(II) Deck Cargo Excepted From Rule[57] — (A) Statement of Exception. To the rule allowing contribution in general average for cargo jettisoned there is an exception which ordinarily excludes from general average allowance loss by jettison of deck cargo.[58] But deck cargo is not exempt from contributing its share of the expense of a general average act.[59]

(B) Qualification of Exception. The exception to the rule of general average which excludes loss by jettison of deck cargo from contribution in general average is itself subject to qualification. It is held that the exception does not apply to coasting vessels;[60] nor does it apply to those cases in which the carriage of cargo on deck is according to the custom and usage of the particular trade,[61]

Rep. 174, where it is said: "The exception of coasting vessels, apart from custom, is intelligible only on the ground that in the short trips made by coasting vessels deck cargo is not exposed to peculiar danger, at all events to an appreciable extent. And when Lord Bramwell says that the two exceptions resolve themselves into one, I think he means that when the voyage is such that the cargo is carried on deck without peculiar risk, it will in practice be so carried whenever it is convenient."

62-63. Harris v. Moody, 30 N. Y. 266, 86 Am. Dec. 375, referring to the exception made by Valin of small coasting vessels or river craft, which usually carry a part of their cargoes on deck, as demonstrating that the rule, as he understood it, applied only to sea voyages.

Lower freight rate charged.—Where a cargo of lumber is taken to be carried "on deck and under deck," at a uniform rate for the entire lot, with the understanding that part is to be laden on deck, the rate being less than if the load were all carried under deck, and it is the established usage to carry deck loads by express consent of owners, the shipper is not entitled to general average contribution for a jettison of the deck load. Goddefroy v. The Live Yankee, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,496.

The liability has been called general contribution, as distinguished from general average, in which all the parties contribute, since other cargo owners do not contribute where they have not assented to the carrying of deck cargo. The Watchful, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,250, Brown Adm. 469. And it is said that the vessel is not liable for the entire loss, because the carrying of the goods on deck cannot be attributed as a fault, but if liable at all, it is for contribution, or general average merely. The Watchful, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,250, Brown Adm. 469 [criticizing The Milwaukee Belle, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,627, 2 Biss. 197, where the court dismissed the libel for the principal reason that the libellants by knowingly shipping the goods on deck had consented "that the vessel might thereby be rendered less manageable, and more liable to labor in a storm," in that it was overlooked that the master was equally consenting, and, the sacrifice being for the salvation of the vessel, that which was thus saved should contribute to make up the loss made necessary by mutual consent]. So in Wright v. Marwood, 7 Q. B. D. 62, 4 Aspin. 451, 50 L. J. Q. B. 643, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 297, 29 Wkly. Rep. 673, it is pointed out that recovery of contribution by the charterer for cargo which was stowed on deck under the charter, as in Johnson v. Chapman, 19 C. B. N. S. 563, 35 L. J. C. P. 23, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 70, 14 Wkly. Rep. 264, 115 E. C. L. 562, is not general average; that contribution by the ship-owner in such a case is with good reason, for he shared the benefit and ought to share the risk of the deck cargo.

"At merchant's risk" in charter-party.—In Burton v. English, 12 Q. B. D. 218, 5 Aspin. 187, 53 L. J. Q. B. 133, 49 L. T. Rep. N. S. 768, 32 Wkly. Rep. 655, it was stipuof deck cargo should, probably, be confined to sailing vessels. The reason for its application does not apply to vessels propelled by steam.[66] Nor does the exception apply to the jettison of ship's property, usually carried on deck, such as a boat.[67]

i. Putting Into a Port of Refuge. If a ship is in distress from dangers of navigation the act of putting into a port of refuge is a general average act,[68] as where she has sprung a leak,[69] and requires repairs on account of damages suffered in encountering such dangers.[70]

j. Sale For Vessel's Necessities at Port of Refuge. Where injury is sustained by a course pursued for the common safety of the ship and cargo, and the master has neither means nor credit to enable him to make the necessary repairs to continue the voyage, and his situation is such that he cannot communicate with the owners, he may sell a part of the cargo to meet the necessity of raising the means to make the repairs, and such sacrifice is the subject of general averlated in a charter-party that the "ship should be provided with a deck-cargo, if required, at full freight, but at merchant's risk," and it was held that the words "at merchant's risk" did not exclude the right of the charterers to general average contribution from the ship-owners in respect of deck cargo shipped by the charterers and necessarily jettisoned to save the ship and the rest of the cargo.

So as against underwriters it is held that goods loaded on deck, although expressly mentioned in a policy of insurance, cannot be brought into general average, when thrown overboard for the preservation of the ship and cargo, and that the shipper is entitled only to partial loss. age.[71] And where the goods of one shipper are sold by the master for the ship's necessities, such shipper may have contribution from the other cargo owners and is not restricted to his remedy against the ship or ship-owner.[72]

k. Extraordinary Expenses and Services — (1) In General. All extraordinary expenses reasonably incurred in saving a vessel and her cargo from common peril resulting from the dangers of navigation encountered during the voyage are the subject of general average.[73] In the United States, it is very well settled that whenever it becomes necessary to enter a port of refuge because the vessel, in consequence of damage sustained on the voyage, is unfit to proceed to her destination, as when masts, sails, or other requisite apparel are lost in a storm, or the vessel has sprung a dangerous leak, the expenses of entering the port and while there are subjects of contribution in general average,[74] and every expense necessarily incurred during the detention, for the benefit of all concerned;[75] and in making such temporary repairs as are necessary to remove the inability of the vessel to proceed on her voyage, are proper subjects of contribution.[76] Hire of anchors, cables, boats, and all other apparatus required for Any sale for good of ship and cargo.— In The Brewster, 95 Fed. 1000, the ship having sprung a leak in a storm returned to port for repairs, where the cargo was unloaded and stored, and when ready for sea the master refused to reship certain coal which formed part of the cargo because it had become wet and was liable to ignite spontaneously, and on the shipper's refusal to receive it, it was sold for less than its value. It was held that the loss was general average, the sale being a lawful one for the general good of ship and cargo.

To repair injury which is the subject of general average.—Where cargo is sold to raise funds for the repair of injuries which are the subject of general average, the loss on cargo is the subject of general average. The Constancia, 10 Jur. 845, 4 Notes of Cas. 677, 2 W. Rob. 487. If, however, a sale is made to obtain funds to repair a particular average loss (Hassam v. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co., 7 La. the purpose of making the repairs are properly taken into account,[77] as well as the expenses of unloading, warehousing the cargo, and reloading it after the repairs are completed,[78] or the necessary expense of forwarding the cargo when such a course was one of the measures properly adopted for the safety of the joint venture.[79] But expenses not incurred for the safety of all interests are not general average charges;[80] so expenses incurred in order to make repairs beyond what are reasonably necessary for that purpose are not regarded as general average.[81] Outlays made for the benefit of one interest only must be borne by that interest.[82] Expenses incurred after putting in at a port of refuge are not allowed as general average where the voyage is abandoned.[83] The performance of the ordinary duty of repair does not give rise to general average.[84]

(III) Wages and Provisions. The American and English decisions are conflicting in respect of wages and provisions of the master, officers, and crew during delay for the purpose of repairs, which in England have been held to follow the expenses of the repairs themselves,[88] while in this country they are allowed as general average.[89] Such allowances cover the entire period of detention for repairs until the ship is ready to resume her voyage,[90] such period commencing when she alters her course for the purpose of putting into a port of refuge.[91]

not subject to general average contribution, as the seaman does not stand on an equality of risk with those who have property on board the vessel.[6]

2. Separation of Interests and Termination of Danger — a. In General. The liability of every portion of the cargo to contribute to general average continues until it has been completely separated from the rest of the cargo, and from the whole adventure, so as to leave no community of interest remaining.[7] When the common danger[8] has ceased to exist no further sacrifice can be the subject of a general average contribution,[9] and when the community of interest between the ship and cargo has been destroyed by a separation of the cargo from the ship liability of the cargo to contribute in general average in favor of the ship is at an end.[10] The tendency of the English decisions is in favor of a strict adherence to the idea that contribution should cease when common danger has ceased, and they regard danger to the saved cargo as having ceased when it has been taken ashore to a place of safety,[11] while generally in this country a broader rule is applied, under which it is held that cargo, although actually separated from the imperiled ship, may still, for the purpose of average, be constructively within it.[12] Separation may be made while the rest of the property is still in

Where the different means constitute an unbroken series of operations to avert a common danger, in the course of which a part of the cargo is removed, with the expectation of raising the vessel and finishing the voyage, there is no separation. So where the interests are temporarily separated, by unloading and storing the cargo in order to repair

b. Termination of Adventure. Whilst the cargo remains on board a ship after her arrival at the port of destination, the maritime adventure is not terminated so as to absolve the owners of the cargo and the ship from mutual rights and liabilities.[16]

c. Transhipment. Expense of transhipment at a port of refuge is not allowed in general average where the master reships in order to earn the original freight,[17] the vessel, and it is expected to reload the cargo and complete the voyage, then, even though by reason of unforeseen circumstances, as the inability to repair the vessel, and make her seaworthy again, this expectation is not realized, the entire expenses of saving and protecting the different interests, until the hope of reuniting them is abandoned, are chargeable to general average. The Joseph Farwell, 31 Fed. 844.

Where specie was landed and forwarded it was held that the owners were liable to contribute to the expenses incurred in securing the vessel and the rest of the cargo, after the landing of the specie. Bevan v. U. S. Bank, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 301, 33 Am. Dec. 64. So in Nelson v. Belmont, 21 N. Y. 36, a vessel on a voyage from New Orleans to Havre, and having a quantity of specie on board, caught on fire in the Gulf Stream and was towed or accompanied by another vessel to Charleston. The specie was put on board this vessel, but was subsequently taken back by the master, and deposited in a bank. The burning vessel was so much injured that she sank after she reached the wharf, and expenses were incurred to enable her to prosecute the voyage. General average contribution was claimed by the master from the owner of the specie, and it was held that the specie was liable upon the ground that the property was all the time under the control of the master, and liable to be taken on board again for the purpose of being carried to its port of destination. But under the stricter English rule see Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. v. Rio de Janeiro English Bank, 19 Q. B. D. 362, 57 L. J. Q. B. 31, 36 Wkly. Rep. 105. Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. New York, etc., Min. Co., 74 Fed. 564, 20 C. C. A. 349. And where specie was taken by the master and crew from a stranded vessel and buried on shore, and afterward stolen before it could be reclaimed, it was held that the expense incurred by the master in searching for the same should be apportioned on the money alone. but the expense of transhipping the cargo, as a measure adopted to avoid a peril to the joint adventure, is a general average charge against the interests saved.[18]

3. Effect of Contract — a. In General. It has been held in some cases that the right to and liability for contribution in general average grows out of and depends upon a contract implied by law from the relation created by the contract of affreightment,[19] under which distinct properties of several persons are placed in a community of interest in a joint adventure,[20] while other authorities hold that the right to and liability for contribution in general average is not based upon the contract of carriage, but depends upon natural justice and an equity arising out of the relation of the parties,[21] and that the law will imply a contract from the relation of the parties for the purpose of providing a remedy.[22]

b. Exemption From Liability. The parties to a shipping contract may, by clearly expressed terms, enlarge or limit the carrier's liability in respect to general average;[23] but it has been held that stipulations exempting the carrier from damages or losses arising from specified causes do not affect his liability in general average, such provisions relating to the duties of carriage.[24] It has also been held that a stipulation in a bill of lading providing that in the event of danger arising

R. 419, it was held that where the parties to an average bond agreed to pay their proper and respective proportions of any general average charges to which they might be liable, and forthwith to furnish to the captain or owners of the ship a correct account and particular of the value of the goods delivered to them respectively, in order that any such general average charges might be ascertained and adjusted in the usual manner, there was no implied condition to employ an average stater residing at the port of discharge.

place, it was common practice to have it made up at the port where the adventure came to an end.[30] In more recent practice the adjustment is prepared at whatever place the ship-owner, whose duty it is to have it made, considers most convenient. The place where it is made is unimportant, provided it is prepared within a reasonable time and according to the laws and usages which prevail at the time and place where the community of interest ends, at the port of destination if the voyage is completed; at the place of termination of the adventure if the voyage is broken up.

3. What Law Governs. Ordinarily the average is computed and adjusted according to the law of the port of discharge.[31] When the voyage is broken up and abandoned, the adjustment should be made according to the law prevailing at the port where the adventure is actually terminated, even though no demand for an adjustment may have been made there.[32] The general maritime law governs, so far as it determines the rules of apportionment, where the parties have bound themselves for an adjustment in accordance with the laws and usage of a state in which there are no statutes or practice under them different from the general maritime law of the country but they may contract for the application of special rules or usages.[33]

4. Basis and Mode of Adjustment — a. In General. When a general average sacrifice or expense is incurred, the owners of the several interests in the joint adventure are bound to make contribution in the proportion of the value of their interests.[34] The whole law on the subject is founded on the principle that the loss to the individual whose property is sacrificed for the benefit of the rest is to be compensated according to the loss sustained on the one hand, and the benefit derived on the other.[35] The values at destination afford the proper basis for contribution, but in the absence of other evidence, the values may be taken as those given in policies of insurance covering the property,[36] and in invoices and bills of lading.[37]

b. As to Cargo. In computing contributory values for the purpose of a general average adjustment the value of the cargo is taken as of the time of its arrival at the port of destination,[38] and property lost is estimated at the price it would have brought at that port.[39] If the goods are sold at the place to which the apportionment relates, the amount of the proceeds is the basis on which their value is fixed,[40] and if damaged goods are sold the difference between the sales and the valuation if sound is the amount to be allowed.[41] In the absence of better proof the damage to the cargo to be allowed for may be ascertained by a comparison of the proceeds of sale with the invoice cost,[42] or if the vessel has arrived at her port of destination, with its value at such port.[43] If the ship is unable to return to port or to reach an intermediate port, the cargo contributes at its invoice value, deducting therefrom salvage and other necessary expenses incurred in consequence of the wreck.[44] In case of total loss of the ship voluntarily stranded for the safety of the cargo, all the property exposed to the risk must contribute, and be contributed for at its value, when the sacrifice was made.[45] So in the case of jettison the value of the goods thrown overboard is taken at the prime cost or original value if the vessel does not arrive, or at their value at the port of destination if she does arrive. The latter rule is inapplicable where the article is not at the time of its jettison in the perfect state in which it is to be delivered.[46]

c. As to Vessel. The value of the ship is to be taken as it exists at her destination if she arrives, otherwise as it was at her port of departure, making reasonable allowance for wear and tear on the voyage up to the time of the disaster.[47] The owners contribute according to her value and the net amount of her earnings for the voyage.[48] If the ship has encountered particular average damage that will be deducted from her value just before the general average sacrifice took place,[49] and if the voyage is terminated at an intermediate port because of injuries sustained by the cargo, the charges of repairing the vessel subsequently may be referred to for the purpose of determining the value of the injuries sustained by her for the common benefit.[50] The owners of a cargo being liable to contribute in general average for masts, spars, rigging, etc., cut away for the purpose of saving the vessel and cargo, the value of such material should be estimated as if it had been recovered from the sea and stowed in safety on board the vessel.[51]

freight thereon.[53] When freight is not payable upon goods not delivered, the owner of goods jettisoned must deduct any expense from their value which the jettison has saved him, and therefore freight is deducted;[54] but in that case the whole freight on the jettisoned goods is allowed to the master.[55] On the other hand, where part of the cargo has been sacrificed, contribution is made to the vessel on total freight lost, which also contributes,[56] and if the freight has been paid in advance or secured absolutely, or where the consignee has become bound for full payment, although only a part of the cargo is delivered in consequence of a lawful jettison, the consignee is not saved that item of expense and is not disallowed freight, but may prove both the value of the goods and freight paid or secured.[57] The cost of earning the freight saved is deducted,[58] and under rules adopted at some ports the contributory value of freight has been taken at a certain percentage of that contracted to be paid.[59]

out to a port of loading, load there, and return with a cargo from that port, which is the only cargo that is carried for a freight, and the freight is only payable upon the safe delivery of that cargo, the charter freight must under English law be taken into consideration as a contributing interest where the loss occurs on the outward voyage.[61]

e. Amount Paid in Limited Liability Proceedings. A distribution under a decree in limited liability proceedings, and a general average adjustment, relate to different subjects, and the amount paid under the decree is properly reapportioned in general average, because the adjustment is to ascertain the contribution which must be made by each toward the losses of all.[62]

5. Interest. Interest may be allowed upon the amount of a general average contribution.[63]

6. Validity and Effect of Adjustment. The statement of average adjusters in making up an average pursuant to average bonds is not an award made upon a submission to arbitrators, and, as such, conclusive.[64] But an average adjustment will generally be taken as the proper basis for determining the rights of the parties in subsequent litigation between them, in the absence of fraud, error, or unfairness.[65] It will be conclusive between the owner of the ship and the owner of the cargo to the extent that the former will be bound to deliver the goods upon payment or tender according to the adjustment.[66] When a case of general average is settled in a foreign port where it should be settled, the adjustment will be conclusive as to the items as well as the apportionment thereof, upon the various interests, although it may be different from that which the law of the home port would have required.[67]

property saved until contribution is paid or secured.[69] The lien on cargo is dependent on possession and is lost by its delivery to the owner or consignee.[70] The lien is not necessarily lost as against a subsequent mortgagee by a delay in asserting the claim.[71]

8. EXACTING BOND OR SECURITY. The master may retain all property saved until the shares of the owners toward the average contribution are paid or secured.[72] The usual method of enforcing the lien for such contribution is by requiring a deposit of money or the execution of an average bond before delivery, the latter being the more common practice.[73] Parties who voluntarily avail themselves of such bonds to obtain possession are bound by the obligations so assumed;[74] but the bond should not require more than that the obligors shall pay their share of

The custom of requiring such a bond developed from the fact that when a rescued vessel arrives at destination, where the cargo ought to be delivered, the amount of contribution due from the different owners of the cargo cannot be ascertained at once, so that payment may be made before delivery. The amount due from each must be computed; and in order to retain to the ship-owner the benefit of his lien pending the computation and to allow the consignees to get their goods at once, an average bond is taken from the consignees, by which they agree to pay their several portions of the expense when ascertained according to the rules governing general average. 9. Effect of Payment. Money voluntarily paid upon a claim for general average cannot be recovered back;[78] but if money is paid under protest to the master in order to obtain possession of cargo held upon an unfounded claim of general average, it may be recovered back.[79]

10. Action or Suit to Enforce — a. Remedy and Jurisdiction. Even though general average may not depend upon contract,[80] yet from the relation of the parties to a common adventure the law will imply a contract for the purpose of affording a remedy.[81] Each owner of goods sacrificed has a claim against each of the owners of ship and cargo for pro rata contribution, which he may enforce by direct action[82] at law, the common-law courts having jurisdiction to enforce the promise by the owner of goods which is implied upon their delivery to him.[83] The ship-owner may also maintain an action against the cargo for contribution or may set up his claim by way of counter-claim to a claim for damage to the cargo.[84] If the master fails to perform the duty of retaining the cargo until the amount payable by each contributor is paid or secured, an action lies in favor of those entitled to contribution against the master, the ship, and her owners to recover the amount of the average.[85] Equity also has jurisdiction to

b. Parties. In an action to compel contribution, an objection that there are other owners subject to the claim cannot avail unless the plea discloses the omitted parties.[88]

c. Pleading and Proof. In an action to recover general average contribution, defendant should plead any matter which he relies upon to relieve him from liability;[89] and the burden of proving such defense rests upon him, as where the cargo owner seeks to escape contribution on the ground that the casualty was due to the master's negligence[90] or the unseaworthiness of the vessel.[91] But if it appears that the disaster was occasioned by a tardy response of the crew in working the ship, and that they were probably delayed by the fact that goods were stowed on the deck, the burden is on the master to show that the deck load

Action on promise.— In Cutler v. Rae, 7 How. (U. S.) 729, 12 L. ed. 890, it was decided that when cargo subject to contribution in general average is delivered to the consignee, discharged of the maritime lien for such contribution, the maritime law does not, and the common law does, imply a promise to pay the contribution; and that hence an action on such implied promise is not a case of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. But that case is considered to have been overruled by New England Mar. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 20 L. ed. 90. See National Bd. of Mar. Presumptions.— In Broadnax v. Cheraw, etc., R. Co., 157 Pa. St. 140, 27 Atl. 412, it is held that if it is shown that shortly after the commencement of the voyage, the vessel, without encountering any stress of weather or any unusual perils of the sea, became so leaky as to be obliged to put into a port of refuge for repairs, the presumption then is that she was unseaworthy when she sailed, and the burden of proving the contrary is then on plaintiffs. But see Sherwood v. Ruggles, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 55. On the other hand where the general average bond contained a recital that the ship had "encountered strong winds and a heavy sea, which caused the vessel to labor severely," the libellant was entitled to a prima facie pre-

XI. STATUTORY LIMITATION OF SHIP-OWNER'S LIABILITY.[95]

[EDITED BY J. PARKER KIRLIN, ESQ., OF THE NEW YORK BAR.]

A. Statutory Provisions — 1. THE ACTS OF 1851, 1854, AND 1886 CONSIDERED. In the absence of statute the owner's liability is not limited to the value of the vessel and freight earned.[96] But the liability of the owner of a vessel has been so limited in the United States by federal statutes, the most important being the act passed March 3, 1851,[97] which has been amended from time to time, the most sumption that the ship was seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. Funch, 73 Fed. 844, 20 C. C. A. 61.

Where there was no issue as to seaworthiness, on a question as to liability of cargo to contribute for damage to the ship caused by the breaking of her shaft, after repairs had once been made and towage declined, the crack in the shaft having appeared after encountering heavy weather, seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage should be assumed. Van den Toorn v. Leeming, 70 Fed. 251 [affirmed in 79 Fed. 107, 24 C. C. A. 461].

That a certificate of the bureau veritas had just expired was held, under all the circumstances, not conclusive as to the seaworthiness of the vessel. Grace v. The Mauna Loa, 76 Fed. 829.

And a certificate of classification showing that the vessel had been classed as A No. 1, when built, for a period of seven years, and that such period had not expired when the voyage commenced, is admissible in evidence. Broadnax v. Cheraw, etc., R. Co., 157 Pa. St. 140, 27 Atl. 412.

Evidence showing seaworthiness see Sweeney v. Thompson, 39 Fed. 121.

92. The Governor Carey, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,645*a*, 2 Hask. 487.

If deck cargo is shown to have been properly stowed and respondent, who was the insurer of the hull, offers no proof that it could have been stowed there in a safer manner, he will be liable. Hazleton v. Manhattan Ins. Co., 12 Fed. 159, 11 Biss. 210.

93. See supra, X, F, 6.

Evidence of acquiescence. — In Sherwood v. Ruggles, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 55, it was held that in an action against a shipper it may be shown that he received a certain sum from his underwriters in full for his loss and average, as bearing upon his acquiescence in the adjustment.

97. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) §§ 4282–4289 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) pp. 2943, 2944].

The act provides (section 3) that the liability of the owner or owners of any ship or vessel for any embezzlement, loss, or destruction by the master, officers, marines, passengers, or any other person or persons, of any property, goods or merchandise shipped or put on board of said ship or vessel, or for any loss, damage, or injury by collision, or for any act, matter, or thing, loss, damage, or forfeiture, done, gained, or incurred, without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners, shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner or owners respectively, in such ship or vessel, and her freight then pending (see Norwich, etc., Transp. Co. v. Wright, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 104, 20 L. ed. 585; Allen v. Mackay, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 228, 1 Sprague 219); and provides further (section 4) that if any such embezzlement, loss, or destruction shall be suffered by several freighters or owners of goods, wares, or merchandise, or any property whatever, on the same voyage, and the whole of the ship or vessel, and her freight for the voyage, shall not be sufficient to make compensation to each of them, they shall receive compensation from the owner or owners of the ship or vessel, in proportion to their respective losses, and for that purpose the said freighters and owners of the property, and the owner or owners of the ship or vessel, or any of them, may take the appropriate proceedings in any court for the purpose of apportioning the same, for which the owner or owners of the ship or vessel may be liable amongst the parties entitled thereto. And it shall be deemed a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this act on the part of such owner or owners that he or they shall transfer his or their interest in such vessel and freight, for the benefit of said claimants, to the trustee, to be appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, to act as such trustee for the person or persons who may prove to be legally entitled thereto therein, after which transfer all claims and proceedings against the owner or owners shall cease (see Norwich, etc., Transp. Co. v. Wright, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 104, 20 L. ed. 585). Section 6 provides that the charterer of any vessel, in case he shall man, victual, and navigate such vessel at his own expense, or by his own procurement, shall be deemed the owner of such vessel within the meaning of the pro-important amendments being those of June 19, 1886,[98] and June 26, 1884.[99] The English Merchant Shipping Act contains similar provisions, limiting the liability of ship-owners to an amount calculated at a specified number of pounds per ton of the vessel.[1] The act of 1851 had no retroactive effect,[2] nor had the amendment of 1886.[3] A state constitution prohibiting limitation of amount of recovery for injuries resulting in death cannot be set up against the federal acts limiting liability of the owner of a ship, including one used in inland navigation, to the value of his interest therein, for any injury by collision or any act done without his privity or knowledge.[4] visions of this title relating to the limitations of the liability of the owners of vessels; and such vessel, when so chartered, shall be liable in the same manner as if navigated by the owner thereof. See Thorp v. Hammond, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 408, 20 L. ed. 419. It was further originally provided in section 7 that the act should not apply to the owner or owners of any canal-boat, barge, or lighter, or to any vessel of any description whatsoever used in river or inland navigation; but this provision was repealed by the amendment of June 19, 1886, which extended the operation of the act to all vessels used on lakes or rivers on any inland navigation. See infra, the following note.

98. 24 U. S. St. at L. 80, c. 421, § 4 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2945].

This amendment provides that the act shall apply to all sea-going vessels and also to all vessels used on lakes or rivers or any inland navigation, incuding canal-boats, barges, and lighters.

99. 23 U. S. St. at L. 57, c. 121, § 18 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2945].

This act provides that the individual liability of a ship-owner shall be limited to the proportion of any or all debts and liabilities that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole; and the aggregate liabilities of all the owners of a vessel on account of the same shall not exceed the value of such vessel and freight pending; provided, that this provision shall not affect the liability of any owner incurred previous to the passage of this act nor prevent any claimant from joining all the owners in one action, nor shall the same apply to wages due to persons employed by said ship-owners.

Interpretation.—Although it has been held that this act is not to be controlled in its interpretation by the act of 1851 relating to kindred subjects, the language of the two statutes and the state of facts to which they apply being different, and that each is to be construed according to its terms (Warner v. Boyer, 74 Fed. 873), it is held in later cases that the two statutes are in pari materia, and to be construed together, and that the provision of the older act by which the limitation of liability therein provided for is confined to things "done, occasioned or incurred without the privity of knowledge of such owner or owners," also qualifies the latter act, which was not intended to apply to liabilities of the owners of vessels for the consequences of their personal faults or upon obligations personally contracted by them (O. S. Richardson Fueling Co. v. Seymour, 235 Ill. 319, 85 N. E. 496; Great Lakes Towing Co. v. Mill Transp. Co., 155 Fed. 11, 83 C. C. A. 607); the act does not, however, apply to personal contracts, so as to exempt a part-owner from full liability for supplies purchased by his authority, or with his knowledge and consent (Rudolf v. Brown, 137 Fed. 106); and contemplates only liabilities incurred during the last or pending voyage, allowing a reasonable time after knowledge of the liability within which to surrender, in practically the same condition as at the close of such voyage; and a vessel owner cannot incur indebtedness for supplies furnished to a vessel during an indefinite number of voyages, and then, after the vessel has been lost or destroyed, relieve himself from personal liability therefor by offering to surrender its remains to the creditor (The Puritan, 94 Fed. 365).

2. Authority of Congress to Grant the Right. That congress has power to grant the right of limitation of liability as given in the act of 1851 and subsequent statutes upon the subject is clearly established. It exists under the constitutional power of congress to regulate commerce;[5] but it rests also upon the power derived from the admiralty clause of the constitution and is not limited to its power to regulate commerce.[6] This has been held to be true both as to the original act[7] and as to the amendment of 1886,[8] extending the benefit of the limited liability act to inland navigation;[9] and even though the subjects of the extended limitation or the territory in which it is effective are partially within the region of state control, yet, where the subjects are separable, and are partly under the national control, the act will be sustained by the courts wherever the power of congress extends, and as to all those objects to which it attaches.[10]

B. Vessels and Interests to Which Limitation Applies — 1. General Rules. The act in its original form[11] did not apply to any canal-boat, barge, or lighter or to any vessel of any description whatsoever used in rivers or inland navigation;[12] but the operation of the act was greatly extended by the amendment of 1886,[13] and now applies to all seagoing vessels and also to all vessels used on lakes or rivers or in inland navigation, including canal-boats, barges, and lighters;[14]

For cases decided under this act see Chisholm v. Northern Transp. Co., 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 363 (holding the act not applicable to vessels enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade, and engaged in the transportation of freight and passengers on the rivers and lakes); Woodhouse v. Cain, 95 N. C. 113 (holding that the act did not embrace the case of a vessel on a sound of limited area lying entirely within a state; Currituck Sound, N. A vessel employed in navigation upon the Hudson river, and not elsewhere, was held not within the class excepted by the provisions of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4289 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2945], limiting the liability of the owners of vessels used in river or inland navigation. The Sears, 8 Fed. 365.

Navigation on Long Island sound was held not to be inland navigation within the meaning of section 7 of the act. Wallace v. Providence, etc., Steamship Co., 14 Fed. 56.

The East river, so called in New York, is not a "river" but a mere gut or strait, and belongs to the "coast waters" of the country, as distinguished from "inland navigation," and navigation on the East river was therefore not included in the exception as to inland navigation in the original act. The Garden City, 26 Fed. 766.

A steamer used in the upper Mississippi river was not within the act of March 3, 1851 (9 U. S. St. at L. 635), limiting the liability of ship-owners, and the federal district court would not therefore restrain claimants from suing the owner at common law to recover the full value of freight lost by fire. The War Eagle, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,173, 6 Biss. 364.

Chicago harbor.— The owner of a tugboat engaged in towing vessels into and out of Chicago harbor, and sometimes going into the waters and ports of other states, is entitled to the limited liability provided by U. 2. Foreign Vessels. The United States limited liability acts are applicable to owners of foreign as well as domestic vessels when liability for a loss is sought to be enforced or limitation of liability is sought to be availed of in courts of the United States,[21] except perhaps when two vessels colliding are of the same foreign nation or of two foreign nations having the same maritime law.[22] But where a collision at sea occurs between two vessels of the same or of different foreign nations, and no law of either country is proved as a fact, the provisions of the Pleasure yacht.— The owners of a pleasure yacht were held to be not entitled to the benefits of the original act, although at the time of the loss out of which the cause of action arose she was chartered to a third person for hire, as it was only vessels engaged in what is ordinarily known as maritime commerce which were subject to the act as originally passed, and the facts that they were duly enrolled, licensed, and inspected, and otherwise subject to the navigation laws of the United States were immaterial (The Mamie, 5 Fed. 813 [affirmed in 8 Fed. 367]); but as the amendment of 1886 (see supra) expressly covers barges, and as a pleasure yacht is held to be a barge (The Mamie, 8 Fed. 367 [affirming 5 Fed. 813]) the owner of such a yacht is now entitled to the benefit of the act as broadened by the amendment.

statutes of the United States are ordinarily applied.[23] In England the statutes prior to 1862 which in general terms were similar to our own do not apply to foreign ships.[24] The question, however, has ceased to be of practical importance in England since the act of 1862,[25] by which the owners of any ship, British or foreign, were granted a limitation of liability.[26]

C. Persons Entitled to the Benefit of the Limitation. The benefits of the act are by its terms extended to owners of vessels.[27] An underwriter to whom a stranded vessel has been abandoned as a total loss is an "owner," within the meaning of the statutes.[28] The right of the owners to proceed under this statute was held to exist even though they had so let the vessel that the charterers became owners pro hac vice.[29] The act further provides [30] that the charterer of any vessel, in case he shall man, victual, and navigate such vessel at his own expense and by his own procurement, shall be deemed the owner of such vessel within the act limiting the liability of such owners of vessels.[31] But a lighterage company which contracts to transfer cargo from one ship to another, and for that purpose charters a lighter whose owner employs the stevedores and superintends the work, is not entitled to a limitation of liability for a loss of cargo by the capsizing of the lighter through negligent loading.[32] The benefit of the limitation may be availed of by a foreign owner.[33] All owners of vessels indiscriminately are not, however, entitled to the privileges of the limitation, but only such as fall within the description of the statute; that is, those who have had no privity with or knowledge of the damage incurred.[34] A ship-owner, by defending an action brought against him in a state court to recover damages for injury to a passenger, and by appealing from the judgment rendered against him therein, does not waive his right to petition a court of admiralty for a limitation of liability; nor is he debarred of the right to invoke such remedy because there is but a single claimant.[35] Where the petition seeks a limitation of liability as owner of a vessel sunk in a collision, and it is found on the hearing, on appropriate allegations in the answer, that the petitioner is also owner of the other vessel concerned, and that both were in fault for the collision, it is a condition precedent to the granting of the relief sought that both vessels and their pending freight be surrendered.[36]

D. Extent of Liability — 1. Amount or Value of Interest in Vessel; How Ascertained When Voyage Broken Up and When Voyage Completed. Under the English act the value of the vessel is taken just before the accident, and the owner can thus limit his liability only to the value of the vessel at that time, estimated at eight pounds per ton upon the gross tonnage less deduction of certain spaces.[37] Under the United States acts, however, the value of the owner's interest is taken as it exists immediately after the loss.[38] The exact time of estimating the value of the vessel is the termination of the voyage on which the liability is incurred or the loss is sustained, in respect of which the limitation of liability is sought.[39] If the ship is lost at sea or the voyage is otherwise broken up before arriving at the port of destination, the voyage is considered as terminated for the purpose of fixing the owner's liability, at the time of her loss, or of the breaking up of the voyage.[40] In a proceeding for limitation of liability arising out of an accident which occurred a long time before the proceeding, deductions from the present value of the vessel on account of additions made since the accident should be made at their present value, and not at their cost, in appraising the value at the time of the accident.[41] If the vessel is sunk and the voyage thus terminated before the actual end of the trip, the owner's liability is measured by the value of the vessel in her sunken condition, and is not extended by the fact that she has been raised and repairs made on her;[42] and where a ship is stranded on a reef and so injured as to terminate her voyage, in order to secure the statutory limitation of liability, the owner, when the vessel is not actually surrendered, must pay her value as she lay upon the rocks and the amount of her freight then pending, if any.[43] Her value for such purpose is not affected by the result of any subsequent salvage operation, whether undertaken by the owner or others.[44] Where a vessel, after having been in collision, was afterward, and before arriving at her destination, stranded and sunk by the negligence of her crew, the subsequent disaster in no way resulting from the former collision, it was held that her owners' liability was limited to the value of the vessel after she was stranded, with the pending freight; that it was not affected by the fact that the vessel was then abandoned to the underwriters; and that the amount realized by the underwriters from the sale of the wreck was the proper measure of the value of the ship for the purpose of the act.[45] The damages recoverable by the owner from another vessel or her owner for injury to his vessel in collision constitute an interest in and stand in the place of the vessel, and are included in the value which must be surrendered.[46]

2. Ascertainment of Interest in Freight; What Included in Term "Freight Pending." The word "freight," as used in the provisions of the act which limits the liability of ship-owners to the value of the ship and the freight then pending, includes fare for passengers;[47] freight prepaid at the port of departure, as well as all freight subsequently earned;[48] and the earnings of the vessel in transporting the goods of her owner.[49] The interest of the owners in a vessel and her freight then pending is intended to include their entire interest or investment in the adventure; they are not entitled to make any deduction from the gross amount of freight and passage-money pending on account of any expenses incurred for the voyage;[50] nor any deduction for expenditures for provisions or for wages of the crew except extraordinary expenses incurred after a disaster, in order to earn the freight, which may be deducted from the gross freight earned to arrive at the value of the freight within the meaning of the act.[51] The words "freight pending," as used in the act, include demurrage due at the termination of the voyage;[52] but freight pending does not ordinarily include salvage earned during the voyage.[53] The whaling equipment, provisions, and supplies of a whaling ship are not within the meaning of the words "ship or vessel," as used in the act;[54] nor is there any "freight pending" on a whaling voyage within the meaning of the act.[55] Where

The law is that freight pending is freight earned; and when the voyage is broken up by the wrecking of the ship before reaching her destination there is ordinarily no freight earned, for, even though prepaid, in the absence of special contract, it may be recovered back by the shipper. Pending freight is limited to that due to or earned by the particular vessel through whose fault the loss occurred. The fact that goods, when lost or injured, were being transported under through bills of lading upon different vessels of the same owner does not require a surrender of the freight earned by a different vessel in the course of such shipment (Ralli v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 154 Fed. 286, 83 C. C. A. 290, holding also that where a lighter sank at a pier while being loaded, injuring a large part of her cargo, the fact that the uninjured cargo was then transferred by her owner to another vessel, and that such lighter did not deliver any part of it, does not relieve the owner in proceedings for limitation of his liability from the necessity of surrendering as "pending freight" the freight which she would have earned if she had carried the cargo), and generally if the voyage is broken up, resulting in no freight being earned, the owner is not liable for freight (The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468, 6 S. Ct. 1150, 30 L. ed. 134).

a vessel is sailed by the master, who is not one of the owners, on half shares, the interest of the owners in the freight, which must be surrendered, is one half of the freight after deducting the port charges.[56] Insurance effected by the owners on the vessel and her freight is not an "interest in such vessel and freight" which they are bound to surrender for the benefit of claimants for injuries.[57]

E. Liabilities Subject to Limitation — 1. Losses and Injuries Arising From Acts of Master, Crew, Etc. The limited liability act extends to liability for every kind of loss, damage, and injury resulting from the acts of the master or crew.[58] It applies to cases of personal injury and death as well as to cases of loss of or injury to property,[59] and to loss of baggage.[60] Where the owner has taken appropriate proceedings to obtain the benefit of the act, a person injured is barred from maintaining a separate action for such injuries;[61] and the right of the owners to a limitation of their liability is not defeated by the fact that a claim for personal injuries was the only claim pending against the vessel;[62] nor can it be defeated on the ground that there was a contract, express or implied, on the part of the owners that the vessel was seaworthy.[63] The right of the owner to a limitation of liability does not depend on the fact that the vessel is actually engaged on a voyage at the time of the doing of the act or the happening of the event against which the owner seeks to limit his liability. The statute applies equally to a vessel at a dock in her home port.[64] The acts limit the recovery in case of collision to the amount of the interest of the owners in the colliding vessel and her pending freight, and the power of the court to award greater damage is abolished, except in cases where the owner is in privity with the loss,[65] and includes damage, by

A claim for injury to a passenger resulting from the negligence of a vessel after a collision is within the scope of the proceedings and may be proved therein in a proceeding by a vessel owner for limitation of liability growing out of the sinking of a vessel in a collision, although she is exonerated from fault for the collision. The City of Boston, 159 Fed. 261. The Saginaw and The Hamilton belonging to different owners came into collision as the result of fault on the part collision, to other vessels and cargoes as well as to the vessel's own cargo.[66] Claims for damages for personal injuries arising out of the stranding of a vessel are within the provisions of the statute.[67] The acts apply to an unjustifiable sale of cargo by the master in a foreign country after his vessel has been condemned as unseaworthy.[68] Claims for personal injury caused by fire and explosion on board a steamboat prosecuting her voyage are claims the liability for which is limited by the statute.[69] Claims for damage to cargo by fire are liabilities from which the owner is absolutely exonerated by statute if the fire occurs without his personal fault.[70] Although the statutory rule of limited liability has been held to embrace all damages done by the vessel without the privity or knowledge of the owner, whether consummated on water or land,[71] it is now well established that the act does not include liability for the destruction of buildings and goods on the land by fire communicated by a vessel. If the owners are liable in such case the liability extends to the whole value of the property destroyed; [72] nor apparently does the limitation or exemption extend to a loss by fire of goods after they are landed on the wharf,[73] and similarly in an action against a ship-owner for injuries to a person while standing on a pier, caused by a collision of the vessel with the pier, defendant cannot enforce the limitation of liability, as such action is not within of both, and the owners of both brought proceedings in admiralty to limit their liability. The Saginaw was a total loss. It was held that claims for damages were maintainable against The Hamilton by the personal representatives of the passengers and crew of The Saginaw who died or were injured as the result of the collision to the extent of her owner's liability under the statutes. The Hamilton, 146 Fed. 724, 77 C. C. A. 150 [affirmed in 207 U. S. 398, 28 S. Ct. 133, 52 L. ed. 264].

the admiralty jurisdiction;[74] nor does the limited liability legislation extend protection against loss occasioned by the contact of the vessel with a pile structure attached to the land but extending into navigable waters without due precautions to guard against accidents.[75] But where claims for damages consummated on the water and claims for damage done on land arise from the same maritime tort, the court, having jurisdiction in admiralty by virtue of the strictly maritime claims, has power to award a limitation as to all the claims.[78]

2. Debts and Contracts. The limited liability act of 1884[77] does not affect contracts made by the owner personally, but applies only to liability for the master's acts and contracts which are imposed by law on the owner as principal, and on account of his ownership;[78] nor does the act embrace such contracts as the owners have adopted as their personal liability.[79] The act does not affect the right of materialmen, having claims against the vessel libeled, to bring actions in personam against the owner to collect them;[80] but to the extent of the fund representing their liability thereunder owners are bound, not in solido, but only in proportion to their respective interests in the vessel.[81]

But see In re Old Dominion Steamship Co., 115 Fed. 845), and in a suit by a corporation for limitation of liability as owner of a vessel for a loss due to unseaworthiness, the privity of libellant with its condition is measured by that of its managing officers (Oregon Round Lumber Co. v. Portland, etc., Steamship Co., 162 Fed. 912). Where it appears that such owner is a railroad corporation, having its home office a long distance from the place where the vessel was operated, it is not necessary to show by direct testimony that the principal officers of such corporation at such home office had no personal knowledge of the conditions of such vessel, or of the steps taken to inspect and repair her. the negligence of the master or crew, or from some secret defect in the ship or its equipments, which could not have been discovered or avoided by the exercise of proper care on his part, the owner's liability is within the limitation of the statute.[87] Where the unseaworthy condition of a vessel would be shown by a proper examination, her owners are chargeable with knowledge thereof, and any injury to passengers resulting therefrom is not without the privity or knowledge of the owners so as to entitle them to the benefit of the limited liability acts of the United States,[88] for there can be no limitation of personal liability for damage by breach of warranty of seaworthiness, where the failure is due to the owner's personal default.[89] Conversely, if the vessel is in a condition, when she sails, to encounter the ordinary perils of her voyage, this is sufficient to make her seaworthy; and if loss is due to the mistake or carelessness of the captain, without the fault, knowledge, or privity of the owners, the latter are entitled to limitation of liability.[90] An owner who, after a general inspection, purchases a vessel from a shipbuilder of recognized standing and reputation, who equips her with machinery, means, and appliances which are suitable and sufficient, if properly used, may limit his liability for injuries occasioned by the negligent use of such appliances by his employees;[91] and similarly a ship-owner who has provided a suitable person as his agent to inspect or provide for the proper equipment of the vessel is not deprived of the benefit of the statute limiting liability by proof of negligence of such agent in failing to provide such equipment or to maintain it in good condition, of which the owner had no knowledge or notice.[92] A vessel-owner which employs competent persons to perform the duties imposed upon it as such owner, and to determine what such duties are, may limit its liability in respect to damage caused by a collision which resulted from the failure of such persons to make or require proper inspection of the vessel, where such owner has no actual knowledge of the neglect, or the defect arising from it, although such lack of knowledge arises from inattention, or from necessity, owing to the magnitude of the owner's business.[93] A steamship company which in good faith makes rules and regulations requiring the officers of all vessels to maintain only a moderate speed during foggy weather, and take all the precautions required by the international rules to prevent collisions, and exercises due diligence and care in the selection of competent officers, is not debarred from the right to a limitation of its liability for damages caused by a collision for which its vessel was in fault by reason of maintaining excessive speed in a fog, even though it had knowledge that such rules were habitually violated in that respect, where it appears to have done all that could practically be done to secure their enforcement.[94]

Admiralty Rule 54.— When any ship or vessel shall be libeled, or the owner or owners thereof shall be sued for any embezzlement, loss, or destruction by the master, officers, mariners, passengers, or any other person or persons, of any property, goods, or merchandise, shipped or put on board of such ship or vessel, or for any loss, damage, or injury done by collision, or for any act, matter, or thing, loss, damage, or forfeiture done, occasioned, or incurred, without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners, and he or they shall desire to claim the benefit of limitation of liability provided for in the third and fourth sections of the act March 3, 1851, entitled "An act to limit the liability of ship-owners, and for other purposes," embodied in sections 4283 to 4285 of the Revised Statutes, the said owner or owners shall and may file a libel for the petitions to the proper district court of the United States, as hereinafter specified, setting forth the facts and circumstances on which such limitation of liability is claimed, and praying proper relief in that behalf; and thereupon said court, having caused due appraisement to be had of the amount or value of the interest of said owner or owners, respectively, in said ship or vessel, and her freight, for the voyage, shall make an order for the payment of the same into court, or for the giving of a stipulation, with surety, for payment thereof into court when the same shall be ordered; or, if the said owner or owners shall so elect, the said court shall, without such appraisement, make an order for the transfer by him or them of his or their interest in such vessel and freight, a trustee being appointed by the court under the fourth section of said act; and, upon compliance with such order, the said court shall issue a monition against all persons claiming damages for any such embezzlement, loss, destruction, damage, or injury, citing them to appear before the said court and make due proof of their respective claims at or before a certain time to be named in said writ, not less than three months from the issuing of the same; public notice of such monition shall be given as in other cases, and such other notice reserved to the post-office or otherwise, as the court in its discretion may direct; and the said court shall also, on the application of the said owner or owners, make an order to restrain the further prosecution of all and any suit or suits against such owner or owners in respect to any said claim or claims.

Admiralty Rule 55.— Proof of all claims which shall be presented in pursuance of said monition shall be made before a commissioner, to be designated by the court, subject to the rights of any person interested to question or controvert the same; and upon the completion of said proofs the commissioner shall make report of the claims so proven, and upon confirmation of said report, after hearing any exception thereto, the moneys paid or secured to be paid into court as aforesaid, or the proceeds of said ship or vessel and freight, after payment of costs and expenses, shall be divided pro rata amongst the several claimants, in proportion to the amount of their respective claims, duly proved and confirmed as aforesaid, saving, however, to all parties any priorities to which they may be legally entitled.

Admiralty Rule 56.— In the proceedings aforesaid the said owner or owners shall be at liberty to contest his or their liability, or the liability of said ship or vessel, for said embezzlement, loss, destruction, damage, or injury, independently of the limitation of liability claimed under said act, provided that in his or their libel or petition, he or they shall state the facts and circumstances by reason of which exemption from liability is claimed; and any person or persons claiming damages as aforesaid, and who shall have presented his or their claim to the commissioner under oath, shall and may answer such libel or petition, and contest the right of the owner or owners of said ship or vessel, either to an exemption from liability, or to a limitation of liability under the said act of congress, or both.

Admiralty Rule 57.— The said libel or petition shall be filed and the said proceedings had in any district of the United States in which said ship or vessel may be libeled to answer for any such embezzlement, loss, destruction, damage, or injury; or, if the said ship or vessel be not libeled, then in the district court of any jurisdiction in which said vessel or owners may be sued in that behalf. When the said ship or vessel has not been libeled to answer the matter aforesaid, and suit has not been commenced against the said owner or owners, or has been commenced in the district other than that in which the said ship or vessel may be, the said proceedings may be had in the district in which the said ship or vessel may be, and where it may be subject to the control of

2. ABANDONMENT OR SURRENDER OF VESSEL. Under the act the liability of owners may be discharged by surrendering and assigning to a trustee, for the benefit of the parties injured, the vessel and freight, although these may have been diminished in value by the collision or other casualty during the voyage;[98] and if they are totally lost the owners will be entirely discharged from losses occurring on the voyage,[99] although the actual damage to or loss of the goods to be carried, as in the case of theft, has taken place prior to the time of the destruction of the vessel; and the limitation of liability is not affected by the fact that the vessel has been insured and the insurance has been paid or become payable.[1] The liability of the ship-owner being limited to the value of the ship and freight, the necessity of an abandonment thereof, in order to entitle him to the benefit of the exemption from further liability, follows from the rule;[2] and furthermore the owner must surrender the vessel free from liens accrued subsequent to the voyage on which losses have occurred.[3] The court may direct the marshal to take the vessel and wreckage into his custody.[4] Where ship-owners who have invoked the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty by a petition to limit their liability, and have secured a stay of proceedings by libellants, surrender but one of two vessels held by the court to be liable, the court, having full equitable powers to adjust the rights of all parties interested, is not bound to dismiss the proceedings for that reason, but may, by its own process, or its own order, seize the other vessel, and make distribution of the entire fund which it was the duty of the petitioners to tender by their petition; and such is the proper and only equitable course where, by reason of the proceedings, suits by libellants have been delayed said court for the purposes of the case as hereinafter provided. If the ship has already been libeled and sold the proceeds shall represent the same for the purposes of this rule.

for a number of years, during which the ship-owners have become insolvent.[5] In case of a total loss of vessel and cargo, no formal abandonment is necessary to entitle the owners to the benefit of the act.[6]

3. Giving Stipulation For Appraised Value. Under admiralty rule 54,[7] a surrender to a trustee is optional with the owner. He may if he chooses give a stipulation for the appraised value and pending freight.[8] The giving by the owner of a stipulation for the value of his interest in a vessel and her freight, without a judicial determination of such value after a hearing of the persons interested, is equivalent under the rule, to a "transfer" of his interest in the vessel and her freight.[9] In proceedings for limitation of liability under admiralty rule 54, prior notice to damage creditors of an appraisement is not necessary, and an ex parte appraisement is not void.[10] It is competent for a court, having ordered an ex parte appraisement, to order a reappraisement and further security on cause shown by any creditor. The mere fact that the first appraisement and giving of the stipulation were ex parte does not render the proceeding void, or invalidate an ex parte injunction against other suits; and a subsequent suit in another district, for the same cause, should be dismissed.[11] The price realized at a marshal's sale of the vessel, although prima facie fixing the value for which a bond will be required, is not conclusive; and the court, upon cause shown, may require a bond for the actual value as proved.[12] Owners who surrender a vessel for the purpose of limiting liability cannot be required to add interest on her appraised value from the time the liability was incurred, although they have long delayed the surrender;[13] but interest will be allowed on the appraised value only from the date of the decree until payment, and in the event of an appeal by the owners, which is unsuccessful, such interest will be decreed against them, in personam, and not against the stipulators;[14] but if a bond is given instead it should include a stipulation for interest from its date,[15] in which case the owners are liable for interest on the bond at the legal rate from the date of its execution.[16] Where a ship-owner in a suit in personam sets up his statutory limitation of liability in his answer, but the vessel is not surrendered, or an appraisement had or bond given, he is chargeable with interest on the value of the vessel as it was at the time of or immediately after the injury sued for.[17]

4. Jurisdiction and Venue — a. General Rules. The limited liability act being a part of the maritime code is coextensive with the territorial operation of the general admiralty and maritime jurisdiction,[18] and applies notwithstanding the facts that the injury sued for happened within the technical limits of a county of a state, and that the liability sought to be enforced arose from a state statute.[19]

Admiralty has exclusive jurisdiction.[20] In the United States the district courts sitting in admiralty have jurisdiction of cases instituted by owners of vessels under the acts of congress to obtain limitation of liability,[21] and the filing of the libel and petition by the owner of the steamship, with the offer to give a stipulation, confers jurisdiction on the court, which no subsequent irregularity of procedure can take away.[22] The district court does not lose jurisdiction by allowing the steamship, after giving a stipulation for her value under admiralty rule 54, to go into another district in the ordinary course of her business, since the proceeding to limit liability is an equitable action, and not against the vessel and her freight.[23] It is not necessary to the jurisdiction of the district court that the court should have possession of the vessel or her proceeds, or of a fund representing the proceeds, over which the court has obtained control through the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction;[24] nor is the court ousted of jurisdiction by a recovery by a claimant of less than the stipulated value of the vessel, where his original claim was greater than its value.[25] The district court cannot take jurisdiction in admiralty of a petition for limitation of liability, where it would not have cognizance in admiralty, originally, of the cause of action involved.[26] The jurisdiction of the district court is exclusive and the circuit court has not original jurisdiction of proceedings to limit the liability of ship-owners. The proceedings must originate in the district court of one of the districts specified in Admiralty Rule 57.[27] The jurisdiction belongs primarily to the district court of the district in which the vessel was stranded, where the liability arises from such stranding.[28] Proceedings to limit the liability of ship-owners may be instituted in a district where a fund or claim equitably representing the lost vessel is in litigation, although the petitioners reside in another district.[29] Where the owner of a vessel has been sued on a claim for damages against which he is entitled to a limitation of his liability under the statute, but the vessel has not been libeled, a proceeding for limitation of liability may be brought in the district court either of the district in which the owner has been sued or in that of the district in which the vessel may be, and an allegation in the petition that the vessel owners in certain cases is not referable to that clause in the constitution giving power to regulate commerce, but is a rule of admiralty procedure enacted under the clause granting admiralty jurisdiction, and therefore the district court has jurisdiction of a proceeding to limit the liability of the owners of a ship for a maritime tort, customarily employed within the navigable waters of a state.

Whether an action against the owner of a vessel in a state court for wrongful death is one of limited liability is a question of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, which must be determined by the federal courts. The Lotta, 150 Fed. 219.

is within the district gives the court jurisdiction.[30] Furthermore the proceeding may be brought in the district court for any district in which the owner may be sued in that behalf, on payment into court of, or stipulation to pay, the appraised value of the vessel, or upon the transfer of his interest to a trustee; and the presence of the vessel within the district is not essential to the court's jurisdiction;[31] but it has been held that an owner who fails to institute proceedings until after a suit has been brought by a claimant must commence them in the same district court as that in which such suit was brought.[32]

b. Enjoining Other Proceedings. Proceedings to limit the liability of a vessel supersede other proceedings against the owner or vessel,[33] and other proceedings will be stayed whether in the court where such proceedings are pending or in the state courts,[34] and an injunction may issue to restrain the prosecution of suits in a state court,[35] or the enforcement of a decree.[36]

5. Time For Commencing Proceedings; Waiver or Loss of Right. The owner of a vessel may, before he or it is sued, institute appropriate proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain the benefit of the limitation of liability;[37] and proceedings by the owners of a vessel to limit liability in respect to a collision may be instituted, even after the giving of a stipulation in an action in rem for the full value of the vessel.[38] The owners of a vessel do not waive their right to institute proceedings for a limitation of their liability for the loss of property shipped on board her, by waiting to do so until after proceedings have been commenced in a state court to recover damages;[39] nor is a ship-owner who, on the trial of the issue as to the cause of the injury, contests all liability whatever, thereby precluded from claiming the benefit of the limitation of liability.[40] It was held in an early case under the act that the right of the owners of a vessel to proceed for limitation of liability cannot be exercised after final hearing in an action in rem to recover on claims in respect to which limitation of liability is sought;[41] and in another that the owners, by allowing a final decree for damages in the federal district court, waive their right to institute proceedings to limit their liability.[42] Proceedings for a limitation of liability, if not instituted until after a party has obtained satisfaction of his demand, are ineffectual as to him.[43] A ship-owner is not debarred from instituting proceedings in a court of admiralty for the limitation of his liability on an account of an alleged maritime tort by the fact that he has permitted an action for damages for such tort to be prosecuted to a judgment against him in a state court, which has been reversed on appeal, and the cause remanded for a new trial; but in such case his laches in invoking the admiralty jurisdiction warrants the court in requiring him, as a condition to the granting of the relief sought, to pay the costs incurred by the plaintiff in the state court.[44] In a proceeding in admiralty for a limitation of liability, the court has discretionary power to permit the filing of a claim for damages after the expiration of the time fixed in the monition, in a proper case;[45] but if the proceedings have been terminated, so far as the parties before the court are concerned, by a final decree, the court has no power to reopen the proceedings for the purpose of allowing other claimants, who have not appeared therein, to come into the case and prove their claims; if for any reason the decree is not binding on such claimants their remedy is by an independent suit.[46]

6. Pleading, Issues, and Evidence. Where an application made for the limitation of liability of a ship-owner to the value of the vessel and freight does not present facts entitling the application to be considered under said act, it may nevertheless be treated as an application for a release of the vessel on bail, addressed to the ordinary discretion of the court.[47] A failure to comply with the steamboat inspection law may be invoked to prove that a ship-owner is not entitled to a limitation of liability, although it is not set up in the pleadings of the parties to the proceeding for limitation.[48] The libel in a proceeding of this kind may be amended.[49] It is not necessary to aver in the petition, or to prove, that the claims against the vessel are in excess of her value to found jurisdiction in the district court to entertain the proceeding.[50] But the petition must allege the facts necessary to entitle the petitioner, under the statute, to the relief sought. A damage claimant contesting the right must take issue by answer, which must be full and explicit and distinct to each separate article and separate allegation, as required by admiralty rule 27. The proof required in support of the petition that any liability incurred was without the privity or knowledge of the petitioner does not reach the subsequent issue of liability for the vessel for individual claims sought to be proved under rule 55, the right to contest which is reserved to the petitioner by rule 56. The issue as to liability should be presented by appropriate pleadings conforming to the general practice in admiralty, the claimant being required to allege and prove a cause of action as in an original suit.[51] The petition in an admiralty court to limit liability and to restrain the prosecution of an action in a state court need not show the existence, or probability of existence, of more than one damage claimant.[52] The petitioners for limitation of liability may litigate in the same proceeding the question of any liability;[53] but where the vessel has been decreed liable for damages sustained by a collision, the question of liability is res adjudicata, and in no way involved, and the losing party cannot revive and retry the case upon its merits.[54] Under the 57th rule in admiralty providing that any person who shall have presented his claim to the commissioner under oath may contest the right of the owner to the limitation claimed, claimant cannot, without so first presenting his claim, file exceptions and answer.[55]

7. Apportionment and Distribution of Proceeds. A decree declaring a ship to be in fault and fixing the damages which the respective parties sustain is res adjudicata and, until reversed, must stand as the basis for determining their pro rata share of the fund substituted by stipulation for the ship and freight.[56] In case the fund provided for by the limited liability act is insufficient to satisfy the demands against it, the claimants must share pro rata[57] the costs and expenses of a proceeding to limit the liability of a ship-owner being first paid out of the fund.[58] Where, in proceedings on the petition of ship-owners to limit their liability to libellants of a vessel, the petition is granted, and the fund in court is insufficient to pay in full the amount found due to one claimant, the petitioners cannot complain that a portion of it is erroneously distributed to other claimants.[59] Holders of maritime liens of the same class are entitled to pro rata distribution, without regard to the dates of issuing process or obtaining decrees, unless their rights have been forfeited.[60] The owners of a vessel cannot determine for themselves the priority of liens upon the fund representing their liability under the limited liability act. The fact that they have volunterily paid out parts of the fund in discharge of liens supposed to be superior to the claims provided for in the statute does not reduce their liability to discharge those claims to the full extent of the fund as it originally existed.[61]

8. Costs. Where, in a proceeding for limitation of liability, the owners of the vessel unsuccessfully litigate the question of any liability on her part, they are chargeable with the costs of such litigation,[62] and are liable therefor in solido.[63] Generally the costs arising on every contested issue should fall on the losing party; but the expenses of administration, including the fees and other charges of the officers of the court and of the commissioner, should be paid from the fund, unless and in so far as parties have made issues, and as to this exception the owner stands in the same condition as any other party. All such costs of adverse issues should be taxed without reference to the fund or its existence, the same as the costs of any entirely independent litigation;[64] and a vessel owner who, in proceedings for limitation of liability, desires to give a stipulation in lieu of transferring the

The words "wrecks and shipwrecked goods" in their ordinary legal meaning are confined to ships and goods cast on shore by the sea, and cannot be extended to a boat or other property afloat not appearing to have ever been cast ashore or thrown overboard or lost from a vessel in distress. Chase v. Corcoran, 106 Mass. 286, 288.

The term "wreck of the sea" as used in the common law excluding the jurisdiction of admiralty over the wreck of the sea does not mean what in the sense of the maritime and commercial law is deemed wreck or shipwreck property, but wreck of the sea in the purely technical sense of the common law constituting a royal franchise, and a part of the revenue of the crown in England; and often granted, as such a royal franchise, to lords of manors. U. S. v. Coombs, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 72, 77, 9 L. ed. 1004.

"Wrecked in the United States."—A Swedish vessel abandoned at sea and picked up by a steamer and towed into New York is not a "vessel wrecked in the United States" so as to be entitled to an American register under the act of Dec. 23, 1852. In order for a vessel to be considered as wrecked in the United States it must be actually wrecked within the waters of the United States. U. S. v. The Victoria Perex, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,620, 8 Ben. 109, 110, holding that such has long been the construction put upon the act by the department of the treasury, and this construction appears in the treasury regulation.

"Wrecking."— One who stated in his application therefor, and was insured as a farmer and who was drowned by the capsizing of a boat while rescuing the crew of a shipwrecked vessel, was not employed in wrecking, within the insurance policy providing that the benefit should not extend to death caused while employed in wrecking. Tucker v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 50, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 505 [affirmed in 121 N. Y. 718, 24 N. E. 1102].

A vessel's spars and sails blown overboard by a gale and lying alongside of the vessel is so long as they remain afloat in the sea in the jurisdiction of admiralty,[72] and thus none of the goods coming under the definition of flotsam,[73] jetsam,[74] or ligan [75] can be called or deemed wrecks so long as they remain on or in the sea, but if they are cast on the land by the sea they can then become wrecks and are then subject to common-law jurisdiction only, but if they are taken up at sea and brought on shore they are subject to admiralty jurisdiction.[76] But while wreck or wrecks of the sea, in a strict technical sense, are wrecked goods which the sea casts upon land, and excluded from admiralty jurisdiction, there is another more loose sense in which it is used for shipwrecked goods in general and in this sense it includes flotsam, jetsam, and ligan, which are subjects of admiralty jurisdiction.[77] The condition of the ship must be by reason of some injury received from some peril and not the result of age or natural decay, and, although the material of which she is composed may remain, yet if the ship is so disabled that she can no longer retain her character as a navigable vessel she is a wreck.[78]

B. Right of Property in Wrecks, Their Protection, and Disposition of Proceeds. No length of time will divest the owner of property found derelict upon the sea. It will be restored upon the payment of salvage according to the circumstances.[79] By the common law a wreck belonged to the crown until reclaimed by its rightful owner,[80] which must be within a year and a day, otherwise not a wreck. The Margarethe Blanca, 12 Fed. 728, 732 [affirmed in 14 Fed. 59].

Distinguished from "lost."— There is a difference in the words "lost" and "wrecked" in their marine signification. A vessel lost is one that is totally gone from the owners against their will, so that they know nothing concerning it either whether still existing or not, or one which they do not know, as to them is no longer within their use or control, either from capture by enemies, by unknown foundering, or by a sinking by a storm or collision, or by a total destruction or shipwreck. But a vessel is wrecked by being stranded or cast upon the shores and rocks. The vessel may be a total loss or a partial loss or temporary disability. Collard v. Eddy, 17 Mo. 354, 355, holding that a steamboat, lying at the levee, having no person on board, and which breaks loose from her moorings in broad daylight, but is not secured before it had drifted sixty feet, without injury, is not lost or wrecked within the meaning of the statute making vessels lost or wrecked the subject of salvage.

In marine insurance a ship becomes a wreck when, in consequence of the injury she has received, she is rendered absolutely unnavigable, or unable to pursue her voyage without repairs exceeding the half of her value. St. § 690, declaring that no vessel that shall be cast by the sea upon the land shall be deemed to belong to the people of the state as wrecked property, but may be recovered by the owner on the payment of salvage, relates exclusively to such property as in the common law is known as wrecks, and the charges on such property are salvage. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5358 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3639], is a comprehensive statute, affording extraordinary protection to property within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, by creating and punishing a substantive and distinct offense for all acts of spoliation upon the property belonging to a vessel wrecked or in distress. It is not alone the crime of larceny that is punished by the statute, but any act of depredation, whether it be of the character that would be piracy, if committed on the high seas, robbery or other forcible taking, theft, trespass, malicious mischief, or any fraudulent or criminal breach of trust if committed on land or property solely under the protection of the common or statutory law of the state within which the offense is committed; and no specific intent, as in larceny, is necessary to constitute the offense. Any intent except that of restoring the goods to the vessel or owner is unlawful, under this statute, and whether conceived at the time of the taking or subsequently thereto, if carried out by a wrongful appropriation or destruction of the property the offense is complete. Nor is it material whether the property is taken from off the wrecked vessel itself, or out of the water while floating stranded;[89] but it is held that the statutes do not apply to property which has been abandoned by the owners.[90]

away, or while cast upon the shore. Nor is the value material; all property belonging to the vessel, of any value, in any situation or condition, being under the protection of the statute. U. S. v. Stone, 8 Fed. 232. It is not necessary in an indictment charging the offense declared by the statute to distinguish between acts supposed to be characterized as "plundering" and those supposed to be characterized as "stealing" or "destroying." It may well be charged, in the language of the statute, as a single offense, and will be supported by proof of any act that could be denominated plundering, stealing, or destroying. Nor is it necessary to distinguish between acts of depredation committed on the wreck, and those on property belonging to it, but separated from it. If the indictment be so drawn, the separation may be disregarded, and a general verdict had upon the whole indictment. U. S. v. Stone, supra.

SHORE-LINE. The edge of the water at ordinary high water.[64] (See BOUNDARIES, 5 Cyc. 891; NAVIGABLE WATERS, 29 Cyc. 333.)

SHORE OWNER. The owner of the lands above and adjoining the shore line.[65] (See NAVIGABLE WATERS, 29 Cyc. 333.)

SHORT.[66] A word which when used in relation to a sale of stock refers to a sale in which the seller does not at the time possess the stock sold but which, by the future date or time agreed upon for its delivery to the purchaser under the terms of the contract, the seller must in some way acquire for the purpose of such delivery.[67] (See LONG, 25 Cyc. 1603; LONGS, 25 Cyc. 1603.)

SHORTAGE. Any deficiency in a quantity warranted.[68]

SHORT CAUSE. A cause which is not likely to occupy a great portion of the time of the court, and which may be entered on the list of short causes upon the application of one of the parties, and will then be heard more speedily than it would in its regular order.[69] (Short Cause: Calendar, see TRIAL.)

SHORT ENTRY. The custom of bankers in London, on receiving bills for collection, to enter them immediately in their customer's accounts, but never to carry out the proceeds in the column to their credit until actually collected.[70] on the shore of a river. Morris, etc., R. Co. v. Hudson Tunnel R. Co., 38 N. J. L. 548, 563].

In the commonly accepted use of the word, the "shore" of a river is the land adjacent to the water-line, and is applied in the same general sense in which the same term is popularly applied to the land adjacent to the water of an inland sea or to one of the great American lakes. "In the same way as nature does nothing by a bound, so neither does the law." [5]

SICUT PŒNA EX DELICTO DEFUNCTI HÆRES TENERI NON DEBET, ITA NEC LUCRUM FACERE SI QUID AD EUM PERVENISSET. A maxim meaning "Just as an heir ought not to be punished for his ancestor's transgression, so he ought not to make any gain out of an ancestor's advantage." [6]

SICUT SUBDITUS REGI TENETUR AD OBEDIENTIAM, ITA REX SUBDITO TENETUR AD PROTECTIONEM. A maxim meaning "Inasmuch as a subject is bound to obey the king, so the king is bound to protect the subject." [7]

SIDE. A word often used to express the idea of a line, edge, or surface; [8] a word which may be used either of all the bounding surfaces of an object, or as exclusive of parts that may be called top, bottom, edge, end, etc.; [9] the margin, edge, verge, or border of a surface; the bounding line of a geometrical figure, as the side of a field; [10] one half of the body (human or otherwise), considered as opposite to the other half; especially one of the halves of the body lying on either side of the mesial plane; that is, of a plane passing from front to back through the spine.[11]

SIDE-BAR RULE. In English law, a rule of court;—so called because anciently moved for by attorneys at the "side bar" of the court.[12]

SIDE-LINES. See MINES AND MINERALS, 27 Cyc. 538; STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.

I. DEFINITION.

The verb "to sign" is defined "to affix a signature to; to ratify by hand or seal; to subscribe in one's own handwriting." [1] A "signature" has been defined as "a sign, stamp, or mark impressed, as by a seal, especially the name of any person written with his own hand, employed to signify that the writing which precedes accords with his wishes or intention; a sign manual." [2]

1. Webster Dict. [quoted in Hansen v. Owens, 133 Ga. 648, 64 S. E. 800, 803; Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220, 230, 18 Atl. 1021, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798, 6 L. R. A. 353].

"To sign, in the primary sense of the word, is to make any mark." In re Walker, 110 Cal. 387, 393, 42 Pac. 815, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104, 30 L. R. A. 460; Cummings v. Landes, 140 Iowa 80, 82, 117 N. W. 22.

"To sign an instrument or document is to make any mark upon it in token of knowledge, approval, acceptance, or obligation." In re Walker, 110 Cal. 387, 393, 42 Pac. 815, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104, 30 L. R. A. 460.

"To sign a paper is to subscribe one's own name to it." Sinnott v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 104 Tenn. 233, 56 S. W. 836.

The word "sign" in the English statute of frauds means the making of some mark upon the paper so as to identify and give efficacy to it by some act, and not by words merely. In re McElwaine, 18 N. J. Eq. 499, 503.

Distinguished from "subscribe" see infra, III, B.

"Signing" means marking in some way by the party himself. Toms v. Cuming, B. & Arn. 347, 9 Jur. 90, 14 L. J. C. P. 67, 1 Lutw. Reg. Cas. 200, 7 M. & G. 88, 8 Scott N. R. 910, 49 E. C. L. 88.

Intent.— The actual signing of a written instrument in a legal sense may imply more than the clerical act of writing the name. The element of intent may enter into the act, not the intent merely to place the name on the paper, but to affix it to the instrument in token of an intention to be bound by its conditions; for a signing consists of both the act of writing a person's name and the intention in doing this to execute, authenticate, or to sign as a witness. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Siegmann, 87 Minn. 175, 178, 91 N. W. 473.

2. Webster Dict. [quoted in Hansen v. Owens, 132 Ga. 648, 64 S. E. 800, 803; Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220, 230, 18 Atl. 1021, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798, 6 L. R. A. 353].

A signature is not limited to a written name, and includes a mark. "There can be no doubt that historically, and down to very modern times, the ordinary signature was the mark of a cross; and there is perhaps as little question that in the general diffusion of education at the present day the ordinary use of the word implies the written name. . . . Even in the now usual acceptation of a written name, signature still does not imply the whole name." Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220, 230, 18 Atl. 1021, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798, 6 L. R. A. 353.

According to Greenleaf, a signature consists both of the act of writing the party's name and of the intention of thereby finally authenticating the instrument. Vines v. Cling-

II. NECESSITY.

It is not essential to the validity of a sealed bond that the obligor sign it; sealing it is sufficient.[3] A deed, however, must be signed.[4] When a signature is Autograph.— In In re Walker, 110 Cal. 387, 393, 42 Pac. 815, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104, 30 L. R. A. 460, after pointing out the primary meaning of the verb "to sign" the court said: "And while, by long usage and custom, signature has come generally to mean the name of a person written by himself, and thus to be nearly an exact synonym of autograph, that signification is derivative, and is not inherent in the word itself any more than it is in autograph, which strictly conveys no more than the idea of a specimen of an individual's writing." "Looking at the original meaning of the word, in connection with the usage since the people generally have become able to write their own names, we have no trouble in reaching the conclusion that, as employed in the statute, no more is exacted than that the name of plaintiff or that of his attorney be attached to the notice by any of the known methods of impressing the name on paper whether this be in writing, printing, or lithographing, provided it is done with the intention of signing or be adopted in issuing the original notice for service. Reprint 525, 13 Rev. Rep. 199. See BONDS, 5 Cyc. 735 text and note 46. See also Jeffery v. Underwood, 1 Ark. 108, where, in an action on a note of hand, defendant objected to the instrument's introduction in evidence, on the ground of variance, defendant contending that the instrument was a written obligatory and not a note of hand, and the court, in passing upon that objection, said that it was not essential to the validity of a bond that it be signed, that sealing was sufficient. The remark, however, seems to have been unnecessary to the decision for the instrument appears to have been signed.

But where a scroll or printed impression is used instead of a seal, it is essential to the validity of the bond that the obligor adopt the scroll or impression as his seal by signing the instrument. State v. Martin, 56 Miss. 108, where in an action on a bond the following facts appeared: The obligor who had been elected sheriff was brought to the sheriff's office, in feeble health, to qualify before entering upon the duties of his office. A clerk presented to him for his signature, a sheriff's bond, and a tax collector's bond with an official oath indorsed upon it. He signed the sheriff's bond and the oath of office, but did not sign the tax collector's bond. That bond had been previously signed by those intending to become sureties thereon, and opposite each of their signatures was a printed impression for a seal. The blank line opposite the first printed impression was left, the sureties signing below it. The obligor did not write the paper purporting to be his bond as tax collector, nor did he read it, nor did he know what it was. He did not make the seal, nor know what it was intended for. But he thought, after signing the sheriff's bond on official oath, as stated, that he had done all that was necessary to qualify him for his office; and he proceeded to act as tax collector. The tax collector's bond contained the formula, "Signed, sealed and delivered," etc. In that case the court held that there was no evidence that the obligor had adopted the scroll printed on the bond as his seal, and for that reason neither he nor his sureties were liable upon the bond.

But see Sheehan v. Davis, 17 Ohio St. 571, where it was held that a deed of a corporation, sealed with the corporate seal, signed by the cashier in his own name, not that of the corporation, was a valid deed.

At common law the seal was the sign, and a sealing was regarded as a signing, as the act evidencing the intention of a maker to give vitality to the instrument; and where a deed is wholly written by another at the grantor's request, and not subscribed by the grantor, his name only appearing in the granting clause, but it is acknowledged by him before the proper officer, it is signed so as to be valid and operative. essential to the validity of an instrument, an acknowledgment is not a substitute therefor, nor is it proof that it has been signed.[5]

III. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY.

A. In General. Signatures adopted by persons are sufficient to give validity to instruments even though they are illegible[6] or defective;[7] or contain only the christian name of the person signing;[8] or made with a lead pencil;[9] or typewritten,[10] or printed;[11] or even cut from another instrument and attached to

6. Hinsaman v. Hinsaman, 52 N. C. 510 (holding in an action on a bond that a signature of defendant which was illegible, so illegible in fact that the subscribing witness asked permission to write defendant's name below it, and did so, was sufficient to give validity to the bond); Trotter v. Walker, 13 C. B. N. S. 30, 9 Jur. N. S. 603, K. & G. 534, 32 L. J. C. P. 60, 106 E. C. L. 30.

Exactly what constitutes a signing has never been reduced to a judicial formula, but it has usually been regarded that whatever is intended as a signature is valid signing, no matter how imperfect or unfinished or fantastic or illegible or even false the separate characters or symbols used may be. In Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 76, a deed executed by Edward Jones, the name Edward appearing both in the body of the deed and in the certificate of acknowledgment, was not invalidated because of the fact that it is subscribed Edmund Jones.

8. Zann v. Haller, 71 Ind. 136, 36 Am. Rep. 193 (holding that the signing of a mortgage by a married woman by her christian name only was sufficient, where her name appeared in full, with that of her husband, in the premises and in the certificate of acknowledgment); Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220, 18 Atl. 1021, 17 Am. Rep. 798, 6 L. R. A. 353 (holding that a signature by the first name was a valid execution of a will if the intent to execute was apparent). But see Sinnott v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 104 Tenn. 233, 56 S. W. 836, holding that a railroad ticket requiring the signature of the original purchaser on the back thereof contemplated that the purchaser would use his real name, not his given name alone, and that, when signed by a person's first initial and his middle name, his surname having been left off, the railroad company was justified in refusing to accept the ticket for transportation.

9. Porter v. Valentine, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 213, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 507 (holding that a signature with a lead pencil is sufficient, although other signatures to the same instrument are in ink); Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 484; Merritt v. Clason, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 102, 7 Am. Dec. 286 [affirmed in 14 Johns. 484] (where a memorandum in pencil containing the names of the parties in the body of the writing, but not subscribed, was deemed a sufficient memorandum within the statute of frauds); Myers v. Vanderbelt, 84 Pa. St. 510, 24 Am. Rep. 227; In re Schoner, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 453 [overruling In re Smith, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 314]. See also Drefahl v. Security Sav. Bank, 132 Iowa 563, 107 N. W. 179, where, in an action by the administrator of a depositor against the payee of certain checks signed by the mark of depositor made with a lead pencil, in which the validity of the check was attacked, it was contended that the fact that the mark was made by a lead pencil instead of in ink was a suspicious circumstance, the court said that it was immaterial with what kind of an instrument a signature was made.

An indorsement of a negotiable instrument with a lead pencil is sufficient. Brown v. Butchers', etc., Bank, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 443, 41 Am. Dec. 755; Closson v. Stearns, 4 Vt. 11, 23 Am. Estoppel.— A signature to an attachment bond signed by a typewriter, if adopted by the party whose name is signed, is sufficient; for applying the doctrine of estoppel, after a plaintiff had sued out an attachment, he would be estopped to deny that he had signed the bond. Bridges v. Center First Nat. Bank, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 454, 105 S. W. 1018.

Firm-name.— The signature of a contract to sell land by the vendor's agent was sufficient where the firm-name under which he did business was typewritten and followed by his initials, written by himself. Degginger v. Martin, 48 Wash. 1, 92 Pac. 674.

another.[12] And it is sufficient signature to satisfy the statute of frauds if a contract be signed by both parties separately upon separate sheets,[13] or if a telegram be sent accepting an offer that has been made;[14] but a resolution of a corporation accepting a lease has been held not sufficient to satisfy the statute requiring a signature.[15] So too one signature may be sufficient for two instruments which appear on the same sheet.[16]

B. Location of Signature. When a signature is essential to the validity of an instrument it is not necessary that the signature appear at the end of the instrument. If the name of the party whose signature is required is written by him in any part of the instrument, for the purpose of authenticating it, it is a sufficient signature.[17] But when a statute requires that an instrument be sub-was not filled up, and the court in sustaining the order's validity on the ground that as reference was made to the warranty in the order, and as the order contained such statements that when read together with the warranty there was no ambiguity, said that plaintiff's printed signature on the back of the warranty would bind him as fully as though it had been in his own handwriting. But see Vielie v. Osgood, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 130, where it was held that the names of vendors of a pew in a contract for the conveyance of pews were not sufficient as signatures to satisfy the statute of frauds when they were printed and not written.

Attorney's printed name on a summons is a sufficient signature to satisfy the statute requiring summons to be subscribed by plaintiff or his attorney. Herrick v. Morrill, 37 Minn. 250, 33 N. W. 849, 5 Am. St. Rep. 841 [overruling Ames v. Schurmeier, 9 Minn. 221]; Barnard v. Heydrick, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 62 [overruling Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Dickson, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 61, 17 How. No. 10,264, 2 Sawy. 338, where on a motion to set aside an order of continuance, signed by two counsel for plaintiff, the court said that the printed names of counsel were not their signatures. This, however, was not necessary to the decision of the motion.

A printed letter-head containing the name of a party to a memorandum of a contract is sufficient as signature to satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds. Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 343; Saunderson v. Jackson, 3 Esp. 180.

Facsimile.— Coupons of bonds are not invalid because signed by a printed facsimile of the maker's autograph, if adopted by the maker for that purpose, although such signing is not expressly authorized by statute. Pennington v. Baehr, 48 Cal. 565.

Lithographic signatures of a secretary of an irrigation district, adopted by him and appearing on the interest coupons on irrigation bonds issued by the district, were sufficient evidence of his signature to such bonds. Hewel v. Hogin, 3 Cal. App. 248, 84 Pac. 1002. But see Reg. v. Cowper, 24 Q. B. D. 60, 59 L. J. Q. B. 26, 38 Wkly. Rep. 207 [affirmed in 24 Q. B. D. 533, 59 L. J. Q. B. 265, 62 L. T. Rep. N. Rep. 408], where it is held that a lithographed statement of a solicitor's name on the particulars is an insufficient signature to satisfy a requirement that the particulars be signed by the solicitor in order to entitle plaintiff to costs.

Stamp.— A letter which was dictated to and typewritten by a stenographer, and was signed by the latter with the decedent's name by means of a rubber stamp furnished by him for that purpose, sufficiently complied with the terms of the statute that required that a new promise to take a case out of the statute of limitations should be in writing and be signed by the party to be charged thereby. Deep River Nat. Bank's Appeal, 73 Conn. 341, 47 Atl. 675. A document purporting to be the order of a judge at chambers for the removal of a cause for trial in a county court, and stamped with the judge's signature according to the usual practice, is binding upon the county court judge, and that the circumstances under which it was made are not the subject of inquiry. Contra.— Davis v. Sanders, 40 S. C. 507, 19 S. E. 138, holding that a warrant of arrest issued by the trial justice with the names of the trial justice written by himself in the body of the warrant and on its back but inadvertently omitted to be signed at the foot is not a valid warrant, and cannot be relied upon by the sheriff to whom it was issued.

The etymology of the word "sign" does not necessarily require that the signature be placed at the bottom of an instrument, but it is much a matter of taste as to the place of signing. Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256, 264. See also Atty.-Gen. v. Clarke, 26 R. I. 470, 474, 59 Atl. 395.

In common parlance, however, "signing" means the writing of the name at the bottom of the paper or instrument, thereby formally authenticating it; and not a mere recital of the name in any part of the instrument. Evans v. Ashley, 8 Mo. 177, 181.

Signature in wrong place.— The signature to a deposition is good, even if inadvertently put in the wrong place. Moss v. Booth, 34 Mo. 316.

Signature at end of officer's certificate, and above his attestation, is a sufficient signature of a deposition. Read v. Patterson, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 430.

"Signed" construed to mean subscribed.— The word "signed" as used in the codes providing for the signatures of pleadings has the same import as the word "subscribe," and that a pleading that was not signed at the end was defective. Ashbrook v. Roberts, 82 Ky. 298. The word "sign" as used in Tex. Rev. St. art 1378, providing that where the parties do not agree to a statement of facts the judge shall "make out and sign, and file with the clerk, a correct statement of the facts proven on the trial," which shall constitute a part of the record, is synonymous with the word "subscribed," which means to place a signature at the bottom of a written instrument. Wade v. State, 22 Tex. App. 256, 2 S. W. 594. See also Catlett v. Catlett, 55 Mo. 330, 331.

"Subscribed" not interpreted literally.— The signature of a seller, written across the face of the memorandum, for want of sufficient place at the bottom of the paper to contain it, would be deemed to have been subscribed at the end of the memorandum, within the meaning of the authorities requiring such a subscription. The court said: "The words 'signed' and 'subscribed,' although of different derivations, and although their literal meanings have a shade or two of difference, are substantially, both in common and in law language, the same — except where in a statute, or in connection with a context, some peculiar or additional meaning to either of the words is indicated" California Canneries Co. v. Scotena, 117 Cal. 447, 449, 49 Pac. 462. A memorandum of a contract for purchase of goods, made by a broker employed to make the purchase in his book in the presence of the vendor, the names of the vendor and the vendee and the terms of purchase being in the body of the memorandum, was a sufficient memorandum within the statute, although it was not subscribed by the parties. McQuaid v. Powers, 46 Ala. 44 (where the validity of a written contract executed by mark was sustained, under a statute prescribing that contracts so executed should be attested by a subscribing witness, where the instrument contained two contracts, and the position of the names of subscribing witnesses on the paper indicated that their signatures applied to the first only, but the parol evidence showed that they intended to sign as witnesses to both); Armant's Succession 43 La. Ann. 310, 9 So. 50, 26 Am. St. Rep. 183; Warren v. Chapman, 115 Mass. 584. But see Cabot v. Haskins, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 83, where it appeared that, at the foot of a mortgage deed, which was not accompanied by any note or bond, and which proved, owing to a prior mortgage, to be of no value, a memorandum was written, with the assent of the mortgagors, by the attorney of both parties, and signed by the mortgagees only, stating that the sum due on the mortgage was reduced to one thousand dollars, payable in five years, and it was held that the signatures of the mortgagors to the deed could not relate to the memorandum, and that this was not a memorandum signed, within the statute, sufficient to charge them for the one thousand dollars.

sign, the fact that he signed as a witness may be shown;[20] and where he intends to sign as a principal but signs in the place of a witness, that fact may be shown.[21] The fact that the name of an officer is near the word "countersigned" does not render the signature insufficient.[22]

C. Use of Initials and Abbreviations. Instruments are properly signed, although only the initial letter of christian names, with the surname written in full, are used.[23] And where a person abbreviates his christian name he is estopped to deny the validity of his signature.[24] The initials alone, if used as a signature, are as efficacious as a signature as the whole name at length.[25] So too is their use sufficient under the statute of frauds.[26]

D. By Hand of Party. Where the maker of an instrument in signing his name is assisted by another's guiding or steadying his hand, the signature thus made is the act of the maker and not the act of the person assisting him.[27]

E. By Hand of Another. Where a person's name is signed for him at his direction and in his presence by another, the signature becomes his own, and is sufficient to give the same validity to an instrument as though written by the person himself.[28] The signature is sufficient, although it purports to have been

F. Use of Mark — 1. In General. In many of the jurisdictions the term "signature" is defined by statute as inclusive of a mark. The language of the statutes vary, some providing that the term shall include any mark, name, or sign written with intent to authenticate any instrument or writing;[32] others providing that it shall include the mark of a person unable to write;[33] and others providing that it shall include the mark where a person cannot write, his name being written near it and witnessed by a person who writes his own name as a witness.[34] In the absence of statute defining the term "signature," when a signature is necessary to give authenticity to an instrument, a signature

by mark has been acknowleged before an officer competent to take acknowledgments, there is no necessity for an attesting witness to the mark;[47] and this is true in jurisdictions where the statute defines a signature as inclusive of a mark when the name of the person is written near it by a person who writes his name as a witness.[48]

(III) EFFECT OF FAILURE TO ATTEST. Statutes requiring attestation have been construed as not having the effect of declaring an instrument that is signed by a mark without a witness to the mark void, but of providing that the mark should not be considered prima facie a genuine signature without proof.[49]

4. EVIDENCE. A signature by mark must be proved as any other signature.[50] A signature by mark may be proved by one who witnessed it, although he is not named as a subscribing witness.[51] When the subscribing witnesses to a signature by a mark are dead, proof of their handwriting is sufficient proof of an execution of the instrument;[52] so is this true when the subscribing witness is out of the state;[53] and where the witness is incompetent, repeated acknowledgments by the person signing are admissible to show the execution of the instrument.[54] The signature of a witness attests the execution of a note, although signed by the maker's mark.[55] The attestation of a note by the payee after the death of the alleged maker, signed by mark only, without attesting witnesses, is of no effect to prove execution of the note.[56]

SIGNIFY. To make known by signs, speech, or action; communicate; give notice of; announce; declare.[1]

SIGNING JUDGMENT. At common law, the allowance or permission by the master, prothonotary, or other proper officer, to plaintiff or defendant, to have judgment entered in his favor when the cause had reached such a stage that he was entitled to have a judgment rendered in his favor.[2] (See JUDGMENTS, 23 Cyc. 850.)

I. DEFINITIONS.

"Slavery" is defined as "the state of entire subjection of one person to the will of another." [1] The term implies the relation of two persons in the character of master and slave,[2] the former being defined as one who has another or others under his immediate control, a lord paramount or employer of slaves,[3] and the latter as a person who is the chattel or property of another and is wholly subject to his will; a bond servant; a serf.[4]

II. NATURE, ORIGIN, AND LEGALITY OF SLAVERY.

A. In General. Our American law of African slavery was a system of customary law; that is, of rules and principles applicable to the institution, at first introduced and observed by the people in their practical dealing with the subject, and subsequently recognized by the courts as the grounds of judicial decision. Very few of these principles were the result of written law, but had been developed from time to time by the actual working of the system in the several slave states, and successively adopted by the courts as they had been found by experience to be proper and effective in making the institution answer the purpose for which it existed,[5] and it was held that slavery could legally exist without any positive law authorizing it, its very existence in fact being presumptive evidence of its legality.[6] While slavery as between the separate states was a municipal

But see Windsor v. Jacoh, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 192, holding that the relation of slavery was not legal in Vermont so that an inhabitant could not be charged with the maintenance of another as his slave on a bill of sale which was valid in the state where it was made.

In New Jersey slavery existed prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1844, and was not abolished by that constitution, and that constitution did not destroy that relation, abolish slavery, or affect the laws in relation regulation,[7] and by the law of nations no state was bound to recognize slavery in another state, it being a matter of comity,[8] still the constitution of the United States recognized a property in this class of persons, and the institution of slavery was to this extent also a political institution.[9] Our system resembled that of the Romans rather than the villeinage of the ancient common law, and the courts have looked to the Roman rather than to the old common law of England for rules applicable to it,[10] and the common law of England was held to be inapplicable to the institution of slavery, except to protect the rights of masters, for African slavery never existed in the island of Great Britain by the common law, by statute, or by the law of nations.[11] Under the Roman law slavery could originate in three ways, namely, by birth, when the mother was a slave; by captivity, in war; and by the voluntary sale of himself, as a slave, by a freeman, above the age of twenty, for the sake of sharing the price.[12] In the United States slavery by captivity in war was unknown [13] except in the instance of Indians taken in combat,[14] and a free negro could not sell himself into slavery,[15] the chief means of perpetuating slavery being by birth.[16]

B. Slave Trade. Although the slave trade was in some states recognized as a lawful commerce, under the law of nations, and that law was held obligatory on the states, unless repudiated by treaty or positive law,[17] persons imported as slaves contrary to law, against their will, were still subject to federal control, although mingled with persons in the states; [18] and in many states statutes were passed prohibiting slave trade and the importation of slaves, and providing that upon the importation of a slave into the state he became free; [19] and similar acts were passed by the federal government making the engaging in the slave trade

Slaves born in the states of Coahuila and Texas before the promulgation of the constitutions, or introduced into the state within the condition of the mother at the time of the birth, according to the maxim partus sequitur ventrem;[29] and the law did not contemplate that any number of crosses between the negro and the white should emancipate the offspring of the slave.[30] Although some cases seemed to lean to a different doctrine,[31] it was generally held that children born of a slave mother entitled to or promised her freedom at the end of a fixed time were born slaves and so continued even after the mother obtained her freedom,[32] and the issue of manumitted slaves born after the manumission, before the period of its taking full effect, were slaves for life,[33] and the cases in which children, born before their mothers' right to freedom accrued, have been adjudged to be free, were held to be so decided, not because of a prospective gift or bequest of freedom to the mothers, but because of some six months after that time, could be held in slavery (Clapp v. Walters, 2 Tex. 130); and under Tex. Const. § 9, providing that all persons who were slaves before their emigration to Texas, and who "are now held in bondage, shall remain in the like state of servitude," that relation where it existed de facto at the time of the adoption of the constitution was recognized and continued (Guess v. Lubbock, 5 Tex. 535); and negroes in this state were prima facie slaves, and where held as such they were slaves de facto, whether so de jure or not (Boulware v. Hendricks, 23 Tex. 667); but in Texas none but Africans could legally be slaves (Gaines v. Ann, 17 Tex. 211).

Indians as slaves.— In some states under the early condition of the law Indians might be slaves. This was true in New Jersey (State v. Van Waggoner, 6 N. J. L. 374, 376); and under a very early statute in Virginia, repealed shortly after its passage, it was provided that Indians at war with this country when taken prisoners became slaves, and under this statute many Indians were made slaves and their descendants followed their state (Jenkins v. Tom, 1 Wash. (Va.) 123). But in Virginia after 1705, no American Indian could be held as a slave, but foreign Indians coming within the description of the act of 1705, chapter 49, might be. Coleman v. Dick, 1 Wash. (Va.) 233. See Hudgins v. Wright, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 134, placing the date at which American Indians could not be made slaves as early as 1691. (Va.) 109, holding that the act of assembly of 1682, in relation to the sale of Indians as slaves, was repealed by the act of 1705, and not by those of 1684 or 1691. Indians taken captive in war, prior to the year 1769, by the French, and held or sold as slaves in the province of Louisiana while the same was held by the French, were held to be lawful slaves, and, if females, their descendants likewise (Marguerite v. Chouteau, 3 Mo. 540 [overruling Marguerite v. Chouteau, 2 Mo. 71]); and those of the Indians who were formerly held in slavery during the French government in Louisiana did not become free by the subsequent changes of government (Seville v. Chretien, 5 Mart. (La.) 275. But see Ulzire v. Poeyfarre, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 504, holding that the issue of an Indian woman were slaves). In South Carolina act of 1740, excepting "free Indians in amity with this government" from the presumption of being slaves, the phrase "free Indians" included all Indians and their descendants domiciled in this state, although disconnected with any tribe of Indians, and not merely preserving a national character. Conversely where a person held as a slave sued for freedom, and it appeared that he belonged to the white race, he was presumed to be free. Daniel v. Guy, 19 Ark. 121. Hook v. Pagee, 2 Munf. (Va.) 379. In Kentucky all persons of blood not less than one-quarter African were prima facie deemed slaves; and whites, and those less than one-quarter African, were prima facie free (Gentry v. McMinnis, 3 Dana (Ky.) 382); and Indians or white persons were prima facie free (Gatliff v. Rose, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 629). Negroes in North Carolina were presumed to be slaves until the contrary appeared; but it was otherwise as to persons of mixed blood. Nichols v. Bell, 46 N. C. 32; Scott v. Williams, 12 N. C. 376; Gobu v. Gobu, 1 N. C. 100.

On the trial of a petition for freedom by a negro, the presumption was against him that he was a slave, that being the condition of the negro race generally; and he must prove his right to freedom, either that he was born free, or had been emancipated according to law (Jackson v. Bob, 18 Ark. 399; Davis v. Curry, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 238); or he must prove his descent from a free ancestor, or that he has been manumitted by deed or will (Hughes v. Jackson, 12 Md. 450; Anderson v. Garrett, 9 Gill (Md.) 120; Burke v. Negro Joe, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 136; Hall v. Mullin, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 190; Charlotte v. Chouteau, 25 Mo. 465; Chouteau v. Pierre, 9 Mo. 3); and no presumption arose in suits for freedom that plaintiff was free from the fact that he was less than one fourth negro (Daniel v. Guy, 19 Ark. 121).

In Louisiana the presumption was that a black man was a slave, but the burden of proof was on him who claimed the colored person as a slave. Thus where persons of color sued for freedom, the burden of proving them slaves was on defendant; otherwise in case of negroes. Adelle v. Beauregard, 1 Mart. 183. Similarly, where a black person in the enjoyment of liberty sued and was prima facie to be considered as a slave and the property of somebody; and he who acted in respect to him, as if he were a free man, acted at his peril, and the burden of proof was on him to show that the negro was not a slave, or at least to show such circumstances as would rebut the presumption arising from color,[42] and possession of, and acts of ownership over, a colored person, was prima facie evidence of slavery and ownership.[43] This, however, was not the rule in non-slave states, and in these every person, although colored, was prima facie presumed to be free;[44] and a negro was presumed to be free, although purchased as a slave, if the purchase was made in a state in which slavery was not tolerated, unless it was shown that he had previously inhabited one in which it was.[45] A deed or act of manumission of a slave might be presumed from such acts of the master as afforded a sufficient ground for the presumption,[46] as where the master allowed him to act as a freeman without molestation for over twenty years;[47] but the rule was that the presumption of a deed of manumission must be founded on acts inconsistent with a state of slavery, known to the owner, and which could only be accounted for on a supposition that he intended to free his slave.[48] A deed of emancipation, executed in a state where slavery did not exist, was prima facie good, and entitled the negroes to freedom wherever they went; and the proof of its invalidity must come from those who disputed the act and attempted to hold against it.[49]

2. Competency and Weight and Sufficiency. Upon an issue of slavery or freedom the general rules of evidence[50] applied,[51] as to admissibility.[52] And defendant pleaded that he was a slave, the burden of proof was on defendant; but it was otherwise where a slave sued for freedom. Mary v. Morris, 7 La. 135 (where plaintiff in a suit for freedom had the burden of proving freedom when the question was libera vel non); Hawkins v. Vanwickle, 6 Mart. N. S. 418.

The abandonment of a slave by the owner affords no presumption of the execution of a deed of manumission (Anderson v. Garrett, 9 Gill (Md.) 120), and no presumption of a deed of manumission was authorized on the mere ground that a slave has gone at large, and acted as a freeman with his master's knowledge, unless such going at large and acting as if free was for at least twenty years' uninterrupted duration (Anderson v. Garrett, supra).

Free negroes could not own or hold slaves (Tindal v. Hudson, 2 Harr. extent imparted to slaves the fictitious quality of realty, for most purposes, and to a greater extent, considered them personalty.[58] In fact the master's property in his slave was sui generis, the slave being considered in the law in many respects in the light of a human being entitled to the law's protection.[59] Thus, although unconditional submission on the part of the slave was due to the lawful authority of the master, and the master might therefore use just such force and means in reducing his rebellious slave to lawful submission to his authority as were necessary to effect his purpose, even to the destruction of the life or limb of the slave,[60] yet he might not deprive the slave of life or limb unless impelled to such an act by necessity;[61] and he had no right to inflict on him such cruel and inhuman punishment, even with the purpose of securing service and obedience, as must result in death as a consequence of the punishment inflicted.[62] Nor did the law subject the female slave to an involuntary and illicit connection with her master, and it would protect her against such a misfortune,[63] and the owner of a slave was under a legal obligation to supply his necessary wants and protect and preserve his life,[64] his duty to protect him terminating only with his life, and even after emancipation he was bound not only to protect but to maintain them when they were no longer able to maintain themselves.[65] An action would lie by the owner against one who held his slave wrongfully,[66] or enticed,[67] harbored or concealed,[68]

Assisting a slave to escape from his master in order to obtain his freedom was not lar-

ness;[73] but carriers were liable in many states, under statute, to the master of a slave for taking him as a passenger without his owner's consent or unaccompanied by the owner, and thus aiding his escape;[74] and in some cases the carrier was liable to fine and imprisonment.[75] Slaves were subject to attachment.[76]

B. Transfer of Slaves. Slaves could be transferred by will,[77] or by gift,[78] which under some statutes was sufficient if by parol accompanied with delivery,[79] but which might be,[80] and in some instances must be, in writing, and recorded,

V. FUGITIVE SLAVE LAWS.

In many states statutes were passed known generally as fugitive slave laws having for an object the prevention of the escape of slaves and their reclamation, and the punishment of those who aided or assisted a slave to escape or harbored him.[3] Furthermore the United States constitution[4] guaranteed to the owner of an escaped slave the right of reclamation,[5] and the constitution did not leave the enforcement of the provisions for the reclamation of slaves solely with the states, but it vested that power in the federal government.[6] Thus similar statutes were passed by the federal government, the principal ones in 1793 and 1850, the latter known specifically as The Fugitive Slave Law,[7] and these were held not repugnant

Act Cong. (1850) c. 60, § 7, provided that any person who should harbor or conceal any fugitive from service or labor, escaping from one state into another, so as to prevent his discovery and arrest, after notice or knowledge that he was such a fugitive, should be subject to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and, on indictment and conviction, to imprisonment not exceeding six months, and should forfeit and pay, by way of civil damages, to the party injured, the sum of one thousand dollars for each fugitive so lost, to be recovered by action of debt. This statute repealed by implication Act (1793), c. 7, § 4, which provided that any person who should harbor or conceal any such fugitive after notice that he was such a fugitive from labor should forfeit and pay to the claimant the sum of five hundred dollars, to be recovered by action of debt, saving also to the claimant his right of action for any damages sustained, and barred all actions pending under said act of 1793 at the time of the repeal. B. Police of Slaves; Sales; Intoxicating Liquor Laws. In some states the slave was required to be registered,[21] and slave patrols were authorized with a general police power over slaves,[22] an overseer being also required by law on slave plantations to each specified number of slaves;[23] and the slaves were very generally prohibited from carrying arms, as indeed were free negroes.[24] It was criminal to trade or deal with a slave without his master's consent;[25] to sell him intoxicants or to employ or to allow him in a place where intoxicants were sold, without his master's consent;[26] to incite in slaves a spirit of insurrection, rebellion, conspiracy, or discontent;[27] or to permit slaves to go at large and hire themselves out or to engage in business.[28]

VII. STATUS AND CIVIL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

A. In General. With the exception of his right to protection from personal injury,[29] and the liability of a carrier for injury to slaves,[30] and the relation of a slave to the criminal law,[31] a slave in all relations and in all matters was regarded by the law as property.[32] He had no civil, social, or political rights or capacity whatever, except such as were bestowed on him by statute,[33] and every attempt to extend to a slave positive rights was held to be an attempt to reconcile inherent contradictions; for, in the very nature of things, he was held subject to despotism.[34]

B. Rights of Property of Slaves. As to property rights the rule was that the possession of the slave was the possession of the master, and any property which the former acquired belonged to the latter;[35] and a slave could acquire no rights under a deed which either a court of law or of equity could enforce.[36] A devise or bequest to a slave was very generally held to be void;[37] and a bequest in trust for a slave was not enforced for his benefit, but the bequest lapsed and fell into the general residuum of the estate for distribution,[38] except as otherwise provided by positive statute,[39] and a slave could not inherit,[40] nor could his owners derive title to any property bequeathed or devised to a slave;[41] but in some states the highly prized devise of freedom was upheld,[42] but not the bequest of freedom to a slave after the determination of a life-estate in the slave.[43] In some cases a legacy given to a slave was held not void; but it could not be recovered of the executor by the slave or his master, and it escheated to the state.[44]

C. Inheritance From or Through. The children of a slave, born during slavery, were not such heirs as would prevent the escheat of his property in the event of his death intestate after he had obtained his freedom;[45] but after their emancipation inheritance could be had through slaves;[46] and the issue of a slave marriage, although the parents died before the emancipation, were lawful heirs of their father.[47]

D. Contracts By or With Slaves. A slave could not contract, and an attempted contract neither imposed obligations nor conferred rights on either party,[48] unless made with the consent of his master,[49] and a contract made by a slave could not be enforced on his becoming a freedman.[50] But where a slave was permitted by his owner to exercise his own discretion in the employment of his time, acting really as a freeman, such owner could not recover from a third person the proceeds of property which the slave had acquired, and which had come into the hands of such third person as the agent of a slave;[51] nor could his master compel performance of a contract made by a slave with a third person.[52]

E. Torts by Slaves. The owner of a slave was not answerable for a wilful and unauthorized trespass committed by his slave;[53] nor for injuries caused by the negligent conduct of the slave while not acting in his employment or under his authority,[54] and the converse of both rules was also true;[55] and if a slave committed a wrong for his master's benefit, but not at his command or request, and

F. Actions By or Against Slaves. A slave could not be a party in any civil action either as plaintiff or defendant, except when he had to claim or prove his freedom,[58] and then he must sue by guardian.[59]

VIII. CRIMES AND OFFENSES BY OR AGAINST SLAVES.

A. Crimes of Slaves — 1. In General. Slaves were treated as persons by the criminal law,[60] and were legally punishable for their crimes.[61] Slaves were thus punishable for assault and battery,[62] larceny,[63] mayhem,[64] rape,[65] and homicide.[66] But the slave undoubtedly had the natural right of self-preservation or self-defense,[67] although facts which as between whites might excuse or mitigate the offense did not so operate in the case of slaves;[68] and it was no justification of a slave, indicted for a criminal offense, that it was committed by his master's command.[69] In some states criminal statutes were passed specially applicable to slaves.[70] For an offense committed when a slave a man could not be legally convicted and punished as a freeman.[71]

2. Punishment, and Indemnification of Owner Therefor. The punishment of slaves was in general severer than the punishment of whites for like offenses, this of course being necessitated by their numbers, and general uncontrollable and frequently savage disposition;[72] and when slaves committed crimes and were prosecuted in the name of the state, they were regarded as accountable beings, and not as things; and they might be punished as the law directed, irrespective of the wishes of the master,[73] for when a slave committed a crime, the private rights of the master yielded to the superior rights of the state, and he could not legally obstruct his arrest, or assist his escape,[74] although under some statutes the master was entitled to compensation for the loss of the slave.[75] A slave convicted of manslaughter might be punished by burning in the hand and whipping,[76] and murder was punishable by death,[77] as was attempted murder,[78] and a slave accessory before the fact to murder was liable to the death penalty.[79] A slave convicted of murder was put to death in the same manner as a white person.[80]

B. Offenses Against Slaves. As has been seen above,[81] although slaves were for most purposes regarded as property their lives and safety were guarded and they were entitled to the protection of the criminal law, and an offense against their life or limb was punishable criminally.[82] Thus assault and battery of a slave was a criminal offense,[83] as it was to cruelly and inhumanly cut, slash, beat, or ill-treat a slave,[84] or to inflict other cruel or unusual punishment,[85] or to neglect to provide proper food, clothes, or shelter,[86] or to kill him unjustifiably.[87] If the offense was dismemberment, the indictment was for mayhem, and if it was a killing, the indictment was for murder;[88] but a simple assault and battery on a slave was not an indictable offense, and such an assault, even with intent to murder him, was not an offense at common law,[89] although the owner of a slave who beat him cruelly, and exposed him, so beaten, to public view, was guilty of a misdemeanor even at common law.[90] An indictment would lie against any person who removed or attempted to remove from the state any slave having a suit pending for freedom.[91]

IX. THE RIGHT TO FREEDOM.

A. Acquirement of Right — 1. In General. The attitude of the several states toward slavery makes any generalization on the subject of the freedom of slaves hazardous. Some states leaning toward the abolition of slavery endeavored to facilitate the process of obtaining freedom, while others, fearing the effect of the letting loose of such a body of ungovernable blacks, passed stringent laws to prevent it. In some states failure to register slaves under the statute had the effect of freeing them,[92] in others they could become free by purchase,[93] and in many freedom was allowed to be acquired by prescription;[94] but the master must know of the slave's place of residence during the period of prescription.[95] A slave could not become partially free.[96]

2. By Exportation or Removal From State or by Violation of Laws Relating to Importation and Sale. In many states statutes were passed prohibiting the exportation or removal of slaves from the state, and under these in the event of such removal the slave became free,[97] while under other statutes slaves brought into the several states to reside or for sale in violation of or non-compliance with laws governing importation were free;[98] but such residence in a non-slaveholding state as would entitle a slave to freedom could not be acquired without the connivance or consent of the legal owner,[99] and the statutes did not generally apply to slaves brought in by travelers or temporary sojourners;[1] but the traveler bringing slaves into a state must pursue his journey with no unnecessary delay, and to excuse any delay some necessity must exist;[2] and in some jurisdictions the presence, although but momentary, of a slave in a free state with the master's consent created per se the condition of freedom;[3] and under some,[4] but not all,[5] statutes a slave became free by merely being transported through the state. The owner could in some instances bring the slave into the state upon taking a statutory oath.[6] Illegal sales of slaves entitled them to their freedom.[7]

3. Actions or Proceedings For Freedom. The method of enforcing the right to freedom was provided for in the statutes, which were to be strictly followed.[8] In some instances habeas corpus would lie;[9] and in some states an action of assumpsit for services rendered might be maintained by a person claimed as a slave, for the purpose of trying the question of freedom,[10] or trespass in the nature of ravishment of ward,[11] or bill in equity.[12] The cases relating to jurisdiction and venue,[13] procedure,[14] right to sue and leave of court,[15] parties,[16] pleadings,[17] or trial judgment and review[18] are of little more than historical interest. general rule was that a slave upon securing his freedom was not entitled to damages or to recover for his services while a slave,[19] unless he showed that defendant knew he was a free man.[20]

B. Manumission[21] — 1. Right to Manumit; How Exercised. The question of the right of owners to manumit their slaves is considerably obscured by the wide diversity of statutes in the several states and the varying attitudes of the laws of particular states at various stages of their history, some statutes permitting manumission,[22] others forbidding it,[23] and under the latter a bequest to slaves or a direction or trust in a will for their emancipation was void;[24] and it was held that a slave could not be the cestui que trust of his own freedom, under a bequest of freedom, where a direct emancipation of the slave by will would be invalid.[25] Other statutes permitted manumission, the legislature or court assenting.[26] When manumission was permitted it could be by deed or will,[27] although if by deed it must be recorded,[28] and some laws even permitted the slave to contract with his master for his freedom;[29] and an owner of a slave, by voluntarily putting him as a substitute into the federal army in 1864, thereby emancipated him by his own act, and the slave thereby became free.[30] The statutes were generally held to prohibit only the manumission of slaves within the state and to permit the sending of slaves out of the state to be manumitted;[31] and the owner of slaves might voluntarily take them to another state and emancipate and leave them there.[32] But even in states where manumission was allowed the law permitted manumission only of such slaves as could work and gain a livelihood and often required security for their support, the requirement of security being, however, only a police regulation not affecting their freedom.[33] Furthermore, where the owner was permitted by law to manumit his slave, he must conform strictly to the formalities prescribed, otherwise the act was void,[34] and slaves in many states could not be manumitted to the prejudice of existing creditors.[35] Generally no consent by the slave was necessary to the gift of freedom;[36] but in some states he could elect to accept or reject the act of manumission,[37] while in others no such right of election was recognized.[38] Judicial proceedings for the purpose of manumission were provided, the general method being upon petition by the master to the county court or to a magistrate.[39]

2. Status and Right of Manumitted Slaves. The status of manumitted slaves and slaves having the inchoate right of freedom was a condition sui generis regulated by statutes in the several states.[40] Manumission did not confer citizenship, or any of its incidents,[41] the emancipation of a slave being merely a donation to himself of his value.[42] But a slave with inchoate right to freedom had the right to own and possess property,[43] and a slave who was emancipated might hold lands.[44] A devise to emancipated slaves by their former master was valid,[45] as was also a bequest or devise to a slave to take effect when emancipated;[46] and a bequest of property for the benefit of slaves directed to be removed to a foreign country for the purpose of their manumission was held good as a bequest to charitable uses.[47] A slave who had acquired the right of freedom at a future time was from that time capable of receiving property by testament or donation, and it must be preserved for him, in order to be delivered in kind when his emancipation should take place. In the meantime it must be administered by a trustee.[48]

laws. The emancipation proclamation of 1863 was regarded simply as an advertisement of what would be a sure consequence of conquest; it did not, either in law or fact, emancipate the slaves at that time,[51] and was held to be a war measure, and had no operative effect until carried into execution by force of arms.[52] It did not therefore take effect to destroy property in slaves except so far as it was carried into effect, in the various portions of the territory described in it, by the actual suppression of hostility.[53] The act emancipating slaves in the hostile states was constitutional, as the United States and the confederate states were at that time belligerent powers, and by the law of nations a belligerent party is justified in resorting to any measure to strengthen itself or weaken its adversary.[54] The thirteenth amendment to the United States constitution, abolishing slavery, equally forbids Mexican peonage or the Chinese coolie trade, when they amount to slavery or involuntary servitude;[55] and a custom prevailing among the uncivilized tribes of Indians in Alaska, whereby slaves are bought, sold, and held in servitude against their will, and subjected to ill-treatment at the pleasure of the owner, is contrary to the thirteenth amendment and to the civil rights bill of 1866;[56] but when the state as parens patriæ in a proper case through its constituted officers or agencies takes under its control an infant, the law authorizing such child to be bound to service under proper restrictions is not a violation of those provisions of the constitutions of the state and of the United States which prohibit slavery and involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime after conviction thereof.[57] In becoming freedmen, slaves became "persons," and were punishable under the criminal law for all offenses committed by them in such personal status;[58] and a freedman of legal age might commence proceedings to enforce in the state courts any existing legal or equitable right, created in his favor while he was a slave, that did not then contravene the policy or violate the laws of the state.[59] After the abolition of slavery all obligations given as the evidence of contracts relating thereto became null and void,[60] and the emancipation act necessarily annulled the laws under which contracts relating to the ownership of slaves were previously enforced;[61] but the liability of a person to pay the value of slaves wrongfully appropriated was not affected by the fact of the subsequent abolition of slavery.[62]

under the seventh section of the act supplemental to the act for the gradual abolition of slavery, it was held that the owner of a slave had a right to carry him out of the state, and was entitled to the aid of the magistrates for that purpose. X. LEGITIMIZING ISSUE.

In addition to the curative legislation passed in a majority of the states legalizing cohabitation between slaves before emancipation,[63] statutes were passed legitimizing the recognized offspring of negroes who had cohabited as man and wife,[64] and prescribing the legal steps to be taken to this end; [65] and the legitimization generally conferred the right of inheritance and descent; [66] and it was held

63. See MARRIAGE, 26 Cyc. 869.

64. See the statutes. And see Gregley v. Jackson, 38 Ark. 487, holding that the act of Feb. 6, 1867, legitimizing the recognized offspring of negroes who have cohabited as husband and wife, included the offspring of parents then dead, as well as of those living.

A customary slave marriage of a free man of color and a slave woman, no other marriage or other legal impediment intervening, confirmed after emancipation of the woman by cohabitation as husband and wife, or by any other plainly established assent by both parties to the continued existence of the antecedent relation of husband and wife, renders the issue born in slavery legitimate. Daniel v. Sams, 17 Fla. 487.

65. See cases cited infra, this note.

In Louisiana slaves could only legitimate their children born before marriage by a declaration before a notary and two witnesses, if not made in a registry of birth or baptism. Thomassin v. Raphael, 11 La. 128. But a bastard, born in Louisiana of a slave mother, need not have been legally "acknowledged" by her, in order to enable her, when emancipated, to inherit from him. Neel v. Hibard, 30 La. Ann. 808.

66. White v. Ross, 40 Ga. 339; Davenport v. Caldwell, 10 S. C. 317.

Under the act of congress of Feb. 6, 1879, which provides "that the issue of any marriage of colored persons, contracted and entered into, according to any custom prevailing at the time in any of the States wherein the same occurred, shall, for all purposes of descent and inheritance . . . be deemed to be legitimate," the living together of slaves in the state of Maryland as husband and wife, with the consent of their masters, was sufficient, according to the customs of that state, within the meaning of said act of congress, to make the issue legitimate for the purposes of descent. Thomas v. Holtzman, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 62.

Tennessee act of May 26, 1866, providing that "all free persons of color, who were living together as husband and wife in this state while in a state of slavery, are hereby declared to be man and wife, and their children legitimately entitled to an inheritance in any property heretofore acquired, or that may hereafter be acquired, by said parents, to as full an extent as the children of white citizens are now entitled by the existing laws of this state," makes legitimate and capable of inheriting the child of slave parents, whose marriage was void under the restrictions growing out of the institution of slavery, although one of the parents may have died during slavery. Wallace v. Godfrey, 42 Fed. 812.

N. C. Code, § 1281, provides that the children of colored persons living together as man and wife, born before Jan. 1, 1868, shall be considered legitimate, with all the rights of heirs at law and next of kin, with respect to the estates of such parents or either of them. Under this provision persons born before the time specified could not inherit from an aunt. Tucker v. Bellamy, 98 N. C. 31, 4 S. E. 34. Furthermore the right of inheritance is confined to parents and children, and the illegitimate children of the mother by another husband do not inherit from her children by the husband with whom she was cohabiting at the time of the passage of Laws (1866), c. 40, which legalized such cohabitation. Jones v. Hoggard, 108 N. C. 178, 12 S. E. 906, 907. The rights given by the code are not abridged by rule 13, same section, permitting such children to inherit from both parents, but not collaterally, and brothers, therefore, born of parents who lived together as man and wife prior to 1868, may inherit from each other. Tucker v. Tucker, 108 N. C. 235, 13 S. E. 5. Laws (1866), c. 40, § 5, providing that where a man and woman, who had been slaves, now cohabit together as man and wife, they shall be deemed to have been lawfully married at the time of such cohabitation, applies only to such persons as were cohabiting together when the act was passed, and their children are legitimate, and inherit from their parents to the exclusion of the children of the mother by another husband, with whom she had ceased to cohabit prior to its passage. The act of 1879 (Code, § 1281, rule 13), providing that children born prior to Jan. 1, 1868, of colored persons living together as husband and wife, are legitimate, and inherit from either or both their parents, is not retroactive, and cannot divest an estate which became vested by the death of the parents prior to its passage. Jones v. Hoggard, 108 N. C. 178, 12 S. E. 906, 907. But the act of 1879 applies to the children of all colored parents, whether slaves or free, and whether the parents were incapable of entering into the marriage relation by virtue of positive law or their status as slaves. Woodard v. Blue, 103 N. C. 109, 9 S. E. 492. Both cohabitation subsisting at the birth of the child and paternity of the person under whom the property is claimed are essential to the right of inheritance. Cohabitation alone, although it furnishes presumptive evidence of paternity, is not conclusive, where no valid marriage between the parents could have been contracted. Woodard v. Blue, supra; Spaugh v. Hartman, 150 N. C. 454, 64 S. E. 198. Moreover an exclusive cohabitation must be shown, as signified by the ex-

that on the emancipation of the children of a slave as a result of the war of secession, their heritable blood was restored, and they were consequently entitled to inherit the estate of their father, who died a freedman;[67] but the offspring of slave marriages which terminated before the emancipation of the parties thereto could now inherit;[68] and children of slaves who, after their emancipation, failed to recognize or consummate the previous customary marriage, were held to occupy pression "living together as man and wife." Casual sexual intercourse is insufficient. Spaugh v. Hartman, supra. The purpose and effect of the act of 1866 (supra) are to legalize and give validity to a single relation formed and maintained among the slave population, possessing the features and conditions of marriage, and to render offspring legitimate; but no relief was intended for polygamous relations. Branch v. Walker, 102 N. C. 34, 8 S. E. 896.

South Carolina act of 1865 (known as the "Enabling Act"), section 4, provides that every colored child heretofore born shall be the legitimate child of his "colored father, if he is acknowledged by such father." A free negro married a slave, and subsequently a free negress, having children by both. He acknowledged the children by the slave, thereby legitimating them under the act, and by his will he directed that his estate should stand "just as it is until my youngest child comes 21 years old," and it was held that the first marriage being void, and the second valid, the children of the second marriage were entitled to share in his estate, and partition and distribution would not be made when the youngest of such children was not twenty-one years old, although the other children were of age. Callahan v. Callahan, 36 S. C. 454, 15 S. E. 727. And see Clement v. Riley, 33 S. C. 66, 11 S. E. 699. Rev. St. (1872) p. 842, repeals the act of 1865, subject to the provisions on page 766, section 4, declaring that such repeal shall not affect any act done, or right accruing, accrued, or established, before the repeal takes effect, and therefore children born prior to 1872, who were the issus of an invalid marriage between a free negro man and a slave, and who were acknowledged by such father, were entitled to share as his heirs in his intestate property. Callahan v. Callahan, 36 S. C. 454, 15 S. E. 727. The act of 1872 (Gen. St. § 2031), legitimizing the issue of slave marriages, applies to the issue of a marriage of a free person of color with a slave; and their property descends as in other cases, a wife and child being preferred to sisters and their children. Dingle v. Mitchell, 20 S. C. 202.

Milliken & V. Code Tenn. §§ 3303, 3304, declaring to be husband and wife all colored persons living as such while in slavery, and conferring right of inheritance on children of such persons, does not apply to marriages contracted without consent of the owner of the contracting parties. Brown v. Cheatham, 91 Tenn. 97, 17 S. W. 1033.

Tex. Const. (1869) art. 12, § 27, legitimized the offspring of such negroes as had lived together while in slavery, on the terms and under the conditions described in that section. Hill v. Fairfax, 38 Tex. 220. The object was to legitimize the offspring of those whose bondage had disabled them from legal marriage until the death of one of them or until the adoption of the constitution (Clements v. Crawford, 42 Tex. 601); and the completion of a marriage of slaves after emancipation, and the husband's subsequent recognition of their child who was born in slavery, rendered the child legitimate, and capable of inheriting from either of them under Rev. St. art. 1656 (Cumby v. Henderson, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 519, 25 S. W. 673). But this section of the constitution did not make persons husband and wife who were at the time cohabiting, and who had previously cohabited while slaves, when the relation of husband and wife was not recognized between them while they were slaves, and when the man at that time was cohabiting with another woman, formerly a slave, who was recognized as his wife, both before and after emancipation. Livingston v. Williams, 75 Tex. 653, 13 S. W. 173.

Va. Const. art. 11, § 7, provides that the child of parents, one or both of whom were slaves at and during the period of their cohabitation, and which was recognized by the father as his child, and whose mother was recognized by such father as his wife, shall inherit his estate as though born in lawful wedlock. The act of Feb. 27, 1866, section 2, provides that when colored persons, before the passage of the act, shall have undertaken and agreed to occupy the relation of husband and wife, and as such cohabit together at the time of its passage, they shall be deemed husband and wife, although the marriage rites have not been celebrated, and their children be deemed legitimate; and where such cohabitation ceased by the death of the mother before the passage of the act, such children shall be deemed legitimate. Thus where plaintiff was born in 1862, her mother being a slave and her father a free colored man, which parents lived together as husband and wife from 1861 to 1864, when the mother died, and plaintiff was recognized by the father as his child, and by him reared to womanhood, she was entitled by inheritance to a share of her intestate father's real estate. Scott v. Raub, 88 Va. 721, 14 S. E. 178 [following Francis v. Francis, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 283]. So also under the act of 1866 (supra) the children of such persons are legitimate, whether born before or after the passage of the act, and whether any sort of marriage ceremony had taken place between the parents or not. Smith v. Perry, 80 Va. 563. And see Fitchett v. Smith, 78 Va. 524.

the legal position of bastards.[69] A colored child, born before emancipation, of parents living in what was regarded as wedlock, and who had been acknowledged by the father as his child, was the legitimate child of the father, and he was entitled as a parent to right of possession as against the mother.[70]

4. Webster Dict. [quoted in Munro v. Beadle, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 314].

"The word 'sleuth' or 'sleuth-hound' does not appear in the first edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, or in any edition of Worcester until after 1880, and then only in the supplement thereto. Its derivation is probably Icelandic, or at least northern, and comes from the word 'slot' which was used in Scotland and the northern countries to indicate, primarily, a track in the snow, and afterwards a track in the earth as well. It did not find its way into the English dictionaries until very recently, and there is said to be pronounced as though spelled 'sloth.'" Munro v. Beadle, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 414, 415.

The term as employed to designate a collection of serial stories is held to be a fanciful and arbitrary word, not descriptive of the subject-matter of the publication, and therefore a trade-mark which could be infringed. Munro v. Beadle, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 414, 415 [reversing 2 N. Y. Suppl. 314].

5. Selchow v. Baker, 11 Daly (N. Y.) 353, 357, holding that the terms "sliced animals," "sliced birds," or "sliced objects" applied to card-boards on which pictures of animals, birds, or objects were printed and which were cut into strips constituting games or puzzles, were arbitrary words not descriptive of the articles and not protected as trade-marks.

I. DEFINITION.

Sodomy, in its broadest meaning, is the carnal copulation by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast,[1] in which sense it includes the

With beast.— Carnal copulation with a sow (Langford v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 561, 89 S. W. 830), with a cow (Bradford v. State, 104 Ala. 68, 16 So. 107, 53 Am. St. Rep. 24), crime against nature,[2] bestiality,[3] and buggery.[4] In its narrower sense sodomy is the carnal copulation between two male human beings per anum.[5]

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

A. At Common Law — 1. In General. Sodomy was a felony at common law punishable by death.[6]

2. Assault. Assault is an element of the offense of sodomy only when perpetrated upon an unwilling human being,[7] and is not an element if the other party consents.[8] Nor is it an element if the offense is committed with a beast.[9]

3. Penetration. Penetration was an essential element of the crime of sodomy at common law.[10]

4. Emission of Seed. Emission of seed has been variously held to have been essential [11] or non-essential [12] to the commission of the crime at common law.[13]

B. By Statute — 1. In General; Penetration. The majority of states have enacted statutes defining and punishing the crime of sodomy, and these almost with a ewe (Rex v. Cozins, 6 C. & P. 351, 25 E. C. L. 469), with a mare (Cross v. State, 17 Tex. App. 476), or with a jennet (Almendaris v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 73 S. W. 1055) is sodomy. Sexual connection between a dog and a woman is sodomy. Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 355, 71 Am. Dec. 331.

With fowl.— Carnal copulation with a domestic fowl is sodomy (Reg. v. Brown, 24 Q. B. D. 357, 16 Cox C. C. 715, 54 J. P. 408, 59 L. J. M. C. 47, 61 L. T. Rep. N. S. 594, 38 Wkly. universally agree in making the offense a felony,[14] and agree generally, as do likewise the opinions construing them, in including within their provisions all acts of unnatural copulation whether with mankind or beast.[15] The statutes in the various states make penetration an essential of the crime.[16]

21. Davis v. State, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 154.

Mere naming in an indictment of the crime of sodomy is sufficient, the offense being too well known and too disgusting to be further defined. Davis v. State, 3 Harr. & J. The "crime against nature" in an indictment is by the use of that term sufficiently described. State v. Williams, 34 La. Ann. 87.

An indictment charging defendant with "divers nasty, lewd, and sodomitical practices" "contrary to the order of nature" was too general. Reg. v. Rowed, 3 Q. B. 180, 2 G. & D. 518, 6 Jur. 396, 11 L. J. M. C. 74, 43 E. C. L. 688.

Carnal copulation.— A common-law indictment for sodomy must allege carnal copulation. 1 Hawkins P. C. c. 4.

defendant of the charge against him,[22] and an indictment charging the offense in the language of the statute is usually sufficient.[23]

B. Particular Averments. Particular averments of the elements of the offense are generally unnecessary in an indictment.[24]

V. DEFENSES.[25]

Irresistible insane impulse is a defense to a prosecution for sodomy;[26] and similarly mental disability is a defense if defendant was unable to comprehend the nature and consequences of the act.[27] Unreasonable lapse of time between the commission of the offense and complaint thereof is likewise a defense.[28] But unlike the case of rape,[29] consent is no defense to a prosecution for sodomy.[30]

22. State v. Campbell, 29 Tex. 44, 94 Am. Dec. 251.

An information charging the commission of the crime "upon the person of Carl K" sufficiently indicates that it was committed with a human being, as distinguished from an animal. People v. Moore, 103 Cal. 508, 37 Pac. 510. But see People v. Carroll, 1 Cal. App. 2, 81 Pac. 680, which held that an information charging that defendant committed the crime against nature on and had "carnal knowledge" of the body of one Frank D was fatally defective for failure to allege that Frank D was a male person, since the words "carnal knowledge" refer to sexual connection.

An indictment charging copulation with a "sow" sufficiently described the character of the animal. Langford v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 561, 89 S. W. 830. Also "with a mare, same being a beast." Cross v. State, 17 Tex. App. 476. An indictment that "Wallace Bradford, against the order of nature, attempted to carnally know a certain beast, to-wit, a cow," sufficiently charges the crime against nature (Bradford v. State, 104 Ala. 68, 16 So. 107, 53 Am. St. Rep. 24), and an indictment describing the animal as "a certain animal called a bitch" is sufficiently certain, although the female of several animals are so designated (Reg. v. Allen, 1 C. & K. 495, 47 E. C. L. 495).

In an opening of the body other than sexual parts.— An indictment which alleged the commission of the crime against nature by carnal copulation "in an opening of the body other than the sexual parts" was not insufficient on the ground that the particular opening was not designated. State v. McGruder, 125 Iowa 741, 101 N. W. 646.

23. Honselman v. People, 168 Ill. 172, 48 N. E. 304; Com. v. Dill, 160 Mass. 536, 36 N. E. 472.

Particular indictments considered.— An indictment charging that J W against the order of nature had a venereal affair and did carnally know H A sufficiently defined the crime. Reg. v. Allen, 2 C. & K. 869, 3 Cox C. C. 270, 1 Den. C. C. 364, 13 Jur. 108, 18 L. J. M. C. 72, T. & M. 55, 61 E. C. L. 869. An indictment charging in the words of the statute that defendant at a time and place named "did unlawfully and feloniously commit a certain unnatural and lascivious act" with a person named is sufficient. Com. v. Dill, 160 Mass. 536, 36 N. E. 472. An information charging that defendant made an assault upon a male person and against the order of nature had a venereal affair and committed the infamous crime against nature of buggery is sufficient. State v. Romans, 21 Wash. 284, 57 Pac. 819. An indictment charging defendant with committing sodomy and the crime against nature with a "mare, same being a beast," is sufficient. Foster v. State, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 467, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 261; Cross v. State, 17 Tex. App. 476.

Words of statute not sufficient.— An indictment for sodomy must describe the offense charged with certainty sufficient to apprise defendant of the charge against him, and it is not enough to charge this offense in the very words of the statute. State v. Campbell, 29 Tex. 44, 94 Am. Dec. 251.

24. See infra, this note.

Agent or pathic.— In the indictment of an adult for the crime against nature it is immaterial whether he is charged as agent or pathic, so long as the act charged be within the statutory definition of the crime. State v. Vicknair, 52 La. Ann. 1921, 28 So. 273.

Sex.— An indictment charging sodomy is good, although it does not state the sex of defendants, where the names of defendant and the pathic are names usually applied to male persons. Foster v. State, 10 Ohio Cir. Ct. 467, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 261. An indictment for sodomy need not allege the sex of the pathic; sex is immaterial in this respect. Adams v. State, 48 Tex. VI. EVIDENCE.

A. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. Upon a prosecution for sodomy penetration must be proven by the state,[31] although to no particular depth,[32] and the proof may be circumstantial,[33] and thus emission of seed is prima facie proof of penetration.[34] But emission of seed being now in most jurisdictions unnecessary to the consummation of the crime,[35] proof of emission is unnecessary in a prosecution for the offense.[36]

B. Admissibility. The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal prosecutions[37] apply in prosecutions for this offense.[38] Declarations of the assaulted party made subsequent to the offense are inadmissible to prove the substantive case,[39] and will be admitted only to corroborate his testimony when that has been impeached.[40]

C. Weight and Sufficiency. The evidence to sustain a conviction must of course as in other crimes be sufficient to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[41] The uncorroborated testimony of a participant in the offense has been held sufficient to convict,[42] but the general rule is that corroboration is necessary.[43]

VII. TRIAL AND VERDICT.

A. Instructions. The rules governing instruction of the jury in criminal prosecutions generally[44] apply to prosecutions for sodomy.[45]

Failure to give instructions covering the law of assault and battery was not error

B. Bill of Particulars; Verdict. Defendant in a prosecution is entitled to a bill of particulars only where he cannot prepare his defense without it.[46] Upon a prosecution for sodomy defendant may be convicted of simple assault.[47]

VIII. PUNISHMENT.

Sodomy was punishable at common law by death, sometimes by burning, sometimes by burying alive.[48] Punishment is, however, almost universally regulated by statutes in the several states, which very generally impose long terms in state prison, in some instances for life.[49]

IX. ATTEMPT OR ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT SODOMY.

An attempt or assault with intent to commit sodomy is very generally made a crime by statutes which forbid the crime of sodomy itself,[50] and in the absence of where no assault and battery was charged except as part of the assault to commit the crime of sodomy. White v. Com., 115 Ky. 473, 24 Ky. L. R. 2349, 73 S. W. 1120. But where the evidence might show simple assault it was held error to refuse to charge that defendant might be convicted of that crime. People v. Hickey, 109 Cal. 275, 41 Pac. 1027. In defining assault as an element of the crime of sodomy the court need not charge the penalty for assault and battery. Darling v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 1005.

Circumstantial evidence.—Penetration being proven only by circumstantial evidence, the court should, if requested, instruct on the law of circumstantial evidence. Almendaris v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 73 S. W. 1055.

Copulation.— Instructions that there must have been some penetration, although to no particular depth, and also that emission was necessary, defined with sufficient particularity the copulation sufficient to constitute the crime of sodomy. State v. McGruder, 125 Iowa 74, 101 N. W. 646.

Emission.— Defendant could not complain of instruction requiring emission. State v. McGruder, 125 Iowa 741, 101 N. W. 646.

Corroboration.— The jury should be instructed that the testimony of a person upon whom the crime was committed must be corroborated, if the question of his consent to the offense be in doubt. Medis v. State, 27 Tex. App. 194, 11 S. W. 112, 11 Am. St. Rep. 192.

Punishment.— If defendant was under sixteen, the court should instruct that punishment might be in the reformatory. Brown v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 626, 99 S. W. 1001.

If the crime is charged in clear language, although not by name, it is not error to instruct that the crime charged is synonymous with sodomy. People v. Williams, 59 Cal. 397.

46. Kelly v. People, 192 Ill. 119, 61 N. E. 425, 85 Am. St. Rep. 323, holding that defendant under an indictment charging him with the infamous crime against nature with and upon a certain person was not entitled to a bill of particulars, the indictment sufficiently apprising him of the offense charged to enable him to prepare his defense.

No punishment being prescribed by statute for the crime of sodomy punishment is by imprisonment or fine, or both, but imprisonment if imposed must be in the house of correction under Vt. St. § 5170. State v. La Forrest, 71 Vt. 311, 45 Atl. 225.

Punishment of a minor, if imprisonment, may be in the reformatory. Brown v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 626, 99 S. W. 1001.

In the entire absence of statute the crime may be punished under a statute adopting as much of the common law as is applicable to local conditions. State v. La Forrest, 71 Vt. 311, 41 Atl. 225.

50. See the statutes of the several states. And see Romans v. State, 21 Wash. 284, 57 Pac. 819; Davis v. State, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 154.

Consent robs an assault to commit sodomy of the element of simple assault; and consent is a question of fact for the jury. People v. Hickey, 109 Cal. 275, 41 Pac. 1027.

Sodomy with animal.— A statute which provides punishment for a person who assaults another with intent to commit sodomy special statutes, general statutes providing that a person who attempts to commit a crime is punishable for the attempt apply to sodomy.[51] An indictment for attempt or assault with intent to commit sodomy must state clearly the offense prohibited by the statute and some act committed toward its perpetration.[52] The punishment for attempt or assault with intent to commit sodomy is regulated entirely by statute in the various states,[53] and in the absence of special statutes, punishment is prescribed by statutes which declare that an attempt to commit a crime is itself an offense.[54] The punishment prescribed is often one half the punishment prescribed for the crime of sodomy itself.[55]

SOFT. In some connections a relative term.[1]

SOFT ENGLISH LEAD. A term which may mean lead made wholly of English ores, or soft lead made in England, no matter from what ores.[2]

SOFT HOGS. A term used to designate hogs fed upon mast, such as beech nuts and acorns.[3]

SOFT WOOD. A term said to be probably intended to represent what in commerce has been applied to certain kinds of wood to distinguish it from other kinds.[4]

SOIL. In reference to a navigable river, the alveus or bed of the river.[5]

SOJOURN. As a noun, a temporary residence, as that of a traveler in a foreign land; a SOJOURNER,[6] q. v. As a verb, to have a temporary abode; to live as not at home.[7] (See RESIDE, 34 Cyc. 1645; RESIDENCE, 34 Cyc. 1647.)

does not apply to an offense with a domestic animal. Com. v. J——, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 625.

Mere overtures to commit sodomy do not constitute a crime. Rex v. Hickman, 1 Moody C. C. 34. There must be an overt act. People v. Wilson, 119 Cal. 384, 51 Pac. 639; State v. Hefner, 129 N. C. 548, 40 S. E. 2.

After acquittal upon an indictment for sodomy defendant may be tried upon a charge of attempt to commit that crime. Reg. v. Eaton, 8 C. & P. 417, 34 E. C. L. 812.

51. State v. Romans, 21 Wash. 284, 57 Pac. 819 (holding that a statute providing that an attempt to commit a crime is punishable is not rendered inapplicable to an attempt to commit sodomy, by the enactment of a statute prescribing punishment for assault with intent to commit sodomy, as the latter is a substantive offense entirely distinct from an attempt to commit a crime); People v. Oates, 142 Cal. 12, 75 Pac. 337; State v. Frank, 103 Mo. 120, 15 S. One who lives in New Jersey and does business in New York "sojourns" in such city.

SOJOURNER. One who dwells for a time as a temporary resident.[8] (See RESIDENT, 34 Cyc. 1655.)

SOLA AC PER SE SENECTUS DONATIONEM, TESTAMENTUM AUT TRANSACTIONEM NON VITIAT. A maxim meaning "Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate gift, will or transaction." [9]

SOLA INNOCENTIA LIBERA. A maxim meaning "Innocence alone is free." [10]

SOLARES. A term used in the Spanish law to denote house lots of a small size, upon which dwellings, shops, stores, etc., are built.[11]

SOLATIUM. In reference to damages, a compensation as a soothing to the affections or wounded feelings, and for loss of the comfort and social pleasure there is in the association between members of a family.[12]

SOLA VESTURA. An exclusive right of pasturage.[13]

SOLD. A term which indicates a consummated sale;[14] in an executory contract of sale, contracted to sell;[15] a term which imports a contract of sale for a valuable consideration.[16] (See, generally, SALES, 35 Cyc. 1; VENDOR AND PUCHASER.)

It is a descriptive word and cannot be registered as a trade-mark. "The words 'soma' and 'somatic' occur in some English dictionaries. They are words derived from the Greek 'soma,' which means the body, or, applied to animals, the carcass of an animal; and the English words mean the body or carcass, and relating to the body or carcass respectively. The Greek word makes 'somatos' in the genitive. 'Somatose,' then, is body or carcass with the addition of 'ose.' This suffix is common, as in the words 'comatose,' 'glucose,' 'cellulose,' and many others. 'Comatose' is the condition of coma; 'glucose' and 'cellulose' are certain preparations derived from the substances indicated in the earlier part of the words." In re Farbenfabriken, [1894] 1 Ch. 645, 655, 63 L. 64. Sanford v. Shepard, 14 Kan. 228, 232, where it is said that an instruction reading, "If there is no time specified for the performance of an act, or if it is specified that it is to be performed 'soon,' the law implies that it is to be performed within a 'reasonable time,'" is no error sufficient to reverse the judgment.

"Sooner" appears to have been used as a noun designating a person who enters upon government lands before they are open to the public (Parryman v. Cunningham, 16 Okla. 94, 95, 82 Pac. 822); and the term "soonerism" appears to have been applied to the practice of entering upon such lands before they are open (Parryman v. Cunningham, 16 Okla. 94, 98, 82 Pac. 822).

"And sooner" in the clause of a will directing the executors to sell testator's real estate in one year after his decease, "and sooner if deemed desirable by them," is construed as used to prevent the executors from construing the limitation of one year, as it would have stood without those words, as postponing the sale for the year, or in other words as prohibiting them from selling at any time within the year, Marsh v. Love, 42 N. J. Eq. 112, 115, 6 Atl. 889.

65. Century Dict.

66. Century Dict.

As used in a statute prohibiting any person from throwing into a river "refuse wood or timber of any sort," the term refers to the form or shape of the refuse, wood, or timber, and not the different kinds of wood. State v. Howard, 72 Me. 459, 464.

"Sorting" see In re Higgins, 50 Fed. 910, 912 [affirmed in 55 Fed. 278, 5 C. C. A. 104].

Clover v. Modern Woodmen of America, 142 Ill. App. 276, 280. See LIFE INSURANCE, 25 Cyc. 814 note 22.

"Sound memory and discretion," in the common law definition of murder, is a technical expression for a sound mind. Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. 161, 165. "'A person of sound memory and discretion is one who has sufficient knowledge to know and understand the nature of the act, and that it is a violation of his moral and social duty, and will subject him to punishment.'" Com. v. Moore, 2 Pittsb. (Pa.) 502, 503.

"Sound mind" is a phrase of two significations. In common parlance it means a mind of more than ordinary strength, discreet and well balanced. In law it means a mind not affected with insanity in any form. Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, 102. See also INSANE PERSONS, 22 Cyc. 1004; WILLS.

68. Bell v. Jeffreys, 35 N. C. 356, 357.

SOVEREIGNTY. The supreme power which governs the body politic or society that constitutes the state;[83] a term used to express the supreme political authority of an independent state or nation;[84] the aggregate of all civil and political power;[85] the supreme, absolute, uncontrollable power by which any state is governed;[86] that public authority which directs or orders what is to be done by each member associated, in relation to the end of the association.[87] (Sov-

77. Century Dict. See also Stager v. Harrington, 27 Kan. 414, 424.

As used in a deed describing the granted premises in general terms as reserving the wood and timber on the premises south of the meadow or lowland, the term should be construed as not designating the course of a boundary line, but to indicate the position of the reserved wood and timber, as compared with the meadow and lowland, and to except out of the grant all wood and timber growing southerly of, or more to the southward than the lowland between the two ascents. Cronin v. Richardson, 8 Allen (Mass.) 423, 424.

81. Webster New Int. Dict.

"Sovereign people" is a term which describes the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct of the government through their representatives. Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 404, 15 L. ed. 691.

"Sovereign power" refers to the people of the state in their sovereign capacity, acting through their representatives, the legislature. Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 96 Me. 234, 242, 52 Atl. 774. All the powers necessary to accomplish the legitimate ends of government must be sovereign, and therefore must exist in all practical governments. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 279, 309. "In all governments of constitutional limitations, sovereign power manifests itself in but three ways: By exercising the right of taxation; the right of eminent domain; and through its police power." U. S. v. Douglas-Willan Sartoris Co., 3 Wyo. 287, 297, 22 Pac. 92.

"Sovereign" right is a right which the state alone, or some of its governmental agencies, can possess. St. Paul v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 45 Minn. 387, 397, 48 N. W. 17.

"Sovereign state" is a term said to be appropriate when applied to an absolute despotism. Doe v. Buford, 1 Dana (Ky.) 481, 501, where it is said: "'Sovereign state' are cabalistic words, not understood by the disciple of liberty, who has been instructed in our constitutional schools."

It exacts undivided loyalty and allegiance to the client, equal to that demanded by the veriest despot that ever scourged a people. In that particular service his talents and skill are not his own; they are bought with a price. These he must bestow with all the zeal and earnestness of his nature, and in all the methods which truth and honesty can sanction. The obligation hath this extent; no greater."

In its technical signification, the term imports an instrument under seal for the payment of money. The term, it is true, is sometimes employed in a loose way of being invested with a more extensive meaning (Seymour v. Street, 5 Nebr. 85, 87; Doyle v. West, 60 Ohio St. 438, 447, 54 N. E. 469; Stockwell v. Coleman, 10 Ohio St. 33, 36); but, where precision is important, the term is used with the limited force just assigned to it (Elsasser v. Haines, 52 N. J. L. 10, 23, 18 Atl. 1095).

Stautory definition see Van Dyke v. Van Dyke, 123 Ga. 686, 691, 51 S. E. 582.

Under the common-law rule a seal made the instrument a specialty, and removed it from that class of writings known as "simple contracts." J. B. Streeter Co. v. Janu, 90 Minn. 393, 395, 96 N. W. 1128.

SPECIFICALLY. In a specific manner; according to the nature of the species or of the case; definitely; particularly; explicitly; in a particular sense, or with a particularly differentiated application.[51]

SPECIFIC APPROPRIATION. An act by which a named sum of money has been set apart in the treasury and devoted to the payment of a particular claim or demand;[52] a particular, a definite, a limited, a precise appropriation;[53] an appropriation expressly providing funds for a particular purpose.[54]

SPECIFICATIO. Literally "A making of form; a giving of form to materials." In the civil law, the mode of acquiring property through which a person, by transforming a thing belonging to another, especially by working up his materials into a new species, becomes proprietor of the same.[55]

SPECIFICATION. Distinct notation; determination by a particular mark of distinction; particular mention.[56] In the civil law, a method of acquiring property, when without the accession of any other material, that of another person which has been used by the operator innocently, has been converted by him into something specifically different in the inherent and characteristic qualities, which identify it.[57] (Specification: Of Errors — In Application in Probate Court, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 18 Cyc. 1210; In Briefs, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 2 Cyc. 1014; In Motion For New Trial, see NEW TRIAL, 29 Cyc. 942; In Notice of

I. PRELIMINARY MATTERS.

A. Definition and Outline of the Subject — 1. DEFINITION. Specific performance of contracts is an equitable remedy by which a party to a contract is compelled to do or omit [1] the very acts which he has undertaken to do or omit.[2]

2. ORIGIN. Specific performance of contracts is often spoken of as one of the most ancient heads of equity jurisdiction, but recent investigations have shown that only one undoubted instance of specific performance is to be found earlier than the middle of the fifteenth century.[3] It is ancient in a sense, however, as compared with many other branches of equity, in that the greater part of its rules were developed in much detail, and settled nearly in their present form, during the eighteenth century or within a few years after its close.

3. THE SUBJECT OUTLINED — a. Legal Essentials of the Contract. In general, the contract must have the essentials of a contract valid and binding at law in order to be enforceable in equity.[4] It must be a concluded contract;[5] there must have been a clear mutual understanding and a positive assent on both sides as to the terms of the contract;[6] it must be sufficiently definite and certain;[7] the parties must have the capacity to contract;[8] it must be upon a valuable consideration;[9] and it must not be illegal.[10]

b. Equitable Essentials. The general principle that equity will not exercise

1. Injunction.— The specific enforcement of contracts, express or implied, to refrain from doing acts is treated elsewhere. See INJUNCTIONS, 22 Cyc. 724.

2. Other definitions.— "Specific performance is a remedy for enforcing the equitable duties growing out of the alleged agreement." Smith v. Bradhurst, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 546, 549, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 1002.

"Specific performance is an equitable remedy, which compels the performance of a contract in the precise terms agreed upon, or such a substantial performance as will do justice between the parties under the circumstances of the case." Rison v. Newberry, 90 Va. 513, 521, 18 S. E. 916.

"'Specific performance,' as applied to contracts, has been defined: 'The actual accomplishment of a contract by the party bound to fulfill it; performance of a contract in the precise terms agreed upon; strict performance.'" Burton v. Vessels, 5 Del. Ch. 568, 572. And see Comer v. Bankhead, 70 Ala. 496, 496; Diamond State Iron Co. v. Todd, 6 Del. Ch. 163, 176, 14 Atl. 27.

Specific performance distinguished from redemption.— "Specific performance enforces a contract by giving a party something to which he had not title before. Redemption gives a party nothing new, but enforces his right to repurchase his own, incumbered for a debt. Redemption restores the parties to their former rights of property. Specific performance gives them new rights of property." Ryan, C. J., in Williams v. Williams, 50 Wis. 311, 316, 6 N. W. 814.

4. Contracts of corporations.— A parol agreement with the vice-president of a corporation for the purchase of a lot, which was never ratified or acquiesced in by its board of directors in such a way as to create an estoppel, does not entitle the other party to have such agreement performed by the corporation in equity. Mere declaration of intention.— A statement, in a general conversation, that the party making it had made up his mind to give a child a particular tract of land if she would stay with him, does not amount to a contract to convey, capable of being specifically enforced, but is no more than a declaration of an intention subject to change or abandonment. its jurisdiction when there is an adequate and complete remedy at law applies to the remedy of specific performance,[11] although in respect to the contract which furnishes the subject-matter of most specific performance suits it is taken for granted that the legal remedy is inadequate.[12] The exercise of the jurisdiction is further limited by a considerable number of equitable essentials or elements either in the contract itself or in the relations of the parties, which are broadly indicated by the phrase that specific performance, as distinguished from legal actions, rests in the sound judicial discretion of the court.[13] Several of these elements depend upon the nature of the decree, as contrasted with the legal remedy of damages. Thus the decree will not be granted, although plaintiff has a perfectly good cause of action for legal relief, when the situation is such that the decree is impossible of execution;[14] when it would be useless and nugatory, since defendant may by the terms of the contract at any time free himself from its obligation;[15] when it could not be enforced without taxing unduly the time of the court;[16] or when the court is unable to frame a decree, because the terms of the contract are so uncertain or incomplete that the court is unable to determine, with exactness, what relief is called for.[17] The equitable maxims, "He who seeks equity must do equity," and, "He who comes into equity must come with clean hands," give rise to a considerable number of defenses. The contract must not have been induced by fraud, actual[18] or constructive,[19] by misrepresentation,[20] or mistake;[21] it must not be unfair,[22] and the remedy must not be harsh in its operation upon defendant[23] or others.[24] The first maxim has a special application in the rule that the court, in making its decree, must be able to award its relief to defendant as well as to plaintiff;[25] and in the rule that the vendor, when plaintiff, must be able to convey a title to the vendee which will not expose the latter to litigation in its defense.[26]

c. Legal Requisites Relaxed. In several important respects the legal requisites to a legal remedy upon a contract are relaxed in equity. Equity often enforces contracts in the teeth of the statute of frauds, basing its action in such case on the supposed equities growing out of plaintiff's change of position in reliance on the contract.[27] It habitually gives the remedy to the plaintiff who has lost his legal remedy by a failure to perform his part at the date set by the contract,[28] applying in such case its own standards to measure the effect of the delay.[29] It dispenses with the legal essentials of a tender, wholly or partly.[30] In general it requires only a substantial, and not a literal, performance on plaintiff's part.[31]

B. Valuable Consideration[32] — 1. In General. As a general rule the contract must be founded upon a valuable consideration. A voluntary executory agreement is not enforced in equity. And the fact that the memorandum of the contract states a consideration is immaterial; the fact that no consideration exists may always be shown.[33] An apparent exception exists in the case of a promise

The court may of its own motion raise the question of the illegality of the contract. Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. 735, where a decree for specific performance was reversed on appeal, although defendant had never questioned the illegality of the contract. Compare, however, Rasch v. Jensen, (Iowa 1909) 120 N. W. 662, holding that in an action for specific performance of a contract to purchase land at a judicial sale and convey part thereof to plaintiff, the supreme court would not take note of the fact that the contract was against public policy because plaintiff was the referee at whose sale defendant purchased, where the parties themselves had not raised the point. Evans, C. J., dissented.

The court will not aid in the enforcement of an illegal contract, "even although the objectionable feature has been accomplished, and there remains only the distribution of the proceeds among the contracting parties." Volney v. Nixon, 68 N. J. Eq. 605, 60 Atl. 189 [affirming 67 N. J. Eq. 457, 58 Atl. 75].

Intention as to use of property.— It has been held that the purchaser's intention to use the premises contracted to be sold in the conduct of a business, lawful in itself, in an immoral manner, cannot be shown to defeat specific performance. Hamilton v. Bell, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 456, 84 S. W. 289.

Public necessity.—An illegal contract conferring a monopoly on plaintiff was nevertheless enforced for a limited time because of public necessity in Seattle Electric Co. v. Snoqualmie Falls Power Co., 40 Wash. 380, 82 Pac. 713, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 1032.

Conflict of laws.— The court may refuse to enforce a contract, although lawful and enforceable in the courts of the state or country in which it is entered into and to be performed, if it is against the public policy of the state in which it is sought to enforce it. the courts sometimes refuse to enforce specifically contracts tainted with champerty, although they may not be such as are prohibited by statute, or although an action might lie at law for a breach.[39] Where under the statute a bond given by a husband obligating himself to convey part of his homestead is void because not signed and separately acknowledged by his wife, it cannot be specifically enforced by the purchaser even as to the husband's interest.[40]

D. Discretion of the Court — 1. General Rule. The jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree the specific performance of contracts is not a matter of right in the parties to be demanded ex debito justitiæ, but applications invoking this power of the court are addressed to its sound and reasonable discretion, and are granted or rejected according to the circumstances of each case.[41] Specific performance is frequently refused, although the defense is not such as would warrant the rescission of the contract at the suit of the defendant.[42]

2. Discretion Not Arbitrary. This discretion is not an arbitrary or capricious one, but a sound judicial discretion, regulated by the established principles of equity.[43] Specific performance is not a matter of discretion in any peculiar sense, as contrasted with many other equitable remedies. While the relief is discretionary, "so are very many of the powers which courts of equity possess and exercise." [44] "The exercise of such discretionary powers by a court of equity is so far from being an objection, that it lies at the very foundation of all equity, and forms its most peculiar and excellent characteristic, as contradistinguished from the strict, precise and unyielding principles which govern in the courts of common law." 3. When the Remedy a Matter of Course. When a contract of which equity has jurisdiction conforms with certain equitable principles, which are quite limited in number, it is as much a matter of course for a court of equity to decree specific performance as for a court of law to give damages for breach of the contract.[46]

4. Application of the Principle — a. In General. The formula as to discretion therefore is habitually used by the courts simply to indicate that the case before the court is governed not by legal rules but by some equitable principle.[47] Thus the formula is frequently applied where the defense is plaintiff's fraud or misrepresentations,[48] or defendant's mistake;[49] or where the contract is incomplete or uncertain;[50] where enforcement of the contract in specie would be detrimental to the public welfare;[51] where the contract or the remedy lacks mutuality;[52] and where plaintiff has been guilty of laches.[53] It is also used more loosely in the tion or grace of the chancellor, this is more a form of expression than of accurate definition of the rights of the injured party." Edelen v. Samuels, 126 Ky. 295, 303, 103 S. W. 360, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 731. Such expressions as that the relief of specific performance is "altogether exceptional" (Rust v. Conrad, 47 Mich. 449, 11 N. W. 265, 41 Am. Rep. 720, Cooley, J.), or is "of grace" (Pennock v. Freeman, 1 Watts (Pa.) 401), are utterly extravagant and misleading. As a matter of fact, specific performance is far less "discretionary" than are several other equitable remedies; for instance, a preliminary injunction, or the appointment of a receiver. The body of precedents is so great, and the special rules deduced from them so numerous, that the cases are relatively infrequent in which the court is obliged to fall back upon general notions of abstract justice. sense that care and discrimination must be used is weighing the evidence.[54] Discretion, it is said, must be used, in determining whether the legal remedy is inadequate,[55] and whether the acts of part performance of a parol contract are sufficient.[56] Other defenses which are said to involve the exercise of discretion, some of them purely legal, are that the vendee plaintiff has elected to pursue his legal remedy for damages,[57] that the decree would call for an undue amount of supervision by the court;[58] non-performance by plaintiff;[59] that time is essential;[60] that the contract has been abandoned;[61] that the contract is a breach of trust;[62] or that the transaction is based on an illegal consideration.[63]

b. In Cases of Unfairness and Hardship. Where the ground of defense is the unfairness of the contract or the hardship of the remedy of specific performance, the court frequently exercises a discretion in the truest sense, since the great variety in the forms of unfairness and of hardship which have arisen for the consideration of the courts has prevented the establishment of many special rules or lines of precedent.[64]

5. Review by Appellate Court. The exercise of the court's discretion is subject to review by the appellate court.[65]

II. JURISDICTION IN GENERAL.

A. Contracts Concerning Land[66] — 1. In General. Where land or any estate or interest in land is the subject-matter of the agreement, the jurisdiction to enforce specific performance is undisputed, and does not depend upon the inadequacy of the legal remedy in the particular case.[67] It is as much a matter of course for courts of equity to decree a specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of real estate, which is in its nature unobjectionable, as it is for courts of law to give damages for its breach.[68] Equity adopts this principle, not because the land is fertile, or rich in minerals, but because it is land, a favorite and favored subject in England and every country of Anglo-Saxon origin. Land is assumed to have a peculiar value, so as to give an equity for specific performance, without reference to its quality or quantity.[69]

Although damages nominal.— That land is worth the exact contract price, so that for refusal by the vendor to perform the vendee's damages would be but nominal, is no ground for refusing specific performance. Bradford v. Smith, 123 Iowa 41, 98 N. W. 377.

Where vendee has agreed to sell.— But it has been held that where plaintiff (the vendee) alleges that he has entered into a binding contract to convey the land to another for a specified price, and seeks conveyance from defendant, who is solvent, for that sole purpose, he shows that the legal remedy of damages is adequate, and his bill should be dismissed. There is probably more historical accuracy in this explanation (see Pomeroy Eq. Jur. § 1250, as to the origin of the grantor's lien) than in the following often quoted passages: "A court of equity decrees performance of a contract for land, not because of the real nature of the land, but because damages at law, which must be calculated upon the general money-value of the land, may not be a complete remedy to the purchaser, to whom the land may have a peculiar and special value." The failure of these reasons in the individual instance does not affect the rule. See cases

2. Illustrations — a. Kinds of Contracts Enforced. Subject to the requirements enumerated later,[70] the form of the instrument embodying the contract is wholly unimportant.[71] Bonds conditioned to convey land, or "title bonds," are a common form in this country and will be specifically enforced, although they contain no express covenant or agreement to convey.[72] So a contract to purchase land, made by a bid at an auction sale and evidenced by the auctioneer's memorandum, will be enforced;[73] likewise partition agreements among coöwners;[74] a partnership agreement under which one partner is entitled to a conveyance from the other of his interest in partnership property;[75] contracts for the exchange of lands;[76] compromise agreements concerning land;[77] an option in the purchaser of land to purchase adjacent lands;[78] a covenant to reconvey on the grantee's failure to perform certain conditions;[79] an agreement by a mortgagee to reconvey;[80] or a contract to make a specified final disposition of property by will.[81] A defective deed is frequently treated as a contract to convey.[82]

b. Interests in Land. Among the contracts enforced besides the ordinary contract for sale and purchase of the fee are those for the sale or grant of easements, as a right of way,[83] or the right to work minerals in the land;[84] sale of trees growing on a certain tract of land,[85] of the undivided moiety of a tenant in common,[86] of an equitable interest,[87] of a right of preëmption,[88] of an expectancy;[89] and, it seems, of a mere possessory interest.[90] Agreements to give or renew a lease are of frequent enforcement.[91] And a contract to assign the good-will of a lease, that is, the reasonable expectation of its renewal, has been enforced.[92] An agreement for the digging of stone will be specifically enforced, whether it be a mere license to dig or a lease.[93] Where a deed contains a building line restriction, based on a valuable consideration, and intended to be for the benefit of the promisees as owners of the neighboring land and the subsequent owners thereof, the restriction is a right in the nature of an easement, and is a proper subject of specific performance.[94]

B. Contracts Not Concerning Land[95] — 1. In General Not Specifically Enforced — a. adequate remedy for the breach of the contract. In the case of ordinary chattels, the recovery of damages calculated upon the market price of the goods places the purchaser in as advantageous a position as would a decree in equity; inasmuch as, with the damages, he may purchase the same quantity of the like goods.[96] A court of equity therefore will not, unless there is some special reason, specifically enforce a contract for the sale of ordinary articles of commerce, such as cotton,[97] cattle,[98] logs or lumber,[99] whisky,[1] bar-room fixtures,[2] or a fruit business and stock in trade.[3] A contract for the sale of growing timber is sometimes treated as one for an interest in land.[4] If timber be considered personal property, damages

Statutes.—Cal. Civ. Code, § 3384, provides that except as otherwise provided in this article, specific performance of an obligation may be compelled. Section 3387 provides that it is to be presumed that the breach of an agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately relieved by pecuniary compensation, and that the breach of an agreement to transfer personal property can be thus relieved. See Fleishman v. Woods, 135 Cal. 256, 67 Pac. 276; Krouse v. Woodward, 110 Cal. 638, 42 Pac. 1084. See also S. D. Rev. Civ. Code, § 2341; Lumley v. Miller, (S. D. 1909) 119 N. W. 1014. Ga. Civ. Code, § 4036, provides that specific performance of a contract, if within the power of the party, will be decreed, generally, whenever the damages recoverable at law would not be an adequate compensation for the non-performance. See Carolee v. Handelis, 103 Ga. 299, 29 S. E. 935.

are usually an adequate relief;[5] but under some circumstances such contracts have been enforced.[6] Jurisdiction to compel specific performance does not rest upon any distinction between real and personal estate, but on the ground that damages at law will not afford a complete remedy.[7] An agreement to pay for an article in the products thereof will not generally be specifically enforced, but the remedy is by an action at law to recover the price in money.[8]

b. To Borrow or Lend Money. An agreement to borrow a sum of money and give security for it cannot be specifically enforced, since plaintiff's loss by failure to get as good an investment for his money as that contracted for is a mere matter of calculation for a jury.[9] And an agreement to lend money, whether on security or not, cannot be specifically enforced.[10]

c. To Pay Money.[11] Contracts which are essentially for the payment of money merely, and therefore not within the jurisdiction,[12] include an agreement to give plaintiff a written statement as evidence of his right to recover money;[13] to pay money in gold or silver coin;[14] or to pay money in instalments.[15] Where the charter of a corporation requires its contracts to be sealed, the fact that for want of this formality a contract for the payment of money is not enforceable at law does not give rise to an equity for its specific performance.[16] Where the court has jurisdiction on other grounds it may order payment of money in pursuance of a contract by way of complete relief.[17]

d. Where Plaintiff Has Put His Price on the Article. Where the party who seeks to recover a chattel of such a character that a court of equity would ordinarily decree its delivery to him has himself set a price upon it in dealings with another the ground of equity jurisdiction fails.[18]

2. Where the Specific Thing Is Desired — a. In General. If the specific thing contracted for is desired by plaintiff, if it cannot be duplicated, and if his reason for desiring it or the other circumstances of the case are such that money damages would not be an adequate compensation to him for its loss, equity will decree its delivery to him. The jurisdiction for this purpose is an outgrowth of, and closely connected with, the remedy for the delivery up of chattels of this special nature tortiously withheld from their owners. In such cases the legal remedies of replevin and detinue are subject to defects of procedure which prevent the successful plaintiff from invariably recovering possession of the chattel.[19] As the equitable remedies, whether for tort or breach of contract, are of the same nature and governed by the same rules, cases illustrating them will be cited indiscriminately.[20]

b. Chattels Having a Sentimental Value — (i) In General. A chattel may have a special value to the owner because of his sentimental interest in it — a pretium affectionis. The verdict of a jury in such a case for the value of the chattel to the ordinary person is obviously an inadequate remedy. "It would be great injustice, if an individual cannot have his property without being liable to the estimate of people, who have not his feelings upon it." [21]

(ii) Slaves. The principle was well illustrated by cases in the southern states for the recovery of slaves. The rule became well established in several of the states that prima facie the slave had a pretium affectionis in the eyes of his owner, and that equity would entertain jurisdiction of a suit for the recovery of a slave as a matter of course, unless it were shown that he was desired as a chattel simply, and had no value to plaintiff other than his market value.[22] In other states plaintiff was compelled, as in the case of other chattels, to show circumstances rendering the legal remedy inadequate.[23]

c. Unique or Rare Chattels. Chattels, such as valuable paintings and works of art, curiosities, antiquities, etc., which by their nature cannot be duplicated, have frequently been decreed to be delivered in specie.[24]

Importance of these cases.— It should be remarked that these cases are by no means obsolete. The general discussions in several of them of the grounds of the jurisdiction in suits to compel specific performance of contracts are most exhaustive, interesting, and instructive.

d. Ships. Contracts for the sale of ships have been enforced specifically both in England and in the United States.[25]

e. Documents. The jurisdiction extends to the delivery of deeds, title-papers, private letters, promissory notes, and other documents of special value to the complainant.[26]

f. Patent Rights and Copyrights. It is well established that an agreement to assign or reassign a patent right or an interest therein will be specifically enforced. The grounds of the jurisdiction are that a patent is in its very nature a unique thing which money compensation would not enable plaintiff to duplicate; and that damages for breach of the contract would often be difficult to estimate.[27] Courts of equity have also compelled specific performance of agreements to reassign patent rights [28] and other agreements relating to patents.[29] For similar reasons agreements to assign copyrights have been specifically enforced.[30]

3. Where Articles of the Desired Kind Cannot Be Obtained Elsewhere — a. In General. In the foregoing examples the contract related to a specific or identified subject-matter.[31] Where, on the other hand, the contract would be substantially satisfied by the delivery of any articles of a particular class, kind, or description, specific performance is not readily obtained.[32] The legal remedy ceases to be adequate, however, in many cases where, so far as plaintiff is concerned, defendant has a practical monopoly of the kind of article which plaintiff desires.[33]

b. Defendant Having Practical Monopoly of Necessary Articles. If the articles are necessary to plaintiff's business and defendant has a practical monopoly of them in the locality, and they cannot be obtained elsewhere save at a considerable expense or loss, the amount of which cannot be estimated in advance, the case is a proper one for specific performance.[34]

29. Agreements to make application for a foreign patent and assign it, when obtained (Adams v. Messinger, 147 Mass. 185, 17 N. E. 491, 9 Am. St. Rep. 679), to assign the right to obtain a patent (Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, 128 Fed. 444 [affirmed in 137 Fed. 403, 71 C. C. A. 207, 2 L. R. A. N. S. 1172], to assign rights in a patented invention (Valley Iron Works Mfg. Co. v. Goodrich, 103 Wis. 436, 78 N. A. 498), and not to infringe (American Box Mach. Co. v. Crosman, 57 Fed. 1021), have been enforced. An agreement by one employed as a machinist to invent, perfect, and improve lubricating valves, force-feed oil pumps, etc., which his employer is engaged in manufacturing, and that whatever inventions or devices may result from such employment in the nature of tools, machinery, etc., to be used in connection with the employer's business shall, at the employer's request, be protected by patents and become the employer's property, will be specifically enforced. Detroit Lubricator Co. v. Lavigne, 151 Mich. 650, 115 N. W. 988. And see Mississippi Glass Co. v. Franzen, 143 Fed 501, 74 C. C. A. 135; Thibodeau v. Hildreth, 124 Fed. 892, 60 C. C. But an agreement by a licensee to account for royalties and to permit inspection of his books was not specifically enforced, as there was an adequate remedy at law, and under U. S. Rev. St. § 724, a production of the books could be had. Brewster v. Tutbill Spring Co., 34 Fed. 769.

c. As to Convenience of Location. The mere fact, however, that the articles are more conveniently located for plaintiff's purposes than are other sources of supply does not afford a ground for the jurisdiction.[35]

4. Shares of Stock — a. Stock Readily Procured in Market. By the rule in this country, specific performance will not be decreed if the stock is one which is the subject of every-day sale in the market, so that its value can be readily and certainly ascertained.[36]

b. Stock Having no Market Value and Not Readily Procurable. When, however, this is not the case, where the stock has no market value and cannot be readily obtained except from a party to the contract, by the prevailing rule in this country specific performance may be had.[37]

Oregon.— St. David's Parish v. Wood, 24 Oreg. 396, 34 Pac. 18, 41 Am. St. Rep 860. In this case defendant agreed to furnish from his quarry the necessary stone for a church building, but after the building was two-thirds completed, discontinued performance. To use stone from any other quarry would destroy the beauty of the building. It was held that defendant should be compelled to furnish the stone necessary to complete the building.

Pennsylvania.— Strause v. Berger, 220 Pa. St. 367, 69 Atl. 818, holding that specific performance of an oral contract for the sale of standing timber would be enforced where the timber had a special value to the purchaser because of the difficulty of procuring such timber in the locality in which his business is conducted.

Porto Rico.—Central Altagracia v. Javierre, 3 Porto Rico 256, holding that a contract to deliver to a sugar factory sugar cane growing on a near-by tract, the loss of which would cause the factory to close down, would be specifically enforced.

Sale of interest in business.— For similar reasons, a contract by the administrators of plaintiffs' deceased partner in a manufacturing business to sell them his interest in the business was specifically enforced, as enabling plaintiffs to continue without interruption a business to which they had contributed most of the capital. Ralston v Ihmsen, 204 Pa. St. 588, 54 Atl. 365. See also Brady v. Yost, 6 Ida 273, 55 Pac. 542, sale of material and fixtures constituting a newspaper publishing plant.

Award of personal property used in the business.—An award divided the assets of a partnership in the tanning business, giving plaintiff one half the skins in the yard, one half the leather, and the use of one half the vats, things essential to the prosecution of plaintiff's business. A bill for specific performance was sustained, since a court of law could not look to the loss of profits which plaintiff might sustain by a failure to perform in specie. Kirksey v. Fike, 27 Ala. 383, 62 Am. Dec. 768.

Sale of stock of goods for a lump sum.— With these cases may, perhaps, be classed a peculiar case of the purchase of a stock of merchandise for a lump sum, which was paid, where defendant delivered two thirds of the goods, but refused to deliver and secreted the remainder, thereby making the remedy of replevin impossible. The court decreed specific performance, rejecting any possible reasons for its decision other than the reasons that the sale was for a lump sum and had been partly carried out. Special circumstances may give equity jurisdiction. Thus relief was given to one who had subscribed for stock in a railroad project, against parties who had agreed to take a portion off his hands; since subscribers to such a project "were taking upon themselves very heavy burdens, with a dim prospect of future advantage." "The allegation that the value of the stock is uncertain and not easily ascertainable brings the case within the class of exceptional cases where there is not an adequate remedy at law. The true standing of a corporation is seldom known outside of its own officers. A stranger would, in most cases, find it difficult, if not impossible, to prove the real value of its stock, unless it is one that is rated and for sale in the market. He has no access to its books; he cannot know its assets and liabilities; and, although he is willing to take the stock for a price, he might be quite unable to prove that it was worth that or any other price." Manton v. Ray, 18 R. I. 672, 674, 29 Atl. 998, 49 Am. St. Rep. 811.

"If it be assumed that the stock cannot be obtained elsewhere than of the respondent, and that he has made a valid contract for this particular stock, it is also to be assumed that he wants this stock in specie." Manton v. Ray, 18 R. I. 672, 674, 29 Atl. 998, 49 Am. St. Rep. 811.

The contract will be enforced where there is none of the stock on the market and no available way of proving the value of the stock or the amount of damages from the breach of contract (Dennison v. Keasby, 200 Mo. 408, 98 S. W. 546 [affirming (App. 1904) 78 S. W. 1041]); or where the stock has no quoted value or any definite market price, or any certain value capable of exact ascertainment, and cannot be obtained except from defendant (Butler v. Wright, 186 N. Y. 259, 78 N. E. 1002 [reversing 103 N. Y. App. Div. 463, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 113], apparently relaxing the stringency of the rule laid down in a number of decisions by inferior courts, for which see next note).

In Pennsylvania the test laid down in Rigg v. Reading, etc., St. R. Co., 191 Pa. St. 298, 43 Atl. 212 (see next note) seems to be abandoned. If defendant owns or controls nearly all the stock, that is a sufficient ground for the relief (Northern Cent. R. Co. v. Walworth, 193 Pa. St. 207, 44 Atl. 253, 74 Am. St. Rep. 683, ignoring the Rigg case decided five months before); or where the stock, having no ascertainable market value, specific performance of the contract will give plaintiff control of the corporation (Rumsey v. New York, etc., R. Co., 203 Pa. St. 579, 53 Atl. 495); or the stock, having no such value, yet has a special value to plaintiff (Eichbaum v. Sample, 213 Pa. St. 216, 62 Atl. 837).

Mining stock.— Stocks of mining corporations in the western states are as a class a fit subject-matter for specific performance, owing to their great fluctuations in value, the difficulty of substantiating that value by competent evidence, etc. Treasurer v. Commercial Coal Min. Co., 23 Cal. 390; Frue v. Houghton, 6 Colo. 318; Rau v. Seidenberg, 53 Misc. (N. Y.) 386, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 798. See also Johnson v. Brooks, 93 N. Y. 337 [affirming 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 13].

Presumption and proof.— It will not be presumed that the shares of stock in what is known as a close corporation can either be procured in the market, or that they have any market value, and, where their procurement and market value comes in question, proof of those facts will be required. Safford v. Barber, (N. J. Ch. 1908) 70 Atl. 371.

It is not essential to the statement of a good cause of action for specific performance sale in the market, as that the stock is of peculiar value to him, or that he needs it in specie, or that its value cannot be estimated in damages.[38]

d. Plaintiff Desiring Control of Corporation. Where the contract calls for the transfer of sufficient stock to make plaintiff the owner of one half of the entire stock, so that its chief value to him is the power and influence given in the management of the corporation, this, in connection with the uncertain value of the stock, is a sufficient ground for specific performance.[39]

e. English Rule. In England the rule is more liberal; contracts for the sale of shares in private companies, even though such shares are constantly dealt with in the market and their price is thus ascertainable, are specifically enforced.[40]

Review of authorities.— In Eckstein v. Downing, 64 N. H. 248, 9 Atl. 626, 10 Am. St. Rep. 404, specific performance was refused because there was no evidence that plaintiff had any wish to become owner of the stock in question rather than any other stock of equal value, or a sum of money. In Rigg v. Reading, etc., R. Co., 191 Pa. St. 298, 304, 43 Atl. 212, the court says: "But it was not intended to hold [in Foll's Appeal, 91 Pa. St. 437] that there was no certainty as to price, except when established by a stock board or auctioneer's sale. The value of a corporation's stock not listed or otherwise offered at public sale depends upon the value of the franchise, improvements, and earning power, present and future, of the corporate property. There is no inadequacy of remedy at law because of mere conflict of testimony as to value; in all such cases, proximate truth or fact is deducible from evidence. Not so with the value of a picture, heir-loom, ancient manuscript or the like." In Hyer v. Richmond Traction Co., 168 U. S. 471, 18 S. Ct. 114, 42 L. ed. 547, also, it was said that the value of stock may be estimated from the present value of the franchise. Later cases, both in New York and Pennsylvania, seem to have returned to the less stringent test. See supra, note 37.

Where the stock has never been sold and hence has no market value whatever, an action for damages at law is an inadequate remedy. Selover v. Isle Harbor Land Co., 91 Minn. 451, 98 N. St. Regis Paper Co. v. Santa Clara Lumber Co., supra, involved the sale of a certain quantity of pulp wood annually from a certain tract. The possibilities of destruction of the timber by fire or the taking of the land by the state in the exercise of eminent domain prevented an accurate computation of the damages.

Other contracts lasting over a long period. — A contract to give plaintiff, owner of a grain elevator, the handling of all through grain carried by defendant railroad, and pay a specified commission per bushel, was not specifically enforced, since plaintiff's damages could easily be computed by ascertaining the amount of grain carried by defendant. Insolvency is a statutory ground in Maryland. Acts (1888), p. 415, c. 263 (Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 16, § 199) provide that specific performance shall not be refused on the ground of an adequate remedy in damages, unless the resisting party shows property from which the damages may be made, and gives a prescribed bond. Neal v. Parker, 98 Md. 254, 57 Atl. 213.

Defendant's insolvency ground for refusing specific performance.—A strong reason against admitting defendant's insolvency as a ground of jurisdiction is that such a rule results in making plaintiff in the suit against the insolvent a preferred creditor. For this reason a number of cases have taken a different view of defendant's insolvency from that stated in the text, and have made it a reason for refusing specific performance, in a case where it would have been granted against a solvent defendant. 10. Jurisdiction Taken Because Defendant Entitled to the Remedy — a. In General. Although the substantial relief actually sought by plaintiff is a recovery of money, still, if the subject-matter of the contract is such that defendant may have it specifically enforced against plaintiff, then plaintiff is entitled to specific performance against defendant, since upon a contract mutually binding "there ought to be mutual remedies." [49]

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 197.

Damages an inadequate remedy to vendor.— It is sometimes urged as an explanation of the rule of the text that the vendor's remedy at law is inadequate, since it consists in the recovery of damages, often more or less conjectural because of the frequent difficulty of proving the actual value of land, representing the difference between the stipulated price and the market value of the land; whereas in equity the complainant recovers the whole purchase-money. Fry Spec. Perf. § 23; Hodges v. Kowing, 58 Conn. 12, 18 Atl. 979, 7 L. R. A. 87; Maryland Clay Co. v. Simpers, 96 Md. 1, 53 Atl. 424; Old Colony R. Corp. v. Evans, 6

And on the same ground the relief by specific performance is given to a vendor of leasehold interests,[51] or of an undivided interest.[52] In a few states, where the general jurisdiction of equity is restricted by statute to cases where the legal remedy is inadequate, it has been held that a vendor of land cannot sue for specific performance unless he shows that for some reason he has no adequate remedy at law.[53] By the practice in many states, the decree is in the alternative, that if the vendee refuses to accept a conveyance and pay the purchase-price, the land shall be sold to satisfy the vendor's so-called "lien," and that execution shall issue for any unsatisfied balance of the purchase-money remaining after the sale of the land.[54]

c. Vendor of Chattels, Etc. Specific performance may also be had in many jurisdictions of contracts for the sale of chattels,[55] things in action, etc., in those

Rep. 609; Lewis v. Lechmere, 10 Mod. 503, 88 Eng. Reprint 828. One objection to this reason is, that it would apply with equal reason to nearly all contracts for the sale and purchase of ordinary chattels and render them a subject of equity jurisdiction. Another objection is, that it would not apply to the numerous cases in this country, where notes for the purchase-money have been given, and where the remedy at law upon the notes would seem to be complete. Paris v. Haley, 61 Mo. 453, 458. Other reasons why the vendor's legal remedy is inadequate are stated in Gregorie v. Bulow, Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. C.) 235. A city contracted to purchase plaintiff's waterworks at a price named on their productive worth to be determined by appraisers. An action at law for the price was not an adequate remedy: (1) Because it would involve an accounting of the income and expenses of the company, which a court of equity is alone competent to take; and (2) because the company could not abandon the works and bring its action at law, since that would be against public interest. Castle Creek Water Co. v. Aspen, 146 Fed. 8, 76 C. C. A. 516.

The doctrine of "equitable conversion," by which the vendee is deemed a "trustee" of the purchase-price for the vendor, while the vendor's position has analogies to that of trustee of the land, in some respects, and to that of a mortgagee, in many respects, furnishes a further reason for the rule. Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Cas. 331, 24 L. J. Ch. 601, 3 Wkly. Rep. 609, 10 Eng. Reprint 928; Lewis v. Lechmere, 10 Mod. 503, 88 Eng. Reprint 828. But the doctrine of equitable conversion not applying to a contract for the sale of chattels, it furnishes no explanation of the numerous cases which enforce specific performance of such contracts. It is more accurate to consider equitable conversion as springing from the right to specific performance than as giving rise to that right. See Pooley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34, 51 Eng. Reprint 200.

(Pa.) 27 (holding that the vendor is entitled to specific performance where he has performed so much of his part of the agreement that he cannot be put in statu quo); Dalzell v. Crawford, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 37, 2 Pa. L. J. 17 (legal remedy inadequate, where price payable in instalments).

Under such a restrictive statute specific performance was refused to the vendor of a contract by which the vendee was to pay instalments of the purchase-money, and the vendor to convey a proportionate part of the property, since the remedy at law would be the same as in equity, and not a mere recovery of damages. Jones v. Newhall, 115 Mass. 244, 15 Am. Rep. 97.

Apart from such a statute, it has been held that the contract of a bidder at a foreclosure sale should not be enforced by an action but by a motion to complete the sale, which is, in substance, a summary process to compel specific performance. d. To Insure. An agreement to issue a policy of insurance may be specifically enforced,[68] although the loss has already occurred; and in the latter case, the court, having acquired jurisdiction of the cause, will retain it for the purpose of adjusting the loss and awarding damages.[69]

e. Various Contracts Relating to Judgments. The agreement of a judgment creditor of a third person, for a consideration, to satisfy and discharge his judgment, is capable of specific enforcement; [70] and the same is true of an agreement to apply on a judgment debt uncertain and unascertained items of set-off,[71] or to accept chattels in satisfaction of a judgment at an agreed valuation, and credit them on the judgment.[72]

f. Contracts Between Husband and Wife. Antenuptial or post-nuptial contracts between husband and wife invalid at law but valid in equity may be specifically enforced, although relating to personal property.[73] And separation agreements have also been enforced.[74]

g. Miscellaneous Contracts. The following contracts, not readily admitting of classification, have been specifically enforced: A contract giving the right of preëmption of a share in a partnership;[75] an agreement to deliver up and cancel certain promissory notes made by plaintiff, although they were overdue and incapable of transfer to his prejudice;[76] a contract for the settlement of pending suits between the parties;[77] an agreement to indorse part payments made by plaintiff on a promissory note not yet due;[78] the contract of a city to convert its coupon bonds into registered bonds at the option of the holder;[79] a creditor's agreement to compromise actions against an estate on payment of a sum of money, such agreement not being a legal defense to such actions;[80] an agreement to consent to the sale of property owned in common by plaintiff and defendant;[81] a contract between an executor and the legatees for a division of the estate, the giving of receipts, and the discharge of the executor;[82] an agreement to levy assessments on the members of a mutual benefit association for the beneficiaries of deceased members;[83] and an agreement to furnish a certain quantity of water necessary for irrigation purposes, regardless of the question whether the contract concerned land or not.[84] Citizens of a city may sue to compel a telephone company to exercise its franchise by operating its plant; the franchise being granted by the city for the citizens' benefit and in consideration of the service to be furnished them, and the remedy at law in behalf of the citizens for the company's breach of contract being inadequate.[85]

C. Awards. As respects the jurisdiction of equity for their enforcement, awards stand upon the same footing as contracts. An award supposes an agreement between the parties, and contains no more than the terms of that agreement as ascertained by a third person.[86] A party may therefore obtain the specific per-

Award not constituting a contract.— But it has been held that an award whereby an uncertain division line between adjoining tracts is identified and made certain as to its location is not a contract for the sale of land, since it does not call for any conveyance, and that there is no jurisdiction in equity to decree its specific performance. Orr v. Cox, 61 W. Va. 361, 56 S. E. 522.

Delay in making award.—An agreement for the conveyance of land at a price to be fixed by an arbitrator named in the agreement will not be specifically enforced unless the award is made within a reasonable time; and a delay of six months in making the award when the value of the land is rapidly increasing is unreasonable. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 19 Fed. 5.

Defects in appraisement.— Specific performance will not be decreed of an agreement to convey a tract of land by warranty deed, with covenants against encumbrances, at a price to be appraised by an arbitrator, unless the award of the arbitrator appraises the entire tract without reference to easements and other encumbrances thereon. But under the peculiar circumstances of the case, a money decree was made, on an award directing that judgment should be entered in a pending suit, but by defendant's to escape performance by offering to pay the penalty or submit to the forfeiture.[91] But it has been held that where a condition in a deed, as distinguished from a covenant, is secured by a provision for a forfeiture in case of non-performance, it cannot be specifically enforced, as the grantor has fixed his remedy and must avail himself of it.[92] If plaintiff has claimed the forfeit on breach by defendant, he is not entitled to also have specific performance.[93]

2. Liquidated Damages. Although the contract contains a provision for liquidated damages in case of a breach, where such provision is intended merely to secure performance, and not to give an option either to perform or to pay damages, the court, as in the case of a penalty, will disregard the provision and enforce performance, if the contract is one that falls within its jurisdiction.[94] But plaintiff is not entitled to both the stipulated damages and specific performance.[95]

3. Alternative Contract. Where, however, the contract was intended to give defendant the choice between two courses, the performance of certain acts or the payment of a sum of money, equity will not decree the performance of the acts, but will leave plaintiff to his legal remedy for the recovery of the money.[96]

Kansas.— Barker v. Critzer, 35 Kan. 459, 11 Pac. 382.

Whether the contract gives defendant this choice of alternatives is a question of intent, to be ascertained from the whole instrument.[97]

III. JURISDICTION LIMITED BY NATURE OF DECREE.

A. Impossibility of Performance — 1. IN GENERAL. The total incapacity of defendant to perform the relief sought is a defense. The court from motives of expediency and policy will not render a decree which defendant is unable to obey.[98] A contract, to be specifically enforceable, must be such as can be enforced in its entirety; a partial enforcement by piecemeal not sufficing.[99]

2. CONTRACTS OF MARRIED WOMEN. Equity will not enforce the contract of a married woman which she has no power under statutes or general principles of equity to make.[1]

3. SUBJECT-MATTER NOT IN EXISTENCE. The court will not make a decree where

That defendants have been collusively enjoined, in another suit, from conveying, is not a defense. Bowen v. Irish Presb. Cong., 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 245.

Encumbrance.—Where an owner of mortgaged premises contracted to convey the same to another free of encumbrance, and was unable to discharge the mortgage and purchaser insisted on a conveyance free of encumbrance, and expressed no willingness to accept the encumbered title, specific performance was properly refused. Saxon v. White, 21 Okla. 194, 95 Pac. 783. Compare Roche v. Osborne, (N. J. Ch. 1905) 69 Atl. 176.

Construction of siding by railroad company. — In Whalen v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 108 Md. 11, 69 Atl. 390, 17 L. R. A. N. S. 130, a railroad company covenanted to construct and maintain a siding at a designated place, and to stop its trains there for passengers and freight. The company, for the purpose of straightening its main line and bettering its road-bed and service, changed the location of its main line, and thereby left the siding a quarter of a mile from the main line. It was impossible to construct a siding on the new line. It was held that equity would not compel the company to maintain a train service over the abandoned line past the siding, and relief must be sought in a court of law for damages.

the subject-matter is not in existence, or has been destroyed, so that performance by defendant is physically impossible.[2]

4. Consent of Third Person Necessary. Where defendant cannot perform without obtaining the consent of a third person, who is free to withhold his consent, and does withhold it, the decree will not be made.[3] This rule applies where the contract calls for acts to be done on the land of another than the vendor.[4] But it is no objection to the specific enforcement of a contract that consent of a third person is necessary to its performance, where it shows that he does or will consent.[5]

Rep. 871 (where, on a bill for the specific performance of a contract for the sale and exchange of city property, it appeared that complainant was to have certain policies of insurance on the buildings held by him assigned to defendant, who repudiated the contract, but the evidence showed that the insurance agent consented to the transfers, and it was held that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it would be presumed

5. Where Defendant Has no Title — a. In General. The plaintiff cannot have a decree for specific performance of a contract to convey when defendant, at the time of the hearing, has no title or means of compelling a conveyance of the title. The court cannot compel defendant to purchase a title from a stranger.[6] The rule applies where the vendor has a legal but no equitable title, having made a prior valid and recorded contract to sell to another.[7] But it does not apply the agent was willing to make the necessary indorsements of consent to their transfer); Bennett v. Abrams, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 619; Jacobson v. Rechnitz, 46 Misc. (N. Y.) 135, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 173 (holding that where, in a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey real estate or, if that turn out on the trial to be impossible, for other equitable relief if any there be, it appeared that defendant had agreed to procure the cancellation of a lease that was on the property before a day certain, and that the lessee would vacate before that time, the fact that the cancellation of the lease must be by act of the lessee did not make the complaint bad); Arnold v. Hull, 7 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 47. In the case last cited, in a contract for the sale of property, it was agreed to be paid for, in part, by an assignment of a mortgage to be obtained from a third party. Afterward the purchaser alleged the refusal of the mortgagee to assign. The court, under the circumstances, refused to decree specific performance, but directed an inquiry, whether or not the mortgagee was still willing and able to assign the mortgage.

Demurrer to complaint.— The fact that a complaint shows that full performance depends on the consent of a third person does not render it demurrable, since non constat but such consent may be obtained. One who agrees to assign to another any patents that he may obtain for improvements in certain machines, and who afterward invents such an improvement, and, with intent to evade his agreement and to defraud the other party, procures a patent for his invention to be obtained upon the application of a third person, and to be issued to him as assignee of that person, cannot be compelled in equity to assign the patent, for in such case the patent confers no title on him. But it has been held that when a party has given his obligation for a conveyance of land, he cannot set up an executory contract, in which he was the obligor, and which he has never executed, as a ground for refusing specific performance. Oldham v. Faris, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 405.

Prior sale or contract known to plaintiff.— An agreement to convey land made by one who has previously bound himself by contract, of which the purchaser has notice, to convey the same land to another, will not be specifically enforced. Abbott v. Baldwin, 61 N. H. 583. And see White v. Gilbert, 39 Miss. 802.

Legal title held by defendant as security only.— Where a party purchasing land of one clothed with the legal title has notice, actual or constructive, that another owns it, and that the vendor holds the legal title as a

where the vendor is the equitable owner, as where he holds the agreement of the owner of the legal title to convey to him, and such owner is joined as a party to the suit.[8] A contract for the purchase of standing timber cannot be specifically enforced by the purchaser, where the owner has parted with title before suit was brought.[9]

b. Subsequent Bona Fide Purchase. No decree for specific performance can be rendered where defendant, after the contract, has conveyed the legal title to a bona fide purchaser for value.[10]

c. Title Acquired After Contract. The vendor, if he is able to convey a title at the time of the hearing, will not be heard to say that he had no title at the time of the contract. The vendee may have the benefit of his after-acquired title.[11]

6. Alternative Contracts — a. One Alternative Impossible. Where a contract gives defendant the choice of two alternatives, and one of them is void for uncertainty,[12] or fails by reason of defendant's having disabled himself from performing it,[13] or fails by the act of a third party without collusion with plaintiff,[14] equity will enforce the other alternative, if in its nature it is a fit subject for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction.

b. Where Defendant Fails to Elect. If the contract is in the alternative, and the party having the right of election fails, for a considerable length of time to exercise it, the right to elect shifts to the other party; and if such other party elects to receive land or a mortgage on land, he may have specific performance.[15]

7. Where Term of Contract Has Expired. If the contract calls for acts to be done by defendant within a limited time, and this time limit is an essential part of the contract, specific performance will not be granted, if the time has expired before the decree can be made. This rule is applied to contracts to lease, or to assign an interest in a patent, etc.[16]

B. Where Decree Would Be Nugatory — 1. In General. The court will not make a decree to establish any given relation between two parties which either party has the power immediately to put an end to, and so make the order nugatory.[17]

2. Partnership at Will. An agreement to enter into a partnership at will or for an indefinite period will not be enforced in equity, since such partnership may be immediately dissolved by either party.[18]

3. Contract to Take Shares in Joint Stock Company. In analogy to the case of a partnership at will, an agreement to take shares in a joint stock company, where the shareholder may immediately retire from the company and thus "annihilate" his shares, will not be specifically enforced.[19] It is otherwise if the shareholder has no power to "annihilate" his shares but can get rid of them only by transferring them to another.[20]

C. Where Decree Could Not Conveniently Be Enforced — 1. In General. In all the preceding instances of specific performance the court is called upon to decree the performance of a single, definite act, or at most a small number of definite acts. The court can have no difficulty in deciding, once for all, whether, for instance, its decree ordering the execution and delivery of a deed with prescribed covenants, or the transfer of a chattel, or the payment of a sum of money, has been properly performed. There remains a wide range of contracts, the specific performance of which is usually denied, because to determine whether its decree has been, or is being, properly obeyed would impose upon the court an amount of labor and investigation that would interfere with its duties to other

Lease.—A lease of land to another to prospect for oil or gas, which provides that the lessee, upon payment of a dollar, may surrender the lease, although not void ab initio for want of mutuality, deprives the party for whose benefit it is made of relief in the nature of specific performance, since, if such relief were granted, the lessee could nullify the decree by exercising his option, and equity will not do a vain thing by settling the rights of parties which one of them may set aside at will. suitors, and in some instances would call for a degree of expert knowledge which neither the court nor its officers can be expected to possess.[21] In other instances the acts, although not necessarily numerous or complicated, are of such a kind, so dependent upon the will or good faith of the contracting party, that their proper performance cannot, in view of the ordinary motives governing human conduct, be expected of a defeated suitor acting under the compulsory process of the court.[22] Except in this last class of cases, however, the court may waive these considerations of inconvenience in exceptional instances, where to refuse a decree of specific performance would work a flagrant injustice.[23] The difficulties which confront the court in all these cases are well explained in a leading case. "The mode, if undertaken, must be for the court first specifically to determine what shall be done, and when and how and then to enforce performance by attachment, as for contempt in case of alleged disobedience. Then will arise, not only the question, whether there has been substantial performance, and if found not, whether the defendant had any such excuse therefor as will exonerate him from the contempt charged, and in case of performance, but not in as beneficial a manner as adjudged, the compensation that should be made for the deficiency. It is obvious that the execution of contracts of this description, under the supervision and control of the court, would be found very difficult if not impracticable." [24]

2. Arbitration or Valuation — a. General Rule. An agreement to submit a matter to arbitration or valuation, or an agreement, an essential part of which is that a matter shall be submitted to arbitration, or valuation as for a sale or lease at a price or rent to be fixed by valuers, will not, as a general rule, be specifically enforced; nor will the court itself fix the price or substitute other valuers, since that would be to make a new contract for the parties.[25]

There might be some difficulty, therefore, even if the defendant was compelled to sing under the direction and in the presence of a master in chancery, in ascertaining whether he performed his engagement according to its spirit and intent," etc.

And the question of obedience to such an order might come up for solution, not once . . . but in instances innumerable, and for an indefinite time. Instead of the final order being the end of the litigation, it would be its fruitful and continuous source, and that, too, of litigation not in the regular course of judicial proceedings, but irregularly, on a summary application. And such application to be made by either party, one when he conceived there had not been a faithful compliance with the order, and the other when exemption from some provision might be claimed, on the ground of inability or unforeseen events."

b. Valuation or Arbitration an Unessential Part of Contract. Where the agreement to submit to valuers or arbitrators is a subordinate or unessential part of the contract, it may be disregarded and the rest of the contract specifically enforced, if the refusal to submit was by fault of defendant;[26] or the court itself in such a case may make the valuation by reference to a master or otherwise.[27]

c. Defendant Estopped by Plaintiff's Expenditures. And where plaintiff has gone to great expense in reliance upon the agreement and defendant then refuses to appoint a valuer, the court, by the better considered authorities, may itself make the valuation, and decree specific performance, on the ground that defendant is estopped by his conduct to set up the want of an appraisal caused by himself.[28] This rule has been frequently applied in cases of covenants to renew a long term lease at a rent to be fixed by valuers appointed by the parties, where the lessee has made valuable improvements on the strength of the covenant for renewal, and a failure to secure a renewal will work an injustice for which an action for damages is not a complete remedy.[29]

3. Personal Services or Business Employment — a. In General. In cases of this character a decree for specific performance is open not only to the objection that it calls for an undue amount of supervision by the court, but to still graver objections, which are well stated in a very recent case: "Any system or plan by which the court could order or direct the physical coercion of the laborer would be wholly out of harmony with the spirit of our institutions, and his imprisonment would take away his power to make specific performance. Even if such authority existed its exercise would be undesirable. If the relation of employer and employee is to be of value or profit to either it must be marked by some degree of mutual confidence and satisfaction, and when these are gone and their places usurped by dislike and distrust, it is to the advantage of all concerned that their relations be severed." [30]

b. Instances — (I) Partnership For a Fixed Term. As a general rule, performance of an agreement to enter into a partnership for a fixed term will not be decreed, on the ground that to perform the duties of a partner calls for the exercise of personal skill and judgment.[31] But where there has been part performance on plaintiff's part, and it is essential to the ends of justice that the status of the parties be fixed by the execution of the partnership articles, this may be decreed, although the court cannot compel the parties to act under them after execution.[32] Or, in case of such part performance, defendants may be compelled, under the articles, to convey property to the firm.[33]

(II) Other Business Employment. On the same principle the direct specific performance has been refused of contracts to act as agent,[34] manager,[35] or at the expiration of the term at a valuation to be fixed by arbitration, the court retains the case and itself appraises the value of the improvements. Hopkins v. Gilman, 22 Wis. 476. And see Copper v. Wells, 1 N. J. Eq. 10; Dunnell v. Keteltas, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 205.

services;[45] and other contracts of service and employment.[46] In a few states the rule is expressly declared by statute.[47]

c. Where Services Are to Be Rendered by Plaintiff. Although the contract may be one that is otherwise proper to be specifically enforced, if, at the time of the decree, there remain to be done, on plaintiff's side, personal services or other acts of a kind which, in accordance with the general rule, the court cannot compel to be done, specific performance is usually refused on the principle that the remedies in equity must be mutual.[48] The rule does not apply, however, where the services have been rendered.[49]

4. Building or Construction Contracts — a. General Rule. The general rule is well settled that contracts for building or construction will not be enforced specifically.[50] Where the person employed to build is complainant and the work

The reasons for the rule are well stated in the extract from Beck v. Allison, 56 N. Y. 366, 15 Am. Rep. 430, supra, III, C, 1.

The statement that courts of equity "have enforced such contracts from the earliest days to the present time" (Jones v. Parker, 163 Mass. 564, 40 N. E. 1044, 47 Am. St. Rep. 485) is extravagant; the cases from the fifteenth century which are cited to substantiate the statement being wholly silent as to the nature of the relief sought (1 Ames Cas. Eq. Jur. 68, note 4).

It has been suggested (Blair v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 92 Mo. App. 538) that the rule of the text has been repudiated by implication in the decisions of the United States courts referred to infra, III, C, 5, c, (IV), but it is probable that these decisions, difficult as they may be to reconcile with the rule, were not intended to abrogate it entirely.

A contract to take down or remove a building was not specifically enforced, for the alleged reason of the court's inability to see that the work was carried out. Armour v. Connolly, (N. J. Ch. 1901) 49 Atl. 1117. Sed quære? The court was not called upon in executing its decree to superintend details of work, but merely to assure itself that the work, a definite act, was completed. Mandatory injunctions for the destruction of buildings are frequent, and the courts have experienced no difficulty in determining whether they were carried out.

Erection of building and lease.—A contract to lease a certain amount of floor space in a building being erected will not be specifically enforced, where the erection of the building will extend over a considerable period of time and will require the exercise of skil. and discretion in placing the beams, etc. Bromberg v. Eugenotto Constr. Co., 158 Ala. 328, 48 So. 60, 19 L. R. A. N. S. 1175.

formance of a landlord's covenant to make repairs is rarely decreed, since the lessee has his remedy by recovery of damages at law, and may then lay out the money on the land in such manner as he thinks proper.[53]

c. Exception to Rule Where Building to Be Done on Defendants' Land, Etc.— (I) In General. The court has jurisdiction to grant specific performance of a contract for building or construction where three things concur: (1) Where the work to be done is defined; (2) where plaintiff has a substantial interest in its execution which cannot adequately be compensated for by damages; and (3) where defendant has by the contract obtained from plaintiff possession of the land on which the work is to be done.[54]

Lord Hardwicke said: "The plaintiffs are clearly entitled to come into this court for a specific performance, otherwise on a covenant to repair; for to build is one entire single thing, and if not done prevents that security which the [plaintiff] has for the rent, by virtue of the lease." This distinction between an agreement to build and to repair has been followed in a few cases. Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Watson, 26 Ind. 50. Contra, Lucas v. Commerford, 3 Bro. Ch. 166, 29 Eng. A landlord's covenant "reasonably to heat and light the demised premises," part of the basement of a building, involving the construction of apparatus for the purpose, was specifically enforced, the court being of the opinion that a judge, by the aid of an expert, would find it easy to frame a scheme for doing the work, and that to determine what was reasonable heating and lighting was a matter of no difficulty. Jones v. Parker, 163 Mass. 564, 40 N. E. 1044, 47 Am. St. Rep. 485.

54. In Wilson v. Furness R. Co., L. R. 9 Eq. 28, 33, 39 L. J. Ch. 19, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 416, 553, 18 Wkly. Rep. 89, it is said: "It would be monstrous if the company, having got the whole benefit of the agreement, could turn round and say, 'This is a sort of thing which the Court finds a difficulty in doing, and will not do.' Rather than allow such a gross piece of dishonesty to go unredressed the Court would struggle with any amount of difficulties in order to perform the agreement." See also Gregory v. Ingwersen, 32 N. J. Eq. 199; Stuyvesant v. New York, 11 Paige (N. Ch. 65, 3 R. & Can. Cas. 106, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 48, 21 Eng. Ch. 48, 63 Eng. Reprint 21 (the leading case). In most of the cases the building was to be done on land conveyed by plaintiff to defendant, but this does not appear to be essential, if the construction is to be on defendant's land, and there has been performance by plaintiff so that defendant is enjoying the benefit thereof in specie. Columbus v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 663 (an instructive case); Greene v. West Cheshire R. Co., L. R. 13 Eq. 44, 41 L. J. Ch. 17, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 409, 20 Wkly. Rep. 54. St. Rep. 74, agreement by railroads, each to build and maintain for benefit of the other crossings over its own tracks.

But specific performance of defendant's agreement to build a drain on his land has been refused, the legal remedy of damages being deemed adequate. Robinson v. Luther, 134 Iowa 463, 109 N. W. 775; McCarter v. Armstrong, 32 S. C. 203, 10 S. E. 953, 8 L. R. A. 625, 32 S. C. 601, 11 S. E. 634, also because the drain was to be maintained forever.

Building on plaintiff's land adjoining the land conveyed.— The principle of the text was extended to compel the building of a retaining wall along the line of grantor's lots, by the grantee of a right of way, in Flege v. Covington, etc., El. R., etc., Co., 122 Ky. 348, 91 S. W. 738, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1257, 121 Am. St. Rep. 463.

(II) By Railroad Acquiring Right of Way From Plaintiff. This rule has most frequently been applied to the case of an agreement by a railroad company acquiring a right of way from a landowner on the faith of its promise to construct some work for the owner's convenience, as a crossing or a passageway beneath its tracks;[55] to fence its right of way;[56] to build a station;[57] to bridge its tracks;[58] to put in a side-track for plaintiff's accommodation;[59] or to build a road, a wharf,[60] or drain.[61]

(III) Defense of Hardship or Public Inconvenience. Where the construction of such works by a railroad company for the benefit of a grantor of the right of way confers a benefit on plaintiff that is slight in comparison with the additional burden placed upon the company,[62] or considerably increases the danger in operating the road,[63] specific performance has been refused.

5. Other Contracts Requiring Continuous Acts — a. In General. The general rule as to the difficulty of superintending the execution of the decree [64] applies to a great variety of other contracts where the acts to be done are continuous, lasting over a considerable period of time, especially if they involve the exercise of skill and judgment.[65] Thus the court will not enforce a contract to work a mine, Public policy may prevent the application of the rule of the text. Thus where plaintiff sold a lot, adjoining his other land, to a city on faith of an agreement of the city to build the city hall on the lot conveyed, specific performance was refused, since a court of equity should not control the discretion of a municipal council in such a matter as the proper location of a public building. 61. Bell v. Dayton, etc., R. Co., 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 31, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 19. Compare, however, Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Payne, 93 Miss. 50, 46 So. 405, holding that a provision of a deed to a railroad of right of way through a farm that the railroad will from year to year give the grantor sufficient ditch to perfectly drain all his land and whatever crossings he needs will not be specifically performed; the remedy at law being adequate, and such superintendence of ditching farms and erecting crossings not being within the province of equity.

62. Goding v. Bangor, etc., R. Co., 94 Me. 542, 48 Atl. 114 (grade-crossing); Murdfeldt v. New York, etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. 703, 7 N. E. 404 (passage under tracks); Johnson v. Ohio River R. Co., 61 W. Va. 141, 56 S. E. 200. See also infra, IV, D, 4. But the defense of hardship and expense in maintaining farm crossings does not avail the company, when they are necessary to the convenient use of plaintiff's farm. Baltimore, etc., R. or to sell all the product of a mine, since that involves the operation of the mine.[66]

b. Exception Where Breaches of the Contract Will Be Infrequent. Contracts have been held not to fall within the rule, although lasting over a considerable period, where violations of the decree could only occur at considerable intervals, and each violation would be a single completed act.[67]

c. Railway Operating Contracts — (i) GENERAL RULE. Apart from the special cases mentioned in the next paragraph, the cases were very few, until quite recent years, in which the courts had undertaken to enforce contracts by decrees which called for any supervision by the court of the operating of railroads. Generally they have been refused.[68]

California.—Pacific Electric R. Co. v. Campbell-Johnston, 153 Cal. 106, 94 Pac. 623.

Illinois.— Hernreich v. Lidberg, 105 Ill. App. 495, to form a corporation.

Indiana.—Thiebaud v. Union Furniture Co., 143 Ind. 340, 42 N. E. 741, pumping water.

North Dakota.— Kidd v. McGinnis, 1 N. D. 331, 48 N. W. 221, to maintain a public park.

Pennsylvania.— Pittsburg, etc., R. Co.'s Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 177, to use a telegraph line built by plaintiff along defendant's railroad, and pay plaintiff half of the earnings.

United States.— Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955 (to furnish a perpetual supply of marble from defendant's quarry); Shubert v. Woodward, 167 Fed. 47, 92 C. C. A. 509 (management of theater); Berliner Gramophone Co. v. Seaman, 110 Fed. 30, 49 C. C. A. 99 (contract establishing business relations between the parties, containing mutual covenants to be performed by each, and having several years to run).

England.— Keith v. National Telephone Co., [1894] 2 Ch. 147, 58 J. P. 573, 63 L. J. Ch. 373, 70 L. T. Rep. N. S. 276, 8 Reports 776, 42 Wkly. Rep. 380 (to maintain telephonic apparatus upon plaintiff's premises; specific performance refused, but injunction against cutting wires); Phipps v. Jackson, 56 L. J. Ch. 550, 35 Wkly. Rep. 378 (to keep a farm stocked with horses and cattle); Hooper v. Broderick, 9 L. J. Ch. 321, 11 Sim. 47, 34 Eng. Ch. 47, 59 Eng. Reprint 791 (to keep the demised property open as an inn).

Injunction.— The substance of the relief sought in such cases may sometimes be obtained by injunction against disturbing an existing condition. Maryland, Tel., etc., Co. v. Charles Simons' Sons Co., 103 Md. 136, 63 Atl. 314, 115 Am. St. Rep. 346 (injunction against discontinuing telephone service; but the point that the contract called for continuous acts and skilled service seems not to have been raised); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 129 Fed. 849, 64 C. C. A. 285, 68 L. R. A. 968 [reversing 125 Fed. 67] (injunction against disturbance of plaintiff's telegraph wires on defendant's right of way and poles); Keith v. National Telephone Co., [1894] 2 Ch. 147, 58 J. P. 573, 63 L. J. Ch. 373, 70 L. T. Rep. N. S. 276, 8 Reports 776, 42 Wkly. Rep. 380 (injunction against cutting telephone wires).

Rule disregarded because of grave public necessity.— Defendant's agreement to maintain its waterworks system for a long term of years, with fire hydrants, was enforced, because of the necessity to plaintiff city of fire protection. The decree was thought to require neither exercise of skill and judgment, nor undue supervision by the court. Hubbard City v. Bounds, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 95 S. W. 69. And see Bounds v. Hubbard City, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 233, 105 S. W. 56.

66. Illinois.—Grape Creek Coal Co. v. Spellman, 39 Ill. App. 630.

Indian Territory.— Wilhite v. Skelton, 5 Indian Terr. 621, 82 S. W. 932.

Oregon.— Clarno v. Grayson, 30 Oreg. 111, 46 Pac. 426, purchaser of mine to operate it and pay net proceeds to be applied upon the price.

Pennsylvania.— Koch's Appeal, 93 Pa. St. 434.

Virginia.— Campbell v. Rust, 85 Va. 653, 8 S. E. 664.

United States.— Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955.

England.— Wheatley v. Westminster Brymbo Coal Co., L. R. 9 Eq. 538, 39 L. J. Ch. 175, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 7, 18 Wkly. Rep. 162; Pollard v. Clayton, 1 Jur. N. S. 342, 1 Kay & J. 462, 3 Wkly. Rep. 349, 69 Eng. Reprint 540; Booth v. Pollard, 4 Y. & C. Exch. 61.

Lease may be executed.— But where there is a contract for a lease of mines, to be worked in a specified manner, there may be a decree to execute the lease, leaving the lessor to his legal remedies for future breaches of covenants therein. Wharton v. Stoutenburgh, 35 N. J. Eq. 266.

67. Chubb v. Peckham, 13 N. J. Eq. 207 (to pay a weekly sum for support of parents); Goddard v. American Queen, 44 N. Y. App. Div. 454, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 133 [reversing 27 Misc. 482, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 46] (to insert plaintiff's advertisements in defendant's monthly magazine).

68. California.— Pacific Electric R. Co. v. Campbell-Johnston, 153 Cal. 106, 94 Pac. 623.

New York.— Fargo v. New York, etc., R. Co., 3 Misc. 205, 209, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 360, refusing to specifically enforce performance of a contract between a railroad company and an express company, granting to the latter the exclusive privilege, for a term of years, of transporting express matter on the railroad company's passenger trains, and requiring the railroad company to at all times furnish a "sufficient" space in its cars, and providing for special and varying contingencies. The court said: "A decree for specific performance couched in the precise terms of the contract itself, would be but the beginning of the judicial work."

(II) To Maintain a Station and Stop Trains Thereat. In extension of a rule already discussed, well considered cases have established the rule that an agreement by a railway company in consideration of the conveyance to it of land, to maintain a station at a certain place for the grantor's convenience, and to stop trains thereat, may be enforced against the company.[69]

(III) Other Contracts With Vendors or Shippers. Whether a contract by which a railroad company agrees with a city which has given it land and money to maintain its general offices and machine shop in the city is enforceable in equity is more doubtful.[70] Other contracts between shippers and railways, calling for continuous acts, have in a number of instances been refused enforcement.[71]

Ohio.— Port Clinton R. Co. v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 13 Ohio St. 544; Matthews v. Southern Ohio Traction Co., 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 652, holding that ordinances which required a street railway company to announce the names of streets and the crossings of other railroads, and to keep for sale tickets on the cars, to keep within a prescribed speed limit, and to operate a sufficient number of cars necessary for the public convenience and demand, could not be specifically enforced.

Tennessee.— McCann v. South Nashville St. R. Co., 2 Tenn. Ch. 773, operating street railroad.

Texas.— Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co., 99 Tex. 434, 90 S. W. 863, 3 L. R. A. N. S. 828.

United States.— Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 11 Fed. 625, 4 Woods 317, contract with a sleeping-car company, containing continuous covenants, with intricate detail, running through a period of nine years, over a vast system of railways.

England.— Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co. v. Taff Vale R. Co., L. R. 9 Ch. 331, 43 L. J. Ch. 575, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 208 (statutory duty to permit plaintiff to run its cars and engines over defendant's tracks not specifically enforced, since it involved the services of defendant's signalmen, although the road in question was but two miles in length, and the framing of sufficient regulations probably an easy matter); Blackett v. Bates, L. R. 1 Ch. 117, 12 Jur. N. S. 151, 35 L. J. Ch. 324, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 656, 14 Wkly. Rep. 319 (plaintiff to furnish engine power and repair the railway); Johnson v. Shrewsbury, etc., R. Co., 3 De G. M. & G. 914, 22 L. J. Ch. 921, 17 Jur. 1015, 52 Eng. Ch. 710, 43 Eng. Reprint 358 (plaintiffs to work the line and keep engine and rolling-stock in repair).

Specific performance granted.— Niagara Falls International Bridge Co. v. Great Western R. Co., 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 212 (contract by defendant, crossing plaintiff's bridge, to collect and make proper regulations for collecting bridge tolls from local passengers on defendant's trains; but the point that the decree involved continuous supervision was not discussed); Wolverhampton, etc., R. Co. v. London, etc., R. Co., L. R. 16 Eq. 433, 43 L. J. Ch. 131 (contract to carry certain specified traffic over plaintiff's line; injunction against diverting this traffic to other lines; on demurrer; no decree unless the court should see its way to define what defendants ought, or ought not, to do).

Dec. 305 (to receive and deliver grantor's freight at a freight platform); Blanchard v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 31 Mich. 43, 18 Am. Rep. 142 (to stop one train each way daily); Willson v. Winchester, etc., R. Co., 99 Fed. 642, 41 C. C. A. 215 [affirming 82 Fed. 15].

70. That it is not enforceable, partly because it calls for continuous acts, and partly because the public interest might at some time demand the removal of the shops and offices see Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall, 136 U. S. 393, 10 S. Ct. 846, 34 L. ed. 385. But in the well-considered case of Tyler v. St. Louis South Western R. Co., 99 Tex. 491, 91 S. W. 1, 93 S. W. 997 [reversing (Civ. App. 1905) 87 S. W. 238], such a contract was enforced by injunction. The contract in the latter case could not be considered against public policy, since it was in accordance with a statute.

71. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Bodenschatz-Bedford Stone Co., 141 Ind. 251, 39 N. E. 703 (a contract with a quarry "to furnish facilities for shipping stone"); Richmond v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 33 Iowa 422 (a contract to give the owner of a grain elevator the handling of all through grain transported

(IV) Recent Wide Departure From the Rule. But in a remarkable series of cases, beginning with the year 1890, contracts involving the operation of railroads, often of the utmost complexity and extending over a very long term of years, or perpetually, have been enforced specifically. In the leading case of the series a controlling reason for the decision was that the interests of the general public would have been injuriously affected by a failure to make the decree;[72] but this reason appears to have dropped out of sight in the cases following this precedent.[73]

D. Where Decree Cannot Be Framed; Completeness and Certainty[74] — 1. In General. The contract must be complete in all its parts; that is to say, it must contain all the material terms, and none of these terms must be left to be settled by future negotiation.[75] It must also be certain; that is to say, each of

on the railroad); Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co., 99 Tex. 434, 90 S. W. 863 [reversing (Civ. App. 1905) 86 S. W. 355] (a contract to ship and receive and forward a certain percentage of defendant's freight over plaintiff railroad); Wilson v. West Hartlepool R. Co., 2 De G. J. & S. 475, 34 L. J. Ch. 241, 11 Jur. N. S. 124, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 692, 13 Wkly. Rep. 361, 7 Eng. Ch. 371, 46 Eng. Reprint 459 (holding that where plaintiff, a manufacturer, in a contract by which defendant railroad sold him land, stipulated that he would use that railroad in preference to others, this stipulation could not be specifically enforced; but a covenant containing the stipulation was decreed to be inserted in the deed to plaintiff).

72. Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 11 S. Ct. 243, 34 L. ed. 843 [affirming 29 Fed. 546], such failure would have resulted in cutting up the chief public park of St. Louis with the tracks of other railroads, to the great detriment of its usefulness to the public.

New York.— Prospect Park, etc., R. Co. v. Coney Island, etc., R. Co., 144 N. Y. 152, 39 N. E. 17, 26 L. R. A. 610, contract to run street cars to plaintiff's depot to connect with plaintiff's trains.

Pennsylvania.— Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. Gettysburg, etc., R. Co., 177 Pa. St. 519, 35 Atl. 952, contract for interchange of traffic between railroads.

Tennessee.— Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 92 Tenn. 681, 22 S. W. 920, agreement to lay tracks through a city and allow their use by any other road terminating in the city.

Virginia.— Southern R. Co. v. Franklin, etc., R. Co., 96 Va. 693, 32 S. E. 485, 44 L. R. A. 297, contract to operate a leased road.

United States.— Union Pac. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 163 U. S. 564, 16 S. Ct. 1173, 41 L. ed. 265 [affirming 51 Fed. 309, 2 C. C. A. 174, 47 Fed. 15] (where the U. P. Co. granted to the R. I. Co. the right to use its bridge and Omaha terminals jointly, under regulations for the movement of trains of both companies to be carried out under the direction of an officer of the U. P. Co.); Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 11 S. Ct. 243, 34 L. ed. 843 [affirming 29 Fed. 546] (where defendant railroad agreed to allow the use of its tracks and terminals in St. Louis to other companies, under the operating control of defendant company); Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 141 Fed. 785, 73 C. C. A. 43 (contract by a lessee railroad to run its trains over the tracks and use terminal facilities of the lessor during a lease for nine hundred and ninety-nine years).

Compare Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line R. Co., 99 Tex. 434, 90 S. W. 863, 3 L. R. A. N. S. 828, distinguishing some of the cases cited above and refusing specific performance.

2. Greater Degree of Certainty Required Than at Law. An action at law for breach of contract can often be maintained, although some of the terms of the contract are not established with exactness. It is otherwise where specific performance is required. The court, in order that it may frame a decree in accordance with the intent of the parties, must be clearly apprised of that intent in all essential respects. A greater degree of certainty is required than in actions at law for

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 61 et seq. And see Contracts, 9 Cyc. 248; and the cases cited under the sections following.

Extrinsic evidence.— Where, by the aid of evidence of the situation and surroundings of the parties at the time of the execution of a contract which is indefinite or ambiguous, together with proof of their subsequent acts in construing the written instrument, the court can with reasonable certainty determine the intention of the parties, the contract will be enforced as so construed, in the absence of other fatal objections. Inglis v. Fohey, 136 Wis. 28, 116 N. W. 857. See also Skinner v. McDouall, 2 De G. & Sm. 265, 12 Jur. 741, 17 L. J. Ch. 347, 64 Eng. Reprint 120.

Agreement as to inventions and patents.— An agreement by one employed as a machinist to invent, perfect, and improve lubricating valves, force-feed oil pumps, etc., which his employer is engaged in manufacturing, and that whatever inventions or devices may damages.[77] The terms must not be ambiguous, so that either party may reasonably misunderstand them,[78] or so obscure or self-contradictory that the court cannot interpret them.[79]

3. Only Essentials of Contract Need Appear in Writing; Reasonable Certainty. Terms which the law implies by legal presumption need not be expressly stated; and a statement of a term in general language is sufficient when the law will supply the details.[80] The certainty that is required is not a technical but only a reasonable one.[81] result from such employment in the nature of machinery, tools, etc., to be used in connection with the employer's business, shall at the employer's request be protected by patents and become the employer's property, is sufficiently definite and certain to be specifically enforced. Detroit Lubricator Co. v. Lavigne, 151 Mich. 650, 115 N. W. 988. See also McRae v. Smart, 120 Tenn. 413, 114 S. W. 729, holding sufficiently definite a contract to give plaintiff a half interest in a mechanical device.

Agreement to devise or bequeath sufficiently certain to be specifically enforced see Sarasohn v. Kamaiky, 93 N. Y. 203, 86 N. E. 20.

Contract to purchase stock.— Where an oral contract to purchase shares of stock of a corporation provides that the purchase may be made by either of the parties as opportunity offers for their mutual benefit, the stock purchased to be equally divided, each paying one half of the purchase-price, either party has the right, acting in good faith, to pay what he deems proper for the stock, and the other must pay one half of the cost; and hence the contract does not lack certainty so as to preclude specific performance. Sherman v. Herr, 220 Pa. St. 420, 69 Atl. 899.

Time of performance.— The fact that the time of performance of an agreement was not fixed therein does not prevent specific performance thereof, the legal implication being that performance was to take place within a reasonable time. Inglis v. Fohey, 136 Wis. 28, 116 N. W. 857.

77. See Pomeroy Spec. Perf. § 159. And see Stanton v. Singleton, 126 Cal. 657, 59 Pac 146, 47 L. R. A. 334; Marsh v. Lott, 8 Cal. App. 384, 97 Pac. 163; Blanchard v. Detroit, etc., R. Statutory definition.— By Cal. Civ. Code, § 3390, an agreement cannot be enforced specifically the terms of which are not sufficiently certain to make the precise act which is to be done clearly ascertainable. See Meyer v. Quiggle, 140 Cal. 495, 74 Pac. 40.

The contract must be certain as to plaintiff's duty, since the decree affects plaintiff as well as defendant. Burke v. Mead, 159 Ind. 252, 64 N. E. 880.

Against assignee and representatives of the contracting parties, it is said that the requirement of certainty is more than ordinarily stringent. Odell v. Morin, 5 Oreg. 96.

Miscellaneous examples of uncertainty.— In addition to the cases in the following notes see Winter v. Goebner, 21 Colo. 279, 40 Pac. 570 [affirming 2 Colo. App. 259, 30 Pac. 51]; Hudson v. Layton, 5 Harr. (Del.) 74, 48 Am. Dec. 167; Long v. Long, 118 Ill. 638, 9 N. E. 247 [affirming 19 Ill. Reformation for uncertainty.— If by mutual mistake the contract is uncertain, the proper practice is to sue for reformation and specific performance in the same suit and not to seek specific performance, leaving the uncertainty to be corrected by another action brought for that purpose. Bacon v. Leslie, 50 Kan. 494, 31 Pac. 1066, 34 Am. St. Rep. 134. See Vail v. Tillman, 2 Wash. 476, 27 Pac. 76. And see Reformation of Instruments, 34 Cyc. 899.

Implied terms.— Among such terms are plaintiff's promise to buy. Lawson v. Mullinix, 104 Md. 156, 64 Atl. 938; Munro v. Edwards, 86 Mich. 91, 48 N. W. 689. The transfer of possession need not be provided for (Munro v. Edwards, supra); but it has been held in California, that an express promise to convey is essential (Minturn v. Baylis, 33 Cal. 129). Plaintiff's acceptance of defendant's offer need not appear in the written memorandum; it may be shown by parol. Graule v. Warner, 140 Ill. 123, 29 N. E. 1118; Lawson v. Mullinix, 104 Md.

4. Uncertainty in Separable Part of Contract. If specific performance of a separable part is sought, uncertainty or indefiniteness in the part of the contract not sought to be enforced is no defense.[82]

5. Description of the Land — a. In General. The description must be such as to enable the court to determine with certainty, with the aid of such extrinsic evidence as is admissible under the rules of evidence, what property was intended by the parties to be covered thereby. The description need not be given with such particularity as to make a resort to extrinsic evidence unnecessary. Reasonable certainty is all that is required. Extrinsic proof is allowed in order to apply, not to alter or vary, the written agreement.[83] That the description of the property

Terms to be "as usual," etc.— A provision that the contract or lease, or some of its terms, are to be in "the usual form," or "as usual," is not necessarily uncertain. Cochrane v. Justice Min. Co., 16 Colo. 415, 26 Pac. 780 ("settlement as usual" of royalty in a mining lease); Scannell v. American Soda Fountain Co., 161 Mo. 606, 61 S. W. 889 (lease in the "usual form"); Hebert v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co., 12 Fed. 807, 8 Sawy. 198 (policy of insurance to be according to the form in use by the company).

83. Arkansas.— Graham v. Graham, 85 Ark. 442, 108 S. W. 835, agreement for dissolution of partnership, by which the retiring partner was to turn over to the other partner all partnership property, including real estate, and execute a deed for the same, which did not describe any real estate, required to be specifically enforced as to real estate which was bought with partnership funds, the deed of which to the retiring partner was turned over to the other when the contract was executed.

California.— Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 372, 97 Pac. 885; Towle v. Carmelo Land, etc., Co., 99 Cal. 397, 33 Pac. 1126.

Illinois.— Cumberledge v. Brooks, 235 Ill. 249, 85 N. E. 197.

Indiana.—Warner v. Marshall, 166 Ind. 88, 75 N. E. 582.

New York.— Waring v. Ayres, 40 N. Y. 357.

Texas.—Watson v. Baker, 71 Tex. 739, 9 S. W. 867.

West Virginia.— Kight v. Kight, 64 W. Va. 519, 63 S. E. 335. And see Guinn v. Warbutton, 64 W. Va. 76, 60 S. E. 1100; Crawford v. Workman, 64 W. Va. 10, 61 S. E. 319.

United States.— Bradley v. Heyward, 164 Fed. 107, holding that an option to purchase all phosphate rock and phosphate deposit contained on or in all of the Middleton lands on Ashley river, described in a specified plat, containing five thousand five hundred and seven acres, for twenty thousand dollars, to include a right of way over vendor's other lands to the river, and a site on the river for a washer, followed by the payment of the money, although the right of way and washer site were not located, was not so vague or uncertain as to be incapable of specific performance.

Surrounding circumstances may be shown by parol, to aid the description, and connect it with the subject-matter. Preble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 245, 26 Pac. 99, 22 Am. St. Rep. 301.

Where the uncertainty is patent, parol proof cannot be permitted to show what was intended. Rampke v. Beuhler, 203 Ill. 384, 67 N. E. 796.

Abbreviations in general use, relating to government surveys, as "Tp." for township, and "R." for range, do not cause uncertainty. Ottumwa, etc., R. Co. v. McWilliams, 71 Iowa 164, 32 N. W. 315. And see Bacon v. Leslie, 50 Kan. 494, 31 Pac. 1066, 34 Am. St. Rep. 134.

"Block."— But there is no such governmental subdivision of a section as a "block." Glos v. Wilson, 198 Ill. 44, 64 N. E. 734.

No description at all.— In the following cases there was no description at all: Alba v. Strong, 94 Ala. 163, 10 So. 242; Meyer v. Quiggle, 140 Cal. 495, 74 Pac. 40; Ferris v. Irving, 28 Cal. 645 ("some city lots"); Reed v. Hornback, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 375; Welsh v. Bayaud, 21 N. J. Eq. 186; Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 18 N. J. Eq. 489; James v. Penn Tanning Co., 221 Pa. St. 634, 70 Atl. 885 (agreement relating to sale of bark or timber not describing any particular tract of land from which the same is to be taken); Crawford v. Workman, 64 W. Va. 10, 61 S. E. 319; Auer v. Mathews, 129 Wis. 143, 108 N. W. 45; Freeburgh v. Lamoureux, 15 Wyo. 22, 85 Pac. 1054 (lot to be selected from vendor's lands in a certain town, but no statement of dimensions or area).

Description uncertain.— In the following miscellaneous instances the description was in a lease is indefinite will not defeat specific performance of a covenant to renew the lease, where both parties have without question acted under the lease.[84]

b. By Quantity — (I) In General. A mere designation of the quantity of land to be conveyed is not a description of the land.[85]

(II) Part of Described Tract. A designation of the land as a certain quantity out of a larger described tract, as of so many acres out of a specified tract, is insufficient, where the boundaries of the part are not stated or the part has not been carved out.[86]

c. Town, County, and State. Ordinarily the town, county, and state need not be mentioned, since it is an inference that the property is in the town, county, and state in which the instrument is dated or where the parties were dealing.[87] But uncertain: Whatley v. Strong, 23 Ark. 421; Berry v. Woodburn, 107 Cal. 504, 40 Pac. 802 (to convey an "interest" in a certain mine, the amount of interest not being stated); Willmon v. Peck, 5 Cal. App. 665, 91 Pac. 164; Thompson v. Weeks, 32 Ill. App. 642; Powers v. Rude, 14 Okla. 381, 79 Pac. 89; Ferguson v. Blackwell, 8 Okla. 489, 58 Pac. 647; Reilly v. Gautschi, 174 Pa. St. 80, 34 Atl. 576 (description ambiguous; may apply to a larger or a smaller lot); Guinn v. Warbutton, 64 W. Va. 76, 60 S. E. 1100; Park v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 114 Wis. 347, 89 N. W. 532 (vendee cannot be compelled to make a selection); Preston v. Preston, 95 U. S. 200, 24 L. ed. 494 (witnesses did not know property by the name given to it in the writing).

Allowing purchaser to determine line.— That the contract permitted the purchaser to determine the location of the west line of the tract by the determination of the height of the dam did not render it too uncertain to warrant specific performance. Wilkins v. Hardaway, 159 Ala. 565, 48 So. 678.

Wisconsin.—See Auer v. Mathews, 129 Wis. 143, 108 N. W. 45, to convey a certain number of tracts out of a larger number.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," §§ 72, 75, 80.

Compare, however, Fleishman v. Woods, 135 Cal. 256, 67 Pac. 276, holding that where the contract was that the vendee should have a certain number of acres out of a certain tract, to be selected by the vendor, the court had power to compel the selection to be made. In Preble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 245, 26 Pac. 99, 22 Am. St. Rep. 301, where a contract was to sell half of a certain tract, the circumstance that the vendor had sold half to a third party sufficiently identified the remaining half as that intended to be conveyed. In Ring v. Ashworth, 3 Iowa 452, where a contract was to convey fifty-nine acres of an eighty-acre tract, and the vendee asked a decree in the words of the contract, the relief was granted. In McCarty v. May, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 74 S. W. 804, it was held, generally, that a contract to convey a certain number of acres in a certain tract confers a right of selection on the vendee. In Baldwin v. Winslow, 2 Minn. 213, "the half" was held to mean an undivided half.

this is not necessarily true in all cases. There may be cases in which failure to give the town, county, or state will render the description uncertain.[88]

d. Description by Boundaries. A designation of one boundary merely, as that the land is a certain quantity lying on a certain stream, road, street, etc., or adjoining a certain tract,[89] or of two boundaries, as that the land is a certain quantity at the intersection of specified streets,[90] is generally insufficient.[91]

e. By Landmarks or Natural Features. Landmarks or natural features of the land which would not appear on a map may aid in identifying the land to be conveyed.[92]

f. By Number of Lot. A reference to lots by number or by corner on public roads and streets is prima facie sufficient; the dimensions or boundaries of the lots need not be mentioned. The depth of a city lot is seldom essential to be stated.[93]

g. Vendor's Ownership. Where ownership of the tract is not mentioned, the fact that the vendor owns but one tract does not, according to the weight of authority, identify such tract as the one intended. Non constat but that he may have intended to procure and convey another tract. It cannot be presumed that the parties intended the vendor's ownership as an item of the description.[94] Other

Eq. 60 (reference to well-known surveys and watercourses); Brainard v. Jordan, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 784.

88. In Waters v. Ritchie, 3 App. Cas. (D. C.) 379, if the contract were read with the caption it would locate the property in the wrong city; and since the writing did not indicate the city intended, it was too indefinite to be enforced.

Government township.— In Johnson v. Craig, 21 Ark. 533, a description by section only, without the township, was held not to furnish a sufficient identification. But a failure to specify the "range" of the township was aided by other means of identification in Baldwin v. Winslow, 2 Minn. 213.

St. 378, 21 Atl. 19, where the contract fixed a frontage of four hundred feet, and described the lot as extending back along another line to a "line to be fixed, sufficient, with said frontage, to make two acres;" and it was held to mean a uniform width of four hundred feet and a depth sufficient to make two acres; and that the real line therefore was capable of being exactly located.

cases hold that, although the contract does not state the vendor's ownership of the tract, such a statement is implied, and parol evidence is admissible to establish that he owned only one tract answering the rest of the description.[95]

h. Statement of Ownership, Occupation, Mode of Acquisition. The land may be identified by a statement of the vendor's ownership, if the evidence shows that the vendor owns only one tract which answers to the rest of the description;[96] or by a statement that it is the land or property which the vendor or another acquired in a specified manner;[97] or that it is the land occupied at the time of the contract or any specified time by the vendor or any other specified party.[98]

i. By Popular Name. The land may be described and sufficiently identified by its popular designation or name, where that distinguishes the premises from other property, and the boundaries are well defined by reputation.[99]

Compare, however, Barnett v. Nichols, 56 Miss. 622, holding "my land, the entire tract, 728 acres," too ambiguous.

Compare, however, Edwards v. Rives, 35 Fla. 89, 17 So. 416 ("place of which Adam Rives is in possession" too indefinite); Fisher v. Kuhn, 54 Miss. 480 (holding that "the lot of ground formerly occupied by A. J. Ward," not stating town, county, or state, was insufficient, since he might at several times have occupied lots at different places).

99. Illinois.— Koch v. Streuter, 218 Ill.

j. Description Aided by Subsequent Selection. Although the description is insufficient in itself, it is competent to show that the particular land sued for was pointed out and designated, and plaintiff put in possession. The parties thus give a construction to their contract by the manner in which they execute it.[1] A contract giving one of the parties the right of selection of the lot or lots to be conveyed is not incapable of specific performance.[2] And it seems that an agreement to grant at a future time a lease of a described tract "except" a certain number of acres, which are not specified, is not too uncertain to be enforced, since it is for the lessor to select the acres excepted.[3]

6. Parties. The memorandum of the contract must contain the names of the parties, or a sufficient description of them to enable them to be identified.[4]

7. Price or Consideration — a. In General. A contract is too incomplete or uncertain for specific performance if it does not fix the price or consideration or provide a way in which it can be fixed.[5] But the statement of the consideration is sufficient if a way be clearly pointed out for determining the same.[6]

b. Rental. Certainty in the amount of rental is essential in a contract to give a lease.[7]

c. "Fair Price," "Market Price," Etc. An agreement to sell at a "fair price," the "fair market price," or a "fair valuation," etc., is not uncertain, within the meaning of the rule, since the intention of the parties is held to be that on their failure to agree upon the price it shall be determined by the court. To direct a valuation by a master in such a case does not conflict either with the letter or the spirit of the agreement.[8]

Contract giving lessee refusal to purchase. — A stipulation in a lease that in case of a sale of the premises the lessee shall have the privilege of purchasing upon such terms and at the same price as any other person may have offered sufficiently designates a means of fixing the price, and may be specifically enforced. 8. Payment, Security, and Interest — a. Time of Payment — (I) In General. The time of payment is not an essential term, since, if no time is specified, a reasonable time is generally implied.[9]

(II) Deferred Payment. Where payment by the terms of the contract is to be deferred, especially where such deferred payment is to be secured by mortgage, but the time of payment is not specified, the uncertainty is fatal. A provision for interest shows that payment is to be deferred.[10]

(III) Contract to Give Mortgage. Under such a contract, not specifying the time of payment, it has been variously held that the mortgage is payable on demand, or immediately, or in a reasonable time, or that the agreement is too indefinite.[11]

ket value" is too indefinite, since the opinions of witnesses as to market value are notoriously conflicting. Schwaneback v. Smith, 77 Md. 314, 26 Atl. 409, 24 L. R. A. 168.

Future agreement.— It has been held that because the compensation which was to be the subject of future agreement was to be "fair and equitable," such compensation, under the spirit of the rule of the text, might be determined by the court; but the case was in many circumstances an exceptional one. Where part of the consideration was a joint arrangement for lumbering the land, and there was no agreement or usage as to the time to be allowed for lumbering, the contract was held too indefinite. Gates v. Gamble, 53 Mich. 181, 18 N. W. 631.

Price to be paid "when contract is given" is not indefinite. Stout v. Weaver, 72 Wis. 148, 39 N. W. 375.

Where an ascertainable sum, viz., one half of the value of the crops, was to be paid annually until the full amount of the price was paid, the contract was held not to be too indefinite. Strandberg v. Rossman, 59 Minn. 509, 61 N. W. 675.

That the price is payable "in the fall" means that it is payable on the last day of the fall. Dark v. Bagley, 7 N. C. 33.

But a payment on a specified total of a specified sum "per year" was held too uncertain as to dates. Meyer Land Co. v. Pecor, 18 S. D. 466, 101 N. W. 39.

11. Not indefinite; reasonable time implied.— Triebert v. Burgess, 11 Md. 452.

Not indefinite; due immediately or on demand.— Snyder v. Greaves, (N. J. Ch. 1891) 21 Atl. 291; Green v. Richards, 23 N. J. Eq. 32.

Too indefinite; but in the cases cited there were also other elements of uncertainty. Magee v. McManus, 70 Cal. 553, 12 Pac. 451; McClintock v. Laing, 22 Mich. 212; Nichols v. Williams, 22 N. J. Eq. 63. See also Poole v. Tannis, 137 Wis. 363, 118 N. W. 188, 864.

That the mortgagor may "from time to time" make payments on the mortgage debt before maturity does not render the agreement too indefinite. Lankton v. Stewart, 27 Minn. 346, 7 N. W. 360.

b. Security For Deferred Payments. A contract providing that the deferred payments are to be secured, but not specifying in what manner, is too indefinite.[12]

c. Rate of Interest. A provision as to the rate of interest has been held an essential term of a contract to give a mortgage, or to secure deferred payments by a mortgage, but in the cases cited there were other elements of uncertainty.[13]

9. Duration of Lease, License, or Contract For Services. The term or duration of a lease is an essential part of it, and specific performance cannot be decreed of a contract to give or renew a lease which does not specify the commencement or the term for which it is to be given or renewed.[14] The duration of a license or of a contract for services may be an essential element of such agreements.[15]

An agreement to substitute a good mortgage in place of a worthless one implies that the new mortgage is to run for the same period of time as the old. Roberge v. Winne, 144 N. Y. 709, 39 N. E. 631 [affirming 71 Hun 172, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 562].

12. Marsh v. Lott, 8 Cal. App. 384, 97 Pac. 163 (nothing to show in what the balance of the price should be evidenced, or by what means the owner's interest should be protected from default in the payment of taxes, etc.); Holliday v. Hubbard, 45 Minn. 333, 47 N. W. 1134; Ladd v. Stevenson, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 541 [affirmed in 112 N. Y. 325, 19 N. E. 842, 8 Am. St. Rep. 748] ("satisfactory security" too uncertain); Foot v. Webb, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 38; Greenleaf v. Blakeman, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 564, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 76 [modified in 40 N. Y. App. Div. 371, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 76] ("collateral security of suitable character" too vague; "bond of sufficient surety, individual or corporate," not too uncertain); Meyer Land Co. v. Pecor, 18 S. D. 466, 101 N. W. 39 (although the vendee offered to execute promissory notes secured by mortgage on the premises); Johnson v. Plotner, 15 S. D. 154, 87 N. W. 926. But see Annan v. Merritt, 13 Conn. 478 (to give a mortgage means a mortgage on the land conveyed); Horton v. McKee, 68 Fed. 404 (to secure deferred payment "by mortgage on property worth at least two for one," not too indefinite).

As an essential term.— In Delaware it appears to be held that security for deferred payments is an essential term of a contract of sale, in the absence of which the contract will not be enforced. See Diamond State Iron Co. v. Todd, 6 Del. Ch. 163, 14 Atl. 27 (sale of personal property); Godwin v. Collins, 3 Del. Ch. 189 [affirmed in 4 Houst. 28]. Contra, Libby v. Parry, 98 Minn. 366, 108 N. W. 299.

Agreement sufficiently certain.— In Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 372, 97 Pac. 885, a contract for the sale of real estate stipulated for a cash payment, and for the delivery of a purchase-money mortgage to secure the payment of notes for the balance of the price. The contract definitely fixed the amount of the notes, the rate of interest they were to bear, the time they were to run, and the rebate to be allowed for payment of mortgage taxes by the mortgagor. It was held that the agreement sufficiently stated the terms of the mortgage to authorize specific performance.

Sufficiently certain.— An agreement to lease a building for "one or more years" is sufficiently definite as to the duration of the lease to support a suit for specific performance of the agreement, the term "one or more years," in the absence of any stipulation of option of determination, creating a term of two years. Boston Clothing Co. v. Solberg, 28 Wash. 262, 68 Pac. 715. And a letting, in 1845, to a yearly tenant, and if he should wish a lease, that the lessor would grant the same for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years, at the same rent, was held sufficiently certain to be specifically performed, as it was to be construed an optional lease for twenty-one years from 1845, determinable at the end of seven or fourteen years, at the option of the tenant. Hersey v. Giblett, 18 Beav. 174, 23 L. J. Ch. 818, 2 Wkly. Rep. 206, 52 Eng. Reprint 69.

15. Christian, etc., Grocery Co. v. Bienville Water Supply Co., 106 Ala. 124, 17 So. 352 (holding that an agreement to supply water "for the term of three years or longer," at the option of one of the parties,

10. Uncertainty in Other Contracts or Stipulations — a. Building and Construction. Agreements for building or construction are frequently open to the objection of uncertainty as well as of the difficulty of enforcement of the decree.[16]

b. Support. A contract, the consideration of which is plaintiff's care for and support of the other party, is not usually considered objectionable for vagueness of the consideration.[17] Where the consideration has not been fully performed the contract may of course be open to the objection that it is unenforceable in equity against plaintiff.[18]

c. Personal Services. Specific performance of contracts calling for personal at a fixed compensation per annum, is not void for indefinitness as to duration, and constitutes one contract which can be specifically enforced; but that an election to continue the service from "month to month" or "for three years, reserving the right to elect, to continue the service for a further period," is too indefinite to be specifically enforced); Soloman v. Wilmington Sewerage Co., 142 N. C. 439, 55 S. E. 300, 6 L. R. A. N. S. 391 (holding that a contract between citizens and a public sewerage corporation by which the latter agrees to furnish sewerage service for two and four dollars per year, respectively, dependent on whether the customer pays fifty or twenty-five dollars as an entrance fee for connections, etc., but containing no provision fixing the time for the duration of the contract, cannot be specifically enforced as against the corporation because of uncertainty as to duration); Thoemke v. Fiedler, 91 Wis. 386, 64 N. W. 1030 (holding that equity would not decree specific performance of an oral contract for the use of a ditch through defendant's land, where the duration of the license was material and was in doubt).

Agreements sufficiently certain.— In the following cases the agreement was held sufficiently certain and definite: Ross v. Purse, 17 Colo. 24, 28 Pac. 473 (vendor's agreement to dig a well on premises calls for a well so constructed as to be suitable for the usual and ordinary purposes of such an improvement in the particular locality); Lawrence v. Saratoga Lake R. Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 467 [affirming 3 N. Y. St. 743] (a most instructive case, where the vendee railroad agreed to build a "neat and good bridge," and a "neat and tasteful station building"); Columbus v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 663 (railroad company's agreement with city to erect neat and ornamental buildings so as to obstruct the view of cars and engines); Southern Pine Fibre Co. v. North Augusta Land Co., 50 Fed. 26 (agreement to build a side-track). See also supra, III, C. 4.

Improvements by vendee.— If the consideration of the contract is the making of improvements, but the stipulation as to these is so vague that the court cannot tell whether it has been performed, relief will be refused. They were married in consideration of the promise, but the husband died without fulfilling it. It was held that the letter containing the offer of marriage and promise was evidence of a contract sufficiently certain and unambiguous to entitle the promisee to a specific performance of the contract. IV. DEFENSES DEPENDING ON EQUITABLE MAXIMS.

A. Misrepresentation, Concealment, Fraud[20] — 1. MISREPRESENTATION — a. In General. That the contract was procured by the false representation of a material fact is a defense to specific performance at the suit of the party who made the representation.[21] In general a less flagrant case of fraud is required to prevent specific performance than to recover damages or to obtain rescission.[22]

Degree of proof.— The fraud to defeat a claim for specific performance need not be proved with the degree of certainty necessary

b. Must Be Affirmation of a Fact. The statement to amount to a misrepresentation must be the positive affirmation of a fact,[23] not the mere expression of an opinion, or a promise or statement of intention or expectation, or other statement as to the future.[24]

c. Must Be Untrue. The statement must of course be untrue.[25]

d. May Be an Honest Misrepresentation. That the person making the false statement had no knowledge of its untruth, or honestly believed it to be true, is immaterial, when the misrepresentation is set up as a defense to specific performance.[26]

e. Must Be Relied Upon. In order to claim the misrepresentation as a defense, the party to whom it was made must have relied upon it and not upon his own judgment or information.[27] A vendee may, however, as a general rule, rely on the vendor's representations concerning the property, if he believes them to be true, although he has opportunities for discovering the truth for himself, and even though he has made a partial examination but without discovering the truth.[28]

f. Must Be Material and Cause Damage. The misrepresentation, to be a defense to a suit for specific performance, must be material,[29] and it must produce damage to defendant and operate to his prejudice; that is, he must be in a worse condition pecuniarily as a result of enforcing the contract than he would be in if the representation were true. Fraud without damage is no defense.[30] But

Misrepresentation as to party to the contract.—Where A, a vendee, was induced by B to enter into the contract by B's false representations that B was agent for C, whereas the extent of the injury to defendant, in order that it may have the effect of defeating specific performance, may be slight.[31]

2. Non-Disclosure — a. In General. A vendee's failure to disclose a fact known to him but unknown to the vendor, which enhances the value of the property, while it may not be a ground for rescission of the contract, has been repeatedly held, in this country, to be a defense to a suit for specific performance.[32] And plaintiff's failure to disclose a material fact known to him has been held a defense in other cases than where plaintiff is a purchaser of land.[33] In England, however, it is held that, if there is no fiduciary relation between vendor and vendee, the latter is not bound to disclose any fact exclusively within his knowledge which might reasonably be expected to influence the price of the thing to be sold. In general mere silence as regards a material fact which one party is under no duty to disclose to the other cannot be a ground for rescission or a defense to specific performance, according to the English doctrine.[34]

B himself was the real party in interest, it was held that the misrepresentation was not a defense, in the absence of proof that A suffered loss thereby, or that he would not have contracted on the same terms with B as principal. Fellowes v. Gwydyr, 1 Russ. & M. 83, 5 Eng. Ch. 83, 39 Eng. Reprint 32. This decision, however, has been frequently criticized. b. Concealed Agency. If the contract was made by defendant through an agent who concealed the fact that he was also agent for the other party, such concealment constitutes a defense.[35] It is no defense that plaintiff purchased for another, to whom he is bound to convey, as this does not concern the vendor.[36] But it has been held a good defense that the contract was negotiated by plaintiffs' agent in his own name without disclosing that plaintiffs were the real parties.[37]

B. Mistake [38] — 1. Mutual Mistake. Mistake about the same matter common to both parties is a ground for reformation or rescission of the contract, and is therefore a defense to a suit for specific performance. The mistake may occur in reducing the agreement to writing so that the written instrument does not express the real agreement of the parties,[39] or it may consist in an erroneous belief or assumption as to the existence or non-existence of a material fact,[40] as, for example, in the case of a mutual mistake as to the amount or quantity of the land or other subject-matter of the contract.[41]

2. Mistake of Defendant Induced by Plaintiff's Conduct. A mistake of defendant, caused or contributed to or made natural and probable by plaintiff's acts, is a well-established ground of defense. This species of mistake most frequently arises when there is in the description or plan of the property a matter on which a person might bona fide make a mistake, but it may arise in other cases.[42]

3. Ambiguity in Contract. Where the contract contains an ambiguous expression, the court has sometimes refused to enforce it against defendant in a sense in which he did not understand it, even though the contract is legally binding in the sense in which it was understood by plaintiff. In such case there is no real meeting of minds.[43]

tributed to by plaintiff has frequently been admitted as a defense, when to enforce the contract would be harsh and unreasonable. In many but not all of the cases defendant's mistake is that of his agent.[44] But where the unilateral mistake was not induced or contributed to in any way by plaintiff, the defense is confined to cases where to grant specific performance would be "highly unreasonable."[45] A mistake which was solely the result of defendant's inexcusable carelessness is not a defense to a suit for specific performance.[46]

5. Mistake of Law. As a rule a mere mistake of law, including mistake as to the legal effect of the contract, without any element of fraud or inequitable conduct, is no ground of defense.[47] But mistake as to foreign law is a mistake of fact, and may be a defense.[48] The same is true of a mistake of law, not in making the contract, but in reducing it to writing.[49] And a mistake of law as to a party's existing rights or interests has so much in common with a mistake of fact that it has frequently been admitted as a defense.[50]

6. Immaterial Mistake. If the conduct of the mistaken party was not in reality determined or influenced by the mistake, it is not a ground of defense.[51]

Ignorance of contents of contract or legal effect.— It is not a defense to an action to specifically enforce a contract executed by one since deceased that decedent was not informed of, and did not know, the true contents or legal effect of the contract when she signed it, where there is no claim that it was the purpose of the other party to the contract to take some unfair advantage of her by fraudulent means, especially where it is not claimed that decedent was mentally weak, or that duress was practised upon her. Contract in unambiguous language.— In Hobbs v. Esquimalt, etc., R. Co., 29 Can. Sup. Ct. 450 [reversing 6 Brit. Col. 228], a railroad company executed an agreement to sell certain lands to H, who entered into possession, made improvements, and paid the purchase-money, whereupon a deed was delivered to him, which he refused to accept, as it reserved the minerals on the land while the agreement was for an unconditional sale. In an action by H for specific performance of the agreement the company contended that in its conveyances the word "land" was always used as meaning land minus the minerals. It was held that the contract for sale being expressed in unambiguous language, and H having had no notice of any reservations, it could not be rescinded on the ground of mistake and he was entitled to a decree for specific performance.

New contract after discovery of mistake.— Mutual mistake as to the quality of land from which one party has agreed to dig gravel for the benefit of the other is no ground for dismissing a bill by the latter for the specific performance of a subsequent written agreement by which other land was substituted by the parties, after the discovery of the mistake, and the former agreed to pay for the first land. Old Colony R. Co. v. Evans, 6 Gray (Mass.) 25, 66 Am. Dec. 394.

defense of mistake.[52] It is variously held that the same degree of proof is not required as would justify setting aside a contract for mistake,[53] and that the evidence of mistake must be very strong.[54]

C. Parol Variation — 1. Parol Evidence of Mistake, Fraud, Etc., in Defense. The defendant in a suit on a written contract may show by parol evidence that, by reason of fraud, accident, surprise, or mistake the contract does not truly exhibit the actual agreement of the parties.[55]

2. Omission of Parol Term of Contract a Defense. That the agreement embodied in the writing is different from the agreement actually made, because the parties intentionally left some of the provisions of the agreement to rest in parol, is also a good defense to the enforcement in equity of the written agreement, according to the prevailing rule unless plaintiff is willing to accept an enforcement of the whole agreement.[56]

3. When Omitted Term May Be Enforced. If the omitted term or provision of the contract is one that is favorable to defendant, its omission from the writing is not a defense, if plaintiff is willing and ready to perform the whole agreement, including the omitted term. This is true whether the omission was intentional[57] or by mistake.[58]

4. When Omitted Term Cannot Be Enforced. The plaintiff cannot have specific performance of a written contract with a parol modification or variation in his favor, where that modification or variation is intentional.[59]

5. Reformation and Specific Performance. By the English rule, which has some following in this country, plaintiff cannot show by parol that by mistake the written agreement does not express the intention of the parties, and have reformation and specific performance of the agreement as thus varied in his favor by parol.[60] The general rule in the United States is otherwise.[61] By the weight of authority in this country also plaintiff may, notwithstanding the statute of frauds, have specific performance of the true contract for the conveyance of land, although a portion of the land was by mistake or fraud omitted from the description in the written instrument.[62]

D. Unfairness, Hardship, Inadequate Consideration, Constructive Fraud, Etc.— 1. Inadequacy of Consideration — a. Standing Alone. In the language of a leading case, "unless the inadequacy of price is such as shocks the conscience, and amounts in itself to conclusive and decisive evidence of fraud in the transaction, it is not itself a sufficient ground for refusing a specific performance;"[63] or, to state the rule more in accordance with modern conceptions of fraud, inadequacy of consideration or of the subject-matter, standing alone as a defense, must be so gross as to lead to an inference, satisfactory to the court, of fraud or mistake in the making of the contract.[64] The rule of

Circumstances repelling inference of fraud.—Reaffirmance by vendor of the original contract of sale on six several occasions, extending over a period of eighteen months, and receipt by him, in the aggregate, of all but two hundred dollars of the price, cannot be some following in the courts of this country.[65] It has been adopted in a few states by statute.[66]

b. With Other Circumstances. But inadequacy or exorbitancy of the consideration, accompanied with other inequitable circumstances, is often of decisive influence in determining the unfairness of the contract. The weight of each circumstance is greatly increased by its conjunction with the other.[67] Such circumstances are undue influence,[68] mental weakness,[69] ignorance of one's legal rights,[70] misrepresentation,[71] intoxication,[72] or a marked inequality in the parties.[73]

2. Unconscionable or Unfair Contracts — a. In General. There is a wide range of contracts which in their inherent nature, and apart from any special relation of the parties, are so unfair, one-sided, and inequitable that, notwithstanding their legal validity, a court of conscience must decline to give its active aid in their enforcement. The great variety of the forms in which such unfairness may occur renders any classification of such contracts difficult. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances. It is in reference to contracts of this sort that a court of equity must exercise a genuine "discretion," with little guide from precedents or special rules.[74] In some states it is expressly provided by

Covenant in a lease of a mine, so incautiously worded that the lessor, at any time after beginning of lease, could prohibit the removal of the lessee's machinery and stock statute that specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract if it is not, as to him, just and reasonable.[75]

b. Where Defendant "Strips Himself." Among the contracts too unconscientious for enforcement in equity are those in which defendant agrees to give up, for an inadequate consideration, all or a great part of his future acquisitions,[76] or relinquishes his entire fortune for a worthless consideration.[77]

c. Where Performance Involves a Forfeiture. Specific performance is usually refused where enforcement of the contract would result in a forfeiture.[78] But the liability to a forfeiture is no defense where it results from defendant's own acts or defaults subsequent to the contract.[79]

Contract as to patents and patent rights. — In Telegraphone Corp. v. Canadian Telegraphone Co., 103 Me. 444, 69 Atl. 767, plaintiff assigned a patent right to defendant, and received therefor twenty-five thousand dollars in cash and one hundred and five thousand dollars in notes, and also retained a beneficial interest in the development of the patent by an agreement that it should receive twenty per cent of the capital stock of defendant. It was also agreed that defendant should raise a working capital of fifty thousand dollars or give plaintiff thirty-four per cent of its capital stock and the resulting control. On defendant's failure to perform

d. Where Performance Subjects Defendant to Danger, Etc. It is a good defense that performance by defendant would endanger his life [80] or expose him to criminal prosecution [81] or obloquy; [82] but it is not generally a defense that it would expose him to the possible inconvenience of sharing his property or business with an undesirable person.[83]

3. Inequality of the Parties — a. Duress, Undue Influence, Mental Weakness. Duress, undue influence, and mental weakness of a degree which would warrant the setting aside of a contract are of course a defense to its specific performance.[84]

b. Intoxication. It is the rule laid down by many cases that defendant's intoxication, of such a degree that he is incapable of giving an intelligent assent, even though it is not unfairly taken advantage of by the other party, and may not be a ground for rescission of the contract, is nevertheless a defense to its specific enforcement. It is certainly a matter to be given great weight in connection with other inequitable incidents.[85] either of these agreements on or before the times specified in the contract, it was agreed that plaintiff should repossess the patent right, and it was also agreed that time should be of the essence of the contract. Defendant failed to perform the agreements within the times specified, and plaintiff brought a bill in equity to compel defendant to specifically perform the contract by transferring the patent right to plaintiff. It was held that the liability to any forfeiture either of the patent right or of the consideration paid for it was not the necessary result of the contract when originally made, but arose from the subsequent default of defendant, and that any apparent hardship on defendant arising from its failure to perform its agreements must be presumed to have been in the contemplation of the parties as the direct result of such default by defendant, and be deemed an insufficient cause for refusing specific performance of the contract.

That defendant is frequently or daily intoxicated does not invalidate a contract otherwise fair. Reinicker v. Smith, 2 Harr & J. (Md.) 421.

c. Defendant's Ignorance and Inexperience. A marked and striking inequality in the business experience and capacity of the parties, resulting in a highly improvident contract, has furnished the chief or sole reason for defeating specific performance in several cases.[86]

d. "Sharp Practice," Etc. Although the contract may be valid and binding at law, where plaintiff's case is tainted with fraud or strong suspicion of fraud or unscrupulous or "sharp" practices, or the contract is extorted from defendant's necessities, the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse specific performance.[87]

4. No Benefit to Plaintiff, Injury to Defendant. The rule has come into favor, especially in recent cases, that specific performance will be refused when it would be of little or no benefit to plaintiff, and work serious injury to defendant.[88]

5. Subsequent Events — a. Which Might Have Been Anticipated. The fairness of a contract, in general, is to be judged as of the date of the contract. The happening of subsequent events injurious to defendant which may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties as events possible to happen is not a defense.[89] company, for the purpose of straightening its main line and bettering its road-bed and service, changed the location of its main line, and thereby left the siding a quarter of a mile from the main line. It was impossible to construct a siding on the new line. See also Dech's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 467, where, because of plaintiff's conduct, vendee of an undivided share could not obtain possession without resorting to force or litigation.

Performance of consideration cut short by death of promisor.— In case of an agreement to devise or bequeath in consideration of rendering of services to the promisor during the remainder of the promisor's life, where plaintiff enters on the performance of the services, but the promisor dies a few days later, the contract by the better view will be enforced, since the chance of an early death was one of the contingencies which the parties must have contemplated. b. Change in Value; Losing Bargain. Mere increase or decrease in value subsequent to the contract is not a defense in the absence of unreasonable delay by plaintiff; nor is the mere fact that the contract turns out to be a losing investment.[90]

c. Subsequent Events Not Anticipated. But subsequent events which the parties cannot reasonably be supposed to have had in mind when the contract was made, and which work a hardship to defendant, have frequently furnished a sufficient reason for refusing specific performance.[91]

Suppl. 74, grantor covenanted to open a street through his land to grantee's lot; the street would, incidentally, benefit grantor's other lots; these lots subsequently became less valuable, rendering the covenant very burdensome to grantor; specific performance refused, although the street was important to the successful conduct of grantee's business.

In Maryland the rule seems otherwise, if defendant is so fortunate as to be a public service corporation. In a suit to enforce specific performance of an ordinance requiring telephone service at specified rates, it was held a good defense that with the increase in number of telephones the operation of a telephone exchange becomes disproportionately more expensive. The court ignored the fact that this well-known peculiarity of the telephone business must have been present in the minds of the officials when the contract with the city was made. Maryland Tel., etc., Co. v. Charles Simons Sons Co., 103 Md. 136, 63 Atl. 314.

Depreciating currency.— The specific performance of contracts payable in a greatly inflated and rapidly depreciating currency, made during the Revolutionary war, or in the confederate states during the Civil war, gave rise to some conflict of decision. In a series of early Maryland cases the courts refused to enforce such contracts. Hopkins v. Stump, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 301; Lawrence v. Dorsey, 4 Harr. & M. (Md.) 205; Chaplin v. Scott, 4 Harr. & M. (Md.) 91; Perkins v. Wright, 3 Harr. & M. (Md.) 324. And see Hudson v. King, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 560, for a strong statement against the policy of enforcement. Where payment had already been made and accepted while the currency had some value, the land was decreed to be conveyed after the currency had become worthless (Turley v. Nowell, 62 N. C. 301); and the same result was reached in a carefully considered case where a prompt tender had been made, although the value of the money had, between the time of the contract and the tender, greatly decreased (Hale v. Wilkinson, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 75). The vendee's laches required a different result in Booten v. Scheffer, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 474; White v. Atkinson, 2 Wash. (Va.) 94, 1 Am. Dec. 470. Where payment did not become due until the currency was wholly worthless, specific performance was refused. Daughdrill v. Edwards, 59 Ala. 424; Love v. Cobb, 63 N. C. 324, the first case holding that the court could, and the second case that it could not, enforce performance on payment of the value of the land at the time of the contract.

6. Contracts of Trustees and Others in Confidential Relation — a. Breach of Trust, in General. The court will not grant a decree for specific performance where to do so would be to assist in a breach of trust or official duty, or a perversion of trust funds.[92]

b. Trustee With no Power to Contract. That defendant is a trustee who, under the terms of his trust, has no power to make the contract is a good defense.[93]

c. Price Must Be Adequate. In case of a sale of property by a trustee in pursuance of the trust the price must be adequate; and especially if the beneficiary is an infant, the contract must be such as the trustee, acting for the best interest of the beneficiary, may properly make.[94]

d. Trustee Purchasing Trust Property. The contract of a trustee or other fiduciary purchasing the trust property in his individual capacity from himself as trustee is voidable in equity, and of course will not be specifically enforced.[95]

Option accepted after introduction of paper currency.— In the leading and often cited case of Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 557, 19 L. ed. 501, an option to purchase in a lease made in 1854 was accepted in 1864, and payment tendered in legal tender notes which had been introduced into the currency meanwhile and were greatly depreciated. Specific performance was decreed only on condition of payment in coin. Whether a contract payable in gold could be enforced on payment in currency had been a subject of some conflict in state courts. Compare Humphrey v. Clement, 44 Ill. 299, with Hall v. Hiles, 2 Bush (Ky.) 532, and Hord v. Miller, 2 Duv. band and wife, or other persons in confidential relations must be marked by the utmost good faith or they will not be specifically enforced.[96]

7. Fraud on Third Parties — a. In General. Where the contract grows out of or is a part of a scheme for defrauding third persons, the court, in obedience to the maxim, "He who comes into equity must come with clean hands," will not grant specific performance.[97]

b. Suppressing Bidding at Auction. An arrangement among persons desiring to purchase property at a public auction, not to bid against each other or otherwise interfering with free competition, is usually a fraud upon the vendor, and a contract involving such an arrangement will not be enforced in equity.[98]

c. Fraud on Creditors. Contracts in fraud of creditors and contracts directly connected with a scheme to defraud creditors cannot be specifically enforced.[99] But the rule does not apply to subsequent contracts not tainted with the fraud of the first transaction.[1]

8. Injustice to Third Parties — a. In General. The rights of third persons who are not parties to the contract may properly be considered by the court in determining whether the contract should be specifically enforced even where such rights become vested after the contract is made.[2]

Inventions and patents.—An employee's agreement to invent, perfect, and improve a certain device, and that the patents therefor shall become the property of his employer, is not contrary to public policy. A. 180. A written contract by which the assignor of a patent agreed to convey to the assignee any future inventions made by him relating to the device of the patent or to improvements thereon is not in violation of public policy, and may be specifically enforced, where necessary to secure to the assignee the value of the patent purchased. Fairchild v. Dement, 164 Fed. 200.

or in some cases rendering the operation of the road dangerous; or to impose a burden upon the railroad out of proportion to the convenience to plaintiff. For one or both of these reasons specific performance has been refused.[6] In other cases it was held that there was no inconvenience or danger to the company or public sufficient to require refusal of specific performance.[7]

E. Want of Mutuality[8] — 1. Vagueness of the Rule as Commonly Stated. The general statement that as a requisite to specific performance there must be mutuality of obligation and of remedy has been made in innumerable cases and is accepted by the text-books as a cardinal principle.[9] The vagueness, obscurity, and artificiality of the rule have frequently been commented upon.[10] Much of the difficulty in which the subject has been involved has arisen from the habit of the courts in using the phrase "lack of mutuality" loosely to indicate a wide range of defects. Thus the meaning sometimes is, that one party has not accepted the other's offer, so that there is no contract to enforce;[11] that the agreement

10. Obscurity of the rule.—"The rule . . . is evidently based upon no principles of abstract right and justice, but, at most, upon notions of expediency; and the arguments in its support are often mere repetitions of time-honored verbal formulas, which, when closely analyzed, are found to have little or no real force and meaning." was made without authority and was therefore illegal;[12] that plaintiff has not complied with a condition precedent;[13] that the memorandum is defective, in not mentioning plaintiff as a party;[14] or that there is no consideration to support defendant's promise;[15] or still more vaguely, in the sense that the contract is unfair and unequal.[16] "Mutuality," in such senses as these, is more appropriately treated elsewhere in this article.

2. Mutuality of Obligation. Taking the phrase "mutuality of obligation" as meaning that the contract must be binding upon plaintiff to a greater extent or in a greater degree than is necessary to support an action at law upon the contract, it will be seen that in every class of cases, with one possible exception, in which such defense has been raised, the courts have finally ruled against it.[17] It may therefore be taken as established that there is no special requisite of "mutuality of obligation" peculiar to the action for specific performance, as distinguished from other actions.[18]

3. Mutuality of Remedy. The requisite of "mutuality of remedy," that is, that the remedy of specific performance must be available against plaintiff in order that complete relief may be given in the single suit stands upon a firmer footing. The court will not grant specific performance to plaintiff and at the same time leave defendant to the legal remedy of damages for possible future breaches of the contract on plaintiff's part.[19] The rule is enacted by statute in

Mutual promises.—Where an oral contract for the purchase of shares of stock in a corporation provided that the purchase might be made by either of the parties as opportunity might offer for their mutual benefit, and that, after the shares were purchased, they should be equally divided between the parties, each paying one half of the purchase-price, the contract does not lack mutuality so as to prevent the court from decreeing specific performance. a few states.[20] This mutuality of remedy, however, need not have existed prior to the time of the decree.[21]

4. Memorandum Not Signed by Plaintiff.[22] The rule was established soon after the enactment of the statute of frauds, that a contract, the memorandum of which was signed by defendant, may be specifically enforced by a plaintiff who has not signed, notwithstanding that for lack of such signature the contract could not be enforced against plaintiff, either in law or in equity, up to the time of the commencement of his suit. Any supposed requirement of mutuality is deemed to be supplied by the filing of the bill. "It is considered when the party files the bill he does an act that will bind him, and that from that time there is mutuality; . . . and that the other party cannot plead the statute, because the words only prevent an action from being brought where the agreement is not signed by the party to be charged or his agent."[23] In a number of states the statute requires a signature by the vendor or lessor, and such signature renders the contract binding upon both parties; in these states therefore the objection that the contract lacks mutuality because plaintiff has not signed cannot properly arise.[24] A contract to convey lands can be specifically enforced, although signed by the vendor only, where the purchaser has paid all the price to be paid in cash and has entered into possession.[25]

5. Unilateral or Conditional Contracts. The fact that defendant's offer does not ripen into a binding contract until the performance of some act by plaintiff, which act constitutes both an acceptance of the offer and supplies a consideration, as in the case of an agreement to convey land on condition of plaintiff's performing certain work, does not, after the performance of such act, render the contract objectionable in equity on the score of lack of mutuality in obligation. There is no special equitable requirement of mutuality of obligation in such cases, beyond the legal requirement of a valid and binding contract.[26]

6. Options — a. In General. An option to purchase, given upon a valuable consideration, including an option to purchase contained in a lease, is a binding contract, and not a revocable offer from which the giver may withdraw before acceptance. Upon notice of acceptance, given within the time limited by the option, and upon the performance of the conditions precedent, if any, which are imposed, there arises an ordinary contract of sale and purchase, enforceable by either vendor or vendee. The fact that until such acceptance there was no mutuality of obligation — nothing which the vendee was bound to do — is no obstacle in the way of specific performance. This is now the settled rule in nearly all jurisdictions.[27] The same rule applies to options to give or renew a

"An option to buy or sell land, more than any other form of contract, contemplates a specific performance of its terms; and it is the right to have them specifically enforced that imparts to them their usefulness and value. An option to buy or sell a town lot may be valuable when the party can have the contract specifically enforced, but, if he cannot do this, and must resort to an action at law for damages, his option in most cases will be of little or no value. c. Option Under Seal. Where the option is under seal, but is without actual consideration, and is attempted to be withdrawn by the giver before acceptance, there is a sharp conflict of authority as to the effect to be given to the seal in specific performance. It is held, on one hand, that the seal renders the offer irrevocable by the common-law rule, and that this rule should be followed by courts of equity. The court does not, in so doing, violate the doctrine that voluntary contracts under seal are not enforced, since the contract enforced is that created by the acceptance of the option or offer.[32] In other cases it is held that the court of equity should in this case as in others look at the substance and not the form and, disregarding the seal, treat the offer as revocable until acceptance.[33]

7. Vendor Plaintiff Need Not Perfect Title Before Decree. So far as the objection of lack of mutuality of remedy is concerned, it is not necessary that the vendor when suing for specific performance shall have been in a position to convey a good title at any time before the decree. The fact that if the vendee had sued for specific performance before that time he would not have obtained what his price, but by a subsequent provision the only penalty for failure or refusal, at any time, to complete the purchase, was the forfeiture, as liquidated damages, of all sums previously paid. It was held that under the latter provision the element of mutuality would never attach until final payment of the full purchase-price, for until then plaintiff would not be bound; hence he could not maintain specific performance before final payment of the full purchase-price.

A recited consideration of one dollar, either stipulated or paid, has been held insufficient. Rude v. Levy, 43 Colo. 482, 96 Pac. 560, 127 Am. St. Rep. 123.

Where the option is in a lease, there is a consideration, since it may be deemed a material inducement to the lease. Monihon v. Wakelin, 6 Ariz. 225, 56 Pac. 735. In Swanston v. Clark, 153 Cal. 300, 95 Pac. 1117, a lease gave the lessee an option to purchase the premises for a fixed price at any time during the term. The lessee agreed to pay a higher rent than he considered the premises worth, because he was obtaining an option. The rent was paid for one year in advance, the rent under a prior lease accruing after the beginning of the new lease was canceled, and rent accruing under the prior lease, prior to the new term, was paid in advance. It was held that the option to purchase was supported by a sufficient consideration, and the lessee, on election to purchase, could compel specific performance.

That an extension of time in which to exercise the option, without a new consideration, is not binding see Coleman v. Applegarth, 68 Md. 21, 11 Atl. 284, 6 Am. St. Rep. 417; Cummins v. Beavers, 103 Va. 230, 48 S. E. 891, 106 Am. St. Rep. 881.

Demurrer to bill.— It has also been held that, although the want of consideration for contract called for is no defense to the vendor's suit, if the vendor is finally able to convey a perfect title. This is the rule in nearly all jurisdictions.[34]

8. Remedy Not Mutual Because of Defendant's Default. It is no excuse that defendant, by delay or other conduct on his part subsequent to the contract, may have lost his right to the equitable relief against plaintiff. No one can take advantage of his own laches.[35]

9. Lack of Mutuality Because of Defendant's Constructive Fraud. A beneficiary can enforce a contract of sale between him and the trustee, although such contract is not binding upon the beneficiary. His exemption from liability is a personal one which he may waive.[36] In England a purchaser may enforce the contract against a vendor who has made a prior voluntary settlement,[37] although the sealed option may be shown on the trial, a bill for specific performance is not demurrable for failure to show an actual consideration, since the seal prima facie imports a consideration. Borel v. Mead, 3 N. M. 84, 2 Pac. 222.

Defendant's defective title.—It is a familiar rule that the vendee may have specific performance against a defendant whose title fails to part of the estate, or is defective, although the vendor in turn could not force the title upon the vendee. See infra, VII, B, 2, 5.

the vendor in such case cannot maintain a suit for specific performance and force the title upon such purchaser.[38]

10. Infant Plaintiff. Specific performance of an infant's contract at his suit is refused, in England, on the ground that there is no mutuality of remedy;[39] but this ruling has not been universally followed in this country, since it enables the other party to the contract to take advantage of plaintiff's infancy, and thus contravenes the general policy of the law relating to infant's contracts.[40] After the infant becomes of age, he may enforce in equity contracts made by him during his minority; the fact that they were previously voidable by him is no defense.[41]

11. Married Woman Plaintiff. It has been frequently held that husband and wife may sue to enforce a contract made by the wife, since by bringing suit she submits to perform her part of the contract.[42] If she has fully performed her part, all objection on the ground of lack of mutuality in the remedy has disappeared.[43]

12. Plaintiff's Promise Unenforceable by Decree. If, after a decree against defendant, there remain to be done, under the contract, acts on plaintiff's part of such a character either that the court cannot frame a decree to enforce them, or that it cannot carry out such decree without unduly taxing the time and attention of the court, specific performance is usually refused.[44] Thus relief is refused

40. "This right and prerogative [to avoid an infant's contracts] is personal, however, and attaches to the infant alone. Under no circumstances can it be available to or be taken advantage of by the other party to the contract." Seaton v. Tohill, 11 Colo. App. 211, 53 Pac. 170, 171 (in this case, however, the infant had fully performed, and there was nothing to enforce against him); Smith v. Smith, 36 Ga. 184, 91 Am. Dec. 761 (contract made by trustee of the infant). See Infants, 22 Cyc. 609, 610. A contract between adults, one of whom has died, may be enforced by an infant heir, although not enforceable against such heir; since the rule as to mutuality does not apply to cases in which mutuality existing at the time of the contract is taken away by a subsequent contingent event (Moore v. Randolph, 6 Leigh (Va.) 175, 29 Am. Dec. 208); and a contract made between adults for the benefit of infants may be enforced by them (Sarter v. Gordon, 2 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 121); as may a contract made by a party competent to contract in an infant's behalf (Guard v. Bradley, 7 Ind. 600).

Where the contract is absolutely void.— In several cases the courts discuss the doctrine of mutuality with reference to a married woman's contracts unnecessarily it would appear, since under the statute of the states in question the contracts of a married woman being absolutely void there is, in reality, no contract for the court to enforce against defendants. where plaintiff's promise is too indefinite to be enforced;[45] where the contract calls for strictly personal services on the part of plaintiff, such as care and support,[46] or business services, as agent, manager, surveyor, partner, attorney, etc.;[47] or

If an injunction is the relief sought, it is often possible to secure the performance of plaintiff's stipulations indirectly, by making the injunction conditional on continued performance by plaintiff, and dissolving the injunction when a breach on his part appears. See Standard Fashion Co. v. Siegel-Cooper Co., 157 N. Y. 60, 51 N. E. 408, 68 Am. St. Rep. 749, 43 L. R. A. 854 [affirming 30 N. Y. App. Div. 564, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 443]; Singer Sewing-Mach. Co., 33 Iowa 422), seems not to be always applied. Thus, where defendants agreed to convey land to plaintiff railroad company, in consideration of its erecting and maintaining a depot, plaintiff's liability for future breaches of its contract to maintain the depot was held a sufficient security for the performance of its duty in this respect (Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 76 Iowa 306, 41 N. W. 24, 14 Am. St. Rep. 216). Similarly, defendant's agreement to convey in consideration of plaintiff's maintaining a college of standard grade for ten years was enforced, although the ten years had not expired. Des Moines University v. Polk County Homestead, etc., Co., 87 Iowa 36, 53 N. W. 1080. In this case, however, the performance by plaintiff was further secured by a condition subsequent in the contract, forfeiting the land on failure of such performance.

In Missouri the same is true of Pomeroy v. Fullerton, 113 Mo. 440, 21 S. W. 19.

In New Jersey also, where the vendor's security for the performance of plaintiff vendee's covenant to build on the land after conveyance was intended to rest upon the good faith of plaintiff and the obligation of his covenant to build, specific performance was not refused. Where defendant contracted to give plaintiff a privilege and has received full payment therefor, but cannot compel plaintiff to continue in its enjoyment, the rule requiring mutuality of remedy has no application. Defendant, in such case, obviously would be the gainer and not the loser by plaintiff's ceasing to use the privilege. Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 50, 11 S. Building or construction contracts see supra, III, C, 4, a.

A contract to convey land to a railroad company for a right of way is not lacking in mutuality because it contains an introductory recital that, "Whereas [the railroad company] proposes to build a line of railway," etc., where it is obvious that the recital is not a covenant to build a railroad, which covenant could not be specifically enforced, but only a representation as an inducement to the contract, the truth or falsity of which would influence the court in granting or refusing specific performance. will by defendant will not be the subject of a decree, since it is to be presumed that the decree will at once be nullified by defendant.[50]

F. Doubtful Title — 1. General Rules — a. Marketable Title. In a suit by the vendor to enforce performance of a contract for the sale of land, the vendee will not be compelled to accept the title unless it is a marketable one; that is, one which will not expose him to litigation. To force upon the vendee a title which he may be compelled to defend in the courts is to impose upon him a hard bargain; and this a court of equity, in the exercise of its discretion, will refuse to do, irrespective of the question whether the title is actually good or bad.[51]

The rule originated in some remarks in the course of the opinion in Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 339, 19 L. ed. 955, in which case, however, there were several other defenses of undoubted validity. In Rust v. Conrad, 47 Mich. 449, 11 N. W. 265, 41 Am. Rep. 720, it was the ground of the decision; a natural decision, since the court had recently refused specific performance of an ordinary option. Later cases, relying on these, seem to accept the rule as well established by unquestionable authority. None of the opinions give evidence of having weighed the very serious objections to the policy of the rule. There is no real analogy between the position of a defendant, resisting specific performance, who may at will nullify the decree, and that of a plaintiff, who has given the most practical possible demonstration of his desire to carry out the contract by engaging in a lawsuit for the purpose. To call the decree in the latter case an "idle formality" (Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co., 112 Fed. 373 [affirmed in 121 Fed. 674, 57 C. C. A. 428]) is to outrage common sense. To decline relief in these cases on a ground so technical as to outlaw a large species of most important contracts, in which it is necessary, for one party's protection, that the duration of the contract should be more or less indefinite. Rust v. Conrad, supra, for instance, dealt such a blow to the development of the mineral resources of Michigan that it was quickly overruled by statute. Laws (1883), Act No. 73; Grummett v. Gingrass, 77 Mich. 369, 43 N. W. 999. Several of the cases cited, where plaintiff, in reliance on the contract, had incurred large expenditures, can only be described as flagrant miscarriages of justice. See Fowler Utilities Co. v. Gray, 168 Ind. 1, 79 N. E. 897, 7 L. R. A. N. S. 726, ignoring the previous decision of the same court in St. Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Globe Tissue Paper Co., 156 Ind. 665, 59 N. E. 995.

51. "If, therefore, there be any reasonable chance that some third person may raise a question against the owner of the estate after the completion of the contract, the court may consider this to be a circumstance which renders the bargain a hard one for the purchaser, and one which in the exercise of its discretion it will not compel him to execute." The rule also applies to an agreement for a lease.[52] The court will not compel performance by the lessee if the lessor's title is defective or doubtful.

b. Where Other Claimants Are Parties to Suit. If, however, the claimants or persons interested in the title, other than the vendor, are parties to the suit for specific performance, so that their claim may be settled by the decree therein, the objection cannot be raised that the title exposes the vendee to litigation.[53]

c. Mere Possibility of Litigation. The doubt, to avail as a defense, must be a reasonable one, and rest upon some debatable ground. A bare possibility of litigation does not render a title doubtful.[54]

d. Doubtful, Although Court's Opinion Is Favorable. The opinion of the court in favor of the validity of the title is not decisive. It is the duty of the court not to have regard to its own opinion only, but to take into account what the opinion of other competent persons may be. The court has no means of binding the question as against adverse claimants, or of indemnifying the purchaser, if its own opinion should ultimately turn out not to be well founded.[55]

e. Opinion of Attorneys. The opinion of an attorney, however eminent, that a title is bad is not sufficient of itself to compel the court to declare that the title is doubtful, although it may have the effect to cause the court to scrutinize the matter carefully.[56]

f. Opinion of Other Courts. The rule appears to be settled, in England, that the adverse opinion of the trial court does not necessarily render the title doubtful in the appellate court. A contrary rule would amount to leaving the ultimate decision to the lower court.[57] A decision by a court of coördinate jurisdiction, adverse to the principle on which the title rests, it has been held, will raise a sufficient doubt.[58] But it has been held that a judge may hold a title free from doubt, although another judge has decided it to be doubtful.[59]

law, the court should judge whether the law upon the point is or is not settled, enforcing specific performance in the former case.[60] The result of modern English decisions seems to be that specific performance should not be decreed if there is reasonable ground for saying that the question is not settled by previous authorities, or if there are decisions or dicta of weight which show that another judge or another court hearing the question before it might come to a different conclusion.[61]

h. Doubtful Construction of Instrument. Where the question is not one regarding a general principle of law, but the doubt arises concerning the construction of some "inartificial and illy expressed instrument" in the chain of title, specific performance should not be compelled, even though the court itself may lean in favor of the title.[62] evidence, the case must be made very clear by the vendor to warrant the court in ordering specific performance. The opinion of the chancellor or of the appellate court can have little if any curative effect upon a doubtful title where the doubt relates to a matter of fact; since a disputed fact may be proved in one litigation to-day and disproved in another between different parties to-morrow.[63] But "a title dependent on a fact must be regarded as marketable where (1) the fact is so conclusively proved in a suit by the vendor for specific performance that a verdict against the existence of the fact would not be allowed to stand in a court of law, and (2) where there is no reasonable ground for apprehending that the same fact cannot be in like manner proved, if necessary, at any time thereafter for the protection of the purchaser."[64]

b. Doubt as to Power of Sale. A doubt, generally of law, sometimes of fact, frequently arises as to the existence, validity, or proper exercise of a power of sale by an executor or trustee, where the vendor's title is derived through such sale.[67]

c. Doubt From Defective Conveyance. The doubt may arise from some defect in a conveyance in the vendor's chain of title.[68]

Ch. 58, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 177, 15 Wkly. Rep. 149.

68. Black v. Aman, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 131 (imperfect acknowledgment); Smith v. Turner, 50 Ind. 367 (mistake in description); Heller v. Cohen, 154 N. Y. 299, 48 N. E. 527 [reversing 9 N. Y. App. Div. 465, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 214] (misdescription); Irving v. Campbell, 121 N. Y. 353, 24 N. E. 821, 8 L. R. A. 620 [reversing 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 224, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 103] (insufficiently acknowledged deed); Bensel v. Gray, 80 N. Y. 517 [affirming 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 372] [defective tax lease); Paolillo v. Faher, 56 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 638 (defective acknowledgment of power of attorney); Tiffin v. Shawhan, 43 Ohio St. 178, 1 N. E. 581 (informal and defective conveyance by a city).

But the fact that a deed in the chain of title was not acknowledged or recorded until after the grantee's death does not give rise to a doubt whether it was delivered in his lifetime, since delivery is presumed to have been made at the time of execution. Conley v. Finn, 171 Mass. 70, 50 N. E. 460, 68 Am. St. Rep. 399.

A misdescription may be sufficiently cured by intrinsic evidence furnished by the deed, making the real meaning apparent. Brookman v. Kurzman, 94 N. Y. 272, 66 How. Pr. 237.

Misnomer in name of grantor cured by evidence see Hellreigel v. Manning, 97 N. Y. 56.

d. Doubt From Judicial Sale. The doubt or defect frequently arises where the title depends on the regularity or validity of a judicial sale, or of the proceedings leading to such sale, or of a transfer of title made by order of court.[69]

e. Encumbrances — (i) In General. A vendee who has a right to a good title cannot be compelled to accept a title which is defective because of outstanding, valid encumbrances, or which may expose him to litigation because clouded with encumbrances whose validity is a matter of dispute.[70] This applies where

69. District of Columbia.—American Security, etc., Co. v. Muse, 4 App. Cas. 12, question of jurisdiction of court to order sale.

Louisiana.— James v. Meyer, 41 La. Ann. 1100, 7 So. 618, minors parties to partition proceeding not represented by guardian.

Maryland.— Gill v. Wells, 59 Md. 492.

Massachusetts.— Martin v. Hamlin, 176 Mass. 180, 57 N. E. 381, foreclosure sale of doubtful validity.

Minnesota.— Williams v. Schembri, 44 Minn. 250, 46 N. W. 403, guardian's sale not in conformity with order of court.

New Jersey.— Young v. Rathbone, 16 N. J. Eq. 224, 84 Am. Dec. 151, will not force a title depending on illegal or invalid sale, while it remains open to revision at the discretion of a court of law, although the judgment unreversed might be conclusive of the parties' rights.

New York.— Palmer v. Morrison, 104 N. Y. 132, 10 N. E. 144 [affirming 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 530] (defective sale by assignee in bankruptcy); Croshy v. Thedford, 13 Daly 150, 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 245 (foreclosure sale, court not having jurisdiction of the parties).

Pennsylvania.— Holmes v. Woods, 168 Pa. St. 530, 32 Atl. 54 (partition sale in which contingent interests were not represented); Swain v. Fidelity Ins., etc., Safe Deposit Co., 54 Pa. St. 455 (title founded upon irregular partition proceedings, from which minor parties may, after attaining their majority, take a writ of error).

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 272.

Transfer of title by decree of foreign court. — A title depending on a decree of a foreign court ordering a transfer of land within the local jurisdiction is defective. Watts v. Waddle, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 389, 8 L. ed. 437 [affirming 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,295, 1 McLean 200].

Title not doubtful see Small v. Marburg, 77 Md. 11, 25 Atl. 920; Day v. Kingsland, 57 N. J. Eq. 134, 41 Atl. 99 (title depended on partition proceedings, the record title being good on its face, burden was on vendee to show facts making title doubtful); Ebling v. Dreyer, 149 N. Y. 460, 44 N. E. 155 (alleged defects rested wholly on construction of statute and decree made thereunder); Greenblatt v. Hermann, 144 N. Y. 13, 38 N. E. 966 [affirming 69 Hun 298, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 565] (probate sale, petition for which was sufficient to give jurisdiction. "If defect or doubt . . . depends upon some extrinsic fact not disclosed by the record, [vendee] must show the fact"); Althause v. Radde, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 410 (although guardian for infants failed to answer or enter appearance in partition proceedings until after judgment); Sloane v. Martin, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 661 (legal presumption of regularity of judicial proceedings); Dalzell v. Crawford, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 37, 2 Pa. L. J. 17 (omissions in the judicial process through which the title passed, which omissions could be supplied by amendments by the court in which the proceeedings were had, not a sufficient objection).

Community property.—Where a grantee of community property acquiring title to an undivided half from the survivor of the community individually and to the other half from him as administrator of the deceased member of the community, in proceedings for the administration of the undivided half, contracted to sell the property to a third person, who took possession thereof and made a partial payment, and who refused either to accept a return of the price paid, or to yield his possession, the grantee was entitled to sue for specific performance. Wiley v. Verhaest, 52 Wash. 475, 100 Pac. 1008.

70. Illinois.— Harding v. Olson, 177 Ill. 298, 52 N. E. 482, clouded with adverse liens.

Louisiana.— Fitzpatrick v. Leake, 47 La. Ann. 1643, 18 So. 649, encumbered by mortgage of record.

Maryland.— Kraft v. Egan, 78 Md. 36, 26 Atl. 1082, land subject to ground-rent.

Massachusetts.— Loring v. Whitney, 167 Mass. 550, 46 N. E. 57 (encumbered by deed of trust of doubtful validity); Sturtevant v. Jacques, 14 Allen 523 (on the face of the title papers, property was subject to a trust, and there was no proof that the trust had been discharged); Park v. Johnson, 7 Allen 378 (subject to mortgages more onerous than those stated in the contract).

Minnesota.—Corey v. Clarke, 55 Minn. 311, 56 N. W. 1063, outstanding mechanic's lien claims.

New York.— Dyker Meadow Land, etc., Co. v. Cook, 159 N. Y. 6, 53 N. E. 690 [affirming 3 N. Y. App. Div. 164, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 222] (local assessment on the land which might be valid); Hinckley v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 21; Reeder v. Schneider, 3 Thomps. & C. 104.

Oregon.—Sanford v. Wheelan, 12 Oreg. 301, 7 Pac. 324.

Pennsylvania.— Mitchell v. Steinmetz, 97 Pa. St. 251 (municipal claims); Nicol v. Carr, 35 Pa. St. 381 (railroad mortgages, the validity of which presented grave questions).

United States.— Wesley v. Eells, 177 U. S. 370, 20 S. Ct. 661, 44 L. ed. 810 [affirming 90 Fed. 151] (mortgage); Garnett v. Macon, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,245, 2 Brock. 185. The last case points out the difference in the effect of an admitted charge, to which the purchase-money may be applied (see infra, IV, F, 2, e, the title is encumbered or clouded by a judgment,[71] by an inchoate dower right,[72] by a right of homestead,[73] by community property rights,[74] or by an easement.[75]

(II) Encumbrances Which Can Be Discharged From the Purchase-Money. Mortgages or other encumbrances which can be discharged out of the purchase-money do not constitute a bar to the action.[76]

(III) Dormant or Invalid Liens. Liens which, beyond a reasonable doubt, are dormant or invalid, do not render the title unmarketable.[77]

(IV) Restrictive Covenants or Conditions. A vendee who has a right to a good title cannot be forced to take the property when it is subject to covenants or conditions restricting its use.[78]

(II)) and a contested charge which will involve the vendee in litigation.

71. Brown v. Barngrover, 82 Iowa 204, 47 N. W. 1082; Walsh v. Barton, 24 Ohio St. 28 (although there is other property sufficient to satisfy the lien); Newberry v. French, 98 Va. 479, 36 S. E. 519 (where the liens greatly exceeded the price).

But a judgment from which the vendor has appealed, with an appeal-bond and ample security against the amount of the judgment with costs, is not a defect. Brewer v. Herbert, 30 Md. 301, 96 Am. Dec. 582.

72. Parks v. Brooks, 16 Ala. 529; Beavers v. Baucum, 33 Ark. 722, where acknowledgment set forth relinquishment of dower, but deed itself contained no relinquishment. Compare infra, VII, B, 2, e.

Dower in land of intermediate grantor barred by widow in election to take under the will see Fairchild v. Marshall, 42 Minn. 14, 43 N. W. 563.

73. Castlebury v. Maynard, 95 N. C. 281, sale of homestead without joinder of wife; title defective.

74. In Louisiana, a married woman, vendor, must overcome the presumption that the property is community. Hero v. Block, 44 La. Ann. 1032, 11 So. 821; Duruty v. Musacchia, 42 La. Ann. 357, 7 So. 555.

75. McPherson v. Schade, 149 N. Y. 16, 43 N. E. 527 [affirming 8 Misc. 424, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 659] (right of way); Remsen v. Wingert, 112 N. Y. App. Div. 234, 98 N. Y. Suppl. 388 [affirmed in 188 N. Y. 632, 81 N. E. 1174] (easement of light).

But the right of an adjoining owner to use a party-wall did not constitute a defect, since the value of the premises was not diminished. Hendricks v. Stark, 37 N. Y. 106, 93 Am. Dec. 549.

76. Kansas.— Guild v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 57 Kan. 70, 45 Pac. 82, 57 Am. St. Rep. 312, 33 L. R. A. 77.

Louisiana.— Grimshaw v. Hart, 6 Rob. 265, mortgagee's offer to release, on vendee's compliance with terms of the sale.

New York.— Frain v. Klein, 18 N. Y. App. Div. 64, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 394; Guynet v. Mantel, 4 Duer 86; Rinaldo v. Hausmann, 52 How. Pr. 190; Keating v. Gunther, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 734.

South Dakota.— Edmison v. Zborowski, 9 S. D. 40, 68 N. W. 288.

Texas.— Upton v. Maurice, (Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 642.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 267. See infra, VII, B, 4.

The possibility of claims by unknown assignees of the mortgage notes was met by a decree providing for indemnity out of the purchase-money in Rife v. Lybarger, 49 Ohio St. 422, 31 N. E. 768, 17 L. R. A. 403.

But where the cash payment is not adequate to discharge the mortgage, the case is otherwise; although the encumbrancers have verbally agreed to release their encumbrances and accept the mortgage to be given by the purchaser. Hinckley v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 21; Reeder v. Schneider, 3 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 104.

77. Nebraska.— Solt v. Anderson, 62 Nebr. 153, 86 N. W. 1076.

New Jersey.— Young v. Collier, 31 N. J. Eq. 444 (uncanceled mortgage, which appeared by the accounts of the administrator of the mortgagor, and by indorsements on the mortgage, to have been paid over sixty years; and lien for unpaid taxes which had been paid); Miller v. Miller, 25 N. J. Eq. 354 (judgments against heir of vendor, not a lien on the property).

New York.— See Falvey v. Bridges, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 848 (where the claim had been released); Seligman v. Sonneborn, 11 N. Y. St. 305; Doll v. Ingram, 8 N. Y. St. 253 (record of a contract to convey the land made by a person without authority, not a cloud on the title).

Pennsylvania.— Espy v. Anderson, 14 Pa. St. 308, sufficient for vendor to prove payment of judgment, although satisfaction was not entered on the docket.

Virginia.— Richards v. Mercer, 1 Leigh 125, strong reasons for believing that whole of mortgage debt had been paid.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," §§ 266–268.

78. Shea v. Evans, 109 Md. 229, 72 Atl. 600; Peabody Heights Co. v. Willson, 82 Md. 186, 32 Atl. 386, 1077, 36 L. R. A. 393 (building restrictions); Newbold v. Peabody Heights Co., 70 Md. 493, 17 Atl. 372, 3 L. R. A. 579; Wetmore v. Bruce, 118 N. Y. 319, 23 N. E. 303 [affirming 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 149] (the restriction impairs value of the land); Altman v. McMillin, 115 N. Y. App. Div. 234, 100 N. Y. Suppl. 970; Goodrich v. Pratt, 114 N. Y. App. Div. 771, 100 N. Y. Suppl. 187 (although the restriction does not lessen the value of the land); Ray-

f. Encroachments. Where the building sold encroaches upon the adjoining land of a stranger, and title to the part encroached upon has not been obtained by adverse possession, the defect is fatal, unless the encroachment is insignificant in extent.[79]

g. Suit Pending Against Vendor. That another suit for recovery of the land or an interest therein is pending against the vendor usually renders the title doubtful;[80] but title has been forced upon the vendee notwithstanding such pending suit, when it appeared to the satisfaction of the court that such suit could not succeed or where the complaint therein did not state a cause of action.[81]

h. Fraud or Breach of Trust Causing Doubt. A title is doubtful where it appears by inference from the record, or on facts shown outside of the record, that there is a reasonable chance that a conveyance in the vendor's chain of title may be avoided for fraud or breach of trust.[82] But such objection may be obviated by proof that the vendor was a bona fide purchaser, without notice, actual or constructive, of the fraud.[83] nor v. Lyon, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 227; Post v. Bernheimer, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 247 (condition of doubtful validity); Post v. Weil, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 418; Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. St. 460, 29 Atl. 868; Anders' Estate, 12 Phila. 45 (restrictions might affect value of property); National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 65 Fed. 691 (sale of waterworks; company was under contract to supply water to a third party).

Immaterial reservation.— But it is no objection to the title that it is subject to a reservation of mines, water power, etc., where there is nothing in or upon the land to which the reservation can apply (Winne v. Reynolds, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 407); and it has been held that ordinary building restrictions applying to a whole neighborhood do not constitute encumbrances unless they affect the marketable quality of the title (Egle v. Morrison, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 497).

79. McPherson v. Schade, 149 N. Y. 16, 43 N. E. 527 [affirming 8 Misc. 424, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 659]; Spero v. Shultz, 14 N. Y. App. Div. 423, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 1016 [affirmed in 160 N. Y. 660, 55 N. E. 1101] (one wall on adjoining lot); McDonald v. Bach, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 96, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 557 [affirmed in 51 N. Y. App. Div. 549, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 831] (plaintiff's wall overlapped three fourths of an inch; insignificant); Drake v. Shiels, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 209; Sassertah v. Metzgar, 30 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 407, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 959 (possible encroachment of one inch upon street; no risk to purchaser).

80. Linn v. McLean, 80 Ala. 360; Simon v. Vanderveer, 155 N. Y. 377, 49 N. E. 1043, 63 Am. St. Rep. 683 (adverse claimant had filed a complaint good on its face, vendee need not examine the evidence on which the suit was based); Ambrose v. Kuhn, 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 338, 26 Cinc. L. Bul. 127 (other suit not frivolous); Hopple v. Overbeck, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 296, 20 Cinc. L. Bul. 25.

81. Owings v. Baldwin, 8 Gill (Md.) 337; Aldrich v. Bailey, 132 N. Y. 85, 30 N. E. 264 [reversing 8 N. Y. Suppl. 435], suit to set aside deed in chain of title did not show that present vendor purchased with notice of the fraud. See Bull v. Hutchens, 32 Beav. 615, 9 Jur. N. S. 954, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 716, 11 Wkly. Rep. 866, 55 Eng. Reprint 242, registered lis pendens does not create a lien, but merely puts purchaser on inquiry as to validity of the claim. But see Hopple v. Overbeck, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 296, 20 Cinc. L. Bul. 25, where specific performance was refused, although the court believed the pending suit to be groundless.

V. PART PERFORMANCE OF ORAL CONTRACTS, GIFTS, EASEMENTS, AND LICENSES.[88]

A. General Principles — 1. THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS. The clauses of the English statute of frauds which are affected by the doctrine of part performance are as follows: "No action shall be brought . . . (3) to charge any Person upon any Agreement made upon Consideration of Marriage; (4) or upon any Contract or Sale of Lands, Tenements or Hereditaments, or any Interest in or concerning them; (5) or upon any Agreement that is not to be performed within the Space of one Year from the making thereof; (6) unless the Agreement upon which such Action shall be brought, or some Memorandum or Note thereof, shall be in Writing, and signed by the Party to be charged therewith, or some other Person thereunto by him lawfully authorized." [89]

2. STATUTE OF FRAUDS NOT AN INSTRUMENT OF FRAUD. It has been a fundamental principle of the courts of equity from the beginning, in dealing with the statute, that it shall not be made a means of committing a fraud, especially as its expressed purpose was the prevention of a large class of frauds and perjuries.[90] In particular the rule was early established that if plaintiff was induced by the actual fraud of defendant to dispense with a written memorandum of the contract, he may have specific performance notwithstanding the statute.[91] But the fact that defendant has promised to reduce the agreement to writing and afterward refuses to comply with the promise does not constitute such a fraud.[92]

There is considerable variety in the wording of the statutes in the different states of this country, but this variety has not, in general, prevented the adoption of the English doctrine of part performance, which had been formulated before the enactment of the American statutes. See Pugh v. Good, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 56, 37 Am. Dec. 534.

Plaintiff may be compelled to comply with oral contract as condition of relief.— In pursuance of the general principle, and of the maxim, "He who seeks equity, must do equity," the court may indirectly enforce a contract not directly enforceable either in law or equity, by making plaintiff's relief conditional on his performing an agreement which failed to comply with the formalities of the statute of frauds. by way of carrying out a parol contract for the sale of lands warrant a court of equity in decreeing specific performance, notwithstanding the statute of frauds, was established, in England, within less than a decade after the enactment of the statute.[93] It may be conjectured that the reluctance of the courts of equity to comply fully with the apparent prohibitions of the statute sprang from a fear that a radical change in the habits of an agricultural people, relating to so vital a matter as the sale and leasing of land, could not safely be effected by legislative enactment;[94] that a literal enforcement of the statute would result in frauds and hardships far more widespread than those which it was designed to suppress.[95]

4. Attitude of the Courts Toward the Doctrine. During the first century of its existence the doctrine was in several instances interpreted much more liberally in plaintiff's favor than at the present day.[96] By the beginning of the nineteenth century, however, a strong reaction had set in. By many of the American courts it was adopted with great reluctance;[97] and strong expressions in condemnation of the doctrine, and in praise of the general policy of the statute of frauds, are very frequent in the reports.[98] In somewhat recent years, however, these expressions appear to have become less frequent; and it is noteworthy that some of the most familiar applications of the doctrine in this country at the present day are almost unknown to or distinctly repudiated by the English courts.[99]

5. To What Contracts the Doctrine Applies — a. In General. The doctrine of part performance does not apply to contracts not to be performed within a year, and not relating to land;[1] nor to a promise, invalid because oral, to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another.[2] The provision of the statute relating to contracts not to be performed within a year does not extend to contracts for the sale of land which have been partly performed. If the contract is for an

Redesdale: "That statute was made for the purpose of preventing perjuries and frauds, and nothing can be more manifest to any person who has been in the habit of practising in courts of equity, than that the relaxation of that statute has been a ground of much perjury and much fraud. If the statute had been rigorously observed, the result would probably have been that few instances of parol agreements would have occurred," etc.). In Moore v. Small, supra, Woodward, J., in the course of very forcible observations on the statutes, says: "It is remarkable how completely, both in England and Pennsylvania, the public mind has acquiesced in these enactments. History tells of no popular movement in either of these representative governments, for the repeal or material modification of the statute of frauds and perjuries. Chancellors and judges have often manifested great uneasiness under its operation, and have expounded and refined until the rule has ceased to be looked for in the statute itself, but must be tracked through volumes of jarring and contradictory decisions. The people however, whose representatives furnished the rule, have indicated their willingness that it should have full course, by never calling on their representatives to repeal it."

interest in land, the fact that it is not to be performed within a year is no obstacle to its specific performance, if there has been sufficient part performance to take it out of the clause of the statute relating to contracts for the sale of land.[3]

b. Sale of Equitable Interests. The doctrine of part performance applies to the sale of equitable interests, as of unpatented land.[4]

c. Contracts of Corporations. Acts of part performance are binding upon corporations equally as well as upon individuals.[5]

d. Parol Variation. The doctrine of part performance applies not only to a contract resting wholly in parol, but also to a parol variation of a written contract;[6] but the parol modification is not validated by part performance of the written contract, to which the act of part performance is referable.[7]

e. Sales Under Direction of Court Not Within Statute. While the statute of frauds applies to ordinary sales by auction, it does not apply, in England, to certain sales under the direction of the court.[8]

6. Fraud or Estoppel the Foundation of the Doctrine — a. In General. The "fraud" which is constantly said to be the foundation of the doctrine does not mean actual fraud, in the sense of conscious deceit. Defendant may have entered into the contract with the full intention of carrying it out. The word is used, in this connection, in the sense, familiar in the usage of courts of equity, of unjust or unconscientious conduct, working a detriment to plaintiff, for which the law affords no adequate remedy. "The fraud which will entitle the purchaser to a specific performance, is that which consists in setting up the statute against the performance, after the purchaser has been induced to make expenditures, or a change of situation in regard to the subject-matter of the agreement upon the supposition that it was to be carried into execution, and the assumption of rights thereby to be acquired; so that the refusal to complete the execution of the agreement is not merely a denial of rights which it was intended to confer, but the infliction of an unjust and unconscientious injury and loss. In such case the vendor is held by force of his acts or silent acquiescence, which have misled the purchaser to his harm, to be estopped from setting up the statute of frauds."[9]

Rep. 754, Kay, J., says: "The doctrine of part-performance of a parol agreement, which enables proof of it to be given notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, though principally applied to the case of contracts for the sale or purchase of land, or for the acquisition of an interest in land, has not been confined to those cases. Probably it would be more accurate to say it applies to all cases in which a Court of Equity would entertain a suit for specific performance if the alleged contract had been in writing."

b. The Test of Each Act of Part Performance. The principle that plaintiff shall have suffered a detriment from his change of position in pursuance of the contract, which admits of no full and certain compensation in damages, is not only the general foundation of the doctrine, but the test by which each act of part performance is measured to determine its sufficiency to take the case out of the statute.[10]

c. Whether Acts Must Be Done by Plaintiff. It would seem to follow, as a corollary from the general rule, and it has sometimes been stated in broad terms, that the act relied on must have been done by plaintiff or the person under whom he claims.[11] But this rule is subject to qualification at least in the cases where the vendor or lessor is plaintiff.[12]

7. Act Must Be Unequivocally Referable to Contract — a. In General. Another test, which is applicable to nearly all, in the opinion of a few courts to absolutely all, alleged acts of part performance, is found in the rule that the act must be unequivocally referable to the contract; or that it must of itself give rise to the inference of some contract relating to the land. The rule was very clearly stated by an eminent English judge, as follows: "It is, in general, of the essence of such an act that the court shall, by reason of the act itself, without knowing whether there was an agreement or not, find the parties unequivocally in a position different from that which, according to their legal rights, they would be in, if there were no contract. Of this, a common example is the delivery of possession. One man without being amenable to the charge of trespass, is found in the possession of another man's land. Such a state of things is considered as showing unequivocally that some contract has taken place between the litigant parties; and it has, therefore, on that specific ground, been admitted to be an act of part-performance. . . . But an act which, though in truth done in performance of a contract, admits of explanation without supposing a contract, is not, in general, admitted to constitute an act of part-performance taking the case out of the Statute of Frauds; as, for example, the payment of a sum of money, alleged to be purchase-money. The fraud, in a moral point of view, may be as great in the one case as in the other; but in the latter cases the court does not in general give relief." [13]

b. But Not Necessarily to the Particular Contract. The rule has sometimes been so worded as to require the act of part performance to be unequivocal evidence of the particular agreement charged in the bill, not merely of some agreement concerning the land.[14] But this is to demand the impossible; since certain essential terms of a contract, such as the price, or the exact duration of a lease, are in their nature incapable of proof by circumstantial evidence.[15]

c. Rule Treated in England as Foundation of the Doctrine. Indications are not infrequent in the English cases that the rule in question is not merely a limiting principle on the operation of the doctrine of part performance, but may be taken to be the very foundation of the doctrine in all its branches.[16] This view was finally adopted by the house of lords, two centuries after the enactment of the statute. According to this theory, the doctrine does not depend upon any "fraud" wrought upon plaintiff and acting as an estoppel against defendant, but upon the fact that plaintiff's act affords strong circumstantial evidence of some contract

A text-book of authority, in an often quoted passage, states the rule thus: "He [plaintiff] must first prove acts done by himself, or on his behalf, which point unmistakably to a contract between himself and the defendant, which cannot, in the ordinary course of human conduct, be accounted for in any other manner than as having been done in pursuance of a contract," etc. Pomeroy Spec. Perf. § 108. This statement of the necessity of probative force in the act of part performance is possibly too emphatic. It seems to have been interpreted, in one case, as equivalent to saying that the act must be such as could be explained on no other possible hypothesis than that of a contract. Van Epps v. Redfield, 69 Conn. 104, 36 Atl. 1011. The facts of that case would certainly suggest, to the average non-judicial mind, the probability of some contract. The case in question, with its interpretation of the rule, would seem to render oral contracts between parent and child, or other persons in any domestic relation, almost impossible of specific enforcement. It is perhaps more accurate to say that the act of part performance must be such as, in connection with evidence of all the circumstances and relations of the parties except the fact of the oral contract, would naturally give rise to the inference that some contract relating to the land probably exists.

Order of introduction of evidence.— The logic of the rule would seem to require that the acts of part performance be proved first, as a foundation for evidence of the terms of the contract (see Pomeroy Spec. Perf. § 108); but the cases do not insist on this (see Shahan v. Swan, 48 Ohio St. 25, 26 N. E. 222, 29 Am. St. Rep. 517; Barrett v. Schleich, 37 Oreg. 613, 62 Pac. 792; Minn v. Fabian, L. relating to land between the parties. An act therefore which is trivial in itself may amount to a part performance if it clearly indicates such contract;[17] while acts not complying with this rule have no such effect, although refusal of relief may result in the greatest hardship to plaintiff.[18] Few American courts have committed themselves to this somewhat artificial theory of the doctrine of part performance.[19]

8. Acts Must Be in Pursuance Of, Result From, and Be Connected With the Contract. It is also an independent rule, sometimes confused with the preceding rule, that when both the oral contract and the alleged acts of part-performance have been proved, the acts must, as a matter of fact, clearly appear to have been done in pursuance of the contract, and to result from the contract and not from some other relation.[20] They must, further, be done in execution of the contract, and be connected with it. Acts relating to some purely collateral matter, although

Rep. 820, per Selborne, Lord Ch.: "That equity [part performance] has been stated by high authority to rest upon the principle of fraud. . . . By this it cannot be meant that equity will relieve against a public statute of general policy in cases admitted to fall within it . . . this summary way of stating the principle (however true it may be when properly understood) is not an adequate explanation, either of the precise grounds, or of the established limits, of the equitable doctrine of part performance," etc., per Lord Blackburn: "It was thought by many very high authorities that the statute did not apply when, from the nature of the proof, there could be no risk of perjury. . . . And there are indications that great equity judges on a similar principle thought that whenever acts had been done which were such as to be consistent only with the existence of a contract, the case was taken out of the mischief of the statute and the only question was the sufficiency of the proof of what the contract was," etc. For the facts of this case see infra, V, H, 4, a, note 44. 19. See, however, Green v. Groves, 109 Ind. 519, 10 N. E. 401; Sands v. Thompson, 43 Ind. 18. Since the rules concerning the common acts of part performance — payment, possession, improvements — are capable of explanation on either theory, it did not become apparent that the "fraud" theory and the "evidence" theory were inconsistent until cases arose involving acts such as the rendering of peculiar services, which clearly called for relief under the former theory, but also clearly did not point to a contract concerning land. See infra, V, H, 3, 4. See also V, I, 2, where numerous miscellaneous acts have been deemed a part performance, nearly all of which violate this rule.

Question of fact.— Whether acts were done with a view to carry out a parol contract unenforceable under the statute of frauds, so as to constitute a part performance thereof, is done in reliance on the contract and prejudicial to plaintiff, do not suffice.[21] But while the acts must be in pursuance of the contract, they need not be expressly stipulated for by the contract itself.[22]

B. Rejection or Statutory Recognition of the Doctrine — 1. Statutory Recognition. The doctrine of part performance is recognized by the statutes of frauds in several of the states as an exception to the general operation of the statute.[23] By statute the ordinary acts of part performance have been added to in one state,[24] and somewhat restricted in two states.[25]

2. Doctrine Rejected in Certain States. In four states the doctrine of part performance is wholly rejected. These states are Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, and Tennessee.[26] But in at least two of those states the vendee under the oral contract may enforce in equity a lien for the purchase-money paid and for the value of his improvements, after accounting for rents and profits.[27]

Formerly rejected in other states.— Under the equity jurisdiction, strictly limited by statute, in Maine and Massachusetts during the first seven decades of the last century, the doctrine of part performance was rejected; but the courts of these states now have full equity powers. statute relating to such contracts. By its very definition such a contract could not become binding until the marriage; and to hold that the very act which brings the contract into existence also removes it from the operation of the statute would be to nullify this clause of the statute in every instance.[28]

b. Marriage Obtained by Actual Fraud. But where, by fraudulent contrivances, by false excuses, by trick or stratagem, plaintiff is prevailed upon to have the ceremony performed without waiting for the promised execution of the conveyance or written contract, specific performance may be had because of the fraud.[29] been assigned for this rule. First: "Payment of money is an equivocal act, not (in itself), until the connection is established by parol testimony, indicative of a contract concerning land." [34] Second: Payment does not work a fraud upon the vendee if the vendor refuses to perform his part. The remedy at law for a recovery of the money paid with interest is a complete and adequate remedy, since it restores the vendee to the exact position in which he was before the contract.[35] Third: A third but less satisfactory reason was advanced in an early and leading case, that the statute of frauds, in the clause respecting the sale of goods, has expressly provided that payment of the price, or a part thereof, shall render the contract binding, but contains no such provision in the clause concerning the sale of lands.[36]

b. Examples. Thus payment of rent is not part performance of an agreement to make a written lease; [37] nor a loan of money, of an agreement to execute a mortgage to secure its repayment.[38]

c. Although Vendor Insolvent. The fact that the vendor is insolvent so that the vendee cannot be restored to his original position is immaterial.[39]

That the insolvency existed at the time of the agreement, so that, presumably, the vendee would not have paid except in reliance on

d. Payment of Auction Duty. Similarly payment of an auction duty required by statute does not satisfy the statute of frauds, although the money paid cannot be recovered.[40]

e. Recovery of Payment Barred by Statute of Limitations. But the fact that recovery of the payment is barred by the statute of limitations has been thought to be of controlling force, when it was accompanied by other circumstances not of themselves amounting to part performance.[41]

f. Payment of Whole or Substantial Part of Price. The rule as to payment was not fully established in England until more than a century after the enactment of the statute of frauds. The distinction was made, in most of the cases in the eighteenth century, that payment of the whole or of a substantial part [42] of the purchase-money would take the case out of the statute, while payment of a small part would not.[43] The same distinction has been made in a few American cases.[44]

g. In Delaware, Iowa, and Georgia. The rule that payment, in part or in full, is a sufficient part performance, is established in Delaware by an early decision,[45] and in Iowa by statute.[46] In Georgia also payment appears to be recognized by some of the cases as a sufficient act of part performance.[47]

D. The Usual Acts of Part Performance — 1. English Rule; Possession Is Part Performance — a. Rule Stated. The rule was established in England shortly after the enactment of the statute of frauds, and has since been steadily maintained, that possession of the land, delivered by the vendor or lessor to the vendee or lessee, or taken by the vendee or lessee in pursuance of the contract, is in itself a sufficient act of part performance to take the case out of the statute. Such possession, to have this effect, need not be accompanied or followed by payment, in full or in part, or by improvements made upon the land.[48]

the promise to convey, is immaterial. Townsend v. Fenton, 32 Minn. 482, 21 N. W. 726.

The insolvency of the vendor is not a fraud upon the vendee.— "The vendee could easily have guarded against such a contingency by not paying the consideration until he had first obtained some written evidence of the contract. Having by the verbal agreement acquired no interest in the land itself, his attitude and rights are not materially different from that of any other creditor who may be unable to collect his debt on account of the insolvency of the debtor." b. Reasons For the Rule. Several reasons have been assigned for the rule: (1) "The acknowledged possession of a stranger in the land of another is not explicable except on the supposition of an agreement, and has therefore constantly been received as evidence of an antecedent contract, and as sufficient to authorize an inquiry into the terms." [49] (2) Since evidence of the contract is permissible and necessary to shield the purchaser from liability as a trespasser, that evidence, being before the court for such a purpose, may, it is argued, be used to establish the contract for the purpose of its enforcement, without doing violence to the peculiar wording of the statute.[50] (3) The act of taking possession frequently, or generally, effects a change of condition on the part of the vendee, such that eviction would produce conditions of loss and damage, the computation of which by a pecuniary standard would be largely matter of conjecture.[51] (4) It is argued, with much force, that if the doctrine of part performance is to be admitted at all, it is necessary to establish some definite measure or standard, for the sake of stability of decision and security of title; and that "nothing seems so well adapted to the end, or so little susceptible of perjury as the notorious and unequivocal act of parting with possession." [52]

c. Status of the Rule in the United States. It is impossible to affirm, with confidence, that the English rule, stated in the last paragraph and generally adopted by the text-books, is the generally prevailing rule in the United States. The cases are surprisingly few, in this country, in which the question of part performance turned upon the fact of the vendee's possession alone. The decisions are but a handful in which possession is recognized as a sufficient ground and appears, on examination of the reported facts, to be the only ground.[53] Cases

This reason is criticized in a number of American cases, on the ground that, since the parol contract operates as a license to enter, and thus shields the vendee from liability as a trespasser, no fraud or hardship is wrought upon him by a refusal of specific performance. Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 24, 3 Am. Rep. 418; In re Allen, 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 383; Ann Berta Lodge No. 42 I. O. O. F. v. Leverton, 42 Tex. 18. But this criticism misses the point of the argument in Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & Lef. 22, 9 Rev. Rep. 3, as stated in the text; viz., that evidence of the contract, being admissible for one purpose, is admissible for all purposes. See Pomeroy Spec. Perf. § 104 note. Whether that argument is a valid one, or, as it is characterized in the Texas case, a mere "pretext," is a different question.

52. Pugh v. Good, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 56, 63, 37 Am. Dec. 534, per Gibson, C. J., who further says: "As a criterion, no objection can be made to it which may not as plausibly be made to possession with payment of purchase money or expenditure in improvements superadded. Though the possession be shown to have been given in reference to some existing contract, it is true that the terms of the bargain must still be proved by parol; and hence the fears of perjury which were entertained by the framers of the statute. But would not the same necessity for parol proof of terms, and the same danger of perjury exist, if the purchase money were paid or improvements were made? If loss of possession may be compensated, so may expenditure, the difference being only in the degree; and it is conceded on all hands that it is proper to go beyond compensation wherever a rescission of the contract would be a fraud."

are more numerous in which the English rule is recognized by way of dictum, other acts of part performance appearing in the report.[54] On the other hand, in a considerable number of states, including a group of the largest and most influential commonwealths, the English rule has been distinctly repudiated; and the further act of part payment or the making of improvements is required in order to validate, as an act of part performance, the taking of possession.[55] In a majority of the states therefore it is fair to assume, in view of this conflict in the American authorities, that the question is an open one whether taking possession in pursuance of the contract is in itself a sufficient act of part performance.

2. American Rule; Possession With Payment or Improvements — a. Possession and Payment. Taking possession in pursuance of the contract, together with payment, in full or in part, of the purchase-price, is recognized, in nearly all the jurisdictions, as a sufficient part performance; and the amount of the part payment appears to be immaterial.[56]

Why it is that payment of purchase-money, in itself of no validity as an act of part performance, should have this controlling force when added to the act of possession, is a natural query, which, apparently, has received no answer whatever from the bench. See supra, V, D, 1, b, note 52; quotation from Pugh v. Good, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 56, 37 Am. Dec. 534. It is probably this lack of any authoritative reason for giving to possession with payment any efficacy that is denied to possession alone, which has led the commentators to cite many of the cases in this note as exemplifying the general English rule that possession is part performance. See for example 1 Ames Cas. Eq. Jur. 279 note.

3. More Stringent Requirements in Certain States — a. Alabama and Illinois; Payment Required. In Alabama, by statute, and in Illinois, by decision, there must be, in addition to possession, payment or part payment of the purchase-money.[59] A parol gift of land, followed by possession and improvements, will not be enforced, in Alabama;[60] but in Illinois an exception is made in the case of oral gifts from parent to child, followed by part performance.[61]

b. Massachusetts. In Massachusetts it is clearly held that there is no part performance where the part payment and the expenditures for improvements together were less than the value of the use and occupation; and the trend of several opinions is toward a strict and literal interpretation of the rule that plaintiff's change of position must be such that he could not be compensated for his loss if specific performance should be refused.[62]

c. Texas; Improvements Necessary; Missouri and Kansas. By an early ruling in Missouri, part payment accompanied by possession appears to have been insufficient;[63] but this decision has frequently been tacitly overruled.[64] In Texas the rule is firmly established that possession together with payment in full or in part is insufficient; there must be, both in case of a sale and of a gift, permanent and valuable improvements;[65] but it is not required by the later cases that the improvements exceed the rental value of the land.[66]

d. Pennsylvania; Must Be Non-Compensable Improvements or Full Payment. The course of adjudication in Pennsylvania has been a varied one. After some conflicting dicta, the English rule that taking possession under the contract is by itself a sufficient act of part performance was adopted;[67] but this holding, although distinct and emphatic, was ignored in subsequent decisions and finally abandoned.[68] The rule as now formulated and adopted by numerous recent decisions is a stringent one. "The evidence must establish the fact that possession was taken in pursuance of the contract, and at or immediately after the time it was made, the fact that the possession was notorious, and the fact that it has been exclusively continuous and maintained. And it must show performance or part performance by the vendee which could not be compensated in damages, and such as would make rescission inequitable and unjust."[69] Improvements, therefore, must exceed in value the rents and profits.[70] Payment in full, however, coupled with taking possession, dispenses with proof of improvements or other acts of part performance incapable of compensation;[71] and parol partition, followed by possession of the parcels allotted, is not a sale within the statute of frauds.[72]

e. Virginia. In Virginia also the rule as stated by the recent cases is in a somewhat more stringent form than in the majority of the states.[73] The doctrine as to parol gifts has been abolished by a recent statute.[74]

E. Nature of the Possession Required — 1. Must Be in Pursuance of and Exclusively Referable to the Contract — a. In General. Need not be unequivocal evidence of the particular contract.— In a few cases it is asserted that the possession must be unequivocal evidence of the particular contract charged in the bill, not merely of some contract. Semmes v. Worthington, 38 Md. 298; Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 131. See also Peckham v. Barker, 8 R. I. 17. But this, as has been repeatedly pointed out, is to set up an impossible test. No act of part performance can indicate or be satisfactory evidence of certain terms which are essential to a complete contract, such as the price. Even the making of valuable improvements cannot of itself indicate whether the contract was one of sale or for a long term lease. See Fry Spec. Perf. § 558; Pomeroy Spec. Perf. § 107 and note. And see supra, V, A, 7, b.

Possession of other land.— The vendee seeking specific performance of the vendor's parol contract to convey land, and relying on possession to take the contract out of the statute of frauds, must show possession of such land, delivered to him by the vendor pursuant to the contract, and it is not enough to show possession by the vendor of land which the vendor agreed to convey in exchange. And see Bennett v. Dyer, 89 Me. 17, 35 Atl. 1004. And the same is true where the persons taking possession had the power of eminent domain, and the possession might be referred to the exercise of that power (Haisten v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 51 Ga. 199; Jacobs v. Peterborough, etc., R. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 223; Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Dec. 133); where it is doubtful whether possession was taken under the contract of purchase, or under an agreement to enter as tenant and pay rent (Owings v. Baldwin, 1 Md. Ch. 120); where possession was held under another, written, contract (Bunton v. Smith, 40 N. H. 352; Rankin v. Simpson, 19 Pa. St. 471, 57 Am. Dec. 668, under subsequent lease from vendor. But see Harman v. Harman, 70 Fed. 894, 17 C. C. A. 479, where the fact that plaintiffs received a written lease from their uncle contemporaneously with his oral agreement to devise the land to them was held not to prevent specific performance of

c. Continued Possession — (i) In General. The most important application of this rule relates to a possession begun before, and continuing after, the making of the oral contract. Such continuance in possession does not satisfy the tests of an effective act of part performance, since it does not point to a new contract but may be accounted for by reference to the former right or title; also since there has been no change of position on plaintiff's part which could work a fraud upon him on refusal of specific performance.[78]

(ii) Continued Possession by Tenant. Thus the continuance in the oral agreement); where possession is referable, not to the alleged contract for a lease, but to a tenancy from year to year (Peckham v. Barker, 8 R. I. 17); and where it is referable to the alleged vendee's relation as agent (Crawford v. Crawford, 77 S. C. 205, 57 S. E. 837).

Possession held under a life-tenant is not part performance of a contract for sale of the reversion. Pickerell v. Morss, 97 Ill. 220; German v. Machin, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 288.

Where a deed made in pursuance of the oral contract omits a part of the land agreed to be conveyed, it has been held that possession of the part actually conveyed is not part performance as to the part omitted. See supra, V, A, 7, a, note 13); Henry v. Henry, 27 Ohio St. 121 (possession by husband of his wife's lands referable to his tenancy by the curtesy, not to her oral agreement before marriage to deed the lands to him). possession of a tenant will be referred to his original tenancy, even though the original term has expired, since it is a frequent and natural thing to find a tenant holding over after the expiration of his term, calling for no contract to explain it. A tenant's continued possession therefore is not an act of part performance of his contract to purchase from his landlord,[79] nor of his contract for a renewal of the lease.[80]

Sufficient when referable to the agreement. — But possession by a lessee continued after, although taken previously to, a parol agreement for a lease exceeding three years, is a sufficient act of part performance to take the case out of the statute of frauds, provided the continuance in possession is unequivocally referable to the agreement. under the doctrine of part performance to justify the enforcement of the agreement to reconvey.[81]

(IV) Exceptions to Rule as to Continued Possession — (A) In General. A continuance in possession, if accompanied by other acts which can only naturally be accounted for by the existence of a new contract concerning the land, is, by the great weight of authority, sufficient part performance of that contract.[82]

(B) Continued Possession and Payment of Increased Rent. If a tenant continues in possession after the expiration of his lease, and pays an increased rent, these circumstances, it is held, constitute part performance of the agreement for a new lease; at any rate if the rent is accepted by the landlord on the basis of the agreement.[83] This rule, while well established in England, has been criticized as a departure from the accepted theory of part performance.[84]

(C) Continued Possession and Payment of Purchase-Price. Payment of the purchase-price by a vendee who was already in possession at the time of the contract has been considered an insufficient act of part performance in some of the states;[85] but in others, in analogy with the English rule stated in the last paragraph, it has been accepted as sufficient.[86]

84. The above cases form a departure from the accepted theory of part performance, in that the payment of the increased rent is per se an equivocal act (Spear v. Orendorf, 26 Md. 37; Wills v. Stradling, 3 Ves. Jr. 378, 4 Rev. Rep. 26, 30 Eng. Reprint 1063), since it is consistent with a tenancy from year to year. In the leading case of Nunn v. Fabian, L. R. 1 Ch. 35, 11 Jur. N. S. 868, 35 L. J. Ch. 140, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 343, per Cranworth, L. C., it is accepted as a sufficient act of part performance merely because it was proved to be in pursuance of the agreement. Whether the act ipso facto indicates an agreement is not discussed. If this criterion of the sufficiency of acts of part performance were to be adopted, the logical conclusion is that mere payment ought frequently or generally, to be a sufficient act; and this logical conclusion from Nunn v. Fabian is accepted by Bagallay, J., in Humphreys v. Green, 10 Q. B. D. 148, 47 J. P. 244, 52 L. J. Q. B. 140, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 60. It is noteworthy that Nunn v. Fabian is not mentioned by Selborne, L. C., in his exhaustive review of cases in Maddison v. Alderson, 8 App. Cas. 467, 47 J. P. 821, 52 L. J. Q. B. 737, 49 L. T. Rep. N. S. 303, 31 Wkly. Rep. 820. If the rule were generally adopted in this country, it should follow (Pomeroy Spec. Perf. § 124) that continued possession with payment of the purchase-money takes a contract of purchase out of the statute, which is not a universally accepted doctrine. See the next paragraph.

(D) Continued Possession With Improvements. The making of valuable and permanent improvements on the premises by a vendee or lessee whose possession antedated the new contract, of such a character and magnitude as cannot reasonably and naturally be accounted for by his original tenancy or title, has frequently been adjudged to be a sufficient part performance.[87] But in order to render improvements made by one in possession at the time of the contract of much weight as bearing upon his right to specific performance, they must be of such a character as to be decidedly inconsistent with the continuance of the old relation.[88] Slight improvements considerably less than the annual rental,[89] or not beyond the requirements of ordinary husbandry,[90] will not suffice. and value, but in other respects, the improvements must unequivocally refer to and result from the agreement.[91]

(E) Continued Possession and Other Acts. Other acts than improvements or payment have occasionally been held to be a sufficient part performance in connection with a continued possession.[92]

2. Must Be Exclusive — a. Not Shared With Vendor. Where the vendee continues to occupy or control the land in part, merely sharing the occupancy or control of it with the vendor, the mixed possession so resulting does not satisfy the requirements of the doctrine.[93] But it has been held that where it is sought to enforce a parol contract to convey land, and possession is relied on as part

Where the vendee, who had been in possession as tenant of part of the tract sold, continued that possession, paid part of the purchase-money, and took possession of and made improvements upon the remainder of the tract, it was held that there was sufficient part performance as to the whole of the land. Cross v. Johnston, 76 Ark. 363, 88 S. W. 945. And where a tenant held over, under a verbal contract of sale, and applied for a deed and abstract, there was held to be a manifest change in the relations of the parties such as to warrant specific performance. Place v. Johnson, 20 Minn. 219. A mother conveyed to her son, on his oral agreement to reconvey in a certain event, which event took place. By the agreement she was to continue in possession. It was held that by virtue of this agreement her possession was under the agreement, and therefore a sufficient possession within the doctrine of part performance. Simonton v. Godsey, 174 Ill. 28, 51 N. E. 75. This reasoning ignores the principle that the act should not only be under and in pursuance of the contract, but should ipso facto point to a contract. Thus there is no exclusive possession where the vendee merely lived on the land as a member of the vendor's family (Cuddy v. Brown, 78 Ill. 415. But see Warren v. Warren, 108 Ill. 568, dicta); where his possession was of a small portion of the premises, the rest remaining in the actual occupation of the vendor (Brewer v. Wilson, 17 N. J. Eq. 180); or where some of the tenants paid rent to the vendor (Price v. Lloyd, 31 Utah 86. 86 Pac. 767, 8 L. R. A. N. S. 870). In Michigan, however, in cases usually of a promise to make a gift to a near relative, followed by services rendered by the donee to the donor in care and support or in labor on the land, and by improvements made upon the land by the donee, his joint occupancy with the donee is held to be a sufficient possession. "A purchaser who takes possession of land under an oral purchase is likely in so doing to change very considerably — perhaps wholly — the general course of his life as previously planned by him; and if he is evicted on a repudiation of the contract, any estimate of his loss by others must, in many cases, be mere guess-work. The rule, therefore, rests upon the element of uncertainty, and not upon any technical ground of exclusiveness in the possession." Lamb v. Hinman, 46 Mich. 112, 116, 6 N. W. 675, 8 N. performance, the rule that possession must be exclusive is satisfied where the possession was as exclusive as the terms of the contract would permit.[94] Receiving the vendor or donor into the vendee's or donee's family as a boarder and other like acts do not constitute a divided or mixed possession within the meaning of this rule, if the vendee or donee has the "dominant" possession.[95]

b. Possession of Tenant in Common Purchasing From Cotenant. Since the actual possession of one tenant in common is the constructive possession of all, the possession of the whole tract by a tenant in common who has orally agreed to buy his cotenant's shares is an inadequate act of possession. It falls within the condemnation of two rules; since it is not, technically, at any rate, an exclusive possession, and since it may be accounted for by his preëxisting relation as cotenant as well as by a contract.[96] But where plaintiff has not only actually taken possession to the exclusion of the other tenants, but has also made payment and valuable improvements, these acts together, in most jurisdictions, make a sufficient part performance.[97]

3. Must Be With Consent — a. In General. The possession must be taken with the consent of the vendor, actual or implied; since in the absence of such consent there can be no estoppel against defendant or fraud upon plaintiff, which is the foundation of the doctrine of part performance.[98] A forcible, "scrambling," the premises with the vendor, and his expenditure of money and labor for the betterment of the place, was held sufficient part performance of an agreement to convey a life-interest.

Sale of undivided share by owner of the whole.— In such a case a joint possession with the vendor is all the possession which the vendee can take, and, if accompanied by valuable improvements by the vendee, is a sufficient part performance. McKay v. Calderwood, 37 Wash. 194, 79 Pac. 629. The situation is a different one from that where a tenant in common purchases his cotenant's undivided share. See infra, V, E, 2, b.

Whether the making of valuable improvements is always indispensable is a matter of some doubt. In Littlefield v. Littlefield, 51 Wis. 25, 7 N. W. 773, there was payment in the nature of support given to the vendor, and improvements made after the vendor's death; and these acts, coupled with the vendee's possession of the land, were held to be sufficient.

or litigious possession will not answer;[99] nor will possession taken after the death of the vendor, without the consent of his heirs.[1]

b. Implied Consent. The vendor's consent, however, may be inferable from circumstances;[2] and it seems that in all cases where the vendee has paid the purchase-money there is an implied agreement that the vendee may at once take possession.[3] The objection that the possession was taken without consent is obviated by the vendor's acquiescence in the possession for a long term of years.[4]

4. Must Not Have Been Abandoned — a. In General. The possession once taken must not be abandoned or surrendered;[5] and if the vendee, after taking possession, attorns to the vendor as landlord, his possession will be referred to the lease and not to the contract of sale.[6]

Thus possession is insufficient if received from one who acted without the owner's authority (Chamberlain v. Manning, 41 N. J. Eq. 651, 7 Atl. 634), or taken while the vendors have no control over the land (Osborn v. Phelps, 19 Conn. 63, 48 Am. Dec. 133). The rule has been stated in the form that possession must be taken at the request of the vendor (Pulse v. Hamer, 8 Oreg. 251), but this requirement appears to be too strict.

without intent to surrender, does not destroy the vendee's right to specific performance;[7] nor does the fact that the vendee, after sufficient performance, is ousted from his possession by the vendor.[8]

5. Must Be Actual and Notorious — a. In General. There must be an actual and notorious, and not merely a constructive, possession. A mere technical possession, not open to the observation of the neighborhood, is insufficient. This is a result of the general rule that the evidence of part performance must be clear and convincing.[9]

b. Possession of Part of Premises; Sale of Distinct Parcels. Where there is an entire contract for the sale of distinct parcels to the vendee for a gross price, his possession of one of the parcels is deemed to be a possession of all.[10] On the other hand, where the contract is not for a gross price, but the price is apportioned among the several parcels, possession and improvement of one of the parcels is not a part performance as to the others.[11]

J. Eq. 651, 7 Atl. 634). But it appears to be held, in a case where plaintiff agreed to pay half the cost of erecting a house, and a half interest in the property was to be conveyed to him, that giving his personal attention to the erection of the house was a sufficient taking of possession. Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 160 U. S. 171, 16 S. Ct. 258, 40 L. ed. 383.

acting under the vendee may, under some circumstances, count as the vendee's possession.[13]

F. Nature of Improvements — 1. Must Be Referable to the Contract — a. In General. Many of the tests which determine whether possession is an act of part performance apply also to improvements when those are relied upon. Thus the improvements should point to a contract of the character claimed, not to some other right or title.[14]

b. Not On or For Benefit of Other Land. Improvements made chiefly for the benefit of other land, or made on other land and not necessarily referable exclusively to the contract, are insufficient.[15]

2. Must Be by Consent. The improvements relied upon must be made with the consent of the vendor or lessor, or at least with his acquiescence; not after the contract has been repudiated. It is not necessary, however, that they should have been expressly authorized, since the yielding of possession to the vendee implies an authority in him to deal with the premises.[16]

Wis. 209, 105 N. W. 573, 4 L. R. A. N. S. 427.

13. Where a vendor agreed to convey to a third party a portion of the lot which was the subject of the prior oral contract, it was held that as conveyance to, and possession taken by, this third party of such portion, was only a variation in the mode of executing the original contract, his performance was equivalent to a performance by the vendee. Blalock v. Waggoner, 82 Ga. 122, 8 S. E. 48. And where a married woman contracted orally to purchase an undivided half of a tract, her husband being the coöwner with her vendor and in occupancy of the whole, it was held that, as the only change of possession which the facts permitted was in the husband's recognition of the wife's ownership, the possession of the husband counted as the possession of the wife, as regarded the undivided half purchased by her. Murphy v. Stever, 47 Mich. 522, 11 N. W. 368. It should be observed, however, that the Michigan decisions make no strict requirement as to exclusiveness of possession. See supra, V, E, 2, a, note.

Michigan.— McMurtrie v. Bennette, Harr. 124, acts must unequivocally refer to and result from the agreement — such as the party would not have done unless on account of that very agreement and with a direct view to its performance.

Ohio.— Henry v. Henry, 27 Ohio St. 121.

Oregon.— Wallace v. Scoggins, 17 Oreg. 476, 21 Pac. 558.

Virginia.— Plunkett v. Bryant, 101 Va. 814, 45 S. E. 742.

Thus making repairs and expenditures such as would not be made by a tenant from month to month (Wallace v. Scoggins, 17 Oreg. 476, 21 Pac. 558), or costing more than a year's rent (Morrison v. Peay, 21 Ark. 110), point to, and is an act of part performance of, an agreement for a written lease.

Improvement by husband under contract with wife.— An agreement by an intended wife to deed her lands to her husband is not part performed by marriage and his subsequent entry on and improvement of the land, such acts being referable to his tenancy by the curtesy. Henry v. Henry, 27 Ohio St. 121. The act of a husband in making improvements on the land of his wife while they were living together thereon, being such an act as might naturally be done by a husband without agreement, does not point to an agreement binding the wife to make compensation therefor by will or otherwise. Plunkett v. Bryant, 101 Va. 814, 45 S. E. 742.

On the sale of a half interest in land it was held that payment of part of the cost of the improvements made, together with possession by receipt of a share of rents, constituted a part performance. Shearer v. Gibson, 123 Mich. 467, 82 N. W. 206. And where a wife, whose husband was owner of an undivided half of land and in occupancy of the whole, purchased the other undivided half, it was held that she would have the benefit of improvements subsequently made by her husband as her own acts of part performance. Murphy v. Stever, 47 Mich. 522, 11 N. W. 368.

Under a rule that a verbal contract to purchase is not assignable, and therefore that acts done by an assignee are not in pursuance of the contract, a purchaser by verbal contract who sells the land to a third person and subsequently repurchases it cannot in a suit for specific performance avail himself of improvements made by such third person as a partial performance of the contract. Abbott v. Baldwin, 61 N. H. 583.

15. Osborn v. Phelps, 19 Conn. 63, 48 Am. Dec. 133; Wright v. Raftree, 181 Ill. 464, 54 N. E. 998.

Kansas.— Baldwin v. Squier, 31 Kan. 283, 1 Pac. 591, made after death of promisor.

3. Must Be Valuable and Permanent — a. In General. If improvements are relied upon, not merely as evidence that an actual possession was taken, but as an additional, independent ground for specific performance, they must be both valuable and permanent. Slight expenditures for repairs, and the like, such as might naturally be made by any person as incident to an occupation of the premises, are insufficient.[17]

b. Whether Must Exceed Rental Value. It is the rule in a few states that if the improvements are exceeded in value by the rents or the use and occupation of the land during the time for which the vendee has been in possession, they are insufficient as an act of part performance, as not complying with the requirement in these states that the act must be one for which compensation cannot readily be made;[18] but this rule has been distinctly rejected in other states; and it is believed that a large proportion of the cases in which improvements have been held an act of part performance do not comply with the test.[19]

Missouri.— Parke v. Leewright, 20 Mo. 85, made after defendant had repudiated the contract.

Montana.—Boulder Valley Ditch Min., etc., Co. v. Farnham, 12 Mont. 1, 29 Pac. 277, made after defendant had repudiated the contract.

New Jersey.— Nibert v. Baghurst, 47 N. J. Eq. 201, 20 Atl. 252, improvements not based on rightful possession.

But that the improvements were made under protest of the vendor is immaterial, where he did not repudiate the contract, but his objections had reference to the vendee's neglect to make payments. Potter v. Jacobs, 111 Mass. 32.

The vendor need not expressly authorize the improvements; his assent to them is sufficient. Mournin v. Trainor, 63 Minn. 230, 65 N. W. 444. But see Black v. Black, 15 Ga. 445.

c. Rule in Pennsylvania and Virginia. In Pennsylvania the rule is well established that, in the absence of full payment, improvements must be of such a character that they cannot reasonably be compensated.[20] The same rule is established in Virginia;[21] and it has been there held, in case of improvements by a lessee, that where he has himself appraised them at a definite sum, they admit of compensation and therefore do not call for specific enforcement of the parol lease.[22]

G. Form of the Payment. Payment, when relied upon as an act of part performance in connection with other acts or, in Iowa,[23] alone, does not necessarily mean a money payment. Payment may be made in chattels,[24] by a conveyance of land to the vendor [25] or to a third person,[26] by personal services,[27] or by making improvements called for by the contract; [28] and in general, it would seem, by any such change of position at the request of the promisor and on the strength of the promise as constitutes a legal consideration.[29]

H. Services — 1. In Connection With Other Acts. Services rendered by the vendee to the vendor are a form of payment, and as such, in connection with possession, frequently give rise to a right to specific performance of an oral contract, and in Iowa where payment by itself is a statutory ground,[30] such payment has

E. 954, 1119 (holding that the fact that the purchaser of land under a verbal contract delivered a horse to the vendor, and cleared a small tract upon which he sowed crop, rented part of the land, and built a brush fence around the clearing, etc., did not show such part performance as entitled him to specific performance, since adequate compensation might be had in damages); Hoover v. Baugh, 108 Va. 695, 62 S. E. 968, 128 Am. St. Rep. 985 (holding that where complainant's only acts of part performance under an oral contract to convey were the cutting of briars off the land so as to pasture it, and, after taking possession, the making of costly improvements on his house on an adjoining lot, which would not have been made except on the expectation of acquiring title to the other lot, such acts were capable of compensation in damages, and specific performance was not necessary to give adequate relief).

frequently been in the form of services.[31] Thus a parent's oral promise to convey or devise land to his son is often made in consideration of services to be rendered to the parent; such services, together with taking exclusive or "dominant" possession, entitle the son to specific performance.[32]

2. Ordinary Services Alone Not Part Performance. Ordinary personal or professional services, the value of which can be readily estimated, are not by themselves a sufficient act of part performance.[33] Of such nature are the vendee's

Where plaintiff was the junior partner of the promisor in a medical practice, plaintiff's acts in attending to the correspondence and looking after the wants of the elder and caring for him when intoxicated, being such acts as would naturally be expected to be performed by a young physician in partnership with an elder, do not necessarily refer to or result from the elder's promise to devise.

services as a surveyor,[34] or real estate broker;[35] legal services;[36] furnishing room, board, washing, and nursing;[37] or performing manual labor.[38]

3. Peculiar Services Are Part Performance — a. In General. Certain kinds of services of a very personal nature have been recognized by a clear majority of the American cases as a sufficient act of part performance, unaided by possession or other act on plaintiff's part. Where the services rendered are of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to measure their value by any pecuniary standard, and where it is evident the parties did not intend to measure them by any such standard, it is impossible adequately to compensate the party performing the services except by a decree for specific performance.[39]

b. Care of Aged Person. A contract to care for, give personal attention to, and make a home for an aged person, whether a relative or a stranger, in return for a promise of a testamentary gift or devise, is a common form of such contract.[40] If the performance of the contract involved the abandonment by plaintiff of his previous business or home, his equity is so much the stronger.[41]

c. Informal Adoption of Child. Another frequent type of contract is found in an informal agreement with the parents of a child to adopt the child and make it an heir of the promisor, or give it a child's portion of the promisor's estate. The total change of position on the part of the child and its natural parents, the assumption of the filial relation to the adopting parent, and the rendering of such services and duties of affection as naturally flow from that relation, present a case where the recovery of compensation for the pecuniary value of the services would be an utterly inadequate remedy.[42]

40. "There are some services that are incapable of valuation in money; as to these the law permits individuals to make their own contracts. Old age is naturally repulsive. The hair grows gray, the eyes sunken, the skin wrinkled and brown, the flesh shrunken, the figure bent, the limbs weak and trembling, the will feeble, the tongue garrulous, the mouth toothless, the mind wandering, the habits careless and filthy, accompanied oftentimes with loathsome diseases needing all the care and attention of childhood without its purity, loveliness and affection as a compensation. To meet this condition of life a kind Providence has ordinarily provided the ties of blood and marriage and parental, fraternal and filial affection with their reciprocal duties and obligations of mutual care and support," etc. Bryson v. McShane, 48 W. It is not essential, however, that the performance should involve a pecuniary sacrifice on plaintiff's part; the fact that he was previously in humble circumstances, so that the position was in itself advantageous, is not sufficient to warrant denial of relief. Berg v. Moreau, 199 Mo. 416, 438, 97 S. W. 901 (probably overruling dicta to the contrary effect in Rosenwald v. Middlebrook, 188 Mo. 58, 86 S. W. 200), where it is said that "services rendered by the poor and obscure are as full and rich in sentiment and as deserving of every remedy allowed by the courts as services rendered by the rich or the happily-circumstanced."

42. "In the case of a contract under which the relation of parent and child is assumed, under the agreement that the child shall receive all the property of the other at death, the consideration of the contract is not so much the personal service of the child as it is the assumption of the filial relation. In such case, it may be argued with great force that the value of that relation to the recipient of such services as naturally flow therefrom is not susceptible of measurement in money. The fact that the consideration for such services or the assumption of such relation is all of the property remaining at death, naturally an undetermined and indefinite amount, may also authorize the inference that the parties did not intend or expect remuneration for the services rendered according to their pecuniary value." 4. Peculiar Services Held Not Part Performance — a. In General. A few courts, considering the rule that the acts of part performance must of themselves clearly point or refer to some contract in relation to the subject-matter in dispute, to be of fundamental importance,[43] have refused to accept the rendering of services, of however personal and peculiar a character, as a sufficient part performance, notwithstanding that refusal of specific performance may result in a great injustice and hardship to plaintiff.[44]

b. Informal Adoption of Child. Specific performance has been refused in this class of cases not only on the ground that the acts on plaintiff's part do not point to a contract concerning land, but for the reason that no fraud is worked upon the child by refusal of relief, since its condition in life was improved by the adoption.[45]

5. Peculiar Services; Question Undecided. In several states the question whether peculiar services are a sufficient part performance has been left an open one by the courts.[46]

In Shahan v. Swan, supra, an adoption case, the court says: "Acts of this character are not usually the offspring of contractual relations. Would the ordinary observer infer from them any contract whatever? Would they not, rather, be attributed to higher motives? . . . Whether these acts of alleged part performance be taken singly or collectively, they do not indicate that they were done in performance of any contract or agreement respecting property rights of any kind, but rather were the manifestations of a benevolent and affectionate disposition on the part of a childless couple towards a gentle and affectionate child whose fate was placed in their keeping by a mother who was in destitute circumstances and homeless herself."

In this case a woman had been induced, by a promise to leave her an estate for life in land, to serve the intestate as his housekeeper, without wages, for many years, and to give up other prospects of an establishment in life. Selborne, L. C., says: "Her mere continuance in Thomas Alderson's service, though without any actual payment of wages, was not such an act as to be in itself evidence of a new contract, much less of a contract concerning her master's land. It was explicable, without supposing any such new contract, as easily as the continuance of a tenant in possession after the expiration of a lease." It is to be noted that the services rendered in this case were probably not of the peculiar and personal kind which, according to the majority of the American courts, warrants specific performance. The lord chancellor's argument, however, negatives the idea that services of any character can be an act of part performance.

6. Duration of Services. It is immaterial that the services, on account of the death of the promisor, lasted only a few months instead of many years.[47] But an agreement to make a testamentary gift in consideration of services will not be enforced until the services have been fully performed.[48]

I. Other Acts — 1. Preliminary Acts. Many acts preparatory to the completion of the contract have been denied the status of acts of part performance, for the reasons that they do not point to, and are not in pursuance of, a completed contract; are usually done without the other party's knowledge; and do not cause a serious change in plaintiff's condition to his detriment.[49] It has been so held of such acts as selecting the lot;[50] viewing the estate;[51] measuring the land;[52] making maps, surveys, and drafts of agreements,[53] and plans for improvements;[54] the lessor's putting the house in readiness for occupancy, papering it, etc.;[55] delivering the rent-roll and abstract of title to the vendee, and sending tenants to treat with him for a renewal of their leases;[56] the vendee's depositing a part payment with his agent;[57] giving instructions for a deed or lease;[58] executing[59] and registering[60] a deed, which was not accepted; and other prior or preliminary acts.[61]

2. Miscellaneous Acts — a. In General. In addition to the usual acts of money payment, possession, improvements, and services, a great variety of other acts have been successfully asserted as acts of part performance. such that damages would be an inadequate or impossible remedy. They must be acts in pursuance of the contract, connected with [62] the contract and naturally flowing from it; [63] but they have very often failed to comply with the rule that the act must in itself indicate some contract concerning the land.[64]

b. Money Payment. Under some special circumstances, payment of the consideration has been treated as a sufficient act of part performance.[65]

c. Conveyance of Homestead. Conveyance of a homestead by husband and wife has been held to take an oral agreement to exchange lands out of the statute, since the parties, being deprived of their homestead, cannot be restored in statu quo.[66]

d. Breaking Off Negotiations With Third Party. Where defendant agreed to purchase certain land and sell it to plaintiff, if plaintiff would break off negotiations for its purchase with the owner, who was under no legal obligation to plaintiff, plaintiff's act of breaking off negotiations was not a sufficient part performance.[67]

e. Relinquishing a Right — (I) Abstaining From Filing Adverse Mining Claim. Where defendant agreed to obtain a patent to a mining claim and transfer an interest to plaintiff, a disputing claimant, plaintiff's abstention from filing an adverse claim was a mere preparatory act, not tending to prove the contract.[68]

(II) Abandoning an Option. Where plaintiff had an option on certain premises and abandoned it in reliance on defendant's oral agreement to lease to him other premises, such abandonment, not being connected with the contract, although done in reliance thereon, known to defendant, prejudicial to plaintiff, and incapable of adequate compensation in damages, did not suffice as part performance.[69] And where plaintiff relinquished an option on lands on faith of the agreement of defendant's agent, known to plaintiff to be unauthorized, that defendant would purchase the lands and convey them to plaintiff, the act of relinquishment, being a prior act in anticipation of acceptance, was insufficient.[70]

S. 244, 14 S. Ct. 1083, 38 L. ed. 976, an oral agreement for division of testator's property, between two sets of devisees, was fully performed on the part of the first set by conveyance of land to a trustee for sale and payment of a proportionate share of the proceeds to the second set, including defendant. The court relied on the analogy of cases of oral exchange of lands followed by conveyance by plaintiff and possession taken by defendant. In Humphreys v. Green, 10 Q. B. D. 148, 47 J. P. 244, 52 L. J. Q. B. 140, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 60, Bagallay, J., commenting on Nunn v. Fabian, L. R. 1 Ch. 35, 11 Jur. N. S. 868, 35 L. J. Ch. 140, 13 L. T. Rep. N. (III) Dismissing Legal Proceedings, or Abandoning a Defense, Right of Appeal, Etc. The compromise and dismissal of an action brought by plaintiff against defendant has been held a sufficient ground for enforcing defendant's oral agreement, where the action cannot be reinstated, or plaintiff's claim has become barred, or he has otherwise irretrievably changed his position in pursuance of the agreement.[71] Allowing foreclosure of plaintiff's land situated in another state has also been deemed an act of part performance, repayment being impossible.[72] Relinquishing a right to appeal from a judgment of foreclosure,[73] and relinquishing the statutory right of redemption from foreclosure until it has expired,[74] have also been held to be acts requiring the enforcement of the mortgagee's agreement.

f. Procuring Means For Performance. Also plaintiff's buying a building for the purpose of moving it on the land;[75] or, in a state where payment is part performance, procuring the personal property which was to be given in exchange for the land,[76] is not an act of part performance.

g. Compliance With Building Restriction. Where adjoining lot-owners orally agreed to set buildings to be placed by them on their lots a certain distance from the street, plaintiff's act in erecting his building in compliance with the agreement was held not a part performance rendering the agreement binding on the other party, since the act did not of itself point to any contract.[77]

h. Mutual Wills. Where two parties orally agree to make wills in each other's favor, plaintiff who has made a will in compliance with the agreement has not done an act of part performance, for the double reason that making a will is not of itself evidence of an agreement, and that plaintiff has not changed his position, the property being still in his control.[78]

Mere forbearance by a mortgagor to assert a fixed monetary demand against a mortgagee's claim on foreclosure, in consideration of an agreement by the mortgagee to devise the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, does not warrant specific performance against the mortgagee's executors and heirs, since the mortgagor's remedy by action for damages is adequate. Flood v. Templeton, 148 Cal. 374, 83 Pac. 148.

In the case of a mortgagor's agreement not to bid at foreclosure sale, in consideration of the mortgagee's promise to bid in the property and reconvey it to the mortgagor, the mortgagor's act in refraining from bidding has sometimes been considered a part performance. Cutler v. Babcock, 81 Wis. 195, 51 N. W. 420, 29 Am. St. Rep. 882. Contra, Wheeler v. Reynolds, 66 N. 77. Smith v. McVeigh, 11 N. J. Eq. 239; Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 72. In the first case another reason for the decision was assigned by the court. A's, defendant's, building had at the time of the agreement already been built at the stipulated distance from the street. If the agreement therefore had been violated by B instead of by A, A having made no "change of position" in reliance on the agreement, could have asserted no act of part performance on his own part requiring enforcement against B. Hence, on the ground of lack of mutuality. A's violation of the agreement cannot be enjoined by B who has complied with the agreement. This view of the meaning of "mutuality" is not one that is generally entertained. See infra, IV, E.

i. Acts Involving Third Persons — (i) Acts Independent of Agreement With Defendant. Plaintiff's purchase of the rights of other persons not parties to the contract, being purely a collateral matter, is not a part performance, although done in reliance on defendant's willingness to carry out his contract.[79] But plaintiff's sale of the land by warranty deed, in reliance on his belief that his own vendee had, as was promised, executed a deed to him, was held, in connection with payment by plaintiff to his vendee, to warrant specific performance against the latter.[80]

(ii) Acts in Performance of Agreement With Defendant. Defendant's oral agreement to convey a lot to plaintiff, in consideration of plaintiff's executing a conveyance to a stranger of the same or other premises, is not part performed, according to some authorities, by plaintiff executing such conveyance; plaintiff's act is equivalent to payment merely.[81] Similarly a vendor's agreement to convey to plaintiff on plaintiff's procuring a release from a third person was not part performed by plaintiff's procuring the release at a large expense.[82] Where plaintiff purchased land on defendant's oral agreement to release a mortgage or lien held by defendant on the land, and the purchase-money was paid accordingly, plaintiff was held entitled to specific performance of the agreement to release.[83]

(iii) Three-Cornered Bargains. By oral agreement between A, B, and C, A was to convey to B, and B was to give a lease to C. A conveyed to B, who took possession. It was held that C, although he had not done the act of part performance, might enforce the contract for a lease against B.[84] In a somewhat similar case, by written contracts, A was obliged to convey to B and B to C. There was an oral novation by which A agreed to convey to D and D to convey to C. D received his conveyance, and it was held that C might enforce the contract

E. 757, 1035, 76 Am. St. Rep. 580, holding that where plaintiff has complied by making a will and not revoking it until the death of the other party, there is sufficient part performance.

Mutual wills; contract fully performed by party deceased.— Husband and wife orally agreed to make a certain testamentary disposition of their respective properties. The contract was fully performed by the husband on his part, and, after his death, the benefits provided by him in his will were accepted by his wife. This was held a sufficient part performance entitling the beneficiaries under will of the wife to sue in her lifetime to enjoin her from violating her part of the agreement by a conveyance in fraud of their rights. Carmichael v. Carmichael, 72 Mich. 76, 40 N. W. 173, 16 Am. St. Rep. 528, 1 L. R. A. 596. The case is analogous to that of an oral agreement for exchange of lands, partly performed by conveyance to, and possession taken by, defendant.

79. Graves v. Goldthwait, 153 Mass. 268, 26 N. E. 860, 10 L. R. A. 763, where plaintiff, a tenant in common, purchased the right of all her cotenants except defendant in a certain parcel, in reliance on defendant's oral agreement to convey his right also. Plaintiff's change of position, it was held, did not grow out of, nor was it exclusively referable to, the oral contract.

Dec. 773 (a father's agreement to devise land to his son in consideration of the latter's immediately conveying certain land of his own to his sister was taken out of the statute by such conveyance on the son's part). A method of reconciling several of these cases is suggested in Pomeroy Spec. Perf. § 135 note. If plaintiff's conveyance to the third person was made before the agreement with defendant was completed, plaintiff's act is obviously merely a "preparatory" one. Lydick v. Holland, 83 Mo. 703.

Release of one parcel.— Defendant mortgagee agreed to release one parcel from a mortgage covering plaintiff's two tracts, on plaintiff's execution of a second mortgage to defendant and consent to the assignment of the first mortgage to defendant; these acts and plaintiff's consequent change of position were a sufficient part performance. against D [85] A agreed to convey his land to C and take C's lot in part payment, and then to convey such lot to B, who agreed to accept it and pay for it. A's transaction with C was completed, but B refused to perform. A then sued B for specific performance. It was held on these facts in one case that since A's status quo cannot be restored, he should succeed in his suit; [86] in a later case, that since A's transaction with C does not point to a contract with B, A should not succeed.[87] By agreement among A, a vendor, B, his vendee, who was insolvent and unable to pay, and C, the latter was to advance money to B to enable him to make the payment, and was to have a lien on the land for the advances. C advanced the money and the payment was made. This was held sufficient part performance on C's part of the agreement to give him a lien.[88] A landlord orally agreed with his tenants, four partners in a certain business, to give a new lease, if the firm should dissolve, two of the partners should retire, and the two remaining partners should carry on the business and assume all the liabilities of the old firm. These acts were fully performed by the partners, and the change of position and assumption of increased liability by the continuing partners were held to entitle them to specific performance of the agreement to give a lease.[89]

j. Agreements Among Cotenants. A number of parol agreements among tenants in common, not admitting of classification, are mentioned in the note.[90]

J. Part-Performance Doctrine Applies to a Lease. The doctrine of part performance applies to such contracts to lease premises or to renew a lease as fall within the statute of frauds, equally as well as to contracts of sale. Contracts to give a written lease therefore may be part performed by taking possession and paying rent,[91] or by taking possession and making valuable improve-

Q. B. 737, 49 L. T. Rep. N. S. 303, 31 Wkly. Rep. 820, was there criticized on the ground that the acts of part performance were done before the agreement was concluded. But this seems a mistaken criticism. There was a contract at the time of the acts, although some of its terms were left to arbitration.

90. Where it was part of the agreement for partition among tenants in common that one of them, defendant, shall procure the surrender of a lease to which plaintiff's, a cotenant, share is subject, and defendant received the stipulated consideration for the surrender, and complainant cannot be restored to her former position, defendant's agreement to procure the surrender is out of the statute. Borden v. Curtis, 46 N. J. Eq. 468, 19 Atl. 127. For an instructive case where the purchasing cotenant's acts in reliance on defendant's promise to convey his interest were merely collateral and not a part performance see Graves v. Goldthwait, 153 Mass. 268, 26 N. E. 860, 10 L. R. A. 763. Agreement not to assert the right to partition. It was held that this agreement could not be repudiated by defendant — the last survivor — who had received all the benefit of it.

K. Oral Gifts — 1. In General — a. Rule Stated. The doctrine of part performance applies to gifts as well as to contracts. An oral gift of land, or promise to give[94] land, followed by the vendee's taking possession of the land in pursuance of the promise and making valuable and permanent improvements in reliance thereon, may be enforced by a court of equity against the donor or his heirs or grantees with notice. If the promise to give is conditioned on the vendee's making improvements, a compliance with the condition furnishes a consideration for the transaction.[95] But it is not necessary that there be a technical consideration. If the promise to give was wholly unconditional, the same relief will be given to the donee, based upon the same reasons of estoppel against the donor and virtual fraud upon the donee because of his change of condition as in the case of a parol sale with possession and improvements.[96] The making of the improvements is both an act of part performance and the equivalent, in the view of equity, of an actual consideration.[97]

The tenant had contracted to sublet, and his sublessee had expended money in alterations and repairs with the knowledge and approval of the lessor. It was held that the outlay by the sublessee was as much a part performance of the agreement as if made by the lessee, and the latter was therefore entitled to specific performance. In Burris v. Landers, 114 Cal. 310, 46 Pac. 162, a distinction was taken, for purposes of pleading, between a parol gift and a parol promise to give; but the court recognizes that each may be the subject of part performance in exactly the same way. See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 219 et seq.

Statutes.— In Georgia, if possession of lands has been given under a voluntary agreement upon a meritorious consideration, and valuable improvements have been made upon the faith thereof, equity will decree a performance of the agreement. Code (1895), § 4039; Garbutt v. Mayo, 128 Ga. 269, 57 ment of oral gifts there must be both possession taken [98] and improvements made [99] on the part of the donee.[1]

c. Donee's Change of Position. The fact that the donee, in these cases, often gives up other employment or opportunities for employment and changes the conditions and circumstances of his life is frequently spoken of as strengthening his equities.[2]

d. Charitable Gifts. Gifts for charitable purposes, as for a church [3] or for a school-house,[4] if followed by possession and improvements, may be enforced.

2. Improvements — a. Must Be on Faith of Gift. The improvements must have been made on the faith of the gift and be exclusively referable thereto.[5]

In Alabama, under the statute, parol gifts of land followed merely by possession and improvements are not enforced. See supra, V, D, 3, a.

Donor's title.— In Kaufman v. Cook, 114 Ill. 11, 28 N. E. 378, specific performance was refused because the donor did not have title at the time when the donee took possession. But it is conceded that lack of title at the time of the contract would be immaterial in case of a sale. The ground for this distinction between a parol gift and a parol sale is not made clear.

Rep. 668. Since such change of position, when made at the request of the promisor and on the strength of the promise, furnishes a consideration which, except for the statute of frauds, would render the agreement to give a legally binding contract, it has been held, in one case, to render the contract specifically enforceable, independent of any further equities arising from valuable improvements. Bigelow v. Bigelow, 95 Me. 17, 49 Atl. 49. The effect of this decision, if followed, would be to convert nearly every oral gift into a contract. Its reasoning seems to ignore the fundamental principle of part performance, that defendant is charged, not on the contract, but on the equities arising from plaintiff's acts. All other cases are uniform on the necessity of valuable improvements in the case of a gift. But see in partial accord Cole v. Pilkington, L. R. 19 Eq. 174, 44 L. J. Ch. 381, 31 L. T. Rep. N. b. Must Be Valuable and Permanent. They must not be of trivial character in comparison with the value of the property, but valuable and permanent.[6]

c. Whether Must Be More Valuable Than Rental. It is the rule in a few states that if the improvements do not equal in value the rental value or the value of the use and occupation of the premises during plaintiff's occupancy, relief will be denied.[7] But this rule is generally rejected, for the reason, among others, that it makes the vendee's right to relief depend upon the time when he brings his suit.[8]

d. Rule in Pennsylvania. In Pennsylvania the rule requires the donee to show improvements for which he cannot be compensated.[9]

3. Compensation When Specific Performance Denied. When specific performance is refused because of uncertainty of the proofs, the court may nevertheless require the donor to pay for the improvements, and may establish a lien on the land therefor.[10]

L. Easements and Licenses — 1. In General. A "parol grant of an easement is, in equity, out of the statute when the circumstances are such that a contract for the conveyance of the fee would be taken out of it."[11] These circumstances are generally the construction of works or making of valuable improvements on the faith of the license or parol grant, together with user;[12] less frequently payment and user;[13] while in a few jurisdictions, possession and user is sufficient.[14]

M. Vendor or Lessor Plaintiff — 1. In General. The vendor or lessor may have specific performance of a contract which has been part performed. This is in part because the delivery of possession by him to the vendor involves a change of condition on his part as well as on the part of the vendee, and points to a contract concerning the land; chiefly because, in cases where the remedy is available to the vendee it should, on the ground of mutuality, be available to the vendor likewise.[24]

2. What Acts Are Sufficient. Payment of course is insufficient.[25] Possession delivered by the vendor, or taken by the vendee with the vendor's consent, is recognized in a few states and in Canada, and of course in England, as a sufficient act of part performance.[26] Payment, in full, or in part, together with possession

In West Virginia it is held that the vendee's taking possession is not enough; the vendor must deliver possession, thus relying on his own act of part performance. Huntington, etc., Land Development Co. v. Thornburg, 46 W. Va. 99, 33 S. E. 108.

The vendee's possession is not recognized as enough in Maine (Bennett v. Dyer, 89 Me. 17, 35 Atl. 1004), nor by statute, in Alabama (Heflin v. Milton, 69 Ala. 354).

It must clearly appear that the possession was taken under the contract of purchase and not, for example, under an agreement to enter as tenant and pay rent (Owings v. Baldwin, 1 Md. Ch. 120 [affirmed in 8 Gill 337]); or under a preëxisting right of eminent domain (Haisten v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 51 Ga. 199). See supra, V, E, 1, b.

delivered to or taken by the vendee, is treated as a sufficient part performance in several states;[27] or such possession coupled with the making of improvements by the vendee.[28] If the vendor, in reliance on the agreement, has not only delivered possession but has made extensive alterations in the premises for the vendee's accommodation, the vendor's equity for a specific performance is strengthened;[29] and the same result follows from such improvements upon or use of the land by the vendee that it cannot be restored to plaintiff in its original condition.[30]

N. Exchange — 1. Plaintiff's Double Position. In oral agreements for the exchange of lands, since plaintiff occupies the double position of vendee of one tract and vendor of another, he may have the benefit of acts of part performance appropriate to either relation.[31]

2. His Position as Vendee. Since conveyance by plaintiff is equivalent to payment, such conveyance, together with his taking possession of the land which he was to receive, satisfies the usual requirements of part performance;[32] and the same is true if plaintiff, without making or receiving a conveyance, takes possession and makes valuable improvements upon the lands which were to be conveyed to him.[33]

3. His Position as Vendor. If plaintiff has made a conveyance and defendant has taken possession thereunder, he not only has made the payment required of him but in his character as vendor can rely on his vendee's act of part performance and demand a conveyance, that is, payment from defendant.[34]

Compare, however, Riddell v. Riddell, 70 Nebr. 472, 97 N. W. 609, where, admitting the rule of the text "where both conveyances were intended to be contemporary and part of one transaction," the court distinguished the case where defendant's obligation is entirely future — to relinquish a possible interest by inheritance in the estate of the party who makes the conveyance.

4. Part Performance by Both Parties. If there has been conveyance by plaintiff and possession thereunder by defendant, and possession also taken by plaintiff of the land to be conveyed to him, the case presents acts of part performance appropriate to plaintiff's situation both as vendor and as vendee,[35] and it appears that the taking of possession by each party of the land contracted for by him is sufficient, independently of any conveyance by plaintiff.[36]

5. Conveyance Alone Insufficient. The fact that plaintiff has conveyed to defendant, should not, standing alone, be accepted as a part performance, since that act is merely equivalent to a payment by him.[37]

O. Parol Partition, Family Compromise, Etc. — 1. Parol Partition. Equity will enforce specific performance of a parol agreement for the division of land by those jointly interested, where there has been a part performance.[38] Taking possession of the respective parcels allotted to each is considered a sufficient part performance, even in states where the requirements for part performance between vendor and vendee are stringent.[39]

2. Family Arrangements and Compromises. Various arrangements for exchange of interests among members of a family, or for the compromise of disputed rights, when carried out by taking of possession, are governed by the same rule as parol partitions.[40]

be proved by direct evidence. Where the facts including the acts of the parties raise a convincing implication that the contract was actually made and satisfy the court of its terms and performance, it is sufficient to justify its enforcement.[43] The court should consider proof of surrounding circumstances which render the contract improbable,[44] or which may throw light on the true nature of the contract if its terms are in dispute.[45] The uncorroborated testimony of plaintiff or of a single witness, when contradicted, is insufficient;[46] but the mere fact that there is some conflicting testimony as to the making of the contract or its terms does not necessitate the refusal of the relief.[47] In a few states the rule has been announced in the form that the contract and its terms must be proved "beyond a reasonable doubt;"[48] but this statement of the rule has been criticized as too exacting,[49] and appears to have been disregarded by many decisions even in the states which have announced it.[50]

b. Terms of the Contract. The land which is the subject-matter of the contract must be clearly identified,[51] the price or other consideration must not be uncertain;[52] and if the sale is on credit, the time for payment should be clearly proved.[53]

c. Acts of Part Performance. The acts of part performance relied on to escape the operation of the statute of frauds must be clearly, definitely, and satisfactorily proved; and not only the acts themselves, but their compliance with the rules which prescribe the necessary relation of the act to the contract, must be established.[54]

2. Evidence of Gift. The requisite of clear, conclusive, and unequivocal evidence is especially important in the case of a parol gift of land, since the fact that the parties are usually relatives tends to account for plaintiff's occupation of the land as permissive, not as the result of contract. The proof must indicate more than a vague intention to give, or a family arrangement resting upon the will of the parties.[55] In Pennsylvania the rule is well established that much stronger evidence is required to support a gift from parent to child than a transaction between strangers, and statements to the same effect are found in other jurisdictions.[56]

3. Evidence of Agreement to Devise. The rules as to the weight of evidence are applied with the utmost strictness to oral contracts to devise the whole or part of an estate. Such contracts are viewed with suspicion by the courts, and must be established by the clearest and most convincing evidence. In these, as in other contracts, one party to which is deceased, the defendant heirs or devisees are under the disadvantage that they are deprived by his death of their most important testimony.[57] In such contracts the proof, in addition to inferences

Statement of rule and reason therefor.— "It is so natural for parents to help their children by giving them the use of a farm or house, and then to call it theirs, that no gift or sale of the property can be inferred from such circumstances. It is so entirely usual to call certain books, or utensils, or rooms, or houses, by the name of the children who use them, that it is no evidence at all of their title as against their parents, but only a mode of distinguishing the rights which the parents have allotted to the children as against each other, and in subjection to their own paramount right. The very nature of the relation, therefore, requires the contracts between parents and children to be proved by a kind of evidence that is very different from that which may be sufficient between strangers. It must be direct, positive, express, and unambiguous." Poorman v. Kilgore, 26 Pa. St. 365, 372, 67 Am. Dec. 524 [quoted in Rau v. Rau, 79 Nebr. 694, 113 N. W. 174].

If the deceased made a will in violation of the contract, the court in enforcing the con-from the situation, circumstances, and relations of the parties, must generally consist of evidence of verbal declarations made by the deceased to third persons.[58] This is a kind of evidence which the law recognizes as weak and unsatisfactory, and to be scrutinized with care. Vague admissions, mere declarations of an intention to confer a benefit, loose and unconnected statements made to different persons at various times in chance conversations, do not, unless well corroborated, furnish proof of such a character as will warrant specific performance of an oral contract or gift.[59]

VI. PLAINTIFF'S DEFAULT.

A. Plaintiff Must Be Able, Ready, and Willing to Perform — 1. In General. In general plaintiff must show performance or ability, readiness, and willingness to perform all the provisions of the contract to be performed by him.[60] Save in the exceptional cases of immaterial default admitting of compensation,[61] relief must be denied to a plaintiff who is unable to perform his part of the contract.[62]

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 257 et seq. See also supra, IV, F.

A vendor conveying the land to a third person pending performance of the contract for the sale thereof is not entitled to specific performance of the contract against the purchaser. Groden v. Jacobson, 129 N. Y. App. Div. 508, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 183.

of title does not take the place of a good title.[65] The fact that a person contracting to convey land does not at the time have title to all of it does not render specific performance of the contract impossible, so as to deprive equity of jurisdiction, where it does not appear that he might not acquire title to the whole of it.[66]

b. Burden of Proof as to Title. The burden of proof is on the vendor to show a good title, where that is denied in the vendee's answer, or the vendee in his answer insists that the vendor exhibit his title, or the vendee refuses to perform on account of alleged defects.[67]

Leasehold interest.— In Bensel v. Gray, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 372 [affirmed in 80 N. Y. 517], plaintiffs, who held under certain tax leases, made a written agreement to assign them to defendant, "with all and singular the premises therein mentioned, and the buildings thereon, together with the appurtenances, to have and to hold the same" for the remainder of the term mentioned in the leases, with a covenant that the assigned premises were free from encumbrances. It was held that the agreement called for the conveyance of a leasehold interest, and, if the leases were invalid, plaintiffs could not enforce specific performance, even if defendant obtained possession under the agreement. See also Krause v. Kraus, 58 Ill. App. 559 [affirmed in 162 Ill. 328, 44 N. E. 736]; Hyde v. Warden, 3 Exch. D. 72, 47 L. J. Exch. 121, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 567, 26 Wkly. Rep. 201, contract for grant of under-lease.

Waiver of objections to title see Hyde v. Warden, 3 Exch. D. 72, 47 L. J. Exch. 121, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 567, 26 Wkly. Rep. 201, contract for grant of under-lease. See also Walton v. McKinney, (Ariz. 1908) 94 Pac. 1122; Secombe v. Fuller, 50 Wash. 666, 97 Pac. 805, where the evidence in a suit for specific performance was held to show a waiver by both parties to a contract for the sale of land of a provision terminating the contract if the abstract did not show a good title, or could not be made to do so within thirty days from notice of defects.

Constructive notice of terms of original lease.—A party who enters into an agreement for an under-lease, without inquiring into the covenants of the original lease, has constructive notice of all usual covenants in the original lease. Flight v. Barton, 3 Myl. & K. 282, 10 Eng. Ch. 282, 40 Eng. Reprint 108. But it has been held that upon an agreement to grant an under-lease the grantee has constructive notice of the provisions of the original lease only when he has had a fair opportunity of ascertaining what they were. Hyde v. Warden, 3 Exch. D. 72, 47 L. J. Exch. 121, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 567, 26 Wkly. Rep. 201. And it has also been held that where a party entered into an agreement with a lessee for an under-lease, and informed the lessee of the nature of the business which he meant to carry on in the premises, and the lessee did not apprise him that there was a covenant in the original lease prohibiting such business, the silence of the lessee was equivalent to a representation that there was no such prohibitory covenant. Flight v. Barton, supra.

Rights under a sealed instrument may be waived by parol.—Where defendant seeks to defeat the complainant's right to specific performance upon the ground that there was an unpaid mortgage upon complainant's property about which nothing whatever was said in the contract, which was under seal, the complainant may show by parol that defendant had agreed to let the mortgage stand and receive the money from defendant instead of having defendant pay it off, as he had intended doing. But as to the rule in Michigan see Garden City Sand Co. v. Miller, 157 Ill. 225, 41 N. E. 753.

No title.— In the following cases the vendor was wholly unable to convey a title: White v. Morgan, 42 S. W. 403, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 844; Ten Eyck v. Manning, 52 N. J. Eq. 47, 27 Atl. 900 (title was in complainant's wife); Shelley v. Mikkelson, 5 N. D. 22, 63 N. W. 210 (vendor had conveyed to another); Shankland's Appeal, 47 Pa. St. 113 (plaintiff, a cestui que trust, forbidden to alienate his interest); Core v. Wigner, 32 W. Va. 277, 9 S. E. 36 (vendor had conveyed to another).

c. Legal Title in Fee. By the good title which the vendor is bound to convey is meant, in this country, the legal title in fee simple.[68]

d. Partial Failure. If the contract is an entire one, the vendor cannot succeed if his title fails as to part of the land, or a partial interest therein.[69]

e. Title Such as Contract Calls For. In all cases where the vendor is plaintiff, the title must be such as he contracted to convey.[70]

f. Defendant's Knowledge of Defects. If the contract stipulates for a good title, or for a warranty of the title, the vendee's knowledge of defects in the title

The fact that plaintiff has the right to call for the legal title is not enough; as where plaintiffs, beneficiaries under a will, are, under the doctrine of reconversion, entitled to take the land instead of the proceeds, but such election does not of itself give them the legal title (Van Zandt v. Garretson, 21 R. I. 418, 44 Atl. 221); or where plaintiffs are cestuis que trustent and the only remaining duty for the trustee to perform is to convey the legal title to them (Read v. Power, 12 R. I. 16). See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 259.

Satisfactory title.— If the contract calls for a title "satisfactory" to the vendee or his attorney, and the vendee or his attorney, as the case may be, in good faith disapproves of the title, specific performance will not be decreed. Crigler v. Blair, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. 324, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 573; Sargent v. Sibley, 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 1219, 13 Am. L. Rec. 33, 11 Cinc. L. Bul. 145, 177; Boulton v. Bethune, 21 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 110, 478.

The vendee cannot claim a better title than contract calls for.— Beckwith v. Marryman, 2 Dana (Ky.) 371, where the vendee agreed to accept an infant's deed. In the following cases the vendee agreed to take such title as vendor had. Maxfield r. Bierbauer, 8 Minn. 413; Pillsbury v. Alexander, 40 Nebr. 242, 58 N. W. 859; Broyles v. Bee, 18 W. Va. 514.

But the express stipulation of the vendee that there should be no objections to the title does not oblige the court to grant specific performance. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Gilhooly, 61 N. J. Eq. 118, 47 Atl. 494; In re Scott, [1895] 2 Ch. 603, 64 L. J. Ch. 821, 73 L. T. Rep. N. S. 43, 12 Reports 474, 43 Wkly. Rep. 694.

at the time of entering into the contract does not deprive him of his right to insist upon a good title.[71]

4. Substantial Performance. The requirements of equity are satisfied by a substantial as distinguished from a literal performance. This principle, one of wide scope, is chiefly illustrated by the attitude of equity toward a default in respect of time.[72] While each case must depend on its own circumstances, plaintiff's failure to perform a useless act or his default in an incidental matter does not require the denial of relief.[73]

B. Performance by Plaintiff Before Suit — 1. Conditions Precedent — a. In General. A plaintiff seeking to enforce a contract depending on a condition precedent must show that the condition has been fully performed.[74] It is other-

But where the contract is silent as to the character of the title, the legal implication that the vendor engages to furnish a good title may be overcome by proof of the vendee's knowledge of the defect or encumbrance. Leonard v. Woodruff, 23 Utah 494, 65 Pac. 199.

That the vendee might have discovered the defects by examination of the records does not excuse the vendor from furnishing a good title. Nichol v. Nichol, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 145.

Waiver of defects.—In a few cases the vendee has waived defects by taking possession or continuing in possession, committing acts of ownership without any agreement with the owner qualifying the acts, after the defect was known. services which are a condition precedent cannot enforce the contract.[77] But when performance of such services is accepted by the vendor, his heirs cannot object that it was insufficient.[78]

c. Improvements. Plaintiff's failure to erect buildings or to make improvements on the property to be conveyed, or on other property, when such act is a condition precedent, defeats the relief.[79]

d. Claims of Third Persons. So, where plaintiff is required, as a condition precedent, to pay or extinguish claims of third persons, he must show performance.[80]

e. Performance Waived, Excused, or Impossible by Act of Other Party.[81] But plaintiff's failure to perform fully is not a defense, where the performance is made impossible by the act of the other party, for defendant cannot rely upon a default which he himself has caused.[82] Failure to perform may be waived or excused by mutual consent,[83] or by repudiation of the contract by the other party;[84] and failure to make payment before suit by the vendee's mistaken construction of the contract.[85] A condition precedent will not be insisted upon when it is too vague,[86] and is waived where defendant himself has broken it.[87]

2. Breach of Essential Covenant. The plaintiff's wilful violation of an essential covenant, which was a material inducement to defendant to enter into the contract, is a defense to specific enforcement of the contract,[88] unless the equities of the case require its enforcement.[89] The rule is applied to a contract to lease, or to renew a lease, where plaintiff has broken an essential covenant,[90]

Separation agreement.—Where an agreement of separation provided that the husband should pay a certain sum monthly to the wife, and should receive the rentals from a house standing in the wife's name, and the wife persistently purchased goods at stores, and had the bills charged to the husband, and, after he had deducted such bills from his monthly payments, she notified the tenant of the house to pay the rent to her, it was held that she was not entitled to a decree against the husband for specific performance of his agreement. Chandler v. Chandler, 220 Pa. St. 311, 69 Atl. 866.

Performance of representations.— Failure of plaintiff to make good his representations as to future acts to be performed by him, which were a material inducement to defendant to enter into the contract, constitutes a defense to specific performance, although the representations were no part of the contract, and although there is no doubt as to plaintiff's legal right under the contract. Where there is an agreement for a lease, of such a nature that, in the usual course, a certain covenant would be introduced in it, and the intended lessee has done that which would be a breach of such covenant, he cannot compel the specific performance of the agreement. Tunno v. Lewis, 1 L. J. Ch. 177. The breach by the lessee must be wilful and deliberate, and such as would work a forfeiture and render the and to a contract to purchase contained in a lease.[91] But a breach of an independent covenant, as distinguished from a condition, which is not a material inducement to the contract, is not a bar to specific performance.[92]

C. Tender or Offer Before Suit — 1. Suit by Vendor — a. Tender of Deed Held Unnecessary. By the rule in some jurisdictions, a tender of a deed by the vendor is unnecessary as a prerequisite to a suit.[93]

b. Tender Held Necessary. By the rule in other jurisdictions a tender of a deed is a necessary prerequisite to the vendor's suit, unless some valid excuse is shown for failure to make a tender.[94]

c. Sufficiency of Tender. A literal and precise tender is not generally required,[95] but it should be an effort, in good faith, to comply with the requirements of the contract.[96] The tender is properly made to the person directed by the vendee to receive it; [97] in case of assignment of the contract, to the original Acquiescence by tenant.—Where the subject of a contract was an agreement to take the lease of a house, and the proposed tenant went into possession at once, and occupied for two years, but, while continuing in occupation, from time to time called on the landlord to fulfil promises which the tenant alleged to have been the inducement for the contract, and paid rent, but always paid it under protest, it was held that these circumstances did not amount to such acquiescence as to prevent the tenant from ultimately refusing to perform the contract, but that the payments were to be treated as merely made in respect of the actual use and occupation, and in no other character. Lamare v. Dixon, L. R. 6 H. L. 414, 43 L. J. Ch. 203, 22 Wkly. Rep. 49.

Decreeing performance and antedating lease.— In England it has been held that if there has been a breach of an agreement for a lease, or what would have amounted to a breach of the covenants which ought to have been introduced into the lease had it been granted, which would have worked a forfeiture, and that is clearly made out, a specific performance will not be decreed; but if there is a conflict of evidence as to whether any breach has been committed, the proper decree, on a suit for specific performance, is to direct the lease to be dated at a time antecedently to the alleged breach, and to require from plaintiff an undertaking to agree, in any action, that the lease was executed on that day. vendee;[98] in case of his death, to his executor, since he represents the testator's means of paying the purchase-money.[99]

d. Objections to Tender. The vendee's objections to the tender should be stated at the time; a specific objection to the tender, it seems, cannot be set up in defense to the vendor's bill when the vendee refused the tender generally,[1] or where he objected to it on some other ground.[2]

e. Tender Excused.[3] Tender need not be made where the vendee has announced that he will not comply with his contract, so that tender would be a useless ceremony.[4] And tender is excused where the vendee evades it,[5] or where the deeds are to be drawn by the vendee, which he refuses to do on demand.[6] Parties who are permitted to sue in the vendor's right, but who are not clothed with the legal title, are not obliged to tender a deed before suit; as the vendor's administrator[7] or the assignee of a purchase-money note.[8]

2. Suit by Vendee — a. Tender or Offer Held Unnecessary. It is distinctly held in some cases that a tender or offer by the vendee before suit is unnecessary, his failure to make such tender or offer only affecting the question of costs;[9] since the right of action for specific performance grows out of the contract itself, and not out of a breach of the contract.[10]

b. Offer Before Suit Held Necessary. Other cases state that an offer, before

E. 541; Reed v. Hodges, 80 Ind. 304; Mather v. Scoles, 35 Ind. 1); but not necessary when time is fixed (Maris v. Masters, 31 Ind. App. 235, 67 N. 12. Whether the word "tender" was used in the sense of a mere offer, or how far it implied some further requisites of a valid legal tender, can usually be determined, for a given jurisdiction, only by a careful comparison of cases; and even then it is often left in great doubt. Option.— The holder of an option for purchase of land cannot enforce specific performance by the vendor in the absence of a showing of the tender of the purchase-price. Levy v. Lyon, 153 Cal. 213, 94 Pac. 881. See also Deitz v. Stephenson, 51 Oreg. 596, 95 Pac. 803, sale of stock. While there is a conflict of authority as to whether an actual tender, such as is required in actions at law, is a necessary prerequisite to specific performance in case of an option to purchase realty, based on an actual consideration, of whether a tender in the bill for relief is sufficient, jurisdiction to order specific performance of a mere naked option will not be entertained, even though it is in writing, where the only consideration shown is by the usual recital of one dollar consideration, and where further action of the vendee is required before the option is developed into a contract to buy, and in such case full and proper tender of the purchase-price or other consideration, in accordance with the terms of the instrument, is essential to maintenance of such a suit. Rude v. Levy, 43 Colo. 482, 96 Pac. 560, 127 Am. St. Rep. 123.

d. Conditional Tender Held Sufficient. In many cases it is distinctly held that in case of mutual and dependent stipulations a strict tender on the vendee's part is not necessary. An offer to pay by the vendee, coupled with an ability to pay, on condition that the vendor concurrently performs his part by executing a deed, is a good and sufficient tender.[13]

e. Strict Tender Excused. It is generally held that where the vendee does not know the exact amount payable or an accounting is necessary to determine the amount, strict tender is excused; an offer to pay what is due is sufficient; or a tender of a less sum than is due, if the vendee supposes it to be the correct sum.[14]

f. Objection to Sufficiency of Tender. If the vendor objects to the tender at the time it is made on a specific ground, he waives possible objections to it on other grounds.[15] If no objections are made to the sufficiency of the tender or demand at the time,[16] or if defendant then repudiates the contract,[17] he cannot set up defects in the tender or demand as a defense to the suit.

(II) Where Vendor Has Put It Out of His Power to Perform. Tender to the vendor is not necessary where the vendor has conveyed to another or otherwise put it out of his power to perform.[20]

(III) Other Excuses. The vendee need not follow the vendor to his residence without the state for the purpose of making a tender.[21] Tender is excused where the vendor intentionally avoids giving the vendee an opportunity of making it,[22] or where the vendee is at the place where the conveyance is to be made, ready and willing to perform his part, but the vendor is not ready to perform his part.[23] On the death of the vendor, tender need not be made to the personal representative, since he cannot make a deed without order of court.[24]

h. Vendee Need Not Tender a Deed For Execution. By the practice in this country, it is not customary for the vendee to draw up the deed. In the absence therefore of any express stipulation on the subject, it is unnecessary for the vendee to tender a deed to the vendor to be executed by the latter.[25]

3. Deposit in Court. It is not, as a general rule, necessary for the vendee, plaintiff, to bring the purchase-money into court on filing the bill. His offer of payment in the bill is sufficient.[26] The rule in a few states is otherwise, and money

But repudiation of the contract by the vendor at time of tender of the first instalment of the price, it has been held, does not excuse the vendee from tendering subsequent instalments as they fall due. Kimball v. Tooke, 70 Ill. 553.

D. Time; When Essential — 1. Time Not Essential; General Rule. At law, time is always of the essence of the contract. Where any time is fixed for the completion of it, the contract must be completed on the day specified. But courts of equity make a distinction in all cases between that which is matter of substance and that which is matter of form. The principle has been firmly established from an early day in all ordinary contracts for the sale and purchase of land, that time is not, in equity, of the essence of the contract; that is to say, acts which plaintiff, by the terms of the contract, stipulated to perform on a given date, may be performed at a later date.[29] In particular, the vendee's delay in payment of

30. See the cases cited in the preceding note as to delay on the part of the purchaser.

31. "The principal grounds of the doctrine are that the rule of the common law, requiring performance of every contract at the appointed day, is often harsh and unjust in the operation; that although some time of performance by each party is usually named in tracts other than for sale and purchase of land.[32] In a few states the rule is declared by statute.[33] A few cases appear to depart from the general rule, and to indulge the presumption that time is essential unless some definite excuse is shown for default.[34]

2. Time Essential by Implication — a. In General. Time may be of the essence, without express stipulation to that effect, by implication from the nature of the contract itself, or of the subject-matter, or of the circumstances under which the contract is made.[35]

any agreement for the sale of land, it is often not regarded by the parties as one of the essential terms of their contract; and that a court of chancery has the power of moulding the remedy according to the circumstances of each case, and of making due compensation for delay, without punishing it by a forfeiture of all right to relief." Barnard v. Lee, 97 Mass. 92, 93, per Gray, J. The complicated nature of titles in England, rendering the making out of an abstract of title a matter of much time and labor, is said to have been an important reason for the origin of the rule. See Scott v. Fields, 7 Ohio, Pt. II, 90; Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. Jr. 265, 6 Rev. Rep. 124, 32 Eng. Reprint 108 (per Lord Eldon, explaining the rule on the ground that the effect of the contract in equity is to transfer the estate to the vendee); Leggett v. Edwards, Hopk. (N. Y.) 530 (explaining the rule on the analogy of the contract of sale to that of mortgage). But the analogy of the relation of vendor and vendee to that of mortgagee and mortgagor does not lead to the conclusion that the same time should be given to the vendee to perform that is given to a mortgagor to redeem. b. From Nature of the Property or Consideration. Thus time has been held essential where the nature of the estate sold is such that its value necessarily increases or diminishes with the lapse of time, as in the case of a reversion[36] or a life annuity,[37] or where the value of the property[38] or of the consideration[39] is necessarily uncertain and fluctuating.

c. From the Purpose of the Transaction. Time may be essential from the avowed objects of the sellers, purchasers, or lessees; as where it is important for the success of defendant's business undertakings that plaintiff comply with his contract promptly, and this was understood by the parties.[40]

In this country time is more important than in England, since the value of land is more fluctuating here than there. Barnard v. Lee, 97 Mass. 92; Goldsmith v. Guild, 10 Allen (Mass.) 239. See also post, VI, F, 4, b, (I), note.

A contract dated September 22 provided for a conveyance of vacant land on or before October 15, and that on the passing of title the purchaser might take possession. The purchaser intended to build and early possession was important, if not necessary, to effect the object of the purchase. Vendors knew that the purchaser intended to build, and that he desired immediate unclouded possession. It was held that while the contract itself did not make it so, considering its terms with the other facts stated, time of passing title was of the essence of the contract. d. In Unilateral Contracts. In general time is of the essence where there are not mutual remedies or the contract is unilateral. If the performance of a certain condition is a prerequisite to the acquirement of a right to the subject-matter of the contract, time is of the essence of the contract.[41]

e. Options. If the right acquired by the terms of the contract is simply a privilege or option, and it is provided that the option must be accepted or that payment must be made within a prescribed time, then time is of the essence of the contract.[42] In a great majority of the cases, payment of all or a part of the price, as well as acceptance of the option, is treated as a condition precedent. Such payment therefore, or tender thereof, must be made within the time limited. In some cases, however, acceptance within the time limited was the only condition

Agreement for assignment of patents.— Telephone Corp. v. Canadian Telephone Co., 103 Me. 444, 69 Atl. 767.

The policy of the rule was well defended by Walworth, C. J., in Wells v. Smith, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 22, 24, 31 Am. Dec. 274: "Although in theory the interest is supposed to be a fair equivalent for the non-payment of money at the time agreed upon, we all know that in point of fact, the person to whom it is due frequently sustains great losses in con-

the essence" has been held to be for the benefit of the vendor only, who may waive it and insist on performance by the vendee.[45]

b. What Language Insufficient. The intent to make time of the essence must be clearly and unmistakably shown. An intention to make time essential cannot be inferred from the mere appointment of a day for the delivery of a deed or the payment of the price.[46]

c. What Language Sufficient. It is not necessary that time be expressly declared in so many words to be of the essence of the contract. As against the vendee, it is often held sufficient if the contract declares that it shall be void in case the vendee fails in performance before a certain day.[47] And as against the vendor a provision that if title is not completed within a fixed time the vendee shall be released from his contract makes time of the essence.[48] Time is essential whenever that clearly appears to have been the intention of the parties.[49] Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that time was intended to be essential, since such evidence does not vary the contract, but rather confirms it.[50]

d. Forfeiture of Payments and Improvements — (i) In General. A clause to the effect that on the vendee's failure to perform any or all of his stipulations within the time limited the contract shall be void and the vendee shall forfeit the payments and improvements already made is in many jurisdictions literally enforced. Notwithstanding the resulting hardship, specific performance is refused to the vendee whose default is not sufficiently excused.[51] sequence of the disappointment, which the legal rate of interest cannot compensate. On the other hand, it frequently happens that the perfecting of the title and the delivery of possession of the premises at the time contemplated by the purchaser is of essential benefit, to him; which cannot be compensated by damages which are ascertainable by the ordinary rules of computing damages."

(II) Election to Forfeit. In many cases the contract gives the vendor an election to declare a forfeiture on default by the vendee;[52] in this case the right to forfeit must be exercised promptly, or will be deemed to be waived.[53]

(III) English Rule. By the rule in England, which has considerable following in this country, the provision for a forfeiture of payments or improvements on default by the purchaser is held merely to impose a penalty to secure performance, and, in accordance with the usual rule as to penalties,[54] the purchaser is entitled to specific performance, notwithstanding his default, on making payment with interest.[55]

4. Time Made Essential by Notice — a. General Rule. Although time was not originally an essential part of the contract, still a party may, by a proper notice, bind the other party, who is in default, to perform his part of the contract within a reasonable time to be specified in such notice; and if the party receiving such notice does not perform within the time so specified, his right to specific performance is lost.[56]

b. Notice Before Default. It has been held, apparently without much consideration of the subject, that the notice may be given in advance of any default by the other party.[57] These cases appear to overlook the result, that one party, of his own volition, is enabled to introduce a new term into the contract making time of the essence.[58]

c. Must Give Reasonable Time. The notice, to be effectual, must prescribe a reasonable time, or it may be disregarded, and what is a reasonable time will vary with the circumstances of the individual case.[59]

d. Notice of Immediate Abandonment. A notice to take effect immediately or a notice that the contract is now at an end is ineffectual for such purpose;[60]

The question of the reasonableness of the notice must be judged of as of the date when it is given. "Such a notice ought to fix the longest time that could be reasonably required for the performance of the acts which remained to be done." Crawford v. Toogood, 13 Ch. D. 153, 158, 49 L. J. Ch. 108, 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 549, 28 Wkly. Rep. 248, per Fry, J. It is plain that the notice in some of the American cases, supra, did not come up to this requirement.

although it may have the effect of causing the court to scrutinize more carefully the subsequent delay of the party receiving the notice.[61]

5. Excuses For Default in Respect to Time. Non-performance at the contract time is excused when defendant himself was the cause of the delay,[62] as by evading tender or performance by plaintiff;[63] and it seems by accident or by an honest mistake on plaintiff's part.[64] His poverty and inability to pay is no excuse.[65] The vendor cannot insist upon a forfeiture for non-payment if he was unable to convey a perfect title according to the agreement;[66] and it seems in general that a well-founded objection to the vendor's title sufficiently excuses the vendee's default in respect to time of payment.[67] Whether a forfeiture will be relieved against on account of the vendee's long possession and expenditure in improvements is a question on which the cases are at variance.[68]

6. Waiver of Time Limit — a. By Agreement For Extension. Performance within the time specified by the contract may be waived by an oral or written agreement extending the time.[69]

Extent of waiver.—A contract for the sale of designated real estate stipulated for payment in instalments, and provided that in consideration of the agreement the purchaser might exercise the option to purchase adjacent lands for a specified sum at any time within a time fixed, and provided for a forfeiture on his failure to comply with the contract. The vendor waived a forfeiture for non-payment of instalments when due. The adjacent lands were necessary to the purchaser's proper use of the designated real estate. It was held that the waiver of the forfeiture was not limited merely to the designated real estate, but went to the entire contract, and the purchaser might exercise his option to purchase the adjacent lands. 70. Arkansas.— Turpin v. Beach, 88 Ark. 604, 115 S. W. 404. In this case deferred payments on a contract for the sale of land were secured by small notes, running for a series of years. The contract provided for forfeiture on default, and that the amount paid should then be treated as rent, and contemplated a surrender of the notes if a forfeiture was declared. None of the notes but the first were paid on time, but payment of the first five, and part of the sixth, was received by the vendor when he declared a forfeiture, who offered to cancel the notes only on the vendee surrendering his copy of the contract properly assigned. The vendee instead assigned the contract to complainants, who immediately tendered the balance of the purchase-price, which was refused. It was held that complainants were entitled to specific performance.

7. Time For Vendor to Perfect Title — a. In General. For a vendor to enforce specific performance of a contract of sale, it is not essential that when he made the contract he should have had such title and capacity to convey the property, or such means and right to acquire it, as would have enabled him to fulfil it on his part. It is sufficient if he is able to convey the property when by the terms of the contract or the equities of the case he is required to do so in order to entitle himself to the consideration.[71]

b. When Contract Was to Be Performed. By the great weight of authority it is sufficient if the vendor was able to make a good title at the time when the contract was to be performed.[72] It is otherwise in a few states where the vendor had no interest in the land but entered into the contract as a mere speculation. But it is enough if at the time of the contract he had an equitable title, with the right to call for a conveyance and acquires the title legal before the time for completion.[73]

c. Where Time Is Not of the Essence — (i) General Rule. When time is not of the essence of the contract, and the vendor finds his title defective, he is entitled to a reasonable time and opportunity to obtain a perfect title.[74]

(ii) Vendee May Rescind on Discovering Lack of Title. But this right of the vendor to time in which to perfect his title is subject to the limitation, in England and in several of the states, that the vendee, on learning of the state of the title, may rescind the contract by seasonably insisting on his objection. He cannot be compelled to take a title acquired by the vendor after such repudiation.[75]

Death of vendor.—Where the vendor of land died two days before the day fixed for consummation of the sale in the contract of sale, and the vendee made no tender of performance, and the executor of the vendor tendered performance within a reasonable time after obtaining authority to do so, it was held that the failure of each party to the contract to perform on the day fixed was a waiver by each of the default of the other, and the executor was entitled to specific performance of the contract. (III) PERFECTING TITLE PENDING SUIT. In accordance with the general rule, the vendor, bringing suit within a reasonable time, and using diligence in remedying the defects in his title, is allowed to perfect the title pending the suit.[76]

(IV) BEFORE TRIAL OR DECREE. It is therefore sufficient if the title is ready at the time of trial or hearing,[77] or, by the great weight of authority, if it is ready at the time of the decree.[78]

(V) CONTINUANCE FOR PERFECTING TITLE. The vendor may be allowed time after bringing suit to perfect his title or obtain evidence of its sufficiency, but such privilege is not granted as a matter of course.[79]

filing his suit for relief, or else must show a good and sufficient reason for his delay.[86]

2. Where no Time Fixed For Performance. Plaintiff may be guilty of laches, although no time for performance was fixed in the contract. Such a contract, if not void in equity for uncertainty, implies an agreement to do the act in a reasonable time.[87]

3. In Prosecution of Suit. Plaintiff's laches may consist in a failure to prosecute with diligence the suit for specific performance, although the suit may have been seasonably begun.[88]

4. Elements of Laches — a. Indicating Abandonment. Unexplained laches or acquiescence for an unreasonable length of time after the party was in a situation to enforce his right is evidence of a waiver or abandonment of right.[89]

b. Change in Situation of Parties — (1) In General. Although plaintiff's delay has not persisted so long as to amount to an abandonment, the situation of the parties may have so changed that the specific enforcement of the contract would be inequitable. A hardship to defendant from change of circumstances, accompanied by unreasonable delay on plaintiff's part, is frequently a bar to the suit, although a similar hardship, in the absence of such delay, would not constitute a defense.[90]

Strict view of laches in some communities. — The business and social conditions of a community may result in the necessity of holding parties to a stricter requirement of promptness in complying with their contracts than prevails elsewhere. Thus, speaking of California in the early fifties it was said: "This view of the materiality of time becomes stronger, when we consider that the whole policy of our State legislation is based on the difference of time here and in older communities. . . . This, indeed, was a necessity, arising from obvious causes — the want of confidence in men and titles, and the urgent demand for money to carry on busi-

(II) Party's Purpose Fails. Thus the delay is often fatal where the circumstances have so changed that the purpose of the other party in entering into the contract is defeated, as where the vendor delays to complete the contract, and the property was desired by the purchaser for immediate use.[91]

(III) Loss or Obscuring of Evidence. The fact that during plaintiff's delay defendant's evidence has been lost, or has become obscure or uncertain by lapse of time, thus putting him at a disadvantage in presenting his defense, is a circumstance of great weight against plaintiff.[92]

(IV) Vendor or His Grantee Making Expenditures. The fact that the vendor incurs large expense in connection with the property or makes extensive improvements thereon in reliance on the vendee's supposed abandonment of the contract is entitled to great weight in connection with the purchaser's delay,[93] and the same is true in regard to improvements put upon the premises by a third person to whom the vendor has made conveyance after the contract.[94]

ness. In California, where such rapid and sudden fluctuations in the affairs and fortunes of men occurred, as in all history is unexampled, and where the work of years was accomplished in months, it is impossible to hold that time, as an element of past contracts, should be measured by the standards which obtain in old and settled States, where everything is comparatively stable and permanent; where capital is abundant, titles ascertained, and interest is low." Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 317, 331, 70 Am. Dec. 725, per Baldwin, J. See also as to the comparative speed with which business is done in this country thus requiring a stricter rule as to laches Richmond v. Gray, 3 Allen (Mass.) 25.

In Canada a half century ago, it was said that much less delay would suffice to bar specific performance, where the vendee was not in possession, than would suffice in England, since land in Canada had a small and fluctuating value. Hook v. McQueen, 4 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 231 [affirming 2 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 490]. On the other hand, the fact that much land was held under contract, and the peculiar conditions in a country which was being rapidly settled, called for a liberal rule as to laches, where the vendee was in possession. O'Keefe v. Taylor, 2 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 95.

91. Parsons v. Gilbert, 45 Iowa 33 (four months' delay); Powell v. Berry, 91 Va. 568, 22 S. E. 365 (sale during real estate "boom," delay of a year and a half). But see Tapp v. Nock, 89 Ky. 414, 12 S. W. 713, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 611.

Other illustrations are: Where the object of defendant vendor was to buy other lands with the purchase-money (Smith v. Christmas, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 565); where plaintiff vendee delayed to make stipulated improvements, thus defeating the vendor's object, the enhancing of the value of adjacent property (Pratt v. Carroll, 8 Cranch (U. S.) 471, 3 L. ed. 627); and where the contract was intended for the benefit of the vendor's daughter and was not sought to be enforced until after her death (Pigg v. Corder, 12 Leigh (Va.) 69).

Delay is fatal when material circumstances have so changed that the full benefit of the bargain will not be realized by defendant, if it is enforced, and he has not by his fault caused or contributed to the delay. (v) Rights Acquired by Third Persons. In general the intervening rights and equities of third persons are to be considered when plaintiff's conduct is such that he might reasonably have been supposed to have abandoned the contract, even though those rights are not such as to give rise to the defense of bona fide purchase for value.[95]

(vi) Increase of Value. The fact that the property has largely increased in value during the purchaser's delay is often mentioned as a circumstance rendering the delay prejudicial to the vendor, and therefore fatal to the purchaser's suit. This is especially true where the delay is speculative, that is, where the vendee purposely waits to see whether his bargain will prove to be an advantageous or a losing one.[96]

(vii) Decrease of Value. The same considerations apply to a suit by the vendor, after a delay during which the property has largely decreased in value.[97]

(VIII) DEPRECIATING CURRENCY. Similarly, where the price was payable in a currency which is rapidly depreciating, a comparatively slight delay in payment beyond the stipulated time has been held fatal to the vendee.[98]

(IX) WHEN RISE IN VALUE IMMATERIAL. The reasons for holding a rise in value a circumstance conclusive against the delaying purchaser are not always clear. As has been seen, such change, in the absence of delay, constitutes no defense.[99] The purchaser becomes by the contract the owner in equity, and should have the benefit of any ordinary enhancement in the market value of the property. The cases are numerous therefore which hold immaterial a mere increase in the value of the property, not due to any expenditure on the defendant's part [1] unless of course the delay was unreasonable, speculative, or otherwise prejudicial.[2]

6. Delay After Repudiation by the Other Party. If one party gives the other notice that he does not hold himself bound to perform, and will not perform, the contract, and the other party makes no prompt assertion of his right to enforce the contract, equity will consider the latter as acquiescing in the notice, and as abandoning his equitable right. So long as he takes no action, he is in fact exercising his option to consider the contract abandoned. In such case a comparatively brief delay will be a bar.[4]

After judgment for vendee for breach of contract.— The rule is established in at least one state that a vendor generally comes too late for specific performance after the vendee has recovered a judgment for damages against him for breach of his contract to convey. Miller v. Johnson, 9 Dana (Ky.) 48; Bartlett v. Blanton, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 426; Funk v. McKeoun, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 162; Craig v. Martin, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 50, 19 Am. Dec. 157; Moore v. Randolph, 6 Leigh (Va.) 175, 29 Am. Dec. 208. But such judgment if not "fairly" obtained is not a bar (Miller v. Johnson, supra); as where the vendor obtained title and tendered a deed before the verdict (Couchman v. Boyd, 2 Dana (Ky.) 288), where the vendee prevented the title from being conveyed (Hughes v. McKinsey, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 38), or where the heirs of the vendor were infants at the time of the judgment (Nesbit v. Moore, 9

7. Delay After Notice to Complete. Similarly, a notice given to the party in default, to complete his performance of the contract within a specified time, although it may be ineffectual for its purpose because prescribing an unreasonably brief time, yet imposes upon the party receiving it the duty of acting with a greater degree of promptness.[5]

8. Laches in Other Than Land Contracts. In most of the cases hitherto cited the contract has been for the purchase and sale of land. Instances of laches in other contracts are given below. In the case of the sale of corporate stock, since the subject-matter is apt to be very fluctuating in value, the parties are often held to a high degree of promptness.[6] Laches have also been held fatal in the case of agreements to organize a corporation;[7] to renew a lease;[8] to execute a mortgage;[9] to erect a bridge across granted premises;[10] to erect a railroad station on complainant's land;[11] to cancel a note;[12] to assign a patent right, being property of a speculative and fluctuating value;[13] for the sale of slaves;[14] to deliver a contract of insurance;[15] for the use of a ditch;[16] to renew notes;[17] to keep open a lane;[18] an antenuptial agreement to accumulate a fund to be paid to the wife in lieu of dower;[19] and in cases of awards.[20]

9. Delay Held Not Fatal — a. In General. Mere lapse of time is a matter of comparatively little moment in determining the question of laches. In several of the miscellaneous instances cited below the delay amounted to nearly half a century, but was sufficiently accounted for and excused.[21] "The question of laches does not depend, as does the statute of limitation, upon the fact that a certain definite time has elapsed since the cause of action accrued, but whether, under all the circumstances of the particular case, plaintiff is chargeable with a want of due diligence in failing to institute proceedings before he did." [22]

b. Unprejudicial Delay. The broad principle, as applied to other equitable remedies, is generally recognized, that a delay which neither evidences an abandonment of right, nor operates to the prejudice of the other party, is not a defense.[23] A number of specific performance cases have expressly announced and applied the same rule; and they are supported by the statements and reasoning of a much larger number, in which denial of relief is based upon the injury resulting from the delay.[24]

c. Plaintiff Not in Default Until Tender by Defendant. Where time is not essential,[25] and the tender of the deed and payment were to be concurrent acts, and neither party has tendered performance and demanded performance by the other, neither party is in default, and the contract remains in force until barred by the statute of limitations,[26] or until notice is given requiring performance within a specified time, or until the situation of the parties is so greatly changed that specific performance would be inequitable.[27]

d. Delay Caused by Other Party — (i) In General. A delay is usually excused when it is caused by the other party.[28] In order to avail himself of plaintiff's laches, defendant must have been ready and willing to perform all the terms of the contract on his own part.[29] Defendant cannot set up his own laches.[30] But delay is not excused by defendant's failure to comply with plaintiff's unwarranted demands.[31] Where plaintiff vendor has made frequent efforts to enforce, and has been reasonably active in attempting to enforce performance, the delay is not fatal.[32]

Failure of the vendor to make a good title does not excuse the vendee's delay, where the

But an objection to title is no excuse for delay where it is frivolous or urged in bad faith.[34]

e. Other Excuses. The plaintiff's mistake as to or ignorance of his rights may excuse his delay;[35] and his infancy, under most circumstances, is held to be an excuse.[36] Other excuses are mentioned in the note.[37]

f. When Vendee Has Fully Performed. If there is no evidence of abandonment of the vendee's claim, no mere lapse of time will bar his remedy when the consideration has been fully performed, as the vendor then becomes a trustee, and can gain no adverse rights without an open disavowal.[38]

g. When Vendee or Lessee Is in Possession. When the vendee or lessee takes or retains possession under the contract, his possession amounts to a continued assertion of his claim, and is inconsistent with any inference of abandonment. As a rule mere delay in such case does not bar his right to specific performance.[39] vendee purchased such title as the vendor had. Brashier v. Gratz, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 528, 5 L. ed. 322.

Increase in value.— In a suit to specifically enforce a contract to convey land, in which payments were delayed because the vendor did not furnish a perfect title, it is no defense that since the contract was entered into the property had greatly appreciated in value, where the payments were not delayed from motives of speculation. Where defendant's land, subject to a building line restriction during certain reconstruction thereon, was inclosed by a high board fence along the sidewalk, and plaintiffs brought suit promptly to enforce the restriction after discovering that defendant's erection was outside the building line, plaintiffs were not barred by laches. Codman v. Bradley, 201 Mass. 361, 87 N. E. 591.

But that plaintiff must show good reasons for his ignorance to excuse a delay of fourteen years see Haggerty v. Elyton Land Co., 89 Ala. 428, 7 So. 651.

But see Seculovich v. Morton, 101 Cal. 673, 36 Pac. 387, 40 Am. St. Rep. 106, where it was held that the vendee could have had a commissioner appointed to convey the land to him, and his long delay was therefore not excused.

That plaintiff was driven from state by war was an excuse in Melton v. Smith, 65 Mo. 315.

Fraud of defendant, and relation of trust and confidence.— Whether equitable relief shall be barred for laches must depend largely upon the circumstances of each case, and in a suit for specific performance of a contract for the purchase of property mere delay in bringing suit is not necessarily conclusive against the right of recovery, where there has been no change in the value of the property, and especially where the defense is based upon records which were fraudulently altered by defendants, or those acting in their interest, and they stood in a relation of trust and confidence toward complainant, or where the right to bring the suit was vested in a receiver who was personally adversely interested. Contra.— See Iglehart v. Vail, 73 Ill. 63, where the vendee allowed a subsequent purchaser without actual notice to make valuable improvements. The relation of vendor to vendee is viewed, not as an express trust, against which there can be no laches until the trust is repudiated, but a trust by implication of law. Contra.— In the following cases the vendee's possession did not excuse his laches: O'Donnell v. Jackson, 69 Cal. 622, 11 Pac. 251 (three years); Weber v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 447; Lewis v. Woods, 4 How. (Miss.) 86, 34 Am. Dec. 110 (two years); Brown v. Haines, 12 Ohio 1 (two or three years); Roberts v. Braffett, 33 Utah 51, 92 Pac. 789 (in which case the court evidently confuses the question of possession as an excuse for laches with the requisites of possession as an element in the part performance of patrol contracts).

The possession must be under the contract. — Mills v. Haywood, 6 Ch. D. 196. And see Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Clintwood Coal, etc., Co., 108 Va. 433, 62 S. E. 329.

In a suit by the vendor, his laches have been excused, where the vendee in possession had been cutting timber and the status quo could not be restored. Burton v. Adkins, 2 Del. Ch. 125.

No injustice from rule.— The delay in payment by the vendee in possession may of course be put an end to by notice from the vendor to complete payment in a specified time. See supra, VI, D, 4. The rule of the text thus works no injustice to the vendor.

h. Waiver of Laches — (I) In General. The plaintiff's laches may be waived by defendant's acquiescence therein, as, by acts recognizing the contract as still subsisting.[41]

(II) By Accepting Payment. Thus the vendee's laches is waived by accepting payment or even by applying for payment; and where time is of the essence, his default as to any particular payment is waived by accepting such payment after it is due.[42]

i. Excuse For Laches in Other Than Land Contracts. The cases hitherto cited have been chiefly those relating to the purchase and sale of land. Other contracts are mentioned below, in the performance of which plaintiff's delay was excused, or did not render him guilty of laches.[43]

G. Statute of Limitations — 1. Analogy of Statute Followed. In states where the statute of limitations does not expressly apply, the court of equity frequently follows the analogy of the statute applicable to the corresponding legal action, and bars plaintiff who has delayed, without excuse, longer than the statutory period.[44]

2. Statute Including Action For Specific Performance. In several states the statute of limitations by its terms applies to the action for specific performance.[45]

3. When Statute Does Not Apply. Where the vendee has fully performed, the vendor becomes a mere trustee of the land for the vendee, and the statute therefore does not run against the latter, until a repudiation of the contract by the vendor, brought home to the vendee's knowledge.[46] Also in several states the statute does not run against a vendee in possession.[47]

4. Laches, Although Statute Has Not Run. The period of limitations of equitable actions, fixed by the statute, is not, where a purely equitable remedy is invoked, equivalent to a legislative direction that no period short of that time shall be a bar to relief in any case.[48] But mere delay short of the statutory period in some states is not a bar.[49]

VII. APPROXIMATE RELIEF.

A. Contract to Devise or Bequeath[50]— 1. In General. An agreement to make a certain disposition of property by will is one which strictly speaking is not capable of a specific execution,[51] yet it is within the jurisdiction of a court of equity to do what is equivalent to a specific performance of such an agreement.

E. 783 (period of limitation for actions in equity applies to an action for damages in lieu of specific performance); Peters v. Delaplaine, 49 N. Y. 362 (right of action accrues on vendor's refusal to perform, even though at that time he could not give a perfect title); Bruce v. Tilson, 25 N. Y. 194; McCotter v. Lawrence, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 107, 6 Thomps. & C. 392; Headen v. Womack, 88 N. C. 468; Boon v. Chamberlain, 82 Tex. 480, 18 S. W. 655; Chamberlain v. Boon, 74 Tex. 659, 12 S. See also Equity, 16 Cyc. 177; Limitations of Actions, 25 Cyc. 1057, 1059. That the statute applies to contracts for sale of land when the vendee is not in possession see McMillin v. McMillin, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 560; Smith v. Carney, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 295. That it applies to contracts for the sale of personal property see Waller v. Demint, 1 Dana (Ky.) 92, 25 Am. Dec. 134.

Action not barred.—A suit brought by a vendee to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land against one of two joint vendors and the heirs of another, within two years after the refusal to make title, is not barred by the statute of limitations, when it is shown that the vendee was, until the refusal, ignorant of the vendor's inability to convey title. Taylor v. Rowland, 26 Tex. 293. Where a title bond provided that the title was to be made when the patent issued, and the patent had in fact issued before the bond was made, and both parties were ignorant of the fact, limitations do not begin to run until the vendee has a reasonable time to learn of the existence of the patent. Will made in violation of the contract should be probated.— Since the contract can be specifically enforced only by fastening a trust upon the property, and enforcing the trust against the persons claiming under the wrongful will, such will should first be probated. Allen v. Bromberg, 147 Ala. 317, 41 So. 771.

Form of the agreement.— If the agreement is that the promisee shall receive the property at the death of the promisor, or that it shall be left to him, or that it shall belong to him at the death of the promisor, a failure to specify the mode of carrying out the promise does not impair its binding force. There need be no express promise to make a will. Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101; Best v. Gralapp, 69 Nebr. 811, 96 N. W. 641, 99 N. W. 837. See, generally, WILLS.

A covenant to make no distinction between the covenantor's children in the distribution of his estate by will has been enforced. Phalen v. U. S. Trust Co., 186 N. Y. 178, 78 N. E. 943, 7 L. R. A. N. S. 434 [reversing 100 N. Y. App. Div. 264, 91 N. Y. Suppl. 537].

2. Informal Adoption Agreements. A common instance is an informal agreement to adopt a child and give it a child's rights of inheritance, or all the property the promisor dies possessed of, or a child's share of the estate, or to make it an equal heir with other children in consideration of the surrender of the child by its parent to the promisor, and of services to be rendered by the child.[53]

3. Subject to Usual Defenses. The usual principles as to consideration, certainty, fairness, compliance with statute of frauds, freedom from fraud, etc., apply to contracts to dispose of property by will.[54] A mere understanding between the parties, not amounting to a contract, does not suffice;[55] and an invalid will, not made in pursuance of any contract, will not be enforced as a contract.[56] A failure to object to the probate of a will made in violation of the contract does not defeat plaintiff's right to enforce the contract;[57] but plaintiff was held to have

A contract not to change, alter, or revoke a will, enforced against the devisees under a later will see Kine v. Farrell, 71 N. Y. App. Div. 219, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 542.

A contract not to make a will.— Such a contract may be enforced by the heirs against a devisee. Taylor v. Mitchell, 87 Pa. St. 518, 30 Am. Rep. 383.

Power of disposal.— That the contract reserves a power of disposal during life does not permit a disposal which is in effect testamentary and contrary to the agreement. Whiton v. Whiton, 179 Ill. 32, 53 N. E. 722 [affirming 76 Ill. App. 553].

Tennessee.— Starnes v. Hatcher, 121 Tenn. 330, 117 S. W. 219, holding also that where one contracted to adopt children and to leave them his property as his heirs, the fact that he died without adopting them, making that part of the contract impossible of performance, would not preclude them from obtaining specific performance of the other part; the two obligations being distinct in character.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," §§ 223, 224. And see Adoption of Children, 1 Cyc. 936.

Such an agreement not against public policy see Healy v. Healy, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 315, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 927 [affirmed in 167 N. Y. 572, 60 N. E. 1112].

Enforcement of such agreements when oral see supra, V, H, 3, c, 4, b.

Performance by plaintiff.— In a suit for specific performance of an agreement by testator to adopt a child and leave her one half of his estate by will, performance on the part of the child is shown by evidence that she became a member of testator's family, remained eighteen years, performed dutifully every detail of her relation during that time, and left with his consent. Peterson v. Bauer, 83 Nebr. 405, 119 N. W. 764.

54. Stewart v. Smith, 6 Cal. App. 152, 91 Pac. 667.

Certainty.—It has been held that the promisor's agreement to give a "child's part of his estate" is too uncertain as to the covenant to be specifically enforced (Woods v. Evans, 113 Ill. 186, 55 Am. Rep. 409); but this or closely similar expressions have often been held sufficiently definite (Burns v. Smith, 21 Mont. 251, 53 Pac. 742, 69 Am. St. Rep. 653; Healy v. Healy, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 315, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 927 [affirmed in 167 N. Y. 572, 60 N. E. 1112]; Gates v. Gates, 34 N. Y. App. Div. 608, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 455). Uncertainty has been found to exist in a promisor's agreement to give his entire estate (Ripson v. Hart, 64 N. Y. App. Div. 593, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 791), or all the balance of his property that he did not specifically devise or bequeath (Beaver v. Crump, 76 Miss. 34, 23 So. 432); but these holdings seem opposed both to reason and the weight of authority. See supra, VII, A, 1, 2.

Proof of oral agreement to will see supra, V, Q. 3.

That there must be proof of plaintiff's assent to the contract see Rose v. Oliver, 32 Oreg. 447, 52 Pac. 176.

As to fairness see supra, IV, D, 8, a, note. In Woods v. Evans, 113 Ill. 186, 55 Am. Rep. 409, specific performance of an adoption agreement to devise was refused chiefly for the extraordinary reason that it might have proved unfair to the promisor's children, if he had had any, and to his wife, if she had survived him.

4. How Enforced in Lifetime of Promisor. The agreement may be indirectly enforced during the promisor's lifetime, by a decree canceling a conveyance made by him to another in violation of the agreement,[59] or a decree that the grantee in such conveyance hold the title subject to the purposes of the agreement; [60] by an injunction against conveying the property [61] or against making a will devising the property in violation of the agreement; [62] or by a decree that the promisor hold the property in trust for his own use during his life, with remainder in fee to the complainant or his heirs; [63] or that on performance or readiness to perform by plaintiff he will be entitled to the land on the death of the promisor.[64]

B. Partial Specific Performance; Compensation, Abatement of Price, and Indemnity[65]— 1. Where Vendor Sues — a. Slight Defect in Quantity. Where a vendor is unable, from any cause, not involving bad faith on his part, to convey each and every parcel of the land contracted to be sold, and it is apparent that the part which cannot be conveyed is of small importance, or is immaterial to the purchaser's enjoyment of that which may be conveyed to him, in such case the vendor may insist on performance with compensation to the purchaser, or a proportionate abatement from the agreed price, if that has not been paid.[66] The rule of the text applies to cases where land is sold in gross or Promise by parents; enforcement after death of father.— Where a contract was made between parents and a son that if he would live with them on the farm and support them he should have the land at their death, and he was placed in possession and continued therein until his father's death, eighteen years thereafter, the rents and profits were devoted to the support of the parents until the death of the father and after that to the support of the mother, and he paid the taxes and made lasting improvements, he was entitled to a decree declaring him to be the owner of the land subject to the rights of the mother to the rents and profits during life, and to the condition that he continue to perform the terms of the contract during her life. c. Substantial Defect in Quantity or Estate. But equity will not compel specific performance by an unwilling vendee where the defect in quantity, title, or estate is a substantial and material one, even though compensation is offered for the defect; since that would be to force a new contract upon defendant.[70]

unencumbered title be forced to take a title affected with a substantial encumbrance unless the latter is such that it may be discharged by an application of the purchase-money for the purpose.[71]

2. Where Vendee Sues — a. General Rule. Although the purchaser cannot have a partial interest forced upon him, yet if he entered into the contract in ignorance of the vendor's incapacity to give him the whole, he is generally entitled to have the contract specifically performed as far as the vendor is able, and to have an abatement out of the purchase-money for any deficiency in title, quantity, or quality of the estate. This is not making a new contract for the parties, since the vendor is not compelled to convey anything which he did not agree to convey, and the vendee pays for what he gets according to the rate established by the agreement.[72] But if the contract was obtained by the purchaser's fraudulent mis-

that number, in which case the vendee was not allowed a proportional abatement, but was given his election to pay the full price or to withdraw his suit.[74]

b. Measure of Abatement. The usual rule for estimating the amount to be deducted for a deficiency in quantity is to deduct that sum which bears the same proportion to the whole price as the amount of land lacking bears to the whole area of land agreed to be conveyed.[75]

c. Where Defect Is Very Great. The vendee has often been granted specific performance with compensation, although the defect in quantity was very great, amounting in several instances to one half.[76] In a few cases, however, where the portion to which a good title can be given is so small as compared with the whole amount embraced in the contract that compensation or damages appears to be the main object of the suit, specific performance has been refused and plaintiff left to his legal remedy.[77]

d. Where Vendee Knew of Defect, no Abatement. If the purchaser at the time of entering into the contract was aware of the defect in the vendor's interest or title, or deficiency in the subject-matter, he is not, on suing for specific performance, entitled to any compensation or abatement of price.[78]

(II) Husband Must Make Compensation. The usual rule as to specific performance with abatement from the price is applied, in many of the states, to the case of a purchase from a married man, whose estate is subject to his wife's inchoate dower right. The purchaser may have specific performance, with a deduction from the price of such sum as represents the present value of the wife's contingent interest, estimated by the usual rules and tables.[81]

(III) Indemnity. By the practice in a number of states, instead of making an abatement of a lump sum from the purchase-price, estimated as the present value of the wife's inchoate dower interest, the court gives an indemnity to the vendee against such interest. This is generally done by permitting him to retain one third of the purchase-price until the wife dies or releases her dower, and securing its ultimate payment to the vendor or his heirs by mortgage or lien on the land conveyed.[82] By the rule in New Jersey the vendee will be indemnified against the wife's contingent dower if the wife's refusal to join was by collusion with, or the fraudulent procurement of, the husband;[83] otherwise the vendor is not entitled either to an indemnity or compensation during the lifetime of the husband.[84]

(iv) Effect of Vendee's Knowledge. Some cases lay down the rule that if the vendee entered into the contract with the knowledge that the vendor was a married man, no abatement from the purchase-price or indemnity will be allowed because of the wife's refusal to release her dower.[85]

(v) Husband Need Not Make Compensation. In a few states, however, the courts refuse to allow any abatement or compensation for the wife's inchoate dower; usually for the reason that to do so would be to put upon the wife an unfair coercion or inducement to relinquish the right secured to her by law.[86]

3. Compensation Difficult to Estimate. Partial performance with compensation or abatement of price has sometimes been refused because of the difficulty of estimating the proper amount of compensation.[87]

4. Discharge of Encumbrances. In a suit either by vendor or vendee, where the encumbrances can be discharged by mere payment thereof, and are not larger in amount than the purchase-money due, the court in its decree may direct the payment of a sufficient part of the purchase-money for the purpose to the holders of the encumbrances instead of to the vendor, even though such holders are not

The leading case is Riesz's Appeal, 73 Pa. St. 485, Sharswood, J. The chief ground adduced for refusing relief is that subjecting the husband to serious pecuniary loss because of his wife's refusal to join operates as a moral coercion upon her to yield her consent. It is also said that the wife's right is of such a contingent nature, that to estimate its value by the use of mortality tables, etc., works an injustice to one party or the other. See also Humphrey v. Clement, 44 Ill. 299. For cases which meet this last objection by providing indemnity instead of compensation see ante, VII, B, 2, e, (III). before the court;[88] or the court may authorize the vendee to remove the lien on failure of the vendor to remove it, and to reimburse himself out of his deferred payments of the purchase-price.[89]

5. Vendee May Have Partial Performance Without Compensation. The vendee in all cases, whether he was aware of the defect in the vendor's title or not, may, on payment of the full contract price, elect to take such title as the vendor is able to convey, and rely for his relief upon his legal action on the covenants in the vendor's deed.[90]

Where it would be inequitable.— In Swanston v. Clark, 133 Cal. 300, 95 Pac. 1117, a lessee, having the right to purchase the premises during the term at a fixed price, elected to purchase, and tendered the price, but the lessor refused to convey. The lessee remained in possession of the premises, and sued for specific performance. It was held that since the lessee received the use of the premises after the tender, and was not liable for rent, it would be inequitable to compel the lessor to pay taxes and other encumbrances thereafter created, and not made or suffered by him or at his instance, or for his benefit.

That the vendee, plaintiff, may demand that the vendor procure a release or secure plaintiff for the payment of the mortgage see Reese v. Hoeckal, 58 Cal. 281.

Ordering suit by vendor to remove encumbrances.— A decree that defendant, the vendor, should prosecute suits to remove clouds on the title, and that plaintiff meanwhile should remain in possession without paying the purchase-money into court is erroneous. VIII. ALTERNATIVE AND ADDITIONAL RELIEF.

A. Damages in Place of Specific Performance — 1. Not When Plaintiff Knew That Specific Performance Was Impossible.

Where specific performance was impossible at the time of the commencement of the suit, and plaintiff knew or was informed at that time of the impossibility, the court, on denying the equitable relief, will not retain the case for the purpose of awarding damages, but will leave him to his legal remedy.[91]

2. When Defendant Disabled Himself Pending Suit. Where the vendor was able to perform at the beginning of the suit, but afterward puts it out of his power to perform by conveying to a bona fide grantee for value, the court will retain the suit and assess the vendee's damages.[92]

3. Where Plaintiff Did Not Know of Defendant's Disability. In this country the rule is generally accepted that, although the disability existed at the time of beginning the suit, the case may be retained for the assessment of damages, provided plaintiff brought his bill in good faith, without knowledge of the disability, supposing and having reason to suppose himself entitled to specific performance.[93] In some of the earlier cases, the rule as to retaining the case for damages was stated without any limitation arising from plaintiff's knowledge of the impossibility of specific relief.[94] In accordance with the general rule that damages may be given

4. Effect of Codes on Equity Rules. The effect of the provisions of the codes of procedure, authorizing the uniting of causes of action, both legal and equitable, arising out of the same transaction, upon the equity rules as to damages in specific performance, has been little discussed,[97] save in two states, New York and Wisconsin. In New York the equity rule that where plaintiff was aware before the commencement of the action that defendant could not perform, the suit will not be retained for the purpose of awarding damages, is held to be abrogated by the code.[98]

5. Measure of Damages. The measure of damages is sometimes the market value of the property contracted to be conveyed, deducting therefrom the amount of the purchase-price that remains unpaid,[1] and sometimes the amount paid on the purchase-price.[2]

6. Compensation For Expenditures, or Return of Price — a. When Not Granted. As a general rule, if plaintiff fails to make out a case for specific performance, especially if the failure is by reason of his own default, he is not entitled to have the case retained to award him compensation for services rendered, improvements made, return of the purchase-price paid, or damages, unless some special equity intervenes.[3]

b. When Granted. In other instances, where plaintiff vendee fails to make out a case for specific performance, but he has no full and adequate remedy at law, or there are special equities in his favor, the bill has been retained to award compensation for his expenditures made or services rendered on the faith of the contract.[4]

c. In Case of Parol Contracts. In an action for the specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of land, where plaintiff fails to make out the contract or the acts of part performance with the high degree of proof required, the case may be retained to decree restitution of the purchase-price or part thereof paid by him, and compensation for the improvements made in good faith upon the land.[5] Such restitution and compensation is also made in certain states where the doctrine of part performance is not recognized.[6]

B. Other Alternative Relief. Generally, where specific performance of a contract to convey land is denied, its rescission will be decreed,[8] and where the vendor is plaintiff, he may have a decree for the restoration of the possession of the land and an accounting of the rents and profits.[9] A court of equity should decree that which is equitable under the evidence, and should adjust the decree to the evidence, irrespective of failure to make specific objection to the sufficiency of the allegations and prayer to entitle plaintiff to the kind or form of relief asked; and hence the court should deny specific performance of a contract where plaintiff was not entitled to it, although defendant did not raise the question of plaintiff's right to such relief, but contended solely that there was no such contract.[10] In a suit against a corporation and its manager for specific performance of a contract by which the corporation, in consideration of the use of a patent, owned by complainant, agreed to pay royalties, and the manager agreed to convey certain property to complainant, equity will decree an accounting as to the royalties.[11] But one cannot sue in equity, and, upon failing to establish any basis for equitable relief, have the bill retained for the purpose of a recovery upon a purely legal demand, since such permission would deprive defendant of his constitutional right of trial by jury, and, complainant having sued to specifically perform an alleged contract whereby defendant was to hold corporate stock in trust for her and for an accounting, and having failed to prove any allegation authorizing equitable relief, it is error for the chancellor to retain jurisdiction to award a decree for money loaned, there being no showing why her remedy was not as complete and adequate at law as in equity.[12]

Soon afterward defendant left plaintiff, and conveyed the house to others. It was held that, although plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance, defendant should be restrained from conveying the premises free from plaintiff's claims, and from interfering with her possession and enjoyment thereof so long as she continued to perform or to be ready and able to perform the contract on her part, and the fee-simple title to the premises should be made to vest in her when her obligations under the contract shall have been fully performed, and she shall be otherwise entitled to a decree on her contract.

Pleadings insufficient.— A contract for the purchase of stock in a corporation owning a hotel stipulated that the buyer should be employed as the manager of the hotel at a fixed salary, and that in case the hotel made a profit he should be entitled to have one fourth thereof credited on the balance due on the stock contracted for. He was removed from his position as manager and brought a suit to specifically enforce the contract by requiring his restoration to the position of manager and for the transfer and delivery to him of the corporate stock. There was no allegation that any profits had accrued or were due, nor was there any claim made for damages, and he made no tender of performance by alleging his willingness and ability to pay any balance that might be found due after applying profits to the liquidation of the debt. It was held that the court was without authority to enter a decree providing for the appointment of a referee to take an accounting of damages and of the earnings and profits of the hotel, and for the application of the same on the stock purchased, and the payment of the balance, if any, to the buyer. C. Additional Relief — 1. In General. In accordance with the general maxim of equity that the court having obtained jurisdiction of the cause for one purpose will retain it for full relief,[13] there may be granted, in connection with specific performance, in an appropriate case, a final injunction,[14] an order for interpleader between conflicting claimants,[15] a decree for reformation of the contract, preliminary to its enforcement,[16] for cancellation of the articles of agreement,[17] or a judgment for possession.[18]

2. Damages in Addition to Specific Performance — a. In General. The court having acquired jurisdiction may, as incidental to the remedy, assess such damages as appear to have been sustained by plaintiff.[19] A familiar instance is presented in the specific performance of a contract to issue a policy of insurance; where a loss or death has already occurred, jurisdiction will be retained for the purpose of decreeing payment of the policy.[20]

19. West v. Washington R. Co., 49 Oreg. 436, 90 Pac. 666. As incidental to a contract by a vendee railroad to do certain work, the vendor may recover damages for nonperformance (Hooper v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 69 Ala. 529); and the court may give damages for failure to perform a portion of the vendee's covenant which, in the court's discretion, it declines to specifically enforce (Post v. West Shore R. Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 301, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 172 [affirmed in 123 N. Y. 580, 26 N. E. 7]). On specific performance of a contract, for an entire consideration, to release all demand against complainant, and to cause certain notes to be executed, where the time for payment of the notes expired before the suit is brought, the court, having jurisdiction to enforce the release, may assess damages for failure to execute the notes. Lyle v. Addicks, 62 N. J. Eq. 123, 49 Atl. 1121. On a bill for a specific delivery of slaves, defendant could be compelled to account for the value of such of them as had died since the filing of the bill. Reese v. Holmes, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 531. By a contract for the conveyance of certain property complainant agreed to convey to defendant a house and lot for eight thousand one hundred dollars, less a mortgage of four thousand dollars. Defendant agreed to convey back a house and lot for seven thousand five hundred dollars, less a mortgage of two thousand five hundred dollars, leaving a balance of nine hundred dollars to be paid by complainant. At the time defendant made the contract he knew that his property was subject, not only to the mortgage of two thousand five hundred dollars, but also to an unrecorded mortgage of two thousand dollars. This mortgage he believed he could induce the holder to cancel, taking in its place a mortgage on the property to be conveyed to him. The holder, however, refused to change his security, and immediately put his mortgage on record. Thereupon complainant tried to make arrangements by which defendant could perform his agreement, and to that end offered to take back a second mortgage on other property to secure the payment of the two thousand dollars. It was held that, in the absence of any unfairness in the contract between the parties, complainant was entitled to a specific performance by defendant of the contract as made, free of encumbrances except as to the two thousand five hundred dollars, and, in case of defendant's failure to remove the encumbrance of two thousand dollars, the court might render, in addition to the decree for specific performance, a decree against him for that amount. Roche v. Osborne, (N. J. 1905) 69 Atl. 176.

That damages cannot be assessed against one not a party to the contract see Standard Fashion Co. v. Siegel-Cooper Co., 44 N. Y. App. Div. 121, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 739.

Part performance of oral contract.— But that, as incidental to a decree for specific performance of a verbal contract, on the ground of part performance, the court cannot give a personal judgment in damages for an independent cause of action growing out of the void contract, since relief is given not on the contract but on the equities arising from part performance see Harsha v. Reid, 45 N. Y. 415.

the vendee is entitled to damages for the delay;[21] and for injury done to the freehold by the vendor's improper acts or neglect.[22]

3. Interest, and Rents and Profits — a. General Rule. Where there is delay in completion of the contract, compensation may be made to one or the other of the parties by means of the rents and profits, and interest on the price. The general rule is to adjust the rights of the parties so as to give to each as nearly as possible what he would have received if the contract had been performed according to its terms.[23]

b. Vendee in Default Pays Interest. In general the vendee in default is charged with interest on the purchase-money, the vendor not being in default.[24]

c. Vendee in Possession Pays Interest. A vendee in possession must pay interest on the unpaid purchase-money, although the vendor is unable to make title at the time appointed, and although by the terms of the contract the pur-

As to rents and interest where a portion of the price is withheld as indemnity for vendor's widow's dower see Springle v. Shields, 17 Ala. 295.

Discretion of court.— Where a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey was delayed for a number of years by an ejectment suit against the vendor, which subsequently proved groundless, while the supreme court in its discretion might have relieved the vendor from liability for the rental value of the land from the time when she should have conveyed, upon her waiving interest on the purchase-money, its refusal to do so was not error as a matter of law. Haffey v. Lynch, 119 N. Y. App. Div. 885, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 1128 [affirmed in 193 N. Y. 67, 85 N. E. 817].

Application of rule of partial payments.— In a suit for specific performance, in allowing to the vendee the rental value of the land from the time the vendor should have conveyed, and to the vendor interest on the purchase-money, the rule of partial payments should be applied, and the vendor should not be charged with interest on the rental value from the termination of each year, but the rent should be applied to the interest annually accruing on the purchase-money, and should not itself bear interest, the rental being less than the annual interest; nor should the vendee be charged with interest on the taxes paid by the vendor, the rent being applicable to discharge them. Haffey v. Lynch, 119 N. Y. App. Div. 885, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 1128 [affirmed in 193 N. Y. 67, 85 N. E. 817].

chase-money is not payable until the deed is made. This is by way of compensation for the profits he is receiving during the vendor's inability to make title.[25]

d. Vendee Discharged From Paying Interest. The vendee is discharged from the duty of paying interest by a tender of the purchase-money when it became due and a continued readiness to pay it since, or by depositing it in a bank, with notice to the vendor, subject to his order, to be delivered to him on the execution and delivery of a deed.[26]

e. Rents and Profits. A vendor retaining, or wrongfully regaining, possession, after the time appointed for delivery of possession, is chargeable with the rents and profits, or with the fair rental value of the premises.[27] But where performance of a contract for sale of land was denied in a suit by the purchasers, they could not recover the amount of rentals of the property, as damages, as they would be entitled thereto only in case they enforced the contract.[28]

IX. RELIEF TO DEFENDANT.

A. Plaintiff Must Do Equity — 1. Equities Not Connected With the Contract. Plaintiff cannot be compelled, as a condition to obtaining specific performance, to discharge a claim against him growing out of an entirely distinct transaction, or not connected with the subject-matter of the suit.[29]

2. Where Literal Enforcement Would Be Harsh. Where because of mistake or by reason of the happening of an unforeseen contingency a literal enforcement of the contract would be productive of hardship, the court instead of refusing relief may grant it on condition that plaintiff assent to such modifications as justice requires.[30]

3. Reformation of Contract. Where, in an action for the specific performance of a contract, plaintiff refuses to submit to a decree for reformation as prayed for by defendant, and to perform the contract as reformed, the court may dismiss the action.[31]

B. Securing Plaintiff's Performance by Decree — 1. In General. The decree must provide for full performance by plaintiff,[32] and if there are acts to be done on plaintiff's part before he is entitled to performance by defendant, the decree should be so framed that defendant cannot be compelled to perform except upon the condition that plaintiff do such acts.[33]

2. Reimbursement of Defendant's Expenditures, Etc. The decree should provide for the reimbursement of the vendor for repairs and improvements which he was allowed by the terms of the contract to make at the vendee's expense, or which he made with the vendee's consent,[34] and for the refunding of advances made by the vendor under the contract;[35] but not for improvements on other lands which have enhanced the value of the land sold,[36] or for improvements made beyond the sum named in the contract, or after defendant, wrongfully withholding possession, received notice from plaintiff.[37]

3. Payment by Vendee — a. In General. In a suit by the vendee the decree must provide for full payment of what is due under the contract. It is error to leave the vendor to his legal remedy for the purchase-money. Usually a deed will be directed to be made only after payment, unless the contract otherwise provides.[38] The duty of payment as a condition of the decree remains, although

Co. v. Rose, 194 Mass. 142, 80 N. E. 498, work to be done by vendee secured by inserting agreements in deed, and not by conditions subsequent.

b. Date For Payment. It is proper for the decree to fix a date before which payment shall be made.[40]

C. Relief to Defendant on Failure of Specific Performance — 1. Rescission. Rescission or cancellation of the contract is not given as a matter of course where specific performance is refused;[41] but on proper pleadings and proof is usually granted where the contract was obtained by such fraud[42] or mutual mistake[43] as would warrant the relief in a suit brought for rescission.

2. Return of Purchase-Money, Etc. In a suit by the vendor, if there is a decree for defendant because it appears that the vendor cannot furnish a good title or for other reasons, the vendee is entitled to a decree for return of the money paid under the contract, and sometimes for expenditures by him.[44]

X. Who May Sue and be Sued; Parties.[45]

A. On Assignment or Contract by Vendee or Lessee — 1. Assignee of Vendee or Lessee May Sue in His Own Name — a. General Rule. The person to whom the vendee or lessee has assigned the contract may sue in his own name to specifically enforce the vendor's or lessor's contract to convey, regardless of any privity of contract between the parties necessary to a suit at law.[46] But this son, who agreed to pay therefor four thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars. The third person paid twenty-five dollars to the purchaser, to be returned when a contract was entered into by the vendor with both parties to the other agreement. The purchaser obtained the legal title, and the third person sued for specific performance. It was held that a judgment awarding specific performance, and requiring the third person to pay four thousand two hundred dollars into court, was proper; the condition for the return of the twenty-five dollars having ceased to exist. But it seems that fixing a date for payment does not make time of payment essential, in the absence of an explicit declaration to that effect in the decree. Seventy-Six Land, etc., Co. v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 93 Cal. 139, 28 Pac. 813. Where no time was fixed, a delay of nine months was not unreasonable, since the vendor might have tendered a deed and demanded performance. Renwick v. Bancroft, 59 Iowa 116, 12 N. W. 801. Where postponement of the execution of the contract, before suit, was caused by the vendor's conduct, the vendee is entitled to the same credit, on the execution of the contract by the court, that he had by the stipulation of the contract. King v. Ruckman, 24 N. J. Eq. 556. But in general where the purchase-money is due, the court has no right to give further time for payments. Lombard v. Chicago Sinai Cong., 75 Ill. 271.

does not apply of course where the contract is not assignable, as in the case of contracts to render personal services and the like.[47]

b. Who Are Assignees. The right to specific performance extends to the execution purchasers of the vendee's interest,[48] and to a mortgagee of that interest.[49]

c. Assignee of Option. The holder of an option may assign his right to exercise the option and to enforce the contract.[50]

d. Assignee Succeeds to Rights and Is Subject to Defenses. On assignment of the contract, the assignee succeeds to the rights of the assignor,[51] and is subject to any defense which might have been set up against his assignor.[52]

e. Must Complete Assignor's Performance. The assignee must complete the vendee's payments on the original contract as a condition of obtaining his decree, and perform other parts of the consideration which the vendee has not performed.

He is bound to do all which the vendee would be required in equity and good conscience to perform before obtaining a conveyance.[53]

2. Vendor Cannot Sue Assignee. The vendor cannot have specific performance against his vendee's assignee, although he has paid part of the consideration; it is optional with the assignee whether or not to complete the contract.[54]

3. Vendees Who Have Contracted But Not Assigned. Purchasers who have not assigned their contract of sale, but who have agreed to sell to another on other and different terms, are still obligated to deliver good title to their vendee, and their interest in the subject-matter has not ceased, and an action for specific performance is properly brought in their names.[55]

4. Parties — a. Vendee and Assignee May Join. The vendee who has assigned may sue, joining the assignee as a party plaintiff.[56]

b. Joinder of Assignees. Where the vendee assigns to several persons, giving each a separate conveyance to separate parcels, they may join in an action against the vendor.[57] The assignee of a part or a partial interest in the land cannot sue alone, since the contract cannot be enforced by piecemeal.[58]

c. Joinder of Vendors. Where the assignor had contracts for the purchase of separate tracts from several owners and assigned the contracts to plaintiff, the latter cannot join such several owners in one suit to compel specific performance.[59]

d. Whether Assignee Is a Necessary Party. The assignee of a partial interest in the contract is not a necessary party to a suit by the vendee,[60] but where the Amount to be paid.— A subvendee of a part of the land agreed to be conveyed cannot compel specific performance by the original vendor except upon payment of the whole amount due from the original vendee for the entire tract, as all the land would stand as security for the entire amount due the vendor. Hoover v. Baugh, 108 Va. 695, 62 S. E. 968, 128 Am. St. Rep. 985.

Notes for deferred payments; whether of vendee or assignee.—Under Civ. Code, § 1457, providing that the burden of an obligation may not be transferred without the consent of the party entitled to its benefit, where a contract for the sale of land calls for the delivery of the purchaser's notes for deferred payments, the purchaser's personal liability is a controlling element, and the tender of notes of an assignee of the purchaser does not satisfy the contract; but under a contract for a conveyance to the purchaser, his assigns, etc., upon an additional payment of ten thousand dollars, fifteen hundred dollars having been paid by the purchaser, or his assigns, the remaining thirty-three thousand five hundred dollars to be evidenced by "a promissory note" secured by a mortgage on the premises, the purchaser's assignee could enforce the contract by making the required payment and tendering her note secured by the required mortgage, although she was not financially responsible. vendee has assigned his entire interest the assignee has been held a necessary party to his suit.[61] In a suit by the vendor against the vendee for specific performance assignees of the vendee are not necessary parties.[62]

e. Whether Vendee Is a Necessary Party. The vendee who has assigned all his interest absolutely is not a necessary party on a bill by the assignee, according to some cases;[63] although he is a proper party, for the purpose of settling in the suit the question of the validity of the assignment.[64] Other cases hold that the vendee who has assigned is a necessary party to the assignee's suit.[65]

f. Whether Vendor Is a Necessary Party. Where a suit by an assignee against the vendee assignor and other assignees seeks merely to settle rights in the vendee's equity, the vendor is not a necessary party.[66]

g. Intermediate Assignees. Intermediate assignees have been held necessary parties.[67]

B. On Conveyance by Vendor, Lessor, Etc.— 1. Relief Against Purchaser With Notice or Volunteer. Where the vendor or lessor, after the contract, conveys the land to a purchaser who takes with notice of the contract, actual or constructive, or who does not part with a valuable consideration for his purchase, such grantee takes and holds the land as a constructive trustee for the vendee or lessee, and may be compelled at his suit to perform the original contract by conveying or leasing the land to the vendee or lessee.[68] The same rule may

Inventions and patents.— Where a person employed as a machinist to invent, perfect, and improve lubricating valves, force-feed oil pumps, etc., which his employer was engaged in manufacturing, and that whatever inventions or devices might result from such employment in the nature of machinery, tools, etc., to be used in connection with the employer's business, should at the employer's request be protected by patents and become the employer's property, secretly invented, during order that the rule may apply, the contract must be of such a character that the court can specifically enforce it.[70]

2. Relief to Subsequent Purchaser. A subsequent purchaser from the vendor is entitled to be reimbursed for his own payments from the money decreed to be due from the plaintiff vendee to the vendor.[71]

3. Bona Fide Purchaser. The vendee can have no relief against a bona fide purchaser without notice and for a valuable consideration, who has received a conveyance of the legal title;[72] nor can he have relief against a purchaser with notice from a bona fide purchaser.[73]

4. Parties — a. Subsequent Purchaser. The subsequent purchaser from whom conveyance is sought is of course a proper and necessary party to the vendee's suit.[74]

b. Vendor Who Has Conveyed. The vendor who has conveyed has been held his employment, a force-feed oil pump, a hot water valve, a mixing valve, and carburator at his home, and fraudulently induced certain of his employer's servants to leave their employment and assist him in such work, and afterward terminated the employment, formed a corporation to manufacture and sell such appliances, assigning to it, in consideration of stock issued to him, the applications for patents on such inventions, it was held that performance of his contract should be specifically enforced, both against him and against the corporation, by requiring a transfer of such inventions to his employer. But such purchaser was held a necessary party in Casady v. Scallen, 15 Iowa 93. Where the purchaser pendente lite ex-

to be a necessary party.[75] Other cases hold him not a necessary party, when he has conveyed his whole interest.[78]

C. On Assignment of Purchase-Money Notes — 1. Assignee May Sue. The lien for the purchase-money, before conveyance, is assignable, and passes with the assignment of the purchase-money notes. The assignee of such a note may therefore maintain a bill, to enforce the lien and for specific performance, joining the holder of the legal title as plaintiff or defendant.[77]

2. Assignee May Be Joined in Vendee's Suit. An assignee of a purchase-money note is a necessary [78] or proper [79] party to the vendee's suit.[80]

D. On Death of Vendee — 1. Parties Plaintiff — a. Heirs May Compel Conveyance. On the death of the vendee before conveyance, his equitable estate passes to his heirs, or his devisees of the land, and they are entitled to compel conveyance from the vendor.[81]

b. Necessary or Proper Parties — (i) Heirs. The personal representative of the vendee cannot sue alone to enforce the contract; the heirs are necessary parties.[82]

Not necessary party.—Where a vendor, B, having only a contract for title from A, agrees to sell to C and subsequently causes the deed to be executed to another party, D, in C's suit against B and D, A is not a necessary party, since C does not seek to cancel the deed. Pearson v. Courson, 129 Ga. 656, 59 S. E. 907.

Intermediate grantee not a necessary party see Downing v. Risley, 15 N. J. Eq. 93.

South Carolina.— Davenport v. Latimer, 53 S. C. 563, 31 S. E. 630.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," §§ 46, 347.

The widow is also a proper party, since her claim for dower is not antagonistic to or inconsistent with the claim of the lien; both derive from the same source. Young v. Young, 45 N. J. Eq. 27, 16 Atl. 921.

But an option contained in a lease is a chattel interest and goes to the executor and afterward to the legatee, not to the heir. McCormick v. Stephany, 57 N. J. Eq. 257, 41 Atl. 840.

All the heirs are proper parties, although it has been agreed among them that only a

(II) DEVISEES. The devisee of the vendee's interest in the land is a necessary party.[83]

(III) PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE. The vendee's personal representative should ordinarily be a party, since it is his duty to make payment;[84] but when the contract had been fully performed on the vendee's part, he is not a necessary or proper party to a suit by the heir.[85]

2. PARTIES DEFENDANT. In a suit by the vendor, the heirs or devisees of the deceased vendee are proper defendants, since conveyance is to be made to them.[86]

E. On Death of Vendor — 1. PARTIES PLAINTIFF — a. Personal Representative May Compel Payment. On the death of the vendor, since the vendor's interest is regarded in equity as personalty, it passes to his personal representatives, and they may sue to enforce payment, and join the heirs or devisees for the purpose of compelling conveyance of the legal title from them to the vendee.[87]

b. Estate by Entirety. Since, where a deed is made to a named grantee "and his wife," without giving the wife's name, she takes as tenant by the entirety and becomes the absolute owner on the death of her husband, she can enforce a contract for the sale of the property made by her husband.[88]

c. Necessary Parties — (I) HEIRS. As a rule the heirs of a vendor must be joined in a suit by the personal representative, since the decree divests them of the legal title which vested in them on the death of their ancestor.[89] But in some

But a devisee of the vendee's interest under the contract need not join the heirs as parties, unless the validity of the will is to be questioned. Spier v. Robinson, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 325.

83. Buck v. Buck, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 170.

But a residuary devisee cannot sustain the bill until the estate is settled and it is determined whether he is entitled to anything. Lowry v. Lowry, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 105.

84. Miller v. Henderson, 10 N. J. Eq. 320. But see Boburg v. Prahl, 3 Wyo. 325, 23 Pac. 70, holding that, under Rev. St. § 3008, the administrator cannot sue.

85. McKay v. Broad, 70 Ala. 377; Healey v. Simpson, 113 Mo. 340, 20 S. W. 881; Buck v. Buck, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 170, although he is directed by the will to take all just and proper means to insure a conveyance of the land to the devisee.

But he is a necessary party where the bill seeks the alternative relief of repayment of money spent by the vendee in improvements. Young v. Young, 45 N. J. Eq. 27, 16 Atl. 921.

That the administrator cannot join with the heir where damages are sought for trespass committed on the land, since he and the heir would have no common right in or to the damages if recovered see McKay v. Broad, 70 Ala. 377.

86. Hays v. Hall, 4 Port. (Ala.) 374, 30 Am. Dec. 530; Jackson v. McCoy, 56 Miss. 781, the administrator not a necessary party, where the relief asked is a sale of the land for the purchase-money, and no personal decree is sought.

That an administrator who holds the title in his own right and not as representative of the vendor cannot compel the vendee to accept the title see Taylor v. Porter, 1 Dana (Ky.) 421, 25 Am. Dec. 155.

That the vendor's heirs may sue to enforce payment see Leslie v. Slusher, 15 Ind. 166.

What law governs.— In a suit brought in the District of Columbia by a Maryland executor to enforce specific performance of a contract made with his testator in that state concerning land there, it was held that the laws of that state must govern in ascertaining the rights of the parties, and that in Maryland an executor had authority to bring suit to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate, made by his testator during his lifetime, without joining the heirs as parties complainant, and had authority to execute a conveyance that would pass the legal title to such real estate. Griffith v. Stewart, 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 29 (construing Md. Code, § 81, art. 93, and citing D. C. Code, § 327 [31 U. S. St. at L. 1241, c. 854]).

Infant heirs.— That infant heirs are bound by the decree if beneficial to them see Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 102.

That the heir has a right to have the contract proved see Hamilton v. Walker, 12 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 172.

jurisdictions the personal representative may sue without joining the heirs as parties complainant.[90]

(II) DEVISEES. Devisees of the land are necessary parties.[91]

(III) PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES. The personal representative of a deceased vendor is a necessary party, as a decree will require the purchase-money to be paid to him.[92]

2. PARTIES DEFENDANT — a. Heirs or Devisees Bound to Convey. It is incumbent upon those to whom the legal title to the land passed upon the vendor's death to convey to the vendee the right or title purchased by him, although they are not mentioned in the contract.[93]

b. Necessary Parties — (I) HEIRS. If the land has not been devised, all the heirs of the vendor are necessary parties defendant.[94]

(II) DEVISEES. The devisees of the land are necessary defendants.[95]

(III) RULES MODIFIED BY STATUTE. By statute in some states it is not necessary to make any other than the executor or administrator of the vendor party defendant.[96]

(IV) PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE. The personal representatives of the deceased vendor are ordinarily necessary parties in the action by the vendees since they are entitled to receive payment;[97] but usually they are not necessary

F. General Rules as to Parties — 1. The English and Federal Court Rule. By the rule of English chancery practice, followed in the United States courts and in a few other jurisdictions in this country, the parties to the contract, or those who are substituted in their place on their death or on the conveyance of the land or on the assignment of the whole contract, are the only parties to the suit for specific performance. Such suit cannot be made the means of determining the rights in the subject-matter of other persons whose claims are not connected with the contract. The suit for specific performance therefore affords a marked exception to the general doctrine of equity relating to parties.[99]

2. The American Rule; All Persons Interested in the Subject-Matter — a. In General. Contrary to the rule of the English and federal courts, it is a generally accepted rule in this country that all persons interested in the subject-matter

Collins v. Leary, (1908) 71 Atl. 603. But where defendant's husband agreed to convey to complainant property which complainant and her husband thereafter occupied, but defendant and her husband's heirs brought ejectment therefor after his death, in a suit for specific performance of the agreement to convey and to restrain the ejectment action, the heirs were proper parties for the purposes of the injunction. of the suit may properly be joined as parties, and are sometimes necessary parties. This is the fundamental doctrine of equity concerning parties.[1]

b. Persons Claiming Under Vendor Subsequent to Contract. All parties claiming an interest in the land obtained from the vendor subsequent to the contract, and with notice of the contract, have been held to be necessary defendants.[2]

c. Judgment and Attachment Creditors. Under the broader doctrine as to parties, it is proper for plaintiff to join as defendants the subsequent judgment [3] or attachment [4] creditors of the vendor.

d. Subsequent Mortgagees, Vendees, Etc. The purchaser may have relief in his bill against a subsequent mortgagee, with notice, of the vendor; and he is a proper party.[5] A subsequent contract vendee of the vendor has been held a necessary party.[6]

e. Prior Mortgagees, Vendees, Etc. It is variously held proper, not proper, or not necessary, to make prior mortgagees of the land parties defendant, in order to secure the application of the purchase-money to the payment of the mortgage debt.[7] A prior vendee of the vendor is a necessary party defendant where the

f. In Contracts by Trustees, Etc.[10] In suits for specific performance of a contract made by a trustee the cestui que trust is often a proper but rarely a necessary party.[11] A previous trustee who did not join in the sale is not a necessary party.[12] On refusal of the trustee to sue, bondholders may have specific performance of a contract to execute a mortgage to secure their bonds.[13]

3. Parties to the Contract — a. Generally Necessary. Parties to the contract are generally necessary parties to the suit;[14] as a party who purchased in his own name, but in fact was agent for another, who brings the suit.[15]

b. Joint Contract. All the parties to a joint contract, whether vendors or vendees, must join or be joined in the suit.[16]

S. 580, 24 L. ed. 678 (trustee to preserve contingent remainders; remainder-men need not be joined). The absence of persons having an interest in the construction of a will from a suit by trustees under a will to compel a purchaser of the trust property to complete his purchase does not make it improper to require specific performance, there being no disputed question of fact, and the question of law involved not being so doubtful as to render the title unmarketable. Hardenbergh v. McCarthy, 130 N. Y. App. Div. 538, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 1073. Where testator devised his estate to his executors, in trust to provide an income for his widow and daughter during the widow's life, the trust to terminate at her death, and the estate to be divided among testator's children, the executors took title under the express trust, and were the proper parties to carry out a contract by testator to sell part of the land; and where, in an action against them for specific performance, it appeared that defendants were prepared to give full title as to the dower interest, the court properly refused to make the widow and heirs at law defendant. 4. Holder of the Legal Title. One who holds the legal title to the land, although he has no beneficial interest, is a necessary defendant, if a conveyance of the legal title is sought.[17]

5. Agents. Mere agents of the parties to the contract are not necessary and usually not proper parties to the suit.[18] But an agent may have such a beneficial interest in the proceeds of the contract as to make him a proper party to bring the suit.[19] And a vendee cannot defeat specific performance of a contract for the sale of land on the ground that he made the contract as agent of another, when he failed to disclose his agency until after the execution of the contract.[20]

6. Who Has a Sufficient Interest to Sue — a. In General. One who has conveyed with warranty may maintain a bill to compel performance of an agreement to release the land from a mortgage;[21] and a subsequent mortgagee of land may sue to compel a release by a prior mortgagee.[22] A creditor at large before judgment cannot compel the specific execution of his debtor's contract.[23] A contingent remainder-man in fee, together with the tenant for life, may sufficiently represent the inheritance.[24]

That there must be proof that the contract

be made parties to a suit to enforce performance of a provision of the contract affecting them.[26]

7. Joinder of Plaintiffs in General. Where the one transaction benefited several plaintiffs, there is no misjoinder of parties because they were not all interested to the same extent.[27] On a contract to convey in severalty, one vendee does not need to join the rest.[28] A vendor whose title depended on the exercise of a power in his favor need not join his predecessors whose title was subject to the exercise of the power.[29] Under the codes, a defect of parties plaintiff is waived when not taken by demurrer or answer.[30]

8. Judicial Sale. The officer making the sale under order of a court is the proper and only necessary party plaintiff in a suit to enforce the sale against the purchaser.[31]

XI. Pleading and Practice.

A. When Action May Be Brought. An action by the vendor before the time fixed for payment is premature;[32] and where conveyance is not to be made until payment, the vendee usually cannot maintain his bill until payment is due;[33] but where the vendor has repudiated the contract, the purchaser is entitled to sue at once, although the time fixed for complete performance has not arrived.[34]

Where the owner of premises gave an option to purchase them for one hundred thousand dollars, payable thirty thousand dollars cash, balance on or before four years, four and one-half per cent net, and agreed to convey free from encumbrance, it was held that should the contract be interpreted to contemplate the payment of thirty thousand dollars and the execution of a deed upon payment of the balance of seventy thousand dollars, with four and one-half per cent interest per annum, the owner meanwhile to hold possession, an action for specific performance upon tender of the thirty thousand dollars only was premature. A bill to enforce a contract to lease a building when completed cannot be maintained while the building is in the course of construction.[35]

B. Jurisdiction and Venue — 1. Land Out of the Jurisdiction.[36] Since the decree for specific performance operates or may be made to operate directly upon the person of defendant, the relief may be had where the land is in another state or country, if defendant is personally served with process, and subjected to the jurisdiction of the court.[37]

2. Defendant Out of the Jurisdiction. A suit for specific performance by a vendee of land within the jurisdiction against a vendor out of the jurisdiction is, by the weight of authority, sufficiently a proceeding in rem to validate a decree founded on service of process by publication, and the passing of title by the decree or by an officer appointed by the court.[38] But where the decree is strictly in personam, requiring the performance of some personal act by defendant, it must be founded either upon personal service of process or upon a voluntary appearance.[39]

3. Venue — a. Conflicting Interpretation of Statutes. Statutes rarely expressly mention the venue of actions for specific performance of land contracts. The nature of such an action being partly in rem and partly in personam has given rise to much conflict in the interpretation of the statutes of venue. It has been held to fall within a statute providing for the venue of "actions for the recovery of realty or for the determination of any right or interest therein;"[40] and not to fall within a statute of almost identical wording;[41] not to be a suit for the recovery of land;[42] that it is "a suit concerning real estate, or whereby the same may be affected;"[43] an action "to determine claims to real property;"[44] but not "for the determination of questions affecting the title of" land.[45] An action by the vendor to enforce his lien is held to be an action "for the sale of real property under a mortgage lien or other encumbrance."[46] The results of the interpretation of the various statutes are stated in the following paragraphs.

b. County of Defendant's Residence. By the rule in several states, the action should be brought in the county where the defendant or any one of the defendants resides,[47] or at least, may be brought in the county where defendant resides.[48]

c. County Where Land Is Situated. In other states the action must be brought in the county where the land is situated,[49] or is properly brought in the county where the land is situated.[50]

C. Bill, Complaint, or Petition[51] — 1. In General. The bill, complaint, or petition in an action for specific performance must state clearly and fully all the facts necessary to entitle plaintiff to the relief sought.[52] Where the allegations in a bill for the specific performance of a contract appear to be meager when contrasted with the facts as disclosed by the evidence, and presents a case where plaintiff has failed to make a full and candid disclosure in his bill, the court may refuse to grant the relief sought.[53] A prayer in the alternative for damages in case specific performance cannot be granted does not make the complaint demurrable as stating a cause of action for damages. Such a prayer is merely a precautionary application for relief.[54]

2. Inadequacy of Legal Remedy. The bill, complaint, or petition must state facts which show that plaintiff has not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law; and if the contract relates to personalty, special reasons must be stated bringing the contract within some exception to the rule that specific performance of such contracts will not be granted.[55] In contracts for the sale of land, however, an allegation that the remedy at law is inadequate is unnecessary, since that is apparent from the nature of the subject-matter.[56]

3. The Contract — a. In General. The bill or complaint must properly allege the execution or making of the contract;[57] and the essential terms of the Purchase of school lands.—A petition for specific performance of a contract to sell state school land, which alleges the execution of the contract and the refusal of defendant to make a deed, and which avers that plaintiff resided within a radius of five miles of the land, and was not disqualified from becoming a purchaser, and that he was in a position to comply with requirements as assignee, sufficiently shows that plaintiff could comply with the law in the purchase of school lands. Pope v. Taliaferro, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 115 S. W. 309.

Infringement of defendant's homestead right.— The bill is not demurrable on the ground that specific performance would infringe defendant's homestead right, either in the particular tract or in the right of selection from a larger tract, where it does not show that the land for which a conveyance is sought is part of defendant's homestead, although it does not appear that it is a part of a larger tract owned by defendant, as it will not be assumed that it was a part of defendant's homestead from such fact alone. Allegation of contract sufficiently definite see Crovatt v. Baker, 130 Ga. 507, 61 S. E. 127. A bill for specific performance sufficiently set out the contract by alleging: That when complainant became of age his father agreed that, if complainant would remain at home until his mother's death, and do the housework, etc., which complainant did, the father would pay him more than he could earn elsewhere; that the property involved was purchased by the father to secure complainant a permanent business location and in consideration of such services; that the father while living claimed no interest in the property, and at different times stated that it was purchased for complainant pursuant to the agreement, and he would execute a deed, and he did execute one which was recorded; and that ever since its execution complainant had been in possession believing that his title was valid, although the deed was subsequently adjudged not to have been delivered. Stonehouse v. Stonehouse, 156 Mich. 43, 120 N. W. 23.

Time of performance.— Failure to allege the time agreed on for performance does not make the bill demurrable, since it is presumed, in the absence of the allegation, that the contract was to be performed in a reasonable time. that there shall be an adequate consideration and that the contract shall be, as to the party against whom it is to be enforced, just and reasonable.[61] In California it is held that the complaint must show the adequacy of the consideration and that the contract is, as to defendant, just and reasonable, and that it would not be inequitable to enforce it;[62] but in Montana the inadequacy of the consideration is with more reason treated as a matter of defense.[63]

Complaint sufficient.—A complaint to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land, specifically alleging that specified service rendered, and a specified sum agreed to be paid for the premises, was and is a just, fair, and adequate consideration and price for the land therein described, is not obnoxious to demurrer on the ground that it fails to present facts enabling the court to say that the consideration is adequate and the contract just and reasonable. Brown v. Sebastopol, 153 Cal. 704, 96 Pac. 363, 19 L. R. A. N. S. 178. And a complaint in a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract, which alleges the execution of the contract as set out, consisting of a lease and an option to the lessee to purchase during the term at a fixed price, and which avers that the lessee elected to purchase, that the contract was fair and reasonable, that the price agreed on was in fair proportion to the value of the property, and prays for the reformation of the contract relating to the rights of the parties in the event the lessee does not purchase under the option, shows a contract sufficiently certain on its face to support a suit for performance, especially after the contract has been reformed as prayed for. Maryland.—Sanderson v. Stockdale, 11 Md. 563, agreement to give mortgage.

Massachusetts.— A bill for the specific performance of a contract to convey real property set out a memorandum of the sale, describing the property as "the three houses belonging to the Frances Dodge estate in Danvers," and another memorandum describing the property as "the three houses and land that rightfully belongs thereto, in Danvers, belonging to the Dodge estate." It was held that the bill must set out in substance that the three houses referred to in the memoranda were the only ones owned by defendant in the town, as otherwise it would be demurrable. Harrigan v. Dodge, 200 Mass. 357, 86 N. E. 780.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 363.

Survey.— Where the bill averred that, pursuant to the contract, the survey was made, and the exact description and area of the tract agreed to be sold ascertained, it was held sufficient as against demurrer to show that any uncertainty in the description in the contract was removed. Wilkins v. Hardaway, 159 Ala. 565, 48 So. 678.

Uncertainty cured.— That uncertainty of the description in the contract may be removed by a description in the bill and answer see Connell v. Mulligan, 13 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 388.

Correctness of description admitted in answer see Sprague v. Jessup, 48 Oreg. 211, 83 Pac. 145, 84 Pac. 802, 4 L. R. A. N. S. 410.

that parties entered into an agreement for the sale of land, it will be assumed, if nothing else appears, that the agreement is in writing. The bill or complaint need not aver that the contract is in writing.[65] If, however, the bill or complaint shows that the contract was by parol, and was one which by the statute of frauds is required to be in writing, it must clearly and distinctly allege such facts, constituting acts of part performance, as will take the contract out of the statute.[66]

5. Defendant's Ability to Perform — a. In General. The bill or complaint need not, according to the weight of authority, allege defendant's ability to perform, as his inability is a matter of defense; it is sufficient if it does not appear therefrom that performance is impossible.[67] Some of the cases, however, are to the contrary.[68]

b. Defendant's Title. The title of the defendant vendor need not be shown, when plaintiff is entitled to a conveyance of whatever interest defendant may have.[69]

But where the bill or complaint shows that the vendor has no title, the suit will be dismissed.[70]

6. Defendant's Default. The defendant's failure or refusal to perform must clearly appear from the bill or complaint.[71]

7. Performance by Plaintiff — a. Conditions Preeedent. The bill or complaint must show that plaintiff has performed the conditions precedent imposed upon him by the contract, or excuse non-performance.[72]

b. General Averment. A general averment of performance by plaintiff of conditions, or of all things necessary to entitle him to relief, is sufficient, under some statutes or decisions; [73] but insufficient, under others, on the ground that the so seized on that day, to wit, etc., is a sufficient averment of title in the vendor.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 364.

The complaint need not allege that defendant is the owner of the land when the action is brought, where it does allege that he was owner when he made the offer. Ide v. Leiser, 10 Mont. 5, 24 Pac. 695, 24 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Louisiana.—A petition, filed within seven months from the making of a contract, which alleges that defendant agreed to deliver a certain quantity of lumber within ten months, that defendant has delivered a part thereof, that defendant is about to sell all of its property in and permanently remove his business from the state, but which does not allege that defendant is in default on its contract or intends making default, or that the alleged contemplated sale and removal will result in such default, discloses no cause of action for either specific performance or the recovery of damages. E. Sondheimer Co. v. Richland Lumber Co., 121 La. 786, 46 So. 806. Where the petition alleges that plaintiff has elected to accept an option whereby under a contract with defendant for the delivery of five million feet of lumber an additional five million feet were to be delivered at prices to be fixed under certain conditions by a third person, and there is no allegation that the prices have been fixed, and plaintiff prays judgment condemning defendant to deliver the lumber, an exception of no cause of action should be sustained, and the demand is properly rejected. court must be allowed to judge of the extent of plaintiff's obligations.[74] If the complaint states facts showing the performance of the condition, a general averment of performance by plaintiff is unnecessary.[75]

c. Offer or Tender Before Suit. The averments as to offer or tender before suit vary with the rules obtaining in different states as to the necessity and form of such offer or tender.[76] It is frequently said, broadly, that the bill or complaint must show that plaintiff has performed or offered to perform all the stipulations of the contract on his part; or must show a sufficient excuse for his failure to do so, and aver his readiness and willingness to perform.[77]

8. Plaintiff's Readiness and Willingness. Plaintiff should show his readiness and willingness to perform his unperformed part of the contract.[78] The allega-

Georgia.—A general allegation, in a petition for specific performance, of an unconditional and continued tender, made within the time specified in the contract, is good, as against a general demurrer, and, if defendant desires a more definite allegation with respect to the tender, he should call for it by special demurrer. Crovatt v. Baker, 130 Ga. 507, 61 S. E. 127.

Pennsylvania.— Chess' Appeal, 4 Pa. St. 52, 45 Am. Dec. 668.

Washington.—O'Connor v. Jackson, 23 Wash. 224, 62 Pac. 761.

General averment.— That a general averment that plaintiff has offered and has always been ready and willing to comply with his contract is objectionable for want of particularity see Hart v. McClellan, 41 Ala. 251; Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 375. But see St. Paul Div. No. 1 S. T. v. Brown, 9 Minn. 157.

When offer before suit not necessary see supra, VI, C; and Morris v. Hoyt, 11 Mich. 9.

That plaintiff must show a previous tender or offer to comply with his contract see Hart v. McClellan, 41 Ala. 251; Bell v. Thompson, 34 Ala. 633; McKleroy v. Tulane, 34 Ala. 78; Coleman v. Easterling, 93 Ga. 29, 18 S. E. 819; Dougherty v. Humpston, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 273.

Excuse for failure to tender.— For sufficient averments of facts excusing tender see Meckel v. Johnson, 231 Ill. 540, 83 N. E. 209; De Wolf v. Pratt, 42 Ill. 198; Martin v. Merritt, 57 Ind. 34, 26 Am. Rep. 45; Deglow v. Meyer, 15 S. W. 875, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 954; Solomon Min. Co. v. Hadden, 148 Mich. 488, 111 N. W. 1040; Christiansen v. Aldrich, 30 Mont. 446, 76 Pac. 1007. A complaint for specific performance need not plead a tender where it shows that defendant had refused to carry out the terms of the contract, and that it would have been useless. Long v. Needham, 37 Mont. 408, 96 Pac. 731. Under supreme court rule 17, that in passing on a general demurrer "every reasonable intendment arising on the pleading shall be indulged in favor of its sufficiency," a petition for specific performance of a contract is not subject to a general demurrer because it shows that plaintiff did not tender performance within the contract time, where it also shows that defendant delayed furnishing an abstract, as agreed, and that plaintiff tendered performance within a reasonable time after the abstract was furnished. Robinson v. Collier, (Tex. Civ. App. 1909) 115 S. W. 915.

Demand.— That plaintiff must show a demand upon defendant or some sufficient excuse for failure to make a demand see Carter v. Thompson, 41 Ala. 375; Bell v. Thompson, 34 Ala. 633; Burns v. Fox, 113 Ind. 205, 14 N. E. 541; Blasingame v. Blasingame, 24 Ind. 86.

New York.— Thomson v. Smith, 63 N. Y. 301, vendor.

North Carolina.— Oliver v. Dix, 21 N. C. 605.

Virginia.— Hoover v. Baugh, 108 Va. 695, 62 S. E. 968, 128 Am. St. Rep. 985. In a suit for specific performance of an agreement

tion of ability and willingness, however, is a formal one, and may be made in very general terms.[79]

9. Prayer For General Relief. Under the prayer for general relief in an equitable suit specially praying for other relief, specific performance may be had, if the statements in the body of the bill make out a case for specific performance.[80] Under the prayer for general relief in a specific performance suit various kinds of money relief have been held proper.[81]

10. Joinder of Causes of Action. Under the codes, a complaint which states to convey land, an allegation that complainant and its predecessors in interest were at all times ready, able, and willing to carry out their part of the contract is not sufficient, where the admitted facts on the face of the bill contradict such allegations. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Clintwood Coal, etc., Co., 108 Va. 433, 62 S. E. 329.

West Virginia.— Clay v. Deskins, 36 W. Va. 350, 15 S. E. 85.

United States.— Horton v. McKee, 68 Fed. 404.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," §§ 367, 368.

But a vendor's bill is not demurrable for failure to state a readiness to convey, when he pleads a previous tender. Lee v. Electric Typographic Co., 68 Fed. 519.

The allegation of readiness has been held to be unnecessary, since it is implied by bringing the suit. Hatcher v. Hatcher, McMull. Eq. (S. C.) 311.

Waiver of objection.— The omission of the offer to perform is not fatal, where such omission is not objected to. Crosby v. Moses, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 146.

Amendment.— It may be supplied by amendment. Hubbard v. Johnson, 77 Me. 139 (where accounting shows balance due); Chess' Appeal, 4 Pa. St. 52, 45 Am. Dec. 668. See infra, XI, E, 3 note 26.

Payment of taxes.—An offer of payment and full performance includes taxes which plaintiff is required by the contract to pay. Morris v. Hoyt, 11 Mich. 9.

Where account necessary to ascertain balance due.— If plaintiff pleads a willingness to pay whatever sum is due, it is immaterial that he states incorrectly the balance due (Hull v. Peer, 27 Ill. 312; Brown v. Ward, 110 Iowa 123, 81 N. W. 247; International Paper Co. v. Hudson River Water Power Co., 92 N. Y. App. Div. 56, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 736); or that he alleges that full payment had been made (Mix v. Beach, 46 Ill. 311); but it is held that plaintiff must show the balance due or that there is a dispute on that point (Wakeham v. Barker, 82 Cal. 46, 22 Pac. 1131); that he must show the balance due, or state good reasons why he could not ascertain the balance, and allege a tender of a specific sum (Coleman v. Easterling, 96 Ga. 29, 18 S. E. 819).

Plaintiff's title.— For sufficient averments as to title of vendor, plaintiff, see Daily v. Litchfield, 10 Mich. 29, that he held his lands in fee simple. For insufficient averments see Goodkind v. Bartlett, 153 Ill. 419, 38 N. E. 1045 (pleading taken most strongly against the pleader); Page v. Greeley, 75 Ill. 400 (to permit evidence of waiver of defects in title must allege waiver); Freeman v. Stokes, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 219 (married woman must show her right to convey); Low v. Heck, 3 W. Va. 680 (title to patents).

Code Pr. § 90, providing if no defense be made plaintiff cannot have judgment for any relief not specifically demanded, but, if defense be made, he may have judgment for other relief under a prayer therefor, although the only specific prayer is for damages, yet there being a general one for all "proper and equitable relief," and a defense being made, there may, in addition to a judgment for damages, be a decree for specific performance; the facts pleaded and proved showing a right thereto. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Davidson, (Ky. 1909) 115 S. W. 770.

That a bill without general or special prayer is sufficient if it makes out a case for specific performance and the defect is not questioned see Smith v. Smith, 4 Rand. (Va.) 95.

Bill for rescission.— But that plaintiff cannot have specific performance on a bill for rescission under the general prayer see Rochester v. Anderson, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 143.

In action for partition.— Under the code, in an action for partition, plaintiffs cannot have a decree for specific performance of a contract to divide the estate, such relief not being prayed for. Strong v. Harris, 84 Hun (N. Y.) 314, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 349.

In suit for damages.— That specific performance cannot be granted in a suit for damages see Towle v. Jones, 1 Rob. (N. Y.) 87, 19 Abb. Pr. 449. Contra, Kuntz v. Schnugg, 99 N. Y. App. Div. 191, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 933. And see Bateman v. Straus, 86 N. Y. App. Div. 540, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 785.

facts justifying either specific performance or damages, and praying for damages in case specific performance is impossible, states but one cause of action. The relief sought does not constitute any part of the cause of action.[82]

D. Other Pleadings — 1. Demurrer.[83] It has been held that a general demurrer does not raise the question whether the court, in its discretion, on consideration of all the equitable circumstances of the case, should enforce specific performance;[84] and that the question of the adequacy of the legal remedy, apparent on the face of the bill, is waived unless taken by demurrer.[85]

2. Answer or Plea[86] — a. Defense of Adequate Remedy at Law. By the rule in some states the defense that plaintiff's remedy at law is adequate must be pleaded, and if it is not, defendant cannot raise the objection at the trial.[87]

b. Defense of Statute of Frauds. By the generally established rule, if defendant admits the contract and does not set up the statute of frauds, he cannot have the benefit of the statute,[88] while under a denial of the contract, although the

c. Vendor's Title. By the rule in some jurisdictions, in order to entitle the vendee to an exhibition of the vendor's title, he must allege either an entire want of title, or point out the particular defects of which he complains.[90] But by the original chancery practice the objection need not be stated in the answer, or taken until the hearing before the master, on reference to settle the terms of the conveyance.[91]

Offer to repay expenditures.—Where, in a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract, consisting of a lease for a specified term, and of an option to the lessee to purchase during the term at a fixed price, the complainant alleges the making of valuable improvements by the lessee on the faith of the option to purchase, an answer attempting to allege a rescission by the lessor of the contract, prior to the election by the lessee to purchase, which does not offer to repay the lessee the moneys expended by him in improvements on the land, but only to repay the moneys "paid" the lessor by the lessee, and "to restore everything received" by the lessor under the agreement, is insufficient on demurrer. denial of the existence of the contract, evidence of the illegality of the purpose for which the sale was made is admissible;[1] and where the complaint alleges agency and a sale under the authority conferred, these allegations are put in issue, and a special plea of excess of authority is not required.[2] In an action for specific performance of a contract, where the answer is a general denial, it is error to quiet defendant's title against plaintiff's claim to the property involved.[3]

f. Setting Up Different Contract. On a bill for specific performance, defendant cannot admit that there was a contract, and then set out a materially different contract from the one alleged in the bill, making the one so set out binding upon complainant, although the parties are bound by the statements in the answer in so far as they are admissions, or admissions without substantial variation from the bill; and, where defendant admits a substituted contract, complainant can have specific performance thereof, if he chooses to perform it on his part.[4]

3. Cross Bill, Cross Complaint, or Counter-Claim[5] — a. In the Specific Performance Suit. In a suit for specific performance defendant may file a cross bill, cross complaint, or counter-claim, and such cross pleading may be retained for full relief, although plaintiff's bill or complaint is dismissed.[6] A cross bill is not necessary, however, in order to secure performance by a plaintiff who in his bill offers to perform,[7] or to secure to a defendant vendee the return of the earnest money or deposit where the title offered is bad.[8]

b. Specific Performance For Defendant in Action at Law. It is common practice in the code states to decree specific performance on the answer, counter-claim, or cross complaint of defendant in ejectment.[9] And in New Hampshire it was held that where, in an action at law, it appeared upon the facts found that a decree for specific performance of parol agreements would be ordered, on a bill filed for that purpose by defendant, the same result might be reached by appropriate amendments and orders, and that plaintiff might be entitled to a judgment and defendant to a decree.[10] In Massachusetts where, under the statute, a husband was entitled to avail himself of a contract for separate maintenance of his wife as an equitable defense to her suit for support in the probate court, it was held that the trustee through whom such agreement was made was not entitled to maintain a bill in equity to restrain the wife's proceeding, and to specifically enforce such agreement, because of the fact that specific performance might be had by way of equitable defense in the suit in the probate court.[11] But in Missouri it was held that, as the defendant in an unlawful detainer suit could not set up an equitable defense, he might sue in equity to enjoin such suit and procure a specific performance of an option to renew his lease.[12]

E. Proof, Variance, and Amendment — 1. Proof — a. Oral Contracts. The stringent requirements as to proof of oral contracts within the statute of frauds have been already noted.[13] Similar requirements have been asserted as to the proof of other oral contracts;[14] but in the absence of any such reason as applies to contracts required by statute to be in writing, it is doubtful whether there is any generally recognized necessity of an extraordinary degree of proof to warrant specific performance of other oral contracts.

b. Action Upon Lost Instrument. Where the action is upon an alleged lost instrument, the contract must be clearly established, and the terms free from doubt. The same degree of proof appears to be necessary as for the establishment of a parol contract within the statute of frauds.[15]

2. Variance Between Pleading and Proof[16] — a. General Rule. The general rule of equity is that plaintiff must prove the contract as laid in the bill, not some other contract.[17] But an immaterial variance is not fatal.[18]

b. Stringent Rule in Certain States. In a few states, an absolute correspondence is required not only between every essential averment and the proof, but also between every redundant and superfluous averment with respect to a material fact, or descriptive of a matter or thing necessary to be alleged. In no other class of cases is correspondence between the allegations of the bill and the proof more rigidly exacted.[19]

Right to redeem.—Where the purchaser sued on the contract for specific performance he could not recover on the theory that his right was that of an equitable owner to redeem. Free v. Little, 31 Utah 449, 88 Pac. 407.

No variance.—In the following cases it was held that the matters proved were covered by the allegations of the pleading and that there was therefore no variance. Andrews v. Andrews, 28 Ala. 432 (failure to prove alleged stipulation which the law implies); Gelwicks v. Todd, 24 Colo. 494, 52 Pac. 788 ("appurtenances" alleged includes water right proved); Buffum v. Buffum, 11 N. shall be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice.[21]

d. Parol Contracts — (i) In General. The rule as to variance is applied with special strictness in the case of oral contracts.[22]

(ii) Whether Defendant's Version of Contract May Be Enforced. Where defendant, in a suit upon an oral contract, sets up a contract different from that alleged by plaintiff, and defendant's version is sustained by the proof, and plaintiff's acts of part performance apply equally well to either version, the question whether plaintiff may have specific performance of the contract as thus varied is one on which the courts, except in the code states, are by no means agreed.[23]

e. Plaintiff May Recover Part of His Claim. An apparent exception to the equity doctrine as to variance is found in the rule that plaintiff may be permitted to recover a portion of his claim.[24]

3. Amendments to Pleadings.[25] Courts of equity use a very liberal discretion in allowing amendments. In deciding whether leave to amend a bill shall be granted, they disregard mere matters of form, and simply consider whether the amendment is necessary or not to reach the real and substantial merits of the case.[26]

And in the code states the rule has given way to the rule of variance established in the codes. Lobdell v. Lobdell, 36 N. Y. 327, 2 Transcr. App. 363, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 56, 33 How. Pr. 347 [reversing 32 How. Pr. 1]. See supra, XI, E, 2, c.

The admission of a parol contract essentially different from that alleged in the bill does not authorize a decree for performance. Haight v. Child, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 186.

As to proof of oral contracts see supra, V, Q; XI, E, 1, a.

23. Specific performance refused see Sims v. McEwen, 27 Ala. 184; Levandowski v. Althouse, 136 Mich. 631, 99 N. W. 786 (although a written contract is proved); Haight v. Child, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 186 (but rule changed by code); Byrne v. Romaine, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 445. See supra, IV, C, 3.

On the other hand some cases hold that the court may, on proof of the contract set up by defendant, either dismiss the bill or give plaintiff his election between specific performance of the contract as proved and a rescission. McComas v. Easley, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 23; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. McGarry, 52 W. Va. 547, 44 S. E. 236; West Virginia Oil, etc., Co. v. Vinal, 14 W. Va. 637. F. Other Matters of Practice — 1. Preliminary or Interlocutory Injunction. The complainant is often entitled to a preliminary injunction maintaining the status quo until the determination of the suit, where it is probable that he will show himself entitled to the relief of specific performance.[27] But a temporary ancillary injunction will not be granted unless the allegations of the bill warrant a decree for specific performance; or where on the preliminary application the court is of opinion that no relief would be granted on the final hearing; or where the contract is disputed or uncertain.[28] not been delivered); Sweat v. Hendley, 123 Ga. 332, 51 S. Dec. 668 (performance or willingness and readiness to perform); Fitzpatrick v. Engard, 4 Pa. Dist. 383 (amendment of prayer so as to obtain damages in case specific performance was refused); Fetterling's Estate, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 169 (date of contract); Wilkins v. Somerville, 80 Vt. 48, 66 Atl. 893, 11 L. R. A. N. S. 1183 (amendment adding offer to perform).

Amendment refused as amounting to the institution of a new and wholly different suit see Brehm v. Porter, 165 Mo. 115, 65 S. W. 264.

As to parties.—A bill in equity, filed by the administrator of one deceased to compel specific performance of a contract to convey to said deceased certain land, cannot be amended on trial, so as to make the heirs of the deceased complainants parties instead of the administrator. House v. Dexter, 9 Mich. 246.

Amendment to the answer denying agreement, so as to plead the statute of frauds, was refused, on account of unfair conduct of defendants. Stern v. Doheny, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 711, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 774.

Supplemental answer, to show that by act of third party, pending suit, specific performance has become impossible, proper see Wilbur v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 189. In a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey land, when defendant has filed an answer denying the making of such agreement, either written or verbal, and relying upon that defense alone, and where depositions have been taken on both sides and the cause submitted by consent of the parties for final hearing and determination, defendant will not be permitted to file an amended or supplemental answer setting up an entirely new and different defense from that of his original answer, he having knowledge of all the facts at the time of filing his original answer. West Virginia.— Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. South Penn Oil Co., 56 W. Va. 402, 49 S. E. 548, to prevent operation of oil well.

Wisconsin.— Inglis v. Fohey, 136 Wis. 28, 116 N. W. 857 (holding that where plaintiff sued for the specific performance of a contract to convey real estate in his possession, the court properly preserved the status quo pending the litigation by granting an injunctional order restraining defendant from interfering with plaintiff's possession, and by requiring plaintiff to pay a monthly rental into court to abide the event of the action); Hadfield v. Bartlett, 66 Wis. 634, 29 N. W. 639 (against trespass interfering with plaintiff's possession).

United States.— Ross v. Union Pac. R. Co., 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,080, Woolw. 26, where defendant probably will, before the hearing, render itself incapable of executing the contract.

England.— Strelley v. Pearson, 15 Ch. D. 113, 49 L. J. Ch. 406, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 155, 28 Wkly. Rep. 752, holding that in an action for specific performance of an agreement to take a colliery lease, where the lessee had long retained possession and had worked the coal and then threatened to cease pumping, a motion for an injunction to restrain the lessee from ceasing pumping was a proper motion for the preservation of the property pending the action.

That a mandatory injunction may be granted when appropriate see Taylor v. Florida East Coast R. Co., 54 Fla. 635, 45 So. 574, 127 Am. St. Rep. 155, 16 L. R. A. N. S. 307.

2. Receiver. A receiver has been appointed, pending suit, to take charge of the property and receive the proceeds under the same circumstances as in a mortgage foreclosure, namely, where the vendee is in possession and is insolvent, and the property is an inadequate security for the debt.[29]

3. Issues to the Jury[30] — a. In General. In the absence of a statute neither party is entitled to trial by jury as a matter of right. Special issues on matters of fact may be framed under the direction of the court. The decision of the jury is not binding on the court, but is merely advisory.[31]

b. Jury Trial in Certain States. In a few states by statute a jury trial of issues of fact is a matter of right.[32]

Florida.— Taylor v. Florida East Coast R. Co., 54 Fla. 635, 45 So. 574, 127 Am. St. Rep. 155, 16 L. R. A. N. S. 307.

New York.— Fargo v. New York, etc., R. Co., 3 Misc. 205, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 360.

Rhode Island.— Hazard v. Hope Land Co., (1908) 69 Atl. 602, 849.

United States.— Lucas v. Milliken, 139 Fed. 816; Ross v. Union Pac. R. Co., 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,080, Woolw. 26.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Specific Performance," § 353.

The injunction must appear to be appropriate and just (Taylor v. Florida East Coast R. Co., 54 Fla. 635, 45 So. 574, 127 Am. St. Rep. 155, 16 L. R. A. N. S. 307), and necessary for plaintiff's protection (Josey v. Perlstein, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 107 S. W. 558, lis pendens ample protection against conveyance by defendant).

Dissolution of injunction.— If plaintiff withdraws his prayer for specific performance and asks for damages, the injunction will be dissolved. Wescott v. Mulvane, 58 Fed. 305, 7 C. C. A. 242. That the injunction will be dissolved on the filing of an answer denying the averments of the complaint see Gariss v. Gariss, 13 N. J. Eq. 320; Rockwell v. Lawrence, 5 N. J. Eq. 20. But it will not be dissolved where the answer admits the material allegations upon which the equity of the bill rests, but sets up new matter in avoidance. Huffman v. Hummer, 17 N. J. Eq. 263. And see Justices Pike County Inferior Ct. v. Griffin, etc., Plank Road Co., 11 Ga. 246, action for specific performance and to enjoin trespass; denial of contract but admission of trespass; injunction not dissolved.

That a motion for injunction after coming in of the answer must be founded upon the merits confessed in the answer see Whitaker v. Bond, 63 N. C. 290.

For practice in obtaining injunction, bond, etc. see Injunction, 22 Cyc. 724; and Pendelton v. Laub, 95 Iowa 722, 64 N. W. 653.

29. Gunby v. Thompson, 56 Ga. 316; Phillips v. Eiland, 52 Miss. 721; Reade v. Hamlin, 62 N. C. 128, vendee wasting the property.

At suit of vendee.— For appointment of receiver, in action to enforce assignment of lease of oil lands, where, under the code provision, the property "is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured" see Galloway v. Campbell, 142 Ind. 324, 41 N. E. 597.

Plaintiff's ability to perform.— That plaintiff, asking for a receiver, must show a present ability to fulfil his part of the contract see Baldwin v. Salter, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 473.

Action prematurely brought.— That the order for a receiver must be vacated where the action is prematurely brought see Jones v. Boyd, 80 N. C. 258.

30. See Equity, 16 Cyc. 413.

31. Hinkle v. Hinkle, 55 Ark. 583, 18 S. W. 1049; Waddington v. Lane, 202 Mo. 387, 100 S. W. 1139; Moore v. Moulton, 5 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 534, 6 Am. L. Rec. 466. An issue whether defendants' purchase from plaintiff's vendor was in good faith was a proper one for a jury. Waddington v. Lane, supra. An issue is the proper mode of ascertaining damages for an alleged breach of covenant by plaintiff vendor. Ayres v. Robins, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 105. As to the effect of a verdict in curing a defective statement in the complaint see Despain v. Carter, 21 Mo. 331.

32. The question was held to be one for the jury in the following cases: Looney v. Watson, 97 Ga. 235, 22 S. E. 935 (whether improvements were such as amounted to a part performance); Willcoxon v. Eason, 19 Ga. 565 (whether consideration was grossly inadequate was a question for a special jury); Combes v. Adams, 150 N. C. 64, 63 S. E. 186 (as to conspiracy and fraud set up by defendants); Boles v. Caudle, 133 N. C. 528, 45 S. E. 835; Bird v. Bradburn, 127 N. C. 411, 37 S. Pennsylvania practice.—As to the province of judge and jury under the peculiar Pennsylvania practice, by which the equitable right is tried under the forms of a legal action of ejectment see Beeson v. Porter, 155 Pa. St. 579, 26 Atl. 699; Williams v. Bent-

4. Reference to Master or Referee.[33] Where it appears doubtful whether the vendor can make such a title as would authorize a decree for specific performance, the court should refer the title to a master to be examined and reported upon;[34] but such reference is not necessary when the court itself can see upon the pleadings and proof that the title is insufficient and cannot be cured.[35] There may also be a reference to state accounts and ascertain the amount due.[36] The court need not submit a question on which no evidence is offered.[37] Before the master's finding can become binding, it must be approved by the court. He cannot be required to act judicially, and to proceed to execute his own decree.[38] Defendant's assent to trial by referee is not a waiver of the objection that the legal remedy is adequate.[39]

G. Decree, Costs, and Appeal[40]— 1. Decree Should Conform to Complaint. The decree should conform to the complaint, especially as to the amount of the purchase-price to be paid.[41]

2. Decree Should Conform to Contract. The decree should conform to the contract. It cannot add to the contract a promise not made. The court will not make a contract for the parties.[42] But where exact enforcement of the contract

40. Construction and effect of decrees.— Where the lower court in a suit for specific performance passed a decree granting the relief prayed for by the bill, and, on a rehearing, passed another decree vacating the first decree and dismissing the bill, on the ground alone of defect of parties complainant, the two decrees, when considered together, will be deemed a finding for the complainant on the facts. Other requisites of decree.— That it is erroneous to decree a conveyance without identifying the boundaries with reasonable certainty see Tribble v. Davis, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 633. But that the decree may refer to the complaint for a description of the land see Foster v. Bowman, 55 Iowa 237, 7 N. W. 513. That the vendee is entitled to a deed with description in terms of the contract see Peden v. Owens, Rice Eq. (S. C.) 55. In decrees for specific performance of a contract for purchase, a time for payment of the purchase-money should be limited, or, in default, the bill dismissed. In such cases also the decree should direct a set-off between the unpaid money and the costs. McDonald v. Elder, 3 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 244.

The amount of recovery in a suit by the vendor is the amount due at the time of the decree, not at the commencement of the suit. Shaw v. Bayard, 4 Pa. St. 257.

Payment of instalments.— A purpose of a suit being to enforce payment of instalments under a contract, and all payments under it having become due before entry of the decree, and the prayer being broad enough, and the parties having been fully heard, the decree should be for payment of the instalments due at commencement of the suit, and for those which thereafter became due. Bauer v. International Waste Co., 201 Mass. 197, 87 N. E. 637.

Apportioning relief among plaintiffs.—That a defendant resisting specific performance cannot object to the decree because it adjudges to one of the parties too large an interest and too little to others see Harrison v. Town, 17 Mo. 237. Separate decrees for damages to vendee and his partial assignee were held erroneous in Eastman v. Reid, 101 Ala. 320, 13 So. 46. That on a joint purchase, where the purchasers have given their several notes for certain portions of the purchase-money, conveyance may be decreed to each in proportion to the amount paid or secured to be paid by him see Brothers v. Porter, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 106.

Decreeing payment to the attorney of either of two defendants, who had different interests and liabilities, and covenants standing between them, held erroneous see Greene v. Cook, 29 Ill. 186.

Deed to partnership.— Where the vendee is a firm, the deed should be decreed to be executed to the individual partners as tenants in common. Townshend v. Goodfellow, 40 Minn. 312, 41 N. W. 1056, 12 Am. St. Rep. 736, 3 L. R. A. 739.

Leaving performance optional.—Where specific performance is decreed, the contract is merged in the decree, and it must not be so entered as to leave it optional with plaintiff whether he will perform. A decree for specific performance must not be so entered as to be an option on behalf of either party. Thompson v. Burns, 15 Ida. 572, 99 Pac. 111. But it was held that in a suit to compel specific performance of a land contract by the purchaser, a decree giving defendant the option to settle according to the contract or to pay the full purchase-price, with interest, was proper. Prichard v. Mulhall, 140 Iowa 1, 118 N. W. 43.

3. Decree to Assignee. In a suit by an assignee of the vendee, the decree may direct the conveyance to be made directly to such assignee.[44] If the vendee is not a party, and the court finds against the assignment, it is error also to find against the validity of the contract.[45]

4. Infant Heirs. A decree against infant heirs of the vendor may direct a conveyance by them after they become of age.[46] Statutory provisions are found in most or all of the states, authorizing a deed to be executed on behalf of infant heirs by a commissioner, guardian, etc.[47]

5. Insane Persons. Since the change of the condition of a person entering into an agreement by becoming a lunatic will not alter the right of the parties, which will be the same as before, provided they can come at the remedy,[48] so when an agreement to convey real property or an interest therein has been entered into by one who subsequently becomes insane, equity may enforce a specific performance of the contract, either by the committee or guardian of the lunatic for him, or by the lunatic's representative after his decease;[49] as by the lunatic's heir where the lunatic had covenanted to surrender interests in real estate,[50] or to convey land absolutely.[51] So when the agreement to convey is by one himself sane, who dies before the execution of the contract leaving an insane heir at law, the committee of the latter may be directed to execute the contract for him.[52] The jurisdiction to enforce specific performance may be exercised when the insane party was one of several joint contractors, whose rights the failure to carry out the proposed contract may affect injuriously, as where the lunatic is one of several proposed lessees,[53] or is a member of a partnership by which certain deeds are to be executed.[54]

6. Form of Conveyance or Lease; Covenants. If the contract specified the form of the deed, the decree must of course conform to the contract. If the contract is silent as to the kind of deed required, a deed with covenants of warranty must be given according to some decisions.[55] Other cases hold a deed without warranty sufficient. If defendant has a title, it is reasoned, a quitclaim would be as effectual to transfer it; if he has no title, a deed with covenants would not Accepting partial performance.—Where a vendee, in a suit for specific performance of a contract for conveyance with general warranty and abstract of title, accepted a decree divesting the title of the vendor and vesting it in plaintiff, it would be assumed that the vendee took such decree without objection, and waived performance of the contract in so far as it required a conveyance with warranty or an abstract of title. Jasper v. Wilson, 14 N. M. 482, 94 Pac. 951, 23 L. R. A. N. S. 982.

If the contract calls for a warranty deed, the vendee does not waive his right to such a deed by accepting a quitclaim deed under transfer title.[56] A contract to execute a lease calls for a lease with the usual covenants.[57] The court may direct the lease to be dated at a time antecedent to alleged breaches, in order to give plaintiff his action on the covenants.[58]

7. Decree Vesting Title. The statutes in many states authorize the court to make a decree which shall execute itself, without any act of the parties, by divesting defendant of his title and vesting the same in plaintiff.[59]

8. Conveyance by Commissioner. By other statutes the method of passing title is to direct a commissioner or other officer of the court to execute a deed, such deed having the same effect as if executed by the holder of the title.[60]

9. Foreclosure of Vendor's Lien For Unpaid Price — a. By Sale. By the practice in many states, a final decree in the vendor's favor does not award execution generally for the debt and costs. The proper decree is to direct a sale of the premises, upon default being made in payment, awarding the vendee any surplus upon the sale.[61] But it has been held that where a certain sum is adjudged a mistake. Point St. Iron Works v. Simmons, 11 R. I. 496.

If the contract merely calls for a quitclaim, it is erroneous to decree a warranty deed. Darby v. Richardson, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 544.

If the contract is to convey a possessory title merely, a deed which will convey such title is sufficient. Dargin v. Cranson, 12 Colo. App. 368, 55 Pac. 619.

The decree cannot require personal covenants binding parties interested, who have not appeared or been personally served, since specific performance is a remedy in personam. Worthington v. Lee, 61 Md. 530.

That heirs of the vendor can only be required to make a deed with special warranty see Boggess v. Robinson, 5 W. Va. 402. And see Hill v. Ressegieu, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 162, holding also that covenants are not required of infant heirs.

Deed by vendor's grantee with notice.— If such grantee receives from the vendor a deed with covenants of warranty, he should be decreed to convey to the vendee plaintiff by a similar deed. Lovejoy v. Potter, 60 Mich. 95, 26 N. W. 844. If he received a quitclaim from the vendor, he need only quitclaim to plaintiff. Peterson v. Ramsey, 78 Nebr. 235, 110 N. W. 728.

lien on lands under parol contract between parties, the party in possession should be allowed a reasonable time to pay before sale of the lands.[62]

b. Strict Foreclosure. In other states a decree of strict foreclosure on behalf of the successful vendor is required or allowed: namely, that in default of payment within a specified time the vendee be foreclosed of all his right and equity in the premises.[63]

10. Costs[64] — a. Against Unsuccessful Party in General. If the plaintiff vendee is successful, costs are generally to be taxed against a defendant who denied plaintiff's right to a conveyance.[65]

b. Discretionary. The court, however, exercises a wide discretion in the matter of imposing costs.[66]

A sale without first complying with the conditions imposed by the decree will be set aside. Peck v. Zborowski, 13 S. D. 182, 82 N. W. 387.

Suit against administrator and heirs of vendor.— The court, in a suit against the administratrix and heirs of a deceased vendor for specific performance of the contract of sale of realty, directed the administratrix on the payment of the purchase-money to execute a deed, and adjudged that payment should be made by a designated date, and that in default thereof the land should be sold for cash, retaining the case for the disposition of the price. The purchaser failed to comply with the judgment and three months later the administratrix executed a deed to the purchaser on his paying the price and interest. It was held that the judgment was proper and that the conveyance was valid, since the effect of the judgment was to declare that the heirs held the legal title, as trustees, to secure the purchase-money, as if the deceased had held at his death a mortgage on the land to secure the debt. c. Refused to Either Party. In the exercise of its discretion, the court may refuse costs to either party, where both parties were in fault.[67]

d. Imposed on Successful Party. In the exercise of its discretion, the court may impose costs on the successful party because of his default.[68]

e. Where Plaintiff Made no Tender. If plaintiff, without sufficient excuse, failed to tender performance before suit, costs should be taxed against him.[69] But if tender was prevented by defendant's conduct, and specific performance is decreed, defendant must bear the costs.[70] So where the tender was faulty, but defendant refused to perform for another and invalid reason.[71] And costs were imposed on a defendant vendee, although the vendor was not able to make title at the beginning of the action, where defendant was not ready to make payment on condition of getting the estate bargained for, and contested the case.[72]

72. Hobson v. Buchanan, 96 N. C. 444, 2 S. E. 180.

73. See further Equity, 16 Cyc. 1.

Relation of title under the decree.— That the legal title of the vendee obtained under the decree does not relate back to the beginning of the suit so as to support an action of trespass, or an action for breach of warranty against the vendor's grantor see Goetchius v. Sanborn, 46 Mich. 330, 9 N. W. 437; Vancourt v. Moore, 26 Mo. 92.

Who bound by decree.— That the decree does not as a general rule run against parties who are not joined in the action see Work v. Welsh, 160 Ill. 468, 43 N. E. 719. But that pendente lite purchasers are bound whether made parties or not see Steele v. Taylor, 1 Minn. 274.

Decree of dismissal.— That such a decree in a specific performance suit is a bar to a new bill for the same object see Hepburn v. Dunlop, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 179, 4 L. ed. 65.

Time for enforcement of decree.— If a decree in the vendee's favor designates no time for performance, he may demand its enforcement at any time, until the statute of limitations has run. Redington v. Chase, 34 Cal. 666. And the court has power to amend its decree by extending the time for payment of the purchase-money. Adams v. Ash, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 105. The court may recognize a conveyance not executed within the time limited by the decree, where great injustice will be done by a strict enforcement of the decree. Blair's Estate, 178 Pa. St. 582, 36 Atl. 179. But it is not a proper exercise of discretion to suspend the operation of the decree against the vendor because of the pendency of an ejectment action, there being no culpable conduct on the vendor's part. Rosenberg v. Haggerty, 189 N. Y. 481, 82 N. E. 503 [reversing 114 N. Y. App. Div. 920, 100 N. Y. Suppl. 1140].

Abandonment of decree by withdrawal of deposit see Cheney v. Wagner, 33 Nebr. 310, 50 N. W. 13.

Retention of suit after dismissal of bill.— If the bill is dismissed for non-performance of the decree by plaintiff, it is erroneous to retain the suit for the purpose of an account

12. Appeal. Certain general rules of appellate practice, as illustrated in specific performance cases, are mentioned below.[74]

H. Probate Jurisdiction — 1. In General. The legislation of many states provides for a special proceeding in the probate, orphans' or surrogate's court, by which the contracts of a deceased vendor may be enforced without resort to a suit in equity, in the course of settlement of his estate. This legislation varies greatly in its details.[75] of rents and profits. Clark v. Hall, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 382.

Proceedings on death of parties.—Where the vendor, plaintiff, died after tender of deed in court, and the suit was revived by his administrator, the vendee was decreed to accept the deed, without making the heirs parties. Cook v. Hendricks, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 500. And see Faile v. Crawford, 34 N. Y. App. Div. 278, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 264. And where, after decree, the cause was stricken from the docket, and both parties died, a subsequent order that the commissioner appointed by the court convey to the heirs of the original parties was held void; the proper course of proceeding being by bill in the nature of a bill of revivor. Welch v. Louis, 31 Ill. 446.

Supplemental bill.—Where part of the land decreed to be conveyed has been taken for a highway, the vendee may recover the damages which the vendor received therefor. Low v. Low, 177 Mass. 306, 59 N. E. 57.

Loss of deed.—Where the deed, deposited with the clerk, pending appeal, is lost while in his custody, the defendant, on affirmance of the decree, must execute a new deed. Worrall v. Munn, 17 N. Y. 475.

Alteration of decree.—After decree for specific performance the court has no authority to enter a judgment for damages, and appoint a referee to ascertain the same, on the ground that specific performance has failed. Koehler v. Brady, 87 N. Y. App. Div. 326, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 457 [affirmed in 181 N. Y. 503, 73 N. E. 1125]. And see Eastman v. Simpson, 139 Mass. 348, 1 N. E. 346, where there was no disability on vendor's part. And after a conditional decree directing defendant to convey on payment of the purchase-money, a decree ordering the payment of the purchase-money cannot be made without a cross bill. Atchison v. Dorsey, 1 Bland (Md.) 535. That no decree should be altered on motion except to cure an error by which it does not correctly express the decision see Strauss v. Bendheim, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 179, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 247.

Enforcement by execution.—A judgment directing the execution of a bond and mortgage is not a money judgment, on which an execution for the sale of the property can be issued. Roberge v. Winne, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 597, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 601.

74. Objection first made on appeal.—Where objection to the sufficiency of the complaint is made for the first time on appeal, that it will be held sufficient if by any reasonable inference or intendment the conclusion follows that it states a cause of action see Halvorsen v. Orinoco Min. Co., 89 Minn. 470, 95 N. W. 320; Drake v. Barton, 18 Minn. 462. That if no objection to vendor's title is made, title, was not asked at the trial, it cannot be raised on appeal see Brockenbrough v. Blythe, 3 Leigh (Va.) 619. That where relief against the vendor, notwithstanding defects in the title, was not asked at the trial, it cannot be granted on appeal see Mills v. Van Voorhis, 20 N. Y. 412, 10 Abb. Pr. 152.

Conflicting evidence.—Where the oral testimony as to the consideration is conflicting, the decree enforcing the contract will not be reversed; since the court must allow for the fact that the chancellor is the best judge of the credibility of oral evidence. Batcheller v. Batcheller, 144 Ill. 471, 33 N. E. 24. In specific performance the rule that a case will not be reversed where there is a substantial conflict of evidence must be taken and considered with the rule that, to obtain specific performance, the evidence must establish the contract clearly and satisfactorily. Prairie Development Co. v. Leiberg, 15 Ida. 379, 98 Pac. 616. A substantial conflict in the evidence so as to render the trial court's judgment conclusive on appeal does not necessarily arise because there is some evidence to support a contract in an action for specific performance, for in such actions the contract must be established by clear and satisfactory evidence, and the conflict must be substantial in the light of such rule. Prairie Development Co. v. Leiberg, supra.

Immaterial finding.—A reversal will not be granted because a finding of fact is without evidence to support it, unless it is a material fact and to some extent at least gives support to the judgment rendered. Wetmore v. Bruce, 118 N. Y. 319, 23 N. E. 303.
