son;[45] and that he will faithfully and honestly endeavor to comply with the requirements of law as to settlement, residence, and cultivation necessary to acquire title to the land applied for.[46] If the affidavit and application are sufficient it is the duty of the register and receiver of the local land office to make the entry immediately upon receiving the proper fees,[47] and the receipt of the land office for entry fees is prima facie evidence of a homestead entry.[48] If the affidavit is insufficient in its showing, or if the application itself is informal, or if the payment is not made in actual cash, the application may be rejected;[49] or if, notwithstanding these defects, the application is allowed by the land officers, and a certificate of entry is delivered to the applicant, and the entry is made of record, such entry may be afterward canceled on account of these defects by the commissioner, or on appeal by the secretary of the interior; or, as is often the practice, the entry may be suspended, a hearing ordered, and the party notified to show by supplemental proof a full compliance with the requirements of the department; and on failure to do so the entry may then be canceled.[50] But these defects, whether they be of form or substance, by no means render the entry absolutely a nullity.[51] When a person settled upon government land and applied to the land office claiming the right to enter it as a homestead, but omitted to insert in his application one forty-acre tract, his right and title to such tract failed.[52] A soldier's additional homestead may be located and entered by an agent or attorney in fact or assignee of the claimant.[53]

c. Validity of Entries. Fraud in the making of homestead entries is not to be inferred from the fact that a large number of entries may have been solicited and located by one person, if the entries themselves are legal.[54] The good faith of a homestead settler is not impeached by the fact that the land when he settled upon it was within the limits of a railroad grant, under which it had been withdrawn from market, where he had knowledge that the terms of the grant had not been complied with, and the land had not been earned thereunder, and good reason to believe that it would soon be restored to the public domain, as in fact it was.[55]

d. Priority Between Entries. As between two simultaneous applications for homestead entries on the same land, the question as to which of the applicants had made the prior settlement is one of fact for the determination of the land department.[56]

e. Rights Acquired by Entry.[57] The homestead law clearly confers the right of possession on the entryman when the preliminary entry is made,[58] and although title does not finally pass from the United States until the issuance of a patent,[59] the receiver's receipt issued to a homestead entryman in possession and claiming land under the statute constitutes ample title to enable him to maintain or defend a suit concerning the land,[60] and to entitle him to damages for an injury to the land.[61] But the holder of a certificate of a homestead entry in possession of the land cannot defend against an action of ejectment brought by the grantee in fee of the United States, whether plaintiff's patent was issued before or after the issuance of the certificate.[62] One contesting for a preference right and for cancellation of a homestead entry has no right of possession of the land pending the litigation.[63] Where a husband has entered on such lands, and complied with the statutory requirements, his equitable right to have the title vested in him is complete, and he cannot be deprived of it by his wife, whom he has deserted, making the final proof of occupancy for him.[64] The assignee of a soldier's additional homestead certificate, on filing an application for a specific tract of land at the government office, acquires an equitable title therein, which ripens into a legal title, relating back to the date of application on issuance of a government patent.[65] No vested right is obtained in a piece of government land, by reason of an application for a homestead entry thereon, when such application is denied.[66]

f. Residence and Cultivation. Actual settlement, followed by residence and cultivation for a period of five years, is a condition of obtaining the title,[67] except that where an entryman at the date of his entry or subsequently thereto is actually enlisted and employed in the army or navy of the United States, his service therein is equivalent to a residence of the same length of time upon the tract entered.[68]

from the date when the official plat was approved and filed in the local land office, a finding of the secretary of the interior that the applicant who had preserved his right to the land intact since his settlement should be given preference over the other, who had relinquished or abandoned his right, in the absence of evidence that such right had ever been established prior to the date of settlement by such other applicant, was proper.

In establishing a residence, as required by the homestead law, there must be a combination of act and intent — the act of occupying and living upon the claim, and the intention of making the same a home to the exclusion of a home elsewhere.[69] If it is proved to the satisfaction of the register of the land office that a homestead entryman has changed his residence or abandoned the land for more than six months at any time, the settler's rights are forfeited and the land reverts to the government.[70]

g. Death of Entryman. Before a homestead entryman has become entitled to a patent, he has no such interest in the land as will make it, on his death, a part of his estate and subject to the payment of his debts.[71] But, under the statute,[72] in case of the death of a homestead entryman before the five years' residence is complete, the right passes to his widow,[73] or, if there be no widow left surviving, to the entryman's heirs or devisees,[74] who may complete the residence required by law and thereupon become entitled to a patent.[75] In such case, however, the heirs succeed to the rights of the homesteader not as heirs who have inherited his title, but because the law gives them preference as new homesteaders, allowing to them the benefit of the residence of their ancestor upon the land,[76] and it has been held that the entryman has no interest in the land which can pass by his will,[77] nor can his administrator make final proof or perfect the entry for a patent.[78] The statute providing that in the case of the death of both father and mother, leaving infant children, the right and fee shall inure to the benefit of such infants,[79] applies only when there are no other children, and if there are adult as well as infant children all share alike.[80]

h. Commutation of Homestead Entries. The statute permits a homestead entryman, at any time after the expiration of fourteen months from the date of his entry, to pay the minimum price for the land entered and obtain a patent, upon proof of settlement and residence on and cultivation of the land for such period of fourteen months.[81]

i. Issuance of Patent.[82] A patent may issue to the person making the homestead entry upon proof of residence and cultivation for the period of five years, and compliance with the other statutory conditions.[83]

9. Timber Culture. The statutes formerly allowed the right to receive a patent for public land to be acquired by the planting and culture of timber thereon,[84] but these statutes have been repealed with a saving of existing rights and claims,[85] and hence it is sufficient to refer to some of the cases in which these statutes have been cited or construed,[86] and to state that before his right to a patent accrued a timber culture entryman had the same right of possession as any other entryman,[87] and was the owner of the trees standing on the land,[88] but prior to such time the

Curing of premature commutation.—As originally enacted (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2301) the statute permitted commutation of homestead entries at any time before the expiration of the five years' residence, but it was amended in 1891 (26 U. S. St. at L. 1098, c. 561, § 6 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1406]), so as to allow commutation only after the expiration of fourteen calendar months from the date of the entry. Act June 3, 1896, c. 312, § 1 (29 U. S. St. at L. 197 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1409]) confirmed commutation entries made in good faith after the passage of the act of 1891, and in actual ignorance of the amendment, and which were invalid only because prematurely made; and the right to a confirmation under this latter statute was not defeated by the entryman's subsequent efforts to protect his grantees by taking a reconveyance and again residing upon the land for the purpose of enabling him to make proof and secure a title for them. Hill v. McCord, 195 U. S. 395, 25 S. Ct. 96, 49 L. ed. 251 [affirming 117 Wis. 306, 94 N. W. 65]. Under the requirement of the act of congress of June 3, 1896, that it shall be made to appear that there was at least six months' actual residence in good faith by the homestead entryman prior to such confirmation, the six months' residence need not be subsequent to the entry. McCord v. Hill, 111 Wis. 499, 84 N. W. 27, 85 N. W. 145, 87 N. W. 481. The allowance of thirty days by Laws (1880), c. 89, § 2 (21 U. S. St. at L. 140), to one who has secured the cancellation of any preëmption, in which time he may enter the lands, is a mere privilege to enter, and not an entry, within the act of congress of June 3, 1896, so as to preclude the confirmation of a homestead entry prematurely commuted. The statute [93] gives to any citizen or person entitled to become a citizen who has filed his declaration of intention to become such the right, in certain states and territories,[94] upon payment of twenty-five cents per acre, to file a declaration under oath stating that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land,[95] not exceeding one section,[96] by conducting water upon the same within the period of three years thereafter,[97] and at any time within such period the claimant may become entitled to a patent upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of the land and paying the further sum of one dollar per acre.[98] The entryman has the right of possession of the land entered for three years from the date of his entry.[99] It is a sufficient reclamation to entitle the purchaser to a patent under the Desert Land Act that he has acquired a right to sufficient water to irrigate the land, and has constructed main ditches sufficient to carry it over the accessible parts of the tract, for purposes of cultivation in the ordinary manner, although he has not actually used and cultivated the land.[1] On the death of the entryman his rights descend to his heirs or devisees.[2]

4. The condition of the land at the time of the application to purchase determines whether it is within the statute, and lands which are heavily timbered, and in their present condition unfit for cultivation, are not excluded from the scope of the act because in the future, by large expenditures of

offered at public sale according to law,[5] may be sold to citizens of the United States or persons who have declared their intention to become such,[6] in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to any one person or association of persons [7] at the minimum price of two dollars and fifty cents per acre.[8] The applicant must file a statement under oath [9] that the land is unfit for cultivation and valuable chiefly for its timber or stone,[10] that he does not apply to purchase the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use and benefit,[11] and that he has not directly or indirectly made any agreement or contract with any person or persons, by which the title which he may acquire shall inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself.[12] The statute does not in any respect limit the dominion which the purchaser has over the land after its purchase from the government, or restrict in the slightest his power of alienation;[13] all that it prohibits is a prior agreement, the acting for another in the purchase, and if, when the title passes from the government, no one save the purchaser has any claim upon the land, or any contract or agreement for it, the law is satisfied.[14] An application to purchase lands under the

5. Offer and withdrawal.— Lands which have been offered for sale but not sold by the United States, and which were thereafter withdrawn from sale because they were situated within the limits of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, are to be considered as "lands which have not been offered for sale according to law," within the meaning of the statute. U. S. v. Budd, 43 Fed. 630 [affirmed in 144 U. S. 154, 12 S. Ct. 575, 36 L. ed. 384].

6. Misstatement of grounds of right.— The fact that one who is actually qualified to make an entry of timber land by having declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States erroneously states in his application to purchase such land that he is a citizen is immaterial, and does not invalidate his entry, no statement on the subject being required. Investigation as to good faith.—The officers of the land department are not required to accept the statements contained in the application to purchase as conclusively establishing the bona fides of the applicant, but the statute contemplates an inquiry into these matters by such officers. U. S. v. Brace, 149 Fed. 869, 873, where it is said: "The statute contemplates that the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall make regulations giving to the register and receiver the authority to subject the applicant and his witnesses to an oral examination, for the purpose of satisfying themselves that the entry is made in good faith for the benefit of the applicant, and not in the interest of another."

timber and stone acts confers no vested rights therein on the applicant prior to the payment of the purchase-money,[15] but the government may withdraw the land from sale.[16] It is, however, the duty of the commissioner of the general land office on receiving the papers and testimony in the case, if it appears prima facie therefrom that the law has been complied with, to cause a patent to issue to the purchaser.[17] To justify a forfeiture, the proof of the fraud or perjury must be clear and convincing; mere inferences are not sufficient.[18]

12. Town Sites — a. In General. The town-site laws of the United States are designed by congress for the benefit and relief of persons who, having settled upon portions of the public domain, desire to lay out and establish a town or city, including their possessions, and to enable those who have already laid out a town or city on unoccupied public lands, and settled upon lots or municipal subdivisions within the boundaries thereof, to procure title thereto from the United States at a minimum price, and to enable other persons desiring to purchase lots within an established city or town, upon the public lands, to procure a valid title thereto.[19] Under the statute[20] whenever any portion of the public lands is settled upon and occupied as a town site,[21] the corporate authorities of the town, if it is incorporated,[22] or, if it is not incorporated, the judge of the county court of the county in which the town is situated,[23] may enter at the proper

22. The statute contemplates the corporate authorities in the commonly accepted meaning of the words, possessing and exercising the powers of a local or municipal government, and as a body incorporated under the provisions of Wis. Laws (1858), c. 151, entitled "An act to authorize the inhabitants upon government lands to form themselves into bodies corporate to carry out the provisions of an act of Congress approved May 23d, 1844," does not possess such powers, it is not authorized to make a town-site entry. Clarke v. Roy, 20 Wis. 478 [followed in Perry v. Superior City, 26 Wis. 64].

23. The probate judge of the county makes the entry in some states. See the statutes of the various states. So in Kansas, whenever any public land of the United States has been land office[24] and for the minimum price[25] the land so settled[26] and occupied[27] in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof[28] according to their respective interests;[29] and the execution of this trust as to the disposal of lots in the town[30] and the proceeds of the sale thereof[31] is to be conducted under such regulations as may be prescribed by the legislative authority of the state or territory in which the town is situated.[32] The grant made by this statute is twofold, consisting of a several grant to the several occupants of the lots which they occupy, and a general grant of all unoccupied lots, for public purposes, to all the occupants as an aggregation.[33]

b. Right to Enter Land as Town Site. Land must be actually settled upon and occupied as a town site before it can be entered under the town-site law,[34] and merely platting the land as a town is not sufficient.[35] A right to have lands entered as a town site, even where a plat has been made and recorded, may be lost by abandonment of the occupancy so that other persons may become entitled to have the lands entered for their benefit.[36]

c. Lands Subject to Town-Site Entry[37]— (i) In General. Land which has been dedicated by the United States government to use for homesteads is not subject to town-site entry.[38] The offer of public lands for sale at auction is not a condition precedent to their being patented for a town site.[39]

(ii) Mineral Lands.[40] Town-site entries, by incorporated cities and towns, settled upon and occupied as a town site, and the town is not incorporated, it is the duty of the probate judge, upon being furnished with the entrance money, to enter such land for the benefit of the occupants of such town site according to their respective interests; and any contract made by one of the occupants of said town site with a third person that the probate judge shall not so enter the land is illegal and void. It includes such an improvement of the lot by the erection of buildings or fences, or by actual residence thereon, or by such other acts of possession and improvement as clearly and unmistakably show that it is bona fide the intention of the settler to take and hold possession of the lot, and that his possession and improvement is intended to be permanent and for himself. may, under the statutes,[41] be made on the mineral lands of the United States; but no title is thereby acquired to any mine or vein of gold, silver, cinnebar, copper, or lead,[42] or to any lands known at the time to be mineral lands,[43] or to any valid mining claim or possession held under existing laws,[44] even though it is not known at the time that the claim contains minerals of sufficient value to justify expenditure for extracting them.[45] It is well established, however, that in order to except lands not held as mineral claims at the time of the entry from the operation of a town-site patent, it is not sufficient that the lands do in fact contain minerals, or even valuable minerals when the township patent takes effect, but they must at that time be known to contain minerals of such extent and value as to justify expenditures for the purpose of extracting them;[46] and if the lands are not known at that time to be so valuable for mining purposes, the fact that they have once been valuable, or are afterward discovered to be valuable for such purposes, does not defeat or impair the title of persons claiming under the town-site patent.[47] An owner of land under a town-site patent issued prior to the passage of the act regulating the width of quartz-mining claims, in which land a gold quartz ledge was known to exist at the date of the patent, has an absolute title in fee simple to the land not actually included in the quartz ledge.[48]

Evidence of knowledge.— A location uncertain as to the lands claimed, and unaided by proof of monuments, possession, or working, cannot be evidence that lands were then known to be mineral lands. Tombstone Townsite Cases, 2 Ariz. 272, 15 Pac. 26.

Proof of lack of knowledge admissible.— In ejectment against one claiming under a town-site patent, where plaintiff relies on a subsequently issued patent of the land as mineral, raising the presumption that it was mineral land when the town-site patent was issued, defendant should be allowed to prove that it was not known to be mineral land. Davis v. Wiebbold, 139 U. S. 507, 11 S. Ct. 628, 35 L. ed. 238 [reversing 7 Mont. 107, 14 Pac. 865].

d. Area of Town Sites. A statute authorizing the entry of town sites to the extent of a certain number of acres has been held to merely limit the amount of land which could be acquired under the town-site law and not to restrict the corporate limits to such area.[49]

e. Entry — (I) Necessity For. Mere possession or occupancy of lands as a town site for town-site purposes without any entry or filing any plat gives no right to the land as against a subsequent grantee of the United States.[50]

(II) Notice of Entry. A statute providing that, within thirty days after a town-site entry, the corporate authorities or judge entering the lands shall give notice of such entry, requires the notice to be given within thirty days after the issuance of the final certificate of entry, and not within thirty days from the application for the entry.[51]

(III) Evidence of Entry. The duplicate of the record in the proper land office, on entry of land as a town site, is conclusive evidence in the state courts that the lands described therein have been settled on and occupied as a town site in accordance with the law.[52] On a question as to the validity of a certain town-site entry, letters addressed by the commissioner of the general land office to a certain person described therein as the attorney of the proprietors are admissible in connection with the proofs of entry and of the action of the department upon the application for entry.[53]

f. Right and Title Acquired by Entry.[54] The entry and payment vests the legal title in the judge or the corporate authorities, according as to which made the entry,[55] who are seized as trustees[56] for the occupants according to their nature of a conveyance,[66] and the disposition of the land not occupied for town purposes by individuals,[67] and of the proceeds of sales; [68] but it cannot change or alter the conditions of the trust,[69] substitute one cestui que trust for another,[70] or in any way diminish the rights of occupants.[71] The trustee has no authority except such as is conferred upon him in express terms,[72] and in performing his trust must strictly comply with the requirements of the statute,[73] and cannot give any rights, or change or take away the rights of occupants.[74] The corporation may maintain its bill to correct an abuse of the trust affecting the common interest of all the beneficiaries,[75] but cannot interfere between individual applicants.[76] The trust continues until the whole town site is finally disposed of.[77]

h. Surveys and Plats. The only authority of a surveyor employed to plat and lay out the lands in a town site is to plat the town in conformity with the lots and blocks,[78] and a survey or plat not coinciding with the rights of occupants is void.[79] Commissioners appointed by a probate judge to survey and plat town sites, set apart the lots to occupants, and assess the expenses against the several lots cannot collect the costs of such proceedings, or require a deposit from applicants.[80] to question whether all the conditions precedent to the execution of such conveyance had been complied with by the city.[83] Where the governing officers of a town site made and adopted a survey and plat of a town site, on which were designated streets, lots, alleys, and blocks, and the same was generally accepted by the inhabitants, and thereafter the act of congress relating to the entry of town sites in Oklahoma[84] was passed, and the secretary of the interior under that act appointed town-site trustees, and adopted the survey and plat formerly made, and conveyance was made of the lots according to the plat, this constituted a dedication of the lands designated on the plat as streets, so as to divest the rights therein of one claiming as occupant, leaving the occupant no remedy against the city or the trustees.[85] After the township plat has been accepted and filed according to law the trustee has no authority to establish an alley or street.[86] Under the provision of the Town-Site Act which allows a city to acquire undisposed of lots for public use as sites for public buildings, the city acquires no right to the use and occupancy of the lots until the secretary of the interior has directed that the lots be reserved for such purpose for the city, or has executed a proper conveyance, or directed it to be executed by the town-site trustees, to the city for such purpose;[87] and a trustee to whom lands are patented under the town-site law has no power to dedicate any of such lands to public use.[88]

ful,[19] and in good faith.[20] It must be such an occupation and possession as openly asserts the right and dominion of the claimant over the property as against each and every other person,[21] and carries with it the evidence of ownership,[22] and a mere temporary and partial occupation by a trespasser gives him no rights in the land.[23] One who has never been in the actual possession of land cannot be an occupant thereof within the town-site law;[24] and while in order to protect his rights the claimant need not maintain an actual occupancy,[25] he must in some form retain control of the property to the exclusion of any adverse entry.[26]

(III) Residence of Occupant. While it has been said that the town-site law is intended for the benefit and protection of actual citizens or residents of the town,[27] it is well established that one who uses a lot and occupies it in good faith with buildings or other improvements or property, which show his intention to possess and claim it under the town-site law, can acquire title thereto, although he may not reside on such lot,[28] or even in the town,[29] and has never resided in the town.[30]

(IV) Extent of Occupancy. The occupation of one legal subdivision does not draw to it another subdivision, although adjoining or contiguous thereto.[31]

(V) Time of Occupancy. The trust closes upon the entry of the town site,[32] and the rights of persons as beneficiaries thereunder must be determined as of that date;[33] and so the rights of an occupant under the law cannot be acquired by settling upon town-site land after the entry thereof,[34] or after the submission of the proofs on which the entry is allowed,[35] nor does one who previously occupied the land but had ceased to occupy it before the entry acquire any rights under the entry.[36]

settler upon a town lot, by which he gains possession, are in themselves equivalent to an announcement of his intention to claim and hold the property under the law,[37] and a notice of such intention, filed in the recorder's office, adds nothing to his rights.[38]

(VII) SALE [39] OR LEASE [40] BY OCCUPANT. The occupant has such an equitable interest in the premises as he can sell and convey,[41] and the purchaser acquires such an interest as entitles him to a conveyance under the trust.[42] So also one having a bona fide occupancy can afterward lease the land and still retain his right thereto.[43] But a contract of sale or lease which conflicts with the statutory requirement that the title shall be made to an inhabitant who is an occupant and has an interest will not be recognized in deciding to whom the government title shall go.[44]

(VIII) DEATH OF CLAIMANT. The possessory right of the occupant of town-site lots, subject to entry under acts of congress, has the status of real estate,[45] and, upon the death of the occupant, descends according to the rules established by the statutes of the state,[46] and if the heirs maintain such possession they are entitled to the land when the town site is entered.[47] A fortiori the equitable title of the occupant of land in a town site which has been entered descends to his heirs.[48]

Admissibility of evidence to rebut claim of abandonment.— In an action to compel the trustees to convey certain town lots evidence that plaintiff complied with a regular notification, directed to him as owner and occupant of the lots in controversy, to grade the street on which they fronted, is pertinent and material in rebuttal of a claim that he had abandoned them and was not

(x) Amount of Land Which May Be Acquired by Individuals. If the occupancy embraces more than one lot, block, etc., the occupant is entitled to a deed for the whole,[51] except that perhaps, where a street intervenes between blocks, lots, etc., the claim cannot go over or beyond it.[52]

k. Rights of Occupants. Prior to the entry of a town site, all the interest which an occupant has in the land which he occupies is an inchoate right to the benefit of the town-site law in case the property shall be purchased from the United States by the corporate authorities or the county judge under the provisions of that law,[53] and he holds the position of one seeking to acquire a title by a possession adverse to all the other inhabitants of the town.[54] But simultaneously with the entry each occupant takes a vested equitable interest in the lot which he occupies,[55] which cannot legally be divested except by his neglect or failure to avail himself of the privileges secured by the law or by a voluntary relinquishment.[56] A bona fide occupant of a portion of a town site has a right of possession,[57] and is entitled to be protected in such right.[58] His interest extends to his actual and beneficial holdings at the time of the entry,[59] and cannot be limited by a plat, filed with a survey of the prospective town, dividing it into lots, blocks, streets, and alleys.[60]

l. Statement of Claim by Occupant. The state statutes sometimes require an occupant claiming a town-site lot to file a written statement of his claim,[61] describing the land,[62] and setting forth all the facts necessary to entitle the applicant to a deed;[63] but such a requirement does not apply to a claim of an easement on adjoining land,[64] or to a claim by a village for lands dedicated for streets, etc.[65] Where a town-site statement, required by statute to be signed by the occupant, or his agent or attorney in fact, is signed by an attorney in fact in his own name, without disclosing his principal, it may be amended to conform to the real facts, if no adverse claims are thereby prejudiced.[66] It is entirely proper for the state or territorial legislature, in regulating the execution of the trust in town-site lots, to

Statute not declaring forfeiture.— Where the state statute requires the occupant of a town lot to file his statement of claim within a specified time after the publication of notice of the town-site entry, but declares no forfeiture for failure to do so, a lot not claimed within the time prescribed becomes subject to claim by a third person or may be sold, but in the absence of intervening rights the occupant may subsequently file his claim. Wrongful ouster.— One who was in actual occupancy of a town-site lot, but was wrongfully ousted by an intruder before the entry, should receive the legal title, notwithstanding the wrongful occupancy of the intruder at the time of entry. Pratt v. Young, 1 Utah 347.

In an action brought under the Minnesota statute (act March 3, 1855) prescribing rules and regulations for the execution of the trust arising under the town-site act to determine adverse claims, the supreme court must, on the request of either party, pass upon all questions of fact as well as of law, and make final disposition of the case, except in the single instance where the questions of fact have been passed upon by a jury, when a new trial in the court below may be awarded. Castner v. Gunther, 6 Minn. 119.

Validity of statute.— A statute providing that, where two or more persons claim adversely the title to any lot or lots within the boundaries of a town, the corporate authorities or probate judge shall transmit the mat-empower the town-site trustees to pass upon such claims,[73] and provide for a review in the courts of the decision of the trustees on contested claims.[74] In an action brought to determine conflicting claims to lands entered as a town site, an answer which merely denies plaintiff's right is bad, as facts showing defendant's right to be superior to that of plaintiff should be set out,[75] and a defendant who does not show any title himself cannot, by a mere denial, compel plaintiff to establish his own title.[76] In Oklahoma the town-site trustees are required to pass upon controverted questions of fact between adverse claimants to lots,[77] and for errors of judgment on the weight of evidence, the only remedy is by an appeal to their superiors in the land department,[78] and the courts will not interfere to determine the title to town-

ter to the superior court of the county in which the lot or lots are situated, and that, on the final determination of the contest, the clerk of the court shall certify the decision to the corporate authorities or probate judge, who on the receipt thereof shall execute and deliver to the successful party or parties a conveyance in fee simple for the lot or lots awarded, is unwarranted by the act of congress, and therefore void, because under such act, where plaintiff fails to establish title, and judgment is rendered for defendant, the lot in question must be conveyed to him as the "successful party," although he may have shown no title to it. Newhouse v. Simino, 3 Wash. 648, 29 Pac. 263 [followed in Kellogg v. Sessions, 4 Wash. 814, 30 Pac. 82, 674; Ruud v. Jensen, 3 Wash. 785, 29 Pac. 265].

Quasi-judicial capacity of trustee.— Where the statute regulating the execution of the trust charges the probate judge with certain duties which involve the hearing and consideration of testimony concerning the rights of claimants to lots, and passing upon its competency, credibility, and weight, and which also involve judicial trials before him in certain instances, wherein he is required to enter judgments from which appeals may be prosecuted, the trust position of the probate judge in these matters is quasi-judicial in its character. Where lands have been conveyed by a probate judge of the county, his successor in office has no title to the lands so conveyed, and therefore no power to proceed in a summary manner to hear and determine controversies affecting the title to such lands. Cook v. Rice, 2 Colo. 131, decided under Rev. St. p. 622.

Effect of decision.— Where a probate judge, in whom title to a town site is vested by law in trust for the benefit of the several occupants of the land, is authorized by statute to determine summarily, on a petition filed before him, the right of any occupant to land claimed by him and to execute a conveyance therefor, his decision to be final and conclusive, unless a rehearing is obtained, the validity and effect of a decision and conveyance made by him thereunder are not affected by the fact that the extent or boundaries of the tract conveyed are not the same as those claimed in the petition, whether the quantity be more or less. Nature of jurisdiction.— The jurisdiction vested in the county court by the California act of Jan. 24, 1860, amending the act of 1856 regulating the mode of settling claims to lots in town sites on public lands in Humboldt county, was not strictly appellate, but original; the use of the word "appeal" in the act did not make the jurisdiction appellate, but meant merely that if a claimant was dissatisfied with the decision of the trustees, he might have his right investigated and determined in an action against the successful claimant in the county court, where the whole matter was to be investigated anew without regard to the proceedings before the trustees. Deposit by contestant.— A rule of the secretary of the interior requiring a contestant before town-site trustees appointed under the act relating to town sites in Oklahoma, to deposit thirty-two dollars with the treasurer of the board before a cause will be heard, is reasonable, and a contestant failing to comply therewith cannot invoke the aid of a court of equity. And the contestant's inability, because of poverty, to make the deposit, is not a sufficient excuse for his failure to comply with the rule. Ct. 59, 37 L. ed. 1055 [reversing 1 Okla. 92, 30 Pac. 438, and recognized in Herbien v. Warren, 2 Okla. 4, 35 Pac. 575], holding that under the special act relating to town sites in Oklahoma (26 U. S. St. at L. 109 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1463]) the issuance of a patent to the town-site trustees appointed by the secretary of the interior is not a final disposition of the site lands until adverse claims have been finally settled by the land department,[79] or exercise any jurisdiction over such questions unless it is made clearly manifest that some fraud or imposition was practised, which occasioned a conclusion different from what it would otherwise have been.[80] In order to authorize a court to interfere with the final action of the town-site trustees on the ground of misapplication of the law by such trustees the petition must specifically set out the findings of fact made by the trustees in order that the court may determine whether or not the law was properly applied to the facts found.[81] Under the statute providing for the disposition of town-site lots in Alaska,[82] and the rules of the department of the interior established pursuant thereto the town-site trustee is charged with the duty of determining which of several claimants to a lot or lots was in rightful possession,[83] and the decision of the trustees is final, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, with reference to all questions of fact arising in such proceeding except as the same may be reversed by the commissioner of the general land office or the secretary of the interior.[84]

o. Conveyances[85] by Trustees — (i) Deeds to Occupants. Town-site trustees do not hold an indefeasible title as of private right with power to dispose of the land at will, but only as trustees for such occupants as shall be ascertained to be entitled to particular lots within the town-site boundary;[86] and it is their duty to make deeds for the land to the respective occupants.[87] In conveying town-site government's title and control, but is a conveyance in trust, to be carried out by the trustees under the control of the secretary, and, although the act devolves upon the trustees the duty of determining adverse claims to lots, the secretary has power to provide for appeals therefrom to the commissioner of the general land office, and finally to himself, and the pendency of such an appeal deprives the trustees of power to make conveyances of the lots in controversy.

Laches of claimant.— Where a claimant of a town-site lot failed, through his own laches, to assert any claim to the lot before the town-site trustees, he is estopped from seeking relief in a court of equity. Bassett v. Mitchell, 3 Okla. 177, 41 Pac. 601.

Sufficiency of allegations of fraud.— In order to give the courts jurisdiction to go behind the findings of fact made in a lot contest instituted before a board of town-site trustees and render a decree adverse to the award made in such contest, on the ground of fraud, it is necessary that the complaint should allege the facts constituting the fraud with such fulness and particularity as to show to the court that the action of the officers whose duty it was to determine the controversy must necessarily have been affected thereby to the defeat of the complainant in the contest, and that the fraud which caused the defeat of the complainant was extrinsic or collateral to the matter tried, and not a fraud which was in issue in the contest; and mere general allegations that defendant, through false and fraudulent representations and false testimony, procured the deed to the lot, are not sufficient. lands to individuals, the trustees act in the execution of a power;[88] but the omission to recite in the deed the authority under which the conveyance is made does not invalidate it.[89] As soon as the land is entered, the trustee may proceed to execute the trust by giving deeds to the beneficiaries,[90] although the patent from the United States has not yet been issued,[91] and the patent when issued relates back to the date of the entry,[92] so that no further deed from the trustees is necessary to vest title in such beneficiaries.[93] But it must appear that the trustee had already entered the land when he executed the deed,[94] and a recital of that fact in the deed itself is not evidence as against a stranger.[95]

(II) Disposal of Unoccupied Lands. The trustees have no authority to sell any portion of the town site until so authorized by the state or territorial legislature,[96] and the disposal of lots which are unoccupied or undisposed of must be governed by the state or territorial statute.[97] Any profit accruing from the sale of unoccupied lots must inure to the benefit of the inhabitants of the town.[98] Town-site trustees have no power to execute a deed conveying undisposed of lots to the city for public use while applications of individuals for deeds to such lots by virtue of occupancy are pending.[99] A purchaser from the trustee, who relies in part upon the original settlement of an occupant, who has platted such town site, and dedicated a portion thereof to public use, takes subject to such dedication, where the plat and survey are also recognized by the trustee's deed.[1]

(III) Conveyances of Streets or Alleys. The trustee of a town site has no authority to issue a deed conveying any part of a street or alley;[2] but he may execute a deed to the claimant of a lot which has been improperly described as an alley by his predecessor in office.[3]

(IV) By Whom Deeds Executed. Where a patent from the government names the president of the board of trustees of an incorporated town as the grantee of land in trust for the use and benefit of occupants, the president may convey the land.[4] Where the title to a town site is vested by government patent in the county judge and his successors in trust for the several occupants thereof, a deed for a lot executed by a commissioner appointed by the corporate authorities of the town for that purpose is of no effect.[5]

(vi) Validity and Effect of Deeds. Where a town-site trustee has made a deed for any portion of the land, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that he did his duty in all respects,[7] that all statutory requirements were complied with,[8] and that the property was conveyed to the proper person.[9] The person really entitled to the land is not, however, deprived of his rights by a deed of the trustee conveying the land to a person not entitled thereto;[10] but may show, in an action by the grantee against him, that at the time of the execution of the deed he, and not the grantee, was in possession and entitled to the occupancy of the land.[11] Where a judge who had entered a town site conveyed the same to the occupants jointly, instead of to the incorporated town-site company composed of such occupants, and they treated it as common property belonging to the company, such individuals were the full legal and equitable owners as against persons having no rights acquired through the company.[12] Where a husband deeded land which was subject to the land laws of the United States to his wife for her life, and after her decease to become the property of her son, but the wife afterward filed her declaratory statement to said land, under a town-site statute, providing that claimants of any interest in such land should file such statement, or be forever barred from any interest therein, and she was adjudged to be the original owner thereof, and a deed thereto in fee simple was executed to her by the mayor of the city, she did not hold the property in trust for her son.[13] It has been held that a town-site occupant, who receives a deed from the trustee takes the legal title

Protection of settler's rights, although conveyance cannot be enforced.— The rights of a settler in a town which has availed itself of the Town-Site Act, as against the town, should be protected by a court of equity on the ground of the trust relation existing between the parties, although, under the local legislation, as it stands, a conveyance of the legal title cannot be enforced. 26. Cathcart v. Peck, 11 Minn. 45, holding that in an action by a claimant, under the town-site law to compel a conveyance to him, a complaint alleging that at the time of the making of the survey and plat and the record thereof plaintiff was the occupant of certain land, occupying and improving the same as a town site; that at the date of application to enter said lands, and at the entry and purchase thereof, he was the sole and exclusive occupant of the lots, blocks, etc., enumerated in his statement in writing addressed to the town council, occupying and improving the same for the purpose of erecting and building a town thereon, and that defendant never occupied any portion thereof, sufficiently shows acts of improvement and occupancy by plaintiff.

27. Brown v. Parker, 2 Okla. 258, 39 Pac. 567 (holding that a petition which shows that plaintiff is qualified to enter public lands; that he has occupied and improved a town lot from the day it was subject to settlement to the date of suit; that he duly filed his application for a deed; that he was the only occupant of the lot; that he tendered all fees and assessments; and that the commissioners refused to hear his claim because he refused to deposit twenty-five dollars with them as security for costs; and to declare them trustees for the benefit of plaintiff, which discloses that the trustees at the commencement of the suit had not conveyed the title by deed, but still retained the same, fails to state a cause of action for a resulting trust.[28] The act of congress abolishing town-site trustees in Oklahoma and conferring on the commissioner of the general land office the execution of so much of the trust vested in such boards as was unexecuted simply charged the commissioner of the general land office with the execution and completion of the trust formerly conferred on the town-site boards; and hence the commissioner could not be sued as trustee of such lands for the benefit of another, in any case where formerly the town-site trustees could not be sued.[29]

q. Recovery of Expense of Town-Site Entry. One who defrays the expenses of entering a town site has no cause of action for the recovery of such money directly against the occupants of the town site, but can only collect for such expenses under the provisions of the state law applicable to such case.[30]

13. Effect of Receipts, Certificates, Etc. A receipt from the proper officer of the United States, showing the payment of the purchase-price of lands, is evidence of title,[31] sufficient, when uncontrolled by other evidence, to sustain an action of ejectment by, or defeat such an action against, the holder,[32] or to enable him to maintain trespass to try title.[33] It has been held that the certificate of

A certificate of the first payment for lands sold by the United States under the credit system, it not appearing that the terms of the purchase have been complied with and final payment made, upon a failure to do which the lands become forfeited, is not sufficient to rebut the presumption of forfeiture, a register of a land office of the purchase of a tract of land from the United States is of as high authority as a patent and the holder may recover possession of the land;[34] but it has also been asserted that while such a certificate is evidence of an equitable interest in the purchaser,[35] it is not always final evidence of title from the government, although courts generally consider it sufficient to support a petitory action.[36] A certificate by the register or receiver of a United States land office, showing a preëmption settlement and entry of public land, was evidence that the holder's preëmption right commenced at the date of settlement, and was consummated at the date of entry, stated therein;[37] and has been held to give a title good as against all the world but the United States.[38] But a person's possession under a certificate that he had filed proof of his preëmption right with the register and receiver was insufficient, without proof of a compliance with the act of congress, to sustain a possessory action against another in actual possession under a similar certificate of subsequent date.[39] A declaratory statement filed by one as an occupant of public land is not evidence of his peaceable possession;[40] but the receipt for the officer's fees for filing a declaratory statement made by a settler on government land, and a certificate of the filing, given by the register and receiver of the United States land office, are admissible in evidence in an action involving the possession of the land filed on to show the good faith and the character of the possession of claimant.[41]

14. Abandonment or Relinquishment of Claims to Public Land[42]— a. In General. A person occupying, settling upon, improving, or entering public land is not bound to do all further acts necessary to give him a right to a patent,[43] but his rights may be relinquished or abandoned.[44] A mere relinquishment of possession on the part of the occupant is not, however, necessarily an abandonment;[45] but to constitute an abandonment of the land there must be a voluntary,[46] and and authorize the holder to maintain an action for trespass upon the land. Gill v. Taylor, 3 Port. (Ala.) 182.

Where one becomes insane and wanders away his absence raises no presumption of an intention to abandon his possessory claims on the public lands. White v. Martin, 2 Alaska 495.

An absence caused by confinement in a penitentiary upon conviction of a crime does actual [47] relinquishment of possession with an intention to abandon,[48] and without the intention of returning.[49] A sale by a homestead claimant before the issuance of a patent may be treated as a relinquishment and abandonment of his homestead entry,[50] and one who, while in possession of a tract of public land with intent to enter it as a homestead, makes a sale, which the land department treats as an abandonment of his right of entry, cannot, by merely continuing in possession, create a new right of entry as against the person in whose favor he has relinquished his right.[51] Where one claiming homestead rights in a tract of land acquiesces in a decision of the land department adverse to his claim, and thereafter files a new application to enter the same as a homestead on the ground that a prior entry thereof by another is invalid, he must be regarded as having abandoned his original claim, and cannot thereafter maintain a suit based thereon.[52]

b. Effect of Abandonment or Relinquishment. An abandonment or relinquishment divests all the right of the settler,[53] and restores land to the public domain,[54] and leaves it subject to disposition according to law,[55] and occupation or entry by another person,[56] although no formal cancellation is entered of record.[57] There can be no such thing as an abandonment in favor of a particular individual,[58] and so when, on the relinquishment of a homestead entry, the land is, and for some time past has been, in the possession of another, who is a bona fide settler, his rights as such immediately attach to the exclusion of a third person, who procures the relinquishment to be made, and who simultaneously with the relinquishment tenders an application for entry of the lands, and immediately enters thereon and makes improvements.[59] Where grantees of the United States relinquished their title as against persons having good preëmption rights prior to their purchase, they were estopped to set up their title only as against such settlers and not as against a mere possessor.[60]

D. Reservations[65] to United States — 1. Meaning of Term. 2. Power to Make Reservations. A reservation of the public lands may be made by congress,[67] or by the treaty-making power; [68] in addition to which from an early period in the history of the government it has been the practice of the president to order, from time to time, as the exigencies of the public service required, parcels of land belonging to the United States to be reserved from sale and set apart for public uses.[69] The authority of the president in this respect is recognized in numerous acts of congress [70] and decisions of the courts,[71] independ-

The president may modify a reservation previously made by reducing or enlarging it. Grisar v. McDowell, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 363, 18 L. ed. 863, holding that where a reservation by the president of a tract of public lands for military purposes was afterward modified and reduced and described more particularly by a subsequent order, its validity was not ent of any act of congress expressly authorizing him to make such reservations.[73] and congress has, moreover, by express enactment conferred upon the president the power to make reservations of the public lands for certain purposes.[73]

3. How Reservation Effected. The president may effect a reservation of public land by proclamation,[74] or by executive order;[75] and as the president speaks and acts through the heads of the several departments in relation to subjects which appertain to their respective duties,[76] the act of the secretary of the navy in reserving a part of the public domain for naval purposes,[77] of the secretary of war in establishing a military reservation,[78] or of the secretary of the interior in setting apart public lands as a forest reservation,[79] is in legal effect the act of the president. No set form of words or phrases is necessary to effect a reservation;[80] but it is enough if there are sufficient words to indicate the purpose of the power that can act and to show that in the given case it intended to act.[81] A reservation for the future disposal of the United States is a reservation to the United States.[82] A tract of public land which is actually set apart by an order of the war department for military purposes, and government appropriations expended in fitting it for such use, and of which the military forces remain in possession until its abandonment by a formal notice posted by the military authorities is a military reservation.[83]

4. Lands Which May Be Reserved. Lands which have been granted to a state by act of congress cannot be subsequently reserved for the purposes of the general government,[84] and a provision in a statute creating a land district that the president shall have authority to set apart such portions of lands within the district as are necessary for public uses does not empower him to interfere with reservations existing by force of a treaty.[85] Lands formerly occupied by Indians, but from which the Indians have been removed, and which have been made by statute subject to sale and to homestead entry are a part of the public domain and, as such, subject to be set apart as forest reservations.[86] Where a qualified claimant under the Oregon Donation Act [87] duly made a settlement upon the public domain, and filed a notification with the surveyor-general claiming the parcel of land described therein as a donation claim under the act, such land could not be thereafter set apart as a military reservation without obtaining the claimant's relinquishment thereof or making him due compensation therefor.[88] The title of the city of San Francisco to its lands was so far subject to the control of the Mexican government, previous to the conquest and cession of the country, and of the United States subsequently, that portions of the land within the limits claimed by the city could have been reserved by those governments, respectively, for public purposes at any time before the title had become vested in private persons by action of the city authorities.[89]

5. Validity of Reservations. The reasons which govern the president in making a reservation of public lands for military purposes cannot affect the validity of his action.[90] A military post established by the proper department of the government is none the less a valid reservation because when it was established it may have been within the contemplation of the authorities that a time would come when the necessity for the post would cease and it would be abandoned.[91] Where it does not appear that any reservation was ever made by the authority of the president, and it does appear that an alleged reservation, not appearing to have been for a fort, included more than two hundred acres, while the law applicable to such lands at that time limited the amount which might be reserved at one place for any purpose other than a "fort" to twenty acres, no reservation was in fact lawfully established.[92] An order of the secretary of war directing the commanding officers of the military stations "on the route to Oregon" to make a reserve of ten miles square around the same, and the act thereunder of the commanding officers stationed at a place in Oregon in causing a survey to be made of such a tract were not sufficient to constitute such tract a military reservation.[93]

6. Effect of Reservations — a. In General. Lands which are reserved are effectually segregated from the public domain,[94] and pass beyond the control of the general land office,[95] until in some lawful manner it reacquires jurisdiction over them.[96]

b. Rights of Settlers and Occupants. The claims of persons who have settled upon, occupied, and improved land afterward included in a reservation are considered worthy of protection and are usually respected;[97] but where the president, as authorized by law, issues a proclamation reserving certain lands, and warning all persons to depart therefrom, this terminates any rights previously acquired in such lands by a settler.[98]

7. Regulations Respecting Reservations. Lands reserved to the United States are the absolute property of the government,[99] and the government, acting through congress, has the right to control them,[1] or refuse the use of them to the public,[2] or, if it permits the public to use them, to prescribe the terms and conditions under which this privilege may be enjoyed,[3] and regulations in regard to such use adopted or authorized by congress cannot be interfered with by the courts on the ground that they are unreasonable and oppressive.[4]

8. Relinquishment of Lands Within Forest Reservations. Under the statute providing that an owner of land within a forest reserve may relinquish the tract to the government and select other vacant land in lieu thereof,[5] the legal title

97. See State v. Tanner, 73 Nebr. 104, 102 N. W. 235, holding that the rights acquired by actual occupation and settlement of land subsequently set apart as a military reservation, recognized by Act Cong. July 5, 1884, c. 214, 23 U. S. St. at L. 103 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1607], are the "lawful rights" which it is declared shall not be prejudiced in Act Cong. March 3, 1893, c. 200, 27 U. S. St. at L. 555, granting lands from an abandoned military reservation to the state as indemnity school lands, in lieu of other lands theretofore lost.

Exception of land on which "valid settlement" made.— One who has improved unsurveyed public land, and occupies the same, and makes it his home, with the intention of entering it under the land laws when it is surveyed, must be regarded as having made a valid settlement pursuant to law within the meaning of a proclamation setting aside certain lands, including those so occupied, as a forest reserve, but excepting from the reservation all lands "upon which any valid settlement has been made pursuant to law." Holmes v. U. S., 118 Fed. 995, 55 C. C. A. 489 [reversing 105 Fed. 41], holding that it was immaterial that the land had been withdrawn from entry as being within a railroad grant, and had never been formally restored to the public domain, where such withdrawal was in fact unauthorized, and holding further, although "not without some doubt," that under Act Jan. 13, 1881 (21 U. S. St. at L. 315 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1594]), giving all persons who have settled and made valuable and permanent improvements upon any odd-numbered section of land within a railroad withdrawal, in good faith, and with the permission or license of the railroad company, and with expectation of purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of the same from the United States, if for any cause it shall be restored to the public domain, the right so given a settler is not defeated by the fact that after the withdrawal has been set aside the land is included within the boundaries of a forest reservation, created by proclamation of the president, before it has been surveyed so as to give the settler an opportunity to purchase.

vests in the United States immediately upon the filing for record of the deed of relinquishment,[6] subject perhaps to be divested should the secretary of the interior disapprove of the abstract of title,[7] and the vesting of such title is not dependent upon the making and approval of the selection of lieu lands.[8] But the title to lands selected in lieu of relinquished lands does not vest until the selection is approved by the land department,[9] and such a selection is liable to be defeated by adverse claims antedating it,[10] or by the land selected proving to be mineral in character.[11]

9. Disposal of Reservations. Under an act of congress authorizing the secretary of war to cause certain military sites to be sold, the sale can be made through an agent specially appointed for that purpose acting under power of attorney,[12] and if, in selling land within the limits of, or near to, a municipal corporation, a subdivision of the tract into lots, blocks, and streets would be most beneficial to the government, it is the duty of the secretary of war to adopt that method.[13] An exchange of a military site for other land is valid as a sale.[14]

E. Direct Grants by Act of Congress[15]— 1. Power to Make Direct Grants. Although the ordinary legislation with respect to the public domain contemplates the retention by the United States of entire power over the land until a patent is issued,[16] the United States may by act of congress at once divest itself of all property in a portion of the public lands and transfer it to an individual or to a state without any patent;[17] and a patent subsequently issued for land so granted is merely documentary evidence of such title.[18]

2. Form of Grants. No particular form of words is necessary to make such a grant, but it is sufficient that the words used show an intention of congress that certain lands shall be separated from the mass of the public domain and set apart and appropriated to the grantee.[19]

3. Grant of Lands to Be Selected. A grant by congress of lands to be selected within a larger area does not attach to any particular lands until the selections are made and approved,[20] at which time the title passes;[21] but before the selection has been made the grantee has such a contingent interest in all the lands subject to selection that it may maintain a suit in equity to enjoin an unauthorized sale thereof for taxes.[22]

4. Determination of Character of Land. Where congress grants non-mineral lands to be selected by the grantees in a certain territory, and requires the surveyor-general to make survey and location of the land selected, it becomes his duty, under the supervision of the land department, to determine the character of the land selected, and his decision that it is not mineral, when ratified by the department, is final and conclusive, so that, after title passes, no subsequent discovery of minerals can affect the title or possession;[23] and neither the surveyor-general nor the land department has any authority to insert in the certificate of approval of the location and survey a reservation of any mineral lands contained therein, but such a reservation is void.[24]

5. Construction[25] and Effect of Statutory Grants. A statutory grant in the nature of a bounty must be construed most strongly in favor of the United States.[26] An act of congress providing that certain lands "shall be" alloted for and given to a certain person[27] or that certain lands "be and the same are hereby ceded" to a state is a grant in præsenti.[28] In a statutory grant of a section of land, "to embrace the buildings and improvements thereon," the word "embrace" means to inclose, as by surrounding or encircling.[29] Where congress grants land in words of present grant the legal title passes to and immediately vests in the grantee,[30] and this is not the less true because the title vests in him conditionally and subject to be defeated by his failure to comply with the law,[31] or because the boundaries are yet to be determined by survey.[32]

6. Grants to States in General.[33] Large quantities of the public domain have been granted by congress to the individual states either generally or for some particular purposes, and the rule is that lands granted for a particular object are held in trust for the fulfilment of the purpose of the grant and cannot be diverted to other purposes.[34] A grant by congress to a state is no more subject to be recalled at the will of congress than a grant to an individual.[35]

7. the public lands of the United States, and were receivable at the rate of one dollar and a quarter per acre, in full or part payment for such land as the case might be.[43] The holder of a land warrant, free from question, had, by statute, an absolute right to locate land under it, and to receive a patent for such land,[44] and a land warrant was not canceled, nor did the title thereto pass from the locator, until it was accepted in payment for land by the United States.[45] One who entered land under a bounty land warrant became the equitable owner thereof, and the mere naked legal title remained in the United States until the issuance of the patent,[46] and it has been held that a certificate of location of such a warrant was prima facie evidence of legal title in the holder of the certificate.[47] A bounty warrant could not be located on land reserved by congress for school purposes.[48] Bounty land warrants were regarded as lands, so that unless specifically devised they would pass to the owner's heirs.[49]

Reservation for schools.— A provision in an act of congress organizing a territory reserving certain sections for school purposes is neither a grant nor a reservation for public uses within the exception of the statute, but such land is subject to the highway ease-

to or rights in a part of the public domain takes and holds subject to this easement.[52]

2. For Canals and Ditches.[53] The statute grants to canal and ditch companies formed for the purpose of irrigation the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States for their reservoirs, canals, and ditches.[54] This grant is operative as against the United States and persons acquiring rights in or title to land after a right of way has been taken;[55] but land which has been entered by an individual cannot be subsequently taken for such purposes, to his damage, without liability to him therefor.[56]

H. School and University Lands — 1. Grants For School Purposes[57]— a. In General. The policy of the government has been a generous one in respect to grants for school purposes,[58] and on the admission with the Union of a number of the states, land grants have been made to them by congress for such purposes.[59] These grants have usually been of section 16, or sections 16 and 36 in each township,[60] and in addition to this congress has granted to each of several states and territories seventy-two sections of land for the use and support of a state univerment without compensation to the owner. Riverside Tp. v. Newton, 11 S. D. 120, 75 N. W. 899.

Appropriation of unearned and subsequently forfeited railroad land.— Where an appropriation of a right of way for a flume, such as congress has authorized upon unoccupied public land, is made upon granted, but unearned, railroad land, and subsequently the land so occupied is forfeited to the government, the appropriation is effective, so far as the government is concerned; and a homesteader, whose settlement was begun before the forfeiture, but subsequent to the location and construction of the flume, takes subject to the burden of such flume. Maffet v. Quine, 95 Fed. 199, 93 Fed. 347, holding further that it was immaterial whether the appropriation was made prior or subsequent to the time the government was reinvested with title.

56. Clear Creek Land, etc., Co. v. Kilkenny, 5 Wyo. 38, 36 Pac. 819, holding that where defendant constructed a ditch through land entered by plaintiff under the laws of the United States for the reclamation of desert lands, and about two years afterward plaintiff relinquished this entry, and at the same time homesteaded the land, the land did not revert to the United States by the relinquishment of the desert land entry, so as to give defendant the right of way for its ditch, and that even if such a right of way had been acquired defendant could not subsequently enlarge the ditch without liability to plaintiff for the resulting damage.

Act Cong. July 26, 1866 (14 U. S. St. at L. 253), granting a right of way to ditch and canal owners, was prospective in its operation, and did not in any manner qualify or limit the effect of a patent issued before its passage. Validity of grant.— The fact that at the sity.[61] Land has also been granted to cities and villages for the support of schools therein.[62]

b. Title Acquired. A grant by congress of land to a state "for the use of schools" is an absolute grant, vesting title for a specific purpose, and not a grant as on a condition subsequent.[63] The grant and its acceptance by the state constitute a solemn compact between the state and the United States whereby the state becomes the purchaser of the school sections for a valuable consideration with full power to sell or lease the same for the use of schools as the state may deem most beneficial to the inhabitants of the respective townships,[64] and the grant cannot be withdrawn after its acceptance by the state.[65] The legal title to school lands is in the state,[66] in trust under some of the grants, for the support of schools for the inhabitants of the respective townships in which the lands lie.[67]

c. When Title Vests. While the grants to various states vary somewhat in their terms, grants of certain designated sections are usually considered as grants in præsenti;[68] but when the lands are unsurveyed at the time the grants are subject to location by the federal government,[69] and title to the particular sections vests absolutely in the state upon the land being surveyed and laid off into sections and townships,[70] without the necessity of the issuance of a patent.[71] A grant of lands to be selected becomes absolute and the state becomes vested with the fee-simple title, on its acceptance of the terms of the grant and its selection of the lands;[72] but the mere acceptance of the grant gives no title to any particular lands before they are selected and listed.[73]

d. Beneficiaries of Grants. Where congress grants to a state a certain amount of land for state charitable, educational, penal, and reformatory institutions, the legislature may appropriate to one institution more than its proportionate share of the grant.[74] Although the enabling act of a state grants seventy-two sections of land to the state for a university the state university is not excluded from the benefits of a subsequent section of the enabling act granting two hundred thousand acres to the state for charitable, educational, penal, and reformatory institutions.[75] School sections are held for the benefit of the whole township in which they are situated, and the legislature has no power to divert them from that purpose.[76]

e. sections as have been surveyed as square or rectangular and not to radiating anomalous or irregular sections,[78] or to fractional sections.[79]

(II) Lands Subject to Preëxisting Rights.[80] A grant of certain sections to a state for school purposes does not carry lands which are subject to preëxisting rights of others.[81] And so such a grant does not carry land subject to the rights of a settler,[82] unless he loses such right by failure to comply with the statutory requirements.[83] Neither does such a grant confer any title to land which is within the limits of a valid or confirmed Spanish or Mexican grant,[84] although it does carry title to land claimed under an imperfect title under a former government which has been rejected,[85] and to land claimed under a Spanish or Mexican grant but excluded therefrom by the terms of the decree of confirmation.[86] But it has been held that the title of the state of Missouri to the sixteenth sections granted to it by congress was not impaired by the location of a New Madrid certificate thereon previous to the grant to the state.[87] A selection of land for university purposes which, although ineffectual at the date thereof, by reason of an existing adverse claim upon the land, is maintained and acted upon continuously, becomes effectual upon the termination of such adverse claim.[88]

manner and sold, except certain lots which the secretary of the treasury might reserve for the support of schools, it was held that whether those lots were so reserved by the secretary for school purposes was a question of fact for the jury to determine, and there was no legal presumption that he made the selection.[1]

g. Indemnity and Lieu Lands — (i) In General. It frequently happens that a state does not obtain land within the school sections, by reason of the land being of a character excluded from the grant,[2] or because it has been already disposed of or is subject to preëxisting rights entitled to protection;[3] and hence through various enactments of congress has arisen the law of indemnity whose cardinal doctrine is compensation for such loss,[4] and which allows the state, in lieu of lands which have been thus lost to it, to select other lands,[5] of equal acreage,[6] and as contiguous thereto as may be.[7]

(ii) By Whom Selection Made. When the statute designates a particular officer to make the selection it must be made by him in order that title may pass.[8]

(iii) Lands Subject to Selection.[9] A state has no such vested right to select indemnity or lieu lands as precludes the withdrawal from selection of any particular lands or class of lands at any time before a selection is actually made.[10] Lands which are of such a character or are subject to such claims that they would not pass by a grant of certain sections, or be subject to selection under a general grant [11] cannot be selected as indemnity or lieu lands.[12] Under the act of congress authorizing the state of Alabama "to select by legal subdivisions, from any of the surveyed public lands" in lieu of lost school lands, the state acquired a perfect title to lands selected in the territory of Nebraska, and might hold such lands after the admission of Nebraska as a state.[13]

It is the consent of the United States, as manifested by the approval of the secretary of the interior, which gives legal efficacy to the selection, and until such approval the selection does not give to the state any legal or equitable right to the land. Roberts v. Gebhart, 104 Cal. 67, 37 Pac. 782 (holding further that, in any event, where the purchaser of lands selected in lieu of other land by a state has notice of an order vacating the selection, and fails to appeal therefrom, but permits another to perfect a homestead claim to the land, such laches will bar him from any relief); Buhne v. Chism, 48 Cal. 467.

Past, as well as future, approval by the secretary of the interior of selections of public land in lieu of school sections was covered by the provision of the act of Dec. 18, 1902, c. 5 (32 U. S. A certified transcript from the general land office, showing a selection of lands for the benefit of a township and its approval by the secretary of the treasury, is competent evidence to support an action of ejectment by the state, although such transcript fails to show on its face that the sixteenth section had been disposed of in the township to which the lands were allotted, the presumption being that all facts necessary to sustain the action of the secretary of the treasury existed, and, the papers showing such selection being on file in the general land office, a certified transcript by the head of that department is admissible. A transcript of the original list prepared in the general land office, and transmitted by it to the local land office, and which is subsequently treated as properly authenticated both by the local and general land offices, cannot be attacked because of the alleged spurious signature of the commissioner of the general land office in an action to quiet title by a patentee of the United States against a purchaser from the state of a quarter section of the listed land. Howell v. Slauson, 83 Cal. 539, 23 Pac. 692.

An indorsement on the transcript of the lands selected by the state as indemnity lands for the loss of school lands, "Received and filed December 5, 1871," and testimony by the register of the local land office that he received the transcript from the general land office, and that it was deposited as part of the records of the office, is sufficient evidence of filing in the local land office, although it lacks a file mark. Howell v. Slauson, 83 Cal. 539, 23 Pac. 692.

An entry by the register of the land office in the tract book that a certain tract of land was set off as school lands is presumptive evidence that such lands were selected and approved as such by the secretary of the treasury. Coombs v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 112.

(v) Effect of Selection. Where lieu lands have been selected and sold and the proceeds applied to the benefit of schools, the state is estopped from afterward claiming the lands in lieu of which the selection was made.[21]

(vi) Confirmation of Selections. In California much confusion and hardship was caused by the selection of lieu lands before the same were surveyed, by the selection of lands in lieu of lands not lost to the state, and by other defective and invalid selections, but congress has cleared up these matters by the passage of acts confirming such selections.[22]

(vii) Vacating Selections. A listing to a state of lieu lands selected by it, which has been confirmed by act of congress, cannot subsequently be canceled by the secretary of the interior.[23]

h. Control of School Lands. After the title to school lands has vested in the state such lands are not subject to any further legislation by congress;[24] but the absolute control of such lands, where not transferred, is in the state,[25] and it is for the state to determine how and by whom these lands shall be managed.[26]

i. Protection of School Lands and Rights Therein. In Arkansas the state has a right to sue for the injury committed by cutting and converting timber on school lands,[27] and it is no defense that the school directors consented to such cutting, where the state statute has not conferred upon school boards any power in reference to such lands.[28] In Missouri the members of the county court of each county are vested with the trust of managing the school lands for the benefit of the respective townships, and are justified in taking the same measures to protect the property of the state as though it were their own.[29] In Mississippi the statute [30] makes it the duty of the county board of supervisors to institute and prosecute all necessary suits to establish and confirm in itself as representative of the county the title to school section lands and to fix the date of the expiration of any lease of the same,[31] and authorizes any person interested to institute and prosecute such a suit if the board fails to do so.[32]

j. Improvements [33] on School Lands. In Nebraska persons living on lands selected by the state in lieu of school selections are not thereby deprived of their improvements, but such improvements remain their property.[34] In Washington the appraisers are required to appraise all improvements found upon school lands,[35] and if the purchaser is a person other than the owner of the improvements, he is required to deposit the appraised value thereof with the state treasurer.[36] Formerly the statute required the purchaser to pay the appraised value of the improvements to the owner thereof, in cash, within thirty days,[37] and under this provision the owner of the improvements could retain possession of the land until the county against the purchaser to stay waste, and certain members of the county court executed the injunction bond, those officers were entitled to reimbursement out of the purchase-money, when paid by the vendee of the land into the township fund, for any sum recovered from them on the bond on dissolution of the injunction.

Statute authorizes suit against one claiming in fee simple under conveyance from lessee of the term.— Carroll County v. Jones, 71 Miss. 947, 15 So. 106.

Pleading.—A bill by a county to establish the title to township school lands need not set out the investigations as to title, and the abstracts thereof, required by Miss. Code (1892), §§ 4144, 4155, but it sufficiently deraigns title when it avers the reservation of title by the United States to such lands for school purposes, and charges that the legal title remains therein, and that there is a public trust in such lands for the support of schools in the township on which the land is situated; neither need the bill make deraignment of defendants' claim of title, but it is sufficient to aver that defendants are in possession and claim title in fee simple, and that such possession and claim cast a cloud on the title to the land, and render it unavailable for carrying out the trust. Wright v. Lauderdale County, 71 Miss. 800, 15 So. 116.

Effect of adverse possession.— Under Miss. Code (1892), § 4148, which provides that adverse possession of a sixteenth section for more than twenty-five years under a claim of right is prima facie evidence that the lease or sale thereof has been duly made, the occupant is not obliged to also show that the lease or sale was actually made. Amite County v. Steen, 72 Miss. 567, 17 So. 930. The only presumption that there had once been a lease or a sale of such school lands now recognized by the law is that arising under the above section, and section 1806 of the code has no application to school lands. Leflore County v. Bush, 76 Miss. 551, 25 So. 351.

Limitation of actions.— Purchasers of school lands sold under Miss. Act, Feb. 25, 1854, without the affirmative consent of the inhabitants, as required by the act of congress of May 19, 1852, cannot set up the statute of limitations as a defense to an action by the county supervisors to quiet title. Osborn v. Hinds County, 71 Miss. 19, 14 So. 457, holding, however, that under Code (1892), § 499, a leaseholder in possession may bring a suit against the county to confirm his title and fix the time of the expiration of his lease.

compensated for his improvements,[38] or sue the purchaser of the land for the value of the improvements;[39] but he was not entitled to an injunction restraining the commissioner of public lands from executing and delivering a contract of sale of such land.[40]

2. Sale and Conveyance of School Lands[41]— a. In General. The states to which school lands have been granted have full power to sell and dispose of such lands,[42] and an act of congress imposing conditions on the state's power of sale, passed after the title has vested in the state, is not binding on the state.[43] It is the policy of the states to encourage the settlement and sale of school lands,[44] but in order for a sale of such lands to be valid, it must conform to the statutes regulating such sales.[45]

b. Control of Sales — (i) In General. It is for the state to determine how and by whom school lands shall be sold,[46] and accordingly there have been established in the various states regulations designating certain officers or boards to whom is committed the authority and duty to control the sale of such lands.[47]

38. Pearson v. Ashley, 5 Wash. 169, 31 Pac. 410 (holding that this was true notwithstanding he might find an adequate remedy to compel payment in an action at law); Wilkes v. Hunt, 4 Wash. 100, 29 Pac. 830.

Evidence that a lessee made the improvements, and assigned his claim therefor to plaintiff shows prima facie plaintiff's right to recover the value of such improvements. Hart Lumber Co. v. Rucker, 15 Wash. 456, 46 Pac. 728.

Proof of appraisement.— That the improvements were appraised by the board of county commissioners before the sale may be shown by the county records, and by proof of what transpired at the time of the sale. Hart Lumber Co. v. Rucker, 15 Wash. 456, 46 Pac. 728.

That the appraisement was fraudulent is a matter of defense. Hart Lumber Co. v. Rucker, 15 Wash. 456, 46 Pac. 728.

Informality of lease.— Where possession of school lands has been taken under a lease from the county commissioners and improvements made thereon, a subsequent purchaser of such lands cannot escape liability for the value of the improvements by reason of any informality in the making of the lease. Hart Lumber Co. v. Rucker, 15 Wash. 456, 46 Pac. 728.

Location of improvements.— In a sale of school lands, the appraisement having stated that certain improvements were upon a lot designated, a purchaser of such lot must be presumed to have bid with the expectation that he must pay to the owner thereof the amount of such appraisement, and he cannot take advantage of the fact that some portion of the improvements were upon the tide land in front of the upland purchased by him. In California instructions to the land agent of the University of California, directing him to receive applications for surveyed

Where this matter is provided for by the state constitution it is not within the power of the legislature to authorize the control, sale, or leasing of school lands by an officer or individual other than those named in the constitution,[48] or to exercise any power as to such lands which the constitution vested in designated officers.[49]

(II) Ratification of Unauthorized Contract of Sale. A contract by a county school superintendent to convey school lands, although outside his authority, is ratified by the state's acceptance of the price, so as to bind it to make a deed to the lands.[50]

(III) Compensation of Officers Making Sales. The compensation of the officers making the sales is regulated by the statutes.[51]

c. Lands Subject to Sale. As a general rule school lands are not subject to sale or location until they have been surveyed;[52] and lieu lands cannot be sold by land, in accordance with a designated plan, whether they emanate from the board of regents or not, if subsequently recognized and enforced by them, will be held to be the instructions of the board. White v. Douglass, (1885) 8 Pac. 801.

In Colorado the state board of land commissioners is a constitutional tribunal in which is vested the power of direction, control, and disposition of the public lands of the state, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. The sale of school lands is confided entirely to the discretion of the board, and the only requirement prescribed by the statutes as a condition to the exercise of the power to sell school lands is that the board shall be of the opinion that the best interests of the school fund will be served by offering the same for sale. It need not be shown by the records of the proceedings of the board that it was of the opinion that a sale would be for the best interests of the school fund, for the fact that the board offered the land for sale is evidence of the existence of the condition authorizing the exercise of its power. Routt v. Greenwood Cemetery Land Co., 18 Colo. 132, 31 Pac. 858.

McLean County School Trustees v. Allen, 21 Ill. 120. It is for the school commissioner to decide, before making a sale of school lands, whether the township contains a sufficient number of inhabitants to warrant the sale of an entire section. McLean County School Trustees v. Allen, 21 Ill. 120.

In Michigan the commissioner of the land office may refuse to sell land forming part of the primary school lands, if in his opinion such refusal would benefit the several school funds affected thereby. People v. State Land Office Com'r, 26 Mich. 146.

In Louisiana the power to sell and convey school indemnity lands is vested in the governor and the register of the land office. State v. Nicholls, 42 La. Ann. 209, 7 So. 738.

In Oregon the constitution constitutes the governor, the secretary of state, and the state treasurer a board of commissioners for the sale of school and university lands and for the investment of the funds arising therefrom with such powers and duties as may be prescribed by law, and the statutes authorize the state land board to make rules for the transaction of its business, and to decide all questions of priority of settlement, etc., and other disputes between applicants for the purchase of school lands, and provide that all its acts and decisions as to the legal title shall be final as to the right to a deed from the state. Such board is the state's instrument for the sale and disposition of the state school lands, and its decisions with reference to who is entitled to a patent prior to the issuance thereof are not subject to review by the courts. the state officers until the selection of them by the state has been approved by the proper officer of the United States.[53] Under the Kansas statute, providing that all school lands may be sold in the manner provided, it is competent for the officers of a county to sell school land lying in an unorganized county attached thereto for judicial purposes.[54] Under the provision of the Wisconsin constitution giving the commissioners of public lands power to withhold from sale any portion of the school lands when they deem it expedient, the commissioners may withdraw from sale school lands which have previously been offered at public sale.[55]

d. Sale of Leased Lands. The Kansas statute providing for the sale of leased lands contemplates that such sales shall be made during the life of the lease and subject to the existing lease,[56] and it is improper to inaugurate proceedings to sell land subject to an existing lease, when the lease will expire before the sale can be legally made.[57] Whenever a lease upon school lands has expired, proceedings to sell such lands to actual settlers are proper.[58]

e. Direction or Consent of Inhabitants. In some states the power to decide upon a sale of school land is vested in the inhabitants of the township in which the land is located, and it is a prerequisite to a valid sale that they shall direct or consent to the same,[59] by presenting a petition requiring the land to be sold,[60] or by an affirmative vote at an election held to determine the question.[61] Where Tankersly v. State Bank, 6 Ala. 277.

Time for contest of election.— If there has been an election in fact to ascertain the sense of the qualified voters as to the sale of the sixteenth section of the township, which an order of sale from the court provided for by the statute is a mere notification of the fact that no one has contested the election, and that there is no obstacle to a sale of the land, the officers empowered to sell may proceed to sell upon their own knowledge of the facts without such an order.[62]

f. Right to Purchase — (i) In General. School land can be sold only to persons qualified to purchase under the state statutes,[63] some of which extend the right to purchase such land to persons over eighteen years of age,[64] who are citizens[65] or have declared their intention of becoming such,[66] and who desire to purchase the same for their own use and benefit[67] and not for a speculation,[68] and have made no contract or agreement to sell the same.[69] In California the rule that land suitable for cultivation can be purchased only by actual settlers[70] applies to school lands.[71] In Louisiana the fact that one is an employee in the land-office does not disqualify him from acquiring scrips and warrants and a valid title to school land under them.[72]

(ii) Rights of Settlers. In some states a preference right to purchase is given to settlers on school sections,[73] and to persons residing on land selected is not contested within twenty days, and a sale of the land is actually made, all persons are concluded from contesting the validity of the election in a court of law. Tankersly v. State Bank, 6 Ala. 277. See also Mobile Branch Bank v. Tillman, 10 Ala. 149.

St. (1898) § 2337, providing that settlers who have resided on, occupied, or cultivated land granted to the state for school purposes should have a preference right to purchase the same, it is not necessary that a person shall actually reside upon the land in order to be an "occupant" thereof.

An intention to permanently establish a residence on the land is necessary to give the settler a right to purchase. Christisen v. Bartlett, (Kan. 1908) 95 Pac. 1130.

A settlement on lands while a lease thereof is in force gives the settler no preference by the state in lieu of school sections; [74] but a settlement upon and improvement of school land confers on the settler no legal or equitable right against the state,[75] and one seeking to purchase as a settler must comply with all the requirements of the statute in force when he presents his petition.[76] A settler's preference right is lost unless he makes application to purchase within the time limited by the statute.[77] On who has purchased a possessory right from an original settler is entitled to the same privileges and benefits under the Utah statute, as his grantor would have had had he continued in possession of the land, and not parted with his interest therein.[78] In Kansas the commencement of proceedings to sell land as leased land does not remove it from settlement or prevent a settler from obtaining the right to purchase; [79] and where land has been leased for a term of years and the lessee is in arrears and has abandoned the land, although no steps have been taken to forfeit the lease, one who enters upon the land the day before the lease expires is not a trespasser as against the state, and can acquire the rights of settler when his occupancy continues without interruption, and he makes valuable improvements with the intention of purchasing the land as a settler.[80]

(III) Priority of Application. As between persons other than actual settlers, the first applicant is ordinarily entitled to preference.[81]

(IV) Contests. In California the general rules established with reference to contests over the right to purchase state lands [82] are applicable in the case of school lands.[83] In Kansas the probate court is invested with jurisdiction to hear and determine whether a settler upon school lands is qualified and entitled to purchase the land at the appraised value, and its decision upon the facts duly submitted and upon every question involved is binding upon both the settler and the state unless appealed from.[84] No appeal or cost bond is required to perfect an appeal by the county superintendent of schools to the district court, in a proceeding to purchase school land instituted in the probate court by a settler,[85] and the county attorney cannot arbitrarily dismiss such an appeal over the objection of the county superintendent.[86]

g. Amount Which May Be Purchased. The state statutes usually limit the amount of school land which an individual may purchase,[87] and a certificate of right to purchase. Hopper v. Nation, (Kan. 1908) 96 Pac. 77.

Right to enjoin sale to another.— One who settled on school lands with intent of becoming the purchaser, and who placed valuable improvements thereon and occupies the land with his family, has such an interest in the land, aside from the public generally, as will entitle him to maintain an action to enjoin the county treasurer from selling the land. sale of more than the amount so fixed is void and passes no title.[88] But it has been held that one who has purchased the maximum quantity of land which he is authorized to purchase is not thereby disqualified from taking an assignment of a certificate of purchase issued to another person, or from receiving a deed in his own name for the land included in such certificate.[89] One who claims to have purchased school lands in tracts of less than forty acres must, in order to enforce his right as such purchaser, show that it was so subdivided by the county superintendent of public instruction and the appraisers.[90]

h. Price. It is not usually necessary that all the school lands of a state shall be sold at a uniform price,[91] but the price may be fixed by the state officers having jurisdiction over the sale of such lands.[92] In a number of states, however, the statutes have fixed a minimum price at which public school lands may be sold.[93]

i. Appraisement. In Nebraska the county treasurer, county judge, and county clerk are required, in appointing appraisers to value school lands for the purpose of sale, to act together or collectively; and an appointment otherwise made is invalid.[94] The board of educational lands and funds is vested with discretionary power in passing on the appraisement of school lands under an application by a lessee to purchase,[95] and where the board, exercising a reasonable discretion in such a matter, has determined that the appraisement is too low, and it appears that such judgment or determination is well founded, its order will justify the commissioner of public lands and buildings in refusing to execute a contract of purchase;[96] but an unreasonable refusal of the board to approve a fair appraisement does not justify the commissioner in refusing to execute a contract of purchase to which the lessee would otherwise be entitled.[97] Where land occupied by settlers is selected by the state in lieu of school sections, the settlers are entitled to have the land appraised separately from their improvements.[98] The Kansas statute [99] requires each legal subdivision of school land to be separately appraised prior to its being offered for sale.[1] It is the duty of the county commissioners of the county

to give their consent to the appointment of appraisers made by the county superintendent of public instruction in proper proceedings for the sale of school lands, when such appraisers are duly qualified and satisfactory.[2] Where two petitions are pending for the sale of the same tract of school land, one of which requests that it be sold as leased land and the other that it be sold to an actual settler, and appraisers are appointed and qualified to appraise the land as leased land, they cannot be compelled by mandamus to appraise under the other petition, the performance of such act not being within the scope of their duty.[3]

j. Terms of Sale. While it is sometimes required that school lands shall be sold for cash,[4] the more general method is to sell on credit or for part cash and the balance in deferred payments [5] of instalments of the purchase-price [6] with interest on the unpaid balance.[7]

Application must appear of record.—Where the books in the office of secretary of state fail to show the record of the application to purchase state lands required by statute, the presumption that public officers have done their duty is not sufficient to overcome the evidence that no application for such pur-

together with an affidavit showing the matters which the statute requires to be shown in relation to his right to purchase the land applied for.[10] The application to purchase must be in the form prescribed by the statute,[11] and must state that the applicant desires to purchase the land,[12] and give a description of the same by legal subdivisions.[13] The application must also be accompanied by the fee and deposit required by the statute in order to make it the duty of the surveyor-general to file such application.[14] The affidavit must state truly all the facts required by statutes regulating such purchases to be stated therein.[15] So in some states the affidavit must show that there is no adverse occupation of the land,[16] and that the applicant desires to purchase the same for his own use and benefit [17] and not for speculation,[18] and that he has made no contract or agreement for the sale or disposition of the land.[19] An affidavit by a female applicant for the purchase of school lands, which avers that she is entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name, is not void under a statute declaring that, where the applicant is a female, the affidavit must "show" that she is entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name, where on a contest for the land it appears that she is unmarried.[20]

invalid if it is unapproved at the end of six months, unless approval has been demanded, or the contest has been referred, or such reference has been demanded.[24] In Wisconsin the mere filing of the application to purchase does not constitute a contract between the applicant and the state or vest any exclusive right of purchase in the applicant until his application is approved and he pays or tenders the purchase-money or otherwise complies with the conditions of the sale.[25]

(IV) Rights of Applicant. The Utah statute providing that when a qualified person makes application in writing for the selection of any tract of land in satisfaction of a grant to the state, the board of land commissioners "may select and contract to sell the same" does not make it the duty of the board to so select the same and contract to sell the land applied for, but leaves the matter to their discretion,[26] and the applicant acquires no vested rights until the lands are selected, and the price and terms of sale are fixed by the land commissioners, and a contract of sale containing the stipulations agreed upon is executed.[27]

m. Conduct of Sale. Under some statutes the sale of school land is required to be at public auction;[28] but other statutes permit such land to be sold at private sale;[29] and it is sometimes required that the lands be first offered at public auction, and if they are not sold, they may then be disposed of at private sale.[30] In Colorado the state board of land commissioners is not required to perform the details incident to the sale, nor to be personally present thereat, and it may direct its register to perform all such acts without in any manner surrendering or delegating its trust functions.[31] The Washington statute requiring county commissioners to make sales of school lands, and providing for payment for their services and necessary expenses, does not authorize them to incur expenses for auctioneers.[32] In Kansas notice of the sale of leased lands must be published at least one year prior to the sale.[33] The provision of the Colorado statute that sales "shall be advertised in four consecutive issues of some weekly newspaper of the county in which such land is situated," and in such other papers as the board of land commissioners may direct, does not make it necessary for the board to designate the county newspaper in which a sale of school lands shall be advertised.[34]

n. Reports, Returns, Records, and Confirmation. In Alabama it is not essential to the validity of a sale of school lands that the commissioners should return the particulars of sale to the county court.[35] In Arkansas the sale must be

What constitutes an offering for sale.—A proclamation of the governor, although published for the time and in the manner prescribed by law, is not sufficient to constitute such an "offering for sale" of the seminary lands under the Arkansas act of Dec. 28, 1840, by the governor, as to subject the land, if not sold, to be entered at private sale at the graduation prices, but the land must have been regularly proposed for sale to the highest bidder by the crier of the sale on the day designated for the sale in the proclamation. reported to the county court, which may confirm or reject the same;[36] but the jurisdiction of the court is confined to protecting the inhabitants against a sacrifice of the land,[37] and any act of the court amounting to a prohibition of the sale is a violation of the rights of the inhabitants and contrary to the statute.[38] Consequently, upon rejecting a sale, it is the duty of the court to order a resale.[39] Under the Washington statute a sale of school lands must be reported to the board of appraisers,[40] who are to confirm the same if they are satisfied that the land would not, upon a resale, bring an advance of twenty-five per cent,[41] and it is held that under these provisions the power of the board to refuse confirmation and order a new sale is discretionary,[42] and the board cannot be compelled to order a new sale even at the instance of one who offers an advance of twenty-five per cent on the price realized.[43] In Wisconsin it is not essential to the validity of a sale of school and university lands by the commissioners that they should make, sign, and cause to be recorded a statement of the sale;[44] and it has been held in Illinois that the validity of a sale of school lands, legally and fairly made, is not affected by the neglect of the school commissioners to keep the books and records required by statute.[45]

o. Certificates of Purchase. A sale or contract for the sale of school lands is, in a number of states, evidenced by the issuance to the purchaser of a certificate of purchase,[46] which must be issued by the officer designated by the state statute.[47] Where a statute requires commissioners selling lands to give a certificate of sale upon payment therefor in cash, but does not prescribe the form and contents of the certificate, it is for the commissioners to prepare a certificate which shall comply with the requirements of the law.[48] A certificate of purchase issued by the state land office before the acceptance by the proper officer of the United States of the land as a part of the grant to the state is subject to such acceptance.[49] If a certificate of purchase is not absolutely void it cannot be attacked collaterally,[50] and while such a certificate is in full force and effect the state land department cannot entertain an application by another person to purchase the land, or take any step looking to the sale of such land to another person.[51] Although a certificate of purchase does not divest the title of the state,[52] it is prima facie evidence of title in the holder as against other persons;[53] but it is not conclusive of title in the holder, and is no bar to an action to contest the right of the holder to purchase such lands,[54] and in an action of ejectment such a certificate may be impeached by a defendant who is in the actual occupation of the premises, by showing that the person to whom the certificate was issued was never legally entitled to purchase the land.[55]

p. Validity and Effect of Sale. A sale of a school section, pursuant to the state statute, is binding on the inhabitants of the township.[56] After a lapse of forty years it will be presumed that a sale of school lands was regularly made and valid.[57] The acceptance by the county treasurer of the purchase-price of school land under color of a void sale does not bind the state to issue a patent for the land.[58]

q. Purchase-Money and Payment or Recovery Thereof — (i) In General. Payment of the purchase-money should be made to the officer designated by the statute to receive payment,[59] but a payment made to the wrong officer operates as a discharge of the purchaser's obligation, where the officer to whom the money is paid turns it over to the proper officer.[60] Where interest on the unpaid balance on a certificate of purchase of school lands has in fact been seasonably paid to and accepted by the state, it is no ground of attack on a title claimed under the certificate that the payment was made by persons other than the purchaser, whether claiming under him or not.[61] Where, at a sale of school lands, a lot is in form struck off to one person with the understanding that another is to become the purchaser, and the second person carries out the agreement by having his name entered as purchaser, and pays the ten per cent of the purchase-price required to consummate the sale, he cannot avoid the contract on the ground that Laughlin v. McGarvey, 50 Cal. 169.

Certificate of location of college scrip.— The original certificate of the register of a land office of the United States of the location of agricultural college scrip upon land within his district is prima facie evidence of title in the person locating it, and is not overcome by a showing that scrip of the same number was located on another tract of land. he was not in fact the purchaser at the sale.[62] In Kansas, after the probate court has adjudged that a person is entitled to purchase school land, it is the duty of the county treasurer to receive the purchase-money when tendered by such person and to give him a receipt therefor.[63]

(II) School-Land Warrants. In California school land warrants issued by authority of the state are receivable in payment of the purchase-money of any part of the five hundred thousand acres granted to the state for school purposes.[64] In Nevada school-land warrants can be used only in the purchase of school sections or lands selected in lieu thereof, and not in the purchase of other lands.[65]

(III) Interest [66] on Unpaid Purchase-Money [67]—(A) In General. A school commissioner who is authorized to sell school lands upon a credit may contract with the purchaser for the payment of interest;[68] but a statute authorizing the computation of interest at the rate of twenty per cent per annum on money loaned by the school commissioners, where the same is not paid when due, does not apply to money due upon notes given for the purchase-money of school lands.[69]

(B) Liability of County. Under a statute requiring one fourth of the purchase-price of school land, sold by county authorities, to be paid, with the interest on the residue for one year, in advance, and the residue in ten years, with interest in advance, deferred payments to be regarded as part of the school fund, and reported as such to the superintendent of public instruction, the county has been held liable for the interest on the whole purchase-money, although the purchaser defaulted in the payment of the deferred instalments, and the land was forfeited.[70]

(IV) Recovery of Purchase-Money. Where the parties, intending to execute a sale of school land, made a mutual mistake whereby the purchaser obtained a deed for the land on payment of a less sum than was due, a cause of action thereby accrued to the state, after the sale was so executed, to recover the residue of the money.[71] A plea by the purchaser in an action for the purchase-money, which sets up the cancellation of the contract of sale by the consent of the

Tender after forfeiture proceedings.—Where an assignee of an original or prior certificate of sale of school lands tenders to the county treasurer payment of delinquent interest on such certificate or delinquent taxes on the land, the treasurer must receive and receipt for it, although he may know that forfeiture proceedings have been had to bar the rights of the certificate holder, and that the land had been resold, and may believe the second purchaser has the better title, for the treasurer is an executive officer without judicial powers and has no power to decide, as between rival claimants, which has the better title to the land. Loan of purchase-money.— Where a piece of school land was sold and a receipt given to the purchaser for the price, and a note for the amount was executed by third persons and secured and approved by the county commissioners, it was held that if, at the time of the sale and the execution of said note, it was understood by all the parties, the purchaser, the school treasurer, who had power under the statute to lend on good security money received from the sale of school lands, the county commissioners, and the makers of the note that the land was paid for, and that said note was given for money loaned by the school treasurer to the parties executing the note, and all was done in good faith, a subsequent failure to pay the note would not work a forfeiture of the purchaser's right to the land; as it was not absolutely necessary, in a transaction like the foregoing, that the money should pass from the purchaser to the school treasurer, and then from the school treasurer to the makers of the note, in order to make the transaction valid. Notice to all parties in interest necessary.— Where an assignment of two persons jointly of the certificate of purchase and rights of the original purchaser of school lands is

Louisiana it is held that when notes for the credit portion of the price of school land are made payable to the state treasurer, that officer may bring suit for the rescission of the sale for non-payment of such notes, and stand in judgment for the state,[90] and that the board of school directors of a parish are without authority to bring suit for revendication, unless empowered to do so by a legislative act.[91] In California in an action by the state to foreclose the interest of a purchaser of school lands for default in the payment of instalments of the price, publication of summons must be based on an affidavit and order of publication, as in other cases,[92] and the expense of publishing the summons must be taxed in the costs, and if the judgment therefor cannot be collected by execution out of defendant's property, the cost of the publication must be paid by the state out of the general fund.[93]

(III) SAVING OF RIGHTS OR WAIVER OF FORFEITURE. In Kansas a purchaser of school lands who is in default may save his rights by paying the delinquent interest and taxes at any time before the forfeiture is actually enforced by proper proceedings,[94] and in Wisconsin, where school lands are to be resold for a non-payment of the purchase-money, the purchaser may claim the Knott v. Tade, 58 Kan. 94, 48 Pac. 561.

Sufficiency of notice.— Kan. Gen. St. (1897) c. 65, § 26, requiring the county clerk to include in notice of interest due on public land certificates all tracts sold to the same purchaser on which there is default, does not require each forty acres to be referred to separately; they being all included in one certificate, and in one comprehensive description. Scott v. Flinn, (Kan. App. 1898) 55 Pac. 675.

Defective notice or return.— A forfeiture of the rights of a purchaser of school land is based on the written notice of default issued by the county clerk and the return of the sheriff showing the time and manner of service on file in the county clerk's office, and where these fail to show legal notice to the purchaser, there is no forfeiture; and in a proceeding to compel the treasurer to accept the money tendered by a purchaser to pay delinquent interest and taxes, oral proof to show that the notice was sufficient in fact, or to amend the return of service, is not admissible. Spencer v. Smith, 74 Kan. 142, 85 Pac. 573. Where the return of a sheriff on notice of default in payment fails to show that it was served on all persons in possession of the lands, as required by Kan. Gen. St. (1901) § 6356, a forfeiture cannot be predicated thereon. Phares v. Gleason, 73 Kan. 604, 85 Pac. 572. A sheriff's return of service of notice of forfeiture of school-land contracts which states that he "found no one in possession" of the land is not a finding or return that no one was in possession, and a forfeiture cannot be based upon such a return. True v. Brandt, 72 Kan. 502, 83 Pac. 826. A return by the sheriff that he posted the notice of default of payment in the county clerk's office, when the statute requires it to be posted "in a conspicuous place" in such office, is insufficient. Knott v. Tade, 58 Kan. 94, 48 Pac. 561.

Amendment of return.— An officer serving notice of interest due on public land certificates may correct his return so as to show service on the party in possession of the land, as required by Kan. Gen. St. (1897) c. 65, § 27. Scott v. Flinn, (Kan. App. 1898) 55 Pac. 675.

Constructive notice.— Before constructive notice to the purchaser of school land is warranted, in proceedings to enforce forfeiture, the sheriff's return must show that the purchaser cannot be found, and that no person is in possession of the land, and a return stating that the purchaser was not found is not sufficient. benefit of his contract, at any time before the resale, by paying the principal, interest, and costs, with five per cent damages on the purchase-money.[95] The Oregon statute providing that the holder of a certificate of sale of public lands theretofore issued might pay up arrears of interest within six months of the date of the act, and that all forfeitures of the certificate were suspended for such period, waived a forfeiture of the certificate only so far as one existed at the date of the act for default in payment of interest, and did not waive a forfeiture for default in payment of interest thereafter accruing;[96] but the state land board in Oregon has power to waive a forfeiture for the non-payment of interest within the time limited.[97]

(IV) Liability of Purchaser After Forfeiture. When the statute provides for an absolute forfeiture, such forfeiture discharges the purchaser's liability on his undertaking for subsequent payments;[98] but under a statute providing that if the purchaser should "fail to pay two installments of interest upon said purchase-money, he shall forfeit said purchase, and it shall be the duty of the collector to offer such land for sale again as soon as practicable after such forfeiture, as in other cases under this act," it has been held that such a default by a purchaser of school land does not rescind the contract, but the purchaser remains liable for the amount of the purchase-money unpaid.[99]

(V) Resale — (A) In General. The state statutes generally provide for a resale of forfeited land,[1] and a resale is not invalidated by the facts that at the time of sale, the land had been marked "Redeemed" on the books of the office, and that a receipt to that effect had been given to the certificate holder, where this was done by mistake, and it had not in fact been redeemed.[2] A sale in chancery by the state to enforce its lien for the purchase-money for school lands, made after the lands had been forfeited for taxes, passes the whole title to the purchaser, free from the tax lien.[3] Where the commissioners agreed to reserve from a sale of forfeited school lands certain tracts which the purchaser wished to redeem, but by mistake of their clerk the lands were put upon the sales book and sold, but before the last day of the sales the original purchaser paid the redemption money for all but one of the tracts, and the commissioners declared the resales rescinded, it was proper to refuse to give certificates of sale to the purchaser at the resale, although he had deposited his purchase-money with the state treasurer.[4] An attempted resale of school lands to which the rights of a prior purchaser have not been legally forfeited is without authority of law.[5]

(B) Notice of Resale. A sale of school land for unpaid purchase-money pursuant to a notice in all respects as required by the statute is not void in law merely because another and defective notice for the same sale, on another day, was published in another paper.[6]

(C) Conduct of Resale. A statute providing that the order of sale at auction of school lands shall be to begin at the lowest number of sections, townships, and ranges in each county, and proceed regularly to the highest, until all then to be sold are offered for sale has been held to apply only to the first sale and not to refer to or regulate sales of forfeited lands.[7]

(D) Liability of Purchaser For Deficiency.[8] A condition that, if the vendee fails to comply with the terms of sale, the land may be resold at his risk is proper, and is enforceable after a legal resale;[9] but if the land is resold for less than the minimum price fixed by statute, the first purchaser cannot be held liable for the difference between the amount of the first and of the second sale.[10]

(E) Disposition of Surplus. Where school lands, which the statute authorizes to be taxed immediately after sale thereof, revert to the state and are afterward resold by the state, the payment of the taxes charged thereon may be made out of the proceeds of the resale after the payment of the balance of the original purchase-money.[11] In Indiana, if the resale produces more than is sufficient to pay the amount due, with interest and penalties, the excess must be paid over to the purchaser or his legal representatives.[12]

(F) Setting Aside Resale. Where the agent of a person holding a certificate of sale of school lands paid the annual interest in due time, but failed to specify the object of the payment so as to be understood by the state treasurer, or to deliver to him the receipt obtained from the secretary of state, and in consequence such payment was not entered on the treasurer's books, and the land was resold as forfeited, it was held that the commissioners of school and university lands, upon ascertaining the mistake, were authorized to declare the resale void.[13]

s. Abandonment. In Kansas it is held that the equitable interest in school land acquired by a purchaser under a certificate of sale is not lost by mere abandonment,[14] but in other states a different view has obtained.[15]

t. Attack on and Setting Aside Sales. In Illinois only the school trustees can question the title of a purchaser of school land on the ground that the statutory provisions regarding the sale of such land were not complied with,[16] and in Arkansas one who is not an inhabitant of the township or county where school lands are located cannot object to a sale thereof.[17] In Louisiana the residents and taxpayers of a township in whom is vested the title to the sixteenth section granted by the general government for the maintenance of the schools may sue to annul an illegal sale of the section by the parish treasurer,[18] without tendering to the adjudicatee the amount of the purchase-money which was paid by him, and which has been paid into the state treasury to be held by the state in trust for the township.[19] But in Kansas before the state can bring suit to annul a contract for the sale of school land held by an innocent assignee, for irregularities or non-compliance with the statutory requirements for a sale, it must do equity by paying or tendering back the purchase-money received under the contract.[20] In Oregon the state land board, on receiving information that an application for the sale of state school lands was fraudulent, has power, notwithstanding the receipt of a portion of the purchase-price, to institute a hearing on notice, and on proof of the fraud to decline to issue a deed,[21] and its decision is not reviewable by the courts.[22] Where fraud and illegality are charged as the grounds for the cancellation of a contract for the sale of school lands, the specific facts constituting the fraud and illegality must be set forth.[23] Where a township has received a part of the purchase-money of school lands and interest for several years on the balance, and has expended the money for the purposes contemplated by the grant, and the purchaser has taken possession of the lands and made valuable improvements thereon, the township must be deemed to have acquiesced in the sale and is estopped to deny its validity;[24] and it has also been held that certificates for the purchase of "agricultural college lands" will not be canceled, on the ground of fraud, where there has been a prior controversy over the same certificates, and a settlement of it by the payment of money by the person holding the certificates, and the settlement has been approved by the land board.[25] One excepting to a sale of school lands cannot, on appeal to the circuit court, question the authority to make the sale, where the exceptions do not raise such question.[26]

u. Patents [27] and Deeds [28]— (I) When Issued. A patent or deed is usually not issued for school land until it is fully paid for.[29]

Insufficient allegations.— Where, in an action to set aside a contract and cancel a certificate evidencing a private sale of school land to a settler, which had been assigned to another, it was alleged that all of the persons who signed the petition requesting a sale of the school land were not legal householders, and also that the appraisers appointed to appraise the land were not disinterested householders, but it was not averred or claimed that the officers acted dishonestly in determining the sufficiency of the petition or in appointing appraisers, or that the assignee of the school land contract had any knowledge of any incompetency on the part of the petitioners or appraisers, nor that he had any notice of any irregularities in the proceedings preliminary to the sale, it was held that the defects mentioned were not sufficient grounds for the cancellation of the contract in the hands of the assignee. (III) Person Entitled to Receive Patent. In California, where school land has been sold by the state and certificates of purchase issued on part payment of the purchase-money, and such land has been subsequently sold under execution and a sheriff's deed issued therefor, the grantee in such deed is entitled to a patent for the land on making full payment therefor.[32]

(IV) Validity of Patents. A patent for school land is not invalidated by irregularities in the sale or the proceedings leading up thereto,[33] nor does the fact that a patent, reciting that it is issued under a particular statute, does not refer to later statutes by which such statute was materially amended, render the patent void.[34] Ordinarily a patent for land which has been previously sold to another person who has paid the entire purchase-price, with interest and taxes, is void and confers no title on the patentee;[35] but where a patent is issued to a purchaser and sent to the school commissioner, who returns the same, requesting that the patent be issued to an assignee, a second patent to the assignee will be good.[36]

(V) Effect of Patents. A patent from the state cures defects and irregularities in the application to purchase,[37] and after a patent has issued it will be presumed, in the absence of fraud, that the necessary proceedings have been had to make the sale legal and valid.[38] As against the state and those claiming under it, a patent for school lands vests in the purchaser the legal fee simple title thereto,[39] which will prevail over an equitable title accompanied by possession,[40] and as against all the world a patent for school lands regular in form is prima facie evidence of title in the patentee.[41]

(VI) Attack on Patents. The decision of a board of school land commissioners as to the right to a deed, although final so far as the interest of the state is concerned, does not prevent another person claiming the land under the same law from showing, in a proper proceeding, that a deed made by the board was obtained through fraud or upon false testimony;[42] and where one claiming under a

Selection of land.— A patent from the state conveying, as school land, land outside of a school section, and uninterrupted and notorious possession under such patent for over twenty years, authorizes the presumption that a proper selection of the land conveyed was made before the state asserted title to it and issued the patent. patent for school lands from the state brings ejectment against persons who are in possession of the land as mining claims under locations made in accordance with the law and the local customs, defendants can contest the patent, as they are in privity with the United States.[43] The state is a necessary party to a suit to set aside a deed from the state to school lands,[44] and such a suit cannot be maintained by a private citizen having no interest in the land.[45] But where a sale of school lands has been set aside and the lands sold and patented to another, the latter may, upon the refusal of the first patentee to deliver up his patent, maintain a suit to have it canceled and to enjoin the holder from asserting any claim to land.[46] The failure of the holder of the beneficial estate to appear before the register of the state land office and contest the patentee's right to a patent does not conclude him from asserting his right.[47] In an action brought by a person in possession of school lands under a certificate of purchase to quiet his title against the holder of a patent to such land, the burden rests on plaintiff to show the invalidity of the patent.[48] A patent for school lands, valid on its face, is not subject to collateral attack;[49] but a patent which is void on its face may be attacked in any controversy.[50]

(VII) Suits to Compel Issuance of Patents. The state commissioner of public lands, being a mere ministerial officer of the state to execute its deed, is not a necessary party to a suit against the state to compel a conveyance of school lands.[51]

v. Title and Rights of Purchaser — (I) In General. A purchaser of state school lands derives title from the state and not from the United States.[52] A purchaser of school lands who has made the first payment and received a contract of sale has an interest in the land which is subject to execution.[53] Where the statute authorizing a sale of school lands imposes no condition upon the purchaser as to the manner in which he shall use the land, one who has purchased such land and paid a part of the purchase-money and given his notes for the balance and is in lawful possession, has a right to cut timber on the land.[54] Although the state may maintain an action against a purchaser in possession for cutting timber which he is prohibited by the statute from cutting,[55] an injury to the security is an essential element of such a cause of action,[56] and the state is not entitled to recover the full value of the timber cut, irrespective of the question whether there remains a sufficient security for the unpaid purchase-money.[57] One who purchases school land from the state does not acquire any title to timber cut therefrom by a trespasser before his purchase.[58] A purchaser of school lands is not bound to see the purchase-money

Sufficiency of evidence.— The facts that the certificate of purchase is prior to the date of the patent, that plaintiff is in possession of the land, that he has paid all the interest payments required by law, and that the balance of the purchase-money is not due, are insufficient to overcome the patent, where it appears that the land has been taxable for a considerable number of years, and no proof is made with reference to the payment of the taxes or with reference to the transactions between the patentee and the officers authorized to make sales of school lands on which the action of the governor in issuing the patent was based. properly applied, and hence his title is not defeated by an illegal application of the proceeds;[59] and if he purchases at a price for which the lands could be lawfully sold his title is not affected by the fact that the land was worth more than the price paid and would probably have brought more if sold at public auction.[60] One who has procured a location of land to himself, pending an appeal to determine the rights of the parties to a location of the land under the School Land Act, must be deemed to hold the land in trust for the successful party to such appeal and may be decreed to transfer the same to such party on being reimbursed his expenses.[61]

(II) Assignment by Purchaser. In some states a purchaser of school land may assign his certificate or contract of sale, and his interest in the land thereunder,[62] and the assignee acquires all the rights of the original purchaser;[63] but he does not take the certificate of sale as an innocent holder for value, and has no greater protection or rights than his assignor.[64]

(III) Sales For Taxes. In Kansas where school lands, on which only a part of the original purchase-money has been paid, are sold for taxes, the right of redemption from such tax-sale is limited to one year from the date of the certificate of sale;[65] and, if the original purchaser fails to redeem within such time, the holder of the tax-sale certificate, on payment of the balance due the school fund, and compliance with the other provisions of the statute in relation to sales of school lands, is entitled to a patent from the state.[66] In Washington, where the state has canceled a sale of school lands for non-payment of instalments due on the purchase-price a purchaser under a subsequent sale for county taxes acquires no interest in the lands.[67]

b. Establishment of Rules Governing Making of Leases. The legislature, on authorizing the leasing of the school lands, has the right to fix the terms on which a lease shall be made,[71] and a board on which the statute confers general powers with reference to the leasing of school lands has power to establish reasonable rules, consistent with the statute, for its government in the transaction of such business.[72]

c. What Constitutes a Lease. Where the statute grants only the power to lease school lands, a conveyance executed by the president of the board of supervisors of a county by authority of the board and in pursuance of the statute reciting that he thereby leases a section of school land for ninety-nine years to the highest bidder at a public sale of a lease of the section, and stipulating that the lease is made for a specified consideration, constituting a lien on the land leased, until payment thereof, creates a leasehold estate only.[73]

d. Area Which May Be Leased. The amount of school land which an individual may lease is sometimes limited by statute,[74] and where there is such a limitation, public policy forbids that another person shall lease and hold such lands for a lessee, and one who has a valid lease on school lands to the maximum amount permitted is estopped from claiming that another lease is held for him.[75]

e. Persons Entitled to Lease. In Arizona bona fide settlers who have placed improvements on school lands have a preferred right to lease the same,[76] and in Nebraska persons living on lands selected by the state in lieu of school sections must be given an opportunity to lease the land on an appraisement not including their improvements before being ejected therefrom.[77]

St. c. 80, § 1, passed in pursuance thereof, and is therefore valid.

73. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Harrison County, 89 Miss. 448, 42 So. 290, 873, holding that the provisions of the statute authorizing the leasing of school lands, which require the lessees to pay the taxes, and which give them the right to bring suit for waste, are not inconsistent with the idea that a conveyance of school lands for a term of ninety-nine years, made under such statute, creates a leasehold estate only. See also Hart v. Johnson, 6 Ohio 87, holding that a conveyance of school lands, under a statute directing leases to be granted for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, reciting the law under which it was executed, is to be construed a lease according to the statute, although in terms it imports a conveyance in fee.

g. Application For Lease and Acceptance Thereof. A statutory application for a lease of school lands, and its acceptance by the state and the issuance of a receipt in due form for an instalment of rent paid by the applicant, create an enforceable contract, where the antecedent conditions have been performed.[81]

h. Validity of Leases. Where the statute provides that no title shall vest in the lessee until the whole consideration is paid, a lease on which no money is paid is void and passes no title;[82] but a lease is not invalid because the entire consideration is paid in cash whereas the statute provides for payment in annual instalments.[83]

i. Rent and Recovery Thereof. It is the duty of the board intrusted with the leasing of school lands to lease them for the highest price possible and increase and protect by all honorable means the funds for the support of the educational institutions,[84] and the courts will not interfere with the board so long as it is faithfully performing its duty in this respect.[85] Under some statutes the rent of school lands is fixed with reference to the appraised value of the land,[86] and land leased for a long term of years is subject to revaluation from time to time.[87] Where a lessee of school lands knows of an irregularity in leasing them, and without any fraud on the part of the school trustees, acting as lessors, gives his note in payment of the rent, he cannot set up such irregularity in defense to an action on the note.[88]

j. Title, Rights, and Liabilities of Lessee. The title, rights, and liabilities of a lessee of school land are in general the same as those of a lessee of any other land.[89] In Oklahoma, by the law and regulations for the leasing of school lands,

k. Transfer of Lease. A lessee of school lands may assign or transfer his lease.[91]

l. Termination of Lease — (i) By Voluntary Act of Lessee. A lessee of school land cannot terminate his lease so as to throw the land open to settlement by any act of his own without the concurrence of the board of county commissioners.[92]

(ii) By Forfeiture. In Nebraska if a lessee defaults in payment of the rent his lease may be forfeited[93] after publication of the notice required by statute;[94] but the lessee is entitled to redeem the lease by paying all the delinquencies and costs at any time before the land is sold or again leased,[95] and it has been held that where no proceedings against a defaulting lessee have been taken, such lessee or his assignee, who is in possession of the leased premises, cannot be deprived thereof by a second lease, or a sale of the premises by the county authorities to a third person.[96] In Ohio it has been held that the trustees of the township, after suit brought for non-payment of rent and execution returned nulla bona, are authorized to enter on the land and sell all the right of the lessee in the lease,[97] and an entry to forfeit a leasehold for non-payment of rent must be for the entire tract leased, without references to subleases of a part.[98]

though the title was in fee subject only to termination at the end of the term, and where the value of the land was in the timber he had the right to cut and sell the same with all rights of action with respect thereto as a fee-simple owner.

Construction of statute.— A statute providing that lessees of school lands shall be vested with "the right, title, use, interest, and occupation of" the lands, must be construed as using these words in connection with the character of the estate which is authorized to be conveyed, which is a leasehold estate, and a lessee has only such right, title, use, interest, and occupation as go with a leasehold estate. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Harrison County, 89 Miss. 448, 42 So. 290, 873.

Presumption as to purpose of lease.— A lessee of a school section is conclusively presumed, in the absence of a stipulation in the lease to the contrary, to have taken the lease for agricultural purposes, and with only such rights as go with a lease of land, which do not include the right to cut and sell the timber thereon. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Harrison County, 89 Miss. 448, 42 So. 290, 873.

A lessee of school lands is liable for waste, although he holds under a ninety-nine year lease. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Harrison County, 89 Miss. 448, 42 So. 290, 873.

Recording assignment.— A statute providing that no assignment of a lease of school lands shall be valid unless it is entered of record in the office of the commissioner of public lands and buildings is intended by the legislature for the protection of the state and no assignee obtains any right, as against the state, until the assignment has been so recorded. Langan v. Binfield, 49 Nebr. 857, 69 N. W. 123. An assignment of a lease of school lands which was executed prior to the passage of Nebr. Act, March 5, 1885 (Laws (1885), p. 335, c. 85), is not affected by the provisions of that act requiring such assignments to be recorded in the office of the commissioner of public lands and buildings. St. c. 80, art. 1, § 16, that in the case of school land leases held by non-residents, "the forfeiture may be entered by said board after ninety days from the date of such published notice," has the same meaning as though it read "after ninety days from the completion of the publications required by the statute"); State v. Scott, 17 Nebr. 686, 24 N. An assignee of a lease whose assignment has not been recorded in the office of the commissioner of public lands and buildings, as required by Nebr. Comp. St. c. 80, art. 1, § 14, is not entitled to redeem from a forfeiture of the lease. Langan v. Binfield, 49 Nebr. 857, 69 N. W. 123.

4. Proceeds of Sales and Leases — a. State Control. A provision in an act of congress conferring on the state legislature authority to prescribe the manner in which lands granted to the state for school purposes by the same act shall be held, appropriated, and disposed of, relates only to the management and disposition of the lands themselves and cannot control the funds derived from sales or leases, and hence is not contravened by a provision in the state constitution with reference to the management of such funds.[99]

b. Uses to Which Proceeds Applicable. The proceeds of the sale or leasing of school lands form a trust fund for the establishment and maintenance of public schools and cannot be used for any other purpose.[1] Where congress has granted school sections directly to the inhabitants of the townships, or to the state for the use of such inhabitants, the proceeds of the sale or lease of school sections must be applied for the use of schools in the townships in which the respective sections lie;[2] but where the grant is a general one to the state for the use of schools the state is free to adopt such system, to be general in its character, as the legislature shall deem most beneficial to the people and is not bound to apply the proceeds of school sections for schools in the townships where they are located.[3] In Idaho the interest or income from the proceeds of the sale of the seventy-two sections of land granted for university purposes can be used only in the support and maintenance of such university, and in the payment of the current expenses thereof and charges for conducting the same,[4] and cannot be used for the erection or equipment of university buildings or buildings connected therewith.[5]

c. By Whom Proceeds Disbursed. In Indiana it has been held that money derived from the rent of unsold school lands belonging to the sixteenth section should be paid into the county treasury and be distributed by the county auditor, and a township trustee has nothing to do with its distribution, except as to so much of it as may be apportioned to such parts of his township as are within the congressional township.[6]

Expense of selection and sale.— Nev. Acts (1867), p. 165, § 17, providing for the selection and sale of lands ceded to the state by the United States government, and providing for the drawing of warrants on the general school fund for the expense of carrying out the act, was not in conflict with Const. art. 9, § 3, providing that the proceeds of lands ceded for school purposes should not be used for any other purpose. The actual location of the school, whether within the township or not, is immaterial, so long as the fund is applied for the benefit of the children who reside in the township. Bishop v. McDonald, 27 Miss. 371, holding that a statute allowing children to be admitted into schools in adjoining townships, when nearer or more convenient than any schools in the township in which they resided, and authorizing a payment to the township in which the children attended school of a proportionate amount of the fund belonging to the township in which they resided, was not in conflict with the act of congress.

The state is not bound to provide any additional fund for a township receiving the bounty of congress, no matter to what extent other parts of the state are supplied from the state treasury. Springfield Tp. v. Quick, 22 How. (U. S.) 56, 16 L. ed. 256 [followed in Davis v. Indiana, 94 U. S. 792, 24 L. ed. 320 (affirming 44 Ind. 38)].

d. Loan of Proceeds. In order that the funds derived from school lands may be made productive, the statutes in a number of states have provided for loans of such funds on good security.[7]

e. Recovery of Proceeds From Wrong-Doers. The state, having the legal title to funds arising from the sale of school lands by the board of land commissioners, is entitled to maintain an action against wrong-doers for the recovery thereof.[8] Where a commissioner, appointed to rent university lands, fails to report and pay over the rents, he is chargeable with interest.[9]

I. Swamp and Overflowed Lands — 1. Grant to States[10] — a. In General. In order to enable the several states to construct the necessary levees and drains to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands therein, congress has granted all such lands to the respective states;[11] and a subsequent act of congress has confirmed to the respective states all lands selected and reported to the general land office as swamp and overflowed land prior to March 3, 1857, so far as the same remained vacant and unappropriated, and not interfered with by an actual settlement under any law of the United States.[12] The selections so confirmed could not be set aside, nor could titles be obtained to any of the land which they embraced, unless it came within the exceptions mentioned in the act.[13] The original swamp land grant applied only to states in existence at the date of the act and states subsequently admitted acquired no rights under it,[14] but similar grants have been made by special acts of congress to some of the later states.[15]

b. When Title Vested. The Swamp Land Act was a grant in præsenti[16] by

7. See Kubli v. Martin, 5 Oreg. 436; Alexander v. Knox, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 170, 6 Sawy. 54, holding that in 1858 the only fund which a county treasurer in Oregon was authorized by law to loan was the common school fund in his custody, arising from the sales of sections 16 and 36 of the public lands of the territory, and in doing this he was the agent of the territory, the trustee of the fund, and not the county, and a suit to enforce the obligation of a note and mortgage given for a loan of such funds should be brought in the name of such treasurer.

Constitutionality of statute.— The Oregon act of Dec. 19, 1865, which required the county treasurers of the several counties to loan the school fund in their respective counties, provided that nothing therein should be construed so as to deprive the state of the right to control the common school fund created by the sale of school lands, was not in violation of Const. art. 8, providing that the governor, secretary of state, and state treasurer should constitute a board of commissioners for the sale of school lands and for the investment of the funds derived therefrom. Title of state not released.— There has been no act of the legislature of Indiana or act of congress which can be construed as contemplating a release of the state's title to any of the lands, to which title from the government had previously accrued to the state by virtue of the Swamp-Land Act, without compensation for the lands released. which title to the swamp and overflowed lands passed at once to the state in which they lay,[17] but which left it to the secretary of the interior to determine and identify what lands were and what lands were not swamp lands.[18] While it has been frequently asserted that the Swamp Land Act followed by an identification of the land passed the legal title to the states ex proprio vigore, without the necessity of a patent,[19] the correct rule is that the legal title passed only upon issuance of Presumption as to survey.— There is a legal presumption that all swamp lands were surveyed before their selection was approved by the general government. Cole v. Thompson, 35 La. Ann. 1026.

Survey as selection.— A survey of swamp and overflowed lands granted to the state by congress is a sufficient selection and identification of same to segregate them from the public domain, and render them liable to sale or entry as property of the state. Betz v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 52 La. Ann. 893, 24 So. 644.

ing such lands.[26] Where a government survey establishes the section corners, identifies the land, and determines its overflowed character it is sufficient to serve as a basis for the selection of swamp lands.[27] The act of a state in accepting a new and corrected survey as the basis of adjustment of its swamp land grant is tantamount to a waiver of any claim under the prior and erroneous survey.[28] A state or county surveyor, in surveying swamp and overflowed lands, should conform his survey in the field to the United States surveys of the adjoining upland, and connect with the lines thereof;[29] but if he does not do so, and the survey and stakes and marks in the field place a line between sections or subdivisions to the one side or the other of the United States survey, the courts will not inquire into the matter, but parties who purchase the lands on either side of the line are bound by this survey in the field.[30]

d. Land Included in Grant — (i) In General. The character of the land at the date of the swamp land grant determines whether or not it is within the grant.[31] The capacity of land to produce a staple crop as the result of cultivation

27. McDade v. Bossier Levee Bd., 109 La. 625, 33 So. 628, holding that the survey of a township by the general government is not insufficient for such purpose because the section lines were not run across the traverse of a so-called lake of about one thousand acres in extent, lying diagonally across the township and cutting off the corners of some sections and passing through the body of others, but not covering any section in its entirety, and because this water-covered area was not surveyed.

Survey as evidence of character of land.— The official platting of lands by authority of the United States, indicating the character thereof as swamp lands or lands covered by the waters of a lake, as the same appeared to the official surveyors when the original survey was made, is prima facie evidence as to their then character, in an action involving the question whether they were part of the public domain and subject to sale. Illinois Steel Co. v. Budzisz, 115 Wis. 68, 90 N. W. 1019, holding further that such prima facie evidence becomes conclusive after the lapse of a term of years so long that it is difficult to establish definitely, if at all, the conditions existing at the time of the original survey, and will not be so disturbed as to permit a finding contrary thereto upon the evidence of witnesses whose personal knowledge does not reach back farther than within ten years from the time of the original survey, and who do not agree as to the conditions during the time covered by their testimony. Where swampy land adjacent to a lake was surveyed by the federal government as bounded by the meander line of the lake, such survey is conclusive that the land is not a part of the bed of the lake. Brown v. Parker, 127 Mich. 390, 86 N. W. 989.

An irregular platting and listing of swamp and overflowed lands to a state, in conformity to the requirements of the act of congress relating to legal subdivisions of land, but bounding the land platted and listed by a meandering line which excludes from its limits the smaller portion of some legal subdivisions and includes therein the smaller portion of other legal subdivisions, is nevertheless a conclusive adjudication that all of the lands so platted and listed are swamp and overflowed, and that all of the lands excluded from the plat are not swamp and overflowed but belong to the United States. Bates v. Halstead, 130 Cal. 62, 62 Pac. 305, 80 Am. St. Rep. 70, holding further that if it be conceded that the land department made a mistake in the manner in which the land was platted and listed to the state, such mistake cannot be reached in an action by the holder of the United States patent to quiet his title therein as against the holder of a state patent, as such action involves only the legal title to the land patented.

Evidence as to remote time but not going back to 1850.— Evidence that land, at a remote time, before the prairie sod in the part of the state in which it was situated had been broken, was swamp land, is sufficient to show that it was swamp land in 1850, although the evidence does not go is the proper test as to whether or not it is swamp and overflowed,[32] and in applying such test the question is whether such crops can be successfully raised [33] and not whether they can be profitably raised.[34] Land which is unfit for cultivation in grain and other staple products by reason of the overflow is regarded as swamp land,[35] although a crop of grass may spring up there when the overflow subsides,[36] or although the land may be sowed in grass and mowed from year to year.[37] The fact that land is subject to periodical overflow does not of itself constitute such land swamp and overflowed; [38] but land which, although subject to overflow, is such that annually, after the subsidence of the waters, grain or other staple crops can be raised on it, cannot be considered within the meaning of the grant.[39] On the other hand land which is subject to overflow and requires artificial means to subject it to beneficial use is within the swamp land grant, although it may not be overflowed annually.[40] The swamp land grant was not limited to lands which might in the future be fitted for cultivation,[41] but included partly submerged islands.[42] Permanently overflowed swamps or shallow lakes, destined to become dry as the necessary effect of the building of the levees, in aid of the construction of which the swamp land grants were made, passed to the state under those grants.[43] Where there is no access to a lake except by land, and it is impossible to use it for purposes of travel or commerce, or for pleasure other than that of hunting, it is competent for the United States, by its survey and patent, to select and convey the lands beneath the waters of such lake as swamp and overflowed lands, and for the state to receive and convey them as such, without reservation or restriction.[44] Land which at the time of the Federal Swamp Land Act was connected with an island in a navigable lake, but was so low that it was ordinarily but a few inches above the water, and in times of high water wholly submerged, was swamp land, within the act, so as to pass to the state thereby.[45] Lands the selection of which as swamp and overflowed has been approved by the proper officer are segregated from the public domain and vest in the state, although they may have been, at the date of the Swamp Land Act, artificially covered by navigable water as a result of trespasses on the public domain.[46] The title to lands patented to a state under the Swamp Land Act cannot be affected by a resurvey by the United States.[47] The acts of congress confirming to the states lands selected by

by the secretary of the interior,[57] or, if not so approved, the tract must fall within the provisions of the confirmatory act of congress of 1857.[58] The listing of swamp lands by the secretary of the interior is a sufficient identification,[59] and the confirmation by the secretary of the interior of a list of such lands, made by a commissioner appointed by the governor of the state, is a substantial compliance with the statute and a sufficient designation.[60] When the secretary of the interior has failed to act on the lists of swamp lands and proof thereof filed in his office, or neglected to identify the land, the character of the land may be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, in a suit by a grantee of the state to quiet title thereto,[61] and it is competent for the grantees of the state, to prevent their rights from being defeated, to identify the lands in any other appropriate mode which will effect that object,[62] and a resort to such mode of identification would also seem to be permissible when the secretary declares his inability to certify the lands to the state for any cause other than a consideration of their character.[63] So also, where the plat of the government survey designates certain lands "wet marsh," but the particular legal subdivisions that covered such marsh have not been found, and the secretary of the interior has disclaimed power to decide con-

Parol evidence as to character of land.— If the secretary of the interior has not designated any particular tract as swamp land, and has not decided to the contrary, and neglects and refuses to act in the premises, it may be shown by parol, in behalf of the state or those claiming under it, as against wrongful claimants, that the land is in fact swamp land. cerning such land, the state may identify the land by a survey and take possession, or bring an action to recover such land, on the theory that the grant was certain because it could be made certain.[64] The presumption is that a register of a United States land office followed the instructions of the commissioner of the general land office with respect to the transmission of lists of swamp lands.[65] Where a state has elected to select the swamp lands to which it is entitled, and for that purpose has appointed an agent in each county to select all such lands in the county, and such agent has selected and reported lands, it will be presumed that the agent selected all such lands, and after thirty years such presumption is conclusive.[66]

(VI) DETERMINATION OF CHARACTER OF LAND. Whether or not any particular tract of land was or is swamp land within the terms of the swamp land grant is a question for the decision of the secretary of the interior,[67] and his determination and identification of the land is conclusive [68] in the absence of fraud or mistake,[69] except as against persons claiming under a paramount title,[70] and cannot be collaterally attacked,[71] or questioned or overthrown by parol evidence.[72] So land which the secretary of the interior has listed to a state as swamp and over-

A selection of swamp lands made by state officers under an act of the legislature was not binding upon the United States, unless approved and confirmed by the secretary of the interior, and gave the state no equitable title to or vested right in any of the lands so selected, which it could convey to another, where the selection has not been ratified and confirmed by the secretary. Under the act with relation to California, whether or not lands described in the approved plats of township surveys made under authority of the United States as "subject to periodical overflow" are "swamp and overflowed" lands, is a question for the decision of the land department and its decision is not reviewable by the courts. flowed passes under the grant, whether or not it is actually of that character.[73] But although lands have been listed to a state as swamp lands the decision as to their character may be reconsidered and set aside by the secretary or his successor in office at any time before a patent is issued.[74]

(VII) CONTEST OF RIGHT OF STATE. A proceeding instituted to contest the right of the state to land claimed by it under the swamp land grant is not conclusive as to the rights of a grantee of the state who was not a party to the proceeding, and was not served with notice of his right to appeal, as required by the commissioner of the general land office.[75]

(VIII) ESTOPPEL[76] OF STATE. A state or its grantee is estopped to set up that land inured to it under the swamp land grant, where it in effect procured such land to be certified to another person under a different grant;[77] but the state, having title to swamp lands, is not estopped to assert it as to the even-numbered lots, by accepting and approving a deed to the odd-numbered lots in settlement of a claim, by assessing and collecting taxes on the even-numbered lots, or by allowing improvements to be made, the title being equally open to the notice of all parties.[78] A state is not estopped to assert that lands were submerged and not swamp lands in 1850 by the fact that the state land office had approved a survey of the lands made over thirty years afterward showing them to be swamp lands, and had attempted to have it adopted as a government survey.[79]

e. Patent[80] to State. A patent issued to a state under the Swamp Land Act is conclusive against collateral attack,[81] and cannot be impeached in an action at law by showing that the land which it conveys is not in fact swamp and overflowed.[82] Letters patent from the United States to a state purporting to be in pursuance of the Swamp Land Act, which refer to the official plat of survey and describe the land as "the whole of fractional sections" therein enumerated, have been held to convey to the extent of full subdivisions the land under non-navigable water on which such fractional sections border, as appears from the meander line shown on such plat beyond which the survey did not extend.[83]

f. Protection of Swamp Lands and Rights Therein. Under the Missouri statute making it the duty of the attorney of the board of education when any of the state school fund has been diverted from its lawful use, to institute suit for collection and return of the fund to its legitimate channel, the power of the board's attorney is not limited to the recovery of misappropriated swamp lands, or funds arising from the sale thereof; but the board is authorized to employ him to assist in the defense of a suit by private parties against a county to set aside a decree in favor of the county, and to quiet title to certain of such lands.[84]

the balance, after this is accomplished, as a part of the school fund,[94] or for the construction of roads and bridges,[95] the erection of public buildings or school buildings for the use of the county,[96] or such other purposes as may be deemed expedient by the county authorities.[97] A statute granting to the various counties all the swamp lands within their borders does not pass to a county swamp land previously selected by a railroad company under a valid grant from the state.[98] Under a statute authorizing the conveyance of the swamp lands of the state to the several counties in which such lands are situated, lands lying in one county cannot be patented to another,[99] and a patent to a county may be avoided on extrinsic evidence showing that at the time of the patent the lands covered thereby were not situated within the county.[1]

3. Sale of Swamp Lands — a. Power to Sell. Under the swamp land grant each state became the absolute owner of the swamp and overflowed lands within its borders,[2] and has the power to sell and dispose of its swamp lands [3] in such manner and for such purposes as to it may seem most expedient.[4] In those states where the swamp lands have been granted to the respective counties, the power of selling such lands has also been vested in the counties;[5] but lands belonging to a county can be sold and conveyed only in the manner pointed out by the statute,[6] and a sale by a county in contravention of the statute governing such sales is void.[7]

Maintenance of swamp land fund.— A statute providing that the net proceeds arising from the sale of swamp lands, after deducting the expenses of draining and reclaiming the same, shall be paid into the county treasury, and become a part of the public school fund of the county, does not prevent the county from maintaining a fund in its treasury as a "swamp-land fund," since the money paid in on account of such land does not become a part of the school fund prior to the payment of draining and reclaiming expenses. b. Survey, Selection, and Patent to State as Prerequisites to Sale. It is a necessary prerequisite to a sale of swamp land that the land shall have been surveyed,[8] and segregated to the state as swamp land;[9] but it is held that a state has power to grant swamp lands within its borders, in trust or otherwise, before patent to it by the United States,[10] although such a grant amounts only to a quitclaim of the state's interest in the land,[11] and is subject to the right of the secretary of the interior to determine what lands are embraced within the provisions of the grant.[12] A conveyance by a county of swamp lands in violation of a state statute prohibiting the sale or disposal of such lands until title thereto is perfected in the state is void;[13] but such a statute does not render invalid a contract made by a county with attorneys, by which, in return for services rendered by the latter in securing and perfecting the title to swamp lands, it is stipulated that a portion of the lands shall be conveyed to them when the title to the whole is acquired.[14]

c. Land Subject to Sale. A certificate of purchase of swamp land which is by the statute excluded from the provisions relating to the sale of swamp lands is void;[15] but where a certificate is issued for swamp land which is at the time subject to sale, the purchaser's rights are not affected by a subsequent statute

An unauthorized survey by a private person is not sufficient. Maddux v. Brown, 91 Cal. 523, 27 Pac. 771.

State survey.— A patent issued by a state for lands sold by it as "swamp and overflowed" upon its own survey without the concurrence of the United States, and which describes the land as swamp and overflowed, is neither presumptive nor prima facie evidence that such was the character of the land as against one claiming under the United States. prohibiting the sale of such land, nor does such prohibition defeat his right to a patent.[16] Lands received by a county as swamp and overflowed lands or indemnity therefor are subject to be disposed of as swamp and overflowed lands, although they are not in fact such.[17]

d. Price. In some states the statutes forbid the sale of swamp lands for less than a designated price,[18] and a sale at a less price is invalid.[19] But a county court may, if it deems it expedient, sell the land for the minimum price fixed by statute, receiving payment by the construction of levees and drains by the purchaser at the full price of the land, the sale being in good faith, and not a fraudulent device to donate the land to the purchaser;[20] and in Iowa a county may devote its swamp lands to the purposes specified in the statute upon such terms as may be agreed upon without limit as to price, if the contract be approved by a vote of the people.[21] The fixing of a minimum price implies that a greater price may be demanded,[22] and hence mandamus will not lie to compel the land commissioner to issue certificates to one offering to purchase at the minimum price land worth double that amount.[23]

e. Terms of Sale. Swamp lands are usually sold for part cash and the balance in deferred payments.[24]

f. By Whom Sale Made. Sales of swamp land are to be made by the officer or board designated by statute for that purpose;[25] and the powers of such officers or board are derived from and limited by the statute,[26] and cannot be delegated unless the statute authorizes such delegation.[27] Where a county court having power to do so has authorized the sheriff to sell certain lands, he cannot sell lands not within the scope of the order giving him such authority.[28]

g. Appraisement. The statutes sometimes require an appraisement of swamp lands as a prerequisite to a sale;[29] but where a sale has been actually made, it will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the law was complied with in this respect.[30]

h. Advertisement of Sale. flowed lands which can be reclaimed and cultivated by an actual settler.[37] A person who has been authorized by special act of the legislature to purchase certain lands cannot be deprived of the privilege without any act or omission on his part sufficient to forfeit the same.[38] A purchaser of government lands whose purchase has been set aside and canceled because the lands were swamp lands, and who accepts and locates warrants on other land in lieu of the land so purchased, has no assignable interest in the land first purchased, within a state statute providing that, where a purchase of government land is canceled because the lands are swamp lands, the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, shall be preferred in their application to purchase the same from the state.[39] A county treasurer whose duties in respect to swamp lands are merely to receive payment of the purchase-money, whose amount and the conditions of whose payment are fixed by statute, and report the same to the register of the land office, is not disqualified to apply for and purchase such land himself.[40] Under the California statute requiring persons who desire to purchase swamp lands which have been segregated by authority of the United States, but not sectionized, to apply to the county surveyor for a survey and providing that a certificate of such survey shall be attached to the affidavit for purchase, where the survey was made on plaintiff's application, defendant could not defeat plaintiff's claim by making application for the land on a certificate of such survey issued prior to the certificate furnished to plaintiff.[41]

and improved lands adjoining the same,[43] provided they make application therefor within the time limited by the statute,[44] and make and file the declaration and affidavit required by the statute,[45] and make satisfactory proof of their claims,[46] and in all substantial particulars comply with every provision of the law upon which the right depends,[47] failing in which the right is lost [48] and the land may be sold to another.[49] In order to sustain a claim of the right to preëmption the claimant must be an actual settler [50] and show a substantial bona fide improvement, made with the intention of making himself a home or reclaiming the land for cultivation.[51] The right of the occupant to swamp lands will not be defeated by showing that, at the time of his original entry, the lands were in the market under the laws of the United States, so that he was technically a trespasser; [52] but the bare fact that an inconsiderable portion of a settlement or clearing happens to extend into a section of swamp and overflowed land, when the main body of the settlement, including the settler's dwelling, is upon land never donated to the state by the United States, does not authorize the settler to claim the swamp and overflowed section by right of preëmption.[53] It has been held that a widow having possession of swamp lands of her deceased husband, which are subject to preëmption, has the right to perfect the inchoate title, but is a trustee of the fee for the benefit of his estate, subject to her right of dower.[54] Where a county judge has issued preëmption certificates to each of two claimants of the same land, the first recipient, in a suit to remove the cloud from his title, need not allege or prove the facts which were necessary to constitute or prove his right, and which should have been shown to and adjudicated upon by the county judge.[55]

person to do so;[56] but in California, although a person shows no right in himself to purchase swamp land, and does not in any way connect himself with any claim thereto, he may nevertheless contest the right of another person to purchase such land.[57] In Arkansas the auditor and governor constitute a quasi-judicial tribunal empowered to hear and determine the question as to who is entitled to swamp land,[58] and to execute their judgments by issuing patents or deeds of the state to persons whom they find to be entitled to the land.[59] In California the district courts have no jurisdiction to determine a contest as to the right to purchase swamp and overflowed lands unless the contest arose in the office of the surveyor-general,[60] and a demand was made by one of the parties that a trial be had in court [61] or in the judgment of the surveyor-general a question of law is involved;[62] and the surveyor-general has no authority to refer a contest between applicants for the purchase of such lands to the district court for trial until six months after the land has been segregated as swamp and overflowed by authority of the United States or of the state by legislative enactment.[63] In a contest over the right to purchase swamp land, each party is an actor and must allege and prove all the facts entitling him to purchase, in order to be awarded that right.[64] The complaint of a contestant for the purchase of swamp and overflowed lands is subject to the ordinary rules of pleading;[65] and must set forth the facts upon which the complainant relies to sustain his claim of right of purchase if he desires to purchase,[66] and must also state facts sufficient to make a prima facie case to defeat defendant's right before defendant can be required to answer.[67] If the complaint fails to do either, a demurrer thereto should be sustained,[68] but otherwise it is incumbent upon defendant to show in his answer that he is entitled to purchase the land.[69] The court cannot ignore the character of the land or the Allegations as to filing of affidavit.—A complaint in a contest as to the right to purchase swamp lands must allege that an affidavit containing the matter specified in the statute was made and filed and set out the substance of such affidavit, and it is not sufficient to allege merely that an application was made in due form of law and filed. Reese v. Thorburn, 78 Cal. 116, 20 Pac. 131.

Insufficient complaint.— Where the complaint does not allege that the swamp and overflowed land sought to be purchased has been surveyed or segregated by authority of the United States, or that it is not suitable for cultivation, or that plaintiff is an actual settler thereon, it does not state facts sufficient to show any right in plaintiff to purchase. Polk v. Sleeper, 143 Cal. 70, 76 Pac. 819.

67. Polk v. Sleeper, 143 Cal. 70, 76 Pac. 819.

Insufficient complaint.— A complaint is insufficient to require defendant to answer thereto and set forth his right of purchase where it merely alleges that defendant's certificate of purchase was illegally issued and that no application for survey by him was recorded in the county clerk's office and that no affidavit and application were ever made as required by law. Polk v. Sleeper, 143 Cal. 70, 76 Pac. 819, holding that the latter averment was a mere conclusion of law and the complaint should have alleged wherein the affidavits for application were defective.

69. Ramsey v. Flournoy, 58 Cal. 260, holding that a mere denial of plaintiff's right to purchase the land claimed by him, without any allegation of facts showing a right in defendant, will not raise any contest between plaintiff and defendant, or give the latter any standing in court.

question of residence because no issues in regard thereto are made by the pleadings; [70] and so it is competent to show on behalf of an actual settler that the land in question, although granted to the state as swamp land, has been so far changed by natural causes as to have become suitable for cultivation.[71] The court must decide against both parties if neither is entitled to purchase; [72] and a judgment that neither of the parties is entitled to purchase the land or any part thereof is equivalent in its effect to a dismissal of the action.[73] Where a person made application to purchase swamp and overflowed land from the state, and three other persons made applications, each asking to purchase distinct parcels of the land described by the original applicant, and all three cases were referred to the same court, the fact that the court decided in favor of original applicant's right to purchase two of the parcels does not entitle him to a writ of mandate for a conveyance of the whole tract claimed, before the determination of the right to purchase in the third contest.[74] In Wisconsin on appeal from the decision awarding the right to purchase swamp lands, the claimant's statement and affidavit stand for his pleadings, and constitute the record of his claim, and may be read in full.[75] Under a statute providing that a person aggrieved by the decision of the county judge in a proceeding to preëmpt swamp land "may appeal therefrom to the District Court of the proper county, which shall have final jurisdiction over the matter, and shall make such decision in the premises, as justice and equity may require," no appeal will lie to the supreme court from the judgment of the district court.[76]

m. Consideration and Payment — (i) In General. A contract by a county for a sale of its swamp lands is not rendered illegal by the fact that a part of the consideration therefor is the bringing of actual settlers into the county,[98] and it has been held that a county may convey swamp lands in consideration of services rendered.[99] Where a statute authorizes a conveyance of swamp lands to a corporation on certain conditions, a substantial compliance with the statute authorizes a conveyance.[1] Payments on account of the purchase-price of swamp lands must be made within the time allowed by the statute,[2] and the time of payment cannot be postponed or extended on account of accident, mistake, neglect, or inadvertence,[3] nor can payment be received after such time has expired.[4] A contract between a county and one who had bid for swamp lands, whereby it was agreed that the bidder should not carry out his contract until the title of the county to all the swamp lands should be judicially determined in litigation then pending has been held to be invalid.[5] A purchaser of swamp lands cannot claim the right to pay the purchase-money, for which he has given his notes, in labor to be bestowed in reclamation of the lands except by being the lowest bidder at the lettings of the work.[6] Where swamp lands have been sold by the state and paid for in state bonds, afterward adjudged to be void, and a deed has been made and the lands have passed into the hands of innocent third persons, who have paid value for them, the state is estopped by its own grant to resort to the land,[7] but may maintain an action against its grantee for the purchase-price;[8] but the state may treat the supposed payment as a nullity and subject the land to payment of the purchase-price, where the contract is still executory, no deed having been made, but the purchaser or his assigns holding a certificate of entry,[9] or where the land, although patented, is in the hands of the original vendee, or of persons claiming under him otherwise than by purchase for a valuable consideration without notice that the entry money is unpaid.[10] Under the Missouri statute a county is not required to tender a deed before demanding payment of the amount due upon a purchase of swamp land or suing the purchaser for such amount.[11] Where the law under which a sale of swamp lands was made by a county authorized the taking of a bond as security for the purchase-money and reserved a lien to secure the bond, which the county had no power to relinquish, it was held that where the county sold land to one person, taking his bond, and the purchaser sold to another person who also gave a bond, which the county applied in payment pro tanto on the bond of the original purchaser, the county did not thereby lose or waive its lien on the land for the original purchase-price, and that subsequent purchasers necessarily took with notice of the rights of the county.[12] A judgment foreclosing the vendor's lien retained by a county upon swamp lands sold by it, filed before the rendition of a judgment in favor of the state, in a suit by it to enforce its lien for taxes upon the same lands, passes to the county whatever equitable interest the purchaser from the county had in the lands, and gives it a better title — the county not being a party to the suit by the state — than the purchaser at the tax-sale took therefrom.[13]

Certificates of entry of swamp lands are presumed to be good and regular,[15] and the burden of proof of fraud or irregularity in the issuance thereof is on the party attacking them;[16] and it has been held that the certificate of the land commissioners granting an application to purchase necessarily implies a finding that the applicant has the necessary qualifications,[17] which is not subject to review by the courts in an action between the certificate holder and a subsequent grantee of the land.[18] A patent certificate issued by a land agent after he has permitted another person to enter the land is ineffective,[19] and where two certificates of preëmption of the same tract of swamp land have been issued to different persons, a court of equity will cancel the one which was obtained through fraud, mistake, or erroneous proceedings.[20] A certificate of purchase of swamp lands does not ordinarily operate as a conveyance of the title.[21] The officer who issued a certificate of preëmption is not a necessary party to a bill to set aside such certificate.[22] A swamp land agent cannot be required to issue a patent certificate, except upon the surrender of the original certificate of purchase.[23] The registry laws of the state have no bearing upon a title to swamp lands by virtue of a certificate issued to a purchaser by the board of commissioners when the certificates are not required to be registered as notice to the world of their existence.[24]

o. Rights Acquired by Entries, Certificates, Etc. A mere certificate of the making of an application to purchase swamp land does not import a contract or give the applicant a vested right to the lands;[25] but where an officer having authority under the statute to sell swamp lands has sold the same and given the purchaser a certificate of purchase, the purchaser thereby becomes vested with the complete equitable title,[26] and a patent from the state is the only act necessary to vest in him the complete legal title.[27] So also the lawful entry of swamp lands vests an equitable title, with an absolute right to a patent, which a subsequent sale and patent to another cannot defeat.[28] The owner of a state certificate of sale of swamp land is entitled to possession of the land,[29] and to its rents and profits,[30] and is to be treated as the owner of the land,[31] as against all the world except the state.[32] He may maintain ejectment for possession of the land [33] or trespass against a wrongdoer.[34] Where one who had registered a claim for a tract of swamp lands agreed to accept another tract instead, this was a waiver of his equities as to the former, and the title of a subsequent purchaser was paramount.[35] Where the state has issued a settler's license under a statute providing for the settlement and drainage

Under the Oregon statute an application for the purchase of swamp lands, from the date of its receipt and filing by the land commissioner, constitutes a contract between the state and the applicant for the sale to the latter of the tract or tracts therein mentioned, with the right of immediate possession thereof, and on the performance of the conditions subsequent or payment and reclamation within the terms and requirements of the statute, the applicant or his assigns is entitled to a patent for the land. Repeal of statute before issuance of patent. — One who has purchased from the state and paid for a tract of swamp land, and complied with all the requirements of the law, acquires a vested right in the land which is not affected by a subsequent repeal of the statute under which he purchased before the issuance of his patent. of the swamp lands by actual settlers, it is a condition precedent to a sale to any one else of such lands that the commissioner of the land office should make a declaration avoiding the license.[36] Where, after a preëmption certificate is issued, another claim to the land is allowed and another certificate is issued, the first is the better in law and will prevail unless it is shown to be defective.[37] In an action by the assignee of a preëmption certificate against a county to quiet title to swamp land, the county may set up fraud in the procurement of the certificate,[38] unless it is in some way estopped to set up such defense.[39]

p. Reports and Records of Sales. In Arkansas it has been held that the report by the swamp land commissioners to the auditor is conclusive evidence of sales by them until impeached for fraud, mistake, or some other cause;[40] and the records of such sales in the swamp land agent's and auditor's offices constitute notice to subsequent settlers and purchasers.[41]

q. Revocation and Forfeiture. A contract for the purchase of swamp land can be canceled only in the cases provided for by the statute.[42] Under some statutes a failure to pay the purchase-money[43] or interest on deferred payments[44] within the time allowed by the statute ipso facto works a forfeiture of the land,[45] and the state may resell the land as if no purchase had been made;[46] but under other statutes such default merely subjects the purchaser to a judicial declaration of forfeiture,[47] and where the sum due is paid before entry of judgment forfeiting the certificate of purchase for non-payment of the price, the state holds the land in trust for the purchaser and cannot convey to another.[48] Where swamp lands once sold have been forfeited for a default in payment of principal or interest, the certificates of sale become utterly void,[49] and the right of action for trespass on the land, by cutting and renoving timber therefrom, is in the state until the land is resold.[50] A forfeiture which has been incurred by a failure to pay for the land within the time allowed by statute may be waived by the subsequent acceptance by the land commissioners of payment of the balance due.[51] Where a swamp land commissioner is without power to declare the forfeiture of a contract of sale of swamp land, a purchaser from such officer of lands previously sold to another is chargeable with notice of such lack of power.[52] In Arkansas it has been held that swamp land commissioners might revoke a sale of such land which had not become

Impairment of obligation of contract.— Where the statute under which swamp land is purchased allows purchasers a certain time within which to make payment of the purchase-money or instalments thereof, a subsequent statute forfeiting contracts on which payments have not been made in a shorter time is void because its effect is to impair the obligations of such contracts. complete;[53] but in Michigan after land has been sold the land-office commissioner cannot resell it unless the certificate of sale has been voluntarily returned or adjudged void by the proper court.[54] An order of the state commissioners of public lands, declaring a patent for swamp land void for fraud, is not a judicial order, nor is it conclusive as to the title of the patentee of the land.[55] Under proper circumstances bona fide purchasers from the first grantee may be protected against defects in the original sale or conveyance.[56]

r. Patents[57] and Deeds.[58] A state may issue patents for swamp lands at any time after the selection of such lands is confirmed.[59] The fee in swamp lands remains in the state or the county until the execution by the proper officer of a patent or deed as provided by the statute,[60] but when the patent for such land issues it relates back to the date of the sale.[61] A patent for swamp lands is conclusive evidence of legal title as against the state and persons claiming under it,[62] and prima facie evidence of legal title as against all the world,[63] and must prevail,

53. Walworth v. Miles, 23 Ark. 653 [followed in Gaster v. Gaines, 23 Ark. 712 (followed in Beckham v. Worthen, 23 Ark. 720)], holding that where a subcommissioner reported the measurement and estimates of the value of work done and furnished by a levee contractor, and the reports were confirmed by the board of swamp land commissioners, and the contractor then applied to enter certain lands in part payment of the sum reported due him for levee work, and received from the secretary of the board a certificate that he had applied to enter lands, and also a certificate of the balance due him after deducting the price of the lands, these matters did not constitute a complete sale of the lands so as to pass the matter beyond the control and revoking power of the commissioners, but they had authority to cancel the certificate on ascertaining the insufficiency of the levee work, of which they were the judges, the court saying that a sale by the swamp land commissioners was not complete until the lands were legally paid for and patent certificate issued.

No preliminary proof necessary.— A patent by the governor, under the seal of the state, unless a prior right or superior equity in the opposing claimant is shown.[64] In ejectment where both parties claim under deeds to swamp lands from the state or a county, the elder deed must prevail.[65] A patent for swamp lands issued by the state is prima facie evidence of all facts recited in it which are necessary to confer power to issue it,[66] and of the fact that all the incipient steps have been regularly taken;[67] but a state patent to a tract of land as "swamp" does not per se prove that the title passed to the state under the swamp land grants,[68] and it has been held that such a patent is not even prima facie evidence of the character of the land as against one claiming under the United States.[69] A deed to swamp land is not invalidated by an erroneous recital as to a matter which it is unnecessary to recite,[70] nor does the fact that such a deed contains an unauthorized covenant of warranty impair its effect as a conveyance of title.[71] A person claiming under a deed from a swamp land commissioner cannot ask the court to reject recitals therein as mistakes.[72] Where a state patent of swamp lands describes the land conveyed by subdivisions, according to the United States survey, and continues the description by giving the number of the swamp land survey, and saying that the land is more particularly described in the field-notes of the survey, and then recites the field-notes, the land conveyed is limited to that actually surveyed in the field, and described in the field-notes, even though the survey did not include all the land in the subdivision.[73] Where the channel of a river bordering on swamp lands was changed by a freshet after the survey but before the issuance of a patent calling for the bank of the river as a boundary, land which formerly bordered on the bank of the stream but was changed to an island by the freshet does not pass under such patent.[74] A conveyance of swamp lands by a county will not pass the right of the county to drafts or scrip given by the general government to the state, and by the state to the county, for swamp and overflowed lands sold by the general government after they had been selected under the act of congress.[75] Under some statutes the delivery of a deed for swamp lands is necessary to pass the title.[76] In Indiana a deed or patent for swamp land is required to be recorded in the office of the secretary of state and when so recorded is notice,[77] but it is not necessary

The failure to record a deed of swamp lands in the office of the secretary of state or proper that such instrument should be recorded in the county where the land is situated.[78] In Iowa a deed for swamp lands purchased of a county cannot be recorded so as to affect with notice a subsequent purchaser, unless it is executed as required by statute.[79] A patent issued without authority of law is void,[80] as is also a patent conveying as "swamp land," land which is a part of the five-hundred-thousand-acre grant to the state for internal improvements.[81]

s. Attack on Patents. A patent from the state to swamp land is not subject to collateral attack;[82] but may be avoided in a direct proceeding for fraud or gross mistake,[83] and where both parties to a suit to quiet title to swamp lands claim under patents from a county, either may attack the other's patent.[84]

t. Title and Rights of Purchasers. A person claiming title to swamp lands under a patent from the state is deemed to have acquired his title with full knowledge of the terms, conditions, and purposes of the grant by congress to the state, and to have accepted the title in subordination to the paramount right and duty of the state to cause such land to be reclaimed.[85] Where an act of the legislature has transferred swamp lands to a corporation upon certain conditions, a purchaser from the corporation is chargeable with notice of such conditions and of the failure of the corporation to comply therewith.[86] Where a state statute gave a certain person a right to enter certain swamp lands, but before the transfer from the United States to the state had been completed the claimant died, and immediately upon the completion of the transfer certain other persons who knew of his equities and had obtained quitclaims from some of the heirs, took patents to themselves claiming under such act, it was held that those who had notice of the claimant's rights took the title in trust for themselves and the remaining heirs, and it was decreed that they convey to the latter an unencumbered title to their proportion.[87]

Where a county contracted to convey its swamp lands to an emigrant company upon the latter's undertaking to convey all lands to which preëmption rights had attached to the holders of certificates, and although the land was never actually conveyed to the company, it conveyed to an individual on presentation of a fraudulent preëmption certificate, the grantee acquired no right as against the county.[88] Under the California statute a purchaser who has reclaimed his swamp land, or his assigns, is entitled to be repaid out of the swamp land fund for the work of reclamation his proportion of the amount which has been contributed to that fund.[89]

u. Disposition of Proceeds. The act of congress making the swamp land grant provides that the proceeds of swamp and overflowed lands whether from sale or by direct appropriation in kind shall be applied exclusively so far as is necessary to the reclaiming of the lands by means of levees and drains;[90] but it has been said that this provision is at the utmost the expression of a wish or desire on the part of congress as to the use of the proceeds and not a condition of the grant;[91] and that it is very questionable whether the security for application of the proceeds thus pointed out does not rest upon the good faith of the state and whether the state may not exercise its discretion in that behalf without being liable to be called to account and without affecting the titles to the lands disposed of,[92] and at all events congress alone has power to enforce the conditions of the grant either by a revocation thereof or other suitable action in a clear case of failure of the conditions.[93] As the application of the proceeds to the named objects is only prescribed "as far as necessary," room is left for the exercise by the state of a large discretion as to the extent of the necessity;[94] and the settled doctrine now is that the states have full power of disposition of swamp lands, and that the application of the proceeds to the purposes of the grant rests upon the good faith of the state, which may exercise its discretion as to their disposal,[95] and that title of a grantee is not affected by any disposition which the state may make of the proceeds.[96] The state legislatures have generally recognized the obligation to reclaim swamp lands donated to the state by the general government with that object,[97] but a purchaser of swamp lands cannot compel the appropriation of the proceeds to the reclamation of such lands,[98] nor can he interpose as a defense in an action for the purchase-money that the proceeds of sales have not been applied to the reclamation of the lands.[99] Where the state legislature has appropriated the proceeds of swamp lands to certain purposes, they cannot be diverted to other purposes by the state or county authorities.[1] A statute setting apart a certain portion of the proceeds of swamp land for the primary school fund is not an appropriation of the lands, but only of the proceeds of land actually sold, and does not preclude the state from making any provision deemed expedient concerning future sales.[2] In Missouri the trust in favor of the school fund with relation to the sale of swamp lands applies only to "the net proceeds of the sales," and does not run with the land, so as to charge a bona fide purchaser with the county's misapplication of such proceeds.[3]

v. Relief of Purchasers. Provision has sometimes been made by statute for the refunding of moneys paid by mistake on purchases as swamp land of land which could not be sold by the state,[4] and various statutes curing defective sales of swamp lands have been enacted from time to time.[5] Purchasers of swamp lands from a corporation created by statute to dispose of such lands have been held entitled, on failure of their title, to have refunded money expended by them in good faith in the payment of taxes and for the purchase of a tax title of the state.[6] A purchaser of swamp land who has received no patent is not entitled to a refunding certificate merely because the state has resold and patented the land to another; his remedy being against the patentee for the land itself.[7]

4. Statutory Grants of Swamp Lands — a. In General. Whether or not a statutory grant by a state of its swamp lands operates as a grant in præsenti depends upon the intention of the legislature.[8]

b. Appropriation For State Institutions. Swamp lands appropriated to certain charitable and educational institutions by a statute authorizing the setting apart of such lands "not otherwise disposed of prior to the passage of this act" can be lawfully set apart to such institutions only from the surplus of such lands over the amount required to fill grants made by the state prior to the passage of the statute.[9] Where the state land commissioner is authorized by statute to select swamp lands for the benefit of state institutions, a selection is not invalidated by a failure to apportion the lands in the certificate of selection to the several institutions for whose benefit they were selected.[10]

c. Appropriations in Aid of Internal Improvements.[11] In some states the legislatures have appropriated swamp lands in aid of internal improvements,[12] or provided for payment in swamp lands to contractors engaged in works of internal improvement,[13] and for the reservation of lands for the purpose of such payment.[14] Where a statute provides for the withholding of swamp lands from the market for the time specified in the contract, rights acquired by third persons after the expiration of such time cannot be affected by a subsequent extension of the contract in favor of the contractor.[15] Where one under contract with the state under an act of the legislature for public improvements obtained the right to make selection from certain swamp lands in payment thereof, it was no fraud on the state that he selected the most valuable lands.[16] Where an act of the legislature appointed certain persons to survey, locate, and construct a road, and provided that, on completion of the survey, ten thousand acres of swamp lands of the state within six miles of the road as located, on either side thereof, should be conveyed to them, it was held that in case of a deficiency in quantity of swamp lands within the prescribed limits, the parties had no claim on the state for other lands to make up such deficiency.[17] Where a state has appropriated swamp lands to a county for the construction of a road, the right of the county or its assignee to select lands which have been earned under the terms of the grant is not affected by lapse of time.[18]

d. Appropriations in Aid of Railroads.[19] Some of the states have appropriated swamp lands in aid of railroads,[20] but such grants are subject to the rule that nothing will pass thereby except what is clearly and manifestly intended.[21] A state grant in aid of a railroad of swamp lands, to be selected within ten miles on each side of its road, providing that if there was not enough of such land within those limits, the deficiency might be made up from any swamp lands in three named counties, has been held to be a float, the right of selection belonging to the state; so that before such selection was made the state had the right to grant any lands provided only that it retained enough to satisfy the prior grant to the railroad.[22] A provision in a grant to a railroad "that no lands shall accrue to the said company under this act, until all grants of swamp lands previously made shall be fully satisfied," was not intended to postpone the appropriation of any land to the railroad's grant until all prior grants had been actually filled by the selection of specific lands to their full amounts, but merely to provide that in case there were not enough lands to fill all the grants, including that of the railroad, the prior grantees should have their full amounts, and the railroad stand the shortage.[23] The counties to which swamp lands have been granted have also been sometimes authorized to appropriate such lands in aid of railroads;[24] but the power of a county in this respect is strictly limited by the statute,[25] and a county having no statutory authority to grant such aid cannot donate its swamp lands to a railroad under the guise of a contract for the reclamation of the lands.[26] Where a proposition for Reserved lien of state.— The swamp lands appropriated by Mo. Acts (1855), p. 314, to the construction of the road of the Cairo & Fulton Railroad Company were subject to the lien reserved by the state in its own favor to secure payment of the bonds issued by it for the benefit of that company, and passed to the purchaser at the foreclosure sale made under Acts (1866), pp. 107, 115, but those lands which had been conveyed by the counties in payment of subscriptions did not pass by the sale. Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290.

Determination as to compliance with conditions.— Under the Minnesota act of March 9, 1875, granting swamp lands of the state in aid of the construction of the road of the Duluth & Iron Range Railroad Company, the executive department of the state was vested with authority to determine not only as to the proper construction of the road, but also as to whether the route selected was in compliance with the act; and, in the absence of fraud, its determination of such questions in favor of the company, and the conveyance to it of a portion of the lands in accordance with the provisions of the act, were conclusive upon the state, not only as to the lands so conveyed, but as to all others earned, and to which the company was entitled, under the terms of the grant. Construction of statute.—A statute providing that any county through which a certain railroad may run, and every county through which any other railroad may run, with which the first road may be joined, connected, or intersected, is authorized and empowered to aid in the construction of the same or of such other road with which it may so connect, using its swamp lands for that purpose, does not require that the road to be aided shall be actually built before the county is authorized to give it aid, but the authority to construct the connecting road and the entering into a contract for its construction form a connection within the meaning of the statute so as to uphold a mortgage and conveyance by the county of its swamp and overflowed land in aid of such railroad. appropriating the swamp and overflowed lands of a county to aid in the construction of a railroad has been ratified by the voters of a county, a contract in accordance therewith, made with the company, cannot be construed as entitling the company to a cash indemnity paid by the government to the county for swamp lands sold before selection.[27] It has been held that an amendment to a state constitution, providing generally the manner in which "all swamp lands now held by the state" should be disposed of, did not operate as a forfeiture or resumption of a grant of swamp lands previously made by the legislature to a railroad company, although the company was in default under the conditions of the grant;[28] but it has also been held that the interest of a railroad in lands granted to it was revested in the state without the further act on its part, on failure of the railroad company to complete the last section of its road within the time limited by the grant.[29]

J. Grants For Internal Improvements — 1. In General — a. Grants of Public Lands. Congress has from time to time made various grants to states of portions of the public domain to aid in internal improvements,[30] and whether or not such grants are in præsenti is a matter to be determined according to the intention of congress, as evidenced by the wording of the statutes.[31] Such grants should be strictly construed against the grantee and pass nothing but what is conveyed in clear and explicit language.[32] Many of the grants have been for designated improvements rather than for such improvements generally, and as the construction of such grants is in most respects of little general importance, it is deemed sufficient to refer in the note to some of the cases in which the various grants have been construed.[33]

b. Grants of Proceeds of Sales. Congress has also granted to certain states for internal improvements a certain percentage of the "net proceeds" of public lands lying within the state and afterward sold by the United States;[34] but under such a grant the state is not entitled to a percentage on the value of lands disposed of by the United States in satisfaction of military land warrants.[35] In a proceeding by the state to recover the amount so granted the United States may offset a claim against the state on state bonds held by the United States.[36]

2. Conditions of Grant. Whether conditions annexed to a grant are conditions precedent or subsequent is a matter which must be determined by the terms of the grant.[37] A grant in aid of a road, subject to the condition that the road be completed within a limited time, becomes absolute upon the performance of the condition within the time limited,[38] and where the government has made a grant in præsenti to aid in the construction of a road, with a condition subsequent that the road be completed in a certain time, a construction of the road after the time limited in the grant, but before the assertion of a claim to a forfeiture, is sufficient to prevent a forfeiture.[39] A duty imposed upon the governor of a state by acts of congress making a land grant for the construction of a canal and harbor, and by the state legislation on the subject, to issue his certificate of the fact, when he shall be satisfied that the work has been done in conformity with the law, is not one of a purely ministerial character, where he is left to no discretion.[40]

3. Lands Included in Grant or Subject to Selection. Whether lands are within the limits or subject to the operation of a grant for internal improvements is not a question of fact within the rule which makes the consideration and judgment of the land department upon questions of fact final.[41] And the land department cannot enlarge the limits of a grant of land by congress, but its act in issuing patents thereunder for lands lying outside the boundary fixed by the grant itself is without validity to convey title, and the patents will be canceled at the suit of the government.[42] Under a grant of public lands to a state for the improvement of the navigation of a river, to be selected in alternate sections within five miles of the river, the fact that government and state officers, in plats and lists of lands elected, mistook a branch of the river for the main river, in consequence of an imperfect knowledge of the geography of the county, will not affect the validity of the grant as really made, nor subject the lands along the main river to a subsequent railroad grant, within the description of which they would otherwise fall.[43] A grant to a state of alternate sections of land to aid in the construction of a canal plainly implies a grant of a right of way for the canal through the sections reserved to the United States.[44] A grant to a state in aid of internal improvements does not include, or authorize the state to select, land previously granted to the state for other purposes,[45] or otherwise disposed of [46] or reserved [47] by the United States, or land which is occupied by a claimant who has acquired rights therein under the general land laws.[48] A decree in a bill in equity brought by the United States to avoid patents for internal improvement land on the ground of forfeiture is a bar to a subsequent suit against the same defendant to recover the same land on the ground that it was not included in the grant.[49]

4. Selection and Certification. Congressional grants are frequently of certain amounts of land to be selected by the state,[50] or by the land officers,[51] and such a grant does not attach to any particular lands until the selections have been made, and approved by the land department,[52] when the general gift of the quantity becomes a particular gift of the lands located, vesting in the state a perfect and

How amount of grant made up.—A grant by act of congress of four sections of the public lands to a state, for the purpose of fixing the seat of government there, to be located under the direction of the legislature of the state, in one body as near as might be, did not oblige the state to select four entire sections, but authorized it to select fractional parts of more than four sections to make up the amount of land granted. The only legal evidence of the selection of lands given to the state of Indiana by the act of congress of March 2, 1827, is a certified copy thereof from the office of the secretary of the treasury at Washington, unless it be made to appear that the original is no longer to be absolute title to the same.[53] A patent to the state takes effect as of the date of the location and selection of the land,[54] and the regularity of the selection cannot be questioned by one who does not claim under either the state or the United States.[55] Where an act of congress has confirmed to a state and its grantees certain lands erroneously certified to the state by the secretary of the interior under a prior grant for an internal improvement, the United States is estopped from asserting any claim or right to such lands.[56]

5. Disposal of Lands by State.[57] It is the province of the state legislature alone to determine the manner in which lands granted by congress to the state for internal improvements may be disposed of in furtherance of the purposes of the grant,[58] and its action in such matters is final unless in violation of some consti-found there. Doe v. Stephenson, 1 Ind. 115, Smith (Ind.) 20.

Survey a prerequisite to selection.—A state has no right to select and locate the lands granted it by the act of congress of Sept. 4, 1841, section 8, for internal improvements until after the lands have been surveyed by the general government. The approval of the United States land department of the list of lands to be transferred to Louisiana under the donation act of 1841 vested the title to those lands in the state, subject to any equitable right existing at the time to the lands, and there was not reserved to the land department the power to annul the vested title of the state by subsequently conferring on other parties an unconditional and conclusive title to the same land. Ludeling v. Vester, 20 La. Ann. 433.

Absolute sale.—Internal improvement lands of the state can be disposed of only by absolute sale, and a conditional sale thereof is unauthorized and void. Wright v. Burnham, 31 Minn. 285, 17 N. W. 479.

Proportion of lands to be conveyed.—When a state law confers on a ship canal and harbor company certain lands granted by congress to aid in the construction of a ship canal, and provides that, when the governor is satisfied that such company has done a specified portion of the work required in the construction of the canal, he shall certify the same, and in his certificate "shall determine the proportion of said lands the said company has become entitled to in consideration of said work," whereupon the commissioners of school lands shall convey by patent to the company "said proportion of said lands respectively as selected by said company," the proportion of such lands to be conveyed must be based upon the value, and not on the quantity. Lands which by an act of the legislature have been made a trust estate for the payment of certain bonds and placed under the control of trustees appointed by law are subject to the power of a court of equity to raise therefrom the money due and chargeable thereon, and the court may appoint its own agents to make sales thereof, and compel the trustees holding the legal title to execute conveyances for the lands sold by its agents.

tutional provision or clearly contrary to the terms of the grant.[59] Where a state has disposed of lands granted to it for internal improvements, the United States only is entitled to object to the non-performance of the conditions with reference to the disposition of the lands.[60] A patent from the state for land as internal improvement land is conclusive as against the state and persons claiming under it that the land was included in the internal improvement grant;[61] but it has been held that a deed of conveyance, executed by the trustees of the internal improvement fund, does not carry with it a presumption that the title was in them and that they could lawfully convey the premises.[62] A certificate for canal land which shows on its face that a part of the purchase-money is unpaid is not evidence of legal title.[63] Where a purchaser of canal lands assigns and delivers his certificate of purchase to another, the assignor has thereafter no interest in the lands which will descend to his heirs.[64] Where the grant is a present grant of the fee simple upon condition subsequent, bona fide purchasers of the land will not be denied protection as such on the ground that no patents had been issued for the land when they purchased.[65] Where the act making a grant for a road authorized the sale of the lands on the certificate of the governor that the road was completed, bona fide purchasers from the road company had a right to rely on such certificate.[66] A state statute providing that the decision of the state board of land commissioners on a contest shall be final until set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction does not authorize an appeal from the decision of the board in a contest determined by it.[67] One not claiming under either the state or the United States cannot urge that the state's patent of lands selected by it under an act of congress making a grant for internal improvements is invalid because the lands were sold for less than the price prescribed by such act.[68] Where it appears from evidence dehors conflicting grants that those last issued were predicated upon prior locations made under internal improvement certificates in due form of law, and those first issued were not founded upon sufficient proofs, the last in date of issuance will reflect the paramount title.[69] The title of a purchaser of internal improvement land does not depend upon the faithful application by the state of the funds derived from such lands to the purposes for which the grants were made.[70] The fact that a sale under decree in a proceeding to enforce a state lien for purchase-money on internal improvement land was for an inadequate price is not ground for vacating it, in the absence of complaint by the state, and where there is no evidence that on a resale the land would bring more than the debt due the state; [71] but a purchaser from the state's vendee, who is not made a party or served with notice of the proceeding on the part of the state to foreclose, may, after decree and sale thereunder, and before a confirmation of the sale, apply to redeem and be allowed to do so.[72] Under some statutes where a purchaser fails to pay the purchase-money, the land reverts to the state.[73] Where the holder of a patent issued by the state to lands entered with internal improvement warrants consents to the cancellation of his entries and authorizes the delivery of the warrants to a third person, by whose transferee they are used for the entry of other lands, the title to the lands first entered becomes again vested in the state, and cannot be divested by a sale for taxes.[74]

6. Disposition and Application of Proceeds. Where a grant for "internal improvements" does not further specify what kind of improvements is intended, the courts must consider the sense in which the words are used in American legislation; [75] and so, to come within such a grant, the improvements must be within the state and must be of a fixed and permanent nature, as improvements of real property, and must be designed and intended for the benefit of the public.[76] So the construction of a system of reservoirs and canals for the purpose of irrigation and domestic use, or for changing the channels of streams so as to better control the water for such uses, is within such a grant, provided the control of the improvements is retained by the state; [77] but public buildings, such as asylums, state houses, universities, colleges, and other public institutions of a like character, are not internal improvements within the meaning of a grant for this purpose.[78] The erection of a residence for the governor at the capital is within the purposes of a grant to the state for public buildings at the capital.[79] A statute providing for the distribution of the internal improvement fund among the counties of the state has been held not in conflict with the act of congress donating such lands to the state.[80]

K. Grants in Aid of Railroads — 1. Grants of Land to Aid in Construction — a. In General. Congress has from time to time made numerous and liberal grants of public lands to aid in the construction of railroads. Some of such grants have been made directly to the railroad companies to which the aid was extended,[81] while other grants have been made to the states for the purpose of enabling them to aid the companies which were the real beneficiaries of the grants.[82] Such grants are usually of the odd-numbered sections of land within a certain distance from the line of the road, usually called the place limits.[83]

A grant in aid of a branch railroad to be constructed on the same terms and conditions as the main line is not taken out of the general rule that the grant is one in præsenti, and that, on filing the map of definite location, the title passes to the railway company so that it can be held adversely as against such company, because the road which might build the branch was not, or may not have been, in existence at the time of the passage of the act, nor because of a provision that the company shall be "entitled to receive" alternate sections of land for ten miles in width on each side of the right of way along the whole branch, nor because of a supposed limited character of the forfeiture provided for failure to complete the branch. under a grant to it have vested, they cannot be divested or in any way limited or modified by any act of any officers of the government.[93]

(II) Determination as to Character of Land. Where a grant to a railroad company excepts mineral lands from its operation and requires a determination of the character of the lands to be made before the issue of any patent, no title of any kind passes to the company until the final determination is made.[94]

(III) Earning Land. Some of the grants do not take effect until the land is earned by the construction of definite portions of the roads,[95] while other grants convey a present estate in the lands, subject to be divested on failure to comply with conditions subsequent as to construction of the roads.[96] The railroad company does not acquire a complete title to land until it has completed such part of its road as is necessary to earn such land.[97] Where a railroad company has earned land, and its title is perfect, and nothing remains except to receive the certificate of title from the government, limitations begin to run when the company is entitled to the certificate, the government then retaining the mere naked legal title, while the company is the real owner;[98] but, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that it acquired ownership at the time it received its certificate, so as to make the statute run from that date.[99]

c. Sufficiency and Effect of Location and Adoption of Line. The map of the route of a division of a railroad as finally located and constructed, filed with the secretary of the interior, and accepted as such by that officer, is the map of definite location within the meaning of a land grant act;[1] and the location of land by a railroad company is not complete until all the acts required by statute to make the location are done.[2] The filing by a railroad company of a map of the line

Errors in map.— The line is definitely fixed, for the purpose of determining the lands to which the grant applies, by the filing of the map, notwithstanding the fact that no actual survey has been made or that the line surveyed has been wrongfully located on the map, in consequence of errors in projecting township and section lines over unsurveyed parts of the public domain. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 69 Fed. 47, 16 C. C. A. 114 [affirmed in 168 U. S. 1, 18 S. Ct. 18, 42 L. ed. 355].

2. Baker v. Gee, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 17 L. ed. 563, holding that under the act of congress of June 10, 1852, giving to the state of Missouri certain lands for railroad purposes, and the Missouri act of Sept. 20, 1852, accepting them, and making provision in regard to them, the location of the lands was not fixed until the railroad company caused a map of the road to be recorded in the office for recording deeds in the county where the land surveyed for the route, in order to secure the withdrawal of the lands granted, operates to definitely locate the line and limits of the right of way, so that it cannot be changed in such a way as to affect the rights of one who has in the meantime legally entered other land in the government land office;[3] but where the location first made fails to meet the requirements of the act of congress making the grant, it is not final and conclusive as to the land included in the grant, and the consent of congress is not necessary to the making of a new and valid location.[4] It is not necessary that a railroad company should fix its entire route between the termini named in its charter before it becomes entitled to lands granted to it;[5] but upon the location of such reasonable portions of the general route as will intelligently guide the officers of the land department with reference to the patents to be issued it is entitled to the lands along the located portion of the line.[6] The general route of a railroad may be considered as fixed when its general course and direction are determined after an actual examination of the country or from knowledge of it, and designated by a line on a map showing the general features of the adjacent country and the places through or by which the road will pass;[7] and it is not necessary, in order to fix the general route of the road, to file a map thereof in the office of the secretary of the interior, or of the commissioner of the general land office.[8]

d. Survey and Selection — (i) Necessity For Survey and Rights Prior Thereto. A grant to a railroad of the odd-numbered sections within certain limits does not attach to any particular land until identification by government survey;[9] but a land grant railroad company has such an interest in the unsur-was situated, this sort of location being the kind required by the provisions of the last act.

The filing of a map of the general route of a railroad does not, prior to the filing of the map of definite location, constitute such a disposal of lands within the exterior lines of that route as to preclude a subsequent grant of the lands to another company. Abandonment of earlier line.— Where a railroad company filed a map of a line which was rejected, and later it filed maps of another line, on which lands were reserved, this amounted to an adoption of the later line, and an abandonment of the earlier, notwithstanding the fact that in a controversy relating to its right to build the line, the company in correspondence and documents referred to and appeared to claim the earlier line. Under an act giving a railroad company the right to select the granted lands opposite each twenty-five miles of road as the same was constructed and approved in the manner required by the act, the right of the company to select lands was not dependent upon its filing with the commissioner of the general land office a map of the definite location of every portion of the entire road, if the road was completed opposite the land selected. A land grant railroad company is not a tenant in common with the United States in respect to lands which lie within its grant limits, opposite the completed line, but which have not yet been surveyed, so as to render the odd sections belonging to the company distinguishable from the even sections reserved to the government. veyed lands as will entitle it to maintain alone, the government having refused to join with it, a suit to enjoin trespassers who are cutting timber from the lands in such manner that the denuded portions will fall within the odd as well as the even sections when the survey is made.[10]

(II) Selection. Where a grant to a railroad is of all the odd-numbered sections, not excepted in the grant, within a certain distance on each side of the road, no specific selection is necessary to the validity of the company's title.[11] Where a grant is of a certain number of odd-numbered sections per mile of road, with no express limitations of distance from the road in which the land is to be selected, it is necessarily implied that the selection must be of the alternate sections nearest the road which have not been previously sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of.[12]

(III) Payment of Cost of Survey, Selection, and Conveyance. The statute requires that before any land granted to a railroad company by the United States is conveyed to such company or any persons entitled thereto, under any of the acts incorporating or relating to such company, the company or the persons in interest shall first pay into the treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the land,[13] unless the company is exempted by law from the payment of such cost.[14] The object of this provision is to preserve to the government such control over the property granted as to enable it to enforce payment of these costs,[15] and until such payment neither the issuance of the patents[16] nor any sale for taxes by state authority[17] is permitted, thus preserving unimpaired the lien contemplated.[18] But the provision was not designed to impair the force of the operative words of transfer in the grants of the United States,[19] or to invalidate the numerous conveyances by sale and mortgage of the lands made by the railroad companies with the express or implied assent of the government,[20] although where such costs have not been paid, a grantee of the company has not such title to the land as a vendee in a contract for the sale thereof can be compelled to accept.[21] It is uncertain what is meant by the costs of conveying the lands by the government, the conveyance being by patent and there being no statute authorizing a charge or fee for issuing a patent;[22] and as the selection is made by the grantee, it is difficult to imagine what costs the government incurs in the selection which are to be paid by the grantee.[23]

e. Certification. The certificate of the secretary of the interior certifying to a state certain land as being included within a grant in aid of railroads has the force and effect of a patent,[24] notwithstanding an erroneous designation therein of the railroad company for the benefit of which the certification is made,[25] and its effect in passing the title to particular lands cannot be questioned collaterally by one not interested.[26] After land has been certified to a state as railroad land and accepted by the state as such, the state cannot claim the land as swamp land or give to another the right to make such claim.[27]

f. Patents. Some of the grants in aid of railroads have vested in the grantees a fee-simple, by force of the acts themselves, without any patents,[28] while under other grants the title does not pass until the issuance of the patents,[29] although when a patent is issued it relates back to the date of the grant.[30] Even where the terms of a grant to a railroad company are such that no patents are necessary to transfer the legal title, patents are frequently issued, and serve many useful purposes;[31] they are evidence that the grantee has complied with the conditions of the grant and, to that extent, that the grant is relieved from the possibility of forfeiture for breach of its conditions,[32] they serve to identify the lands as coterminous with the road completed,[33] obviate the necessity of any other evidence as to the grantee's right to the lands,[34] and are evidence that the lands are subject to the disposal of the railroad company with the consent of the government,[35] and are thus, in the grantee's hands, deeds of further assurance of his title and therefore a source of quiet and peace to him in its possession.[36] Where land is granted upon conditions, with a provision for the issuance of a patent, the performance of the conditions gives a right to the patent.[37] Where an act granting lands to a state to aid in the construction of a certain railroad directs that the patents be issued, not to the company, but to the state for the company's benefit, the issuance of patents to the state does not vest title in the company, or affect the liability of the lands to forfeiture under the act.[38]

g. Title Acquired — (i) By States. States which have received land grants in aid of railroads are usually vested with the legal title to the lands.[39] The state takes the legal title as trustee for the benefit of the railroads to aid in whose construction the grant is made,[40] and has no power to dispose of them in aid of any other railroad.[41] The interest of the state is not, however, a mere naked trust, but is coupled with a beneficial interest in the lands.[42]

(ii) By Railroad Companies. Where a grant to a railroad company provides for the patenting of lands to the company as earned by the construction of sections of the road, the issuance of the patents vests in the company the complete title — the legal title coupled with the beneficial interest[43]— and the company does not hold subject to any trust, although the act making the grant provides that the land, when patented, shall be subject to the disposal of the company for purposes of constructing and equipping the road and no other.[44] The title of Reasons of the rule.— "The obligation on the part of the company to faithfully apply the proceeds of sales to the construction of the road, is of the same character as the one to keep the railroad forever open to the use the United States is fully divested by a grant in præsenti of all lands within the place limits of a railroad aid grant, and not within the exceptions thereto;[45] and subsequent proceedings affecting the patent to such land in the interior department do not suspend the running of the statute of limitations in favor of one claiming under the grant.[46]

h. Transfer of and Succession to Right to Lands — (i) In General. In the absence of statutory authority a railroad company cannot transfer its land grant to another company;[47] and where such a transfer is authorized by statute, the right of transferee company to earn and obtain the land grant is based upon the statute, rather than upon the assignment to it.[48] Where after the selection of lands the railroad company's franchise was forfeited, but within three years the company transferred its property to the assignee in trust for the benefit of its stock-holders, under a state statute permitting a corporation whose charter has been forfeited three years in which to settle its affairs, such transfer was a valid disposition of the lands.[49] Under the Alabama Debt Settlement Act relating to the disposition of railroad aid land granted to the state by the federal government, and providing for a conveyance thereof to the trustees to act until a certain time when the trust should expire, and providing that all lands then remaining unsold should be conveyed by the trustees to such persons as were entitled to share in the trust moneys or to such person or persons as they might direct, the trustees of the government as a public highway, free from all toll or other charges, for the transportation of the property and troops of the United States. Both, in my judgment, are personal and corporate obligations, to be enforced as other obligations of like character, and do not confer a property interest in the land after it is sold to the company, or in the road itself when completed. The legislative and judicial powers are ample for the enforcement of these several obligations, and for the protection of the rights of the government growing out of them." North Wisconsin R. Co. v. Barron County, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,347, 8 Biss. 414, where it is further said: "It was urged, on the argument by complainant's counsel, that a purchaser of the lands from the company would take with full knowledge of the law, and of the conditions upon which the title vested, and of the claim upon the land which the government would retain until the road should be completed. It is undoubtedly true that the purchaser would take with full notice of the law and of the company's title, but instead of this being an argument to sustain the complainant's position, I think it is one against it. Because the purpose of the grant being the construction of the road, and the means of carrying out that purpose being mainly the sale or mortgaging of the lands to raise the necessary funds, it is not to be supposed, without the clearest evidence, that Congress would provide for the company's conveying an imperfect title or one which should be liable to be defeated by the subsequent misconduct of the officers of the corporation, or a failure on their part to comply with the conditions of the grant. Of course, no sane business man would pay the full value for land on a purchase, or loan money upon a mortgage of the land, when he knew that his title was subject to be defeated by the subsequent acts or misconduct of persons, over whom he had no control, in misappropriating the proceeds of the sale or otherwise failing to comply with the law. If such were the law, no person would buy or part with money on a mortgage, and so the very object of the grant, which is the building of the road, would be defeated."

Construction of act authorizing transfer.— Where a railroad company having a land grant is authorized by a later statute to contract with another company for the construction and operation of its road between certain points and to grant to the latter company the perpetual use of its right of way and depot grounds, and to transfer to it all the rights and privileges pertaining to that part of the road, and it is further provided that "said companies are hereby authorized to mortgage their respective portions of said roads, as herein defined," for a certain amount per mile, "and each of said companies shall receive patents to the alternate sections of land along their respective lines of road," in the same manner as under the previous grant, the original grant remains a continuous grant between the original terminals and the only effect of the act is to divide the grant between the two companies. were not incapacitated from conveying such remaining land after the expiration of the time for the termination of the trust.[50]

(II) Consolidation of Corporations.[51] A consolidation of land grant railroad companies under statutory authority may operate to vest in the new corporation the rights of the constituent corporations under their grants;[52] but when the act of congress has vested the title in the state for the purpose of disposing of the lands for the benefit of certain railroads, an act of the state legislature conferring the benefit of that grant on a certain company does not convey the legal title to that company so that it will vest in a new company by virtue of consolidation.[53]

i. Validity of Grants. A grant contained in an act of congress authorizing a railroad company "subject to the laws of" a certain state to construct a line of railroad is not invalid because when the act was passed the company did not have legal authority under the laws of the state to construct the road on that line, where under the laws then in force the company could, by its own voluntary act alone and without any further legislation, qualify itself to construct the road strictly in all particulars subject to the laws of the state.[54]

j. Construction of Grants.[55] An act of congress making a grant in aid of railroads is a law as well as a grant,[56] and is subject to the same rules of construction as other legislative acts,[57] and the intent of congress, when ascertained, is to control in the interpretation of the law.[58] In cases of doubt as to the intention of congress, such grants are to be construed strictly [59] and most strongly against the grantee,[60] so that what is not unequivocally granted will be deemed to have been withheld.[61] But such grants are not to be so construed as to defeat the intention of congress,[62] or to withhold what is given either expressly or by necessary or fair implication,[63] and it is considered that a general law offering grants and valuable privileges to corporations or individuals as an inducement to the construction of railroads or other works of a quasi-public character through a great, undeveloped public domain, should not be construed with the strictness of a merely private grant, but should receive a more liberal interpretation in favor of the purposes for which it was enacted.[64] In the construction of railroad aid grants there is a well-established distinction between "granted lands," which are those falling within the limits specially designated, and "indemnity lands," which are those selected in lieu of lands lost by reason of previous disposition or reservation for other purposes.[65]

and lands which were not public at the date of the grant do not pass thereunder, although they subsequently become of that character,[67] and are restored to the mass of the public domain before the definite location of the road.[68] But the converse of this rule does not hold; and so, although land may have been public land at the time of the grant, it does not pass to the railroad company if it has been sold, reserved, entered, or otherwise appropriated prior to the filing of a map of the definite location of the road,[69] unless such disposition is invalid because of its having been made after the land was withdrawn from entry or sale and reserved for the railroad.[70] And indeed railroad aid grants have usually contained express exceptions of lands previously sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of.[71] The action of the land department in defining the limits of a grant to a railroad company, pursuant to its duty, on the line of the road being located, and the map showing the location being furnished to it, is final, as between persons claiming land within such limits — one under the homestead law, and the other as a purchaser from the railroad company.[72]

tation have been used to denote that the grant was restricted to lands within each particular state when such restriction was intended,[74] it cannot be safely asserted that it has been a general policy of the United States government to restrict a grant made to a state in aid of railroads to lands within such state where a part of the line of road extended into one of the territories.[75] So it is entirely competent for congress to confer upon a corporation of any state the right to construct a railroad in any of the territories and to obtain lands of the territory in aid thereof,[76] and a fortiori a territorial corporation may, under congressional authority, construct a railroad in such territory and obtain its full quota of lands, although a part of the territory embracing the granted lands afterward becomes a state,[77] and such company also obtains title to lands embraced within the terms of the grant and which, although within the former territory, are outside the boundaries of the state.[78] Where an act of congress makes the lateral extent of the grant depend upon the location of the road, whether in a state or territory, the lateral extent being greater in the latter case, the location of the road itself determines this matter and the nearness of the line to any territory or state other than that in which it is actually located has nothing to do with it, although the grant extends over the boundary.[79]

(III) Location on Either Side of Road. Land grants to railroads are usually of a certain amount of land on either side of the road,[80] and even though the grant does not so specify it is an implied condition that the land must be taken in equal quantities on each side of the road,[81] and the land department, in executing a grant, cannot enlarge the quantity of land on one side to make up a deficiency on the other.[82]

(IV) Curves and Angles of Road. A grant to a railroad of the odd-numbered sections within a certain distance of its road does not become inoperative at a point where the road makes a curve or right angle, so as to exclude the wedge-shaped section of land lying outside of the curve or angle and bounded by lines at right angles to the road approaching the curve or angle from either side, but the railroad is entitled to all the odd-numbered sections within the limits specified in the grant and it is not necessary that the lands should be reached by a line run at right angles to the road.[83] But where the act making a grant contemplates two distinct roads — a main line, and a branch road running at right angles from a point on the main line — and the entire branch line is constructed but the main line is constructed only from one of its designated termini to the point of junction with the branch road, the railroad company is entitled only to the lands opposite the main line and the branch road, bounded by lines at right angles to the respective roads where they terminate and not to any land within the wedge-shaped tract outside the point of junction and bounded by the lines referred to.[84]

(v) AMOUNT OF LAND TO WHICH RAILROAD ENTITLED. It is the uniform policy of congress in granting land in aid of railroads that the quantity of land is measured according to the length of the road constructed or required to be constructed,[85] and so where an act of congress granting, to aid in the construction of a railroad upon a designated route, six sections of land for every mile of road constructed, was amended by a subsequent act permitting the railroad to build by a shorter way, being "entitled for such modified line to the same lands, and to the same amount of lands per mile, as originally granted," the railroad was only entitled to six sections for each mile of road actually constructed, and not to six sections for each mile of the original route.[86]

(vi) SWAMP LANDS.[87] Lands which have passed to the various states by virtue of the Swamp Land Act are excluded from subsequent railroad grants whether to the states or to particular railroad companies;[88] but the Swamp Land Act was not intended to operate against the will of a state,[89] and a state may become estopped to claim that lands passed under the swamp land grant rather than the railroad grant by its laches and acquiescence and treating the land as railroad land.[90]

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Public Lands," § 240.

The mere selection of lands as swamp lands and the filing of lists thereof by the state agents does not operate to segregate such lands from the public lands of the United States or prevent their passing under the railroad grant as within an exception of "lands reserved by the United States for any purpose whatever," where such lands are subsequently determined not to be swamp lands, although the determination is not made until after the map of definite location of the road is filed. U. S. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 148 Fed. 884.

89. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Tibbs, 112 La. 51, 36 So. 223, holding that where the state failed to select, and the secretary of the interior failed to approve, certain lands as falling within the terms of those statutes, and such lands were certified to and accepted by the state under an act of congress granting lands in aid of railroads, the title thus acquired by the railroads could not be defeated by an individual claiming to have purchased the lands as swamp lands, and whose title had been annulled at the suit of the state.

90. State v. Flint, etc., R. Co., 89 Mich. 481, 51 N. W. 103, holding that where after the swamp land grant congress granted certain lands to the state to aid in the construction of railroads, and the state accepted the grant and provided that on certain conditions a certain railroad company should be entitled to the lands and the company complied with all the conditions imposed upon it, and the state officials selected and certified the alternate sections to the department of the interior, which returned the certificates to be filed in the proper state department, and the state levied and collected taxes on the lands and failed to lay claim to the lands for twenty-eight years, during which time the railroad company conveyed a large part thereof to innocent purchasers, the state was estopped to claim the lands under the swamp land grant.

Circumstances not amounting to estoppel.— The act of the governor in transmitting to the general land office the list of lands claimed by a railroad company under a railroad grant does not estop the state to claim swamp lands, nor is the approval by the land department of the railroad's list of selected lands a determination that the lands embraced therein had not passed to the state by the swamp

(VII) SCHOOL LANDS.[91] The existence of a claim by the state for lands, to make good alleged losses of portions of a thirty-sixth section granted for school purposes, is sufficient, without regard to its validity, to take such lands out of the category of "public lands," within the meaning of a railroad grant attaching to such lands alone.[92]

(VIII) TIDE LANDS. Where tide land between high and low water mark within the place limits of a railroad grant in Washington had been surveyed, identified, and defined, and the railroad had performed all conditions entitling it to such land, before Washington became a state, the railroad and its grantees were entitled to such land, under the provision of the Washington constitution, by which the state disclaimed all title in and claim to all tide land patented by the United States, although the patent was not actually issued until after the adoption of the constitution.[93]

(IX) INDIAN RESERVATIONS.[94] As a general rule lands included within an Indian reservation do not pass by a grant in aid of railroads;[95] but congress may, and in some instances has, granted such lands subject to the Indian right of occupancy and provided for the vesting of title to such lands in the grantee after the extinguishment of the Indian title.[96]

(X) LAND CLAIMED UNDER SPANISH OR MEXICAN GRANT.[97] Land which is claimed under a Spanish or Mexican grant at the time when a railroad grant is made does not pass to the railroad,[98] although the Spanish or Mexican grant is subsequently barred by lapse of time,[99] or rejected by the tribunals of the United States.[1] Nor does a railroad take land which was at the time of the filing and approval of its map of definite location within the claimed but undetermined land grant; but the failure of the land department to determine this question leaves the matter open for judicial determination. Chism v. Price, 54 Ark. 251, 15 S. W. 883, 1031.

Effect of trust in United States.— Where the title of the Indians to land and their right of occupation had been fully extinguished, the lands passed under the act of congress of June 3, 1856, conveying them to the state of Michigan for railroad purposes, notwithstanding the fact that they were held by the United States in trust to sell them for the benefit of the Indians. Shepard v. Northwestern L. Ins. Co., 40 Fed. 341.

Effect of provision for extinguishment.— A provision in the granting act that the United States shall extinguish, "as rapidly as may be consistent with public policy and the welfare of the Indians, and only by their voluntary cession," the Indian title to all lands granted by the act, is not an absolute undertaking by the government to extinguish such title and the grantee cannot claim a breach by the government of its undertaking, or set up the failure to extinguish such title as an excuse for a failure to complete the road, without showing that the Indians were willing to cede the lands and that their interest and public policy required such cession. limits of a Spanish or Mexican grant, but was subsequently excluded therefrom.[2] But a railroad grant passes land which was excluded from a Spanish or Mexican grant, the survey of which became final before the date of the railroad grant, although there were subsequent unsuccessful efforts to avoid such survey and procure a new survey including such land.[3] A railroad company obtains a good title to lands selected by and patented to it as indemnity land where, although such land was claimed under a Mexican grant and was sub judice at the time of the railroad grant, the Mexican grant had been finally rejected as invalid before the selection was made.[4] Where a Mexican grant is of a designated quantity of land within a larger tract, patents issued to a railroad company under its grant for land within the exterior boundaries are valid so long as there is enough land left within such boundaries to satisfy the Mexican grant.[5]

(xi) Land Entered or Settled Upon Under General Laws — (a) Exclusion From Grant. Land which has been entered or settled upon under the general land laws of the United States providing for homesteads, preëmptions, and the like, prior to the passage of an act making a grant in aid of railroads, is excluded from the grant.[6] It has also been the policy of congress to keep the public lands open to occupation and preëmption and appropriation to public uses, notwithstanding any grant which it might make, until it is ascertained what lands are included within the grant;[7] and so as a general rule a railroad land grant does not include land entered or settled upon under the general land laws at any time before the

The objection that there had not been the final order of confirmation requisite under the Act of March 3, 1851, c. 41, 9 U. S. St. at L. 631, to justify an official survey of a Mexican grant, because the federal government had appealed to the federal supreme court from the decree of confirmation in the district court, is not available to defeat the contention that lands within the place limits of a railroad grant, which were also, when the map of definite location was filed and approved, included by the lines of such survey, were sub judice, and therefore excluded from the grant to the railroad company, where such appeal had practically been abandoned before the survey through a delay of ten years in filing the transcript of record in the appellate court, and the government did not question the right to the survey when the application therefor was made. A mere claim that lands were within the exterior limits of a Spanish or Mexican grant based upon a rejected survey for a patent made after the final decree of confirmation has fixed the specific boundaries of the grant contrary to the survey, does not render the land sub judice until the final rejection of such survey so as to exclude it from the railroad grant. railroad grant became fixed and attached to specific lands by the filing of a map of the definite location;[8] although such entry may have been made after the passage of the act of congress by which the grant was made,[9] or even after the map of the general route has been filed,[10] or after the line of the road has been surveyed and staked out.[11] So also a valid title may be predicated upon an entry upon land within the indemnity limits of a railroad grant made at any time before the selection of the indemnity lands,[12] where there has been no valid withdrawal of such lands from entry,[13] and the railroad company cannot question the bona fides of a prior entry.[14] When a railroad company has located its road but has forfeited its grant by failure to complete its road within the time limited, it is within the power of congress, upon subsequently extending such time and confirming the grant to save the rights of settlers who have acquired rights in the land prior to the passage of the act granting the extension;[15] but in order to entitle one to the protection he must have settled on the land before the act granting the extension was passed.[16]

(B) Sufficiency and Validity of Entry. The mere fact that land is in the possession of an individual does not exclude it from a railroad grant,[17] although the occupant may have made his settlement with the intention of acquiring the land under the land laws;[18] but it is necessary that at the time when the grant attaches

the occupant shall have acquired a right or lawful claim to the land by compliance with the provisions of the law under which he sought to acquire the land.[19] But land for which a certificate of entry has been issued is excluded from a railroad grant, although the application misdescribed the range in which the section is situated;[20] and it has been held that a settler who has made lasting and valuable improvements on the land and has attempted to make a homestead entry thereof but through mistake made an entry of another piece of land acquires an interest in the land improved which cannot be divested by the subsequent definite location of a railroad.[21] Where an application to enter land, made before a railroad grant attached, was refused, but on appeal the secretary of the interior decided that the entry should be allowed, the land did not pass under the railroad grant, although the road was definitely located before the decision allowing the entry was rendered.[22] It has been held that land which is subject to a homestead entry of record, valid on its face, does not pass under a railroad grant, whether or not the entry is valid in fact;[23] but it has also been laid down that an exception in a railroad grant of lands to which preëmption or homestead claims have attached, does not operate in favor of a sham and fraudulent homestead claim,[24] nor was the mere filing of a declaratory statement, without previous settlement, as required by the preëmption laws, sufficient to cause a preëmption claim to become "attached" to the land so as to except it from such a grant.[25]

(c) Extent of Land Excluded by Reason of Prior Settlement. A settler on unsurveyed public lands, who, at the time a railroad grant attached by the definite location of the line of road, had in no way indicated the boundaries of his claim, could not, by thereafter extending his improvements over a tract which he had not at that time claimed or improved, and which by the subsequent survey was shown to be within a section granted to the railroad company, acquire any claim or rights thereto as against the railroad company.[26]

(d) Relinquishment, Abandonment, or Cancellation of Entry. Land which was entered by an individual, but abandoned before the passage of an act making a railroad grant, passes under the grant,[27] although the records of the land office do not show that the prior claim was abandoned.[28] Where lands are subject to a live entry at the time of the passage of the act making a railroad grant, they are not brought within the grant by subsequent relinquishment or cancellation of the entry,[29] even though this occurs before the map of definite location of the road is filed.[30] Land which was entered prior to the filing of the map of definite location is not brought within the railroad grant by the loss of the entryman's rights after such map is filed by reason of his failure to comply with the law, his abandonment of the land, or the setting aside of his entry;[31] but if the entry is made after the grant and the entryman's rights are lost before the map of definite location is filed, the land passes under the grant.[32] The fact that land within the indemnity limits of a railroad grant was entered under the land laws prior to the date of the grant does not prevent a valid selection of such land by the railroad company, where the rights under the entry were lost prior to the time of selection.[33] Where an entry has been canceled for failure to comply with the requirements of the law, but the rights of the entryman have been restored under a curative act prior to the filing of the map of the definite location of the road, the land does not pass under the railroad grant.[34]

(XII) MINERAL LANDS[35]— (A) Exclusion From Grant. Grants of land in aid of railroads ordinarily exclude mineral lands from their operation,[36] and so a patent to a railroad company under its grant for lands which are known to be mineral at the time of the issuance of the patent is void[37] and will be set aside at the suit of the United States as "issued by mistake and without authority of law."[38]

(B) What Are Mineral Lands. The mere fact that land contains particles of gold or other metals or veins of gold or metal bearing rock does not necessarily impress it with the character of "mineral land" so as to exclude it from a grant in aid of a railroad;[39] but it must contain metals in quantities sufficient to render it available and valuable for mining purposes,[40] and the land must be more valuable for such purposes than for agriculture.[41] The word "mineral" in a railroad grant excluding mineral lands is not synonymous with "metal,"[42] and so land which

Term subject to enlargement.— The term "mineral lands" as used in a railroad grant excepting such lands is subject to enlargement in its meaning at any time before the grant attaches by the definite location of the road. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 104 Fed. 425, 43 C. C. A. 620 [affirmed in 188 U. S. 526, 23 S. Ct. 365, 47 L. ed. 575], is chiefly valuable for the building stone which it contains is not within a grant excluding mineral lands.[43]

(c) Time of Discovery of Minerals. A railroad grant providing that "all mineral lands be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the operations of this act" does not except only those mineral lands which are known to be such on the identification of the granted sections by the definite location of the road, but excludes from the grant all actual mineral lands whether or not their mineral character is known;[44] but the privilege of exploring for minerals continues in full force notwithstanding the location of the road,[45] and the question of the mineral or non-mineral character of the lands is open to consideration up to the time of issuing a patent.[46]

(d) Mineral Entries Prior to Location of Road. A railroad grant which creates a reserve of the odd-numbered sections of lands "not mineral," within the limits defined, "which are free from preëmption or other claims or rights," from the time of filing a plat of the general route in the general land office, does not prevent persons taking up mining claims in the reserved lands after the filing of such map, and before the definite location of the road.[47] Under a grant of odd sections, "not mineral," to which the United States has full title, free from preemption "or other claims," at the time of the definite location of the road, no title passes to lands in the odd sections which, at the time of the definite location of the road, there were pending applications to purchase as mineral lands, although they are afterward ascertained not to be mineral lands and mineral entries thereon held invalid,[48] and a fortiori a railroad company cannot maintain a suit in equity holding that, conceding that the term "mineral lands" as used and understood by congress at the time of the grant of July 2, 1864, to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, excluding such lands, did not include lands chiefly valuable for the building stone they contained, subsequent acts of congress prior to 1879 fixed the status of such lands as mineral, and they were excluded from the grant along the portions of the road not definitely located until after that date.

The railroad company is not entitled to any notice of an application for a mineral patent to lands lying within the boundaries of the grant, other than the general notice prescribed by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2325 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1429], to all persons who may claim an interest in the land, except that, in case it initiates a contest under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2335 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1435], to determine the character of the land, it is then entitled to personal notice of all subsequent proceedings; and, if it fails to initiate such contest, the question whether the lands are mineral or agricultural becomes a matter solely between the patentee and the government. to quiet its title to lands within the limits of its grant which have been patented to individuals as "mineral lands," before the line of road was definitely fixed.[49]

(E) Rights of Railroad Before Determination of Character of Land. A railroad company has an interest in the odd-numbered sections within its grant, and, before the question of the mineral or non-mineral character of such land has been determined by the land department, the commission of waste thereon calculated to work irreparable injury to the land itself will be restrained at its instance,[50] and in such a suit the court will not undertake to determine, in advance of a decision by the land department, the question as to whether the land is mineral or non-mineral.[51]

(F) Effect of Patent.[52] The issuance of a patent to the railroad is a conclusive determination by the government that the land is agricultural,[53] and such a patent conveys to the railroad company the legal title free from the contingency of being defeated by a future discovery of minerals.[54]

Even though a patent expressly excepts "all mineral lands," it is conclusive, as against collateral attack, of the non-mineral character of all the land conveyed. Cowell v. Lammers, 21 Fed. 200, 207, where it is said: "The exception of mineral lands from the grant in the act of congress is explicit. There is no express authority, no provision at all, requiring or authorizing this exception to be repeated in the patent. Lands patentable under the grant, and no others, are authorized to be patented. If the exception in the patent is no broader in its signification than the statute, it adds nothing to and takes nothing from the effect of the statute itself in this respect, or to the effect of the patent issued in pursuance of the statute. If it is broader than the statute, then it is wholly unauthorized by law, and as to the part which goes beyond the statute, at least, is utterly void. A patent upon its face should either grant or not grant. It must be seen from a construction of the language of the grant itself whether anything is granted or not, and, if anything be granted, what it is. There is no authority to issue a patent which, in effect, only says if the lands herein described hereafter turn out to be agricultural lands, then I grant them, but if they turn out to be mineral lands, then I do not grant them. Such a patent would be so uncertain that it would be impossible to determine, from the face of the patent, whether anything is granted or not. The most that can be said, then, is that the clause of exception and exclusion in the patent in no way affects the rights of the parties given by the statute, in no way enlarges or restricts those rights, and the same force and effect must be given to the patent on a collateral attack as would be given to it had the clause been omitted, as both classes of patents would depend upon and be controlled by the same or similar statutory provision. We have seen, in the cases cited from the supreme court reports, that patents issued under the various acts of congress excepting and reserving mineral lands from sale or grant, in precisely similar language, but which omit the clause of exception and exclusion found in the patent in question, have always been held by the supreme court to be unassailable collaterally. The same rule must be held applicable to the patent in question and those like it." But compare McLaughlin v. Powell, 50 Cal. 64, 68 [followed in Chicago Quartz Min Co. v. Oliver, 75 Cal. 194, 16 Pac. 780, 7 Am. St. Rep. 143], holding that, although in an action to recover lands, the party claiming under a patent from the United States to a railroad excluding "all mineral lands" can introduce the patent in evidence without making preliminary proof that the lands in suit are not mineral lands, the party claiming adversely to the patent is entitled to introduce affirmative evidence that the lands in suit are mineral lands and so are excepted from the grant; the court saying: "The exception contained in the patent, introduced by the plaintiff, is part of the description, and is equivalent to an exception of all the subdivisions of land mentioned, which were 'mineral' lands. In other words, the patent grants all of the tracts named in it which are not mineral lands. If all are mineral lands, it may be that the exception is void; but the fact cannot be assumed, as by its terms the exception is limited to such as are mineral lands, and does not necessarily extend to all the tracts granted."

(XIII) ADJUSTMENT OF GRANTS.[55] After a railroad company has accepted the provisions of an act of congress enacted to settle disputes concerning its grant, it cannot by sales of or contracts respecting particular lands withdraw them from the operation of the act.[56]

l. Indemnity or Lieu Lands — (I) IN GENERAL. Grants of alternate sections in aid of railroads usually contain a provision that in case, when the lines of the roads are definitely fixed, it appears that the United States has sold any of the land so granted, or preëmption rights have attached thereto, other lands may be selected in lieu of those so lost;[57] and such an indemnity clause covers losses from the grant by reason of sales and the attachment of preëmption rights before the date of the act, as well as such losses accruing after such date and before the final determination of the route of the road.[58] But a railroad company has no power to relinquish land within its primary limits to which it has good title under a grant from the United States for the purpose of making an indemnity selection of other land in lieu thereof.[59] A grant of all the odd-numbered sections within a certain distance from the road does not import that each section shall contain its full complement of six hundred and forty acres, nor obligate the United States to make good the difference where sections contain less than this amount,[60] and a grant "to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile," with a provision for indemnity for such lands as have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, preëmpted, or otherwise disposed of, gives no right to indemnity for a deficiency in the quantity granted arising from the non-existence of such quantity of land within forty miles of the line on each side, as where the granted limits overlap large bodies of water.[61] Where the grants of two railroads overlap or intersect, and the circumstances of the grants are such that the land within the overlap must be divided between the two roads,[62] neither road is entitled to select indemnity lands Necessity for selection as between railroads whose indemnity limits overlap see infra II, K, 1, q, (III).

The filing of a map of definite location of a railroad does not perfect the title of the railroad company to any indemnity lands. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Wood, 124 Cal. 475, 57 Pac. 388.

Proof of loss and selection.—A plaintiff in ejectment, claiming under a railroad company whose title is based upon a selection of the land as indemnity land, must show that the lands thus selected were selected in lieu of lands actually lost by the railroad company from lands granted it, for the court will not take judicial notice of losses of lands which the railroad sustained by reason of Indian reservations and settlements made within the limits of its grant prior to the location of the company's line, and that the selection of the lands in question was in lieu of losses thus sustained. as indemnity lands;[67] but until such time the title remains in the government [68] and the land is subject to its disposal at its pleasure.[69] It has been considered, however, that if at the time of the definite location of the line of the road it should appear that there were not more unappropriated lands within the indemnity limits than were sufficient to satisfy the quantity to be taken therefrom, or if at first there were more than sufficient and the quantity should be subsequently reduced from any cause, until the quantity granted equaled the number of acres applicable to the satisfaction thereof, the grant would at once attach to these remaining lands, vesting in the grantee title thereto without either selection or approval thereof.[70] The title to indemnity lands does not relate back to the date of the act making the railroad grant but only to the date of selection;[71] but the doctrine of relation precludes the United States from retaining, as against its grantees of land within the indemnity limits of the grant, a sum which it has collected from trespassers thereon for the removal of iron and stone from the land during the period between the selection of such lands to supply in part a large deficiency in the place limits, and the approval of such selection by the secretary of the interior.[72]

(III) Land Subject to Selection. It is usually provided that indemnity lands shall be selected within a certain distance of the line of the road, and the limits so established are termed the "indemnity limits;" [73] and the fact that land within the indemnity limits is a part of the public domain and free from private claims at the time of its selection is sufficient to authorize such selection regardless of the status of the land at the time of the passage of the act making the grant or of the definite location of the road, or at any other time.[74] A railroad company, to which a grant has been made by congress of alternate sections of public lands, on each side of its road, with the right to select other lands, within a limited distance, in lieu of lands sold or otherwise disposed of by the government, cannot select indemnity lands on one side of its road, to make good losses sustained on the other side; [75] and where the intent of the act granting lands is to create two separate roads, deficiencies within the grant limits of one road cannot be made up by selections from the indemnity limits of the other.[76] Lands which the United States has sold or reserved for any purpose are not subject to selection as indemnity lands.[77] After the price of even-numbered sections within the place limits of a railroad grant has been fixed at double the price of other public lands, such sections cannot be selected as indemnity lands by another railroad company within whose indemnity limits they lie.[78]

(IV) Time When Selection May Be Made. A railroad company can make no valid selection of indemnity lands until the line of its road has been fixed by the filing of a map of definite location.[79]

(V) Validity of Selection. Where both the act of congress granting lands to a state in aid of a railroad and the act of the state legislature accepting the grant provided for the selection of the land by an agent to be appointed by the governor, the state act providing for his nomination by the railroad company; but neither act required the selection or report of the agent to be preserved or filed, the list of lands filed with the land commissioner by the company, and approved by the secretary of the interior, will be presumed to have been properly selected, after it has been certified as true and correct by the land commissioner, and the secretary of the interior has approved it as such.[80]

(VI) Attack on Selection. The fact that a selection of indemnity lands was prematurely made by one who was not selected by the state as an agent for that purpose cannot be made a ground of attack upon the title by a mere stranger, where both the state and the federal governments have recognized the selections made and certified the lands covered thereby as within the grant.[81]

(vii) Evidence of Selection. The certificate of the commissioner of the general land office, showing that certain lands were contained in the list of lands covered by a railroad grant, and the certificate of the secretary of the interior, approving such list, are competent and sufficient evidence that the lands described passed to the railroad company under the grant.[82]

(viii) Amount of Land to Which Railroad Company Entitled. A railroad company is not entitled to select a full section or six hundred and forty acres of indemnity land for every section lost to it within the place limits, but the selection is limited to the quantity of land actually contained in the sections lost.[83]

(ix) Entry or Settlement Prior to Selection or Approval. Lands within the indemnity limits of a railroad grant are not reserved prior to their selection as indemnity lands,[84] and the approval of the selection by the secretary of the interior,[85] but remain open to entry and settlement under the general land laws, in consequence of which the right to select them may be lost,[86] unless they have been withdrawn from the market by the secretary of the interior pursuant to the terms of the act making the grant.[87]

It would seem to be impracticable to administer the trust on any other basis. In supplying deficiencies it must be by sections, whether full or fractional, and by legal subdivisions."

m. Grants and Conveyances by States to Railroad Companies — (i) In General. A state statute conferring railroad aid lands on a railroad corporation may be as effective in vesting the title in the corporation as a formal conveyance of the lands,[88] and it has been held that a certified list of lands authorized by a state statute to be signed by the governor and certified by the register of the state land office in order to pass title to railroad companies which have complied with the requirements of the grant is not essential to establish the title to the lands in the company, but in the absence of such certificate the company must prove its title by showing a selection of the lands in question, that they are within the grant, and the construction of the road, so as to entitle the company to the land under the act granting it.[89] A patent issued by the governor of a state in pursuance of an express grant, not void on its face, passes the legal title to the property therein granted,[90] and while such a patent may be impeached for fraud,[91] or set aside for other sufficient cause,[92] it cannot be assailed collaterally.[93] A grant from a state to a railroad company is necessarily limited by the conditions imposed by the act of congress granting the lands in question to the state;[94] and where a state statute confers the land on a certain railroad company, subject to the conditions of the grant, such company acquires no legal title to the lands, by virtue of the grants, until it earns them by performance of the conditions.[95] Where an act of congress makes distinct grants to a state in favor of named roads, with the design to provide for two distinct lines and to aid each by a grant of the lands lying within the prescribed distance along and near it, a conveyance to one company of lands pertaining to the other line provided for is invalid,[96] and an act of the legislature purport-

When grant effective.— Railroad lands became the property of the railroad to which the state granted them as soon as the railroad had complied with the conditions of the act, although the secretary of the interior had not yet certified them to the state and although the governor refused to execute patents therefor to the company until some years thereafter. Acceptance of grant.— Where a state accepted a grant in aid of railroads and set aside the lands for the benefit of certain railroads, on condition that "each of said companies shall severally assent and agree to the provisions and requirements of this act, which acceptance shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State," within a certain time an unqualified acceptance by a railroad company was a necessary condition precedent to the vesting in it of any title or rights under the act. ing to ratify and confirm the attempted transfer cannot have the effect of rendering it valid.[97]

(II) Grants of Lands Thereafter to Be Granted to State. A state statute granting to a railroad in aid of its construction land thereafter to be granted to the state by the United States can pass nothing as a grant;[98] but such a statute is not merely a grant, but also a law, which must be given such effect as will carry out the intent of the legislature, and such intent cannot be defeated by applying to the grant the common-law rules applicable to mere conveyances;[99] and hence conveyances of such land executed to the railroad company by the governor of the state in accordance with such act of the legislature after the land has been granted to the state by the United States, are valid and operative to convey title to the railroad company.[1]

n. Conditions of Grant — (I) In General. Grants in aid of railroads are usually conditional[2] and subject to be defeated on non-compliance with the terms of the grant;[3] and where land is granted to a state in aid of railroads it may impose conditions on the railroad companies to benefit thereby.[4]

(II) Construction of Road — (A) Necessity For. The actual construction of the road is invariably made a condition to the obtaining of an indefeasible title to the lands granted;[5] and a railroad is "completed," within the meaning of a land grant act when made ready for the running of trains, although not actually equipped with rolling stock.[6]

(B) Partial Construction. An act granting to a railroad land to be received by it as the construction proceeds does not impose a legal obligation to complete the entire road;[7] and the failure of the company to complete one section of its line does not affect its right to the lands coterminous with the completed part of its road,[8] and to indemnity for so much of such lands as are lost to it.[9] But the railroad is entitled to only such part of the grant as is proportioned to the part of the road actually built.[10]

(III) Completion of Road Within Specified Time. Many of the grants have been conditioned upon a completion of the road within a limited time,[11] and if the company fails to comply with such condition its rights under the grant are lost,[12] and it cannot complain of the forfeiture by congress of all or any part of the land,[13] or the restoration thereof to the public domain.[14] But in the absence of any declaration of forfeiture the railroad may perfect its right to the land by completing the road after such time.[15] Where an act of congress grants land to a state in aid of a railroad to be constructed within a certain time, thus constituting the state a trustee for the purpose of supervising the building of the railroad and transferring the land to the railroad company when earned, the grant carries with it the implied power in the state to make such reasonable extensions of the time as may under the circumstances, be necessary for the accomplishment of that purpose.[16]

(IV) Operation of Road. Where a railroad company has received a grant of land upon condition that it will build a railroad from one town to another, it has no authority whatever afterward to abandon any portion of such line and take up and remove the track.[17]

(V) Transportation of United States Mail, Troops, and Property. Many of the land grants contain a provision that the roads in aid of which such grants are made shall transport the United States mails,[18] troops, munitions of war, and military supplies and property over their roads at rates to be fixed by the government.[19] Under such a grant the right to the use of the railroad by the government as a post route and military road is a right annexed to and forming a part of the grant, in the nature of a covenant running with the land — the roadway;[20] and that right cannot be separated from the railroad without the consent of congress by appropriate legislation.[21] So where a non-land grant railroad operates a through line in part over its own road and in part over a land grant road, under a contract with the company owning the latter road, the non-aided road must transport troops, munitions of war, and military supplies at land grant rates over so much of its route as extends over the land grant road;[22] and it cannot compel the government to tranship freight at the point of junction with the land grant road, so that the transportation over the latter road shall be by the land grant company.[23] A provision in an act of congress, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad, that "said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the government of the United States, free from all toll or other charge, for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States," merely secures to the government the free use of the road for transportation in its own vehicles, and does not entitle the government to have troops or property transported over the road, by the railroad company, free of charge for transporting the same.[24]

(VI) Evidence of Compliance With Conditions. Where the granting act provides that none of the lands granted shall be certified to the companies until the governor of the state shall certify to the secretary of the interior that the said company has completed" the road as specified in the act, in an action by the grantee of one of such railroad companies for the possession of land embraced in the act, the certificate of the governor, referred to, is admissible in evidence to show compliance by the company with the terms of the grant.[25]

(VII) Breach and Forfeiture — (A) In General. After title has vested in a railroad company under a grant upon conditions subsequent, the title can be defeated only by breach of the conditions of the grant,[26] and a divestiture of title thereupon by proper proceedings by or on behalf of the United States.[27] The right of the government to forfeit a grant for breach of conditions subsequent is in no way dependent upon express words of forfeiture or reinvestiture of title in the granting act, but exists, although there are no such words;[28] nor does the fact that the government imposed as a further condition the right to complete the road itself deprive it of the power to forfeit the grant upon failure of the railroad company to construct the road.[29]

or imposing limitations on the right of the grantee to dispose of the land,[31] is in the nature of a condition subsequent;[32] and hence a failure to comply therewith does not ipso facto work a forfeiture of the land;[33] but merely subjects the grantee to a liability to have a forfeiture declared or enforced,[34] which can be done only by appropriate action on the part of the granting government,[35] and until a forfeiture has been actually enforced by legislative declaration or judicial proceedings the land does not revert to the grantor but the title remains in the grantee.[36]

(c) How Forfeiture Declared or Ascertained — (1) In General. Congress or a state legislature may declare a forfeiture of a railroad grant without a judicial inquiry to determine whether there has been a breach of the conditions, leaving the question of such breach to be determined by subsequent judicial proceedings,[37] and any public assertion by legislative act of the ownership of the United States or the state, after default of the grantee — such as an act resuming control of the lands and franchises and appropriating them to particular uses, or granting them to others to carry out the original object — is equally effective and operative.[38]

(2) Proceedings For Forfeiture. In a suit by the United States to forfeit a land grant the fact that the bill is framed to procure a forfeiture of the entire grant does not preclude a forfeiture of a part of the grant only.[39] A decretal order of a federal court appointing a receiver, in a suit by the United States to forfeit lands covered by a grant of congress, the conditions of which have not been performed, and to recover timber severed therefrom, which directs the receiver to take possession of the lands, and all timber and logs thereon, is not void as to a claimant of such logs because he was not a party to the suit, the sequestration of the property being in rem.[40]

(F) Effect of Forfeiture [44]— (1) In General. A forfeiture declared or adjudged in proper manner frees the land from all rights or claims arising under the grant,[45] reinvests the legal title in the United States,[46] restores the land to the public domain,[47] and renders it subject to disposition under the general land laws.[48]

Deviation from route adopted.— Where a railroad company which has been granted land within a certain distance of its road has adopted a route designated on a map filed with the secretary of the interior, and accepted by that officer, a deviation from the routes so adopted will not avail a preëmptor, where it appears that the land claimed by him is within the required limit, whether measured from the line of the road as adopted or from that constructed. Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 360, 1 S. Ct. 336, 27 L. ed. 201.

Right attaching in interim between expiration of grant and renewal.— Where the original grant to a state in aid of railroads expired by limitation but was subsequently renewed, subject to all the conditions of the original grant, one of which was that if the right of preëmption had attached to any of the lands thus granted other lands should be selected in lieu thereof, one whose preëmption right attached in the interim between the expiration of the original grant and its renewal was entitled to the land. Confirmation of title of settlers.— A person who, in March, 1888, settled on land granted to the Ontonagon R. Co., but which had not been earned by such company, with a view of making a homestead of it under the laws of the United States, expecting at the time that such grant would be removed, and that he could then enter the land, is a bona fide claimant of such homestead, within the meaning of the act of congress of March 2, 1889 (25 U. S. St. at L. 1008), confirming title in such claimants, although he knew of the grant to such railroad company. Lake Superior Ship-Canal, etc., Co. v. Cunningham, 155 U. S. 354, 15 S. A. 609)], holding that the provision of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's grant of public lands, that "the president of the United States shall cause the lands to be surveyed for forty miles on both sides of the entire line of said road after the general route shall be fixed, and as fast as may be required by the construction of said railroad, and the odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale or entry or preëmption be-

(II) Power of Secretary of Interior or Land Department Apart From Statutory Authority. It has been held that as the interior department possesses plenary power to withdraw public lands from settlement and market at will, an order of the secretary of the interior withdrawing lands within a railroad grant is valid without and independent of any statutory authority;[55] but it has also been held that where a railroad grant expressly reserves from its operations all lands to which the right of preëmption or homestead settlement has attached when the line is fixed, the land commissioner, in the absence of express direction by congress, and prior to the location of the line, has no authority to withdraw lands within the general grant from preëmption or homestead settlement.[56] Under a railroad grant providing that the "odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale or entry or preëmption, before or after they are surveyed, except by said company as provided in this act," but that the provisions of the preëmption and homestead laws "shall be and the same are hereby extended to all other lands on the line of said road when surveyed, excepting those hereby granted to said company," the secretary of the interior is not authorized to withdraw from settlement lands outside the place limits but within the indemnity limits, in advance of any selection by the railroad company.[57]

(III) How Withdrawal Effected. Some of the grants effect such a withdrawal by their own force when the route is fixed,[58] while others contemplate that the withdrawal shall be effected by some more or less formal action on the part of the secretary of the interior or the land department,[59] and until such action fore or after they are surveyed, except by said company, as provided in this act," would not be construed as withdrawing the lands within the limits indicated from sale or entry until the line of the road was definitely fixed by filing a map thereof with the commissioner of the general land office, as required by the statute. Duty to withdraw lands.— Under a statute providing that as soon as maps designating the routes of a railroad and its branches are filed with the secretary of the interior it shall be his duty to withdraw the lands from the market, it is not his duty to withdraw the lands until such maps are filed. St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Sage, 71 Fed. 40, 17 C. C. A. 558.

Sufficiency of order of withdrawal.—An order of the land department directing the local land office to suspend the preëmption, settlement, and sale a "body of land about

(iv) Validity of Withdrawal. When railroad lands are withdrawn from preëmption and sale by the direction of the secretary of the interior, it will be presumed that the railroad company has filed a map designating the general route of the road.[61] Whether the land commissioner included too much land in an order of withdrawal is a matter for the determination of the land department and cannot be revised by the courts.[62]

(v) Effect of Withdrawal — (a) In General. The withdrawal passes no title,[63] and does not affect any rights in the land previously acquired,[64] or prevent the perfection of such rights; [65] but it prevents the subsequent acquisition, under the general land laws, of any interest in the lands, by persons having no interest therein at the time of the withdrawal,[66] although the railroad company for whose

A joint resolution of congress "saving and reserving all the rights of actual settlers" confers no new rights upon a preëmptor going upon railroad lands subsequent to the benefit the lands are withdrawn is not at the time authorized under the law of the state to take a perfect title to the lands.[67] And even though the land is ultimately found not to be within the grant no rights can be obtained therein prior to its restoration to the public domain.[68] A withdrawal of lands from "sale or entry, or preëmption" applies to the sale, preëmption or entry of lands under and by virtue of the general laws of congress, and does not cover any other mode of disposal of the public lands by the United States.[69]

(B) Lands Affected by Withdrawal. An order of the land department, withdrawing the odd-numbered sections within the indemnity limits of a railroad land grant, is inoperative as respects lands then occupied and claimed by a qualified preëmptor,[70] and if such lands are subsequently abandoned, they will, until a selection is made by the railway company, be deemed still open for homestead settlement.[71] A withdrawal of the lands "hereby granted" applies only to the odd-numbered sections within the place limits and leaves such sections within the indemnity limits subject to entry and acquisition under the general laws.[72]

(C) Relief of Settlers. The act of congress of 1880 for the relief of settlers on the public lands [73] so far modified a previous order of withdrawal based merely on general route that such order would not affect any occupancy or settlement made in good faith, after the passage of that act, and prior to definite location.[74]

(VI) REVOCATION OF WITHDRAWAL AND RESTORATION OF LAND TO PUBLIC DOMAIN. Where an unconditional withdrawal is made by statute the lands can be restored to the public domain by statutory authority only,[75] and the secretary of the interior has no power to repeal or modify the statute, or restore the lands to their former condition.[76] But a voluntary order of the secretary of the interior, reserving and withdrawing certain lands from sale and entry, as subject to selection under a railroad grant, vests no rights in the railroad beneficiary inconsistent with the right of a preëmptor to settle and enter, but such order is revocable, and is pro tanto revoked by allowing a settlement and entry of a tract under the preëmption laws.[77] Where the commissioner of the land office withdrew lands, within the limits of a railroad grant, from settlement, and subsequently the secretary of the interior made an order revoking the withdrawal, but directing that entries should not be received until after thirty days' notice by

advertisement, and a few days later, and before notice was given, the secretary directed the local officers to suspend the restoration, until further orders, the effect of the last order was to suspend the order of revocation, and to withdraw the lands from settlement, and persons settling on the lands after such orders acquired no rights in them.[78]

q. Rights Under Conflicting or Overlapping Grants — (I) Overlap of Place Limits — (A) Simultaneous Grants. Where by the same statute or by statutes of the same date grants are made for the benefit of several different railroads, and two or more roads legally located in pursuance of such grants cross each other or approach each other so nearly that the limits of the primary grants for the benefit of each overlap, each of the roads is entitled to an equal undivided share of the land within the overlap,[79] without regard to priority of location of the lines of road,[80] or priority of construction,[81] unless the statute itself indicates an intention on the part of congress that one grant shall be subordinate to the other,[82]

Grants not simultaneous by relation.— By Act Cong. July 27, 1866, § 3 (14 U. S. St. at L. 292), organizing the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, congress, in the usual terms, granted lands to it to aid in the construction of a transcontinental railroad. In section 18 it authorized the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a California corporation, to connect with such road near the California boundary, for a road to San Francisco, and, to aid in the construction thereof, declared that that company should have similar grants of land, subject to all the conditions and limitations of the grant to the former company. By Act Cong. March 3, 1871 (16 U. S. St. at L. 573), the Texas Pacific railroad was incorporated, grants of land were made to it, and in section 23 authority was also given to the Southern Pacific Company to build a connecting road from a certain point on the Colorado river to San Francisco, "with the same rights, grants and privileges, and subject to the same limitations, restrictions and conditions," as were granted to it by the act incorporating the Atlantic and Pacific Company, provided that no rights of the latter company should be impaired. In a contest concerning these grants it was held that the fact that the act of 1871, in terms, bestowed upon the Southern Pacific Company the same rights, grants, and privileges as it received under the act of 1866, did not operate to make the grant relate back to that date, so as to present the case of simultaneous grants of the same lands to different companies. March 3, 1871, c. 122 (16 U. S. St. at L. 573), the grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was subordinate to that to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company.

Right to subordinate earlier grant.—A grant to a railroad company of sections on either side of its road "not reserved, sold, granted or otherwise appropriated, and free from preëmption, or other claims or rights, at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed, and a plat thereof filed," providing that whenever, "prior to said time," any land included in the grant shall have been disposed of, the company may select indemnity lands, does not preclude congress from subsequently giving another railroad company the right to earn lands which may be within the general grant to the first company before its road is definitely located and the

and under such circumstances it has been held proper to patent the land within the overlap to the grantees as tenants in common.[83]

(B) Grants of Different Dates. In case of an overlap of the place limits of two or more railroads having land grants of different dates, the road having the earlier grant takes all the land within the overlap to the total exclusion of the road having the later grant,[84] without regard to when the respective maps of definite location were filed,[85] or the roads constructed.[86]

(II) Conflict Between Place and Indemnity Limits. Lands within the primary or place limits of one grant, and also within the indemnity limits of an earlier grant, pass under the later grant, when at the time of the filing of the map of definite location of the road claiming under the later grant such lands had not been selected under the earlier grant,[87] or withdrawn by the secretary of the interior.[88] A withdrawal of land within the indemnity limits made in aid of an earlier grant, prior to the filing of a map of definite location by a company having a later grant containing an exception of land subject to other claims or rights, operates to except the withdrawn lands from the scope of the later grant,[89] where the later grant is entirely independent of and distinct from the earlier grant;[90] but where land withdrawn as being within the indemnity limits of a grant is included within the place limits of a later grant to the same grantee, it passes under the later grant.[91]

(III) Overlap of Indemnity Limits. The general rule is that where the indemnity limits of two railroad grants overlap, the right to any particular lands within the overlap is determined solely by priority of selection and is not affected by priority of grant, location, or construction;[92] but it has been held that where the deficiency within the granted limits is so great that all the indemnity lands will not make good the loss, no formal selection is necessary to give them to the company having the older grant, as against the other company.[93]

place limits of the elder grant may be selected by a railroad company having a later grant within whose indemnity limits the lands lie.[96]

r. Revocation of Grant. Where by a true construction of an act of congress granting public lands to a state in aid of railroads the state acquires a beneficial interest in the land, the act is irrepealable and a subsequent act attempting to revoke the grant is void.[97] But the grant may be revoked if under its terms the state acquired a mere naked trust or power to dispose of the land for certain specified uses and purposes,[98] although even in such case, if the state has exercised its power and conferred upon a railroad company any right, title, or interest in the land, as it was authorized to do, it is not competent for congress to afterward repeal the grant and divest the title of the company.[99] Where the act making a railroad grant expressly reserves to the government the right at any time to alter, amend, or repeal it, a part of the grant may be withdrawn and the grant to that extent superseded.[1]

s. Disposition of Lands — (i) Power of State. By accepting a grant of lands in aid of railroads a state becomes the trustee of the United States, and as such its power of disposition of the lands is limited to the purposes expressed in the act creating the trust,[2] and the lands can be disposed of only as authorized by the act,[3] and any application or disposition of the lands by the state in violation of the terms of the grant is absolutely void.[4]

(ii) Power of Railroad Company. A power given by act of congress to a railroad company to mortgage its aid lands, etc., for means to construct and operate its road, does not include the power to sell and assign them.[5] Where a purchaser from a railroad company has taken possession under his purchase and is still holding it undisturbed, but in a suit by the railroad company to enforce a vendor's lien sets up the defense that the railroad company had no

Right to object to disposition.— Where congress gives lands to a state for railroad purposes, and for "no other," and the state, granting the great bulk of them to such purposes, allows settlements by preëmption, where improvement and occupancy have been made on the lands, prior to the date of the grant by congress, and since continued, a purchaser from the railroad company of a part which the state has thus opened to preëmption cannot object to the act of the state in having thus appropriated the part, the railroad company having, by formal acceptance of the bulk of the land, under the same act which opened a fractional part to a preëmption, itself waived the right to do so. authority to sell the land and that he acquired no title, the burden of proof is upon him.[6]

(III) Selection of Lands For Sale. Where lands to be sold are to be selected, a sale by the road of any specific parcels of land, not exceeding the quantity earned and lying within the limits specified in the grant is, to that extent, an effectual selection.[7] When a railroad commences its selection on any twenty miles it has earned, the title to all the land within the limits embraced in the grant becomes vested in it, and grants for lands outside are invalid as far as they are for land the company has no right to select.[8]

(IV) Time of Sale — (A) In General. A conveyance by the railroad company after the line of the road is definitely fixed, although before a patent is issued to it, passes the title.[9]

(B) Construction of Road as Prerequisite to Sale. In a number of instances the acts of congress granting lands in aid of railroads have provided for the disposition of portions of the grant from time to time as the road progressed,[10] permitting, in some cases, the disposition of a part of the lands before any part of the road is built;[11] but making the construction of certain portions of the road a condition precedent to the disposition of any more land,[12] and a conveyance in disregard of such a condition cannot pass any title[13] even though the lands conveyed are subsequently earned by the railroad company.[14]

Location of lands to be first sold.— Under the act of congress of May 15, 1856 (11 U. S. St. at L. 9), granting alternate sections to the state of Iowa in aid of railroads and authorizing a sale of the first one hundred and twenty sections before any portion of the road was built, the choice of such one hundred and twenty sections was not confined to any specific locality, but they could be chosen anywhere within a continuous twenty miles. Courtright v. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co., 35 Iowa 386 [affirmed in 21 Wall. (U. S.) 310, 22 L. ed. 582].

Exhaustion of power to sell not presumed. — Where a railroad company is shown to have certain lands within the prescribed distance from its line, and the record fails to show that it has sold any other lands granted to aid in its construction, it cannot be presumed that it had previously exhausted the power given it by the grant to sell one hundred and twenty sections before doing any work of construction. Swann v. Larmore, 70 Ala. 555.

Approval of state.— Where the act of congress granting land to a state allows a certain portion thereof to be sold before construction of the railroads, and an act of the state legislature granting the land to the state imposes no further restriction upon the right of the company to sell, the company may sell land within such amount before construction, and without the knowledge, consent, or approval of the state. (v) Preference Right of Actual Settlers. Under some of the statutes persons who have settled in good faith on railroad lands prior to the time when the line of the road was definitely fixed and located are given the right to purchase the land on which they have settled, at a fixed price;[15] but the fact that one was in actual occupancy of land patented to a railroad company did not of itself give him a superior right to purchase the same from the railroad, as against another between whom and himself there was no privity.[16]

(vi) Contracts of Sale.[17] Where a railroad company has contracted to sell land claimed as part of its grant, the contract providing that it will use "ordinary diligence" to procure a patent from the United States and will thereupon convey to the purchaser, and that "in case it be finally determined that patents shall not issue" to the railroad company for the land it will repay the amount paid in by the purchaser, the purchaser cannot rescind the contract and reclaim the money paid where the railroad company has taken all proper steps to procure patents and prosecuted and defended expensive litigation for that purpose, and it has not been finally decided that it is not entitled thereto.[18]

(vii) Patents and Certificates From State. A state patent for land as railroad aid land passes such title as the state has, but does not establish that it has any title.[19] Under a statute providing that certificates or patents from the state shall be prima facie evidence of title in fee, such a certificate or patent is conclusive evidence of title in fee in the absence of any evidence to overcome the presumption imported thereby;[20] but such a statute merely prescribes a rule of evidence for the courts of the state and is not binding upon the courts of other states so as to make a patent evidence, in such courts, that the title had passed from the United States to the state.[21]

(viii) Purchase of Land Certificates Issued to Railroad Company. Where a trust deed, executed by a railroad company to secure its bonds, purported to convey a large number of sections of public lands, being a portion of what the company would be entitled to on the completion of its road, the certificates for which were receivable from time to time as portions of the road were completed, purchasers in good faith from the railroad company of a part of the

Insufficient settlement.— Where some two months before a line of road was located a person entered on land within the grant, built a shanty, and dug a well, but did not reside on the land or in any way occupy the shanty, and during the following winter, after the location of the road, he cut some rails and built fences on the land, but never slept on the land until about three years after the road was located, it was held that he was not a settler in good faith prior to the time when the road was located. certificates, without notice that they were covered by said deed of trust, acquired a good title free from the encumbrance of the trust deed.[22]

(IX) PAYMENT FOR LANDS AND RECOVERY OF PRICE. The governor is under no duty to issue a patent for railroad aid land sold by the state until it is fully paid for.[23] A bona fide purchaser whose title has been confirmed by statute [24] cannot resist the enforcement of the vendor's lien for the purchase-money on the ground of the vendor's defect in title.[25]

(X) MORTGAGES [26] BY RAILROAD COMPANY.[27] It is competent for a railroad company, to whom the state has granted lands, granted to the state by the United States, subject to the rights reserved by the United States in its grant, to mortgage the alternate sections to the state on its guaranteeing bonds issued to raise money to construct the road,[28] and where such lands were mortgaged back to the state by an instrument containing a provision, authorized by statute to be inserted, that the railroad company should have the privilege of "selling said lands, or any part thereof, in accordance with the acts of congress granting the same," one who derived title to a portion of such lands from a subsequent sale by the railroad company, made in direct violation of said acts of congress, took subject to the lien of the mortgage.[29] The trustees of a mortgage on lands claimed under a grant made by congress to aid in the construction of a railroad, and also the holders of bonds secured thereby, are affected with notice of the conditions under which the secretary of the interior was authorized to issue patents in pursuance of the grant.[30]

(XI) SALE UNDER GENERAL LAWS OF LAND NOT DISPOSED OF BY GRANTEE. Under some of the railroad grants, land which is not sold or disposed of within a certain time after the completion of the road becomes liable to be sold to actual settlers under the general land laws [31] without further action of the railroad company [32] or of congress.[33] Such sales are to be at the same price as is established for other public lands,[34] and the purchase-money is to be paid to the railroad company.[35] Such a provision precludes any sale of the land for taxes under state authority prior to the expiration of the time limited.[36]

t. Protection of Rights Acquired in Reliance Upon Railroad Grant — (i) The Adjustment Act and Supplementary Legislation. In the statute known as the Adjustment Act, passed for the purpose of adjusting railroad land grants congress has made provision for the protection of the rights of citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention of becoming such, who have in good faith purchased from a railroad company land not within its grant.[37] Where such persons have purchased land erroneously patented or certified to the railroad company, their titles are confirmed,[38] while if they have purchased land within the numbered sections prescribed in the grant and coterminous with the constructed part of the road, but which land has not been conveyed to or for the use of the company, and is for any reason excepted from the grant, they are entitled to purchase the land from the government at the ordinary government price for like lands,[39] unless the land was at the date of the sale in the bona fide occupation of adverse claimants under the homestead or preëmption laws, whose claims and occupation have not been since voluntarily abandoned.[40] It has also been provided by a later act supplementary to the Adjustment Act that no patent for railroad lands held by a bona fide purchaser shall be vacated or annulled but the title of such purchaser is confirmed.[41]

(ii) Lands Within Provision. The Adjustment Act confirmed in bona fide purchasers from a railroad company the title to lands which, when certified under the grant, were public lands of the United States, and not subject to individual claims, although at the time the grant attached they had been withdrawn from its operation, where they were subsequently restored to the public domain, were within the limits of the grant, and were earned by the company;[42] but no protection is given to innocent purchasers of lands unlawfully selected by a railroad company as indemnity lands, where the railroad company has never received any patent or certificate therefor.[43] Lands granted by congress to a state and by the state to a railroad company on condition, and which were afterward resumed by the state for the failure of the company to comply with such condition and reverted to the United States, are not lands "excepted from the operation of the grant," within the meaning of the Adjustment Act; and hence a purchaser from the company acquires no right to purchase the lands from the United States.[44]

(iii) Time of Purchase. The Adjustment Act affords protection not only as to purchases made prior to its enactment but also as to purchases which were made after that time and before the final adjustment of the grant;[45] and the same is true of the supplementary act of 1896 confirming the title of purchasers in good faith.[46]

(IV) Persons Entitled to Protection — (A) In General. In order to entitle a person to protection under the Adjustment Act it is essential that he should have purchased in good faith.[47] Purchasers from the railroad company are not protected unless they are citizens of the United States, or have declared their intention of becoming such citizens.[48] A state corporation is entitled to protection,[49] but a corporation organized under the laws of a foreign country is not.[50] The right of purchase from the government is not limited to the immediate purchaser from the company but may be exercised by a subsequent grantee who has the necessary qualifications,[51] and in such case it is immaterial what were the qualifications of the original purchaser;[52] but the subsequent grantee must himself be a bona fide purchaser and not one whose purchase is a purely speculative transaction entered into for the purpose of acquiring title from the government for the benefit of a foreigner.[53] The preferential right of purchase from the government inures to the benefit of a person seeking to bring settlers on such lands and who was given, by written agreement with the railway company, the right to purchase land for himself and others when title thereto should be acquired by the company.[54] The protection afforded by the Adjustment Act does not extend to one who purchased, after the date of that act, certain unearned lands included in a grant to a state, the title to which the state, before the passage of the Adjustment Act, had resumed by legislative enactment, upon the railway company's default, and then relinquished to the United States.[55] The grantees in a conveyance of land "granted by said acts of congress" without specific description do not become bona fide purchasers of any particular tract not then patented to the railroad company and not actually included in the grant.[56]

in good faith from railroad companies expressly excepts mortgagees from its operation;[58] but where a railroad company to which a land grant was made, and to which lands were certified thereunder as earned, conveyed the legal title to such lands in trust for its bondholders, and on the foreclosure of a subsequent mortgage its equity of redemption was sold, leaving the title in the trustees, and subject to the rights of the first bondholders, such sale operated to extinguish all title and interest of the original grantee in the lands, and the trustees and purchaser of the equity of redemption became bona fide purchasers, within the meaning of the statute.[59] The act of 1896 does not expressly exclude mortgagees from its operation,[60] but even under that act it is held that mortgagees have no other or greater rights than the company itself in lands erroneously patented or certified under its grant.[61]

(c) Settlers Under License.[62] A mere license given by a railroad company to settle upon a tract of land does not constitute the settler a purchaser, within the meaning of the Adjustment Act where the company expressly declined to enter into a contract of sale.[63]

(d) Who Are Purchasers in Good Faith. In order to entitle a person to protection it is only necessary that he should have purchased in good faith and the presence of all the elements necessary to constitute him a technical "bona fide purchaser" is not necessary;[64] and so it matters not what constructive notice may be chargeable to the purchaser, if, in actual ignorance of any defect in the railroad company's title and in reliance upon the action of the government in the apparent transfer of title by certification or patent, he has made an honest purchase of the lands.[65] It is, however, essential to entitle a purchaser from the railroad company to protection that he should have no notice subsequent to and independent of the certification or patent of any defect in title,[66] and a person cannot claim to be a purchaser in good faith if he has notice of facts outside of the records of the land department disclosing a prior right,[67] and so where a preëmptor, who had filed his claim was in possession when the certification was made and when the land was purchased by another person from the railroad company, the purchaser was not entitled to protection.[68] But a mere change in the opinions of the officers of the government as to the validity of the railroad company's title, although made known to persons proposing to purchase from such company, is not sufficient to take away from the purchasers the protection of good faith.[69] The fact that, at the time a contract was made for the purchase of land from a railroad company, its road was not completed, and its grant not fully earned, although it was built beyond the point where the land was situated, and that it was subsequently determined that the land purchased did not pass to the company, because it had previously received and disposed of as much in quantity as it had earned, cannot charge the purchaser with knowledge of facts which would, as a matter of law, affect the good faith of his purchase.[70] The fact that a purchaser of lands patented to a railroad company holds under a contract, and has paid only a portion of the purchase-money, does not affect his character as a bona fide purchaser.[71] The Adjustment Act commits the determination of the good faith of purchasers to the land department and its finding that a purchase was made in good faith will not be disturbed unless clearly shown to have been based on an erroneous construction of the law.[72]

(v) Reservations in Deed From Company. The statutory provisions confirming the title of bona fide purchasers as against the United States cannot operate to free the title of a purchaser of reservations contained in the railroad company's deed to him.[73]

(vi) Adverse Rights of Individual Claimants. One who enters on public land and constructs a pipe line thereon, under a claim of ownership of a water right, is entitled to the protection afforded vested ditch and water rights by act of congress,[74] as against subsequent purchasers of the land from a railroad company, whose only claim to such land rests upon the right of purchase from the United States, given by the Adjustment Act.[75] When the issue is between individual claimants, purchasers from defaulting railroad companies of unearned lands are not to be favored over other good faith claimants without regard being paid to the actual equities of such persons, but the respective rights of such contesting claimants must be settled according to the established and recognized rules of equity and public policy.[76]

76. Benner v. Lane, 116 Fed. 407, holding that the right of a bona fide homestead settler upon public land, which, while within the limits of a railroad grant, was never earned nor patented thereunder, and to which the company and the state had forfeited their rights under the terms of the grant many years prior to his settlement, to make entry of such land under the homestead law upon its restoration to the public domain, is superior to the right and equity of one claiming the land under a contract of purchase from the railroad company entered into for speculative purposes, after the land had been improved by the settler, and while he was residing thereon with his family, of which facts the purchaser had actual knowledge, and that the good faith of the homestead settler is not impeached by the fact that the land when he settled upon it was within the limits of a railroad grant, under which it had been withdrawn from market, where he had knowledge that the terms of the grant had not been complied with, nor the land earned thereunder, and good reason to believe that it would be restored to the public domain, as it in fact was.

(VII) Recovery of Price From Railroad Companies. The acts confirming the titles of persons who have purchased in good faith from railroad companies lands not within the grant also authorize a recovery by the government from the railroad companies of the price of such lands;[77] and it is established that these provisions are a valid exercise of the power of congress.[78] The effect of such provisions is to give a right of action to recover the value of land previously patented and sold, when the sum sought to be recovered does not exceed that received by the company for the land;[79] and a suit for such recovery is within the cognizance of a court of equity where the sales cover numerous tracts and were made during a series of years and the bill prays for a discovery and accounting with respect thereto.[80] A suit may be brought against the railroad company where, although no claim to the land has been presented to the land department, it appears that there is a basis for one.[81] It is no defense that some of the lands involved were sold by the company for less than the government price, where it received a larger average price for the lands, taken as a whole,[82] nor will the fact that the company has not yet received the full quantity of land to which it is entitled prevent a recovery, where there are sufficient other lands within its indemnity limits from which it may select to make up the deficiency.[83] The fact that the error in issuing pat-

The conveyance to the innocent purchaser is equivalent to a conversion of personal property. Irrespective, therefore, of the act of Congress the Government had the right, when it found that these lands had been erroneously patented to the railroad company and by it sold to persons who dealt with it in good faith, to sue the railroad company and recover the value of the lands so wrongfully received and subsequently conveyed. The acts of Congress really inure to the benefit of the railroad company and restrict the right of the Government, for they provide that the recovery shall in no case be more than the minimum government price. (VIII) Purchasers From Railroad Forfeiting Grant. Where an act of congress provided that if a land grant railroad did not perform certain conditions in a certain time it should forfeit all right to lands granted in aid of the railroad; that, in case of failure to so perform such conditions, the legislature might confer the grant upon some other corporation upon such terms as it should see fit, to carry out the purposes of the original act donating the land; and that the corporation upon whom the grant should be so conferred by the legislature should be entitled to enjoy all of the grant not then lawfully disposed of, as if the same had been originally conferred upon it; and on the failure of the grantee to perform the required conditions, the legislature conferred the grant upon another company under an arrangement to that effect between the two companies, the later grantee was not the mere assignee of the first grantee and did not take the unearned lands subject to the conveyances of the latter company; and hence patents of such lands subsequently issued to the later grantee did not inure to the benefit of the grantees of the first grantee.[87] An act of congress forfeiting and resuming title to lands not earned by the completion of a railroad, but confirming the title of purchasers from the company of such lands, does not confirm the title of a purchaser at an unauthorized tax-sale under state authority.[88]

(IX) Rights of Permissive Settlers Upon Railroad Land Restored to Public Domain. Congress has given to all persons who have settled and made valuable and permanent improvements upon any odd-numbered sections of land within a railroad withdrawal, in good faith, and with the permission or license of the railroad company, and with the expectation of purchasing the same, the right to purchase not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of the same from the United States if, for any cause, it shall be restored to the public domain,[89] and the right so given a settler is not defeated by the fact that after the withdrawal has been set aside the land is included within the boundary of a forest reservation, created by proclamation of the president, before it has been surveyed, so as to give the settler an opportunity to purchase.[90] The right of purchase extends to persons who took possession and made improvements under a circular letter of the railroad company announcing that persons making improvements would be given a right to purchase in preference to others,[91] although they have not actually settled on the lands.[92]

2. Grants of Rights of Way and Land For Station Purposes, Etc.— a. Congressional Grants. Congress has from time to time made various grants to particular railroads of rights of way through the public domain;[93] and it has been held that a railroad is a highway within the meaning of the statute granting the right of way for the construction of highways over public lands not reserved for public uses.[94] In 1875, however, congress made a general grant to any railroad company which filed with the secretary of the interior a copy of its articles of incorporation and due proofs of its organization thereunder, of a right of way through the public domain, to the extent of one hundred feet upon each side of the central line of the road,[95] and also of ground adjacent to such right of way for station buildings, depots, machine shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water stations, not to exceed in amount twenty acres for each station, to the extent of one station for each ten miles of its road.[96]

b. Prerequisites to Obtaining Benefits of Grant— (i) In General. The act of congress granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands and land for stations, etc., is in the nature of a general offer;[97] and in order to entitle a particular railroad company to the benefits of the act, it is necessary that the company shall comply with the requirements thereof.[98]

(ii) Proof of Organization. The due organization of the railroad company and the furnishing of due proof thereof are conditions precedent to the acquirement of a right of way by virtue of the general grant to railroads,[99] and the duty of furnishing such proof rests upon the railroad company.[1] Where the law of the territory in which a railroad company is incorporated provides that the due incorporation of a company shall, without further proof or acts, operate as its organization, the filing with the secretary of the interior of a copy of articles of incorporation of a railroad under said statute, and a copy of the statute, operates as proof of the organization.[2]

(III) Filing and Approval of Profile. The statute requires that any railroad company desiring to secure its benefits shall, within twelve months after the location of any section of twenty miles of its road, if the same is upon surveyed land, and if it is upon unsurveyed land, within twelve months after the United States survey thereof, file with the register of the land office for the district where the land is located a profile of its road,[3] and upon approval thereof by the secretary of the interior the same shall be noted upon the plats in the local land office,[4] and thereafter the lands over which the right of way passes are to be disposed of subject to such right of way.[5] This provision, however, relates merely to the case of a railroad company which desires to secure a present grant and give to it fixity of location before its road is constructed,[6] and the actual construction of the road is a definite location which entitles it to the benefits of the grant, although the profile map of the road has not been filed.[7]

(IV) Filing Map of General Route. A provision in an act of congress granting to a railroad a right of way through the public domain, that the railroad company shall within two years designate the general route of the road as near as may be and file a map of the same in the department of the interior, does not affect the grant of the right of way, but only furnishes the means by which the secretary can withdraw the land within a specified distance of such designated route from preëmption, private entry, and sale.[8]

(V) Approval of President. Where a grant of a right of way was made to a railroad company subject to the approval of the president of the United States, and the company filed its map of definite location with the secretary of the interior, it did everything required of it to obtain title to its right of way, and railroad company and proof of organization thereunder.

c. Lines as to Which Right of Way May Be Acquired — (I) In General. A railroad company can acquire a right of way through the public domain as to such line or lines as are described in the charter or articles of incorporation and such only,[10] and the act of a company in making surveys is of no avail until the power to build the road upon the surveyed line is in a proper manner assumed by or conferred upon the company.[11]

(II) Change of Location. A railroad company which has obtained approval of a profile of its road by the interior department may change its route or a portion thereof, providing such change does not affect intervening rights;[12] but a railroad which has exercised its right under its grant, by surveying its line and filing a map of its route, cannot subsequently reclaim its grant on changing its line of road, so as to affect the rights of one who has purchased from the government land within the new right of way.[13]

d. Lands Subject to Right of Way — (I) In General. The right to appropriate lands for a right of way extends to any lands of the United States not already disposed of or reserved.[14]

(II) Land Subject to Preëxisting Rights — (A) In General. Rights in public lands acquired by an individual, by entry or settlement under the land laws, before the profile of a railroad is filed and approved or the road constructed, are superior to the rights of the railroad under the grant of a right of way through the public domain,[15] although the company qualified to take under the grant and determined by a final survey the exact location for its road across the claimant's land before the latter acquired any rights,[16] or although the company has done all that is necessary to vest in it the title to the specific lands before the issuance of a patent to the individual claimant.[17] If the road is built across the lands of such claimant he must be compensated therefor,[18] and no rights of the railroad company attach to the land until a condemnation as provided by law.[19] Where, however, a railroad company locates its road across land occupied by a claimant under the land laws whose title is inchoate, and complies with the law, the railroad company acquires all the interest of the United States in the land within the right of way, subject to the contingency of the claimant perfecting his title, so that if the claimant abandons the land there immediately accrues to the railroad company a perfect title as against the United States and all persons who then have no rights in the land.[20] The grant applies to land which has been entered upon and improved by an individual who, at the time when the grant becomes effective, has taken none of the steps toward the acquisition of the title which are necessary to give him an interest in the land such as the law recognizes,[21] and the railroad company may maintain ejectment against such an occupant.[22]

(B) Land Within Railroad Aid Grant.[23] After a railroad has been definitely located and a grant in aid of its construction has attached to specific lands, such lands cease to be "public lands" and cannot be appropriated by another railroad for its right of way.[24]

(C) Town-Sites. Land which has been entered as a town-site, pursuant to the statute,[25] is not subject to appropriation for a railroad right of way under a subsequent grant.[26]

Cancellation of entry at instance of adverse claimant.— Where A made a homestead entry and B entered thereon and made a settlement, and a railroad appropriated a strip across the tract for its right of way, and thereafter B by contest secured the relinquishment of A to be filed in the United States land office, and thereafter made homestead entry for such land under a preference right, and complied with all the provisions of the law, the cancellation of A's entry did not cause a reversion of the right of way to the railroad company. (D) Indian Lands.[27] The general grant of rights of way through the public lands does not apply to Indian reservations,[28] but in some of the grants to particular railroads rights of way through Indian reservations have been specifically granted.[29] Lands ceded to the United States by an Indian nation are public lands within the grant of rights of way.[30]

(E) School Sections.[31] A grant of a right of way applies to sections reserved by the organic act of a territory for the purpose of being granted to the future state as school lands;[32] but on general principles it would seem that such a grant does not apply to school sections the title to which has previously vested in a state.[33]

(III) Mineral Lands.[34] A congressional grant of a right of way through the public lands includes a right of way over mineral lands.[35]

(IV) Unsurveyed Lands. The act of 1875 granting lands for rights of way and stations, etc., does not limit the right to acquire lands for such purposes to surveyed lands but contemplates that railroads may be extended across unsurveyed lands, and such lands may be acquired under the grant.[36]

Words importing present absolute grant.— A statute providing "that the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted" to a certain railroad is a present absolute grant, and all persons acquiring any portions of the public lands after the passage of such act take the same subject to the right of way conferred by it for the proposed road. f. Nature of Estate Acquired. It has been held that the estate acquired by a railroad company under the act of congress granting lands for right of way and station grounds, etc., is more than a mere easement, and is a base, qualified, or limited fee,[44] giving the right to the exclusive possession and use of the land for the purposes contemplated by the law,[45] with a reversionary interest remaining in the United States to be conveyed by it to the person to whom the land may be contains no reservations or exceptions. . . . Nor is there anything in the policy of the government with respect to the public lands which would call for any qualification of the terms. . . . The right of way for the whole distance of the proposed route was a very important part of the aid given. If the company could be compelled to purchase its way over any section that might be occupied in advance of its location, very serious obstacles would be very often imposed to the progress of the road. For any loss of lands by settlement or reservation, other lands are given; but for the loss of the right of way by these means, no compensation is provided, nor could any be given by the substitution of another route. The uncertainty as to the ultimate location of the line of the road is recognized throughout the act, and where any qualification is intended in the operation of the grant of lands, from this circumstance, it is designated. Had a similar qualification upon the absolute grant of the right of way been intended, it can hardly be doubted that it would have been expressed. The railroad company may recover in ejectment the possession of a portion of its right patented, whose rights will be subject to those of the grantee of the right of way and station grounds.[46] A railroad company cannot convey any part of its right of way in any manner which would sever the right of possession from the franchise to operate and maintain a railroad line thereon,[47] neither can it lawfully acquiesce in an adverse possession, and so the statute of limitations does not run against an action by the railroad company to recover possession and maintain the integrity of its right of way.[48]

g. Width and Location of Right of Way[49]— (i) In General. A railroad company is entitled to the full width of right of way prescribed by the act making the grant, and is not limited to so much as it occupies and uses or is actually necessary for the use for which the grant was made.[50] The precise location of the right of way is governed by the location of the central line of the road as shown on the map filed in the land office, and is not affected by the fact that the road as actually constructed deviates from such line [51]

(ii) Right of Way Through Canyons, Etc. The statute provides that a railroad company whose right of way or whose track or road-bed upon such right of way passes through any canyon, pass, or defile shall not prevent any other railroad company from the use and occupancy of the said canyon, pass, or defile, for the purposes of its road, in common with the road first located.[52] Under this provision, where a canyon is broad enough to enable both railroad companies to proceed without interference with each other in the construction of their respective roads, they should be allowed to do so; [53] and if in any portion of a canyon it is of way from one who has wrongfully entered thereon. Central Pac. R. Co. v. Benity, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,551, 5 Sawy. 118, 5 Reporter 229.

impracticable or impossible to lay down more than one road-bed and track, the court, while recognizing the prior right of the railroad company entitled thereto to construct and operate that track for its own business, should by proper orders and upon such terms as may be just and equitable establish and secure the right of another railroad company whose route passes through the canyon, to use the same road-bed and track after completion, in common with the company to which it belongs.[54]

h. Conditions of Grant. The grant of a right of way through the public lands is absolute and subject to no conditions save those necessarily implied, such as that the railroad shall be constructed and used for the purpose designated.[55] A railroad company which accepts a special grant of a right of way is bound by the conditions imposed by the act making the grant.[56]

i. Conflicting Claims. As between two rival railroad companies, each claiming a right of way on the same route over public lands under the statute, that one is prior in right which first definitely adopts the line on which its road is to be built by appropriate corporate action, and then files its map of the location so adopted,[57] and it is immaterial which company first entered on the land to make surveys or do other work prior to such definite location.[58] Where rival aspirants for the same right of way file profiles covering it, it devolves upon the secretary of the interior to determine from the facts which company has the superior claim to the approval of its profile and to give his approval accordingly.[59] While a contest is pending before the secretary the courts should not assume jurisdiction to determine the ultimate right of possession of the right of way in controversy;[60] but a court should upon application of the company showing the greater immediate equity, protect it in the construction of its road, by appropriate temporary orders.[61]

j. Method of Securing Land For Station Purposes, Etc. The acquisition of the right of way by compliance with the provisions of the statute is a prerequisite to the attaching of any right to land for station purposes, etc.[62] The statute contains no requirements for the filing of maps and plats designating the station grounds, etc., selected,[63] and all proceedings relative thereto are governed by the rules and regulations of the interior department,[64] which provide that if a railroad company desires to avail itself of the provisions of the statute granting ground for station buildings, etc., it must file for approval in each separate instance a plat showing in connection with the public survey the surveyed limits and areas of the ground desired; [65] and that when there is received from the office of the secretary of the interior a copy of an approved plat of the ground selected by the company for station purposes, etc., the local officers shall mark the township plat accordingly, and make the necessary notes on the tract books,[66] and note on the certificate of entry of any such lands, in addition to the note concerning the right of way, that the entry is permitted subject to the use and occupation of such railroad company for station purposes.[67]

k. Rights of Way in Alaska. In 1898 congress enacted a law, similar in many respects to the law of 1875,[68] granting the right of way for railroads through public lands in Alaska, and also land for station buildings, etc.[69] Under this act a railroad acquires no right of way over the public lands until the primary survey and plat thereof have been made.[70] Such a survey and plat reserves the right of the railroad company for one year,[71] while, upon the making of the final survey and filing the definite maps of location for a railroad across the public lands, the rights of the railroad are reserved permanently and the land is not subject to any further disposition except subject to such right of way.[72] A valid location of oil claims on public land prior to a survey withdraws such land from entry so that a railroad company cannot subsequently obtain a right of way over it under the statute.[73] A change in the preliminary lines of a right of way, so that the same shall for the first time be located on a placer mine location, can be made only with the consent of the mine locator or upon condemnation proceedings.[74]

l. Construction of Special Grants. Special acts of congress making grants to railroads of lands for right of way, stations, etc., are subject to the general rule of construction that the intent of congress is to govern.[75]

m. Titles or Rights Acquired After Vesting of Title to Right of Way. Titles or rights acquired in public lands after a right of way has vested in a railroad company under a statutory grant are subject to such right of way.[76]

n. Forfeiture. The statute provides that if any section of a railroad is not completed within five years after the location of such section, the grant of the right of way and land for stations, etc., shall be forfeited as to such uncompleted section.[77] Under this provision, however, the failure to complete the road within the time limited does not ipso facto operate as a forfeiture of the grant;[78] but merely authorizes the government to forfeit it by judicial proceedings or by an act of congress resuming title to the lands.[79] In 1906 congress passed a general act declaring a forfeiture of all rights subject to forfeiture under the act of 1875,[80] and the forfeiture so declared is complete and effective without any judicial or other or further proceedings on the part of the government.[81]

p. Repeal of Statutory Grant. A railroad company secures no right of way by constructing its road over lands of a state after the repeal of the act of the legislature by which a right of way over such lands was given.[83]

3. Grant of Right to Take Timber and Materials — a. Statutory Grant. By a general act passed in 1875, congress granted to any railroad company "the right to take, from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road, materials, earth, stone, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad,"[84] and the fact that a particular railroad had previously accepted a grant of the same privilege, which was subsisting at the time of the passage of the act of 1875, does not preclude it from claiming the benefit of the latter act.[85]

b. Prerequisites to Exercise of Right. Before a railroad company is entitled to take timber or other materials from the public lands it must comply with the requirements of the statute;[86] and where timber is cut prior to such time, its subsequent use in the construction of the road does not render the cutting lawful or divest the title of the United States to such timber.[87]

c. Lands to Which Right Extends. While the right to take timber and materials is not limited to lands contiguous to or adjoining the line of the road,[88] the statute was not intended to furnish a general license to a railroad company to enter upon any public land and to range to any extent thereon for timber and other materials for its road;[89] but material may be taken only from lands which are "adjacent" to the right of way.[90] The term "adjacent" is a somewhat relative and uncertain one,[91] and may sometimes depend for its proper application upon the facts in the particular case,[92] the question of whether the lands are adjacent being, according to one decision, a mixed question of law and fact;[93] and while the courts are not disposed to unduly limit the meaning of the word so as to exclude lands which might otherwise fairly be regarded as within the purpose of the grant,[94] the language used will not be extraordinarily enlarged by construction in order to obtain some special and particular end,[95] and in some aspects the meaning of the word may be determined with at least some reference to the size of the strip or right and received no such notice or information until long after the receipt of his patent for the land, the railroad company would be deemed to have forfeited and abandoned its rights, and would not be allowed to maintain ejectment against the grantees and successors in interest of the patentee of such lands.

of way granted,[96] as the term might naturally perhaps be regarded as more extended when used with reference to a large object than when used with reference to a comparatively small one.[97] It has been suggested in the lower federal courts that land is properly regarded as adjacent, which can be reached by ordinary transportation in wagons,[98] or which is directly benefited by the construction of the railroad by reason of its proximity thereto;[99] but the supreme court of the United States has expressed the view that neither of these rules is correct.[1]

d. Purpose of Taking. The right to take materials is not limited to such as are necessary for the actual road-bed and tracks, but those structures which are necessary appurtenances of all railroads may fairly be regarded as parts or portions of the "railroad," the construction of which it was the purpose of congress to aid.[2] The statute was intended merely to aid in the first construction of a railroad, and does not authorize the taking of timber and materials for mere additions or improvements to a road already completed;[3] but a railroad company is authorized to take timber from lands adjacent to any portion of its completed main line, for use in the original construction of a branch line which it is authorized by its charter to build, although such branch is not constructed for several years after the main line.[4]

e. Place of Using Material. The act does not confine the use of the timber and material that may be taken from a proper place for the purpose of construction to any particular or definite portion of the road;[5] but a railroad company has the right to cut or take timber or material from public lands adjacent to the line of its road, and use the same on portions of its line remote from the place from which it was taken.[6]

f. Who May Take Materials. Any person who has a contract with a railroad company to build its road or any part thereof, or to furnish material therefor, is, without any special agreement to that effect, authorized to take the necessary materials from the public lands the same as the railroad company might do;[7]

and if a person not in the employment of the company and having no contract therewith cuts timber off the land adjacent to the line of the road, and the company acquires such timber for the purpose of constructing its road, and so uses it, neither such person nor the company is liable as a wrong-doer.[8]

g. Regulations by Land Department. The grant under discussion is a license to the railroad company "to take" the material necessary for the construction of its road without application to or consent of any officer of the land department, and such department has no authority to make any regulations on the subject of such license.[9]

h. Wrongful Taking. The rights of railroad companies are limited by the grant, and if a company takes material from public lands not adjacent to the line of its road, or takes more than is permitted by the statute, it is liable to the United States as a wrong-doer.[10] But in trover against a railroad company for the alleged wrongful cutting of timber from the public domain, where defendant proves a right under an act of congress to enter on public lands adjacent to its railroad line and cut timber therefrom for certain specified purposes, the presumption is that such cutting was done in accordance with the terms of the act,[11] and the burden of proving that defendant exceeded its grant is on plaintiff.[12]

L. Land Department and Proceedings Therein — 1. In General. The constitution of the United States declares that congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States.[13] Under this provision the sale of the public lands has been placed by statute under the control of the secretary of the interior;[14] and to aid him in the performance of this duty a bureau called the land department has been created, at the head of which is the commissioner of the general land office, with many subordinates.[15] To them, as a special tribunal,[16] congress has confided the execution of the laws which regulate the surveying, the selling, and the general care of the public lands;[17] and in the absence of some specific provision to the contrary in respect to any particular grant of or other provision respecting the public lands,[18] its administration falls wholly

Lien for services.— Where a railroad company has appointed an agent to enter upon public lands and take railroad ties necessary for the road, the agent to receive for his services a certain price for each accepted tie, such agent has no interest in the ties which can be the subject of a sale or pledge, as the title to the ties passes directly from the United States to the railroad company. and absolutely within the jurisdiction of the land department.[19] The power of the land department in respect to the administration of the public lands cannot be divested by the fraudulent action of a subordinate officer, outside of his authority and in violation of the statute.[20] The land department is charged with the duty of surveying the public lands,[21] and must primarily determine what are public lands subject to survey and disposal under the public land laws,[22] what lands have been surveyed, what are to be surveyed, what have been disposed of, what remain to be disposed of, and what are reserved,[23] and its exercise of jurisdiction cannot be questioned by the courts before it has taken final action.[24] The land department has jurisdiction to determine the right of a railroad company to public lands under its grant, and issue patents therefor,[25] and to pass upon an application by one claiming a right to purchase land, wherein a person having acquired a homestead entry is made defendant.[26] Officers of the land department are agents of the law and cannot act beyond its provisions or make any disposition of land not sanctioned by law;[27] and no authority can be conferred nor duty enforced upon the department by the treaty-making power, in respect to the sale, conveyance, or disposition of the public lands, except with the consent of congress.[28] In proceedings to acquire a title to public land under the laws of the United States, the power of the land department ceases when the last official act necessary to transfer the title to the successful claimant has been performed.[29]

2. Secretary of the Interior.[30] The general supervision of the affairs of the land department is vested in the secretary of the interior,[31] who has final control of the public business relating to the public lands,[32] and unless congress clearly designates some other officer to act in such matters it will be assumed that he is the officer to represent the government.[33] A recital in an opinion of the secretary of the interior given in a contest as to a right in public lands of the facts on which the right is based is not evidence of the facts recited.[34]

3. Commissioner of General Land Office.[35] The commissioner of the general land office being authorized to perform executive duties relative to the public lands, under the direction of the secretary of the interior, it will be presumed that such an act done by him was performed by the direction of the secretary of the interior.[36] The decision of the commissioner of the general land office, issuing a patent for public lands, if unreversed on any appeal to the secretary of the interior, must be held conclusive in all courts and proceedings, as far as the legal title is concerned,[37] and a decision of the commissioner vacating a selection of land in lieu of other land by a state is final where the state does not appeal.[38] The statute requires that rulings of the commissioner of the general land office on suspended entries shall be approved by the secretary of the interior, and the attorney-general acting as a board;[39] but the fact that a ruling of the commissioner of the general land office canceling an entry of public land for fraud has not been so approved gives no right to the holder of the certificate based on such entry to assert title as against the holder of a patent to the land issued upon another title.[40]

4. Surveyors-General and Deputy Surveyors. The statute provides for the appointment of surveyors-general for the various land districts who are to cause the public lands within their respective districts to be surveyed and platted.[41] The surveyor-general is required to engage a number of skilful surveyors as his deputies,[42] and cannot lawfully remove a deputy surveyor except for negligence or misconduct.[43] A surveyor of public lands is to be regarded as a disbursing

The removal of a deputy surveyor when not under contract is damnum absque injuria. Reed v. Conway, 26 Mo. 13.

No liability for removal in good faith.— The surveyor-general will not be liable for removing a deputy, although under a contract with which his removal was an unwise and unlawful interference, provided he acted according to his best judgment, or from a de-officer,[44] and must give bond for the faithful disbursement of all public money in his hands and the faithful performance of the duties of his office,[45] and his sureties are responsible for a default occurring after the expiration of his commission but before his successor enters upon the duties of the office.[46] The approval by the surveyor general then in office of sureties on bonds of deputies for the performance of their contracts is sufficient until notice to the obligor that other security is required.[47]

5. Registers and Receivers[48] — a. The Officials of Local Land Offices. Each local land office, to be legally constituted and authorized to do business, must have a register and a receiver[49] who are mere agents of the interior department to carry out its orders,[50] and have no personal interest in the public lands or in lands claimed to be such.[51]

b. Authority and Duties — (i) In General. The functions of the registers and receivers of the local land offices are in general ministerial rather than judicial,[52] and while they are, in the exercise of their functions, authorized to decide upon certain questions of fact,[53] they are not authorized to adjudicate finally on the question of title,[54] but their decisions are subject to the supervision of the commissioner of the general land office.[55] In permitting entries of the public lands to be made the register and receiver must look only to the acts of congress and to such regulations of the general land office as have been made in pursuance of law, as they have no powers except such as are derived from these sources.[56] The issuing of certificates to settlers properly belongs to the register and receiver.[57] The payment of money for an entry to the receiver of a land office is a payment to the government,[58] and no sale of the public land can take place in the absence of the receiver.[59] The register of a land office cannot lawfully act as attorney for any applicant for a patent for land, whose application is filed, and the proceedings on which are to be conducted before him and in his office.[60]

(ii) Acting by Deputy. The mere ministerial or clerical acts of the register of the land office may be performed by a deputy,[61] but acts of a judicial nature, as granting preëmptions, must be performed by the register himself.[62]

(iii) Action Upon Claims. The register and receiver acting as land commissioners for the adjustment of claims have full authority to act in cases of conflicting locations under different certificates,[63] but are not authorized to revoke or annul a certificate of claim already granted.[64] The submission of the proof of a donation claim gives to the register and receiver jurisdiction to decide upon the claim and an application to locate is unnecessary to give them authority to adjudicate thereon,[65] and their allowance of such claim is sufficient to show that the statement, which purports to be sworn before, but is not signed by, them was made on oath.[66] A certificate of the register issued to one who applies to him to locate a state land warrant on public land that he approves of the location by the state is a legal and valid consent of the United States to such location.[67]

c. Bond. The statute requires that every register and receiver shall, before entering on the duties of his office, give bond in the penal sum of ten thousand dollars, with approved security, for the faithful discharge of his trust.[68] A receiver is liable on his bond for money received by him from entrymen before it was payable under a rule of the interior department; [69] but his sureties are not liable for moneys received by him as proceeds of the sale of Indian lands.[70] The refusal of a register or receiver to pay over to the United States the surplus, beyond the maximum compensation to which he is entitled by law for his services,[71] is a breach of his official bond, for which his sureties are liable.[72] A receiver and his sureties are liable for any moneys paid on entries and not accounted for by the receiver, although, at the time the bond was given and the payments were made, the law of the department was that an entry would not be allowed if the moneys were not properly accounted for, or deposited to the credit of the United States treasurer; [73] and where a receiver has received as public moneys amounts paid in as a consideration for titles to public lands and charged himself with such moneys in his accounts with the government, his sureties cannot, in a suit on the bond for failure to pay over such moneys, defend on the ground that the title to the land was not properly transferred.[74] In an action brought by the United States on the official bond of a receiver of public money, a plea that the receiver had issued receipts and made returns to the treasury department for money that he had never in fact received is bad,[75] as is also a plea that the United States had accepted another bond from the receiver.[76] Neither can the sureties on the official bond of a receiver who is in default escape liability for the amount of a draft issued by the government to the receiver because an inspector of the interior

Increase of bond.— Where the bond of a receiver of public moneys of a land district was increased by direction of the president from ten thousand dollars, the sum required by statute, to thirty thousand dollars, the bond was not void on the ground that it was extorted by duress. 76. U. S. v. Girault, 11 How. (U. S.) 22, 13 L. ed. 587, so holding on the ground that the new bond was no satisfaction for the department refused to telegraph to the treasury department to stop payment on request of one of such sureties.[77] The sureties on the bond of a register or receiver are responsible for a default occurring after the expiration of his commission, and before his successor enters upon the duties of the office.[78] In an action on the official bond of a receiver, the United States treasurer's transcript certified as required by statute is admissible and is evidence of all things contained in it which came within the official knowledge of the accounting officers of the treasury department.[79] Where a receiver was charged with a shortage in his accounts, but claimed that the money had been stolen from him, it was decisive against him that he had never in any manner presented to any accounting officer of the treasury a claim for a credit in that sum, and had not at the trial shown himself to be in possession of any vouchers not before in his power to procure.[80]

d. Compensation. Registers and receivers are allowed an annual salary of five hundred dollars,[81] and fees and commissions in addition thereto for certain services;[82] but it is expressly provided that the compensation of these officers shall in no case exceed in the aggregate three thousand dollars a year,[83] nor shall they receive for any one quarter or fractional quarter more than a pro rata allowance of such maximum,[84] and any receipts at the land office in excess of this amount are to be paid into the treasury as other public moneys.[85] The compensation of registers and receivers commences and is to be calculated from the time when they enter on the discharge of their duties,[86] and in this connection the doing of the preliminary work incidental to the opening of a newly created land office is a part of the duties of such officers.[87]

Sale of Indian lands.— Where the receiver of public moneys, at a government land office, was appointed special receiver and superintendent to assist in disposing of lands held by the United States in trust for the Indians, the trust moneys paid for the land not being public moneys, the receiver, whose official duty only required him to receive public moneys, was entitled to take, in addition to his salary, the compensation provided by government for the separate services rendered in respect of the trust lands. e. Allowance For Office Rent. The secretary of the interior is authorized by statute to make a reasonable allowance for office rent for each consolidated land office; [88] but where the receiver of such an office rents an office for the transaction of his official business without authority from the commissioner of the general land office, he has no legal claim for reimbursement from the appropriation for incidental expenses of land offices.[89]

6. Subordinate Agents. If any authority from congress is necessary to authorize the appointment of special agents of the land department for particular purposes, such authority may be fairly inferred from appropriations made by congress to pay for the services of such agents.[90]

7. Jurisdiction as Between Different Local Land Offices. After the erection of a land district the lands included therein cannot be sold at the office of another land district in which they were formerly included.[91]

8. Mode and Rules of Procedure — a. In General. The land department has power to adopt rules and regulations for the administration of the law with regard to the public domain,[92] and such rules, when promulgated, become laws of property,[93] and will be judicially noticed by the courts,[94] and cannot be ignored by the department to the subversion of rights acquired in accordance with their requirements.[95] Rules of practice of the land department formerly established and promulgated by authority of the secretary of the interior can be repealed or abrogated by like formal action and publication only,[96] and neither the secretary of the interior nor the commissioner of the general land office has power to make a retroactive decision abrogating such rules.[97] Neither can the equitable title to land acquired by lawful entry be divested or affected by subsequent rules or modification of rules of practice in the land department.[98]

b. Validity of Regulations. Regulations of the land department for the disposal of the public lands must be appropriate,[99] reasonable,[1] within the limitations of the law for the enforcement of which they are provided,[2] consistent with to opening the office, he has "entered upon the discharge of his duties," and is entitled to compensation for the time so employed.

such law,[3] and of such a nature as to tend to its enforcement;[4] and the land department is not authorized to adopt rules and regulations which are destructive of rights conferred by congress,[5] or to annex conditions or provisions to the law.[6]

c. Permissible Departures From Rules. The government may sanction, as against itself, the widest departure on the part of its own agents from its regulations as to sale of public lands, or waive any irregularity therein.[7] So the secretary of the interior may suspend or disregard rules of procedure,[8] and observance of a regulation of the land department may be dispensed with by the commissioner of the general land office for reasons satisfactory to him, where no private rights are injuriously affected thereby.[9]

d. Instructions by Commissioner of General Land Office. The "special instructions of the commissioner" of the general land office are made by law a part of every contract for the survey of the public lands,[10] but instructions given by the commissioner of the general land office to registers and receivers are not judgments binding upon any one.[11] A letter from the commissioner of the general land office, addressed to the register and receiver at the local office, asserting that in his opinion certain land was subject to entry under the preëmption law, was a special direction to allow the land to be entered under the preëmption law, within the meaning of a statute authorizing the commissioner to give special directions as to such land.[12]

9. Making and Record of Entries and Proceedings Thereon. The duty of noting entries on the books of the land office rests upon the register,[13] and where an applicant for a cash entry of public land has regularly applied to enter the land, paid the price, and obtained his receipt therefor, he has done all that the law requires of him, and is under no obligation to supervise the entries on the books of the register of the land office, in order to see that the proper entries are made.[14] The validity of an entry properly made and certified on a county plat by a register is not affected by the fact that he afterward makes other entries on the same plat.[15] A statute providing that a settler on government land must that as U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2326 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1430], relating to the filing of an adverse claim to public lands, merely requires that the claim "shall show the nature, boundaries, and extent" thereof, a land-office regulation, requiring the plat showing the boundaries to be made from an actual survey "by a deputy United States surveyor," is void in so far as it prevents the survey from being made by any other surveyor.

file his claim within three months means calendar months.[16] The application of a person entitled to enter land at a government land office, made in good faith, must be regarded as filed when it is delivered by the applicant for filing;[17] and the neglect of the clerks to do their duty in noting thereon a statement that the same was filed as of that date does not deprive the person making such entry of his rights as of the date of its actual filing.[18]

10. Determination of Adverse or Conflicting Claims — a. Jurisdiction of Land Department. The land department of the United States is a quasi-judicial tribunal invested with authority to hear and determine claims to the public lands, subject to its disposition,[19] and to determine all questions of fact that may arise in any controversy respecting the right of any person to receive a patent for any of the publicn lads,[20] and to execute its judgments by issuing patents to the parties entitled to them;[21] but after the legal title to public land has passed from the government, the land department has no jurisdiction to determine controversies between individual claimants concerning the title or right to the possession thereof.[22]

b. Original Determinations and Review. Questions of fact arising in a contest between claimants of the public lands are to be decided primarily by the local land officers,[23] whose decisions are subject to appeal and review by the land department,[24] which may on such review decide questions arising on the evidence but not decided by the local officers.[25] A contestant who unsuccessfully appeals from the order of the local land office does not thereby lose any rights accruing to him under the order appealed from.[26]

c. Right to Institute Contest. No one can be heard to question or contest the right of another to a patent for public land until he shows some right in himself in or to the premises.[27] The allowance of an application to contest a final entry of public land is vested exclusively in the discretion of the commissioner of the general land office,[28] and the courts will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion unless there has been such an abuse of discretion as to amount practically to a denial of a clear right.[29]

d. Hearing. The filing of a contest gives the contestant no right or interest in the land itself;[30] but where the land department entertains a contest against a homestead entry, and permits it to be filed, the party so filing has the right to have the contest heard,[31] and jurisdiction to hear the cause is acquired by the issuance and service of notice of the contest.[32] The register or receiver of a United States land office is authorized to administer oaths and take testimony in contest proceedings.[33] Where the secretary of the interior, on the passage of a special act of congress confirming the entry of one of the parties to a contest, suspends the contest proceedings, and a patent issues, the other party to the contest cannot, by mandamus, compel the secretary to proceed with the contest on the ground that the special act was unconstitutional and void.[34]

The secretary of the interior, as head of the land department, is invested with supervisory power to control the public business relating to public lands, and may set aside any entry, survey, certificate, or decision allowed, made, issued, or rendered by officers or agents of the government, subordinate to him; and under his direction, and subject to his ultimate determinations, the commissioner of the general land office has a like supervising power. The power of the commissioner of the general land office to cancel entries to public

annul a certificate of purchase of such lands [57] at any time before a patent is issued,[58] and this can be done upon the same evidence which was before the register and receiver.[59] So also, where a selection or a designation of lands granted by congress has been made, under a mistake of fact induced by a false survey, the secretary of the interior has power, before the issue of a patent, to recall and correct such designation.[60] But after a patent has issued the land department cannot cancel the entry on which it was based.[61]

b. Grounds For Cancellation. An entry may be canceled on the ground that it was illegally,[62] improperly,[63] or fraudulently [64] made, or was attempted to be lands after final proof has been made and a final certificate issued extends only to cases of entries made upon false testimony or without authority of law. Stimson v. Clarke, 45 Fed. 760.

Where one commutes his homestead entry into a cash entry, and the final receipt for the price is issued to him by the receiver, and the certificate is signed by the register, such receipt and certificate may entitle him prima facie to a patent, but do not conclude the land department from investigating the truth of the facts on which they were issued, and the bona fides of the homestead claim, and from canceling the same if found untrue and insufficient. in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use and benefit, although this is not directly shown.[80] The statutory requirement of the approval of a commissioner's decision by the secretary of the interior and the attorney-general acting as a board applies only to decisions sustaining irregular entries, and thereby divesting the United States of its title, and does not extend to decisions rejecting or canceling entries.[81]

d. What Amounts to Cancellation. A decision of the commissioner of the general land office that "said entry is hereby held for cancellation" amounts to a cancellation of the entry; [82] and a decision of the secretary of the interior in respect to a protest as to the issuance of a patent, in which the commissioner had affirmed the cancellation of the entry by the local land office, in the form of a letter to the commissioner, saying: "Your judgment, from which an appeal has been taken, contains a satisfactory statement of the facts; and as no errors of law appear, said judgment is affirmed," a judgment of cancellation.[83] But it has been held that a statement by the commissioner of the general land office in a letter, to the effect that he had canceled a certificate, does not amount to an eviction authorizing the rescission of a sale between third persons.[84] An order to the local office to perfect the location of a warrant and issue a patent to the holder of the warrant so located, amounts to a cancellation of a prior entry.[85]

e. Evidence [86] of Cancellation. The depositions of a commissioner of the general land office are admissible to prove that a certificate of purchase of the register and receiver has been canceled.[87] The mere fact that the word "canceled" is written over a certificate of purchase is not sufficient evidence to establish that it was in fact canceled.[88]

f. Effect of Cancellation.[89] The cancellation of an entry does not preclude the entryman or his grantees from establishing a right to the land by proving a valid entry on his part and performance by him of the acts required to complete the entry,[90] and if it affirmatively appears that the cancellation was wrongfully made the courts will disregard it.[91] But the cancellation of an entry is presumed to have been made upon sufficient evidence and valid grounds and in accordance with the rules of the land department; [92] and one claiming the legal title to land, Estoppel.— Where the commissioner of the general land office assumes to cancel a location of lands, and tenders back the warrants on which the land was located, the act of the holder in receiving the warrants without objection, and using them to locate other lands, amounts to such an acquiescence in the cancellation as will preclude him or his assignee from thereafter relying on the original location as a step in the proceedings necessary to entitle them to a certificate of the purchase of the land first selected. g. Return of Amount Paid by Entryman. It is provided by statute [95] that in all cases where entries of public land are canceled for conflict [96] or have been erroneously allowed and cannot be confirmed [97] the secretary of the interior shall cause to be paid to the person who made such entry [98] or his heirs [99] or assigns [1] the fees and commissions, amount of purchase-money, etc., paid upon the same [2] upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt [3] and the execution of a proper relin-

Entry canceled for mistake.— Where both parties suppose that an entry in the land office covers the land which the claimant has improved, and in that belief the purchase-money is paid and the certificate issued, and it is subsequently discovered that the mistake of a numeral transfers the entry to an adjoining section of land, and the government cancels the entry, it is bound in equity, in good conscience, to refund the purchase-money, and an action for money had and received will lie against the government. Nelson v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cl. 427.

The word "assigns" means those to whom the entryman's interest in the land was conveyed prior to the cancellation of the entry, and after cancellation the entryman has no interest in the land which he can assign, but only a claim for repayment which is not assignable under the statute. The surrender of the duplicate receipt will be presumed from a finding that the secretary of the interior ordered repayment "on quishment of all claims to enter the land.[4] An action to recover the amount paid on a canceled entry will lie [5] in the federal courts; [6] but one who seeks to recover the amount paid must show himself entitled, not only to the land itself, but to everything which the statute has annexed thereto as an incident,[7] and his petition is demurrable if it fails to show a surrender of the certificate of purchase issued to him, or to allege a relinquishment of all claim to the land under the entry.[8] The return of the purchase-money is not a condition precedent to the cancellation of an entry on account of false testimony in the final proof; [9] and in an action to recover the amount paid on entries, upon the ground that the entries were subsequently canceled by the land department because the lands were not subject to entry under the act under which the entry was made, an answer alleging that the entries were canceled because they were not made in good faith, but were fraudulent and were allowed upon false affidavits made by the entrymen, states a good defense.[10]

h. Right to Remove Improvements.[11] It has been held that a homestead settler who makes improvements upon a tract of government land whose entry is canceled may remove the same after the land has been awarded to an adverse settler.[12]

When entryman not entitled to recover.— Where the money paid at the time of making an entry was that of a coal company, to whom the person making the entry had previously quitclaimed the land, he cannot maintain an action to recover it back, although the entry was subsequently set aside by the secretary of the interior, and the money is still in the treasury. Stoiber v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 269, 275, where it is said: "The act contemplates repayment 'to the person who made the entry;' or, in case of his death, to his heirs; or, in case of sale, to his assignees. To entitle the claimant to recover he must bring himself within the statute. True, the Government received the money for the lands, and the same is now in the Treasury, where, in the absence of fraud, it is held as a trust fund for the benefit of the rightful owner. As the claimant was not allowed to enter the lands and paid no money therefor, he is not entitled to recover, and his petition is therefore dismissed."

Notice to predecessors in interest of parties. — It is not necessary that notice of a contest before the land department between claimants under conflicting entries of public land should be given to the predecessors in interest of such claimants, who have parted with all their title, when the present claimants of the land are notified, and take part in the proceedings. Notice by publication.— The failure of the land department to require the filing of an affidavit that the party to be served with notice of a contest of an entry cannot be personally served is not fatal to the power of the department to act on a mere publication of notice, without personal service, where the party does in fact know of the hearing, and has an opportunity to be heard. the contrary,[23] and the fact that a finding of the secretary of the interior that an assignment of a land warrant was a forgery, and his order canceling the warrant, were made without notice to the assignee, does not constitute a valid objection by a defendant not in privity with the assignee, but claiming under a sale of the land for taxes after the cancellation, where the assignee had accepted the adjudication of the secretary as binding, and the fact that the assignment was forged is admitted by defendant.[24]

14. Review of Decisions in Land Department. When a right of property has become vested by a decision of the land department, it cannot be taken away except by a proceeding directly therefor and upon due notice;[25] but an action not involving a final adjudication of the land department as to title is subject to be reopened and reviewed in the department.[26] The secretary of the interior has authority to review a previous decision of himself[27] or his predecessor,[28] and such authority cannot be taken away by any rules of procedure of the department.[29] So also irregularity of proceedings warrants the commissioner of the general land office in reviewing the decisions of his predecessor.[30] But it has been held that the register and receiver acting as commissioners for the adjustment of conflicting land claims have no power to annul a certificate of confirmation once granted or to revise their own decisions touching the location of conflicting claims, after rights have been acquired under them.[31] The decisions of the commissioner of the general land office are subject to review by the secretary of the interior;[32] but this power of review is supervisory rather than appellate in the sense in which the latter term is used with reference to the powers of courts,[33] and in the exercise of such supervisory power, the secretary may approve, modify, or annul the acts, proceedings, and decisions of the commissioner of the general land office, whenever certified to him, without the formality of an appeal.[34] The general land department has power to review and set aside the decisions of local officers relating to questions arising in the administration of the laws concerning the public domain;[35] but this power is not arbitrary and unlimited,[36] and its exercise is subject to judicial inquiry and review.[37]

15. Conclusiveness and Effect of Decisions in Land Department — a. In General. A decision rendered by the officers of the land department upon a question of fact is conclusive and not subject to be reviewed by the courts[38] in the Statutory rule as to Indian claimants.—The act of congress of Aug. 15, 1894 (28 U. S. St. at L. 305), amended by the act of congress of Feb. 6, 1901 (31 U. S. St. at L. 760), conferring upon the circuit courts "jurisdiction to try and determine any action, suit, or proceeding arising within their respective jurisdictions, involving the right of any person, in whole or in part of Indian blood or descent, to any allotment of land under any law or treaty," and further providing that any one in whole or in part of Indian blood, who claimed "to have allotment or parcel of land," might bring suit in the proper circuit court for the enforcement of his rights, was intended to vest such courts with full authority to hear and determine every question arising in any suit brought by a claimant to an allotment; and the fact that such questions have been decided by the land department adversely to the claimant neither affects the court's jurisdiction nor concludes it on any matter of law or fact. their jurisdiction.[53] It is the duty of the courts to give full effect to the decisions of the land department so long as they stand unimpeached;[54] but in order to be conclusive upon the courts, the decisions of the land department must be made according to the regular rules of practice of the department,[55] and must be based on legal evidence or upon some formal inquest, at which the parties have a fair opportunity of presenting evidence to support the rights which they assert.[56]

b. Questions Concluded. The decision of the land department is conclusive as to the character of particular land;[57] whether or not certain land was settled upon and occupied[58] at a particular time[59] by a particular person;[60] the time when a claimant first became an actual settler;[61] the qualifications of an applicant to enter land;[62] the good faith of a purchaser, applicant, or contestant;[63] whether an entry was made for speculative purposes;[64] whether or not a claimant has conformed to the requirements of the law under which he claims,[65] the sufficiency of his proofs,[66] and the sufficiency and validity of documents presented with his application to enter the land;[67] the sufficiency of a claimant's settlement, residence, and improvements,[68] the character and purpose of his

Sufficiency of complaint.—A complaint alleging the filing of plaintiff's declaratory statement, claiming to preëmpt two subdivisions of land under the laws of the United States; that he was a legally qualified preëmptor under said laws; that he had been in the peaceable possession of the land, complying with the requirements of said laws, in doing all necessary acts of residence and cultivation; that defendant unlawfully and wrongfully took possession of one of the subdivisions, and prevented and forcibly resisted plaintiff from taking possession thereof; that defendant forcibly resists plaintiff taking possession of the land in order to do the necessary acts of residence and

After a contest is finally disposed of in the land department and the legal title has passed from the United States, the parties must assert and enforce their rights in the courts,[85] which will decide their rights under the law, without reference to the actions of the officers of the land office.[86]

b. Review of Decisions of Land Department.[87] The courts cannot exercise any direct appellate jurisdiction over the rulings of the officers of the land department,[88] nor can they reverse or correct such rulings in collateral proceedings between private parties;[89] but the decisions of the land department are subject to review by the courts,[90] to the extent that where the department has fallen into error and denied to parties the rights to which they were entitled, the courts can in a proper proceeding interfere and refuse to give effect to the action of the department,[91] or set aside or correct its decisions as equity may require,[92] although this cannot be done until after title has passed from the government.[93] A decision of the land department in a contest should be sustained by the courts unless there are clear and cogent reasons for overthrowing it,[94] and it appears that there has been a clear misapplication of the law to the facts;[95] and a court of equity will not inquire into any question of a misapplication of law by the officers of the land department to a controverted question of fact before them, unless the findings of fact and conclusions of such officers are set out fully in the pleading of the complaining party.[96] An allegation, in a bill to review a decision of the land department, that at the time cultivation thereon; and that defendant is wholly insolvent, is sufficient to sustain a suit for an injunction to compel defendant to desist from doing such acts, and to admit plaintiff into the possession of the land. Jackson v. Jackson, 17 Oreg. 110, 19 Pac. 847.

Where the court is satisfied of the correctness of the rulings of the land department, it will not stultify itself or compromise its judgment by withholding from the successful party a portion of the relief to which he is entitled, in order to enable the unsuccessful party to wage some future independent action to test the correctness of the department's conclusions and judgment. McDonald v. Brady, 9 Okla. 660, 60 Pac. 509.

Pendency of proceeding to reopen case.— The fact that proceedings are instituted by the unsuccessful contestant in a contest case before the general land office, asking the secretary of the interior to reopen the case, does not preclude the court from taking jurisdiction in forcible entry and detainer instituted by the successful contestant. M. Patents[98]— 1. In General. A patent is the government conveyance; the instrument which, under the land laws, passes the title of the United States.[99] Neither the president nor any officer of the government has any power to dispose of the public domain, or to sign or cause the seal of the United States to be affixed to a patent, except such as is conferred by a statute of the United States.[1]

2. Necessity of Patent to Vest Title.[2] As a general rule [3] the issuance of a patent is necessary to divest the United States of the legal title to any of the public lands, and vest such title in an individual; [4] and a state has no power to declare any title less than a patent valid against the claim of the United States, or against a title held under a patent granted by the United States.[5]

3. Status and Rights of Purchaser or Grantee Before Patent Issued. The execution and delivery of a patent to a person entitled thereto are mere ministerial acts of the officers charged with that duty,[6] and when the right to a patent becomes perfect the full equitable title passes to the purchaser or grantee [7] with all the benefits, immunities, and burdens of ownership,[8] and the government holds the naked legal title in trust for him.[9]

4. Patent Certificates. A patent certificate or final certificate of purchase protects the purchaser's right as fully and is as binding on the government as a patent;[10] but it does not convey the legal title in fee simple,[11] although after the lapse of more than twenty years it may be presumed that a patent was issued to the certificate holder.[12]

5. Form and Requisites of Patents. It is provided by statute that all patents issuing from the general land office shall be issued in the name of the United States,[13] and be signed by the president,[14] or in the name of the president by his secretary,[15] or an executive clerk,[16] and countersigned by the recorder of the general land office,[17] and recorded in the general land office in books kept for that purpose.[18] These provisions are mandatory,[19] and each of the integral acts to be performed is essential to the validity of the patent,[20] and no equivalent for any of the required formalities is allowed.[21] It is not necessary that a patent should be attested by witnesses.[22] A description which will identify the lands is all that is necessary to the validity of a patent.[23]

6. Record, Delivery, and Acceptance of Patents. The legal title to public lands passes when a patent is duly executed [24] upon a decision of the proper officers that the grantee named therein is entitled to the land,[25] and recorded in the record book kept in the land department of the government for that purpose,[26] and the delivery which is required when a deed is made by a private person is not necessary to give effect to the granting clause of the patent.[27] While an acceptance on the part of the grantee is necessary to the taking effect of a patent,[28] such acceptance will be presumed from the efforts of the grantee to secure the favorable action of the department,[29] his demand for possession of the patent,[30] or even from the mere beneficial nature of the grant,[31] in the absence of an express dissent.[32] The state laws usually allow and encourage the recording of United States patents in the local offices for recording deeds and other instruments affecting real property,[33] but the validity or operation of a government patent is not impaired by neglecting to record it in the local office.[34] When a patent has been duly executed and recorded, the grantee is entitled to possession thereof, and mandamus is an appropriate remedy to compel its delivery to him.[35]

The presumption of acceptance is not conclusive but may be rebutted and overturned by proof that, although it was to the interest of the person named as patentee to accept the grant, yet he did not, in fact, consent to or accept it. Wood v. Pittman, 113 Ala. 207, 20 So. 972, holding that where the holder of a certificate of entry issued by the United States made affidavit that he had made a mistake in respect to the land he intended to purchase and thought he was entering, and the entry was set aside, the certificate surrendered and canceled, and the purchase-money refunded to him; but afterward a patent was inadvertently made out, and sent to the local land office, but before any acceptance on the part of such entryman the mistake was discovered, and the patent was recalled and canceled, the title did not pass from the United States.

of a settler or entryman before obtaining a patent the statutes generally allow the issuance of a patent to his widow or heirs,[36] and a patent describing the grantees merely as "the heirs of" a named decedent is not void for uncertainty.[37] A patent issued to "A, administrator of B, deceased" vests the legal title to the land in A.[38] Where a wife, as heir of her husband, applied for a patent which was issued to her as his assignee, a title in her, independent of her husband, cannot be inferred, and the patent must inure to the benefit of the husband's vendee.[39] Applying the principle that there must be a grantee before a grant can take effect, it was formerly held that a patent issued after the death of the patentee was void;[40] but it is now expressly provided by statute that when a patent is issued to a person who has died before the date of the patent, the title to the land shall inure to and become vested in the heirs, devisees, or assignees of the deceased patentee the same as if the patent had been issued during his life.[41]

8. VALIDITY OF PATENTS.[42] Under the rule that public officers are presumed to do their duty, the presumption is that all necessary preliminary steps to the issuance of a patent have been taken,[43] and that the patent was regularly issued [44] in fee simple,[56] and its issuance by the land department is a final determination of the existence of all facts necessary to entitle the patentee to the patent,[57] and divests the department of all authority over and control of the land.[58] But a patent does not convey the title to land, the description of which is inserted after its issuance and delivery,[59] nor is it evidence of title to land which was not subject to disposition by the United States.[60] A patent issued to two or more persons creates presumptively a tenancy in common in the patentees.[61] The recitals of a patent are competent evidence of the facts recited,[62] and are to be taken as true,[63] and an owner of land is chargeable with notice of facts recited in a patent to which he traces his title.[64] United States patents or grants are to be strictly construed,[65] and are not subject to the general rule of construction that a grant is to be construed most strongly in favor of the grantee and against the grantor.[66]

b. Property and Rights Included. A patent conveys title to all the lands within the established boundaries shown by the official maps of the government surveys.[67] The quantity of land granted must be ascertained from the description in the patent,[68] and patents are subject to the general rule of construction that where a subject-matter is found which may satisfy either part of a repugnant or contradictory description, but not the whole, that part of the description must prevail which is presumed to express with most certainty the intention of the parties.[69] A description by courses and distances must yield to visible or ascertained monuments erected as witnesses to limit the bounds of the tract conveyed,[70] and certain boundaries indicated in the patent will control a recital as to the quantity of land included.[71] A patent without any reservations or exceptions passes to the patentee everything anywise connected with the soil, forming any portion of its bed, or fixed to its surface,[72] and hence such a patent carries all the minerals in the land [73] to which no right has attached at the time the patent

Reference to official plat.— In granting patents for the public lands it is usual to add, immediately after the statement of the number of acres which the tract contains, if it is fractional, the words "according to the official plat of the survey of said lands returned to the General Land-office by the Surveyor-General," and such language, when used, constitutes a part of the description of the premises conveyed, and limits the purchaser to the tract as marked upon the plat of the surveyor-general. River as boundary — Accretions.— Where the official plat of the survey of government land shows a river as one boundary, a subsequent patent for the land, describing it by number, and referring to the plat on which it is marked as containing a certain amount, passes all accretions to the land. Patents for fractional sections of land facing on a marsh, which recite the number of acres granted, and refer to the official plat of the survey, by which plat the marsh is shown as the boundary, while the computed areas conform to the area included within the surveyed lines, without including any part of the marsh, must be limited by the surveyed boundaries, without including any land which is a part of the marsh. Niles v. Cedar Point Club, 175 U. S. 300, 20 S. Ct. 124, 44 L. ed. 171 [affirming 85 Fed. 45, 29 C. C. A. 5].

issues.[74] A patent for public land vests in the patentee the riparian rights in a stream flowing over or through the land;[75] but a purchaser of a tract of government land, which has on it a mill and dam, which cause the water of a stream running through it to overflow other public lands, the entry being made and a patent received in the usual form, has no right to continue the dam so as to overflow such other lands after they have been entered by individuals.[76] Patents for lands abutting on lakes, rivers, or other waters are to be construed, with reference to the quantity conveyed, in accordance with the laws of the state in which the land is situated;[77] but a purchase of a subdivision of public lands, which happens to have a pond for one of its boundaries, does not give the purchaser a part or all of another defined subdivision, in order to reach the center of such pond.[78] Where the government has parted with a larger acreage than it has received payment for by a patent to fractional lots abutting on a meandered stream, and the patentee takes possession under his patent of the lands between the meander line and the stream, he will be protected in his title and possession as against third persons who do not claim title from the government.[79]

c. Conditions, Reservations, and Exceptions. A patent containing a reservation of adverse claims or of claims under a certain act of congress is good and protects the patentee in his possession,[80] but is liable to be superseded by the issuance of a patent to or the confirmation of the claim of a claimant whose rights are within the reservation.[81] A right of way for an irrigating ditch acquired pursuant to the act of congress [82] is a vested and accrued right within a clause in a patent saving such rights.[83] Where an agricultural patent to public land reserves the right of a proprietor of a mining vein or lode to extract or remove his ore therefrom should it be found to penetrate or intersect the lands granted by the patent, the reservation refers only to persons who are proprietors at the time when the right of the patentee attaches to the land.[84] A condition or exception inserted in a patent, which is not authorized by the statute, is void.[85]

d. Relation Back. The doctrine of relation is applicable to public land transactions, and, where necessary to give effect to the intent of the statute or to cut

Patent relates back to date of certificate of location.— Klein v. Argenbright, 26 Iowa 493.

A patent can convey no interest anterior to its date but it may be shown to be connected with and to relate back to a previous inchoate legal title. Jones v. Inge, 5 Port. (Ala.) 327.

When doctrine not applicable.—A patent for public land will not be held to take effect as of the date of the initial step taken by the patentee to obtain a title to the land, where it appears that the rights by him acquired by such initial step were lost by his lack of diligence, and the effect of such relation back would be to render accountable for a large quantity of coal mined on the land a person who had made a cash entry of the land after the patentee's right to the land had apparently been abandoned, and who had opened and developed mines at large expense, and had worked them for several years, with the knowledge of the patentee. actual severance of the land from the public domain, the date of the patent must be considered as the time when the severance took place.[90]

e. Conclusiveness. A patent to land, the disposition of which the land department has jurisdiction, is both the judgment of the department as a quasi-judicial tribunal and a conveyance of the legal title to the land,[91] and hence is conclusive in a court of law,[92] and as against all persons whose rights did not commence previous to its emanation,[93] as to the land thereby conveyed,[94] the qualifications of the person to whom the patent was issued,[95] the title of the patentee,[96] and his performance of the conditions required by the act of congress under which the patent was issued.[97] The issuance of a United States patent for land as of a certain class is conclusive as to the character of the land,[98] and where a grant of land by congress provides for the issuance of a patent, the patent when issued and accepted is conclusive as to the extent of the right passing under the grant.[99] Both the government and the grantee, as well as those in privity with him, are bound by the recitals of fact properly contained in the patent;[1] but an opinion of the executive officers as to matters of law indicated either by the act of issuing the patent or by the recitals contained therein, is not conclusive.[2] Where a patent issues to the person entering the land, "for the use of the heirs at law," of another, and is accepted and acquiesced in by him, he cannot afterward claim against the patent.[3]

f. Conflicting Patents. As between conflicting patents the rule, in the absence of controlling equities, is that the earlier patent passes the title to the exclusion of the later;[4] but in equity a junior patent will prevail over an older one if the right on which it is based is prior;[5] and it has been held that in an action of ejectment the court will look behind the patents and ascertain which party had the prior equity and give effect thereto.[6] Where the title to the public lands has passed out of the United States by conflicting patents, there can be no objection to the practice adopted by the state courts to give effect to the better right in any form of remedy the legislature or courts of the state may prescribe.[7]

aside [15] the patent, even though it was obtained fraudulently or unlawfully; [16] but the only method in which a patent improperly issued can be set aside is by judicial proceedings instituted on behalf of the United States.[17] But where a patent has issued to one who protests against the survey on which it is made, and the record shows that he never accepted it, the secretary of the interior may recall it,[18] and the commissioner of the land office has power, with the consent of the party in interest, who refused to accept the patent on the ground that it was erroneously located, and because of defects in the proceedings prior to the patent, to recall the patent and order a resurvey.[19] So also where a tract of land located under a military warrant is lost, in whole or in part, by reason of prior claims the patent may be canceled by the land department on the application of the patentee,[20] and the commissioner of the general land office has power to correct a clerical mistake, by canceling a patent in which the christian name of the grantee is erroneously stated and which is surrendered by the grantee, and issuing a new patent in the true name of the grantee.[21] But an attempted cancellation of a patent by the land department at the request of the patentee on ex parte affidavits, without notice to a person who, since the patent, has purchased a part of the property at a tax-sale, is void.[22]

12. Collateral Attack on Patents. A patent issued by the land department for land which is within its jurisdiction and power of disposition is not open to collateral attack [23] for either mistake of fact or error of law on the part of the land

N. Land Office Records and Proceedings as Evidence — 1. In General — a. Land Office Records in General. The records of the land office, being kept under the official sanction of the government, are always admissible as evidence of the facts therein stated,[38] and the facts proved by these records must be received as prima facie evidence of the right of the person at whose instance they were recorded, and as conclusive in regard to such things as the law requires to be recorded.[39]

b. Patents and Grants. A patent to public land is admissible in evidence,[40] without proof of execution,[41] record,[42] delivery,[43] or title in the United States or state.[44]

c. Surveys and Maps. Official surveys of lands of the United States[45] and issue a patent for the subject of the grant, not a latent impropriety in exercising the authority when the proofs authorizing the act are formal and sufficient. Kahn v. Old Tel. Min. Co., 2 Utah 174.

maps thereof[46] are admissible in evidence upon the certificate of the commissioner, without further evidence of authenticity.[47] But in order to be admissible a survey should be duly approved and recorded in accordance with the practice in the office of the surveyor-general,[48] and the authority under which it was made must also be shown.[49] The field-notes and plats of the survey of the public lands are competent evidence,[50] and have the force of a deposition.[51]

d. Official Correspondence. The official correspondence of the commissioner of the general land office and of the register and receiver of the United States land offices is admissible in evidence to prove the official acts of those officers;[52] but their unofficial letters, unauthenticated as legal certificates,[53] merely expressing opinions upon questions of law,[54] are not admissible.

e. Certificates of Land Officers — (i) In General. The certificate of a land officer to any fact of the existence of which he is required by law to give a certificate is receivable as evidence of the existence of that fact,[55] and such cer-

Under the Illinois statute the receiver's certificate is made evidence of any fact or matter on record in his office, and the register's certificate is made evidence of title. Wilcox v. Kinzie, 4 Ill. 218; Roper v. Clabaugh, 4 Ill. 166. The certificate of the receiver of the land office of the receipt of the purchase-money of land is not evidence of title thereto. Carson v. Merle, 5 Ill. 363; Roper v. Clabaugh, supra. To be evidence of title under this statute, the certificate must show an entry and purchase of land; it is not enough that the register certifies that a certificate had been granted to a certain person as claimant of a certain claim and survey. Aldes v. Abbott, 23 Ill. 61.

(VI) Private Papers in Land Office. The certificate of the commissioner of the general land office will not give legal authenticity to papers which are mere private property, and which do not belong to the archives of his office.[76]

(VII) Extracts. A certified extract from a paper in the land office is admissible,[77] if it appears to contain all that relates to the subject in controversy,[78] nor is it necessary that it should show by whom or when it was made, the presumption being in favor of its regularity.[79]

(VIII) Duplicate or Second Copy. A duplicate patent [80] or receipt,[81] or a second original,[82] is of as high authority as evidence as the original.

b. Form and Sufficiency of Copy. Whatever the law requires to be recorded as a part of the instrument ought to be contained in the copy before it can be admitted as evidence.[83] The seal is no part of a patent and need not be land certificate, indorsed on the certificate, and attested by two witnesses, the transfer being dated 1838, and the certificate being approved in 1859 by the commissioner of claims, and filed in the land office in 1873, is admissible as an ancient instrument, delivery being inferable from its attestation by two witnesses. copied;[84] but a signature in some form must appear.[85] A copy of a patent is admissible without a map to which the patent refers, where the land may be identified without reference to the map.[86]

c. Authentication — (I) Necessity. A copy of a land office record not exemplified by the certificate of the proper officer or otherwise authenticated is inadmissible in evidence.[87]

(II) Authority of Officer. In order that copies of land office records may be admissible in evidence, they must be certified by the proper officer, having the custody of the original.[88] Thus certification by the commissioner or register of the land office,[89] or his deputy,[90] is sufficient, but a copy certified by a clerk in the land office[91] or by the recorder of a county[92] is not entitled to be received in evidence unless it is so provided by statute.[93]

(III) Form and Mode. Certified copies of land office records will not be admissible in evidence unless authenticated in the proper form and manner.[94] Thus it is generally required that the certificate should state that the paper is a true copy of the original.[95] As a rule a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute as to certification is sufficient.[96] Translated copies must be certified by both the translator and the commissioner or register.[97]

3. Best and Secondary Evidence — a. In General. The best evidence of the contents of a land office record is the record itself or a duly authenticated copy thereof, and parol evidence of the facts contained therein is not admissible,[98] without first showing that the record evidence cannot be had.[99] But where it is satisfactorily shown that such a record has been lost or destroyed, its contents may be proved by parol or other competent secondary evidence.[1]

b. Limitations of Rule. Where a fact is not one which is required to appear of record it may be established by parol,[2] and so parol evidence is admissible to show the location of a tract of land, although there is record evidence of the fact.[3]

O. Remedies in Case of Fraud, Mistake, or Trust — 1. Cancellation of Certification to State. An improper certification of land to a state may be canceled or set aside at the suit of the United States on the ground of fraud or mistake,[4] although the state has already transferred the title to private individuals,[5] and the government has such a direct interest in such a suit as will prevent its becoming barred by limitations or estoppel resulting from the negligence of the officers of the government.[6]

2. Attack on and Setting Aside of Patent — a. In General — (i) Direct Proceedings Necessary. The remedy for the wrongful and erroneous issuance of a patent for public lands is by a direct proceeding by bill in equity to set it aside or subject it to the rights of the person equitably entitled to the land.[7]

(ii) Who May Attack Patent. A patent conveying land which was a part of the public domain cannot be attached or impeached by a person having no interest in the land;[8] but is subject to impeachment only by the United States,[9]

6. U. S. v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 67 Fed. 969, 15 C. C. A. 117, holding that the fact that a preëmptioner, whose claim had been canceled, had petitioned the land office for the reinstatement of his preëmption claim to lands which lie within the place limits of a land grant railroad, raised no presumption that a suit subsequently brought, in the name of the United States, to cancel, as erroneous, the certifications of the lands to the state under the grant, was for his benefit alone; but, on the contrary, the government had a direct interest in the suit, for if the claims of the preëmptor were sustained, the government would receive from him at least the minimum price of the land, while if they were not sustained the government would have the land itself.

Delay by the United States in suing to cancel an erroneous certification of lands to a state in aid of a railroad, whereby the railroad company is prevented from acquiring indemnity lands in place thereof, raises no equitable estoppel against the United States. or its grantee,[10] or a person who has succeeded to its rights,[11] or by a person who was defrauded or deprived of his rights by the issuance of a patent to another.[12] It has been laid down that in order to enable one to attack a patent from the government he must show that he himself was entitled to it; that is, it is not sufficient for him to show that there may have been error in adjudging the title to the patentee, but he must show that by the law properly administered the title should have been awarded to him;[13] but this does not mean that at the moment the patent issues it should have been awarded to the adverse claimant; but only that the claimant against the patent must so far bring himself within the law that he would have been entitled, if not obstructed or prevented, to complete his claim.[14]

The fact that the fraud was committed by the officers of the United States does not preclude a cancellation of the patent at the instance of the government. Moffat v. U. S., 112 U. S. 24, 5 S. Ct. 10, 28 L. ed. 623.

Nature of fraud.— The frauds for which courts will set aside a patent granted by the United States in the regular course of proceedings in the land office are frauds extrinsic or collateral to the matter tried and determined, upon which the patent issued, and not fraud consisting of perjury in the matter on which the determination was made. b. Cancellation or Annulment of Patent[26]—(i) In General. The United States has the same remedy in a court of equity to set aside or annul a patent for lands on the ground of fraud in procuring it or mistake in its issuance as an individual would have in regard to his own deed procured under similar circumstances,[27] and even though a patent is void and would be so pronounced in a court of law, the United States is entitled to maintain a suit in equity to have such void patent canceled.[28] But the government must show that it has such an interest in the relief sought as entitles it to move in the matter. If it be a question of property a case must be made out in which the court can afford a remedy in regard to that property; if it be a question of fraud which would render the instrument void the fraud must operate to the prejudice of the United States; and if the suit is brought for the benefit of some third person, and the United States has no pecuniary interest in the remedy sought, it must appear that the United States is under some obligation to the person who will be benefited to sustain an action for his use.[29] A state cannot maintain a suit to cancel patents from the United States to the state unless it shows that it has some interest in the land.[30]

(II) Jurisdiction of Courts. The United States courts have jurisdiction to vacate a patent to lands in a proper case.[31]

(III) Form of Proceeding. The proper form of proceeding is by a simple bill in equity by the United States against the patentee praying that the patent be annulled and surrendered by a decree in chancery,[32] but the patent may also be set aside by an information in the nature of a bill in equity filed by the attorney of the United States for the district in which the land lies.[33]

(IV) Limitations[34] and Laches. When the United States comes into a court of equity as a suitor it is subject to defenses peculiar to that court,[35] and hence it is held that laches may be a good defense to a suit to cancel a patent;[36] but this is true only where the real party in interest is a private individual and not where the United States is directly interested in the annulment sought by it.[37] An act of congress passed in 1891 provides that suits by the United States to vacate and annul patents previously issued before its passage shall be brought only within five years from its passage,[38] and as to patents subsequently issued, such suits shall be brought only within six years after such issuance.[39] While this statute in form only bars suits to annul patents, it must be taken to mean that, although a patent was originally invalid, if the prescribed time elapses without any attack thereon, the patent is to be held good and to have the same effect against the United States that it would have had if it had been valid in the first place.[40]

(V) Parties.[41] Unless by virtue of an act of congress, no one but the attorney-general, or someone authorized to use his name, can bring a suit to set aside a patent issued by the United States.[42] In a suit in equity to cancel a patent, every person having an interest in the land included in the patent is an indispensable party and equity will not proceed until they are all brought before the court.[43]

But entrymen by whom the land was conveyed to defendants before patents issued are not necessary parties;[44] and where lands have been improperly listed to a state and by it patented to private individuals, neither the state nor the persons equitably entitled to the land are necessary parties.[45]

(VI) PLEADING.[46] A petition by the United States to annul a patent for fraud must contain every material averment necessary to constitute a good bill in equity under the chancery practice;[47] and a mere general allegation of fraud or mistake is not sufficient, but the facts constituting such fraud or showing the mistake must be alleged and proved.[48] It is essential that it should appear in some way, without special regard to form, that the attorney-general has brought the suit himself, or given such authority for its institution as will make him officially responsible therefor through all stages of its presentation.[49] In a suit to cancel a patent as having been inadvertently issued it is not necessary for the United States to allege or prove that other persons than the patentee had a superior right to the land, but it is sufficient to show that other persons whose claims were pending and undetermined might have such superior right.[50] Where lands have been listed to a state under one act of congress, and by the state patented to individuals, a bill against several of such patentees, having no joint interest in the lands, to vacate several distinct patents of separate parcels is not multifarious.[51] Where a bill by the United States to cancel patents is demurred to generally for want of equity, and no specific objections are made, defendant, on appeal, cannot question the sufficiency of allegations as to the persons who have acquired homestead and preëmption rights, or as to the particular pieces of land to which their rights have attached.[52]

(VII) EVIDENCE.[53] Although the presumption as to the regularity of the proceedings leading up to the issuance of a patent [54] has no place in a suit by the United States directly assailing the patent and seeking its cancellation for fraud in the conduct of the land officers,[55] the burden of proving fraud or mistake is upon the government when it attacks the patent,[56] and relief will be granted only when the allegations relied on are established by clear, unequivocal, and convincing evidence,[57] and not upon a bare preponderance of evidence which leaves the issue in doubt.[58] Where the government charges an unlawful agreement on the part of the patentee to acquire title for another, it has a right to call the patentee and a purchaser from him and cross-examine them as adverse witnesses, and, if it fails to do so, no presumptions can be made in its favor from their failure to testify, as against the sworn denial in their answer.[59]

(VIII) Rules Governing Action of Court. When the government seeks the aid of a court to set aside a patent obtained by fraud, the general principles of equity must be applied,[60] and the patentee is entitled to protection to the same extent as the holder of a conveyance of title from an individual.[61] A suit by the government to cancel a patent alleged to have been issued to one person when another was entitled to the land is in effect a suit between private parties, involving no public interest or right, and the court may properly take into consideration the equities as between the real parties in interest.[62]

(IX) Return of Purchase-Money. Where the United States seeks to cancel a patent on the ground of mistake and no fraud or misconduct on the part of the patentee appears, it is essential to a recovery of the land that the purchase-money be refunded;[63] but an offer to return the purchase-money is not a prerequisite to maintaining a bill to cancel a patent for fraud,[64] or because it was issued to a fictitious person.[65] Where in a suit by the United States for the cancellation of a patent the invalidity of which was not apparent on its face, but was proved by extrinsic evidence, the holder did not abandon his claims thereunder, he is not entitled to a decree for a return of the purchase-money or for costs on the cancellation of the patent.[66]

(X) Protection of Bona Fide Purchasers.[67] The government cannot repudiate a patent on the ground of fraud and recover the land as against an innocent purchaser for value from the patentee,[68] and the fact that a person purchased

But a court of equity will not interfere with the decision of the land department involved in the issuance of a patent to a particular person except to prevent injustice,[75] and upon the ground that an antecedent equity of the complainant was disregarded or overlooked in the issuance of the patent to another,[76] and so the mere fact that the patentee was not entitled to the patent does not entitle an adverse claimant to equitable relief unless he shows that he was entitled to receive a patent.[77] As between two adverse claimants to public land, one of whom has initiated his claim in violation of law and the other in obedience to law, the courts will sustain the one who has observed the law, even though no penalty is attached for violation thereof.[78] The mere fact that perjured testimony was introduced on behalf of the prevailing party in a contest in the land department is not sufficient ground for equitable relief against the decision of the department,[79] where the other party had an opportunity to meet such testimony and took all the appeals allowed by law,[80]

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Public Lands," § 341.

One claiming a portion of a town site adversely to the trustees, to whom it has been patented, cannot maintain an action against such trustees to enforce a resulting trust in his favor, as such trustees are officers and agents of the government, and the issuance of a patent to them does not divest the secretary of the interior of supervisory control over such land. Bockfinger v. Foster, 10 Okla. 488, 62 Pac. 799 [affirmed in 190 U. S. 116, 23 S. Ct. 836, 47 L. ed. 975].

The indispensable basis of a suit in equity to charge the legal title to land under a patent is an equitable interest in the land in the complainant which is superior to the legal title in defendant. Campbell v. Weyerhaeuser, 161 Fed. 332, 88 C. C. A. 412.

One whose application to purchase public land is rejected when presented may not maintain a bill to charge the title acquired by another under a patent with a trust in his favor. Campbell v. Weyerhaeuser, 161 Fed. 332, 88 C. C. A. 412.

Where a contest against an entry is rejected by the land department, the person by whom such contest was filed acquires no interest in the land embraced in the entry, so as to be able to sue to declare the patentee, who was the entryman at the time he offered his contest, a trustee for his use and benefit. The holder of a state swamp land patent cannot maintain a suit to compel a conveyance from a patentee under the United States for the same land, for if the land was swamp land, the title having already passed from the United States to the state, the subsequent United States patent was void, while if the land was not swamp land the state patent was void and gave plaintiff no right. Kile v. Tubbs, 59 Cal. 191. But compare Miller v. Tobin, 16 Oreg. 540, 16 Pac. 161.

A railroad company which has, if anything, a legal title to lands by reason of a legislative grant, cannot maintain a bill in equity was obtained provides that one who fraudulently obtains a patent shall forfeit all right and title to the land, and any grant or conveyance which he may have made, except in the hands of bona fide purchasers, shall be null and void.[85] But where a patent is absolutely void, its holder cannot be adjudged to hold it in trust for the person entitled to the land.[86] Where the consideration for public lands was paid or furnished by a person other than the patentee equity may declare a trust in favor of such person;[87] but equity will not recognize any resulting trust in favor of one who, in order to evade the law, enters in the name of another land which he cannot legally enter in his own name.[88] A charge that the patentee was not a citizen, and swore falsely on that point in his declaratory statement, is not sufficient to charge him as trustee for an adverse claimant who was defeated in a contest with him, but in order to so charge him it must appear that he produced witnesses and swore falsely as to his citizenship and thereby deceived the land officers.[89]

(B) Interest Necessary to Maintain Suit. In order to maintain a suit to control the operation of a patent the complainant must possess a title superior to that of the patentee,[90] and also to that of the government through which the patentee claims,[91] or he must possess equities which will control the title in the patentee's name.[92] In order to obtain the relief sought the complainant must show himself entitled to a patent from the government upon his equitable title,[93] and so he must show that he complied with the provisions of the law under which he claims [94] or was prevented from so doing by some act by means of which the patentee acquired an undue advantage in the proceeding.[95]

(C) Jurisdiction of Courts.[96] The state courts have jurisdiction of suits for against parties claiming under a subsequent patent to have them decreed trustees of plaintiff and to convey the land to plaintiff, as, if plaintiff's title is good, then defendants have none, and such decree would not supply the place of the patient to which plaintiff is entitled. Entry by true owner of land warrant in name of nominal owner.— Where the true owner of a government land warrant issued in the name of another and not assigned by him, enters land under the warrant for himself, but, for want of the assignment, makes the entry in the name of the other, the latter takes the legal title to the land as trustee for the former. equitable relief by persons entitled to public lands which have been improperly patented to others.[97]

(D) Laches. The right to equitable relief against a patentee may be lost by laches and acquiescence in the ruling of the land department.[98]

(E) Pleading.[99] A petition or complaint which seeks to hold a patentee as trustee upon the ground of fraud must be as definite and precise as was formerly required in a bill of chancery.[1] The complainant must show that the United States has parted with its title, and that such title has become vested in the individual against whom it is sought to enforce the supposed equities,[2] and must aver and prove every fact necessary to make out a perfect case, and establish actual ownership by an equitable title superior to the legal title.[3] A mere general allegation of

A. 345 (holding that where a land grant railroad company contests the right of a homestead claimant to lands lying within its place limits, and is defeated on appeal to the secretary of the interior, and a patent is then issued to the claimant, a delay of more than three years in bringing suit for such lands, during which time they have been surveyed and platted as an addition to a town, will be considered as an acquiescence in the decision, and raises a presumption that the company has made a selection of indemnity lands in lieu of those thus lost to it). The complaint must state the facts showing that the complainant was entitled to the land, and a mere general averment of his right is insufficient. Stewart v. Altstock, 22 Oreg. 182, 29 Pac. 553.

The complaint must show that plaintiff was qualified to acquire the right in the lands under which he claims and that all the steps necessary to acquire it were taken. Quinn v. Kenyon, 38 Cal. 499.

Where plaintiff claims the land under the homestead laws, it is an essential averment of the petition that he has resided upon the land for the necessary period and cultivated and improved it to such an extent that, on final proof, he would be entitled to a patent. Baldwin v. Keith, 13 Okla. 624, 75 Pac. 1124.

It is not necessary for the complainant to show fraud in order to obtain relief, but it is enough for him to show that he has the equitable title and is entitled to the legal title, which by some means, no matter what, has been vested in defendant. McDowell v. Morgan, 28 Ill. 528.

Complaint not aided by implication.— Where the complaint alleged facts showing a prior settlement, residence, and improvements on the land, and defendant's answer expressly denied these allegations, and also put in issue the good faith of plaintiff's occupancy, and alleged that his improvements were made by others whose tenant he was, and that his preëmption entry was fraudulent, and had been duly canceled, it could not be implied, upon demurrer to the answer, that plaintiff's tenancy constituted him a bona fide settler and occupant, so as to support his claim by preëmption. Corbett v. Woods, 32 Minn. 509, 21 N. W. 734.

Complaints held insufficient.— A complaint alleging that defendant had, in violation of the statute, aliened a part of the land, and thereby forfeited his entry, and that the secretary of the interior erred in the contest in holding that such alienation did not work a forfeiture is insufficient where it does not also allege that the alienation was proved before the secretary, and found by him to be true, and that he had made such decision as a matter of law. Hays v. Steiger, 76 Cal. 555, 18 Pac. 670. A complaint alleging merely that plaintiff made application to purchase land as coal land, filing a declaratory statement in the land office and went into pos-

fraud or mistake is not sufficient, but the party seeking relief against the patent must allege and prove the facts showing that there was fraud or mistake and how it occurred,[4] and where fraud is relied on it must also be alleged and proved that the fraud affected the decision in the land department.[5]

(F) Defenses. In a suit to subject the patent to a prior right the patentee may set up fraud on the part of the complainant in obtaining and establishing his right,[6] and if the prior right is merely colorable it will not be enforced against the patent.[7] The fact that a person perfecting the title to scrip land was acting as trustee for another, and that both he and his cestui que trust intended to conceal from the federal land office their true relations, does not preclude the enforcement of the trust, where all the facts were known to and considered by the government officials before issuing the patent, and the government knowingly and willingly conveyed the land to the trustee, leaving him and his cestui que trust to settle the equities between themselves.[8]

(G) Evidence.[9] The decisions of the land department are prima facie correct,[10] and one who assails the correctness of such a decision must show affirmatively

session and improved it; that defendant caused a forged relinquishment of plaintiff's rights to be filed in the land office, of which she did not know till five months after expiration of the time within which she might have made proof and payment; and that defendant then purchased the land and a patent was issued to him — does not state a cause of action; it not showing that plaintiff did not also make a voluntary relinquishment, by failure to prosecute work on the land, or to make, or offer to make, seasonable period and payment, Gebo v. Clarke Fork Coal Min. Co., 30 Mont. 87, 75 Pac. 859. A complaint alleging that defendant had conveyed the land to another, who had farmed it, under a claim of title, prior to the institution of the contest suit between plaintiff and defendant, but not showing that there was no consideration for the conveyance, is insufficient to justify a review of the decision on the ground that defendant had executed the conveyance pursuant to a fraudulent agreement, previously made, to procure a patent in his own name as his grantee's pretended assignee, and for his grantee's benefit. Wiseman v. Eastman, 21 Wash. 163, 57 Pac. 398. A bill to control the title to lands patented to defendant cannot be maintained merely on allegations that plaintiff had made valuable improvements thereon under the belief that it was included in his homestead entry, long prior to defendant's homestead entry, there being no allegation that plaintiff had sought to amend his entry so as to include the land. Savage v. Worsham, 66 Fed. 852. Where complainant's bill showed affirmatively that defendant's entry had not been canceled, and failed to show that complainant had ever contested defendant's entry, and it did not aver that any evidence of the frauds which were claimed to vitiate defendant's patent had ever been presented to the register or receiver of the land office, complainant failed to show any right to or interest in the land. that it is illegal and unauthorized,[11] and has the burden of proving that he and not the patentee was entitled to the patent.[12] The claimant must establish his rights and the invalidity of the patent by clear and convincing evidence,[13] and if his evidence fails to establish a superior equity the legal title evidenced by the patent must prevail.[14] In order to authorize a decree in favor of an equitable claimant by a senior entry against a junior entry and patent, all the evidence must be produced which would be required in the general land office for the issue of a patent.[15] Where misconduct on the part of the land officials in a contest case is averred, a complete record of their proceedings is admissible, being not only relevant but of the utmost importance.[16]

(H) Trial.[17] In a suit by a private individual against the holder of a title to land by patent from the government only the plaintiff's right can be tried,[18] and questions as to non-compliance on the part of the patentee with the requirements of the law under which the patent was issued are not relevant.[19]

The statutes of the United States, already noticed, declare that his money, paid to the government in the consummation of his fraud, shall be forfeited. . . . We are satisfied the same rule should be invoked in favor of these plaintiffs. The money paid by defendant being forfeited to the government by reason of his fraud, these plaintiffs should not be required to make it good. The labor and expense of prosecuting this action, necessarily entailed upon plaintiffs by defendant's fraudulent acts, may well be said to counter-balance the amount which the latter paid for the land as a condition of a conveyance to the claimant of the land,[22] and where the government has in its possession the money paid by both the patentee and the person to whom he is compelled to convey the property natural justice and equity require that it refund to the patentee his purchase-money.[23]

(III) Quieting Title[24]— (A) In General. The relief may be in the form of quieting the title of the person entitled to the land as against the patentee,[25] and enjoining the patentee from asserting his title.[26] It is held in California that an action to quiet title to a parcel of land may be maintained, although the title to such land is still in the United States.[27]

(B) Interest Necessary to Maintain Suit. The rule that a suit to quiet title can only be maintained on the legal title does not apply as against a railroad company, with respect to lands granted to it by the government, when it has done everything required to entitle it to the grant, since it is powerless to compel the government to issue a patent therefor.[28]

(C) Jurisdiction of Courts.[29] An adverse suit brought to determine the respective rights of a claimant under the law permitting soldiers' additional homestead certificates to be located on the public land in Alaska and those who deny his right may be maintained in the district courts of Alaska; the practice and parties being controlled and regulated solely by the code of Alaska.[30]

(D) Limitations[31] and Laches. The right to maintain a suit to quiet title to lands held or claimed under patent from the government may be barred by limitations[32] or laches.[33]

(E) Parties.[34] In an action to quiet title to school lands, a county auditor and board of commissioners are neither necessary nor proper defendants, and a judgment against them cannot bind the state.[35] Settlers upon public lands claimed under the laws permitting soldiers' additional homestead certificates to be located in Alaska may intervene in an adverse suit brought to quiet title thereto, although they have not filed an adverse claim in the land office proceedings.[36]

for lands, and to have the title of complainant perfected and quieted, it is not necessary to allege fraud in order to give the court jurisdiction.[38] A bill by a railroad company to quiet title, alleging that the United States had full title at the time complainant's grant attached, and that defendant claims under a patent issued by the state as for land to which the state was entitled in lieu of certain other grants, shows a cloud upon the title, although it is not alleged that such lands were ever listed to the state.[39]

(G) Defenses. The question of the bona fides of the settlement by a preëmption claimant whose right attached before a railroad was definitely located and who has received a patent from the government cannot be raised in defense to his claim to have removed as a cloud on his title a patent from the state to the railroad.[40]

(H) Evidence.[41] The burden of proof is upon the complainant to establish the facts entitling him to the relief asked.[42]

(IV) Protection of Bona Fide Purchasers.[43] A bona fide purchaser from the patentee is entitled to protection against the claims of one who had a right to the land superior to that of the patentee;[44] but a mere statement that the person claiming protection "purchased the land in good faith and for a valuable consideration without notice of any claim of said plaintiff to the same or any part thereof" is not a sufficient statement of his right to entitle him to protection as a purchaser in good faith.[45]

Evidence held insufficient.— In an action by a person in possession of school land under a certificate of purchase, to quiet his title against the holder of a patent to such land, the facts that the certificate is prior to the date of the patent, that plaintiff is in possession of the land, that he has paid all the interest payments required by law, and that the balance of the purchase-money is not due, are insufficient to overcome the patent, where it appears that the land has been taxable for a considerable number of years, and no proof is made with reference to the payment of the taxes, nor with reference to the transactions between the patentee and the officers authorized to make sales of school lands, on which the action of the governor in issuing the patent was based. application to purchase land has been approved has an equitable interest in the land which he may assign or convey to another,[50] although he has not yet paid the government price for the land.[51] Where lands are granted by the government to individuals, on condition precedent, the grantees may assign them even before performance of the condition,[52] and the title of the assignees will be good against all persons except the government.[53] A sale of unappropriated public lands, to which the vendor has no valid claim, while not void as against public policy, has no consideration, so that recovery cannot be had on the purchase-money notes.[54]

(II) Sale by Homestead Entryman[55]— (A) In General. A homestead entryman has no right to sell or convey the land entered by him before he has made final proof and obtained the final receiver's receipt,[56] and an unauthorized alienation of the land defeats his right to a patent;[57] but the sale and surrender of a homestead claim and the improvements thereon is a good consideration for a promissory note, for although it conveys no interest in the land itself as against the government, the possessory right of the homesteader and his improvements are subjects of legitimate bargain and sale.[58] The alienation which is prohibited and transfer the same to others and execute competent conveyances thereof,[97] and the incapacity of such persons to originally initiate such right or to subsequently perfect title can be called in question only by the United States and cannot be invoked by strangers to attack their right to be protected in the possession and enjoyment of such property or the validity of their conveyances of the same to subsequent grantees.[98]

c. Form and Requisites of Transfer or Assignment. The imperfect or inchoate title, acquired by entry on public lands, before the issuance of the patent, will pass by an assignment without words of inheritance.[99] An assignment of a certificate of purchase need not express the consideration,[1] nor is it necessary that it should be acknowledged in order to convey to the assignee the title of the assignor.[2] In Wisconsin it is held that, although the legal title to a school-land certificate cannot be transferred without an assignment in writing as required by the statute,[3] the equitable interest in the land created by the certificate may be mortgaged or transferred by deed without an assignment of the certificate;[4] but certificates of purchase of school lands can only be sold and transferred like any other real estate contract,[5] and the prevalence of a custom of assigning such certificates in blank and passing them from hand to hand is insufficient to give them the character of negotiable instruments.[6] An assignment of a land certificate issued under an act of congress is not within the registration acts of Alabama and does not become inoperative against a subsequent purchaser for the omission to register it.[7] A provision in the contract of sale of school lands that no assignment thereof shall be valid unless indorsed thereon is for the benefit of the state only, which alone can insist upon a compliance therewith, and hence a failure to indorse an assignment on the contract does not render such assignment void.[8] It has been held that an assignment, by an instrument not under seal, of land purchased of the United States, for which a certificate of final payment has been issued is not sufficient to sustain an action of trespass by the assignee,[9] nor is such an assignment proper evidence in ejectment.[10]

d. Annulment of Transfer or Assignment — (i) In General. An assignment of a certificate of entry of land may be set aside in equity, when shown to have been procured by fraud, and taking advantage of the assignor's intoxication,[11] but on a bill by the assignor of a certificate of purchase of school land to compel a reassignment, defendant cannot raise the objection that complainant procured the certificate by fraudulent representations as to the value of the land as this concerns only the state.[12]

(ii) Who May Attack Transfer: A person prosecuting a claim to lands, under a patent issued to him as assignee of an entry, is not bound to prove the legality of the assignment as against strangers;[13] and the validity of a verbal transfer of a settler's right of entry of unsurveyed lands cannot be questioned by a third person, not claiming under the government.[14] A statutory restriction upon the transfer of an entryman's rights before the issuance of a patent cannot be taken advantage of by a subsequent purchaser who procured a deed in fraud of the rights of the first grantee.[15] Where a son agreed with his mother to make a timber culture entry, she to pay all the expenses and he to convey to her, and obtained a patent and died without making a conveyance, his wife and administratrix, not being, with reference to said illegal agreement with the mother, in pari delicto with her, could maintain an action to quiet title and recover possession from the mother.[16]

e. Warranty. It has been held that a person who sells a "claim" on public lands impliedly warrants the title thereto,[17] but another court has held that there is no implied warranty in an assignment of a certificate of location of a land warrant.[18]

f. Effect of Assignment or Transfer — (i) In General. An assignment of the land by an entryman divests all his interest therein;[19] and one who sells all his right, title, and interest in an improvement on public lands parts with all the advantages to which he may be entitled in virtue thereof.[20]

(ii) Rights of Purchaser or Assignee. Where one who has located a state school land warrant conveys all his right, title, and interest in the land before the issue of the patent of the state to him, he conveys not only his beneficial interest in the land, but also his right to a conveyance of the legal title;[21] but a purchase of the improvements of a settler on public lands confers no settlement right on the purchaser.[22] While there may be a bona fide purchaser before a patent issues, entitled to protection as such,[23] the general rule is that a purchaser of land prior to the issuance of a government patent is not entitled to protection against the government as a bona fide purchaser,[24] but acquires only such

What constitutes an agreement within the prohibition.—As used in this connection, the word "agreement" means that there must be a meeting of minds expressed in some tangible way, and there must be an intent in some way to be binding upon the parties. One party may intend to sell and the other party may intend to buy, but this is not sufficient unless the intention of each is in some way communicated to the other and agreed to. The agreement need not be in writing nor need it be of sufficient form or of the nature to be enforced in court, but it is enough if it is proven that in some way the minds of the applicant and some other person have met definitely and understandingly, and that there is a mutual consent that when the applicant acquires title to the land from the United States it shall inure to the benefit of such other person for a consideration. And any words or acts manifesting this mutual consent of the minds of the parties are sufficient to constitute a contract or agreement. The provision that he shall not seek to acquire the land for speculation is not intended to limit the homesteader's dominion over the land after he has complied with the provisions of the homestead law, made his final proof, and acquired title, but only to prohibit his entering the land under an agreement whereby he is acting for another. He may acquire a valid title under the homestead law with a view of disposing of the land after he has completed the purchase, provided that at and before the time of completing such purchase he has not entered into an agreement whereby another shall receive any of the benefit of such purchase. U. S. v. Richards, 149 Fed. 443.

Agreement held not unlawful.— Where A, holding a contract to purchase lands from B, who was supposed to be the owner, agreed to convey them to C as soon as he procured the title, and the lands were afterward discovered to be public lands, and A and C then agreed that C should obtain title by filing on the lands as a homestead, and pay A the price originally stipulated, less any damages which A might recover from B for the failure of title, this agreement did not contemplate that the purchaser should procure the title from the government for the benefit of his vendor, and hence was not against public policy or invalid. Frink v. Hoke, 35 Oreg. 17, 56 Pac. 1093, holding further that on the rescission of such contract by A because of C's refusal to pay the price after obtaining a patent, C was properly adjudged to hold the title acquired from the government in trust for A, although A had since entered a homestead on other lands, since any outstanding title C obtained while in possession under the contract to buy inured to the benefit of his vendor, and he could not assert it against him.

(II) Contracts of Sale[51]— (A) In General. Some of the statutes relating to the disposal of public lands forbid the making of any contract by a settler or entryman, before his right to the land has become complete, to sell or transfer the land or his interest therein after he has perfected his title, and a contract in violation of such a provision is void;[52] but in the absence of any such statutory prohibition the entryman may contract for the sale of his rights while they remain inchoate.[53] An entryman may lawfully agree with any person at any time that

A statute prohibiting "future contracts" for the sale of land entered under its provisions is not contravened by a contract made, after its passage, by occupants of land who had previously sold lots in their claim to

if he desires to sell after he has proved up on the land, he will give such person the first chance to buy it.[54]

(B) Conveyances Pursuant to Void Contracts. Although a contract to convey the land made before the perfection of the entryman's rights may be void because in violation of the statute,[55] a conveyance made pursuant to such contract after the entryman has received his patent or his right thereto has become perfect is not void,[56] and cannot be repudiated by the grantor[57] or attacked by his subsequent grantee.[58]

(III) Contracts to Share Land. Ordinarily an agreement by a person seeking to acquire land under a law forbidding transfers of inchoate rights to share the land with another could not be enforced;[59] but where two persons have settled upon and claim the right to acquire the same tract, and each has, except as against the other, a perfect right to acquire it, an agreement between them that one shall procure title to the entire tract and it shall then be divided between them is valid and enforceable.[60]

(IV) Contracts to Divide Proceeds. A contract by an entryman to pay to another person a part of the proceeds of the sale of the land after he acquires title if he can find a purchaser and sell the same at a proper price is not unlawful, although the statute forbids contracts by which the title shall inure to the benefit of any person other than the entryman.[61]

(V) Contracts to Relinquish Entries. A contract by an entryman to relinquish his claim to and abandon the land and to cancel his entry at the land office in order that the other party may enter the land and ultimately secure a patent therefor is not illegal,[62] and constitutes a good consideration for the other party's note for or promise to pay the agreed price.[63] But the preference right of entry given by statute to a person who has contested, paid the land office fees, and procured the cancellation of an entry is personal, and a contract by such person to relinquish the right to another is against public policy and specific performance thereof will not be enforced.[64]

(VI) Contracts For Cutting Timber.[65] Where a person whose inchoate right in land is not such as to entitle him to cut timber at his pleasure, a contract by which he grants to another the right to cut timber for purposes other than those authorized by statute is void,[66] as is also a promise to pay for timber unlawfully cut on public lands, to which the payee claimed a possessory right.[67]

k. Effect of Issuance of Patent to Grantor or Assignor. The issuance of a patent to one who has conveyed or assigned his interest in the lands vests the beneficial ownership in the grantee or assignee,[68] and the patentee holds the legal title in trust for his vendee [69] and may be compelled to convey to him.[70]

2. After Right to Patent Complete, but Before Patent Issued. One who has done everything which is necessary in order to entitle him to receive a patent for public land has, even before the patent is actually issued by the land department, a complete equitable estate in the land[71] which he can sell and convey,[72]

mortgage,[73] or lease,[74] and a fortiori a contract to convey land made before the issuance of a patent but after final proof has been made and the land paid for is not illegal.[75] A conveyance of the land, and delivery of the certificate of final payment is sufficient evidence of an assignment of the certificate and all rights acquired thereby.[76] A bona fide purchaser of standing timber from the holders of receiver's final receipts for the purchase-price of land entered under the Timber Act cannot upon avoidance, for the fraud of the entryman, of the patents afterward issued, be required to account to the federal government for the timber which he has paid for and cut and removed in reliance upon his purchase.[77]

3. After Issuance of Patent. After a patent has issued to an entryman he has the full legal title [78] and may sell, give away, or otherwise deal with the land in such manner as he sees fit.[79] One who purchases from a patentee without knowledge or suspicion of wrong in the title is strictly and technically a bona fide purchaser and entitled to protection as such.[80]

Q. Exemptions[81]—1. In General. As an encouragement to the settlement of the public lands,[82] it is expressly provided by statute that no lands acquired under the provisions of the homestead law shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor,[83] and that no lands acquired under the timber culture laws shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issuance of the final certificate therefor.[84] It is settled beyond question that the creation of such Purchaser not required to go behind patent. — The rule that a purchaser of public land is required to take notice of the records and proceedings in the land department does not apply to a purchaser after patent, who may rely on its presumptive validity, and is not required to go behind it. Circumstances negativing good faith.— Where a person knowingly and by collusion obtained a patent for lands not subject to sale, and on the next day made a sale of them at a distant place, to another person who had never seen the lands and who paid for them almost double their value, the purchaser was not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser, in the absence of an explanation of the circumstances of his purchase. exemptions is within the power of congress,[85] and they cannot be impaired by state legislation,[86] and will be enforced in the state as well as in the federal courts.[87]

2. Commutation of Entry. The exemption extends to the case of one who has commuted his homestead entry as permitted by the statute.[88]

3. Death of Entryman. Where the entryman dies before the issuance of a patent or final certificate and his heirs or devisees become entitled to the land [89] they take the land as free from their previously contracted debts as it would have been free from the debts of the original entryman if he had lived to receive the patent.[90] Where a homesteader dies after the issuance of a patent the probate court has no jurisdiction, in administering his estate, to order the homestead sold to pay debts contracted by the decedent prior to the issuance of the patent.[91]

4. Particular Debts and Claims — a. Judgments [92] Obtained After Patent Issued. A judgment rendered against a homesteader after he obtains his patent upon a debt contracted before that time is not a lien on the land.[93]

b. Mechanics' Liens.[94] A mechanic's lien for work done or materials furnished prior to the issuance of the patent cannot attach to the homestead; [95] but where under the state statutes a mechanic's lien can attach to a building as distinct from the land,[96] the exemption of a homestead from liability for debts contracted before the patent issues does not preclude the sale and removal on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien of a house erected on land on which a homestead filing has been made, but as to which the entryman has not made final proof.[97]

c. Debts Contracted After Right to Patent Complete But Before Patent Issued. It has been held that the provision of the homestead law exempting the homestead from liability for debts contracted prior to "the issuing of the patent" refers to the time when the patent ought to issue and not to the mere clerical work of issuing it, and hence the homestead is liable for debts contracted after the right to a patent became complete, although before it was actually issued; [98] but other courts hold that the date of the actual issuance of the patent fixes the time when the liability of the land begins, and it is not liable for debts contracted before that time, although after the right to the patent was complete.[99]

3. Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. 145, 157, 80 C. C. A. 513, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 154, where it is said: "In view of the patent distinction between debts by contract and liabilities for wrongs, of the familiar use of the term 'debt contracted' to indicate the former, and the term 'liability incurred' to signify both, of the marked distinction between the two classes of liabilities embodied in the Constitution of the United States and the decisions of the courts, of the public policy of the nation to release debtors from their honest obligations and to refuse to discharge them from their liabilities for frauds and malicious injuries, and of the evident rejection of the expression 'liability incurred' and the selection and adoption of the term 'debt contracted' by the Congress in the acts under consideration, the latter phrase is too clear in expression and too certain in significance to permit the substitution for it of the term 'liability incurred' by any rule of construction. Such a substitution would be judicial legislation which the courts are not authorized to enact, and would import into these acts of Congress an exemption which the Congress did not insert therein, and which the plain term it used conclusively demonstrates it never intended to enact. . . . The fact has not escaped attention that some courts have substituted the words 'liability incurred,' or their meaning, for the term 'debt contracted,' in these acts of Congress by the use of the rule of liberal construction, by the rejection of the primary and ordinary meaning of the words 'debt contracted' and by the imputation to them of an ingenious and secondary signification (Loomis v. Gerson, 62 Ill. 11; Conroy v. Sullivan, 44 Ill. 451; Warner v. Cammack, 37 Iowa 642; Mertz v. Berry, 101 Mich. 32, 59 N. 5. Effect of Cessation of Occupation of Land as Homestead. It is not necessary, to entitle one to hold lands acquired by him under the homestead law from liability for debts contracted prior to the issuance of the patent, that he should continue to occupy it as a homestead.[4]

6. Effect of Conveyance of Homestead. The homestead remains free from liability for debts of the homesteader contracted before the patent issued, although the homesteader has conveyed the land to another;[5] but the grantee does not hold the land exempt from the payment of his own debts, although such debts were contracted before the patent issued.[6] Where a homesteader conveys the land to another and afterward regains the ownership, the land remains, notwithstanding the transfer, free from liability for his debts contracted prior to the patent.[7] But the exemption does not extend to the proceeds of a sale of the homestead or to property purchased with such proceeds.[8]

R. Crimes[9] in Connection With Acquisition of Public Lands. It is a crime under the statutes to conspire to defraud the United States of any part of its public lands,[10] or to forge or counterfeit or pass forged or counterfeited military bounty land warrants or certificates, certificates of purchase, receipts for purchase-money, etc.,[11] or to forge or counterfeit any other writing intended to defraud the United States of its public lands or present or transmit any such writing to any officer of the United States with intent to defraud the United States,[12] or to bargain, 11,523, 3 Hughes 609), and that statutes which use other terms such as 'any debt or liability contracted' have been construed to include liabilities for torts (Smith v. Omans, 17 Wis. 395). But the arguments and the opinions in these cases are not convincing. Reasons which appeal more strongly to our minds sustain our conclusion, and it is not without the support of respectable authority. contract, or agree with any person not to bid upon or purchase land offered at public sale by the United States.[13]

III. DISPOSAL OF STATE LANDS.[14]

A. Obsolete Matters. A number of questions in relation to land grants which arose in the early history of the United States have been long ago settled and are not likely to arise again. Hence it is deemed sufficient to merely refer to some of the principal cases relating to the land grants in territory originally belonging to one state but subsequently formed into a new state,[15] grants in territory claimed by two states because of a dispute as to the boundary,[16] Connecticut claims in Pennsylvania,[17] and a number of other matters relating to the disposal of state

4 Blackf. 337, holding that transmitting false papers to the pension office in support of an application for a bounty land warrant is punishable under the statute, although it expressly refers to the making and transmitting of false papers for the purpose of obtaining from the United States "any sum or sums of money."

The word "claim," as used in the act of March 3, 1823 (U. S. Comp. St. (1901) pp. 3667, 3668), will include bounty land granted under an act of congress, and therefore it is a felony, under that act, to transmit to the pension office forged papers in support of an application for such lands (U. S. v. Wilcox, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,691, 4 Blatchf. 385), and also a claim to exercise the right of preëmption, or a claim of right to bounty lands, and the claim to thereby acquire from the United States government title to the public lands (U. S. v. Spaulding, 3 Dak. 85, 13 N. W. 357, 358).

Indictment.— An indictment for transmitting forged papers to the pension office in support of a claim for bounty land need not show that the forged papers stated all the facts necessary to be established in order to entitle the party to the bounty land, provided it shows that they were transmitted for the purpose of obtaining the allowance of the claim for the bounty land applied for. U. S. v. Wilcox, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,691, 4 Blatchf. 385.

Variance.— Proof that a defendant forged papers purporting to transfer the right to an additional homestead, which is a vendible right, and sold and delivered the same to another for a consideration paid to him, and without any agreement or understanding with the purchaser with respect to the use to be made of them, will not support an indictment for transmitting such papers or procuring them to be transmitted to a land-office with intent to defraud the United States. U. S. v. Fout, 123 Fed. 625.

Sufficiency of evidence.— Upon a prosecution for the offense of transmitting false papers to the pension office in support of a bounty land warrant, it is not necessary to show that the prisoner actually transmitted the papers, but it is sufficient to prove that he procured the papers with a view to their transmission by another. U. S. v. Bickford, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,591, 4 Blatchf. 337.

lands which are of little or no practical interest or importance at the present time.[18]

B. General Considerations — 1. State Control. The state does not surrender the dominion and control of the public domain until final and complete title has been issued,[19] and in all cases of land claims where the fee to the land remains in the state, it has the right to establish, alter, and modify such regulations, from time to time, as may be deemed necessary in maturing an imperfect into a perfect title.[20]

2. Power to Grant. The legislature of a state has the power to dispose of the unappropriated lands within the state,[21] but a grant by a state of land beyond its boundaries is void.[22] Where a state has ceded territory to the United States it cannot subsequently grant land therein,[23] nor can a state issue a valid patent to an individual for land which it has consented to sell to the United States.[24] A state cannot grant to one person land which it has previously granted to another,[25] or public sale, and such part as may then remain at private sale, exhausts all his power by a sale to one at the public sale, and a subsequent bona fide purchaser of the same land, without notice, who records his deed before the prior purchaser, obtains no title thereby.[30]

4. Land Subject to Disposal. Land reserved from sale by act of the legislature cannot be legally sold or purchased,[31] and a statute validating defective sales does not apply to such lands.[32]

5. Withdrawal of Land From Sale. A statutory grant to certain persons of the privilege of purchasing certain lands is a mere offer which may be withdrawn by the state at any time before acceptance.[33]

6. Who May Purchase or Acquire Land. The legislature has the right to prescribe who may become purchasers of state lands,[34] what steps shall be taken by one desiring to secure title,[35] and how adverse claims to the same tract shall be determined.[36] Where the constitution gives to foreigners becoming bona fide residents the same rights as citizens as to property, a subject of the Chinese empire, if a bona fide resident, may locate and purchase public lands of the state.[37] An officer attached to a state land office cannot purchase public lands by entry at his own office.[38]

Hill Code Oreg. § 4227, which authorizes no particular terms are necessary.[42] The legislature may direct the mode in which titles to the public lands shall be conveyed by the state.[43] A patent is as effectual to pass the estate without as with a consideration,[44] and it is not necessary to the passing of a complete title that a patent should be delivered,[45] or formally accepted by the grantee.[46] A grant or patent should describe and identify the land.[47] A compliance with all statutory requirements is required in order to give any title under an attempted purchase or alleged grant from the state.[48] The title to donation land located by mistake within lands not then owned by the state has been held to be confirmed by the subsequent purchase of such lands from the Indians by the state.[49]

9. Validity of Patents or Grants. Every grant or patent of land, issued in the form prescribed by law, is presumed to be valid,[50] and to have issued regularly;[51] and it is incumbent on a person who controverts such a grant to support his objections.[52] But a patent is void if the officer who issued it had no authority to do so,[53] or if it was issued without authority of law,[54] or the state had no title to the land.[55] A patent for lands previously granted to another person is of course void;[56] but a grant which includes lands not before granted, and also some portion of the elder grants, is valid for the portion not before granted.[57] Accordingly a patent is not void merely because it excludes prior grants without identifying or describing them;[58] and a fortiori a patent is not void for uncertainty where the land is accurately surveyed, and the exclusions specify the quantity of acres and the names of the owners of the excluded portions.[59] But it has been held that a patent with such sweeping lines as to include within it a large quantity of both vacant and already appropriated lands, without identifying the latter, cannot be sustained because of its uncertainty.[60] A patent issued irregularly, or through fraud or mistake or on a false suggestion, is voidable only and not void,[61] unless the defect appears on its face.[62] The fact that the number of acres contained in a grant by the state is much greater than the amount called for in the grant does not make the grant void.[63] Where the patentee is sufficiently described a mistake in his name will not invalidate the patent.[64] So also where the property granted is so described that it can be certainly identified the grant is good, although the description may be in some respects inaccurate or insufficient;[65] but a grant is insufficient where the description of the land is so indefinite that it cannot be identified.[66] A patent is not vitiated by the fact that it commences in the name of one person as governor, but is signed by another person, by whom, in the conclusion, it purports to be executed as governor.[67]

10. Construction of Patents or Grants. Where the terms of a grant or patent from the state are uncertain or doubtful, it is to be construed strictly against the grantee and most favorably for the state.[68] All the recitals of a patent are to be considered in determining the measure or quantity of land conveyed,[69] and, in determining the boundary, matters of description in connection with the circumstances of the case are to be looked to.[70] Courses and distances in a patent must yield to well known objects called for,[71] or to lines marked upon the ground;[72] but courses and distances must govern, unless controlled by artificial boundaries or natural objects.[73] An error of description in a survey, adopted in a patent, manifestly founded in mistake or falsehood, is insufficient to control other calls and expressions inconsistent therewith.[74] It is competent to resort to the survey to aid in supplying omissions or correcting mistakes in a patent;[75] and a plat, annexed to an old grant, which professes to delineate a parcel of land granted by the state, furnishes strong evidence on the question of location of the state grant, if unopposed by contrary title or possession.[76] Where lands are patented by the state "according to the official plat" in the state land office, the plat becomes a part of the grant.[77] Where the description of the land in a patent concluded with the words "plotting out of the survey all lands heretofore surveyed" older surveys were excluded from the grant.[78] Where two persons, father and son, bear the name appearing as grantee in a patent, the presumption is that the one who had the survey made and obtained the patent is the true grantee.[79] A number of illustrative cases on the construction of state patents and grants are cited in the note.[80]

11. Effect of Patents or Grants. A patent is not a deed of bargain and sale in either the technical or the popular signification of the word,[81] but is merely in the nature of a quitclaim deed, passing such title and such title only as the state then has;[82] and the grantee takes subject to any and all encumbrances legally existing upon the land.[83] The patent or grant conveys the legal title to the patentee or grantee,[84] and by construction of law confers a seizin in deed upon him.[85] The patent or grant is binding on and conclusive against the state[86] and all subsequent claimants under the state,[87] but it does not affect preëxisting rights of third persons.[88] It takes effect from its date, and not from the time it is actually delivered to the grantee,[89] and is prima facie evidence of title[90] and of all the facts which are recited therein;[91] and has been held to be conclusive evidence of the fact that vacant land was the subject of patent and sale.[92] But neither a right nor a liability arising prior to a patent can be affected by recitals therein.[93] A patent cures or merges all irregularities in former proceedings,[94] and is notice to a subsequent claimant that the land is not vacant.[95] A conveyance of land by the state vests the grantees with the requisite power to take and hold it.[96] A patent vests the patentee with title to all vacant and unappropriated land within the exterior boundary;[97] but if prior claims are reserved, no title passes to the lands covered by such claims.[98] Where a grant is made to several persons, and one of the grantees rejects it, but the others accept it, end pay the consideration for the whole tract, which is accepted by the state, they take title to the whole.[99] When the state makes a sale of its land, its rights and those of its vendee, when neither restricted nor enlarged by statute, are the same as those of a vendor and purchaser, both of whom are natural persons.[1] The fact that a person paid the fees at the land office to obtain a patent on a land certificate of a decedent gives him no claim against the interest of the decedent's minor children, in the absence of a contract by a duly qualified guardian.[2]

statutes require the recording of patents from the state the same as other conveyances of land.[5]

13. Presumptions and Evidence. A grant from the state may be presumed from long possession,[6] but, in a suit by the state to recover lands within its borders, it devolves on defendants to show that the state has parted with its title.[7] A recital in a statute of a previous grant by the state is sufficient evidence of such grant as against the state.[8]

14. Attack on and Setting Aside of Patents and Grants.[9] The power to issue land patents is an executive duty, defined and circumscribed by law, and when the law is violated in this regard, the judicial department may inquire into the matter and by decree annul patents illegally issued.[10] So a patent may be canceled or annulled where it was issued through mistake [11] or fraud,[12] or on a false suggestion,[13] and the state cannot be estopped by the unauthorized act of its officers in issuing patents to lands in disregard of law.[14] The title of a patentee can be attacked by the state or an individual having a prior legal or equitable claim to the land and by no one else;[15] and even the state can proceed for the annulment of its patents

but after title to land becomes vested under a grant from the state, there can be no abandonment thereof in the absence of adverse possession.[28] A failure to list land for taxation does not authorize an inference of a surrender of the possession,[29] nor will land which has been patented revest in the state merely because of the owner's neglect to pay the taxes.[30] A relinquishment of lands to the state, by the owner of a superior title, passes his claim to the government, and does not inure to the benefit of an inferior title,[31] and the state has the right to regrant the land.[32]

16. Reversion to State. Where land is granted by the state to persons named as trustees for a certain purpose and the object of the trust fails or becomes extinct, the title reverts to the state as a matter of law.[33] If land granted reverts to the state, the state only can take advantage thereof.[34] There is no presumption of a reversion to the state of a land grant, unless there be proof that neither the grantee nor his representatives or assigns have been heard of in the neighborhood of the land for a long series of years.[35]

17. Disposal of Land by Grantee. A deed made by the grantee of land from the state before the grant is issued takes precedence of a second deed made after the issuance of the grant,[36] and a statute granting land to persons on certain conditions, and providing that no sale of a claim thereto should be valid in law and binding upon the person making the sale until an unconditional deed should be obtained, has been held not to forbid the disposition of a claimant's interest in such land by will, where he was entitled to an unconditional deed at the time of making the will, although he had not yet received it.[37] A bona fide purchaser of lands under a state patent is entitled to protection.[38]

C. Land Grants in Particular States — 1. In General. There are a number of matters peculiar to the land grant systems of the various states, but as to the great majority of the states it is deemed sufficient to merely cite in the note some of the principal cases on the subject,[39] for in a great many states there is at Mere verbal statements by a settler who has left his settlement, to the effect that he keeps up his claim, cannot prevent the relinquishment of possession from operating as an abandonment. Cluggage v. Duncan, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 111.

The applicant must be an actual settler at the time of his application.— Gavitt v. Mohr, 68 Cal. 506, 10 Pac. 337.

as after the constitution took effect,[42] and applies to land originally unfit for cultivation, but which, at the time of application for purchase, has been made fit for cultivation, without regard to how it was reclaimed.[43] As to land which is not agricultural the rule is that other things being equal the first applicant has a prior right to purchase.[44]

b. Amount to Be Granted. Land suitable for cultivation can be granted only in quantities not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres to one person,[45] while lands which are not suitable for cultivation may be sold in quantities not exceeding six hundred and forty acres to any one person.[46]

c. Suitability For Cultivation or Reclaimability. The suitability of land for cultivation is, as has been seen, material both with respect to the persons who may purchase it [47] and the amount which may be purchased,[48] and such suitability must always be a question of fact.[49] The term "suitable for cultivation" includes all land which is ready for occupation and which by ordinary farming processes is fit for agricultural purposes;[50] even though it may be heavily timbered and more valuable for timber than for agricultural purposes,[51] and all tracts of land on which there is arable or tillable land sufficient, with the use of the other lands of the tract for pasturage or otherwise, to furnish a permanent support to the settler are within its meaning.[52] But land which is absolutely unfit for cultivation unless, by the boring of artesian wells, water may, in the future, be developed in such quantities as to render it possible to artificially irrigate it, is not suitable for

43. Boggs v. Ganeard, 148 Cal. 711, 84 Pac. 195, holding further that the question whether public land was suitable for cultivation, at the time of the application to purchase it, so that it could not be purchased by one not an actual settler, may be raised in a proper proceeding after the applicant has paid the purchase-price, and received a certificate of purchase.

44. Bieber v. Lambert, 2 Cal. 557, 93 Pac. 94.

Where the first application is imperfect and is not presented in amended form until after a second application in proper form has been made, the first applicant is not entitled to protection unless he was occupying the land before the second application was made. Bieber v. Lambert, 152 Cal. 557, 93 Pac. 94.

45. Robinson v. Eberhart, 148 Cal. 495, 83 Pac. 452; Youle v. Thomas, 146 Cal. 537, 80 Pac. 714.

Right to object to purchase.—An applicant to purchase state land, whose application is rejected, is not in privity with the state, in such sense as to entitle him to object that the parties to a contest referred to the superior court to determine their right to purchase the land have agreed to divide the land, in order to evade the provision that land suitable for cultivation shall be granted only to actual settlers in quantities not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres to each settler. Youle Thomas, 146 Cal. 537, 80 Pac. 714.

Swamp lands suitable for cultivation without reclamation can be sold only to actual settlers in tracts of one hundred and sixty acres. Dollenmayer v. Pryor, 150 Cal. 1, 87 Pac. 616 [citing St. (1899) p. 182].

The fact that the land will not produce ordinary agricultural crops in average quantities does not establish that it is not suitable for cultivation within the meaning of the statute. Albert v. Hobler, 111 Cal. 398, 43 Pac. 1104; Jacobs v. Walker, 90 Cal. 43, 27 Pac. 48.

Lands suitable for the cultivation of the ordinary fruit crops grown in the state are agricultural lands within the meaning of the statute. Reeves v. Hyde, 77 Cal. 397, 19 Pac. 685.

51. Jacobs v. Walker, 90 Cal. 43, 27 Pac. 48.

52. Sanford v. Maxwell, 3 Cal. App. 242, 84 Pac. 1000, holding that Pol. Code, § 3495, providing that any smallest legal subdivision of school lands shall be deemed suitable for cultivation if any part not less than one half of its area will, without artificial irrigation, but with or without the clearing of timber or other growth therefrom, by the ordinary processes of tillage, produce ordinary agricultural crops in average quantities, is not intended to construe Const. art. 17, § 3, further than to affirmatively provide that every legal subdivision coming within the description shall be regarded as suitable for cultivation, and is not to be construed as providing that cultivation, within the meaning of the constitution and statutes.[53] Land which is not reclaimable for agricultural purposes, except at an expense beyond its value after reclamation, is not reclaimable within the meaning of a statute authorizing the sale of reclaimable public land.[54]

d. Application or Affidavit For Purchase. An application or affidavit for the purchase of lands from the state must strictly conform to all the requirements of the statute,[55] and state all the matters which the statute requires;[56] and such statements must be true.[57] So it must be stated whether there are settlers on the land,[58] that the applicant knows of no valid claim to the land other than his own,[59] and that he has the qualifications necessary to entitle him to become a purchaser,[60] and the application must describe the land.[61] An application for unsurveyed lands is not vitiated by embracing more than six hundred and forty acres through mistake.[62] Applicants for the purchase of state lands acquire no vested rights until the applications have been approved, or payments have been made.[63]

land not coming within the description shall be held not suitable for cultivation.

Effect of false statement.—A false statement in the affidavit required of the applicant defeats his right to purchase the land. Pardee v. Schanzlin, supra. And it has also been held that a false statement as to certain subdivisions of the land not being suitable for cultivation did not defeat the right to purchase other subdivisions as to which the affidavit was true. A description which the county surveyor can understand is sufficient.—Hinckley v. Fowler, 43 Cal. 56.

Effect of defective description.—Where an application described one forty-acre tract twice, so that the application seemed to cover but three hundred and sixty acres, although it called for four hundred acres, the entire application was invalid and it could not be held good for the three hundred and sixty acres described. 62. Sherman v. Wrinkle, 121 Cal. 503, 53 Pac. 1090, 54 Pac. 270.

63. Klauber v. Higgins, 117 Cal. 451, 49 Pac. 466. Compare Pollard v. Putnam, 54 Cal. 630, holding that an application to purchase state lands, made according to law, gives the applicant as against the state, so long as the statute remains in force, a privilege to purchase the land applied for; and as against the officers of the state, and subsequent applicants, it gives him a right to purchase which can be lost only by his own failure to pursue the subsequent steps prescribed by the statute, and of which he cannot be deprived by the malfeasance or misfeasance of any of the officers, and therefore the fact that the surveyor-general's certificate and approval of an application to purchase state lands are void does not necessarily invalidate the application and the right of priority thereunder.

64. See People v. Washington, 40 Cal. 173, holding that the act of March 30, 1868, requires the payment by the purchaser of twenty-five per cent of the whole purchase-price within the first year after the purchase, and a like amount in each of the two follow-

f. Survey. The surveyor-general cannot be compelled to approve an application to purchase until the land has been surveyed and the field-notes and plat of the survey filed.[65] The survey which it is the duty of the surveyor to make [66] on an application to purchase lands should fix the boundaries of the land applied for with precision.[67]

g. Contests.[68] A contest arises when two persons make separate applications to purchase the same state land.[69] If a certificate of purchase of state lands is improperly issued by the register, a subsequent applicant to buy the same land may raise a contest,[70] and an application to purchase land may be contested by one who is qualified to purchase, although he was not an actual settler at the time of the prior application; [71] but one not claiming any right, title, or interest in the land, and who does not himself propose to purchase such land, cannot initiate a contest.[72] A person contesting the right of a holder of a land certificate to purchase need not refund to him the money he has paid.[73] The surveyor-general [74] may proceed to hear and determine the contest when the question involved is one of fact; [75] but it must be referred to the superior court of the county in which the land is situated when a question of law is involved,[76] or when either party demands a trial in the courts.[77] The superior court does not obtain jurisdiction of a state and contest merely by reason of a reference of the contest, but this must be foling years, and does not allow the purchaser three years in which to pay seventy-five per cent of the purchase-price.

If the first instalment of the purchase-money is not paid within the time required by law the officers and agents of the state may well treat the proposed purchase as abandoned (Carpenter v. Sargent, 41 Cal. 557; Eckart v. Campbell, 39 Cal. 256), and resell the land (People v. Washington, 40 Cal. 173 Eckart v. Campbell, supra), and the county treasurer is not bound to accept payment at the expiration of the time expressly limited by the statute within which it may be made (Carpenter v. Sargent, supra).

66. The duty of the county surveyor does not commence, nor can he officially act concerning any application, until the affidavit and application for a survey are officially put before him, and a survey made before such time had no official sanction. People v. Cowell, 60 Cal. 400.

When contest may arise.— A contest may arise as to the right of the holder of a certificate of purchase, whether the original applicant or his assignee, so long as such certificate is outstanding, or at least until the holder thereof is entitled to call for his patent. Miller v. Engle, 3 Cal. App. 325, 85 Pac. 159. See also Boggs v. Ganeard, 148 Cal. 711, 84 Pac. 195.

But compare Klauber v. Higgins, 117 Cal. 451, 49 Pac. 466, holding that a person in possession of lands at the commencement of the action may contest the right of another claiming under a void patent.

An applicant cannot, by making complete payment, prevent or nullify a contest, so as to become the real owner of the land and render the state a mere trustee of the legal title, with the obligation to convey on demand after expiration of the proper time. Blakeley v. Kingsbury, 6 Cal. App. 707, 93 Pac. 129.

lowed by the commencement of an action,[78] which must be done within sixty days after the order of reference is made in order to save the rights of the contestant.[79] The jurisdiction exercised by the court to which the contest is referred is special and limited and is derived from and restricted to the matters embraced in the order of reference,[80] but the court may always determine the question whether the state has title to the land.[81] Persons claiming an interest in the land are entitled to

Form of order of reference held sufficient see Gilson v. Robinson, 68 Cal. 539, 10 Pac. 193.

Payment of fee.— The register is entitled to a fee of three dollars for certifying a contest, and prepayment of such fee is a prerequisite to the right to demand such reference. Sherman v. Wright, 133 Cal. 539, 65 Pac. 1096, holding that there could be no implied waiver of the payment of the fee in advance until the act was done for which the fee was to be paid, and that where the contestant failed for more than six months to pay the fee, the contestant's application might be canceled and patents issued to the prior applicants, and no subsequent payment could avail the contestant.

Jurisdiction based on reference.— The courts cannot entertain jurisdiction of a suit between opposing applicants for the purchase of state lands, unless by reference from the surveyor-general or register of the state land office. Lobree v. Mullan, 70 Cal. 150, 11 Pac. 685; Lane v. Pferdner, 56 Cal. 122; Danielwitz v. Temple, 55 Cal. 42. An order of reference is sufficient if it shows that such contest has arisen, and that on demand of one party a reference is made, although by a clerical omission it does not recite that the reference was made on such demand. Espinosa v. Phelan, 77 Cal. 100, 19 Pac. 188.

The surveyor-general's approval of an ex parte application for the purchase of state land does not bar a subsequent applicant of his statutory right to have the contest between him and the prior applicant referred to the proper court for adjudication. Land as to which contest referable.—Although a patent issues for land as "swamp land," and the land is part of the five-hundred-thousand-acre grant to the state, for internal improvements, the surveyor-general may refer to the courts a contest arising in his office between two or more claimants of the right to purchase the land. Second reference.—After an order of reference to a court, by the surveyor-general, unless the contestant bring his action within sixty days, "his rights in the premises and under his application cease," but where a person, plaintiff, having once failed to bring his action under such reference, filed another application, obtained a second reference, and brought his action, it was held that he was not debarred from bringing such action by his first default, and that the second reference conferred jurisdiction on the court to try such action. Greenwade v. De Camp, 72 Cal. 448, 14 Pac. 177, holding further that the fact that plaintiff, who filed an application to purchase a tract of public land for which a certificate of purchase had been issued to defendant, did not sue within sixty days after the order of reference of the contest was made, did not, on a subsequent application being made by plaintiff, and on his suing within the required time, preclude him from giving evidence of acts of actual settlement performed by him upon the land prior to the time when the right to sue under the first order of reference terminated.

intervene in such an action; [82] and it has been held that the fact that a person's application to purchase school land, of some portion of which he is in possession, has been adjudged invalid, and that it has been determined that he has no right to purchase, makes him none the less a proper party to proceedings to determine a contest inaugurated by a protest in the surveyor-general's office against the purchase of the land by another person.[83] In cases of this kind, each party is an actor, and must set forth in his pleadings and show by his proofs that he has strictly complied with the law and has by such compliance become entitled to purchase the land.[84] The complaint must state that the parties are contesting claimants,[85] and set forth the facts conferring jurisdiction on the court.[86] Each party who is an applicant to purchase must state in his pleading all the facts on which he relies as showing his right to become a purchaser, and the steps which he has taken to secure his right to purchase.[87] One instituting a contest need not allege or prove previous knowledge or notice, on the part of an assignee of an applicant for the land intervening in the action, of any fraud in procuring his assignor's certificate, as such assignee has no equities entitling him to greater rights than his assignor.[88] The matters of fact required to be alleged in an affidavit for the purchase of state lands must be proved as set forth in order to establish the right to purchase in case of contest.[89] In a case where the court found that plaintiff had been and was an actual bona fide settler on the land, but also found that plaintiff had never been in actual possession thereof, such findings were, in order to reconcile them, construed to mean that plaintiff had made a bona fide settlement on the land without actual possession of more than his house and its environs.[90] In such a contest a certificate of purchase is prima facie, and not merely primary, evidence of title;[91] but the court may annul a certificate of purchase improperly issued and grant the right to purchase to a subsequent applicant.[92] A judgment for one of the applicants is conclusive only as to that part of the land mentioned in his application, which is also included in the application of the other party.[93] Where the right of an applicant has been adjudged after contest, another contest as to the same land cannot be made by a new party merely stating a different ground of contest.[94] The judgment of the superior court, or that of the appellate court, determining a contest concerning which has been referred by the surveyor-general or register to the superior court of the county where the land is situated, is conclusive on the officer referring the contest, and also on the state and the contestants,[95] and on the filing of the judgment with the surveyor-general, by any person, it is his duty to issue a certificate of purchase to the successful party.[96] The judgment on the contest cannot be collaterally attacked.[97] The state cannot receive applications for the land or sell it to a third applicant, pending a contest between two prior applicants, which has been referred by the surveyor-general to determine the right to purchase.[98]

h. Abandonment of Settlement. An actual settler on state lands who is compelled to seek a temporary residence elsewhere for the purpose of obtaining relief for a sick member of his family does not thereby abandon his settlement.[99]

i. Transfers. The mere filing of an application to purchase state land gives the applicant no right in the land which he can transfer to another;[1] but an applicant to purchase lands does not lose his right to purchase by making an agreement to sell after filing his application but before his certificate of purchase is issued, nothing in the statute prohibiting such an agreement to sell.[2] Where the vendor of a tract of land taken up under the possessory act of 1852 remained in possession, with the vendee's consent, of the only portion ever actually occupied by him, and the vendee never entered under his deed, the deed did not extend the vendee's possession by construction to any portion of the tract never in the actual possession of the vendor.[3]

j. Certificates and Patents.[4] A certificate of purchase does not pass the legal title, but such title remains in the state until the patent issues;[5] but when, on payment of part of the purchase-price of state lands, a certificate of purchase is issued by the state, an equitable title to the land vests in the purchaser.[6] The certificate of purchase is thus prima facie evidence of title,[7] but can be overcome by other evidence showing that the holder was not entitled to receive it.[8] A patent should not be issued until the applicant therefor surrenders the certificate of purchase,[9] and where a judgment debtor has a certificate of purchase of a tract of land sold him by the state, one who purchases at sheriff's sale a part only of the tract, and obtains a sheriff's deed therefor, is not entitled to a patent for such land.[10]

k. Forfeiture or Cancellation of Certificate or Patent. The state cannot avoid its patent on the ground alone that it was prematurely issued.[11] Where the state seeks to cancel patents issued by it on the ground of fraud practised in securing the patent, a suspicion of fraud, however strong, is not sufficient, but the proof must be clear and convincing;[12] and a patent will not be canceled on the ground that it was procured by the fraud of the patentee, where the land has passed to a bona fide purchaser from the patentee, for value and without notice of the fraud, although such purchase was made before the patent was issued, and while the patentee had only an equitable title.[13] In an action to annul a certificate of purchase of state lands for non-payment of principal or interest, the service of summons by publication must be made in the manner provided by the code of civil procedure for service by publication.[14] A complaint in an action to compel a surrender and cancellation of a certificate of the purchase of state land, which alleges that the purchaser has not paid the amount due and that he is the lawful holder and owner of the certificate, states a cause of action, although it does not aver that the purchaser has abandoned the title.[15] Where the terms affixed by the legislature to a special grant of public lands are not complied with, no action is necessary to enforce or to judicially establish the forfeiture which the statute declares.[16]

l. Curative Acts. There have been several statutes curing defects in proceedings for the purchase of state lands, which have been construed according to the usual rules applicable to such statutes.[17]

m. Possessory Actions. The protection of possessory rights and the maintenance of possessory actions was regulated by the act of 1852,[18] which was not repealed by the adoption of title 8 of the political code;[19] but as there have been no actions under that statute for many years it is deemed sufficient to refer to some of the principal cases decided under its provisions.[20]

3. Texas[21] — a. Introductory. When Texas seceded from Mexico and established its independence all vacant public lands vested in the republic of Texas,[22] and upon the admission of Texas to the United States the state of Texas retained all vacant and unappropriated lands within its limits.[23] In the early history of the state a large part of the public domain was disposed of by bounty warrants, grants to railroads, homestead donations, and land certificates and grants of various kinds, so that at the present time there are no vacant and unoccupied lands of the state except those which belong to the public school fund.[24] The disposal of this land is of much importance and is hereinafter discussed at length;[25] but as a detailed discussion of methods of obtaining title to other lands would be of comparatively little present value, it is deemed sufficient to merely cite some of the principal cases relating to the right of preëmption,[26] homestead donations,[27]

a recent act of the legislature all of the remaining unappropriated public domain is set apart and granted to the permanent school fund.[63]

b. Sale of School Lands — (i) In General. The constitution directs that the lands set apart for the public free school fund shall be sold under such regulations as may be prescribed by law,[64] and makes it the duty of the legislature to provide for the sale of school lands for the benefit of the school fund, and to regulate the sales in such manner as will be most beneficial to that fund.[65] The power to sell public school lands is vested in the commissioner of the general land office.[66] Where school land has been once sold, it cannot again be put upon the market or sold,[67] unless the former sale was or has become null and void,[68] or has been legally forfeited, and canceled,[69] and the land listed with the county clerk after the forfeiture.[70]

(ii) Classification and Appraisement. School lands are not subject to sale until they have been classified and appraised,[71] and placed on the market for sale,[72] and notice thereof has reached the county clerk of the county where the lands are situated;[73] but the purchaser is not required to show the classifica-

W. 256, holding that where one had made application to purchase unsurveyed school lands and caused a survey to be made, but the commissioner had not approved the notes or classified the land, an entry on the land by the applicant was a trespass, as against one holding the same under a lease from the commissioner of the general land office.

Gen. Laws (1901), p. 292, requiring the commissioner of the general land office to make a correct and revised list for each county of all unsold school lands therein, and forward the same to the county clerk, did not require a new classification and appraisement of such lands, or suspend the sale thereof until the revised lists could be made up and sent out. Briggs v. Key, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 565, 71 S. W. 43.

The fact that an application to purchase was dated prior to the approval of the survey of the land by the commissioner of the land office, standing alone, is insufficient to warrant a conclusion that the application was entertained by the surveyor before the land was on the market. Dooley v. Maywald, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 386, 45 S. W. 221, holding further that the action of the surveyor in entertaining an application to purchase school land before the commissioner of the land office approved of the appraisal report of the commissioners' court would not render the sale of the land to the applicant void, in the absence of the rights of third persons intervening.

Lands which may be included in list.— The statute requiring the commissioner of the general land office to notify in writing the county clerk of each county of the classification and valuation fixed on each section of land in his county authorizes him to include in the list of lands certified not only unsold lands but also land sold but to which the title in a purchaser has not been perfected. What constitutes an "entire lease."— Where, after school lands were leased, part was sold to a third person with the consent of the lessee, who subsequently assigned his lease, the assignee was entitled to purchase, as the lease of the part not sold to the third person was an "entire lease" within the meaning of Gen. Laws (1905), c. 103, § 5, providing that an original lessee of school lands, or the assignee of an "entire lease," out of which no sale of one complement of land has been made under the act, may purchase out of his lease the quantity of land allowed to one purchaser. Purchase by assignee under act of 1907.— Where an assignment of a lease of school land was executed, but not acknowledged, when the act of 1907 (Tex. Gen. Laws (1907), p. 491, c. 20, § 5), took effect, the assignee was not entitled to purchase under the act of 1905, and therefore, not having given his notice sixty days before the expiration of the lease, could not purchase under the act of 1907. Ross v. Terrell, (Tex. 1907) 105 S. W. 1116.

absolute lease district which are under lease are not subject to sale during the continuance of the lease,[94] to any one except the lessee or his assignee,[95] unless the lessee consents to the sale [96] or waives his rights under the lease.[97] On the expiration of a lease in the absolute lease district the land is subject to sale for a period of sixty days,[98] unless there are improvements on a section of the value of two hundred dollars or more, in which case action on an application to purchase by a person other than the maker of the improvements must be suspended for sixty days.[99] This merely allows a lessee on the expiration of his lease to apply at once for a new lease instead of waiting sixty days,[1] and does not prevent a sale to a third person who applied for the land before the lessee applied for a new lease;[2]

Where a lease had been canceled, and the unearned lease money returned, before the purchaser undertook to occupy the land, evidence that the lease ought not to have been canceled will not vary the effect of the fact that it was canceled. Borchers v. Mead, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 32, 43 S. W. 300.

Burden of proof.— One who seeks to purchase school land subject to lease has the burden of proving that the lease was canceled before he applied to purchase the land. Trevy v. Lowrie, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 321, 89 S. W. 981, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 606, 78 S. W. 18; Bradford v. Brown, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 323, 84 S. W. 392.

An award by the land commissioner of land which has been previously leased for a term which has not expired at the time of the award does not authorize the presumption, as against one claiming under the lease, that the lease had been forfeited before the award was made (Irwin v. Mayes, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 73 S. W. 33; Stokes v. Riley, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 373, 68 S. W. 703); but where a junior applicant contests an award on the ground that at the time of the award the land was subject to a lease, the presumption is that the commissioner acted lawfully in awarding the land and the burden is on the junior applicant to show that the lease had not been canceled (Davis v. Tillar, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 383, 74 S. W. 921 [distinguishing Irwin v. Mayes, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 73 S. W. 33; Stokes v. Riley, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 373, 68 S. Invalid sale to lessee.— Where the holder of a lease of school lands before the termination of the lease applied for the purchase of the lands, and the same were awarded to him, and the state, after discovering the invalidity of the sale because the holder was not an actual settler, took no action to avoid the lease or offer the lands for sale to others, as the state had the right to insist on the validity of the lease, a third person had no absolute right to purchase. Intent to make land one's home.— An actual settler on school land, who claims the right to purchase additional land, must not only have actually occupied and settled upon his land, but must intend to make it his home. is not an actual settler on his home section is ineffective.[12] Additional school lands may be purchased at the same time that the tract intended for the home place, upon which the purchaser has become an actual settler, is purchased.[13] Where a person applies to purchase two sections of school lands, claiming one as a home section and the other as additional land, his right to the latter section is dependent upon his right to the home section;[14] but where his right to purchase his home section as such is not contested, the commissioner has no power to deny his incidental right to purchase additional land subject to sale.[15]

(VII) APPLICATION FOR PURCHASE. The proposed purchaser must make application to purchase the land,[16] which must be filed in the land office through the mail, in an envelope addressed to the commissioner of the general land office at Austin.[17] When the land is to come on the market at some time subsequent to the application, the envelope must have indorsed thereon the description, name of the grantee, and date when the land is to be on the market,[18] and on receipt of the same it must be preserved by the commissioner without being opened until the day following the date indorsed thereon;[19] but it is not necessary that an application made after the land comes on the market shall bear such indorsement.[20] The application should describe the land which the applicant desires to purchase,[21] and one who seeks to purchase additional land should describe

The burden of proof is upon the person claiming that the one to whom the award was made was not an actual settler, but such proof can be made by circumstantial evidence. Jones v. Wright, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 92 S. W. 1010.

Instructions.— In trespass to try title to certain school lands, an instruction that in determining whether defendant was an actual settler on the survey designated as his home section, the jury should look to all the facts and circumstances in evidence concerning his acts and conduct in relation to such settlement, if any, for a reasonable time before and after the date of his application to purchase additional lands, was proper. What is meant by "the day following."— The statute providing that the envelope in which a purchaser makes his bid shall be preserved by the commissioner of the land office without being opened until the day following the date when the land comes on the market means the next day on which the land office is required to be opened, and not the next calendar day. Fessenden v. Terrell, (Tex. 1907) 98 S. W. 640, holding that where the next calendar day was a legal holiday it was proper to make the opening on the day following.

20. Flores v. Terrell, (Tex. 1906) 92 S. W. 32.

21. Lindsey v. Terrell, (Tex. 1907) 101 S. W. 1073, holding, however, that an application for the purchase of school lands which described the lands as one hundred and sixty in his application the land on the ownership of which he bases his right to purchase.[22] An application to purchase as an actual settler should show which is the applicant's home section and that he is actually residing thereon at the time of his application.[23] The application must be accompanied by the affidavit of the applicant that he desires to purchase the land for a home,[24] and is not purchasing for another;[25] and the applicant must transmit to the state treasurer one fortieth of the aggregate purchase-money,[26] and send to the commissioner of the general land office his obligation binding him to pay to the state on the first of November of each year thereafter one fortieth of the aggregate purchase-price, with interest on the unpaid balance.[27] An application to purchase land for cash acres in a designated section was sufficient to authorize the commissioner of school lands to make a sale where the state held only a quarter in the section, and it alone was on the market and had been advertised for sale by proper description, and that where the commissioner entertained such an application and gave the applicant an opportunity to give a more complete description of the premises, the applicant acquired a standing as an applicant for the purchase of school lands with the right to comply with the requirement of the commissioner to perfect his application, which brought him within the protection of the statute protecting the rights of third persons acquired after a forfeiture of a sale of school lands for non-payment of interest and prior to the reinstatement of the purchaser's claims.

Erroneous description.—A purchaser of public school lands, who describes the land he desires to purchase, in good faith, on his application of purchase, is entitled to the land, although the description proves erroneous. Short v. Seymour, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 925.

22. Nesting v. Terrell, 97 Tex. 18, 75 S. Watson v. White, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 442, 64 S. W. 826.

Contract for use of land for grazing.— It was not conclusive evidence of collusion that applicant purchased under an agreement with a third person that he would make the first payment, and pay interest and taxes for five years, for the use of the land during that time for grazing purposes, so far as it was not required by applicant. A deposit made after the commissioner has rejected the application because of the lack of a deposit, without a new application, confers no rights on the applicant. Coates v. Bush, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 139, 56 S. W. 617.

Return of part of amount paid through mistake.— Where an applicant for the purchase of lands made the first payment thereon, as required by statute, but through some oversight or mistake of the treasurer or commissioner of the general land office, two dollars of such amount was returned to him, which he made every effort to again transmit when informed that it was necessary, his rights were not defeated by the mistake. Faucett v. Sheppard, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 552, 60 S. W. 276.

The commissioner is bound to announce the day on which the land is to be open to competitive bidding, and that on that day any one desiring to bid must have his application and accompanying documents on file and his first payment already paid into the treasury, and hence an award of lands to a purchaser who did not deposit the payment required with the treasurer until the day after the bids were open was illegal. The application proper is only a part of the transaction and amounts to nothing un-

cannot be considered unless the cash payment is in the treasury.[28] An applicant for land which has not been classified as mineral is not required to make affidavit that there are not, to his knowledge, any minerals therein.[29] An application for more land than the applicant is entitled to purchase is invalid.[30] It has been held that an application to purchase school lands, filed before the lands have been placed on the market by the commissioner by listing the same with the county clerk,[31] or before a lease thereon has expired,[32] is premature, and confers no rights as against another applicant, whose application was made after the land became subject to sale and before the premature application was acted on.[33] But a premature application may be the basis of an award by the commissioner of the general land office, where no superior rights have been acquired prior to the making less accompanied by an obligation for the unpaid balance of the purchase-money. Willoughby v. Long, 96 Tex. 194, 71 S. W. 545 [reversing (Civ. App. 1902) 69 S. W. 646].

Description of land in obligation.— The statute does not require that the obligation for the payment of the price of school land shall describe the land, but if the applicant undertakes to do so, and the obligation describes a tract different from that described in the application, the obligation is void. Hamilton v. Votaw, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 684, 73 S. W. 1091, holding, however, that a variance caused by a misstatement of the name of the grantee of the certificate was immaterial.

Where money deposited on previous rejected applications was in the treasury when a new application was acted upon, but at such time notice of the rejection of such previous applications had not been sent to the treasurer, the new application and an award thereon cannot be subsequently canceled on the ground that the purchase-money thereunder was not in the treasury. An application made out before notice was received by the clerk but not sent to the commissioner of the general land office until after such receipt is not invalid as having been made too soon. Lester v. Elliott, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 429, 63 S. W. 916, holding further that where the county clerk made out the application for defendant to purchase public school land the day he received notice of its classification and appraisal, although prior thereto; afterward filling in the date and jurat, and mailing the application for defendant the following morning, but the clerk did nothing to prevent plaintiff from learning of the notice and making application to purchase, and it appeared that plaintiff's application probably reached the general land office in the same mail as defendant's, such facts did not show that the clerk's acts as agent for defendant gave him an undue advantage over plaintiff so as to invalidate defendant's application.

Right under premature application.— An application by an actual settler to purchase school lands, although premature and rejected, because made before the appraisement of the land was filed in the office of the county clerk, gives him a title against one who filed an application to purchase it as additional land to his home section, invalid because he was not an actual settler on his home land. W. 617, holding that an application to purchase leased lands will be denied where it does not show that under the statute the land is subject to sale notwithstanding the lease.

Affidavit made before expiration of lease.— The fact that the affidavit which is to accompany an application to purchase school lands is made an hour before a lease of the land expires and is available for purchase does not affect the validity of the application. Entry before expiration of lease.— The fact that one applying to purchase additional land made an entry upon his home section before a lease thereof, made by the commissioner of the land office, had expired, and was therefore trespassing, is immaterial to the validity of his purchase, where, at the time of his application, the lease had expired, and he was rightfully in possession. of the award.[34] As between rival applicants the one whose application is first filed in the general land office has the better right,[35] and one who applies to purchase land for which another has previously applied has the burden of proving either that the prior applicant never completed his purchase or that he had in some manner forfeited his right before the subsequent application was made.[36] Where a person made a series of applications for the same lands in the names of different persons, allowing each application to lapse for want of payment within the ninety days, and thereafter immediately filing a new application, thus keeping the lands from market beyond the statutory time, and finally he made a new application before the expiration of the last ninety days, and a patent was issued thereon, a purchaser of this title was estopped as against an adverse claimant from setting up that the prior applications were fictitious, and left the land open for purchase upon the application for which the patent issued.[37] When the application proper, with the obligation and oath required by law, has been filed, and the first instalment of purchase-money paid, the right of the applicant is fixed, and there is a contract with the state.[38] An application to purchase state lands made on Sunday is not void or illegal.[39] Where an applicant for the purchase of state lands, in possession thereof, obeyed a judgment of ouster, and moved off, without waiting to be put off by an officer, such relinquishment of possession did not constitute an abandonment of the application.[40]

of itself sufficient to keep the land from being subject to a subsequent application.[42] One who seeks to overthrow the award has the burden of showing affirmatively the lack of power in the commissioner to make it; [43] but the commissioner's acceptance of an application to purchase land as an actual settler is not conclusive of such settlement, against a subsequent applicant.[44] Only the state can raise the issue of collusion after an award of school lands,[45] and the validity of an award will not be considered in an action by the person to whom the land was granted for damages against a mere trespasser who exhibits no title to the land.[46] No express authority is conferred upon the commissioner of the general land office to cancel an award of school lands upon the ground solely that it was illegally granted,[47] but if an unauthorized award is made it is merely void, and presents no obstacle to a purchase by another applicant,[48] on whom, however, rests the burden of proving the invalidity of the first award.[49] The commissioner has no power to award a part of a section upon an application for the whole section.[50] Where an application to purchase land is refused, it will be inferred that such refusal was proper, in the absence of evidence to show that the applicant had complied with all requirements necessary to have the land awarded to him; [51] but the refusal of the land commissioner to sell lands which are subject to sale to one who has the right to purchase and has complied with the law does not deprive the latter of the right to the land.[52]

rected and revised list of all unsold school lands," which was on said day forwarded by him to the county clerk, shows it to be valued at a smaller amount per acre.[53] An application to purchase land at less than its appraised value confers no rights,[54] and an award of land at less than the appraised price has been held void.[55] But one to whom land was awarded has good title, although his application and the obligation first filed stated the price as less than the appraised price, where before the award was made an obligation for the proper amount was filed and the error in the application corrected.[56] A reduction in the valuation of land authorizes an award of the same to one who applied for it at the lower price before the reduction.[57] Where an application for school land is accepted by the commissioner of the general land office, and the land awarded to the applicant, the presumption is that it has been classified as applied for and appraised at the price offered.[58]

making of such proof it is the duty of the commissioner to issue a certificate of occupancy,[65] which is conclusive as to the question of settlement and occupancy,[66] except possibly as against the state,[67] and is not subject to collateral attack.[68] The commissioner cannot, after issuing a certificate, reverse his decision to the prejudice of the certificate holder because of an error on his part as to the sufficiency of the proof of occupancy;[69] but an applicant to purchase public lands, whose application is made before a prior applicant has made his proofs of occupancy and become entitled to a certificate, may litigate the question of such prior applicant's actual occupancy, although the latter's proofs have been accepted by the land commissioner.[70] A purchaser of "additional lands" is not required to settle on such land,[71] but his settlement on his home tract is sufficient.[72] It is, however, necessary, that an owner of patented land or his vendee who has applied to purchase other lands from the state should continuously reside on such patented land or some portion of the land applied for, for three years after the application to purchase the additional land is made, failing in which the additional lands applied for are forfeited.[73]

purchaser and also an affidavit, where three years' residence has not already been had on the land, stating that he desires to purchase the land for a home, and that he has settled thereon, in which case the obligation of the original purchaser is canceled and the vendee becomes a purchaser direct from the state.[75] The statute allowing a substitution of purchasers has in view the substitution of one actual settler for another actual settler;[76] but the process of substitution creates a new and original relation, so that the substituted purchaser, being an actual settler and having complied with the requirements of the statute, is entitled to stand as an original purchaser direct from the state.[77] The substituted purchaser acquires all the rights of the original purchaser,[78] and is not required to make the first payment as in the case of an original purchaser,[79] but is entitled to the benefit of the original cash payment made by his assignor.[80] The substitution of a purchaser renders immaterial any invalidity in the original or prior substituted sales.[81] Where a sale of state school land has been made to a purchaser who in good faith has actually settled thereon, intending it as a home, the right of such purchaser's transferee, who likewise becomes an actual settler in good faith intending to make it his home, is not forfeited by his failure to have his transaction recorded in the county where the land lies, as provided by the statute.[82]

(XII) VALIDITY OF SALES. The adoption of rules and regulations by the commissioner was not a condition precedent essential to the validity of a sale of school lands.[83] A sale of school lands is presumed to be regular,[84] and a person attacking the sale has the burden of overcoming this presumption by appropriate evidence showing a lack of power in the commissioner to make the award.[85] On

Facts not warranting substitution.— One cannot recover land as a substituted purchaser where he has done nothing to comply with the statute and has merely a quitclaim deed from the widow of the original purchaser, who had abandoned her husband and the land when he had lived on it only a year, shortly after which the husband sold it to another, who fully complied with the law as assignee of such original purchaser, and has since remained in possession. decree of forfeiture.[93] But the land is not forfeited by necessary and temporary absence therefrom of the purchaser, for not more than six months in any one year for the purpose of earning money to pay for the land,[94] or for the purpose of schooling his children,[95] nor does a purchaser forfeit the land by non-residence where he was compelled to temporarily yield his possession of the land from a well-grounded fear of death or serious bodily injury.[96] Abandonment of the land is a question of fact to be determined from all the circumstances in evidence;[97] and where the land was not in fact abandoned, the land commissioner has no authority to forfeit the sale on that ground.[98] In trespass to try title in which it is alleged that one of the parties has forfeited his rights under a purchase, by failure to reside on and improve the land, the burden of proof is on the party alleging the forfeiture.[99]

Statute providing forfeiture constitutional. — The act of March 25, 1897, authorizing the commissioner of the general land office to declare school lands purchased from the state forfeited when the interest is not paid, is not in conflict with Const. Estoppel to declare forfeiture.— The failure of the commissioner of the land office to notify purchasers of land that their claims are subject to forfeiture because of non-pay-declaration of the forfeiture the land is restored to the public domain.[2] Accordingly the statute makes it the duty of the commissioner, when interest due for lands sold remains unpaid on the first day of November of any year, to indorse on the obligation for such lands "Lands forfeited," [3] and to cause an entry to that effect to be made on the account kept with the purchaser,[4] and thereupon the lands are forfeited and become subject to resale without the necessity of reëntry, or judicial ascertainment.[5] No presumptions in aid of a forfeiture will be allowed as against one who has made payments on a contract with the state.[6]

(2) Rights of Former Owner. Where lands are forfeited for the non-payment of interest, the purchasers or their vendees may have their claims reinstated by paying the full amount of interest due on such claim up to the date of reinstatement, if the rights of third persons have not intervened.[7] No formal appli-ment of interest does not estop the state to declare a forfeiture, notwithstanding a custom of the office to give the notice. Mound Oil Co. v. Terrell, 99 Tex. 625, 92 S. W. 451, so holding on the ground that no statute required the commissioner to give such notice. Neither does a statement by the commissioner of the land office that a purchaser of public lands was in good standing, made in reply to an inquiry having no reference to whether interest had been paid, estop the state to declare a forfeiture of land for non-payment of interest prior to that time. When rights of third person vested.—Where, after a forfeiture had been declared, a third person made an application for purchase of the land, accompanied by the proper payment, but by mistake a part of the payment was returned, and on discovery of the mistake the amount was repaid, the mistake did not affect the validity of the application and the applicant's rights vested at the time of the first application, so as to prevent a reinstatement of the claim of the original purchaser thereafter applied for. When interest considered due.—Where by the terms of a contract for the sale of public lands, and by the statute in force at the time it was made, the interest thereon was payable on the first day of August in each year, the purchaser on redeeming subsequent to August 1, but prior to November, from a forfeiture of the lands for non-payment of interest, was not required to pay interest for the year last

cation is necessary, but it is sufficient for the purchaser to signify his wish to be reinstated and to resume his obligation to pay for the land.[8] Neither is it necessary that payment of the interest should be made at the time of the application for reinstatement, but the commissioner, upon receiving notice of the desire of the purchaser to be reinstated, should allow him a reasonable time to ascertain the amount due and make payment.[9] Any owner of land forfeited for non-payment of interest has also ninety days' prior right to purchase the land when it is again placed on the market, without the condition of settlement and occupancy, where it has been occupied for three years;[10] but this right of priority does not extend to a corporation which has acquired the rights of a purchaser of public lands.[11] Where more than a year elapsed after a sale of school land had been reinstated without any suit being brought to vacate the same, such sale could not thereafter be vacated at the instance of a subsequent applicant to purchase, on the ground that, at the time the sale was reinstated, the circumstances necessary to authorize such reinstatement did not exist.[12]

(c) For Premature Transfer. Under the present statute[13] a purchaser of school lands cannot transfer his land until he has actually settled thereon and filed his affidavit of such settlement in the general land office, and any attempt to transfer the land before these things are done operates as a forfeiture.[14]

(d) Effect of Forfeiture. Improvements placed on school land by a purchaser, which are of such a character as to become fixtures, pass to the state on legal forfeiture of the contract of purchase, together with the land of which they constitute a part,[15] and the forfeiture deprives the purchaser of any rights or equities which he had in the land by reason of improvements by him.[16] In an action to try title to school land, the fact that the land commissioner has forfeited the sale to the person under whom plaintiff claims is not conclusive against him, but he can show that the attempted forfeiture was unauthorized and of no effect.[17]

Settle v. Stephens, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 695, 45 S. W. 969.

Right limited to ninety days.— One seeking to repurchase forfeited land must make a cash payment of interest due at the time of forfeiture and one fortieth of the appraised value of the principal within ninety days after the land is again placed on the market and compliance with the statute thereafter would be of no effect. Cobb v. Webb, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 467, 64 S. W. 792, holding that no rights were acquired by a mere application to repurchase within the ninety days where payment was not made until after such time had expired, and that the commissioner had no authority to extend the time.

W. 542 [following Good v. Terrell, 100 Tex. 275, 98 S. W. 641], holding that where a purchaser settled upon the tract and made affidavit of settlement which he mailed, addressed to the commissioner of the land office, but conveyed the land before the affidavit reached the commissioner, the land was forfeited.

(xiv) Setting Aside Sales. A patent for school lands may be set aside at the suit of the state for fraud in obtaining it,[18] and in such case the state is not required to refund the purchase-money.[19] The commissioner is not authorized to cancel a sale because of a mistake in the classification of the land;[20] but where he inadvertently sells land which is not subject to sale, it is proper for either himself or his successor in office, on discovery of the mistake, to rescind the sale.[21] A sale of public school lands made on proper affidavit and compliance with all legal requirements can be attacked only by the state,[22] or by persons asserting a claim to purchase or lease the land.[23]

(xv) Effect of Sale — Title and Rights of Purchaser. Upon compliance with the statute in reference to the purchase of lands, the right to the land passes to the purchaser and the land then becomes "appropriated," and is not subject to further sale by the state until legal divestiture of the title so acquired.[24] One who applies for the purchase of land not classified as mineral and to whom the land is awarded secures a right free from any claim of the state for minerals that may thereafter be found in the land.[25] The title of a purchaser of school land

One who advances money to a settler on school lands with which to make improvements and payments to the state, and who, on accepting a deed to such land in payment, surrenders no new consideration, but merely the promise to repay him, is not a purchaser for value, so as to be protected against the state's rights to set aside the patent for fraud of the settler in receiving it. State v. Burnett, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 59 S. W. 599.

Nature of fraud.— The fraud which will vitiate a patent issued by the proper authority of the state must be fraud practised on the state, or its duly constituted agents, and not on a claimant of the land. Hulett v. Platt, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 109 S. W. 207.

A county attorney cannot intervene in a suit for school land and claim title in the state by forfeiture. Duncan v. State, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 67 S. W. 903, holding that in such case a judgment for the state could not be allowed to stand.

An objection that the claim is subject to forfeiture by reason of a misdescription of the land in the original application can be raised by the state only. Gunnels v. Cartledge, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 623, 64 S. W. 806.

23. Murphy v. Terrell, (Tex. 1907) 100 S. W. 130, holding that a person claiming no interest in the home section of an original settler has no power to attack the validity of his claim thereto merely to resist his right to purchase additional lands as an incident to his settlement on and occupancy of such home section.

A purchaser from the state has the right to contest the title of a prior purchaser of the same land on the ground that such purchaser fraudulently acquired the land for the benefit of another. Thomson v. Hubbard, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 101, 53 S. W. 841.

A lessee from the state, seeking to recover land from a purchaser, cannot avail himself of the latter's false representations as to the quality of the land, under the statute providing that a purchase may be canceled by the state for fraud, the sale being valid as to the lessee until canceled. Nobles v. Magnolia Cattle Co., 69 Tex. 434, 9 S. W. 448.

An actual settler whose application to purchase has been rejected may, prior to the issuance of a certificate of three years' occupancy, contest the right of one not an actual settler to whom the land has been awarded, on the grounds that the latter was not in fact an actual settler, or had not remained such as required by law. Williams v. Barnes, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 111 S. W. 432.

Time to sue.— Gen. Laws (1905), c. 29, requiring one who desires to purchase school land theretofore purchased by another to sue to set aside the former purchase within one year of the award of the land, or else be barred, is applicable only where the state recognizes the validity of the purchase and not where there has been a forfeiture of the former purchase by the land commissioner and the land again sold. Slaughter v. Terrell, (Tex. 1907) 102 S. W. 399; Campbell v. Enochs, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 107 S. W. 878. See also Buchanan v. Barnsley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 112 S. is not subject to collateral attack on the ground that he purchased in collusion with another and hence was not a bona fide purchaser within the statute.[26] Where the state sells a whole survey by the acre, and it contains more than estimated, the purchase includes the whole tract and the state can only demand payment for the excess, and, in default of such payment, have the surplus set apart to it by a partition.[27] A purchaser of school lands who has acquired rights therein may sell and convey, or contract to sell the same, before he has made all payments and become entitled to a patent;[28] but a deed conveying unappropriated public school lands while the title remains in the state and before the grantor has acquired a valid claim thereto, in conformity with the law governing sales of such land, is void as against public policy.[29] When the purchaser of school land has completed his three years of occupancy, the land is subject to seizure and sale under execution,[30] or may be mortgaged.[31] And even before he has completed his three years' occupancy the purchaser may create a mortgage or other lien on the property,[32] although such lien cannot be enforced until the occupancy is completed and proof thereof made,[33] and is subject to be defeated by a sale by the purchaser before that time.[34] Prior to the completion of the three years' occupancy the rights of the purchaser are not subject to seizure and sale under any judicial process.[35]

(XVI) DEATH OF PURCHASER. In case of the death of a purchaser, his heirs or legal representatives are entitled to one year in which to make payment after the first day of November next after his death, and are absolved and exempt from the requirement of settlement and residence.[36]

(XVII) REFUNDING OF MONEY PAID FOR LANDS NOT PATENTABLE. Provision has been made by statute for refunding money paid in good faith into the state treasury for lands for which a patent cannot be legally issued, on approval of the claim by the governor and attorney-general.[37]

(XVIII) SALE OF TIMBER. The commissioner of the general land office is empowered to adopt such regulations for the sale of timber on public lands as may be deemed necessary,[38] and one who fails to comply with the rules adopted as to applications cannot claim to be a purchaser.[39]

(XIX) DISPOSAL OF COUNTY SCHOOL LANDS. The various counties of the state have received grants of land for school purposes,[40] and hold such land in trust for the public schools, with a restricted power of sale.[41] Such land is to be sold in the manner provided by the commissioners court of the county,[42] who may appoint agents to make sales on specified terms, convey the lands, receive purchaser when such payment was made, but that he had in fact acquired all the right, title, and interest of such minor by a regular sale under guardianship proceedings, but that for failure to file his transcript he was not a purchaser within the meaning of the bill, and entitled to the refund, this did not amount to an approval entitling plaintiff to a warrant. 40. See Galveston County v. Tankersley, 39 Tex. 651 [approved in Worley v. State, 48 Tex. 1], holding that the title of a county to school lands, the patent to which it had received from the state before the adoption of the constitution of 1869, was not divested by art. 9, § 8, of that constitution, providing that the public lands heretofore given to counties shall be under the control of the legislature, and may be sold under such regulations as the legislature may prescribe, and that in such case the proceeds shall be added to the public school fund.

Validation of surveys.— Under Rev. St. art. 4269, providing that the surveys of all county school lands heretofore made, either on the ground or by protraction, returned into the general land office, and on which patents have issued, shall be valid, and the titles to the land included within the lines of the surveys as so returned shall be vested in the counties for which the same were made, a county acquires title of all the lands included in the lines of an office survey shown by the field-notes on file in the land office to include all lands between other surveys, although the distance of the courses as given in the field-notes does not include all such lands. Steward v. Coleman County, 95 Tex. 445, 67 S. W. 1016.

Effect of grant to Greer county.— Under the general laws of Texas granting a certain amount of land to each county of the state for educational purposes, patents were issued to Greer county, Texas, for certain lands in other parts of the state. But subsequently it was decided by the supreme court of the United States that the territory known as Greer county belonged to the United States and not to the state of Texas. U. S. v. Texas, 162 U. S. 1, 16 S. Ct. 725, 40 L. ed. 867. Thereupon, by act of congress, the same territory was organized as Greer county, Oklahoma. In a suit by the state to recover the land granted to Greer county, it was held that the legal title to the land was in the state, for Greer county, Oklahoma, being a corporation created by a different sovereignty from that which purported to create Greer county, Texas, was technically a different person, and a stranger to the gift to Greer county, Texas; and on the disappearance of that de facto county, the state took whatever title the county had. And the court further expressed the opinion that the title could not be charged with any trust in favor of schools in Greer county, Oklahoma. Greer County v. Texas, 197 U. S. 235, 25 S. Ct. 437, 49 L. ed. 736 [affirming 31 Tex. Civ. App. 223, 72 S. W. 104]. But a purchaser from Greer county was protected. Cameron v. State, 95 Tex. 545, 68 S. W. 508 [reversing (Civ. The commissioners' court has power to convey all or any part of the county school lands in such manner as that court might have provided. San Augustine County v. Madden, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 87 S. W. 1056, holding that a deed signed and acknowledged by the county judge and three of the members of the commissioners' court, purporting to be made on behalf of the county, and having its seal and that of the district clerk attached to the certificate of acknowledgment, and purporting to convey the land for a cash consideration, is prima facie valid and operative to convey the county's title to the land, the purchase-money, deposit the same to the credit of the school fund and the county treasurer, and make an annual report of their transactions pursuant to a written contract.[43] Public school lands of a county cannot be sold or conveyed except for money,[44] and the gross proceeds of sales are to be held by the county in trust for the benefit of the public schools therein.[45] Hence a grant in consideration of services in locating or subdividing the land [46] or a contract to pay one a commission as agent out of the price of the lands [47] is void. So also as a county may dispose of the fee in its school lands only by sale, and an attempt on its part to make such disposition by a boundary line agreement is binding neither on it nor on the other party to the agreement.[48] But a conditional sale of the county school lands may be valid.[49] An actual settler on county school lands has a prior right to purchase the same,[50] and in order to bar such right an offer to sell must

Note and vendor's lien.—A county board having sold certain school lands, taking a note for the price, secured by lien upon the land, has power to release vendee's liability on the note after default, and take in lieu thereof the note of another person secured by trust deed on the land, to whom vendee's interest had been conveyed, and who assumed the payment of his note. One who purchases school lands from another to whom the county conveyed them in consideration of his locating other school lands is bound by the record of the commissioners' court showing how his grantor acquired title from the county, and cannot rely upon recitals in the deed made by the county judge that the lands were sold for cash which had been duly received. Stipulation to pay compensation based on percentage of proceeds.—A stipulation in a contract with agents for the sale of county school lands agreeing to pay them "10 per cent. on the gross amount of the sales, to be paid as the purchase money comes in," is not an agreement to pay them out of the proceeds of the sales, and hence on its face an unauthorized diversion thereof, but is an undertaking to pay them out of proper funds an amount equal to ten per cent. be made to him by the county in good faith, and the offer rejected on his part.[51] The fact that a purchaser of school lands from the county was not an actual settler at the time he purchased is immaterial, if no one claiming a preference right to purchase disputes the validity of the sale.[52] Purchasers of county school lands who purchased in good faith and without notice of any defect in the consideration moving to the county from the original grantee acquire a good title to the land as against the county, notwithstanding the invalidity of the original conveyance from the county on account of the defective consideration.[53]

c. Leases of School Lands — (i) In General. The legislature has power to provide for the leasing of school lands,[54] and it has authorized the commissioner of public lands to lease land which is not in immediate demand for purposes of actual settlement.[55]

(ii) Power of Commissioner.[56] The adoption of rules and regulations by the commissioner[57] or the classification of lands[58] is not a condition precedent to

Where an actual settler has made a tender of the purchase-price to the county, he has an interest in the land which is capable of transfer. Wood v. Wesson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 1069.

Payment to quiet title.— Where the price of school fund land, previously settled upon, is fixed by the commissioners' court, and the same is sold for such price to a purchaser, together with other land of another classification and price, for a gross sum, without allowing the settler a chance to purchase the same, the money to be paid by the settler to the purchaser to quiet his title, is the price, with interest, fixed by the commissioners' court. Constitutionality of statutes.— The act of 1887 postponing the sale of school "lands classified as grazing lands" subject to lease, and warranting the lessee quiet enjoyment, was not in violation of Const. art. 7, § 4, requiring school lands to be sold. Brown v. Shiner, 84 Tex. 505, 19 S. W. 686. Acts (1895), p. 63, authorizing the commissioner of the general land office to lease public lands, is not in conflict with Const. (1876) art. 14, § 6, providing that, on certain conditions, one hundred and sixty acres of public lands shall be donated to every head of a family without a homestead. Bain v. Simpson, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 429, 45 S. W. 395.

The acts creating the Memphis and El Paso reservation did not operate as an appropriation of the lands, but only as a mere withdrawal from location by others than those for whose benefit the reservation was created, and did not preclude the lease of unlocated portions thereof by the commissioner of the general land office. Stokes v. Riley, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 373, 68 S. W. 703.

Presumption.— Where the commissioner has leased land it is presumed that he has determined that the land is subject to lease and of a character which may be leased for the term granted. Sanford v. Terrell, (Tex. 1905) 87 S. W. 655.

Decision of commissioner conclusive.— Under the act of 1887, providing for the leasing of school lands by the commissioner if he is "satisfied that the lands applied for are not in immediate demand for purposes of actual settlement," his act is conclusive on the question whether there is such demand. the exercise by the commissioner of his power of leasing the same. It is discretionary with the commissioner to advertise leases or not as he deems best.[59] Any bid or offer to lease may be rejected by the commissioner prior to signing the lease contract, for fraud or collusion or other good and sufficient cause.[60] Although the state land board had no authority to increase the minimum price per acre prescribed by the statute relating to renting public school lands, yet it could make a regulation reserving the right to reject any or all bids, in order to secure fair competition; and when a bid was accordingly rejected, although it was for a statutory minimum price, the bidder had no rights under it.[61]

(III) Execution, Etc., of Lease. The statute requires the lease contract to be executed [62] and recorded [63] and one year's rent to be paid [64] before the lease takes effect, and until the statute has thus been complied with no leasehold or other right of possession passes to the proposed lessee.[65]

(IV) Term of Lease. Under the statute lands classified as agricultural can be leased only for a term of five years or less,[66] but this limitation extends only to lands which are actually classified as agricultural and not to all lands which are agricultural in fact.[67] The statute also prohibits the leasing of lands classified as pastoral for a longer term than ten years.[68] The day of the execution of a lease is to be excluded in computing the time of its operation.[69]

(V) Renewal of Lease. The commissioner is prohibited from renewing any lease before its expiration,[70] and he has no power to cancel or accept a surrender of

The recording of an abstract of a lease of school land in the county in which the land is situated is a sufficient compliance with the statute to authorize the admission of a copy of the lease, in trespass to try title to the land, by the holder of such a lease. a lease before its termination, where there had been no failure to pay the rentals due, and issue a new lease of the same land to the same lessee for a longer period.[71] But where a lessee applied for a new lease and his application was accepted before his old lease expired, but the first annual rent was paid and the new lease executed after the old lease expired, the new lease was valid.[72]

(VI) TRANSFER OF LEASE. Where the record does not show whether or not the commissioner of the general land office consented to the transfer of a lease of school lands, it will not be presumed that he did not consent, in order to base a forfeiture of the lease on such want of consent.[73]

(VII) VALIDITY OF LEASE. A lease is not void because it provides for forfeiture on non-payment of the yearly rental, and reserves the right to sell to actual settlers.[74] Where at the time a lease of public land was issued one survey applied for was not subject to lease, but after the impediment was removed the deputy district clerk, being shown by the lessee a letter from the commissioner of the land office, giving authority to insert in the lease the additional survey, inserted it, and the rentals on the additional survey were paid by the lessee, and the lease was treated by the land commissioner and the state treasurer as covering the additional survey, the ratification of the deputy district clerk's act cured any lack of authority on his part.[75]

(VIII) RENT. The statute requires the annual rent of school lands to be paid in advance,[76] and the commissioner of the general land office has no authority to receive less than a year's rent on the lease,[77] nor does the receipt by him of a less sum keep the lease in force.[78] Where a lease of school lands is of the sections by name, and for a sum in gross, it may be doubted whether a small deficiency of acreage in one of the sections would entitle the lessee to any abatement of the rent.[79]

That the lessee made valuable improvements on part of the land covered by the substituted lease was no impediment to the purchase of the land by another on the expiration of the original lease; such improvements not bringing the case within any of the provisions of the statute concerning improvements by lessees. Ketner v. Rogan, 95 Tex. 559, 68 S. W. 774.

Ratification.— The action of the commissioner, after canceling a lease before its termination and without authority substituting another lease of the same land to the same lessee for a longer period, in recognizing and acting on such substituted lease after the expiration of the original term, and of the treasurer in receiving rent under it, did not amount to a ratification of the unauthorized lease by the state. A lessee who accepts a lease at a rental higher than the minimum rate fixed by statute, voluntarily agreed on, is bound by his contract.[80] It is not necessary for a lessee of school land to furnish a description thereof with the money when he pays the rent.[81] An action by the state to recover rent for the use of school lands leased is properly brought in the county where by the lease the rent is payable, although defendants are non-residents of that county.[82] One who goes into possession of public lands under a lease which is unauthorized and in contravention of the policy of the state is not estopped to set up its invalidity in an action thereon for rent.[83] One who enters into occupation under an attempted lease of public lands which cannot be lawfully leased cannot be held liable for use and occupation.[84]

(IX) Rights of Lessee. A lessee of school lands is entitled to possession thereof as against one showing no title other than possession.[85] Where the commissioner of the general land office erroneously treats a lease as void by accepting another person's application to purchase, a writ of mandamus will be granted to compel the lessee's recognition as such.[86]

(X) Termination or Cancellation of Lease. The commissioner has no power to cancel a lease [87] unless the land is sold as provided by law [88] or the lessee fails to pay the rental within the time allowed by statute.[89] If a lessee fails to pay the rent within such time the commissioner should cancel the lease;[90] but such a default does not ipso facto forfeit the lease,[91] and the lessee has the right to make the payment at any time before formal cancellation of the lease.[92] A lease of school lands can be canceled only by a declaration in writing under the commissioner's hand and seal,[93] which must be filed with the other papers relating to the lease.[94] But nevertheless where the right to cancel exists, the rights under a lease may be terminated by an informal cancellation, if all parties concerned agree to or acquiesce in it.[95] Where the lessee of a whole section purchased half of the section, the other half remained subject to the lease, although the sale was canceled during the term of the lease and the land sold thereby restored to the public domain.[96] Where a lease is canceled for non-payment of rent the land becomes subject to purchase or lease, and a new lease cannot be made to the original lessee until all arrears are fully paid.[97] The commissioner of the general land office has no authority to reinstate a lease of public school lands which he has canceled for non-payment of rent.[98] Where a lessee of school lands purchases the land included in it before its termination, his obligations as purchaser are substituted for those of lessee, and the lands are taken out of the operation of the lease without any cancellation thereof;[99] and if the sale proves to be invalid he cannot be treated as a lessee from the time of the sale, although his payments exceeded the amount which would have been due under the lease.[1] Where constitutent leases of school lands were in good standing, and a consolidated lease of the land embraced in the several constituent leases provided for the payment of the same rentals as on the constituent leases, but such consolidated lease was void, payments made thereon should have been applied to the constituent leases, so as to keep them alive and in force, and the canceling of them by the commissioner of the general land office, on the execution of the consolidated lease, was void.[2] Under the statute providing that state land is on the market for sixty days after the expiration of a lease thereof, and that if not sold in that time the original lessee has the preference right for thirty days to again lease it, after the thirty-day period it is again on the market.[3]

Appeal from appraisal.— Under the statute providing that appeals may be taken from appraisals of tide lands by local boards to the board of state land commissioners, and from the board to the superior court of the county, there was no direct appeal to the superior court from appraisals by the county board of appraisers. Scott v. Forrest, 13 Wash. 166, 42 Pac. 519, holding also that under the provision authorizing appeals from the decision of the local and state boards in appraising tide lands, to be taken by the city attorney of the city wherein such lands were situated, such appeal might be prosecuted by the corporation counsel of a city when such was the title of its principal law officer.

See, however, State v. Forrest, 7 Wash. 54, 33 Pac. 1079, holding that the sections of the act of March 26, 1890, providing for local boards of appraisers and defining their duties in relation to tide lands, were not repealed or affected by the provisions of the "act to provide for the creation of a state board of land commissioners for the management and disposition of the public lands of the state," etc., approved March 15, 1893.

The statute authorizing the excavation of water ways through public lands and the filling in of tide lands by private contract, and giving the contractor on the completion of the contract a lien on all tide lands which he may fill in and raise above high tide, subject to which lien all purchasers from the state shall take, does not contemplate that the state shall retain or possess tide lands until the completion of the contract of filling the same, but the state may sell lands not filled in. Hays v. Hill, 23 Wash. 730, 63 Pac. 576.

The statute directing the reservation of natural oyster beds did not require a suspension of sales of tide lands until oyster reserves had been defined and plats filled, and where the county appraisers had neglected to put on the tide land maps that certain land was an oyster reserve, the commissioner of public lands was warranted in presuming that such land was subject to sale. State v. Forrest, 8 Wash. 610, 36 Pac. 686, 1120.

14. State v. Callvert, 33 Wash. 380, 74 Pac. 573.

A lessee who waives the provision of the statute that lands under lease shall not be offered for sale or sold except to the lessee, and applies to the commissioner of public lands for the sale of his leased premises at public auction cannot, where the lands are struck off to a higher bidder than himself, come in afterward and secure a preference right of purchase by tendering the amount of the highest bid. State v. Bridges, 23 Wash. 82, 62 Pac. 449, holding that no such right with the timber thereon is unauthorized where the timber exceeds one million feet per quarter section, but in such case the timber must be sold separately.[15] The statutes require the appraisal of improvements erected on tide lands of the second class, where the owner thereof is not holding adversely to the state, before the lands can be advertised for sale;[16] and in case of sale of tide lands having improvements thereon the lands should be divided with reference to such improvements, so that the purchaser can buy not only the land covered by the improvements, but also unoccupied and unimproved adjoining land necessary for the convenient use and enjoyment thereof.[17] But a person must pursue one of the methods prescribed by law to lawfully obtain the use of tide lands belonging to the state before he can be allowed to assert any right to the use of or interest in such lands.[18] A person lawfully in possession of school lands and having improvements thereon has a right, as against a subsequent purchaser, to retain possession until paid therefor.[19] It is the duty of one making a written application to the board of state land commissioners for a public sale of tide lands to fully state the facts, not only as to possession, but also as to improvements, whether or not such improvements are such as are contemplated by the statute.[20] Where an application for the purchase of tide lands, accompanied with proper proofs, has been made to the state land commissioner, but not filed by him because of defects in the accompanying plat, the application is subject to amendment, and when so amended should be considered as relating back to the time when it was first tendered.[21] The determination by the commissioner of public lands that the plat of survey presented with an application for purchase of tide lands is incorrect and indefinite is a matter which cannot be reviewed by the courts.[22] The board of state land commissioners is vested with exclusive jurisdiction to vacate tide land plats,[23] and such board may reconsider an order for the sale of tide lands at any time prior to the execution of the deed of conveyance to the purchaser,[24] without notice to one whose application to purchase the land has been previously granted,[25] and without further hearing or the introduction of additional evidence,[26] and where the order for the rejection of the application is regular on its face, the courts will not inquire into the motives which prompted it.[27] So also where affidavits alleging fraud in the sale of certain tide could be claimed by reason of a provision in the lease "that the tide lands herein shall not be offered for sale except upon application of the lessee, who shall have preference right to re-lease or to purchase at the highest rate bid," since there was no authority of law for the insertion of such a clause in the lease.

lands were presented to the board of public land commissioners, after the execution of a deed, but before its delivery, the board had power to suspend the delivery of the deed, and investigate the charges;[28] and a public sale of tide lands may be set aside for collusion between bidders.[29] But a deed from the state of tide lands cannot be collaterally attacked.[30] The owner of uplands[31] abutting or fronting on tide or shore lands of the first class has the prior right to purchase the same,[32] for sixty days following the filing of the final appraisal of such lands with the commissioner of public lands,[33] and if valuable improvements for commerce, trade, residence, or business have been made upon such tide or shore lands and were in actual use prior to March 26, 1890, the owner of the improvements has the exclusive right to purchase the land for the same period.[34] A preference right to purchase tide lands from the state will descend to the claimant's heirs and legal representatives,[35] or may be assigned so as to confer on the assignee all of the assignor's rights in the premises.[36] Contests over the prior right to purchase tide or shore lands are

32. Denny v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 19 Wash. 298, 53 Pac. 341.

Limitation of right.— A person who has purchased lots, partly upland and partly tide land, by reference to a plat thereof is estopped from claiming anything as an upland owner beyond the lines of the lots conveyed to him, although he may have erected improvements on the adjoining tide lands prior to the passage of the statute giving a preference right of purchase to improvers and upland owners. State v. Forrest, 12 Wash. 483, 41 Pac. 194.

A sale of upland lands on execution does not pass to a purchaser the preference right of purchasing adjoining tide lands until the period allowed for the redemption from the execution sale has expired, but until such time the right to purchase remains in the original owner or his grantees. Hays v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 14 Wash. 192, 44 Pac. 137 [explaining Knipe v. Austin, 13 Wash. 189, 43 Pac. 25, 44 Pac. 531; Hardy v. Herriott, 11 Wash. 460, 39 Pac. 958], 10 Wash. 573, 39 Pac. 98, holding that a judgment creditor who has purchased the abutting property at his own execution sale cannot, before expiration of the time allowed his debtor to redeem, contest the application of one who claims through mesne conveyances from the judgment debtor.

The statute gives the right of purchase only to him who makes the improvement for himself and not in subordination to or under any one else. Tullis v. Tacoma Land Co., 19 Wash. 140, 52 Pac. 1017.

The construction of two or three small shacks or buildings on tide lands and their use as temporary residences and for the storing of a small quantity of goods for a short time does not constitute such improvements used for "commerce, trade or business" as are contemplated by the statute. Barlow v. Gamwell, 12 Wash. 651, 42 Pac. 115.

The driving of piles from the mill of a sawmill company to deep water, to which it piles its logs were secured before being driven to the mill, is not such an improvement of tide lands as entitles the company to purchase the land occupied by the piles. Globe Mill Co. v. Bellingham Bay Imp. Co., 10 Wash. 458, 38 Pac. 1112.

One who owns only the machinery in a sawmill erected on tide lands leased by him, and has the use, under a verbal license, of neighboring tide lands for the purpose of piling lumber, is not an "improver" within the meaning of the statute, so as to obtain the right to preference in purchasing the tide lands held under such license. McKenzie v. Woodin, 9 Wash. 414, 37 Pac. 663.

heard and determined by the board of state land commissioners,[37] from whose determination an appeal lies to the superior court of the county in which the lands are situated.[38] And the right of appeal to the superior court from the decision of the board of state land commissioners applies not only to cases in which the board determines the prior right of purchase between two or more applicants for tide lands, but also to cases in which there is but one applicant and the commissioners determine that the tract applied for is not subject to sale.[39] The board of state

Formal pleadings not necessary.— The statute governing the trial of contests before the board of state land commissioners between adverse claimants of the right to purchase tide lands does not require nor contemplate the filing of former pleadings. Denny v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 19 Wash. 298, 53 Pac. 341, where the court refused to sustain an objection to the introduction of the record of a former suit based on the ground that it was inadmissible because not pleaded.

The objection that an applicant for the purchase of tide lands is not qualified is a matter lying between him and the state, and cannot be raised by one who was not entitled to contest the application. Hayes v. Merchants' Bank, 10 Wash. 573, 39 Pac. 98.

Limitation of jurisdiction of board.—As the commissioner of public lands is vested by law with the duty of determining what lands are subject to sale, the state board of land commissioners has no jurisdiction to pass upon the right of an applicant for the purchase of tide lands which he claims to have improved as an artificial oyster bed, when the hearing is not based upon a contest or upon an appeal, but is founded upon a protest of citizens claiming that the lands are natural oyster beds. State v. Forrest, 8 Wash. 610, 36 Pac. 686, 1120.

Right to appeal.— A second applicant to purchase tide lands, who contests the validity of the first application before the board of land commissioners, is an "applicant," so as to entitle him to appeal from the decision of the board on the contest, since his application becomes the first if the contest is sustained. Oliver v. Dupee, 16 Wash. 634, 48 Pac. 351. An owner of tide lands who has lost his preference right to lease abutting harbor area by failing to apply in time cannot appeal from the state land commissioners' order for the sale of such right to another, where he was a stranger to the proceedings. McNaught-Collins Imp. Co. v. Atlantic, etc., Pile, etc., Co., 36 Wash. 669, 79 Pac. 484.

Time for taking appeal.— An appeal from an order of the board of land commissioners directing a sale or lease of shore lands must be taken within thirty days from the time when the order was made. McNaught-Collins Imp. Co. v. Atlantic, etc., Pile, etc., Co., 36 Wash. 669, 79 Pac. 484. See, under earlier statute, Union Wharf Co. v. Katz, 8 Wash. 389, 36 Pac. 276.

Notice of appeal.— An appeal from the board of state land commissioners will not be dismissed because the notice of appeal did not contain the substance of the decision, nor its correct date, and was not signed by appellant, but by his attorneys, and the appeal-bond also gave the wrong date of decision, and the sureties thereon did not justify. Tullis v. Tacoma Land Co., 19 Wash. 140, 52 Pac. 1017.

Service of the appeal notice must be made upon the attorney of record for the respondent, and the superior court can take no jurisdiction where admission of the service of the notice appears to have been made by an attorney for the respondent other than the attorney of record. Seattle, etc., R. Co. v. Simpson, 19 Wash. 628, 54 Pac. 29, holding further that as the court had no jurisdiction of the appeal, the appearance therein or consent of the respondent would not confer jurisdiction.

Record on appeal.— Where on an appeal from the decision of the state board of equalization of a right to purchase tide lands the secretary of that board voluntarily sent to the superior court what purported to be a record of the contest, attested by him, and no attempt was made to show incorrectness therein, it cannot be held that the record thus transmitted gave the superior court nothing of an official character to act upon, and that it therefore did not acquire jurisdiction. Hayes v. Merchants' Bank, 10 Wash. 573, 39 Pac. 98.

Limitation of appellate jurisdiction.— On appeal from the decision of the board of land commissioners involving the question of prior right of purchase of tide lands, the superior court has no power to decide, between an applicant to purchase land and such board of commissioners, whether the original application to purchase had been taken from the files of the land commissioner's office, and a forged one substituted in its stead. Squire v. Sidney, 37 Wash. 1, 79 Pac. 469.

On appeal from a dismissal by the superior court of an appeal from the board of state land commissioners, the proceedings before the board need not be embodied in a statement of facts or bill of exceptions, but are sufficiently presented by a certificate. 39. Ilwaco v. Ilwaco R., etc., Co., 17 Wash. 652, 50 Pac. 572, holding that where the right to purchase a particular tract of tide lands has been tried before the board of state land commissioners upon an issue of fact, and decided adversely to the claimant, an appeal land commissioners acts in an executive and discretionary manner in confirming a sale of the right to lease harbor area, and the denial of a resale is not appealable where the affidavit therefor does not charge that the interests of the state are injuriously affected by fraud or collusion.[40] The holder of tide lands by virtue of a regular lease from the state is entitled to the possession and control of such lands.[41] The commissioner of public lands has no authority to cancel a lease of tide lands for any cause except non-payment of rent,[42] but the service of a delinquency notice by mail is sufficient to authorize the forfeiture of a lease for this cause.[43] Any sale or lease of state lands made by mistake, or through misrepresentation, or not in accordance with law, is void.[44] In the note are set forth a number of decisions with reference to the land acquired by a purchase,[45] the forfeiture of contracts of purchase and extension of time for payment,[46] the cancellation of deeds and contracts covering tide lands established as streets,[47] the price to be paid for lands,[48] the rights of a purchaser as to the application of the proceeds of sale,[49] the compensafrom their decision, and not mandamus, is the proper remedy.

42. State v. Callvert, 33 Wash. 380, 74 Pac. 573, holding that the commissioners' unauthorized cancellation of a lease is a mere nullity.

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the commissioner of public lands to accept rent due under a valid lease of tide lands which he has unlawfully canceled and refused to recognize. State v. Callvert, 33 Wash. 380, 74 Pac. 573.

43. State v. Ross, 42 Wash. 439, 85 Pac. 29, holding, however, that where such a notice attempted to be served on the lessee by mail was not received by her, but was returned to the state land commissioner, and the amount of rent due was tendered before the expiration of sixty days from the date of the service of a second notice, the commissioner had no power to cancel the lease.

44. State v. Ross, 44 Wash. 246, 87 Pac. 262.

45. A purchaser from the state of tide lands described as lying in front of, adjacent to, or abutting on a lot as surveyed and platted by the general governor, did not thereby acquire title to tide lands within the meandered calls of such lot, but only to lands in front of or abutting on or adjacent thereto. Shelton Logging Co. v. Gosser, 26 Wash. 126, 66 Pac. 151.

46. The statute providing that contracts issued by the state to purchasers of "school or other lands," which are delinquent in payment of interest two years from the date of the first payment and not extended by law, shall be forfeited by the commissioners, unless such interest shall be paid within six months from the date of the notice of delinquency, and that if such interest is paid the time for paying the principal shall be extended to Jan. 1, 1905, on a contract where one tenth of the price has been paid, includes all sorts of granted lands including tide lands. State v. Bridges, 19 Wash. 431, 53 Pac. 545.

47. Laws (1897), c. 27, directing the board of state land commissioners to cancel all deeds and contracts covering tide land lots which were legally established street projections and extensions, where such streets or extensions had not been duly vacated, and authorizing a refunding of the money paid on such contracts, did not apply to streets shown by a former plat which was vacated by a later plat ratified by the legislature prior to the sale of the lots affected thereby. Henry v. Seattle, 42 Wash. 420, 85 Pac. 24, holding that the owner of tide lands constituting a part of such a street was not estopped to deny the existence of the street because his grantors were permitted to purchase the lots by reason of having purchased lots in a part of the original plat not changed by the new plat, since there was no attempt to question the plats under which the lots were purchased.

48. The statute authorizing reappraisement by the state land commissioners of certain tide lands and providing that if the lands had been sold under a prior appraisement which was excessive the purchaser might complete the purchase at the reappraisal value, and that his former payment should be credited on it, did not authorize the commissioners, on reappraising the lands at a lower value, to require a purchaser in arrears to pay accrued interest as a condition of receiving the land at the reappraised value. Semon v. Callvert, 27 Wash. 679, 68 Pac. 350.

49. A purchaser of tide lands from the state, under an act which donated seventy-five per cent of moneys so received to the improvement of the harbor in which the land was situated, had no vested interest in such tide land fund, and acquired no contract right which would prevent a succeeding legislature from repealing the statute in reference to such use of the proceeds, as was subsequently done. Tacoma Land Co. v. Young, 18 Wash. 495, 52 Pac. 244.

IV. COLONIAL OR PROPRIETARY GRANTS.

In the early history of the country the various colonies were either royal or proprietary. In royal provinces the crown retained the right of soil and claimed and exercised the right of granting lands,[53] while in the proprietary governments the right of soil was vested in the proprietors,[54] who had power to dispose of the soil as they might think proper.[55] Colonial and proprietary grants abounded in the early history of the country, but matters relating to the mode of making, requisites, and validity of such grants,[56] the records and evidence

50. A state land agent who appraised timber on land which would be timber land except for a rule of the land commission designating as prairie land all land the timber on which did not exceed a certain value was entitled to compensation as for appraising timber land where he was designedly kept in ignorance of the rule by the commission. Strobach v. State, 17 Wash. 123, 49 Pac. 225.

51. The state land commissioners have no authority to review the action of local boards of tide land appraisers in the location of streets upon tide lands, which acts have been subsequently confirmed by legislation. Seattle v. Forrest, 14 Wash. 423, 44 Pac. 883.

52. The statutes granting permission to the United States to purchase or condemn land of any individuals, bodies politic or corporate, in the state, do not authorize the acquisition of lands from the state. State v. Callvert, 33 Wash. 380, 74 Pac. 573 (construing Laws (1891), p. 31, Laws (1889–1890), p. 459), holding further that Laws (1901), p. 7, granting to the United States the right to purchase a ship canal over all lands and waters belonging to the state in King county, cannot be construed as an attempt to convey the title of lands held under lease from the state so as to annul such lease, since such a construction would render the act unconstitutional. A deed of tide lands from the state to the United States is invalid where such tide lands did not border upon upland held or reserved by the United States government for the purpose of maintaining fords, etc., as required by the act authorizing a deed from the state, and such a deed cannot abrogate the rights of a prior lessee to such tide lands. thereof,[57] the forfeiture, vacation, and annulment of such grants or rights acquired thereunder,[58] and other matters connected with the acquisition of lands from the crown or from proprietors or colonial governments[59] have long since become of no practical importance. At the present time the only questions with reference to such grants which can have any live interests are those relating to their construction and effect, as to which it is deemed sufficient to state that the general rules governing these matters are practically the same as those relating to ordinary conveyances,[60] and grants by the United States or the various states,[61] and to refer in the note to a number of illustrative cases in which the construction or effect of colonial or proprietary grants has been passed upon.[62]

V. SPANISH, MEXICAN, AND FRENCH GRANTS.[63]

A. Land Grant Systems — 1. SPANISH SYSTEM. The object of Spain, as of all the European powers making settlements in America, was to derive strength and revenue from her colonies, and to accomplish this grants of lands to individuals became indispensable.[64] The immense territories held by Spain, affording an almost inexhaustible fund of lands claimed by the crown, could scarcely fail to produce large grants to favorites, as well as a regular system for inviting population into her colonies.[65] The viceroys in New Spain and Peru, who were also governors, possessed almost unlimited powers on this and other subjects; [66] and in distant provinces, or where the sea intervened, the right of giving title to lands was vested in their governors, with the advice of the king's fiscal ministers and of the lieutenant-general, where he might be stationed.[67] No public restraint appears to have been imposed on the exercise of this power; [68] but the officer and his conduct were of course under the supervision and control of the king and his ministers, and especially of his council of the Indies.[69] In 1735 this power was withdrawn from the provincial officers,[70] but was restored to them by the royal order October 15, 1754, which conferred the power in general terms without any limitation on the quantity or on the consideration which might move to the grant.[71] Among the earliest laws for the government of America is an order that the viceroys of Peru and Mexico "grant such rewards, favors and compensation as to them may seem fit." [72] And a subsequent order, after directing extensive dispositions of territory, adds,

63. Chronological and historical note.— In order to have a clear understanding of the status of Spanish, Mexican, and French land grants it is necessary to bear in mind the dates at which certain portions of territory passed from one sovereignty to another, and the dates at which the various territorial acquisitions of the United States occurred, and hence it is deemed appropriate at this place to give the following chronological survey: In 1763 the French territory west of the Mississippi was ceded by France to Spain, and in the same year Florida was ceded by Spain to England. In 1783 Florida was receded by England to Spain. In 1785 West Florida was sold by Spain to France. In 1800 Louisiana was ceded by Spain to France and in 1803 France ceded Louisiana to the United States. In 1810 Mexico revolted against Spain. In 1810–1812 small sections of territory in Florida were seized by the United States; and in 1819 the United States purchased Florida from Spain. In 1821–1822 Mexican independence was consummated, and in 1824 the republic of Mexico was established. In 1836 Texas seceded from Mexico and established independence, and in 1845 Texas was admitted to the United States as a state. In 1846 the agreement between the United States and England as to the Northwest Boundary gave the Oregon territory to the United States. In 1848 Mexico ceded to the United States the California territory, including the state of California as now established, and also Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, and parts of Colorado and Wyoming. The Gadsden purchase from Mexico took place in 1853, and the United States purchased Alaska from Russia in 1867. Spain ceded to the United States the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, and Guam in 1898, and some outlying islands of the Philippines in 1901.

"all the remaining land may be reserved to us, clear of any incumbrance, for the purpose of being given as rewards, or disposed of according to our pleasure." [73] There was also a law to the effect that "it is our pleasure that services be remunerated where they shall have been performed, and in no other place or province of the Indies." [74] It would seem that these remunerations, if in land, would be made by the governor, when empowered to grant them, provided no other officer was designated.[75] By the Spanish law in force in 1788 lands were distributed to those intending to settle, and, after the settlers had lived and labored in their settlements for the space of four years, they were empowered to sell the lands, or dispose of them by will; but confirmation by the audiencia, or the governor, if recourse to the audiencia was impracticable, after the four years had elapsed, was required to complete the legal title.[76] A royal order was issued on January 4, 1813, which recited that the general cortes had decreed as follows: "Considering that the conversion of public lands into private property is one of the measures which the welfare of the people, as well as the advancement of agriculture and industry, most imperiously demands; and desiring, at the same time, that this class of lands should serve as an aid to the public necessities, a reward to the deserving defenders of the country, and a support to the citizens who are not proprietors, the general and extraordinary Cortes do decree: All the uncultivated or public lands, and those of the corporation of cities, with the timber thereon or without it, both in the peninsular and adjacent islands, as well as in the ultra marine provinces, except the commons necessary for the towns, shall be made private property. In whatever manner these lands be distributed, it shall be in full property." [77] This order was transmitted to the captain general of the Island of Cuba; but seems to have been repealed on August 22, 1814.[78] There was no limitation in the royal orders restricting the powers of the governors to a league square in grants.[79] The decree of the Spanish cortes of January, 1813, established a system of disposing of the crown land as follows: [80] After providing for the reduction of the public lands to private ownership in the way and with the qualifications stated,[81] the act declared that half of the vacant and crown lands of the monarchy should be reserved as a security for the payment of the national debt, and of those to whom the nation was indebted and who were inhabitants of villages to which the lands were adjacent,[82] and provision was made for the distribution of such lands to the public creditors belonging to such villages,[83] and also for distribution among the officers and soldiers of the army,[84] and it was then provided that the location of these tracts should be made by a board of magistrates of the villages to which the lands were adjacent,[85] and the proceedings were afterward to be sent to the provincial deputation for approval.[86] The law then provided for grants of the residue of the vacant or crown lands to every inhabitant of the villages who should ask for them for the purpose of cultivation and had no lands of his own.[87] The patents were to be made by a board of magistrates free of charge,[88] and the provincial delegation was to approve of them.[89] This law may be very properly referred to as the foundation and source of many titles to the public lands in the Mexican government, and also of titles in the province or territory of California, if any were derived under it during the authority of the Spanish government.[90] Grants under this law were to be made to the creditors, officers, and soldiers of the old government,[91] which were called rewards for patriotism and were not to be extended to individuals other than those who might serve or who had served in the war then existing,[92] or in quelling disturbances in some of the provinces beyond the sea.[93] Individuals who were not military men, who had served in their districts or had contributed in any other way in this war or in the disturbances in America, or who were injured or crippled or disabled in battle were included in the grants to be made.[94]

2. Mexican System — a. In General. The Mexican congress, after the country had thrown off the government of Spain and had erected a new and independent government in its place, representing the sovereign power of the nation, passed the law of 1824, providing for the grant and colonization of the public lands.[95] This law provided that the lands of the nation which were not the property of any individual, corporation, or town were the subject of the law and might be colonized;[96] and for this purpose the congress of the states should, with the least delay, enact laws and regulations for colonizing within their respective boundaries, conforming in all respects to the constitutive act, the general constitution, and the rules established by the law of 1824.[97] The law then prohibited the colonization of any land within twenty leagues bordering on any foreign nation,[98] or within ten leagues of the sea coast,[99] without the consent of the supreme government,[1] and further provided that in the distribution of the lands preference was to be given to Mexican citizens,[2] that no person should be allowed to obtain a grant of more than eleven leagues,[3] and that no person who might obtain a grant under the law should retain it if he resided out of the limits of the republic.[4] It was then further provided that the executive should proceed in conformity with the principles established by the law of 1824 to the colonization of the territories of the republic.[5] The supreme executive government, acting under the foregoing provision, on November 21, 1828, established regulations for the granting and colonization of the public lands in the territories, and among others, in California.[6] These regulations provided that the governors or political chiefs of the territories were authorized to grant vacant lands within their respective territories [7] to either Mexicans or foreigners,[8] who might petition for them with the object of cultivation or settlement,[9] and that such grants should be made according to the laws of the general congress of August 18, 1824, and under their qualifications.[10] The regulations then set out a series of preliminary proceedings, specially enjoined for the purpose of ascertaining the fitness of the petitioner to receive a grant, and also of ascertaining if the land asked for might be granted without prejudice to the public or individuals.[11] It was required that every person soliciting land should address to the governor a petition expressing his name, country, and religion, and describing as definitely as possible by means of a map the land asked for,[12] that the governor should proceed to obtain the necessary information, whether the petition contained the proper conditions required by the law of August 18, 1824, both as regarded the land and the petitioner, in order that the application might be at once attended to,[13] or if it be preferred, that the municipal authority might be consulted whether there was any objection to the making of the grant;[14] that this being done the governor would accede or not to such petition in conformity to the laws on the subject;[15] but that if the grant was made it must be in strict conformity with the laws on the subject,[16] and especially with reference to the law of 1824;[17] that the grants made to individuals or families should not be definitively valid without the previous consent of the departmental assembly;[18] and that the definitive grant asked for being made, a patent signed by the governor should be given to serve as a title to the party interested,[19] wherein it must be stated that the grant was made in exact conformity with the provisions of the law, in virtue of which possession should be given.[20] It was further provided that a record should be made of all petitions and grants in a book kept for that purpose with maps or plats of the land granted,[21] and a circumstantial report should be forwarded quarterly to the supreme government.[22] And there were many other stringent provisions and conditions imposed,[23] the system thus established furnishing the highest evidence of the extreme interest the Mexican government took in guarding against impositions and frauds by or upon the political chiefs in the execution of the law.[24] These were the only laws of the Mexican congress passed on the subject of granting the public lands with the exception of those relating to the missions and towns.[25] While the Mexican constitution of 1824 was in force,[26] and after the passage of the national colonization law of August 18, 1824, the states of the Mexican confederation possessed the property in the soil, and had alone the power, by direct agency, of appropriating lands to individuals,[27] but from and after the adoption of the constitution of 1836 no power to grant lands was vested in the separate states.[28]

b. Pueblo or Town Lands. By the laws of Mexico which prevailed in California at the date of the conquest, pueblos or towns, when once established and officially recognized, were entitled, for their benefit and the benefit of their inhabitants, to the use of lands, embracing the site of such pueblos or towns, and of adjoining lands within certain prescribed limits.[29] These laws provided for the assignment to the pueblos, for their use and the use of their inhabitants, of land not exceeding in extent four square leagues.[30] Such assignment was to be made by the public authorities of the government upon the original establishment of the pueblo,[31] or afterward upon the petition of its officers or inhabitants,[32] and the land was to be measured off in a square or prolonged form, according to the nature and condition of the country.[33] All lands within the general limits stated, which had previously become private property, or were required for public purposes, were reserved, and excepted from the assignment.[34] Until the lands were thus definitely assigned and measured off, the right or claim of the pueblo was an imperfect one.[35] It was a right which the government might refuse to recognize at all,[36]

domain, for even if they had previously exercised it, they were deprived of such power by the decree of Oct. 24, 1824, declaring New Mexico a territory of the federation, taken in connection with the colonization law of 1824 and the constitution of Oct. 24, 1824. Acceptance by city authorities of additional grant.— Where a large body of land, say six leagues, had been granted by the Spanish government to a city, as exidos, and the congress of Coahuila and Texas, assuming that the city had no title, granted it two leagues, a question of fact arose whether the city authorities had accepted the two leagues grant, in lieu of the claim for six leagues, but the title of the city to the six leagues could not have been prejudiced by any acts of the city authorities. or might recognize in a qualified form;[37] it might be burdened with conditions,[38] or restricted to less limits than the four square leagues which was the usual quantity assigned.[39] Even after the assignment the interest acquired by the pueblo was far from being an absolute or indefeasible estate such as is known to the laws of the United States,[40] for the purposes to be accomplished by the creation of pueblos did not require their possession of the fee.[41] The interest amounted to a little more than a restricted and qualified right to alienate portions of the land to its inhabitants for building or cultivation, and to use the remainder for commons, for pasture lands, or as a source of revenue, or for other public purposes.[42] And this limited right of possession and use was, in all particulars, subject to the control of the government of the country,[43] until the title passed to private persons.[44] Lands appurtenant to towns were a part of the public domain, subject to the authority and disposition of the Mexican national government, and the officers of a territory in which they were located had no authority to grant them to private individuals;[45] and under the Mexican colonization law of January 4, 1823, the ayuntamiento or general council of a town had no authority to make grants of land outside of the four square leagues to which the town may have been entitled, and especially not when the grant was disapproved by the provincial deputation to which it was referred.[46]

called, must be a less quantity than the grant as described by its outboundaries,[51] and so the grant was not a present conveyance subject to defeasance,[52] but a contract to convey on performance of a condition precedent.[53] No formal act of the empresario admitting and recognizing a person as a colonist was necessary to the latter's right to colonization grant.[54] An emigrant to the state of Coahuila and Texas as a colonist and the head of a family in 1834, under the laws then in force, by virtue of his settlement and compliance with the law and survey, became entitled to three hundred and twenty acres of land as a preëmptor.[55] The Mexican colonization law of March 24, 1825, section 17, providing that the government might augment the quantity of land granted to a colonist in proportion to the family industry, did not refer only to colonists to whom there had already been a grant, but such additional land might be granted to the colonist in the first instance.[56] The absence from a Mexican grant in colonization of conditions requiring cultivation and inhabitancy, and the construction of a house within a year, did not affect the validity of the grant.[57] Occupation merely for stock raising was very unsatisfactory evidence of possession and cultivation of California land in the sense of the Mexican colonization laws, as such occupation of public lands, without any permission, was a matter of common right.[58] The decree of March 26, 1834, section 30, of the government of Coahuila and Texas, providing that "hereafter no colonization contract shall be made, and those heretofore made shall be strictly fulfilled, and in entire accordance with the law of the 24th of March, 1825," had reference only to the duties and obligations of the empresarios or contractors with the government, which were required to be strictly and fully performed, and did not refer to the conditions imposed by the law of 1825 on the colonists or settlers who received lands in accordance with its provisions.[59] The title of possession under the colonization laws was a final title.[60] The decrees of colonization of the state of Coahuila and Texas, No. 16 and No. 190, were repealed, the first in 1832, and the latter in 1834.[61] The Texas act of December 14, 1837, declared that all empresario contracts ceased on the day of the declaration of independence, and authorized suits against the president of the republic of Texas to settle the claims of empresarios.[62]

The protocol of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, stating that the suppression of the tenth article of the treaty was not intended to annul the Mexican grants in ceded territories, but that these should preserve the legal value which they possessed, etc., referred solely to titles existing in Texas at the time of the treaty, and not to titles to lands embraced in the treaty, and hence did not affect the provision of article 8 of the treaty that property of every kind belonging to Mexicans in the territory ceded should be inviolably respected. Haynes v. State, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 85 S. W. 1029); State v. Russell, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 13, 85 S. W. 288, 1167.

to provide,[66] and in the execution of its treaty obligations respecting the lands claimed under the laws of the ceding sovereignty, the United States may adopt such modes of procedure as it may deem expedient,[67] and may act through the ordinary tribunals for the administration of justice,[68] through special boards,[69] or by direct legislation with respect to particular claims.[70]

3. Construction of Treaty Provisions. The term "grant," as used in treaties, is understood to mean any warrant, concession, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, evinced by writing or parol, or presumed from possession;[71] and a treaty provision for the preservation of title under grants of the ceding government has been held to apply to equitable as well as legal,[72] and to inchoate or imperfect as well as complete or perfect titles,[73] for the principle in respect to incomplete titles is that if a claim was such as would have bound the conscience of the former sovereign to perfect the title, and furnish the evidence necessary to support and maintain it, the United States government, having acquired the territory, would take it charged with the duty of carrying out in good faith the obligation of the previous government existing at the time of the cession.[74] But a treaty recognition of titles does not change their character,[75] and, in order to the confirmation of a grant by the court of private land claims, it must appear, not only that the title was lawfully and regularly derived, but that if the grant were not complete and perfect, the claimant could, by right and not by grace, have demanded that it should be made perfect by the former government, had the territory not been acquired by the United States.[76] Under the eighth article of the Florida treaty, the United States were bound to the same extent that Spain was before the treaty to perfect the titles to lands granted conditionally.[77] The United States government discharges its full duty under the Gadsden treaty where it recognizes a grant as valid to the amount of land paid for.[78] The treaty of February 22, 1819, by which Florida was ceded to the United States, of its own force and without legislation on the subject, ratified and confirmed prior Spanish grants;[79] but the provision that all "grants" made by the Spanish authorities before January 24, 1818, "shall be confirmed" to the persons in possession, etc., applied only to that part of the ceded territory of Florida clearly lying within the bounds of Florida where Spain had a right to grant until the treaty of cession, and did not apply to lands which were claimed by the United States to be within the territory of Louisiana ceded by France to the United States.[80] Land in Missouri held under a French or Spanish concession and survey was not finally severed from the royal domain and converted into private property by the Louisiana treaty of cession, which provided that the inhabitants of the ceded territory were to be protected in their property.[81] Texas is not a Mexican territory within the meaning of the clause of the treaty of Gaudalupe Hidalgo, providing for the security of the claims of nonresident Mexicans to lands in the territories of Mexico.[82] Where, on a conquest of territory, a treaty provided that the former inhabitants who wished to adhere in allegiance to their vanquished sovereign might sell their property, provided they sold it to a certain class of persons and within a time named, the property, if not sold, became abandoned to the conqueror.[83]

4. Effect of Possession. Where a person settled on land before he had been placed in possession by the proper authority, or had received any evidence of his right to it, he acquired no title, legal or equitable, which could be recognized in a court of justice.[84] Long possession under an inchoate or imperfect Mexican grant may give the grantee an equitable title which should be respected and confirmed;[85]

This treaty was executed both in the Spanish and English languages, and article 8 in the English document provided that the prior Spanish grants "shall be ratified and confirmed," while the language of the Spanish document was that the "grants shall remain ratified and confirmed," and it was held that, although the English words were properly words of contract, stipulating for some future legislation confirming the grant, they were not necessarily so, and might mean that the grant should be ratified and confirmed by virtue of the instrument itself, and therefore would be given this construction, in conformity with the Spanish document and the law of nations. The title of the Spanish government to alienate public lands in the Philippine Islands could not be divested by adverse occupancy alone, no matter over how long a period it might have extended. And the Spanish government, while recognizing the right of an occupant of alienable public lands to a deed upon proof of possession for a sufficient length of time, always required the occupant to make that proof to the proper officers, and obtain from them a deed, and until compliance with which requisite title to the land so occupied remained vested absolutely in the state. but where no grant, either perfect or inchoate, was made, nor any promise given that a grant would be made, mere occupation by the petitioner pending his application for the land does not constitute a valid claim.[86] And possession of Mexican lands under a written permit from the Spanish government will not warrant the presumption of a grant thereof, no matter how long continued.[87] A void Spanish grant, accompanied by possession, and a survey of the land after the passage of the act of 1804, prohibiting such surveys, conferred no title whatever on the claimants, when considered in the courts of justice, unless their possession was sufficient to bring them within the act of 1829, and created no obligation on the United States to recognize their claim.[88] The possession of lands in the Philippine Islands which would, under the Public Land Act, raise a presumption of the performance of the conditions essential to a government grant and the receipt of such a grant, must have been a physical occupation of the land.[89] Possession since the date of the treaty of cession, no matter how notorious or exclusive, cannot be regarded as an element going to make up a perfect title under the ceding sovereignty.[90]

C. Grants Under Former Government — 1. Power to Make Grants — a. In General. In order for an alleged grant under a former government to be entitled to any recognition by the United States, the grant must have emanated from a public official having power to make the same,[91] and acting under the fact that the grantee himself was acting governor, and made out the papers to himself, according to a petition presented to a previous governor and a provisional possession conferred long before, such provisional occupation, which lasted some sixteen years to the time of making the grant, was sufficient to entitle the claimant to a confirmation); U. The departmental assembly of California, under the Mexican government, had no power to authorize the sale of any lands other than those of the department. governor of Florida had authority to issue grants of land,[98] and the governor and departmental assembly of California had power to make grants of lands within the general limits of pueblos.[99] The commandants of posts in the Spanish colonies had power to make inchoate titles to lands within their jurisdiction,[1] and in Upper Louisiana the lieutenant-governor was also a subdelegate, and as such was empowered to make inchoate grants.[2] Two persons might be empowered to grant lands within the same territorial limits without an exclusive right in either, and the grant of either would be effectual to pass the title of the government and vest it in the grantee.[3] Under the Spanish government, previous to the Mexican revolution, the authority to grant land was vested in the intendant,[4] or in the military commandants and governors,[5] subject to confirmation by the intendant.[6] These offices were abrogated and superseded by the consummation of the independence of Mexico,[7] and the public domain became thereby vested in the supreme government[8] until the formation of the states and its transfer by the supreme government to them,[9] during which time authority to grant lands must have emanated from the general government.[10] The power of political chiefs of provinces to grant lands after Mexican independence commenced with the state colonization law of 1825,[11] and prior to that time the political chief of a province was not authorized to grant lands forming part of the public domain,[12] unless authority to do so was expressly delegated to him,[13] and all titles issued by such officers prior to that time and not confirmed by the subsequent colonization laws are null and void.[14] Where a concession of land, in sale, under the colonization law of 1825, to a person who was secretary of state at the time, was authenticated by the "first officer," instead of the secretary of state, the objection was not of a character to invalidate the title.[15] The Mexican decree of March 26, 1834, No. 272, repealing all former instructions inconsistent with it, and declaring that no further colonization contracts should be made, did not divest the governor of authority to complete the titles where there had been concessions already made under the law of 1825.[16] Where a grant of a particular tract was made under a mistake of fact, the officer's power to issue title to another tract was not affected.[17] The department assembly or territorial deputation of New Mexico in 1831 had no power or authority to make a grant of lands.[18] A prefect in California had no authority to grant lands.[19]

Under the Mexican system the alcalde was the chief executive officer of a pueblo, or town,[20] and as such had authority to make grants of pueblo lands,[21] subject to the authority lodged in the ayuntamiento, or municipal council,[22] and the still higher authority of the departmental governor and assembly.[23] A title was not invalidated by the fact that the land did not lie within the municipality of the alcalde who issued it, but it was sufficient if it "pertained" to his jurisdiction.[24] Under the Mexican colonization law of 1825, the alcalde had no power to make grants of the public lands,[25] except when specially empowered by the governor.[26] The principales of the towns in the Philippine Islands had no power to convey title to the public lands.[27] The military governors and officers of the United States army who occupied California before the organization of the state had no power to grant lands,[28] or confirm titles,[29] or to reserve from disposition any part of the pueblo lands or of the public property of the United States.[30] Neither did an American alcalde, during the war between the United States and Mexico, have any authority from either government to make grants of public lands.[31]

The law of 1826 seems to contemplate that the first step toward obtaining a land grant should be a petition to the governor. The application was to be referred by him to the proper alcalde whose duty it was to make the appropriate decree in reference to the examining, measuring, and marking out of the land designated after citing the adjoining proprietors, if there should be any. These proceedings, if no opposition were interposed, were to be passed by the alcalde to the executive of the state, by whom the title of adjudication to ownership should be issued to the person interested, ordering that the alcalde of the town of his residence put him immediately in possession of the land granted. The proceedings before the governor were to be conducted officially and the executive was to proceed with the orders of the fiscal of the supreme court of the state. But whilst the more regular plan may have been to apply in the first place to the executive, it seems that in practice these applications were frequently made to the alcalde or to the ayuntamiento. State v. De Leon, 64 Tex. 553, holding that the fact that it was the custom to apply to an alcalde or to the ayuntamiento justifies a decision that a title to land would not be invalidated by the fact that the petition for such land was made in accordance with the custom, and not to the governor.

Limitation as to grants in California by Mexican governor shortly before territory acquired by United States.— The rule that public acts of public officers shall, in absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to have been done in the exercise of a legitimate authority, applies with but little force to grants of land made by the Mexican governor of California, within a few weeks before the territory passed from his hands, and during the heat and conflict of the struggle in which his power was overthrown, especially where the evidence that the formalities required by law were observed is imperfect and unsatisfactory, and rests wholly in parol, where it does not appear that any preliminary inquiries were made as to the point on which he is supposed to have exceeded his authority, and where his situation and the mode in which he exercised his authority in other cases about the same time suggests a suspicion of carelessness and recklessness in the exercise of his powers. Co., 61 Fed. 6, 9 C. C. A. 338 (holding that the fact of the making of a grant of land by an official of the state of Chihuahua raises no presumption that he had power to do so, if the grant was executed after the adoption of the colonization law of May 25, 1825); Bouldin v. Phelps, 30 Fed. 547 (holding that power in the governor of California, after the passage of the colonization law of 1824, to make a grant otherwise than on the terms and conditions thereby prescribed, will not be presumed from the fact that he made the grant). ment of the fact, years afterward, that it was a short distance beyond his colonial limits.[35] Neither is it any objection to a title extended by the commissioner of a colony, acting in that instance by virtue of a special authority to extend the title in question, that the land granted was without the limits of his colony.[36] A grant purporting to convey land lying within the limits of a colony will be void, if the land in fact lies outside such limits, unless the officer extending the title, as well as the grantee, acted with reasonable ground to believe that the land was actually situated within the colony.[37]

2. Land Subject to Grant. All unappropriated territory in the provinces belonged to the sovereign.[38] The jurisdiction of officers of the ruling sovereignty extended only so far as to make grants of public lands,[39] and they could not grant land which was private property.[40] And it has been considered that if by a stretch of arbitrary power the preceding government has granted public places, such as roads and streets to private individuals, such grants may be declared void.[41] Under the treaty of 1783, by which Great Britain retroceded to Spain the Floridas, etc., and which stipulated that "British inhabitants, or others who may have been subjects of the king of Great Britain in the said provinces," might sell their estates, and remove their persons and effects without restraint, within a prescribed period, and the emigration of such persons must be within that period, unless the period should be prolonged by a royal order of Spain, if a person coming within either of these classes failed to dispose of his land, or obtain a confirmation of his right to enjoy it, as provided by the treaty and consequent royal orders, but left the country and resided abroad, his claim was forfeited to Spain, and might be regranted by Spanish authority during the period of its rightful dominion over the territory.[42] By the usages of the Spanish government, a double concession of land could be granted only in the rear of the front tract.[43] Under the Mexican system the large tracts of land appurtenant to the mission establishments were never vested in the church or any other corporation or individual by any grant of a legal title;[44] but the missionaries and Indians had an usufruct or occupancy of the land at the will of the sovereign,[45] and in 1833 and 1834 the Mexican government passed laws to secularize the missions,[46] subsequent to which time the public authorities granted these lands to individuals the same as other lands.[47]

than eleven leagues of land were permitted to be united in one hand as property,[48] and where a person had a grant of one tract a subsequent grant of a different tract could be for only so much as would make the total eleven leagues.[49] The restriction was, however, after the full organization of the state government, recommendatory merely, and not binding on the states.[50] Under the Mexican colonization law of 1825 the executive had authority to make a grant of six leagues to a settler,[51] and to increase the quantity in proportion to the family, industry, and activity of the applicant,[52] as to which qualifications the executive was the judge,[53] and his decision was final unless fraud on the part of the grantee was shown.[54] Under the colonization laws of Tamaulipas of December 15, 1826, a grant of three leagues, or any quantity less than five leagues, could be made.[55] The power of the municipal authorities under the Mexican law to grant or lease pueblo lands was limited to the granting of house lots for building purposes, and lots two hundred varas square, called suertes, for cultivating or planting as gardens, vineyards, orchards, etc.[56] Governor Figueroa's regulations of secularization of August 9, 1834, limiting grants to individuals to four hundred varas square, did not apply to pueblo lands, or limit the granting power of the governor and departmental assembly.[57] The supreme court of Texas has said that it knows no law of the Indies, which prohibited the grant of more than four leagues of land to a town, as exidos.[58] Where a law provided for the payment of an officer's salary in land at a certain price per league, it was properly left to the commissioner to determine how much land the officer should receive.[59] Where a valid grant was made by the Mexican authorities, pursuant to a Mexican concession, for the full amount of land embraced therein, a subsequent grant under the same concession was absolutely void, and the land covered was subject to appropriation by subsequent settlers.[60]

permitted land grants to both foreigners and citizens,[63] but later laws deprived foreigners of the right to acquire land.[64] To constitute a man applying for lands a "head of a family" in the sense used by the colonization laws, it was not necessary that he should have a wife or children, but if he had servants it was sufficient.[65] A woman who was the head of a family was entitled, under the colonization laws of Coahuila and Texas, and under the constitution of the republic of Mexico, to the grant of a league and labor of land.[66] The Mexican authorities held that under the colonization laws two single men constituted a family and were entitled to privileges as such, and such construction is respected by the American courts.[67] There was nothing in the Mexican colonization laws, nor is there any general principle of law, which forbade a colonist to employ an agent or attorney in obtaining his grant.[68] Where a person, formerly of another state, came to Texas in 1834 and acquired a residence, animo manendi, his wife and children were constructively there also, although they were actually still at their former home;[69] a person who moved into Texas, not being introduced as a colonist, nor connected with any colonial enterprise, and who had not conformed in any respect to the laws for the distribution of lands, was not entitled to the benefits conferred by the colonization laws.[70] Although the Mexican law did not prohibit a grant to an infant,[71] an unmarried colonist, under the age of twenty-one years, was not entitled to a headright grant of land under the colonization laws.[72] The governor [73] or commissioner of a colony [74] was the judge as to the capacity or qualifications of the applicant or colonist. A grant of land by an alcalde to a deceased person was void.[75] The Spanish regulations of June 25, 1880, did not prohibit grants of land not included

The acquisitions of colonists will be subject to special laws of colonization," and even if it be assumed that the act of 1836 did not repeal the law of 1824, such repeal was effected by the twelfth article of the law of 1842, which provides that "foreigners cannot acquire royal or public lands, in all departments of the republic, without contracting for them with the government, which passes this right as representing the domain of the Mexican nation," and therefore, after the latter act, no unnaturalized foreigner had capacity to receive a grant of land without the express license of the supreme government.

The Mexican governors of California had no authority to remove the disabilities of foreigners in respect to holding lands under the laws of 1836 and 1842; and an attempt to make a grant to a foreigner by executing the necessary papers could not therefore operate as an enfranchisement, which would render the grant effectual. 6. Proceedings to Obtain Grant. The failure of a grantee in a Mexican land grant to comply, in presenting and prosecuting his petition for the grant, with the regulations of the Mexican laws governing such petitions does not defeat his title to the land, as against the United States.[77] If the Mexican government did not exact compliance with their regulations, but made a grant without it, the United States is bound by the grant, as Mexico would have been.[78] A variance as to the name of the petitioner is immaterial where he is clearly identified in the grant.[79] The fact that, in obtaining a grant, the grantees applied for and obtained more land than, as appears by their own representation in their petition for the grant, and the facts therein set forth, they were entitled to obtain, does not amount to fraud.[80] Where, from a tract of land known by a particular name, grants of two parcels had been made, and a petition for a grant of the surplus remaining was presented to the governor of the department of California, and to the description of the land solicited these words were added, "the extent of which is about five leagues, more or less," these words were not a limitation on the quantity solicited, but a mere conjectural estimate of the extent of the surplus.[81] A petition to a Mexican governor for a sobrante or surplus of land in California, which was not granted, is no foundation for an equitable claim against the United States;[82] and a requête by which application was made for land to the intendant of the province of Louisiana, in 1801, gives no right without an order of survey.[83]

7. Licenses or Provisional Grants and Orders of Survey. A license to occupy land temporarily, called a provisional grant, conveyed no title, either legal or equitable, to the land itself, and was revocable at the pleasure of the authorities.[84] It put the Mexican government under no obligation to grant or perfect the title;[85] but it was the practice of the government to consider a legal possession held under a so-called provisional grant of this character as entitling the occupant to some sort of priority when the land came finally to be disposed of, a priority resting in no legal obligation, but founded on the apparent justice awarding to one already in possession and who had probably made improvements on the land, a prior right to obtain the title in full ownership.[86] A mere license of this description gave such title as the United States is bound to respect.[87] No title passed from the French and Spanish sovereign by a mere order of survey or requête and permission to settle, but they gave only an equitable right to demand a title, and until a complete grant, the title remained in the sovereign.[88] An order of survey did, however, vest such a right as could only be defeated by the alienation of the grantee, or his voluntary abandonment, or by an entire failure to perform the conditions, or some act against the government which would justify a confiscation.[89]

8. Mode of Making, Requisites, and Validity of Grants — a. In General.[90] Concessions or grants under the former sovereignties were usually made in one of three ways: (1) Grants by specific boundaries, where of course the donee was entitled to the entire tract within the described monuments. (2) Concessions or grants by quantity, as of one or more leagues of land within a larger tract described by what were called out-boundaries, where the donee was entitled to the quantity specified and no more, to be located by the public authority, usually in a manner to include the improvements of the occupant, and with due respect to any descriptive recitals in the instrument. (3) Grants or concessions of a place or rancho by some particular name, either with or without specific boundaries, where the donee was entitled to the tract known by the name specified according to the boundaries, if boundaries were given, and if not, then according to the known extent and limits of the tract or rancho as shown by the proofs, including evidence of possession and the settlement and cultivation of the occupant.[91] To constitute a definitively valid or complete Mexican title to land in California, two things were necessary: (1) A concession by the governor; and (2) the approval by the territorial deputation, or, in the event of their refusal, by the supreme government.[92] Grants will not be upheld unless made in pursuance of the laws in force at the time,[93] and so a claimant who has not complied with the regulations requiring a petition to the governor and a formal grant and record thereof takes no legal title under a grant.[94] Where the proceedings for a land grant were regularly instituted and the grant properly made by the competent authority of the ruling sovereignty, the title should be recognized as valid.[95] In reviewing the questions arising out of Mexican laws relating to land titles, it is an exceedingly difficult matter to determine with anything like certainty what laws were in force in Mexico at any particular time prior to the occupation of the country by the American forces in 1846–1848.[96] To vest an applicant under the colonization regulations with title in fee, either absolute and perfect or conditional and imperfect, to public lands under a Mexican grant, substantial compliance with the preliminary requisites to a grant was essential;[97] and it was necessary that the grant should be evidenced by an act of the governor clearly and unequivocally conveying the land intended to be granted,[98] and that a public record in some form should be made of the grant.[99] The fact that a testimonio was not made out and delivered for two or three days after the original grant was issued did not invalidate an otherwise lawful

After the final confirmation of a Mexican grant it is no objection to its admission in evidence that there is no evidence that the grantee, previous to the issuance of the grant, ever presented a petition to the governor expressing his name, country, and religion, and the number of his family, or that the grant ever received the approval of the departmental assembly, or that the grant or any proceedings in reference to it were ever reported to the supreme government of Mexico. title.[1] Under the Mexican system ordinary grants and those for meritorious service were governed by the same principles and regulations.[2] The Mexican colonization law of 1824 and the regulations of 1828 were, after their adoption and prior to the cession to the United States, the only laws in force under which public lands in California could be granted to individuals or families,[3] and the governor of California had no power to make grants of public lands, except in the manner and on the terms and conditions expressed in that law and those regulations.[4] A government grant never in fact issued by the officer purporting to have issued it is absolutely void.[5] As neither the act of the Mexican congress of 1824, nor the regulations of 1828, prescribed any particular form of grant, and as there is no uniformity with respect to the conditions imposed on grantees, the absence of a condition of settlement within a limited time will not avoid a grant.[6] A grant may be made under a different authority from that recited therein, and may thus be valid, although the authority referred to may prohibit its being made.[7] A grant fraudulently obtained [8] or issued without authority of law is void.[9] But fraud is not to be presumed but must be proved.[10] And it has been held that where a grant is unquestionably genuine, it will not be invalidated by an accompanying titulo which is forged and fraudulent, where it appears that neither the parties before the court claiming under such grant, nor the original grantee, were implicated in such fraud.[11] Where a concession was for five leagues of land but in the power of attorney to select and obtain title and sell the land, and in the act of possession of two leagues it was recited as for eleven leagues, the discrepancy was immaterial and must be deemed a clerical error in the power of attorney and act of possession.[12] A patent issued by the Spanish government for lands in the Philippine Islands was not invalidated by a recital that the land was conveyed by virtue of the provisions of a royal decree which had previously been repealed.[13]

b. Necessity For Written Grant. The Spanish government recognized verbal as well as written grants, and when part of the public domain was separated from the rest by metes and bounds, and a settler put in possession, the title was valid.[14] A pueblo or Mexican town, once formed and officially recognized, became entitled under Mexican law to the use of certain lands for its benefit and the benefit of its inhabitants, and the lands were, on petition, set apart and assigned to it by the government, and no other evidence of title than such assignment was required, nor was any other given, but the title of the pueblo to the lands in such case was valid, without a deed or other writing formally transferring the title.[15]

c. Intention to Make Grant. Orders or other proceedings will not be construed as grants unless it is apparent that the action of the officials was intended as a grant,[16] and whether or not a grant was intended may become a matter of construction.[17] An order from the Mexican governor, allowing a search for land, and a reference by the governor to the alcalde of a petition for a grant of the land selected, and a report that the land belonged to no private person, does not amount to a grant of a vested interest, even in equity.[18] The order of the governor of a province to the regidor, which authorized the survey of certain land, the placing of a certain person in possession, and the extension "in due form the proper proceedings which he has completed," in order that the grantee might take further proceedings to complete the title, and which required the person placed in possession "to present himself at the place of the intendant to obtain the title of confirmation in accordance with the resolution in the Royal Warrant of Cartorse," did not constitute a valid grant but was inchoate and incomplete.[19] An ordinance of the ayuntamiento of a pueblo to the effect that a title to lands be extended to a person, provided no other person showed a better right thereto, passed no title.[20] Under the Spanish system the intention to grant as private property was always indicated in clear and appropriate words, which severed the land at once from the royal domain and converted it into private property, and an alleged grant not showing this intention was ineffectual.[21]

d. Consideration. A grant by the Spanish governor of Florida, which recites that it is made in consideration of the surrender by the grantee of another grant previously made, and which surrender has been accepted by the governor, will be confirmed as being based on a sufficient consideration.[22] It was not necessary to the validity of a Mexican colonization grant to show "onerous conditions"; that is, that any consideration, either in money or service, was required or given.[23]

e. Form of Grant or Other Instrument. The official record of his official acts which the Mexican law required an alcalde to keep carried with it the presumption that his acts were in form such as were necessary to give full effect to what he was attempting to do.[24]

f. Use of Stamped Paper. The fact that a concession was not written on stamped paper is an objection going merely to the authenticity of the instrument, which may be supported by proof aliunde.[25]

g. Name of Grantee. It has been held that it cannot be predicated of a grant of land that it was "issued" or "made" until the name of the grantee was inserted

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand as alcalde, this nineteenth day of July, A. D. 1847. George Hyde, 1st Alcalde." the terms used were sufficient to pass a title in fee to the land, and that, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the instrument must be presumed to be sufficient in form to give full effect to the evident intention of the parties.

in it.[26] But it has also been held that the mere clerical omission of the name of the grantee, in a grant which otherwise is formal, and has been treated as complete and final by the parties interested, as well as by judicial officers and tribunals, affords no ground for declaring the grant invalid at the instance of a stranger, where looking at the grant in its entirety there can be no question for whom it was intended and to whom and in what right it should have been and was in fact made.[27] Nor will a mistake as to the name of the grantee in the protocol defeat the grant when the error is apparent and it is clear who is the real grantee.[28]

h. Description of Land. A Mexican grant, to be complete and perfect, must be of a specific parcel of land, and it must appear on the face of the instrument, or by the aid of its descriptive portions, not only that a specific parcel was intended to be granted, but it must be so described that such parcel can be identified with reasonable certainty; and if there is nothing in the grant or documents to which it refers by which to fix the lines of one of the sides of the tract intended to be granted, or to determine the particular quantity, the concession does not confer a perfect title.[29] Where a grant of land is indefinite as to its location, or is uncertain as to the place where the lands granted are intended to be surveyed, rendering it impossible to make a survey under the terms of the grant with certainty, the grant is void and will not be confirmed.[30] The grant of a certain specified quantity of land, known under a specific name, and the locality of which is perfectly well ascertained, is sufficiently definite.[31] The description of land granted is sufficient if the diseño, which is referred to and which accompanies the petition, indicates the boundaries with reasonable certainty.[32]

i. Combining or Division of Grants. There was nothing in the Mexican colonization laws of Texas, or in any general principle of law, which forbade the comprising in one final title the lands granted to two colonists.[33] And on the other hand it is no objection to an eleven league grant that it was divided, and titles issued to the land in several parcels.[34]

j. Signature and Execution of Grant. It is no objection to an alcalde's grant, in the commencement of which his official character is stated, that his official designation was not appended to his signature; it being in evidence that he was alcalde in fact.[35] A grant of land in Texas, issued before the Revolution and subsequently located within the colony of Austin and Williams with their consent, and certified by the secretary of the state of Coahuila and Texas, is valid, without the signature of the governor.[36] Where a person relied for his title on a paper without the usual stamp, but purporting to be a Mexican colonial grant, and containing the following clause: "On this date, this petition was attached to the manuscript record to which it corresponds, and raised to the corresponding seal, which I seal for its continuance," followed by a rubric, but no name or date, it was held that the paper appeared to have been duly legalized.[37]

k. Delivery of Grant. The doctrine of delivery, as applied to private conveyances, has no application to grants made by the Mexican government, but the title under a grant from that government vested the moment the entry in the book of records received the stamp of the last act required completely to authenticate the instrument, and a delivery of a copy was unnecessary.[38] So also, under the Spanish system, while delivery of the thing granted was essential to the validity of the grant, it was not necessary that the evidence of title be delivered.[39]

l. Alteration of Grant. If a government grant is, by subsequent alterations, made to confer other rights than those conferred at its issue, it is absolutely void, and may be shown to be so by a subsequent grantee.[40] Where a Mexican grant, issued and delivered, was subsequently altered in the quantity granted by direction of the grantor, on the application of the grantee, and was then redelivered to the grantee, such redelivery was in legal effect a reëxecution of the grant.[41]

m. Modification of Grant. The power vested in an alcalde to grant lots implied the power to modify the grant with the consent of all the parties in interest while the proceedings were in fieri and so long as anything remained to be done by the granting power.[42]

n. Approval of Departmental Assembly. A Mexican grant of land in California was required to be made subject to the approval of the departmental assembly,[43] and unless such approval was obtained the title was not regarded as perfect and complete.[44] But a grant of lands by the governor, subject to the approval of the departmental assembly, vested an immediate equitable title in the grantee before the approval of the assembly was obtained;[45] and as it was the duty of the governor, and not of the grantee, to submit the grant to the departmental assembly for its approval,[46] the want of such approval did not divest the grantee of his equitable title,[47] or affect the validity of the grant,[48] or prevent its confirmation,[49] unless the territorial archives show that the grant had been sent to the assembly, and by them rejected, and from them sent to the supreme government, and disapproved by it also.[50] Upon approval by the departmental assembly the grant became "definitively valid" and ceased to be defeasible, and the estate was no longer subject to be divested except by proceedings for breach of its other conditions.[51] Where the Mexican governor granted lands, but the departmental assembly held that the grant was of a larger amount than by law could be made, and therefore reduced it, the grant could be confirmed only to the limited amount.[52] Under the laws of Mexico, grants of land to native citizens for the purpose of foreign colonization might be made by the territorial governors without the approval of the departmental assembly.[53]

o. Consent of Executive. Under the colonization laws of Mexico, 1824–1828, the consent of the federal executive was essential to the validity of grants of lands within the "coast leagues" or "littoral leagues," consisting of lands within a certain distance of the coast,[54] or the "border leagues," consisting of lands within a certain distance of the boundary between the United States and Mexico,[55] and a grant made by the authorities of a state within those limits is absolutely void unless it is shown that it was made with the approbation of the supreme government.[56] The United States supreme court has held that these restrictions applied only to grants to empresarios who intended to introduce large colonies of foreigners and did not apply to grants to natives of Mexico,[57] but the supreme court

Grant under special orders.— Where a Mexican grant was not claimed under the colonization law of 1824, or the regulations of 1828, but by special orders issued to the governor by the Mexican government, the power thereby conferred could not be exercised by the governor without the concurrence of the assembly, and a grant by the governor alone was void. Disturbance of country as excuse for failing to obtain approval.— The failure of the grantee, in a grant from the governor of California in 1844 of a designated tract of land, subject to the approbation of the departmental assembly, to obtain the approbation of the assembly, was excusable on account of the disturbance by the war with the United States. of Texas holds the consent to have been necessary whether the concession was made to a native Mexican or to a foreigner.[58] It is sufficient to support a grant of land within such limits that the consent of the executive was actually obtained,[59] and it is not necessary that such consent should appear on the face of the title of a colonist.[60] A grant by the state of Coahuila and Texas, under article 32 of the law or decree of March 26, 1834, was valid without the consent of the federal executive, although the lands were within the littoral or border leagues.[61]

p. Approval of Governor or Intendente. Where the governor, in referring a petition for a grant to the alcalde, with directions to give possession, "designating limits, and doing what is proper," further directed that he then transmit the expediente to the governor's office, "so that if it be approved the proper testimonio may be ordered to be given to the petitioner," the action of the alcalde in delivering possession was of no effect until approved by the governor.[62] Where, on a petition for a grant of land with specified boundaries, the governor indorsed a recital beginning, "As he asks it according to law, and I understand that no injury results to any third party," etc., together with a direction to the alcalde to "proceed to give the possession, designating the limits, and doing what is proper," etc., this was a direction to designate the limits described in the petition, and gave the alcalde no authority to designate limits giving a much larger tract than that petitioned for.[63] The approval of an intendente was not necessary to a grant of public lands in Mexico in 1816.[64]

q. Consent of Empresario. The consent of the empresario to a grant within the limits of his colony was required only for his own protection, and was not necessary to the validity of a title.[65]

r. Payment. Where the claimant failed to make the required payment for the land he is not protected,[66] even though the required amount be tendered.[67] But a grant was not invalidated by a failure to pay the fee which the Mexican regulations directed the alcalde to collect for each grant of public lots.[68] Where the law provided that a certain class of settlers should receive a grant of land without paying any dues to the state, and the governor directed the land commissioner to issue a grant to one of that class, and to classify his land so as to show what the grantee must pay to the state, and the commissioner issued a grant, not classifying the land, but exempting the grantee from the payment of all dues, the grant was valid.[69] Where a concession in sale, under the twenty-fourth article of the Mexican state colonization law of 1825, conceded to the purchaser the terms of payment designated in the twenty-second article of the same law, this was no objection to the title.[70]

s. Location and Survey. A claim under a ceding sovereignty cannot be confirmed unless evidenced by a grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey for some tract of land therein described, so as to make it capable of some definite location consistently with its terms, made, granted, or issued before the change of sovereignty,[71] or by an order to survey any given quantity without any description or limitation as to the place which was located by a survey made by a proper officer before that time.[72] That is to say, descriptive grants under the former government are confirmed, although not surveyed before the change of sovereignty;[73] but where the grant is too indefinite to convey any specific land it is not confirmed unless a survey or location was made.[74] By the Spanish regulations, when a concession was made, the grantee was to have the survey made at his own expense, and a return thereof was to be made to the proper officer.[75] Where the grantee has actually settled and occupied the land, a survey may be presumed.[76] As to pueblo lands,[77] although in some instances under the Mexican laws an officer was appointed to mark off boundaries of the four square leagues to which new pueblos were entitled, and to designate the uses to which particular tracts should be applied, yet the right of the pueblos and their inhabitants to the use and enjoyment of the lands was not made dependent upon such measurement and designation.[78] Under the Florida treaty, surveys of land granted by the Spanish authorities might be made at any time before the exchange of flags.[79] A grant of land, made by the governor of Louisiana before the treaty of cession of 1803, but without a survey until 1811, and after the treaty, is not valid.[80] It is not fatal to a Mexican grant that the survey was made before the order directed to the surveyor by the alcalde was entered on the grant.[81] Under the Spanish system individuals could not locate their grants by mere private survey,[82] but the grants were an authority to the public surveyor or his deputy to make the survey as a public trust to prevent the public domain from being cut up at the pleasure of the grantees.[83] A warrant or order of survey could be executed by the surveyor-general of the province,[84] by any deputy appointed by him,[85] by the district surveyor,[86] by the commandant of a post,[87] or by a private person specially authorized by the governor-general or intendant.[88] A survey under the Spanish government

meant the actual measurement of land, ascertaining the contents by running lines and angles, marking them, and fixing corners and boundaries;[89] and unless the survey made will enable the court to ascertain the specific boundaries of the land granted, the validity of the grant cannot be sustained.[90] In order to be effective the survey must be in conformity with the grant and correspond with the concession in regard to the district where the survey should be made, and show that the survey is for the land granted by the proper authority,[91] and a survey made at a different place from that mentioned in the grant is void.[92] But where a Spanish grant of lands in Florida was for the land mentioned in the petition or any other land that was vacant, it is no objection that the survey did not correspond with the particular location.[93] A colonization grant of land in Texas is not void because the surveyor returned an excess in his survey,[94] and if the excess is not so great as to show fraud the grantee will hold to the extent of his survey.[95] It is necessary to the validity of an entry of land under a Mexican grant that it be made with such certainty and precision that adjacent lands can be located without confusion of the boundaries.[96] A location made in Texas in 1835 should, on account of the condition of the country, be liberally construed.[97] The word "near," indicating proximity to another place, as used in a selection of lands under a grant from the Mexican government, would afford no guide for the direction of others in selecting their lands, so as not to include those embraced in the location, and consequently, having no identity or means by which it could be identified, the grant must be without force or effect.[98] Plots and certificates, on account of the official character of the surveyor-general, had the force and character of a disposition.[99] The lines fixed by a corrected survey, accompanying a grant, are obligatory on the United States and all claiming under them since the act of confirmation, and cannot be impeached or changed by any evidence tending to show that these lines were incorrectly located, either by mistake or fraud on the part of the Spanish government or its officers, prior to the date of the grant.[1] A survey of lands in Louisiana, made when it was a province of Spain, but not in full conformity with the requirements of the order authorizing it, and not subsequently confirmed by Spanish authorities, gave merely an inchoate title to the grantee.[2] A variation in a survey of two or three miles over what may subsequently be determined to be the exact line of the littoral and border leagues will not defeat titles acquired thereby, if, when issued, they were supposed to be in conformity to the line, and were not located in wanton disregard of the laws restricting titles in the territory embraced by the line.[3] In determining the extent of a grant the field-notes and map of the surveyor should control rather than casual and ambiguous phrases in the letter of the surveyor to the governor accompanying them.[4] The establishment of the boundaries of a colony by its proper surveyor had no effect on rights acquired anterior to that time, and did not warrant those authorized to colonize to grant a colonist lands previously granted to another but afterward included within the survey.[5] The location of a valid grant, confirmed by the departmental assembly, could not in any way be affected by the circumstance that, without any notice to the grantee, his grant was treated as forfeited, and a part of the land embraced within the diseño of a tract granted to another.[6]

t. Extension of Title. No petition or order was necessary for an extension of title under a Mexican grant,[7] nor was it necessary that the grant should be attached to the testimonio, nor that the testimonio should be written on stamped paper.[8] In extending title the commissioner's designation of the colony by a name popularly used, although not the legal name, was sufficient;[9] and the extension will not be held void, long afterward, the government having meanwhile acquiesced in the commissioner's acts, because it was executed two days after the expiration of the time limited by the law for taking possession.[10] As the act of congress of Coahuila and Texas of March 26, 1834, creating a new system of disposing of the public lands and repealing the act of 1832, did not abrogate the grants and sales which had been made under the latter act, or abolish the office and functions of commissioners, an extension of title by a commissioner, after the act of 1834 took effect in pursuance of a concession previously made under the act of 1832, is valid.[11] The signature of a judge or alcalde acting in place of a notary, authenticated by two assisting witnesses, has all the force and effect of the signature and seal or rubric of a notary.[12] It has been held that according to the Spanish law assisting witnesses are not necessary to the validity of final titles extended by alcaldes and commissioners to make sales.[13] A certificate of title to a concession of land, passed on by the alcalde and commissioner, reciting that it was granted on a concession accompanied by a power of attorney to select and obtain title under the concession and the acts of possession thereunder, is res judicata of the facts that the power of attorney referred to the same land covered by the concession and that the grantees in the certificate were legally entitled to have the certificate issued to them.[14] Where a concession of land was for five leagues, and the power of attorney to select and obtain title to the land and other papers used in obtaining a certificate of title called for a concession to the same person of eleven leagues, or did not mention the number of leagues at all, a certificate of extension of title to two leagues conferred on the grantee therein prima facie title to the two leagues, notwithstanding such discrepancies.[15] Where title was extended by an officer authorized to extend titles to lands in Texas, prior to the revolution of 1836, the presumption which is always indulged in favor of the validity of the acts of officers of a former government warrants the conclusion that the officer acted in conformity with the law, and not in violation of it, whether he set forth in the title

the evidence upon which he acted or merely recited as a fact that a concession had been granted and authority given him by the governor to extend title.[16] Where there were two extensions of title purporting to be in satisfaction of the same concession, but apparently no testimonio ever issued on the first, and no possession was taken under it; and the second was the grant always claimed by the grantee, and was not questioned for thirty years, and it was stated to the land office commissioner by the grantee's agent that the first extension was a mistake, no objection to the second extension could be made on the ground that the first exhausted the officer's authority.[17]

u. Juridical Possession. Under the civil, as at the common, law, a formal tradition or livery of seizin of the property was necessary,[18] and after a Mexican grant had been issued and approved it was necessary to a complete investiture of the title that there should be an official delivery of juridical possession to the grantee by the magistrate of the vicinage,[19] until the doing of which the grantee took no title to any specific quantity.[20] This proceeding required the measurement and segregation from the public domain of the specific quantity granted,[21] and the boundaries of the quantity granted had to be established as a preliminary to the proceeding where there was any uncertainty in the description of the premises.[22] Measurement and segregation in such cases therefore preceded the final delivery of possession.[23] It has been held that any passing beyond the boundaries of the grant vitiated the whole proceeding.[24] This juridical possession could be delivered only by a judicial officer,[25] and it was necessary that such officer,[26] the attend-

What magistrate should act.— A concession made by the governor of the state of Coahuila and Texas, which directed the alcalde "of the respective or nearest municipality" to put the grantee in possession of the land which he might select, and to issue to him the title, was not directed exclusively to the alcalde of the very municipality, if the land should be within one, the term "nearest" contemplating the event of the land not being within any municipality; but it was directed to the alcalde of a municipality which might be embraced within either term, and either one of the two might act under the appointment, as might be found most convenient. ing witnesses,[27] and the grantee should be upon the ground,[28] and that there should be some physical act on the part of the grantee accepting or taking possession of the grant.[29] It was also required that coterminous proprietors should be called on to give assent to the final act investing the grantee with title and possession.[30] Where land was surveyed for certain grantees in a regular manner, and the commissioner, although not observing all the usual forms, yet recited that he put the grantees in possession, performing all acts of true possession, the title in the grantees was complete.[31] This juridical possession constituted the investiture of title,[32] and preliminary defects in the grant and survey were thereby cured.[33] An inchoate Mexican title, followed by juridical possession, presents an equity which the United States is bound to respect;[34] and it has been held that a condition that the grantee should obtain juridical possession of the premises was a condition subsequent, the breach of which would not operate a forfeiture of his title.[35] Where lands were jointly denounced by two, and the title recited payment by both, properly describing the land and commanding the proper officer to put the grantees in possession, the putting of one in possession inured to the benefit of both.[36] The fact that an applicant for a Mexican grant was in possession when the lands were denounced was sufficient to dispense with juridical possession.[37]

v. Performance of Conditions.[38] Where a grant was made subject to conditions a compliance therewith was necessary to vest a complete legal title in the grantee,[39] and failure to comply therewith invalidated the grant,[40] and the government could grant the land anew.[41] Where the conditions were in the nature of conditions precedent, upon a performance of which title might be acquired, noncompliance worked a forfeiture of the grant and warranted a refusal to confirm the same,[42] leaving the land subject to the disposing power of the United States.[43] But where title was granted burdened with conditions subsequent, as of settlement and improvement, a failure to perform such conditions did not, where the delay was not so unreasonable as to justify a presumption of abandonment, forfeit the grant, but merely subjected the land to be denounced by another,[44] or authorized the government to institute proceedings to divest the title,[45] and if the government did not take such steps prior to the cession of the territory to the United States, the failure in the conditions cannot be inquired into in proceedings to establish the title under the grant against the United States.[46] The United States courts cannot attach any condition to a grant of absolute property in the whole quantity,[47] nor can a condition be implied from the consideration being in part the erection of a sawmill.[48] Persons locating grants on lands acquired under Mexican concessions cannot raise the question whether the conditions of the concessions were complied with.[49] As the Mexican government had power in the first instance to make a grant of land without conditions its action in subsequently waiving or removing conditions was equivalent to an original unconditional grant.[50] Where no time was limited for the performance of conditions, performance within a reasonable time was sufficient.[51] The owners of conditional grants in Florida, who were prevented from fulfilling the conditions by the circumstances of the Spanish nation, had time by the treaty to complete the conditions, which time began to run from the ratification of the treaty.[52] Conditional warrants of land by the former government have been invariably respected where there has been a bona fide attempt to perform the conditions;[53] and a partial performance may suffice where complete performance has been prevented by causes beyond the control of the grantee,[54]

necessary to complete the title, and to take them together as one act,[62] the petition and the grant should be construed together.[63] The rule that the American courts will defer to the political and judicial authorities of other governments in the administration and interpretation of their own laws applies to Mexican grants.[64] A Mexican grant to the successors ("herederos") of one who has willed the land to them inures to their benefit and vests the title in them.[65] A grant to two persons as "heirs" of a deceased settler, on whose immigration to and settlement in the country the grant was based, vested title in the grantees as trustees for the benefit of all heirs of the settler.[66] The recital in a Mexican grant that the grantee asked it for his personal benefit and that of his family cannot control the operative words of the grant, which point to him alone,[67] especially where, as a matter of fact, the petition made no mention of any family.[68] A title of possession issued to an attorney in fact of the original grantee vested the title in such grantee and not in the attorney.[69] A grant by the Spanish government of a certain tract of land for the use of the inhabitants of a district, on which to cut timber, inured to the benefit of future generations as well as the living grantees,[70] but one not an inhabitant of the district is without right under the concession.[71] The general rules for the construction of conveyances [72] and grants of the public lands of the United States [73] apply, with some modifications due to the nature of the instruments and the prevailing conditions, in determining the location and boundaries of and the land included within grants made under authority of a former sovereignty.[74] The intention governs when that can be clearly ascertained,[75] and so where the description contained in a grant and the circumstances of the case justify the belief that the intention was to grant all the land included within the boundaries named, then the words "poco mas o menos" (a little more or less) must be construed as operative to pass to the grantee such fractional part of a league as may be found in excess of the quantity named in the grant.[76] But where there is no natural boundary or descriptive call for the termination of lines of a tract of land, and the quantity of land called for in the grant is one league, "more or less," the qualifying words must be rejected and the survey must include only a league.[77] Where there is a large discrepancy between the amount of land stated in the proceedings for its sale, and for which payment was made, and the quantity included within the outer boundaries of the survey, the quantity named, and which was intended to be sold, will govern in establishing title under the grant.[78] Where the territorial governor of California made an order that the petitioner should have a certain tract of land, without fixing the boundaries, and on the next day issued an order granting the land within certain fixed limits, the petitioner can claim under these orders only the land contained within the fixed limits.[79] Where the description contained in a petition and grant differs from that contained in the act of juridical possession, the former must prevail;[80] but where a judicial measurement and delivery of a tract of land according to fixed boundaries has been made by the Mexican authorities, and long acquiesced in, such boundaries will not be modified, although they include a considerable quantity in excess of the amount specified in the grant.[81] A Mexican colonial grant affords prima facie evidence that the land lay within the limits of the colony.[82] A map referred to in a Mexican grant for the purpose of identifying the land is to be construed as part of the grant;[83] but where a grant is of a certain quantity of land, to be taken in the form of a square and at the place delineated on the diseño, but no boundaries are named, the condition as to quantity and shape must control, as against any natural objects represented on the map.[84] Where a grant by a Mexican governor expresses no intention to limit the quantity of land embraced within the given boundaries, the extent of the grant within such boundaries is only limited by the power of the governor under the colonization law;[85] but under a grant of two square leagues "a little more or less," land greatly in excess of the amount stated cannot be confirmed to the claimant.[86] Where a Mexican grant of California lands described it by boundaries and then stated the area, with the usual reservation of the sobrante or surplus for the use of the nation, it was confirmed to the extent of the area specified, although that did not extend to the boundaries mentioned,[87] and a Mexican grant of "a little more or less than three leagues" has been held to carry but three leagues, to be taken from the larger tract named in the grant.[88] In determining the boundaries of a Mexican grant, the mention in the act of possession of the length of a certain line as fixing its point of termination is not to be regarded as conclusive merely because, at or near that distance from the starting point, a marked tree is found, which is not identified by any witness as the tree to which measurement was made.[89] A claimant of a Mexican land grant in California, where the land granted is designated by a particular name and by quantity, without specification of boundaries, is entitled to the quantity specified within the limits of his settlement, if that amount is obtainable without encroachment upon the prior rights of adjoining proprietors.[90] If a Mexican grant solicited by the diseño describes the first line as being a designated parallel of latitude, and the same is delineated on the diseño with great accuracy by reference to natural monuments, and the grant refers to the diseño for the description of the lands, the line as established by such natural monuments must be taken as the true boundary, although, owing to the lack of facilities or skill for determining parallels of latitude, the said natural line does not in fact coincide with the parallel line.[91] In determining, in the case of a Mexican grant, the limits of the tract from the map, regard is to be had to the natural objects there laid down as bounding the tract, rather than to the distance of such objects from other natural objects as shown by the scale; [92] but the rule of construction which excludes from a conveyance an object named as a boundary is of very uncertain application, as to Mexican grants, where objects are frequently mentioned rather as landmarks to identify the tract than as boundaries to which it is to extend.[93] The true Mexican vara is slightly less than thirty-three American inches; but by use in California it is estimated at thirty-three inches, and in Texas at thirty-three and one-third inches.[94] Where on a petition for a sobrante lying between various ranchos, a grant was made by the governor of "three square leagues, a little more or less, as the respective diseño explains," and on the diseño a considerable tract was delineated, but a smaller space was inclosed in yellow lines, and marked, "What is solicited," this reference in the grant to the diseño did not necessarily indicate that it included only the space so marked, but the presumption rather was that three leagues was granted to be taken anywhere within the tract bounded by the ranchos named.[95] When a grant of land was of a specific quantity, within exterior limits embracing a much larger quantity, there was no obligation on the part of the Mexican government, nor is there any on the United States government, to allow the quantity to be selected in accordance with the wishes of the grantee, but the government discharges its duty when the right conferred by the grant to the quantity designated is attached to a specific and defined tract.[96] Where a given quantity of land is granted within certain specified boundaries, it is not to be presumed that there is any more land within the boundaries than was intended to be granted, and the government alone can raise this objection.[97] In locating an order of survey granted by the Spanish government in the post of Rapides, the limits of such post, never having been correctly defined by the Spanish government, must be taken as recognized de facto by the Spanish officers, and those of the late territory.[98] Where a grant calls for land on the east or west side of a watercourse, without specifying how much on each, it should be located in equal quantities on each side,[99] and a grant calling for objects on both sides of a bayou must be laid out so as to include each.[1] A decision made before the Texas revolution as to a controversy between empresarios, relating to the boundaries of their respective colonies and the lands within the littoral leagues, and acquiesced in by both empresarios, must be regarded as final.[2]

x. Effect and Conclusiveness of Grant. A valid grant of public lands by Mexican authorities in 1833, pursuant to a concession, vested title in the grantee, in the absence of evidence that it was not accepted, or was abandoned after acceptance.[3] The effect of extension of final title to a land grant by the governor of Texas, and the placing of the grantee in possession being to vest the latter with title to the property, cannot be avoided by extraneous evidence;[4] and where a colonial title is issued by the proper officer with full knowledge of the facts before him, and is regular in its articles and genuine in its signature, it is conclusive, in the absence of actual fraud or the unwarrantable exercise of authority, as the act of the issuing officer was an exercise of judgment.[5] The issue of a grant to an applicant as a colonist precludes inquiry as to the fact of his formal admission as such, especially where the residence of the grantee had been within the colonial limits.[6] The original validity of a colonial grant on its face regularly issued to the head of a family cannot be impeached on the ground that the grantee had not brought his family to the country or become domiciled there so as to be entitled to the grant;[7] and where such a grant was to a man as the head of a family, the question whether he was the head of a family will not be examined by the court, in the absence of fraud.[8]

y. Confirmation or Ratification by Former Sovereignty. An alleged Spanish grant of lands in East Florida, which was not in itself a royal title, and was neither made nor confirmed by the lawful authorities of the king, was insufficient to constitute a perfect title, at the time of the cession of Florida to the United States, without further action of the Spanish government to perfect it.[9] It was the constant practice of the authorities intrusted with the granting of lands under the former government of Texas to perfect incipient or inchoate titles by a final act of confirmation;[10] and whether or not an alcalde was authorized to issue a title of possession to the widow of a grantee in a concession under the colonization laws, it was competent for the governor subsequently to ratify the action of the alcalde and confirm the title.[11] As the Spanish government never contested the grants by French officers before the Spaniards took possession of Louisiana, this conduct amounted to a tacit ratification thereof.[12] A confirmation by the ceding authority subsequent to the treaty by which it yielded up its right to the soil is wholly inoperative to affect the title of others, acquired after the original grant.[13]

9. Abandonment, Revocation, or Forfeiture of Grant. A claim which was abandoned prior to the treaty of cession is not entitled to confirmation;[14] and a grantee under a former sovereignty, who has failed for a number of years to take possession of the land or to do any act showing an intention to comply with the conditions of the grant, must be presumed to have abandoned the grant;[15] as must also one who, after taking possession for years and commencing compliance with the conditions, has left the property and remained away and made no effort to fulfil the conditions for many years.[16] But some interruption of possession under a Mexican grant during the war between the United States and Mexico is not fatal to the validity of the grant.[17] A statute confirming claims does not include claims previously abandoned.[18] A settler under Mexican law lost his title when he ceased to occupy with the intention of relinquishing his claim.[19] Where land granted to one person was subsequently granted to another because the governor was satisfied that the first grantee had abandoned his grant, the second grant is properly confirmed.[20] Where one who had purchased land, and had built a house thereon, obtained a grant from the government of adjoining land, his continued occupancy of the former tract extended to the latter, so as to rebut any presumption of abandonment of the grant.[21] The fact that a naturalized citizen of Mexico, the grantee of lands in California, espoused the cause and joined the troops of the United States in the Mexican war, is not evidence of an intention to abandon the property, and furnished no reason for a forfeiture of the grant.[22] One who has failed for many years to register his claim under the act of congress requiring persons claiming land under the former government to register their claims in the land office will be deemed to have abandoned it.[23] The burden of proof is on the party seeking to impeach the title to a grant on the ground of its abandonment,[24] and as strong proof of abandonment is required in the case of a claim based on cultivation and possession as in a case where a documentary title from the Spanish government is shown.[25] An actual entry or office found is not necessary to enable the United States government to take advantage of a condition broken in the case of a Spanish grant, and to resume possession of lands which have become forfeited;[26] but a legislative act directing the appropriation and possession of the land is sufficient to reunite it with the public domain.[27] While it has been asserted that the doctrine of abandonment has no application where the possessor has actual title by grant,[28] yet the surrender of the sole evidence of a conditional grant before fulfilment of the condition implies the abandonment of all rights under it.[29] In passing upon claims under Mexican grants in California the question is as to what right in the land the grantee acquired from the Mexican government, and the United States courts cannot inquire into any acts or omissions of the grantee since the Mexican authorities were displaced or pronounce a forfeiture for anything done or omitted by the grantee since that time.[30] The Mexican governor of California had no power to annul a grant by a purely ex parte proceeding,[31] and an alcalde had no authority to revoke a grant once made and delivered or mutilate its record.[32] Where land allotted to the original settlers by metes and bounds was surveyed by the Spanish surveyor, and the settlers were put in possession, a governor could not by a subsequent grant destroy the title,[33] and where part of a defeasible grant was regranted

by the officers of the king of Spain, the title of the grantee to what remained was not affected.[34] The Mexican colonization laws of 1832 and 1834 did not annul rights acquired under the former laws.[35] A report of the surveyor of the Spanish government, stating land to be vacant, and the allegation of that fact in a Spanish grant, did not amount to a confiscation or a revocation of a prior grant of the same land.[36] All favorable presumptions will be made against the forfeiture of a grant,[37] and the burden of proving the forfeiture of a land grant before the acquisition of the territory by the United States is upon the party alleging it.[38] A forfeiture for the non-payment of instalments for the purchase of lands acquired by the act of congress of Coahuila and Texas cannot be claimed by one without at least connecting himself with a government title.[39] Where a junior claimant by patent who relied on the forfeiture of a prior Mexican or Spanish title, under the constitution of the republic of Texas, neglected to allege the forfeiture in his petition, he could not claim the benefit of the same, although evidence of the facts constituting the forfeiture was admitted without objection.[40] A genuine California grant is not vitiated by a fraudulent attempt to alter it after the cession to the United States, as the title against the United States depends on the title against Mexico at the time of the cession.[41] Under the Mexican system a land grant to a colonist was forfeited and became vacant if the grantee abandoned the country without having alienated the land,[42] and in such case no proceeding in the nature of office found was necessary, but the abandonment ipso facto vacated the land and restored it to the mass of the public domain.[43]

10. Title and Rights of Grantees. A right under a former sovereignty to a specific quantity of land lying in an area of a larger extent constituted an equitable title and a property in the land;[44] and until the grantee's possession was restricted by a segregation and location of the quantity granted, he was entitled to possession of all the land within the general description of the grant as against third persons without title,[45] or persons claiming under the preëmption laws of the United States.[46] An incomplete title under a former government was a property interest in the land which, at least between private persons, could be transferred by mortgage or reached by judicial process;[47] but when not confirmed by the United States, such a grant could not prevail against a grant from the United States.[48] A complete title under a former government might, however, be successfully asserted against a claimant under the United States,[49] unless the grantee had lost his rights by failure to comply with the statutory requirements for a recognition thereof.[50] As between claimants of the same grant under a former sovereignty the earlier grant would as a rule prevail,[51] but a complete grant would prevail against a provisional grant or order of survey of earlier date.[52] An alcalde grant of a laguna survey lot conveyed the absolute title, and no portion of the land so conveyed could be appropriated for a street without the award of proper compensation.[53] The original purchaser of a concession of land from one of the Mexican states had the power to alienate his concession at once before the lands were selected,[54] and on the extension of final title the fee vested in his grantee.[55] So a deed executed by a grantee before confirmation passed the interest gained by a subsequent confirmation and patent to him.[56] Under the Texas colonization law of 1823 a colonist had the right of alienation at any time after receiving the grant,[57] but later colonization laws restricted alienation by colonists for a certain period.[58]

D. Record and Evidence of Grants or Claims — 1. Record. As a general rule in order to sustain a claim under a Mexican grant it must appear that a grant from the Mexican government had been deposited and recorded in the proper public office, among the public archives of the republic.[59] But where the genuineness of the grant is fully proved and long occupation by the grantee and those claiming under him is also shown, the court will not refuse confirmation because the expediente is not among the archives.[60] A complete expediente in a land title according to the laws and customs of Mexico consisted of a petition with a diseño or map annexed, an order of reference, a decree of concession, and a copy of the grant,[61] and the nature and effect of an expediente, when clearly ascertainable from contemporaneous and official construction, cannot be defeated by an entry in the Toma de Razon.[62] Where the petition for a grant of land was accompanied by a plan of the lands asked for, but neither the petition nor the patent stated the quantity, but the concession by the governor, and his orders to issue the patent limited the quantity to eleven square leagues, all the papers were included in the record evidence of the title, and made it sufficiently definite.[63] The Spanish word "titulo," used in recorded Mexican documents regarding land, does not indicate the measure of the right, interest, or estate of the party; it only means the cause in virtue of which anything is possessed, and the instrument by which the right is accredited; and hence it applies to a provisional license as well as to a permanent grant.[64] If the commissioner for extending titles to lands omitted to sign the protocol or recorded title, the validity of the title was not affected thereby, where a testimonio properly executed by the commissioner was issued to the interested party.[65] On loss of part of an original Mexican title, it was in accordance with the usual and correct practice for the commissioner who issued it to supply the loss by adopting the testimonio.[66] Where the officer who had executed the protocol, and who had issued the testimonio to the party interested, appeared before the county clerk, and acknowledged his signature to the certificate, authenticating the testimonio, this was held sufficient to authorize the recording of the testimonio.[67] Alcaldes' grants of lots in pueblos in California made while the

Spanish or Mexican laws were in force, were required to be first entered in a book to be kept by the alcaldes for that purpose, and then to be signed and attested by the proper officer, and a copy or summary statement of the proceedings as contained in this book, also signed and attested by the proper officer, was then to be given to the grantee as evidence of his title.[68] A Spanish grant, found only in the register of complete grants of land made by the French and Spanish governors of Louisiana, in the archives of the register of the land office of New Orleans, will give a good title.[69] An act of congress exempting certain titles by French and Spanish grants from the necessity of being recorded applied only in favor of complete grants, and did not include an order of survey, although the land was actually inhabited and cultivated.[70] Under the various acts of congress relating to land titles in the territory between the Iberville, the Perdido, and the thirty-first degree of north latitude, a complete title from a former government, unrecorded, is not barred against the United States, although it is barred against any private claim derived from the United States.[71] Acts of congress have made provision for the filing of evidence of incomplete claims under former sovereignty, failing in which the claims are barred.[72] In Texas the protocol of a Mexican title is an archive which may be deposited in the general land office at any time, subject to all just implications arising from delay and the circumstances of its history;[73] but until the title is deposited in the land office or duly recorded in the proper county, bona fide purchasers not having notice thereof will be protected, although they claim under a junior Mexican grant.[74] It has been held that if the protocol of a Mexican grant is in the general land office, it is notice to subsequent locators, whether it was delineated on the map or not;[75] and the introduction of the testimonio, or a certified translated copy from the general land office of what purports to be the original, is prima facie evidence that the original was on file in the land office at

Notice held insufficient.— Where, in a suit for the recovery of land, plaintiff offered in evidence a written request to the recorder of lands in and for the territory of Missouri to record all registered concessions found in certain books named, then in his office, but it did not appear that those under whom plaintiff claimed had any agency in giving the notice, or that any signer of the paper was interested in the lands in question, or that any of them represented those who were or claimed to be so interested, and the notice named no claimant and described no land, nor did it intimate that any one was in fact claiming under the concessions referred to, it was held that the paper was not such a notice of claim as was contemplated by act July 4, 1836, requiring notice of claims under grants by the former French and Spanish governments. the time of the inception of a subsequent title under which plaintiff claims, and is sufficient evidence of notice to a subsequent patentee of a superior title.[76] In cases of title emanating from the government, where the patent or testimonio has not been recorded in the county where the land lies, a subsequent locator without notice will be protected, unless there were such notorious marks of a prior grant as would have put a prudent man on inquiry.[77] The want of registration of a grant under the Coahuila and Texas government in the county where the title was afterward filed is not sufficient of itself to postpone the grant to a subsequent location and survey;[78] and the objection that an original Mexican title was not filed in the general land office within the time fixed by the Texas resolution was not available to one whose title did not accrue until after the formerly acquired title had been filed.[79]

2. Evidence — a. Burden of Proof. It is well established that the burden of proof to sustain a claim of a land grant under a former sovereignty rests upon the claimant, for otherwise there would be danger of imposition upon the United States by means of forged or fabricated grants,[80] and in order to establish such a claim the record of the title must be shown,[81] or its absence accounted for to the satisfaction of the court.[82] It has also been held incumbent upon a grantee to establish his right to receive the grant,[83] and that one seeking to bring himself within the purview of a special statute relating to the confirmation of a class of land titles has the burden of proving himself entitled to its benefits.[84] Where the approval of the governor is necessary the burden of showing such approval rests upon the claimant.[85] Where a certified copy of a protocol of title is admissible without reference to its age, and without proof of its execution, it being a copy of an archive of the general land office, and the original being an official act, which proves itself, the burden of proof is on one alleging that the original was forged.[86]

b. Presumptions.[87] The presumption of validity attends every grant issued by persons authorized to make grants when there is nothing on its face impeaching its validity,[88] especially where it has been acquiesced in by the sovereignty for a long time.[89] So where the land might have been grantable at the time of the

The law casts primarily upon the applicant for confirmation the duty of tendering such proof as to the existence, regularity, and archive record of the grant, as well as his connection with it, such as possession, ownership, or other related incidents, of sufficient probative force to create a just inference as to the reality and validity of the grant, before the burden of proof, if at all, can be shifted from the claimant to the United States. grant it is presumed to have been so.[90] It may properly be presumed that any ministerial duty imposed on the Mexican officials of registering the making of the grant was duly performed, and that such record was in fact made,[91] and although the protocols ought properly to be attached to the final titles, in their absence they will be presumed to be in the proper archives.[92] No presumption will be indulged to uphold a grant apparently made in violation of the laws,[93] and the necessary consent of the federal executive of Mexico to a grant of land situated within the border leagues will not be presumed when not alleged.[94] The action of an alcalde in delivering possession of a much larger tract than that described in the petition is sufficient to prevent a presumption of an approval by the governor of such delivery, where the papers themselves bear no evidence of such approval, and there is no other proof thereof.[95] One false title paper in a California land case affords strong ground for believing that the others, although apparently genuine, are fabricated, when authenticated by the same witnesses in the same way;[96] and the fact that a note of the secretary, on the margin of a pretended Mexican grant, untruly declares that the grant has been recorded, is a serious objection to its validity.[97] The delivery of a concession authorizes a presumption that the payment required by law to be made at the time of the sale of public lands was made.[98] The presumption is in favor of the validity and regularity of a record,[99] and the truth of the recitals in the grant,[1] unless such recitals relate to matters which should, but do not, appear of record.[2] A recital in the grant of particular Mexican laws does not raise the presumption that the grant was made under authority of those laws only.[3] The delivery of the grant will be presumed to have taken place at the time of its execution;[4] but the mere fact that papers properly constituting part of the expediente, which should be found in the government archives, are found among papers once

belonging to the alleged grantee, is not sufficient to justify a presumption that the papers were delivered to him by the governor and a further presumption that the governor approved the delivery of juridical possession made by the alcalde of tract of land much larger than that petitioned for.[5] The absence from the archives of the country of evidence supporting an alleged Mexican grant creates a strong presumption against the validity of such a grant;[6] but if the original testimonio of a Mexican grant is found in the hands of the person claiming a title, the presumption is that the protocol was duly deposited in the general land office.[7] A survey recited in the title is presumed to have been made by order of the alcalde who was authorized to put the grantee in possession.[8] In the absence of any proof to the contrary, a legal presumption arises that the colonization law of 1824 had been promulgated in the territory of New Mexico prior to the making of an alleged grant by the territorial authorities in 1825.[9] Under the Texas statute providing for confirmation of such title to land within a certain territory as "would have matured into a perfect title under the laws, usages and customs of the government under which it originated, had its sovereignty over the same not passed to and been vested in the republic of Texas, provided said title was originally founded in good faith," if the applicant had progressed as far prior to the revolution as the termination of the "instructive despatch" ordered to be passed to the executive of the state of Tamaulipas, and that despatch shows performance of the conditions required by the laws then in force, it will be presumed that the grant was to be issued;[10] but if the "instructive despatch" shows upon its face that the successive steps taken to complete the title were, so far as they had progressed, not in accordance with the laws then in force, no presumption can be indulged in that the grant would ever have been perfected even if there had been no change in the sovereignty.[11] A grant of land may, under proper circumstances, be presumed;[12] but it seems that there is no general rule as to when such presumption will arise but each case must rest upon its own circumstances.[13] Evidence that a person took the preliminary steps in obtaining a grant is not admissible to raise the presumption of a grant.[14] Continued possession for nearly fifty years, together with the partial destruction of the archives of the province, has been held to warrant a presumption of a written Spanish grant, if one were necessary;[15] but a Mexican grant will not be presumed from possession.[16]

c. Competency and Admissibility of Evidence.[17] The records of land grants which the Mexican law required to be kept are primary, not secondary, evidence of a grant;[18] and the protocol, or first original, of the application and concession of land by the government of Coahuila and Texas, produced from the public archives, is admissible, under instructions, for all legitimate purposes, when properly authenticated although the testimonio given to the party interested is admissible as an original.[19] It is no objection to the admissibility of a copy of the title in the land office that a part of the title is a testimonio,[20] and where a copy appears to be that of the original testimonio of application for and grant of a colonial contract, duly certified by the legal custodian of the protocol, and delivered to the empresarios as evidence of their right, it is admissible.[21] It is no ground for excluding the records of the concessions in a contest over a Texas title that all of the lands contained in the concessions are not in controversy.[22] A Mexican grant deposited in the land office subsequent to 1876 is admissible in evidence if conceded to be valid notwithstanding the fact that the Texas constitution adopted in that year forbids that any claim of title to land which issued prior to November, 1835, be deposited in the general land office or recorded or used as evidence, as to nullify it would be to impair the obligation of a contract and also to infringe the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.[23] The instructions to the commissioner under the colonization law of Mexico that public instruments of possession be attested by two witnesses was intended to authenticate the act so that it would prove itself, and in the absence of witnesses the genuineness of the document may be proved according to the general principles of evidence;[24] and so also where there are no subscribing witnesses to a Mexican grant in colonization, the signature of the governor who executed the grant and of the secretary who attested it may be proved by one acquainted with their writing.[25] In a contest over a Texas colonial title, when the titles under which defendants claim purport to have been issued by the commissioner appointed to extend titles in a colony, a certified copy of the application for a colonization contract to the person who acted as commissioner in a colony in which the lands were situated is admissible,[26] as is also the government concession.[27] The treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico, as originally agreed to, the correspondence which preceded it, and the protocol annexed to it, are evidence against any title which has a later date than May 13, 1846.[28] Whether land was at a certain time within a Mexican grant does not depend on the last United States survey made, but the boundaries must be ascertained by the expediente of the grant issued by the Mexican government, aided, if necessary, by parol evidence.[29] So a report of a surveyor-general to congress, as to the validity of a Mexican grant, is not evidence of title.[30] The fact that a French grant of lands in Louisiana was dated after the cession of the territory to Spain does not render the record of such grant inadmissible as an evidence of title, as it may be shown to have been ratified or recognized by Spain, or by France after again acquiring possession.[31] Parol evidence cannot be received to establish a title of which no trace is found in the public archives,[32] nor can the public records be contradicted by parol evidence.[33] But the testimonio of a Spanish title may be referred to to determine from its appearance whether a change appearing on the face of the protocol was made before or after the issuance of the title, or to show its verity where suspicion is cast upon it by reason of erasures or interlineations.[34] And it has been held that a Texas statute authorizing suits to ascertain the right to claims under grants from the Mexican government, and requiring that the petition shall be accompanied by "the titles and evidences of title," is complied with by the filing of secondary evidence of the grant in case the grant itself cannot be produced.[35] On an issue as to whether a protocol of title was forged, evidence that there were subsequent locations of the land by persons other than the grantee, and that patents were issued thereon, or that there were adverse claims to such land, is immaterial.[36]

d. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence. In the case of a Mexican grant, a claim may be confirmed on evidence from the archives, supported by long-continued possession, although the original title or grant has been lost;[37] for if the expediente be genuine it affords far more satisfactory evidence of the issuance of the grant than the production of the title papers by the party interested.[38] So a certified copy of the protocol of a grant on deposit in the general land office is sufficient evidence to establish the title of the grantee and those claiming under him without accounting for the testimonio or showing that one was in fact issued.[39] In the absence of archive evidence of a grant, the fullest and most satisfactory proofs of possession and occupation during the existence of the former government, under a notorious and undisputed claim of title, and clear and indubitable evidence of the genuineness of the grant produced, will be required,[40] and where there is no archive evidence of a California grant, and its absence is unaccounted for, and there has been no such possession as raises an equity in behalf of the party, the claim must be rejected, even when there is very strong parol proof of a grant.[41] It has also been held that written documentary evidence, no matter

Incomplete expediente.— The existence of the expediente in the Mexican archives with unquestionably genuine signatures, the note and description of the grant in the continuation of Jimeno's Index by Hartnell & Halleck, the entry in the Toma de Razon, and the records in the journals of the departmental assembly are sufficient to prove, beyond all doubt, that the Mexican grant was made, although the expediente does not contain the customary borrador, or copy of the titulo, delivered to the party. how formal and complete, or how well supported by the testimony of witnesses, if coming from private hands, is insufficient to establish a Mexican grant if there is nothing in the public records to show that such evidence ever existed.[42] The absence of contemporaneous documents evidencing an ancient Spanish grant may be explained by showing a reasonable probability that the documents may have been lost or destroyed;[43] but the supposition of a claimant that an alleged Spanish land grant once existed and has been lost by time or accident is no evidence of an actual grant.[44] An entry in the alcalde's book of grants substantially in compliance with the regulations, over the signature of the proper officer, is primary evidence of a grant,[45] as is also the certificate of the secretary of the Spanish governor of Florida.[46] A plat or return of survey made by the surveyor-general is only prima facie evidence of title.[47] A reference in a land grant to another grant as a boundary is inadequate as proof of the legal existence of the latter grant, or of any change of the character of the possession of the land referred to, when that was originally taken, not under a grant of title, but under a mere permission or license.[48] The fact that the political chief treated and acted on a concession as valid and genuine is evidence that the original was properly signed by the governor.[49] The absence of the signature of the governor in a copy of the concession is no evidence that it was wanting in the original.[50] Where the objection to a grant of land in California is that the grantee was a foreigner and therefore not entitled to hold land, testimony of conversations or admissions made for the purpose of avoiding jury duty, and during the Mexican war, relied upon to prove that fact, ought not to be received to outweigh the prima facie presumption arising from the expediente and definitive title that he was a citizen.[51] The statement in a grant of land by a Mexican governor that the grantee is a Mexican citizen by naturalization is conclusive evidence of the grantee's citizenship, so far as his right to hold the land is concerned.[52] Mere proof of pasturing cattle upon land is entitled to little weight as evidence of possession upon which to base a claim of title under an alleged Mexican grant.[53] When a Mexican grant is alleged to have been fraudulently altered, after it was issued, in the designation of the quantity granted, a record of juridical possession, delivered to the grantee soon after the execution of the grant, showing that the quantity of which possession was delivered was the larger quantity stated in the grant, is entitled to great consideration in determining the character of the alteration, particularly when there has been a long subsequent occupation of the premises.[54] The fact that the governor's signature to an alleged titulo, testimonio, and order for extension of time to comply with the conditions of the grant in question is in a style rarely, if

Evidence of inchoate grant only.— A plat of survey made by a deputy surveyor under the Spanish government, with his certificate that the survey was made by himself agreeably to the order of the surveyor-general of the two Floridas, is not evidence of a complete Spanish grant, but only of an inchoate grant within the discretion of congress, after the acquisition of title by the United States, and subject to be entirely rejected. ever, used by him, and different from his signature affixed to similar documents on the same date, tends to show that such papers are forgeries.[55] Proof that four days after the date of an alleged Mexican grant of eleven leagues by a certain governor he granted another nine leagues to the same persons tend to show that the former grant is not genuine,[56] and discrepancies in the papers and records are strong evidence that a grant is not genuine.[57] The fact that after the date of an alleged grant the Mexican government made grants to third persons of portions of the same land, as vacant and unoccupied, is of some weight against the existence of the alleged grant.[58] Due location of a Mexican grant to the extent of the four sitios, which, by the laws in force at the time of the sale in the proceedings to obtain such grant, it could not exceed, is sufficiently established by evidence from which the court of private land claims is able to determine the true boundaries of the tract as so limited.[59] When the statutes and ordinances defining the duties and powers of an officer are indefinite in their terms, and it is shown that he exercised the same powers in other cases without question by the government, and the grants purporting to have been made by him were not challenged, such facts support a construction of the statutes and ordinances which would confer the power exercised.[60] The fact that in the final execution of a Mexican grant the purchasers were cautioned "to restrict and limit themselves to the land, holdings, metes and bounds particularly described in the hereinbefore inserted proceedings of survey," and to comply with the law as to monuments at their boundary termini, does not show that the act of juridical possession had already taken place.[61] The non-production of the grant will not affect the validity of the claim, where the loss of the grant is proved, and long and notorious occupation of the land established;[62] but to entitle a claim to confirmation where there has been no grant, clear evidence must be presented of a long-continued, notorious, and exclusive possession under claim of ownership of a tract of land of definite boundaries, and of the recognition of the proprietary and possessory rights of the claimant by his neighbors and by the authorities of the former government.[63] Where a will clearly shows upon its face that the testator was marshaling his assets, and mentioning all his property, and making specific disposition thereof, the fact that he omits therefrom any mention of a large tract of land subsequently claimed by his descendants under an alleged Mexican grant is entitled to weight, as showing that he did not himself suppose that he owned the land.[64] A number of illustrative cases turning on the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the particular alleged grants in question are referred to in the note.[65]

gation of the United States to respect the rights of private property in ceded territory is entirely consistent with the right of this government to provide reasonable means for determining the validity of all titles within the ceded territory,[67] to require persons having claims to lands to present them for recognition,[68] and have their genuineness and extent established by proceedings in a particular manner before they can be held valid,[69] and to decree that all claims which are not thus presented shall be considered abandoned.[70] An inchoate grant by the ceding sovereignty confers upon the grantee no right which an American court will recognize until it is confirmed,[71] and while the United States government has admitted its obligation to confirm such inchoate rights or concessions as have been granted or made in ceded territory prior to the cession,[72] it has maintained that the legal title remained in the United States until by some act of confirmation it was passed or relinquished to the claimant,[73] and has also maintained its right to prescribe the forms and manner of proceeding in order to obtain a confirmation, and its right to establish tribunals to investigate and pronounce upon the fairness and validity of such claims,[74] and such a concession can derive no aid from the laws of the United States until it has been recorded or passed upon in the manner established by law.[75]

2. Legislation Recognizing or Confirming Claims. Various statutes have been enacted from time to time providing for the recognition and confirmation of claims to land in ceded territory,[76] and it has been laid down that such statutes should

76. See U. S. v. De Morant, 123 U. S. 335, 8 S. Ct. 189, 31 L. ed. 171, construing Act Cong. June 22, 1860.

The object of the various acts of congress, authorizing or requiring French and Spanish claims to be presented to officers of the United States for recognition and confirmation, was: First, to ascertain the quantity and description of the grants, and so distinguish the public from private domain; and, second, to confirm to the claimants imperfect titles, requiring further action by the public authorities. Lavergne v. Elkin, 17 La. 220.

Uncertainty.—A confirmation by act of congress of the decision of commissioners appointed to hear and decide on claims under grants of lands in favor of claims for land of which no quantity is given, no boundary stated, and for the ascertainment of which no rule is stated, is void for uncertainty, and cannot operate to vest title to any particular land in the claimants. Slidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 412, 4 S. Ct. 475, 28 L. ed. 321.

be administered in a liberal spirit.[77] A confirmation by act of congress is as fully to all intents and purposes a grant as if it contained in terms a grant de novo,[78] equivalent to a patent and the best title out of government,[79] entitling one to hold against an adverse claimant without a patent,[80] unless the latter can show a prior title out of government;[81] but leaving the title as under the former government in contests between different claimants.[82] A confirmation by act of congress of part of a grant should be construed as a denial of the residue.[83] When congress confirms a land claim its action is to be treated as an adjudication and is not subject to review by the courts [84] or any other department of the government.[85] Where an act of congress confirming a title to land specifically reserves the rights of all adverse claimants, they are remitted to the state courts for litigation of their claims.[86] A statute for confirming land claims does not apply to claims which have been abandoned before its enactment,[87] and a statute removing the objection arising from want of title in the government which was in possession of the territory at the time of making the grants, if they were otherwise sustainable, does not aid claims which were invalid from intrinsic defects.[88] But a confirmation by congress of a conditional grant either admits or dispenses with the performance of the conditions.[89] When a person claiming land in ceded territory is obliged to

3. Proceedings in Land Office. Some of the statutes have provided for the presentation of land claims to the various land offices where they were duly passed upon by the officers and recorded.[94] Under a statute directing the surveyor-general to make inquiries in regard to such grants, and report to congress for its action, his functions were merely advisory,[95] and his report was no evidence of title or right to possession,[96] nor were his decisions binding on the courts [97] until confirmed by congress.[98] State courts have no power to correct errors in the decisions of the recorder of land titles, if there be any, where such power is expressly reserved to congress by the statute.[99]

As between two claimants setting up distinct imperfect titles under the former government of the territory of Louisiana, the courts have no jurisdiction, the controversy being one within the domain of the political power alone. Magwire v. Tyler, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 650, 19 L. ed. 320.

The decisions of the Mexican political or judicial authorities, federal and state, for-

made provision for proceedings in the United States courts of the various districts for the settlement and confirmation of claims of land grants under former sovereignties.[3] Such a proceeding must have been brought within the time limited by the statute,[4] and the proceeding was commenced when the petition was filed.[5] Adverse claimants were required to be made parties.[6] It was not necessary to allege in express terms that petitioner's claim was protected by the treaty of cession,[7] or to annex a sworn copy of the government surveys to the petition;[8] but it was necessary that the petition should aver that the petitioner had the qualifications requisite to entitle him to claim the benefit of the statute.[9] The powers merly in control of the territory of Texas, deciding contested land claims, will not be revised by the courts of the state. Bissell v. Haynes, 9 Tex. 556. See also Cavazos v. Trevino, 35 Tex. 133.

Reliance on grant as color of title.— When defendant relies on a Mexican grant as the claim and color of title to defend his right to fence lands, otherwise public lands, the court will look into the grant to see what lands purport to be granted, although it will not examine as to the validity of the claim. Where there are conflicting claimants to land in California, to one of whom the United States must patent the land, so that it has no interest in the dispute, the two parties must litigate in the district court, under St. March 3, 1851, § 13. U. S. v. White, 23 How. (U. S.) 249, 16 L. ed. 560.

(U. S.) 449, 11 L. ed. 1051; U. S. v. Marvin, 3 How. (U. S.) 620, 11 L. ed. 753.

Taking advantage of prior petition.—A person who filed his petition in the district court, claiming land under the act of congress of June 22, 1860, in time, but afterward discovered that he had no title, could not, by a supplemental petition acknowledging his mistake and showing who the right owner was, make his petition inure to the benefit of the right owner, who had let pass the time for asserting title under the act. 9. Thus under Act Cong. (1824) c. 173, and Act (1844), c. 95, the petition must aver the residence of the grantee within the province of Louisiana, at the date of the grant, or on or before March 10, 1804. U. of the courts were limited by the statutes and they could only confirm grants within the purview of such statutes.[10] A petition might be dismissed for want of prosecution.[11] Appeals to the supreme court of the United States were allowed.[12] In Texas the congress of the republic and the legislature of the state provided for suits to confirm titles under Mexican grants,[13] or to recover lands claimed by persons under alleged titles emanating from the Spanish or Mexican governments, where no valid evidence of such grants could be found.[14]

5. Determination of Claims by Commissioners. Some of the statutes provided for a board of commissioners to settle land claims under former sovereignties,[15] and required all such claims to be presented to the commissioners[16] within a specified time[17] in order that such claims might be investigated, and, if substantiated, Mission Indians claiming a right of permanent occupancy of land in California under a Mexican grant were within the provisions of the statute requiring every person claiming lands in California by virtue of any right or title derived from a Spanish or Mexican government to present the same to commissioners. Earlier California cases (Merle v. Dixey, 31 Cal. 130; Steinbach v. Moore, 30 Cal. 498; Minturn v. Brower, 24 Cal. 644) asserting the view that titles perfect at the date of the cession need not be presented are necessarily overruled.

Necessity of presentation under Texas land law of 1837 see Jones v. Menard, 1 Tex. 771.

Claims proper for presentation.—Act Cong. March 3, 1851, c. 41 (9 St. 631), to ascertain and settle private land claims in California, was intended to segregate private from public land, and did not contemplate presentation of claims to anything but "land"; and hence, where a city filed a petition with the board of land commissioners for an adjudication of its claim to lands, founded upon a grant to its predecessor, it was not necessary to present therein its claim to water rights pertaining thereto, and its claim to the water rights of its predecessor was not adversely adjudicated by a decision that it was not entitled to all the land claimed. Neglect to support claim by evidence.— Where a person claiming land by virtue of a right or title derived from the Mexican or Spanish governments presented his petition to the board of land commissioners, but neglected to support it by evidence within two years thereafter, such neglect did not bring confirmed,[18] failing in which, claims were to be considered and treated as abandoned,[19] and the land was considered as part of the public domain.[20] The jurisdiction and powers of such commissioners and of the courts on appeal were fixed and limited by the terms of the statutes.[21] Such jurisdiction included every question of title or right, whether inchoate or complete, and whether resting in contract or evidenced by authentic act and judicial possession,[22] and extended not only to the adjudication of questions relating to the genuineness and authenticity of the grant and others of a similar character,[23] but also to all questions relating to its location and boundaries,[24] and did not terminate until the issue of a patent the claim within the limitation prescribed by the act of March 3, 1851, section 13, which barred all claims not presented within two years. Swat v. U. S., 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,680, Hoffm. Land Cas. 230.

Pueblo lands.— Section 14 of the act of congress of March 3, 1851, did not except pueblo lands from the provision of section 13, which made lands held by titles from the Mexican government on the cession of California a part of the public domain unless the grantee, within two years from the date of the act, presented his claim to the land commissioners for approval, etc. Stevenson v. Bennett, 35 Cal. 424. Confirmation to another person.— The acts of congress for the confirmation of Spanish titles in Missouri, being in the nature of statutes of limitation, if any one who was entitled to a part interest in a Spanish claim failed within the time limited to present his interests in the claim for confirmation, he could not afterward claim the benefit of a confirmation of the whole claim made to another. Intervention by claimant in default.— One whose claim under a grant has never been presented, and has been abandoned, has no right, under the act of 1851, section 13, to intervene in a proceeding to confirm a different grant, until after the determination of the proceeding by the confirmation of the claim. Rights of grantees inter sese.— Where one of two persons to whom a grant was made has exhibited a deed from his co-grantee, and obtained a confirmation of his claim to the whole tract, the co-grantee, who has presented his separate claim for his half and who denies the execution of the deed, is entitled to a confirmation as against the United States, and the rights of the parties inter sese will be left to be determined by the ordinary tribunals. Boundary of adjoining rancho.— Upon an conformably to the decree.[25] The jurisdiction did not, however, extend to inquiring into matters of private right between different individuals.[26] It was sufficient to give the commissioners jurisdiction that the petition alleged that the claim was by virtue of a right or title derived from a former sovereignty,[27] and it was not necessary to allege that such claim was supported by a written grant or concession.[28] Where a claim had been assigned it could be presented and prosecuted in the name of the assignee [29] or the original grantee.[30] There was an appeal from the decision of the commissioners to the United States district court,[31] and such appeal opened the whole issue for consideration and the case was to be heard in the district court de novo.[32] When a final decision was rendered by the commissioners it was their appeal from a decision of the board of land commissioners confirming a claim to a Mexican land grant, the objection that the boundary of an adjoining rancho was affected by the claim under consideration was not tenable; the controversy being between and concluding the United States and the claimants only. Pueblo lands.— The act of congress of March 3, 1851, section 14, providing that the claims for lots held under grants from any corporation or town to which lands had been granted for the establishment of a town by the Spanish or Mexican government, or for any city, town, or village lot, which city, town, or village existed on July 7, 1846, should be presented by the corporate authorities, intended that the corporate authority should present under one general claim, not only the interest of the city, town, or village which they represented, but also the separate interests of the individuals holding under them, and relieve the board from the necessity of considering separate claims depending on the same original title. Lynch v. De Bernal, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 315, 19 L. ed. 714, holding further that it was not necessary that a claim to a lot within the limits of a pueblo should be presented in the name of the corporate authorities where the title was not derived from the pueblo. 32. Le Roy v. Wright, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,273, 4 Sawy. 530, holding that the case should be heard upon papers and testimony duty to prepare two certified transcripts of their proceedings and decision, and of the papers and evidence on which they were founded, one of which was filed with the clerk of the proper district court and the other transmitted to the attorney-general.[33] The filing of the transcript with the clerk operated as an appeal on behalf of the party against whom the decision was rendered, and such party was required to file within a specified time a notice that the appeal would be prosecuted, failing in which the appeal was to be regarded as dismissed,[34] and the decree of the commissioners took effect precisely as though no appeal had ever been taken.[35] An appeal also lay from the district court to the supreme court of the United States;[36] but objections not raised in the trial court could not be raised on appeal,[37] nor were matters as to which no appeal was taken open to consideration.[38] On affirming a decree confirming a land grant the supreme court might instruct the district court to amend such decree.[39] Where a cause was remanded for further proceedings, involving additional proofs, the United States was entitled to a reasonable time in which to close its testimony.[40] The proceedings of the commissioners used before the board of commissioners and such other evidence as either party might produce.

Personal knowledge of judge.— Where, on appeal to the district court, the question is whether a tract of land is sufficiently described to be well defined and intelligible, and the judge has personal knowledge relative to it, he will weigh that personal knowledge in connection with the testimony of witnesses. Change in mode of appeal.—Acts Cong. (1851) c. 41, §§ 8, 9, prescribing certain modes of procedure for bringing before the district courts of the United States in California a land claim already passed upon by the commissioners appointed to settle private land claims in California were repealed by the act of Aug. 31, 1852, section 12, which substituted a different mode of procedure, as stated in the text. U. S. v. Ritchie, 17 How. (U. S.) 525, 15 L. ed. 236.

Discretion of attorney-general as to prosecuting appeal.—After the decision of the commissioners on a Mexican land claim, the control of proceedings, whether to prosecute an appeal or to dismiss the same, rested exclusively with the attorney-general; and the propriety or legality of his action in any case was not the subject of review by any tribunal, and it could only be revoked by the appellate court on his own application. U. S. v. Flint, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,121, 4 Sawy. 42 [affirmed in 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed. 93].

When the attorney-general gave notice that he would not prosecute the appeal, such appeal was for all legal purposes in fact dismissed, and the decree of the board took effect as if no appeal had been taken, and an order or decree of the district court giving leave to the claimant to proceed on the decree of the board as on a final decree was a proper disposition of the case. Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 478, 18 L. ed. 88.

38. De Malarin v. U. S., 1 Wall. (U. were judicial in their character, and had the same effect as other judicial proceedings.[41] Where a decree of the commissioners confirming a claim had become final, it was conclusive [42] between the United States or those claiming under it and the claimant [43] and was not open to revision; [44] and the same was true of a final decree of the district court confirming the claim, unless appealed from.[45] But the confirmation determined nothing as to the equitable relations between the grantee and third persons.[46] The final decree took effect by relation as of the day when the petition was presented to the land commissioners and was to be considered as if entered on that day.[47] The final rejection of the claim restored the land to the mass of the public domain, without any further action by the land department.[48] In passing on the rights of the inhabitants of California to the property they claimed under grants from the Spanish and Mexican governments, the commissioners and the courts were to be governed by the stipulations of the treaty, the law of nations, the laws, usages, and customs of the former government, the principles of equity, and the decisions of the supreme court, so far as they were applicable;[49] and they were not required to conduct their investigations as if the rights
