As used in a will directing executors to pay certain sums out of the proceeds of the estate, the term does not mean income. Allen v. Barnes, 5 Utah 100, 106, 12 Pac. 912. As used in a will bequeathing certain property to trustees, the income to be by them devoted to certain purposes and empowering them to sell the property and reinvest the proceeds, and directing that so much of the proceeds of the property should be paid to a certain person as she may deem necessary for the maintenance of herself and another, the term is used to denote income. Thomson's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 36, 46. Where a testator devises his farm to his wife for life, said real estate to go to A at her death, if any remains, providing that said A maintains and provides for her decently from the proceeds of the farm or otherwise, the term meant money or other thing of value obtained from the sale of the property. Birmingham v. Lesan, 77 Me. 494, 497, 1 Atl. 151. As used in a will directing the transfer of the property of the testator to certain persons on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, and in the meantime "the interest, dividends, and proceeds of such estate and effects" as shall be necessary for the purpose to be applied toward the maintenance of J., the word includes real and personal property. I. NATURE, ISSUANCE, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY.

A. Definition. Process, in the sense in which it is employed in the present title, means the writ, notice, or other formal writing, issued by authority of law, for the purpose of bringing defendant into a court of law to answer plaintiff's demands in a civil action,[1] although in a more technical and limited sense the

Other definitions are: The means used to acquire jurisdiction of defendants in an action, whether by writ or notice, may properly be designated a process. Wilson v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 108 Mo. 588, 18 S. W. 286, 32 Am. St. Rep. 624. See also Neal-Millard Co. v. Owens, 115 Ga. 959, 42 S. E. 266.

A writ, warrant, subpœna, or other formal writing issued by authority of law. Savage v. Oliver, 110 Ga. 636, 36 S. E. 54.

In its application to the commencement of the proceedings the word "process" is used to designate the writ or other judicial means by which a defendant is brought into court to answer a charge, although there may be afterward issued in the progress of the case interlocutory and final processes. Philadelphia v. Campbell, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 163.

Synonymous with writ.—Process is synonymous with writ — all writs being called process. Carey v. German American Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 80, 54 N. W. 18, 36 Am. St. Rep. 907, 20 L. R. A. 267. The common-law definition of process is a writ issued by some term is frequently applied only to those writs or writings which issue out of a court or officer exercising judicial power. Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 Mich. 578. The word "process," as used in a constitutional provision relating to the style of all processes, means all such writs, whether original, mesne, or final, by which the authority of the state is exerted in obtaining jurisdiction over the person or property of the citizen, and which requires the exercise of a sovereign power for their enforcement. Hinkly v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co., 9 Minn. 55.

Statutory definitions.— The word "process" shall include any writ, declaration, summons, or order whereby any action, writ, or proceeding shall be commenced, or which shall be issued in or upon any action, suit, or proceeding authorized by law in this state. Minn. Gen. St. (1894) §§ 2865, 3190; Oreg. Annot. Codes & St. (1901) § 5169; Ballinger Annot Codes & St. Wash. (1897) § 4405.

The word "process" signifies a writ or summons issued in the course of judicial proceedings. Ariz. Pen. Code (1901), par. 7, subd. 15; Sandel & H. Dig. Ark. (1893) § 7220; Cal. Code Civ. Proc. (1903) § 17, subd. 6; Cal. Pen. Code (1903), § 7, subd. 15; Cal. Pol. Code (1903), § 17, subd. 6; Ky. Civ. Code, § 732, subd. 26; Mont. Pol. Code (1895), § 16, subd. 6; Mont. Code Civ. Proc. Rep. 527, 528.

"Process," as used in the article relating to the sheriff, includes all writs, warrants, summons, and orders of courts of justices or judicial officers. Cal. Pol. Code (1903), § 4175; Ida. Pol. Code (1901), § 1644; Mont. Pol. Code (1895), § 4380; Utah Rev. St. (1898) § 5574.

Process of law, as defined by Lord Coke, is twofold, viz., by the king's writ or by due proceeding and warrant, either in deed or in law, without writ. 2 Coke Inst. 51, 52 [quoted in People v. Nevins, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 154; State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863]. See, generally, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8 Cyc. 1089 et seq.

Classification as mesne and final.—Although literally perhaps process can only be strictly characterized as the initial steps in a case, it is come to be indicated by the two terms "mesne" and "final" which are used to designate the two stages in the progress of a cause in which it is employed. Utica City Bank v. Buel, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 385, 17 How. Pr. 498.

Civil process.— The term "civil process" as employed in a statute providing that no civil process shall issue against a person in the military service of the state or of the United States includes a writ of scire facias upon a mortgage, unless expressly prohibited by the act of the contracting parties. Coxe v. Martin, 44 Pa. St. 322.

Compulsory process.— The term "compulsory process" as used with reference to the securing of attendance of witnesses includes not only the ordinary subpœna but a warrant of arrest or attachment for such witnesses as fail to obey or avoid service of the first subpœna or recognizance. Powers v. Com., 114 Ky. 237, 70 S. W. 644, 1050, 71 S. W. 494, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1007. "Compulsory process for obtaining witnesses" means the right to invoke the aid of the law to compel the personal attendance of witnesses at the trial when they are within the jurisdiction of the court. Graham v. State, 50 Ark. 161, 6 S. W. 721. See, generally, WITNESSES.

Criminal process see, generally, CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 297 et seq.

Final process is usually used as equivalent to a process of execution (see, generally, EXECUTIONS, 17 Cyc. 921), as distinguished from mesne process which must issue before final judgment (see Arnold v. Chapman, 13 R. I. 586). For example, where a statute provides that if there shall be no master in chancery or commissioner to execute a decree, the same may be carried into effect by execution or other final process, such process must be understood to be such as is the practice of the court of chancery to issue, which are, besides executions, writs of attachment and sequestration and writs of assistance. Armsby v. People, 20 Ill. 155. "Final process" as used in particular statutes has been held to comprise writs of execution. Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 303, 313, 10 L. ed. 973. And as a part of the proceedings upon final process a forthcoming bond executed after levy of an execution is included. Amis v. Smith, supra. A motion by a judgment debtor to allow a judgment against the judgment creditor to be created against the other judgment has been held a final process. Curlee v. Thomas, 74 N. C. 51 [cited in Atkinson v. Pittman, 47 Ark. 464, 2 S. W. 114].

Irregular process.— Irregular process has been defined to mean process absolutely void and not merely erroneous and voidable; but usually the term has been applied to all processes not issued in strict conformity with the law, whether the defects appear upon the face of the process or by reference to extrinsic facts, and whether such defects render the process absolutely void or only voidable. Doe v. Harter, 2 Ind. 252, 253. Irregular process is such as a court has general jurisdiction to issue, but which is authorized in the particular case by reason of the existence or non-existence of facts or circumstances rendering it improper in such a case. Bryan v. Congdon, 86 Fed. 221, 223, 29 C. C. A. 670. There is a great difference between erroneous process and irregular (that is void) process. The first stands valid and good until it be reversed; the latter is an absolute nullity from the beginning. Paine v. Ely, N. Chipm. (Vt.) 14, 24.

Mesne process.— In its strict significance mesne process is used to embrace all writs and orders of the court necessary for the carrying on of the suit after its institution, court.[2] It is so denominated because it proceeds or issues forth in order to compel the appearance of defendant.[3] In a more enlarged signification process includes all the proceedings of any court.[4] As employed in statutes the legal

from and after the summons which is the original process up to, but not including those writs which are necessary to secure the benefits of the suit to the successful party and which are final process. Birmingham Dry-Goods Co. v. Bledsoe, 113 Ala. 418, 21 So. 403. However, in some jurisdictions and under particular statutes the term "mesne process" is used to describe any and all writs except final process, or to embrace all writs preceding execution. Birmingham Dry-Goods Co. v. Bledsoe, supra; Place v. Washburn, 163 Mass. 530, 40 N. E. 853; State v. Ferguson, 31 N. J. L. 289; Arnold v. Chapman, 13 R. I. 586. Where used in contradistinction to final process or process to execution mesne process signifies all such process as intervenes between the commencement and end of the suit. Pennington v. Lowenstein, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10,938. In the use of the phrase "mesne process" in contradiction of "final process," it has been held to include the process by which defendant is brought into court (Hirshiser v. Tinsley, 9 Mo. App. 339), a subpœna for a witness (Birmingham Dry-Goods Co. v. Bledsoe, 113 Ala. 418, 21 So. 403), a counter affidavit interposed to an execution issued upon foreclosure of a laborer's lien (Cosgrave v. Mitchell, 74 Ga. 824), and a writ of attachment (Place v. Washburn, 163 Mass. 530, 40 N. E. 853; Fletcher v. Morrell, 78 Mich. 176, 44 N. W. 133). In speaking of arrest upon mesne process the court said: "The object of mesne process is essentially different from that of final process or execution; one is to compel the appearance of the party in court; the other to satisfy the demand of the plaintiff. In one the command is to take the body 'and him safely keep so that you have him to appear' on the return day of the writ; in the other it is to take the body of the debtor, and him commit to the keeper of the jail, etc., and the keeper is commanded to him safely keep until he pays, etc." Aldrich v. Weeks, 62 Vt. 89, 90, 19 Atl. 115.

Original process.— Original process is the process which originates a cause (Oglesby v. Attrill, 12 Fed. 227), as distinguished from that which prolongs an action already begun (Oglesby v. Attrill, supra), or which is appellate in its nature (Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540, 586, 10 L. ed. 579, 618). It has been held, under particular statutes, to apply to the petition and citation taken together (Hotchkiss' Appeal, 32 Conn. 353, 355), but not to apply to a writ of habeas corpus (Holmes v. Jennison, supra), nor to process served by way of notice to plaintiff of a bill for new trial (Oglesby v. Attrill, supra), or to a subpœna or notice issued on the filing of a bill in equity to enjoin an action at law (Cortes Co. v. Thannhauser, 9 Fed. 226, 228, 20 Blatchf. 59).

Original writ.— By original writ is usually meant the first process or initiatory step in prosecuting a suit. Walsh v. Haswell, 11 Vt. 85. At common law it is to be distinguished from a judicial writ. Walsh v. Haswell, supra; Converse v. Damariscotta Bank, 15 Me. 431; Pullman Palace-Car Co. v. Washburn, 66 Fed. 790. The English practice was that the original writ issued from chancery and was witnessed in the name of the sovereign, but judicial writs issued from the court where the proceedings were of record, such a process being from the court and grounded on proceedings before them. Walsh v. Haswell, supra; Pullman Palace-Car Co. v. Washburn, supra. Under the practice of the United States there is no such thing as an original writ as it was known to the English common-law practice. Pressey v. Snow, 81 Me. 288, 17 Atl. 71. See also Clark v. Paine, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 66, wherein it is said that a writ of scire facias, according to the English practice, would not be considered as an original writ, but that such a designation had in England a technical meaning which it would not be safe to adopt in giving construction to a Massachusetts statute. In the United States the term "original writ" has been held to include a writ of summons and attachment. Pressey v. Snow, supra.

Returnable process.— The term "returnable process" is used to designate process upon which the officer receiving it is bound to certify his doings. Utica City Bank v. Buel, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 385, 17 How. Pr. 498.

Summary process.— "Summary," as applied to process, means immediate, instantaneous, in contradistinction from the ordinary course by emanating and taking effect without intermediate applications or delays. Gaines v. Travis, 8 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 45.

Trustee process see GARNISHMENT, 20 Cyc. 978.

Void process.— Void process is defined to be such as was issued without power in the court to award it, or which a court has not acquired jurisdiction to issue in the particular case, or which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process. Bryan v. Congdon, 86 Fed. 221, 29 C. C. A. 670.

B. Necessity For — 1. To Commence Action. Except in case of service by publication, an action can be commenced in most jurisdictions only by the issuance of a summons or other writ of process; in no other way can the court obtain jurisdiction of the case.[6] If expressly required, by the statute, as commencement of suit, its issuance cannot be waived;[7] but otherwise a defendant who is sui juris may waive issuance of process.[8]

2. Upon Defendant's Cross Demand, or Claim Against Co-Defendant. In cross actions by a defendant against a plaintiff, no additional process is necessary,[9] unless specially required by statute,[10] although the contrary is the rule of the chancery practice.[11] Nor is service of additional process necessary to confer jurisdiction to determine the relations of the co-defendants incidental to the subject-matter of plaintiff's complaint.[12] When a cross complaint is filed by a defendant raising new questions against a co-defendant, it is the doctrine of some courts that process is necessary to give jurisdiction, by analogy to the chancery practice,[13] but other courts hold that no process need issue.[14] Such process is expressly required by statute in some states.[15] In other states service of the cross complaint is by statute required to give the court jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the cross complaint, and this is a substitute for, and the equivalent of, process.[16] A defendant who has not appeared and has not been served with process cannot be compelled to litigate a question with a co-defendant by the mere service upon him of an answer setting up a cross demand.[17]

3. Upon Supplemental Petitions. No new summons is needed for a supplemental petition.[18] But when a petition is filed in a pending proceeding which has no relation whatever to the subject-matter of the proceeding, defendants named in the petition must be served with a summons.[19] So where a petition substituting an entirely different plaintiff is filed, no judgment may be rendered thereon unless there has been service upon defendant or he has appeared thereto.[20]

4. Upon Bringing in New Parties. Where plaintiff is granted leave to add a new defendant, the person so added must be served with process in the same manner as for the commencement of an original suit.[21] A provision to this effect is ordinarily made by statute,[22] which applies also to persons brought in by order of court, not upon their own application, as necessary to the complete determination of the cause.[23] But where upon the decease of an original defendant his infant heirs are made parties, it has been held that service of the order making them parties is sufficient without a new summons.[24] And where the name of one of plaintiff firm has been omitted from the petition he may be made a party by amendment without further service on defendant.[25]

5. New Process After Amendment of Cause of Action. An amended statement of the same cause of action does not necessitate the issuance of further, or new, process;[26] but if a new cause of action is set up by amendment new process must

C. Issuance — 1. In General. Process is deemed issued when it is prepared and placed in the hands of one authorized to serve it with the intention of having it served.[30] Process is not irregular if delivered by the clerk, signed and sealed in blank, to plaintiff's attorney.[31] In those states where the statute requires a complaint to be filed upon which the summons subsequently issues, the summons can be issued only upon the filing of a complete pleading,[32] and against those persons who are made parties in it.[33]

2. Time For Issuance.[34] Under some statutes process cannot issue before the filing of plaintiff's pleading.[35] And where the statutes so provide it must be issued within a limited time after the complaint is filed.[36] In any event it is within the discretion of the court to allow or refuse the issuance of summons after a long delay.[37]

6. Counties to Which Process May Issue.[46] In the absence of statutory authority a court has no power to issue process to be executed beyond the limits of its territorial jurisdiction.[47] But by statute the issuance of process into counties other than that in which the action is brought is frequently authorized.[48] Thus, where two or more persons who reside in different counties may be named jointly as defendants, either county may usually be selected, and the court may send its process to the other counties;[49] but this is not true where the resident defendant is merely nominal and the real defendant is the one sought in another county.[50] The case must be rightly brought in the county from which the summons issues,[51] and the parties must be rightly joined.[52] In some jurisdictions if the action is local,

the summons may be issued to another county even though there is but a single defendant.[53] The writ sent to the other county should be an exact counterpart of the one which is to be executed within the county,[54] except that it should be directed to another sheriff [55] and only the party to be served need be named.[56] Under the practice in England [57] and in Canada [58] service of process without the jurisdiction may be allowed in actions founded upon a breach within the jurisdiction of any contract wherever made, which is to be performed within the jurisdiction. And in certain of the provinces of Canada service of process without the jurisdiction may be allowed against a foreign defendant when the action is founded upon a tort committed within the jurisdiction.[59]

D. Requisites and Validity — 1. In General. The requisites of process are largely matters of statutory regulation, and it is necessary that the writ contain whatever the statute prescribes, whether deemed important or not.[60] But irregularities in form, such as adding a required statement by way of a memorandum upon the summons instead of inserting it in the body thereof, will not vitiate the process.[61] And the citation need not contain matters which are not required by a statute enumerating the essentials of a process.[62] A general statute enacted for the purpose of securing uniformity with regard to process in courts of a particular

The court held that this statute was not confined in its operation to transitory actions in which at least one defendant had been served with process in the county of venue, but to all actions rightly brought. "If, for instance, the action affects the title or right of possession of real property, it is rightly brought in the county in which the land is situated, and the summons may be issued to, and served in, any other county, although there be but a single defendant."

grade will apply to courts created by a prior special act,[63] the acts being repugnant to each other in respect of such provisions.

2. Style or Title. The style or title of a writ is the formal designation of the authority under which it issues. A writ is properly said to run in the name of the person or government from whom the command on the face of the writ appears to emanate.[64] While the place for the style is properly at the head of the writ, it may nevertheless appear elsewhere without rendering the summons invalid.[65] Constitutional provisions are usually made as to the style in which process shall run.[66] In case the provision is that process shall run in the name of the state it may be styled simply "the state of," etc.,[67] or "state of," [68] The statement of the state and county in the margin of process, as ordinarily employed to show the venue, is not sufficient to cause the process to be regarded as running in the name of the state.[69] Unless process runs under the style so prescribed, it is void according to the rule of some courts; [70] but other cases hold that it is thus rendered voidable only, and is subject to amendment.[71] A summons or notice issued by a party or his attorney under statutory authority is not deemed such process as comes within these constitutional provisions.[72]

3. DIRECTION. Process should ordinarily be directed to the officer who is to serve it,[73] although under some statutes the summons is to be directed to defendant.[74] Under these statutes such a direction need be only to the particular defendant intended to be served therewith.[75] In case the officer who ordinarily serves writs is disqualified, the statute usually provides that some other designated officer shall serve it, in which case it should be directed to such officer.[76] A statutory condition precedent to such direction must have been fulfilled.[77] And under some statutes the facts giving the substitute authority to serve the writ should appear upon the face thereof.[78] Under other statutes provision has been made for the direction of the writ to an indifferent person.[79] Whether the want of a proper direction is a fatal defect in a writ is a question upon which there is a difference of judicial opinion; some cases hold that the defect is fatal to the validity of the writ,[80] while the better view appears to be that it is not fatal but may be cured by amendment.[81] The absence of a proper direction is a mere informality in case of a statutory summons which does not issue out of the court, provided the instrument discloses for whom it is intended.[82]

4. Designation of Court. The court in which the action is brought must be designated,[83] but an inaccuracy which does not mislead or prejudice will be disregarded.[84]

5. Place of Holding Court. If the process requires defendant's appearance before the court, the place must be named with reasonable certainty,[85] unless fixed by law.[86]

6. Appearance and Return — a. Distinction Between Return-Day and Appearance Day. The day for defendant's appearance is usually the return-day of the writ,[87] so that the term "return-day" is commonly employed to mean appearance day, and, in the absence of any statutory provision on the subject, the appearance day is the return-day of the writ if an appearance can be entered on that day [88] But as the return-day, strictly speaking, is merely the day appointed by law when writs are to be returned and filed,[89] there is no necessary connection between it and the day upon which defendant is bound to appear, and in some states the two days are by statute allowed to fall upon different dates.[90]

b. Necessity of Fixing Return or Appearance Day. The process must specify the time when defendant is to appear and answer,[91] or defend.[92] If the return-day of the process is fixed by statute it need not be designated,[93] although the better practice is to do so, and if wrongly designated the summons is not thereby rendered invalid.[94]

c. Day to Which Writ May Be Made Returnable. In case process is made returnable to a day which is not a legal return-day it is bad,[95] as where it is made returnable at a wrong term [96] or a time when no term is to be held,[97] or at a day out of term.[98] In like manner where the date fixed for return is an impossible one,[99] or is a day past,[1] the process is void. Under some statutes a writ is properly made returnable to the next succeeding term, although less than the statutory period for notice has intervened between the issuance of the summons and the first day of the term, and although a continuance may be made necessary for lack of proper service.[2] Under other statutes, when the necessary period does not intervene, the summons should be made returnable to the term following the next succeeding term,[3] or to the next rule day in vacation.[4]

d. Period Between Issuance and Return. The common-law rule required fifteen days between the teste and the return of the original writ, that being the time deemed necessary between service and return.[5] If the statute provides that a certain number of days must intervene between the return-day and the date of issuance of the writ, the specification of a less number of days makes the summons void.[6] And similarly, if the statute requires the return within a specified time, greater time will invalidate the summons.[7] Unless such procedure is authorized by statute, a summons cannot be issued upon a return-day and made returnable upon the same day.[8] A provision that process shall be returnable upon the second Monday after its date, but that when issued to another county it may be returnable at the option of the party having it issued on a third or fourth Monday, does not prevent a summons which is issued to another county from being made returnable on the second Monday after its date.[9] Under the provisions of some statutes the requirement as to appearance is made to depend upon the amount in controversy.[10]

e. Sufficiency of Provision. If the time for appearance is identified in the statute by reference to terms of court, the process should ordinarily specify, with reasonable certainty, the term,[11] and the day of the term when appearance is required;[12] but it has been held sufficient to specify the term merely, where the law determines the day of the term upon which appearance must be made.[13] The hour at which appearance should be made is frequently required to be stated.[14] The date may be fixed with reference to a term of court where the time of holding such term is prescribed by law.[15] But where it is provided that the day shall be plainly expressed, a faulty reference to the day is not aided by the fact that defendant is also required to appear at the "term next to be holden," the date of which is fixed by general law.[16] An error in stating the time at which process is returnable,[17] or a failure to follow the statutory language for the time for appearance,[18] is not fatal where defendant is neither deceived nor misled. Surplusage in regard to the time for appearance will not affect the writ.[19] But a want of proper certainty in point of time cannot be supplied by construction or intendment.[20] The return-day may be expressed in figures.[21] Where the writ is made returnable upon a certain day of a certain month "next," it has been construed to be returnable in the ensuing year in case the same month has already been expressed in stating the date of the writ.[22]

W. 910, holding a citation served by publication in attachment sufficient, although it designated defendant by his initials. The full name should be given, even though the party may have been described by the initial of his christian name in the transaction. Stoll v. Griffith, 41 Wash. 37, 82 Pac. 1025. If the party's full name be once given, the process is not defective if in a subsequent place the full name is not stated. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Bodie, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 168, 74 S. W. 100. The use of "Sam." for "Samuel" will not vitiate the summons under a statute declaring that service of summons shall not be set aside for defects not affecting defendant's substantial rights. Rich v. Collins, 12 Colo. App. 511, 56 Pac. 207.

The reason for insisting strongly upon correctness in the names of parties is that otherwise there would be considerable difficulty in establishing a plea of former recovery. Morgan v. Woods, 33 Ind. 23.

Blank as to christian name.— The officer serving may be given the process, with defendant's christian name blank, and authorized to ascertain and insert it. Osgood v. Norris, 21 N. H. 435. An omission of any christian name, with no amendment at any stage, was considered a fatal defect in Houser v. Jones, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 394.

When a wife is a party plaintiff with her husband her name must be stated, and it is not sufficient that the citation recite that a person named "et uxor are plaintiffs." Higgins v. Shepard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 107 S. W. 79.

In Louisiana the code of practice does not require defendant's name and surname to appear at full length in the citation. Lallande v. Terrill, 12 La. 7.

Addition or description.— A writ naming defendant a blacksmith was held sufficient, although he claimed he was a nailer and not a blacksmith. Blower v. Campbell, Quincy (Mass.) 8.

27. Morgan v. Woods, 33 Ind. 23. In Bowen v. Mulford, 10 N. J. L. 230, Chief Justice Ewing said: "The introduction of a letter or name between the christian and surname is very common, for the purpose of distinction; and in the use and understanding of the people at large, and therefore in presumption of fact, John Mulford and John S. Mulford, are not the same but different persons. Hence the variance was material. To sanction it, might open the door to serious mischief."

28. Morgan v. Woods, 33 Ind. 23; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. James, 48 Fed. 148, 1 C. C. A. 53.

An abbreviation of defendant's surname, which the court considered could not have misled, was held immaterial in Cooke v. Shoemaker, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 212.

An error in plaintiff's christian name is cured under the Illinois statute when rightfully stated in the declaration. Sidway v. Marshall, 83 Ill. 438.

idem sonans with the real name is not material.[30] If the name of a defendant is unknown, a fictitious name may be given in the process, adding a statement that it is fictitious, where such a proceeding is permitted by statute,[31] and in some jurisdictions a description should be added tending to identify the person intended.[32] An error in the name of a co-defendant offers no ground of objection to a defendant rightly named and served.[33] In any case, if the party plaintiff or defendant be actually before the court, as by plaintiff bringing suit or by defendant being actually served, the name by which he sues or is sued is wholly immaterial, unless a mistake therein be used as a ground for a plea in abatement.[34] The fact that defendants are named in the alternative is fatal.[35]

8. Statement of Nature of Action. Whether or not a summons should contain a statement indicating the nature of the cause of action is a matter depending upon the provisions of the statute; some statutes make no such requirement,[36] others

A writ was upheld which entirely omitted defendant's surname, but stated his christian name, which was an unusual one, where the full name appeared in the petition served. Crain v. Griffis, 14 Tex. 358.

Sufficiency.— A writ directing an officer "to summon the unknown children" of certain persons is not a valid summons, under Ky. Civ. Code, § 66, which requires that the writ "shall command the officer to whom it is directed to summon the defendant named therein." Kellar v. Stanley, 86 Ky. 240, 5 S. W. 477, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 388. Where the process sought to include as defendants the unknown heirs of a deceased owner, the addition of the words "if any" to their designation does not invalidate the process. Abbott v. Curran, 98 N. Y. 665.

A citation to the unknown heirs of a decedent does not include his wife. Heidenheimer v. Loring, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 560, 26 S. W. 99.

Statement of rule.— No better statement of this principle can be found than the following, by Justice Cowen, in Waterbury v. Mather, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 611, 613: "If the parties are in truth before the court, whether plaintiff or defendant, plaintiffs or defendants, if all or any of them be misnamed, whether they be corporate or natural persons, the only way to make the objection good is by a plea in abatement. The persons being actually before the court, by their own consent or otherwise, no matter by what name they choose to call themselves, the name, as well as everything else, becomes rem judicatam. The court have possession of the persons and the thing, and by whatever names the former may be called, it is enough if they can be intelligibly connected by evidence as parties in interest and participators in the litigation. They are then tied up and concluded, and in all future litigation may be connected with the subject matter by proper averments. In the immediate suit, and on the immediate trial, all the court and jury have to do, is to see that in truth the real parties are before them. It may sometimes be a troublesome question of identity; still it is, in general, a mere formal dispute of no real consequence; and an abatement is allowed for no reason but to avoid circuity in setting up the suit as a future bar."

No. 17,675, 10 Blatchf. 524, holding that a writ which requires defendant to answer to plaintiff in a plea of trespass, and also to a certain bill of plaintiff against defendant, do.[37] If the statute requires such a statement it is mandatory.[38] A brief and general characterization, avoiding detail, is usually held a sufficient compliance with the statute.[39]

for damages, in a sum named, for deceit and breach of promise of marriage, sets forth, in the action for deceit, an action in trespass on the case, and the rest of the ac etiam clause may be regarded as explanatory of the subject-matter to which the deceit was applied, or may be rejected as surplusage; and therefore the writ is not incongruous.

Under former statutes in California the summons was required to state the cause and general nature of the action. Bewick v. Muir, 83 Cal. 368, 33 Pac. 389; People v. Greene, 52 Cal. 577; King v. Blood, 41 Cal. 314.

37. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Nicholls, 8 Colo. 188, 6 Pac. 512; Moody v. Taylor, 12 Iowa 71; Colby v. Dow, 18 N. H. 557; Stoddard v. Cockran, 6 N. H. 160; Ross v. Ward, 16 N. J. Where the complaint is served with the summons it is sometimes provided that the summons need not contain a statement of the cause of action. Swem v. Newell, 19 Colo. 397, 35 Pac. 734.

38. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Nicholls, 8 Colo. 188, 6 Pac. 512; Sawyer v. Robertson, 11 Mont. 416, 28 Pac. 456; Boyle v. Victoria Yukon Trading Co., 8 Brit. Col. 352.

39. California.— A statement "of the nature of the action in general terms" is sufficiently made by reciting that the action is brought to recover money and to foreclose liens. Bewick v. Muir, 83 Cal. 368, 23 Pac. 389.

Colorado.— "The cause and general nature of the action" is sufficiently shown by declaring that it is brought to recover a sum stated, evidenced by the promissory note more fully set forth in the complaint. Barndollar v. Patton, 5 Colo. 46. So, stating the amount sued for and that it was due on an insurance policy described in the complaint. Tabor v. Goss, etc., Mfg. Co., 11 Colo. 419, 18 Pac. 537. But a summons in an action for negligence, causing personal injuries, is fatally defective when it merely states that the action is brought to recover a stated amount, due from defendant to plaintiff on certain damages claimed to have been incurred by plaintiff by reason of the negligent operating of defendant railroad, and judgment by default is void. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Nicholls, 8 Colo. 188, 6 Pac. 512.

Indiana.— A summons need not fully inform defendant of the nature or character of the action; a statement that the action is brought "to set aside satisfaction of judgment" is sufficient to uphold a judgment on default which also directs a sale under the previous judgment. Freeman v. Paul, 105 Ind. 451, 5 N. E. 754.

Iowa.— Stating that a specified sum is due on a promissory note is sufficient to apprise indorsers of the nature of the claim. Davis v. Burt, 7 Iowa 56. Notice of a claim on contract against two is sufficient to sustain a judgment against one. Padden v. Clark, 124 Iowa 94, 99 N. W. 152. The original notice is not to set forth the cause of action in detail, but it is sufficient if it informs defendant with reasonable certainty of the remedy that plaintiff seeks. Harkins v. Edwards, 1 Iowa 296. See also Hickman v. Chambers, 10 Iowa 301, holding that where a petition claimed judgment against defendants for the foreclosure of a mortgage, and against one of them on a note executed by him, and the original notice claimed judgment against them on a note and a foreclosure of a mortgage to secure payment of the same, the variance was not sufficient to quash the notice.

Maryland.— The "purpose" for which defendant is summoned is sufficiently stated in a summons requiring him to "answer to an action at the suit of" plaintiff. Ritter v. Offutt, 40 Md. 207.

Montana.— The "cause and general nature of the action" sufficiently appears by a statement that it is brought to recover a stated sum, the value of stated personal property belonging to plaintiff and taken possession and disposed of by defendant. Sawyer v. Robertson, 11 Mont. 416, 28 Pac. 456.

Nebraska.— Defendant is sufficiently apprised of the "nature of the claim against him" by being summoned to answer plaintiff's bill of particulars, wherein they claim a stated sum as due on a promissory note. McPherson v. Beatrice First Nat. Bank, 12 Nebr. 202, 10 N. W. 707.

Rhode Island.— Describing the action as "of the case, for trover and conversion of certain personal property" is sufficient. Slocomb v. Powers, 10 R. I. 255.

Texas.— Old Alcalde Oil Co. v. Ludgate, (Civ. App. 1905) 85 S. W. 453. The statute does not design that the statement in the summons supply the place of the statement in the pleading. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Burke, 55 Tex. 323, 40 Am. Rep. 808. Nevertheless a requirement that the complaint be served with the summons does not override a requirement that the summons shall state the nature of the demand. Delaware Western Constr. Co. v. Farmers, etc., Nat. Bank, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 658, 77 S. W. 628. The nature of plaintiff's demand is sufficiently shown by a recital that it is a note, of specified date and amount, and on which defendant is liable. McAnally v. Vickry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 79 S. W. 857; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Erving, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 122; Hunt v. Wiley, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1214. A statement that it is on a note, and for foreclosure of a mortgage, is sufficient. Loungeway v. Hale, 73 Tex. 495, 11 S. W. 537. If notes are stated to have been made and delivered by defendants to plaintiffs, it is not necessary to also state that plaintiffs are the holders

9. STATEMENT OF THE RELIEF SOUGHT. Process is usually required to apprise defendant of the result consequent on his default,[40] as, in actions on contract for the recovery of money only, that if defendant fail to appear, judgment will be taken against him for a specified sum,[41] or, in other actions, that in such case plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint,[42] or that in such case default will be entered against him.[43] A substantial compliance with the statutory requirement is always sufficient.[44] It is sometimes required merely that the summons state the sum of money or other relief demanded,[45] or that there of the notes, or that they ask for a money judgment. Hinzie v. Kempner, 82 Tex. 617, 18 S. W. 659. A statement that the action was "trespass to try title and remove cloud from title, cancel deed, and for damages" is insufficient. Ford v. Baker, (Civ. App. 1896) 33 S. W. 1036. A statement that the action was for taxes does not support a default judgment foreclosing a tax lien. Netzorg v. Green, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 119, 62 S. W. 789.

Washington.— A statement that the action is brought to recover money due on a note particularly described, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure it, is a sufficient statement of the nature of the action. De Corvet v. Dolan, 7 Wash. 365, 35 Pac. 72, 1072.

be indorsed upon the summons the amount sued for.[46] The petition or statement of plaintiff's claim is sometimes required to be annexed to the process, in which case a mere folding inside of the writ is not sufficient.[47]

10. TESTE. The teste of process is the concluding clause commencing: "Witness the Honorable A. B., judge of said Circuit Court, etc.," or as the case may be.[48] It is generally considered a mere matter of form,[49] although it is frequently provided for in the state constitutions,[50] its only purpose being to give character and dignity to the process.[51] The teste is by some statutes required to be in the name of the judge,[52] by others in the name of the clerk.[53] Where it is provided that the summons may be subscribed by plaintiff to his attorney, and it is not required to issue from court, it need not be tested in the name of the presiding judge.[54] A writ must be tested in term-time.[55] A process cannot bear teste of a term after it issues, although it is returnable at a subsequent term.[56] Where a writ is sued out in vacation it must be tested as of the previous term.[57] The teste of a writ is not conclusive as to the time of its issuance.[58]

11. DATE. The date of the writ is not a material part of it,[59] and it may be entirely omitted without invalidating the writ.[60] A statutory requirement as to the date of process is directory merely.[61] While the writ is presumed to have been issued upon the day of its date,[62] the presumption is not a conclusive one, and the issuance at another time may be established by parol evidence,[63] even though such evidence may be in contradiction of the date which appears on the face of the writ as the date thereof.[64]

12. Signature. Unless the statute authorizes plaintiff or his attorney to issue process,[65] process by which suit is instituted must bear the official signature of some officer authorized to issue the same,[66] usually the clerk of the court;[67] but the clerk may authorize his signature to be made by another, or adopt it as his own after it has been made,[68] or he may adopt a printed signature.[69] It is sufficient if the clerk sign with the initials only of his christian name.[70] Where the teste contained the signature of the clerk, this was held a sufficient signing of the writ.[71] Signature by a deputy should be in the name of the clerk.[72] When plaintiff, or his attorney, may sign the summons, a printed subscription is held sufficient.[73] There is a difference of opinion among courts as to the effect of a want of proper signature,

E. Alteration of Process. Process may be altered without application to the court, before it has been served, either as to the return-day or place of trial.[9] But it has been held that a process server cannot strike the names of defendants from a process and insert others in their stead.[10]

F. Alias and Pluries Writs. An alias writ is a writ issued when one of the same kind has been issued before in the same cause.[11] A second writ, issued when the first has failed of its purpose.[12] It presupposes the existence of an original

Proc. § 417, was a mere irregularity and not a jurisdictional defect, so that defendant having known such office address and retained the summons could not have the service set aside and the judgment entered in the case vacated.

Change of attorney.— J, an attorney, sued out a writ for plaintiff, an infant. Next day it was agreed that B should be substituted as attorney, and plaintiff's agent, with J and B, went to the crown office, where, with the permission of the clerk, J's name was struck out and B's name inserted in the præcipe. The same change was made in the writ and copy before service. It was held that the alteration was unauthorized, and that the copy and service must be set aside, since the statute required the writ to be indorsed with the name and place of business of the attorney actually suing out the same. Issuance to another county.— In Texas it is provided by statute that where any process has not been returned or returned without service, or has been improperly served, the clerk shall upon application issue other process to the same or any other county as the party applying may direct, under this provision an alias process may be issued to a county other than that named as the residence of defendant in the petition and before amendment of the petition (Lauderdale v. R. & T. Concurrent writs may be issued under the English practice, bearing teste the same day as the original and remaining in force summons, and hence cannot be issued after the suit has been dismissed.[13] If the alias writ also proves ineffectual, other similiar writs may issue which are designated pluries writs.[14] Such a writ is but a continuance of the original process,[15] and every alias or pluries writ must be dated on the day of the return of the preceding process.[16] If the party permit a chasm in the proceedings to occur, by failing to continue the process regularly from term to term until service is had, it operates as a discontinuance of the action.[17] This rule is not, however, rigidly followed in some jurisdictions, but it is held that the issuance of alias and pluries writs is merely a matter of due diligence, and unless so much time is suffered to elapse as will amount to laches, there is no discontinuance of the suit.[18] Nor does the rule seem to be applicable in those jurisdictions where the action is commenced by the filing of plaintiff's complaint.[19] Service of the alias cannot relate back to the time of the issuing of the original, so as to validate any proceedings had meantime, the regularity of which depended upon defendant being before the court.[20] A return should regularly be made on the original writ, in order to show the necessity and propriety of an alias or pluries,[21] but a writ which has no proper basis as an alias

Reissuance of same process.— Although it is erroneous, after a summons has been served upon a portion of the defendants named and returned, to place such summons in the hands of an officer for further service upon the defendants not served, without an order of court directing such action, the irregularity will not render the service of the summons void. defendant not served, and issues a new summons as against such defendant, the fact that the new summons contains recitals as to the issuance and failure to serve the former process will not render it void.[30] The fact that an alias writ is returned "not found" as to a defendant who was served upon the original will not have the effect of vitiating such service.[31]

G. Supplying Lost Process. A copy of a writ which has been lost or destroyed may be supplied by evidence of its contents,[32] and may be ordered filed in lieu of the original, upon notice.[33] In some jurisdictions where a writ is lost plaintiff may in a proper case have leave to file a new writ.[34]

II. SERVICE.

A. In General.[35] Service of process is the giving of such actual or constructive notice thereof to defendant as makes him a party to the proceedings and compels him to appear or suffer judgment by default.[36] It is by service of process that the court obtains jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the rights of defendant as involved in the action brought.[37] The directions of the statute as to service must be obeyed, or no jurisdiction is acquired over the person named in the writ.[38] There are two general methods of making service, actual and constructive. Personal service is actual service; service by publication is constructive service; substituted service, by leaving a copy of the writ at defendant's usual place of abode, should probably be called actual service.[39] To obtain jurisdiction, service must be had, in some way, upon the very person against whom judgment is sought.[40]

B. Personal Service — 1. In General. Personal service ordinarily means service upon defendant personally, and does not include service by leaving a copy at defendant's usual place of abode.[41] But where the statute provides for service upon a corporation or individual by actually making service upon an officer or agent, such service is personal service upon such corporation or individual.[42] Personal service is the ordinary method of obtaining jurisdiction over the person of defendant,[43] and in the absence of a statute authorizing a substitute method, service must be personal.[44]

2. Amended and Alias Process. After service of process, a formal amendment does not require service of the amended process.[45] But if the original process is defective, and has been set aside or adjudged invalid, the amended process must be served.[46] The original summons need not be served with the alias.[47]

3. Procured by Fraud or Duress. Personal service obtained by inveigling or enticing a person or an officer of a corporation, into the territorial jurisdiction of the court, by means of fraudulent representations,[48] or by trick or device,[49] is

Where a person has voluntarily come within the jurisdiction, the fact that service is thereafter obtained upon him by fraud is not ground for setting it aside. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 377; Case v. Smith, 152 Fed. 730.

Pretense of settlement.— Securing presence within the jurisdiction for the ostensible purpose of arranging a settlement of existing controversy, but with the actual and undisclosed intent of serving process if the debtor does not settle, taints the service with fraud. void, and will be set aside. So also it is void if obtained by securing defendant's presence within the jurisdiction by means of criminal process,[50] or by the use of force.[51] The relief granted should be the setting aside of the service, not the dismissal of the action.[52]

4. Double Service. A second service of process does not waive the first service.[53] Nor can a second service within the county effect a shortening of time allowed a defendant because the first service was without the county.[54]

5. Service of Pleading With Process.[55] Statutes sometimes require a copy of plaintiff's complaint to be served with the writ, and such statutes are usually deemed mandatory, no jurisdiction being acquired in default of the service of such pleading.[56] But unless required by statute a copy of the complaint need not be served.[57]

For example if plaintiff by an agreement to try the case upon a certain day has secured service upon defendant, plaintiff's subsequent refusal to carry out the agreement entitles defendant to have the service set aside. Union Sugar Refinery v. Mathiesson, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14, 397, 2 Cliff. 304. A defendant who, knowing that a possible cause of action exists against him in a certain jurisdiction, voluntarily goes into such jurisdiction on business with third parties, takes the risk of being there discovered and served with process; and such service is not invalidated because plaintiff had knowledge that defendant would come within the jurisdiction and arranged to be notified when defendant should come, where no trick or device was resorted to for the purpose of inducing his coming. 6. Acceptance or Acknowledgment of Service. An acknowledgment or acceptance of service is the full equivalent of actual personal service [58] and renders such service unnecessary.[59] When made by a non-resident it seems to have the effect merely of personal service without the state,[60] although it has been said to be equivalent to personal service within the state; [61] and the acknowledgment may, by its terms, amount to a waiver of the want of jurisdiction in such case.[62] Defendant, by such acknowledgment, waives no right of defense.[63] The acknowledgment of service should be in writing and signed,[64] and while it is always good practice for the acknowledgment to show the time and place of service, the necessity of such showing depends upon the statute authorizing acknowledgment of service.[65] An attorney at law who acknowledges service on behalf of a defendant is presumed to have authority so to do,[66] but the authority of an agent or attorney in fact to make such an acknowledgment must be specially conferred and must be shown.[67] An acknowledgment of "due service" includes an acknowledgment both of a proper manner and a proper time of service.[68] An acknowl-

7. Authority or Capacity to Serve — a. In General. Statutes almost universally designate what persons shall have authority to serve process,[71] and it is necessary that the statute be observed in order that jurisdiction may be acquired;[72] but the writ itself is not invalidated by unauthorized service.[73] It has been held that at common law service outside of the state may be made by a private individual.[74] Under some statutes process may be served by the officer to whom it is directed or by any officer to whom it might have been directed.[75] But it would seem that where an officer can serve process only under particular circumstances he has no power to serve process not directed to him,[76] and it has been held that the circumstances rendering such service proper should appear from the record.[77]

b. Sheriff. As a general rule the sheriff is the officer primarily intrusted by statute with the duty of serving process.[78] But where he is a party, he is disqualified from serving process in the action,[79] and procession certain kinds of actions is sometimes required by statute to be served by other officers.[80] By statute the sheriff is sometimes permitted to serve process beyond the limits of his bailiwick.[81] A provision for service of process upon the sheriff by the coroner or the sheriff of the adjoining county does not prevent service on him of process from the justice's court by the constable.[82]

c. Deputies. Unless prohibited by statute, service may be made by an officer's deputy with the same effect as by the officer himself.[83] The personal disqualification of the principal to make service of process results in a similar disqualification of the deputy.[84] When the deputy is a party, service may be made upon him by

Character of disqualification.— In Minott v. Vineyard, 11 Iowa 90, 93, the court said: "Cases may arise where the sheriff is disqualified, when the deputy could act. Thus, his principal, or by another deputy;[85] but it is improper for a deputy who is a party to the action, to himself serve the process.[86] A deputy may serve process already in his hands, although his principal has been removed.[87]

d. Persons Specially Deputized or Authorized. A person who is not an officer cannot ordinarily serve process unless specially authorized or deputized.[88] In many states, however, it is provided in general terms by statute that private persons may serve process.[89] A sheriff may appoint a special deputy to execute a particular process,[90] without any express authority derived from statute or otherwise.[91] Such appointment should properly be in writing indorsed upon the writ, but may be by verbal command if accompanied by delivery of the writ.[92] The authority conferred may be limited in its exercise to a particular locality.[93] Statutes commonly provide for service by properly deputized private persons in case the officers who would normally serve the process are not available.[94] The court if the sheriff should be sick, absent from the county, or the like, and should have a deputy, it would be improper to direct the writ to the coroner. . . . But such deputy cannot act where the disqualification applies to the sheriff personally, as that he is interested, prejudiced, or the like."

Estoppel.— "If the plaintiff is willing that the process should go into the hands of the defendant, and the defendant is willing to receive it and accept service, the latter cannot afterward be heard to make any objection on the ground of irregularity. And so if the defendant's deputy receive the process and serve it upon the principal, and the latter does not make the objection in limine, he should not be permitted afterward to say that his deputy had done an illegal act." In Vermont, before the rule was changed by statute, the appointment of a special officer to serve process was held to be a judicial act, which could only be exercised by the authority issuing the process (Dolbear v. Hancock, 19 Vt. 388; Ross v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 265, 36 Am. Dec. 342; Bebee v. Steel, 2 Vt. 314), and could not be delegated (Kelly v. Paris, 10 Vt. 261, 33 Am. Dec. 199). And it follows from this that such an appointment upon a blank writ is void, since the judicial officer making the appointment must consider not only the person, but the occasion and the particular case. has inherent power to appoint a special officer to execute its process.[95] It is always proper, and sometimes required, that the special authority be indorsed upon the process.[96] The authority to serve an original will not extend to the service of an alias.[97] The circumstances which render the special appointment proper need not be recited in the appointment,[98] and it will be presumed that the person making service was properly authorized so to do until the contrary appears.[99]

e. Party, or Person Interested. Process cannot be executed by any person in his own favor,[1] nor by an attorney;[2] and this rule applies to officers as well as to other persons.[3] If, however, service be made by plaintiff, it is a mere irregularity, rendering the service voidable but not void.[4] Only an indifferent person may properly be authorized to serve process.[5] If by statute any person not a party may serve the summons,[6] plaintiff's attorney is competent.[7] So is plaintiff's

8. Place of Service. The general rule is that valid service of process cannot be made upon a defendant outside the territorial jurisdiction of the court, so as to confer jurisdiction over the person.[11] But many modifications of the rule have been introduced by statute.[12] Thus, service in another county within the state is sometimes declared valid when defendant has removed from the county where the action was commenced after such commencement;[13] it is usually valid in the case of an action against joint defendants where one of them has been properly served in the county of venue;[14] it is sometimes declared valid, within the limits of the state, when defendant has no permanent residence in any particular county;[15] and it is sometimes valid when the cause of action accrued within the county of venue.[16] While statutes frequently provide for the service of process outside the state, such service cannot give the court jurisdiction to render a personal judgment.[17] If a non-resident is found within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, personal service may be made upon him with the same effect as though he were a resident, unless his presence is under circumstances which render him privileged.[18]

commenced is a nullity.[28] Service should not be made on Sunday [29] or on a day expressly excepted by statute.[30] Statutes sometimes make special provision for service in designated cases of emergency, when defendant is about to remove out of the state.[31] Under some statutes the filing of the complaint must precede the service of summons, but under others this is not required.[32]

b. Computing Time.[33] The rules of computing time are not quite uniform in the different states. It is commonly said that in computing time, when service is required to be made a certain number of days before the return-day, the day of service should be excluded and the day of the return should be included.[34] It is also said that either the return-day or the day of service is to be excluded, which amounts to the same thing.[35] If the day of service be included and the return-day excluded, as held by some courts, the result is likewise the same.[36] Under some statutes, however, both the day of service and the return-day are to be excluded.[37]

c. Extending Time. The court has power, unless limited by statute, to extend the time for making service of process, on good cause shown.[38]

10. Manner of Service — a. In General. To constitute a good personal service of any kind, defendant must, in some substantial form, be apprised of the fact that service is intended to be made.[39] Personal service cannot be made by

The expression "clear days," when applied to the time for a notice, is very well understood. It means the days included between the day of service and the day for the performance of the act, or the happening of the event, to which the notice relates — in common terms, the first and last days are both excluded. This is the meaning of the term "clear days," and it is the only meaning. Nordheimer v. Shaw, 8 Can. L. J. N. S. 283.

mail.[40] In the absence of statutory direction as to the method of making personal service of process, such service should be by reading the original to defendant.[41] But statutes almost universally regulate the mode of service.[42] The usual methods prescribed are reading the writ to defendant,[43] or delivering to him a copy,[44] or by both methods,[45] or by either;[46] although other things are frequently required, such as producing the original and making known to defendant the contents of the writ,[47] reading the petition as well as the writ to defendant,[48] etc.[49] The statute must in all cases be strictly followed in order that the court may acquire jurisdiction over defendant,[50] although it has been held that statutory requisites may be waived by defendant.[51] And if all that the law requires is done, the doing of additional superfluous acts will not vitiate the service.[52]

b. In Case of Several Defendants. Where there are several defendants the service must be complete and entire as to each;[53] but in case of joint debtors or partners, if process is issued against all and is served on one or more, but others cannot be found, the statutes usually provide that plaintiff may proceed against those served, and, if successful, have judgment against all.[54] Such a judgment will be enforced as to the joint property of all and the separate property of those served, but will not bind personally those not served.[55]

c. The Copy Delivered. The copy should be substantially correct, but is not to be construed with the same strictness as the original.[56] The copy need not contain any indorsement by the sheriff, but is sufficient if it contains all that was put on the summons by the clerk.[57] Clerical errors in the copy delivered will not affect the jurisdiction of the court, where defendant has not been misled thereby.[58] Thus, designating the wrong month for the term when the mistake is an obvious one,[59] giving a wrong day of the month as the return-day, when same is fixed by law,[60] the omission of words of surplusage,[61] giving the wrong year when same is obviously an impossible date,[62] the lack of the file number of the case,[63] the want of the signature of the officer who issued it,[64] and the omission of the date of the summons [65] are at most mere irregularities. The seal of the court upon the original need not be copied upon the copy of the summons.[66] A revenue stamp on the original is no essential part of the writ, and its presence need not be indicated on the copy.[67] If by mistake the original instead of a copy be delivered to or left for defendant this will not affect the service.[68] If a single defendant is sued in more than one capacity, he need not be served with more than one copy of the writ.[69]

d. Refusal to Receive Service. Where a defendant upon whom service of process by copy is sought to be made refuses to receive the copy offered, the person or officer making the service should inform him of the nature of the paper and of his purpose to make service thereof, and deposit it in some appropriate place in his presence or where it will be most likely to come into his possession.[70] If service is sought to be made by reading and defendant refuses to hear it read, the offer to read it is sufficient to constitute a good service.[71] But the officer has no right to use force in serving civil process.[72]

C. Substituted Service — 1. In General. By substituted service is meant service by leaving a copy of the process at the residence or abode or place of business of defendant. Such service, when made upon residents, should probably be deemed actual service, and has frequently been called personal service or the equivalent of personal service,[73] although it has also been designated constructive service.[74] Service upon the agent or attorney of defendant, and service by mail, are also regarded as substituted service, although they are usually authorized under more restricted conditions. Such service is usually considered the equivalent of personal service and gives the court jurisdiction over the person of defendant.[75] In England the courts have been given large discretion in authorizing substituted service in such manner as they may deem fit,[76] but as a condition to the exercise of such discretion it must first be shown by affidavit that every means of effecting personal service has been exhausted,[77] and if the party is not subject to personal service, substituted service cannot be permitted.[78] Similar rules as to substituted service have been adopted in Canada.[79] Statutes authorizing substituted service are to be strictly construed.[80]

2. Service by Leaving Copy at Defendant's Residence — a. In General. Service by the leaving of a copy of the process at defendant's residence or place of abode is exclusively a statutory proceeding, and is almost universally provided for as a method to be used in certain cases.[81] If all that the statute requires is done, it is immaterial that defendant in fact receives no actual notice thereof;[82] and conversely, if the statute is not complied with it is of no avail that defendant does in fact receive actual notice of the action.[83]

b. When Authorized. Substituted service is to be used only when defendant cannot be found personally.[84] It is frequently provided for in cases where defendant seeks to evade personal service.[85] It cannot be employed against non-residents,[86] although some statutes have even declared the method proper where defendant once was a resident but had ceased to be such at the time of the service.[87]

An affidavit on knowledge and belief that defendant was within the state and avoiding service made by plaintiff's attorney is insufficient when the sources of such knowledge and belief were not stated. Nichols v. Emmett, 56 Misc. (N. Y.) 321, 107 N. Y. Suppl. 663.

Sufficiency of showing.—Averments in an affidavit to the effect that the affiant had at specified times called at the residence of defendant, and, on stating that he had a paper for her, was informed at such times by servants and others, that she was in, but was told by her father that he, affiant, could not see her, authorize an order directing a substituted service of the summons and complaint, under N. Variance between order and summons.—A substituted service of a summons under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435, 436, by mailing and posting on the door of defendant's residence, is substantially irregular where plaintiff is truly named as "Gilson F. Farrington" in the affidavit and order for substituted service, and "George F. Farrington" in the summons. Farrington v. Muchmore, 52 N. Y. App. Div. 247, 65 N. Y. The reason for the distinction made between the correction of the name of plaintiff and of the name of a defendant under such circumstances, considered.

The term "house of his usual abode" means a person's customary dwelling-place or resi-

ness,[93] or at the dwelling-house of another person,[94] or at a house or hotel where he was temporarily stopping,[95] or at his former dwelling-house after his removal therefrom,[96] or in defendant's berth in a steamer upon which he has taken passage,[97] or in a part of the house which he does not inhabit or frequent,[98] or at any other place,[99] is insufficient. Some statutes further provide for the leaving of the writ at some public place at defendant's dwelling,[1] or at some obvious part of the house,[2] or that a copy of the writ may be posted upon the front door of his usual place of abode.[3] If the statute authorizes posting upon "the front door," a return showing posting upon "the door" does not show a valid service.[4] The question whether a defendant resides at a certain place is a question of fact, and he is shown to have once resided there, such residence will be presumed to have continued, in the absence of any showing to the contrary.[5]

Leaving process in yard.— Leaving a process with a member of defendant's family, at a distance of one hundred and twenty feet from his dwelling, but in the yard of the dwelling, was not a sufficient service under a statute prescribing that, in the absence of a defendant, the process should be left with some member of his family "at the dwelling-house of such defendant." d. With Whom Copy May Be Left. It is usually provided that the copy may be left only with certain designated persons, as a member of defendant's family, or a person over a certain age living at the house, or a person of suitable age and discretion, resident therein, etc., and these provisions must be strictly observed.[6] Even though the statute is silent as to the age of the person with whom the copy shall be left, it must be construed to mean a person of such age as would understand what was intended to be done with the summons.[7] If the statute requires the writ to be left with a member of defendant's family, it is sufficient to leave it with a member of the family in which he resides, where he has no family of his own.[8] Unless the statute provides otherwise, it is sufficient to leave the copy at defendant's residence while he and his family are absent from the county.[9]

e. Informing Recipient as to Contents. A provision of the statute that the person with whom the writ is left shall be informed of its contents is mandatory.[10]

f. Publication. Under some statutes a resident defendant who is, at the time of such service, out of the state, is entitled to further notice by publication;[11] but under other statutes no further notice is necessary.[12]

The term "family," as used in the act, regulating the service of process, is not confined to persons under defendant's control or in his employ; thus, a widowed mother, who resides with her son, is a member of his family, within the meaning of the statute. Ellington v. Moore, 17 Mo. 424. Under the code of procedure, service of process may be made upon two minor defendants by leaving a copy with their mother as a member of the family of each. Weber v. Weber, 49 Mo. 45. Va. Code (1887), § 3207 (Va. Code (1904), p. 1684), authorizes substituted service by delivering a copy at defendant's usual place of abode, and giving information of its purport to his wife or any person found there, "who is a member of his family," and above the age of sixteen years. It was held that such section should be construed as requiring that the wife should be a member of defendant's family in order to be entitled to receive the process, so that a return showing service by leaving a copy with defendant's wife, but not stating that she was a member of defendant's family, is insufficient. King v. Davis, 137 Fed. 198 [affirmed in 157 Fed. 676, 85 C. C. A. 348].

Person living in the house.—Under La. Code Pr. art. 189, authorizing constructive service of process upon defendant by leaving it at his domicile, with a person of suitable age, "living in the house," a citation served upon a person other than defendant, who is only transiently at defendant's domicile, and does not reside there, is fatally defective. Lewis v. Smith, 24 La. Ann. 617.

made in their behalf during their absence from the state.[19] Under the civil law the codes sometimes allow the service of citation upon an officer known as a curator ad hoc appointed to represent an absentee defendant in suits concerning interests in property.[20] But the process must in all these cases run against the principal as defendant, and not against the agent or attorney.[21]

4. Service by Mail. Service by mail is provided for in some statutes, and, as in other forms of statutory service, a strict compliance with the terms of the statute is necessary.[22]

5. The Copy Served. Inasmuch as there appears to be no substantial difference in the rules as to the sufficiency of copies of process delivered and those left at the residence, this subject has been treated in full in connection with personal service.[23]

D. Service by Publication — 1. In General. Statutes everywhere exist authorizing constructive service of process by publication in certain cases where personal service cannot be had.[24] These statutes are in derogation of the common law and hence are to be strictly construed and literally observed.[25]

2. Actions in Which Such Service May Be Employed. The statutes usually provide in substance that such service may be made by publication in all actions which have for their immediate object the enforcement or establishment of claims to or rights in specific real or personal property which is subject to the jurisdiction of the court, although they are frequently much more detailed and cover specific-

A township which fails to elect, or permit or allow its trustee, clerk or treasurer to qualify or designate, some person on whom service can be made, does not "conceal" itself, within the meaning of Kan. Code, §§ 429, 440, so as to permit service by publication. Brockway v. Oswego Tp., 32 Kan. 221, 4 Pac. 79.

Refusal of admission.— The mere failure by two different persons, on the same day, to obtain admittance to the apartments occupied by persons on whom summons is sought to be served is not sufficient to show an intent to avoid service. Foster v. Moore, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 526, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 1089.

Openly avoiding service of a summons by eluding the approach of the officer is not keeping concealed, within a provision authorizing a service by publication on defendant, being a resident of the state and keeping himself concealed with intent to avoid the service of the summons. within the state.[57] The person sought to be served by publication must be a necessary or proper party.[58] Unknown defendants are summoned by publication under separate statutes authorizing such proceedings.[59]

4. Character of the Jurisdiction Acquired. It may be said as a general rule that where suit is brought to determine a non-resident defendant's personal rights and obligations, that is, where it is purely in personam, service by publication is ineffectual for any purpose, since no personal judgment can be rendered in such case;[60] but such service, when authorized by statute, is effectual so far as the proceeding is in rem, or quasi in rem, and gives the court jurisdiction over property within its territorial jurisdiction.[61] In proceedings quasi in rem the court usually acquires jurisdiction by attaching the property of defendant, whereas in proceedings strictly in rem no seizure of the property is necessary for jurisdictional purposes.[62] Some statutes do not limit the use of service by publication against non-residents to actions in the nature of proceedings in rem, but while such service may be employed as provided by statute in proceedings in personam, it will not result in giving the court jurisdiction if defendant does not appear.[63] Service by publication may be sufficient to give jurisdiction over the person of a resident defendant,[64] although it has been held that such a proceeding does not constitute due process of law where defendant can be found within the state.[65]

5. Prerequisites to Service by Publication — a. In General. The existence of facts disclosing the right, under the statute, to make service by publication, should appear on the files and records of the court, and the form in which this showing is to be made, like the substance of the showing itself, is a matter regulated by statute. There is a good deal of variety in this respect among the statutes of various jurisdictions.[66]

b. Return of Not Found. Under some statutes a summons must be issued and returned "not found" before publication may be resorted to,[67] while under other statutes this is not necessary.[68] Again, such service and return, under other statutes, is necessary only when defendant is or is supposed to be a resident.[69] Some statutes require such return in the case of joint defendants, some of whom are within and some without the jurisdiction, in order to authorize service by publication.[70] A return of not found in order to form the foundation for publication must not be made until the time has expired within which personal service might be had;[71] but publication need not take place at once thereafter, and an interim of several months between the return and the publication has been held

Attachment not indispensable.— "A writ of attachment is the usual and familiar method of conferring jurisdiction in such cases, but is not the only one. There is no magic about the writ which should make it the exclusive remedy. The same legislative power which provided it, can devise some other, and declare that it shall have the same force and effect. . . . The legislature could, therefore, substitute the service of summons by publication founded on affidavit that the defendant had property subject to the process of the court, for the writ of attachment, and give the court power to pronounce a judgment which should be effectual against such property." not to affect the validity of the latter,[72] although an unreasonable and unexplained delay may destroy the right to resort to publication.[73]

c. Filing Petition or Declaration. It is sometimes provided that a declaration or complaint must be filed before publication can be made, or an order therefor be given;[74] and this pleading is under some statutes required or permitted to contain a showing of facts disclosing the right to constructive service.[75] But unless required by statute such filing is not necessary as a prerequisite to service by publication.[76] If the petition must first be filed, it is in some states essential that it shall disclose a cause of action of which the court has jurisdiction.[77] Under some statutes it may appear either by affidavit or by a verified complaint or file that a cause of action exists,[78] or that defendant is a non-resident.[79] In some jurisdictions the petition on which service by publication is ordered must be sworn to.[80]

d. Affidavit For Order of Publication — (i) Necessity. It is almost universally provided that, as a prerequisite to service by publication, an affidavit shall be made and filed, showing the existence of facts authorizing recourse to that statutory substitute for personal service.[81] An affidavit may be sufficient even if made in another action.[82] It must be sufficient as to each one of the defendants sought to be served.[83] No presumptions can be indulged to sustain it when directly attacked.[84]

(II) Who May Make. The statute frequently provides by whom the affidavit shall be made, whether by the party or his attorney or other person, and when there is such specific provision an affidavit is invalid if made by any one not so authorized.[85] If the statute makes no provision in regard to the matter, an affidavit by plaintiff,[86] or his attorney,[87] is sufficient, and it is not necessary in the latter case that the means of knowledge of the affiant should be stated.[88]

(III) Form of Affidavit. The affidavit must be properly sworn to,[89] and contain a proper jurat,[90] and it may ordinarily be made anywhere, within or without the state.[91] The want of a venue will not vitiate it if it clearly appears in what court, state, and county the case is pending,[92] although it has been held, on the contrary, that a venue is absolutely essential to a valid affidavit;[93] and an affidavit wrongly entitled in the cause has been declared fatally defective.[94] A verified complaint is an affidavit, and if it contains the necessary facts, will sustain an order for publication under a statute requiring an affidavit,[95] and a verified complaint referred to in an affidavit may be looked to as part of the affidavit;[96] but a complaint not so referred to is valueless for the purpose of supplying material facts omitted from the affidavit.[97] Mere clerical errors will not vitiate the affidavit.[98]

has a good cause of action against defendant named.[23] A substantial difference between the cause of action described in the affidavit and that disclosed in the complaint will render the publication ineffectual to confer jurisdiction.[24] If the residence of defendant is stated as accurately as it is known, that is sufficient;[25] if the town is given the street and number need not be added.[26] Some cases have held that a showing of facts as to residence and actual abode from which it is clear that nothing would have resulted from a diligent effort to obtain personal service within the state will take the place of the showing which the statute requires that defendant, after due diligence, cannot be found within the state.[27] It is sometimes held unnecessary for the affidavit to show defendant has property in the state, although such fact must always exist in order that a judgment may be valid and effectual;[28] where it is necessary to show that defendants have property in the state, the affidavit should specify the property.[29] Defendant sought to be served by publication must be properly named in the affidavit.[30]

(v) How Facts Should Be Stated. When the requirement of the statute is in the form of a conclusion, such as that defendant cannot after due diligence be found, or that he is a necessary party to the action, etc., the affidavit should not merely use the words of the statute, but should set up the evidence which tends to show the existence of what the statute requires;[31] but some cases hold

"To illustrate: It is not sufficient to state generally, that after due diligence the defendant cannot be found within the state, or that the plaintiff has a good cause of action against him, or that he is a necessary party; but the acts constituting due diligence, or the facts showing that he is a necessary party, should be stated. To hold that a bald repetition of the statute is sufficient, is to strip the Court or Judge to whom the application is made of all judicial functions and allow the party himself to determine in his own way the existence of jurisdictional facts — a practice too dangerous to the rights of defendants to admit of judicial toleration." Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149, 154. An affidavit for publication of a summons against non-residents recited that they had been sought for to obtain service, but after diligent search and inquiry could not be found within the state. It then proceeded to show the kind of search and inquiry that had been made; that the affiant had made inquiry of all persons from whom he could expect to obtain information as to the residence of defendants, together with the names of the persons of whom he made inquiries, and why he expected them to know of defendant's whereabouts, and it was held that the affidavit constituted a substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 412, authorizing service by publication where the person sought to be served "cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state," although the affidavit failed to expressly state the result of the affiant's inquiries. Distinction between absence and insufficiency of evidence.— "There is a marked distinction between an affidavit which presents some evidence on a vital point, but clearly of a character too unsatisfactory to justify an order for publication of summons based upon it, and an affidavit which presents no evidence at all tending to prove the essential fact. In the former case the judge might be satisfied upon very slender and inconclusive testimony; but there being some appreciable evidence of a legal character, which calls into action the judgment of the judge, he has jurisdiction to consider and pass upon it. He may be wholly and egregiously wrong in his conclusion upon the weight of the evidence, but he has jurisdiction to act upon it, and his action is simply erroneous. . . . If, how-

by the sheriff may be sufficient evidence of due diligence,[36] or that defendant cannot be found,[37] to satisfy the court, but if the statute requires the showing to be made by affidavit, the return must be incorporated or referred to in the affidavit.[38] Affidavits upon information and belief are frequently declared to be insufficient,[39] although many cases permit their use, on the ground that they nevertheless constitute some evidence upon which the court may base its jurisdiction to order a publication.[40] If facts are stated upon information and belief, the sources of information or grounds of belief should be given.[41] Affidavits as to non-residence and due diligence in attempting to find defendant may consist of hearsay evidence;[42] but this is not allowable in affidavits purporting to show that plaintiff has a good cause of action.[43]

e. Order For Publication. The order directs what shall be done pursuant to obtaining service by publication, and the requisites of such order are prescribed by statute and should be substantially observed.[44] Under some statutes the court ever, there is a total want of evidence on any point necessary to be determined . . . then there is nothing upon which he is authorized to act; the evidence, which is the very basis of his jurisdiction, and upon which it depends, is wanting, and his action is without authority. . . . In one case there is a defect of jurisdiction; in the other there is only an error of judgment." Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342, 349. See also Staples v. Fairchild, 3 N. Y. 41.

makes no order, and the mere filing of the affidavit at once gives the right to publish;[45] but an order of the court for publication of summons is usually required before such publication can lawfully be made.[46] Occasionally the statute authorizes the clerk of the court[47] or the judge out of court[48] to make the order. Authority to issue the order rests upon a proper affidavit or other record showing the existence of the facts required by statute.[49] If the facts required by the statute are properly stated in the affidavit, the right to an order for publication is absolute, and it is immaterial whether or not such statements are true,[50] and similarly, if the affidavit is not sufficient, other affidavits tending to show the existence of the requisite facts are ineffectual to support the jurisdiction.[51] The statute very commonly provides that the requisite facts shall be shown by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court.[52] The order must be in conformity to the affidavit,[53] and it must purport to be based upon some ground set forth therein.[54] But the Effect of prior order.— The validity of an order of publication is not destroyed by the existence of a prior order of publication, where, on a motion to vacate it for insufficiency of the affidavits, plaintiff, out of caution, procured such second order. order need not recite a finding of the jurisdictional facts which are required to appear in the affidavit.[55] If the statute contemplates the issuance of the summons before the order for publication is made, an order is void which is made prior thereto.[56] The order must be based on facts existing at the time it is made,[57] or so near such time that it may reasonably be presumed that no change has meanwhile taken place.[58] The order should ordinarily direct that the service of summons be made by publication in a newspaper for a designated period within a specified time;[59] it should designate the paper in which publication is to be made,[60] and should state that such paper is a newspaper;[61] if there is no such requirement in the statute, such designation will nevertheless not vitiate the order,[62] and generally speaking redundant recitals will not affect the validity of the order.[63] It is frequently provided that the order shall direct a copy of the summons to be deposited in the post-office addressed to defendant at his last place of residence unless it shall appear that such residence is unknown and cannot, with reasonable diligence, be ascertained.[64] If more than one method is allowed by statute, at Designation by plaintiff's counsel.— Under the Missouri statute plaintiff's counsel is required to designate the newspaper in which publication shall be made. Hansford v. Hansford, 34 Mo. App. 262.

Newspaper most likely to afford notice.— If the statute provides that publication shall be in a newspaper most likely to give notice to defendant, the order need not so describe the designated paper. Seaver v. Fitzgerald, 23 Cal. 85; Calvert v. Calvert, 15 Colo. 390, 24 Pac. 1043.

Direction as to mailing.— Under N. Y. Code, § 135, subd. 5, requiring that the order for the publication of a summons must direct a copy of the summons and complaint to be forthwith deposited in the post-office, directed to the person to be served at his residence, an order merely directing that a copy of the summons and complaint be deposited in the post-office, addressed to defendant, is insufficient. Hyatt v. Wagenright, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 248. But compare Colfax Bank v. Richardson, 34 Oreg. 518, 54 Pac. 359, 75 Am. St. Rep. 664. An order for the service of summons on a non-resident by publication, which fails to designate the post-office in which copies of the summons, complaint, and order shall be deposited for transmission to defendant, as required by N. Y. Code Civ.

the option of plaintiff, the order is sufficient if it directs any one.[65] The name of defendant must correctly appear in the order,[66] but a new defendant may be added without obtaining a new order.[67] When an entry of the order upon the court records is required, such entry in due form is not jurisdictional,[68] although a provision that the order must be filed on or before the first day of publication must be complied with to confer jurisdiction.[69] No entry is necessary unless the statute provides that it shall be made.[70] An inadvertent failure to sign the order is a mere irregularity.[71] Judicial discretion in granting an order for publication cannot be questioned on appeal where a sufficient showing of facts has been made to call into exercise the judicial mind.[72] An order for service by publication cannot be impeached collaterally if the judge making the order has jurisdiction to make it.[73]

6. Mode and Sufficiency of Service by Publication — a. In General. The means and methods provided by statute for obtaining service by publication must be strictly followed, since the whole proceeding is in derogation of the common law.[74]

Proc. § 440, is insufficient. Walter v. De Graaf, 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 406. Under a statute requiring that an order of publication must contain a direction that on or before the date of the first publication plaintiff deposit in a specified post-office one or more sets of copies of the summons, complaint, and order, an order directing that the summons be served by publication, and by mailing copies of said "summons and complaint," addressed to defendant at his last place of residence, West Eighty-Third street, said publication and mailing to be commenced within three months from the date, was void, because it did not require a copy of the order, as well as of the summons and complaint, to be served, and did not specify the post-office in which they were to be deposited, and did not require them to be mailed on or before the first day of the first publication. McCool v. Boller, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 73.

Defect cured.— A defect in the order of the judge, in failing to direct a copy of the petition as well as of the notice to be mailed to defendant, was held to be cured by plaintiff's mailing a copy of the petition. Lyon v. Comstock, 9 Iowa 306. But an order directing copies to be mailed to an incorrect address is not cured by personal service upon defendant outside of the jurisdiction. Beaupre v. Brigham, 79 Wis. 436, 48 N. W. 596.

For example "The Washington Trust Co." for "The Washington Trust Company of the City of New York" has been held insufficient. Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co., 54 Fed. 1. In a suit against several defendants, publication was ordered against two of them on proper affidavit of non-residence and the publication actually made was against all of defendants, but it was held that it was ineffective as against defendants not specified in the order. Pomeroy v. Betts, 31 Mo. 419. But "Mary E. Byers" for "Mary Ann Byers" has been held sufficient after appearance. Beckner v. McLinn, 107 Mo. 277, 17 S. W. 819. In an order for publication, a clerical mistake in naming one of the defendants as "Albert," instead of "Alfred," is not sufficient to vitiate the service, where the affidavit and copies of the order, and the summons and notice served on defendant, contained the correct name. b. The Notice Published. The matter to be published varies in the different jurisdictions, the statute in each state providing exactly of what it shall consist.[75] In some states the summons is required to be published,[76] in others the clerk is required to prepare a warning order which is published,[77] in others there is published merely a designated notice.[78] In determining the sufficiency of the summons, order, or notice published, the substantial rather than technical and literal requirements of the statute are to be observed.[79] The published notice must give defend-

Sufficiency.— A warning order against nonresident defendants, husband and wife, which recites "the defendant," followed by the husband's name, followed by the abbreviation, "etc.," without mentioning the name of the wife, "warned to appear," etc., is void as to the wife and she is not brought into court thereby. Statement of cause of action.— Under a statute requiring a "brief statement of the cause of action" to be made, when service is had by publication, a detailed and specific statement is not required, and a misdescription of a date, not likely to mislead, is not a fatal defect. The description of the residence of a defendant as St. Louis, Mo., is sufficient, in a notice for constructive service by publication, without the addition of street address, it not appearing that plaintiff has more definite knowledge of defendant's residence, and defendant's name in the notice being one so uncommon that it may reasonably be assumed that post-office officials in the city named can readily find such defendant, and deliver the newspaper containing such notice, when sent pursuant to the statute. Sufficiency of publication.— "Publication for three successive weeks in a weekly newspaper," means three successive publications in a weekly newspaper, and not publication for twenty-one days. Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 168 Ind. 360, 81 N. E. 65; Swett v. Sprague, 55 Me. 190; Alexander v. Alexander, 26 Nebr. 68, 41 N. W. 1065. Under Cal. Pr. Act, § 31, requiring summons to be published once a week for three months, if the last day of the publication is in the same week in which the three months expires, it is sufficient, although this day is less than three months from the first day of publication. Savings, etc., Soc. v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 347.

Where service by publication is not made sufficient time before the return-term of the writ, such service is good for the succeeding term. In principle the case does not differ from the case of personal service less than five days before the return-term. Hill v. Baylor, 23 Tex. 261.

that a given number of weeks shall intervene between the first and last publication where the statute provides for publication once a week for that number of weeks,[90] but publication must be made once in each of the weeks provided by the statute.[91] The word "month" will be taken to mean calendar month in the absence of a legislative definition.[92] Publication for a longer period than that prescribed will not impair the validity of the service.[93] It is of no consequence that one of the publications is made on a legal holiday.[94] Publication must be made for the required number of times in the same paper.[95]

d. Place of Publication. The statutes of the different states designate in various ways what newspapers may be employed as mediums of publication. Thus it is frequently provided that publication shall be made in a newspaper designated by the court as most likely to give notice to the person served,[96] in a newspaper published and having a bona fide circulation in the county in which the proceedings are had,[97] in a secular newspaper of general circulation published in the city, town, or county,[98] in a newspaper designated by plaintiff, printed or published in the county where the petition is filed,[99] in a newspaper of general circulation printed in the English language and published in the county,[1] in a newspaper selected by the governor,[2] etc.[3] Service is void if publication is made in any other paper than

"The month mentioned in said statutes is a calendar month, and not a lunar month. Under the contention of the appellant the publication of the summons in said paper was made for twenty-nine days only — less than a month. This presupposes that the last issue of the paper, unlike the preceding four issues, answered for only one day. That contention is incorrect." Forsman v. Bright, 8 Ida. 467, 470, 69 Pac. 473.

St. (1899) § 581, declares that service on a non-resident by publication may be had by publishing the notice in some newspaper published in the county where suit is instituted, if there be a paper published there, and if not, then in some paper published in the state. The act of the general assembly, approved April 28, 1877 (Laws (1877), p. 215), and the act amendatory thereof approved April 22, 1879 (Laws 1879), p. 84), gave the circuit court sitting at the city of P exclusive jurisdiction in all suits arising in a certain part of M county, and it was held that the circuit court at P could not obtain jurisdiction by publication in a newspaper issued in that part of the county other than that in which such court held jurisdiction under the act of 1877, as amended by the act of 1879, where there was a newspaper published in that part of the county in which it did have jurisdiction. one designated by or pursuant to the statute.[4] If no newspaper is printed or published in the county, publication may under some statutes be made in a newspaper published in an adjoining county,[5] or in any newspaper published in the state.[6] A newspaper is deemed to be "printed" within the county where it is issued, notwithstanding that a portion of it is in fact printed in another state.[7] If the statute requires the paper to be published in the county it is immaterial where it is printed.[8] Where a notice is published in the paper intended by the order it is sufficient, although there has been an error in the designation of the paper in the order.[9]

e. Concurrent Requirements. Statutes frequently provide for other methods of reaching the attention of defendant to be used in addition to and concurrent with the publication. Thus a notice is sometimes required to be posted on the court-house door,[10] and it is very commonly required that when the residence of defendant is known, a copy of the notice, order, or summons, and sometimes of plaintiff's first pleading, shall be sent to him at such address by mail.[11] If an order of the court is necessary directing such mailing, a notice mailed before the making of the order is ineffectual.[12] The proper address must be used,[13] and the notice must be mailed from the post-office designated in the order.[14] Any one may deposit the notice in the post-office.[15] If required to be deposited in the post-office "forthwith," it is sufficient if done within a reasonable time.[16] If there are two or more defendants, a separate notice must be mailed to each of the defendants sought to be served.[17]

f. Personal Service Outside State. Personal service outside the state is frequently provided for by statute as a substitute for and an equivalent to service by publication,[18] but no jurisdiction over the person of defendant is acquired thereby unless defendant actually appears.[19] The procedure is wholly statutory,[20] and the provisions of the statute must be observed as carefully as in case of service by publication.[21] Only the summons need be served, where the statute does not also require service of the affidavit, order, or complaint.[22] It is usually held that all necessary steps to secure the right to service by publication must be taken, and such service duly ordered, before personal service without the state may be resorted to,[23] and the summons served must be the same summons ordered to be published.[24] But it is unnecessary also to mail a copy of the summons where such personal service is had.[25] If the order provides in the alternative for both publication and personal service without the state, a defect in the former part of the order will not affect the validity of service had under the latter part.[26]

Contrary view.— "The learned counsel for appellant . . . contend that, before service can be made without the State, an affidavit must be filed that personal service cannot be made within the State, as provided by section 2832, when service is to be made by publication; and this, because actual personal service without the State only supersedes the necessity of publication. The whole argument, however, is answered by the single statement that the true construction of section 2835 is that personal service without the State supersedes the necessity of service by publication. In other words, that the word 'publication' as used in that section means not only or merely the act of publishing the notice for four weeks in the paper, but also the other acts, both preceding and following that, which the statute requires in order to make a completed service by publication. So that when personal service is made without the State, it is not necessary either to file the affidavit that service cannot be made within the State nor to procure the designation in writing by the clerk, nor to file the affidavit, etc., with the clerk." England and Canada.— In England the entire subject of service outside the jurisdiction

7. Time When Service Is Complete. The service is in some states complete as soon as the paper containing the last publication is issued,[27] but in others the full statutory number of days or weeks must expire before service is deemed complete.[28] When personal service outside the state is resorted to as a substitute for publication, the service is in some states held not complete until the expiration of the time provided for publication,[29] although other courts hold that such service is complete as soon as personal service is in fact made.[30]

E. Privileges and Exemptions[31]— 1. Persons in Presence of the Court. It is a well-settled rule of the common law that service of a summons upon any person interested in a cause in the presence of the court in which it is being tried is covered by Order XI of the Rules of the Supreme Court. Such service is allowed in case: (1) The subject-matter of the action is land situated within the jurisdiction; (2) the action relates to any act, deed, contract or liability affecting such land; (3) relief is sought against any person domiciled within the jurisdiction; (4) the action is brought for the administration of the personal estate of one who at the time of his death was domiciled in the jurisdiction; (5) the action is for breach within the jurisdiction of a contract to be performed within the jurisdiction; (6) an injunction is sought as to anything to be done within the jurisdiction or a nuisance is sought to be prevented within the jurisdiction; and (7) any person out of the jurisdiction is a necessary or proper party to an action brought against parties served within the jurisdiction. is a contempt, but the privilege is one of the court rather than of the person.[32] In all other cases of exemption from service of summons, the privilege is deemed personal only.[33]

2. Members of Legislative Bodies. At common law members of parliament enjoyed no privilege from suit at any time,[34] and although there is a conflict of authority the better established opinion is that no common-law rule of exemption for legislators is to be recognized in the United States;[35] but in many American jurisdictions statutes or constitutional provisions provide for such immunity for members of legislative assemblies while engaged in the discharge of their duties.[36] Immunity from arrest is sometimes held to include exemption from service of summons,[37] but the better rule is to the contrary.[38]

3. Service on Judges. Judges are exempt from service of summons while holding court and for a reasonable time in going to and from the place of the session.[39]

4. Service on Jurors. Under a statute providing against the service of any writ or other process on the body of a juror, jurors are not exempt from the service of civil process without arrest during the time they are attending court.[40]

5. Service on Attorneys at Law. Resident attorneys at law have no privilege of exemption during the trial of causes in which they are engaged, except when in the actual presence of the court;[41] and the rule has been applied to non-resident attorneys,[42] although other cases announce a contrary doctrine.[43] The immunity

Exemption limited to jurisdiction where hearing is had.— The policy of the law exempting from service of process parties and witnesses going to and from court extends only to the jurisdiction in which attendance at court is required, and does not render invalid a service of process from a Massachusetts court upon a citizen of Vermont while traveling through Massachusetts to attend court in Connecticut as a witness. Holyoke, etc., Ice Co. v. Ambden, 55 Fed. 593, 21 L. R. A. 319. The contrary, however, was held in Tyrone Bank v. Doty, 2 Pa. Dist. 558, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 287, in which it was held that where a witness, on the day after the trial, departs for his home in a distant county by the most direct route, he is exempt from service of process while passing through an intermediate county.

Resident coming from outside state.— A resident who had been sojourning out of the state to avoid service of process, and voluntarily came within the state to testify in a legal proceeding, and attend as a party, could not be served with process while coming, attending court or returning, provided he returned with reasonable despatch. Cake v. Haight, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 386, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 1043.

Witness exempt only in personal capacity.— It was held in Linn v. Hagan, 121 Ky. 627, 87 S. W. 1101, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1113, that the execution exemption of the witness, when allowed, is a personal one and that a witness who has come from a foreign jurisdiction to testify in a pending case may nevertheless be served in a representative capacity, as administratrix. But see Sewanee Coal, etc., Co. v. Williams, (Tenn. 1908) 107 S. W. 968, holding that a resident of another state or county, who has in good faith come to testify as a witness, is exempt from service of process for the commencement of a civil action, either against him in his individual capacity, or against a corporation of which he is an officer or agent.

Effect of statute.— N. C. Code, §§ 1367, 1735, prohibiting arrest in civil actions of parties attending court as witness or as jurors, do not by implication repeal the common-law exemption of non-residents from service of process while in the state in attendance in court either as witnesses or as suitors. Cooper v. Wyman, 122 N. C. 784, 29 S. E. 947, 65 Am. St. Rep. 731.

A. 721, the court said: "As to what the better rule may be, both as to plaintiffs and defendants, there is some conflict of authority; but we are all of opinion that this right of exemption should not be extended to one who, like the appellee, comes here and avails himself of the right given him by our statute to issue an attachment for fraud . . . The appellee having failed to prosecute his attachment with success, and the appellant having sued him in the court where the bond was filed to ascertain the damages, so that he could avail himself of a suit on the bond to make himself whole, we think the appellee should be held to have waived his right, if he had any, to exemption from summons."

made in another state will not operate to create such privilege.[59] In some states defendants in criminal cases do not enjoy the same privilege as parties in civil cases, and may be served with writs of summons when on trial in jurisdictions other than where they reside,[60] unless the criminal charge is a contrivance of plaintiff in the civil suit to bring defendant within the jurisdiction.[61] Residents confined in jail or prison on criminal charges are subject to service of civil process.[62]

9. Service on Persons Engaged in Military Service. Statutes frequently exempt persons from the service of civil process while actually engaged in the military service of the state or of the United States,[63] and even in the absence of such a statute it has been held that public policy demands the recognition of such exemption.[64]

When appearance deemed compulsory.— "The real question is, Was the defendant's presence within this jurisdiction in fact compulsory? I am of opinion that it should be so considered. . . . The defendant came from a foreign jurisdiction where he resided, into this district, for the sole purpose of pleading to the indictment and giving bail. His attendance was really compulsory, because he knew that if he did not come without arrest he would be brought here upon a warrant. Bail could not be taken in Massachusetts, and with knowledge of this fact he was of necessity advised that he must personally attend this court, either under or without arrest; and he chose to avail himself of the opportunity extended to him for a limited time, to come without arrest. But in fact he was here none the less under compulsion . . . he was, while necessarily within this jurisdiction for that purpose, exempt from liability to the service of process upon him in the present action." acknowledges service of the declaration,[67] or by entering appearance and filing a motion for bail,[68] or taking substantial steps in the cause.[69] But there is no waiver by filing a petition and bond for removal to the federal court.[70] Any act of the person exempt from service, committed while such exemption is in force, which itself gives cause for the institution of civil proceedings against him, will be deemed a waiver of the privilege so far as service in such proceedings is concerned.[71] A suitor or witness will lose his privilege by unreasonable delay within the jurisdiction after he is through with his attendance at court,[72] or by unnecessarily remaining in the jurisdiction to attend to private business during a considerable interval while waiting for the case to be taken up.[73] The privilege is allowed with a reasonable latitude, and a party going to or returning from court need not take the most direct route; reasonable deviations or delays will be allowed, provided they do not arise in carrying out a purpose entirely distinct from the purpose of going to, attending, or returning from court.[74] Deciding not to have a deposition taken after going into the jurisdiction with the bona fide intention of taking it will not operate as a waiver.[75]

out by law,[77] but there must be a legal return of such service.[78] The return of a writ is a statement in writing indorsed thereon by the officer to whom it is directed, certifying to the court what he has done pursuant to the command of the writ.[79] It is simply evidence of service.[80] The term also has the more literal meaning of bringing the writ back to the court from which it issues and filing it with the clerk of that court.[81] Both these acts are necessary to constitute the due return of process.[82] The day upon which a writ is to be returned is usually fixed or ascertainable by law,[83] and that day is called the return-day.[84] It is the duty of the sheriff to return process to the proper court whether executed or not,[85] in default of which he is liable to an action for damages.[86] By leave of court a writ may be returned after the lawful return-day;[87] but without such leave a return after the return-day, while otherwise a good return,[88] is not sufficient to protect the officer from liability for any damages suffered by reason of the delay.[89] It may be returned before the return-day if served, but should not be returned until the return-day if no service has been had.[90] If returnable only in term, the return of the writ will be set aside if made in vacation.[91] The return-day is usually stated in the body of the writ,[92] and in case of indefinite or ambiguous designation the language of the writ will be construed so as to support it and render it operative if such construction is reasonable.[93] Thus if made returnable in a named month, without any indication of the year, it will be held returnable in the month named in the current year if possible,[94] and if made returnable on a legal holiday, it will be deemed returnable on the first judicial day thereafter.[95] Insensible words used in connection with the designation of the return-day will be rejected as surplusage.[96] The return need not be verified,[97] for it is made by a sworn officer and its truth is guaranteed by the sanctions of his official oath.[98]

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE. An acknowledgment of service indorsed upon the writ and subscribed by defendant is in many states sufficient under the statute to show service,[99] but it must usually be supported by proof of the genuineness of the signature.[1] Such proof may be made by the officer who makes service so stating in his return.[2]

B. Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency of Return — 1. IN GENERAL. The return should show on its face that everything necessary to constitute a good service has been done;[3] but no nice criticisms will be indulged in regard to the words used, and if it can be fairly inferred from the language employed that the officer has met the requirements of the law, the return will be deemed sufficient.[4]

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Process," § 164.

Illustrations.— A return that a writ was served by reading it in presence and hearing of defendant is tantamount to stating that it was read to him. McPherson v. State Bank, 4 Ark. 558. The sheriff's return that he served a "copy" of the summons is equivalent to a return that he served a copy certified by the clerk. Brown v. Lawson, 51 Cal. 615. A statement that a copy of the writ was left with defendant is equivalent to a statement that it was served by delivering a copy to him. Buck v. Buck, 60 Ill. 105. To serve defendant with a true copy is "to deliver to him a true copy." Hedges v. Mace, 72 Ill. 472. A return, "Served by reading," implies "to the defendant." Chandler v. Miller, 11 Ind. 382; Holsinger v. Dunham, 11 Ind. 346. As the statute requires the officer to state whether a copy of the petition was demanded, a return, "No copy demanded," will be presumed to refer to a copy of the petition, and not to a copy concerning which no duty is laid on the officer. Cobb v. Newcomb, 7 Iowa 43. The date attached to an officer's return is not to be taken as evidence that the notice was given on the day of the date, where that would be inconsistent with the return itself. Thayer v. Stearns, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 109. "Not to be found in my county" implies that defendant is a resident of such county. Carlisle v. Cowan, 85 Tenn. 165, 2 S. W. 26. A return of a citation, "Executed . . . by a certified of this writ and copy of petition," by a fair construction would mean that a copy was served on defendant, notwithstanding the omission, and the return was sufficient. Bartlett v. Winkler, 15 Tex. 515. Under a statute providing that "a copy of the complaint must be served with the summons unless two or more defendants reside in the same county, in which case a copy of the complaint need only be served on one of such defendants," where several defendants reside in the same county, and a copy of the complaint is served on one of them with the summons, a return of service need not show that defendants all reside in the county. Mantle v. Casey, 31 Mont. 408, 78 Pac. 591. Where an affidavit states that the summons was served by leaving a copy "at the last and usual place of abode of said defendant in said Clark county," the obvious meaning is that the service was made at the last and usual abode of defendant, and that such place of abode was then in Clark county. Healey v. Butler, 66 Wis. 9, 27 N. W. 822.

Referring to annexed summons.— It is not necessary that an affidavit of service of process, although referring to an "annexed summons," should in fact be annexed to the summons, but it is sufficient if the court can find as a fact, from the contents of the affidavit, or from the proceedings for the appointment of a guardian ad litem or otherwise, that the summons was in fact served. Steinhardt v. Baker, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 470, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 707 [affirmed in 25 N. Y. App. Div. 197, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 357].

Strict construction.— The return of a sheriff or other officer, showing or attempting to show constructive service of a summons, is to be strictly construed, and everything may be inferred against the return which its departure from the description of the statute will warrant. Holtschneider v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 107 Mo. App. 381, 81 S. W. 489.

appears elsewhere of record.[12] Redundancy will not vitiate the return,[13] nor is the return any evidence of non-essential matters stated therein.[14]

2. In Whose Name Return Should Be Made. The return should be made and signed by the officer who in fact served or attempted to serve it.[15] But a deputy sheriff, not being known to the court, and being deemed to act not for himself but for the sheriff, should sign a return in the name of the sheriff by himself as deputy, or should designate the sheriff for whom he purported to act,[16] although under some statutes the deputy may make the return in his own name.[17]

3. Time and Place of Service. The return should show with reasonable certainty the time of service.[18] When a single date appears in the return, without

It is competent for a sheriff and his deputies to agree upon a particular mode of making returns to writs which would bind the parties to the contracts, but not third persons. Naylor v. Simmes, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 273.

If a deputy dies after executing a writ, but without making a return, the sheriff may certify the doings of the deputy on the writ, and return it to the clerk's office. Ingersoll v. Sawyer, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 276. Where a deputy sheriff died before making return of a summons served by him, and affidavits were made showing statements made by him during his sickness as to the time and place, and defendants and others corroborated the statements so made, a motion to substitute proof of service was properly granted, and the sheriff instructed to make proof of service, under his certificate, according to the affidavits. The full name of the deputy need not be signed. Thus, "W. Y. Robinson, Sheriff of S. J. County, Texas, by C., deputy," is sufficient. Hays v. Byrd, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 24, 36 S. W. 777.

When served by special deputy.— If a summons is served by a regular deputy of a sheriff, the return must be in the name of the latter; but where it is served by a special deputy by appointment indorsed thereon, the statute does not require the return, which is to be made under oath, to be in the name of the sheriff. Glencoe v. People, 78 Ill. 382. But see Bolard v. Mason, 66 Pa. St. 138.

Where sheriff's name to be written.— It is immaterial that the name of the sheriff is written in the return of service of summons below, instead of above, that of the deputy by whom the summons was served. Zepp v. Hager, 70 Ill. 223.

A return of service, made and signed by a sheriff, when actually made by his deputy, is irregular, but not invalid. Orchard v. Peake, 69 Kan. 510, 77 Pac. 281.

A return of process signed by a deputy sheriff without reference to the sheriff is sufficient to uphold a default, where the court finds that it was duly served, for if the sheriff was dead the deputy had authority under the statute to serve the summons, but if he was not dead the person on whom process was served should have shown that fact. any designation to the contrary, it will be held to refer to the time of service and not to the time of return.[19] It is sometimes said that both time and place should be shown in the return,[20] but many cases hold that the place need not be shown.[21] The venue given at the head of the return will be taken as indicative of the place of service when no other place is mentioned in the return.[22] If, however, a place is named outside the county in which the sheriff is authorized to serve process, it will render the return bad.[23]

4. Name of Defendant Served. The return should give the name of the party served or should designate him with such reasonable certainty as to leave no substantial doubt as to his identity.[24] Particular care should be exercised in the case

An insertion in the return of a superfluous initial letter will not invalidate it (Phillips v. Evans, 64 Mo. 17); nor will the addition of a superfluous terminal letter to the party's surname, where the return also recites that defendant was duly served (Alexander v. McDow, 108 Cal. 25, 41 Pac. 24); nor the omission of mere words of description (Schmidt v. Stolowski, 126 Wis. 55, 105 N. Sufficiency of return.— Process directed to all the defendants by name, and returned by the sheriff "Executed on the parties, this October 1st, 1870, with copy," shows a sufficient service. Florence v. Paschal, 50 Ala. 28. Where a writ against several defendants is returned "Executed," the court will intend that it was executed on all the defendants. Cantley v. Moody, 7 Port. (Ala.) 443. Where a sheriff's return recites the service of the writ upon "the within-named" persons, naming three defendants, and charges fees for service of three copies, it sufficiently appears that each of the defendants was served with a copy of the writ. Martin v. Hargardine, 46 Ill. 322. Returns on a summons against several defendants as follows: "Served the within named, by leaving a true copy of the same with the within named," giving the names of the several defendants, are sufficient to show that a copy was served on each defendant. Greenman v. Harvey, 53 Ill. 386. See also Turner v. Jenkins, 79 Ill. 228. A return to a summons addressed to two defendants, that the defendants, naming them conjunctively, could not be found, will be construed as meaning that neither of the defendants could be found, and not that both of them could not be found. Blinn v. Chessman, 49 Minn. 140, 51 N. W. 666, 32 Am. St. Rep. 536. Where process was returned "Executed on all in my bailiwick but Richard Stratton," it was held insufficient, it not appearing how many resided in the bailiwick. Hackwith v. Damron, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 235. A sheriff's return of service of summons on two defendants certified that "I served the within summons on Charles Blanchard . . . by then and there delivering him a true copy of the original summons; and I further certify that I served the within summons on Mrs. Louise D. Bernard . . . on the twenty-seventh day of March, 1891, by then and there delivering to Charles Blanchard a true and certified copy of said original," and was held to sufficiently show that both services took place at the same time, and not to be defective for failure to show when service on C was made. Senescal v. Bolton, 7 N. M. 351, 34 Pac. 446. A return of a citation to several defendants showing that it was executed "by delivering to the within-named defendants, in person, a true copy of this writ," is fatally defective, since it fails to show a delivery to "each" of defendants of a copy of the writ. Chamblee v. Hufsmith, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 616. Where the statute requires the delivery of a copy of a citation to each of the defendants, a return which fails to show a delivery to each is defective. Schramm v. Gentry, 64 Tex. 143; Vaughan v. State, 29 Tex. 273. Where the return on a citation fails to show that a copy was served on each defendant, but shows a joint service only, it is defective. Rutherford v. Davenport, (Tex. App. 1891) 16 S. W. 110; Fulton v. State, 14 Tex. App. 32. A sheriff's return of service on an application for mandamus, which recites that he served it on "the within named defendants, William Bishop, Sr., and W. A. Andrews . . . by delivering a true copy thereof, with a copy of the affidavit . . . to the above named, the said defendants, personally," is not void for uncertainty, as indicating but a single service on one defendant, and a motion to dismiss the proceedings is properly overruled. State Sav. Bank v. Davis, 22 Wash. 406, 61 Pac. 43. A return that summons was served upon James D. Myers on May 1, 1893, and upon shows service on one but is silent as to the other, it will be presumed that no service was had as to that other.[26]

5. Manner of Service. The return should show clearly and fully the manner in which service was made, so that it may appear of record whether the statutory requirements as to manner of service have been substantially complied with.[27]

Illustrations.— The following return of service, by a sheriff, upon a writ, was held sufficient: "I executed the within by reading to the within named Augustin Gatton, at his residence, in White county, on the 17th day of March, 1847. C. D., Sh'ff." Gatton v. Walker, 9 Ark. 199. An entry by the sheriff that he had served defendants, naming them, "each with a copy of this within writ and process," does not sufficiently show that the service was personal, within the meaning of Ga. Code, § 3457. Crapp v. Dodd, 92 Ga. 405, 17 S. E. 666. A return on a summons, "Served by reading and delivering a true copy to Wm. R. Morrison, a director of the defendant," is not insufficient as failing to show what was served and what was delivered. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Holbrook, 92 Ill. 297. A return to a summons which recites, "Executed this writ, by reading it to the within named James Funk, May 8th, 1861," is sufficient. Funk v. Hough, 29 Ill. 145. A sheriff's return that on, etc., he served, a summons on, etc., "who attempted to avoid service by concealing himself, and running from me at the time I read this process to him at the place I last saw him," is legally sufficient. Orendorff v. Stanberry, 20 Ill. 89. A sheriff's return in this form, "I. R. Simms, summoned by reading," and signed by the sheriff, and dated, is sufficient. Simms v. Klein, 1 Ill. 371. Under Ky. Civ. Code Pr. § 49, a return by a special bailiff that he served a summons "by delivering to him a copy of the within summons," with the date of service, is sufficient. Barbour v. Newkirk, 83 Ky. 529. A return by a sheriff indorsed on a summons, as follows: "Executed on the within-named J. J. Milam (the person named in the summons), this Oct. 12, 1870, by personal service, copy waived," signed by the sheriff, is sufficient within Miss. Rev. Code, p. 489, art. 63, requiring the sheriff to return process "with a written statement of his proceedings thereon." Milam v. Strickland, 45 Miss. 721. A return upon a summons, "Executed personally, with original and copy, defendant claiming such," is in conformity with the requirements of the statute.

When a copy of the complaint is required to be left with defendant, the return must show that it was done.[28] When the statute provides for substituted service by leaving a copy of the writ at the residence or last place of residence of defendant, or other place, or with certain designated persons, as the case may be, a return purporting to show such service must show that everything required by the statute was strictly performed in exactly the manner required by the statute.[29] In some Presley v. Anderson, 42 Miss. 274. A return of service of summons showing service on minors by delivering to each of them a true and correct copy thereof was insufficient under Hill Annot. Laws Oreg. § 55, subd. 3, requiring summons to be served by delivering a copy thereof to minors personally, since such return did not show personal delivery; hence the court acquired no jurisdiction of the persons of such minors by such service. Harris v. Sargeant, 37 Oreg. 41, 60 Pac. 608. Under an act providing that summons may be served by producing the original summons to defendant and informing him of the contents, or by leaving a copy at his dwelling-house, in the presence of one or more of his family, a return of the copy, "Served personally on defendant." did not comply with the act. Lenore v. Ingram, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 519. A return, "Executed by serving the defendant with a true copy," is bad, under the statute, as not showing the manner of service, and not showing that it was delivered to him in person. Graves v. Robertson, 22 Tex. 130. Under a rule of court requiring a summons to be served on a defendant by "giving him notice of its contents," a return of service of a writ by "making known the contents" to defendant is sufficient. Trimble v. Erie Electric Motor Co., 89 Fed. 51.

Reasons for the rule.— "There are sound reasons why the mode of executing a writ of summons should be distinctly stated. In default of an appearance, the court may be called upon by the plaintiff to allow a judgment against the defendant: and before thus visiting a party with the penalty of a default, common and equal justice may demand that it should be unequivocally exhibited to the court by the record that the writ was served on a proper day and in a legal manner; while strict attention to the form of the return will do much to prevent remissness or negligence on the part of the officer charged with the important duty of executing the writ." See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Process," § 170.

Description of person with whom process was left.— Where the statute requires that service of a writ may be made by leaving a copy with a white member of defendant's family, a return by the officer that he left a copy with "A. B., a member of" defendant's family, is not sufficient to give jurisdiction over the person of defendant. Ex p. Cross, 7 Ark. 44. A return that a copy was left at his place of residence with "a" person over fifteen years of age is insufficient in not stating the person to be a member of his family. Dawson v. State Bank, 3 Ark. 505. A return of an original notice, "Served by leaving a copy of this notice with Mrs. Ann Thompson, the mother of J. W. Thompson, at his usual place of abode . . . said J. W. Thompson not being found in my county," was held deficient in not showing that Ann Thompson was a member of the family of J. W. Thompson, or of the family where he had his residence. Lyon v. Thompson, 12 Iowa 183. A return of process, "Served by certified copy left with Joseph Kerr's [defendant's] wife, at his usual residence," was insufficient, as not showing that the person with whom it was left was more than fourteen years old. Davis v. Burt, 7 Iowa 56. Under La. Code Pr. art. 189, authorizing the service of citation to be made at the usual domicile or the residence of defendant, if he be absent, on a free person above the age of fourteen, and living there, the sheriff's return of service of citation should state expressly that he left the process at the usual domicile or residence, with a free person, above fourteen years of age, living there, defendant being absent. Kendrick v. Kendrick, 19 La. 36.

Posting of copy.— A return that the summons was served on a person unknown by posting one "copy on the courthouse," and a copy on two public places in the township, not reciting the length of time they were so posted, was insufficient, the statute requiring posting for three weeks. Pioneer Land Co. v. Maddux, 109 Cal. 633, 42 Pac. 295, 50 Am. St. Rep. 67.

Explaining contents of writ.— Where service of process was made by leaving a copy with a member of the family of defendant (Underwood St. p. 186, c. 22, § 11), a return which failed to show that the officer explained to such person the contents of the writ and that it was left at the usual place of abode of defendant was fatally defective. Hessler v. Wright, 8 Ill. App. 229.

Place of leaving copy.— A return of service of petition and citation on defendant by leaving copies at "his residence" was sufficient, without showing that it was at his "usual residence," in the absence of evidence that defendant had more than one domicile. Griffing v. Caldwell, 1 Rob. (La.) 15. Where defendant was described in a writ as of L, in P county, a return by the officer that he left a summons for him at his "last and usual place of abode in Kennebec county" was indefinite and insufficient, since his last and usual place of abode in K county would not necessarily be his "place of last and usual abode within the state." Sanborn v. Stickney, 69 Me. 343. Under a statute permitting substituted service where defendant cannot be found, and there is no free white person over the age of sixteen years who is a member of the family of defendant, by leaving a copy of the writ "at some public place at the dwelling house of the defendant," a return "Executed [on defendant] by leaving a copy at her residence," etc., is insufficient, as failing to show that it was left as some public place at the residence (Eskridge v. Jones, 1 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 595), and under such provision the service of a writ by leaving a return upon a writ "Executed by leaving a copy at the boarding house of the defendant," was held insufficient (Smith v. Cohea, 3 How. (Miss.) 35). Under a statute permitting service at the "usual place of abode," a return of service at the "last usual place of abode" was held not to show valid service. Madison County Bank v. Suman, 79 Mo. 527. An officer's return that he left at "the dwelling house" of a trustee a true and attested return,[30] but in others this is not held to be necessary.[31] Where service is made upon a person as agent of defendant, the return ought to show that he is such agent;[32] and when the statute designates certain agents as competent to accept service for the principal, the return should so characterize the agent served as to show that he was one of those agents designated by the statute.[33] If the method adopted is permitted by the statute only in certain cases, the return must show facts disclosing that the case was one within the authorization of the statute, as where substituted service is authorized only when defendant cannot be found,[34] or where service upon a resident agent is permissible when defendant is a non-resident.[35]

6. Alteration of Return. Erasures or interlineations subsequently found in a return will not nullify a judgment based upon it which recites that the summons was served on defendant.[36]

7. Process Not Served. If service cannot be made upon any defendant for the copy of the writ is a sufficient return that he left such copy at "the last and usual place of abode" of the trustee. Bruce v. Cloutman, 45 N. H. 37, 84 Am. Dec. 111. Under Pa. Act, March 20, 1810, permitting summons to be served on defendant by leaving a copy at his "dwelling house," a return of service as served on defendant by copy left at his "residence" was sufficient. Achy v. Kline, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 162. Under Tex. Rev. St. art. 1220, providing that, when a citation is served without the county in which the suit is brought, the officer shall deliver to each of defendants "the certified copy of the petition accompanying the citation," the return must show that the copy delivered to defendants was certified, and it is not sufficient to state that "a copy of the petition" was delivered to defendant, although the citation recites that a certified copy accompanies the citation, and is to be served with it. Lauderdale v. R. & T. A. Ennis Stationery Co., 80 Tex. 496, 16 S. W. 308. Under a statute authorizing service of summons by leaving a copy at the place of defendant's "abode," a return that the same was left at a house or usual place of "residence" was sufficient, the expressions being substantially synonymous. Sufficiency.—A return on a summons that service was made by leaving a copy for defendant, who being sick the officer "could not see her," gave the court no jurisdiction; the only statutory provision for service by leaving a copy with a member of the family being where a party is "not found within the county of his residence." Le Grand v. Fairall, 86 Iowa 211, 53 N. W. 115. The return of an officer on a writ, stating that he executed it by leaving a copy with a member of the family of defendant, the latter "being absent," is insufficient under a provision of the statute allowing such service if defendant "could not be found." Hammond v. Olive, 44 Miss. 543.

35. Taylor v. Brown, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 655; Boyle v. Whitney, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 501; Miller v. Swayne, 2 Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 236.

reason that such defendant cannot be found in the county,[37] that defendant refused to receive the writ when offered,[38] that defendant is dead,[39] that the officer was kept off by force of arms,[40] that defendant is exempt from service by reason of certain circumstances,[41] or that service cannot be made for any other reason,[42] the facts should be set up in the return. No writ should be returned not found until the time within which service could lawfully be made has expired.[43]

8. Affidavit of Service. Service of process may frequently be made by persons other than officers,[44] but in such cases the statement of the person serving as to the fact and manner of service must be made under oath or supported by his affidavit.[45]

37. Neally v. Redman, 5 Iowa 387; Ford v. Munson, 4 N. J. L. 93; Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. St. 134; Brown v. Belches, 1 Wash. (Va.) 9.

Sufficiency of return.— "Although non est inventus is the more frequent return in such a case, yet it is by no means as full an answer to the command of the writ, as is the return of nihil. That amounts to an averment that the defendant has nothing in the bailiwick, no dwelling-house, no family, no residence. and no personal presence to enable the officer to make the service required by the Act of Assembly." Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. St. 134, 139. Where substituted service is provided for by law, the return should be that defendant could not be found in the county so as to be served with process, non est inventus alone not being sufficient. Moore v. Miller, 16 N. J. L. 233. A statement in the return that the sheriff did not go to the house of one of defendants destroys the return of not found as to such defendant. Lodge v. State Bank, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 557. Under some statutes a mere return of "not found" is insufficient. Morris v. Knight, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 106; Doggett v. Jordan, 3 Fla. 215. On a return "Not found," made by the sheriff on an original notice, it will be presumed that defendant could not be found in the county of the officer making the return. Macklot v. Hart, 12 Iowa 428. A sheriff is not authorized to return a defendant "No inhabitant of the State," as he cannot officially know the inhabitants of the state, although it may be good for as much territory as he can officially notice. Greenup v. Bacon, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 108. Since the whole county is not necessarily the bailiwick of a deputy sheriff, a return by him that defendant is "no inhabitant of my bailiwick" is not equivalent to a return that he is no inhabitant of the county. Gully v. Sanders, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 424. A sheriff cannot make a return of non est inventus, if defendant is a known inhabitant of another state or county. Kibbe v. Deering, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 244. In an action against several joint contractors, where the writ described one of defendants on whom no service was made as of a certain county, the return of the proper officer that he had no last or usual place of abode within such county is sufficient. Call v. Hagger, 8 Mass. 423. Where there is more than one defendant, the sheriff's return that he cannot find defendants is equivalent to saying that neither can be found. Hitchcock v. Hahn, 60 Mich. 459, 27 N. W. 600. Return on a writ must purport something capable of being understood without evidence aliunde. The letters "N. E. I." cannot be taken to mean non est inventus. Parker v. Grayson, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 171.

38. Fuller v. Kenney, 32 Me. 334, holding that if a defendant refuses to receive a summons offered him by the officer having the writ for service, the officer may return that he delivered the summons, or he may return the facts specifically, and they will be held to be a delivery.

39. Burr v. Dougherty, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 6, holding that the proper return to a writ of summons, when the sheriff knows defendant is dead, is mortuus est and not nihil habet.

All the necessary facts may be shown in one affidavit or in two or more separate affidavits. State v. Whatcom County Super. Ct., 42 Wash. 521, 85 Pac. 256. Where the only proof that a summons alleged to have been lost or destroyed was served on defendant, who is in default, consists of an affidavit made by plaintiff, in which he states that said summons was served on defendant personally by a certain person more than seven and one-half years prior to making such affidavit, and there is nothing in

This rule has been applied to special deputies,[46] to constables,[47] and to a city marshal.[48] If the statute prescribes the officer before whom the affidavit shall be made, it is insufficient if made before another;[49] but if no officer is designated, it may be made before any officer authorized to administer oaths.[50] While the general rules applicable to a sheriff's return usually apply equally to such an affidavit of service, certain additional requirements are frequently imposed by statute. Thus the affidavit is often required to show that the person serving the writ has the qualifications required by the statute, as that he is of the proper age,[51] or not interested in the matter in controversy,[52] or is competent to testify as a witness at the trial of the cause.[53] Some statutes require such affidavit also to contain an averment that the person served is, or that affiant knows him to be, the identical person named in the summons.[54] It is sometimes provided that the affidavit must the affidavit nor record showing affiant's means of knowledge, or relating to the particulars of the loss or destruction of the summons, or excusing the delay in making a return thereon, or explaining why said proof of service was not originally made by the affidavit of the party who served the summons, the proof of service is insufficient to show jurisdiction of defendant. French v. Ajax Oil, etc., Co., 44 Wash. 305, 697, 87 Pac. 359, 360. Where an affidavit of service of summons is made by plaintiff's attorney, who states that he is such attorney, and made the service, and appends to the summons his office and post-office address, the absence of a statement of the age and the residence of the affiant may be supplied by the court's knowledge that its officer is over twenty-one years of age, and by the statement of his office address. Booth v. Kingsland Ave. Bldg. Assoc., 18 N. Y. App. Div. 407, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 457.

An affidavit stating that the affiant is a male citizen of the United States, over eighteen years of age, was not sufficient to show that he was over eighteen years of age at the time of the service of the summons, on the contention that the words "male citizen of the United States" indicated that he was an elector, and therefore twenty-one years of age or over, since while it is true that a citizen, in the full acceptation of that term, is a member of the civil state, entitled to all its privileges, the possession of all political rights is not essential to citizenship, which term is a comprehensive one, and includes citizens of the state and citizens of the United States, and these include political as well as civil citizens, electors and non-electors. St. Wis. § 2642, providing, if service of summons is made by one other than the sheriff, proof thereof shall be by affidavit of such person, showing that "he knew the person served to be the defendant mentioned in the summons," is not satisfied by a statement that affiant knew that the person with whom he left a copy of the summons and complaint was the general manager of defendant. Kernan v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 103 Wis. 356, 79 N. W. 403. In Young v. Young, 18 Minn. 90, a court rule making this requirement was held invalid as inconsistent with the statute. And it was held in Cunningham v. Water-Power Sandstone Co., 74 Minn. 282, 77 N. W. 137, that such a showing was unnecessary.

When a summons has been personally served out of the state, it must be shown by affidavit that the person served is the identical person named in the action or proceeding. It is not sufficient to show by affidavit that the person served acknowledged show the place where service was made, the presumption which obtains in the case of service by the sheriff not being recognized.[55] If personal service is made outside the state as a substitute for service by publication, the affidavit should show the place of service.[56]

C. Proof of Service by Publication — 1. Who May Make Proof. The statute usually provides that proof of service by publication shall be by affidavit or certificate of some one of a number of designated persons, such as the proprietor, editor, printer, or chief clerk of the newspaper in which publication is made, and the statute must be observed.[57] A printed copy of the summons published is sometimes required to be returned with the affidavit.[58] If the statute does not restrict the proof, any other competent evidence of the service may be shown to establish the fact,[59] and even where the statute provided that proof "shall" be made in a designated mode, other competent evidence was held admissible to prove the fact.[60] The affidavit must positively show that the affiant is one of the persons designated by the statute,[61] and it is not enough for him to merely describe himself as such person.[62] The affiant need not describe himself by the term

employed in the statute if he states facts which disclose that he comes within its purview.[63]

2. Requisites and Sufficiency of Affidavit. The affidavit or certificate of the publication of the summons or notice must show that just such publication as the law requires has been made in precisely the manner provided by law.[64] But it is the service and not the proof thereof which gives the court jurisdiction, and a judgment will not be set aside merely because the proof is not made as provided for by statute, where it appears that service was in fact properly had,[65] although there are cases which hold that a want of the proof provided for by law is fatal to the jurisdiction.[66] It has been held that no presumption will ordinarily aid the record of a service by publication, since that is a strictly statutory proceeding in derogation of the common law.[67] It should appear that publication was made in a newspaper,[68] of the kind specified by the statute,[69] which should be named,[70] and it should appear to be the same newspaper in which publication was ordered.[71] It should also clearly appear from the affidavit that the summons, order, or notice was published at the proper time, for the requisite number of times, at the proper intervals and for the required period, as provided for by the statute.[72] It is in some states necessary to show the dates of the issues of the paper in which the notice was published.[73] If the affidavit states that the notice was properly published but the dates given in the affidavit show that the statement is not true, the showing made by the dates will control,[74] unless it is stated merely under a vidilicet,[75] or unless there is an obvious clerical error in the dates.[76] But an omission of a date may be supplied by a second affidavit.[77] If the mailing of a copy of the summons or complaint is also required, an affidavit of some competent witness or certificate of an authorized officer must be made to prove the fact.[78] If plaintiff's attorney does the mailing he may make the affidavit.[79] The affidavit should show such facts as to the address and time of mailing as are necessary under the statute.[80] Misstatements in the affidavit as to immaterial facts will not render it void.[81] Statutes providing when such affidavit shall be made are directory only.[82] The giving of the required affidavit may be compelled in case of refusal.[83]

b. Fact of Service. The fact of service must always appear in some form in the return, and when a return alleges service upon part of the defendants and is silent as to others, no presumption of service will be indulged.[88]

c. Person Serving Writ. It will be presumed that the person making service of process was competent to do so.[89] Thus one who purports to serve process as an officer will be presumed to be a duly qualified officer authorized to serve the writ in question;[90] one who purports to serve process as a deputy will be presumed to have been duly authorized as such;[91] when a coroner serves process it will be presumed that the conditions existed which made such service proper;[92] and when a previous grant of authority is necessary in order that one other than an officer may serve process, such grant will be presumed in order to support such service.[93]

d. Diligence Employed. Where an officer makes a return of not found or of substituted service, no showing of diligence is necessary, since he is presumed to have used the necessary diligence.[94]

e. Person Served. A return of service upon an agent, under a statute authorizing such service, which omits to set forth the character of the agent, is presumptive evidence that the party served was in fact an agent qualified to receive service for his principal.[95]

f. Manner of Service. Facts as to the manner of service should ordinarily be stated, and it has been held that no presumptions will supply an omission to allege the doing of that which the statute declares shall be done;[96] but where the statute

Where a deputy sheriff is shown to have been at least a de facto officer at the time he served and returned a summons, the presumption of regularity attaches with reference to his acts, without proof of his appointment by official record. Mosher v. McDonald, 128 Iowa 68, 102 N. W. 837.

Where a return was lost, but there was an entry in the appearance docket that the writ was returned "served," the presumption is that the return was regular. Stunkle v. Holland, 4 Kan. App. 478, 46 Pac. 416. But it is held that this presumption may be rebutted. Shehan v. Stuart, 117 Iowa 207, 90 N. W. 614.

Presumption overcome.— Where it appeared that the writ was served by a person not an officer, deputized by the sheriff, and bearing the same name as that of one of plaintiffs, and nothing appeared to the contrary, it was held that it must be presumed, from the identity of names, that the person serving the writ was a plaintiff, and that the service was not good. Filkins v. O'Sullivan, 79 Ill. 524. Where the statute limits the right to serve process to persons having certain qualifications, the affidavit of service must affirmatively disclose the competency of the person making service. 96. Rose v. Ford, 2 Ark. 26; Philadelphia v. Cathcart, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 103. There are a few cases which hold that the officer need only return that he executed the writ, and it will be presumed that he did it as provided by law. Mayfield v. Allen, Minor (Ala.) 274; Bridges v. Ridgley, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 395; Norton v. Berlin Iron Bridge Co., 51 N. J. L. 442, 17 Atl. 1079; Strayhorn v. Blalock, 92 N. C. 292. But in Mississinpi where the statute provides that original process shall be served "upon the defendant personally, if to be found in the county, by handing him a true copy of the process," a return, "Executed this writ by personal service on" defendant, provides what the return shall show, it will be presumed, as to all facts not required to appear in the return, that the officer did his duty according to law.[97]

g. Place of Service. If the return states that the sheriff served defendant, without stating where such service was made, it will be presumed that it was made within the county over which the officer's authority extended.[98] If substituted service, by leaving a copy of the writ at a designated place, is provided for by statute, the writ will be presumed to have been left at the place designated by the statute even though it is loosely described in non-statutory terms.[99] But the presumption in favor of an officer will not be indulged when process is served by a private individual.[1]

h. Time of Service. Where a return is without date, or with an imperfect or uncertain date, it will be presumed that the writ was served within the time prescribed by law.[2] Where the affidavit of an unofficial person constitutes the proof of service, and it is silent as to the time of service, the date of the jurat will be presumed to be the date of the service.[3]

i. Residence. If the service can be deemed valid only in case defendant resides in the county where service is made, a presumption to that effect will be entertained to support the service.[4]

j. Copy Served. Where the return states that the sheriff served defendant with a certified copy, it will be presumed that the certification was by the clerk, he being the only one allowed to certify such copies.[5]

k. Truth of the Return. Every legal presumption is in favor of the truth of the sheriff's return.[6]

3. Evidence Affecting The Return — a. Evidence to Aid or Explain Return. If the return is lost, parol evidence of the execution is admissible.[7] No defects is insufficient for failing to state the facts on which the officer bases his conclusion that the service was personal, although the statute also provides that a general return of "Executed" is sufficient. or omissions in respect to the return can be corrected or supplied by extrinsic evidence,[8] and this is equally true after the death of the officer making it;[9] but if the return is not defective, but for any reason it becomes material to learn more about the service than is shown in the return, extrinsic evidence may be introduced.[10] A more liberal rule, however, permits omissions in a return to be supplied and ambiguities to be explained by parol evidence if that becomes necessary to prevent a failure of justice.[11] If the jurat is wanting in an affidavit of service, it may be shown by parol evidence that the affidavit was in fact sworn to,[12] and omissions in the affidavit may be supplied by parol evidence.[13]

b. Evidence to Impeach Return — (i) Conclusiveness of Return as to Parties and Privies. The question of the conclusiveness of the return is one upon which there is an utterly irreconcilable conflict in authority. The English common-law rule,[14] which is also the rule in many American states, is that, as between parties and privies, the return of an officer is to be taken as true, as to all matters which are properly the subject of a return by the officer, and it can be controverted only in an action against the officer for a false return,[15] unless it

Identification of person.— Where a writ of summons is directed against a person by a certain name, and two individuals are known in the community by that name, the officer serving the writ may point out in court, in giving testimony, the person he served; and such testimony does not contradict his return. Reid v. Mercurio, 91 Mo. App. 673. Where process is returned served on "R. E. Morgan," a defendant whose name of "Robert E. Morgan" is not precluded, as contradicting the return, from showing by parol that the process was served on a "Rufus E. Morgan" residing in the same county as himself, since such evidence merely shows to what person the return applies. Slingluff v. Gainer, 49 W. Va. 7, 37 S. E. 771.

Codes & St. Wash. § 4875. There was also on file, under section 4877 (making a return of the sheriff that defendant cannot be found within the county prima facie evidence on which to base service by publication on the ground that he cannot be found within the state), a return of the sheriff that he was unable to make personal service, because defendant could not be found within the county, and that on information he believed him to be residing in New York, and it was held that, since the presumption of nonresidence raised by the return of the sheriff was not conclusive, the affidavit of service would not be overthrown thereby, and hence a decree and sale based on such verified service would not, under a direct attack, be disturbed on account of the return. dence.[20] In proper cases, however, it is perhaps true generally that relief may be had in equity upon a showing there made that the return is false;[21] but some fact other than the mere falsity of the return, such as fraud or mistake, must usually be shown in order that equity may assume jurisdiction.[22] The rule forbidding the contradiction of a sheriff's return does not apply to an affidavit of service made by a private person, and such affidavit is always open to attack,[23] but a judgment founded thereon should not be set aside without clear and convincing proof.[24] It may always be shown that a return which purports to be the sheriff's return is not his in fact.[25] Opposed to the common-law rule is the more liberal rule which permits the return to be impeached by affidavit or otherwise in a direct proceeding brought for that purpose, such as a motion to dismiss the action or to set aside the return or to vacate a judgment by default based thereon,[26] but the proof

For example the return of an officer that he served the notice of action on a married woman by leaving a copy at the residence of and with her husband, that being her usual place of residence, is not overcome by the testimony of a witness, given seventeen years thereafter, on his unaided recollection, that her husband was not then at the place where he and his family usually resided, but at the house of a neighbor. Galvin v Dailey, 109 Iowa 332, 80 N. W. 420. When service is made by a deputy sheriff and return signed by the sheriff, affidavit of defendant that the paper delivered to him as a copy of the original notice was the one made an exhibit, which did not show that the original notice was signed by plaintiff or his attorney, as it was in fact, is sufficient to overcome a recital in the return that a true copy of the original notice was delivered to defendant. On collateral attack, however, the rule is general that, in the absence of fraud, the return cannot be impeached, since it is part of the record and as such imports absolute verity until set aside.[29]

(II) Conclusiveness of Return as to Officer Making It. The return is conclusive against the officer making it, when questioned collaterally,[30] at least when the party against whom it is sought to be impeached derives some interest from or under it,[31] but it is not conclusive in the officer's favor.[32] The officer may, however, show by parol evidence facts in regard to the execution of the writ which are not inconsistent therewith.[33]

(III) Conclusiveness of Return as to Strangers to the Record. Strangers to the record are not concluded by the sheriff's return, and as against them statements therein are prima facie evidence only, subject to be disproved by any competent evidence.[34]

IV. Defects, Objections, and Amendments.

A. Defects and Objections — 1. In General.[35] As to what defects are fatal and what are mere irregularities, no general rule can be stated. It is said

Ga. 249, 15 S. There is no error in striking a traverse of an officer's return of service, where the officer is neither made a party nor given notice of the filing of the traverse. O'Connell v. Friedman, 118 Ga. 831, 45 S. E. 668. Where a summons of garnishment was issued against a corporation, and the officer made two returns of service, and these returns showed service on a different corporation, and the officer was allowed to amend one of the returns so as to make it show service on the corporation intended to be served, and the return, as amended, was traversed, the original returns were admissible in evidence, and it was error to exclude them from the jury. News Printing Co. v. Brunswick Pub. Co., 113 Ga. 233, 38 S. E. 853. Return of service by a United States marshal should be treated, in the state courts, as being equally conclusive with a return by a sheriff. Sindall v. Thacker, 56 Ga. 51.

The evidence offered to contradict the return must be clear and satisfactory. Davant v. Carlton, 53 Ga. 491; Dozier v. Lamb, 52 Ga. 646.

Where an affidavit of illegality was filed, the mere filing of the traverse to the entry of service by the sheriff, and service of a copy of the same on the sheriff by a private individual, did not make the sheriff a party thereto. Parker v. Medlock, 117 Ga. 813, 45 S. E. 61.

that only those which affect the jurisdiction will render the writ void;[36] but this determines little, for the question still arises, what defects affect the jurisdiction. The matter seems to be largely one of precedent rather than principle. But this particular inquiry belongs rather to the subject of judgments, and will be found treated at large under that title.[37] Defects in an original but unexecuted summons are not available against an alias.[38] Where process is returned not served as to one of several defendants, the action abates as to him.[39]

2. Persons Entitled to Object. As a general rule a defendant is not entitled to urge defects in the service upon his co-defendants.[40] A party may be permitted to quash his own writ and thereby work a discontinuance of the action.[41] At common-law, however, one defendant in an action upon a joint contract might plead in abatement a want of service upon a co-defendant,[42] but this rule does not apply where by statute plaintiff is permitted to proceed against defendants who have been served,[43] or judgment is authorized to be entered against all.[44] Where two or more persons are sued on a joint contract they may plead in abatement a defect of service as to one only.[45]

3. Grounds For Quashing or Abating Writ. The grounds upon which writs may be quashed or abated are numerous, and include most defects and irregularities in the writ or service which are not so trivial that they will be disregarded,[46]

See Carlisle v. Cowan, 85 Tenn. 165, 2 S. W. 26, holding that where an attachment has been sued out on a false return implying that defendant was a resident of the county, under Tenn. Code, § 2812, providing that, "if action be brought in the wrong county, it may be prosecuted to a termination, unless abated by plea of the defendant," a plea in abatement is the proper method to secure the quashing of the writ.

A mere irregularity in the service, respecting a matter which is not necessary to confer jurisdiction, is not a ground for abatement. Jones v. Nelson, 51 Ala. 471; Cotton v. Huey, 4 Ala. 56; Maverick v. Duffee, 1 Ala. 433.

In Florida it is held that the writ will not be quashed because of defective service; the proper motion is to set aside or quash the service or return. Silver Springs, etc., R. Co. v. Van Ness, 45 Fla. 559, 34 So. 884; Tidwell v. Witherspoon, 18 Fla. 282.

Former adjudication.— It is no ground for quashing a writ or setting aside service thereof that there has been a former adjudication of the same cause of action. Bruner v. Finley, 211 Pa. St. 74, 60 Atl. 488; Ford v. Calhoun, 53 S. C. 106, 30 S. E. 830.

Objections to the merits of plaintiff's cause of action cannot be considered in support of a motion to quash the summons and the serv-

although defects in the return which do not show insufficient service but merely fail to state enough facts to show a good service will not affect the summons itself.[47] Thus it is ground for abating or quashing a writ that it was not served the number of days before the return-day required by law;[48] that it issued in the wrong county;[49] that the writ issued prematurely;[50] that the writ issued without affidavits required by statute;[51] that the return-day was altered without authority after issuance;[52] that service was obtained by fraud;[53] that the writ issued without a proper seal;[54] that it was not signed by the clerk of the court from which it issued;[55] that it does not show the day, month, and year when the same was signed;[56] that defendant is not designated with sufficient accuracy;[57] that the writ contains no return-day;[58] that it is returnable on a day or to a court not authorized by law;[59] that it is directed to an officer who is disqualified from serving it;[60] that it was served by a disqualified or unauthorized person;[61] the want of a suitable indorsement on a writ, under ice thereof. Embree v. McLennan, 18 Wash. 651, 52 Pac. 241.

A question of jurisdiction of the subject of the suit cannot be raised on a motion to set aside the service of summons, but it should be raised by demurrer or answer. Mabon v. Ongley Electric Co., 24 N. Y. App. Div. 50, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 973.

More appropriate remedy.— A rule of court authorizing only certain persons to use blank writs will not make abatable a writ filled up by an unauthorized person, where plaintiff is not at fault, the rule being more appropriately enforceable against the person who violates it. A writ will not abate because the service was made by the son-in-law of plaintiff, under a special direction given him by the authority issuing the writ. Miller v. Hayes, Brayt. (Vt.) 21. Where no possible injury can be shown from the fact that service of process was made by a deputized person, the authority to whom omitted to mention particularly all such known officers as might the requirement of a statute; [62] that no authority is indorsed on the writ for the indifferent person who made service to serve the same; [63] that the writ contains no declaration when such pleading is a necessary part of it; [64] that names are inserted in the writ which are not authorized by the statute; [65] that the writ has no teste,[66] or bears teste on Sunday,[67] or bears the teste of an unauthorized person; [68] that it fails to state the amount of damages demanded; [69] that the writ was filled out on a blank previously used and entered in another action,[70] or was altered after having been filled out for use in another action; [71] that it was served upon a defendant while privileged from service; [72] that it does not have the style required by law; [73] that there is a misnomer of plaintiff [74] or defendant; [75] that it does not designate with certainty the day upon which defendant is commanded to appear; [76] that the summons was issued upon a petition not verified as required by statute; [77] that the place of holding court is not designated; [78] that a supplemental summons was served without leave of court; [79] that in case of an alias writ there had been a discontinuance prior to its issuance; [80] that the cause of action is not indorsed upon the writ; [81] or that there is a variance between the declaration and the writ.[82] But there are some defects in the writ which do not invalidate the process but produce other incidental results. between the summons and the pleading as to the title of the court will not be sufficient to set aside the summons.[84] If the only defect in the writ is that it commands appearance, in a less time than is allowed by law, the writ will not be held bad, but defendant will be granted such an extension of time as he is entitled to.[85] And an obvious clerical error as to the date of filing the petition will not be ground for setting aside the summons.[86] If a capias issues in a case where only a summons is authorized, the writ is not to be dismissed, but defendant is entitled to be discharged from custody without giving bail;[87] and a writ improperly issued as an attachment against the body of the defendant, but which is not served by attaching his body, is not abatable.[88] There are statutes in many states declaring that all defects and errors in the process or proceedings shall be disregarded unless they affect the substantial rights of the parties.[89] And some statutes provide that no summons or the service thereof shall be set aside where there is sufficient substance about either to inform defendant that there is an action brought against him in court.[90] Under some statutes insufficiency of service of process upon a part of defendants is not ground for abatement, but the cause will be continued for proper service.[91]

4. Grounds For Quashing or Setting Aside Service or Return. The grounds upon which a motion to quash or set aside the service or return is proper are much the same as for a motion to quash the writ. Thus the motion may be made on the ground that service was fraudulently procured;[92] that defendant was brought into the jurisdiction on criminal process;[93] that service was made upon a person privileged from service,[94] or upon a non-resident;[95] that service has been made upon the wrong person;[96] that there was a failure to serve a copy of the complaint

a proper method of contesting the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the cause.[16]

5. Grounds For Setting Aside Service by Publication. Service by publication may be set aside on motion where insufficient, as when based upon insufficient affidavits;[17] where the order of publication does not have the requisites provided for by the statute;[18] or where there is no property within the state to give the court jurisdiction,[19] where claims are improperly united, some being personal and beyond the jurisdiction of the court;[20] or where there is a misnomer of plaintiff in the summons.[21] But the mere failure of the clerk to file an order for service by publication will not deprive the court of jurisdiction,[22] nor is the date of the summons so important that service will be set aside because of a variance in this respect between the original and copy.[23]

Prejudice.— Unless the case is one in which prejudice to defendant is presumed, such prejudice must be shown in order to have service set aside. Lark v. Chappell, 1 McCord (S. C.) 566.

Distinction between motion to quash service and to set aside return.— In Goodrich v. Hamer, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 441, 8 Cinc. L. Bul. 11, the court distinguished between a motion to set aside a return and a motion to quash service as follows: the former at-

service may also be set aside in proper cases.[25] A defect in the writ itself is available by plea in abatement,[26] and the same is true of a defective service.[27] A plea in abatement should be used when the defect is not apparent upon the face of the record,[28] a motion to quash being available only as to patent defects;[29] although in many jurisdictions a motion to quash supported by affidavits is considered proper practice where the defect is not apparent on the face of the record.[30] Under the codes in some states the failure to obtain jurisdiction of defendant by proper tacks the truth of the facts stated, not their sufficiency, the latter attacks the sufficiency of the return, not its truth. The cases do not seem to observe this distinction. Thus in Scott v. Stockholders' Oil Co., 122 Fed. 835, it was held that the question of the legal sufficiency of the service may be raised by a motion to set aside the return.

Branch summons.— The party served with a "branch summons" can only take advantage of a variance between it and the other summons by plea in abatement, and a motion to strike it from the files is not a proper remedy. Drennen v. Jasper Inv. Co., (Ala. 1907) 45 So. 157.

service of process may be asserted as a defense.[31] After the question has been raised and determined on motion to quash it cannot be again raised by answer.[32] After judgment, the remedy is not by motion to quash but by direct attack on the judgment.[33]

b. Requisites of Plea or Motion. The motion to quash should point out clearly the defect complained of and specify the grounds upon which it is based,[34] and nothing beyond the scope of the motion will be considered.[35] All grounds of objection not set up are deemed waived or abandoned.[36] Where the denial of the return of an officer upon a summons is purely argumentative, the return will stand.[37] A plea in abatement may be directed both to the writ and the declaration, if abatement is sought as to only a part of the writ and some of the counts in the declaration.[38] A plea in abatement upon the ground that summons was illegally issued and sent to a county other than that in which the action is brought is not defective for failure to show where the cause of action arose.[39]

c. Matters Considered. In those jurisdictions where the sheriff's return is conclusive between the parties,[40] the court will look only to the face of the return on a motion to set aside the return or the service,[41] except as to those matters respecting which the return is not conclusive.[42] In other jurisdictions, however, the plea may contradict the sheriff's return.[43] Parol evidence is admissible to show that the writ, at the time of service, was void.[44] The court, in deciding upon a demurrer to a plea in abatement for want of proper service of the writ, will not look beyond the plea to ascertain whether the service was sufficient, unless the return is referred to and made a part of the case.[45]

d. Operation and Effect of Ruling.[46] Upon the writ being quashed the case stands as if no writ had been issued.[47] Where one of two defendants pleads the general issue, but the other pleads in abatement because of defects in the writ, on sustaining the plea in abatement the suit should be abated as to one and retained as to the other.[48] Under some statutes it is provided that where an action abates by reason of an insufficient service or return due to the default or neglect of the officer, a new action may be begun at any time within a specified period.[49]

7. Time For Objections, Waiver, and Cure — a. In General. It is frequently held, often in conformity with a statute or court rule, that objections must be taken not later than the first term or a designated day thereof,[50] and in any case, unnecessary or unexcused delay or laches will deprive defendant of the right to urge formal objections to process, service, or return;[51] but such restrictions do not apply to substantial defects which render the writ or the service void.[52] Inasmuch as a general appearance waives all defects and irregularities in the process, service, or return, a party who wishes to raise any question as to these matters must do so at a preliminary stage, before taking any steps relating to the merits of the case.[53] A motion to quash a writ for a cause which may be taken advantage of supplied by referring to the writ and return in the plea, and making them a part thereof, although they contain a statement of such a time and place; and by reason of such omission the plea is defective.

Appearance as waiver of defects in service see APPEARANCES, 3 Cyc. 517.

A code provision that the objection that the court has no jurisdiction of the person of defendant may be raised by answer when it does not appear on the face of the pleadings, means that when the person is not subject to the jurisdiction of the court the objection can be so raised, not that an answer is available for raising the question whether defendant has been properly served. Nones v. Hope Mut. L. Ins. Co., 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 541.

An application made by defendants for security for costs constitutes a waiver of any objection as to service. Lhoneux v. Hong Kong, etc., Banking Corp., 33 Ch. D. 446, 55 L. J. Ch. 758, 54 L. T. Rep. N. S. 863, 34 Wkly. Rep. 753.

Merely obtaining an extension of time to answer will not constitute a waiver of a defect in the summons. Bell v. Good, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 693.

Other instances of waiver.— Defendant, by answering to the merits of the case before the court rules on its motion to quash the return of the officer on the summons, waives the motion, although he state in his answer that the motion is not waived. Newport News, etc., R. Co. v. Thomas, 96 Ky. 613, 29 S. W. 437, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 706. A mere entry in the record that a cause was "continued by consent of parties," where one of several defendants had been duly served, does not constitute a waiver of service, and confer jurisdiction, as to defendants who were not served. Snow v. Grace, 25 Ark. 570. Waiver of notice and service by a non-resident defendant in trespass to try title is not shown by a record which discloses that at one term the cause was continued for want of service, and that eighteen months afterward an order, upon motion then made, was entered, correcting, nunc pro tunc, the minutes of the term held two years previously, so as to show that at such previous term defendant's attorney appeared in a motion to quash service, securing a continuance, but discloses no service upon defendant of the motion for the order nunc pro tunc. abatement or by motion is usually regarded as a waiver.[55] And it is held that defects which are grounds for plea in abatement cannot be afterward asserted if not so urged.[56] In some statutes it is provided that no summons or service shall be set aside where there is sufficient substance about either to inform the party on whom service is made that there is an action instituted against him of the name of plaintiff therein, and of the court and time where and when he is to appear.[57] In those jurisdictions where defenses in abatement may be united with defenses in bar, a plea of the latter sort does not of course waive a contemporaneous plea in abatement founded upon an improper service or return.[58] Taking depositions to be used in the cause, while a motion to quash the writ is pending, is not a proceeding touching the merits of the case which will waive the motion.[59]

b. Laches. Where formally defective process is personally served, or where personal service is improperly made, and defendant makes no appearance and enters no objection to it but lets the cause proceed, he will not be permitted to object at a subsequent term, but will be deemed to have waived the defect by his silence.[60]

c. After Objection Overruled. Failure to except to an order overruling an objection to a defective summons, service, or return is a waiver of such objection.[61]

There is some conflict in the cases as to the effect of answering to the merits after a preliminary objection to the summons, service, or return has been improperly overruled, most authorities holding that the point is not waived, at least if an exception is taken,[62] but some holding that the objection is always waived by so answering.[63]

d. Estoppel. If the sheriff, at defendant's request, serves the writ in a manner not authorized by law, defendant will be estopped to object thereafter that due service was not made.[64]

e. Other Cases of Waiver. Defective service may be waived by giving a stipulation to answer judgment,[65] by an express agreement to consider it good service,[66] or by an agreement to submit the case to referees,[67] and a confession of judgment is a waiver of a defective writ.[68] An acceptance or acknowledgment of service precludes the party from taking advantage of any defects or irregularities in the service,[69] but it is not a waiver of any defects in the summons itself.[70]

If a judgment is void no act of ratification can impart vitality to it.[71] Statutes sometimes provide that errors and defects in process are cured after verdict.[72]

B. Amendment of Process[73] — 1. In General. Voidable process is amendable, but void process is not.[74] In other words, an amendment may be made only if there is something to amend by.[75] Or, as it is said in other cases, matters of form may be remedied by amendment, but not defects of substance.[76] Although courts have inherent discretionary power to amend their process,[77] this power is usually declared, defined, and limited by statutes,[78] which vary greatly in their terms, but ordinarily repose large discretionary powers in the court. It is usually provided that the court may, in furtherance of justice, at any stage of the proceedings, amend any process by correcting mistakes therein, upon such terms as it deems just.[79] An amendment may be allowed to cure a defect arising from the non-observance of a constitutional direction as well as of a statutory one.[80] No amendment will ordinarily be permitted when third persons have acquired rights which would be injuriously affected thereby.[81] But the hardships incident

No general rule can be stated.— "It is the infirmity of this branch of the law, that no general rules can be safely laid down to govern amendments in practice. All that ought to be said is, that they are allowed for the furtherance of justice; that they ought to be so allowed as not to operate as a surprise, either in matter of law or fact, and always upon notice to the party to be affected by them; that they ought to rest in the discretion of the court allowing or refusing them, and that this discretion, if reviewed at all by the appellate court, ought rather to be revised where the amendment is wrongfully refused, than where it is erroneously allowed." to allowance of amendments may frequently be obviated by the imposition of terms suited to the exigencies of the case, and large discretionary powers are exercised by the courts in imposing terms which will make proper the allowance of amendments otherwise prejudicial.[82] The power of amendment granted by acts of congress to the federal courts may be enlarged but cannot be diminished by the practice of the state courts.[83]

Change to representative capacity.— Where a summons showed plaintiff suing individually and alone, but the complaint showed him suing for himself and other stock-holders of defendant corporation, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 723, providing for the amendment of any process in furtherance of justice, on a motion to strike the complaint, decision would be reserved for five days from publication of the memorandum decision to enable plaintiff to amend the summons to conform to the complaint, in default of which the motion would be granted. is sued.[86] If the mistake is made by the clerk in taking the name from a memorandum or præcipe filed with him, the writ may be amended from such memorandum or præcipe.[87] But if the action is brought against one defendant, the name of another different defendant cannot be substituted by amendment without such party's consent.[88] Under liberal statutes the name of a party entirely omitted from the summons may be supplied,[89] and the names of additional defendants may be added.[90]

b. Direction to Officer. When the writ is not directed to any officer,[91] or is directed improperly or to the wrong officer,[92] it may be amended. If the sheriff cannot serve the writ and for that reason it is directed to another officer, a failure to recite the facts making such direction necessary may be cured by amendment.[93]

c. Directions For Return. There is a conflict in authority as to whether a writ made returnable at a time not authorized by law is amendable. Many early cases hold that such a writ is void,[94] but the more recent decisions hold that it is merely voidable and may be amended.[95] If the return-day is properly given, an amendment may be allowed changing it to the next term, when the amendment would

3. AFFIDAVITS, ORDERS, ETC., FOR PUBLICATION. Affidavits or orders for publication may be amended when defective merely,[28] and a defective summons, voidable only, may be amended during the course of the publication.[29] But when an order is based upon an insufficient showing made in the complaint or affidavit, a subsequent amendment of such complaint or affidavit cannot give life to the order, since the defect is jurisdictional.[30]

4. PROCEDURE. Leave of court must be obtained unless the statute gives the right to amend of course,[31] and notice of the application should usually be given to the other party;[32] but no notice is necessary unless required by statute, where the rights of the parties and the issues to be tried are not affected,[33] and amendments may be allowed without notice when the other party is in court attacking the sufficiency of the process.[34] Leave to amend a return does not authorize an amendment of the writ.[35] The motion to amend should be made in the court from which the writ issues,[36] although the appellate court, after taking jurisdiction of a cause, will sometimes amend the process.[37] The amendment may be made nunc pro tunc at a term subsequent to that at which the order allowing it is made.[38] The amendment need not always be actually made, for if the defect is amendable the

Substituted service — Distinction between misnomer of plaintiff and defendant.— "Where reliance is placed upon substituted service to acquire jurisdiction, there can be no presumption that a defendant who is misnamed in the summons will have taken any cognizance of the fact that it was designed to affect him in any way. . . . The name not being his own he may safely and properly disregard the process, for the name is presumably that of another. Hence, there is good reason for holding that the misnomer of a defendant in the summons cannot be corrected ex parte by amendment in the event of the defendant's failure to put in an appearance in the action. . . . An entirely different condition of affairs is presented, however, when the misnomer in the summons relates to the plaintiff, as in the case at bar. . . . No harm is done to the correctly-named defendant by the error in the name of the plaintiff. . . . Being put upon inquiry as to the claim, there is no reason why an amendment may not be allowed ex parte to correct the name of the plaintiff, if the defendant chooses not to appear in the action and allows judgment to go by default." writ may be deemed amended whenever the objection is taken;[39] and this rule is frequently resorted to on appeal.[40] When a summons is amended by making a new party, the better practice is that the amendment should be inserted in the original summons; but there is a substantial amendment where an additional summons incorporating the amendment is issued.[41]

5. Operation and Effect. An amendment will ordinarily be deemed to relate back to the time of the commencement of the suit.[42] As often as a writ is amended it is open to attack for defects and errors, but not as to prior defects which have been corrected.[43] If a mistake in the name of a plaintiff be corrected by amendment, the process need not be again served upon defendant who has answered.[44]

than the one to whom the writ is committed can amend it,[53] and such officer is a necessary party to any proceedings had for the purpose of effecting an amendment.[54] If the return is defective the sheriff may be compelled to correct it; but if it is complete and perfect on its face the only remedy for its falsity, if the sheriff refused to amend, is an action against the officer.[55] It is usually held that notice must be given to the adverse party before an amendment will be allowed, particularly where an extrinsic showing is necessary;[56] but some cases hold that no notice need be given.[57] When the sheriff seeks to amend for his own protection, the court will not grant leave on doubtful and unsatisfactory evidence.[58]

2. Time For Making Amendment. There is no specific limitation upon the time within which the right of amendment must be exercised, and an amendment may be allowed at any time, and at any stage of the proceedings, in the court's discretion, even after the lapse of several years,[59] and after the sheriff has gone out of office.[60] Some cases hold that the right of amendment cannot be exercised after suit brought or motion made against the officer for official default,[61] but others hold that the officer may, by leave of court, amend his return during the pendency of such suit or motion.[62]

3. Amendable Defects. Amendments in endless variety have been permitted under the general rules stated. Thus returns have been amended by adding the signature of the officer,[63] by alleging that other acts required by the statute were done in making service,[64] by adding further specifications as to the copy delivered,[65] by correcting the name of defendant,[66] by stating additional facts as to the person with whom or the place at which a summons was left,[67] by showing that one of defendants, stated to have been served, was not found,[68] by designating or correcting the date of service,[69] by stating facts as to the non-residence of one of defendants,[70] by adding specifications of details required by the statute,[71] by correcting the date of the receipt of the summons,[72] by showing that the deputy who made the service had been duly appointed by the sheriff,[73] or by showing that affiant who made the service was over eighteen years of age.[74] The proof of service by publication may be amended so as to correct defects and show the actual facts, in the same manner and to the same extent as the sheriff's return.[75] The court will never permit an untruth to be stated by way of amendment,[76] and defendant may contest the truth of the facts sought to be so introduced into the return.[77] And jurisdictional defects cannot be cured by amendment, as where it is sought to add an indorsement on the writ authorizing a previously unauthorized person to serve it,[78] where service is made by an unauthorized person and an amendment is asked for showing service by such person as deputy sheriff,[79] or where a declaration as substitute for process is served before being filed.[80]

4. Operation and Effect. When a return has been amended it has relation to the time of the original return and the amended return takes the place of the original.[81]

V. Abuse of Process.

A. In General.[82] Courts will never permit the wrongful use of their process, and in case such use is attempted the party will not be permitted to gain an advantage by reason of such wrongful act.[83] But the law goes farther, and gives the person aggrieved by the wrongful act a cause of action against the offending party.[84] This action for the abuse of process lies for the improper use of process after it has been issued, not for maliciously causing it to issue.[85]

B. Elements. It has been said that two elements are necessary, an unlawful and ulterior purpose and also an act done in the use of the process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceeding.[86] But it seems doubtful whether both of these elements must always be present.[87] It has been held that "a malicious abuse of legal process consists in the malicious misuse or misapplication of that process to accomplish some purpose not warranted or commanded by the writ." [88] And it has also been said that "whoever makes use of the process of the court for some private purpose of his own, not warranted by the exigency of the writ or the order of the court, is answerable to an action for damages for an abuse of the process of the court." [89] Similar expressions occur in many cases.[90] None of these statements include the second element above set forth. On the other hand, the second element alone has been held sufficient to impose liability, as where a writ is executed against property in an unreasonable and oppressive manner; [91] where, after arrest upon civil or criminal process, the party arrested is subjected to unwarrantable insult or indignities, is treated with cruelty, is deprived of proper food or shelter, or is otherwise treated with oppression and undue hardships; [92] or where a summons is served in an unreasonable, cruel, and oppressive manner.[93]

C. Malice. Although some cases hold that malice is a fact necessary to be shown in an action for abuse of process,[94] and while the action is often denominated one for the "malicious abuse of process," [95] it is probable that malice is not an essential element of the cause of action,[96] and becomes important only when exemplary damages are sought.[97] The act constituting the abuse must, however, be shown to have been wilful.[98] Under no circumstances will malice alone give a right of action.[99] Nor will the action lie against one who in good faith has sought to properly enforce a supposed right.[1]

founded upon the use, not the issuance of the process;[2] it need not appear that the action was instituted without probable cause,[3] and it need not appear that the action has terminated,[4] but these distinctions are not always observed.[5] It differs from false imprisonment in that, among other things, a warrant valid on its face is no defense to the action.[6]

E. Parties Liable. All the persons who knowingly participate in the abuse of process are liable as joint tort-feasors,[7] and if a party directs or consents to the unlawful acts of an officer or subsequently adopts them, he becomes liable.[8] But a plaintiff who does not direct or participate in abuse of process by the officer, and does not ratify his acts, is not liable.[9] An officer who uses process placed in

Rep. 95 (where the court said: "In examining the instructions of the learned judge to the jury in the present case, no error is found. He made a careful discrimination between the remedy for a malicious prosecution and that for a malicious abuse of process in the manner of executing it. He instructed them explicitly that no damages should be given for anything which occurred before the process was used at all by the officer, but only for what occurred after it began to be used upon plaintiff, and after it began to be wrongfully used for the purpose of collecting defendants' debt"); Herman v. Brookerhoff, 8 Watts (Pa.) 240.

The distinction stated.— There is a distinction between a malicious use and a malicious abuse of legal process. An abuse is where the party employs it for some unlawful object not the purpose for which it was intended by the law to effect, in other words a perversion of it. On the other hand legal process, civil or criminal, may be maliciously used so as to give rights to a cause of action where no object is contemplated to be gained by it other than its proper effect and execution. Kline v. Hibbard, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 50, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 807 [affirmed in 155 N. Y. 679, 49 N. E. 1099]; Humphreys v. Sutcliffe, 192 Pa. St. 336, 43 Atl. 954, 73 Am. Or it may be otherwise stated that a malicious abuse of legal process exists in the malicious misuse or misapplication of process to accomplish a purpose not warranted or commanded by the writ. The malicious perversion of a regularly issued process whereby a result not lawfully or properly obtained on a writ is secured. Hence it does not include a case where the process was procured maliciously but in which there was no abuse or misuse after its issuance. F. Actions. The action is either trespass or case, depending upon the means used.[11] Inasmuch as it need not be shown that the suit has terminated, the cause of action is complete as soon as the acts complained of are committed, and the statute of limitations begins to run from that time.[12]

VI. PROCESS AGAINST CORPORATIONS.[13]

A. Domestic Corporations — 1. In General. Where a court has jurisdiction of an action against a corporation, it has, in the absence of statutory provision, by necessary implication, the right to cause its process to be served on the proper officer of the corporation in person if resident in the state, or by publication if non-resident.[14] Where the corporate charter has been surrendered and the surrender has been accepted by the state, process can no longer be served upon the corporation.[15]

2. Waiver of Process. An attorney in fact of a corporation, unless he is a general managing agent thereof, has no power to waive service of summons.[16] Nor can stock-holders waive process upon the corporation by appearance as individuals.[17]

3. Statutory Provisions. The legislature has power to prescribe the method of service of process upon corporations doing business within the state,[18] subject only to the rule that the method provided must be one that with reasonable certainty will result in the actual reception by the corporation of the notice served.[19] Such statutes may be made to apply to existing corporations [20] and may operate as a repeal of provisions in existing special charters,[21] and subject to the rules governing statutes generally [22] may either expressly or by implication repeal existing statutes relating to the same subject.[23] Where a statute has been extended to

4. County to Which Process May Issue. b. To Whom Process Should Issue and Direction. Jurisdiction of a corporation cannot be obtained by service upon its officers or members as individuals;[33] hence a process is insufficient which, instead of directing the officer to summon defendant corporation, merely requires its agent to be summoned,[34] although in some jurisdictions it has been held that process directed to the officers of the corporation may be sustained as against the corporation, in case the complaint is annexed to the summons and is regular, and the persons served have knowledge that the action is against the corporation.[35] Conversely, service of a summons upon a corporation will not authorize the members of the corporation being held as partners[36] or as individuals;[37] nor can jurisdiction be obtained of individuals under a statute governing the service of process upon corporations.[38] So where by amendment a corporation is made a party, it must be served with process, although its officers are already before the court as individuals.[39] It is not necessary that the process state the name of the agent upon whom service is to be made.[40] Notice to a corporation may be regarded as notice to its directors, but it will not operate as notice to stockholders who are not directors.[41]

c. Description of Corporation. It is usually held sufficient that process issue against a corporation in its corporate name without other facts showing that it is a corporation.[42] Where the method of service to be employed is the same whether defendant is a corporation or a voluntary association, service properly made of the summons describing defendant as an unincorporated organization is good, although the organization is in fact incorporated.[43] Trivial errors may be disregarded.[44] As a general rule a misnomer of the corporation is regarded as an amendable defect,[45] unless the misnomer has been such that there has been in fact no citation.[46] But where defendants are sued as a partnership there must be a new service or a voluntary appearance by the corporation in order to charge them as a corporation.[47]

6. Service — a. Mode in General. Where no express provision is made for the service of process upon corporations, it has been held that a statutory provision for service upon persons generally may warrant such service upon a corporation as would be tantamount to personal service on an individual.[48] In the absence of statute substituted service cannot be had upon a corporation.[49] Where the statute points out a particular method of serving process upon corporations such method must be followed,[50] the general rule being especially exacting with reference to corporations.[51] Hence a statutory requirement as to the leaving of a copy must be followed.[52] Under some statutes service may be made by delivery of a copy without reading the original.[53] Under some statutes service may be made by the leaving of a copy

members of the inferior class it must be shown that service upon members of the superior class cannot be had.[69] Where there is no statutory provision as to the person upon whom service of process against a corporation is to be made service may be made upon any officer or agent of the corporation whose duty it is to communicate the fact of service to the governing body of the corporation.[70] Where a railroad has passed into the control and management of its bondholders, they and their agents represent the railroad company for the purpose of being served with notices directed by law to be served on the railroad company.[71] It would seem that service upon one who is merely a stock-holder is not sufficient.[72] A statute requiring a public record of an agent on whom process against the corporation may be served does not provide an exclusive method of acquiring jurisdiction but merely creates an additional agent upon whom service may be had.[73] In case service has been made upon the officer or agent designated by statute, it is immaterial that he does not communicate the fact of service to the corporation or its other officers [74] where no fraud or collusion is shown.[75] When service is made according to statute it is good, although the officers served appear and disclaim the right to answer officially.[76]

Where name of president is not posted.— Ga. Code, § 3412, provides that when the president of an express company resides in the state, his name shall be posted in each office, and for service of summons on him; otherwise, service shall be made on any agent thereof, and under this provision it was held that, after judgment on a summons on garnishment, the service was sufficient when made on an agent, where it did not affirmatively appear that the president of the company resided in the state, although his name was posted in each office of the company. (iv) Agent or Employee. Service upon a mere agent of the corporation is not sufficient unless specifically permitted by statute.[88] But in many jurisdictions, in default of the presence of a member of a superior class of officers as already noted,[89] it is expressly provided that service may be had upon an agent.[90] Under

A traveling salesman has been held an agent for the purpose of service of process. Moinet v. Burnham, 143 Mich. 489, 106 N. W. 1126. But one who sells goods for a corporation upon commission, who pays his own expenses, is master of his own time and movements, and who is without authority to fix prices, collect accounts, or transact any other business for such corporation is not an agent upon whom process can be had. Termination of agency.—A corporation need not give notice of the termination of the relationship to those transacting business with its agent, so far as the service of process is concerned. If a person served with summons as the agent of a corporation is not at the time of service such agent, the service is bad. Equitable Produce, etc., Exch. v. Keyes, 67 Ill. App. 460. Estoppel of corporation to deny agency.— When the corporation has suffered a person to hold himself out to the public as its agent so as to render it inequitable for the ap-

some statutes the nature of the agency is limited by the requirement that service be upon a chief agent,[91] general agent,[92] local agent,[93] or agent having charge of the agency out of which the transaction in question arose.[94] Service upon a mere employee or servant of the corporation is not as a general rule sufficient,[95] although under some statutes service may be made upon any officer, agent, or employee.[96] In any event service upon one who is employed by the officer of the corporation, and not the corporation, is insufficient.[97] Particular provisions are frequently made with regard to service upon railroad companies, authorizing service upon particular classes of agents, such as depot or ticket agents,[98] or freight parent agency to be denied, service of process upon such agent will be sufficient. Combs v. Hamlin Wizard Oil Co., 58 Ill. App. 123.

A person not hired or paid by a corporation, and who is not subject to the orders of such corporation, who cannot be discharged by it, and who performs no function in its behalf, is not such an agent as represents it for the purposes of service of summons. agents.[99] A general passenger agent has been regarded as a chief agent for the service of process,[1] and service may be made upon a freight solicitor as an agent.[2] In some jurisdictions service upon a railroad conductor is sustained.[3] A section foreman may be regarded as a local superintendent;[4] but a track master is not a proper person to be served, where it appears that there are officers of the corporation upon whom service may be had.[5]

(v) Officer De Facto. Where service is made upon a person who is de facto one of the officers comprehended by the statute, it is as a general rule regarded as sufficient.[6] Where a corporation has not yet received its charter, service upon one as its officer is insufficient.[7]

(vi) Persons Interested Adversely to Corporation. Where service is made upon an officer or agent who, although within the terms of the statute, sustains such a relation to plaintiff or the claim in suit as to make it to his interest to suppress the fact of service, such service is unauthorized.[8] So service will not be sustained where it is upon a person who is a party plaintiff,[9] or plaintiff's attorney in fact,[10] or who is plaintiff's assignor.[11]

(vii) After Resignation of Officer or Failure to Elect. An officer designated by statute may be served as such as long as he remains an officer de jure.[12] Service upon an officer who has effected a valid resignation is, however, inoperative.[13] But where the resignation of a corporate officer has never been acted upon and he continues to discharge his duties as officer, the corporation cannot, after he has been served by parties having no knowledge that his resignation has been tendered, assert that he has resigned prior to the service of process.[14] A fraudulent resignation to prevent service of process will not invalidate a service upon the officer who has attempted to resign.[15] Under some statutes it is provided that where a corporation has failed to elect officers upon whom process may be served it may be brought into court by publication,[16] or that service may be made upon the late proper officers.[17] Service upon the stock-holders as such, however, is not authorized, although no officers have been elected for many years.[18]

(VIII) Receiver or Agent of Receiver. Where a corporation is being operated by a receiver, service of process upon the corporation cannot be made upon the agent of the receiver.[19] Service upon the receivers, however, may be made upon their local agents in accordance with statutory provisions referring primarily to corporations,[20] and it has been held that the receivers themselves may be served as principal officers.[21] After the appointment of a receiver service upon one who previously has had the custody of the corporate property, but who has at no time been a statutory agent for the service of process, is invalid.[22] The appointment of a receiver for a railroad does not bring it within the provisions of a statute providing for the service of process, where a railroad has permitted its road to be used by any other person or corporation.[23] Where the receivers of a foreign railroad corporation operate a domestic railroad corporation, using the rolling stock of the foreign corporation and dividing the earnings, service of process against the domestic corporation upon its local agents is sufficient.[24]

(IX) Consolidated and Lessor or Lessee Corporations. Where a domestic and a foreign corporation are consolidated under the laws of the state, it has been held that the resulting corporation is to be regarded as a domestic corporation within the meaning of a statute providing for the service of process upon domestic corporations.[25] A statutory provision continuing the right of the creditors of the constituent corporations against a corporation formed by their consolidation is not in itself sufficient to make the new corporation the agent of the old for the purpose of service of process,[26] although it has been held that under such a statute a petition in a pending action against one of the constituent corporations may be amended by substituting the consolidated company as a defendant, and the judgment may be entered without additional notice to the consolidated company.[27] Although under the provisions of a statute a lessor railroad company may be liable for the negligence of servants of a lessee railroad in operating it under the lease, the agents of the lessee are not thereby made agents of the lessor for the purpose of service of process.[28] Under a provision that service may be made upon the ticket agent of a corporation in any county in which its railroad is located, the line which passes through the county need not be absolutely owned, but may be leased by defendant.[29]

e. Acknowledgment of Service. An attorney retained by a corporation defendant to represent it in an action may by his acknowledgment of service of summons submit the corporation to the jurisdiction of the court.[30]

f. Service Procured by Fraud. Jurisdiction cannot be obtained where the officer served has been induced by fraud to come within the jurisdiction of the court.[31]

g. Evasion of Service. It has been held that where the officers of the company conceal themselves to prevent service, the service may be made upon one who has repeatedly appeared as an attorney of the company.[32] And where the officer knows that a person in his presence is desirous of serving him with summons he cannot evade service by flight.[33]

h. Service by Publication.[34] By statute provision is sometimes expressly made for the service of process against domestic corporations by publication in case personal service cannot be had.[35] And in some jurisdictions personal judgment is authorized upon such service.[36] An affidavit for an order of publication must show that the statutory grounds therefor exist.[37]

7. Return — a. Sufficiency. In an action against a private corporation the return of the officer must affirmatively show that service was made upon an officer or an agent of the corporation specified in the statute as one upon whom service may be made.[38] The connection between the person served and defendant corporation must appear[39] together with the mode of service[40] and the facts authorthorizing service on corporations by publication in certain cases, service cannot be made upon a corporation by publication except in the county where it has its residence. Mt. Olive Coal Co. v. Hughes, 45 Ill. App. 566.

Effect of delay.— Where a declaration was filed and process attached against a corporation, and a regular return was made by the sheriff that defendant was not to be found, and that the president of the corporation was dead, plaintiff was not entitled after the lapse of five terms of the court, without having taken any further action in showing sufficient legal reason for the delay, to amend the process so as to make it returnable to the then ensuing term. izing the adoption of that particular method.[41] The return should show the place of service [42] and the name of the person served.[43] Where service upon a certain inferior class of officers or agents is permitted by statute only in case service cannot be had upon a superior class, the inability to serve any member of the superior class must appear from the return of a process served upon a member of the inferior class.[44]

Leaving copy.— Where two separate citations are issued against one person as the agent of two different corporations, and the return of the officer upon each citation is that he delivered a copy of "this writ," it is to be presumed, the writs being different in wording, that one was delivered for each of the corporations. b. Construction and Conclusiveness. As a general rule the return of service is to be strictly construed.[45] In accordance with the rules already stated,[46] the sheriff's return is in some jurisdictions conclusive between the parties as to the facts stated,[47] while in other jurisdictions it may be controverted.[48] For example, while in any event the return is at least prima facie evidence that persons described in it as officers or agents of the corporation are in fact such,[49] in some jurisdictions it is conclusive as to such fact,[50] while in other jurisdictions it may be controverted.[51] It will be presumed in support of the return that the officer acted within the limits of his jurisdiction.[52] So where it is shown that a person was at one time a director it may be presumed that his character as director continued until the time of service of process.[53]

8. Defects, Objections, and Waiver.[54] As a general rule defects in the process or service thereof against a corporation are properly urged by a motion to quash the process or return[55] and cannot be urged after a general appearance to the merits,[56] although where the corporation is not correctly named the defect should be taken advantage of by a plea in abatement showing the correct name.[57] Defendant must inform plaintiff how better service may be had,[58] and the corporation may by its acts be estopped from asserting that the person served was not a proper one.[59] But a failure on the part of the person served to object at the time of service that he does not occupy the office as incumbent of which he is served will not overcome his positive oath that he is not such officer on a motion to set aside the service.[60] Where a corporation sues out a writ of error after default has been taken against it, employing the name under which it was served, it cannot assert a misnomer.[61]

B. Foreign Corporations[62]— 1. In General. At common law foreign corporations could not be served with process by any of the courts of common law, nor could their property be attached to compel their appearance. The authority whenever it exists results from special custom or statutory provision.[63] Where a foreign corporation confines its operation to the state within which it is created, it cannot be sued in a state where it has no office and transacts no business, by serving process on its president or other officer or agent when accidentally or casually present within such state.[64] In order that jurisdiction may be obtained of a foreign corporation it must have entered the state in which it is served for the purpose of carrying on its business there,[65] and process must have been served upon an agent sustaining such a relation to it that notice to the agent might well be deemed notice to the principal, without a violation of the principles of natural justice.[66] A corporation is held to have impliedly agreed that it may be served with process according to the statutes of the state in which it does business by the fact that it enters the state and transacts business therein.[67] Whether a corporation has subjected itself to the laws of a state other than that of its domicile, so as to be bound by service of process in such state, in a personal action, made in accordance with its laws, is a question of general and not of local law.[68] An agreement by a corporation as a condition of doing business within the state that service of process may be made upon an agent resident for that purpose does not authorize service of process against him within the state in a transitory action for personal injuries arising in another state.[69] Under some statutes it is provided that service may be made upon a corporation which has property within the state, although the cause of action has not arisen within the state.[70] Under such a statute no specific quantity of property or value thereof is necessary to confer jurisdiction, but it must be property of a kind and value to justify a reasonable probability that the creditor may acquire something from the sale thereof.[71]

2. Statutory Provisions. As a general rule specific provisions are made by statute for the service of process upon foreign corporations.[72] And such statutes may in a proper case be construed as cumulative to statutes making provision as to the service of process upon corporations generally;[73] but as a general rule statutes making no express provisions as to service upon foreign corporations will not be deemed to apply to them,[74] although in some cases a contrary rule has been applied.[75] In case specific provisions for a particular kind of process are made by statutes relating to foreign corporations they are exclusive.[76] The fact that a corporation is required by the statute to appoint an attorney or agent upon whom process may be served is not exclusive of other methods of service;[77] and

Repeal.—A statute requiring that service of process shall be made upon an agent found within the county where the suit is brought, and that the clerk shall mail a copy of the process to the home office of the corporation, does not by implication repeal a statute regulating the service of process on a foreign corporation having a resident local agent. the same is true where the corporation is required by the statute to designate a place for service.[78]

3. General Form and Requisites. Under the present statutes process against a foreign corporation may usually issue in the form required in other civil actions.[79] Under early statutes, however, it was sometimes held that an action against such a defendant must be begun by attachment.[80] The summons need not set forth the circumstances rendering the corporation liable to suit within the state,[81] and need not name the agent on whom it is to be served.[82] The petition need not pray for the issuance of citation.[83]

4. Place of Service. In case the statute fix the place at which process shall be served its provisions must be followed.[84] Where an agent has been designated to receive service of process, service may be made upon him in a county other than that in which suit is brought.[85] Where process may be served on the principal officer of a foreign corporation it may be served on him in the county where he resides.[86] Service must be made within the limits of the state in order to authorize a personal judgment.[87]

5. Persons Who May Be Served — a. In General. In the absence of statutory provisions, process, in an action against a corporation, is sufficient if served upon some person upon whom it may fairly be presumed the duty involves, by virtue of his official position or his employment, to communicate the fact of service to the governing power of the corporation.[88] In case the statute designates the officer or agent who may be served its provisions must be followed.[89] The statutory provisions vary to a considerable degree.[90] Under some statutes the officers or agents who may be served are the same as in the case of actions against domestic corporations.[91] Where an officer or agent is appointed under a statutory requirement to receive service of process, service may be made upon him.[92] In the application of particular statutes it has been held that service may be properly made upon the president of a foreign corporation where he is a resident within the state,[93] or upon a director.[94] A locomotive engineer may by statute be made a proper person for service.[95]

Who are local agents.—A local agent is a representative of the corporation to transact its business and represent it in a particular locality; it does not embrace the idea of an agent who casually happens to be in the particular territory, or one who is temporarily sent to such territory to perform some particular purpose or specific act. Frick Co. v. Wright, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 340, 55 S. W. 608. In accordance with this rule it has been held that a person may be served as local agent who is the acting secretary (Cameron v. Jones, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 90 S. W. 1129), or a local operator of defendant wireless telegraph company (Copland v. American De Forest Wireless Tel. Co., 136 N. C. 11, 48 S. E. 501). by construction of law, and must be one having in fact representative capacity and derivative authority.[1] But the fact that the parties, as between themselves especially, disclaim their relation to be that of principal and agent is not decisive as against an inference of law from the facts surrounding the relationship.[2] The name which the person assumes, even with the knowledge of his principal, will not be controlling when the real character of his employment appears.[3] In general the agent or employee should sustain such relation to the matter growing out of the character of his employment as will impose on him the duty to report the fact to his principal or employer.[4] One corporation may be served as the agent of another corporation.[5] The person served may also be the agent of other corporations.[6] Under some statutes the person may be carrying on the business as defendant, although not technically its agent.[7] Service upon an agent of an agent has been held insufficient.[8]

(III) Managing Agents. By statute provision is frequently made that the managing agent of a foreign corporation is a proper person to receive service of process.[9] It is difficult to formulate a general rule as to what will constitute a person a managing agent,[10] and it is necessary to determine each case upon its particular facts.[11] The later decisions are apparently more liberal in interpreting

there is a resident agent.[18] In any event, to warrant service upon a traveling salesman, the corporation must be doing business within the state.[19] A mere solicitor for advertising is not to be regarded as the agent of a foreign newspaper or publishing corporation;[20] and the same rule is usually applied with regard to the freight and passenger solicitors of foreign railroad corporations.[21]

(v) Agents Connected With Cause of Action. Under some statutes where a corporation has an office or agency in any county other than that in which the principal resides, process may be made on any agent or clerk employed in such office or agency in all actions growing out of a connection with the business of that office or agency.[22]

c. Alternative Provisions. As a general rule the statutes provide that where certain principal officers or agents cannot be found service may be made upon officers or agents of less rank[23] or upon stock-holders.[24] Under other statutes where the corporation has no agent in the state upon whom service may be had process may be served on the secretary of state.[25] To support service in these alternative forms, however, the inability to make service in the preferred manner must appear.[26]

After termination of agency.—In an action against a non-resident corporation on a contract made with an agent, if the agency for carrying on the business out of which the contract in question arose has been discontinued, and the agent's authority revoked, service cannot be made on an agent in the same place, employed by defendant to transact other business. Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co., (Iowa 1891) 50 N. W. 565. In an action against a non-resident corporation on the warranty of a harvesting machine made by an agent, the court properly charged that, if the agency for carrying on the business out of which the warranty arose was discontinued, and the agent's authority revoked, service could not be made on an agent in the same place, employed by defendant to "sell his repairs and other implements." Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co., 86 Iowa 608, 53 N. W. 421, 18 L. R. A. 524. But where a foreign corporation agreed to furnish A, as its agent, machines to be sold on commission; the agreement to be in force until a certain date, it was held in an action against the corporation for breach of warranty of a machine sold by the agent, that service on the agent bound the corporation, although the action was brought after the termination of the agreement between the agent and defendant, it further appearing that defendant had not finally settled with its agent. d. After Termination of Office or Agency. After termination of the relationship the agent cannot be served as such,[27] and where an officer has effected a valid resignation, jurisdiction of the corporation cannot be obtained by service upon him.[28] An officer may be served as such, although appointed receiver of the corporation.[29]

e. Officer or Agent Temporarily Within Jurisdiction. Service may be made on an officer designated by the statute if found within the state, although he may be present on private business.[30] In case the officer or agent is sent into the state on the corporate business process may be served on him.[31] In any event the presence of the officer must not be secured by fraud or misrepresentation.[32] Under some statutes service may be made upon a managing agent, although he is only temporarily in the state upon the business of the corporation.[33]

6. Service Upon Corporation Failing to Comply With Statute. Where a corporation has failed to appoint an agent to receive service of process as required by statute it will be presumed to have assented to service upon one who acts as its agent within the state.[34] Under some statutes where there has been a failure to service on the director he called at the office of the secretary, and was told by the clerk in charge that neither the secretary nor any other officer of the company was within the state, and was given by such clerk the names of resident directors on whom service might be made. appoint a resident agent service must be by delivery of a copy to the secretary of state.[35]

7. Acceptance of Service. The fact that a person is an agent or employee upon whom service of process may be legally made does not in the absence of any statutory provision authorizing him to accept service raise any presumption as to his authority to bind the company by accepting service.[36] An admission of service must identify the process served.[37]

8. Service by Publication. Service by publication is not authorized in the absence of statutory provision.[38] But under the statutes provision is usually expressly made for such service,[39] as where the corporation has property within the state,[40] or where no officer or agent may be found upon whom service may be made.[41] And in some cases service by publication has been held to be authorized by statutes authorizing such service generally.[42] Under some statutes where the corporation has designated no agent for the service of process, service of process upon the secretary of state is substituted for service by publication.[43] Failure to publish a notice in the newspaper designated by statute is not fatal to the jurisdiction of the court, unless the statute so provides.[44] The order for publication is usually required to be based upon affidavits showing the statutory prerequisites to exist.[45] Under some statutes personal service without the state is allowed in lieu of publication.[46]

does in serving the process and should not state conclusions of law and fact apart from what was done.[54]

b. Operation and Effect.[55] The sheriff's return is in any event prima facie evidence of good service,[56] while in some jurisdictions it is conclusive as between the parties.[57] But even where it is held that the return is conclusive the actual facts may be inquired into where the return itself is not full or explicit.[58]

11. Amendment. Where the facts warrant such procedure a return of service may be corrected by amendment so as to show conformity to the statute.[59] But in case it is permissible to allow an amendment upon affidavits of person not making service, which is doubtful,[60] an amendment will not be allowed upon affidavits which are merely hearsay.[61]

12. Defects, Objections, and Waiver. In some jurisdictions the sufficiency of the service of a summons may be tried upon motion to quash the return, supported by affidavits.[62] In other jurisdictions the question may be raised by a plea in abatement.[63] But a return will not be set aside upon motion for merely technical defects which do not appear upon its face.[64] Upon a motion to vacate the service of summons, the moving party must distinctly negative the existence of circumstances which would render the service valid under the statute,[65] and the burden is on defendant to establish the grounds of his motion.[66] An appearance for the purpose of quashing the service of summons will not be regarded as a waiver of jurisdiction.[67]

it to a different state [2] and the means of such treatment.[3] (See Process Roll; Procès Verbal.)

PROCESSIONING. A proceeding to determine boundaries, in use in some of the United States, similar in all respects to the English Perambulation,[4] q. v. (See Boundaries, 5 Cyc. 945–948; Perambulation, 30 Cyc. 1389.)

PROCESS PATENT. See Patents, 30 Cyc. 822–825.

PROCESS ROLL. In practice, a roll used for the entry of process to save the statute of limitations.[5]

PROCESSUM CONTINUANDO. In English practice, a writ for the continuance of process, after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of Oyer and Terminer.[6]

PROCESSUS LEGIS EST GRAVIS VEXATIO; EXECUTIO LEGIS CORONAT OPUS. A maxim meaning "The process of law is a grievous vexation; the execution of the law crowns the work." [7]

PROCÈS VERBAL. A written official act; [8] a true relation in writing, in due form of law, of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer, and what he himself does on the occasion.[9]

PROCHEIN AMI. Next friend,[10] the latter term being defined as one who, without being appointed guardian, acts for the benefit of an infant, married woman, or other person non sui juris.[11] (Prochein Ami: Of Lunatic, see Insane Persons, 22 Cyc. 1230–1235. Of Married Woman, see Husband and Wife, 21 Cyc. 1513 text and note 13. Of Minor, see Infants, 22 Cyc. 634.)

PROCHEIN AVOIDANCE. Next vacancy; a power to appoint a minister to a church when it shall next become void.[12]

PROCLAMATION. The act of proclaiming; a declaration or notice by public outcry; [13] a public notice in writing given by a state or city official of some act done by the government, or to be done by the people; [14] the act of causing some state matters to be published or made generally known; a written or printed document in which are contained such matters issued by proper authority; [15] a notice publicly given of anything whereof the executive thinks fit to inform and notify the public; a publication by authority; an official notice given to the public; [16]

Proctors of the clergy are they who are chosen and appointed to appear for cathedral or other collegiate churches; as also for the common clergy of every diocese, to sit in the convocation house in the time of parliament. Black L. Dict.

In admiralty.—"Although counsel and attorneys are distinct officers, performing different functions, and receiving and holding their offices under distinct appellations (U. S. Sup. Ct. Rules, Feb. 5, 1790), and proctors and advocates in admiralty correspond to those law officers (1 Conk. Adm. Prac. 355, Betts, Adm. 9, 10), yet the attorney and proctor are the stamen of their respective orders, and are only subdivided in names and functions for the convenience, or pursuant to the usages, of the tribunals in which they practice (Jac. Law Dict. 'Attorney, Proctor,' etc.). In admiralty, the proctor is the only proxy of the party known upon the act or dockets of the court, and, in strictness, advocates are but a class of proctors, and not independent officers, in the constitution of that court. Clarke, Praxis, tit. 8 (Hall's annotations). . . . The act of February 26, 1853, would thus naturally be interpreted as implying the term 'proctor' to embrace all proxies of the party in an admiralty cause, as does 'attorney' and 'solicitor' those in common-law and equity cases." attorney in fact; action under a power of attorney or other constitution of agency.[27] As an ecclesiastical term, the providing necessaries for the bishops, who, in traveling through their dioceses, visit the churches subject to them.[28] (See PROCURATOR, and Cross-References Thereunder.)

PROCURATOR. In the civil law, a PROCTOR, q. v.; a person who acts for another by virtue of a procuration.[29] In old English law an agent or attorney; a bailiff or servant; a proxy of a lord in parliament.[30] In ecclesiastical law, one who collected the fruits of a benefice for another; an advocate of a religious house, who was to solicit the interest and plead the causes of the society; a proxy or representative of a parish church.[31] (See PROCTOR; PROCURATION; and, generally, ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, 4 Cyc. 889; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 31 Cyc. 1175.)

PROCURE.[32] To contrive, to bring about, to effect, to cause;[33] to acquire or provide for oneself or for another;[34] to acquire for oneself; to cause.[35] As used in the pleadings in an action, and acted on by the court, a term which imports an initial, active and wrongful effort.[36] (See ACQUIRE, 1 Cyc. 630; EFFECTED, 14 Cyc. 1231; OBTAIN, 29 Cyc. 1339. Said to mean "affect."— The following definition has been quoted, as it would seem by the context, from Webster Dict. "To contrive, effect, or bring about; to affect; to cause" (see Long v. State, 23 Nebr. 33, 45, 36 N. W. 310, construing the word as used in Cr. Code, § 1, in the phrase "procure another to commit a crime"), but "affect" is not among the definitions given in Webster Int. Dict.

To obtain from others.— To procure money, for the purpose of influencing a vote, within the meaning of Del. St. Feb. 11, 1845, § 3, is to obtain it from others. State v. Harker, 4 Harr. (Del.) 559, 561.

For another.— To "procure a female to have illicit carnal connection with any man" within the meaning of Cal. St. (1871–1872) p. 184, does not apply to mere seduction but to the crime of a procurer or procuress — in behalf of another. People v. Roderigas, 49 Cal. 9, 11. To procure manufacture, as involving implied warranty.— Of the use of the word in the passage "wherever the vendor, therefore, has himself manufactured the article sold, or procured it to be done by others . . . a warranty should be implied" (Hoe v. Sanborn, 21 N. Y. 552, 562, 78 Am. Dec. 163), it has been said that in a number of cases where the phrase has been quoted by itself "the word 'procured' has been seized upon as meaning buying it in the open market from another manufacturer, or ordering it from another manufacturer, when it is very clear from the text of the whole of the quotation . . . that by procuring it to be done is meant procuring it to be done by the manufacturer's own servants or agents" (Howard Iron Works v. Buffalo Elevating Co., 113 N. PROCUREMENT. The act of procuring, obtaining, bringing about, or effecting.[37] (See PROCURE; PROCURING.)

PROCURING. Bringing into possession; obtaining.[38] (See PROCURE; PROCUREMENT.)

PRO DEFECTU EXITUS. For, or in case of, default of issue.[39]

PRO DEFENDENTE. For the defendant. Commonly abbreviated "pro def." [40]

PRODUCE. As a noun the word has no definite, exact, and particular meaning; it may be used in a larger or more restricted sense.[41] As a verb: To bring forward;

To cause see Rosenbarger v. State, 154 Ind. 425, 427, 56 N. E. 914, where, in construing the phrase "to procure any poison to be administered" as used in Ind. Rev. St. (1881) § 1919 (Horner, § 1919; Burns, § 1992) it was held that "procure" is there employed in the sense of cause.

"Procure or suffer" in bankruptcy acts.— "Procure" is active — "suffer" passive, in the phrase, in U. S. Bankruptcy Act, "procure or suffer his property to be taken on legal process" (Campbell v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,370, 2 Biss. 423, 430, 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 498; In re Dibblee, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,884, 3 Ben. 283, 292, 293, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 617); also in the phrase "procured or suffered" a judgment (Fry v. Pennsylvania Trust Co., 195 Pa. St. 343, 345, 46 Atl. 10, holding that a judgment in proceedings instituted by a cestui que trust to have the trustee removed on the ground of insolvency is not "procured or suffered" within the meaning of the statute. Compare Benedict v. Deshel, 77 N. Y. App. Div. 276, 278, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 205, where it is said that the phrase "has procured or suffered a judgment" as used in the Bankruptcy Act, § 60 (39 U. S. St. at L. 562) indicate an act and necessarily imply intent). Of the words as used in the English bankruptcy law it is said: "The act of Parliament speaks of two different classes of acts of bankruptcy; one is by the party's 'suffering,' the other by his 'procuring,' certain acts to be done. . . . A person's procuring his goods to be taken in execution means that the initiative comes from him — he is the person who 'begins' to procure — who initiates the proceeding, and causes the thing to be done, in the ordinary sense of the word" (Gore v. Lloyd, 13 L. J. Exch. 366, 372, 12 M. & W. 463).

Importing accomplishment through instigation but not stronger than "instigate." In considering an objection to the word "procured" as used in a judicial opinion, summarizing the contents of a petition where it seems the word did not appear, it was said: "In referring to the act of sale, and the defendant's connection with it, it was stated in the opinion that the defendant 'requested, instigated and procured' the mortgagors to sell and dispose of the sheep, etc. The word 'procured' was evidently used for the purpose of expressing the idea that through the instigation of the defendant the sale had been accomplished, and could have been understood in no other way. In the petition for rehearing, in briefs of counsel, and at the argument, a great deal was said about the use of the word 'procured.' . . . One or two illustrations . . . will demonstrate whether there was any substantial ground for the objection or whether it owes its origin to a spirit of mere hair-splitting hypercriticism. At page 36, Book 4, Blackstone's Commentaries, the author . . . uses with approval Sir Matthew Hale's definition of an accessory before the fact, as 'one who being absent at the time of the crime committed, doth yet procure, counsel or command another to commit a crime.' And in the text just preceding this definition he states that a servant who 'instigates' a stranger to kill his master is an accessory before the fact. There can be no doubt then that it may properly be said of one at whose 'instigation' a crime was committed, that he 'procured' the commission thereof. At section 604 of 1st Bishop's Criminal Law, the author uses this language: 'Persuasion is one form of attempt.' It is therefore indictable to persuade or hire a person to commit a crime, especially of the heavier sort, though he declines to do it, or undertakes it and fails. Yet if this person actually does what he is persuaded or hired to do, the effort of the procurer ceases to be called an attempt, because it has become a success.' Can we doubt that here the word 'procurer' is used to mean the same thing as 'persuader,' and certainly the word 'persuade' is not so strong a word as the word 'instigate.'" And while the direct product of the soil is necessarily embraced within the terms 'produce of the State,' it may not fall within the definition of 'an article manufactured of the produce of the State.' To illustrate: Wheat is a direct product of the soil, but it is not an article manufactured of the produce of the State. Flour made of wheat grown upon Tennessee soil is an article manufactured of the produce of the State, but it is not a direct product of the soil, though manufactured out of the direct product of the soil." Y. 414, 424, 44 N. E. 87).

In the name of the New York Produce Exchange, in its charter the term is not sufficient to indicate that the purpose of the statute was to limit jurisdiction of the exchange to contracts relating to agricultural products. Haebler v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 414, 424, 44 N. E. 87.

Arising from homesteads.— "Produce, rents or profits arising from homesteads" described in an act of exemption must be that "arising directly from the use of the homestead or exempted property, such as crops and rent from the realty, and the profits or increase of the personalty." The provision is not intended to exempt "proceeds or earnings of professional men, whose skill is the principal element which produces the earnings." Staples v. Keister, 81 Ga. 772, 774, 8 S. E. 421.

"Income and produce."— The terms are very comprehensive, the income and produce of an estate including, however, a trust fund consisting in the residue of the estate after debts and legacies shall produce. Sohier v. Eldredge, 103 Mass. 345, 350.

In a broader sense — "Produce a purchaser."— In construing the rule that a real estate agent must find and produce a purchaser, etc., in order to be entitled to commissions, it was said that the word so used could not be restricted to Webster's definition (see supra, text and note); that to produce a purchaser it was not necessary that plaintiff should exhibit him to defendant. All that was required was for the defendant to know that there was such a purchaser. McCray v. Pfost, 118 Mo. App. 672, 678, 94 S. W. 998. The precise use of the word in the rule would be somewhat in doubt if the exact language of the many cases on the subject were to be separately examined. See, generally, the cases cited under FACTORS AND BROKERS, 19 Cyc. 217, 288.

In evidence.— In the phrase an issue at law shall be made up "whether the writing produced be the will of the testator" (see Starr & C. Annot. St. Ill. c. 148, par. 7) "the word 'produced' . . . must be understood as meaning produced in evidence." Henline v. Brady, 110 Ill. App. 75, 84.

PRODUCE BUSINESS. A term which has been held to apply to business of buying and selling butter, eggs, poultry and produce, selling from cars, a railway depot and a store.[47] (See PRODUCE.)

PRODUCE DEALER. A term held to be included within the scope of the word "merchant."[48] As defined by statute, every person whose duty it is to buy and sell produce, fish, meats and fruits from wagons and carts.[49] (See PRODUCE.)

Incidental dealing in certain meats.— The provision "every person whose business it is to buy and sell produce, fish, meats and fruits from wagons and carts shall be regarded as a produce dealer," together with the qualification that "no additional license shall be required from produce dealers for selling meat" seems "to indicate, not that the selling of meat is characteristic of a produce dealer, but that the produce dealer who gets his license as such, has the further privilege, or a sort of grace and favor extended to him, within the limited amount mentioned in the statute . . . that he might supply the necessities of society in having at his stall not only the product of the garden and the product of the stream . . . but that he might also sell a limited quantity of bacon and the like, with dried beef and other things which go to make up the complement of a produce dealer's establishment, without thereby depriving himself of the character and privileges of a produce dealer," and one who sells only meat is not a produce dealer within the meaning of the statute. I. Definition and Nature.

Broadly, profanity is language irreverent toward God or holy things, covering especially all oaths that literally interpreted treat lightly of the attributes or acts of God.[1]

II. Character and Elements of Offense.

A. Character as Nuisance in General. But as used in this article it refers to cursing or swearing by the name of God,[2] or any word importing an imprecation of divine vengeance or implying divine condemnation, although the name of God is not used.[3] Profane swearing and cursing, in a loud and boisterous tone of voice, and in the presence and hearing of citizens of the commonwealth in a public place, to such an extent as to be a common nuisance to all citizens being present and

"Go to hell, you low-down devils," is not a violation of Miss. hearing the same, is an indictable offense and was so at common law,[4] because such conduct tends to disturb the peace and corrupt the morals and is contrary to the good order of society.[5] Hence it may be said that the gravamen of the offense of profanity or profane cursing or swearing is in its being a public nuisance, in so far as the offense is an indictable one, and it is necessary that the profanity should take such form and be uttered under such circumstances as to constitute such a nuisance.[6]

B. Publicity and Hearing of Others. So, as the act charged must be a nuisance to be an indictable offense at common law, it follows that to make the profane swearing a nuisance, the profanity must be uttered in the hearing of other persons,[7] and it is not enough merely that it was done in the public streets.[8] But if the acts are committed in the presence of other persons, then, as far as the character of the place may be material, such presence will, it is said, make any place for the occasion public.[9]

C. Repetition of Language. A single utterance of a profane oath, at least when not repeated or in a loud voice, is held not to be per se indictable.[10] But the act must be so repeated in public as to become an annoyance and inconvenience to the public,[11] although the continued and public use of profane oaths, frequently and boisterously repeated, on a single occasion, is indictable as a public nuisance.[12] And even a single oath, either by its terms, its tone, or its manner, might under the peculiar circumstances be held to be a nuisance, but such cases would constitute exceptions to the general rule.[13]

D. Under Statute. In some jurisdictions the offense of profanity or profane cursing is made punishable by statute,[14] or municipal ordinance,[15] sometimes

As laid in the indictment, the offense consisted of a single and distinct act of cursing, without any averment that it was continued for any space of time, or that the words were many times repeated, and that in later cases (State v. Chrisp, 85 N. C. 528, 39 Am. Rep. 713; State v. Brewington, 84 N. C. 783) is said to have been the point on which the decision turned.

16. See DISORDERLY CONDUCT, 14 Cyc. 466. And see State v. Cainan, 94 N. C. 880, under an ordinance providing that "every person found guilty of loud and boisterous cursing and swearing in any street, house, or elsewhere in the city . . . disturbing the peace of the city, or violating the rules of decency, shall be fined five dollars for every offence," the court holding that the acts and things forbidden do not constitute nuisances, but that the purpose of the ordinance is to promote good morals, the decencies and proprieties of society, and prevent nuisances and other criminal offenses, that might result from the acts and conduct prohibited.

The legislature can empower a municipality to make the use of such language punishable by its ordinances, when it falls short of being a nuisance, punishable by state law, from not having been "committed in the presence and hearing of divers persons, to their annoyance," etc., and it could do this directly, if it could do it indirectly, as by authorizing a municipality to make an ordinance to that effect. Profane language in presence of female — In general.— In Georgia the use of profane language, without provocation, in the presence of a female, is made a misdemeanor. See Foster v. State, 99 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 613.

Words spoken.— The statute is held, under the rule of strict construction applicable to penal statutes, to contemplate spoken words only. Williams v. State, 117 Ga. 13, 43 S. E. 436.

Provocation and knowledge of presence.— There being no evidence that the profane language alleged to have been used by defendant in the presence of females was without provocation, or that defendant knew of the proximity of the females, it was held that his conviction was contrary to law. Hardin v. State, 114 Ga. 58, 39 S. E. 879; Parks v. State, 110 Ga. 760, 33 S. E. 73. The accused may defend by showing that he was provoked to use the language by one other than such female; the sufficiency of the provocation being a question for the jury, under all the circumstances of the case. Ray v. State, 113 Ga. 1065, 39 S. E. 408. It is not necessary, to make the offense complete, that the female should be an eye-witness of the conduct. She could hear oaths as well with her back turned as though she were looking at the person using them. Roberts v. State, 123 Ga. 505, 51 S. E. 505; Sailors v. State, 108 Ga. 35, 33 S. E. 813, 75 Am. St. Rep. 17.

20. State v. Graham, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 134, holding that an isolated case of profanity may be punishable under a local statute imposing a pecuniary penalty for each oath, to be recovered before a justice of the peace. In Ex p. Delaney, 43 Cal. 478, it was held that under a municipal charter authorizing the passage of ordinances to prohibit "practices" against good morals, etc., an ordinance is not unauthorized because it punishes a single utterance of profane words, upon the theory that the word "practices," as used in the statute, necessarily implied an act often repeated by the same person, as, if this were so, an ordinance which should punish the discharge of firearms in a crowded street of the city, or the indecent exposure of one's person, would be nugatory, unless each individual complained of was found to have frequently repeated the same offense.

21. Bodenhamer v. State, 60 Ark. 10, 28 S. W. 507, where the statute was held not to require that the profane language shall be used publicly in order to constitute the crime.

III. PROSECUTION.

A. In General. Although profane swearing when committed in single acts may be punished summarily by a justice of the peace, under the statute,[22] nevertheless, where the acts are repeated so as to become an annoyance and an inconvenience to the citizens at large, they are indictable as common nuisances.[23] Distinct convictions may be had for distinct offenses of profane cursing by the same defendant in relation to the same person on the same day.[24] But an information and conviction for swearing the same profane oath several times on the same day need not complain or convict of each of them separately.[25]

B. Indictment,[26] Information,[27] or Complaint[28]— 1. In General. In accordance with the elements of the offense of profanity as a nuisance at common law,[29] an indictment must specifically set forth all the facts and circumstances which go to make up such offense;[30] and the averment to the common nuisance or its equivalent is essential.[31] The offense may be charged in the usual form, although there is but a single act, the question whether the manner, tone, and other circumstances make it a nuisance being for the jury.[32]

2. Setting Out Words Spoken. On a prosecution for profane swearing the words spoken constitute the gist of the offense and must be set out in the indictment,[33] in order that the court may decide as to their quality.[34] But a charge in

II, c. 21, by which laborers, sailors, and soldiers were to forfeit 1*s.* and all others under the degree of gentlemen, 2*s.*, and every gentleman, or person of rank, 5*s.*, for each oath, to the poor of the parish, and that under these acts, each oath or curse is a distinct and complete offense.

30. State v. Brewington, 84 N. C. 783; State v. Jones, 31 N. C. 38; Com. v. Linn, 158 Pa. St. 22, 27 Atl. 843, 22 L. R. A. 353, holding that it is not sufficient merely to charge profane swearing and to allege that it was "to the evil example and to the common nuisance of the good citizens of the state of Pennsylvania."

Proof cannot aid omission of allegation.— An indictment which merely charges that defendant "did profanely curse and swear, and take the name of Almighty God in vain," etc., "to the common nuisance," etc., charges no offense, and cannot be sustained by proof of acts which would constitute a nuisance, as the allegation would not support such proof. State v. Powell, 70 N. C. 67; State v. Jones, 31 N. C. 38.

34. State v. Pepper, 68 N. C. 259, 12 Am. Rep. 637.

Number of oaths.— An information is not uncertain which charges thirty-three oaths, and sets forth the words of one only. Johnson v. Barclay, 16 N. J. L. 1, holding that the information need not specify the offense or offenses with as much certainty as is necessary in an indictment, the proceeding by "information" not being in the nature of a public prosecution in a criminal case in which an indictment would lie but the information being given under oath to a magistrate to justify his issuing process for the accused, and thus is different from an information filed by the attorney-general, in lieu of an indictment.

After verdict a complaint for the offense under the statute which charges the offense inhibited without setting out the curses will be held sufficient. State v. Freeman, 63 Vt. 496, 22 Atl. 621, where the court referring to Rex v. Sparling, Str. 497, and the the precise words of the oath spoken is sufficiently specific as a setting out of the nature of the oath.[35]

3. Publicity and Repetition. An indictment for profane swearing should allege that the words were uttered in the presence or hearing of others,[36] for which purpose it should be alleged in express or equivalent terms that the utterances were in the presence of divers persons, and the omission of the averment or the substitution of any other or equivocal one which does not mean the same thing will render the indictment bad;[37] and it should be alleged that the acts were so repeated in public as to have become an annoyance and inconvenience to the public.[38] An allegation that the words were uttered publicly will not do.[39] But the averment that the words were uttered "in a public place" to the common nuisance of the citizens has been held sufficient.[40]

4. Charge in Language of Statute. In this as in other offenses [41] whose elements are fixed by statute, it has been held that the statutory offense of profane swearing may be sufficiently charged by employing the language of the statute defining the offense.[42] Where the statute is directed against disturbing the peace, and the use of the language is not of the gist of the offense, it is held that it is sufficient to charge reason there given why the words should be set forth, that what is a profane oath or curse is matter of law, and what is matter of law ought not to be left to the judgment of the witness, approved it but distinguished that case from this in that in the trial below the question was not left to the witness, for the words used were in evidence and in issue, and whether as matter of law they were profane curses or not was left, as the respondent claimed it should be, to the jury. The respondent claimed that the jury were judges of the law and the court instructed them that they had the power to judge of it, and gave them suitable instructions as to what constituted profane curses, in a charge not excepted to.

35. Johnson v. Barclay, 16 N. J. L. 1, as to an information before a magistrate.

The whole conversation need not be set out, and a presentment charging that defendant, in a public place, and in the presence and hearing of divers good citizens of the state, unlawfully uttered, published, and spoke the gross, scandalous, profane, and blasphemous language therein stated, to the great scandal and common nuisance of all good citizens, etc., was held sufficient, it being necessary to set out only so much of the conversation as clearly describes the language used, and the useless et ceteras in the presentment may be rejected as surplusage. 37. State v. Barham, 79 N. C. 646; State v. Pepper, 68 N. C. 259, 12 Am. Rep. 637, holding that an averment that the profanity was "to the common nuisance of all the good citizens of the State, then and there being assembled," is equivocal; that taken literally it would mean that all the citizens of the state were assembled in the particular place laid, which would be absurd; that if it be understood as alleging that the profanity was to the nuisance of all such citizens of the state as were then and there assembled, it is not a direct and positive averment that any citizens were so assembled, and the averment might be true, although there were no persons assembled.

38. State v. Barham, 79 N. C. 646; State v. Pepper, 68 N. C. 259, 12 Am. Rep. 637; State v. Jones, 31 N. C. 38. See also State v. Brewington, 84 N. C. 783, where the indictment was held sufficient which charged the swearing to have been in the presence and hearing of divers persons then and there assembled; in a public street and highway; that the utterances were on divers days and times and thus became an annoyance to the public, "a common nuisance to all the good citizens of the state there assembled," that is, the divers persons present on the divers days and times all of whom are alleged to have heard the offensive words spoken.

(Tenn.) 135; State v. Graham, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 134, holding that if the indictment be in other respects good, it is not a fatal defect to omit the allegation that the words were uttered in the presence of divers good citizens, the omission being supplied by the other averments].

Particular public place.— An indictment charging a violation of a statute making it an offense to use profanity in any public place, which states that accused cursed in a public place, was held fatally bad for failing to state the particular public place. the offense in the language of the statute without setting out the words used by the accused.[43]

C. Conviction Before Magistrate.[44] It has been held that the record of a conviction before a magistrate must set forth the oaths and curses so that the court may judge whether they are profane;[45] but where an oath is repeated a number of times the conviction need not set out the oaths separately for each utterance, but is sufficient if it states the particular oath once and shows the number of times it was repeated.[46]

PROFESSIONAL. An adjective applied to men who work rather with their heads than with their hands, to services such as those of a consulting engineer or lawyer as distinguished from those of a laborer or operative.[16] Also applied to a calling or occupation to the proper use and understanding of which scientific learning and knowledge is essential;[17] to the capacity in which a physician acts toward a patient,[18] or that of an attorney to his client.[19] (See PROFESSION.)

Such words we should ordinarily apply to an entirely different class of men. To a class who obtain their living by coarse manual labor, as distinguished from professional men; men who work with their hands, rather than their heads. . . . The plaintiff . . . correctly described his services as 'professional' as contradistinguished from those of a 'laborer' or 'operative.'"

"Professional employment" in a statute concerning misconduct or neglect therein (Mich. Comp. Laws, § 5734; Mich. W. 176, 32 Am. Rep. 148), and does not apply to service which is not such that it can be performed only by an attorney at law when undertaken by one who does not appear to have held himself out as or to have been an attorney, and in whom it does not appear that confidence was imposed in reliance upon any supposed or assumed professional character (Bronson v. Newberry, 2 Dougl. There is no such technical or peculiar meaning to the phrase 'rents and profits' as to deny a synonym in 'profits and gains.' A rent is a profit, and the profit in rents and profits is a profit still. Not only does the testator use the words 'profits and gains,' but also the word 'income' to describe the same property. . . . I think that the words 'gains' or 'profits' are also equipollent with the terms 'interest,' 'income' or 'profits' of personal property"); Matter of Proctor, 85 Hun (N. Y.) 572, 574, 33 N. Y. J. Eq. 493, 499, 21 Atl. 1035 (holding that as between the persons under contract to divide them, profits do not necessarily imply money to be divided; they may be represented by the unsold portion of the property which was the subject of the speculation); Halhead v. Young, 6 E. & B. 312, 324, 2 Jur. Rents and profits not an annuity.— Rents and profits of certain real estate in trust to be applied to the use of a person during life clearly do not constitute an annuity; the words refer to the sum annually yielded and to the annual yield as its sole source. Option to take new shares not a profit see CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 565, text and note 53.

that "profits are divided by writers on political economy."

"The terms 'gross' and 'net' profits . . . may be properly applied where . . . out of the whole profits certain payments or deductions are to be made, and what remains only to be treated as profits to be divided, 'divisible' profits or surplus as ordinarily termed by insurance companies." Bain v. Ætna L. Ins. Co., 21 Ont. 233, 241.

"Profits," as distinguished from "net profits," is susceptible of the construction that it should include the difference between the actual cost and selling prices; "net profits" may be construed to mean what is left, after deducting from the selling price the actual cost price together with all expenses incidental to the procurement of the property in the first instance and to its sale thereafter. Potential gain.— A jury was instructed to allow as damages such profits as they might find the plaintiff had been deprived of by the termination of a contract by defendants. In reply to the argument that only actual damages and not profits were to be inquired into, it was said: "But it by no means follows that profits are not to be allowed, understanding, as we must, the word profits in this instruction as meaning the gain which the plaintiff would have made if he had been permitted to complete his contract." Cannot consist of earnings never yet received see People v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 72 Cal. 199, 203, 13 Pac. 498, holding that a bank authorized to pay dividends out of surplus profits could not base them on interest due, but not collected.

Under Internal Revenue Act (13 U. S. St. at L. 281, c. 173, §§ 116, 117), providing that the gains and profits of companies other than those there specified shall be included in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income of any person entitled to the same, whether divided or otherwise, referring to a former case not named, in which it had been held that the gains and profits a stockholder was entitled to in any particular year were his proportion of such part of the profits as the directors or trustees acting in good faith should deem it beneficial and wise and prudent to subtract from the business and set apart for division, and following that case, it was held that profits, in the sense not of net profits but of earnings over and above the amount so set aside and expended by the company in the course of its business, were not the kind of profits to which the stockholder was entitled. Hubbard v. Brainard, 35 Conn. 563, 569–573. As used in Internal Revenue Act, § 122, as amended in 1866, taxing railroad or canal companies upon "all profits of such company carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction," the word refers to the profits arising from the operation of the road or canal, without deduction of interest paid to its bondholders or dividends paid to its stockholders. Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 110 U. S. 205, 207, 3 S. Ct. 565, 28 L. ed. 120.

For purposes of taxation.— As used in 1 N. Y. Rev. St. p. 416, § 9, providing that in all certain companies duly shown, any party in receipt of any profits or income shall not be taxed, net profits and income are not intended. People v. New York, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 605, 606, 607.

"Profits used in construction," as the phrase occurs in Internal Revenue Act, June 30, 1864 (13 U. S. St. at L. 284), does not include profits used in repairs, but only those used in betterments. Grant v. Hartford, etc., R. Co., 93 U. S. 225, 227, 23 L. ed. 878.

Of Centennial Exposition.— As used in Act Cong. Feb. 16, 1876, concerning the centennial board of finance, postponing payment of dividend or percentage of profits to stockholders therein to repayment of the appropriated fund to the United States, the word "profits" was said to represent the net receipts of the business of the exhibition to expenses.[47] The word alone or with "rents" and kindred words, indicating the source from which a fund is to be raised, may be interpreted as including the results of a sale when there is nothing to exclude that construction.[48] Of real

Accruing on stock of company formed for a single venture.—"Such profits as may accrue" on the capital stock of a company formed only for the development and sale of a certain tract of land, are not "the ordinary dividends which are annually declared out of the yearly earnings of an ordinary trading corporation which is organized to continue for a long term of years, and whose profits result from reinvesting and turning over its funds periodically," but "those which will from time to time and finally be derived from the sale of the lands of the corporation originally purchased by it." Morris v. Shepard, (N. J. Ch. 1902) 53 Atl. 172, 174.

47. Guthrie v. Wheeler, 51 Conn. 207, 213.

The net profits realized from the sale by trustees of a mortgage in which they have invested moneys of the estate are "income and profits" and not a part of the corpus of the estate. Park's Estate, 173 Pa. St. 190, 195, 197, 199, 33 Atl. 884, in dissenting opinion below, adopted on appeal.

"The 'entire' rents and profits" of an estate, as used in a testamentary trust to pay annually for life, may be construed "'all' the rents and profits," and is as applicable to the net income as to the gross income, the better construction of the word in question being that the income shall bear the expenses. Guthrie v. Wheeler, 51 Conn. 207, 213.

"Rents and profits" of a trust estate, while they do not include purchase-money received in part payment for land the purchase of which was abandoned by the purchasers, and wherein the trustee is bound to reimburse the latter, do include as chargeable against the trustee, all the rents and profits he has received or would have received by reasonable efforts. Mansfield v. Alwood, 84 Ill. 497.

Not limiting accompanying word.—A widow to whom "rents and profits" are bequeathed is entitled to gross rents without deduction. "The use of the word 'profits' can not be deemed to be a limitation upon, or qualification of, the preceding word, 'rents.'" Morton v. Morton, 112 Ky. 706, 710, 66 S. W. 641, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2079.

"Net profits" bequeathed during widowhood construed as meaning "only the profits accruing to the widow after the taxes and expenditures for repairs had been paid out of what would be obtained from the estate." Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 414, 420, 58 Am. Dec. 714.

Increase of live stock included in "rents, issues and profits," although perhaps not in a strictly etymological sense. Harris v. Van de Vanter, 17 Wash. 489, 492, 50 Pac. 50.

The natural meaning of the word 'profits' is confined to such as are annual, though in this court on particular occasions, and to serve particular purposes, the sense thereof has been extended, unless where subsequent words were thought to abridge it; but still any one not a lawyer would understand it in the restrained sense"); Bootle v. Bundell, 19 Ves. Jr. 494, 528, 34 Eng. Grass eaten by cattle of the owner of land whereon it grows is "profits" of such land received by the owner in such sense as to prevent exclusive possession against him by another. Rennie v. Frame, 29 Ont. 586, 588.

"Profits from the farm," with a further specification of "crops, stock, hogs and poultry," agreed upon as compensation for the labor of production, the latter being furnished by the tenant, is construed to mean all the products and not "net profits," merely. Richmond v. Connell, 55 Conn. 403, 404, 11 Atl. 853.

Used by mistake instead of "proceeds" or an equivalent term, in a will mentioning "profits" obtained from sale of realty see Stewart v. Stewart, 31 N. J. Eq. 398, 406.

Of a plantation.— In the case of the cultivation of a plantation, as early as 1859, the word had (at least in Montgomery county, Alabama), a general popular signification. "It was never confounded with rents, or with proceeds; it denoted the annual gain, or income, from the sale of products, after a deduction of the expenses of cultivation. There was no deduction because of the value of the labor, for the labor was the property of the owner, as was the land cultivated." Taylor v. Harwell, 65 Ala. 1, 11.

Actual proceeds.— "It is clear that the expression 'in receipt of the profits of any land' is used in the Act, in conjunction with the words 'in possession' of the land, to denote not the receipt of rent from a tenant, but the receipt of the actual proceeds of the land; and they were no doubt introduced to prevent any question arising when the owner, although he received the proceeds, did not actually occupy the land." Lord St. Leonard Prop. Stat. 47 [quoted in Darley & Bosanquet Limitations (2d ed.), 301 (quoted in Rennie v. Frame, 29 Ont. 586, 590)] commenting on the phrase as used in a statute of limitations.

"Other annual profits," in a will, include tiles, brick, and earth taken, though not annually, from an estate, when words immediately preceding, namely "timber felled," so that the testator did not use "annual" in its true sense. Evidence.— Testimony as to net profits of a neighboring farm is not admissible to show mesne profits. Profits made during years barred by the statute of limitations cannot be assumed, so that an instruction that taxes should be charged on profits of such years would be erroneous. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 10 Md. 234, 241.

Compared with "rent" or "rents" see Otis v. Conway, 114 N. Y. 13, 16, 20 N. E. 628 (where it is said: "Rent is something which a tenant renders out of the profits"); Bennett v. Austin, 81 N. Y. 308, 319 (where it is said that "profits" is distinguished from "rent," which is a fixed and certain sum of "the result of trade, which is fluctuating and uncertain and dependent upon skill, care and the nature and amount of the business transacted"); People v. Van Rensselaer, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 189, 200 (where it is said: "Rents 'or' profits . . . often mean the same thing; though rent is a tribute which issues out of land, as a part of its actual or supposed profits; and the word 'profits,' means yearly 'profits'").

Under lease.— Money paid as a forfeiture under a lease for failing to work leased premises is "profits" within a homestead exemption under Ga. Code, § 2026. Larey v. Baker, 85 Ga. 687, 691, 11 S. E. 800. Profits payable for use of premises under a lease, whether rent reserved or an additional sum in consideration of service rendered, is not a basis of distress for rent when unascertained. App. 389, 398, so holding within section 5 of the Real Property Limitations Act, providing that the right to make an entry shall be deemed to have first accrued at the last time at which any profits or rent of the land have been received, the owner receives profit from the time a building or addition is put upon the land.

Measure of mesne profits.— Either profits actually received or annual rental value. Worthington v. Hiss, 70 Md. 172, 185, 16 Atl. 534, 17 Atl. 1026. Where there is occupation of a farm or land used only for agricultural purposes and the income and profits are of necessity the produce of the soil, the owner may have an account of the proceeds of the crops or other products actually raised or sold thereon, deducting the expenses of cultivation. There are necessarily rents and profits in such cases, but even there, it is more usual to arrive at the same result, by charging the occupier, as tenant, with a fair annual money-rent. But the proprietor of city lots, with improvements thereon, can only derive therefrom as owner, a fair occupation-rent for the purposes for which the premises are adapted. This constitutes the rents and profits in the legal sense of the terms of such property, and is all the owner can justly claim in this shape from the occupier. 54. Head v. Porter, 70 Fed. 498, 501, adding: "They are the direct pecuniary benefits received, and are capable of a definite measurement. Calling them the 'measure of damages in equity' does not mean that they are the same as damages in an action at law."

55. 3 Robinson Patents, § 1062, note 7, par. 3 [quoted in Head v. Porter, 70 Fed. 498, 501], adding: "This gain or saving is a fact. It is an actual pecuniary benefit which has resulted directly from the defendant's wrongful use of the plaintiff's property, which he has had and enjoyed, and to which, on equitable theories, the plaintiff is entitled."

Loss and gain to be considered in computing.— In ascertaining profits upon the use of a patent he that claims them may not take such items of the business as may show gain, and reject such as show loss, but must take the entire business where the use of the patent covers the entire business. Curry v. Charles Warner Co., 2 Marv. (Del.) 98, 112, 42 Atl. 425.

Distinguished from "damages" under the Patent Act.— As used in the provision awarding "in addition to the profits to be accounted for by the defendant, the damages the complainant has sustained thereby . . . the terms . . . are hardly convertible. They seem to mean different things. The latter are to be awarded 'in addition' to the former. Profits, doubtless, refer to what the defendant has gained by the unlawful use of the patented invention, and damages, to what the complainant has lost." Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. Van Antwerp, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,600, 2 Ban. & A. 252, 9 Off. Gaz. 497. La Baw v. Hawkins, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,961, 1 Ban. & A. 561.

"Damages" is used synonymously in decrees in copyright and patent cases with "profits" which is the more accurrate and sufficient word. Social Register Assoc. v. Murphy, 129 Fed. 148.

The two words appear to be used indiscriminately, and as synonyms, apparently to avoid too frequent repetition."

Compared with "prevent."— After discussing a synonymous use of the two words in a city charter conferring police power, it was said: "The rule is, that if there be a 'material' alteration in the words or phrases used, a different intent may be inferred. The difference between 'prevent' and 'prohibit' is not sufficiently material. I. DEFINITION AND GENERAL NATURE OF WRIT.

The writ of prohibition is an extraordinary judicial writ issuing out of a court of superior jurisdiction and directed to an inferior tribunal properly and technically denominated such, or to an inferior ministerial tribunal possessing incidentally judicial powers and known as a quasi-judicial tribunal, or even in extreme cases to a purely ministerial body, commanding it to cease abusing or usurping judicial functions.[1] A writ of prohibition is a prerogative writ to be used with great

Other definitions are: "A writ issuing out of the Superior Courts, 'directed to the judge and parties of an inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution of a suit, upon a suggestion, that either the cause, originally, or some collateral matter therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court." "An extraordinary writ issuing out of a court of superior jurisdiction, and directed to an inferior court, commanding it to cease entertaining jurisdiction in a cause or proceeding over which it has no control, or where such inferior tribunal assumes to entertain a cause over which it has jurisdiction, but goes beyond its legitimate powers, and transgresses the bounds prescribed to it by law." State v. Ward, 70 Minn. 58, 63, 72 N. W. 825; State v. Evans, 88 Wis. 255, 263, 60 N. W. 433.

caution and forbearance for the furtherance of justice, and for securing order and regularity in all the tribunals where there is no other regular and ordinary remedy.[2] The legitimate scope and purpose of the writ is to keep inferior courts within the limits of their own jurisdiction, and to prevent them from encroaching upon the jurisdiction of other tribunals.[3] The practice in issuing and enforcing the writ of prohibition is regulated by statute, but its nature, object, and function, as well as the facts governing the issue thereof, are regulated by the common law.[4]

II. Discretion as to Grant of Writ.

According to the weight of authority a writ of prohibition is not a writ of right, but of sound discretion, to be granted or withheld by the court exercising super-

Statutory definition.—A writ of prohibition is defined by statute in Kentucky to be an order of a circuit court to an inferior court of limited jurisdiction, prohibiting it from proceeding in a matter out of its jurisdiction. Clark County Ct. v. Warner, 116 Ky. 801, 76 S. W. 828, 830, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 857; Gibbs v. Louisville, 95 Ky. 471, 474, 26 S. W. 186, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 46; Thomas v. Davis, 110 S. W. 408, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 569.

Under Ida. Rev. St. (1887) § 4994, the writ of prohibition is the counterpart of the writ of mandate. It arrests the proceedings of any tribunal, corporation, board, or person where such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such tribunal, corporation, board, or person. Bragaw v. Gooding, 14 Ida. 288, 94 Pac. 438.

As action or special proceeding see Actions, 1 Cyc. 724.

As collateral proceeding.—The remedy by the writ of prohibition is not a part or continuation of the prohibited proceeding, by removing it from one court to another for the purpose of adjudication in the latter; but it is wholly collateral to that proceeding, and is intended to arrest it and prevent its being further prosecuted in a court having no jurisdiction. It is in effect a proceeding between two courts, a superior and an inferior, and is the means whereby the superior exercises its due superintendence over the inferior, and keeps it within the limits and bounds of the jurisdiction prescribed to it by law. Mayo v. James, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 17.

Origin of writ.—"This writ is of English origin, being one of the great common-law prerogative writs long in use. It is known and recognized as a judicial remedy in most of the states, yet is but little regulated, so far as we are aware, by a statute, the English precedents and practice being very generally followed in this country. In early times, in England, the chief use of prohibitions is said to have been to restrain the ecclesiastical courts from interfering in matters which were properly subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of common law; and the clergy complained earnestly that the common-law courts extended their interference with the spiritual courts by means of their prohibitions too far. Power to issue it was vested not only in the king's bench, but also in the courts of chancery, exchequer, and common pleas; and it might issue to any inferior court of common law, or to the courts of the counties palatine, to the county courts or courts baron, or to the courts christian or ecclesiastical, the university courts, the court of chivalry or the court of admiralty, when they were about to act in any matter not within their jurisdiction, or were to transgress the bounds prescribed to them by the laws of the realm." visory control, according to the nature and circumstances of each particular case.[5] It has been held in some cases, however, that the writ is a matter of right where the inferior court had no jurisdiction originally,[6] or when it is invoked by a party aggrieved, who brings himself clearly within the law.[7] In any event the issue of the writ is a matter of discretion where there is another legal remedy,[8] where the question of jurisdiction is doubtful or depends upon facts which are not made matter of record,[9] where the application for the writ is made by a stranger,[10] or where want of jurisdiction of the inferior court does not appear on the face of the proceedings and the application for prohibition is not made until after judgment or verdict in that court.[11] of an administrative or ministerial [13] or of a legislative [14] character not falling within its province.

B. Of Public Boards — 1. Acting in Quasi-Judicial Capacity. A public board acting in a quasi-judicial character becomes an inferior tribunal amenable to the writ whenever it exceeds its authority or exercises an authority which it does not possess.[15]

2. Having Power to Legislate. But the writ will not lie against a public board having the power to legislate for the purpose of arresting the progress of any legislation pending therein.[16]

3. Performing Purely Minsterial Duties. Nor will the writ lie to restrain such a board from performing purely ministerial or executive acts.[17]

C. Of Public Officers — 1. In General. Prohibition will not lie to restrain a public officer from performing purely ministerial duties,[18] or from performing judicial acts within his jurisdiction.[19] But any abuse or usurpation of judicial power on the part of a public officer acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial character will be restrained by prohibition.[20]

C. Want or Excess of Jurisdiction — 1. In General. Although it has been held that the writ will not lie where an inferior tribunal, in a cause properly within its jurisdiction, purposes to exceed its powers,[30] but only to restrain such a tribunal from usurping jurisdiction,[31] yet the rule supported by the great weight of authority is that the writ will lie in all cases either of abuse or usurpation of jurisdiction by an inferior tribunal.[32] And this rule applies to a court of equity as well

2. Jurisdiction of Person. Prohibition will issue to restrain action where the inferior tribunal has, by reason of want of service [36] or invalidity of service [37] of process, not acquired jurisdiction of the person. However, where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the question of its jurisdiction of the person turns upon some fact to be determined by the court, its decision that it has jurisdiction, if wrong, is an error for which prohibition is not the proper remedy.[38]

7. Disqualification of Judge by Interest. In jurisdictions where there are no statutes prohibiting judges from sitting in causes in which they are interested [47] as well as in jurisdictions where such statutes exist,[48] the authorities uniformly hold that when a judge of an inferior court is recused before judgment in a cause in which he has an interest, such as disqualifies him, and a prohibition is applied for to restrain him from sitting in the cause, it will be granted, although the court over which he presides has jurisdiction. And the writ will be awarded without inquiry as to whether the parties will call or not, for an adjudication on the particular matter as to which the interest of the judge exists.[49]

8. Usurping or Exceeding Appellate Jurisdiction. Prohibition will be granted to restrain an appellate court from entertaining an appeal whenever such appeal does not properly lie to it,[50] or whenever, owing to the defective manner of taking the appeal,[51] jurisdiction has not been acquired. So too prohibition will lie where an appellate court having only jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or reverse the judgment appealed from, permits defendant to file an answer and retry the case,[52] or makes an allowance against the respondent in favor of the appellant for the payment of the expense of prosecuting the appeal.[53]

In custodia legis.—A receiver was appointed by the circuit court of St. Louis county, a court of competent jurisdiction, to take charge of the assets of a corporation and administer them. This receiver was removed and another appointed in his stead. From an order refusing to vacate the second appointment an appeal was granted and the assets turned over to the corporation on the giving of bond. During pendency of this appeal the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, having concurrent jurisdiction with the county court, took jurisdiction of an action by creditors of the corporation, and a receiver was appointed to administer the assets. It was held that, since the assets were by the first action in custodia legis, and that court still retained the cause, the circuit court of the city of St. Louis had no jurisdiction of the cause, and prohibition was the proper remedy to prevent its exercise of jurisdiction. which operates as a stay of proceedings,[64] or pending a decision on the application for such an appeal,[65] prohibition will issue to restrain the trial court from proceeding further in the cause. If the appeal is defective [66] or merely incidental to the main action,[67] or if the order or judgment appealed from does not command or permit some act to be done,[68] so that the appeal does not operate as a stay of proceedings, then the lower court will not be restrained from proceeding further in the cause.

e. With Orders or Decrees of Appellate Court. The writ will lie to restrain the court below from interpreting the decisions of the appellate court and enforcing decrees different from those rendered by it.[69] And of course where a cause has been appealed and a judgment rendered by the appellate court, interference therewith on the part of the lower court by any proceeding in the cause other than such as is directed by the appellate court will be prohibited.[70]

10. Proceedings in Probate Courts. Prohibition will lie where a probate judge attempts, without administration, to exercise power over the estate of an intestate.[71] So too will prohibition lie to restrain a probate court from vacating an administrator's sale of realty after such court has confirmed the same.[72]

Pendency of appeal in independent action.—Pending appeal from a decision in an action for possession of land claimed under an administrator's sale, the decision being adverse to plaintiff, on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the court who ordered the sale, and of irregularities in the sale, the court will be prohibited from acting on a petition to vacate the sale, based on the same grounds as those urged against plaintiff's title in the action, and for the same purpose of defeating his title, the parties in interest being the same in the action and under the petition. State v. Walla Walla County Super. Ct., 10 Wash. 168, 38 Pac. 998.

Premature appeal.— The supreme court will not grant a writ of prohibition to a judge of the superior court when acting as chancellor to restrain him from hearing a motion, on the ground that one of the parties has excepted to his decision on a point made during the hearing of such motion, and has sued out a writ of error before any decision of the main question. 11. Particular Proceedings in Civil Actions. Under the general rules already stated the writ will issue to restrain any unauthorized proceedings in civil actions, as where the presiding judge determines a plea recusing him on the ground of interest,[73] or denies a motion for a stay made by a person claiming the ownership of personalty of which he has been deprived by a summary order of the court,[74] or appoints a receiver,[75] or orders a debtor's arrest,[76] or sets aside a judgment,[77] or entertains [78] or grants [79] a new trial.

12. Contempt Proceedings. Prohibition will lie where an inferior tribunal entertains a contempt proceeding of which it has no jurisdiction.[80] But if a contempt is of an inferior court, so that it alone has jurisdiction to try and punish therefor, prohibition will not lie to restrain the judge presiding from proceeding therein.[81]

13. Receivership Proceedings. Prohibition will not lie to restrain an inferior court acting within its jurisdiction from appointing a receiver; [82] but where the appointment is unauthorized, as being without the jurisdiction of the court, the writ will lie.[83]

14. Jurisdiction to Issue Particular Writs. Prohibition is an available remedy for the purpose of restraining an inferior court, not having the necessary power, from issuing writs of attachment,[84] certiorari,[85] habeas corpus,[86] injunction;[87]

Conviction under void ordinance.— In view of Miss. Code (1906), § 3893, authorizing relief by prohibition according to right and

tion.[93] The only question involved on an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain a lower court from proceeding with a criminal trial is whether or not that court has jurisdiction to determine the matter before it and of the person of accused.[94]

17. Determination of Question of Jurisdiction by Trial Court. Where the jurisdiction of a tribunal rests upon contested facts, prohibition will not lie to restrain it from proceeding in a cause while the question of jurisdiction, after being raised by an appropriate pleading or objection, remains undetermined;[95] and although the lower tribunal may in such case err in its determination of the question of jurisdiction, prohibition will not lie to review such error.[96]

18. Waiver of Right to Remedy. It may be a good defense to an application for prohibition in some instances that the applicant waived the excess of jurisdiction on the part of the inferior tribunal, either expressly, or impliedly by his conduct as suitor,[97] although the remedy might remain available notwithstanding the con-

justice, the writ is not confined to cases where an inferior court is attempting to act; and hence the fact that one has been convicted will not preclude such relief against prosecutions under a void ordinance, preventing the use of his property and depriving him of the right to conduct his business. Refusal of examination of grand jurors.— As the privilege granted an accused, who has not been held to answer, to examine grand jurors touching their qualifications before they are impaneled and sworn, is merely one of grace and not of right, a restriction of accused to the examination of only a few of them could at the most only be error and could not be reviewed by prohibition. Conduct not amounting to waiver. — In a proceeding for a writ of prohibition directing the district court to refrain from issuing an injunction, that petitioners file a motion for change of venue in the district court is not a waiver of the right to contest its jurisdiction in the supreme court. People v. Tenth Judicial Dist. Ct., 29 Colo. 182, 68 Pac. 242. The fact that petitioners for prohibition to restrain proceedings under an order of court appointing a receiver for a refinery and directing him to take possession of the property were parties as stock-holders to a suit against the corporation for the forfeiture of its charter, and as such objected to the jurisdiction of the court to appoint a receiver only, cannot be construed as a waiver of their right to object as purchasers of the refinery, since they could not know that it was to be made subject to the receivership. Havemeyer v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 84 Cal. 327, 24 Pac. 121, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192, 10 L. R. A. 627. Where the receiver appointed by the circuit court in an action for a receivership of an insolvent corporation did not, by answering to the merits, waive his right to appeal from an order overruling his demurrer to a complaint in an action brought against him in another circuit court to enjoin him from acting as receiver, nor to appeal from the order denying a motion to dissolve the temporary injunction restraining him from acting as receiver, he did not waive his right to have such rulings corrected by prohibition. For example where a bank was sued in assumpsit and pleaded the general issue and gave notice of set-off, and while the suit was pending plaintiff in assumpsit filed a bill able to the applicant, either by appeal or writ of error,[2] or by any against the bank and its cashier for an accounting, and the bank's plea to the jurisdiction setting up the pendency of the action at law was overruled and complainant elected to proceed in chancery, and an appeal from the order overruling the bank's plea was dismissed as from a non-appealable order, a writ of prohibition will not issue to restrain the judge and complainant from proceeding with the chancery suit in which all the questions raised by the bank could be determined. Compare Lincoln-Lucky, etc., Min. Co. v. First Judicial Dist. Ct., 7 N. M. 486, 38 Pac. 580, holding that a judgment of a court in a cause of which it has no jurisdiction being a nullity the party should not be compelled to appeal, even if he can, but the writ of prohibition is properly issued.

Extraordinary proceeding.—However, where a court is attempting to exercise unauthorized jurisdiction in an extraordinary proceeding, the writ will issue, although there may be for the party aggrieved a remedy by appeal. State v. Wilcox, 24 Minn. 143.

While the mere fact that an appeal will lie from an erroneous decision on the question of jurisdiction will not bar a writ of prohibition, yet it ought to do so unless there is something out of the ordinary to suggest that justice requires the writ. Bankers' Life Assoc. v. Shelton, 84 Mo. App. 634.

Prohibition will not serve as a second appeal, after the adverse determination of the only appeal given by statute. Valentine v. San Francisco Police Ct., 141 Cal. 615, 75 Pac. 336.

But the remedy by appeal must be complete and adequate in order to prevent the issuance of the writ. White v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 126 Cal. 245, 58 Pac. 450 (holding that where a mortgagor has a present right to the dismissal of an action of foreclosure on the ground of plaintiff's failure to serve the summons within three years after the commencement of the action, as provided by statute, a writ of prohibition to arrest the prosecution of such action as to him will be issued, notwithstanding the mortgagor could appeal from the judgment in the foreclosure suit, because such remedy is not adequate); Havemeyer v. San Francisco Super. The requirement of a bond to perfect the appeal does not make that remedy any the less adequate so that the prohibition will lie. Alexander v. Crollott, 199 U. S. 580, 26 S. Ct. 161, 50 L. ed. 317.

Expense incident to appeal as affecting its adequacy.— Prohibition will lie where the remedy by appeal is wholely inadequate for the reason that the greater amount of the expense incident to pursuing such remedy cannot be recovered as legal costs. Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 147 Cal. 467, 82 Pac. 70. Where the relators for a writ of prohibition would have been compelled, in case they failed to obtain the relief prayed, to defend one thousand two hundred and three misdemeanor cases, and if defeated appeal at a cost aggregating twelve thousand three hundred dollars, as well as counsel fees, the remedy of submitting to trial and then appealing, although review,[3] writ of supersedeas,[4] certiorari,[5] habeas corpus,[6] injunction,[7] mandamus,[8] quo warranto,[9] action for trespass,[10] amendment,[11] motion to change venue,[12] motion to set aside,[13] motion to stay proceedings,[14] or proceedings for con-available, was held to be so inadequate as to justify the application for prohibition. State v. Elby, 170 Mo. 497, 71 S. W. 52. It has been held, however, that expense of an appeal, and delays and annoyance incident thereto, do not affect its adequacy, so as to warrant employment of the writ of prohibition in place of the appeal. State v. King County Super. Ct., 30 Wash. 700, 71 Pac. 648.

Where rights of third parties intervene.— Where the order of a court in an election contest attempts to expose the manner in which voters exercise their right of franchise, by authorizing comparison of the ballots with the voting lists, the damage to the voters cannot be repaired by appeal or writ of error, and such order is therefore properly reviewable on a writ of prohibition. State v. Spencer, 166 Mo. 271, 65 S. W. 981.

An appeal from an order continuing an attachment in force, pending an appeal from a judgment for defendant in an action in which the attachment issued, is not an adequate remedy at law, precluding the issuance of a writ of prohibition to prevent the court from continuing the attachment. Primm v. Shasta County Super. Ct., 3 Cal. App. 208, 84 Pac. 786.

Where a superior court assumed the jurisdiction of the administration of an estate, after an application for letters of administration had been made in another county, the remedy by appeal was held not to be adequate so as to bar the right to relief by prohibition. Contrary view.— It has been held in Massachusetts that the fact that remedy by certiorari will be open to a party after final judgment affords no reason for refusing a writ of prohibition where the tribunal has no jurisdiction of the case and timely objection on that ground was made. Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County Com'rs, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338.

When both prohibition and certiorari will lie concurrently.— A proper proceeding to prevent a disqualified county judge from entertaining a motion is by certiorari and prohibition from the district court, where it is the duty of the county judge because of his disqualification to certify the cause to the district court. tempt.[15] But the concurrent remedy is not regarded as adequate, so as to prevent the issuance of a writ, if it does not afford the particular right to the party aggrieved,[16] or if its slowness is likely to produce immediate injury or mischief.[17]

2. Errors and Irregularities. If the inferior court or tribunal has jurisdiction of both the subject-matter and of the person, prohibition will not lie to correct errors of law or fact, for which there is an adequate remedy by appeal or otherwise, whether such errors are merely apprehended [18] or have been actually committed.[19]

The power of a court to decide erroneously respecting matters within its jurisdiction is as clear and undoubted as its power to decide correctly. Powhatan Coal, etc., Co. v. Ritz, 60 W. Va. 395, 56 S. E. 257, 9 L. R. A. N. S. 1225.

Error must be gross and wilful.— Where property has been seized under execution the question of its exempt character is one of mixed law and fact for the court, and error, unless gross or wilful, is not ground for prohibition. Holden v. Judge Second City Ct., 35 La. Ann. 1110.

Error in construing statute.— That the inferior tribunal has erred in the construction of a statute furnishes no ground for prohibition, if by so doing it does not usurp jurisdiction. Long Point Co. v. Anderson, 18 Ont. App. 401.

In awarding a preliminary injunction, the court must determine, provisionally, what the status quo is, and an erroneous conclusion as to it, resulting in the awarding of an injunction, not warranted by the allegations of the bill, but within the power of the court to award upon sufficient allegations, is judicial error, but no usurpation, or abuse, of judicial power. Powhatan Coal, etc., Co. v. Ritz, 60 W. Va. 395, 56 S. E. 257, 9 L. R. A. N. S. 1225.

In condemnation proceedings.— The action of the court in denying to defendant in proceedings to condemn land for a railway right of way the benefit of a jury trial is not in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and is not reviewable by writ of prohibition. Beaulieu Vineyard v. Napa County Super. Ct., 6 Cal. App. 242, 91 Pac. 1015. Where the complaint, in a proceeding to condemn land for a railroad right of way, shows a case where property of the kind sought to be taken may be taken for the use for which it is sought, the question whether the facts justify the taking is for the trial court in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and cannot be determined on prohibition to restrain the court from proceeding with the trial. Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. Sacramento County Super. Ct., 151 Cal. 263, 90 Pac. 545.

The writ will not lie to correct alleged errors in rulings of the trial judge, where it does not appear that the judge has usurped power or has refused to discharge any duty imposed on him by law, or that there has been any irregularity operating as a denial of justice in the proceedings complained of. The supervisory jurisdiction of the supreme court will not be so exercised as to give to relator the benefit of an appeal in a case in which the law-makers have not thought proper to authorize such appeal. In re Theriot, 117 La. 532, 42 So. 93.

Failure to seasonably pass on motion.— A petition for a writ of prohibition to a district further proceeding, if there exists an adequate remedy by appeal.[21] But the writ will lie to restrain the court, from which the cause has been removed, from trying defendant on a second indictment or information for the same offense.[22]

4. Proceedings Relating to Injunction. If there exists an adequate remedy by appeal or otherwise, the writ never lies to restrain the issuance of an injunction,[23] or to review any order therefor.[24]

5. Proceedings Relating to Receivership. Where an appeal lies from and is an adequate remedy to prevent execution of an order of court appointing a receiver, prohibition will not issue for such purpose, although the order is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court.[25] An order fixing a receiver's compensation, being subject to review upon appeal or certiorari, will not be arrested by a writ of prohibition.[26]

6. Proceedings Relating to Reference. Where a remedy by appeal or writ of error exists, prohibition will not issue to restrain the appointment of a referee,[27] or to restrain action by an appointee as referee.[28] court, on the ground that the judge thereof has failed for an unreasonable time to pass on a motion for a change of venue, cannot be entertained. People v. Tenth Judicial Dist. Ct., 29 Colo. 182, 68 Pac. 242.

Remedy by appeal inadequate.— Where a defendant in divorce was denied a change of venue to which he was entitled as a matter of right under a statutory provision, it was held that, although the erroneous action of the court in denying the application was reviewable on appeal, nevertheless owing to the nature of the action and the fact that any further proceedings would be entirely beyond the court's jurisdiction, defendant was entitled to a writ of prohibition restraining further proceedings. People v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct., 30 Colo. 123, 69 Pac. 597. A holder of a dramshop license is entitled to prohibition on the refusal of the court to grant his application for a change of venue in certiorari to review the proceedings in the county court granting him a license, the remedy by appeal from a judgment denying his right to a license not being adequate. State v. Denton, 128 Mo. App. 304, 107 S. W. 446.

Remedy by appeal.— The fact that a district court has overruled a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction against certain state officers, prohibiting them from paying money to certain institutions under an act of the legislature, which motion challenged the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter, and is about to hear the cause on its merits, will not authorize a writ of prohibition, as the ruling may be reviewed on appeal. Remedy not adequate.— However, where a receiver was ordered to close down a great sugar refinery and sell its stock, machinery, and utensils, the right to appeal from the order of appointment does not afford a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, especialy where the appeal would not stay proceedings under the receivership. Havemeyer v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 84 Cal. 327, 24 Pac. 121, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192, 10 L. R. A. 627. Under Ida. Rev. St. (1887) § 4995, authorizing a writ of prohibition to arrest proceedings without or in excess of jurisdiction where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, a writ of prohibition may issue to prevent a court from further proceeding in the conduct of the business of a private corporation through a receiver where a period of six months or more would elapse before an appeal could be heard, during which time all of the property and assets of the corporation would continue in the hands of the receiver and the corporation be kept running, and the creditors delayed for that length of time at least in the collection of their claims. 7. Execution of Contracts. Prohibition is not the proper remedy to prevent the execution of a contract, where a remedy by injunction [29] or by quo warranto [30] exists.

8. Title to Office. Prohibition never issues to try the title to an office, there being another adequate remedy by quo warranto for that purpose.[31] So, where an adequate remedy by certiorari is available, the same rule is applicable.[32]

9. Proceedings of Election Officers. Prohibition, from a court of equity, does not lie to control election officers when there is another remedy as by statutory proceedings to contest the election,[33] or by appeal or writ of error.[34]

10. Contempt Proceedings. A writ of prohibition will not be granted to restrain contempt proceedings in an inferior court, based on an alleged violation of an injunction, where the party applying for the writ has an adequate remedy by motion to dissolve the injunction.[35]

11. Criminal Prosecutions. Prohibition will not lie to restrain criminal prosecutions where the usual and ordinary forms of remedy are sufficient to afford redress, as by a motion, trial, appeal, habeas corpus, or otherwise;[36] but where in which plaintiff claims commissions and that a long account is involved, has ordered a reference at request of plaintiff, and has refused to vacate its order therefor, and defendant, in obedience to the subpœna of the referee, but under protest, has produced its books, and plaintiff is proceeding to examine them, it appearing that some sort of accounts exist on the books with reference to plaintiff's transactions with defendant, and that plaintiff had previously examined them with the consent of defendant, it not appearing there can be any further damage to defendant, the books being pertinent and material, if plaintiff's interpretation of his contract is correct, and this, although the court had not directly passed on the question of the existence of a contract making the taking of an account necessary; any remedy being by appeal, as would be the case had the court proceeded with the trial itself, and, in its discretion as to order of proof, allowed plaintiff to put in his whole case, defendant being first required to produce its books before trial of the question of contract. these forms of redress are wholly inadequate and insufficient, the writ has been allowed.[37]

12. Vacating or Amending Judgment. Unless the remedy by appeal is inadequate,[38] prohibition will not lie to restrain an inferior court from vacating a judgment.[39] Nor will the writ lie to set aside an amendment made to correct an obvious slip or mistake in the entry of a judgment.[40]

13. Enforcement of Judgment. The enforcement of a judgment, where there is

That no appeal lies from the judgment of an inferior tribunal on an indictment for a certain defense will not entitle defendant to a writ of prohibition from the court of appeals if the inferior court was acting within its jurisdiction. Standard Oil Co. v. Linn, 32 S. W. 932, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 832.

Irregularities in the summoning of a grand jury, not affecting the court's jurisdiction, are not ground for the issuance of a writ of prohibition. The writ of prohibition will not be granted to arrest further proceedings on an indictment found by a grand jury irregularly summoned and impaneled, as district courts have jurisdiction to impanel such juries, and, if erroneous rulings are made on these questions, no question of the jurisdiction of the subject-matter nor of the person is presented which can be reviewed through a writ of prohibition. Zinn v. Barnes County Dist. Ct., (N. D. 1908) 114 N. W. 475.

Violation of ordinance.— Prohibition will not lie to restrain a court from proceeding with a trial for violation of a city ordinance; the only question being whether the city, in the absence of special authority, had power to make an act an offense when it was such under a statute of the state, and there being an adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, either by appeal from an adverse judgment or by habeas corpus. State v. Hinkle, 47 Wash. 156, 91 Pac. 640.

37. Ex p. State, 150 Ala. 489, 43 So. 490, 10 L. R. A. N. S. 1129 (holding that where, under express authority of statute, a circuit court committed one convicted of crime for safe-keeping to the jail of another county, the judge of the criminal court of the latter county had no jurisdiction to entertain a petition for habeas corpus on the ground that subsequent to his conviction the prisoner had become insane, and a writ of prohibition was the proper remedy to prevent the entertaining of such petition); Terrill v. Santa Clara County Super. Ct., (Cal. 1899) 60 Pac. 38 (holding that where defendant has been tried and convicted on a void indictment, the writ will issue to prevent the trial judge from pronouncing sentence or proceeding further in the cause, since the remedy by appeal is not adequate); Huntington v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 5 Cal. App. 288, 90 Pac. 141 (holding that where an information charged the accused with murder, and he was convicted of manslaughter, and on appeal a new trial was ordered, the trial court has no jurisdiction to try accused for any other crime than that of manslaughter, and a writ of prohibition will lie to prevent his trial on the charge of murder); McInerney v. Denner, 17 Colo. 302, 29 Pac. 516 (holding that a petition for a writ of prohibition restraining a police magistrate from proceeding to a judgment in a prosecution for keeping a tippling house open on Sunday, on the ground that the act creating the police court was unconstitutional, as is also the ordinance prohibiting such offense, will lie where, besides an illegal forfeiture of his license by petitioner, an illegal imprisonment may follow a judgment of conviction; and this, although the petitioner on being convicted might have the questions reconsidered on a trial de novo in the county court, and again by the supreme court on writ of error, since the latter remedies would be inadequate).

Right to appeal not determinable until trial and sentence.— In a criminal case where it cannot be determined until trial or sentence whether an appeal will be permissible under a constitutional provision restricting a right of appeal in criminal cases to those in which the punishment of death or imprisonment at hard labor may be inflicted, or a fine exceeding a given sum is actually imposed, the exercise of the supervisory power of the supreme court by writs of prohibition and certiorari is properly invoked on an issue as to the validity of a change of venue which forces defendants to meet a trial in a parish different from their domicile, and subjects the state to the expense and trouble of a fruitless trial. a remedy by appeal [41] or otherwise,[42] or the enforcement of an execution issued thereon where there is a remedy by motion to quash,[43] will not be restrained by prohibition. But if there is no other remedy available to the party aggrieved, prohibition will lie to restrain the enforcement of a void decree or judgment.[44]

B. In Official Capacity. When it is made by statute the duty of a public officer to represent the county in all civil actions and proceedings to which it is a party, such officer is the proper relator in prohibition proceedings on behalf of the county.[47]

VI. JURISDICTION AND PROCEEDINGS.

A. Jurisdiction — 1. FEDERAL COURTS. The supreme court has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition where there is no appellate power given by law, nor any special authority to issue the writ.[48] The circuit court has power to issue a writ of prohibition only in cases where such writ is necessary to the exercise of its jurisdiction.[49] A territorial supreme court has jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition to a territorial district court.[50]

2. STATE COURTS — a. Appellate. The writ will be granted by a court of last resort only in aid of its appellate jurisdiction,[51] except where the constitution in express terms confers either the original jurisdiction for that purpose,[52] or the power to award "original remedial writs," [53] or the power to issue any remedial writs

Not parties to suit.— The supreme court will not grant a motion for a writ of prohibition against the circuit court to vacate an order sentencing the petitioners to be imprisoned for a contempt of the authority of that court in a matter pertaining to a suit therein to which they are not parties. Ex p. Stickney, 40 Ala. 160. Taxpayer.— A railroad corporation, which owns no property, is not a taxpayer or resident of a village, has no vested rights therein, no village consent or franchise, and has applied for none over the route proposed by the defendant company, and has no certificate of convenience and necessity for that route, is not entitled to a writ of prohibition to prevent the village authorities from granting a franchise to defendant to construct a line of trolley railroad through the village. 2. Parties — a. Relators. Although a writ of prohibition is properly sued out in the name of the state,[62] yet it is well settled that the state is not a necessary party.[63]

b. Respondents. The common-law writ may be directed to the judges of the inferior tribunal,[64] or the parties to a cause pending therein,[65] or both conjointly.[66] It has been held, however, that the only necessary defendant is the tribunal whose proceedings are sought to be restrained.[67]

3. Petition or Suggestion[68] — a. What It Must Contain — (i) In General. The writ is obtained on a suggestion or petition therefor.[69] The petition or suggestion for the writ of prohibition must show unequivocally every fact requisite to justify its issuance; [70] and facts will not be presumed which can only be stated

First Judicial Dist. Ct., 7 N. M. 486, 38 Pac. 580, holding that it is only necessary to plead to the jurisdiction below as a foundation for the writ where the lower court had jurisdiction of the original subject-matter.

Discretion of court.— The rule as to application to an inferior court to vacate its unauthorized judgment before awarding a writ of prohibition to prevent the enforcement is discretionary, and the judgment of the circuit court on review in the supreme court will not be reversed for failure of the circuit court to require such application before awarding the writ. Construed against relator.— A council of a conjecturally and which cannot arise except upon a contingency which is at least equally uncertain.[71]

(II) Particular Allegations. The petition or other application must allege what, if any, action the lower court contemplates,[72] that petitioner would be injured thereby,[73] and that he either has not consented to the jurisdiction [74] or has objected to it in the lower court.[75]

city adopted a resolution citing the chief of police for trial for an offense, with a view to removing him from office. The charge against the officer was not specific as to time and place of the commission of the offense. The petition of the officer praying for a writ of prohibition against the council did not point out where the alleged offense was committed, and did not deny that it was committed. It was held that as the officer's failure to set out where he committed the act must be construed most strongly against him, and therefore authorized the court to presume that the offense was committed in the city, the court, although possessing the power under Ky. Civ. Code Pr. § 479, to restrain the council from proceeding by issuing a writ of prohibition, should not exercise it. Thomas v. Thompson, 102 S. W. 849, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 524.

Bowyer v. Green, 63 W. Va. 498, 60 S. E. 492. b. Prayer. The ultimate prayer of the petition in a proceeding for prohibition should be that a writ of prohibition be awarded.[76]

c. Verification by Affidavit. When the matter suggested as ground for a prohibition appears on the face of the proceedings, an affidavit of the truth of the suggestion is unnecessary.[77] But where it does not so appear, then it is essential that the suggestion should be verified by affidavit.[78]

4. Rule to Show Cause — a. Usually Issued in First Instance. Unless otherwise agreed upon between the parties,[79] the usual practice on application for prohibition is, in some jurisdictions, to issue, in the first instance, a rule to show cause why the writ should not be granted.[80] This rule to show cause why the writ should not issue will afterward be made absolute or discharged, according to the circumstances of the case.[81]

b. Effect of Service. When such rule is granted and served, it operates as a prohibition quousque or until further action of the court.[82]

Sufficient service.— Rule 67 of the rules of the Idaho supreme court, requiring service of a certified copy of the affidavit for the writ and notice of the time of hearing of the application for the writ on the parties in interest, is complied with, on application for a writ to prevent the court from further proceeding in the conduct of the business of a private corporation through a receiver, where all the parties who have shown themselves to be interested are served, and the record does not disclose the names of all creditors of the corporation, and it would therefore be impossible to make service on them. submitted simply on the petition and answer, and the answer denies the leading allegations in the petition.[83] Where the parties have withdrawn the proceeding sought to be prohibited and have stipulated not to commence such proceeding anew, the alternative writ will be dismissed.[84]

5. Preliminary or Alternative Writ[85] — a. Necessity For. When only a question of law is involved, it is not necessary to issue an alternative writ in the first instance.[86]

b. Service of. If by statute time for service of an alternative writ is left to the discretion of the court, the service is not void merely because of the shortness of notice of the hearing.[87]

c. Effect of. When served the alternative writ operates as a prohibition until the further order of the court.[88]

6. Time For Application — a. Before Cause Pending. An application for the writ before the actual commencement of an action or proceeding is premature, since there must be a cause pending before the writ will issue.[89]

b. After Judgment. Prohibition will issue after as well as before judgment.[90]

c. After Sentence. Where the case has proceeded to sentence and the want of jurisdiction does not appear upon the face of the record the writ will not lie.[91]

7. Return or Answer[92] — a. In General. If the return to an alternative writ of prohibition is not full enough, the relator should move for a further return, instead of moving for an absolute writ upon the papers as they stood.[93] Where

That the information was sworn to is sufficiently shown by a return to an alternative

a writ of prohibition is issued to an officer he is required to make a return, upon which issue is joined; but where it is to a court and prosecuting party, the party is not required or allowed to make return, but may be allowed to adopt that of the court, although not required to do so.[94]

b. Effect of Failure to Deny Part of Return. A part of a return to an alternative writ of prohibition, not denied on the application for the writ absolute, must be taken as true.[95]

c. Quashing Return. A motion to quash the return to an alternative writ of prohibition, on the ground that the facts stated therein are insufficient, is in the nature of a demurrer, and reaches back to the first defective pleading.[96]

8. Demurrer to Petition or Alternative Writ[97]— a. For Variance. In a case of prohibition a variance between the suggestion and the declaration which is not a matter in bar of the proceeding is not ground of demurrer.[98]

b. Effect of. Where defendant demurs to an application for an alternative writ of prohibition for insufficiency of facts, and no objection is made to the return, the court will consider the matter as an application, on notice for a peremptory writ of prohibition, to which defendant has answered without raising an issue of fact, and will therefore regard the facts disclosed in the application as true.[99]

9. Scope of Hearing. Upon application for prohibition the only inquiries permitted are whether the inferior tribunal is exercising a jurisdiction it does not possess, or, having jurisdiction, has exceeded its legitimate powers.[1] Consequently

Ct., 150 Cal. 153, 88 Pac. 718 (holding that where, at the time an application was made for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from making any order in a certain action other than an order of dismissal, a motion to dismiss had only been partially heard and a preliminary injunction issued had been suspended, it could not be presumed, on the hearing of the application for such writ, that the court would not award petitioner all the relief he was entitled to on the determination of the motion to dismiss); People v. Soto, (Cal. App. 1908) 96 Pac. 913 (holding that on application for a writ of prohibition prohibiting the trial judge from settling a bill of exceptions in a criminal case, on the ground that no notice of application for additional time was given, as required by statute, it will be assumed that the court, if necessary, would before settling the bill make its formal order granting relief, under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court may relieve a party from a judgment, order, etc., taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, etc.); State v. Evans, 184 Mo. 632, 83 S. W. 447 (holding that it will be assumed on an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain the hearing of an election contest, that the court before which the contest was pending would, if the contest should result in an unconstitutional exposure of the vote of the electors, perform its duty in the premises, and take proper precautions to prevent such exposure); State v. Pierce County Super. Ct., 14 Wash. 203, 44 Pac. 131 (holding that when summons in an action brought against an insurance company in the superior court is served upon an alleged agent of the company in the county in which the action is brought, a writ of prohibition will not issue to prohibit the court from proceeding in the action, unless it is affirmatively shown that the person upon whom service was made was not an agent of the company residing in said county).

Presumption in favor of jurisdiction.— Even were the contention sound that a proceeding by the commissioner of agriculture under Agricultural Law, § 32 (N. Y. Laws (1893), p. 665, c. 338), to summon and examine persons under oath, would be unlawful were its object the obtaining of information on which to base some judicial action, prohibition would not issue, it not appearing for what the testimoney is to be used; so that the proceeding may be treated as one to obtain information in aid of legislation, which is proper; and for which purpose, presumably, the commissioner is required by section 5 (page 657) to make an annual report to the legislature. See Evidence, 16 Cyc. 821 et seq. And see Talbot v. Pirkey, 139 Cal. 326, 73 Pac. 858 (holding that where it did not affirmatively appear that no counter-affidavits were filed for an application for change of judge by reason of prejudice, the finding that the charge of prejudice had not been sustained must stand); Shinkle v. Covington, 83 Ky. 420, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 412 (holding that upon an application for prohibition to restrain an inferior court from proceeding under a city ordinance alleged to be invalid, extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to show its invalidity); In re Baiz, 135 U. 12. Damages. In a proceeding in prohibition plaintiff can only recover nominal damages.[7]

13. Costs. In the absence of some statute or distinct regulation of the court[8] the prevailing party in prohibition is not entitled to costs unless the court, in disposing of the proceedings, so orders.[9] A public officer, against whom a prohibition is sought to restrain an official act, is not liable for the costs of the motion or of any proceeding therein.[10]

VII. Operation and Effect of Writ.

A. In General. A writ of prohibition will not operate to restrain the party named therein generally, or from doing any act save that in a pending suit or matter which it is issued to control.[11]

B. Upon Person Not Party of Record. A writ of prohibition to restrain further proceedings in a given cause does not affect a person not a party to the record nor in privity with any party to the cause.[12]

C. As Validating Rival Proceedings in Another Court. The writ when issued to restrain proceedings in one court does not validate rival proceedings brought in a different court for the same purpose.[13]

VIII. Punishment for Violation of Writ.

One who violates the command of a writ of prohibition is punishable as for contempt.[14]

IX. Appeal and Error.

Where the granting of the writ of prohibition is regarded as purely discretionary, no appeal lies from an order granting or denying it;[15] but the rule is otherwise

When immediate prohibition will be withheld.— In a case where the supreme court, after an examination of voluminous records, finds that the court below was acting upon the sincere conviction that it possessed full power to make certain orders, which were in fact made without authority of law, an appeal having been taken to the circuit court, prohibition will be withheld, leaving the lower court to revise its action, with liberty to renew the application for prohibition if necessary. when the writ is regarded as a matter of right because a tribunal is proceeding clearly without jurisdiction.[16] In those jurisdictions where an appeal lies only from a final judgment or order, a judgment, whether for or against issuing the writ, rendered after the cause has been fully heard, is appealable.[17] Under a statute providing that an appeal from any final judgment in prohibition shall not operate as a stay of proceedings pending the appeal, an appeal from the judgment of a circuit court dissolving a temporary order prohibiting the execution of a justice's judgment, does not prevent the execution of the judgment pending the appeal, since the appeal does not operate as a stay.[18]

X. WRIT OF CONSULTATION.

A. Defined. In English practice, a writ of consultation is a writ in the nature of a procedendo,[19] whereby a cause being removed by prohibition out of an inferior court to one of the superior courts of law is returnable thither again to be there determined.[20]

B. When Awarded. At old common law, if the verdict was for defendant, or the court upon demurrer was of opinion that there was no ground for prohibition, then a writ of consultation was awarded; and where this writ was awarded on the merits there could never be another prohibition upon the same suggestion.[21]

A convertible term with "at once," "forthwith." Webster Dict. [quoted in Lewis v. Hojer, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 534, 536].

"One who is ready is said to be prepared at the moment, one who is prompt is said to be prepared beforehand." Tobias v. Lissberger, 105 N. Y. 404, 412, 12 N. E. 13, 59 Am. Rep. 509.

Prompt shipment.— As used in a contract providing for "prompt shipment" of from rails from Europe to New York, the term implies expedition, admits of less delay than would be permitted under a covenant to act merely within a reasonable time. Tobias v. Lissberger, 105 N. Y. 404, 410, 12 N. E. 13, 59 Am. Rep. 509.

37. Neiderer v. Bender, 15 Pa. Dist. 309, 310.

When used in a legislative enactment, the term means legal evidence upon which judicial action may be rested. State v. Brodie, 148 Ala. 381, 384, 41 So. 180; Githens v. Mount, 64 N. J. L. 166, 168, 44 Atl. 851; Inglis v. Schreimer, 58 N. J. L. 120, 122, 32 Atl. 131. As used in a statute providing that, in any action founded upon contract, the defendant may be held to bail upon proof to the satisfaction of a justice of the supreme court, or a commissioner to take bail and affidavits, that the defendant is about to remove any of his property out of the jurisdiction of the court in which an action is about to be commenced, with intent to defraud his creditors, it is a technical word, used in a technical sense, and implies the application, to some extent, of those rules under which evidence is ordinarily admitted; as thus, a party to the record and having a direct interest in the event of the suit, cannot be a witness for himself at the trial against the adverse party. Hunt v. Hill, 20 N. J. L. 476, 478. When a statute requires proof to be made, it must be made by legal evidence, unless from the context or other qualifying words it is apparent that the legislature intended that the fact might be shown by affidavit, or in some other manner. Buffalo, etc., R. Co. v. Reynolds, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 96, 98. See also Brown v. Hinchman, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 75. Under a statute providing that a confession of a defendant in a criminal case is not sufficient to warrant his conviction, without proof that the offense charged has been committed, the term means, not corroborating circumstances merely, but the corpus delicto must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence other than the confessions. State v. Laliyer, 4 Minn. 368. Under a statute giving a town power to subscribe for railroad stock and issue bonds in payment therefor, provided twelve or more freeholders, residents of the town, should apply to the county judge for the appointment of commissioners, and provided the consent in writing of a majority in number and amount of the resident taxpayers of said town, that such subscription be made and bonds issued, designating the amount, and further providing that the proof of the au-

"The word 'proper' admits different senses. — There is no covenant almost, which a landlord can propose, that, generally speaking, could be called an improper covenant; for he has a right to let his land upon any terms he may think fit to propose; and there are many covenants, not usual or common, that could not be objected to. But there are many covenants, though proper, that do not naturally flow out of the contract. . . . It cannot mean those covenants, which would not be unreasonable. It must mean such as are calculated to secure the full effect of the contract." Jones v. Jones, 12 Ves. Jr. 186, 189, 33 Eng. Reprint 71.

Used synonymously with "competent" see 8 Cyc. 405 note 97.

I. Definition and Nature.

Property has been defined as the right and interest which a man has in lands and chattels to the exclusion of others.[1] The term "property" is a generic term

1. McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 137, 142, 70 Am. Dec. 642; Estes Park Toll Road Co. v. Edwards, 3 Colo. App. 74, 32 Pac. 549, 551; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cicero, 154 Ill. 656, 662, 39 N. E. 574; Watkins v. Wyatt, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 250, 255, 40 Am. Rep. 90.

Other definitions are: "The exclusive right of possessing, enjoying, and disposing of a thing." McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 137, 142, 70 Am. Dec. 642.

"The exclusive right of any person to freely use, enjoy, and dispose of any deter-

of extensive application,[2] and while strictly speaking it means only the right which a person has in relation to some thing,[3] or that dominion or indefinite right of user and disposition which one may lawfully exercise over particular things or objects,[4] it is frequently used to denote the subject of the property, or thing itself, which is owned or in relation to which the right of property exists.[5] In the former sense it extends to every species of valuable right or interest,[6] in either real or personal property,[7] or in easements, franchises, and incorporeal hereditaments,[8] and in the latter to everything which is the subject of ownership,[9] or to which the right of property may legally attach,[10] or in other words every class of acquisitions which a man can own or have an interest in.[11] The term is therefore said to be nomen generalissimum,[12] and to include everything which is the subject of ownership,[13] corporeal or incorporeal,[14] tangible or intangible,[15] visible or invisible,[16]

minate object whether real or personal." St. Louis v. Hill, 116 Mo. 527, 533, 22 S. W. 861, 21 L. R. A. 226.

"The highest right a man can have to any thing; being used for that right which one hath to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depend on another man's courtesy." Jackson v. Housel, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 281, 283.

"The right of any person to possess, use, enjoy, and dispose of a thing." Smith v. Furbish, 68 N. H. 123, 144, 44 Atl. 398, 47 L. R. A. 226; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 433.

"The interest one may have in lands or chattels to the exclusion of others." Wilson v. Harris, 21 Mont. 374, 387, 54 Pac. 46.

ticular case may be restricted to real property only,[33] or to personal property only,[34] and it may, according to the context, refer either to the right of property or the thing itself.[35]

II. KINDS AND CLASSIFICATIONS OF PROPERTY.

A. In General. In the civil law, property was divided into movables and immovables,[36] and formerly in England it was divided into lands, tenements, and hereditaments on the one hand and chattels on the other,[37] but now all property is divided into the two classes, real and personal.[38] The terms "real" and "personal" as applied to property are of comparatively modern origin, going back apparently to about the middle of the seventeenth century,[39] and are derived from the names of the forms of action resorted to by one who had been deprived of the possession of these different classes of property.[40] The terms "real" and "personal" do not entirely correspond with the terms "movables" and "immovables."[41]

B. Corporeal and Incorporeal. Property may be classified as being either corporeal or incorporeal,[42] corporeal property being that which affects the senses and may be seen or handled,[43] and incorporeal that which cannot be seen or handled,[44] but which consists merely in legal right.[45] The terms are used most frequently in connection with the term "hereditaments."[46]

C. Public and Private.[47] Property, with regard to the nature of its ownership and use, may be either public or private.[48] Private property is that which

48. Mundy v. Van Hoose, 104 Ga. 292, 30 S. E. 783.

The necessity for determining what is private and what is public property arises most frequently as regards private property in connection with the taking of private property for public use under the power of eminent domain (see Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Lycoming Gas, etc., Co. v. Moyer, 99 Pa. St. 615; People v. Daniels, 6 Utah 288, 22 Pac. 159, 5 L. R. A. 444; and, generally, EMINENT DOMAIN, 15 Cyc. 638 et seq.); and as regards public property in the application of constitutional and statutory provisions relating to the exemption of public property from taxation (see Mundy v. Van belongs exclusively to an individual,[49] and the term applies to all kinds of private property,[50] and necessarily includes everything that can be held or owned by private persons.[51] The term "public property" is commonly used as a designation of those things which are publici juris and therefore considered as being owned by "the public," the entire state or community, and not restricted to the domain of a private person,[52] or that which belongs to a state or political division thereof;[53] and property owned by private persons or corporations and from which a private or corporate income is derived is not public property, although used for a purpose which is in its nature public,[54] such as a school,[55] public market,[56] or armory for state troops.[57] In one sense the same property may be said to be both public and private.[58]

III. SUBJECTS OF PROPERTY.[59]

Any attempt to enumerate the subjects of property would be impracticable, since property includes whatever things may be the subject of ownership, and all rights, titles, and interests therein.[60] That and that only is property which the law recognizes as such,[61] and so there may be things in which there is no right of property,[62] and others which, while property in the broad sense of the term, are

Streams.— The term "private property" includes surface streams, but the rules in reference thereto are very different from those governing subterranean streams (Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 52 Am. Dec. 352); and the right of private property exists in an individual in relation to streams of water exclusively his own, such as springs or small watercourses in the interior of his lands and bounded by them on both sides, and may exist in regard to public rivers against the interference of private individuals, but it cannot prevail as to public rivers and highways used for navigation against the paramount jurisdiction of the state (Homochitto River Com'rs v. Withers, 29 Miss. 21, 32, 64 Am. Dec. 126).

Dec. 716); and the property of a private charitable corporation, although charged with the maintenance of a college or other public charity, is "private property" within the meaning of a constitutional provision that private property shall ever be held inviolate (State v. Neff, 52 Ohio St. 375, 40 N. IV. Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments.

A. In General. Things real are usually said to consist of lands, tenements, and hereditaments,[85] each of which terms has its own peculiar signification.[86]

B. Lands. The term "land" is a word of very extensive signification,[87] which is used in different senses,[88] and ordinarily defined only in general terms.[89] Blackstone defines land under "things real" as comprehending all things of a permanent and substantial nature,[90] and any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever,[91] as arable, meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath.[92] It includes not only the face of the earth but everything under it or over it,[93] and has in its legal signification an indefinite extent upward and downward,[94] giving rise to the by any lawful mode or by following any lawful pursuit (Low v. Rees Printing Co., 41 Nebr. 127, 146, 59 N. W. 362, 43 Am. St. Rep. 670, 24 L. R. A. 702), and the right to labor and transact business (State v. Cadigan, 73 Vt. 245, 50 Atl. 1079, 87 Am. St. Rep. 714, 57 L. R. A. 666).

poreal hereditaments,[24] and chattel interests such as a leasehold interest or estate for years.[25]

C. Tenements. The word "tenement" is more extensive and comprehensive than the word "land," [26] and while sometimes used in a restricted sense, as signifying a house or building,[27] in its original, proper, and legal sense it signifies everything, provided it be of a permanent nature, that may be holden,[28] so as to create a tenancy in the feudal sense of the word,[29] whether it be substantial and sensible or of an unsubstantial and ideal kind.[30] So it embraces not only what may be inherited but what may be holden,[31] and not only lands but incorporeal rights, such as rents, commons, and the like;[32] but it is essential that a tenement shall have the quality of permanence.[33] In this country the word "tenement" is said to be used exclusively with reference to lands or what is usually denominated real property,[34] and imports at least an estate or freehold.[35]

D. Hereditaments — 1. In General. The term "hereditament" is more comprehensive than either "land" or "tenement," [36] being, according to Lord Coke, "the largest word of all in that kind." [37] It includes both lands and tenements, [38] and generally everything which is capable of being inherited, [39] whether corporeal, or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed. [40] So in England the term included heirlooms which were mere movables and neither lands nor tenements, but by custom descended to the heir. [41] As applied to real property it includes any estate of inheritance; [42] but not those less than estates of inheritance, such as estates for years. [43] Hereditaments are of two kinds, corporeal and incorporeal. [44]

2. Corporeal Hereditaments. Corporeal hereditaments consist wholly of substantial and permanent objects, [45] all of which may be comprehended under the general denomination of land only, [46] and are confined to land. [47] As distinguished from incorporeal hereditaments they are said to be the substance which may always be seen or handled, while incorporeal hereditaments are a sort of accidents which inhere in and are supported by that substance and exist only in idea and abstracted contemplation. [48]

3. Incorporeal Hereditaments. An incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporate, whether real or personal, or concerning, or annexed to, or exercisable within, the same. [49] An incorporeal hereditament is not the ance or other freehold, but also a term for years.

An incorporeal hereditament is so called because it is inheritable but not tangible. Slingerland v. International Contracting Co., 43 N. Y. App. Div. 215, 230, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 12 [affirmed in 169 N. Y. 60, 61 N. E. 995].

A claim to land under a certificate of location is not a chattel but an incorporeal land or thing corporeal, but is something merely collateral thereto,[50] an invisible and intangible right;[51] and it must also not be confounded with the profit or thing of a corporeal nature which the right may produce.[52] At common law incorporeal hereditaments were said to lie in grant because, livery being impossible, they would pass by a simple deed or grant; but livery being necessary to the transfer of corporeal hereditaments, they were said to lie in livery;[53] but this distinction has long since been abolished, even in England.[54] There were ten principal incorporeal hereditaments known to the ancient English law, viz: (1) Advowsons; (2) tithes; (3) commons; (4) ways; (5) offices; (6) dignities; (7) franchises; (8) corodies or pensions; (9) annuities; and (10) rents.[55] In the United States we have no such rights as advowsons, tithes, dignities, or franchises of the chase;[56] but there are still a number of incorporeal hereditaments which have a present interest.[57] An annuity[58] is an incorporeal hereditament.[59] A right of common[60] is an incorporeal hereditament.[61] An easement[62] is an incorporeal hereditament.[63] A franchise[64] is ordinarily classed as an incorporeal hereditament,[65] although the propriety of classing incorporated franchises as hereditaments has been questioned.[66] An office[67] is classified by Blackstone as an incorporeal hereditament,[68] on the ground that a man may have an estate therein to himself and his heirs as well as for life or a term of years;[69] but in this country no public office can properly be termed an incorporeal hereditament or thing capable of being inherited,[70] since the duration of office is regulated by constitutional or statutory provisions and is never more permanent than during good behavior,[71] and it seems now to be hereditament. The claim until perfected by location and patent is simply a right granted by the United States to receive so many acres of land, a mere equity. Walker v. Daly, 80 Wis. 222, 227, 49 N. W. 812.

V. Real and Personal Property Distinguished.

A. In General. While the essential differences between real and personal property as ordinarily defined[76] are well understood and uniformly recognized,[77] the distinction is in some cases difficult in its application,[78] since the same thing or substance is at different times classified as the one or the other according to its local situation, conformation, use or other accidental qualities,[79] and may at the same time be realty as to one person and personalty as to another,[80] and may by the mode of dealing with it be changed from the one to the other.[81] That which is in its nature personal may become a part of the realty by annexation thereto,[82] or notwithstanding it is so annexed may by reason of the intention, understanding, or agreement of the parties, retain its character as personalty,[83] or that which is a part of the realty may become personalty by severance.[84] So also every government has the right to establish and regulate the rights of property in things within its jurisdiction, and to impose upon it any character which it may choose,[85] and no other state can impugn or vary that character,[86] so that the same thing may be realty in one state and personalty in another.[87]

B. Real Property — 1. In General. Real property or real estate has been defined as the interest which a man has in lands, tenements, or hereditaments,[88] and also as such things as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, and which cannot be carried out of their places, as lands and tenements,[89] which is the definition given by Blackstone of "things real."[90] So while strictly speaking the term means the estate, title, or interest which one has in lands,[91] it is frequently used in the sense of things real to denote the subjects of real property.[92] The term "real property" or "real estate" is substantially coextensive with the phrase "lands, tenements, and hereditaments,"[93] and in some cases is expressly declared to be so by statute.[94] In a number of jurisdictions the meaning and application of the terms "real estate" or "real property" have been defined by statute;[95] but it is to be observed that even in the same jurisdiction the terms are sometimes differently defined in different statutes or for different purposes,[96] and that in some cases the statutory definitions apply only to the terms as used in statutory provisions.[97]

Slaves were in some jurisdictions declared to be real property (Chinn v. Respass, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 25, 27; Plumpton v. Cook, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 450, 451), and in Louisiana were classed as immovables (Hyams v. Smith, 6 La. Ann. 362, 363; Girard v. New Orleans, 2 La. Ann. 897, 901; Harper v. Stanbrough, 2 La. Ann. 377, 382), but although termed "immovables" were held not to be real estate (Girard v. New Orleans, supra).

2. As an Estate or Interest. As an estate or interest, real property or real estate imports at least an estate of freehold,[98] which is an estate of inheritance or for life;[99] but it includes all freehold estates,[1] whether corporeal or incorporeal,[2] and whether in possession, reversion, or remainder.[3] It therefore includes hereditaments,[4] whether corporeal,[5] or incorporeal,[6] such as easements.[7] The right of the owner of a pew in a church belonging to a religious society is also ordinarily held to be real estate,[8] although the right is in some respects of a qualified, limited, and subordinate nature.[9] Properly speaking, real property or real estate does not include any estate less than a freehold, such as leaseholds and estates for years,[10]

ordinarily termed "chattels real" and classed as personal property.[11] Under some of the statutory definitions, however,[12] the term "real property" "or real estate" includes, any estate or interest in land,[13] legal or equitable,[14] the interest of a mortgagor,[15] or mortgagee,[16] and also chattel interests;[17] but even under the statutory definitions there must, to constitute real property, be some estate or interest in lands,[18] and which must be an interest or property distinct from that of the public at large.[19]

3. As Subject-Matter of Real Property.[20] Considered as the subject-matter of property, the term "real property" or "real estate" is construed like the term "lands," [21] as including not only the surface of the earth but things of a permanent nature attached thereto,[22] and improvements of a permanent character placed upon it,[23] and also the natural products or growths of the land,[24] such as growing trees,[25]

C. Personal Property — 1. In General. Personal property has been defined as the right or interest which a man has in things personal,[46] or the right or interest less than a freehold which a man has in realty, or any right or interest which he has in things movable.[47] It has also been defined as goods, money, and all other movables which may attend the person of the owner wherever he may think proper to go,[48] which is the definition given by Blackstone of "things personal."[49] The term "personal property" is used to apply both to the thing itself and the right or interest of the owner therein.[50] To define personal property as consisting of movables, is not, even in the sense of things personal, strictly accurate,[51] for there may be personal property of an immovable character,[52] such as growing crops,[53] standing trees, sold but not actually severed from the soil,[54] and buildings and other structures affixed to the soil but with the understanding that they are to be removed;[55] but all things personal may be included under the term "chattels,"[56] which consist of chattels real and chattels personal,[57] and the property in which may be either in possession or in action.[58] In some cases the meaning and application of the term "personal property" is defined by statute,[59] and it is also sometimes used in a sense different from its proper and technical meaning,[60] so that its application must be determined by the ordinary rules of construction.[61] In its broad and general sense, however, personal property includes everything which is the subject of ownership not coming under the denomination of real estate,[62] and has been held to include growing crops,[63] growing strawberry plants,[64] crude turpentine or "scrape," [65] peat, dry or in process of drying,[66] rails not in a fence,[67] grass owned by one person but growing upon the land of another,[68] a railway laid upon the land of another,[69] a dam built on another man's land with his consent,[70] the rolling-stock of a railroad company,[71] office furniture, safes, tables, chairs, and desks not attached to the building,[72] a building which has been sold and is being removed,[73] buildings constructed upon the land of another, but with the understanding or agreement that they are to be removed or considered as personal

There is a recognized distinction between the natural growths of the land and the annual products of agriculture, the former being regarded as realty and the latter as personalty (Westbrook v. Eager, 16 N. J. L. 81, 85; Pattison's Appeal, 61 Pa. St. 294, 297, 100 Am. Dec. 637); but the rule is not uniform that crops are to be regarded as personal property, since for some purposes or within the application of some statutes they are regarded as a part of the realty (McCall v. State, 69 Ala. 227, 228; State v. Helmes, 27 N. C. 364, 365), and the decisions are by no means uniform as to when and for what purposes they are to be considered realty or personalty, it being said that the question has become involved in a "mystic maze of uncertainty and contradiction," the only conclusion deducible from the authorities being that "a growing crop is a sort of legal species of chameleon" (Bagley v. Columbus Southern R. Co., 98 Ga. 626, 631, 25 S. E. 638, 58 Am. St. Rep. 325, 34 L. R. A. 286), and that there is no fixed rule by which to determine in every case when they are to be considered personal and when real estate (Reed v. Johnson, 14 Ill. 257, 258).

property,[74] and generally things which have been annexed to the realty, but which may be detached or removed under the law relating to fixtures.[75] Shares of corporate stock are personal property.[76] A land certificate, while it symbolizes the right to acquire land, is in itself personal property.[77] Improvement claims have also been considered as chattels,[78] and a title deed is a personal chattel,[79] although it is so connected with and essential to the ownership of the realty that it descends to the heir,[80] while land scrip, which is also a chattel, is unlike an ordinary deed and has a market value in itself.[81]

2. Chattels Real. Personal property includes chattels real as well as chattels personal.[82] Chattels real are such as concern or savor of the realty,[83] and include all estates and interests in real property less than estates of freehold,[84] a freehold being an estate of inheritance or for life.[85] And so properly speaking all lesser estates or interests, such as leaseholds and estates for years, are personal property,[86]

3. Choses in Action. A chose in action is personal property.[88] A chose in action has been defined as a right to receive or recover a debt, or money, or damages for breach of contract, or for a tort connected with contract, but which cannot be inforced without action;[89] any right to damages, whether arising from the commission of a tort, the omission of a duty, or the breach of a contract;[90] or a right to personal things of which the owner has not the possession, but merely a right of action for their possession.[91] The last definition is substantially that given by Blackstone of property in action,[92] which he further says depends entirely upon contracts either express or implied;[93] but this statement is too limited,[94] as the term "chose in action" is now used to apply to rights of action arising out of tort as well as contract,[95] and whether such right of action is for an injury to the person or to property.[96] But the term "chose in action" is used in contradistinction to chose in possession,[97] and it is not every chattel, of which the owner is not in actual possession, that may be termed a chose in action,[98] and it is not a chose in action if the owner is in either the actual or constructive possession thereof.[99] So also it must be a thing or claim for which an action may be brought,[1] although it has been held that a present right of action is not necessary.[2] While the application of the term "chose in action" must in some cases be determined by the construction of a particular statute,[3] it is, as ordinarily used, very broad and comprehensive,[4] being applied both to the right of bringing an action and the thing itself, which is the subject-matter of the right,[5] and it has been held to include bank-notes,[6] a bill of lading,[7] a certificate or share of stock in a corporation,[8]

There are two recognized significations of the term "chose in action." It is sometimes used in the broad sense of all rights of action, whether ex contractu or ex delicto. In its narrower and more general sense it is confined to assignable rights of action ex contractu, or perhaps ex delicto for injuries to property, but excluding actions ex delicto for personal injuries. It may be used in either of these senses, and in a statute the intention of the legislature must govern. Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 32, 28 Am. St. Rep. 527.

1. Divine v. Harvie, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 439, 443, 18 Am. Dec. 194.

2. Haskell v. Blair, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 534, 536, where the court, holding that a present right of action was not necessary, said: "A note, bond, or other promise not negotiable, is denominated a chose in action, before the promisor or obligor is liable to an action on it, as well as after. A note for money, payable on time, is a chose in action, as soon as it is made." But see Hillman v. Shannahan, 4 Oreg. 163, 18 Am. Rep. 281, holding that where the purchaser of a business takes a bond conditioned that the seller will not engage in business of the same character for a stated period, it is not a chose in action until there has been a breach of condition.

3. Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 32, 28 Am. Rep. 527.

As used in the federal statutes limiting the jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts, the phrase "chose in action" cannot be construed as including rights of action founded on some wrongful act or neglect of duty causing damages (Ambler v. Eppinger, 137 U. S. 480, 11 S. Ct. 173, 34 L. ed. 765); and does not include a claim against a railroad company for overcharges in freight (Com. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 48 Fed. 177).

4. Sheldon v. Sill, 8 How. (U. S.) 441, 449, L. ed. 1147).

The term includes "all rights to personal property not in possession, which may be enforced by action" (Sterling v. Sims, 72 Ga. 51, 53; Gillet v. Fairchild, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 80, 82); and "the infinite variety of contracts, covenants, and promises, which confer on one party a right to recover a personal chattel or a sum of money from another, by action" (Sheldon v. Sill, 8 How. (U. S.) 441, 449, 12 L. ed. 1147).

5. Sterling v. Sims, 72 Ga. 51, 53; Black L. Dict.

"An evidence of indebtedness, under whatsoever name it may be termed, whether note, bond, bill of exchange or other instrument, and however secured, is a mere chattel personal, included within the term 'chose in action.'" Easton v. Peoria County, 183 Ill. 255, 257, 55 N. E. 716.

Properly speaking, there is a distinction between the security or evidence of the debt and the thing due. A deed, bill of exchange, or promissory note may be in the possession of the owner, but the money or damages due on them are no less choses in action. The chose in action is the money, damages, or thing owing, the bond or note, etc., is but the evidence of it. Richmond First Nat. Bank v. Holland, 99 Va. 495, 504, 39 S. E. 126, 86 Am. of the realty,[38] a right of remainder in a slave devised to another for a term of years,[39] a slave held by a bailee for hire, it being a thing in possession,[40] or a debt due from a state for which an appropriation has been made, the state not being suable.[41]

D. Conversion or Change of Form — 1. In General. The form or character of property may, in some instances, be changed from personalty to realty, or from realty to personalty by the act of the owner or other person, in dealing with it.[42] Thus, where manure lies on the soil where it was originally deposited it becomes a part of the soil and is to be treated as real estate;[43] but if it be severed from the soil, gathered up and secured for use elsewhere, it becomes a mere personal chattel,[44] and if, after having been gathered up it is spread upon the land and appropriated to fertilizing purposes, it again becomes realty.[45] Stones taken from the ground and sold, and removed to another part of the premises, become personal property by the severance.[46] Rails made up into a fence upon the land become a part of the realty,[47] but old fence rails, constituting the refuse of a removed fence, are personalty.[48] Brick and lumber, although personalty before they are put into a house, become by such use a part of the realty and remain so until severed and reconverted by the owner;[49] but the sale of a house and the materials in it with the understanding that they are to be removed constitutes a severance thereof from the land and converts them into personal property.[50] It is held, however, that, to convert an article which is a part of the realty into a chattel by severance, the act must be done by one having the right or authority to do so,[51] and with the intention of so converting it,[52] and that what is realty continues to be so until the owner by his election gives it a different character.[53] So in the absence of any act to show a severance, the bricks of houses destroyed by fire and the lumber of those blown down by storms remain realty,[54] and pass with a conveyance of the land so that they cannot subsequently be removed therefrom by the former owner.[55]

2. Severance of Trees. Trees growing upon the land are a part of the realty,[56] but ordinarily when severed therefrom they become personal property,[57] although the title of the owner to them is not affected thereby,[58] and after severance they will not pass by a subsequent conveyance of the land.[59] This conversion from realty to personalty ordinarily takes place, although the trees are severed by a trespasser or person temporarily in possession of the land but having no right to cut them;[60] but the trees severed are the property of the person owning the fee in the land or estate in reversion or remainder.[61] Where a sale is made of trees which are to be removed within a given time, those cut within the time limited become personalty,[62] although not actually removed from the land;[63] but trees not cut within the time limited do not become personalty.[64] In order to constitute a con-

Although the severance is merely constructive as by a valid sale and conveyance of the trees, they do not pass by a subsequent conveyance of the land (Warren v. Leland, 2 Barb. (N. Exception to rule.— Ordinarily timber cut by a trespasser or by a tenant without right becomes personalty of the owner of the land, and on his death passes to the personal representative instead of to the heirs, but if the person who cut it is one who would profit by its conversion into personalty, equity will not permit him to gain an advantage from his own wrongful act, but it will be held to retain its character as realty and to pass to those who would have been entitled thereto if it had not been severed. version the severance need not be actual but may be constructive,[65] as by a valid sale or conveyance of the timber, or of the land reserving the right to the timber;[66] but there is a direct conflict of authority as to what will constitute a valid conveyance, sale, or contract in regard to standing trees under the statute of frauds.[67] It is settled, however, that a license to enter upon land and cut and remove timber may be given by parol,[68] and that an ineffectual attempt to sell or convey may operate as such a license,[69] and timber actually severed prior to a revocation of such a license will become personal property of the purchaser or licensee.[70]

E. What Law Governs — 1. Real Property. It is a principle firmly established that the law of the state wherein real estate is situated (lex loci rei sitæ) controls and governs its descent and alienation; the construction, validity, and effect of wills and other conveyances thereof; and the capacity of the parties to such contracts or conveyances, and their rights thereunder.[71] This rule is without

2. Personal Property. The general rule is that personal property has no locality but follows the person of the owner, and is assignable, transferable, or transmissible by his voluntary act, according to the laws of the country of his domicile.[74] The soundness of this rule as a general proposition has been seriously questioned,[75] and it is certainly not of universal application,[76] but subject to various exceptions;[77] and the tendency of modern authority is steadily toward a greater recognition of the law of the situs,[78] and a restriction of the old rule to

The old rule expressed in the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam, by which personal property was regarded as subject to the law of the owner's domicile, grew up in the middle ages when movable property consisted chiefly of gold and jewels which could easily be carried by the owner from place to place or secreted in spots known only to himself. In modern times since the great increase in amount and variety of personal property not immediately connected with the person of the owner, that rule has yielded more and more to the lex situs, the law of the place where the property is kept and used. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 S. Ct. 876, 35 L. ed. 613.

personal property of an intangible character.[79] The rule is based upon a legal fiction,[80] which should yield whenever it is necessary for the purposes of justice that the actual situs of the thing should be examined.[81] It is also subject to the right of every state to make laws for the protection and security of its own citizens and to regulate modes of transfer with regard to property actually situated within its jurisdiction,[82] and if when adopted such regulations conflict with the general rule, the former will prevail.[83] So for some purposes personal property of a tangible character may be said to have locality and be subject to the law of the state where it is situated,[84] as in regard to the rights of creditors;[85] and for purposes of taxation, personalty may be separated from the owner and be taxed, on its account, at the place where it is actually located.[86]

VI. OWNERSHIP AND INCIDENTS THEREOF.

Ownership has been defined as the right by which a thing belongs to an individual to the exclusion of all other persons,[87] but ownership does not always mean absolute ownership.[88] Ownership may be absolute or conditional,[89] and there may be distinct properties held by several persons in the same thing.[90] The ownership of property may be in the sovereign, and the use private or public,[91]

or the ownership may be public and the use private,[92] or the ownership or legal title may be in one person and the right of possession in another,[93] or either the ownership or possession may be in several persons jointly or in common.[94] The chief incidents of the ownership of property are the rights to its possession, use, and enjoyment,[95] and to sell or otherwise dispose of it according to the will of the owner,[96] usually to the exclusion of all others,[97] and without any diminution or control save only by the laws of the land.[98] Indeed property is often defined as the right to possess, use, enjoy, and dispose of a thing,[99] or the power of one to do with it as he pleases so long as he does not violate the law.[1] On the other hand property is held subject to certain duties, restraints, and liabilities,[2] such as that each person must so use his property as not unnecessarily to injure another,[3] that generally speaking it shall be liable for the debts of the owner,[4] subject to taxation,[5] liable to be taken for public use in the exercise of the power of eminent domain,[6] and lastly all property is held subject to such restraints and regulations as the state may constitutionally make in the exercise of its police power.[7]

property,[12] and is good against any one but the true owner,[13] and so one in the actual possession of land, although without title, is entitled to retain possession thereof as against a stranger.[14] Possession of land is also notice to the world of a claim and interest, equitable as well as legal.[15] In the absence of actual possession of land in any one else, the possession follows the legal title, and the holder thereof is deemed to be in constructive possession,[16] and so the possession of wild and vacant lands follows the record title.[17] So also actual possession of a part, with title to the whole of a tract of land coupled with an intent to possess the whole, is possession of the whole;[18] but there cannot be two conflicting constructive possessions at the same time of the same land;[19] and where one in actual possession of a tract of land conveys legal title to that portion on which is the actual possession, his constructive possession of the residue of the tract ceases.[20]

VIII. TITLE TO AND MODES OF ACQUIRING OR LOSING PROPERTY.

A. Definition and Nature of Title. The term "title" has been defined as the right whereby we hold our own;[21] the just or lawful cause or ground of possessing that which is ours;[22] that which is the foundation of ownership,[23] of either real or personal property;[24] that which constitutes a just cause of exclusive possession.[25] Title has also been defined as the evidence of the right which a person has to the possession of property,[26] or the evidence of ownership;[27] the means whereby the owner is entitled to assert or maintain his possession,[28] or the means whereby a person's right to property is established;[29] the right of the owner, considered with reference either to the manner in which it has been acquired, or its capacity the title to which was in another, and made improvements thereon, does not tend to prove ownership of the property in fee by the company in favor of its bondholders without proof of a contract for the transfer of the title, and where the possession is as readily attributable to a lease or license. of being effectually transferred.[30] Blackstone defines title to land as the means whereby the owner of lands hath the just possession of his property,[31] and further states that there are several stages or degrees requisite to form a complete title to land,[32] which are actual possession, right of possession and right of property.[33] The term "title" is used in different senses,[34] sometimes in the sense of ownership,[35] or of right, interest, or estate,[36] and in this connection sometimes broadly as signifying any estate or interest,[37] but usually in the sense of absolute ownership,[38] or estate in fee simple,[39] although title does not necessarily mean absolute ownership.[40] It is also used in the sense of right of possession as distinguished from the mere fact of possession,[41] and in the sense of the evidence of one's right as distinguished from the actual beneficial ownership or right or interest in the property.[42] Properly speaking there is a clear distinction between title and estate,[43] and title is also a broader and more general term than right,[44] and is also

42. Patty v. Middleton, 82 Tex. 586, 591, 17 S. W. 909, where the court said: "There is no doubt that the word 'title' is often used to signify the right or interest a person has in or to the thing referred to, and when thus used is the equivalent of the word 'estate'; but this is not the sense in which it is used when it has reference to a purchase of real or personal property by a bona fide purchaser, for the inquiry in such cases is, upon what evidence did the purchaser act. . . . The question is not one of real beneficial ownership or of superior right, but of apparent ownership evidenced as the law requires ownership to be."

44. Pratt v. Fountain, 73 Ga. 261, 262; Campfield v. Johnson, 21 N. J. L. 83, 85.

to be distinguished from the deed or document which is the evidence of one's title.[45]

B. Modes of Acquisition or Loss. The modes of acquiring or losing title to property may properly be considered together, since the terms are of a reciprocal nature, and generally by whatever method one person gains an estate by that same method or its correlative some other person has lost it.[46] The methods of acquiring or losing title to real property may be reduced to two; namely, by descent,[47] and by purchase.[48] In this connection the term "purchase" is not used in its popular sense as signifying a transaction in the nature of a bargain and sale, but as contradistinguished from acquisition by right of blood,[49] and embracing every means by which property may be acquired other than by descent.[50] It therefore includes escheat,[51] occupancy,[52] prescription,[53] adverse possession,[54] forfeiture,[55] and alienation,[56] which embraces any method by which property is voluntarily transferred from one person to another by mutual consent of the parties,[57] and is usually by deed,[58] or devise.[59] There are, according to Blackstone, twelve principal modes of acquiring or losing one's right or title to personal property,[60] namely, by occupancy,[61] by prerogative,[62] by forfeiture,[63] by word; for every right is a title, but every title is not such a right for which an action lieth; and therefore Titulus est justa causa possidendi quod nostrum est, and signifieth the meanes whereby a man commeth to land, as his title is by fine or by feoffment, &c." Coke Litt. 345*b*.

45. Botsford v. Morehouse, 4 Conn. 550, 551, where the court, holding that it was necessary to discriminate "between title to the land in question and the evidence originating such title," said: "The evidence of title may be very various; as by descent, by deed, by record, by devise, and by many other modes, which need not be enumerated. A deed, duly executed, is only a mode of transfer, by the operation of which the law conveys the estate; and if this instrument of conveyance becomes accidently lost or destroyed, the title still remains permanent and immovable."

Owners of a private railroad, who with the consent of a railroad corporation, run their rolling stock over the tracks of said corporation and while so doing violate a statute providing that no proprietors of a railroad shall obstruct by their engines, cars, or train, any highway more than two minutes at any one time, under penalty to the party delayed. Hall v. Brown, 54 N. H. 495, 497. Persons occupying the premises either as tenant or owner, under a statute providing that "an injunction may be granted to restrain the malicious erection, by any owner or lessee of land, of any structure intended to spite, injure, or annoy an adjoining proprietor." Winsor v. German Sav., etc., Soc., 31 Wash. 365, 368, 72 Pac. 66.

The term has been held not to include: A railroad acquiring a right under statute to use the track of another railroad, within the meaning of a statute providing that "any town . . . may by vote require the proprietors of any railroad to secure the crossing of any highway by said railroad, by a bridge, or a pass under said way, or by gates on both sides of said railroad." Eastern R. Co. v. Portsmouth, 62 N. H. 344, 345. A person wrongfully entering upon and filling up land under navigable water, thereby raising it above the water, where a statute empowers land commissioners to grant lands under navigable waters, but contains the proviso that "no such grant shall be made to any person other than the proprietor of the adjacent lands." People v. Land Office Com'rs, 135 N. Y. 447, 448, 32 N. E. 139. A receiver within the meaning of a statute giving a right of action against a "proprietor," "owner," "charterer" or "hirer" of a railroad for injuries resulting in death caused by the negligence of their servants. "Proprietorship, thus defined, is compounded of the proprietor's beneficial rights, PROPRIETY. Suitableness to an acknowledged or correct standard or rule; consonance with established principles, rules, or customs; fitness; justness; correctness.[33] In old English law, property.[34]

PROPRIOS. In Spanish law, productive lands the usufruct of which had been set apart to the several municipalities for the purpose of defraying the charges of their respective governments; [35] municipal lands, from which revenues are derived to defray the expenses of the municipal administration.[36]

PROPRIO VIGORE. By its own force; by its intrinsic meaning.[37]

PROPRIUM EST REGIS GRATIAM DELICTI FACERE. A maxim meaning "It is the prerogative of the king to pardon transgressions." [38]

PROPTER AFFECTUM. A challenge to a juror on account of the likelihood or suspicion of bias or prejudice;[39] suspicion of bias or partiality.[40] (See JURIES, 24 Cyc. 334.)

PROPTER DEFECTUM. On account of or for some defect; the name of a species of "challenge." [41] (See JURIES, 24 Cyc. 334.)

PRO RATA. According to a measure which fixes proportions;[42] according to a certain part; in proportion;[43] according to the rate; in proportion;[44] in proportion;[45] implying the disposition of a fund or sum indicated in proportion and his right of excluding other persons from the use or profit." Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,644, 5 Pa. L. J. 501, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 157.

I. NATURE AND FUNCTIONS OF OFFICE.

Prosecuting and district attorneys are judicial officers of the state,[1] within their respective districts, although not officers of the state at large.[2] Under some statutes they are county officers,[3] while under others they are not, but are circuit or district officers.[4] The state may provide as many as are necessary to prosecute criminals and otherwise protect its interests,[5] subject of course to constitutional restrictions;[6] and where the office is not created by the constitution, but by statute, it may be abolished or changed by the legislature.[7] Like other attorneys, prosecuting and district attorneys are officers of the court;[8] but they are not a part of the court because of their office. A prosecuting attorney is a public officer because he represents the sovereign power of the people of the state by whose authority and in whose name, under the constitution, all prosecutions must be conducted, and not because of his relation to the court.[9]

Code, § 4256 (County Government Act (1897), p. 488, c. 277, § 132), making it the duty of district attorneys to "conduct on behalf of the people all prosecutions for public offenses," and St. (1889) p. 472, c. 1, § 49, making it the duty of a city attorney to prosecute all criminal cases arising upon violations of the charter or ordinances, and Const. art. 11, § 6, exempting charters from legislative control in municipal affairs; and is invalid in so far as it imposes on the city the duty of paying the salary of prosecuting attorneys for prosecuting offenses either under the statute generally or under the charter or ordinances; and its invalidity is not affected by St. (1901) p. 96, c. 81, providing that the fines imposed by the police courts shall be paid into the city treasury.

II. Election or Appointment, Qualification, Tenure, Etc.

A. Election or Appointment[10] — 1. In General. The manner of appointment or election of prosecuting and district attorneys in the state depends entirely upon the constitution and laws of the several states.[11] District attorneys of the United States are appointed by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate.[12] If no other mode of filling the office is provided by law, any court having criminal jurisdiction has the power to appoint an attorney to prosecute.[13]

2. Appointment to Fill Vacancy.[14] Vacancies in the office of prosecuting or district attorney are usually filled by the executive, by the circuit, district, or county courts, or by a county board, the power and mode of appointment being provided by statute.[15] Power to appoint a district attorney pro tempore, in the absence of the regular incumbent, has been held to include the power to fill a vacancy.[16] A statute creating the office of county attorney and providing for vacancies therein will prevail over general laws as to the manner of filling vacancies,[17] unless the general law is contained in a new constitution.[18] Since a district attorney duly appointed or elected holds until his successor is qualified,[19] if one duly elected or appointed fails to qualify and enter upon the duties of the office, or dies or resigns before qualifying, there is no vacancy, but his predecessor holds over until the next election,[20] except where the predecessor's term is limited expressly by the constitution or statute.[21] Where, however, a duly qualified prosecuting attorney-elect resigns or dies, although his predecessor's term has not yet expired, the latter cannot hold over, but a vacancy is created.[22] An unauthorized resignation does not create a vacancy.[23]

B. Eligibility[24] — 1. In General. In some jurisdictions it has been held that, unless expressly required by the constitution or statute, a license to practise law is not necessary to render one eligible to the office of prosecuting or district attorney;[25]

S. Const. art. 2, § 2, and U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 1769, but merely authorized the circuit justice to fill the vacancy until the president should act. In re Farrow, 3 Fed. 112, 4 Woods 491.

but the better opinion is to the contrary.[26] It has also been held in a state holding the former view that disbarment will not disqualify unless it is named as a circumstance creating a vacancy.[27] A requirement that the prosecuting attorney must be learned in the law is satisfied by admission to practice in the courts of the same or another state, provided a license from the latter entitles him to admission in his own state.[28] If the prosecuting or district attorney is required to be a practising attorney in the state, a suspension from practice in any court thereof renders him ineligible so long as the order of suspension remains in force.[29] If his qualifications are prescribed by the constitution, the legislature cannot change or add to them.[30] Residence within the county or district is usually necessary,[31] and sometimes residence for a certain length of time is required.[32]

2. Women. Unless otherwise provided, it is always understood that only electors may hold public office;[33] and therefore women are not usually eligible as prosecuting attorneys.[34]

3. How Determined. If an appointee has already entered upon the duties of his office, neither the appointing body nor the court may summarily declare the office vacant because of his ineligibility. That question can then be determined only upon quo warranto proceedings in the proper court.[35] It is also a well-settled rule of public policy that the right of an incumbent de facto cannot be attacked collaterally. It can be determined only in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose.[36] A district attorney appointed by authority of law becomes a de facto officer after undisturbed and unquestioned exercise of the powers of the office for a time, although at the time of appointment he was ineligible.[37]

C. Qualification[38] — 1. In General. On his election or appointment a district or prosecuting attorney must qualify as required by law before entering upon the discharge of his duties.[39] Unless required by law it is not necessary that the amount of the bond be fixed for each incumbent. A prosecuting attorney-elect may give bond in the sum last fixed, and it shall be deemed sufficient until a larger one is ordered.[40] Failure to file the certificate of election, properly indorsed and within the time required, will not work a forfeiture of the office, but the person elected cannot enter upon the duties of the office until he has complied with the law in that respect.[41]

2. Refusal of Court to Allow Qualification. The action of the court in denying leave to one duly appointed, to take the oath of office and enter upon the duties thereof is judicial in its nature, and therefore subject to review by the appellate court.[42]

D. Tenure[43]— 1. In General. The term and tenure of office of district and prosecuting attorneys in the states depends of course upon the constitution and statutes of the particular state.[44] United States district attorneys are appointed for four years.[45] In the absence of any provision of law to the contrary, a district attorney holds office until the expiration of his term as fixed by law and until his successor has qualified.[46] If the office is created and the term fixed by the constitution, the legislature can neither abolish the office nor abridge the term,[47] as by providing for a new election before the expiration thereof,[48] by redivision of the state into judicial circuits,[49] by rediviging one circuit into two,[50] by changing the name of the criminal court of the circuit,[51] or by assigning his duties to the attorney of another district.[52] Even when the constitution confers upon the legislature power to abolish the office, it cannot abolish the tenure of any rightful incumbent.[53] Nor will a constitutional amendment creating the office of prosecuting attorney, but not abolishing the tenure of district attorneys then in office, take effect until the close of the term for which the latter were elected.[54] If the office be created by the legislature, the same body may either abolish the office, or extend or abridge the term, in the absence of constitutional prohibition.[55] The term of office, being fixed by law, cannot be extended by the governor's commission for a longer period.[56]

2. Of Appointee to Fill Vacancy.[57] An appointee to fill a vacancy caused by death, resignation, or removal, where the office is an elective one, holds only until the next general election, and until his successor shall qualify.[58] But when, as in

Constitutionality of statute postponing beginning of term.— The Ohio act of April 19, 1898, "To amend section 1267 of the Revised Statutes" (93 Ohio Laws, p. 125), postponing the beginning of the official terms of prosecuting attorneys from the first Monday in January to the first Monday in September, is void, being in violation of the tenth article of the constitution, which requires that county officers shall be elected, and not within the authority to provide for the filling of vacancies conferred upon the general assembly by the twenty-seventh section of the second article. case of sickness and the like, the vacancy is contingent, the appointment lasts only until such disability is removed.[59]

E. Removal and Resignation — 1. Removal[60] — a. In General. A district attorney of the United States may be removed before the expiration of his term by the president with the consent of the senate, notwithstanding the requirement of the statute [61] that he shall be appointed for a term of four years. These are words of limitation, not of grant.[62] And appointment and confirmation by the senate of a successor nominated by the president is sufficient ratification of the order of removal.[63] The power of a court to remove its attorney for the state or commonwealth has been recognized.[64] But a state prosecuting attorney whose term of office is fixed by law cannot, in the absence of a statute, be removed at the pleasure of the executive.[65] If guilty of nonfeasance or malfeasance in office, a prosecuting attorney forfeits his office and may be removed therefrom by quo warranto proceedings, or proceedings under the statute, in the proper court.[66]

The prosecuting attorney is subject to forfeiture of his office for giving professional assistance to a defendant in a criminal prosecution (In re Voss, 11 N. D. 540, 90 N. W. 15), or for gross immorality (Moore v. Strickling, 46 W. Va. 515, 33 S. E. 274, 50 L. R. A. 279). A state's attorney, who, on several occasions, enters a public gambling house, and bets money on a roulette wheel, or otherwise gambles for money there, and wilfully refrains from informing and prosecuting the keeper of such place, is guilty of a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, as such failure to inform and prosecute such keeper involves the violation of an official oath and the violation of the express command of N. D. Rev. Codes (1899), § 7243. In re Voss, supra. If a public officer, whose duty it is to prosecute the keeper and inmates of a house of ill fame, resorts to the same for immoral purposes, he is guilty of gross immorality, and thereby forfeits his office. In quo warranto to remove from office a county attorney charged with violating his duty in respect to the enforcement of the prohibitory liquor law the issue of primary importance is that concerning defendant's good faith in his official conduct. The law presumes that defendant acted in good faith in all the matters charged against him, and the burden rests upon the state to show otherwise by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Trinkle, 70 Kan. 396, 78 Pac. 854. A county attorney is not obliged to institute proceedings for the punishment of offenders against the prohibitory liquor law upon his own knowledge; but whenever notified by an officer or other person of any violation of that law it is his duty forthwith to exercise diligently all the authority conferred on him by law for the purpose of disclosing, prosecuting, and punishing the offender. State v. Trinkle, supra. Upon the trial of such an action evidence that saloons were run openly and publicly in defendant's county is relevant as bearing upon his motives in dealing with specific offenses of which he had been duly

Mere misconduct while in office, not official misconduct, is not sufficient.[67] Causes of removal or suspension are sometimes prescribed by the constitution or by statute; but if they are prescribed by the constitution the legislature cannot prescribe other or different causes.[68]

b. Method.[69] If the law prescribes no other method of removing prosecuting attorneys, the appointing body may remove them, the power of removal being incident to the power of appointment.[70] In such case, if no term of office is fixed by law, the appointing body may remove them and appoint others in their stead without assigning any reason therefor.[71] If the method of removal is prescribed by the constitution, the legislature has no power to prescribe any other mode.[72]

c. Practice.[73] Unless required by statute, neither indictment, trial, nor conviction are a prerequisite to the removal of a prosecuting attorney for official misconduct.[74] The trial of charges against a prosecuting attorney for his removal from office is not within the constitutional provision for trial by jury;[75] nor is it necessary that the complaint of official neglect or misconduct shall be verified by oath, where the statute does not require it.[76] A criminal prosecution against a county attorney will not prevent proceedings by a statutory civil action to remove him for misconduct in office.[77] On the trial of a proceeding to remove a prosecuting attorney for misconduct in office, based upon charges of crime, he cannot be required to testify, where a statute provides that on trial of all indictments, complaints, or proceedings against any person, he shall not be a competent witness except upon his own request.[78] As a rule an appeal or writ of error will lie to or from a judgment of removal.[79]

2. Resignation. The resignation of prosecuting and district attorneys is governed by the same principles as that of other officers.[80] The mode of resigning and the formalities to be observed are usually prescribed by statute.[81] Where a resignation is required to be made to the court it cannot be made to the judge notified. State v. Trinkle, supra. If a county attorney be notified of a violation of the prohibitory liquor law, and be furnished with the names of witnesses by whom the fact of such violation may be established, he cannot unnecessarily delay an investigation of the matter, or a prosecution, if the facts warrant, merely because the city in which the offense occurred is about to institute or has instituted proceedings under its ordinances for punishing the offense. His duties are not dischargeable by the city authorities, and a city prosecution is not a mere substitute for a prosecution by the state. State v. Trinkle, supra.

during vacation. Although accepted by him and entered upon the record, such resignation does not create a vacancy.[82]

F. Effect of Redividing State into Judicial Districts. Such division, as has been seen, cannot be so made as to abridge the constitutional term of office of any rightful incumbent.[83] If the legislature, acting under authority expressly conferred by the constitution, transfers the county of residence of a district attorney to another district, he does not become the prosecuting attorney for the latter district.[84] But he remains the attorney for his original district.[85] When a new county is added to a criminal circuit, the solicitor for that circuit is entitled to the office for that county also, no other solicitor being provided.[86] statute, to be paid to the prosecuting attorney in a certain event, cannot be recovered if the proceeding does not take the course mentioned.[90] He is not entitled to compensation for services not required by law;[91] nor for services required by law and actually performed, if no fees are provided for.[92] Salary is an incident of the office; it is not dependent upon the rendition of services. Payment to an incumbent de facto does not deprive the district attorney having legal title to the office, of his right to such salary.[93] But the right to fees arises only upon services rendered.[94] In providing fees, it is not always clear what is meant by "each case," "each prosecution," or "proceeding," etc.[95] If the statute pro-

In divorce cases.— When the prosecuting attorney merely appears at the examination of the witnesses in a divorce case the parties to which have one child, and at the conclusion of the testimony announces that he does not think it necessary to contest the granting of a divorce, he is entitled to no fee, under Mich. Pub. Acts (1887), p. 152, providing that every petition for divorce shall set forth the names and ages of all the children of the marriage, and when there are any under fourteen years old, a subpœna shall issue to the prosecuting attorney, who shall enter his appearance, and oppose the granting of a divorce, if in his judgment the interests of the children or the public good require it, and that for every case he contests he shall receive five dollars. In Illinois section 2 of the act of 1901 (Laws (1901), p. 207), fixing the salary of the state's attorney of Cook county, is void because of alterations and irregularities in its passage, but the other sections of the act are unaffected and valid; and as the act of 1871, relating to the salaries of judges of the circuit and superior courts and the state's attorney of Cook county, is thereby repealed, there is no law in force fixing the salary to be paid by the county of Cook to its state's attorney. In Kentucky, under St. (1903) § 132, providing that the county attorney shall be allowed annually a reasonable salary to be paid out of the county levy, the salary must be a fixed sum, and not dependent on contingent fees, since to make an allowance payable out of such levy necessarily means that a certain sum is to be allowed, so that the county treasurer will have a definite order of the fiscal court to direct him in paying the claim. vides a fee "for each judgment recovered" against a sheriff for failure to return executions, he is entitled to such fee for each motion made, although the court consolidated all such motions and rendered but one judgment.[96] Under a statute allowing a fee for each prosecution in behalf of the state in which costs are taxed against the defendant, only one fee is earned by the commonwealth attorney upon scire facias issued to several persons bound together in a recognizance which has been forfeited.[97] A special act fixing the fee of a certain prosecuting attorney is not repealed by a general fee law.[98] Nor does a later act increasing the fees of prosecuting attorneys generally increase those of a solicitor whose office was created by a special act providing that his fees should be the same as those then received by other prosecuting attorneys for like services.[99] Of course if the fees or other compensation of prosecuting attorneys are fixed by the constitution, they cannot be reduced or otherwise changed by the legislature.[1] Sometimes prosecuting attorneys are required to account to the county for fees collected by them.[2]

1. Goldsborough v. Lloyd, 86 Md. 374, 38 Atl. 773, holding that under Const. art. 15, § 1, providing for compensation of certain officials (among others, state's attorneys), and allowing them to retain for their remuneration fees received to the amount of three thousand dollars, Loc. Acts (1894), c. 213, limiting the compensation of state's attorney in the county of Dorchester to one thousand two hundred dollars, is unconstitutional, if the fees actually earned according to the rates fixed by law amount to more than the sum total specified in the act. But under Ky. Const. § 235, providing that the salaries of public officers shall not be changed during their term of office, and section 98 declaring that the compensation of the commonwealth's attorney shall be by salary of five hundred dollars per annum, payable out of the state treasury, and such percentage of fines and forfeitures as may be fixed by law, it was held that an act creating an additional judicial district, the effect of which was to withdraw one of the counties from the district in which complainant was commonwealth's attorney during his term of office, and lessen the amount of the fines and penalties he would otherwise have received, but which did not diminish his salary of five hundred dollars nor the "percentage" of fines and forfeitures to which he was entitled, was not unconstitutional. Butler v. Stephens, 119 Ky. 616, 84 S. W. 745, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 241. Tex. Const. art. 5, § 21, prescribes that county attorneys "shall represent the state in all cases in the district and inferior courts in their respective counties," with the qualification that, if a county is in a district having a district attorney, the respective duties of district and county attorneys shall be regulated by the legislature. The act of the twenty-sixth legislature establishing corporation courts provides that in state cases prosecuted by the city attorney the county attorney, if he so desires, may so represent the state, but that he shall not be entitled to receive any fees or compensation therefor. It was held that such act is not unconstitutional, in so far as it provides that the county attorney shall not be entitled to receive any fees or compensation in such cases. Upton v. San Angelo, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 76, 94 S. W. 436. Sayles Civ. 2. In Criminal Prosecutions[3] — a. In General. The fees of prosecuting attorneys in criminal cases depend of course upon the statutes in the particular jurisdiction.[4] The fees of the prosecuting attorney are a proper item of costs to be taxed against the defendant; and it has been held that they are not imposed as a part of the punishment, but in order that the state may prosecute the guilty at their own expense.[5] On the other hand, however, it has been held that the act providing therefor is penal in its nature,[6] and the solicitor therefore is not entitled to such fee on a conviction for an offense committed before the passage of the act, although the defendant was indicted and tried afterward.[7] If a lesser fee be provided by the new act, the solicitor shall receive only that, notwithstanding the indictment was found and returned before its enactment.[8] An act which reduces the grade of an offense necessarily reduces the fee allowed in such cases, where the existing law provides different fees for the respective grades.[9]

b. Indictment and Trial Fees. For instruments returned by the grand jury "not true bills," it has been held that the prosecuting attorney is not entitled to the fee allowed for drawing indictments;[10] nor to the fee in criminal actions, since such action is commenced only when an indictment is found and filed with the clerk.[11] If the statute provides fees, so much for drawing indictments, and so much for engrossing them, the district attorney is entitled to the full fee for an indictment so well drawn that it is not necessary to engross it.[12] If the prosecuting attorney is also a justice of the peace, he is not entitled to justice's fees for drawing complaints and warrants which it is his duty as solicitor to draw, the statute providing that his salary shall be in full for all services.[13]

c. Upon Termination of Prosecution. A case placed upon the retired docket is not thereby disposed of, and the attorney cannot then recover the fee provided in cases nolle prossed. or of acquittal.[14] A statute fixing fees in cases settled by leave of court includes those in which a nolle pros. has been entered.[15] He cannot recover fees provided for "convictions," "judgments in favor of the state," etc.,

Tenn. Acts (1897), c. 41, which fixes the compensation of each district attorney-general, and provides that the fees provided by law shall be taxed as costs against the losing party, and turned over to the state, requires that the costs allowed a district attorney-general in an inheritance tax case shall be turned over to the state. for services rendered in the trial of criminal actions which are nolle prossed or result otherwise than in conviction.[16] He cannot claim a fee as for "final conviction," if, after conviction, the case is nolle prossed. or reversed;[17] nor the fee allowed for prosecuting certain crimes, if defendant is convicted of a lesser offense.[18] If the fee is simply for conviction, but one can be recovered, although the defendant is convicted in both courts.[19] An agreement by the defendant, on condition of dismissing the prosecution, to pay costs as on conviction, is contrary to public policy, and the attorney cannot have his fee taxed as upon conviction.[20] He is entitled only to the fee provided for cases nolle prossed.[21] Under a statute permitting the attorney to recover from the county one-half the regular fee if costs cannot be collected from the defendant, he is not entitled to the full fee when the defendant works out his costs in hard labor for the county.[22] And where there are several defendants he is not entitled to receive from the state compensation for services rendered in the supreme court without a certificate from the clerk of the trial court that each defendant is insolvent.[23]

d. Several Defendants. by law for the prosecution of civil actions.[28] If the sureties on a forfeited appeal-bond consent to judgment and pay over the amount to the district attorney, he is entitled to the fee allowed in "civil proceedings," although none were had.[29] It has been held in Kentucky that if a judgment of forfeiture be rendered, the county attorney is not entitled to the percentage allowed "in all prosecutions in which judgment is rendered in favor of the commonwealth," on the ground that the word "prosecutions" means criminal proceedings;[30] but in Tennessee, under a statute providing a fee in all "prosecutions in behalf of the state," it was held that a prosecuting attorney is entitled to the fee in scire facias on a bail-bond [31] and also in a proceeding against a constable to remove him from office,[32] as such proceedings are "prosecutions" within the meaning of the statute. Qui tam actions for a penalty, although tried as civil actions, are within the statute providing fees in proceedings of a criminal nature.[33]

In Kentucky, under St. (1903) § 126, providing that each county attorney shall attend all county and fiscal courts held in the county, and conduct all cases and business in such courts affecting the county's interest, etc., section 127 requiring him, when so directed by the county or fiscal court, to institute or defend actions and proceedings of every character before any of the courts of the commonwealth, sections 128, 129, 130, and 131 imposing other duties on him, and section 132 providing that he shall be allowed annually a reasonable salary, to be paid out of the county levy, services rendered by the county attorney, when directed by the county or fiscal court, are included in his official duties, and are covered by his annual salary allowed by section 132, although where, by statute, duties are imposed on him and compensation by way of commissions or otherwise is provided, he is entitled to such compensation in addition to the salary allowed by the fiscal court under said section. which resulted in substantial benefit to the county.[49] If the salary or fees of the office are payable out of the county treasury, a statute taxing an attorney's fee against defendant in certain cases does not give him extra compensation but is intended to reimburse the county.[50]

b. By Contract.[51] Although he is not entitled to anything for services not required by law, yet the prosecuting or district attorney may make a valid contract with the county for such services to be rendered in another county than his own,[52] or in another state,[53] or in the federal court where the services are not within his duties,[54] or beyond his term of office,[55] or otherwise not within the scope of his official duties,[56] and for extra compensation therefor.[57] And he may be entitled to compensation for services rendered to a school-district which are not within the duties imposed upon him by law.[58] In the absence of express contract, such employment in good faith is legal, and the law will imply a contract for extra compensation.[59] But a contract for extra official services and extra compensation is void under a constitutional provision that no county officer shall in any manner be pecuniarily interested in or receive the benefit of any contract executed by the county.[60]

He is not entitled to additional compensation for consultation and advice within his district concerning the removal of cases to another county (Huffman v. Greenwood County, 25 Kan. 64); nor for attending to a suit in another county to which his own county was a party, it being his statutory duty to appear for his county in all suits to which it is a party (Hennepin County v. Robinson, 16 Minn. 381).

Amount of compensation.— In an action by a prosecuting attorney against a school-district for services, where the agreed statement of facts showed that the attorney submitted a bill for one hundred and fifty dollars for his services, and where it did not appear that such bill was an offer of compromise or a mere attempt to settle a disputed claim, it was held that a finding for plaintiff in an amount exceeding one hundred and fifty dollars was erroneous. c. Fees in Addition to Salary. A constitution or statute fixing a salary in full payment for all services abolishes all fees pertaining to the office.[61] But unless it is clear that the salary is in lieu of other compensation, the fees provided for prosecuting certain cases may still be allowed.[62] Prosecuting attorneys cannot be allowed anything for the payment of deputies, clerks, etc., if their salaries are declared by law to be in full for all services rendered.[63]

8. Liability of State, County, City, and Private Citizens. The liability of the state, county, or city to pay the salary or other compensation of prosecuting attorneys depends upon the constitution and statutes of the state.[64] The prosecuting attorney's fee is a part of the cost of a criminal proceeding; [65] and under

In Illinois it has been held that, in view of the uncertainty of the language of Const. art. 6, § 25, and the practical construction given thereto by the various acts of the legislature in permitting state's attorneys to retain fees in addition to the salary paid by the state and county, such provision will not be held to restrict the compensation of state's attorneys to the salary paid to them by the state and county or to require them to pay over to the county all fees collected by them in excess of such salary. Laws (1898), p. 7, § 8, and by Sess. a statute providing that upon failure of the defendant against whom judgment is rendered to pay the costs, the county shall be liable for the same, it is liable for his fees.[66] A statutory fee of a percentage of certain fines, etc., gives the prosecuting attorney a vested interest therein. If wholly remitted, he is not entitled to have such fee taxed against the defendant as costs, but he must look to the state or county for payment thereof; otherwise, the remission relieves the defendant only of that portion which would go to the state or county, and the attorney may recover his percentage from the defendant.[67] A statute requiring the county attorney's per diem to be paid by the state is void, where the constitution directs that county officers receiving stated salaries shall be paid by the county, a per diem being a stated salary.[68] A mere request by private citizens that proceedings be instituted against the accused, does not raise an implied contract to pay therefor, the attorney being charged by law with the duty of such prosecution.[69] Fees fixed by law are not to be taxed against defendants unless it is so provided, but they are to be paid by the state or county.[70] pass judgment on the claim when presented, of which neither the attorney nor the county court in its administrative capacity is the judge;[74] and the order of allowance cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding.[75] Mandamus will lie to enforce the exercise of the discretion to allow attorney's fees, but not to correct an allowance.[76] If the law requires solicitor's charges certified by the judge to be audited before allowance by the county board,[77] or if the board has by law exclusive control of all county expenditures,[78] the amount lies within the discretion of the board and it is not controlled by the certificate of the judge. The solicitor cannot appeal from an order allowing his fee and taxing it as costs, in a case in which the state has n right of appeal.[79]

b. Collection. The district or prosecuting attorney cannot be required to wait until fees payable out of the state treasury "on conviction" are collected by the state from the defendant.[80] But if due from the state only in case of the insolvency of the defendant, he is not entitled to payment until after sentence of conviction, the failure of the defendant to pay, and return by the sheriff "no property found."[81] Not being entitled to fees allowed by law, except for services actually performed,[82] the payment of warrants issued on account of commissions due a prosecuting attorney pro tem. may be resisted on the ground that the services were not rendered.[83]

c. Lien or Charge on Fund or Judgment. Prosecuting or district attorneys have no lien for their fees on judgments in behalf of the state or county, nor upon public funds of any kind,[84] unless expressly conferred by law. But if made payable out of a certain fund they become a charge thereon as soon as ascertained or fixed,[85] and the attorney may retain the same out of any such funds in his hands before paying over the balance.[86] They cannot be collected or retained out of any other funds than those provided by law.[87] Commissions on judgments for fines and forfeitures, being fixed by statute, give a vested interest in the judgment itself, and the prosecuting attorney has the same right as the state to collect his part of the judgment in any manner provided by law.[88]

10. Conflicting Claims[89]— a. Between Incumbent and Predecessor. He who actually renders the particular service for which the fee is allowed is entitled to the same.[90] If the fee is for "conviction," etc., the attorney in office when the defendant is actually convicted is entitled to receive the commission, although his predecessor instituted the action,[91] and although he prosecuted it to a judgment which was pending on appeal when his term expired.[92] Money deposited in lieu of bail becomes the property of the state immediately upon forfeiture; and therefore the attorney then in office is entitled to the commission thereon, and not his successor who took formal judgment against the depositors.[93] A statute providing for an equal division of fees in certain suits instituted by one county attorney and prosecuted to final judgment by his successor applies to actions pending at the time of the passage of the act, and it is not for that reason obnoxious to the constitutional prohibition of retroactive legislation.[94] If the commission is for the entire services in connection with the suit, the outgoing attorney should receive a ratable proportion.[95] An act providing that solicitors, for insolvent costs due them, may retain the amount thereof out of any funds collected by them for the state or county, requires payment to each officer in the order of priority.[96]

b. Between Superior and Inferior Officers. It is equally true of solicitor-generals and county solicitors that he who actually renders the service is entitled to the fee.[97] There being but one fee provided for conviction, if a conviction is obtained by an attorney for the commonwealth in a trial before a magistrate, and is affirmed upon appeal to the circuit court by the district attorney, he who first secured the conviction has the fee, although if the appeal had resulted in acquittal, neither would have earned the same.[98]

Peeples v. Walker, 12 Ga. 353. But the only discrimination made by this act is between solicitors. As to costs due a clerk of the court, the solicitor having in hand a fund from the collection of fines is entitled to retain his own costs first, only in the event he holds the oldest lien. Brown v. Bleckley, 26 Ga. 328. B. Of United States District Attorneys — 1. Salary.[1] Since July 1, 1896, the district attorneys of the United States have been allowed an annual salary, varying in amount in the different districts, in full compensation for all official services performed by them, including services in the circuit courts of appeal for their respective districts, wherever sitting. These salaries are in lieu of all fees, commissions, etc., formerly allowed.[2]

2. Expenses. By the act of congress of 1896 it is provided that the necessary office expenses of the district attorneys shall be allowed when authorized by the attorney-general.[3] Clerk hire is not allowed as an office expense, but the district attorney may be allowed a clerk, with the approval of the attorney-general, at a salary to be fixed by the latter.[4] It is also provided that the necessary expenses for lodging and subsistence actually paid, not exceeding four dollars per day, and actual and necessary traveling expenses of the district attorney and his assistants, while absent from their respective official residences and necessarily employed in going to, returning from, and attending before any United States court, commissioner, or other committing magistrate, and while necessarily absent from their respective official residences on official business, shall be allowed and paid in the manner provided by the statute.[5]

This act does not apply to the district attorney for the southern district of New York, who receives a salary of six thousand dollars per annum under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 770 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 600]. Act Cong. May 28, 1896, c. 252, § 24.

Prior to this act their compensation consisted of docket fees, per diems, commissions, etc., taxed as costs, not to exceed six thousand dollars per annum (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) §§ 824–827, 835, and 838 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) pp. 632–634]), exclusive of allowances to be made in prize cases (§§ 836 and 4647) and of the commission on moneys collected under the revenue laws under section 825 and allowance for defending officers of the revenue under section 827 (§§ 834 and 835).

These fees and emoluments, except those charged against and collected from the United States, are to be charged and collected as formerly, and paid to the clerk of the court having jurisdiction, and by him covered into the treasury. Act Cong. May 28, 1896, c. 252, § 6.

When authorized by the attorney-general, the expenses of travel and subsistence of a clerk to a district attorney while attending with the attorney a term of court held at a place other than that of the official residence of the attorney, are properly payable as a necessary part of the district attorney's office. 3 Comp. Dec. 253. Expenses for lodging and subsistence must not exceed four dollars for any one day. If they amount to less than four dollars for one day, and more than four dollars on the succeeding day, the expenses cannot be averaged so as to charge eight dollars for the two days. 4 Comp. Dec. 418.

The expense of a berth in a sleeping car will be allowed as a traveling expense, and not as expense for lodging. 3 Comp. Dec. 386.

Verifying account.—A district attorney or assistant is not entitled to reimbursement for the necessary expenses incurred in verifying his account. 4 Comp. Dec. 494; 3 Comp. Dec. 646.

Prior to the act of 1896 the district attorney was allowed a mileage of ten cents per mile for traveling from his place of abode to the place of holding any court, examination before a commissioner, etc., and ten cents per mile for returning, in lieu of all traveling expenses. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 824 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 632]. 3. Extra Allowance. Extra compensation cannot be allowed a United States district attorney for any service performed in the course of his official employment,[6] nor can any allowance or compensation be made for any extra service whatever, although required by the department of justice, unless expressly authorized by law.[7]

4. Allowance and Collection. Salaries are paid monthly by the department of justice.[8] Accounts showing all disbursements on account of lodging, subsistence, and traveling expenses, provided in the act, must be made out quarterly and submitted to the circuit or district court of the district.[9] Said accounts, together with the vouchers and items thereof, made out in duplicate, shall be proven in open court by the district attorney, by his oath or that of some other person having knowledge of the facts, to be attached to such accounts, that the disbursements so charged have been fully paid in lawful money; and the court shall thereupon cause to be entered of record an order approving or disapproving the account.[10] When approved, the clerk of said court shall forward the originals to the attorney-general for examination under his supervision.[11] They shall then be sent to the proper accounting officers of the treasury department, where they shall be subject to revision upon their merits, as in case of other public accounts.[12]

5. Demand or Receipt of Other Compensation. To accept, receive, or demand any fee or other compensation for the performance of an official service, other than the salary provided by law, or to fail to account for any fee received, is an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment or both, at the discretion of the court.[13] Any fees or extra compensation so received may be treated by the government as moneys in the hands of the district attorney belonging to it.[14]

IV. POWERS AND DUTIES.[15]

A. Representation of United States, State, or County — 1. UNITED STATES. District attorneys of the United States are charged with the duty of prosecuting, in their respective districts, all delinquents for crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, and all civil actions in which the United States are concerned.[16] It is also their duty to conduct all suits and proceedings arising out of the provisions of law governing national banking associations, in which the United States or any of its officers or agents are parties;[17] and all suits or proceedings pending in their district against collectors, or other officers of the revenue, for any act done by them, or for the recovery of money exacted by or paid to such officers and by them paid into the treasury;[18] and, on request of the secretary of the treasury, to defend any action brought against any officer of either house of congress on account of anything done by him in the discharge of his official duties in executing any order of such house.[19] All legal services connected with the procurement of titles to sites for public buildings, other than life-saving stations and pier-head lights, are required to be rendered by United States district attorneys.[20]

2. STATE AND COUNTY — a. In General. It is the duty, and the right and privilege as well, of the prosecuting attorney for the state or territory,[21] generally to conduct prosecutions in the courts of his district, for crimes and offenses committed therein; also to represent the state, and the counties within his district, in the prosecution or defense of all civil actions in such courts in which either may be a party or interested.[22] It is his duty to appear for the state or county, notwith-

Appeals.— As the county attorney may not generally bring suit on behalf of the county without authority from the proper officers on behalf of the state should be brought by the prosecuting attorney in the name of the state.[53] A relator is not necessary,[54] unless required by statute.[55] The prosecuting attorney has entire dominion and control over every proceeding on behalf of the state, whether it be prosecuted ex officio or at the instance of a relator.[56] He may, with the permission of the court, avail himself of the assistance of (see supra, IV, A, 2), so he may not take an appeal on behalf of the county without such authority (Montgomery County v. Tipton, 15 S. W. 249, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 847 [overruling Com. v. Kimberlin, 8 Bush (Ky.) 444). But under Ky. St. (1903) § 127, the county attorney is required to prosecute appeals from orders of the fiscal court when directed to do so by the county court. Jefferson County v. Young, 120 Ky. 456, 86 S. St. (1903) §§ 126, 127, 129, 978, 4303, requiring the county attorney to attend courts in his county, conduct all cases touching the interests of the county, oppose the allowance of all unjust claims, and authorizing appeals to the circuit court from judgments of the fiscal court in civil cases, and to the circuit court from the decision of the county court in proceedings for establishing highways, etc., the county attorney may, without order from the county or fiscal court, appeal from an allowance of damages awarded to an owner over whose land a proposed highway is to run; section 127 not imposing any limitation on the authority of the county attorney. Breckinridge County v. Rhodes, 105 S. W. 903, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 352. In Idaho, under the act of Feb. 2, 1899 (Laws (1899), p. 25), fixing the powers and duties of county attorneys, and Rev. St. (1887) § 1759, subd. 13, giving county commissioners power to direct prosecutions and defense of suits to which the county is a party, the prosecuting attorney must look after and defend all litigation instituted against the county, and has power to appeal from the district court to the supreme court without an order of the commissioners authorizing him to do so. Twin Falls County v. Bassett, 14 Ida. 324, 93 Pac. 774.

Collection of taxes.— Under Ky. St. (1903) § 127, making it a county attorney's duty to prosecute all cases in his county in which the county is interested, and when so directed by the fiscal court to institute actions before any court in the commonwealth in which the county is interested, it is his duty to conduct a proceeding to ascertain the amount of taxes due and unpaid preliminary to a suit for their collection, when directed to do so by the fiscal court. other counsel.[57] He has the same power to bind the state by agreement to submit a matter to arbitration as the attorney for a private litigant would have; [58] but he has no right to accept a compromise judgment.[59] Nor can he accept anything but money in satisfaction of a money judgment in favor of the state. He has no authority to purchase in the name of the state lands sold under an execution in its favor.[60] He represents the state and is presumed always to be in court.[61] As the statutes of limitations do not run against the state, delay or laches will not be imputed to him.[62] It is his duty to take an appeal in all cases where, according to his judgment, the state has been injured by a decision.[63] In some states it is for the county board to determine whether suits shall be brought on behalf of the county.[64]

D. Outside of County or District. A district or prosecuting attorney is not required to go beyond the limits of his district to prosecute or defend litigation for the state [65] or county.[66] Upon a change of venue the duty to represent the state devolves upon the prosecuting attorney of the county to which the cause is removed.[67] He cannot, without express statutory authority, appear for the state in the supreme court, upon the appeal of criminal cases.[68] Nor is he required to appear for the county in the supreme court unless the statute so directs.[69]

V. LIABILITIES.

A. Civil Liability. A prosecuting attorney, being a judicial officer of the state, is not liable in damages for acts done in the course of his duty, although wilful, malicious, or libelous.[70] Neither he nor his sureties are liable for his neglect to perform any duty not expressly enjoined upon him by statute.[71] He is liable for moneys actually received in his official capacity;[72] but the mere failure to collect moneys which it was his duty to collect does not make him liable, if not actually received,[73] unless lost through his unwarrantable neglect.[74] The sureties on his official bond are not liable for moneys received by him, which it was not his duty to collect.[75] Nor is he responsible for the default or fraud of subordinate officers.[76]

B. Criminal Responsibility.[77] For official misconduct, as the taking of a bribe, etc., a prosecuting attorney may be indicted and punished, either for the common-law offense of malfeasance in office or under the statutes.[78] The fact that he is by law subject to impeachment for misdemeanors in office does not make impeachment a condition precedent to an indictment for malfeasance in office and punishment thereunder.[79] Approval of a bail-bond for the purpose of enabling a prisoner to escape arrest for another offense committed in another county is misbehavior in office.[80] If a county attorney be removed from office by a statutory civil action on account of misconduct in office, he is not thereby relieved from criminal prosecution.[81]

VI. DEPUTIES, ASSISTANTS, AND SUBSTITUTES.

A. Appointment[82]— 1. St. (1895) c. 7, § 21, as a substitute for a county attorney in the latter's absence or sickness, may prosecute offenses by information does not render that section obnoxious to Bill of Rights, § 10, requiring the legislature to provide for holding persons to answer for crimes on information notwithstanding the fundamental law also provides the method of filling vacancies.[84] The appointment must be in the manner, if any, prescribed by law. If it is required to be in writing, mere oral authority to act is not sufficient.[85] A special act providing for the appointment of a deputy solicitor for a certain court supersedes the general law on the subject of appointment of solicitors pro tem.[86]

2. By the Court. Courts of general criminal jurisdiction have inherent power, in the absence of statute, to appoint special attorneys for the state when the regular officer is absent or disqualified, in order to prevent a failure of justice.[87] And it is the duty of the court to make such appointment whenever the state's attorney for any cause fails to act.[88] Such power is frequently conferred by express statutory provision.[89] If it be provided by law that the court may appoint a prosecuting attorney pro tem. or assistant attorney under certain circumstances, it has no power to do so except upon the contingencies specified,[90] especially if the power of appointing them in other contingencies be vested elsewhere.[91] The court also has inherent power, independent of statute, in its discretion to allow assistant counsel to the prosecuting attorney,[92] unless the power of appointing assistants is vested in other hands.[93] The number of assistants to be allowed is within the discretion of the court.[94] The statutes sometimes provide for appointment by the court of a substitute state's attorney in civil cases.[95] An illegal order of appoint-

95. Thus by statute in Illinois it is made the duty of the state's attorney to prosecute "'all forfeited bonds and recognizances, and all actions and proceedings for the recovery of debts, revenues, moneys, fines, penalties and forfeitures accruing to the State, or his county, or to any school or road district in his county'; and . . . it is made the duty of the court, whenever he is absent or unable to attend, or is interested in any cause or proceeding, civil or criminal, to appoint some competent attorney to prosecute or defend such cause or proceeding." ment of a special prosecuting attorney at the instance of a complaining witness may be vacated by mandamus.[96]

3. By Governor, Attorney-General, Prosecuting Attorney, or Assistant, County Board, Etc. The statutes sometimes provide for the appointment of deputies, substitutes, or assistants to district or prosecuting attorneys by others than the courts, as by the governor,[97] attorney-general,[98] district or prosecuting attorney,[99] county board,[1] police jury,[2] etc. The prosecuting attorney has power to employ an assistant, by virtue of his statutory authority to use all diligence to indict and convict offenders,[3] unless the duty of providing assistants be imposed by law upon some other authority.[4] He may also appoint a deputy in the prosecution of civil cases.[5] But a general delegation of his powers by a prosecuting attorney is against public policy and illegal, and it can furnish no basis for a claim by the person to whom the powers were delegated for personal compensation for his services.[6] An assistant has no power to employ an assistant.[7] In some states counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in a particular prosecution may properly be employed by the board of supervisors, with the sanction of the court and approval of the prosecuting attorney,[8] unless prevented by statute. If the statute prescribes the circumstances under which the county board may employ assistant counsel, it is controlling.[9] The attorney-general of the United States is required to appoint such assistants as he may think necessary to assist the district attorneys in the discharge of their duties.[10]

Number of deputies or assistants.— Under Mo. Rev. St. (1899) § 3286 (Acts (1893), pp. 168, 169), providing that the prosecuting attorney in a county having a population of one hundred thousand and less than three hundred thousand shall be entitled to such a number of deputies and assistants to be appointed by him as the county court shall deem necessary, and such deputies and assistants shall be divided into classes and paid as follows: Class A, chief deputy, one thousand five hundred dollars per year; class B, assistants or deputies, one thousand two hundred dollars per year; and section 3287 providing that the appointment and number of deputies and assistants of a prosecuting attorney, not expressly fixed by this article, shall be subject to the approval of the judges of the criminal court, only one chief deputy can be appointed in a county of the class named, and the criminal court has power only to determine the number to be appointed in class B. 4. Upon Change of Venue. Since the proper officer to continue the prosecution on a change of venue is the district or prosecuting attorney of the county to which the removal has been made,[11] if he is absent or disqualified, or unable to prosecute alone, the duty of appointing a deputy or assistant lies with the court or other appointing power of that county, not the court of original venue.[12]

5. Presumption and Record. The law presumes that the appointment of a prosecuting attorney pro tem., appearing of record, was legally and properly made, although the record fails to state facts authorizing it. One who has acted as a public officer is presumed to have been duly appointed until the contrary appears.[13] And unless required by statute, it is not necessary that the appointment itself be shown by the record. The fact that another is permitted by the court to take the place of the prosecuting attorney raises a presumption of, and is generally tantamount to, an appointment.[14] However, this presumption may be overcome by other facts upon the face of the record.[15]

B. Eligibility.[16] The qualifications prescribed by law for prosecuting attorneys are not all required of assistants,[17] since the latter are not state officers,[18] unless the office of assistant is expressly provided for by law.[19] Attorneys at law, being officers of the court, are presumed to be qualified to conduct criminal prosecutions, and when employed to assist the state's attorney need not be sworn as to their

Since N. Y. County Law (Laws (1892), p. 1786, c. 686, § 204), providing that the district attorney of any county in which an important criminal action is to be tried may employ assistant counsel with the written approval of the county judge of the county filed in the county clerk's office, and that the costs and expenses thereof, to be certified by the presiding judge, shall be charged on the county in which the indictment is found, is the only source of authority for employment of assistant counsel, the presiding justice at the trial of a prosecution changed from another county has no authority to fix the compensation of an assistant employed by the district attorney of the county where the indictment was found, with the approval of the county judge of that county, as the statute clearly grants such authority only to the district attorney of the county in which the case is to be tried. created by law, in which case the tenure may be coterminous with that of the office of district attorney.[32] But unless the law provides for a permanent incumbent, the tenure of office of one appointed prosecuting attorney pro tem. cannot extend beyond the absence, disqualification or incapacity of the regular incumbent,[33] or beyond the term of court at which he was appointed.[34]

E. Powers and Duties. Counsel employed to assist in prosecuting criminal cases have no authority to appear without first obtaining permission or appointment from the court.[35] Assistants are appointed to aid the state's attorney in the discharge of the duties of his office. They have no authority to direct him, nor, as against him, to control proceedings.[36] A prosecuting attorney may not delegate all of his powers to a deputy. Such delegation of powers by a public officer is contrary to public policy.[37] However, if present himself, he may intrust to his associate the exclusive conduct of the case.[38] But an assistant duly appointed or permitted to prosecute is clothed with all the powers and privileges of the prosecuting attorney, and all acts done by him in that capacity must be regarded as if done by the prosecuting attorney himself.[39] The same is true of prosecuting attorneys pro tem. They may do whatever the district attorney is authorized to do.[40]

F. Compensation and Fees — 1. In General. The deputy, like his principal, at common law received nothing for his services.[41] Salary or fees being now generally provided, to be paid prosecuting attorneys, their assistants or deputies appointed by authority of law are entitled to compensation, and the county is liable therefor.[42] But he cannot recover for services in cases which he is not

Right to compensation implied.—Where, under Minn. Gen. St. (1894) § 813, a judge of the district court, upon due hearing, determines that a county attorney is disqualified from taking part in the prosecution of a person accused of crime, and directs another attorney of the court to conduct the same in place of the regular official, the substitute is entitled to receive compensation for the services he performs, under the court's appointment, from the county where the crime is alleged to have been committed, although the statute makes no express provision for authorized to prosecute;[43] nor can he recover fees in cases which do not come within the statute allowing them.[44] If appointed without authority of law he is not entitled to anything, notwithstanding the services have been rendered and accepted.[45] The mode of payment is usually prescribed by the statute.[46] A contract by a prosecuting attorney to pay a deputy more compensation than that provided by law is contrary to public policy and void.[47]

2. Division of Fees. If the same fee is provided by law for conviction in either the county or circuit court, or in both, the attorney pro tem. must share the fee with the state's attorney in case of conviction obtained by one in the county court, and affirmance on appeal to the circuit court by the other.[48]

Amount of salary.— The provision of the California County Government Act of 1893 that the district attorney may appoint one assistant at a salary of two thousand dollars, and two deputies at a salary of one thousand five hundred dollars per annum, does not mean one thousand five hundred dollars for the two deputies, but for each. Freman v. Marshal, 137 Cal. 159, 69 Pac. 986.

In California, under Acts (1893), § 173, and Acts (1897), §§ 59, 215, 233, the deputy district attorneys of Tulare county who were holding office at the time of the enactment of the law of 1897 are entitled to the salary provided by the law of 1893. McPhail v. Jefferds, 130 Cal. 480, 62 Pac. 735.

Fixing of salary by county board.— Since deputy county attorneys are included by Act March 19, 1895, in Mont. Pol. Code, § 4596, fixing the maximum salary of county officers, the board of county commissioners have power to fix the salaries of deputy county attorneys under Sess. Laws (1893), p. 60, establishing the number of deputy county officers, and providing that their compensation shall be determined by the board of county commissioners, within the maximum limits fixed by the act, although deputy county attorneys are not provided for therein. Penwell v. Lewis, etc., County, 23 Mont. 351, 59 Pac. 167. Construing said section 4596, which declares that the maximum compensation of any deputy is as follows, setting out various officers whose salaries are declared "not to exceed" the sum fixed, but in which, in providing for the salary of chief deputy county attorney, the words "not to exceed" are omitted, it was held that, since the act provides that all the amounts fixed shall be "the maximum compensation" allowed, the words "not to exceed" before the statement of each amount is surplusage, and hence the salary of chief deputy county attorney is not fixed by the act at the sum stated, but may be established at any sum less than such amount. 3. Allowance and Collection. The fees of assistants are usually required by law to be fixed by the court, or by the administrative board of the county.[49] Under statutes directing payment of "compensation," or "reasonable compensation," a decision of the board allowing an unreasonably small sum is not final, but proper compensation may be recovered.[50] Nor is an allowance made by the court conclusive; the board may reduce it to a reasonable sum.[51] However a fee fixed by the court is at least prima facie evidence of the value of the services rendered.[52] The act of the judge in certifying the amount of such fee is a judicial one which cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding for mandamus to compel payment of the same.[53] If dissatisfied with the allowance, the attorney should take an appeal from the order granting the same.[54] Statutory discretion to allow or disallow fees to an assistant in certain cases, vested in a county board, is administrative rather than judicial. The action of the board disallowing the same is not subject to review by the courts.[55] If the board refuses to act at all, the attorney may have mandamus to compel it to act, although not in any particular way; but he cannot recover on a quantum meruit, since his right to compensation depends wholly upon the statute.[56] Mandamus is also the proper remedy to compel the court or other

If the law provides a special deputy to prosecute certain cases before magistrates, and for a fee to be paid him on conviction, viz., the same fee allowed for conviction in the circuit court, on conviction before a magistrate and affirmance in the circuit court, both he and the regular state's attorney are entitled to such fee. Goad v. State, 73 Ark. 458, 84 S. W. 638.

49. See the cases cited in the notes following.

Excessive allowance.— Where an attorney was appointed to act as county attorney in a matter before the grand jury, in which the county attorney was interested, and an indictment was returned, but before the trial the order appointing the attorney was revoked, and the court, in fixing the compensation for the attorney, made an allowance to cover, not only for the services rendered before the grand jury, but also in the prosecution of the case, it was held that as the attorney could not earn compensation for prosecuting the case, the allowance was erroneous. State v. Miller, 132 Iowa 587, 109 N. W. 1087. And where, under Iowa Code, § 304, authorizing the district court to appoint an attorney for the county attorney in case of his disability, and to fix for his services a reasonable compensation, the district court appointed an attorney to act for the county attorney in a case before the grand jury wherein the county attorney was under disability by reason of interest, and also "to act as county attorney in another matter" before the grand jury, and then, by general order, fixed the payment of the attorney for his services, it was held that the order fixing the compensation was invalid, as it must be assumed that payment for services under the order appointing the attorney to act in "another matter" was included. State v. Miller, supra.

Opportunity to prosecuting attorney to be heard.— Since Iowa Code, § 304, empowering the district court to appoint an attorney for the county attorney in case of his disability, and empowering the judge thereof to fix the attorney's compensation, provides that such compensation shall be paid out of the compensation allowed to the county attorney, the court cannot fix the compensation of an attorney appointed to act in place of the county attorney without giving the county attorney an opportunity to be heard, for otherwise he may be deprived of his property without due process of law, in violation of Const. art. 1, § 9. 15. Century Dict. [quoted in Martin v. Eagle Development Co., 41 Oreg. 448, 457, 69 Pac. 216, where the court, after giving the above definition, says that this is the common or current acceptation of the term. Hence the court will not take judicial notice that the word "prospected," as applied to placer mines, signifies that the holes have been sunk to the bed rock, and a test made of the earth in each, and the average ascertained, so that, if the meaning ascribed attaches to the word under discussion it should have been made understood by appropriate allegations, by the party contending for such meaning].

Under a statute requiring the claimant of a mining claim to perform work and labor thereon in prospecting and developing it to the amount of one hundred dollars annually, the word "prospecting," when used with reference to such annual labor to be expended upon the mining claim, is not used in the sense of "exploration and discovery," which is necessary before a valid location can be made, but rather in the sense of "development and demonstration," that the value of the ledge may be determined, as distinguished from the ascertainment of its existence. I. Definition.

In its most general sense prostitution is the setting one's self to sale or devoting to infamous purposes what is in one's power.[1] In its more restricted and legal sense, it is the practice of a female offering her body to an indiscriminate intercourse with men,[2] as distinguished from sexual intercourse confined to one man;[3] or as sometimes stated, common lewdness of a woman for gain; the act of permitting a common and indiscriminate sexual intercourse for hire.[4] Sometimes the term "prostitute" is particularly defined by statute which prescribes the several acts the commission of any of which will render a woman a common prostitute and subject her to punishment for that substantive offense.[5]

II. NATURE OF OFFENSES.

A. In General. To be a common prostitute is not at common law [6] indictable as a distinct and substantive offense, but the offender is subject to be treated as a vagrant,[7] and in this sense to be a common prostitute may be said to be unlawful so that an indictment would be maintainable at common law for a conspiracy to induce one to become a common prostitute.[8] However, by statute, to be a common prostitute,[9] to procure females for that purpose,[10] and various acts Flynn, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 90, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 740.

Number of men not only test.— Whether or not a woman is a prostitute is a question of fact which does not alone depend on the number of persons with whom she has had illicit intercourse, but a jury may consider her general conduct and other circumstances tending to show whether or not she so holds herself out to the public. State v. Rice, 56 Iowa 431, 9 N. W. 343.

To procure a female for the purpose of illicit intercourse with the individual who enticed her to accompany him is not sufficient to constitute the offense of enticing a person for the purpose of prostitution. Com. v. Cook, 12 Metc (Mass.) 93, 97; State v. Brow, 64 N. H. 577, 579, 12 Atl. 216. See also ABDUCTION, 1 Cyc. 140.

Element of gain not essential.— Prostitution does not alone consist in sexual commerce for gain. If a woman submits to indiscriminate sexual intercourse, which she invites or solicits by word or act or any device, she is a prostitute. Her avocation may be known from the manner in which she plies it, and from pecuniary charges and compensation gained in any other manner. State v. Clark, 78 Iowa 492, 43 N. W. 273; State v. Rice, 56 Iowa 431, 9 N. W. 343. See also Stokes v. State, 92 Ala. 73, 9 So. 400, 25 Am. St. Rep. 22. And see infra, note 5.

E. 372 (holding that the statute referred to in the case last cited furnished the definition of "prostitution"; that wherever the term is used in the criminal laws of this state, it must be held that it is used as so defined, unless the context clearly shows that the legislature intended to give it a broader or different meaning; and that the meaning of prostitution as common, indiscriminate, meretricious, illicit intercourse, and not sexual intercourse confined exclusively to one man, is in harmony with the statutory definition of the word "prostitute"). In New York it was held that there was no such offense under the criminal code as that of being a common prostitute, such conduct being treated as evidence of vagrancy, but that under Laws (1881), c. 187, as amended by Laws (1887), c. 17, which, in enumerating offenses punishable by confinement in the house of refuge for women, names "common prostitutes," it is a crime to be a common prostitute, although such offense is not provided for in the penal code or code of criminal procedure. People v. Cowie, 88 Hun 498, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 888; People v. Coon, 67 Hun 523, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 865. A later act (Laws (1901), c. 334, § 141), known as the Tenement Act, makes a woman punishable as a vagrant who knowingly resides in or commits prostitution, etc., in a tenement-house, etc., and provides that the procedure shall be the same as in other cases of vagrancy. female to have illicit carnal connection with any man" is not violated by one inducing a female to have illicit intercourse with himself, the offense provided by the statute being that of a procurer or procuress — of a pander. People v. Roderigas, 49 Cal. 9.

Soliciting to enter house for purpose of prostitution — Character of house.— Under a statute providing that every keeper of a house of ill-fame, resorted to for the purpose of prostitution, and every person who shall solicit a female to enter such house for the purpose of becoming a prostitute, is guilty of a felony, etc., it need not appear that the house which the female was solicited to enter had already been resorted to for the purpose of prostitution, but it is sufficient if the house was prepared and intended for such purpose. People v. Cook, 96 Mich. 368, 55 N. W. 980.

Soliciting prostitute to change residence.— The soliciting a prostitute, who is an inmate of a house of ill-fame, to become an inmate of another such house is not a violation of a statute which provides for the punishment of any person who solicits a female to enter such house for the purpose of "becoming" a prostitute. People v. Cook, 96 Mich. 368, 55 N. W. 980.

Inducement must be in jurisdiction.— Upon a charge of procuring a girl to come to Canada from abroad with intent that she may become an inmate of a brothel in Canada, the acts of inducement must be shown to have been committed in Canada to give jurisdiction to a Canadian court, unless the accused is a British subject. Re Johnson, 8 Can. 12. State v. Zenner, 35 Wash. 249, 77 Pac. 191, holding that a statute making it a felony for any male person to live with or accept the earnings of a prostitute is not invalid because of the omission of the word "knowingly" or its equivalent, so as to make knowledge of the relationship an element of the crime, but that if one accepts such earnings innocently and without knowledge of the female's character, this ignorance will be a defense.

13. Zorger v. Greensburgh, 60 Ind. 1, holding that an ordinance must be construed in accordance with the rules governing the construction of other legislation, and that applying the rule that the real intention must be gathered from the whole ordinance rather than from the literal sense of some terms used, an ordinance against associating with a prostitute "in any public place, street, alley, common, or within said city," must be construed to read, "alley or common within," etc., and that a prosecution could not be maintained for associating with a prostitute in a private place in the city.

Number of prostitutes.— Under a statute making it a criminal offense for a man to associate "with females known or reputed as prostitutes," an indictment which charges a defendant with associating with one female known and reputed as a prostitute is sufficient. 14. People v. Conness, 150 Cal. 114, 88 Pac. 821 (holding that as the statute does not make it an element of the offense that the placing of the wife or consenting to her remaining in a house of prostitution shall be for the purpose of prostitution, such purpose is not necessary; but on the other hand under evidence that the husband was anxious to have the wife leave the house and tried to induce her to do so, an instruction that evidence of the woman's living in a house of prostitution and of her husband's knowledge of it would not justify any presumption of law against the husband and that if no other facts are established defendant should be acquitted, should be given); People v. Mead, 145 Cal. 500, 78 Pac. 1047; People v. Bosquet, 116 Cal. 75, 42 Pac. 879 (holding that the consent of the husband may be shown by some omission on his part as well as by his acts or declarations); State v. Ilomaki, 40 Wash. 629, 82 Pac. 873 (holding that upon a prosecution for such crime, where defendant claimed to have protested against his wife's going to or remaining in the place, it was proper to instruct that such protest must have been bona fide and not made merely for a defense, especially where the wife actually remained there and the accused lived with her at such place).

III. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

A. Indictment,[18] Information,[19] and Complaint[20]—1. In General. Under a statute defining the acts which will render a woman a prostitute, it is not sufficient to allege that the accused is a prostitute, but the statutory facts must be alleged.[21] On the other hand, it will be sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute which defines the acts constituting the offense,[22] or in language equivalent to that employed in the statute.[23] To charge one with being a common night-walker is sufficient without setting out the particular practices.[24]

21. Delano v. State, 66 Ind. 348. So in People v. Pratt, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 300, an information before an inferior court which charged upon information and belief that the accused was, at the times mentioned, a disorderly person, to wit, a common prostitute, without stating any facts or circumstances showing or tending to show that she was a prostitute, was held to be at most an allegation that affiant had heard and believed that accused was a common prostitute, and was insufficient. But see People v. Cowie, 88 Hun (N. Y.) 498, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 888.

Vagrancy is not sufficiently charged under the statute by an allegation that the accused was a common prostitute, or the keeper of a house of prostitution. Toney v. State, 60 Ala. 97.

22. Stanton v. State, 27 Ind. App. 105, 60 N. E. 999.

Knowledge.— Under a statute making it an offense to live with or accept the earnings of a prostitute, the statute not making knowledge of the woman's character an element of the offense, such knowledge need not be alleged. State v. Zenner, 35 Wash. 249, 77 Pac. 191. See also State v. Barker, 43 Wash. 69, 86 Pac. 387, holding that in a prosecution for conniving at the prostitution of defendant's wife an information charging that defendant did then and there unlawfully and feloniously connive at, consent to, and permit the placing and leaving of his wife in a certain house of prostitution, sufficiently alleged that defendant knew the character of the house and the nature of his act.

Intent.— In People v. Conners, 150 Cal. 114, 116, 88 Pac. 821, under a statute providing that "any man who . . . connives at, consents to, or permits the placing or leaving of his wife in a house of prostitution, or allows or permits his wife to remain therein, shall be guilty of a felony," etc., it was held that the language of the act did not render material a purpose of prostitution in placing or permitting one's wife to remain in such a place; that an information following the language of the statute was sufficient and such purpose on the part of the accused need not be shown. See also People v. Mead, 145 Cal. 500, 78 Pac. 1047.

23. State v. Dickerhoff, 127 Iowa 404, 103 N. W. 350, holding that under a provision against inveigling or enticing any female before reputed virtuous to a house of ill-fame for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, an indictment charging the enticing of "a virtuous female," instead of in the language of the statute, is sufficient, in view of other provisions that a charge of crime shall be made in ordinary and concise language, with such certainty and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended, and that no indictment shall be held insufficient because of any matter which was formerly deemed a defect or imperfection, which does not tend to prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant on the merits.

24. State v. Dowers, 45 N. H. 543; State v. Russell, 14 R. I. 506, which cases hold that the same reasoning applies as in the case of charging one with being a common scold or a common barrator. Contra, see Thomas v. State, 55 Ala. 260.

tute and the common-law offense of keeping a bawdy house are held to be of the same class or character so that they may be joined in separate counts of the same indictment.[26] And where the statute enumerates several acts, either of which will constitute the offender a prostitute,[27] or will render the accused liable in respect of the particular offense relating to prostitution, all of such acts may be charged conjunctively.[28]

B. Evidence. General rules of evidence are applicable to prosecutions for offenses relating to prostitution.[29] Evidence of bad character is not admissible in the first instance, as a fact showing the accused to be a prostitute, under an indictment charging her to be a common prostitute, under a vagrancy statute.[30] It has been held that to make a defendant amenable to the charge of being a "common prostitute" she must maintain that character at the time of the prosecution, still the fact may be established by proof of improper and lascivious conduct immediately before prosecution.[31] Where the character of a house as a house

28. State v. Ilomaki, 40 Wash. 629, 82 Pac. 873, sustaining an information which charged that the accused consented to the placing of his wife in a house of prostitution and also that he allowed and permitted her to remain in such house.

Acts and declarations of husband and wife. — In a prosecution for the statutory offense of enticing a virtuous female to a house of ill fame for the purpose of prostitution, upon the theory of the state that defendant and his wife were jointly engaged in a scheme to get the prosecuting witness into their house for immoral purposes evidence of their acts and declarations in the promotion of the common purpose was held admissible even though both were not present at the time and place. State v. Dickerhoff, 127 Iowa 404, 103 N. W. 350.

Immaterial evidence.— On a prosecution of one for the statutory offense of permitting his wife to remain in a house of prostitution, the wife having testified that she had previously been in "quite a few" houses of prostitution, it is not error to exclude a question on cross-examination as to whether she had not been an inmate of a house of prostitution at a certain place kept by her sister. The object of the question was to show that as witness had previously been an inmate of a house of prostitution she would be more likely to enter such house again of her own volition, and this purpose had been accomplished by the testimony the witness had already given and the fact sought to be elicited by the question was immaterial. People v. Mead, 145 Cal. 500, 78 Pac. 1047.

Evidence of age see ABDUCTION, 1 Cyc. 160.

30. Toney v. State, 60 Ala. 97, holding that it may be shown that she resided in a house kept for prostitution; that she was visited by lewd and disorderly persons, and that her associates were persons of ill repute; that she, on the other hand, may introduce evidence which may remove or tend to remove all unfavorable inferences arising from such facts, as that her physical condition rendered prostitution improbable, if not impossible. In Arnold v. State, 28 Tex. App. 480, 13 S. W. 774, it was held that under an information charging defendant with being a vagrant, to-wit, a common prostitute, the offense must be proven by evidence of the particular facts, and neither evidence of defendant's general reputation nor of the bad character of women who lived near her and with whom she sometimes associated was admissible.

Night-walkers.— But it has been held that in a prosecution under a city ordinance punishing street-walkers for loitering about the streets or stores at night, evidence of the woman's general character is admissible. Braddy v. Milledgeville, 74 Ga. 516, 58 Am. Rep. 443.

31. People v. Cowie, 88 Hun (N. Y.) 498, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 888.

Sufficiency of proof.— The nature of the offense of being a "common prostitute without other means of support or employment" is such that it is rarely established with the same fulness and directness of proof by which more open violations of law are made out, and it is held that where it appeared that defendants lived by themselves and had no occupation, were frequently on the streets, dressed up at night, and sat on their doorstep and solicited passing men, and that when men entered their house they followed and closed the doors and shutters, and that twice men were seen in bed with them, a conviction was proper. Peabody v. State, 72 Miss. 104, 107, 17 So. 213, where Whitfield, J., drew the following classic parallel: "The character of these appellants was graven with 'the point of a diamond on the rock forever,' some centuries since, by an unerring artist, as will at once be seen by the marvelous correspondence between that character, as thus sketched, and as reflected in this record. In the record we are told that they did nothing, went out on the streets night and day, attired themselves in the evenings; sat upon the steps of the house, and called, in honeyed phrases, men passing through the street near their house, and they went after them into the house, and the shutters were drawn and the doors closed. In Proverbs, c. 7, verses 6–23, we are told, inter alia, of 'the flattery of the tongue of the of prostitution and defendant's knowledge of such character are material, evidence of the general reputation of the house is admissible.[32]

C. Sentence and Punishment. To be a common prostitute, as already shown,[33] subjects the offender to be treated as a vagrant,[34] or to the particular penalty of the statute which may control the subject and which may punish the act as disorderly conduct, as an element of vagrancy, or as a distinct offense.[35] strange woman,' and then admonished: 'I discerned among the youths, a young man, void of understanding, passing through the street near her corner; and he went the way to her house, in the twilight, in the evening; . . . and there met him a woman in the attire of an harlot, and subtle of heart; she is loud and stubborn, her feet abide not in her house; now is she without, now in the streets, and lieth in wait at every corner. . . . With her much fair speech she caused him to yield with the flattery of her lips she forced him. He goeth after her straightway . . . as a fool to the correction of the stock.' This portrait is accurate; its colors have lost none of their vividness in the lapse of centuries; and, upon the authority of this great text, reflected in all text-books and decisions, the judgment is affirmed."

Night-walking.— In Williams v. State, 98 Ala. 52, 13 So. 333, on a trial for night-walking witnesses were permitted to testify to the following facts: That defendant had been seen on the street late at night, coming from a saloon frequented by prostitutes, and had also been seen, but not accompanied by a man, coming from a dance attended by "tough" people, and that she had once been seen standing on a corner near the saloon, talking to a man; that defendant had been seen at night talking to men at a certain bar, and that the women who visited the bar were prostitutes, though the proprietor of the bar also had a general grocery store under the same roof, and other people went there besides prostitutes; and that defendant and another girl had been found in bed with a man.

32. State v. Ilomaki, 40 Wash. 629, 82 Pac. 873, holding such evidence admissible in a prosecution for placing one's wife in a house of prostitution, the accused having attempted to maintain that he did not know the character of the house. But as to the admissibility of such evidence in a prosecution for keeping a bawdy-house see DISORDERLY HOUSES, 14 Cyc. 503.

Other evidence of character of house.— Evidence that the house in question contained twelve rooms, commonly known as "cribs," each one of which was occupied by a different woman as a place of prostitution for herself alone, and that defendant's wife occupied one of them for that purpose, amounted to a showing that she was in a "house of prostitution," within the statute. In New York under Consol. Act, §§ 1458, 1461, providing that "every person in said city and county shall be deemed guilty of disorderly conduct that tends to a breach of the peace, who shall in any thoroughfare or public place . . . commit any of the following offenses . . . (2) Every common prostitute or nightwalker loitering or being in any thoroughfare or public place for the purpose of prostitution," etc., it was held that a police magistrate may require the offender to give surety for good behavior, that the offenses enumerated do not reach the dignity of misdemeanors under the common law, that a magistrate, under the Greater New York Charter (Laws (1901), c. 466) may compel the giving of peace bonds or impose fines not exceeding ten dollars on conviction. People v. Davis, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 448, 452, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 872 [affirmed in 176 N. Y. 465, 68 N. E. 884]; People v. City Prison, 44 Misc. 149, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 830; People v. State Reformatory, 44 Misc. 122, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 87. But this offense is distinct from that embraced under Laws (1896), c. 546, as amended by Laws (1899), c. 632, which provides that a female between certain ages convicted by any magistrate "of being a common prostitute," etc., may be committed to a house of refuge for three years; the latter offense is not the disorderly conduct mentioned in the act first above mentioned, and one summarily convicted of the first offense cannot be committed by the magistrate for three years under the last mentioned act. People v. Davis, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 448, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 872 [affirmed in 176 N. Y. 465, 68 N. E. 884]; People v. State Reformatory, 44 Misc. 122, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 87; People v. State Reformatory, 38 Misc. 243, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 153. Under the Tenement Act (Laws (1901), c. 334), providing for the punishment, as a vagrant, of any person violating such act by committing prostitution in her apartment, the procedure to be the same as that provided by the law for other cases of vagrancy, it is held that on conviction the person convicted, if she is over twenty-one years old, and is not committed to the reformatory, may be committed under the charter to the workhouse on Blackwell's Island. People v. Flynn, 37 Misc. 90, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 740. See also as to jurisdiction to commit to reformatories, REFORMATORIES.

Record of magistrate.— Upon a habeas corpus to review a commitment of a woman convicted as a disorderly person, a record in which the magistrate simply states that the prisoner has been duly convicted of being a disorderly person, because a common prostitute, is insufficient to warrant detention of the prisoner. The record of the conviction, in such cases, is required by the statute to show the circumstances of the offense. In re Travis,

So the punishment of other statutory offenses such as those hereinbefore noticed,[36] under inhibitions looking to the protection of female chastity, depends upon the statute, although these offenses are generally more serious,[37] and are made felonies.[38]

Proc. § 887, relating to vagrancy, and that the fact that the record of conviction of a female, of being a common prostitute, and the commitment to the House of Refuge, recited that she was convicted of being a common prostitute, "and associating with disreputable people," did not render her commitment and detention unlawful, as the words quoted may be rejected as surplusage. "The term includes all those who believe in the Christian religion and do not acknowledge the supremacy of the pope." Tappan's Appeal, 52 Conn. 412, 418.

In a state constitution requiring certain officers to be of the Protestant religion, "something more is evidently intended by these expressions than that a man should simply not be a Roman Catholic in order to hold these offices. The requirement is not negative, but positive and affirmative. It is not that these offices may be filled with those who are 'not' Roman Catholics, or who are 'not' pagans, or Jews, or Mohammedans, but only by those who 'are' of the Protestant religion. This is so in every case; each provision requires a positive and affirmative qualification in order to hold the office. A Mohammedan is not a Roman Catholic; but he cannot hold these offices, or either of them, because he is not of the Protestant religion, as the law requires he should be. So of the Jew; so of the pagan. The same would be true of an infidel; he is not a Roman Catholic, but he is not of the Protestant religion, because, to be a Protestant he must be a Christian; to be of the Protestant religion, he must be of the Christian religion." Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 53, 16 Am. Rep. 82.

33. Webster Dict. [quoted in Ormsby v. Phenix Ins. Co., 5 S. D. 72, 79, 58 N. W. 301].

Not necessarily implying a proviso.— It does not necessarily follow because the term "provided" is used in a statute, that that which may succeed it is a "proviso," though that is the form in which an exception is generally made to, or a restraint or qualification imposed on the enacting clause. It is the matter of the succeeding words, and not the form, which determines whether it is or not a technical "proviso." Carroll v. State, 58 Ala. 396, 401. See also Terrell v. Paducah, 122 Ky. 331, 92 S. W. 310, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1237, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 289; Smalley v. Ashland Browne-Stone Co., 114 Mich. 104, 107, 72 N. W. 29.

As a conjunction.— The word is often used in a statute as a conjunction to an independent paragraph. Carter v. U. S., 143 Fed. 256, 259, 74 C. C. A. 394. See also Brace v. Solmer, 1 Alaska 361, 370.

34. Robertson v. Caw, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 410, 418.

No better word expresses a condition, and it is always so taken unless the context shows that the intent was to create a covenant. Rich v. Atwater, 16 Conn. 409, 419; Wright v. Tuttle, 4 Day (Conn.) 313, 326; Anderson L. Dict. [quoted in Ormsby v. Phenix Ins. Co., 5 S. D. 72, 79, 58 N. W. 301].

The word generally creates a condition. (Brennan v. Brennan, 185 Mass. 560, 561, 71 N. E. 80, 102 Am. St. Rep. 363; Forscht v. Green, 53 Pa. St. 138, 140); but the clause is to be construed from the words employed and from the purpose of the parties gathered from the whole instrument (Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Thomas, 59 Kan. 470, 472, 53 Pac. 472; Heaston v. Randolph County, 20 Ind. 398, 403; Paschall v. Passmore, 15 Pa. St. 295, 308).

The word itself may sometimes be taken as a condition, sometimes as a limitation. Heaston v. Randolph County, 20 Ind. 398, 403; Lyon v. Hersey, 103 N. Y. 264, 270, 8 N. E. 518. See also Chapin v. Harris, 8 Allen (Mass.) 594, 596.

"Provided by law" see Pearsons v. Webster, 17 R. I. 86, 87, 20 Atl. 230.

The phrase "provided, however," when used in a deed, will be construed to be a covenant rather than a condition, when such construction can reasonably be given. Hartung v. Witte, 59 Wis. 285, 292, 18 N. W. 175. But

"unless." [35] (See PROVIDE, ante, p. 740; PROVISO, post, p. 743. See also CONDITION, 8 Cyc. 555 and Cross-References Thereunder.)

PROVIDENTIALLY HINDERED. A term which includes such acts only as may be attributed to the act of God, and not to mere unavoidable cause, such as accident resulting from, and attributable to, human conduct.[36] (See ACT OF GOD, 1 Cyc. 758.)

PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 587; TRIAL.

PROVINCIAL. Of or pertaining to a province.[37]

PROVISION.[38] In law a stipulation; a rule provided; a distinct clause in an instrument or statute; a rule or principle to be referred to for guidance, as the provisions of law, the provisions of the constitution, etc.[39] Applied to legislation, actual expression in language; the clothing of legislative ideas in words, which can be pointed out upon the page and read with the eye; not a conjecture, or a supposition, or an inference drawn from other language referring to a different subject or matter.[40] (See, generally, STATUTES; STIPULATIONS.)

it usually indicates a condition and as used in a will creating a trust, provided, however, that on the death of the beneficiary his share should be paid to a certain institution, would seem to show a trust for the life of the beneficiary, with a subsequent condition that on its termination the portion allotted to the beneficiary should go to the institution. Locke v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 140 N. Y. 135, 148, 35 N. E. 578. Used in the sense of a condition. See also Smith's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 559, 562; Wright v. Page, 10 Wheat. (U. The phrase "'provided' that they shall perform" in a contract has been held to mean "so long as they shall perform" and is most clearly a condition precedent to the agreement to forbear. Stoel v. Flanders, 68 Wis. 256, 267, 32 N. W. 114.

37. Webster Int. Dict.

"Provincial frontier," as used in the Canada statute providing that no ferry license shall in the future be granted to any person or body corporate beyond the limits of the province, but such license in all cases shall be granted to the municipality within the limits of which such ferry exists, or in case of the establishment of an additional ferry on the provincial frontier, then to the municipality in which such additional ferry shall be established, refers to the provincial frontier opposite the United States and not to the boundary line between Upper Canada and Lower Canada. Smith v. Ratté, 13 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 696, 697.

The term "Provincial objects" in the British North America Act means "local objects" within a Province in contradistinction to objects common to the several Provinces in their collective or Dominion quality. Clarke v. Union F. Ins. Co., 10 Ont. Pr. 313, 315.

38. Very unusual meaning of term.— In the law of Edw. III, enacted to repress the usurpations of the papal see, by construction the term "provisions" was made to restrain the nomination to benefices by the pope (a very peculiar meaning of the term). Middletown Bank v. Magill, 5 Conn. 28, 52.

The phrase "provisions of law" as used in a statute providing that a quo warranto may be maintained "against a public officer, civil or military, who does or suffers an act, which, by the provisions of law, works a forfeiture of his office" means such act as has been made a cause of forfeiture or removal by statute. State v. Ganson, 58 Ohio St. 313, 319, 321, 50 N. E. 907. "The phrase 'provisions of law' is a broad and general one. It cannot justly be confined to statutes, or legislative enactments. A rule or doctrine established by judicial decision is a 'provision of law' equally with one enacted by the legislature." Clark v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 94 N. Y. 217, 220.

Question of fact for jury.— Under a statute exempting provisions of a debtor from attachment it was held that whether the term included unthreshed wheat and oats was a question of fact for the jury. But Ladd, J., dissenting, said: "There is nothing technical, scientific, or unusual in the term provisions, as used in the statute, calling for interpretation by the jury; and if the fact that both wheat and oats are used as food for man were in dispute, still, that question was not submitted to the jury. PROXIMATE CAUSE.[69] An act which directly produced or concurred directly in producing the injury;[70] an immediate, direct, or efficient cause of injury;[71] that cause which naturally lead to and which might have been expected to produce the result;[72] that from which the effect might be expected to follow without the concurrence of any unusual circumstances;[73] that which immediately precedes and produces the effect,[74] as distinguished from a remote,[75] mediate, or predisposing cause;[76] that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred;[77] that which stands next in causation to the effect — not neces-

69. Synonymous.— "First cause," "initial cause," "efficient cause," and "proximate cause," all mean the same thing in the law of negligence. Winchel v. Goodyear, 126 Wis. 271, 279, 105 N. W. 824.

The definitions of the term are easily given in general terms, but they are very difficult in practical application to the facts of each particular case. There is, however, a marked distinction between the proximate cause of an accident and the proximate cause of the injury resulting from the accident. Anderson v. Miller, 96 Tenn. 35, 44, 33 S. W. 615, 54 Am. St. Rep. 812, 31 L. R. A. 604.

It has been found impracticable to prescribe by abstract definition, applicable to all possible states of fact, what is a proximate and what a remote cause. Cleveland v. Bangor, 87 Me. 259, 267, 32 Atl. 892, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326.

"Great ability and research have been expended in attempting to arrive at and determine upon some general definition of the terms 'proximate' and 'remote' causes, and establish a rule and a line of demarkation between the two. Such efforts appear to have been but partially successful. Both have received various definitions, though differently worded, amounting to practically the same thing. But, in almost every instance where they have been attempted to be applied, their applicability seems to have been determined by the peculiar circumstances of the case under consideration." Blythe v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 15 Colo. 333, 335, 25 Pac. 702, 22 Am. St. Rep. 403, 11 L. R. A. 615.

Construed as used in particular statutes.—Where a legislature by statute authorized municipalities to adopt ordinances for purposes named in twelve separate paragraphs, and paragraph one provided "for managing their prudential affairs," it was held that while the words "prudential affairs" are very indefinite and unsatisfactory, they were not intended to cover the matters enumerated in the other paragraphs of the section. State v. Boardman, 93 Me. 73, 77, 78, 44 Atl. 118, 46 L. R. A. 750. Under a statute providing that the selectmen "shall have the ordering and managing of all the prudential affairs of the town," the term includes the assessment and collection of taxes (Pike v. Middleton, 12 N. The term signifies that which is open for general or common use or entertainment, as a public highway or road, a public house. Austin v. Soule, 36 Vt. 645, 648.

It is "a convertible term, and when used in an act of assembly may refer to the whole body politic; that is to say, to all the inhabitants of the state, or to the inhabitants of a particular place only; it may be properly applied to the affairs of the state or of a county or of a community. . . . The word . . . in its most comprehensive sense, is the opposite of private." Huston Tp. Poor Dist. v. Benezette Tp. Poor Dist., 135 Pa. St. 393, 398, 19 Atl. 1060.

As used in a statute authorizing and perpetuating grants for religious, public, and charitable uses, the term was not used in its technical sense, as referring to the public at large, but in its more natural sense, to distinguish the use provided for from a private charity for the benefit of some arbitrary class, set apart without reference to the good of others. The fact that relief provided for in a will is confined to members of one or two particular churches of a particular denomination does not make the bequest subject to the rules against perpetuities. Eliot's Appeal, 74 Conn. 586, 606, 51 Atl. 558.

"Some of the affairs of a railroad company are public and some are private. . . . The safety of a bridge on the line is a subject of public moment. The public, in this sense, is a number of persons who are or will be interested, and yet who are at present unascertainable. All the future passengers on the road are the public, in respect to the safety of the bridge." Crane v. Waters, 10 Fed. 619, 621.

Under a statute providing "that the funeral and other expenses of the last sickness, charges of probate of the will, or of letters of administration, [of a testator or intestate] shall be first paid; next, debts due to the public," &c., a "debt due to the public" is one in which the state has an interest. A debt due to a bank is not such a debt even though the bank is owned by the state. State Bank v. Gibbs, 3 McCord (S. C.) 377.

Railroads, canals, and gas companies must have the right of eminent domain in order to perform their functions. St. Mary's Gas Co. v. Elk County, 191 Pa. St. 458, 462, 43 Atl. 321; Alleghany County v. McKeesport Diamond Market, 123 Pa. St. 164, 169, 16 Atl. 619.

A corporation is public when it must give all persons the same measure of service for the same measure of money. State v. Towers, 71 Conn. 657, 665, 42 Atl. 1083. Public or municipal corporations are not associations, but are subdivisions of the state. The charter of such a corporation is not a contract between the corporation and the state, nor between the corporators themselves. The effect of an act of the legislature incorporating a municipality is to invest the governing authorities of the municipality — either a majority of the voters, or such officers as are prescribed — with the power of local government over the inhabitants of that district. Such an act, strictly speaking, confers power which did not exist before; it confers on the governing authorities the power of laying taxes, and passing local laws for the purposes named in the act, without the previous consent of the people of the district. The governing authorities possess no powers or faculties not conferred upon them, either expressly or by fair implication, by the law which creates them, or by other statutes applicable to them. Goodwin v. East Hartford, 70 Conn. 18, 39, 38 Atl. 876. See also Washingtonian Home v. Chicago, 57 Ill. 414, 423, 41 N. E. 893, 29 L. R. It is not a legal entity or person, whose interest can be considered separate and apart from its people. It is but an instrumentality created and perpetuated for their benefit. Its officers as such are nothing more than agents of the public. They must act within the scope of their authority. Their acts outside are perfectly impotent from a legal standpoint. Ogden v. Bear Lake, etc., River Water-Works, etc., Co., 16 Utah 440, 452, 52 Pac. 697, 41 L. R. A. 305.

"Where a corporation is composed exclusively of officers of the government having no personal interest in it or with its concerns, and only acting as the organs of the State in effecting a great public improvement, it is a public corporation." Angell & Ames Corp. [quoted in Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 406, 410].

The donation of an annual appropriation by a municipality to a private corporation does not make such corporation a public corporation. Clark v. Maryland Inst. for Promotion of Mechanic Arts, 87 Md. 643, 658, 41 Atl. 126.

Their powers are subject to the control of the legislature, and a charter of such incorporation may be altered or repealed at the pleasure of the legislature. Tinsman v. Belvidere Delaware R. Co., 26 N. J. L. 148, 172, 69 Am. Dec. 565; Laramie County v. Albany County, 92 U. S. 307, 310, 23 L. ed. 552. And see Heffner v. Cass, etc., Counties, 193 Ill. 439, 448, 62 N. E. 201, 58 L. R. The term does not include: An agricultural society of a state. Lane v. Minnesota State Agricultural Soc., 62 Minn. 175, 181, 64 N. W. 382, 29 L. R. A. 708. A corporation formed for the erection of an armory building. Arrison v. Company D. North Dakota Nat. Guard, 12 N. D. 554, 557, 98 N. W. 83. A hospital founded by a private benefactor, though dedicated by its charter to general charity. State v. Heyward, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 389, 408.

A statute providing that railroad companies which shall be unable to purchase lands for their roads from the owners on the respective routes, at rates to be agreed upon, shall be public corporations, does not make such roads public corporations in the sense in which the term is used in another statute providing that members of public corporations shall be competent witnesses, in cases affecting the interests of such corporations. Dearborn v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 24 N. H. 179, 189.

The power of acquiring and holding property, although almost always given, is by no means a necessary incident to all corporations of this class. McKim v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 407, 417.

"Public parochial fund."— Under a statute providing that "no indenture of apprenticeship, by reason of which any expense whatever shall at any time be incurred by the public parochial funds, shall be valid and effectual, unless approved of by two justices of the peace," etc., the phrase "public parochial fund" does not apply where particular individuals, or a particular class are pointed out as the objects of a gift for the relief of the poor. Under a statute providing that all market houses, public squares, or other public grounds used exclusively for public purposes shall be exempt from taxation, lands belonging to a sanitary district, which can only be used for drainage by the inhabitants of such district and not by the general public, are not exempt. Chicago Sanitary Dist. v. Martin, 173 Ill. 243, 252, 50 N. E. 201, 84 Am. St. Rep. 110.

Where a dedication by a board of county commissioners expressly donates to the public streets, alleys, market place, and public ground, as represented on a plat, the fact that a tract designated on the plat as "public square" was not mentioned in the donating clause, but was specifically mentioned in another clause, as being reserved for the purpose of building a courthouse thereon, and that the tract designated as "public ground" was specifically bounded and described in the acknowledgment, shows that the term "public ground" was not intended to include the tract designated as public square. PUBLIC LANDING. A piece of ground on the bank or margin of a river, provided for the open and common use of all persons in the debarkation of themselves or their goods,[32] dedicated to the public use and held in trust for the erection of buildings for the use of the public, such as courthouses, market houses, schoolhouses, and churches; also as a common for pasture, public pounds for stray animals, even under some conditions, common dumping grounds, or as common landing places for those using the river. As used in a statute providing that state convicts shall not be worked within a certain city, except on "public improvements, and buildings and grounds owned by the State," the term includes not merely the grounds, buildings, and improvements which are the property of the state, but also all public works belonging to or prosecuted by the state, the county, or the city. Ward v. Little Rock, 41 Ark. 526, 529, 48 Am. Rep. 46.

In a city charter providing that the expense of making, constructing, or altering sewers or other public works or improvements, may be collected in part by assessments upon the property of individuals benefited thereby, the language as used in connection with the word "sewer" imports a class of distinct public works or improvements, other than the mere repairing of highways, and does not include macadamizing a street. New Haven v. Whitney, 36 Conn. 373, 376.

In a mechanic's lien act providing that any person furnishing any material or labor to any contractor for a public improvement shall have a lien on the money, bond, or warrant due or to become due such contractor, the term includes a public school building erected by a board of education. Spalding Lumber Co. v. Brown, 171 Ill. 487, 692, 49 N. E. 725; Beardsley v. Brown, 71 Ill. App. 199, 201.

The common council of a village cannot by its fiat make that a public improvement for which the legislature itself could not authorize the municipality to expend money or create an indebtedness; and an appropriation of the bonds of the village, which had been voted to be issued for public improvements, to the use of and to aid a railroad, by an ordinance declaring such railroad to be a public improvement, upon an appropriation of such bonds. Risley v. Howell, 57 Fed. 544, 547.

The term does not comprehend services rendered in carrying on the ordinary functions of a municipality, such as a matter of public lighting which must be provided from day to day, but relates rather to public works in the nature of betterments. Blank v. Kearny, 44 N. Y. App. Div. 592, 595, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 79.

Under a statute authorizing a city to donate money or bonds in aid of public improvements or public works, a city is not authorized to render aid, by donation in money or bonds, in locating therein a county seat and constructing the necessary county buildings. Schneck v. Jeffersonville, 152 Ind. 204, 214, 52 N. E. 212.

When applied to a municipal government, the term must be taken in a limited sense as applying to those improvements which are the proper subject of police and municipal regulations, such as gas, water, almshouses, hospitals, etc., and cannot be extended to subject foreign to the object of the incorporation and beyond its territorial limits. I. GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL.

A. What Are Public Lands. The terms "public lands" or "public domain"[1] are habitually used in the United States to designate such lands of the United States or of the states as are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws,[2] and are not held back or reserved for any special governmental or public purpose.[3] But there is no statutory definition of the words "public lands," and their meaning may vary somewhat in different statutes passed for different purposes, and they should be given such meaning in each as comports with the intention of congress in their use.[4]

1. The terms are synonymous. Barker v. Harvey, 181 U. S. 481, 21 S. Ct. 690, 45 L. ed. 963.

B. United States and State Lands. When the thirteen original states established their independence, each state became the owner of the vacant and unappropriated lands within its borders,[5] and when new states were formed out of the territory of such original states, and admitted into the Union, such new states became entitled to vacant and unappropriated lands within their borders,[6] and the ownership of the United States of lands within the limits of the original states is based upon cessions from the states.[7] But when foreign governments ceded territory to the United States government, the vacant and unappropriated land therein passed to the United States,[8] and the new states which have been formed

The United States has no title to islands lying in the St. Mary's river between the Michigan shore and the thread of the stream, which were not surveyed or claimed at the time of its general survey; but such title, like that to the submerged land, remained in the state, and under the law of Michigan is surrendered to and vests in the owner of the adjoining shore land. out of such territory have no title to vacant and unappropriated lands within their borders,[9] save in so far as such lands have been granted to them by the United States,[10] and consequently have no right to dispose of land not so granted to them.[11] So also a treaty by which an Indian nation relinquishes and conveys to the United States its right, title, and interest in and to certain territory vests the title in the United States.[12] The policy of the United States has been not to dispose of its tide lands, but to retain them for the benefit of the future states in which they may lie, and to grant them to such states upon their admission;[13] but it has the right, if it sees fit to do so, to grant rights in or titles to the tide lands in the territories as well as to the public lands therein situated above high water mark,[14] and lands previously disposed of by the United States do not pass to a state upon its admission.[15]

D. Trespasses [18] on Public Lands.[19] The United States may restrain trespasses on its lands.[20] In trespass by the United States, a permit to enter on the land may be admitted in evidence to show the nature and object of the entry,[21] and a receipt of an authorized agent of the government in full for rent, dated after the trespass declared on, is a full discharge in the absence of fraud or mistake.[22] It has been held that the remedy of a state for a trespass upon its public lands is by information for intrusion,[23] but under some statutes such a trespass is an indictable offense.[24]

E. Cutting or Removing Timber — 1. Statutory Prohibition. As owner of the public lands the United States has the same right and dominion over them that any other owner would have,[25] and may protect the same from depredation,[26] and no one has the right to enter upon such lands or cut timber thereon without its consent.[27] The statutes make it unlawful to cut,[28] or cause or procure to be cut,[29] or wantonly destroy,[30] any timber growing on lands of the United States,[31] or to remove or cause to be removed any such timber with intent to export or dispose of the same;[32] but it is provided that this shall not prevent any miner or agriculturist from clearing land or taking timber to support his improvements.[33] The general rule is that one who takes timber from the public domain is a wilful trespasser,[34] and the presumption, in the absence of any evidence of right, is that the cutting was illegal.[35] But where a claim to land under a Mexican grant was presented to the land commission and approved, but such approval was reversed by the district court, a contract, made pending an appeal from such reversal, between the claimant and another, respecting the cutting of timber on the land, was not void.[36]

2. Right to Timber Cut. Timber cut or removed from the public lands in violation of the statute remains the property of the United States,[37] and the person by whom it is cut acquires no property therein.[38] One who purchases timber wrongfully cut from the public domain acquires no better title than the vendor;[39]

Where lands were granted to a state in aid of a railroad, but forfeited for non-performance of conditions, the resumption by act of congress of title to these unearned lands did not, by relation, revest in the United States title to timber which had been cut and removed therefrom by third persons while the title to the lands remained in the state. If a settler cuts more timber than is authorized, with intent to defraud the government, a purchaser from him acquires no title thereto; but if, in improving the land, he cuts and disposes of surplus timber without intent to defraud, one who purchases from him under the belief that there is no such intent is protected. but is liable to the United States for such timber [40] and cannot defend an action by the United States to recover the value of the timber on the ground that he was acting in good faith.[41] Where timber has been wrongfully cut from public lands of the United States, and while in the hands of a purchaser has been claimed as the property of the United States by its agent, the title of the government cannot be divested by a subsequent sale of the timber by such purchaser to a railroad company for use in the construction of its road, although the company would have had the right to cut it for such purpose had it been standing.[42] Timber once severed from land ceases to be a part of the realty and does not pass to a person other than the one who cut it who subsequently acquires the land from the United States.[43]

3. Recovery of Timber Cut. Where the United States claims the ownership of logs in the possession of another on the ground that they were cut from government land, its remedy for the recovery of the timber, like that of an individual, is by an action of replevin,[44] and it cannot seize the logs from one having them in his possession, and, by filing a libel against them, cast upon him the burden of proving his ownership.[45] The title to the land may be investigated and determined in an action of replevin brought by the United States to recover timber cut thereon, where the ownership of the timber depends on the ownership of the land.[46]

4. Recovery of Value of Timber or Damages — a. Right of Action. The United States may recover the value of timber unlawfully cut and removed from its public lands,[47] and damages for the trespass committed by such cutting or

Land in railroad grant.— The United States cannot maintain an action to recover the value of timber cut and removed from unsurveyed land within the limits of a railroad grant, and which, when surveyed, would be within the limits of an odd-numbered section, to which the government had parted with its title. S. v. Montana Lumber, etc., Co., 196 U. S. 573, 25 S. Ct. 367, 49 L. ed. 604], holding that a partial survey by the United States of a section of public land by running lines on two sides of it is insufficient to identify it as an odd-numbered section, within the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, so as to relieve one cutting timber thereon from liability to the United States. See, generally, as to railroad grants, infra, II, K, 1.

Lands granted to state but forfeitable.— Where lands granted to a state to aid in rail-removal,[48] and the question whether or not defendant's operations were profitable to him does not affect either the government's right to recover or the amount of recovery.[49] A partner may be sued individually for damages for the cutting of timber by the firm.[50]

b. Form of Action. Trespass quare clausum fregit [51] or an action in the nature of trover [52] is the remedy for the recovery of damages for the unlawful cutting of timber, and the United States cannot maintain a suit in equity for an accounting of the gains and profits made by defendant by the cutting and removal of the timber.[53]

c. Defenses. It is no defense to an action to recover the value of ties cut by a trespasser that he had an intent to purchase the land, and that it was the custom in that community to begin the cutting of timber on government land intended to be purchased before actually entering or doing any act indicative of such intention.[54] An acquittal on an indictment for unlawfully and feloniously cutting and removing timber from public lands is not a bar to an action to recover the value of such timber,[55] nor does the fact that defendant has compromised a prosecution against him for cutting timber [56] relieve him of civil liability for his acts.[57]

d. Pleading.[58] A complaint which alleges that defendants had cut so many cords of wood from timber growing on the public lands, and the value thereof, and other formal matters, shows a sufficient cause of action to put defendants on their defense.[59] One who relies upon a statutory license as a defense to an action for the unlawful cutting of timber should set out in his answer the acts done in compliance with the regulations, and all the facts necessary to constitute the license.[60] Where the damages claimed in the complaint are based not only on the value of the timber in the standing trees, but also upon the value bestowed on the same in converting it into lumber and putting it in the market, an allegation that defendants cut and removed the timber under the belief that the land belonged to a railroad road construction have become forfeitable to the United States for non-performance of conditions subsequent, the unauthorized cutting of timber therefrom gives the government no right of action, unless, before the cutting it has actually declared a forfeiture, and reinvested itself with the title; otherwise, the cause of action is in the state, and remains therein, notwithstanding a subsequent declaration of forfeiture by congress. company from whom they had a license is a defense in mitigation of damages, which ought to be pleaded in the answer as a distinct defense.[61]

e. Presumptions.[62] Where the receiver of the United States land office testifies that a preëmptor has paid for the land as required by law, the presumption is that final proof has been made by the preëmptor, and that the final certificate has been issued to him, vesting him with the equitable title to the land, and leaving only the naked legal title in the United States, so that it cannot maintain trover for timber cut where the statute requires every action to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.[63]

f. Burden of Proof.[64] In an action for cutting timber upon public lands, the burden is upon the government to show that the timber was taken from public lands;[65] but a prima facie case is made out by proof of the government ownership of the lands, the cutting and asportation of the timber, its value, and subsequent possession by defendant,[66] and if defendant relies upon statutory authority to take the timber the burden is upon him to bring himself within the statute,[67] and show that the timber was taken for an authorized purpose,[68] and that he complied with the rules and regulations established by the secretary of the interior.[69] So also where defendant claims that he purchased the timber from settlers under the preëmption and homestead laws, the burden is on him to show the good faith of such settlers, and their right to cut and sell such timber;[70] and where defendant claims that the trespass was not wilful or intentional the burden of proving this rests upon him.[71]

g. Admissibility of Evidence.[72] Where it was claimed that defendants had unlawfully cut timber sued for from the public domain and sold the same and defendants justified under the statute, evidence that about the time they made the contract of sale they located a number of placer mining claims, etc., at another point, and then, without doing any work on such claims except the necessary assessment work, proceeded to cut timber from such claims and from adjoining lands without reference to the boundaries thereof, was admissible on the issue of their good faith.[73]

license from the secretary of the interior, it is error to refuse an instruction requested by plaintiff, embodying the rules prescribed by the secretary of the interior, where such a license is issued.[75] Where defendant had a sawmill near the land, and cut and sawed lumber, which he sold for profit, it is error for the court, in its charge, to refer, as a ground of justification, to the fact that the government has always tacitly permitted pioneer settlers to cut timber from the public domain for domestic use.[76] Where the only evidence as to the quantity of timber taken was the testimony of scalers, who made their estimates from measurements of stumps and tops remaining upon the land several years after the trespass was committed, an instruction that if the jury found that the timber was taken by defendants, but were in doubt as to the quantity so taken, they might indulge every fair and reasonable inference justified by the evidence in favor of the United States and against defendants, was proper and applicable to the case, although there was substantially no conflict in the estimates of the witnesses.[77]

i. Amount of Recovery. When the trespass was not intentional or wilful the measure of damages is the value of the timber after it was cut at the place where it was cut;[78] but when the trespass was wilful the government may recover the value of the timber at the place to which it has been brought,[79] and at any time before suit is commenced,[80] without deduction for the enhanced value arising from the labor of defendant.[81] The government is entitled at least to a verdict for nominal damages, although there is no evidence as to the value of the standing trees,[82] and exemplary damages may be recovered where the trespass was wilful, or the acts of defendant were the result of a negligence so gross as to show wilfulness or a reckless indifference to the rights of the government.[83] A purchaser of timber wrongfully cut from the public domain may be held liable for the value thereof[84] at the time when and the place where it was purchased by him,[85] notwithstanding the fact that he was guilty of no wilful wrong and purchased without notice of the trespass,[86]

St. (1901) p. 1528], to citizens of the states of Colorado and Nevada, and the territories excepting Washington, to cut timber from public mineral lands for certain domestic purposes, was not affected by the act of the same date (20 U. S. at L. 89 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1529]) for the sale of timber lands in the states of California, Oregon, Nevada, and in Washington territory, and which prohibited the cutting of timber on any public lands in those states and territory with intent "to export or dispose of the same," as amended by the act of August 4, 1892 (27 U. S. St. at L. 348 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1547]), by striking out the names of the states and territory therein named, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "public land states"). U. What are mineral lands.— The act of June 3, 1878, 20 U. S. St. at L. 88, c. 150, § 1 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1528], authorizes the removal of timber not only from land on which mining claims had been located, or in which mineral has actually been discovered, but also on other lands lying in close proximity, or in the neighborhood of such mining claims, having the general character of mineral lands. U. S. v. Basic Co., 121 Fed. 504, 57 C. C. A. 624. See also U. S. v. Richmond Min. Co., 40 Fed. 415. But the statute refers only to such lands as contain mineral in sufficient quantities to justify present exploration and development. U. S. v. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co., 7 Ariz. 80, 60 Pac. 885. The mere appearance of mineral is not sufficient to constitute the land mineral, but there must be sufficient mineral to induce mining men of experience to go on the land and take and work it with the expectation of finding mineral. Anderson v. U. S., 152 Fed. 87, 81 C. C. A. 311. Land returned on the government survey as mineral land, of broken and rugged surface, with every indication of mineral ground, but on which no mines have been located, although in the vicinity of valuable mines, and which is unfit for cultivation and entry as agricultural lands, is within the meaning of the act of congress of June 3, 1878, 20 U. S. St. at L. 88 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1528], allowing timber to be taken from mineral lands on the public domain for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes. U. S. v. Edwards, 38 Fed. 812.

The right extends to all lands in the states and territories named.— U. S. v. Edgar, 140 Fed. 655.

Entry of land as agricultural.— The action of a preëmptor in entering land at the land office as agricultural does not preclude an inquiry into its character in an action against third persons for unlawfully cutting timber thereon. U. S. v. Saucier, 5 N. M. 569, 25 Pac. 791.

"Roasting" ores.— The removal of timber by a mine owner for the purpose of "roasting" ores at the mine — a process whereby the ores are not fused, but the volatile substances are driven off in vapor, gases, etc., and whereby the ores are more readily smelted thereafter — is a taking for a "mining" purpose. U. S. v. United Verde Copper Co., 8 Ariz. 186, 71 Pac. 954 [affirmed in 196 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 222, 49 L. ed. 449].

manufacturing,[94] or domestic[95] purposes, under rules and regulations prescribed by the secretary of the interior.[96] Accordingly the secretary of the interior may prescribe regulations concerning the removal of timber,[97] and his interpretation of the intent of the statute is entitled to weight;[98] but the regulations must be reasonable,[99] and not such as to annul or limit the effect of the statute,[1] and he has no power to enlarge or restrict the purposes for which timber may be cut or used.[2] A full and fair compliance with the statute and the rules prescribed thereunder is necessary to justify a taking of timber;[3] but one who fails, through ignorance, to comply with the rules and regulations, does not thereby become liable to the same extent as a wilful trespasser.[4] Where timber is cut for an authorized purpose, the fact that it is afterward manufactured into lumber and sold as an article of merchandise to be used in the state does not render the cutting unlawful.[5]

Cutting for firewood.— One may lawfully cut timber for firewood from public mineral lands and ship the same to any part of the state for sale and use there in households, hoisting works in mines, smelters, or other local purposes, as all of these are "domestic" purposes within the meaning of the statute. Such rules and regulations are intended merely to furnish detailed instructions as to the manner of taking the timber so as to avoid waste and unnecessary destruction. U. S. v. Rossi, 133 Fed. 380, 66 C. C. A. 442.

Construction of regulations.— The regulations prescribed by the secretary of the interior, which require "every owner or manager of a sawmill, or other person felling or removing timber under the provisions of this act," to keep a record showing by whom such timber was cut, from what lands, evidence of mineral character, to whom the timber was sold, and for what purpose, etc., and to take from each purchaser a written certificate under oath, that the purchase is made for his own use, and for an authorized purpose, contemplate the keeping of such records only by persons who, like the proprietors of sawmills, make a business of cutting timber on mineral lands and selling it, or who are engaged to a considerable extent in such business, and they do not apply to settlers engaged chiefly in other pursuits, who cut small quantities of timber from mineral lands which they occupy, and who barter the same to a trader, with the understanding that it will be resold to other farmers or ranchmen in the vicinity for domestic uses, so as to render such cutting or sale unlawful, although the prescribed conditions are not complied with. Written agreement as to use.— The regulations require one who cuts and removes timber from mineral lands of the United States, and sells the same, or the lumber manufactured therefrom, to take from the purchaser a written agreement that the timber shall not be used except for building, agricultural, mining, or domestic purposes within the state or territory (U. S. v. Gentry, 119 Fed. 70, 55 C. C. A. 658; U. S. v. Reder, 69 Fed. 965); and this agreement must be taken at the time of the sale (U. 6. Rights of Settlers and Occupants. A person who in good faith [6] enters and occupies lands under the land laws [7] may, before becoming the owner thereof, cut and use the timber thereon so far as the same may be necessary to accomplish the purpose for which the land is occupied,[8] as for the purpose of building a house,[9] outbuildings,[10] or fences,[11] or of clearing the land [12] and fitting it for pasturage and occupation [13] or for cultivation,[14] and he cannot be held liable for trespass, and for the value of the timber so cut and used.[15] He may also take other timber from the public lands, if need be, sufficient to maintain the necessary improvements on the lands so occupied;[16] and where the cutting of timber is to prepare the land for

Fraudulent declaration.— Where settlers on public lands file declarations under the preëmption or homestead laws, with intent to defraud the government by merely removing the timber, a purchaser of such timber is liable to the government for its value. Stone v. U. S., 167 U. S. 178, 17 S. Ct. 778, 42 L. ed. 127 [affirming 64 Fed. 667, 12 C. C. A. 451].

A final certificate of entry of public lands, obtained by and canceled for fraud, will not estop the United States from recovering of the grantee, or of the vendee of the grantee who had notice of the fraud, for the conversion of logs or ore wrongfully taken from the land by the grantee before the cancellation of the certificate. Potter v. U. S., 122 Fed. 49, 58 C. C. A. 231.

occupation or cultivation, the occupant may, after applying such portion as can be used for the improvement, sell or dispose of the balance.[17] But until he has received his patent,[18] it is unlawful for such an occupant to cut more timber than is necessary for the purposes of his occupation,[19] or to cut and sell the timber except as hereinbefore stated,[20] and if he exceeds his rights he is liable as to such excess the same as if he had been a trespasser ab initio.[21]

7. Effect of Entry, Purchase, or Issue of Patent Subsequent to Trespass. An innocent trespasser on public lands is relieved of liability for timber cut thereon where he afterward enters the land from the government and pays the price therefor and the costs up to the time of entry.[22] Where a homesteader sold timber cut from the land which he had entered as a homestead, but for which he had not yet paid or procured the patent, and after the commencement of an action by the government for the recovery of the timber, he commuted his entry and paid for the land, receiving the receipt therefor from the land office, this proceeding made a completed purchase of the land, and so changed the status of the original entry as to deprive the United States of the right to recover for timber previously cut from the land.[23] But where one made the application and paid the fee required by the homestead laws to enter public land, in bad faith, for the purpose only of appropriating the timber on the land, and never complied with his obligations as a homesteader, but was afterward allowed to become a beneficiary under the act of congress providing that those entering lands under the homestead laws might become entitled thereto by paying the government price, and a patent was issued to him, whatever title he obtained by his patent it did not relate back to the application so as to affect the liability of a purchaser of timber cut before the patent issued.[24] Where a homesteader, who has never had possession of the land included in his homestead claim, and whose entry has been canceled, buys the land from the government, such purchase does not pass title to timber which he had cut from the land before his purchase, and after he had learned that his homestead entry was invalid.[25]

Effect of certificate of compliance with law. — Where a settler on the public lands under the Homestead Act, pending his residence thereon, and prior to the issue of a final certificate, cuts and removes timber therefrom for export and sale merely, and afterward obtains a certificate from the register and receiver of his compliance with the law, as such settler, the United States cannot thereafter maintain an action against him for damages for cutting such timber, or against any one to whom he may have disposed of the same, for the conversion thereof. 8. Relief to Private Individuals. A person claiming land as a preëmptor cannot maintain replevin for timber cut thereon, before his right has been proved,[26] and a settler on unsurveyed land cannot recover damages for the cutting and removing of the timber;[27] but cutting down trees on public land is waste, within the meaning of a state statute providing that where there are opposing claimants to public land, and one is threatening to commit on such lands waste which tends materially to lessen the value of the inheritance, and which cannot be compensated by damages, an injunction will lie to restrain him therefrom.[28] When a person has entered land, payment of the price vests an equitable title in him which relates back to the entry, and he may recover from a trespasser the value of timber cut by the latter after the entry.[29] It has been held that a territorial statute, giving a person having a claim on public land marked out but not inclosed power to maintain trespass for cutting trees thereon, did not interfere with the primary disposal of the soil and was valid.[30] In an action under such a statute for cutting timber on a tract of government land occupied by plaintiff as a claim, plaintiff should be nonsuited, unless the evidence shows that his claim is so marked out that the boundaries can be readily traced and its extent easily known.[31]

9. Forfeiture.[32] The statute provides that if the master, owner, or consignee of any vessel shall knowingly take on board any timber cut on reserved lands without proper authority and for the use of the navy of the United States, or shall take on board any live oak or red cedar timber cut on other lands of the United States, with intent to transport the same to any port or place within the United States or to export the same to any foreign country, the vessel, with all her tackle, apparel, and furniture shall be wholly forfeited to the United States.[33] Under this provision a forfeiture is incurred if any timber cut on lands reserved is knowingly taken on board the vessel, but to incur a forfeiture for taking timber from lands not reserved for naval purposes the timber must be "live oak or red cedar,"[34] and a forfeiture cannot be enforced except upon an averment in the libel and proof that the acts charged were done wilfully or with knowledge of their culpability.[35]

10. Criminal Prosecution[36]— a. Criminal Liability. The statutes make it a criminal offense for any person to cut or remove timber[37] from lands of the United

What is "timber" within the statute.— The statute was not intended to protect only such timber as is of a size and kind adapted to house or ship building (U. S. v. Soto, 7 Ariz. 230, 64 Pac. 419; U. S. v. Stores, 14 Fed. 824, 4 Woods 641); but includes trees of any size, of a character or sort that may be used in any kind of manufacture or the construction of any article (U. S. v. Stores, supra). The term "timber" signifies the standing trees and the felled trees prepared for transportation to a vessel or sawmill, such as saw logs, or lumber in bulk, but does not embrace any article manufactured from the tree, as shingles or boards. U. S. v. Schuler, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,234, 6 McLean 28. It cannot be held as matter of law that the mesquite tree is not timber within the meaning of the statute, since some mesquite wood is fit for some constructive purposes; but the question whether mesquite trees cut by defendant were "timber" is for the jury. U. S. v. Soto, supra [overruling Bustemente v. U. S., 4 Ariz. 344, 42 Pac. 111].

An occupant of a mineral claim, who has applied for a patent before the purchase-price is paid and before he receives a certificate, has no right to cut the timber on such claim

States[38] with the intent to export or dispose of the same[39] or to use it except for certain specified purposes;[40] or to wantonly destroy timber on lands reserved for public uses.[41] The offense is committed when timber is unlawfully cut or removed and a criminal intent is not necessary,[42] and if the timber is converted to the use of defendant it is immaterial to what purposes it is applied after being cut.[43]

b. Indictment or Information.[44] The indictment or information should allege the intent to use the timber for a purpose other than the statute authorizes[45] or to export or dispose of the same;[46] but it is not necessary to allege that defendant knowingly committed the act,[47] to specify the class of lands on which the trespass was committed,[48] to describe every kind of timber that was cut,[49] to set out the use to which the timber was appropriated,[50] or to allege that the cutting or removal was not justified under any of the various land laws.[51] It must be stated that the timber was cut or was removed from the lands of the United States, specially described according to the public survey;[52] but an indictment for removal merely need not allege that the timber was removed from the land where it was grown and cut.[53] An indictment charging the "cutting and removing" of timber is not bad with intent to export or remove the same, and a license from him to so cut the timber gives no protection to the licensee as against the government. Teller v. U. S., 113 Fed. 273, 51 C. C. A. 230.

as charging two offenses in one count.[54] An information charging the unlawful cutting and removal of timber, drawn to conform to the requirements of one statute and intended to charge an offense thereunder, may be treated as drawn under another statute where it contains all the averments necessary to charge an offense thereunder.[55]

c. Presumptions and Burden of Proof.[56] The United States must prove the cutting of timber by defendant on the land specified in the indictment,[57] and that such land belonged to the United States,[58] and the proof of the kind of timber cut must correspond with that specified in the indictment.[59] Where the cutting and removal is not authorized by the statute it is presumed that defendant intended to take the timber unlawfully.[60] A defendant who justifies under statutory authority has the burden of establishing his defense; [61] but where defendant shows that he had a mineral entry on the land, which, under the law, entitled him to cut timber therefrom for certain purposes, the presumption arises that the cutting done was for such legal purposes; and the burden of proving otherwise rests upon the government.[62]

d. Admissibility and Sufficiency of Evidence.[63] Evidence that about the time of the cutting defendant purchased and paid for the full quantity of similar land which he could purchase under the statute is inadmissible to show that he would not intentionally commit a trespass.[64] Evidence of a custom in the locality known to the general land office, of entering on land and cutting timber therefrom before patent was obtained, is inadmissible, since a custom to violate the law cannot justify itself,[65] nor is the fact that defendant acted in accordance with a general custom in that locality evidence of an honest intent on his part.[66] Neither is the fact that before cutting he endeavored to ascertain whether the land was surveyed, and also notified a special agent of the government that he was cutting the timber, and was not warned off for three weeks, evidence of an honest intent.[67] Where defendant admits that he had cut timber on three hundred acres of unsurveyed government land, to which he had no claim or color of title, and there is evidence that he was informed by the register of the land office that he could not acquire the title because the lands were not open to entry, and that he promised his workmen that he would stand between them and the government, and that he had fully exhausted all his privileges of purchasing such lands, the intent constituting the offense of unlawfully cutting timber on government land is sufficiently shown.[68]

e. Instructions.[69] A charge that, in order to convict, the jury must find that there existed in defendant's mind a wilful and wrongful purpose to obtain the timber in violation of law, and that if he entered on public land knowing it was such, without having complied with the provisions of law giving him a right to do so, and cut timber therefrom, they would be authorized to find the requisite criminal intent, fairly states the law, and is as favorable to defendant as he is entitled to.[70]

f. Punishment. The statute formerly provided that a person who cut or removed timber from lands of the United States without authority should be punished by fine and imprisonment,[71] but the provision for imprisonment has been repealed and under the present statute the punishment is by fine only.[72]

g. Compromising Prosecution. The statute allows a person to relieve himself of any further prosecution or criminal liability for unlawfully cutting or removing timber a violation of the law in this respect — except cutting timber for export from the United States — by paying into court two dollars and fifty cents per acre for all lands on which the offense has been committed,[73] and before the enactment of this statute it was held that only a nominal fine would be imposed where defendant had made full reparation, and it appeared that he had no intention of defrauding the public.[74]

for the wrongful act.[79] Under some statutes it is a criminal offense to cut or remove timber from state lands; [80] but in Texas cutting and carrying away timber from lands belonging to the state, without the consent of the state, has been held not a punishable offense under a statute declaring that a person wilfully cutting down and carrying away, etc., timber from any land not his own, without the consent of the owner, shall be guilty of misdemeanor.[81] In California the right to use the growing wood and timber upon the public mineral lands, as between the claims of miners on the one hand and agriculturists on the other, is governed by the rule of priority of appropriation.[82] In an action under a statute prohibiting the cutting and carrying away of trees from the lands of the state under a fixed penalty for each tree cut, plaintiff may allege in a single count the cutting and carrying away of any number of trees, and under such a count the amount of penalties that can be proved may be recovered, although the number of trees cut is less than that alleged.[83] Where in an action to recover penalties for cutting timber on public land, there is evidence that defendant said he owned the land, and that he was cutting timber there, and that the trees were cut on that lot, it is proper to submit the question to the jury whether defendant cut the timber himself, or whether one cutting on adjacent lands by his authority had without his sanction cut the timber in question.[84] Where in an action by the state to recover for cutting timber from state lands, defendant claimed that he was an innocent purchaser, and that he paid the person who had cut the timber on orders of the party from whom he purchased, and the evidence of the state was to the effect that defendant knew that the timber was cut from the state lands, that he employed the cutter, and that the arrangement which he claimed to have made was a mere subterfuge, an instruction that, if defendant only agreed to pay the cutter on orders from the purchaser, he was not liable to the state, was properly refused, as excluding from the consideration of the jury the claim that he had assisted in the trespass.[85]

to recover double the amount of value of timber taken by reason of the fact that the land commissioner gave defendant, who had obtained the timber, to understand that a further extension of the permit would be granted, or by reason of the fact that defendant proceeded in good faith, and the state caused the timber to be scaled, received payment therefor, with interest, and retained the same. Intent.— Under the Michigan statute it is a felony to enter upon state tax homestead lands and cut timber therefrom or to induce or direct another to do so, and an intent to commit a trespass is not necessary to complete the offense. People v. Christian, 144 Mich. 247, 107 N. W. 919. 12. Licenses and Permits to Cut Timber.[86] A permit, granted by the secretary of the interior, to cut timber on the public lands of the United States, does not attach to land upon which a homestead filing has been previously made, and remains uncanceled.[87] In Maine the county commissioners formerly had authority to grant permits to cut timber on the public lands,[88] but the statute authorizing them to do this has been repealed;[89] and a subsequent statute authorized the land agent to sell the right to cut timber and grass growing on lots reserved for public uses in unincorporated townships.[90] The Minnesota statute prohibits the sale of any pine timber on state lands except in special cases where the timber is liable to waste,[91] and a permit to remove timber purchased from the state at public sale is limited in the first instance to the period of two logging seasons, with authority to the timber commissioner to grant, for good reasons, an extension of one year.[92] A person to whom such a permit is issued has the right to cut and remove timber only during the life of the permit, and after the expiration of such term logs cut but not removed are the property of the state.[93] In Canada licenses are issued to cut timber on ungranted land.[94] Timber licenses are not retroactive as against prior grantees of the lands,[95] and lots granted or located prior to the date of the license are not subject to the rights conferred thereby.[96] A license to cut a specified amount of timber from certain land does not vest in the licensee any estate, right, or title in the land, or prevent the government giving like licenses, or others of equal authority, to other persons, so long as there is sufficient timber

90. Walker v. Lincoln, 45 Me. 67, holding that the act of Aug. 28, 1850, so providing, should be construed to include in its provisions a lot which was reserved "for the benefit of public education in general."

A permit to cut timber generally authorizes the holder to cut spruce timber, although its price is not stipulated in the instrument, but is only stated on another page of the sheet on which it is written. Mason v. Sprague, 47 Me. 18.

Validity of permit.— A permit from the land agent to cut timber on the state lands is valid, although it does not appear whether the holder gave the bond for the payment of "stumpage" required by the statute, as the bond is a matter subsequent to and independent of the permit. Mason v. Sprague, 47 Me. 18.

Right to permit.— The provision of Laws (1850), c. 196, authorizing the land agent to sell the right to cut grass and timber from public lands to the persons owning lands in any township if they elect to purchase, otherwise to any other person, is purely gratuitous, and neither such owners nor other persons can claim a conveyance thereof as of right. Coe v. Bradley, 49 Me. 388.

Termination of right.— The right of one who has secured a permit to cut grass and timber on reserved lands is terminated when such lands are incorporated in a township (State v. Mullen, 97 Me. 331, 54 Atl. 841), or an organization for either election or plantation purposes is perfected (Bragg v. Burleigh, 61 Me. 444, holding that the right under a deed conveying the right to cut until the organization for plantation purposes expired upon an earlier organization for election purposes).

91. State v. Shevlin-Carpenter Co., 62 Minn. 99, 64 N. W. 81, holding that the state auditor, acting as commissioner of the state land office, has no authority to sell any pine timber, under any conditions unless the governor, the treasurer, and the commissioner, or a majority of them, shall first officially sign a statement to be indorsed upon the appraisal and estimate of such pine timber as it is proposed to sell, to the effect that a sale thereof is necessary to protect the state from loss, and that if such commissioner does attempt to sell any pine timber and issues a permit to the purchaser to cut and remove the same without such official statement and sanction, such sale and permit are void, and the permit may be attacked collaterally, although it recites on its face facts showing that the law has been complied with.

to satisfy the requirements of the first license.[97] Orders in council authorizing the minister of the interior to grant licenses to cut timber do not constitute contracts between the crown and proposed licensees, but are revocable by the crown until acted upon by the granting of licenses under them.[98] Where the holder of a timber license does not verify the correctness of the official description of the lands to be covered by the license before it issues, and after its issue works on lands and makes improvements on a branch of a river which he believes forms part of his limits, but is subsequently ascertained by survey to form part of adjoining limits, he cannot recover from the crown for losses sustained by acting on an understanding derived from a plan furnished by the crown prior to the sale.[99] A timber license may be assigned without an instrument under seal registered in the county where the land is situated.[1]

F. Inclosure, Assertion of Exclusive Right, or Obstruction of Transit. Any inclosure of the public lands of the United States made or maintained by a person without color of title or an asserted right thereto, claimed in good faith, is unlawful,[2] as is also the assertion of a right to the exclusive use and occupancy of any of the public land without a claim or color of title or an asserted right to such claim or title made in good faith,[3] or the prevention or obstruction of free passage or transit over or through the public lands.[4] The United States may protect its lands from inclosure so long as the legal title remains in the government,[5] and may compel the destruction or removal of fences inclosing public lands.[6] The appropriate civil remedy is by injunction,[7] which may be mandatory as to so much of the fence complained of as exists,[8] and prohibitory as to building any future fences.[9] The provision against inclosure was only intended to prevent mere trespassers from inclosing public lands,[10] and in a proceeding under the statute it is a sufficient defense to show that the lands inclosed are not public lands,[11] or that defendant had a claim or color of title to the land acquired in good faith.[12] It is not necessary to constitute the offense of unlawfully inclosing public lands that the person accused should entirely surround the land with his own fences;[13] but the offense is complete where he completely incloses the land by constructing his fence so as to connect with fences erected and maintained by others,[14] or so as to take advantage of a natural barrier impassable for cattle.[15] Neither is it necessary that the fence should be on public land,[16] for when a person under the guise of inclosing his own land, builds a fence thereon for the purpose and with the intention of inclosing public lands, such fence or inclosure is unlawful.[17] But where a landowner in good faith, for the purpose of inclosing his own land, builds a fence on the line extending around the tract, such act is not unlawful, even though such fence so connects with fenced lands of other owners as thereby to inclose unclaimed public lands.[18] One who unlawfully incloses government lands with his own acquires no right to the exclusive possession of such government lands;[19] nor can he by such inclosure deprive others of the right to peaceably turn cattle thereon.[20] The making or maintaining of such unlawful inclosure or the assertion of such exclusive right, or the obstruction of passage, is a criminal offense under the statute.[21] All three offenses may be embraced in one indictment,[22] or if there are separate indictments they may be consolidated for trial.[23] An indictment for unlawfully inclosing a portion of the public lands must show that defendant is not within any of the exceptions permitting such inclosure.[24] Where an indictment contains three counts, the first charging the unlawful erection and construction of an inclosure of certain public lands, the second the unlawful maintenance and control of such inclosure, and the third the unlawful prevention and obstruction of free passage over said lands by means of fencing and inclosing the same, a verdict of not guilty on the first and third counts is not inconsistent with one of guilty on the second.[25] On the trial of an indictment for inclosing and asserting an exclusive right to public land without claim or color of title, acts, conduct, and statements of defendants tending to show the assertion of a right to exclude the general public or others from the lands described are competent evidence;[26] but a deed from a railroad company to defendant for unsurveyed public lands, described by section and subdivision as though surveyed, is inadmissible to show color of title, since it creates no right to any particular land.[27] In Texas the inclosure of state land is a penal offense under statute, but the state has also the right to proceed for a mandatory injunction to compel the removal of the inclosure.[28]

G. Grazing and Pasturage. While the United States government has always maintained its right to the exclusive possession of the public domain,[29] such right has not always been exercised,[30] and there is an implied license that the public lands of the United States shall be free to persons who seek to use them for the purpose of grazing or pasturing stock, so long as the government does not forbid such use.[31] This privilege is common to all who wish to enjoy it,[32] and is not dependent upon or enlarged by the ownership of neighboring lands.[33] No prior right is gained by priority of use,[34] nor can the privilege be monopolized by any one directly or indirectly, or under claim that he is but protecting his own lands.[35] The use of public lands for grazing and pasturage of stock confers no title on the person so using them, but the government may at any time withdraw its consent to such use.[36] There is no implied license to use for pasture purposes land reserved for the preservation of forests, to the destruction or injury of such forests,[37] and such use of the forest reservations may be enjoined.[38]

H. Cutting Hay From Public Lands. There is an implied license to the public to go upon the unappropriated public lands of the United States, and cut the native grasses therefrom, for the purpose of making hay,[39] and one who has cut hay from such land is the owner thereof, and may sue for its destruction by fire negligently set by another.[40] Replevin for hay cut on public lands cannot be maintained by a prior possessor against one who was in adverse possession, claiming a preëmption right, when he cut the hay.[41]

I. Crops [42] Grown on Public Lands.[43] Where one in possession of public land plows it and sows grain, the title to the growing crop is in him, as against one who afterward enters and attempts to claim it as a preëmptor, but who does not get into possession;[44] and one in possession of public lands, and in good faith endeavoring to perfect his title, is entitled to crops sown and harvested by him during his possession, as against another who is finally adjudged the owner by virtue of an entry, etc., made by himself.[45]

II. Survey and Disposal of Lands of the United States.

A. In General. The United States has a perfect title to the public lands,[46] and congress is vested with the power of disposition and of making all needful rules and regulations with respect to the public domain,[47] and has the absolute right to prescribe the times, the conditions, and the mode of transferring this property or any irreparable injury to the public lands therein, and to the undergrowth, timber, and water supply, and affidavits filed in support of such allegations recited that the sheep of defendants destroyed undergrowth, young and growing trees and seedlings, and ate and destroyed the roots of the vegetation and grasses, leaving the ground bare and subject to disastrous washings by the rains, to the irreparable injury of the reservation, such allegation and showing constituted a sufficient ground for the granting of a preliminary injunction.

Treaty provisions not amounting to grants. — The third article of the treaty of 1837 between the United States and the Miami Indians, providing that the lands mentioned in a schedule thereto annexed should be granted to the persons therein named, by patent from the president, was not of itself a grant, but was only a contract that the land should be afterward properly located, and granted by such patent to the persons named. has sole jurisdiction over matters concerning tide lands in Alaska, and its action thereon is final.[56]

B. Surveys[57] — 1. Necessity For. Although the statutes have sometimes authorized the acquisition of settlement rights in unsurveyed lands,[58] the rule is that it is a prerequisite to the right to enter public lands that the same shall have been surveyed under the laws of the United States,[59] and the plat of survey filed in the proper office.[60] There can be no township on the public lands except it has been actually surveyed and marked;[61] and a grant by the federal government to a state of school lands, described by the designation of section numbers only, vests no title in the state to any specific portion until the official survey is made and approved by the federal authorities.[62] A sale of public lands before the public survey may be treated as void;[63] but if the public survey be regularly made, returned, and approved, a sale will be valid, although the survey should be defective or erroneous, if such defect does not render the identity of the tract uncertain as to the locality or quantity.[64]

2. Mode of Making, Sufficiency, and Validity of Surveys. Under the statutes,[65] public lands are to be surveyed into townships six miles square, and each, in turn, subdivided into thirty-six sections of a mile square, except where a line of an Indian reservation or of a tract of land theretofore surveyed or patented or the course of a navigable river may render this impracticable, and in that case the rule must be departed from no further than such particular circumstances require.[66] A survey is sufficient where parallel lines are run each way at intervals of two miles and a corner made on each line at the end of every mile, and the survey completed by running straight lines from the established corners to the opposite corresponding corners, or, where no such opposite or corresponding corners have been or can be fixed by running from the established corners due north, south, east, or west to the watercourse or other exterior boundary of the fractional township.[67] The corners of quarter sections are not definitely fixed but are to be placed equidistant between the section corners on the same line.[68] Where all the lines of the north half of a section are actually run but the west, the survey is sufficient to authorize the issuance of a patent.[69] The surveyor-general has no authority

Method of locating west line. — Where the north line of a government section is actually run, and the northwest corner of the southwest quarter section located, the northwest section corner is located by running a line due north from the northwest corner of the southwest quarter section until it intersects the north line, and the point of intersection will be the true northwest corner. Holler v. Emerson, 112 Cal. 573, 44 Pac. 1073, holding that this method should be to extend a south fraction north of the east and west quarter line of the section.[70] The statute provides that fractional sections containing one hundred and sixty acres or upwards shall as nearly as practicable be divided into half quarter sections; [71] but it is considered that this provision is not imperative,[72] but leaves some latitude of discretion to surveyors.[73] Where a quarter section containing an excess over one hundred and sixty acres is to be divided, the excess must fall into the exterior half.[74] In extending the surveys of the public domain, fractional sections are caused by lakes or other bodies of water, and streams which are meandered, and Indian and other reservations.[75] A fraction smaller than sixty acres in extent may, according to the circumstances of the case, and the judgment of the surveyor-general, be reported to the register with a separate area, or may be attached by him to an adjoining tract for sale, and its area merged into that of the tract to which it is attached, which should always be shown on the plat by peculiar marks drawn across the division line.[76] Where a fractional section has been subdivided a deficiency in the contents of the section must, as between a quarter section and a residuary fraction, fall entirely on the latter, and cannot be apportioned between them.[77] It is the duty of the surveyor to note all watercourses over which the line he runs may pass,[78] and also the quality of the land.[79] Townships are fractional only when the outer boundary lines cannot be carried out in full because of a watercourse, Indian boundary, or other external interference,[80] and the fact that in laying a township off into sections there is a deficiency or excess to be carried into the northern or western sections or half sections according to the statute does not render such township fractional.[81] Surplus lands do not vitiate a survey, nor does a deficiency of acres called for in the survey operate against it.[82] Where the boundaries of a camp ground reserved to Indians by a treaty were fixed by a government survey of the adjoining lands and shown by the plat returned, the tract containing less than forty acres, such survey was sufficient for the purpose of a subsequent conveyance of the land by the land department after the reservation had been relinquished by the Indians.[83]

3. Plats. Plats of surveys of lands forming a part of the public domain are required to be made and filed in the land office of the district [84] and the general land adopted, although the length of the north line being given as eighty chains, and the northeast section corner established, it would appear that a point on the north line eighty chains due west from the northeast section corner would establish the northwest section corner.

An indorsement on the plat of survey that it was filed in the land office on a day named therein, which is not signed by any one, will, in the absence of other evidence on the subject, be taken as fixing the time of office.[85] The law makes it the surveyor-general's duty to calculate the areas, and state the result thereof on the plat, and it is competent for him to note thereon, as part of the plat, the distances of quarter section lines on which such calculations were based.[86] A copy of the plat of survey must be kept for public information in the office of the surveyor-general,[87] in the offices where the lands are to be sold,[88] and also in the office of the commissioner of public lands.[89]

4. Construction, Operation, and Effect of Surveys. The official surveys of the public lands of the United States are controlling.[90] So the description and plat of the original government survey, made by the surveyor-general from the field-notes, and filed in the general land office, are conclusive,[91] and the section lines and corners as laid down in the description and plat are binding upon the general government and upon all other persons concerned.[92] Where land is laid out into ranges, townships, etc., the survey of a particular township approved by the surveyor-general of the district settles the rights of the parties to land purchased from the United States in that township.[93] A diagram from the office of the secretary of the interior, certified to by the acting commissioner of the general land office, showing the primary limits of land, must be taken prima facie to correctly indicate the limits of the grant.[94] Where the surveyor-general has examined the field-notes of a survey and platted and returned certain land as one tract this is final as to its boundaries as but one tract.[95] The official survey and plat of any town-site located on government lands, and the lots and blocks thereof, are permanent landmarks, which may be considered in establishing the location of adjoining lands outside the town-site.[96] The provision of the statute that "each section or sub-division of section the contents of which have been returned by the surveyor general shall be held and considered as containing the exact quantity expressed in such return," fixes the quantity at which the government must dispose of the tract,[97] but does not control the area in contracts between private persons.[98] The location of a township upon the public domain is where the government surveyor has actually lined it out, and is to be determined by the monuments placed by him in the field,[99] and the true corner of a government subdivision is where the United States surveyor established it, whether this location is right or wrong.[1] A grant of land from the government according to the legal subdivisions established by the United States presupposes an actual ground survey of the land,[2] and the patent must be considered as conveying the land as actually surveyed.[3] Locations by surveyors cannot affect the rights of individuals recognized by the proper government officers;[4] and it has been said that without some action of the government other than the mere approval by the surveyor-general, a survey designating certain land as public land cannot be considered as a disturbance of the title of a proprietor, and still less as evidence that the land belongs to the public domain.[5] In locating the lines of subdivisions of a government survey, the courses and distances and monuments given in the field-notes of the government surveyor should be followed, without regard to whether this gives more land to one subdivision than to another.[6] In case of discrepancy between the field-notes and the plat the former govern,[7] and the land department may properly correct the plat so as to conform to the field-notes, in which case the plat as corrected supersedes the original.[8] When an entry is surveyed, its boundaries are designated, and cannot afterward be varied by the locator to the injury of the rights of others.[9] The official surveys made by the government are not open to collateral attack in an action at law by private parties;[10] and where no question is made as to the form and correctness of a survey, by proper parties, before the district court, the approval of the surveyor-general and of the land department is final.[11] The courts will not correct alleged mistakes in the original government surveys unless the mistakes are established by clear and convincing evidence,[12] and the construction placed upon a survey by the land department and their decision in reference to it, while not conclusive, should receive great consideration by the courts.[13] The original survey must govern as to the range line between two townships, and such line and the section corners, as established by such original survey cannot be changed in a subsequent survey made for the purpose of subdividing the sections;[14] but surveys by United States surveyors, although sanctioned by the principal deputy surveyor of the district, may be corrected when erroneous.[15] So also the United States, continuing in the ownership of lands which by public survey appear to abut on non-navigable waters, has the right to readjust the marginal survey, and reserve uplands which appear between the survey and the actual margin of the water supposed to have been previously meandered;[16] and a purchaser from the United States under timber-culture entries after a second survey, reserving upland between the first survey and the margin of a non-navigable lake, purchases the land with notice thereof, and is estopped to claim beyond the boundary under which he purchased.[17] The official platting of lands by authority of the United States, indicating the character thereof as regards whether they are swamp or marsh lands or lands covered by the waters of a lake, as the same appeared to the official surveyors when the original survey was made, is prima facie evidence as to their character at that time in an action involving the question whether they were a part of the public domain and subject to sale to private persons;[18] but a United States survey, fixing land covered with water as being a lake, followed by a sale of adjacent land with reference to the survey, is not conclusive, so as to preclude the land department from determining that the land is a swamp, if the purchasers of the adjacent land are not prejudiced.[19] Where land has been entered and purchased according to an official survey and plat, a subsequent change in the plat or of quantities cannot divest the purchaser or his grantees of what he lawfully purchased and paid for and for which he received a patent.[20] The failure of the government to survey and plat a small island at the time lands on the side of the river near which the island lay were surveyed does not raise a presumption that it was the intention to relinquish title thereto in favor of riparian owners on that side, the island having been included in the survey of the opposite side of the river a few years later.[21]

5. Boundaries[22]— a. In General. The boundary lines actually run and marked in the surveys returned by the surveyor-general are established as the proper boundary lines of the sections or subdivisions for which they were intended,[23] and the length of such lines as returned is to be held and considered as the true length thereof,[24] and so a patent issued "according to the official plat" is limited by calls for bayous noted on the official plat certified to the state by the general land office and the interior department.[25] The United States, in providing for the survey of the public domain, has established the rule that sections of land shall be held to contain the exact quantity returned by the surveyor-general;[26] and lands sold under the United States surveys pass according to the descriptions of the legal subdivisions whether those subdivisions contain the exact legal quantity or more or less.[27] The boundaries of lots patented by the United States as numbered lots of their respective sections cannot extend beyond the boundaries of the sections themselves.[28] Where an inland non-navigable lake covers a portion of a section of land, and the government survey designates the dry land in each subdivision as a fractional subdivision or lot, the purchaser from the government of such lots acquires title to such portion of the bed of the lake as will make out the full subdivision in which his land is situated.[29]

b. Meander Lines. A meander line is supposed to be along the shore of a body of water and to follow the windings of the stream or lake and the sinuosities of the banks.[30] Meander lines are run in surveying fractional portions of the public lands bordering on navigable rivers or lakes, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as the means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction subject to sale and which is to be paid for,[31] and the river or lake is the true boundary [32] where it appears that the government intended to sell all the land to the river or body of water.[33] But the mere fact that a line is run and designated as meandered is not conclusive against the government; [34] and where for any reason the surveyor omits to include in his survey large tracts of land lying between the meander line as surveyed or pretended to have been run upon the ground, and the streams or bodies of water meandered, the patents for the adjoining lots, although referring to the official plat of the survey, are merely grants of the premises limited by such meander line, and not by the water.[35] So also where the government plat and field-notes described the meander line of a tract of land as being a river, but in fact the meander line was not run along the river, but along a bayou, some distance from the river, and land between the bayou and the river, although in existence at the time of the survey, had never been surveyed, such land did not pass by a conveyance from the government of the surveyed tract.[36] Where there is no body of water anywhere within the section to which a meander line on the plat can be referred, the meander line must be taken as the boundary and the land granted cannot be extended beyond it.[37] Where land on one side of a non-navigable stream is a Mexican grant having the stream as its boundary, the true boundary of land surveyed by the government on the other side of the stream is the thread of the stream and not the meander line indicated by the field notes of the survey along the bank.[38] The courses and distances as set forth in the plat of an official survey, and referred to in patents from the United States which show an alleged meander line of a lake as one boundary, control in ejectment, as against the actual boundary of the lake, where the survey was grossly fraudulent, and the lake never existed within half a mile of the point indicated on the plat, and where to fix the lake as the boundary would give the patentees an area very largely in excess of that described in the patents and actually paid for, and the extension of the side lines to the lake is a matter of considerable difficulty and would necessitate going outside of the section in which the description and plat placed the land.[39]

6. Resurveys. Rights which have been acquired under a government survey cannot be affected or interfered with by a subsequent survey;[40] but until some rights to a specific tract of land have been acquired under a survey, a corrected survey can be made and substituted therefor.[41] A resurvey of land originally belonging to the United States must follow the boundaries and monuments, as run and made by the government survey, if the monuments placed to indicate the section corners and quarter section posts can be found, or the places where they were originally placed can be identified;[42] but, in relocating lost monuments designating the boundaries of government lands, a person in possession of the land under an assumed survey cannot be disturbed unless resort be had to other known lines and monuments as a basis of survey.[43]

7. Surveys of Omitted Lands. In order to give jurisdiction to the commissioner of the land office to order a survey of such islands as were omitted in the general survey of the adjacent lands, it must appear that there are such omitted islands, and that the land has not been previously conveyed by the United States.[44]

8. Conflicting Surveys. Of two overlapping surveys, the one first made has priority, particularly where the second is bounded with express reference to the first.[45] Where two separate and conflicting surveys of land have been made by the authority of the United States, the first of which has never been approved, but the parties have entered into a notarial agreement to respect it in preference to the last, they are bound by this agreement so long as it remains in force, and has not been set aside by a direct action of rescission.[46]

C. Entries,[47] Sales, and Possessory Rights — 1. In General — a. Meaning of Term "Entry." The term "entry" as used in reference to public lands means, in its technical sense, the filing with the register of the land office of a claim to a portion of the public lands for the purpose of acquiring an inceptive right thereto;[48] but the term is applied somewhat loosely to various proceedings under the land laws,[49] and the courts also use it in its ordinary sense as importing the physical act of entering and settling upon land.[50]

b. Time For Entry. An application for entry can be received by the local land officers only at their offices and during the prescribed office hours.[51]

c. Change of Entry. The acts of congress entitling one entering land at a land office of the United States to a change of the entry and a transfer of the payment made to another tract apply only in case such purchaser has made entry of a tract not intended to be entered by reason of a mistake as to the true numbers of the tract intended to be entered,[52] and authorize such transfer only when the tract intended remains unsold.[53] The fact that a person applied for leave to withdraw and change his entry and that the request was granted does not of itself show that he availed himself of the liberty given or that the entry was actually withdrawn.[54]

d. Validity of Entries. The rights of one claiming public land must be determined by the validity of the original entry at the time it was made,[55] and where one was at the time of his original entry disqualified to enter land, his continuing in possession after the disqualification had ceased was not equivalent to a new entry.[56] Where an entry on public land is allowed at the land office and payment for the land is received, the entry is prima facie valid;[57] but an entry made without warrant and authority of law, is a nullity.[58] So an entry of land covered by an existing entry of another person confers no rights,[59] and an entry in the name of a dead man is void.[60]

e. Evidence of Entry. The statute makes the official certificate of the register or receiver of any land office evidence of an entry of any tract of land in his district,[61] and a book certified by the state auditor to the county clerk, in which a certain entry appears, is not admissible in evidence to prove the entry.[62]

2. Lands Subject to Entry or Sale[63]— a. In General. All the vacant and unappropriated public lands not reserved or excepted[64] are subject to entry under the land laws.[65] But public lands are open to settlement only when they are free from any other claim of record,[66] and the fact that the title to land may be in the United States does not necessarily make it part of the public domain which is subject to entry or settlement.[67] So no entry can be made or title acquired to tide lands in Alaska.[68] The fact that land is unfit for cultivation and valuable chiefly for timber does not prevent a homstead entry thereof,[69] and where a railroad is granted the odd-numbered sections along its line, the even-numbered sections are subject to entry[70] unless reserved to the United States.[71] One who enters a tract of land shown by the government records to be vacant is not affected with notice of the title of another person thereto, although he may know that such other person had entered another tract intending to enter the tract in question, and that he claimed title thereto.[72] Where certain lands are not in law subject to location, the actual location of warrants thereon in good faith, and entry under such location, does not color or give character to the possession.[73]

Appeal from rejection of entry.— Where an application to enter land already covered by a homestead entry is received by the local land office and rejected, and an appeal is taken, it is not a pending application that will attach on the cancellation of the previous entry, since the appeal cannot operate to create, as a matter of law, any right not secured by the application. Erroneous reservation.— The reservation from entry and sale by the secretary of the interior, of the lands granted to the state for the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines river, under the act of Aug. 8, 1846, although erroneous in holding that the grant extended to lands lying above the Raccoon Fork to the northern boundary of the state, was nevertheless a reservation of such lands "by competent authority," and the land was not subject to entry. If the register of a land office has duly admitted the location of land, and granted a certificate thereof, a subsequent sale of the same land is void, although to a bona fide purchaser without notice. Moyer v. McCullough, 1 Ind. 339.

Issuance of patent for wrong land.— Where a person made a cash entry on land, but by mistake of the register in a land office a patent was issued for another tract and long after the patentee's death, the error was corrected, the original patent canceled, and a correct patent issued to the patentee and his heirs for the land, pending which another person had made a homestead entry thereon, the original patentee and his heirs were entitled to the land, for it was not subject to homestead entry at the time the other person attempted to enter it, and he had no rights therein. But compare Rogers v. Voss, 6 Iowa 405 (holding that where a person, although he had obtained a preëmption certificate, had not complied with the statute and had no right of preëmption, the land might be entered by another); Stubblefield v. Boggs, 2 Ohio St. 216 (holding that an entry is not unlawful because made on land covered by a previous but unsurveyed and void entry).

Notation of cancellation in local land office. — After a decision of the secretary of the interior, canceling an entry, has been made, a subsequent entry of the same lands cannot be made until the decision has been officially communicated to the local land officers, and a notation of the cancellation made on their plats and records. Germania Iron Co. v. James, 89 Fed. 811, 32 C. C. A. 348 [reversing 82 Fed. 807], holding that a rule of the land department to that effect is proper, just, and reasonable, and in accordance with the policy of congress, which makes the local offices the place for the initiation and establishment of all claims.

Erroneous cancellation.— Where it appears that a decision of the commissioner of the general land office canceling an occupying claimant's entry for alleged abandonment was erroneous, and that the entryman had done everything required by law and had not in fact abandoned his claim, and the successful contestant had not exercised his preference rights, a stranger to that contest whose application to enter the land as a homestead had been accepted while the occupying claimant's entry appeared canceled of record acquired no equitable right to the land by such entry. Fences and natural barriers may constitute such inclosure of public lands as to give actual possession to one making or using the inclosure, and another cannot acquire a preëmption or homestead claim thereto by intruding upon such possession; but, where the fences are dilapidated and down in places, and it does not appear that anything has been done to repair them, or that herders or other means are employed to prevent the escape of stock pastured on the land, or the intrusion of other stock, another may make valid settlement on, and acquire title to, the land, under the homestead law. Bullock v. Rouse, 81 Cal. 590, 22 Pac. 919.

Possession not sufficient to prevent entry. — Where one incloses with his own government land, which he uses only for grazing purposes, and at his invitation a homestead entry is made by another on part of the government lands, and a gate is maintained through which the public are licensed to pass, able.[94] But constructive possession by one without other title will not prevent an entry of the land by another,[95] and so, where a prior occupant, without title, has possession of a part only of a governmental subdivision of land, and a claimant enters upon the unoccupied part, claiming the right to enter the whole of it, and in pursuance of such claim files his declaratory statement and obtains a certificate of entry on the whole tract, he will be allowed to recover possession of the part occupied by the prior possessor.[96] Lands actually used and occupied by the native tribes of Alaska are reserved from sale or other disposal by the laws of the United States.[97]

The mere designation of a claim to land on the books of the land office, by a stranger, is not sufficient to authorize the register to withhold such lands from sale under Act Cong. March 3, 1811, § 10. Hunter v. Hemphill, 6 Mo. 106.

The act of congress of April 22, 1854, section 8, which required the surveyor-general to ascertain and report for confirmation all Spanish or Mexican grants in New Mexico and other territories, and which provided that the report should be laid before congress for action thereon, and until the final action thereon all claims covered by such claims should be reserved from sale or other dispo-

grant of a certain quantity of land to be located within exterior boundaries including a larger amount — does not prevent a grant, sale, or entry of any land within the exterior boundaries, so long as enough is left to satisfy the grant,[1] and a fortiori, after such a grant is surveyed and located, the remainder of the land within the exterior boundaries becomes subject to disposal like other public lands.[2] So also lands claimed under a Mexican grant, but excluded from the exterior limits of the grant by the express terms of the decree of confirmation, are public lands, subject to survey and sale as such from the time when the decree of confirmation so excluding them becomes final.[3] Where an inchoate Mexican grant is not presented for confirmation by the persons claiming under it, as required by statute, the land is, as to them, deemed public land of the United States subject to disposal.[4] The final rejection of a claim under a Mexican grant restores the land to the mass of the public domain and it becomes at once subject to location or appropriation in any manner provided by law.[5]

c. Town Sites.[6] Land situated within the corporate limits of a city or town or selected as the site of a city or town is not subject to entry under the general land laws.[7] But the statute provides that the existence or incorporation of any town upon the public lands shall not exclude from entry more than two thousand five hundred and sixty acres of land unless the entire tract incorporated including and in excess of such area shall be actually settled upon, inhabited, improved, and sition by the government, did not create a reservation until the coming in of the report of the surveyor-general, when the location and extent of the land could be known, and therefore a homestead entry made five years before the coming in of the report of the surveyor-general was valid. Lands occupied by persons exploring for mineral.— Land was not "vacant and open to settlement," where at the time of the application it was in the actual occupancy of others engaged in exploring it for oil, under oil placer mining locations previously made by them, although such locations did not appear by the records of the local land office, and although they were not valid as against the United States, because there had been no previous discovery of oil on the land, where the locators prosecuted the work of exploration with due diligence, and with the result of discovering oil in paying quantities before the selection by an applicant under the Forest Reserve Act had been approved by the land department. title has not been extinguished is not subject to entry,[16] nor can land scrip be located thereon.[17] No vested right is obtained in public land by reason of the filing of a contest against an Indian allotment, when the contest does not result in the cancellation of the allotment entry.[18] After the Indian right to lands reserved has been extinguished by treaty, the land becomes public land subject to disposition under the land laws.[19] A statute opening an abandoned military reservation for settlement under the homestead laws has been held not to apply to a portion of such land which was ceded to the United States by an Indian tribe to be sold and the proceeds held for their benefit.[20]

f. Previous Offer at Public Sale. It was formerly a fundamental principle underlying the land system of the United States that private entries were never permitted until after the lands had been exposed to public auction at the price for which they were afterward subject to entry.[21] But under the present statute no public lands of the United States, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractions authorized to be sold by the statute, and mineral and other lands, the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by special acts of congress, can be sold at public sale.[22]

The policy of the government has been to encourage the immigration of foreigners, and to this extent a system of preëmption has been adopted in all the territories and new states in which there is no discrimination between foreigners and native citizens. People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373.

A judgment in an action in a state court for the possession of public land prior to the issue of a patent, based on the ground that defendant in possession was an alien born, and had not declared her intention to become a citizen prior to her filing, did not conclude the action of the land office on the question of defendant's alienage and the claimant's right to enter land, or control the title evidenced by the patent subsequently issued. The statute does not embrace the case of one who has procured the cancellation of an entry under the Desert Land Act. Gray v. Dixon, 83 Cal. 33, 23 Pac. 60, holding that the fact that defendant procured the cancellation of such an entry made by another, and at the same time filed his own application under another act, gave him no preference over the right of plaintiff, who also filed an application for entry; and plaintiff, having made the first settlement, was entitled to recover the land.

The act of congress of May 29, 1830, § 2, providing that, "if two or more persons be settled upon the same quarter-section, the same may be divided between the two first actual settlers, if by a north and south, or east and west, line, the settlement or improvement of each can be included in a half-quarter-section," referred only to tracts of land containing one hundred and sixty acres, and did not operate on a smaller tract. Unavoidable delay.— The right of one who has actually occupied public lands, with an intent to make a homestead or preëmption entry, cannot be defeated by the mere lack of a place in which to make a record of his intent, if he makes his entry as soon as an office is opened where he can do so. Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 215, 20 S. Ct. 849, 44 L. ed. 1042 [reversing 17 Utah 352, 53 Pac. 996].

The refusal of a local land officer to receive the purchase-money tendered by a settler on the "Osage ceded lands" in Kansas, on the ground that it was too late to give notice to others who were supposed to have an adverse claim, will not defeat such settler's rights. The occupancy is in the nature of a tenancy at will and not a tenancy from year to year. Duncan v. Potts, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 82, 24 Am. Dec. 766.

The essential legal requisites of a possessory right in lands are the intention of the occupant permanently to occupy and improve the same for his home, and the manifestation of that intention as early as practicable by such improvements and badges of ownership as shall make it known to others. Davis v. Simmons, 1 Ariz. 25, 25 Pac. 535.

Occupation of a possessory claim within boundaries so clearly marked and defined as to notify strangers that the land is taken up or located is a sufficient possession. Courtney v. Turner, 12 Nev. 345, holding further that the lines of the survey of a possessory claim need not necessarily be marked by stakes and ditches, or by the means which are usually employed for defining the boundary of such claim, as such means are not exclusive; but it is a question of fact whether in any given case the limits of the claim are sufficiently defined to acquaint the public with their extent. A right to the possession of public lands cannot be initiated by a forcible entry and trespass on the peaceable possession of another person. Walsh v. Ford, 1 Alaska 146.

Extent of possession.— The mere fact of going upon a portion of public land, and building a house and corral, and even cutting hay on a part, no claim being made under the Possessory Act, nor under the United States preëmption laws, will not extend the possession beyond the premises actually occupied. Garrison v. Sampson, 15 Cal. 93.

Maintaining possession by agent or tenant. — A bona fide settler who incloses the land for a farm, and makes valuable improvements thereon, with the intention of purchasing the land from the government whenever a title can be procured, does not lose his possessory rights by removal from the territory, where he places an agent or tenant in possession to hold the land for him. land, duly and timely asserted upon filing of the plat of survey, will, as against an intervening indemnity railroad selection, be protected in their entirety, although the lands claimed lie in different quarter sections, and the improvements are confined to a single quarter section.[88]

c. Occupancy Rights in Alaska. A citizen may, under the statute, use and occupy a tract of the public domain in Alaska, not to exceed eighty acres in area for the purpose of trade, manufactures, or other productive industry.[89] Whenever one has marked out the tract and erected his mill or other machinery for trade and manufacture upon any part of it, he may hold the entire tract under this law, and it is not necessary that he shall cover the entire tract claimed by him with structures or fence it in order to maintain his exclusive possession thereof.[90] But one who abandons a portion of his possessory rights on the public domain, including one entire boundary line, thus leaving the limits of his claim open, indefinite, and undetermined, is limited in his possessory claim in the direction of his abandoned boundary to lands actually occupied and used.[91] A mere occupancy for a brief time by camping on the ground in a tent is not a sufficient evidence of the occupation of public land for the purpose of trade and manufacture on which to base title.[92] Under the organic act Indians and settlers are protected in the exclusive possession of those lands only which they actually use and occupy,[93] and this provision applies to all lands, including tide lands, over which the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction and power of disposal, and protects possessory rights which were then exercised and claimed for fishing or other purposes by occupants of adjoining uplands against others who assert a common right to fish thereon.[94]

6. Sales — a. Price and Terms of Sale — (i) In General. The price at which public lands are to be offered for sale is fixed by statute at two dollars and fifty cents per acre for alternate reserved lands along the line of railroads and one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre for other lands,[95] and the higher price must be paid for any lands within the place limits of a railroad grant, although they are of a class which another statute provides may be sold at the lower price.[96] Under the statute credit cannot be allowed for the purchase-money on the sale of any of the public lands, but every purchaser of land sold at public sale must, on the day of the purchase, make complete payment therefor.[97]

S. St. at L. 377 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1548], providing for the sale of desert lands at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. Price of desert lands see infra, II, C, 10.

S.) 29, 12 L. ed. 36, holding that this statute makes no exception in favor of the receiver, and if he can purchase at all, it must be by placing his own money with the other moneys which he holds in trust for the government.

statute that where a person has paid double the minimum price for land, which is afterward found to be not within the limits of a railroad grant, the excess shall be repaid to the purchaser, or to his heirs or assigns.[98] But this statute applies only to cases where there was a mutual mistake as to the location of the road at the time when the entry was made,[99] or where the route is changed so as to exclude the land,[1] and does not authorize repayment where the land was within a railroad grant when patented, but the grant has been subsequently forfeited.[2] In cases not within the statute a purchaser who has obtained and still has possession cannot reopen the transaction and recover back a part of the purchase-money, on the ground that by reason of an erroneous construction of the statutes he paid more than the price prescribed by congress,[3] or that the original contract of purchase has been annulled by mutual agreement between the claimant and the United States and a new contract of purchase at a smaller price substituted.[4]

b. Right to Purchase. The fact that a married woman procured from her husband the money with which to make payment for public land is not a sufficient ground for refusing to permit the purchase to be made by her.[5] Some of the earlier acts of congress gave to the owners of lands fronting on watercourses a preference right to purchase public lands lying back of their lands, but such statutes are no longer in force, and rights under them are now finally settled, and hence it is sufficient to merely refer to some of the principal decisions under such statutes.[6]

c. Amount Which May Be Purchased. Where the statute limits the amount of land which a single purchaser may buy, one who has purchased the full quantity allowed is disqualified from any further purchase.[7]

d. Withdrawal of Land From Sale. Where public lands were withdrawn from sale for the subsequent benefit of certain Indians, the fact that the withdrawal was conditional on the land being required for purposes of the Indian treaties, and that the Indians were to have no rights in such lands until after legislation should invest them with a legal title, did not destroy the effectiveness of the withdrawal.[8]

e. Agreements as to Bidding. The statute prohibits, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, any agreement not to bid upon or purchase lands offered at public sale by the United States,[9] and a contract designed to prevent competition at such a sale is void as against public policy;[10] but it is not unlawful for individuals to associate together to purchase public lands for their joint interests,[11]

although an association formed for the purpose of making speculative purchases of lands of the United States at public sales has been held unlawful as preventing competition.[12]

f. Validity of Sale. Where the commissioner of the general land office, under the act of congress authorizing him to order into the market all lands of a certain class which in his judgment it would be proper to expose for sale, instructs land officers to offer said lands for sale if after examination of the books and maps in their offices there appears on them no objection to so doing, a sale made in accordance with such instructions is valid.[13] The validity of a government sale is not affected by the register's omission to mark it on the township plat, or by a subsequent sale in error to another.[14] A sale of lands which is not authorized by law is void and neither confers any title on the purchaser nor divests the title of the United States.[15]

g. Title and Rights of Purchaser. One who purchases lands from the government becomes invested with all the title of the United States[16] and the occupation of the land by another after such purchase is a trespass for which the purchaser can recover damages.[17] The purchaser is entitled to growing crops,[18] and improvements forming part of the realty[19] which are on the land at the

8. Homesteads [34]— a. In General. The object and purpose of the homestead laws of the United States are to grant land to actual, bona fide settlers, persons making settlements upon the public lands for use as homesteads, and to encourage residence upon, cultivation, and improvement of the public domain.[35] Under the statute [36] every person who is the head of a family [37] or has arrived at the age of twenty-one years and is a citizen of the United States, or has filed his declaration of intention to become such,[38] is entitled to enter one-fourth section or a less quantity of unappropriated public lands to be located in a body in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public lands; [39] and every person owning and residing on land may, under the provisions of the homestead law, enter other land lying contiguous to his land which shall not with the land so already owned and occupied exceed in the aggregate one hundred and sixty acres.[40]

b. Application, Affidavit, and Entry. Under the homestead law three things are needed to be done in order to constitute an entry on public lands: (1) The applicant must make an affidavit setting forth the facts which entitle him to make such an entry; [41] (2) he must make a formal application; [42] and (3) he must make payment of the money required.[43] The applicant is required to state in his affidavit that he does not apply to enter the land for the purpose of speculation, but as a home for himself,[44] that his application made is in good faith for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not for the benefit of any other per-

37. A deserted wife is to be treated as the head of a family and if she retains possession of the land entered by the husband she may continue to reside thereon and may make final proof in his name, or make an entry thereof in her own name upon proof of her husband's desertion, and this right of the deserted wife cannot be defeated by a fraudulent and collusive relinquishment by the husband in hostility to her rights. Michaelis v. Michaelis, 43 Minn. 123, 44 N. W. 1149.

38. A person who is the proprietor of more than one hundred and sixty acres of land, in any state or territory, can acquire no right under the homestead law. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2289 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1388].

39. A tract of land platted as a quarter section may be entered as a quarter section regardless of its actual area, whether more or less than one hundred and sixty acres. Tictin v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 1; Wood v. Bick, 13 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 520; In re Douglas, 10 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 116; In re Tingley, 8 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 205; In re Burnes, 7 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 20; In re Elson, 6 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 767.

Claim extending over contiguous quarter sections.— A homesteader who initiates a right as to either surveyed or unsurveyed land, and complies with the legal regulations, may, when he enters the land, embrace in his claim land in contiguous quarter sections, if he does not exceed the quantity allowed by law, and provided that his improvements are upon some portion of the tract, and that he does such acts as put the public upon notice of the extent of his claim. St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Donohue, 210 U. S. 21, 28 S. Ct. 600, 52 L. ed. 941 [affirming 101 Minn. 239, 112 N. W. 413, and distinguishing Ferguson v. McLaughlin, 96 U. S. 174, 26 L. ed. 624].

40. Title sufficient to warrant claim of additional farm homestead.— One having minor children by a former deceased husband has, under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1468, such absolute title in one half of the latter's real estate that by a conveyance to her second husband of land which may on partition be included in such half, even though it has been allotted as a homestead to her and her children, the husband acquires a title sufficient to allow him to claim an additional farm homestead. Stewart v. McHarry, 159 U. S. 643, 13 S. Ct. 117, 40 L. ed. 290 [affirming (Cal. 1893) 35 Pac. 141], holding that such purchaser's right to file upon an adjoining farm homestead under the statute cannot be defeated by reason of the fact that it is possible that on the partition other land not adjoining that filed upon may be alloted to him instead of the specified part conveyed to him.

41. Hastings, etc., R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 10 S. Ct. 112, 33 L. ed. 363 [affirming 34 Minn. 538, 27 N. W. 69].

An application for the entry of a soldier's additional homestead, under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2306 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1415], is not made under the homestead laws, but such grant is in the nature of a bounty to the soldier, and hence a notary public is authorized to administer the oath. U. S. v. Lair, 118 Fed. 98.
