"One made to affect acts or transactions occurring before it came into effect, or rights already accrued, and which imparts to them characteristics, or ascribes to them effects, which were not inherent in their nature in the contemplation of the law as it stood at the time of their occurrence. It gives a right where none before existed, or takes away one which before existed." Keith v. Guedry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 114 S. W. 392, 396.

"For the punishment of an offence, within the meaning of our bill of rights . . . a law made to punish an act previously done, or to increase the punishment of such act, or in some way to change the rules of law in relation to its punishment, to the prejudice of him who committed it. In other words . . . a law establishing a new rule for the punishment of an act already done. . . . And a retrospective law for the decision of civil causes, is a law prescribing the rules by which existing causes are to be decided, upon facts existing previous to the making of the law." Woart v. Winnick, 3 N. H. 473, 476, 14 Am. Dec. 384 [quoted in Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 304, 361; Dow v. Norris, 4 N. H. 16, 18, 17 Am. Dec. 400].

"[One] usually applied to those acts of the legislature which are made to operate upon some subject, contract, or crime which existed before the passage of the act." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Deland v. Platte County, 54 Fed. 823, 832].

"A statute which creates a new obligation, or imposes a new duty, in respect to transactions already past." Gaston v. Merriam, 33 Minn. 271, 279, 22 N. W. 614.

"One which changes, or injuriously affects, a present right, by going behind it, and giving efficacy to anterior circumstances to defeat it, which they had not when the right accrued." Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 185, 198, 9 L. ed. 680.

"An act taking away rights vested, and giving rights which had been extinguished by the general laws of the state." Bradford v. Brooks, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 284, 294, 16 Am. Dec. 715; Ward v. Barnard, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 121.

"[One that gives] a right where none before existed, and by relation back, gives the party the benefit of it." Sutherland v. De Leon, 1 Tex. 250, 305, 46 Am. Dec. 100.

"[One] which looks back upon interests already settled, or events which have already happened." Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 199, 213, 8 Am. Dec. 52.

"One intended to affect transactions which occurred, or rights which accrued, before it became operative as such, and which ascribes to them effects not inherent in their nature in view of the law in force at the time of their occurrence." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. State, 47 Nebr. 549, 564, 66 N. W. 624, 53 Am. St. Rep. 557, 41 L. R. A. 481.

"[One] reaching back to and giving to a previous transaction some different legal effect from that which it had under the law when it took place." Leete v. St. Louis State Bank, 115 Mo. 184, 198, 21 S. W. 788.

"One that relates back to, and gives to a previous transaction some different legal effect from that which it had under the law when it transpired." State v. Whittlesey, 17 Wash. 447, 454, 50 Pac. 119.

Retrospective laws include: A statute which "impairs the force of contracts, or confiscates private property, or disturbs any vested rights." Boston v. Cummins, 16 Ga. 102, 106, 60 Am. Dec. 717. "A statute which abrogates an existing right of action or defense, or creates a new obligation on transactions or considerations already past." Evans v. Denver, 26 Colo. 193, 196, 57 Pac. 696. "A statute which repeals an act limiting the time within which crimes shall be proscribed." State v. Moore, 42 N. J. L. 208, 231. Every law "that takes away or impairs rights vested, agreeable to existing laws." Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 386, 390, 1 L. ed. 648 [quoted in De Cordova v. Galveston, 4 Tex. 470, 478]. One giving "a right to recover back taxes paid by mistake where such right did not exist before." Hamilton County v. Rosche, 50 Ohio St. 103, 111, 33 N. E. 408, 40 Am. St. Rep. 653, 19 L. R. A. 584. A law affecting "an existing cause of laws,[91] and laws impairing the obligation of contracts;[92] but the term "retrospective" is frequently used as applicable only to civil laws by way of distinguishing them from ex post facto laws.[93] Retrospective statutes are usually construed to embrace only those which relate to substantial rights,[94] as those which destroy or impair an existing right,[95] or give a right where none before existed;[96] and action, or an existing right of defence, by taking away or abrogating a perfect existing right, although no suit or legal proceeding then exists." Clark v. Clark, 10 N. H. 380, 386, 34 Am. Dec. 165 [quoted in De Cordova v. Galveston, 4 Tex. 470, 477].

Curative acts.— The term "retrospective statute" includes curative acts. Conde v. Schenectady, 164 N. Y. 258, 264, 58 N. E. 130. See infra, VII, D, 3.

Do not include.— A statute requiring a county that has sold bonds, afterward decided to have been issued under an unconstitutional act, to fulfil the equitable and moral obligation to the holders of such bonds by paying the amount of the principal and interest accrued thereon. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cuyahoga County, 106 Fed. 123, 45 C. C. A. 233 [reversing 99 Fed. 846]. A statute providing a new method of assessing and collecting taxes is not retroactive merely because operative upon taxes due before passage of act, or because part of the property subject to the taxes had been removed from the state. State v. Manhattan Silver Min. Co., 4 Nev. 318, 333. An act providing for the assessment of property subject to taxation, which permits an assessment after the property has been removed, since it merely enforces an existing duty. Virginia v. Chollar Potosi Gold, etc., Min. Co., 2 Nev. 86. A statute conferring on adopted children the right to inherit, which they did not theretofore possess, as it does not affect any existing right or obligation. Dodin v. Dodin, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 35, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 748 [affirmed in 16 N. Y. App. Div. 42, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 800 (affirmed in 162 N. Y. 635, 57 N. E. 1108)]. A statute applying to future transactions merely because they relate to antecedent events, or because part of the requisites of its action is drawn from time antecedent to its passing. Johnston v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cl. 157. A construction of the Sherman anti-trust law of July 2, 1890, as applying to contracts made prior to its enactment and forbidding their further performance does not give it a retroactive effect. U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assoc., 166 U. S. 290, 17 S. Ct. 540, 41 L. ed. 1007. A statute "is not properly called a retrospective statute because a part of the requisites for its action is drawn from time antecedent to its passing." Reg. v. St. Mary, 12 Q. B. 120, 127, 64 E. C. L. 120. And see In re Scott, 126 Fed. 981, 984, holding that a statute is not retrospective merely "because its operation in a given case may be dependent upon an occurrence anterior to its passage."

95. Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Woodward, 4 Colo. 162, 165 (holding that "a law may be retrospective in its operation, if it affect an existing cause of action, or an existing right of defense, by taking away or abrogating a perfect existing right, although no suit or legal proceeding then exists. Of course it is not intended to deny the right of the legislature to vary the mode of enforcing the remedy; or to provide for the more effectual security of existing rights. . . . The statute of limitations may be changed by an extension of the time, or by an entire repeal, and affect existing causes of action, which by the existing law would soon be barred. In such case the right of action is perfect, and no right of defense has accrued from the time already elapsed. But if a right has become vested and perfect, a law, which afterward annuls or takes it away, is retrospective"); Paschal v. Perez., 7 Tex. 348, 349, 365; Westerman v. Supreme Lodge K. P., 196 Mo. 670, 739, 94 S. W. 470, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 1114 (holding that a civil law is not retrospective unless it disturbs existing rights).

96. McFadden v. Blocker, 2 Indian Terr. 260, 272, 48 S. W. 1043, 58 L. R. A. 878; Hamilton County v. Rosche, 50 Ohio St. 103, 111, 33 N. E. 408, 40 Am. St. Rep. 653, 19 L. R. A. 584 (holding that "however every statute that is designed to act retrospectively is not retroactive within the terms of section 28, of art. II, of the constitution of 1851, which forbids the general assembly of this state to pass 'retroactive' laws. Whether a statute falls within the prohibition of this provision of the constitution de-statutes which affect remedies only are not within the scope of the inhibition against retrospective laws,[97] unless the remedy is entirely taken away, or is encumbered with conditions which render it impracticable.[98]

b. Express Provisions.[99] A statute is prospective only which expressly declares that it is not retroactive,[1] which, by its terms, is to apply to actions or to things done "hereafter," [2] or "thereafter," [3] or is to take effect at a fixed future date,[4] or which contains, in the enacting clause, the phrase "from and after the passing of this act," [5] or which expressly excepts rights acquired prior to the passage of the act,[6] or "actions now pending," [7] or "any suit or proceeding had or commenced" before the passage of the act.[8] So the words "heretofore," [9] and "theretofore," [10] or other similar words,[11] expressly give the statute a restrospective operation.

pends upon the character of the relief that it provides. If it creates a new right, rather than affords a new remedy to enforce an existing right, it is prohibited by this clause of the constitution of this state"); Sutherland v. De Leon, 1 Tex. 250, 305, 46 Am. Dec. 100 (holding that "retrospection, within the meaning of the constitution, would be to give a right where none before existed, and by relation back, to give the party the benefit of it; if, however, the right already existed, it would be in the power of the legislature to devise and provide a remedy").

H. 304, 362] (holding that "as, on the one hand, it is not within the constitutional competency of the legislature to annul by statute any legal ground, on which a pending action is founded, or to create any new bar, by which such an action may be defeated; so, on the other hand, it is believed, that no new ground for the support of an existing action can be created by statute, nor any legal bar to such an action be thus taken away. A statute, attempting any of these things, seems to us to be a retrospective law for the decision of civil causes, within the prohibition of this article in the bill of rights"); De Cordova v. Galveston, 4 Tex. 470, 473.

The repeal of a section providing that "this act shall have no retroactive effect" does not of itself make the original statute

In every case of doubt, the doubt must be solved against the retrospective effect.[16] This general rule has been applied to a great variety of statutes, including the uniform "Negotiable Instruments Law," [17] usury laws,[18] statutes levying taxes,[19] relating to defenses to actions on insurance policies,[20] relating to damages for wrongs,[21] providing for rendition of deficiency judgments upon sale of mortgaged premises,[22] limiting the time for the commencement of actions,[23] declaring certain contracts void,[24] regulating parties who may sue for death by wrongful act,[25] or the manner of distribution of the amount recovered,[26] modifying the fellow-servant rule,[27] relating to plans for bridges over railroad tracks,[28] relating to mechanics' liens,[29] defining the boundary of a city,[30] imposing a liability upon counties to reimburse towns for money expended in constructing bridges,[31] and providing that railroad companies held liable for fires communicated by their locomotives shall have the benefit of the insurance on the property destroyed.[32] After all, however, the presumption against the retrospective operation of statutes is only a rule of construction,[33] and if the legislative intent to give a statute a retroactive operation is obvious and plain, such intention must be given effect.[34]

Where a statute is expressly or by clear implication made retroactive to a certain extent or for a certain purpose, the courts will not by construction give to it a retroactive operation to any greater extent or for any other purpose.[35]

d. Remedial Statutes.[36] In accordance with the general rule that remedial statutes should be given a liberal construction, they will be freely construed to have a retrospective operation whenever such seems to have been the intention of the legislature,[37] unless such a construction would impair the validity of contracts, disturb vested rights,[38] or create new obligations.[39] This principle has been applied to statutes for the prevention of fraud,[40] legitimating the issue of void marriages,[41] conferring capacity upon certain classes to take by devise,[42] declaring that settlements made by public officers shall not be conclusive,[43] relating to recovery for

When it is sought to have such operation given to a statute, to the impairment of an existing right, or the infliction of a wrong, established and familiar principles would require the courts effectually to interpose and prevent such results. It is remedial no doubt, in that enlarged sense of that term, where it is employed to designate laws made to supply defects in, or pare away hardships of, the common law, but not remedial in the sense of providing a more appropriate remedy than the law before afforded, to enforce an existing right or obligation. The statute under consideration provided no new method of procedure; it simply imposed upon Hamilton county an obligation towards these plaintiffs in error that did not attach to the transaction when it occurred. In attempting to accomplish this result the legislature transcended its constitutional powers."

e. Statutes Impairing Vested Rights[49] — (i) In General. The rule that statutes are not to be construed retrospectively unless such construction was plainly intended by the legislature[50] applies with peculiar force to those statutes the retroactive operation of which would impair or destroy vested rights.[51] A statute therefore is not to be construed to impair the validity of contracts entered into before its passage.[52] This rule has been applied to statutes abolishing slavery,[53] for the release of sureties on a note or other instrument in writing,[54] requiring an indorsement for the transfer of a note,[55] or otherwise affecting the rights of parties to negotiable instruments,[56] requiring conditional sales to be men; [78] or where a right of action for damages has accrued before the passage of the act,[79] such rights will not be impaired or affected by the act. Also statutes regulating the procedure of elections,[80] or in regard to the salaries of officers,[81] are not to be construed retrospectively to impair rights vested before their passage.

(II) Rights Accruing After Passage and Before Approval by Executive. Since a statute does not become law until it has passed through all the forms required by the constitution, it cannot impair a contract made after the passage of the act by the two houses of the legislature, but before its approval by the governor.[82]

f. Statutes Imposing Liabilities.[83] A statute will not be given a retroactive construction by which it will impose liabilities not existing at the time of its passage.[84] This rule has been applied to statutes creating liens,[85] imposing liabilities upon common carriers [86] and upon subscribers to corporate stock,[87] changing the law in regard to interest and usury,[88] authorizing the levy of taxes,[89] imposing penalties for non-payment of taxes,[90] authorizing recovery for expenses of assisting paupers,[91] authorizing a tenant for years to recover betterments as against the owner of the expectant estate,[92] relating to the liability of parties to negotiable instruments,[93] and to one providing that the death of one jointly liable on a contract shall not discharge his estate.[94]

g. Statutes Relating to Offenses and Prosecutions.[95] Statutes of a criminal or penal nature will not be construed to have a retrospective operation unless the intention of the legislature to give them such operation is expressed in clear and unequivocal language.[96] Applications of this rule have been made to prevent a retroactive construction of statutes creating offenses,[97] increasing the punishment,[98] imposing disabilities,[99] permitting conviction on less evidence than was required at the time of the commission of the offense,[1] abolishing degrees of an offense,[2] and to statutes conferring jurisdiction to punish offenses which at the time of the commission no court possessed jurisdiction to try.[3] So the statute applicable to the crime of murder is that in force at the time the act was committed,[4] and not a statute passed subsequently but before the death of the victim.[5] Furthermore a statute will not be construed to operate retrospectively so as to take away a penalty or condone a crime unless such intention is clearly expressed.[6] But by the use of appropriate language, a statute ameliorating the punishment for a crime may be applied to offenses committed before its passage;[7] even such a statute, however, will not be applicable to cases tried after its passage, but before it takes effect.[8]

2. Statutes Relating to Remedies and Procedure — a. In General.[9] The presumption against the retrospective construction of statutes is founded on the principle that they should not be given such a construction as will make them unconstitutional or unjust, and therefore as a general rule does not apply to statutes that relate merely to remedies and modes of procedure.[10] The legislature has full control over the mode, times, and manner of prosecuting suits;[11] and whenever, upon consideration of an entire statute relating to these matters, it appears to have been the legislative intent to make it retroactive, it will be given this effect.[12] A retroactive effect has accordingly been given statutes providing a new mode of enforcing claims against the state[13] or county,[14] authorizing the

b. Application to Pending Actions and Proceedings [32] — (i) In General. An act relating to remedies or procedure will not be construed to apply to proceedings pending at the time it takes effect where it is expressly provided either in the statute itself [33] or by general law [34] that it shall not apply to such proceedings. Furthermore a statute will not be applied by the courts to actions or proceedings pending at the time of its passage whenever such application would work injustice,[35] as by cutting off rights to which parties were entitled under the prior law,[36] subjecting a party to new liabilities,[37] abrogating liens acquired before its passage,[38] limiting the amount of damages recoverable,[39] conferring jurisdiction not possessed by the court when the action was instituted,[40] rendering void proceedings valid when taken,[41] abating an action properly commenced,[42] requiring steps not necessary under the former law,[43] dispensing with steps necessary under the law when proceedings were taken,[44] or upholding a proceeding not authorized under the law in existence when instituted.[45] But a statute in regard to remedies and procedure will be construed to apply to pending proceedings [46] whenever the language used clearly indicates that such construction was intended by the legislature; [47] and whenever the act is purely remedial in character,[48] so that its application to pending proceedings will not work hardship or injustice, but, on the other hand, will the better protect and secure the rights of parties.[49] Such enactments also as do not affect the nature of the remedy, but relate solely to incidents of procedure,[50] such as pleading,[51] evidence,[52] and appeal and error,[53] unless the contrary is expressed, are applicable to all proceedings taken in pending actions from the time they take effect.

c. Jurisdiction and Venue — (I) JURISDICTION IN GENERAL. Where a court derives its jurisdiction from the constitution, the repeal of a statute purporting to confer jurisdiction upon it is without effect;[58] but where the jurisdiction of a court depends wholly upon a statute, the repeal of the statute operates to divest the court of its jurisdiction even of pending suits.[59] Where such intention is clearly expressed in the act, a statute depriving a court of jurisdiction may operate retrospectively to suspend proceedings then pending,[60] and a statute conferring jurisdiction may operate to give jurisdiction over causes of action arising before the passage of the act.[61] But in the absence of such clearly expressed intention a statute will not be construed to deprive a court of jurisdiction then possessed by it,[62] or to confer jurisdiction over causes of action arising before its passage.[63]

(II) VENUE. A statute in relation to the venue may be given a retrospective operation so as to apply to actions accrued or pending [64] at the time it takes effect; but unless such intention is clearly expressed, it will not be given a retroactive effect.[65]

d. Parties, Pleading, and Evidence — (I) PARTIES. A statute determining who may be proper parties to actions, especially when of a remedial nature,[66] will be applied to actions accrued [67] or pending [68] at the time of its passage.

(II) PLEADING. Statutes relating to pleading may,[69] or may not,[70] be given a retroactive effect, in accordance with the expressed intention of the legislature. In the absence of any such expression of intention, they will not be construed to invalidate pleadings filed before their taking effect,[71] but will be applied to all pleadings thereafter filed, even though the cause of action had accrued [72] or was pending [73] before the statute took effect.

(III) EVIDENCE.[74] Rules of evidence are at all times subject to modification by the legislature,[75] and statutes making such changes are applicable from their passage,[76] not only to causes of action arising thereafter, but also to actions accrued [77] or pending [78] at the time. action was commenced.[93] So where a statute relating to judgments refers to those "hereafter rendered," [94] or uses other similar words in the future tense,[95] it will be applied only to judgments obtained after it takes effect. But all statutes relating to the enforcement of judgments,[96] such as those relating to the issue [97] and levy of executions [98] and the sale of property,[99] in the absence of express provisions to the contrary, are applicable to all judgments, whether obtained before or after their passage.[1]

g. Costs. As a general rule the rights and liabilities of parties in regard to costs depend upon the law in force at the time of the termination of the proceedings.[2] Where, however, final judgment is not given immediately upon the return of the verdict, all items of costs incurred prior to the verdict should be taxed in accordance with the law as it existed at the time of its return.[3] Where, however, it is the manifest intention of the legislature, as expressed in the act itself,[4] or in a general law,[5] that its provisions in regard to costs shall not apply to pending proceedings, the costs will be fixed in accordance with the law in force at the time such proceedings were instituted.

h. Appeal and Error.[6] Unless the language of a statute indicates a contrary intention, the right of a party to an appeal will be governed by the law in force at the time the appeal is taken.[7] Where a new statute takes away certain grounds of appeal, it will apply to pending cases,[8] and even to cases in which judgment has been pronounced;[9] but will not affect an appeal granted before it takes effect.[10] A statute authorizing appeals not allowed under the former law will not be construed to authorize an appeal from an order made before its passage,[11] or to apply to a case where an appeal has been barred by lapse of time[12] or has been dismissed[13] before the act took effect. But a statute in relation to the right of appeal will not be applied to pending actions where the language of the statute indicates that it is intended to apply only to actions thereafter brought,[14] or where such application would deprive a party of rights acquired before the passage of the act.[15] A writ of error is considered a new action, and the jurisdiction of a court to issue it,[16] or the right of a party to it,[17] must be determined by the law in force at the time it is issued or refused. Unless a different intention is shown,[18] statutes changing the time formerly allowed for taking an appeal will usually be applied from the time they take effect,[19] with a saving of a reasonable time, however, in any case where a strict application of the new act would at once deprive a party of a right of appeal existing under the former law.[20] In the case of actions pending at the time the new law goes into effect, the procedure necessary to obtain an appeal or writ of error will be governed by the former law[21] or by the new act,[22] in accordance with the intention of the legislature;[23] but in cases where judgments had been rendered and exceptions filed before the statute took effect, the old law will govern.[24] Where the decision of a case on appeal depends upon history and language of a curative statute, it appears to have been the intention of the legislature to restrict it to certain acts, its operation will not be extended by construction.[49] And in no case will a curative statute be construed to validate acts which the legislature could not have previously authorized.[50]

b. Pending Actions and Proceedings. Curative statutes, by reason of their remedial and retrospective nature, are applicable not only to past transactions generally, but also to cases pending in the trial court [51] and upon appeal [52] at the time of their passage. By express provision, however, either in the statute itself [53] or by general law,[54] pending suits may be exempted from the operation of a curative statute, but such exemption will be strictly construed.[55]

4. Declaratory Acts — a. Definition. A declaratory act is one that does not purport to change the former law, but only to determine the proper construction to be placed upon the common law [56] or a former statute.[57]

b. Construction. As a general rule an act declaring the proper construction of a former statute is given a retroactive operation so as to determine the meaning of the earlier statute from its enactment.[58] This rule, however, is universally recognized to be subject to the limitation that a declaratory act will not be given a retroactive operation to impair rights vested [59] or to affect cases terminated [60] provision the adoption of a general revision of the statutes does not affect acts committed [73] or proceedings instituted [74] before the revision takes effect.[75] In accordance, however, with the general rule that requires a retrospective construction of statutes relating to remedies and procedure,[76] proceedings subsequent to the taking effect of a revision or code must be conducted in accordance therewith.[77]

6. Repealing Acts — a. In General.[78] The general rule against the retrospective construction of statutes does not apply to repealing acts, and in the absence of a saving clause,[79] or other clear expression of intention, the repeal of a statute has the effect of blotting it out as completely as if it had never existed [80] and of putting an end to all proceedings under it.[81] By way of exception to this general rule, however, the repeal of a statute will not operate to impair rights vested under it,[82] or to revive rights lost [83] or taken away [84] under the repealed statute, or to affect acts performed [85] or suits commenced, prosecuted, and concluded [86] under the former law. As a general rule the repeal of a statute does not render valid a contract that was void by reason of the statute when made; [87]

There was no moment, in which the repealing act stood in force, without being replaced by the corresponding provisions of the revised statutes. in some cases, however, distinctions have been made as to statutes that do not render the contracts themselves void, but only take away all remedy for their enforcement;[88] and as to statutes rendering contracts void, not because they are malum in se, but merely on the ground of some public policy,[89] and the enforcement of the contracts has been permitted after a repeal of the prohibitory statute. In some jurisdictions the repeal of a statute against usury has been construed to permit the enforcement of contracts declared void by the statute,[90] while in others the repeal does not operate to permit such enforcement.[91] Repeals of revenue laws,[92] such as statutes imposing taxes,[93] are to be construed as prospective only, and do not operate to remit taxes due under such statutes before their repeal.[94] The repeal of a statute prescribing the method and procedure for holding and deciding elections does not affect elections held before such repeal,[95] but may operate to revoke authority conferred under the former statute as a result of the election.[96]

while in force; [98] and this rule is applicable alike to rights acquired under contracts [99] and to rights of action to recover damages for torts.[1] Where, however, the statute is regarded, not as creating a right, but only as providing a remedy where none existed at common law, its repeal has the effect of taking away the remedy for acts or omissions occurring while the statute was still in force.[2] In those jurisdictions where a lien is regarded as a substantial right, the repeal of a statute is construed not to affect existing liens acquired under it; [3] but where the lien is regarded as only a remedy, it falls with the repeal of the statute.[4] The repeal of a statute authorizing the refunding of taxes takes away existing rights to have such taxes refunded unless the claims have been reduced to judgment before the repeal.[5]

c. Executory or Inchoate Rights. Where a right given by a statute is not by nature a vested right, and at the time of the repeal of the statute has not been reduced to judgment,[6] or otherwise executed,[7] it will fall with the statute,[8] unless expressly excepted.[9]

d. Liabilities Incurred. once been barred by it, does not revive the liability to prosecution.[24] Where, however, an act merely increases the punishment imposed for an offense under a former statute, without in terms repealing it, an offense committed before the passage of the new act may be punished afterward in accordance with the law in force when committed.[25]

g. Actions and Other Proceedings Pending[26] — (i) In General. As a general rule the repeal of a statute without any reservation[27] takes away all remedies given by the repealed statute and defeats all actions pending under it at the time of its repeal.[28] The rule is especially applicable to the repeal of statutes creating a cause of action,[29] providing a remedy not known to the common law[30] or conferring jurisdiction where it did not exist before;[31] and is carried to such extent as to abate proceedings pending upon appeal after verdict in favor of plaintiff.[32] A suit the continuance of which is dependent upon the statute repealed stops where the repeal finds it;[33] and a process abolished by the repeal cannot be served, even though in the hands of an officer for service at the time of the repeal.[34] So the repeal of a statute authorizing a particular defense operates to deprive defendant in a pending suit of such defense,[35] even though it has already been pleaded.[36] Acts done, however,[37] and suits concluded by final judgment[38] before the repeal are not affected by the repeal of statutes relating to them; nor does a suit pending to enforce a vested right abate upon a repeal of the statute under which the right accrued.[39] Where the repealing act relates merely to matters of procedure and substitutes new forms or methods in place of the old, the action does not abate, nor is the validity of proceedings already taken affected;[40] further proceedings in such a case are had, so far as possible, under the new law,[41] and where it does not apply are conducted in accordance with the old.[42] So where a statute repeals a former act, but reënacts substantially the same provisions, the new statute is generally construed as a continuance of the old one, and does not operate to abate an action pending at the time of its enactment.[43] Where a statute has been made expressly applicable to pending proceedings, a right given by it is not taken away by a revision before trial which omits the provision.[44] The repeal of a repealing act does not in itself operate to revive proceedings pending at the time of the repeal of the original act;[45] but where the proceedings under the original act have not been formally abated since its repeal, the action may be continued under a subsequent act which expressly so provides.[46]

(II) Actions For Penalties. As there can be no vested right to a penalty before final judgment,[47] the repeal of a statute imposing a penalty operates to defeat all actions pending for its recovery,[48] whether maintained in the name of the state[49] or in that of a private individual;[50] and so strictly is this rule enforced

execution, will entitle him to be discharged;[59] but under other circumstances it has been held not to prevent the execution of the sentence.[60]

h. Saving Clauses — (I) In General. It is common practice to insert saving clauses in repealing acts;[61] and in most jurisdictions there are general constitutional or statutory saving clauses applicable to all repealing acts.[62] These general statutory saving clauses are themselves subject to either express or implied repeal by subsequent acts,[63] and cannot operate to save provisions of existing statutes contrary to the express terms of the repealing act.[64] General saving clauses are not to be regarded as attempts on the part of the legislatures enacting them to curtail the authority of succeeding legislatures by limiting in advance the effect to be given their enactments, but rather as the substitution of a new rule of construction to be observed by the courts with respect to statutes thereafter enacted;[65] and hence they are properly applicable, not only to all repealing statutes enacted at the same time therewith, but also to all such acts passed thereafter,[66] unless such application is negatived by the express terms or clear implication of a particular repealing act,[67] or the general saving clause has itself been abrogated by a subsequent statute.[68]

(II) Pending Actions. A common provision is that the repeal of a statute shall not affect actions or suits commenced[69] or proceedings pending[70] under it

Ohio.— Norton v. Montville Tp., 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 335, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 422, holding that, under a general saving clause, the repeal of an act to prohibit townships from appropriating lands within two hundred yards of a dwelling-house for a cemetery, or any at the time the repeal takes effect. Under such provisions a court deprived of jurisdiction by the repealing act may nevertheless proceed with pending suits; [71] the form of action also will remain unchanged,[72] and the case will be decided in accordance with the old law; [73] but the further procedure, so far as possible, must be in conformity with that prescribed by the new law.[74] The existence of a saving clause will not have the effect to save pending proceedings where it is not so expressed as to preserve the right of action on which the proceedings are based.[75] The word "pending," as applied to proceedings in saving clauses, is used in the general sense of "commenced and not terminated," and not in the technical sense in which the expression "lis pendens" is usually understood; [76] but it has been held to apply only to actions in which there are different parties, having conflicting interests, and therefore not to include ex parte proceedings.[77] The phrase "proceeding taken" has been construed liberally to include the filing of a petition for mandamus; [78] and again, has been construed strictly,[79] and has been declared not to be equivalent to "suit commenced." [80]

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Statutes," § 374.

Application to implied repeal.— Hine v. Pomeroy, 39 Vt. 211, holding that a general saving of pending actions was not designed to be limited to cases of formal repeal in literal terms, but was designed to be efficacious to save suits depending on statutory provisions, where after the bringing of the suits the provisions on which they depended had ceased to be operative by reason of other enactments.

A repealing act saving orders or judgments already made applies not merely to those made before the passage of the act through the legislature, but to all those made before the repealing act takes effect. Brookman v. State Ins. Co., 15 Wash. 29, 45 Pac. 655, 46 Pac. 243.

St. div. 5, § 209, providing that no action pending at the time any statutory provision shall be repealed shall be affected by such repeal, but shall proceed the same as if the provision were not repealed, refers only to provisions which affect the action, and not the place of trial).

75. Dillon v. Linder, 36 Wis. 344, holding that a provision that "no action at law or criminal prosecution now pending, or which shall hereafter be commenced, founded upon any statute of this state, shall be defeated by a repeal of such statute; but any such action or prosecution shall proceed to issue, trial and final judgment in the same manner, and to the same purpose and effect, as though the statute upon which the same is or shall be founded was continued in full force, virtue and effect to the time of such trial, issue and final judgment," was applicable only to statutes giving new forms of remedy for old rights, or providing new modes of prosecution for offenses existing by law outside of the statute, and did not operate to save rights of action unknown to the common law and wholly dependent upon the statute repealed.

76. Rice v. McCaulley, 7 Houst. (III) Rights, Remedies, and Defenses Accrued. Frequently the saving clauses are couched in more general terms,[81] and include not only pending proceedings, but also all rights, remedies, and defenses vested or accrued before the repeal takes effect.[82] Such provisions have been construed to save rights accrued under contracts,[83] under recording acts,[84] under statutes for the settlement of decedents' estates,[85] and claims against municipal corporations accrued before the repeal;[86] to save remedies accrued before the repeal for personal injuries,[87] for the collection of delinquent taxes,[88] for the default of public officers,[89] for cutting timber on public land,[90] and the right to pursue a summary remedy[91] or other form of action[92] authorized by the law in force when it arose; and to save defenses, such as that the lien sought to be enforced was divested by the former law before its repeal,[93] or that under the former law the action should be dismissed.[94] Under saving clauses of this nature, rights and remedies accrued under the act repealed are not to be arrested or interrupted by the repeal but are to be preserved and matured under the former law in the same manner as if it continued in force for all purposes,[95] except that the procedure, in its non-essential details, should be conducted, so far as possible, in conformity with the law then in force.[96] In the sense in which the word "accrued" is generally used in such saving clauses, the right claimed under the old law must have fully matured, and it is not sufficient that a party should have had a mere contingent or inchoate right at the time of the repeal;[97] but where demanded by the express language of the saving clause, it will be given a more liberal construction.[98]

(IV) Liabilities. Existing statutory liabilities, as well as rights, may be preserved by saving clauses in repealing acts.[99] Thus liabilities under contracts,[1]

for personal injuries,[2] for public improvements,[3] for accrued taxes,[4] and other statutory liabilities[5] have been construed to be preserved after the repeal of the statute imposing them. Such saving clauses, however, must be carefully examined, and must not be construed to preserve liabilities clearly beyond those whose preservation was intended by the legislature.[6]

(v) Penalties and Forfeitures. Under similar saving clauses such penalties[7] and forfeitures[8] recoverable in a civil action as have accrued before the repealing act takes effect, are preserved and may be enforced after the repeal.[9] Following the general rule that penal statutes are to be construed strictly in favor of defendant, it has been held that such saving clauses attempting to preserve penalties under repealed statutes should be construed strictly against the survival of such penalties.[10]

all offenses and proceedings committed or taken before the repealing statute goes into effect, even though it has passed through the legislature and has been approved by the governor, are controlled by the old law.[16] A criminal prosecution is pending within the meaning of a saving clause from the time of the arrest and commitment of defendant.[17] Where the general saving clause provides that if the repealing act mitigates the penalty imposed by the act repealed, such mitigated penalty may be imposed, it will accordingly be given effect.[18] Such saving clauses apply only to acts forbidden by statute at the time of their commission,[19] and, like other statutes in regard to criminal offenses, are construed strictly in favor of defendant.[20]

(B) Matters Relating to Procedure. Such saving clauses frequently provide that the legal proceedings thereafter in the prosecution of offenses excepted from the general operation of the repealing act shall conform so far as practicable to the laws in force at the time such proceedings are had;[21] and, even in the absence of such special provision, the new law will govern in all matters relating to procedure,[22] unless procedure is expressly included in the language of the saving clause,[23] or the change affects in some way the substantial rights of the defense.[24]

Michigan.— Clark v. North Muskegon, 88 Mich. 308, 50 N. See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Statutes," § 378.

Distinction between "pleading" and "counting on" statute.— "Pleading the statute is stating the facts which bring the case within it, and counting on it, in the strict language of pleading, is making express reference to it by apt terms to show the source of right relied on.' Howser v. Melcher, 40 Mich.

stance, it is violative of the fundamental law, it is sufficient to allege generally that it is invalid;[50] but where the objection to the validity of the law is that it was not regularly and constitutionally passed and adopted, the defect in the proceedings must be specifically pleaded.[51] Where a form of pleading is set forth in a statute it is not necessary to include in a pleading averments formerly necessary, but omitted from the statutory form,[52] and statutory forms must always be adopted with reference to the evidence of the particular case.[53]

d. Exceptions and Provisos. Where the enacting clause of a statute contains an exception to the general provisions of the act, a party pleading the provisions of the statute must negative the exception;[54] but where the exception is contained in a proviso,[55] in a separate substantive clause,[56] or in an amendment,[57] the party pleading the statute need not negative the exception, and it is for the other party to set it up in avoidance of the general provisions of the statute.

2. Pleading Private Acts — a. In General. Courts do not take judicial notice of private statutes, and a party relying upon a private statute must both plead and prove it.[58] As distinguished from public acts, which relate to the community at large,[59] private acts are those which relate only to certain individuals,[60] and are especially to be distinguished from special acts, which may be private, or may be merely public acts of local application.[61] Acts granting charters to particular 185. As a general rule, if the allegations of the complaint bring the case within the provisions of the statute, it is not necessary either to plead the statute or to count on it (Leone v. Kelly, 77 Conn. 569, 60 Atl. 136; Hayes v. West Bay City, 91 Mich. 418, 51 N. W. 1067; Fuller v. Jackson, 82 Mich. 480, 46 N. W. 721; Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 Mich. 444); but where the action is for a penalty, it has been held necessary, under the common-law system of pleading, both to plead the statute and to count on it (Howser v. Melcher, 40 Mich. 185).

(N. Y.) 274 [affirmed in 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248, 28 How. Pr. 352]; State v. Swiggart, 118 Tenn. 556, 102 S. W. 75 (holding, however, that the journals of the general assembly, showing the various steps taken in the enactment of a statute, are not required to be specially pleaded or proven, when the statute is attacked for want of formalities in its enactment required by the constitution). But in pleading a statute which is of such a nature that a three-fifths vote is required to pass it, it is not necessary to allege that such a vote was had; an averment that the statute was passed is sufficient, on demurrer. Wolfe v. Richmond County, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 270, 19 How. Pr. 370. While it is not necessary to plead that a statute is unconstitutional, or has been impliedly repealed by a subsequent statute, yet the particular clause of the constitution which is claimed to be contravened, or the particulars in which the later statute repeals the earlier, must be otherwise pointed out specifically. private corporations, such as railroad [62] and turnpike companies,[63] have been declared private acts; but statutes granting charters to municipal corporations are regarded as public acts,[64] and in some cases statutes granting charters to banks [65] and certain other corporations [66] have been declared public. It has been held necessary to plead ordinances of municipal corporations,[67] acts granting divorce,[68] and an act authorizing the governor to appoint arbitrators to adjust a controversy between two persons.[69]

b. Form and Sufficiency. Under the old common-law practice it was necessary, in pleading a private statute, to set it out in full; [70] but under modern practice it is sufficient that the statute be so described or referred to that it can be clearly identified,[71] and a common statutory provision is that it shall be sufficient to refer to it by stating its title and the day on which it became a law.[72] Under such a provision, where the statute is not referred to in any way by the party who seeks to rely upon it, the pleading is clearly defective; [73] but an omission of the date, where no date is affixed to the private law, is not a fatal defect; [74] and where the party has complied with the statute, an express reference to particular provisions does not exclude judicial cognizance from other parts of the statute.[75] In an action against a corporation it is not necessary to refer to the title or date of its charter, as it is conclusively presumed to know these things.[76] meant that foreign statutes, like other facts, must be pleaded when they are essential to the cause of action or defense; and when they are not so essential, but only constitute evidence relating to the facts in issue, they may be offered in evidence, like other facts, without being specially pleaded.[83] The federal courts take judicial notice of the public statutes of all the states, and an action on a statute of one state can therefore be sustained in a federal court in another state without pleading such statute.[84]

b. Illinois.— Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Collier, 148 Ill. 259, 35 N. E. 756, 39 Am. St. Rep. 181 (holding that an allegation that a certain instrument, executed in another state, was made in all respects in conformity with the laws of that state, and acknowledged and delivered in accordance with said laws, is a sufficient averment as to such laws); Palmer v. Marshall, 60 Ill. 289; Stockham v. Simmons, 67 Ill. Kansas.— Showalter v. Rickert, 64 Kan. 82, 67 Pac. 454.

Kentucky.— Roots v. Merriwether, 8 Bush 397.

Massachusetts.— Pearsall v. Dwight, 2 Mass. 84, 3 Am. Dec. 35, holding that when a party pleads a part of a statute upon which he relies, with a profert of the exemplification of the whole statute, the court can take notice of only those parts specially pleaded.

Minnesota.— Hoyt v. McNeil, 13 Minn. 390.

New York.— Schluter v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 117 N. Y. 125, 22 N. E. 572, 15 Am. St. Rep. 494, 5 L. R. A. 541 (holding that an allegation in a complaint that letters of administration on the estate of a deceased person were granted by the surrogate of —— county, and that "said surrogate had jurisdiction and was duly authorized and empowered by the laws of the state of New Jersey to issue said letters as aforesaid," is sufficient to authorize proof of the laws of said state, and of the jurisdiction of the surrogate in issuing letters); Bernardston Cong. Unitarian Soc. v. Hale, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 396, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 704 (holding that in an action in New York by an unincorporated religious society located in Massachusetts to recover a legacy, where the complaint alleged that "by the laws of said Commonwealth the plaintiff is now, and always has been, competent to take and hold said legacy, and to sue for and recover the same," and that "at the time of the death of said [testator] it was and still is the law of said Commonwealth, that incorporated and unincorporated religious societies may appoint trustees . . . to hold and manage bequests for their benefit," and that such trustees had been appointed, these allegations were sufficient to authorize proof of the laws of Massachusetts); O'Reilly, etc., Co. v. Greene, 18 Misc. 423, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 1056 (holding that the law of another state under which a corporation is authorized to sue on its debts after expiration of its charter is sufficiently pleaded by an averment "that under and pursuant" to such law, suits may be brought).

Wisconsin.— New York Cent. Trust Co. v. Burton, 74 Wis. 329, 43 N. W. 141, holding that under Rev. St. § 2676, providing that a statute of another state may be pleaded by referring to its title and the date of its passage, it is not error to plead its substance instead.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Statutes," § 380.

When general rule does not apply.— Where a complaint in an application for injunction alleges that the acts sought to be enjoined are not authorized by any provisions of the statutes of a foreign state, the general rule requiring foreign statutes to be pleaded does not apply, and the allegation is sufficient to authorize proof of all the statutes of that state that are applicable. a particular method of pleading a foreign statute,[89] to make a general averment of the existence of a foreign statute relating to the subject,[90] nor the mere statement of a conclusion of law derived from the application of the statute to the facts;[91] nor a reference to the statute by its title, or the date of its enactment,[92] or both,[93] or by its chapter number.[94] Where a party relies upon proceedings had in accordance with a statute of another state, but unknown to the common law, the statute authorizing the proceedings should be set forth;[95] and a statement that the proceedings were "pursuant to"[96] or "according to"[97] the statute is insufficient. Where a party seeks to avail himself of a particular construction placed upon a statute of another state by the courts thereof, he should not only plead the statute itself, but should also set forth the construction contended for;[98] but it is not necessary to set out the facts on which the decision was rendered, or to refer to the case by title or other citation.[99]

(II) Manner of Raising Objection to. Where one party desires to have the allegations of another in regard to a foreign statute made more specific, the proper procedure is by motion to make the pleading more definite and specific.[1]

89. Becht v. Harris, 4 Minn. 504 (holding that a statute providing that "in actions by or against corporations, under the laws of this territory," the act of incorporation may be pleaded by title, is confined in its effect to domestic corporations, and does not extend to those created under the laws of another state or territory); New York Cent. Trust Co. v. Burton, 74 Wis. 329, 43 N. W. 141 (construing Rev. St. § 2676, providing that both private domestic statutes and all foreign statutes may be pleaded by referring to the title and day of passage). And see supra, VIII, A, 2, b.

B. Evidence [2] — 1. Evidence as to Public Statutes — a. Presumptions as to Enactment. An enrolled act,[3] or an act signed by the governor, deposited with the secretary of state, and published as a law,[4] is presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, to have been passed with all the formalities required by the constitution for its validity,[5] and in the form, both as to title and body, in which it was signed by the governor.[6] Unless expressly required by the constitution,[7] it is not necessary that the legislative journal shall affirmatively show

3. Arkansas.— Chicot County v. Davies, 40 Ark. 200, holding that where an amendment to a legislative bill is not required by law to be entered, and the journal shows that there was an amendment, but fails to show that it was rescinded, and the enrolled bill contains no amendment, it will be presumed that the amendment was rescinded.

Dakota.— Territory v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. 397, 41 N. W. 746, 3 L. R. A. 355.

Iowa.— Jordan v. Wapello County Cir. Ct., 69 Iowa 177, 28 N. W. 548.

Kansas.— Stephens v. Labette County, 79 Kan. 153, 98 Pac. 790; State v. Andrews, 64 Kan. 474, 67 Pac. 870, both holding that an enrolled statute imports absolute verity, and is conclusive evidence of its passage, unless the journals of the legislature show affirmatively and beyond all doubt that the act was not regularly passed.

Michigan.— People v. McElroy, 72 Mich. 446, 40 N. W. 750, 2 L. R. A. 609, holding that while the court may look behind the enrolment, and into the legislative journals, to ascertain whether an act was passed in accordance with constitutional requirements, it cannot act on anything not found in the journals, nor presume that any such requirement has been omitted, unless the fact affirmatively appears in the journals.

Minnesota.—Miesen v. Canfield, 64 Minn. 513, 67 N. W. 632, holding that the presumption that a properly authenticated bill was passed in accordance with the constitution is not overcome by the failure of the legislative journals to show any fact which is not specifically required by the constitution to be entered therein.

A. 59 (holding that in determining whether a statute was duly passed, the bound volumes of the legislative journals containing matter not in the journal as published from day to day will be presumed to have been properly amended in such respect by authority of the legislature); People v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408, 47 N. W. 765 (holding that where a house of the legislature at the beginning of the session has passed a resolution dispensing with the daily reading of the journal and authorizing the secretary to make all necessary corrections, it will be presumed that a bill was passed as stated in the secretary's corrections).

6. Erford v. Peoria, 229 Ill. 546, 82 N. E. 374; Binz v. Weber, 81 Ill. 288; State v. Brown, 33 S. C. 151, 11 S. E. 641, holding that where, from a certified copy of the original draught of an act of the legislature, it appears that the draught is upon a paper bearing the heading "A Joint Resolution," which words are marked out, and the words "A Bill" written instead, it will be presumed, in the absence of marginal notes, that the substitution was made by the draughtsman, and that the paper was introduced as a bill, not as a joint resolution.

7. Rio Grande Sampling Co. v. Catlin, 40 Colo. 450, 94 Pac. 323, holding that under a that all the requirements of the constitution as to reading, printing, etc., have been complied with.[8] Other formalities that are presumed to have been complied with are notice of application for the passage of a special act,[9] suspension of the rules,[10] taking vote by yeas and nays,[11] passage by a constitutional majority,[12] printing,[13] and publication as required by law.[14] Where the date of the approval of a statute is in question, the date shown by the published statute duly authenticated, is presumed to be correct;[15] and where the time of a statute taking effect depends upon the date of its publication, the date of the certificate of the secretary of state appended to the published volume of the laws will be presumed to be that of its first publication,[16] and to be correct.[17] These presumptions, which are ordinarily only prima facie,[18] have been declared conclusive where the statute has long been accepted and recognized as law,[19] especially when it has been so recognized by judicial decisions,[20] and also where the legislature has directed that a copy of the laws deposited in the office of the secretary of state and certified by him shall be an authentic record of said laws.[21]

b. Admissibility [22] — (i) In General — (a) Legislative Journals. In England, where there is no written constitution and the parliament is supreme, an enrolled statute is conclusive evidence of its passage and validity, and no evidence is admissible to impeach it.[23] In the United States the equivalent of the English constitutional provision that "no bill shall become a law except by a vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house, nor unless, on its final passage, the vote be taken by ayes and noes, and the names of those voting be entered on the journal," a failure of the journal to show the names of those voting "aye" and of those voting "no" raises the presumption that the bill was not duly passed in accordance with the constitution.

How enrolled.— In England a public statute is enrolled by being copied on the roll of enrolment is the signing of the act by the presiding officers of both houses of the legislature and its deposit with the secretary of state;[24] and there is a strong conflict of opinion as to whether an act authenticated in this manner is conclusive evidence as to the correctness of its contents and as to its passage in the mode prescribed by law.[25] In a number of the states the enrolled act is regarded as conclusive, and no evidence is admissible to impeach either its contents[26] or the validity of its passage.[27] The principal reasons assigned for regarding the parliament, and a private statute by its deposit with the clerk of parliament. Weeks v. Smith, 81 Me. 538, 18 Atl. 325.

California.— In California the early rule announced in Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 165, was in favor of the admission of the journals, but this case was overruled by Sherman v. Story, 30 Cal. 253, 89 Am. Dec. 93, followed by People v. Burt, 43 Cal. 560, and the conclusiveness of the enrolled act was firmly established. Under a new constitution, however, requiring certain things in regard to the passage of bills to be entered on the journals, the question has been reopened. In People v. Dunn, 80 Cal. 211, 22 Pac. 140, 13 Am. St. Rep. 118; Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479, 11 Pac. 3, and Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111, the journals were admitted, and this rule was also applied in Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. E. 222; Madison County v. Burford, 93 Ind. 383; Bender v. State, 53 Ind. 254 (holding that the courts cannot look beyond the enrolled act of the legislature to ascertain whether there has been a compliance with the requirement of the constitution that "no bill shall be presented to the governor within two days next previous to the final adjournment of the General Assembly"); Evans v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514, 95 Am. Louisiana.—In Louisiana the journals have been admitted upon a question as to whether an amendment by the senate to a house bill was concurred in by the house (Hollingsworth v. Thompson, 45 La. Ann. 222, 12 So. 1, 40 Am. St. Rep. 220); but their admission has been refused upon a question as to whether an act has been passed with the proper formalities (Whited v. Lewis, 25 La. New York.— In New York the cases are in great confusion and it cannot be said that any rule is clearly established. The following cases favor the conclusiveness of the enrolled act: People v. Marlborough Highway Com'rs, 54 N. Y. 276, 13 Am. Rep. 581; People v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269, 88 Am. Dec. 377. The following favor the admission of the journals: In re Stickney, 185 N. Y. 107, 77 N. E. 993 [affirming 110 N. Y. App. Div. 294, 97 N. Y. enrolled act as conclusive are that the legislature is a separate branch of the government, coördinate with the judiciary, and therefore its certificate, made by the presiding officers of the two houses, is the best evidence of compliance with constitutional requirements;[28] and that the admission of the journals or other evidence would result in great uncertainty and confusion as to the validity of statutes.[29] In other states the enrolled act deposited with the secretary of state is regarded as prima facie,[30] but not conclusive, evidence of its passage in due form, and the courts will admit other evidence to overturn the presumption, and to prove that the act was not passed in accordance with the constitutional requirements.[31]

United States.— The United States supreme court has decided that an enrolled act of congress is conclusive evidence of its contents and passage (Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 S. Ct. 495, 36 L. ed. 294); but later, at the same term of court, has admitted the journals upon a question as to whether a quorum was present upon passage of the bill (U. S. v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 12 S. Ct. 507, 36 L. ed. 321); and has also permitted the introduction of the journals of congress to determine the date upon which a statute took effect (Gardner v. Barney, 6 Wall. 499, 18 L. ed. 890); while it has declined to admit the journals upon a question as to the acts of a territorial legislature (Harwood v. Wentworth, 162 U. legislation, to determine, from these records, whether the statute in question was adopted in the manner required by the constitution for its validity. In some jurisdictions in which the enrolled act is conclusive evidence as to contents and validity, the journals are nevertheless admissible as to the time of its taking effect.[34] In some states the enrolled act is conclusive evidence as to subject-matter;[35] but the journals are admissible for the purpose of determining whether it was passed in accordance with the requirements of the constitution,[36] or as to whether it was passed at all.[37]

(B) Other Evidence Than Legislative Journals — (1) IN GENERAL. Regardless of this attitude as to the admission of the journals, the courts are almost unanimously agreed that no other evidence may be introduced to impeach the enrolled act.[38] It has been held, however, that the journals may be supplemented by other evidence to show that the constitutional requirements have been complied with;[39] but evidence supplementary to that of the journals as to the passage of a municipal ordinance has been excluded.[40]

(2) RECORDS AND OTHER WRITTEN MATTER. The engrossed bill has been refused admission in evidence to contradict the enrolled bill,[41] but has been admitted as evidence of the passage in due form of the bill as enrolled.[42] Other forms of evidence that have been declared inadmissible are ex parte affidavits,[43] and the original bill,[44] and amendments attached thereto.[45] On the other hand evidence has been admitted to show that an act properly authenticated was unconstitutional because not mentioned in the executive call of the special session at which it was passed;[46] the record required by the constitution to be kept by the secretary of state has been admitted to show that a bill was presented to the governor at a time other than that indicated by the indorsements on the bill by the clerks of the two houses;[47] recitals in a governor's proclamation have been declared prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein so far as they were within his official cognizance and relevant as to the validity of a veto;[48] and a memorandum in the minute-book of the journal clerk of the house, together with the parol evidence of the clerk as to the message to which it referred, has been admitted to show that a veto message was received the day before that indicated by the journal.[49]

(3) PAROL EVIDENCE. Parol evidence in particular has been repeatedly declared inadmissible either to impeach the enrolled act[50] or to impeach the journals;[51] nor is it admissible as to the intention of the legislature in passing the bill;[52] nor as to whether certain members of the house passing the bill had been improperly seated;[53] nor as to whether a veto of the governor was indorsed on a bill before or after it was filed with the secretary of state.[54]

(II) Where Act Not Enrolled or Authenticated. If an act has never been authenticated by the signatures of the presiding officers of the two houses,[55] or deposited with the secretary of state,[56] as a general rule, neither the journals,[57] nor an engrossed bill with the certificate of the clerical officers of the two houses attached,[58] nor any other evidence,[59] will be admitted to prove its passage. However, in a few cases involving either special circumstances, or mandatory and explicit constitutional provisions,[60] authentication by the presiding officers of the two legislative houses [61] and enrolment in the office of the secretary of state has been regarded only as the best source of evidence, and in its absence other evidence has been admitted of the passage of the act.[62]

c. Weight and Sufficiency [63] — (I) Enrolled Act and Journals. Even in those states in which the journals are admitted, there is a strong presumption in favor of the subject-matter [64] and validity [65] of the enrolled act; and it is generally declared that this will be sustained unless it affirmatively appears from the journals that the act was not passed as required by the constitution.[66] But where the constitution expressly requires certain matters relating to the passage of statutes to be affirmatively shown by the journals, a statute is invalid in the absence of such affirmative showing.[67] Under such provisions journals have been held sufficient even though they sometimes designated a bill by the wrong number;[68] or contained an obvious error in grammar;[69] or, after stating the number of "ayes," contained a blank after the word "nays;"[70] or, in giving the names of the members voting for a bill, omitted the christian names, but, wherever there were two members of the same surname, gave the county which they represented;[71] but a mere statement in the journal, after giving the number of those voting aye, that "those voting in the affirmative are . . ." is an insufficient compliance with a requirement that the names of those voting for a bill shall be entered on the journal.[72]

by the legislature, without expense to the state, and made competent evidence by a subsequent act, are likewise prima facie evidence of the correctness and validity of their contents;[74] but it has been held that unofficial compilations of statutes not authorized or indorsed by the legislature are not admissible in evidence.[75] The best evidence, however, of the existence [70] and subject-matter [77] of a statute consists of the manuscript enrolled act on file with the secretary of state; and to this resort may be made for the correction of errors in the printed copies.[78] So printed copies of the journals are prima facie but not conclusive evidence of the truth of their contents.[79] Where the printed statute has long been accepted and acted upon as correct, it has been held, in exceptional cases, that it will continue to be recognized and enforced as the best evidence of the statute in spite of discrepancies between it and the enrolled copy.[80]

(III) OTHER RECORDS AND WRITINGS. It has been held sufficient evidence of the veto of an act by the governor that the original act filed with the secretary of state bore an indorsement that it was not approved, and that both the act and the records of the secretary's office show that it was filed within the time allowed after the adjournment of the legislature; [81] and a statement in a code by the commissioners appointed to revise it that a certain section was not in the enrolled act has been declared sufficient evidence of that fact.[82]

Eq. 441, 38 Atl. 422, holding that under the statute of March 2, 1847, printed statute books and pamphlet session laws of other states printed by authority are admissible. Before the passage of the statute of 1847, the method provided by congress had been decided to be exclusive.

New York.— In New York, prior to 1848, statutes of other states could be proved only by a copy exemplified by the officer having custody of them (Toulandon v. Lachenmeyer, 1 Sweeney 45, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. 215, 37 How. Pr. 145, and Packard v. Hill, 2 Wend. 411); but by statute passed in that year (now Civ. Code, § 942), they were authorized to be proved by copies printed by authority or commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law in the courts of that state (Toulandon v. Lachenmeyer, supra). In construing this provision, a copy of foreign statutes published by the state printer and showing on its title page that it was published under a of the statutes of another state printed by private individuals but not under the authority of, nor indorsed by, the legislature, are not admissible under an act authorizing the introduction of copies printed by authority;[3] but are admissible under an act providing that "printed volumes purporting to contain the laws of a sister state or territory shall be admitted as prima facie evidence of the statutes of such state or territory."[4] In some jurisdictions the testimony of attorneys, and others skilled in the law of the state in question, is admissible as to the existence and meaning of the statutes;[5] but in other jurisdictions parol evidence is inadmissible to prove the statute law of another state.[6] So the reports of judicial deci-

"resolve" of the legislature of a certain date, has been admitted (Bernardston Cong. Unitarian Soc. v. Hale, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 396, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 704); but the testimony of an attorney of such other state that he was acquainted with the laws thereof and that the book in question was the Revised Statutes of that state has been held insufficient (Lambert v. Hoffman, 20 Misc. 331, 45 N. Eq. 441, 38 Atl. 422 (holding that "in order to know what the law of a foreign state is on a given subject we need something more than the production of the statute, for that only gives the words in which the law is written. The question to be determined is not what the language of the law is, but what the law is altogether, as shown by exposition, interpretation and adjudication; and this, I take it, can best be ascertained by the testimony of a professional witness, whose special knowledge enables him to speak to that fact"); Wood v. Stephen, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 175 (holding, however, that where a negro claimed his freedom under the last will of his master, formerly of Maryland, dated April 2, 1768, evidence that an act of assembly of Maryland, passed in 1752, declared manumissions by last will void, and was in force in 1768, and repealed as late as 1796, although it was to continue only three years, is not sufficient, unless the record of the laws making the continuance be produced).

sions are admissible for the same purpose in some jurisdictions,[7] but not in others.[8]

c. Other Countries. The rules in regard to the evidence admissible to prove the statutes of a foreign country are very much the same as those in regard to the evidence admissible to prove those of another state.[9] They must be proved as facts,[10] and their existence and validity established by satisfactory evidence.[11] While a copy duly authenticated by the proper official is the best evidence as to the enactment and text of a foreign statute,[12] yet, by the general rule prevailing in the United States, printed copies of foreign statutes are admissible where shown to the reasonable satisfaction of the court to be authentic.[13] In some jurisdictions parol evidence is inadmissible;[14] but in others the testimony of persons learned

I. DEFINITION.

Steam is the elastic aeriform fluid into which water is converted when heated to the boiling point. It is an element of power.[1]

1. Reynolds v. Washington Real Estate Co., 23 R. I. 197, 203, 49 Atl. 707.

It is not synonymous with "power."—Reynolds v. Washington Real Estate Co., 23 R. I. 197, 49 Atl. 707.

Steam as motive power is inclusive of electricity generated by it. Prospect Park, etc., R. Co. v. Coney Island, etc., R. Co., 66 Hun (N. Y.) 366, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 1046 [reversed on other grounds in 144 N. Y. 152, 39 N. E. 17, 26 L. R. A. 610].

The terms "steam boilers" and "steam machinery" as used in Minn. Gen. Laws (1899), c. 91, p. 92, providing for licensing of persons operating steam boilers or steam machinery of any kind, are not inclusive of steam heating plants, used for heating buildings occupied in part for business and in

II. STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

In some jurisdictions there are statutes regulating the use of steam engines;[2] and it has been made a statutory offense for the owner or user of a boiler, or the person acting in his behalf, not to notify certain public authorities of an explosion within a specified time after it has taken place.[3]

III. STEAM-HEATING CORPORATIONS.

A turnpike is a public highway, within the meaning of a statute giving steam-heating corporations power to lay their pipes in public highways.[4] A steam-heating corporation occupying a street permanently and for a semi-public purpose can recover for injuries to its pipes by a private corporation subsequently occupying the street temporarily and for a purely private purpose, even though the injuries are not due to negligence.[5] A steam-heating corporation in placing heating apparatus in a store at the owner's request is not an insurer against danger therefrom; it is bound only to use that degree of care which ordinary prudence and foresight would under the circumstances suggest and prompt.[6]

The term "boiler" is defined by the English Boiler Explosion Act (45 & 46 Vict., c. 22, § 2) as any closed vessel used for generating steam, or for heating water, or for heating other liquids into which steam is admitted for steaming, boiling, or similar purposes. Liability of partners.— In an action for damages for an injury resulting from the explosion of a steam boiler the following facts appeared: The owner of a boiler had used it for years in running a sawmill; he entered into partnership with two others to erect and operate a grist-mill with the boiler; by the terms of the partnership the boiler was to be used on certain days of the week to operate the grist-mill for the benefit of the partnership; the owner reserved to himself the right to use the boiler on the other days of the week to run the sawmill for his exclusive benefit; the boiler exploded on one of the latter days when it was being used by the owner to operate the sawmill. The jury found as a fact that, under the partnership agreement, each of the two other partners had an undivided fourth interest in the boiler. There was no evidence that it was in a defective condition when the parties en-adjoining property-owners,[9] to licensees,[10] to strangers,[11] to employees,[12] and to employees of others working on their premises.[13] They are not, however, liable for injuries unless negligence is shown.[14]

b. Extent and Limits of Liability. Persons using or producing steam must in connection with such use or production be careful to use safe machinery.[15] They are liable for injuries caused by accidents due to defects where they have notice of the defects and continue to use the machinery in defective condition.[16]

St. Rep. 585, an action to recover damages for injuries to a horse where the following facts appeared: Plaintiff drove on defendant's premises; defendant was a mill owner; in leaving defendant's premises plaintiff's horse became frightened and plaintiff lost control of it; the horse left the road provided for egress from the premises, and was injured by stepping in ground that had become soft and spongy by reason of the escape of steam from a broken pipe; this soft ground was twenty-five feet from the road used for egress from the premises. The court held that even if defendant were negligent in allowing the steam to escape, plaintiff in leaving the road of egress from the premises became a mere licensee, and that he could not recover for injuries from a defect outside of the roadway unless it was substantially adjacent to the roadway, and that a defect twenty-five feet away from the roadway was not adjacent to it.

is also their duty to observe statutory provisions in operation regulating the use and production of steam.[23]

c. Where Duty Delegated to Others. Persons using steam may have their machinery repaired by others, and when they have used due care in selecting proper mechanics to make the repairs, and have had the machinery inspected by competent inspectors, and it has been reported to be safe, they will not be liable for injuries resulting from an accident caused by a defect in the repairs.[24] They should, however, have repairs tested;[25] but this duty may be delegated to competent inspectors, and when it is so delegated persons using the steam will not be responsible for the negligence of the inspectors if they have no knowledge of their negligence.[26]

2. Manufacturers of Machinery. Manufacturers of steam boilers, if negligent in the construction of a boiler, are liable to a purchaser for injuries caused by its explosion.[27] They are not, however, liable to third persons for injuries caused by an explosion.[28]

3. Inspectors and Insurers.[29] Insurers of steam boilers who coöperate actively with the owners in the management of boilers, having them inspected from time to time, are responsible for injuries to the adjacent property of third persons, sustained by explosions of boilers caused by the omission of proper tests and inspection.[30] Corporations authorized by statute to insure and to inspect steam boilers and stationary steam engines, and to issue certificates, stating the maximum working pressure, which are to be accepted instead of state inspection, are liable for damages resulting from a negligent inspection and false certificate.[31]

4. Contributory Negligence. As in other cases of negligence,[32] the contributory negligence of plaintiff will defeat a recovery in an action for damages for injuries caused by the negligent use of steam.[33] The burden of proof, it has been dling stranger, since the ship-owner was bound to exercise a supervision of the premises to insure the safety of such employee.

Failure to test must be proximate cause of injury.—Where a railroad company did not apply a test to a boiler at the time repairs were made, ten months before the explosion, and it was proved that the defect in the boiler which caused the explosion had existed but six months, at longest, before the explosion, it was held that the failure to test the repairs was not negligence. But see Beers v. Woodruff, etc., Iron Works, 30 Conn. 308, where in an action to recover for injuries caused by a boiler explosion it appeared that defendant manufactured, without special warranty, a boiler for plaintiff, who being well acquainted with machinery prescribed the quality of iron to be used, and directed the size and shape of the boiler; that the boiler was placed in plaintiff's factory, and was there run successfully for nine months; that it then exploded while the person who attended it was at dinner. No satisfactory evidence as to the cause of the explosion was shown. Upon these facts the court held that a verdict for plaintiff was against the evidence, set it aside, and granted defendant a new trial.

R. Co. v. Houck, 72 Ill. 285; National Woodenware, etc., Co. v. Smith, 108 Ill. App. 477.

Question for jury.—In an action for damages for injuries resulting from the explosion held in at least one jurisdiction, is on plaintiff to establish freedom from contributory negligence.[34]

5. Actions — a. Form. The proper form of an action for injuries caused by the explosion of a steam boiler is action on the case and not trespass.[35]

b. Pleading. In an action to recover damages for injuries caused by the explosion of a steam boiler plaintiff must recover according to the allegations and the proof, and not according to either alone.[36] In an action for damages sustained by reason of the explosion of a steamboat, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the master and owners, an averment of strict compliance on the part of the proprietors with the requirements of the act of congress of 1852, relating to steamboats, was held to be insufficient as a defense, without the further allegation of care and a denial of negligence.[37]

c. Evidence[38] — (i) Presumptions and Burden of Proof. In actions for damages for injuries caused by the use of steam the burden is upon plaintiff to show negligence.[39] And it is a general rule that where defendant owes plaintiff no duty other than the exercise of ordinary care to prevent injury, the fact of an explosion raises no presumption of negligence.[40] But where defendant owes of a boiler it was held that the trial court's refusal to submit the question of contributory negligence to the jury, and its ruling that contributory negligence was not sufficiently shown were erroneous, where the following facts appeared: Plaintiff, who was passing through a street where a new boiler was to be tested, stopped; although he was told to leave, and that it was not safe for him to stop, he did not leave; he was injured by the explosion of the boiler which was caused by the reckless application of a test. Ochsenbein v. Shapley, 85 N. Y. 214.

34. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Houck, 72 Ill. 285.

In Canada, however, where defendant relies upon the contributory negligence of plaintiff to defeat the cause of action, the burden is upon him not only to show the contributory negligence but to show that it was the proximate cause of the injury. Roe v. Lucknow, 13 Can. L. T. Occ. Notes 148.

Insurers and inspectors.— In an action against a corporation authorized by statute to insure and inspect steam-boilers, and to issue certificates of inspection, stating the maximum working pressure allowed, which certificates should be accepted in place of a state inspection, the trial court, in charging the jury, held that where a steam boiler, so insured and inspected, exploded, killing a child of the plaintiffs, the burden of proof was upon plaintiffs to show that the certificate accorded to the boiler a greater capacity of resistance than it would safely bear, thus authorizing its use under a dangerous degree of pressure; and that this was the result of negligent inspection. Bradley v. Hartford Steam-Boiler Inspection, etc., Co., 19 Fed. 246.

40. Reiss v. New York Steam Co., 128 N. Y. 103, 28 N. E. 24 (holding that where defendant, at plaintiff's request, put steam pipes into his building, and connected the pipes with its steam supply pipes, and after the pipes had been tested by defendant and accepted by plaintiffs, the bonnet on the service valve blew off, and the escaping steam damaged plaintiff's goods, the mere fact of the accident was no proof of negligence on the part of defendant); Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co., 122 N. Y. 118, 25 N. E. 259, 19 Am. St. Rep. 475 [reversing 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 384, 14 N. Y. St. 713]; Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 386, 21 N. E. 864, 15 Am. plaintiff a greater duty than ordinary care, it is held that proof of an explosion is prima facie proof of negligence, and casts upon defendant the burden of showing that the explosion was not caused by his negligence.[41] In the United States courts it is held that a steamboat boiler explosion is prima facie evidence of negligence and casts upon the owner the burden of disproving negligence.[42] In fact congress has passed an act providing that proof of the explosion of a steamboat boiler shall be prima facie evidence of negligence.[43]

Landlord and tenant.— The explosion of a steam boiler, leased as part of the premises, and used by the tenant, is not of itself prima facie evidence of the tenant's negligence. Morris Co. v. Southworth, 154 Ill. 118, 39 N. E. 1099.

Master and servant.— This rule applies to actions between employees and their employers. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494; Voigt v. Michigan Peninsular Car Co., 112 Mich. 504, 70 N. W. 1103; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 17 S. Ct. 707, 41 L. ed. 1136. See Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 77 Ill. 217, and Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Houck, 72 Ill. 285, holding that no presumption of negligence arises from the proof of a boiler explosion, in an action between the engine driver and the master.

Inference of negligence.— In an action for damages caused by the explosion of a steam boiler, negligence in the operation of the boiler, or defect in its construction, may be inferred by the jury from the mere fact of the explosion; but a charge to the effect that proof of the mere fact of an explosion raises a presumption of negligence and casts upon defendant the burden of disproving negligence is erroneous. Young v. Bransford, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 232.

A contrary rule has, however, been followed in some cases. See Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Phillips, 55 Ill. 194, 49 Ill. 234 (where it was held, in an action for damages by a person in a union depot, injured by an explosion of a locomotive of a railroad, on whose line he did not intend to become a passenger, that the fact of the explosion was presumptive evidence of negligence in the construction or management of the engine, on which the company might be held liable for the injury; that the presumption was not conclusive and might be rebutted by affirmative proof of due care, but that in the absence of such proof the law presumed that the casualty was attributable to some cause against which the company should have provided); John Morris Co. v. Burgess, 44 Ill. App. 27 (holding that the fact of the explosion of a boiler causing injury to a person lawfully present, who sustains no relation of employment or duty to the person controlling the boiler, is prima facie evidence of negligence in those having the management of the boiler); Corbett v. Lymansville Co., (R. I. 1908) 69 Atl. 69 (holding that plaintiff in an action to recover damages for injuries caused by an explosion makes out a prima facie case that the explosion was caused by an extraordinary pressure from the steam supplied by showing that the machine adapted to retain steam under pressure, and apparently in good condition and capable of withstanding an ordinary pressure, suddenly exploded with violence).

41. Caldwell v. New Jersey Steamboat Co., 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 425 [affirmed in 47 N. Y. 282] (holding that the fact of the explosion of the boiler of a steamboat is of itself presumptive evidence of negligence on the part of the owner, and casts on him the burden of showing that the accident was due to causes which human skill and foresight in the construction and management could not foresee or avert); Goll v. Manhattan R. Co., 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 74, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 185 [affirmed in 125 N. Y. 714, 26 N. E. 756] (holding that where plaintiff, passing under defendant's elevated road, was injured by a fragment of a cylinder which burst on one of defendant's engines, negligence might be inferred from the nature of the accident, and the question should be allowed to go to the jury). See also Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co., 122 N. Y. 118, 25 N. E. 259, 19 Am. St. Rep. 475; Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 386, 21 N. E. 864, 15 Am. St. Rep. 613, in both of which cases the courts, although holding in those cases that no presumption of negligence arose from the mere proof of an explosion, pointed out the distinction between actions for negligence where a contractual relation existed between the parties, and those in which defendant owed to plaintiff no other duty than to use such ordinary care, and said that in the latter class a presumption of negligence would arise on such proof. And compare Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494, where it was held that, in an action by an employee for damages received by the explosion of a boiler, the fact of the explosion was not presumptive evidence of negligence, although the presumption was said to be otherwise in an action by a passenger on a railroad.

When conclusive.— The presumption of negligence, arising from the fact of the explosion of the boiler of a steamboat, becomes conclusive when no hidden defect is shown to have existed, and the boiler is found to have been in an unsafe condition resulting from burning, which must have been done by the carelessness of the engineer. Dunlap v. The Reliance, 2 Fed. 249, 4 Woods 420.

Contractual relations between the parties are not necessary in order that the presumption may be raised, it originates from the nature of the act. Rose v. Stephens, etc., Transp. Co., 11 Fed. 438, 20 Blatchf. 411.

43. 5 U. S. St. at L. 306, § 13.

(II) ADMISSIBILITY.[44] In actions for injuries sustained on account of the use of steam, the ordinary rules of evidence as to admissibility are applicable, and as a general rule any evidence tending to establish or defeat the cause of action is admissible, subject, however, to the restrictions imposed by the law governing the admissibility of evidence.[45]

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. The facts in each action and the general

Not repealed by Act Cong. 1852 (10 U. S. St. at L. 72, § 30), providing that whenever damage should be sustained from explosion of a vessel, the master and owner and the vessel should be liable to every person so injured, if it happens through any neglect to comply with the provisions of law, or through known defects of the steam apparatus. Curran v. Cheeseman, 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. (Ohio) 52.

Master and servant.— Connolly v. Davidson, 15 Minn. 519, 2 Am. Rep. 154 (holding, in an action where plaintiff was a deck hand on a steamboat, and was injured by the explosion of a boiler of another steamboat while the two boats, operated by defendants, jointly interested in their earnings, were going up the Mississippi side by side, that the statute was applicable); McMahon v. Davidson, 12 Minn. 357 (holding that, in an action for damages caused by the explosion of a boiler on a steamboat, on which plaintiff was a deck hand, the statute was applicable.

Passengers.— This statute was held to apply to actions by a passenger, not on the vessel, the boiler of which exploded, but on a vessel going up the river beside it. Fay v. Davidson, 13 Minn. 523.

Sufficiency of evidence to overcome presumption.—Where two steamboats were each "doing their best" to reach a certain landing first, and efforts had been made at least twice by the rear boat to pass the one in front, and the engineer of the front boat was restless and constantly watching the rear boat, the boiler on the forward boat exploded, injuring the libellant, and, where the only denials that the boats were racing were made by the pilot and engineer of the damaged boat, and the fact that the boats were racing was testified to by a number of passengers and the pilot of the rear boat, and was not denied by the master of the forward boat, and the assistant engineer and the fireman of the forward boat testified that the boiler was permitted to carry forty pounds of steam, and that when the explosion occurred they were carrying only twenty-three pounds, and the principal engineer could not recollect how much steam they carried, and the master of the boat was silent on that subject and as to the speed of the boat, it was held that the presumption of negligence raised by the statute was not rebutted by the evidence, since the court would not treat the evidence of those who were engaged in racing the boat as sufficient for that purpose. The New World v. King, 16 How. (U. S.) 469, 14 L. ed. 1019.

Statutory actions for wrongful death.— This statute is held to apply to actions under a state statute requiring compensation for causing death by wrongful act, neglect, or default. Bradley v. Northern Transp. Co., 15 Ohio St. 553.

44. Admissibility generally see EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 821.

45. See cases cited infra, this note.

Admissions made by an engineer in the line of his duty, as to the number of pounds of pressure that he was working under at the time of an explosion, are competent in an action to recover damages for injuries caused by the explosion. Beunk v. Valley City Desk Co., 128 Mich. 562, 87 N. W. 793.

The construction of a boiler should be understood by the jury in an action to recover damages for injuries caused by its explosion, and the exclusion of evidence to explain it was thought error. Merryman v. Hall, 131 Mich. 406, 91 N. W. 647.

The condition, shortly after an accident, of the instrumentality which caused it is admissible in an action for damages for injuries caused by a boiler explosion, as bearing upon its condition at the time of the accident, or just prior thereto, when it appears that there has been no intervening change. Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. McDonough, 161 Fed. 657, 88 C. C. A. 517.

Expert evidence to the effect that an explosion of a steam boiler was caused by excessive pressure was thought competent in an action for damages for injuries caused by the explosion, where the witness explained the reasons on which his conclusion was based. Beunk v. Valley City Desk Co., 128 Mich. 562, 87 N. W. 793.

Experimental tests made after the accident, upon a boiler similar in construction to the one in question, was held to be admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that defendant was not negligent in the inspection of the boiler which exploded. Bradley v. Hartford Steam-Boiler Inspection, etc., Co., 19 Fed. 246.

The impracticability of removing the flues of a boiler for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the "braces" may be shown in an action for injuries owing to the explosion of a boiler, where the lack of reasonable inspection is relied upon by plaintiff as negligence, since the question is whether ordinarily careful and prudent men would have removed the flues, and the exclusion of evidence of the fact is error. Merryman v. Hall, 131 Mich. 406, 91 N. W. 647.

Other explosions.— In an action for injuries sustained through a boiler explosion, where the gravamen of the charge was that defendant had negligently failed to exercise reasonable care in maintaining the boiler in rules of evidence [46] must be considered to determine the weight to be given to particular facts [47] and their sufficiency to support a cause of action,[48] or their

a reasonably safe condition, evidence of recurring explosions, occurring in the course of its prior use, when the conditions were substantially the same, was held to be admissible as bearing upon its tendency to become impaired by the particular use to which it had been subjected, defendant's knowledge of that tendency, and the precautions which, in the exercise of reasonable or ordinary care, should have been taken thereunder in inspecting and testing it to determine whether it was in reasonably safe condition for use; but such evidence was held not to be admissible for any other purpose. Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. McDonough, 161 Fed. 657, 88 C. C. A. 517.

An ordinance which made it unlawful to operate a tank subject to steam pressure, without having first obtained the inspection and approval thereof, by the inspector of boilers, within one year previous to such use, was held to be competent evidence in an action for death resulting from the bursting of a steam boiler, where the declaration counted upon the ordinance, and the evidence showed that the tank in question had been subject to steam pressure, not only at the time of the accident, but occasionally prior thereto. National Woodenware, etc., Co. v. Smith, 108 Ill. App. 477.

Practice of another company in testing boilers.— Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. McDonough, 161 Fed. 657, 88 C. C. A. 517, holding that evidence of the practice of another railroad company in testing boilers was admissible in an action for damages for injuries caused by a boiler explosion.

That an engineer was skilful may be proved by defendant, in an action to recover damages for the injuries caused by an explosion of a steam boiler on a steamboat, even if the engineer was not licensed, and a statute made it a crime to permit engineers to operate boilers on steamboats unless they were licensed. Fay v. Davidson, 13 Minn. 523.

That an engine had always been considered unsafe by employees using it was thought competent in an action to recover damages caused by the explosion of the engine to show that the person having charge of the machinery knew, or might have known by reasonable diligence, that the engine was not safe. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. 338.

The verdict of a coroner's jury to the effect that injuries of plaintiff's intestate, in an action to recover for wrongful death caused by a steam boiler explosion, were caused by his own carelessness is competent to show contributory negligence when that defense is pleaded. National Wooden-Ware, etc., Co. v. Smith, 108 Ill. App. 477.

Hearsay evidence is incompetent in an action to recover for personal injuries caused by an explosion of an engine boiler, so it is proper for the court to refuse to permit a witness to state the reason he has heard given by an engineer for having quit the engine, the boiler of which exploded. Long v. Doxey, 50 Ind. 385.

The number of engineers that had been employed upon an engine within the month preceding an explosion of the boiler of the engine was not thought relevant to show the condition of the boiler, in an action to recover damages caused by the explosion, and the exclusion of evidence thereof was held to be proper. Long v. Doxey, 50 Ind. 385.

That steam had been escaping at other places along the pipe, by other persons, at different times, is neither competent nor relevant evidence in an action to recover damages for an injury that occurred by reason of a break in a steam pipe on defendant's premises, which defendant claimed was unknown to her, or any of her employees, at the time the injury occurred. Armstrong v. Medbury, 67 Mich. 250, 34 N. W. 566, 11 Am. St. Rep. 585.

That more steam than the rules of the company allowed had been carried by the engineer on a previous trip is not competent evidence in an action to recover for the death of a brakeman caused by an explosion of a steam boiler. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. 338.

46. See EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 821; NEGLIGENCE, 29 Cyc. 400.

47. Report of a boiler insurance company that its inspectors had made a proper inspection of a particular boiler is not conclusive evidence of that fact; the weight to be given must be determined by the jury. Anderson v. Hays Mfg. Co., 207 Pa. St. 106, 56 Atl. 345, 63 L. R. A. 540.

Inference to be drawn from an explosion.— In an action to recover damages for injuries resulting from negligence, the court said: "The fact of an explosion admits of but two inferences, negligence in overstraining a boiler free from defects, or the existence of defects which would deny the proper use of the boiler if it were free from defects." Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Lynch, 147 Ind. 165, 175, 44 N. E. 997, 46 N. E. 471, 3 L. R. A. 293.

Weight given testimony of officers of steamboat whose boilers exploded see The New World v. King, 16 How. (U. S.) 469, 14 L. ed. 1019.

48. Bursting of joint in steam pipe.— In an action for recovery of damages for death resulting from the bursting of a joint in a steam pipe where, although the cause of the explosion was entirely speculative, it was plaintiff's theory that it was caused by a defect in the joint itself, and he introduced evidence to show that the joint had been leaking for a long time prior to the accident, and that afterward a crack was discovered therein of such a character that it must have existed for some time, and where there was no evidence to show that the joint was improperly constructed, or that the leakage in itself was a signal of danger, or that an inspection would have revealed the defect, it sufficiency to establish contributory negligence.[49] Where the evidence of negligence is conflicting, the reviewing court will not disturb a finding of the jury.[50]

d. Trial;[51] Instructions. General instructions in actions for damages for injuries caused by negligence in the use of steam are inappropriate where a special verdict is required.[52] It is only necessary for plaintiff to prove so many acts alleged by him as constitute a cause of action, and so an instruction which places upon him a greater burden is erroneous.[53]

B. Nuisances.[54] While producing and using steam is not a nusiance per se,[55] to operate a steamboat the boiler of which has not been inspected as required by statute [56] is a nuisance;[57] and so is the operation of a steam engine on one's premises so as to cause vibration and shaking of the adjoining building to such an extent as to endanger and injure it.[58] In Canada persons using steam on their premises are liable to damages for maintaining a nuisance, if they permit it to injure the adjoining property.[59] was held that the evidence was not sufficient to establish a cause of action. Voigt v. Michigan Peninsular Car Co., 112 Mich. 504, 70 N. W. 1103.

Fire caused by explosion.— In an action for damages for the burning of plaintiff's vessel, it was held the following facts did not establish a cause of action: The vessel was lying at a wharf adjacent to defendant's oil refinery; there was an explosion of a boiler in the refinery, followed by a fire; the burning oil flowed down a pipe, used for pumping oil into the refinery from vessels, into a lighter filled with oil; this exploded, communicating the fire to plaintiff's vessel about twenty feet away. Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co., 122 N. Y. 118, 25 N. E. 259, 19 Am. St. Rep. 475 [reversing 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 384, 14 N. Y. St. 713].

Sufficiency of evidence to charge manufacturers see Beers v. Woodruff, etc., Iron Works, 30 Conn. 308.

Scalding.—In an action to recover for being scalded by steam being turned on, while plaintiff was inside a boiler, the evidence was reviewed and held to have justified the trial court in withdrawing the case from the jury, and directing a verdict for defendant. White v. Sydney, etc., Coal, etc Co., 25 Nova Scotia 384.

Sufficiency to rebut presumption of negligence see The New World v. King, 16 How. (U. S.) 469, 14 L. ed. 1019.

49. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Houck, 72 Ill. 285, where the evidence is reviewed and thought to establish contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff's intestate.

Y. 559, 76 N. E. 79], holding, in an action for damages from death caused by the escape of steam and boiling water, when it appeared that plaintiff's intestate was employed on a building in which defendants were putting in elevators, that an exhaust pipe connected with the operation of the elevators had been carried above the roof, but at the time of the accident had not been capped, that on the morning of the accident defendants' representative turned on the steam, and boiling water and steam were thrown out of the exhaust pipe, and scalded plaintiff's intestate, and where there was evidence that the exhaust drip valves were all open when the steam was turned on, and, on the other hand, evidence that condensed steam had collected in the exhaust pipe during the previous night, that the drip valves had not been opened for any appreciable length of time, and that the accident was due to negligence in turning on steam without attending to them, that it was for the jury to determine whether the drip valves had been open during the night.

52. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Lynch, 147 Ind. 165, 44 N. E. 997, 46 N. E. 471, 34 L. R. A. 293, holding, in an action for damages for injuries caused by an explosion of a steam boiler, where the jury were to return a special, and not a general verdict, that it was not error to refuse to give an instruction to the effect that the fact that a boiler exploded when in use was not evidence of negligence, either as to the inspection or repairing of the engine, or of the management of it.

53. Long v. Doxey, 50 Ind. 385, holding that where a complaint for an injury causing death alleged that the injury resulted from the explosion of a boiler, and charged that the boiler was composed of bad iron, was defectively made, and was old, decayed, and worn to unfitness for use, it is error to instruct the jury that they must find that the explosion resulted from all these causes or they must find for defendant.

STEAMBOAT. A vessel propelled by steam.[1] (See STEAM-VESSEL, and Cross-References Thereunder, post, p. 1271. Owner of Saloon on River Steamboat Subject to License Only at Home Port, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, 22 Cyc. 115 note 39.)

STEAMBOAT CHANNEL. The channel upon which commerce on the river by steamboats or other vessels is usually conducted; where boats ordinarily run in carrying the commerce of the river.[2] (See CHANNEL, 6 Cyc. 891; and, generally, NAVIGABLE WATERS, 29 Cyc. 285.)

STEAMBOAT or STEAMSHIP COMPANIES. (Subject to: Mandamus, see MANDAMUS, 26 Cyc. 375. Taxation by State, to What Extent, see COMMERCE, 7 Cyc. 483. See STEAM-VESSEL, and Cross-References Thereunder, post, p. 1271; and, generally, CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 352; CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 1.)

STEAMER. A vessel propelled by steam.[3] (See STEAM-VESSEL, and Cross-References Thereunder, post, p. 1271.)

STEAM FARM ENGINE. In a strictly technical sense, a machine consisting in a horizontal boiler with a drop-fire box and a horizontal engine attached to the top of the boiler, mounted on wheels for convenience of transportation, and having the smoke-stack so that it can be lowered when the machine is moved; but, in a broader sense, capable of including any steam engine adapted to farm purposes.[4] (See ENGINE, 15 Cyc. 1048; FARM, 19 Cyc. 456; STEAM, ante, p. 1260.)

STEAM LUMP. A certain grade of coal.[5]

STEAM RAILROAD. A term used to describe an ordinary commercial railroad, because the latter, which carries both passengers and freight, is usually propelled by steam.[6] (Steam Railroad: Definition and Nature of "Railroad" or "Commercial Railroad," see RAILROADS, 33 Cyc. 33. See, generally, RAILROADS, 33 Cyc. 1; STEAM, ante, p. 1260.)

STEAM SAWMILL. A term which, used to describe insured property, has

1. Fitch v. Livingston, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 492, 506, so holding within the meaning of 1 N. Y. Rev. St. 684, Sess. Laws (1826), p. 353, §§ 3, 4, providing for lights to be shown by steamboats and adding: "Whether the power be applied in one part of the vessel or another, and whether the vessel uses the auxiliary power of sails, or relies solely upon steam."

Included probably under "boat"; certainly under "vessel" see Tisdell v. Combe, 7 A. & E. 788, 796, 2 Jur. 32, 7 L. J. M. C. 48, 3 N. & P. 29, 1 W. W. & H. 5, 34 E. C. L. 412.

Does not include a boat not propelled by its own steam. A canal-boat cannot become a steamboat through being moved by a steam tug. Buckley v. Brown, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,092, 3 Wall. Jr. 199. See STEAM-VESSEL, post note 9.

"Steamboat debts"—Claims against steamboats.—A guarantee against "all claims and demands that may arise or be brought against said steamboat," as explained by evidence of its purpose, may be construed to include "all existing debts contracted for repairs, supplies and running expenses for and on account of the steamboat" for which the debtor is liable, and evidence that "steamboat debts" has, among men dealing with steamboats, a technical meaning which includes only such debts as constitute a lien on the boat, is properly refused, the phrase being neither in the language of the contract nor in itself a technical phrase within the meaning of the rule of evidence applicable to such cases. Steam lump includes all the coal except that which passes through a half-inch screen at the time. That part which passes through such screen is called slack, dust, or screenings Coal that is steam lump when put on board cars at the mine remains steam lump after transportation, although in transportation and in loading and unloading, more or less lump coal is necessarily broken up, and converted into slack or dust. "Mine run coal" includes the slack and dust and is the next grade below steam lump. "Lump," "three-quarter lump," "domestic lump" and "Milwaukee lump" are all grades better than "steam lump." STEEL. Iron carbonized with a certain proportion of carbon;[15] formerly, a compound of iron and carbon in which the carbon was present in an amount varying from one-half of one per cent to two per cent, with the property of being tempered by heating and cooling; but now subject to two contending definitions, one which excludes all compounds of iron and carbon which do not have the tempering quality, another, which includes all malleable products produced by fusion, whether or not the percentage of iron is sufficient to give the tempering quality.[16] (Steel: Scheduled as Subject to Tariff — Steel, see CUSTOMS DUTIES, 12 Cyc. 120 text and note 99; Scrap Steel, see CUSTOMS DUTIES, 12 Cyc. 1120 text and note 2; Sheet Steel, see CUSTOMS DUTIES, 12 Cyc. 1120 note 99; Steel Slabs, see CUSTOMS DUTIES, 12 Cyc. 1120 text and note 1.)

STEEL PLATES. A term which covers all things, whether called "plates" or not, which are made of steel and within the definition of "plates."[17]

STEEL STRIPS. A term which has the same meaning in trade and commerce, "Produced in three ways: First, directly from certain pure iron ores; second, by the decarburization of malleable iron; or, third, by the decarburization of pig iron" see Greenwich Iron & Steel, § 677 [cited in Gary v. Cockley, 65 Fed. 497, 502, 13 C. C. A. 17].

Under U. S. Tariff Acts.— Under 26 U. S. St. at L. 577, c. 1244 (McKinley Act), par. 150, steel is defined as "all metal produced from iron or its ores, which is cast and malleable, of whatever description or form, without regard to the percentage of carbon contained therein, whether produced by cementation, or converted, cast, or made from iron or its ores, by the crucible, Bessemer, Clapp-Griffiths, pneumatic, Thomas-Gilchrist, basic, Siemens-Martin, or open hearth process, or by the equivalent of either, or by a combination of two or more of the processes, or their equivalents, or by any fusion or other process which produces from iron or its ores a metal either granular or fibrous in structure, which is cast and malleable, excepting what is known as 'malleable-iron castings'" (Gary v. Cockley, 65 Fed. 497, 501, 13 C. C. A. 17). Under U. S. Tariff Act March 3, 1883, schedule C, par. 183, setting a rate on steel not specially enumerated, steel was defined as "all metal produced from iron or its ores, of whatever description or form, without regard to the percentage of carbon contained therein, or the particular process of manufacture, either granular or fibrous in structure, which is cast, and which is malleable." Farris v. Magone, 46 Fed. 845, 848.

Soft or homogeneous steel is produced by fusion, as distinguished from that produced by cementation, and is manufactured by the crucible process and by the Bessemer and Siemens-Martin processes. All steel is homogeneous in fact, but the term has been applied to this kind on account of its especial uniformity of structure. It is low in carbon and does not harden and temper in water, and in that respect is materially unlike the steel that was formerly manufactured, and has been refused the name by many metallurgists. Wallace v. Noyes, 13 Fed. 172, 175, 21 Blatchf. 83.

"Form or shape of steel" as used in the U. S. Tariff Act July 24, 1897 (30 U. S. St. at L. 161, c. 11, schedule C, par. 135 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1638]) does not include everything made of steel; it must be construed by the rule of ejusdem generis, with regard to the kinds of things previously enumerated in the paragraph. U. S. v. Buehne Steel Wool Co., 154 Fed. 93, 93 [reversed on grounds not adverse to the proposition in 159 Fed. 107, 86 C. C. A. 297, and followed in U. S. v. Sellers, 160 Fed. 518, 519].

"Sheet steel.— In commerce, a product of steel rolled hot in sheet mills especially adapted for the purpose, between rolls running so slowly that the sheets cannot be run over twelve feet in length, the sheets not less than eight inches wide. Boker v. U. S., 124 Fed. 59, 60, 59 C. C. A. 425; U. S. v. Wetherell, 65 Fed. 987, 988, 13 C. C. A. 264.

"Sheet steel in strips" (dutiable under U. S. Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, § 1, schedule C, par. 124), distinguished from "steel strips" or "cold rolled-steel" (dutiable under par. 122 of the same schedule as included in "steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for") see Boker v. U. S., 124 Fed. 59, 60, 61, 59 C. C. A. 425. But under U. S. Tariff Act October 1, 1890, par. 38, setting duty on "flat steel wire" or "sheet steel in strips" "whether drawn through dies or rolls," the distinction did not exist. U. S. v. Wetherell, 65 Fed. 987, 991, 13 C. C. A. 264 [explained in Boker v. U. S., supra].

17. U. S. v. Sellers, 160 Fed. 518, so holding within the meaning of the Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, par. 135, and (as to "polished steel plates") par. 141.

"These plates are 'sheets of metal of uniform thickness and even surface' (Century Dictionary); and they are also 'pieces of metal extended or flattened to an even surface, with a uniform thickness' (Webster's Dictionary)." U. S. v. Sellers, 160 Fed. 518, 519.

and as used in the Tariff Act, as in common speech, and includes all things made of steel and within the definition of "strip."[18] (Steel Strips: Dutiable, see CUSTOMS DUTIES, 12 Cyc. 1120 note 99.)

STEEL TUBES. A term which has been held to include bottle-shaped vessels of steel, about four feet long and eight inches in diameter with one end permanently closed and the other tapered to a neck.[19]

STEEL WOOL. A product manufactured from steel wire by a patented process, whereby, by means of a toothed knife, the steel is shaved into filaments of varying degrees of fineness, constituting in that form a finished commercial article, used chiefly for polishing hardwood floors and furniture.[20]

STEELY IRON. A term applied to a grade of mild or soft steel, which approaches so closely in physical and chemical characteristics the metal known as malleable wrought iron as to be difficult to distinguish the one from the other; or a grade of wrought iron so nearly approaching steel as to be almost undistinguishable.[21]

STEER. A young male of the ox kind, or common ox;[22] especially a castrated taurine male from two to four years old.[23] In popular parlance, equivalent to "ox," a castrated taurine male that has been brought under the yoke.[24] In the plural, sometimes employed to refer to working cattle, cattle that have worked.[25] (See BULL, 6 Cyc. 167; CALF, 6 Cyc. 265; CATTLE, 6 Cyc. 702; COW, 11 Cyc. 1185; and, generally, ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 288.)

STEERER. In slang vocabulary, a person of plausible manners and address who gains the confidence of the person intended to be fleeced.[26] (See CONFIDENCE GAME, 8 Cyc. 564.)

18. Magone v. Vom Cleff, 70 Fed. 980, 981, 17 C. C. A. 549, defining the term as used in U. S. Tariff Act March 3, 1883, § 177.

20. Buehne Steel Wool Co. v. U. S., 159 Fed. 107, 109, 86 C. C. A. 297 [reversing 154 Fed. 93], classing the product, when actually manufactured from steel wire, as "articles manufactured from steel wire," under U. S. Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, schedule C, par. 137, and not under par. 135, as "steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for."

21. Gary v. Cockley, 65 Fed. 497, 503, 13 C. C. A. 17.

Steely irons, according to testimony received, are products of iron or very mild steel containing from about seven tenths of one per cent to two tenths of one per cent of carbon, and in this respect occupying a middle ground between hard steel and wrought iron. Farris v. Magone, 46 Fed. 845, 847, statement of facts.

It is an unscientific term which, according to the opinion of an expert, should not be used except in the absence of data, when there is doubt as to whether the substance is properly steel or wrought iron. Gary v. Cockley, 65 Fed. 497, 501, 502, 503, 13 C. C. A. 17.

"Calf" whether included see, on the one hand, Milligan v. Jefferson County, 2 Mont. 543, 546 (holding that "steer" does not include "calf" and that the specification in Mont. St. c. 85, §§ 4, 15, of "calves" as taxable, is not confined by the specification, in § 16, of "Heifers and steers between one and two years old" to calves not less than one year old); on the other hand, Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 641, 644 (holding that the word as used in a provision for exemption from attachment and execution includes calves some months less than a year old, they being "calf steers" or "steer calves," and expressing the opinion that an animal may be too old to be a steer, but cannot be too young).

Not a variance from "'animal of the cow kind'" (Watson v. State, 55 Ala. 150); "neat cattle" (State v. Lange, 22 Tex. 591; Arrington v. State, 13 Tex. App. 551, 553. I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A stipulation is an agreement between counsel respecting business before a court.[1] When made in open court, with reference to the subject-matter of a pending cause, stipulations are contracts not only between the parties, but between them and the court;[2] but stipulations made independently of the court, and relating purely to the conduct of the action or proceeding, are not governed by all the rules of law applicable to ordinary contracts.[3] Stipulations are regarded as proceedings in the cause, and as such are under the supervision of the court,[4]

1. Anderson L. Dict. [cited in In re More, 143 Cal. 493, 496, 77 Pac. 407.

Another definition is: "An agreement of the attorney entered into for the purpose of binding his clients, so far as he may do so." In re More, 143 Cal. 493, 496, 77 Pac. 407.

Necessity for assent.— It is essential to a binding stipulation that its terms be assented to by the parties. Knowlton v. Mackenzie, 110 Cal. 183, 42 Pac. 580 (holding that where one defendant refuses to sign a stipulation entered into by the other parties to the action, a statement by his counsel that he is willing to obey any order of the court in the cause does not constitute an assent by such defendant to be bound by the stipulation); Bower v. Blessing, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 243 (holding that a paper filed by one party to an action, agreeing to be bound by certain terms, if the verdict is in his favor, is not binding on the party who filed it, unless accepted by the other party).

Acknowledgment of service of a paper in a suit is in no sense a stipulation that its recitals are true, but is merely for the purpose of supplying evidence of service. In re More, 143 Cal. 493, 77 Pac. 407.

and may be binding upon parties who are incapable of binding themselves by contract out of court.[5] In England and Canada the word "stipulation" has not this technical meaning, but signifies merely a term or provision of a contract.[5a]

II. FORM, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY.

A. Necessity of Writing — 1. Stipulations Out of Court. It is often required by statute or rule of court that stipulations between parties or their attorneys shall be in writing, and where this is required no oral stipulation, made out of court, will be deemed of any validity, except in so far as it is not disputed.[6]

(holding that such stipulations are to be treated as a rule of practice in the particular case, but even as a rule of practice they are not absolutely binding on the court, since a party has no unqualified right to stipulate for the abrogation of rules of court prescribed for the convenient despatch of business); Galbreath v. Rogers, 30 Mo. App. 401; Becker v. Lamont, 13 How. Pr. 23; Hancock v. Winans, 20 Tex. 320 (holding that an agreement to take up causes out of their regular order would not be enforced).

This rule applies to stipulations as to pleadings and evidence,[7] trial,[8] motions for new trial,[9] judgment and enforcement thereof,[10] appeals,[11] and to stipulations to abide by the result of another action.[12] If, however, a stipulation is not denied, the court will give it effect in the absence of all doubts as to its existence;[13] and where there is no dispute as to the terms of a stipulation, but only as to its construction and effect, there is no sufficient reason why it should not be considered by the court.[14] Furthermore the operation of the rule is limited to the ordinary routine of practice, and has no application to agreements made to facilitate or guide officers in the execution of writs; [15] nor does the rule making such an agreement inadmissible in evidence apply to an agreement which may give rise to a cause of action in another suit, but only to the conduct and management of a cause before the court in which it is pending.[16] In the absence of such a rule an oral stipulation is binding.[17]

2. Stipulations in Court. Statutes and court rules requiring stipulations to be in writing, in order to be binding in case of dispute, do not apply to stipulations made in open court.[18]

B. Entry, Filing, or Record — 1. Necessity. It is essential to the validity of stipulations under many statutes that they be filed with the clerk, if written, or entered in the minutes of the court, if oral, and that they be made a part of the record.[19] But it has been held that a stipulation allowing extra time to answer need not be of record to authorize the setting aside of a default entered before the expiration of the time stated,[20] and a written stipulation that the testimony of a witness on a former trial may be read in the trial of a cause is not of such nature as to require that it be filed in the cause.[21]

2. Time For Filing or Entry. There is no fixed rule as to the time for filing or entering a stipulation, but it seems that this may be done at any time so long as it is capable of being properly and conveniently carried into effect by the parties and the court;[22] but a record entry cannot be made after a dispute has arisen as to the terms of the agreement.[23]

3. Place of Filing or Entry. A parol stipulation made in open court and entered on the minutes, agreeing to the discontinuance of an action pending in another court will be enforced;[24] but agreements affecting the conduct of a cause in an appellate court must be filed in that court.[25]

4. Effect. A stipulation duly signed and filed becomes a part of the record of the case[26] and has the effect of a pleading, and a subsequent pleading inconsistent with its terms should be stricken out.[27]

C. Estoppel to Object to Want of Writing, Entry, or Filing. If attorneys have acted upon an oral stipulation that has not been entered on the minutes, or a written stipulation that has not been filed, to such an extent that it would be inequitable not to recognize its binding effect, courts will not allow the agreement to be repudiated upon the ground that it has not been entered or filed,[28]

III. CAPACITY AND AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO STIPULATION.

An attorney duly retained has, as a general rule and in the absence of special circumstances, authority and exclusive authority to execute stipulations,[30] after[30a] but not before[30b] action is brought. A party to an action who has retained an attorney to represent him cannot make a binding stipulation with respect to matters of procedure without the consent of his attorney of record,[31] unless the validity of such a stipulation is recognized by statute or court rules.[32] A nominal plaintiff cannot, by stipulation, deprive the real parties in interest of their rights.[33] If an attorney exceeds due bounds, he is personally liable,[33a] and when an attor-

IV. MATTERS WHICH MAY BE THE SUBJECT OF STIPULATION.

A. In General. Any matter which involves the individual rights of the parties to a cause may properly be made the subject of a stipulation between them.[34] They may, by stipulation, waive the benefit of a statutory or constitutional provision [35] or rule of law,[36] or irregularities,[36a] and they may agree upon the existence or truth of certain facts.[37] But stipulations involving matters of public interest, or which affect the interests of individuals, which cannot be ascertained in advance of the adjudication in the cause, are invalid.[38] Thus courts will disregard stipulations involving the validity or constitutionality of a statute,[39] or stipulations involving the validity of a will;[40] and, generally, it may be stated that no valid agreement can be made as to a question of law;[41] nor can a valid agreement or stipulation between persons be entered into to confer jurisdiction.[41a]

B. Particular Stipulations. In accordance with and subject to the rules above stated,[42] the parties by their attorneys may stipulate for non-abatement of the action by death of a party,[43] and may stipulate as to pleading,[44] as to variation of orders,[44a] as to issues and proof thereunder,[45] as to production of tion of all the heirs and next of kin, including those named in the will, to the effect that decedent was mentally incapable of making a will.

44. See cases cited infra, this note.

Extending time to file or serve pleading.— A stipulation extending the time to answer gives the time stipulated in addition to the unexpired period existing when the agreement is executed. Pattison v. O'Connor, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 307, 60 How. Pr. 141. Under the stipulation extending his time to plead, defendant may demur within the time limited (Steele v. Moss, 69 Wis. 496, 34 N. W. 237, 2 Am. St. Rep. 756. See also Pattison v. O'Connor, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 307, 60 How. Pr. 141), unless he agrees to plead to the merits (Doty v. Strong, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 313, 40 Am. Dec. 773); but if there is a provision that defendant may make such application as he may be advised, a motion to strike out portions of the complaint is proper (Lackey v. Vanderbilt, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 155). A stipulation not expressly extending the time to file an answer, but providing that it may be filed on being signed by defendant's attorney in fact, gives defendant a reasonable time to file his answer. Maxwell v. Jarvis, 14 Wis. 506.

The last day is included, under a stipulation extending the time to plead "until" a certain date, if, from the context, it appears to have been intended as inclusive of the last date. Barker v. Keith, 11 Minn. 65.

Amendments.— A stipulation not to amend a pleading, when clearly intended only to avoid delaying the trial, does not prevent the court from granting an amendment at the trial in furtherance of justice (Hennequin v. Clews, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 330 [affirmed in 84 N. Y. 676 (affirmed in 111 U. S. 676, 4 S. Ct. 576, 28 L. ed. 565)], and under a stipulation allowing defendant to amend a plea after judgment overruling his demurrer, and providing that such leave shall not embrace the right to file new pleas, defendant is in no way precluded from asking leave of the court to file new pleas (Hale v. Lawrence, 22 N. J. L. 72), nor does a stipulation allowing a demurrer to the complaint to be overruled on leave to answer estop defendant from subsequently objecting that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Hitchcock v. Caruthers, 82 Cal. 523, 23 Pac. 48).

Waiving defects in pleadings.— By stipulating to accept a plea as one setting up a certain defense, plaintiff waives objections to matters of form (Cleveland v. Chandler, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 489), as that a plea in abatement was filed after a plea in bar (Cleveland v. Chandler, supra), or that a cross complaint and answer were joined in the same pleading (Harrison v. McCormick, (Cal. 1885) 9 Pac. 114). If there is an agreement that pleas may be stated in short, by mere outline of the defense, such pleas will not be held bad on demurrer, if an available defense is presented (Governor v. Bancroft, 16 Ala. 605; Lacy v. Rockett, 11 Ala. 1002), and where parties agree to accept a plea in short, as filed, the replication to it may be of the same character (Cole v. Harman, 8 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 562).

deeds,[45a] as to admissibility of evidence,[46] as by dispensing with proof of conceded facts,[47] or of foreign law,[48] by extending time for taking testimony or proof,[49] or by admitting evidence interposed in other actions or former trials of the same

41 N. E. 599; McElwaine v. Hosey, 135 Ind. 481, 35 N. E. 272; Talcott v. Jackson, 41 Ind. 201, such a stipulation is a waiver of the right to have the proper pleadings placed on file, and conclusively implies that a proper finding and judgment shall follow the introduction of the evidence.

Contra.— Naas v. Backman, 28 Nova Scotia 504; Dewar v. Orr, 3 Ch. Chamb. (U. C.) 224.

Effect of stipulation.— Such a stipulation made before trial does not, in the absence of a provision express or implied to that effect, preclude a party from giving other pertinent evidence. Dillon v. Cockcroft, 90 N. Y. 649; Kempner v. Rosenthal, 81 Tex. 12, 16 S. W. 639; Provident Nat. Bank v. Webb, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 95 S. W. 716; Imhoff v. Whittle, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 84 S. W. 243.

If it is stipulated that evidence may be added at the trial, only such evidence as is pertinent to the issue made, and which was in existence at the date of the stipulation is admissible. Donner v. Palmer, 51 Cal. 629. And if the stipulation does not expressly limit its operation to a particular occasion or purpose, it is admissible in evidence at any subsequent trial of the cause. Prestwood v. Watson, 111 Ala. 604, 20 So. 600; Mugge v. Jackson, 50 Fla. 235, 39 So. 157; Hammontree v. Huber, 39 Mo. App. 326; Donovan v. Twist, 119 N. Y. App. Div. 734, 104 N. Y. App. 1909) 115 S. W. 354.

Discontinuance as to some defendants.— Where, in an action against several, an agreement is entered into whereby the interests of all defendants except one are adjusted, no formal order of dismissal as to the trial or hearing generally,[53] as to the time [54] or place of trial,[55] as to the verdict or finding,[56] as to referring the cause,[57] or compromising it in most [57a] but not in the parties to the stipulation is necessary to make a judgment against the one defendant valid. Bailey v. McWilliams, 111 Mo. App. 35, 85 S. W. 618.

Judgment may be entered without notice by the trial judge, upon learning the result of a test case, under a stipulation suspending the decision of a case tried before him, until the decision of an appellate court can be had in a pending case, and it is not necessary that he should have read the decision in such pending case. Stein v. Burden, 30 Ala. 270.

The agreement cannot be defeated by withdrawing a claim. Gilmore v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 67 Cal. 366, 7 Pac. 781; Bradshaw v. Gormerly, 54 Ga. 557.

The stipulation is a waiver of a jury.— Cummings v. Smith, 50 Me. 568, 79 Am. Dec. 629.

Waiver of stipulation.— A subsequent agreement for a continuance of the test case is not a waiver of the agreement. McKinley v. Wilmington Star Min. Co., 7 Ill. App. 386.

Authority of court.— The stipulation does not authorize the supreme court to assume jurisdiction in cases not before it, or warrant the expression of an opinion purely speculative. Belden v. Snead, 84 N. C. 243.

The stipulation governs only the facts, not the law.— Smith v. Smith, 174 Ill. 52, 50 N. E. 1083, 43 L. R. A. 403 [affirmed in 63 Ill. App. 534]; Huff v. Cook, 44 Iowa 639; Lyon v. Robert Garrett Lumber Co., 77 Kan. 823, 92 Pac. 589.

prospective in its operation will not constitute a waiver of any rights or claims accruing prior to its execution.[70]

2. Persons Concluded. A stipulation of an attorney who has been retained in anticipation of a suit to be brought is as conclusive upon his client when entered into before the commencement of the action as it would be afterward.[71] But a stipulation between some of the parties to an action, although made of record, will not bind other parties who did not sign it;[72] and the fact that an attorney signs a stipulation on behalf of one of several co-parties, whom he represents, does not make the stipulation binding on those whose rights are reserved.[73] In an action to recover land a stipulation between the original parties is binding upon those who purchase from defendants pending suit, and later become parties thereto.[74] The legal representatives of one who has become insane after trial are bound by a stipulation entered into by such person's guardian for the purpose of obtaining a review.[75]

3. Conclusive Effect Upon Court. Courts are not bound by the private agreements of counsel respecting the conduct of business before them.[76] But a stipulation relating to some interest of the party which is wholly under his control, and in no way affects the procedure in the cause, cannot be controlled by the court.[77]

VI. RESCISSION OR WITHDRAWAL FROM STIPULATION.

Stipulations between counsel concerning the conduct of a pending cause cannot ordinarily be repudiated or withdrawn from by one party without the consent of the other, except by leave of court upon cause shown;[78] but where a party,

VII. RELIEF FROM STIPULATION.

A. Discretion and Power of Court. The court has power to relieve a person from a stipulation upon proper application and a showing of sufficient cause;[82] and it is within the discretion of the court to set aside stipulations of attorneys relating to the conduct of a pending cause when their enforcement would result in serious injury to one of the parties, and the other party would not be prejudiced by its being set aside.[83] The exercise of judicial discretion cannot be invoked without cause shown;[84] and on the other hand the circumstances may be such that it will be error to grant the relief asked.[85] An appellate court will not interfere with the decision of the lower court in regard to setting aside a stipulation unless there is an apparent abuse of discretion.[86]

B. Grounds. It has been held that a stipulation, having all the binding force of a contract, should not be set aside on less grounds than would justify the setting aside of any other contract;[87] and where, by statute, stipulations settling the issues to be tried are made effective as verdicts, the reasons advanced for setting them aside must be as weighty as those required to set aside a verdict.[88] In order to warrant the court in interfering to relieve a party from a stipulation there must be a showing of fraud, collusion, mistake, accident, or surprise.[89] But although the court will always relieve a party from a stipulation on the ground that it was induced by fraud,[90] fraud, collusion, or bad faith need not appear in every case, since the court, by reason of the broad equitable powers which it has over its own proceedings, may set aside a stipulation in any case where it would be inequitable to enforce it,[91] as where it was entered into under a mistake or misunderstanding as to a fact or circumstance connected with the subject-matter.[92]

Where the only evidence in support of the petition to set aside a stipulation on the ground of mistake is a party's affidavit which is controverted by the affidavit of the adverse party no further evidence in support of the petition being offered the stipulation is properly enforced. Charles v. Miller, 36 Ala. 141.

In England the court accepts the mere statement of counsel. Hickman v. Berens, [1895] 2 Ch. 638, 64 L. J. Ch. 785, 73 L. T.

But the court will not alter or vary the terms of a stipulation so as to relieve a party from its obvious consequences;[93] and if the facts on which the application for relief is based were known to the parties when the stipulation was entered into, the court will not grant relief,[94] and matters subsequently occurring which should have been foreseen will be no ground for setting the agreement aside,[95] for the mistake which will entitle a party to relief from a stipulation must be one which could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care,[96] and the fact concerning which the mistake occurred must be such as will have a material bearing on the rights of the parties, otherwise it will be no ground for relief in the absence of fraud.[97] In the absence of other compelling consideration, a stipulation which has been acted upon will not be set aside unless the interests of the parties will resume their position in statu quo;[98] and if the party applying for relief has been guilty of laches, the court will not interfere to relieve him from a stipulation by which he gave up a right in consideration of the waiver of a right by the other party.[99]

C. Application For Relief — 1. Form. Since the stipulation is a proceeding in the cause, the proper method of obtaining relief therefrom is by motion in the court where the suit is pending.[1] But a compromise of the action or a final consent order, if entered, can be set aside only in a fresh action.[1a]

A stipulation that one case shall be determined by the judgment in another will not be relieved against because of newly discovered defenses which will not be sufficient ground for a new trial (Franklin v. National Ins. 2. When Application Must Be Made; Notice. The application for relief from a stipulation entered into without fraud should be made upon proper notice to the adverse party before the latter has acted upon the agreement to such an extent that to disregard it would cause him serious injury.[2] Relief will not be granted when first asked for on appeal.[3]

D. Nature and Extent of Relief. The proper method of relieving a party from the effects of a stipulation which makes an erroneous admission of a fact is by canceling the stipulation and not by striking out a material portion;[4] but an amendment may properly be made concerning any matter which is not repugnant to the agreed statement, and which does not alter the real understanding of the parties.[5] In acting upon the application the court will exercise its power in such a manner as to restore the parties to their rights as they existed at the time the agreement was made and will not permit one party to obtain relief and hold the other party bound by the stipulation.[6]

VIII. Enforcement of Stipulation.

A. In General. The court, by its general superintending power over all proceedings before it, will take notice of stipulations properly made and will act upon them in such a way as to carry them specifically into effect;[7] but a court of equity will not decree the specific performance of a stipulation which is in conflict with a valid statute,[8] or concerning the execution of which it appears that there was some accident, surprise, or excusable mistake as to its meaning and effect on the part of one of the parties,[9] and the court will disregard an agreement concerning which a controversy has arisen.[10] A stipulation will not be enforced after it has been wholly disregarded by the parties and the court,[11] nor will it be enforced in favor of one who has failed to comply with the conditions under which it was made,[12] or who has waived the right to demand compliance by taking some step in conflict with the provisions of the agreement,[13] unless such act is insufficient to show an intention to disregard the stipulation or to place the opposite party at a disadvantage.[14]

B. Manner. The violation of a stipulation is regarded as a breach of contract for which a separate action will lie,[15] but the court always has power to grant relief in a summary manner upon motion.[16] The manner of giving effect to a stipulation which has been violated by one of the parties depends entirely upon the character of the violation, and the condition in which the action or proceeding is at the time relief is granted. Thus if there is an agreement by attorneys in the lower court to allow an amendment, the court will grant leave to amend after an appeal is taken, without costs.[17] A judgment obtained in violation of a stipulation dismissing the action will be restrained,[18] one obtained in violation of a stipulation for a continuance will be reversed.[19] Under a stipulation extending defendant's time to answer upon condition that he will answer to the merits, a plea in abatement will be stricken from the files,[20] and a plea filed after a stipulation to confess judgment will be treated as a nullity,[21] and the court will dismiss an appeal taken in violation of a stipulation not to appeal.[22] If it is stipulated that the report of auditors shall be final, exceptions to a report subsequently filed will be disregarded.[23]

C. Forum. The remedy of one who has been injured by the disregard of a stipulation should be sought in the court in which it was filed, or in some court of original jurisdiction.[24] In order to have a stipulation, filed in a lower court, examined on appeal, it must appear that it was brought to the attention of the lower court,[25] and must be preserved in the bill of exceptions.[26]

D. Evidence. Parol evidence is not admissible to vary the terms of a valid written stipulation;[27] and extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to prove the undertaking or intention of the parties to a plain and unambiguous stipulation, where the circumstances under which it was made are fully before the court.[28] So also it is not error to refuse to hear parol proof of stipulations which vary the effect of the pleadings on file.[29] But the judgment record of the action in which the stipulation was made may sometimes be admitted to show the scope and purpose of the agreement.[30] Where statutes provide that stipulations of attorneys shall be established only by the attorney's statement, the written stipulation signed and filed with the clerk, or by an entry thereof upon the records of the court, it is not competent to prove a disputed parol stipulation by the testimony or affidavits of an adverse party or his attorney;[31] but statements and affidavits of the attorney made in some other proceeding in the action are admissible to establish the agreement against the person for whom it was made.[32] In England and Canada the courts accept the mere statement of counsel as to arrangements regarding proceedings and the facts and circumstances surrounding them. They should not make affidavits,[33] but may be sworn as witnesses.[34] Solicitors give evidence as other witnesses.

Not limited to initial supply.—The word is not confined to the goods with which a merchant begins business, but rather refers to the stock he employs in trade, and where a contract is given to supply a stock of goods and goods are supplied thereunder from time to time, parol evidence cannot be received to show that the same "stock" means only the first stock delivered, so as to limit a contemporaneous bond to payment of the price of such single stock. "Stock of merchandise," as the phrase is used in a statute providing for sale thereof in bulk, "properly and naturally describes articles which the seller keeps for sale in the usual course of his business," and "does not naturally describe fixtures." Gallus v. Elmer, 193 Mass. 106, 109, 78 N. E. 772, construing the term as used in St. (1903) p. 276, c. 415. The term so used is defined as "goods and merchandise employed in trade, which in the ordinary course of trade, and in the regular and usual prosecution of the seller's business, would be sold or bartered otherwise than by a sale in bulk." Kinds of beast included.— The word has been held to include horses (Webb v. Brandon, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 285, 292); not the less when harnessed to a vehicle (Inman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 60 Iowa 459, 461, 15 N. STOCK or SHARES OF CORPORATIONS. — A. In General. "Stock" is a term used to denote first, the capital stock; second, the shares of stock or of the stockholder; third, as being applied so as to include both.[17]

"Common stock" distinguished from "preferred stock."—"The owner of the former is entitled to an equal pro rata division of the profits, if there be any, but has no advantage of any other shareholder or class of shareholders of common stock. Preferred stock, on the other hand, generally entitles its owner to dividends out of the net profits before and in preference of the holders of the common stock. Generally, the rights, powers, and privileges of preferred stockholders depend upon the terms upon which it is issued." Storrow v. Texas Consol. Compress, etc., Assoc., 87 Fed. 612, 616, 31 C. C. A. 139.

"Increased stock" distinguished from "original" or "formative" stock see Gettysburg Bank v. Brown, 95 Md. 367, 386, 52 Atl. 975, 93 Am. St. Rep. 339; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Hambleton, 77 Md. 341, 346, 26 Atl. 279.

"Nonassessable," distinguished from "paid up nonassessable."—"Stock upon which nothing has been paid may be called nonassessable and may be so treated, not legally, however, under our Constitution. But 'paid up nonassessable stock' can only mean stock that is made nonassessable by reason of the fact that the amount for which it calls has been fully paid." San Antonio St. R. Co. v. Adams, 87 Tex. 125, 130, 26 S. W. 1040.

"Original" or "formative" stock is "such stock as may be authorized and required by the charter." Gettysburg Nat. Bank v. Brown, 95 Md. 367, 386, 52 Atl. 975, 93 Am. St. Rep. 339.

"Paid up stock."—"In this country . . . fully-paid up stock in a building association is really an anomaly. Strictly speaking there can be no such thing; for the moment such stock is matured — that is, brought to its par value — the holder thereof is entitled to his money, and his connection with the association ceases." Cashen v. Southern Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 114 Ga. 983, 990, 41 S. E. 51.

"Preferred stock."— In general see CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 569. "Ordinarily, preferred stock is understood to indicate such stock as is entitled to dividends from income or earnings of the corporation before any other dividend can be paid. . . . Yet to determine in each case the special properties and qualities it possesses, resort must be had to the statute or contract under which it was issued" (Scott v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 93 Md. 475, 497, 49 Atl. 327); it takes "a multiplicity of forms according to the desire and ingenuity of the stockholders and necessity of the corporation itself" (Scott v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., supra; Storrow v. Texas Consol., etc., Mfg. Assoc., 87 Tex. 612, 616); "gives the holders a priority of dividends, and no priority of assets or capital unless expressly stipulated for" (Jones v. Concord, etc., R. Co., 67 N. H. 234, 238, 30 Atl. 614, 68 Am. St. Rep. 650); under St. March 5, 1870, 67 Ohio Laws, p. 26, "is created by the owners of the common stock for the purpose of putting the company in which they are proprietors on a firmer footing and giving it better credit, and for this purpose they take in with them, as proprietors, or consent to the creation of a class of shareholders, or stockholders, who are to share in the profits of the corporation in preference

B. As Capital—1. In General. Stock as capital is the capital of corporations usually divided into shares of a definite value;[18] the capital of an incorporated company in transferable shares of a specific amount;[19] the share capital of a corporation or commercial company; the funds employed in the carrying on of some business or enterprise, divided into shares of equal amount and owned by individuals who jointly form a corporation;[20] the capital of the corporation on which it is to do business.[21]

2. Including Money Invested. "Stock" as capital may also include or refer to money invested in the business of the company represented by certificates of shares known as capital or capital stock;[22] the capital invested in such property as may be necessary and proper for conducting the business for which the corporation was chartered;[23] the capital stock, the subscribed fund held by the company as distinguished from the separate interest of the individual stockholders;[24] technically, in connection with a chartered or joint stock company, the money advanced by the corporators or members as the capital, which is usually, for convenience, divided into equal amounts called shares, for which each member is entitled to a certificate, showing the number of shares he has in the company; or in other words the amount of money he has furnished to the common stock; which certificate is the evidence of his being a stockholder.[25] to themselves, and who, as between the common and preferred stockholders, are first to be paid their dividends on the capital invested by them in the stock of the corporation" (Burt v. Rattle, 116 Ohio St. 123); as used in a statute empowering counties to issue bonds in subscription for preferred stock of a railroad company, the term, means "preferred capital stock, or a preferred interest in the money paid in by stockholders, divided into shares and represented by certificates showing the shares of each holder;" the word "preferred" being intended "to give the counties some advantage over others holding a similar interest, and occupying (without that word) the same position to the company as the counties, and who, but for the county being preferred, would stand with them on the same plane" (State v. Cheraw, etc., R. Co., 16 S. C. 524, 530, 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 631).

"Prepaid stock" is "stock paid for in full when issued." See Thornton & B. Bldg. & Loan Assoc. [quoted in Johnson v. National Bldg., etc., Assoc., 125 Ala. 465, 479, 28 So. 2, 82 Am. St. Rep. 257].

The "watering" of stock is "an increase of the nominal capital, without any addition, or only a partial addition to the actual capital." Wiltbank's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 256, 260, 3 Am. Rep. 585.

"Merchandise" is broad enough to include stocks or shares within the meaning of the statute of frauds. Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 9, 13.

Debt misnamed "stock."—The use of the word "stock," in describing the debt of a corporation to one from whom it borrows, does not invest such debt with the attributes of stock. Burt v. Rattle, 31 Ohio St. 116, 128–130.

Capital stock is "the sum fixed by the charter as the amount paid in, or to be paid in" (Cook Stock & Stockh. § 3 [quoted in American Pig Iron Storage Co. v. State Bd. of Assessors, 56 N. J. L. 389, 392, 29 Atl. 160)]; "the entire property owned by the corporation" (People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 280, 22 N. E. 798, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319, 8 L. R. A. 497).

St. (1851) p. 479, declaring the stock of a railroad company exempt from certain taxes, and holding that an amendment thereto (Mo. St. (1852) p. 296), declaring that all engines, cars, wagons, machines, and other property belonging to the company should be deemed a part of its capital stock, does not qualify this meaning.

25. State v. Cheraw, etc., R. Co., 16 S. C. 524, 528, 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 631.

3. Including Physical and Other Property. Again "stock" as capital may include the aggregate of the property and effects of the company, which as a principal or capital fund is employed in, or made subservient to, the prosecution of the specific business for which the company was chartered.[26] On the other hand it may refer to the capital stock divided into shares, as a separate thing from the property of the corporation.[27]

C. As the Aggregate Interest of the Stock-Holders. "Stock" may refer to the sum of all the rights and duties of the shareholders,[28] of which the interest of the shareholder is a fraction.[29]

D. As the Interest of the Individual Stock-Holder.[30] Stock, in the sense of the interest of the stockholder, is a species of incorporeal personal property

26. State v. Hood, 15 Rich. (S. C.) 177, 185, defining "stock" of a railroad company and adding: "In its original form, it is the sum of the moneys, contributed in fixed proportions, for the purposes of the adventure, by the persons willing to take part in it, but, by speedy conversion, it becomes the lands, rights of way, roadbed, track, depots, workshops, machinery, engines, carriages, &c., acquired, or constructed by or for the company, and the franchises derived from the Legislative grant."

Physical property and franchise.—"The term 'stock' . . . has been held to mean capital stock, and that the term 'capital stock' embraces the franchise of the company as well as its physical property can hardly admit of question. Without the franchise there would be no capital stock, properly speaking." Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Wright, 132 Fed. 912, 919, construing Georgia railroad and banking company's charter (Ga. St. (1833) p. 264, § 15).

S. 559, 563, 564, 25 L. ed. 222] (where it is said that while many cases hold that an exemption of the capital stock of a corporation from taxation was equivalent to an exemption of the property into which that stock had been converted, it means that all these decisions are based on a construction of "capital" or "capital stock" according to the intention of the legislature as gathered from the whole charter; and held that where the capital stock was exempted forever, but the railroad with fixtures and appurtenances for twenty years only, the term "capital stock" did not cover the road and fixtures).

A share of stock in a corporation consists in a set of rights and duties between the corporation and the owner of the share."

30. "Stock" and "shares;" relative uses explained.—In construing a bequest of "preference shares" Lord Cairns, L. C., after citing the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act as "the first occasion on which this term 'stock' was applied by the authority of Parliament to interests in railways," and which provided that a company may convert or consolidate shares into "stock," that a register of "stock" shall be kept, that holders of "stock" shall be entitled to participate in dividends and profits, and that the respective interests in such stock "shall, in proportion to the amount thereof, confer on the holders thereof respectively the same privileges and advantages . . . as would have been conferred by shares of equal amount in the capital of the company; but so that none of such privileges or advantages, except the participation in the dividends and profits of the company, shall be conferred by any aliquot part of such amount of consolidated stock as would not, if existing in shares, have conferred such privileges or advantages respectively," said: "It is to be observed that the term 'stock,' or 'capital stock,' which is there used, obviously is derived from the consideration that these were what were called joint stock companies, and that 'stock' was the short name for 'joint stock,' and joint stock, in my opinion, is only another name for 'shares,' because the owner of part of the capital of a company is an owner of a part or a share of the joint stock. The use of the term 'stock' appears to me merely to denote that the company have recognized the fact of the complete payment of the shares, and that the time has come when those shares may be assigned in fragments, which for obvious reasons could not be permitted before, but that stock shall still be the qualification, for example, of directors, who must possess a certain number of shares, and that the meetings shall be of the persons entitled to this stock, who shall meet as shareholders, and vote as shareholders, in the proportion of shares which would entitle them to vote before the consolidation into stock." Reverting to the particular case: "If ever there was a case in which the substance is that 'stock' and 'shares' are iden-in the nature of a chose in action;[31] a proportional part of certain rights in the management and profits of the corporation during its existence, and in the assets upon its distribution;[32] an intangible right of property, the shares being distinguishable from each other only by their respective owners;[33] in the plural, shares of incorporated companies;[34] property consisting of shares in joint stock companies.[35] A share of stock is specifically, one of the whole number of equal parts into which the capital stock of a trading company or corporation may be divided, as shares in a bank, shares in a railway;[36] a right to a certain proportion of the capital stock of a corporation — never realized except upon the dissolution and winding up of the corporation — with the right to receive, in the meantime, such profits as may be made and declared in the shape of dividends;[37] a right which the owner has in the management, profits, and ultimate assets of the corporation;[38] the interest or right which the owner, who is called the shareholder or stockholder, has in the management of the corporation and in its surplus profits, and, tical, this is a case of this kind;" and, attributing the doubt of this to a supposition that stock in a railway had some sort of analogy to stock in public funds: "It has none whatever. It is possible that debenture stock in a railway company may be said to have some analogy to stock in the public funds, but the joint stock capital of a company is a perfectly different thing. . . . It appears to me that it would be putting a meaning upon the term 'shares' so technical as to be in opposition to the ordinary use of the word, if 'shares' was held to mean for the purpose of a bequest something different from and something which would not pass stock in a railway company." Sir W. M. James, L. J., concurring, said: " . . . stock, or that which is called 'stock,' the thing into which the shares have been consolidated, so far as regards the interest of one person in that stock, is the right to participate in the profits of the undertaking. Both sets of words, 'my railway stock,' 'my railway shares,' mean, etymologically, my right to share," adding in substance, that, both etymologically and according to common usage, stock may be described as "share," or "shares." Place of existence.—"It is true a share of the stock is personal estate in the sense that it will, at the death of the owner, devolve upon his personal representative, but, it would seem, that it cannot be so in the sense of attending his person, for it is but one of many parts, the aggregate of which make an artificial body, which has its existence fixed in this State, and creates a right or duty which must be yielded and performed here, and cannot be enforced in any other country; in other words, it is estate of the shareholder 'here' in the hands of the corporation, for his benefit." On each share of capital stock.—A provision limiting taxation against a corporation to a certain amount on each share of capital stock, and giving the corporation a lien on the stock and all creditors except the state for taxes, limits the taxation on each share in the hands of the stock-holders so that an attempt to impose additional taxation on such shares in their hands as against them is void (Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 134, 141, 16 S. Ct. 456, 40 L. ed. 645 [following to that extent Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. Ct. 558, 40 L. ed. 650).

Assurance to purchaser.—"Stock certificates of all kinds have been constructed in a way to invite the confidence of business men, so that they have become the basis of commercial transactions in all the large cities of the country, and are sold in open market the same as other securities. Although neither in form or character negotiable paper, they approximate to it as nearly as practicable. . . . No better form could be adopted to assure the purchaser that he can buy with safety." South Bend First Nat. Bank v. Lanier, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 369, 377, 20 L. ed. 172. "He is told, under the seal of the corporation, that the shareholder is entitled to so much stock, which can be transferred on the books of the corporation, in person or by attorney, when the certificates are surrendered, but not otherwise. This is a notification to all persons interested to know, that whoever in good faith buys the stock, and produces to the corporation the certificates, regularly assigned, with power to transfer, is entitled to have the stock transferred to him. And the notification goes further, for it assures the holder that the corporation will not transfer the stock to any one not in possession of the certificates." Bank v. Lanier, supra [quoted in Smith v. Crescent City Live-Stock Landing, etc., Co., 30 La. Ann. 1378, 1382].

Bank stock certificates.—"It is an undoubted fact that bank stock certificates, while not possessing all the characteristics of commercial paper, are nevertheless esteemed by the business world as having a value somewhat superior to ordinary securities. For this reason they have come to be regarded as one of the most desirable bases of commercial transactions, and when transferred to a purchaser for value and without notice of any defect in title, the certificate is of itself generally an assurance to the

of the shareholder's right to a share of the net products of all property of the company.[69] The evidence in the hands of the holders of the ownership of the undivided property of the corporation;[70] which, although not the stock, is documentary evidence of title to stock and may be used for purposes of symbolical delivery as the stock itself is incapable of actual delivery.[71] (Stock Certificates: Acceptance of Certificate — As Implying Promise to Pay For Shares, see CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 381; With Retention, as Estoppel Upon Stock-Holder to Deny Liability, see CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 537 text and note 54. Treated as property.— Certificates of stock "are treated by business men as property for all practical purposes. They are sold in the market, transferred as collateral security to loans, and are used in various ways as property. They pass by delivery from hand to hand." Matter of Whiting, 150 N. Y. 27, 30, 44 N. E. 715, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640, 34 L. R. A. 232 [cited in Simpson v. Jersey City Contracting Co., 165 N. Y. 193, 198, 58 N. E. 896, 55 L. R. A. 796].

Compared with bills of lading or warehouse receipts.—"A certificate of stock is in some respects like a bill of lading or a warehouse or wharfinger's receipt. Each is the representation of property existing under certain conditions, and the documentary evidence of title thereto. They are all alike transferable by endorsement and delivery, and the title to the property thus represented passes by such transfer. So far they resemble each other, but there are distinctions to be noted. Bills of lading and wharfinger's receipts are commercial instruments, and their transferability, or, as it is sometimes termed, their 'quasi negotiability,' depends on the custom of merchants and the conveniences of trade. Certificates of stock are not commercial instruments, and the title to the property they represent passes in equity only by indorsement and delivery, where, by any law or rule of the corporation, the transfer is required to be made on the books." STOCK-HOLDER or SHAREHOLDER. In a broad sense, a stockholder is one who is the holder or proprietor of stock in the public funds, or in the funds of a bank or other stock company.[76] Stockholder in a corporation is one owning stock;[77] one possessed of the evidence that the holder is the real owner of a certain Unincorporated "stock-holders."—The word applied to mere partners does not limit their liability to the amount paid for their "shares." Farnum v. Patch, 60 N. H. 294, 325, 327, 49 Am. Rep. 313.

Stock-holder who is director.—So far as the duty of a director conflicts with his personal interests as a stock-holder the former must prevail. When a stockholder became a director, there was "a radical change in his relations to the company the moment he assumed the office." He became a trustee for the entire body of stockholders and accountable therefore for profits of a contract made by him before he became a director, so far only as they proceeded, to the loss of the corporation, from his failure to disclose a fact material to the corporate interest. Bird Coal, etc., Co. v. Humes, 157 Pa. St. 278, 287, 291–293, 27 Atl. 750, 37 Am. St. Rep. 727.

Right to act without regard to the corporate interest see Bird Coal, etc., Co. v. Humes, 157 Pa. St. 278, 287, 27 Atl. 750, 37 Am. St. Rep. 727, where, in relation to the freedom of a mere stockholder as such from the duty with which he was afterward charged on becoming a director, it was said: "As stockholder, being the owner of his shares absolutely, he had a right to manage his own property as suited his own notions. It is one of the purposes of corporate organization of capital to facilitate the independent enjoyment and use by each member of his fractional interests in the whole."

How far "an integral part of a corporation" see Fredericks v. Pennsylvania Canal Co., 16 Phila. (Pa.) 605, 607 (where it is said: "A stockholder is a person, and, as such, is not an integral part of a corporation in which he may own stock"); Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 58, 23 L. ed. 220 [cited in Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 329, 9 S. Ct. 739, 33 L. ed. 184 (quoted in Johnson v. Stebbins-Thompson Realty Co., 177 Mo. 581, 601, 76 S. W. 1021)] (where it is said that a stockholder is "an integral part of the corporation" so far that "in the view of the law he is privy to the proceedings touching the body of which he is a member").

Stockholders are "not 'in law' owners, either jointly of the whole, or severally of distinct parts of the property and effects which . . . constitute the stock of the company. They cannot, as individuals, dispose of it or any part of it, by sale, gift or otherwise, nor can it, at common law, be taken in execution for their separate personal debts." State v. Hood, 15 Rich. (S. C.) 177, 186.

As liable for corporate debts; statutory definitions.— Defined in Cal. Civ. Code, § 322 [quoted and explained in Hurlburt v. Arthur, 140 Cal. 103, 105, 73 Pac. 734, 98 Am. St. Rep. 17], providing for stockholder's liability: "The term 'stockholder,' as used in this section, shall apply not only to such persons as appear by the books of the corporation to be such, but also to every equitable owner of stock, although the same appear on the books in the name of another, and also to every person who has advanced the installments or purchase money of stock in the name of a minor, so long as the latter remains a minor; and also to every guardian, or other trustee, who voluntarily invests any trust funds in the stock. . . . Stock held as collateral security, or by a trustee, or in any other representative capacity, does not make the holder thereof a stockholder within the meaning of this section, except in the cases above mentioned, so as to charge him with any proportion of the debts or liabilities of the corporation; but the pledgor, or person or estate represented, is to be deemed the stockholder, as respects such liability." Defined by N. Y. Banking L. (1892) § 52 [cited in Hirshfeld undivided portion of the property, in actual or potential existence, held by the company in its name, as a unit, for the common benefit of all the holders of the entire capital stock of the company;[78] defined in the plural, individual contributories to the stock of the company, holders of the stock in shares proportionate to their several contributions;[79] in an association supplied by assessment and not by subscription to stock, a term which may include persons who agree to be answerable for assessments.[80] Shareholder, in a corporation, is one who has a proportionate interest in its assets, and is entitled to take part in its control and receive its dividends;[81] as defined by an English statute, any person entitled to

v. Bopp, 145 N. Y. 84, 90, 91, 39 N. E. 817], as including every owner of stock, legal or equitable, although not standing in his own name on the books of the corporation, but not a person who holds such stock as collateral security for the payment of a debt.

Stock-holder and creditor.—"There is a palpable difference between the relation of a stockholder and a creditor to the corporate property. . . . As his chance of gain throws on the stockholder, as respects creditors, the entire risk of the loss of his contribution to the capital, it is a fixed characteristic of capital stock that no part of it can be withdrawn for the purpose of repaying the principal of the capital until the debts of the corporation are satisfied." As partner subject to the charter.—"The stockholders of a business corporation are partners, with rights and liabilities fixed by the general or special law which is a part of their contract." Opinion of Justices, 66 N. H. 629, 639, 33 Atl. 1076.

As tenant in common on dissolution of business corporation see Opinion of Justices, 66 N. H. 629, 639, 33 Atl. 1076.

Stock-holder by representation.—An officer of a corporation which holds stock in another corporation may be a stockholder by representation in the latter, although, personally, he holds no stock therein. Chase v. Tuttle, 55 Conn. 455, 463, 12 Atl. 874, 3 Am. St. Rep. 64.

Registered stock-holder.—"A person in whose name the stock of the corporation stands on the books of the corporation, is, as to the corporation, a stock-holder, and has the right to vote upon the stock." Franklin Bank v. Commercial Bank, 36 Ohio St. 350, 355, 38 Am. Rep. 594 [quoted in In re Argus Printing Co., 1 N. D. 434, 439, 48 N. W. 347, 26 Am. St. Rep. 639, 12 L. R. A. 781].

Rep. 752, where, according to the articles of association of a certain insurance company, the word "members" therein included both shareholders and "assurance members."

Does not include one who merely holds a contract from a company whereby the latter agrees to sell him a diamond (Mann v. German-American Inv. Co., 70 Nebr. 454, 462, 97 N. W. 600); one who has forfeited his stock (Mills v. Stewart, 41 N. Y. 384, 385).

Holders of debts misnamed "stock."—A transaction under Ohio St. March 25, 1870, providing manufacturing corporations with a system of borrowing, and describing the transaction as the sale of "preferred stock," the debt as "stock," and the lenders as "holders of such preferred stock," does not invest such lenders with the status of stockholders. "Own" in sense of "hold."—Under Comp. Laws, § 3393, providing that "each stockholder . . . shall be entitled to as many votes as he . . . may 'own' . . . shares of stock," the word "own" is used in the sense of "hold" and does not exclude one to whom stock has been merely transferred upon the books of the company, in pursuance of the desire of the transferrer that the transferee may be eligible to office in the company. STOCK IN TRADE. A term which, in general, may be taken to mean the whole capital employed in the trade, everything that is necessary to the carrying on of the trade;[85] a very general term which may mean any kind of trade goods, 85. Todd v. Lewers, Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. C.) 463, 464.

according to the business carried on by the person and in the particular place with reference to which it is used,[86] but is not sufficient by itself to identify prop-

86. See Nolan v. Donnelly, 4 Ont. 440, 445.

Relation to the trade essential.—A note not founded on the trade in question does not pass under a bequest of all my "stock in trade" at a place named, and the "notes and book accounts" there owing to me, although found on the premises. Todd v. Lewers, Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. C.) 463, 467.

Scope.—"What shall be comprehended in these terms, must always, in a great measure, depend upon evidence of intention intrinsically or extrinsically collected; but, where there is nothing peculiar in the case to determine the import of the phrase, the popular and usual understanding of the words must govern their interpretation." Todd v. Lewers, Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. C.) 463, 464 [citing 1 Robert Wills 369]. Used by a member of a commercial firm, the words might, in general, signify his interest in the firm. If the terms of the partnership were to employ a certain stated capital and to divide profits annually, the capital would constitute the stock in trade; probably profits, accrued at the death of a partner, would not pass by will under the words. If the terms were to reinvest the profits, the original capital and profits might remain "stock in trade" till any part should be actually withdrawn. In the case of an individual there may be more difficulty. He might set apart a specific capital for trade, withdrawing the annual profits to be employed otherwise, in which case, probably, only the original capital would be the "stock in trade." But if his practice were to make no distinction between profits and capital, but to reinvest all the profits in the trade, the term would probably include everything; goods, shop furniture, cash on hand; and debts, whether by note, book account or judgment; but he might still withdraw any part of the funds or property from the trade, and so, by whatever means he might signify his intention that part would cease to be stock in trade. If the merchant should purchase land with money, or with a note or bond arising from his trade, that would be a withdrawal from his stock. The same intention might be signified in infinitely various ways, such, perhaps, as taking a bond payable at a distant day, out of the usual course of trade, with interest payable annually. Todd v. Lewers, Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. C.) 463, 464.

Ice stored for sale is included as taxable under Gen. Laws, c. 54, § 9. Winkley v. Newton, 67 N. H. 80, 84, 36 Atl. 610, 35 L. R. A. 756.

Patents may be included when the expense of procuring them is considered as stock brought into the trade. Crawshay v. Collins, 2 Russ. 325, 339, 26 Rev. Rep. 83, 3 Eng. Ch. 325, 38 Eng. Reprint 358.

Debts due are not included in the term as used in Pub. St. c. 11, § 26. New York Biscuit Co. v. Cambridge, 161 Mass. 326, 37 N. E. 438.

Internal revenue stamps are not included, although in the hands of one whose business consists in the sale thereof, in the term as used for convenience of description, and not as describing a distinct object of taxation, in Gen. St. c. 11, § 12. Palfrey v. Boston, 101 Mass. 329, 333, 3 Am. Rep. 364.

Money in bank is not included in the term as used in Pub. St. c. 11, § 26, relating to taxation. Boston Investment Co. v. Boston, 158 Mass. 461, 463, 33 N. E. 580.

Notes.—Not included (see Kemp v. Carnley, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 1, 7), may be included if founded on the trade (see Todd v. Lewers, Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. C.) 463).

It "differs essentially from the term 'capital stock' when applied to corporate bodies." Palfrey v. Boston, 101 Mass. 329, 333, 3 Am. Rep. 364, construing the term as used in Gen. St. c. 11, § 12.

Distinguished from "stock" or "goods on hand."—In criticising the suggestions of counsel that the popular meaning of the term is, "the stock of goods on hand at any particular time," was said, in substance, that, while, among tradesmen, the goods on hand are called "stock," in the general understanding "stock in trade" seems to have a wider scope, notwithstanding the practice of merchants, in paying the tax on "stock in trade" to estimate only the goods on hand. Todd v. Lewers, Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. C.) 463, 464. Compare Wicker v. Comstock, 52 Wis. 315, 317, 9 N. W. 25, where it is said: "The goods kept for sale by a merchant or shopkeeper is his stock in trade."

As subject of insurance.—Goods insured in favor of one who is only part-owner may be properly described as the stock in trade of that person. Millaudon v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 8 La. 557, 562. The expression when used in a policy of insurance as a term of description, with reference to a specified business, includes everything necessary for carrying on that business. Harper v. Albany Mut. Ins. Co., 17 N. Y. 194, 197 [citing 1 Phillips Ins. § 489]; Moadinger v. Mechanics' F. Ins. Co., 2 Hall (N. Y.) 527, 531. The words as used in a policy of insurance on a baker's stock in trade are to have a more extended meaning than in their ordinary application to the business of merchants. Their meaning will vary according to the business to which they are applied. A mechanic who insures his stock covers his implements of trade also. The stock of a merchant comprehends articles entirely different from that of a farmer, but the terms in all cases apply to personal property. Moadinger v. Mechanics' F. Ins. Co., supra.

Purpose of transportation immaterial.—In Gen. Laws, c. 54, § 9, taxing "stock in trade" employed in any town the purpose of transporting it to another state and disposing of it there in the course of business does not affect its taxable status in the town. Winkley v. Newton, 67 N. H. 80, 84, 36 Atl. 610, 30 L. R. A. 756.

STOCK OF A FARM.[89] A term which may be restricted to CATTLE,[90] q. v., or to domestic animals or beasts collected or raised upon a farm,[91] the animals which are used with, supported or reared upon the farm or land,[92] animals with which the plantations of farmers are usually supplied,[93] domestic animals, and nothing more;[94] or which may embrace some other things pertaining to the farm.[95] (See STOCK, ante, p. 1299; STOCK or LIVE STOCK, ante, p. 1301.)

92. Graham v. Davidson, 22 N. C. 155, 171, where it is said that the term, in connection with farm or land, has a settled meaning by which it is restricted to such animals, and that "no farmer or planter would think of passing the crop of the 'antecedent' year made upon a tract of land and gathered, or his farming utensils, by a disposition of the plantation and the stock thereon."

93. Van Norden v. Primm, 3 N. C. 149, where it is said that such animals are commonly called "stock" in the country, and held that in St. (1796) c. 29, providing for a widow's settlement out of stock, crop and provisions, the word has that meaning exclusively.

94. Heagy v. Cheesman, 33 Ind. 96, 98.

95. See infra, this note.

Includes hay, oats, cattle, and corn stalks, as property from which a selection for exemption may be made, on the same principle that a merchant's stock in trade is exempted to a certain amount, within the meaning of Howell St. Mich. c. 266, § 7 (Hutchinson v. Whitmore, 90 Mich. 255, 260, 263, 51 N. W. 451, 30 Am. St. Rep. 431); "seed [as stock] is unquestionably necessary to enable one to carry on the business of farming," within the meaning of an exemption law (Stilson v. Gibbs, 46 Mich. 215, 219, 9 N. W. 254).

Does not include all the personal property of a farm, nor wool shorn from sheep thereon, when used in a bequest of "all the stock, grain and farming utensils" thereon. Baker v. Baker, 51 Wis. 538, 544, 8 N. W. 289.

Application to crops.— The word does not, in common and popular parlance, include crops in the ground (Vaisey v. Reynolds, 5 Russ. 12, 19, 5 Eng. Ch. 12), although, in the light of a favorable context, such crops may pass by it (see West v. Moore, 8 East 339, 103 Eng. Reprint 372; Cox v. Godsalve, 6 East 604 note, 102 Eng. Reprint 1420 [both explained in Vaisey v. Reynolds, 5 Russ. 12, 19, 29 Rev. Rep. 4, 5 Eng. Ch. 12, 38 Eng. Reprint 931, where it is said that, in those cases the intention of the testator to include growing crops was inferred rather because the executor was clearly meant to take the whole personal estate than from the mere force of the word; both cited, however, in Blake v. Gibbs, 5 Russ. 13, 16 note, 29 Rev. Rep. I, 5 Eng. Ch. 13 note, 38 Eng. Reprint 932, as holding that emblements are part of the stock]. Compare Steward v. Cotton, 5 Russ. 16 note, 5 Eng. Ch. 16, 38 Eng. STOP. Ordinarily, to cease from some particular motion, although sometimes used in a loose sense to signify slackening speed.[1] (See STOP-OVER TICKET, post, this page; STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU, post, this page.)

STOPE. An excavation made in a mine to remove the ore which has been rendered accessible by the shafts and drifts.[2]

STOP ORDER. An instruction to a broker to await a certain figure, and, whenever this figure is reached, to stop the transaction by then selling or buying, as the case may be, as well as possible.[3]

STOP-OVER TICKET. A ticket which gives one a right to stop at a station beyond the time of the departure of the train on which one came with the purpose of continuing one's journey on a subsequent train.[4] (Stop-Over Ticket: Stop-Over Privileges — In General, see CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 583; Compulsory by Statute, see COMMERCE, 7 Cyc. 447 note 81.)

A mineral stone belongs, as a mineral product, to owners of mining claims under the United States statutes. Johnston v. Harrington, 5 Wash. 73, 78, 31 Pac. 316.

Meaning "limestone" in real, technical parlance in Hinsdale, Illinois, "stone," in a local ordinance, is a duly definite description of that material. Shannon v. Hinsdale, 180 Ill. 202, 204, 54 N. E. 181 [distinguished in Kelly v. Chicago, 193 Ill. 324, 327, 61 N. E. 1009].

"Bicycler's stop" is a term which has been applied to the act of circling round and round on a bicycle, riding in circles. Such an act is not a legal "stop," within the rule requiring persons to stop, look, and listen at railway crossings, to comply with which the bicycler must dismount. Robertson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 180 Pa. St. 43, 46, 36 Atl. 403, 57 Am. St. Rep. 620.

Regularity not implied — In Ohio Rev. St. 3375*a*, providing for the use of freight trains by physicians and sheriffs "between stations where such trains stop," the word does not mean "'regularly' stop," or "are 'scheduled' to stop," but simply "in fact stop." Statutory definition is "a deposit not gratuitous . . . called storage." Okla. St. (1893) c. 30, art. 2, § 13 [quoted in Walker v. Eiklcberry, 7 Okla. 599, 601, 54 Pac. 553].

Storage occupied.—A place where lumber is merely piled awaiting shipment, not owned or hired by the owner of the lumber, is not a "storage" occupied by him within the meaning of a statute taxing personalty at such storage (Monroe v. Greenhoe, 54 Mich. 9 11, 19 N. STORE. As a noun, a word employed in many senses and variously defined as meaning a place where goods are kept on deposit, especially in large quantities; a warehouse; also a place where goods are kept for sale in large or small quantities;[6] storage occupied by the person so using it (Hood v. Judkins, 61 Mich. 575, 579, 28 N. W. 689).

The outside of the walls is included in a lease of a "store" in a designated building. Biddle v. Littlefield, 53 N. H. 503, 506, 16 Am. Rep. 388.

Land passes with the building under the word in a deed (Pottkamp v. Buss, (Cal. 1892) 31 Pac. 1121, 1122), lease (Hooper v. Farnsworth, 128 Mass. 487, 488; Rogers v. Snow, 118 Mass. 118, 119, 124; Lanpher v. Glenn, 37 Minn. 4, 5, 33 N. W. 10), or will (Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552, 559, 2 N. W. 814).

A store may come within the term "dwelling-house" as subject to burglary at common law, if it is not a part of the house or under the same roof, or if any of the family sleep in it. State v. Ginns, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 583, 584.

"Building" as a statutory word of description not supplied by "store" in an indictment see Com. v. McMonagle, 1 Mass. 517, where, however, Sewell, J., concurred in spite of his opinion that the word has in Massachusetts "a settled, known meaning, and is not used otherwise than as and for the name of a building."

A bakery and restaurant may be described as a store without misrepresentation. See Richards v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co., 60 Mich. 420, 423, 424, 426, 27 N. W. 586.

A lumber yard may be a store. Folkes v. State, 63 Miss. 81, 83.

A store selling only to tenants of the owner is not the less "a store," and is subject to a privilege tax as such under Miss. Code, § 3390. Craig v. Pattison, 74 Miss. 881, 884, 21 So. 756; Alcorn v. State, 71 Miss. 464, 466, 15 So. 37.

"Store or office for the sale of meat at retail" describing a subject of privilege tax may include a place where only one kind of meat is sold and that only for a part of the year and incidental to another principal business. Eastman v. Jackson, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 162, 164.

Not necessarily in a house.—"The word 'store' is employed in Miss. Code, § 585, to designate a place where goods are sold. Although goods are usually kept for sale in a house, it is not true that their being kept in a house is necessary to constitute a store." Folkes v. State, 63 Miss. 81, 83 [cited in Craig v. Pattison, 74 Miss. 881, 884, 21 So. 756].

A junk store is included as is every other kind of store by the word as used in Miss. Code (1892), § 3390, by which a privilege tax is imposed on each "store" where the stock never exceeds a certain value. Pitts v. Vicksburg, 72 Miss. 181, 183, 16 So. 418.

As used in Wash. Pen. Code, § 46, in regard to breaking and entering, the word is not qualified by the subsequent phrase "or any building in which any goods, merchandise or valuable things are kept," etc. State v. Sufferin, 6 Wash. 107, 108, 32 Pac. 1021.

"'Store,' in which goods were kept for use, 'sale' and deposit," in a description of a place broken and entered, is not satisfied by proof of a mere business office of a board of underwriters, in which were kept only furniture and articles for their business use. People v. Marks, 4 Park Cr. (N. Y.) 153, 157.

Separate building.—"In the country the designation of a well-known 'store' not near any other houses . . . would certainly include, as part of the 'place,' a building on the trading premises used in connection with the business," and such use of the building agrees with the designation of the "store" to which it belongs as the place for holding an election. Hayes v. Kirkwood, 136 Cal. 396, 398, 69 Pac. 30.

a magazine, a storehouse, a warehouse;[7] a place where supplies, as provisions, arms, clothing or goods of any kind, are kept for future use or distribution; a store-house; a warehouse; a magazine;[8] a shop;[9] a building or room in which

"Shop, house, store, saloon or other building" does not include an inclosed park, although liquors are exposed for sale there. State v. Barr, 39 Conn. 40, 44.

To occupy a store, within the meaning of provisions for local taxation of personal property of a non-resident where the owner occupies a store, refers, when the statute describes the property as "employed in trade" and the act of occupying as "for the purpose of such employment," to a "store for trade" as distinguished from a "store-house for storage," and while "store" as there used may under some circumstances include a store-house, it does not include one not employed for the purpose of employing in trade the goods stored therein (New Limerick v. Watson, 98 Me. 379, 381, 384, 57 Atl. 79, construing Rev. St. (1883) c. 6, § 14); and does not apply to mere desk-room occupied by a cotton broker for purposes of correspondence, where he receives samples but makes no sales (Martin v. Portland, 81 Me. 293, 296, 17 Atl. 72); nor does one who has a mere privilege in a counting-room, where he transacts business, and has goods stored in warehouses and wharves occupied by others and not hired by him, thereby "hire or occupy" a store (Huckins v. Boston, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 543, 546, 548, construing Rev. St. c. 7, § 10, and St. (1839) c. 139, § 1).

A banking house may properly be described as "the store, shop and warehouse of the president, directors and company" in an indictment under St. (1854) p. 312, concerning breaking and entering a "store, shop or warehouse." Wilson v. State, 24 Conn. 57, 62.

Ann. 66, 68 (citing Webster Dict.)]. Compare Com. v. Annis, 15 Gray (Mass.) 197, 199, 201 (holding that an instruction to the jury defining "shop" as "a place where goods were sold at retail" and "store" as "a place where goods are deposited," and adding that in this country shops for the sale of goods are frequently called stores, is not open to exception, and an indictment on a trial for breaking and entering a shop may be supported by testimony describing the building in question as a store); Com. v. Riggs, 14 Gray (Mass.) 376, 378, 77 Am. Dec. 333 (where on a trial for larceny in a "shop" the fact that the owner in testifying alluded to it as a "store" was held unimportant when the word "store" was not found in the statutes of the state).

Shop and store compared and distinguished. —"The word 'store' is of larger signification than the word 'shop.' It not only comprehends all that is embraced in the word 'shop,' when that word is used to designate a place in which goods or merchandise are sold, but more, a place of deposit, a 'store house.' In common parlance the two words have a distinct meaning. We speak of 'shops' as places in which mechanics pursue their trades, as 'a carpenter's shop,' 'a blacksmith's shop,' 'a shoemaker's shop.' While, if we refer to a place where goods and merchandise are bought and sold, whether by wholesale or retail, we speak of it as a 'store.' . . Unless in derision, we would never say a 'drug shop,' but a 'drug store.' There are but few, if any, who would understand that a man had a 'store,' and was engaged in buying and selling goods or merchandise, if we said he had a 'shop.' We never speak of the place in which a mechanic exercises his trade as a 'store,' nor do we speak of the place in which goods are bought and sold as a 'shop.'" Sparrenberger v. State, 53 Ala. 481, 483, 25 Am. Rep. 643. "We would not say that the terms 'store' and 'shop' may, under all circumstances, be used indiscriminately for each other, where they are connected with nothing which shows the particular meaning intended to be attached to them; but we are clearly of opinion that the fact that the place kept by the accused was one in which liquors were designed to be sold, entitles it to either of these appellations. A store kept for the sale of goods is to all intents a shop, the very definition of which is a place where anything is sold.'" Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 432, 440. "In conversation, we speak of a 'store' as a place where goods are exposed for sale, thus giving it the same meaning as 'shop.' Still, we recognize a difference between the meanings of these two words. Thus, we do not call the place where any mechanic art is carried on a 'store,' but we give it the name of 'shop,' as a tailor's shop, a blacksmith's shop, a shoemaker's shop. We usually understand by the word 'store,' a place where goods are exhibited for sale, but we do not always mean a 'store' when we use the word 'shop.'" State v. Canney, 19 N. H. 135, 137, holding that since both terms goods of any kind are kept for sale; a shop for the sale of goods;[10] a place where goods are kept for sale either at wholesale or retail; a shop; as a book store, a dry goods store;[11] any place where goods are sold, whether by wholesale or retail;[12] a place in which merchandise is kept for sale;[13] a place where goods are exhibited for sale;[14] frequently, in describing buildings in a street, the house in which goods are kept for sale, or a house erected for that purpose.[15] As a verb, to stock against a future time;[16] to lay away for future use;[17] to deposit in a storehouse or other building for preservation;[18] to keep merchandise for safe custody, to be delivered in the same condition as when received.[19] (Store: The Noun — Burglary of, see BURGLARY, 6 Cyc. 189, 190; Larceny From, see LARCENY, 25 Cyc. 65 text and note 13; Liability of Shopkeeper as Bailee of Articles Left in, see BAILMENTS, 5 Cyc. 185 note 27; Vacancy or Non-Occupancy of, Within Meaning of Insurance Policy, see FIRE INSURANCE, 19 Cyc. 733 note 97. STORE ACCOUNT. A statutory term which has been held to apply, without discrimination, to all accounts of goods sold by store-keepers and charged in their books against the purchasers.[20] (Store Account: Book Entries in Evidence, see are used in Rev. St. c. 436, § 9, to describe places subject to burglary, they are used distinctively and not synonymously, and an indictment which alleges the breaking and entering a "store" and larceny from the "shop" aforesaid, is bad on demurrer. See also infra, this note.

Shop and store; American and English uses distinguished.—"By a reference to the lexicographers of this country and England, it appears that the word 'shop' is used in the same sense in both; but that the word 'store,' as applicable to a building, is used in a more extensive sense in this country than in that. There it is never applied to a place where goods are sold, but only to one where they are merely deposited; here it is used to denote both of these. Indeed, it is so true that the two words are here in common parlance synonymous, as to have been a matter of remark by English travelers." Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 432, 439. "The word 'store' is commonly used in this country as the equivalent of the English word 'shop,' which is very generally applied . . . to any room or building where any kind of article or traffic is sold. The American word 'store' applies to the building,—the name more strictly belonging to the collection of ware within it. The English 'shop' is the building itself, as distinguished from a place of sale which is open, like a stall.'" Richards v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co., 60 Mich. 420, 425, 27 N. W. 586.

Indefinite, not implying good credit.—"The term is indefinite: it may mean a wholesale merchant, or a petty dealer in toys or candies; it may imply a principal, or an agent or servant; it may be applied to one notoriously without capital and who lives by his wits rather than by legitimate trades; in short, disconnected from all else, it can never indicate that the person who bears the designation is one who can safely be trusted with a loan." STORE-ROOM. A word which does not necessarily mean either a storehouse or warehouse.[33] (See ROOM, 34 Cyc. 1815; STORE, ante, p. 1326; STOREHOUSE, ante, p. 1329.)

STORES. A term more general than provisions; in that it is not confined to articles of food or subsistence, and may include such things as wood or coal.[34] (See SEA STORES, 35 Cyc. 1279. Store, see STORE, ante, p. 1326.)

STORM.[35] As a noun, a violent wind; a tempest;[36] a violent disturbance of the atmosphere producing wind, rain, snow, hail, or thunder and lightning; hence, often a fall of rain or snow,[37] involving, both in the grammatical and popular sense, some preternatural action of the elements;[38] a tempest; a commotion of the elements;[39] a tempest.[40] As a verb, to throw into a commotion or tumult; to rage or rave; to move about with violence, rage or fury; to be, or cause to be, tempestuous;[41] to attack by open force; to rage.[42] (Storm: As Insured Risk, see FIRE INSURANCE, 19 Cyc. 830; LIGHTNING INSURANCE, 25 Cyc. 958. Effect on Duty of Person Crossing Railroad, see RAILROADS, 33 Cyc. 1024, 1026 note 33, 1125 text and notes 38, 39, 40. See also LIGHTNING, 25 Cyc. 958; STORMY, post, this page; TEMPEST.)

STORM TIDE LINE or MARK. A term which has been held incapable of designating an absolute or fixed boundary, but relative, and as having relation to the condition of things from time to time.[43]

STORMY. Tempestuous, agitated, with furious winds, boisterous;[44] tempestuous, violent.[45] (See STORM, ante, this page.)

STORY. A connected account of narration, oral or written, of events of the past; history; an account of an event or incident; a relation; a recital; a narrative, either true or fictitious . . . specifically a fictitious tale; . . . the facts or events in a given case considered in their sequence, whether related or

33. Hagar v. State, 35 Ohio St. 268, 270, holding that an indictment for breaking and entering a "store-room" is insufficient under a statute using the terms "store-house" and "ware-house."

34. See Crooke v. Slack, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 177, construing the word as used in 2 Rev. St. 493, § 1, providing for a lien for "'provisions' and 'stores'" furnished and proper for the use of a vessel.

35. Figurative use, such as "storm of passion," or "a storm of affliction," or "a storm of sedition," or "storming a fort," excluded in construing an insurance policy see Stover v. Insurance Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 38, 39.

36. Webster Dict. [quoted in Stover v. Insurance Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 38, 39.

The rate of a "storm" when the word is applied to a wind, is sixty to eighty miles an hour. The Snap, 24 Fed. 292, 293.

Distinguished from brisk "wind," "high wind," and "gale," the latter blowing at the rate of forty to fifty miles an hour see The Snap, 24 Fed. 292, 293.

37. Webster Dict. [quoted in Tyson v. Union Mut. F., etc., Ins. Co., 2 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 17].

Rain and snow not essential.—"Storm is a violent agitation, a commotion of the elements by wind, etc., but not necessarily implying the fall of anything from the clouds. Hence, to call a mere fall of rain without wind, a storm (though common in this country), is a departure from the true sense of the word. Webster Dict. [quoted in Tyson v. Union Mut. F., etc., Ins. Co., 2 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 17].

"Storm or hurricane."—A charter power to insure against "fire, storm or hurricane" is not to be read as if "hurricane" were explanatory of "storm," or so as to exclude any storm not a hurricane. For "every hurricane is a storm, but every storm not necessarily a hurricane." Tyson v. Union Mut. F., etc., Ins. Co., 2 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 17, 18.

38. See Stover v. Insurance Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 38, 40–42, holding that a rain, warm, soft wind, and ice freshet caused thereby, do not constitute a storm within the meaning of a policy insuring against loss by storm, the rain and warm wind having no violent character, and the freshet in itself not being within the definition of the word.

STOVEPIPE. A word well understood to refer to a pipe made either of sheet iron or heavy tin, which usually connects the stove with the chimney or flue.[49]

STOVE WORKS. A term used to designate all the grounds used by a manufacturer for the manufacture of stoves, including the buildings and all the grounds about the buildings, whether such grounds are fenced in or not.[50]

STOWAWAY. One who conceals himself on board a vessel about to leave port, in order to obtain free passage.[51] (Stowaway: Enrolled in Crew and Deserting in United States, see ALIENS, 2 Cyc. 123 note 65.)

STRADDLE. In the language of brokers, the double privilege of a "put" or "call," securing to the holder the right to demand of the seller, at a certain price within a certain time, a certain number of shares of specified stock, or to require him to take at the same price, within the same time, the same shares of stock.[52] (See GAMING, 20 Cyc. 932 text and note 65. See also CALL, 6 Cyc. 205 text and note 11; PUT, 32 Cyc. 1273; PUTS AND CALLS, 32 Cyc. 1275.)

STRAIGHT-CUT. A term which, when applied to tobacco, designates that particular product in which the plant has been so cut and treated at the time of cutting, as to preserve the fibers long, even, straight and parallel when prepared for sale or use; and, when applied to cigarettes, implies that they are made of straight cut tobacco.[53]

STRAIGHT LINE. A line free from irregularities or curvatures; shortest distance between two points.[54] (Straight Line: In Boundary, see BOUNDARIES, 5 Cyc. 876, 878 text and note 41, 879 text and note 46. See also LINE, 25 Cyc. 1491.)

STRAIGHT WHISKIES. Whiskies produced directly from grain by process of distillation, without the use of any liquid save water, and marketable when 63. Anderson L. Dict. [quoted in Balfour v. Burnett, 28 Oreg. 72, 74, 41 Pac. 1].

Stranger purchasing land in a town.—As used in an act of the provincial legislature passed in 1742, relating to two towns; in a provision in case a "stranger" should purchase land in either of them, the word probably applies to "those who were not then land-owners in either town." Lamprey v. Batchelder, 40 N. H. 522, 528.

64. Abbott L. Dict. [cited in Simpson v. Treat, 126 Fed. 1003, 1007], adding: "Thus the effect of an act may be drawn in question as to either parties, privies, or strangers. Thus the parties to a fine are either the cognizors or cognizees; the privies are such as are in any way related to those who levy the fine, and claim under them by any right of blood, or other right of representation; the strangers are all persons in the world, except only the parties and privies. In its general legal signification, stranger is opposed to the word privy."

65. See O'Donnell v. McIntyre, 118 N. Y. 156, 163, 23 N. E. 455, holding that one not in privity with another in relation to the matter in question is a "stranger."

artifice.[73] (See ARTIFICE, 3 Cyc. 1013; DECEPTION, 13 Cyc. 427; FRAUD, 20 Cyc. 8; TRICK.)

STRATEGY. A term used in the operation of armies conducted by a skilful commander, and implying tact and art in military manœuvering.[74]

STRAW. A material too well known to require any description, and not applicable to things made of the leaf of a tree.[75] (Straw: Applied to Persons, see STRAW BAIL, post, this page; STRAW MAN, post, this page.)

STRAW BAIL. A term which, as a description, has been said to equal a statement that the bail has no real estate; that there is no such man; that he is not to be found.[76] (See STRAW MAN, post, this page; and, generally, BAIL, 5 Cyc. 1.)

STRAW MAN. A term applied to one who merely represents those who actually bear the expense and take the profits of a transaction;[77] in the parlance of real estate means, a mere conduit or medium for convenience in holding and passing title.[78] (See STRAW BAIL, ante, this page.)

STRAY. An animal found in an unusual place for such an animal; or an animal that has roved for some time in a certain place, whose owner is unknown.[79] (Stray: Estrays, see ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 358.)

STREAM. A word which has a well defined meaning, wholly inconsistent with a body of water at rest, implying motion as, to issue in a stream, to flow in a current.[80] For example the term has been variously employed as meaning a river, a brook or rivulet, anything in fact that is liquid and flows in a line or course;[81]

"Stack of straw within the meaning of stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 17," concerning the offense of burning a "stack of straw," does not include a stack of which the lower part consists of cole-seed straw and the upper part of wheat stubble (Rex v. Tottenham, 7 C. & P. 237, 32 E. C. L. 590); nor a stack of stubble, or, as it is called in Cambridgeshire, "haulm" (Rex v. Reader, 4 C. & P. 245, 246, 1 Moody C. C. 239, 19 E. C. L. 498).

"Straw laces" and "twisted straw" see Rheimer v. Maxwell, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,738, 3 Blatchf. 124, 125, holding that "twisted straw" was not dutisble under 9 U. S. St. at L. 44, 45, § 11, Schedule C, since it had not been known in commerce or prepared or used in this country before the passage of that act, and containing in the statement of facts, the following passage relating to the evidence: "It was also proved, that an article was known in trade and commerce as straw laces, which was used in being manufactured into hats, bonnets, &c., and that twisted straw was the raw material used in making straw laces. A stalk of rye-straw is split into two parts, and those parts, twisted together, compose the twisted straw of commerce."

Classes of streams.—"Streams of water have been divided into several distinct classes. 1. Arms of the sea, in which the tide ebbs and flows. These belong to the public. 2. Streams which are navigable for vessels, boats, lighters, and as it has also been held, for rafts. In these the people have the right of eminent domain for the purposes of navigation and commerce; and the riparian owner has only a qualified right to the bed of the stream, and the water which flows over it, subordinate to the superior rights of the public. To this class may, perhaps, be added such streams as have been declared by statute to be public highways. 3. Streams which are so small, shallow or rapid, as 'not to afford a passage for the king's people,' as Lord Hale expresses it; such streams as are not navigable for boats or vessels or rafts. These are altogether private property. The Hudson river has been said to furnish an example of each of these classes of streams, in different parts of its course." Munson v. Hungerford, 6 Barb. (N. I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.*

A. Definition — 1. Of Street Railroad. A street railroad or railway has been defined as a railroad or railway laid down upon roads or streets for the purpose of carrying passengers.[1] Ordinarily the chief characteristics of a street railroad are: That it is constructed upon and passes along streets and highways;[2] that it is usually constructed so as to conform to the grade of the street and so as not to interfere with the use of the street by pedestrians and vehicles;[3] that it is operated for the transportation of passengers from one point to another in a city or town, or to and from its suburbs;[4] that its cars run at short intervals,[5] at a moderate rate of speed as compared with the speed of commercial railroads,[6] and make frequent stops, particularly at street crossings to take on and leave off passengers;[7] and that primarily its business is confined to the transportation of passengers and not freight.[8] But in the light of the development in recent years of the equipment, operation, and use of street railroads,[9] it is not now con-

9. Street railroads came into use about the year 1850, being twenty years later in origin than steam roads. In New York one of the first street railroads was the outgrowth of an omnibus line, and differed from it only in the fact that it was confined to a track. So little did street railways figure, at that sidered essential that a railroad should strictly adhere to all of these characteristics in order to constitute it a street railroad, and if its primary purpose is to operate upon streets for the transportation of passengers to and from points in a city or town or its suburbs, it is none the less a street railroad because of the fact that it also operates beyond the city limits,[10] or between contiguous towns or cities as an interurban railroad,[11] or for a part of its route upon property other than streets or highways,[12] or even that it transports freight as a part of its business.[13] Whether

"The street railway in its inception is a purely urban institution. . . . This strictly urban character of the street railways remained practically unchanged for many years. . . . Time, however, has made changes in conditions. New motive power has been discovered, and it is found that by its use an enlarged city street-car may profitably run long distances, and compete to some extent with the steam railway. It is proposed to convert the city railways into lines of passenger transportation, covering long distances and connecting widely separated cities and villages, by using the country highways, and operating long and heavy coaches, sometimes made up into trains of several cars. Thus, the urban railway has developed into the interurban railway, and threatens soon to develop into the interstate railway. The small car which took up passengers at one corner, and dropped them at another, has become a large coach, approximating the ordinary railway coach in size, and has become a part, perhaps, of a train which sweeps across the country from one city to another, bearing its load of passengers ticketed through, with an occasional local passenger picked up on the highway. The purely city purpose which the urban railway subserved has developed into or been supplanted by an entirely different purpose, namely, the transportation of passengers from city to city over long stretches of intervening country." B. Nature and Status — 1. Of Street Railroad. A street railroad is a public utility and is peculiarly an institution for the accommodation of people in cities and towns,[24] although it cannot be considered strictly a street improvement.[25] Street railroad tracks constructed and operated in the streets of a city are merely a part of the highway, furthering the identical use of travel for which the streets were established.[26]

2. Of Street Railroad Company. A street railroad company is a common carrier of passengers,[27] and is a quasi-public corporation;[28] but at the same time, notwithstanding it is given corporate existence to enable it to provide the means of rapid transportation for the convenience of the people and the promotion of the public welfare,[29] it is a private enterprise subject to such restrictions and regulations as the statutes may prescribe and the municipality is authorized to impose.[30]

3. Distinguished From Other Railroads. The terms "railroad" and "railway" are synonymous and are generally used interchangeably,[31] unless it appears from the connection in which one term or the other is used that a particular kind of road is intended.[32] Technically speaking, the term "railroad" is broad enough to include a street railroad, so far as its road-bed is made of iron or steel rails for wheels of cars to run upon;[33] but there is a clear distinction between an ordinary commercial railroad and a street railroad;[34] and when there is doubt as to the true meaning of the term "railroad" or "railway," the legislative intent is to be determined from the general legislation upon the subject-matter, and may or may not include a street railroad according to the purpose and intention of the particular statute or ordinance.[35] The distinction between a street railroad and an ordinary com-

According to common popular usage the word "railroad," without any qualifying or explanatory prefix, is generally understood as referring exclusively to ordinary commercial railroads, used for the transportation of both passengers and freight, and whenever street railroads are referred to the word "street" is prefixed. But it has been held that when either of the words, "railroad" or "railway," is used in a statutory or constitutional provision, and the context is without indication that a particular kind of road is intended, the provision will be held applicable to every species of road embraced in the general sense of the word used. The distinction between street railroads and ordinary commercial railroads is discussed in the following cases: Canastota Knife Co. v. Newington Tramway Co., 69 Conn. 146, 36 Atl. 1107; Bloxham v. Consumers' Electric Light, etc., R. Co., 36 Fla. 519, 18 So. 444, 51 Am. St. Rep. 44, 29 L. R. A. 507; Ecorse Tp. v. Jackson, etc., R. Co., 153 Mich. 393, 117 N. E. 89; Rische v. Texas Transp. Co., 27 Tex. Civ. App. 33, 66 S. W. 324. The track of a commercial railroad in a street is generally so laid as to exclude vehicles from passing along it, and from crossing, except at places specially provided, and in its operation the running of the trains drives traffic from the street and intends to destroy the use for which the street is required, while a street railroad is so constructed and operated as not to destroy but to facilitate the use of the street. Canastota Knife Co. v. Newington Tramway Co., supra; State v. Dayton Traction Co., etc., 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 490, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 212. So a street railroad is local, derives its business from the street along which it is operated, and is in aid of local travel on those streets, while on the other hand a commercial railroad usually derives its business either directly or indirectly through connecting roads from a large area of territory and not from the travel on the streets of those cities along which it happens to be constructed and operated. II. RIGHT TO CONSTRUCT AND OPERATE.*

A. Nature of Right. The right to construct and operate a street railroad upon and along the streets of a municipality is a franchise, which must be derived from legislative authority,[40] and which, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, may be conferred directly by the legislature,[41] or by a municipality pursuant to authority delegated by the legislature, but not otherwise.[42] When accepted, the grant of a street railroad franchise or license constitutes a contract,[43] and the franchise itself is real property, being in the nature of an easement and classified as an incorporeal hereditament.[44]

Franchises defined see FRANCHISES, 19 Cyc. 1452.

Secondary franchises.— The rights of a street railroad company in the streets of a city, derived by permit, license, or contract with the city, have been held to be not franchises, but "secondary franchises," that is to say, instrumentalities by which the corporate powers granted by the charter may be exercised. Shreveport Traction Co. v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 119 La. 759, 44 So. 457.

When traffic agreement only.— A privilege or license, granted for a consideration, to operate cars upon tracks belonging to the city is a mere traffic agreement and not a franchise. Schinzel v. Best, 45 Misc. (N. Y.) 455, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 754 [affirmed in 109 N. Y. App. Div. 917, 96 N. Y. Suppl. 1145].

In Illinois the rights of a street railroad company which are derived from a municipality and not from the state are considered as mere licenses and not franchises. The fact that an ordinance is called a franchise, and is couched in terms frequently used in granting franchises, is not conclusive as to its character; but where it bears nearly all the marks usually borne by street railroad franchise ordinances, and exacts an expensive service to be rendered to the city and its citizens, it will be construed as such. B. Who May Exercise. Corporations formed for the purpose of constructing and operating street railroads [45] may exercise that right upon the streets of a municipality when duly authorized by the state, either directly or through the agency of a municipality,[46] and, although this right to construct, maintain, and operate a street railroad is most frequently conferred on such corporations it may be conferred on, and exercised by, natural persons, acting either individually,[47] or as a partnership,[48] except where the statutes authorizing the granting of such a right are applicable to corporations only.[49] In some jurisdictions municipal corporations are authorized by constitutional or statutory provisions to construct and own street railroads,[50] or to assume the ownership of existing street

Distinguished from tangible property.—The franchise, while it is property, is separate and distinct from the tangible property used in the operation of the road; the city, by granting the franchise, does not become the owner of the tangible property used in the operation of the railroad, nor, unless the ordinance granting the franchise so expressly provides, can it become such owner by the forfeiture or termination by limitation of the franchise. Exceeding debt limit.—Although cities are authorized by Hurd Rev. St. Ill. (1905) p. 438, c. 24, to acquire, construct, own, operate, and lease street railroads, they are not authorized, in so doing, to incur indebtedness beyond the constitutional limit. Rights of city and lessee.—Under N. Y. C. Determination as to Necessity and Location — 1. By Commissioners Appointed by Court — a. Appointment. In some jurisdictions provision is made for the determination of the necessity for and location of a street railroad by commissioners appointed for that purpose.[54] Under the constitution and statutes in New York, when the requisite number of abutting property-owners fail to consent to the construction of a street railroad,[55] the determination of commissioners that the road shall be constructed and operated, when confirmed by the court which appoints them, may be taken in lieu of such consent.[56] To obtain the appointment of such commissioners, the applicant must make a positive and affirmative statement of facts in his petition and accompanying affidavit, showing that proper application was made to the property-owners and that the requisite number refused to consent;[57] but when such a showing has been made, and proper notice of the application has been given,[58] the court must make the Purpose of provisions.— These constitutional and statutory provisions recognize the fact that there may be a conflict between public and private interests, and that public convenience may require the construction of a street railroad in a case where the consent of the property-owners cannot be obtained. In re Thirty-fourth St. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 343, 7 N. E. 172.

Unconstitutional act.— A statute which makes the order of the court confirming the report of the commissioners a substitute not only for the consent of the abutting owners, but also for the consent of the city authorities, is unconstitutional. In re New York Dist. Facts must be stated, not inferences and conclusions. In re New York Cable R. Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 355; In re Broadway Underground R. Co., 23 Hun (N. Y.) 693, holding that an averment of belief that the consent cannot be obtained is not sufficient.

What not a refusal.— Where the railroad commissioners have authorized a railroad to use electricity, a refusal of the property-owners to consent to the construction of a road "to be operated by electricity, or any motive power other than steam that might be approved" by the railroad commissioners, is not a refusal to consent to the operation of the road by electricity, so as to authorize the appointment of commissioners. Matter of Kingsbridge R. Co., 66 N. Y. App. Div. 497, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 440.

Refusal of abutters along part of line to consent.— A company which has obtained consent of the authorities to construct its road along a street is not entitled to the appointment of commissioners to determine whether its road shall be constructed for a less distance along the street, on a showing merely that it has been unable to obtain the consent of owners along that portion, where nothing is said about a failure to obtain the requisite consents for the entire distance, or about the abandonment of its right on the other portion of the street. Matter of Cross-Town St. R. Co., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 236, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 818.

58. In re Broadway Surface R. Co., 34 Hun (N. Y.) 414.

Reason for notice.— The requirement of notice enables property-owners to appear at the hearing and oppose the application on the ground that the petitioner is not in a situaappointment, as it is not vested with discretion in the premises, and the failure to obtain the requisite consents is the only condition precedent.[59]

b. Proceedings and Review. The commissioners, after giving public notice of their hearings,[60] may, in receiving evidence and making up their report, consider all the circumstances bearing on the necessity for the proposed road;[61] but they have no power to consent to the construction of a road according to amended plans which have not been submitted to the property-owners.[62] The determination of the commissioners, when in favor of the construction of the road, must be confirmed by the court which appointed them before it becomes final and effective;[63] but, when unfavorable, it is final, except when affected with fraud, mistake, or gross irregularity, in which case it is the duty of the court to set their report aside and appoint other commissioners, or remit the matter to the same commissioners with proper instructions.[64] In considering the question of confirmation, the court has power to examine the merits of the case,[65] and to attach conditions to its confirmation.[66]

2. By Other Bodies and Tribunals. For the purpose of restraining the construction of useless street railroads, it is provided by statute in some jurisdictions that, before the company shall begin the construction of its road, it must obtain tion to make it, and also to be heard in respect to the selection of commissioners. In re Thirty-fourth St. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 343, 7 N. E. 172.

59. In re Thirty-fourth St. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 343, 7 N. Co., 88 Hun (N. Y.) 603, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 992 [distinguishing Matter of Cross-Town St. R. Co., 68 Hun 236, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 818]; In re Broadway Surface R. Co., 34 Hun (N. Y.) 414. III. INCORPORATION, POWERS, AND DISSOLUTION OF STREET RAILROAD COMPANY.

A. Incorporation and Organization.[73] In order that a street railroad company may be entitled to corporate existence, as a legal entity, with the right to own, construct, and operate a street railroad, it must be incorporated or organized in compliance with the laws regulating the organization of such a corporation.[74]

Suppl. 418).

In Massachusetts it seems that the assent of the railroad commissioners to an extension is required, but it has been held that they may authorize an extension consisting of an additional track not connected with existing tracks except by the tracks of another railroad corporation. Review of questions of law.— Under some statutes only questions of law are reviewable by the courts (Paine v. Newton St. R. Co., 192 Mass. 90, 77 N. E. 1026); and a statutory provision that on appeal the decree of the railroad commissioners affirming or setting aside the location made by the municipal authorities shall be final on all questions of fact includes the determination whether the "interests of the public" require certain conditions and limitations imposed by such authorities (Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Portsmouth, 71 N. H. 21, 51 Atl. 664).

Appeal.— In Connecticut the finding of the superior court is not subject to review, unless the special jurisdiction conferred by statute has been exceeded, or the methods of judicial procedure essential to the due course of law have been violated. In re Shelton St. R. Special charters.— The validity of special charters is dependent upon constitutional provisions (Dieter v. Estill, 95 Ga. 370, 22 S. E. 622), or the statutes of the United States, in case of a territory (Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Denver City R. E. 71; Keene Electric R. Co.'s Petition, (N. H. 1896) 41 Atl. 775. And see Berks County v. Reading City Pass. R. Co., 167 Pa. A special charter to a city railroad company, when accepted and

As the term "railroad" or "railway" is a generic term sufficiently broad to include street railroads,[75] a street railroad company, in the absence of a special statute, may be incorporated under a general railroad incorporation act,[76] unless expressly prohibited by statute,[77] and it has been held that a statute providing for the incorporation of industrial corporations generally authorizes the formation of a street railroad company.[78] The articles of incorporation must comply with all the statutory requirements such as to provisions relating to forfeitures,[79] and must state with reasonable certainty the termini and route of the proposed road.[80] The time when the corporation comes into existence is dependent upon the statute,[81] as is also the question of an extension of corporate life.[82]

Construction of statutes.— The mere circumstance that a railroad is located parallel and near to a public highway cannot be considered as evidence that the purpose of the company is to offend against the prohibition of the operation of a road as a street railroad by a corporation chartered as a railroad. Gaw v. Bristol, etc., R. Co., 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 332. The right of a corporation to construct a street railroad in the streets of a city, under an act incorporating it and conferring the express power to do so, is not affected by the fact that the act also contains provisions which are usually inserted in special charters granted to railroad companies. Under the Pennsylvania statute, the filing of articles of association with the secretary of state is merely a preliminary step to the obtaining of a charter, and the incorporators have no standing as a corporation before the issuance of letters patent. B. Officers, Agents, and Stock-Holders. Except in so far as they are regulated by special statutory or charter provisions, the law applicable to the officers and agents of corporations in general governs questions relative to the officers and agents of a street railroad company.[83] Thus the president and secretary of a street railroad company have no inherent or implied power to bind the company by the execution of promissory notes,[84] but the board of directors may bind the stock-holders by their acceptance of a franchise;[85] and, in cases of emergency or accident, the acts and contracts of the corporate representatives in charge at the time are binding on the company, especially when ratified.[86] The elementary principle that, in the absence of any charter provision to the contrary, a majority of the stock-holders control in deciding corporate questions requiring their action, is applicable in determining the rights of stock-holders of street railroad corporations.[87] The stock-holders of a street railroad company have been held to be within the meaning of statutes defining the liability of stock-holders of railroad corporations,[88] and, in a proper case, may sue to rescind a fraudulent contract.[89]

C. Powers Generally.[90] Like other corporations a street railroad corporation possesses only such powers as are expressly given or are necessary incidents to the enjoyment of the franchise expressly granted;[91] and where it clearly acts beyond its corporate powers and franchises, no consent by the municipality can supply the want of power.[92]

D. Grants of Franchises and Privileges — 1. Necessity of. People v. Bauer, 54 Misc. 28, 103 N. Y. Suppl. 1081; Seccomb v. Wurster, 83 Fed. 856. It has also been held that a condition in the articles of association of an elevated railroad company that the company shall not be permitted to do any work toward the construction of its road on a certain street until it shall have entered into an agreement with the companies owning and operating a surface steam railroad thereon, transforming such surface road into a mere street railroad, and transferring its operation by steam to the elevated tracks, is a condition subsequent and not precedent to the granting of a franchise. In re Atlantic Ave. El. The signing of an application by a person styling himself "trustee" is sufficient. Simmons v. Toledo, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. 124, 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 64.

In Illinois a petition of consenting property-owners is required, and where an ordinance is void because it grants a franchise to individuals, a new petition is necessary before a new franchise may be lawfully granted to a corporation, which is the assignee of the rights granted under the previous ordinance, as there can be no valid assignment of rights conferred by a void ordinance. In Ohio a somewhat liberal interpretation is given to the statute requiring notice, and it is held sufficient if the notice is given at any time before the final grant is made (Hamilton v. Cincinnati, etc., Electric St. R. Co., 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 174, 5 Ohio N. P. 457; Aydelott v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. 11, 4 Ohio Cir. Co., 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 79, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 418; Sommers v. Cincinnati, 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 887, 8 Am. L. Rec. 612); unless the extension is from a line wholly without the municipality into or through the municipality (Cleveland, etc., St. R. Co. v. Urbana, etc., R. Co., 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. 180), nor to the renewal of a franchise previously granted (State v. East Cleveland R. Co., 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. 318, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 471); and that a publication in one daily paper for the prescribed time is a sufficient compliance with the requirement, although publication in two daily papers is required by ordinance (Simmons v. Toledo, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. 124, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 64; Smith v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 10 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 441, 8 Ohio N. P. 1). However, where the notice is legally insufficient, the city council cannot, after granting the franchise, render the notice sufficient by a subsequent curative ordinance. Raynolds v. Cleveland, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. 463 [affirmed in 76 Ohio St. 619, 81 N. E. 1182].

Where service of notice necessary.—An application for permission to construct and operate a street railway in a certain city is not "pending" at the time of the repeal of the statute under which the proceeding was brought, within the meaning of Vt. St. §§ 28, 29, saving from the effect of such repeal suits and proceedings in civil causes then pending, where such statute was repealed before notice of such application had been served. franchise, statutory requirements relating to the passage and approval of ordinances must be observed,[98] and, before the contract becomes binding and operative, it must be perfected,[99] as by a valid acceptance on the part of the street railroad company.[1] A street railroad franchise ordinarily can only be legally granted to a street railroad corporation; it cannot be granted to an ordinary commercial railroad,[2] nor, in some states, to individuals.[3] A street railroad franchise is void when granted for private and not public purposes,[4] or when its granting is attended with fraud,[5] although the partial invalidity of such a franchise ordinance does not necessarily affect the validity of the whole,[6] and although a void grant by a municipality may be confirmed and ratified by an act of the legislature,[7] yet a void grant is not validated by an assignment thereof,[8] nor is an ordinance or resolution, void because conferring on the corporation authority to exercise power not given to it by the articles of association, validated by a second ordinance or resolution.[9]

Consideration.— The privilege granted to a street railroad company of entering upon the streets of a village, erecting poles and stringing wires thereon, and constructing and operating its roads upon and along the streets constitutes ample consideration for the contract. People v. Suburban R. Co., 178 Ill. 594, 53 N. E. 349, 49 L. R. A. 650.

The fact that the contract is not advantageous to the city is immaterial and does not affect its binding force. City R. Co. v. Citizens' R. Co., (Ind. 1898) 52 N. E. 157.

1. State v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 116 Wis. 142, 92 N. W. 546, holding, however, that an ordinary commercial railroad company has no power to accept a street railroad franchise.

Sufficiency of acceptance.— An acceptance may be consummated for and on behalf of the corporation by its board of directors, and, when so consummated, is binding on the stock-holders. Venner v. Chicago City R. Co., 236 Ill. 349, 86 N. E. 266. A written acceptance which is signed in the name of the company by its president and secretary, accompanied by the seal of the company, is prima facie an acceptance by the company (Niles v. Benton Harbor-St. Joe R., etc., Co., 154 Mich. 378, 117 N. W. 937); and, in the absence of a formal resolution, the acceptance may be shown by action constituting an actual practical acceptance (City R. Co. v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 166 U. S. 557, 17 S. Ct. 653, 41 L. ed. 1114).

Time of acceptance.— Where the ordinance provides that, before the privileges granted shall be enjoyed, the company shall within thirty days signify in writing its acceptance of the ordinance, the company will be allowed the full thirty days to file the acceptance; and where there is no objection by the body passing the ordinance, the company will not be enjoined from building its road on account of its failure to file such acceptance before commencing work. Williams Valley R. Co. v. Lykens, etc., St. R. Co., 1 Dauph. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 225.

Acceptance as estoppel.— A street railroad company which has availed itself of a grant of authority from the city to occupy a street cannot question the validity of that authority (People v. Suburban R. Co., 178 Ill. 594, 53 N. E. 349, 49 L. R. A. 650; Doane v. Lake St. El. R. Co., 165 Ill. 510, 46 N. E. 520, 56 Am. St. Rep. 265, 36 L. R. A. 97); as by claiming that, at the time of acceptance, the franchise ordinance had not been published and gone into effect, as the publication relates back to the time that the ordinance was accepted (Hattersley v. Waterville, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. 226); nor will the city, after the company has made a large expenditure of money, be allowed to repudiate the action of its council on the ground that their proceedings were irregular (Mill Creek Valley St. R. Where the second ordinance is complete and valid in itself, it is not invalid because passed as an amendment to a void act (Wilder v. Aurora, etc., Electric Traction Co., 216 Ill.

The municipality generally possesses either express or implied power to limit the duration of the franchise;[10] but under the statutes of some states the municipality has no power to grant other or different rights than those named in the charter of the company.[11] The courts will interfere only to prevent a fraudulent or manifestly abusive or oppressive exercise of the power of municipal authorities in granting franchises.[12]

b. Exclusive Grants and Licenses.[13] When not restrained by constitutional provisions, and when the public interest makes it desirable, the state may grant an exclusive street railroad franchise;[14] but in regard to the granting of an exclusive street railroad franchise by a municipal corporation, the general rule that, except where authorized by the legislature either expressly or by necessary implication, the power conferred upon a municipality to grant certain rights in streets does not authorize it to grant an exclusive privilege or franchise[15] applies.[16] may make such reservations,[19] and impose such conditions as are reasonable and not against public policy;[20] and the street railroad company, by accepting the franchise and the privileges conferred thereby, obligates itself to perform the conditions imposed, and estops itself from questioning their reasonableness.[21]

19. Shepard v. East Orange, 69 N. J. Void reservation.— An ordinance which provides that the location of the lines of the company is to be made subject to such further conditions as might be imposed by ordinance when the street railroad company adopts the route, and that the ordinance is not to be construed as a grant of rights in any street, but that the determination whether such rights should be granted is reserved until a petition for the same should be presented by the company, is a nullity as a location, in that there is no grant of a right to go upon or along the streets on which the ordinance professes to provide for location. d. Renewals and Extensions. As the continued operation of a street railroad constitutes a sufficient consideration for an ordinance extending the date for the expiration of its franchise,[23] it is competent for a municipal corporation to grant a renewal, even before the expiration of the franchise,[24] for a term within the limit prescribed by statute.[25] Likewise, under statutes conferring authority therefor, grants of authority by municipal corporations to street railroad companies to extend their lines of track, or their charter routes in case no tracks have been laid, are valid,[26] except where they authorize the extension of an ordinary

A city charter provision that the city council shall not extend any franchise until within three years of its expiration is not violated by an ordinance granting a street railroad franchise which provides that the acquisition, by purchase or otherwise, by the grantees, of any existing railroads or parts thereof, and the bringing of the same under the operation of this franchise, shall be equivalent to new construction and completion, and which also provides for the surrender and termination of existing franchises. St. § 2595, giving the city council power to grant permission to an existing street railroad company to extend its track on any streets where the council may deem such extension beneficial to the public, the council is not bound to determine in which streets the location of a street railroad would be the most beneficial, but may declare that any one of four routes proposed would be beneficial, and give to the street railway company an option of choosing in which it will lay its tracks).

Extent of legislative authority.— A statute authorizing street railroad companies organized under special acts, whose time for commencing the building of their roads has not expired, to extend their tracks on obtaining consent of the proper municipal authorities, is not confined in its application to companies whose charters limit the time for commencing the building of their road. West Jersey Traction Co. v. Camden Horse R. Co., 52 N. J. Eq. 452, 29 Atl. 333. A later New Jersey statute (Gen. St. pars. 55, 59) authorizing extensions does not apply to companies not specially chartered or incorporated thereunder. Trenton St. R. Co. v. United New Jersey R., etc. Co., 60 N. J. Eq. 500, 46 Atl. 763.

Application of lessor.— A street railroad company that has leased its property and franchises to another company, on terms that after-acquired railroads shall come under the lease without increase of rent, may lawfully apply to the municipality for permission to construct and maintain an extension of a street railroad embraced in the lease. Shepard v. East Orange, 69 N. J. L. 133, 53 Atl. 1047.

The New York city council has no power to authorize an extension except possibly where such extension is really necessary to steam railroad as a street railroad and invest it with all the powers of a street railroad company.[27]

4. CONSTRUCTION — a. General Rules. It is a well-settled rule of construction that grants of franchise rights to street railroad companies are to be strictly construed against the grantees and in favor of the public.[28] It is also true that, as the grant is made for the benefit of the grantee, and also for the express accommodation and benefit of the public, everything which is reasonably proper and necessary to effect the essential objects of the grant passes by necessary implication.[29] When expressed in clear and unambiguous language, the intention of the parties will be given effect,[30] by construing the language employed in its natural and ordinary sense,[31] and without resorting to the practical construction placed upon the grant by the parties.[32] As the authority of the state is paramount in the granting of such rights, the statutes of the state relative thereto enter into a grant made by a municipality and are controlling in case of conflict.[33]

the enjoyment of a previous grant. People v. Third Ave. R. Co., 45 Barb. 63.

Compelling construction of extension.— Sometimes the municipality reserves, in the ordinance or agreement, power to compel the construction of extensions (State v. St. Paul City R. Co., 78 Minn. 331, 81 N. W. 200), but such power can be exercised only over territory within the limits of the municipality at the date of the agreement (Toronto R. Co. v. Toronto, 37 Can. Sup. Ct. 430 [followed in Toronto v. Toronto R. Co., 12 Ont. L. Rep. 534, 8 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 179 (reversing 11 Ont. L. Rep. 103, 6 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 871)]); and a street railroad company cannot be compelled to build an extension before the occurrence of a condition upon which the ordinance under which it originally built the road required it to make the extension, simply because the consent of property-holders to the building of the road was accompanied by a request that the ordinance require the extension immediately (People v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Ill. 113, 7 N. E. 116 [affirming 18 Ill. App. 125]). b. Nature and Extent of Rights Granted[34] — (i) RIGHT TO ENGAGE IN COLLATERAL ENTERPRISES. Although no authority to receive property for, and to construct, a freight belt railroad can be derived from the naked power to construct a street railroad,[35] and although street railroads were, until a comparatively recent date, confined exclusively to the carriage of passengers,[36] they are now authorized, under the legislation of some states, to carry, and to enter into traffic arrangements for carrying, freight,[37] and, under some statutes to extend their business to other authorized purposes.[38] But a street railroad company usually has no power, by virtue of its charter, to pave the streets of a city independently of the consent of the city;[39] nor does a permit from the city to string electric wires confer any right to use such wires to distribute power to private consumers.[40]

(ii) DURATION OF FRANCHISE.[41] The duration of a street railroad franchise is to be determined by the terms of the grant, unless there is an express statutory prohibition against giving or accepting a franchise beyond a certain term of years.[42] A franchise unlimited in time is at least one for the term of the corporate life of the grantee,[43] and in some cases has been held to be in perpetuity.[44] In jurisdictions where the franchises of street railroad companies are assignable, a grant for a definite term extending beyond the corporate life of the company will be upheld;[45] and where the term for which a franchise may be granted is limited by statute, a grant for a longer time will be sustained for the statutory term.[46] A franchise of a distinct branch line made to terminate with the grant to the main line is to be measured by the grant as it then exists, and not by any subsequent extension thereof.[47]

c. Exclusive and Conflicting Grants and Licenses. As the policy of the law is against monopolies and exclusive grants in derogation of common right, grants to street railroad companies, which are claimed to confer an exclusive right, as against rival companies, to the use of particular streets, will be strictly construed and will not be held to confer such right by implication;[48] nor, where the grant does confer such right, will it be extended by construction beyond the clear import of its terms.[49] But where a valid grant of exclusive rights has been made to a

Extension of time.— Where a city ordinance grants a street railroad company a franchise, providing that it might operate in such streets as might be designated from time to time, and that the company shall have an exclusive privilege for five years, a subsequent permission to the company to operate a track in the street does not amount to an extension of the time for the exclusive privilege. Thurston v. Houston, 123 Iowa 157, 98 N. W. 637.

An exclusive right to operate a horse railroad does not exclude other street railroads street railroad company, the courts will affirm and protect such rights,[50] as by the issuance of an injunction on the application of the grantee.[51] As the right of a street railroad company to the use of its tracks is exclusive by reason of the mere right of property, at least against other competing companies, if not against the public,[52] a grant of exclusive rights relates to streets and not to the tracks.[53] A municipality is not precluded from conferring the same or similar rights and operated by other means than animal power (Teachout v. Des Moines Broad Gauge St. R. Co., 75 Iowa 722, 38 N. W. 145), such as a cable tramway (Omaha Horse R. Co. v. Cable Tramway Co., 30 Fed. 324), or a street railroad operated by steam (Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Denver City R. Co., 2 Colo. 673); but the exclusiveness of a right to operate a city railroad generally is not impaired by the fact that electricity was not used at the time the grant was made (Wilmington City R. Co. v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., (Del. 1900) 46 Atl. 12).

Co., 51 Cal. 583, denying the right of one company to enjoin the unauthorized occupation of the same street by another company, but not discussing the exclusive right, or lack of it, of the complaining company.

A company in default for not constructing its road within the prescribed time is not entitled to the aid of equity to specifically enforce by injunction an implied negative provision in its grant denying the municipality the right to grant to another street railroad company the right to use its streets (South Shore Traction Co. v. Bookhaven, 53 Misc. (N. Y.) 392, 102 N. Y. Suppl. 1074); and a company, to whom an option to construct on a certain street has been given, by not objecting or protesting to the granting of a similar franchise to another company, thereby acknowledges that it has lost its option (Kent v. Binghamton, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 1, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 198 [affirmed in 87 N. Y. App. Div. 632, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 1131]).

Where the rights granted are not exclusive, the public alone is entitled to complain against one company occupying streets without authority. Christopher, etc., R. Co. v. Central Crosstown R. Co., 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 315. And see Ogden City R. Co. v. Ogden City, 7 Utah 207, 26 Pac. 288. tion that a second company may occupy the same street upon obtaining the consent of the first; [60] and it follows that in such jurisdictions priority of user under a valid grant confers an exclusive right to the streets occupied; [61] but under statutes allowing a street railroad company to acquire exclusive rights and privileges, conditions precedent must be complied with before such rights vest.[62]

5. Sale of Franchises by Municipality. A municipality has the power to exact compensation for the use of its streets by street railroad companies; [63] and under some statutes, a street railroad franchise must be granted to the highest bidder,[64]

The provision of the New York rapid transit act which prohibits the commissioners from locating routes for elevated railroads over streets "already legally authorized for or occupied by an elevated or underground railroad" does not apply to streets alleged to be covered by the routes of other railroad companies, but in which no company has a complete right to build. In re Union El. The smallness of the charge made by a city for a franchise granted to a street railroad company does not invalidate the ordinance, where it is not claimed that the charge was collusively or dishonestly arrived at, or was not fixed as prescribed by the city charter. Dulaney v. United R., etc., Co., 104 Md. 423, 65 Atl. 45.

Estoppel.—Where a street railroad company, in order to induce the mayor of a city to sign a franchise ordinance, executed a contract which was void in its inception, by which the company agreed to pay the city fifty thousand dollars in instalments for the rights granted under the franchise, and after executing the contract the company proceeded to construct and operate its road on one of the streets under a permit issued by the commissioner of public works pursuant to such franchise and contract, the company is thereafter estopped to deny that the contract was valid. Potter v. Calumet Electric St. R. Co., 158 Fed. 521.

Percentage of earnings.—Under a law requiring an elevated railroad company to pay to the city five per cent of its net income of its passenger traffic, "net income" means the gross receipts from passenger traffic, less the general expenses of operating the road. Validity of statute.—An act providing for the sale of street railroad franchises is void, if its meaning cannot be determined by any known rules of construction, or if it is incapable of enforcement. State v. West Side St. R. Co., 146 Mo. 155, 47 S. W. 959.

An interurban electric railroad comes within the exception of trunk railways contained in Ky. Const. § 164, requiring the sale of street railway franchises by cities. Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co., 117 Ky. 146, 77 S. W. 674, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1275, 111 Am. St. Rep. 230, 63 L. R. A. 637.

The Louisiana statutes relating to the sale of franchises apply to street railroad franchises granted for the purpose of operating a road exclusively within the city limits, and do not apply to commercial railroads coming into the city from a distance. East or to the bidder offering to transport passengers at the lowest rate of fare,[65] and upon the fulfilment of certain conditions by the successful bidder.[66] These statutes do not generally apply to mere extensions or renewals;[67] but in cases where they are applicable, the sale must be made in compliance with the statutory requirements.[68] Mere inadvertence or informality in the use of words which do not go to the substance of the bid will not invalidate the sale,[69] and in general the duty of the local authorities consists in deciding which is the best bid within the meaning of the statute, without inquiring into the motives of the bidder,[70]

Louisiana R. Co. v. New Orleans, 46 La. Ann. 526, 15 So. 157. However, in determining what is a street railroad within the meaning of the statutes, the term is to be given a liberal and not a strict interpretation. New Orleans City, etc., R. Co. v. Watkins, 48 La. Ann. 1550, 21 So. 199.

Under the New York statute, prescribing certain conditions of the sale and providing that the local authorities may, in their discretion, impose further conditions, the board of aldermen may require the purchaser to deposit half the money necessary to complete the road (Abraham v. Meyers, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 225, 228, 29 Abb. N. Cas. 384); but the "further conditions" are only ejusdem generis with those specifically enumerated in the statute and do not authorize the local authorities to attach additional monetary conditions to their consent (Beekman v. Third Ave. R. Co., 153 N. Y. 144, 47 N. E. 277 [affirming 13 N. Y. App. Div. 279, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 174]). And see Gallagher v. Johnson, 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 840, 30 Cinc. L. Bul. 139, holding that a proposal cannot be rejected by the city council on the ground that it is not made in good faith, except for things done and said by the bidder in the council's presence, and that its inquiry must be confined to the question of whether he withdraws his bid or intends to comply with its terms.

Advantage of one bidder.—A sale is not illegal because it happens that one purchaser, without his connivance or procurement, and without fraud, collusion, or undue influence being shown, is in a position, by reason of his situation to bid a price higher than another. Johnson v. New Orleans, 105 La. 149, 29 So. 355.

The personnel of the bidders is immaterial, and if there is a compliance with the terms of the sale, the highest bid must be accepted; hence where an individual is the highest bidder, he is entitled to the franchise, although he is himself unable under the law to construct and maintain the road, as he can either organize a corporation to con-

but they have authority to reject a bid which they find to be frivolous or fraudulent.[71]

E. Amendment, Revocation, or Forfeiture of Charter or Franchise

— 1. Amendment or Revocation of Charter. Under power to alter, amend, or repeal reserved at the time of granting the charter, or conferred by constitution or statute, the body which granted the charter of a street railroad company may alter or supplement the same, either on its own initiation or on application of the company, provided its action is not arbitrary or destructive of vested rights acquired in good faith under the charter;[72] and in some jurisdictions the charter of the company may be revoked or vacated, as by proceedings in quo warranto for a violation of the ordinance which granted its franchise.[73] An amendment or supplement does not discharge the company from contractual obligations previously undertaken.[74]

2. Modification and Amendment of Franchise.[75] As a street railroad franchise constitutes a contract,[76] the body granting the same may not later modify or amend it, without the company's consent, so as to lessen the rights and privileges of the company, or impose additional burdens upon it,[77] unless the power to do so is clearly reserved.[78]

Ct. 427, 50 L. ed. 801 [reversing 132 Fed. 848] (holding that the declaration in the title of the various acts constituting the charters of the Chicago street railroad companies that they concern "horse railways," does not, because of the provision of Ill. Const. (1848) that no private or local law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title, prevent the exercise of the power to amend such charters in such manner as to authorize the use of cable or electricity as the motive power); Montgomery Amusement Co. v. Montgomery Traction Co., 139 Fed. 353 [affirmed in 140 Fed. 988, 72 C. Consideration.— That a street railroad company will connect its two systems, construct new lines, and reduce the fare to all parts of the city, is a sufficient consideration to make valid an ordinance amending the company's charter by relieving it of the obligation to pave between the rails, and for a given distance outside. Western Paving, etc., Co. v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 128 Ind. 525, 26 N. E. 188, 28 N. E. 88, 25 Am. St. Rep. 462, 10 L. R. A. 770.

The franchise of a street railroad company to maintain its line of road upon a certain street, as distinguished from its franchise to be a corporation, may be voluntarily surrendered with the consent of the city which granted it, without the consent of the state;[79] but as such a franchise is contractual in its nature and confers vested rights, it cannot be revoked without the consent of the company, except where power to revoke is reserved in the grant or is conferred by constitution or statute[80] in effect at the time the franchise rights become complete.[81] Within constitutional or statutory limits, the body grant-

Particular statutes construed.— Ohio Rev. St. § 2502, providing that a city shall not, during the term of a grant of a franchise to a street railroad company, "release the grantee from any obligation or liability imposed by the terms of such grant," does not render void a modification of a contract between the city and the railroad owner, made in good faith, for the better accommodation of the public. Failure to construct a branch line within the time allowed by a supplementary charter works a forfeiture of the rights granted by it (Williamson v. Gordon Heights R. Co., 8 Del. Ch. 192, 40 Atl. 933), and the fact that part of an extension has been completed is no defense (Wilmington City R. Co. v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 8 Del. Ch. 468, 46 Atl. 12).

Application of statutes.—The provisions of the act under which a company is chartered as to the time within which the road must be completed in order not to incur a forfeiture control over provisions of general railroad laws, when they are conflicting (In re Brooklyn El. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 434, 26 N. E. 474 [affirming 57 Hun 590, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 161]), and statutes which extend the time for building railroads for two years, and provide that "failure by any railroad company to construct its railroads heretofore, shall not cause a forfeiture," do not apply to a railroad company which has wilfully and intentionally failed to construct its road when able to do so (People v. Broadway R. Co., 126 N. Y. 29, 26 N. E. 961 [reversing 56 Hun 45, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 6]). Where a franchise is granted on condition that the company complete its road within a certain time, but, although the road is not completed within the time prescribed, no forfeiture is declared on behalf of the state, and a special act is passed providing that the time within which a railroad succeeding to such franchise shall finish the roads and put them in operation shall be extended such unused franchise cannot be forfeited at the suit of an abutting owner for the railroad's failure to complete the line within the time prescribed. See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 50.

Suspension of business.— The failure of a street railroad company to commence its lawful business comes within the meaning of a statute authorizing a forfeiture for a suspension of ordinary or lawful business for a year; and a demand to compel a license to do an unauthorized act is not a performance of business. People v. New York City Cent. Underground R. Co., 66 Hun (N. Y.) 633, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 373 [affirmed in 137 N. Y. 606, 33 N. E. 744].

Acts indicating an intention to abandon the right to the streets must accompany the non-user in order to extinguish the franchise. Wright v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 95 Wis. 29, 69 N. W. 791, 60 Am. St. Rep. 74, 36 L. R. A. 47.

the grant itself is strictly construed against the street railroad company,[86] in passing upon the conduct or omissions of the company, the courts will lean against forfeitures,[87] and will not hold matters which merely require regulation, or which are not unequivocally grounds of forfeiture, to be such.[88] Nor will a forfeiture be declared or allowed for a delay in constructing and operating the road which is due to unforeseen circumstances,[89] such as an injunction[90] or a failure to obtain the consent of abutting owners.[91]

b. Who Entitled to Assert and Waiver. A forfeiture of a street railroad franchise can only be taken advantage of by the state,[92] or possibly by a municipality,[93] and cannot be asserted and taken advantage of by a competitor, either

A presumption of abandonment of the grant is raised by a failure for twenty years to operate a railroad on certain streets included in the franchise. Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati, 76 Fed. 296, 22 C. C. A. 334.

Non-user is not excused by the fact that the city has passed an ordinance attempting to repeal the franchises granted to the company, nor by the fact that the city has prevented the company from laying a small portion of its track, where, had it not interfered, the road could not have been operated without acquiring a right to use a portion of another company's track, which right could not be acquired. Partial forfeiture.— The courts will allow a forfeiture of only so much of the franchise as is clearly forfeited (Houston v. Houston Belt, etc., R. Co., 84 Tex. 581, 19 S. W. 786; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Denver, 161 Fed. 769), and where the grant is so framed as to authorize a total, but not a partial, forfeiture, none will be decreed where the failure of the company to perform its part of the contract is only slight (Toledo v. Toledo R., etc., Co., 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 441).

Co. v. Cantor, 104 N. Y. App. Div. 476, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 943; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Olathe, 156 Fed. 624 (holding that a reservation in a franchise ordinance of power to repeal the ordinance in case of a breach of its conditions by the company does not authorize the city to repeal the ordinance at its pleasure without assigning any breach, and when there has, in fact, been none); Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Memphis, 53 Fed. 715. Compare Wheeling, etc., R. Co. v. Triadelphia, 58 W. Va. 487, 52 S. E. 499, 4 L. R. A. N. The granting of the same rights to another company by the city does not effect a forfeiture. Santa Rosa City R. Co. v. Central St. R. Co., (Cal. 1895) 38 Pac. 986.

The right to lay a double track is not lost by laying and using a single one for a time (People's Pass. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 231), or by abandoning a double track for a single one, and later resuming it (Hestonville, etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. St. 210).

However, where a street railroad franchise provides that, on the company's failure to pay the cost of paving between its tracks, the city may forfeit the franchise, a forfeiture will not be enjoined because from insufficiency of earnings the company has become insolvent and unable to pay such cost. Power of state absolute.— The sovereign power of the state to proceed against a street railroad company by quo warranto for forfeiture of its franchise even at the relation of the city cannot be contracted away, or in any way abridged, by the city; and a provision in a franchise ordinance that the city may in its own name proceed against the company for forfeiture of its franchises at the most only provides another remedy. Borough officials cannot, in an injunction in a direct or collateral proceeding.[94] As provisions for forfeiture are for the benefit of the municipality that body may waive a forfeiture, either expressly or impliedly,[95] as by granting renewal or additional franchises.[96]

c. Proceedings to Enforce. Where either the grant or the statute governing the matter provides that a failure to comply with its conditions works a forfeiture, or employs similar language, the statute or grant is self-executing;[97] but in the absence of such express language, a non-fulfilment of the conditions mentioned does not ipso facto work a forfeiture, but only furnishes grounds for forfeiture, and a judicial determination is necessary,[98] or at least affirmative action on the part of the municipality.[99] Under statutes or grants which are not self-executing, a forfeiture can be availed of only in a direct and not a collateral proceeding,[1] and the petition for a forfeiture must state facts constituting a cause of suit, take advantage of a forfeiture until after a revocation has been made by the borough which made the grant. Burke v. Carbondale Traction Co., 3 Lack. Jur. (Pa.) 297.

When private person may sue.— The construction and maintenance by an individual of a street railroad upon the highway for private purposes constitutes a nuisance for which any person sustaining special injury may bring an action, and an attempt by a street railroad company to transfer its franchise to an individual for the purpose of enabling him to operate the road exclusively for the purpose of his private business constitutes no defense thereto. IV. RIGHTS IN AND USE OF STREETS, ROADS, AND BRIDGES.

A. Nature and Extent of Rights in Streets—1. IN GENERAL. It is now recognized that the use of streets and public highways by street railroad companies is a legitimate public use,[5] which does not impose any additional servitude.[6] The right of a street railroad company, however, to use streets is not the natural right which every citizen possesses, but is a right which is derived from, and limited by, a lawful grant made by the proper authorities.[7] A street railroad

And see Denver Tramway Co. v. Londoner, 20 Colo. 150, 37 Pac. 723, holding that the city cannot, while its consent remains unrevoked, deny the right of the street railway company to complete the work already begun. Compare State v. Latrobe, 81 Md. 222, 31 Atl. 788, holding that on a petition by a street railroad company for mandamus to compel the mayor of a city to grant a permit to tear up streets, the mayor may set up that the petitioner had forfeited its rights to a permit by delay in prosecuting the work of laying its tracks.

Right of city to intervene.— Where the property of the company is, at the time of the passage of an ordinance repealing the grant of franchise for a breach of conditions subsequent, in possession of a receiver appointed in a suit to foreclose a mortgage thereon, it is proper for the city, by an intervening petition, to set up the forfeiture of the company's rights, and ask leave to remove its tracks from the street. Modification of public use.— The movement of street railroad cars on their tracks in the highway has been held to be only a modification of the public use to which the highway was originally devoted. After the termination of the grant by revocation or lapse of time, the company has no right to continue the operation of its road without another grant of authority (City R. Co. v. Citizens' St. R. Co., (Ind. 1898) 52 N. E. 157; Plymouth Tp. v. Chestnut Hill, etc., R. Co., 168 Pa. Co., 37 Iowa 61), nor can it enjoin the city from granting a similar franchise to another company (Canal, etc., R. Co. v. New Orleans, 39 La. Ann. 709, 2 So. 388).

Suspension of city's conflicting rights.— Where the legislature, in the exercise of its paramount authority over the streets of a city, grants a franchise to a street railroad company to occupy certain streets, and by a later act requires the company to extend its existing lines and to operate its entire road under restrictions therein imposed during the company has no property in the soil of the street or highway,[8] although its right to use the highway is a species of property;[9] its occupancy is not superior to, but is in common with, the general public,[10] all persons being at liberty to drive upon and over the tracks when they are laid in the traveled portion of the street,[11] and the rights of each must be exercised in a reasonable and careful manner, so as not to unnecessarily abridge or interfere with the rights of the other.[12] Such use and occupancy is also subject to the right of the city to improve the streets by sewers or otherwise,[13] and to remove, or cause to be removed, the tracks when they no longer subserve the purposes for which they were intended,[14] as the company will not be permitted to obstruct a street for the purpose of holding a right therein, and not for the purpose of serving the public.[15]

2. Under Legislative Grant. In jurisdictions where authority to use streets and roads is derived directly from the legislature, a street railroad company is not entitled to occupy a street or public road even temporarily, unless such right life of its charter, such legislation suspends during that time any conflicting rights of the city in the streets. Potter v. Collis, 19 N. Y. App. Div. 392, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 471 [affirmed in 156 N. Y. 16, 50 N. E. 413].

The most that an elevated railroad company has a right to insist upon is that its structure shall not be unreasonably interfered with. Where the company is unlawfully constructing its road, the municipal authorities having the control and regulation of the streets may summarily remove the tracks as an obstruction. Cape May, etc., R. Co. v. Cape May, 58 N. J. L. 565, 34 Atl. 397.

15. Chicago Gen. R. Co. v. Chicago City R. Co., 62 Ill. App. 502; Southern R. Co. v. Memphis, 97 Fed. 819, 38 C. C. A. 498 [modified in 99 Fed. 170, 39 C. C. A. 451], holding that a company whose grant to operate its cars by animal power cannot be exercised on account of the grade of the street will not be allowed to maintain its tracks in the hope that it may be granted the right to change its motive power.

is clearly conferred by its charter;[16] but when the company is acting within express charter authority, it is not subject to interference by a municipality.[17]

B. Acquisition of Rights in Streets and Roads in General. In some jurisdictions the matter of conferring upon a street railroad corporation the right to construct and operate its road in public streets and highways is delegated almost entirely to municipalities, and these bodies grant the right as a franchise;[18] while in other jurisdictions the legislature confers the right more directly, but requires as a condition precedent the obtaining of the consent of the local authorities[19] and the abutting owners.[20] Whatever consents are required by statute must be obtained before the company acquires any right to build,[21] as the unauthorized occupation of a street or highway by a street railroad company is a nuisance per se,[22] which may be enjoined on application of the proper officers,[23]

Remedying defects in charter.— Under the New York statutes, if the charter does not cover the proposed streets, there must be filed in the office where the certificate of incorporation is filed a statement of the names of the streets upon which it is proposed to build the road. Submission to voters.—Under the Nebraska statute, the consent of a majority of the electors of a city to the use of the streets over which a proposed street railroad is to be constructed must be obtained before the construction is commenced, the consent to be given or withheld at an election held for that purpose (State v. Lincoln St. R. Co., 80 Nebr. 333, 114 N. W. 422, 14 L. R. A. N. S. 336), and a city is not authorized to grant a charter to or enter into a contract in respect thereto with a street railroad company (Lincoln St. R. Co. v. Lincoln, 61 Nebr. 109, 84 N. W. 802). However, the city, under its power to regulate, may require street railroad companies holding franchises to use the streets to apply for a permit before entering upon and obstructing the streets, and require the applicant to file specifications as to the work to be done and the location thereof and a bond to hold the city harmless for any damages caused by the work. State v. Frost, 78 Nebr. 325, 110 N. W. 986. In order to render a consent by voters sufficient, the notice of election must be full and explicit (State v. Lincoln St. R. Co., supra); and when the election is had in conjunction with a general city election, the affirmative of the proposition must receive a majority of all the votes cast at such general election (State v. Bechel, 22 Nebr. 158, 34 N. W. 342). Under the statutes of Washington a city council is without authority to submit to the voters, for their ratification, any ordinance granting a franchise to a street railroad company. Property rights of company without authority.— However, even if an existing street railroad company is without legal right to operate its road, it has a property right in the rails, ties, poles, and wires which even the legislature cannot take away. Jersey City v. North Jersey St. R. Co., 74 N. J. L. 774, 67 Atl. 113 [affirming 73 N. J. L. 175, 63 Atl. 906]; Cleveland Electric R. Co. v. Cleveland, 204 U. S. 116, 27 S. A city is entitled to relief in equity against the maintenance of a public nuisance by a street railroad company, growing out of its failure to comply with the conditions annexed to its use of the streets. Springfield v. Robberson Ave. R. Co., 69 Mo. App. 514. However, a municipality can abate a street railroad as a nuisance in its streets only by due process of law; and threats of tearing or of an abutting owner who suffers special injury or inconvenience;[24] but when all the consents required by statute have been obtained, the right of a company, duly incorporated, to build is complete.[25]

C. Consent of Local Authorities — 1. Municipal — a. General Necessity of. As the legislature possesses the dominant control of streets and highways, it may, unless there is a constitutional restriction,[26] authorize a street railroad company to occupy and use the streets of a municipality without obtaining the consent of the authorities thereof;[27] while on the other hand it may lawfully require such consent.[28] Such consent is required by statute in some jurisdictions,[29] and when so required is one of the conditions precedent which must be up the tracks by the municipality gives the railroad company a right of action against the municipality by injunction. Mill Creek Valley St. R. Co. v. Carthage, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 216, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 833.

Application of statutes. — These statutes have been held to apply to a street surface railroad company (Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Syracuse, etc., R. Co., 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 456, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 1035 [affirmed in 43 N. Y. App. Div. 621, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 386]) which runs it cars over an extensive route, receives its own passengers, and collects its own fares, although its cars for a part of the distance run over the tracks of another company (Colonial City Traction Co. v. Kingston City R. Co., 153 N. Y. 540, 47 N. E. 810 [affirming 15 N. Y. App. Div. 195, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 732]); and to a company whose road is to be constructed part of the way underground, and at other points cross over streets at right angles on bridges resting on piers built on private lands (People's Rapid Transit Co. v. Dash, 125 N. Y. 93, 26 N. E. 25, 10 L. R. A. 728 [affirming 57 Hun 587, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 849]); but not to apply to a railroad corporation, whose lines extend beyond municipal control, and whose corporate existence, authority, and powers are not derived from or subject to municipal regulations (Birmingham Min. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 92 Ala. 187, 200, 9 So. 320, 12 L. R. A. 830). The granting of permits by the highway commissioner of New York city to elevated and surface railroad companies to connect their tracks by a viaduct so as to enable each to operate its cars on the tracks of the other does not create a new franchise, so as to require the consent thereto of the municipal assembly, under sections 72–74 of the charter of the city of New York. Gallagher v. Keating, 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 131, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 366 [affirmed in 40 N. Y. Suppl. 81, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 1132].

Under some statutes municipal consent must be obtained in addition to the consent of the county or township through which the road will pass. Woodbridge Tp. v. Raritan Traction Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 169, 53 Atl. 175.

As a dock department has no authority to give consent or grant franchises, the consent of such department to the construction of a street railroad is a mere license, and not a franchise. Central Crosstown R. Co. v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 16 N. Y. App. Div. 229, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 752.

Particular charters and statutes construed. — A corporation possessing power to construct a street railroad without municipal consent, subject to the right of the legislature to alter its charter, must comply with subsequent constitutional and statutory provisions requiring such consent (Williamsport v. Williamsport Pass. R. Co., 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 39); and, while the provisions of a charter requiring consent may be repealed by a subsequent enactment or supplement dispensing with consent (Jersey City v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co., 20 N. J. Eq. 360; Philadelphia v. Lombard, etc., R. Co., 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 14); they are still in force in regard to an extension of route authorized by a second supplement which is silent as to consent (Philadelphia v. Lombard, etc., R. Co., supra).

The consent of a village incorporated for general purposes is within the meaning of a statute requiring the consent of the corporate authorities to the construction of a street railroad (Electric St. R. Co. v. North Bend, 70 Ohio St. 46, 70 N. E. 949; Harrison v. Mt. Auburn Cable R. Co., 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 805, 17 Cinc. L. Bul. 265); but the consent of a village incorporated for the special purpose of being a road district is not (Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Cumminsville, 14 Ohio St. 523).

complied with before the company acquires any rights in the street,[30] or any standing in court to assert its rights.[31] A company which does not possess the requisite consent may be enjoined from entering upon and using the streets.[32]

b. Proceedings to Obtain and Sufficiency. As, in giving its consent, the municipality is exercising a delegated power, there must be a substantial compliance with the terms and conditions prescribed by statute,[33] such as those relating to public notice and hearing before giving consent,[34] and the giving of consent by an ordinance approved by the mayor, and not by resolution.[35] Municipal consent cannot create or enlarge corporate franchises,[36] and, when given before the incorporation of the company, is, at least against competing companies,

An adjournment of the hearing may be had (Shepard v. East Orange, 69 N. J. L. 133, 53 Atl. 1047; Hutchinson v. Belmar, 61 N. J. L. 443, 39 Atl. 643); but where the adjournment is not to a day certain, the governing body cannot again consider the application at a subsequent meeting without a publication of their intent to do so (Hough v. Smith, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 363, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 451).

Incidental changes in the character of a street railroad may be authorized without the public notice and hearing required on the original installation of the system. Specht v. Central Pass. R. A change in membership of the committee of the council, after notice has been given and hearings had, does not necessitate a new notice, or render the action of the council on the report of the committee invalid. Seccomb v. Wurster, 83 Fed. 856.

Conditions precedent to publication of notice.— The authorities will not be enjoined from publishing the required notice of a public hearing before the common council on the question of such consent because the company has not obtained a certificate of convenience and necessity from the state railroad commissioners. McWilliams v. Jewett, 14 Misc. (N. Y.) 491, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 620.

35. Specht v. Central Pass. R. Co., 76 N. J. L. 631, 72 Atl. 356 [affirming (Sup. 1908) 68 Atl. 785]; West Jersey Traction Co. v. Camden Bd. of Public Works, 58 N. J. L. 536, 37 Atl. 578.

Implied consent.— It has been held that an implied consent may be given by acquiescence (North Jersey St. R. Co. v. Newark St., etc., Com'rs, 73 N. J. Eq. 106, 67 Atl. 691); and under charters simply authorizing the municipal authorities to disapprove of the construction of the road, within a specified time, consent will be inferred, unless the city manifests its disapproval within the named time in clear and certain terms (Faust v. Third St. Pass. R. Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 164). However, the approval or disapproval by a city council of the occupancy of a street by a street railroad company cannot be inferred until proof of notice of intention to use the street is given to the city authorities. Hestonville, etc., R. Co. v. Schuylkill River Pass. R. Co., 6 Phila. (Pa.) 141.

36. Almand v. Atlanta Consol. St. R. Co., inoperative after incorporation.[37] However, after incorporation, there is no limit to the time within which application may be made and consent given except that provided by statute.[38] In some jurisdictions the consent must embody a location of the tracks and other matters pertaining thereto,[39] while in others this is left to subsequent regulation.[40] Such conditions as are not illegal or improper may be attached,[41] and the consent of the local authorities of one municipality is sufficient to authorize the construction of the road therein, without proof of the consent of other municipalities through which the road will pass.[42] The consent may be renewed from time to time, and is valid until revoked.[43]

2. Authorities Other Than Municipal.[44] Under statutes requiring the consent of the local authorities having control and supervision of highways, outside of an incorporated town, city, or village, or of parks not under the control of city authorities, to the use of such a highway or park by a street railroad company, such consent must be obtained to render the occupation of such a highway or park by such a company lawful,[45] and where a highway is occupied without the required consent

Consent of all authorities required.— In Pennsylvania a street railroad company has no right to enter on the highways of a township which has given its consent to its construction until consent to the construction of the line has been obtained from all the townships and boroughs through which its route lies, as shown by its application for incorporation and its charter. State and territorial roads within township.— Under Mich. Comp. Laws (1897), § 6466, declaring that any company may construct and maintain a street railroad in and along streets and highways of any township upon such terms as may be agreed on by the local authorities may sue for damage to the highway.[46] These officials may attach to their consent such conditions as they are authorized to impose,[47] but they have no right to impose conditions outside the limits of their authority.[48] To be valid, the consent must be given to a corporation authorized to receive it;[49] and if given by a board, must be given by the members thereof acting as a board at a regularly convened meeting, and not as individuals,[50] and must be untainted with fraud, extortion, or bribery.[51] The consent, when given, is operative only within the

the company and the township board, the authority conferred will include state and territorial roads within the territory of a township, for whose condition the township is responsible. Smith v. Jackson, etc., Traction Co., 137 Mich. 20, 100 N. W. 121.

Stipulation as to fare.—A condition attached to the consent of the authorities of one town, requiring the company to transport passengers for a given fare within its own territory, is not void, as conflicting with the right of highway authorities in other towns or villages to prescribe conditions for the construction of the road within their limits. D. Consent of Abutting Owners — 1. Necessity and Nature — a. In General. The owner of lands abutting on a private street has no such inherent right or interest in the lands included within the street as to make his consent necessary for the construction and operation of a street railroad upon the street.[53] While the legislature may, unless there are constitutional restraints,[54] authorize the construction and operation of a street railroad without the consent of abutting owners, it may, however, lawfully require such consents,[55] and this legislative power has been exercised in some jurisdictions by requiring the written consent of a certain proportion of the abutting owners as a condition precedent to the right of the company to construct its road,[56] or as a condition precedent to the vesting of jurisdiction in the municipal authorities to grant a franchise or permit to use the streets.[57] This right or privilege of the abutting owner is wholly statu-

In Illinois, by virtue of the express provisions of Laws (1903), p. 285, a city may grant the use of its streets for street railroad purposes without the petition or consent of abutting owners. Venner v. Chicago City R. Co., 236 Ill. 349, 86 N. E. 266. As to the necessity of obtaining the consent of abutting owners prior to the passage of this statute see Hunt v. Chicago Horse, etc., R. The purpose of these statutes is to impose a check and limitation upon the exercise of the arbitrary power possessed by municipalities (Hamilton, etc., Traction Co. v. Parish, 67 Ohio St. 181, 65 N. E. 1011; Roberts v. Easton, 19 Ohio St. 78), and to protect the property of an individual citizen against injury without his personal consent or the consent of a majority of the abutting property-owners (Colonial City Traction Co. v. Kingston City R. tory, and its nature, scope, and extent depends entirely upon the statute which confers it.[58] These statutes do not confer any new rights in the street upon the abutting owner, nor is the right to consent a property right;[59] it is a personal right or option which the property-owner may exercise or withhold without compulsion from other owners, public authorities, or the courts.[60] However, the consent when granted is more than a mere license, as it confers valuable rights,[61] and it is limited to the purpose for which it was given;[62] and, when acted upon, it is not revocable at the will of the person who gave it, or his succes-

Additional tracks, switches, and turnouts. — It has been held that a city may, without the consent of abutting owners, grant the right to construct a temporary track (Mathers v. Cincinnati, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 521, 3 Cinc. L. Bul. 709), or a turnout as a switch (Specht v. Central Pass. R. Co., 76 N. J. L. 631, 72 Atl. 356 [reversing (Sup. 1898) 68 Atl. 785]); while, on the other hand, the right has been denied as to the subsequent addition of a second track (Roberts v. Easton, 19 Ohio St. 78); and it has been held that a street railroad company, which has located and constructed its railroad, with all the switches and turnouts which were then deemed necessary, cannot afterward construct additional switches, or extend those already constructed, without first obtaining the written consent of a majority of the property holders abutting on that part of the street where such additional switches are proposed to be constructed (Harner v. Columbus St. R. Co., 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 807, 29 Cinc. L. Bul. 387).

Distinguished from other consents. — The consent of the abutting owners and the consent of the municipal authorities are separate and distinct matters; neither one is a substitute for the other, nor is the giving of one conclusive evidence that the other has been given. sors,[63] nor is its efficacy impaired by a subsequent alienation of the property,[64] nor can it be made the basis of further municipal action on a second application.[65]

b. Number Required. In some jurisdictions, the computation of the number of abutting owners whose consent must be obtained is based on the number of frontage feet which their properties occupy, while in others it is based on the value of the property. In the former, each street is considered by itself;[66] in the latter, while the value of only that part of the property which the road will pass is to be considered,[67] the value of an entire tract which is bounded on the street over which the road will operate is to be counted, although the tract extends back to another street,[68] or, strictly speaking, fronts on another street.[69]

Ratification.—A written consent given by an unauthorized person, which is afterward ratified by the owner and adopted as his own act, but not until after the passage of an ordinance granting permission to construct the road or extension, cannot be considered "the written consent of the owner," within the meaning of a statute. Estoppel.—An abutting owner may estop himself to object by acquiescing in the construction of the road (Tilton v. New Orleans City R. Co., 35 La. Ann. 1062); but the fact that he has given his consent to the construction of the road does not affect his right to object to construction in front of another property on the street which he afterward buys (Taylor v. Erie City Pass R. Co., 186 Pa. St. 120, 40 Atl. 316). Likewise a vendee of property is not estopped by a consent given by the vendor, but not recorded until after the conveyance of the property. Adee v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 65 N. Y. App. Div. 529, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 992 [affirmed in 173 N. Y. 580, 65 N. E. 1113]. The street railroad company is not estopped by the pending of proceedings, under N. Y. Railroad Law, § 94, for the appointment of commissioners to determine whether the road should be constructed and operated, from showing that since the commencement of such proceedings it has obtained a sufficient number of consents. Adee v. Nassau Electric R. Co., supra.

street on which his property abuts.[96] The burden of showing that the required number of consents has not been obtained is on the party asserting that claim.[97]

E. Location of Route and Tracks.[98] The location of a street railroad upon a street or highway presupposes a prior grant of the right to locate, and consists of a definite appropriation of a particular portion of the street or highway for street railroad use.[99] A street railroad company is entitled to establish its road on the streets specified or described generally in the legislative or municipal grant,[1] and while it is confined within the limits specified in the grant,[2] these

98. Determination as to location by boards and tribunals see supra, II, C, 2.

99. Central R., etc., Co.'s Appeal, 67 Conn. 197, 35 Atl. 32.

An "original grant of location," within the meaning of a statute preserving and confirming to street railroad companies locations previously granted, is the first location granted to it in a city or town; it is synonymous with "original location" and "grant of original location," but is to be distinguished from an extension or alteration of location. Springfield v. Springfield St. R. Co., 182 Mass. 41, 47, 64 N. E. 577.

Action of board of directors.— The location of a railroad by a street railroad company whose charter does not itself fully prescribe the precise location is the definite and final selection and demarcation of its route by its board of directors. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Stevens, 81 Conn. 16, 69 Atl. 1052. See also Fayetteville St. R. Co. v. Aberdeen, etc., R. Co., 142 N. C. 423, 55 S. E. 345.

Necessity of formal location.—Where the consent of a city council and the street committee to the prosecution of the work of extending a street railroad has been given, and it appears that the only location for the line is the extension of a track which has been laid for years on the same street, the company will not be restrained from carrying on the work because the street committee has not in its official capacity defined and authorized the exact location of the tracks. Trenton v. Trenton Horse R. Co., (N. J. Ch. 1890) 19 Atl. 263.

Filing of map.— In some jurisdictions, before the company may begin the construction of the road or an extension, it is required by statute to file a map and profile of the route (Matter of Rochester Electric R. Co., 57 Hun (N. Y.) 56, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 379 [affirmed in 123 N. Y. 351, 25 N. E. 381]); but under such statute, a slight variance between the map and description filed is immaterial (Mercer County Traction Co. v. United New Jersey R., etc., Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 588, 54 Atl. 819). And in North Carolina, while a map and profile must be filed, the information contained therein is for the benefit of the corporation commission and is not required as a part of a correct and completed location. Fayetteville St. R. Co. v. Aberdeen, etc., R. Co., 142 N. C. 423, 55 S. E. 345.

The location of route and tracks are two distinct matters, and the fact that the company may not have acquired an exclusive right to its route does not preclude it from applying to the proper authorities for the location of its tracks. Theberath v. Newark, 57 N. J. L. 309, 30 Atl. 528.

An ordinance renewing the rights, privileges, and franchises conferred by a previous ordinance covers the right to construct new lines as well as the right to maintain and operate existing lines. Akron v. Northern Ohio Traction, etc., Co., 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 536. However, the right to operate street railroads in Chicago under the municipal ordinance confirmed by Illinois acts of Feb. 14, 1859, and Fed. 6, 1865, until the city should exercise its reserved right to purchase, is confined to the streets designated in the original ordinance and in such other later ordinances as indicate a purpose to preserve the permission of the original ordinance, and does not, by reason of the unity of the street railway system, extend to the rights of occupancy acquired in other streets, so as to continue such rights until purchase is made of the entire system. Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400, 26 S. Ct. 427, 50 L. ed. 801 [reversing 132 Fed. 848].

Y. 588, 19 N. E. 645 (holding further that where the location of the main route is different from that prescribed, the location of branch lines fail with it); Curvin v. Rochester R. Co., 78 Hun (N. Y.) 555, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 521; Philadelphia v. Citizens' Pass. R. Co., 151 Pa. St. 128, 24 Atl. 1099 [affirming 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 16] (holding that a grant conferring power to lay tracks on any street "between" two named streets does not authorize the laying of tracks on one of the streets named); Burns v. Multnomah R. Co., 15 Fed. 177, 8 Sawy. 543. And see Canastota Knife Co. v. Newington Tramway Co., 69 Conn. 146, 36 Atl. 1107 (holding that a franchise for the construction of a street railroad in a certain highway, as a part of a route particularly specified, does not authorize the use of the highway as part of a route other than that specified, by con-limits will be liberally construed to uphold the action of the company, and it is sufficient if they are substantially observed.[3] Where the authority to locate is general in its terms, or specifically confers an option on the company as to which streets it will use or what termini it will establish, such option must be exercised within a reasonable time,[4] and only once,[5] as the principle that a power once exercised is exhausted forbids a street railroad company which has once made a location of its road to change it, unless statutory provision is made to the contrary.[6] necting it with other lines); Browne v. Turner, 174 Mass. 150, 54 N. E. 510.

Center of street.—Where the authority of the street railroad company is to put down its tracks in the center or middle of the street, they must be so laid or as near thereto as is possible. Finch v. Riverside, etc., R. Co., 87 Cal. 597, 25 Pac. 765; Philadelphia v. Continental Pass. R. Co., 11 Phila. (Pa.) 315. But the location of part of the railroad upon open ground formed by the intersection of five streets, aside from the center of the designated street, and slightly deflecting therefrom to the railroad company's private property, is not a nuisance per se, in the absence of evidence that such location interferes with public travel. Com. v. Wilkes Barre, etc., R. Co., 127 Pa. St. 278, 17 Atl. 996. Compare Kennedy v. Detroit R. Co., 108 Mich. 390, 66 N. W. 495.

Construction of prohibition.—The provisions in the charter of a street railroad company, authorizing it to lay its tracks upon and over such streets in the city, except in certain of the streets therein mentioned, as shall from time to time be fixed and determined by the city council, are not to be construed to prevent the company from laying its tracks "across" one of the excepted streets (State v. Newport St. R. Co., 16 R. I. 533, 18 Atl. 161); nor does a prohibition in a charter against locating a terminus in a certain street prevent the company from locating part of its route on that street (McFarland v. Orange, etc., R. Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 17).

Continuous route.—A street railroad company does not fulfil the requirement of the act under which it is incorporated that it shall have a continuous route, by locating a portion of its route on a street already occupied by the tracks of another company over which tracks it has no right to run. Altoona Belt Line St. R. Co. v. City Pass. R. Co., 209 Pa. St. 280, 58 Atl. 477. However, an ordinance establishing a street railroad route is not invalid as establishing more than one route, in that it provides that the railroad may fork at a certain point, the two branches proceeding in different directions. Aydelott v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. 11, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 486.

3. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Stevens, 81 Conn. 16, 69 Atl. 1052; Jordan v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 564. And see Atty.-Gen. v. Metropolitan R. Co., 125 Mass. 515, 28 Am. Rep. 264.

4. Junction Pass. R. Co. v. Williamsport Pass. R. Co., 154 Pa. St. 116, 26 Atl. 295.

Grants to two companies.—Where there are indefinite grants to two different companies, the prior right will attach to that company which first locates its line, and, in the absence of statutory regulation to the contrary, the first location belongs to that company which first defines and marks its route and adopts the same for its permanent location by authoritative corporate action. Fayetteville St. R. Co. v. Aberdeen, etc., R. Co., 142 N. C. 423, 55 S. E. 345.

5. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Stevens, 81 Conn. 16, 69 Atl. 1052; City R. Co. v. Citizens' St. R. Co., (Ind. 1898) 52 N. E. 157; Brooklyn Cent. R. Co. v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 358; McCruden v. Rochester R. Co., 5 Misc. (N. Y.) 59, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 114 [affirmed in 28 N. Y. Suppl. 1135]; Fort Worth St. R. Co. v. Rosedale St. R. Co., 68 Tex. 169, 4 S. W. 534.

The rule is otherwise where the grant clearly contemplates the building of more than one railroad or lines of railroad. West Jersey Traction Co. v. Camden Horse R. Co., 52 N. J. Eq. 452, 29 Atl. 333. Thus, under a charter authorizing the construction of a road between several termini, the building of a road between two of the designated points does not exhaust the power to construct other lines of railroad connecting the other termini. Thomas v. Milledgeville R. Co., 99 Ga. 714, 27 S. E. 756.

Subsequent designation by city.—An ordinance providing that a street railroad company might construct and operate a railroad on such streets as might thereafter be designated by the company in a written acceptance of the ordinance, and on such other streets as the city council might from time to time designate by resolution, has been construed as meaning that the provision that the company should designate the streets applied only to the minimum of mileage required by the ordinance, and that a subsequent resolution permitting the railroad to occupy another street did not amount to the granting of a new franchise. Thurston v. Huston, 123 Iowa 157, 98 N. W. 637.

6. Central R., etc., Co.'s Appeal, 67 Conn. 197, 35 Atl. 32; West Jersey Traction Co. v. Camden Horse R. Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 163, 35 Atl. 49 [affirming in part 52 N. J. Eq. 452, 29 Atl. 333].

In Massachusetts locations granted to street railroad companies do not constitute contracts, or at least are not of such a nature that the legislature cannot modify, change, or annul them without impairing the obligations of contracts. Springfield v. Springfield St. R. Co., 182 Mass. 41, 64 N. E. 577.

An act extending the time for the completion of a road, on its routes as finally adopted,

It has been held that where the power to locate the route of a street railroad through a township is conferred by statute upon the supervisor and highway commissioner, courts have no power to review their action.[7]

F. Right to Construct Additional Tracks, Branches, and Switches. The grant of a right to construct a street railroad carries with it, as an incident, the right to construct such turnouts and switches as public convenience and the successful operation of the road render necessary,[8] subject to the right of the municipality to be consulted about the situation of the side tracks, turnouts, and switches.[9] In some instances authority to construct branches, switches, and side tracks is expressly given;[10] but, regardless of whether the right is derived from express or implied authority, it must not be exercised in such a way as to arbitrarily and does not give the company any right to lay its tracks where it had no right to lay them previously. In re Metropolitan Transit Co., 1 N. Y. Suppl. 114.

Consent of local authorities.—In some jurisdictions a change of location can only be made with the consent of the municipal or other authorities having charge of the streets (Snouffer v. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 287, 92 N. W. 79; Shamokin v. Shamokin, etc., R. Co., 196 Pa. St. 166, 46 Atl. 382), but a change is lawful when the city by its tacit acceptance ratifies the act of its agents (Collins v. Carbondale Traction Co., 5 Pa. Dist. 18), and all the formalities necessary in making an original grant need not be observed in authorizing a slight change in location (Manuel v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 139 Mich. 106, 102 N. W. 633).

In New York a change or alteration of route is only permitted for the improvement of the lines, and not to extend it for the purpose of increasing revenues or to change its direction (Webb v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 52 Misc. 46, 102 N. Y. Suppl. 762); and where a corporation secures a right to construct a street railroad along a certain route by obtaining the consent of abutting property-owners, it cannot change its route, and construct its road over the land of a private person (Matter of South Beach R. Co., 53 Hun 131, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 172 [affirmed in 119 N. Y. 141, 23 N. E. 486]).

An extension of a street railroad need not necessarily continue its track in the same general direction as the original track as it may include a line at right angles with an already existing line. Belle v. Glenville, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 181.

7. Silsby v. Lyle, 117 Mich. 327, 75 N. W. 886.

8. Romer v. St. Paul City R. Co., 75 Minn. 211, 77 N. W. 825, 74 Am. St. Rep. 455; Concord v. Concord Horse R. Co., 65 N. H. 30, 18 Atl. 87; Wilkes-Barre v. Coalville Pass. R. Co., 8 Kulp (Pa.) 298 (holding that where the road is single track, the grant impliedly authorizes the construction of such switches as are necessary to the running of cars in both directions); Wyoming v. Wilkes-Barre, etc., R. Co., 8 Kulp (Pa.) 113; Houston v. Houston Belt, etc., R. Co., 84 Tex. 581, 19 S. W. 786. Compare Atty.-Gen. v. Derry, etc., R. Co., 71 N. H. 513, 53 Atl. 443, holding that a special act authorizing the construction of an electric railroad through four towns contemplates a rural railroad only, and does not permit of the establishment of a local system in each town.

Spur track to storage buildings.—A company which possesses express authority to erect such buildings as may be necessary and expedient for its purposes may lay a spur or side-track for the purpose of conveying its cars to a building erected for the sheltering and storage of cars (Stroudsburg v. Stroudsburg Pass. R. Co., 2 Pa. Dist. 35, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 124. And see Brooklyn Heights R. Co. v. Brooklyn, 152 N. Y. 244, 46 N. E. 509 [affirming 18 N. Y. Suppl. 876]); and it is proper for a city, under power conferred by its charter to control the streets, to allow a street railroad company to construct a proper spur track, connecting the main line with a point at which the company expects to build a power house and shed to store its cars when not in use (Powell v. Macon, etc., R. Co., 92 Ga. 209, 17 S. E. 1027).

Compulsory removal of turnout.—The power of a city, under its authority to adopt reasonable rules for the regulation of street railroads, to compel the removal of a turnout whenever the public interests demand it, must be exercised reasonably and impartially. Ct. 273 (holding that power given in a street railroad charter to construct "such branches as may be necessary to connect them with any other railway or railways within the said city" is to be confined in its operations to the railways in existence at the time the charter was granted); Eastern Wisconsin R., etc., Co. v. Hackett, 135 Wis. 464, 115 N. W. 376, 1136, 1139 (holding that where a street railroad company possesses, under the ordinances unnecessarily obstruct public travel, and interfere with the rights of abutting owners.[11] A double-track line cannot be constructed under authority to lay a single track;[12] but authority conferred on a company to lay a double track cannot of a city, the power to maintain necessary switches and turnouts, and a single or double track along a street and a bridge, the city after constructing a new bridge in place of the existing one, and entering into a contract with it, cannot lawfully adopt a resolution providing that no diagonal switch or connecting track shall be placed on the new bridge or approaches thereto, and thereby prevent the street railroad company from restoring the connections existing prior to the construction of the new bridge).

Express authority to construct a turnout is limited to the construction of a short line of track, having connection by means of switches with the main line, and does not permit of the construction of an additional track connecting the original track with a two-track system, and which together make one continuous, unbroken double track line. Bridgewater v. Beaver Valley Traction Co., 214 Pa. St. 343, 63 Atl. 796. And where a street railroad company, under the guise of building switches, is attempting to double track its railroad, a court of equity may determine what switches and turnouts the company is entitled to. Willis v. Erie City Pass. R. Co., 188 Pa. St. 56, 41 Atl. 307. Likewise, only such sidings and turnouts as are provided for in the grant can be constructed, and any extension of those provided for, or connection between them is illegal. Cape May, etc., R. Co. v. Cape May, 58 N. J. L. 565, 34 Atl. 397. However, where the number or length of turnouts is not limited, the company is not obliged to exercise all its power at once but may extend the length of a turnout as traffic increases (Taylor v. Erie City Pass. R. Co., 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 292), or construct such additional turnouts as increase of travel renders necessary (Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Detroit Bd. of Public Works, 126 Mich. 554, 85 N. W. 1072).

Connection of different lines.—Where the company has contracted with the city to connect all its lines of road, it must be held that the city conferred the right to do so, as the contract, to be binding, must be mutual (Houghton County St. R. Co. v. Laurium, 135 Mich. 614, 98 N. W. 393); and a street car company which has acquired the lines of street railroad of two other companies, when authorized by its charter, and with the consent of the authorities of the city in which its lines of railroad are situated, may connect the lines acquired from the other companies by laying its tracks on such portions of a street of the city as may be necessary to make the connection (Brown v. Atlanta R., etc., Co., 113 Ga. 462, 39 S. E. 71). However, a branch built as a distinct line under a separate grant is not an extension or part of another line by reason of the fact that it uses the tracks of that line for a short distance, nor is it made so by a subsequent resolution of the city council which provides simply for a change of connection with the main line (Cleveland Electric R. Co. v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 204 U. S. 116, 27 S. Ct. 202, 51 L. ed. 399 [affirming 137 Fed. 111]); and an ordinance granting a street railroad company the right to put in necessary switches, and providing that the whole length of road authorized by the ordinance shall be deemed one route, with a fare not exceeding five cents, does not authorize such company to put in a Y to make a turning point for another company (Rapid R. Co. v. Mt. Clemens, 118 Mich. 133, 76 N. W. 318).

Under the Pennsylvania statute giving a street railroad company the right to construct extensions on complying with certain prescribed requirements, it is a condition precedent to the extension that the company file in the office of the secretary of state an exemplification of the record of the adoption of the extension (Coatesville, etc., R. Co. v. West Chester R. Co., 206 Pa. St. 40, 55 Atl. 844); but when this requirement has been fulfilled, the company is immediately invested with an exclusive privilege in the streets covered by such extension; and a further provision that no right to actually construct the extension shall vest until after thirty days from the filing of such exemplification, merely postpones the right to construct the extension for such thirty days (Com. v. Uwchlan St. R. Co., 203 Pa. St. 608, 53 Atl. 513). However, a company which has no right to build its charter route cannot construct an extension. Hannum v. Media, etc., R. Co., 200 Pa. St. 44, 49 Atl. 789.

A general power in the charter of a street railroad company to construct a line of street railroad authorizes the construction of double tracks on the streets of a municipality, provided the authorities of such municipality consent that the streets may be so used. Brown v. Atlanta R., etc., Co., 113 Ga. 462, 39 S. E. 71.

Under extension proceedings, a street railroad company, whose articles contemplate a single, connected road, carrying from end to end for a single fare, cannot construct an independent line, not connected with its original line. McClean v. Westchester Electric R. Co., 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 383, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 556. But the company is not restricted to a mere prolongation of existing branches, but may extend its operation in any direction or upon any street or avenue, provided the additional lines are to be operated in connection with existing lines. Bohmer v. Haffen, 35 N. Y. App. Div. 381, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 1030 [affirming 22 Misc. 565, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 857].

be taken away by subsequent action on the part of the city,[13] nor is it exhausted by the laying and using of a single track.[14]

G. Right to Erect Buildings. A street railroad company possesses a right to erect buildings in or over the street only when such right is expressly granted;[15] or at least only when it is shown that the rights to use the street which have been expressly granted cannot be used unless the buildings in question are placed in the street.[16]

H. Rights in and Use of Bridges. As a bridge is a part of the highway which passes over it,[17] the authority of a street railroad company to use certain streets and highways includes the right to construct and operate or extend its road on bridges connecting with and constituting portions of such streets and highways.[18] This right is subject to the power of the proper authorities to repair and improve the bridge;[19] and the company may be required to pay for the additional cost of improvement and maintenance caused by its operation on the bridge, especially where the bridge was constructed and is owned and maintained by another private or quasi-public corporation.[20] When the bridge is owned by the Third track.— Express authority is necessary for the construction of a third track. Auchincloss v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 69 N. Y. App. Div. 63, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 534 [reversing 29 Misc. 151, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 792].

W. 969, holding that in the absence of any showing as to whether the city or the street railroad company built the bridge or as to how the company acquired the right to use it, the presumption is that the bridge is a part of the public street, and that the company's user of it is based on its franchise right to use the street itself.

Occupation of bridge by two companies.— A statute providing that no extension or branch shall be constructed on any street or highway on which a track is laid or authorized by any existing charter does not prevent a city from authorizing a company formed thereunder to cross a city bridge over which another railroad has laid its tracks. Hestonville, etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Forty-second St., etc., R. Co., 4 Pa. Dist. 343.

The use of a toll bridge as a part of a public highway, in the operation of a street railroad, in such manner and on such terms as will protect the right of the bridge company and the traveling public, by a corporation chartered for such purpose, is one reasonably consistent with the purpose for which the bridge was erected. Pittsburg, etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Point Bridge Co., 165 Pa. St. 37, 30 Atl. 511, 26 L. R. A. 323. The directors of a bridge company have power to authorize the use of the bridge by a street railroad company to any extent that will not interfere with its use by the general public in other proper ways (Hasson v. Venango Bridge Co., 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 383), and where a bridge company, which is authorized to construct a bridge for ordinary travel, induces street car companies subsequently organized to spend large sums in building to and over the said bridge, and then allows the use of the bridge for a great length of time, it cannot deny the right to such use upon payment of a reasonable toll (Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. South Covington, etc., St. R. township or county, the consent of the proper township or county officials must be obtained, regardless of whether it is situated within or without a city;[21] but the officials have no power to arbitrarily withhold their consent.[22] It has been held that the consent of a canal company owning a bridge over its canal must be obtained before a street railroad may be constructed thereon.[23]

I. Rights in and Use of Turnpikes and Toll-Roads. Under statutes and charters varying somewhat in their terms, it has been held that turnpike, plank-road, or toll-road companies have power to contract with street railroad companies as to the use of such turnpikes, plank-roads, or toll-roads by the street railroad companies,[24] and that such contracts, when made, are binding and govern the rights of the parties.[25] In the absence of such contract, a street railroad company may obtain the use of such a road by condemnation proceedings,[26] except where the legislature has conferred an exclusive privilege on the turnpike company.[27] However, the right of a street railroad company to construct and

Where the bridge is of insufficient strength, or of insufficient capacity to accommodate the general public travel and the cars of the street railroad company, and cannot be strengthened or enlarged so as to do so, the officials should refuse consent to use the bridge (Elmer v. Cumberland County, 57 N. Contract or option.—Specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of a right of way may be had where there has been a substantial compliance with conditions precedent (St. Louis, etc., Electric R. Co. v. Van Hoorebeke, 191 Ill. 633, 61 N. Co., 204 Pa. St. 488, 54 Atl. 322). An option to purchase is not kept alive after its expiration by the company laying its tracks and

VI. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF ABUTTING OWNERS.

A. In General.[34] Although the use of a street, when duly authorized, for the construction and operation of a street railroad does not impose an additional servitude on the fee so as to entitle abutting owners to compensation or damages for such use,[35] except to the extent that they suffer special injury thereby,[36] the abutting property-owners have equal rights with the street railroad company to the use of the street,[37] and have a right to insist that the road be not constructed and operated in such a manner as to constitute a public nuisance and cause them special injury.[38] The distinction is not always clearly drawn, but most of the cases involving the rights of abutting property-owners turn upon the point whether the street railroad company has lawful authority to do the acts complained of. Thus an abutting owner has no ground of complaint where the street railroad is constructed and operated in a manner which is lawfully authorized;[39] and conversely, where he suffers a present and special injury,[40] he has a right to insist holding the land by force. Jackson v. Slate Belt Electric St. R. Co., 7 North. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 286.

Ejectment.—Where, at the time an owner of land subject to a deed of trust attempted to dedicate a portion thereof to the public as a street, and contracted with a street railroad company to grant a right of way over the same, the deed of trust was duly registered, and the holder of the deed notified the company of his rights in the land, a purchaser on foreclosure of the deed is not estopped from maintaining ejectment against the company to recover the land. Right of access.— The abutting owner has a right to occupy the street in front of his property to take away or deliver persons or goods, and may occupy the street for such a length of time as is reasonable for such purposes, even though the passage of street cars is thereby impeded (Raferty v. Central Traction Co., 147 Pa. St. 579, 23 Atl. 884, 30 Am. St. Rep. 763 [followed in Patterson v. Pittston, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 530]; but he has no right, as against a street railroad company, to load his drays in the street in a manner prohibited by law (Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co., 95 Ky. 50, 23 S. W. 592, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 417, 44 Am. St. Rep. 203), nor can he rightfully complain of the temporary interference with the access to his property which results from the tearing up of a street for the construction of the street railroad (Glidden v. Cincinatti, 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 423, 30 Cinc. L. Bul. 213). Whether a street cable railroad is an obstruction to access to abutting property is a question of fact, depending on the width of the street and the effect on its grade (Harrison v. Mt. Auburn Cable R. Co., 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 805, 17 Cinc. L. Bul. 265), and where the access of an abutting owner is wrongfully interfered with, he may enjoin the unauthorized construction over only so much of the highway as is necessary for convenient access by him or his customers (Beekman v. Third Ave. R. Co., 13 N. Y. App. Div. 279, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 174).

And see Hogencamp v. Paterson Horse R. Co., 17 N. J. Eq. 83.

Carriage of freight.— The use of streets by a street railroad company for the transportation of freight is consistent with the purposes for which streets exist, and an abutting property-owner is not entitled to have such use enjoined, or declared a nuisance. Aycock v. San Antonio Brewing Assoc. (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 63 S. W. 953.

And see Clark v. Second St., etc., Pass. R. Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 259, holding that an owner of adjacent property cannot restrain a street railroad company from constructing its track, which intersects, on the curve from one street to another, an extreme point of the sidewalk, as such sidewalk of a public street is in no proper sense private property.

that the company does not act without or in excess of the lawful authority conferred.[41]

B. Actions. The attitude of the courts seems to be against the granting of injunctions against the construction of street railroads at the suits of abutting owners, for while such abutting owners are entitled to have all their property rights fully protected, those rights should be accorded, if possible, by a remedy which will not render impossible the construction and operation of necessary facilities for public travel,[42] and where the construction of a street railroad is authorized, an abutting owner who sustains special injury thereby usually has an adequate remedy at law for compensation or damages, and cannot maintain an injunction to restrain the construction and operation of the road or a portion thereof,[43] except to prevent irreparable injury.[44] In some jurisdictions an attempt

A taxpayer who is not an abutter, nor financially affected by the operation of a street railroad in a street, cannot maintain a suit to enjoin such use. Buning v. Cincinnati St. R. Co., 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 323, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 178.

Use of tracks of another company.— The objection that a statute prescribing the length of a new street railroad which must be in actual operation in order to justify the use of the existing tracks of another railroad company has not been complied with cannot be urged by an abutting property-owner. Sanfleet v. Toledo, 10 Ohio Cir. Ct. 460, 8 Ohio Cir. Dec. 711.

In New York an abutting owner must own at least a part of the fee of the street, before he has any standing to complain. Kennedy v. Mineola, etc., Traction Co., 77 N. Y. App. Div. 484, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 937 [affirmed in 178 N. Y. 508, 71 N. E. 102].

R. Co., 40 N. Y. App. Div. 242, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 7.

Where the requisite permission of townships and boroughs has not been obtained, contractors for the construction of the road are trespassers, in digging a trench in a street of a borough, so that an abutting owner is not liable for filling it up. Wheeler v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 194 Pa. St. 539, 45 Atl. 338.

Use of electricity.— The operation of an electric street railroad by the overhead wire system is not so dangerous to those who reside or do business on a public street as to authorize its restraint by injunction (Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co., 95 Ky. 50, 23 S. W. 592, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 417, 44 Am. St. Rep. 203); and where a municipality authorizes a street railroad company to equip its line for operation by electricity, and the company constructs such electric system, and as an essential part of such system erects on the margin of the sidewalk a pole in front of an owner's premises, on which it places wires for the operation of its cars, the company cannot be compelled by such owner to remove such pole, where it is not dangerous to persons or property and does not impede access to his premises (Mt. Adams, etc., R. Co. v. Winslow, 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 425, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 240).

Additional tracks.— Injunctive relief may be had against the construction of an additional track which would constitute an unnecessary interference with the use of the street and a special injury to the property rights of abutters. Dooly Block v. Salt Lake Rapid Transit Co., 9 Utah 31, 33 Pac. 229, 24 L. R. A. 610.

Changing grade of street.— In the absence of express authority, a street railroad company has no right to change the existing grade of a street, and when it does so, it is liable for the damages suffered by an abutting owner (Stritesky v. Cedar Rapids, 98 Iowa 373, 67 N. W. 271), and the fact that the abutting property was above the grade of the street does not preclude the owner from recovering damages where the grade is lowered (Brady v. Kansas City Cable R. Co., 111 Mo. 329, 19 S. W. 953). When, however, the street in question has had no grade, and the ordinance granting the right to construct the road fixes the official grade of the street, the company is not liable for damages sustained by its cutting down the street, in a proper manner, to grade. Interstate Consol. Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Early, 46 Kan. 197, 26 Pac. 422.

Use of care in construction of road.—An abutting property-owner cannot recover for injuries by vibration, caused by running cars, so long as the company uses ordinary care in the construction of the road. 44. Taphorn v. Marietta, etc., R. Co., 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 842, 8 Am. L. Rec. 421, holding that where a municipality has agreed that a street railroad company may lay its track in a certain street, an injunction re-to construct and operate a street railroad on a public highway, without authority of law, or in an unlawful manner, is considered a public nuisance, which any abutting owner who suffers a special injury may sue to enjoin,[45] although such straining it will not be granted at the instance of abutting property-owners, unless access to their property is thereby injured.

Hardship to public will not defeat right.— The fact that enjoining the construction of a street railroad, at the suit of an individual owner of property abutting on the street affected, will work a hardship upon the public will not suffice to defeat such owner of his legal right. W. 215 (holding that inasmuch as prior to Laws (1901), c. 465, making the statutes relative to eminent domain applicable to street and electric railroads, a street railroad company had no right to condemn land in the streets of a city, the remedy of the owners of land abutting on a street in which a street railroad was unlawfully being operated was to restrain the operation, and not by instituting condemnation proceedings); Linden Land Co. v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 107 Wis. 493, 83 N. W. 851.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," §§ 87–90.

No special injury.—An owner of premises abutting upon a city street, who has no interest in the street except an easement of passage, cannot, in the entire absence of proof of any special damage whatever, maintain an action to restrain a nuisance consisting in the unauthorized operation of surface cars through the street. Black v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 32 N. Y. App. Div. 468, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 312.

Parties.—Where an action for an injunction by an abutting owner is authorized, the city is not a proper party to the action. Beekman v. Third Ave. R. Co., 13 N. Y. App. Div. 279, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 174 [affirmed in 153 N. Y. 144, 47 N. E. 277]. To a suit by property-owners on a street to prevent the construction of a street railroad thereon, other property-owners who consented to such building are not necessary parties. Thompson v. Schenectady R. Co., 124 Fed. 274. One or more property-owners may sue in behalf of others situated on the same street, but property-owners on different streets cannot unite in the same action. Glidden v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 423, 30 Cinc. L. Bul. 213.

Abatement of part of road.—Where, in a suit by owners of property abutting on a street against a street railroad company, the relief sought is the abatement of such use of the street, and the removal of all tracks, etc., but it appears that the operation of the road is lawful save in so far as it cast an additional burden on the fee because of the operation of an interurban service, plaintiffs are entitled to an abatement of such additional servitude, notwithstanding they have prayed for an abatement of the road in its entirety. Younkin v. Milwaukee Light, etc., Co., 120 Wis. 477, 98 N. W. 215.

Modification of decree.—Where a street railroad company has been enjoined from operating its road because the necessary consent of the county court has not been obtained, it is not error to refuse to modify the decree so as to allow the company permission to use one side of the street, instead of the center, since such modification would be granting the company a right which it could obtain only from the county court. Swinhart v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 207 Mo. 423, 105 S. W. 1043.

After an elevated road has been constructed, whether or not a court of equity will interfere by injunction to restrain the wrongful operation of a third track rests in the sound judicial discretion of the court, and in determining whether it should grant an injunction, or should leave the party to his remedy at law, the actual injury sustained by plaintiff, together with the resulting injury to defendant and to the public at large, should be considered, and if the loss to the public by the removal of the road would be greatly in excess of the damage accruing to plaintiff by the continuance thereof, the court has power to refuse an injunction on condition owner has no title to any part of the street itself.[46] In other jurisdictions, however, this right is denied on the ground that an adequate remedy at law exists and that the authority of the company to act can only be challenged by the state or municipality,[47] an exception being made in the case of irreparable injury;[48] and an abutting owner can invoke equity jurisdiction only in order to protect his property from direct injury by the use of the street for railroad purposes.[49] Before he can become entitled to an injunction, the abutting owner must present grounds for equitable relief by showing some threatened injury,[50] and the company will not be enjoined from merely accepting an invalid ordinance and franchise.[51] In suits, either at law or in equity, by abutting owners, the petition of payment of damages for the injuries sustained. Knoth v. Manhattan R. Co., 109 N. Y. App. Div. 802, 96 N. Y. Suppl. 844 [affirmed in 187 N. Y. 243, 79 N. E. 1015].

46. Kennedy v. Mineola, etc., Traction Co., 178 N. Y. 508, 71 N. E. 102 (holding, however, that one is not entitled to an injunction, as an abutter on the street, against the company, for having built in violation of law, where the action is based on his ownership in fee, and on trespass against his rights as such owner); Henning v. Hudson Valley R. Co., 90 N. Y. App. Div. 492, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 1111; Merriman v. Utica Belt Line St. R. Co., 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 269, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 1049.

47. Doane v. Lake St. El. R. Co., 165 Ill. 510, 46 N. E. 520, 56 Am. St. Rep. 265, 36 L. R. A. 97 [affirming 60 Ill. App. 471]; Newell v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 35 Minn. 112, 27 N. W. 839, 59 Am. Rep. 303; Budd v. Camden Horse R. Co., 61 N. J. Eq. 543, 48 Atl. 1028 [affirmed in 63 N. J. Eq. 804, 52 Atl. 1130], holding that a trolley railway track, laid in accordance with the direction of a special ordinance, will not be enjoined from operation because its location works inconvenience and injury to the abutting owners, since, if the municipality has so unreasonably appropriated the divisions of the highway as to injure abutting owners, their remedy is not in equity, but in the courts of law which supervise inferior jurisdictions.

Certiorari.— The fact that a street railroad company, with which a board of freeholders has made a contract to construct a street railroad on a public highway under its control, has no franchise, apart from such contract, does not give a taxpayer owning land on the highway a standing to attack the contract in certiorari proceedings. Randolph v. Union County, 63 N. J. L. 155, 41 Atl. 960.

An abutting owner owning title to the center of the street cannot maintain a suit in equity to compel the removal of a street railroad switch from the street, on the theory that it was so laid without authority, since, if such were the fact, he has an adequate remedy at law by ejectment. St. Columba's Church v. North Jersey St. R. Co., (N. J. Ch. 1908) 70 Atl. 692. A bill for such a removal should allege whether complainant owned the title to the middle of the street, so as to indicate whether the suit was based on complainant's property rights in the street or on his rights as an abutting owner. It is where the right of a party is "to demand compensation," as distinguished from "a legal right to recover damages," that a court of equity will entertain jurisdiction. Co., 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 383, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 556, holding that an abutting owner may enjoin the unauthorized construction of an electric railroad in a street without showing that the benefits from the railroad will not offset the injuries.

When injunction will not issue.— Where the property of complainant does not abut that street or part of the street on which it is claimed the company has not authority to lay tracks, the injunction will not issue (Linden Land Co. v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 107 Wis. 493, 83 N. W. 851); nor will an injunction issue where the complainants are individuals who have filed articles of association as a step toward securing a street railroad charter, but who have obtained no charter (Andel v. Duquesne St. R. Co., 219 Pa. St. 635, 69 Atl. 278 [followed in Lovejoy v. Duquesne St. R. Co., 219 Pa. St. 639, 69 Atl. 280]).

The mere grant of consent by the local authorities to the building and operation of a street railroad does not constitute irreparable injury to abutting property, so as to entitle an owner to maintain a suit to enjoin such action. Seccomb v. Wurster, 83 Fed. 856.

51. Linden Land Co. v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 107 Wis. 493, 83 N. W. 851.

must allege that the company is proceeding without proper authority, in order to render evidence of lack of authority admissible; [52] but when such lack of authority is alleged, the burden is on the company to show its authority,[53] which burden is sustained, however, by showing estoppel or consent to construction by plaintiff.[54] It has been held that, in an action at law, a single recovery may be had for the entire damages, present and future.[55]

VII. CONSTRUCTION, MAINTENANCE, AND EQUIPMENT.*

A. Duty to Construct. Mere authority to construct a street railroad is permissive only, and imposes no positive obligation on the company to do so; [56] and a company which has built a part of its road cannot be prevented from abandoning the enterprise.[57] But the rule is otherwise where by the terms of its contract with the municipality the company is obliged to complete the road; [58] and if it builds at all, it has no right to stop when it has finished a part, and operate its cars on that part, but is bound to go on and complete the road in its entirety; [59]

52. Huff v. St. Joseph R., etc., Co., 213 Mo. 495, 111 S. W. 1145.

Allegations of fact required.— The facts which would negative the public use for which the charter and franchise were granted, and clearly show that the use intended is private, should be specifically averred before a company can be prohibited by law from exercising the rights granted it by the proper authorities; an allegation that the road is solely for private use is insufficient as it is merely a conclusion of the pleader. Mangan v. Texas Transp. Co., 18 Tex. Civ. App. 478, 44 S. W. 998.

Variance.— In an action against a street railroad company for trespass in the use of the highway, evidence that the company had not complied with the statutory requirements to enable it to build a road is inadmissible, where failure of the company to comply with the requirements of the statute was not alleged in the complaint. Kennedy v. Mineola, etc., Traction Co., 178 N. Y. 508, 71 N. E. 102 [affirming 77 N. Y. App. Div. 484, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 937]. So where, in an action to restrain a street car company from laying its tracks in a public street, the only ground alleged is that the constitutional and statutory consents have not been obtained, plaintiffs are not entitled to recover upon the theory that defendant is a trespasser upon land owned by them in the street. Benedict v. Seventh Ward R. Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 111, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 406.

53. Hannum v. Media, etc., Electric R. Co., 200 Pa. St. 44, 49 Atl. 789.

The grant to the street railroad company must be introduced in evidence by it. Bathgate v. North Jersey St. R. Co., 75 N. J. L. 763, 70 Atl. 132.

Evidence admissible in behalf of defendant. — Where plaintiffs contend that the county authorities have not given their consent for the railway company to appropriate that part of the public road of the county between two cities, and that therefore it will be impossible for the company to construct and operate a continuous road as contemplated, evidence that, if there should be any difficulty in obtaining the consent of the county authorities the company could and would acquire the property contiguous to such public road is admissible. Mere silence for a period of two years does not constitute an estoppel (Swinhart v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 207 Mo. 423, 105 S. W. 1043), nor does acquiescence in the use of two tracks of an elevated road for seventeen years affect the right of an abutting owner to object to a third track (Roosevelt v. New York El. R. Co., 58 Misc. (N. Y.) 463, 111 N. Y. Suppl. 440).

55. Doane v. Lake St. El. R. Co., 165 Ill. 510, 46 N. E. 520, 56 Am. St. Rep. 265, 36 L. R. A. 97 [affirming 60 Ill. App. 471].

and being bound by law so to do, it may be compelled by an appropriate remedy either by mandamus or injunction.[60]

B. Time For Construction. Statutory or charter provisions frequently limit the time within which a street railroad company must begin or complete the construction of its road;[61] and, where the time is so limited, any construction of the road after the expiration of the specified time is unauthorized,[62] and may be enjoined.[63] Furthermore under some of the statutes a failure to begin or respect to its duty to complete and operate a railroad extension begun by the former under a plan approved by the municipal authorities, and the failure of the original company to complete the extension within the time limited by the municipality affords no excuse to such successor for not subsequently proceeding to complete it. Application of statutory provisions.— A statute requiring a street railroad company to do certain work within a specified time after the filing of articles of association under penalty of forfeiture is not applicable to previous franchises, where its effect would be to impair the contracts (Dern v. Salt Lake City R. Co., 19 Utah 46, 56 Pac. 556); and a general statute requiring railroads to be completed within a certain number of years has no application to a street railroad completed within the time allowed by the act creating it (Bohmer v. Haffen, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 565, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 857 [affirmed in 35 N. Y. App. Div. 381, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 1030 (affirmed in 161 N. Y. 390, 55 N. E. 1047)]).

Particular statutory and charter provisions construed.— The word "paving" as used in an ordinance, requiring a street railroad company to construct its tracks and begin running its cars within a specified time after its approval, but providing that the requirement shall not apply if the streets are not "graded and paved," and in such case extending the time to comply therewith, does not include macadamizing. United R., etc., Co. v. Hayes, 92 Md. 490, 48 Atl. 364. N. Y. Laws (1860), c. 461, granted to a street railroad company permission to lay several lines of road on certain streets and plank roads, and provided that the company should complete the tracks upon said streets by Oct. 1, 1861, or as soon thereafter as said streets should be opened and paved, and upon the plank roads whenever the consent of the plank road companies should have been obtained. It was held that the company, having accepted the franchise, was obliged to lay its tracks by the date named on so much of said streets as had then been opened and paved, although they had not been so opened and paved for the entire extent of the proposed lines. People v. Broadway R. Co., 126 N. Y. 29, 26 N. E. 961 [reversing 56 Hun 45, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 6].

"Completion," as used in such a grant or franchise, means such a completion as will render the road suitable for the use contemplated by the parties to the contract. Hamtramck Tp. v. Rapid R. Co., 122 Mich. 472, 81 N. W. 337.

63. Dusenberry v. New York, etc., Traction Co., 46 N. Y. App. Div. 267, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 420.

Temporary injunction.— While legal proceedings are necessary to declare a forfeiture of a street railroad company's franchise for a failure to comply with a condition that, if the road shall not be completed and in running order within a fixed time, the franchise shall cease and determine, yet, where no excuse is shown for a failure to carry out the condition, the construction and operation will be temporarily enjoined, pending an action to permanently enjoin for a failure to carry out said condition. Dusenberry v. New York, etc., Traction Co., 46 N. Y. App. Div. 267, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 420. And where a street railroad company does not begin to construct its road until after its franchise therefor has expired, a taxpayer and owner of property abutting on the line of the proposed road under process of construction is entitled to a continuance of a temporary injunction during the pendency of an action to perpetually enjoin the construction of the road. Manton v. South Shore Traction Co., 121 N. Y. App. Div. 410, 106 N. Y. Suppl. 82 [reversing 104 N. Y. Suppl. 612].

complete the road within the time limited works a forfeiture of the corporate powers and franchises of the company,[64] or of the bond required to be deposited as a guarantee of the performance of the obligation.[65] The time may be fixed by statute, or the duty to fix it may be devolved upon commissioners.[66] The time specified is not irrevocable, but may be extended by the power that fixed it,[67] except that when fixed by statute a different period cannot be fixed in the grant of the franchise.[68] Time unavoidably consumed by legal proceedings, or by the delay or interference of the public authorities, or otherwise, should not be deemed a part of, but should be added to, the time limit.[69]

C. Plan and Mode of Construction — 1. In General. Unless limited by its charter or by ordinance, a street railroad company may lay its tracks on such part of the street as it deems best,[70] and may begin the construction of the road in any part of the route, whether it be the charter route or an extension.[71] And unless required to do so by statute, charter, or ordinance, a street railroad company is not bound to lay any particular style of rail,[72] but it must lay down the rail it has adopted in such manner as to do as little injury to the street, and to offer as little hindrance to public travel thereon, as is reasonably possible.[73] Moreover, it is not to be held to the style of rail first adopted, but may, unless pro-

Power of commissioners.— Under N. Y. Laws (1875), c. 606, § 6, requiring the commissioners to fix and determine the time within which a street railroad shall be constructed and ready for operation, the commissioners, in providing that the work shall be completed at a specified date, but that time unavoidably consumed by legal proceedings, or by the delay or interference of the public authorities, or otherwise, shall not be deemed a part of, but shall be added to, the time limited, do not exceed their power, and such provision fixes and determines the time within the meaning of the act. In re Kings County El. Injunction.— Where the failure to complete a street railway within the time limited for its construction is due to an injunction being granted against the company by a competitor, the right to put down the line is not lost by the expiration of the period limited. Blocki v. People, 220 Ill. 444, 77 N. E. 172 [affirming 123 Ill. App. 369]; State v. Cockrem, 25 La. But the failure of a street railroad company to build a certain part of its line within the time limited is not excused by the pendency of an injunction restraining it from building a small and relatively unimportant connecting line situated several miles from the portion of the road in question, in the absence of anything to show that the portion of the road covered by the injunction was connected with the rest of the system in such a way as to make it undesirable or inconvenient to build one without the other. Blocki v. People, 229 Ill. 444, 77 N. E. 172.

"Any cause beyond the control of the company," within the meaning of such a provision of the commissioners, comprehends delay caused by interference of the courts, or other acts of interference over which the company has no control, but not delay caused by a failure to obtain consent of property-owners or the right of way through private property, where it has the legal right to force its way. 2. Municipal Regulations.[77] A municipality has authority to regulate, by reasonable ordinance, the manner in which a street railroad company, empowered by its charter to occupy the streets of the municipality, shall lay its tracks in the public streets, although the charter of the company is silent on the subject.[78] Likewise where the consent and approval of the municipal authorities is necessary to the construction of a street railroad, they may, as a condition to the granting of such consent or approval, impose such reasonable terms and conditions as the public interests may require,[79] such as to where and how the tracks shall be laid,[80] the poles located and wires strung,[81] the kind of rails, etc.[82] Conditions which the municipal authorities in such cases have no power to impose are void;[83] but when they

A statute exempting a street railroad company from making repairs does not exempt it from the duty to comply with orders made by the selectmen of the town in granting the location, and which require the company, in case a certain character of rail, pavement, etc., does not appear satisfactory, to cause another rail, and pavement between the rails, to be substituted therefor. Under the Connecticut street railway act of 1893, the only "modifications" which the municipal authorities can lawfully make in the plan submitted to them by a street railway company are such as legitimately affect one or more of the particulars which the statute requires to be specified in the plan. State v. New York, etc., R. Co., 81 Conn. 645, 71 Atl. 942; Fair Haven, etc., R. Co. v. New Haven, 74 Conn. 102, 49 Atl. 863; Central R., etc., Co.'s Appeal, 67 Conn. 197, are reasonable, and otherwise valid, the discretion of the municipal authorities in this regard cannot be controlled by the courts.[84] Where a street railroad company authorized to construct tracks in the streets of a municipality departs from the plan adopted by the municipality for the construction thereof, the municipality may compel conformity to the plan adopted,[85] or it may ratify the variation by a formal change of plan [86] or by informal acquiescence.[87]

3. MODE OF CONSTRUCTION AS CONSTITUTING NUISANCE. A street railroad built by authority of law is not a nuisance, and therefore can work no legal injury, either to the public or to any private individual.[88] It may occasion inconvenience or loss, or may depreciate the value of property, and render its enjoyment incommodious and almost impossible, yet this is "damnum absque injuria." [89] But the construction and maintenance of a street railroad along the public streets of a city, without authority of law, or in an unlawful manner, is a nuisance; [90] and although a public one, it may be restrained by injunction, at the suit of a private person who suffers a special injury thereby.[91] So a street railroad which is allowed to become so out of repair that the tracks project above the surface of the street thereby becomes a nuisance for which the owners are liable in damages.[92]

4. REMEDIES.[93] Where a street railroad company fails to comply with the conditions and restrictions imposed upon it by statute or ordinance as to the plan and mode of construction, it may be compelled to do so by mandamus [94] or by a suit in equity.[95] So a municipality may sue to enjoin a street railroad company

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," §§ 99, 100.

Reason for rule.— When the state gives up a portion of one of its highways to a particular use, without providing that what had been the duty of the municipality as to it shall continue, such duty devolves upon the party acquiring the right to use it, and a street railroad company, given the right to use such portion of a street as is needed for its tracks, in taking charge of it, is charged with the duty of properly maintaining it. It is because the municipality, as the agent of the state, has charge of the streets, that it must maintain and keep them in proper repair, and when the state permits this charge, as to a portion of a street, to be committed to another, it must be understood as imposing upon such party the responsibility that formerly rested upon the municipality, unless in the grant, or in the municipal consent thereto, of the right to use a portion of the street, such responsibility is expressly withheld and its imposition continued upon the municipality. Reading v. United Traction Co., 215 Pa. St. 250, 64 Atl. 446.

Some cases seem to assert a contrary doctrine.— Thus it has been said that a traction company is under no common-law obligation to keep in repair that portion of the streets upon which its right of way exists; and that such a duty, if it exists, must be imposed by statute or in some other way; but that such a company is under the obligation so to construct and maintain its tracks as that, by the exercise of reasonable care and supervision with respect to them, no danger will be occasioned to the public in its use of the highway along which the tracks are laid. seems to be in some doubt.[4] No duty to repair ordinarily rests upon it as to the remainder of the street, but where as to that any such duty exists, it must be by virtue of statutory imposition or of contract,[5] the precise terms of either necessarily furnishing the only measure for its extent.[6]

b. Duty to Pave. The duty on the part of a street railroad company to pave the street, or to pay the cost of paving, or a portion thereof, must be imposed by legislative authority, or exist by virtue of some contract, express or implied;[7] and a charter or statute imposing this liability should use language admitting of no ambiguity.[8] The powers of the municipality in this respect are derived solely from statute, and it can exercise only such powers as are there conferred,[9] and in the manner prescribed, when the mode of exercise is prescribed in the statute.[10] Municipal ordinances requiring street railroad companies to pave the streets occupied by them relate only to such companies as are required by their several charters to do this,[11] or to such as are amenable to conditions precedent imposed, in pursuance of acts of the legislature, by the municipality as the price and consideration of its consent to their occupation of the streets.[12] No company

In Georgia the act of Oct. 10, 1891 (Acts (1890–1891), vol. 2, p. 457), is the only source from which the mayor and general council of Atlanta can derive power to charge a street railroad company with a portion of the original cost of paving, when it lays its tracks upon a street which has already been thus improved; and where the mayor and general council grant such a railroad company permission to lay its tracks on a paved street, expressly stipulating that no charge for paving shall be made against the company, the general council cannot thereafter, under the provisions of the act above cited, enforce, by execution or otherwise, a claim against the company for any portion of the original cost of laying the paving in that street. Atlanta Consol. St. R. Co. v. Atlanta, 111 Ga. 255, 36 S. E. 667.

The words "cost of paving" are generally understood to include not only the actual cost of the paving itself, but as well the cost of the work necessarily preliminary to the laying of the same (Danville St. R., etc., Co. v. Mater, 116 Ill. App. 519), unless the contract entered into between the city and the company otherwise provides (Fort St., etc., R. Co. v. Schneider, 15 Mich. 74). A general provision requiring the company to lay and maintain paving is not limited to paving only, and does not exclude the cost of subsequent maintenance. Worcester v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co., 192 Mass. 106, 78 N. E. 222.

Charter provisions held not to impose duty of paving.— A provision in the charter of a street railroad company that, on completion of the road, the company should be subject to city ordinances "regulating the running of passenger railway cars" (Philadelphia v. Empire Pass. R. Co., 177 Pa. St. 382, 35 Atl. 721; Philadelphia v. Empire Pass. R. Co., 5 Pa. Dist. 53, 18 Pa. Co. St. 371, 35 Atl. 718), does not authorize the city to impose upon the company the cost of street paving.

Where the charter of a street railroad company fixes the company's liability for street paving, the city cannot enlarge (Kansas City v. Corrigan, 86 Mo. 67; Philadelphia v. Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co., 177 Pa. St. 379, 35 Atl. 720), or diminish it (Kent v. Binghamton, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 1, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 198 [affirmed in 88 N. Y. App. Div. 617, 84 N. Y. When the mode prescribed to charge the company for paving is by assessment, the city may only proceed in that mode. Oskaloosa St. R., etc., Co. v. Oskaloosa, 99 Iowa 496, 68 N. W. 808.

Such conditions must be reasonable, and whether they are reasonable is a question of fact, and the burden of proof is upon him can be compelled to pay for paving in a street not occupied by it, or beyond a line drawn from the corner of curb lines of the street it occupies.[13] Where the subject of paving has become a matter of contract, no additional burdens in this respect can be imposed by subsequent legislation, since this would be impairing the obligation of a contract.[14] But no question can arise as to the impairment of the obligation of a contract in such a case, where the company accepts all of its corporate powers subject to the reserved power of the state to modify its charter and to impose additional burdens upon the enjoyment of its franchise.[15]

2. Extent of Duty — a. In General. The common-law duty of a street railroad company to keep the portion of the street or highway occupied by it in repair extends, it has been held, at least to the ends of its cross ties.[16] This duty may be enlarged by proper statutory or municipal authority or by a contract voluntarily entered into, and the extent of the company's liability then depends upon the terms of the statute, ordinance, or contract.[17] Thus the company may be required to keep in constant repair that portion of the street occupied by it,[18] or

The omission, in a charter of a street railroad company, of a provision compelling it to pave streets along its tracks, does not vest in it or its successors a perpetual exemption from such obligation subsequently imposed by the legislature. Weed v. Binghamton, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 208, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 105.

The term "vested rights" relates to property rights only, and does not embrace an immunity or exemption created by an omission, in a statute incorporating a street surface railroad company, to impose a liability on it to pave parts of streets occupied by its tracks. Weed v. Binghamton, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 208, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 105.

Under Tex. Const. (1895) art. 1, § 17, providing that no irrevocable or uncontrollable grant of special immunities shall be made, but all privileges and franchises created under the authority of the legislature shall be subject to its control, the legislature had the right to amend a city charter so that a street car company became liable for the cost of paving six inches on each side of its tracks in addition to its former liability of paving between the rails, and such law was not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract in reference to a prior mortgage executed while the constitutional provision was in force. St. 571, 52 Atl. 106.

Maintenance and repair of "junction" of surfaces laid by city and company.— Under a statute requiring a street railroad company to maintain and keep in good condition "the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation," the word "junction" does not only mean the mere point or place where the two surfaces meet, but the company has to maintain the even contour of the road at the junction of the two surfaces. Norwich v. Norwich Electric Tramways Co., 91 L. T. Rep. N. S. 558.

18. See cases cited infra, this note.

Requirement construed.— It has been held that a charter provision imposing on the company the duty of keeping in repair "that portion of the street which they use and occupy" requires the company to keep in repair not only the portion of the street occupied by it, but the whole street from curb to curb. the space in and about the rails,[19] or the space between its tracks and a certain distance outside thereof.[20]

b. Extension. A municipal ordinance requiring any street railroad company operating a line within the corporate limits to keep in good repair all that part of the street occupied by its tracks includes additional tracks to be laid, as well as those already laid and under operation.[21] Where an extension is authorized by an amendment to the original act, such extension is subject to the obligations contained in such original act as amended, including the duty to pave, although the amendatory statute, permitting the construction of the tracks in the street in question, contains no provision for repair or paving;[22] but where the extension is authorized by a subsequent independent act, which does not refer to or incorporate into itself the terms of the original act, and which makes no provision as

Pass. R. Co., 169 Pa. St. 269, 33 Atl. 126; Philadelphia v. Ridge Ave. Pass. R. Co., 143 Pa. St. 444, 22 Atl. 695; Thirteenth St., etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. Moreover such a provision imposes on the company the duty of cleansing the street from the dirt and filth casually accumulating (Pittsburgh, etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Birmingham, 51 Pa. St. 41), and of removing a deposit of rocks and débris caused by an extraordinary rain (Pittsburg, etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Pittsburg, 80 Pa. St. 72).

Where two street railroad companies occupying intersecting streets are liable for the paving of the streets occupied by them, they are each liable for one half the cost of the paving of the intersection, without regard to the width of the streets. Space occupied by road-bed.—Under a statute requiring a street railroad company to pave its road-bed the outside of the track cannot be considered, on the ground that the road is also benefited by the adjacent pavement. Shreveport v. Shreveport Belt R. Co., 107 La. 785, 32 So. 189.

19. See cases cited infra, this note.

The words "in and about the rails" include so much of the street surface outside the rails as is disturbed in laying the track (New York v. Second Ave. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 572, 7 N. E. 905, 55 Am. Rep. 839; McMahon v. Second Ave. R. Co., 75 N. Y. 231), and in the absence of evidence as to how far that space extends, it is a reasonable presumption that it includes as much as one foot outside the rails (McMahon v. Second Ave. R. Co., supra).

Space between double tracks.—It has been held that an act requiring a street railroad company to keep in repair that part of the street lying between the rails does not render the company liable for the expense of repairing the street between double tracks. Robbins v. Omnibus R. Co., 32 Cal. 472; St. Louis v. St. Louis R. Co., 50 Mo. 94. But a covenant by a railroad company to pave and keep in repair the streets "in and about" a railroad which has double tracks binds the company to pave and keep in repair the space between the double tracks. Extension by consolidated company.— Where a city agrees with two street railroad companies that they shall pay one fifth of the net cost of laying new pavement between the rails, the contract to apply to any extensions of the tracks, and be binding on their successors and any company with which they might be consolidated, such contract embraces a subsequent extension of the tracks made by a company formed by the consolidation of the two companies contracting. to paving, the extension is not required to be paved.[23] Where a grant of a franchise for an extension can only be made subject to the restrictions of the municipal charter as to repairing and paving the streets, such extension is subject to the charter regulation, although the existing line is operated under a legislative act exempting it from paving.[24] Although the charter of a company does not require it to pave, the right to extend its line may be granted on condition that it shall pave a certain portion of the street, not only that embraced within the extension, but also that originally occupied.[25]

c. Bridges. The local authorities may require, as a condition of their consent to the use of a bridge by a street railroad company, that the company shall bear the expense of strengthening the bridge, assume the cost of repairs and alterations, and pay a reasonable rental.[26] Under a charter or ordinance requiring a street railroad company to keep the streets occupied by it in repair, and making no reference to bridges as distinguished from streets, bridges are regarded as parts of said streets.[27] But where an ordinance grants the right to lay street railroad tracks on the streets and bridges of a city, but in terms imposes the duty to repair only as to streets, it has been held that the company is not bound to keep in repair bridges crossed by its tracks.[28] The duty to keep in repair a bridge crossed by the company's tracks extends to the whole bridge, and not merely to that portion immediately under or between the tracks.[29]

d. Change of Grade. It has been held that if a street railroad company once lays its tracks flush with the level of the street, it is not bound afterward to adapt them to the grade of the street as it may change or be worn away by traffic,[30] unless the language of the company's charter, or the ordinances to which the company is subject, admit of this duty being imposed upon it.[31] But the better rule seems to be that the common-law duty of a street railroad company to keep its tracks in such a condition of repair that the street will be safe for travel requires it to conform its tracks to all changes of grade.[32] Ordinarily the duty to conform its tracks to changes of grade is expressly imposed upon street railroad companies,[33] and where such a requirement exists, it is implied that it will change the grade of its road-bed whenever that is necessary to adjust the track to the changed

A street railroad company, bound to "repair" or "keep in repair" a specified portion of the streets occupied by its tracks, is not thereby bound to pave,[36] except in so far as such work comes within the category of repairs.[37] The duty of making repairs requires them to be made in such manner and with such materials as will correspond with the general condition of the street at the time the repairs are needed;[38] so that while a company may not be compelled to tear up a sound pavement of antiquated style, and replace it with a different and better one, whenever the municipality may direct,[39] yet, if a necessity for repairing the pavement within the right of way arises after an improved pavement has been laid in the remainder of the street by the municipality, the company may be required reasonably to conform with such improved pavement.[40] Municipal ordinances

There is a marked distinction between the duties of repaving and of repairing. Repair may involve partial reconstruction, but the repairs contemplated are those necessitated by the ordinary use of the pavement, and not those which amount to reconstruction made necessary by the voluntary act of the city in carrying out municipal improvements. Reading v. Reading, etc., St. R. Co., 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 202. To repair a street is to restore it to a former condition or state, after decay or partial destruction. State v. Jacksonville St. R. Co., 29 Fla. 590, 10 So. 590), but simply to repair cannot be construed into a duty to place the pavement primarily (State v. Jacksonville St. R. which require a street railroad company to repair and repave the streets on which its line is operated do not impose on it the duty to pave the unpaved part of a street on which it runs.[41] But under a charter requiring a company to keep the street at all times "well paved and in good order," it has been held that the company is bound to lay pavement where none previously existed.[42] So a statute or ordinance providing that a street railroad company shall bear the entire expense of necessary "paving, repaving, and repairing" on any street on which its line is laid, renders it liable for the expense of paving such a street for the first time.[43] But where the language of the charter or ordinance necessarily relates to the improvement of streets occupied by the company, the municipality cannot recover for paving a street on which the railroad is not built until afterward.[44]

b. Determination of. The necessity of repairing or repaving the streets is to be determined by the municipal authorities.[45] Such authorities may also

The duty to repair is a continuous one; it is for all time. It is not intended to perpetuate in each street of the city the style of pavement in use upon it when the railway company entered upon it with its tracks. Detroit v. Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co., 90 Mich. 646, 51 N. W. 688; Reading v. United Traction Co., 202 Pa. St. 571, 52 Atl. 106; Philadelphia v. Hestonville, etc., R. Co., 177 Pa. St. 371, 35 Atl. 718; Philadelphia v. Ridge Ave. Pass. R. Co., 143 Pa. St. 444, 22 Atl. 695. The duties specified in the charters are imposed with reference to the changes and improved methods of street paving which experience may sanction as superior to and more economical than old methods. In other words the company is bound to keep pace with the progress of the age in which it continues to exercise its corporate functions. The city authorities have just as much right to require it to repave at its own expense with a new, better, and more expensive kind of pavement as they have to cause other streets to be repaved, in like manner, at the public expense. Philadelphia v. Ridge Ave. Pass. R. Co., 143 Pa. St. 444, 22 Atl. 695. And see New York v. Harlem Bridge, etc., R. Co., 186 N. Y. 304, 78 N. E. 1072 [affirming 100 N. Y. App. Div. 257, 91 N. Y. When the city repairs a street with a new and improved pavement, the company's duty to repair relates to the pavement so put in place, and requires that the repairs shall be adapted to the style of pavement which the city has placed, or caused to be placed, upon the particular street upon which repairs are necessary. Philadelphia v. Hestonville, etc., R. Co., 177 Pa. St. 371, 35 Atl. 718. The burdensome character of that duty, in that it involves large expense to the company, does not affect the obligation to perform it. Detroit v. Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co., 90 Mich. 646, 51 N. Particular ordinance construed.— The language that "the grantees named and their successors shall at all times keep the road bed of said railway in good repair and upon a level with the street" necessarily implies that there shall be a road-bed, which may be repaired, and which may be kept upon a level with the street, before the duty to do these things can arise. Until the duty becomes fixed, in the nature of things there can be no obligation. The duty of the company has relation only to a track or road-bed existing at the time the city may deem it necessary to raise or lower the street — to an existing track or road-bed on the street to be raised or lowered — and not to a place where, under the ordinance, these at some future time might be placed. determine the material with which the paving shall be done,[46] and may require it to be done with a better and more expensive material than was in use when the company was chartered,[47] unless restricted by some legislative provision,[48] or unless to so require will result in the violation of a contract with the company.[49] The discretion of these authorities to determine what repairs or improvements are necessary is not an arbitrary one,[50] but must be reasonably exercised,[51] and whether it has been so exercised is for the jury to determine under all the facts.[52] In some jurisdictions a street railroad company is authorized, on being denied by the municipal authorities the right to lay a particular kind of pavement, to appeal from such order to the railroad commissioners.[53]

by the city, the corresponding duty to pave necessarily terminates.[55] So where the company has the right to remove its tracks from the street, it can in such event be in no way liable for the improvement of such street.[56] But the fact that the occupation of the street is terminable on certain contingencies, which may happen at any time, and at the will of the municipality, does not destroy the obligation of the company to keep in repair so long as it occupies the street.[57]

b. Release From Duty. The legislature which imposes the duty to pave may also relieve from it.[58] But the municipal authorities have no power to exempt a street railroad company, by contract or otherwise, from the provisions of a statute requiring all street surface railroads to pave certain portions of streets occupied by their tracks,[59] unless the authorizing act leaves paving regulations to the discretion of the municipal authorities.[60] Where a municipality, under a provision of its charter providing for the repair and repaving of streets, contracts with a paving company to pave a street occupied by a street railroad, and to maintain such pavement for a specified time, the railroad company to be assessed a certain proportion of the cost, the latter is thereby relieved from its charter liability to keep the street in repair.[61] In some jurisdictions street railroad companies are made subject to a mileage tax in lieu of the duty to repair.[62]

Obligation voluntarily assumed not tax.—The obligation to repair or pave voluntarily assumed by a street railroad company in consideration of the privilege of using the public streets is not a tax, and is not annulled by a statute declaring that the franchise tax therein provided shall be in lieu of all other franchise taxes assessable against

"under the supervision of the local authorities," and "whenever required by them to do so," the fact that the municipal authorities have not notified or requested the company to make repairs in a pavement does not relieve the company from liability for injuries caused by defects therein,[63] as such a provision does not apply to repairs, but rather to a paving of the street.[64] Where notice to repave between its tracks is given a street railroad company, with a definite statement as to the extent of repavement required, the municipality is not concluded by an erroneous calculation of the area to be paved.[65]

6. Estoppel to Deny Liability. Where a street railroad company is liable to be assessed for improvements, it will be estopped to deny its liability therefor if it stands by and sees the improvements made without objection;[66] but where the company is not subject to assessment for improvements, it is not so estopped, although the municipal council has by ordinance attempted to make it liable therefor.[67] Nor does the fact that a street railroad company complies with an order requiring it to lay and maintain paving within certain streets according to certain specifications estop it to thereafter contest the legality of the order.[68]

7. Repairs by Municipality and Recovery Against Company — a. In General. Assumpsit more appropriate than debt.— District of Columbia v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 1 Mackey (D. C.) 361.

Municipality surety for company.— The municipality is responsible for the condition of its streets, and in this respect stands in the relation of surety for the performance by the company of its obligation to keep its road in good condition; hence, on default being made, it may at once do the work and sue in assumpsit for the cost on the same theory that a surety, who discharges the defaulted obligation of his principal, does so upon his implied request and upon his implied promise to indemnify. District and the company cannot complain of any injury to its business by reason of the stoppage of its traffic, if such stoppage was reasonably necessary to the work.[71] But opportunity must be given the company to do the work before the municipality can itself do it and recover therefor;[72] and, to this end, notice is usually required to be given to the company requiring or requesting it to make the necessary repairs,[73] unless the company waives such notice.[74] It is not essential to the liability of the company that the notice shall precede the letting of the contract by the municipality for the work,[75] so long as the work is not commenced or done within the time limited for the company to do the same.[76] Nor need the notice in all cases conform strictly to the requirements of the ordinance.[77]

b. Amount of Recovery. Where a municipalty has made repairs or done paving which the street railroad company was bound, but neglected, to make or do, it is entitled to recover the reasonable cost of the work.[78] Where no fraud is shown, or any facts to impeach the reasonableness of the account, the sum exactly expended in the work is prima facie the sum which the municipality is entitled to recover.[79] Extravagant amounts recklessly expended in the work without reference to its true value should not be allowed, as the municipality cannot proceed in a reckless or extravagant manner and charge the company for expenses unnecessarily or unreasonably incurred.[80]

In Ohio the council of a municipal corporation, in the exercise of its discretion, and acting in good faith, may grant to one street railroad company the right to use, to a lim-

Right of city to attach conditions to grant. — Under a constitutional or statutory provision requiring the consent of the corporate authorities of a town or city to the construction of a street railroad therein, such authorities may annex a condition to its grant that the tracks may be used by any other company to which the same streets may afterward be given. b. Consent of Municipal Authorities. A grant to a street railroad company to operate its own lines on streets, subject to conditions and regulations, does not confer on the company obtaining such franchise a right to permit other companies to use its tracks without municipal consent and against municipal protest.[96] But a street railroad company which has, under power given by the legislature and the municipality, appropriated a right to use a portion of the tracks of another company, is not thereby precluded from appropriating the right to use more of the tracks without obtaining an additional ordinance from the municipality.[97]

c. Consent of Abutting Owners. Under some statutes the consent of the abutting property-owners to the construction and operation of one street railroad is not sufficient to authorize the use of the tracks by another company for the operation of its road, but such consent must be obtained for the operation of the second road.[98] Under other statutes such consent seems not to be necessary.[99]

In Missouri under article 10, section 6, of the charter of St. Louis, the city has the power to make rules and regulations, not only for running the cars of one company over the tracks of another, but also for ascertaining the compensation to be paid therefor. St. Louis R. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 105 Mo. 577, 16 S. W. 960; Union Depot R. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 105 Mo. 562, 16 S. W. 920; St. Louis R. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 1891) 15 S. W. 1013. Under such section, the municipal assembly has also the implied power to make the commissioners' award reviewable by the circuit court. Grand Ave. R. Co. v. Lindell R. Co., 148 Mo. 637, 50 S. W. 302; St. Louis R. Co. v. Southern R. Co., (1891) 15 S. W. 1013. If a company is not satisfied with the compensation awarded by the commissioners, it can either adopt the special mode of procedure by appeal to the circuit court, or may apply to the court under its general jurisdiction. In Massachusetts, under Pub. St. c. 113, §§ 48–55, the rate of compensation to be paid is submitted, in the broadest terms to the determination of the board of railroad commissioners. It is left entirely to their discretion to decide what compensation is, under all the circumstances of the case, just and equitable between the companies. Cambridge R. Co. v. Charles River St. R. An award of such commissioners will not be invalid by reason of its omission to require the corporation whose tracks are entered upon to keep them in repair, that duty being imposed by statute. An award of commissioners, appointed on petition under St. (1864) c. 229, § 29, to revise a previous award of commissioners determining the compensation to be paid by one street railroad company for using the tracks of another, takes effect only when returned and approved by the court, and until then the former award remains in force. b. Measure of Compensation. The compensation to be allowed a street railroad company for the use of its tracks by another company should be a fair and full equivalent for the loss thus sustained.[9] In estimating this amount there should be taken into consideration the value of the railroad structure and materials sought to be used,[10] including the cost of paving in conformity with the municipal ordinances;[11] and also the increased wear on the tracks, and expense in keeping them in repair.[12] But no compensation should be allowed for interference with the franchise or profits of the company whose tracks are sought to be used.[13] Where the right to use the tracks of another company is not derived from the legislature but by contract between the two companies, the compensation should be determined by a consideration of the contract.[14]

3. Rights and Remedies. The fact that a street railroad company is about to proceed to lay its track in a street already occupied by another company with its tracks is not necessarily a threatened invasion of the easements of the latter company or of its property rights, so as to entitle it to an injunction;[15] and when a street railroad company accepts its charter, or a renewal thereof, with the condition attached that the municipality may grant the right to use the tracks to any other company on such terms as the municipal council shall deem equitable, and the municipality has granted such right and prescribed the terms, the court will not interfere with them if they are reasonable,[16] and the company, the use of whose tracks has been granted, cannot object because a part of its busi-

The phrase "just compensation," as used in the charter of a city and its ordinances, has the same meaning which that phrase has when used in the federal and state constitutions with respect to the exercise of the right of eminent domain; and when thus used "means a fair and full equivalent for the loss sustained by the taking for public use." Cable road used by electric road.— In estimating the compensation which an electric railroad company should pay a cable company for the use of the latter's tracks under the provisions of a city charter, the cost of building the cable conduit should be considered, although it cannot be used by the electric company, and its construction made the cost of the cable road much greater than that of an electric road. In Ohio it has been decided that the original company is not entitled to compensation for any supposed depreciation in value of its franchise to operate its line of railroad in the streets of the city caused by the proposed joint use and occupancy of its tracks; nor for the loss of fares which may be occasioned thereby; nor for the inconvenience and interruptions to business which may be caused thereby; nor for the consequential diminution in value of other portions of the line forming part of its street railroad system. ness will be taken away.[17] But a street railroad company which has constructed, and is legally operating, a line of railroad in the streets of a municipality, is possessed of such a property interest as gives it a legal right to maintain an action to restrain a similar company from using or interfering with its line of tracks, without authority of law;[18] and likewise an injunction will issue to restrain a company in the occupation and use of the tracks of another company, from interfering with the latter's franchise or vested rights.[19] But when one company has a lawful right to the use of the tracks of another company, the latter is not entitled to an injunction to restrain it from exercising that right, without alleging and proving such facts as clothe the courts with power to grant relief in the exercise of their equitable jurisdiction.[20]

In granting a restraining order before final judgment only such restraint should be imposed as will keep the property in its actual condition until trial; the comparative mischief or inconvenience to the parties from granting or withholding the order is a governing consideration, and the applicant for the order must show that the balance of inconvenience preponderates on his side, and the order is to be framed so that if the party in whose favor it is turns out to be in the wrong, the other party shall not be deprived of the benefit he was entitled to, and the means the court has to secure such benefit to the ultimately successful party is a consideration. Defendant, as a condition of refusing the order, may be required to do acts, or remove work, or keep accurate accounts of profits, and give an undertaking to pay them over if the other party shall succeed on final hearing, and bring into court an amount of money, the payment of which would be a condition precedent to exercising the right he claims. The purpose of the Pennsylvania act of June 19, 1871 (Pamphl. Laws 1361), was to discourage grade crossings and absolutely to prohibit them where it was reasonably practicable to avoid them. Williams Valley R. Co. v. Lykens, etc., St. R. Co., 192 Pa. St. 552, 44 Atl. 46. A grade crossing should be prohibited unless it is impracticable to avoid it, and unless such crossing is an imperative necessity. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Danville, etc., R. Co., 221 Pa. St. 149, 70 Atl. 578.

The question of what is reasonably practicable depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. These circumstances may be many and varied. Among them are the difficulties to be overcome in changing from a grade to a crossing above or below grade; the cost, whether reasonable or extraordinary; the extent of public travel; the frequency of trains and cars; the character of the country, whether level or hilly; crossing company are secondary and subordinate to those of the company to be crossed,[40] and the burden rests on the crossing company to show that no unnecessary injury will be inflicted on the other by a crossing at grade, and that such a crossing cannot reasonably be avoided.[41]

c. Injunctions. The weight of authority is to the effect that unless such jurisdiction has been conferred by statute or some constitutional provision, there is no jurisdiction in equity to enjoin a street railroad company from crossing a steam railroad company's track at grade in a public street,[42] on the mere ground that the operation of its trains will be inconvenienced, and the dangers of the street crossing increased,[43] unless it appears that the crossing company is insolvent,[44] or that the injury will be irreparable,[45] or the proposed crossing will amount to a public nuisance.[46] Nor does the mere fact that the street railroad company proceeds whether the employees of one company may see the cars of the other company far enough away to put their own under control before reaching the crossing; to what extent, if at all, dangers to persons being conveyed by the cars will be eliminated; whether the dangers from ascending and descending the long gradients made necessary by the elevation or depression of the track of the crossing company will be greater or less than the dangers from collision encountered at the grade crossing; the availability and efficiency of well-known devices for the avoidance of collisions at grade; and such other surrounding conditions as naturally and reasonably address themselves to the judgment of prudent and cautious persons. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Indianapolis, etc., Traction Co., 169 Ind. 634, 81 N. E. 487. What is reasonably practicable under such circumstances is determined largely by what is physically practicable, and not by what is practicable to the treasury of the road seeking to cross. ultra vires, or usurps a franchise, give the steam railroad company any standing to ask for an injunction, unless it suffers some special damage differing in kind from that suffered by the rest of the community.[47] Where the crossing company is proceeding in a lawful and proper manner, the court will enjoin the company whose tracks are being crossed from interfering with the work of construction,[48] or from interfering with the crossing or its use after it is constructed.[49]

3. Determination of Place and Mode of Crossing — a. By Courts. Under some statutes certain courts have the power to define the mode of the crossing of one railroad by another,[50] and require them to prevent grade crossings whenever it is reasonably practicable to do so;[51] and such power is held not to be abridged by a statute giving street railroad companies the right to cross other railroads at grade.[52] Where the right to construct a crossing over the tracks of a street railroad company exists, a court of equity will control its construction and operation on the application of either party;[53] and upon application to the court for this purpose, the petitioning road must show everything essential to the court's jurisdiction.[54]

Extent of power.— Under the New Jersey act of March 22, 1895 (2 Gen. St. p. 2717), the only power conferred upon the chancellor is "to define the mode" in which such crossing shall be made, and he cannot change the location of the crossing to a point which he considers better for the public. In re Atlantic Highlands, etc., Electric R. Co., (N. J. Ch. 1896) 35 Atl. 387. He cannot change the grade of the highway over which the street railroad runs. In re Saddle River Traction Co., (N. J. Ch. 1898) 41 Atl. 107. Nor can he impose upon the company whose steam railroad is to be crossed at grade by an electric railroad the duty and responsibility of operating a derailing switch in the line of the electric railroad. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Atlantic Highlands, etc., Electric R. Co., 55 N. J. Eq. 522, 37 Atl. 736. The Pennsylvania act of 1871 (Pamphl. Laws 300) imposes on the courts the threefold duty of: (1) Ascertaining the mode of crossing of one road by another, which will least injuriously affect the road to be crossed; (2) compelling by decree the adoption of such decree; and (3) the prevention of grade crossings when any other method is practicable. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Hanover, etc., St. R. Co., 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 291.

Ohio Rev. St. § 3333-1, authorizing the court of common pleas, upon the application of a railroad company to prescribe the mode and manner in which one road may cross another, does not authorize an electric railroad to invoke the power of the court to fix the mode and manner of crossing another street railroad, as it has reference to steam railroads. In New Jersey upon an application to the court of chancery under the act of March 22, 1895 (2 Gen. St. p. 2717), to define the mode in which one railroad may cross another, it is incumbent upon the petitioner to show that it has lawful power to construct its road. Mercer County Traction Co. v. United New Jersey R., etc., Co., 68 N. J. Eq. 715, 61 Atl. 461. And see In re Trenton St. R. Co., 58 N. J. Eq. 533, 44 Atl. 177. One of the steps to that end being an ordinance of the township committee granting permission to the petitioner to construct its road under the railroad act of April 21, 1896 (Pamphl. Laws, p. 329), it is incumbent upon the petitioner to show the jurisdiction of the township committee to pass such an ordinance. Mercer County Traction Co. v. United New Jersey R., etc., Co., supra. So also, as it is made essential to the jurisdiction of the chancellor that the route of the petitioning company should cross the line of railroad of the other company, and by the route

b. By Commissioners. Under other statutes the determination of the manner in which the crossing shall be made, whether above, below, or at grade, is vested in the state board of railroad commissioners,[55] or in commissioners appointed by the court;[56] and although the right to except to the ruling of the commissioners is expressly given, the exercise of their discretion will not be reviewed by the courts unless there has been a clear abuse thereof.[57]

4. Expense of Crossing. A steam railroad company rightfully maintaining its tracks in a city street is entitled to require a street railroad company constructing a line across such tracks to pay for the construction of the crossing, and for any change in the tracks necessitated by the crossing.[58] Moreover it has been held that the street railroad company must perpetually maintain and repair such crossing according to the direction of the engineer of the steam railroad.[59] But ordinarily it is not required to pay a portion of the expense of the steam railroad in maintaining crossing gates and other safety appliances at the crossing,[60] although it may be required to do so if equity demands it.[61]

5. Compensation. For the crossing of tracks at grade, without material injury, here mentioned is intended the lawful route, it is incumbent on the petitioner to show that it has legally laid its route over the other railroad, and, as one of the steps to that end, that it has lawful power to lay out and construct its proposed extension. Trenton St. R. Co. v. United New Jersey R., etc., Co., 60 N. J. Eq. 500, 46 Atl. 763. On a petition to define the mode of crossing a steam railroad by a trolley road, a map, filed by the petitioner, showing that the route of the trolley road crosses the railroad at the point where the mode of crossing is to be defined, is sufficient, although it does not exhibit any indication of a crossing. In re West Jersey Traction Co., 59 N. J. Eq. 63, 45 Atl. 282.

Under Mich. Comp. Laws, § 6434, as amended in 1897, giving the commissioner of railroads power to make all reasonable rules and regulations for the operation of street railroads, the railroad commissioner has power to compel a street railroad company to elevate its tracks over those of a steam railroad. Jackson, etc., Traction Co. v. Railroad Com'r, 128 Mich. 164, 87 N. W. 133.

By N. Y. Laws (1897), p. 794, c. 754, the determination of the manner in which the crossing shall be made, that is, whether above, below, or at grade, is vested exclusively in the state board of railroad commissioners; but the provisions of Laws (1890), p. 1087, c. 545, § 12, remain in full effect as to the determination by court commissioners of the point of crossing and compensation. Olean St. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 75 N. Y. App. Div. 412, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 113 [affirmed in 175 N. Y. 468, 67 N. E. 1086]; Lake Shore, etc., R. Corporation commission.— Under the Virginia statutes, application may be made to the state corporation commission to determine the necessity and propriety of a proposed crossing of the tracks of two street railroads, and, by Va. Const. § 156, the rulings of such commission are to be regarded as prima facie just, reasonable, and correct. Newport News, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Hampton Roads R., etc., Co., 102 Va. 847, 47 S. Ky. St. § 767, forbidding the construction of one railroad across another without the approval of the railroad commission, does not apply to the crossing of a trunk railroad by a street railroad, as street railroads, by section 821, are expressly excepted from the jurisdiction of the railroad commission. compensation is not allowed.[62] Thus damages are not allowable for increased delay or danger in crossing,[63] or for the mere interruption of traffic during the construction of the crossing.[64] To be allowable the damages must be real, tangible, and proximate, and not conjectural or speculative.[65]

G. Connections and Intersections With Other Roads. Statutes authorizing or compelling connections or intersections of tracks between railroads have been held to apply to the intersection and connection of a street railroad operated by electricity with a steam railroad;[66] but not to the connection between a street surface railroad and an elevated railroad by an inclined plane, where the property-owners have consented only to a surface road.[67] Such connections are usually required to be made with the consent of, and subject to the conditions imposed by, the city authorities.[68] as a member of the public generally;[71] but for any actual and special damage sustained by him by reason of the construction of the railroad, or resulting from its use,[72] as where the right of ingress or egress is improperly obstructed,[73] he has his remedy by an action at law for damages, unless he has waived his right.[74] The company will also be liable for injuries sustained by persons in the use of a street or highway due to a dangerous condition negligently created,[75] or to the neglect granted by municipal officers. Hyde v. Boston, etc., St. R. Co., supra. Nor has Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 44, making a street railroad company liable for injuries sustained during construction resulting from the carelessness of defendant's servants, if notice is given and an action begun as provided by c. 51, § 20, any application to injuries suffered by an abutting owner by a slight raising of the grade of the surface of a street by the company in the process of construction. Parties.—A reservation by a grantor of damages to the premises conveyed, caused by the construction and operation of an elevated railroad in the street on which the premises abut, does not establish any trust relation between the grantor and the grantee, and therefore the grantor is not entitled to be made a party in an action by the grantee against the company to recover such damages. Evidence.—Where, in an action to recover damages for the maintenance and operation of defendant's elevated railroad in front of plaintiffs' premises, it is set up as a defense that plaintiffs stood by during the construction of the road without objecting or interfering to prevent it, plaintiffs are properly allowed to prove that when defendant began to build its road it went into the vaults of their building, and put posts there, and that they protested. Illustrations — company liable.— Proof that during the construction of an elevated railroad by a contractor, or his subcontractors, under the direction and supervision of the engineer of the company, a person while passing along the street underneath, in the exercise of ordinary care for his safety, was injured by a bolt falling from such railroad, establishes a prima facie case of negligence, on the part of such railroad. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. v. McDonough, 87 Ill. App. 31. Where an electric railroad company is raising a feed wire, a small boy, starting to cross the street, steps across the wire, which lay in the gutter, just as it is suddenly, without notice of its presence or intention to lift it, raised with such force that the boy is thrown many feet in the air, the company is negligent. Company not liable.— Merely because there was a large knot hole in a board constituting part of the temporary crossing where a street railroad company had the street torn up between its tracks, whereby a pedestrian was injured, does not show that it was negligent, it not being shown that it put the board there, or that it had knowledge of the defect, or that the board had been there long enough to give it notice. Keating v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 105 N. Y. App. Div. 362, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 117. An elevated railroad company is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian caused by his stepping on a nail in a plank placed on the sidewalk by the company in the course of the construction of steps, unless it permits the plank to remain upon the side-of its duty to keep its road-bed in repair.[76] But the company can only be held liable where the defect or condition causing the injury was one for which it was responsible. Thus the company is not liable for the negligence of an independent contractor,[77] unless it retains the right to direct or supervise his work,[78] although it owes a duty to the public in such a case to keep the street in a reasonably safe condition while the work is in progress.[79]

2. Release of Damages. A release of damages will be construed as a release of such damages only as would arise from the construction and use of the street railroad in accordance with the terms of the grant.[80]

3. Companies Liable. An ordinary street railroad company, which has leased its line to a corporation formed for the purpose of operating a street railroad for the transportation of freight, is a party to the use of such line for freight traffic, and is liable equally with such corporation for injury to adjacent property.[81]

I. Offenses Incident to Construction and Maintenance. A railroad constructed upon a public street or highway without legislative authority is a public nuisance.[82] When authorized by the legislature, and approved, in its location and mode of construction, by the municipal council, and built in substantial accord with that approval, it is not a public nuisance,[83] even if it does not follow the approved plan in every respect.[84] But it may become a nuisance by the disregard of a positive command of a statute,[85] by the negligent operation thereof,[86] walk beyond a reasonable time. Hedenberg v. Manhattan R. Co., 91 N. Y. Suppl. 68. Where a railroad and electric company is required by municipal authorities to remove its poles inside the curb line of the sidewalk, and, while the company's linemen are engaged in repairing and swinging wires on the poles they stretch a rope across the sidewalk about four feet above it to warn pedestrians not to pass under the poles on which the men are at work, it is not negligence rendering the company liable for the death of a child from coming in contact with the rope which passes under her chin as she is running along the sidewalk, and throws her backward on the pavement. Adopting unsafe method of construction.—If in the progress of the work it becomes necessary to do a certain thing, and there are two ways of doing it, one safe and the other unsafe and unnecessary, if the unsafe method is adopted, and a person is injured thereby, it is such negligence on the part of the corporation performing the work as will authorize the party injured to recover damages. or by reason of a failure to keep its tracks and road-bed in repair, thereby obstructing travel.[87]

J. Motive Power[88] — 1. In General. Under a general grant of power to maintain and operate a street railroad, a corporation takes, by necessary and unavoidable implication, a right to use any force in the propulsion of its cars that may be fit and appropriate to that end, and which does not prevent that part of the public which desires to use the street, according to other customary methods, from having the free and safe use thereof.[89] Moreover such a grant carries with it, at least in the absence of specific limitations or prohibitions,[90] the right from time to time to operate the road by new methods and motive powers, developed in the progress of invention and experience.[91] But whenever a statute specifies the motive power to be used, the expression of that power may be construed to exclude any other.[92]

2. Steam. Steam, as a motive power, may be used along the streets of a city, by proper permission,[93] and in such case the use thereof cannot be abated as a public nuisance, even though it tends to the immediate annoyance of the public in general.[94] But the use of steam as a motive power is usually either expressly,[95]

Validity of ordinance making superintendent guilty of misdemeanor.—A municipal ordinance making it unlawful for any street railroad company to permit its road-bed or track to remain so high above the surface of the streets as to interfere with public travel, and declaring that "the president, superintendent . . . or other officer" of such company violating its provisions is guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject on conviction to a fine, is unreasonable and void, so far as it undertakes to hold the superintendent of such a company responsible for the failure of his company to put its road in repair. An ordinance consenting to the laying of "horse railroad track or tracks" along certain streets does not restrict the use of such tracks to cars propelled by horses, as the words "horse railroad track or tracks," used in the ordinance, must be taken as descriptive of the railroad to be constructed and not of the motive power to be used. A. 174], holding that the construction and operation of a cable road by a company which has the right to construct and operate a horse railroad is a violation of the provision of an agreement that no steam power is to be used on any part of the road for propelling cars, although the cars are propelled by a cable, the movement of which is effected by steam generated by an apparatus situated off the street and on private property. A kinetic motor, operated by or impliedly,[96] prohibited, and its use then constitutes a nuisance, constructive, if not actual,[97] especially in a thickly populated city.[98]

3. Electricity. Where the grant of power to construct and operate a street railroad is silent as to the motive power to be used,[99] or where it authorizes the use of any motive power whatever,[1] or steam, horse, or other power, as the city council may from time to time direct,[2] or any power other than by locomotive,[3] the company has the right to use electricity; even by the use of overhead wires,[4] unless the use of such wires is expressly prohibited.[5] The fact that electricity was unknown at the time the grant was made is immaterial,[6] unless the company was thereby limited to the use of such powers as were known at the time.[7]

4. Change of Motive Power[8] — a. In General. Legislative authority is necessary to enable a street railroad company to change its motive power.[9] Such steam, generated from water heated in a stationary boiler, and transferred to a reservoir under the car and the motor, is not within a statute providing that a street surface railroad may not operate its road by locomotive steam power. Illustrations of implied prohibition.—Where a street railroad company's charter is silent as to the motive power to be used (North Chicago City R. Co. v. Lake View, 105 Ill. 207, 44 Am. Dist. 450), the use of steam as a motive power will not be permitted, at least if the safety of the public is thereby endangered. But where a municipal ordinance authorizes the construction of a railway "to be operated by electricity, or such other power as will not necessarily obstruct the use of the said streets by the public," it will be conclusively presumed in the absence of any showing of mistake or fraud, or that the ordinance is expressed in language not intended to be used, that the ordinance expresses the purpose of the municipality in adopting it, and evidence that it was not intended to allow the use of steam is inadmissible (Houston v. Houston Belt, etc., R. authority is often conferred,[10] subject to certain requirements in respect to obtaining consent.[11] A street railroad company, which has complied with the requirements of law in respect to obtaining authority to change its motive power, becomes entitled to a permit to open the streets along its route for purposes necessary in making such change,[12] and the granting of such a permit by the proper public officers may be enforced by mandamus.[13]

b. Consent of Public Authorities and Property-Owners. Statutes authorizing street railroad companies to change their motive power usually require such companies to first comply with certain conditions, such as obtaining the consent of the local authorities,[14] and owners of abutting property.[15] It is, however, com-

Co., 110 Ky. 788, 63 S. W. 4, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 273, holding that a city ordinance granting to a street railroad company the right to operate its cars by electricity was valid, although the company was authorized by its charter to operate its cars only by animal power, and the grant made by the city became effective when the company was subsequently authorized by its charter to operate its road by electricity.

Charter authority to operate a street railroad by "horse power or locomotive cars" confers a continuing option to use either steam or animal power, or both, which may be exercised from time to time. Under it the use of either motive power may be changed, and the other substituted, as the company may see fit. McCartney v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 112 Ill. 611.

Ratification of unauthorized change.— The legislature may, by subsequently conferring power upon a city council to authorize a change in the motive power of a street railroad, ratify the previous action of such council in permitting such a change (City R. Co. v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 166 U. S. 557, 17 S. Ct. 653, 41 L. ed. 1114), and the city then becomes estopped to set up its want of power in the first instance (City R. Co. v. Citizens' St. R. Co., supra).

N. J. Act (1893) (Pamphl. Laws (1893), p. 241), §§ 1, 2, empowers city authorities, by ordinance, to authorize street railroad companies to substitute electric motors in the place of horses, as the propelling power of their cars, and to authorize the use of poles in the streets, with wires thereon to supply the motors with electricity, and to prescribe the places in which such poles should be located. The act does not confer on the companies any rights beyond those vested in them by their charters, except in allowing a change in the motive power to be applied to their cars. Authority thus granted to city not exhausted by single exercise thereof.—Where an act incorporating a street railroad company provides that the "tracks or road shall be operated and used by said corporation with steam, horse, or other power, as the councils of said city and towns may from time to time direct," the city may, after notice has been given, and an ordinance passed permitting the use of horse power, pass a second ordinance, without further notice, changing the power to electricity. Consent presumed from acquiescence.— The consent of the local authorities, if necessary to enable a street railroad company to change from horse power to an electric trolley system, will be presumed, from the acquiescence of such authorities in such change for five years, so far as to preclude an individual, in a suit against the company for personal injuries, from claiming that the maintenance of such system is negligence per se. Under N. Y. Laws (1890), c. 565, § 100, providing that any change in the motive power of a street railroad must be consented to by the owners of one half the abutting property, and in case such consent could not be obtained the determination of a commission appointed by the general term of the supreme court in favor of such motive power, when confirmed by the court, should be taken in lieu thereof, and that such consent should be obtained in the same manner as provided in sections 91, 94, of the same act, which sections require that for the construction of a street railroad the consent of the owners of one half "in value" of the abutting property should be obtained, etc., a petition for a commission to authorize a change of motive power, alleging that the consent of the owners of one half "in value" of the required property could not be obtained, is not insufficient because it does not show that the consent of the owners of one half the "lineal front feet" of such property could not be obtained, since the evident intent of the legislature was to conform the practice of obtaining the consent to a change in motive power to that required for the construction of a street railroad. Matter of Rochester, etc., R. Co., 51 N. Y. App. Div. 65, 64 N. Y. Suppl.

petent for the legislature to authorize a change of motive power without the consent of the local authorities,[16] notwithstanding a constitutional provision that no law shall authorize the construction or operation of a street railroad without the consent of the local authorities.[17]

5. Who May Question Right to Use Particular Motive Power. The right of a street railroad company to operate its cars by other power than that specified in its charter can only be raised by the state or city with whom its contract was made, and is not subject to collateral attack in a private action to recover for injuries,[18] or in a proceeding by the company to enjoin private persons from cutting down its wires and poles.[19]

VIII. Sales, Leases, Traffic Contracts, and Consolidation.

A. Sales — 1. Right to Sell or Purchase. A corporation, created for the purpose of constructing, owning, and managing a street railroad, for the accommodation and benefit of the public, cannot, without distinct legislative authority, make any alienation, absolute or conditional, either of its general franchise to be a corporation,[20] or of its subordinate franchise to manage and carry on its corporate business.[21] A sale and transfer thereof may, however, be authorized by statute.[22] A right of way upon a public street, whether granted by an act of the legislature,

E. 820 (holding that the company has no more right to sell its rails for the purpose of removal, with the intent that its road shall be abandoned, than it has to sell them to be kept where they are, and to be used along with the franchise by the buyer); Richardson v. Sibley, 11 Allen (Mass.) 65, 87 Am. Dec. 700; Wright v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 95 Wis. 29, 69 N. W. 791, 60 Am. St. Rep. 74, 36 L. R. A. 47.

In Massachusetts the earliest statute upon this subject provided that "no street railway corporation shall sell or lease its road or property unless authorized so to do by its charter, or by special act of the Legislature." St. (1864) p. 161, c. 229, § 24. And any alienation either in fee or for the period of its corporate existence or for any less term of substantially all its real and personal property, so as to disable it from carrying on the business which it had been chartered to do for the benefit of the public, is clearly within the terms and meaning of the prohibition. French v. Jones, 191 Mass. 522, 78 N. E. 118, 7 L. R. A. N. S. 525; Richardson v. Sibley, 11 Allen 65, 87 Am. Dec. 700. And subject to certain limitations the same prohibition has since remained in force (Pub. St. c. 113, § 56; St. (1897) p. 241, c. 269; Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 85 et seq.), except that in 1900 power was given to the receiver of a street railroad company to make a sale of its road, property, locations, and franchises (St. (1900) p. 322, c. 381; Rev. Laws, c. 112, §§ 12, 13, 14). See French v. Jones, supra.

Who may question power of sale.—Whether the grantee of a street railroad franchise may assign a portion thereof is a question which concerns the public alone, and cannot be raised in an action by a rival corporation for an injunction. Oakland R. Co. v. Oakland, etc., R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 3 Am. Rep. 181.

22. Wright v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 95 Wis. 29, 69 N. W. 791, 60 Am. St. Rep. 74, 36 L. R. A. 47.

In California, under Civ. Code, §§ 494, 510, 511, a street railroad franchise may be transferred, whether held by a corporation or or an ordinance of the municipal council, or in any other valid mode, is an easement, and as such is a property right, capable of assignment, sale, and mortgage, and entitled to all the constitutional protection afforded other property rights and contracts.[23] Likewise the rails of a street railroad company imbedded in the streets of a city remain personal property, and are subject to disposition as such.[24]

2. Property and Rights Included. The property and rights included under a sale of street railroad property is to be determined from the terms of the conveyance, subject to any statutory provisions affecting the sale.[25] A covenant of warranty will not be implied from a mere recital.[26]

3. Rights and Liabilities of Purchasers. A street railroad company purchasing the property of another company assumes all the charter obligations and public duties resting upon its vendor,[27] and is bound by all the statutory and charter limitations or restrictions of the original grant,[28] although it does not expressly assume them.[29] But these liabilities and obligations do not remain after the rights and privileges have been passed on to another.[30] The purchaser is not, in the absence of an agreement to that effect, liable for the debts, contracts, or personal obligations of the vendor,[31] which were not liens at the time of the natural person, and no formal or express consent of the state is necessary. O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 153 Cal. 502, 95 Pac. 873, 96 Pac. 323.

In Wisconsin such authority has been granted by Laws (1883), c. 221, as amended by Laws (1891), c. 127. Wright v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 95 Wis. 29, 69 N. W. 791, 60 Am. St. Rep. 74, 36 L. R. A. 47.

Particular conveyances construed.—Where plaintiff transferred to defendant by deed all of his interest in certain franchises for the building of a street railroad, which had been granted to him, the deed containing no covenants of title or seizin, and no fraud or mistake was alleged in making the sale, it was held that the deed transferred, not merely the paper under which plaintiff claimed, but was a transfer of an interest in real property, and amounted to a quitclaim deed. O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 153 Cal. 502, 95 Pac. 873, 96 Pac. 323. Under a contract transferring "all the property, rights, and assets" of a street railroad company a contract right to have certain rotary motors installed, and to acquire title as a result of such installation, passes. 26. O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 153 Cal. 502, 95 Pac. 873, 96 Pac. 323, holding that where plaintiff transferred to defendant certain franchises for a street railroad, the conveyance reciting that the franchise was "duly given" by the city council, such recital was merely a description of the thing granted; and, while it might constitute an estoppel against the grantors, it did not amount to an express agreement or covenant that plaintiff had good title to the franchise conveyed.

37. Middlesex R. Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 115 Mass. 347; Moorshead v. United R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 541, 96 S. W. 261 [affirmed in 203 Mo. 121, 100 S. W. 611]; Ft. Worth St. R. Co. v. Allen, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 125, holding that where a street railroad company builds its line on the condition that it will keep the streets in repair, it cannot relieve itself from such liability by leasing its line to another company.

What constitutes lease.—When a statute speaks of a lease of a "road," it means a lease of the entire road or an entire portion of a road, and it does not cover a mere contract for passage of cars over a road of which otherwise the owner remains in possession and control. Chapman v. Syracuse Rapid-Transit R. Co., 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 626, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 250.

In New Jersey the act of March 14, 1893 (Gen. Pub. Laws (1893), c. 172), confers power on one of two corporations organized thereunder to lease its property to the other. Dickinson v. Consolidated Traction Co., 114 Fed. 232.

In Pennsylvania street railroad companies have power to make leases of their franchises, to traction, cable or electrical passenger railroad companies. Smith v. Reading Pass. R. Co., 2 Pa. Dist. 490. Such power is granted by necessary implication by the eighth clause of section 1 of the act of March 22, 1887 (Pamphl. Laws 8), which authorizes traction companies to lease the property and franchises of passenger railroad companies which they may desire to operate. Pinkerton v. Pennsylvania Traction Co., 193 Pa. St. 229, 44 Atl. 284; Rafferty v. Central Traction Co., 147 Pa. St. 579, 23 Atl. 884, 30 Am. St. Rep. 763; O'Neill v. Hestonville, etc., Pass. R. Co., 9 Pa. Dist. 2; Smith v. Reading Pass. R. Co., 2 Pa. Dist. 490. The power to take a lease is expressly given to motor companies and the corresponding power in the passenger railroad companies as owners to give a lease is necessarily implied. Without it the grant in the act would be nugatory. Pinkerton v. Pennsylvania Traction Co., supra; Smith v. Reading Pass. R. Co., supra. The laws authorizing leases by street railroad companies are comprehensive enough to cover and include all such companies without regard to the motor power used by them. O'Neill v. Hestonville, etc., Pass. R. Co., supra. Nor are such companies restricted to the leasing of passenger railroads situated in boroughs and cities exclusively. Philadelphia, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 5 Pa. Dist. 305.

Connected lines.—Pa. Acts (1861) (Pamphl. Laws 410) and (1870) (Pamphl. Laws 31) apply to street railroads, but they permit the leasing of franchises only if the roads of the companies so contracting or leasing are connected with each other, either directly or by means of intervening lines. Rafferty v. Central Traction Co., 147 Pa. St. 579, 23 Atl. 884, 30 Am. St. Rep. 763; Hestonville R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. St. 210; Smith v. Reading Pass. R. Co., 2 Pa. Dist. 490. The mere fact that the cars of neither road can run over the other road, and that passengers desiring to ride over both roads must change cars, does not prevent them from being "connected." Hampe v. Pittsburg, etc., Traction Co., 165 Pa. St. 468, 30 Atl. 931. Where one of the companies is not the owner of a railroad, either as having built or equipped it, or as having the right to operate it, these from any general power connected with the object for which the company was created.[38]

2. Validity — a. In General. Power given to a street railroad corporation by its charter, or by the general act under which it is incorporated, to lease its property and franchises, enters into the agreement between its stock-holders;[39] and, where no particular mode of exercising such power is prescribed, it may be exercised in the same manner as other general powers of the corporation, by the vote of a majority of the stock-holders, or by the board of directors.[40]

b. Who May Question Validity. Whether a street railroad company exceeded its lawful authority by entering into a lease is a question of excessive exercise of power by a corporation, for which it is amenable to the commonwealth;[41] but not to a private suitor or another corporation, unless such suitor has sustained a private injury, or such corporation has had its rights and franchises invaded.[42]

3. Rights and Liabilities of Lessor and Lessee. Street railroad companies accepting the provisions of statutes permitting them to enter into contracts for leasing lines to other companies, as authorized thereby, are bound to assume the duties and obligations imposed by the statutes as a consideration for the privilege.[43] It is likewise true, as a general rule, that when one company leases its road to another, the lessee must, in operating it, be governed by the charter of the lessor, and must assume all liabilities imposed thereby,[44] although the lease is silent acts do not apply. Smith v. Reading City Pass. R. Co., 2 Pa. Dist. 490, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 49.

Parallel or competing lines.— Pa. Const. art. 17, providing that a "parallel or competing line" cannot lease or operate another with which it is "parallel or competing," applies to steam railroads, and not to street railroads. Shipley v. Continental R. Co., 13 Phila. (Pa.) 128.

Municipal assent.— Mo. Const. art. 12, § 20, forbids the lease of a street railroad franchise without the consent of the municipality. A municipal ordinance authorizing such a lease sufficiently shows consent. Gilroy v. United R. Co., 125 Mo. App. 19, 102 S. W. 1197; Burleigh v. United R. Co., 124 Mo. App. 708, 102 S. W. 624; Moorshead v. United R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 541, 96 S. W. 261 [affirmed in 203 Mo. 121, 100 S. W. 611]. It must be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary that the required municipal assent to such a lease was obtained. Chlanda v. St. Louis Transit Co., 213 Mo. 244, 112 S. W. 249.

38. Dickinson v. Consolidated Traction Co., 114 Fed. 232.

39. Dickinson v. Consolidated Traction Co., 114 Fed. 232.

40. Dickinson v. Consolidated Traction Co., 114 Fed. 232.

Unanimous consent is not requisite to a valid lease of a street railroad company unless its charter so provides; the votes of a majority of the shares is all that is required. O'Neill v. Hestonville, etc., Pass. R. Co., 9 Pa. Dist. 2.

Rights of minority stock-holders.—Where a corporation is authorized by the law under which it is created to lease all of its property and franchises, the making of such a lease does not deprive a dissenting stockholder of his property without due process of law, since the exercise of such power by a majority is one of the implied conditions under which he became a stock-holder. Dickinson v. Consolidated Traction Co., 114 Fed. 232. The execution of a lease by a street railroad company to another for ninety-nine years at a rental of seven per cent on the valuation of the property is not a fraud on the minority stock-holders, in that it limits the annual dividends, no matter how great the earnings and the profits of the system may become. Wormser v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 73 N. Y. App. Div. 626, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 1038 [affirming 37 Misc. 615, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 151]. Where the guaranteed rental does not appear to be inadequate, the lease is not a fraud on the minority stock-holders. Wormser v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., supra.

Presumption of good faith in making lease. — The directors of a street railroad company, in the absence of proof to the contrary, will be presumed to have acted in good faith in leasing the railroad to another such company. Wormser v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 73 N. Y. App. Div. 626, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 1038 [affirming 37 Misc. 615, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 151].

Existing debts and liabilities.—Where a street railroad company leases the line of another company subject to all the debts and liabilities of the first company, the lessee is not liable for license-fees accruing and payable by the lessor prior to the lease. New York v. Third Ave. R. Co., 77 N. Y. App. Div. 379, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 481.

in regard thereto,[45] and although there is no statutory provision for such liability.[46] But this can only be true where the lessee company, in operating the road in accordance with the charter of the lessor, is not violating its own charter.[47] Conversely the lessee has the rights and privileges of the lessor under the charter,[48] and under any contract between the lessor and the municipality in pursuance of the charter;[49] and among these is necessarily the right to occupy such streets and lay all such tracks as the leased company is possessed of,[50] even though at the time of the lease the lessor's corporate existence has ceased by the limitations of its charter.[51] But the lessee can have no greater rights than the lessor had.[52]

C. Traffic Contracts — 1. Right to Make Contracts. A street railroad company cannot, without express legislative sanction, relieve itself from its duties to the public or its obligation to operate its franchise and exercise its powers for the public benefit.[53] But in some states the course of legislation shows a policy to promote, and to some extent to compel, agreements for joint operation of their roads between companies whose roads have been connected or united.[54]

Duty to construct extension.—A lessee succeeding to the rights and franchises of a street railroad company takes the same burdened with the obligations of its lessor to complete the construction of an extension begun by it, and put the same in operation. 47. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 65 N. E. 451, 59 L. R. A. 631, holding that as the operation of the leased lines by the lessee, in accordance with the provisions of the lessors' charters restricting the power of the city to regulate rates of fare, would be a violation of its own charter that it should be subject to regulation by the general assembly, and hence, also, by the city under the power delegated in its charter, the lessee was estopped from insisting on the right to operate the leased lines under the lessors' charters.

54. See cases cited infra, this note.

In New York the uniform course of legislation in reference to street railroads shows a policy on the part of the state to facilitate arrangements for the connection of continuous lines, and the transfer of passengers from one road to another, with the view of giving the longest service possible to the public without increase of fare. People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 18 N. E. 692, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684, 2 L. R. A. 255; Brooklyn El. R. Co. v. Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 23 N. Y. App. Div. 29, 48 N. Y. Applicability of general laws to street railroads.— Ordinarily laws authorizing railroads to contract for the use of their respective tracks, etc., is applicable to street surface roads as well as to steam railroads. Chicago v. Evans, 24 Ill. 52; Roddy v. Brooklyn City, etc., R. Co., 32 N. Y. App. Div. 311, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 1025 [affirming 23 Misc. 373, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 885].

Vested rights conferred by such statutes.— Such a statute confers a property right, free from the necessity of any consent of a municipality or of property-owners, which cannot thereafter be taken away or impaired, either by legislative enactments or constitutional change, except in the proper exercise of the right of eminent domain or the police power. Roddy v. Brooklyn City, etc., R. Co., 32 N. Y. App. Div. 311, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 1025. And see Ingersoll v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 157 N. Y. 453, 52 N. E. 545, 43 L. R. But a grant to a street railroad company to operate its own lines on streets, subject to conditions and regulations, does not carry with it the right of the company obtaining such franchise to permit other companies to use its tracks without

While traffic contracts which tend to create a monopoly,[55] or restrain corporate functions,[56] are against public policy it is otherwise where the contract will apparently benefit the public.[57]

2. Nature of Contract. A contract between two such companies conferring on each the right to run its cars over the tracks of the other, each retaining absolute control over its road for all other purposes, is a mere license, and not a lease;[58] and confers no interest which can be assigned or leased.[59]

3. Construction and Operation. In construing traffic contracts the rules applicable to the construction of contracts generally apply.[60]

4. Rights, Liabilities, and Remedies. When street railroad companies make traffic agreements with each other, they acquire no new or greater powers and privileges than are conferred by their several charters,[61] and each of such roads, while municipal consent and against municipal protest. Erie v. Erie Traction Co., 222 Pa. St. 43, 70 Atl. 904.

Parallel lines.—A statute forbidding any street railroad company from leasing its rights and franchises to any other company owning and operating a parallel road does not preclude such companies from making traffic contracts for the partial use of their respective roads beyond the line of parallelism. Even if the effect of such contract is to cause the abandonment of a portion of the road of one company, that does not render the agreement illegal or against public policy if no detriment to the public results therefrom. Contracts held valid.—A street railroad company may properly enter into a contract with another company for the interchangeable use of the tracks of the two companies (Jourdan v. Long Island R. Although only such vehicles may be used upon street railroad tracks as their special charters or the general laws under which they are organized permit, a traffic agreement whereby one company operates cars of another company of the same kind as those the first company is entitled to use over its lines is valid. using the road of the other company, must, in all things, conform to the provisions of the charter of the company whose road is being thus used.[62] Either party to the contract is entitled to an injunction to restrain a violation thereof,[63] and also to damages.[64] While in the exercise and enjoyment of the rights conveyed by the contract, neither party can plead that the contract is ultra vires.[65]

5. Termination. It is competent for the parties to agree upon any period as the duration of their contract,[66] and they may, if they choose to do so, provide that it shall cease upon the passage of even an unconstitutional law.[67]

D. Consolidation — 1. Right to Consolidate. Street railroad companies may not combine with each other, or be amalgamated, or consolidated, or be merged one into another, except by express authority of statute.[68] Ordinarily the right to consolidate is limited to existing companies having railroads constructed and in operation;[69] but the fact that one of the constituent companies does not possess this qualification will not prevent the consolidated company from being a de facto corporation.[70] A prohibition against the consolidation of parallel or competing railroads has been held not to apply to street railroad companies.[71]

In California, it is held that Civ. Code, § 473, authorizing consolidation of railroad corporations, applies to street railroads. Market St. R. Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571, 42 Pac. 225.

In New York, Laws (1869), c. 917, authorizing the consolidation of "certain railroad companies," by section 7 expressly excluded street railroads. But Laws (1875), c. 108, entitled, "An act in relation to railroad corporations," and Laws (1883), c. 387, amending Laws (1875), c. 108, authorize the consolidation of street railroad companies. In re Washington St. Asylum, etc., R. Street railroads, although parallel, cannot be "competing" in the sense of the mischief intended to be prevented, and the prohibition does not apply to them. Montgomery's Appeal, 136 Pa. St. 96, 20 Atl. 399, 9 L. R. A. 369.

2. Effect of Consolidation. Ordinarily the consolidated company by operation of law assumes all the burdens and obligations of the constituent companies,[72] and correspondingly succeeds to all benefits, rights, and privileges,[73] subject to the original conditions and limitations;[74] and the statutes under which consolidation is effected usually so provide.[75] Nor does it matter whether the corporation is de jure or de facto.[76] The outstanding liabilities of the constituent companies cannot be transferred to the new company without the consent of the creditors of such companies;[77] but where the consolidated company has assumed the liabilities of the several constituent companies, although the creditors are not compelled to have recourse to the new company, they may elect to do so and recover.[78] Existing liens are not affected by consolidation.[79]

IX. Bonds, Liens, Mortgages, and Receivers.

A. Bonds. In the absence of particular statutory or charter provisions, the issuance and validity of street railroad bonds, and the rights and liabilities of holders thereof, are governed by the rules applicable to corporate bonds generally.[80] Before a legal issue of street railroad bonds can be made, all the charter, statutory, and constitutional requirements in respect thereto must be complied with.[81]

Purchase not consolidation.—When no consolidation is intended or sought to be effected, the mere purchase by one corporation of the property and franchises of another corporation under authority of law, and the succession of the purchaser corporation to the exercise of the franchise held by the vendor corporation, cannot be held to operate as a consolidation of the two companies, or to charge the purchaser company with the liabilities of its predecessor in the franchise. 79. Lincoln St. R. Co. v. Lincoln, 61 Nebr. 109, 84 N. Priority of liens.—As between conflicting equities and lien-holders, the rule is settled that the liens follow the property into the consolidated company, and one cannot take precedence, by reason of such consolidation, over other liens already existing. Lincoln St. R. Co. v. Lincoln, 61 Nebr. 109, 84 N. W. 802.

In California, under Civ. Code, § 456, the directors may prescribe reasonable regulations which shall govern the proposed bond issue, but before the issue can be legally made the assent of the required number of stockholders thereto must be had in compliance with the mode laid down in section 359. Boyd v. Heron, 125 Cal. 453, 58 Pac. 64.

In Wisconsin, Rev. St. § 1753, provides that no corporation shall issue bonds for less than seventy-five per cent of their par value, "and all . . bonds issued contrary to the provisions of this section . . . shall be void." It was held that bonds issued and hypothecated by a street railroad company as col-

Bonds illegally issued are void, except in the hands of bona fide purchasers without notice;[82] but the company may be estopped by its conduct to deny the validity thereof.[83] Although completely executed in due form to be used as security, such bonds acquire no validity before delivery.[84] They are ordinarily negotiable,[85] and, as between bona fide purchasers thereof for value, are equal in priority.[86] Ordinarily no scheme of reorganization can be entered into by the trustee named in the mortgage securing the bonds which will prejudicially affect the rights of bondholders, without their assent.[87]

B. Liens. As a rule general mechanics' lien laws do not apply to street railroads.[88] Whether a statute giving a lien on "railroads" in certain cases does or does not include street railroads depends upon the purpose and intention of the statute.[89] When applicable to street railroads, the lien is usually confined to laborers and employees,[90] and persons furnishing necessary supplies.[91]

Applicability of general laws to street railroads.—A statute relating to the issue of bonds by railroad corporations is applicable to street railroad companies, unless the contrary is indicated on its face. Cheetham v. Atty.-Gen., 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 124.

Strict compliance necessary.— Statutes regulating the issue of street railroad bonds embody a rule of public policy which cannot be ignored or overridden by the courts. Augusta Trust Co. v. Federal Trust Co., 153 Fed. 157, 82 C. C. A. 309.

82. Vanderveer v. Asbury Park, etc., St. R. Co., 82 Fed. 355, holding that where such bonds are held by bona fide purchasers without notice, they constitute a valid claim against the property in the hands of a receiver, for the amount actually received therefor by the company.

Materials and labor furnished in the erection of car-barns, train sheds, power and boiler houses, depots, and workshops, and rebuilding a hotel, belonging to a railroad company, are not supplies necessary to the operation of such road, within the meaning of Va. Code (1887), § 2485, giving a prior

C. Mortgages — 1. In General. A street railroad corporation has no power to mortgage its franchise, road, or property without legislative authority;[92] and a mortgage by such corporation of substantially all of its property, without such authority, is wholly void.[93] When granted the right by statute, a municipality is without power to abridge the same.[94] The conditions upon, and the limitations within which, the power may be exercised are usually regulated by the statute authorizing the mortgage. Thus the statutes usually limit the purposes,[95] and amount,[96] for which mortgages may be issued by street railroad companies. The property covered by such mortgage depends upon the intention of the parties, as evinced by the description contained in the mortgage, interpreted according to the established rules of construction and aided by extrinsic evidence.[97] Such a mortgage may include after-acquired property,[98] if the terms of the mortgage show an intention to cover such future acquisitions.[99] A mortgagor is free to lien for necessary supplies to transportation companies. Frick Co. v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 86 Fed. 725, 32 C. C. A. 31.

Who are materialmen.—As to who is a materialman within the meaning of these statutes depends upon the wording of the particular statute. The Washington statute does not contemplate a lien in favor of him who sells materials to one who in turn sells the same to the owner or his agent. It gives the lien only to him who deals with the owner or his agent, or with a contractor in charge, or with some other person in charge of some part of the improvement for which the materials are to be used. Retroactive effect of statutory provision. —Nebraska Act (1889), authorizing street railroad companies to borrow money for certain purposes, and secure the payment of the same by mortgaging their property and franchises, applies to all street railroad companies in this state, whether chartered before or after the passage of that act. Lincoln v. Lincoln St. R. Co., 67 Nebr. 469, 93 N. W. 766.

Execution of mortgage as release of mortgagor from liability.— The execution of a mortgage by a street railroad company in due course of business, while the company is solvent, does not constitute a violation of a constitutional provision prohibiting the alienation of any franchise so as to release or relieve the same or property held thereunder from any of the liabilities of the grantor incurred in the operation or enjoyment of the franchise, although such mortgage on the subsequent insolvency of the company might operate to prevent the payment of a judgment for injuries subsequently recovered. 96. Lincoln v. Lincoln St. R. Co., 67 Nebr. 469, 93 N. W. 766, holding also that where it is claimed that a mortgage executed by a street railroad company is for an amount in excess of that permitted by law and its charter, such alleged fact must be proven, so that an examination of the record will disclose it; otherwise, it will be presumed that the mortgage was not for an excessive amount.

Fictitious indebtedness.—Where a street railroad company mortgaged its property and franchises to secure the sum of six hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, and equipping its lines of electric street railroad, and it is shown that it expended for that purpose about nine hundred thousand dollars, it cannot be said that the mortgage was given to create a fictitious indebtedness. deal with the mortgaged premises according to his own views of his own interests, provided always that what he does will not materially impair the value of the property as security for the mortgage.[1] If a case of impairment of the mortgaged premises is presented, the mortgagee is entitled to relief.[2] But the mortgagee retains no right to require the mortgagor or any subsequent owner to improve the property, or to manage it in any particular way.[3]

2. Priorities — a. Taxes. A mortgage executed by a street railroad company upon its property to secure the payment of bonds issued for the purpose of constructing and equipping the mortgagor's lines of railroad is a lien upon the property of the street railroad company described therein as against all special assessments for paving taxes,[4] except such as were assessed for paving already done, or as were in contemplation at the time it was recorded.[5] One who at the request of a street railroad company pays taxes on its mortgaged property does not have a lien on the property superior to the mortgage, although the company agrees that he shall have.[6]

b. Current Expense Claims. The indebtedness of a street railroad company for motive power furnished pending its receivership takes priority of a previous mortgage.[7] A court of equity engaged in administering mortgaged street railroad property under a receivership in a foreclosure suit may, in its discretion, prefer

Lease of mortgaged property.—Where the owner of land subject to a mortgage, including the plant and franchises of a street railroad company which land is necessary for the profitable use of the company in its business, leases portions of the tract to another company which proposes to use it in part for traffic, competing with that of the street railroad company, a case of threatened injury and deterioration of the mortgaged premises is presented, which justifies the granting of relief to the mortgagee. unpaid claims for current expenses, incurred in the ordinary operation of the railroad within a limited time before the receivership, to the bondholders secured by a prior mortgage, in the distribution of the income or the proceeds of the mortgaged property;[8] but the right to give such preference is confined to claims of this class;[9] it does not include claims for money loaned, or for material or labor furnished to make necessary beneficial and permanent additions or improvements to the mortgaged property.[10] Nor is a creditor entitled to such preference and priority simply because that which he furnished to the company prior to the appointment of the receiver was for the preservation of the property and for the benefit of the mortgage security, although that fact is an important element in considering the equity of the claim.[11] Moreover, by the weight of authority, there

A claim for the purchase-price of a gear wheel and pinion, furnished to a cable street railroad company and necessary for the operation of the cable by which its cars are moved, is entitled to be paid by a receiver of the road, appointed within six months after such wheel was furnished, in preference to bonds of the company secured by mortgage, especially where, immediately after obtaining possession of such wheel, the company has mortgaged it, with other property, to raise money to pay interest on the bonds. The doctrine rests upon the principle of mutual benefit to the public, the mortgagee and general creditors. Debts created by an electric street railroad company in rebuilding its power-house, which had been destroyed by fire, do not constitute claims to which a court is authorized to give preference, in payment from the proceeds of the property of the company when sold under mortgage foreclosure, to the displacement of the lien of a prior mortgage covering all the property. Maryland Steel Co. v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co., 99 Fed. 150.

A heater, furnished to an electric railroad company after a test showing that it would save a certain sum per month in fuel, is not necessary to keep the company in operation, and the seller has no preferred claim for payment out of the receipts of the company after it goes into the hands of a receiver; and the fact that such heater has already earned a sum equal to the agreed consideration, by effecting a saving in fuel, does not give the seller a preferred claim. can be no restitution where there has been no diversion,[12] and he who invokes the rule must show affirmatively that the mortgage creditors have got that which, in equity, belongs to the petitioner.[13]

3. FORECLOSURE. The rules governing the foreclosure of mortgages generally [14] are applicable to the foreclosure of street railroad mortgages, as to the right to foreclose,[15] jurisdiction of the bill of foreclosure,[16] defenses,[17] the form of the decree,[18] foreclosure sale,[19] and redemption.[20]

Right of trustees and bondholders.— Primarily, it is left to the discretion of the trustee to determine whether proceedings for foreclosure shall or shall not be instituted. New York Security, etc., Co. v. Lincoln St. R. Co., 74 Fed. 67 [affirmed in 77 Fed. 525]. If the requisite number of bondholders direct the trustee to institute proceedings, then it becomes its duty so to do. If not so directed, then it is left to the discretion of the trustee to determine whether the interests of the parties demand such action on its part. In either event, the right and power to act, by the institution of foreclosure proceedings, exists in the trustee whenever the default on the part of the mortgagor is such that a right to a bill of foreclosure exists against it. New York Security, etc., Co. v. Lincoln St. R. Co., supra. Limitations on the right of the trustee to foreclose should be strictly construed. South St. Louis R. Co. v. Plate, 92 Mo. 614, 5 S. Under Me. Rev. 18. Wells v. Northern Trust Co., 195 Ill. 288, 63 N. E. 136 [affirming 90 Ill. App. 460], holding that where the ordinance granting a franchise to a street railroad company restricts the franchise to such company, the inclusion of the rights granted in such ordinance in a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage executed by such company, if erroneous, is harmless.

19. See cases cited infra, this note.

Extent of property included in sale.— Unless it appears to the contrary, it will be presumed that the entire plant of a mortgaged street railroad, embracing its real and personal estate and franchises, is an entirety, and cannot be separated and a part thereof sold, without material injury to the value of each, and hence on foreclosure of the mortgage the entire plant must be sold. McFadden v. May's Landing, etc., R. Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 176, 22 Atl. 932. On foreclosure for unpaid interest, the principal not being due, only so much of the property as may be necessary to raise the amount due should be sold, if the property is divisible without material injury to the security. McFadden v. May's Landing, etc., R. Co., supra.

Setting aside sale.— Inadequacy of price alone is not a ground to set aside a judicial sale, unless so great as to shock the conscience and excite the suspicion of the court. Fidelity Trust, etc., Co. v. Mobile St. R. Co., 54 Fed. 26.

Rights of purchasers.—A purchaser at a foreclosure sale takes a title free from any personal contract made by the former owner. Chapman v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co., 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 626, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 250. Thus under a contract between a railroad company and a street railroad company whereby the latter was to bear the expense of the construction and maintenance of a crossing of the two lines, there was no privity of contract between the parties and a purchaser of all the rights, franchise, and property of the street railroad, at a mortgage foreclosure sale thereof, which rendered the purchaser liable on the contract. Evansville, etc., Traction Co. v. Evansville Belt R. Co., (Ind. App. 1909) 87 N. E. 21. The purchaser is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. Mill Creek Valley St. R. Time for redemption.— The mortgagor is entitled to a reasonable time in which to redeem. But where a decree of foreclosure allows only ten days in which to pay the amount found due, in default of which the Temporary receiver.— The appointment of a temporary receiver in foreclosure of a street railroad mortgage is discretionary with the court, and if opposed by the mortgagor, which is a live corporation operating the property, will not be made unless the integrity of the property is threatened. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Central Park, etc., R. Co., 165 Fed. 503.

Necessity for separate receiverships.— Where receivers for a system of street railroad lines leased from different owners have been appointed in a suit against an insolvent lessee, to which suit the various lessor companies, or their stock-holders, have, or may, become parties, the fact that there may be a conflict of interests as to the distribution or application of the earnings of the receivership does not require or warrant the appointment of separate receivers to operate the property of the several lessors. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., 160 Fed. 221. But where, in a creditors' suit against the lessee of a street railroad system, to which the lessor becomes a party, receivers are appointed who operate the property for all parties in interest until foreclosure suits are instituted by bondholders of the lessor, and the affairs of the lessee are so far liquidated that they may soon be wound up and an accounting had between it and the lessor, separate receivers should be appointed for the adverse interests. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., 165 Fed. 463.

Performance of corporate functions.— The appointment pendente lite of receivers of a street railroad company exercising public franchises practically devolves upon the receivers the performance of corporate functions of a public character and governmental nature, amounting to a transfer of its franchises. People v. New York City R. Co., 57 Misc. (N. Y.) 114, 107 N. Y. Suppl. 247. It is not the practice for receivers to concern themselves with plans for reorganization. Their sole functions are to hold the property intact, operating it as efficiently for the public service as their resources will permit, to ascertain the liabilities, to marshal the assets, and eventually, unless in the meantime some entirely solvent concern able to liquidate all obligations and succeed to the owner's and lessee's interests shall appear to take it off their hands, to sell it to the best advantage, and apply the proceeds ratably to the payment of the liabilities. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., 157 Fed. 440.

23. See cases cited infra, this note.

Illustrations.— Receivers appointed to manage and operate a street railroad may exercise large discretionary powers as to details of management, and their judgment in such matters will not be interfered with by the court appointing them unless the act done is a manifest abuse of power. Morley v. Saginaw Cir. Judge, 117 Mich. 246, 75 N. W. 466, 41 L. R. A. 817, holding that an order by receivers of a street railroad company requiring its conductors to carry boxes, into which passengers are required to deposit their fares, and forbidding conductors to accept money, is a proper regulation and safeguard for the collection of fares, and will not be set aside, on petition of an employee, on the ground that it tends to hold him up to the public as dishonest. Receivers are trustees for the creditors and owners, and it is their duty to operate the roads so as to increase earnings. In re Receiverships of Street Rys., 161 Fed. 879. They may make expenditures needed to render the road efficient and to perfect the service. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., 165 Fed. 455. It is their duty to curtail transfer privileges of passengers, where it will increase the earnings of the property, and there is no law of the state requiring the issuing of such transfers. In re Receiverships of Street Rys., supra. And see In re Dry Dock R. Co., 165 Fed. 487. A receiver of street railroad companies will not be required to continue an arrangement by which such companies furnish power and the use of their tracks to an independent company without compensation. Central Trust Co. v. Third Ave. R. Co., 165 Fed. 494. A receiver appointed for a street railroad company will not, unless absolutely necessary, be authorized to discontinue service over a part of the line covered by its franchise, where that will forfeit its franchise, even though the track over such portion is owned by another company to which he must pay rent and its operation will be unprofitable. Lorain Steel Co. v. Union R. Co., 165 Fed. 500. An application by a receiver for permission to build an extension to a street railroad will not be granted unless an overwhelming and irresistible necessity for the construction thereof is shown. Pueblo Traction, etc., Co. v. Allison, 30 Colo. 337, 70 Pac. 424. Where receivers for an insolvent lessee of a street railroad system, comprising lines leased from different owners, are operating the whole as a single system, they will not be required to keep the earnings of a particular line separate to meet the claims of its lessor. ment;[24] and the operation and effect of their appointment[25] are governed by the rules applicable to the subject of receivers generally.

X. REGULATION AND OPERATION.[26]*

A. Regulation — 1. Power to Control and Regulate. The power of controlling and regulating the construction, management, and operation of a street railroad in the streets and highways of a city or town is primarily in the legislature of the state;[27] but the legislature may, either wholly or in part, and either expressly or impliedly, delegate this power to the municipal government,[28] or it may delegate

24. See cases cited infra, this note.

Cancellation of lease.— Receivers for insolvent street railroad companies operating a system composed of a number of constituent lines, some of them held under lease, need not operate any such lines at a loss, and where it appears that the rental is excessive, or the lease is otherwise unprofitable, they will be directed to cancel the same. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., 165 Fed. 459, 462. Receivers for a street railroad system, including leased lines, may operate one of such lines for a reasonable time to enable them to determine whether to adopt the lease, without incurring liability for rental; but on an election to cancel they will be required to account to the lessor for the net profits of such operation. Morton Trust Co. v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 165 Fed. 489; Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., 165 Fed. 472. Where a lease of a street railroad requires the lessee to pay all taxes and assessments against the property, on the cancellation of the lease by receivers for the lessee, they cannot be required to indemnify the lessor against liability for outstanding taxes in litigation. Morton Trust Co. v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 165 Fed. 489.

Restoration of property after cancellation of lease.— Where under a lease of a street railroad line which requires the lessee on its termination for any cause to return all of the property leased, including all tools, implements, machinery, and equipment, or substitutes of equal value, and also a sum of money advanced, to be treated in such case as a loan, receivers for the lessee terminate the lease they cannot be required to restore property or money which did not come into their possession; but any shortage gives the lessor a claim for damages against the estate of the lessee. New York Guaranty Trust Co. v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 165 Fed. 488; Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., 165 Fed. 472. Such property as can be identified as received under the lease or as substituted therefor should be returned, and horses, cars, or other equipment of the same kind as that received under the lease, exclusively in use on the line at the time of the appointment of the receivers, may be assumed to be substitutes. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., supra. And see Central Trust Co. v. Third Ave. R. Co., 165 Fed. 478. Where a considerable part of a leased line is converted at the lessee's expense from a horse to an electric line at a large cost, and different cars are placed thereon, such electric cars are not substitutes for the horse cars which they replace and which are transferred to other parts of the lessee's system, and the lessor is not entitled to the same. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City R. Co., 165 Fed. 472.

As to rights of third persons.—When a court takes possession of property by its receiver, it necessarily assumes an obligation to everyone interested in it, or affected by its use, either to afford by its own orders every remedy which such person might have to assert his rights had no receiver been appointed, or else to give him leave to pursue such remedy against the receiver as if the receiver were a private person. Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati Inclined Plane R. Co., 78 Fed. 307.

On illegal combination.— Where certain street railroad companies enter into an illegal consolidation, the appointment of receivers for two of the companies does not remove them from the illegal combination. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 165 Fed. 945.

to railroad commissioners the power to supervise and regulate the operation of street railroads.[29] Hence a grant to a street railroad company of the right to own property and transact business in a municipality affords it no immunity from reasonable control and regulation by the municipality under its police power,[30] although the railroad is constructed prior to the incorporation, as a municipality, of the territory through which it runs,[31] particularly where it accepts the subsequently enacted municipal charter.[32] But on the other hand where a street railroad company accepts its charter or the grant of its franchise from a municipality, it is bound to hold its special privileges subject to the regulations then existing and to such regulations as the municipality may from time to time impose upon it, as reasonably necessary to the protection and preservation of persons and property,[33] whether or not it accepts the ordinance making the regulation,[34] and this is particularly true where the grant to it expressly reserves such right to the municipality.[35]

Apart from any constitutional authority, municipalities may impose reasonable regulations upon street railroad companies in the "operation" of their lines, and the fact that a constitutional provision forbids the construction of a street railroad without the consent of the local authorities does not limit the exercise of municipal functions to matters of "construction." The power of the city of New York to pass ordinances regulating the conduct of street railroads therein is not taken away by the railroad law (Laws (1890), c. 565), which confers on the state board of railroad commissioners general supervision of all railroads, that they may ascertain the physical conditions and details of operation for the purpose of recommending improvements. 2. Statutory and Municipal Regulations — a. In General. As a general rule the state legislature or a municipal government, within its powers, may make any regulations, prescribing the manner in which a street railroad company shall enjoy its franchise rights, which are reasonable and proper for the safety and protection of persons and property.[36] These regulations, however, must not be imposed arbitrarily or capriciously, but must be such only as are reasonable,[37] and hence must not be such as will destroy or unreasonably impair the rights or franchises granted to the company.[38] Thus a municipal government cannot deprive a street railroad company of the right of way, which has been granted to it, except in the manner prescribed by law for the taking of private property for public use;[39] nor can it define by ordinance what shall constitute negligence on the part of a company operating street cars on its streets;[40] but a regulation is not unreasonable or invalid from the mere fact that it will require a large outlay of money by the company.[41] A regulation which shows on its face that the end contemplated is the securing of reasonable safeguards against danger, and reasonable accommodations to the public, will ordinarily be presumed to be valid,[42] and will not be interfered with on light grounds,[43] or where the regulation can fairly be said to tend toward a safer condition.[44] By some regulations a penalty

Whether a municipality has exceeded its statutory powers in any given case, where the facts are undisputed, by the enactment of an unreasonable ordinance relative to a street railroad, is a judicial question, to be considered substantially the same as a question whether the legislature has exceeded its constitutional authority, reasonable doubts being resolved in favor of the municipal power. is imposed for a violation thereof.[45] A street railroad company is not subject to regulations contained in the franchise of another company, which it has acquired, where its new franchise does not refer to such regulations, or make the provisions of the old grant part of the new one.[46]

b. Particular Regulations — (I) In General. In accordance with the above rules the legislature or municipal government may make reasonable regulations relative to the motive power to be used on street cars within municipal limits,[47] as by prohibiting the use of steam as a motive power;[48] or it may make a regulation against cars standing on the tracks,[49] or grant the privilege of carrying passengers, and at the same time deny the privilege of operating freight cars.[50] But it has been held that a street railroad company is not within a statutory provision making railroad companies liable for all damages caused by the running of trains,[51] or within a provision requiring drinking water to be kept on a train.[52]

(II) As to Passenger Service and Accommodations. Statutory and municipal regulations may also be made, relative to the services and accommodations which street railroad companies are required to provide for passengers who desire to ride on its cars.[53] Thus such regulations have been made, and held reasonable, requiring street railroad companies to keep tickets for sale on its cars;[54] or prescribing the frequency with which cars shall run during hours of the day[55] or

The regulation of a maximum rate to be charged by street railroad companies in cities of a particular class is not within a constitutional prohibition against the creation of corporations by special act. Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 139, 47 N. E. 525, 51 N. E. 80, 41 L. R. A. 337, 344.

A statutory provision that railroads shall not charge over a certain sum per mile and imposing a penalty for charging a greater sum does not apply to a street railroad. Hoyt v. Sixth Ave. R. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 528.

Uniformity.— A statute regulating the fares to be collected by street railroad companies need not operate uniformly upon all of such companies in the state, but it is sufficient if it operates upon all under the same circumstances and conditions. Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 139, 47 N. E. 525, 51 N. E. 80, 41 L. R. A. 337, 344.

To exempt a street railroad company from legislative control over its rates of fare, it must appear that the exemption was made in its charter in clear and unmistakable language. Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 139, 47 N. E. 525, 51 N. E. 80, 41 L. R. A. 337, 344.

A preliminary injunction will not be granted to restrain the enforcement of a statute regulating fares on street railroads at the suit of a stock-holder in such a company, notwithstanding there is serious doubt of its constitutionality, where it is not shown that either the company or its stock-holders will suffer irreparable injury or what amount of loss they will sustain by a compliance with the statute until final hearing. A municipality is not authorized to fix the rates of fare to be charged by a street railroad company by provisions in the charter of the city authorizing it to "pass all by-laws concerning carriages, wagons, carts, etc.," and "every by-law, ordinance and regulation it may deem proper for the peace, health, order or good government of the city;" nor is it so authorized by a proviso, in a street railroad company's charter, "that rates of fare and freight upon said railroad shall be subject to the approval of the mayor and city council;" or by a reservation in an ordinance granting the use of streets for a street railroad that such road shall be "subject to all the laws and ordinances now in force, and such as may be hereafter made," unless it is either expressly or by necessary implication thereto authorized by some law of the state. 72. Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 139, 47 N. E. 525, 51 N. E. 80, 41 L. R. A. 337, 344.

Application.—An ordinance regulating the rates of fare to be charged by a street railroad company does not prevent the state legislature from afterward providing that such company shall issue one-half-fare tickets to school children, particularly where the constitution provides that no irrevocable or interfere with a street railroad company in the regulation of its rates of fare under express statutory authority, so long as it acts in good faith.[73] Where a municipality makes a contract with a street railroad company fixing the rates of fare, its power of altering such rates is suspended for the period of the running of the contract,[74] unless such alteration is made with the consent of both parties for a sufficient consideration.[75] Thus where a municipality authorizes a street railroad company to charge a specified rate of fare for a given period, it cannot require the company to reduce such rate during the period specified,[76] nor can the company during the continuance of such contract increase the rate of fare.[77] Regulations have been made which require that but a single fare, usually five cents, shall be charged each passenger for a continuous ride over the street railroad company's lines within the municipal limits,[78] and an additional fare for distances beyond the municipal limits; [79] or which require a certain number of tickets to be sold for a specified sum, such as six tickets for twenty-five cents; [80] or which require pupils to be carried to and from school at a rate less than the regular fare.[81]

(2) MUST BE REASONABLE. Power to regulate rates of fare of a street railroad company is subject to the limitations: (1) That there is reasonable need on the part of the public, considering the nature and extent of the service, to lower the rates and give better terms than those existing; [82] and (2) that the rates and terms fixed by the regulation are not clearly unreasonable in view of all the conditions.[83]

Contract.— A municipality and a street railroad company may, in good faith, enter into a contract for the better accommodation of the public by which, in consideration of more rapid transportation through a new motive power, the municipality increases the rate of fare as authorized by the original grant. Constitutionality.— A statute which requires street railroad companies to carry pupils of the public schools to and from school at rates not exceeding one half the regular fare between certain points is constitutional, although it does not apply to an elevated railroad company, and although the privilege extends only to pupils of the public schools, since this is a police regulation in the interest of education, and it is assumed that the legislature was satisfied that no railroad company would suffer loss from such regulation. Neither of these conditions is independent of the other and, although the public interest is of the first importance, the test is not what is desirable on the part of the other, but what is reasonable in respect to the rights of both, so as to afford a reasonable compensation to the company and to impose no unreasonable burden upon the passenger. Ellis v. Milwaukee City R. Co., 67 Wis. 135, 30 N. W. 218, 58 Am. Rep. 858; Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co. v. Milwaukee, 87 Fed. 577.

Reasonableness.—An ordinance requiring a street railroad company charging five-cent fares to sell six tickets for twenty-five cents or twenty-five tickets for one dollar is un-

Such rates must not unreasonably discriminate against any particular class of persons.[84] But, although a rate is reasonable when fixed, under the conditions then existing, it may subsequently become unreasonable by reason of the company's building extensions and connecting lines, changing its motive power, and otherwise rendering increased services at an additional cost.[85] A street railroad company cannot be required to carry passengers without reward,[86] or for such sums as amount to a confiscation or taking of property without compensation or due process of law.[87]

(3) IN NEW YORK. Under the New York statutes[88] no corporation constructing and operating a street railroad, under such statutes, shall charge any passenger more than five cents for one continuous ride, from any point on its road, or on any road, line, or branch operated by it or under its control,[89] to any other point thereof or any connecting branch thereof,[90] within the limits of any incorporated city or village; and not more than one fare shall be charged within the limits of any such city or village for passage over the main line of the road and any branch or extension thereof,[91] if the right to construct such branch reasonable when the road is only making yearly net earnings of three and three-tenths per cent to four and five-tenths per cent on its bona fide investment and paying five per cent interest on its bonds, in a city where the current rate of interest on first mortgage real estate security is six per cent; and such an ordinance is void, under the fourteenth amendment, as depriving the company of its property without due process of law. Policemen and firemen.— An act of the legislature requiring a street railroad company to carry firemen and policemen free of charge is unconstitutional as depriving the company of property without due process of law, for although it be conceded that public safety requires policemen and firemen to be carried on street railroad cars, such safety will not be promoted by their carriage free of charge. 89. The control contemplated by section 101 of the New York Railroad Law means the control of the operation of the road and not merely the control of the corporation or individuals who operate it by reason of the ownership of a majority of stock, and hence the fact that one street surface railroad company owns the majority of the stock of a similar company having a separate and distinct management, and thus may be able indirectly to control the management by the election of directors in such other company, does not constitute the control of such other company within the meaning of this statute. Senior v. New York City R. Co., 111 N. Y. App. Div. 39, 97 N. Y. Suppl. 645 [affirmed in 187 N. Y. 559, 80 N. E. 1120].

Roads and connections.— Two lines of street surface railroad, originally constructed and owned by separate companies operating different lines of cars and brought into physical relation only by means of a third intervening line of road, do not, where they have been taken into a general railroad system, constitute a road and "connecting branch thereof" or "main line of road and any branch or extension thereof" within the meaning of such statute; but the terms of the statute suggest an original or main line which by an offshoot and secondary and tributary line has been extended or continued, the two constituting a single continuous and connected line of road. Bull v. New York City R. Co., 192 N. Y. 361, 85 N. E. 385, 19 L. R. A. N. S. 778 [affirming 121 N. Y. App. Div. 582, 106 N. Y. Suppl. 378].

91. This provision does not apply to roads operated under a lease or contract, but only to the main line and branches thereof built by the carrying company itself, and entitles a passenger to transportation over the main line and branches thereof without the payment of another fare; and it has also been held that this provision does not apply where two lines owned by the same company do not connect, that is do not run into each other, but on the contrary cross at right angles. O'Connor v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 123 N. Y. App. Div. 784, 108 N. Y. Suppl. 471; Baron v. New York City R. Co., 120 N. Y. App. Div. 134, 105 N. Y. Suppl. 258 [revers-

or extension shall have been acquired under the provisions of these statutes;[92] and it is further provided that where one street surface railroad company acquires by lease or otherwise the right to operate another street surface railroad, after the passage of such statutes, it is required to carry a passenger not only over its own road but over the connecting leased road operated by it within the limits of a city or village, for a single fare;[93] and for a refusal to do so the company so refusing shall forfeit fifty dollars to the aggrieved party. It has been held that these provisions apply only to street surface railroads[94] which have been incorporated under the provisions of these statutes, and that they do not apply where a street surface railroad leases the line of an elevated railroad or steam surface railroad, or to railroad companies which are not incorporated under such statutes;[95] but that in such case the company may charge in addition to the single fare of five cents over its own road the fare which by its charter the leased elevated,[96] or steam surface railroad,[97] or which the road organized prior to May 6, 1884,[98] was entitled to charge, although it changes the motive power of such a steam railroad and operates it as an electric surface railroad.[99]

(B) Transfers — (1) IN GENERAL. Regulations are sometimes made and held reasonable which require that a transfer shall be given on the change of a passenger from one line to a connecting line leased or operated by the same company within the city limits,[1] and which prohibits a passenger from selling such transfer or giving it away,[2] under a prescribed penalty for a violation thereof.[3] Under the

On short service car.— If a passenger pays one fare without knowledge or notice that the destination of the car is short of the point to which he desires transportation and upon the same or another car an additional fare is exacted for carrying him beyond the destination of the car which he first boards, the carrier becomes subject to the penalty prescribed in section 39 of the Railroad Law; but where a passenger leaves a short service car at the end of its route without boarding another car which would carry him to his destination and paying another fare, an excessive fare has not been exacted and he is not entitled to recover such penalty. 4. New York Consol. Laws (1909), tit. Railroad Law, § 104.

The regulation of fares under section 104 of the New York Railroad Law is an exercise of the police power of the legislature and does not necessarily tend to diminish the business of the company or to impair the salability of its property. Blume v. Interurban St. R. Co., 41 Misc. 171, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 989.

5. Section 104 of the New York Railroad Law (1909), requiring street surface railroads to issue transfers so that a passenger may make a continuous trip for a single fare, applies only to companies which operate the lines of other companies, acquired under section 78 of such law by lease or contract, and has no application where different lines are constructed by the same company. Griffin v. Interurban St. R. Co., 179 N. Y. 438, 72 N. E. 513 [modifying 96 N. Y. App. Div. 636, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 1105]; King v. Nassau Electric Co., 128 N. Y. App. Div. 130, 112 N. Y. And since section 78 by its express terms does not apply to a lease made prior to May 1, 1891, section 104 therefore does not apply to a street railroad operated under a lease made prior to that time. Topham v. Interurban St. R. Co., 96 N. Y. App. Div. 323, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 298.

6. The word "continuous" as used in the statute must be construed to mean the most direct, quickest, and most convenient route, and a passenger is entitled to a transfer at a point of intersection which will enable him to reach his destination by such a route. "Embraced in such contract," as used in such statute, includes only roads operated by the contracting companies at the time the contract is made, and hence a company leasing another connecting company's road, and operating it, is not bound to transfer a passenger riding from a point on its original line over the leased line to a third line subsequently leased. An "aggrieved party" within the meaning of such provision means a person who enters on or continues a trip with the real and actual desire of getting to some place, and whose purpose is interfered with or defeated if the street railroad company unjustly refuses to give him a transfer which will enable him to reach the point for which he has set out and who therefore by such refusal is disappointed and defeated in the object of his aim. A person riding on a street surface railroad for the purpose of acquiring information to be used in an action for the penalty under such statute is not a passenger within the meaning thereof, and therefore is not an "aggrieved party." entitled to a transfer from one line to another under these statutes, the two lines must be operated as intersecting lines in one railroad system;[10] and, although these statutes provide that the company shall incur the forfeiture for every refusal to comply with its requirements, the penalties provided for are not cumulative, and only one penalty can be recovered in a single action, and the institution of an action for a penalty is to be regarded as a waiver of all previous penalties incurred.[11] It has been held that where a company operates cars making a continuous trip between certain points, a passenger desiring to be transported between those points must take the through car, and is not entitled to a transfer from a car running only a part of the distance.[12]

(2) DEMAND OF TRANSFER. In carrying out the system of transfers, it has been held that it is a reasonable regulation for a street railroad company to establish a rule that a passenger must demand a transfer at the time of the payment of his fare.[13] Where a passenger asks for a transfer to a certain line without specifying the direction in which he wishes to go on such line and receives a transfer which is good only on a car going in the direction opposite to that which he wishes to pursue, and the transfer is refused on a car going in his direction, he cannot

Fare paid by escort.— A passenger may maintain an action for the statutory penalty for the failure of a street railroad company to issue a transfer to her, although her fare was paid by her escort. McLaughlin v. New York City R. Co., 106 N. Y. App. Div. 1, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 653.

Defenses.— Where a street railroad company furnishes the conductor with transfer tickets, it has been held that it is a good defense to an action against it for the penalty for a refusal to give a transfer that the passenger failed to receive such transfer through the misjudgment, neglect, mistake, or inadvertence of the conductor or through the conductor's belief that the passenger was not entitled thereto for failing to demand a transfer when paying his fare. Snee v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 120 N. Y. App. Div. 570, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 907 [affirmed in 193 N. Y. 659, 87 N. E. 1127]; Tullis v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 71 N. Y. App. Div. 494, 75 N. Y. Y.) 119, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 385.

Limitations.— The time within which an action must be brought to recover such a penalty is governed by the three-year limitation prescribed by section 383 of the code of civil procedure, and not by the one-year limitation prescribed by section 39 of the Railroad Law. recover the statutory penalty;[14] but if he asks for a transfer in a certain direction, and a transfer good only in the opposite direction is given him, by reason of which it is not accepted on the car to which he transfers, it is tantamount to a refusal and the penalty may be recovered.[15] The fact that the conductor has no transfers at the time a passenger asks for one, does not absolve the company from liability for the statutory penalty.[16]

(3) Point of Transfer. Where a transfer is to be made, and the transfer ticket indicates that it is to be presented at the intersection of the issuing line, a passenger is entitled to transfer at a point where a connecting line leaves the road upon which he was first traveling and which affords him the nearest and most convenient route to his destination,[17] and the transfer must be made at the point where the two roads intersect;[18] but this does not mean that such route must be in the same longitudinal direction in which the passenger was first traveling;[19] nor does it entitle him to reverse the direction of his trip without paying another fare.[20]

(4) Limit of Use of Transfer. Regulations are also sometimes made which require a street car passenger to use his transfer within the time limited thereon,[21] provided a car upon which the passenger can be conveniently and comfortably transported passes the transfer point within the time so limited.[22] But a rule

Custom of issuing transfer.— Where, although a passenger knows he can travel to his destination by pursuing a route over which the company issues transfers, he has frequently traveled over the route selected, and has always theretofore been given a transfer, and no notice of the discontinuance of transfers is given to him when he boards car, or until no alternative continuous route is available, the company is liable for refusing to issue a transfer to him as theretofore. St. Rep. 452, holding that where a passenger receives a transfer limited upon its face and presents the transfer on a connecting line after the expiration of the time limit, the conductor is justified in refusing to ac-

of a street railroad company which puts an improper time limit upon a transfer ticket does not relieve it from its obligation to carry for a single fare;[23] nor does the acceptance by a passenger of a transfer ticket so improperly limited modify the original contract of carriage or waive any rights acquired under it.[24]

(iv) As to Employees. Regulations which require a street railroad company to have a conductor in charge of each car,[25] or to have a driver or motorman and a conductor or other agent on each car to control the car and passengers,[26] or which require conductors to be licensed,[27] have been held to be reasonable regulations.

(v) As to Equipment of Cars. Regulations have been enacted by the legislature or municipality, and held reasonable, which require a street railroad company to furnish its cars with such equipment as will tend to make their operation safer.[28] Thus it has been held to be a reasonable regulation to require proper and suitable fenders to be placed on the front of traction cars,[29] or to require cept it and in demanding the fare, although no car has passed the connecting point until after the expiration of the time limit, but that if in such a case the passenger is required to pay his fare, he will have his action against the company.

Enforcement.—A provision in an ordinance, requiring the police to cause every car not provided with a "driver and conductor" to be returned to the stable, is not an attempt at enforcement without trial, but merely a means of preventing a nuisance by blockading travel. Co., 10 Ont. L. Rep. 730, 6 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 574.

Position and height of fender.—A provision in such a regulation with respect to the position and height of such fenders, if impracticable, is void. Chicago, etc., Electric R. Co. v. Freeman, 125 Ill. App. 318. Thus a provision, in an ordinance requiring safety fenders to be attached to the front platform of electric street cars, that they shall not be more than three inches from the tracks, is unreasonable, in view of the liability of the height of the car above the tracks to vary according to the loads, the grades, and the curves. Brooklyn v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 38 N. Y. App. Div. 365, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 609.

The "front" of the car within the meaning of such a regulation is that end of it which when the car is in motion is the furthest forward, that is to say, furthest forward in the sense that it would first meet a person or an object moving in the opposite direction; and the operating of a car for a distance of twelve hundred feet with the fender at the back instead of the front, as so defined, renders the company liable to the penalty prescribed by the statute. screens or vestibules on cars during the winter months to afford protection to the motormen and conductors.[30] It has also been held to be a reasonable regulation to require a street railroad company to equip its cars with air or electric brakes,[31] unless it clearly appears that there is no necessity for a more efficient brake than that already in use,[32] or that neither an air nor electric brake is more efficient than the one in use.[33]

(VI) AS TO MOVEMENT AND SPEED OF CARS. It is also within the power of the legislature or municipal government to make reasonable regulations relative to the movements of street cars,[34] as by requiring cars to stop at specified places,[35] such as before crossing intersecting streets;[36] or before reaching a railroad crossing,[37] and not to proceed until it has been ascertained that the Canada.— London St. R. Co. v. London, 9 Ont. L. Rep. 439, 2 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 44, 3 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 123.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 154.

Reasonableness.— An ordinance limiting the rate of speed of electric street cars will not be set aside unless it unreasonably interferes with the franchise or privilege conferred upon the street railroad company (Cincinnati, etc., Electric St. R. Co. v. Stahle, 37 Ind. App. 539, 76 N. E. 551, 77 N. E. 363; Cape May, etc., R. Co. v. Cape May, 59 N. J. L. 393, 36 Atl. 679, 36 L. R. A. 656), and it has been held that an ordinance restricting the speed of street cars between crossings to six miles an hour, and over crossings to four miles an hour, is not unreasonable (Cincinnati, etc., Electric St. R. Co. v. Stahle, supra); but an ordinance restricting the speed of trains within the city limits to six miles per hour is oppressive, and inapplicable to a road engaged largely in suburban business, which runs through a portion of the city thinly populated, and made up largely of truck patches (Zumault v. Kansas City, etc., Air Line, 71 Mo. App. 670).

Application of particular provisions.— A statute limiting the speed of riding through a street in the compact part of a town applies to a street railroad company, although its charter provides that the mayor and aldermen of the city may make such regulations as to rate of speed as the public safety and convenience require, in the absence of regulations by such mayor and aldermen. Bly v. Nashua St. R. Co., 67 N. H. 474, 32 Atl. 764, 68 Am. St. Rep. 681, 30 L. R. A. 303. But it has been held that an ordinance declaring it unlawful for any cart, wagon, or other vehicle used to carry passengers to be driven through the streets at a greater than a specified speed is not applicable to street surface cars operated by electricity. Robinson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 103 N. Y. App. Div. 243, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 1010. So an ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful for any locomotive, railroad car, or other vehicle to be propelled or drawn on such part of any railroad as shall be within the limits of the city at a faster rate than six miles an hour has no application to the cars of a street railroad operated in such city. Licznerski v. Wilmington City R. Co., 5 Pennew. (Del.) 201, 62 Atl. 1057.

An ordinance limiting speed is effective in subsequently attached territory, although a different rate of speed prevailed therein by statute prior to its being attached to the to speed enacted in former years, when the motive power and other conditions were different, does not apply to another company operating in later years by a different motive power and under different conditions.[43]

(VII) AS TO SIGNALS AND LOOKOUTS. Regulations have also been enacted and held reasonable requiring street cars to have signal lights on the front and rear,[44] or a good and sufficient headlight at certain hours;[45] and requiring suitable and seasonable warning to be given of the approach of street cars to crossings,[46] as by requiring the cars to be provided with suitable gongs or bells which shall be sounded before reaching crossings of streets[47] or steam railroads.[48] Regulations have also been enacted which require that the persons in charge of a street car shall keep a vigilant lookout for teams and persons on foot, especially children, either on the track or moving toward it,[49] and shall stop the car in the shortest time and space possible,[50] on the first appearance of danger to such team or persons,[51] or on the first appearance of any obstruction;[52] and such a regulation is not extraordinary or unreasonable, as it only requires that ordinary degree of municipality. Deneen v. Houghton County St. R. Co., 150 Mich. 235, 113 N. W. 1126.

Municipal consent that a street railroad company may maintain a certain rate of speed does not constitute a contract between the city and the railroad company that the latter should always have the right to operate its cars at that rate of speed. care which the common law requires under like conditions,[53] and should be construed to require the car to be stopped only when it is perceived that a collision is imminent,[54] and with due regard to the safety of passengers.[55]

(VIII) AS TO ROAD-BED AND TRACKS.[56] The legislature or municipality may also enact reasonable regulations relative to the condition of the road-bed and tracks of a street railroad company,[57] as by requiring that it shall keep its tracks watered so as to lay the dust,[58] clean the streets between its rails,[59] or keep the tracks free from ice and snow;[60] or by granting the right to sprinkle sand on the tracks during a certain season;[61] or by prohibiting the placing of salt on the tracks except at certain places.[62]

57. Wellesley v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 188 Mass. 250, 74 N. E. 355, holding that the fact that an electric street railroad company is forbidden to use its electricity for lighting purposes does not preclude it from using electricity for lighting as an incident to its business, or constitute an excuse for its failure to comply with an order of the selectmen of a town requiring it to maintain electric lights along a street on which it operates its line

Fencing track.—An interurban electric railroad company incorporated under Mo. Rev. St. (1899) c. 12, art. 3, § 1187, is a railroad corporation within the meaning of art. 2, § 1105, requiring every railroad corporation to erect and maintain lawful fences on the sides of its road passing through cultivated fields and, until such fences are constructed, making it liable for double damages for stock killed on its road; and it is not relieved of this duty because of the fact that it is constructed on the right of way of a public road by permission of the county court. A. 287 (holding that an ordinance requiring street railroad companies to water their tracks, within the city limits, so as to effectually lay the dust within their tracks, is a legal exercise of the police power of the city, tends to promote the comfort and convenience of passengers, and the health and comfort of the inhabitants of the city, and is neither indefinite nor unreasonable); Newcomb v. Norfolk Western St. R. Co., 179 Mass. 449, 61 N. E. 42 (holding that under Pub. St. c. 113, § 7, a condition of a grant to a street railroad company that it shall water the street over which its track is laid, between certain dates, is a lawful restriction).

An ordinance requiring all companies operating street cars in the city to water their tracks so as to keep the dust laid is not so partial and wanting in generality as to vitiate it. Savannah City, etc., R. Co. v. Savannah, 77 Ga. 731, 4 Am. St. Rep. 106.

An ordinance has been held unreasonable which requires a street car company to provide for the sprinkling of the streets through which the cars run (State v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 49 La. Ann. 1571, 22 So. 839, 39 L. R. A. 618), or which requires every street railroad company using any street to cause it to be sprinkled for the distance of three feet six inches each way from the center of the railroad track, so that no dust will be raised by a passing car, and providing for a penalty of twenty-five dollars for each breach of its provisions, and twenty-five dollars a day for a continued violation, and investing the municipality with power to stop the running of the cars in default of payment of the penalty (Chester v. Chester Traction Co., 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 575 [reversing 5 Pa. Dist. 609]).

Under Mass. Pub. St. c. 113, § 63, the supreme judicial court may compel a street railroad company to comply with the condition of its grant that it should sprinkle the street of a town on which its track is laid. Newcomb v. Norfolk Western St. R. Co., 179 Mass. 449, 61 N. E. 42.

3. Rules and Regulations of Company.[63] A street railroad company may adopt and enforce reasonable rules and regulations respecting the conduct of its business for its own protection, provided they do not seriously inconvenience passengers or subject them to probable loss or deprive them of legal rights;[64] but it cannot promulgate rules which are arbitrary and illegal.[65] A street railroad company, however, cannot avoid the requirements of a statute under color of its right to make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business.[66]

4. License Fees and Taxes[67] — a. In General. The business of operating a street railroad is one which may properly be subjected to the payment of a license fee or tax,[68] which is a fee or tax exacted in exchange for the privilege of operating cars upon streets subject to the control of the municipality;[69] and a street railroad company is not exempted from the payment of such fee or tax by the mere fact that it has been granted an exclusive right over the streets,[70] or by the fact that its property is taxed on an ad valorem basis;[71] nor does the payment of a license fee or tax exempt the company from the payment of an ad valorem tax on its property.[72] In the absence of constitutional restrictions, such fee or tax may be imposed directly by the legislature,[73] or by the municipal government under 170, holding that an ordinance prohibiting the placing of salt of any kind on any street railway track or other part of the street within a city, except on curves leading from one street into another running at right angles therewith, is a reasonable regulation for the common use of the street for a street railway and for ordinary travel.

Where the necessary use of salt by a street railroad company is limited to a short section of its track, and it does not appear that such necessity could not be removed at a reasonable expense, an ordinance prohibiting such use of salt will not be declared unreasonable. Exemption from taxation.—A municipal ordinance granting to a street railroad company a franchise to construct its tracks and operate cars upon the streets of the municipality, although silent as to taxation, cannot be construed as conferring immunity from the payment of a license-tax, in the absence of an express stipulation to that effect, since exemption from taxation is never to be presumed. impose a license-tax for purposes of revenue as a police regulation or under a general power to license and regulate,[82] although, if the sum charged as a police regulation is a reasonable one, the fact that it incidentally increases the revenue of the municipal treasury will not invalidate it.[83] A municipality cannot impose a license fee or tax which affects existing rights;[84] but a contract conferring the right to operate a street railroad without dispensing with the payment of a license is not impaired by the exaction of such a license,[85] and where the grant is for a term of years on payment of a stated license-fee, the company is not liable for such fee after the term has expired, without a renewal.[86] A license-tax may be imposed by a municipality upon a street railroad company, upon the business done in such municipality, although the lines of the company extend beyond the municipal limits;[87] but it has been held that such a tax cannot be imposed upon a company which does not occupy a street subject to the control of the municipality, although it is within the municipal limits,[88] as where its tracks are located only upon private property or turnpike roads acquired by the company by purchase or condemnation.[89]

A license-fee when imposed for the main purpose of revenue is not a police regulation but is a tax which can only be upheld under the power of taxation. Kansas City v. Corrigan, 18 Mo. App. 206.

Presumption.— Where a license-tax imposed on street cars is lawful if intended for police regulation and unlawful if intended for revenue purposes, the presumption is that the purpose of the ordinance is lawful, unless the contrary clearly appears (Gettysburg v. Gettysburg Transit Co., 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 598); and it will not be presumed, because a city ordinance requires the payment of a license-fee on each car, that another provision requiring the payment of an annual tax on each mile of its track is an improper method of raising revenue for the municipal government (Chicago Gen. R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 Ill. 253, 52 N. E. 880, 68 Am. St. Rep. 188, 66 L. R. A. 959).

The distinction between the power to license as a police regulation and the same power as a revenue measure is of the utmost importance. If granted with a view to revenue the amount of the tax, if not limited by the charter, is in the discretion and judgment of the municipal authority, but if granted as a police power, it must be exercised as a means of regulation only and cannot be used as a source of revenue. Where "the annual license fee for each car now allowed by law" is the fee required and the only license-fee provided for at the time is a fee on stages and omnibuses engaged in transportation of passengers, it is this fee which the company should be required to pay. New York v. Third Ave. R. Co., 117 N. Y. 404, 646, 22 N. E. 755; New York v. Third Ave. R. Co., 42 Misc. (N. Y.) 599, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 584 [affirmed in 115 N. Y. App. Div. 899, 101 N. Y. Where the requirement is that the company shall pay a license-fee annually for each car as is now paid by other railroads in the city, the liability for such fee does not depend on the fact that other railroads have actually paid their license-fee into the city treasury, but only on the fact that they are required and legally liable to pay such fee. New York v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 106. Moreover such a requirement does not amount to a contract that the company shall never be required to pay a license-fee greater than that required of such companies at the date when the company is incorporated, but only that the company shall not then be required to pay any greater charge than that paid by other companies possessing the same privileges. Union Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 101 U. S. 528, 25 L. ed. 912 [affirming 83 Pa. St. 429].

Number of cars taxed.—Where the terms of a grant imposing a license-fee on cars are vague and the construction adopted by the parties for a number of years has been that the fees should be paid on the basis of the greatest number of cars in use at the busiest season of the year, such construction should be adopted by the court, and the company be held for the specified fee on each car of the greatest number in daily use at the busiest season of the year. New York v. New York City R. Co., 193 N. Y. 543, 86 N. E. 565 [affirming 124 N. Y. App. Div. 936, 109 N. Y. Suppl. 1126 (affirming 55 Misc. 134, 106 N. Y. Suppl. 293)]. But it has been held that a grant conditioned that the cars shall be licensed and the grantees shall pay an annual fee of a stated amount per car for such license is too clear for the application of the rule of practical construction, and that it requires payment for each car operated and not merely for the greatest number in daily use during the busiest season of each year. New York v. New York City R. Co., 126 N. Y. App. Div. 36, 110 N. Y. Suppl. 720 [affirmed in 193 N. Y. 680, 87 N. E. 1117].

In ascertaining the number of cars subject to such tax, the number of car trucks alone should be considered, and it is immaterial that the car body on the truck may be changed from a winter to a summer body, as such bodies when not in use, and in the shops or barns, are merely auxiliary parts of the cars in actual use, and are not subject to the license-tax. Where the statute provides that when the gross earnings shall during any period of six months exceed a stated average per day, the company shall thereafter pay a certain percentage to the city, the obligation to pay arises as soon as the company has received the required average as gross earnings for any period of six months, and that period does not have to be wholly within any one fiscal year. may consist of a certain sum to be annually paid for each mile of railroad constructed.[93] Under some provisions the license-tax on the earnings of a street railroad company attaches to the earnings of the entire line, including that part which extends beyond the city limits,[94] but under other provisions it is otherwise.[95] An agreement that a street railroad company shall pay a certain per cent of its net income in such manner as the "legislature may thereafter direct" does not fix any obligation on the company to pay such amount, until the legislature by further legislation directs the manner of payment.[96]

c. Amount of Fee or Tax. Where the power of imposing such a license fee or tax is vested in the municipality, the amount thereof rests in the first instance within its discretion, and it may impose such fees or taxes as in its opinion the public interests require,[97] and it may from time to time in its discretion increase or diminish the amount of such fee or tax; [98] and in the absence of abuse or fraud the courts will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion.[99] The amount of such fee or tax, however, must be reasonable,[1] and if there is a manifest abuse of discretion or fraud the courts are justified in interfering.[2] The elements which enter into the reasonableness of such a fee or tax are the necessary or probable expenses incident to the issuing of the license, and the probable expense of proper inspection, regulation, and police surveillance;[3] and the municipality may fix the amount of such fee in advance without waiting until the end of the period for which the license is granted,[4] and may make the charge large enough to carry any reasonable anticipated expense,[5] and such charge cannot be avoided because it subsequently appears that it was somewhat in excess of the actual expense.[6]

d. Payment[7] and Penalty. A municipality is not estopped from recovering a license fee or tax by reason of the fact that it has failed for some years to assert its right thereto,[8] or by reason of the fact that for several years it has accepted a lesser amount than that due it,[9] or by the fact that it has neglected part of its supervisory duty during the year.[10] Payments on a license fee or tax are to be applied as of the date made, extinguishing principal and interest under the ordinary rule as to partial payments.[11] If such fee or tax is not paid when due, the tax bills bear interest like other taxes,[12] and an action of assumpsit will lie to recover the same.[13] Some statutes or ordinances providing for such fees or taxes exact a penalty as a means of enforcing the taking out of a license and the paying of the license-fee,[14] and under such a provision mandamus will not lie to enforce the requirements thereof.[15]

B. Operation — 1. Duty to Operate.[16] A street railroad company occupies a dual relation, a public relation to the people and a private one to its stockholders.[17] In its public relation it is the duty of the company in the exercise of its rights, privileges, and franchises for the benefit of the public to maintain and operate its road according to the terms of the ordinance or statute which confers such right, privileges, and franchises upon it,[18] which duty transcends its

W. 54], holding that where mere permission is granted to a company by ordinance to construct and operate a line of street railroad, its acceptance of such permission by constructing the line does not impose upon it such an undertaking to continue to operate its entire line as the state can enforce by mandamus.

An implied condition attaches itself to the duty to its stock-holders,[19] and the performance of which may in a proper case be compelled by mandamus.[20] When therefore a street railroad company has constructed and put in operation its road as authorized, it is its duty to operate such road, and it ordinarily has no right at its mere will and discretion to abandon the operation of the road or any portion thereof,[21] without the consent of the granting power,[22] except as to such portions of the road as public convenience and safety demand should be abandoned,[23] or as to a portion which can be operated only at a loss;[24] and this duty extends to a company which succeeds to the rights, franchises, and obligations of the original company,[25] and in some jurisdictions is enforced by special statutory provision.[26] A street railroad company cannot excuse its failure to perform its duty to operate on the ground that it has been prevented by violence from doing so, if the civil authorities have not failed to protect it fully in its efforts to operate,[27] or on the ground that it cannot get employees to accept its terms.[28]

2. Companies and Persons Liable For Injuries — a. In General. As a general rule a street railroad company assumes by the acceptance of the grant of its franchise from the state or municipality a duty toward the public of seeing that its franchise is properly exercised, and therefore is liable for any neglect thereof,[29] and cannot, without legislative or municipal authority, permit another company or person to exercise its franchise so as to avoid the liabilities incident thereto.[30]

Excuse for failure to operate.— The fact that the located route of a street railroad is laid across a bridge which is under the control of a certain board which will not permit the tracks to be laid thereon unless on proper and reasonable regulations for the safety of the bridge furnishes no excuse why the road should not be operated on its route through the streets lying on either side of such bridge. Where the road has been placed in the hands of a receiver, the company owning the same is not liable for injuries due to the negligence of the receiver or his employees,[31] the receiver in his official capacity being liable therefor;[32] but if the receiver abandons a part of the road to the company, it is thereafter liable for negligent acts or omissions in regard to such part.[33] It is also well settled that a company using or operating a street railroad, although not the owner thereof, is liable for its own negligence or that of its own servants.[34] But a company which is merely using the track of another company, without any obligation to keep the track in repair or any right to interfere therewith, is not liable for defects in the street or track;[35] nor is a succeeding company ordinarily liable for injuries caused by the negligence or improper operation of the road by its predecessor.[36] Where two companies jointly operate a street railroad, partly owned by each, each is liable for the negligence of the other in operating the same.[37] Both a street railroad company and a telephone company are liable for injuries caused by a broken wire of the telephone company falling across the wire of the railroad company when both knew or should have known of its defective condition.[38]

b. Lessor and Lessee.[39] As a general rule a street railroad company cannot, without legislative or municipal authority, divest itself of any of the duties and liabilities incident to the maintenance and operation of its road by leasing the road to another,[40] and hence if the lease is unauthorized, the lessor company will remain liable for the torts of the lessee in the operation of the road;[41] and in some cases it is held that the lessor is so liable, without express reference to whether or not the lease was authorized.[42] Where, however, there is legislative or municipal authority for the lease, the question of the liability of the lessor for the torts of the lessee is one on which there is a great diversity of judicial opinion.[43] In some jurisdictions it is held that where there is legislative or municipal authority for the lease, the lessor company is thereby absolved from liability for the torts of the lessee company,[44] unless such liability is expressly reserved in the statute or ordinance,[45] or the lease is to an irresponsible company,[46] or unless the control of the road is reserved by the lessor, in the lease.[47] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that, although there is legislative or municipal authority for the lease, the lessor is not absolved from such liability unless in addition to such authority there is a provision expressly exempting the lessor from liability,[48] notwithstanding the lessee agrees to assume all liability.[49] It is well settled, however, that the lessee company is liable for all injuries caused by its own negligence or that of its servants in the operation of the leased road;[50] but not for injuries caused by the negligence of an assignee of the lease or of the assignee's servants,[51] or for torts committed by the lessor prior to the execution of the lease, unless such liability is assumed in the lease.[52] Neither the lessor nor the lessee of a street railroad is liable for the negligent maintenance or operation of the road while in the hands of a receiver.[53]

injury due to the negligence or improper operation of the road occurring after it has parted with its ownership, operation, and control,[54] although it may be liable for injuries due to the fact that the road was not properly constructed at the time of delivery.[55] The purchaser of a street railroad is liable for damages caused by its own negligence the same as any other owning company;[56] and where the sale is a judicial one, the court in ordering the sale may impose a liability for past damages upon the purchaser as a part of the consideration for the purchase.[57]

d. Street Railroad Company or Municipality. A street railroad company is liable for injuries caused by a failure to keep its tracks in repair,[58] or by a failure to keep the street in repair, where, under the terms of its grant, or by statute or ordinance, it is under the duty to repair the same,[59] although the municipality is also negligent in permitting the defect to remain in the street,[60] or although the defective condition in fact results from a failure of the municipality to keep its street in repair.[61] But a street railroad company is not liable for the negligence of the municipal authorities,[62] and although it is under the duty to repair the streets, it is not liable for a defect which is one of construction by the municipality, and for which the municipality alone is responsible, and which the company is not at liberty to alter,[63] unless it has assumed the duty of protecting travelers therefrom.[64] A grant, however, to a street railroad company of the privilege of constructing its tracks in the streets and running cars thereon does not exonerate the municipality from liability for failing to keep its streets in proper repair should the company fail to do so;[65] but if the municipality is compelled to pay damages in such a case by reason of the railroad company's negligence or default, it may recover over against the company.[66]

Necessity for acceptance of ordinance.— The violation of a general ordinance prescribing a penalty for a violation thereof, but which is not made a part of the ordinance granting the company's franchise, does not authorize a recovery for injuries or death caused by such violation, unless the company has agreed to or contracted to be bound by such ordinance. in the opposite direction is not negligence in itself, independent of other circumstances and conditions.[75] The unauthorized transportation of freight for hire for others over its tracks may constitute negligence which will render the company liable for the resulting injuries;[76] but this does not apply to the transportation of anything which it is reasonably necessary for the company to transport as incidental to the proper management of its legitimate business.[77]

(II) DEGREE OF CARE REQUIRED.[78] While a street railroad company is required to exercise a very high degree of care in the operation of its road in public streets and highways,[79] it is not, as regards the general public in the streets on which it runs, required to exercise as high a degree of care as it owes to passengers on its cars,[80] or as is required of a steam railroad operating its cars on the streets;[81] but is only required to exercise what under the circumstances is ordinary care and prudence; that is, it is required to exercise such care and vigilance in the management and operation of its cars to avoid injuring persons rightfully upon such streets or highways as a person of ordinary prudence and capacity may be expected to exercise under the same or similar circumstances,[82] and it is

Where the car used is of the kind in general and ordinary use by other companies engaged in the same business, the mere use of such car at a curve where the running board overlaps the sidewalk, but in a manner in all other respects careful and proper, does not of itself constitute negligence. Where there is an appliance which, in the reasonable operation of an elevated railroad, could be used to prevent sparks from falling to the street and injuring pedestrians there, it is the duty of the company to avail itself thereof, and it is not enough for it to do all that can be reasonably required to prevent sparks, but it is bound to do all that it reasonably can, if it is impossible to prevent sparking, to see that no one is injured by the sparks. Failure to give signal continuously.— Where a street car, which is in good condition, with an electric headlight, approaches a crossing on a clear, still night at a time when there is not much traffic, and there is no unusual obstruction preventing a view of the car by a person approaching on a cross ticular crossing,[39] or that other means be taken thereat to prevent accidents.[40] Street cars running in the night-time should be provided with such lights as will enable the motorman or driver to see far enough ahead to avoid, in the exercise of ordinary care, a collision with a person or vehicle on the track,[41] or as will be sufficient to warn travelers of the car's approach and put them on their guard,[42] particularly where such lights are required by statute or ordinance;[43] but the company is not bound to provide a particular kind of light, if the one in use is as good or better.[44]

f. Employing Conductor.[45] It is usual to have a motorman and conductor on a train consisting of a car and trailer carrying passengers;[46] but the failure of a street railroad company to provide a car with a conductor is not of itself such negligence as will render the company liable for injuries caused by such car,[47] unless the absence of a conductor causes the motorman to so neglect his duties as motorman, in order to perform the duties of conductor, that the injury is thereby caused.[48] In the absence of statute or ordinance otherwise a horse car may be run without a conductor.[49]

g. Care as to Licensees. As a general rule a street railroad company owes no duty to a mere licensee on its car to be actively vigilant to look out for and avoid injuring him,[50] and is bound only not to wantonly or intentionally injure him,[51] or to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him after it discovers his wantonly, recklessly, or wilfully injuring a trespasser, whose presence is known,[58] or to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring him after discovering his peril;[59] and the company therefore is not liable for injuries caused to a trespasser on a car whose presence or peril is not known,[60] or whose injuries are caused without any negligence on the part of the operatives of the car.[61] Where such trespasser is a child due regard should be paid, after he is discovered, to the known indiscretion of childhood, and the inability of children to exercise proper precaution for their own safety,[62] and it will generally be negligence to allow such a child to ride on the steps of the platform, when his presence in a situation thus exposed to danger is actually known or the circumstances are such as will make a failure to note his peril palpable neglect of duty on the part of those having the control of the car.[63] In removing or ejecting a trespasser from a car the company's employees may lawfully use only such force as is reasonably necessary to accomplish that object,[64] and if they use more force than is necessary in removing the trespasser or eject him in a careless and reckless manner whereby he is injured the company is liable therefor.[65] Thus a street railroad company is liable for injuries caused to a trespasser, particularly a child, by forcibly ejecting him from a car while it is in motion,[66] or by so frightening him by gestures or otherwise as to cause him to jump or fall from a moving car.[67]

(II) On Tracks. As a general rule a street railroad company is under no duty to keep a lookout for trespassers on its track or private right of way, at points where it has a right to assume that the track is clear,[68] and this rule applies as well to children as adults;[69] but its only duty is to use all proper precautions to avoid injuring such a trespasser after discovering his peril, as by sounding the gong or whistle and taking proper precautions to stop the car when necessary.[70] But where from the locality and circumstances known to the company there is reason to apprehend that the tracks will not be clear from persons or vehicles,[71] as where the tracks are so placed in a street as to become a part and parcel of the street,[72] it is the duty of the driver or motorman to keep a lookout for children and others on the street, and to use all reasonable precautions upon the first appearance of danger to avoid injury.[73]

i. Frightening Animals — (I) In General. As a general rule a street railroad company is entitled to the use of the street on which its tracks are laid, for the operation of its cars, equally with riders and drivers of horses,[74] and is not liable for injuries caused by horses on or near its tracks becoming frightened at the company to recover for injuries sustained by him by reason of leaving the car in obedience to an order of the driver, when it is moving at such a rate that the attempt to get off is dangerous, if he exercises reasonable care.

Statement of rule.— Where a railroad is built in a street in such a way as to become a part of it, that is, when the ties are embedded below the surface and the rails are flush with the surface, it becomes a part of the street and the public have the same right to use it as any other part of the street, but must observe care in looking out for approaching cars, with the consequent duty on the part of the servants of the company to keep a lookout for persons or vehicles; but where the ties are laid above the surface of the street and the rails placed thereon, thus raising them above the surface, such road-bed does not constitute a part of the street, and the public have no more right to the use of it than if it was not a street or road at all, and no duty rests on the operatives to keep a lookout for persons on it. See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 193.

A street railroad company has no paramount right of way on every portion of the streets, except at adjoining streets, but has only a paramount right upon its tracks and for a sufficient space for the cars to pass, and beyond that has no greater rights than any other person using the highway. Newman v. New York, etc., R. Co., 127 N. Y. App. Div. 12, 111 N. Y. Suppl. 289.

Three considerations are usually relied upon to confer upon street railroad companies this priority of way, viz., that their tracks necessitate a fixed course, which makes it possible to turn cars to the side; that such companies are generally authorized to propel heavy cars by powerful motor force, in consequence of which the momentum and inertia of street cars differ from that of ordinary vehicles; and that general convenience demands rapid and undeterred transit by such public service companies. Bremer v. St. Paul City R. Co., 107 Minn. 326, 120 N. W. 382, 21 L. R. A. N. S. 887.

[X, B, 3, j, (I), (A)] given to the company by ordinance.[97] Subject to this qualification, the rights of the company and of the traveler on the street to use that part of the street occupied by the street railroad tracks are equal and reciprocal,[98] a traveler on the street having as much right, if in the exercise of due care, to go across or along

Repairing overhead wire.— Although the right of a street railroad company, even to that part of the street occupied by its rails, is only in common with that of other travelers, its right to use an ordinary and usual appliance upon the track to repair the overhead wire is, for a reasonable time, paramount. Potter v. Scranton Traction Co., 176 Pa. St. 271, 35 Atl. 188.

Compared with ordinary railroad.—A street railroad company does not have a paramount right as does an ordinary freight and passenger railroad company over its right of way. Eckington, etc., R. Co. v. Hunter, 6 App. Cas. (D. C.) 287; Bremer v. St. Paul City R. Co., 107 Minn. 326, 120 N. W. 382, 21 L. R. A. N. S. 887. But see Flewelling v. Lewiston, etc., Horse R. Co., 89 Me. 585, 36 Atl. 1056. There is a natural and necessary difference between the fundamental right of an ordinary freight and passenger railroad to its right of way and the right of a street car company to use the streets of a city. The railroad company, by gift, voluntary transfer for consideration, or condemnation with compensation, secures a fee or an incorporeal hereditament, and operates its roads by virtue of ownership; the street car company obtains a privilege to build its tracks and operate its cars without gift, purchase, or condemnation of land. That privilege creates no new servitude upon the highway, but makes possible an additional use of such highway, consistent with and in furtherance of the purposes of its original dedication. The railroad company may have an estate; the street car company always has a franchise. The lands over which a railroad company builds its road are withdrawn from general or private use; the surface of a street is open to common travel. The way of a railroad company is used by it exclusively, subject to limited rights at public or private crossings; a street is used concurrently by the street car company and by the public. City streets are public highways on which all may travel, and neither a pedestrian, a street car, nor a carriage has any exclusive right, but their rights are relative. Kinlen v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 216 Mo. 145, 115 S. W. 523.

The fact that a street railroad company owns in fee its right of way, constituting a part of a street, does not affect its relation to the traveling public, where its patronage is dependent upon its relation to the street, and where it maintains a platform on one side of its right of way and partly on the street for the accommodation of passengers. One horseback riding on a public highway on which a street railroad company maintains a track has a joint right of way with the street railroad company, even on those portions of the thoroughfare traversed by its tracks, and hence has a lawful right to travel on the tracks, by maintaining a reasonable degree of vigilance in looking and listening for a car drawing near from behind. Brown v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 310, 83 S. W. 310.

A distinction is made that where a railroad is built in a street or public road, so as to be incorporated with and become a part of the road-bed of the street or road, and the rails are level with the surface, the public has not only the right to cross it, but also to pass along and use it as any other part of the street or road, being careful to look for and avoid approaching trains or cars, and the operatives of trains and cars on such a railroad are under a duty to keep a lookout for persons exercising their right; but where the railroad is not level with the surface of the street or road, but the rails are placed on ties laid on the surface of the highway, the public has no more right to use it than if it were not in a street or road at all. An ordinance giving ambulances the right of way, being one of the restrictions under which a street railroad company operates its cars, is admissible in an action for injuries by a street car colliding with an ambulance, since the violation of an ordinance is some evidence of negligence. Where the night is dark, and a street car is lighted up, the driver of a wagon cannot impose on a street car company the duty to exercise greater vigilance than the law requires of himself, by driving without any lights on his wagon, against recognized custom and regulations, relying on the vigilance of the street car driver. The right to stop a wagon, for the purpose of unloading, near a street railroad track, is subordinate to the right of way of the railroad company. It is the duty of a person so unloading a wagon to get out of the way to allow a car to pass, and the duty of the motorman to approach carefully, with his car under control, so that he can stop promptly to prevent an accident. one hand it is the duty of the company to exercise reasonable care and diligence to keep a lookout for persons and vehicles upon or near the track,[6] warn them of the car's approach,[7] give them a reasonable opportunity to get off or keep off the track,[8] and not negligently run into or otherwise injure them;[9] and the fact that the right of way over its tracks is expressly given to the company by a statute or ordinance does not relieve it from exercising ordinary care to avoid colliding with a person, animal, or vehicle on the track.[10] And on the other hand, it is the duty of a traveler on or near the track when a car approaches to exercise reasonable care and diligence to get off or keep off the track until it passes,[11] so as not unreasonably to impede or interfere with its progress,[12] and so as not to be injured thereby;[13] and if he uses reasonable care to do so, and without any fault on his part is injured by carelessness or fault chargeable to the street railroad company, the latter is liable therefor.[14]

United States.— See Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton, 141 Fed. 599, 73 C. C. A. 1, holding that while street cars and drivers of vehicles, equestrians, and pedestrians have concurrent rights to occupy public crossings in a city, the right of the railroad at such point is superior in the sense that it is preferential as to the right of way.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 193.

A street crossing or intersection within the meaning of the above rule includes a point where two streets intersect a third so as to form a triangle (Solomon v. Buffalo R. Co., 96 N. Y. App. Div. 487, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 99), and a point where an avenue entering a street on which is a line of railway comprises a continuous line of traffic, with an avenue on the other side of the street, although their ends are not directly opposite (Freeman v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 87 N. Y. App. Div. 127, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 108; Brozek v. Steinway R. Co., 23 N. Y. App. Div. 623, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 345 [affirmed in 161 N. Y. 63, 55 N. E. 395]). But where the railroad track passes an intersecting street, which is at that point a cul-de-sac, the company has a "paramount right of way," but the exercise of such right must be exercised with ordinary prudence, in view of the physical condition of the locality. Hewlett v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 63 N. Y. App. Div. 423, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 531.

Where a vehicle is proceeding along the same street as a car, and there is a mere attempt to cross to the other side, at the intersection instead of at some other point, the rule that at an intersection of streets the rights of a street car and of a crossing vehicle are equal has no application; but in such case the care required of the driver of the vehicle is as though there were no intersection. right of way at the crossing if, proceeding at a rate of speed which, under the circumstances of the time and locality, is reasonable, he reaches the point of crossing in time to safely go upon the tracks in advance of an approaching car, the latter being sufficiently distant to be checked, and if need be stopped before it reaches him.[19] But on the other hand it has been held that if a street car going at a reasonable rate of speed will reach the crossing first, it has the right of way.[20] It has been held that a street car is not required to stop at a street intersection for a funeral procession to pass or to give it the right of way.[21]

4. Defects and Obstructions — a. In General. As a general rule it is the duty of a street railroad company to exercise reasonable care to so construct and maintain its tracks and equipment in a public street or highway as to restore and keep the street or highway in a reasonably safe condition for travel by pedestrians and vehicles;[22] and hence it is liable for injuries resulting to persons or animals rightfully using the street or highway, from the unsafe condition of such street or highway, caused by its failure to properly perform its duty in the construction and keeping in repair of its tracks and equipment,[23] such as the cable or trolley

Duty to stop.— Where a person approaches a street crossing toward which a car is approaching, the duty is on the party to stop and avoid a collision who can most easily and readily adjust himself to the exigencies of the case; and, where such person can do so more readily, the motorman has a right to presume that such duty will be performed. But a street railroad company is only required to exercise reasonable care in this regard,[29] and if the company uses such care in the construction and maintenance of its tracks or equipment, it is not liable for injuries caused thereby;[30] nor is it liable for injuries caused by defects in the street which are not due to its negligence and which it is under no duty to repair.[31] Nor can negligence be inferred from a single accident, and if the defect is not one from which a reasonable man might anticipate that injury would occur, particularly where it has proved to be safe and convenient in practice, and no other accident has ever happened because of it, it is not negligence.[32] Where a street railroad passes over private property on an embankment, the company is under no obligation to persons who pass along such embankment without invitation, to safeguard it by a fence or otherwise.[33]

b. Obstructions in Street or Highway. In accordance with the above rules a street railroad company is liable for injuries which result to persons and animals from obstructions which through its negligence in constructing, maintaining, and operating its tracks and equipment it has caused or permitted to remain in the street or highway,[34] as where it leaves, without proper safeguards, an excavation in contact with other wires.[41] But it is not a negligent obstruction to allow its cars to stand upon its tracks for a reasonable length of time,[42] such as on a spur track or switch for the purpose of allowing another car to pass,[43] unless it is in violation of a statute or ordinance;[44] nor is it liable for excavations not made by it and which it is under no duty to repair.[45] A street railroad company is not required, in removing from its tracks an obstruction wrongfully placed there, to place it where it will not be dangerous to travelers upon the street or highway, and if it merely shifts it from its tracks to another part of the street, without otherwise increasing the danger to travelers, it is not liable for injuries caused thereby.[46]

c. Notice of Defect or Obstruction. As a general rule it is the duty of a street railroad company to make an exact and continuous inspection of its tracks and equipment,[47] and if it fails to use reasonable care and diligence to repair a defect or obstruction which it is its duty to anticipate and provide against,[48] or which is visible and has existed for such length of time as to charge it with knowledge which it would have acquired by proper inspection,[49] it is liable for injuries resulting therefrom. But it is not liable for injuries caused by a defect or obstruction of which it has no knowledge and which has occurred so recently that the company could not, in the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered and repaired it before the accident.[50]

To permit the trolley wire at a point where it crosses a railroad, to sag several feet below the height of twenty-two feet above the railroad track, required by statute, whereby a brakeman on top of a freight train on the railroad is injured, is negligence, making the street railroad company liable for the injury. If a defect is visible, notice to the company is not necessary in order to make it liable for an injury caused thereby, since an omission to know of such a defect is prima facie negligence, and the presumption of negligence is complete when it appears that the defect existed and an injury was caused thereby. d. Approval of Officials or Compliance With Requirements as Excuse. If a street railroad company fails to use due care in constructing and maintaining its tracks and equipment in a reasonably safe condition for persons and vehicles using the street or highway, it is not relieved from liability for injuries caused thereby by the fact that it has lawful permission to operate its road,[51] or that in constructing and maintaining its road it has complied with the requirements of its charter or a municipal ordinance,[52] or with the plans, specifications, and requirements of a commission appointed for that purpose,[53] or that the tracks are constructed to the satisfaction of certain officers whose duty it is to pass upon and approve the same;[54] but the fact alone that the company constructs and maintains its tracks in the manner required by ordinance cannot constitute negligence on its part.[55] If the company constructs its tracks at a grade, which at some time in the future is to be the grade of the street, and such construction renders the street unsafe it is negligence on the part of the company,[56] unless it does so under direction of the proper authorities.[57]

e. Right to Pile Snow in Street. A street railroad company has a right to remove ice and snow from its tracks so as to enable it to exercise its franchise;[58] but in doing so, it is its duty to exercise reasonable care to so dispose of or distribute the removed ice and snow as not unreasonably to interfere with the use of the street by pedestrians and vehicles,[59] and this duty is sometimes expressly

That a street railroad company is authorized by the railroad commissioners to run cars before its track is finished and put in proper condition does not exempt it from liability for injuries resulting from the imperfect condition of its track. 5. Collisions — a. Between Cars or Trains [67] — (i) In General. It is the duty of those in charge of street cars upon intersecting lines when approaching or passing a crossing of the two lines to exercise reasonable care, commensurate with the danger of the situation, to avoid a collision.[68] Where neither of two street railroad companies has any right, by usage or otherwise, of precedence at the intersection of their roads, each company owes to the other the duty of exercising reasonable care, and has a right to assume that the other will fulfil its duty until apprised to the contrary; [69] and if one car has the right to the crossing by arriving there first, the person in control of an approaching car is bound to so govern the movement thereof as that, whether the first car goes fast or slow or even stops on the crossing, he can stop his car before striking it.[70] But where by statute or ordinance the cars of one company have a right of way over the cars of another company, such regulation should be recognized.[71] It is also the duty of the person in charge of a car which is approaching another car ahead on the same track to maintain such a distance from or to so reduce the speed of his own car that he can

Rule stated.— Where there is a temporary obstruction to the view, the person in charge of the car of one company is not negligent in attempting to cross the intersecting track, as he has the right where he has first put his car in motion to rely on the fact that the servants in charge of the car of the other company will not attempt to make the crossing until it is safe to do so. And where the servants of one company see or should see that the car of another company is already in motion and that a collision will probably result, they are negligent in attempting to cross the track. Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 82 Fed. 158, 27 C. C. A. 136.

The fact that the back end of one car is struck by the front end of another while passing over a crossing, on which the cars of the different lines have equal rights, of itself and without explanation, raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the colliding car. Under Mich. Comp. (II) DUTY AT STEAM RAILROAD CROSSING.[74] It is the duty of the persons in charge of a street car to use reasonable care to avoid a collision with an engine or train of a steam railroad which the street railroad crosses at grade.[75] It is the duty of such persons, as is sometimes provided by statute or ordinance, to stop the street car before reaching the steam railroad crossing, and not to cross until an employee of the company has gone ahead to ascertain whether the way is clear and signaled the car to proceed;[76] and where this duty is required by statute or ordinance, it should be exercised at crossings having gates and watchmen the same as at other crossings,[77] and even though there is but one employee on the car.[78] But in order that a street railroad company may be liable for its negligence in this respect, it must appear that the injury was directly caused by such negligence.[79]

b. Proximate cause.— A street railroad company is liable if the rider of a horse is thrown from the horse, not by the contact of the horse with the car, but by the fright of the horse, if the injuries sustained are caused by the negligence of the servants of the railroad company in running the car against the horse. Danville R., etc., Co. v. Hodnett, 101 Va. 361, 43 S. E. 606.

A statute relating to the liability of steam railroad companies for stock killed or injured by their locomotives or cars does not apply to street railroads. San Antonio St. R. Co. v. Wray, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 461.

Dogs.— A street railroad company, when its cars are properly equipped, is not liable in damages for the killing of a dog by one of its cars, unless the killing is done under such circumstances as to justify the conclusion that it is either wilful, wanton, or reckless. Moore v. Charlotte Electric R., etc., Co., 136 N. C. 554, 48 S. E. 822, 67 L. R. A. 470. But where dogs are fighting on a street railroad track, and they are apparently oblivious to an approaching car, the motorman upon discovering them in a position of peril must exercise reasonable care by using proper signals, or by checking the speed of the car, to avoid injuring them. Attempt to clear track.— A motorman who undertakes to clear the tracks at an upgrade by pushing a heavily loaded wagon with his car is so far acting within the scope of his employment that his failure to exercise reasonable care renders the company liable for an injury to the wagon and the team resulting therefrom. Chapman v. Public Service R. Co., (N. J. Sup. 1909) 72 Atl. 36. And a statutory provision directing policemen to "regulate the movement of teams and vehicles in streets" does not authorize a policeman to direct a motorman to use his car to push a coal truck blocking street car traffic, and thus render the company liable for the motorman's negligence in doing so. of the company cannot be inferred from the mere fact that there was a collision between a car and an animal or vehicle,[86] and it is not liable for the resulting injuries, if the servants in charge of the car exercise ordinary care and prudence, and the collision is merely an accident,[87] as where it results from the horse or team becoming frightened and suddenly springing, or backing the vehicle on the track in front of the car, too late for the car to be stopped.[88] Nor is the company liable if the collision and consequent injury is attributable to the injured party's own contributory negligence,[89] or to some intervening independent cause.[90] Where a street car stops in the middle of a street intersection, in violation of an ordinance or statute, whereby a vehicle collides with it, the street railroad company is liable for the resulting injuries.[91]

(II) What Constitutes Ordinary Care in General. In the absence of statutory or municipal regulations, the ordinary care which is to be exercised by a street railroad company to avoid a collision with an animal or a vehicle is such care as would be exercised by a reasonably prudent man under like circumstances, and depends upon the circumstances of each particular case,[92] such as

The rule that a steam railroad company owes no duty to trespassers on its track, except to use reasonable care to avoid their injury after they are seen, has no application to street railroad companies which occupy the streets of a city in common with the public, and a street railroad company is liable for an injury caused by one of its cars coming into collision with a wagon which is being driven on the track ahead of it, where the motorman, in the exercise of ordinary care, could have seen the wagon in time to stop his car before running into it. Robinson v. Louisville R. Co., 112 Fed. 484, 50 C. C. A. 357.

Where the wheels of a wagon extend over the tracks of a street railroad, and the motorman, by the use of proper care, could see them in time to stop the car, and fails to do so, and injuries result, the owner of the

is not required to exercise extraordinary precaution to avoid a collision;[4] nor is it an insurer of safety;[5] and where a motorman is confronted by a sudden and immediate danger, such as a runaway horse at a crossing, he is not required to do what, after mature deliberation, would have seemed to a prudent man to be the wisest thing to do under the circumstances.[6]

(III) DUTY TO STOP CAR. Except when required to do so by statute or ordinance,[7] the motorman or driver of a street car, if otherwise exercising due care, is not ordinarily required to stop his car immediately upon seeing an animal or vehicle on the street or highway near the track,[8] or approaching the tracks from an intersecting street,[9] or on the track in front of the car;[10] but if he gives a proper warning of the approach of his car,[11] he has the right to a limited extent at least, until the contrary appears, to act on the assumption that the animal or vehicle will, if on the track, be turned out in time to avoid a collision,[12] or, if on the part of the street or highway not occupied by the tracks, will remain there until the car has passed,[13] as that it will not attempt to cross the track in front of

Untied horse.— It is not the duty of a motorman when he sees a horse some distance away, left untied, between the track and the gutter, to slow down his car, and get it under such control that he can avoid a collision if the horse should suddenly go upon the track, since he may assume, until the contrary appears, that the horse is gentle, and not afraid of street cars. Application.—A rule of the company re-quiring that cars, when passing engine houses, must not go faster than four miles an hour, is not to be construed as applying only to the space directly in front of an engine house but includes the approach thereto. McKernan v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 138 Mich. 519, 101 N. W. 812, 68 L. R. A. 347.

Under the Greater New York Charter, Laws (1897), c. 378, § 748, as amended by Laws (1900), c. 155, giving the fire insurance patrol and fire apparatus proceeding to a fire the right of way in the streets over all vehicles except those carrying mail, and making it a misdemeanor to refuse to accord such right of way, it is abstractly the duty of a motorman to stop his car to give the street to a patrol truck, if it is seen, or by the exercise of reasonable care could be seen, in time to stop the car. Construction of ordinance.—Where a section of an ordinance provides that the apparatus of the fire department shall have the right of way while going to and at any fire, and another section provides that the cars of a street railroad company shall be entitled to the track, and that in all cases where any team shall meet or be overtaken, the team or vehicle shall give way to the car, the former section is controlling as to the right of way as between a street car and fire apparatus responding to an alarm.

laid have an equal right with the street railroad company to use such street,[31] it is the duty of the company to exercise such reasonable and ordinary care in the management and operation of its cars as the particular circumstances may require, to avoid injuring persons, such as pedestrians, who may be on or near its tracks in such street,[32] and if it fails to exercise such care it is guilty of negligence and liable for injuries caused thereby,[33] provided such negligence is the proximate cause of the injuries.[34] Thus it is the duty of the company to exercise such care as is reasonably demanded by all the surrounding circumstances, in

b. Persons Passing Behind Cars or Vehicles. It is not negligence for a car driver or motorman to operate his car in the usual manner at a point where there is another car on the opposite track or another vehicle near the track, if he has no reason to anticipate that persons may come on to the track from behind such other car or vehicle;[40] but if he has reason to anticipate such an occurrence, as where the other car, bound in the opposite direction, is at a crossing or other point discharging passengers,[41] it is his duty to take such circumstances into consideration, and to operate his car accordingly, as by sounding the bell or gong,[42] reducing the speed of the car,[43] and if necessary stopping it.[44] But the mere fact that a person in going behind a street car is injured by running into a fender which is down does not establish negligence on the part of the company, where it is not customary to keep such fenders raised,[45] or where, although such is the custom, in the particular instance it is down without any want of care on the part of the company.[46]

c. Approach to Street Crossing. It is the duty of the motorman or driver of a street car, approaching a public street crossing, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care under the circumstances to avoid injuring persons who may be on or approaching such crossing, as by keeping a lookout ahead, sounding the bell or gong, and running at a reasonable rate of speed,[47] a greater degree of watchfulness and care being required at such places than under other circumstances;[48] and a failure to exercise such care is negligence for which the company is liable,[49] unless the person injured is guilty of negligence, which contributes directly to his injury.[50] Thus ordinarily it is negligence, for which the company is liable, for the driver or motorman of a street car to run his car at a rapid rate of speed past a street crossing at which a car, bound in the opposite direction, is discharging passengers.[51]

d. Duty on Seeing Person On or Approaching Track. Statement of rule.— A motorman having a reasonable basis for the belief that an adult person on the track is aware of the approach of the car may presume that he will get out of danger as the car approaches, but a motorman sounding his bell cannot assume that all within hearing will take notice that a car is approaching, and he can make no such assumption in justification of his failure to take reasonable precautions until at least he has reasonable grounds for believing that his warning is heeded or the presence of the car recognized, and that the person threatened is competent to protect himself by the

and in such a case the driver or motorman is not bound to anticipate that such person will stay on or get on the track, and to take steps to avoid injuring him, by slackening the speed or stopping the car, until it becomes reasonably apparent that he cannot or will not get out or keep out of the way;[58] and if in view of his right to act on such assumption the driver or motorman exercises reasonable care and caution to warn such person of his peril and to slacken the speed or if necessary stop the car in time to avoid injuring him, but is unable to avert an accident, by reason of such person's suddenly going upon or near the track, the street railroad company is not liable for the resulting injuries.[57] But at the same time it is the duty of the driver or motorman to make an intelligent use of his senses to ascertain whether such a person is in peril,[58] and if the driver or motorman sees, or by the exercise of ordinary care and caution could see, from the person's condition,[59] or from the other surrounding circumstances, that he is in danger and probably will not or cannot get out or stay out of danger, it is his duty to use all reasonable means within his power, consistent with the safety of exercise of ordinary care. Riley v. Consolidated R. Co., 82 Conn. 105, 72 Atl. 562.

Infirm person.— It is the duty of a motorman in charge of a car to take special care to have the car sufficiently under control to enable him to avoid collision with aged and infirm persons on foot whose infirmities are plainly evident and who may be crossing the

the passengers, to slacken the speed of his car or to stop it if necessary in time to avoid injuring such person, and if he fails to do so the company is liable for the resulting injuries.[60] Thus under such circumstances it is ordinarily negligence, for which the company is liable, for the driver or motorman to fail to give a proper warning of the approach of his car,[61] except where the injury would not be prevented thereby,[62] as where the person injured has actual knowledge of the

The speed of the car and whether the bell was rung may be considered in determining whether employees in charge of a street car did all in their power to avert injury after discovering a traveler's perilous position, or by ordinary care could have discovered it. Kinlen v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 216 Mo. 145, 115 S. W. 523.

Injury to dog.— The motorman of a street car is under no duty to stop the car to avoid injuring a dog, unless there is something about the dog's action and movements, or inaction, to indicate that he is unable to get off the track or is oblivions of the approach of the car; and in the latter case the motorman is under the duty to use ordinary care to frighten the dog off or check or stop the car. e. Vigilance of Persons in Charge of Car. It is the duty of the driver or motorman of a street car to exercise reasonable and ordinary care to discover persons using the street on or near the track, and liable to be injured by his car, in time to avoid injuring them,[64] and if he fails to discover a person on or near the track, when by the exercise of ordinary care he could have done so in time to stop the car or otherwise avoid the injury, it is negligence for which the company is liable.[65] Thus it has been held that a street railroad company is liable for an accident which is caused by a moving car while the driver is inside the car collecting fares or making change for passengers.[66]

f. Injuries to Children and Others Under Disability. As a general rule a higher degree of care on the part of a street railroad company in the operation of its cars is required toward a child who, owing to his immature years, is incapable of realizing and appreciating the proximity of danger and the necessity of care and caution to avoid injury than is required toward an adult whose knowledge and experience better enable him to look out for himself,[67] and a higher degree of care must also be exercised toward a person who, from any apparent disability or other cause, cannot be expected to exercise the usual degree of prudence and care for his own protection.[68] But at the same time the company is only required to exercise what under the circumstances is ordinary care, taking into consideration the apparent age and ability or disability of the child, or of the infirm person, to care for himself.[69] Thus a driver or motorman, when operating his car on a street where he has reason to expect the presence of children or infirm persons, must exercise a high degree of watchfulness,[70] and if he sees or by the exercise of ordinary care could see a child of tender years on or near the track he is not entitled to act on the assumption that such child will get off or stay off the track,[71] but itself is negligent,[85] and notwithstanding the injured person's actions are influenced by the actions of a third person.[86] If a person is familiar with the track and the conditions relative to the running of cars, he must avail himself of his knowledge in exercising ordinary care;[87] but he need not exercise extraordinary care, prudence, or foresight,[88] or take special precautions against unknown or unusual dangers;[89] nor is he guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery if, in an emergency, he does not pursue the best course to protect himself.[90] As regards an elevated railroad, a person on the surface of the street is not bound to wait until a train on such road has passed, or until no train is passing overhead, before going under such structure;[91] nor is it necessarily contributory negligence for a person to look up as an elevated train is passing.[92] The owner of an animal injured by a street car may be guilty of contributory negligence in permitting such animal to get in the way of the car.[93]

(II) Reliance Upon Precautions of Company. A person on a public street ordinarily has, subject to certain qualifications, an equal right with the street railroad company to use that part of the street occupied by its tracks,[94] and in exercising care for his own protection he has a right to act on the assumption that the company will exercise ordinary care in managing its road and operating its cars,[95] unless he has knowledge to the contrary,[96] and a failure to anticipate and guard against negligence of the company is not necessarily negligence on the part of a person injured thereby;[97] and it has been held that if the company by its own negligence throws a person off his guard or puts him in peril, the conduct of such person will not be regarded as contributory negligence under any circumstances.[98] But the right to act on such an assumption does not entitle a person to rely entirely upon a proper performance by the company of its duties, and relieve him from exercising reasonable care and precaution for his own protection, and hence his failure to exercise such care and precaution is not excused by the fact that he relied upon the company's exercising ordinary care,[99] or by the company's failure to take a certain precaution, if he did not rely upon such precaution.[1]

(III) EFFECT OF CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. Negligence on the part of a person injured on or near a street railroad track, which continues up to the time of his injury and forms a proximate cause, without which the injury would not have happened, precludes a recovery for such injury,[2] and in the absence of a statutory provision otherwise it precludes a recovery, notwithstanding negligence on the part of the company concurs in causing the injury,[3] as in

Where a person employed in sweeping a street crossing over which several street car lines pass, and with which he is familiar, steps between the tracks in getting out of the way of a north-bound car, and is struck by a south-bound car, he is guilty of contributory negligence. Daly v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 105 Mich. 193, 63 N. W. 73.

One working in a trench under a street car track is not entitled to rely on the motorman of an approaching car giving him warning of such approach, or on his sense of hearing alone, and is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery if he permits his mind to become so engrossed in his work that he fails to take proper precautions, either by looking or listening to ascertain the approach of a car. Where a man marching in a procession is run into by a street car, the same rule of contributory negligence applies as in the case of an ordinary traveler on the street. Brown v. Broadway, etc., R. Co., 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 106.

Where a person walks on the tracks at a point which is not a public street, and there gets his foot caught in a safety device and is injured by a car, he is guilty of contributory negligence, preventing a recovery unless defendant's servants could, by proper care after discovering the danger, avoid the accident without endangering its passengers and employees. Williams v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 114 Mo. App. 1, 89 S. W. 59.

Walking over trestle.—A passenger on a street car in the night-time, who is a stranger and has been carried past his destination, and is directed by the conductor to go back along the track, but to go around a trestle, which is dangerous, is guilty of negligence if he goes on the trestle, and cannot recover for an injury received by being struck there by a passing car. Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Young, 60 N. J. L. 193, 37 Atl. 1013.

An error of judgment and miscalculation on the part of one walking in dangerous proximity to a street car track as to the distance he can travel before an approaching car, which he sees and watches during the progress of his journey, will reach him, are insufficient to establish his right to recover, much less negligence on the part of the street railroad company, even in the absence of signals of the approach of the car. lessly rides from behind one car on to the adjacent track in front of an approaching car,[37] he is guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery, unless by the exercise of ordinary care the company could have avoided the rider's injury after discovering his peril.[38] But one who is unaccustomed to riding a bicycle is not guilty of contributory negligence so as to preclude a recovery, where he loses control of the bicycle, and is injured through the negligent operation of a car.[39]

f. Persons Crossing Track — (I) CARE REQUIRED IN GENERAL — (A) General Rules. Ordinarily it is not negligence per se to attempt to cross a street railroad track on which a car is approaching some distance away,[40] or to cross between two standing cars;[41] but it is the duty of a person crossing, whether at a street crossing or at a point between intersecting streets, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care to learn of the approach of cars and keep out of the way and avoid being injured,[42] the degree of care required depending upon the apparent of care is required in crossing an electric railroad than in crossing a horse railroad,[45] as high a degree of care is not required in crossing a street railroad as in crossing an ordinary steam railroad.[46]

(B) Applications. A person is not guilty of contributory negligence from the mere fact that he attempts to cross a street railroad track in front of an approaching car where under ordinary conditions he would have sufficient time to cross in safety, as where the car is some distance away at the time,[47] but he is prevented the duty of attending to his own safety); Deitring v. St. Louis Transit Co., 109 Mo. App. 524, 85 S. W. 140.

New Jersey.— Slater v. North Jersey St. R. Co., 75 N. J. L. 890, 69 Atl. 163, 15 L. R. A. N. S. 840, holding that, in crossing a public street at a corner where a pavement crossing had been laid, plaintiff could assume that it was safe unless warned to the contrary, and, when using the crossing, was not guilty of contributory negligence because, on observing an approaching street car, to avoid danger, she stepped on a portion of the crossing covered with oil put there by defendant as a track lubricant, and was thrown down and injured.

New York.— Vandenbout v. Rochester R. Co., 129 N. Y. App. Div. 844, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 760 (that approaching car would slow down at crossing); Boyce v. New York City R. Co., 126 N. Y. time he is within the range of passing cars, and to look and listen until he is safely across, and that it is not sufficient merely to look before going on the track.

of negligence in the operation of cars;[89] and the fact that he makes a mistake in judgment, or does not pursue the best course, when placed in sudden peril, without his own fault, does not constitute contributory negligence.[90] But if such a rider or driver fails to exercise reasonable and ordinary care for his own protection, by reason of which he receives injuries, he is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover for such injuries,[91] unless the servants of the company fail to exercise ordinary care to avoid the accident after discovering his peril.[92] In exercising care for his own protection such a rider or driver has a right, to a limited extent at least, to act upon the assumption that the street railroad company will exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him,[93] although he is not justified him with negligence, where he does not voluntarily drive on the exposed track and wire, as where his horses became partially beyond his control); Citizens' R. Co. v. Gossett, 37 Tex. Civ. (II) DRIVING HORSE NEAR CARS. It is not contributory negligence per se for a person to drive a horse in a street on which a street railroad is operated,[96] where there is no reason to believe that it will become frightened and unmanageable by the operation of cars,[97] although he can drive on another street.[98] But it is contributory negligence for a person who knows that there is danger of his horse becoming frightened to drive it upon a street near street cars,[99] if he can drive on another street without serious inconvenience.[1]

(III) DRIVING ON OR ALONG TRACK IN GENERAL. Since a street railroad company has not an exclusive right to the use of that portion of the street occupied by its tracks,[2] it is not contributory negligence per se to drive a vehicle on or in close proximity to a street railroad track on a public street,[3] particularly where the public railroad company is operating cars, that the cars are being run thereon in obedience to an ordinance limiting the maximum rate of speed, and that the servants in charge of the cars are keeping a vigilant watch for vehicles and persons on or moving toward the track, and will, on the first appearance of danger, stop the car in the shortest time possible); Latson v. St. Louis Transit Co., 192 Mo. 449, 91 S. Statement of rule.— One driving along a street railroad track in a street sufficiently wide to permit a wagon to pass on either side of the track must exercise reasonable care, and use his opportunities for looking and listening for the approach of a car, and he cannot rely wholly on the motorman giving him warning of his approach, since the motorman is not bound to presume that persons will drive on the track without exercising some degree of care, and since he has

look to the rear at intervals to guard against a car approaching from that direction,[9] although he is not bound to constantly look back for that purpose.[10] In exercising reasonable care, however, the driver of a horse or team is entitled to act on the assumption that the servants in control of approaching cars will exercise reasonable care to look out for his safety and avoid running into him;[11] and the mere fact that a driver proceeds along the track for some distance in front of an approaching car without looking around does not charge him with contributory negligence in case of a collision, if, under all the circumstances his conduct is the right to assume that the right of way will not be blocked, and that one driving on the track will leave it in time to avoid a collision. Paladino v. Staten Island Midland R. Co., 127 N. Y. App. Div. 183, 111 N. Y. Suppl. 715.

It is not negligence, as matter of law, for one driving at night on the track of a street car company to fail to look behind him to see whether a car is approaching, but he must be on the alert in some manner, and by the exercise of some of his senses, as by listening, to discover if such is the case. When a driver should begin to turn his vehicle from the track must depend on the circumstances, on which the driver must exercise a reasonable judgment, and do what a prudent man, diligent to give free passage to the car, would do. Statement of rule.— There is no absolute rule requiring one driving along a street upon which are the double tracks of a street railroad, to either stop, look, or listen, before crossing such tracks, or to look back one or more times before going upon the tracks, to ascertain whether or not there is a car operated by electricity coming from behind, in such a manner as to probably or inevitably bring about a collision. Due care in approaching a street railroad crossing can be satisfied only by the full use should use increased care and caution in proportion to such condition.[53] Thus it is the duty of a person driving along a street, before turning to cross street car tracks, to use reasonable care to ascertain whether or not a car is approaching from the rear,[54] especially where the attempt to cross is made in the middle of a block or at any place other than a regular crossing.[55]

(B) Applications. If a rider or driver of a vehicle exercises every reasonable effort to ascertain whether a car is approaching before he attempts to go upon or across the tracks, he is not guilty of contributory negligence, notwithstanding he fails to see the car in time to avoid being injured.[56] But a person is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery, particularly where he is familiar with the tracks and the operation of cars, where he or his team is injured by a car which he might have discovered in time to avoid the accident, but which he does not so discover by reason of his failure to exercise proper care to look, or look and listen, for approaching cars,[57] as where he looks in one direction only and is of the senses of sight and hearing at the last moment of opportunity before passing the line between safety and peril, and it is only when deprived in some degree of the opportunity to observe that one may rely on his judgment as to chances in driving across the tracks. Goldmann v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc.. Co., 123 Wis. 168, 101 N. W. 384.

Obstruction to view.— Where a driver exercises due care to look for an approaching car at a point where he has an unobstructed view, he is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, where between such point and the point of crossing his view is obstructed, in failing to again stop and look for an approaching car (Hebblethwaite v. Detroit United R. Crossing to opposite track.— Where a driver on a street railroad track, in order to avoid a car coming toward him, deliberately crosses over to the opposite track in front of a car, which he has seen approaching from the rear, without looking to see where such car is, and which if he looks he could see is upon him, and he is struck and injured thereby, he is guilty of such contributory negligence as precludes a recovery. ing,[63] whereby he is injured by a car which he might have avoided by such care. But it has been held that where at the time a driver looks, or looks and listens, along the track, and starts to drive across, he has reasonable grounds for believing that he can cross in safety, taking into consideration his distance from the track and the distance at which a car is approaching, or could be seen approaching, if in sight, and the relative speed of his own vehicle and that of the car under ordinary circumstances, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross without further looking or listening,[64] particularly where his progress across the track is interfered with by a defect or obstruction of which he had no knowledge.[65]

(VII) FAILURE TO OBSERVE LAW OF THE ROAD. Except where there is a statutory or municipal regulation requiring vehicles to keep to the right hand side of the street,[66] a driver of a vehicle is not bound to cross over to such side, but is entitled to use the left hand side, unless and until he meets a vehicle coming from the opposite direction;[67] and the mere fact that a driver of a vehicle on a public street fails to observe the rule of keeping to the right is not such negligence as will preclude him from recovering for injuries sustained

67. Galbraith v. West End St. R. Co., 165 Mass. 572, 43 N. E. 501, holding that where a driver was struck by a car while attempting to cross the tracks of an electric street railroad, in order to proceed along the right hand side of the street, it was proper to charge that he had the right to drive on either side of the street, and it was for the jury to say what, under the circumstances, should have been done by a person exercising reasonable care in regard to crossing or not crossing the street at that time. See also STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.

through the negligence of the street railroad company,[68] even though there is a regulation requiring vehicles meeting each other to keep to the right, since such regulation does not apply to the meeting of ordinary vehicles with street cars.[69] Thus the mere fact that a driver, on meeting a street car, turns to the left to allow it to pass instead of to the right is not of itself contributory negligence;[70] but on the other hand it may be contributory negligence not to turn to the left, when by so doing an accident can be avoided.[71] But it may be contributory negligence to turn to the left in front of an approaching car, when the road or street to the right is passable.[72]

(VIII) OCCUPANT OF VEHICLE DRIVEN BY ANOTHER.[73] As a general rule the negligence of the driver of a vehicle, as in failing to properly look and listen for approaching cars, cannot be imputed to another occupant of the vehicle who is without personal fault,[74] unless such driver is the servant or agent of the occu-

E. 48 (holding that the fact that one drove into a dangerous place on a street, through his failure to observe the rule of keeping to the right thereof, is no defense to an action by him for resulting injuries against a street car company through whose negligence the danger existed); Spurrier v. Front St. Cable R. Co., 3 Wash. 659, 29 Pac. 346 (holding that it was proper to refuse to charge that, as plaintiff was driving on the wrong side of the street at the time of the accident, the presumption arises that the collision was due to her fault, since a person has a right to travel on any part of the street, provided he regards the rights of others).

It is not contributory negligence per se to drive on the right hand track of a double track road, while a car is seen approaching around a curve, which prevents him from determining on which track it is approaching until too late, and the car, by reason of its running on the same track contrary to custom, collides with his team causing his injuries. 72. Schlitz v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 44 N. Y. App. Div. 542, 60 N. Y. Teamster's helper.— It is not the duty of a teamster's helper to see that the teamster acts prudently, in the absence of knowledge or reason to believe that he is not a careful driver or prudent man, and hence he is not pant,[75] or the occupant otherwise has the right to direct and control the driver's actions,[76] as where the driver is of obvious or known imprudence or incompetency.[77] But this rule does not relieve the occupant from the duty of exercising ordinary care on his part to avoid being injured; [78] and if he has an opportunity to do so, it is no less his duty than that of the driver to learn of danger and avoid it if possible; and if he fails to exercise reasonable care to look or listen for approaching cars, or otherwise to save himself from injury, he is guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery.[79]

(IX) Driver of Fire Engine or Truck or Firemen Thereon. The mere fact that a fire engine, truck, or wagon has a right of way over street cars, whether by statute, ordinance, or otherwise,[80] does not relieve the driver thereof from exercising ordinary care, in driving across street car tracks, to avoid a collision,[81] the degree of care and diligence to be exercised by such driver depending upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case, and being such as a prudent

Relying on driver.—Where a person is riding by invitation with one whom he knows is a skilful, experienced driver, who has for many years been traveling the streets in vehicles such as they are riding in, and he sees the driver check his horse as they approach a street railroad, and lean forward beyond the side curtains and look for cars, and such person in his position cannot see through the glass in the side of the curtain, and does not hear a car approaching, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in relying on the care of the driver. It is negligence for such a driver in going to a fire to approach a street traversed by street cars without having his horses under such control as to permit of his stopping them. Garrity v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 112 Mich. 369, 70 N. W. 1018, 37 L. R. A.

person would exercise under like circumstances;[82] and although his duties may require him to take risks in crossing the tracks ahead of a street car which it would be negligence for a private person to take in pursuit of his private business,[83] if by reason of such driver's failure to exercise due care a collision with a car occurs, resulting in injuries to him or to his engine or truck, there can be no recovery therefor from the street railroad company.[84] But the negligence of the driver cannot be imputed to another fireman on his truck or wagon so as to preclude a recovery by the latter if he has exercised ordinary care for his own safety;[85] and a fireman riding on an engine or truck driven by another is ordinarily not required to keep a vigilant watch for cars, and if he uses reasonable care to avoid injuries after seeing an approaching car he is not negligent as a matter of law.[86]

A driver has a right to assume, when crossing a track, that the motorman on an approaching street car, on discovering the fire engine or truck, will so control his car as to give such engine or truck the right of way, as he is required to do by custom, ordinance, or statute. New York v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 90 N. Y. App. Div. 66, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 693 [affirmed in 182 N. Y. 536, 75 N. E. 1128]; Hanlon v. Wilwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 118 Wis. 210, 95 N. W. 100, holding that where it was undisputed that the uniform custom of street cars is to stop or slacken speed and give fire apparatus the right of way, it is not error to charge that plaintiff, the driver of a hose cart, was entitled to assume that defendant would comply therewith.

Rate of speed.— The mere fact that a fire engine or truck was driven at the time of the accident at a greater rate of speed than was allowable in the streets for a private carriage does not constitute contributory negligence. Chicago City R. Co. v. McDonough, 125 Ill. App. 223 [affirmed in 221 Ill. 69, 77 N. E. 577]; Flynn v. Louisville R. Co., 110 Ky. 662, 62 S. W. 490, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 57, holding that a speed of from ten to fifteen miles an hour is not such contributory negligence as will preclude the driver from recovery for injuries received in a collision with a street car.

The rule that a person approaching a street car track is bound to look and listen, and to continue to look and listen up to the last moment, when his acts would have been of any virtue in preventing a collision with a car, is inapplicable to the driver of a hose cart approaching a street railroad crossing. Ability to appreciate danger does not make a child between seven and fourteen years of age responsible for contributory negligence, but it must have a maturity and discretion beyond its years which will lead it to take care, and hence the liability of such a child for contributory negligence cannot be barred upon the sole fact that he had sufficient age and discretion to know the danger of going upon a street railroad track without stopping, looking, or listening for approaching cars. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Landrum, 153 Ala. 192, 45 So. 198, 127 Am. St. Rep. 25.

The capacity of a particular child to appreciate the danger of a car is not to be determined by a consideration of the abstract intelligence of children of that age, but by what that particular child understands; and if it exercises care commensurate with its intelligence, it discharges its duty to the company, and is not guilty of contributory negligence. The failure of a child of ordinary intelligence to look in both directions for an ap-

he is injured, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery.[93] Thus it has been held that a child is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery if he is of sufficient age and intelligence to appreciate danger and take such precautions as such a child would be reasonably expected to take, where he goes upon the tracks without properly looking or listening for an approaching car which he could have discovered in time to avoid the accident,[94] as where he attempts to cross without properly looking or listening immediately behind another car,[95] or where he carelessly or heedlessly attempts to cross in front of a car which he sees approaching in dangerous proximity.[96]

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 217.

Request to keep boy off car.— The fact that the father of a boy seventeen years old had previously requested the driver of a street car to keep the boy off the car does not excuse the boy's conduct in getting on the car without the knowledge or consent of the company, and needlessly and wantonly beating the mules, resulting in his injury. Taylor v. South Covington, etc., St. R. Co., 20 S. W. 275, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 355.

The rule requiring street car drivers to exercise vigilance in looking out for dangers to persons on the track, and to use reasonable diligence to prevent injury to a person after his peril is discovered, has no application to the case of a boy seventeen years old who jumps on a car and whips the mules, because such a boy not only assumes the attitude of a trespasser, but illegally interferes with the movement of the car, and thereby causes his own death or injury. (11) Old, Infirm, or Afflicted Persons. A person laboring under some physical disability, as where he is aged and feeble,[97] or otherwise afflicted,[98] must, in going upon or near a street railroad track, exercise caution and prudence in proportion to his disability. If some of his senses are impaired he must be more vigilant in the use of his remaining senses,[99] as where his hearing is defective he should be more alert in the use of his other senses.[1] Thus if a deaf person carelessly goes upon or along the tracks without properly looking for an approaching car, which he could have discovered in time to avoid injury, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery.[2]

8. Injury Avoidable Notwithstanding Contributory Negligence — a. In General. Under what is commonly known as "the last clear chance" doctrine, or as it is sometimes called, the "doctrine of discovered peril," or "humanitarian doctrine," a person may recover for injuries sustained through the negligent management or operation of a street railroad, although he is guilty of negligence in getting into a dangerous position upon or near the company's track, if, notwithstanding such negligence on his part, the servants of the company may, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, avoid injuring him after they discover his peril,[3] or by the weight of authority after they discover, or by the exercise of ton,[5] as where the driver or motorman of a car, after discovering a person in peril on or near the tracks, causes injury to such person by failing to exercise ordinary care in regard to checking the speed of or stopping the car,[6] or in regard to giving proper warnings or signals of its approach.[7] This doctrine, however, applies against the company only where the injured person's negligence is prior to the negligence of the company which causes the injury, and without which the injury would not have been caused. It does not apply where the injured person's negligence continues up to the time of the accident and directly contributes thereto,[8] as

Restarting car after accident.— The fact that a person is negligent in attempting to cross the track in front of an approaching car in a collision with which his wagon is overturned will not prevent a recovery for injuries received on account of negligence in restarting the car after it has come to a full stop after the collision, and again striking the wagon. where he attempts to cross in front of an approaching train, knowing that he is in peril in doing so;[9] and in some cases it has been held to apply only where the injured person is ignorant of the danger.[10] Nor does this doctrine apply where the injured person's peril is not discovered or could not be discovered by ordinary care until it is too late to avoid an accident;[11] or where the company exercises all reasonable care to avoid the accident after it discovers, or by ordinary care could discover, the injured person's peril, but is unable to avoid it,[12] unless its inability to do so is caused by its own negligence, as in not having a competent driver or motorman on the car,[13] not having it properly equipped,[14] or in running the car, at the time, at a reckless or unlawful rate of speed.[15] But mere knowledge of the presence of a person on or near the track without knowledge of his actual peril does not make the company liable for a failure to avoid injuring him,[16] since the company has the right in the absence of knowledge to the contrary to act on the assumption that such person will exercise ordinary care to keep out of danger.[17]

through the operation of a street railroad, notwithstanding contributory negligence on his part in going upon or near the tracks, where the injuries are caused by reckless, wilful, or wanton acts on the part of the servants of the company in the course of their employment.[18] To constitute wilfulness, wantonness, or recklessness within the meaning of this rule there must be conduct manifesting a reckless disregard of consequences under circumstances which indicate that the acts done or omitted will naturally or probably result in injury.[19] Thus it has been held that the injury is caused by recklessness, wilfulness, or wantonness, within the meaning of the above rule, where it is caused by a car being run at such a reckless rate of speed, at a place where the motorman knows that persons are likely to be on the track, that it cannot be stopped in time to avoid an accident, after seeing the person injured on the track;[20] or where after the motorman sees a person in peril on or near the track ahead he fails to use reasonable efforts to avoid an accident,[21] such as to give warning of the car's approach and to slacken the speed of or stop the car.[22] But a mere failure to discover the person injured cannot be made the basis for wanton or wilful misconduct;[23] nor is it wantonness or wilfulness merely to run a street car at a speed in excess of that prescribed by ordinance.[24]

9. Actions For Injuries — a. In General. Except in so far as regulated by special statutory provisions, the rules governing in civil actions for injuries generally apply in actions for injuries against street railroad companies, in regard to questions of jurisdiction and venue,[25] process,[26] parties,[27] and time to sue and limitations.[28]

b. Notice of Claim. Under the statutes in some jurisdictions it is required, as a condition precedent to an injured person's right to bring an action against a street railroad company, for the injuries sustained, that he shall give the company notice of his injuries within a prescribed time after the accident occurs,[29]

24. Anniston Electric, etc., Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45 (holding that the running of a street car in the streets of a populous city at a speed in excess of that prescribed by ordinance is merely simple negligence, and not wantonness or wilfulness); Highland Ave., etc., R. Co. v. Maddox, 100 Ala. 618, 13 So. 615 (holding that the fact that defendant, at a point outside the city limits, was running its car at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, and did not give any signal of approach, is not such wanton negligence as will entitle one who attempts to drive across its track without looking to damages sustained by being struck by such car).

25. See, generally, Courts, 11 Cyc. 633; Venue.

In Massachusetts the provision of St. (1877) c. 234, § 3, that any person injured by a defect in a highway may bring an action for tort therefor in the superior court, does not apply to an action of tort under St. (1871) c. 381, § 21, against a street railroad corporation, for an injury caused by a defective construction of its tracks; and the supreme court has jurisdiction of such an action brought before St. (1880) c. 28. Brookhouse v. Union R. Co., 132 Mass. 178.

Venue.— A suit for personal injuries from being struck by a street car is a transitory action, and cannot be defeated on the ground that the venue is laid in the wrong county. Chicago City R. Co. v. McMeen, 102 Ill. App. 318 [affirmed in 206 Ill. 108, 68 N. E. 1093].

Ohio Rev. St. § 6478, regulating service of process on railroad companies in actions in a justice's court is not applicable to street railroad companies. Greene v. Woodland Ave., etc., St. R. Co., 62 Ohio St. 67, 56 N. E. 642.

27. See, generally, Parties, 30 Cyc. 1.

President of company.— In an action against a street railroad company to recover for injuries sustained on account of the negligence of its employees, the company's president is not a proper party defendant. Brooks v. Galveston City R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 74 S. W. 330.

Receiver as a party.— In an action against a street railroad company for injuries sustained before the appointment of a receiver, where the evidence fails to show net earnings made by the receiver, the receiver is a proper, but not a necessary, party. Dallas Consolidated Traction R. Co. v. Hurley, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 246, 31 S. W. 73.

Under Mass Pub. St. c. 113, § 32, and c. 52, § 19, where one is injured owing to the presence of a ridge of snow between the tracks of a street railroad, the ridge having been caused by the manner in which a snow-plow was operated, it is not necessary to bring his action within two years as prescribed by the latter section. McMahon v. Lynn, etc., R. Co., 191 Mass. 295, 77 N. E. 826.

29. Peck v. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co., 77 Conn. 161, 58 Atl. 757 (within four months under Gen. St. (1903) § 1130); Shalley v. Danbury, etc., Horse R. Co., 64 Conn. 381, 30 Atl. 135; McMahon v. Lynn, etc., R. Co., 191 Mass. 295, 77 N. E. 826 (holding, however, that under Pub. St. c. 113, § 32, and c. 52, § 19, where one was injured owing to the presence of a ridge of snow between the tracks of a street railroad, the ridge having been caused by the manner in which a snow-plow was operated, it was not necessary for him to give notice). Compare Mattice v. Montreal St. R. Co., 20 Quebec Super. Ct. 222, holding that the provision in the charter of the Montreal Street Railway Company, compelling any one desiring to bring an action for damages against the company to give thirty days' notice, does not make such notice a condition precedent to the right of action; but it is merely a prejudicial requirement, the non-observance of which should be invoked by a dilatory exception.

Notice to city or person obliged to repair street.— A statutory provision requiring notice of an injury to be given the county, city, town, or person by law obliged to keep the way in repair does not apply in an action against a street car company for injuries resulting from defects in the street at a cross-in which the company had agreed with the city to guard. Phinney v. Boston El. R. Co., 201 Mass. 286, 87 N. E. 490, 131 Am. St. Rep. 400. But it does apply where an injury is occasioned by a defect in the highway by reason of the street railroad company's failure to keep its road in repair as required by statute, and the prescribed notice should be given to the street railroad company. Ma-unless there has been some conduct on the part of the company that amounts to a waiver of such notice.[30]

c. Pleading — (i) Complaint, Declaration, or Petition — (A) In General. Ordinarily the pleadings in an action for injuries caused by the negligent management or operation of a street railroad are governed by the rules of pleading applying in civil actions generally,[31] particularly those relating to actions for negligence.[32] The complaint, declaration, or petition in such an action should allege with clearness and certainty all facts necessary to constitute plaintiff's cause of action.[33] Thus it should make clear and distinct allegations showing the

An injury caused by running down a vehicle is not within a statute requiring notice to be given of injuries "suffered by any person in the management and use of its (the railway's) tracks," and no notice, under such statute, to the company of the injury is necessary. Vincent v. Norton, etc., St. R. Co., 180 Mass. 104, 61 N. E. 822.

Sufficiency of notice.— Under Conn. Gen. St. (1902) § 1130, providing that no action for personal injuries caused by negligence shall be maintained against any electric, cable, or street railroad company unless a written notice, containing a general description of the injury, and its time, place, and cause, be given within four months, etc., a notice by a married woman of an injury to her gives her husband a right to maintain an action for the loss of her services. Peck v. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co., 77 Conn. 161, 58 Atl. 757.

30. Shalley v. Danbury, etc., Horse R. Co., 64 Conn. 381, 30 Atl. 135, holding, however, that a statement by the president of the company to the husband of the person injured that he must present his claim to the company which insured the railroad company against losses, and not to the railroad company, and that the insurance company would see to it, and to wait and follow his, the president's, instructions, was not a waiver of notice.

31. See, generally, PLEADING, 31 Cyc. 1.

Alternative allegations.— It has been held that a complaint which alleges that plaintiff's position of peril was known to the motorman, "or by the exercise of reasonable care" could have been known to him, and that the motorman could have stopped the car in time to have prevented the collision, etc., does not state a cause of action founded on the failure of the motorman to exercise proper care after the discovery of the traveler's peril; the alternative form of allegation not amounting to a charge of actual knowledge of plaintiff's peril, necessary to defendant's liability. Anniston Electric, etc., Co. v. Rosen, 159 Ala. 195, 48 So. 798. But on the other hand it has been held that a complaint which alleged that while plaintiff drove the horse along a street the horse became frightened and ran on or near the track, in plain view of the motorman in charge of an approaching car, who saw the horse, or by the exercise of due diligence could have seen him, in time to have stopped the car, and that in disregard of his duty to stop the car the motorman negligently ran against the horse, injuring the same, was not vitiated because of alternative averments, for each averment referred to the ultimate fact, and each was pertinent to a single cause of action. Indianapolis, etc., Traction Co. v. Henderson, 39 Ind. App. 324, 79 N. E. 539.

Amendment.— Where the general charge of negligence causing the injury is alleged in the original petition, it is not necessary to repeat it in an amended petition charging specific acts of negligence. Louisville R. Co. v. Will, 66 S. W. 628, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1961.

Duplicity.— A petition which alleges a gripman's wilful pushing of plaintiff from a moving car as constituting negligence is bad for duplicity, since the same act cannot be both negligent and wilful. Raming v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 157 Mo. 477, 57 S. W. 268.

Allegations held to negative the imputation of negligence of the driver of a vehicle in crossing a raised track see Philbin v. Denver City Tramway Co., 36 Colo. 331, 85 Pac. 630.

Joinder.— In an action for injuries to the driver of a vehicle by collision with a street car, plaintiff is entitled to join in the same count or cause of action negligence arising from a breach of defendant's common-law duty to use due care, and negligence arising from defendant's breach of a city ordinance requiring a vigilant lookout. Meyers v. St. Louis Transit Co., 99 Mo. App. 363, 73 S. W. 379.

33. Complaint, declaration, or petition held sufficient: To state a cause of action grounded on negligence in running a car into a vehicle on or near the track. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Shanks, 139 Ala. 489, 37 So. 166; Cowart v. Savannah Electric Co., 5 Ga. App. 664, 63 S. E. 804; Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Damm, 25 Ind. App. 511, 58 N. E. 564 (colliding with frightened team); Welty v. St. Charles St. R. Co., 109 La. 733, 33 So. 750. In an action for injuries caused to an automobile in running into a trolley pole at night, by reason of threatened peril from an approaching car. Bell v. Hartford, etc., St. R. Co., 79 Conn. 722, 65 Atl. 600; Garfield v. Hartford, etc., St. R. Co., 79 Conn. 458, 65 Atl. 598. In an action for injuries received by a car colliding with a carriage in which plaintiff was an occupant. Frank Bird Transfer Co. v. Krug, 30 Ind. App. 602, 65 N. E. 309. In an action for injuries caused by the swinging of a car, to a person standing in a crowd on the injured person's right to be upon or near the tracks,[34] and the legal duty owing to him by defendant, the failure to perform which caused the injury;[35] and showing that defendant was negligent in the performance or non-performance of such duty,[36] that the acts or omissions constituting the negligence were in the course of the employment of the servant doing them,[37] and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries for which recovery is sought.[38] In some jurisdictions plaintiff or complainant must also allege that he was free from contributory negligence,[39] although in most jurisdictions contributory negligence is regarded outside of a curve in the track. Cordray v. Savannah Electric Co., 5 Ga. App. 625, 63 S. E. 710. In an action for injuries received while walking on or near a street car track. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Scanlon, 136 Ill. App. 212. Thus a declaration or complaint is sufficient where plaintiff avers that in driving along a city street he started to cross defendant's track in front of a car then standing still, without motorman or engineer, near a crossing, and that while he was crossing they suddenly started the car, and recklessly ran into his wagon, without his fault (Piper v. Pueblo City R. Co., 4 Colo. App. 424, 36 Pac. 158); or where the complaint alleges that while plaintiff was carefully driving, and necessarily upon defendant's track, its car, propelled with great force, struck his wagon, and that his injuries were due only to the negligence of defendant, and without any negligence on his part (Wright v. United Traction Co., 131 N. Y. App. Div. 356, 115 N. Y. Suppl. 630). So a petition, in an action by parents to recover for the death of a minor child by being run over by a street car, which avers that the child came to his death by the employees of defendant carelessly, negligently, and recklessly running said car over the body of the child, instantly killing him, is sufficient to sustain a verdict for damages, notwithstanding a special finding that the injury was not inflicted through the reckless and wanton neglect of defendant's employees. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. v. Fry, 71 Kan. 736, 81 Pac. 462.

Complaint, declaration, or petition held insufficient: In an action for injuries sustained in being thrown from a wagon by a sudden lunge of the team which was frightened by a car. Folz v. Evansville Electric R. Co., 40 Ind. App. 307, 80 N. E. 868.

Incapacity of person injured.— Where plaintiff contends that the person injured was non sui juris, such incapacity, being a matter of fact, should be pleaded. Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Hamer, 29 Ind. App. 426, 62 N. E. 658, 63 N. E. 778.

Co. v. Waddington, 169 Ind. 448, 82 N. E. 1030 (as to ordinance prohibiting excessive speed); Smith v. Gulfport, etc., Traction Co., (Miss. 1909) 48 So. 295 (declaration held not demurrable on the ground that it did not allege facts showing a duty on defendant to maintain the crossing in a safe condition).

Construction.— Where a petition, for the death of a pedestrian in a collision with a street car, charges certain acts of negligence, and then alleges violations of a city ordinance, "which violations of said ordinance directly contributed to cause the death and injury," the petition should be construed to mean that the violation of the ordinance contributed with the other precedent acts of negligence charged in the petition to cause such injury and death, and not that they contributed with deceased's negligence to cause such injury. (B) Allegations of Negligence. The complaint, declaration, or petition should clearly allege facts showing that defendant's acts or omissions causing the injury were in breach of some duty owing to the person injured, or in other words that they were negligently done or omitted.[47] But, although there are some decisions to the contrary,[48] it is ordinarily sufficient to allege such negligence in general terms, without setting forth the specific acts constituting it,[49] or averring the name of the negligent servant,[50] unless there is a motion to make more specific.[51] Thus an allegation of sufficient acts causing the injury, coupled with an averment that they were negligently done, is sufficient;[52] but if the allegations undertake to set forth such acts without stating that they were negligently done, it must appear by direct averment that the acts causing the injury were per se the result of negligence, or negligence must appear from a statement of such facts as certainly raise the presumption that the injury was the result of defendant's negligence.[53]

(c) Wilful, Wanton, or Reckless Injury. In an action for wanton, wilful, or reckless injury, the complaint, declaration, or petition should aver that the injury was wilfully or wantonly inflicted, with a conscious knowledge that the wilfulness or wantonness would probably result in injury, or should set forth a state of facts from which such knowledge might be reasonably inferred,[54] and unless it avers such conscious knowledge or facts showing it, the mere fact that the acts are charged to have been wilfully, wantonly, or recklessly done is not sufficient.[55] Ordinarily a general averment that defendant's servants by certain acts or omissions wantonly, wilfully, or recklessly caused the injury is sufficient, without setting out the facts showing the wantonness, wilfulness, or recklessness;[56] but it is not sufficient to allege facts which merely show simple negligence on the part of such servants.[57]

(II) Answer and Subsequent Pleadings. The answer and subsequent pleadings in an action for injuries caused by the operation of a street railroad are also regulated by the rules of pleading governing in civil actions generally,[58] particularly those relating to actions for negligence.[59] A plea charging contributory negligence can only be interposed to a complaint or petition averring simple negligence,[60] and it is no answer to a complaint averring wantonness or wilfulness on the part of defendant.[61] A plea setting up contributory negligence, which

E. 535, holding that the statement that a street car was running at a high rate of speed is not a sufficient allegation of negligence to support an action against the company for injuries received by a person run over by such car.

Allegations held sufficient.— A complaint in an action against a street car company for running over and killing a child, which alleges that the track was straight, and that the child was in plain sight of the motorman, is sufficient to show his negligence, since it will be assumed that he saw the child in time to stop the car. Mobile Light, etc., Co. v. Baker, 158 Ala. 491, 48 So. 119 (holding that a count which set out the conditions surrounding the collision and averred that the injuries were caused as a proximate consequence of the failure of defendant's servant to keep a proper lookout while running a car on the highway was a count for simple, and not for wilful or wanton, negligence); Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Jaffee, 154 Ala. 548, 45 So. 469.

Illustrations.— A count which contains a general averment of wilfulness and then alleges facts showing a negligent omission of duty in keeping a proper lookout, but fails to show conscious knowledge that such omission of duty would probably result in the injuries, is bad as a count for wanton injury, since the facts on which the wilfulness and wantonness are predicated control the general averment, and such facts are nothing more than a count in simple negligence. attributes to the person injured conduct which may or may not have been negligent, and which fails to aver that such conduct was negligent, except as a conclusion of law resulting necessarily from the act or omission charged, is insufficient and subject to demurrer,[62] as is also a plea which does not with certainty impute to the person injured the omission of any duty or the commission of any act negligent or otherwise.[63] Averments in the complaint, declaration, or petition relating to defendant's ownership or operation of the road and cars are matters of mere inducement and can only be reached by a special plea denying that defendant owned or operated the same.[64]

d. Issues, Proof, and Variance — (i) Issues Raised in General. Only such matters are in issue and may be adjudicated, in an action for injuries against a street railroad company, as are properly put in issue by the pleadings and proof in the case.[65] Thus plaintiff or complainant, in such an action, can rely for recovery only upon such matters of negligence as are put in issue by his pleadings,[66] as where he alleges only specific acts of negligence he can recover only on that ground;[67] and he cannot recover upon a cause of action materially different from that alleged.[68] Likewise defendant can rely only upon such matters of defense as are put in issue by its pleadings.[69] A plea of the general issue or not guilty puts

W. 116 (holding that the fact that a street railroad company was operating its cars by means of electricity, contrary to the terms of its franchise, cannot be raised in an action against it for injuries to a person on the street); Koenig v. Union Depot R. Co., 173 Mo. 698, 73 S. W. 637 (holding that an allegation "that the servants in charge of the car failed to keep a proper lookout for persons crossing" the tracks at a certain crossing does not present the issue that such servants were negligent in failing to see, when by reasonable care they might have seen, the person injured).

Allegations held sufficient to authorize the submission of the issue whether defendant's employees saw that the ringing of the bell was the occasion of the fright of a horse, and continued to ring it after such discovery see Denison, etc., R. Co. v. Powell, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 454, 80 S. W. 1054.

It is error to try the case on the theory of general negligence when the complaint does not charge defendant with any negligence other than that of failure to signal, and perhaps undue rate of speed. Redford v. Spokane St. R. Co., 9 Wash. 55, 36 Pac. 1085.

68. Springfield City R. Co. v. De Camp, 11 Ill. App. 475, holding that, where the declaration does not call in question the right of defendant to use steam power, that cannot be insisted upon as a ground for recovery.

Discovered peril.— A petition which alleges that the conductor invited plaintiff on the car, and while it was in motion negligently ordered him to get off, but did not diminish the speed, although knowing that plaintiff was going to get off, so that in doing so plaintiff was injured, does not authorize a recovery on the ground of discovered peril. Denison, etc., R. Co. v. Carter, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 70 S. W. 322, 71 S. W. 292.

Incompetency of the motorman cannot be relied upon as a ground of recovery where it was not pleaded as such. Houston City St. R. Co. v. Farrell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 942.

69. Wise v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 546, 95 S. W. 898; Engelker v. Seattle Electric Co., 50 Wash. 196, 96 Pac. 1039, holding that if a street railroad company, sued for injury caused by its cars striking a wagon while being run at a speed exceeding the lawful speed limit, desires to rely on in issue all the material allegations of the complaint or petition;[70] but it does not put in issue the ownership and operation of the car causing the injury,[71] since such facts must be specially pleaded.[72]

(II) MATTERS TO BE PROVED. In order that plaintiff or complainant may recover, in an action for injuries against a street railroad company, every material allegation of negligence or of other matters, contained in the complaint or petition, and necessary to establish his cause of action, must be proved as alleged;[73] but it is not necessary to prove allegations which are mere surplusage and not essential to the cause of action.[74] Thus where the petition or complaint alleges specific acts of negligence as a ground of recovery such acts must be proved as pleaded;[75] but if the negligence charged consists of several acts not dependent upon each other, every act alleged need not be proved, but it is sufficient if the acts from which the injury resulted are proved.[76] The ownership, operation, or control of the road or car causing the injury must be shown to be in defendant,[77] unless the answer admits the same,[78] or unless it otherwise appears from the evidence that the tracks or cars were in the possession of defendant and operated by it.[79]

(III) EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE. As in other actions, such evidence only is admissible on behalf of plaintiff or complainant as corresponds with his allegations and is restricted to the matters in issue,[80] and evidence as to matters not alleged facts justifying the excessive speed it should plead such facts.

70. Johnson v. Birmingham R., etc., Co., 149 Ala. 529, 43 So. 33, holding that in an action for killing plaintiff's intestate, a trespasser on the track at night, defendant's plea of not guilty put in issue all the material allegations of the complaint, including the allegation of the discovery of intestate's peril by defendant's motorman in time to have avoided the accident by the employment of preventive effort, and the failure to employ the same. Kankakee Electric R. Co. v. Lade, 56 Ill. App. 454. Evidence that fire engines and trucks, while driving to fires, have by local custom the right of way at street crossings, cannot be given in an action against a street railroad company for injuries sustained to the driver of a fire truck in a collision with a street car at a crossing, where it is not pleaded that the trucks have the right of way by reason of a local custom, although the trolley car reaches the crossing first. Mental capacity.—Where, in a suit for injuries to plaintiff's ward by being run over by a street car, the complaint does not allege that the ward is of a weak mind, plaintiff is not entitled to prove such fact as a part of its main case; but where a witness on cross-examination testifies that the child jumped in front of a car in motion, plaintiff is entitled to show in rebuttal that the boy is of weak mind, as bearing on the question of contributory negligence. negligence is averred in general terms plaintiff is not confined in his evidence to any one particular act of negligence, and evidence of any fact which is a circumstance tending to show the negligence alleged is admissible, although no mention is made of such fact in the pleading.[86] On behalf of defendant evidence is admissible under a general denial or general issue to show that it is not responsible for the cause of the injury,[87] or that it was caused by the injured person's own contributory negligence,[88] or to show that he was intoxicated at the time as tending to impair his credibility;[89] and under a plea of contributory negligence any evidence tending to show the existence of such negligence at the time is admissible.[90]

Evidence is admissible under a general allegation of negligence in operating a car of a failure to give warning by ringing a bell or otherwise (Chicago General R. Co. v. Kriz, 94 Ill. App. 277), even though there is no statute requiring a bell to be rung, and no averment in the declaration of a failure to ring the bell (East St. Louis Electric R. Co. v. Snow, 88 Ill. App. 660), or of negligence in sounding the gong on approaching a frightened team (Benjamin v. Holyoke St. R. Co., 160 Mass. 3, 35 N. E. 95, 39 Am. Where the petition avers the motorman's failure to use any care to control the car which caused the injuries, the averment is broad enough, as an allegation of negligence at common law, to let in evidence concerning excessive speed of the car, especially where no objection is made either to the pleading or to the evidence. Fry v. St. Louis Transit Co., 111 Mo. App. 324, 85 S. W. 960.

Failure to give notice of approach of cars may be shown under a complaint for injury from a collision, alleging an excessive rate of speed of defendant's car, and that no care or diligence was exercised by defendant. Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Abright, 14 Ind. App. 435, 42 N. E. 238, 1028.

An ordinance requiring suitable and seasonable warning to be given of the approach to crossings of street cars supplemented by other proof is competent evidence in an action by one injured in a collision with a street car by the negligence of the street railroad company, although the ordinance is not pleaded. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Martin, 44 Colo. 324, 98 Pac. 836; San Antonio St. R. Co. v. Mechler, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 29 S. W. 202. So an ordinance requiring operatives of cars to keep a vigilant watch for vehicles, etc., need not be specially pleaded, and proof made of its acceptance, before reading it in evidence. 87. Griffin v. Interurban St. R. Co., 46 Misc. (N. Y.) 328, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 854, holding that where a street railroad company is sued for injuries to a bicycle rider by the spreading of the slot in the track, it may show under a general denial that it is not responsible for the spreading of the slot, which was the cause of the accident.

88. Sharpton v. Augusta, etc., R. Co., 72 S. C. 162, 51 S. E. 553, holding that, under the plea of a general denial, defendant may show plaintiff's intoxication, as tending to show contributory negligence.

90. Sharpton v. Augusta, etc., R. Co., 72 S. C. 162, 51 S. E. 553, holding that under a plea of contributory negligence, in that plaintiff went on defendant's right of way, defendant may show, by questions to plaintiff and by his declarations, that he was intoxicated at the time of the accident.

Evidence held inadmissible on the issue of the contributory negligence of the occupant of a vehicle driven by another (Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 1059), or of the driver of a vehicle in attempting to cross in front of an approaching car (Omaha St. R. Co. v. Mathiesen, 73 Nebr. 820, 103 N. W. 666).

"On the track."—Where a declaration alleges in one count that plaintiff was on the east track of the street railroad company when he was hurt, and in another that he was on the west track of such company, and the evidence shows that he was not on either track, but was between the two, and was within the space which the car running on the rails occupied as it passed, he was on the track, within the meaning of the allegation of the declaration. Potter v. Leviton, 199 Ill. 93, 64 N. E. 1029 [affirming 101 Ill. App. 544].

ery,[93] or matter of defense;[94] but if the proof substantially supports the pleading, any variance therein which does not materially affect the cause of action and by which defendant is not misled to his prejudice may be disregarded as immaterial.[95]

e. Evidence — (I) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF — (A) In General. In an action for injuries caused by the negligent management and operation of a street railroad, the burden of proof, in the first instance, is upon plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of evidence all facts necessary to establish his alleged cause of action.[96] As a general rule, in such an action, negligence is a matter of proof, 93. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Brown, 152 Ala. 115, 44 So. 572 (holding that where a count alleged that the collision occurred at a point where defendant's track was on a public highway, but the proof showed that the wagon was struck while on defendant's track, not on a highway, there was a fatal variance as to such count); Haulon v. South Boston Horse R. Co., 129 Mass. 310 (holding that a declaration alleging that defendant's car was carelessly driven upon and over plaintiff is not supported by proof that another car, not carelessly driven, struck and injured him while he was trying to escape from the car carelessly driven).

A count charging wanton injury to a person on the track is not supported by proof of a failure to discover plaintiff's peril, but is dependent on the failure of defendant's employees to use proper means to stop the car after actually discovering such peril. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Brown, 152 Ala. 115, 44 So. 572.

94. El Paso Electric St. R. Co. v. Ballinger, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 612, holding that where defendant specially pleaded the contributory negligence of plaintiff, whose hack was struck by its car, to be in not passing clear over the track, or far enough beyond it for the car to clear it, it is not entitled to submission of the issue of contributory negligence on evidence that he drove clear over the track, stopped, and, as the car was about to pass, backed into it.

The variance has been held immaterial: Between an allegation in a declaration for injuries to the driver of a vehicle that he was driving on a street "at or near the track" of defendant's railway, and evidence that he was driving longitudinally on the track. Murphy v. Evanston Electric R. Co., 235 Ill. 275, 85 N. E. 334. Between an allegation that defendant "stopped" the car to permit plaintiff to alight, and negligently permitted it "to be put in motion while the plaintiff was in the act of leaving the car, without giving him a reasonable time to alight safely therefrom, whereby he was thrown under the car," etc., and proof that the car slackened up only, and then started up with a sudden jerk. Ridenhour v. Kansas City Cable R. Co., 102 Mo. 270, 13 S. W. 889, 14 S. W. 760. Between an allegation that an injury to plaintiff by being struck by a street car occurred at the crossing of a particular street, and evidence that he was injured at a point perhaps forty feet from such street, no objection having been interposed to the evidence, and defendant having made no claim of surprise. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Court, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 71 S. W. 777. Between an allegation that plaintiff was injured by being pushed from a horse car at a crossing in the commotion caused by an approaching train, and proof that she was injured by jumping from the car in a reasonable effort to avoid danger. Washington, etc., R. Co. v. Hickey, 166 U. S. 521, 17 S. Ct. 661, 41 L. ed. 1101. Between allegations that plaintiff's wagon was struck by defendant's electric car; that the car backed away, and then struck the wagon again; and that plaintiff was injured by the second collision, and proof that the injury was caused by the backing away of the car. Cincinnati St. R. Co. v. Whitcomb, 66 Fed. 915, 14 C. C. A. 183.

Where a collision with only one car is alleged, a second collision occurring from five to ten minutes after the first, and before the horses could be removed from the track, is part of the same transaction, and evidence thereof is not at variance with the allegations. 96. Mobile Light, etc., Co. v. Mackay, 158 Ala. 51, 48 So. 509 (holding that plaintiff, suing for the killing of his mule through the alleged negligent operation by defendant's agents and servants of one of its cars on its street railroad, has the burden of proving that it operated the car); McAndrews v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 83 Mo. App. 233 (existence and acceptance of ordinance, which was violated); Lynchburg Traction, etc., Co. v. Guill, 107 Va. 86, 57 S. and there is no presumption that defendant was guilty of negligence;[97] but on the other hand it is ordinarily presumed that defendant acted rightfully and with due care,[98] and hence the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show affirmatively the alleged negligence on the part of the servants of the company,[99] and that the accident and consequent injury occurred through such negligence;[1] and while he may do

Where a municipality has power to grant the use of its streets for public purposes only, a grant of the right to construct and operate a railroad through the streets will be presumed to be for a public purpose, and the mere fact that at the time of an accident it was transporting its own property is not sufficient to rebut this presumption and show that it was a private railroad. this by circumstantial or presumptive evidence,[2] he is bound to introduce evidence enough to remove the cause from the realm of speculation or conjecture, and to establish facts affording a logical basis for the inferences which he claims the jury should draw therefrom;[3] and if he fails to do this a verdict may properly be directed for defendant.[4] But where plaintiff by his evidence makes out a prima facie case of negligence on the part of defendant, as where the evidence which shows the injury discloses in itself that defendant in relation to the causal act or omission did not exercise that degree of care which the law requires,[5] or, in some jurisdictions, where defendant has suffered a default,[6] the burden is then upon defendant to show that the accident was not due to negligence on its part.[7] The company will be presumed to have had knowledge of a defect which had existed for several days;[8] but there is no presumption of law that a street railroad obstructs the ordinary travel on the highway,[9] or makes it dangerous.[10]

but under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur a presumption of negligence from the simple occurrence of an accident arises where the accident proceeds from an act of such a character that, when due care is taken in its performance, no injury ordinarily ensues from it in similar cases, or where it is caused by the mismanagement or misconstruction of a thing over which the company has immediate control, or for the management or construction of which it is responsible,[13] and the burden is then upon the defendant company to rebut the presumption of negligence on its part.[14] Thus where a person is injured while passing under or near an elevated railroad by an iron bar or other object falling therefrom, it raises a presumption of negligence justifying a verdict for plaintiff,[15] unless such presumption in all cases being against the company"; and such section applies where damage is done by such a company to person or property by the running of its cars. Cordray v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 117 Ga. 464, 43 S. E. 755. Compare Atlanta R., etc., Co. v. Johnson, 120 Ga. 908, 48 S. E. 389. Hence where plaintiff shows injury occasioned by the car of defendant company, the burden of proof is shifted to defendant to show that plaintiff consented to the injury, or could have avoided it by the use of due care, or that the employees of the company exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence. Augusta R., etc., Co. v. Arthur, 3 Ga. App. 513, 60 S. E. 213.

Florida Laws (1891), c. 4071, § 1, making a similar provision applies to street railroads. Consumers' Electric Light, etc., Co. v. Pryor, 44 Fla. 354, 32 So. 797. Where a motorman should and must have seen a child of tender years unattended and in dangerous proximity to the track, it was his duty to use means commensurate with the demands of the occasion to prevent injuring such child, and the burden is on the car company to show that such means were used, and if such proof is not made, the company is liable in damages. Jacksonville Electric Co. v. Adams, 50 Fla. 429, 39 So. 183.

13. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Giese, 229 Ill. 260, 82 N. E. 232; Cloud v. Alexandria Electric R. Co., 121 La. 1061, 46 So. 1017, 18 L. R. A. N. S. 371 (employment of a competent motorman); Richmond R., etc., Co. v. Hudgins, 100 Va. 409, 41 S. E. 736.

Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur stated.—When the thing which has caused the injury is shown to be under the management of the party charged with negligence, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of affairs does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, the accident itself affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of any explanation, that it was caused by the lack of proper care by the party charged with negligence. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Giese, 229 Ill. 260, 82 N. E. 232.

Illustrations.—A presumption of negligence arises where an accident occurs by reason of one of defendant's cars, which at the time of the accident was running along the tracks of defendant, on a public street on which persons and vehicles were passing, with its motive power turned on and no one in control of the car Chicago City R. Co. v. Barker, 209 Ill. 321, 70 N. E. 624; Chicago City R. Co. v. Eick, 111 Ill. App. 452 [affirmed in 209 Ill. 321, 70 N. E. 624]. But where plaintiff is injured by falling over a fender attached to a standing car at night, by reason of the fact that the car is unlighted or unguarded by a motorman, such fact does not constitute prima facie evidence of defendant's negligence, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, so as to render it incumbent on defendant to show absence of negligence in permitting the car to remain in such condition. Adams v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 82 N. Y. App. Div. 354, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 553.

Fall of trolley pole or wire.—The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to the fall of a street car company's trolley wire, caused by a stroke from a deranged trolley pole. Memphis St. R. Co. v. Kartright, 110 Tenn. 277, 75 S. W. 719, 100 Am. St. Rep. 807. So where a trolley pole, which has come off the trolley wire and which has been hanging the cross wires for some time, becomes disconnected from the spring and falls on a driver of a vehicle in the street, injuring him, the company has the burden of explaining its failure to stop the car forthwith, or to control the pole by the rope, and on its failure to sustain such burden a recovery is proper. (c) Contributory Negligence. In some jurisdictions, in the absence of any evidence on the subject, the person injured will not be presumed to have been free from contributory negligence,[17] and the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that he was free from such negligence.[18] In other jurisdictions, however, it is to be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the person injured exercised reasonable care to avoid injury,[19] and the burden of proving contributory negligence is upon defendant, as a matter of defense.[20]

Sufficiency of proof.—To sustain such burden it is not enough that the facts proven permit the inference that the person injured was free from contributory negligence; but such inference must be the only one that can fairly and reasonably be drawn from the facts. O'Reilly v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 82 N. Y. App. Div. 492, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 572. Thus mere proof that the hearing of one driving on a street car track was good, and that he did not hear a car approaching from behind, does not warrant the inference that he was listening for it. Belford v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 86 N. Y. App. Div. 388, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 836. Nor can it be inferred from the mere fact that one could have looked for cars before crossing street car tracks that he did look. O'Reilly v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 82 N. Y. App. Div. 492, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 572.

A. 344 (holding that in the absence of evidence to the contrary a jury may infer from the instinct of self-preservation that a person about to cross a street railway track both looked and listened); McKenzie v. United R. That the mutilated remains of a person are found along defendant's tracks in a public highway just after a car had struck him raises no legal presumption that deceased had been guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery. Merkl v. Jersey City, etc., St. R. Co., 75 N. J. L. 654, 68 Atl. 74.

Trespassers.—There is no presumption that the prosecution of a work by a corporation in the public streets is unauthorized and its employees trespassers. Daum v. North Jersey St. R. Co., 69 N. J. L. 1, 54 Atl. 221 [affirmed in 70 N. J. L. 338, 57 Atl. 1132]. So in an action against a street railroad company for running down a wagon and throwing out and injuring one of its occupants, in the absence of special evidence that its tracks were laid over private land, the jury would be warranted in presuming that they were laid in a public highway, and that therefore plaintiffs were not trespassers. (II) ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE[21] — (A) In General. The admissibility of evidence in an action for injuries sustained through the operation of a street railroad is regulated by the rules of evidence governing the competency, relevancy, and materiality of evidence in civil actions generally,[22] such as the rules relative to the admissibility of declarations or admissions of agents and employees,[23] or of expert or opinion evidence,[24] as that a witness should not be allowed to state his opinion or conclusion upon a particular matter without stating the facts and circumstances upon which it is based, when they may be given.[25] Subject to these rules evidence is admissible on behalf of plaintiff or defendant in such an action of all facts and circumstances which tend to prove or disprove plaintiff's cause of action,[26]

21. Evidence admissible under pleadings see supra, X, B, 9, d, (III).

22. See, generally, EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 1110 et seq.

The clothing worn by the person injured at the time of the accident is competent evidence, when it tends to establish any controverted fact in issue. Senn v. Southern R. Co., 108 Mo. 142, 18 S. W. 1007; Hays v. Gainesville St. R. Co., 70 Tex. 602, 8 S. W. 491, 8 Am. St. Rep. 624.

Rebutting presumption from failing to produce witnesses.—Evidence of a division superintendent that he could not ascertain anything in regard to the alleged accident is competent to rebut the presumption which the failure to produce certain witnesses might raise against defendant. Hope v. West Chicago St. R. Co., 82 Ill. App. 311. So the testimony of a witness that he talked with the driver of the truck which collided with a car, and the driver could not remember what had occurred, because of injuries received on his head at the time of the collision, is admissible as explaining to the jury why such driver was not called as a witness. Toledo R., etc., Co. v. Ward, 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 399.

Res gestæ.—Whatever took place at the car at the time of the accident is a part of the res gestæ and proper to be admitted in evidence. East St. Louis Electric St. R. Co. v. Burns, 77 Ill. App. 529. See, generally, EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 1148 et seq.

23. See, generally, EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 1003 et seq.

Declarations, statements, or admissions not connected with the accident, made by a railroad employee, are inadmissible (Monroe v. Hartford St. R. Co., 76 Conn. 201, 56 Atl. 498), except for the purpose of impeaching his other testimony (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ingraham, 131 Ill. 659, 23 N. E. 350).

But the declarations or statements of the motorman of the colliding car regarding the accident, and made immediately thereafter, are admissible as part of the res gestæ, regardless of the purpose in offering them. Chicago City R. Co. v. McDonough, 221 Ill. 69, 77 N. E. 577 [affirming 125 Ill. App. 223]; Kern v. Des Moines City R. Co., 141 Iowa 620, 118 N. W. 451; Floyd v. Paducah R., etc., Co., 64 S. 24. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Randle, 149 Ala. 539, 43 So. 355, holding that in an action for the death of plaintiff's intestate by being struck by a street car, defendant's motorman, after having testified that when he first saw deceased he was walking in a path two or three feet from the side of the track, was entitled to state whether the car would have struck deceased in passing him at that distance from the track.

Expert testimony as to care in management and operation of cars see, generally, EVIDENCE, 17 Cyc. 79, 209, 241.

25. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Randle, 149 Ala. 539, 43 So. 355 (holding that one may not testify that the motorman seemed to try to stop the car as quickly as he could, but he should be required to state what the motorman did to stop the car); Reid v. New York City R. Co., 93 N. Y. Suppl. 533 (holding that in an action for injuries to a horse in a collision with a street car, it is error to permit plaintiff to testify, without stating any facts, that the horse could not be used after the accident for the same purpose that it had been used before).

A motorman is not entitled to testify that he stopped the car as soon as he could, but must state what he did to stop the car, and whether that was all that could have been done to stop it as soon as possible. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Randle, 149 Ala. 539, 43 So. 355; Hogan v. Citizens' R. Co., 150 Mo. 36, 51 S. W. 473.

Description of injuries.—Where, in an ac-or defendant's matters of defense.[27] But evidence which is irrelevant, immaterial, or incompetent is inadmissible, either on behalf of plaintiff,[28] or defendant.[29] On the question of defendant's negligence in the management and operation of its road and cars, for the purpose of proving or disproving such negligence, any evidence is ordinarily admissible which tends to show the surrounding circumstances or conditions existing at the time and place of the accident,[30]

tion for death in a street car collision, the injuries and death of decedent are admitted, but there is doubt as to how and where he was struck, the evidence of a physician giving the nature and a description of the wounds is admissible to aid in solving such questions. Kern v. Des Moines City R. Co., 141 Iowa 620, 118 N. W. 451.

27. See Cunningham v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 123, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 277.

28. Hayden v. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co., 76 Conn. 355, 56 Atl. 613; Culbertson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 140 Mo. 35, 36 S. W. 834 (as to drinking by watchman); Waddell v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 680, 88 S. W. 765; Reich v. Union R. Co., 78 Hun (N. Y.) 417, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 1105.

Evidence held inadmissible.—Where, in an action for injuries sustained by being run over by defendant's car, after plaintiff had fallen on the track, it is undisputed that the track at that place was icy and slippery, evidence that there had been no storm for two days before the accident is inadmissible for any purpose. Silberstein v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 117 N. Y. 293, 22 N. E. 951 [reversing 4 N. Y. Suppl. 843]. Evidence as to the use of the track by the public as a passway is not admissible, where the track, although an extension of a street railroad, is not in the highway, and such use gave the public no right thereto. Floyd v. Paducah R., etc., Co., 64 S. W. 653, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1077. So where plaintiff had been on the track for some time before he was struck, and was manifestly there for his own convenience, it is inadmissible for him to testify that he had gone on the track to avoid an unruly horse that was about to run over him on the highway. Floyd v. Paducah R., etc., Co., supra.

Rules of fire department.—In an action for the death of a member of a municipal fire department in a collision between a hose wagon and a car, it is proper to refuse to admit in evidence on behalf of plaintiff rules of the fire department intended for the guidance of members thereof and issued only to them. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co., 134 Iowa 398, 109 N. W. 618.

The arrest of the motorman or conductor of the car causing the injury, some time after the accident, is irrelevant. Chicago City R. Co. v. Uhter, 212 Ill. 174, 72 N. E. 195; Seipp v. Dry Dock, etc., R. Co., 45 N. Y. App. Div. 489, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 409. Compare Chicago City R. Co. v. Reddick, 139 Ill. App. 160, holding that it is not error to admit proof of the arrest of the motorman at the time of the accident, but that it is error to refuse to admit evidence as to the reason for such arrest, where such evidence tends to remove the impression which might have been left in the minds of the jury that there was something culpable in the conduct of the motorman at the time.

30. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Hayes, 153 Ala. 178, 44 So. 1032 (holding that, in an action for injury to one crossing the track, a passenger could testify whether the car stopped suddenly or gradually, and whether he was thrown forward when it was being stopped); Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Fawcett, 76 Kan. 522, 92 Pac. 543; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Cooney, 87 Md. 261, 39 Atl. 859 (holding that where plaintiff was injured by a street car through the alleged negligence of the motorman, it was error to reject evidence whether the motorman could see plaintiff in the position he was in before the accident); Levin v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 140 Mo. 624, 41 S. W. 968 (as to looking).

Evidence held admissible: In an action for injuries to a telegraph lineman by being struck and thrown from a pole by defendant's street car, evidence that flags were stationed to notify people, and particularly cars, that there was dangerous construction going on, is admissible to show the surrounding conditions. Ahearn v. Boston El. R. Co., 194 Mass. 350, 80 N. E. 217. In an action for injury received by plaintiff by reason of his horse becoming frightened at defendant's street cars, which were negligently allowed to stand on a bridge on a public highway, evidence that other horses had become frightened at defendant's cars standing at the same place where plaintiff's horse took fright is competent. San Antonio Edison Co. v. Beyer, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 145, 57 S. W. 851. In an action for injuries to the driver of a hose cart in collision with a street car, evidence that witness, who was sitting on a sidewalk, had frequently heard the gong of a fire patrol wagon, which was similar to the gong on plaintiff's wagon, a distance of two blocks, is not objectionable on the ground that the conditions surrounding the witness and those surrounding the motorman were not identical. Hanlon v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 118 Wis. 210, 95 N. W. 100.

Evidence as to the distance the car ran after the accident is admissible in an action for negligently causing the death of a child by striking it with a car at a street crossing, as bearing upon the general conduct and control of the car. Gray v. St. Paul City R. Co., 87 Minn. 280, 91 N. W. 1106.

Evidence of omission to sound a street car gong at a place where the law did not require such as of the fact that the street at that place was crowded or was in a thickly populated locality,[31] or of statutory or ordinance provisions regulating the running of cars.[32]

it to be sounded is admissible as a part of the history of the transaction, and as bearing upon the degree of care exercised by the street car employees. Kleiner v. Third Ave. R. Co., 162 N. Y. 193, 56 N. E. 497 [reversing 38 N. Y. App. Div. 623, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 1140].

That the public were in the habit of driving on the track is admissible, as bearing upon the question of defendant's negligence in running a car at night without lights. Rascher v. East Detroit, etc., R. Co., 90 Mich. 413, 51 N. W. 463, 30 Am. St. Rep. 447.

The boot worn by the injured person at the time he was injured may be exhibited for the purpose of showing the indentations made thereon, as tending to prove that the brake was not applied, but that the wheel rolled over plaintiff's foot, where there is other evidence that, when the brakes are applied, the car wheel will not revolve, but will slide along the rail. Hays v. Gainesville St. R. Co., 70 Tex. 602, 8 S. W. 491, 8 Am. St. Rep. 624.

Lawfulness of location of track.—An order of the city council, approved by the mayor, prior to the date of the accident, permitting defendant to locate its tracks at the point in question, as shown on blue prints attached to the order, and relating to the location of the tracks at the time and place of the injury, and showing that it was the only location given to defendant, is admissible to show that it was lawful, and not a negligent, location. Hayden v. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co., 76 Conn. 355, 56 Atl. 613.

31. Alabama.— Highland Ave., etc., R. Co. v. Sampson, 112 Ala. 425, 20 So. 566, holding that on the question of defendant's negligence in running its cars over a street intersection, evidence of the number of people who were accustomed to pass there, and of how they traveled, is admissible.

Delaware.— Di Prisco v. Wilmington City R. Co., 4 Pennew. 527, 57 Atl. 906, holding that in an action for the death of a child by his being run over by a street car while playing in the street, a question asked of a witness as to whether, prior to the accident, there were a great many small boys that gathered in the vicinity of the place where the accident happened, is admissible for the purpose of showing that it was a thronged place.

Indiana.— Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor, 164 Ind. 155, 72 N. E. 1045.

Missouri.— Burnstein v. Cass Ave., etc., R. Co., 56 Mo. App. 45.

32. Quinn v. New York City R. Co., 94 N. Y. Suppl. 560 (holding that in an action for personal injuries caused by a collision, an ordinance giving the company the right of way in the street is admissible as bearing on the degree of caution imposed on the motorman); Taylor v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 84 N. Y. Suppl. 282 (holding that in an action for damage done to plaintiff's vehicle by a collision at a crossing, it is error to exclude an ordinance entitled, "Rules of the Road," providing that all vehicles going in a northerly or southerly direction have the right of way over any vehicle going in an easterly or westerly direction).

Where both parties try the case on the theory that defendant is not liable for a violation of the ordinances governing the running of street cars, unless it is shown that it had agreed to be bound by such ordinances, an ordinance showing such an agreement on the part of defendant is relevant. Campbell v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 175 Mo. 161, 75 S. W. 86.

Where the action is founded on common-law negligence, without an ordinance being pleaded, proof of the violation of the ordinance is nevertheless admissible, as bearing on the question of general negligence. Meng v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 108 Mo. App. 553, 84 S. W. 213. See also Sheehan v. Citizens' R. Co., 72 Mo. App. 524.

Ordinances stating merely general rules of law, such as requiring employees of the railroad company to use reasonable care to prevent injury, and to stop the car on the appearance of danger to any one near the track, and to use proper care to prevent injury to teams, are inadmissible in an action for injuries from a collision. Christy v. Des Moines City R. Co., 126 Iowa 428, 102 N. W. 194.

Ordinances and police regulations.—Where plaintiff contends that the car stopped on the crossing, and defendant that it passed over before stopping, ordinances and police regulations forbidding cars to be stopped on the crossing are admissible to show the greater probability of defendant's contention. Stiasny v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 58 N. Y. App. Div. 172, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 694 [affirmed in 172 N. Y. 656, 65 N. E. 1122].

An ordinance or statute providing that the apparatus of a fire department shall have the right of way on streets when responding to an alarm of fire is admissible in an action for the death or injury of a fireman by a collision of the wagon on which he was riding with a street car, as bearing on the question of the exercise of care by the motorman (McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co., 134 Iowa 398, 109 N. W. 618; Geary v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 84 N. Y. App. Div. 514, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 1016 [affirmed in 177 N. Y. 535, 69 N. E. 1123], holding that Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897),

(B) Customary Methods and Acts. On the question as to whether or not the particular acts or omissions of defendant's servants at the time and place of the accident were negligent, evidence is admissible of what is usually done by defendant's servants under the same or similar circumstances,[33] such as of the customary mode of running cars on double tracks,[34] or of the usual means of stopping cars under given conditions or circumstances.[35] Rules and regulations promulgated by the company for the guidance of its servants in such a contingency as that existing at the time of the accident are admissible on the question of defendant's negligence.[36]

(C) Other Accidents or Acts. As a general rule evidence of accidents or acts of negligence at other places or on other occasions, previous or subsequent, is inadmissible to show negligence on the part of defendant at the time and place of the accident in question,[37] unless the conditions and circumstances surrounding the different acts or occasions are shown to be the same and in the same locality,[38] or the acts are continuous in their nature and are closely connected with the acts

c. 378, § 748, giving vehicles of the fire department in answering a fire alarm the right of way over other vehicles, is material on the question of negligence, in a collision between a hook and ladder truck and a street car, wherein a fireman riding on the truck is killed); but an ordinance prior in time of enactment giving to street cars the right of way in matters of ordinary street traffic is inadmissible (McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co., 134 Iowa 398, 109 N. W. 618).

33. Atlanta R., etc., Co. v. Monk, 118 Ga. 449, 45 S. E. 494.

34. North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Irwin, 202 Ill. 345, 66 N. E. 1077 [reversing 104 Ill. App. 150], holding that where the injury occurred by reason of a car running on a track usually used by cars going in the opposite direction, evidence of the custom of running all north-bound cars on the east track and all south-bound cars on the west track is admissible, although there is no allegation that running the car northward on the west track is negligence.

35. Atlanta R., etc., Co. v. Monk, 118 Ga. 449, 45 S. E. 494, holding that in an action for injuries to a person on the track of a street railroad company, it is competent to show, by a witness familiar with the operation of electric cars, the usual means of stopping a car under given circumstances.

Minnesota.— Isackson v. Duluth St. R. Co., 75 Minn. 27, 77 N. W. 433, holding, however, that a rule of defendant imposing a higher degree of care on its motormen than the law requires is inadmissible where there is no evidence to show that the person injured knew of it or as to how long it had been in existence.

Missouri.— Paquin v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 90 Mo. App. 118.

New York.— Sullivan v. Richmond Light, etc., Co., 128 N. Y. App. Div. 175, 112 N. Y. Suppl. 648, holding that in an action for injuries by a car operated, in the presence of the motorman, by a boy eighteen years old employed by the company as a clerk, evidence of a rule of the company prohibiting the motorman from permitting any person on the front platform, with certain exceptions, which did not include the clerk, is admissible on the issue whether the motorman exercised the care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under similar circumstances.

Ohio.— Cincinnati St. R. Co. v. Altemeier, 60 Ohio St. 10, 53 N. E. 300.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 229.

But compare Louisville R. Co. v. Gaugh, (Ky. 1909) 118 S. W. 276, holding that in an action for injuries by being struck by defendant's car while crossing its track, the rules of the company regulating its employees in the operation of its cars are not admissible in evidence, as the question of negligence of defendant's employees cannot be tested by the manner in which they have followed the company's rules, but such negligence must be tested by the rules of law.

Rules requiring street cars to give the fire department the right of way at crossings, and, if necessary, to stop and allow the truck or engine of such department to pass, and requiring cars to slacken their speed at all permanent crossings, are admissible in an action for death or injuries caused in a collision with a hook and ladder truck at a crossing. Toledo R., etc., Co. v. Ward, 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 399.

37. Monroe v. Hartford St. R. Co., 76 Conn. 201, 56 Atl. 498; Perras v. United Traction Co., 88 N. Y. App. Div. 260, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 992 (holding that evidence that cars had been derailed at other times and places on defendant's road, and under circumstances not shown to be similar to those existing at the time of the accident, is inadmissible); Dyer v. Union R. Co., 25 R. I. 221, 55 Atl. 688 (holding that evidence that defendant had failed to ring the bell on the car in question at the intersection of other streets prior to the time of the accident is improper).

38. Perras v. United Traction Co., 88 N. Y. App. Div. 260, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 992.

complained of in point of time, place, and circumstances.[39] Thus it has been held that, as tending to show negligence on the part of an employee on a car, evidence is admissible as to his conduct just prior to the accident;[40] but on the other hand it has been held that evidence of his acts after the accident is inadmissible.[41] Likewise evidence that the negligent servant had been careful on other similar occasions is ordinarily inadmissible.[42]

(D) Conditions and Precautions After Accident. Evidence of precautions taken or acts done by defendant after the accident to prevent its recurrence, as in making repairs, removing obstructions, or otherwise, is ordinarily inadmissible to show negligence on its part in that respect at the time and place of the accident.[43]

(E) As to Incompetency or Insufficiency of Employees. For the purpose of showing negligence on the part of defendant in operating the car which caused the accident, evidence is admissible which tends to show that there were an insufficient number of employees in charge of such car,[44] or that the employee in charge at the time of the accident was incompetent.[45] Thus, as bearing on a driver's or motorman's condition or incompetency at the time of the accident, evidence is admissible that he had a drink just before starting on the trip,[46] or that he was intoxicated;[47] but evidence is inadmissible that he had some trouble on

On the question of defendant's negligence in piling snow in the street, evidence is admissible that it had previously piled snow in that vicinity, but not that it did so elsewhere. Mayer v. Milwaukee St. R. Co., 90 Wis. 522, 63 N. W. 1048.

39. Frankfort, etc., Traction Co. v. Hulette, 106 S. W. 1193, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 732 (holding that the admissibility of evidence showing a negligent condition existing prior to the accident depends upon the degree of probability afforded in each case that such condition continued up to the time of the accident); Pyne v. Broadway, etc., R. Co., 19 N. Y. Suppl. 217 [affirmed in 138 N. Y. 627, 33 N. E. 1083].

40. Bennett v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 1 N. Y. App. Div. 205, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 447; Mt. Adams, etc., Inclined R. Co. v. Doherty, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 349, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 810, holding that where it is alleged that, by reason of the negligence of the conductor, plaintiff, a boy six years old, was pushed off the car, so as to result in injury, evidence of threats and threatening gestures of the conductor to the boy jumping on the footboard of the car is admissible.

41. Wilcox v. Wilmington City R. Co., 2 Pennew. (Del.) 157, 44 Atl. 686; Netterfield v. New York City R. Co., 129 N. Y. App. Div. 56, 113 N. Y. Suppl. 434, holding that in an action for injuries in a street car collision, evidence that after the accident the motorman would not stop the car, but wanted to get away and desired to beat those who were endeavoring to rescue plaintiff or detain the motorman, was irrelevant.

42. Sunderland v. Pioneer Fire Proof Constr. Co., 78 Ill. App. 102, holding that in an action against the owner of a private tramway for injuries caused by frightening a horse, evidence that the motorman had been careful in meeting other horses under similar circumstances is inadmissible.

43. Markowitz v. Dry Dock, etc., R. Co., 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 412, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 702, holding that in an action for personal injuries caused by a snowbank along defendant's street car track, evidence that defendant removed the snow after the accident is inadmissible.

44. See Christensen v. Union Trunk Line, 6 Wash. 75, 32 Pac. 1018.

Evidence that it is a street car driver's duty to see that fares are paid, make change, and keep boys off the rear of the car, is competent to show whether he was in a position to give proper attention to his driving. Silberstein v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 4 N. Y. Suppl. 843 [reversed on other grounds in 117 N. Y. 293, 22 N. E. 951]; McCoy v. Milwaukee St. R. Co., 88 Wis. 56, 59 N. W. 453. Thus where there is evidence that the accident was due to the driver's negligence in not observing the child in front of the car, because he was occupied in making change for a passenger, evidence that the cars on defendant's line at the point of the accident were habitually crowded with passengers is admissible, since, if the cars were habitually crowded, defendant was chargeable with notice thereof, and also with knowledge that the attention of the drivers was thereby frequently distracted from the path of the car. Anderson v. Minneapolis St. R. Co., 42 Minn. 490, 44 N. W. 518, 18 Am. St. Rep. 525.

Evidence that no conductor was on the car at the time of the accident is inadmissible in evidence, in the absence of a showing that his presence was necessary or requisite for the safe running of the car. Christensen v. Union Trunk Line, 6 Wash. 75, 32 Pac. 1018.

47. Pyne v. Broadway, etc., R. Co., 19 N. Y. Suppl. 217 [affirmed in 138 N. Y. 627, 33 N. E. 1083], holding that in an action for injuries sustained in being struck by a car, in consequence of the driver's negligence and intoxication, evidence that the driver had another line in managing his car,[48] or had previously been concerned with an accident,[49] or as to the number of hours each day other employees were required to work.[50]

(F) As to Defective Track, Premises, or Appliances. On the question of negligence in the construction and maintenance of the tracks or equipment, evidence is admissible of any fact or circumstance which tends to show that the company failed to exercise due care and diligence in this respect.[51] Thus, on the question of negligent or defective construction or maintenance, evidence is admissible to show that structures of a similar class are or are not constructed in a similar manner,[52] as is also evidence as to the condition of the tracks some time afterward, if there is further evidence that there has been no change in their condition since the accident;[53] but evidence of other similar accidents, at the same place, is inadmissible,[54] unless they are shown to have happened under the same conditions and on that same trip missed a switch at a certain street, that he had failed to respond to the conductor's signal to stop at another street, had driven rapidly, and that a person had been thrown down in attempting to get aboard, is admissible, as showing a series of acts indicative of such intoxication at the time of the accident as to incapacitate him to properly control the car.

48. Monroe v. Hartford St. R. Co., 76 Conn. 201, 56 Atl. 498.

49. American Ice Co. v. New York City R. Co., 50 Misc. (N. Y.) 183, 98 N. Y. Suppl. 219, holding that the admission of evidence that defendant's motorman had previously been concerned with an accident was erroneous, although it may not have affected the result, and would not of itself call for a reversal.

50. Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. v. Henrice, 92 Pa. St. 431, 37 Am. Rep. 699, holding that a question asked by plaintiff of a witness, as to how many hours the drivers and conductors on the railroad were employed each day, for the purpose of showing that the driver of the car which injured the child was physically unable to discharge his duty at the time of the accident, was error.

51. Minster v. Citizens' R. Co., 53 Mo. App. 276 (displacement of slot rail); Musser v. Lancaster City St. R. Co., 176 Pa. St. 621, 35 Atl. 206 (holding that, in an action for injuries caused by the breaking of a street railroad cable, testimony that the attention of one of the directors of the defendant company was called to the weakened condition of the cable is admissible); El Paso Electric R. Co. v. Davis, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 83 S. W. 718 (as to hole in road-bed).

Evidence admissible.— In an action for injuries due to the insufficient surfacing and ballasting of the track, where the complaint sets up a contract between defendant and the city, and also a municipal ordinance whereby it is made defendant's duty to keep its track in such condition as not to obstruct the passage of vehicles over them, both the contract and ordinance are admissible in evidence. Birmingham Union R. Co. v. Alexander, 93 Ala. 133, 9 So. 525.

Evidence as to devices to prevent iron parings from falling into the street below is admissible in rebuttal of evidence given in behalf of defendant, an elevated railroad company, that dust and scales of iron could be kept from falling only at a great expense. Manson v. Manhattan R. Co., 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 18, 8 N. Y. St. 118.

Evidence that defendant was a trespasser at the place of the accident is immaterial in an action for injuries received by the injured person's tripping over a rail, alleged to have extended several inches above the surface of the street, since its liability does not depend upon whether or not it was a trespasser, but upon whether it negligently failed to maintain the tracks in a reasonably safe condition for people to travel over. Huff v. St. Joseph R., etc., Co., 213 Mo. 495, 111 S. W. 1145.

52. Jarvis v. Brooklyn El. R. Co., 16 N. Y. Suppl. 96 [affirmed in 133 N. Y. 623, 30 N. E. 1150], holding that in an action for injuries caused by falling from the unguarded end of defendant's elevated railroad station platform while looking for a urinal, plaintiff may show that on all other elevated railroads the exposed ends of platforms are guarded in some way, and that urinals are in use on such roads.

54. Gregory v. Detroit United R. Co., 138 Mich. 368, 101 N. W. 546 (holding that where in an action for injuries to plaintiff from the overturning of his cutter in striking the rails of defendant's track, which are alleged to have been negligently left above the surface of the street, the sole question is the condition of the street, and whether its condition was negligence, evidence of prior accidents of a similar character at the same place is inadmissible); Morrow v. Westchester Electric R. Co., 54 N. Y. App. Div. 592, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 21 [affirming 30 Misc. 694, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 16, and affirmed in 172 N. Y. 638, 65 N. E. 1119]; Johnson v. Manhattan R. Co., 52 Hun (N. Y.) 111, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 848. See also supra, X, B, 9, e, (II), (C).

circumstances.[55] So also evidence of defective conditions at other times and places is generally inadmissible;[56] but the previous condition of the track at and near the place of the accident may be shown as tending to prove a failure to repair the defect and thereby establish negligence on the part of defendant.[57] As tending to disprove negligence in this respect evidence is admissible on behalf of defendant to show that other persons or vehicles were constantly crossing the track safely at the place and about the time of the accident,[58] or that the work of construction or repair was done to the satisfaction of the commissioners having the approval thereof,[59] or in compliance with an ordinance regulating the construction and maintenance;[60] but not that other similar accidents had never happened, where the same conditions are not shown to have existed.[61]

(G) As to Equipment of Cars. For the purpose of proving or disproving negligence in the operation of a car, evidence is admissible which tends to show whether or not it was equipped with proper appliances at the time of the accident, or, if so equipped, whether or not the appliances were in proper repair.[62] Thus,

56. Cunningham v. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co., 72 Conn. 244, 43 Atl. 1047, holding that where a street railroad company is charged with negligence in allowing the rails of its track to project above the roadway, testimony as to the condition of the street at places other than the place of the accident is inadmissible.

57. Cunningham v. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co., 72 Conn. 244, 43 Atl. 1047 (previous condition within a year); Houston City St. R. Co. v. Medlenka, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 621, 43 S. W. 1028 (holding that where plaintiff was injured through the breaking of a wheel of his vehicle, in crossing defendant's railroad track, by reason of the protrusion of the rails above the surface of the highway, and the absence of guard rails, evidence of the condition of the track at such point, and other points immediately connected therewith, is admissible).

59. Mahoney v. Natick, etc., St. R. Co., 173 Mass. 587, 54 N. E. 349, holding that the testimony of an assistant commissioner who had charge of the locality where the accident happened that he saw the work and was satisfied is admissible to show that the work was done to the commissioner's satisfaction.

60. St. Joseph v. Union R. Co., 116 Mo. 636, 22 S. W. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 626.

61. Jarvis v. Brooklyn El. R. Co., 16 N. Y. Suppl. 96 [affirmed in 133 N. Y. 623, 30 N. E. 1150], holding that in an action for injuries caused by falling from the unguarded end of defendant's elevated railroad station platform, it is not error to refuse to allow defendant's superintendent to testify that he never heard of any one walking off elevated railroad platforms, where it does not appear that there were any such unguarded platforms.

62. Unger v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 6 Rob. (N. Y.) 237 [affirmed in 51 N. Y. 497]; Columbus R. Co. v. Connor, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 229, holding that in order to support the claim that a street car was operated negligently, the manner in which the car was equipped may be shown for the purpose of determining the rate of speed at which it could run with safety to the public.

Evidence admissible.—Where defendant claims that the car was going but eight miles an hour, and plaintiff has already shown that it took eighty feet in which to stop it, plaintiff's evidence that but twelve feet would be required in which to stop a properly equipped car going eight miles an hour is admissible. McDonald v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 51 N. Y. App. Div. 186, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 480. In an action for injuries received by a cinder which fell from defendant's engine on an elevated railroad into plaintiff's eye, it may be shown that a contrivance could have been adopted which would have prevented the accident, and the fact that after the accident fewer cinders fell is admissible on this point. Searles v. Manhattan El. R. Co., 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 425 [reversed on other grounds in 101 N. Y. 661, 5 N. E. 66]. In an action for negligently running against a person at a street crossing and failing to check the speed of the car, it is not error to receive testimony that the brake and controller of the car worked hard and were out of repair, when the court limits the effect of such evidence to the question of the manner in which the car should have been run when approaching the place of the accident. South Chicago City R. Co. v. Purvis, 193 Ill. 454, 61 N. E. 1046. Where the action is based on the insufficiency of the headlight, excessive speed, and not giving signals, testimony of a civil engineer, experienced in the construction of electric railroads, that at the date of the accident searchlights of considerable illuminating power had been in use and proved satisfactory, and their use and value generally understood, is material in deciding the negligence alleged. Currie v. Consolidated R. Co., 81 Conn. 383, 71 Atl. 356.

as a circumstance tending to show negligence in the operation of a car, evidence is admissible to show that there was no guard or fender in front of the car;[63] and as tending to show that the equipment on the car was improperly constructed or had been permitted to become defective at the time of the accident, evidence may be admitted to show that such equipment was defective a short time before the accident,[64] or that the car was dismantled shortly after the accident, and the equipment sold as old iron;[65] but evidence is inadmissible, for this purpose, to show that the equipment on other cars was defective or out of repair,[66] or that other cars on the same or other lines better equipped than the car in question were in common use,[67] although it is competent to show that other cars differently equipped could be stopped in a shorter distance and time, in order to demonstrate that the car in question could not be safely run at as high a rate of speed as others better equipped.[68]

(H) As to Rate of Speed. Likewise as tending to show negligence in the operation of a car, evidence is admissible in respect to the speed at which the car which caused the injury was running and the control which it was under at the time and place of the accident.[69] For such purpose evidence is admissible of the length

64. Frankfort, etc., Traction Co. v. Hulette, 106 S. W. 1193, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 732, holding that in an action for injuries received by colliding with one of defendant's street cars, it was proper to prove by former employees of defendant who had acted as motormen on the car until within ten days and two months, respectively, of the collision, that the brakes were worn out so the car could not be stopped within one hundred and fifty feet, and that the bell would not ring.

65. Frankfort, etc., Traction Co. v. Hulette, 106 S. W. 1193, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 732, holding that where defendant's motorman had testified that the brakes on the car by which plaintiff was injured were new and in perfect condition, a question to defendant's manager as to what was done with the car after the accident, which elicited the information that it was dismantled shortly thereafter, and the brakes and iron-work sold, was proper as being in rebuttal of the motorman's testimony.

66. Moore v. Charlotte Electric R., etc., Co., 136 N. C. 554, 48 S. E. 822, 67 L. R. A. 470.

Evidence inadmissible.— In an action for the killing of plaintiff's dog, which was run over by a car, it is error to receive the testimony of plaintiff that there were several different kinds of fenders on the cars, and that those on the big cars were different from those on the little ones, and that a little car killed the dog. Moore v. Charlotte Electric R., etc., Co., 136 N. C. 554, 48 S. E. 822, 67 L. R. A. 470. See also Zimmerman v. Denver Consol. Tramway Co., 18 Colo. App. 480, 72 Pac. 607.

Missouri.— Kinlen v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 216 Mo. 145, 115 S. W. 523, holding that evidence as to the speed of the car should only be considered in determining whether the motorman should have stopped his car sooner than he did.

Nebraska.— Lindgren v. Omaha St. R. Co, 73 Nebr. 628, 103 N. W. 307, holding, however, that an offer to show whether the car was running slowly or fast was objectionable for its indefiniteness.

Ohio.— Northern Ohio Traction Co. v. Drown, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. 735, holding that evidence that a witness saw a cloud of dust which he says was caused by the rapidity with which the street car was moving is admissible on the question as to the speed at which the car was running.

Texas.— City R. Co. v. Wiggins, (Civ. App. 1899) 52 S. W. 577.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 237.

Evidence inadmissible.— In an action for personal injuries caused by a street car's colliding with plaintiff and his horse and wagon, where the car was behind the wagon, and going in the same direction, evidence as to the capacity of the horse for speed is inadmissible, as it does not tend to show the rate of speed at which the car or horse was going at the time of the injury. Spargo v. West End St. R. Co., 175 Mass. 174, 55 N. E. 812. Testimony of a witness that he saw a car "coming down at a terrible speed" is improper, as it conveys to the jury no measurement of the rate of speed of the car, except as it conveys to them the fact that it was at such a rate as the witness disapproved. Chicago City R. Co. v. Wall, 93 Ill. App. 411.

of the car's trip and of the schedule time for making such trip,[70] or, together with other testimony, of a statute or ordinance regulating and limiting the rate of speed.[71] As bearing on the speed of the car at the time of the accident, evidence is also admissible as to the nature and extent of the injuries inflicted,[72] as to the condition, after the collision, of the wagon or vehicle which was struck,[73] as to its speed prior to the accident where the evidence also shows that such rate of speed continued up to the time of the accident,[74] or as to the distance in which cars running at the usual rate of speed could be stopped;[75] but it has been held that evidence is inadmissible, for such purpose, of the customary rate of speed

That the company had contracted for cars that could run a given rate per hour is inadmissible, where the evidence relative to the speed of the street car at the time of the collision is conflicting. Orr v. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co., 94 Iowa 423, 62 N. W. 851.

Evidence of the rules of a street railroad company as to the duty of drivers of its cars with respect to the rate of speed in rounding curves is inadmissible in its favor in an action against it for injuries to a third person caused by the negligent driving of a car around a curve, since they could in no way be binding on plaintiff; nor is evidence of such rules material or relevant in answer to the charge that the car in question had been driven around the curve in a careless manner and at a high rate of speed, for the purpose of showing that the rules of the company forbid such management while rounding a curve. Michigan.— Deneen v. Houghton County St. R. Co., 150 Mich. 235, 113 N. W. 1126, holding that where the declaration alleges that the injuries were due to the company's breach of a municipal speed limiting ordinance, the ordinance is admissible in evidence.

Missouri.— Eckhard v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 593, 89 S. W. 602; Deitring v. St. Louis Transit Co., 109 Mo. App. 524, 85 S. W. 140.

Rhode Island.— Oates v. Union R. Co., 27 R. I. 499, 63 Atl. 675, holding that evidence of a city ordinance as to the rate at which cars are permitted to be run is admissible, although a violation of the ordinance is not declared on as a ground of action.

Texas.— San Antonio Traction Co. v. Upson, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 50, 71 S. W. 565.

Virginia.— Norfolk R., etc., Co. v. Corletto, 100 Va. 355, 41 S. E. 740, holding that where a street railroad company was running its cars in excess of the speed allowed by the statutes and valid municipal ordinances, such fact is competent evidence in an action by a traveler on the highway, injured by the cars, although the statute simply imposes a penalty for its violation.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 237.

Ordinance regulating steam cars, etc.— What would be a reasonable rate of speed for an electric car in a city cannot be shown by an ordinance of the city fixing the rate of speed for steam cars, for vehicles drawn by horses, and for horseback riders. Maxwell v. Wilmington City R. Co., 1 Marv. (Del.) 199, 40 Atl. 945.

An ordinance limiting the rate of speed in running "across" bridges is properly rejected as immaterial, where the collision occurred just before the car reached a public bridge. Ulrich v. Toledo Consol. St. R. Co., 10 Ohio Cir. Ct. 635, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 111.

72. Greenbaum v. Interurban St. R. Co., 84 N. Y. Suppl. 588, holding that in an action for personal injuries, caused by defendant's car striking plaintiff as he was crossing the street, evidence of bruises to plaintiff's head is admissible as showing the violence of the collision, and thereby bearing on the speed of the car, although such injuries were not specified in the bill of particulars.

73. Moore v. Westchester Electric R. Co., 115 N. Y. App. Div. 62, 100 N. Y. Suppl. 610; Strauss v. Newburgh Electric R. Co., 6 N. Y. App. Div. 264, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 998.

W. 271; Portsmouth St. R. Co. v. Peed, 102 Va. 662, 47 S. E. 850, holding that it is not error to receive testimony of a witness giving the rate of speed eighty feet from the scene of the accident.

That the witness was in his storehouse twenty-five feet from the door at the time he observed the car does not make his testimony inadmissible. Portsmouth St. R. Co. v. Peed, 102 Va. 662, 47 S. E. 850.

75. Chicago City R. Co. v. Taylor, 170 Ill. 49, 48 N. E. 831 [affirming 68 Ill. App. 613], holding that the admission of evidence that a witness had seen cars running at the usual rate of speed stopped in twenty or thirty feet is not error.

That a street car was not stopped until its rear was beyond the place of collision, variously estimated to have been from three rods to one hundred and sixty feet, is evidence tending to show a high rate of speed. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bordenchecker, 33 Ind. App. 138, 70 N. E. 995.

of defendant's cars,[76] or of the speed at which defendant's cars were run at the same place some time after the accident, unless the conditions are shown to be the same.[77]

(i) As to Contributory Negligence. On the question of contributory negligence, evidence of any material or relevant facts which tend to establish or disprove such negligence is admissible,[78] and for this purpose evidence is admissible of all the surrounding circumstances and conditions under which the injured person acted at the time of the accident,[79] such as of his voluntary intoxication,[80] or of rules and regulations of the company known to the person injured;[81] but evidence of irrelevant or immaterial facts is inadmissible,[82] such as evidence of the usual

76. Atherton v. Tacoma R., etc., Co., 30 Wash. 395, 71 Pac. 39 (holding that in an action for injury from the negligent running of a street car, evidence that the customary rate of speed of cars on the line was greater than allowed by ordinance, and a high and dangerous rate, is inadmissible); Christensen v. Union Trunk Line, 6 Wash. 75, 32 Pac. 1018. But see Union Traction Co. v. Vandercook, 32 Ind. App. 621, 69 N. E. 486, holding that in an action for personal injuries, where it is averred in the complaint that the car which struck plaintiff was runing at the high and dangerous speed of forty miles an hour and there is a conflict in the evidence thereof, evidence as to the speed of defendant's cars at the place in question for ten days preceding the accident is admissible.

78. See Cass v. Third Ave. R. Co., 20 N. Y. App. Div. 591, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 356, holding that evidence of a driver of a wagon as to his observation of the distance in which a car on defendant's road could be stopped was relevant upon the question of his prudence in driving as he did at the time of a collision with the car.

79. Indiana.— See Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Robinson, 157 Ind. 414, 61 N. E. 936, evidence held inadmissible as too indefinite.

Virginia.— Newport News, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Bradford, 99 Va. 117, 37 S. E. 807.

Washington.— Mitchell v. Tacoma R., etc., Co., 13 Wash. 560, 43 Pac. 528, holding that evidence is admissible to show the noise made by the cable of a street railroad at the time plaintiff started to cross, and was struck by a car, and injured.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 238.

Evidence as to the injured person's position when found immediately after the accident is admissible as tending to show his position when struck, where it is claimed that he fell on the track and was struck by a car while attempting to rise. Lhowe v. Third Ave R. Co., 14 Misc. (N. Y.) 612, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 463.

In an action for injuries by the piling of snow on a cross walk by defendant, it is not error to permit plaintiff to prove that others than herself had walked over the snow bank. Newport News, etc., R. Co. v. Bradford, 100 Va. 231, 40 S. E. 900.

Occupant of vehicle.— In an action for injuries received by plaintiff while riding in a vehicle driven by another in consequence of a collision with a car, evidence of the habits of the driver of the vehicle with respect to the dangers arising from collisions with cars, coupled with proof of knowledge thereof on the part of plaintiff, is admissible on the issue of his contributory negligence. Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 1059.

80. Heinel v. People's R. Co., 6 Pennew. (Del.) 428, 67 Atl. 173, holding that in an action for injuries to plaintiff by being struck by a street car, plaintiff's voluntary intoxication, if it caused him to omit to take reasonable care for his safety, might be considered in determining whether he was negligent.

81. Chicago City R. Co. v. McDonough, 125 Ill. App. 223 [affirmed in 221 Ill. 69, 77 N. E. 577], holding that the rules and regulations of a traction company, known as well to the party injured as to the servant alleged to have caused the injury, and which were promulgated for guidance in such a contingency as that existing at the time of the accident, are competent upon the question of the contributory negligence. Compare Atlanta R., etc., Co. v. Monk, 118 Ga. 449, 45 S. E. 494, holding that, in an action for injuries received while walking across a trestle, evidence that a person had been warned to keep plaintiff and others off the trestle, without evidence that the warning was communicated to plaintiff, is inadmissible to bind her with notice that the public were not allowed on the trestle.

82. Wosika v. St. Paul City R. Co., 80 Minn. 364, 83 N. W. 386 (holding that where there is no evidence that plaintiffs, injured by a collision with a street car, drove on the track at a rate in violation of the city ordinance as to fast driving, there is no error in excluding the ordinance); Knoll v. Third Ave. R. Co., 46 N. Y. App. Div. 527, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 16 [affirmed in 168 N. Y. 592, 60 N. E. 1113]; Wooster v. Broadway, etc., R. Co., 72 Hun (N. Y.) 197, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 378 (holding that in an action for injuries caused by a collision between plaintiff's coupé and de-custom of persons crossing street car tracks,[83] or, in an action for injuries to a child, of the custom of such child to play in the street unattended.[84] As tending to show freedom from contributory negligence in being on or near the tracks at the time of the accident, evidence is admissible of the condition of the street or roadway outside the tracks;[85] and plaintiff may show what the person injured had reason to expect on the company's part in the way of warnings and other safeguards,[86] and for this purpose may introduce evidence of what was required of the company by statute or ordinance,[87] such as of a rule or regulation requiring vehicles of the fire department to be given the right of way in responding to an alarm of fire,[88] and also of what was the company's usual custom in running its cars in the street where the accident occurred,[89] such as of a custom to stop and allow a funeral fendant's street car, evidence that plaintiff's driver had always been a very careful driver is irrelevant on the issue whether or not such driver's negligence contributed to the accident); Hays v. Gainesville St. R. Co., 70 Tex. 602, 8 S. W. 491, 8 Am. St. Rep. 624.

Declarations of a mother after an accident, in which her child was run over, that she did not blame the motorman, are inadmissible. Budd v. Meriden Electric R. Co., 69 Conn. 272, 37 Atl. 683.

W. 214, holding, however, that where plaintiff, a woman, was injured while crossing the tracks at a place not a crossing, evidence that it is very unusual for women to cross at such place, while not competent for the purpose of showing contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, is admissible to show that a greater degree of caution was required of her than if she had crossed at the usual place.

84. Smith v. Grand St., etc., R. Co., 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 62.

85. Murphy v. Evanston Electric R. Co., 235 Ill. 275, 85 N. E. 334, holding that in an action for injuries to the driver of a vehicle from collision with a street car, evidence that the street outside the track was unpaved, rough, uneven, and could not be driven over is competent to show the condition of the roadway outside of the tracks, as affecting his care in driving on the street and track.

86. Canfield v. North Chicago St. R. Co., 98 Ill. App. 1.

Ringing bell or gong.—Where evidence of a failure to give warning of the approach of the car by ringing the bell is not available as a ground of liability, such failure may be shown as a part of the res gestæ, as bearing on the exercise of care by plaintiff in remaining on the track while the car was approaching. Chicago Gen. R. Co. v. Kriz, 94 Ill. App. 277. So evidence of omission to sound a street car gong at a place where the law did not require it to be sounded is admissible as a part of the history of the transaction, and as bearing upon the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence. Kleiner v. Third Ave. R. Co., 162 N. Y. 193, 56 N. E. 497 [reversing 38 N. Y. App. Div. 623, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 1140].

87. Canfield v. North Chicago St. R. Co., 98 Ill. App. 1.

88. See cases cited infra, this note.

Rules giving fire department right of way.—Where, in an action for the death of a fireman in a collision between a car and a fire engine on its way to a fire, it is shown that the motorman and the decedent were familiar with a rule giving the fire department the right of way, the rule is admissible as bearing on the question of contributory negligence of decedent in permitting the engine to approach the crossing at which the collision occurred at the speed he did. Chicago City R. Co. v. McDonough, 221 Ill. 69, 77 N. E. 577 [affirming 125 Ill. App. 223].

Greater New York Charter (Laws (1897), c. 378), § 748, giving vehicles of the fire department in answering a fire alarm the right of way over other vehicles is material on the question of contributory negligence in a collision between a hook and ladder truck and a street car, wherein a fireman riding on the truck is killed. Geary v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 84 N. Y. App. Div. 514, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 1016 [affirmed in 177 N. Y. 535, 69 N. E. 1123].

Ordinances prohibiting riding or driving on the streets faster than six miles an hour are not admissible in an action against a street railroad company for injuries resulting from collision with a fire department truck, as the fire department is not subject to such ordinances. Toledo R., etc., Co. v. Ward, 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 399.

89. Canfield v. North Chicago St. R. Co., 98 Ill. App. 1.

Custom in approaching crossing.—In an action for death resulting from a collision between a street car and a hook and ladder truck, it is proper to admit evidence showing that it is the custom, in approaching such crossings, for street cars to slacken their speed, with testimony showing that the deceased had often crossed such crossing, as bearing on the question of deceased's contributory negligence. Toledo R., etc., Co. v. Ward, 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 399.

Injury to telegraph lineman.—In an action for injury to a telegraph lineman by being struck by a street car while he was climbing a telegraph pole, evidence as to a custom of giving notice of danger to linemen by men on the ground is admissible, as bearing on the issue of plaintiff's due care, although the action was not against plaintiff's employer. Ahearn v. Boston El. R. Co., 194 Mass. 350, 80 N. E. 217.

procession to pass without interruption.[90] Evidence that the person killed in an accident was a careful and cautious man is inadmissible, where there were several eye-witnesses to the occurrence.[91]

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE[92] — (A) In General. In an action for injuries caused by the negligent management and operation of a street railroad or cars, the rules relative to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally apply;[93] and to warrant a recovery in such an action, the evidence on plaintiff's behalf must preponderate and be of such weight and sufficiency as will reasonably justify the jury in finding the existence of all facts and circumstances necessary to constitute his cause of action;[94] such as of the injured person's right to be upon or near the tracks at the time and place of the accident, and of the consequent duty owed by the employees of defendant to avoid injuring him,[95]

90. White v. Wilmington City R. Co., 6 Pennew. (Del.) 105, 63 Atl. 931 (holding that, although the custom of street cars to stop and allow a funeral procession to pass without interruption places no obligation on the company to continue it, yet the existence of such a custom and knowledge of it by the driver of a funeral cab may be considered by the jury in estimating the degree of diligence required of the driver in looking for an approaching car as he crosses the railroad track); Foulke v. Wilmington City R. Co., 5 Pennew. (Del.) 363, 60 Atl. 973.

Evidence of a custom to allow funeral processions to pass street car tracks without interruption, by one who has driven funeral cabs in a city for ten or twelve years, to be admissible, must be connected with the time of the injury sued for. White v. Wilmington City R. Co., 6 Pennew. (Del.) 105, 63 Atl. 931.

93. See, generally, EVIDENCE, 17 Cyc. 753 et seq.

Evidence held not improbable in regard to the distance the car moved while the vehicle collided with was going a given distance see Baxter v. St. Louis Transit Co., 103 Mo. App. 597, 78 S. W. 70.

False or mistaken testimony.— Testimony of the person injured that, when he started to cross the street, the car which struck his wagon was at a certain point, will be disregarded where the team, going a little faster than a walk as testified to, would have been far beyond the track within the time necessary for the car, going at the highest speed testified to, to have reached the place of the accident. Bornscheuer v. Consolidated Traction Co., 198 Pa. St. 332, 47 Atl. 872.

Consistency.— Testimony by plaintiff that the driver compelled him, by threats of violence, to jump off while the car was in rapid motion, and refused to stop the car, is not inconsistent with a further statement that his last request for the driver to stop was made on the north side of a certain street, and that he fell after the car had reached the south side of that street. Evidence held sufficient: To sustain a judgment for plaintiff in an action for killing a dog (Jackson Electric R., etc., Co. v. Waycaster, 92 Miss. 816, 46 So. 135, 131 Am. St. Rep. 554), for personal injuries caused by a car striking the injured person's horse and causing it to fall on him (Berke v. Twenty-Third St. R. Co., 4 N. Y. Suppl. 905). To sustain a verdict for defendant in an action for injuries to a bicyclist by being struck by a street car after crossing a crossover switch. Hall v. Washington Water Power Co., 46 Wash. 207, 89 Pac. 553.

Delay in bringing suit.—That plaintiff does not bring his suit for personal injuries which are alleged to be very serious until several weeks after the accident, although one of the attorneys is plaintiff's nephew, and that the amount demanded is entirely inadequate to the injury alleged, tends to justify a judgment in defendant's favor based on the uncorroborated testimony of plaintiff. Hartman v. Interurban St. R. Co., 88 N. Y. Suppl. 352.

Damages.— Where, in an action for injuries to a horse, there is evidence tending to show that before and up to the time of the collision the horse was docile and not afraid of cars, but that after the collision it was of an ill disposition, afraid of cars, difficult to drive near cars, etc., and there is nothing to suggest a cause for the change other than the collision, the jury are warranted in finding that the change was due to the collision. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Hastings, 138 Ala. 432, 35 So. 412.

95. Trigg v. Water, etc., Co., 216 Mo. 521, 114 S. W. 972, 20 L. R. A. N. S. 987; Daum v. North Jersey St. R. Co., 69 N. J. L. 1, 54 Atl. 221 [affirmed in 70 N. J. L. 338, 57 Atl. 1132], holding that in an action for injuries to a person working in the street, the absence of proof that plaintiff's employer had a right to prosecute any work on the street does not justify the conclusion that plaintiff was a trespasser as to defendant, where there is nothing to show that the presence of defendant's tracks in the street was authorized.

Duties imposed by ordinance.— Proof that a street railroad company is operating its cars on the streets of a city does not show that the city, in consideration of the grant the place of the accident,[96] the injured person's position at the time,[97] the failure of defendant to discharge its duty, or in other words the negligence on the part of defendant,[98] as in regard to the equipment of its cars;[99] that the negligent act or omission was within the scope of the negligent servant's employment,[1] and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries complained of.[2] Direct and positive evidence of defendant's negligence is not necesof the right to the company, required it to agree to be bound by an ordinance imposing certain duties on it in the operation of its cars, or that it so agreed. Sanders v. Southern Electric R. Co., 147 Mo. 411, 48 S. W. 855.

96. Anniston Electric, etc., Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45, holding that testimony that the accident happened in a certain city, describing the locality as opposite a hotel, justifies a finding that it occurred within the corporate limits.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the collision occurred at a street crossing see Remillard v. Sioux City Traction Co., 138 Iowa 565, 115 N. W. 900.

97. Morse v. Consolidated R. Co., 81 Conn. 395, 71 Atl. 553; Riggs v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 216 Mo. 304, 115 S. W. 969.

Where intestate's conduct and situation at the time of the accident is not shown, so that the cause of the accident and the company's negligence is wholly speculative, a verdict is properly directed for the company. Morse v. Consolidated R. Co., 81 Conn. 395, 71 Atl. 553.

Reproduction of situation.—Where a witness states that a picture clearly represents the scene of the accident, but states specifically that the position of the person in the picture is different from that of the person injured, his general answer must be construed with reference to his specific denial of its correctness in important details. Riggs v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 216 Mo. 304, 115 S. W. 969.

If the one injured was unconscious when he was run over, any testimony by him as to his position is without probative force. Riggs v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 216 Mo. 304, 115 S. W. 969.

Suppl. 816, holding that the testimony of a conductor that there was a rule making it his duty to prevent boys from catching on cars, and that his purpose in what he did was to remove plaintiff from the car, was sufficient to justify a finding that his act in assaulting a boy who was on, or attempting to get on, defendant's car, was within the scope of his employment.

sary, but it may be inferred from circumstances adduced in evidence sufficient to authorize a finding of negligence;[3] but these facts must themselves be shown by direct testimony, and cannot be inferred from other facts, as one presumption cannot be based upon another presumption,[4] and this is also true of evidence of defendant's lack of negligence.[5]

(B) Identity of Defendant. In order to place the responsibility for the acts complained of on defendant there must be a preponderance of evidence of facts showing defendant's ownership or operation of the road, car, or other agency,[6] or employment of the servant,[7] which caused the injury. Direct and positive evidence, however, of such ownership or operation is not essential, but it may be shown by proof of facts from which the ownership or operation at the time of the accident may be reasonably inferred.[8]

a verdict finding that the accident was caused by the action of the driver of the cart in suddenly veering was proper. Rombach v. Crescent City R. Co., 50 La. Ann. 473, 23 So. 604.

Where plaintiff can prove nothing except that he believes that he was struck by one of the horses of the car, but how or by whose fault he is unable to make clear, he cannot recover. Boetgen v. New York, etc., R. Co., 50 N. Y. Suppl. 331 [reversed on the facts in 36 N. Y. App. Div. 460, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 847].

In an action for injuries caused by snow or ice thrown by a sweeper used by defendant to clear the snow from its tracks, in the absence of proof that the snow or ice which had caused the injury, and which plaintiff said came from the direction of the sweeper, did in fact come from the sweeper, and in the absence of proof that this was the result of negligence which could have been avoided, a verdict for plaintiff cannot be sustained. Connor v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 48 N. Y. App. Div. 580, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 509.

3. Morse v. Consolidated R. Co., 81 Conn. 395, 71 Atl. 553 (holding that the proximate cause of injury to plaintiff's intestate by being struck by a street car could be proved by circumstantial evidence, and need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt, but it must be established by facts affording a logical basis for an inference as to the cause, and cannot be left to speculation); Beier v. St. Louis Transit Co., 197 Mo. 215, 94 S. W. 876 (holding that formal proof that the car might have been stopped in time to avoid the injury is unnecessary). And see cases cited in preceding notes 93 to 2.

Where defendant gives no evidence in an action for personal injuries by a collision with plaintiff's vehicle, the jury might draw an inference of carelessness, rather than of pure accident, from the fact of such silence. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Darnell, 32 Ind. App. 687, 68 N. E. 609.

6. Frisby v. St. Louis Transit Co., 214 Mo. 567, 113 S. W. 1059, holding that in an action against a street railroad company for injuries in a street car collision, the evidence must support the allegations of ownership and operation of the car at the time of the injury, and where it does not appear that the car was in use by defendant, and the fact that the car was running on defendant's road, and the connection between defendant and those in charge of the car are not shown, there can be no recovery. Proof that a street railroad company is operating its cars on the streets of a city is not evidence that it does so under a grant or license from the city, where it might have acquired the right from the state. Sanders v. Southern Electric R. Co., 147 Mo. 411, 48 S. W. 855.

Evidence held sufficient to support a finding that the motorman and conductor in charge of the car were employees of the company and engaged in the service of the company, within the scope of their employment see Indianapolis, etc., Traction Co. v. Henderson, 39 Ind. App. 324, 79 N. E. 539.

Evidence held insufficient to show that the employee causing the injury was defendant's employee, or that it was responsible for him, and that judgment for plaintiff should be reversed, and a new trial granted see Cords v. Third Ave. R. Co., 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 570, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 713.

8. Mobile Light, etc., Co. v. Mackay, 158 Ala. 51, 48 So. 509 (holding that, in the absence of evidence of another corporation of a similar name, the jury may infer that defendant, named in the caption of the complaint as "Mobile Light & Railroad Company, a corporation," was, as alleged, operating the street car in the city of M. that killed plaintiff's mule, from his testimony that he had a mule killed on a certain street in such city, that the railroad track runs on such street, that it was the track of the "Mobile Light & Railway," and that "they" operated cars down that street); Frisby v. St. Louis Transit Co., 214 Mo. 567, 113 S. W. 1059; Burbridge v. Kansas City Cable R. Co., 36 Mo. App. 669 (holding that where in an action for injuries from negligent management of street cars, the evidence for plaintiff, with the inferences to be drawn

(c) Condition of Track and Equipment. To prove negligence on the part of defendant in regard to the condition of its tracks or of the equipment of its road, the evidence must be such as will reasonably justify the jury in finding the existence of a defective condition, at the time of the accident, in the equipment of the road,[9] or of the tracks,[10] or street,[11] and of its actual or constructive notice thereof,[12] and of its failure to maintain proper warning signals thereat.[13] In an action against an elevated railroad company, evidence that the injuries were occasioned by the fall of an iron plate with part of a bolt, due to the breaking of the bolt while passing under the structure, is sufficient to make out a prima facie case.[14] So also a case of negligence in regard to the equipment of defendant's locomotives therefrom, tends to show that defendant was running and managing the cars which occasioned the injury, a demurrer to evidence is properly overruled, although there is no direct evidence that such cars were operated by defendant).

Evidence held sufficient: To support a finding that the car causing the injury was operated by defendant on a track owned by it. Indianapolis, etc., Traction Co. v. Henderson, 39 Ind. App. 324, 79 N. E. 539. To show that defendant, and not another street railroad company, was in the possession and operation of the street car line whose car jumped the track and collided with plaintiff's wagon, thereby injuring him. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Jerka, 227 Ill. 95, 81 N. E. 7 [affirming 126 Ill. App. 365].

Evidence held insufficient: To show that the car causing the injury was operated by defendant. Anderson v. Des Moines St. R. Co., 97 Iowa 739, 66 N. W. 64. To establish defendant's ownership of the car, essential to a recovery, in view of the fact that other companies operated street railroads at the place of the accident. St. 190, 40 Atl. 413 (evidence held insufficient to show that the accident was caused by the tracks being eight inches below the street surface, or by that and a low mound of earth, two feet outside the tracks, caused by the earth being displaced by heavy wagons).

Evidence that others had safely passed over the place where the accident occurred is not conclusive that the construction there was safe, but is merely a matter to be considered by the jury. 11. Kearns v. South Middlesex St. R. Co., 181 Mass. 587, 64 N. E. 200 (holding that in an action for a failure to fill up an excavation made in a street, evidence that before the excavation water ran into defendant's switch, that the excavation ran under the track, and had the appearance of having been made by digging, and that while it was there defendant's employees were working near by, is sufficient, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, to justify a finding that the excavation had been made by defendant); Williams v. Minneapolis St. R. Co., 88 Minn. 79, 92 N. W. 479.

12. Central R. Co. v. State, 82 Md. 647, 33 Atl. 265 (holding that where, in an action for injuries suffered by being thrown out of a carriage as resulting from the improper construction of a switch in the street, the evidence for defendant tends to simply show that the switch had been skilfully constructed under the supervision of a competent engineer, and had been frequently inspected, and kept in repair, while the evidence for plaintiff tends to show that the rails were so far elevated above the surface of the street as to be obviously dangerous, the jury might well conclude that the company must have been aware of such a condition of the tracks); Gilton v. Hestonville, etc., R. Co., 166 Pa. St. 460, 31 Atl. 249.

13. Ripley v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 132 Mo. App. 350, 111 S. W. 1180, evidence held sufficient to support a finding of negligence on defendant's part in failing to maintain proper warning signals at an excavation.

on its elevated railroad is established by evidence of the fall therefrom of coals and cinders of unusual sizes or quantities at the time of the accident, together with proof that proper appliances could have been used to prevent the same,[15] although the condition of the locomotive which caused the injury is not shown.[16]

(D) Negligence in Management or Operation of Car — (1) IN GENERAL. To warrant a recovery in an action for injuries received by being struck by a car, there must be evidence of sufficient facts to justify the jury in finding negligence on the part of defendant's servants in regard to the management or operation of the car which caused the injury,[17] as in regard to keeping a lookout for and

15. Woodall v. Boston El. R. Co., 192 Mass. 308, 78 N. E. 446 (holding that in an action against an elevated railroad company for injuries to a pedestrian on the street in consequence of a piece of metal falling from the elevated railroad into the eye of the pedestrian, evidence that it was feasible to construct a pan which would prevent the falling of sparks on persons in the street, and that it was known that there was a good deal of trouble from sparking after the road began operation, and that nothing was done to remedy it prior to the accident, warrants a finding of negligence); McNaier v. Manhattan R. Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.) 502 (holding that where the evidence shows that plaintiff, while passing under defendant's elevated railroad track, was struck and seriously injured by a red-hot cinder a half inch broad, and somewhat longer, and that proper appliances could be used so as to prevent cinders of that size from falling, it is error to nonsuit him); Ashley v. Manhattan R. Co., 13 Daly (N. Y.) 205; Burke v. Manhattan R. Co., 13 Daly (N. Y.) 75; Ruppel v. Manhattan R. Co., 13 Daly (N. 18. Remillard v. Sioux City Traction Co., 138 Iowa 565, 115 N. W. 900, holding that where decedent was killed at a street crossing, evidence that the motorman of the car which killed him could see one on the track one and one-half blocks away, and did not see any one at the crossing, warrants a finding that the motorman was negligent in not discovering decedent and in colliding with him.

Evidence held sufficient: To support a finding that defendant was negligent in this respect. Fullerton v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 63 N. Y. App. Div. 1, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 326 [affirmed in 170 N. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Levyson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 113 S. W. 569. To justify a finding of negligence of the motorman, in that he saw, or by proper diligence ought to have seen, the vehicle in time to have avoided the collision. Lawrence v. Fitchburg, etc., St. R. Evidence that the person injured or killed could have been really seen on the track for from forty to seventy-five feet ahead of the car, and that the car was actually stopped in thirty-two feet after he was discovered on the track, justifies an inference that defendant's motorman if he had been exercising ordinary care could have discovered such person on the track in time to have avoided injuring him. Goff v. St. Louis Transit Co., 199 Mo. 694, 98 S. W. 49. It can be fairly inferred from testimony that, while defendant's car had stopped, and passengers were alighting, plaintiff sought to pass in front of the car, which was started without any signal to her, that the motorman saw, or should have seen, plaintiff's effort to get by the car. McLeland v. St. Louis Transit Co., 105 Mo. App. 473, 80 S. W. 30.

Evidence held insufficient: To show that the motorman's failure to detect plaintiff's prostrate form was negligent. Kupiec v. Warren, etc., St. R. Co., 196 Mass. 463, 82 N. E. 676. Rep. 32, holding that evidence showing that plaintiff, a child nineteen months old, somehow got in front of a street car, and was run over by it, but showing nothing beyond this as to the circumstances of the accident, is sufficient to sustain a verdict against the railroad company, the company not calling the driver of the car to rebut, by his testimony, the presumption of negligence arising from the facts), for injuries to a woman struck by a car while waiting for a car (O'Toole v. Central Park, etc., R. Co., 12 N. Y. Suppl. 347 [affirmed in 128 N. Y. 597, 28 N. E. 251]), for the negligence of defendant in so operating its car as to frighten the horse on which plaintiff was riding and causing it to throw him (Knoxville Traction Co. v. Mullins, 111 Tenn. 329, 76 S. W. 890). To support a judgment for plaintiff, a street sweeper (O'Connor v. Union R. Co., 67 N. Y. App. Div. 99, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 606), for the negligent killing of a child (Elwood Electric St. R. Co. v. Ross, 26 Ind. App. 258, 58 N. E. 535). To sustain a verdict for defendant. Wilson v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 105 Tenn. 74, 58 S. W. 334.

Evidence held insufficient: To show negligence on the part of the driver or motorman of the car after he discovered, or should have discovered, the injured person's peril in time to have avoided the danger. O'Farrell v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 136 Mo. App. 353, 117 S. W. 615; Gabriel v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 130 Mo. App. 651, 109 S. W. 1042; Sciurba v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 87 N. Y. App. Div. 614, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 85.

Where the evidence shows that the car was not stopped within a space within which it was possible to stop it, the inference that the motorman was not as energetic as he should have been overcomes the statement of witnesses that he did all that was possible to stop the car. Crisman v. Shreveport Belt R. Co., 110 La. 640, 34 So. 718, 62 L. R. A. 747.

But where there is uncontradicted evidence by two of plaintiff's witnesses that the motorman as soon as he discovered the danger applied the brake and did all that he could to stop the car and avoid injury there is no sufficient evidence of negligence, although the car was not stopped within a distance certain expert witnesses testified it could have been stopped in. Davis v. People's R. Co., 5 Pennew. (Del.) 253, 64 Atl. 70.

Expert testimony.—Where the motorman saw plaintiff on the track fifty or sixty feet ahead, the track being slippery and on a sharply descending grade, expert evidence that the car could have been stopped within that distance is not essential to a recovery. Richmond v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 123 Mo. App. 495, 100 S. W. 54.

Suppl. 583).

A verdict for plaintiff is against the weight of the evidence in an action by the owner of a vehicle against a street car company for damages from a collision, where the version of defendant's motorman, that the negligence of plaintiff's driver caused the accident is directly supported by three disinterested witnesses, and the direct testimony of plaintiff's driver varies from that on cross-examination, with but slight support by one disinterested witness. App. 385]; Alger v. Duluth-Superior Traction Co., 93 Minn. 314, 101 N. W. 298 (evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that the motorman might have avoided the injury by the exercise of ordinary care, so that it was error to submit the question of wilful negligence).

23. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor, 39 Ind. App. 592, 80 N. E. 436 (holding that where plaintiff was struck at night by a street car as he was crossing a street, proof that the motorman stood in the front vestibule of the car where he could see in front thereof, and that there was no headlight on the car, was sufficient to show that the motorman had knowledge that the headlight was not burning); Welsh v. United Traction Co., 202 Pa. St. 530, 51 Atl. 1026.

or in regard to sounding a bell or gong.[24] The positive testimony of witnesses who were in a position to have heard the bell or gong, if it had been sounded, that they did not hear it, is sufficient to justify a finding that it was not sounded;[25] but such testimony is of little or no weight when given by witnesses who had no means of knowledge or who paid no attention to the occurrence, and may be too insubstantial to offer any opposition to positive contradictory testimony.[26]

(3) RATE OF SPEED. Where the negligence charged is as to the speed of the car which caused the injury, it is not sufficient, in the absence of statutory or municipal regulation, merely to show that the car was running at a rapid rate of speed;[27] but the evidence must be sufficient to show that, under the circumstances existing at the time and place of the accident, the speed of the car was negligent,[28]

Evidence held insufficient to warrant a finding of a failure of proper care to furnish necessary lights on the car see Wilkie v. Richmond Traction Co., 105 Va. 290, 54 S. E. 43.

The positive testimony of several witnesses that there was no signal light burning on the car is not overcome by the motorman's testimony to the contrary. Cross v. St. Louis Transit Co., 120 Mo. App. 458, 97 S. W. 183.

Negative testimony.—Where persons are waiting and watching for an approaching car and are looking in the direction from which it is coming, and the car is directly in their presence, it cannot be said that their evidence is negative, when they declare that the car had no headlight burning, and was in such complete darkness that it could not be seen at all. Custom to sound gong.—In an action for injury to a workman, who was struck by a street car while at work in the street, evidence that he had worked in that locality for some weeks, and had noticed that it was customary for cars to use their gongs when men were near the track, but that for hours at a time he would not notice whether the cars rang their gongs or not, but that, when he did notice, the cars rang their gongs when men were near the track, is insufficient to establish a custom to sound a gong. W. 480 (holding that where all of the witnesses who were listening testified that the bell was rung prior to the accident, the statement of plaintiff, who was partially deaf, and was not listening, that he did not hear the bell, is no evidence on which to raise an issue of fact as to whether the bell was rung); Butler v. Metropolitan St. R. App. Div. 663, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 424; Flaherty v. Harrison, 98 Wis. 559, 74 N. W. 360. A street railroad company cannot be held liable for damages caused by the scaring of plaintiff's horse by defendant's electric car, on the ground that it was caused by the excessive speed of the car, on the testimony of plaintiff that the car was moving "fast," "pretty fast," "at full headway," and "swiftly," and of defendant's witnesses that it was going at a moderate rate of speed, one of them saying that it was five miles an hour. Yingst v. Lebanon, etc., R. Co., 167 Pa. St. 438, 31 Atl. 687.

Evidence that the car was going at a speed of from six to eight miles an hour is insufficient to show negligence, in the absence of evidence concerning the character of the place of the accident, the amount of travel on the streets there, and of the crossings.

or that it was in excess of the limit of speed prescribed by statute or ordinance.[29]

(E) Contributory Negligence. On the question of contributory negligence on the part of a person injured on or near a street railroad track, a preponderance of direct or circumstantial evidence from which the jury may fairly infer such fact is necessary to establish his contributory negligence,[30] or freedom from such negligence;[31] but an inference of contributory negligence or freedom therefrom

Higgins v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 197 Mo. 300, 95 S. W. 863.

That the car was not being operated at a negligent rate of speed is shown as a matter of law by evidence that the accident did not result in any injury to the car, except a few scratches, and did not disturb the lights on the car or the passengers, or persons in charge of the car, other than by the jar caused by the application of the break and the reversal of the current, and that the car stopped substantially at the place of the accident, and did not push the vehicle any distance, or break it at the point of contact. Stafford v. Chippewa Valley Electric R. Co., 110 Wis. 331, 85 N. W. 1036.

Deitring v. St. Louis Transit Co., 109 Mo. App. 524, 85 S. W. 140. Evidence that the car was running somewhere between eleven and ninety-six hundredths miles and seventeen miles per hour supports a finding that defendant was negligent in running the car at a greater rate than twelve miles per hour, to which it was limited by ordinance. Riley v. Salt Lake Rapid-Transit Co., 10 Utah 428, 37 Pac. 681 [affirmed in 163 U. S. 703, 16 S. Ct. 1205, 41 L. ed. 308].

Evidence that the car was run faster than usual, that it was going at full speed, and that a man would have to run very fast to keep up with it, is sufficient to show that the speed exceeded six miles per hour and justify the admission in evidence of an ordinance restricting speed to six miles per hour. Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 43 Md. 534.

30. Evidence held sufficient: To show contributory negligence (Houston City St. R. Co. v. Delesdernier, 84 Tex. 82, 19 S. Evidence held insufficient: To show that the child who was injured was of sufficient intelligence or capacity to exercise any care for his own safety, especially in view of the presumption that defendant obeyed the law and exercised greater care at crossings frequented by school children than at the ordinary crossing, where the child was injured. Knowledge of danger.— In a suit by a city fireman for personal injuries received in consequence of the overturning of a hose cart on which he was riding, by coming in contact with an improperly placed rail, the fact that plaintiff knew the street to be dangerous is not proof of contributory negligence, but the question should be left to the jury. must be based on facts, and not on another presumption,[32] unless the presumptions refer to entirely different matters.[33] Thus a preponderance of the evidence is necessary to prove or disprove the fact of contributory negligence,[34] or freedom therefrom,[35] in regard to going along or crossing a street railroad track ahead of Sufficiency of proof.— To sustain the burden of proving freedom from contributory negligence it is not enough that the facts proven permit the inference that the person injured was free from contributory negligence; but such inference must be the only one that can fairly and reasonably be drawn from the facts. O'Reilly v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 82 N. Y. App. Div. 492, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 572. See also Cox v. South Shore, etc., St. R. Co., 182 Mass. 497, 65 N. E. 823. Thus mere proof that the hearing of one driving on a street car track was good, and that he did not hear a car approaching from behind, does not warrant the inference that he was listening for it. Belford v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 86 N. Y. App. Div. 388, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 836. Knowledge of unlawful speed of car.— In the absence of any direct evidence as to whether the person injured knew the speed of the car, the fact that he was struck is not conclusive evidence of contributory negligence, as the presumption that he would exercise care for his safety would negative any knowledge on his part of the speed at which the car was coming. Where a number of disinterested witnesses testify that plaintiff's driver drove on the track about thirty feet in front of a car approaching at the rate of eight miles an hour, although the driver testifies that the car was a block away when he started on the track, the evidence is insufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff. New York Small Stock Co. v. Third Ave. R. Co., 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 276, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 61.

37. Shea v. Lexington, etc., St. R. Co., 188 Mass. 425, 74 N. Change of evidence on new trial.—Where, on the first trial of an action for damages from a collision with plaintiff's wagon, plaintiff testifies that as he was turning on the track he looked back once before he was run into, but on a second trial testifies that he looked back four times to determine whether any car was approaching, and no satisfactory explanation of such change in his evidence is given, his evidence is not worthy of belief, and a judgment in his favor is unauthorized. However, plaintiff's testimony that he stopped to look and listen for cars, but did not see the one that struck him, is not so incredible that it should be disregarded, when the evidence of the motorman himself is that he could not see more than five feet ahead of his car, and there is also evidence that the gong was not sounded. g. Questions For Court and For Jury — (I) In General. In an action for injuries caused by the management or operation of a street railroad, as in other civil actions, questions of law are ordinarily to be determined by the court, while questions of fact are to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court.[43] Thus the legal effect or force,[44] or the reasonableness or unreasonableness,[45] of a statutory or municipal regulation is a question of law for the court, unless it depends, in the opinion of the court upon the existence of particular facts which are disputed.[46]

(II) As Determined by the Evidence in General. In accordance with the rules applying in civil cases generally,[47] if there is any evidence from which the jury might justifiably find the existence or non-existence of the facts in issue, and the evidence is disputed, or if undisputed is such that reasonable minds might arrive at different conclusions therefrom, the issues should be submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions from the court;[48] but where there is no evidence on an issue of fact, or the evidence of its existence or non-existence is so slight that a finding thereof would not be sustained, or is conclusive of its existence or non-existence, the question becomes one of law for the court and should not be submitted to the jury.[49] Accordingly if the evidence is sufficient to establish at least a prima facie case for plaintiff,[50] but is conflicting or not conclusive upon the resulting appreciation in the value of the horse, and in the absence of proof as to the difference in value prior to the injury, and after recovery there is no basis for the assessment of damages to the horse); San Antonio Traction Co. v. Upson, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 50, 71 S. W. 565 (holding that where, in an action for injuries sustained in a collision, the evidence shows that plaintiff's vehicle was badly smashed and broken, the jury may consider, in estimating the damages, the amount, if any, expended by plaintiff in repairing the vehicle).

Excessive damages.— A verdict for four hundred dollars rendered under proper instructions is not excessive where plaintiff was badly bruised, was thrown some twenty feet into the street, causing a shock that confined him to the house several days and requiring treatment from a physician, and the buggy in which he was riding at the time was virtually destroyed. Co. v. Teekin, 78 S. W. 470, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1692 (holding that evidence that a street car was running through a narrow city street after dark, at a rate of from twelve to twenty miles an hour; that it failed to sound its gong at the crossing; and that the motorman was looking back and not ahead was sufficient to show gross neglect and authorize punitive damages in an action for injuries by a driver of a team); Nashville St. R. is undisputed, or is such that reasonable minds can arrive at but one conclusion therefrom, the case should not be submitted to the jury, but the court alone should dispose of it, as by a dismissal or nonsuit,[61] or by directing a verdict for defendant.[62] Whether the proximate cause of the injury or death was the company's negligence or the injured or deceased person's contributory negligence is ordinarily a question for the jury under the evidence.[63]

(III) NEGLIGENCE OF STREET RAILROAD COMPANY IN GENERAL. Primarily questions of negligence, in cases of injuries from the operation of a street railroad, are for the jury;[64] and if, in accordance with the above rules, there is any legally sufficient evidence to go to the jury, and it is conflicting or such that reasonable minds might arrive at different conclusions therefrom, it is a question for the jury, and should be submitted to them, as to whether or not under all the circumstances the commission or omission of particular acts by the company in the operation of its road or car at the time and place of the accident was negligence as to the person injured thereby,[65] and whether such negligence was the

are ordinarily questions of fact for the jury to determine. It is also ordinarily a question for the jury as to whether it is actionable negligence for the conductor of a car to fail to promptly notify the motorman of the danger to a person or animal on or near the track, which the conductor has discovered.[92]

(VI) Precautions on Approaching Persons On or Near Track. In accordance with the rules stated above,[93] where the facts are disputed or if undisputed are such that fair-minded persons might arrive at different conclusions therefrom it is a question for the jury as to whether or not the person or vehicle injured by the operation of a car was in a position of peril on or near the tracks, when discovered, or should have been discovered, by the driver or motorman of the car which caused the injury,[94] and whether such driver or motorman could have avoided the accident after he discovered or should have discovered such peril,[95] and hence whether or not he thereafter used all reasonable means within his power to avoid the injury, or was guilty of negligence in this respect,[96] as Evidence held sufficient to require submission to the jury of the issue as to whether the failure to stop the car in time to avoid injury to plaintiff was due to the operation of the car at a reckless rate of speed in excess of that permitted by ordinance see Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co., 95 Mo. App. 728, 74 S. W. 699.

That the car was operated at an unlawful rate of speed is sufficient to take the case to the jury on the issue of negligence. Kern v. Des Moines City R. Co., 141 Iowa 620, 118 N. Question for court.—Where plaintiff alleges that defendant was negligent in running its cars at a greater rate of speed than was permitted by an ordinance, and the evidence disproves this allegation, the court may properly take the question of negligence on account of the speed of the car from the jury, as plaintiff is not entitled under such allegation to rely on common-law negligence as to its speed. E. 286, holding that whether it is negligence to run street cars on the same track over a public crossing in a city, at an excessive rate of speed, in close proximity to one another, and without giving warning signals, resulting in a collision with a vehicle, is a question for the jury under all the circumstances of the case.

(VIII) LIGHTS, SIGNALS, OR WARNINGS. It is ordinarily a question for the jury whether or not the servants in charge of the car which caused the injury exercised the proper degree of care, under the circumstances existing at the time and place of the accident, in regard to displaying lights on the car,[12] or in regard to giving signals or warnings of the car's approach,[13] as when approaching a crossing.[14] Thus where the evidence is conflicting or doubtful, it is a question of fact for the jury as to whether or not the bell or gong on the car was sounded just before the accident,[15] and if not, whether or not such failure constituted negligence, under the circumstances.[16]

(IX) FRIGHTENING ANIMALS. Where in an action for injuries resulting from a horse or team becoming frightened at the operation of a street car, the evidence is disputed or is such that different inferences might be reasonably drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury whether or not the company was negligent in respect to the particular act or omission which caused the fright.[17] It is also Hoag v. South Dover Marble Co., 192 N. Y. 412, 85 N. E. 667, 21 L. R. A. N. S. 283.

A verdict should be directed for defendant

ordinarily a question for the jury, in such an action, as to whether or not the driver or motorman of the car saw the peril caused by the fright of the horse or team,[18] and whether he thereafter exercised proper care to use all reasonable efforts to avert the threatened injury,[19] as whether he should have stopped the car, after he saw that the horse or team was frightened.[20]

(x) DEFECTS AND OBSTRUCTIONS.[21] Except where the evidence is legally insufficient to be submitted to the jury on such question,[22] it is a question of fact for the jury as to whether or not the street railroad company was guilty of negligence in regard to the defect or obstruction in the tracks or street,[23] or in the equipment of its road,[24] which caused the injury. Whether an elevated railroad in an action by one whose horse was frightened by a trolley car, where the negligence alleged is the excessive speed of the car, and his testimony that it was "not less than fifteen miles an hour" is a mere guess, and his further testimony that not till the car was alongside the horse did it turn into the gutter, and that it then backed against the car, shows, as testified by defendant's witnesses, that the car was running slowly. Pennsylvania.— Bradwell v. Pittsburgh, etc., Pass. R. Co., 153 Pa. St. 105, 25 Atl. 623, holding that where, in an action for injuries caused by an upturned rail to plaintiff driving on the street, it appears that plaintiff drank two glasses of beer, one about half an hour after the other, and just before the accident, the question of his contributory negligence is properly left to the jury.

Wisconsin.— McCoy v. Milwaukee St. R. Co., 82 Wis. 215, 52 N. W. 93.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 255.

Sudden peril.—Whether a person under the influence of sudden fear so conducted himself as to incur the imputation of contributory negligence is to be determined by the jury as a question of fact. South Chicago City R. Co. v. Kinnare, 216 Ill. 451, 75 N. E. 179 [affirming 117 Ill. App. 1, 96 Ill. App. 210].

Whether a mother was justified in believing that she could rescue her child from an approaching car, then eighty or ninety feet distant, without danger to herself, is a question of fact, and, if she was justified in so believing, it was not negligence on her part to make the effort. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Liderman, 87 Ill. App. 638 [affirmed in 187 Ill. 463, 58 N. E. 367, 79 Am. St. Rep. 226, 52 L. R. A. 655].

Firemen.—Whether a fireman, who has no time to put on his coat before responding to a fire alarm, and who is allowed to do so while on the cart on the way to the fire, is court by a dismissal,[28] or nonsuit,[29] or by directing a verdict for defendant.[30] But where the evidence is undisputed, and is such that reasonable minds can arrive at but one conclusion therefrom, the question whether or not the person injured was guilty of contributory negligence is one of law for the court, and should not be submitted to the jury,[31] but should be disposed of by dismissal or nonsuit,[32] or by directing a verdict for defendant.[33]

(B) Applications. In accordance with the above rules it is ordinarily a question for the jury whether or not a person injured by being struck by a car exercised due care for his own protection, or was guilty of contributory negligence, under the circumstances existing at the time and place of the accident,[34] as whether negligent in so doing, is a question for the jury, in an action for injuries received in a collision with a street car, in which defendant contends that the fireman's negligence in attempting to put on his coat on the moving cart contributed to the injury. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Baker, 132 Ala. 507, 31 So. 618. So also whether a fireman riding on a step on the side of the wagon in going to a fire, whereby he is struck by a trolley pole just back of the curb line, is guilty of contributory negligence is a question for the jury. Withdrawal from jury.—Where, in an action for damages by a collision between a car and plaintiff's wagon, the physical facts show that, if plaintiff had looked before driving on the track, he could have seen the car, his testimony that he looked, but did not see the car, should be withdrawn from the consideration of the jury. Credibility of testimony.—Where the testimony of a person injured by a street car, that he looked, and did not see its approach, before he started to cross the street in front of it, is impeached by uncontroverted physical facts, showing that the car was in plain sight, and he therefore either did not look at all, or did not look with care, his credibility is not involved, so as to take the case to the jury. evidence on such issue is legally insufficient or clearly shows that the child acted in disregard of the degree of prudence which might be reasonably expected of one of his years and experience.[68] It is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury whether or not under the circumstances a child injured by being struck by a car was guilty of contributory negligence in standing on or near the track,[69] or in regard to looking or listening for an approaching car by which he was injured,[70] or in crossing the tracks in front of an approaching car,[71] or whether he was negligent in jumping from a car in front of another car in obedience to the orders or threats of the motorman or conductor.[72] It is also a question for the jury whether or not the child which was injured was properly allowable on the street unattended,[73] or whether the parent or custodian of the child was guilty of contributory negligence in allowing it to wander on or near the tracks.[74]

(XIII) WILFUL, WANTON, OR RECKLESS INJURY. In accordance with the rules stated above,[76] it is a question for th jury whether the conduct of defendant's servants at the time and place of the accident was such as to make it guilty of wilfulness, wantonness, or recklessness,[77] or gross negligence,[78] in causing the injury complained of, unless the evidence is undisputed or is such that but one inference can be reasonably drawn therefrom, in which case the question should not be submitted to the jury, but should be disposed of by the court.[79]

h. Instructions — (I) IN GENERAL. The instructions in an action for injuries occurring through the operation of a street railroad are governed by the rules applying to instructions in civil actions generally.[80] Thus the instructions in such an action must charge in clear and comprehensive terms the law applicable to the oppos-

In order to submit the question of wilful and wanton injury to the jury, where a person has been injured by a car and there is no evidence tending to show that the motorman in control of the car saw the person in time to stop the car and avoid the injury, and no evidence from which an inference can be drawn that he purposely and intentionally ran his car against such person, it must appear from the evidence, drawing from it the inferences and conclusions unfavorable to defendant which might justly and properly be drawn, that the negligence of the motorman was so gross as to amount to wilful or wanton conduct. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. McGinnis, 112 Ill. App. 177.

Whether defendant's servant acted within the scope of his employment in regard to such wilfulness, wantonness, or recklessness is ordinarily a question for the jury. Ahrens v. Union R. Co., 57 Misc. (N. Y.) 651, 108 N. Y. Suppl. 590.

79. Feitl v. Chicago City R. Co., 211 Ill. 279, 71 N. E. 991 [affirming 113 Ill. App. 381], holding that where, in an action for the death of a traveler on a highway in a collision with a street car, every witness to the occurrence testified to the sudden application of the brakes by the motorman before the collision, and there was no evidence of any intention or purpose not to discharge any duty incumbent on defendant with reference to the accident, an instruction withdrawing from the jury an issue of wilful and wanton injury was proper.

Evidence held insufficient to show wilful negligence on the part of defendant's motorman after discovery of intestate's peril, so as to require a submission of that issue to the jury see Baly v. St. Paul City R. Co., 90 Minn. 39, 95 N. W. 757. Evidence that the car which struck plaintiff was being driven rapidly, or more rapidly than usual, is not sufficient to justify an instruction leaving it to the jury to say whether the evidence shows wanton recklessness. Chicago West Div. R. Co. v. Haviland, 12 Ill. App. 561. So where, in an action for injuries to one by a collision of his team with a car, there is no evidence that the car was running at an unusual rate of speed, and plaintiff's evidence, which is contradicted by defendant, merely shows that his horse became frightened and uncontrollable, and he called to the motorman to stop, but he nevertheless kept his car in motion, the submission to the jury of the question of punitive damages is improper. Lexington R. Co. v. Fain, 80 S. W. 463, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2243.

80. See, generally, NEGLIGENCE, 29 Cyc. 643; TRIAL.

New trial.—It is not cause for a new trial that the court, in charging a pertinent and applicable principle of law, failed to charge in connection therewith some other principle equally pertinent and applicable. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Blacknall, 122 Ga. 310, 50 S. E. 92. See, generally, NEW TRIAL, 29 Cyc. 786 et seq. Instructions to be given on a new trial in an action for injury to a child on defendant's street railroad track see Louisville R. Co. v. Gaar, (Ky. 1908) 112 S. W. 1130.

In construing the legal effect of an ordinance giving fire apparatus the right of way while going to and at any fire, it is not error to set out the ordinance at length in the instruction. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co., 134 Iowa 398, 109 N. W. 618. But where an ordinance provides that the person in charge of a street car shall keep a vigilant watch for all vehicles and persons on foot, and, on the first appearance of danger to such persons or vehicles, the car shall be stopped in the shortest time and space possible, inasmuch as the meaning of the phrase "shortest time and space possible" is uncertain, the incorporation of the ordinance bodily into an instruction in a personal injury action is misleading. Gebhardt

ing theories of the different parties,[81] as in charging on defendant's negligence[82] and the injured person's contributory negligence,[83] defining, when necessary, the different terms or expressions used.[84] The instructions must also state with certainty all the issues in the case,[85] and specify all the facts which must be found to warrant a verdict for plaintiff;[86] and must not be confusing or misleading,[87]

81. See Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 177 Mo. 456, 76 S. W. 973.

Effect of negligence.—An instruction which properly defines plaintiff's and defendant's duties under the circumstances is insufficient where it does not tell the jury the legal consequence of the neglect of such duty by either party. Kimble v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 108 Mo. App. 78, 82 S. W. 1096.

82. See the following cases:

Alabama.— Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Jones, 146 Ala. 277, 41 So. 146, holding that an instruction which, after hypothesizing the failure of the motorman to do all that a reasonably prudent motorman would have done under the circumstances, fails to further hypothesize that the failure proximately caused the injury, is erroneous.

Iowa.— Hart v. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co., 109 Iowa 631, 80 N. W. 662, instruction held not erroneous as substituting the rules of defendant as a test of negligence.

Missouri.— Masterson v. St. Louis Transit Co., 204 Mo. 507, 98 S. W. 504, 103 S. W. 48 (holding that where, in an action for causing the death of plaintiffs' son, the jury were instructed that defendant was not negligent in failing to stop its car after plaintiff's son was in a position of peril, unless he was in a position of peril a sufficient length of time to enable those in charge of the car to stop or check it, so as to avoid striking him, in the exercise of ordinary care on their part and with the means and instrumentalities at hand for stopping the car, the instruction was not objectionable as leaving out of view the duty of the motorman to be on the lookout for danger); Mullin v. St. Louis Transit Co., 196 Mo. 572, 94 S. See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," §§ 258–267.

Instruction held sufficient to submit the question of causal connection between the negligence of defendant and the death or injury complained of, although it did not use the expression "proximate cause" see Cornoviski v. St. Louis Transit Co., 207 Mo. 263, 106 S. W. 51; Riska v. Union Depot R. Co., 180 Mo. 168, 79 S. W. 445.

Wilfulness or wantonness.—Where, in an action for injuries to one struck by a street car, there is evidence tending to show wantonness on the part of the motorman, an instruction that if the motorman saw plaintiff in danger on the track, or could have seen him by diligence, and failed to use the means at his command to stop the car, after plaintiff's danger was apparent, then such conduct would be equivalent to a wilful, wanton, or intentional act, is erroneous, as not stating to whom the danger became apparent, and failing to postulate wanton conduct in failing to stop the car. Anniston Electric, etc., Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45.

It is not a reversible error to fail to define the degree of care required of defendant, where the latter fails to submit an instruction defining what degree of care is required and what acts would constitute negligence. Brown v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 310, 83 S. W. 310.

Gross negligence.—Where a statute provides that no recovery can be had against a street railroad company for death caused by the negligence of its employees unless it was gross negligence, an instruction authorizing a recovery if the death was caused by the "negligence" of its employees is erroneous; gross negligence should be defined in the charge and the matter be submitted to the jury whether the driver was guilty of gross negligence. An instruction is not misleading in stating that the ordinances of the city in question required that no engine or car should be propelled on defendant's railway track, on a certain named street, at a rate of speed exceeding five miles an hour, where the accident complained of happened on the street named, and the question under consideration is the negligence of defendant in propelling its cars at a greater rate of speed, on such street, although the ordinance referred to is general, and applicable as well to other streets, other persons, and other classes of vehicles. (II) Right to and Refusal of Instructions. As a general rule each party to an action for injuries sustained through the operation of a street railroad is entitled to have the jury fully and properly instructed on his theory of the case,[95] and it is error for the court to refuse to give a properly requested instruction on a matter not sufficiently covered by other instructions given.[96] But a party

3. Cobb v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 56 N. Y. App. Div. 187, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 644.

A requested instruction excluding the distinction between negligence and a mere error of judgment is properly refused. Black-case,[4] and hence the instructions must not invade the province of the jury by charging upon the weight of the evidence,[5] as by singling out and giving undue prominence to certain parts of the testimony,[6] or by assuming as a matter of law the existence or non-existence of a fact in issue,[7] unless the fact is undisputed or is one about which in the minds of reasonable men there is no controversy,[8] or is a matter of common knowledge;[9] or by assuming or charging that certain facts do or do not constitute negligence on the part of defendant,[10] or contributory negligence on the part of the person injured.[11] But an instruction which defines negligence and leaves the facts of the case to be found by the jury and also leaves it to them to say whether the facts found constitute negligence as defined is not a charge on the weight of the evidence.[12]

(IV) Conformity to Issues and Evidence. As in other civil actions, the instructions in an action for injuries caused by the operation of a street railroad must also conform and be restricted to the issues made by the pleadings and evidence, and on which the case is tried,[13] and must be applicable to the

9. Story v. St. Louis Transit Co., 108 Mo. App. 424, 83 S. Where the fact that fenders are generally used on street cars is treated as a matter of general knowledge, of which the court would take judicial notice, and proof thereof is excluded for that reason, the court is entitled to assume that such fact existed, in its instructions, as if it had been proved. W. 898; Hicks v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 47 N. Y. App. Div. 479, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 597). Relative to injuries negligently caused by excessive speed. Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 1059. It is error to charge the jury that, in the absence of contributory negligence, if the gripman "failed to exercise due and reasonable care to warn crossing pedestrians of the car's approach, then the defendant is liable," where it is conceded that plaintiff saw the car approaching before going on the track. Schulman v. Houston, etc., Ferry R. Co., 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 30, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 439.

Where there is no evidence of negligence on defendant's part, the court may properly refuse to instruct as to the precautions to be observed by the managers of cars at street crossings. Schlenk v. Central Pass. R. Co., 23 S. W. 589, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 409. So where there is no evidence to show that the position of a boy on the track of defendant company was discovered in time to avoid injury, a charge leaving it to the jury whether it was possible, by diligence, to stop the car after the boy came on the track is erroneous. Henderson v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 368, 74 N. W. 525. So also an instruction relating to the duty of a motorman in operating his car, "considering the number of persons and vehicles on said street," is erroneous where there is no evidence that there were any vehicles on the street at the time of the accident. Day v. Citizens R. Co., 81 Mo. App. 471.

Evidence held sufficient to require the giving of a charge on discovered peril see Dallas Consol. Electric St. R. Co. v. Conn, (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 100 S. W. 1019.

An instruction predicated upon facts making it the motorman's duty to keep a lookout for persons on the track is not appropriate, in the absence of testimony showing that the motorman was looking ahead, if the conditions were not such as to make it his duty to keep a lookout for plaintiff, but, if the duty to keep the lookout existed, it would be proper, irrespective of other circumstances, and hence, where the question of duty to keep the lookout is for the jury, such an instruction is proper. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Jones, 153 Ala. 157, 45 So. 177. Thus in an action for the death of a pedestrian struck at a crossing by a street car, it is proper to instruct that the motorman was bound to maintain a lookout in approaching the crossing, whether there was evidence of his failure to keep a lookout or not, since it is necessary to define the several legal duties of the motorman. or if it ignores or omits to charge upon such a matter,[19] or if it unduly emphasizes a particular fact in issue.[20] But it is not error to nullify, by an instruction, a theory of the case upon which there is no evidence and upon which there can be no recovery.[21]

(v) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. The rules stated above also apply to instructions relative to the question of contributory negligence of the person injured.[22] When such question is in issue the court should correctly and explicitly instruct the jury upon the law of contributory negligence as applied to the facts in the case,[23] and as to the standard or degree of care required of the injured per-

W. 529, holding that where plaintiff, riding along a street railroad track, passed a street car slowly moving in the same direction, and when a few feet ahead of it was thrown on the track by reason of the falling of his horse, and run over by the car, an instruction which leaves the jury to infer that plaintiff could not recover if the injury was occasioned by his riding along the track when the car was in motion, is erroneous, as taking the question of negligence from the jury.

As failing to present the question accurately and fairly. McKinley v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 77 N. Y. App. Div. 256, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 213. As improperly pointing out the particular things with reference to which it was plaintiff's duty to exercise ordinary care. Louisville R. Co. v. Boutellier, 110 S. W. 357, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 484. An instruction as to contributory negligence in a crossing accident case, which does not state any facts in reference to defendant's negligence, is incorrect in stating that, in case certain facts are found, the finding "should be for plaintiff," without specifying that such finding is to be confined to the determination of contributory negligence. Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Hamer, 29 Ind. App. 426, 62 N. E. 658, 63 N. E. 778.

It is not necessary to embody the doctrine of the "last clear chance" in instructions on contributory negligence, where the instructions are correct as far as they go, and there is no request therefor (Duteau v. Seattle Electric Co., 45 Wash. 418, 88 Pac. 755); and where the injured person's danger was not an obvious one, an instruction that, if the motorman saw plaintiff's peril in time to have avoided injuring him, but failed to do so, defendant is liable notwithstanding plaintiff's contributory negligence, is properly refused (Shaw v. Louisville R. Co., 81 S. W. 268, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 359). But a charge on contributory negligence would be misleading where there is evidence which would authorize the jury to find that plaintiff's injuries were directly attributable to the subsequent negligence of defendant's servants in charge of the car in failing to keep a lookout, and that but for such negligence the injuries would not have been inflicted. Birmingham R., etc., Co. v. Brantley, 141 Ala. 614, 37 So. 698.

E. 282 (holding that where the court charges that the particular measure of diligence required under the circumstances is for the jury, it is not incumbent on the court to instruct that one who drives along a street railroad track should be careful to look and listen with ordinary care to avoid a collision); Sanitary Dairy Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., 98 Mo. App. 20, 71 S. W. 726 (holding that in an action for damages resulting from a collision of a car with a team crossing the track, an instruction in general terms that, if the driver was exercising ordinary care, the verdict should be for plaintiff, without specifically stating the care the driver was bound to exercise, was error); Sperry v. Union R. Co., 129 N. Y. App. Div. 594, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 286 (holding that an instruction that, when a pedestrian attempts to cross a street car track so far from a car that he has reasonable ground to suppose that he will be able to cross, the driver should give him a reasonable opportunity to cross, made the pedestrian's reasonable ground for belief, and not his supposition, the standard of his care); Hirtenstein v. Interurban St. R. Co., 115 N. Y. App. Div. 275, 100 N. Y. Suppl. 909 (holding that where, in an action for the death of a child three years and nine months old, the court left to the jury the question whether the child was sui juris, defendant was entitled to an instruction that if the child was sui juris he was bound to exercise such care and caution as was to be expected of a child of his age under the circumstances); Detroit United R. Co. v. Nichols, 165 Fed. 289, 91 C. C. A. 257.

An instruction requiring ordinary care "at the time of the accident" is not objectionable as restricting the exercise of ordinary care to the moment of the injury, but should be held to refer to the entire transaction. As to the contributory negligence of a child in getting on a car. McCahill v. Detroit City R. Co., 96 Mich. 156, 55 N. W. 668. Where the person injured testifies that he did not see the car, an instruction that "a pedestrian seeing a car approaching at what to him seems to be a safe distance to allow him to cross, has not the right to assume that the car will be controlled and the speed slackened" is erroneous. Toohey v. Interurban St. R. Co., 102 N. Y. App. Div. 296, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 427. So an instruction is erroneous which tells the jury that plaintiff "was not necessarily bound to stop and look and listen before attempting to cross the street car track," where the evidence shows that plaintiff did see the car approaching before the accident took place. Elgin, etc., Traction Co. v. Brown, 129 Ill. App. 62.

Jumping from vehicle.—Where the declaration alleges that plaintiff was thrown from her wagon by a collision, but there is evidence that she jumped from the wagon, defendant is entitled to an instruction that, if the jury believe from the evidence that plaintiff jumped from the wagon, the verdict should be for defendant. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Kautz, 89 Ill. App. 309.

Where there is evidence that the case comes within the general rule as to contributory negligence, and also that the case comes within the exception to the rule, it is error to refuse a charge requested by defendant that there can be no recovery where the accident was caused by the concurrent negligence of the motorman and plaintiff, due to each failing to keep a proper lookout. Where there is no evidence of any intervening cause, as where it appears that the injured person or vehicle came on to the track immediately in front of the car, and the evidence would justify a finding that plaintiff's injuries were due to his own negligence, a charge that, although plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, yet if defendant, by reasonable care, could have avoided the consequences of such negligence, and if plaintiff's negligence was not the direct cause of the accident, plaintiff was entitled to recover if defendant was guilty of negligence, is error. Wilful injury.—Where there is no evidence of a wilful injury, a requested instruction to find for plaintiff, although deceased was guilty of negligence contributing to the accident, if the evidence showed that the motorman managed the car in a wanton and reckless manner, is properly refused. Feitl v. Chicago City R. Co., 211 Ill. 279, 71 N. E. 991 [affirming 113 Ill. App. 381].

28. South Chicago City R. Co. v. Kinnare, 96 Ill. App. 210 (holding that under a declaration charging that defendant's car ran against and struck the deceased, an instruction which tells the jury that if they find, from the evidence, that the deceased ran his vehicle into the side of the car, and thereby caused the accident, their verdict should be for defendant, is proper and should be given); Chicago West. Div. R. Co. v. Haviland, 12 Ill. App. 561 (holding that where the alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff consisted in his standing in the street waiting for a car without looking or listening, an instruction restricting the jury to a consideration of plaintiff's conduct after he saw his danger was erroneous); Lexington R. Co. v. Fain, 80 S. W. 463, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2243; Sepetowski v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 110, 76 S. W. 693; Geoghegan v. Third Ave. R. Co., 51 N. Y. App. Div. 369, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 630; Wills v. Ashland Light, etc., R. Co., 108 Wis. 255, 84 N. W. 998 (holding that where a boy, killed by being run over by a street car, was fourteen years old, intelligent, and well grown, it was error to submit the issue whether he was of sufficient age, capacity, and experience to understand the danger of going on the track without looking and listening, to the same extent as a grown person, since it was not an issuable fact).

Although contributory negligence is not in the case it is not error to charge that, if defendant was negligent in the management of the car which caused the injury, yet if plaintiffs were also negligent, and would not otherwise have been injured, they could not recover, unless, by the exercise of ordinary care, defendant could have noticed plaintiffs' negligence, and prevented the injury as such an instruction is not misleading or confusing to the jury. i. Verdict and Findings. The rules applicable to verdicts and findings in civil actions generally[40] govern questions relative to general[41] and special[42] verdicts or findings, and findings by the court,[43] in actions for injuries caused by the management and operation of a street railroad, such as that the verdict or findings

41. See Wichita R., etc., Co. v. Liebhart, 80 Kan. 91, 101 Pac. 457 (holding that where the evidence shows that plaintiff was negligent, a finding that the motorman might have avoided the injury by due care after plaintiff was observed supports a verdict for plaintiff); Glettler v. Sheboygan Light, etc., Co., 130 Wis. 137, 109 N. W. 973 (holding that a finding by the jury that the negligence of a street railroad company in not keeping a proper lookout, and the negligence of imposing a conductor's duties on the motorman, were the proximate causes of plaintiff's injury, is not erroneous, because of a failure to ascertain to which of the grounds of negligence the accident was attributable, defendant being liable in either case); Balfour v. Toronto R. Co., 5 Ont. L. Rep. 735, 2 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 671 [affirmed in 32 Can. Sup. Ct. 239].

General findings of negligence will not support a verdict unless the same is shown to be the direct cause of the injury, and where on the trial of an action based on negligence questions are submitted to the jury they should be asked specifically to find what was the negligence which caused the injury. Mader v. Halifax Electric Tramway Co., 37 Can. Sup. Ct. 94. Compare Glettler v. Sheboygan Light, etc., Co., 130 Wis. 137, 109 N. W. 973.

Special interrogatories relating to immaterial evidentiary facts should not be given. Chicago City R. Co. v. Jordan, 215 Ill. 390, 74 N. E. 452, holding that where plaintiff's intestate, a boy five years old, was killed by coming in contact with a street car at the side as he was crossing the street behind another car going in the opposite direction, it was improper for the court to submit special interrogatories as to whether the child ran into the side of the car or whether the car ran into and struck the child, as such interrogatories were both immaterial, and related only to evidentiary facts.

A special interrogatory not based on the evidence is improper. Chicago City R. Co. v. Jordan, 215 Ill. 390, 74 N. E. 452, holding that where, in an action for death resulting from a street car collision with intestate at a crossing, the court charged that there was no evidence to support two counts of the declaration besides the count charging a wilful and wanton injury, it was improper for the court to submit special interrogatories requesting findings as to whether defendant was guilty of wantonness or recklessness in driving the car in question, and whether it was guilty of negligence charged "in the declaration or any count thereof."

Special verdict failing to show absence of contributory negligence in an action for injury to one struck by an electric street car while walking close beside the track see Young v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 148 Ind. 54, 44 N. E. 927, 47 N. E. 142.

43. See Paine v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 143 Cal. 654, 77 Pac. 659.

Findings of court held sufficient.—Where the injury to plaintiff resulted directly from a collision of a street car with a buggy in which she was riding, and where the collision was caused by the negligence of the company, the finding of the court that plaintiff was injured by reason of the company's negligent act, and that it is liable therefor, is not rendered insufficient to support plaintiff's judgment by the statement in the finding that plaintiff sustained the injury by reason of the collision. Paine v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 143 Cal. 654, 77 Pac. 659.

Conclusions of fact found by the court must stand unless they are inconsistent with other primary or subordinate facts which must be pertinent to the issues.[44] Where there is a general verdict with special findings every reasonable presumption will be made in aid of the general verdict, and unless there is an irreconcilable conflict between them the general verdict will stand;[45] but where the special findings of the jury are inconsistent or in irreconcilable conflict with the general verdict, such findings control and the general verdict cannot be sustained;[46] although in order to entitle one party to a judgment or verdict on the special findings, notwithstanding the general verdict, he must at least have special findings that stand in such clear antagonism to the general verdict that the two cannot coexist,[47] and the special findings must be sufficient when strictly construed to warrant a judgment within the issues in favor of the moving party.[48] On a motion for such a judgment or verdict the court will assume that all issuable facts not included in the findings were established in favor of the party for whom the general verdict was rendered.[49] A judgment cannot be entered upon special findings inconsistent with each other.[50] A finding need not be supported by direct evidence but it is sufficient if the circumstances fairly warrant the inference or conclusion stated.[51]

j. Appeal and Error. Questions relating to appeal and error in actions for injuries caused by the management and operation of a street railroad are governed by the rules applicable to appeal and error in civil actions generally.[52] Thus

44. Burleigh v. St. Louis Transit Co., 124 Mo. App. 724, 102 S. W. 621, holding that where a petition in an action for injuries to a fireman in a collision between a street car and a fire truck charged that the motorman was negligent in running the car at a speed in excess of the rate fixed by a city ordinance so as to be dangerous to persons lawfully using the street, a finding of negligence because the speed of the car exceeded the ordinance limit, and in consequence of such high speed the car collided with the truck, was within the scope of the petition.

45. Union Traction Co. v. Howard, (Ind. App. 1909) 87 N. E. 1103, 88 N. E. 967 (holding that an answer by the jury to a special interrogatory that there was not sufficient evidence that the gong was sounded when approaching the crossing was not sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from a general verdict for plaintiff that the car approached the crossing without giving warning); Hammond, etc., Electric St. R. Co. v. Blockie, 40 Ind. App. 497, 82 N. E. 541; Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Seerley, 35 Ind. App. 467, 72 N. E. 169, 1034 (holding that in an action for injuries by collision with a street car, findings that the motorman sounded his gong when the horse first went on the track, and that up to that time there was no indication of danger, and the motorman was in proper position, and paying attention, and should first have known that the buggy would not get off the track when the car was forty feet from it, and that the car could have been stopped with the utmost care within thirty-five feet are not inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff); Indianapolis St. R. 47. McCoy v. Kokomo R., etc., Co., 158 Ind. 662, 64 N. E. 92, holding that where plaintiff was injured at a street railroad crossing, findings that plaintiff, having average capacity to see and hear, and knowing that his horse was afraid of cars, and that cars frequently ran on a certain track, attempted to drive across the track without stopping, although his view was obstructed by buildings and trees, but that he looked and listened, but did not see the car till his horse was going on the track, which was fifteen and one-half feet from the curb, do not show contributory negligence authorizing a judgment for defendant notwithstanding a general verdict for plaintiff.

49. McCoy v. Kokomo R., etc., Co., 158 Ind. 662, 64 N. E. 92 (holding that in an action for injuries received at a street railroad crossing, where the complaint avers that defendant's car was operated at a high and dangerous speed, such fact will be assumed, on motion by defendant for a verdict on special findings notwithstanding a general verdict for plaintiff, in the absence of a finding as to the speed of the car, as the court, in passing on the motion, cannot consider the evidence received, but will assume that all issuable facts not included in the findings were established in plaintiff's favor); Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Hoffman, 40 Ind. App. 508, 82 N. E. 543.

if the verdict, finding, or judgment in the lower court is contrary to the weight of the evidence, it will be set aside or reversed on appeal;[53] but where there is sufficient evidence to support a verdict or finding, although it is conflicting, the verdict, finding, or judgment will not be disturbed or set aside on appeal;[54] nor will it be set aside or reversed for a harmless error,[55] as in respect to the admission or exclusion of evidence[56] or the giving or refusing of instructions,[57] since where

Louisiana.— Culbertson v. Crescent City R. Co., 48 La. Ann. 1376, 20 So. 902, holding that where plaintiff's witnesses, in an action for the death of a boy killed by a street car, did not testify with certainty where the child was just preceding the accident, and defendant's witnesses agreed in stating that he was not on the track, and that the accident was occasioned by his suddenly darting in front of the car, a verdict for plaintiff was erroneous, whether or not the child was seen by the motorman.

Michigan.— Gregory v. Detroit United R. Co., 138 Mich. 368, 101 N. W. 546, holding that where none of the witnesses for plaintiff who testified as to the condition of defendant's track where the accident occurred had made such an examination as entitled their testimony to much weight, but, on the contrary, eight for defendant testified to a careful examination, and that it was in good condition — two of them being officers of the village in which the accident occurred — a verdict for plaintiff was contrary to the clear weight of the evidence.

Missouri.— Weaver v. Benton-Bellefontaine R. Co., 60 Mo. App. 207, holding that a judgment for plaintiff for injuries caused by a collision with his vehicle will be reversed where his version of the facts surrounding the accident is physically impossible, while the company's version is consistent, and highly probable.

New Jersey.— Graham v. Consolidated Traction Co., 64 N. J. L. 10, 44 Atl. 964, holding that in an action for running over a boy, a verdict in plaintiff's favor on the ground that the car was run at an excessive rate of speed, will be set aside, where the evidence as to a high rate of speed is vague and unsatisfactory, and the evidence as to a proper rate of speed is supported by the fact that the car was stopped within a few feet after the motorman discovered the boy's peril.

Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 723, empowering the trial court to conform the pleadings to the facts proved where the amendment does not substantially change the claim or defense, the fact that plaintiff, suing a street railroad company for injuries, alleges that the stage of which plaintiff was an occupant was upon a public highway over which defendant's tracks were laid, while on the trial defendant proves ownership in fee of the premises where the accident occurred, is immaterial, as for the purpose of sustaining the judgment, the complaint will on appeal be deemed to have been amended in harmony with the proofs. 56. Bectenwald v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 121 Mo. App. 595, 97 S. W. 557 (holding that where in an action for injuries sustained in a collision the motorman who was operating the car at the time in question was asked whether he was in defendant's service at the time of the trial, to which he responded in the negative, and he was then asked when he quit working for defendant, to which he replied he could not tell exactly, defendant was not prejudiced by such evidence); Christensen v. Union Trunk Line, 6 Wash. 75, 32 Pac. 1018 (holding that error in admitting evidence that the motorman was discharged after the accident was harmless, where it is shown to be a rule of the company to discharge all motormen who meet with accidents under any circumstances).

57. California.— Swain v. Fourteenth St. R. Co., 93 Cal. 179, 28 Pac. 829, holding that in an action for personal injury sustained in a collision between plaintiff's wagon and defendant's street car, the statement in an

there has been no abuse of discretion the appellate court will not ordinarily interfere with the rulings of the lower court.[56]

10. Offenses in or Affecting Operation of Street Railroad — a. By Street Railroad Company or Employees.[59] In some jurisdictions street railroad companies or their employees are by statute or ordinance liable to indictment and fine for various acts or omissions in the operation of their roads,[60] such as a wrongful death due to negligence,[61] a failure to run cars through to the end of their routes,[62] a failure to place certain lights or signals at railroad crossings,[63] the operation of a car not authorized by franchise,[64] the operation of a car through the streets without both a driver and conductor thereon,[65] or the overdriving or overloading of a car.[66]

b. By Other Persons Affecting Property or Operation of Street Railroad — (i) In General. Under some statutes or ordinances it is an offense punishable by a penalty or fine for a person to do various acts affecting the property or opera-instruction that "street cars are easily and readily stopped" could not have prejudiced defendant, since the fact is one of common knowledge, which the jury might consider without evidence of its existence.

Maryland.— Lake Roland El. R. Co. v. McKewen, 80 Md. 593, 31 Atl. 797, holding that in an action by one injured in attempting to cross a street car track, a charge that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that he could not recover unless the jury believed defendant could have avoided the accident by the exercise of ordinary care, and failed to do so, was not prejudicial to defendant.

62. People v. Detroit United R. Co., 154 Mich. 514, 118 N. W. 9, holding that a prosecution of a street railroad company for violating an ordinance requiring that cars be run through to the end of the respective routes, except in specified cases, is a prosecution in the name of the people, and is not a civil proceeding on behalf of a passenger.

Evidence held sufficient to show a violation of a city ordinance requiring cars to be operated through to the end of the routes, except in specified cases, in which transfers shall be given to passengers entitling them to transportation to their destination see People v. Detroit United R. Co., 154 Mich. 514, 118 N. W. 9.

63. People v. Detroit United R. Co., 152 Mich. 359, 116 N. W. 186, holding that under a city ordinance making it the duty of every street railroad company to cause a red light to be placed at the crossing and intersection of other street railroads, in such a manner as to give warning to motormen and citizens, it is necessary in order to support a conviction for a violation of the ordinance to show that the crossing and intersection at which defendant is alleged to have failed to place a light is made by the lines of separate companies.

64. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 159 Mo. 239, 60 S. W. 110, 53 L. R. A. 300, holding that a city ordinance making it a misdemeanor for any corporation to operate any car on its lines which is not authorized by its franchise, and prescribing a fine for a violation thereof, is not void for unreasonableness, when it is passed after a corporation has been notified that it is violating its franchise.

65. See Thornhill v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. 354, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 592.

An information charging that defendant "did unlawfully and knowingly drive a street car through the streets of said city, without having a conductor thereon," is insufficient under an ordinance providing "that no cars shall be run without both a driver and conductor," and making the offense punishable by a fine. Thornhill v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. 354, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 592.

66. People v. Tinsdale, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 374, holding that the conductor of an overloaded car is equally responsible with the driver for the violation of the statute; indeed, more so, as the driver is usually subject to the orders of the conductor. See also Badcock v. Sankey, 54 J. P. 564.

The driver and conductor are not exempted from liability, because at the time of the commission of the offense they were in the employ of the railroad company, or were acting under its orders. People v. Tinsdale, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 374.

Form of indictment of driver and conductor on a street railroad car, for overdriving and tion of a street railroad,[67] such as for a passenger to sell or give away a transfer,[68] or for a person to hang on the outside of a car,[69] or to board a car while in motion for the purpose of stealing a ride,[70] or to throw at cars,[71] or to wrongfully obstruct the tracks.[72] But provisions relating to offenses affecting steam railroads do not ordinarily apply to street railroads.[73]

E. 189, holding, however, that a city ordinance providing that it should be unlawful for any person to hang from the outside of any street car, which ordinance was passed when the only cars in operation in the city were drawn by horses, is inapplicable to summer cars subsequently operated by electricity, arranged with seats running crosswise, with a footboard running lengthwise of the car, used as a step or platform for the accommodation of passengers.

Evidence.— On complaint of a street railroad company, under Pub. St. c. 112, § 206, for throwing a missile at one of its cars, it is competent to prove the fact of ownership of the car by the testimony of one witness describing its particular marks, coupled with that of another witness, that the car bearing those marks belongs to the company. Suppl. 700 (holding that a temporary excavation for the purpose of repairing a sewer was not a wilful obstruction within the meaning of the statute).

Pennsylvania.— Com. v. McCaully, 2 Pa. Dist. 63, holding that a street railroad is within the act of March 31, 1860, section 142, making it a criminal offense to obstruct or injure any "railroad."

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Street Railroads," § 275.

Duty to remove wagon from track.—Where a city ordinance gives the street cars of the city a precedence over other vehicles, and provides that, if any person "shall unnecessarily obstruct or impede the running of the cars," he shall be liable to a fine for such offense, it is the duty of a teamster who has obstructed the track by backing his team across the same, for the purpose of unloading goods, to remove his team at once on the approach of the cars; and a delay on his part, even for a short time, for the purpose of removing a box which is the last of his load, thereby causing a stopping of the cars during such delay, is an unnecessary obstruction within the meaning of the ordinance, and will render him liable to its penalty. State v. Foley, 31 Iowa 527, 7 Am. Rep. 166. So a wagon driver who for several hundred feet drives his vehicle with one wheel on the track at a point where there is ample room to turn off, and thereby impedes the progress of a horse car, which is proceeding at the usual speed, is liable to indictment for obstructing the tracks, although he did not enter upon the track with the intention of obstructing the cars, and continued thereon without intending to obstruct them. Com. v. Temple, 14 Gray (Mass.) 69.

Pleading.— In an indictment for wilfully and maliciously obstructing a horse railroad company in the use of its road, the intention of defendant is sufficiently alleged by charging, in the words of the statute, that his acts were "willfully and maliciously" done. Com. v. Hicks, 7 Allen (Mass.) 573. Under a city ordinance which prohibits the wilful obstruction of street cars by stopping or placing teams, vehicles, or other obstacles upon, across, or along the tracks, a complaint which charges that defendant wilfully, unlawfully, and wrongfully obstructed and interfered with the running of the cars of the railroad company at a certain named point in the city, by placing and stopping a house upon and across the tracks, is sufficient. State v. Pratt, 52 Minn. 131, 53 N. W. 1069.

Proof.— In an indictment for wilfully and maliciously obstructing a horse railroad company in the use of its road, the actual enjoyment and use of the franchise by the company is sufficient to authorize the jury to find, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, that its location was lawful; and it is not necessary to prove that defendant was requested to remove from the track, and refused to do so, if the jury are satisfied, from other evidence, that his obstructing the cars was wilful and malicious. Com. v. Hicks, 7 Allen (Mass.) 573.

73. State v. Cain, 69 Kan. 186, 76 Pac. 443, holding that the wilful breaking of a window of a street car is not a violation of any of the provisions of Gen. St. (1901) § 2098, relating to the wilful injury of the property of the railroads in the state.

acquired the right to occupy the streets, its right to operate its road cannot be interfered with, its franchise impaired, or property destroyed by others,[74] as for the purpose of enabling another to use the street in moving buildings,[75] and the company may maintain an injunction to restrain a wrongful interference with or invasion of such rights,[76] or may maintain an action to recover damages for the trespass.[77]

Contractors, under a contract with a city to pave a certain street, have no power to obstruct the passage of street cars over such street during the paving of the same, where the contract gives no such power, and it is shown that such work has been, and can be, done without such interference, and where the city has not attempted to exercise or to delegate to the contractors the power to stop the running of cars while the work is being done.
