It is not contributory negligence on the part of the owner of animals to permit them to run at large where it is lawful to do so knowing that there are substances upon the track calculated to attract them, since it is the duty of the railroad company to remove such substances and he has a right to presume that it will do so. to lay them properly or to keep them in repair.[49] So also where a person stands a team for the purpose of transacting business with the railroad company at a place designated by its agent, the company will be liable for injury to the team by trains under its control.[50]

b. Accidents at Public Crossings.[51] In operating a railroad across a public highway the company must exercise ordinary care and diligence to prevent injury to animals rightfully upon the highway,[52] and if the company by the mode of constructing its tracks or adjacent buildings unnecessarily makes a crossing particularly dangerous it must adopt corresponding precautions to prevent injuries.[53] If a railroad company is required by a city ordinance to construct gates at street crossings and keep them closed when trains are passing, a failure to do so is negligence which will render the company liable for any injuries to animals occasioned thereby;[54] but in the absence of statute or an order made pursuant to statutory authority, a railroad company is under no obligation to maintain gates or a flagman at a crossing.[55]

c. Defects in or Obstructions at Crossings. Where a railroad crosses a public highway it is the duty of the company to make and maintain a good and sufficient crossing,[56] and in case of failure to do so it will be liable for injuries to animals due to defects in the crossing itself,[57] or injuries done by its trains at crossings owing to the improper construction or condition of the crossing.[58] The company will also be liable for injuries to animals due to its wrongfully obstructing the crossing of a public highway,[59] as by leaving its trains standing upon a crossing for an unreasonable length of time.[60] A railroad company is not, however, liable to a mere licensee for injuries to animals due to the condition of its track or roadbed at places other than such crossings as it is the duty of the company to maintain.[61]

expressly require the construction of fences or make railroad companies liable for all injuries to animals where their roads are not fenced.[66] The statutes in some cases expressly require the construction of cattle-guards;[67] but statutes requiring the erection and maintenance of fences impose without any express provision relating thereto the duty of constructing suitable cattle-guards,[68] and end or wing fences from such cattle-guards to the main or lateral fences.[69] The obligation, being purely statutory, comes into existence, is modified, or goes out of existence by the enactment, change, or repeal of the statutes.[70]

The duty of fencing is imposed by implication by statutes making railroad companies liable for injuries to animals where their tracks are not fenced (Sullivan v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 19 Oreg. 319, 24 Pac. 408), or permitting adjoining owners after notice to the company to construct fences upon failure of the railroad company to do so and to recover from the railroad company the expenses of such construction (Cornwall v. Sullivan R. Co., 28 N. H. 161).

70. Campbell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 50 Conn. 128, holding that where a statute requiring fences is repealed and a new statute enacted requiring fencing only when valuable consideration contracts with an adjoining landowner to fence its tracks, it is liable to such owner for injury to animals occasioned by its failure to construct or maintain such fences in accordance with the terms of its agreement.[71] A compliance with an existing statute as to fencing will not exonerate the company from liability irrespective of the terms of the contract,[72] nor will an agreement on the part of the company as to the construction of certain fences and crossings, unless such an intention clearly appears, relieve the company from any of its duties in this regard imposed by statute.[73]

(III) DUTY OF ADJOINING LANDOWNER TO ASSIST. Statutes requiring railroad companies to fence are not partition fence laws,[74] and in the absence of special statute or agreement an adjoining landowner is not required to erect or assist in maintaining any part thereof,[75] or to construct fences on his own land abutting on the railroad;[76] nor, on the other hand, is the railroad company obliged to construct fences, which if constructed would inclose no part of its track, between places such as depot grounds which it may leave unfenced and the lands of adjoining owners.[77] Statutes providing that upon failure of the railroad company to construct fences the landowner may do so and recover the value thereof from the railroad company impose no duty upon the landowner to do so, and do not affect the liability of the railroad company under other statutes expressly requiring it to fence.[78]

(IV) DELEGATION OF DUTY TO THIRD PERSONS. A railroad company cannot avoid its liability for injuries to animals occasioned by the absence or defective condition of fences or cattle-guards by showing that it had contracted with some third person to construct or maintain them and that the injury was due to a failure of such person to comply with his agreement,[79] unless the owner of the railroad commissioners order it, the company is not liable for failure to erect fences where the commissioners have not so ordered.

An agreement to fence within a reasonable time "after the completion" of the railroad will be construed as referring to the completion of the part running through the lands agreed to be fenced and not to the completion of the entire road, where the completed parts of the road are being operated in advance of the completion of the whole. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. McClellen, 59 Ind. 440.

Form of action.— Where the duty to fence is not imposed by law but by contract, the owner of animals injured cannot maintain an action of tort based solely upon a breach of this duty, but in the absence of such negligence in the management of the train as to render the company liable the remedy of the owner must be an action for damages for breach of the contract. The Kentucky statute of 1903 requires railroad companies to construct and maintain fences on one half of the distance of the division line between the right of way and the adjoining land, and requires the landowner to fence the other half; but where the landowner erects the part required of him the railroad company is bound to erect the other half without notice from the landowner to do so. Co., 2 Hilt. (N. Co. v. Hildreth, 77 Ind. 504).

If compensation was received by the landowner prior to the statute requiring railroad companies to fence, the duty of fencing as between the railroad company and such owner rests upon the latter and is not affected by the statute (Stearns v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 1 Allen (Mass.) 493; Johnson v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 19 Wis. 137); and the same rule applies if the railroad was located and begun under a statute allowing the landowner to recover compensation for fencing as a part of his damages, although the road was not completed at the time of the enactment of the statute requiring railroad companies to fence (Baxter v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 102 Mass. 383).

(VII) TIME FOR CONSTRUCTION. The statutory liability of a railroad company for injuries to animals due to the absence of fences commences as soon as it begins to run its cars over the road,[93] unless the statute expressly allows a certain time for such construction after the road is open for use,[94] or after the passage of the act creating the liability,[95] in which case to recover under the statute it is necessary for plaintiff to show that this time had elapsed at the time of the injury complained of,[96] and if it has not, there can be no recovery unless actionable negligence in the operation of the train is shown.[97]

Where no time is specified by the statute for the construction of the fences, they must be built at least as soon as the company shall commence operating its road; and it seems that under the same circumstances a proper regard for the rights of adjoining landowners would require that they should be built before or as soon as the construction of the road is begun. In Michigan the statute of 1871 expressly limits the liability of the railroad company to "adjacent occupants or proprietors" and supersedes the statute of 1869 under which the liability was general. Continental Imp. Co. v. Phelps, 47 Mich. 299, 11 N. W. 167.

Co., 65 Mo. 172; Geiser v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 61 Mo. App. 459; Ferris v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 30 Mo. App. 122; Carpenter v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 25 Mo. W. 910 [affirmed in 204 Mo. 269, 102 S. App. 140, 85 S. W. 978; Growney v. Wabash R. Co., 102 Mo. App. 442, 76 S. W. 671); but if such lands are inclosed by a lawful fence on all sides except next to the railroad track, this is all the protection that persons other than the landowner are entitled to (Johnson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 80 Mo. 620); and if the animals of third persons break over such lawful fences and go upon the track and are injured, there can be no recovery, although the railroad company failed to fence along the track (Johnson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., supra; Harrington v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 384).

The English statute requires fencing for the benefit of "occupiers" as well as owners of adjacent lands, and a tenant is an occupier within the application of the statute (Dawson v. Midland R. Co., L. R. 8 Exch. 8, 42 L. J. Exch. 49, 21 Wkly. Rep. 56); and it is also held that a person lawfully using an adjacent highway for the purpose of driving his stock along it is for the time being an occupier within the application of the statute (Midland R. Co. v. Dakin, 17 C. B. 126, 25 L. J. C. P. 73, 42 Wkly. Rep. 16, 84 E. C. L. 126); but if animals are merely straying upon the adjacent highway the company is under no obligation to fence against them (Manchester, etc., R. Co. v. Wallis, 14 C. B. 213, 2 C. L. R. 573, 18 Jur. 268, 23 L. J. C. P. 85, 7 R. & Can. Cas. 709, 2 Wkly. Rep. 194, 78 E. C. L. 213).

In Canada under the statute of 1883, an "occupant" of adjoining lands is entitled to the protection of fences, but the occupation must be of land adjoining the railroad, and the company is only required to fence across the land or portion of a lot actually occupied (Conway v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 12 Ont. App. 708 [affirming 7 Ont. 673]); but a person in possession as locatee of public lands is an occupant, although his location is subject to forfeiture for breach of conditions provided the crown has taken no steps to insist upon the forfeiture (Davis v. Canadian Pac. Limitation of rule.— This rule would not apply where the injury resulted from the wilful or wanton act of the owner of the animal or to injuries at such places as public crossings and depot grounds which are not required to be fenced; but in cases where stock get upon the track at places which should be but are not fenced, and through no wanton or wilful act of the owner, the railroad company is liable without regard to the question of negligence. Hopkins v. Kansas Pac. R. Co., 18 Kan. 462.

Under the New Mexico statute as amended by the laws of 1901, it is held that the mere failure of the railroad company to fence as required by the statute is not of itself such negligence as to render the company liable, but that the statute merely makes proof of the injury and failure to fence prima facie evidence of negligence, and places the burden of proof upon the railroad company. does not relieve the railroad company from liability on the ground of negligence in the operation of its trains,[7] and can in no way justify an injury wantonly inflicted,[8] although if the animal was a trespasser the company will not be liable unless the injury was wantonly or wilfully inflicted.[9]

(XI) CARE AND LIABILITY WHERE FENCING NOT REQUIRED — (A) Where No Fencing Is Required. Where railroad companies are not required by law to construct any fences they must exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to animals which while lawfully at large may wander upon the track,[10] and although not required to fence must in case of a failure to do so exercise a higher degree of care than if their tracks were fenced in jurisdictions where stock may lawfully be permitted to run at large;[11] but where it is unlawful for stock to run at large no greater degree of care is required than if the tracks were fenced,[12] and the company will not be liable for injuries to animals wrongfully upon the track except in case of gross negligence or wilful or intentional injury.[13]

(B) At Particular Places Not Required to Be Fenced. Where animals go upon a railroad track at places where the company is not obliged to fence or construct cattle-guards and are killed or injured, the case must be decided upon common-law principles as if no statute on the subject of fencing existed,[14] and there can be no recovery against the railroad company in the absence of proof that the injury was caused by its negligence,[15] as where the accident occurs upon the station

In Indiana the statute making railroad companies liable for injuries to animals without regard to any question of negligence provides that it shall not apply to any railroads securely fenced in and such fence properly maintained (Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Brevoort, 30 Ind. 324; Lafayette, etc., R. Co. v. Shriner, 6 Ind. 141); and this statute is construed as relieving the company from liability in the absence of negligence for accidents at places where it could not lawfully maintain a fence (Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Caudle, 60 Ind. 112; Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Huber, 42 Ind. 173; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Warner, 35 Ind. 515; Jeffersonville, etc., R. safety of trains in case of a collision.[23] So a statute requiring such companies to maintain fences sufficient to exclude "cattle, horses, sheep and hogs" will be construed to include asses[24] and mules;[25] the term "cattle" will be construed to include horses;[26] the words "horses, cattle, mules or other animals" to include hogs;[27] and the term "stock" will be applied to any live stock, including hogs as well as cattle and horses,[28] but not dogs.[29] Under a statute making railroad companies liable for all animals killed or injured except where the road is "enclosed by a good and lawful fence" the company must fence against all animals as to which a good and lawful fence would be any protection,[30] including hogs which such a fence would exclude,[31] but not against animals which a good and lawful fence as defined by the general fence laws would not exclude,[32] the burden, however, being upon defendant to show that the animal injured was within the exception.[33] In Iowa the statute provides that railroad companies must fence against, or otherwise be liable for injuries to, "live stock running at large."[34]

The fact that plaintiff had previously trespassed upon the railroad right of way by driving the same stock upon or across it will not affect the liability of the railroad company where this trespass had no connection with the subsequent acts by which they

(XIII) EFFECT OF STOCK LAWS. Stock laws prohibiting domestic animals from running at large do not relieve railroad companies from their statutory duty to maintain fences and cattle-guards or their liability for injuries due to their failure to do so;[36] but where railroad companies are not required to fence and animals are unlawfully at large in violation of such laws, the company will not be liable except for gross negligence or injuries wantonly or wilfully inflicted.[37]

(XIV) PLACE OF ENTRY OF ANIMAL UPON TRACK — (A) In General. In an action against a railroad company for injury to animals due to a failure to maintain fences, it is the place where the animal entered upon the track and not the place of the accident which fixes the liability.[38] If the entry was at a place where there should have been a fence but was not the company is liable,[39] although

Co., 64 Iowa 670, 21 N. W. 131); but the qualification quoted implies something more than mere negligence on the part of the owner (Krebs v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., supra); and merely permitting stock to run at large in proximity to an unfenced railroad track is not sufficient to defeat a recovery (Lee v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 131, 23 N. W. 299).

In Texas it is held that the statute providing that after the adoption of the stock law in any county "no person within the county" shall be required to fence against stock not permitted to run at large exempts a railway company from the obligation to fence its tracks in a county in which the stock law has been adopted, the word "person" in the statute including corporations. Under the Oregon statute making railroad companies liable for stock killed or injured "on or near any unfenced track" the company is liable if the injury occurred at a point where it had neglected to fence, and the point of entry is material only where the accident occurred at a place where the company was not required to fence. Sullivan v. Oregon, R., etc., Co., 19 Oreg. 319, 24 Pac. 408.

Reëntry after leaving track.— If an animal after entering and wandering upon a railroad track subsequently entirely leaves it and then reënters at another point where fences should be maintained, and is injured, the company is liable, notwithstanding the original entry was at a point where no fence was required (Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Cash, 27 Kan. 587), or where a proper fence was maintained over which the animal entered the accident occurred at a point where no fencing was required,[40] or where a sufficient fence was maintained;[41] while on the other hand the company is not liable if the animal entered by breaking or jumping over a sufficient fence or cattle-guard,[42] or entered at a place where the company was not required to fence,[43] although the accident occurred where the company should have maintained a fence but failed to do so,[44] unless the passage of the animal along the track from the place of entry, which was not a place required to be fenced, to the place of injury was due to the absence of cattle-guards which it was the duty of the company to maintain.[45] To recover on this ground it is therefore not sufficient for plaintiff to show merely that there was no fence where a fence was necessary, but it must further appear that the injured animal entered at such a place.[46]

(B) Entry From Highway. Where railroad companies are required by law to maintain fences and cattle-guards, the company will be liable for injuries to animals which go upon the track from a highway running parallel therewith, where no fence is maintained,[47] or which enter at the intersection of a highway owing to the absence of or defective condition of cattle-guards,[48] or end or wing fence connecting therewith.[49] Under some of the statutes the company is liable without regard to whether at the time of entry the animals were rightfully or wrongfully upon the highway;[50] but under others if the animal injured was unlawfully at large and wrongfully upon the highway at the time of entry, the company is not liable, although sufficient fences or cattle-guards were not maintained,[51] unless, as at common law, the injury was wantonly, recklessly, or wilfully inflicted.[52] If a cattle-guard sufficient to turn ordinary stock is maintained the company is not liable for an injury to an animal which enters from a highway by jumping over such cattle-guard.[53]

(c) Entry From Lands Where Trespassing. The liability of railroad companies for injuries to animals due to the absence of or defects in fences, where the animals are wrongfully upon the premises from which they enter upon the railroad track, depends upon the application of the particular statute under which the action is brought.[54] Under some of the statutes it is held that the duty to fence is only for the benefit of adjoining owners or those whose animals are rightfully upon the premises from which they enter, and that if the animal is a trespasser or wrongfully upon such premises the owner cannot recover, although a proper fence was not maintained,[55] unless the animals escaped to such premises

But an animal is not wrongfully upon a highway as regards the railroad company if it got there by escaping from an inclosure through a defect in the railroad fence at some other point. Davidson v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 2 Can. R. Cas. 371, 5 Ont. L. Rep. 574, 2 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 185.

The New York statute of 1890 omits the absolute liability clause of the act of 1848 in so far as it applies to cattle-guards, and if the entry of the animal was over a defective cattle-guard instead of a fence, and it was wrongfully at large and a trespasser upon the highway, the company will not be liable unless as at common law the injury was wilfully or recklessly inflicted. Bateman v. Rutland R. Co., 54 Misc. 312, 105 N. Y. Suppl. 970.

In Canada it has been held that if an animal is wrongfully upon a highway running parallel with the railroad, the case is the same as if the animal was trespassing upon other adjacent land, and the owner cannot recover, although the railroad was not fenced as required by law (Daniels v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 11 Ont. App. 471); but that if the animal got upon the track at a crossing by reason of the failure of the railroad company to construct cattle-guards, the company will be liable regardless of whether the animal was rightfully or wrongfully upon the highway (Huist v. Buffalo, etc., R. Animals are wrongfully upon the land, within the application of this rule, if without the authority or consent of the owner of the land, although under circumstances which might not be sufficient to sustain an action of trespass by him. McDonnell v. Pittsfield, etc., R. Corp., 115 Mass. 564, holding that a railroad company is not liable for injuries to animals which, while being driven along a highway, escape upon adjoining lands, from which they pass upon the track at a place where the company has failed to fence.

If the animal was rightfully upon the premises from which it entered upon the track, the railroad company is liable, although it was not the property of the adjoining landowner, as in the case of animals which such landowner is pasturing for others (Smith v. Barre R. Co., 64 Vt. 21, 23 Atl. 632); but it is incumbent upon plaintiff to show this fact (Smith v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 25 Mo. App. 113).

Where animals are left in the custody of the railroad company for shipment and escape from defendant's cattle pens, they are not trespassers either upon the railroad company's other property or upon the highway from which they stray upon the right of way. Flint v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 73 N. H. 141, 59 Atl. 938.

In Missouri the statute requiring railroad through a defect in some other fence which it was the duty of the company to maintain;[56] but under others it is held that the duty is general, and that if the animals get upon the track because of a failure to maintain a proper fence, the railroad company is liable regardless of whether they were rightfully or wrongfully upon the land from which they entered.[57] Under the former rule if the railroad company itself owns the adjoining lands it is not obliged to fence against itself, and will not be liable for injuries to animals which, while trespassing upon its lands, go upon the track,[58] but under the latter the fact that the entry was from lands belonging to the railroad company is immaterial.[59]

(xv) Nature and Cause of Injury. Under some of the statutes prescribing the liability of railroad companies for injuries to animals due to a failure to maintain fences, there can be no recovery under the statute where the injury is not caused by actual contact or collision of the train with the animal injured,[60]

companies to fence tracks running through inclosed or cultivated fields is held to be only for the benefit of the adjoining owners (Peddicord v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 85 Mo. 160; Harrington v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 384; Berry v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 65 Mo. 172; Hendrix v. St. Joseph, etc., R. Co., 38 Mo. App. 520; Carpenter v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 25 Mo. App. 110), or owners of animals rightfully upon such land (Farmers' Bank v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 109 Mo. App. 165, 83 S. W. 76; Brown v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 104 Mo. App. 691, 78 S. W. 273; Payne v. Current River R. Co., 75 Mo. App. 14; Smith v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 25 Mo. App. 113); but it is not unlawful to permit stock to run at large (Ells v. Pacific R. Co., 55 Mo. 278); and such animals are not trespassers in going upon the lands of others which are uninclosed or not inclosed by lawful fences (Kaes v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 6 Mo. App. 397); so if the lands from which they entered were not inclosed by a lawful fence the railroad company is liable (Rinehart v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 204 Mo. 269, 102 S. W. 958 [affirming 126 Mo. App. 446, 80 S. W. 910]; Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 127 Mo. App. 160, 105 S. W. 10; Peery v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 122 Mo. App. 177, 99 S. W. 671; Dean v. Omaha, etc., R. Co., 54 Mo. App. 647; Kaes v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., supra); but if inclosed except along the track by a lawful fence the railroad company is not liable to outside owners, although it has failed to fence along the track, and it is incumbent upon plaintiff to show that the lands were not so inclosed (Peddicord v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., supra; Harrington v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., supra; Hendrix v. St. Joseph, etc., R. Co., 38 Mo. App. 520; Carpenter v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., supra. But see Rinehart v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., supra), or that the animals were upon such lands with the consent of the owner thereof (Smith v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., supra).

In Canada it was formerly held that as the requirement as to fencing was for the benefit only of adjoining landowners and persons whose animals were rightfully upon such lands, there could be no recovery if the animal entered upon the railroad track from lands where it was trespassing, but the statute of 1890 provides that "no animal allowed by law to run at large shall be held to be trespassing on a place adjoining the railway merely for the reason that the owner or occupant of such place has not permitted it to be there," and so if there is a municipal by-law permitting animals to run at large, although such by-law cannot authorize a trespass upon private property, yet notwithstanding that as regards the landowner the animal would be a trespasser, it will not be so considered as regards the railroad company. The Missouri statute as amended in 1885 is said to authorize a recovery where animals, in the absence of fences, are injured by becoming frightened by moving trains and running into obstructions near the track, but the statute will not authorize a recovery on the ground that by reason of the absence of fences cattle escaped from adjoining fields and were frightened by a train and ran and in consequence lost flesh. Escape and loss of stock.— Under the Missouri Double Damage Act the company is liaby approaching trains and running upon bridges or trestles,[70] or into wire fences,[71] or are injured by the negligence of the servants of the company in extricating them when caught in bridges or trestles; [72] but the company is not absolutely liable for all injuries which would not have occurred had a fence been constructed, but only for such as are the natural and proximate result of its neglect to do so.[73] Where fences are constructed the company will be liable for injuries to animals not caused by the operation of its trains but by the fence itself owing to its dangerous or defective structure or condition.[74]

b. At What Places Required — (i) In General. In some cases the statutes requiring fencing expressly except certain places from their operation; [75] but in the absence of such express provision the statutes will be given a reasonable construction according to their object and intention,[76] and an exception will be implied as to places where the maintenance of fences or cattle-guards would be unlawful,[77] would interfere with the necessities and convenience of the public in travel or in transacting business with the railroad,[78] would unreasonably interfere with the railroad company in the proper use of its own property or in trans-ble for damages occasioned by failure to fence either where the damage is caused by the company's agents, engines, or cars, or by stock escaping from the adjoining lands; and under the latter provision a landowner may recover for stock that escape and are lost if such loss was the proximate consequence of the failure of the company to construct or maintain fences as required by the statute. In Missouri there is a statute which expressly provides that where animals go upon a railroad track where it is not properly fenced and are frightened by any passing locomotive or train on the road and are injured by running into fences or other obstructions, the company shall be liable. Henson v. Williamsville, etc., R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 595, 85 S. W. 597, holding, however, that a "speeder" or contrivance similar to a handcar except that it is propelled by a gasoline engine, is not a "locomotive" within the application of the statute, and that the railroad company will not be liable for injuries to stock frightened thereby.

72. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Edwards, 20 Kan. 531, holding that such an injury is an injury done "in operating" the road, within the application of the statute making railroad companies liable for injuries so done to stock where their roads are not fenced.

acting its business with the public,[79] or would endanger the lives of its employees engaged in switching or operating its trains; [80] or in other words wherever, in view of these considerations, the maintenance of a fence would be unreasonable or improper,[81] although the company might have a legal right to do so.[82] But the interest and convenience of the public and not that of the railroad company is the controlling consideration,[83] and the company will not be relieved from fencing merely on the ground that it would be inconvenient to the company,[84] or that the construction of a fence would be difficult [85] or expensive.[86] Where railroad companies are required by law to fence their roads it is not the province or policy of the courts to create exceptions to the rule,[87] and they will not do so except in view of some paramount public interest or paramount duty on the part of the company which would render the maintenance of fences improper,[88] and in the absence of such considerations if the company has a right to fence and fails to do so it will be liable for any injury to animals occasioned thereby.[89] At places where the company is not obliged to fence it is not required to maintain cattle-guards,[90] but at the limits of such places where the duty of fencing begins they must be constructed to prevent animals from passing from such unfenced places upon the tracks beyond.[91] The Kentucky statute requires railroad companies to construct cattle-guards at all terminal points of fences constructed along their lines, except where such lines are not required to be fenced on both sides, and at public crossings.[92] Where a road crosses a watercourse it is sufficient if the fences are constructed upon either side up to and connected with the bridge, trestle, or culvert, so as to prevent animals from going upon the track, and it is not necessary to fence across the stream so as to prevent their escape under the track from an adjoining inclosure.[93]

(II) CITIES, TOWNS, AND VILLAGES — (A) In General. In some cases the statutes requiring fencing expressly except where the road runs through a city, town, or village,[94] but in the absence of such provision railroad companies are not relieved from fencing merely because the road is within the limits of a city, town, or village,[95] but must fence within such limits at all places where the main-

Construction of statute.— The "terminal points" referred to in the statute are not points where division fences of property-owners cross or come up to the right of way, but terminal points of the fences running parallel with the road (McKee v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 43 S. W. 241, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1270); but the statute applies to all terminal points in such lateral fences and not merely where they terminate at public or private crossings (Parish v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 78 S. The word "town" in a statute relating to fencing and operating railroads means a collection of houses larger than a village and smaller than a city, and has no reference to territory incorporated as a town under the township organization laws. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Green, 65 Ill. App. 414.

What constitutes a village.—Any small assembly of houses for dwellings or business or both, in the country, constitutes a village whether they are situated upon regularly laid out streets and alleys or not (Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Spangler, 71 Ill. 568; Illinois, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, 27 Ill. 48); but it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the houses compose the village and that an injury occurring beyond them was outside of the village limits (Ewing v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 72 Ill. 25).

A place, although outside of the platted limits of a village, is within the application of the exception if it is open public ground or so used by the public as practically to constitute it a part of the village. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Chapin, 66 Ill. 504, holding that where a railroad switch is located outside of the limits of a village but so located that it could not be reached by teams in loading and unloading if a fence were constructed there, the railroad company will not be liable for failing to do so.

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Railroads," §§ 1436, 1437.

In Missouri there are two separate statutes, the first not expressly requiring railroad companies to fence at any place, but making them liable for injuries to stock without proof of negligence where their roads are not fenced, and the second expressly requiring them to fence where their roads pass through, along, or adjoining inclosed or cultivated fields or uninclosed lands (Edwards v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 66 Mo. 567); and in an action brought under the latter statute there can be no recovery for failure to fence where the road passes through a city, town, or village (Rhea v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 84 Mo. 345; Elliott v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 66 Mo. 683); but the exception does not apply where the road is located along the edge of a town and neither the streets nor limits of the town tenance of a fence would not be unlawful or an unreasonable or improper interference with the operation of the road or the necessities and convenience of the public.[96] It has been held that railroad companies need not fence in portions of towns or cities where their tracks are intersected and crossed by streets and alleys;[97] but on the contrary it has been held that where the road runs along or across vacant lots they must fence between the streets,[98] and construct cattle-guards at the crossings;[99] and it is uniformly held that they must fence at places within the corporate limits where there are no intersecting streets and alleys,[1] or at places which are used for agricultural purposes,[2] or are located on the outskirts of the town where the land is open and not occupied with buildings.[3]

(B) Streets and Crossings.[4] A railroad company is not required to fence its tracks at the crossing of a street,[5] as the fence would constitute an unlawful obstruction,[6] and this rule applies although the street has not been opened to public travel,[7] or is not in a condition to be used except by persons on foot;[8] nor for the same reason is a railroad company required to fence its tracks where they run along instead of across a street, and are subject to the public easement;[9] but extend beyond it (Kirkland v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 82 Mo. 466; Brandenburg v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 44 Mo. App. 224); and under the former statute an action may be maintained for injuries sustained within such limits at places where the company has a right to fence and fails to do so (Young v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 79 Mo. 336; Wymore v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 79 Mo. 247).

In Washington it is held that the statute of 1893 providing that, in actions for injuries to stock by collision with moving trains, the failure of a railroad company to fence its track shall be prima facie evidence of negligence does not apply to tracks in incorporated towns. Under the New York statute of 1892, requiring every railroad company to fence the sides of its road to keep out cattle, horses, sheep, etc., but declaring that no railroad need be fenced "when not necessary to prevent horses, cattle, sheep and hogs from going upon its track from the adjoining lands," a railroad company is not bound to fence its right of way within the city of New York to keep out the horses pastured on certain city blocks, where a public highway intervenes between such property and the railroad's right of way. the rights of the public extend no further than the street, and the fact that streets or alleys abut on and terminate at a railroad track is no objection to fencing.[10] The rule requiring the construction of cattle-guards at public crossings applies to street crossings,[11] except where the crossing is within an open space, such as the depot grounds, which is not required to be fenced,[12] or where the track runs along one street which is crossed by other streets so that cattle-guards would form an obstruction to travel.[13]

(III) STATIONS, SWITCH-YARDS, AND DEPOT GROUNDS — (A) In General. A railroad company is not required to fence such grounds at its depots or stations as the necessities or convenience of the public and the proper conduct of the business or the road at such places require to be left open and unobstructed.[14] In

The number of passengers or amount of freight received or delivered is not decisive of the duty to fence, and the company is not obliged to do so if the place is a station to which tickets are sold and where freight and passengers are received and discharged, although so used only at certain seasons and for a small portion of the year. one jurisdiction at least the statute expressly excepts depot grounds,[15] but in the absence of such provision this exception will be implied from the necessities of the case.[16] At station grounds which may be left unfenced the company is not obliged to build a fence, which incloses no part of the road, between the station grounds and the land of an adjoining owner.[17]

(B) Character of Place and Business Transacted. In order to constitute a point upon a railroad a station within the application of the rule exempting railroad companies from the duty of fencing at stations, it is not necessary to have a depot and station agent there, but the receipt and discharge of freight and passengers and the maintenance of a platform are sufficient,[18] and so the exception has been held to apply to a mere flag station,[19] notwithstanding the railroad company did not have a building or keep an agent at such station.[20] The exemption from the duty of fencing at depots and station grounds applies also to approaches to such grounds which could not be fenced without inconvenience to the public,[21] such as switches, sidings, and platforms where freight or passengers are received and discharged;[22] grounds necessary for access by the public and convenience of shipment about an adjacent mill,[23] hay press,[24] storage house, or grain elevator;[25] lots used for storing, loading, and unloading lumber;[26] and grounds in the immediate vicinity of the company's engine house or machine

What is essential to constitute a given place a station is a question depending largely upon the facts of each case. It does not depend upon an office and agent being maintained but rather upon the business done, not with two or three individuals or firms but with the public, and whether trains stop regularly or on signal to receive and discharge passengers and freight, and whether inducements are held out and accommodations afforded to the public to enter into reciprocal business relations. Place not exempt as station.— Where a railroad company kept in a pasture of thirty sections across which its road ran a station consisting of its section-house, stock-yards, side-tracks, and switch-yard, used for shipping cattle and other business, but without an agent or depot, it was held not to be a station (Southern Kansas R. Co. v. McKay, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 479); and a point where passengers are permitted to get on and off but from and to which no tickets are sold and at which freight is sometimes thrown off but there is no agent to take charge of it is not a station (Duncan v. St. Louis, etc., R. (c) Extent and Limits of Grounds. It is not necessary that a railroad company should make any formal separation or dedication of its station grounds or put up notices as to their limits; [33] nor, on the other hand, can the company, by purchasing or appropriating any particular amount of ground, acquire the right to leave unfenced any more than may be necessary for the purposes of the public and the business there transacted.[34] The exemption from the duty of fencing extends to whatever limits the public necessities and convenience and the proper conduct of the business there transacted require; [35] but this necessity is also the limit of the exception,[33] and is not affected by the mere convenience of the company.[37] So if a greater amount of ground than necessary is left unfenced and animals are injured thereon, the company will be liable,[38] notwithstanding such grounds were in fact used by the railroad company.[39]

(D) Cattle-Guards. The same principle that excuses a railroad company from fencing at stations and depot grounds applies to the maintenance of cattle-guards.[40] So it is not necessary to construct cattle-guards where a street or highway crosses the track within such grounds,[41] where they would inconvenience the public in reaching the station or transacting business with the railroad company,[42] or where they would endanger the lives of the company's employees engaged in switching, coupling, or operating its trains;[43] but the company must maintain cattle-guards

Only so much as is reasonably necessary for the transaction of the business at the depot should be left open. Vanderworker v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 51 Mo. App. 166.

Where a hotel is located near a depot the fact that an open space between the hotel and the depot, which is not properly a part of the depot grounds, is sometimes used by passengers in going to and from the hotel is not sufficient to relieve the company from the duty to fence it. Dixon v. New York Cent. R. Co., 4 N. Y. Suppl. 296.

Where it is fairly debatable under the evidence whether it was necessary for the railroad company to leave unfenced a part of its road near a depot in a town to avoid danger to its employees and for the safe and convenient transaction of its business with the public, it cannot be held as a matter of law that the company is relieved from its obligation to fence that part of the road. Public policy requires in consideration of the safety to life and limb of employees who are compelled to pass over the tracks on foot in coupling cars, turning switches, and other duties, both in the daytime and at night, and often in the most hurried manner, that there shall be no pitfalls or cattle-guards on the tracks or grounds over which they are required to pass in the performance of their duties. (iv) Improved, Inclosed, Unimproved, and Uninclosed Lands. Where the statute merely requires in general terms that railroad companies must fence their tracks, they must fence along their tracks where the road passes through inclosed as well as uninclosed land.[47] In some cases the statutes expressly require railroad companies to fence where the road passes through "enclosed or improved and," [48] "lands owned and settled or occupied by private owners," [49] "private property or enclosed land in the actual possession of another," [50] or through, along, or adjoining "inclosed or cultivated fields, or uninclosed prairie lands." "Improved" is not a technical word having a precise legal meaning but may mean land that is occupied. As generally understood "improved land" is that which is occupied or made better by care or cultivation or which is employed for advantage. The statute requiring railroads to be fenced where they run through such lands applies to land constituting part of a village lot appurtenant to a dwelling-house and barn, although no part of it is cultivated (Osborne v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 87 Me. 303, 32 Atl. 902), and to land used partly as a mill yard and which is also mowed and occasionally used for grazing (Wilder v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 65 Me. 332, 20 Am. Rep. 698).

Lands neither improved nor inclosed, such as lands constituting uninclosed commons, are not within the application of the statute. Perkins v. Eastern R. Co., 29 Me. 307, 50 Am. Dec. 589.

The Virginia statute formerly required fencing where the road passes "through all enclosed lands or lots," but was amended in 1898 by striking out the words quoted, and the requirement now applies to all places except public crossings, depot grounds, etc., which are expressly excepted by a subsequent section of the statute Sanger v. Chesapeake, etc., R. In Kentucky the duty of a railroad company under the statute of 1903 to construct a fence half the distance of the division line between the right of way and the land of an adjoining owner, when the landowner has constructed a fence for the other half, is limited by sections 1791, 1792, 1795, 1784, so that the land must be improved, or if unimproved, must be inclosed on the other three sides, and the company must be notified in writing to construct its fence. 50. Johnson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 7 Ida. 355, 63 Pac. 112, 53 L. R. A. 744, holding that a homestead entry after it is entered is private property within the meaning of the statute.

It is not necessary that the private property should be fenced by the owner thereof in order to make it the duty of the railroad company to fence its tracks where the railroad passes through or along such land. Patrie v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 6 Ida. 448, 56 Pac. 82.

if the injury was on land uninclosed and also prairie land;[53] but the provision does not apply to any uninclosed land except prairie land,[54] and uninclosed timber land from which the timber has been cleared off is not prairie land within the application of the statute.[55] Lands, in order to be "inclosed," need not be inclosed by lawful fences.[56] Under some of the statutes it is only where the adjoining lands have been inclosed upon the other three sides that the railroad company is required to complete the inclosure by fencing along its right of way.[57]

(v) HIGHWAYS — (A) In General. A railroad company is not required to fence its road where it crosses a public highway,[58] whether a public highway de facto or de jure,[59] or to construct gates or other obstructions at such crossings to prevent animals from going upon the crossing;[60] but the exception does not apply to private ways.[61] Where the crossing is a public highway and not required to be fenced the company must, in order to prevent animals from passing from the highway along the railroad track, construct and maintain suitable cattle-guards and wing fences,[62] which must be located at the point of intersection and as near as practicable to the highway,[63] otherwise they add to rather than diminish the

At an oblique crossing where the railroad and highway form an acute angle, it is not sufficient to fence along the right of way to where it first intersects the highway and place a cattle-guard opposite this point, thus leaving a part of the track on either side of the highway unprotected, but in such cases the company must fence along the line of the highway to where it intersects the track and construct the cattle-guards at this point. Andre v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 30 Iowa 107. See also Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Shelly, 25 Ill. App. 141.

A highway acquired by user only extends no further than it has been used, and if the railroad company constructs its cattle-guards and wing fences on the assumption that it occupies the wider space prescribed for high-danger,[64] and if located unnecessarily distant from the highway the company will be liable for animals injured upon the intervening space.[65] If, however, an animal goes upon the track at the crossing and is injured upon the crossing itself, the absence of fences or cattle-guards cannot affect the case and will not render the company liable.[66]

(B) Character and Establishment of Highway. The rule that railroad companies are not required to fence their roads at public crossings applies to highways de facto as well as to highways de jure.[67] So if a crossing is used and traveled by the public generally as a highway the company need not fence at the crossing, although it is not a regularly laid out and established highway,[68] and not worked or improved by the county,[69] or the route traveled is outside of the survey or line of the highway as established by the county authorities;[70] nor, on the other hand, need the railroad company maintain fences where the road crosses a strip of land which has been legally dedicated to the public as a highway, although it has not been reduced to actual use by the public;[71] but wherever the crossing is such that it is not required to be fenced the company must construct cattle-guards to prevent animals from passing from the intersecting highway on either side along the tracks,[72] and whenever a crossing is abandoned and ceases to be a public highway the company must then construct fences at that point.[73]

runs parallel with and adjoining a public highway does not exempt the company from its statutory duty to fence,[74] but on the contrary rather increases the necessity;[75] nor does the fact that the right of way overlaps the highway affect this duty if there is sufficient room for constructing a fence upon the right of way between the highway and the tracks;[78] but the company is not obliged to fence if the location of the railroad with reference to the highway is such that a fence cannot be constructed without obstructing the latter,[77] unless the use of the highway as such has been abandoned by the public.[78] Where railroad companies are not required by law to construct fences, it is not negligence for them not to construct fences between their tracks and highways running parallel with and in close proximity thereto.[79]

(VI) FENCES ALREADY CONSTRUCTED. It has been held that a railroad company which fails to fence its tracks as required by law is liable for stock killed upon the road, although a good and sufficient fence is maintained by the adjoining landowner along the road;[80] but on the contrary it has been held that it is immaterial who constructs the fences so long as they are sufficient,[81] and that if an adjoining owner voluntarily constructs and maintains such a fence the company is not liable because it did not construct another fence along the same line.[82] It will still, however, be the duty of the company to see that the fence is kept in repair and to restore it if removed by the owner,[83] and the company will be liable in the absence of any evidence as to the character and sufficiency of the fences maintained by the adjoining owners.[84] Where the road runs through a field or pasture which is fenced the company must still fence on each side of its right of way through such field.[85]

(VII) FENCES ON BOTH SIDES OF TRACK. Ordinarily where railroads are required to be fenced they must be fenced on both sides of the track;[86] but if from the character or use of the adjoining premises on one side the company is not required to fence upon that side, it has been held that it need not fence upon the opposite side.[87] A statute requiring railroad companies to fence "either or both" sides of their property does not contemplate that the matter shall be optional with the railroad company but means either or both sides as the circumstances may demand.[88]

(VIII) RAILROADS ADJOINING LANDS OF COMPANY OR TRACKS OF OTHER RAILROAD. Where a railroad company owns land adjoining its road it must fence between its own land and the track,[89] except where the statutes requiring fences are construed as being for the benefit of adjoining owners only.[90] Where two railroads run parallel with each other neither can rely upon the duty of the other but each must see that its own road is properly fenced;[91] and where no fence is constructed between the tracks the company upon whose road an animal is injured cannot avoid liability on the ground that the animal got upon its road by crossing the unfenced tracks of the other road;[92] but in such case the company

The fact that the tracks are too close together to permit the construction of a fence between them without endangering the safety of passengers or railroad employees does not relieve the liability of the company, since having voluntarily located its tracks in this manner it cannot set up its own voluntary act as an excuse for neglecting a statutory duty. Kelver v. New York, etc., R. Co., 126 N. Y. 365, 27 N. E. 553.

If the statute is only for the benefit of adjoining landowners, as some of the statutes are construed to be (see supra, X, H, 4, a, (VIII)), a railroad company will not be liable for an animal injured upon its track because of a failure to fence between its track and the parallel track of another company, if the animal came upon the track where it was injured by crossing the track of the other railroad from lands beyond, since by reason of the intervening track the owner of the lands from which the animal came was not an owner of lands adjoining the road where it was injured. Douglass v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 5 Ont. App. 585.

over whose tracks the animal first entered will not be liable for the injury occurring upon the other road.[93] Where two railroads intersect and the companies are required to fence their tracks, each company must construct cattle-guards and wing fences at the crossing.[94]

c. Sufficiency, Defects, and Repairs — (I) SUFFICIENCY — (A) Of Fences. In some cases the statutes requiring fencing expressly prescribe the height and character of the fence,[95] while others merely require that the fence shall be good and sufficient,[96] legal and sufficient,[97] suitable,[98] lawful,[99] or suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle, horses, sheep, and hogs from getting upon the railroad.[1] It has been held that a statute requiring a good and sufficient fence should be construed as referring to the standard established by the general fence laws,[2] but it has also been held that a fence of this character may not be sufficient as a railroad fence;[3] and on the other hand that a railroad fence may in some places be "suitable," although not of the character prescribed for adjoining proprietors of improved land.[4] The fence need not be such as to constitute an impassable barrier to all stock without regard to how breachy or vicious they may be,[5] but need only be such as is reasonably sufficient to prevent animals from going upon the track;[6] but unless reasonably sufficient for this purpose the company will be liable for animals injured in consequence.[7] A wire fence properly constructed

Repairing fence — Iowa statute.—The Iowa statute of 1888 expressly prescribing the height and character of fences to be constructed by railroad companies "which have not already erected a lawful fence," and providing that other companies when they rebuild or repair their fences shall build them as provided by that act, applies only to such repairs as constitute a virtual rebuilding of a portion of the fence and which involve the height and structure of the fence and not to the mere replacing of a defective board or boards or nailing fast boards that have become loose. is sufficient; [8] but, although sufficient to turn stock, the fence must not be of such a character as of itself to be a source of danger,[9] and a barbed wire fence may or may not be a proper fence according to the circumstances.[10] So also a steep bluff, hedge, ditch, wall, or the like may constitute a lawful fence if of equal security with a lawful fence as defined by statute; [11] but such natural obstructions must be sufficient to serve the purposes of a fence,[12] and must be properly connected with the railroad fences where they begin and terminate.[13] The fence must not be so constructed as to form a cul de sac or trap into which animals are liable to wander and become injured.[14]

Cattle-guards.— Where a railroad company is not required to construct cattle-guards to prevent animals from going upon the track, it will not be liable for failing to keep cattle-guards which it may have constructed in repair. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Douglass, 152 Ala. 197, 44 So. 677.

A contrary doctrine has, however, been maintained upon the ground that if a railroad company voluntarily constructs a fence when under no legal obligation to do so, it must not by its act increase the danger to animals, and that such danger is increased if the fence is allowed to become defective

no greater degree of care is required to avoid injury to such animals than would otherwise be necessary to avoid liability;[26] but on the contrary it has been held with regard to particular places, such as station grounds which are not within the application of the statutes, that if the company constructs fences or cattle-guards at such places it is its duty to keep them in a proper state of repair.[27] If required by law to construct fences it is as much their duty to maintain and repair as to construct them in the first instance, and they will be held equally liable for injuries to animals occasioned by their failure to do so;[28] and this rule applies no matter by whom the fence was originally built,[29] as in the case of fences already constructed by adjoining owners and adopted by the railroad company,[30] and notwithstanding the adjoining owner has been accustomed voluntarily to keep the fences in repair.[31]

The fence is not a partition fence, and an adjoining owner is, in the absence of statute, under no obligation to assist in keeping the fence in repair; nor will such obligation arise out of a mere permission given by the railroad company to an adjoining owner to connect his other fences with the railroad fence. Busby v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 81 Mo. 43.

Although a fence constructed by the railroad company is not on the line of the right of way but upon the land of an adjoining owner, if it has been maintained and treated by the company as a part of that which the law requires it to build, it cannot allow it to get out of repair without notice to the landowner that it will no longer maintain and repair it. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Guertin, 115 Ill. 466, 4 N. E. 507.

Where a railroad company maintains two parallel fences on the same side of its road, the one nearest the track being a continuous fence and the other terminating at a highway and leaving a lane between them open at the highway, the fence nearest the track is the railroad fence, and the company will be liable for injury to an animal passing from the open lane through a defect in such fence upon the track. Dailey v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 121 Iowa 254, 96 N. W. 778.

No exception can be made on the ground that it is the winter season when cattle are not accustomed to run at large, or that during previous winters the company had been accustomed to leave openings in the fence for convenience in hauling wood to the railroad. Laude v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 33 Wis. 640.

In Ohio under the statute of 1859 adjoining landowners were required to assist in keeping the railroad fences in repair as in the case of division fences (Sandusky, etc., R. Co. v. Sloan, 27 Ohio St. 341); but under the statute of 1874 the duty rests entirely upon the railroad company (Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Scudder, 40 Ohio St. 173).

(B) Care Required and Extent of Liability. Where railroad companies are required to construct fences they must use reasonable care and diligence to discover any defects that may occur therein,[32] and to maintain them in a safe and proper condition.[33] They are not, however, absolute insurers of the fences which they are required to build,[34] or absolutely liable for injuries to animals occasioned by defects occurring therein;[35] but where fences such as the law requires have been constructed they are only bound to use reasonable care and diligence in maintaining them and in discovering and repairing defects subsequently occurring.[36] The terms "ordinary" or "reasonable" care are, however, in such cases to be applied in view of the extra hazard and the public duty involved,[37] and mean a higher degree of care than an ordinarily careful landowner would be expected to exercise in keeping up his own fences,[38] but it is not necessary that a patrol should at all times be maintained along the road to see the condition of the fences.[39]

(C) Knowledge of Defect and Opportunity to Repair. Where fences such as the law requires have been constructed a railroad company will not be liable for injuries to animals due to defects subsequently occurring therein, unless it had either actual or constructive notice of the defect and an opportunity to repair it.[40]

To render the company liable there must be either actual or constructive notice of the defect and a failure to repair within a reasonable time after notice of the defect or after the company should, in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, have known of it. Heaston v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 18

The company is entitled to a reasonable time to discover the defect,[41] and to make the necessary repairs.[42] The notice of the defect, however, may be either actual or constructive,[43] and the company will be liable where by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence it could have known of the defect,[44] or if it has existed for such a length of time prior to the accident that it ought to have been discovered,[45] or if the necessary repairs are not made within a reasonable time after notice of the defect,[46] or after the company should, by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, have known of it.[47] If the fence as originally constructed was defective it is not necessary to show any knowledge on the part of the company of the defect in order to render the company liable.[48]

(D) Defects Caused by Third Persons. Where a railroad company has constructed sufficient fences, and animals are injured by reason of a breach therein, made by persons not in the employ or under the control of the company and without its knowledge or authority, the company will not be liable in the absence of any negligence in failing to discover and repair the defect within a reasonable time;[49] but, although the defect was so caused, the company will be liable if it is not repaired within a reasonable time.[50]

(E) Defects Caused by Fire, Wind, or Storms. Where a proper fence is constructed a railroad company will not be liable if not negligent in discovering and repairing the defect for injuries due to defects therein caused by fire,[51] or wind storms;[52] but it will be liable if the defect is not repaired within a reasonable time,[53] unless it was the duty of the adjoining landowner to repair it.[54] Railroad companies are not required to build their fences so high that the fall or drift of snow will never cover them,[55] nor are they required to remove the snow and drifts from their fences so as to prevent animals passing over them;[56] but it is held in most jurisdictions that railroad companies must exercise reasonable care and diligence to keep their cattle-guards free from accumulations of ice and snow which would render them ineffective,[57] and that they will be liable for injuries to animals due to a failure to remove such accumulations within a reasonable time.[58]

But the railroad company is entitled to a reasonable time, and where there is an unusual storm and the company uses due diligence to clear its tracks as soon as possible, and animals are injured before it can be done, the company will not be liable. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kennedy, 22 Ill. App. 308.

The test of liability is not whether the cattle-guards are clear of snow and ice, but whether in their maintenance the company has been negligent, which must be determined by the jury under all the circumstances of the case, taking into consideration the location of the road, position and condition of the cattle-guard, the number of animals probably at large, prevailing storms, condition of the weather, and all other facts bearing upon the question. Wait v. Bennington, etc., R. Co., 61 Vt. 268, 17 Atl. 284.

In Minnesota it is held that except under exceptional and extraordinary circumstances, reasonable care and diligence do not require a railroad company to remove the natural accumulations of snow and ice from its cattle-guards (Stacey v. Winona, etc., R. St. Rep. 36), the decisions being based upon the ground that in that state the winters are so severe that cattle are not permitted to run at large, and the snows are so frequent that the work of removal would be almost impracticable, so that the burden would be greatly disproportionate to any benefits derived from its performance and not subservient to any public interest (Blais v. Minneapolis, etc., R. to maintain, he must take it as he finds it and cannot recover for injuries to his animals due to the condition of the crossing.[61]

b. Duty to Construct. The exemption from the duty of fencing at the crossing of public highways does not apply to private ways and farm crossings,[62] and such places if not fenced across must be otherwise adequately protected.[63] It has been said that the company may determine whether this protection shall consist of gates or other structures provided the protection afforded is reasonable; [64] but it is ordinarily required that at such crossings suitable gates or bars shall be constructed,[65] and it has been held that cattle-guards alone are not sufficient; [66] and if neither gates or bars nor cattle-guards are maintained the company is clearly liable.[67] A railroad company will not, however, be liable for failing to construct gates or bars as to any landowner who forbids their construction,[68] or who requests or consents to an open crossing,[69] or agrees to construct the gates himself,[70] although such a request or agreement will not affect its liability with respect to third

c. Sufficiency, Defects, and Repairs. As affecting the duties and liabilities of railroad companies with regard to fencing, the gates or bars at private or farm crossings constitute a part of the fence,[73] and must be sufficient to serve the purposes of such a fence as they are required to construct and maintain.[74] The gates must be provided with suitable and sufficient fastenings to keep them securely closed,[75] and the bars must not only be of sufficient strength but so arranged as not easily to be displaced or thrown down by stock.[76] A gate is not necessarily improperly constructed because hung so as to open toward the right of way,[77] or constructed as a sliding gate instead of being hung on hinges,[78] or because the

Although not obliged to construct a crossing yet if the railroad company undertakes either at the request of the landowner or upon its own motion to do so and constructs gates, cattle-guards, and wing fences, it must maintain them in sufficient repair to accomplish the purpose for which they were intended. The rule as to the repairing of defective gates is that a railroad company will not be liable for injuries to stock owing to the fact that the gates at a private crossing have become defective by decay, unless it had actual notice of the defects, or ought, in the exercise of reasonable care, to have had such notice, and a sufficient time has elapsed to repair them. Wirstlin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 124 Iowa 170, 99 N. W. 697.

to do so;[86] but the statute does not affect or impair any existing contract rights between the company and a landowner as to crossings already constructed.[87] It is also the duty of the railroad company to keep the crossing itself in a safe and proper state of repair.[88]

d. Duty to Keep Gates and Bars Closed. In the absence of statute or agreement to the contrary a railroad company must ordinarily exercise reasonable care to see that the gates or bars at private or farm crossings are kept closed,[89] the duty being included in that of maintaining a sufficient fence of which the gates or bars constitute a part.[90] If the crossing is also used by the railroad company or its customers the company will be liable for injuries due to the gate being left open through the negligence of its servants [91] or persons transacting business with the company;[92] but in other cases only reasonable care on the part of the railroad company is required,[93] and if the gates or bars are properly constructed

Although the animal first entered where the railroad company had failed to fence, as required by statute, if it subsequently leaves the track and after crossing the lands of other persons goes upon the track a second time through a gate at a farm crossing, which it was the duty of the owner of the crossing to keep closed, the entries will be regarded as separate and distinct and the railroad company will not be liable to the owner of the animal in the absence of negligence in the operation of the train. The reason for a different rule in the case of public and private ways is that the former

to be a sufficient protection to prevent animals from going upon the tracks at such places.[8]

f. Gates or Openings at Places Other Than Farm Crossings. The statutes requiring fencing do not preclude the use of gates or bars at places other than farm crossings, and the company has a right to permit them or to construct them itself if it shall deem it advisable to do so;[9] but they must be so constructed and maintained as to serve the purposes of a fence,[10] and the company must see that they are kept closed.[11] If the railroad company for its own purposes makes an opening in the fence through which animals enter and are injured, it will be liable,[12] and if it knowingly permits others to make or use openings in the fence it will be liable to third persons whose animals enter through such openings and are injured,[13] but not to the person by whom or for whose use and convenience the opening was made or permitted,[14] unless the railroad company had expressly agreed to construct a gate at such opening and failed to do so within a reasonable time.[15]

g. Liability of Owner of Crossing to Owner of Animal Injured. As to third persons the duty of maintaining gates and bars and keeping them closed rests primarily upon the railroad company, and it will not as a matter of law be relieved from liability merely because they were left open by the landowner or persons cannot be fenced across or obstructed and therefore cattle-guards are necessary, but at the latter the gates or bars which constitute a part of the fence are a sufficient protection. Sather v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 40 Minn. 91, 41 N. W. 458.

Statutes are construed as applying only to public crossings, and not to private ways or farm crossings, which in terms require the construction of cattle-guards at "all wagon crossings" (Sather v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 40 Minn. 91, 41 N. W. 458), "all railroad crossings" (Omaha, etc., R. Co. v. Severin, 30 Nebr. 318, 46 N. W. 842), or "all road crossings" (Brooks v. New York, etc., R. Co., 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 594).

In Indiana, although by the act of 1885 the duty of keeping gates and bars at farm crossings closed is expressly imposed upon the owner of the crossing, and the railroad company relieved from liability in case of his failure to do so, it is still unnecessary for the company to maintain cattle-guards at such crossings. Pennsylvania Co. v. Spaulding, 112 Ind. 47, 13 N. E. 268.

Gates not on right of way.— Where certain coal lands abutted on a right of way and the company instead of fencing between this land and the railroad ran its fence around the coal lands and put in a gate for the use of the coal company, through which an animal entered and passed upon the track where it was injured, it was held that the company was not liable for failing to keep the gate closed, but that plaintiff's cause of action, if any, must be based upon the failure of the company to fence its right of way at the place where the animal entered upon the track. But if the animal entered at a different opening from that used by plaintiff and which the railroad company should have kept closed, the fact that there was an opening in the immediate vicinity which was used by plaintiff and through which his animals could have entered and come upon the track will not affect the liability of the company. Accola v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 70 Iowa 185, 30 N. W. 503.

15. McCoy v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 94 Cal. 568, 29 Pac. 1110, holding that if the railroad company expressly agrees to construct a gate at an opening made by the landowner for his own use it must do so within a reasonable time or be liable in the same manner as if it had left the opening without the landowner's consent when it constructed the fence.

other than the employees of the company;[16] but if the gates are properly constructed and without any fault on the part of the railroad company the owner of the crossing wilfully leaves them open, by reason of which the animals of a third person rightfully upon such premises are injured, he will be liable to the owner of the animal injured.[17] Under a statute expressly requiring the owner of the crossing to maintain the gates or bars and relieving the railroad company from any liability by reason of his failure to do so, the landowner is not liable to the owner of animals which were wrongfully upon his premises.[18]

h. Care and Liability as to Animals On or Near Crossing. In approaching private or farm crossings those in charge of the train must keep a lookout to avoid injury to animals which might be lawfully upon the crossing;[19] but the company is not required to subordinate the operation of its road to the landowner's privilege of a crossing, and is not required to slow up or stop its trains in order to ascertain if animals are upon or near the crossing.[20]

6. Injury by Running on Road-Bed, Bridges, or Trestles — a. In General.[21] In the absence of statute a railroad company is not required to floor bridges or trestles or to erect railings or other safeguards at dangerous places to prevent accidents to animals which might wander upon the right of way,[22] and apart from any liability imposed by statutes requiring fencing will not, in the absence of negligence in the operation of its trains or on the part of its servants, be liable for injuries due to animals going upon bridges or trestles,[23] or falling into pitfalls upon its property.[24]

b. Negligence in Extricating Animals. Where animals are injured in being extricated from bridges and trestles, if the action is based upon the neglect of the railroad company to fence its track the liability will depend upon whether under the particular statute an actual collision between the train and animal is necessary to render the company liable.[25] In an action not based upon these statutes plaintiff may recover if the injury was due to negligence on the part of the company's servants;[26] but the company will not be liable if reasonable care and diligence was used, although by extraordinary diligence and the use of different means it might have been possible to extricate the animal without injury.[27]

7. Signals, Lookouts, Lights, and Obstructions of View — a. Duty to Give Signals. It has been held that statutes requiring the giving of signals by blowing a whistle or ringing a bell on approaching crossings are intended only as a warning to persons and have no application to unattended animals;[28] but by the weight of authority these signals are intended as a protection to animals as well as to persons,[29] and if not given the railroad company will be liable for any injuries to animals occasioned thereby,[30] without regard to the care exercised to prevent the injury after the animal was discovered.[31] The statutes are, however, intended only for the protection of persons and property at the crossing, and a failure to give a crossing signal will not render the company liable for animals injured if not at the crossing;[32] nor do the statutes apply to private or farm crossings,[33] or to trespassing animals,[34] or to injuries done by cars other than those drawn by an engine and under the control of an engineer.[35] If the statute requires the ringing of the bell "or" blowing of the whistle, either is sufficient, and the company will not be liable unless it is shown that both were omitted.[36] Even where crossing signals are not required by statute, ordinary care may under some circumstances require that they should be given,[37] or if required by statute that they should be given at a greater distance from the crossing than the statute provides.[38] So also a failure to give signals as a warning of the approach of trains at a place where men and teams are known to be at work about the track, while not negligence per se, may be negligence as matter of fact,[39] or under the circumstances of the particular case it may be negligence to back a train without giving a warning signal.[40]

b. Duty to Keep Lookout. Except where animals are wrongfully upon the right of way, it is as much the duty of a railroad company to exercise ordinary care in discovering their presence as in avoiding injury after they are discovered.[41] Those in charge of the train must keep a lookout for stock on or near the track, and if they fail to do so and animals are injured which could have been discovered in time to avoid the injury the company will be liable,[42] without regard to the

The Arkansas statute of 1891 requiring a "constant lookout," but not providing who shall keep the lookout, is construed as intending the engineer or fireman, but not both, except at places where the engineer cannot see the track from his side of the engine, in which case the fireman must keep a lookout from the other side. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Russell, 62 Ark. 182, 34 S. W. 1059.

In Tennessee the statute of 1855 was construed as requiring some person whose undivided duty it was to be always on the lookout (Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Stone, 7 Heisk. 468).

A lookout must be kept for animals near as well as directly on the track notwithstanding the statute in terms relates to persons and property "upon the track." St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Russell, 64 Ark. 236, 41 S. W. 807.

Where the fireman is necessarily engaged in supplying the engine with fuel and the train rounds a curve so that the boiler and smoke-stack obstruct the view of the engineer from his side of the engine, the company will not be liable for injury to an animal because the fireman was not keeping a lookout or because no third employee was kept upon the engine to maintain a lookout in such cases. tinuous as such other duties will permit,[47] and it is not sufficient that the engineer was on the lookout at the time of the accident, if by proper care the animal could have been discovered sooner and in time to avoid the injury;[48] but a failure to keep a constant lookout even under a statute so requiring will not render the company liable if a proper lookout was maintained during the time affecting the particular injury complained of.[49] In the case of trespassing animals, the only duty of a railroad company is to avoid injuring them after they are discovered, and it is not necessary to keep a lookout for them;[50] and the fact that the injury occurs upon the crossing of a public highway in no way affects the application of the rule if the animal was wrongfully upon the highway.[51] Railroad companies also have a right to presume that animals will not be upon the track and so need not keep a lookout for them in localities where it is unlawful for them to run at large,[52] and where their roads are properly fenced as required by law,[53] except at places such as public crossings and station grounds, which are not required to be fenced;[54] and whenever animals are without the fault of the railroad company at places where they have no right to be and the company has no reason to antici-

e. Lights on Locomotive or Cars. A railroad company has an unqualified right to carry a headlight on its locomotives whenever necessary or even conducive to the safety of the train and its passengers, although its effect may be to increase rather than diminish the danger to animals on the track;[56] and the company must in operating trains at night carry a good and sufficient headlight for the purpose of discovering stock upon the track.[57] It is also negligence for a railroad company to back trains at night without any warning of their approach and without lights upon the rear of the train.[58] If the headlight is sufficient and the injury is due to its light being obscured by natural causes, such as fog or snow, the company will not be liable if a proper degree of care under the circumstances is exercised.[59]

d. Obstructions of View. It has been held that a railroad company owes no duty to owners of stock to keep its right of way in such condition as to afford its employees a view of it;[60] but by the weight of authority it is negligence not to keep the right of way free from weeds, bushes, or anything which would conceal from those in charge of the train the presence of animals on or near the track, and the company will be liable for injury to animals which but for such obstructions of view could have been discovered in time to avoid the injury.[61] Where an injury is occasioned by an obstruction of view due to natural causes over which the company has no control, it will not be liable if the train was equipped with proper lights and its servants were proceeding with a proper degree of care.[62]

At crossings trains should be operated with greater care to avoid injury to animals which might rightfully be upon the track (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cauffman, 38 Ill. 424); but even at crossings no particular rate of speed can be held to be negligence per se, the question depending upon the locality of the crossing and the amount of travel (East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Deaver, 79 Ala. 216); and at the crossing of an ordinary public highway it is not negligence on the part of a railroad company not to reduce its customary rate of speed in the absence of any special circumstances charging its servants with knowledge that an obstruction at such crossing was likely to be encountered (Zeigler v. Northeastern R. Co., 7 S. C. 402; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 63 S. W. 888).

In passing through cities, towns, and villages trains should be run with a greater degree of care and at a less rate of speed (Lafayette, etc., R. Co. v. Shriner, 6 Ind. 141); but no arbitrary rule can be laid down as to the rate of speed which would apply to all parts of the town, since what would be unreasonable speed in one portion might be entirely proper in another and less thickly populated portion (Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Wendt, 12 Nebr. 76, 10 N. W. 456); and the mere fact of a train passing a small station at which it was not required to stop without slackening its speed is not sufficient to show negligence (Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Langham, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 95 S. W. 686).

it has been held to be negligence for a railroad company to run a train at a dangerous rate of speed at a place where those in charge of the train knew that animals were accustomed to congregate and be upon the track,[70] or through a village where animals are permitted to run at large and are liable to be upon the track.[71] So, in the absence of statute or municipal regulation, no particular rate of speed is negligence per se,[72] but depends upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case,[73] and therefore may be considered as an element of negligence in connection with other circumstances.[74]

(II) Violation of Statutes or Ordinances. There are in some jurisdictions statutes, and in many towns and cities ordinances, limiting the speed at which trains may be operated at different places.[75] In some cases the statutes expressly provide that operating trains at a speed in excess of the limit prescribed shall be deemed negligence,[76] or shall render the company liable for any injuries occurring while trains are so operated;[77] but independently of such express pro-

In operating trains at night the rule in Alabama is that it is negligence on the part of a railroad company to run trains at such a rate of speed that they could not be stopped by the use of the ordinary means and appliances within the distance that the engineer can see stock upon the track by the aid of the headlight (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co., 150 Ala. 390, 43 So. 723; Western R. Co. v. Stone, 145 Ala. 663, 39 So. 723; Southern R. Co. v. Pogue, 145 Ala. 444, 40 So. 565; Georgia Cent. R. Co. v. Jones, 71 Ala. 487); but elsewhere this rule has been expressly disproved as seriously and needlessly impairing the usefulness of railroad transportation at night (Winston v. Raleigh, etc., R. visions a violation of such speed regulations is negligence per se,[78] and renders the railroad company liable for injuries to stock occurring within the limits to which the statutes or ordinances apply and which are directly due to such excessive speed,[79] or to a failure to slow up on approaching the crossing as required by statute.[80] If the injury occurs outside of the territory to which the speed regulations apply, the company is not liable unless otherwise negligent.[81]

(III) EFFECT OF STOCK LAWS. If an animal is suffered to run at large in violation of law and is killed or injured while unlawfully upon a railroad track, the fact that the train was being run at a high rate of speed or without proper care in other respects will not render the company liable unless its servants, after discovering the animal, could by the exercise of proper care have avoided the injury.[82]

(IV) INCREASING SPEED WHERE COLLISION IS INEVITABLE. If animals appear upon the track at a point so near a train as to make a collision inevitable, the company is not liable because the engineer increases the speed in order to diminish the danger to the train,[83] although the speed is increased beyond the

b. Means of Controlling Trains. It is the duty of railroad companies to equip their trains with sufficient brakes to stop the train within a reasonable time and distance,[85] and to employ a sufficient number of brakemen properly to operate them,[86] and they will be liable for injuries to animals which in the absence of such neglect could have been prevented;[87] but railroad companies are not obliged to procure the best appliances regardless of cost for the management of their trains but only such as are usually and reasonably sufficient.[88] It is also negligent to leave cars standing on a descending grade without being securely fastened, and the company will be liable for injuries to stock caused by such cars escaping and running down the grade.[89]

9. Precautions as to Animals Seen On or Near Tracks — a. In General. When animals are seen on or in dangerous proximity to a railroad track, it is the duty of those in charge of the train to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring them and a failure to do so will render the company liable for any injuries occasioned thereby.[90] What will amount to such care depends upon the circumstances of the particular case,[91] and those in charge of the train are only required to do what an ordinarily prudent and skilful person would be expected to do under the circumstances.[92] It is not necessary when animals are seen, to guard against every possible contingency which might result in injury to them, but only such as are reasonably to be apprehended;[93] and all precautions as to avoiding injury to stock are to be exercised subject to the paramount duty of caring for the safety of persons and property upon the train.[94] But where an injury to an animal is reasonably to be apprehended, all efforts consistent with the safety of the train should be made to avoid it,[95] and it is clearly negligence where animals are seen upon the track, for the engineer to proceed without giving any alarm or attempting to stop or check the speed of the train if there is opportunity to do so.[96] In emergencies something must be left to the discretion of the engineer, both as to what precautions would be best calculated to prevent the injury,[97] and also as to what if anything may prudently be done consistently with the safety of the train and its passengers,[98] particularly where the animal is wrongfully upon the track,[99] and infallibility can neither be expected nor required.[1] In some jurisdictions the statutes specifically require certain precautions to be taken when animals are seen upon the track;[2] but they do not require an attempt of the impossible,[3] or contemplate that any action should be taken which, under the circumstances of the particular case, would endanger the safety of the train,[4] or render the company liable for failure to observe all of such precautions where there was not sufficient time to do so,[5] provided that if there was sufficient time for some of them that was done which was best calculated to avoid the accident.[6]

b. Trespassing Animals. The weight of authority is undoubtedly to the effect that as a general rule a railroad company is not liable for injuries to trespassing animals in the absence of gross negligence or wilful or intentional injury;[7] but it has been held that in the application of this rule a distinction should be made between a failure to observe such precautions as are designed to guard generally against possible injuries, and precautions to avoid a particular injury where the danger is known,[8] and that while it is not necessary to maintain a lookout for trespassing animals,[9] the fact that animals are wrongfully upon a railroad track does not relieve the railroad company after their presence and peril are discovered from exercising ordinary care to prevent injuring them;[10] but it has been held

[affirmed in 2 Walk. 456]; but the company must employ persons of reasonable skill and judgment to manage their trains, and the mere fact that the injury was due to a mistake of judgment is not necessarily sufficient to relieve the company from liability (Parker v. Dubuque Southwestern R. that a railroad company is not obliged to stop or to slacken the speed of its trains as a precaution against injury to trespassing animals.[11]

c. Duty to Stop or Slacken Speed. The public interests involved in rapid transportation and regular connections, as well as the safety of the train itself, demand that the progress of trains should not unnecessarily be interfered with,[12] and it is not always necessary to stop or reduce speed because animals are discovered near the track,[13] or that this should always be done immediately even where the animals are discovered upon the track,[14] nor is it necessary in any case to attempt to stop or reduce speed if it would endanger the safety of the train and its passengers.[15] As to animals discovered on the track, however, the same presumption cannot be indulged as in the case of persons that they will understand a warning signal and leave the track,[16] and ordinarily the speed of the train should be reduced and if necessary to avoid the accident it should be stopped if it can be done with safety to the train.[17] Where animals are seen not on but

An engineer should not take chances on being able to run past a herd of horses without frightening them without reducing the speed of the train, where they are seen near the right of way and between the fences on got upon the track will not relieve the company from liability if reasonable care demanded that other precautions should have been previously taken.[27]

d. Stock Alarms. Whether a failure to blow the whistle or ring the bell to frighten animals away from a railroad track is negligence depends upon the circumstances of the particular case,[28] as situations may arise when such alarms would tend rather to increase than diminish the danger.[29] Ordinarily it is the duty of the engineer to use such precautions to frighten animals as soon as they are discovered on the track,[30] or if they are in dangerous proximity to the track,[31] or the circumstances make it probable that they will come upon it;[32] but if the animal is not on the track and there is no apparent danger, no alarm is necessary.[33] In Tennessee the statute expressly requires the alarm whistle to be sounded wherever an animal is seen upon the road.[34]

e. Where Collision Is Inevitable.[35] Railroad companies are not liable for unavoidable injuries to animals,[36] nor is it necessary in order to avoid liability that they should attempt to do the impossible.[37] So if animals come suddenly and unexpectedly upon the track so near to the train, or without any fault on the part of the company are not discovered until so near, that the accident cannot be avoided the company will not be liable,[38] and if it appears that the accident could not possibly have been prevented the company will not be liable, although no efforts were made to prevent it,[39] particularly if by attempting the impossible the chances of injury to the train and its passengers would have been increased.[40] In such cases it is not necessary to attempt to stop or slacken the speed of the train,[41] but on the contrary the speed may be increased if the danger of injury to the train would thereby be lessened.[42]

remote or consisting of some other matter than what occurred at the time of the injury, plaintiff cannot recover;[47] nor can plaintiff recover where the mutual negligence of the parties is the remote cause of the injury and there is no lack of ordinary care at the time of its happening;[48] but on the other hand if the negligence of defendant is proximate and that of plaintiff remote, the action may be maintained, although plaintiff is not entirely without fault.[49] So although plaintiff was negligent he may recover if at the time the injury occurred it might have been avoided by defendant in the exercise of ordinary care,[50] or if, although the animal was a trespasser, the injury might have been avoided by such care after the animal was discovered.[51] The owner of animals as well as the railroad company must exercise ordinary care to prevent their injury,[52] and whether the railroad company has been negligent and whether plaintiff has been guilty of a want

It is contributory negligence to leave a team standing upon a railroad track at night while the teamster is in a freight car where he cannot see or hear an approaching train (Pennsylvania Co. v. Edwards, 14 Ill. App. 81); or to attempt to lead a horse across a railroad track in front of an engine after seeing that the animal is greatly frightened (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Graham, (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 101 S. W. 846).

(II) In Actions Based on Statutory Liability. Contributory negligence is a good defense to an action for injury to animals whether the action is based upon common-law or statutory grounds, except where the statute imposes the liability by way of a penalty or otherwise clearly restricts the application of the doctrine.[54] So it is held that contributory negligence is a defense under statutes in terms making a railroad company liable for all damages to stock done by its cars or locomotives,[55] or damages due to a failure to give signals,[56] or making proof of the injury prima facie evidence of negligence and placing the burden of proof upon the company to show that the injury was not due to its negligence.[57] Under the statutes relating to the fencing of railroads the authorities are conflicting as to whether the liability of the company is absolute or whether contributory negligence is a defense, but the difference in the wording of the statutes is sufficient to justify the difference in the conclusions.[58] Under some of the statutes it is held that contributory negligence on the part of the owner is no defense,[59] either in actions based upon a total failure to fence or a failure to keep the fences constructed in a proper state of repair.[60] This rule does not permit a recovery where a person wilfully abandons an animal to destruction or voluntarily exposes it to a known danger,[61] but mere negligence on the part of the owner

The ground of these decisions is that the statutes are police regulations adopted for the safety of passengers as well as the protection of property, and that they are not intended merely to compensate the owner of the property injured but to enforce against the railroad company an obligation which it owes to the public. Flint, etc., R. Co. v. Lull, 28 Mich. 510.

not amounting to such conduct will not defeat a recovery.[62] Under other statutes it is held that contributory negligence is a good defense to an action based upon a failure to keep fences once constructed in a proper state of repair,[63] or even in case of a total failure to fence.[64] In Iowa the statute provides that every railroad company failing to fence its tracks against stock running at large shall be liable for all injuries unless occasioned by the "wilful act of the owner or his agent," [65] and under this statute mere negligence on the part of the owner will not defeat a recovery;[66] but this absolute liability, in the absence of a wilful act, applies only to stock running at large and not when under the control of the owner.[67]

(III) COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE. Under the doctrine of comparative negligence, which in most jurisdictions is not now recognized,[68] plaintiff may recover if his negligence is slight and that of defendant is gross in comparison therewith;[69] but if plaintiff is guilty of negligence contributing to the injury he cannot recover unless defendant's negligence is gross in comparison with his own.[70] In a few

To constitute a wilful act within the application of the statute there must be something more than mere negligence. There must be a positive act in some way connected with the injury, such as driving stock upon the track or permitting them to escape for the purpose of going upon the track (Krebs v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 64 Iowa 670, 21 N. W. 131), or in other words an obstinate, stubborn, or perverse act, done with a set purpose, and not mere passiveness on the part of the owner (Stewart v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 32 Iowa 561).

It is not a wilful act to turn a colt out in a highway for the purpose of driving it across a railway track to a pasture (Smith v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 58 Iowa 622, 12 N. W. 619); to leave stock on land adjoining a railroad track knowing that a gate in the railroad fence is defective (Enix v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 114 Iowa 508, 87 N. W. 417); to allow stock to run at large upon the owner's premises in close proximity to a railroad track (Lee v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 131, 23 N. jurisdictions there is a statutory modification of this rule which authorizes the negligence of the parties to be compared, not for the purpose of wholly relieving either party where both are negligent, but with the effect of reducing the amount of plaintiff's damages according to the extent to which his own negligence has contributed to the injury; [71] but under these statutes plaintiff can recover nothing if his own negligence was the sole cause of the injury,[72] or if defendant was in the exercise of ordinary care.[73] Elsewhere the doctrine of comparative negligence has been expressly disapproved.[74]

(iv) Wilful, Wanton, or Gross Negligence. If animals are injured through the wanton or wilful misconduct of the railroad company's employees, the company will be liable therefor notwithstanding the owner may have been negligent,[75] or permitted his animals to be unlawfully at large.[76]

(v) Wilful and Intentional Acts of Owner. A person cannot recover for injuries to an animal which he willingly abandons to destruction or voluntarily exposes to a known danger,[77] or where he makes no effort to avert an impending injury which he has time and opportunity to do; [78] and this rule applies to cases based upon a statutory liability where ordinary contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff is not a defense ;[79] nor is the rule affected by the fact that the exposure of the animal was due to the intoxication of the person having it in charge.[80]

b. Driving Animals Over or Along Tracks. It is the duty of a person in charge of animals to exercise ordinary care and before attempting to drive them across a railroad track to look and listen for approaching trains,[81] and if he fails to exer-

The fact that the regular trains have passed does not excuse a person from looking

To drive a team at such a high rate of speed at night upon a railroad crossing as to make it impossible to avoid collision with others rightfully thereon is such contributory negligence as will bar a recovery for injuries caused by the team running into a train upon the crossing, although the crossing lights indicated that the crossing was open. c. Use of Owner's Own Premises Adjoining Unfenced Railroad. Where a railroad company is required by law to fence its tracks an adjoining landowner cannot be deprived of the lawful and proper use of his own premises by its neglect to do so,[88] and it is not contributory negligence on the part of such landowner, although knowing the road to be unfenced, to turn stock into his inclosure or pasture them upon his own fields through or along which the railroad runs.[89] In the absence of any statute or agreement as to fences the existence of a right of way through the premises of a landowner does not deprive him of the use of such premises as a pasture for his stock nor does it impose on either him or the railroad company any duty to fence the tracks,[90] and it is ordinarily held not to be contributory negligence to allow his stock to run upon his own land at places where they might wander upon the tracks,[91] although the circumstances of the particular case may be such as to preclude a recovery.[92] The existence of a stock law does not affect the right of a landowner to permit his stock to run upon his own inclosed premises.[93]

d. Fences, Gates, and Bars Inclosing Railroad — (1) DUTY TO ERECT AND MAINTAIN. In the absence of any statute or agreement as to fencing, a landowner is not obliged to fence against a railroad which runs through or along his own land,[94] nor where railroad companies are required by law to fence their tracks can their failure to do so impose upon an adjoining landowner the necessity for constructing them or else abandoning the use of his own adjacent premises as pasturage for his stock,[95] even though the statute provides that in such cases he may construct the fences and recover the value thereof from the railroad company.[96] If, however, the landowner has expressly agreed to construct, maintain, or repair the fences or gates he cannot recover for injuries to his animals due to a failure to comply with his agreement,[97] and this without regard to whether the railroad company is required by statute to fence its tracks,[98] as this duty even when expressly imposed by statute may be waived or assumed by the adjoining landowner in so far as it affects himself or those in privity with him.[99] In such cases plaintiff's animals are wrongfully upon the track by virtue of his own default and the company will not be liable in the absence of gross negligence or wilful injury,[1] and this rule is not affected by the fact that the defect in the fence which occasioned the injury was caused by accident or casualty without any fault on the part of plaintiff,[2] or was occasioned by fire communicated from the locomolives of the railroad company.[3] So also where by statute it is the duty of the landowner to assist in constructing and maintaining the railroad fences as division fences he cannot recover where his neglect in this regard has contributed to the injury.[4]

(II) Knowledge of Defect and Notice to Company. Where railroad companies are required by statute to fence their tracks it is equally their duty to exercise reasonable care in keeping the fences and cattle-guards in repair,[5] and by the weight of authority it is not contributory negligence for an adjoining landowner to turn his stock upon his own premises adjacent to such fences, although he knows that they are out of repair,[6] or knows that the cattle-

Although the animal is breachy contributory negligence will not be inferred in the absence of evidence that the character of the animal contributed to its escape. Congdon v. Central Vermont R. Co., 56 Vt. 390, 48 Am. Rep. 793.

Although plaintiff's animals had previously escaped through defects in the railroad fence it is not contributory negligence for the owner with knowledge of this fact to allow them to remain in a pasture adjacent to such fence (Rogers v. Newburyport R. Co., 1 Allen (Mass.) 16; Johnson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 29 Minn. 425, 13 N. W. 673), but is a fact which may be submitted to the jury (Johnson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., supra).

Inclosing animals by an insufficient fence in a field from which they escape into another inclosure of plaintiff adjoining a railroad track, which was known not to be securely fenced by defendant, is not contributory negligence. In Wisconsin it is held to be contributory negligence to leave stock where they can go upon the track through an opening in a railroad fence of which the owner has knowledge (Martin v. Stewart, 73 Wis. 553, 41 N. Where the railroad company is bound by contract, although not by statute, to maintain a safe crossing for the benefit of an adjoining landowner, knowledge on the part of the landowner that the company has failed to comply with its agreement and that the gates provided are insufficient will not defeat a recovery for injuries caused thereby. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Burgan, 9 Ind. App. 604, 37 N. E. 31.

Where a person is pasturing stock on the land of another the fact that he turned his stock into a pasture through a gate in the right of way fence and had an opportunity of inspecting its condition is not such contributory negligence as will prevent him from recovering for an injury to his animals which escape because the fastenings on the gate are insecure. Even though the statute allows the landowner to repair the fence in case the railroad company after notice neglects to do so, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to avail himself of the right to make such repairs. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. McCord, 56 Ill. App. 173.

But if the defect could be easily repaired without any considerable cost or labor and a failure to do so would probably result in an injury to plaintiff's stock, it is but reasonable to require that he should do so or otherwise protect himself against the threatened danger (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Buck, 14 Ill. App. 394; Magilton v. New York Cent. R. Co., 11 N. Y. App. Div. 373, 42 N. Y. (III) Opening and Closing Gates and Bars.[16] It is the duty of a landowner when using a private or farm crossing maintained for his convenience to close the gates or bars,[17] and if he fails to do so and his animals escape and are injured by reason of such neglect, he cannot recover therefor.[18] This rule applies not only to the landowner but to any person using a gate in a railroad fence whose animals are injured by reason of his own neglect to close it,[19] and the fact that he found it open will not excuse his failure to close it after passing through.[20]

e. Allowing Animals to Go at Large — (I) In General. As to whether permitting animals to run at large is contributory negligence which will preclude a recovery by the owner, the authorities are not agreed; but there is a line of distinction which accounts for this difference on principle growing out of whether the common-law rule which requires owners of stock to keep them upon their

Under the Iowa statutes if the gate provided is such as the law requires plaintiff cannot recover if he leaves the gate open either wilfully or negligently; but if the gate is not up to the required standard mere negligence will not defeat a recovery, and the railroad company will be liable unless the injury was due to a "wilful" act of the owner. own premises prevails in the particular jurisdiction.[21] The question also usually relates only to cases where railroad companies are not required to fence their tracks or to accidents occurring at places not within the application of the statutes requiring them to do so,[22] as it is ordinarily held in actions based upon these statutes that merely allowing stock to run at large will not defeat a recovery,[23] and in some jurisdictions in such actions contributory negligence of any character not amounting to a wilful or intentional exposure to injury is not a defense.[24] In jurisdictions where the common-law rule does not prevail it is ordinarily held that the owner of stock in permitting them to run at large is in the exercise of a lawful right and is not chargeable with contributory negligence in case they stray upon a railroad track and are injured through a want of ordinary care on the part of the railroad company.[25] The owner in permitting his stock to run at large of course assumes the risk of all unavoidable accidents,[26] but assumes no risk as to accidents which the company might avoid by the exercise of ordinary care.[27] The conduct of the owner while in a sense negligence is ordinarily the remote and not the proximate cause of the injury,[28] although stock may be turned out under circumstances that will preclude a recovery.[29] In jurisdictions where the common-law rule prevails it is ordinarily held that allowing stock to run at large is such negligence on the part of the owner as will preclude a recovery,[30] the animals being considered as trespassers and the company not liable in

(II) Near Crossings, Stations, and Other Places Not Required to Be Fenced. In a number of cases it has been held without express reference to the rightfulness or wrongfulness of permitting stock to run at large that it is contributory negligence to do so in the immediate vicinity of public crossings, station grounds, and other places where the railroad company is not required to fence its tracks,[32] and this rule of course applies where it is held generally to be contributory negligence to permit stock to run at large;[33] but in jurisdictions where stock may lawfully run at large it has been held that it is not necessarily contributory negligence to allow animals to run at large even in the vicinity of station grounds and public crossings,[34] but that it is a question of whether plaintiff's conduct shows a want of ordinary care under the circumstances which has contributed directly to the injury complained of,[35] and is properly a question for the jury.[36] In Canada the statutes of 1857 and 1888 expressly provided that stock should not be permitted to be at large upon a highway within one-half mile of a grade crossing of a railroad unless in charge of some person, and that if stock so at large should go upon the railroad and be killed the owner should have no right of action against the railroad company.[37] This statute was held

to bar any right of action for stock so killed notwithstanding the railroad company was negligent,[38] or the animal was not killed upon the crossing,[39] and reached the place upon the track where the injury occurred through a failure of the railroad company to construct or properly maintain cattle-guards,[40] and regardless of whether the animal was at large with the knowledge or through the fault of the owner or not.[41] Under the statute of 1903, however, the owner may recover unless the animal was at large through his negligent or wilful act,[42] and the burden is upon the railroad company to establish this fact;[43] but if the animal was at large through the negligence or wilful act of the owner he cannot recover.[44]

(III) Effect of Stock Laws. Where the common-law rule prevails as to animals running at large, and it is held to be contributory negligence to permit them to do so, it has been held that the rule is not affected by a municipal regulation permitting stock to run at large in the locality where the accident occurred;[45] and conversely it has been held that where except for a special statute prohibiting it in a particular locality it is not unlawful or contributory negligence to allow stock to run at large, the existence of such a stock law will not make it so.[46] While the weight of authority seems to be that stock allowed to run at large in violation of stock laws are trespassers and that the company will not be liable in actions for their injury in the absence of gross negligence or wilful injury,[47] it has been held in a number of cases that the fact that they are at large in violation of such laws is not necessarily such contributory negligence as will defeat a recovery,[48] but

trol so that a recovery was barred by the statute where a person left four horses without bridles or halters standing in a road near a crossing while he went to open a gate leading into a neighboring field (Thompson v. Grand Trunk R. Place of injury.— If the animal was at large within one-half mile of the crossing and was injured directly upon the crossing, it seems that there could be no recovery, but if at any other point and the railroad company has failed to fence or construct cattle-guards as required by statute, the owner may recover unless the company can show that the animal was at large by reason of the negligence or wilful act of the owner. that it may be such under the circumstances of the particular case,[49] and therefore is properly a question for the jury.[50] Where railroad companies are required by law to fence their tracks, the question of stock laws in particular localities does not affect this duty.[51] In some cases it has been held, however, that where stock are allowed to run at large in violation of law and the railroad company has neglected its statutory duty to fence its tracks but is not guilty of any other negligence, plaintiff cannot recover;[52] but in other cases where there was a failure to fence it has been held that the mere fact that stock were at large in violation of law is not sufficient to charge plaintiff with contributory negligence, but that it is a question for the jury under the circumstances of the particular case,[53] plaintiff being entitled to recover unless the circumstances were such that it was a natural and probable consequence that the stock would be injured,[54] and the fact of allowing them to run at large contributed directly to the injury complained of.[55]

f. Escape of Animals From Inclosure or Control — (i) IN GENERAL. It is held in some jurisdictions that if animals escape from the owner's inclosure or control without any fault on his part he is not chargeable with contributory negligence;[56] and this rule has been expressly held to apply in jurisdictions where

The ground of these decisions is that plaintiff and defendant have contributed equally, although remotely, to the injury complained of in that each has neglected a statutory duty, which fact will preclude a recovery in the absence of any other negligence on the part of defendant directly connected with the injury complained of. In Iowa the statute requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks makes the railroad company liable for all injuries where they have failed to do so unless caused by the "wilful act of the owner or his agent," and permitting stock to run at large in violation of stock laws is held not to be a wilful act within the application of the statute. the common-law rule prevails, and voluntarily permitting animals to run at large would preclude a recovery;[57] but if the owner knows that his animals have escaped and makes no effort to reclaim them it will be held that they are at large with his consent.[58] In other jurisdictions where the common-law rule prevails it is held that the owner must see at his peril that his animals are kept on his own premises, and that, although they escape without any actual fault on his part, they are nevertheless trespassers and the owner is chargeable with negligence,[59] and that there can be no recovery in the absence of gross negli ence or intentional injury on the part of the railroad company.[60] A distinction has, however, been made between the escape of animals from the owner's inclosure and escape from his control when being driven along a highway,[61] it being held that while the owner cannot recover in the former case,[62] he may in the latter;[63] and it has also been held that plaintiff may recover where the injury occurs upon a public crossing,[64] on the ground that the animal is not to be regarded as a trespasser if at large without the fault of the owner and at a point where the right of the railroad co mpany is not exclusive.[65]

(III) Effect of Stock Laws. Stock laws making it unlawful for stock to run at large do not impose an absolute requirement that the owner must keep them upon his own premises, but only require that his fences shall be reasonably sufficient to restrain them and that he shall exercise reasonable precautions to prevent their being at large,[69] and if without the knowledge or fault of the owner they escape from his inclosure or control he is not chargeable with contributory negligence which will preclude a recovery where the railroad company has been negligent in the operation of its trains,[70] or has failed to fence its tracks as required by law,[71] or failed to keep its fences in repair or the gates therein closed;[72] but it will be presumed where animals are at large in violation of a stock law that they are at large with the consent of the owner.[73]

its act or omission was the proximate cause of the injury.[76] It is not necessary that it should be the sole cause, it being sufficient if it is one of several concurring efficient causes, other than negligence on the part of plaintiff, which coöperate directly to produce the injury,[77] but a direct causal connection must be established between defendant's negligence or misconduct and the injury complained of.[78] So also it is not always sufficient that but for defendant's act the injury would not have happened, as the liability extends only to injuries which are the direct and natural consequence of such act;[79] nor will the company be liable, although negligent, where the immediate cause of the injury is an independent intervening agency;[80] but where the intervening agency is set in motion by the original wrong of the company it will be liable for all damages which follow in the natural and ordinary course of events as the result thereof,[81] and the test is not whether the particular injury might have been foreseen but whether it is the natural and proximate result of the negligent act or omission complained of.[82] Whether the negligence or misconduct of the railroad company was the proximate cause of the injury is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.[83]

front of a train which is properly equipped and operated in a lawful and proper manner, or without any fault on the part of those in charge of the train is not seen until too late to stop the train or otherwise avoid the injury, the company will not be liable;[86] nor can a failure to make any effort to avoid the injury be held a proximate cause thereof if it appears that nothing which might have been done would under the circumstances of the case have been successful.[87]

c. Frightening Animals. Where animals are frightened by the negligent operation of a train this negligence will be held to be the proximate cause of resulting injuries sustained either by the frightened animal,[88] or inflicted by it upon other animals in the course of its flight;[89] but the company will not be liable for injuries sustained by frightened animals where the fright was not due to any negligence on the part of its servants in the operation of the train.[90]

d. Fences and Cattle-Guards. To entitle plaintiff to recover under statutes making railroad companies liable for injuries to animals occasioned by a failure to construct or maintain fences, it must appear that the failure to do so caused or directly contributed to the injury complained of.[91] The absence of a fence

The absence of the fence is not the cause of the injury if a fence such as the company is required to construct would not have excluded the animal injured (Leavenworth, etc., R. Co. v. Forbes, 37 Kan. 445, 15 Pac. 595; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Yates, 21 Kan. 613); or where the fence if constructed would inevitably have been destroyed by a fire so recently before the accident that it could not have been restored in time to prevent the injury (Cook v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 98 Wis. 624, 74 N. W. 561, 67 Am. St. Rep. 830, 40 L. R. A. 457); nor is the defective condition of a railroad fence the proximate cause of the injury if the animal came upon the track through an open gate which it was the duty of the landowner to keep closed (Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Worsham, (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 105 S. W. 853).

Where two railroads run parallel, and neither is properly fenced, and stock pass over one to the other and are there injured, the proximate cause of the injury is the failure to fence on the part of the company upon whose track the stock are injured and the company upon whose track they first entered will not be liable. Frisch v. Chicago at the place of the injury is not the proximate cause of the injury if the animal did not enter there but came upon the track at some other point where the road was properly fenced or was not required to be fenced;[92] but it is the proximate cause if the animal got upon the track by reason of the failure to fence, although injured at a point where no such breach of duty is shown to exist.[93] Under some of the statutes the liability for failure to fence applies only to injuries resulting from collisions with trains, while under others it applies to all injuries resulting from such omission.[94] Under the latter statutes the company is not liable for all injuries which would not have occurred had the road been fenced but only such as are the direct and natural consequence of the failure to do so,[95] but the company will be liable if the failure to fence in connection with other acts of the company was the cause of the injury.[96]

e. Signals and Lookouts. It is held in most jurisdictions that statutes requiring the giving of signals on approaching public crossings are intended for the benefit of animals as well as persons; [97] but in order to render a railroad company liable for injuries to animals on the ground that such signals were not given it must affirmatively appear that the omission was the cause of the injury complained of,[98]

Although an animal leaves the track after entering through a defect in the railroad fence, and is injured at a different place after crossing intervening lands and coming upon the track at a highway, the defective condition of the fence at the original place of entry is the proximate cause of the injury. A special verdict in an action based upon a failure to give the statutory signal will not sustain a judgment for plaintiff in the

and whether it was such is ordinarily a question for the jury.[99] So also negligence on the part of the engineer as to keeping a lookout for stock must have caused or contributed directly to the injury complained of.[1]

f. Rate of Speed and Means of Controlling Trains. Unless such negligence is shown to have been the cause of the injury complained of a railroad company will not be liable merely because at the time of the accident the train was running at a prohibited,[2] or dangerous rate of speed,[3] or the speed was not checked as required by statute on approaching a public crossing,[4] or the brakemen were not at their posts.[5]

12. Wilful, Wanton, and Unauthorized Acts — a. Wilful or Wanton Injury. Railroad companies are liable for injuries to animals caused by the wilful, wanton, or reckless conduct of their employees in the performance of their duties,[6] notwithstanding the animal injured may have been a trespasser,[7] or the owner guilty of contributory negligence.[8]

b. Unauthorized Acts of Company's Employees.[9] In actions for injuries to animals a railroad company is liable for the acts of its servants if within the general scope of their employment, although the specific act is not authorized,[10] or is done injuries due to the defective condition of a gate at a crossing which the statute provides shall be maintained for the use of the "proprietors or owners" of the adjoining lands;[20] but a judgment for plaintiff cannot be sustained where there is no evidence whatever that he was either the owner or in possession of the animal injured.[21]

14. Proceedings For Recovery of Damages — a. Notice of Claim or Demand For Payment — (i) In General. Some of the statutes provide for a notice of the injury or demand for payment of the claim therefor to be made upon the company within a certain time after the injury is sustained or prior to the action to recover therefor,[22] or provide in the alternative that a claim shall be presented or suit thereon commenced within a certain time after the injury.[23] The object of the statutes requiring a notice or demand is to inform the company of the injury and afford it an opportunity to investigate the circumstances and to settle the claim without litigation or prepare its defense.[24] Some of the statutes further provide that, if the damages are not paid within a certain time after the notice or demand, plaintiff may recover double the actual damages sustained,[25] or a reasonable attorney's fee,[26] or such attorney's fee together with a certain rate of interest upon the amount of actual damages from the date of presentment of the claim,[27] and such provisions are not unconstitutional.[28] Under some of the statutes the notice or demand is a condition precedent to a right to maintain an action,[29] and knowledge on the part of the company's officers or agents of the

that a tenant or lessee has a property in the land which entitles him to sue.

In Georgia the notice prescribed relates only to the special remedy given by the code which is merely cumulative, and a failure to give such notice does not affect the right to maintain a common-law action in a court of general jurisdiction. Wallace v. Cason, 42 Ga. 435.

injury does not dispense with the necessity of giving the prescribed notice;[30] but in Iowa it seems to be merely a condition precedent to the right to recover double damages where the claim is not paid within a certain time after demand.[31]

(II) Form and Sufficiency. The statutes usually require that the notice or demand shall be in writing,[32] and in one jurisdiction that it shall be accompanied by an affidavit of the injury;[33] but in the absence of such express requirement an oral demand is sufficient.[34] Where the statute prescribes a form of notice requiring certain essential allegations, its provisions must be complied with,[35] and if it requires the "time and place" of the injury to be stated the notice should do so as directly and plainly as practicable.[36] Although not required by the letter of the statute, the notice should as far as practicable inform the company of such material facts as will enable it to investigate the claim and decide upon its course of action;[37] but ordinarily in the absence of express requirements the notice will be held good if reasonably sufficient to serve the purpose for which it is required to be given,[38] or in other words if the company is enabled thereby to make an investigation of the facts upon which the claim is based and decide as to its liability.[39] Where the statute requires the notice to be "accompanied by an affidavit of the injury" it need not be separate but may be embodied in the same paper with the notice,[40] but it is not sufficient where the notice is accompanied by a copy of the affidavit instead of the original.[41] In the absence of express provision to the contrary the affidavit need not be made by plaintiff himself but may be made by some other person cognizant of the facts,[42] and need

Purpose of requirement as to notice see supra, X, H, 14, a, (I).

It has been held a sufficient demand where plaintiff made out a bill in writing, stating an account in favor of himself and against the company, for the value of the animal killed and stating the date of the accident and presented it to the company within the time limited (Ft. Scott, etc., R. Co. v. Holman, 45 Kan. 167, 25 Pac. 585); or where he stated his demand to a station agent, giving a description of the animal and its value, which was taken down by the agent and transmitted by him to the company within the time limited (Union Pac. R. Co. v. Shelley, 49 Kan. 667, 31 Pac. 304).

It is not necessary to specify the particular breach of duty, such as a failure to maintain a fence, which plaintiff will rely on as fixing the liability. The petition or bill of particulars must be looked to for a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action. Wichita, etc., R. Co. v. Hart, 7 Kan. App. 550, 51 Pac. 933.

not contain anything more than the statement of the claim and the fact of injury.[43] A notice or demand is not invalid because it states the value of the animal at more than it is actually worth,[44] or claims a greater amount of damages than that subsequently claimed in the complaint unless it was done in bad faith or for a fraudulent purpose;[45] nor where defendant was not misled thereby is the right of recovery affected by a variance between the notice and the complaint or proof as to the description of the animal,[46] or the cause of injury,[47] or a slight inaccuracy in the designation of the company.[48]

(III) Service or Presentation. In the absence of express provision it is not material by whom the notice is served or the claim presented, provided it is in proper form and within the time prescribed.[49] The statutes usually designate certain officers or agents of the railroad company upon whom the notice or demand shall or may be served,[50] and to constitute a valid notice or demand it must be shown to have been made upon a proper officer or agent.[51] Where the statute provides that it shall be made upon one of certain named officers or agents it must be so made;[52] but a statute providing that demand "may" be made upon any ticket or station agent is not mandatory,[53] and does not preclude a valid demand upon a general officer of the company,[54] or an agent expressly authorized to settle such claims;[55] but it is not sufficient where the only evidence is that the demand was made upon a person representing himself as an agent of the company without showing what kind of an agent,[56] or without any further proof that he was in fact an agent of the company.[57] Where the statute authorizes service upon any officer, or station or ticket agent "employed in the management of the business of the corporation," it is sufficient where it is shown that service was made upon a certain station agent without further proof that he was employed in the management of the business of the corporation.[58] The notice may, in the absence of express provision, be served simply by delivering the notice without reading it,[59] or by reading the original and delivering a copy,[60] or delivering the original;[61] but the affidavit accompanying the notice must be the original and not a copy.[62] Proof of service may be made by a copy of the notice served accompanied by the oath of the person who made the service,[63] or by an officer's indorsement upon the notice or by affidavit,[64] or, it seems, by oral evidence upon the trial.[65]

b. Appraisal of Damages. In some jurisdictions provision is made for an appraisal of the damages sustained prior to instituting an action to recover therefor,[66] and proof of such appraisal must be made in order to maintain an action under the statute;[67] but it is not essential to enable one to maintain an action for the negligent injury of his animals,[68] being merely cumulative of the common-law remedy,[69] and the only effect of its omission being to deprive plaintiff of any benefits provided by the statute in addition to the actual damages sustained in the event of the appraised value not being voluntarily paid.[70] Notice must be given to the company by plaintiff of his intention to apply for the appointment of appraisers,[71] which must state when such application will be made,[72] and the proceedings before the appraisers must be in strict conformity with the statute.[73] to the company to recover for injuries to stock where the damages claimed do not exceed thirty dollars.[74]

15. Actions For Injuries to Animals — a. Nature and Form of Remedy. In a common-law action against a railroad company for injury to animals the proper form of action is an action on the case and not trespass,[75] unless the act which directly occasioned the injury was done by the command or with the assent of the corporation.[76] Where a railroad company having failed to fence its tracks as required by law negligently injures an animal, plaintiff may elect according to the facts of his case to base his action upon the statute or upon common-law grounds;[77] and where there are two statutes, one expressly requiring fencing at certain places and allowing double damages, and the other merely making the company liable for actual damages without proof of negligence where its road is not fenced,[78] if the injury occurred at a place unfenced and within the application of the former statute, plaintiff may bring his action under either statute.[79] A statute prescribing a particular form of action before a justice but authorizing the action to be brought in a circuit court, without designating the form of action, does not require the same form of action in that court.[80] Under a statute requiring railroad companies to construct cattle-guards, and providing a penalty for failure to do so, to be recovered by any person aggrieved by such failure, an action for the penalty is the only remedy open to one whose animals are killed in consequence of a violation of the statute.[81]

b. Defenses. In an action against a railroad company for injury to animals the company cannot set up a counter-claim for damages to the train caused by the collision based upon the wrongful presence of the animal upon the track.[82] It is no defense to an action for injury to an animal that it was abandoned and not turned over to the railroad company, but plaintiff can recover only to the extent of the injury and not the full value.[83] The fact that a railroad company acted in good faith in failing to fence its tracks, believing the locality in question to be depot grounds, does not affect its liability for failure to fence.[84]

The causes of action are separate and independent of each other and, although the circumstances are such as to give the company a right of action for injury to the train, it is not a proper subject for a counter-claim.

c. Jurisdiction and Venue.[85] In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, an action against a railroad company for injury to animals is transitory,[86] and may be brought in any county through which the road runs,[87] or wherever jurisdiction may be had of defendant company,[88] and so an action may be brought in one state for an injury occurring in another state;[89] but the statutes in some jurisdictions require that the action must be brought in the county where the injury occurred,[90] or if brought before a justice that it must be brought in the township in which the injury occurred,[91] or either in such township or an adjoining township;[92] but in the absence of such express requirement it may be brought before a justice of any township within the county where the injury occurred.[93] In the absence of statute actions for injuries to animals may be maintained in any court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action which can obtain jurisdiction of the parties,[94] and a statutory action which is maintainable only by an adjoining landowner may be brought in a court not having jurisdiction of actions involving title to land; [95] but where animals are killed at different times the causes of action are separate and distinct, and if separately they are within the exclusive jurisdiction of a justice of the peace they cannot be combined so as to give a higher court jurisdiction.[96] Under the original Indiana statute claims based upon a failure of the company to fence its tracks were enforceable only in an action before a justice of the peace,[97] but by a later statute jurisdiction was extended to the common pleas and circuit courts in cases where the damage exceeded fifty dollars,[98] the jurisdiction of the justice, however, remaining exclusive as to claims not exceeding that amount.[99]

the absence of any limitation relating specifically to such actions an action based upon the statutory liability of a railroad company for failure to fence its tracks is governed by the limitation relating to liabilities created by statute other than a penalty or forfeiture,[4] and is not barred by the statutes relating to actions to recover a penalty,[5] or common-law actions ex delicto.[6]

e. Parties. An action for injury to an animal brought under a statute allowing plaintiff to recover double damages where the road is not fenced is not an action for a penalty which must be brought in the name of the state, but is properly brought in the name of the owner of the animal.[7] A person having a special property, such as that of a bailee, in the animal may sue without making the real owner a party plaintiff.[8] In an action to subject a railroad operated by a lessee to seizure and sale to satisfy a judgment for damages for injury to animals, both the lessor and lessee, having interests to be affected by the sale, should be made parties defendant.[9]

f. Process.[10] In Indiana the statute provides that in actions for injuries to animals service on the company may be made by copy on any conductor of any train passing through the county,[11] and service upon a conductor is good where the action is against the railroad company, although operated by a receiver,[12] but will not authorize a judgment, where there is no appearance, against an individual operating the road as a lessee.[13] A return is sufficient which states that service was made upon a certain conductor without stating that he was conductor of a train passing through the county,[14] or which states that it was served upon defendant by handing a copy to the station agent at a certain station without stating that he was an agent of defendant.[15] The fact that the summons describes the animal as the property of plaintiff is immaterial if he was in the actual and exclusive possession thereof and entitled to maintain the action.[16] of defendant,[18] even, according to some of the authorities, where the statute makes proof of the injury prima facie evidence of negligence and places the burden of proof upon defendant;[19] but in most jurisdictions it is held that a general allegation of negligence on the part of defendant in the operation of its trains is sufficient without setting forth the specific acts constituting such negligence,[20] although there are a few decisions to the contrary.[21] Plaintiff may if he chooses set out and describe the particular acts complained of and then allege that they were negligently done,[22] but by stating specific acts of negligence he will be confined in his evidence and right of recovery to the issues thus tendered.[23] The complaint need not allege in express terms that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, but it is sufficient if it alleges that the injury occurred by reason of the negligence of defendant in the manner specified.[24] The complaint must allege plaintiff's ownership of the animal injured,[25] and that the train by which the animal was injured belonged to defendant or was being operated over its road,[26] and if the action is based upon the negligence of defendant's servants it must be alleged that they were acting in the line of their employment;[27] but it is not necessary to allege the names of the employees in charge of the train by which the animal was injured.[28] In actions based upon the statutory liability for failure to fence no allegation of negligence is necessary, but the complaint must allege facts bringing the case within the provisions of the statute;[29] so in any case the complaint must either allege negligence or facts making such allegations unnecessary,[30] and where it neither alleges negligence nor a failure to fence it does not state a cause of action either at common law or under the statute;[31] and if the company is not required to fence, a complaint alleging only a failure to fence, and not alleging any negligence in the operation of the train by which the animal was killed or injured, does not state a cause of action.[32] The complaint should be so worded that it can be ascertained therefrom whether plaintiff's cause of action is founded upon defendant's negligence in the operation of its trains or upon the statutory liability for failure to fence;[33] but as there is no inconsistency plaintiff may allege in the same complaint both negligence and a failure to fence, and if the facts warrant it, may recover on either ground;[34] and where the complaint contains allegations both of negligence and a failure to fence, but the allegations are not sufficient as to one of these grounds, he may still recover if the allegations constitute a good statement of a cause of action either at common law,[35] or under the statute,[36] and the other allegations may be stricken out or disregarded as surplusage.[37] Separate causes of action for injuries to animals at different times may be joined in the same complaint,[38] but each injury should be stated in a separate paragraph,[39] although allegations applicable to the different counts need not be repeated in each but may be stated with reference to such counts.[40] Where the action is based upon a statute of another state the statute must be pleaded.[41]

the time and place of the injury;[43] and where the statute expressly requires that the complaint shall specify the time and place of the injury, each must be designated with reasonable certainty, and it is not sufficient merely to state the month and the county.[44] In the absence of statute the complaint need not be more specific as to the place of injury than to state the county in which it occurred,[45] but if the action is based upon a statute of the state where it is instituted the complaint must show that the railroad is located within that state.[46] Where the statutes expressly restrict the venue according to the county or township where the injury occurred,[47] such facts are jurisdictional,[48] and the complaint must allege in conformity with such provisions that the injury occurred in the county in which the action is brought,[49] or in the township,[50] or either in that or an adjoining township;[51] but it is not necessary that this should be directly and positively alleged, it being sufficient if it appears from the averments of the complaint that the injury occurred in such county[52] or township.[53]

It is sufficiently shown that the animal was on the track where the complaint alleges that defendant ran its train "at and against the animal, at a point on its line of railroad . . . which point on said railroad of contact and killing was" in a certain named township of the state. A complaint is sufficiently specific which alleges that on a certain date the animal came upon the track at a point "immediately north of" a certain city in a certain county (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Consolidated Tank Line Co., 4 Ind. App. 40, 30 N. E. 159), or which alleges that defendant was operating its road on a certain date and within the county and that "at the time and place aforesaid" the animal came upon the track and was injured (St. Louis, etc., R. from the negligence alleged, that defendant could be expected to meet it without having it pointed out directly, a general allegation of damages done to plaintiff's stock without showing how or when the damage was done or to what number or kind of animals, is not sufficient;[55] and where it is alleged that an animal belonging to plaintiff was negligently killed by defendant, the value of the animal must be stated.[56] A complaint is sufficient, however, which alleges that plaintiff's animal was "killed or disabled" without showing which,[57] or which alleges that the animal was killed and was of a certain value without a direct allegation that the injury was to plaintiff's damage,[58] or which states the number and character of the animals killed and their value and the time and place of injury;[59] and when the statute allows plaintiff to recover a reasonable attorney's fee it is not necessary to allege that the employment of an attorney in the case was necessary.[60] Since the action is in tort it is not necessary to allege that plaintiff's claim is due and unpaid,[61] nor can defendant demand a bill of particulars.[62]

(IV) FENCES AND CATTLE-GUARDS — (A) In General. In actions based upon the statutory liability of a railroad company for failure to fence its tracks no allegation of negligence is necessary;[63] but the complaint must allege facts sufficient to bring the case within the provisions of the statute,[64] and greater strictness is required under the statutes allowing plaintiff to recover double dam-

But where a particular court has exclusive jurisdiction of actions to enforce the statutory liability, as was the case in Indiana prior to the amendment of the statute (Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Fisher, 15 Ind. 203), if the action is brought in a different court it will be treated as a common-law action and plaintiff cannot recover in the absence of an allegation of negligence (Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 19 Ind. 42; Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 12 Ind. 446; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Martin, 10 Ind. 416).

The complaint must negative any exceptions as to defendant's liability which are contained in the enacting clause of the statute (Galena, etc., R. Co. v. Sumner, 24 Ill. 631; Russell v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 83 Mo. 507), but need not negative exceptions contained in other parts of the statute (Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Lavery, 71 Ill. 522; Great Western R. Co. v. Hanks, 36 Ill. 281 [disapproving Great Western R. Co. v. Bacon, 30 Ill. 347, 83 Am. Dec. 199]), or which are not expressly contained in the statute but might exist from the fact that the road could not lawfully or properly be fenced at certain places (Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Brevoort, 30 Ind. 324; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Borrer, 3 Kan. App. 284, 45 Pac. 133).

The complaint must allege an actual collision under those statutes which are construed as authorizing a recovery for failure to fence only where the injury is so inflicted. Colbert v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 78 Mo. App. 176; Geiser v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 61 Mo. App. 459.

Ownership or possession of adjoining lands. — Under statutes where the company is liable for failure to fence only to the owners or persons in possession of the lands through or along which the road runs, the complaint must allege the fact of plaintiff's ownership or possession at the place where the animal came upon the track (Metlen v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 33 Mont. 45, 81 Pac. 737; Beaudin v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 31 Mont. 238, 78 Pac. 303); and where the statute is construed as being only for the benefit of adjoining landowners or the owner of animals lawfully on such premises, if plaintiff was not the owner of the premises adjoining the railroad at the place where the animal entered, the complaint should allege that the animal was upon such premises either because they were not inclosed by a lawful ages than in ordinary cases;[65] but it is sufficient if the necessary allegations appear either by direct averment or by necessary implication from the facts stated.[66] It must of course be alleged that the road was not fenced,[67] although the allegation need not be in the exact language of the statute if words of equivalent import and meaning are used;[68] but such allegation must be made with express reference to the time when the injury occurred,[69] and to the place where the animal came upon the track.[70] Ordinarily it is sufficient if the complaint follows the language of the statute;[71] but it need not expressly refer to the statute, it being sufficient if the facts alleged show a liability thereunder;[72] and it is not necessary for the fence or by permission of the owner thereof (Wages v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 230, 85 S. W. 104; Farmers' Bank v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 109 Mo. App. 165, 83 S. W. 76); but it has been held that such allegation is not absolutely essential (Wages v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., supra; Seidel v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., 109 Mo. App. 160, 83 S. W. 77); particularly where the action is brought before a justice of the peace (Wages v. Quincy, etc., R. Co., supra); and if the animal came upon the track from uninclosed lands where it was lawful for it to be at large no allegation of plaintiff's ownership of such lands is necessary (Board v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 36 Mo. App. 151).

In an action based upon a failure to maintain cattle-guards the complaint should allege: (1) That there was a certain crossing over defendant's right of way at a certain place; (2) that adjacent to such crossing defendant had failed to maintain a proper cattle-guard sufficient to prevent stock from going on the track; and (3) that by reason of such insufficient cattle-guard plaintiff's animal passed from said crossing upon defendant's track and was there struck and injured by its locomotives or cars. Jones v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 52 Mo. App. 381.

After verdict in the absence of a demurrer a complaint should be sustained as sufficient if by a liberal construction of the language used there is not a total failure to state a cause of action under the statute (Jackson v. Wabash R. Co., 85 Mo. App. 443); so after verdict an allegation that the road was not fenced "as the law directs" will be regarded as equivalent to an allegation that at the place in question the road ran through or along lands of the character where fencing is required (Nicholson v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 82 Mo. 73).

65. Manz v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 87 Mo. 278.

67. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Weaver, 34 Ind. 298; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hoff, 76 Kan. 506, 92 Pac. 539.

An allegation that the road was not fenced by defendant "or any other person at its special instance or request" does not by the unnecessary words added create any implication that the road was fenced by some person not at the instance or request of the company and is a sufficient allegation that it was unfenced. Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co. v. Mussetter, 48 Ind. 286.

68. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hixon, 101 Ind. 337; Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Tipton, 101 Ind. 197; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Shanklin, 94 Ind. 297; Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Penn, 90 Ind. 284.

So under the Indiana statute which provides that the absolute liability without regard to negligence "shall not apply to any railroad securely fenced in, and such fence properly maintained" (Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Bishop, 29 Ind. 202), it is not material that the complaint uses the words "right of way" instead of "railroad" (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hixon, 101 Ind. 337), or "sufficiently" instead of "securely" (Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Tipton, 101 Ind. 197); and it is sufficient if it alleges that at the point where the animal entered the road was "not securely fenced," omitting the word "in" (Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Penn, 90 Ind. 284; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Overman, 88 Ind. 115; Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Blodgett, 61 Ind. 315; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Harris, 49 Ind. 119), or if it alleges merely that at such point the road "was not fenced" (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Shanklin, 94 Ind. 297; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Harrigan, 94 Ind. 245; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. McKinney, 24 Ind. 283), or "was not fenced at all" (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Chenoweth, 30 Ind. 366), or was "not securely fenced as by law required" (Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 44 Ind. 409); but it is not sufficient merely to allege that the road was "not fenced as required by law" (Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Underhill, 40 Ind. 229; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Bishop, 29 Ind. 202 [overruling Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Fowler, 22 Ind. 316]), or "not fenced according to law" (Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Robinson, 35 Ind. 380), or not fenced "in manner and form as in the statute provided" (Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Keller, 49 Ind. 211), as such allegations state merely a conclusion of law (Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Underhill, supra).

complaint to set out or define what constitutes a lawful fence within the application of the statute,[73] or to state in what particular respect the fence in question was unlawful.[74] Where the statute expressly requires the road to be fenced at certain designated places the complaint must show either by direct allegation or necessary implication that the place in question was one which the statute required to be fenced.[75] This may be done either by an affirmative allegation expressly designating the place as one within the provisions of the statute,[76] or by negativing that it was at any of the places, specifying them, which are not within its application;[77] but it is not sufficient if it omits the necessary affirmative allegation and does not negative all of the places not included.[78] If the statute expressly excepts certain places the complaint must show that the place was not within the exception,[79] but the allegation need not be in express terms if this fact suffi-

Under the Missouri Double Damage Act it is sufficient to allege in the language of the statute that the animal came upon the track where the road "passes through, along, or adjoining inclosed or cultivated fields or uninclosed lands," which sufficiently negatives that the place was a public crossing, depot ground, or within the limits of a town or city. Ringo v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 91 Mo. 667, 4 S. W. 396; Meyers v. Union Trust Co., 82 Mo. 237; Williams v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 80 Mo. 597; Lainiger v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 41 Mo. 77. Fraysher v. Mississippi River, etc., R. Co., 66 Mo. App. 573; McGuire v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 43 Mo. App. 354.

Under the Missouri Double Damage Act which is construed as applying to all places along the road except at public crossings, depot grounds, and within the limits of incorporated towns and cities (Morris v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 79 Mo. 367), it is sufficient to allege that the place where the animal came upon the track was not at any of these places (McGuire v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 43 Mo. App. 354).

78. Summers v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 29 Mo. App. 41; Briscoe v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 25 Mo. App. 468; Moreland v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 17 Mo. App. 77.

Under the Illinois statute the complaint must allege that the place where the animal came upon the track was not a public crossing or within the limits of a city, town, or village (Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Williams, 27 Ill. 48; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Carter, 20 Ill. 390), but it is not necessary to allege that it was not at a private or farm crossing (Great Western R. Co. v. Helm, 27 Ill. 198, 81 Am. Dec. 226).

Under the Missouri statute which authorizes the recovery of single damages for injuries to animals "without any proof of negligence," but which provides that "this section shall not apply to any accident occurring on any portion of such road that may be inclosed by a lawful fence, or in the crossing of any public highway" (Radcliffe v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 90 Mo. 127, 2 S. W. 277; Burton v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 30 Mo. 372), the provision "may be inclosed" states an exception which must be negatived (Russell v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 83 Mo. 507); and the complaint must show both that the place was one which the company might lawfully ciently appears from the facts stated.[80] If the statute does not contain any express exception but merely makes the company liable without regard to negligence for all damages to stock where its road is not fenced, it is sufficient merely to allege that the animal came upon the track where the road was not fenced and was injured without alleging that the place was one which should have been fenced,[81] and if the place was in fact one which the company could not lawfully or properly have fenced, such as a public crossing or depot grounds, this is a matter of defense which need not be negatived in the complaint.[82] If the statute provides that the company shall be liable for damages caused or occasioned by or which may result from the failure to fence, the complaint must allege or show that the injury was so caused;[83] but it is not necessary to employ the exact term used in the statute,[84] or that it should be in the form of an express allegation,[85] it being sufficient if it appears by necessary or reasonable implication from the facts stated;[86] and in the absence of such a provision in the statute an allegation to this effect is not necessary.[87]

(B) Time For Construction of Fences. Where the statute allows a certain time after the road or a part thereof is completed or put in operation within which the fence required may be constructed, the complaint must allege that such time had elapsed at the time of the injury complained of,[88] and such allegation must have fenced and also that it was not a public crossing (Clarkson v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 84 Mo. 583; Russell v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., supra; Smith v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 29 Mo. App. 65).

It is only as to the place of entry that the rule applies, and it is not necessary to allege that the place of injury was not one of the places not required to be fenced. Great Western R. Co. v. Hanks, 36 Ill. 281.

A verbal inaccuracy in stating the place excepted cannot be taken advantage of by defendant where the pleading states the exception larger than it really is and is therefore to defendant's advantage. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Wade, 46 Ill. 115.

If the action is based upon the dangerous character of the fence and the negligence of the company in maintaining it in that condition, it is not necessary to allege that it was the duty of the company to fence at the place in question. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Seitzinger, 116 Ill. App. 55.

A complaint is sufficient which follows substantially the language of the statute and alleges that "more than six months after said railroad was in use, to wit" upon a be made with express reference to the place where the animal came upon the track.[89]

(c) Contracts Relating to Fencing. Where plaintiff relies upon a failure of the railroad company to fence its tracks according to contract that fact should be alleged in the complaint,[90] but it is not necessary that the contract or a copy thereof should be filed with the pleading;[91] nor since the breaches of the contract may be several and continuing is it necessary that the complaint should state when the contract was first broken,[92] or in an action for failure on the part of a railroad company to maintain fences already constructed by its predecessor under a written contract to construct and maintain them, that the complaint should allege that defendant had knowledge of such contract.[93] Where the statute relieves the railroad company from liability where the landowner has agreed to maintain the fence or received pay for so doing when the right of way was acquired, it is not necessary to negative this exception if it is not contained in the enacting clause of the statute.[94]

(d) Place of Entry Upon Track. Since in actions based upon the failure of a railroad company to fence its tracks it is the place where the animal came upon the track and not the place of injury which determines the liability,[95] it is not necessary that the complaint should allege that the track was not fenced at the place where the animal was injured,[96] but it is necessary that it should be alleged that it was not fenced at the place where the animal came upon it,[97] and it is not sufficient merely to allege that it was not fenced at the place of injury;[98] and if

It is a sufficient equivalent to a direct allegation that the animal came upon the track at the point where it was not fenced to allege that at a certain place defendant "neglected and failed to maintain a fence and cattle guard" and that defendant's animal "then and there, by reason of the failure of said defendant to fence," etc., went upon the road and was injured (Wabash R. Co. v. Ferris, 6 Ind. App. 30, 32 N. E. 112); or to allege that the damages were "occasioned solely on account of the defendant's failure to maintain fences," as such allegation excludes every other implication than that the animal got on the track where it was not fenced (Fields v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 80 Mo. 203).

In Indiana it has been held that if the action is before a justice a complaint is sufficient which alleges merely that the track was not fenced at the place of injury without an allegation that it was not fenced where the animal came upon it (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Argenbright, 98 Ind. 254; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Sims, 92 Ind. 496; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Stevens, 63 Ind. 337; Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 46 Ind. 215; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Adkins, 23 Ind. 340); but in a recent case which sustains this rule on the ground of former decisions the court directly admitted that the rule was well settled to the contrary as to actions in the circuit court and that it could see no reason why such allegation was not necessary in order to state a cause of action under the same statute in an action before a justice (Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Sims, supra).

Under the Oregon statute it seems that it the statute expressly requires the fence at certain points or expressly excepts certain places the place of entry must be so designated as to bring it within the application of the statute.[99]

(E) Defects in Fences and Cattle-Guards. In an action for injuries due to defects in fences and cattle-guards a complaint is sufficient which alleges that the injury was due to a failure to maintain a good and sufficient fence,[1] without any more specific reference to the particular defect,[2] or where the circumstances alleged are equivalent to an averment that the railroad fence was not properly maintained,[3] and that the injury complained of was occasioned thereby.[4] The complaint need not allege that plaintiff had not agreed to maintain the fence or received pay for so doing,[5] or that the defect had been permitted to exist for an unnecessary length of time;[6] but where a railroad company is only required to put in cattle-guards at particular places, a complaint based upon a failure to keep a cattle-guard in repair must allege that it was one which it was the duty of defendant to maintain,[7] or was located at one of the places where the statute required it to be maintained.[8]

(V) NEGATIVING CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. In most jurisdictions it is not necessary for the complaint to negative contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff;[9] but in some it has been held necessary to do so in a common-law action,[10] although not necessary where the action is based upon the statutory liability for failure on the part of the railroad company to fence its tracks,[11] or where it is alleged that the injury was wilfully inflicted.[12]

is sufficient to allege that plaintiff's animal was killed or injured by a moving train upon defendant's unfenced railroad track, without alleging that it was not fenced at the point where the animal came upon it. Eaton v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 19 Oreg. 371, 24 Pac. 413.

The fact that the action originated before a justice of the peace does not affect this rule, and while great liberality will be indulged in support of such complaints, there must at least be facts pleaded from which an inference may be drawn that plaintiff was free from fault. inflicted,[13] or if it alleges without setting out the facts connected with the injury that the injurious act was purposely done with intent to inflict the injury complained of,[14] and the term "wilful" is sufficient to characterize the act in connection with which it is used as intentionally and tortiously done.[15] Where the complaint is based upon a violation of the statutory duty to fence, and the only allegations of negligence and wilfulness relate to the question of fencing and not to the management of the train, they may be disregarded as surplusage.[16]

(VII) ACTS OR OMISSIONS OF AGENTS OR EMPLOYEES. To render a railroad company liable for injuries to animals done by an employee the complaint must allege that such employee was acting in the line of his employment or under the direction of the company.[17]

(VIII) ANSWER.[18] The answer in an action for injuries to animals must be framed with such clearness and certainty as to show whether defendant intends to deny the complaint or to confess and avoid it.[19] An answer to traverse the allegations of the complaint must do so expressly and not argumentatively or by implication,[20] and a plea of avoidance must allege facts and not merely matters of evidence;[21] and where the complaint in separate paragraphs alleges different grounds of liability, an answer which assumes to answer the entire complaint is bad if it contains nothing which would constitute a defense to one of the grounds of liability charged.[22] An answer alleging that plaintiff was a servant of defendant whose duty it was to keep animals off the track must allege that such duty applied to the place where the animal in question came upon it;[23] if it alleges that the injury was due to the gross negligence of plaintiff himself it must state in what such gross negligence consisted;[24] and if it alleges that plaintiff negligently turned his animal out in the vicinity of a station, it must further allege that the animal went upon the track at such place where it was not the duty of the company to fence;[25] but where defendant denies plaintiff's allegation of negligence and sets up a counterclaim for injury to the train it is not necessary affirmatively to allege that defendant was free from all fault or negligence.[26]

In an action against a railroad company and a person named as an officer thereof the complaint does not state any cause of action as against the latter where it fails to state what office he holds or to allege that he was in command of the train or present at the time of the injury complained of. to animals, if defective, may be amended if the amendment does not change or introduce a different cause of action,[28] and is no more than a particularization of the more general allegations of the original statement;[29] and where the action is originally brought before a justice such amendment may be made on appeal in the circuit court;[30] but the complaint cannot be so amended as to change the cause of action.[31] The Missouri statute now expressly allows the complaint to be amended in the circuit court on appeal,[32] but provides that no new item or cause of action not embraced or intended to be included in the original statement shall be added by the amendment.[33]

h. Issues, Proof, and Variance — (i) Issues Raised and Matters Determinable. Only such matters may be adjudicated or made a basis of recovery as are put in issue by the pleadings,[34] and while an immaterial variance between the allegations and the proof may be disregarded,[35] plaintiff cannot state a particular cause of action and recover upon an entirely different ground of liability,[36] or set out particular acts of negligence and recover upon proof of negligence in other respects than those alleged.[37] So where the complaint charges only a wilful and intentional injury plaintiff cannot, without further pleadings, recover on the ground of negligence;[38] and if the complaint alleges only a failure to fence plaintiff cannot recover on the ground of negligence in the operation of the train,[39] or in the manner of constructing a bridge or trestle on which an animal is injured,[40] or on the ground of negligence in allowing a gate in the fence to be open;[41] or if it alleges only a failure to construct cattle-guards he cannot recover on the ground of a failure to fence;[42] but where the statute requires the maintenance of both fences and cattle-guards a complaint alleging a failure as to both states but a single cause of action, and proof of either with proof of the other necessary allegations will entitle plaintiff to recover.[43] Where there are two fencing statutes, one expressly requiring fencing at certain places and allowing double damages, and the other merely making the company liable for actual damages without proof of negligence where its track is not fenced, if the action is based upon the former statute and the place unfenced is not within the application of that statute, there can be no recovery under the latter;[44] but if it does not clearly appear that the action is based upon the former statute the mere fact that the complaint prays for double damages will not prevent the recovery of actual damages if it states a good cause of action under the latter statute,[45] or at common law.[46] Plaintiff is, however, entitled to go to the jury upon every fact of negligence alleged in his complaint and denied by the answer in so far at least as evidence has been produced tending to sustain them.[47]

(II) EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE UNDER PLEADINGS — (A) In General. As in other actions the evidence must correspond with the allegations and be restricted to the issues.[48] If, as it is permissible to do,[49] negligence is alleged in general terms without specifying the particular acts constituting such negligence, evidence is admissible of any act or omission which tends to support the pleading,[50] or of any degree of negligence necessary to entitle plaintiff to recover,[51] and if the action is at common law and not based upon the statute evidence is admissible of statutory negligence,[52] such as a failure to give crossing signals,[53] or running at a prohibited rate of speed,[54] and if it merely alleges a negligent killing or injury and the form of allegation is not objected to, the evidence is not limited to negligence in the operation of the train,[55] but plaintiff may show negligence on the part of the company consisting in the obstruction of a crossing,[56] or failure to fence its tracks.[57] If, however, plaintiff voluntarily limits his allegation of negligence to specific acts, evidence of negligence in other respects than those alleged is not admissible.[58] So if the complaint charges a failure to fence evidence is not admissible of negligence in the operation of the train,[59] or a defective condition of a crossing,[60] or a failure to give crossing signals as required by statute;[61] nor if it charges a failure to keep the fences in repair is evidence admissible of negligence in leaving open a gate.[62] Under a general allegation of negligence in the operation of the train not specifying the particular acts constituting such negligence plaintiff may introduce evidence of any negligence connected with the operation of the train,[63] and evidence is admissible of negligence in failing to keep a proper lookout for stock,[64] or of failure to use due care to avoid the injury after they were discovered,[65] or of negligence consisting in a failure to give signals at crossings as required by law,[66] or operating the train at a prohibited rate of speed,[67] or without ringing a bell while running through city limits as required by an ordinance,[68] provided the action is at common law and not based specifically upon the statute or ordinance prescribing the regulation;[69] but under such allegation the evidence must be confined to acts connected with the operation of the train,[70] and evidence is not admissible of a failure to fence,[71] or of a defective condition of a crossing,[72] or of the equipment of the train,[73] or failure to post notices of the injury as required by law,[74] or that a gate in the fence was left open,[75] or that the company had allowed the view of the track to become obstructed by bushes growing on the right of way,[76] or allowed substances calculated to attract animals to remain upon the track.[77] An allegation that plaintiff's animal was killed by collision

In Missouri it has been held that under a general allegation of negligence not specifying its character, evidence is admissible of a failure to fence (Minter v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 82 Mo. 128; Calvert v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 38 Mo. 467); and on the authority of these decisions it has been held in later cases that evidence of a failure to fence is admissible where the complaint alleges generally negligence in the operation of the train, although in each case a doubt was expressed as to the correctness of the holding under this form of allegation (Hurley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 57 Mo. App. 675; Boone v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 20 Mo. App. 232).

with defendant's train is sufficiently broad to admit evidence that it was so injured by the collision as to necessitate its being killed;[78] but since where animals are killed at different times the causes of action are separate and distinct, if the complaint charges only one occurrence evidence is not admissible of injuries to animals at a time different from that alleged in the complaint.[79] An allegation that plaintiff sustained damages in a specific sum is tantamount to an allegation of value, and in the absence of demurrer is sufficient to permit evidence of the market value of the animals killed.[80]

(B) Under General Denial or General Issue. In a common-law action on the case defendant under a plea of the general issue may not only put plaintiff upon proof of the whole charge contained in the complaint but may give in evidence any justification or excuse.[81] In a statutory action based upon a failure to fence defendant may show under a general denial that at the point where the animal came upon the track it could not lawfully have maintained a fence,[82] but the general denial only puts in issue defendant's right to fence at the place in question,[83] and unless such affirmative defense is specially pleaded defendant cannot show a limitation or release of liability growing out of a provision of its charter,[84] or conduct on the part of plaintiff amounting to an estoppel.[85] Contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff to be available as a defense must be specially pleaded,[86] unless the complaint alleges that plaintiff was without fault or negligence.[87]

(III) MATTERS TO BE PROVED UNDER PLEADINGS. To enable plaintiff to recover he must prove each and every allegation of the complaint which is not admitted and which is necessary to establish the cause of action alleged,[88] but not an allegation which is mere surplusage and not essential to make out his case.[89] In a common-law action the allegation of negligence is material and must be proved.[90] In an action under the statute plaintiff must prove the allegation that the road was not fenced,[91] and such other allegations as are necessary to bring the case within the provisions of the particular statute sued on,[92] such as that the place was one which the statute required to be fenced,[93] or was not one after the introduction of evidence so as to make it correspond with the facts as proved.[2]

i. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — (i) IN GENERAL. In actions for injuries to animals as in other actions, the burden is upon plaintiff to show every fact necessary to establish his cause of action,[3] and he must of course show that the injury complained of was done by the railroad company.[4] In the absence of statute negligence on the part of the company will not be presumed,[5] but on the contrary it will be presumed that the train was operated with ordinary care and diligence,[6] particularly where the animal injured was a trespasser,[7] and the burden is upon plaintiff to show negligence on the part of the railroad company or its employees,[8] and that such negligence was the cause of the injury complained of,[9] even where the negligence consists in the omission of some statutory duty.[10] So also in those jurisdictions where railroad companies are required to fence their tracks if the animal came upon the track at a place not required to be fenced the case must be determined on common-law principles,[11] and the burden is upon plaintiff to show negligence,[12] and the same rule applies in cases where the animal came upon the track by breaking over a sufficient fence or properly constructed cattle-guard.[13]

(II) FACT OF KILLING OR INJURY — (A) In General. In the absence of statute the mere fact that an animal is killed or injured by a train raises no presumption of negligence on the part of the railroad company or its servants, and the burden is upon plaintiff to show the existence of such negligence.[14]

(B) Finding Dead or Injured Animal Near Track. The mere fact that an animal is found dead or injured in the vicinity of a railroad track raises no legal presumption that it was killed or injured by a train and the burden is upon plaintiff to establ sh this fact.[15]

(III) STATUTORY PROVISIONS. In a number of jurisdictions the common-law rule as to the burden of proof has been changed by statutes which make proof of the injury to an animal by a railroad train prima facie evidence of negligence, placing the burden upon the company to rebut the presumption of negligence,[16]

In South Carolina the contrary rule prevails, it being held, even in the absence of statute, that proof of the injury is prima facie evidence of negligence and places the burden upon the railroad company to show the exercise of due care (Joyner v. South Carolina R. Co., 26 S. C. 49, 1 S. E. 52; Walker v. Columbia, etc., R. Co., 25 S. C. 141; Roof v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 4 S. C. 61; Murray v. South Carolina R. Co., 10 Rich. 227, 70 Am. Dec. 219; Danner v. South Carolina R. Co., 4 Rich. 329, 55 Am. Dec. 678), and that the presumption applies notwithstanding the existence of a stock law in the county where the injury occurred (Davis v. Florida Cent., etc., R. Co., 47 S. C. 390, 25 S. E. 224), and is not limited to cases where defendant introduces no testimony, but when once established by proof of the injury can be rebutted only by evidence on the part of defendant sufficiently strong affirmatively to overcome it (Joyner v. South Carolina R. Co., supra); but it has been held that the presumption should not be applied in cases of injuries to animals not purely domestic, such as dogs (Fowles v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 73 S. C. 306, 53 S. E. 534; Wilson v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 10 Rich. 52).

In Wisconsin it has been held that proof of the injury makes a prima facie case of negligence, but that where the animal was wrongfully at large plaintiff's negligence in permitting the animal to be at large counterbalances the presumption of negligence arising from the fact of injury, and that the burden is upon plaintiff to show such gross negligence or wilful misconduct as will entitle him to recover under such circumstances. or where certain duties and precautions are prescribed by statute to show that the statutory requirements were complied with,[17] or that under the circumstances and without fault on the part of the company's employees, such compliance was impossible.[18] The statutes, however, raise no presumption that the railroad company did the killing or injury, which fact must be affirmatively shown by plaintiff,[19] nor do they raise any presumption of wantonness or wilful injury in cases where plaintiff's own evidence shows circumstances which would prevent his recovering merely on the ground of negligence;[20] and if the complaint specifies the particular acts of negligence relied on the presumption extends only to the particular negligence alleged.[21] The statutory presumption has been held to

The Arkansas statute is construed as making proof of the injury prima facie evidence of negligence and placing the burden upon defendant to show the exercise of due care, although it does not expressly so provide, such being "the nearest approach to the legislative intent that the court was able to extract from it, consistent with the constitution." St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, 57 Ark. 136, 20 S. W. 1083.

The existence of a stock law in the county where the injury occurred does not prevent the application of the statutory presumption. Roberts v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 88 N. C. 560.

In North Carolina it has been stated that the presumption applies only when the facts are not known or when from the testimony they are uncertain (Mesic v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 120 N. C. 489, 26 S. E. 633; Durham v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 82 N. C. 352; Doggett v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 81 N. C. 459); but in more recent cases the expression has been criticized as misleading and construed as meaning merely that the presumption may be rebutted and that it is overcome where the undisputed facts show that there was no negligence on the part of defendant, it being held that the statutory presumption applies in all cases of injury to stock by a railroad and that if defendant introduces evidence tending to show the absence of negligence it is a question for the jury whether the presumption has been overcome (Baker v. Roanoke, etc., R. Co., 133 N. C. 31, 45 N. E. 347; Hardison v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 120 N. C. 492, 26 S. E. 630).

apply to cases of injury as well as where the animal was killed,[22] and without regard to whether the injury was mortal or otherwise,[23] and also to cases of injury to animals in the custody or under the control of the owner or some other person as well as animals running at large;[24] but under some of the statutes the presumption applies only to injuries inflicted at certain places,[25] or inflicted directly by the cars or locomotive,[26] or where the action is instituted within a certain time after the injury;[27] and if the case, by reason of the circumstances of the injury or the time of instituting the action, is not within the application of the statute, the burden is upon plaintiff to show negligence on the part of the railroad company or its servants.[28]

(iv) Evidence Rebutting Statutory Presumption. Where plaintiff proves the killing or injury of his animal by a railroad train and the company introduces no evidence to rebut the statutory presumption of negligence arising therefrom, plaintiff is entitled to recover;[29] but the presumption is not conclusive but may be rebutted and overcome by evidence,[30] and where defendant introduces evidence to rebut the presumption an issue arises which should be submitted to the jury.[31] In order to rebut the presumption, however, defendant must show affirmatively that there was no negligence or that by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care the injury could not have been avoided,[32] and it is not sufficient to show merely that there was probably no negligence,[33] or that those in charge of the train knew nothing of the happening of the injury,[34] or to show the exercise of due care in one respect only,[35] as that all efforts were made to avoid the injury after discovery of the animal without showing that a proper lookout was main-

but if there is any testimony in rebuttal tending to contradict that of defendant's wi nesses and to support the presumption of negligence, the question is for the jury,[45] and a verdict for plaintiff based upon such conflicting evidence will not ordinarily be interfered with,[46] although plaintiff's evidence is entirely circumstantial,[47] or not of a very conclusive character.[48]

(v) PLACE OF INJURY AND VENUE. Where the statutes restrict the venue of actions for injury to animals according to the place of injury this fact is jurisdictional and must be affirmatively proved,[49] and the burden is upon plaintiff to show according to the provision of the particular statute that the injury occurred in the county where the action is instituted,[50] or in the township or an adjoining township.[51]

(vi) FENCES AND CATTLE-GUARDS — (A) In General. In an action based upon the failure of a railroad company to fence its tracks no proof of negligence is necessary,[52] as the law attributes to the mere fact of not fencing at places where it ought to do so such negligence as will render the company liable,[53] so that ordinarily a prima facie case for plaintiff is made by proof of plaintiff's ownership, the injury, and a failure to fence at the place in question,[54] and the burden is upon defendant to show any facts or circumstances relieving it from this duty,[55] unless such facts appear from plaintiff's evidence.[56] The burden is, however, upon plaintiff to show that the road was not fenced,[57] at the place where the animal came upon the track,[58] his ownership or possession of the animal injured,[59] defendant's ownership or operation of the road where the injury occurred,[60] and every fact necessary to bring the case within the application of the particular statute upon which the action is based.[61] So if the statute only requires fencing at certain places or excepts certain places the burden is upon plaintiff to show that the place in question was one which the company was required to fence,[62] or was not one of the places excepted;[63] but if the statute contains no exceptions plaintiff is not required to show that the place was not one to which the statutes have been

In Iowa the statute making railroad companies liable for injuries to stock occasioned by its failure to fence provides that "in order to recover it shall only be necessary for the owner to prove the injury or destruction of his property," and under this provision it has been held that proof of the injury makes a prima facie case for plaintiff and places the burden upon defendant to show the building of a good and sufficient fence (Brentner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 68 Iowa 530, 23 N. W. 245, 27 N. W. 605); but in later cases without expressly deciding what is essential to establish a prima facie case for plaintiff, it has been held that the provision quoted must be construed with other parts of the statute and that it is not sufficient merely for plaintiff to prove the injury or destruction of the property (Wall v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 89 Iowa 193, 56 N. W. 436; Manwell v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 80 Iowa 662, 45 N. W. 568).

The Texas statute is construed as placing the burden of proof upon defendant to show that the road was fenced (Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Childress, 64 Tex. 346; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 262); the burden being upon plaintiff to show his ownership of the animal, the fact of injury and its value, and upon defendant to show that the road was fenced or that the place in question was one not required to be fenced, or that the owner unlawfully permitted the animal to be upon the track, which being shown the burden is upon plaintiff to show negligence on the part of the railroad company (Louisiana Western Extension R. Co. v. Deon, (Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 104).

Frightening animals.— Under the Missouri statute making railroad companies liable where their tracks are not fenced for injuries due to animals being frightened by passing trains and running upon bridges or trestles or into fences or other obstructions, the burden is upon plaintiff to show: (1) That the animal went upon the track at a place not fenced as required by law; (2) that it was frightened by a locomotive or train of cars; and (3) that it was injured by running upon or against one of the places or obstructions named. Yeager v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 61 Mo. App. 594, holding that where an animal was injured by going on defendant's bridge plaintiff could not recover in the absence of proof that it was frightened by a train and went upon the bridge for that reason.

construed as not applying,[64] and if the place was one which could not lawfully or properly have been fenced the burden is upon defendant to show this fact,[65] and this notwithstanding the place was within the limits of a town or city.[66] Where the statute is not for the benefit of the public generally, plaintiff must show that he is a person entitled to the benefit of the statute,[67] and if the statute provides that the company shall be liable for damages occasioned by its failure to fence the burden is upon plaintiff to show that the injury was a consequence of the absence of the fence.[68] If plaintiff has agreed to maintain the fence or received compensation for so doing, the burden is upon defendant to show such fact in defense.[69] It will also be presumed that a good and lawful fence such as the company is required to construct will exclude all domestic animals,[70] and where it is claimed that such a fence would not if constructed have excluded the particular animal injured, the burden is upon defendant to show this fact.[71]

(B) Effect of Existence of Lawful Fence. Where a railroad company has properly fenced its tracks no presumption of negligence arises from the mere fact that an animal is injured thereon,[72] and the burden is upon plaintiff to show that there was actual negligence on the part of the company which caused the injury

If it would endanger the lives or safety of the company's employees engaged in switching or operating the trains to maintain fences or cattle-guards at the place in question the burden is upon defendant to show this fact (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Modesitt, 124 Ind. 212, 24 N. E. 986; Pennsylvania Co. v. Lindley, 2 Ind. App. 111, 28 N. E. 106; Cox v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 128 Mo. 362, 31 S. Where a railroad bridge abuts directly upon a highway so that a cattle-guard could not be constructed outside of the bridge without obstructing the highway, the burden is upon defendant to show that in the construction of the bridge it had adopted all precautions to prevent animals passing thereon from the highway consistent with the proper conduct of its business and the safety of its trains and passengers. complained of,[73] and that there was such negligence after the animal was discovered upon the track.[74]

(c) Place of Entry of Animal on Track. Since the place of entry governs the liability the burden is upon plaintiff to show that the animal came upon the track at a place where it was not fenced,[75] but notwithstanding the liabil ty is so determined,[76] it will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary that the animal came upon the track at the place where it was killed or injured,[77] and consequently that if this was a place which should have been fenced the company is liable;[78] but on the other hand, if there is no evidence as to the place of entry and it is shown that the place of injury was one not required to be fenced, it must also be presumed that the company was not required to fence where the animal entered.[79] The presumption that the place of injury was also the place of entry is a rebuttable one,[80] and can be entertained only in cases where there is no evidence as to the place where the animal actually came upon the track.[81]

(d) Defects in Fences and Cattle-Guards. In an action based upon a failure of the railroad company to maintain fences and cattle-guards in a proper state of repair, the burden is upon plaintiff to show their insufficiency,[82] that the animal came upon the track through or over such fence or cattle-guard,[83] and under statutes merely requiring fences at certain places, that the place where the animal came upon the track by reason of such defect was one which the company was required to fence;[84] but this being shown the burden is upon defendant to show a sufficient reason for failing properly to maintain them at the place in question.[85] Negligence on the part of the railroad company in failing to repair a fence or cattle-guard will be presumed without proof of actual notice of the defect where it is shown to have existed for an unreasonable length of time,[86] and where it is shown that an animal escaped from an adjoining inclosure through a fence which defendant was bound to maintain and which at some places was defective and at others sufficient, it will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary that the animal escaped at the place where the fence was insufficient.[87]

dition.[88] In an action for injury to animals which went upon the track through a gate or bars in the railroad fence, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show that it was open through defendant's fault,[89] by showing that it was left open by defendant,[90] or was open by reason of a defective condition which was known or should have been known to defendant,[91] or if left open by some third person that it had been allowed to remain open for such length of time after the company knew or should have known of it as to charge the company with negligence in not closing it.[92]

(VIII) SIGNALS AND LOOKOUTS. In an action based upon a failure to give crossing signals as required by statute, the burden is upon plaintiff to show that the signal was not given,[93] and also that such omission was the cause of the injury complained of,[94] unless by statute the burden is placed upon defendant to show that the omission was not the cause of the injury.[95] Under statutes making proof of the injury prima facie evidence of negligence and placing the burden of proof upon the company to show that all the statutory requirements were complied with,[96] the burden is upon the company to show that the signals were given,[97] and that a proper lookout was maintained; [98] and in the absence of statute it has been held sufficient to constitute a prima facie case to show that the animal was on the track where it could have been seen, if a proper lookout had been maintained, for a distance within which the train might have been stopped.[99]

It does not make a prima facie case for plaintiff to show that the bars had been left down by some third person and that an animal went through them upon the track and was injured, but plaintiff must go further and show that defendant negligently permitted them to remain down. Under the Missouri statute as amended in 1881 proof that an animal was injured by a train at a public crossing and that the statutory signals were not given makes a prima facie case for plaintiff and places the burden upon defendant to show that the omission was not the proximate cause of the injury (Roberts v. Walker, 113 Mo. App. 6, 87 S. W. 601; Atterberry v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 110 Mo. App. 608, 85 S. W. 114; Barr v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 30 Mo. App. 248; Smith v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 19 Mo. App. 120); unless of course plaintiff's own testimony discloses this fact (Atterberry v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., supra); but the presumption may be rebutted and whether it has been overcome by defendant's evidence is a question for the jury (Barr v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., supra). Prior to this amendment it was held that the burden was upon plaintiff to show some connection between the omission to give the signal and the injury complained of (Holman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 62 Mo. 562; Stoneman v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 58 Mo. 503 [distinguishing Howenstein v. Pacific R. Co., 55 Mo. 33]); but that if there was any evidence tending to show this it became a question for the jury (Alexander v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 76 Mo. 494; Goodwin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 75 Mo. 73); and it was subsequently held sufficient to make a prima facie case for plaintiff to show that the signals were not given and that the animal was in a position to have escaped if they had been given (Taylor v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 83 Mo. 386; Turner v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 78 Mo. 578).

(IX) RATE OF SPEED. In an action to recover for injury to an animal on the ground of negligence in running a train at a rate of speed in violation of an ordinance plaintiff has the burden of proving that the ordinance was in force at the time of the injury,[1] and in the absence of statute that the injury was directly due to such excessive rate of speed;[2] but in some jurisdictions where it is shown that an animal was injured by a train while running at a prohibited rate of speed, a presumption arises that the injury was the result of the company's negligence,[3] and the burden is upon the railroad company to rebut it.[4] In the absence of statute or ordinance no particular rate of speed is negligence as matter of law.[5]

(X) PRECAUTIONS AS TO ANIMALS SEEN ON OR NEAR TRACK. In the absence of statute if the animal injured was wrongfully upon the track the burden is upon plaintiff to show negligence on the part of the railroad company after the animal was discovered,[6] and ordinarily in any case where the question is whether defendant was negligent in failing to stop the train after discovering the animal upon the track, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff;[7] but it has been held that where the evidence shows that an animal ran along the track in front of the train for a distance within which a train could ordinarily be stopped, if there were any circumstances in the particular case making it unsafe or impracticable to stop the train the burden is upon defendant to show this fact.[8]

(XI) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. The rule varies in different jurisdictions as to whether plaintiff must allege and prove the absence of contributory negligence on his part or whether it is a matter of defense to be proved by defendant;[9] so in actions for injuries to animals it is held in some jurisdictions that plaintiff must show that he was not guilty of contributory negligence,[10] and in others that the burden of proving contributory negligence is upon defendant.[11]

it is shown that the track was straight for over a mile, the animal black, and snow upon the ground, and the tracks of the animal showed that it had wandered along the track for a considerable distance before being struck, this is sufficient to put defendant upon proof of any circumstances which might have prevented its servants from avoiding the injury.

In Illinois it is held that where the animal injured was in charge or under the control of the owner or some person representing him the burden is upon plaintiff to show the absence of contributory negligence (Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Trowbridge, 31 Ill. Co. v. Woosley, 85 Ill. 370).

International, etc., R. Co. v. Hughes, 81 Tex. 184, 16 S. W. 875. In an action for injury to a team while unloading freight evidence is admissible of instructions given by the station agent to other consignees of freight as to the place for stopping teams to show that plaintiff's conduct was in accordance with the company's general course of business with others and should therefore have been anticipated by defendant. Bachant v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 187 Mass. 392, 73 N. E. 642, 105 Am. St. Rep. 408. Burbank v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 70 N. H. 398, 48 Atl. 280. Where plaintiff's witnesses testified that the cattle killed were of a certain breed and value, it is error to exclude the evidence of a witness for defendant who testified that he was familiar with the cattle killed and the market value of the cattle and that they did not have the appearance of cattle of the breed testified to and were of much less value than claimed by plaintiff's witnesses. Evidence inadmissible.— In an action for negligent injury the fact that the people of a certain section had held a mass meeting and agreed to disregard a stock law does not repeal the law, and evidence of such fact is inadmissible. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Walker, 87 Ga. 204, 13 S. E. 511. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. O'Brien, 34 Ill. App. 155. Where there was but one set of tracks on the roadbed near the place of accident which led directly to where the animal was killed, evidence as to whether there were other animals in the field where the injury occurred is properly excluded as immaterial. Georgia Cent. R. Co. v. Edmonston, 135 Ala. 336, 33 So. 480. On the issue as to whether an animal was killed by the train or was which are sufficiently within the knowledge of the jury,[19] or as to facts which being conceded would not affect defendant's liability in the particular case.[20] A witness may testify as to his opinion or conclusion where the matter to which the testimony relates could not be reproduced or described to the jury as it appeared to the witness at the time,[21] or where it involves technical knowledge and experience;[22] but not where the facts can be clearly stated and the jury is competent to draw its own conclusions.[23] Upon the question of damages evidence as to the quantity and value of the milk given by the cows killed is admissible for the purpose of determining their market value,[24] and testimony as to what plaintiff paid for the animal injured is admissible as evidence of its value;[25] and where the statute provides for a penalty only for a failure to construct cattle-guards to be fixed within certain limits by the jury, evidence of the value of the animal is admissible to aid the jury in determining the amount of the penalty to be imposed.[26]

(II) Customary Methods and Acts. Whether negligence exists must ordinarily be determined by the facts in the particular case in which the question arises, and it is not admissible to show customary or habitual conduct of defendant in order to show the existence or absence of negligence at the particular time.[27] So evidence of the usual speed of defendant's train at the place of injury before and after the injury complained of is not admissible as evidence of negligence at the time of the injury;[28] and in an action based upon the alleged insufficiency of fences, gates, or cattle-guards, it has been held that evidence is not admissible that the cattle-guard in question was the same as those in general use on defendant's road,[29] or that the fastenings on the gate in question were like those in general use;[30] but it has been held that evidence that the same make of cattle-guard was in general use among well equipped railroads and was regarded as the best known make is admissible as tending to show the sufficiency of the cattle-guard in question, although not conclusive of such fact.[31]

(III) Similar Facts or Transactions. In actions for injury to animals

the evidence must ordinarily be limited to the facts and circumstances of the particular injury complained of,[32] and in an action for negligent injury evidence is not admissible of negligence in the operation of other of defendant's trains at different times,[33] or of injuries to other animals at the same place at different times,[34] or even at the same time;[35] or in an action based upon the defective condition of a crossing that other animals had been injured on the same crossing,[36] unless expressly admitted only for the purpose of charging the company with notice of the defect.[37] It has been held, however, as tending to show the insufficiency of a fence or cattle-guard, that evidence is admissible that other animals had previously gotten over the fence at the same place,[38] or over a different cattle-guard if it was shown to be of the same kind and character as the one in question,[39] or that similar fastenings for gates had proved insufficient where the court instructed the jury that before such evidence could be considered it must be shown not only that the fastenings were similar but that the manner in which they were put on and the gates hung were in all respects alike;[40] but on the contrary it has been held that evidence offered on the part of defendant that other cattle-guards similar to the one in question had proved sufficient is inadmissible.[41]

Where the place of entry is in issue plaintiff claiming that the animal entered through a defective railroad fence and the company claiming that it entered through a gate left open by plaintiff, testimony of a witness that he found fresh breaks in the boards of the fence and boards nailed on with new nails and hair upon the broken boards is admissible as tending to show an entry through the fence. Co. v. Gleason, 69 Ga. 200), but the earlier decisions to this effect have been expressly overruled (Georgia Southern, etc., R. Co. v. Cartledge, 116 Ga. 164, 42 S. E. 405, 59 L. R. A. 118).

in question as one which might lawfully be fenced;[44] and where there is any evidence of condition shortly after the injury different from that claimed to exist at the time of the injury, it is competent to show that such condition was a changed one made better by repairs after the injury occurred.[45] Evidence that after the injury complained of sign-boards were erected and signals given at the crossing where the injury occurred is not admissible.[46]

(v) Fences and Cattle-Guards—(a) In General. In actions based upon a failure to construct and maintain proper fences and cattle-guards, witnesses can ordinarily be permitted to testify only as to the facts and not matters of opinion.[47] It is competent to show the facts as to the condition of the tracks, their location, and the uses made of them at the place in question;[48] but the opinions of witnesses are not admissible as to whether defendant could properly fence at the place in question,[49] or whether the construction of cattle-guards at such places would endanger the lives or limbs of defendant's employees,[50] or whether the fences or cattle-guards constructed were properly constructed and sufficient for the purpose intended.[51] In an action based upon the statutory liability for failure to fence, evidence of negligence in the operation of the train is irrelevant and inadmissible;[52] but in an action based upon negligence in the operation of the train, evidence of the absence of fences or cattle-guards is admissible as bearing upon the degree of care to be exercised;[53] and conversely it is competent for the railroad company to show that the owner of the animal injured had been paid for constructing and maintaining the fence at the place where the animal came upon the track.[54] In an action based upon a failure to fence where it is claimed that the injury occurred upon defendant's depot grounds, a deed of the land purchased for such ground is inadmissible,[55] and where the railroad tracks do not intersect the streets of an adjoining town the plat of such town is not admissible.[56]

(b) Condition of Fences and Cattle-Guards. The liability of a railroad company for a defective condition of its fences or cattle-guards depends upon their condition at the time of the injury alleged to have resulted therefrom, and only such evidence is admissible as tends to show the condition at that time;[57] but whether evidence of their condition at other times is admissible for this purpose depends upon the circumstances.[58] Evidence of their condition at a time subsequent to the injury is not ordinarily admissible in the absence of other evidence showing that there had been no change of condition in the meanwhile;[59] but evidence is admissible of a defective condition at a time prior to the injury if accompanied by evidence that such condition had continued up to the time of the injury,[60] or of a defective condition subsequent to the injury if accompanied by evidence that there had been no change during the interval.[61] Evidence is also admissible as to the condition very shortly after the injury,[62] unless there is evidence tending to show a change of condition,[63] and where there is evidence that the bars were improperly constructed, evidence that they had frequently been down and defendant's servants had sometimes put them up is admissible to show knowledge on the part of the company of the defect.[64] The liability of the company also depends upon the condition of the fence at the place where the animal came upon the track and the evidence should ordinarily be limited accordingly,[65] and it has been held that evidence is not admissible as to the condition of the fences at the place of injury;[66] but it is competent to show, in addition to a defective condition at the place of entry, that the fence was defective at other places in the vicinity as tending to show such a general defective condition as to charge defendant with knowledge thereof.[67]

(VI) CROSSINGS, GATES, AND BARS. In an action based upon negligence on the part of the railroad company in leaving open a gate in the railroad fence, evidence is not admissible that on a former occasion defendant's agent was seen to pass through the gate without closing it;[68] but where the sufficiency of the gate and its fastenings is in issue, evidence that the calves of the cows injured were in a pasture on the other side of the track opposite to the gate is admissible as tending to show that the gate was opened by pressure of the cows against it instead of being left open by some third person as claimed by defendant.[69] The opinion of a witness is not admissible as to the sufficiency of the fastenings of a gate;[70] but the testimony of a witness that almost any animal could throw the gate down is not objectionable as an opinion or as invading the province of the jury,[71] and testimony as to experiments made by witnesses with the gate shortly after the

If defendant's evidence tends to show that the track could not be fenced without danger to its employees as near to the end of the switch as where the animal came upon it, plaintiff may show in rebuttal that defendant had fenced nearer than this at the other end of the switch, although the fence at such place had nothing to do with the injury. injury is admissible to show its condition.[72] Where the action is based upon a failure to maintain a gate at a crossing, evidence offered on the part of defendant tending to show that it was not required to maintain cattle-guards also is irrelevant.[73]

(VII) Mode of Running Trains. In an action for injury to animals due to negligence in the operation of a train, evidence is admissible as to the speed of the train,[74] a failure to give signals,[75] the distance that an animal could be seen at the time and place of the injury,[76] whether the view of the track was obstructed,[77] and experiments made by witnesses as to the distance an animal could be seen,[78] or as to the existence or effect of any obstruction of view,[79] provided such experiments were made at the place and under conditions similar to those existing at the time of the injury,[80] the character and equipment of the locomotive,[81] and if the injury was at night the character of headlight carried,[82] and where the engineer testifies that it was a very dark night, plaintiff may introduce in rebuttal evidence of the phase of the moon and the hour at which it rose.[83] Testimony of the engineer is admissible on the part of defendant that after the animal was seen he could not have stopped the train without endangering its safety and that of the passengers; [84] but the testimony of other witnesses as to whether the engineer could have done anything more than he did to avoid the injury is inadmissible, being a question for the jury to determine from the facts shown.[85]

(VIII) Violation of Statutes and Ordinances. Since the statutes requiring crossing signals are intended for the benefit of animals as well as persons,[86] in an action for injury to an animal rightfully upon a highway crossing, evidence of a failure to give such signals is admissible on the question of defendant's negligence.[87] So also in actions for negligent injury to animals in a town

or city an ordinance is admissible which limits the rate of speed within the corporate limits,[88] or requires a bell to be continuously rung while passing through such limits;[89] and an ordinance prohibiting stock from running at large is admissible upon the question of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff,[90] although neither is conclusive evidence of negligence on the part of either of the parties.[91]

(IX) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF OWNER. Where the animal injured escaped from plaintiff's field through a defective railroad fence which it was defendant's duty to maintain, evidence of notice to the owner that the animal had on previous occasions escaped and been upon the track is immaterial,[92] but it is competent for defendant to show that plaintiff's animals were frequently at large and that they escaped over plaintiff's fence.[93] Where the defense is contributory negligence in allowing stock to run at large in a city, an ordinance prohibiting stock from running at large is admissible on the part of the defendant,[94] and evidence is admissible on the part of plaintiff which would tend to establish that the stock were at large without his fault.[95] In an action for injury to a team while being driven over a crossing evidence of the speed of the train is admissible as bearing upon the question of plaintiff's negligence.[96]

k. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence — (I) IN GENERAL. In actions for injury to animals the general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions apply,[97] and there must be a preponderance of evidence on behalf of plaintiff to connect defendant with the injury complained of,[98] and except where by statute the mere fact of injury raises a presumption of negligence and places the burden upon defendant to rebut it,[99] to show the existence of negligence,[1]

the protection of persons and property at the crossing, evidence of a failure to give such signals and slow up the speed of the train as required by statute is admissible as evidence of negligence in an action for injury to an animal in the immediate vicinity of the crossing. and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury complained of,[2] and that plaintiff was the owner of the animal injured.[3] The facts necessary to sustain a recovery may, however, be established either by direct testimony or by proof of circumstances from which they may be reasonably inferred by the jury.[4] Plaintiff may by circumstantial evidence alone establish both the fact of injury by defendant's train,[5] and also the fact of negligence,[6] and plaintiff's case is strongly fortified by failure of defendant to introduce the testimony of its employees who were present at the accident;[7] but to sustain the verdict on circumstantial evidence there must be some connection between the facts proved and the fact at issue,[8] and the circumstances sufficiently strong and connected to create more than a mere conjecture or suspicion.[9] A mere scintilla of proof is not sufficient,[10] nor is it sufficient for plaintiff merely to show the fact of injury,[11] or the fact of injury and also the omission of some statutory duty without any evidence tending to show that such omission was the cause of the injury.[12] Where the only direct testimony as to the circumstances of the injury is that of defendant's servants who testify positively that there was no negligence and they are not in any wise contradicted or discredited, a verdict for plaintiff cannot be sustained.[13]

ever, to show merely that the animal was found dead near the track without any signs of violence or indications of having been struck by a train.[18] There must be substantial facts shown from which it may be reasonably inferred that the animal was killed by the train,[19] as it cannot be said that there is a preponderance of evidence for plaintiff where the circumstances shown are equally consistent with some other cause of injury;[20] and where defendant's servants testify positively that no animal was struck and their testimony is not contradicted and the circumstantial evidence is not inconsistent therewith, the jury cannot disregard their testimony.[21]

(III) NATURE AND EXTENT OF INJURY OR DAMAGE. To sustain a recovery for the killing of an animal there must be some evidence of its value,[22] which must be of its actual or market value and not merely what plaintiff considers it worth to him;[23] and where an animal is merely injured there must be evidence of its value after as well as before the injury.[24] Where the evidence merely shows that an animal was injured and there is no evidence as to whether it subsequently died, a judgment for its full value cannot be sustained.[25]

(IV) FENCES AND CATTLE-GUARDS — (A) In General. To sustain a recovery under the statutes requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks, there must be some evidence reasonably tending to establish every material fact necessary to be proved.[26] So there must be some evidence that the road was not fenced,[27] and if the statute only requires fencing at certain places or excepts certain places there must be some evidence that the place in question was one required to be fenced,[28]

(B) Nature and Cause of Injury.[31] In actions based upon a failure to fence, the liability of the company depends not only upon the absence of a fence, but also upon the nature and cause of the injury,[32] and there must be some evidence either direct or circumstantial to show this fact.[33] It may, however, be shown by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence that the animal was injured by direct collision with a train or locomotive,[34] or otherwise in such a manner as to render the company liable for the injury as a direct and proximate result of its failure to fence;[35] and if the jury could with reasonable certainty have inferred from the circumstances shown that the animal was injured in such manner as to render the company liable, a verdict for plaintiff will not be disturbed;[36] but to sustain a verdict on circumstantial evidence alone, the circumstances shown must have some connection with the facts in issue, and must not be equally consistent with some other theory as to the cause of the injury under whi h defendant would not be liable.[37]

bility of a railroad company for failure to fence, there must be some evidence that the animal came upon the track at a place where the company was required to fence or maintain cattle-guards;[38] but this need not be shown by direct testimony but may be established by circumstantial evidence,[39] such as the condition of the fence, hoof prints, and other marks or circumstances indicating that the animal entered at such place,[40] and these circumstances may be sufficiently strong to sustain a finding that the animal came upon the track at such place notwithstanding the positive testimony of defendant's servants that it was at a public crossing or other place not required to be fenced,[41] particularly where other facts are shown discrediting their testimony in other respects as to the circumstances of the injury;[42] but a verdict for plaintiff cannot be sustained where there is no direct testimony as to whether the animal came upon the track through a break in the fence or from a neighboring crossing and the circumstances are equally consistent with the latter theory,[43] or where defendant's servants testify positively that the animal came upon the track at a public crossing or depot and their testimony is not impeached or contradicted by plaintiff's witnesses or by circumstantial evidence.[44]

47. Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Aten, 43 Ill. App. 68.

The evidence is insufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff where it fails to show is not in the original construction that the company had either actual or constructive notice thereof.[48] These facts, however, may be shown by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence,[49] and proof of actual notice of the defect is not necessary where facts are shown from which it appears that the defect had existed for such time or under such circumstances as to charge the company with constructive notice thereof.[50] So also proof that an animal which was not breachy entered upon the track over a fence that was generally insecure obviates the necessity of showing that it was insecure at the particular point where the animal entered.[51] Where there is direct evidence on both sides and the evidence is conflicting the question is for the jury.[52]

(v) Crossings, Gates, and Bars. Where an animal is injured by coming upon a railroad track through an open gate in a railroad fence, a verdict for plaintiff cannot be sustained where there is no evidence as to how the gate came to be open;[53] or, where it is not claimed that defendant's servants opened the gate or had actual notice of its condition, that it had been open for such length of time as to charge the company with notice;[54] nor can a verdict be sustained upon proof of the defective condition of a gate where there is no evidence that the animal injured passed through the gate.[55]

(vi) Rate of Speed. Since in the absence of statute or municipal regulation no rate of speed is negligence per se, it is not sufficient to support a finding of negligence to show merely the fact of injury and the speed of the train,[56] or to whether the animal came upon the track through defects in the railroad fence or through an open gate constructed for plaintiff's accommodation and under his control. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 323.

show merely that the train was running faster than its usual rate of speed,[57] or that the usual rate of speed was not reduced on approaching an ordinary public crossing in an open country;[58] but the rate of speed is proper to be considered in connection with other facts in determining the question of negligence, and proof that the train was running at a high rate of speed under circumstances known to defendant's servants, making a greater degree of precaution necessary, will justify a finding of negligence.[59] Where the issue is merely as to whether the speed of the train was in excess of that allowed by a statute or ordinance, evidence that the train was running "very fast" will justify a finding that it was over eight miles per hour,[60] and where there is a direct conflict between defendant's and plaintiff's witnesses and the preponderance of oral testimony is in favor of defendant, a finding that the rate of speed was over eight miles per hour will be sustained where plaintiff's witnesses are strongly corroborated by the physical circumstances of the case.[61]

(VII) SIGNALS, LOOKOUTS, AND PRECAUTIONS. Where the negligence relied on is a failure on the part of the railroad company to give the statutory signals, it is not sufficient for plaintiff to show the fact of injury and the omission of the signal, but there must be some evidence tending to show that the injury was the result of such omission.[62] Upon the issue as to whether the signal was given, the purely negative testimony of witnesses that they did not hear the signal is entitled to little weight, particularly if the witness was not paying any attention to the train or was a considerable distance away,[63] and such evidence is entitled to much less weight than positive testimony of competent witnesses for defendant that such signals were given;[64] but where the attention of the witness was directed to the train at the time or the circumstances were such that he would naturally have heard the signal, his negative testimony is entitled to greater weight and in the absence of contradictory testimony from the engineer or fireman is sufficient to sustain a finding of negligence in this regard,[65] and if plaintiff's witnesses testify positively that the signal was not given, a finding to this effect may be sustained, although defendant's servants in charge of the train testify to the contrary.[66] Where the ground of recovery relied on is a failure to maintain a proper lookout or to exercise proper care to avoid injury to animals seen on or near the track, there must be some evidence reasonably tending to show such negligence;[67] but a finding of negligence in failing to maintain a proper lookout may be sustained where it is shown that the animal could have been seen for a sufficient distance within which to stop the train.[68] Where defendant's servants testify positively that there was no negligence or that under the circumstances the injury was unavoidable and they are not impeached or contradicted by plaintiff's witness or by the circumstances of the case, a judgment for plaintiff cannot be sustained;[69] but a verdict for plaintiff is warranted, although defendant's engineer testifies that everything possible was done to avoid the accident if there are facts admitted by him or testified to by others which make the correctness of his opinion fairly disputable.[70]

(VIII) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF OWNER. A judgment for plaintiff cannot be sustained where the undisputed facts show that plaintiff's animals would not have sustained the injuries complained of but for his own negligence directly contributing to produce them,[71] as where it clearly appears that plaintiff

Driving cattle across track at time for train to pass.— Where the evidence shows that plaintiff habitually drove up a herd of cattle in the evening so that they would be crossing the track at about the usual time for defendant's train to pass, and that he had been repeatedly warned of the danger, he cannot recover for injuries thereto. failed to stop, look, and listen before driving the animals upon the crossing,[72] and in such cases the court should direct a verdict for defendant or sustain a demurrer to the evidence;[73] but the fact that a horse or team was left unhitched and unattended in the vicinity of a railroad track is not conclusive evidence of such contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff as to bar a recovery,[74] and it is error for the court to direct a verdict for defendant upon such evidence.[75]

(IX) WILFUL, WANTON, OR GROSS NEGLIGENCE. A verdict based upon the ground of gross negligence or wilful injury cannot be sustained where the engineer testifies, without being contradicted either by direct testimony or the circumstances, that the injury was not intentional and the circumstances do not show gross negligence in the operation of the train,[76] or where the animal was a trespasser and there is no evidence that it was seen by the engineer who testifies that he did not see it.[77]

l. Damages — (I) IN GENERAL.[78] In the absence of statute or of any circumstances of aggravation or mitigation the measure of damages is the actual or market value of the animal at the time of the injury if it was killed outright,[79] or so badly injured as to necessitate its being killed.[80] If the animal was merely wounded it has been held that the measure of damages is the difference in the market value of the animal immediately before and after the injury;[81] but in other decisions this rule has been expressly disapproved,[82] and it is held that plaintiff should recover the diminution in market value after the animal was cured or restored to usefulness so far as a cure was effected,[83] and in addition thereto the amount reasonably expended in caring for the animal and attempting to cure the injury,[84] and also the value of the use of the animal during such period

If the value immediately after the injury is used in computing the decrease in market value, plaintiff cannot also be allowed compensation for expenses incurred in curing the

as the owner was deprived thereof,[85] provided the whole damages do not exceed the original value of the animal.[86] It has also been held that, although the owner's efforts are unsuccessful and the animal dies, he may still recover in addition to the value of the animal the amount expended in caring therefor,[87] provided his efforts were in good faith and there was reasonable ground to believe that the animal could be cured or restored to usefulness.[88] In determining the value of an animal the jury may consider all of its qualities and all the circumstances that would affect its actual or market value,[89] but not matters peculiar to plaintiff growing out of the character of his business.[90]

(II) DOUBLE DAMAGES. In some jurisdictions there are statutes authorizing plaintiff to recover double damages for injuries to animals occasioned by a failure of the railroad company to fence its tracks,[91] or for injuries due to a failure to fence where the claim is not paid within a certain time after presentation,[92] or where the company fails to post notices of the injury as required by law;[93] but these statutes are so far penal that they will not be construed as applicable to cases not clearly within their scope and intent.[94] Either the court or the jury may

Under a statute authorizing the recovery of double damages if notice of the injury is not posted by the company such damages may be recovered, although the owner has actual notice of the injury (Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Carlley, 39 Ark. 246); the posting of such notice at any public place at the nearest station house is sufficient (St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wright, 57 Ark. 327, 21 S. W. 476); the burden is upon plaintiff to show that such notice was not posted (Kansas, etc., R. Co. v. Summers, 45 Ark. 295); but it is sufficient to make a prima facie case to show that on several examinations of defendant's station no notice was found either at the usual place of posting or in front of the building (St Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wright, 57 Ark. 327, 21 S. W. 476. But see St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Markham, 66 Ark. 297, 50 S. W. 516, holding that evidence that no notice was posted at the time of an examination made six hours before the expiration of the time allowed for posting is not sufficient to sustain a judgment for double damages).

94. Moriarty v. Central Iowa R. Co., 64 Iowa 696, 21 N. W. 143 (holding that the statute authorizing double damages for injuries due to a failure to fence, where the claim is not paid within thirty days, does not apply to an injury due to a defective con-double the actual damages found to have been sustained,[95] and the owner may recover not only double the depreciation in value of his animal because of the injury, but also double damages for the care, attention, medicine, and other expenses directly resulting therefrom;[96] but he cannot recover more than the amount of damages as stated in his notice of the injury.[97]

(III) ATTORNEY'S FEES AND COSTS.[98] In the absence of statute attorney's fees cannot be recovered in an action for injuries to animals;[99] but under some of the statutes plaintiff may recover in addition to his actual damages a reasonable attorney's fee in actions based upon a failure of the railroad company to fence its tracks,[1] or where the statutes provide for a demand or notice of claim to be served upon the company and the same is not paid within a certain time after presentation.[2] Plaintiff's right to attorney's fees is not affected by his claiming a larger amount of damages in his notice than that subsequently awarded,[3] nor is defendant's liability for double the full amount affected by a tender of any less amount.[4] The attorney's fee may be recovered in the action for damages without bringing a separate action,[5] and may be recovered for a second as well as the first trial,[6] and the amount should be determined by the jury instead of the court unless a jury is waived.[7] Where the action is originally brought before a justice of the peace and plaintiff successfully prosecutes an appeal from a judgment for defendant, he is entitled to recover for the services of his attorney before the justice,[8] but he is only entitled to such fees where a judgment for damages is rendered against the company, and a mere reversal in an appellate court of a judgment against plaintiff does not entitle him to attorney's fees unless he is successful on the subsequent trial.[9] Under a Minnesota statute plaintiff may recover double costs unless prior to the institution of an action defendant makes a tender of the damages sustained, provided the action is not instituted before the expiration of the thirty days allowed for making such tender.[10]

See also Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Crews, 65 Ill. Co. v. Truitt, 68 Ill. App. 76); but in an action based upon a failure to fence the fact that the evidence also shows negligence in the operation of the train does not take the case out of the statute or affect the right to recover attorney's fees (Central Branch Union Pac. (IV) INTEREST.[11] In some jurisdictions it is held that interest may be recovered on the amount of damages from the date of the injury,[12] but in others no interest prior to the rendition of judgment is allowed.[13]

(V) DISPOSITION OF CARCASS OF ANIMAL. Even where animals are killed outright their value is not always the measure of damages, the actual damages being the difference in value between the animal alive and the net value of the dead carcass.[14] The amount of damages must therefore be proportionately reduced where plaintiff appropriates or disposes of the carcass,[15] or where it was valuable for beef or other purposes and he could have profitably disposed of it,[16] it being plaintiff's duty to exercise reasonable care to make such disposition in order to reduce the amount of damages;[17] but only the net value is to be deducted, plaintiff being entitled to reasonable compensation for his time and expenses.[18] Plaintiff must also be allowed a reasonable time to dispose of the carcass,[19] and where from its location or condition when found it would be impracticable to dispose of it plaintiff is not required to make any effort to do so but may sue for and recover the full value.[20]

(VI) EXEMPLARY DAMAGES. Exemplary damages may be awarded where the injury is due to gross negligence or wanton or wilful misconduct on the part of the company's employees;[21] but in the absence of such circumstances only is instituted prior to the expiration of this period such costs cannot be recovered.

compensatory damages can be allowed, as where the injury is due merely to ordinary negligence,[22] or a failure of the railroad company to fence its tracks.[23]

m. Questions For Jury — (i) In General. In actions for injury to animals as in other civil actions questions of law are for the determination of the court and issues of fact are for the jury.[24] The case should be submitted to the jury whenever there is any evidence from which they might justifiably find the existence of a material fact in issue,[25] or where the evidence is conflicting or of such a character that different conclusions as to a fact in issue might reasonably be drawn therefrom;[26] but whether there is any competent evidence is a question for the court,[27] and an issue should not be submitted to the jury where there is no evidence to support it,[28] or where the evidence is legally insufficient to sustain a verdict if rendered;[29] and if the evidence is not conflicting and is of such a character that only one inference can be drawn therefrom, it is not error for the court affirmatively to instruct the jury in accordance with such inference.[30]

(ii) Fact or Cause of Injury. It is not necessary that there should be any direct evidence that the injury complained of was done by defendant's trains, but the case should be submitted to the jury if there is any circumstantial evidence reasonably tending to show that it was so inflicted.[31]

Wanton or wilful injury.— Where there is evidence on the part of plaintiff that the track was straight and the engineer was looking in the direction of an animal upon the track and that the speed of the train was increased and no alarm signal given or attempt made to frighten the animal, it is a question for the jury whether the injury was wilful. Overton v. Indiana, etc., R. Co., 1 Ind. App. 436, 27 N. E. 651.

Attracting animals to track.— Where the evidence shows that the animal was attracted by salt upon the track and that it had been there for over a day before the accident during which time defendant's employees had passed over the track at that place and might have seen it, there is sufficient evidence of defendant's negligence to go to the jury. Brown v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 27 Mo. App. 394.

Safety of station grounds.— Whether a railroad company has used reasonable care to guard against frightening teams which are being used to unload cars at its station grounds, and whether an injury to a team resulting from such fright was due to want of such care, are questions for the jury. Rill v. Rome, etc., R. Co., 23 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 416.

Presentation of claim.— Evidence of presentation of a claim for damages to a railroad company's agent who promised to forward it and who had previously received similar claims and paid them, is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of proper presentation, although there is evidence that the agent had in fact no such authority. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Roebuck, 76 Ala. 277.

The sufficiency of the service of a notice of stock killed by defendant railroad company is a question of law for the court where the proof is in writing or the facts uncontradicted, but if the fact of service or the authority of the agent upon whom it is served is in issue, these are questions of fact for the jury. Cole v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 38 Iowa 311.

Where defendant voluntarily fences its tracks and leaves a gap in the fence for its own convenience through which an animal enters and is killed by a train, it is a question for the jury, since the animal entered and its egress was obstructed by the act of the company, whether the railroad company was negligent, although it appears that those in charge of the train adopted the ordinary precautions to avoid the injury after the animal was discovered. (III) Character and Condition of Crossings. Where the evidence is conflicting or different conclusions might reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury whether the crossing at the intersection of a public highway was constructed and maintained by defendant in a safe and proper condition.[32]

(IV) Negligent Operation of Trains. Whether a railroad company has been negligent, or in other words has failed to exercise ordinary and reasonable care under the circumstances of the particular case is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.[33] The issue should be submitted to the jury if there is any evidence reasonably tending to show negligence,[34] or where the evidence relating thereto is conflicting,[35] or is of such a character that different conclusions or inferences might reasonably be drawn therefrom;[36] but the case should not be submitted to the jury if there is no evidence of negligence,[37] or where the evidence is of such a character that a verdict if rendered would be set aside by the court and a new trial granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.[38]

(v) Rebuttal of Statutory Presumption of Negligence. Where by statute proof of the injury raises a presumption of negligence which must be rebutted by defendant, it is ordinarily a question for the jury whether defendant's evidence is sufficient to overcome the statutory presumption.[39] If defendant should introduce no evidence, it would be the duty of the court to direct a verdict for plaintiff;[40] and conversely, if plaintiff, relying upon the statutory presumption, introduces no evidence tending to show negligence, while defendant introduces testimony which if true shows conclusively that there was no negligence on its part, and such testimony is in no way impeached or contradicted, the court should direct a verdict for defendant;[41] but the question is for the determination of the jury if plaintiff introduces evidence tending to contradict that of defendant or to show the existence of negligence,[42] although such evidence is merely circumstantial,[43] or if the testimony of defendant's own witnesses fails to show that every thing was done which might have been to avoid the accident,[44] or discloses facts relating thereto from which the existence of the negligence alleged might reasonably be inferred.[45]

(VI) FENCES AND CATTLE-GUARDS — (A) In General. Where from the evidence it is uncertain where the animal injured came upon the track, it is a question for the jury whether the place of entry was at a point where the company had failed to construct or properly maintain its fences or cattle-guards,[46] or whether the animal entered through a gate or bars which it was the duty of defendant to keep closed.[47] In order to warrant the submission of the case to the jury it is not necessary that there should be any direct evidence that the animal entered at such place, but it is sufficient if there are circumstances reasonably tending to show this fact.[48] Under statutes where the company is liable for failure to fence only in case of injuries due to actual collision with a train, a demurrer to the evidence should be sustained where there is no evidence that the injury was so caused;[49] but direct evidence is not necessary, it being sufficient to warrant a submission of the case to the jury if there is any circumstantial evidence from which an injury by collision might reasonably be inferred.[50] Where an actual collision is not necessary and the animal was not struck by the train it is a question for the jury whether the company's failure to fence was the cause of the injury.[51] Where the liability applies only to animals running at large and it is held that an animal is at large if not under the control of the owner, and there is evidence that the Proof that an animal was killed or injured at a place where the company had neglected its duty to fence is sufficient to take the case to the jury (Lepp v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 87 Mo. 139); but if there is no evidence that the animal entered where the fence was defective other than the mere fact that it was injured near such a place, and there is other evidence tending to show that it entered through a gate at a private crossing, a demurrer to the evidence should be sustained (Walton v. Wabash Western R. Co., 32 Mo. App. 634).

animal injured had escaped from the owner, it is a question for the jury whether it was running at large.[52]

(B) At What Places Required. Where the statute designates the places to be fenced, the obligation of a railroad company to fence its tracks at a particular point is a question of law for the court.[53] The court may also declare as a matter of law that the company is not liable for failure to fence at certain places, such as public crossings and depot grounds, which are impliedly excepted from the operation of the statutes,[54] and it is the duty of the court to do so;[55] but where the place of accident brings into controversy the proper extent or limits of such places, it is a question of fact for the jury whether the company has left unfenced more than the proper conduct of its business and the public use and convenience require,[56] whether it could have fenced at the place in question without endangering the lives of its employees engaged in switching and operating its trains,[57] or whether, without endangering the safety of its employees, it could have located its cattle-guards nearer to the head of its switch limits than was done.[58] Where the company is relieved from constructing cattle-guards at a public crossing by reason of the fact that it is within its station grounds, it is a question for the jury whether the company has constructed them at the nearest point that would not interfere with the proper operation of the road and the convenience of the

Where a fence has been washed away by a flood which the evidence shows without contradiction had not subsided at the time of the accident so as to leave the entire line of fence at the place in question uncovered, the question of defendant's negligence in not sooner repairing the same should not be submitted to the jury as defendant is free from negligence as a matter of law. (VIII) SIGNALS, LOOKOUTS, AND PRECAUTIONS. It is ordinarily a question for the jury whether under the circumstances defendant was negligent in regard to keeping a proper lookout for animals,[70] or in failing to take proper precautions to avoid the injury after the animal was discovered on or near the track;[71] and the question should be submitted to the jury whenever there is any evidence from which it might reasonably be inferred that if a proper lookout had been maintained the animal could have been seen in time to avoid the injury.[72] It is a question for the jury whether under the circumstances defendant's servants were negligent in failing to sound the alarm whistle when an animal was seen on or near the track,[73] or in failing to stop or slacken the speed of a stances was in the exercise of due care.[83] So it is a question for the jury under the circumstances of the particular case whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in leaving a team unhitched and unattended near a railroad track,[84] in turning an animal loose in the vicinity of a railroad track where it is unfenced,[85] or near station grounds which the company is not required to fence;[86] in permitting animals to run at large in violation of law,[87] or in particularly dangerous places,[88] or in keeping them in an inclosure where the fences are insufficient to prevent their escape,[89] or adjoining a railroad fence known to be defective,[90] or in failing to notify the railroad company of the existence of such defect;[91] or whether under the circumstances plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in regard to stopping, looking, and listening for trains before driving animals upon a railroad crossing.[92] So also where by statute a railroad company is liable, in case of a failure to fence, unless the injury was occasioned by the "wilful act" of the owner himself, it is ordinarily a question for the jury whether a given act is wilful or otherwise.[93]

(xi) Proximate Cause of Injury.[94] Although a railroad company may have been negligent in the operation of its trains or in doing or omitting some act prohibited or required by statute, it is still ordinarily a question for the jury whether such negligent act or omission was the proximate cause of the injury complained of.[95] So it is a question for the jury whether the injury was due to the

an opinion upon the merits of the case.[14] The instructions must not submit to the jury the determination of questions of law,[15] or, on the other hand, invade the province of the jury in determining issues of fact.[16] The instructions must not impose upon defendant a higher degree of care and diligence than the rule of ordinary care which the law requires,[17] or in stating the conditions authorizing a recovery omit any essential element necessary to establish plaintiff's cause of action,[18] as that the negligence shown must have been the proximate cause of the injury,[19] or, on the other hand, authorize a verdict for defendant upon a finding that certain duties were properly performed to the exclusion of other grounds of liability involved in the case.[20] Requested instructions which state the law correctly as to material issues which there is evidence tending to support should be given,[21] but the refusal of such instructions is not error where they are covered by the general charge given.[22] So also instructions which have no other purpose than to aid the jury in weighing the evidence are largely discretionary with the court and where the court might rightfully have thought such instructions unnecessary it will not be held error to refuse them.[23] Where there is evidence as to the value of the animal at different times, it is error if the instructions fail to restrict the damages to its value at the time of the injury.[24]

An instruction is not a substantial departure from the petition where the petition alleges that defendant suffered the fence "to be and remain insecure, rotted down and out of repair," and the court charges that defendant is liable if the fence through which the animal escaped was "defective, insecure and insufficient to turn stock" (Lainiger v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 41 Mo. App. 165): and where among other acts of negligence, it is alleged that defendant's servants failed to stop the train, it is not error for the court to charge the jury that they may consider the rate of speed, although negligence in running the train too fast is not charged, since the rate of speed is proper to be considered in determining whether the train could have been stopped in time to avoid the injury (Brown v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 94 Iowa 309, 62 N. W. 737).

Condition of crossing.— There is no error in not submitting to the jury an issue as to the condition of a crossing, although it is shown to be defective, where there is no evidence that the animal was injured at the crossing or by reason of its condition. In an action based upon a failure to keep fences in repair where the animal was killed on a public crossing but plaintiff claimed that it got there by reason of defendant's failure properly to fence its tracks, it is proper to refuse to instruct the jury that if the animal was struck on the highway plaintiff could not recover since it excludes the idea that defendant's negligence might have been the cause of the animal being on the highway or contributed to its being there. It is proper to refuse to instruct the jury that running a train at thirty or forty miles per hour constitutes no element of negligence (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Stommell, 126 Ind. 35, 25 N. E. 863); or to instruct the jury as a matter of law that under the circumstances shown the accident was unavoidable (Selma, etc., R. Co. v. Fleming, 48 Ga. 514); or to instruct the jury that the inspection of a fence every two days was a sufficient exercise of diligence (Evans v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 30 Minn. 489, 16 N. W. 271).

What acts do or do not constitute negligence is a question for the jury except where a particular act is declared to be negligence either by statute or a valid municipal ordinance, and it is error for the court to instruct the jury as to what ordinary care re-material facts in issue which the jury must find from the evidence,[31] draw inferences of fact from the evidence,[32] or pass upon the credibility of witnesses or the weight of evidence.[33]

(IV) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF. The court must correctly instruct the jury upon the law as to the burden of proof,[34] and in such terms as not to be calculated to confuse or mislead them,[35] but the instruction need not refer in express terms to the burden of proof if it is so worded that the jury could not fail to understand the law upon the subject.[36] Where by statute proof of the injury is prima facie evidence of negligence, an instruction is erroneous which places the burden of proving negligence on plaintiff.[37] In such cases it is proper to instruct the jury that if they are satisfied of the fact of injury by defendant's train the burden is on defendant to show facts exculpating it from liability,[38] and to refuse an instruction that, although plaintiff makes a prima facie case by proof of the injury that they cannot find for plaintiff unless the evidence shows negligence on the part of the railroad company;[39] but it is proper to instruct, after stating the law as to the burden of proof, that where all the facts and circumstances surrounding the injury are in evidence the jury will determine the case from the evidence and not upon the statutory presumption of negligence.[40]

(V) FENCES AND CATTLE-GUARDS — (A) In General. In actions based upon the statutory liability of railroad companies for failure to construct and maintain fences and cattle-guards, an instruction is erroneous which lays down a rule of liability different from that prescribed by the statute,[41] or which in stating what must be found to authorize a recovery omits any essential element necessary to establish plaintiff's cause of action under the particular statute,[42]

It is proper to refuse to instruct the jury that the positive testimony given by one witness is entitled to more weight than the negative testimony given by another. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Stommel, 126 Ind. 35, 25 N. E. 863.

An instruction given in the language of the statute that where an animal is killed by a train operated at a speed in violation of a municipal ordinance it shall be presumed to have been done by the negligence of the company cannot be held to be erroneous, although somewhat objectionable since the jury might have understood therefrom that the presumption was conclusive instead of a mere prima facie presumption. It is not error after instructing the jury that if they believe defendant's evidence they must find for defendant to also charge at the instance of plaintiff that they are not obliged to find for defendant at all events, and if they do not believe the evidence tending to acquit defendant of negligence they may find a verdict for plaintiff, since the credibility of defendant's witness is a question for the jury. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Moody, 92 Ala. 279, 9 So. 238.

In South Carolina it is held independently of statute that proof of the injury is prima facie evidence of negligence, and that the presumption of negligence remains throughout the case until overcome by proof on the part of defendant, and that an instruction that defendant's explanation of the accident requires plaintiff to then show negligence by a preponderance of evidence is properly refused. such as the duty of defendant to fence at the place in question,[43] the necessity that the animal must have come upon the track at a place where the company should have fenced and had neglected to do so,[44] or at the place where the company had permitted its fence to become defective,[45] that the animal must have been running at large where the statute so provides,[46] and that the failure to fence must have been the cause of the injury;[47] but where it is alleged that the road was not properly fenced and there is evidence tending to support the allegations, it is proper to charge that to entitle plaintiff to recover it is not necessary to find negligence in the operation of the train.[48] Whether the place in question was one which defendant was required by the statute to fence is a question of law and should not be submitted to the jury;[49] but where there is no statute requiring railroad companies to fence, the court should, if requested, instruct the jury that it is not the duty of the railroad company to do so.[50] The instructions must conform to the issues and evidence,[51] and be based upon all the evidence,[52] must

But the same exactness as is necessary in the pleadings is not required in instructions stating the conditions authorizing a recovery, as the instructions are to be considered with reference to all the evidence in the case which it is not permissible to set out in the pleadings. Moore v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 73 Mo. 438.

Error not prejudicial.—Although an instruction erroneously states that to entitle plaintiff to recover he need only prove certain facts, yet if other portions of the charge fully and correctly state the conditions upon which alone plaintiff could recover, so that the jury could not reasonably have been misled, the error is not prejudicial. Where the evidence tends to show an entry through an open gate which it was not the duty of defendant to keep closed, an instruction is erroneous which authorizes the jury to find for plaintiff without negligence in the operation of the train if the fence was defective, although the animal entered through the gate (International, etc., R. Co. v. Erwin, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 67 S. W. 466); and where there is no evidence of either actual or constructive notice on the part of defendant that the gate was open, it is error to refuse to instruct the jury that if the animal came upon the track through the gate defendant is not liable (Hungerford v. Syracuse, etc., R. Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.) 339).

But an instruction may be sufficient, although not informing the jury in express terms that the failure to fence must have caused the injury where from the statements made, considered in connection with the evidence, the jury could not be misled but would infer that they must so find. Morrison v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 117 Iowa 587, 91 N. W. 793; Terry v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 77 Mo. 254; Williams v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 74 Mo. 453; Moore v. Missouri Pac. R. Proximate and remote cause.—The instruction should distinguish between a direct and remote connection between the want of a fence and the injury complained of, and it is error to instruct that plaintiff should recover if the jury find a "clear connection" between the one and the other, since they might find a clear connection and yet one so remote as not to furnish a legal ground of liability. 51. Robinson v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 24 Colo. 98, 49 Pac. 37 (holding that, where it appeared that defendant's right of way was fenced at the place of accident, an instruction is erroneous which assumed to define defendant's duty with respect to the appropriateness of fences voluntarily constructed by it, where there is no evidence that defendant built, maintained, or exercised any control over the fences); McGill v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 113 Iowa 358, 85 N. Co. v. Hart, 7 Kan. App. 554, 51 Pac. 932 (holding that the court properly refused to give an instruction for defendant based upon the impracticability of fencing at the place in question, where there was no evidence tending to prove that a fence could not have been constructed and maintained there); Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Simpson, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 125, 91 S. W. 874 (holding that an instruction is erroneous which would authorize a recovery upon the ground that the road was not fenced at the place in question, where the evidence shows that the accident occurred upon a public crossing).

not be confusing or misleading,[53] must not be conflicting,[54] or invade the province of the jury.[55] If the complaint charges only negligence in the operation of the train, it is error to submit any charge tending to hold defendant liable because its track was not fenced at the place in question.[56]

(B) Sufficiency, Defects, and Repairs. An instruction is erroneous which imposes upon a railroad company the duty of maintaining fences and cattle-guards sufficient to exclude stock from the track without qualifying the term as meaning merely reasonably sufficient or sufficient to turn ordinary stock under ordinary circumstances,[57] or where a lawful fence is required, which fails to instruct the jury as to what constitutes a lawful fence,[58] or which makes the duty of keeping them in repair absolute instead of merely to exercise ordinary care in this regard,[59] or which excludes the questions as to whether the alleged defect was due to a want of repair,[60] or whether the company had either actual or constructive notice of the defect,[61] or a reasonable time thereafter in which to make the

53. Motch v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 82 Mo. App. 50 (holding that where it is conceded that the animal came upon the track over the cattle-guards and the question is as to their sufficiency, but evidence has been erroneously admitted as to the condition of the fences, an instruction based upon the hypothesis of their entry through the fence where defective is misleading and erroneous); Southern Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Cooper, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 592, 75 S. W. 328 (holding that an instruction that if the company "had no right" to fence at the place in question, then plaintiff to recover must show negligence, is erroneous and should have been to the effect that if the company "was not required" to fence, etc., as the jury would probably understand that although the company was not required to fence yet if it had a right to do so it would be liable irrespective of other acts of negligence); Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Coleman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 371 (holding that in an action for the negligent injury of an animal within defendant's switch limits, an instruction as to the statutory liability for failure to fence is erroneous as misleading, since the statute does not apply to such places).

Instruction not misleading.— Under a statute making railroad companies liable for stock killed, unless the track is inclosed by a good and lawful fence "to prevent" animals from being on the track, an instruction that the company is not liable where the track is inclosed by a good and lawful fence "which prevents" animals from being on the track is not misleading. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Eckel, 49 Kan. 794, 31 Pac. 693.

55. Boyd v. Southern California R. Co., 126 Cal. 571, 58 Pac. 1046, holding that an instruction that if the jury find that the animal was killed at a place where the railroad company had failed to fence or maintain a sufficient fence, they are justified in presuming and authorized to find that it came upon the track at that place, is erroneous in that it invades the province of the jury in determining the value and weight of evidence.

57. Jones v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 59 Mo. App. 137; Cole v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 47 Mo. App. 624.

But it is not error to charge in the words of the statute that a railroad company is bound to maintain sufficient cattle-guards, if the jury is further instructed that the statute only requires that the cattle-guards should be reasonably sufficient or sufficient to turn ordinary stock under ordinary circumstances. 61. Brentner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 58 Iowa 625, 12 N. W. 615.

An instruction is sufficiently favorable to defendant which informs the jury that plaintiff can only recover upon proof of a want of repair known to defendant or which had existed such a length of time that knowledge should be imputed. Klay v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 126 Iowa 671, 102 N. W. 526.

Defects in original construction.—Where there is no evidence that fences as originally constructed were sufficient, but on the contrary the evidence all tends to show that they never did meet the requirements of the law, an instruction is not erroneous which fails to require the jury to find that defendant had notice of such defect. Dooley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 36 Mo. App. 381.

Notice to laboring hands.— An instruction that notice to laboring hands employed by defendant would not be sufficient, but that to bind the company the notice must have come to some agent of the company or person connected with the keeping in repair of fences, is properly refused both because it assumes that a laboring hand could not be charged with the repairing of fences and also because it is calculated to mislead the jury by creating the impression that defendant was not required to make repairs unless notified of their neces-necessary repairs,[62] or whether the animal came upon the track and was injured by reason of such defects;[63] while on the other hand an instruction that defendant would not be liable unless it caused or knew of the defect is erroneous in that it would relieve the company of the duty of exercising ordinary care to discover defects.[64] Where there is evidence that some of the animals injured passed over a portion of a cattle-guard which was not defective, it is error to refuse to charge that under such circumstances defendant would not be liable for such animals.[65] A charge that cattle-guards are intended to secure the safety of passengers as well as animals is not erroneous as misleading.[66]

(VI) PRIVATE CROSSINGS, GATES, AND BARS. In an action based upon the negligent construction or maintenance of a gate the court should instruct the jury as to the standard of care required of defendant,[67] and as in other cases the instructions must conform to and be limited by the issues presented by the pleadings and evidence,[68] and cover each element of the liability involved.[69] Where the statute requires the construction of gates at "necessary" farm crossings, the question of the necessity of the crossing is a mixed question of law and of fact and should not be submitted to the jury without proper guidance as to the circumstances constituting such necessity.[70]

62. Brentner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 58 Iowa 625, 12 N. W. 615.

An instruction that the railroad company must at all times maintain a sufficient fence is not erroneous as misleading where the court further charges that where a fence has been once properly constructed negligence cannot be imputed to the company until it has had a reasonable time to make the repairs after notice, which will be implied after a reasonable time. Varco v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 30 Minn. 18, 13 N. W. 921.

63. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Bradshaw, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 83 S. W. 897. See also Price v. Barnard, 70 Mo. App. 175, where the instruction was held sufficiently to submit to the jury whether the injury was caused by the negligence of defendant as to keeping its fences in repair.

But where there is positive evidence in an action for failing to keep a fence in repair that the animal came upon the right of way through the fence, a charge that if it would be as reasonable to presume that it entered through the gate as through the defective fence the jury should find for defendant is properly refused, since from the state of the evidence the matter is one of testimony and not of presumption. 66. Wait v. Bennington, etc., R. Co., 61 Vt. 268, 17 Atl. 284, holding that in an action for injury to an animal based upon the defective condition of a cattle-guard, plaintiff cannot object to such a charge as the jury could not have understood therefrom that if the company performed its duty with respect to its passengers it was relieved from liability as to animals upon the track.

67. Wirstlin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 124 Iowa 170, 99 N. W. 697, holding that an instruction is erroneous which leaves the jury to infer that the duty of maintaining sufficient gates is absolute instead of merely to exercise ordinary care in this regard.

Where the defective fastening of a gate is relied on as the cause of the injury, it is proper to instruct the jury that the principal questions are whether the fastening was reasonably sufficient, and if sufficient whether the animal got upon the track and was injured by reason thereof, and also whether the fastening was such as would be considered safe by a man of ordinary prudence. Where plaintiff was not an adjoining landowner and the gates were not erected for his benefit, a special charge as to the gates being left open is properly refused as inapplicable to the facts. International, etc., R. Co. v. Barton, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 797.

Where plaintiff's teamsters kept the gate open for their own convenience and this is shown by the evidence, it is not the duty of defendant's servants to shut it, and it is error to instruct the jury that defendant will be liable if the gate had been open for such length of time that the fact could, by the exercise of ordinary care upon the part of defendant, have been discovered and the gate closed. (VII) SIGNALS, LOOKOUTS, AND PRECAUTIONS. An instruction is erroneous which would authorize a verdict for defendant upon a finding that proper care was exercised at the time of the injury without reference to any preceding negligence,[71] as where the instruction ignores the duty of maintaining a lookout for stock,[72] or whether the train was properly equipped,[73] or which, in instructing the jury as to the duty of maintaining a lookout, limits such duty to the engineer alone,[74] or to the time of the accident without reference to whether the animal might have been discovered sooner,[75] or to animals seen actually upon the track without reference to those in dangerous proximity thereto,[76] or which would relieve defendant if a lookout was being maintained and the accident could not have been avoided after the animal was seen without reference to whether the train was being operated at a negligent rate of speed or without a proper headlight;[77] while on the other hand, an instruction is erroneous which bases plaintiff's right to recover upon the mere fact that defendant was negligent as to keeping a lookout, without requiring that such negligence must have been the cause of the injury,[78] or which in cases where the animal was a trespasser or the owner guilty of contributory negligence imposes upon the company the same duty as to discovering the animal as in other cases instead of limiting its liability to the question of whether due care was exercised to avoid the injury after the danger was discovered.[79] An instruction that it is the duty of all persons running trains in the state to keep a constant lookout for stock is not objectionable as appearing to mean that each and every member of the train crew must keep such a lookout.[80] An instruction as to defendant's liability for failure to give the statutory crossing signal must not omit the requirement that the injury must have occurred at a public crossing,[81] and as a result of the omission of the signals,[82] nor should such issue be submitted to the jury at all where the injury did not occur at a public crossing,[83] or where there is no evidence tending to show that the omission of the signals was the cause of the injury,[84] or where the complaint specifies the acts of negligence instructions in regard to determining such necessity are unnecessary and may therefore properly be omitted. Kavanaugh v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 75 Mo. App. 78. See also Roberts v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 372, 94 S. W. 838.

relied on and it is not alleged that the signals were not given.[85] An instruction as to the efforts to be exercised to prevent injuries to animals seen is erroneous if it ignores the duty to exercise such preventive effort as to animals in dangerous proximity to as well as upon the track,[86] or which would relieve defendant if its servants acted in good faith without regard to whether their conduct was in fact negligent,[87] or which on the other hand tends to make the liability of defendant for failing to stop the train absolute if it were possible to do so without reference to whether ordinary care under the circumstances demanded such a precaution,[88] or where the evidence does not show that the animal was injured by a train,[89] or which informs the jury that defendant would be liable if the train could not have been stopped in time to avoid the injury by reason of the speed at which it was operated, since it ignores the question as to whether the rate of speed was unreasonable or dangerous or was the proximate cause of the injury.[90] Where there is evidence tending to show certain facts which indicate that the ordinary precautions were not taken, the court may instruct the jury hypothetically in case they should so find from the evidence;[91] and where there is evidence suggestive of such a theory the court may instruct the jury that if the whistle was blown for the purpose of wrongfully frightening an animal and not to keep it from the track this fact may be considered.[92] Where the precautionary measures to prevent injuries to animals are prescribed by statute, an instruction is erroneous which adds to them and imposes a higher degree of care,[93] or which ignores the principle that, although some required precaution was omitted, the company would not be liable if under the circumstances the injury was unavoidable and could not, even by the exercise of such precaution, have been prevented.[94]

(VIII) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF OWNER. Where there is evidence of a want of ordinary care on the part of plaintiff, it is proper to instruct the jury that there can be no recovery if the injury complained of was the result of plaintiff's negligence or the negligence of both plaintiff and defendant and without any intentional wrong on the part of defendant,[95] unless the action is based upon a ground of liability where contributory negligence is not a defense;[96] and where the question of contributory negligence is put in issue by the pleadings and there is evidence tending to show negligence on the part of plaintiff, it is error for the court not to submit the issue to the jury;[97] but the rule is otherwise where there is no evidence of any negligence on the part of plaintiff.[98] Instructions as to contributory negligence must conform to the issues presented by the pleadings and evidence,[99] must not be misleading,[1] or assume the existence of facts not in evidence,[2] and must be based upon all the evidence and not single out a particular fact and instruct the jury without reference to the other circumstances in evidence that it constitutes such negligence on the part of plaintiff as to preclude recovery.[3] An instruction is erroneous which would authorize a recovery by plaintiff notwithstanding the jury might find the issue of contributory negligence to be established by the evidence,[4] and an instruction is also erroneous which makes the question of contributory negligence dependent upon any degree of comparison with the negligence of defendant,[5] except where the doctrine of comparative negligence is recognized,[6] or which omits the essential element that plaintiff's negligence to preclude a recovery must have contributed to the injury complained of,[7] or informs the jury without reference to plaintiff's negligence in the particular case that he cannot recover if he was habitually negligent in a certain regard,[8] or which would authorize a recovery upon a finding that plaintiff was not negligent regardless of the question of defendant's negligence.[9] be held as to that point to be against the party upon whom is the burden of proof,[12] and the facts found must support the theory of the complaint.[13] So a special verdict will not sustain a judgment for plaintiff where it merely finds that the crossing signals were not given and does not also find that the omission was the cause of the injury,[14] or if the track was fenced so that there was no duty to keep a lookout for stock, it fails to find that the animal injured was seen by those in charge of the train,[15] or where it finds merely that the railroad fence was out of repair without any finding that defendant was negligent in failing to repair it within a reasonable time,[16] or, if the complaint alleges that the animal was injured at a crossing by reason of a failure to give crossing signals, it does not state where the injury occurred;[17] and where the burden is upon plaintiff to show freedom from contributory negligence, a special verdict which does not find that plaintiff was free from contributory negligence will not support a judgment in his favor.[18] Where there is a general verdict with special findings of fact, it is only where the findings are so inconsistent with the general verdict that the two cannot stand that the general verdict will be set aside, and if they can by any hypothesis be reconciled with the general verdict, the latter will control and the court should render judgment thereon;[19] but the verdict should be set aside where the special findings show that the case was decided solely upon an erroneous theory induced by misleading instructions and not supported by the evidence,[20] or where the special findings show a palpable bias in the minds of the jury against the unsuccessful party,[21] or that the jury disregarded the instructions of the court.[22] In an action for the entire damage for injury to several of plaintiff's animals by separate trains of defendant, there need be no special findings as to the number and value of animals injured by each train unless the jury find that there was negligence in the operation of one but not in the other.[23] Where the complaint contains allegations which if proved would authorize a verdict for double damages on the ground of a failure to fence or actual damages for negligence in the operation of the train, a special finding of negligence in the latter regard will sustain a verdict for full damages apart from the question of sufficient fences.[24] Where the

Character of crossing.— A finding that the animal entered on the track at "a cart-way or private way, known as McQuiddy's Crossing," will be construed to mean a "driveway" within the meaning of a statute authorizing the construction of "wagon and driveways," and providing that the railroad company shall not be liable for injury to animals which come upon the track at such crossings unless caused by negligence in the operation of the train. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Etzler, 119 Ind. 39, 21 N. E. 466.

Wanton misconduct.— Where the jury answers in the negative a special interrogatory as to whether the engineer used all means in his power to avoid the injury after the animals were seen, such finding amounts to a finding of wanton recklessness and sustains a general verdict for plaintiff, whether he was a trespasser on the track or a licensee. complaint is in several counts and plaintiff has a verdict on one and is not entitled to recover on the others, judgment is properly entered for plaintiff on the one count and for defendant on the others.[25] In an action brought under a statute allowing double damages where plaintiff alleges that he has been damaged in a certain amount for which he asks judgment and for all other and proper relief according to the statute, the court may render judgment for double the actual damages assessed by the jury, although there was no formal prayer in the complaint for double damages.[26]

(II) ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT. In the absence of any special statutory provision, the general rules as to the enforcement of judgments in civil actions apply.[27] In Indiana there is a special statutory provision that if the action is brought in the circuit court of the county where the injury occurred the court may, upon motion and notice to the company, order any agent to appear and answer as to the amount of money in his hands belonging to the company, and order him to make payment therefrom in satisfaction of the judgment and costs;[28] and that where the action is brought before a justice, plaintiff, upon filing a certified transcript of the judgment rendered with the clerk of the circuit court, shall upon motion and notice be entitled to the same order and proceedings.[29] The proceeding is in the nature of an original action,[30] wherein an answer may be filed and issues formed as in civil actions,[31] and the motion is in effect a complaint the sufficiency of which may be tested by a demurrer,[32] and must therefore allege every material fact necessary to entitle plaintiff to the benefit of the statutory proceeding.[33] The motion or complaint must show that the judgment was entered of record,[34] that the certified transcript was properly filed with the clerk,[35] and must also allege facts showing the jurisdiction of the justice,[36] or else, as is permissible under the statute, allege that the judgment or decision of the justice "was duly given or made."[37] Where the case is instituted in the circuit court of the county of the injury and the venue is changed, the proceedings may be brought in the court where the judgment was rendered.[38] The notice to the company need not be served upon the particular agent whom plaintiff moves to be required to appear and answer, but may be served in the manner provided by statute for the service of a summons on a railroad company;[39] and where the action is in the circuit court and the motion is made at the time the judgment is rendered, the parties all being present, no notice to the company is necessary.[40]

p. Appeal and Error — (I) IN GENERAL. In actions for injuries to animals the general rules as to appeals in civil actions apply.[41] Questions not urged in the lower court and not properly presented for review will not be considered on appeal,[42] and in the absence of record evidence to the contrary all presumptions are in favor of the correctness of the proceedings and rulings of the trial court.[43] Where a statutory action for injuries to animals is required to be brought in the county or township where the injury occurred this fact is jurisdictional and must affirmatively appear from the record or a judgment for plaintiff cannot be sustained,[44] but no proof that the person before whom the action was brought was a justice of such county or township is necessary other than recitals in the record to this effect.[45] The local or territorial jurisdiction of such actions cannot be conferred by consent, and the question may be raised for the first time on appeal.[46] Where plaintiff is permitted in certain cases to recover attorney's fees, in order to sustain a judgment for plaintiff including such an allowance the record on appeal must show that the case was one in which the allowance was proper;[47] and a court of appellate jurisdiction only will not hear and determine primarily the question of fact as to what is a reasonable attorney's fee to be allowed in that court but will leave plaintiff to seek his remedy in a court of original jurisdiction.[48]

(II) QUESTIONS OF FACT, VERDICT, AND FINDINGS. The verdict or finding of a jury upon matters of fact will not be disturbed by an appellate court if there is any evidence reasonably tending to support it or the evidence relating thereto is conflicting,[49] although the weight of evidence may seem to the appellate

On an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace to a county court where judgment for plaintiff was reversed, it was held on appeal to the supreme court that as plaintiff had introduced in the justice's court evidence sufficient to make out "a pretty fair case," although possibly not going far enough in his proof to sustain a recovery, and defendant had introduced no evidence whatever, plaintiff ought not to be shut out by a mere reversal, and that the judgment of the county court should be so modified as to grant plaintiff a new trial in the justice's court. On appeal from a judgment of a justice, where it appears that the place where the animal was injured was near defendant's depot grounds and that there was no fence there, but it does not appear by the return of the justice that any evidence was introduced to prove that it was within the depot grounds, judgment for plaintiff will not be disturbed, the burden of proof being upon defendant to show this fact. b. Statutory Liability[64] — (i) In General. In many jurisdictions there are statutes expressly imposing a liability upon a railroad company for damages caused by the setting out or spread of fire originating on its right of way, or from the operation of its locomotives.[65] Under some of these statutes this liability is imposed upon the railroad company regardless of the question of negligence,[66]

The words "right of way," as used in South Carolina Code Laws (1902), § 2135, rendering a railroad company liable for fire communicated by its locomotives or originating on its right of way, do not refer to the title of the company, but are used to designate the locality from which a fire must originate to render the company liable. if there is no contributory negligence on the part of the party injured.[67] Under other statutes, however, it is held that they do not eliminate negligence as an essential element of the company's liability,[68] but that they make the fact of injury so accruing prima facie evidence of negligence and lay upon the company the burden of disproving it,[69] and hence do not apply where there is no want of care or skill in the construction or operation of the road or locomotive.[70]

(II) PROPERTY INJURED OR DESTROYED. Property for the loss of or injury to which a railroad company is liable under the above statutes includes personal as well as real property,[71] except personal property in the railroad company's possession under a contract of carriage,[72] or deposited temporarily near its track and liable to be moved at any time.[73]

(III) STATUTES GIVING RAILROAD COMPANY INSURABLE INTEREST. Under some statutes imposing a liability upon a railroad company for damages caused to buildings or other property by fires communicated by its locomotives,[74] an additional provision is made, giving the railroad company an insurable interest in the property along its route in close proximity to the railroad.[75] Under this provision, in some states, it is held that the company's liability extends to all kinds

Under an Ohio statute (91 Ohio Laws, p. 187), where the fire originates on defendant's land it is absolutely liable for the loss or damage, and the fact that it so originated is prima facie evidence that it was caused by operating the road; but where it originates on adjacent land defendant is liable only when the fire was caused in whole or in part by sparks from an engine on or passing over the road, and the fact that the fire was so caused is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of defendant. of property and is not limited to such property as is usually regarded as insurable.[76] In other states, however, it is held that the company's liability under such provision is limited to property permanently located upon or near the railroad, and which is insurable.[77]

c. Setting Fire on Right of Way. A railroad company is not liable for damages resulting from a spread of fire from its property to adjacent property where it sets out such fire on its own premises for a lawful purpose, as for cleaning the right of way from weeds, grass, etc., if it uses reasonable care and prudence in setting it out and in preventing its escape.[78] But it is otherwise where the setting out of the fire is a positive wrong either in itself or by reason of the surrounding circumstances,[79] or where its agents or employees do not use proper care and diligence in setting it out or preventing its spreading.[80]

d. Prevention of Spread of Fire. The failure to use reasonable care to prevent the spread of fire which has started on a railroad company's property or on adjacent property by its engines or trains, although started without any negligence on its part, as a general rule renders the company liable for resulting dam-

A statute making it a misdemeanor to set fire to woods and prairie (Nebr. Cr. Code, § 62) does not apply to fire negligently or carelessly set to material on a railroad right of way, which spread and destroyed plaintiff's property. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Rogers, 48 Nebr. 653, 67 N. W. 602.

Negligence of independent contractor.—The burning of a fire guard along a railroad right of way being from its nature dangerous, the railroad company is bound to see that measures are taken to prevent injury, and cannot avoid the obligation by letting the work to ages to adjacent property,[81] although it has been held otherwise where there is no negligence on the part of the railroad company in starting the fire.[82] If the company was negligent in permitting the fire to start, it is liable for resulting damages whether it or its employees did or did not exercise ordinary care to prevent the fire from spreading.[83] Such negligence of an employee, it has been held, exists only where the employee is not at the time engaged in some other duty owing from the company to the public.[84]

e. Contracts For Exemption From Liability. A railroad company cannot contract for exemption, wholly or partially, from liability for damages caused by fire, in derogation of its duty to the public as common carrier;[85] but it is not contrary to public policy to provide for such exemption as a consideration for permitting another to place or erect and use property on its premises where such agreement does not embrace property for the injury or destruction of which the company is liable as common carrier.[86] This exemption, however, does not Sufficiency of fire-guard.— Whether a fire-guard along a right of way in most places fixed by congress at four hundred feet is sufficient to prevent the escape of fire from locomotives cannot, as a matter of law, be determined from the fact that the local statutes fix one hundred feet as the maximum width of a railroad right of way. f. Persons Entitled to Damages. Damages caused by a railway fire may as a general rule be recovered by one who is the general or special owner of the property injured.[90] Such damages may be recovered by one who has an absolute title to the property;[91] and one who is in possession of the property injured under a claim of right prima facie has sufficient ownership for this purpose as against the railroad company,[92] as where he is in possession under a lease;[93] and it has been held that even one in possession as a trespasser may recover.[94]

2. Defects in and Management of Engines or Trains — a. Defects in Equipment — (i) In General. As a general rule it is the duty of a railroad company to use reasonable precautions to provide locomotives so constructed and equipped as to avoid the unnecessary communication of fire to premises adjoining its road; otherwise it will be guilty of negligence and liable for resulting damages.[95] In

A railroad company is not an insurer against fire, and an instruction therefore that it ought "to employ such machinery and other agencies for safety to property as might be necessary to avoid accidental destruction, whether such machinery was in common use on railroads or not," is erroneous. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Larmon, 67 Ill. 68.

That another railroad used a different kind of spark arrester from that used by defendant is not proof of defendant's negligence. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. McKelvey, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 426, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 561.

The mere fact that the spark arrester used on a certain locomotive was not as good as that used on some of its other locomotives is not sufficient to show negligence on the part of the company where both have been in common use and approved by experience, and the company, after the exercise of due care and skill, has adopted both, convinced that they are equally good, and uncertain which is the better. Vallaster v. Atlantic City R. Co., 72 N. J. L. 334, 62 Atl. 993.

every new or possible appliance,[2] or test every new device,[3] or adopt appliances which are mere experiments;[4] but it is entitled to a reasonable time for trial and experiment and to make the necessary changes.[5] In determining negligence in this respect, regard must also be had to the time and place, as certain appliances might be used in certain seasons and localities whose use at other times and places would be negligence.[6] But the mere fact that defendant's engine was not equipped with a spark arrester, although negligence, does not make it liable for a fire without proof that it set the fire.[7]

(II) Effect of Adoption of Appliances or Precautions. If a railroad company exercises reasonable diligence in obtaining and putting such appliances into practical use,[8] or if it adopts and uses such appliances and they are in good condition and repair and the locomotive is operated with a due degree of care as regards the escape of fire, it is not liable for injuries to property caused by the communication of fire escaping from its locomotives unless it is shown to have been otherwise guilty of negligence by reason of which the fire escaped,[9] as Test.— Such appliances as in the progress of science and improvement have been shown by experience to be the best, and which are generally known, are the only ones a railroad company is bound to adopt and use. Hagan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 86 Mich. 615, 49 N. W. 509. A railroad company is not required to provide and use the best known appliances that mechanical skill and ingenuity have been able to devise and construct to prevent the escape of sparks from its locomotives without reference to whether the company could by any degree of effort know of any such invention or not or whether they have been tested and proved to be the best. where it negligently fails to prevent the spread of a fire kindled by one of its engines properly equipped and managed.[10]

b. Management of Engines or Trains. The mere fact alone that a railroad company uses on its locomotives the best or most approved appliances is not sufficient to relieve it from liability for damages caused by fire therefrom,[11] It is also necessary that the locomotives and such appliances be constructed and kept in proper repair with a reasonable degree of care and skill;[12] and that they be operated by skilful engineers, firemen, or other servants in such a prudent and careful manner as the circumstances of the case demand,[13] taking into con-

It is not negligence per se for a railroad company to permit sparks to escape from its locomotives and this fact alone will not render the company liable. Texas, etc., R Co. v. Medaris, 64 Tex. 92.

The degree of care imposed on a railway company to prevent the escape of fire from its locomotives is such care and caution as an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under the same or similar circumstances, rather than "all reasonable care and caution." St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Knight, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 477, 49 S. W. 250. It has been held to be such as good specialists in this department are accustomed to exercise (Musselwhite v. Receivers, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,972, 4 Hughes 166); or as great a degree of care to protect the public against damage by fire as it exercises in favor of its patrons (Babcock v. Fitchburg R. Co., 67 Hun (N. Y.) 69, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 449).

Whether or not damage caused by fire communicated by a locomotive was the result of negligence on the part of the railroad company depends upon the facts as to whether or not it used such caution and diligence as was demanded by the circumstances of the case, and not upon the usual conduct of other companies in the vicinity. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. ed. 356.

That an engine became out of repair at a point on the line where there were no facilities for repairing will not justify the action of the engineer in running the engine with increased danger to the next repair shop instead of stopping at the next station. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Tankersley, 63 Tex. 57.

14. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Lowder, 7 Ind. App. 537, 34 N. E. 447, 747; Martin v. Western Union R. Co., 23 Wis. 437, 99 Am. Dec. 189.

A high rate of speed is not of itself negligence which will render the company liable for injury to property by fire ignited by sparks from its locomotive (Hagan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 86 Mich. 615, 49 N. W. 509), unless it appears that the fire would not have occurred but for such unlawful speed (Clisby v. Mobile, etc., R. Co., 78 Miss. 937, 29 So. 913; Bennett v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 423, 32 S. W. 834. See Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Fritts, 103 Va. 687, 49 S. E. 971, 106 Am. St. Rep. 911, 68 L. R. A. 864). In regulating the speed of its trains a railroad company must consider the dryness of the season, the strength and direction of the wind, the danger to adjacent property, and the surrounding circumstances which increase the danger from fire thrown out by the engines; and a high rate of speed, when taken in connection with the circumstances, may be negligence. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Fritts, supra. There is no duty on a railroad company, as to owners of isolated buildings near its tracks, to stop or diminish the customary speed of its trains as they pass on a dry and windy day, in the absence of fires previously set or other evidence of the danger of setting a fire. Woodward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 145 Fed. 577, 75 C. C. A. 591.

15. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Lowder, 7 Ind. App. 537, 34 N. E. 447, 747, holding that it is negligence for a railroad company to run a train loaded with oil over a track which is defective, at a rate of speed forbidden by an ordinance, whereby the train is wrecked and the oil flows on to adjoining premises and causes a fire.

Kansas.— Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Huitt, 1 Kan. App. 788, 41 Pac. 1051, holding that it is negligence under such circumstances for an engineer to use an unusual and unnecessary amount of steam, which forces large sparks out of the smoke-stack.

erty near the track,[17] the fuel used,[18] and the use of an unusual amount of steam whereby an undue quantity of sparks is emitted.[19] Due consideration must also be given to the necessities of the railway service, and the duty of the company to its patrons and the public.[20]

3. Combustibles on Railroad Property[21] — a. Duty to Keep Premises Free From Combustibles — (i) In General. As a general rule it is the duty of a railroad company to use a reasonable degree of diligence and prudence to keep its right of way and other property reasonably free from inflammable material whereby fire from sparks can be communicated to the premises of others; and if it fails to perform this duty and allows such materials to accumulate in such quantity, at such places, and at such seasons as renders it liable to become ignited and cause damage to adjacent property it is guilty of negligence, and liable for resulting damages.[22] It has been held that leaving such matter exposed to sparks

The use of any ordinary fuel to make steam in engines on a railroad is legal (Collins v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 5 Hun (N. The ordinary care which a railroad company is required to use to keep its right of way clear of combustible material is the ordinary care of an expert engineer or railroad servant. Diamond v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 6 Mont. 580, 13 Pac. 367.

That a railroad company has laid merely a temporary side-track under a license does not relieve it from the duty to keep the track reasonably free from combustible material. Kurz, etc., Ice Co. v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 84 Wis. 171, 53 N. W. 850.

Right to keep wood at stations.—A railroad company has a right to keep at its stations supplies of wood for present and future use, and is not responsible for a loss by fire communicated from one of its woodpiles, which has been set on fire by a spark from an engine belonging to the company, unless the damage results from the gross negligence of its employees. That the railroad company leases a portion of its right of way to a private person does not absolve it from keeping such right of way free from combustible material. Sprague v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 70 Kan. 359, 78 Pac. 828.

Care as to licensee.— Where property piled on defendant's right of way near its track is allowed to remain there solely for the accommodation of the owner, it not being there for shipment, and defendant company having no interest in its being on its right of way, the owner of such property is a mere licensee as to whom defendant owes no duty to remove dry grass and combustible material which has been allowed to accumulate around such property. from inflammable property stored in the usual way on defendant's platform near the tracks, and which it is under a duty to receive.[25]

(II) STATUTORY LIABILITY. In some jurisdictions the railroad company is expressly required by statute to keep its right of way clear from dead grass, weeds, and other combustible material,[26] and a failure to comply with such a statute is prima facie evidence of negligence.[27]

(III) GRASS, WEEDS, OR OTHER VEGETATION. The mere failure of a railroad company to clear its right of way of dry grass, weeds, and other combustible matter which are the natural accumulations of the soil is not negligence per se; and the company will not be guilty of negligence and liable for losses resulting from fire occasioned by sparks igniting such accumulations, unless the accumulations were such as would not have been permitted by a cautious or ordinarily prudent man on his own premises if exposed to the same hazard.[28]

b. Effect of Precautions in Construction and Management of Engines. The fact that the railroad company has used the proper precautions in constructing, equipping with proper appliances, and in managing its engines is immaterial and does not relieve it from liability in case a fire started on its right of way by such an engine is communicated to adjoining property by reason of its negligence in permitting combustible material to accumulate along its roadway.[29]

4. Contributory Negligence[30] — a. In General. As a general rule an owner of property adjoining a railroad who has by his negligence contributed to the injury of such property by a fire caused by the railroad can have no redress against the railroad company,[31] if such negligence is the proximate cause of the injury.[32] This rule also applies in case of personal injuries caused by fire.[33]

b. Effect of Statutory Provisions. A railroad company's liability under statutes imposing an absolute liability upon it for damages caused by fire started by its engines,[34] and giving it an insurable interest in property along its right of way,[35] is generally not affected by any contributory negligence on the part of the injured property-owner,[36] although under some statutes an exception is made

One living on a prairie farm at some distance from a railroad, with intervening highways and cultivated farms, is not as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence in not surrounding his premises with fire-guards. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McCollum, 2 Kan. App. 319, 43 Pac. 97.

Where a railroad company pays a certain amount of money for removing a barn out of danger from the fires of locomotives, but the one so paid neglects to do so, it is not such contributory negligence as will bar the owner's right of recovery for the loss of the barn by fire caused by the negligence of the company's employees. Jeffreis v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 3 Houst. (Del.) 447.

Care under contract for construction of side-track.— Where defendant builds a siding to plaintiff's factory under a contract by which plaintiff agrees "to exercise the greatest care in the management of the siding herein provided for, also to use such means and care generally as will tend to avoid accidents of any kind," plaintiff is not liable for accumulations of rubbish beside the track through which fire is communicated to its building. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Indiana Horseshoe Co., 154 Ind. 322, 56 N. E. 766. But where, under a contract for the construction of a side-track, by which plaintiff agrees to release defendant from any liability for loss by fire caused by defendant's negligence or otherwise, and also agrees to keep the premises in a safe condition, free from inflammable material, plaintiff's foreman, knowing that one of defendant's engines throws sparks, instructs the engineer to come upon the premises on a day when the wind is blowing almost a gale, and when the ground is littered with shavings, sawdust, and other combustible matter, merely requesting the engineer to be careful, and the engine, although defective, is properly managed, and communicates fire by means of flying sparks, which results in the destruction of a pile of lumber, the negligence, if any, is that of plaintiff and not of defendant. Dec. 189), does not constitute contributory negligence.

52. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Willard, 111 Ill. App. 225 (failing to save cattle in attempting to save other property is not contributory negligence); Snyder v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 11 W. Va. 14; Austin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 93 Wis. 496, 67 N. W. 1129.

Contributory negligence which precludes a recovery in case of a railroad fire is where in the presence of a seen danger, as where the fire has been set, the property-owner omits to do what prudence requires to be done under the circumstances for the protection of his property, or does some act inconsistent with its preservation. have fire-breaks plowed around his premises,[53] or to make fire-guards or plow around his hay or wheat stacks,[54] or in failing to keep his land free from grass.[55]

f. Extinguishment of Fire. Where a property-owner or his agent or servant seeing his property in danger from a fire started by a railroad in time to arrest its progress makes no effort to do so, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery.[56] He is not bound, however, to use extraordinary means to extinguish or prevent the spread of the fire,[57] nor is he negligent in failing to attempt to extinguish the fire if his efforts would have been unavailing,[58] or if he makes a mistake of judgment as to the best method of extinguishing the fire,[59] or where the fire is of such a character as to impress a man of ordinary prudence with the belief that it does not immediately endanger his property.[60] Nor is he negligent if he uses reasonable and bona fide efforts to stay the fire but which under the circumstances are ineffectual.[61]

g. As Proximate Cause of Injury. The mere fact that the property-owner is guilty of negligence in respect to the fire which causes his injury does not necessarily preclude him from recovering therefor on the ground of contributory negligence; but it must also appear that such negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, or in other words, that he has done some act or omitted some duty which is the proximate cause of the injury, either by contributing to the setting of the fire or to the damages resulting therefrom.[62] Where the property-owner's negligence is the proximate cause of the injury the law will not generally compare the degrees of negligence between him and the railroad company, if each party has been wanting in ordinary care and prudence;[63] but it has been held that although plaintiff is guilty of negligence which in some degree contributes to the injury, yet if defendant is guilty of greater negligence in the absence of which the injury might have been avoided, plaintiff may recover.[64]

5. Proximate Cause of Injury[65] — a. In General. A railroad company is liable for damages caused by fire escaping from its engines or right of way only where its negligence in permitting such fire to start or escape is the proximate cause of injury; or in other words where the injury is the natural and probable consequence of the railroad company's negligence, that is, a consequence so natural that a reasonable person might or should have foreseen that it was likely to result.[66] It is not liable where the fire is purely an unavoidable accident, caused by fire escaping from one of its engines,[67] or where some new agency not within the reasonable contemplation of the railroad company intervenes and brings about the injury.[68]

b. Spread of Fire — (1) In General. The maxim that the proximate and not the remote cause is to be considered is not controlled by time or distance, or by the succession of natural events.[69] If the injury is one which might reasonably have been anticipated from the negligent act of the railroad company in permitting the fire to start or escape, and the fire burns as one continuous fire without a break in the line of causation, and without the aid of any independent agency, the injury, if traceable to the first fire, is a proximate consequence of the fire notwithstanding the fire has passed through the land or property of others before causing such injury.[70] If, however, the fire spreads beyond its natural

The fact that there was a temporary arrest and cessation of the fire cannot be regarded as a new and independent cause, nor can it be said that the fire was outside of the bounds of reasonable anticipation as a result of the primary negligence. In New York it is held that where a railroad company has negligently started a fire on its right of way, it is liable to the owner of premises immediately adjacent thereto for damages caused by the fire spreading to such premises (Ryan v. New York Cent. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 210, 21 Am. Dec. 49); but that it is not liable to an owner of premises not abutting on its premises for damages caused by a fire communicated through the abutting or intervening premises of a third person over which the railroad company has no control and without which the fire could not have extended (Van Inwegen v. Port Jervis, etc., R. (II) Fire Carried by Wind or Running Water. Although in a few cases it has been held otherwise,[72] ordinarily the wind is not regarded as an independent intervening agency so as to relieve a railroad company from its liability on the ground that its negligence is not a proximate cause of the injury,[73] unless it is of such an extraordinary character that the railroad company could not reasonably have contemplated it.[74] Running water also is not an independent intervening agency which will relieve the railroad company from liability.[75]

destroys the property is communicated from the engine of the railroad company by means of combustible matter situated on intervening land, whether plaintiff's or another's, is not such an intervening agency as to affect the liability of the company.[76]

6. Actions For Injuries by Fire — a. In General — (i) Form of Action. In the absence of statute, the form of action against a railroad company for damages by fire is governed by the general rules applicable to the forms of actions for negligence generally.[77]

(ii) Notice of Claim. Under some statutes notice of a claim for damages occasioned by fire set by a locomotive must be served on the railroad company within a prescribed time after the fire occasioning the damage has ceased.[78] Under other statutes, however, an action for such damages may be maintained without any prior notice or demand.[79]

(iii) Parties. As a general rule an action against a railroad company for damages by fire should be brought by the owner of the property injured;[80] but all persons interested in the property injured should be joined as plaintiffs.[81] If the property was insured and the insurance has been paid, but the value of the property destroyed exceeds the amount paid, the insured may sue the railroad company in his own name for the full amount of the loss,[82] but the insurance company, if it has taken an assignment of the insured's cause of action, may be properly joined as plaintiff.[83]

was insured and that plaintiff has been paid the insurance is generally no defense to a railroad company in an action against it for negligently burning the same.[85]

(v) JURISDICTION. Under some statutes an action against a railroad company for damages by fire may be brought in any county through which the railroad runs.[86] Under other statutes an action for such an injury to real estate is properly brought in the county in which the real estate is situated,[87] and the fact that a claim for injury to personal property is joined with that for injury to real estate does not oust the jurisdiction of the court.[88]

(vi) PROCESS. In the absence of statute specially providing for the service of process upon a railroad company, the general rules or statutes governing service of process upon corporations generally apply in actions against a railroad company for damages by fire.[89]

b. Pleading[90] — (i) COMPLAINT OR PETITION — (A) Form and Sufficiency in General. In the absence of statute otherwise, a complaint or petition against a railroad company for damages by fire should allege that the injury was caused through the negligence of defendant company or its agents or employees,[91]

St. § 1511, making a railroad company responsible for injuries by fire originating within its right of way through the act of its "authorized agents," a complaint alleging that defendant through "its agent" set fire on its right of way which was communicated to plaintiff's property causing the injury complained of is good).

Sufficiency of complaint.—Allegations in a complaint that defendant, its agents or employees, negligently set fire to and destroyed specified property belonging to plaintiff on plaintiff's premises in a named town and county is sufficient on demurrer. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Planters' Warehouse, etc., Co., (Ala. 1907) 45 So. 82.

A general allegation at the close of a complaint that the injury was caused by the negligence of defendant is sufficient to characterize as negligence all that defendant has done or permitted. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Palmer, 13 Ind. App. 161, 39 N. E. 881, 41 N. E. 400.

Negligence of agents or employees.— It is not sufficient to allege the negligence as the negligence of the company's agents or employees (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts, 13 Ind. App. 692, 42 N. E. 247; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Palmer, 13 Ind. App. 161, 39 N. E. 881, 41 N. Co. v. Springwater Distillery Co., 53 S. W. 275, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 769, holding that it is sufficient to allege that defendant railroad company, by its servants and agents, carelessly and negligently set fire to certain property, and caused it to be burned, without alleging any fact showing that such servants and agents were acting within the scope of their employment). An allegation that the fire originated in consequence of the act of defendant railroad company is equivalent to an allegation that the fire "originated in consequence of the act of any of the defendant's authorized agents or employees" as prescribed by Code Laws (1902), § 2135. and in some jurisdictions that plaintiff was without fault on his part.[92] It should also state with certainty and definiteness the injury sustained,[93] and the particular negligence relied upon as a basis for recovery,[94] as that defendant negligently started or set out the fire,[95] or negligently allowed combustible material on its right of way,[96] or was negligent in permitting the fire to escape or spread,[97] whereby the injury resulted. Plaintiff should also aver ownership of Alleging negligence only in the rate of speed is bad in a complaint for setting fires outside defendant's right of way. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. McFall, 165 Ind. 574, 76 N. E. 400, (1904) 72 N. E. 552.

Sufficient allegation as to accumulation of combustible material on right of way as cause of injury see Buck v. Union Pac. R. Co., 59 Kan. 328, 52 Pac. 866. Allegations that defendant carelessly and negligently permitted grass and other combustible matter to accumulate on its right of way, and that sparks from a passing locomotive set fire to such matter, and the fire spread to plaintiff's building, are sufficient, without allegations that the locomotive was kept in an improper condition, and carelessly operated. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Indiana Horseshoe Co., 154 Ind. 322, 56 N. E. 766. An allegation of personal injuries by reason of combustible material negligently left on the right of way and ignited from sparks from a locomotive held not to be bad because of 3 Starr & C. Annot. the railroad and engine by defendant,[98] and should describe,[99] and aver his ownership [1] of the property burned. But it is not necessary that he should allege in detail all the facts and circumstances from which negligence could be inferred,[2] or by what particular engine or train the fire was started; [3] nor need he allege what duty the law imposes upon defendant as to the protection of the property of others against fires caused by defectively constructed locomotives,[4] or negative matters of defense.[5] Plaintiff must not combine a common-law action for negligence with a cause of action under the statutes for injury done by fire communicated from defendant's locomotive.[6] The complaint or petition in such an action may be amended in accordance with the rules applicable in civil cases generally,[7]

Am. St. Rep. 465; Wise v. Joplin R. Co., 85 Mo. 178 (holding that the petition need only aver the substantive facts that the fire was negligently permitted to escape and burn plaintiff's property); McCallum v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 31 U. C. Q. B. 527 [affirming 30 U. C. Q. B. 122].

An averment that defendant negligently permitted fire to escape from its right of way is not objectionable as pleading negligence in general terms. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Wise, 36 Ind. App. 59, 74 N. E. 1107.

Continuous burning.—A complaint alleging that defendant negligently permitted fire on its right of way to escape to the land of S, igniting it, and thence to plaintiff's adjoining land, is sufficient, without alleging negligence in permitting the fire to escape from the land of S, to that of plaintiff. Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Lackey, 31 Ind. App. 103, 67 N. E. 278.

That sparks and coals of fire were emitted from defendant's engine and carried by wind from the engine to and against plaintiff's property is insufficient to charge negligence in permitting the fire to escape from its right of way. E. 328 (holding that where the complaint alleges that defendant negligently permitted the fire to enter on plaintiff's land and burn over two acres of the same, and that the fire burned the crops, turf, and soil off two acres of said land, it is sufficiently certain that the two acres alleged to have been burned over and rendered valueless were the same two acres upon which the fire was said to have entered); Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jagoe, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 1061 (holding that a complaint which alleges the county in which the land was located, the number of acres in the tract, actual possession by one plaintiff under lease from the other, the owner in fee, and the operation of defendant's road over the land, sufficiently describes the land).

Rhode Island.— MacDonald v. New York, etc., R. Co., 23 R. I. 558, 51 Atl. 578, holding that allegations that plaintiff was seized and possessed and the occupant of the land injured by fire from defendant's engines, and designating such land as the premises of plaintiff, constitutes a sufficient averment of plaintiff's ownership.

Joint tenancy.—An allegation that plaintiffs were the owners and in actual possession of the land described is not necessarily an allegation that they owned as joint tenants or tenants in common. Western, etc., R. Co. v. Tate, 129 Ga. 526, 59 S. E. 266.

Where the complaint sets out facts from which defendant's duty arises, a general averment relative to what was negligently done or omitted is sufficient. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. McFall, 165 Ind. 574, 76 N. E. 400, (1904) 72 N. E. 552.

An allegation that the injury was caused "wholly by the negligence of defendant" is good as against a demurrer for want of facts, notwithstanding its failure to state in detail the facts constituting the negligence. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 161 Ind. 701, 66 N. E. 899.

Discretion of court.—A refusal to allow amendments, to a declaration for the destruction of property by fire communicated by a locomotive, after a demurrer to the declaraas by adding a more specific description of the property burned, or an amplification of the facts constituting defendant's negligence.[8]

(B) Under Statutes. Under statutes imposing a liability upon a railroad company for all damages by fire that is set out or caused by the operation of its road, negligence will be presumed if it is alleged that the fire and injury were caused by the operation of the railroad, and it is not necessary for plaintiff to specifically allege negligence.[9]

(C) Defects in and Management of Engines. Where such ground of recovery is relied upon the complaint should allege with certainty and definiteness that the railroad company has been negligent in the construction, equipment, repair, or management of its engines, whereby the fire escaped and the injury was caused.[10]

Where the petition is vague and indefinite as to the specific act of negligence, it may be amended in that respect, in order to meet a specific demurrer raising that objection. Southern R. Co. v. Ward, 110 Ga. 793, 36 S. E. 78. But such an amendment must not constitute a separate and distinct cause of action. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Ludlum, 63 Kan. 719, 66 Pac. 1045.

Ohio.— Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Kreager, 61 Ohio St. 312, 56 N. E. 203, petition sufficient under 91 Ohio Laws, p. 187.

Rhode Island.— Macdonald v. New York, etc., R. Co., 23 R. I. 558, 51 Atl. 578.

That the petition alleges negligence on the part of the company does not render the action one at common law, and not under the statute (Rev. St. § 2615), imposing an absolute liability on railroad companies for injuries by fire, if there is sufficient alleged to bring the case within the statute. Walker v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 68 Mo. App. 465.

Under a statute making defendant liable for loss or damage by fire originating on land belonging to it, or on adjacent land, and caused by sparks from an engine, an allegation that the sparks were emitted causing a fire on plaintiff's land and on land of defendant is sufficient. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 577.

10. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Hinton, 141 Ala. 606, 37 So. 635; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Brough, 168 Ind. 378, 81 N. E. 57, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 401; Lake Erie, etc., R. W. 769, holding that a complaint alleging that defendant so carelessly and negligently managed its engine and train as to set fire to dry grass on land adjoining its right of way, which, without negligence on plaintiff's part, spread and caused the damage complained of, charges actionable negligence against the company.

Allegations held sufficient to aver negligence relative to defects in and management of engine see Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Martin, 148 Ala. 8, 42 So. 618; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Corn, 71 Ill. 493; Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. McFall, 165 Ind. 574, 76 N. E. 400, (1904) 72 N. E. 552; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Wise, 36 Ind. App. 59, 74 N. E. 1107; Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Gossard, 14 Ind. App. 244, 42 N. E. 818 (that defendant railroad company negligently permitted its engines to become out of repair and negligently permitted fire to escape therefrom and destroy plaintiff's property); Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. House, 10 Ind. App. 134, 37 N. E. 731 (that the engine was negligently constructed and managed; that it emitted large sparks and coals of fire which were carried by the wind and fell on plaintiff's land and caused the fire); Adriance v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 105 N. Y. App. Div. 33, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 473; Smith v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 10 R. I. 22 (holding that an allegation that defendant while using its locomotive, engine, and other rolling stock, so carelessly and negligently managed the same that plaintiff's property was set on fire from sparks from the engine, states with sufficient accuracy that the injury was caused by the careless management of the fire in the engine).

Allegations held insufficient.—An allegation that "the servants, agents and employés, etc., of said defendant in operating and running its engine over said line or road near the premises of plaintiff in said county, negligently and carelessly permitted such engine to cast out sparks and coals of fire therefrom into the dry grass and other combustible material on defendant's right-of-way, and set fire thereto, which spread onto and over the land of plaintiff" is an insufficient allegation of defects in the engine. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Fudge, 39 Kan. 543, 18 Pac. 720. As against a motion to make more definite, an allegation that defendant, through its employees in the use of the engine, was careless and negligent in the operation of its railway, is not sufficient to support a finding of negligence in the use of a defective spark arrester. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Garrison, 66 Kan. 625, 72 Pac. 225.

(D) Proximate Cause of Injury. In some jurisdictions it is held that it must be alleged that defendant company negligently caused or suffered the fire to be communicated to the property of plaintiff whether or not it was negligent in starting the fire,[11] and that the fire reached and burned the property by a continuous burning.[12] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that if the complaint alleges negligence in starting the fire it is not necessary to also allege negligence in permitting it to escape or spread to complainant's injury.[13]

(E) Negativing Contributory Negligence. In some jurisdictions the complaint must also plainly negative contributory negligence.[14] In other jurisdictions, however, contributory negligence is regarded as a matter of defense and ordinarily need not be negatived in the complaint or petition.[15]

(II) PLEA OR ANSWER. As a general rule, in order that contributory negligence may be set up as a defense it must be pleaded.[16] The sufficiency of the

In Kentucky a petition to recover damages for the burning of property by sparks from a locomotive need not allege that defendant had failed to provide a spark arrester, as required by Ky. St. § 782, a compliance with that requirement being matter of defense. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Springwater Distillery Co., 53 S. W. 275, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 769.

The setting of fire outside the right of way by a locomotive being a positive wrong, the complaint must show a negligent management of the locomotive (Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. McFall, 165 Ind. 574, 76 N. E. 400, (1904) 72 N. E. 552); and a failure to allege in such case that the emission of sparks and coals was negligently done or suffered is bad, every possible presumption being in favor of the company (Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. McFall, supra). But where there is an averment of negligence in regard to the condition of a spark arrester on an engine, it is not necessary that the complaint should show that the railroad company had notice or knowledge of the existence of holes in such spark arrester. Personal injury.—A complaint which alleges that defendant negligently set fire to and burned the house in which plaintiff resided, that he was in the house when it was ignited, and was burned while escaping from it during the fire, sufficiently shows that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Hinton, 141 Ala. 606, 37 So. 635.

14. Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 40, 44, 62 (holding that an allegation that it happened without plaintiff's fault is not sufficient); Pittsburgh, etc., R. An allegation that plaintiff was without any fault, blame, or negligence is a sufficient averment that the loss resulted without the negligence of plaintiff (Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. The want of a plea of contributory negligence does not preclude the court from awarding a nonsuit, where plaintiff's evidence so conclusively shows contributory negligence that the court would grant a new trial in case of a verdict in favor of plaintiff. Illinois.— Lonisville, etc., Consol. R. Co. v. Spencer, 149 Ill. 97, 36 N. E. 91 [affirming 47 Ill. App. 503], holding that evidence to prove the value of land before and after the fire is admissible where the injury charged is the destruction of growing trees and bushes on plaintiff's land.

Oregon.— Norwich Ins. Soc. v. Oregon R. Texas.— Fleming v. Pullen, (Civ. App. 1906) 97 S. W. 109 (holding that an allegation that sparks from defendant's engine set fire to plaintiff's field and pasture fences does not limit plaintiff to proof that his fences were ignited directly by sparks from the engine, and prevent him from proving that the fire caused by such sparks spread to his fences); San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. New York Home Ins. Co., (Civ. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 999; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Cannon, (Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 342; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Gains, (Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 873.

Vermont.— Hoskinson v. Central Vermont R. Co., 66 Vt. 618, 30 Atl. 24, holding that under a complaint alleging the property destroyed by fire to have been "a dwelling house, sheds and barns, together with the contents thereof, consisting of household furniture, family wearing apparel . . . grain and fodder," evidence as to the destruction of personal property is admissible if it comes under any class of property therein named.

Washington.— Noland v. Great Northern R. Co., 31 Wash. 430, 71 Pac. 1098.

Where a loss by fire occasioned by defendant's negligence in allowing fire to escape is the gravamen of the complaint plaintiff is not confined in his proof to the precise place where he alleged the fire originated (Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClelland, 42 Ill. 355); nor is it necessary for plaintiff to show that defendant omitted to adopt prudent means to prevent the escape of fire after it had started, but it is sufficient, under such averment, to show the accumulation of combustible material on the right of way, extending up to plaintiff's property, so that the communication of fire to plaintiff's property would be the natural and probable conse-

issues.[22] Thus evidence of one kind of negligence not alleged is not admissible under an allegation of negligence of a different kind.[23] Where the complaint describes and identifies a particular engine as the cause of the injury, the condition of that engine and its management are all that are to be considered, and evidence as to the construction and operation of other engines is inadmissible.[24]

Evidence of the negligence of the company in failing to provide safe engines and appliances thereon and in its method of operating them is admissible under a petition alleging generally that the fire was negligently allowed to escape and destroy plaintiff's property (Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Sanders, 145 Ala. 449, 40 So. 402; Wise v. Joplin R. Co., 85 Mo. 178); or under an allegation that defendant "so negligently and carelessly managed a fire which it intentionally kindled and maintained in a certain locomotive" that the fire came into and upon plaintiff's premises (Brush v. Long Island R. Co., 10 N. Y. App. Div. 535, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 103 [affirmed in 158 N. Y. 742, 52 N. E. 1123]. Testimony as to the condition of the grates of the engine on the day of the fire should be admitted under an allegation that the spark arrester was out of order and unfit for use, and that the engine was defective and dangerous, and, in consequence thereof, sparks and cinders were emitted in dangerous quantities. Brown v. Benson, 101 Ga. 753, 29 S. E. 215.

Where a complaint contains two counts, each alleging a single burning of plaintiff's property, proof of more than two fires may be given, although the court may afterward require plaintiff to elect upon which he will rely. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 10 Ill. App. 359.

Where the petition alleges that the fire was communicated by the negligent operation of defendant's locomotive, but does not allege defective appliances, plaintiff may show that the fire escaped through the spark arrester although such evidence tends to show that the spark arrester was defective. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Chamberlin, (Kan. 1900) 60 Pac. 15.

Where the petition does not allege that the locomotive was defective, but defendant tries the case on the assumption that the existence of defects is an issuable fact, defendant cannot object to evidence introduced by plaintiff tending to show that the spark arrester on the engine was defective. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Chamberlin, (Kan. 1900) 60 Pac. 15.

Under the general issue, in an action for fire set by sparks emitted from defendant's locomotive, defendant may prove that it was not guilty of the negligent acts charged, but that the fire was occasioned by persons over whom it had no control, or that plaintiff caused it, and may prove its acts of caution in guarding against the spread of fire, and that the fire, although negligently started, did not reach plaintiff's land, or that an independent cause intervened between its acts and the injury; but it cannot show that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in suffering combustible material to remain on his property in close proximity to the track, or that plaintiff after the discovery of the fire negligently failed to make reasonable efforts to save his property, such acts not being available unless specially pleaded. Smith v. Ogden, etc., R. Co., 33 Utah 129, 93 Pac. 185.

22. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Barker, 94 Ky. 71, 21 S. W. 347, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 750, holding that evidence of facts tending to elucidate the issues as made by the pleadings is admissible, although not directly alleged.

Where the complaint after naming some of the items of property destroyed continued "and other personal property" and no effort was made by defendant by motion or otherwise to secure a specific statement as to the nature and character of the "other personal property," plaintiff's testimony that he lost a dog worth a certain amount elicited in answer to a general question to which no objection was made asking if anything else was destroyed by the fire is not objectionable. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Martin, 148 Ala. 8, 42 So. 618.

23. Miller v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 364, 23 N. W. 756; Carter v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 65 Iowa 287, 21 N. W. 607 (holding that evidence of defendant's negligence in allowing combustible material to accumulate on the right of way is not admissible under a petition alleging negligence in the management and operation of an engine); Riley v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 124 Mo. App. 278, 101 S. W. 156 (holding that where a complaint alleges that "the servants, agents and employees, did negligently set fire to brush and grass on the right of way," etc.; that "the said fire did extend," etc., "to the premises of plaintiff," etc., it is error to admit testimony that the fire was communicated by sparks from defendant's engine); Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Rheiner, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 971 (holding that evidence that the fire was caused by the use of inferior coal is inadmissible under an allegation that plaintiff's property was burned through defendant's failure to use proper spark arresters).

24. Inman v. Elberton Air-Line R. Co., 90 Ga. 663, 16 S. E. 958, 35 Am. St. Rep. 232 (holding that the refusal of the court to admit evidence that other engines of defendant, not shown to be of like construction, had at other times emitted sparks at or about the same place is not error); Koontz v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 20 Oreg. 3, 23 Pac. 820 (holding, however, that an allegation that the property was fired by an engine of defendant which passed at a time specified does not so identify the engine as to limit plaintiff's evidence as to the origin of the fire from such engine); Erie R. Co. v. Decker, 78 Pa. St. 293.

(11) Matters to Be Proved. As a general rule proof need be made only of negligence which is properly alleged,[25] and not of what is needlessly alleged;[26] and a recovery can be had only upon proof of the particular acts of negligence alleged,[27] except that if the complaint states several causes of action, a recovery may be had upon proof of either one of them.[28]

(111) Variance. There can be no recovery where there is a material variance between the proof and allegations;[29] but it is sufficient if the substance of the issue is proved and a variance merely in form or in regard to a matter which is immaterial or non-prejudicial will be disregarded.[30]

25. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Ayres, 56 Kan. 176, 42 Pac. 722 (holding that where mismanagement of the engine which set the fire is the only negligence alleged, defendant is not obliged to prove the engine was in good condition); Mathews v. Great Northern R. Co., 7 N. D. 81, 72 N. W. 1085 (holding that if plaintiff narrows his averment to a charge of negligence in the operation of the engine, he can still make out a prima facie case by showing that the engine did in fact set the fire; but, so long as the pleading remains unamended, plaintiff can recover only for the negligence specified, and defendant is not required to rebut any other presumption of negligence as it would be under a complaint charging negligence generally).

Where negligence is charged in permitting combustible material to accumulate on the right of way, which was ignited by fire from the locomotive, plaintiff need not prove title or ownership of the locus in quo in defendant, but it is sufficient if he shows that defendant was using the gronnd as a part of its right of way. McTavish v. Great Northern R. Co., 8 N. D. 333, 79 N. W. 443.

26. Campbell v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 121 Mo. 340, 25 S. W. 936, 42 Am. St. Rep. 530, 25 L. R. A. 175, holding that under Rev. St. (1889) § 2615, the fact that the petition needlessly avers negligence does not prevent a recovery without proof of negligence.

Proof of the act of negligence which was the proximate cause of the injury is sufficient, although other acts of negligence are also alleged. Indiana Clay Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 31 Ind. App. 258, 67 N. E. 704; Reishus v. Willmar, etc., R. Co., 92 Minn. 371, 100 N. W. 1.

27. Southern R. Co. v. Thompson, 129 Ga. 367, 58 S. E. 1044; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Buck, 3 Kan. App. 371, 44 Pac. 904; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Mills, 5 Kan. App. 478, 47 Pac. 623, holding that under a petition charging the negligent setting out of a fire, it is error to allow a recovery for negligence in extinguishing a fire accidentally set out.

28. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Countryman, 16 Ind. App. 139, 44 N. E. 265 (holding that where a complaint for negligently starting a fire on the right of way also charges negligence in allowing the fire to escape to plaintiff's premises, evidence showing the negligent escape of the fire is sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff, although there is a conflict as to where the fire originated); Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 6 Ind. App. 262, 33 N. E. 241; Martin v. Western Union R. Co., 23 Wis. 437, 99 Am. Dec. 189.

Where a complaint charges negligence both as to the machinery and appliances and as to the management of such machinery and appliances, the primary fact that defendant's train threw out the fire in question will of itself operate to make out a prima facie case of negligence. Johnson v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 1 N. D. 354, 48 N. W. 227.

29. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Buck, 3 Kan. App. 371, 44 Pac. 904, holding that where the petition alleges that the fire escaped from defendant's engine on to plaintiff's premises because of imperfect appliances and careless and negligent management of the train, a recovery is not warranted by proof of an accidental escape of fire from the engine without fault of the railway company, although fire so set out may have been communicated to plaintiff's premises because of the negligent manner in which the right of way was kept.

Under an allegation that by reason of carelessness and negligence in operating its train sparks were emitted from defendant's engine and caused the fire, hare proof that the fire was caused by sparks emitted from a passing engine is not sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover. Tinney v. Georgia Cent. R. Co., 129 Ala. 523, 30 So. 623.

30. Alabama.— Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 109 Ala. 500, 10 So. 989, holding that an allegation that plaintiff had been damaged by fire from engines of defendant railroad company caused by the negligence of defendant is supported by proof of either defective construction or negligent operation of the engines or of negligence in permitting combustible material to remain on its right of way.

Florida.— Florida East Coast R. Co. v. Welch, 53 Fla. 145, 44 So. 250, holding that there is no fatal variance between an allegation that defendant communicated fire to plaintiff's land from a locomotive which spread over and upon the land of plaintiff and injured trees thereon, and proof that the fire was not set by a locomotive directly on the lands of plaintiff but was negligently set on adjoining land and spread naturally to the lands of plaintiff.

Georgia.— Southern R. Co. v. Herrington, 128 Ga. 438, 55 S. E. 694, holding that where a petition alleges that plaintiff sustained injury from sparks from the locomotive

d. Evidence — (i) Presumptions and Burden of Proof — (a) In General. In an action against a railroad company for injuries to property caused by fire from the operation of its engines, trains, or road, the burden of proof in the first instance is upon plaintiff to show, by a preponderance of evidence, negligence on the part of defendant as alleged,[31] and that such negligence was the cause through the carelessness of defendant's servants and employees, plaintiff may recover upon proof that the engine was negligently handled.

Indiana.— Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Walsh, 11 Ind. App. 13, 38 N. E. 534.

Maryland.— Ryan v. Gross, 68 Md. 377, 12 Atl. 115, 13 Atl. 302, holding that where plaintiff charges that the fire was caused by sparks from a steam shovel plow or a steam engine proof that it was caused by sparks from a steam engine used in operating a shovel plow is not a fatal variance.

Missouri.— Wise v. Joplin R. Co., 85 Mo. 178 (holding that proof that the fire escaped from the smoke-stack and not from the fire-box or ash-pan as alleged is not a fatal variance it not appearing that the variance in that particular was prejudicial to defendant); Lester v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 60 Mo. 265 (variance held at most to be only such as would require an amendment of plaintiff's petition).

New York.— Brush v. Long Island R. Co., 10 N. Y. App. Div. 535, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 103 [affirmed in 158 N. Y. 742, 53 N. E. 1123], holding that, although a complaint alleging that defendant so negligently and carelessly managed a fire in a locomotive that it came upon plaintiff's premises does not refer to rubbish on the right of way as an agency in spreading the fire, recovery may be had for a fire communicated from the engine to the rubbish, and so spread to plaintiff's premises.

Rhode Island.— Smith v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 10 R. I. 22, holding that an allegation that defendant carelessly managed the locomotive is sustained by proof that it carelessly managed the fire in the locomotive.

See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Railroads," § 1708.

Proof that plaintiff's property was destroyed by a fire kindled on adjoining land by sparks from defendant's locomotive, which fire moved on to plaintiff's land, is not a material variance from an allegation that the destruction of plaintiff's property was caused by fire kindled on his land by sparks from defendant's locomotive. See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Railroads," § 1709.

As to facts not peculiarly within the knowledge of defendant's employees the burden of proving negligence is on plaintiff. Edwards v. Bonner, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 236, 33 S. W. 761.

Presumption as to carefulness.—There is no legal presumption that a railroad company, while in the exercise of its lawful right to run its locomotives and trains over its road and to use fire in so doing, will not permit fire to escape from them. Palmer v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 76 Mo. 217; Huff v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 17 Mo. App. 356. So, while plaintiff has the burden of proving negligence, he has no legal presumption of

of the injury,[32] as that by reason of such negligence the fire was communicated to his property by sparks or cinders from an engine.[33] If plaintiff shows such negligence, or facts which raise an inference of negligence, the burden is then upon defendant to show that it used due care in the construction, equipment, repair, and management of its engines.[34] It is not necessary that plaintiff should prove either the specific defect in the engine or the particular act of misconduct in its management or operation constituting the negligence;[35] but it is sufficient if he proves facts and circumstances from which the jury might fairly infer that the engine was either defective or negligently operated,[36] or that the fire originated on the railroad right of way.[37]

Where an injury happens from two efficient causes the principle that plaintiff suing only one of the wrong-doers must show the particular part of the loss inflicted by defendant is inapplicable in an action against a railroad company which set the fire with its engines, where the evidence leaves it just as probable that the injury was the result of one cause as of the other. (B) After Proof of Injury — (1) IN GENERAL — (a) BURDEN OF PROOF ON DEFENDANT. But although the above rule is the general rule as to proof of negligence in the first instance, it is the rule in many jurisdictions that where plaintiff has shown that the fire was caused by sparks or cinders from a locomotive of defendant company, or by the operation of its railroad, a prima facie case of negligence is thereby made out upon which plaintiff may recover unless defendant shows that it was free from negligence in the construction, equipment, or management of such locomotive,[38] or in causing the fire to spread by allowing combustible

The reason for this rule is because the railroad company and its employees have possession and control of the engine and the means of knowing its condition while plaintiff has not. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Hooten, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 139, 50 S. W. 499; Patteson v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 94 Va. 16, 26 S. E. 393.

To raise the presumption of negligence so as to cast on defendant the burden of showing that it had suitable appliances and that the engine was properly managed, the jury must be reasonably satisfied from the evidence that the fire was caused by sparks emitted in unusual and dangerous quantities from defendant's engine, and evidence merely tending to prove such fact is not, as a matter of law, sufficient. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Malone, 109 Ala. 509, 20 So. 33.

Negligence will not be presumed where a fire was caused immediately after the passage of a locomotive equipped with proper appliances. Savannah F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Pelzer Mfg. Co., 60 Fed. 39.

40. Clark v. Ellithorp, 7 Kan. App. 337, 51 Pac. 940, 9 Kan. App. 503, 59 Pac. 286, holding that a cause of action based upon the alleged carelessness of the railroad company in permitting fire to escape while burning the right of way comes under Gen. St. (1889) par. 1321, providing that in actions against a railway company for damages by fire caused by the operating of its road, proof that the fire was caused by operating the said railroad is prima facie evidence of negligence.

A fire set by section-men in burning the grass along the right of way is not set out or caused by operating the railway so as to cast the burden on defendant to show its freedom from negligence in allowing the fire to escape and in failing to put it out. See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Railroads," § 1710.

A presumption of negligence is raised and the burden cast on defendant to show that its locomotive and appliances were properly connot on the whole case,[44] and although plaintiff may as a general rule rest his case when he has made out a prima facie case within this rule,[45] he cannot withhold evidence confirmatory of such prima facie case and offer it in rebuttal to disprove evidence given by defendant.[46] If defendant admits that the fire was caused by sparks from its locomotive and pleads facts indicating lack of negligence its plea is in effect a plea of confession and avoidance, and it therefore assumes the burden of proof.[47]

(b) BURDEN OF PROOF ON PLAINTIFF. In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that a presumption of negligence on the part of the railroad company does not arise from the mere fact that the fire was set by sparks or cinders from one of its locomotives, and that it is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove some act of negligence in the construction, equipment, or management of the locomotive.[48]

(2) REBUTTING PRESUMPTIONS. A presumption of negligence raised by proof of the injury caused by fire from an engine may be rebutted by proof of freedom from negligence on the part of the railroad company,[49] or that the injury was structed and in good order where it has been shown that the fire was started by sparks from one of defendant's engines and that an engine when properly constructed and in good repair would not emit sparks. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Fredenbur, 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 23, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 15.

App. 395, 67 S. W. 182, holding that defendant need only meet the presumption and need not show by a preponderance of evidence that it was not negligent.

Defendant is not required to produce a preponderance of the evidence bearing on the question of negligence in order to overcome such prima facie case, but it is sufficient if it produces enough to counter-balance that by which the prima facie case is made out. The most cogent reasons given for the support of this rule are, that a railroad company, which is authorized by law to operate its trains by steam, is not an insurer against accidents by fire, and is not liable for injuries caused by the use of fire in generating steam, if the right is exercised in a lawful manner, and with reasonable care and skill; that the owner of adjacent property assumes all risks incident to a lawful and proper use of the road; that negligence is the gist of the liability, without proof of which an action cannot be maintained; and that by the general rule, in actions founded on negligence, plaintiff must aver it, and the burden of proof rests upon him, and in no case does the mere fact of injury prove negligence. Where it is shown that the same engine set out other fires elsewhere at about the same time, the jury may find that the prima facie case is not overcome by evidence of care on defendant's part. Seska v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 77 Iowa 137, 41 N. W. 596.

Insufficient proof.— That the railroad company used the best spark arresters, and that the fire did not originate on the right of way, is insufficient to overcome the prima facie case. San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Adams, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 578.

Evidence of care on defendant's part is not sufficient as a matter of law to rebut the pre-caused by some other agency;[50] and such rebuttal may be shown by evidence introduced either by plaintiff or defendant.[51] To constitute such rebuttal, or in other words to exonerate the railroad company, it must be shown that at the time in question its engine was properly constructed and equipped with the most approved appliances and that they were in good repair or that reasonable care and caution had been taken to keep them in such repair,[52] and that it was properly managed and operated under the circumstances by an experienced and competent engineer and fireman;[53] and freedom from negligence in acts or omissions

Co. v. Neilson, 118 Ill. App. 343; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Kingman, 49 Ill. App. 43 (holding that evidence that the engines were supplied with proper spark arresters without proof that such arresters were in good condition and repair at the time of the fire is insufficient to rebut the statutory presumption of negligence); Lake Shore, etc., R. The adequacy of defendant's rebuttal must be determined in view of any facts appearing in the testimony in addition to those sufficient to give rise to the statutory presumption which tend to show negligence. Continental Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 97 Minn. 467, 107 N. W. 548, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 99.

Customary manner.— It is not sufficient to disprove such negligence to show that the engine was of approved construction and was operated by a skilled fireman and engineer in the customary manner without also showing that the customary manner was a careful one. Woodson v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 21 Minn. 60.

Uncontradicted testimony that the locomotive was provided with the best spark arrester yet discovered, that none has been invented that will arrest all sparks, and that the smoke-stack and arrester were daily inspected by competent mechanics and found to be in good condition and repair and that the engineer was competent is sufficient to rebut the presumption of negligence. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Benson, 69 Tex. 407, 5 S. W. 822, 5 Am. St. Rep. 74.

Where it appears that the fire originated by sparks from defendant's engine, it has been held that evidence that the engine was fully equipped with spark arresters, and that they were in good condition at the time of the fire, and that the engine was carefully managed, is not sufficient to relieve defendant from the charge of negligence. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 577.

Conclusiveness of evidence.— Where the evidence that there were no defects in the locomotive, or that the locomotive was operated with ordinary care, is so conclusive that an opposite finding is not sustainable, the statutory presumption of negligence (under Minn. Gen. St. (1894) § 2700) is overcome as a matter of law, and it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict for defendant. Woodward v. Chicago, etc., R. company fails to rebut such presumption plaintiff is entitled to recover,[57] unless the railroad company proves that plaintiff himself was guilty of contributory negligence.[58]

(c) Cause of Injury. To establish a charge of negligence on the part of defendant company it is not enough for plaintiff to show a possibility or even a probability that the fire was communicated to the property by sparks from defendant s locomotive;[59] but he must prove by a preponderance of affirmative evidence that it did so originate,[60] although it is not required that his preliminary evidence should exclude all possibility of another origin of the fire,[61] or that it be undisputed.[62] Nor is he required to prove which one of defendant's engines set the fire.[63]

(d) Defects in and Management of Engine.[64] Negligence in the equipment, repair, or operation of an engine may be inferred from the fact that the engine habitually scatters sparks to such an extent as to endanger combustible material all along the line of the road,[65] or that it emits a stream of sparks along its way setting fire to many things,[66] or that it emits sparks unusual in quantity or character;[67] but it cannot be inferred from the fact that some time after the fire the appliances for arresting sparks were out of repair.[68] Nor is there a presumption of law that an engine inspected before starting on its trip and found in good condition remained in such condition during the trip.[69] Where it is shown that the appliances used by the railroad company have been in use many years and found sufficient to protect its own and other property, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show by positive, strong, and convincing evidence,[70] that the

But see Sheldon v. Hudson River R. Co., 14 N. Y. 218, 67 Am. Dec. 155, holding that after other probable causes of fire have been refuted the onus is on the company to prove that the fire was not communicated by the engine of a particular train.

A presumption that the fire was caused by the engine sufficient to put the burden of proof on defendant company has been held to arise from evidence that the fire sprang up immediately upon the passing of a train and that there was no fire on the premises before, and no other apparent cause for the fire. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Coombs, 76 Ark. 132, 88 S. W. 595; Union Pac. R. Co. v. De Busk, 12 Colo. 294, 20 Pac. 752, 13 Am. St. Rep. 221, 3 L. R. appliances were defective or were improperly or negligently used,[71] or were less safe in the matter of sparks than a newer pattern of engine known and in use at the time.[72] It is also a legitimate conclusion that a heavily loaded train laboring up a grade will throw out sparks.[73]

(E) Contributory Negligence. The burden of proving that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence rests on defendant,[74] unless such negligence appears from plaintiff's own evidence, or may be fairly inferred from the circumstances.[75] But the burden of showing want of contributory negligence, either active or passive, is on plaintiff.[76]

(II) ADMISSIBILITY [77] — (A) In General. The general rules of evidence governing the admissibili'y of evidence in civil cases [78] apply to the admissibility of evidence in actions against a railroad company for injuries caused by fire from the operation of its road.[79] Subject to these rules, in the absence of direct evidence, circumstantial evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing [80] or

Where there is no evidence on the subject it is the duty of the court to assume that plaintiff was not guilty of such contributory negligence and to so instruct. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 4 S. D. 71, 55 N. W. 717.

Evidence of a failure of plaintiff to clear combustible material out of an open draw through which the fire was communicated to the wood which was burned does not shift the burden of proof as he was under no obligation to clear the ground around his woodpile. See 41 Cent. Dig. tit. "Railroads," § 1717.

Time and distance.— The length of time the fire has been burning, and the distance to the property from the right of way, while not determinative, may be considered in determining if the negligence of the company was the proximate cause of the injury. To show the force and direction of the wind and the dryness of the surface of the ground, evidence is admissible that three days after the fire partly burned shingles were found from six hundred feet to nearly one quarter of a mile from the burned buildings, although the witness did not personally know where they came from; it being otherwise shown that burning shingles were carried in that direction and that the fire was in fact carried there by the wind. Smith v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 80 Vt. 208, 67 Atl. 535. See also Knight v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 81 Iowa 310, 46 N. W. 1112, holding that in order to show that the wind was strong enough to carry fire from the engine to the house burned, it was competent to show that after the house burned, and on the same day, charred shingles were found a quarter of a mile beyond the house.

86. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Briggs, 103 Va. 105, 48 S. E. 521, holding, however, that evidence of the speed of the train at a point remote from the scene of the fire is inadmissible. See also Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Clark, 145 Ala. 459, 39 So. 816.

An ordinance limiting the speed of trains in a city is admissible where it is shown that the fire was caused by sparks from a locomotive while running through the city at a high rate of speed and that such rate of speed was apt to cause more sparks to be emitted, a violation of the ordinance being alleged in the declaration. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Middlecoff, 150 Ill. 27, 37 N. E. 660. But see Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Dalton, 102 Ky. 290, 43 S. W. 431, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1318.

Co., 79 Mich. 163, 44 N. W. 426 (holding that where there is no direct and positive proof as to the origin of the fire, it is competent for defendant to introduce evidence that it was of incendiary origin); Fields v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 642, 88 S. W. 134 (particular evidence to show that fire started from some other source held incompetent); Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Jordan, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 82 S. W. 791 (holding that evidence that a few minutes before the fire a person having an interest in the contents of the building was seen running from the premises is admissible).

Evidence that an engine pulling a train up a heavy grade threw sparks of sufficient size to set fire to adjoining property is admissible. Gibbs v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 104 Mo. App. 276, 78 S. W. 835.

Evidence that some of defendant's own land had been burned over is admissible as to the cause of the fire burning plaintiff's property. MacDonald v. New York, etc., R. Co., 25 R. I. 40, 54 Atl. 795.

Testimony which is mere assumption and conjecture that a fire which originated on defendant's right of way was the same that destroyed plaintiff's property is inadmissible. Montague v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 96 Wis. 633, 72 N. W. 41.

To show the place where the fire started it is admissible for a witness to state that fourteen months later at the place pointed out to him as the point where the fire started there were embers, remains of burned wood, and cinders; the evidence tending to show extent.[88] To show that plaintiff did not own all of the property destroyed, evidence that he raised the property on land rented on shares is admissible.[89] In an action to recover for fencing destroyed by fire, a written agreement between plaintiff and another company to which the evidence tends to show that defendant succeeded, containing statements inconsistent with plaintiff's testimony both as to the ownership and location of the fencing is admissible.[90]

(B) Customary Methods and Acts.[91] As a general rule evidence of a general custom or usage as to the act causing the fire is inadmissible to show whether or not the railroad company was negligent on a particular occasion,[92] or to show that the fire originated from some other source,[93] although it has been held that evidence of the railroad company's custom or habit as to the particular act is admissible as tending to show the condition or management of the engine at the time of the fire.[94]

that the fire started there being all circumstantial. Smith v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 80 Vt. 208, 67 Atl. 535.

Identification of engine.— Evidence that immediately after defendant's south-bound train passed witness saw smoke in his own woods is sufficiently definite to identify the train, the locomotive of which caused the fire in witness' woods, where he states that he saw the smoke arising from plaintiff's premises just before he saw the smoke in his own woods. Whitehurst v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 146 N. C. 588, 60 S. E. 648. Plaintiff's testimony that "the whistle he knew as Captain Taylor's" was the one which was on the engine which passed his premises the day his property was burned is not objectionable on the ground of indefiniteness as not necessarily relating to the train which was alleged to have passed just before the fire. Whitehurst v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 146 N. C. 588, 60 S. E. 648.

88. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Hayes, 167 Ind. 454, 79 N. E. 448, holding that in an action against a railroad company for damages for the destruction of a house and barn by a fire in which it is claimed that the barn was set on fire by sparks from the engine and the fire communicated from the barn to the house, evidence as to how far the sparks were carried from the burning barn is admissible as part of the evidence tending to show the extent of the fire.

A book of rules of defendant containing private rules regulating the conduct of its business is inadmissible. Continental Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 97 Minn. 467, 107 N. W. 548, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 99.

93. Green Ridge R. Co. v. Brankman, 64 Md. 52, 20 Atl. 1024, 54 Am. Rep. 755, holding that it is inadmissible for defendant to show, as tending to prove that the fire did not originate from sparks dropped from its engine, that it had been the custom for years among farmers in the vicinity to set fire to the underbrush about that season.

94. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Quaintance, 58 Ill. 389; Watt v. Nevada Cent. R. Co., 23 Nev. 154, 44 Pac. 423, 46 Pac. 52, 726, 62 Am. St. Rep. 772, holding that testimony of a former engineer that he kept both dampers of the ash-pan open except when going over a bridge, and that other engineers for whom he had fired did the same, is admissible to show the habit on defendant's road of running the engine with both dampers open.

Evidence that defendant habitually burned wood in its coal-burning engines, and that to burn wood in such an engine is more dangerous than to burn coal, is admissible. St. Joseph, etc., R. Co. v. Chase, 11 Kan. 47.

Inspection.— Evidence that for a number of years the firemen had been required, and it had been their custom, to inspect the dampers, ash-pans, and dump grates of the locomotives before they started on their trips, and had been required to report what, if anything, was needed, is competent on the question of negligence of the railroad company. Woodward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 145 Fed. 577, 75 C. C. A. 591.

(c) Similar Facts and Transactions — (1) IN GENERAL. As tending to show negligence on the part of the company, or a probability that one of its engines caused the fire, evidence that defendant's trains were usually run past the place where the fire originated at an unlawful rate of speed is admissible.[95] So evidence that the right of way and track at points other than that at which the fire in question was set out, but in the immediate neighborhood, were encumbered with combustible material, is admissible as tending to show negligence in failing to keep the track and right of way clear of such materials at the point where the fire started.[96] But evidence that defendant paid other persons for losses from the same fire is inadmissible as tending to show that defendant is liable to plaintiff.[97]

(2) EVIDENCE OF OTHER FIRES. In the absence of direct evidence, evidence that other fires originated from defendant's engines under like conditions at or about the same time, either before or after the fire in question, is generally admissible as tending to show a negligent habit on the part of defendant company in the construction, equipment, and management of its engines and therefore as tending to show such negligence in the particular case,[98] or as tending to show the possibility and consequent probability that the fire was set by an engine of defendant,[99] especially where the particular engine which caused the fire is not is inadmissible until plaintiff first gives evidence tending to exclude the probability that the fire was communicated by any other means,[11] and showing that such other engines were of a similar construction and working under similar conditions.[12] So as tending to show negligence of defendant in not providing the best appliances for arresting sparks, evidence as to certain devices used at the time on other roads is admissible.[13] On the other hand it is admissible for defendant to show that all the engines which passed plaintiff's place at the time of the fire were in good order, well supplied with proper appliances, and properly operated;[14] but it is not admissible for it to show, although it is shown that the type of spark arrester with which the engine was equipped was in general use and approved by experience, that on another railroad using the same kind of appliances at the same time fires occurred from sparks emitted from the smoke-stack.[15]

(4) WHERE PARTICULAR ENGINE IS IDENTIFIED. Where it is alleged or shown that the fire was set out by a particular engine or from the nature of the case could only have been caused by such engine, evidence is admissible, as tending to show that the particular engine was improperly constructed, equipped, or managed, that the same engine had on other occasions at or about the same time and place, set other fires,[16] or emitted sparks or coals capable of causing

But see Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Woodruff, 4 Md. 242, 59 Am. Dec. 72.

Evidence that smoke was seen along the line of the road after the engine in question had passed but not on plaintiff's premises is admissible. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Helmerick, 29 Ill. App. 270.

Where the engine is repaired between the time at which the former fires occurred and that at which the fire in question is set evidence as to such other fires is inadmissible. Menominee River Sash, etc., Co. v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 91 Wis. 447, 65 N. W. 176.

Identification.— The mere fact that an engine was attached to a certain train on a certain occasion does not constitute a specific identification of the engine. The train is sufficiently identified but not its constituent parts. Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Keith, 8 Ind. App. 57, 35 N. E. 296.

Time.— In an action for a loss by fire set out by sparks from a locomotive on or about April 4, 1904, evidence that witnesses had seen sparks flowing from the smoke-stack of the same locomotive between February and April which set fire on the right of way near where plaintiff's property was situated is admissible as bearing on the actual condition of the locomotive and showing that it was defective. Knott v. Cape Fear, etc., R. Co., 142 N. C. 238, 55 S. E. 150.

17. Alabama.—Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450, 34 So. 917, 145 Ala. 459, 39 So. 816, holding that evidence showing the volume of sparks emitted by such engine, and the height to which they were thrown near the place at or about the time the fire occurred, is admissible.

Kentucky.— Taylor v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 41 S. W. 551, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 717.

North Carolina.— Whitehurst v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 146 N. C. 588, 60 S. E. 648 (that it had emitted sparks on a previous day of the week immediately preceding the time of the fire complained of); Johnson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 574, 581, 53 S. E. 362.

Pennsylvania.— Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Watson, 33 Leg. Int. 329.

Texas.— Fleming v. Pullen, (Civ. App. 1906) 97 S. W. 109.

Wisconsin.—Brusberg v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 55 Wis. 106, 12 N. W. 416, holding that evidence is admissible to show how the fire emitted by the engine on the occasion in question compared with the fire emitted by engines on the road at other times.

Where the defense is that no burning sparks could reach so far as to set fire to the property, evidence is competent to show that the same engine, using similar fuel, has emitted burning sparks which have fallen at as great a distance. Ross v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 6 Allen (Mass.) 87.

tion,[19] were caused by the same particular engine. In such cases evidence is generally inadmissible that other engines had set fires or emitted such coals or sparks,[20] or been carelessly managed,[21] even though such other engines had the same kind of appliances as the engine in question.[22] But it has been held that such evidence is admissible upon proof that such other engines were in the same condition and operated in the same way as was the engine in question when the fire occurred;[23] and that evidence that other engines passed the same place under like conditions

Reason for rule.— Evidence of former fires caused by the same engine is admissible as tending to prove its defective condition or construction, or improper management, and evidence of fires caused by other engines is excluded because they are matters collateral to the issue, and not evidence of the imperfect condition or bad management of the particular locomotive. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co. v. Peninsular Land, etc., Co., 27 Fla. 1, 157, 9 So. 661, 17 L. R. A. 33, 65.

Where it is shown with reasonable certainty that one of two locomotives communicated the fire, it is immaterial that it cannot be proved which one of them did so; but the inquiry should be confined to the equipment and management of the two locomotives and evidence that at other times other engines had emitted sparks and caused fires is inadmissible. Evidence too remote.—Evidence that during the previous winter the spark arresters on defendant's engines were in a defective condition is inadmissible as being too remote. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Needham, 105 Ill. App. 25.

To show possibility of fire.— Testimony as to other fires caused by passing engines of defendant is admissible to show at what distance from the right of way sparks from the engines had fallen for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of defendant's experts that it was impossible for cinders from the smoke-stack of the engine to have fallen so far from the track as to have caused the fire on plaintiff's premises. of wind and weather without causing fire at or near the place is admissible as tending to show that the engine complained of was not in good condition or was improperly managed.[24]

(D) Subsequent Repairs or Precautions. In some jurisdictions it is held that evidence of subsequent repairs to a locomotive which is alleged to have caused the injury,[25] or to the right of way,[26] or of additional precautions, as in the employment of more men,[27] is admissible on the question of antecedent negligence of defendant. In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that since acts which follow the injury cannot be proven to establish antecedent negligence,[28] the mere fact that an engine alleged to have set a fire is subsequently repaired cannot be considered in determining whether it was defective or not at the time the fire was set;[29] nor can the fact that employees of the railroad ompany materially assisted in putting out the fire be considered.[30]

(E) Competency and Qualification of Employees. As tending to show that defendant's engine was operated in a careful and prudent manner at the time of the fire, evidence is admissible to show that defendant's fireman and engineer in charge of the engine alleged to have caused the fire were careful and prudent men,[31] for which purpose testimony of a member of the board of examiners may be material and relevant.[32] But it is held that expert testimony as to the character of defendant's employees for care and prudence is inadmissible.[33]

(F) Nature and Extent of Damages. In order to show the nature and extent of the damages to property burned, if such property was entirely destroyed, evidence is admissible to show its value at the time it was destroyed,[34] or to show

Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450, 34 So. 917 (in rebuttal of evidence that the engine alleged to have set the fire was in good condition); Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 354, 15 Am. Rep. 362 (holding also that it is not necessary that the conditions of wind and weather and other things connected with the passage of the engines should be exactly like the conditions that existed when the engine complained of set the fire).

25. Butcher v. Vaca Valley, etc., R. Co., 67 Cal. 518, 8 Pac. 174.

Where there is evidence that certain appliances were in a defective condition at the time of the fire evidence that when such appliances were changed after the damage was done the dangerous emission of sparks ceased is admissible. Alpern v. Churchill, 53 Mich. 607, 19 N. W. 549.

26. Young v. Great Northern R. Co., 8 N. D. 345, 79 N. W. 448, holding that evidence that after the fire defendant caused fire-breaks to be constructed on both sides of its track, as the statute requires, is admissible to show what right of way had been in use by defendant.

27. Westfall v. Erie R. Co., 5 Hun (N. Y.) 75, holding that evidence to show the employment of more men by defendant after the fire than before, the necessity of having some men to walk the track being conceded, is properly allowed to go to the jury upon the question whether too few or incompetent men had been previously employed.

Education.— Where a fireman on an engine alleged to have set the fire testified that he was subsequently promoted to the position of engineer, but read no books on engineering or on the construction of locomotives, he cannot further be questioned as to what education he had received in reference to his position as engineer, since such inquiry is immaterial to the issue. the cost or difficulty of replacing it,[35] or if it is only partially destroyed to show its value before and after the fire,[36] such as the difference in yield, other conditions being the same, between the portion of land burned and the portion not burned,[37] the rental value of the property after the fire,[38] the probability that the land would have increased in value,[39] or to show plaintiff's interest in the property.[40] If the property destroyed has no market value witnesses

The value of the thing destroyed as part of the realty may be shown by plaintiff, although his recovery is limited to the actual diminution in the value of the realty. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Hays, 8 Kan. App. 545, 54 Pac. 322.

Men qualified by experience may give their opinions as to the value of the grass for pasturage or for use in the winter. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Rheiner, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 971.

In an action for the destruction of fruit trees by fire it is competent to show the value of the trees destroyed independent of the value to the freehold. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Noland, 75 Kan. 691, 90 Pac. 273.

35. Leiber v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 84 Iowa 97, 50 N. W. 547, holding that where certain trees have been destroyed evidence that it will be difficult by reason of the shade of other trees to grow trees in the place of those destroyed is admissible.

Evidence of the cost of building new houses of the kind burned, although not the criterion by which to measure the damages caused by their destruction, is relevant as tending to show what was the value of the property at the time of the fire. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Johnston, 128 Ala. 283, 29 So. 771 (holding also that the diagrams of the plan by which the houses were constructed, in connection with proof that such diagrams were correct, are admissible); Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. McKelvey, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 426, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 561.

36. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Fenstermaker, 163 Ind. 534, 72 N. E. 561; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kern, 9 Ind. App. 505, 36 N. E. 381 (holding that where fruit trees are killed or damaged and fruit destroyed it is admissible to show what part of the orchard, if any, bore fruit after the fire); Hamilton v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 84 Iowa 131, 50 N. W. 567; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Noland, 75 Kan. 691, 90 Pac. 273; Clark v. Ellithorp, 7 Kan. App. 337, 51 Pac. 940 (holding, however, that it is error to admit the testimony of a witness who is not qualified to testify to the value of such land); Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. McKelvey, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 426, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 561.

Where growing grass is destroyed by fire, evidence that another crop of a certain value might be grown on the land during the same growing period of the average yield and market price of like crops, the ordinary expense of harvesting and marketing the same and of the condition of the particular crop before the fire is admissible. Ward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 61 Minn. 449, 63 N. W. 1104. It is also admissible to show what effect the burning of grass at the time and in the condition the grass in question was generally has on sod (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jagoe, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 1061), and to show that the same land had previously been burned off and that the turf and roots were damaged thereby (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Sadler, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 300, 27 S. W. 904).

What the land burned off previously produced may be shown. Donovan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 93 Wis. 373, 67 N. W. 721.

Evidence as to injury to other property near by under the same conditions is admissible. Bradley v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 111 Iowa 562, 82 N. W. 996.

In an action for injuries to property from smoke and cinders, a witness familiar with the property may describe the effects thereon produced by smoke, gas, vapors, etc. Baltimore Belt R. Co. v. Sattler, 102 Md. 595, 62 Atl. 1125, 64 Atl. 507.

Evidence of what plaintiff paid for the land is inadmissible. MacDonald v. New York, etc., R. Co., 25 R. I. 40, 54 Atl. 795.

Opinions of witnesses as to the effect of flames on a hedge and meadow are admissible, when they have shown themselves qualified to express an opinion. Bradley v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 111 Iowa 562, 82 N. W. 996.

37. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Holderman, 56 Ill. App. 144; San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Stone, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 461, evidence of injury to turf as affecting next year's crop of grass.

38. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Ayres, 67 Ark. 371, 55 S. W. 159, holding that where the property injured is held for renting only, evidence of the rental value of the lands after the fire is admissible for the purpose of showing the extent to which the consequences of the fire might have been avoided by plaintiff.

Where the cost of restoring a meadow destroyed by fire is in issue, evidence that plaintiff had rented it for a certain sum per acre before he began to remake is inadmissible. Bradley v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 111 Iowa 562, 82 N. W. 996.

39. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Walsh, 11 Ind. App. 13, 38 N. E. 535 (holding that where the damage is to a certain meadow, it is proper to admit evidence that as the meadow became older the quantity and quality of the hay became better on land of that character and to show how long the meadow would have continued to so improve); Moore v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 78 Wis. 120, 47 N. W. 273 (holding that where the fire destroyed a cranberry marsh, evidence as to its natural advantages favorable to the accumulation of water from adjoining lands, rendering the marsh more productive, is admissible).

40. Pennsylvania Co. v. Hunsley, 23 Ind. App. 37, 54 N. E. 1071, holding that where plaintiff has disclosed the fact that he is who show that they have some knowledge of the value of such property may be allowed to state what they consider that the property destroyed was worth.[41] But evidence of matters occurring subsequent to the fire is not admissible;[42] nor where it does not appear that the conditions in both cases were the same, can another person whose land had been previously burned off testify as to the amount of the loss;[43] nor can defendant show that it would have been more profitable for plaintiff to have raised some other crop than the one burned,[44] or than the one raised after the fire.[45]

(G) Defects in and Management of Engines.[46] As tending to show that the engine causing the fire was negligently constructed, equipped, or managed, plaintiff may show the condition of the locomotive, at the time of the fire and at other times,[47] as that the sparks emitted at the time were unusual in quantity and size,[48] and that the train it was hauling was a short one;[49] but he cannot show the size joint plaintiff in another suit pending against defendant for the same fire, it is proper to ask him the amount of his claim, as showing an interest not limited to the amount involved in this trial.

41. Lanning v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 68 Iowa 502, 27 N. W. 478 (a vine and hedge); Baltimore Belt R. Co. v. Sattler, 102 Md. 595, 62 Atl. 1125, 64 Atl. 507; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Shipley, 39 Md. 251 (holding that such witness cannot base his estimate upon the representations of others).

Evidence as to the cost of a hedge and injury to the ornamental appearance of the land on which it stood is admissible on the question of damages. Muldrow v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 62 Mo. App. 431.

42. Ward v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 61 Minn. 449, 63 N. W. 1104.

Where the claim for damages is limited to the institution of the suit, testimony as to the condition of the property at the time the witness is called to testify is inadmissible. Baltimore Belt R. Co. v. Sattler, 102 Md. 595, 62 Atl. 1125, 64 Atl. 507.

43. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Cruzen, 29 Ill. App. 212. Compare Castner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 126 Iowa 581, 102 N. W. 499, holding that testimony of a witness who owned land some miles distant, which had been burned over at about the same time of the year, and under similar circumstances, that it was not injured by such burning, is admissible, although the land is not shown to be similarly situated.

44. Bradley v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 111 Iowa 562, 82 N. W. 996.

45. Toledo, etc., R. Co., v. Kingman, 49 Ill. App. 43.

Evidence of an examination of an engine which is claimed to have passed where the fire originated a few minutes before its discovery, made a week or two after the fire, is admissible. Crissey, etc., Lumber Co. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 17 Colo. App. 275, 68 Pac. 670.

Where an engineer testifying for plaintiff has described the screens in ordinary use, and has identified such a screen, and it is put in evidence, he may state, from his own observation, whether, if an engine is "properly constructed," certain cinders in evidence could be emitted; the context showing that by "properly constructed" was meant provided with such a screen as had just been identified, and it being contended by defendant that heated cinders are often forced through meshes that they could not pass through when cold. Brush v. Long Island R. Co., 10 N. Y. App. Div. 535, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 103 [affirmed in 158 N. Y. 742, 53 N. E. 1123].

Testimony by witness conversant with that class of business is competent to show defects in the mode in which the netting of the spark arrester was attached and secured around the exhaust pipe, as to the effect of sparks and their vitality, and the distance to which they could be carried and still start a fire. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. McKelvey, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 426, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 561.

Specimens of wire netting used upon spark arresters by and procured from defendant's shops are inadmissible where there is no proof that this kind was used upon the engines at the time, and the wire netting was procured two or three years after the fire. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. McKelvey, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 426, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 561.

Sparks picked up and produced are admissible in evidence when it is clearly established that they came from the engine. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. McKelvey, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 426, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 561. See also Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Cecil, 90 S. W. 585, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 830.

of sparks emitted from the engine some time after the fire without first showing that the construction of the arrester was clearly defective in the first place,[50] or that the engine and arrester were in the same condition of repair as at the time of the fire;[51] nor can he introduce evidence which can serve no purpose but to inflame and prejudice the minds of the jury.[52] As tending to refute such negligence defendant may introduce evidence comparing the appliances in use at the time of the fire with those used on other roads, where there is evidence as to such other appliances,[53] or to show what effect the use of different appliances on the engine would have,[54] or to show that the grade of the road at the place of the fire was steep and that engines drawing trains up such a grade are obliged to labor hard and therefore emit more sparks.[55]

(H) Combustibles on Railroad Property. Evidence that a railroad company has allowed dry grass, weeds, or other combustible material to accummulate on its right of way is admissible in an action against it for burning property along its road,[56] except where there is uncontradicted evidence that the fire was set on plaintiff's land and not on the right of way.[57]

(I) Contributory Negligence. For the purpose of refuting contributory negligence plaintiff may show that he acted with prudence and due care to protect his property,[58] or, if he has failed to perform a certain act, that performance would not have afforded him adequate protection in the particular case.[59] As tending to show or refute contributory negligence it is not permissible to introduce evidence of the custom of other persons in the neighborhood,[60] but it is permissible to

Cas. 445, 12 Atl. 662 (holding that evidence that defendant was in the habit of refusing to adopt certain appliances to modify the discharge of smoke from its locomotives on account of the cost until after the patents on them had expired is improperly admitted).

53. Collins v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 109 N. Y. 243, 16 N. show that similar property of other persons placed in similar proximity to the track had not been set on fire.[61]

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY — (A) In General. The general rules of evidence governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil cases[62] apply in actions against a railroad company for damages by fire.[63] So plaintiff must show by a preponderance of evidence and to the satisfaction of the jury that the fire causing the injury originated or spread through the negligence of defendant,[64] and that the fire was communicated to the property injured by an engine passing over defendant's railway,[65] although it need not be shown that any particular engine was at fault.[66] This evidence of defendant's negligence may be either direct or circumstantial, or both,[67] whether offered in rebuttal or in chief,[68] such as evidence that it was possible for fire to reach plaintiff's property from defendant's engines,[69] and that it probably originated from that cause and no other.[70]

(B) Origin or Cause of Fire. To show that the fire causing the injury was originated or caused by defendant, circumstantial as well as direct evidence showing that it originated from defendant's property,[71] or was communicated from one of defendant's engines,[72] is sufficient. Thus such evidence may be sufficient where it shows that there was no probable cause for the fire except the company's locomotive,[73] as where it shows that the fire started immediately or soon after one of defendant's engines had passed, and that there was no other fire in the Burning property at distance.— Where the evidence as to whether the fire set by defendant's locomotive extended three and one-half miles from the point where it originated to plaintiff's premises is that the wind was blowing in the direction in which plaintiff's premises lay from the point where the fire started, that there was a burned tract between the starting point and plaintiff's premises, that the premises were burned on the day of the fire set by the locomotive and that there was no other such fire on that day, it warrants a finding in the affirmative. Yankton F. Ins. Co. v. Fremont, etc., R. Co., 7 S. D. 428, 64 N. W. 514. But evidence that a fire started some distance from the right of way, and not on land adjacent thereto, and that a passing engine, claimed to have caused the same, threw out a spark or cinder which ignited property just off the right of way about two miles away from where the fire in question started, does not establish negligence, or show that the fire was caused by the engine in question. Testimony of defendant's train despatchers that no train went out over the road without their orders, that there was no order for any train to go out between the hours when plaintiff's barn was claimed to have been set on fire, and that neither their records nor the books kept by the conductor showed any such train, is not conclusive that no train went out. The probability that the fire originated from some other source need not be excluded by direct preliminary proof, where the evidence is such as to raise a presumption that at the time no fire or light would be used in the premises burned and that a fire originating from the dropping or using of a match in the building would not have started at the point at which the fire in question started. where the evidence is such that it is a mere conjecture whether or not defendant caused the fire.[82] Such evidence, if circumstantial, should be sufficient to justify a reasonable and well-grounded inference by reasonable men that the fire was of railroad origin,[83] and such as to rebut the probability of the fire having originated in any other manner,[84] or which will at least tend to establish the relation of cause and effect between the operation of the railroad and the breaking out of the fire; [85] although it need not be of such weight as to exclude every possibility of another cause.[86]

where the fire is shown to have been set out on defendant's right of way, evidence that its employees did not use proper precautions in setting out and guarding the fire may be sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.[88]

(D) Existence of Defect or Happening of Injury. In some jurisdictions evidence which shows that the fire in question was caused by sparks from defendant's locomotive establishes a prima facie case of negligence against the company,[89] although the fact that the fire was communicated from an engine is controverted;[90] and in some jurisdictions can be overcome only by a preponderance of the evidence.[91] As a general rule, however, the mere fact that the property was fired by sparks from one of defendant's engines,[92] or that the fire started on defendant's right of way,[93] is not of itself sufficient to establish negligence on the part of defendant; but the evidence should also show that this result was not probable in the ordinary working of an engine,[94] or that the appliances for arresting fire were defective,[95] or that defendant had not adopted the most approved appliances,[96] or that the engine was improperly operated.[97]

Where defendant relies upon the perfect condition of the spark arrester it is not required that the evidence by which it proves that fact be undisputed. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Lindley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 1101.

Where plaintiff identifies the engine that caused the fire, proof that large cinders were found on the track and on plaintiff's premises at the time of the fire does not show that the engine was not in good repair, in the absence of evidence showing that the cinders came therefrom or that it is of similar construction, state of repair, or management to those shown to have emitted the cinders. Wheeler v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 67 Hun (N. Y.) 639, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 561.

Where plaintiff is unable to identify the engine that set the fire by name or number or by any other designation, it is sufficient if he proves either by the manner in which it was operated or the extent to which it scattered fire that it was so far out of repair as to charge the company with negligence. Bevier v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 254.

Affidavits of defendant's master-mechanic as to the condition of certain locomotives at the time, but which do not show whether these were the engines by which the fire was caused, are insufficient to disprove negligence. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 33 Fed. 360.

dence.[1] Such negligence may be sufficiently proved, at least to warrant an inference that the fire was caused by such negligence, by evidence, together with other circumstances, that about or soon before the time at which the fire occurred a passing engine emitted sparks or coals of an unusual quantity or size,[2] or that the engine had emitted fire for a considerable time,[3] and had started other fires,[4] and that an engine in good repair and equipment would not have caused fire in the manner, or at the place, in which the one in question was caused.[5]

Usual carelessness or negligence of employees in charge of the engine which caused the fire warrants a reasonable conclusion that they were negligent at the time of the fire in question. Norwich Ins. Soc. v. Oregon R. Co., 46 Oreg. 123, 78 Pac. 1025.

A conflict in the evidence as to the proper equipment and handling of a locomotive, where, after plaintiff had made a prima facie case of the setting of a fire thereby, raising the presumption of negligence, defendant gave full proof of such equipment and handling, is not raised by evidence that a quarter of a mile from the place of the fire the locomotive while going up grade emitted a "great deal" of sparks, and that several fires during several years had been occasioned by sparks from defendant's engines. The statement of witnesses that the engine was in good order and carefully operated need not be accepted by the jury as conclusive, although they are not contradicted, but they may consider all the evidence bearing on the condition of the engine and the mode of operating it, and the circumstances under which the fire occurred. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Coombs, 76 Ark. 132, 88 S. W. 595.

Where plaintiff relies on the negligent operation of a locomotive consisting of the use of too much steam he must show the connection between the use of too much steam and the escape of the sparks by which the fire was communicated to the property; and he does not do this by mere evidence of other fires set by the locomotive. (F) Combustibles on Railroad Property. That the fire was caused by defendant's negligence may also be sufficiently shown by evidence, together with other circumstances, that it permitted dry grass, weeds, or other combustible material to accumulate on its right of way, in which the fire started,[6] and that fires had previously been set therein by passing locomotives.[7]

e. Damages[8] — (I) In General. As a general rule the measure of damages for property injured or destroyed by fire caused by a railroad company is such an amount as will compensate plaintiff for his loss or restore him to the same or as good a condition in respect to his property as he occupied before the fire.[9]

(II) Real Property. It is ordinarily held that for an injury to the land the measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the land

659, holding that expert testimony that with the appliances in use to prevent such accidents the fire could not have been caused unless the engine had been out of repair, considered in connection with the statutory presumption of negligence, justifies a verdict against defendant, although other evidence tends to show that the engine was provided with the best appliances, that it was in good order, and that the engineer and fireman were competent.

Evidence sufficient.— That there was an accumulation of combustible material on defendant's right of way opposite plaintiff's property; that there was a steep grade at such point, so that defendant's engines in passing put on steam and emitted sparks and coals, which frequently ignited the rubbish on the right of way; that on the day of the fire the wind was blowing over the right of way toward plaintiff's property. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Indiana Horseshoe Co., 154 Ind. 322, 56 N. E. 766. That combustible material was allowed to accumulate on the right of way; that it was an exceedingly dry time; that there was a brisk wind blowing from the right of way toward plaintiff's property; that sparks from a passing engine set fire to said material; and that defendant negligently permitted it to escape to plaintiff's property. That exemplary damages as allowed by statute cannot be recovered under the evidence does not preclude a recovery for actual damages where the evidence is sufficient to sustain a recovery under the common law cause of action for actual damages. Clark v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 142 Cal. 614, 76 Pac. 507.

For leaves and trash which the fire consumed, there can be a recovery to the extent that the owner could have used or disposed of the same in supplying any demand then existing or near at hand, the measure being the value of the raw material as it lay on the ground, not including in the quantity to be paid for any of the material which could not have been used or sold to supply the demand then existing or which arose soon thereafter. For material which, had it not been destroyed, would have been mere waste in the woods, there can be no recovery.

immediately before the fire and its value immediately thereafter;[10] and in some jurisdictions it is held that where grass, growing timber, fences, meadows, and the like are injured or destroyed, they are so closely connected with the land on which they stand or to which they are attached that they have no accurate value separate and independent of the land, and that the above rule is the proper method of arriving at the measure of damages for their injury or destruction.[11] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that where such species of property is capable of valuation separate from the soil the proper measure of damages in such cases is the value of such property at the time of the fire, if it is wholly destroyed,[12] or if it is only partially destroyed the difference between its market value before the fire and its value after the fire,[13] and in addition thereto if the soil is injured the difference between the value of the land before the fire exclusive of the value of the grass, timber, etc., and its value thereafter.[14] Where the property burned has no market value or the market value is inadequate the proper measure of damages is its reasonable value at the time and place of destruction for the uses to which the owner was then putting it or might have put it,[15] taking into account, in some jurisdictions, the original cost and the cost of replacing the property after allowance for depreciation from use and age.[16] Where buildings are injured or destroyed it is ordinarily held that they are capable of a separate

With regard to timber the rule is stated to be that if the value of the land is diminished by the negligent firing and destruction of timber thereon, the measure of damages is the diminution in the value of the premises resulting from the injury caused by the fire; but that if there is no diminution in the market value of the land by reason of the burning of the timber, the measure of damages is the proved value of the timber destroyed. The statutory right to attorney's fees is not a distinct and independent cause of action, but depends upon the right of plaintiff to recover on his general cause of action for damages. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Ludlum, 63 Kan. 719, 66 Pac. 1045.

Where the cause is twice tried in the district court, plaintiff is only entitled to recover his reasonable attorney's fee for the provided he demands such fees in his petition and submits the question to the court or jury together with the other facts in the case.[23]

(VI) REDUCTION OR MITIGATION OF DAMAGES.[24] The general rule that it is the legal duty of one who is apt to be injured by the wrongful conduct of another to exercise reasonable diligence to avoid or minimize the results of the injury, and that if he negligently fails to do so he cannot recover of the wrong-doer for such damages as he could have thus escaped,[25] applies to cases of injury caused by the negligent setting of fires by a railroad company;[26] and plaintiff cannot recover damages where the fire proves a benefit rather than an injury to his property.[27] But defendant is not entitled to a reduction of damages to the extent of insurance on the property paid by an insurance company to plaintiff,[28] unless such reduction is permitted by statute.[29] Nor is it entitled to a reduction on one successful prosecution of the cause. Clark v. Ellithorp, 9 Kan. App. 503, 59 Pac. 286.

Joining as plaintiff an insurance company which paid the loss does not preclude the owner from recovering attorney's fees prescribed by statute, and the inclusion thereof in the judgment rendered in his favor, where the only relief asked by the insurance company is subrogation to the owner's rights under the judgment. Me. St. (1895) c. 79, limiting the liability of a railroad to the excess of the damage suffered by the property-owner over the net amount of insurance recovered, if received before the damages are assessed, and providing that, if the insurance is not so received, the policy shall be assigned to the railroad corporation, which may sue thereon, applies to cases in which property was destroyed by fire after the act took effect, although the property was insured by policies taken out before. f. Questions For Court and Jury — (i) In General. Where the evidence in an action against a railroad company for damages by fire is uncontradicted and unconflicting, or where there is no evidence, the question of negligence is generally one for the court to decide, and it should do so.[31] But where the evidence is conflicting or is otherwise sufficient to warrant its submission to the jury,[32] it must be submitted and it is then a question for the jury to determine as to what weight or credit shall be given to such evidence,[33] and to determine therefrom, under proper instructions from the court, the question of negligence,[34] or any other issuable fact.[35] The construction of a contract between plaintiff

Where the evidence sufficiently establishes that the fire was caused by sparks from a passing engine, and thus creates a presumption of negligence on the part of defendant, the case should be submitted to the jury, unless the rebutting evidence as to due care is so clear and circumstantial that no reasonable person could doubt its verity. and defendant, exempting the latter from liability for loss by fire, is for the court, and should not be left to the jury.[36]

(II) REBUTTING PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE. The question as to whether the prima facie case of negligence arising from proof of the communication of the fire by an engine[37] is overcome by defendant's evidence tending to show that the engine was supplied with proper appliances and was in good repair and that it was carefully managed is in general one of fact for the jury.[38] But it is held that since this presumption of negligence is one of law, it is for the court and not the jury, where there is no conflict in the testimony, to determine the amount and character of the proof necessary to overcome it.[39]

(III) ORIGIN OF FIRE. Where there is no direct proof that the fire was communicated from defendant's right of way or by sparks from an engine,[40] but there is circumstantial evidence tending to show a probability that the fire in question was communicated from a fire started on defendant's right of way,[41] or from one of its engines,[42] and where the evidence on such point is conflicting and indecisive,[43] the question whether or not it was so communicated is a question of fact which should be submitted to the jury. But where there is no evidence of such probability it is proper to sustain a demurrer to the evidence and to withdraw the case from the jury.[44] So where the evidence at most shows a mere possibility or conjecture that the fire was scattered by one of defendant's engines, it is insufficient to require submission of that issue to the jury.[45]

(IV) DEFECTS IN AND MANAGEMENT OF ENGINES. Where the evidence is conflicting or indecisive, the question as to whether or not defendant company was negligent in the construction, equipment, and operation of its engines is one of fact which should be submitted to the jury.[46] But it is error to submit such question to the jury where defendant's uncontradicted testimony shows argumentative,[60] or abstract,[61] or invade the province of the jury in commenting upon the evidence,[62] or authorize a determination of questions from a mere conjecture or surmise on the part of the jury.[63] An instruction that covers the case generally and fairly submits the question in issue is ordinarily sufficient in the absence of a request for further instructions in detail.[64] It is proper to refuse a requested instruction on matters fully covered by instructions already given,[65] or on immaterial matters;[66] but it is error to refuse a requested instruction on a material issue not covered by other instructions given.[67]

(11) CONSTRUCTION. The instructions are to be construed as a whole and the fact that one portion considered separately might be open to objection does not constitute error if the charge is correct in its entirety.[68]

Illustrations of instructions held misleading: That the fact that the fire was discovered soon after the passage of defendant's engine raises no presumption that it was because of sparks from said engine; where the evidence tended to show that sparks were escaping from defendant's engine in unusual and dangerous quantities near plaintiff's dwelling. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Malone, 109 Ala. 509, 20 So. 33. That the mere fact of the fire originating from sparks from an engine does not show negligence; where the evidence showed that the fire originated sixty-three feet from defendant's engine, that sparks were emitted therefrom in unusual and dangerous quantities, and that an engine with suitable appliances and properly managed could not possibly have caused the fire. Louisville, etc., R. Illustrations of instructions erroneous or properly refused.— An instruction not to find for defendant under certain circumstances unless it is also found that the persons in charge of the locomotive were competent is erroneous where the incompetency of such persons is not alleged as negligence. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 395, 67 S. W. 182. Where the declaration alleges that the fire was caused by a spark from defendants' engine, an instruction to find for plaintiff if the fire was caused by defendants' negligence in leaving near plaintiff's property a box car filled with hay which was set on fire is erroneous. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co. v. Neff, 28 Fla. 373, 9 So. 653. Where the complaint alleges that defendant permitted the engine to be out of repair and carelessly and negligently used, an instruction that if defendant employed an unskilful or careless engineer or fireman it is liable is erroneous. Babcock v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 72 Iowa 197, 28 N. W. 644, 33 N. W. 628. An instruction that if the jury find that "the fire was caused through the negligence of the defendant in the construction or management of the engine concerning the prevention of escaping coals and sparks . . . they should allow plaintiff" damages is erroneous where the petition does not allege that defendant was negligent as to the construction of the engine, or that the engine was negligently or improperly constructed. Miller v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 76 Iowa 318, 41 N. W. 28. Where no charge of negligence in permitting dry grass to accumulate on the right of way is made by the pleading, it is error to submit the case to the jury upon that issue. Louisville, etc., R. An instruction that plaintiff cannot recover unless the injury was permanent in its nature is properly refused, where the complaint does not allege that the land was permanently in its instructions ignores material matters affecting the cause of action or defense which are in issue.[71]

(iv) Invading Province of Jury. Since the question of negligence, where the evidence is conflicting, is generally one of fact for the jury,[72] it is generally erroneous for the court to invade the province of the jury by assuming that a certain specified state of facts exists, and instructing that they do or do not constitute negligence on the part of defendant,[73] or contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.[74] But where the facts are shown by the evidence and are so unequivocal as to allow no conclusion but that they do or do not constitute negligence, the court may so instruct.[75] So where the evidence is insufficient to establish a certain fact, proof of which is necessary to support a verdict, the court should take the case from the jury by peremptory instruction,[76] although it is not required to give such instruction where the insufficiency of evidence is on an immaterial matter.[77] Nor is it erroneous for the court to refer to the existence of certain facts if it leaves the question of their sufficiency to the jury.[78]

damaged. Ft. Scott, etc., R. Co. v. Tubbs, 47 Kan. 630, 28 Pac. 612. An omission to charge as to the negligence of employees in not using proper efforts to put out the fire, although seeing it soon after the train passed, is not error where no such charge is requested, and the only negligence charged in the petition is a failure to provide proper appliances, permitting an accumulation of dry material, and inefficiency of the servants operating the engine. Rost v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 76 Tex. 168, 12 S. W. 1131. h. Verdict and Findings. The rules applicable to verdicts in civil actions generally [79] govern general,[80] and special,[81] verdicts and findings in actions against railroad companies for damages by fire. Thus a special finding must be supported by the evidence,[82] and should find and state all facts [83] essential to a recovery under the issues.[84] Such findings, however, must be considered together, and if correct as a whole are sufficient, although some particular finding taken separately might be objectionable.[85] A special finding should be consistent with the general verdict; [86] but unless the conflict between them is irreconcilable it will not be sufficient to override the general verdict, and entitle defendant to a judgment on the special finding notwithstanding the verdict.[87]

i. Judgment. The general rules governing judgments in civil actions [88] apply in actions against railroad companies for damages by fire.[89]

j. Appeal and Error — (i) In General. Questions of appeal and error in actions against a railroad company for damages caused by fire [90] are generally

General verdict must be consistent with special findings.— Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Morton, 3 Colo. App. 155, 32 Pac. 345, holding that where the jury determine by a special finding that plaintiff was guilty of negligence in leaving a wagon near the fire so that it was consumed, it is error for them to apportion the loss and make defendant liable for two thirds of the value of the wagon.

81. See Tien v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 15 Ind. App. 304, 44 N. E. 45.

Attorney's fees allowed by statute in an action to recover damages caused by fire are a part of the judgment in favor of plaintiff and need not be found separately by the jury except in answering a special interrogatory. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Henning, 48 Kan. 465, 29 Pac. 597.

83. A special verdict should find only facts and not conclusions of law. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Does, 20 Ind. App. 680, 51 N. E. 568; Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 18 Ind. App. 549, 48 N. E. 663; Tien v. Louisville R. Co., 15 Ind. App. 304, 44 N. E. 45.

84. Pennsylvania Co. v. Mandeville, 22 Ind. App. 679, 53 N. E. 489; Ft. Scott, etc., R. Co. v. Tubbs, 47 Kan. 630, 28 Pac. 612 [distinguishing St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Fudge, 39 Kan. 543, 18 Pac. 720].

A special finding in respect to negligence is sufficiently specific if it states generally of what the negligence consisted without pointing out in detail the precise act or thing which constituted the negligence. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. McFall, (Ind. 1904) 72 N. E. 552; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Indiana Horseshoe Co., 154 Ind. 322, 56 N. E. 766; Caswell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 42 Wis. 193.

A special verdict stating that plaintiff was free from contributory negligence without finding any facts supporting such a conclusion will not support a verdict thereon. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Does, 20 Ind. App. 680, 51 N. E. 368; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Carmon, (Ind. App. 1898) 48 N. E. 1047; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Bailey, 19 Ind. App. 163, 46 N. E. 688; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Porter, 16 Ind. App. 266, 44 N. E. 1112. But a finding that plaintiff expended labor in suppressing the fire shows sufficient effort to save his property. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Grossman, 17 Ind. App. 652, 46 N. E. 546. Likewise a finding that plaintiff, who was a resident of another state, was not present at the time of the fire, shows freedom from contributory negligence. Tien v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 15 Ind. App. 340, 44 N. E. 45.

A special verdict which shows that the land burned was plaintiff's, and describes the land as described in the complaint, sufficiently shows that the land burned was the land described in the complaint. Tien v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 15 Ind. App. 304, 44 N. E. 45.

E. 1078 (holding that a special finding that a spark arrester was of the most approved kind is not inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff, where other answers show that the verdict was based on its defectiveness for want of repair); McDoel v. Gill, 23 Ind. App. 95, 53 N. E. 956.

87. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Brough, 168 Ind. 378, 81 N. E. 57, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 401; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Smock, 133 Ind. 411, 33 N. E. 108; Louisville, etc., R. governed by the rules applicable to appeal and error in other civil actions.[91] A theory of the cause not raised in the lower court cannot be reviewed on appeal.[92] A mere uncertainty or ambiguity in the pleading cannot be taken advantage of for the first time on appeal,[93] unless it is of such a character as to justify a discarding of the pleading altogether.[94] Since it is the province of the jury to pass upon the evidence where it is conflicting, a verdict or finding by the jury as to the fact of negligence which has been properly submitted to them and of which there is some evidence will not in general be disturbed on appeal; [95] nor will a similar finding by the court be disturbed.[96]

(II) HARMLESS ERROR.[97] A judgment in an action against a railroad company for damages by fire will not be reversed for an error on the trial which resulted in no prejudice to the party seeking to take advantage of it.[98]

Illustrations of harmless error.— Omission of the word "dangerous" before the word "combustible" in an instruction that it was defendant's duty to keep its right of way clear of dry weeds and combustible material. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Coyette, 133 Ill. 21, 24 N. E. 549 [affirming 32 Ill. App. 574]. Exclusion of the trip report of the engineer of the locomotive alleged to have started the fire when such engineer testified orally to all that it contained bearing upon the case. Chicago, etc., R. RAILROAD SUPERINTENDENT. See EMPLOYEE, 15 Cyc. 1033 text and note 59.

RAILROAD TICKET. A receipt, or voucher, having more the character of personal property than of a negotiable instrument;[2] nothing more than a mere voucher that the party to whom it is given and in whose possession it is has paid his fare and is entitled to be carried a certain distance;[3] merely a voucher that the person in whose possession it is has paid his fare;[4] a convenient symbol to represent the fact that the bearer has paid to the company the agreed price for his conveyance upon the road to the place designated;[5] merely the evidence of the contract of the carrier to transport the holder between the points, and on the conditions therein named;[6] a mere token or voucher showing that the holder has paid his fare and is entitled to passage as thereon indicated,[7] subject to conflict whether or not it constitutes a contract.[8] (See CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 570; PASSAGE, 30 Cyc. 800 note 18; PASSENGER, 30 Cyc. 801 note 26.)

R. Co. v. Hays, 8 Kan. App. 545, 54 Pac. 322. Failure to require a more definite statement by plaintiff in his petition as to the train from which, and the time when, the fire escaped where no prejudice results thereby to defendant. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Merrill, 40 Kan. 404, 19 Pac. 793. Where there is direct testimony that all the engines on a line are equipped with spark arresters it is harmless error to exclude evidence, the only purpose of which would be to lay a foundation for the identification of the engine charged with setting the fire, and in order to prove that it was so equipped. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 43 S. W. 557. Error in the admission of testimony as to how the engine from which the fire originated was operated is not prejudicial to defendant where the jury find that it was properly operated and managed. Abbott v. Gore, 74 Wis. 509, 43 N. W. 365.

Admitting evidence of the direction of the wind at a point five miles distant from the fire does not afford defendant good ground of exception unless the jury were misled as to the direction at the time and place of the fire. Pierce v. Worcester, etc., R. Co., 105 Mass. 199.

In an action for the destruction of plaintiff's dwelling by fire, the admission of evidence that he expected to move the house away from that track soon is harmless error, since the measure of damages for such destruction is the value of the house itself and not the decrease in value of the land on which it stood by reason of the destruction of the house. White v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 1 S. D. 326, 47 N. W. 146, 9 L. R. A. 824.

Permitting an amendment of the complaint demanding damages for injuries to a tract of land not included in plaintiff's notice of claim of damages, served under the statute (Laws (1893), c. 202) is cured by setting aside the verdict on motion for a new trial so far as the damages to that particular tract is concerned. Donovan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 93 Wis. 373, 67 N. W. 721.

In an action against a railroad company by a subtenant of its lessee for loss of a stock of goods by fire, the exclusion of evidence that plaintiff had notice of the stipulations of the lease between defendant and the lessee, by which the lessee covenanted to keep the building and contents insured, is not ground for reversal. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Keahy, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 330, 83 S. W. 1102.

RAILROAD or RAILWAY TRACK. In the ordinary sense, two continuous lines of rails on which railway cars run,[9] forming, together with the ties, ballast, switches, etc., the permanent way,[10] merely that part of the right of way on which the rails and ties are laid.[11] As generally understood, only a track on which steam is used as the motive power.[12] Under the Illinois Revenue Law,[13] for the purposes of taxation, the right of way, including the superstructures of main, side, or second track and turn-outs, and the station and improvement of the railroad company on such right of way.[14] Under the Indiana Revenue

"Not merely the rails and ties upon which cars are run, but it is the 'road, course, way' (Webster), and includes all that enters into and composes the road, the course and way." Gates v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 82 Iowa 518, 527, 48 N. W. 1040.

Embankment included.— Within the meaning of Iowa Code, § 464, concerning damages to abutting premises of construction of railroads, the embankment upon which the rails and ties are laid is a part of the whole that makes the railroad track. Gates v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 82 Iowa 518, 527, 48 N. W. 1040.

Road-bed included.— As used in Ill. St. (1893) c. 20 (St. (1898) § 1816, subd. 1), providing for recovery by employee for defect in track, the word includes the road-bed upon which the track rests. Crouse v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 102 Wis. 196, 209, 78 N. W. 446, 778.

Not synonymous with "right of way" see Reid v. Klein, 138 Ind. 484, 494, 37 N. E. 967.

Tracks in yard.— In a condemnation petition, "tracks" applies to those devoted to the purposes of a railroad yard. See Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Pontiac, 169 Ill. 155, 161, 48 N. E. 485.

As used in Illinois City and Village Act (St. (1872) art. 5, § 1, par. 89), authorizing the condemnation of a railroad track by eminent domain for highway crossings, the term includes tracks used for switch purposes and devoted to the storage of cars. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, 151 Ill. 348, 357, 37 N. E. 842.

"North line of the railroad track," describing a boundary, in a deed, means the north line of the rails. Reid v. Klein, 138 Ind. 484, 488, 37 N. E. 967.

A "structure" within the meaning of Conn. Gen. St. § 2673, providing that, for injury upon a highway, "caused by a structure legally placed on such road by a railroad company," the latter shall be liable. New York, etc., R. Co. v. New Haven, 70 Conn. 390, 396, 39 Atl. 597.

Embraces main track, side-track, right of way, and improvements thereon (Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Mathews, 152 Ill. 153, 158, 38 N. E. 623); a right of way one hundred feet wide and track thereon, used to carry stone, necessary in keeping the road in repair, from a quarry to the main track (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 129 Ill. 571, 22 N. E. 864, 25 N. E. 5); the east half of the "Burlington bridge" across the Mississippi between Illinois and Iowa (Anderson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 117 Ill. 26, 27, 7 N. E. 129); town or city lots used by the company as right of way (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 72 Ill. 144, 146); "not merely the main and side-tracks and turn-outs, but also the stations, and improvements thereon" (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 4 Ill. App. 468, 471).

Does not embrace a separate piece of land containing track five hundred feet in length, in a sheep yard, entirely surrounded by a fence and shut off from the right of way by a gate when not in use (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 184, 187, 189, 62 N. E. 869); or lots owned by a railroad but never appropriated as a part of the right of way, whatever may be the intention concerning

Law,[15] the right of way, including a superstructure, main track, side or second tracks, and turnouts, turn-tables, telegraph poles, wires, instruments, and other appliances, and the stations or improvements of the railroad company on the right of way, except machinery, stationary and other engines, which shall be considered personal property; that is, the right of way, with whatever is upon it in the shape of improvements.[16] Under certain New York statutes, the entire roadway and not merely the iron or railway, including switches or other contrivances for passing cars from one line of rails to another,[17] limited, however, to the track used for public traffic.[18]

RAILROAD YARD. A tract of ground upon which are railroad tracks, used for the purpose of receiving and storing cars when not in use, or used for the purpose of switching, in the distribution of cars and engines to other places, and in the making up of trains;[19] a place for the deposit of cars and the making up of trains;[20] consisting of side tracks upon either side of the main tracks, and adjacent to some principal station or depot grounds, where cars are placed for deposit, and where arriving trains are separated and departing trains made up; the place where such switching is done as is essential to the proper placing of cars either for deposit or for departure.[21]

RAILS. A word which as used in a statute providing for assessment has been construed to mean simply the rails in place on the road-bed.[22] (See RAILROAD TRACK, ante, p. 1406.)

RAILWAY. A structure which consists of the bed or foundation, which may be of earth, stone, or trestle work, on which are laid the ties or rails.[23] (See RAILROADS, ante, p. 33.)

RAILWAY ACCIDENT. A term which, as used in a policy of insurance, has been construed to mean an accident occurring in the course of traveling and arising out of the journey; not necessarily dependent on any accident to the railway or machinery connected with it.[24] (Railway Accident: As Cause of

To be assessable as "railroad track," property must not only be used therefor, but must be the property of a railroad company (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 153 Ill. 409, 413, 38 N. E. 1075, 29 L. R. A. 69); "it is not necessary the road should be constructed, but if it shall be 'located' and in process of construction" it is to be returned for taxation as "railroad track" (People v. Chicago, etc., R. Does not include grounds upon which tracks are laid for storing cars or exclusively for making up trains. Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Greenbush, 52 N. Y. 510, 511 [quoted in People v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 156 N. Y. 570, 578, 51 N. E. 312].

29. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Neal, 66 Ark. 543, 544, 51 S. W. 1060.

The various places along the line of railway where carriages stop for taking up or depositing goods or passengers are termed stations, with the prefix of goods or passengers as they are allotted to the one or the other, and they are termed road stations when they occur at the crossing of a public road where goods or passengers are transferred to other kinds of conveyance. Imp. Dict. sub verb. "Railway" [quoted in Carroll v. Casemore, 20 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 16, 21].

The ordinary acceptation of the term as applied to railways would appear to be "passenger station." It cannot properly mean the railway grounds, and in legal phraseology, a different signification is not given to the word. Carroll v. Casemore, 20 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 16, 22.

30. Webster Dict.: Worcester Dict. [both quoted in Balfour v. Wilkins, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 807, 5 Sawy. 429, 434].

"Rainy day" is a phrase which has no definite and certain meaning and may be understood in many senses; literally, nothing less than a day of rain — a day on which rain falls every moment of the period; colloquially the term may be often used to describe a day upon which at least a moderate rainfall occurs during the greater portion of the time; altogether indefinite and uncertain when used without regard to the surrounding circumstances; and capable of being used in different senses according to the nature of the subject-matter concerning which it is applied, therefore to be explained by usage where usage exists. Balfour v. Wilkins, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 807, 5 Sawy. 429, 434, 437 [cited in 20 Alb. L. J. 161], where it is said: "To say simply that a day is a rainy one is almost as vague an expression as that a thing is as big as a piece of chalk or as long as a string. A contract to plow, ditch or cut wood, 'rainy days' excepted, would not be understood or construed as would a contract to harvest grain, 'rainy days' excepted. Reference being had to the subject-matter, it would be manifest that the parties had not the same degree of rain-fall in view in making the last contract as the others, because they could be conveniently performed in weather in which the moisture would make it unsafe and unfit to harvest;" and held (p. 437) that as used in a charter party excepting rainy days from the time given for loading, it means "a day on which cargo could not be safely and conveniently loaded at this port." See DAY, 13 Cyc. 262.

together, to collect, to levy, to get together for use or service;[34] to levy, to collect;[35] and the term may allow various methods,[36] such as sale;[37] borrowing;[38] taxation;[39] actual receipt,[40] or bona fide subscription.[41] In case of a fund, to create or produce.[42] Used of a structure, to increase height.[43] Used of living

34. Webster Dict. [quoted in Perry County v. Selma, etc., R. Co., 58 Ala. 546, 557, holding that the precise meaning in a constitutional revision, declaring that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives is to levy a tax as a means of collecting revenue, and does not imply increase of revenue], adding "as to raise money, troops, and the like."

"Collect, the synonym given in the dictionaries," is the construction of the word as used in a letter promising the president of a college a sum of money if he can "raise" an equal sum. Bates College v. Bates, 135 Mass. 487, 488.

35. Webster Dict. [quoted in Childs v. Hillsborough Electric Light, etc., Co., 70 N. H. 318, 320, 324, 47 Atl. 271], where it is said: "To 'raise' money, as the word is ordinarily understood, is to collect or procure a supply of money for use, as, in the case of a municipal corporation, by taxation or perhaps loan. Money cannot be actually given or appropriated before it is raised. A promise to give or appropriate money may be made before the money is actually procured; but in such case the promise binds the promisor to have the money on hand when it becomes due, and so, in a sense, the money is raised by the promise. As authority to grant money includes authority to promise a grant of it, so an exception in respect to raising money includes an exception of a promise by which money must be raised."

36. See New York, etc., Cement Co. v. Keator, 62 N. Y. App. Div. 577, 580, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 185 [quoted and affirmed in New York, etc., Cement Co. v. Davis, 173 N. Y. 235, 239, 66 N. E. 9], where it is said: "When applied to an individual or a business corporation, it means the procuring of money in any of the usual methods, by note, mortgage or other obligation. As applied to municipal corporations, its ordinary import is the procuring of money by taxation or by the obligations of the corporation. . . . Where a statute authorizes the borrowing of money, the words 'to raise money' are equally apt to signify raising by taxation or by municipal obligation."

37. See Hand v. Stapleton, 140 Ala. 555, 562, 37 So. 362, holding that the term "'raising' money" contemplates a sale of property for money or a borrowing on engagements to pay in the future.

May imply power of sale — as where executors are directed to raise a sum out of certain lands. Bateman v. Bateman, 1 Atk. 421, 26 Eng. Reprint 268. See also Green v. Belchier, 1 Atk. 505, 506, 26 Eng. Reprint 319.

Rep. 483, holding that the term may be construed "borrow" as used in Ky. Const. § 184, providing that "no sum shall be raised or collected for education other than in common schools," without submission of the question of taxation to voters and a majority in favor thereof.

"Raised by the pledge or hypothecation . . . is . . . 'borrowing.'" Baltimore v. Gill, 31 Md. 375, 388.

39. Schneewind v. Niles, 103 Mich. 301, 306, 61 N. W. 498, holding that the word, used in fiscal statutes, means raised by taxation. See also Dickinson County v. Warren, 98 Mich. 144, 146, 56 N. W. 1111, where the word is said to be "frequently employed in grants of authority to provide the necessary funds for public use in cases where the intent to prescribe the method in which the power is to be exercised, viz., by taxation, is so clearly obvious that the word may be said to have acquired a clearly defined meaning when used in that connection."

Raised by taxation — not borrowed; in a provision that electors at a town meeting shall have power "to direct such sum to be raised," etc. Wells v. Salina, 119 N. Y. 280, 288, 23 N. E. 870, 7 L. R. 40. See Opinion of Justices, 7 Me. 502, 504, holding that "raised," in a statute providing for the compensation allowed to managers of lotteries, not exceeding twenty-five per cent on the sum raised, means actually produced and realized in cash.

41. See New London Literary, etc., Inst. v. Prescott, 40 N. H. 330, 333, holding that in a condition that a certain amount be "raised" before a certain subscription should be paid may mean "subscribed" or "paid," but the amount must at least be subscribed in good faith; a subscription without intent to pay does not fill the requirement.

42. Opinion of Justices, 7 Me. 502, 504.

43. See Smith v. Moodus Water Power Co., 35 Conn. 392, 399 (holding that the expression "raise the dam," in a lease and contract, implies that there is a dam in existence which may be raised, and applies to the whole dam, to one part of it as well as to another); Colwell v. May's Landing Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 245, 249 (where a statute authorizing a mill owner to "raise" the dam and waterworks to the height of the natural surface of the water was construed as authorizing the raising of the water of the dam to that height and not to authorize the raising of the structure of the dam so that the water would be made to flow back on another's land); State v. Suttle, 115 N. C. 784, 787, 20 S. E. 725 (holding that a reservation in a deed of the right of raising and rebuilding reserves the right to raise as well as to rebuild, or according to the charge to the jury, to raise high if necessary).

things, animal or vegetable, to bring to maturity.[44] (See COLLECT, 7 Cyc. 280; LEVY, 25 Cyc. 206; PROCURE, 32 Cyc. 573.)

RAISED BOTTOMS. A term whose application to raw copper has been held not to subject the article to duty under that name.[45]

RAISED CHECK. See BANKS AND BANKING, 5 Cyc. 544; FORGERY, 19 Cyc. 1367.

RAKE OFF. A phrase which plainly suggests the figure of one passing a rake over something and scraping or clearing off and gathering up part of it; when stated as the act of an official towards public moneys it becomes a statement of fraud or theft whose meaning, without innuendo, the court is bound to notice judicially and pronounce libelous.[46]

RAM. A male sheep as distinguished from a wether;[47] a swinging appliance for striking heavy blows.[48] (See ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 380 note 75.)

RANCHMAN. A word which, as used in a lien law to describe a class of persons entitled to a lien for payment for feeding, herding, and pasturing animals applies only to one who takes care of the animals intrusted to him upon his own land, and does not include one who works for wages off his own land.[49]

RANDOM. In its popular meaning, done at hazard, or without any settled aim, purpose or direction; left to chance, or casual, or haphazard.[50]

RANGE. As used by ranchmen, sparsely populated and uninclosed prairie over which stock growers have been allowed to let cattle, horses, and other animals owned by them or in their charge, roam and feed without restraint.[51] In mining, crevice, lode, or vein.[52] In the public land system, a row or line of townships lying between two successive meridian lines six miles apart.[53] (Range: Levy, see EXECUTIONS, 17 Cyc. 1088.)

RANGE LEVY. See EXECUTIONS, 17 Cyc. 1088.

RANK. As an adjective, in English law, excessive; too large in amount.[54]

Children may be regarded as "raised" when they are twenty-one years of age. Shoemaker v. Stobaugh, 59 Ind. 598, 600, so construing a will, where the "raising" of the children was made the purpose of a legacy and the period of a disposition.

"Crops raised by the mortgagor . . . for the term of three years" does not mean crops raised before the execution of the mortgage in which the phrase occurs. 54. Black L. Dict.

Example, "The 'modus' must not be too large, which is called a 'rank modus.'" 2 Blackstone Comm. 30 [cited in Black L. Dict.].

As a noun, the order or place in which certain officers are placed in the army or navy in relation to others;[55] social position, station.[56] As a verb, to range in any particular class, order, or distinction; to class; also to dispose methodically, to place in suitable classes or order, to classify.[57] (Rank: Of Officers of Army and Navy, see ARMY AND NAVY, 3 Cyc. 820.)

RANSOM. As a noun, a redemption for money or other consideration, of that which is taken in war;[58] a severe fine.[59] As a verb, a synonym of REDEEM,[60] q. v. (Ransom: Bills, Under Admiralty Jurisdiction, see ADMIRALTY, 1 Cyc. 838.)

"Often used to express something different from office."— It then becomes a designation or title of honor, dignity, or distinction conferred upon an officer in order to fix his relative position with reference to other officers in matters of privilege, precedence, and sometimes of command, or by which to determine his pay and emoluments." Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 151, 159, where it is pointed out that the rank and actual office of an officer may differ.

56. See Thill v. Pohlman, 76 Iowa 638, 640, 641, 41 N. W. 385, where it is said: "How could it be said that in fixing the obligations of a husband for the support of his wife her social position in society, which is the synonym of 'rank' or 'station,' should not be considered? . . . The terms 'rank' and 'station' seem to be of like import."

57. Webster Int. Dict.

Does not necessarily imply identity of the thing ranked with the class in which it is ranked. Verdier v. Roach, 96 Cal. 467, 475, 31 Pac. 554, where it is said: "The first two examples given by Mr. Webster of authorized uses of the verb 'to rank' are as follows: 'Poets were "ranked" in the class of philosophers'; 'Heresy is "ranked" with idolatry and witchcraft.' The first does not necessarily mean nor imply that poets are philosophers; nor the second that heresy is idolatry or witchcraft. Nor does the requirement that an allowed claim shall be ranked 'among' debts exclude from the ranks all claims which may not properly be termed legal debts;" and held that Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1497, requiring claims against a decedent's estate to be filed in court and "ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration," does not exclude claims not properly legal debts.

58. Havelock v. Rockwood, 8 T. R. 268, 277.

Distinguished from "sale."— "The plaintiff's ship, after being captured by the enemy, but before she was condemned as prize, was put up to auction, and sold to the plaintiff, or at least delivered to him, for which he paid a sum of money. Then it was redeemed by him: there could not be any sale of the ship, because there was no sentence of condemnation; without which no property could be transferred to a purchaser. . . . It was a redemption, or ransom." Havelock v. Rockwood, 8 T. R. 268, 277.

59. U. S. v. Griffin, 6 D. C. 53, 57, where in construing St. 5 Rich. II, it is said: "The language of the statute forbids the act of forcible entry, &c., 'under pain of imprisonment and ransom.' The word ransom means not only a fine, but a severe fine."

common law, such knowledge of a female child under the age of ten years, either with or without her consent.[3] A distinction has sometimes been suggested between the words "against her will" and the words "without her consent" in the definitions of rape;[4] but according to the better opinion they mean exactly the same thing.[5]

b. By Statute. In some states rape is now or has been defined by statute substantially as at common law.[6] In others it is punished eo nomine, without being defined, in which case the common-law definition applies.[7] In other states the statutory definition either differs from the common-law definition or specifies circumstances under which the act will constitute rap where there was some doubt under the common law.[8] In some states the statute raises the age at which

8. In California it is provided as follows: "Rape is an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: 1. Where the female is under the age of sixteen years; 2. Where she is incapable, through lunacy or other unsoundness of mind, whether temporary or permanent, of giving legal consent; 3. Where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence; 4. Where she is prevented from resisting by threats of great and immediate bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution, or by any intoxicating narcotic, or anæsthetic substance, administered by or with the privity of the accused; 5. Where she is at the time unconscious of the nature of the act, and this is known to the accused; 6. Where she submits under the belief that the person committing the act is her husband, and this belief is induced by any artifice, pretense, or concealment practiced by the accused, with intent to induce such belief." Cal. Pen. Code, § 261. See People v. Snyder, 75 Cal. 323, 17 Pac. 208.

In New York it is provided: "A person who perpetrates an act of sexual intercourse with a female not his wife, against her will or without her consent, or 1. When through idiocy, imbecility or any unsoundness of mind, either temporary or permanent, she is incapable of giving consent, or by reason of mental or physical weakness, or immaturity, or any bodily ailment, she does not offer resistance; or, 2. When her resistance is forcibly overcome; or, 3. When her resistance is prevented by fear of immediate and great bodily harm, which she has reasonable cause to believe will be inflicted upon her; or, 4. When her resistance is prevented by stupor, or weakness of mind produced by an intoxicating, or narcotic, or anæsthetic agent; or, when she is known by the defendant to be in such state of stupor or weakness of mind from any cause; or, 5. When she is, at the time, unconscious of the act, and this is known to the defendant, or when she is in custody of the law, or of any officer thereof, or in any place of lawful detention, temporary or permanent, is guilty of rape in the first degree and punishable by imprisonment for not more than twenty years. A person who perpetrates an act of sexual intercourse with a female, not his wife, under the age

a female can consent to sexual intercourse, so as to prevent the act from being rape.[9] In a few states the statute divides the crime, like murder, into degrees of eighteen years, under circumstances not amounting to rape in the first degree, is guilty of rape in the second degree, and punishable with imprisonment for not more than ten years." Pen. Code, § 278.

In Oklahoma it is provided: "Rape is an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: First. Where the female is under the age of fourteen years. Second. Where she is incapable through lunacy or any other unsoundness of mind, whether temporary or permanent, of giving legal consent. Third. Where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence. Fourth. Where she is prevented from resisting by threats of immediate and great bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution. Fifth. Where she is prevented from resisting by any intoxicating, narcotic or anæsthetic agent, administered by or with the privity of the accused. Sixth. Where she is at the time unconscious of the nature of the act and this is known to the accused. Seventh. Where she submits under a belief that the person committing the act is her husband, and this belief is induced by artifice, pretense or concealment practiced by the accused, with intent to induce such belief." Okla. St. (1893) c. 25, art. 26, § 1. See Parker v. Territory, 9 Okla. 109, 59 Pac. 9; Asher v. Territory, 7 Okla. 188, 54 Pac. 445; Sowers v. Territory, 6 Okla. 436, 50 Pac. 257.

In Texas it is provided as follows: "Rape is the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud, or the carnal knowledge of a woman other than the wife of the person having such carnal knowledge with or without consent, and with or without use of force, threats, or fraud, such woman being so mentally diseased at the time as to have no will to oppose the act of carnal knowledge, the person having carnal knowledge of her knowing her to be so mentally diseased; or the carnal knowledge of a female under the age of fifteen years, other than the wife of the person, with or without her consent, and with or without the use of force, threats, or fraud." Pen. Code, art. 633. "The definition of 'force,' as applicable to assault and battery, applies also to the crime of rape, and it must have been such as might reasonably be supposed sufficient to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the relative strength of the parties, and other circumstances of the case." Pen. Code, art. 634. "The 'threat' must be such as might reasonably create a just fear of death, or great bodily harm, in view of the relative condition of the parties as to health, strength, and all other circumstances of the case." Pen. Code, art. 635. "The 'fraud' must consist in the use of some stratagem by which the woman is induced to believe the offender is her husband, or in administering, without her knowledge or consent, some substance producing unnatural sexual desire, or such stupor as prevents or weakens resistance, and committing the offense while she is under the influence of such substance. It is a presumption of law, which cannot be rebutted by testimony, that no consent was given under the circumstances mentioned in this article." Pen. Code, art. 636. See Railsback v. State, 53 Tex. Under La. Acts (1896), p. 165, No. 115, making the carnal knowledge of an unmarried female between twelve and sixteen years according to the circumstances under which it was committed.[10] In some jurisdictions it is held that a statute punishing for rape any person who shall have carnal knowledge of any woman forcibly and against her will, or any person who shall carnally know or abuse any female under a certain age with her consent, defines but one crime and not two distinct crimes;[11] but in others the statute is construed as defining two distinct crimes.[12]

2. Nature and Elements of Offense — a. Felony or Misdemeanor. There is some doubt as to whether rape was a felony under the ancient common law, but it was made so by an early English statute,[13] and it is a felony with us either by express statutory provision or because it is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison.[14]

b. Distinguished From Other Offenses. Rape is distinguished from seduction in that it is committed by force and without the consent of the female, or upon a female incapable of consenting, while in seduction the female is induced to consent, and also in that rape may, while seduction cannot, be committed upon a married woman, nor, as a rule, upon a woman of previous unchaste character.[15] In some states rape is also distinguished from incest in that the concurring assent of both parties is a necessary ingredient of incest;[16] but in other states it is held that the consent of the female is not necessary to the crime of incest, and that the same act therefore may be both rape and incest.[17] Rape is distinguished from adultery and fornication in that force and want of consent on the part of the woman is necessary in rape, but not in adultery or fornication; but it is generally held that the fact that the man accomplishes the act by force and without the woman's consent will not prevent his act from being adultery or fornication, although he is also guilty of rape.[18] old with her consent a felony, the carnal knowledge of a child under twelve years old constitutes rape. State v. Mehojovich, 118 La. 1013, 43 So. 660.

10. In Oklahoma, for example, rape committed upon a female under the age of fourteen years, or incapable, through lunacy, or any other unsoundness of mind, of giving legal consent, or accomplished by means of force overcoming her resistance, is rape in the first degree. In all other cases rape is of the second degree. Okla. St. (1893) c. 25, art. 26, §§ 4, 5, as amended by Laws (1895), p. 105. See Sowers v. Territory, 6 Okla. 436, 50 Pac. 257. c. By Whom the Offense May Be Committed.[19] Any male person of sufficient mental capacity to be criminally responsible for his acts[20] may commit the crime of rape if he has sufficient physical capacity to perform the act of sexual intercourse, but not otherwise.[21] Of course the crime cannot be committed by a woman as principal in the first degree;[22] nor can it be committed by a husband on his wife,[23] or by an impotent person.[24] At common law a male under fourteen years of age was conclusively presumed incapable of committing rape, and he could not be convicted as principal in the first degree.[25] The common-law rule has been followed in some of the United States,[26] but in other states the rule has been modified, and want of age is merely prima facie evidence of physical incapacity, and may be rebutted, the burden being on the state.[27] Some of the stat-

"Man."— Under Pub. St. (1901) c. 278, § 15, providing that, if any man shall unlawfully and carnally know any woman child under the age of sixteen years, he shall be imprisoned, etc., the word "man" includes persons of the male sex who are capable of committing rape, and is not limited to adult males. 22. See State v. Williamson, 22 Utah 248, 62 Pac. 1022, 83 Am. St. Rep. 780.

23. It is usually stated that a man who has sexual intercourse with his wife without her consent is not guilty of rape, because the intercourse is not unlawful (State v. Haines, 51 La. Ann. 731, 25 So. 372, 44 L. R. A. 837; Frazier v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 142, 86 S. W. 754, 122 Am. St. Rep. 738. And see State v. Williamson, 22 Utah 248, 62 Pac. 1022, 83 Am. St. Rep. 780); but if he aids another to do so he is guilty, because such intercourse is unlawful (State v. Dowell, 106 N. C. 722, 11 S. E. 525, 19 Am. St. Rep. 568, 8 L. R. A. 297; Audley's Case, 3 How. St. Tr. 401; infra, I, C). The better theory is that by marriage the wife consents to the intercourse with her husband, which consent she cannot withdraw, but she does not consent to intercourse with another, hence it is a question of consent rather than the unlawfulness of the intercourse. 1 Hale P. C. 629. And see State v. Haines, 51 La. Ann. 731, 25 So. 372, 44 L. R. A. 837.

Want of power of emission, although there may be power of penetration, is impotency in some jurisdictions. Hiltabiddle v. State, 35 Ohio St. 52, 35 Am. Rep. 592. But in most jurisdictions penetration without emission is sufficient to constitute the offense. See infra, I, A, 2, e, (II), (III).

Drunkenness of defendant is of itself no defense against a charge of rape. See infra, I, D. But the fact that he was drunk or that he was in a greatly debilitated condition by reason of a debauch may be considered in determining whether he was physically capable of committing the offense. d. Upon Whom the Offense May Be Committed.[30] Rape may be committed on a female under the age of puberty, or on one so young as to be incapable of giving her consent.[31] And it may be committed on a woman who is insane or idiotic, drugged, intoxicated, or asleep.[32] If a man by force and without her consent has carnal knowledge of a woman who is unchaste he is guilty of rape. Want of chastity may be shown as bearing on the question of consent,[33] but is neither a defense nor mitigation.[34] If a woman is under the age of consent, want of chastity is no defense, unless so provided by statute;[35] but some statutes in punishing carnal knowledge of a female under a certain age, whether with or without her consent, expressly require that she shall have been previously chaste or of good repute.[36]

e. The Carnal Knowledge — (1) In General. It is of course essential to the crime of rape that the man shall have actual carnal knowledge of the woman, and this must be shown either by direct or circumstantial evidence.[37] Carnal knowledge is also necessary, as a rule, under the statutes punishing carnal abuse of female children.[38] In such statutes carnal "abuse" means abuse of the sexual organs by intercourse or the attempt to have the same.[39]

In Nebraska previous unchastity is a defense where the girl was over fifteen and under eighteen, but is immaterial where she was under fifteen. Harris v. State, 80 Nebr. 195, 114 N. W. 168; Burk v. State, 79 Nebr. 241, 112 N. W. 573; Hubert v. State, 74 Nebr. 220, 104 N. W. 276, 106 N. W. 774; George v. State, 61 Nebr. 669, 85 N. W. 840.

What constitutes previous chastity.—A girl of fifteen who has led a virtuous life for six or seven years is, notwithstanding possible unchastity before that time, within a statute (Mich. Laws (1887), No. 143), punishing any one who shall carnally know a girl of that age "theretofore chaste." People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630, 54 N. W. 488. Previous unchastity is no bar to a conviction if the female had reformed and was chaste at the time of the act. Jamison v. State, 117 Tenn. 58, 94 S. W. 675.

A woman not "previously unchaste," within the meaning of Nebr. Cr. Code, c. 4, § 12, is one who has never had unlawful intercourse with a male prior to the intercourse with which the prisoner stands indicted. The object of the statute is to protect virtuous maidens, to protect those girls who are undefiled virgins; and a female under eighteen years of age and over fifteen years of age who has been guilty of unlawful sexual intercourse with a male is not within the act. Bailey v. State, 57 Nebr. 706, 78 N. W. 284, 73 Am. St. Rep. 540.

The phrase "good repute" in the proviso of Pa. Act, May 19, 1887 (Pamphl. Laws 128), which reduces the crime of carnal knowledge of a woman child under the age of sixteen who is not of good repute from rape to fornication, means the general reputation of the girl for chastity in the community in which she lives. Com. v. Howe, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 554. Compare Com. v. Allen, 135 Pa. St. 483, 19 Atl. 957; Com. v. Davis, 3 Pa. Dist. 271; Com. v. Goodhead, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 651.

In Tenn. Acts (1901), p. 29, c. 19, which, after prohibiting carnal knowledge of a female over twelve and under eighteen years of age, declares that nothing contained in the act shall authorize a conviction when the female is at the time or before the carnal knowledge a bawd, lewd, or kept female, the offense is predicated on the "character" rather than the "reputation" of the female for chastity, and "lewdness," as used therein, includes private as well as notorious unchastity. Jamison v. State, 117 Tenn. 58, 94 S. W. 675.

Unchaste conduct after the girl was debauched by defendant is immaterial. State v. Knock, 142 Mo. 515, 44 S. W. 235.

Under Nebr. Cr. Code, § 12, punishing as rape any male person of the age of eighteen years or upward who shall "carnally know or abuse" any female child under the age of fifteen years with her consent, it was held that it was error to charge that such abuse did not necessarily mean abuse by sexual intercourse attempted or accomplished, as the word "abuse" was used as synonymous with ravish. Chambers v. State, supra. And see Palin v. State, 38 Nebr. 862, 57 N. W. 743. In Alabama, under a statute punishing any person who "has carnal knowledge of any female under the

(II) PENETRATION.[40] There can be no carnal knowledge without penetration.[41] Mere actual contact of the sexual organs is not sufficient,[42] and if the female is not sufficiently developed to admit of the slightest penetration there can be no carnal knowledge.[43] The slightest penetration, however, of the body of the female by the sexual organ of the male is sufficient; it is not necessary that the penetration should be perfect;[44] nor that there should be an entering of the vagina or rupturing of the hymen; the entering of the vulva or labia is sufficient.[45]

(III) EMISSION. In 1781 it was held in England that the offense of rape was not complete without emission.[46] This decision was followed for some years by the English courts,[47] and by the courts of some of the United States.[48] Prior age of ten years, or abuses such female in the attempt to have carnal knowledge of her," it was held that the term "abuse" must be limited in its meaning to injuries to the genital organs in the attempt at carnal knowledge falling short of actual penetration. Dawkins v. State, supra. Defendant may be convicted of carnal abuse without penetration, as it differs from carnal knowledge in that particular. State v. Hummer, 72 N. J. St. (1902) § 1148, directed against a person who shall carnally know and abuse a female under sixteen, and to "abuse," within the meaning of that section, is not to injure the genital organs of the female, and to an extent not naturally resulting from an act of normal intercourse with a fully developed female. acquiescence is not rape.[58] Consent of the woman, however reluctantly given, or if accompanied with mere verbal protests and refusals, at any time during the intercourse prevents the act from being rape.[59] If a man lays hold of a woman against her will and she afterward consents to intercourse before the act is committed, it is not rape, but merely assault with intent to commit rape.[60] If consent is given by the woman but withdrawn before penetration, and the act is accomplished by force, it is rape.[61] If a woman offers to allow a man to have intercourse with her upon certain conditions precedent, and he refuses to comply with the conditions, but accomplishes the act without her consent, he is guilty of rape.[62] Consent or condonation after the act is no defense.[63]

(II) Female Under Age of Consent. It was held in some of the early cases that under the common law it was not rape to have sexual intercourse with a female child, however young, if she consented;[64] but Sir Matthew Hale was of the opinion that sexual intercourse with a girl under twelve years of age was rape, that being the age of female discretion at common law.[65] When the punishment for rape was mitigated by statute in England females under twelve years of age were considered incapable of consent;[66] but the punishment was again increased by the statute of Elizabeth and made to apply to all sexual intercourse with girls under ten years of age, whether with or without their consent;[67] and this statute has been regarded as a part of our common law.[68] Most states, however, have enacted statutes on the subject, some of them fixing the age of consent at ten years, some at twelve, and others at fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, and even as high as eighteen years.[69] Some of the statutes apply to females between certain ages, as, for example, between twelve, fourteen, fifteen, or sixteen and eighteen, only where the female was of previous chaste character or repute.[70] Intercourse with a female under the age of consent at common law, or as thus fixed by the statute of the state in which the offense occurs, is rape, whether she consents or not, as she is in law incapable of consent.[71] It makes no difference be a married woman, if she is not the wife of the accused.[73] Nor is it a matter of defense that defendant was informed and believed that the female was above the age of consent, if in fact she was under such age.[74] A female who is over the age of consent, but still a child in mental and physical development, is not capable of giving consent.[75] Statutes making sexual intercourse with females under a given age rape are constitutional and a valid exercise of legislative power;[76] nor are they invalid because defendant might have been indicted under some other statute for the same act;[77] nor is there any conflict between such statutes and those allowing females to marry under the age of consent.[78] There must be strict proof of age, place, and all other restrictions imposed by such statutes.[79] Carnal knowledge of a woman by force is none the less rape as at common law, because of the passage of statutes fixing the age of consent.[80]

(III) Female Insane, Imbecile, Drugged, Intoxicated, or Asleep. By statute in some states, and at common law when there is no such statute, a man who has sexual intercourse with a woman mentally incapable of consent because of insanity or imbecility is guilty of rape, although she does not resist and no force is used; but the woman must be so imbecile or insane as not to know the nature of the act; if she has sufficient intellect to know the nature of the act and yields to gratify her own lust it is not rape.[81] The fact that defendant did not know that the woman was incapable of giving consent is no defense,[82] unless made so by statute.[83] So, if ability to resist is taken away by administering drugs, even though the woman may be conscious, sexual intercourse with her is rape.[84] If a drug is administered for a lawful purpose, and wrongful intent is formed afterward, carnal knowledge of the woman while in a state of stupefaction is rape.[85] And if the woman is intoxicated to the extent of being unable to resist, the act is without her consent and is rape.[86] In like manner carnal knowledge of a woman who is asleep is without her consent and is rape;[87] but if a woman is awakened by the act and makes no resistance it is not rape.[88]

(IV) FORCE AND RESISTANCE. In the absence of threats, or other things which make resistance impossible, there must be not only an entire absence of mental consent or assent, but there must be the most vehement exercise of every physical means or faculty within the woman's power to resist penetration, and a persistence in such resistance until the offense is consummated.[89] The term "rape" imports not only force and violence on the part of the man but resistance on the part of the woman.[90] There must be force, actual or constructive, and resistance.[91] In the absence of proof of resistance consent is presumed.[92] Mere general statements of prosecutrix that she resisted are not sufficient, but the specific acts of resistance must be shown.[93] The dissent and repulsion must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt.[94] It is said in some of the cases that there must be the utmost reluctance and the utmost resistance,[95] but this rule is repudiated in other jurisdictions.[96] The true rule is that the amount of resistance necessary will depend on the circumstances, such as the relative strength of the parties, the age and condition of the female, the uselessness of resistance, and the degree of force manifested.[97] It is not necessary that the force should be such as to create a reasonable apprehension of death.[98] If such violence is used as to render the woman unconscious this is rape by force and not of an unconscious woman.[99] Where there is no resistance from incapacity the mere force of penetration is sufficient.[1]

(v) THREATS AND FEAR. It is not always necessary that actual physical force be used, or that there be physical resistance, even where the female is capable of consenting. If she yields through fear caused by threats of great bodily injury, there is constructive force and the intercourse is rape.[2] The threats must be made before the act, and must be of bodily harm to the woman.[3]

trary,[4] it is very generally held, in the absence of a statute, that where a woman is capable of consenting and does consent to sexual intercourse, the man is not guilty of rape, although her consent was obtained by fraud or surprise.[5] But if she is deceived by fraud as to the act perpetrated on her, it is rape, although she makes no resistance.[6] Thus if a woman consents to sexual intercourse with a man under the belief that she is legally married to him, being misled by his false statements, the marriage being a mere sham, the act is not rape.[7] So, if a physician falsely represents to a woman that sexual intercourse is necessary as a part of treatment, and she, believing such representations, consents, it is not rape;[8] but if the woman is induced by fraud to submit to sexual intercourse when she does not understand the nature of the act it is rape.[9] And by the weight of authority, in the absence of a statute, sexual intercourse with a female with her consent does not constitute rape, although her consent is obtained by fraudulent personation of her husband.[10] Statutes have been enacted, however, in England and in some of the United States making it rape to have intercourse with a woman by falsely personating her husband.[11]

intent to rape her.[13] In some states these offenses are punished by statute.[14] According to the better opinion, attempt to rape differs from assault with intent to ravish. The word "attempt" in its largest signification means a trial or physical effort to do a thing. The intent in the mind covers the thing in full, the act covers it only in part.[15] In some jurisdictions the distinction is observed, and attempt to ravish is defined as an ineffectual offer by force to have carnal connection.[16] Elsewhere it has been held that the two offenses are the same.[17] It is sometimes said that assault with intent to commit rape cannot be made without the use of violence, but an attempt to commit rape includes attempts by fraud, or threats, or with a female under age, or by other means than actual force, as where one attempts rape by the use of chloroform,[18] or attempts to personate a husband,[19] or attempts to have intercourse with a woman while she is asleep;[20] but there can be no such offense as an attempt to commit an assault with intent to commit a rape.[21]

2. Nature and Elements of Offense — a. Felony or Misdemeanor. An attempt to commit rape or an assault with intent to rape is merely a misdemeanor at common law and under some statutes,[22] but they are now felonies in most jurisdictions either by express statutory provision or because they are made punishable by confinement in the state prison.[23]

b. By Whom the Offense May Be Committed. By the weight of authority a boy who is so young as to be incapable of committing rape[24] cannot be guilty of an attempt or an assault with intent to rape.[25] The same is true, according to

But in Ohio it was held that an attempt to commit rape on a female under ten years of age was not a crime, as it was not punished by any statute and there were no common-law crimes in that state. Smith v. State, 12 Ohio St. 466, 80 Am. Dec. 355.

c. Upon Whom the Offense May Be Committed. Any female may be the subject of an attempt or an assault with intent to rape, whether she has reached the age of puberty or not,[28] and whether she is chaste or unchaste character.[29]

d. The Overt Act — (I) In Attempt. To constitute an attempt to rape, there must be something more than mere preparation; there must be some overt act with intent to commit the crime,[30] coupled with an actual or apparent present ability to complete the crime.[31] Mere indecent advances, solicitations, or importunities do not amount to an attempt.[32]

(II) In Assault With Intent to Rape. To constitute an assault with intent to rape there must of course be some overt act amounting to an assault

Alabama.— Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 380, holding that if a man, intending to have carnal knowledge of a girl by force and against her will, manifests his purpose by outward acts so far as to put her in terror and render flight on her part necessary to escape, he is guilty of an attempt to commit rape.

Kentucky.— Payne v. Com., 110 S. W. 311, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 229, the overt act need not amount to a technical trespass.

Missouri.— State v. Harney, 101 Mo. 470, 14 S. W. 657, actual attempt necessary.

Nevada.— State v. Lung, 21 Nev. 209, 28 Pac. 235, 37 Am. St. Rep. 505, holding that the attempted administration of cantharides to a woman for the purpose of having sexual intercourse with her, but without any offer or effort at sexual connection, is mere preparation.

Pennsylvania.— Kelly v. Com., 1 Grant. 484.

Virginia.— Glover v. Com., 86 Va. 382, 10 S. E. 420, holding that a man was guilty of attempt to rape in taking a girl under the age of consent into a barn, raising her clothes, and getting on top of her.

"An attempt in criminal law," said the Virginia court, "is an apparent unfinished crime, and hence is compounded of two elements, viz: (1) The intent to commit a crime; and (2) a direct act done towards its commission, but falling short of the execution of the ultimate design. It need not, therefore, be the last proximate act to the consummation of the crime in contemplation, but is sufficient if it be an act apparently adopted to produce the result intended. It must be something more than mere preparation." Glover v. Com., 86 Va. 382, 385, 10 S. E. 420, sustaining a conviction of attempt to rape.

An assault is not necessarily involved in an attempt to commit rape (Ross v. State, 16 Wyo. 285, 93 Pac. 299, 94 Pac. 217; and supra, I, B, 1), although essential to the crime of assault with intent to commit rape (see infra, I, B, 2, d, (II)).

31. State v. Montgomery, 63 Mo. 296, 298, where it is said of an attempt to rape: "An attempt is a deliberate crime which is begun, but, through circumstances independent of the will, the action is left unfinished. It is such an intentional, preliminary, guilty act, as will apparently result, in the usual course of natural events, if not hindered by causes outside of the actor's will, in a deliberate crime. . . . If the means are apparently adapted to the end, and there is an apparent physical ability to complete the attempt on the part of the attempter, then the case may be fairly made out."

It is an attempt to commit rape to lay hands on a woman and attempt to drag her away with intent to have intercourse with her against her will. State v. Montgomery, 63 Mo. 296.

32. Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 380; In re Lloyd, 51 Kan. 501, 33 Pac. 307; State v. Harney, 101 Mo. 470, 14 S. W. 657, holding that mere verbal solicitation of a female child under the age of consent to permit sexual intercourse is not an attempt to commit rape. And see infra, I, B, 2, g.

upon the woman;[33] but to constitute an assault it is not essential that there shall be a direct attempt at violence.[34] An assault for this as for other purposes is an attempt with force or violence to do corporal injury to another,[35] and may consist of any act tending to such injury accompanied with circumstances denoting an intent, coupled with a present ability, to use violence against the person, whether there is any battery or not,[36] for there may be an assault with intent to commit rape without any battery.[37] Statutes sometimes punish the assaulting of a female with a deadly weapon or by other means or force likely to produce death or great bodily harm with intent to ravish, and to convict under such a statute the assault must have been so made as to come within the statute.[38]

e. The Intent. The specific intent to commit rape is an essential element both of attempt to rape[39] and of assault with intent to rape.[40] Therefore, to convict of either of these offenses, it must be shown that the accused intended to have intercourse with the female by force and against her will, that, in case

33. Gaskin v. State, 105 Ga. 631, 31 S. E. 740, holding therefore that it was error to charge the jury that if defendant formed the intent and design in his heart to have carnal knowledge of the female alleged to have been assaulted, forcibly and against her will, and in the accomplishment of that evil design and intent, slipped into her room and secreted himself there, awaiting an opportune moment to carry his evil design into execution, and being detected, fled and made his escape, that would make such a case that the necessary element of assault would be in it, and they would be authorized to find defendant guilty of assault with intent to rape. 36. Alabama.— Norris v. State, 87 Ala. 85, 6 So. 371, holding that where defendant put his arms around the prosecutrix and forcibly held and pressed her, making indecent proposals, and only released her on her threats to call assistance, this was sufficient to support a conviction.

Iowa.— State v. Sherman, 106 Iowa 684, 77 N. W. 461, holding that where defendant caused a female under the age of consent to lie on the ground and unbutton her clothing for the purpose and with the intent of having sexual intercourse with her, it was an assault with intent to commit rape.

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Thompson, 116 Mass. 346.

Missouri.— State v. Smith, 80 Mo. 516.

New York.— Hays v. People, 1 Hill 351, holding that where defendant decoyed a female under ten years of age into a building for the purpose of ravishing her, and was there detected while standing within a few feet of her in a state of indecent exposure, he was properly convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape, although there was no evidence of his having actually touched her.

Impossibility to accomplish purpose.—A man may be convicted of assault upon a female child with intent to carnally know and abuse her, although in making the assault he threw her into such a position that it was impossible to accomplish his purpose of ravishing her. Com. v. Shaw, 134 Mass. 221.

of assault, he not only used force, but used it with the intention of having intercourse notwithstanding any resistance on the part of the female,[41] unless she was unconscious, insane, or of such an age that she was incapable of consenting.[42] Such intent, however, may be inferred from the circumstances.[43] If a man lays violent hands on a woman with intent, not to ravish her, but to seduce her, he is guilty of simple assault and battery.[44]

f. Want of Consent, Force, and Resistance in General. There can be neither an attempt to commit rape nor an assault with intent to rape where the female consents,[45] if she is in law capable of consenting.[46] There must be force, or an attempt to use force, actual or constructive, and resistance on the part of the woman, whenever this is necessary under the circumstances to constitute rape.[47]

W. 765, where it is said that on a trial for assault with intent to commit rape, resistance by force on the part of the prosecutrix to the utmost of her efforts to prevent defendant from accomplishing his purpose is a criterion by which consent vel non on her part is to be tested; for, if there is no such resistance to the attempted carnal act used

If the woman resists for a time but finally consents, the man is guilty of assault with intent to commit rape.[48] If she merely consents to familiarities with her person and requests for sexual intercourse an attempt to force her constitutes the crime.[49]

g. Female Under Age of Consent. One who attempts to have intercourse with a female under the age of consent is guilty of an attempt to rape notwithstanding her actual consent.[50] It has also been held in most jurisdictions that there may be an assault with intent to rape upon a consenting female where she is under the age of consent, on the ground that in law she cannot consent to such an assault.[51] Other courts, however, making a distinction between attempts and assaults with intent to rape, hold that an assault implies force and resistance, by her, the presumption obtains that she consented. And see Rahke v. State, 168 Ind. 615, 81 N. E. 584; Collins v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. 455, 107 S. W. 852; Cotton v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. 55, 105 S. W. 185; Woodson v. Com., 107 Va. 895, 59 S. E. 1097. See also supra, I, A, 2, f, (IV).

and therefore there can be no assault with intent to rape on a consenting female, even where she is under the age of consent, although there may be rape or attempt to rape notwithstanding her consent.[52] To constitute an assault with intent to rape on a female under the age of consent, there must of course, as in other cases, be some overt act amounting to assault.[53] Mere solicitation is not sufficient to constitute either an attempt or an assault with intent to rape.[54] It is also necessary that there shall be an intent to have intercourse with the girl, and not merely to take indecent liberties with her person;[55] and the assault and intent must concur as to time.[56] It is no defense that the accused did not know that the female was under the age of consent.[57]

h. Female Insane, Imbecile, Drugged, Intoxicated, or Asleep. An attempt or assault with intent to have intercourse with a woman who is insane, imbecile, drugged, intoxicated, or asleep is an attempt to rape, or an assault with intent to rape, if the consummated act would be rape,[58] as elsewhere explained;[59] but not otherwise.[60]

In Tennessee it was held that a statute (Act (1829), c. 23, § 53 (Code, § 4615)), providing that any person guilty of committing an assault and battery upon any female, with an intent, forcibly and against her will, to have unlawful carnal knowledge of her, should, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than two years or more than ten years, had reference only to cases where, if the intent was carried out, the offense would be rape; and this would not be so if the female was under ten. Woman drugged.— Under the Texas statute to attempt to have intercourse with a woman by administering without her consent any substance producing unnatural sexual desire, or such stupor as prevents or weakens resistance, is an attempt to rape by fraud, and not an assault with intent to rape, which can only be committed by force or attempted force; and it is not competent to indict in such case for assault with intent to rape and convict of attempt to rape by fraud. i. Threats and Fear. An assault with intent to commit rape cannot be made by mere threats, without any force or attempted force amounting to an assault; [61] but an attempt to commit rape may be made by threats.[62]

j. Fraud. An attempt to have intercourse with a woman by fraud, or an assault with such intent, is an attempt or, in most jurisdictions, an assault with intent to rape, provided that the circumstances are such that the intercourse would constitute rape,[63] but not otherwise.[64]

k. Abandonment of Purpose. If the accused had at any time during the assault the actual intent to accomplish his purpose in defiance of any resistance the woman might make he is guilty of assault with intent to commit rape, and the subsequent abandonment of his purpose is no defense.[65] Voluntary abandonment of purpose may be shown and considered, however, as bearing on his intent.[66] with a woman intoxicated to the point of insensibility was not rape under the New York statute, one who administered liquor to a woman, which produced a stupor and insensibility, intending to have intercourse with her in such condition, could not be convicted of assault with intent to rape.

Administering cantharides to excite a woman's sexual desire and thus induce her to consent to intercourse is not an attempt to rape. State v. Lung, 21 Nev. 209, 28 Pac. 235, 37 Am. St. Rep. 505. See also Bechtelheimer v. State, 54 Ind. 128.

Woman asleep.— By the weight of authority it is rape to have sexual intercourse with a woman while she is asleep, since the act is without her consent, and an attempt to have intercourse with a woman asleep is therefore an attempt to rape or assault with intent to rape. Under the Texas statute, however, an attempt to have intercourse with a woman by administering any substance producing unnatural sexual desire or such stupor as prevents or weakens resistance, like cantharides or chloroform, is an attempt to rape by fraud, but not an assault with intent to rape, which can only be committed by force or attempted force. If a physician with intent to procure sexual intercourse with a female patient without her knowing the nature of the act, but thinking he is treating her professionally, takes steps toward securing such intercourse he is guilty of an attempt to rape, or, if an assault is committed, of an assault with intent to commit rape; but if he merely takes indecent liberties with a woman attempting to get her consent he is guilty of simple assault only. present or absent, since all who participate in misdemeanors are principals.[74] If a husband aids another in an attempt to ravish his wife he is guilty of assault with intent to commit rape.[75]

D. Miscellaneous Defenses.[76] On a prosecution for rape it is no defense that the female consented after penetration, or that she has since condoned the offense or settled with the accused,[77] or that she has married him.[78] Nor, in a prosecution for carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent, is it any defense that the accused did not know that she was under such age, or that he had been informed by her or others and believed that she was over such age.[79] Drunkenness of the accused is no defense in an indictment for rape if it was in fact committed;[80] but it may be shown and considered in determining whether he was impotent,[81] or, on a prosecution for attempt or assault with intent to rape, in determining whether he was capable of entertaining the necessary specific intent.[82] ple v. Woodward, 45 Cal. 293, 13 Am. Rep. 176; and supra, note 67.

A woman who acts as procuress and furnishes a room where a man and a girl under the age of consent may indulge in sexual intercourse may no doubt be convicted as principal in the second degree or accessary before the fact if the intercourse takes place; but it has been held that where the girl refuses to submit to intercourse and the man, against her will, takes liberties with her person, the woman cannot be convicted with him of an assault, if she was not present aiding and abetting the assault, and did not know that the man would attempt to gratify his desire upon the person of the girl against her will. State v. Jackson, 65 N. J. L. 105, 46 Atl. 764. The soundness of this decision is at least doubtful in view of the principle that an accessary is liable for any criminal act which, in the ordinary course of things, was the natural or probable consequence of the crime he advised or counseled, although such consequence may not have been intended by him. II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

A. Indictment and Information — 1. NAME AND DESCRIPTION OF DEFENDANT. An indictment or information for rape, or for attempt or assault with intent to rape, is subject to the general rules as to the description of the accused.[83] It need not allege his sex;[84] nor, as a rule, is it necessary to allege his age or physical capacity to commit the crime, as want of age and capacity is a matter of defense.[85] In some states where the age of the male is fixed by the statute making all intercourse with a female under a certain age rape it is held necessary to allege and prove the age of the accused,[86] while in others such allegation is held to be unnecessary.[87] If defendant is called by two names he may be indicted in either.[88]

2. NAME AND DESCRIPTION OF FEMALE[89] — a. In General. According to well settled principles which govern criminal pleadings, the indictment or information must correctly state the christian name and surname of the female raped or assaulted, or show that they are unknown.[90] If the essentials of the offense are charged it is sufficient without repetition of the name of the female in the latter part of the charge.[91] The indictment or information need not allege that the female raped or assaulted was of the human species,[92] that she was a person in being,[93] that she was a female child or woman, if the other words show the sex,[94] that it was unlawful and wrongful, his drunkenness was no defense. State v. Truitt, 5 Pennew. (Del.) 466, 62 Atl. 790.

or that she was a married woman.[95] Nor, as a rule, is it necessary to allege in express terms that the woman was not the wife of the accused.[96] Where, however, the statute expressly makes it part of the offense that the female is not the wife of the accused, it is held in some states that the indictment or information must allege that she was not his wife.[97] Whether it is necessary to negative the relationship of daughter or sister depends upon the statute.[98]

In Texas an indictment for rape on a female over fifteen years of age and not mentally diseased need not allege that she was not the wife of the accused. Belcher v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 121, 44 S. W. 1106; Caidenas v. State, (Cr. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 980. But such allegation is necessary where she was under that age or mentally diseased. See the cases cited supra, this note.

Sufficient allegation.—An indictment alleging that defendant on a certain day had intercourse with H, a female under sixteen years of age, "and not the wife of defendant," unequivocally alleges that the female was not the wife of defendant at the time of the commission of the offense. People v. Miller, (Cal. 1904) 78 Pac. 227.

98. In Nebraska, the criminal code describes three distinct crimes. Section 11 makes it a crime for any person to have carnal knowledge of his daughter or sister forcibly and against her will. Section 12, by the first clause, punishes the act of having forcible carnal knowledge of any woman or female child other than a daughter or sister, and by the second clause punishes sexual intercourse with a female under eighteen years of age without force and with her consent. It is held that in charging the offense under said second clause it is not necessary to allege that the female was not the daughter or sister of the accused, as the crime is committed whether she is or is not. Edwards v. State, 69 Nebr. 386, 95 N. W. 1038; George v. State, 61 Nebr. 669, 85 N. W. 840.

In Ohio it was held that the crime of having "carnal knowledge of his daughter or sister, forcibly and against her will," as defined in section 4 of the act of March 7, 1835, and the crime of having "carnal knowledge of any other woman or female child than his daughter or sister, as aforesaid, forcibly and against her will," as defined in section 5 were distinct crimes, and that in charging the latter crime it was necessary to allege that the female was not the daughter or sister of the accused. Howard v. State, 11 Ohio St. 328. But under the present statute (Rev. St. § 6816) de-

b. Age. An indictment for carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent must show that she was under such age;[99] but when force or want of consent is alleged, it is not necessary to allege or prove that the female was over the age of consent.[1]

3. Description of Offense[2] — a. Rape — (I) In General. An indictment or information for rape is subject of course to all the rules governing indictments and informations generally, which have been fully treated elsewhere.[3] It must allege with certainty every fact and circumstance necessary to constitute the offense charged.[4] An indictment for statutory rape is sufficient if it describes the offense in the language of the statute,[5] provided the statute states all the essential elements, but not otherwise.[6] But failure to follow the language of the statute is not fatal, if equivalent language is used.[7] If a form of indictment is claring guilty of rape any person who "has carnal knowledge of a female person forcibly and against her will; or being eighteen years of age, carnally knows and abuses a female child under fourteen years of age with her consent," such an allegation is held unnecessary, although section 6817 prescribes a higher punishment when the rape is committed upon a daughter or sister than when it is committed upon a woman not so related. given by statute it is sufficient to follow it, if the facts necessary to constitute the offense are thereby charged;[8] otherwise not.[9] Where an indictment for rape follows the usual form and is in substance sufficiently specific to put defendant fairly on trial for the offense charged, it is good.[10] If all essential facts are charged mere technical and grammatical or clerical errors which cannot prejudice defendant will not be fatal, and mere surplusage will be ignored.[11]

(II) ASSAULT. It has been held that in an indictment for rape it is not necessary to allege an assault,[12] but such an allegation is usual and proper, and without it there can be no conviction of assault with intent to rape.[13]

(III) CARNAL KNOWLEDGE OR ABUSE. An indictment for rape, or for carnal knowledge and abuse of a female under the age of consent, must allege carnal knowledge by the use of those words or their equivalent.[14] An indictment charging that defendant had carnal knowledge of the female forcibly and against her will is not bad for failure to specify more fully the particular manner in which such carnal knowledge was had.[15]

(IV) "RAVISH;" FORCE AND WANT OF CONSENT. Although it is now otherwise in some states,[16] it was necessary at common law, and is still necessary in some states, that an indictment for rape use the word "ravish"[17] and the words

"Did rape," instead of "did ravish" was

"forcibly and against her will" or their equivalent,[18] except in the case of threats or fraud[19] and where the female was under the age of consent.[20] An allegation that the act was committed by force and violence and against the will of the female is equivalent to stating that she resisted and that her resistance was overcome by violence.[21] The character of the force used need not be specified.[22]

(v) "Feloniously;" "Unlawfully." At common law it was necessary for an indictment for rape to allege that the act was committed "feloniously," and this is still necessary in some states;[23] but in other states a statute ren-

"Ravish" as implying force.— In Harman v. Com., 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 69, it was held sufficient to charge that defendant "feloniously did ravish and carnally know" the female, instead of alleging that the act was committed "forcibly and against her will," as the word "ravish" implies that the act was against her will. And see to the same effect Gibson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 574; Walling v. State, 7 Tex. App. 625; Williams v. State, 1 Tex. App. 90, 28 Am. Rep. 399. See also Fields v. State, 39 Tex. "Violently," instead of "by force" or "forcibly" was held insufficient in Maine. State v. Blake, 39 Me. 322. But in other states it has been held equivalent and sufficient. State v. Rohn, (Iowa 1909) 119 N. W. 88; State v. Williams, 32 La. Ann. 335, 36 Am. Rep. 272; Com. v. Fogerty, 8 Gray (Mass.) 489, 69 Am. App. 625; State v. Mueller, 85 Wis. 203, 55 N. W. 165. See also State v. Johnson, 67 N. C. 55, holding sufficient an indictment for rape which charged that the assault was violent and felonious, and that the ravishing was felonious and against the will of the female.

"Violently, and by force and threats, and against her will, did ravish and carnally know," etc., was held sufficient. Cornelius v. State, 13 Tex. App. 349.

"Forcibly ravished" was held sufficient under the Alabama statute prescribing such form of allegation, without also alleging that the carnal knowledge of the female was "against her will." Leoni v. State, 44 Ala. 110.

"With force and arms" is not a necessary averment in Massachusetts since enactment of Rev. St. c. 137, § 14. Com. v. Scannel, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 547.

"Against her will" is equivalent to the words "against her will and consent" in a statute, and is sufficient. State v. Gaul, 50 Conn. 578.

"Feloniously" used as to the assault only. — In State v. Casford, 76 Iowa 330, 41 N. W. 32, it was held that where an indictment for rape charged that defendant "feloniously" made an assault upon the prosecutrix, and did then and there ravish and carnally know her, forcibly and against the will of the prosecutrix, the consummation of the offense was sufficiently charged, although the word "feloniously" was not repeated in connection with the charge of ravishing and carnally knowing. In other states, however, there are decisions directly to the contrary.

ders it unnecessary.[24] It need not be alleged that the act was committed "unlawfully."[25]

(VI) FEMALE UNDER AGE OF CONSENT.[26] In an indictment for carnal knowledge and abuse or rape of a female child under the age of consent it is generally sufficient to substantially follow the language of the statute.[27] It is not necessary to allege an assault.[28] So also it is not necessary that the indictment allege that the act was committed forcibly and against her will, or without her consent, and if this is alleged, it is mere surplusage and need not be proved.[29] Nor is it necessary to allege that the act was committed with her consent,[30]

Barnard v. State, 88 Wis. 656, 60 N. W. 1058. The word "feloniously" in an information for such an offense is fairly equivalent to the word "unlawfully." Form prescribed by statute held sufficient see McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 147, 7 So. 35, 16 Am. St. Rep. 25.

An indictment for the statutory offense of carnal abuse of a woman child under the age of sixteen years is not vitiated by adding to the words, "did unlawfully and carnally abuse," the words, "and then and there did unlawfully have carnal knowledge of the body," of the said child; they may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Cannon, 72 N. J. L. 46, 60 Atl. 177.

Female child "under the age of puberty."— Under a statute punishing carnal knowledge of "a female child under the age of puberty," an indictment for carnally knowing "a female child of the age of twelve years and under the age of puberty" was held contradictory and bad, as twelve years is the age of puberty where the common-law rule has not been changed by statute. or to use the word "ravish" or "rape," [31] or to allege that the act was committed unlawfully,[32] or knowingly or wilfully,[33] or feloniously;[34] nor need it follow other purely technical requirements of common-law indictments.[35] It must be alleged that the female was under the age of consent, which is sufficiently done by alleging that she was under the age specified in the statute, without specifically alleging her age, or by alleging her age specifically, without any general averment that such age was under the age of consent.[36] It is also held necessary in some states to allege the age of defendant [37] and the previous chastity of the female,[38] where the statute makes such facts elements of the offense.[39]

(VII) FEMALE IMBECILE.[40] If the indictment alleges that the woman was so imbecile as to be incapable of consenting or resisting it is sufficient without alleging the act to have been against her will, or to have been accomplished by force, and such allegations, if made, may be treated as mere surplusage.[41] It is proper to allege an assault.[42]

(VIII) FEMALE DRUGGED. An indictment charging felonious intercourse with a female while she was insensible or incapable of exercising her will in consequence of a drug having been administered to her is sufficient, and it need not allege that defendant knew she was incapable of consent, or specify the particular kind of drug.[43]

(IX) THREATS AND FEAR.[44] An indictment for rape by threats must allege the use of threats but need not specify them.[45] An allegation that the act was committed by force and against the will of the female is equivalent to stating that she was prevented from resisting by threats of immediate and great bodily harm.[46]

(X) FRAUD.[47] In Texas an indictment which charges rape by fraud by personating the female's husband must allege that the female was a married woman, and not the wife of defendant.[48]

b. Attempts or Assaults With Intent to Rape[49] — (I) IN GENERAL. To maintain a prosecution for attempt or assault with intent to commit rape, the indictment may of course be directly for the attempt or assault, without charging rape.[50] Mere technical or grammatical errors will be disregarded if all essential elements of the offense are alleged.[51]

Assault and battery.—Under Shannon Code Tenn. § 6459, which punishes the commission of an assault and battery with intent to commit rape, an indictment which charges that defendant, with such intent, committed an assault upon a female, and her did "ill-treat," but charges no battery, is insufficient. Wilson v. State, 103 Tenn. 87, 52 S. W. 869.

Alleging assault upon prosecutrix.— An indictment which charges that defendant did unlawfully make an assault with intent to commit rape upon one K, a woman, by then

It is generally enough to allege that defendant "made an assault," without specifying the manner, means, or mode in or by which it was made.[53] An allegation of an "attempt" to rape is not an allegation of an "assault" with intent to rape.[54]

(III) The Intent; Force and Want of Consent. The facts constituting the assault or attempt must be so stated as to show that the crime of rape would have been committed if defendant's purpose had been accomplished.[55] It must be alleged therefore that the attempt was made, or that the assault was with the intent, forcibly and against her will, to ravish and carnally know the female, by the use of these or equivalent words,[56] unless the female is alleged to and there attempting to have carnal knowledge of the said K, is not insufficient in failing to charge an assault upon any particular person. Myers v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 463, 103 S. W. 859.

"Actual violence."— Under a statute providing that every person who should "with actual violence make an assault upon the body of any female with intent to commit a rape" should suffer imprisonment, etc., an information charging that defendant "with force and arms did an assault make on A. W. a single woman, and did her then and there beat, wound and illtreat, with an intent violently and against her will, her feloniously to ravish and carnally know," was held not to be defective in not charging in terms that the assault was made with actual violence. Any language, it was said, charging the accused with the exercise of physical force upon the person assaulted was sufficient. State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 210.

"Malice aforethought."—An indictment for assault with intent to rape need not aver that the assault was committed with malice aforethought, either at common law or under Sandels & H. Dig. Ark. § 1866, providing that whoever shall feloniously "and with malice aforethought" assault any person with intent to commit rape shall be punished, etc. Bevers v. State, 72 Ark. 129, 78 S. Under Wyo. Rev. St. (1899) § 4957, declaring that "whoever having the present ability to do so, unlawfully attempts to commit a violent injury on the person of another, is guilty of an assault," it was held that an assault with intent to commit rape was charged by an information alleging that defendant did "unlawfully and feloniously attempt to commit a violent injury on the person of" a female child under the age of consent, "having then and there the present ability so to do, with intent then and there and thereby unlawfully and feloniously to ravish and carnally know," etc. Ross v. State, 16 Wyo. 285, 93 Pac. 299, 94 Pac. 217.

In Texas, by the terms of Pen. Code, art. 640, the definition of an attempt to rape excludes the question of assault; and where the indictment for that offense charges that it was made by assault and by means of this assault an attempt was made to ravish and have carnal knowledge of the female, it charges an assault with intent, and not an attempt, to commit rape. have been under the age of consent.[57] In charging the intent it is generally sufficient to follow the language of the statute defining the crime;[58] but this is not necessary provided words conveying the same meaning are employed.[59] In charging assault with intent to rape the word "intent" or an equivalent must be used.[60] An indictment for attempt to rape averring that defendant feloniously assaulted the female and attempted to have intercourse with her sufficiently avers an intent to do the act.[61] Where intent to accomplish the purpose by force and against the will of the female is alleged, it is not necessary to allege her age, and if her age is alleged it may be rejected as surplusage.[62]

11 S. W. 521; Hewitt v. State, 15 Tex. App. 80, intent "to rape" insufficient.

Virginia.— Christian v. Com., 23 Gratt. 954.

See 42 Cent. Dig. tit. "Rape," §§ 36, 38, 40, 41.

Under a statute punishing "assault with intent to commit rape," that specific intent must be alleged; and it is not sufficient to charge that defendant made an assault and "then and there did attempt to ravish." State v. Martin, 14 N. C. 329.

Resistance.— Where the statute is so worded, an indictment for assault with intent to rape by force should contain the averment that defendant intended to have intercourse with the female by force or violence sufficient to overcome any resistance she might make. Rector v. Territory, 9 Okla. 530, 60 Pac. 275; Young v. Territory, 8 Okla. 525, 58 Pac. 724. And see Daggs v. Territory, (Ariz. 1908) 94 Pac. 1106.

Allegations held sufficient.— It has been held that an indictment for assault with intent to commit rape need not contain the word "forcibly," if equivalent words are used. State v. Peak, 130 N. C. 711, 41 S. E. 887. A charge that defendant "did feloniously assault and attempt . . . to ravish and carnally know" the female alleged to have been assaulted necessarily implies that the act was done forcibly. Jackson v. State, 114 Ga. 861, 40 S. E. 989. "Violently" instead of "forcibly" has been held sufficient. State v. Daly, 16 Oreg. 240, 18 Pac. 357. Compare supra, II, A, 3, a, (IV).

Naming intended crime.— An indictment averring that defendant in and upon one S, she, the said S, then and there not being his wife, did then and there, by forcibly overcoming her resistance, and against her will and without her consent, attempt to perpetrate an act of sexual intercourse, sufficiently charges attempted rape, although the crime is not, technically speaking, correctly named. People v. Mosier, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 5, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 65.

Person upon whom rape intended.—An information charging that defendant did unlawfully, feloniously, with force and violence, assault a person named and described as a female child under fourteen years of age, with intent to commit rape, and without her consent and against her will, sufficiently shows upon whom the rape was intended to be committed; and the failure specifically to allege an intent to commit rape upon the person named is not ground for setting aside the information. People v. Mesa, 93 Cal. 580, 29 Pac. 116. But see Com. v. Kennedy, 131 Mass. 584.

60. State v. Ross, 25 Mo. 426; State v. Goldston, 103 N. C. 323, 9 S. E. 580.

"Intent" and "attempt."— According to the better opinion "attempt" is not equivalent to "intent"; and therefore an indictment charging that defendant did make an assault upon a female under or over the age of consent, and did unlawfully "attempt" to carnally know her, etc., does not sufficiently charge an assault with intent to rape. State v. Goldston, 103 N. C. 323, 9 S. E. 580. And see Sullivant v. State, 8 Ark. 400; State v. Ross, 25 Mo. 426. But see People v. Horchler, 231 Ill. 566, 83 N. E. 428. In Texas, where, by the terms of Pen. Code, art. 640, the definition of an attempt to rape excludes the question of assault, it was held that where an indictment for that offense charges that it was made by assault and by means of this assault an attempt was made to ravish and have carnal knowledge of the female, it charges an assault with intent, and not an attempt, to commit rape. Taylor v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 153, 69 S. W. 149. The code, in defining this offense, uses the words "intent" and "attempt" interchangeably; in view of which, and of other provisions, it is held that an indictment may sufficiently charge the offense without using the word "intent." Curry v. State, 4 Tex. App. 574. And in Washington an information charging defendant with "an assault with intent to commit rape," made on a certain day, by feloniously "attempting" to carnally know and abuse a female child under the age of consent, was held sufficient. State v. Smith, 19 Wash. 376, 53 Pac. 338.

(iv) "Unlawfully" and "Feloniously." In some states the term "unlawfully" or "feloniously," or both, must be used in charging the intent.[63] In others "feloniously" must be used.[64] In some jurisdictions the assault must also be alleged to have been "feloniously" made,[65] unless it is merely a misdemeanor;[66] but in other jurisdictions this is not necessary.[67]

(v) Female Under Age of Consent.[68] An indictment for assault with intent to commit rape upon a female under the age of consent or attempt to have carnal knowledge of a female under such age need not allege force or want of consent, and if it does the allegation may be rejected as surplusage.[69] If intent to use force is not alleged the indictment must allege that the female was under the age of consent and any other facts necessary to bring the case within the statute.[70] If a statute fixing the age of consent makes it apply only to chaste females such chastity must be alleged.[71] The indictment need not set out the manner or means of the assault,[72] or technically describe the intended crime as rape.[73]

(vi) Threats and Fear. In an indictment charging that an attempt was made by threats to have carnal knowledge of a woman it is not necessary to allege that the threats were directed against her person.[74]

(vii) Fraud. An indictment charging an attempt to rape by personating the woman's husband need not set out the husband's name, or the facts constituting the fraud.[75]

c. Joinder of Parties. Where two or more commit a rape successively, each aiding and abetting the other, or where one commits a rape and another aids and abets or is accessary, they may be joined in the same indictment; and the same is true of attempt or assault with intent to rape.[76]

tionable for duplicity where the facts charged constitute but a single offense, as where the acts alleged constitute component parts of, or represent preliminary stages of, or different ways of committing, a single offense.[87] Thus an indictment is not bad because it charges in a single count an assault and rape or carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent,[88] or attempt to rape and assault and battery,[89] or rape and fornication or bastardy,[90] or rape and that the woman was gotten with child,[91] or forcible defilement and rape.[92] Nor is an indictment duplicitous because it charges both forcible ravishment and carnal knowledge of a child under the age of consent,[93] or forcible ravishment and that the female was imbecile and incapable of consenting;[94] or because it charges an assault with intent to commit rape and closes with a charge of attempt,[95] or also charges a battery.[96]

Age and identity of defendant.— On the trial of an indictment for statutory rape of a female under sixteen years of age, by a male sixteen years of age or upwards, where the commonwealth rests without offering any evidence of the age of the prisoner or as to his identity as the person indicted, and without offering his appearance in evidence, it is reversible error for the court to submit the age of the prisoner to the jury on his appearance, without more. objection may be and is cured by statute,[99] any variance between the averments of the indictment and the proof in a matter which is legally essential to the charge is fatal and entitles defendant to an acquittal;[1] but a variance as to an allegation which may be rejected as mere surplusage is immaterial.[2] Under an indictment charging a particular offense a conviction cannot be had upon proof of another and distinct offense.[3] If the indictment charges rape, or attempt or assault with intent to rape, by force and against the will of the female, not alleging that she was under the age of consent, there can be no conviction on proof that the female was under the age of consent unless there is also proof of force and want of consent, where the statute makes rape by force and carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent distinct offenses;[4] but it has been held otherwise where the statute does not make them distinct offenses.[5] Where an indictment charges rape by force, or assault with intent to rape by force, upon a female under the age of consent, and the evidence shows that no force was used, the allegation of force may be rejected as surplusage and there is no material variance.[6] Where an indictment for rape charges it to have been committed by force, evidence of threats is admissible.[7]

(II) NAME OF FEMALE. A variance between the indictment and proof as to the name of the female is fatal unless the defect is cured by statute;[8] but there is no variance where the names are idem sonans, or, as is generally held, where they are taken as the same in common use.[9]

Woman intoxicated or drugged.— Under an information for rape, which alleged that the defendant committed the offense "by force and violence," and against the will of the prosecutrix, and did "feloniously ravish" her, evidence is admissible that the offense was committed by means of an intoxicating or narcotic substance given her by defendant. (III) TIME. Time is not a material and essential element in rape or assault with intent to commit rape, and proof of the offense on any day within the period of limitation is sufficient.[10]

5. CONVICTION OF OFFENSES INCLUDED IN CHARGE. Indictments for rape are within the rule that when an indictment charges an offense which includes another less offense, defendant may be acquitted of the higher offense and acquitted of the less.[11] Thus on an indictment for rape there may, where there are proper allegations, be a conviction of attempt, simple assault, felonious assault, assault with intent to rape, assault and battery, carnal knowledge of a child or imbecile female, adultery, incest, fornication, or bastardy, etc.[12] And on an indictment for assault with intent to rape there may be a conviction of simple assault or, where a battery is alleged, of assault and battery.[13] On an indictment charging an assault on a female under the age of consent and carnal knowledge and abuse of her, there may be a conviction of indecent assault.[14]

B. Evidence — 1. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF — a. In General. A prosecution for rape, or for attempt or assault with intent to rape, is subject of course to the general rule that in a criminal prosecution every man is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and the burden is on the state to prove every fact and circumstance which is essential to the guilt of the accused.[15] At the same time the exceptions and apparent exceptions to this rule also apply.[16] In such prosecutions the burden is on the state to prove force and want of consent,[17] unless the female was under the age of consent,[18] and to prove the intent to use force and commit rape or circumstances from which it may be presumed.[19]

Where, however, on an indictment under Minn. Pen. Code, § 236, for carnally knowing and abusing a female child under the age of ten years, the state proved the commission of the offense on the day laid in the indictment, but it was shown that the child was ten years old on that day, it was held that the state could not then abandon the prosecution as to that offense and proceed to introduce evidence of a similar offense committed on a previous day, although, under Gen. St. (1878) c. 108, § 7, it might in the first instance have shown its commission on a day other than that laid in the indictment. State v. Masteller, 45 Minn. 128, 47 N. W. 541.

force and want of consent is conclusively presumed;[20] but the burden is on the state to prove that she was under that age.[21] It has been held that where the chastity or good repute of the female is material, it need not be shown by the state, but defendant must show her unchastity or bad repute;[22] but in another state it has been held that the state must prove that the accused was over eighteen and the female under that age, and, if she was over fifteen, her previous chastity, these elements being necessary under the statute.[23]

c. Capacity of Accused. In some states it is conclusively presumed that the accused, if under fourteen years of age, was incapable of committing rape, while in others the presumption may be rebutted, the burden of proof being on the state.[24] The accused has the burden of proof as to his age when he sets up that he was under fourteen years of age.[25] It has been held, however, that where defendant introduces evidence of impotency the burden is on the state to prove potency.[26]

2. Admissibility of Evidence — a. In General. Of course the general principles as to the admissibility of evidence apply to prosecutions for rape or for attempt or assault with intent to rape.[27] The state may introduce any competent evidence tending to corroborate the testimony of the prosecutrix or others as to the commission of the act by the accused, and the accused may introduce any competent evidence in rebuttal.[28] The testimony of the prosecutrix as to the Tracks and signs of struggle.— Evidence of tracks and of signs of a struggle at the place of the alleged offense, or of the absence of such signs, is admissible, if the locality is sufficiently identified (Roberts v. State, 122 Ala. 47, 25 So. 238, identification of locality held sufficient to admit evidence; Barnes v. State, 88 Ala. 204, 7 So. 38, 16 Am. facts and circumstances of the transaction may be considered.[29] Defendant may introduce any competent evidence, direct or circumstantial, to show that the charge against him was concocted by the prosecutrix or others.[30] Facts or circumstances which tend to show the motive or bias of any witness who has testified, or the motive of the prosecutrix in making the charge, or to affect her credibility, are admissible;[31] but such evidence is generally confined to bias or motive of one

Noises indicating distress.— In a prosecution for rape, it was held error to permit witnesses who had lived near defendant's home to testify that they had heard noises indicating distress at or near the house, when they could not testify as to who made the noises, or what they were about. Baker v. State, 82 Miss. 84, 33 So. 716.

Motive of prosecutrix in examining house.— In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, defendant's question of prosecutrix as to her motive in examining the house to see if he had stolen anything was properly excluded. State v. Neal, 178 Mo. 63, 76 S. W. 958.

Proof that offense could not have been committed on day alleged.— Where, in a prosecution for using a female child for the purpose of sexual intercourse, the indictment alleged that the offense was committed on a certain day in June, and the evidence showed that it was committed "early in June," evidence that the offense could not have been committed on the day alleged was not admissible, inasmuch as the state was not required to establish that the offense was committed on such day. 30. Curby v. Territory, 4 Ariz. 371, 42 Pac. 953; People v. Knight, (Cal. 1895) 43 Pac. 6; and other cases cited in the note following.

Previous charges by prosecutrix.— On trial for rape by the accused upon his own daughter, who is the only witness for the people, defendant may show, by the evidence of other witnesses, that the daughter has made similar charges falsely against other men, even though the daughter has denied, on cross-examination, that she made such charges; the question, under the circumstances, not being collateral to the main issue. People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473. But on the trial of a prosecution for taking and using a female child for the purpose of prostitution, it was held that whether the prosecutrix had previously charged defendant with assault and battery was immaterial. State v. Barrett, 5 Pennew. (Del.) 147, 59 Atl. 45.

Desire or offer to settle matter or discontinue prosecution.— It has been held that in a prosecution for rape evidence that the prosecutrix had desired, from the beginning, to settle the matter is admissible (Huff v. State, 106 Ga. 432, 32 S. E. 348); and that it is error to exclude evidence that the mother of the girl alleged to have been violated, who is a witness on the trial, agreed to drop the prosecution for a money consideration (McMath v. State, 55 Ga. 303). But in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape it was held not error to reject testimony tending to show that the prosecuting witness and her father had offered to discontinue the case for one hundred dollars, in the absence of any evidence showing an attempt at extortion. State v. McDevitt, 69 Iowa 549, 29 N. W. 459. And a letter of the mother of the prosecutrix to defendant, offering to hush up the matter for a consideration, was held res inter alios and not admissible on his trial. State v. Knock, 142 Mo. 515, 44 S. W. 235.

Opposition of father of prosecutrix to prosecution.— On a prosecution for rape, evidence, on cross-examination of the prosecutrix, that her father was opposed to the prosecution was held inadmissible. Welborn v. State, 116 Ga. 522, 42 S. E. 773.

Institution of civil actions.— Evidence that civil suits for damages had been brought against defendant, charged with rape by the prosecutrix and her mother, is inadmissible in the absence of anything to show that they had ever stated or insinuated that defendant was innocent, or that they were desirous of extorting blackmail. Reg. v. Riendeau, 9 Quebec Q. B. 147 [affirmed in 10 Quebec Q. B. 584].

31. Alabama.— Shepherd v. State, 135 Ala. 9, 33 So. 266.

Arizona.— Curby v. Territory, 4 Ariz. 371, 42 Pac. 953, holding that on a trial for rape alleged to have been committed by a father upon his daughter it is competent to show that complainant's motive in charging defendant was to shield a lover, whose attentions were paid to her against the father's will.

California.— People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 Pac. 307 (holding that the prosecutrix might be cross-examined, for the purpose of laying a foundation for impeachment, as to whether she had not stated that another brother, a sister, and herself were putting up jobs on their father, defendant, meaning to get him into prison so that she could live with her sister, where the theory of the defense was that the charge was a made-up story of the prosecutrix for the purpose of getting away from her father's control); People v. Knight, (1895) 43 Pac. 6 (holding that where defendant claimed that the charge was concocted by his wife, it was error to exclude circumstantial evidence to support that claim); People v. Fong Chung, 5 Cal. App. 587, 91 Pac. 105 (holding that on a prosecution for raping a child under age it was error to exclude evidence that no one who has testified as a witness.[32] The jury may consider the mental capacity of the prosecutrix, her age, and her demeanor, as exhibited during the trial.[33] The prosecutrix need not be first examined before introduction of corroborative evidence.[34]

b. Personal Relations and Situation of Parties. Evidence is admissible to show the relationship, if any, between defendant and the prosecutrix, as that he was her father, stepfather, brother, etc., even though such evidence may show the crime of incest.[35] It is also competent for the state or defendant to introduce was permitted to see the prosecutrix except the authorities after she was placed in jail).

Georgia.— Huff v. State, 106 Ga. 432, 32 S. E. 348; McMath v. State, 55 Ga. 303.

Illinois.— Shirwin v. People, 69 Ill. 55, holding that upon the proper foundation being laid, evidence that the prosecutrix had declared that the accused was not guilty, and that the prosecution was carried on to extort money from him or his friends was material and properly admissible in defense.

Michigan.— People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473; Rogers v. People, 34 Mich. 345, holding that where a rape case depended almost wholly on the evidence of the female, and the proof was not very decided on the fact of assent, it was error not to permit defendant to ask her on cross-examination whether she voluntarily made statements of the matter soon after it occurred, and whether she prosecuted defendant voluntarily or at the instigation of others.

Ohio.— McFarland v. State, 24 Ohio St. 329, holding that the exclusion of testimony showing that, between the time of the alleged offense and the time of the complaint, the prosecutrix had been informed that the alleged act of sexual intercourse had been witnessed by other persons was error.

Oregon.— State v. Birchard, 35 Oreg. 484, 59 Pac. 468.

Wisconsin.— Hardtke v. State, 67 Wis. 552, 30 N. W. 723, holding that it was error to exclude questions asked the prosecutrix as to whether the wife of defendant had not promised to give her presents if she would swear against him, and had told her to walk lame, and taught her to assume lameness, as such evidence was competent to show that defendant's wife was influencing the prosecutrix to testify strongly against him and would affect her credibility. It was also held in this case that where it appeared that the wife of defendant had advised the prosecution, and told the prosecutrix to swear against defendant, questions asked a witness as to whether defendant's wife ever told him anything about arresting defendant, and whether she told witness that she was going to get rid of defendant, were competent as showing the defendant's wife's motives for advising the prosecutrix; and also that it was error to strike out testimony of a witness tending to show the motive of defendant's wife in attempting to influence the prosecutrix to testify to certain facts against defendant.

Canada.— Rex v. Finnessey, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 347, 11 Ont. L. Rep. 338, 7 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 383.

See 42 Cent. Dig. tit. "Rape," §§ 48, 50.

But see State v. Symens, 138 Iowa 113, 115 N. W. 878, holding that on a trial of accused for the rape of his sister-in-law, a question asked the wife of accused testifying as a witness as to whether or not her mother had at any time made any threats against accused was improper, in the absence of a proper foundation for the introduction of such testimony.

Seduction of a woman by witness.— Evidence that one of the witnesses for the prosecution had seduced a woman, which is in no way connected with the case on trial, is inadmissible. State v. Durr, 39 La. Ann. 751, 2 So. 546.

32. State v. Barrett, 5 Pennew. (Del.) 147, 59 Atl. 45 (holding that evidence as to whether the father of the prosecutrix caused her to make the complaint against defendant was inadmissible); State v. Birchard, 35 Oreg. 484, 59 Pac. 468 (holding that refusal to permit defendant, on prosecution for rape of his daughter, to testify concerning the relations existing between him and the members of his family who had not testified against him, was not error, where it did not appear that prosecutrix was a person of feeble intellect, and that she was dominated by some person hostile to him; evidence to show bias being limited to witnesses giving evidence adverse to the party); Callison v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 211, 39 S. W. 300 (holding that on trial of a man for attempt to rape his daughter, evidence that another daughter confessed to her husband that she had had intercourse with defendant before her marriage, offered to show a conspiracy instigated by her husband to cause defendant's conviction in order to save her reputation, was irrelevant, the husband not being a witness).

Conduct of husband of prosecuting witness.— In a prosecution for rape, after evidence was introduced that the husband of the prosecuting witness wrote defendant, who was the father of the witness, demanding a conveyance of all his property, and that he leave the country, evidence by the state that when he signed the letter he was very much agitated and excited is inadmissible, as defendant had a right to draw any inference he could from the letter. Smith v. State, 5 Tex. Cr. 137, 100 S. W. 924.

33. State v. Philpot, 97 Iowa 365, 66 N. W. 730.

evidence of the relations existing between defendant and prosecutrix and their situation, in so far as such evidence has any bearing on the guilt or innocence of defendant.[36] But immaterial evidence along this line is inadmissible.[37]

California.— People v. Mayes, 66 Cal. 597, 6 Pac. 691, 56 Am. Rep. 126.

Michigan.— Strang v. People, 24 Mich. 1.

Texas.— Smith v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 137, 100 S. W. 924; Barra v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 359, 97 S. W. 94.

36. Alabama.— Oakley v. State, 135 Ala. 15, 33 So. 23 (holding that evidence that defendant and prosecutrix lived together as members of the same family was relevant and material); Shepherd v. State, 135 Ala. 9, 33 So. 266 (holding that on a prosecution for rape on the twelve-year-old stepdaughter of accused, who lived with him, it was proper to admit evidence as to the death of the girl's mother, to show the situation of the parties).

California.— People v. Mayes, 66 Cal. 597, 6 Pac. 691, 56 Am. Rep. 126, holding that where defendant was a brother-in-law of the prosecutrix, the jury might consider the relations between them, as tending in some degree to show that the prosecutrix had a right to trust herself to defendant without fear of molestation or harm from him.

Iowa.— State v. Waters, 132 Iowa 481, 109 N. W. 1013 (holding that on a prosecution for statutory rape, defendant having been twenty-seven years of age and prosecutrix a little over fourteen, evidence that he paid special attention to her, stopped to converse with her while passing through her room late at night, and that they were once found about eleven o'clock at night sitting close together on a banister was competent as corroborative evidence); State v. Forsythe, 99 Iowa 1, 68 N. W. 446 (holding admissible evidence of subsequent intimacy between defendant and the prosecutrix, a girl under the age of consent). And see State v. Norris, 127 Iowa 683, 104 N. W. 282, evidence of the relations existing between defendant and prosecutrix, his daughter, extending over several years.

Michigan.— People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524, 108 N. W. 1009 (holding that the prosecutrix testified that her husband had left her a few months prior to the alleged offense, it was not error to permit her to testify that she supported herself after her husband went away by keeping boarders and working out); People v. Elco, 131 Mich. 519, 91 N. W. 755, 94 N. W. 1069 (subsequent intimacy); People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630, 54 N. W. 488; Hall v. People, 47 Mich. 636, 11 N. W. 414 (holding that defendant has a right to show that his previous relations with the prosecutrix were of a friendly character, even though the testimony has no tendency to show that they were improper or that her general character or reputation was bad; and therefore the court erred in excluding evidence that prosecutrix had casually invited defendant to her house); Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262, 3 N. W. 854.

Missouri.— State v. Shouse, 188 Mo. 473, 87 S. W. 480, holding that where prosecutrix testified that she left defendant's home and never had any communication with him after the morning of March 30, 1904, it was error to refuse to permit a witness to testify that the prosecutrix was playing April fool with defendant three days afterward.

Texas.— Denton v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 193, 79 S. W. 560 (holding that it was competent for the state to attempt to prove by prosecutrix that she felt friendly toward accused, and did not wish to have him indicted); Simpson v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 320, 77 S. W. 819 (holding that on a prosecution for rape of a female under the age of consent, it was proper to prove that defendant had promised to marry prosecutrix, and had assured her that he was not a married man, as showing the purpose and intent of defendant, and giving a reason for consent on the part of prosecutrix). In a prosecution for rape, evidence that defendant was a married man and uncle of prosecutrix by marriage; that he took prosecutrix buggy riding several times, returning usually late; that one night he returned before sundown; that prosecutrix, as defendant at one time was trying to hug and kiss her, saw a certain person who was a witness for the state; and that a few days thereafter defendant and prosecutrix were again riding together — were admissible as showing intimacy, continued association, and undue familiarity between the parties. Battles v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 202, 109 S. W. 195. On a trial for assault with intent to rape, the testimony of prosecutrix that on accused coming to her house after the commission of the offense, and inviting her to a party, she asked him to leave, was admissible. Warren v. State, (Cr. App. 1908) 114 S. W. 380.

Vermont.— State v. Hollenbeck, 67 Vt. 34, 30 Atl. 696, holding that it was proper to ask prosecutrix whether before and after the alleged offense her relations with defendant were not cordial.

Wisconsin.— Bannen v. State, 115 Wis. 317, 91 N. W. 107, 965.

37. Arkansas.— Hust v. State, 77 Ark. 146, 91 S. W. 8, holding that on a prosecution for statutory rape on defendant's stepdaughter, testimony of a witness that he had visited defendant's house and saw nothing incriminating was immaterial.

Kentucky.— Clymer v. Com., 64 S. W. 409, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1041, holding that evidence that the mother of the prosecuting witness had, about two weeks before the time of the alleged offense, invited defendant to come to her house, was immaterial.

New York.— Haulish v. Boller, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 559, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 992, 11 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 18, holding that testimony that

c. Declarations, Admissions, and Conduct of Accused.[38] The state may introduce evidence of prior or subsequent declarations, admissions, or conduct of the accused constituting part of the res gestæ or tending to show that he committed the crime charged.[39] But such evidence is not admissible if the declarations defendant was living apart from his wife was not admissible.

North Carolina.—State v. Parish, 104 N. C. 679, 10 S. E. 457, holding that on prosecution of a father for rape of his daughter evidence that defendant and his wife lived together amicably and peaceably after the offense was not admissible, having no tendency to prove defendant's guilt or innocence of the crime charged.

Texas.— Smith v. State, (Cr. App. 1903) 74 S. W. 556 (holding that on a prosecution for rape, it was not permissible to show that defendant was married); Smith v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 137, 68 S. W. 995, 100 Am. St. Rep. 849 (holding that it was not competent to show that defendant was a married man with two children).

39. Alabama.— Oakley v. State, 135 Ala. 15, 33 So. 23 (holding that the state may prove as a part of the res gestæ that when the girl alleged to have been ravished was being assaulted she cried and called to her mother, and that the latter went to her and was struck by defendant; but that further evidence that the mother was badly hurt and disabled by the blow was irrelevant and inadmissible); Barnes v. State, 88 Ala. 204, 7 So. 38, 16 Am. St. Rep. 48 (holding that statements made by defendant several months before the offense was committed, tending to show his carnal passion for prosecutrix, and his belief that she would not yield to his desire, were admissible).

California.— People v. Scalamiero, 143 Cal. 343, 76 Pac. 1098 (conflicting statements after offense); People v. Roach, 129 Cal. 33, 61 Pac. 574 (declaration of defendant made shortly after assault, tending to show his intent); People v. Mayes, 66 Cal. 597, 6 Pac. 691, 56 Am. Rep. 126 (holding that the absence of defendant, and the fact that search was made for him and that he had fled from his home, were admissible as tending to show guilt); People v. Davis, 6 Cal. App. 229, 91 Pac. 810 (holding that it was not error to permit prosecutrix to state defendant's declarations to her at the time with reference to his conduct with other girls whom he knew); People v. Ah Lung, 2 Cal. App. 278, 83 Pac. 296.

Connecticut.— State v. Sebastian, 81 Conn. 1, 69 Atl. 1054, procurement of abortion.

Georgia.— McMath v. State, 55 Ga. 303, holding that it was competent to show that defendant offered the mother of the girl alleged to have been violated money to stop the prosecution.

Iowa.— State v. Norris, 127 Iowa 683, 104 N. W. 282 (holding that evidence of opportunity, if made by defendant's deliberate act, in connection with evidence that he was doing the things which usually lead to sexual intercourse, such as improperly handling the person of the prosecutrix, and the like, is admissible as tending to connect defendant with the crime); State v. Peterson, 110 Iowa 647, 82 N. W. 329.

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Bean, 137 Mass. 570, holding that on trial for assault with intent to rape, evidence that defendant, a month before the assault, invited the girl to walk in certain woods, and five weeks after the assault followed her at night, was admissible in the judge's discretion.

Mississippi.— Dickey v. State, 82 Miss. 525, 38 So. 776 (flight of defendant); Hogan v. State, 46 Miss. 274.

Missouri.— State v. Pollard, 174 Mo. 607, 74 S. W. 969 (holding that testimony of a witness that after she went from prosecutrix's room to where defendant was he offered her money and she accepted it not to tell his wife what had occurred was competent); State v. Harris, 150 Mo. 56, 51 S. W. 481 (holding that testimony of a conversation with defendant several days before the rape, in which he distinctly avowed his intention to commit it, was admissible).

Nebraska.— Leedom v. State, 81 Nebr. 585, 116 N. W. 496; Woodruff v. State, 72 Nebr. 815, 101 N. W. 1114 (holding admissible evidence of subsequent acts of intercourse and of an attempt to have an abortion committed upon prosecutrix); Reinoehl v. State, 62 Nebr. 619, 87 N. W. 355 (holding that on a prosecution for carnally knowing a female child, evidence of statements by accused to her, some months prior to the alleged crime, tending to show that he was desirous of being alone with her and at such times spoke to her of indecent things, calculated to familiarize her with and to obtain her acquiescence in the acts of which he was accused, was admissible as showing the accused's intention toward her).

New York.— Conkey v. People, 1 Abb. Dec. 418, 5 Park. Cr. 31 (holding that evidence of violent conduct of defendant in the presence of the prosecutrix and immediately after the alleged rape was admissible); People v. Flaherty, 27 N. Y. App. Div. 535, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 574 [reversed on other grounds in 162 N. Y. 532, 57 N. E. 73] (holding that on a prosecution for sexual intercourse with a female under the age of consent it was competent to show that defendant altered a parish register so as to make it appear that the girl was over such age, and that, after she became pregnant, he attempted to obtain custody of her by means of a forged letter).

Texas.— Smith v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. 344, 106 S. W. 1161 (holding that it was proper to permit the state to prove what defendant said to the prosecutrix after the completion of the offense as to the means that she should take to prevent conception); or conduct are too remote in point of time, or if they are of such a character that they have no tendency to prove the crime charged.[40] Defendant cannot intro-

Ricks v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 229, 87 S. W. 345 (subsequent declaration of accused); Lee v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 354, 72 S. W. 1005, 61 L. R. A. 904 (holding that, on a prosecution for rape by means of a sham marriage, evidence that nine months later defendant married another woman was admissible as showing that he had no purpose or motive at the time of the alleged rape to consummate the marriage); Massey v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 371, 20 S. W. 758 (holding that evidence that defendant, on the day before the offense was committed, used obscene language, indicating a determination to have intercourse with girls that night, if he had to kill the girls, was competent, although the intended victim was not named). And see Holloway v. State, (Cr. App. 1908) 113 S. W. 928.

Utah.— State v. Neel, 23 Utah 541, 65 Pac. 494, admissions of defendant as to the paternity of a child of the prosecutrix.

Washington.— State v. Winnett, 48 Wash. 93, 92 Pac. 904, holding that a statement made by defendant to a witness before the alleged crime was admissible, where it showed his intention to commit the crime.

Letters written by accused.— On a prosecution for rape letters written by defendant after being placed in jail, to the person assaulted and her mother, in which he refers to the commission of the offense by him, are admissible in evidence. Oakley v. State, 135 Ala. 15, 33 So. 23. On a prosecution for illicit intercourse with a female under the age of consent, letters written by defendant to prosecutrix at a time when he was keeping her in a hospital, awaiting her confinement, in which he spoke of her pregnancy and acknowledged himself the author of her condition, although not referring specifically to the act of intercourse on or about the day charged, were properly admitted as tending to corroborate her testimony of such act. Leedom v. State, 81 Nebr. 585, 116 N. W. 496. See also Dickey v. State, 86 Miss. 525, 38 So. 776 (letter from defendant to physician offering money if he would swear to facts stated); Warren v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1908) 114 S. W. 380 (letter showing engagement to marry).

Evidence of previous solicitations by defendant is admissible to show the existence of a motive or passion. State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 148. And see State v. Campbell, 210 Mo. 202, 109 S. W. 706.

Ill-treatment by defendant of prosecutrix and other members of family.— In People v. Taylor, 36 Cal. 255, it was held that on a prosecution for rape upon a girl living with defendant's family, evidence that he had at various times beaten and harshly treated her was irrelevant and inadmissible. And in Smith v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 137, 100 S. W. 924, it was held that on a prosecution for rape of a female under the age of consent, the daughter of defendant, it was prejudicial error to admit evidence that defendant was always quarreling with and slapping the prosecutrix. But in People v. Lenou, 79 Cal. 625, 631, 21 Pac. 967, it was held that where a stepfather was accused of rape upon his stepdaughter between ten and eleven years of age, who testified that defendant was in the habit of cruelly beating her, and thus keeping her in constant fear and terror, under which she submitted to him, the testimony of a neighbor that she heard the stepfather whipping and beating the prosecutrix was admissible in corroboration of her statement as to cruel treatment and fear; and that the fact that the beating testified to by the neighbor occurred a year before the alleged rape went only to the weight and not to the admissibility of the testimony. And in People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27, 63 N. W. 986, it was held that in the prosecution of a father for rape upon his seventeen-year-old daughter, evidence that he had beaten her before, and that he was abusive to his wife and other children, and of the language used on such occasions, was admissible as tending to show that the prosecutrix yielded through fear. See also Sharp v. State, 15 Tex. App. 171. Compare Baker v. State, 82 Miss. 84, 33 So. 716.

40. California.— People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, 62 Pac. 297, holding that on a trial for rape, the admission of evidence that three or four days after the alleged crime, at a meeting between defendant, prosecutrix, and her brother and uncle, a pistol was taken from defendant, and the introduction of the pistol as an exhibit, was improper.

Illinois.— Dalton v. People, 224 Ill. 333, 79 N. E. 669.

Kentucky.— Darrell v. Com., 82 S. W. 289, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 541, holding that where defendant admitted the intercourse, and the only question was that of consent, evidence that he tried to procure an abortion was not admissible.

Mississippi.— Baker v. State, 82 Miss. 84, 33 So. 716, holding that on a prosecution for rape committed by defendant on his stepdaughter, it was error to permit testimony showing defendant's ill-treatment of members of his household, who knew nothing of the alleged crime, it not tending to explain the delay in prosecution; and also that it was error to permit a witness, not called by the defense, to testify that defendant had told her that she would have to swear to some lies to help him out.

Missouri.— State v. Campbell, 210 Mo. 202, 109 S. W. 706 (holding that on a prosecution for rape, evidence that on a prior occasion, when prosecutrix went with defendant to haul water, he asked her why it was she was becoming lonesome, and if it was because she could not be with him, to which she replied in the negative, was inadmissible, as it was neither an improper act nor solicitduce evidence of his own self-serving acts or declarations not constituting part of the res gestæ.[41] Evidence on behalf of defendant that he took the girl to a physician for examination as soon as he learned that he was charged with raping her, and that the physician refused to make an examination, is inadmissible.[42]

d. Declarations and Conduct of Third Persons. As a general rule, evidence of declarations or conduct of third persons, not in the presence or hearing of defendant, is not admissible either for or against him,[43] unless they were so connected with the offense as to constitute a part of the res gestæ,[44] or unless the ation of sexual intercourse); State v. Shouse, 188 Mo. 473, 87 S. W. 480 (holding that on a prosecution for rape alleged to have been committed by defendant on his stepdaughter, a divorce petition filed against defendant by his wife on other grounds in a suit then undetermined was irrelevant).

New York.— People v. Page, 162 N. Y. 272, 56 N. E. 750, 14 N. Y. Cr. 513 [reversing 20 N. Y. App. Div. 637, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 1145], holding that it was error to submit to the jury evidence that defendant had admitted he "insulted the girl," as corroborative of prosecutrix's testimony, since there was no necessary legal connection between an insult and a felony.

Ohio.— State v. Lawrence, 74 Ohio St. 38, 77 N. E. 266, holding inadmissible evidence of defendant's admission of other acts of intercourse with the prosecutrix more than two years after the offense charged, and after she had reached the age of consent.

Texas.— Shults v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 351, 91 S. W. 786 (holding that on a prosecution for rape, evidence that in the winter or spring preceding the birth of prosecutrix's baby the accused proposed to furnish witness a woman with whom he could have intercourse, but refused to divulge her name unless the witness would have intercourse with her, was inadmissible); Lee v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 354, 72 S. W. 1005, 61 L. R. A. 954 (holding that on a prosecution for rape alleged to have been committed by means of a sham marriage, it was not competent to show that when defendant was married, nine months later, he obtained his wife by abduction); Smith v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 137, 68 S. W. 995, 100 Am. St. Rep. 849, (Cr. App. 1903) 73 S. W. 401 (holding that it was error to admit a conversation relative to marriage, had between prosecutrix and defendant subsequent to the commission of the alleged crime); Owens v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 391, 46 S. W. 240 (holding that on a prosecution for a rape committed by defendant on his daughter, it was error to permit a witness to testify that defendant had told him that he did not care if witness had intercourse with her); Tomlin v. State, 25 Tex. App. 676, 8 S. W. 931 (holding that it was prejudicial error to admit evidence that defendant had said five years before that he had a drug that would cause any woman who took it to yield to his desire).

Failure to deny charge.— The mere failure of defendant to deny the declaration of the prosecutrix, made out of court, charging him with the crime, when repeated to him, cannot be shown as an admission corroborative of the testimony of the prosecutrix. People v. Page, 162 N. Y. 272, 56 N. E. 750, 14 N. Y. Cr. 513 [reversing 20 N. Y. App. Div. 637, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 1145].

W. 775 (holding that where defendant did not propose to show any improper conduct between prosecutrix and another young man, it was proper for the court to refuse to permit defendant to ask prosecutrix concerning such young man, who was alleged to have come to her father's house over her parents' objection); People v. Duncan, 104 Mich. 460, 62 N. W. 791 (holding that on a prosecution for rape, evidence that prosecutrix's mother was an opium fiend was inadmissible, in the absence of anything to show the connection of such fact with the case; and also that testimony that a companion of defendant had previously been convicted of seduction was inadmissible); Henard v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 168, 82 S. W. 655 (holding that on a trial for statutory rape, evidence to support a theory that a person other than defendant was guilty was properly excluded as immaterial where there was nothing in the case to pertinently connect such third person with the offense); Wells v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 451, 67 S. W. 1020 (holding that evidence that the husband of the prosecutrix assaulted defendant shortly after the alleged outrage was not admissible as tending to show that the husband believed that he had found the man who committed the offense); Collison v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 211, 39 S. W. 300 (holding that it was irrelevant that a sister of prosecutrix, who testified for the state, had said that she (declarant) had had intercourse with no one but a person other than her father, her testimony not being in conflict therewith); Hardtke v. State, 67 Wis. 552, 30 N. third person was a participant with defendant in the commission of the offense, and the conduct or declaration was sufficiently connected therewith,[45] or unless the evidence is introduced to affect credibility as a witness,[46] or is admissible to contradict the prosecutrix or corroborate defendant's testimony.[47]

e. Force, Resistance, and Consent in General. The use of force by defendant and resistance and want of consent on the part of the woman may be shown by the testimony of witnesses present at the time, or by statements of the prosecutrix made in the presence of defendant.[48] Force and resistance may be shown by direct testimony or circumstantial evidence and all the circumstances attending the commission of the act are admissible;[49] and consent of the woman may be shown by her prior, contemporaneous, or subsequent manner and conduct.[50] The reason why prosecutrix came to the place of the alleged offense may be shown for the purpose of rebutting any presumption of consent;[51] and on the other hand defendant may, on cross-examination, ask her for what purpose she went there.[52] The prosecutrix may be asked by the state, or by defendant on cross-examina-

339. Where the prosecution claims that defendant and his accomplice started to take prosecutrix and another girl, E, home from a dance, and that E jumped from the buggy and escaped, defendants afterward ravishing prosecutrix, there was no error in allowing E to testify that after jumping from the buggy she was at police headquarters awhile, where nothing was said as to what happened there. People v. Flynn, 96 Mich. 276, 55 N. W. 834.

45. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 435. In a prosecution for rape, where it was shown that defendant and another man had been together, talking to each other, before defendant went to the room of prosecutrix, evidence of the actions of the other man and the woman that he was with at that time was admissible. Simpson v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 320, 77 S. W. 819. See also People v. Ah Lung, 2 Cal. App. 278, 83 Pac. 296; State v. Duffy, 124 Mo. 1, 27 S. W. 358.

46. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 433. On the trial of one indicted for assault with intent to rape, when the father of the alleged victim, as a witness for the state, had testified to facts tending to show that he had discovered and intercepted defendant while making such assault on his daughter, it was error to reject testimony, offered by defendant, showing that he was arrested under a warrant sworn out the day following the alleged crime, not by the father but by the uncle of the girl alleged to have been assaulted, since tending to show conduct of the father inconsistent with the truth of his testimony. Merritt v. State, 107 Ga. 675, 34 S. E. 361. See also supra, II, B, 2, a.

47. Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, defendant contended that prosecutrix consented to all that was done, it was held that testimony of a witness who was not more than sixty-five feet from prosecutrix at the time of the alleged assault that he called to her in a loud voice for the purpose of attracting her attention, together with the conversation had between the witness and his wife at the time with reference to what they saw and did in consequence thereof, was admissible for the purpose of contradicting prosecutrix and corroborating defendant's testimony. Evidence that the prosecutrix on a trial for rape insulted and assaulted her mother, on an attempt by the latter to make her leave the defendant and go into the house on a certain occasion some time after the alleged offense was committed, is admissible on the question of consent, and to contradict a positive statement of the prosecutrix that no familiarity had taken place between her and the defendant after the commission of the crime. tion, whether the treatment complained of was with her consent or against her will.[53]

f. Threats and Fear. Antecedent threats and violent conduct before and after the act, together with the effect such threats produced on the mind of the prosecutrix, may be proved to show rape by threats and fear.[54] Where the theory of the prosecution is that the rape was committed by threats and fear, the prosecutrix may be examined as to the threats and as to the effect upon her.[55] It is proper to ask her why she did not struggle against defendant.[56] On the prosecution of a man for rape of his daughter or other girl living as a member of his family, evidence of abusive treatment by him of the girl and of other members of the family is admissible to show that the prosecutrix yielded from fear of him.[57] It may be shown that the prosecutrix, defendant's daughter, made no outcry because she was afraid he would whip her.[58]

g. Declarations, Complaint, Want of Complaint, and Conduct of Prosecutrix — (i) Declarations in General. The defendant may introduce evidence of declarations of the prosecutrix, upon the proper foundation being laid, to impeach her testimony;[59] but her statements, not part of the res gestæ, are not admissible in behalf of defendant, except by way of impeachment and after the proper foundation has been laid.[60] Nor as a rule are her declarations admissible as proof of the crime charged, or as corroborating evidence, unless they are part of the res gestæ,[61] or unless they are admissible under the rules in the particular

(B) Incapacity or Failure of Prosecutrix to Testify. Failure of the prosecutrix to testify is no ground for excluding evidence that she made complaint where, by reason of youth or imbecility, she is incompetent to testify.[77] But where the particulars of such complaint are regarded as admissible in corroboration of the prosecutrix, it has been held that they are not admissible where she is incompetent to testify.[78] On the other hand her incapacity or failure to testify does not render such particulars admissible in those jurisdictions in which they are otherwise held inadmissible.[79]

(IV) Failure to Complain and Delay.[80] Failure of prosecutrix to make complaint promptly in the case of rape by force may be proved, as it tends to show consent, but such failure affects only the credibility of her evidence as to force and resistance;[81] and when a female is under the age of consent failure to make

The mere fact that a complaint was made in answer to a question does not of itself make it inadmissible as a complaint. If the circumstances indicate that but for the questioning there would probably have been no voluntary complaint, the answer is inadmissible. If the question merely anticipates a statement which the complainant is about to make, as where a mother asks her daughter what is the matter, etc., it is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that the questioner happened to speak first. No presumption of law.— The inference arising against the truth of a charge of rape, complaint is not material, complaint being only proof of non-consent, and this being supplied by the statute.[82] Failure to make complaint does not show innocence of defendant.[83] Failure of the prosecutrix to complain or delay in making complaint may be explained.[84] The rule as to delay in making complaint does not apply to delay on the part of a person to whom complaint is made in informing others or causing legal proceedings to be instituted.[85]

(v) Conduct of Prosecutrix.[86] Evidence of the conduct of the prosecutrix before and immediately after the outrage is admissible as part of the res gestæ;[87] but the state cannot introduce evidence in detail of the conduct and exhibition of the feelings of the prosecutrix a considerable time after the alleged rape.[88] That the prosecutrix made outcry at the time of the alleged offense is a fact to be considered as corroborating her testimony as to want of consent;[89] and on the other hand her failure to make outcry may be shown and considered as affecting her credibility;[90]

h. Physical and Mental Condition of Prosecutrix — (i) Before and at Time of Offense.[94] Evidence of the physical and mental condition of the prosecutrix at the time immediately prior to the offense is admissible as bearing on the question of consent and her ability to resist.[95] Proof may be made of want of physical and mental development whether she was over or under the age of consent.[96] Her schooling and mental ability may be shown.[97] And of course competent evidence is admissible to show that the prosecutrix was insane or imbecile, and therefore incapable of consenting.[98] It has been held under the Texas statute that if the state introduces the prosecutrix as a witness it vouches for her mental competency at the time of the act.[99] is made at a distant time and acts of intercourse with others may have taken place, it is too remote and such evidence is not admissible.[6] The jury may consider the age, appearance, and demeanor of the prosecutrix during the trial as bearing on the question of consent.[7]

(III) Condition of Clothing. Evidence of the condition of the clothing of the prosecutrix shortly after the alleged offense, as that it was torn, disarranged, or bloody, is admissible, and the clothing itself, after proper identification, may be exhibited as evidence;[8] but the clothing must be properly identified as that worn at the time of the crime.[9] Condition of clothing may be proved by any person who saw it.[10] It may be shown that blood on her clothing was the result of her monthly periods.[11]

Rebutting evidence.— Where a contested point in a rape case was the question of actual penetration, prosecutrix's testimony being explicit that there was such penetration, and a physician sworn for defendant testified that the hymen was intact, and gave evidence as to the probable length of time since the injury, it being a theory of the defense that the prosecution was the result of conspiracy, and that the injury was a part of the plan, and of more recent date than the alleged assault, it was held that the testimony of physicians introduced during the rebuttal as to the condition of the hymen, and as to the probable length of time between the injury and examination, and which was to quite an extent contradictory to that of defendant's witness, was proper rebutting evidence. mode of proving age has been generally treated elsewhere.[20] The jury may consider the appearance of the girl in determining her age;[21] and evidence of defendant's admissions that she was under age is admissible.[22]

j. Physical and Mental Condition of Accused[23] — (i) In General. Evidence of the condition of the accused at the time of the crime is admissible as part of the res gestæ.[24] Whenever it is material on the question of force and resistance it is competent to show the size and strength of the accused.[25] Such evidence may also be material on the question whether the accused could have committed the act in view of the prosecutrix's condition.[26]

(ii) Impotency. In a prosecution for rape evidence is of course admissible to prove that the accused was impotent or to rebut evidence of impotency;[27] but it has been held that impotency is no defense on a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, and evidence thereof is inadmissible.[28] Impotency or potency may be proved by expert testimony.[29] It is not error to refuse to permit the jury during the trial to privately examine the private parts of the accused.[30]

(iii) Intoxication. Where intoxication is not urged as a defense in a prosecution for rape or assault with intent to rape,[31] it is error to allow the state to introduce evidence that the accused was intoxicated at the time of the alleged commission of the crime.[32] But it is competent for the accused to show that he was in such a debilitated condition from a previous debauch as to be physically incapable of committing the offense.[33]

k. Clothing of Accused. Articles of clothing taken from the accused are admissible against him.[34]

26. Thus where, on an indictment for rape, several physicians testified that they were unable to find a bruise on the prosecutrix's person, or any irritation of the sexual organs, or blood on her clothing, but that it would have been possible for a man of ordinary parts to have intercourse with her, and a physician of great experience testified that he was unable to insert his finger in her parts without causing pain, it was held error to exclude evidence that defendant was a man of more than ordinary parts. Blood.— The single fact that a stain upon defendant's shirt sleeve was blood, it not being shown to be human blood, and it appearing that it may have been deposited there for six months or a year, was too remote and of no probative force in establishing the identity of defendant as the guilty party. State v. Alton, 105 Minn. 410, 117 N. W. 617.

l. Age of Accused.[35] It is always competent to show age, as well as the size, of the accused and the knowledge of the witnesses in respect thereto, and particularly is this true when the evidence bears directly upon his capacity to commit the crime charged.[36] The necessity to prove the age of the accused, and the presumption and burden of proof as to his age, are elsewhere treated.[37] It has been held that it is competent for the jury to look at him and draw reasonable inferences as to his age from his appearance and growth.[38]

m. Expert and Opinion Evidence.[39] A physician and surgeon may testify as to the results of a medical and surgical examination of the prosecutrix after the alleged offense, and may give his opinion thereon as an expert.[40] He may also testify as to the physical possibility of the sexual organ of defendant entering that of the female;[41] and that the female's condition might have been produced by disease, or means other than that testified to by her.[42] Some of the courts hold that a physician may testify that it would be physicially impossible to commit the act as testified to by the prosecutrix;[43] but the better opinion is to the contrary on the ground that to permit such evidence would allow the witness to assume the functions of the jury, and the matter is not properly the subject of expert testimony.[44] He cannot as an expert testify that in his opinion the condition of the sexual organs of the female was produced by rape,[45] or that no girl would have voluntarily submitted to the suffering necessary to bring about the result shown by his examination.[46] Witnesses other than experts, if they have the requisite knowledge, may testify as to the appearance and the mental and physical condition of the prosecutrix.[47] A hypothetical question assuming facts not proven is properly excluded.[48]

n. Penetration in General. The fact of penetration may be proved by either direct or circumstantial evidence.[49] It is proper to ask the prosecuting witness whether the intercourse caused her pain,[50] and where, on a prosecution for rape of a young girl, she testifies that she never before had intercourse, that it did not hurt her, that no blood followed, and that she was not sore the next day, it is error to refuse to allow defendant to show that the natural result of intercourse with a girl of prosecutrix's age would be pain, followed by blood and soreness.[51]

o. Venereal Disease.[52] It may be shown that the female became infected with a venereal disease as the result of the rape, and it may then be shown that defendant had the same disease.[53] On the other hand it is error to exclude testimony that the prosecutrix had a contagious venereal disease when the rape is alleged to have been committed, it appearing that she had such disease shortly thereafter, and that defendant had never had it.[54]

p. Pregnancy and Miscarriage, or Birth, Parentage, and Disposition of Child. The general rule is that in case of statutory rape of a female under the age of consent, pregnancy, or pregnancy and miscarriage or birth of a child, may be shown as evidence of the sexual intercourse,[55] and there is no reason why such evidence should not be admissible where the woman was over the age of consent. Of course in either case it could not be evidence that defendant committed the crime, or, if he had intercourse with the prosecutrix, that he did so by force or its

But on a prosecution for carnally knowing a female under the age of consent fixed by Code, § 4756, the consent of the female being immaterial, evidence that the penetration did not bruise or lacerate her, that it was not painful, and, in the opinion of a physician, this showed that she had had intercourse with males more than twice, was immaterial. Where defendant testifies in his own behalf, denying the rape, and also that he had at that time any venereal disease, it is proper, on cross-examination, to inquire as to his physical condition with reference to such disease, and as to why he had certain bottles of medicine which he used in jail, shortly after his arrest. People v. Glover, supra. But in a prosecution for rape alleged to have been committed on Oct. 8, 1905, it was held error to permit a physician to testify as a witness for the prosecution that he examined prosecutrix on October 24 and found that she had venereal chancroids, which appeared to be about twelve days old, for the purpose of showing that the venereal disease was contracted by prosecutrix from defendant. Period of gestation.— The fact that a child was born two hundred and ninety-two days after prosecutrix testified that defendant had intercourse with her does not discredit her testimony, although the ordinary period of gestation is from two hundred and seventy to two hundred and ninety days, where she testified to another act of intercourse within two hundred and eighty days of the birth. People v. Flaherty, 27 N. Y. App. Div. 535, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 574 [reversed in 162 N. Y. 532, 57 N. E. 73]. Where, in a trial for rape, it appeared that prosecutrix bore a child two hundred and ninety-nine days after the alleged offense, evidence of physicians that, as the alleged intercourse occurred during the menstrual period, the time of gestation did not exceed two hundred and eighty days, and could not have been two hundred and ninety-nine days, was admissible on the issue as to whether the intercourse happened at the date equivalent.[56] Where evidence of the birth of a child is admitted, the prosecutrix may testify that defendant is the father.[57] It has also been held that the child may be exhibited to the jury for their consideration of any resemblance to defendant;[58] but on this question the better opinion is to the contrary.[59] The state may prove admissions by defendant as to the paternity of the child.[60] What became of the child is immaterial unless defendant is connected with its disposition.[61]

q. Identification of Accused. Defendant may be identified by the prosecutrix or other witnesses and anything that tends to such identification may be proved.[62] The prosecutrix may testify as to the identity of the accused as the person who committed the rape, but descriptions of the accused given by her to other people are not admissible unless brought out on cross-examination, or by way of corroboration.[63] It may be shown that prosecutrix pointed out defendant among a number before her as the guilty party.[64]

r. Character and Habits of Accused.[65] Evidence of the good character of defendant is admissible as it tends to show improbability that he would commit such a crime;[66] but if his guilt is established, his former good character cannot be a refutation or excuse.[67] The state cannot prove his bad character unless, and to the extent that, he puts his character in issue.[68] As a rule it is not competent for the state to introduce evidence of defendant's habits or of his conduct with other females.[69] Evidence that the prosecutrix knew of the bad character of defendant is immaterial.[70] Evidence that defendant and his wife lived together amicably and peaceably has no tendency to prove his guilt or innocence and is inadmissible.[71]

A witness cannot testify to the moral character of the prosecutrix as known to him by reason of his knowledge of specific acts, but the testimony must be confined to her reputation in the community. Iowa.— State v. Cook, 65 Iowa 560, 22 N. W. 675, declarations of prosecutrix admissible. On an indictment for rape alleged to have been committed where defendant was at work, the testimony of defendant's wife that complainant, during three days' visit at her house, was very immodest, refused to go home when told, and boasted that she used to go to defendant's place of work, and "play" with him, and "use" him, whenever she chose, was admissible. State v. Cassidy, 85 Iowa 145, 52 N. W. 1.

Minnesota.— Where on a trial for rape, alleged to have been committed at defendant's house, defendant offered evidence that on a date after the commission of the alleged offense, when reproved for going to defendant's house, the prosecutrix answered: "I will. I am my own boss, and will go there when I please;" and that on another occasion she asked another girl to go with her to defendant's house, accompanying the request with the remark, "Isn't he a nice man?" it was held that the evidence was not impeaching, and could be introduced without first calling prosecutrix's attention to it. Evidence that prosecutrix's husband was jealous of her, or jealous of her and defendant, or objected to prosecutrix's being with defendant or other men, is inadmissible to support defendant's claim of prior intimacy with her, it being merely conjectural as to that fact. New York.— Woods v. People, 55 N. Y. 515, 14 Am. Rep. 309 [reversing 1 Thomps. & C. 610], holding that evidence that defendant was in the habit of receiving men shown to rebut corroborating circumstances, as when the woman is pregnant or has miscarried or given birth to a child,[79] or where she was infected with venereal disease,[80] or where a physician has testified that the hymen was ruptured.[81] In cases of carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent, her want of chastity cannot be shown to show consent, since she is incapable of consenting;[82] but

Drunken and dissipated habits.— It has been held that evidence that the prosecutrix is a woman of drunken and dissipated habits, sleeping in hallways and accustomed to go in at two or three o'clock in the morning, is admissible as evidence of general immoral character. Brennan v. People, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 171. But it has been held that even if defendant, on a prosecution for carnally knowing a female under the age of twelve years, may show the bad character of the child, evidence that she had been seen on the streets at night drinking is not competent. Clark v. Com., 92 S. W. 573, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 154.

79. Iowa.— On a prosecution for rape, it appearing that prosecutrix was pregnant, defendant, for the purpose only of counteracting any sympathy with her by reason thereof, should be allowed to show intercourse by her with others, from which this might have resulted. State v. Bebb, 125 Iowa 494, 101 N. W. 189. In a trial for rape, it was not error to limit evidence as to intercourse had with prosecutrix by others than defendant to such connection as might have resulted in the conception of the child, the paternity of which was imputed to the defendant as the result of the offense, although she testified she had never had intercourse with any man except defendant, since contradiction on that point would have been impeachment on an immaterial matter. In a trial for raping a girl under age, it was error to exclude testimony that she had had intercourse with Chinamen other than defendant prior to the alleged offense; the evidence being admissible to repel an inference that he had conveyed a loathsome disease to her, to show that perhaps she was mistaken in defendant's identity, and as tending to affect her credibility. People v. Fong Chung, 5 Cal. App. 587, 91 Pac. 105. Compare People v. Glover, 71 Mich. 303, 38 N. 81. Where the prosecutrix testified that she was unconscious, and did not know whether the accused committed the rape or not, and the prosecution proved by a physician, who examined her three weeks afterward, that she did not then bear the physical evidences of virginity, and gave it as his opinion that she had had carnal connection with a man at some time before, it was held that it was competent to rebut the inference sought to be drawn from this evidence, by showing either a previous voluntary connection with the accused, or particular instances of unchastity with any other man, as well as to show by other medical testimony that the theory of the doctor testifying was unreliable. With defendant.— Where the prosecutrix was under the age of consent evidence that defendant had had previous connection with her was incompetent. People v. Harris, 103 Mich. 473, 61 N. W. 871.

it has been held that want of chastity may be shown as affecting credibility of the prosecutrix as a witness, although it would not be a defense if the act was admitted,[83] or to show the adulterous disposition of the parties.[84] When the statute makes carnal knowledge of a female of previous chaste character under a specified age rape, chastity is presumed until the contrary is proved,[85] and want of chastity in such cases must be shown by specific acts and not by general reputation.[86] In all cases when the reputation of the woman is attacked proof of her good character is admissible on behalf of the state, but not before it is attacked.[87] Evidence of unchaste character or acts of prosecutrix after the offense is inadmissible, even on her cross-examination and after she has testified without objection to her chastity before the offense.[88]

(II) Indecency of Speech or Conduct. Evidence that prosecutrix commonly indulged in indecency of speech or conduct is not admissible on the question of want of resistance and consent, when it does not appear that such conversation or conduct accompanied or invited lewdness of behavior.[89]

(III) Character of Domicile, Family, or Associates of Prosecutrix. As a rule defendant cannot show the general bad reputation for chastity of the house where the prosecutrix lived,[90] or of her parents or associates.[91] On a prosecution of a negro for assault with intent to rape a white girl, evidence that the girl, her family, or her companions associated with negroes is inadmissible.[92]

83. State v. Duffey, 128 Mo. 549, 31 S. W. 98, holding that, although the fact that prosecutrix's reputation for chastity was bad is no defense, in a prosecution for rape, where she was under fourteen years of age, as her consent to the act was immaterial; but the evidence of such reputation is admissible as affecting her credibility. Contra, State v. Eberline, 47 Kan. 455, 27 Pac. 839.

In a prosecution for raping his daughter, it is error to admit testimony showing an assault committed by defendant on one of his children, without showing that it was done in the presence of prosecutrix, or that she knew of it when the rape was committed. Owens v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 391, 46 S. W. 240. But see Proper v. State, 85 Wis. 615, 55 N. u. Intent.[6] On a prosecution for attempt or assault with intent to commit rape, the intent to have sexual intercourse with the female without her consent, or to have sexual intercourse where the female is under the age of consent, is an essential element in the crime and must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt,[7] and this may be done by proof of any facts or circumstances tending to show such intent.[8] It is not necessary to show that defendant intended that his act should be rape.[9]

3. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence — a. In General. The courts have repeatedly approved Sir Matthew Hale's statements in regard to the crime of rape, that "it must be remembered, that it is an accusation easily to be made and hard to be proved, and harder to be defended by the party accused, though never so innocent;" [10] and that we should "be the more cautious upon trials of offenses of this nature, wherein the court and jury may with so much ease be imposed upon without great care and vigilance; the heinousness of the offense many times transporting the judge and jury with so much indignation that they are over hastily carried to the conviction of the person accused thereof by the confident testimony, sometimes of malicious and false witnesses." must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the act charged, and that he did so under such circumstances that every element of the offense existed.[12] Defendant may be convicted on the testimony of a very young child, one over four years of age, if there are corroborating circumstances;[13] but if the testimony of the child is procured by promises or requests and not on her voluntary complaint the evidence is insufficient to convict.[14] There may be a conviction without the testimony of the female injured.[15]

fessions or admissions of defendant are sufficient identification.[27] The sufficiency of the identification is a question for the jury if there is any evidence of identity.[28]

e. Age of Defendant. On the trial of an indictment for statutory rape of a female under the age of consent, where the commonwealth rests without offering any evidence of the age of the prisoner or as to his identity as the person indicted, and without offering his appearance in evidence, it is reversible error for the court to submit the age of the prisoner to the jury on his appearance, without more.[29] If there is evidence of age, and the jury find that defendant was of sufficient age, the verdict will not be disturbed.[30]

f. Married Women; Husband and Wife. On an indictment under a statute punishing the rape of a married woman, not the wife of defendant, it must be proved that the prosecutrix was a married woman and that she was not defendant's wife.[31] Where, on a trial for rape, there is ample opportunity for the state to prove directly that the accused and the prosecutrix were not husband and wife, indirect evidence of that fact will not suffice.[32]

g. Want of Consent, Force, and Resistance — (1) In General. To justify a conviction of rape or assault with intent to rape, where the prosecutrix was over the age of consent and otherwise capable of consenting, the evidence must show beyond a reasonable doubt force and want of consent or the equivalent.[33] The conviction of assault with intent to commit a rape on a child five years old, notwithstanding positive testimony in support of an alibi.

Uncorroborated identification.— Under Va. Rev. Code, § 3484, providing that the evidence, on a motion to set aside a verdict as contrary to the evidence, shall be considered on appeal as on a demurrer to the evidence, the identification of defendant by prosecutrix, although uncorroborated, is not insufficient to support a conviction. sufficiency of proof of force and resistance depends upon the surrounding circumstances.[34] If there is evidence that the female resisted to the extent of her existing ability it is sufficient to warrant conviction notwithstanding there may be contradictory evidence.[35] Consent on the part of the woman may be sufficiently indicated by her manner and conduct.[36] On the other hand evidence of the physical condition of the female, especially in the case of young children, is sufficient to show that the crime has been committed;[37] and evidence of the condition of the clothing when coupled with other facts is sufficient for conviction.[38] Mere general statements of prosecutrix that she did her utmost to resist, etc., without a statement of the acts constituting such resistance, is insufficient to show absence of assent.[39] Evidence that the prosecutrix received money from defendant after the alleged rape does not of itself establish consent.[40]

(II) OUTCRY AND COMPLAINT. The failure of the prosecutrix to make outcry or complaint where she had an opportunity so to do raises a strong presumption of consent, particularly if coupled with other circumstances tending to show consent,[41] but if there is other evidence of resistance the mere failure to

Female Under Age of Consent.[46] To sustain a conviction for carnal knowledge, without force, of a female under the age of consent, the prosecution must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the prosecutrix was under such age.[47] This is sufficiently done when the prosecutrix or other witnesses testify positively to her age,[48] but where the evidence is indefinite as to age conviction is unwarranted.[49] The prosecution must also prove the fact of intercourse with defendant,[50] and that it occurred while she was under the age of consent.[51] The testimony of the prosecutrix as to the sexual intercourse with other testimony or circumstances tending to show the same is sufficient,[52] but if the evidence of the prosecutrix is contradictory, and other evidence of its falsity is offered, a conviction is not warranted.[53] Where the prosecutrix was over a certain age, previous chaste character must be shown under some statutes.[54] It is not necessary to prove

j. Female Imbecile, Drugged, Intoxicated, or Asleep. Proof that the woman was so imbecile or insane as to be incapable of consenting is sufficient without proof of force and resistance.[56] Evidence of mere weakness of mind alone is not sufficient to convict,[57] but in case of mental weakness less evidence of want of consent is necessary than where the female is of sound mind.[58] So there may be a conviction of rape on proof of intercourse with a female who was insensible from drugs.[59] And where defendant gave the woman liquor and made her drunk, and she testified that while she was unconscious he had sexual intercourse with her, this was held sufficient to convict.[60] Evidence that defendant entered the room where the female was asleep, and moved her clothing, or bedclothes, or touched her person is usually held sufficient to convict of assault with intent to commit rape.[61]

k. Fraud. Intercourse with a woman through fraud in personating her husband is not generally considered as rape,[62] but in Texas the statute makes it rape if any trick or artifice is used; and in such cases it is sufficient if she is induced to submit by any sham or trick used to deceive her.[63] In Texas, by statute, a man may be convicted of rape by fraud, if the evidence shows that he administered to the prosecutrix, without her knowledge or consent, a substance producing unnatural sexual desire, or such stupor as prevented or weakened resistance, and committed the offense while she was under the influence of such substance.[64] Evidence showing an attempt to rape by fraud is not sufficient to convict of assault with intent to commit rape.[65] Proof of an attempt to have intercourse with a married woman by personating her husband is not sufficient to convict of assault with intent to commit rape,[66] but may be sufficient to convict of attempt to rape by fraud under the Texas statute.[67] A physician may, in some jurisdictions,

l. Attempt and Assault With Intent to Rape — (i) In General. The evidence does not justify a conviction of attempt to rape or assault with intent to rape, unless it shows beyond a reasonable doubt, not only the identity of the accused,[70] but also that he committed an overt act amounting to an attempt or assault, as the case may be,[71] and that he did so with intent to have intercourse with the prosecutrix by force and against her will,[72] unless, in some jurisdictions, she was under the age of consent.[73] Defendant may be guilty of improprieties both in speech and in act, even amounting to aggravated assault, but if there is not evidence of intent to overcome resistance with force it is insufficient to sustain a verdict.[74] Solicitation, taking hold of and fondling a female, indecent exposure of the person, and other facts of a similar nature, in the absence of proof of any intent to use force, are not sufficient to convict.[75] Such intent, however, may be inferred from the conduct of the parties and the other circumstances.[76] A request for intercourse, with a threat to injure if refused, but where no force is used, is not sufficient to convict of assault with intent to rape.[77] If defendant makes an assault with intent to rape and the woman resists at first but finally consents to intercourse, this is sufficient to convict of assault with intent to rape but not of rape.[78]

(II) Female Under Age of Consent. On a prosecution for attempt, or assault with intent, to rape a female under the age of consent the evidence must show the attempt or assault and an intent on the part of defendant to have intercourse with her.[79] In some jurisdictions the rule that a female under the age of consent is incapable of consenting to intercourse is not applied to indictments for attempt or assault with intent to commit rape, and proof of want of age alone, in the absence of proof of intent to use force, is not sufficient to convict;[80] but in most jurisdictions the rule is otherwise, and proof of intent to use force is not necessary.[81]

But defendant should not be convicted without corroboration where the testimony of the prosecutrix bears on its face indications of unreliability or improbability, and particularly when it is contradicted by other evidence;[86] and where the evidence preponderates in favor of defendant, or the verdict appears to have been influenced by passion or prejudice, it should always be set aside unless there is corroboration of prosecutrix.[87] The mere fact that defendant testifies in his own behalf and positively denies his guilt does not, by the weight of authority, render corroboration of the prosecutrix necessary.[88]

Sufficient corroboration.— It is not necessary that the prosecutrix should be corroborated upon all the material points of her testimony. People v. Terwilliger, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 310, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 674 [affirmed in 142 N. Y. 629, 37 N. E. 565]. The corroborating evidence need not include testimony of an eye-witness of the act itself, or extend to everything said or done. People v. Adams, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 166, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 361. It may be by circumstantial evidence. People v. Grauer, 12 N. Y. App. Div. 464, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 721. Corroboration held insufficient see People v. Page, supra (evidence that defendant did not deny prosecutrix's declaration, made out of court, charging him with the crime, when repeated to him by a witness, and his admission to another witness that he had "insulted the girl," where it did not appear when, where, or how the insult was given); People v. Green, 103 N. 90. Iowa Code (1897), § 5488.

Corpus delicti.— Under this provision the corpus delicti — the fact that the crime has been committed by someone — may be established by the testimony of the prosecutrix alone, without corroboration. State v. Ralston, (Iowa 1908) 116 N. W. 1058; State v. Cassidy, 85 Iowa 145, 52 N. W. 1; State v. McLaughlin, 44 Iowa 82.

Connecting defendant with crime.— But there must be corroborating evidence tending to connect defendant with the commission of the crime. State v. McLaughlin, 44 Iowa 82; and other cases cited infra, this note.

Sufficient corroboration.— It is sufficient if the corroborating evidence tends to strengthen and corroborate the prosecutrix in connecting defendant with the commission of the offense. State v. French, 96 Iowa 255, 65 N. W. 156. Corroboration held sufficient see State v. Ralston, (Iowa 1908) 116 N. W. 1058; State v. McCausland, 137 Iowa 354, 113 N. Where there is other corroborating evidence connecting accused with the commission of a rape, and there is evidence of flight, the latter may be considered as furnishing additional corroboration. State v. Ralston, supra.

Insufficent corroboration see State v. Egbert, 125 Iowa 443, 101 N. W. 191; State v. Kunhi, 119 Iowa 461, 93 N. W. 342; State v. Wheeler, 116 Iowa 212, 89 N. whether there is any corroborating evidence is a question of law for the court, and it is error to submit such question to the jury.[93] Where the statute in terms applies to rape only, it does not require corroboration to convict of attempt or assault with intent to rape.[94]

C. Trial — 1. In General. Of course the rules in relation to trials in criminal cases generally which have been elsewhere stated apply in prosecutions for rape and in prosecutions for attempt to rape or for assault with intent to rape;[95] including the rules governing the reception of evidence,[96] objections to evidence and motions to strike out,[97] remarks and conduct of the judge,[98] argument and

In Iowa the rule is now extended by statute to prosecutions for assault with intent to commit rape. Iowa Code (1897), § 5488.

95. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 504 et seq.

96. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 543 et seq. On trial for rape it was not error for the court to allow the prosecutrix, after she had stated facts brought out on cross-examination by the defense to show consent, to be questioned in rebuttal by the state as to whether or not she consented to the sexual intercourse with defendant. Jones v. State, 104 Ala. 30, 16 So. 135. Where, upon trial of an indictment for rape, the prosecutrix stated the substance of the vulgar language used by defendant in making his assault upon her, and another witness stated the exact words, and the court refused to compel the prosecutrix to state the exact words, it was held no error. State v. Hatfield, 72 Mo. 518.

Order of proof see Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 555. It is not reversible error for the court after examination of the evidence, and after the argument on both sides is closed, to permit the prosecution to prove where the offense was committed. Harker v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 540. It is not an abuse of discretion for the court to permit the prosecution, after both parties have rested, to recall the prosecutrix to testify that defendant never had sexual intercourse with her with her consent, especially where defendant has testified that he had a few days before the alleged rape was committed. State v. Case, 96 Iowa 264, 65 N. W. 149. It is not necessary that a woman who has been criminally assaulted should first be examined on an indictment against her assailant, before corroborative evidence can be introduced. Proctor v. Com., 20 S. W. 213, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 248.

Compelling calling of witnesses see Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 548. Where the principal contest is over the age of the prosecutrix, the prosecuting attorney has no right to refuse to call as a witness one of two persons present at her birth because the testimony of such person will contradict that of the other witnesses for the prosecution. People v. Etter, 81 Mich. 570, 45 N. W. 1109. And the prosecuting attorney should call as a witness a physician who examined the person of the prosecutrix after the alleged rape. Donaldson v. Com., 95 Pa. St. 21. But where the prosecutrix was defendant's eight-year-old sister, it was held that the court's refusal to compel the state to make her its witness was not error. Bozeman v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. 503, 31 S. W. 389.

Permitting relative to sit by prosecuting witness.— On the trial of an indictment for rape, it was held not error for the judge to permit an aunt of the prosecutrix, who was a girl under ten years of age, to sit by her during her examination as a witness, warning the aunt not to speak to or prompt her, which warning was in no manner violated. Rodgers v. State, 30 Tex. App. 510, 17 S. W. 1077.

97. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 561 et seq.; and People v. Moore, 86 Mich. 134, 48 N. W. 693 (insufficient objection to evidence); Turney v. State, 8 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 104, 47 Am. Dec. 74 (evidence admissible in part).

Dictation by parent.— In a prosecution for raping a child, where she stated on cross-examination that her mother had told her to say everything that defendant had done to her, and that she had not told on the previous day what he had done to her, because her mother had not told her to, it was held not to justify a motion to strike her evidence, as being what her mother told her, as it merely showed that she instructed her to make a full disclosure of what happened. State v. Steffens, 116 Iowa 227, 89 N. W. 974.

98. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 538 et seq.; Senior v. State, 97 Ga. 185, 22 S. E. 404; Shirwin v. People, 69 Ill. 55; State v. Philpot, 97 Iowa 365, 66 N. W. 730; State v. Hatfield, 75 Iowa 592, 39 N. W. 910; State v. Donovan, 61 Iowa 369, 16 N. W. 206.

conduct of the prosecuting attorney,[99] custody and conduct of the jury,[1] remarks and applause of bystanders,[2] etc.

2. Election Between Acts — a. In General. Where the indictment charges but a single act and two or more are disclosed by the evidence, the prosecution should be compelled, on motion of defendant, to elect on which one it will rely,[3] and when an election is made it is error not to exclude from the jury all testimony with reference to other acts which does not tend directly to prove the particular act relied on.[4] When evidence is introduced tending directly to the proof of one act and for the purpose of procuring a conviction upon it, an election is regarded

99. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 568 et seq.; and People v. Duncan, 104 Mich. 460, 62 N. W. 556; State v. Robertson, 26 S. C. 117, 1 S. E. 443; Thompson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 472, 26 S. W. 987; Exon v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 461, 26 S. W. 1088.

Offer and presentation of evidence see Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 571. A conviction of assault with intent to rape will not be reversed because the prosecuting attorney offered to show that defendant on several occasions before the commission of the offense charged had committed similar acts, where the court refused to permit him to do so. People v. Ricketts, 108 Mich. 584, 66 N. W. 483. But where, on a trial for rape, the prosecuting attorney, on cross-examination, asked defendant "if, on the day succeeding that on which it was alleged he committed the crime, he did not go to the residence of one B. and there finding Miss B. the daughter of B. alone, did not attempt to drag her to a lounge," etc., and then stated to the court, in the presence of the jury, "We intend to follow this matter up and show that he went right over to B.'s, and there tried to kiss and hug Miss B. and drag her to the lounge," Miss B. having been summoned as a witness by the state, and being then present in court, it was held that such conduct of the prosecuting attorney was unwarranted and prejudicial to the accused. Leahy v. State, 31 Nebr. 566, 48 N. W. 390.

Pointing out defendant before identification. — Where the prosecutrix identified defendant as her assailant, the fact that the prosecuting attorney pointed him out to her before she was asked whether she could see him in the court-room is not such misconduct as to require reversal of a conviction, although it may weaken the credit to be given her testimony. State v. Blunt, 59 Iowa 468, 13 N. W. 427.

Kissing child of prosecutrix. — In a prosecution for rape the act of counsel for the state in kissing, in the presence of the jury, a child born to prosecutrix, had no tendency to prove that defendant was the father of the child — the point in controversy — or that counsel thought so, and as evidence was clearly immaterial. Failure to move for election. — Where different acts of intercourse are introduced without objection and no motion is made to compel the prosecution to elect, defendant cannot complain on appeal because no actual election was made. In such case the prosecution has a right to select from the acts proved, all being within the period of limitations, the particular one upon which it will rely for conviction, and in the absence of any express election from the record, it will be presumed that the prosecution elected to stand by the offense it first introduced evidence to establish, and that evidence of other acts was introduced, not to prove substantive offenses, but in corroboration and explanation of the evidence of the act charged. as made of that act.[5] Where, however, the indictment contains several counts the court may in its discretion refuse to compel the prosecution to elect between them, if defendant will not be prejudiced.[6] And where an indictment charges in one count an assault and battery and rape, the state cannot be compelled to elect between the assault and battery and the rape.[7]

b. Time of Election. Some of the courts hold that the election should be made as soon as the evidence discloses more than one act,[8] while others hold that the court may in its discretion permit proof of several acts before requiring an election.[9] But an election must be made before defendant is required to introduce his evidence.[10]

3. Questions of Law and Fact. The rules in criminal prosecutions generally as to questions of law and fact and the respective province of court and jury apply to prosecutions for rape, questions of law being for the court and questions of fact for the jury.[11]

Abandonment as to act first proved.— On an indictment for carnally knowing and abusing a child under the age of ten years, where the state has proved the commission of the offense on the day laid in the indictment, but it is shown that the child was ten years old on that day, the state cannot then abandon the prosecution as to that offense, and proceed to introduce evidence of a similar offense committed on a previous day, although it might, in the first instance, show its commission on a day other than that laid in the indictment. State v. Mastel'er, 45 Minn. 128, 47 N. W. 541.

Duty to restrict jury.— Where, after evidence of other assaults independent of the one charged had been admitted, the jury were instructed that, if they were satisfied that on any date while the complainant lived in defendant's house he was guilty of the charge, it was their duty to convict him, it was held error. But where a defendant was indicted for rape, and on a separate count for assault with intent to ravish, and an election was made by the prosecution at defendant's request to go to trial on the greater charge, it was held that the court would not permit a conviction for a simple assault, or for the less offense. Com. v. Bass, 4 Kulp (Pa.) 76.

Failure to require election not prejudicial. —Where an indictment contained two counts, one charging rape in the second degree, and the other assault in the second degree, and defendant was convicted of rape, which was proven, the refusal to compel an election between the two counts was not prejudicial to defendant. People v. Garner, 64 N. Y. App. Div. 410, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 66 [affirmed in 169 N. Y. 585, 62 N. E. 1099].

15. Michigan.— Where there is evidence to show that respondent never committed any assault upon the prosecutrix, and that her whole story is a fabrication, it is error for the judge to ignore this defense in his charge, and to proceed upon the assumption that respondent's theory of the case was that the assault did not constitute rape because the girl did not make sufficient resistance. People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 S. W. 473.

Mississippi.— On a prosecution for rape, the court should have given a requested instruction to the effect that if the jury believed that there might be some person who committed the crime, and the name of that person had not been disclosed by the evidence, it was not required of the defendant to show the name of any such person. Jeffries v. State, 89 Miss. 643, 42 So. 801.

Missouri.— The court erred in refusing an instruction that the continuation by prosecutrix of friendly intercourse with defendant, after the alleged rape, was inconsistent with defendant's guilt, and rendered her charge improbable. State v. Patrick, 107 Mo. 147, 17 S. W. 666.

New York.— People v. Flaherty, 162 N. Y. 532, 57 N. E. 73.

Texas.— On indictment for the rape of a female alleged in one count to have been under ten years, and in the other above that age, the evidence as to her age was conflicting, and a preponderance of evidence showed proper for the court to select one circumstance to the exclusion of all others in the evidence and charge the jury to acquit or convict on that alone.[16] Where there is evidence of other acts than that charged and relied upon for conviction, the court should instruct the jury as to the purpose of such evidence and properly restrict them to the act charged.[17] The absence of the female injured from the trial is not such a circumstance as to show that no crime has been committed,[18] nor should the jury be instructed that the failure of the husband of the prosecutrix to kill defendant on first sight discredits his testimony.[19]

b. Charging as to Less Offense. In most jurisdictions defendant indicted for rape or assault with intent to rape may be convicted for that offense or for any less offense embraced therein, as attempt to rape, assault with intent to commit rape, aggravated assault, or assault and battery, etc., and the court should so charge the jury;[20] but as a rule if the evidence shows that defendant was consent and non-penetration. The court instructed the jury that if they believed that there was no such penetration, but that defendant made an assault upon the prosecuting witness, not to commit rape upon her, but with intent to have sexual intercourse with her, with her consent, then they should find defendant guilty of an aggravated assault. This was held error, as only presenting the question whether accused intended to have sexual intercourse with the female's consent, and not directing an acquittal if the jury found that she was over ten years of age and consented. Michigan.— On a prosecution for rape, the failure to refer in the charge to a quarrel between prosecutrix and defendant, which occurred after the commission of the offense, and before the making of the complaint, is not ground for reversal, in the absence of a request by defendant, when the court charged the jury to carefully weigh prosecutrix's testimony, her appearance and manner of testifying, and all other things bearing upon her testimony and credibility, and to consider the evidence of defendant, and all the evidence. Woodruff v. State, 72 Nebr. 815, 101 N. W. 1114. In a prosecution for rape, an instruction that if it appears that prosecutrix was under the age of sixteen and was not the wife of defendant when the intercourse took place, and that "such intercourse was had at any time within five years prior to the filing of the information in this case," then defendant was guilty, is not erroneous as allowing conviction for an act of intercourse occurring after the date of the alleged offense and before the date of filing the information, although prosecutrix might have attained the age of sixteen, and the act taken place after she reached that age and before the date of filing, or for any act occurring within the five years prior to the filing of the information, since the words "such intercourse" relate to the act of intercourse described in the information. State v. Connors, 37 Mont. 15, 94 Pac. 199. 22. See supra, I, A, 2, e. (II). In a prosecution for assault on a female child, and for carnally knowing and abusing her, it was not error to refuse to charge that, while the slightest penetration of the female organ is sufficient to constitute rape, yet it must appear that the male organ actually pene-is necessary to constitute the offense, since the other elements of the crime are also necessary;[23] but the other elements being present it is proper to charge that any sexual penetration however slight is sufficient.[24] The word "sexual" need not be used in describing penetration where the other parts of the charge show that sexual penetration is meant.[25] Where the court charges that actual penetration is sufficient it is proper to refuse to charge that defendant must have had sexual intercourse.[26] A charge that penetration may be shown by circumstantial evidence is correct.[27] Where sexual intercourse is admitted it is harmless error to charge that actual contact of the sexual organs constitutes sexual intercourse.[28]

d. Want of Consent, Force, and Resistance. Where the evidence raises an issue as to consent the court should properly charge the jury that force on the part of defendant and resistance on the part of the prosecutrix are essential to constitute the crime, and consent of prosecutrix however reluctantly given prevents the act being rape.[29] The jury should be instructed that mere non-consent trated the genitals of the female, and the burden of proving what part of the female sexual organs constitutes the genitals is on the state. Williams v. State, 53 Fla. 84, 43 So. 431. Michigan.— People v. Crego, 70 Mich. 319, 38 N. W. 281. An instruction on a trial for rape that to constitute rape it must be found that accused had intercourse with the prosecutrix by force and against her will, and that she did everything she could under the circumstances to prevent accused from accomplishing his purpose, and that accused could not be found guilty of an assault with intent to rape unless he intended is not resistance,[30] or if the conduct of the woman was such as to create a belief in the mind of defendant that she was willing to have sexual intercourse with him they should acquit.[31] In reference to the degree of resistance required the jury should be instructed that it is necessary not that the prosecutrix should have made the uttermost resistance, but that she should have made such resistance as she was capable of making at the time;[32] and in this connection the jury may to use the force necessary to accomplish his purpose, and that, if he touched the person of the prosecutrix in a rude and insolent manner, he was guilty of an assault and battery, was sufficiently explicit, in the absence of a request for further instructions. People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524, 108 N. W. 1009. To convict of rape, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the prosecutrix did not consent during any part of the sexual act; and a charge that, if she resisted as far as she was able under the circumstances, they should convict, even though she at last yielded, is misleading, and warrants a reversal, for "yielded" may be understood as meaning assented. Brown v. People, 36 Mich. 203.

Minnesota.—A charge on a trial for rape that there must have been force and violence on the part of the man, and actual resistance and opposition on the part of the woman to the full extent of her ability, although not specifically stating that the force must have been sufficient to overcome the resistance of the woman necessarily implied it, and must have been so understood by the jury. Nebraska.— In a prosecution for rape, where there is a conflict in the testimony as to the resistance of the prosecutrix, and also as to the resort to force by the accused, it is error to refuse an instruction in substance cautioning the jury against prejudice which was liable to be aroused against the accused because of the heinous nature of the charge, and to call their attention to difficulty of defending against the accusation; and that if the carnal knowledge while she had the power to resist was with the voluntary consent of the woman, no matter how tardily given or how much force had previously been employed, it was no rape. Wisconsin.— In a prosecution for rape the court instructed the jury as follows: "First. The element of force forms a material ingredient of the offense of rape, by which the resistance of the woman violated is overcome, or her consent induced by threats of personal violence, duress, or fraud; for unless the consent of the woman to the unlawful intercourse is freely and voluntarily given the offense of rape is complete. Second. If the circumstances show that the consent was obtained by the use of force, and the woman's will was overcome by fear of personal injury, then the crime is rape. Third. If the woman ultimately consented to the intercourse, such consent not being freely or voluntarily given, but being obtained through fear, threats, duress, or fraud, or partly by fear and partly by force, then the offense is rape." It was held that such instructions, so far as they related to consent, were calculated to mislead the jury. Whittaker v. State, 50 Wis. 518, 7 N. W. 431, 36 Am. Rep. 856.

See 42 Cent. Dig. tit. "Rape." § 94.

30. An instruction that defendant was guilty if he forcibly and against the will of prosecutrix carnally knew her, whether she made any active resistance or not, amounts to saying that passive resistance, silent objection, is enough, which is not true where resistance is not overcome by drugs or similar means. Anderson v. State, 82 Miss. 784, 35 So. 202. Where a woman is in possession of her natural mental and physical powers, and not terrified by threats, nor in such a position that resistance would be useless, her failure to resist intercourse amounts to consent; therefore a charge that, "if there is nonconsent of the woman, the force incident to the act" of intercourse is all the force that is necessary to constitute rape, is error, for omission to state the kind of non-consent the law requires. 32. Arkansas.—An instruction that force, as a necessary element in rape, is to be taken in its ordinary acceptation; that it is common physical force; that acts of violence by which the woman is so much in fear of death or bodily harm that she is unable to resist is equivalent to force; and that the resistance must be in good faith, and not a mere pretense, is sufficient, rendering unnecessary a further instruction that the woman must make the "uttermost resist-properly be instructed to consider all attending acts and circumstances.[33] Where the female is over the statutory age of consent, but immature mentally and physically, the court should charge that if the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that she is too young to feel desire or to be capable of physical consent they should convict, but if not so satisfied they should acquit defendant.[34]

e. Assault or Attempt and Intent. and failing to charge or charging in reference thereto is not error.[45] The court should instruct the jury on an indictment for carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent that the essential elements of the crime are lack of age and intercourse.[46] In some jurisdictions it is held that if the indictment charges rape by force the jury should be instructed to acquit if she assented,[47] but this is not the general rule.[48] It is ordinarily error for the court in its instructions to assume that the female is under the age of consent;[49] but where there is no conflict in the evidence as to any fact it is not error for the court to assume such fact as true.[50] Where the evidence would support a conviction of a less offense the jury should be so instructed.[51] The jury should be instructed that it is not necessary to show age from the record in a bible or elsewhere, but that prosecutrix may testify as to her own age, or it may be proved by others,[52] and that the jury may consider her appearance in determining her age;[53] but the court must not in the charge assume that a mother knows the age of her child where there is contradictory evidence.[54] Since it is immaterial whether the child consented or not it is error to charge that she should have made outcry or complaint as this is important only on the question of consent.[55] In cases of statutory rape the jury may be instructed to con-

Where the mother of the prosecuting witness on a trial for rape testified to the age of the witness, admitting that she had testified differently on preliminary hearing, but explained that she had since obtained a certificate of her daughter's birth, it was error for the court to instruct that, "You have the direct testimony of her mother. . . . A mother surely knows, of her own knowledge, the age of her child," since the evidence showed that the mother did not know the age without the certificate. People v. Dickerson, 58 N. Y. An instruction, on a trial for rape on a female under fourteen years of age, that it was the duty of the prosecutrix to complain of the offense as soon as opportunity was afforded her, and a failure to make such complaint rendered the charge improbable, was properly refused, because applicable only to cases where, to constitute rape, the act of inter-

sider other acts in determining whether there has been carnal knowledge.[56] On a prosecution for assault with intent to have intercourse with a female under the age of consent, where it is shown that she is under the age of consent and no force was used, the court should instruct the jury as to the distinction between assault with intent to have sexual intercourse and the taking of improper liberties with the person of the child without such intent;[57] but if defendant intended to have sexual intercourse, although no force was used, he would be guilty.[58] In such prosecutions rape is properly defined as carnally and unlawfully knowing a female child under the age of consent.[59]

i. Chastity of Prosecutrix. The reputation of the woman for chastity affects only her credibility on the question of consent, and the jury should be so instructed.[60] It is not error to charge that it matters not what the previous character of the woman is.[61] But the presumption of the woman's chastity will not be allowed to control the presumption of defendant's innocence in those states where the statutes make former chastity material.[62]

57. On a prosecution for an assault on a female under the age of consent, with intent to rape, an instruction that the prosecutrix could not give consent, although she solicited intercourse, and, if defendant sought to have intercourse with her, he would be guilty, was misleading, as leading the jury to infer that it would be sufficient if defendant merely solicited intercourse with the prosecutrix. State v. Blackburn, (Iowa 1907) 110 N. W. 275. In a prosecution for an assault with intent to rape, it was error to charge that testimony of illicit intercourse between defendant and prosecutrix and of the latter's reputation for virtue was admitted, not in justification, but on the issues of the credibility of prosecutrix as a witness, and as to whether it was necessary that she should be forced to the embraces of defendant, since evidence impeaching the general reputation of a prosecutrix for chastity is always admissible, to raise a presumption of her consent, and as bearing upon defendant's intent. 62. Where there was evidence tending to prove that the prosecutrix, in a prosecution for rape, had been unchaste, and also tending to prove specific acts of unchastity, an instruction that the law presumes a woman to be chaste until the contrary is shown, and that on this presumption they might find the prosecutrix of chaste character, even against the declarations of any number of witnesses

j. Corroboration of Prosecutrix. A charge that no corroboration of the prosecutrix is necessary is correct in the absence of a statute or rule of law requiring corroboration.[63] But where a statute or rule of law requires corroboration the court should instruct the jury that corroboration is necessary, and of course it is error to charge the contrary.[64] The jury should be instructed as to what facts may be considered in corroboration, and the nature and effect of such evidence.[65] The jury should be instructed that there is no rule of law requiring them to receive with more than ordinary scrutiny the evidence of the prosecutrix;[66] nor is it necessary or even proper to charge "that rape is easily charged, hard to prove, and harder still to be defended by the accused,"[67] but the charge must not make which did not produce conviction in their minds, was improper, since, while the jury might infer her chastity as a matter of fact, a presumption of law to that effect conflicts with the controlling presumption of defendant's innocence. People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, 62 Pac. 297.

In a trial for rape, the court instructed that, if defendant had connection with prosecutrix as alleged, it was immaterial whether or not defendant was the father of the child born to her, except as bearing on the question of the credibility of prosecutrix; and in another instruction defined corroboration as evidence strengthening, sustaining, and corroborating the evidence of prosecutrix, and charged that, as bearing on that question, the jury should consider the testimony of other witnesses, together with all the facts and circumstances shown on the trial and tending to connect defendant with the commission of the offense. It was held that the instructions did not obviate the necessity for charging that the fact that a child was born to prosecutrix was not corroborative of her testimony that defendant had sexual intercourse with her. An instruction that, in determining whether or not a rape had been committed, the jury should consider the prosecutrix's demeanor, condition, and declarations immediately after the alleged commission, does not conflict with an instruction that, in case they found the crime had been committed, they should not consider the prosecutrix's conduct, declarations, or condition in determining whether or not she was corroborated in charging defendant with it. State v. Bailor, 104 Iowa 1, 73 N. W. 344. Washington.— In a prosecution for rape, an instruction that the relation of the prosecutrix to the crime is analogous to that of an accomplice, and that the jury ought not to convict on her testimony alone, unless, after a careful examination, they are satisfied of its truth beyond a reasonable doubt, is properly refused. State v. Mobley, 44 Wash. 549, 87 Pac. 815.

Wisconsin.— The suggestion customarily made to juries in prosecutions for rape that they should view the evidence of prosecuting witness with great care, and be on their guard against being moved by sympathy to give undue weight to the state's evidence, does not apply to a case where there was consent in fact. Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526.

67. Florida.— It is not a rule of law that the jury must view the offense of rape as one well calculated to create strong prejudice against the accused; nor that rape is an accusation easy to make and hard to be defended by an accused, although he be ever so innocent; nor is it a rule of law that the attention of the jury be specially directed to the difficulty growing out of the usual circumstances of the crime in defending against rape. These are merely arguments to be addressed to the jury by counsel, and the court

k. Outcry or Complaint by Prosecutrix. It is proper to instruct the jury that the failure to make outcry at the time or complaint promptly thereafter, unless excuse for delay is shown, is a circumstance that affects only the credibility of the prosecutrix, and the jury should determine the sufficiency of the matter of excuse for the delay, and the effect of such failure to make complaint.[69]

On a trial for rape it is error to charge that if the jury credit the testimony of the injured female they must find the defendant guilty. Such a charge is in effect a decision by the judge of the whole case, except the credibility of the witness. Giles v. State, 83 Ga. 367, 9 S. E. 783. If the prosecutrix, in a trial for rape, is shown to be unchaste, and of bad character generally, a charge to the jury that, "if the testimony of the prosecutrix as to the guilt of the prisoner is sufficiently clear and explicit to convince your minds beyond a reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt, then you would be authorized to convict upon her testimony alone; but, if you have any doubt of the prisoner's guilt upon her evidence, then you must inquire whether her evidence has any support"— is unfair, calculated to mislead, and apparently intended to rest the case wholly upon the testimony of the prosecutrix. Such a charge is good ground for a new trial. Leoni v. State, 44 Ala. 110. But where the court said to the jury, of the testimony of the prosecuting witness: "Is it true or false? . . . It is your plain duty, if you believe this woman fabricated this story, to find, if you can, the motive for such a course on her part," it was held that defendant was not prejudiced by this instruction, and it was not error to give it. l. Age of Defendant. The jury may be instructed that they may find from the appearance of defendant that he is over the prescribed age,[70] but when the age is fixed by statute the jury must be instructed that the burden is on the state to prove defendant over that age.[71]

m. Drunkenness of Defendant. The jury should be instructed generally that inability to commit the crime must be shown by defendant, but where defendant offers testimony of inability from drunkenness the rule is otherwise.[72] In the case of assault with intent to rape intoxication is a defense only where it is shown to such extent as to show inability to have the intent. If defendant's acts show intent drunkenness is no defense and the court should so charge.[73]

n. Character of Defendant. While good character can be no defense to a charge of rape, the jury should be instructed to consider it in determining the guilt of defendant.[74]

o. Identification of Defendant. The court may instruct the jury to consider the condition and surroundings of the prosecutrix when she identified defendant.[75] A charge that it must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime was committed by the prisoner, and that his absence, if shown, would be a full defense, is a sufficient charge, notwithstanding a subsequent instruction that the burden of proving an alibi is upon the one setting it up.[76]

70. An instruction in a rape case, where it is necessary that the jury be satisfied that defendant is over sixteen years old, that the state need produce no evidence, defendant being present and being evidence of his age, of which the jury are judges, cannot be held error; his appearance being evidence of his age, and there being nothing in the record to show that it was not sufficient. Where a defendant charged with rape offered testimony tending to show that, by reason of drunkenness at the time, he was physically incapable of committing the crime, it was error to instruct the jury that the burden was on him to show such incapacity, since it shifted the burden on him of proving that he did not commit the crime. q. Statute of Limitation. When a statute of limitation to the indictment exists the jury must be instructed to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the act was committed within the prescribed time.[78]

D. Verdict. The rules governing verdicts in criminal cases generally apply to verdicts in prosecutions for rape and for attempt or assault with intent to rape.[79] The verdict must indicate with certainty the crime of which defendant is found guilty, but the indictment, the instructions, the issues, and the verdict must all be considered together to ascertain whether it is sufficiently certain.[80] Under an indictment for rape, a verdict of "guilty of assault with attempt to commit rape" is responsive to the charge of assault contained in the charge of rape, and is, in consequence, a good verdict for assault, as the words "with attempt to commit rape" are mere surplusage.[81] The verdict must be responsive to the indictment so as to show with certainty of what offense the jury find defendant guilty.[82] A special verdict which fails to find every element of the Instructions sustained.— Where the defense was an alibi, the court instructed that it was not essential to a conviction that the criminal act be committed on the exact date charged in the information, a substantial compliance being sufficient, and thereafter the defense of alibi and the evidence were fully called to the jury's attention. Defendant claimed that as the state had offered evidence to prove that the crime was committed on July 2d, as charged, and there was no evidence that it was committed on any other date, and as defendant had offered evidence of an alibi on the date charged the first part of the court's instruction was erroneous. It was held that the jury could not have placed defendant's construction upon the instruction so as to disregard the defense of alibi, and the instruction was not erroneous in that respect. offense is insufficient.[83] If the verdict is inconsistent the one part with another it will be set aside.[84] Guilty of attempt to commit rape, and assault with intent to commit rape in some jurisdictions means the same,[85] but in other jurisdictions it is otherwise.[86] If an indictment contains more than one count a general verdict of guilty is uncertain.[87] In most jurisdictions under an indictment for rape the jury, if the evidence warrants it, may acquit of rape, and convict of any less offense included in the crime charged, and the issue as to guilt of such less crime should be submitted.[88] In some jurisdictions when the evidence shows that rape has been committed defendant cannot be convicted of a less offense,[89] but in other jurisdictions it is held otherwise.[90]

E. New Trial and Appeal and Error.[91] The granting of new trials on prosecutions for rape or assault with intent to rape is governed by the rules relating to new trials in criminal prosecutions generally.[92] Any intimation by the court as to its opinion on the questions of fact is generally ground for new trial.[93] If there is evidence to support the verdict a new trial will not be granted on the Newly discovered evidence.— Where, in a prosecution for rape on a girl under fifteen years of age, a new trial was applied for on the ground of newly discovered evidence tending to show that prosecutrix was over the age of fifteen at the time of the commission of the offense, and there was no evidence tending to show resistance, and it appeared that prosecutrix's reputation for chastity, truth, and veracity was bad, an order denying the motion was erroneous. Walters v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 79 S. W. 539.

93. People v. Barker, 137 Cal. 557, 70 Pac. 617; People v. Ricketts, 108 Mich. 584, 66 N. W. 483; People v. Blute, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 455; Owens v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 391, 46 S. W. 240. Where the circumstances in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape were such that the slightest intimation of the opinion of the court as to whether the prosecutrix resisted at all, which was a matter in dispute, might have had undue weight ground of insufficiency of the evidence;[94] but if the whole testimony is not inconsistent with the innocence of defendant the verdict should be set aside.[95] In the absence of anything to the contrary in the record it will be presumed that the prosecutrix resisted.[96] Where it appears that defendant was surprised by untrue testimony a new trial may be granted.[97] There is no ground for new trial on appeal if it appears that defendant could not have been injured by the error of which he complains.[98] Matters in the discretion of the court are not reviewable.[99] An

with the jury, it was error to advise them that they might consider "whether she made all the resistance at the time she was reasonably capable of under the circumstances surrounding her, considering the relative strength of the parties," thus apparently implying that the court was of the opinion that she made some resistance. On a trial for "assault with intent to commit rape," where the defense was an alibi, an instruction that "the defense of alibi is one easily manufactured, and jurors are generally and properly advised by the courts to scan the proofs of an alibi with care and caution," is not prejudicial to defendant, when in another part of the instructions the jury were advised that a charge of this crime was one easily made, hard to be proved, but still harder to be defended, even by the innocent, and they "should not suffer their indignant feelings to control or influence their judgment when considering such cases, but they should bring to the consideration of the evidence in the case their cool, deliberate, dispassionate judgment alone." State v. Blunt, 59 Iowa 468, 13 N. W. 427.

Missouri.— State v. Houx, 109 Mo. 654, 19 S. W. 35, 32 Am. St. Rep. 686. In a prosecution for rape, the admission of inducements by a woman to prosecutrix to accompany her and defendant on a trip was not prejudicial to defendant, where, before any overt act was taken pursuant to the woman's solicitations, defendant met the prosecutrix and added his solicitations to those of the woman, and told prosecutrix that the woman had told him about the proposed trip. State v. Miller, 191 Mo. 587, 90 S. W. 767.

New Mexico.— Territory v. Edie, 6 N. M. 555, 30 Pac. 851.

New York.— Upon a trial for rape, the judge refused to charge that defendant must have "accomplished his purpose in spite of the utmost reluctance and resistance on her part." The defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to rape. On writ of error, it was held that as the refusal to charge, even if it were error, did not in any way affect the crime of which defendant was convicted, but only that of which he was acquitted, it furnished no ground for reversal. Myer v. People, 8 Hun 528.

Texas.— Wilcox v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 392, 26 S. W. 989; Massey v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 371, 20 S. W. 758; Jenkins v. State, 1 Tex. App. 346. In a prosecution for rape, the fact that the prosecutrix held the baby, the fruit of the alleged crime, in her arms while she was on the witness stand, did not constitute reversible error, where the baby was removed from the court-room the moment the objection was made by defendant. Alcorn v. State, (Cr. App. 1905) 94 S. W. 468.

Washington.— State v. Courtemarch, 11 Wash. 446, 39 Pac. 955.

Wisconsin.— Jackson v. State, 91 Wis. 253, 64 N. W. 838. Where accused was convicted of assault with intent to rape, alleged error in instructions and admission of evidence bearing on rape will not be considered. Bannen v. State, 115 Wis. 317, 91 N. W. 107, 965.

See 42 Cent. Dig. tit. "Rape," § 104.

99. If courts have power to compel a personal examination of the prosecutrix in prosecutions for rape, it is a matter of judicial discretion, not reviewable on appeal. McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 147, 7 So. 35, 16 Am. St. Rep. 25.

order for a new trial applies to the whole case, and defendant may be tried again for all the charges in the indictment.[1]

F. Punishment — 1. Rape. The punishment for rape is fixed by statute. In some jurisdictions it is death;[2] while in others it is a capital offense unless the jury fix the punishment by imprisonment in the state prison,[3] and in others imprisonment in the penitentiary alone is provided.[4] In England the punish-

1. Where, under an indictment substantially charging the accused with assault and battery and rape committed upon a female as one and the same transaction, thereby charging only one substantive offense, that of rape, the charge of assault and battery being necessarily included in the substantive offense, the court improperly required the prosecuting attorney to elect whether to put defendant on trial for rape or for an assault and battery, and such attorney elected to put him on trial for rape, which trial resulted in a verdict of guilty of an assault and battery, the accused, by moving for and obtaining a new trial, took such new trial as to the whole case, and it was error to sustain his objection to being tried thereon for rape, and to put him on trial for an assault and battery. Mills v. State, 52 Ind. 187.

2. It is so in Arkansas (St. Dig. 1884) § 1570), Delaware (Rev. Code (1893), c. 77, § 10), Mississippi (Code (1906), § 1358), and North Carolina (Rev. (1905) § 3637).

Idaho.— Imprisonment not less than five years, may be for life. Pen. Code (1901), § 4914.

Illinois.— Imprisonment not less than one year, may extend to life. Starr & C. Annot. St. § 293.

Indiana.— Imprisonment not more than twenty-one nor less than five years. Rev. St. (1881) § 1917.

Iowa.— Imprisonment for life or any term of years. Iowa Code (1897), § 4756.

Maine.— Imprisonment for life. Rev. St. (1840) c. 154, § 17.

Massachusetts.— Imprisonment for life or for a term of years. Pub. St. Sup. (1888) p. 785.

Montana.—Imprisonment not less than five years. Codes (1895), § 453.

Nebraska.— If prosecutrix is the daughter or sister of defendant, imprisonment for life; in other cases not less than three or more than twenty years. Comp. St. (1903) § 7643.

Nevada.— Imprisonment not less than five years, may be for life. Comp. Laws, § 4698.

New Jersey.— Imprisonment not exceeding fifteen years, or fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or both. Gen. St. p. 1096.

New Mexico.— Imprisonment not less than ment was originally death, but this was afterward changed to castration and loss of eyes, and then the felon might be executed at the king's suit, unless the woman, if single, chose him for her husband and he consented. By 3 Edw. I, c. 13, it was changed, if at the king's suit to imprisonment and ransom, but if the injured party within forty days brought suit, the former punishment of castration and loss of eyes might be inflicted.[5] In the reign of Elizabeth it was again made punishable with death without the benefit of clergy.[6] In some jurisdictions the appellate court has power to review the judgment of the lower courts and to modify the same where the punishment is considered excessive. Imprisonment for long terms,[7] or for life,[8] and even the death penalty,[9] have been held not excessive punishments for rape. On the other hand the supreme court of Iowa reduced a sentence of fifteen years to five years, because under the mitigating circumstances it was considered excessive,[10] and a life sentence was reduced to a term of

New York.— If female under sixteen and no force is used, imprisonment not more than ten years; all cases where force is used, not more than twenty years. Laws (1892), c. 325.

North Dakota.— Carnal knowledge of female between age of ten and eighteen when no force is used is rape in second degree and punished by imprisonment not less than five years. Rev. Code (1905), § 8896. All other rape is first degree and punished by imprisonment not less than ten years. Rev. Code (1905), § 8895.

Ohio.— Rape of daughter or sister or child under twelve years of age is punished by imprisonment for life; all other cases by imprisonment not more than twenty nor less than three years. Rev. St. (1880) § 6817.

Oregon.— Rape upon sister of whole or half blood, or daughter or daughter of his wife shall be punished by imprisonment not less than twenty years and may be for life (Ballinger & C. Annot. Code, § 1761), and all other rape may be punished by imprisonment not less than three or more than twenty years (Ballinger & C. Annot. Code, § 1760).

Rhode Island.—Imprisonment not less than ten years, may be for life. Pub. St. p. 667, § 1, subs. 5.

South Dakota.— Sexual intercourse with female under ten, or imbecile, or by force is punishable by imprisonment for not less than ten years; all other rape by imprisonment not less than five years. Rev. Codes (1903), §§ 330, 331.

Utah.— Imprisonment not less than five years. Rev. St. (1898) § 4220.

Vermont.— Imprisonment for not more than twenty years or fine of not more than two thousand dollars, or both. Vt. St. § 4908.

Washington.— Imprisonment for life or any terms less. Hill St. (1891) § 28.

Wisconsin.— Carnal knowledge of female under fourteen, imprisonment from five to thirty-five years; rape by force of woman unchaste, imprisonment from one to seven years; if previously chaste, from ten to thirty years. Sanborn & B. Annot. Code (1898), § 4381.

9. Where defendant was convicted of rape of a child seven years old, the evidence showing that she was frightfully lacerated and injured, the death penalty was not out of proportion to the offense proven. Reyna v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 25. In a prosecution for rape it was shown that defendant met his victim on the railroad, beat her into insensibility, perpetrated the crime, and left her in an unconscious state on the railroad track. Her injuries were of a very serious character, and her life imperiled. It was held that the jury properly inflicted the highest penalty known to the law. Mischer v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 212, 53 S. W. 627, 96 Am. St. Rep. 780.

10. Defendant, a young man, pleaded guilty to rape on a female under the age of fifteen years. The act of sexual intercourse was consented to by the female. She went with plaintiff expecting that sexual inter-years.[11] If an offense is more highly punishable when committed on one class of persons than when committed on another, and if the indictment fails to specify to which class the person belongs, only the milder punishment can be inflicted,[12] but if the penalty is the same as to both classes it makes no difference.[13]

2. Attempt and Assault with Intent to Rape. Attempt and assault with intent to commit rape is punished with imprisonment, the term being fixed by statute in each state.[14] Where defendant is tried for rape and convicted of assault with intent to commit rape he may be punished for this offense, although the court does not have original jurisdiction of the less offense;[15] but the higher court can inflict no greater punishment than might have been inflicted in the lower court for the same offense.[16] Whether the punishment is excessive depends on the circumstances. Terms of great length have been sustained,[17] but in some cases they have been reduced.[18]

Minnesota.— O'Connell v. State, 6 Minn. 279.

Missouri.— State v. Scholl, 130 Mo. 396, 32 S. W. 968.

Tennessee.— A verdict of ten years' imprisonment for assault with intent to commit rape, when the indictment states no battery, is not sustainable under Shannon Code, § 6471, which prescribes that any person indicted for an assault with intent to commit any felony, where no other punishment is fixed, shall receive, as a maximum, five years in the penitentiary. Virginia.— Givens v. Com., 29 Gratt. 830.

Washington.—State v. Berzaman, 10 Wash. 277, 38 Pac. 1037.

15. The circuit court, having jurisdiction of the capital offense of rape, may impose the penalty for an assault with intent to commit rape when the jury acquits of the higher, but returns a verdict of guilty of the lesser, offense. Barker v. State, 40 Fla. 178, 24 So. 69.

16. Under Code, § 987, providing that where no deadly weapon has been used, and no serious damage done, the punishment in cases of assault shall not exceed a fine of fifty dollars or thirty days' imprisonment, provided that this shall not apply to cases of assault with intent to commit rape, on a conviction of a simple assault, where there is no evidence of bodily pain, there can be no greater punishment than therein prescribed, although the indictment was for assault with intent to commit rape. State v. Nash, 109 N. C. 824, 13 S. E. 874.

17. California.— Under Pen. Code, §§ 264, 671, rape may be punished by life imprisonment, or by not less than five years; and section 664 provides that an attempt to commit an offense may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one half the longest term prescribed upon a conviction of the offense. Under this statute punishment of attempt to rape by imprisonment for five years cannot be objected to on the ground that the term of half a life cannot be calculated, and that the statute therefore prescribes no punishment for attempt to rape. People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 127, 32 Pac. 880.

Georgia.— A sentence of twenty years upon conviction of assault with intent to rape, being within the limit prescribed by the statute, will not be disturbed as excessive. Dykes v. State, 64 Ga. 437.

Iowa.— State v. Bartlett, 127 Iowa 689, 104 N. W. 285.

18. Defendant, while riding with prosecutrix, a young lady twenty-two years of age, with whom he was but slightly acquainted, solicited sexual intercourse, and, on being refused, endeavored to compel her to submit by force. She, however, successfully resisted his attempts, after which prosecutrix remained on the wagon until she was driven to a house near by, where she arranged her toilet and walked to town, when she disclosed the occurrence for the first time to her aunt. Defendant did not deny the assault, but claimed that he had no intention of debauching prosecutrix against her will, and that when he discovered that she was determined in her refusal he voluntarily desisted in his efforts. It was held that a sentence of eight years' imprisonment on conviction of assault with intent to commit rape was excessive, and should be reduced to five years. III. CIVIL LIABILITY.

A. Right of Action in General. A female upon whom a rape is committed may maintain an action to recover damages for the injury sustained; the right of action not being merged in the felony.[19] A fortiori an action may be maintained for an assault with intent to rape.[20] And in a proper case an action for loss of services may be maintained by the father or master of the female.[21] In such actions by the female the maxim "Volenti non fit injuria" applies, and an action will not lie if plaintiff consented;[22] but conduct of plaintiff short of consent is no justification,[23] and if force was used to overcome the resistance of plaintiff and she finally consented to intercourse, although not in consequence of the violence, defendant is still liable for damages for the assault.[24] Where one upon whom a rape has been consummated obtains a judgment for the attempt or assault, it bars a subsequent action for the rape.[25]

B. Pleading. An allegation "that the defendant made an indecent assault upon the plaintiff and then and there debauched and carnally knew her" is sufficient in a civil action for rape;[26] and in an action for assault with intent to rape no particular form of words is necessary to designate the offense; it is sufficient if it be alleged in general terms.[27] Where a declaration contains a count charging

Touching of the person not necessary.— In an action of trespass for an assault with intent to ravish, an exposure of defendant's person and movements indicating an intention to have intercourse with plaintiff, and which caused her to fear that such was his purpose, constitutes an assault, without any touching of her person. Alexander v. Blodgett, 44 Vt. 476.

Action for attempt or assault where rape was committed.—Although Mo. Rev. St. (1899) § 2361 [Annot. St. (1906) p. 1454], provides that no person shall be convicted of an assault with an intent to commit a crime or of any other attempt to commit any other offense, when it shall appear that the crime intended or the offense attempted was perpetrated by such person at the time of such assault or in pursuance of such an attempt, one upon whom a rape is committed may maintain a civil action for the attempt; the fact that the lesser crime was merged in the greater being no bar to the action. Bormuth v. Beyer, 10 Ohio Cir. Ct. 291, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 548. The words, in the petition in an action for damages for an indecent assault, "did then and there assault plaintiff with foul and indecent purpose to rape and one charging an attempt at rape, plaintiff may recover damages for a common assault.[28]

C. Evidence — 1. Burden of Proof. In an action for rape the burden is on plaintiff not only to show the fact of intercourse, but also to satisfy the jury that it was accomplished by force and against her will.[29]

2. Admissibility — a. In General. Since, if the woman consented no action for damages will lie, any evidence tending to show consent or want of it is admissible.[30] Evidence of attending circumstances which tend to show the guilt or innocence of defendant or to corroborate plaintiff are admissible,[31] but not remote declarations of defendant.[32] Any circumstance that will corroborate plaintiff or will tend to contradict her may be proved.[33] The acts and conduct of the parties and appearance of plaintiff after the alleged assault and injury are admissible as touching the matter of consent.[34] It may be shown on the question of consent that plaintiff continued on friendly terms with defendant after the alleged outrage.[35] Clothing identified as that worn at the time may be shown to prove use of force.[36] Testimony of a physician as to the condition of plaintiff before and after the alleged assault, tending to show the commission of the act, is admissible; [37] but it is not competent, in an action for rape, for a physician to do violence to her person, and by force and intimidation to criminally know her, the said plaintiff," etc., are sufficient after verdict. Atkins v. Gladwish, 27 Nebr. 841, 44 N. W. 37. See also Linville v. Green, 125 Mo. App. 289, 102 S. W. 67, petition sufficient after judgment.

31. Stratton v. Nichols, 20 Conn. 327 (holding that in trespass for assault upon a woman with intent to have illicit intercourse with her, exclamations by her to defendant at the time of the alleged assault, "Let me go!" "Keep your distance!" "Keep your hands off of me!" to which defendant made no reply, were admissible in evidence against defendant); Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544, 7 N. W. 215 (holding that where in an action for an assault with intent to ravish, occurring at a hotel to which plaintiff had been induced to go, plaintiff testified that it would be of no use for her to make any noise, as he was in the habit of going to the house in question with women, and that the landlord expected him, it was admissible to show by another witness that defendant had tried to induce her (witness) to go to the same house with him, and had told her at the time that he was in the habit of taking girls there, and that all was arranged, such testimony tending to corroborate plaintiff).

Similar charges by plaintiff against others. — In an action for assault with intent to rape, evidence that plaintiff had made similar charges against other men, and obtained money by compromise is inadmissible. Ogle v. Brooks, 87 Ind. 600, 44 Am. Rep. 778.

32. Atkins v. Gladwish, 25 Nebr. 390, 41 N. W. 347, holding that in a civil action for an assault with intent to have carnal intercourse, statements made by defendant concerning plaintiff derogatory to her character, before and after the alleged assault, and too remote therefrom to be deemed a part of the res gestæ, are inadmissible.

33. In an action for damages for ravishing plaintiff, where she has testified that the intercourse, effected by defendant with force, was the first occasion of the kind in her life, and that it resulted in the birth of a child, evidence of a physician that pregnancy would not probably result from such an act is competent. 36. McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Iowa 322, 45 N. W. 877, holding that underclothing worn by plaintiff at the time of the alleged rape, although it has been since washed, and alleged bloodstains removed therefrom, is admissible in evidence in an action for the rape as tending to show, by its torn condition, that defendant used violence. See also supra, II, B, 2, b. (III).

37. Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544, 7 N. W. 215, holding that in an action for an assault with intent to ravish, it was not error to permit a physician, who was called in immediately after the assault, to testify that he had treated plaintiff for several years for a certain disease, and that, on the occasion in question, he found her in a condition which was unexpected, and for which he could not account until he was informed of the assault, and that he was satisfied that, if true, it would account for her changed state.

testify as to the result of experiments made by him for the purpose of ascertaining whether sexual intercourse could have been accomplished in the position which plaintiff has testified she and defendant occupied, where it is not shown that such experiments were made under such conditions as to size of persons as would necessarily show possibility or impossibility to have intercourse.[38] Testimony that defendant was living apart from his wife is not admissible, in an action for an assault with intent to rape, as tending to establish the offense.[39]

b. Complaint and Outcry, and Failure to Complain.[40] It is competent to prove that complaint of the outrage was made by plaintiff immediately or shortly afterward;[41] but the particulars of the complaint, unless part of the res gestæ, are not admissible.[42] Failure or delay of the woman to make outcry or complaint is admissible, and is a strong circumstance to show consent and want of resistance,[43] but such failure or delay may be accounted for by proof of circumstances which excuse such delay.[44]

c. Character of Plaintiff. The reputation of the woman for chastity may be shown as tending to show consent and absence of force, and as bearing on the question of damages, but the evidence must be confined to acts prior to the one complained of.[45] Evidence of specific acts of lewdness or unchastity has also been held admissible.[46] Plaintiff cannot introduce evidence of her good moral char-

38. McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Iowa 322, 45 N. W. 877. It is not error to refuse to allow the physician to testify as to such experiments, where he has been permitted to testify as an expert that sexual intercourse, under the conditions described by plaintiff, was impossible. McMurrin v. Rigby, supra.

41. McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Iowa 322, 45 N. W. 877 (holding that in an action for rape, where plaintiff has testified as to the ravishment, it is competent to allow a witness to testify that she stated to her, after the offense was committed, that she had been "hurt in the most brutal way any one could be hurt," since that was evidence of a complaint made by her of the injury done her, and not of the particulars of the rape); Gardner v. Kellogg, 23 Minn. 463.

Evidence of complaint inadmissible.— But it was held that the testimony of plaintiff's mother that plaintiff had, two weeks after the alleged rape, during which time she had continued at her work, and while she was not under treatment by a physician, complained that she had pains in her back and side, was inadmissible, since such declarations were not the natural result and expression of suffering, nor made to a physician for the purpose of treatment. McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Iowa 322, 45 N. W. 877. And in an action for damages for a series of indecent assaults, with rape, alleged to have been committed on the person of plaintiff during a period of eighteen months, while she was living in defendant's family, where it appeared that the acts complained of were committed in one of defendant's barns, which was within easy hearing distance from defendant's house and the house of plaintiff's relatives, which was her home; that there was no outcry at the time, and no complaint to any one during the continuance of the outrages, it was held that evidence of disclosures by plaintiff, made more than three years after the last of the acts complained of, and after plaintiff had lived with relatives in another state, was inadmissible as corroborative evidence. Dean v. Raplee, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 537, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 463.

42. Morrissey v. Ingham, 111 Mass. 63, holding that in an action for carnally knowing plaintiff, a girl ten years old, by force, and giving her a venereal disease, evidence of her statement to the physician who was treating her for the disease that defendant had had connection with her three months before was inadmissible.

44. Starnes v. Stevenson, (Iowa 1904) 98 N. W. 312; Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89, 37 N. W. 886 (holding that in an action of trespass, brought by a woman for assault accompanied with ravishment, her sense of shame, and her fear of defendant, if proved, should be taken into consideration by the jury, to rebut any unfavorable inference arising from her not making outcry at the time, and her silence in regard to the matter afterward); Linville v. Green, 125 Mo. App. 289, 102 S. W. 67; Dean v. Raplee, 145 N. Y. 319, 39 N. E. 952 [affirming 75 Hun 389, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 438].

W. 535, holding that in a civil action by a married female for rape, evidence that her reputation for chastity was bad was inadmissible as bearing on the improbability of her testimony; and, it having been admitted only to mitigate damages, it could not be considered for any other purpose.

46. Young v. Johnson, 46 Hun (N. Y.)

acter as part of her case, where no evidence attacking her character has been introduced;[47] nor is evidence of her good reputation admissible in rebuttal, where her general character has not been assailed, although defendant has shown specific instances of unchastity.[48]

d. Character of Defendant. Evidence of the good character of defendant is admissible;[49] but general reputation as to chastity is not admissible,[50] nor is his reputation as a quiet and peaceable citizen.[51]

e. Other Acts. Evidence of similar acts by defendant with others is not admissible.[52]

3. Sufficiency. The sufficiency of the evidence is generally a matter for the jury,[53] but if the evidence does not show an assault or rape, or shows consent on the part of the woman, a verdict against defendant must be set aside.[54] A preponderance of evidence is all that plaintiff is required to produce.[55] It is not

In an action for damages for ravishing plaintiff, evidence is admissible of dangerously familiar and imprudent conduct by plaintiff with other young men living in the same house with her, at about the time when, from the date of the birth of her child, she must have become pregnant. Young v. Johnson, 123 N. Y. 226, 25 N. E. 363 [affirming 46 Hun 164]. In a civil action for assault with intent to ravish, every species of evidence showing previous lascivious conduct on the part of plaintiff in the presence of defendant, or in her intercourse with him, designed or adapted to incite him to take liberties with her person, or induce him to believe that such advances on his part would not be unacceptable, are admissible. Crossman v. Bradley, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 125. In an action for assault with intent to ravish, evidence that plaintiff was in the habit of making indecent exposure of her person, and indulging in obscene language with men, is admissible in mitigation of damages, as showing that she had no modesty to be shocked by the act complained of. 53. Starnes v. Stevenson, (Iowa 1904) 98 N. W. 312. Whether or not it was possible for defendant, under the circumstances, to assault the plaintiff, and overcome her resistance, and commit rape upon her, was a matter for the jury. Wright v. Grant, 6 N. Y. St. 362. In an action for assault and battery by throwing down and ravishing plaintiff, who was then fifteen years old, and had lived with defendant and his wife as a member of the family for about a year, it appeared that plaintiff was delicate, while defendant was strong and vigorous. Plaintiff made no outcry, although persons were within hearing, and she did not speak of the matter to her female relations until long afterward. She testified that she tried to prevent the intercourse, and that defendant told her that it would be worse for her if she told any one. It was held that whether or not plaintiff submitted voluntarily was a question for the jury. Dean v. Raplee, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 389, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 438 [affirmed in 145 N. Y. 319, 39 N. E. 952].

Evidence held sufficient see Starnes v. Stevenson, (Iowa 1904) 98 N. W. 312; Linville v. Green, 125 Mo. App. 289, 102 S. W. 67.

Failure to make outcry or complaint.— In an action for a rape committed on plaintiff by defendant, the fact that plaintiff for a considerable period of time failed to disclose the crime did not conclusively discredit her testimony, but was merely a circumstance to go to the jury. Linville v. Green, 125 Mo. App. 289, 102 S. W. 67. See also Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89, 37 N. W. 886. A judgment for plaintiff in an action for assault will not be set aside where there is evidence that defendant threw plaintiff down and ravished her, she being a delicate girl of fifteen years, and in his employ, although she made no outcry at the time, nor complained for a long time afterward. Dean v. Raplee, 145 N. Y. 319, 39 N. E. 952 [affirming 75 Hun 389, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 438].

54. Lind v. Closs, 88 Cal. 6, 25 Pac. 972; Champagne v. Hamey, 189 Mo. 709, 88 S. W. 92. In an action for unlawfully entering plaintiff's dwelling-house, the evidence was that defendant came to plaintiff's house one night and asked if he could come in; that plaintiff answered that he could not, but defendant came right in, and began "fussing with his clothes,— fussing with his pants"; that defendant said nothing while in the house, but walked up to the bedroom door; that plaintiff ordered him to go out, and he passed through the house and went out at the front door. This was held insufficient to sustain a finding that defendant made an assault on plaintiff for the purpose of having a carnal connection with her. Ford v. Schliessman, 107 Wis. 479, 83 N. W. 761.

55. Dean v. Raplee, 145 N. Y. 319, 39

D. Instructions. In actions for rape and assault with intent to rape, the court should properly instruct the jury as to the effect of consent and want of force and resistance, and as to the effect of plaintiff's failure to make outcry or complaint.[57] In an action for assault, where the declaration in the first count charges rape, in the second an attempt at rape, and in the third common assault, it is error to charge that plaintiff must show, not only that defendant committed an assault on her, but that he did so with intent to compel her by force and against her will to have intercourse with him.[58] It is not error to refuse special instructions as to matters covered by the general charge.[59]

E. Damages.[60] In actions for rape or assault with intent to rape, damages may be allowed for mental anguish[61] and for physical suffering and disgrace,[62] but not for loss of reputation.[63] Exemplary damages may be allowed.[64]

N. E. 952 [affirming 75 Hun 389, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 438]; Wright v. Grant, 6 N. Y. St. 362. In an action by a woman for damages for an assault and battery, accompanied with ravishment that resulted in the birth of a child, plaintiff need not show that the assault was committed with such force and violence as to constitute the crime of rape, or to establish any fact in her case by more than a preponderance of the evidence. 57. Beseler v. Stephani, 71 Ill. 400.

Instructions sustained.— In an action of trespass, the injury complained of was an assault by defendant upon plaintiff, and having sexual intercourse with her against her will. The defense interposed was that the intercourse was with her consent. The evidence showed that plaintiff and defendant had such intercourse on frequent occasions, and that the result was the birth of a child. It was held that it was proper to instruct the jury that plaintiff was not entitled to recover for sexual commerce with defendant, or its consequences, if had with her consent. Beseler v. Stephani, 71 Ill. 400. In an action for damages owing to plaintiff's having been ravished by defendant and caused to become a mother, it was error to refuse to instruct that if at the time of the assault or within a reasonable time thereafter plaintiff had an opportunity to make an outcry and she did not do so, and did not do so as soon as an opportunity offered, or at any time prior to the birth of her child she did not complain of the assault, and that she continued on friendly relations with defendant, the jury should take such facts into the case in determining whether the defendant did have carnal knowledge with plaintiff by force, and that if the defendant did not have sexual intercourse with plaintiff, or even if he did with her consent, he was not liable. Champagne v. Hamey, 189 Mo. 709, 88 S. W. 92. It was proper to charge that plaintiff's failure to disclose the outrage committed against her within a reasonable time after opportunity to do so was a sufficient reason for impeaching the veracity of her story. Young v. Johnson, 123 N. Y. 226, 25 N. E. 363 [affirming 46 Hun 164].

Instruction not sustained.—In an action of trespass in assaulting plaintiff and having sexual intercourse with her against her will, defended on the ground that the intercourse was with her consent, it is improper in an instruction to define the crime of rape, and to direct the jury to find specially whether defendant did or did not commit a rape on plaintiff, since for the purposes of a civil suit the alleged acts of defendant constitute only trespasses. 63. In an action for indecent assault, an instruction that in case the jury find for plaintiff they may include, in their assessment of damages, compensation for "loss of good name, honor, and reputation," is error. Atkins v. Gladwish, 25 Nebr. 390, 41 N. W. 347.

IV. CRIMES BY NEGROES, SLAVES, ETC.

In many of the southern states, prior to the abolition of slavery, the punishment of slaves, negroes, mulattoes, etc., for crimes against white women was by statute made different from that of white men guilty of the same offense. This, however, is interesting now only as a matter of history.[65]

"Ratable distribution" is one which is made at proportionate rates. State v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 127 Iowa 198, 203, 103 N. W. 97, where it is said: "It may be conceded that, standing alone, the provision for ratable distribution among the creditors of the bank would require that all creditors be placed upon an equality, each receiving as much as the other, in proportion to the amount of his approved claim. But a 'ratable distribution of the assets among creditors, giving preference in payment to depositors,' is an altogether different proposition. Under the unqualified provision first mentioned, all creditors are placed in a single class; but under the statute as it stands they are separated into two classes, one of which is given preference over the other in the distribution of the assets. The distribution is still 'ratable,' although the classes may participate only in a stated order of priority." See DISTRIBUTION, 14 Cyc. 524.

Farms, horses, and money obligations are 'ratable estate,' merely because the Legislature has ordained that such property shall be taxed"); estate in its quality and nature capable of being rated; that is, appraised or assessed (Coventry Co. v. Coventry Tax Assessors, 16 R. I. 240, 241, 14 Atl. 877). It is not strictly "liable to taxation," so as to exclude property which, although taxable in its nature, is not taxable under the circumstances, as personalty when liabilities exceed assets. Coventry Co. v. Coventry Tax Assessors, 16 R. I. 240, 241, 14 Atl. 577. See ESTATES, 16 Cyc. 599; PROPERTY, 32 Cyc. 639.

"Ratable value" of stock is the actual value, appraised, or assessed value. Darrow v. Langdon, 20 Conn. 288, 295, so defining the term as used in a statute providing for forfeiture of one per cent of ratable value of stock of any bank transferred with intent to evade tax law.

"Ratable polls," within the meaning of the Massachusetts constitution, is a term said to include polls of male aliens above the age of sixteen years (Opinion of Justices, 7 Mass. 523, 529); within the meaning of the New Hampshire constitution, taxable polls of the age of twenty-one years (Opinion of Justices, 8 N. H. 573, where in construing a constitutional provision basing the number of a town's representatives on its number of ratable polls, it is said: "The constitution does not designate what polls are to be deemed rateable; but the ordinary import of the terms would seem to include all polls, of the age of twenty-one years, that may by law be taxed, within the description of rateable polls"). See POLL, 31 Cyc. 909.

"'Rateable' property" is property in its quality and nature capable of being rated; that is, appraised or assessed. Reg. v. Malden, L. R. 4 Q. B. 326, 329, 10 B. & S. 323, 38 L. J. M. C. 125 [quoted in Coventry Co. v. Coventry Tax Assessors, 16 R. I. 240, 241, 14 Atl. 877].

"Regular rates," as used in a parol contract for telephone services, found, as a conclusion of fact, to mean, at least for the purpose of that contract, the rates charged in the neighboring town. Martinsburg Bank v. Central Pennsylvania Tel., etc., Co., 150 Pa. St. 36, 39, 24 Atl. 754.

"Tariff" and "commercial."—"Tariff rate," as used in Tex. Rev. St. art. 4560*d*, providing for redemption of unused portions of railway tickets, is contrasted with commercial rate which is special, not fixed by law, to point out the rate fixed by law. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Cushman, 92 Tex. 623, 624, 58 S. W. 1009.

Unreasonable or unjust rates.— Under the Railroad Commission Law (Tex. Rev. St. (1895) art. 4565, 4566), giving shippers an action against the commission to secure reduction of rates unreasonably high, the same construction should be given to the phrase "unreasonable and unjust," etc., that would have obtained in a suit to recover from the carrier excess of charges paid, wherein, at common law, the terms "unreasonable and unjust" meant that the rate charged was more than a fair compensation for the services rendered, or that the difference in rate constituted an unjust discrimination against the complainant. Railroad Commission v. Weld, 96 Tex. 394, 405, 73 S. W. 529.

"Usual rates" of commissions, as basis of charge for customs duties, see Hutton v. Schell, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,961, 6 Blatchf. 48, 52.

RATIFY. To make valid, to confirm;[32] to sanction an act already done;[33] to give sanction and validity to something done without authority;[34] to give validity to the act of another;[35] to make valid, to confirm; to sanction; in legal phrase, usually, to approve or confirm by a principal what has been done by an agent or one assuming to act for another;[36] a definition of establish.[37] (See RATIFICATION, and Cross-References Thereunder. See also CONFIRM, 8 Cyc. 565.)

RATIHABITIO. In Roman law, the act of assenting to what has been done by another in my name.[38]

32. Austin v. Jones, (Ala. 1906) 41 So. 408, 411.

Implies appropriate precedent action capable of ratification. Revere Water Co. v. Winthrop, 192 Mass. 455, 462, 78 N. E. 497.

Imports the confirmation of acts already done, not the authorization of new proceedings in the future. Barker v. Chesterfield, 102 Mass. 127, 128.

Distinguished from "acquiesce" see Austin v. Jones, (Ala. 1906) 41 So. 408, 411.

"Ratified and approved" applied to a statute, in a constitutional amendment, may, where the context clearly requires it, imply the adoption of the statute into the constitution, although "ratify" and "approve," in their abstract meaning, are not the equivalents of such terms as "to make part of" or "to incorporate into." State v. Kohnke, 109 La. 838, 860, 33 So. 793.

"Ratified and confirmed" see CONFIRMATION, 8 Cyc. 566 note 25.

33. Stevens v. Melcher, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 514, 545, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 625.

34. Evans Agency 48 [quoted in Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 150, 156, 26 N. W. 861, adding: "By one individual on behalf of another"]; Steffens v. Nelson, 94 Minn. 365, 369, 102 N. W. 871.

Need of real or assumed agency.—"Adopted and ratified" — "These terms are properly applicable only to contracts made by a party acting or assuming to act for another. The latter may then adopt or ratify the act of the former, however unauthorized. To adoption and ratification there must be some relation, actual or assumed, of principal and agent." Ellison v. Jackson Water Co., 12 Cal. 542, 551 [quoted in Shepardson v. Gillette, 133 Ind. 125, 128, 31 N. E. 788]. Compare, however, as to ratification of one's own act, RATIFICATION, ante, p. 1528.

Implies power.—"To ratify . . . implies that the person or body ratifying has at the time power to do the act ratified." Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 451, 6 S. Ct. 1121, 30 L. ed. 178.

36. Lexington v. Lafayette County Bank, 165 Mo. 671, 683, 65 S. W. 943.

"In a legal sense, it means that a party having knowledge of a defect in an act done, and of his right to ratify or reject it, concluded to confirm it." Stevens v. Melcher, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 514, 545, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 625.

37. See 16 Cyc. 592 text and note 40.

RATIHABITIO PRIORI MANDATO ÆQUIPARATUR. A maxim meaning "A subsequent ratification is equivalent to a prior authority." [39]

RATIHABITIO RETROTRAHITUR ET MANDATO ÆQUIPARATUR. A maxim meaning "Ratification relates back and is equal to a command." [40]

RATING. Of vessels in insurance policies, the determination of their relative state or condition in regard to their insurable qualities.[41] (Rating: In General, see RATE. Commercial, see EVIDENCE, 17 Cyc. 405 text and note 56; MERCANTILE AGENCIES, 27 Cyc. 473, text and note 2.)

RATIO. Relative amount; proportion; the relation between two numbers or two magnitudes of the same kind; especially the relation expressed by indicating the division of one quantity by the other; or by the factor that, multiplied into one, will produce the other; [42] the relation between two similar magnitudes in respect to quantity; the relation between two similar quantities in respect to how many times one makes so many times the other; [43] (See PROPORTION, 32 Cyc. 681.)

RATIO DECIDENDI. The ground of decision; the point in a case which determines the judgment.[44]

RATIO EST FORMALIS CAUSA CONSUETUDINIS. A maxim meaning "Reason is the formal cause of custom." [45]

RATIO EST RADIUS DIVINI LUMINIS. A maxim meaning "Reason is a ray of the divine light." [46]

RATIO ET AUCTORITAS, DUO CLARISSIMA MUNDI LUMINA. A maxim meaning "Reason and authority, the two brightest lights of the world." [47]

RATIO IMPERTINENS. An impertinent reason, an argument not pertaining to the question.[48]

RATIO IN JURE ÆQUITAS INTEGRA. A maxim meaning "Reason in law is perfect equity." [49]

RATIO LEGIS EST ANIMA LEGIS. A maxim meaning "The reason of law is the soul of law." [50]

RATIO LEGIS EST ANIMA LEGIS; MUTATA LEGIS RATIONE, MUTATUR ET LEX. A maxim meaning "The reason of the law is the soul of the law; the reason of law being changed, the law is also changed." [51]

39. Palmer v. Yates, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 137, 151, adding, "i. e. gives the same validity to an act that upon the ground of a want of authority is sought to be impeached," and describing the maxim as "the sound and most reasonable maxim of the common law . . . borrowed from the Roman law, and now an element in the jurisprudence of every civilized nation."

40. Hewes v. Parkman, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 90, 95.

Shorter forms are: Ratihabatio mandato æquiparatur, meaning "Ratification is equal to a command" (Peloubet Leg. Max.). Ratihabitio mandato comparatur with a like meaning (see Broome Leg. Max. 656). See also OMNIS RATIHABITIO, etc., 29 Cyc. 1483.

41. Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 456, 472, 17 L. ed. 505.

RATIONAL. Having reason, faculty of reasoning; endowed with reason and understanding; agreeable to reason; not absurd, preposterous, extravagant, foolish, fanciful, or the like; wise, judicious;[52] a synonym of sane.[53] (See IRRATIONAL, 23 Cyc. 354; RATIONAL DOUBT; RATIONAL INTENT; RATIONAL INTERPRETATION; RATIONAL STATE OF MIND; REASONABLE. See, generally, INSANE PERSONS, 22 Cyc. 1104.)

RATIONAL DOUBT. In criminal law, a doubt as to all or any one of the constituent elements essential to legal responsibility or punishable guilt.[54] (See DOUBT, 14 Cyc. 869; REASONABLE DOUBT.)

RATIONAL INTENT. One founded on reason, as a faculty of the mind, opposed to an irrational purpose.[55] (See INTENT, 22 Cyc. 1454.)

RATIONAL INTERPRETATION. That which is used where the words do not perfectly express the intention of the writer, but either exceed or fall short of it, so that it is to be collected from probable or rational conjectures only.[56] (See INTERPRETATION, 23 Cyc. 37.)

RATIONAL STATE OF MIND. The natural state of every man.[57]

RATIONE CESSANTE, CESSAT IPSA LEX. A maxim meaning "The reason ceasing, the law itself ceases;"[58] that is, that no law can survive the reasons on which it is founded.[59]

RATIONE IMPOTENTIÆ. Literally "on account of inability." A ground of qualified property in some animals ferœ naturœ; as in the young ones, while they are unable to fly or run.[60] (See ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 308 text and note 20, 309 text and note 26.)

RATIONE MATERIÆ. By reason of the matter involved; in consequence of, or from the nature of, the subject-matter.[61] (Ratione Materiæ: Jurisdiction of Subject-Matter, see COURTS, 11 Cyc. 669.)

RATIONE PERSONÆ. By reason of the person concerned; from the character of the person.[62] (Ratione Personæ: Jurisdiction of the Person, see COURTS, 11 Cyc. 666.)

"Raw or unmanufactured article not enumerated," as used in the McKinley Act, U. S. St. (1890) § 4, imposing duty on such articles, does not include natural gas, it being a "crude mineral" under par. 651. U. S. v. Buffalo Natural Gas Fuel Co., 78 Fed. 110, 112, 24 C. C. A. 4. "Raw or unmanufactured articles" as used in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2516, includes hay. "Many articles are properly called raw which have undergone some manipulation. Cotton is picked from the bolls, and cleaned by ginning, and baled. Yet it is raw cotton in the bale. Wheat is cut, and the grains are threshed out, and then subjected to a cleaning machine, and then bagged. Yet it is raw wheat in the bag. So with other grains. The cotton and the grains undergo such change and preparation as exposure to light, and natural or artificial heat, and air, and the manipulation they receive, produce or allow, be it more or less. Yet neither the cotton nor the grains would be said to be manufactured. Salt and sugar are new articles. Cotton and grains are the same articles they were when on the plant with its roots in the earth. So hay is the same article it was when it was stalks of grass with roots in the earth. It is dried, to be sure; but the drying and any conversion of starch into sugar" (i. e. in the substance of the hay) "are mere incidents of the necessary cutting to enable it to be stored for food. . . . Dried apples would not be called a manufactured article, though the apple is peeled and cored and sliced, and dried by exposure to the sun and manipulation. The substance of dried apples is still apples. The substance of dried grass or hay is still grass. Change of name and manipulation do not necessarily constitute manufacture, within the meaning of section 2516. Each case must be decided according to its own circumstances." Applied to bills for acts pending before legislative bodies, the word has not acquired an exclusively technical meaning, and, in the absence of anything to the contrary in context or custom, is to be considered in its ordinary sense as "read at length" and is not satisfied by a partial reading. Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111, 112, 114, where it is pointed out that statements in Cushing Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, § 2141, and Bentham Essay on Political Tactics, as to the custom in the House of Commons, of reading the title and first words of a bill, are not authority for the proposition that custom has given a technical sense to the word, but that they refer to such partial reading as merely "nominal" or "substitutional," "satisfying the rule"; where also it is held that the word as used in Cal. Const. art. 4, § 15, providing that no bill shall become a law unless the same shall be read on "three several days," is to be taken in its ordinary sense, and demands that the bill be read at length upon each occasion. Contra, Saunders v. Board of Liquidation, etc., 110 La. 313, 330, 34 So. 457, where it is held that Const. art. 321, requiring that statutory amendments proposed be read in the respective houses on three separate days, does not require reading in full, and said: "We do not understand that a constitutional requirement which simply declares in general terms that a 'bill' should be 'read' twice or three times in each house before it can be enacted into a law, would carry with it the necessity of reading over each section of the bill at each reading, though the word 'bill' in its meaning covers 'the proposed legislation in its entirety.'" Compare Black Const. L. 326 [quoted in Saunders v. Board of Liquidation, etc., 110 La. 313, 330, 34 So. 457], where it is said: "The Constitutions of many of the states require that a bill . . . shall be read a certain number of times. . . . In respect to the manner of such reading the provision is considered merely directory, but not with respect to the fact itself. . . . Where the requirement is that the bill shall be read three times, it is the usual practice of legislative bodies to have it read twice by title merely, and once at length."

"Read law" among lawyers means to take up the study of the law with the purpose of being admitted to the bar and practising the profession; including also the reading of cases and text-books of which every lawyer does more or less after his admission. Benson's Estate, 169 Pa. St. 602, 604, 605, 32 Atl. 654, adding: "It certainly does not mean to read law books casually, for amusement or general instruction," and holding that the phrase in the expression "my nephews who may read law," in a will, meant "become lawyers."

I. DEFINITION AND HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT.

Real actions are those brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, or hereditaments,[1] the essential and distinguishing feature of which is that they seek to recover specifically the land and its possession.[2] The two most important forms of real actions were the writ of right,[3] and the writ of formedon.[4] These actions have long been in disuse in England and were formally abolished[5] there by 3 & 4 Wm. IV.[6] In the United States the action has been supplanted in a majority of the states by the action of ejectment which, although formerly a possessory action, is now used also to try title,[7] or by a statutory real action in the nature of ejectment,[8] while in a few states a statutory writ of entry serves the purpose of the ancient real action.[9] In Louisiana recovery of title to real property is by a petitory action.[10]

II. WRIT OF RIGHT.

A. Definition and Nature. A writ of right was one of the forms of real actions, and was the remedy appropriate to the case where the party claimed the specific recovery of corporeal hereditaments in fee simple, founding his title on the right of property or mere right, arising either from his own seizin or the seizin of his ancestor or predecessor.[11]

B. Title to Support Writ. In order to maintain a writ of right, there must be an actual seizin of a freehold estate in demandant,[12] or in his ancestor,[13]

It was a writ which lay for one who had the right of property against another who had the right of possession and the actual occupation. The writ properly lay only to recover corporeal hereditaments for an estate in fee simple; but there were other writs, said to be "in the nature of a writ of right," available for the recovery of incorporeal hereditaments or of lands for a less estate than a fee simple. 13. Copp v. Lamb, 12 Me. 312 (holding, however, that, although a writ of right was usually brought upon the seizin of an ancestor, it was not an ancestral action and demandant might count as well upon his own seizin as upon that of his ancestor); Fosgate v. Herkimer Mfg., etc., Co., 9 Barb. within the time limited by law.[14] The seizin might, however, be a constructive actual seizin, such as a patent of vacant lands,[15] and where the land was vacant and unoccupied, it was not necessary to prove an actual entry under title or an actual taking of esplees[16] in order to support the writ.[17] While it has been held broadly that a writ could not be sustained by a devisee upon the seizin of his testator,[18] this would seem to be more properly limited to the case of a devisee of occupied lands,[19] for it was generally held that the devisee of vacant and unoccupied land had by operation of law such a seizin as would enable him to maintain the writ.[20] Demandant in a writ of right was forced to recover on the strength of his own title and could not rely upon a defective title in his adversary.[21]

C. Against Whom Writ Lay. The writ lay only against the holder of a freehold estate.[22]

D. Defenses. In a writ of right, where demandant proved an actual seizin in deed, or pedis possessio, the tenant could not defend himself by showing a better outstanding title in another;[23] but where demandant relied upon a constructive seizin, the tenant might show an elder patent or better title in another,[24] and demandant counted on the seizin of the ancestor, and the tenant proved that the ancestor had parted with the land in his lifetime, but it appeared that the ancestor was disseized at the time of the conveyance, nothing passed by the deed, and demandant was therefore entitled to judgment.

But see Green v. Liter, 8 Cranch (U. S.) 229, 3 L. ed. 545, holding broadly that a better subsisting adverse title in a third person defendant could always defend on the ground that the demandant had been divested of his title.[25] It was no defense to a writ of right that, in an action between the same parties in which the right of possession of demandant's premises was put in issue, this right depended entirely upon the mere right of property, and that the question was submitted to the jury and decided against demandant, and that judgment was rendered thereon;[26] nor was it a defense that there had been a judgment on a petition for partition between the same parties in favor of the tenant upon an issue joined therein, on the sole seizin of demandant.[27]

E. Proceedings and Relief — 1. Joinder of Parties. If there were several tenants claiming parcels of land by distinct title they could not be lawfully joined in one writ, and if they were they might plead in abatement of the writ.[28]

2. Process. In New York the action was begun by personal service of writ of summons,[29] or by proclamation of summons,[30] and where the return on either was defective an alias summons went,[31] or the return might be amended.[32]

3. Pleading — a. The Writ. The pleadings in a writ of right were required to be in writing; [33] but a high degree of technical accuracy in describing the land or boundaries was not required.[34] It was necessary to allege in the writ a seizin was no defense in a writ of right. This case, however, was explained in Green v. Watkins, supra, to be limited to a case in which demandant proves an actual seizin in deed or pedis possessio, and in Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, supra, the court remarks that if anything in the case of Green v. Liter could be supposed to give countenance to the doctrine that a better subsisting adverse title in a third person could not be shown, where demandant showed a constructive actual seizin, its effect was nullified by the explanation of the court in Green v. Watkins, supra.

Jurisdiction in New York.— In 1786 a statute (1 Greenleaf Laws, p. 50) was passed in New York regulating writs of right, under which the court of common pleas had no jurisdiction, the sole jurisdiction in such suits being in the court of common pleas. (Va.) 68 (holding that if any portion of the land described in the count in a writ of right was included in the patent under which demandant claimed, it was sufficiently identified); Turberville v. Long, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 309 (holding that a count on a writ of right, referring to boundaries "as by a survey made in the cause," sufficiently described the boundaries of the land in dispute).

After the tenant joined the mise he could not complain of a defect in the setting out of the boundaries of the land. Bolling v. Petersburg, 3 Rand. (Va.) 563.

Where the demandant omitted to set forth the boundaries the judgment was erroneous. Beverley v. Fogg, 1 Call (Va.) 484.

A special imparlance saved the right of the party in real actions, and after a special imparlance the tenant might vouch to war-

either in demandant or his ancestors through whom he claimed;[35] but a writ containing two counts for the same land, one alleging demandant's own seizin and the other the seizin of his predecessors, was abatable.[36] Although it has been held broadly that it was necessary to allege the taking of esplees or profits,[37] this allegation would seem not to have been necessary where a constructive actual seizin was relied upon.[38]

b. Plea or Answer. Non-tenure,[39] joint tenure,[40] sole tenure or several tenure,[41] and darrein seizin,[42] were good pleas to a writ of right; and although it was generally held that these pleas were available only as pleas in abatement,[43] other cases held that they might be pleaded in bar as well as in abatement.[44] Where the tenant in a writ of right had a right of way merely in the land he should disclaim all title to it and possession of the land, except his right of using it for a way, and a plea averring seizin to be in the tenant for the purpose of enjoying the easement was bad;[45] but a plea of special non-tenure alleging that the predecessor under whom the tenant held was seized of the demanded premises was sufficient without stating of what estate he was seized.[46] Accord and satisfaction was not a good plea in a real action, where the inheritance or freehold was to be recovered, although the satisfaction was of as high a nature as the right of freehold.[47]

See also Liter v. Green, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 306, 4 L. ed. 246, holding that in a writ of right, where the demandant described the land by metes and bounds, and counted against the tenants jointly the tenants, by pleading in bar, admitted their joint tenancy and lost the opportunity of pleading the several joint tenancy.

In Maine, under the statute of 1846, non-tenure could be pleaded in abatement only. Hazen v. Wright, 85 Me. 314, 27 Atl. 181 (holding also that pleas of non-tenure and disclaimer being under the statute pleas in abatement only, if not pleaded within the first two days of the return-term, are no defense); Warren v. Miller, 33 Me. 220 (holding also that such a plea must, except by leave of court, be filed at the return-term of the writ, and that, although the action was continued, the necessity of filing such plea at the first term was not removed by an order of the court obtained on motion that demandant should file an abstract of his title by the middle of vacation).

The Virginia act of 1786, reforming the method of proceeding in writs of right did not vary the rights or legal situation of parties to writs of right as they existed at common law, and it did not therefore change the nature and effect of the pleadings or take away from the tenant the full benefit of the ordinary pleas in abatement, and the tenant might at his election plead any special matter in bar or give it in evidence on the mise joined. c. Amendment. Leave to amend writs of right was allowed under the same circumstances and upon the same terms as in other writs.[48]

d. Tender of Demi-mark. The tender of a demi-mark, which was a small sum of money, six shillings and eight pence, tendered and paid into court in certain cases on the trial of a writ of right by the grand assize, more usually by the tenant to obtain an inquiry by the grand assize into the time of demandant's seizin, and which compelled demandant to begin,[49] was unknown in American practice and vitiated the plea to which it was added.[50]

e. Joinder of the Mise, Proof, and Variance. Joinder of the mise, which was equivalent to the general issue in a writ of right,[51] put in issue the whole title,[52] including the statute of limitations,[53] which need not be specially pleaded,[54] and every special matter might be given in evidence thereunder, except collateral warranty;[55] but where defendant tendered the mise and no replication was filed, this was not joinder of the mise justifying a judgment by default against demandant.[56] The general rule that proof must conform to the allegations in the pleadings[57] applied to writs of right.[58]

4. EVIDENCE. The rules regulating the admissibility, weight, and sufficiency of evidence in common-law actions generally[59] applied to writs of right.[60] Posses-

See also Linton v. Bartly, 9 Leigh (Va.) 444, holding that where a writ of right was brought by demandants, who claimed as heirs, and the mise was joined on the mere right, evidence that there was another heir besides those named in the writ and count could not be given at the trial; that fact being pleadable in abatement only.

59. See EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 821.

60. Bell v. Snyder, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 350 (holding that where, in a writ of right, defendants claimed as heirs of B, the patentee of the land, and also claimed under seizin of their ancestors, the fact that in the pleadings and verdict demandants were spoken of as the heirs of B was not proof that they were the heirs of B, nor was the fact that the report of the surveyor, who surveyed the land in controversy under order of the court, spoke of one of demandants as heir of B, evidence that he was such heir). See Davis v. Teays, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 283 (holding that Supp. Rev. Code, pp. 159, 160, authorizing defendant in an ejectment or writ of right to set up an equitable title as a defense, limits that defense to cases where the whole contract relied on and its precise terms is manifested by plain written evidence; and hence the written sion of land, accompanied with a claim of the fee, was prima facie evidence of ownership and seizin of the inheritance uncontrollable by a stranger.[61]

5. Trial, Verdict, Judgment, and New Trial. In an action on a writ of right, the tenants were entitled to a view of the premises as a matter of right in all cases except those in which it was restrained by statute;[62] and where a tenant demanded a view, it was the duty of demandant to sue out the writ of view, and, if he did not, he was nonsuited.[63] The jury might find a special verdict,[64] and demandant might recover to such extent as he showed title, although it was less than his writ demanded.[65] A recovery in a writ of right did not affect any claim of the tenant to an easement in the land.[66] A new trial was granted in a writ of right, when the verdict was against the law and the evidence;[67] but a verdict or judgment substantially right, although not in exact legal form, would not be disturbed.[68]

6. Damages and Costs. The successful claimant in a writ of right was entitled to damages for mesne profits;[69] and where demandant in a writ of right entered contract itself must be produced before the jury, and parol evidence of its contents is inadmissible, although it may have been lost or destroyed); Taylor v. Burnsides, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 165 (holding that on the trial of a writ of right, preparatory to proof of entry on the land by an agent, a power of attorney from demandant to the agent, duly authenticated, and giving him authority over the land, was proper evidence); Robinett v. Preston, 2 Rob. (Va.) 273 (holding that where on a trial of the mise joined in a writ of right after demandants had introduced a grant to their ancestor embracing the land demanded, the tenant introduced an earlier grant of the land in two grantees, and offered to give in evidence a deed from one of these grantees, conveying by metes and bounds a particular part of the land to the person under whom the tenant claimed, the conveyance was admissible in evidence).

69. Purcell v. Wilson, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 16 (holding that Va. Rev. Code, p. 468, c. 118, § 1, authorizing the recovery of damages in writs of right, intended such damages as might be recovered in actions of trespass for mesne profits; and demandant's recovery of mesne profits would be for five years next before the bringing of the writ of right, and continuing down to the recovery of possession); Shaw v. Clements, 1 Call (Va.) 429 (holding that in a writ of right the jury might assess damages); Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. ed. 547 (holding that, according to the common law, the statute law of Virginia, the principles of equity, and those of the civil law, the successful claimant of land was entitled to an account of the mesne profits; and the common law recognized no distinction on this subject between a bona fide possessor and a holder mala fide). And see King v. Fowler, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 238, holding that where a grantee of a party who recovered in a writ of entry, being in pos-into a stipulation to try the case or be nonsuited, he must pay the costs of the last circuit or sittings in the same manner as plaintiffs in other causes for not proceeding to trial.[70]

III. WRIT OF FORMEDON.

A. Definition, Origin, and Nature. The writ of formedon was an ancient writ in English law which was available for one who had a right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. It was in the nature of a writ of right, and was the highest action that a tenant in tail could have; for he could not have an absolute writ of right, that being confined to such as claimed in fee simple,[71] and for that reason this writ of formedon was granted to him by the statute de donis,[72] and was emphatically called "his" writ of right.[73] The writ was distinguished into three kinds: (1) A formedon in the descender, which lay where a gift in tail was made and the tenant in tail aliened the lands entailed, or was disseized of them and died, in which case his heir in tail could have the writ; (2) a formedon in the remainder, which lay where a person gave lands to another for life or in tail with remainder to a third person in tail or in fee, and he who had a particular estate died without issue inheritable, and a stranger intruded upon him in remainder and kept him out of possession, in which case the remainder-man could have the writ; and (3) a formedon in the reverter, which lay where there was a gift in tail and afterward by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body the reversion fell in upon the donor, his heirs or assigns, in which case the reversioner could have the writ.[74] This writ was abolished in England by the statute which abolished the ancient real action,[75] and is found in the United States only in the earlier cases.[76] As a deed of bargain and sale by a tenant in tail conveyed nothing but his life-estate to the buyer, it did not work a discontinuance against the heir in tail, or pass any of his estate, so that upon determination of the life-estate he might enter and was not put to his action of formedon.[77] Where the statute of limitations had run for twenty years against an heir in tail, no formedon could afterward be maintained.[78]

B. Pleading and Proof. A declaration in formedon in remainder must set out the gift, the seizin of the first donee, and the demandant's title to the estate, and that, on the death of the tenant for life, the right to the estate remained in him; and the seizin of the first donee must also be proved, and where the demandant in a writ of formedon in remainder claimed as devisee, declaring on his own seizin, he must prove his own seizin, as it was not in law to be presumed from the fact that the testator died seized.[79] A plea of non-tenure in a writ of formedon in remainder without disclaimer was sufficient.[80]

IV. PETITORY ACTION.

A. Definition and Nature. A petitory action is an action in which the mere title to the property is litigated, and sought to be enforced, independently of any possession, which has previously accompanied or sanctioned that title,[81] session of the land, sowed it during the pendency of a writ of right against him, and demandant in the writ of right recovered judgment and obtained seizin and possession before the crop was severed, demandant was entitled to the crop.

Statutory definition.— "The petitory action is that by which he who has the property of a real estate, or of a right upon or growing out of it, proceeds against the person having the possession, in order to obtain the possesand is to be distinguished from a possessory action, which seeks to restore to the owner the possession of which he had been unjustly deprived, when that possession has followed a legal title, or, as it is sometimes phrased, when there has been a possession under a claim of title with a constat of property.[82]

B. Title to Support Action. To recover in a petitory action as against a possessor in good faith, plaintiff must show a good legal title in himself in all respects,[83] which can be traced back to an author who had in himself the right sion of the immovable property, or the enjoyment of the rights upon it, to which he is entitled." Garland Rev. Code Pr. La. p. 3; La. Code Pr. § 5.

Actions held to be petitory actions.—Where a judgment creditor sues for a recovery of his debtor's property in the hands of a third person, in order to make it liable for his debt, such suit is not a revocatory action, but in the nature of a petitory action. Spencer v. Goodman, 33 La. Ann. 898. Where plaintiff represents that he is the owner or proprietor of a certain square of ground, and describes its location and boundaries, and further alleges that he has always been in possession and enjoyment of the whole of said square, and prays that his title thereto, with all the buildings and improvements thereon, may be recognized, and that he be put in possession thereof, the action is a petitory one. Millaudon v. Ranney, 18 La. Ann. 196.

Action held not to be petitory.— Where plaintiff alleges that he himself is the owner of certain property, and was then and had been in possession of the same for over ten years under title, and that defendant had trespassed and was still trespassing upon the same by cutting down and hauling off timber thereon under claim of an absolutely null tax title, which he had spread upon the record and prays that he be quieted in his own ownership and possession of the property, that he recover damages from the defendant for his trespass, and that the tax title be declared null and void, his action is not a petitory action. Gilmore v. Schenck, 115 La. 386, 39 So. 40.

83. Glover v. Haley, 118 La. 649, 43 So. 265; Lyons v. Lawrence, 118 La. 461, 43 So. 51 (holding that where plaintiff in a petitory action traces her title to her father as her author, and the evidence shows that he purchased the property in his own behalf at a time when the daughter was a minor, and that he sold the property before she arrived at her majority, and it passed into the hands of a third person, no title in the daughter is shown); Walker v. Levy, 118 La. 196, 42 So. 771 (holding that where the evidence shows that defendant has been in possession of the premises in controversy for a number of years under title translative of property, and there is no evidence to show how the rights of plaintiff ever covered the property in possession of defendant, judgment for defendant should be rendered); Wilson v. Ober, 109 La. 718, 33 So. 744 (holding that where plaintiff alleges that defendant is in possession claiming as owner, but discloses no title in himself, he cannot recover); Hargrave v. Mouton, 109 La. 533, 33 So. 590; Boyle v. West, 107 La. 347, 31 So. 794 (holding that an act of donation, null and void, cannot be made the basis of a petitory action); Frere v. Derouen, 104 La. 777, 29 So. 330 (holding that where plaintiff claims a small tract of land, which, as a fact, forms a part of a large plantation, and appears to have been so considered for nearly thirty years, during which the plantation has changed hands several times, such plaintiff, in order to recover, must identify the tract claimed by him, and must show affirmatively that it could not reasonably have been included in the description whereby the plantation was sold); Worden v. Fischer, 52 La. Ann. 576, 27 So. 83 (holding that in order to obtain a judgment by course of law against one in possession plaintiff must show a title as valid as any title defendant can plead, whether it be his own or that of someone else); Willet v. Andrews, 51 La. Ann. 486, 25 So. 391; Parish Bd. School Directors v. Rollins, 33 La. Ann. 424 (holding that where a board of school directors sued to recover a lot of land claimed to have been set aside by the United States for educational purposes, and it did not satisfactorily appear that the land was ever selected as such under act of congress, a judgment of nonsuit should be entered); Cronan v. Cochran, 27 La. Ann. 120; Sulstrang v. Betz, 24 La. Ann. 295 (holding that as real property in the name of a married woman belongs to the community, she cannot maintain a petitory action to recover it, without alleging and showing that she has acquired the community interest in the property since its dissolution); Caze v. Robertson, 14 La. Ann. 232; Hemken v. Brittain, 12 Rob. (La.) 46; D'Orgenoy v. Droz, 13 La. 389; Baudin v. Roliff, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 98; Murray v. Boissier, 10 Mart. (La.) 293; Gilmer v. Poindexter, 10 How. (U. S.) 257, 13 L. ed. 411. But see Winter v. Atkinson, 28 La. Ann. 650, holding that in a petitory action it is not necessary for plaintiff to show title to all the property in a suit to recover his share thereof, since the question as to the validity or extent of his title will arise on the merits.

One who has allowed his lands to be sold to pay his debts cannot afterward maintain a petitory action for the recovery of the land against the purchaser at the judicial sale. Tregre v. Baudry, 23 La. Ann. 18.

The formal probate of a will cannot be disregarded by parties claiming as heirs of the testator, but never in possession, and they of property,[84] and if he bases his claim on a complete legal title, he must prevail, unless defendant shows a better title.[85] But plaintiff can recover on no other title than that on which he declares,[86] nor more property than he demanded,[87] and must recover on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of that of his adversary.[88] To recover against a mere trespasser, however, who cannot institute a petitory action without seeking to annul such probate. Deslondes v. New Orleans, 14 La. Ann. 552.

The regular patent from the United States gives a perfect legal title, which cannot be affected by an alleged error or mistake in the description of the land entered and patented to defendant's authors. Foster v. Meyers, 117 La. 216, 41 So. 551.

A receiver's receipt is sufficient evidence of title from the United States to support a petitory action. Beaumont v. Covington, 6 Rob. (La.) 189; Lott v. Prudhomme, 3 Rob. A certificate of entry issued under the United States homestead law vests in the holder a sufficient title to support a petitory action (Broussard v. Broussard, 43 La. Ann. 921, 9 So. 910); but abstracts of certificates of entry, attested by the register as on file and agreeing with the registry of sales and records of his office, even if admissible, are insufficient (Basseron v. McRae, 9 La. Ann. 281).

A confirmation by an act of congress is a title on which claimant can maintain a petitory action. Morrough v. Moss, 5 La. Ann. 601.

An act of sale, containing a stipulation whereby the vendee binds himself to retransfer the land to the vendor when the timber shall have been removed, or after fifty years, although the timber be not removed, vests an imperfect ownership, and affords sufficient basis for a petitory action. Ruddock Cypress Co. v. Peyret, 111 La. 1019, 36 So. 105.

A widow in community and the heir of age have the legal capacity to institute a petitory action to recover property which the husband owned, and which is claimed by others, although twenty-three years have elapsed since a succession sale of part of the property, where the heir was a minor at the time of the sale and of the administration of the estate, and where no debts appear to be due by the succession, and no administration was provoked by creditors. Messick v. Mayer, 52 La. Ann. 1161, 27 So. 815.

84. Gatlin v. Hutchinson, 36 La. Ann. 350 (holding that in a petitory action, based on a title derived from the state to property claimed to have been forfeited to the state, it is not enough for plaintiff to prove his deed and its registry, but he must show that the state had acquired a valid title to the property); Brown v. Brown, 15 La. Ann. 169. But see Tucker v. Burris, 13 La. Ann. 614, holding that where one claims from the confirmee of a grant, it is not necessary to trace title to the original claimant, it being sufficient if it is traced to the confirmee, whose existence is not contested.

85. Marmion v. McPeak, 51 La. Ann. 1631, 26 So. 376; Dupre v. Helm, 23 La. Ann. 491 (holding that where plaintiff shows a good and valid title, and defendant holds under a title translative of property, but it is shown that the title of his vendor is defective, plaintiff is entitled to recovery).

The adjudicatee of property at a judicial sale to effect a partition thereof among the heirs of a deceased person, and having received an authentic act thereto, is the holder of a just and translative title, and entitled to judgment in a petitory action against a possessor without title. 86. Barbier v. Nagel, 121 La. 979, 46 So. 941 (holding that where plaintiff in a petitory action relies on the title describing totally different property from that sued for, and the evidence makes it probable that it was the intent of his author to sell the property described, there can be no recovery); West v. Negrotto, 48 La. Ann. 922, 19 So. 819.

A mere admission of plaintiff's title is not sufficient ground upon which to base a judgment against defendant without proof connecting defendant with the land claimed. Girard v. New Orleans, 13 La. Ann. 295.

No relative nullities in the title of either plaintiff or defendant can be inquired into, even though there has been fraud. Devall v. Choppin, 15 La. 566.

Defendant who shows a better title than plaintiff is entitled to a final judgment, and sets up no title in himself, plaintiff need not show a title perfect in all respects against the whole world; one apparently good will suffice;[89] but, even against a naked possessor, plaintiff is bound to produce a title anterior in date to the possession of defendant, in order to establish ownership in himself and repel the presumption of ownership in defendant resulting from his possession.[90] A defendant, sued for disturbance, cannot bring a petitory action until after judgment in the possessory one, and, if condemned, not until he has satisfied the judgment.[91]

C. Against Whom Action May Be Maintained. A petitory action can be brought only against a party in actual possession of the property in dispute.[92] Where a farmer or lessee is sued in a petitory action, he must declare to plaintiff the name and residence of the lessor or owner who shall be made a party to the suit, if he resides in the state or is represented therein, and such lessor must then defend in place of the tenant, in default of which nothing but the right of possession can be tried in the suit,[93] and where the lessor is brought in he is the real not merely one of nonsuit. Guidry v. Woods, 19 La. 334, 36 Am. Dec. 677.

Defendant's title need not be considered where the action fails on account of the weakness of plaintiff's showing of title. Willett v. Andrews, 51 La. Ann. 486, 25 So. 391.

Ann. 76 (holding that, although, in a petitory action, plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, yet, when defendant has no title at all, he cannot, as a trespasser, take advantage of any defect in the muniments of title shown by plaintiff); Coussy v. Cummings, 12 La. Ann. 748; Doles v. Cockrell, 10 La. Ann. 540 (holding that, to sustain a petitory action against a mere possessor, it is sufficient for plaintiff to show a title translative of the property sued for, together with the receiver's certificate, showing that the land was located by the person making the title); Stephenson v. Goff, 10 Rob. (La.) 99, 43 Am. Dec. 171; Bonis v. James, 7 Rob. (La.) 149; Fanchonette v. Grangé, 5 Rob. (La.) 510; Baillio v. Burney, 3 Rob. (La.) 317; Thomas v. Turnley, 3 Rob. (La.) 206.

If defendant, although alleging title, does not state its character or derivation, he is considered but a mere trespasser against whom plaintiff need show only an apparent title. Broughton v. King, 9 Rob. (La.) 215.

An order of survey, although not a positive grant, will prevail against a possessor without title. King v. Martin, 5 Mart. (La.) 197.

A joint heir, joint proprietor, or coparcener may maintain the action against a mere possessor without title for the whole undivided succession or property. Mays v. Witkowski, 46 La. Ann. 1475, 16 So. 478; Gordon v. Fahrenberg, 26 La. Ann. 366; Compton v. Mathews, 3 La. 128, 22 Am. Dec. 167.

The personal representative of the heir of the original locator of lands may maintain the action against one in possession without title. Gordon v. Fahrenberg, 26 La. Ann. 366.

90. Young v. Chamberlin, 15 La. Ann. 454; Dugas v. Truxillo, 15 La. Ann. 116; Bedford v. Urquhart, 8 La. 241, holding that plaintiff must produce a title as owner causa idonea ad transferendum dominium, to repel the presumption of ownership resulting from mere possession, and the date of his title must be anterior to defendant's possession; but that he is not bound to show title in himself good against the whole world.

91. D'Orgenoy v. Droz, 13 La. 389.

92. Ledoux v. Kornbacher, 118 La. 652, 43 So. 266 (holding that on proof that the property is not in his possession defendant is entitled to have the suit dismissed as of nonsuit); Millaudon v. Ranney, 18 La. Ann. 196 (holding that petitory actions must be brought against the person who is in actual possession of the immovables, although he be only the farmer or lessee); Girard v. New Orleans, 13 La. Ann. 295; Dreux v. Kennedy, 12 Rob. (La.) 489 (holding that under Code Pr. art. 43, requiring petitory actions to be brought against the party in possession, defendant need not have the right to possess, it being sufficient that he have possession); Barnes v. Gaines, 5 Rob. (La.) 314 (holding, however, that the word "actual," in Code Pr. art. 43, which requires that a petitory action must be brought against the person in actual possession of the immovable, does not mean strictly a natural or corporeal possession, in the sense of articles 3391, 3393, Civ. Code, but applies as well to a civil possession, where defendant pretends to possess as owner; and hence defendant's civil possession, preceded by an actual corporeal detention of the property, will suffice); Delogny v. Dixon, 5 La. 356.

93. Adams v. Drews, 110 La. 456, 34 So. 602 (holding that where an action is brought to recover real estate and for the value of timber alleged to have been removed therefrom, if the actual possessor disclaims title, and discloses the name of the owner, who is made party defendant, there is nothing left of the suit but the claim for the value of the timber, which, being segregated from the claim against the owner, should be asserted by a personal action brought at his domicile); Millaudon v. Ranney, 18 La. Ann. 196; Young v. Chamberlin, 15 La. Ann. 454; Young v. Chamberlin, 14 La. Ann. 687 (holding also that the lessee cannot defend the suit by calling in warranty his lessor's vendor, with-defendant;[94] but if such owner or lessor do not live in the state or is not represented therein,[95] or in the United States, against which no direct action can be brought,[96] lessee must defend. Plaintiff in a petitory action has no right to call his vendor in warranty, and the court in which such action is brought has no authority to compel the warrantor who does not reside within its jurisdiction to litigate in response to such call, and prohibition will issue to stay the exercise of such authority.[97] One may intervene in a petitory action, and try his title to the land, provided he calls no parties in warranty and in no way delays the suit.[98] Where, by the act of defendant and the acquiescence of plaintiff, an action of boundary is changed to a petitory action, defendant in the original suit becomes the plaintiff in the petitory action.[99]

D. Defenses. In a petitory action defendant may avail himself, in defense, of any defect in the title opposed to his,[1] and is entitled to show a better subsisting legal title in a third person;[2] but where an outstanding title in a third person is set up, and plaintiff produces a title from that person himself, defendant cannot attack it for relative nullities, but it must stand until set aside by a proper proceeding between the parties in interest themselves.[3] Defendant can attack the validity of the proceeding under which plaintiff acquired his title,[4] or can show that plaintiff's title has been divested by judicial proceedings;[5] but if defend-out making the lessor a party, or entering an appearance for him).

Jurisdiction.— The court in which a petitory action is brought, if the possessor disclaims title and cite his lessor to defend, has jurisdiction, although the lessor reside in another parish. Fusilier v. Hennen, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 71.

96. Dreux v. Kennedy, 12 Rob. (La.) 489, holding that an exception that the property is in possession of the United States, a branch mint having been erected thereon; that defendants are merely officers of the mint, not in possession, and without authority to represent the United States; and that the action is an attempt to effect indirectly what plaintiffs could not do directly will be overruled.

Parties without titles, occupying lands, may be joined as defendants in a suit for the lands by plaintiff asserting ownership. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Elmore, 46 La. Ann. 1237, 15 So. 701.

1. Worden v. Fisher, 52 La. Ann. 576, 27 So. 83; Hart v. Foley, 1 Rob. (La.) 378, holding that defendant may urge, by way of exception to plaintiff's title, whatever he could plead in a direct action of nullity. But see Coucy v. Cummings, 12 La. Ann. 748, holding that a mere trespasser, who is defendant in a petitory action, cannot defeat a prima facie title made out by plaintiff on the ground of the non-registry of such title.

Inconsistent defenses.— The defenses to a petitory action that the land was acquired as alluvion or as relicted land, and that it was acquired as dry land within the boundaries of the original purchase, are conflicting, and cannot stand together. Hall v. Bossier Levee Dist., 111 La. 913, 35 So. 976.

2. Shreveport v. Marks, 117 La. 143, 41 So. 444; Slattery v. Heilperin, 110 La. 86, 34 So. 139 (holding that where, on the trial of a petitory action, it appears that the title to the land in dispute is apparently in a third person, rather than in plaintiff, the latter will be nonsuited); West v. Negrotto, 52 La. Ann. 381, 27 So. 75 (holding, however, that the outstanding title must be a valid, legal, subsisting title, better than that of plaintiff); Choppin v. Michel, 11 Rob. (La.) 233; Williams v. Riddle, 10 Rob. (La.) 505; Thomas v. Turnley, 3 Rob. (La.) 206. But see Leathem, etc., Lumber Co. v. Nalty, 109 La. 325, 33 So. 354, holding that defendant in a petitory action cannot attack the title of the actual owner, which plaintiff advances as his own, on grounds which concern the parties to that title alone, and which they themselves do not urge.

3. Adolph v. Richardson, 52 La. Ann. 1156, 27 So. 665; West v. Negrotto, 52 La. Ann. 381, 27 So. 75.

4. Cronnan v. Cochran, 27 La. Ann. 120; Surgi v. Colmer, 22 La. Ann. 20, holding that the party assailed may inquire into the regularity of the proceedings under an order of seizure and sale, by which the attacking party acquired title to the property; and, if the formalities required by law have not been observed in making the sale under the order, the title of the sheriff is a nullity. But see Stille v. Shull, 41 La. Ann. 816, 6 So. 634, holding that where a tax deed, under which plaintiff in a petitory action claimed, was executed forty years before the commencement of the action, was valid in form, and there were no irregularities or defects on its face, defendant, who was a trespasser, could not show any defects in the title of plaintiff.

5. Beland v. Gebelin, 46 La. Ann. 326, 14 So. 843, holding, however, that before an ex-ant obtained possession under title from plaintiff, he cannot throw it aside, and, setting up possession, plead prescription;[6] nor can he invoke prescription under a defective title in a third person,[7] and if the parties trace their titles to the same source, neither can attack the title of their common author;[8] but he who is prior in time will prevail.[9] An offer by plaintiff to buy defendant's claim against the property is not such a recognition of defendant's title as will prevent plaintiff from recovering.[10]

E. Pleading. A high degree of technical accuracy is not required in the petition in describing the property demanded,[11] and if the land had not been properly described, the petition may be amended so as to supply the defect or correct the error,[12] and although the petition insufficiently describes the property, defendant by subsequently filing an amended answer waives the defect.[13] A plea, in ception of a defendant that plaintiff's title has been divested by judicial proceedings is sustained, his legal interest to take such exception must appear.

6. Broughton v. King, 9 Rob. (La.) 215 (holding, however, that if defendant did not obtain possession under a title from plaintiff, plaintiff cannot force the title on him against his will); Crane v. Marshal, 1 Mart. N. S. (La.) 577.

7. Mays v. Witkowski, 46 La. Ann. 1475, 16 So. 478.

8. Pecot v. Prevost, 117 La. 765, 42 So. 263; Randolph v. Laysard, 36 La. Ann. 402, holding, however, that where plaintiff claims under title which he asserts was warranted by the authority of defendant's title, and that defendant is thereby estopped from setting up his title against him, the fact of warranty must be clearly established, and may he disproved by evidence showing a distinct and continued acknowledgment of the title of defendants, offered by those from whom or through whom plaintiff claims. Girault v. Zuntz, 15 La. Ann. 684; Loyd v. Mortee, 14 La. Ann. 107; Bedford v. Urquhart, 8 La. 234, 28 Am. Dec. 137; Trahan v. McMannus, 2 La. 209. See also Bedford v. Urquhart, 8 La. 234, 28 Am. Dec. 137, holding that when the last warrantor cited sets up no title, but pleads a general denial, plaintiff may show that the former derives his title from the same common source, and is forbidden to attack it.

If plaintiff claims under two titles and defendant claims under the first, he may plead the nullity of the second title. Granger v. Sallier, 110 La. 250, 34 So. 431.

Where defendant does not set up title, but pleads the general issue, plaintiff is not relieved from proving a legal title by showing that defendant's emanates from the same source, and so has the same defect. Sassman v. Aime, 9 Mart. (La.) 257.

9. Fortier v. Roane, 104 La. 90, 28 So. 994; Worden v. Fisher, 52 La. Ann. 576, 27 So. 83, where plaintiff claimed title to the land in question by reason of a certificate of entry and a patent confirming such certificate, both issued by the state at a date later than a sale by the state to defendant, and a decree confirming the title in the state, on which such sale was based, and it was held that plaintiff could not recover. But see Culliver v. Garic, 11 La. 88, holding that plaintiff in a petitory action, showing a sale from a government agent prior to defendant's patent, but no authority in the agent, will be nonsuited.

10. Ernst v. Montigudo, 21 La. Ann. 169.

11. Louis v. Giroir, 38 La. Ann. 723 (holding that the rule that that is certain which can be made certain applies to a description of the disputed lands in a petitory action by section and township in reference to United States surveys); Chavanne v. Frizola, 25 La. Ann. 76 (holding that where plaintiff claims property by inheritance as sole heir of his father, and appends to his petition an order of the proper court recognizing him as such and decreeing that he be put in possession of his father's estate, and his petition further alleges that his father had a just and legal title to the property at the time of his death, and was in possession at that time, such allegations are sufficiently clear to enable him to maintain a petitory action for the land so claimed); Lea v. Terry, 15 La. Ann. 159 (holding that it is not necessary that the description of property demanded in a petitory or rescissory action should be so certain that the sheriff or any other person could find the same without aid).

12. Hunt v. Graves, 27 La. Ann. 195 (holding that where land was sold as the property of one G, and his legal representative was cited to answer a petitory action by the purchaser at sheriff's sale to recover the land, and an amended petition having been filed, giving a correct description of the land, which had been erroneously described in the sheriff's deed, the legal representative answered both petitions, and issue was joined as to him, a judgment for the land according to the corrected description was proper); Bry v. Fouche, 11 La. Ann. 665.

13. Bry v. Fouche, 11 La. Ann. 665, holding that where plaintiff in a petitory action gives no description of his title, whether by patent, or French or Spanish grant, or whether he is the orginal or derivative grantee, an exception that his title is not sufficiently set forth is well taken, and the petition, if not amended, will be dismissed, but if, instead of relying on his exception, defendant afterward file an amended answer, in which he describes and specially attacks plaintiff's title, the exception is waived.

a petitory action, that defendant has a better title to the land claimed, does not impair the effect of the general issue.[14] In a petitory action, when defendant urges pleas of estoppel, and incorporates therein an exception of the want of proper parties defendant, which pleas and exceptions are repeated by warrantors, who appear when cited, these should be referred to the merits to stand as parts of the answer of the warrantors.[15] Plaintiff may plead the absolute nullity of any antecedent judicial proceeding under which his title has been divested without cumulating with the petitory action a direct action of nullity to set aside the proceedings,[16] and has the right to meet the title opposed to him, even a tax-sale,[17] by all means of attack as though specially pleaded.[18]

F. Evidence. In a petitory action documentary evidence is admissible to show the title claimed,[19] and upon the question of the location of the land in dispute the only authorized evidence is a survey made by proper authority.[20] Where plaintiff alleges that defendants and those under whom they claim hold illegal possession, defendants' titles are admissible to rebut the allegation of illegal possession.[21]

G. Recovery of Rents and Revenues. A trespasser or possessor in bad faith is liable for the rents and revenues of the property during his occupancy.[22] A bona fide possessor is, however, liable only from the moment that defects in his title are made known to him, or are declared to him by a suit instituted for the

See also McCall v. Irion, 40 La. Ann. 690, 4 So. 859, holding that defendant in possession under an apparent judicial title cannot force plaintiff to a trial on the issue that he must first sue to annul the judicial proceedings on which defendant relies for title, but the evidence of such title should be given in a trial on the merits. Compare Barbee v. Perkins, 23 La. Ann. 331, holding that a sale of real property belonging to the succession under the decree of a competent court will not be held to be an absolute nullity, on account of irregularities in the mortuary proceedings which led to granting the order, so as to entitle plaintiff in a petitory action to be the owner of such land; but such claimant must first cause the sale to be annulled by direct action.

19. Jenkins v. Salmen Brick, etc., Co., 120 La. 549, 45 So. 435, holding that it is not proper to refuse to admit a document in evidence that is needful to show in some extent and in some way the title claimed, although it only shows that plaintiff had a right to a part of the property claimed.

Plaintiff alleging title under a sheriff's deed, and referring to the suit under the execution in which the sale was made, is entitled to offer in evidence the mortgage act, the basis of the judgment of such suit, and the sheriff's return on the execution (Thompson v. Whitbeck, 47 La. Ann. 49, 16 So. 570), and where a petitory action has been brought to recover land sold under execution, defendants should offer in evidence the record and judgment in the suit under which the execution issued (Delespare v. Warner, 14 La. Ann. 413).

22. Dohan v. Murdock, 41 La. Ann. 494, 6 So. 131; Brooks v. Wortman, 22 La. Ann. 491 (holding, however, that where defendant holds under a title translative of property irregular in form, and was not aware of the defects in his title at the time he purchased the land, he is not a possessor in bad faith and cannot therefore be condemned to pay rents).

The purchaser of minor's property by private contract is a possessor in bad faith; but not his vendee, unless actual knowledge be shown on his part of the nature of the vendor's title, a recital in his act referring to which is not proof in itself of such knowledge. Fletcher v. Cavalier, 4 La. 274.

The rents and revenues are to be measured by the value of the property for ordinary purposes, and cannot be augmented by adding thereto the additional revenue resulting from the use of the property by a municipal corporation as a public market (Ball v. New Orleans, 52 La. Ann. 1550, 28 So. 109); and where the rental value of property which plaintiff recovers in a petitory action has been established up to the date of the trial, it will be taken as the continuing value of the recovery of the property,[23] and is entitled to the same judgment for rents and revenues against his warrantor that plaintiff obtains against him.[24] Where, in a petitory action, a demand by way of reconvention is cumulated with defendant's defense, damages in reconvention are properly allowed.[25]

H. Allowance For Improvements. Where, in a petitory action, there is a judgment for plaintiff, defendants who are possessors of the land in good faith are entitled to the excess in value of valuable improvements, repairs, and taxes over the fruits received since the commencement of the suit,[26] and are entitled to be maintained in possession of the whole property until the value of the useful improvements be paid by the evictors in proportion to the part they have recovered,[27] and to have an execution for the sum allowed;[28] but a defendant who knew he held without the title cannot claim for improvements on the property.[29] On a judgment for plaintiff, improvements made by defendant partly on plaintiff's same up to the date of the delivery to plaintiff and judgment for future rent will be given on that basis (Welsch v. Augusti, 52 La. Ann. 1949, 28 So. 363).

Ann. 1550, 28 So. 106 (holding that where a person, believing himself to be entitled thereto, demands and holds possession of property by virtue of a construction placed by him on a contract concerning the same, and on the acts of those claiming adversely, who acquiesce in such demand and yield such possession, it cannot be said that the possession thus acquired and held is in bad faith, so as to charge him with the rents and revenues of the property during his possession); Durbridge v. Crowley, 44 La. Ann. 74, 10 So. 402 (holding also that where there is a judgment for plaintiff and there is no proof of enhanced value of the property resulting from defendant's expenditures thereon beyond the amount of the expenditures themselves, the allowance in their favor of such expenditures satisfies their right); Montgomery v. Whitfield, 41 La. Ann. 649, 6 So. 224; Dohan v. Murdock, 41 La. Ann. 494, 6 So. 131 (holding, however, that under the circumstances of this case defendant was not a bona fide possessor); French v. Bach, 26 La. Code, art. 508, unless plaintiff elect to pay and show by evidence the enhanced value of the soil); Durbridge v. Crowley, 44 La. Ann. 74, 10 So. 402 (holding, however, that he cannot claim taxes paid by the author of his invalid title, who had the enjoyment of property); Montgomery v. Whitfield, 41 La. Ann. 649, 6 So. 24; Williams v. Booker, 12 Rob. (La.) 253; Kellam v. Rippey, 3 Rob. (La.) 138. But see Le Bleu v. North American Land, etc., Co., 46 La. Ann. 1465, 16 So. 501, holding that where defendant, who has been in exclusive possession, reconvenes against plaintiff who seeks simply to be recognized as a joint owner with him in the property, for the price of the improvement he claims to have been placed on the property while having such possession, he will be remitted for the ascertainment of his rights to an action of partition.

Where plaintiff has in the petition fixed the time for which he asked the judgment for revenues against defendant, the supreme court will not go back of that date for an amendment of the judgment on defendant's appeal, but will reduce a demand for moneys expended by defendant for repairs, where the rents received by him prior to such date were more than sufficient to cover the bill. Jewell v. De Blanc, 110 La. 810, 34 So. 787.

27. Fletcher v. Cavelier, 10 La. 116, holding also that defendant in such case is not bound to remain in a state of indecision with the evictors and kept in suspense as to his ultimate rights and recourse in warranty for an indefinite time, but is entitled to a fixed period when payment and adjustment may be coerced.

28. Milliken v. Rowley, 3 Rob. (La.) 253, holding that where the judgment gives plaintiff possession of the land sued for on paying defendant a certain sum for his improvements, the latter may have execution for such sum, if not paid within a certain time.

But see Sigur v. Burguieres, 111 La. 711, 35 So. 823, holding that, where the evidence in a petitory action shows that defendants were trespassers, they may yet claim reimbursement for clearing the land, whereby it is brought into cultivation, when to cultivate it is its chief value.

A verdict setting off the fruits raised on the land against the claim for improvements by a possessor in bad faith will not be disturbed. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Elmore, 46 La. Ann. 1237, 15 So. 701.

A judgment which is silent as to the rents and profits prayed for in plaintiff's petition but decrees the litigated property to plaintiff will be held as an absolute rejection of the demand, where it appears that evidence was introduced on the demand. Villars v. Faivre, 36 La. Ann. 398.

REAL AND PERSONAL EFFECTS. A term which has been held to embrace all a man's property.[1] (See PERSONAL EFFECTS, 30 Cyc. 1531, and Cross-References Thereunder; REAL, ante, p. 1540; REAL ESTATE, post, p. 1556; REALTY, post, p. 1559; and, generally, PROPERTY, 32 Cyc. 639.

REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATE. Distinguished, see CONVERSION, 9 Cyc. 826 note 3. Estate, Defined, see ESTATES, 16 Cyc. 599. See PERSONAL, 30 Cyc. 1529; REAL, ante, p. 1540. See also CHATTELS, 7 Cyc. 122; REAL ESTATE, post, p. 1556; REALTY, post, p. 1559; and, generally, PROPERTY, 32 Cyc. 639.

REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY. In General, see REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATE, and Cross-References Thereunder. Covered by Same Mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES, 6 Cyc. 983 note 2, 999 note 68.

REAL ASSETS. Lands or real estate in the hands of an heir, chargeable with the payment of the debts of the ancestor.[2] (See ASSETS, 3 Cyc. 1111, and Cross-References Thereunder; REAL, ante, p. 1540.)

REAL BURDEN. A burden of a specific sum under which the right to lands is expressly granted, either upon the lands themselves, or resulting in a nullity of the right if the sum be not paid, the amount and the name of the creditor being discoverable from the record.[3]

REAL CHATTELS. Such as concern or savor of the realty;[4] such chattel interests as devolve after the manner of realty.[5] (See CHATTELS REAL, 7 Cyc. 123.)

REAL CONTRACT. In civil law, a contract in which the obligation arose from the thing (ex re) itself, which was the subject of it; one in which besides the consent of the parties the delivery of some thing was necessary to complete the obligation.[6] In common law, a contract respecting real estate, as a lease of land for years.[7] (Real Contract: In General, see CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 240. Of Lease, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, 24 Cyc. 845. Of Sale, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER. Specific Performance of, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.)

REAL COST. The true and real price paid for goods upon a genuine bona fide purchase;[8] actual cost;[9] prime cost.[10] (See COSTS, 10 Cyc. 1369; REAL, ante, p. 1540.)

REAL COVENANT. As to Use of Real Property, see COVENANTS, 11 Cyc. 1077. Of Title, see COVENANTS, 11 Cyc. 1063. Running With the Land, see COVENANTS, 11 Cyc. 1080. See also REAL, ante, p. 1540.

REAL DANGER. Such danger as is manifest to the physical senses.[11] (See DANGER, 13 Cyc. 256.)

REAL EFFECTS. See CHATTELS REAL, 7 Cyc. 123; PROPERTY, 32 Cyc. 668. See also PERSONAL EFFECTS, 30 Cyc. 1531.

REAL ESTATE AGENT or BROKER. One employed to negotiate the purchase or sale of real property;[13] one who buys and sells lands, and obtains loans, etc., upon mortgages;[14] one who negotiates the sale or purchase of real property;[15] one who negotiates the sales of real property;[16] a person who is, generally speaking, engaged in the business of procuring purchases or sales of lands for third persons upon a commission contingent upon success.[17] (See FACTORS AND BROKERS, 19 Cyc. 196.)

REAL ESTATE BUSINESS. A term which seems to apply more properly to brokerage than to the business of operating or speculating in real estate.[18] (See BUSINESS, 6 Cyc. 259; REAL ESTATE AGENT.)

REAL EVIDENCE. All evidence of which any object belonging to the class of things is the source, persons also included in respect of such properties as belong to them in common with things.[19] (See, generally, EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 821; 17 Cyc. 1.)

REAL INJURY. In the civil law, an injury arising from an unlawful act, as distinguished from a verbal injury which was done by words.[20] (See INJURY, 22 Cyc. 1064.)

REAL ISSUE. See ISSUE, 23 Cyc. 309 text and note 74. See also PLEADING, 31 Cyc. 570.

REALITY OF LAWS. A term by which foreign jurists generally mean all laws which concern property or things.[21] (See LAW, 25 Cyc. 163.)

REALITY OF THE CLAIM MADE. A phrase held to mean that the claimant shall assert his claim in good faith believing that it is real.[22] (See CLAIM, 7 Cyc. 180.)

Ord. June 11, 1897, § 215 [quoted in Banta v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 204, 212, 50 N. E. 233, 40 L. R. A. 611]. Another Chicago ordinance containing a definition identical except that "negotiating" is substituted for "who negotiates" is quoted in O'Neill v. Sinclair, 153 Ill. 525, 527, 39 N. E. 124. Another, also of Chicago, substantially the same except that it omits the part concerning loans, is quoted in Buckley v. Humason, 50 Minn. 195, 198, 52 N. W. 385, 36 Am. St. Rep. 637, 16 L. R. A. 423.

"Broker or real estate agent, selling lands on account of the owner," may apply to one acting in a single transaction, although not regularly in the business. See Stout v. Humphrey, 69 N. J. L. 436, 439, 55 Atl. 281.

REALIZATION. Applied to shares, a term properly used to describe the condition that exists when the share of an investing member in a company is fully paid up.[23] (See REALIZE.)

REALIZE. To bring into actual possession; a term ordinarily used in contrast to "hope" or "anticipation;"[24] to give effect to;[25] to reduce to actual cash in hand;[26] to render tangible for the purpose of division.[27] (See REALIZATION.)

REALM. State or sovereignty;[28] territory.[29] (See OUT OF THE REALM, 29 Cyc. 1545.)

REAL OWNER. A term which does not necessarily mean the sole beneficiary; but may include an owner of part interest and trustee for the balance, or a trustee for the whole.[30] (See OWNER, 29 Cyc. 1549.)

REAL PARTY IN INTEREST. In statutes requiring suits to be brought in the name of such party, the person who is actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter, as distinguished from one who has only a formal or technical interest in it, or connection with it;[31] the party who is to be benefited or injured by the judgment in the case.[32] (See PARTIES, 30 Cyc. 44.)

REAL PRIVILEGE. In English law, a privilege granted to, or concerning, a particular place or locality.[33] (See PRIVILEGE, 32 Cyc. 388; REAL.)

REAL PROBABLE DANGER. Probable danger as an actual fact, as distinct from one solely imaginary or apprehended.[34]

REAL PROPERTY. See PROPERTY, 32 Cyc. 662, and Cross-References Thereunder; REAL ESTATE.

REAL RELEASE. That which takes place where the creditor declares that he considers the debt as acquitted.[35] (See RELEASE.)

To obtain a mere right by executory contract is not to "realize" the proceeds of benefits. Stanford v. Greene County, 18 Iowa 218, 221.

St. Rep. 328, where, in reference to the words, "for it is presumed that legal proceedings, during their continuance, are publicly known throughout the 'realm'" (Adams Equity 157), it is said: "By this term realm is meant the 'state' or 'sovereignty' where the property is, as is explained in a note by the writer just cited."

Departing the realm as an act of bankruptcy in England has been held not impossible to a natural born subject, who is not domiciled in England. William v. Nunn, 1 Taunt. 270, 272, 278.

Some confusion arises from the term "realm" being used in more than one sense. — Sometimes it is used, as in the statute of Richard II, to mean the land of England, and the internal sea within it, sometimes as meaning whatever the sovereignty of the Crown of England extended, or was supposed to extend, over. REAL REPRESENTATIVE. He who represents or stands in the place of another, with respect to his real property;[36] the heir or devisee of real property of a deceased person.[37] (See LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE, 25 Cyc. 175; REAL, ante, p. 1540; REPRESENTATIVE. See also HEIR, 21 Cyc. 408.)

REAL SECURITY. Security on property, as distinguished from personal security;[38] the security of mortgages or other liens or encumbrances upon land.[39] (See REAL, ante, p. 1540; SECURITY; and, generally, LIENS, 25 Cyc. 655; MECHANICS' LIENS, 27 Cyc. 1; MORTGAGES, 27 Cyc. 916.)

REAL SERVICE. A term of the civil law naming a species of easement, consisting in a service which one estate owes to another, or the right of doing something, or of having a privilege in one man's estate for the advantage and convenience of the owner of another estate.[40] (See REAL SERVITUDE, and Cross-References Thereunder.)

REAL SERVITUDE. In the civil law, a right which one estate or piece of land (prædium) owes to another estate.[41] (See REAL SERVICE. See also PRÆDIUM DOMINANS, 31 Cyc. 1154; PRÆDIUM SERVIENS, 31 Cyc. 1154; and, generally, EASEMENTS, 14 Cyc. 1134.)

REAL STATUTE. As distinguished from personal, one which regulates property within the limits of the state where it is in force;[42] one which controls things and does not extend beyond the limits of the country from which it derives its authority;[43] one which affects principally things, although it may relate to persons;[44] one which treats of immovables.[45] (See PERSONAL STATUTE, 30 Cyc. 1532; and, generally, STATUTES.)

REAL THINGS. Such as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, that cannot be carried out of their place, as lands and tenements;[46] things substantial and immovable, and the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of them.[47] (See REAL, ante, p. 1540.)

REALTY. A brief term for real property; also for anything which partakes of the nature of real property.[48] (See PROPERTY, 32 Cyc. 649, and Cross-References Thereunder; REAL ESTATE, ante, p. 1556.)

REAL WARRANTY. That which arises in real or hypothecary actions.[49]

REAL WRONG. In old English law, an injury to the freehold.[50] (See, generally, TRESPASS. See also PERSONAL WRONG, 30 Cyc. 1533.)

Reason to believe on the part of one assailed that he is in great danger of life or limb is not equivalent to "reasonable belief," and a refusal to charge that it is a justification for assault and battery without retreat is correct. Howard v. State, 110 Ala. 92, 95, 20 So. 365. "Good reason to believe" on the part of a plaintiff that he has just cause of action is not equivalent to probable cause, and an averment thereof not sufficient in an affidavit where "probable cause" supported by oath or affirmation is required as the basis of a warrant. Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 Mich. 172, 174, 12 N. W. 34 [following De Long v. Briggs, 47 Mich. 624, 625, 11 N. W. 412]. The assertion that one had "reason to believe" that another committed a crime is equivalent in slander to the charge that he had committed it. Miller v. Miller, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 74, 75, 76 [followed in Miller v. Miller, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 77].

"Good and lawful reasons," as used in a statement in the order of a presiding judge, of his cause for declining to preside at a trial may be taken, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to include some one or more of the statutory causes permitting such action in the discretion of the judge. Leonard v. Blair, 59 Ind. 510, 514.

"Reason to doubt" is not the equivalent of "a reasonable doubt" in the mind of a jury. "There may be a reason to doubt, which does not justify a reasonable doubt or the inference of probable innocence." Peagler v. State, 110 Ala. 11, 13, 20 So. 363.

"Reason to know."—Where the jury has been instructed that it is a duty to use ordinary care, a further instruction that one is liable who "knew or 'had reason to know'" of an injurious defect is proper, for the duty is a reason. Moulton v. Phillips, 10 R. I. 218, 223, 14 Am. Rep. 663.

54. People v. Butts, 121 N. Y. App. Div. 226, 227, 105 N. Y. Suppl. 677.

Almost if not quite synonymous with natural in the phrase "natural and reasonable result" see The Argentino, 13 P. D. 191, 198.

Compared with "tolerably."—Dictionaries not always reliable.—In an instruction to the jury, "reasonable" was defined: "In a reasonable manner, consistent with reason, in a moderate degree, tolerably." In the opinion on appeal it was suggested that the definition might be objectionable and said: "The definition seems to have been taken from the dictionaries, which are not always reliable when used in a court of law. It is true 'tolerably' is treated by such authors as synonymous with 'reasonable.'" But it is not always, if ever, so understood. As used by the people it does not mean "reasonable," but on the contrary to indicate a different condition or state. York v. Everton, 121 Mo. App. 640, 647, 97 S. W. 604.

As used with reference to claims for services in behalf of poor persons, in 24 Kan. Gen. St. 626, the word means "reasonable in fact," not merely within the discretion of the county overseers. Pottawatomie County v. Morrall, 19 Kan. 141, 144.

"Reasonable agreement" is "too vague and indefinite to base the judgment of a court upon" when used as a description material to an allegation in an application for mandamus. State v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 422, 60 S. W. 91, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 51 L. R. A. 151.

"The line between what is reasonable and what is not, marking the boundary of constitutional authority of the legislature is one often difficult of ascertainment, rendering it very necessary, in all doubtful cases for the judiciary to defer to the wisdom of the legislature." term has been variously defined in different connections. It is defined as agreeable by the application of reason to the circumstances of the case, and not prescribed as an arbitrary, verbal formula"); In re Nice, 123 Fed. 987, 988 (where it is said: "And the facts of the particular controversy must be considered before the question [i. e. what is a reasonable delay] can be determined").

Reasonable attorney's fee.— As allowed by Iowa Code, § 2961, to defendant in attachment issued on a ground not true the term does not include fees for the whole case but only for the auxiliary proceeding of attachment. Porter v. Knight, 63 Iowa 365, 372, 19 N. W. 282. As used in Kan. St. (1874) c. 94, providing that a reasonable attorney's fee may be recovered from a railway company by the owner of stock killed, the term means a fee reasonable considering all the elements of the particular case, which affect the proper amount of the attorney's compensation, and includes fees for the entire prosecution from the commencement until its final termination in the district court, so that one unsuccessful at the trial before the justice but successful on appeal may recover fees for the trial. Missouri River, etc., Co. v. Shirley, 20 Kan. 660, 662. As authorized by an assignment for creditors to be paid out of the fund, and the balance by the creditors, the term means such attorney's fees as the trustee is allowed by law to charge and does not admit of a charge for his own services as attorney. Commonwealth Nat. Bank v. Stone, 93 Ky. 623, 626, 20 S. W. 1040, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 645. Reasonable allowance to plaintiff for petitioner, for counsel fees in common pleas and orphans' court of Pennsylvania, "does not include expenses of adversary proceedings, resulting from a defence to the plaintiff's demand for partition or from any other cause." Fidelity Ins., etc., Co.'s Appeal, 108 Pa. St. 339, 343. In bankruptcy what is a reasonable fee to the attorney for petitioning creditors must be governed to a large extent by the amount of the estate and must be controlled by the general policy of the law which requires such estates to be administered with severe economy. In re Goldville Mfg. Co., 123 Fed. 579, 584.

Reasonable distance.— Water commissioners of a city, required by statute to furnish water to inhabitants of a town living "within a reasonable distance from the line of main pipes," by furnishing water for over eight years to all inhabitants of the town who complied with certain conditions, have put a construction on the term "reasonable distance" and cannot thereafter limit its meaning to a narrower construction. West Hartford v. Hartford Water Com'rs, 68 Conn. 323, 334, 36 Atl. 786.

"Reasonable expenses" which may be incurred by a board of health, under R. S. N. S. 4th ser. c. 29, § 12, are defined by statute 37 Vict. N. S. c. 6, § 1, to be services performed and bestowed, and medicines supplied by physicians and made a charge on the municipality. A physician having been employed by the county brought an action for wrongful dismissal, and recovered on a basis of salary. On appeal three judges affirmed the judgment; three were of opinion that a claim for damages for dismissal was not for "reasonable expenses," and that the municipality having no power to incur other expenses was not liable. The division being equal the appeal was dismissed. Cape Breton County v. McKay, 18 Can. Sup. Ct. 639, 648, 651, 665. Reasonable and necessary expenses as taxable costs see COSTS, 11 Cyc. 125.

"Reasonable promptness," as used in a contract providing for a test therewith of gas pipes, does not admit of a delay of months after the pipes are laid. Tasker v. Crane, 55 Fed. 449, 451.

Reasonable rates.— "An equivalent to the prevailing rate of interest might be a reasonable return, and it might not. It might be too high or might be too low. It might be reasonable, owing to peculiar hazards or difficulties in one place to receive greater returns there, than it would in another upon the same investment. Then, their reasonableness relates to both the company and the customer. Rates must be reasonable to both, and if they cannot be to both, they must be to the customer. . . . Just what is reasonable in a given case . . . must . . . be left to the good judgment of the tribunal which passes upon each particular case." Brunswick, etc., Water Dist. v. Maine Water Co., 99 Me. 371, 380, 59 Atl. 537.

"Reasonable reward" as the consideration for a contract to pass a boat through a canal within a reasonable time cannot be construed by implication to mean a greater or less amount than the tolls which the canal company has a right to charge, or if it was greater, and the company could not enforce it, that fact would not release them from their undertaking. Muir v. Louisville, etc., Canal Co., 8 Dana (Ky.) 161, 162.

Reasonable time for removal of standing timber by grantee see Hoit v. Stratton Mills, 54 N. H. 119.

"Reasonable satisfaction."— An instruction to jury to find for plaintiff if they find certain facts to their "reasonable satisfaction" is not prejudicial to the defendant, being open only to the criticism, if any, that it calls for too much rather than too little proof on the part of plaintiff. O'Neill v. Blase, 94 Mo. App. 648, 663, 68 S. W. 764.

"Reasonable state of usefulness" applied in a finding to the condition of a highway where crossed by a railroad was held to mean "such a state as not to have unnecessarily impaired its usefulness," the latter being the condition to be required by the writ of mandamus sought in the application. People v. Delaware, etc., Co., 177 N. Y. 337, 340, 69 N. E. 651.

A tax is presumed to be reasonable if laid by authority with discretion on the subject. By unreasonableness the courts do not mean simply that the tax must not be larger than the judges may think wise. Ex p. Miranda, 73 Cal. 365, 374, 14 Pac. 888. Reasonable taxes, as authorized by the New Hampshire to reason; just; proper; ordinary or usual;[57] equitable; just;[58] just, proper, fair, or equitable.[59] As applied to legislative measures, within proper limits, fit and appropriate to the end in view.[60] The word is often used in connection with other words;[61] among the many phrases in which it has been employed and has been judicially interpreted are the following: "Reasonable accommodations;"[62] "reasonable act;"[63] "reasonable agreement;"[64] "reasonable and competent support;"[65] "reasonable and just;"[66] "reasonable and probable cause;"[67]

Reasonable to prosecute by indictment.— In the provision of Greater New York Charter, § 1406, that the court of special sessions shall be divested of jurisdiction to hear and determine a charge of misdemeanor on proper notice "that it is reasonable that such charge shall be prosecuted by indictment," the reason so acted upon must be "something more than the mere preference of the defendant for a jury trial." Exceptional circumstances must be shown which render trial by jury rather than at special sessions desirable and proper. People v. Levy, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 469, 470, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 693 [cited in People v. Cornyn, 16 N. Y. Cr. 101, 102].

57. Black L. Dict.

Reasonable accommodations.— In a statute requiring railroad companies to furnish reasonable accommodations for the convenience and safety of passengers, the term was intended "to have a broad meaning and application," namely, "reasonable as distinguished from extreme luxury or scantiness; that is, not excessive nor meager, but sufficient or sufficing for all reasonable purposes." Anderson v. South Carolina, etc., R. Co., 81 S. C. 1, 6, 61 S. E. 1096.

"Reasonable and proper" synonymous with "fit" as used in a power of lease see Mostyn v. Lancaster, 23 Ch. D. 583, 619, 52 L. J. Ch. 848, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 715, 31 Wkly. Rep. 686.

Reasonable costs, taxable against plaintiff on discontinuance of nonsuit under Vt. St. p. 1403, and Vt. Gen. St. p. 267, § 42, was held to cover such costs as had accrued to defendant before the suit was discontinued (Fullan v. Ives, 37 Vt. 659, 660 [quoted in Woods v. Darling, 71 Vt. 348, 353, 43 Atl. 750]); though before the return-day; such as costs for the summoning of witnesses or taking a deposition (Woods v. Darling, supra); but on a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction on which defendant prevailed in the supreme court after pleading to the issue, and a verdict against him, reasonable costs were held to include only costs in the supreme court (Chadwick v. Batchelder, 46 Vt. 724, 728).

Reasonable maximum rate.— Under Mich. Const., as amended in 1870, art. 19*a*, § 1, conferring on the legislature the power to establish reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight on different railroads, the question what is "reasonable" is for the legislature and not for the courts to determine. Wellman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 83 Mich. 592, 625, 47 N. W. 489 [affirmed in 143 U. S. 339, 12 S. Ct. 400, 36 L. ed. 176].

59. People v. Butts, 121 N. Y. App. Div. 226, 227, 105 N. Y. Suppl. 677, so defining the term with reference to the power of certain judges to certify "that it is reasonable" that a charge of misdemeanor should be prosecuted by indictment.

60. See State v. Vandersluis, 42 Minn. 129, 131, 43 N. W. 789, 6 L. R. A. 119, where in considering a legislative power to prescribe "reasonable conditions" it was said: "Whether they are reasonable,— that is, whether the legislature has gone beyond the proper limits of its power,— the courts must judge. By the term 'reasonable' we do not mean expedient, nor do we mean that the conditions must be such as the court would impose. . . . They are to be deemed reasonable where, although perhaps not the wisest and best that might be adopted, they are fit and appropriate to the end in view, to wit, the protection of the public, and are manifestly adopted in good faith for that purpose."

Not "expedient" see State v. Vandersluis, 42 Minn. 129, 131, 43 N. W. 789, 6 L. R. A. 119. Not synonymous with "expediency" see Bonnett v. Vallier, 136 Wis. 193, 203, 116 N. W. 885, 17 L. R. A. N. S. 486.

Not necessarily the best or the only method, but one fairly appropriate, at least under all the circumstances, is suggested by the term as applied to a means to a legitimate end. Bonnett v. Vallier, 136 Wis. 193, 203, 110 N. W. 885, 17 L. R. A. N. S. 486.

76. "Reasonable certainty" is that which on a fair and reasonable construction may be called certain without resorting to possible facts which do not appear (Thomas Coke Litt. 288 [quoted in Hollingsworth v. Holshousen, 17 Tex. 41, 44]); the being free from reasonable doubt (State v. Shaw, 49 N. C. 440, 443, sustaining a charge to the jury that they "ought to be satisfied, to a reasonable certainty," the term being used in contradistinction to "absolute certainty"). "Reasonable compensation" is such as will fairly compensate when the character, effectiveness, and ability entering into the service are considered (Powell v. Foster, 71 Vt. 160, 164, 44 Atl. 96, defining the term in relation to the compensation of a special administrator); a legal compensation, such compensation as that fixed by the law for the performance of the duties imposed and the services rendered (Campbell v. Woodworth, 24 N. Y. 304, 306, so construing the term as used in an assignment for creditors providing for payment of the assignee). See COMPENSATION, 8 Cyc. 501, and Cross-References Thereunder.

For physical and mental suffering to be ascertained by the jury under the facts in each particular case see Larkin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 652, 654, 92 N. W. 891.

For sale and negotiation of municipal bonds, the term does not include a commission to purchasers, which would be practically allowing purchase below par; but only compensation to agents who sell at or above par. Whelen's Appeal, 108 Pa. St. 162, 197–200, 1 Atl. 88.

W. 683, where it was so used in speaking of the reasonable effort required to be made by an officer in the service of an attachment.

86. "Reasonable expectation" is an expectation that some such disaster as that under investigation will occur 'on the long run' from a series of such negligences as those with which the defendant is charged. Wharton Negl. §§ 77, 78 [quoted in Clifford v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 9 Colo. 333, 338, 12 Pac. 219, where it was said to be so used in the law of negligence].

5. "Reasonable price," in contracts of sale, such a price as the jury, upon the trial of the cause, shall, under all the circumstances, decide to be reasonable. Acebal v. Levy, 10 Bing. 376, 383, 3 L. J. C. P. 98, 4 Moore & S. 217, 25 E. C. L. 180, adding: "This price may, or may not, agree with the current price of the commodity at the port of shipment, at the precise time when such shipment was made. The current price of the day may be highly unreasonable from accidental circumstances, as on account of the commodity having been purposely kept back by the vendor himself, or with reference to the price at other ports in the immediate vicinity, or from various other causes." See PRICE, 31 Cyc. 1171, and Cross-References Thereunder.

6. Tasker v. Crane Co., 55 Fed. 449, 451.

19. "Reasonable support" is not a bare subsistence, but an amount depending upon circumstances of demand and supply in the particular case. See Thill v. Pohlman, 76 Iowa 638, 639, 41 N. W. 385 (holding that such support, required to be furnished by a husband to his wife, is not merely a bare subsistence but includes those comforts and surroundings reasonable and necessary for her enjoyment in the society in which she lives); Thompson v. Carmichael, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 120, 130 (holding that the term as used in a provision by will for the widow is not to be determined by the amount necessary for her bare subsistence, but with reference to the extent and income of the estate, and to enable her to live with and provide for her small children); Ellerbe v. Ellerbe, Speers Eq. (S. C.) 328, 341, 40 Am. Dec. 623 (holding that "reasonable and competent support," as provided for in the will for wife and daughter, "does not mean merely the food and clothing necessary to sustain life, nor any other fixed quantity or allowance, but must . . . depend on circumstances and exigencies"). See SUPPORT, and Cross-References Thereunder.

20. "Reasonable suspicion" is a term said to be convertible with "probable cause." State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 135, 49 Am. Rep. 218, where it is said to be so used in civil actions for malicious prosecution.

34. Hopkins v. Seattle Scandinavian Fish Co., 32 Wash. 513, 517, 73 Pac. 495, holding that "before a person should be held in damages for an alleged failure to exercise reasonable diligence, it should be so far clear from the evidence that there had been such want of diligence that reasonable minds will not reasonably differ as to the fact."

In serving process "what is reasonable diligence depends upon the particular facts in connection with the duty." Guiterman v. Sharvey, 46 Minn. 183, 184, 48 N. W. 780, 24 Am. St. Rep. 218, holding that while in the absence of special instructions it could hardly be claimed that a delay from four o'clock of one day to the forenoon of the next would constitute negligence, the question of unreasonable delay is a mixed question of law and fact, and in view of instructions to proceed at once, and facts communicated to the officer showing need for immediate service, a finding of negligence and unreasonable delay was justifiable.

As duty, to be founded on some reason.— "There are very few facts which diligence cannot discover, but there must be some reason to awaken inquiry and direct diligence in the channel in which it would be successful." Maul v. Rider, 59 Pa. St. 167, 171, 172, holding, in relation to the use of the term in Pa. St. (1856) § 6, that "there must be some act — some declaration from an authentic source — which a person would be careless if he disregarded, which is necessary to put a party on inquiry, and call for the exercise of reasonable diligence."

In presenting paper.— In regard to the rule that presentment must be on the day on which a bill becomes due, when it is not in the power of the holder, by the use of reasonable diligence to present it, it is said: "On the question . . . whether there was negligence on his part, or a want of reasonable diligence, no absolute or positive rule can, from the nature of the case, be laid down, which shall apply under all circumstances. . . . And that diligence must be measured by the general convenience of the commercial world, and the practicability of accomplishing the end required, by ordinary skill, caution and effort." 78. Webster Int. Dict.

As used in N. Y. Laws (1897), p. 404, c. 378, § 1117, the term means something more than the simple transfer of a teacher from one school to another, without affecting the grade. It indicates a reassignment to a lower grade after an appointment to the higher. People v. New York Bd. of Education, 174 N. Y. 169, 176, 66 N. E. 674.

Used in a publication alleging that a British subject in Brazil participated in a rebellion there does not necessarily have the signification which would be attributed to it if that word were applied in connection with acts done in the United States, or in a place in which the person accused of participating in the rebellion would be brought within the peril of the English law, so that such statement is not libelous, as charging a crime. Crashley v. Press Pub. Co., 74 N. Y. App. Div. 118, 122, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 711.

Rebellious mob.— See Harris v. York Mut. Ins. Co., 50 Pa. St. 341, 350, where it is said: "The difference between a rebellious mob and a common mob is, that the first is high treason, the latter a riot; the mob wants a universality of purpose to make it a rebellious mob, or treason."

85. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs, 86 Miss. 667, 710, 38 So. 356, where it is said that this is done by "simply changing the consignee and altering the destination of the identical shipment, without unloading or handling of freight."

86. Century Dict. [quoted in Bath Tp. Bd. of Education v. Townsend, 63 Ohio St. 514, 522, 59 N. E. 223, 52 L. R. A. 868].

"Rebuilding" may mean putting in thorough and perfect repair. Johnson Dict. [quoted in Doe v. Withers, 2 B. & Ad. 896, 900, 1 L. J. K. B. 38, 22 E. C. L. 375].

"Effectually rebuilding and repairing" has been said to mean more than "effectually repairing." The first might be understood to mean repairing those parts which merely needed repair and rebuilding those which were not otherwise repairable; the other might imply merely putting the whole in the best state which its then condition allowed of. Doe v. Withers, 2 B. & A. 896, 901, 1 L. J. K. B. 38, 22 E. C. L. 375.

Rebuilding or repairing a highway in one town by apportioning the expense to other towns benefited thereby fairly means keeping a highway in repair, in view of its continuing interests and the continuing duty of the town benefited by it, and therefore rebuilding or repairing is not to be construed as limited to one point of time, but as including the future as well as the present. Campton v. Plymouth, 64 N. H. 304, 308, 8 Atl. 824.

"Rebuilt" on another site, used in reference to a bridge, is said not to be strictly accurate; for a new bridge in another place cannot strictly be said to be the old one rebuilt. But the meaning is clear, and "replaced by," or any equivalent phrase, would express it correctly. Seabolt v. Northumberland County, 187 Pa. St. 318, 324, 41 Atl. 22.

REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION. A presumption which may be rebutted by evidence; a species of legal presumption which holds good until disproved.[87] (See PRESUMPTION, 31 Cyc. 1169.)

REBUTTAL. The introduction of rebutting evidence; the stage of the trial at which such evidence may be introduced; also the rebutting evidence itself.[88] (Rebuttal: Admissibility of Evidence in — Civil Action in General, see TRIAL; Criminal Prosecution, see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 555. REBUTTER. A defendant's answer of fact to a plaintiff's surrejoinder; the third pleading in the series on the part of the defendant.[89]

REBUTTING EVIDENCE. A term particularly applied to that evidence given by plaintiff to explain or repel the evidence given by defendant;[90] evidence adduced to rebut a presumption of fact or of law, that is, to avoid its effect; and evidence adduced to destroy the effect of prior evidence, whether by explanation or direct denial;[91] evidence in denial of some affirmative fact which the answering party is endeavoring to prove;[92] that evidence which has become relevant or important only as an effect of some evidence introduced by the other side;[93] that evidence which is given by a party in a case to counteract or disprove facts given in evidence by the other side;[94] that evidence which is given to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence by the adverse party;[95] that evidence which repels or counteracts the effect of evidence which has preceded it;[96] not merely evidence which contradicts the witnesses on the opposite side and corroborates those of the party who began, but evidence in denial of some affirmative fact which the answering party has endeavored to prove.[97] (See REBUTTAL, ante, p. 1571.)

RECALLING WITNESS. See WITNESSES.

RECAPTION. A species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured.[98] (See ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 407 text and note 46; ASSAULT AND BATTERY, 3 Cyc. 1053, 1078. See also RESCUE; TRESPASS; TROVER AND CONVERSION.)

RECEIPTOR. A name given in some of the states to a person who receives from the sheriff goods which the latter has seized under process of garnishment, on giving to the sheriff a bond conditioned to have the property forthcoming when demanded or when execution issues.[10] (See, generally, ATTACHMENT, 4 Cyc. 660; EXECUTIONS, 17 Cyc. 1123.)

RECEIVE. To get by a transfer;[11] to take, as a thing offered; to accept.[12]

10. Black L. Dict. [citing Story Bailm. § 124].

11. Hallenbeck v. Getz, 63 Conn. 385, 388, 28 Atl. 519, where the word is distinguished from "take."

In construing a statute providing that an action of account may be brought and maintained by one joint tenant and tenant in common against the other, for "receiving" more than comes to his just share or proportion, Parke, B., holds that this statute applies only to the case of a tenant receiving money or something else, where another pays it, which the co-tenants are entitled to in proportion to their interests as such, and that the statute does not apply to the case of a co-tenant receiving more than his share of the rent. In this connection he draws a distinction between the words "receives" and "takes" (Henderson v. Eason, 17 Q. B. 701, 719, 16 Jur. 518, 21 L. J. Q. B. 82. 79 E. C. L. 701); but the reasoning of Parke, B., is disapproved in Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 21, 47, 78 Am. Dec. 649. See also West v. Weyer, 46 Ohio St. 66, 71, 18 N. E. 537, 15 Am. St. Rep. 552.

"There is 'receiving'" whenever there is a change of possession — when one parts with the control of the product and another takes and accepts it. Reese v. State, 73 Ala. 18, 20.

12. Shuttleworth v. State, 35 Ala. 415, 417.
