, whether the fact is disclosed by the pleadings or in any other manner.[3] It is ground for abatement that the officer filing the information was without authority to do so, but an objection based thereon must be made seasonably or it will be deemed to be waived.[4] Whether the pending of another action abates a quo warranto proceeding is governed by the rules applicable to abatement of civil actions in general.[5] The expiration of the term of office involved, after information filed, does not work a dismissal of a writ of error upon a judgment of ouster.[6]

C. Parties — 1. PLAINTIFFS, PETITIONERS, AND RELATORS — a. In General. The nature of proceedings by quo warranto at common law was such that the sovereign was necessarily plaintiff.[7] And the general rule still is that quo warranto proceedings must be carried on in the name of the state or the people.[8] In a few states, however, statutory proceedings in the nature of quo warranto may be brought in the name of the attorney-general, or of some other designated public officer;[9] and in some states, under statute, a private individual who claims an

b. Public Officers. c. Private Persons. Before the statute of 9 Anne, chapter 20, the information in the nature of quo warranto could be filed only upon the application of the attorney-general. That statute permitted the filing of the information upon leave of court being obtained at the instance of any private person desiring to sue or prosecute, and it required such person to appear as relator in the proceedings.[18] Similarly the statutes in many of the states permit proceedings in the nature of quo warranto to be brought at the suggestion of persons whose private interests are involved.[19] In these cases the attorney-general or other public officer must nominally bring the proceedings; but if he refuses to do so, or to permit his name to be used, the person interested may proceed independently on his own relation.[20] Whether the statute expressly so provides or not, it is essential that a private person who applies for a quo warranto shall show his interest in the subject-matter of the prosecution,[21] and whether such an interest exists is a question for the court

Private persons held to have sufficient interest.— One of the board of directors of a corporation, who have possession of its property, has a special interest in the corporation, such as warrants the state's attorney in presenting a petition for leave to file an information against the other directors. Place v. People, 83 Ill. App. 84. A superintendent of the water system of a city has a sufficient interest in the right of persons appointed to the office of trustees of the waterworks, to maintain an action of quo warranto to determine such right. State v. Barker, 116 Iowa 96, 89 N. W. 204. A justice of the peace is a person interested sufficiently to bring quo warranto against an alderman who exercises the functions of a justice of the peace throughout the county. Com. v. Brunner, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 323, 3 Del. Co. 551. The chief burgess of a borough has a sufficient interest to make him a competent relator in quo warranto against a councilman. Com. v. Shepp, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 518. The owner of agricultural lands illegally included within the boundaries of a city or village in which he is not a voter may maintain quo warranto to determine the validity of such inclusion. State v. Mote, 48 Nebr. 683, 67 N. W. 810; State v. Dimond, 44 Nebr. 154, 62 N. W. 498. An owner of rated property in a town, although not entitled to vote, has sufficient interest to

to decide upon the application for the writ.[22] In a proceeding against a person acting as mayor, it has been held a sufficient interest that the relator is a freeholder, resident, and elector of a city,[23] or that the relator is merely a citizen.[24] If a writ is asked for before the time has arrived when the relator is entitled to assume the duties of his office, it will be refused, as, until then, he has no interest within the meaning of the statute.[25]

d. Purpose of Proceedings as Determining Who May Prosecute — (I) In General. The purpose of the quo warranto proceedings often determines who may apply for the writ. The general rule is that where the remedy is sought for a public wrong, proceedings should be instituted by and upon the relation of the attorney-general; but where the primary purpose is to redress a private injury, the person aggrieved may appear as relator in the information.[26] In a number of cases the rule has been broadly stated that the writ of quo warranto does not lie at the suit of a private person,[27] but this rule must be taken to be limited to proceedings of the character under consideration by the court at the time of stating it.[28]

(II) Trial of Title to Public Office. As to whether a private citizen without any special interest may institute quo warranto proceedings to try title to public office, the authorities in the different states are not in accord, nor do the authorities in the same state all agree. This conflict is due in part to the different wordings of the statutes in the different states, and in part to a doubt as to the extent to which the common law remains in force. So in some cases it has been held that any citizen may obtain a writ of quo warranto against the occupant of a public office,[29] while other cases hold that, in addition to that interest which

be a relator in quo warranto proceedings against one exercising the office of town commissioner. Reg. v. Briggs, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 372.

Private persons held not to have sufficient interest.— A police constable who has been discharged for cause by the mayor of a city has no absolute right to be restored to his position, nor has he any interest in the office of mayor so as to entitle him to a writ of quo warranto against the mayor, although the latter has not taken the constitutional oath. Com. v. McCarter, 98 Pa. St. 607. Members of a voluntary church society cannot obtain a writ of quo warranto to try the right of office of a minister appointed by another portion of the society which has organized as a corporation. Com. v. Murray, 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 73, 14 Am. Dec. 614. The mayor of a city has not such an interest in the office of city councilman as to entitle him to maintain quo warranto to oust an alleged usurper of such office; such usurpation affects the public equally with the mayor, and the remedy is by proceedings on the part of the state. Mills v. State, 2 Wash. 566, 27 Pac. 560. That a candidate for office who received the highest number of votes has disqualified himself from holding it by contracting to farm or sell it does not confer any interest in the office upon the defeated candidate so as to permit him to bring quo warranto. State v. Matthews, 44 W. Va. 372, 29 S. E. 994.

In England an inhabitant of a borough may be a relator upon an application against a town councilor, although he iss not a burgess. Reg. v. Quayle, 11 A. & E. 508, 5 Jur. 368, 10 L. J. Q. B. 99, 4 P. & D. 442, 39 E. C. L. 279.

every citizen has, a special interest in the particular office must be shown.[30] It is very generally held, however, that a defeated candidate to the office has an interest sufficient to warrant him in bringing quo warranto proceedings to try the title of the incumbent; [31] but a defeated candidate not entitled to the office in any event has not a sufficient interest,[32] and a private person cannot prosecute an information against a judge, unless the proceeding is directed by the attorney-general or other authorized official.[33]

(III) Testing Corporate Organization, Powers, or Election — (A) Municipal Corporations. In proceedings against a municipal corporation, to test the validity of its organization, or to arrest a usurpation of corporate powers, a private citizen cannot, as a general rule, file the information; [34] but it has been held that if the suit is in fact conducted by the proper officer, it is no objection that a private person is named as relator,[35] and that a proceeding wherein the state's attorney appears as relator is none the less public in nature because individuals interested have employed counsel at their own expense to assist in prosecuting the suit.[36]

by its charter, or other abuses of its legal powers,[38] should be filed by the attorney-general, ex officio, or other appropriate officer, on behalf of the state. In some jurisdictions, however, a private person may appear as relator in an information presented in the name of the attorney-general;[39] and it is sometimes held that a private person, interested in a corporation, may have a writ to inquire into an election of officers or members of the corporation, and the name of the state may be used without application to the attorney-general.[40] One having no interest in the corporation cannot as a general rule have the writ,[41] nor will it be allowed to a person who does not clearly show an injury to his private interest;[42] and if other remedies might be available, such as a statutory remedy provided for judgment creditors, the fact that they are not applicable to the circumstances must be shown or the writ will not be issued.[43]

In Kansas the action may be brought against the corporation itself, and it is not suing the corporation itself, its corporate existence is admitted, and plaintiff cannot then be heard to say that there is no such corporation.[45] The rule is often relaxed, however, in the case of municipal or quasi-public corporations and writs allowed to be issued against them directly.[46] If the ground of complaint is that a corporation, legally organized, has ceased to exist, or has so acted as to incur a forfeiture of its corporate franchise, the corporation itself is the proper defendant,[47] and the same rule applies where a corporation usurps powers or franchises beyond those given it by its charter.[48]

(II) To Forfeit Assigned Franchises. An action to forfeit franchises which have been illegally assigned by one corporation to another must be brought against the assignee company;[49] but although a receiver of a corporation, appointed by the federal court, is an assignee of its property, he is neither a necessary nor a proper party to quo warranto by the state to forfeit the charter.[50]

b. Trial of Title to Public Office. The person who claims and exercises a public office is the only proper defendant to an information to test the right to such office.[51] A proceeding against one acting as mayor of a city may be against the officer, describing him as such, for usurping a franchise, or against him as an individual, charging the usurpation of the office.[52] The corporate officers or corporate body who have appointed the respondent to his office have no interest, and are not proper parties to proceedings to oust him.[53]

3. Joinder — a. Of Plaintiffs.[54] While several persons claiming different offices cannot ordinarily join in one proceeding,[55] such joinder is proper where the rights of different persons to separate corporate offices depend on the same votes at the same election.[56] In some states the statutes require that the informant or person interested must join with the state as plaintiff.[57] In an information by the attorney-general against a corporation, private persons cannot join for the purpose of trying their rights to offices in the corporation.[58]

b. Of Defendants.[59] No joinder of defendants is proper which unites separate causes of action against several defendants.[60] Thus, if the defendants claim title to different offices by distinct titles, they are improperly joined.[61] But several members of a town council may be named as respondents in one proceeding when the information avers that they were all illegally elected at the same election, in that fraudulent ballots were cast for them,[62] and two school directors elected when a district is entitled to but one may be made defendants in quo warranto, but neither the district, its inhabitants, nor other directors should be joined.[63] A lessee of part of a railroad company's road may properly be joined with the company in an action to vacate its charter.[64] In a proceeding to declare void a pretended municipal corporation, it is not proper to join the corporation with the individuals who are exercising the corporate offices,[65] nor need the inhabitants of the corporation be joined as parties.[66] The various illegal acts of different county officers, although in pursuance of one object, cannot be made the subject-matter of a single suit, as there is nothing in common among such acts, so far as the usurpation of powers is concerned.[67]

4. Intervention.[68] Intervention of parties in interest is generally allowed in quo warranto as in other proceedings.[69]

D. Pleading[70]—1. In General. Quo warranto is now ordinarily regarded as a civil and not a criminal remedy,[71] and the pleadings in such an action are governed in general by the rules applicable to pleadings in ordinary civil actions.[72] If, however, the action is considered to be a criminal proceeding, as was the common-law information, the rules of criminal pleading, so far as they are pertinent, will be enforced, and the same degree of certainty will be required in a quo warranto information as in an indictment.[73]

2. INFORMATION, PETITION, OR COMPLAINT — a. In General. To ascertain the sufficiency of an information, reference should first be had to the local statute, as in some instances these contain provisions relating to the form or contents of pleadings in quo warranto,[74] and although, under a practice code, a complaint is to be used, such complaint is the same in effect as the common-law information in the nature of quo warranto, and its sufficiency is determinable by common-law rules.[75] In a case which may be presented only by a state officer, or with his consent, the information should be exhibited by him,[76] and should show on its face that it is presented upon his authority.[77] If leave of court is essential, it may be sufficiently shown by proceedings of record without an allegation thereof in the information.[78] Such facts should be alleged as will make out a prima facie case for relief, within the scope of the remedy by quo warranto as defined by the statutes; [79] and the facts should be alleged in a traversable form, statements which are mere conclusions of law being insufficient.[80] It is only necessary to set forth in general terms

In Alabama, where a complaint is the first pleading in civil actions, an action in the nature of quo warranto may be based on an information, which takes the place of a complaint. West End v. State, 138 Ala. 295, 36 So. 423.

76. Eaton v. State, 7 Blatchf. (Ind.) 65; State v. Taylor, 208 Mo. 442, 106 S. W. 1023.

Filing by request.— If the information is in fact filed by the attorney-general, it will not be quashed because it sets out an order of the house of representatives directing that such proceedings be taken, and recites that it is filed pursuant to such order; it is none the less filed by the attorney-general ex officio (Com. v. Fowler, 10 Mass. 290); and if the information filed on behalf of the state by the attorney-general is stated to be "at the request of" a private individual, such statement may be rejected as surplusage (State v. Charleston, 1 Mill (S. C.) 36).

77. State v. Taylor, 208 Mo. 442, 106 S. W. 1023; State v. Davis, 64 Nebr. 499, 90 N. W. 232 (where it is held, however, that an allegation that the information is presented by the attorney-general on the relation of an individual named satisfactorily shows official action); Harpham v. State, 63 Nebr. 396, 88 N. W. 489 (holding that if filed by a private citizen without showing authorization by the prosecuting attorney, the information will be fatally defective unless it alleges that relator has applied to the prosecuting attorney, who refused or neglected to comply with the request to file the same).

Title of officer.— In a proceeding by quo warranto to test the right to an office, an information filed by the district attorney, beginning: "Your informant Wm. P. Davis, prosecuting attorney, of the county of," etc., is sufficiently accurate; the use of the prefix "prosecuting" instead of "district" attorney is but a technical error and does not vitiate. Davis v. Best, 2 Iowa 96. So also it is no objection to an information that the full title of the "solicitor of the state" is not given, and that the term "solicitor" only is used. But if it were an objection, it would be formal only, and could not avail defendant on a demurrer to his plea. Giles v. Hardie, 23 N. C. 42.

78. Giles v. Hardie, 23 N. C. 42.

79. People v. Ridgley, 21 Ill. 65, holding that the information should allege that defendant holds and executes some office or franchise, describing it, so that it may be seen whether the case is within the statute or not.

Excluding other remedies.— If the case made is one to which another remedy would ordinarily apply, the information must be so drawn as to show that such other remedy has been exhausted or that it is inapplicable. Keeney v. Consumers' Gas Co., 142 Mass. 417, 8 N. E. 138.

Usurpation of franchise.— Where defendant's predecessors were granted a legislative franchise to maintain a dam of a specified height in a stream, and defendant raised the dam beyond the height specified, resulting in damage to upper riparian proprietors, a complaint in the nature of quo warranto to oust defendant from such franchise, as authorized by statute, alleging such facts, states a cause of action to oust defendant from the rights and privileges he was exercising in excess of those lawfully granted. State v. Norcross, 132 Wis. 534, 112 N. W. 40, 122 Am. St. Rep. 998.

the rights and privileges alleged to be usurped,[81] and the wrongful act or omission complained of may likewise be stated generally by alleging the ultimate fact.[82] An information in the nature of a quo warranto is not demurrable because it does not follow the petition, but enlarges it, provided it does not go outside of the substantial subject-matter of the petition or of the order allowing the information to be filed.[83] Where several matters are included in the information, a prayer for relief need not be added to each paragraph, as a prayer at the end of the information will be taken distributively.[84] Relevant facts well pleaded stand confessed on the record if not traversed by the opposite party.[85]

b. In Proceedings Relating to Municipal Corporations. In a proceeding to restrain a usurpation of franchise by a municipal corporation, a complaint charging that defendant is exercising the franchise without being incorporated, or without lawful authority, states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.[86] An information by a private citizen which assails the legality of the organization of a city must set forth the facts showing wherein the organization is contrary to law;[87]

Atl. 60; Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. L. 1, holding that an allegation that a certain law in point of fact will apply to but a single city, and is therefore local and unconstitutional, is insufficient, as the facts should be set forth.

In Alabama, under Code (1896), § 3428, quo warranto is a civil action, and the complaint must aver the act or omission complained of concisely and clearly, and if faulty in that respect it is demurrable. State v. Matthews, (1907) 45 So. 307.

Negativing exception.— It may be necessary to allege facts to negative an exception made by the law, which the court would otherwise presume to be applicable to the case, and which would render lawful the acts complained of. Bishop v. State, 149 Ind. 223, 48 N. E. 1038, 63 Am. St. Rep. 270, 39 L. R. A. 278.

Specific allegations as controlling general allegations.— If the complaint, besides making general allegations which, standing alone, would be sufficient, specifies the particular facts claimed to show usurpation or other illegality, and these do not amount to a cause of action, the entire pleading is bad. No. 136, 121 Cal. 522, 50 Pac. 1068, 53 Pac. 1085, holding that in a proceeding in quo warranto prosecuted by the state to exclude a reclamation district and the persons claiming to constitute it from all corporate rights, it is sufficient to allege the ultimate fact that defendants are exercising the franchise without authority of law, and the complaint is not defective in not alleging specifically the acts constituting the usurpation.

But where an independent school-district encroached on other districts, a quo warranto petition to vacate the same on that ground, failing to show how or to what extent the interference existed, whether it was not assented to by a majority of the inhabitants of the district encroached upon, and that relators or others would be inconvenienced by reason thereof, is insufficient. State v. Buchanan, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 325, 83 S. W. 723.

87. State v. Tipton, 109 Ind. 73, 9 N. E. 704, where the proceeding was based on the ground that a census was not taken as required, and that a majority of the votes cast were not in favor of the incorporation of the town, and it was held that the information should contain an allegation to that effect, it being insufficient to state that a majority of the legal voters did not vote in favor, etc.; that if the report of the election officials was false or incorrect, such fact should be alleged, and also that the officials did not do their duty and make a suitable record as required by law, since in the absence of such allega-

and it should appear from the information that relator did not vote in favor of the organization or otherwise concur in the proceedings, else the information will be bad on demurrer.[88] If the object of the information is to restrain the unlawful exercise of powers by a municipality whose existence is admitted, the fact of the incorporation of defendant should be stated so as to show its legality and powers.[89] A drainage district organized through the action of a quasi-judicial body, and so not subject to quo warranto, except on the ground of fraud, may yet be attacked by quo warranto if the information shows that a fact essential to be found was not considered or passed upon in the organization of the district.[90]

c. In Proceedings Relating to Public Office. An information to try defendant's right to an office should show that the office legally exists and is of a public nature,[91] and is within the jurisdiction of the court.[92] If the occupant of the office has no title, but is a mere usurper, it is sufficient to allege generally that defendant is in possession without lawful authority,[93] or that he has usurped the tions the record of the officials would be presumed to be correct, and would be conclusive as to the facts it purports to state.

88. State v. Tipton, 109 Ind. 73, 9 N. E. 704.

89. State v. Anderson, 26 Fla. 240, 8 So. 1, holding, however, that the fact of incorporation under a general law therefor was shown by alleging that the town "is a municipal corporation, duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Florida, and pursuant to the statutes of the State of Florida in that behalf and was such municipal incorporation" on the specified date when the illegal act was done.

90. People v. McDonald, 208 Ill. 638, 70 N. E. 646.

91. Hedrick v. People, 221 Ill. 374, 77 N. E. 441, where, in a proceeding to try title to the office of "Chief Sanitary Inspector" of a city, an information which alleged merely that the office was created by a certain ordinance which authorized the commissioner of health to appoint a "medical sanitary inspector" and "such other employees as may be necessary," not specifying a "chief sanitary inspector," was held not sufficient to show the existence of the office.

Nature of office to try title to which quo warranto lies see supra, III, B, 1, b.

If the office exists by virtue of a private law, the information must set up the existence of such law by proper averments. Minck v. People, 6 Ill. App. 127.

That the office existed at the date charged as the commencement of the usurpation need not be alleged if the information states that the office was created by the municipal board, and is now existing, and that defendant is exercising its functions without warrant of law. Beverly v. Hattiesburg, 83 Miss. 621, 36 So. 74.

Within scope of statute.— Such allegations must be made as will bring the case within the provisions of the statute defining the scope of quo warranto against public officers. Stultz v. State, 65 Ind. 492.

The value of an office, on inquiry into the holder's right thereto, may be alleged as is the value of any tangible thing, without giving the details making up the aggregate. Little v. State, 75 Tex. 616, 12 S. W. 965.

Information not demurrable, although indefinite.—An information may be sufficient to withstand a demurrer, although the facts are stated in such general and indefinite terms that a motion to make more specific and certain would be granted. Barrett v. State, 112 Ind. 322, 13 N. E. 677; Jones v. State, 112 Ind. 193, 13 N. E. 416; People v. Nolan, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 471, 63 How. I. 391, 32 Atl. 322, 1018 (where an information was held sufficient on demurrer, which averred that a large number of ballots were fraudulent cast, all being for respondents, without stating that enough illegal ballots were cast to affect the result).

Indiana.— State v. Peele, 121 Ind. 495, 22 N. E. 654, holding that the general assembly having no power to elect the chief of a bureau, an election by it is void; and an information by a relator, an appointee of the governor, which alleges that there is a vacancy in the office, that defendant usurped the office and illegally holds possession of it; that the governor appointed the relator, who is eligible and entitled to the office, is sufficient, and a demurrer thereto should be overruled.

Kansas.— State v. Nelson, (1908) 96 Pac. 662.

Michigan.— Taggart v. James, 73 Mich. 234, 41 N. W. 262, holding that an information which charges that the respondent holds, uses, and exercises the office of superintendent of the poor, and has done so for six months last past, without any legal election, appointment, warrant, or authority whatsoever, and has usurped, intruded into, and exer-

office.[94] An information filed at the instance of a private person to oust the incumbent and obtain possession of an office must state facts showing that the claimant is entitled to the office;[95] and, in addition to setting out relator's title, should specify the objections to defendant's title;[96] and if the objection is based upon illegal votes, or an illegal count, must set forth explicitly such illegality or error, general allegations being insufficient.[97] In the statement of a claim that defendant's term cised the said office, and still does so usurp, intrude into, and unlawfully exercises the same, sufficiently charges intrusion into and usurpation of the office to sustain the suit.

But see Lavalle v. People, 68 Ill. 252 (where an information was held too general and indefinite which charged that defendant was unlawfully executing the duties and exercising the powers of supervision of the village of C, and that he had so executed the duties and exercised the powers of supervision and had enjoyed the emoluments thereof, but did not charge that he had intruded into or usurped the office, nor specify in what way he unlawfully executed the duties and exercised the powers of the office); State v. Messmore, 14 Wis. 115 (holding that the complaint should state the facts constituting the usurpation).

Ohio.— State v. Johnson, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. 793.

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Quo Warranto," § 51.

Oath or bond.— If the law requires a person elected to office to take an oath or file a bond, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, an information in quo warranto is fatally defective if it fails specifically to allege compliance with such requirements. Carlson v. People, 118 Ill. App. 592; State v. Wheatley, 160 Ind. 183, 66 N. E. 684.

Residence.— If a candidate for office is required to be a resident of the district for which he is elected, an information does not state a cause of action unless it alleges that the relator was a resident of the district as prescribed by law. State v. Cook, 39 Oreg. 377, 65 Pac. 89. See also State v. Hœflinger, 35 Wis. 393.

Title of relator.— Where the respondent's right to hold the office depends upon the validity of the relator's election to the office, under a provision that the officer shall hold until his successor is elected and duly qualified, it is the relator's title which is in issue, and he must show a legal title and a compliance with all the requirements of law necessary to entitle him to the office de jure, and an allegation that the relator had "a majority of all the votes as it appears by the returns of" the election officers is insufficient, not being equivalent to an unqualified allegation that he has a majority of all the votes. State v. Bulkeley, 61 Conn. 287, 23 Atl. 186, 14 L. R. A. 657.

That relator was a citizen of the county and entitled to the office of county treasurer is sufficient as against a general demurrer as to the relator's qualifications, and the information is good if it states that the relator received a majority of the ballots of the qualified voters, without specifying facts constituting their qualifications. Fowler v. State, 68 Tex. 30, 3 S. W. 255.

That relator was duly elected has been held a sufficient allegation of his title to the office. People v. Miles, 2 Mich. 348; State v. Sherman, 42 Mo. 210; People v. McIntyre, 10 Mont. 166, 25 Pac. 100.

W. 120; State v. Raisler, 133 Wis. 672, 114 N. W. 118. But see State v. Palmer, 24 Wis. 63, holding that it was not necessary in quo warranto where the complaint alleged that a certain number of illegal votes had been cast for defendant, for the complaint also to state the names of the alleged illegal voters.

If the court orders relator to file a bill of particulars setting forth specified facts regarding the alleged illegal votes, and such order is complied with, defendant cannot demand another order for a further bill of particulars of other facts. People v. Teague, 106 N. C. 576, 11 S. E. 665.

Want of legal notice of an election under which defendant claims an office may be alleged in general terms. The information need not aver want of knowledge on the part of the electors. If they had such knowledge so as to render harmless the lack of legal notice, it is a matter of defense for respondent to estab-

expired and that relator was duly elected to succeed him, the information must show clearly when the term commenced and the length thereof.[98] A petition to oust the incumbent of an office, when presented on behalf of the state by the attorney-general, need not set forth the name of a claimant to the office, as this is necessary only where the claimant's rights are to be passed upon by the court;[99] nor need it show that relator is entitled to the office,[1] but the interest of relator in the suit should appear.[2] A petition to oust the possessor of an office on the ground that he is not qualified should specify wherein he is disqualified,[3] and if an office-holder for any cause has incurred a forfeiture of his office, the facts should be so stated in the information as to show as a legal consequence that defendant's right to the office has terminated.[4]

d. In Proceedings Relating to Corporate Franchise, or Office — (i) OUSTER AND FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE. An information to determine the right of a corporation to a franchise claimed to be illegally exercised is sufficient if it sets forth the franchise and calls upon defendant to show by what authority the franchise is exercised;[5] but a petition which attempts to specify the ground on which it is based should not be equivocal, but should show whether a usurpation or a forfeiture is claimed,[6] and if based on a usurpation, the information should not be open to the construction that it admits the incorporation of defendant.[7] In a proceeding to oust a corporation de facto, its existence as such being admitted or charged, the defects in the proceedings for its organization must be set out distinctly,[8] and to forfeit a charter because of misuser of the corporate franchise or powers, the complaint or information should allege clearly and distinctly the illegal acts constituting such misuser.[9] Similarly, specific facts should be clearly stated if a forfeiture is asked on account of non-user of franchises or omission of a statutory duty such as the making of reports,[10] and it should be alleged when and where the corporation was incorporated.[11]

(II) Ouster From Corporate Office. An information for usurping an office in a private corporation should show that the usurpation is of a corporate office, and that the offense is of a nature which concerns the public.[12] Unless the corporation is one whereof the court will take judicial notice, its organization must be shown by alleging compliance with all the requisite forms of law.[13]

3. Plea or Answer — a. In General. Under the common-law practice the defense to a quo warranto information is by plea, and not in the form of an answer,[14] only one plea being allowed to be filed as of right; [15] but very generally throughout the United States informations of quo warranto may be met by answer in like manner as complaints in other actions.[16] Matter of inducement is not traversable, and as to it the plea should be silent.[17] A defendant charged with exercising powers and franchises without authority of law must either disclaim or justify,[18] and to show title, so as to justify, a complete right on defendant's part must be disclosed; [19] but individuals charged with claiming and using the franchise of being a body corporate need not in their plea deny the claim, a denial of the user of the franchise being sufficient.[20] Upon an information attacking the organization of an

That the respondent was duly elected is a proper allegation, and if accompanied by other averments showing the time and place of election, that it was held pursuant to the authority of the charter and of the provisions of an act of the legislature, copies whereof are annexed, the plea will be held sufficient (Com. v. Gill, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 228); but alone, an allegation of due election is not enough (State v. Day, 14 Fla. 9. See also State v. Saxon, 25 Fla. 792, 6 So. 858).

That the election was held on the day required is a proper allegation, but its omission is not fatal if the plea names the day on which the election was to be held, avers the giving of notice as required by law, and that defendant was duly elected, as in such case it will be presumed the election was held at the time specified in the notice. People v. Gary, 196 Ill. 310, 63 N. E. 749.

If good title is shown by the plea, it is not objectionable because it neither denies nor confesses and avoids the material allegations of the information. People v. Keechler, 194 Ill. 235, 62 N. E. 525.

Defendant may set up several titles to the all the qualifications necessary to the enjoyment of the office and in case a continued usurpation is alleged should set out the continuance as well as the original existence of such qualifications;[26] and it should appear that defendant accepted the office, and qualified by taking the proper oath and filing bond, or otherwise complied with the law's requirements.[27] A plea may be bad for duplicity,[28] or because it contains a negative pregnant,[29] or because of any other of the grounds upon which pleas at common law may be attacked.[30] While it is no answer to an information by the state to allege that relator is not entitled to the office,[31] or that the claimant is estopped to question defendant's title, by reason of an agreement between them to abide by the result of another suit involving their respective claims,[32] yet in proceedings begun by the claimant of the office, to enforce his private right, a plea is good which shows that the claimant's title is invalid.[33]

c. In Proceedings Relating to Corporate Franchise and Office. To a quo warranto charging an illegal exercise of corporate franchises, the plea should as a general rule be either of justification or a disclaimer,[34] and the plea of justification must contain allegations of all such facts as are necessary to show authority for the use of the franchises.[35] Where the complaint sets out facts establishing the ille-

Merger of corporations.— Where defendants seek to justify their use of corporate franchises by relying on the legality of a merger of other corporations into the one now claimed to exist, the plea must show that the original corporations were legally organized, gality of the alleged corporation, such allegations must be specifically denied by the answer;[36] and such an answer by the individuals composing the corporation is good without any disclaimer or justification by the corporation itself.[37] In proceedings to forfeit defendant's charter for violation of a law against combinations, it may be pleaded that such law is unconstitutional.[38] A corporation charged with exercising certain powers without authority of law makes a prima facie defense by pleading its charter, by which the powers claimed were conferred in præsenti.[39] A plea which attempts to justify respondent's right to hold an office in a private corporation must set out his title specially, and show when and how he obtained the office.[40] If he relies on a right to hold over after the expiration of his term, the fact that at no time has any one been chosen to succeed him must be averred.[41]

4. Replication, Reply, and Subsequent Pleadings. It is proper for the information to charge a usurpation generally, and if defendant pleads in justification, to state in a replication causes of forfeiture or other matter in avoidance of the plea.[42] Thus in proceedings to test title to office, a plea showing defendant's election may be met with a replication that certain of the votes counted for him were void, and that without such votes defendant did not receive enough votes to entitle him to the office.[43] Where the question is as to the legality of the organization of a municipal corporation, the replication may properly impeach a record of the incorporation set up in the plea, and a denial of any jurisdictional fact and so existed at the time of the merger, that they had the power to consolidate, and that the merger was by authority of the stockholders, in the manner prescribed by law. State v. Hancock, 2 Pennew. (Del.) 252, 45 Atl. 851.

tenders a material issue.[44] New matter, set up in a replication in confession and avoidance of a plea, is taken as confessed if not denied, hence it is sometimes necessary for defendant to file a rejoinder to protect his rights,[45] which may be a traverse of the replication,[46] or which may confess and avoid it.[47]

5. Signature and Verification.[48] An information filed by a public officer should have his official signature affixed;[49] but if the information was filed with the actual consent and in the name of such officer, and he appears to conduct the proceedings, the want of his signature will not sustain a motion to quash.[50] In accordance with the rule applicable to ordinary civil actions, neither an information in the nature of a quo warranto nor a plea thereto need be verified, unless a statute so requires;[51] but in some states statutes have been passed requiring the pleadings to be verified.[52]

6. Exhibits.[53] Although the information in an action of quo warranto may refer to written documents as the basis of its allegations, a failure to attach copies thereof is not ground for demurrer.[54] The information is not a pleading founded on a written instrument within the meaning of a statute requiring a copy of the instrument to be filed in such cases.[55]

7. Amendments to Pleadings.[56] The pleadings in quo warranto are subject to amendment, as in ordinary civil actions,[57] statutes relating to amendments in the right to exercise it,[84] as well as facts showing compliance with all conditions precedent to the complete organization of the corporate body.[85] Where, however, the proceedings are based upon an abandonment or forfeiture of a franchise to which respondent had title, it has been held that the state must prove the facts charged as causing the forfeiture.[86]

2. Admissibility. The rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally [87] apply to quo warranto proceedings,[88] and so parol evidence is inadmissible to show the appointment of an officer whose appointment is required by statute to be in writing.[89] In an action to try title to office ballots cast at the election are admissible in evidence;[90] and where the title to office of court clerk, under an appointment from a judge of the court, is attacked, a judgment in an action in which such justice was ousted from office is admissible in evidence as against the claimant.[91] In quo warranto proceedings to determine the validity of the incorporation of a village, evidence is admissible to show that the territory sought to be incorporated had not, at the time the petition for incorporation was filed, the requisite population.[92] As the forfeiture of a charter can be had only on public grounds it is proper for the court to consider testimony tending to show that one of the corporators procured the institution of the proceedings in bad faith and for private purposes.[93]

3. Weight and Sufficiency. In quo warranto proceedings questions as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence are governed by the rules relating to civil actions generally.[94] In an action to try title to office, the certificate of election is only prima facie evidence;[95] and in an action by the people to vacate a corporate charter, the certificate of an official inspector that defendant has performed a particular duty according to the statute is not conclusive of that fact.[96]

F. Trial — 1. Scope of Inquiry and Powers of Court — a. Trial of Right to Corporate Franchise. In an action against an individual for exercising unlawfully an office in a municipality, not only the question of the legal existence of the office, but that of the corporation itself, may be tried and decided;[97] but if a proceeding to oust defendant from exercising corporate franchises is adjudged against defendant, the court has no power to determine that there has never been a de facto corporation, or that its acts under color of its supposed charter are void.[98] Where a state sues to oust a foreign corporation, the action of the proper officials in refusing respondent's application for a license to transact business in the state, will not be reviewed.[99] The constitutionality of a statute may be properly decided in a proceeding to test an alleged corporate franchise granted under such statute.[1]

b. Trial of Title to Public Office. In quo warranto as to one's authority to exercise an office, the court may determine whether defendant has the qualifications expressly required by the constitution or statute,[2] and if illegality in his election is charged, the validity of the election may be examined in all respects concerning the office involved, and the ballots may be inspected and counted.[3] If a forfeiture is claimed by reason of facts arising subsequent to a valid election, the court may inquire thereinto and give judgment according to its findings, although misconduct is charged which constitutes a criminal offense of which defendant has not been convicted.[4] In adjudging the right to hold public office, the court considers only the title, and there is no adjudication of official rights;[5] and, conversely, if the purpose is to determine the right of an officer to exercise a particular function, the legality of his election is not subject to inquiry.[6] Where respondent's title rests on an appointment, the court will not go back of the power of appointment to inquire into the title of the appointing officer,[7] nor into his reasons and motives for making the appointment.[8] Matters which are merely collateral will not be investigated.[9]

2. Mode of Trial.[10] Issues of fact in quo warranto are properly submitted to a jury for trial,[11] and in original proceedings in the supreme court, a reference may be had to the circuit court of the county where the controversy arose, for the trial of specified issues.[12] On the trial before a jury, the right to open and close lies with the party who has the burden of proof.[13] Instructions to the jury should be given in accordance with the rules governing instructions in ordinary actions.[14]

G. New Trial.[15] A new trial may be granted in quo warranto proceedings, upon the same grounds and on the same showing as in civil actions generally.[16] A new trial will not be granted where it appears at the time of the motion that the term of the office which is being litigated has expired,[17] and, if a new trial is sought on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must be shown that the newly discovered evidence is of such a character as to seriously affect the result.[18] A new trial will not be granted on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence, unless the impropriety of the verdict is clearly shown.[19]

H. Judgment and Enforcement Thereof — 1. Propriety and Validity. The judgment in quo warranto will be determined by the purpose of the proceedings and the issues and proof. The state is entitled to such a judgment against defendants who default and fail to appear or answer, without making proof of the facts set out in the information,[21] but if defendants appear and plead, issues of fact or law must be taken and a trial thereof had, before the court will be authorized to enter judgment.[22] A judgment will not be vitiated by including in it recitals of matters not in issue, as such recitals may be rejected as surplusage.[23]

2. Scope and Extent of Relief. In proceedings against corporations, the court may enter judgment of ouster as to the corporate franchise, or merely as to particular powers;[24] and if the corporation is dissolved, the court may order incidentally that the officers shall no longer exercise the functions of their offices.[25] On judgment of ouster from an office, a fine may be imposed upon defendant;[26] but unless the usurpation was wilful and without color of right, the amount will be nominal, merely, or the fine will be omitted altogether.[27] When granting relief against one exercising a public office, the court will go no further under its common-law powers than to oust the wrongful possessor of the office and will not give possession thereof to the relator or any other person;[28] but it is very generally provided by statute that in addition to a judgment of ouster of the holder of the office, relator may be installed upon a clear showing that he is entitled to the office,[29] and the statutes sometimes allow a judgment to be rendered for damages against respondent for loss of fees or salary to relator by reason of being deprived of the office.[30] A judgment awarding an office to the claimant may include its franchises, privileges, and emoluments.[31]

3. Effect and Enforcement. The legal effect of a judgment of ouster against a person in possession of an office is to determine that he is not entitled to the office and to oust him at once, so that any subsequent acts as such officer will be invalid;[32] but ouster of the occupant does not of itself adjudge the right to the office to the claimant.[33] A judgment against defendant because his term has expired will not prevent his continuing to act until a successor is qualified, as provided by statute,[34] and an adjudication of the right of a claimant to an office for a specified time does not determine the right of a successor to the office holding by appointment from the same authority for a different term.[35] A writ of mandamus may be issued as final process in the nature of an execution, to enforce a judgment in quo warranto as to plaintiff's right to office.[36]

I. Review of Proceedings[37]—1. In General. The practice in reviewing judgments in quo warranto proceedings is governed by the rules of the common law in all respects not regulated by statute.[38] A review of the judgment may be obtained by appeal or writ of error;[39] but, although a technical error may have occurred in the proceedings, the judgment will not be disturbed if on the whole case the court concludes that such error was immaterial or not prejudicial to the appellant.[40] Under a statute specifying the time within which an appeal shall be taken, the appeal must be taken within the prescribed time, or the appellate court will have no jurisdiction.[41] The death of a defendant who has appealed from a judgment ousting him from office because of misconduct operates to abate the appeal and there can be no substitution of the successor in office.[42]

2. Who May Appeal. Either defendant or relator may appeal from a judgment in a quo warranto proceeding to try title to office;[43] but a person not holding or claiming the office cannot appeal,[44] and if the action be to dissolve a corporation a private relator cannot appeal from a judgment in favor of the corporation.[45]

J. Costs and Security Therefor.[53] In England, under the statute of Anne and subsequent acts passed thereon, costs have generally been allowed to the successful party upon a judgment of ouster from office,[54] and this practice is followed in many of the states;[55] but a state prosecutor appearing as relator is not liable for costs,[56] and if an officer disclaims or resigns upon application for the writ the costs will not, as a general rule, be assessed against him.[57] A private relator must file a bond for costs if required by statute;[58] but no bond need be furnished by a state officer who actually brings and conducts the suit.[59]

23. Webster Int. Dict.

Example see Penobscot Lumbering Assoc. v. Bussell, 92 Me. 256, 258, 42 Atl. 408, where it is said: "That cause of action is stated to be: I. Neglect to seasonably raft out logs, and neglect to raft them out separately from the logs of others. . . . II. Neglect to raft the logs of different marks belonging to several owners separately. . . . A special finding, however, limited the damages to failure 'to exercise reasonable diligence in rafting and delivering' logs. The words 'rafting and delivering,' however, taken in connection with the statements in the declaration, plainly enough mean rafting, or rafting out; nothing more; nothing less. They are used in the conjunctive and as having the same significance and meaning. . . . The charter of . . . the Penobscot Boom Corporation . . . imposes the duty 'to raft all lumber in said booms securely and faithfully, with suitable warps and wedges for rafting.'"

"Rafting" includes "sorting" since "the act of sorting is a necessary part of the work of rafting." But sorting by ownership is sufficient, and sorting by kind is not demanded of a boom corporation under a charter duty of rafting the lumber that comes into its boom. 31. New York v. New England Transfer Co., 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,197, 14 Blatchf. 159, 168.

It is a substitute for a railroad bridge and is a part of a railroad route for the transportation of the cars which are used upon a railroad track, and the burden which they bear, and is not for the accommodation of any persons except those who happen to be for the time being, railroad passengers. New York v. New England Transfer Co., 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,197, 14 Blatchf. 159, 168.

Distinguished from a "'general, unlimited' ferry." Fitch v. New Haven, etc., R. Co., 30 Conn. 38, 40; New York v. New England Transfer Co., 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,197, 14 Blatchf. 159, 168.

32. Com. v. Walton, 104 S. W. 323, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 916, where it is said that such is the ordinary meaning of the term, also of "stage line" and "automobile line," and the terms do not include hacks, stages, and automobiles which merely operate from point to point in one city for the transportation of the public.

33. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Walker, 47 Fed. 681, 685. See also In re Erie R. Co., 65 N. J. L. 608, 611, 48 Atl. 601; McHenry v. Alford, 168 U. S. 651, 665, 18 S. Ct. 242, 42 L. ed. 614.

Includes road-bed, right of way, tracks, stations, rolling-stock, etc. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Walker, 47 Fed. 681, 685.

Does not include: Lands owned and held for sale, or other disposition, for profit, and in no way connected with the use or operation of the railroad. McHenry v. Alford, 168 U. S. 651, 665, 18 S. Ct. 242, 42 L. ed. 614; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Walker, 47 Fed. 681, 685); a steamboat though used in connection with the railroad (Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Irvin, 72 Ill. 452, 455); warehouses erected by private individuals upon lands leased by the railroad company along and on the company's right of way and intended for the private benefit of the lessees (Gilkerson v. Brown, 61 Ill. 486, 488).

A statute providing for the taxation of railroad track and rolling stock includes all property owned or used by the railroad company, in the operation of its road, which may come within the term "railroad property." Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 430, 14 S. Ct. 1114, 38 L. ed. 1031.

34. See United New Jersey R., etc., Co. v. Jersey City, 55 N. J. L. 129, 132, 26 Atl. 135 [quoted in Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Newark, 60 N. J. L. 60, 37 Atl. 629], holding that purposes other than those so described are not railroad purposes within provisions for exemption from taxation.

Actual use or purpose, and not ownership, is the test of exemption. See Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Newark, 60 N. J. L. 60, 63, 37 Atl. 629.

Includes depot and storage purposes, as used in the exemption clause in N. J. St. March 30, 1868, conveying certain lands to railroad and canal companies. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Jersey City, 49 N. J. L. 540, 544, 9 Atl. 782, 60 Am. Rep. 648.
