To

CHARLES WALTER DUMONT

more than to any other man is due the existence of the Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure. His was the idea; his was the plan; and his has been the business ability and energetic management, as organizer and president of The American Law Book Company, which have made possible the successful publication of these volumes, which are therefore respectfully dedicated to him.

I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Tenancy in Common. Tenancy in common is the holding of an estate in land by several persons, by several and distinct titles, and there need be unity of possession only,[1] but perhaps an entire disunion of interest, of title, and of

1. Manhattan Real Estate, etc., Assoc. v. Cudlipp, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 532, 535, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 993.

Another definition is: "Tenancy in common, in the strict sense of the term, is where two or more persons are entitled to land in such a manner that they have an undivided possession but several freeholds, i. e.: no one of them is entitled to the exclusive possession of any particular part of the land, each being entitled to occupy the whole in common with the others, or to receive his share of the rents and profits." Rapalje & L. L. Dict. tit. "Tenancy in Common" [quoted in Carver v. Fennimore, 116 Ind. 236, 239, 19 N. E. 103].

In a mere expectancy there can be no tenancy in common, for in order to create the time.[2] Possession under a tenancy in common is per my and not per tout, and as each tenant owns an undivided fraction, he cannot know where that fraction is until a division has been made.[3] While definitions of tenancy in common generally relate to tenancy in common in real property, this tenancy can exist in personalty as well as in realty.[4]

B. Tenant in Common.[5] Tenants in common are such as hold by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession; because none knoweth his own severalty, and therefore they all occupy promiscuously.[6] The qualities of their estate may be different, the shares may be unequal; the modes of acquisition of title may be unlike; and the only unity between them be that of possession.[7] Each is entitled before severance to an interest in every inch of the soil; [8] but no one of them is entitled to the exclusive possession of any particular part of the object of a tenancy in common there must be an actual estate in possession. Betts v. Betts, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 317, 353.

The difference between an estate in common and a right of common is that the first is a corporeal hereditament, while the last appears from its very definition to be an incorporeal hereditament. The first is the land itself; the other a profit which a man hath in the land of another. Crawford v. Neff, 3 Walk. (Pa.) 57, 61.

Tenancies in common differ from sole estates merely in unity of possession. Crawford v. Neff, 3 Walk. (Pa.) 57, 61.

Unity of possession is an essential attribute of tenancy in common. Blessing v. House, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 290, 307; Laughlin v. O'Reily, 92 Miss. 121, 125, 45 So. 193; Sutton v. Jenkins, 147 N. St. 43, 50, 17 Atl. 865.

The ownership of land by one and of the house thereon by the other does not create a community of property, under the civil code. Javier v. Javier, 6 Philippine 493, 495.

There can be no tenancy in a mere actual possession by one. There must be some right or title to the possession, and not the mere actual possession, to create a cotenancy. Lillianskyoldt v. Goss, 2 Utah 292, 297.

Other definitions are: "Those that come to the land by several titles, or by one title and several rights." 5 Bacon Abr. 240.

"Such as hold by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession." 1 Bouvier L. Dict. 574 [quoted in Lagow v. Neilson, 10 Ind. 183, 185].

"They which have lands or tenements in fee simple, fee tail, or for term of life, &c. and they have such lands or tenements by several titles, and not by a joint title, and none of them know of this his several, but they ought by the law to occupy these lands or tenements in common, and pro indiviso to take the profits in common." Coke Litt. tit. "Of Tenants in Common," lib. 3, c. 4, § 292 [quoted in Blessing v. House, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 290, 307].

"They who hold by several titles, or by one title on several rights; and they have several freeholds, and their right is several." Haysman v. Moon, 7 Mod. 430, 437, 87 Eng. Reprint 1337.

Where one rents land for the purpose of having a single crop raised on it, of which the lessor is to have a part for the use of the land and the cultivator a part for his labor, and there is no evidence that it was the intention that the relation of landlord and tenant should exist between them, the parties are to be considered as tenants in common in the crop. Ponder v. Rhea, 32 Ark. 435, 437.

One who owns mineral rights is not a cotenant with the owner of the surface. Hutchinson v. Kline, 199 Pa. St. 564, 49 Atl. 312. But the proprietors of a mining ditch and owners of mining rights are tenants in common of real estate. Bradley v. Harkness, 26 Cal. 69. And after such a ditch has been abandoned and its flow turned into another stream, a tenant in common, in the absence of contractual or statutory limitations, may recapture and use his proportion of the water for irrigating or other purposes. Meagher v. Hardenbrook, 11 Mont. 385, 28 Pac. 451.

land, each being entitled to occupy the whole in common with the others or to receive his share of the rents and profits.[9]

C. Coparcenary or Parcenary. An estate in coparcenary is an estate acquired by two or more persons, usually females,[10] by descent from the same ancestor;[11] parceners or coparceners[12] being defined as 'several persons taking lands, or any undivided share of lands, held for an estate of inheritance by descent,'[13] all the coparceners, whatever their number, constituting but one heir and having but one estate among them.[14] The estate arose according to the course of common law in the case of descent of realty to female heirs, and according to particular custom, as for instance the gavelkind custom of the county of Kent, to male heirs, being in the latter instance an exception to the rule of primogeniture.[15] The estate resembles joint tenancy more closely than tenancy in common, having the same three unities of title, possession, and interest as the former, and in addition generally the unity of time. But there is no survivorship, in which respect the estate partakes more of a tenancy in common.[16] The estate never arose by purchase, but only by descent, therein differing from the other cotenancies.[17] Whilst joint tenancies refer to persons, coparcenary refers to the estate; their right of possession is in common, each may alien her share and the alienees will hold as tenants in common; their respective shares descend severally to their respective heirs.[18] They had the same remedy in equity for an account as tenants in common.[19] This estate, although formerly recognized in a few of the older states of the Union,[20] is now generally abolished, in many instances by statutes which change such estates into tenancies in common.[21]

II. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND TERMINATION.

A. Creation and Existence. At common law a tenancy in common could be created only expressly or by necessary implication,[22] and the inclination of the courts was to construe conveyances as creating joint tenancies rather than tenancies in common, but the modern tendency is to import an intention in favor of a tenancy in common whenever the expressions in a conveyance or the acts of the parties permit such a construction;[23] and generally under the statutes of the respective states, and by judicial construction, estates which would have been joint at common law are made estates in common.[24] Thus a tenancy in common springs up whenever an estate in real or personal property is owned concurrently by two or more persons under a conveyance or under circumstances which do not either expressly or by necessary implication call for some other form of cotenancy.[25]

Tenancy in common in timber.—Where an agreement is made that one of the parties shall find timber and the other shall manufacture it into some article and they shall each then be entitled to some aliquot part of the articles so manufactured, or where an agreement is made that one party is to supply the timber and the other shall do some work and labor thereon, and they are then to receive proportionate shares thereof, the beneficiaries under said agreement are tenants in common and not partners, and each has a right to dispose only of his own interest therein. A sale of standing timber on designated land, to be cut and removed at a specified rate, vests the exclusive title to the timber in the purchasers, and leaves the exclusive title to the land in the sellers, and does not make the purchasers and sellers tenants in common in either the land or the timber. Dexter v. Lathrop, 136 Pa. St. 565, 20 Atl. 545. Compare Wheeler v. Carpenter, 107 Pa. St. 271. Where there is no joint undivided interest in the whole property, and separate interests are dependent on surveys that should have been ordered by plaintiff, plaintiff, having failed to order a survey, cannot take advantage of its own fault for the creation of a cotenancy; and it cannot sue as a cotenant for timber taken from the unsurveyed tract. U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 6 Mont. 351, 12 Pac. 769.

Tenancy in common in waters see Bailey v. Rust, 15 Me. 440; Richards v. Koenig, 24 Wis. 360; Stillman v. White Rock Mfg. Co., 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,446, 3 Woodb. & M. 538; Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 17 Fed. 466, 21 Blatchf. 358. The mere privilege of drawing water for a conveyed business so long as the grantee should carry on the business, the grantee paying share of repairing expenses, does not create a tenancy in common in the right to use the water. Shed v. Leslie, 22 Vt. 498.

Tenancy in common in ditch see Vannest v. Fleming, 79 Iowa 638, 44 N. W. 906, 18 Am. St. Rep. 387, 8 L. R. A. 277; Lehi Irr. Co. v. Moyle, 4 Utah 327, 9 Pac. 867. An agreement for several ownership of water in a ditch, for use on the several lands of the respective owners, does not create a tenancy in common. Telluride v. Davis, 33 Colo. 355, 80 Pac. 1051.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Tenancy in Common," § 8.

A deed in trust for a woman and the heirs of her deceased husband creates an estate in common. Bazemore v. Davis, 55 Ga. 504. Similarly land conveyed to a trustee on trust for the benefit of life-tenants, "and upon the death of the survivor then in trust to be absolutely vested in such issue of their present marriage as may be living," creates a tenancy in common in the remainder-men taking the land. Fuller v. Missroon, 35 S. C. 314, 14 S. E. 714.

Deeds made under a decree void as to some heirs make the grantee a tenant in common with those whose titles were not divested. Downing v. Ford, 9 Dana (Ky.) 391.

Where a deed is not sufficient to convey the interests of one of the grantors, he becomes a tenant in common with the vendee therein. Cloud v. Webb, 14 N. C. 317.

Conveyance of part of a tract of land less than the whole thereof without designating its locality creates a tenancy in common between the grantor and the grantee (Gordon v. San Diego, 101 Cal. 522, 36 Pac. 18, 40 Am. St. Rep. 73 [affirming (1893) 32 Pac. 885]; Lawrence v. Ballou, 37 Cal. 518; Schenk v. Evoy, 24 Cal. 104; Fisher v. Wailehua, 16 Hawaii 154; Gill v. Grand Tower Min., etc., Co., 92 Ill. 249; Nowlen v. Hall, 128 Mich. 274, 87 N. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 6 Mont. 351, 12 Pac. 769).

but the concurrent rights in the same property at the same time, and the tenancy

A sale of standing timber on designated land, to be cut and removed at a specified rate, vests the exclusive title to the timber in the purchasers, and leaves the exclusive title to the land in the sellers, and does not make the purchasers and sellers tenants in common in either the land or the timber. Dexter v. Lathrop, 136 Pa. St. 565, 20 Atl. 545 [distinguishing Wheeler v. Carpenter, 107 Pa. St. 271].

A purchase of encumbered property may make the purchaser a tenant in common with others owning an interest therein. Conn v. Conn, 58 Iowa 747, 13 N. W. 51; Root v. Stow, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 5; Herbert v. Odlin, 40 N. H. 267; Stoddard v. Weston, 3 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 13, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 34.

A purchaser of the share of a tenant in common becomes a tenant in common with the remaining owner or owners. Thus where land owned by an adult and infants was sold, and the purchaser conveyed to a third person the timber thereon, the third person was a tenant in common with those who succeeded to the infants' right to avoid their conveyance, and he could go on the premises and appropriate a part at least of the timber. Hatton v. Bodan Lumber Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1909) 123 S. W. 163. But where one in adverse possession purchases the undivided interest of one of several co-claimants, merely to protect himself against litigation, as is known to the other claimants, he does not hold as tenant in common with such claimants (Cooper v. Great Falls Cotton Mills Co., 94 Tenn. 588, 30 S. W. 353), and the conveyances by a tenant in common of a portion of the common estate by metes and bounds cannot in any event operate, contrary to the expressed declarations and intentions of the parties, to convey an estate in common, instead of an estate in severalty; and a creditor of the grantee who levies his execution upon an undivided share of the whole common estate acquires no title as tenant in common by virtue of such levy (Soutter v. Porter, 27 Me. 405). Similarly where some of the heirs of the deceased owner conveyed their interest to a grantee, the latter became a tenant in common with the other heirs, and a subsequent conveyance by the grantee to a third person of a specified number of acres of the land was effective as against the other heirs or their grantee as a conveyance of the grantee's interest therein only. Hawkins v. Hobson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1909) 123 S. W. 183.

Cotenant's deed of whole property.— If one cotenant sells and conveys the entire property to a stranger without the knowledge or consent of his cotenant the purchaser does not thereby become a cotenant with the remaining owner. Boggess v. Meredith, 16 W. Va. 1. The purchaser's title is a nullity and the sale is void. Starnes v. Quin, 6 Ga. 84. Thus a deed from one of several cotenants to a person in exclusive possession, conveying all the property, does not make the grantee a cotenant with the other holders of a legal title so as to render his possession not adverse. Frick v. Sinon, 75 Cal. 337, 17 Pac. 439, 7 Am. St. Rep. 177; King v. Carmichael, 136 Ind. 20, 35 N. E. 509, 43 Am. St. Rep. 303. It is held, however, that one who assumes to purchase from one of two tenants in common the entire interest of both, the other not sanctioning the sale, becomes himself a tenant in common with the other to the extent that the latter may hold him liable if he converts the whole to his exclusive use (Sims v. Dame, 113 Ind. 127, 15 N. E. 217), and a father, to whom after he has conveyed lands in common to his children, one of them reconveys his interest, although by a deed purporting to convey the entire tract, is held to thereby become a tenant in common with his other children (Stevens v. Wait, 112 Ill. 544).

Conveyance with reservation by one cotenant.— Where a tenant in common conveyed his interest by a deed providing that the land should be used only as a park, and reserving a right to work a mine thereon, and the other cotenant conveyed to the same grantee without reservation, the grantor who made the reservation had the sole and exclusive right to work the mine, and did not hold the right in common with the other cotenant. common continues,[50] a mere agreement to sever without actual severance being insufficient.[51] Nor can a tenancy in common be severed by words in a deed, uncertain and ambiguous.[52] Ordinarily one tenant in common cannot himself take his own share without the consent of his cotenant and thus sever the tenancy in common;[53] but when the common property is personalty divisible by weight, measure, or number into portions identical in quality and value one tenant in common may take his own proportion and thus make a valid partition.[54] The tenants in common may transfer their respective interests to other persons at different periods without a destruction of the tenancy in common, unless the unity of possession be destroyed by the act of the parties,[55] and where two persons are owners of a chattel indivisible in its nature, a sale by one of them of his share does not sever the tenancy;[56] nor does the fact that the subject of a tenancy, which has descended to the cotenants as tenants in common, is handed over to them in different parcels or by different instruments destroy the tenancy in common.[57] The fact that one tenant in common furnishes no money to aid in defending the title in a suit brought against his cotenant in possession does not amount to an abandonment of the former's title,[58] and mere lapse of time does not dissolve a cotenancy.[59] Where a partial division is rightfully made each tenant in common holds his own assigned portion in severalty and remains a tenant in common of the undivided residue.[60] not stand in a strictly fiduciary relation toward each other,[61] and that where tenants in common are not partners and there is no relation of mutual trust and confidence between them, such as requires a disclosure from one to the other of matters within his knowledge that may affect the price or value of the respective shares they may deal with each other like other owners of separate property,[62] their relation is to an extent quasi-fiduciary,[63] and one cotenant guilty of fraud may not avail himself of the advantage thereof, to the disadvantage of his cotenant.[64] Tenants in common by descent occupy a confidential relation toward each other by operation of law, as to the joint property, and the same reciprocal duties are imposed as if a joint trust were created by contract between them or by the act of a third person, and their mutual duties and obligations to sustain and protect the common interest will be vindicated and enforced in a court of equity as a trust; and they and those claiming under them, with notice, cannot assume a hostile attitude toward each other in reference to the common property.[65] Even where the cotenants acquired their interests by a joint con-

Tenants in common of a vessel who are not jointly in the employment of purchasing or building ships for sale do not stand in such relation of mutual trust and confidence toward each other in respect to the sale of such vessel that each is bound in his dealings with the other to communicate all the information of facts within his knowledge which may affect the price or value. A different rule may prevail in respect to any contract for the use or employment of the common property, in which relation they may be deemed to place confidence mutually in each other. In dealing with each other in matters of purchase and sale, each may act upon the knowledge that he has without communicating it; but there must be no studied efforts to prevent the other from coming to the truth, nor any false suggestions or representation. Matthews v. Bliss, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 48.

A tenant in common is not trustee for his cotenant; he need not keep possession for him, nor protect the common property excepting while he is in possession thereof, and then he is only liable for profits derived from his cotenant's share thereof; when he parts with the possession of the common property he parts with its liabilities. Saunders v. Gatlin, 21 N. C. 86.

62. Matthews v. Bliss, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 48, holding also that in a suit between cotenants for the recovery of damages for misrepresentation of the value of the plaintiff's share in a vessel, evidence tending to prove that the full value of said share had been paid by defendant to plaintiff was admissible to disprove fraud and was proper for the consideration of the jury, although the price for which the vessel was sold by defendant was strong, although not conclusive evidence of its value.

Where a tenant in common buys or sells the common property or anything appurtenant or necessary thereto, the cost or proceeds of which are properly chargeable to the common property, or are properly to be credited thereto, and the purchase or sales price by the bargaining cotenant is not fairly disclosed to his cotenants, or is concealed from them, the presumptions of law are against the tenant in common so failing to make disclosure or concealing, as the case may be. Purchase and sale.— A part-owner of realty negotiating a sale thereof, for himself and as agent of his cotenant therein, and not disclosing the true purchase-price to said cotenant is liable to account to said cotenant for any amount out of which he may have thus been defrauded. veyance, both going into possession, the relation between them may be one of equal trust and confidence;[66] and so, although they come to their titles by different grants they may, by a course of behavior, create the same confidential relationship on the principle that particular persons in contracts shall not only transact bona fide between themselves, but shall not transact mala fide in respect to other persons, who stand in such a relation to either as to be affected by the contract or the consequences of it.[67] It has been held that the defrauding tenant in common cannot rely upon mere lapse of time to defeat his cotenants' rights.[68]

B. Use and Enjoyment of Premises — 1. Right of Entry. Each tenant in common has the right of entry, and of ingress and egress,[69] which right is several as well as common, and therefore may be conferred by one cotenant without the consent of the others,[70] and for which under proper circumstances a writ of entry may be maintained by one tenant in common against the other.[71] The writ

The principle is based upon a community of interest in a common title, which creates such a relation of trust and confidence between the parties that it would be inequitable to permit one of them to do anything to the prejudice of the other, in reference to the property so situated (Hoyt v. Lightbody, 98 Minn. 189, 108 N. Right of entry to make crops.—Where the owner of land has contracted with another for the raising of crops in such a manner that they become tenants in common therein, there is a qualified interest in the land permitting ingress and egress for the proper enforcement of the rights of said cotenants in the premises. Water rights.—A tenant in common has no right, by means of a dam erected on other lands of which he is sole seized, to flow the land owned in common without the consent

property, even though such entry be with the purpose of doing an act that may be tortious;[77] and neither an action at law nor in equity can ordinarily be maintained between cotenants for the exclusive possession of the common property or for the sole enjoyment of the profits thereof, even though the one in possession refuses to deliver sole possession to his cotenant, or defendant forcibly took it from plaintiff's possession; if a tenant in common desires to have sole and exclusive possession of his interest in the common property he can only seek his remedy in partition.[78] If a tenant in common recovers or holds sole possession because of some necessary and proper expenditure for the common benefit he may be entitled to sole possession until after contribution,[79] and it is competent for tenants in common to agree among themselves that one of them shall have sole or exclusive possession of the common property, and such an agreement is valid and enforceable.[80] There is no liability on the part of a cotenant to his fellows of his cotenants and to their injury; nor can he, by grant of the land of which he is so sole seized, convey such right of flowage to his grantee. Hutchinson v. Chase, 39 Me. 508, 63 Am. strong is the presumption that ordinarily if a tenant in common is in possession in a dual character, his right to possession will be attributed to the cotenancy in preference to his other capacity.[90] Thus property having descended to heirs, it is presumed that the possession and management thereof by one is for the benefit of all; and such possession will not be deemed to be adverse to, but in consonance with the rights of, the other heirs and will inure to their benefit,[91] and so as to distributees; [92] and the entry of one cotenant claiming by virtue of a common estate is sufficient to give his cotenants seizin according to their respective titles, unless there is a visible adverse seizin of some part of the land that has ripened into a title.[93] The rule has no application where persons are apparently but not actually tenants in common.[94]

3. Ouster and Adverse Possession — a. Rule Stated. Tenants in common may oust each other of the possession of land, and statutes of limitations will run against the claims of and under the ousted cotenants from the time of such ouster,[95] and acts of disseizin by one tenant in common of his cotenants, with notice thereof to the disseizees, evidence an adverse holding and the statute of

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Tenancy in Common," § 30 et seq.

The North Carolina rule is that a presumption of adverse holding arises after twenty years' continuous sole possession. The seven years' limitations prescribed in the North Carolina code, Civ. Proc. § 141, as to acts of adverse possession under color of title, is not applicable to the possession and claim of adverse holding between cotenants. Jeter v. Davis, 109 N. C. 458, 13 S. E. 908; Hampton v. Wheeler, 99 N. C. 222, 6 S. E. 236; Breden v. McLaurin, 98 N. C. 307, 4 S. E. 136; Page v. Branch, 97 N. C. 97, 1 S. E. 625, 2 Am. St. Rep. 281; Hicks v. Bullock, 96 N. C. 164, 1 S. E. 629.

Analogy to landlord and tenant.— There is a strong analogy between the relations be-limitations begins to run at the time of such disseizin and notice,[96] unless there be statutes to the contrary.[97] But a tenant in common will not be presumed to tween landlords and tenants and those of tenants in common, and therefore if one in possession ousts the other or denies his tenure such act makes the possession adverse. Grant v. Paddock, 30 Oreg. 312, 47 Pac. 712; Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 43, 7 L. ed. 596.

Estoppel from claiming benefit as cotenant.—Where one of two tenants in common claims exclusive right to a moiety of the land and his possession thereof continues until after the statute of limitations applies, he is estopped from claiming his interest as tenant in common in the residue. Gregg v. Blackmore, 10 Watts (Pa.) 192.

Common title including uninclosed lands.—Where title by adverse possession is established by one tenant in common against his cotenant the deed, will, patent, or other instrument under which both claimed originally operates in favor of the claimant by adverse possession as color of title, so as to extend his possession to uninclosed lands. Broom v. Pearson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 81 S. W. 753; Russell v. Tennant, 63 W. Va. 623, 60 S. E. 609, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1024.

Purchase at tax-sale.—Limitations will not run in favor of a purchasing cotenant of a tax title until after a refusal of contribution by his cotenant. Phillips v. Wilmarth, 98 Iowa 32, 66 N. W. 1053. And a cotenant purchasing his cotenant's interest at an irregular and invalid tax-sale, which vests him with a lien only upon the property, receiving sufficient rent to reimburse himself before the expiration of a time in which his lien might ripen into a title, must apply the rents for such reimbursement and may not permit the statute of limitations to run in his favor. Davis v. Chapman, 24 Fed. 674.

Attornment of tenants of land to one coöwner will not start the statute of limitations running in his favor as against the other coöwner thereof unless such attornment is made with the latter's consent. Scofield v. Douglass, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 817.

The burden of proof is on him claiming title to the common property, because the other cotenants have the benefit of the presumptions in their favor. Parker v. Brast, 45 W. Va. 399, 32 S. E. 269. The one having burden of proof must show an actual ouster or a presumption thereof or a non-recognition of the rights of the other cotenants by the one in possession. b. What Constitutes Ouster or Adverse Possession — (i) In General. Ouster is not necessarily a physical eviction. It may exist if there be possession of or under the adverse claimant, attended with such circumstances as to evidence a claim of exclusive right and title, and a denial of the rights of the other cotenants, and if such possession continues uninterruptedly for the statutory period after the time that knowledge thereof is, in law, chargeable to those out of possession, it may become indefeasible.[99] But before a tenant in common can rely on an

Demand and refusal.—A demand for possession by one of the cotenants by virtue of the cotenancy, and a refusal of such demand, is an ouster, but otherwise if the demand is based upon an independent claim of title. Meredith v. Andres, 29 N. C. 5, 45 Am. Dec. 504. See also Wooster v. Hunts Lyman Iron Co., 38 Conn. 256.

Facts held insufficient to prove ouster or adverse holding as between cotenants.—A claim not including the entire common property, but only an undivided portion thereof (Chapman v. Kullman, 191 Mo. 237, 89 S. W. 924; Edwards v. Bishop, 4 N. Y. 61; Earnshaw v. Myers, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 901; Clymer v. Dawkins, 3 How. (U. S.) 674, 11 L. ed. 778); in the absence of notice to his cotenants of adverse holding or of a demand for admission and a refusal thereof, the possession, control, payment of taxes or expenses, or the improvement of the common property by one cotenant therein (Miller v. Myers, 46 Cal. 535; Wooster v. Hunts Lyman Iron Co., 38 Conn. 256; Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492; Donason v. Barbero, 230 Ill. 138, 82 N. repudiating the relation of cotenancy,[1] for an ouster of one tenant in common by his cotenant is not to be presumed in the absence of some open notorious act of ouster and adverse possession, and possession by a tenant in common is not adverse as to his cotenants until they are so informed, either by express notice or by acts of such an open, notorious, and hostile character as to be notice in themselves, or sufficient to put the cotenants upon inquiry which if diligently pursued will lead to actual knowledge,[2] the acts and declarations of a tenant in common, said deed (Thornton v. York Bank, 45 Me. 158; Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 525, 94 Am. Dec. 350); a mere claim under a deed (Edwards v. Bishop, 4 N. Y. 61); the claim made to the son of a living tenant in common that claimant had more right in the premises than he, the son, had (Campau v. Campau, 45 Mich. 367, 8 N. W. 85); the distribution of lands by a probate court only authorized by statute to distribute undivided portions thereof (Mitchell v. Hazen, 4 Conn. 495, 10 Am. Dec. 169); a mere demand and refusal to be let into possession (Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484, 87 Am. Dec. 135); direct or indirect purchase of an outstanding title (English v. Powell, 119 Ind. 93, 21 N. E. 458); and admission of possession of demanded premises and the remark that "it is hard to pay twice" (Colburn v. Mason, 25 Me. 434, 43 Am. Dec. 292).

Facts held sufficient to prove ouster or adverse holding as between cotenants.—Acts or matters in pais (Russell v. Tennant, 63 W. Va. 623, 60 S. E. 609, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1024); adverse possession for a long time under a purchase and claim in entirety (Illg v. Garcia, 92 Tex. 251, 47 S. W. 717; Clymer v. Dawkins, 3 How. (U. S.) 674, 11 L. ed. 778); acceptance of a deed of the whole property, duly acknowledged and recorded, from one who has no title, and claiming and exercising the rights of sole ownership under a denial of any other person's right in the premises (Thornton v. York Bank, 45 Me. 158; Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 525, 94 Am. Dec. 350); refusal to give up a moiety, and declaration that the one in possession would first litigate his rights (Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 360); purchase of outstanding title with claim of sole ownership thereunder (Clark v. Crego, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 599 [affirmed in 51 N. Y. 646]); demand to be let into possession and refusal, together with sale of the entire property by one cotenant therein and delivery of possession to the grantee thereunder (Wright v. Saddler, 20 N. Y. 320); and assumption of ownership and sale of the common property (Dyckman v. Valiente, 42 N. Y. 549).

acts and declarations would have been construed had there been no privity.[3] Thus acts of a tenant in common or those claiming under him, in relation to the common property, consistent with his interests by virtue of the cotenancy therein, cannot give rise to the presumption of an adverse possession as against his cotenants,[4] and the entry and possession of one cotenant being ordinarily deemed

The erection of a wharf by one cotenant on a portion of a water lot owned in common, and his sole occupancy of the wharf, amounts to an ouster, because the structure is in its nature permanent and is suited for only one purpose and is essentially a unit and incapable of separate occupancy. An actual verbal claim of adverse ownership to a cotenant personally is not necessary to prove an ouster by one in possession doing overt acts indicating a hostile claim. Casey v. Casey, 107 Iowa 192, 77 N. W. 844, 70 Am. St. Rep. 190; Dunlap v. Griffith, 146 Mo. 283, 47 S. W. 917.

Taking with knowledge of cotenancy.— Where a grantee takes title with knowledge, and in recognition of the existing cotenancy, even on condition that the part of the land that he has taken shall be subsequently partitioned to him, such taking will merely have the same effect as if said possession had been so taken by the vendor himself. Chiles v. Jones, 7 Dana (Ky.) 528.

A purchaser of the interest of an heir in a tract of land of the deceased ancestor becomes a tenant in common with the other heirs, and after his purchase his possession is not adverse to them, unless notice is clearly brought to them that he claims the entire tract as exclusive owner, and unless his previous actual possession and cultivation of a small part of the tract was such as to support the statute of limitations as to the entire tract. Taking and recording a deed.— If the cotenant in possession takes and records a deed to the whole property from a stranger, such act will not constitute an ouster unless accompanied by a hostile claim of which the cotenants out of possession have knowledge, and by such acts of possession as are inconsistent with the continuance of a cotenancy. Winterburn v. Chambers, 91 Cal. 170, 27 Pac. 658; Towery v. Henderson, 60 Tex. 291, 297 [citing 3 Washburn Real Prop. (14th ed.) p. 142]; Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 525, 94 Am. Dec. 350. But possession of one tenant in common, asserting an exclusive right to the land under a deed conveying the same to him by specific description, is adverse to his cotenants having notice of the deed by registration. Morgan v. White, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 318, 110 S. W. 491. And possession of a specific part of a tract of land under a deed to such specific portion is notice to the occupant's cotenants of the larger tract that he is holding such specific portion adversely to them. Toole v. Renfro, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 114 S. W. 450.

Operation of a mine without the consent of the operator's cotenants therein, and appropriation of the proceeds without an accounting thereof, will constitute ouster and adverse possession. Harrigan v. Lynch, 21 Mont. 36, 52 Pac. 642.

If there are any facts showing the recognition of a cotenancy, by the tenant in common claiming adversely, such recognition should be construed most strongly in favor of the other cotenant. Van Ormer v. Harley, 102 Iowa 150, 71 N. W. 241; Mead v. Mead, 82 S. W. 598, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 777; Fuller v. Swensberg, 106 Mich. 305, 64 N. W. 463, 58 Am. But where adverse possession has ripened into title, recognition of title in the former owner will not operate to revest title in him. Cole v. Lester, 48 Misc. (N. Y.) 13, 96 N. Y. Suppl. 67. Thus the title acquired by adverse possession is not affected by a subsequent offer by the adverse possessor to buy the outstanding title. Frick v. Simon, 75 Cal. 337, 17 Pac. 439, 7 Am. St. Rep. 177.

But a good title by adverse possession may be acquired by the grantee of one cotenant believing that he has acquired the sole ownership of the property by virtue of said grant, and so occupying said property to the knowl-

damage arising from an unauthorized use of the property may be considered of but very slight or no consequence, so that it is equivocal whether or not there was an intention to commit an ouster,[14] such acts will not be regarded as acts of disseizin. Possession under adverse claim may be proven by parol, although, under statutes requiring certain formalities in the conveyance of land, such evidence may not be sufficient to prove title.[15]

(II) Unauthorized Conveyance of More Than Cotenant's Share as Ouster. An unauthorized or unratified sale or conveyance of the whole property or any specific part thereof by metes and bounds by one tenant in common, followed by entry by the grantee thereunder and his exclusive possession thereof, under adverse claim of title to the whole or some specific part by metes and bounds, amounts to an ouster of the other cotenants;[16] and such a conveyance

Even though the grantee has knowledge of the cotenancy, if he takes a conveyance to the entire common property he is not prima facie assumed as regarding himself as a cotenant where the circumstances are such as to bring home to the cotenants of the grantor the adverse character of the grantee's holding, if said cotenants paid proper attention to their rights. Kalamakee v. Wharton, 16 Hawaii 228.

The contents of the deed is not the only matter to be taken into account in determining the character of the occupancy; whether it is adverse or not depends upon the circumstances of the case affected by the relationship of cotenancy. Sparks v. Bodensick, 72 Kan. 5, 82 Pac. 463.

Possession by the vendee may be tacked to that of the vendor to whom he surrendered the property through inability to pay therefor. Talbott v. Woodford, 48 W. Va. 449, 37 S. E. 580.

A mortgage executed by a tenant in common is not equivalent to a disseizin of the others, unless the grantee enters claiming the entire title (Leach v. Hall, 95 Iowa 611, 64 N. W. 790. See also Harriss v. Howard, 126 Ga. 325, 55 S. E. 59), and a tenant in common having mortgaged his interest, and being permitted by the grantee to remain in possession, has a right to occupy in common with his cotenants or in severalty, and his occupation in severalty will not amount to a disseizin of the grantee (Colton v. Smith, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 311, 22 Am. Dec. 375; Scottish-American Mortg. Co. v. Bunckley, 88 Miss. 641, 41 So. 502, 117 Am. St. Rep. 763), and, although a tenant in common mortgaged the whole estate, there was no constructive ouster where he remained in actual possession and the jury found, on the evidence, that there was no intention on his part to oust his cotenants (Moore v. Collishaw, 10 Pa. St. 224). Even where a tenant in common mortgages the whole property and the mortgagees enter under a foreclosure, this may not amount to an ouster of and an adverse possession against the cotenant. Leach v. Beattie, 33 Vt. 195. See also Hodgdon v. Shannon, 44 N. H. 572.

An analogous principle obtains as to personalty only, however, if such transfer amounts to a denial of the non-vending cotenant's rights in the premises or a destruction of the subject-matter, or is adverse to such cotenant. The mere sale of a chattel by one tenant in common is held not to amount to a conversion unless it operates altogether to deprive his companion of his property therein. Mayhew v. Herrick, 7 C. Reconveyance to grantor.— A reconveyance by one of a number of tenants in common by a deed purporting to convey the entire tract to one who had theretofore conveyed said tract to said tenants in common is not a disseizin. entire tract from one of the tenants in common enters into possession with notice of the cotenancy he must, in order to acquire the entire title by operation of the statute of limitations, prove an actual ouster the same as would have been required of his grantor had he remained in possession.[18] A quitclaim deed of the entire tract is not a disseizin;[19] nor is the making of a deed for the whole property by a cotenant to a stranger unless actual adverse possession is taken thereunder,[20] and unless followed by actual entry and adverse possession, an actual ouster is not constituted as to the devisor's or grantor's cotenants by a conveyance by metes and bounds.[21] Conveyance of the interest of one cotenant is not an ouster of the other cotenants, even though the grantee so taking said interest did not know of the other interests,[22] and where one takes a deed of the interest of one tenant in common to the land, the other tenants in common therein are thereby disentitled from maintaining an action for the recovery of the possession of the land until said grantee shall have thereafter ousted them.[23]

(III) OUSTER AS EVIDENCED BY PLEADINGS. Pleadings may evidence an ouster or adverse holding. Thus a pleaded denial of plaintiff's interest, coupled with an allegation of title and possession in defendant cotenant, is sufficient proof of ouster,[24] and under statutes prescribing that general issue pleas or other pleas to the merits shall be taken as admission of defendant being in possession of the premises sued for, for the purposes of the action, it is held that the pleas of not guilty and statute of limitations are equivalent to an ouster,[25] and refusal to recognize any title in plaintiff and a denial of such title by defendant in his answer may be sufficient ouster to maintain suit even under a statute requiring a proof of actual ouster.[26] An ouster, merely evidenced by the pleadings, relates to the time of the filing of the pleadings and not to the time alleged in such pleadings to be the time when adverse possession began,[27] and if there be no proof of ouster except as appears in the pleadings, plaintiff can recover damages only from the date of the institution of the suit.[28] But on the other hand it is held that where a statute requires proof of an actual ouster, proof of demandant's title as tenant in common will not entitle him to a judgment where defendant has pleaded nul disseizin.[29] It has been held that if cotenancy is denied there is no necessity for any stronger proof of ouster than against any other party.[30]

from pleadings in a case in which controverted questions of title could not be fully determined.[34]

c. Tacking Possession. Possession by those claiming under a disseizing tenant in common may be tacked to the disseizor's possession so as to perfect title as against the cotenants disseized,[35] and if the adverse possession has ripened into a title, recognition of the former owner will not operate to revest title in him.[36] But where a person, having acquired a specific interest in a particular tract of land, has taken possession of the whole, with a view of acquiring the additional interest, merely by holding possession of it under a claim of ownership, he does not convey such possession to a vendee, to whom he sells the interest described, and such vendee cannot, for the purpose of aiding himself in the acquisition by prescription of property not included in his title, add his vendor's possession to his own, there being no privity between him and his vendor in that respect.[37] Where there are several tenants in common of land of whom all but one are in possession and before the statutory period has run the latter acquires another undivided share from or under one of those in possession, the statute runs as to both shares from the time the last one was acquired.[38]

d. Waiver or Abandonment by Disseizor; Survivorship. After the commencement of the running of the statute, or after the expiration of the term of the respective statutes of limitations and the vesting of rights thereunder, such benefits cannot be lost except by some act of abandonment.[39] Where, however, a tenant in common in possession recognizes his cotenants' right in the land, a presumption arises that he then ceases to be an adverse holder, no matter how hostile his possession may previously have been, and the recognition has the effect to put all the tenants in common in seizin and possession of their respective shares,[40] and a presumption of an adverse holding may be rebutted by evidence

Purchase of title.—Where a tenant in possession of property claiming adversely to the world buys title thereto to quiet his own title, such purchase does not constitute a waiver or abandonment of his disseizin or of that of those claiming with him as cotenants, provided such purchase does not carry with it a recognition of the disseized cotenancy. Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586, 49 Am. Rep. 100; Barr v. Chapman, 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 862, 30 Cinc. L. Bul. 264. And see infra, III, D, 2. The presumption arising from the acceptance of a conveyance of the original title to that portion may be overcome by evidence that the possession he then had continued under the claim of an exclusive right, and with the intention to exclude other owners of the original title, although cotenants, from any right or interest therein. Cook v. Clinton, 64 Mich. 309, 31 N. W. 317, 8 Am. St. Rep. 816. The purchase of the undivided interest of one of several co-claimants by one in adverse possession, merely to protect himself against litigation, as is known to the other claimants, is not a recognition of the cotenancy, nor does the purchaser hold as tenant in common with such claimants. of a subsequent acknowledgment of a cotenancy in the premises.[41] But after abandonment of the cotenancy, or perfection of title by adverse possession, such evidence may not be sufficient to rebut such presumption arising from a long-continued, notorious, and peaceable occupation under a new purchase.[42] If any disseizors less than the whole number in possession abandon the land, the abandonment inures to the benefit of those remaining in possession and not of the disseizees,[43] and a sole survivor of joint disseizors in common entitled to the disseized land becomes solely entitled thereto.[44]

e. Ouster and Adverse Possession as Question of Law or Fact. The question as to whether or not undisputed acts of tenants in common amounted to a disseizin of their cotenants so as to start the operation of the statute of limitations is held to be a question for the court and not for the jury,[45] and the rule is the same as to a question involving adverse possession where the elements going to make up adverse possession are not in evidence.[46] Where the facts in relation to an ouster are conflicting and the finding of some of them would justify the presumption of an ouster they are properly submitted to a jury,[47] so as to the lapse of time, or what constitutes reasonable time.[48] Whether a lease, proven to be executed with the knowledge of a tenant in common of the demised property, was executed adversely or merely for the purposes of convenience of the parties is properly submitted to a jury, and if the evidence on that point is conflicting the finding of the jury thereon is conclusive.[49]

f. Action to Determine Validity of Adverse Claim. A tenant in common is allowed, under statute, in some jurisdictions, to maintain an action for the determination of the validity of an adverse claim of title by a cotenant.[50]

D. Purchase or Discharge of Outstanding Interest, Title, or Claim — 1. Outstanding Interests, Title, or Claims in General — a. Right to Purchase or Discharge and Effect Thereof. A tenant in common has the right to relieve the common property from a lien or encumbrance,[51] and may make a valid tender of payment of the whole mortgage debt on behalf of his cotenants,[52] and acts of this nature done in relation to the general interest in the whole common property are presumed to have been done bona fide for the common benefit,[53] and generally a purchase by a cotenant of an outstanding title being presumed to be for the benefit of all the parties in interest is not void, passing title subject to the rights of other cotenants.[54] But one tenant in common will not be permitted to inequitably acquire title to the common property, solely for his own benefit or to the exclusion of his cotenants,[55] the general rule being that the purchase or extinguishment of an outstanding title to, encumbrance upon, or claim against the common property by one tenant in common inures to the benefit of all the coöwners,[56] who may

Redemption.— The purchase of mortgaged premises sold under the mortgage for the purpose of effecting a redemption after an understanding between the cotenants that one of them should make such redemption and take to himself an assignment of the purchaser's certificate of sale is treated in equity as a redemption, and as not divesting the non-purchasing cotenant of his estate. 58. Massachusetts.— Matthews v. Bliss, 22 Pick. 48.

Michigan.— Ream v. Robinson, 128 Mich. 92, 87 N. W. 115, where one purchased at a mortgage foreclosure sale, knowing that one of the tenants in common of land who had paid more than her share of the mortgage debt regarded him as a cotenant, and thereupon claimed to have quitclaimed the land to his son prior to the foreclosure proceedings, and the facts were held to authorize a decree setting aside the quitclaim deed and declaring the parties tenants in common.

New York.— Graham v. Luddington, 19 Hun 246, a judgment and deed to lands owned in common, procured by fraud, held to be void as against cotenants.

Oregon.— Dray v. Dray, 21 Oreg. 59, 27 Pac. 223, holding that inducing a cotenant to deed his interest in the common property, sold at a judicial sale, under promise of redemption thereof; permitting time for redemption to expire and taking a deed thereto from the execution purchaser, makes such deed constructively fraudulent and such title inures obtains title to the common property by a fraudulent agreement with one of the cotenants therein, such third person is liable to the other cotenant for the value of his share therein; or such title may be declared void.[59] A cotenant who purchases a conflicting title, or his successor, having notice of all the facts, will not be permitted in the contest over the title, in which the other coöowners claim that the purchase of the conflicting title inures to their benefit, to question the common title of the cotenants where such claim would be inequitable,[60] nor can he, in an action against him by his cotenants to be let into possession, justify an ouster of plaintiff by setting up an outstanding title purchased by him while in possession under the common title, although such title, so purchased, be the true one.[61] Nor can he set up a title from the owners of the land as against a possessory title under which he has exclusive possession and his cotenants are claiming their proportional shares; [62] and he cannot set up a sheriff's deed on the foreclosure of an outstanding mortgage as against his cotenant.[63] Where a coparcener claiming under an ancestor who had a defective title falsely states the consideration in his deed for the purchase of an outstanding title and conceals the fact of purchase from his coparceners, he is not allowed to rely upon lapse of time to defeat their right to the benefit of such purchase.[64] There can be no foreclosure of an outstanding encumbrance on the common property between cotenants, unless plaintiff can show that defendants are liable for the entire incumbrance and that he is not liable for any part of such claim.[65]

b. Extent and Qualification of Rule. The rule above stated [66] is qualified in some cases which hold that the purchase of an outstanding interest must be interpreted according to surrounding circumstances,[67] and that the rule obtains only to the benefit of such tenants in common. Pennsylvania.— McGranighan v. McGranighan, 185 Pa. St. 340, 39 Atl. 951 (the purchase of the common property at judicial sale after misleading cotenants therein, poor and inexperienced in business, to believe that only those having money could save their shares); Maul v. Rider, 51 Pa. St. 377 (holding that if several persons agree to the purchase of property in common and one of them fraudulently has said property conveyed to himself, he holds the title thereto as trustee for his cotenants whether or not he undertook to act as their agent).

Texas.— See Clevenger v. Mayfield, (Civ. App. 1905) 86 S. W. 1062.

The relocation of land by a coöwner taking unfair advantage of information imparted to him by a cotenant therein was held to be a mere subterfuge to defraud the cotenants therein. Yarwood v. Johnson, 29 Wash. 643, 70 Pac. 123.

But the mere claim of fraud, without the institution of some proceeding for the purpose of avoiding it, is not sufficient to give the claimant a legal interest in the common property. Staples v. Bradley, 23 Conn. 167, 60 Am. Dec. 630.

59. Burrell v. Bull, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 15; Logan v. Oklahoma Mill Co., 14 Okla. 402, 79 Pac. 103.

A secret agreement between a cotenant and a purchaser of property to be sold at a certain price, whereby the cotenant actually making the sale is to own a share of the common property upon payment of a proportionate share of the purchase-price, is voidable at the complaint of the other cotenant. Small v. Robinson, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 418.

Rent may be recovered from the time of the delivery of deeds of the interest of one tenant in common, if said deeds were obtained by fraud. Zapp v. Miller, 109 N. Y. 51, 15 N. E. 889.

But mere neglect on the part of such purchaser to inquire into the state of the title may not be sufficient to create fraud. Ft. Scott v. Schulenberg, 22 Kan. 648.

Use of relationship.—Whether or not the cotenant used the cotenancy, or any title, right, or claim in relation thereto, to acquire where the relation of tenancy in common exists in strictness, and where the relation is such as to require mutual trust and confidence,[68] some cases going to the extent of holding that the mutual obligation arises only where the parties have acquired the property by the same instrument or act of the parties or of law,[69] and that persons acquiring unconnected interests in the same subject by distinct purchases, although it may be under the same title, are probably not bound to any greater protection of one another's interests than would be required between strangers.[70] But, by the weight of authority, where a relationship of confidence is shown to exist, it is not necessary that the several titles shall be held by the same conveyance or by the same act of law.[71] A purchase by one tenant in common the outstanding title should be considered. Myers v. Reed, 17 Fed. 401, 9 Sawy. 132.

Indebtedness of purchaser to cotenant.— The mere fact that the purchaser is indebted to his cotenant does not of itself give the creditor tenant an interest in such purchase. King v. Wilson, 54 N. J. Eq. 247, 34 Atl. 394; Lewis v. Rohinson, 10 Watts (Pa.) 354.

Acquiring different estates.—Where one tenant in common, under a deed conveying the grantor's equitable interest, acquires the outstanding legal title, such legal title does not inure to the benefit of his said cotenant (Nalle v. Thompson, 173 Mo. 595, 73 S. W. 599; Kershaw v. Simpson, 46 Wash. 313, 89 Pac. 889), nor where the grantee of one, a stranger to the common title, who had purchased the property at a foreclosure sale, thereafter purchased the legal title of one of the cotenants at a time when the foreclosure was not complete, by reason of the time to redeem not having expired, so that the estate of the grantee of the purchaser at the foreclosure sale was that of a mortgagee before foreclosure, only an equitable estate or interest in which the right to hold and enforce his interest for his own benefit was fixed in the absence of redemption; and where said grantee did no act on which a merger of said equitable estate and said legal estate could be predicated (Given v. Troxel, (Ala. 1905) 39 So. 578 [distinguishing Jones v. Matkin, 118 Ala. 341, 24 So. 242]; Horton v. Maffitt, 14 Minn. 289, 100 Am. does not inure to the benefit of a cotenant whenever for any reason the tenancy has terminated,[72] and the same principle applies whenever the outstanding interest is acquired before the creation of the relationship of cotenancy,[73] or where the title claimed in common is a nullity,[74] or where the outstanding title is acquired by one whose claim to the common property is not in recognition of or subservient to the title of the other tenants in common therein;[75] and since the principle that the one in possession acts on behalf of all with whom he has a common interest in the property is based largely on the special circumstances under and intentions with which the act alleged or claimed to have been done for the benefit of all was performed, and as presumption generally enters very largely into the determination of the intention with which the act was done, it necessarily follows that if there be direct evidence, making presumption unnecessary, the question of common interest will be determined on the evidence adduced and not on the general rule based on presumption.[76] Thus the purchase of a reversion by one cotenant is not adverse to the interest of his termor cotenant;[77] nor is the purchase by one cotenant of a life-estate adverse to the interests of the cotenants in the remainder;[78] nor, the evidence not showing distinctly that the purchase was made on behalf of the cotenants, does the purchase by one of them of certain land excepted from the conveyance under which they acquired title from one who had bought in both tracts at tax-sale, create a trust.[79] The purchase of an outstanding title not applicable to such a purchase by one at a time prior to becoming a tenant in common with the others,[86] and the right does not attach where a mortgage debt is paid after its discharge; [87] nor where there is a primary duty on another to have discharged the lien and it does not appear that such payment was made because of the failure of the party primarily liable to make it; [88] nor where a claim for contribution is stale, because of laches or limitations.[89] Notice, actual or constructive, of the purchase of an outstanding title must be brought home to a cotenant before his right to contribute thereto is lost.[90] An action at law may be maintained between cotenants for the recovery of money expended by some of them for the removal of a joint lien or encumbrance, where sanctioned by statute or public policy.[91] A presumption of repudiation of a transaction in relation to, or of abandonment of, a cotenancy may arise where a cotenant has for a long time failed to do any act of ownership in relation to the common property or has failed to contribute or offer contribution toward the purchase of some outstanding interest.[92]

The grantee of a cotenant purchasing the common property at a tax-sale cannot avail himself as against the other cotenant of the benefit of a statute providing that actual occupation for a certain time after such sale shall bar all suits to recover the land for defect in the proceedings. Jonas v. Flanniken, 69 Miss. 577, 11 So. 319.

Bender v. Stewart, 75 Ind. 88.

Purchase for or through strangers.—An agreement with a stranger that a cotenant will bid in the common property for the benefit of the stranger or that a stranger will purchase it for the benefit of a cotenant therein, in whole or in part, does not vary the rule so far as the interests of the cotenants are concerned (Fields v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 110 Ky. 257, 61 S. common property for his exclusive benefit after permitting it to be sold for taxes, is fraud on the part of such purchaser.

Tax title before creation of cotenancy.— Where a presumption of death arose and some of the heirs of the supposed deceased asserted a title against their coheirs in possession and holding under a tax title obtained before the arising of said presumption, it was held that those in possession will be protected therein. Webster v. Webster, 55 Ill. 325. Where persons, claiming adversely, paid taxes they cannot seek reimbursement from their cotenants after their cotenants' right has been established in ejectment, as the payment will be presumed to have been made in the right of said adverse claimants and for their own benefit. Wistar's Appeal, 125 Pa. St. 526, 17 Atl. 460, 11 Am. St. Rep. 917.

18. Stover v. Cory, 53 Iowa 708, 6 N. W. 64. Compare Oliver v. Montgomery, 42 Iowa 36.

Such equities are inferior to that of a bona fide mortgagee after the purchase of property under a decree of partition and subsequently paid taxes constituting a lien thereon, it is held that such payment having been made by him in the character of purchaser and not of cotenant, he is not entitled to contribution.[19] The claim for contribution may be pleaded as a set-off in an action between the cotenants.[20]

3. PURCHASING COTENANT'S INTEREST. Although a tenant in common may not buy an outstanding paramount title so as to oust his cotenant, yet there is no reason why he may not buy in the independent interest of another tenant in common,[21] and a purchase by one cotenant of the interest of another does not inure to the benefit of all the remaining tenants in common.[22] The tenant of a tenant in common is not estopped from purchasing the titles of the other cotenants.[23]

E. Repairs, Improvements, and Expenses For Care and Management of Property — 1. DUTY AND RIGHT TO REPAIR. Tenants in common are not as such agents for each other, nor are they bound to protect each other's interests and to prevent them from deteriorating in value; the duty to repair is equal;[24] and where a cotenant improves the common property at his own expense, thereby putting it to its only beneficial use, he is not liable to his cotenant for trespass.[25] If there be authority, by agreement or otherwise, to improve the property at the expense of the cotenants therein, then the cotenant so improving will be entitled to contribution from his cotenants if he act prudently and in good faith; and under such circumstances the cotenant so improving will not be held responsible to the others for mere errors of judgment either as to the character of the improvement or the construction thereof.[26]

2. CONTRIBUTION FOR EXPENSES; SERVICES — a. Rule Stated. Tenants in common are not ordinarily entitled to charge each other for services rendered in the care and management of the common property, in the absence of statute or special agreement to the contrary, or of such facts as evidence a mutual under-the whole property at a tax-sale by one tenant in common. Atkinson v. Hewett, 63 Wis. 396, 23 N. W. 889.

Buying at public sale.— The doctrine that a purchase of an outstanding title by one joint tenant will be held to be for the benefit of his cotenants, and not adverse to them, has no application to a case where the tenant buys the interests of his cotenants at a public sale, and thereby obtains or attempts and claims to obtain their title. Statutory power in selectmen for the making of repairs to mills, mill-dams, or flumes owned by cotenancy when the privilege of the water is so owned, and to charge the repairs in proportion to the respective interests of the cotenants, must be strictly exercised, and does not empower the selectmen either to make such repairs or assessments other than by statute provided, or as against any one not especially in such statute designated. The care required to be exercised in relation to the common property, if movable, is analogous to that of a bailee without hire; that is, ordinary care; it is not enough to show that the one in possession used the same care as he did in regard to his separate property, as there is no evidence as to whether or not such care amounted to ordinary care. Guillot v. Dossat, 4 Mart. (La.) 203, 6 Am. Dec. 702.

A declaration to a disinterested person by the tenant in common operating the common property that he is doing so entirely at his own expense is not sufficient to prove a contract on his part not to make any demand standing that such payment shall be made.[27] But one cotenant by agreement, express or implied, with the other may become entitled to contribution for services rendered or expenditures made in the management and care of the common property,[28] and a tenant in common is held to be entitled to contribution for expenditures absolutely necessary for the benefit and preservation of the common

On an agreement between cotenants that one of them should make a sale of the common property and receive a commission, it was held that he was entitled to the commission upon his being the procuring cause of the sale. McCreery v. Green, 38 Mich. 172.

Such an agreement is usually liberally construed (Gould v. Hayne, 54 Fed. 951. See also Beezley v. Crossen, 14 Oreg. 473, 13 Pac. 306) in the light of the relationship existing between them. Thus, an agreement between tenants in common to work the land for one third of the proceeds will be construed to be an agreement of hire and not of lease. Moreland v. Strong, 115 Mich. 211, 73 N. W. 140, 69 Am. St. Rep. 553. An agreement by two tenants in common to share the expense of fencing includes expenses of a survey necessary to determine the boundary of the land. Gould v. Hayne, supra. But there is no recovery for the expense of increasing the size of a flume without a contract therefor. Middlebury Electric Co. v. Tupper, 70 Vt. 603, 41 Atl. 582.

Interest.—Where there is an agreement that from the proceeds of a sale the expenditures made by the tenants in common, respectively, on the property shall first be paid to them respectively, as debts, such expenditures will not bear interest from the time when they were made to the time of such agreement. Danforth v. Moore, 55 N. J. Eq. 127, 35 Atl. 410.

Where several persons purchase an estate to be held in common, and one pays the purchase-money, the one so paying is entitled to sustain a bill for contribution or may set up such claim in mitigation of damages. Set-off.—Where a judgment is obtained under a contract for payment for services in relation to the common land, out of the sale thereof, and there is a set-off by some of the cotenants to said claim, the judgment should provide for an allowance of such set-off. But see Stickley v. Mulrooney, 36 Colo. 242, 87 Pac. 547, holding a cotenant not entitled to contribution out of a fund in court paid on an order of court in an action for an accounting for expenditures made in relation to the common property after such payment into court.

Where costs are incurred by a tenant in common in a necessary and proper suit for the benefit of the common property or the owners thereof in common as such, he is entitled to contribution. Bowman v. Pettit, 68 Ark. 126, 56 S. W. 780; Estill v. Francis, 89 S. W. 172, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 225; Gregg v. Patterson, 9 Watts & S. (Pa.) 197; McClintock v. Fontaine, 119 Fed. 448; Gage v. Mulholland, 16 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 145. This rule has been held to apply against one who allowed his cotenant to take the hazards and labor of litigation relating to the property owned in common, and accepted the results of such litigation, even though he did not want the suit brought or prosecuted, or was inactive pending its course. Estill v. Francis, 89 S. W. 172, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 225.

Defending title.—A tenant in common in sole possession will ordinarily be allowed for necessary counsel fees paid in defending a suit to protect the property. Hitchcock v. Skinner, Hoffm. (N. And it has been held that where moneys have been expended in defending the title and improving the common property under an agreement between the cotenants to pay said expenditures, a lien attaches to the common property in favor of the one so making said expenditures. Bowman v. Pettit, 68 Ark. 126, 56 S. W. 780. But attorneys employed by part of the tenants in common of an estate, to protect the estate, cannot recover any part of the compensation from the others, although the services inure to the benefit of all. Mayfield v. McKnight, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 56 S. W. 42. A presumption of law in favor of consent may, however, arise. Barton v. Gray, 48 Mich. 164, 12 N. W. 30; Taylor v. Baldwin, 10 Barb. (N. Ky. St. (1903) § 489, allowing costs, fees, and other expenses incurred by one coparcener or joint owner does not apply to expenses incurred in defending the joint title in unsuccessful suits brought by third persons. Francis v. Million, 80 S. W. 486, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 42.

The payment of taxes as ground for contribution see supra, III, D, 2, b.

The cotenant is not entitled to contribution as a matter of right, but purely from a benefit of the common property or such as were from necessity dispensed for the common estate,[30] even though the conduct of the paying tenant may not have been strictly equitable.[31] But one cotenant in common is ordinarily not responsible to his cotenant for the cost of improvements or repairs upon the common property unless he so agreed or ratified the act of making them or unless it is shown that the improvements or repairs were absolutely necessary to the enjoyment or preservation of the property.[32] Where the expenditures do not desire of the court to do justice between all the parties. Ballou v. Ballou, 94 Va. 350, 26 S. E. 840, 64 Am. St. Rep. 733.

held that he cannot do so except on notice and an opportunity to the others to unite in making the repairs, unless they are made under such circumstances as excuse a want of notice.[34] No distinction is made in regard to the right of a cotenant to recover contribution for sums expended in making necessary repairs upon the common property, between one who at the time of making such expenditures had legal title, and one who at that time was in fact the owner of an undivided portion of the premises, having completed a contract of purchase, agreed upon all the terms, and gone into possession, but who had not then received his deed.[35] A tenant in common cannot enforce contribution if he asserts ownership of the entire title as against his cotenants.[36]

A deed by several tenants in common in litigation to one of their number in trust, to take such steps as he shall judge to be necessary and proper to discharge all encumbrances upon or claim against the said land, does not provide, either in express terms or by necessary implication, for the payment of the fees of an attorney for services rendered in the litigation. Gordon v. McCulloh, 66 Md. 245, 7 Atl. 457. But where expenses were incurred in a necessary action of ejectment it was held that the tenant in common so expending moneys and thus gaining possession would not be compelled to let his tenants in common into possession of their undivided moiety until they paid or tendered him one half of the expense of said action, and he might retain possession of the whole. a tenant in common, being entitled to contribution for services, repairs, and improvements, is not entitled to have his cotenants contribute therefor more than their proportionate share, according to the respective interests of the parties; in the case of improvements to the common property the basis of calculation for contribution is the value added to the land by the improvements; and if the added value exceeds the cost, then he is only entitled to have his cotenants contribute their proportionate share of the cost.[38] The amount of contribution to which a tenant in common is entitled will, in the absence of statute or an agreement to the contrary, be limited to a proportionate share of the benefit derived by his cotenants from the expenditures for which he is so entitled, provided such share does not exceed the amount of such expenditures.[39] If the expenditures are made without the consent of the other cotenants, or over their objections, his reimbursements for such expenditures may be limited to the amount of income and profit received by him from the common property.[40]

c. Right to Contribution as Dependent Upon Sharing Rents and Profits, and Conversely. d. Right as Affected by Statute. The ordinary rule that statutes in contravention of common right are strictly construed is peculiarly applicable to tenants in common.[44] So a statute providing for allowance for improvements or betterments to purchasers making improvements under the belief that they have a good title has no application to the case of tenants in common;[45] nor has a statute giving compensation for improvements to a defendant in ejectment after a certain number of years.[46] But a statute authorizing defendants in ejectment, in certain cases, to recover the value of their permanent improvements on the land, has been held to apply to an action in which plaintiff recovers an undivided interest as cotenant of defendant.[47]

e. Remedies. Contribution is recoverable either by bill in equity,[48] or in some states in an ordinary civil action.[49] The question of the right to contribution must be raised in some direct proceeding for that purpose, and cannot be adjudicated collaterally in some other suit;[50] and the claim must be made within a

In Pennsylvania, under the act of June 24, 1895 (Pamphl. Laws 237), payment of rent by one tenant in common to the others may be settled in a partition proceeding. Heft's Estate, 9 Kulp 337.

The cotenant must have received more than his share, not merely on a single article, but of the entire profits of the estate, after deducting all reasonable charges; and in an action against him therefor, it must appear that the balance is due to plaintiff in said action, not to the other cotenants; and the same rule applies as to contribution for expenditures. Hancock v. Day, McMull. Eq. (S. C.) 69, 36 Am. Dec. 293.

A mortgagee in possession of the common property by virtue of a mortgage given by one tenant in common is in no better position than his grantor, and therefore he is accountable to the other cotenants for the income in his hands before any application can be made thereof to the mortgage. b. Interest; Costs. A tenant in common coming into possession of more than his just share and proportion of the rents, income, or profits, is not, in the absence of some wrongful conduct on his part in regard thereto, chargeable with interest on the shares of his cotenants.[79] The rule is otherwise if the withholding is wrongful, as where the cotenant holds adversely, or after demand and refusal;[80] and a cotenant holding adversely may be liable for the interest on the income, rents, and profits collected and withheld, although he has received no such interest.[81] A tenant in common wrongfully failing to account is usually personally liable for the costs incurred in an action at law or in equity.[82]

Claim of cotenant personal.— The share of such tenant in common in the income of the common property is a debt due to himself from the cotenant who receives such income and does not pass to his grantee upon the sale of his interest in the premises, or to his devisee or heir at law upon his death. Hannan v. Osborn, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 336. c. Lien. The claim of one tenant in common against his cotenant for rent, income, or profits being only a personal charge,[83] it is generally held that no lien attaches to the interest of a cotenant in the common property for income, rents, and profits collected by such cotenant;[84] and no such lien attaches as against a bona fide purchaser of the interest of such cotenant.[85] In some cases, however, an equitable lien is recognized,[86] which is superior to a claim of general creditors,[87] but inferior to a deed of trust to secure a vendor's lien.[88] But even where such a claim is called an equitable lien, it is nevertheless held that it is only a personal charge upon the debtor tenant.[89] A statute giving a lien for rent on growing crops in possession of a lessee has no application to crops belonging to a cotenant in possession by virtue of such cotenancy.[90] and cannot assail that title,[95] nor can he litigate his own right of possession of the common property, against his cotenant therein, whilst holding possession under a contract from said cotenant; [96] and conversely, if he claims ouster of his cotenants, he cannot afterward, in a suit between the same parties, claim his original interest as tenant in common.[97] A tenant in common is estopped from claiming under the common title if he has granted away his own rights and ignored the rights of his cotenants in the common property.[98] But a tenant in common, in possession under a title other than that of cotenancy, is not estopped from setting up an adverse possession based on such other title,[99] as where he has acquired title to the whole after his entry; [1] nor, under such circumstances, should the mere purchase of a title of an alleged cotenant, to quiet title, work an estoppel.[2]

I. Respective Interests of Cotenants. Where a conveyance to purchasers of a tenancy in common is silent as to the interest of each, such interests are ordinarily presumed to be equal.[3] But such presumption is rebuttable.[4] There is a presumption that purchasers of a common estate hold shares therein in proportion to their contribution to the purchase-price, if the contributions to the purchase-price be shown to have been unequal; but if the deed to purchasers does not show their respective interests in the common property, the presumption arising from the deed may be overcome by the presumption arising from the amount of contribution.[5] It has been held that the possession of a cotenant is ordinarily notice to a purchaser of the whole interest that such cotenant may have in the estate.[6] But mere possession by one who appears of record to be a tenant in common in the premises is not notice of a parol partition or agreement for a partition so as to affect the rights of those claiming under him without notice.[7] The respective interests of the cotenants cannot be determined in an action for rent, but only in some possessory action.[8] Where title to part of a tract is adversely acquired by a stranger, the portion thus lost will be the common loss according to the respective interests of the coöwners.[9]

J. Remedies, Actions, and Proceedings — 1. Account[10] — a. Nature and Grounds of Remedy in General. At common law if one tenant in common occupied, and took the whole profits, the other had no remedy against him whilst the tenancy in common continued, unless he was put out of possession, when he might have his ejectment, or unless he appointed the other to be his bailiff as to his undivided moiety, and the other accepted that appointment, when an action of account would lie, as against a bailiff of the owner of the entirety of an estate.[11] But accounting between tenants in common may be now had either by bill in equity[12] or by an action of account, at law, under the statute of Anne;[13] and statutes based thereon and substantially similar thereto, which provide that an action of account may be maintained by one tenant in common against the other for receiving more than his just share or proportion;[14] and in an action for possession by tenants

Under Rhode Island Rev. property an accounting has been allowed.[18] An action to compel an account of the rents and profits of land or the proceeds of the sale thereof will not lie where one of the parties has a mere equitable interest, and the other of them has a legal title in the land.[19] Before an accounting can be had a cotenancy must be shown to have existed,[20] and the burden is upon plaintiff, where he seeks an accounting of rents and profits from his cotenant for use and occupation of the common property, to show their exclusive possession, or the derivation of some profit by defendant amounting to more than defendant's share.[21] As the issue, in the absence of statute to the contrary, in an action of account is, in the first instance, whether there shall be an accounting or not it is immaterial, until after said issue shall have been determined, whether or not one of the cotenants had made profits out of the common estate.[22] An action of account has been held not to be maintainable for the produce that the occupying cotenant had taken for his own benefit.[23] Contribution has been permitted to be recovered in an ordinary civil action between tenants in common,[24] and by way of set-off or in mitigation of damages.[25] If defendant has ousted plaintiff, plaintiff must establish his right at law before he can recover mesne profits,[26] and defendant is not liable for wear and tear arising from proper use of the property, only for damage arising from negligence or misuse; and if liable because of abuse and misuse of the property, then in estimating the damages the improvements in the nature of general repairs made by defendant should be taken into consideration.[27]

profits, and income collected from the common property.[34] Thus it has been held that where money has been expended in the making of necessary repairs on the common property which without such repairs was untenantable, and thereby it became rentable and income-paying, the cotenant claiming for the improvements is accountable for all the rents and profits, but is permitted to reimburse himself for said necessary expenditures only to the extent of the rents and profits in his hands.[35] Generally the occupying cotenant should be allowed for his improvements to the common property to the extent that they enhance the value of the property, if they are made in good faith and not adversely.[36] Rents, profits, and income received by him should, between the cotenants, be regarded as paid pro tanto by the increased value thus imparted, and he should be charged only with such rents, profits, and income as were due on the property in its unimproved condition,[37] the rents due to the improvements being left to the tenant who made them,[38] he, however, being chargeable with rent of such portion of the common property as has been rendered productive by the labor of the non-occupying tenant.[39] If the occupying tenant excludes the other under claim of ownership to the whole he must account for rent received during the period of exclusion in excess of the enhanced value of the premises due to improvements.[40] In a final accounting between cotenants the party chargeable should be credited, among other credits, if any, with all payments made to his cotenants as a part of the common fund; even though at any time he so paid over more than the amount then due, nevertheless he should be properly credited therewith and such payments should be so pleaded and proved.[41] But a tenant in common is not entitled to be reimbursed for expenses incurred where there is no showing that they were for the common benefit,[42] or where they were made after the revocation of authority to cotenants so to make said expenditures if such revocation be equitably sufficient;[43] or where the expenditures were made during the time of a precedent estate for the benefit of the precedent tenancy only,[44] and no allowance should be made for expenditures extraneous to the subject-matter.[45] In those jurisdictions which permit a judgment in favor of defendant for such amount as may be justly due him, a judgment should be allowed for defendant for the balance due him in an action of accounting where it appears that the net profits from the common property are less than the amount properly expended by him for the common benefit.[46] Infancy may be shown to prove want of consent to appropriations.[47]

d. Equitable Accounting. Equity has jurisdiction, under a proper bill setting out sufficient facts, to require an accounting between cotenants.[48] But such a bill must set forth some equity, such as the need for discovery or the absence of remedy at law or the involvement of some question of account, and the rights of the complainant in equity must be clear,[49] for although some courts seem to hold broadly that equity has jurisdiction in matters of account between tenants in common, or that it has concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law in such matters,[50] courts of equity generally require special circumstances in matters of accounting between tenants in common before they will act; and where the account is simple or can be readily determined such account has been held not to be sufficient for the intervention of chancery;[51] and it is generally laid down that equity will not, in the absence of statute, assume jurisdiction of an accounting unless there are special circumstances making the action at law for an account an inadequate remedy.[52] A bill for an account may be sustained without previously recovering possession;[53] but equity will not, in the absence of statute, entertain a suit for an accounting of profits by one not in possession until after the determination of the question of title in a pending suit at law,[54] or where the amount claimed to be due is fixed and certain, or where a valuation is to be made and there is no further reason for the interposition of equity.[55] There is no statutory equitable jurisdiction unless the case comes within the statute; thus if a statute gives jurisdiction in certain matters between tenants in common, equity has no jurisdiction if the parties intended to become tenants in common, but are not actually such tenants.[56]

2. Assumpsit — a. In General. nor in the absence of an agreement, express or implied.[65] Special assumpsit for a share of the rents, profits, or income is not maintainable unless the case is brought fully within the statute both by the pleadings and the evidence,[66] and a declaration in assumpsit founded on a statute should be special on the statute and not merely under the common counts.[67]

b. For Rents and Profits. Ordinarily the only remedy between cotenants and those standing in fiduciary relations to them to recover a portion of rents received by either, or moneys properly expended for the common benefit, is by a bill in equity or an action of account at law either under the statute of Anne or some other statutory provision.[68] Thus it is held that a tenant in common cannot, independently of statute, and in the absence of an agreement, express or implied, maintain assumpsit against his cotenant who has received more than his share of the rents, profits, and income of the estate, the remedy being an action of account;[69] nor ordinarily, in the absence of statute, if the rents and profits were received at a time when the one receiving them was not asserting title in himself.[70] But such an action is allowed in some jurisdictions, sometimes being permitted by statute;[71] and if there is an express or implied agreement by right of division be shown;[78] and after severance and retention of all of the subject-matter thereof by one of the parties, trover may be maintained against him if he wrongfully withholds the share of the demandant, because his possession is merely that of bailee.[79] Even though trees cut by one cotenant of land without the consent of the others become personal property on being so severed, they nevertheless remain the property of the cotenants; and one of them converting the logs is liable to his cotenants for the conversion, as in the case of other personal property.[80] No action of trover can be maintained for the selling of personal property owned in common, either against its vendor or vendee, where the vendor was a tenant in common therein duly authorized to sell,[81] and an action is not maintainable between tenants in common to recover an interest in an article manufactured from part of the materials or property that had been owned in common by plaintiff and defendant, and converted by the latter, where the character or identity of the original article has been lost.[82]

b. For Crops and Timber. The general rule is that one tenant in common cannot maintain trespass or trover against his cotenants in crops, until after a separation or severance thereof or until after such a conversion thereof as goes to their destruction, or the exclusion of the complainant from the enjoyment of his right and interest therein.[83] The application of the rule, however, has not been uniform; the several cases taking different views in relation to acts in the premises, and some of them decided directly under statutes, and others ruled by the special circumstances of the particular cases, have allowed trover or trespass to mitting suit between cotenants for waste and fixing the measure of damages, authorizes an action for waste committed during the cotenancy, even though the tenancy in common has terminated before the institution of the suit.[94] If some of the cotenants joining in a suit for the cutting of timber are estopped from recovering the full penalty which they might have recovered but for said estoppel, then a verdict for less than the full penalty is proper, since the right of action being joint, the assessment of damages must be accordingly.[95] The ordinary rule of valuation in an accounting between tenants in common as to the removal of timber by some of them in the absence of statute or agreement to the contrary is the value of the timber while growing.[96] In an action in the nature of waste occasioned by abuse and misuse of property by a cotenant, and his failure to make tenantable repairs, such improvements as defendant has made in the nature of general repairs should be considered in estimating the amount of damages.[97]

d. Ejectment — (i) In General. One tenant in common may maintain ejectment against a cotenant.[98] But such action cannot be maintained between them merely because one of them is occupying more than what would be his share of the common property on a division or partition thereof.[99] There must

Mining.—Account will also apply to the mining of lands or the operating of oil wells and the selling of the produce thereof by a tenant in common without the consent of the cotenants therein, or after they have refused to join him as well as to other cases of waste; as the action is not one for the recovery for use and occupation but rather for a part of the estate that has been taken and carried away. (III) DEMAND. There is no necessity for a prior demand of possession by a tenant in common where his cotenant takes a deed to the whole estate and claims it thereunder, or commits some act equivalent to an ouster.[9] The commencement of the action is sufficient demand.[10]

(IV) EXTENT OF RECOVERY; JUDGMENT. Upon a finding for plaintiff the court should define the extent of plaintiff's interest,[11] and the effect of judgment for plaintiff is to put plaintiff in possession with defendant,[12] and to entitle plaintiff to possession of his undivided portion of the common property and to his share of the mesne rents and profits if so by statute provided, but not to sole possession of any specific portion.[13] He can recover no more than his own portion of the common estate where he has not disseized his cotenants, together with such further damages as may be by statute provided,[14] and his judgment must be subject to the rights of defendant cotenants.[15] Under proper circumstances allowance or reimbursement may be made to defendant for a proper proportion of the money paid by him while in possession on account of mortgages, taxes, and interest on the common property and repairs and improvements thereon.[16] Statutes permitting recovery of value for permanent improvements by defendants in ejectment apply to actions by a cotenant; and the court will apportion expense of improvements proportionately.[17]

Effect of agreement.— Whether or not an agreement amounting to less than a technical termination or a technical severance of the common estate or a technical partition thereof is sufficient to warrant an action of trespass between the cotenants has been variously determined. See McPherson v. Seguine, 14 N. C. 153, holding trespass not maintainable between tenants in common even after a parol partition. The better rule appears to be that where there is a lawful agreement between all of the cotenants giving to some of them the right of exclusive occupation, possession, or enjoyment of the common property, and such rights are infringed by or under the grantors thereof, an appropriate action in tort should be maintainable, as if the wrong had been committed by a stranger. common against an adverse holder under a tax deed, plaintiff may recover the entire tract even though the conveyance to him of his interest is by a particular description;[25] but plaintiffs, in trespass to try title, cannot recover the entire property as against a defendant who has acquired title by adverse possession against some of the coöwners who are not parties to the suit.[26] If a tenant in common sues to recover the entire tract in trespass to try title, his petition cannot be taken as either a repudiation or an affirmance of his cotenant's acts in selling portions of the tract by metes and bounds.[27]

4. Equitable Jurisdiction[28] — a. In General. In matters concerning cotenants equity jurisdiction will not attach excepting under some equitable principle. The mere existence of the relation is insufficient.[29] If, however, some moving principle is shown to apply, equity will interfere in cotenancy matters as in others,[30] and may specifically enforce contracts[31] or cancel them,[32] and equity may interfere in cases between cotenants in relation to the purchase of outstanding claims or title, to set aside deeds to third parties, and declare the rights of the respective cotenants;[33] and where a tenant in common has sold the entire common estate to an absent stranger, equity has entertained a bill of a cotenant against the vendor and the vendee, as an absent defendant, for the confirmation of the sale and a decree to plaintiff for his share of the purchase-money;[34] and has entertained sparingly exercised,[47] and equity will not ordinarily interfere in matters of cotenancy where no fiduciary relations exist between the tenants in common and there is ample remedy at law;[48] and thus in the absence of statute or agreement to the contrary a tenant in common cannot, ordinarily by injunction, exclude his cotenant from the enjoyment of the common property.[49] In such a case complainant must, in order to obtain relief by injunction, prove a right to the sole enjoyment and possession of the entire premises as against defendant; if it be shown that defendant is a tenant in common with plaintiff and is merely exercising his right of the use and occupation of the common property, the latter cannot succeed.[50] But it has been held that the rule is different where a bill is pending for a partition of the premises;[51] and that an injunction may issue against execution on a judgment in ejectment until after payment for improvements;[52] and although it is not ordinarily competent for an equity court to interfere by injunction merely because one tenant in common holds exclusive possession of the entire estate, where he does not prevent his cotenants therein from entering and enjoying the possession with him, even in such case, under peculiar equitable circumstances, an injunction may issue.[53] It is no defense to a bill for injunction between cotenants to restrain trespass that plaintiff has trespassed on defendant's interest; such matter can only be considered in framing the relief.[54]

(II) To Restrain Waste. If the circumstances warrant, tenants in common may enjoin each other from waste or appropriating the entire proceeds of the common property.[55] Thus an injunction may issue as between cotenants where there is an injury to the common property amounting to waste, tending

Mining.—An injunction may issue to restrain waste or the appropriation of the entire proceeds of the common mining property by a tenant in common thereof. And it is immaterial, in an action by tenants in common to restrain a cotenant from exercising exclusive ownership over the common property, that defendant's work enhances the value thereof. Harrigan v. Lynch, 21 Mont. 36, 52 Pac. 642. So as to quarrying stone by the lessee of a cotenant. Goodenow v. Farquhar, 19 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 614. But in the absence of wilful or unnecessary injury or destruction, caused by negligence or unskilfulness, one tenant in common will not, at the instance of his cotenants, be enjoined from prosecuting the business of mining on to destroy the chief value thereof to the party complaining,[56] or to restrain waste, where a statute provided that an action of waste may lie between cotenants;[57] but such jurisdiction is sparingly exercised,[58] and equity will not ordinarily enjoin waste at the suit of a tenant in common against his cotenants except where it is destructive of the inheritance, or such cotenant is insolvent, or there is some other special equitable reasons for interfering.[59]

5. Construction of Statutes Relating to Actions Involving Cotenancy. The rights and remedies of cotenants have been considerably modified by statutes their common claim. McCord v. Oakland Quicksilver Min. Co., 64 Cal. 134, 27 Pac. 863, 49 Am. Rep. 686. This rule is subject to modification according to respective statutes (see Harrigan v. Lynch, 21 Mont. 36, 52 Pac. 642); or according to the peculiar circumstances of the particular case, as where it is alleged that the complaining party owns the larger interest in said claim, that it is being worked without the consent and against the wishes of plaintiff, and that defendant is not dividing the proceeds thereof in good faith, thus bringing defendant within the terms of a statute in relation to exclusive ownership (Red Mountain Consol. Min. Co. v. Esler, 18 Mont. 174, 44 Pac. 523). It is not waste for a tenant in common therein to get, or license to get, a coal mine in the ordinary course of working; such workings are not a trespass where less than the proper share of said cotenant was taken. It is a matter of accounting on the basis of the value of the coal at the pit's mouth less all costs of getting and receiving it. Job v. Potton, L. R. 20 Eq. 84, 44 L. J. Ch. 262, 32 L. T. Rep. N. Timber.—As a general rule a tenant in common in timber lands has no right to cut the timber thereon without the consent of his coöwners if such cutting amounts to waste; and an injunction may issue restraining him from so doing. And equity will enjoin a tenant in common from stripping the land of its timber pending a bill in equity. Bradley v. Reed, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,785; Proudfoot v. Bush, 7 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 518. But an injunction will not be granted to prevent the cutting of timber on the premises not amounting to waste, in the absence of other equitable reasons (Hihn v. Peck, 18 Cal. 640; Brittain v. Parker, 12 Nova Scotia 589); nor may a bill for partition and for an injunction against cutting timber trees on land owned in common be sustained where the only allegation in relation to the reasons therefor is that timber had been cut on the common land and sold by defendants, and there is neither averment of insolvency of defendants nor that the amount of timber so cut exceeded defendants' share (Hihn v. Peck, 18 Cal. 640). If it appear, in the case of a writ forbidding the cutting and removal of timber, that such timber had been cut on land owned by the parties in common, the court may open the writ and allow defendant to remove the timber cut, under proper security given by defendant for the protection of plaintiff (Hensal v. Wright, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 416). Even if no injunction issue except in cases of actual destruction, nevertheless where a tenant in common is also trustee under a will of the interest of the owner of another moiety therein, and in breach of the trust cuts timber thereon for his own benefit, such action will be enjoined. Christie v. Saunders, 2 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 670. In the absence of a showing of irregularity in the value of timber growing in different parts of the common tract, an injunction should only restrain the destruction of more than defendant's share. advantage to which he is fairly entitled because of the relationship of cotenancy.[66] Unless such statutes are clearly applicable to cases of cotenancy, they will not be so applied.[67] But it has been held that the statute of limitations applies, as between cotenants, to an accounting,[68] and a cotenant receiving the income of lands owned in common is not a trustee of the moneys received by him, but a mere debtor to whom the ordinary rules of limitations apply,[69] and where the tenant in common in possession and sole enjoyment of the common property receives the rents and profits of it to his own use claiming them as his own, the statute of limitations will run against the right of the other to claim an accounting from the time of an ouster or of a demand and refusal to account; in the absence of such ouster or demand and refusal the collection of rents and profits will be regarded as an act of agency.[70]

If jurisdiction be concurrent at law and in equity, then the legal bar of limitations applies in equity; not as a matter of law but as a matter of comity. See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Tenancy in Common," § 119 et seq.

One tenant cannot grant or create an easement in the common property without the precedent authority or subsequent ratification of the other tenants in common. Pfeiffer v. State University, 74 Cal. 156, 15 Pac. 622; Marshall v. Trumbull, 28 Conn. 183, 73 Am Dec. 667; Charleston, etc., R. Co. v. Fleming, 118 Ga. 699, 45 S. Suppl. 1149]. Where a cotenant's sole deed attempting to convey timber on the common property was invalid as to his cotenants, a provision of the deed attempting to convey a right of way to and from the timber, and a right to enter the land to cut and remove logs, was also inoperative. Lee v. Follensby, 83 Vt. 35, 74 Atl. 327. But a claim to an easement of an elevated road by prescription as against tenants in common is not defeated because of the infancy of one of the tenants in common, on the ground that the prescriptive right cannot be given without the concurrence of all the tenants in common, under the rule that a tenant in common can for his part release the easements of light, air, and access, and transfer that title to a railway in the street. Taggart v. Manhattan R. Co., 57 Misc. (N. Y.) 184, 109 N. Y. Suppl. 38. A widow's conveyance of a right of way over her husband's land could not affect the interest of his children as his heirs at law, her relation to the land remaining that of tenant in common with the children, her interest having imposed upon it the easement coextensive with her one-third interest. Foster v. Foster, 81 S. C. 307, 62 S. E. 320.

Repairs.—There is no implied authority in one cotenant to improve or deal with the common property at the expense of the other tenants without their previous authority or subsequent ratification, upon the principle that no man has a right to improve the property of another against his consent and charge him with the expenses. Converse v. Ferre, 11 Mass. 325; Taylor v. Baldwin, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 582 [affirmed in 10 Barb. 626]. If such consent is unreasonably withheld, it seems that a cotenant may repair the common property at the expense of all the owners in common, if such repairs are necessary for the preservation of the common property. Taylor v. Baldwin, supra. And see supra, III, E, 1.

Mortgage or lien.—The ownership in a tenancy in common being in severalty, a mortgage or lien placed upon the interest of one of the cotenants creates no lien upon the un-prevents them from binding each other applies with greater force after expiration divided portions owned by the others of them; they cannot thus interfere with each other's interests. Torrey v. Cook, 116 Mass. 163; Moreland v. Strong, 115 Mich. 211, 73 N. W. 140, 69 Am. St. Rep. 553; Porter v. Stone, 70 Miss. 291, 12 So. 208; Jolliffe v. Maxwell, 3 Nebr. (Unoff.) 244, 91 N. W. 563; Stoddard v. Weston, 3 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 13, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 34. Thus where land is conveyed to a woman and her infant children, she may create a lien thereon affecting her interest, but not the interests of the minors. Leavell v. Carter, (Ky. 1908) 112 S. W. 1118. But if the deed creating a cotenancy is not recorded until after the recording of a mortgage by the owner of record, it may be that the mortgage is a lien upon the entire property. Atkinson v. Hewett, 63 Wis. 396, 23 N. W. 889. The surrender of mortgaged common property by one tenant in common only surrenders his part thereof. Vermont L. & T. Co. v. Cardin, 19 Wash. 304, 53 Pac. 164.

Pledge.— One tenant in common of a chattel cannot pledge his cotenant's interest without previous authority or subsequent ratification. Frans v. Young, 24 Iowa 375.

A contract of sale by one cotenant disposing of his interest in mining lands does not bind his cotenants to accept a royalty reserved to the vendor. Mercur v. State Line, etc., R. Co., 171 Pa. St. 12, 32 Atl. 1126.

Sign boards.—A contract by a tenant in common, giving permission to one to erect sign and bill boards on the land, is not binding on the cotenants. Walker v. Marion, 143 Mich. 27, 106 N. W. 400.

Lien for materials.— One tenant in common cannot without authority charge interest of his cotenant with a lien for materials furnished for the improvement of the common property. Van Riper v. Morton, 61 Mo. App. 440.

License to enter.—A tenant in common cannot give a license to enter, as against his cotenant. Moore v. Moore, (Cal. 1893) 34 Pac. 90. But a licensee of one tenant in common, for entry, may entitle the occupier under such license to a notice to quit before he is liable to any action for occupation under said license, and the ejectment or battery of such occupier by a tenant in common, without notice, may amount to a tort for which such tenant in common may be liable. Ord v. Chester, 18 Cal. 77; McGarrell v. Murphy, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 132; Causee v. Anders, 20 N. C. 388; Taylor v. Stockdale, 3 McCord (S. C.) 302, holding that trespass to try the title will not lie. If one having no interest in the common property grants a permit in relation thereto, and title to an interest therein is subsequently cast upon such licensor by descent, the permit so given is not binding upon the owners of the other interests therein. Duke v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 71 S. C. 95, 50 S. E. 675.

Mines and minerals.— A tenant in common cannot license a stranger to prosecute mining on the common estate so as to bind a dissenting cotenant, even though a statute declares a license irrevocable after a valuable discovery. Tipping v. Robbins, 71 Wis. 507, 37 N. W. 427. Such a license extends only to the licensor's interest (Omaha, etc., Smelting, etc., Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 41, 21 Pac. 925, 16 Am. St. Rep. 185, 5 L. R. A. 236), and to that extent only is valid (Williams v. Morrison, 28 Fed. 872). A tenant in common may not enter into any agreement in relation to the mines that would unduly prejudice the interests of his cotenants; he can only convey or contract in relation to such interests as he may own therein (McKinley v. Peters, 111 Pa. St. 283, 3 Atl. 27), and fraud of a tenant in common or his agent cannot affect the rights of the other cotenants in the premises (Fisher v. Seymour, 23 Colo. 542, 49 Pac. 30; Yarwood v. Johnson, 29 Wash. 643, 70 Pac. 123).

Timber.— No license, by one cotenant alone, to cut timber from land owned in common passes the legal title to such timber to the purchaser; the interest which he acquires can only be asserted in equity (Burt, etc., Lumber Co. v. Clay City Lumber Co., 111 Ky. 725, 64 S. W. 652, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1019; McDodrill v. Pardee, etc., Lumber Co., 40 W. Va. 564, 21 S. E. 878; Baker v. Whiting, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 787, 3 Sumn. 475) unless the tenants in common are partners in the premises (Baker v. Wheeler, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 505, 24 Am. Dec. 66). The non-consenting cotenants may maintain trover against the vendee or licensee. Fleming v. Katahdin Pulp, etc., Co., 93 Me. 110, 44 Atl. 378; Sullivan v. Sherry, 111 Wis. 476, 87 N. W. 471, 87 Am. St. Rep. 890; Duff v. Bindley, 16 Fed. 178. And see infra, IV, B, 1, c. And where one tenant in common without authority sells all the timber on the land, his cotenant is entitled to recover from him and from purchasers with notice of the cotenancy his share of the value of the timber taken. Collier v. Cameron, (Tex. Civ. App. 1909) 117 S. W. 915. But trespass quare clausum fregit cannot be maintained. Wait v. Richardson, 33 Vt. 190, 78 Am. Dec. 622. See also Hunting v. Russell, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 145. A tenant in common authorizing a licensee to cut timber on the common land, without the consent of his cotenants, can nevertheless maintain assumpsit for his share against said licensee. Kenniston v. Ham, 29 N. H. 501. If a tenant in common licenses a stranger to cut timber, and delivers it to defendant, and subsequently sues jointly with his cotenants for such conversion, the action is properly nonsuited. Ramsey v. Brown, (Pa.) 17 Atl. 207. A minor tenant in common cannot, without the assent of his cotenants, grant a license to enter and cut timber from the common property. Richey v. Brown, 58 Mich. 435, 25 N. W. 386. Where a part of the cotenants license the cutting of timber by a third person, from the land owned in common, neither the licensee acting under said license nor those claiming under him are in a position to claim adversely in the

of the cotenancy.[72] A contract by one tenant in common in relation to the whole estate being voidable at the election of his cotenants not joining in said contract.[73] But the contracting cotenant may himself be bound.[74] Even where some previous authority or agency is conferred upon a tenant in common, his acts must be strictly within the authority,[75] third persons dealing with a tenant in common being bound at their peril to ascertain his authority to bind his coöwners.[76] It appears, however, that where one of two tenants in common of land directs some act to be done in relation thereto in reasonable appreciation of imminent danger to the land and the act is accordingly done, the other tenant in common cannot recover against the doer of said act in tort,[77] and acts done by one tenant in common in relation to the common interest are presumed to have been done by authority or for the benefit of his cotenants, if there be any circumstances upon which to base such a presumption.[78]

2. Lease; Rescission or Surrender. A tenant in common not authorized thereto by his cotenants cannot execute a lease that will bind them without premises as against the tenants in common not joining in such license. Gulf Red Cedar Lumber Co. v. Crenshaw, 148 Ala. 343, 42 So. 564.

Employment of a third person.— Evidence that a tenant in common acting for himself and his cotenant employed plaintiff's services is admissible to prove joint liability on the part of said cotenants. Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633, 34 N. E. 23.

Redemption of land by payment to one of several cotenants cannot avail as against the other of them in the absence of previous authority or subsequent ratification affirming such payment. Maddox v. Bramlett, 84 Ga. 84, 11 S. E. 128.

Location of road.— One tenant in common cannot bind the others by an agreement relative to the location of a road over the common land or the assessment of damages in relation thereto; nor can he apply for a jury of condemnation without the joinder of his cotenants in the application (Morrison v. Clark, 89 Me. 103, 35 Atl. 1034, 56 Am. St. Rep. 395; Merrill v. Berkshire, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 269), nor can he accept a sum awarded by commissioners in condemnation so as to conclude his cotenants; they will still remain entitled to compensation for their respective interests (Ruppert v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 43 Iowa 490).

Presumptions of authority.— Although each cotenant holds in severalty and holds his separate property, except as modified by the tenancy in common, as any other property might be held, nevertheless certain presumptions and rules of law arise from the intimate relationship between the coöwners growing out of the cotenancy and the nature of the common property; therefore it is that where one cotenant employs someone to do some proper and necessary work on or in relation to the common property it will be presumed, when there is no showing to the contrary, that said employment is by the consent of the other cotenants or that such consent was expected, at the time of said employment, to have been obtained. Barton v. Gray, 48 Mich. 164, 12 N. W. 30.

74. Baum v. McAfee, (Tex. Civ. App. 1910) 125 S. W. 984.

75. Gillham v. Walker, 135 Ala. 459, 33 So. 537, holding that authority to a tenant in common by his cotenants to deliver a deed does not warrant him in entering into a contract with the vendee therein to perform certain acts extraneous to the deed.

Notice revoking an agency in a cotenant for the collection of rents and their application to the satisfaction of an encumbrance, together with the filing of a bill by the notifier for an accounting for rents and profits, was held sufficient to revoke such authority, even though such notice purported to revoke a non-executed power of attorney. Switzer v. Switzer, 57 N. J. Eq. 421, 41 Atl. 486.

76. Breaux v. Albert Hanson Lumber Co., 125 La. 421, 51 So. 444.

78. Schwartz v. McQuaid, 214 Ill. 357, 73 N. E. 582, 105 Am. St. Rep. 112 (lease by one tenant in common of the whole property without objection by his cotenant, for several months); Valentine v. Healey, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 502, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 287 [reversed on other grounds in 158 N. Y. 369, 52 N. E. 1097, 43 L. R. A. 667]; Lagorio v. Dozier, 91 Va. 492, 22 S. E. 239 (receipt of profits and payment of taxes).

Thus an entry upon land owned in common, under a license from one of the cotenants, will be presumed to be under the cotenancy and not adverse thereto. Berthold v. Fox, 13 Minn. 501, 97 Am. Dec. 243. But presumption of adverse holding may arise where the entry is under claim of the whole prop-

subsequent ratification,[79] even though the tenant in common attempting so to lease is in possession of the whole land;[80] nor can he bind his cotenants by a surrender of a lease without their authority;[81] and any number of the cotenants less than the whole of them are incompetent to bind their non-rescinding cotenants by the rescission of a lease.[82] A tenant in common may, however, let his own share of the common property, and the lessee on entry will have the same right in relation to the other cotenants that his lessor had;[83] and where there has been no objection by the cotenants not executing the lease to the occupancy by the lessee of the one who executed it, and his cotenants knew of such occupancy and made no objection to such lease and directed the lessee to enter and hold possession and pay rent for several months, the knowledge and consent of the coöwners will be presumed.[84] Payment of rent to one cotenant is a defense to a claim therefor by another of them who has ratified the demise.[85] A sealed lease signed by a cotenant for himself and as agent of his cotenants is not void, and the lessee taking possession thereunder is liable on his covenant for rent.[86] If one cotenant executes a lease purporting to cover the whole of the common property, containing a clause for the payment of certain damages in the event of the non-use of the property according to the terms of the lease, and subsequently an accounting is demanded for rents and profits, any sums so paid for non-use under the terms of said lease do not constitute part of the damages or part of the rents and profits, in the absence of ratification of the lease by the cotenants claiming the benefit of the accounting.[87]

3. RELEASE OR SETTLEMENT. Upon the question of the effect of a release by one tenant in common upon the rights of a cotenant, the cases are not in harmony. Thus it is held that while, from the bare relation of cotenancy, the law does not imply authority of one of the cotenants to bind the other to his prejudice,[88] whenever the cause of action existing in favor of any number of cotenants is joint the release of one bars an action by the others,[89] and that one tenant in common can settle or release the claim of all tenants in common for trespass upon the common erty. Gill v. Fauntleroy, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 177.

Representatives of a deceased copartner, being tenants in common with his survivor, are not bound merely by said survivor's lease. Un Wong v. Kan Chu, 5 Hawaii 225.

A husband and wife owning part of a tract as community property and the remainder thereof as community property in common with another, the executing of a lease by the husband without the concurrence of his wife or the other cotenant was held to be invalid. property,[90] and that thus, where cotenants join in an action ex delicto for trespass committed upon the common property, a release by one tenant in common from all liability for the trespass, as well for his cotenant as for himself, such settlement and release binds both tenants in common.[91] On the other hand the rule is laid down that the ownership of the several interests are so far distinct that, after suit instituted, one cotenant can neither settle the action nor execute a release without the previous authority or the subsequent ratification of his cotenants, so as to prevent them from proceeding with the suit, or as in anywise to bind them or their respective rights, although of course the recovery in such a suit must be limited to the extent of the right of the parties entitled to maintain it.[92] Thus it is held that liability for trespass on land cannot be avoided by showing payment in settlement therefor to one tenant in common of the land without the knowledge or consent of his cotenants;[93] and one tenant in common may maintain trespass for cutting and carrying away timber from the common property, although the wrong-doer has paid the other tenants in common;[94] and a release and settlement of damages for trespass on land executed by one of the cotenants does not bar the others;[95] and where two tenants in common of chattels join in an action for the conversion of the property, one cannot release or settle the action so as to deprive his cotenant of his remedy;[96] but the action may proceed in the name of both for the benefit of the one not releasing, or an amendment can be made by striking out the name of the one releasing.[97] Where one cotenant brings a suit for his portion of the damage sustained by the common property, the release of the other tenant is no discharge.[98] If a tenant in common releases an insurer of the common property on receipt of his share of the loss, his cotenant may either recover from him the full amount of such cotenant's loss, in the proportion of the insurance to the loss, or he may adopt the adjustment and sue in assumpsit for his share of the money had and received.[99]

4. Notice to One Cotenant as Notice to All. Ordinarily notice to one cotenant in relation to the title is not binding on his fellows therein.[1] But where they are jointly pursuing a common enterprise as tenants in common notice to one, in the premises, is notice to all; so, where one of them is acting as agent for his fellows, notice to such agent, in the premises, is notice to them.[2]

5. Estoppel and Ratification. Tenants in common, being owners of several interests, may ratify the acts of each other or acquiesce therein; and generally such ratification or acquiescence with full knowledge of material facts is effective;[3]

and after such ratification or acquiescence the ratifying parties and their respective grantees are estopped from denying the effect thereof.[4] A tenant in common is estopped from nullifying a material act in relation to the common property of which he has accepted and retained the benefit, with full knowledge of all material circumstances in relation thereto, or which he has ratified or in which he has acquiesced; and so is his grantee or licensee;[5] and he may be estopped if he has advised or urged such act.[6] But mere absence for a long time,[7] or the use of the name of a tenant in common as party in a suit concerning the common property, without such tenant's knowledge or authority, is not sufficient to estop him from asserting his interest in the land;[8] nor is he estopped by unauthorized declarations or acts of his cotenants;[9] and a cotenant is not ordinarily estopped because of an alleged fraud, which failed of results.[10] A tenant in common is not estopped, in the absence of fraud, from insisting upon his rights as such because of mere silence on his part, unless there was a legal duty upon him to speak or act in the premises and such silence caused injury to the party seeking the benefit of an estoppel as against him;[11] nor is he estopped from avoiding a sheriff's deed to his cotenant by accepting a part of the purchase-money, in the absence of a fair disclosure of surrounding circumstances by said purchasing cotenant.[12] An estoppel operating against one tenant in common in relation to the common property may be defeated by an assertion of the rights of his non-estopped cotenants.[13]

Where one of several cotenants cuts and removes timber under an alleged license from his cotenants, the burden is on him to show that said license was unconditional and not limited by the reservation of a lien on the lumber. occupying tenant in common was no defense in a suit under a statute for cutting and carrying away wood without notice to the cotenants therein (Hazen v. Wight, 87 Me. 233, 32 Atl. 887); and the right of action of one cotenant against the other for cutting timber on the common property is not affected by the fact that the complaining party has theretofore been guilty of a like offense (Blake v. Milliken, 14 N. Parol evidence is admissible to show authorization or ratification of a sale by one cotenant of the entire property so as to create the necessary privity between parties to an accounting.[23] A purchaser from a cotenant with notice, actual or constructive, of the character of his title is bound by such notice, and will be limited in his holding to the actual interest of his grantor.[24]

b. Ratification; Estoppel. An unauthorized sale or conveyance of the whole property by one tenant in common may be ratified by the others.[25] The non-consenting cotenant may be estopped from denying the passage of title to the vendee if he does any act to ratify or confirm the sale;[26] and although the unauthorized sale of a chattel by a tenant in common therein does not affect his cotenant's interest, it operates against the vendor as an estoppel.[27] A tenant in common claiming under a sale of or contract in relation to the whole property, by his cotenant, or approving and adopting such sale or contract, ratifies it; and if the moneys due thereunder have been paid to the contracting cotenant in accordance with the terms of such sale or contract, his cotenant cannot recover against the vendee or obligor therein.[28]

c. Remedies of Non-Consenting Cotenants. The non-consenting cotenant may recover the value of his undivided interest in such property, or may claim cotenancy therein with the vendee;[29] and may usually follow the property in the hands of a purchaser or recover its value from the wrong-doer;[30] and as the sale of the common property by a tenant in common therein, or one claiming under him, without the consent of his cotenants, does not pass title of the non-consenting cotenants' interest, they may maintain trover against the purchaser of the common property for his subsequent conversion,[31] and the purchaser may,

The question as to the effect of a conveyance by metes and bounds usually arises where there is conflict for the exclusive possession of the property or a part thereof between the grantor's cotenants, and the grantee by metes and bounds. The leasing of a whole field owned in common by one of the tenants in common therein cannot deprive his cotenants of the right to use the common property, and no trespass will lie for the lawful exercise of the non-possession of the portion conveyed,[46] and such grantee takes subject to the rights of the remaining cotenants.[47] A conveyance by metes and bounds to a stranger without the knowledge and consent of the grantor's cotenants does not make such stranger a cotenant so as to give him the absolute right to have the portion of the entire tract assigned to him.[48] But such a devise or conveyance is valid between the devisor or grantor, and the devisees or grantees, and those claiming by or under them respectively, although inoperative as to the rights of the devisor's or grantor's cotenants and those claiming by or under them,[49] who alone can avoid it,[50] and that only if it prejudices them,[51] the effect of the conveyance by the tenant in common of his share by metes and bounds being to pass the devisor's or grantor's proportional interest in the part described by the deed; [52]

to the interests of plaintiff only and do not permit recovery by them for themselves and their cotenants who are not made parties plaintiff to the suit.[56] Thus it is held that the recovery of a tenant in common, who, with his cotenant, has been disseized by a stranger, is limited to the interest of such tenant in common, and after recovery he holds in common with the disseizor.[57] Even if the recovery of the whole be permitted it must be in subordination to the rights of possession of cotenants,[58] provided, however, that before the cotenants can successfully claim the right of possession they must pay or tender to their successful fellow their due proportion of the expenses properly incurred for the recovery of the possession for their common benefit.[59] The same rule applies in the case of a judgment in an action of ejectment in a suit between cotenants or coparceners.[60] In actions for damages for injury to property or detention thereof, a tenant in common is entitled to recover only his share of the damages to the whole property,[61] and in a suit for land plaintiff may only recover his proportionate part of the rents.[62] It has been held that a recovery of a tenant in common suing for a conversion of a chattel is limited to his share or interest therein.[63]

2. Parties — a. Joinder of Plaintiffs — (i) Actions in Which Cotenants Need Not Join. A tenant in common may maintain an action without the joinder of his cotenants where such action is for the protection of his several interest,[64] and where his cotenant is wrongfully maintaining an adverse position or is not interested in the recovery,[65] and where a statute provides that tenants in common, or any number less than all, may jointly or severally commence any action, it is not necessary to make such tenants in common parties plaintiff on whose behalf no recovery is or should be sought.[66] Even where the rule is that an action should be jointly brought by the cotenants, the tendency of the American courts has been to permit a separate action in the absence of a plea upon a warranty to the ancestor.[79] Tenants in common are not united in interest within the meaning of a statute requiring such persons to join in an action for the recovery of property.[80] The owner of an undivided interest in property cannot sue in replevin to recover possession thereof. All the owners must be joined.[81] The failure to prove that plaintiffs are the sole tenants in common of the premises in an action which must be brought jointly precludes recovery in the absence of statute to the contrary.[82]

(III) ACTIONS IN WHICH JOINDER IS PERMISSIVE. Tenants in common may join in a suit for the recovery of the common property,[83] in an action of waste,[84] for a nuisance,[85] for trespass or an injunction where so provided by statute,[86] and for a restraining order against execution in ejectment, where they are entitled to repayment for improvements, even though all of them were not parties defendant in the ejectment suit.[87] They may join in an action for an injury to realty or personalty even if each of them is in separate possession of separate parts of the common property,[88] in covenant or assumpsit for money had and received, to recover rents or share of income,[89] or in distraint for rent,[90] or for conversion of the common property.[91]

(IV) ACTIONS WHICH COTENANTS CANNOT MAINTAIN JOINTLY. As the interest of the tenants in common are several and not joint they cannot, at the common law, jointly maintain a real action in relation to the entire common property; but they must sever, in the absence of statute to the contrary.[92] The rule is the same in actions of account, unless parties plaintiff are partners;[93] in actions of assumpsit, brought under statutes, in the nature of account;[94] in actions for fraud in the sale of property;[95] and so as to an action to set aside separate deeds made at different times, of the respective interests, to a common vendee.[96] At common law they could not join in ejectment;[97] but this rule has been changed in many states, sometimes by statute and sometimes by judicial decisions.[98]

b. Defendant. In actions relating to cotenants, all parties necessary to the determination of an issue should be made either parties plaintiff or parties defendant.[99] But where there is a purchase of property in common, each purchaser is liable only for his share of the purchase-price and he should not be sued jointly with the purchaser of any other share or interest in said property, nor should a judgment go against him for the unpaid purchase-money of such other share.[1] An agreement by tenants in common for the performance of services in relation to the common property being joint, the liability is joint; and therefore all of the tenants in common should be made parties defendant;[2] and where a tort has been committed by one tenant in common, for himself and as agent for his cotenants, within the scope of his agency, all of the said cotenants are liable and may be made parties defendant,[3] and in an action sounding in tort either all or any of the tort-feasors may be sued.[4] Where a statute provides that tenants in common, or any number less than all, may jointly or severally defend any Accounting.— In an action of accounting only such tenant in common as has received more than his share of the profits is a proper party defendant; if any of the tenants in common be partners, such partnership may be a proper party defendant; usually each tenant in common resisting an accounting should be made a separate party defendant in a separate suit. Nuisance.— Ordinarily the use of the common property, so as to create a nuisance, is not within the power of any cotenant so as to bind the others in damages for such nuisance; and therefore liability for such nuisance ordinarily attaches only to the actual tort-feasor. Simpson v. Seavey, 8 Me. 138, 22 Am. Dec. 228.

4. Low v. Mumford, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 426, 7 Am. Dec. 469.

Negligence.—While it is ordinarily the rule that tenants in common should all be made defendants in an action for negligence respecting the premises owned by them, yet it is not necessary nor even proper to do so where the negligence complained of is the act of one

action it is not necessary to make such tenants in common parties defendant against whom no remedy is sought;[5] and it seems that, although the general rule is that a tenant in common cannot maintain an action of trespass in respect to the common land he may separately defend the position and the possession of the land held in common.[6] It is not necessary to make those tenants in common parties defendant, against whom no relief is sought in ejectment.[7]

3. LIMITATIONS. A bar by virtue of the statute of limitations against some of the tenants in common does not operate as against the others because their respective interests are several and not joint;[8] and where such a bar exists, a recovery in an action for the recovery of land can only go as to the interest of the tenant in common against whom the bar does not apply.[9] Generally the right of all the cotenants will be saved from the operation of the statute of limitations by any cause that will prevent its running against any of them.[10] One cotenant cannot, after limitations have applied, revive a debt, so as to create any new liability therefor as against his cotenants.[11]

TENANCY IN COPARCENARY. See TENANCY IN COMMON, ante, p. 5.

TENANT. In the broadest sense, a purchaser of an estate in the land or building hired;[1] one who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, or at will;[2] one who holds or possesses lands or tenements by a kind of title;[3] one who holds or possesses lands by any kind of right.[4] In a more restricted sense, one who has possession of the premises of another in subordination to that other's title, and with his consent;[5] the party to whom a lease is made;[6] one who holds or occupies under another person;[7] one who has the occupation or temporary possession of the lands or tenements whose title is in another; correlative to landlord;[8] one who has an occupation or temporary possession of lands or tenements, whose title is in another; one who has possession of any place; a dweller, an occupant;[9] one who has the occupation or temporary possession of lands or tenements whose title is in another;[10] one who occupies land or premises of another, in subordination to that other's title and with his assent, express or implied.[11] (Tenant: In General, see LANDLORD AND

Examples of this kind of tenure usually given are a lessee for a term of years or for the life of another person who holds the possession of the lands or tenements after his term or estate has expired. It is in effect nothing more than the continuance of a possession lawfully taken after the title under which it was taken has ended. Pleasants v. Claghorn, 2 Miles (Pa.) 302, 304.

If the lessee of a tenant for life is in possession at the time of the life-tenant's death, and continues to hold over, he becomes a tenant by sufferance; but if the lessee is not in possession, or does not hold over, the mere recognition of a lease previously made does not constitute such tenancy. I. DEFINITION.

Tender is an offer to perform a contract, or to pay money, coupled with a present ability to do the act.[1] It imports, not merely the readiness and the

1. Cockrill v. Kirkpatriek, 9 Mo. 697, 704. Other definitions are: "A means given to the debtor to discharge himself from his obligation, by placing the thing to be delivered ability to pay or perform at the time and place mentioned in the contract, but also the actual production of the thing to be paid or delivered over, and an offer of it to the person to whom the tender is to be made;[2] and the act of tender must be such that it needs only acceptance by the one to whom it is made to complete the transaction. It is the act of one party in offering that which he admits to be due and owing, but which does not meet the approval of the other party, and therefore is not accepted and appropriated by him in satisfaction of the demand.[3] The term therefore implies a refusal.[4]

II. NECESSITY OR AVAILABILITY.

A. Necessity. Where acts to be performed by the parties to a contract are mutual and dependent, or where the existence of a right in one claiming it is dependent upon the performance of duties on his part, as by the payment of money or delivery of goods, tender of performance by him is necessary to enable him to sue to enforce the right.[5] at the risk of the creditor." Smith v. Richardson, 11 Rob. (La.) 516, 520.

"An offer to pay a debt or to perform a duty." 9 Bacon Abr. tit. "Tender."

"An offer by a debtor to his creditor of the amount of the debt." Rapalje & L. L. Dict. [quoted in Salinas v. Ellis, 26 S. C. 337, 344, 2 S. E. 121].

"The offer of a sum of money in satisfaction of a debt or claim by producing and showing the amount to the creditor, or party claiming and expressing verbally a willingness to pay it." Tompkins v. Batie, 11 Nebr. 147, 152, 7 N. W. 747, 38 Am. Rep. 361 [citing Worcester Dict.].

"An offer to perform an act which the party offering is bound to perform." McClain v. Batton, 50 W. Va. 121, 130, 40 S. E. 509.

As applicable to the case of mutual and concurrent promises, the word "tender" does not mean the same kind of offer as when it is used in reference to the payment or offer to pay an ordinary debt due in money, where the money is offered to the creditor who is entitled to receive it and nothing further remains to be done, and the transaction is completed and ended; but it only means a readiness and willingness, accompanied with an ability on the part of one of the parties, to do the acts which the agreement requires him to perform, provided the other will concurrently do the things which he is required by it to do, and a notice by the former to the latter of such readiness. Such readiness, ability, and notice are sufficient evidence of, and indeed imply, an offer or tender in the ordinary sense of the term. It is not an absolute unconditional offer to do or transfer anything at all events, but it is, in its nature, conditional only, and dependent on, and to be performed only in case of, the readiness of the other party to perform his part of the agreement. Smith v. Lewis, 26 Conn. 110, 119 [quoted in Clark v. Weis, 87 Ill. 438, 441, 29 Am. Rep. 60 (citing as illustrations Smith v. Lamb, 26 Ill. 396, 79 Am. Dec. 381; Hough v. Rawson, 17 Ill. 588)].

2. Holmes v. Holmes, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 137, 144 [affirmed in 9 N. Y. 525].

The term imports more than a mere offer, however, for there may be an offer without a tender. Sewell v. Willcox, 5 Rob. (La.) 83. See infra, II, B, 2, 4.

3. Barker v. Brink, 5 Iowa 481, 484.

4. Mohn v. Stoner, 11 Iowa 30, 31; Barker v. Brink, 5 Iowa 481, 484.

Payment distinguished.— Payment implies an acceptance and appropriation of that which is offered by one party to the other; whereas tender is the act of one party, in offering that which he admits to be due and owing, but which is not accepted by the creditor. The tender does not discharge or satisfy the debt, whereas payment does Barker v. Brink, 5 Iowa 481, 484.

Payment into court distinguished.— The payment of money into court, under order, is more than a simple tender. A tender is an offer to pay by the debtor before suit, and cannot be made after suit brought. It is purely ex parte. If it is not accepted the debtor must retain his money, and if established on plea, the only effect is to stop interest thenceforward on the amount tendered. But a payment into court is different. It is not ex parte, but done by order of the court, which represents both parties, and whose orders bind plaintiff as well as defendant. Black v. Rose, 14 S. C. 274, 277 [quoted in Salinas v. Ellis, 26 S. C. 337, 345, 2 S. E. 121].

B. Demands Upon Which Tender May Be Made. At common law, wherever there is a debt or duty due and the thing due is either certain, or capable of being made so by mere computation,[6] or where a given sum in money is to be paid in specific articles, or where payment is to be made in specific articles or services at a stipulated rate,[7] a tender of the debt or duty may be made; and a tender may also be made where the damages have been liquidated by an award,[8] and where the damages, in case plaintiff establishes a right to any damages, can be merely nominal, as far as the damages are concerned a judicial inquiry is entirely unnecessary, and a tender of such damages may be made.[9] But at common law a tender is not allowed where the amount of the compensation is unliquidated, whether the right to the compensation is based upon a breach of a contract, or is one arising out of a tort.[10] This rule has been changed by statute in many jurisdictions; the general effect of which is to permit defendant to relieve himself from liability for costs in an action for unliquidated damages by tendering sufficient amends for the injury complained of.[11]

After a breach of contract to deliver a given quantity of specific articles, unless the damages are capable of being reduced to a certainty by computation, a tender cannot be made, either of the articles or of money as damages. Day v. Lafferty, 4 Ark. 450.

C. When Failure to Make Tender Excused or Waived. made,[19] or in any way obstructs or prevents a tender,[20] as by declaring positively that nothing is due him,[21] by admitting that a tender would be fruitless,[22] by declaring the contract to be at an end,[23] or in a threatening tone ordering plaintiff off the premises.[24] But in any case before it can be said that a formal tender is waived, the tenderee must have placed himself in such position as would make a tender an unnecessary act.[25] And a plaintiff, before he can recover damages for the breach, or what he has parted with under the contract, must show, not only the facts constituting the waiver of the formal tender, but that he was able and willing, at the time fixed, to perform on his part,[26] except in those cases where a tender is rendered unnecessary by the previous declaration, act, or omission of the other party.[27] A formal technical tender is not dispensed with by a mere assertion, without more, of a lien or claim in excess of the actual amount due, for a tender of the proper sum might be accepted.[28] There cannot be a waiver unless the tenderee is present and has an opportunity to object to the tender,[29] nor can there be a waiver when he is present, if the facts are not disclosed to him.[30]

Furthermore, the tenderer must name the sum which he wishes to tender,[35] unless perhaps the exact sum and interest is tendered so that the tenderee may easily satisfy himself that the amount is correct.[36] Where the amount due is within the exclusive knowledge of the creditor, and the creditor on demand neglects or refuses to indicate the correct amount that is due, the debtor may tender so much as he thinks is justly due, and if less than the true amount, the tender nevertheless will be good;[37] and the same rule obtains where the tenderee deprives the tenderer of the means of ascertaining the exact amount due.[38]

2. Interest and Costs. The amount tendered must be sufficient to cover both principal and interest, if the obligation upon which the tender is made carries interest;[39] and the tender must include interest up to, and including, the last day of grace;[40] and a tender, made after action has been commenced, in order to bar the recovery of subsequent interest and costs, must be of such sum as will cover the amount due, with interest to the day of the tender, and such costs as have accrued in the action up to that time,[41] the costs to be included in the sum tendered, comprehending everything accrued at the time of the tender or which must necessarily be expended by plaintiff in disposing of the matter of record, and such other items as plaintiff would be entitled to enter in the judgment.[42] Although a debtor does not in his estimate of the amount due include any interest, yet if, as a matter of fact, he tenders enough money to cover the actual debt and interest, the tender is good;[43] and if a contract for the payment of money at a certain time does not mention interest, a tender on the due day, of the principal without interest, is good.[44]

3. TENDER OF MORE THAN IS DUE AND DEMAND FOR CHANGE[45] — a. In General. Where a debtor offers in payment, as the sum due, a larger sum than is actually due, or such larger sum is offered in payment of a less sum and he does not expressly or impliedly request any change to be returned, the tender is not objectionable, for a tender of a greater sum includes the less sum;[46] but it is held that a

When an action is deemed to be commenced see ACTIONS, 1 Cyc. 747.

A failure upon request to state the amount of the costs, where they are fixed by statute, will not excuse a failure to tender the full amount. Willey v. Laraway, 64 Vt. 566, 25 Atl. 435. But a plaintiff upon request is bound to furnish information as to the costs, where the costs incurred are peculiarly within his knowledge; but where defendant with knowledge of the commencement of the suit made no inquiry, it was held that plaintiff was under no obligation to inform him that he had summoned witnesses Smith v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 133

Waiver of claim for costs.— If, at the time of making a tender of the amount of the debt, the debtor does not know that a suit has been commenced and the creditor does not inform him of that fact, nor make any claim for costs, but refuses to accept the amount tendered solely on the ground that it is insufficient to pay the debt, it is a waiver of all claims for costs. Jones v. Ames, Smith (Ind.) 133; Haskell v. Brewer, 11 Me. 258; Hull v. Peters, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 331. See Vreeland v. Waddell, 93 Wis. 107, 67 N. A slight deficiency will defeat the purpose of the tender, which must cover all the costs, the doctrine de minimis non curat lex not applying. Wright v. Behrens, 39 N. J. L. 413.

Attorney's fee.—Where the instrument sued on provides for payment of attorney's fees, the tender must include such fees. Seeligson v. Gifford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 100 S. W. 213; Sorrel v. Gifford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 100 S. W. 212; Bolton v. Gifford, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 140, 100 S. W. 210. See also supra, III, A, 1, note 31. Where a plaintiff, in good faith, has subpœnaed his witnesses in the usual mode, and has placed himself under a legal liability to pay them if they attend, he is entitled to a tender of their fees, and it makes no difference whether he has actually paid or tendered the witnesses their fees or not. tender of a larger amount than is due coupled with an express or implied request for change is bad.[47]

b. Waiver of Objection. The objection to a demand that change be furnished is waived if the tender is refused upon some other ground, as where a larger sum is demanded,[48] or where the tender is refused unless a certain amount be agreed upon as the sum due on a separate account,[49] or upon the ground that money offered was depreciated;[50] and it seems that a mere refusal to accept the amount tendered without specific objection that change is demanded waives the objection and validates the tender.[51]

4. Tender of Balance Over Offset. A legal tender cannot be made of the difference between the amount of an obligation for the payment of money and an offset,[52] particularly where the counter demand is unlawful.[53]

5. Tender on Several Demands. A person indebted upon two or more demands held by the same creditor may make a tender of one entire sum upon all the demands.[54] But if the tender is refused on the ground that the amount offered

Strong v. Harvey, 3 Bing. 307, 4 L. J. C. P. O. S. 57, 11 Moore C. P. 72, 11 E. C. L. 153 [explained in Hall v. Norwalk F. Ins. Co., 57 Conn. 105, 17 Atl. 356].

Interest coupons in the hands of the holder of the bond and not negotiated are not distinct debts, and a tender to the holder of the bond of the entire amount of the principal and interest is not a tender on two demands. Bailey v. Buchanan County, 115 N. Y. 297, 22 N. E. 155, 6 L. R. A. 562.

Where a person was indebted on different demands to several persons separately, and when they were together he tendered them one sum sufficient to satisfy all their demands, which they refused to receive on the ground that more was due, it was held to be a good tender. Black v. Smith, Peake N. P. 88, 3 Rev. Rep. 661.

is not sufficient to pay all the claims, and the amount offered is insufficient in fact, the tender will not be good as to any of the separate demands.[55] Conversely, a debtor may pay his debts separately, and may therefore designate upon what debt the money tendered is to apply;[56] and if there is a statute permitting a tender to be made after an action is commenced, and several distinct claims have been included in the complaint, a tender of the amount of one of the claims with costs of the action is a tender pro tanto under the statute.[57]

6. Waiver of Objection to Amount. An objection to the amount of a tender must be taken at the time the tender is made, otherwise it is waived;[58] and where the sum tendered is less than the sum due and the tender is refused by the creditor on some ground other than that the amount is too small, as where it is claimed that the contract is forfeited,[59] the tenderee waives the objection to the insufficiency of the amount;[60] but it has been held that if a tender of a certain sum is refused without assigning any reason and the sum offered is too small there is no waiver of the objection to the amount.[61] A waiver of the objection that the amount tendered is too small does not preclude the tenderee from recovering the whole amount due, nor will the acceptance of a less sum than is due preclude the recovery of the balance.[62]

B. Manner — 1. In General. The tenderer must do and offer everything that is necessary on his part to complete the transaction, and must fairly make known his purpose without ambiguity.[63] The tender must be made in good faith,[64] and must be definite and certain in character,[65] so as to leave no reasonable doubt that the tenderer intended at the time to make full and unconditional payment;[66] and the tenderee must be given an opportunity for intelligent action,[67] and to make an examination or inquiries pertaining to his rights in connection with the transaction in which the tender is being made; [68] and the tenderer must ordinarily declare upon what account the tender is made.[69]

2. Actual Offer. In making a tender there must be an actual offer by the tenderer to pay.[70] An announcement without more of an intention of making a tender is not sufficient,[71] nor is an assertion of readiness [72] or willingness to pay sufficient.[73]

In making a tender, the tenderer must have it in his power, at the time of his offer, to pay the amount due; [74] and must have title to the thing tendered; [75] and the actual ability to deliver the money must not only exist, but it must be made to appear at the time of the tender.[76] Mere

See Pinney v. Jorgenson, 27 Minn. 26, 6 N. W. 376, where it was held that it was error to exclude evidence that the tenderer then had the money with him.

Merely stating, "I will pay you the money I offered you yesterday," where the money ability to pay on the day fixed for payment is not sufficient,[77] nor is an ability to borrow;[78] but the money must be in the creditor's immediate control ready for delivery,[79] that is to say in his immediate possession or within convenient reach.[80]

4. Actual Production of Thing Tendered — a. In General. In order to make a valid tender of either money or chattels, the thing to be tendered must be actually produced and offered to the party entitled thereto, a mere offer to pay being insufficient;[81] and the tenderer must place the money or property in such a posi-was in a desk near by, was held not sufficient. It ought to appear that the money was there, capable of immediate delivery. Glasscott v. Day, 5 Esp. 48, 8 Rev. Rep. 828.

Where concurrent acts are to be performed, a refusal to perform by one party will ordinarily discharge the other, but before he will be entitled to claim the benefit of actual performance he must show upon his part that at the time for performance he was actually able to perform, for otherwise the performance by him would not be prevented by the declaration of the other party. Eddy v. Davis, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 637 [affirmed in 116 N. Y. 247, 22 N. E. 362]; Mills v. Huggins, 14 N. C. 58.

But where a third person was present with the money and joined in the offer the tender was held sufficient (Mathis v. Thomas, 101 Ind. 119); and an offer by a third person to go upstairs and fetch a certain sum which the debtor had offered to pay his creditor, where the offer was refused, has been held to constitute a tender (Harding v. Davis, 2 C. & P. 77, 31 Rev. Rep. 654, 12 E. C. L. 460).

Possession insufficient to validate tender. —A statement by a debtor that he can get the money in five minutes (Breed v. Hurd, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 356), or that he can get it the next morning (Blair v. Hamilton, 48 Ind. 32), does not constitute tender; nor does an offer to pay a certain sum if the creditor would go to a certain bank (Stakke v. Chapman, 13 S. D. 269, 83 N. W. 261), and where it appeared by evidence that at the time of making the offer the debtor did not have the money but could have got it in another city, the tender was held bad. Dungan v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 46 Md. 469. But on the other hand a refusal to receive the amount of a debt, on a statement by the debtor that he had the money in the bank in the same building, has been held to dispense with the actual production of the money (Smith v. Old Dominion Bldg., etc., Assoc., 119 N. C. 257, 26 S. E. 40), and where the tenderer has money in another bank in the same town and could have produced it, the tender was also held good (Steckel v. Standley, 107 Iowa 694, 77 N. W. 489); and it has even been held that where a mortgagee, after commencing foreclosure proceedings, demanded payment of the mortgage debt, a promise to pay as soon as the money could be obtained from the bank a few miles distant was a valid tender (Sharp v. Todd, 38 N. J. Eq. 324).

tion that his control over it is relinquished for a sufficient time to enable the tenderee, if he so desires, to reduce it to possession by merely reaching out and laying hold of the money or thing;[82] and a person is not bound to say whether or not he will accept the money or thing until it is produced.[83]

b. Counting Out Money. If a tender is made of the proper amount it is not necessary for the tenderer to count it out,[84] particularly where the counting out is waived by the tenderee refusing to receive the money,[85] it being the duty of the party who is to receive it to take it out and count it.[86]

c. Waiver. The actual production of the money is dispensed with if the party is ready and willing to pay the same, but is prevented by the party to whom it is due expressly saying that it need not be produced, as he would not accept it,[87] or if he declares that he will not receive it,[88] or refuses to remain until it is produced,[89] or repulses the debtor,[90] or makes some unjustifiable demand as a condition of accepting the tender.[91] So an actual production is waived where, the debtor being about to produce, the tenderee refused to receive, not on the ground that the tender is not produced, but upon some other and distinct ground,[92] or refuses to deal with the debtor, referring him to an attorney of the tenderee;[93] or where the agent to whom the offer is made denies having authority to receive the money, when he in fact has such authority.[94] Where a debtor goes to the place designated for payment, at the time appointed, with the money or thing to deliver it, and the person who is to receive it is not present, the money or thing need not be produced.[95] But the actual production of the money is held not to be dispensed with by a bare refusal to receive the sum proposed and demanding more;[96] and it is held that in order to establish a waiver there must be an existing capacity to perform.[97]

Tender to agent.— Where an agent or clerk authorized to receive payment fails to object to current bank-bills on the ground that they tender,[7] if the tender of the check is refused, not on the ground that it is not legal tender, but upon some other ground,[8] as that it is not drawn for the sum the creditor demands,[9] or that it is not made in time,[10] the objection to the check is waived and the tender is good as far as the medium of payment is concerned, and this rule extends to drafts[11] and certificates of deposit.[12] However, mere silence on the part of the tenderee as to his reason for refusing the tender does not constitute a waiver of the objection that the tender is made by check;[13] and so also there is no waiver if the creditor is not present at the time to object.[14]

D. Time and Place — 1. Time — a. In General. At common law a tender of money which a party is bound to pay at a certain time and place must be made on the day fixed for payment, and not thereafter.[15] This rule in some states has been changed by statute,[16] in others by the decisions of the courts;[17] and the general rule now is that in case of money demands where the amount is liquidated, or capable of being made so by mere computation, and the damages are merely the interest, a tender may be made after default at any time before action.[18] But are not legal tender the objection is waived and the tender is good. People v. Mayhew, 26 Cal. 655; Hoyt v. Byrnes, 11 Me. 475; Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 447, 19 L. ed. 207. But see Welch v. Frost, 1 Mich. 30, 48 Am. Dec. 692.

Tender before hour for closing business.— Upon the question whether a tender must be made at a convenient time before the expiration of an earlier hour than sunset, which by custom and usage in a particular business is the time limited for closing the daily business, it has been held that where a contract provided for the delivery of stock on a specified day, the tender made at the uttermost convenient time of the day fixed, before the usual time of shutting the books, was good. Lancashire v. Kellingworth, Comyns 116, 92 Eng. Reprint 991, 1 Ld. Raym. 686, 91 Eng. Reprint 1357, 12 Mod. 529, 88 Eng. Reprint 1498, 3 Salk. 242, 91 Eng. Reprint 862. But in a similar later case where it appeared that there was more business that day than could be transacted before the regular closing hour, and for that reason the books were again opened after that hour, a transfer made before the regular closing hour was held not a good tender. The court held that the general rule, which is that a tender must be made at the uttermost convenient time of the day, ought not to be broken through, except in cases of necessity, and that in the present case there was no necessity to break through it, because, as the books were again opened in the afternoon, the tender ought to have been made at the uttermost convenient time before the shutting of the books in the afternoon. Lancashire v. Kellingworth, Comyns

the sun sets so that the money may be counted or the goods examined by daylight;[26] but where no place for delivery is stipulated, it is held that a tender may be made at any time before midnight;[27] and a tender of specific articles in payment of a debt made after sunset where the creditor had been absent through the day has been held good.[28] If it happens that the parties meet at the place at an earlier hour of the last day, a tender may be made at that time.[29]

c. Premature Tender. A premature tender is generally held to be unavailable for most purposes.[30] But where payment may be made "on or before" a day named,[31] or within a certain time,[32] a tender may be made at any time after the date of the contract.

d. Tender After Action Brought. At common law a tender must be made by a debtor before the commencement of the action to recover the thing due.[33] By statute in some states, however, tender after suit is allowed, usually up to the commencement of trial,[34] in which event, however, it can be made only in

Where an action has been discontinued and another commenced, a tender made after the discontinuance and before the commencement of the second action is a tender before the action. Johnson v. Clay, 1 Moore C. P. 200, 7 Taunt. 486, 2 E. C. L. 459; 3 Bl. Comm. 304, note 19. the particular classes of cases mentioned in the statute;[35] and where the statute provides that a tender can only be made before the commencement of the trial, after the trial it comes too late;[36] and a statute authorizing a tender at any time before judgment is held not applicable to cases where plaintiff is bound to make a tender previous to suit to have a standing in court.[37] A tender after action commenced does not bar the farther prosecution of the action, but if otherwise sufficient it stops interest and subjects plaintiff to subsequent costs.[38]

e. Waiver of Objection to Time. Where a tender comes too late, a refusal solely upon some collateral ground is a waiver of the objection that the tender was not made in time;[39] and similarly where both parties treat a debt as then due, the tender being refused upon some other ground, the tenderee cannot defend on the ground that at the time of the tender the debt was not due.[40]

2. Place — a. Where Place Is Appointed. If, by contract, money is to be paid or goods are to be delivered at a certain place, a tender may,[41] and must,[42] be made at that place, and a tender at the place is sufficient, although the one to whom it is to be made be absent at the time.[43] A tender to the person at a place other than the one designated is good unless objected to on that ground.[44]

b. Where no Place Is Appointed. At common law with respect to the payment of money, or portable articles, where the time but no place of payment is specified, and no place of payment is fixed by law, the rule is that the tenderer must seek the tenderee and make a tender to him wherever he can be found,[45] and a tender anywhere to the person of the tenderee is good,[46] the tenderer being is invalid. But the tenderer may upon making a tender accompany it with a declaration, not a condition, that it satisfied the debt,[60] if the expression used amounts to no more than an assertion of what the tenderer claims to be due;[61] and a tender of performance may be accompanied by such conditions as to acceptance as are, by the contract, conditions precedent to be performed by the party to whom the tender is made,[62] and which therefore the tenderer has a clear right to exact;[63] and where mutual and concurrent acts are to be performed, the word "tender," as used in such connection, does not mean the same kind of offer as where it is used with reference to an offer to pay an ordinary debt due in money; but it only means readiness and willingness, accompanied with ability to do the thing required, and notice of a readiness to perform providing the other party will concurrently do the thing which he is requested to do,[64] and it has been held that a tender may be made conditional upon proof being produced that the party holding the claim has a right to receive payment, if circumstances exist which reasonably induce a belief in the tenderer that the tenderee has not such a right.[65] A creditor, accepting money tendered conditionally, assents to the condition, and cannot accept the money and reject the conditions on which it was tendered.[66]

however, that a tender under protest, reserving the right to dispute the amount due, if it does not impose any conditions on the tenderee, is good.[68]

3. Tender Conditioned Upon the Surrender of Evidence of Indebtedness or Security. An offer of the amount due on a negotiable instrument is held not a good tender where its acceptance is made conditional on the surrender of the instrument,[69] although there is authority to the contrary,[70] and to the effect that demanding a negotiable instrument but not making its surrender a condition to the tender of the money due thereon does not make a tender conditional and therefore invalid.[71] It is held that where there is no dispute as to the amount due, a tender may be made by an accommodation indorser of a note,[72] or by an accepter of a bill,[73] to depend upon the surrender of the note or bills. A tender of the amount of a mortgage debt may be coupled with a condition that the mortgagee surrender the mortgage and note or bond, or execute a release, cancellation, or satisfaction of the mortgage.[74]

4. Demanding Receipt or Discharge. A debtor cannot insist upon a receipt in full in respect to the particular claim upon which the tender is made, or a receipt in full for all demands, and if he does so he vitiates the tender;[75] nor can the offer be made conditional upon the debtor receiving a discharge.[76] A tender is held to be vitiated by coupling it with a demand for a receipt for the sum offered,[77] unless, as is the case in a few jurisdictions, a statute exists which allows a demand for a receipt.[78]

F. By Whom Made — 1. In General. A tender to be valid must be made by the debtor or someone representing him,[79] and a tender by a stranger to the contract is invalid.[80] But a tender may be made by an attorney, agent, or other person authorized to make it on behalf of the debtor,[81] and a tender may be made for an infant by his guardian;[82] and where the right to make a tender does not cease upon the death of a person, a tender may be made by his personal representatives, after qualification,[83] but not before.[84] A third person who has for a consideration agreed to pay the debt of another may tender the amount of the debt;[85] but where a tender is made by a third person, the creditor must be informed on whose behalf it is made, and if he is not so informed the tender is invalid.[86]

2. Joint Debtor. A tender may be made by one of two or more joint debtors,[87] and it seems that a joint tender of a gross sum by debtors bound severally is good.[88]

A tender of anything due a corporation should be made to the officer authorized to receive it, although there seems to be no uniform rule or custom relative to what officer of a corporation has such authority. If not lodged with the bank, any sum received by the bank to be debtor believed the agent to be the real party in interest.[96] Similarly a tender may be made to an attorney with whom the demand has been lodged for collection,[97] but not to an attorney whose authority is so restricted as not to include a power to accept tender,[98] although a tender to an attorney who is in fact adequately authorized is sufficient even though he disclaims authority.[99] But the tender as in other cases must be of the full amount of the debt.[1] The general rule is that a tender to a clerk in a store, of the amount due for goods purchased at such store, is equivalent to a tender to the proprietor;[2] but a tender to a mere servant without actual or apparent authority to receive the money is insufficient,[3] notwithstanding the fact that the tenderee is at the time absent from the state.[4]

3. To Joint Creditor. H. Tender of Specific Articles. Where the debt is payable in specific articles, the debtor must, at the time of payment, have the articles at the place of payment,[7] set apart and separated for identification;[8] and it is not enough that the tenderer has a large quantity at the place of tender,[9] whether the tenderee is there to receive them or not,[10] and the tenderee must be given a reasonable time and opportunity to ascertain his rights and examine the articles if he requests it.[11] If the debt is payable in either of two kinds of property, the tender must be wholly of one kind or of the other,[12] if payable in several kinds, the tender must be made of all the kinds and not of some only.[13] Property required by law to be surveyed, inspected, or sealed must be surveyed, inspected, or sealed before it is tendered.[14]

rule by a valid rejected tender made to the creditor, although it is not kept good.[20]

B. Manner — 1. In General. To keep a tender good, the party making it must keep the money so that he can produce it when demanded,[21] and a tender of money must be kept good in money.[22] The identical money tendered need not be kept, it being sufficient if similar current funds are kept on hand in readiness,[23] and before an action is commenced or a defense interposed based on a tender, the tender may be kept good by the tenderer keeping the money in his possession.[24] But the tenderer must not use the money, and if by so doing his readiness to pay at all times is impaired, using the money amounts to a withdrawal of the tender,[25] and some cases seem to go even further and to hold that subsequent use of the funds tendered vitiates the tender irrespective of the question of the impairment

But the tenderer cannot abandon the property (Gayle v. Suydam, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 271); he is bound to care for it, and may retain possession for the tenderee or store the goods for him (Dustan v. McAndrew, 44 N. Y. 72; Sheldon v. Skinner, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 525, 21 Am. Dec. 161).

The tenderee must resort to the specific articles tendered, and the person in whose possession they are holds them as bailee and at the tenderee's risk. Fordyce v. Hathorn, 57 Mo. 120; Slingerland v. Morse, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 474.

If the thing tendered be a note, bond, mortgage, deed, or other instrument, defendant must plead that he has always been and still is ready with the money or thing tendered, and it must be in court on the trial. of the debtor's ability to pay.[26] A tender is abandoned by requesting a return, and receiving back the money tendered,[27] or departing with the property,[28] or destroying it.[29]

2. Depositing Money. It is not necessary that a person who makes a tender should keep the money on his person ready to be paid the instant it is demanded.[30] He may deposit it in a bank or other place for safe-keeping,[31] in some states express statutory authority to do so being found.[32] But the deposit if in bank must be special,[33] and such deposit does not place the money at the risk of the tenderee.[34]

tender are, however, very strict;[36] and to effect this result there must be an actual subsequent demand[37] by the tenderee or by an agent duly authorized to accept the tender[38] upon the tenderer or someone duly authorized by him to receive the tender,[39] for the precise sum tendered,[40] and legally due.[41] The demand must be at a reasonable time or place, and if either the time or place is unreasonable the debtor is entitled to a reasonable opportunity to comply.[42]

V. EFFECT OF TENDER.

A. In General. Ordinarily a tender of money does not operate as a satisfaction of the debt,[43] and is no bar to an action thereon;[44] the effect, when the tender is maintained, being to discharge the debtor from a liability for interest subsequent to the tender,[45] or damages that would accrue by reason of non-performance,[46] and costs afterward incurred.[47] A tender of money does not, unless accepted, vest any title thereto in the party to whom the tender is made,[48] nor is an unaccepted tender such a part performance as will take a contract out of the statute of frauds.[49]

B. On Collateral Benefits, Securities, and Liens. Although a creditor by refusing to accept does not forfeit his right to the thing tendered, he does lose all collateral benefits or securities.[50] Thus a valid legal tender of the amount of a lien debt, such as a mortgage lien on real estate,[51] chattels,[52] a tax lien,[53] a mechanic's lien,[54] or the lien of a pledge [55] discharges the lien and leaves the creditor to his personal claim against the debtor,[56] although the rule seems to be otherwise as to the lien of a judgment.[57] A tender in full performance of the secured contract discharges a surety.[58]

form,[60] or is made in a case where a valid legal tender cannot be made;[61] and it dispenses with proof of everything that would otherwise be necessary to enable plaintiff to recover upon the obligation or cause of action sued upon to the extent of the sum admitted to be due.[62] But a tender is not an admission of liability beyond the amount tendered,[63] nor does it necessarily admit all the alleged grounds for recovery.[64] Evidence that a tender was made under a mistaken belief by the tenderer that the sum tendered was due has been held to be admissible to rebut the inference that a debt was thereby admitted,[65] and it has been held that if more was tendered than is admitted by the plea to be due, the tender is not conclusive as to the surplus,[66] and that notwithstanding a tender it may be shown that the debt was paid before tender made.[67] A distinction is made between a tender in a suit and a tender which has been made before trial but not relied upon in the pleadings of the party who made it, nor the money brought into court, the former being held an admission of liability and conclusive, while the latter, although held to be an admission of liability, is not conclusive.[68]

As dispensing with written promise to pay debts of another.—A plea of tender admits defendant's liability on the contract or cause of action to which the plea relates, so that a promise to pay the debt of another need not be proved to be in writing. A plea of tender will not cure a defect in a complaint failing to allege demand (Letcher v. Taylor, Hard. It precludes defendant from introducing evidence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, either as to the merits of the action or in mitigation of damages. Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 581.

Its weight is to be considered by the court or jury over against a subsequent denial of all liability or an assertion of a liability for a less sum than tendered. The defendant is not precluded from stating the reasons or object in making the tender; that it was his desire to close the transaction and avoid litigation, or that, at the time, he thought the tender was necessary to save certain rights, or that it was made under the mistaken belief that the sum was due"]; Ashuelot R. ance of a tender ordinarily constitutes payment and discharges the debtor.[60] But to have this effect there must be an express acceptance,[70] or such conduct on the part of the tenderee as would in law be construed as an acceptance, as where a tenderee with whom money has been left against his will refuses to surrender it.[71] Moreover, the acceptance of a smaller sum than is legally due does not necessarily satisfy the whole debt, and may be considered a payment pro tanto;[72] but, if the claim be unliquidated, or is one about which there is a bona fide dispute as to the amount due, and a tender is made of a sum upon an express or implied condition that if received it must be in full satisfaction and it is accepted, it is taken subject to the conditions attached,[73] and the creditor cannot, against the consent of the debtor, prescribe the terms of acceptance,[74] and no protest, so long as the condition is insisted upon, can vary the result.[75] An acceptance of a tender is a waiver of the objection that it comes too late,[76] or to an objection to the place of tender or to the quality of the money tendered;[77] and acceptance after a forfeiture is a waiver of the forfeiture and of the effects thereof.[78]

tenderer, if the tender is refused, becomes the bailee of the tenderee,[81] who, if the goods are withheld, may maintain replevin or trover therefor as he may elect;[82] and although, after tender and the consequent arising of the bailment relation, the tenderer in breach of his duty as bailee allows the articles to be lost or destroyed, this will not affect the result that the debt is paid by the tenderer,[83] although the rule seems to be otherwise where the tenderer after the tender is refused treats the property as his own and sells it.[84]

VI. PLEADING, PAYING MONEY INTO COURT, AND PROCEDURE THEREUPON.

A. Pleading Tender — 1. NECESSITY. A litigant relying upon a tender before suit must plead it,[85] and it cannot at common law be proved under a general issue or denial,[86] although under statute in some of the states evidence of a tender may be given under the general issue.[87] Where the tender is collateral to the action, as having operated to extinguish or suspend plaintiff's title to the specific property sued for, or right to the possession, it need not be pleaded.[88] A tender which was not pleaded in an action in a lower court cannot be pleaded in the appellate court.[89]

2. NATURE OF PLEA. A plea of tender is a plea in bar of costs and damages occurring subsequently to the rejection of the tender,[90] and in some cases is held to be a plea in bar of the action.[91] It was originally considered in the nature of a dilatory plea and was construed with strictness, but is now considered a plea to the merits.[92]

3. Manner of Pleading, and Sufficiency of Allegations — a. In General. In pleading tender there must be allegations of all facts necessary to establish a legal tender,[93] and the circumstances of the tender should be pleaded with particularity.[94] A refusal must be alleged as the refusal as well as the tender is traversable;[95] and in equity, if the tender is the foundation of the cause of action, without which the suit could not be maintained, the complaint must aver all the facts which are necessary in pleading a tender at law.[96] A plea of tender to a part of an entire claim is not good, without in the same plea, in some way, disposing of the residue of the claim by alleging payment, set-off, or that no more

In Vermont a tender of amends and costs under the statute (Gen. St. c. 25, § 44) is not the subject of a plea in bar; its effect is only on the subsequent costs (Adams v. Morgan, 39 Vt. 302; Smith v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 133); and in scire facias against the recognizer on an appeal-bond a tender affects only the claim for additional costs (Holmes v. Woodruff, 20 Vt. 97).

Strictness in alleging tender in equity.— It is frequently stated that the same strictness in alleging a tender is not required in equity as at law, but the confusion arises as a result of the courts failing to distinguish between those cases where the tender is important only as bearing upon the question of costs, where the rights of the party is not dependent upon a tender, and those cases where the tender affects a particular result, such as the discharge of a lien, where it is the very foundation upon which the right to relief rests. See Glos v. Goodrich, 175 Ill. 20, 51 N. E. 643; Livingston County Bd. v. Henneberry, 41 Ill. 179; Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254; Binford v. Boardman, 44 Iowa 53; Breitenbach v. Turner, 18 Wis. 140.

than the sum tendered was ever due; otherwise the residue will stand admitted and the plea would be bad as alleging an offer of a part only.[97]

b. Particular Allegations — (I) PLACE. The place where the tender was made must be set out with particularity.[98]

(II) TIME. The time a tender was made must be alleged with definiteness,[99] and that it was made before the action was commenced,[1] unless the tender is one authorized by statute to be made after action brought, in which case there must be an averment of a tender of a specific amount upon the debt and a certain amount for costs.[2]

(III) MEDIUM AND AMOUNT. The precise amount offered must be alleged if the tender was in money,[3] and the money tendered must be described sufficiently so that its nature may be determined.[4] In case of chattels tendered,

Time of day.— If the allegations show that the tenderee was present, it is sufficient to state that the tender was made to him on a certain day; but if the party who was to receive was absent from the place of performance, the pleader must allege the tender to have been made at the uttermost convenient time of the day fixed for performance. they must be so described that they can be distinguished and known.[5] If the articles were to be of a certain value, or a sum of money was payable in chattels, the value must be stated positively,[6] and, if they were to be appraised, an appraisal according to the contract must be alleged.[7]

(IV) CONTINUING READINESS. If the debt or duty is discharged by a tender, or the tender is relied upon as a defense to a foreclosure of a lien or the enforcement of some collateral right, it is sufficient without more, to plead the tender and refusal,[8] and in pleading a tender of chattels it is not necessary to plead a continuing readiness to pay.[9] But where the debt or duty remains after a tender and refusal, it is not enough for the party who pleads the tender, in an action to recover the debt, or damages for a failure to perform the duty, to plead the tender and refusal alone, but he must plead that ever since the tender he has at all times been and still is ready and willing to pay the money or perform the duty,[10] and where it is necessary to keep the tender good, the rule in equity in reference to pleading continued readiness to pay is no less strict than at law.[11]

(V) PROFERT IN CURIA. Where the debt or duty is not discharged by a tender and refusal, and the tender is made the ground of the cause of action or defense, the tenderer must plead in addition to a continuing readiness a profert in curia, that is, that the money has already been brought into court or is now

court.[26] The rule applies to justices' courts,[27] to courts of admiralty,[28] and to all inferior courts exercising civil jurisdiction;[29] and the practice extends to actions for the recovery of an unliquidated sum in cases where the statute permits a tender to be made;[30] and generally if a tender and refusal is made the basis of a proceeding, or of a cause of action at law or in equity, in cases where, but for the tender and refusal, the right to relief at the time of commencing the action or proceeding would not have existed, the amount tendered must be brought into court.[31] But where the right to relief is not dependent upon a tender and refusal, it is not necessary to bring the money into court,[32] and if a sum is tendered which, in an action by the tenderer upon the obligation, is a proper set-off in behalf of the tenderee, the money need not be brought in.[33]

court.[34] But where a tender and refusal is held not to extinguish a lien unless kept good, the money must be brought into court at the time of commencing an action or interposing a defense based upon the tender,[35] and even where a lien is discharged by a tender and refusal, if the tender is made the basis of affirmative relief, either by plaintiff or defendant, the money must be brought into court.[36]

c. Effect of Failure to Pay. Bringing money into court is a requirement for plaintiff's benefit,[37] and he is entitled to have it brought in before he takes issue on the plea,[38] and a plea of tender with profert in curia without the profert being made good by the actual deposit of the money in court is bad,[39] and the pleading may be returned by plaintiff,[40] or the plea stricken from the record,[41] or the allegation of tender from the answer,[42] and judgment entered on the plea.[43] But this can be done only where the plea or tender goes to the whole issue, and a judgment as for want of a plea which goes only to a part of the cause of action will be set aside as irregular,[44] and in such case a motion should be made to strike out the plea of tender.[45] Plaintiff may also apply for an order directing the money to be brought into court nunc pro tunc, and in default thereof that the plea be stricken,[46] and if after trial and the issue of tender found for defendant, it appears that the money has not been brought into court, plaintiff is entitled to judgment.[47] Where a plea of tender with profert in curia goes only to the question of interest and costs and the money has not been brought in, the court on its own motion may interfere to save its own time from waste on immaterial issues,[48] a failure to make good the profert in curia being an irregularity to be dealt with summarily by the court.[49]

d. Waiver. Payment into court being a requirement in favor of plaintiff, he may waive it,[50] as by neglecting to bring the irregularity to the attention of the court and taking issue on the plea of tender.[51] The waiver has been held, however, to be merely of the right to sign judgment as for want of a plea, or to have the plea summarily stricken out, and plaintiff may object to the irregularity upon motion for an order requiring the money to be brought in,[52] or he may at the trial object to the introduction of any evidence in support of the plea of tender, or ask that the jury be instructed to disregard the evidence of a tender, or that instructions be given as to the consequences of the money not being in court.[53] If the money is brought in before plaintiff moves for relief the irregularity is cured,[54] and there is held to be no waiver of the defect of failure to pay into court by retaining the answer for the purpose of replying to the other defenses.[55]

2. Time of Payment. The payment into court should generally be made when the tender is pleaded.[56] In some states, however, the matter is regulated by statutes prescribing the time when payment into court must be made, in which case a compliance with the statute is sufficient.[57]

3. Amount to Be Paid. In keeping good a tender made before suit the tenderer should pay into court the same amount as was tendered;[58] but where the tender is made, after action brought, the costs of the action already incurred must be brought into court along with the amount of plaintiff's demand admitted to be due by the plea.[59]

4. Medium of Payment. Where a plea is of a tender of legal tender money, the money brought in must be a legal tender,[60] although not necessarily the identical money that was tendered;[61] and where money is tendered, a certificate of

If a specific kind of money was offered, the kind must be stated in the plea and a profert made of that very money, if defend-deposit for the same, payable either to the order of the clerk or to the creditor, cannot be brought in,[62] nor a check;[63] but if a bank check was tendered, the tender may be kept good in money, and the money, not the check, brought into court;[64] and, although the tender was in money, objection that a check instead of money was paid into court comes too late after final decree and upon petition for rehearing.[65] It is a general rule that ponderous specific articles which have been tendered need not be brought into court;[66] but it is otherwise, where the property is not cumberous but such as a man carries about on his person,[67] and where notes, bonds, or mortgages are offered in satisfaction of a debt, the tender must be kept good, and the tender pleaded with profert in curia and the securities brought into court. Owing to the peculiar nature of the property the tender is held not to be governed by the rules applicable to specific chattels, but is like a tender of money.[68]

5. Notice of Payment. In some jurisdictions notice of payment into court must be given plaintiff's attorney,[69] and if notice is not given the plea is irregular.[70] But plaintiff, by proceeding without objecting that no notice was served, waives the irregularity,[71] although the service of such notice is not waived by a failure to return, or otherwise raise the question before trial, where the answer contains other defenses that must be met.[72]

6. To Whom Paid. The money must be delivered to the clerk of the court,[73] and his custody is that of the court.[74] If a statute so provides payment may be to the court itself,[75] and in a justice's court where a tender is pleaded, the money is paid direct to the justice in open court.[76] If a statute directs that the money be deposited in a bank or with a trust company, or with a constable or other officer, it must be deposited with the person or depositary designated.[77] If money, deposited with a clerk, does not become a fund in court, by reason of not being brought in, in support of a tender, or in compliance with an order of the court, where such an order is necessary, the clerk does not receive it officially, but receives it, it is held, merely as the agent of the depositor,[78] and the money thus deposited may under these circumstances at any time be withdrawn by him.[79]

7. Effect.[80] A plea of tender and bringing the money into court is an admission of plaintiff's cause of action to the extent of the amount alleged to have been tendered, and brought into court, and dispenses with the necessity for all that proof which plaintiff would otherwise be required to produce in order to recover the amount brought in,[81] and defendant cannot thereafter object to the form of the action,[82] or that the action was prematurely brought;[83] and where tender and payment is of the difference between plaintiff's demand and set-off, it admits that the entire demand is due.[84] But tender and payment into court does not admit liability for more than what is tendered or all alleged grounds of recovery, and defendant may interpose any consistent defense, showing that he is not liable in a greater sum.[85]

8. Withdrawal of Money Paid in — a. By Tenderer. A party pays money into court on a tender at his peril,[86] for the money paid in belongs absolutely to the party for whose account it is paid, and remains subject to his order, and the tenderer cannot ordinarily withdraw it,[87] even though the money was paid by generally held that money brought into court on a plea of tender in an action to recover a debt may be withdrawn by plaintiff at any time, and the balance, if any, recovered,[97] although plaintiff replies that the tender was not made before action,[98] or that the amount is insufficient;[99] but if the money is brought into court upon a plea setting up a conditional tender, where a conditional tender can be made, a withdrawal of the money amounts to an acceptance of the tender as made,[1] and it is sometimes held that the tender itself is conditional upon acceptance extinguishing the whole demand, in which case if the money is withdrawn the balance cannot be recovered.[2] Withdrawing the money is a waiver of all objections to the money.[3]

D. Evidence. The burden of proving a tender rests upon the party alleging a tender,[4] and tenders being stricti juris, nothing being presumed in their favor,[5] the evidence thereof should be full, clear, and satisfactory, so as to leave no reasonable doubt that the one to whom it was made understood it at the time to be a present, absolute, and unconditional tender in payment of the debt or claim.[6] The tenderer must prove that he was able, ready, and willing to pay;[7] must prove are uncontroverted, the question whether a tender has been made is purely a question of law.[24]

F. Judgment. If after money has been brought into court on a tender, plaintiff elects to take the money tendered, the money will be ordered paid over to him and a judgment entered dismissing the action.[25] So if plaintiff takes issue on the plea of tender and fails to prove any more to be due than the sum tendered and brought into court such tender bars the right to a judgment for plaintiff for the amount tendered. Defendant is entitled to a judgment and plaintiff to the sum paid in.[26] If plaintiff proves liability for more than the amount tendered, he may have judgment for the balance or for the whole amount, the amount tendered being credited as a payment on the judgment.[27]

TENEMENT FACTORY. As defined by the English Factory and Workshop Act of 1901, a factory where mechanical power is supplied to different parts of the same building occupied by different persons for the purpose of any manufacturing process or handicraft, in such manner that those parts constitute in law separate factories.[4]

TENEMENT-HOUSE. A community-house occupied by persons of small means, the distinguishing characteristics of which are the use in common of certain facilities by people crowded into insufficient space and deprived of many of the essentials of privacy, decency, and health;[5] a house with distinct tenements or homes, which separate different families or persons occupy as tenants;[6] a building having tenements occupied by poor families;[7] a building, the different rooms or parts of which are let for residence purposes by the possessor to others, as distinct tenements, so that each tenant, as to the room or rooms occupied by him, would sustain to the common landlord the same relation that the tenant occupying a whole house would to his landlord;[8] a house or block of buildings divided into dwellings occupied by separate families;[9] often in modern usage, an inferior dwelling-house rented to poor persons, or a dwelling erected for the purpose of being rented.[10]

"It may consist of a single room or of contiguous rooms, or of rooms upon different stories, if such rooms are controlled by a single person and are used in connection with each other. The fact (if it were so) that one of the rooms was occupied and used as a shop, and another for a living room or kitchen, by the same person, would not make these rooms distinct tenements." TENOR EST PACTIO CONTRA COMMUNEM FEUDI NATURAM AC RATIONEM, IN CONTRACTU INTERPOSITA. A maxim meaning "Tenure is a compact contrary to the common nature and reason of the fee, put into a contract." [21]

TENOR EST QUI LEGEM DAT FEUDO. A maxim meaning "It is the tenor of the feudal grant which regulates its effect and extent." [22]

TENOR INVESTITURÆ EST INSPICIENDUS. A maxim meaning "The tenor of an investiture is to be scrutinized." [23]

TENT. In the ordinary acceptation of the word, a pavilion, portable lodge, or canvas house, enclosed with walls of cloth and covered with the same material.[24] (Tent: Right of City to Prohibit Erection Within Fire Limits, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 28 Cyc. 742 note 89.)

TENTATIVE TRUST. A suggested or proposed trust, not completed or consummated.[25] (See TRUSTS.)

TENTERDEN'S ACT. The statute of 9 Geo. IV, c. 14, taking its name from Lord Tenterden, which is an extension of the statute of frauds.[26] (See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, 20 Cyc. 195.)

TENURE.[27] In its technical sense, the manner whereby lands or tenements are holden, or the service that the tenant owes to his lord; [28] the estate in the land; [29] the mode by which one holds an estate in land.[30] (Tenure: Of Office, see Cross-References Under TERM, post, p. 184. "In its legal signification, as applied to any instrument, it is generally employed to state a result or conclusion, and not the condition or stipulation. For example, it is frequently found in points, arguments, and pleadings, thus: the agreement, though it does not expressly, yet in terms it does, etc.; thus giving the effect of all its provisions." Walsh v. Mehrback, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 448, 449.

As employed in respect to leases the word embraces the covenants and conditions which impose, confer and limit the respective obligations and rights of the landlord and tenant during the continuance of the tenancy; such as the extent and manner of the use of the premises; quiet enjoyment; rent and its amount, mode and time of payment; repairs; payment of taxes, and the like express or implied agreements. "Used in the civil law to denote 'the space of time granted to the debtor for discharging his obligation;' these are express terms resulting from the positive stipulations of the agreement, as 'where one undertakes to pay a certain sum on a certain day,' and also terms which tacitly result from the nature of the things which are the object of the engagement, or from the place where the act is agreed to be done. For instance, if a builder engage to construct a house for me, I must allow a reasonable time for fulfilling his engagement." Bouvier L. Dict. I. DEFINITION, NATURE, AND CLASSIFICATION.

A. Definition and Nature. By a division older than the federal constitution itself the American domain is recognized as consisting of "states" and "territories belonging to the United States," [1] and the same division is recognized in the constitution,[2] and by the courts.[3] Particular subdivisions of territory

1. See Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 434, 441, 20 L. ed. 659 (holding that as early as 1784 an ordinance was adopted by the congress of the confederation providing for the division of all the territory ceded or to be ceded, into states, with boundaries ascertained by the ordinance. These states were severally authorized to adopt for their temporary government the constitution and laws of any one of the states, and provision was made for their ultimate admission by delegates into the congress of the United States); Ex p. Morgan, 20 Fed. 298, 304 [citing Schouler Hist. U. S. 98] (where the court says: "We find a continental resolution of October 10, 1780, to be the foundation of our territorial system. This declares that the 'demesne or territorial lands shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States and be settled and formed into distinct republican states, which shall become members of the federal Union and have the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as other states'").

2. U. S. Const. art. 4, § 3.

"It is remarkable how silent the Constitution is on the subject of a Territory so called, that is, an organized government within the Union, but not of it. Once only does the word 'territory' occur in the Constitution, and then it is the 'territory or other property,' of which Congress is to 'dispose': none of these being very apt expressions to describe political legislation for a territorial government." 7 Op. Atty.-Gen. 574.

3. See Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 317, 319, 5 L. ed. 98, where Chief Justice Marshall, construing the phrase the belonging to the United States have come to be known specifically as "territories," [4] a term often loosely used,[5] and defined to be political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States,[6] the relation of which to the general

"United States," observes: "Does this term designate the whole, or any particular portion of the American empire? Certainly, this question can admit of but one answer. It is the name given to our great republic, which is composed of states and territories. The District of Columbia, or the territory west of Missouri, is not less within the United States, than Maryland or Pennsylvania"

4. See Reynolds v. People, 1 Colo. 179; Territory v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. 397, 41 N. W. 746, 3 L. R. A. 355; Territory v. Scott, 3 Dak. 357, 20 N. W. 401; Treadway v. Schnauber, 1 Dak. 236, 46 N. Other definitions are: "An outlying province of the national government." Territory v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. 397, 41 N. W. 746, 748, 3 L. R. A. 355.

"A portion of the country not included within the limits of any state, and not yet admitted as a state into the Union, but organized under the laws of congress, with a separate legislature, under a territorial governor and other officers appointed by the president and senate of the United States." Ex p. Morgan, 20 Fed. 298, 305 [quoted in Kopel v. Bingham, 211 U. S. 468, 475, 29 S. Ct. 190, 53 L. ed. 286].

"Mere dependencies of the United States, exercising delegated powers." People v. Daniels, 6 Utah 288, 291, 22 Pac. 159, 5 L. R. A. 444.

"Portions of the United States not yet created into states." Territory v. Long Bell Lumber Co., 22 Okla. 890, 897, 99 Pac. 911.

"A territory is . . . a vast municipal or public corporation created by congress, and deriving all its powers from the source of its creation. It is a great body politic and corporate, invested with subordinate legislative powers, to facilitate the due and proper administration of its own internal affairs, and to promote the general welfare of the municipality." Treadway v. Schnauber, 1 Dak. 236, 46 N. W. 464, 475.

The domain of the Cherokee nation has been held to be neither a state nor a territory. It has an autonomy but it does not come within the meaning of either a state or territory, but is a part of what is called "Indian country." Ex p. Morgan, 20 Fed. 298. Compare Peck Steamship Line v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 2 Porto Rico Fed. 109, 127. On the other hand a statute in reference to a certificate by the governor of a state or territory annexed to certain deeds has been held to include the Cherokee nation. Whitsett v. Forehand, 79 N. C. 230, 232.

government is much the same as that which counties bear to the several states.[7] Although the term is sometimes used as not including all the territorial possessions of the United States, but only the portions thereof organized and exercising governmental functions under act of congress,[8] it may now be considered as applicable to any political unit subject exclusively to the federal government whose power thereover it is held to be that makes the subdivision a "territory" rather than its geographical location,[9] or the particular form of government with which it is, more or less temporarily, invested.[10] Nor does the term "territory" apply solely to embryo states.[11] Alaska is one of the territories of the

The term "state" does not include territories within the contemplation of the federal constitution. Seton v. Hanham, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 374; Hepburn v. Ellzey, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 445, 452, 2 L. ed. 332. Nor is a territory a "state" within the meaning of the judiciary acts (Smith v. U. S., 1 Wash. Terr. 262, 268; In re Murphy, 5 Wyo. 297, 303, 40 Pac. 398; Miners Bank v. Iowa, 12 How. (U. S.) 1, 6, 18 L. ed. 867; Scott v. Jones, 5 How. (U. S.) 343, 377, 12 L. ed. 181; New Orleans v. Winter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 91, 94, 4 L. ed. 44; Darst v. Peoria, 13 Fed. 561, 564); nor within the meaning of an act forbidding the transfer of lottery tickets "from one state to another" (U. S. v. Ames, 95 Fed. 453, 455). But it is held that a territory is included within the term "state" as used in the federal pilotage and seamen's acts (The Abercorn, 26 Fed. 877, 879 [affirmed in 28 Fed. 384]; The Ullock, 19 Fed. 207, 212, 9 Sawy. 634; In re Bryant, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,067, Deady 118, 121; The Panama, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,702, Deady 27, 31, 1 Oreg. 418); in the National Banking Act (Silver Bow County v. Davis, 6 Mont. 306, 310, 12 Pac. 688 [affirmed in 139 U. S. 438, 11 S. Ct. 594, 35 L. ed. 210]); and in the phrase "the States of the Union" as that phrase is used in the consular convention of Feb. 23, 1853, with France (De Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 260, 10 S. Ct. 295, 33 L. ed. 642).

8. In re Lane, 135 U. S. 443, 10 S. Ct. 760, 34 L. ed. 219, holding that it is so used in 25 U. S. St. at L. 658, c. 120 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3630], making certain acts criminal, but exempting the territories from the operation of such act.

9. The notion that a territory must be contiguous to the continental domain passed away with the annexation of Hawaii and its organization as a territory if not indeed with the acquisition of Alaska. With the (now) prospective admission of New Mexico and Arizona into the Union the last of the "contiguous" territories will have disappeared, and the territorial law of the future must deal with "outlying possessions." As their territorial status appears likely to be permanent or at least indefinite the formation of a colonial or territorial department for the better and uniform administration of these possessions would seem to be imperative. At present the Philippines are under the authority of the war department, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Alaska under the interior, and Guam and Tutuila under the navy department.

District of Columbia.—"All that part of the territory of the United States included within the limits of the District of Columbia" (16 U. S. St. at L. 419, c. 62), has been treated since the beginning of the nineteenth century as a public corporation with all the powers of a territory. Yet its forms of government during that period has varied from that of a municipality to that of a fully organized territory with legislative and executive as well as judicial branches. See Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 132 U. S. 1, 10 S. Ct. 19, 33 L. ed. 231; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440.

United States,[12] and the Philippines have been judicially declared a territory of the United States,[13] as has also been Porto Rico.[14]

B. Classification and Status — 1. In General. Territories have not all exactly the same status and have been classified into incorporated and unincorporated territories,[15] incorporated territories being those which have become part of the United States proper, and not merely a part of its domain, and which are entitled to the benefits of the constitution, including the first ten amendments, and which are held to be as much a part of the United States as are the states where it is said that whether it is founded or not, congress is possessed of a fear that the word "teritory" has something in it that imports a promise of statehood to the section of country so characterized; but that history does not support this fear, because California became a state in 1850 without ever having been a territory, and the Indian territory has just been given an enabling act, without ever having been organized. And see Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 S. Ct. 770, 45 L. ed. 1088. Compare Nelson v. U. S., 30 Fed. 112.

A contrary view is taken in Territory v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. 397, 41 N. W. 746, 749, 3 L. R. A. 355, where the court observes that "it has sometimes been said that the territory is an 'embryo state,'" and in Territory v. Scott, 3 Dak. 357, 20 N. W. 401, the same court said: "The ultimate purpose is that every portion of its territory shall, as soon as practicable, be organized into states which shall take their equal place and part in the Union. The territorial condition is but a necessary incident of immaturity. Every essential element of statehood is there, and the policy of the government has always been to employ this period as one of preparation by clothing the territories with the paraphernalia and investing them with many of the duties and privileges of statehood." Similarly in Ex p. Morgan, 20 Fed. 298, 305, it is said that a territory, under the constitution and laws of the United States, is an inchoate state, a portion of the country not included in the Union, but organized under the laws of congress, with a separate legislature, under a territorial governor and other officers appointed by the president and senate of the United States. These expressions, although entirely obiter, and necessarily nothing more than mere personal opinion, find some support in the language used in Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 548, 38 L. ed. 331. But all of these decisions were rendered before the latest annexation of Spanish territory and the organization of the territory of Hawaii, disclosing a different policy on the part of congress.

They came under the complete and absolute sovereignty and dominion of the United States, and so became territory of the United States over which civil government could be established); Matter of Patterson, 1 Philippine 97, per Arellano, C. Porto Rico has been de facto and de jure American territory since April 11, 1899. Ponce v. Roman Catholic Apostolic Church, 210 U. S. 296, 309, 28 S. Ct. 737, 52 L. ed. 1068.

"Porto Rico is substantially a territory of the United States, over which all the general laws of Congress properly applicable to territories, and not in terms locally inapplicable, are in full force and effect. . . . It would appear that Porto Rico is in fact more of an organized territory than some of the older jurisdictions, because it has what no other territory, save Hawaii, has; that is, a separate court of the United States, presumably to enforce United States laws as a part of its jurisdiction, wholly distinct from the local insular courts, which form a complete and ample local system in themselves." Peck Steamship Line v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 2 Porto Rico Fed. 109, 129, an action for damages under the federal antitrust act.

15. Rasmussen v. U. S., 197 U. S. 516, 25 S. Ct. 514, 49 L. ed. 862 (where, however, the court indicates its disapproval of the classification); Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 S. Ct. 770, 45 L. ed. 1088. And see 41 Am. L. Rev. 254, article by David K. Watson.

themselves;[16] and unincorporated territories being those which have not been made part of the United States for all purposes,[17] and to which federal legislation does not uniformly extend.[18] But none of them is in any sense foreign,[19] nor is any of them sovereign,[20] save in the sense that in the absence of statutory authorization it is immune from suits by private individuals in its own courts.[21] The territory is a body politic, however, and may maintain suits in its own name,[22] and may make contracts.[23]

2. Status of Inhabitants; Naturalization. The treaty of cession may or may not extend the rights of citizenship to the inhabitants of the newly acquired territory, but in either event full participation in political power can only be conferred by act of congress.[24] But even in the absence of naturalization such event all their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property, or of its proceeds; and they also had the right to carry on their industry, commerce, and professions, being subject in respect thereof to such laws as are applicable to other foreigners. In case they remained in the territory they might preserve their allegiance to the crown of Spain by making, before a court of record, within a year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty, a declaration of their decision to preserve such allegiance; in default of which declaration they were held to have renounced it and to have adopted the nationality of the territory in which they resided. Section 4 of the Philippine bill provides: "That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the eleventh day of April, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, and then resided in said Islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands and as such entitled to the protection of the United States, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace." II. BOUNDARIES.

The boundaries of a territory are usually fixed in the organic act or in the treaty of cession,[29] which must be resorted to for determining proprietary, as well as sovereign, rights of the federal government in such territory.[30] But failure to so fix them will not impair the government's title, especially where the description is insufficient for identification and the boundaries have been practically identified by concurrent action of the interested nations,[31] and the omission of some of the technical terms used in ordinary conveyances of real estate will not impair the government's title.[32]

III. GOVERNMENT.

A. Form; Organic Acts. A provisional government of newly acquired territory may be established by congress or, even before congress acts, by the executive and military authorities.[33] The laws of such a government abrogate

This enactment has been called "the most famous statute in American history" and was passed by the Continental Congress to govern the relations between the Northwest Territory and the Confederation, just as those of the different states to each other were given by the articles of confederation which, rather than the constitution, framed later, are to be consulted in construing the ordinance. Control over elective franchise.— "It rests with Congress to say whether, in a given case, any of the people, resident in the Territory, shall participate in the election of its officers or the making of its laws; and it legislate for them as a state does for the municipal organizations,[40] and may annul the acts of a territorial legislature either directly,[41] or indirectly, by passing inconsistent legislation,[42] and may not only abrogate laws of the territorial legislatures but may legislate directly for the local government.[43] It may make a void act of the territorial legislature valid, and a valid act void.[44] But the power of congress may, therefore, take from them any right of suffrage it may previously have conferred, or at any time modify or abridge it, as it may deem expedient. The right of local self-government, as known to our system as a constitutional franchise, belongs, under the Constitution, to the States and to the people thereof, by whom that Constitution was ordained, and to whom by its terms all power not conferred by it upon the government of the United States was expressly reserved. The personal and civil rights of the inhabitants of the Territories are secured to them, as to other citizens, by the principles of constitutional liberty which restrain all the agencies of government, State and National; their political rights are franchises which they hold as privileges in the legislative discretion of the Congress of the United States." This power of congress has been very rarely exercised in most of the territories and never perhaps in the history of Dakota. Territory v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. 397, 41 N. W. 746, 3 L. R. A. 355. Compare Territory v. Scott, 3 Dak. 357, 20 N. W. 401.

Congressional acts must relate to the same subject in order, impliedly, to displace territorial legislation (Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 S. Ct. 299, 33 L. ed. 637), and the congressional acts must conflict with the territorial (In re Murphy, 5 Wyo. 297, 40 Pac. 398). An act naming court commissioners by the legislature does not conflict with an act of congress providing for the appointment of all district officers by the governor (People v. Clayton, 5 Utah 598, 18 Pac. 628), and the act of congress of March 3, 1887 (24 U. S. St. at L. 635, c. 397, U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3635), for the punishment of incest in the territories did not by implication repeal the Washington statute relating to that crime (In re Nelson, 69 Fed. 712).

That territorial acts are required to be submitted to congress for its approval or disapproval will not render them void unless approved; they remain in force in the absence of express annulment (Territory v. Doty, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 396. And see Sperling v. Calfee, 7 Mont. 514, 19 Pac. 204; Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall. (U. That the executive department of the federal government takes possession of a part of a territory and excludes local officers from exercising their functions therein does not displace the territorial jurisdiction conferred by the organic act. Watts v. U. S., 1 Wash. Terr. 288.

Repeal as declaration of validity.— The repeal by congress of a territorial act is not necessarily a declaration of its validity. Williams v. Clayton, 6 Utah 86, 21 Pac. 398.

An act of the territorial legislature which requires the ratification of congress to make it valid cannot thereafter be repealed or modified without the consent of congress. Martin v. Territory, 8 Okla. 41, 56 Pac. 712; Irwin v. Irwin, 3 Okla. 186, 41 Pac. 369.

over territories may be limited by treaty,[45] and an act of congress passed subsequent to a treaty of cession cannot affect titles perfected thereunder,[46] or by lack of authority, express or implied, to legislate on the subject, for instance to alienate territory of the United States.[47]

2. Applicability of Federal Acts and Constitution. The constitution of the United States does not, as a whole, extend automatically to newly acquired territory, only certain of its limitations are in force there without the express action of congress.[48] Furthermore in the absence of an expression of such intent the acts of congress do not extend to newly acquired territory.[49] A fortiori where the territories are expressly excepted from the operation of an act, the act does not apply thereto.[50] On the other hand federal acts may be extended either separately and expressly or by a general provision in the organic law or elsewhere,[51] and in some cases congress has provided that the laws of a particular state shall be extended to a territory,[52] and such an extension usually carries with it the judicial construction of such laws by the highest court of the state of their origin.[53] But where a state statute adopting the common law is extended over a territory, it is not the decisions of the state but those of the federal supreme court which determine what the common law is.[54]

C. Force of Laws of Former Sovereignty. In accordance with the principles of international law the laws of the former sovereignty continue in force in territory acquired by the United States, except so far as inconsistent with or repealed by the laws of the new sovereignty,[55] the rule applying with particular force to laws affecting commercial transactions, personal property rights, and domestic relations.[56]

D. Distribution of Powers — 1. In General. The triple division of governmental powers has usually been observed in constituting the civic framework for the territories and possessions of the United States.[57] In Alaska, however, as well as in the smaller possessions like Guam, Tutuila, and the Panama Canal Zone, the legislative branch is wanting, while in the Philippines the executive officers are all ex-officio members of the upper legislative house.[58]

2. Executive. The executive power is generally vested in a governor,[59] who is clothed with the ordinary powers of appointing [60] and removing territorial

Patents, copyrights, and trade-marks.—Patents cannot be issued by the government of Porto Rico, although Spanish patents valid at the ratification of the Treaty of Paris are paramount, at least during the period of their effectiveness. But trade-marks are not exclusively the subject of federal legislation, and the Spanish laws governing the same remain in force in Porto Rico. 1 Op. Atty.-Gen., Porto Rico 32, 75, 182–184. In the Philippines, however, not only trade-marks but also patents and copyrights continue to be issued by the insular government and regulated by its legislation. See Philippine Act 666.

IV. SUBSTANTIVE LAWS AND PARTICULAR RELATIONS.

A. Contracts — 1. In General. In the territories of the Philippines and Porto Rico contracts are governed generally by the provisions of the code,[88] and are enforceable only between the parties thereto and their legal successors unless there be a stipulation in favor of a third party,[89] and even if a stipulation in favor of a third party is included and he fails to give notice of its acceptance, it may be revoked.[90]

Form.—Although Philippine Civ. Code, art. 1280, requires certain contracts to "appear in a public instrument" an action may be maintained on a verbal agreement covering the same subject. Thunga Chui v. Que Bentec, 2 Philippine 561. Compare Arán v. Echalecu, 1 Porto Rico 91.

Consideration.— If a real and valid cause (consideration) is proved, a false statement regarding the same does not vitiate the contract notwithstanding the provisions of Porto Rico Civ. Code, art. 1276. Franco v. Miranda, 1 Porto Rico 310.

Mistake which will vitiate a contract must inhere in the circumstances thereof; fraud must be clearly proved. Joy v. Banco Territorial, 1 Porto Rico 409.

Execution.— Porto Rico Civ. Code, art. 1259, requiring ratification by the principal of all contracts executed in his name by another do not apply where the agent has express authority. 2. Insurance. Contracts of insurance are governed by the code of commerce. The policy is the law of the contract but the insurer may waive its conditions and the policy may be transferred without his consent.[91] Invasion and insurrection must cause the loss in order to relieve the insurer,[92] but incendiarism vitiates the policy if caused by the insured; otherwise if done without his instigation or knowledge.[93] Mere signing of the application and payment of the first premium on a life insurance policy do not bind the insurer to issue the policy, or entitle the applicant to recover where the authority of the special agent or the making of the contract are not sufficiently proved.[94] Forfeiture of policy for nonpayment of premiums may be waived by receipt of subsequent instalments.[95]

3. Partnership. The rules regulating the partnership relation in the United States proper [96] apply generally to partnerships in the territories of the Philippines and Porto Rico.[97] A contract of partnership is valid and binding on the partners if the essential contractual requisites were observed whatever may be its form and conditions, provided they are not expressly prohibited by the code of commerce,[98] the provisions of which latter code prevail over those of the civil code in determining the rights of creditors of individual partners as regards partnership property.[99] Industrial partners are liable to third parties for firm debts [1] and cannot escape such liability by agreeing among themselves that one partner shall assume all debts.[2] A liquidating partner has authority to sell any of the assets of the expired partnership.[3]

B. Domestic Relations — 1. Marriage and Divorce. The civil marriage is now recognized both in the Philippines [4] and in Porto Rico,[5] and divorce in some form may now be granted in both territories.[6] The grounds vary, in the Philippines, the sole ground being adultery,[7] while in Porto Rico divorce may be granted for personal violence.[8] The civil courts have jurisdiction of the pro-

The organic act of April 12, 1900, contains the divorce law of the island (Marimón v. Pelegrí, 1 Porto Rico 225); and so enlarges the provisions of the military order of the preceding year that religious as well as civil marriages are now subject to dissolution (Luzunaris v. Pastor Diaz, 1 Porto Rico 472).

ceeding,[9] and may grant alimony pendente lite.[10] Under the Spanish law all property of either spouse is presumed to belong to the conjugal partnership,[11] which latter may be liquidated in the divorce proceeding;[12] but the dissolution of the conjugal partnership is a prerequisite to liquidation,[13] and a married woman is not entitled to her part of the conjugal profits until the marriage has been dissolved,[14] and then only as to matrimonial property or that acquired during matrimony.[15]

2. Legitimation of Issue. An action lies at the instance of a natural child to compel acknowledgment by the parent.[16] An acknowledgment in a public document is not necessary, and proof may be made in any form recognized by law.[17]

The intention of congress in giving to Porto Rico a system of laws relating to marriage and divorce was to assimilate the same in principle and application to those existing in continental United States, to be applied and interpreted in accordance with American jurisprudence. An action to compel acknowledgment in case of rape cannot be maintained until final sentence of conviction has been imposed on the father. Benedicto v. De la Rama, 4 Philippine 746, 4 Off. Gaz. 212. In such an action evidence of the relations between the mother and the supposed father prior to the birth of the child, or that defendant was the father of the child, is inadmissible. The right of legitimation conferred by the code accrues to children born and acknowledged prior to its promulgation,[18] and proof of birth is itself sufficient to give the natural child a certain status.[19] An action also lies at the instance of a legitimate child to compel support.[20]

C. Wills, Administration, and Guardianship. In the territories of the Philippines and Porto Rico wills are governed by much the same rules which determine their validity in the United States proper,[21] probate being conclusive only as to testamentary capacity and due execution,[22] and not determining the validity of testamentary provisions[23] nor who is entitled to share in the estate.[24] Administration proceedings according to the American system obtain in the Philippines,[25] and administrators and executors may be appointed with like

V. REMEDIES, ACTIONS, AND PROCEEDINGS.

A. Remedies — 1. ENUMERATED; RETENTION OF FORMER REMEDIES. In most of the territorial possessions acquired from Spain some at least of the remedies provided by the Spanish procedure have been retained, although many have been abolished.[31] While the system known as equity was not indigenous to Spanish-speaking countries and has never been transplanted there as a whole, yet, in the application of equitable remedies as well as extraordinary legal ones, the rule prevails that there must be an absence of adequate relief in the ordinary course of law.[32] The Spanish law provided an elaborate plan for conciliation and

An order declaring a person non compos mentis is appealable, but the right to appeal is waived by written consent to such order after its rendition. Garcia v. Sweeney, 5 Philippine 344, 4 Off. Gaz. 9.

Guardians are removable for grounds enumerated in Code Civ. Proc. § 574. Alemany v. Moreno, 5 Philippine 172, 4 Off. Gaz. 138. An order annulling the appointment of guardians is appealable, and where the parties thus removed give notice and tender a sufficient bond the appeal should be allowed. Alemany v. Sweeney, 2 Philippine 654, 1 Off. Gaz. 857. Such an order must be reviewed by simple appeal and not with bill of exceptions. Moreno Francisco v. Gruet, 1 Philippine 218, 1 Off. Gaz. 530.

31. Ivancich v. Odlin, 1 Philippine 288, 1 Off. Gaz. 504, holding that, although the new Philippine code of civil procedure enacted in 1901 expressly repeals all codes and statutes "prescribing the procedure in civil actions," the remedial provisions of article 584 of the code of commerce continue in force.

In some cases, while the name has been changed, the remedy provided is substantially identical with the old. Thus the injunction is practically equivalent to the interdicto prohibitorio, and the attachment to the embargo, and recurso de queja, while abolished (Obras Pias v. Regidor, 2 Philippine 151), is similar to the remedy provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 499 (Somes v. Crossfield, 8 Philippine 283, 284, 5 Off. Gaz. 462).

Former remedies to recover possession of real property see Mendoza v. Nabong, 9 Philippine 681, 6 Off. Gaz. 276; Ledesma v. Marcos, 9 Philippine 618, 6 Off. Gaz. 226; Alvarez v. Montinola, 1 Philippine 624, 1 Off. Gaz. 3; Hermitaño v. Clarito, 1 Philippine 613; Rivera v. De Guzman, 1 Philippine 289, 1 Off. Gaz. 341; Espiritu v. Deseo, 1 Philippine 227, 1 Off. Gaz. 490; Feced v. Abella, 1 Philippine 150.

Other proceedings authorized by Spanish code see Regalado v. De los Santos, 1 Philippine 663, 1 Off. Gaz. 61; Roa v. Veloso, 1 Philippine 644, 1 Off. Gaz. 60; Garcia v. Ruiz, 1 Philippine 634, 1 Off. Gaz. 59; Regalado v. Luchsinger, 1 Philippine 622, 1 Off. Gaz. 513; Saul v. Hawkins, 1 Philippine 275, 1 Off. Gaz. 500; Zulueta v. Zulueta, 1 Philippine 254, 1 Off. Gaz. 495.

Under the Spanish system there was no lis pendens until the complaint had been answered. Quiros v. Tan-Guinlay, 5 Philippine 675, 4 Off. Gaz. 307.

In criminal proceedings the Spanish procedure is preserved except as modified by subsequent legislation. Under the Spanish law of criminal procedure in force prior to the American occupation the judgment of the court was always in writing. It contained a statement of the facts which appeared from the evidence, the conclusions of law which the judge drew from those facts, and the penalty imposed upon defendant. These all were contained in one document. There were not two documents or two proceedings, one corresponding to the verdict rendered by the jury in the criminal procedure in the United States and the other corresponding to the imposition of the penalty by the judge. According to the former procedure it was not necessary that either the judge or the prisoner should be present in court when the judgment was entered. It was sufficient that the judgment, signed by the judge, was filed in the court and afterward read to the prisoner. U. S. v. Baluyut, 5 Philippine 129. The Spanish system was inquisitorial; the American is accusatorial. Under the inquisitorial system of criminal procedure a judgment rendered by a court of first instance in a criminal case did not become final until the supreme court of the district to which the trial court belonged had approved the judgment, as the law required every decision, either of acquittal or conviction, to be reviewed by the supreme court, whether the parties appealed or not. Consequently, in case of the reversal of the judgment of the trial court, whether on review or appeal, it was the decision of the supreme court which was executed. U. S. v. Samio, 3 Philippine 691, 2 Off. Gaz. 534.

32. Manotoc v. McMicking, 10 Philippine 119, 6 Off. Gaz. 625 (mandamus); Desola v. Willoughby, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 344.

Under the Spanish practice a party could not resort to judicial proceedings unless administrative remedies had first been exhausted. Roura v. Insular Government, 8 Philippine 214, 5 Off. Gaz. 625. The same rule obtains now in applying immigration laws. Lo Po v. McCoy, 8 Philippine 343, 5 Off. Gaz. 478.

arbitration, but the repeal of the procedural provisions on this subject has been held to nullify the substantive.[33] Summary remedies, not involving a breach of the peace, are sometimes permitted,[34] and habeas corpus is one of the most fundamentally important of the remedies introduced with the American sovereignty,[35] the writ lying only to determine the legality of the detention;[36] and prohibition,[37]

Provisions of the present code of procedure for equitable relief against judgments apply to those rendered before that code took effect. Veloso v. Pacheco, 1 Philippine 271, 1 Off. Gaz. 498.

That a vessel was purchased with funds of another than the one registered as owner neither gives the former a legal or equitable title under the Philippine law nor raises a resulting trust in his favor. Martinez v. Martinez, 1 Philippine 647, 1 Off. Gaz. 268.

33. Cordoba v. Conde, 2 Philippine 445.

A clause in a contract providing for arbitration by private arbitrators has been held void as ousting the courts of jurisdiction, although the clause provided that the award might be made a rule of court. Wahl v. Donaldson, 2 Philippine 303. But an agreement to submit a controversy to arbitrators or commissioners upon whose report a judgment could be rendered was upheld, and the trial court was not permitted to reject the report in so far as it responded to the stipulation. Siping v. Cacob, 10 Philippine 717, 6 Off. Gaz. 855.

34. See cases cited infra, this note.

Forfeiture of property for taxes may be "due process of law" but a statute providing for it must be construed strictly. Desola v. Willoughby, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 344.

Taking possession of property by force, however clear the right, is not usually justifiable. Bago v. Garcia, 5 Philippine 524, 4 Off. Gaz. 145.

When writ is available.— The writ is not available to correct mere errors, one judge having no authority in habeas corpus proceedings to review errors, real or supposed, of law or of fact committed by another judge (Yambert v. McMicking, 10 Philippine 95, 6 Off. Gaz. 366; Andres v. Wolfe, 5 Philippine 60, 4 Off. Gaz. 222; Carrington v. Peterson, 4 Philippine 134, 3 Off. Gaz. 115; Repide v. Peterson, 3 Philippine 276, 2 Off. Gaz. 366; Collins v. Wolfe, 4 Philippine 534, 3 Off. Gaz. 401), and an order of court within the limits of its jurisdiction will not, although erroneous, be set aside in habeas corpus proceedings (Repide v. Peterson, 3 Philippine 276, 2 Off. Gaz. 213).

There was the analogous proceeding of manifestation in early Spanish jurisprudence (Walton Civil Law of Spain and Spanish America (1900), preface, p. 498), but this appears never to have reached the insular possessions. See 20 Juridical Review 102, article by C. S. Lobingier.

The writ was introduced into the Philippines by military order of Gen. Otis; in Porto Rico it was incorporated into the act of congress of April 12, 1900 (Foraker law).

The essential grounds are excess of jurisdiction and absence of adequate remedy. Springer v. Odlin, 3 Philippine 344, 2 Off. Gaz. 327. It is the proper remedy for a void order appointing a receiver, although appeal lies (Rocha v. Crossfield, 6 Philippine 355, 4 Off. Gaz. 569; Blanco v. Ambler, 3 Philippine 358, 735, 2 Off. Gaz. 281, 492; Yangco v. Rohde, 1 Philippine 404), but appeal is generally an adequate remedy (Springer v. Odlin, supra). Refusal of a judge to hear witnesses, while erroneous, is not ground for certiorari (Reyes v. Roxas, 1 Philippine 625), nor is the fixing of an excessive amount for a supersedeas bond (Araneta v. Gustilo, 2 Philippine 60).

Procedure for this writ must be commenced by formal complaint; a petition modeled on criminal briefs being insufficient. U. S. v. Siatong, 5 Philippine 463.

Where the act sought to be enjoined has already been committed the writ will usually be refused; but if the case is one where a writ of prohibition lies, a preliminary injunction may be granted in aid thereof to prevent the occurrence of consequences of the original act. Santa Rosa v. La Laguna, 3 Philippine 206, 2 Off. Gaz. 111. And the supreme court may grant a preliminary injunction on appeal (Watson v. Enriquez, 1 Philippine 480, 1 Off. Gaz. 380); but only in connection with a proceeding properly pending there (Diokno v. Reyes, 7 Philippine 385, 5 Off. Gaz. 178). Where the supreme court grants an injunction it will not dismiss the action without giving defendant leave to sue for the damages incurred. Macatangay v. San Juan de Bocboc, 9 Philippine 19, 5 Off. Gaz. 851. The damages must, however, be specially pleaded. Somes v. Crossfield, 9 Philippine 13, 5 Off. Gaz. 849.

In Porto Rico the writ may be granted without bond, especially when sought by the sovereign. People v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 1 Porto Rico Fed. 242.

Appealability of order relating to injunction.— Neither an order granting a preliminary injunction nor one denying a motion to dissolve it is appealable. Go-Quico v. Manila, 1 Philippine 507, 1 Off. Gaz. 384. Nor is an order dissolving such an injunction superseded by filing a bill of exceptions. Teco v. Ventura, 1 Philippine 499; Watson v. Enriquez, 1 Philippine 480, 1 Off. Gaz. 380. But the trial court may continue the injunction in force until the appellate court acts. Watson v. Enriquez, 1 Philippine 480, 1 Off. Gaz. 380.

119, 6 Off. Gaz. 625; Fajardo v. Llorente, 6 Philippine 427, 4 Off. Gaz. 634; Hoey v. Baldwin, 1 Philippine 551, 557, 558, 1 Off. Gaz. 47 (holding that neither the right to sue a municipality for salary nor the fact that its disbursing officer is under bond is sufficient to prevent the issue of mandamus against the latter); Mullenhoff v. Humacao Dist. Ct., 1 Porto Rico 491.

The objection of other adequate remedy may be raised by demurrer. Hoey v. Baldwin, 1 Philippine 551.

That applicant may resort to habeas corpus does not make mandamus unavailable. Collins v. Wolfe, 4 Philippine 534, 3 Off. Gaz. 401; Trinidad v. Sweeney, 4 Philippine 531, 3 Off. Gaz. 603.

Pleading.— In the Philippines mandamus is a civil action subject to the ordinary rule of procedure; the complaint may be demurred to and the averments are those of the ordinary pleading. Hoey v. Baldwin, 1 Philippine 551, 1 Off. Gaz. 47. The act sought to be compelled must be clearly specified (Mullenhoff v. Humacao Dist. Ct., 1 Porto Rico 491), and the right must be clear (Manotoc v. McMicking, 10 Philippine 119, 6 Off. Gaz. 625).

The writ cannot be used to control discretion (Merchant v. Del Rosario, 4 Philippine 316, 3 Off. Gaz. 487), to compel a judge to continue proceedings terminated at applicant's request (Hontiveros v. Abreu, 10 Philippine 213, 6 Off. Gaz. 512), to compel the entry of a default (Merchant v. Del Rosario, 4 Philippine 316, 3 Off. Gaz. 487), or to compel a government disbursing officer to pay money which by order of the auditor has been returned to the insular treasury (Hoey v. Baldwin, 5 Philippine 209, 3 Off. Gaz. 653).

The writ may be used to compel issue of execution (Macondray v. Quintero, 6 Philippine 429, 4 Off. Gaz. 603; Findlay v. Ambler, 3 Philippine 690, 2 Off. Gaz. 491; Bonaplata v. Ambler, 2 Philippine 392, 1 Off. Gaz. 607), or the allowance of an appeal (Trinidad v. Sweeney, 4 Philippine 531, 3 Off. Gaz. 603; Alemany v. Sweeney, 2 Philippine 654, 1 Off. Gaz. 857); to compel the signing of a bill of exceptions (Cedre v. Jenkins, 5 Philippine 647, 5 Off. Gaz. 446; Garcia v. Ambler, 4 Philippine 81, 2 Off. Gaz. 545; Gonzaga v. Norris, 1 Philippine 334, 1 Off. Gaz. 346); to compel a municipality to issue a license to an owner to construct a terrace over land subject to public easement (Ayala de Roxas v. Manila, 9 Philippine 215, 5 Off. Gaz. 1177); to provide for the payment of a judgment against such municipality (Horton v. Aguadilla, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 457); and to compel reinstatement of a member wrongfully expelled from an association (Cortes v. Manila Jockey Club, 6 Philippine 501, 4 Off. Gaz. 655).

In mandamus against a corporation the directors are proper defendants. Cortes v. Manila Jockey Club, 6 Philippine 501, 4 Off. Gaz. 655.

The writ will not issue against the judge of an abolished court but applicant may be allowed to join as parties by amendment officials of the court to which the case has been transferred. Hernaez v. Norris, 2 Philippine 83.

Practice.—The remedy provided by the Philippine code of civil procedure for obtaining the judge's certificate to a bill of exceptions resembles the Spanish "recourso de queja" and does not admit of a demurrer or dilatory plea as in an ordinary mandamus proceedings. Cedre v. Jenkins, 5 Philippine 647, 5 Off. Gaz. 446. The practice of allowing the clerk of the supreme court to issue an order to show cause on presentation of the writ is criticized. Garcia v. Sweeney, 4 Philippine 751, 4 Off. Gaz. 9.

42. Lopez v. Alvarez, 9 Philippine 28, 5 Off. Gaz. 899; Joaquin v. Avellano, 6 Philippine 551, 4 Off. Gaz. 698; Repide v. Peterson, 3 Philippine 276, 2 Off. Gaz. 213; U. S. v. Regalado, 1 Philippine 125; Garces v. Franceschi, 1 Porto Rico 84.

Jurisdiction to grant attachment is vested in a judge of the supreme court of the Philippines in a cause pending therein as well as in the court of first instance. Compañia General de Tabacos v. Trinchera, 7 Philippine 708, 5 Off. Gaz. 239. But the United States court for Porto Rico cannot issue an attachment on the property of a non-resident (Ortiz v. Alcalá del Olmo, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 95 [affirmed in 214 U. S. 173, 29 S. Ct. 552, 53 L. ed. 955]; Re Rule Ten, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 450); especially where the action sounds in tort and the service is substituted consisting of attachment of property within the district (Ortiz v. Alcalá del Olmo, supra). A territorial statute authorizing the attachment of a non-resident's property without bond is not repugnant to the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution. Central L. & T. Co. v. Campbell Commission Co., 173 U. S. 84, 19 S. Ct. 346, 43 L. ed. 623.

The following property is not subject to attachment or garnishment: Money in a court clerk's possession ex-officio (Springer v. Odlin, 3 Philippine 344, 2 Off. Gaz. 327), public money in the hands of an administrative officer (Horton v. Aguadilla, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 457; 1 Op. Atty.-Gen., Porto Rico 75, 159, 180), or the salary of a member of legislature (Re Garnishment of Pay, etc., 1 Porto Rico Fed. 405).

Grounds may be set forth in the alternative. Pepperell v. Taylor, 5 Philippine 536, 4 Off. Gaz. 154. That a debtor left his former residence without notifying the creditor and that in a Spanish-speaking country he signed his name Enrique instead of Henry do not show fraud in contradicting the debt. Miller v. Jones, 9 Philippine 648, 6 Off. Gaz. 267.

Effect of levy.— Levy of the attachment does not change the character of a debt or give the creditor a preference not previously enjoyed. Martinez v. Holliday, 1 Philippine 194, 1 Off. Gaz. 526. Hence a levy on prop-

supplementary proceedings,[43] replevin,[44] action for specific performance,[45] and accounting, are all available.[46]

2. Receivers.[47] Receivers may be appointed upon the usual grounds,[48] but erty of one not liable for the claim sued on cannot be sustained. Mendoza v. Nabong, 9 Philippine 681, 6 Off. Gaz. 275; Sammons v. Favila, 9 Philippine 552, 6 Off. Gaz. 184; Uy Piaoco v. Osmeña, 9 Philippine 299, 6 Off. Gaz. 264; Guillermo v. Matienzo, 8 Philippine 368, 373, 5 Off. Gaz. 544.

Release.— The release of an attachment annuls all proceedings thereunder (Menendez v. Gordils, 1 Porto Rico 125), and in effect determines that the property is not liable for defendant's debts (Grahan v. Banco Territorial, 1 Porto Rico 171); but the release of an attachment on property of an estate for want of proof that the heir had accepted the inheritance without inventory adjudicates no question of ownership or priority (Menendez v. Gordils, 1 Porto Rico 125).

The bond can be enforced only to the extent of the attached property's value; where such value is not proved there can be no recovery. Crame Sy Panco v. Gonzaga, 10 Philippine 646, 6 Off. Gaz. 951. Attorney's fees for securing discharge of attachment are proper items of recovery on the bond. Dragon v. De la Cavada, 9 Philippine 461, 6 Off. Gaz. 170. A possessory title, although subsequent to an attachment under which the property is sold, is not prior to the purchaser's title. Parés v. Reynes, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 402.

43. Manotoc v. McMicking, 10 Philippine 119, 6 Off. Gaz. 625.

The judgment debtor cannot be committed for contempt in supplementary proceedings for failure to pay judgment. Sixto v. Sarria, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 168.

44. Artacho v. Pangasinan Provincial Bd., 4 Philippine 670, 3 Off. Gaz. 625.

One of several heirs who have arranged an extrajudicial partition of the estate may replevy his portion of the personalty. Pisarrillo v. Ladia, 10 Philippine 58, 6 Off. Gaz. 363.

45. Central Altagracia v. Javierre, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 256, where specific performance was granted indirectly.

A decree has been denied for execution of a notarial instrument, in accordance with an agreement, notwithstanding civil code 1279, on the ground that if incomplete the court would not complete it; if complete the remedy in damages would be adequate. Puente v. Miranda, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 478.

46. Bocanegra v. Graham, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 73, holding that an action at law for accounting yet lies, although largely superseded by a bill of equity.

The assignee of a partner is entitled to an accounting from the remaining partners and another who has taken over the firm property. Jackson v. Blum, 1 Philippine 4. Compare Walcott v. Hanaford, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 444.

A stock-holder is not entitled to an accounting until he has exhausted all available means within the corporation. Wilson v. Central Altagracia, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 429.

Simple interest only is allowed in accounting unless otherwise agreed. New Colonial Co. v. Canovanas Sugar Factory, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 195.

Sugar Co., 3 Porto Rico Fed. 459; Antongiorgi v. Gandia, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 35 (receiver appointed to take charge of an estate pending judicial determination of genuineness of alleged will); Porto Rico Co. v. Alsop, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 337; Western Electric Co. v. Mayaguez Electric Light Co., 1 Porto Rico Fed. 309; Joffé v. Fernandez, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 299 (where it appeared that firm debts were unpaid and firm property not accounted for, and a receiver was appointed, although suspension of payment had been decreed, complainants not participating therein); Lothrop v. Collazo, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 131 (holding that the commission of permissive waste by a mortgagee is a proper ground for appointing a receiver).

Application and grounds.—An unsworn averment of insolvency is not sufficient upon which to base the appointment (Valenton v. Murciano, 3 Philippine 537, 2 Off. Gaz. 434), nor are general charges of mismanagement on the part of corporate officers (Wilson v. Central Altagracia, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 429), and similarly affidavits relating to conditions existing more than two months before the application are insufficient (Lothrop v. Collazo, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 128). A receiver will not be appointed merely to preserve crops which are not in issue in the proceeding. Valenton v. Murciano, 3 Philippine 537, 2 Off. Gaz. 434.

Notice of application in Kentucky for appointment of a receiver of property in Porto Rico was held insufficient when presented in Porto Rico only two weeks in advance, it being doubtful, moreover, if a United States judge can appoint a receiver or grant an injunction out of his district. Lothrop v. Collazo, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 128.

Where the appointment is without jurisdiction prohibition lies to prevent enforcement of injunction in aid of such appointment (Encarnación v. Ambler, 3 Philippine 623, 2 Off. Gaz. 490. Compare Blanco v. Ambler, 3 Philippine 735), and mandamus also lies to compel the issue of an execution against property of the judgment debtor in such receiver's hands (Findlay v. Ambler, 3 Philippine 690, 2 Off. Gaz. 491).

Appeal does not lie from an order of the United States court for Porto Rico appointing a receiver or granting an injunction. Lothrop v. Collazo, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 134.

the power of appointment is exercised with reluctance.[49] The applicant must have a lien or other interest in the property,[50] and a receivership cannot be substituted for bankruptcy proceedings so as to sequester the property in favor of certain general creditors and prevent levy of execution at the instance of others.[51]

3. Special Actions and Proceedings — a. Relating to Real Property. Under the Spanish law, which still prevails in part in some of the insular possessions, title to real estate is tried by the "accion reivindicatoria," [52] and possession is recovered by the proceeding known as "desahucio," [53] the latter having been superseded in the Philippines, however, by the American remedy of forcible entry and detainer.[54] Proceedings to register title under a system similar to the Foreclosure under the Spanish system is a mere summary or executive proceeding requiring defendant to pay the debt or present a certificate for its cancellation. Claims pro and con cannot be asserted or a complete decree rendered as between the parties. Forteza v. Principe, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 368; Nadal v. Ramos, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 363; Kortright v. Cruz de Godines 1 Porto Rico Fed. 174. A decree in such proceedings does not operate either as an estoppel or by way of res adjudicata to defeat an action by a second mortgagee for a marshaling of assets. Bertran v. Mullenhoff, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 31. But in Porto Rico default in payment of annual interest as required by the mortgage authorizes foreclosure, although the principal is not due. Lothrop v. Collazo, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 137. Sale proceedings under the Spanish procedure outlined see Obras Pias v. Paterno, 7 Philippine 310, 5 Off. Gaz. 174.

An appeal from an interlocutory order, admitted as to one particular owner only, does not prevent the execution of a deed of sale. Obras Pias v. Regidor, 2 Philippine 151.

The venue of the foreclosure action under the Philippine code, § 294, is the province in which the land is situated; but a proceeding to foreclose a chattel lien is not so restricted. Molina v. De la Riva, 7 Philippine 302.

The United States court for Porto Rico has no jurisdiction of a foreclosure suit unless the amount due when the bill is filed exceeds one thousand dollars exclusive of interests and costs. Lineau v. Marí Hermanos, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 104.

Decree against decedent.— A decree obtained upon service by publication against a decedent is void. Asuncion v. Nieto, 4 Philippine 97, 3 Off. Gaz. 495.

63. Abiera v. Orin, 8 Philippine 193 (holding that the personal representative cannot sue to enforce a contract made by the decedent in behalf of his children); International Banking Corp. v. Montagne, 6 Philippine 667. But see Castano v. Lobingier, 9 Philippine 310, 314, where the court says: "This court has never been called upon to decide whether the prosecution of an action by an agent, with power of attorney from his principal (a proper and usual mode of procedure under the Spanish Code), has been abolished by the new Code of Civil Procedure."

Gratuitous assignee.— Where it appears at the trial that plaintiff is a gratuitous assignee of a cause of action, the assignor and real party in interest may be substituted. Brocal v. Molina, 5 Philippine 507, 4 Off. Gaz. 141.

A married woman in Porto Rico must sue defendants may be natural or judicial persons.[64] Necessary parties may be joined at any stage of the controversy,[65] and proper parties by order of court[66]

by her next friend. Garrosi v. Garrosi, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 230.

Persons jointly interested as coöwners may sue as such under the provisions of civil code, articles 392, 1669, although not as partners. Smith v. Lopez, 5 Philippine 78, 4 Off. Gaz. 518.

Partnership.— An unregistered commercial partnership may be a de facto entity (Hung-Man-Yoc v. Kieng-Chiong-Seng, 6 Philippine 498); and its members may sue jointly as individuals (Yu Bunuan v. Marcaida, 10 Philippine 265, 6 Off. Gaz. 577; Prautch v. Jones, 8 Philippine 1, 5 Off. Gaz. 254), and the partnership may recover on contract made for its benefit by an individual partner (Tuason v. Zamora, 2 Philippine 305). Commercial partnerships en comandita whose articles are not recorded in mercantile registry have no judicial personalty. Ang Seng Quen v. Te Chico, 7 Philippine 541; Hung-Man-Yoc v. Kieng-Chiong-Seng, 6 Philippine 498; Prautch v. Hernandez, 1 Philippine 705. Persons dealing with partners in their joint capacity are estopped to question the latter's right to sue (Prautch v. Jones, 8 Philippine 1, 5 Off. Gaz. 254; Ang-Seng-Quen et al. v. Te Chico et al., 7 Philippine 541, 5 Off. Gaz. 217; Smith v. Lopez, 5 Philippine 78, 4 Off. Gaz. 518; Compania Agricola de Ultramar v. Reyes, 4 Philippine 2, 2 Off. Gaz. 567; Prautch v. Dolores Hernandez de Goyenechea, 1 Philippine 705); and, in an action by one of three surviving partners to recover a debt due the late firm, an objection that plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue is not an equivalent to an objection for a defect of parties (Tan Siu Pic v. Tan Siuco, 5 Philippine 516, 4 Off. Gaz. 143).

A foreign corporation may maintain an action for damages without filing articles in mercantile register. Dampfschiffs Rhederei Union v. La Compania Transatlantica, 8 Philippine 766, 5 Off. Gaz. 712; Jonas Brook Bros. v. Froelich, 8 Philippine 580, 5 Off. Gaz. 781.

Heirs and representatives.— In Porto Rico where the ancestor could sue the heir may. New Colonial Co. v. Canonvanas Sugar Factory, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 286. But where the will gives the executor power to collect debts he may sue therefor. Martin v. Royal Ins. Co., 1 Porto Rico Fed. 322. Uniting executor and heirs as plaintiff on an insurance policy constitutes misjoinder. Martin v. Royal Ins. Co., supra.

Registration of title.— Only a claimant to property has any standing in a proceeding to register it. Roxas v. Cuevas, 8 Philippine 469, 5 Off. Gaz. 561; Couto v. Cortes, 8 Philippine 459, 5 Off. Gaz. 559.

The admiralty practice of suing a ship is not in force in the Philippines. Heath v. The San Nicolas, 7 Philippine 532.

Suit against government agent.— While the government cannot be sued eo nomine its agent may be, in order to prevent a miscarriage of justice. Monagas v. Lieberth, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 315.

65. Sanidad v. Cabotaje, 5 Philippine 204, 4 Off. Gaz. 139, where even after a cause had reached the supreme court, it was remanded for an amendment of the complaint in order to include an omitted although necessary party.

Partition proceedings.— A provision permitting joinder as defendant of one who refuses to sue does not apply to partition proceedings. Toribio v. Toribio, 5 Philippine 520, 4 Off. Gaz. 144.

Appearance of the attorney-general, in a proceeding to register land claimed by the government, renders it unnecessary to summon the director of lands. Pamintuan v. Insular Government, 8 Philippine 485, 5 Off. Gaz. 698.

Defect of parties is waived if not objected to by demurrer or answer. Waite v. Williams, 5 Philippine 571, 4 Off. Gaz. 161; Tan Siu Pic v. Tan Siuco, 5 Philippine 516, 4 Off. Gaz. 143.

66. Rubert v. Luengo, 8 Philippine 554, 5 Off. Gaz. 663, holding that in an action by an unpaid vendor to establish his preference against an attachment creditor the common debtor is properly joined.

Occupants of distinct tracts of land cannot be joined as defendants to the same forcible entry and detainer proceedings. Santos v. Limuco, 5 Philippine 15, 4 Off. Gaz. 217.

An action may be dismissed as to an unnecessary defendant and prosecuted as to the others. Martinez de Hernandez v. Bertran, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 66.

A defendant who wishes others joined with him should move promptly. Colon v. Fernandez, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 488.

A bill in aid of execution, although ancillary to the main case, should include the parties to whom defendant claims to have sold. Torrens v. Perez, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 350.

Where defendant dies after final judgment in the trial court appeal may be prosecuted against his administrators. Guioc-Co. v. Del Rosario, 7 Philippine 126, 4 Off. Gaz. 751; Axarraga v. Cortes, (unreported Philippine case) No. 2,834.

Partners.— Both the partnership and its members may be joined as defendants in the same action, but the property of the latter cannot be seized for firm debts until partnership property is exhausted. Sunico v. Chuidian, 9 Philippine 625, 6 Off. Gaz. 318; La Compania Maritima v. Munoz, 9 Philippine 326, 6 Off. Gaz. 75. In an action against a partnership an answer in the firm-name by one of the two partners is properly consid-

Only those duly joined as necessary or proper parties are affected by the judgment.[67]

2. Process. The American rules concerning process and the service thereof [68] apply generally to process in the courts of the territories.[69]

3. Pleading — a. In General; Amendment. The rules of pleading in the territorial possessions are usually those of the reformed procedure; [70] in the Philippines the only pleadings allowed being the complaint, answer, and demurrer, all of which must be liberally construed.[71] Amendments to pleadings are allowed on liberal terms,[72] even in the supreme court.[73]

b. Complaint. The facts constituting the cause of action should be fully stated in clear and precise language,[74] and where facts are within pleader's ered. Martinez v. Cordoba, 5 Philippine 545, 4 Off. Gaz. 155. But in an action against a partnership an individual partner is not entitled to be made a party independently of the firm. Hongkong Bank v. Jurado, 2 Philippine 671, 1 Off. Gaz. 930.

Intervention.— An unpaid vendor of merchandise sold to a partnership which retains it is entitled to intervene in proceedings to liquidate such partnership. Torres v. Genato, 7 Philippine 204, 5 Off. Gaz. 23. A petition for intervention by heirs of stock-holders in defendant company will be allowed, the petitioners alleging a trust agreement by virtue of which nothing would be found due in the foreclosure suit. New Colonial Co. v. Canovanas Sugar Factory, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 283.

67. Acasio v. Albano, 10 Philippine 410, 6 Off. Gaz. 828; Rodriguez v. De la Cruz, 8 Philippine 665, 5 Off. Gaz. 710.

One who appears and whose liability is shown is bound by the judgment, although named as plaintiff. Ang Seng Quen v. Te Chico, 7 Philippine 541, 5 Off. Gaz. 217.

Judgment as affecting heir of deceased coöwner.— A judgment in an action against one of two coöwners without the intervention of the other's personal representative will not affect the heirs of the deceased coöwner. Smith v. Lopez, 5 Philippine 78, 4 Off. Gaz. 518.

68. Civil process see Process, 32 Cyc. 412. Criminal process see Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 297 et seq.

69. Yrizarry v. Sabater, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 183, holding that service upon a non-resident defendant in an action in personam is void; but where he has property within the jurisdiction and an attorney in fact residing therein, service on the latter may be sufficient in an action in rem.

Service upon partner.— In the United States court for Porto Rico service upon a partner binds the firm but does not authorize a personal judgment against the partner not served. Ruffer v. Patxot, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 357. Where defendant is a commercial partnership in liquidation and there is no liquidator, process may be served upon any partner. Hongkong Bank v. Jurado, 2 Philippine 671, 1 Off. Gaz. 930.

Criminal process.— A policeman who, without warrant, arrests for a misdemeanor one who has committed none is himself guilty of a crime. U. S. v. Alexander, 8 Philippine 29; U. S. v. Ventosa, 6 Philippine 385, 4 Off. Gaz. 573. It seems that the clause in the Philippine Bill, § 5, which forbids warrants to issue except on probable cause, etc., applies only to cases where arrest without warrant is not allowed; at any rate irregularities in issue of warrant cannot first be objected to after trial. U. S. v. Wilson, 4 Philippine 317, 3 Off. Gaz. 366.

70. U. S. v. Ney, 8 Philippine 146, 5 Off. Gaz. 271 (holding that subscription of names of others than parties or attorneys is impliedly prohibited); Pabón v. Purón, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 206 (holding that the court may order confused and interlined pleadings to be rewritten).

A bill of particulars may be ordered in actions for libel and slander. Central Altagracia v. Wilson, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 365; Siebert v. Vivoni, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 161.

71. Philippine Code Civ. Proc. §§ 89, 106.

These pleadings are applicable in certiorari proceedings. U. S. v. Siatong, 5 Philippine 463.

Supplemental pleadings are allowed (Philippine Code Civ. Proc. § 105), but not after final judgment and order directing execution (Molina v. De la Riva, 8 Philippine 569, 5 Off. Gaz. 666), and a supplemental complaint alleging subsequently existing facts cannot cure the error of prematurely commencing the action (Limpangco v. Mercado, 10 Philippine 508, 6 Off. Gaz. 735).

72. Fianza v. Reavis, 7 Philippine 610 (holding that permitting amendments to conform to facts proved is proper); Gsell v. Yap-Jue, 6 Philippine 143; Garrosi v. Garrosi, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 230 (holding that a proposed amendment alleging that since commencing the action, which was for conjugal property, a divorce had been granted, and asking the reference of an account is proper); Garrosi v. Garrosi, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 228 (holding that an amendment to a petition for removal to the United States court for Porto Rico may be allowed therein to correct a merely defective averment).

A rule to file a bill of particulars is sufficiently complied with by an amended answer which, although crudely drawn, gives plaintiff the desired information. Siebert v. Vivoni, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 247.

73. De la Rosa v. Arenas, 7 Philippine 556, 5 Off. Gaz. 221.

74. Braga v. Millora, 3 Philippine 458, 2 Off. Gaz. 431 (holding that an averment that plaintiff is the "owner" of the property in knowledge he should so state.[75] The contract sued on may be set out in the complaint.[76]

c. Demurrer. Demurrers are allowed upon much the same grounds as in the courts of the United States proper.[77] Only facts well pleaded are admitted by the demurrer,[78] and the admission cannot be used against the demurrant as evidence.[79] A demurrer to an entire pleading should be overruled if any part is sufficient,[80] and a demurrer should be overruled where, after a careful reading of the complaint, the court is convinced that it cannot intelligently pass upon the issues without having the facts before it.[81] The ruling on demurrer is not question is a conclusion of law); Miller v. Royal Ins. Co., 1 Porto Rico Fed. 320 (holding that the failure to state a cause of action may be raised at any stage).

A defective averment as to interest is cured by introduction of proper evidence. Frankel v. Clarke, 5 Philippine 349, 4 Off. Gaz. 17.

Incorporation of counts.—While each cause of action must be complete other counts may be incorporated by reference (Lo Sui v. Wyatt, 5 Philippine 496, 4 Off. Gaz. 125), and an exhibit attached to the original complaint and referred to in an amended one will be construed as if attached to the latter, although actually omitted (Cancino v. Valdéz, 3 Philippine 429, 2 Off. Gaz. 367).

Negligence may be charged in general terms. Villard v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 1 Porto Rico Fed. 265.

Damages implied by law from wrongful acts need not be specifically averred. Zuzuarregui v. Martinez, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 1.

In an action by an heir to recover his share of a debt due an ancestor plaintiff need not aver that he has been judicially declared an heir. Sixto v. Sarria, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 181.

A formal complaint in ejectment may be required to be reformed so as to test the truth of answer's averment as to res judicata. Souffront de Fleurian v. La Compagnie Des Sucreries, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 88.

Misjoinder of causes is not prohibited in the Philippines; only misjoinder of parties. Rubert v. Luengo, 8 Philippine 554, 5 Off. Gaz. 663; Santos v. Limuco, 5 Philippine 15, 4 Off. Gaz. 217. A suit to annul a possessory title on the ground of fraud, to correct or cancel the registration, to recover the land and secure an accounting may be brought in equity and is not multifarious. Parés v. J. Reynes, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 402.

Complaints held sufficient see Cancino v. Valdéz, 3 Philippine 429, 2 Off. Gaz. 367 (holding that a description of land is sufficient as against a demurrer if it states the pueblo, barrio, sitios, area, and boundaries); Alemany v. Sweeney, 2 Philippine 654, 1 Off. Gaz. 857 (holding that the complaint need not specify the statute governing the case).

75. Miller v. Royal Ins. Co., 1 Porto Rico Fed. 320.

The first pleading in trespass, showing the character of the property injured and the manner and extent of the injury, is sufficient against a bill of particulars, especially when unaccompanied by affidavits showing the necessity thereof. St. Johns Gas Co. v. San Juan, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 166.

76. Villar v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 1 Porto Rico Fed. 265.

The contract evidencing an unlawful combination for which action is brought under the anti-trust act need not be set out in the complaint. Peck Steamship Line v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 2 Porto Rico Fed. 109.

77. See cases cited infra, this and the following notes. And see, generally, PLEADING, 31 Cyc. 269.

Ambiguity is a ground for demurrer under Philippine Code Civ. Proc. § 91 (6). In the Porto Rican federal court it seems that a demurrer on this ground will not be allowed where a bill of particulars would suffice. Central Altagracia v. Wilson, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 250; Martinez de Hernandez v. Bertran, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 4. Where the complaint states the cause of action, overruling a demurrer on the ground of ambiguity is not reversible error. Cabreros v. Prospero, 5 Philippine 693, 4 Off. Gaz. 310.

Prescription cannot be raised by demurrer, although apparent on the face of complaint. Domingo v. Osorio, 7 Philippine 405.

The right to amend after demurrer sustained cannot be denied. Molina v. La Electricista, 6 Philippine 519. Where plaintiff refuses to so amend, judgment should be rendered in favor of defendants for costs, and that plaintiff take nothing. Cancino v. Valdéz, 3 Philippine 429, 2 Off. Gaz. 367.

78. Gavieres v. Peña, 10 Philippine 472, 6 Off. Gaz. 833.

A demurrer to a complaint for libel does not admit the innuendo. Stokes v. Dooley, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 1.

79. Liquete v. Dario, 5 Philippine 221, 4 Off. Gaz. 187.

80. Yu Bunuan v. Marcaida, 10 Philippine 265, 6 Off. Gaz. 577; Rodriguez v. Vivoni, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 487.

The demurrer reaches only the pleading to which it is directed; affidavits, admissions, or other extraneous matter cannot be considered. Santos v. Yturralde, 6 Philippine 554, 4 Off. Gaz. 699; Rodriguez v. Vivoni, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 487.

A demurrer to a bill to enjoin an action at law will be held in abeyance until such action is disposed of, where it is alleged in the bill that plaintiff in the law action has failed to make certain payments under the contract sued on so as to coerce defendant in said action, who is complainant in the bill, into paying the account. Esteves v. Sucrerie Central Coloso, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 442.

81. Wilson v. Arecibo, 2 Porto Rico Fed. 278.

appealable.[82] An answer filed while a demurrer is pending overrules and withdraws the demurrer.[83]

d. Answer. Averments of the complaint are deemed admitted unless specifically denied in the answer,[84] and when the answer is insufficient judgment may be rendered on the pleadings.[85] Defenses must as a rule be specifically pleaded,[86] although a general denial may be sufficient.[87] But a denial stating merely a legal conclusion is insufficient; [88] and although the papers are informal and designated as a motion they may be sufficient as an answer.[89]

4. EVIDENCE — a. General Rules. The common-law system of evidence pre-

83. Flores v. Flores, 7 Philippine 323, 5 Off. Gaz. 165; Megatinge v. La Electricista, 2 Philippine 182.

So under the equity practice an answer to an entire bill overrules plea to same. Garrosi v. Garrosi, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 230.

84. Molina v. De la Riva, 6 Philippine 12; Alemany v. Sweeney, 3 Philippine 114, 2 Off. Gaz. 110. See also Villegas v. De Diego, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 378, holding that an averment in the answer that all statements in the first pleading are untrue is bad.

Necessity of sworn denial.— Under the code of civil procedure, section 103, defendant's failure to deny under oath a written instrument sued on and set out in the complaint admits defendant's power to execute it, the authority of the agent by whom it purports to be signed, and the genuineness of the signature. Merchant v. International Banking Corp., 6 Philippine 314, 4 Off. Gaz. 487. But this rule requiring sworn denial does not apply to indorsements (Heinszen v. Jones, 5 Philippine 27, 4 Off. Gaz. 217), nor to actions against heirs or assigns of the maker (Lim-Chingco v. Terariray, 5 Philippine 120, 51 Off. Gaz. 691).

An answer in equity in the United States court for Porto Rico is a mere denial if not under oath; if sworn to, more than one witness is necessary to prove the case. Fajardo v. Costa, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 119.

Rules relative to answers apply to the court of land registration. Cañas v. Director of Lands, 10 Philippine 393, 6 Off. Gaz. 762.

Under the Porto Rican code of civil procedure, section 89, defendants must plead within ten days from service, and the time cannot be extended by moving to join additional defendants. Colon v. Fernandez, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 488. A party will not be allowed, at a late stage in the proceedings, to withdraw a plea to the merits in order to file a dilatory one. Bocanegra v. Graham, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 73.

85. Vasquez v. Florence, 5 Philippine 183; Alemany v. Sweeney, 3 Philippine 114, 2 Off. Gaz. 110.

Answer by partner in firm-name.—Where one of two partners files an answer in the firm's name the court may properly consider it. Martinez v. Cordoba, 5 Philippine 545, 4 Off. Gaz. 155.

86. Maxilom v. Tabotabo, 9 Philippine 390, 6 Off. Gaz. 77; Domingo v. Osorio, 7 Philippine 405; Aldeguer v. Hoskyn, 2 Philippine 500, 1 Off. Gaz. 727, defense of prescription.

One who relies on a tax title must aver every fact necessary to show compliance with statute. Garcia v. Nevarez, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 513.

A defense admitted from the answer to an amended complaint is waived, although set up in the original answer. Ortiz v. Aramburo, 8 Philippine 98, 5 Off. Gaz. 264.

One defense does not affect another but may be inconsistent therewith, under the Philippine practice, which is derived from California. Castle v. Go-Juno, 7 Philippine 144, 5 Off. Gaz. 50.

A counter-claim need not, in the Philippines, arise from or be connected with the cause of action stated in the complaint. Feliciano v. Del Rosario, 6 Philippine 70, 4 Off. Gaz. 375. But a counter-claim cannot first be pleaded on appeal from a justice's court. Belzunce v. Fernandez, 10 Philippine 452, 6 Off. Gaz. 832; Evangelista v. Tabayuyong, 7 Philippine 607, 5 Off. Gaz. 280.

A cross bill alleging that a certain lease has merged in a later partnership agreement between the parties is proper. Van Syckel v. Sobrinos de Ezquiaga, 3 Porto Rico Fed. 169.

A disclaimer in an action to cancel a mortgage is sufficient if it relates to all the land affected. Kortright v. Cruz de Godiness, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 174.

87. Roman Catholic Apostolic Church v. Badoc, 6 Philippine 345 (holding that under Act 1376, giving the supreme court original jurisdiction in controversies over church property, defendant may plead a general denial); Lorenzo v. Navarro, 5 Philippine 505, 4 Off. Gaz. 140 (holding that defendant may prove under a general denial that the contract sued on as a lease was in fact one of sale); Heinszen v. Jones, 5 Philippine 27, 4 Off. Gaz. 217; Feced v. Abella, 1 Philippine 150.

Plaintiff's corporate capacity or other legal personalty is put in issue by a mere general denial. La Compania Cia Gen. de Tabacos v. Trinchera, 7 Philippine 689, 5 Off. Gaz. 239. And failure to offer proof on such point is fatal, although defendant pleads a counter-claim against plaintiff. La Compania Cia Gen. de Tabacos v. Trinchera, supra; Castle v. Go-Juno, 7 Philippine 144, 5 Off. Gaz. 50.

vails throughout practically all the territorial possessions, although that system is a product of trial by jury, and it has been adopted even in the Philippines, where juries have never been employed.[90] The court is not confined in its consideration to the evidence offered by the parties, but may call additional witnesses;[91] and admission of improper evidence is not reversible error if judgment is supported by competent evidence;[92] but where evidence improperly admitted produces a wrong result, it is ground for reversal.[93] The burden of proof as to any particular point or issue rests on the party who would fail if no evidence were offered thereon,[94] but the order of proof is not important,[95] and facts which are judicially noticed need not be proved,[96] nor those facts which are presumed,[97]

b. Admissibility. The two fundamental rules of admissibility that evidence must be relevant to the material issues raised by the pleadings,[1] and must be the best obtainable, are in full force in the Philippines. Under the latter hearsay is excluded,[2] the rule being subject, however, to the usual exceptions based principally on the ground of trustworthiness; as in the case of declarations against Treason.— Under the act of congress of March 8, 1902, section 9, an extrajudicial confession is insufficient to convict of treason. U. S. v. De los Reyes, 3 Philippine 349, 2 Off. Gaz. 364; U. S. v. Magtibay, 2 Philippine 703, 1 Off. Gaz. 932.

In all cases the corpus delicti must be proved independent of the confession. U. S. v. De la Cruz, 2 Philippine 148, 3 Off. Gaz. 38.

What constitutes a confession.— Mere silence or refusal to deny or explain does not constitute a confession (U. S. v. Muyot, 2 Philippine 177), nor do admissions made while testifying (U. S. v. Magtibay, 2 Philippine 703, 1 Off. Gaz. 932); and a statement by the accused in his testimony that the deceased was killed by another while bound does not amount to a confession that the deceased was bound when killed by the accused (U. S. v. Valdez, 1 Philippine 238, 1 Off. Gaz. 476).

After the conspiracy has terminated the confession of a conspirator is not admissible against the others. U. S. v. Empeinado, 9 Philippine 613, 6 Off. Gaz. 225.

Confession must be voluntary. By the express terms of a Philippine statute (Act 619 (4) a confession is not admissible against the accused unless it be first shown to the satisfaction of the court that it was freely and voluntarily made. This act has been construed in U. S. v. Gorospe, 9 Philippine 394, 6 Off. Gaz. 79; U. S. v. Almeda, 8 Philippine 266, 5 Off. Gaz. 445; U. S. v. Mercado, 6 Philippine 332, 5 Off. Gaz. 36; U. The Spanish system, in force in the Philippines, gave the right to the accused to be tried before judges, who acted in effect as a court of inquiry and whose judgments were not final until passed in review before the audiencia or supreme court, with right of final review and power to grant a new trial for errors of law in the supreme court at Madrid. To this system the Philippine commission, in executing the power conferred by the orders of the president and sanctioned by the act of congress of July 1, 1902 [32 U. S. St. at L. 691], has added a guaranty of the right of the accused to be heard by himself and counsel, to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to have a speedy and public trial, to meet the witnesses against him face to face, and to have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf. sole judges of the facts.[31] The law providing for jury trials cannot be invoked by those already sentenced under a former law not calling for trial by jury.[32]

b. Presence of Judge and Party. The rule that the judge must be personally present at every stage of the trial is modified in the Philippines by permitting him to prepare his judgment after he has left the province where the trial was held and to remit the same to the clerk for publication.[33] But the accused in criminal cases must be present throughout the trial,[34] and in civil cases the parties are entitled to be present.[35]

The rule applies to criminal as well as civil cases. U. S. v. Baluyut, 5 Philippine 129, 133, where the court in declaring that this act did not conflict with due process of law said: "It is undoubted that when the judgment is promulgated in the presence of defendant he has the right to do everything which he could do if the judge were personally present in court. He can present a motion for a new trial, or present any other motion which he desires to make. He can then, or within fifteen days thereafter, give notice of an appeal from the judgment. In fact, there is no right whatever which he can not exercise, if he could have exercised such right were the judge personally present. . . . In two provinces in the Islands courts are held only once a year; in most of them only twice a year. The want of such a law as this would in many cases prolong the imprisonment of defendant for six months, and in some cases a year. It is no answer to this to say that a judge should not leave the province until he has decided all the cases submitted to him. The judges at large of the courts of first instance, and the other judges of that court, are by law subject to the orders of the secretary of finance and justice as to where and when they shall hold court, and their ability to stay in a province until all cases are decided does not depend on their own will."

The sentence must be pronounced by the judge in open court, aside from the exceptions provided by this act, but the failure to do so will not require a vacation of the sentence; the cause will merely be remanded for a proper promulgation. U. S. v. Karelsen, 3 Philippine 223, 2 Off. Gaz. 170.

It is not sufficient to appoint counsel; he must be required to act, and if he fails to appear the sentence must be reversed. U. S. v. Gimeno, 1 Philippine 236, 1 Off. Gaz. 475.

Separate trial.—Any one of several jointly charged with a felony may demand a separate trial (Gen. Ord. 58, § 33) and proceedings in one of such trials have no effect upon the others either as to prosecution or defense. Villa v. Allen, 2 Philippine 436, 1 Off. Gaz. 748. But where the accused expressly consents to the joint trial of two cases in which he is defendant he cannot predicate error therefor on appeal (U. S. v. Zafra, 5 Philippine 460, 4 Off. Gaz. 74), and the rendition of a single sentence against several accused, part of whom were tried separately, is not, in the absence of objection at the time, reversible error (U. S. v. Fernandez, 9 Philippine 269, 5 Off. Gaz. 1180).

and these are not disqualified by reason of interest,[37] or any other fact not amounting to mental incapacity,[38] and circumstances formerly disqualifying are now considered merely as affecting credibility;[39] but the character of witnesses or of testimony may justify the court in disregarding the testimony.[40] At the request of either party the testimony must be taken down in writing,[41] except in courts of justices of the peace[42] and it may also be taken by deposition.[43]

b. Scope. The relief awarded need not follow the prayer but should be such as the facts justify,[60] and the court may grant part of the relief prayed and deny the remainder.[61] In criminal cases a judgment of conviction may be rendered for an offense different from that charged in the complaint if included in the latter; [62] but the offense found must be included in the charge,[63] in which case the supreme court may convict thereof without a new trial,[64] or the cause may be remanded for the filing of a new complaint,[65] and the first acquittal is not a bar to the prosecution under the new complaint.[66]

c. Form. That a judgment is expressed in English, although such is not the official language, is not reversible error.[67] In the Philippines judgments must be rendered in terms of local currency.[68] In Porto Rico judgments on claims antedating May 1, 1900, may be rendered in United States money at the current rate of exchange.[69]

e. Vacation. Vacation of judgments after the term at which they were rendered is not usually permitted.[75]

7. Costs. Costs ordinarily follow the result of the suit.[76] But under the Philippine code,[77] the court has power for special reasons to adjudge that either party shall pay the costs of an action or that the same shall be divided as may be equitable.[78]

8. Execution. The procedure as to levy [79] and sale [80] is similar to that prevailing in American jurisdictions. The filing of a bill of exceptions operates to stay execution unless otherwise ordered by the trial court.[81]

Bond.—A defect in the bond will not require a dismissal of the appeal; it may be amended (Moreno v. Gruet, 1 Philippine 217), and certiorari will not lie to review the action of the trial court in fixing the amount of the bond (Araneta v. Gustilo, 2 Philippine

9. Appeal — a. In General. Appeal is the usual method of review in a higher tribunal.[82] In the Philippines it lies only from a final order,[83] and if the case has been once appealed from a justice of the peace or municipal court it cannot be appealed from the court of the first instance unless it involves the validity of a statute or municipal ordinance.[84]

83. Philippine Code Civ. Proc. § 123.

No appeal from interlocutory order or judgment.—"In considering the American authorities it must be borne in mind that probably no one of the statutes therein construed, contained such strong provisions against appeals from interlocutory resolutions as are found in our article 123. The evils resulting from such appeals under the Ley de Enjuiciamiento Civil were well known. It was to cure such evils that this article was adopted. It expressly prohibits appeals not only from interlocutory orders but also from interlocutory judgments." Go-Quico v. Manila, 1 Philippine 502, 508, 1 Off. Gaz. 384.

What orders are appealable.—An order overruling or sustaining a demurrer is not appealable (Averia v. Reboldera, 10 Philippine 316, 6 Off. Gaz. 582; Serrano v. Serrano, 9 Philippine 142, 5 Off. Gaz. 952; Fuster v. Johnson, 1 Philippine 670, 1 Off. Gaz. 666), nor an order to present an inventory and render account in administration proceedings (Toribio v. Toribio, 7 Philippine 526, 5 Off. Gaz. 211). But an order appointing an administrator is appealable (Sy Hong Eng v. Sy Lioc Suy, 8 Philippine 594, 5 Off. Gaz. 699), and an appeal lies from an order of the court of first instance dismissing the complaint on the ground that it should have been presented to a justice of the peace (Fajardo v. Llorente, 6 Philippine 426, 4 Off. Gaz. 634), and where both parties proceed on the assumption that an order is final, the supreme court may entertain an appeal therefrom, ignoring the question whether the order was in fact appealable (Boydon v. Felix, 9 Philippine 597, 6 Off. Gaz. 223).

Contents and supplying deficiencies.— The ment of errors in the absence of which the appeal will be considered as abandoned by the appellant.[88]

c. Matters Considered. While jurisdiction over the subject-matter may be challenged at any stage of the proceeding,[89] no other question may be first raised on appeal,[90] and on appeal the supreme court will not usually disturb findings bill should not include the supersedeas bond, motions, and affidavits relating thereto or papers used in an abandoned appeal (Compañia Gen. de Tabacos v. Tupino, 2 Philippine 142, 1 Off. Gaz. 544), nor arguments of counsel (Alino v. Villamor, 2 Philippine 234; Gonzaga v. Norris, 1 Philippine 529), but the inclusion of argument and assignment of errors will not justify a dismissal (Moreno v. Gruet, 1 Philippine 217, 1 Off. Gaz. 530). The supreme court may authorize the trial court to supply additions to the bill (Ismael v. Ganzon, 1 Philippine 454, 1 Off. Gaz. 591), but the trial judge should not sign the bill with the statement that appellee may add such papers as he desires (Compañia Gen. de Tabacos v. Tupino, 2 Philippine 142, 1 Off. Gaz. 544). Evidence must be included in the bill where exception is taken on the ground that the findings are not supported thereby (Loreto v. Herrera, 10 Philippine 354, 6 Off. Gaz. 587; Prautch v. Hernandez, 1 Philippine 705), and the bill must contain all the evidence (Un Pak Leung v. Nigorra, 9 Philippine 381, 6 Off. Gaz. 52; Ferrer v. Neri, 9 Philippine 324, 6 Off. Gaz. 5; Co-Pitco v. Yulo, 8 Philippine 544, 5 Off. Gaz. 595), unless error is assigned on some particular ruling in which case enough evidence must appear to show the relevancy of the exception (Gonzaga v. Norris, 1 Philippine 529, 1 Off. Gaz. 346). Failure to state in the bill that it contains all the evidence may be supplied by amendment (Philippine Islands Government v. Amechazurra, 10 Philippine 637, 6 Off. Gaz. 742), and even the evidence itself may be so supplied (Garcia v. Hipolito, 2 Philippine 732; De la Rama v. Mijares, 1 Philippine 585; Del Carmen v. Garbanzos, 1 Philippine 532). But a motion to elevate the original record to supply deficiencies alleged but not specified will be denied. Chaves v. Linan, 1 Philippine 496, 1 Off. Gaz. 450.

Preparation and presentation.— The bill may be prepared by the parties or by the court (Gonzaga v. Norris, 1 Philippine 529, 1 Off. Gaz. 346), and neither a motion for a new trial nor exceptions are essential to the allowance of the bill (Aznar v. Norris, 3 Philippine 636, 639, 2 Off. Gaz. 609); but objection of tardy presentation is waived if not made when bill is served (Gomez Garcia v. Hipolito, 2 Philippine 732, 2 Off. Gaz. 33; Tabacos v. Manila, 6 Philippine 140, 4 Off. Gaz. 392).

The trial judge has no discretion to refuse to sign the bill (Santos v. Del Rosario, 5 Philippine 171, 4 Off. Gaz. 522; Fischer v. Ambler, 1 Philippine 508), but another judge has no authority to sign (Reyes v. Siguion, 4 Philippine 633, 5 Off. Gaz. 160. See also Poizat v. Sweeney, 4 Philippine 656), except in case of the death, absence, or inability of the trial judge (Garcia v. Ambler, 4 Philippine 81, 2 Off. C. Criminal Procedure — 1. In General. In the Philippines under a military order prescribing a code of criminal procedure which has continued in force to the present, all public offenses must be prosecuted by complaint or information;[98] and the provision of the English bill of rights requiring that no person charged with the commission of a crime should be brought to trial until after he had been informed in writing fully and plainly of the nature of the offense charged, adopted by the constitution of the United States, and also of the several states, was extended to the Philippines by act 235, the organic law of the Philippines,[99] and the accused is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him.[1] But the prosecution is not required to furnish a bill of particulars.[2] Under the Philippine practice the injured party may likewise obtain redress in the criminal proceeding and may file a complaint for that purpose.[3] The accused cannot be required to give any evidence that may aggravate his punishment;[4] but a witness cannot refuse to answer a question which if answered affirmatively would not show guilt.[5]

2. Information or Complaint. Merely formal defects in the complaint, not affecting the merits, are to be disregarded,[6] and that the original complaint was fatally defective in form and substance is not prejudicial if before trial the proper

14. Gen. Ord. 58, § 21.

Purpose of demurrer.— The demurrer of defendant merely raises a question of law with respect to the criminal character of the facts charged. For the purpose of showing that the demurrer should be sustained, the accused should limit himself to facts, admitting them as the basis of the discussion just as they appear from the complaint or information, and should demonstrate that even though these facts be true, nevertheless they would not be punishable under the law. Every allegation which tends to deny them or modify them is irrelevant, because it tends to raise a question of fact, which is not admissible under the peculiar nature of the exception. Consequently, such allegations cannot be considered in passing upon the demurrer. U. S. v. Perez, 1 Philippine 203.

15. Gen. Ord. 58, § 22.

file a written answer will not indicate abandonment nor justify a dismissal.[16]

4. PLEA. Pleas of "guilty" or "not guilty" are authorized, but these must be oral.[17] After plea of "not guilty" no further statement may be exacted from the accused,[18] but the court may nevertheless receive evidence in the case.[19] The accused has no absolute right to withdraw a plea of "not guilty" in order to demur,[20] but the court may direct withdrawal of a plea of "guilty" and substitute a plea of "not guilty," and should do so where the former was entered by mistake.[21] Otherwise the denial of such permission is discretionary.[22]

TESTAMENT. In common usage, a term exactly synonymous with the words "will" and "last will and testament." [5] (See WILLS.)

TESTAMENTA CUM DUO INTER SE PUGNANTIA REPERIUNTUR, ULTIMUM RATUM EST; SIC EST, CUM DUO INTER SE PUGNANTIA REPERIUNTUR IN EODEM TESTAMENTO. A maxim meaning "When two conflicting wills are found, the last prevails; so it is when two conflicting clauses occur in the same will." [6]

TESTAMENTA LATISSIMAM INTERPRETATIONEM HABERE DEBENT. A maxim meaning "Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation." [7]

TESTAMENTARY. Relating or appertaining to a will or wills; also, relating to administration of the estates of deceased persons.[8]

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY. See WILLS.

TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN. See GUARDIAN AND WARD, 21 Cyc. 15.

TESTAMENTARY POWER. See POWERS, 31 Cyc. 1043; WILLS.

TESTAMENTARY TRUSTEE. As defined by the New York Code of Civil Procedure, an expression which includes every person, except an executor and administrator with will annexed, or a guardian who is designated by a will, or by any competent authority, to execute a trust created by a will; and it includes such an executor or administrator, where he is acting in the execution of a trust created by the will, which is separable from his functions as executor or administrator.[9]

TESTAMENTUM EST TESTATIO MENTIS, FACTA NULLO PRÆSENTE METU PERICULI, SED COGITATIONE MORTALITATIS. A maxim meaning "A will is a witnessing of the mind, made in view of the uncertainty of human life, but in no present fear of danger." [10]

TESTAMENTUM EST VOLUNTATES NOSTRA JUSTA SENTENTIA, DE EO QUOD QUIS POST MORTEM SUAM FIERI VELIT. A maxim meaning "A testament is the just expression of one's will concerning that which one wishes done after his death." [11]

St. Rep. 860.

"Testamentary instrument" is an instrument which declares the present will of the maker as to the disposal of property after his death, without attempting to declare or create any rights therein prior to such event. Templeton v. Butler, 117 Wis. 455, 458, 94 N. W. 306.

9. Matter of Clinton, 12 N. Y. App. Div. 132, 135, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 674; Matter of Clark, 5 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 466, 468 (both quoting Code Civ. Proc. § 2514). See also Runk v. Thomas, 138 N. Y. App. Div. 789, 123 N. Y. Suppl. 523, 526; Matter of Hazard, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 201, 202, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 701.

Where an executor is directed to sell testator's real estate, and invest the proceeds, and pay the income to his daughter, he is a "testamentary trustee" within N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2514, subd. 6. In re Valentine, 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 491, 493, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 289.

To constitute a "testamentary trustee" it is necessary that some express trust be created by the will. Merely calling an executor or guardian a trustee does not make him such. Every executor and every guardian is in a sense a trustee, for he deals with property of others confided to his care. But he is not a trustee in the sense in which that term is used in courts of equity and in statutes. In re Hawley, 104 N. Y. 250, 261, 10 N. E. 352.

Distinguished from "executor" see Matter of Anderson, 5 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 302, 303.

W. 470, where it was said that to limit the meaning of the word to where the witness speaks the truth would involve a highly technical and unusual meaning for the word "testify."

"The word 'testify' comprehends an intelligent, active performance, in which a person, by words or writing, or other comprehensible signs, communicates facts within his own mind to another." Under a statute rendering a husband or wife incompetent to testify against the other upon the trial of an action, etc., a simple appearance for identification cannot be held to be testifying within the meaning of the section. The time of the thanksgiving holiday is, practically, as definitely fixed as Christmas or the Fourth of July, in advance of the proclamation. It has been the custom, not departed from in many years, to set apart for thanksgiving the last Thursday in November in each year. So that it can be foreseen with practical certainty that that day will be a non-judicial day. Milwaukee Harvester Co. v. Teasdale, 91 Wis. 59, 64 N. W. 422.

The proclamation is but a recommendation. It has not the force of law, nor was it so intended. The duties of fasting and prayer are voluntary, and not of compulsion, and holiday is a privilege, not a duty. In almost every state in the Union a day of thanksgiving is appointed in the fall of the year by the governor, because there is no ecclesiastical authority which would be acknowledged by the various denominations. It is an excellent custom, but it binds no man's conscience or requires him to abstain from labor. Nor is it necessary to a literal compliance with the recommended fast day that all labor should cease, and the day be observed as a sabbath, or as a holiday. It is not so treated by those who conscientiously observe every Friday as a fast day. Richardson v. Goddard, 23 How. (U. S.) 28, 43, 16 L. ed. 412.

In a charter party stipulating that "the steamer is to carry out to New Orleans seven hundred tons measurement of assorted cargo, or more, if that does not make her draw over fourteen feet of water," the relative "that," as ordinarily used in conformity to established rules of language, would relate to what is signified by the antecedent word "more," which, from its own connection or relation to the preceding word "cargo," clearly implied more cargo than seven hundred tons. But to restrict it to that alone would be productive of an irrational result. The only reasonable signification that can be given to this term in view of the subject-matter, and the preceding stipulations of the charter, is to render it the relative of both preceding words. Within the meaning of the War Revenue Act of 1898 every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money was received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, was regarded as a theater. 30 U. S. St. at L. 448 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2287].

"Theatrical" means of or pertaining to a theater or scenic representations resembling the manner of dramatic performers (Century Dict. [quoted in State v. Morris, (Del. 1910) 76 Atl. 479, 480]); of or pertaining to a theater or scenic or dramatic representations (Webster Dict. [quoted in State v. Morris, supra]); of or pertaining to the theater; of the nature of dramatic or scenic representations; befitting the stage; dramatic (Standard Dict. thing but the stage on which the actors play and the room in which the acting is done and seen,[4] when used in the sense of a show or exhibition it may refer not to the place but to the troupe or to the exhibition itself.[5] Although the term has an extended significance and comprehends a variety of performances, yet it is conceived that all which it does legitimately comprehend partake more or less of the character of the drama. The dramatic performances which are recognized as belonging to a theater are those adapted to the stage with the appropriate scenery for their representation.[6]

B. Circus. A circus is a circular inclosure,[7] with a ring,[8] for the exhibition of games and shows,[9] including feats of horsemanship.[10]

C. Museum. A museum is a building or institution for the cultivation of science or the exhibition of curiosities or works of art.[11] The word is a comprehensive term, and may embrace within its meaning a menagerie as well as many other things.[12]

D. Amusement; Place of Public Amusement. The word "amusement" is synonymous with diversion, entertainment, relaxation, recreation, pastime, and sport;[13] and "places of public amusement" include not only theaters, music halls, and the like, but dance halls,[14] places where horse-racing is held,[15] and in

A circus as contradistinguished from a theater has no stage but a ring; and the performances are of a character that can take place in the circle in the absence of the stage and its appurtenances; hence the term "theater" does not include circus. Jacko v. State, 22 Ala. 73, 75. But see State v. Morris, (Del. 1910) 76 Atl. 479.

II. REGULATION AND LICENSE.[20]

A. Power to Regulate — 1. PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS IN GENERAL — a. State Regulation. The legislature, where it is not expressly or by necessary implication prohibited either by the federal or state constitution, has power to regulate theaters and other places of amusement both as a legitimate exercise of the taxing power of the state, and also as a part of its police power;[21] and in order to enforce its prohibitory legislation, the state may authorize any person to institute suits, either in his own name or in the name of the people of the state, to recover penalties for violation of such laws.[22] The legislature may regulate to the extent required by the public health, morals, comfort, and general welfare,[23] and thus may, as custodian of the public morals, declare what exhibitions and performances are Under N. Y. Laws (1897), c. 378, § 762, being the charter of the city of New York, providing for the punishment of any manager or employee of a theater who shall allow any obstructions to remain in an aisle thereof, the word "aisle" means the aisle of a theater as actually constructed, and not a theoretical aisle of the minimum width permissible under the building code of the city; and a manager of a theater who allows patrons to occupy stools and chairs in a side aisle of his theater as constructed, and refuses to remove them on notice, is liable to the penalty imposed. Sturgis v. Coleman, 38 Misc. 302, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 886. Where a theater has a front and a side entrance, both of which are permitted to be used, and people are permitted to stand in a space necessary for a passageway in the use of the side entrance alone, the manager is liable for the penalty imposed by the above charter (§§ 762, 773), forbidding the manager to cause or permit any person to occupy a passageway during a performance. Sturgis v. Hayman, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 126.

Evidence.— To recover the penalty for obstructing passageways in a theater during a performance, it is not necessary to prove that the proprietor or manager knew that any persons were standing in the passageway at the time in question, or that he gave permission to any one to do so, and the evidence is sufficient where it is shown that tickets for the performance were sold by his agents after they knew that the seats in the house were filled, in the absence of evidence that such sale was in opposition to his wishes. New York Fire Dept. v. Stetson, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 125; New York Fire Dept. v. Hill, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 158, construing Laws (1885), c. 456, § 28. And even where guilty knowledge is the gravamen of the offense, it may be shown that the act complained of was done in pursuance of a general authority given by the proprietor or manager to his servants or agents, which may be implied from circumstances. New York City Fire Dept. v. Stetson, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 125. It is competent for the proprietor or manager to show, if he can, that the wrongful act was done in opposition to his wishes; but his disavowal of it is not conclusive, and may be overcome by direct or circumstantial evidence. New York Fire Dept. v. Stetson, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 125.

The fact that the proprietor or manager was residing in another state at the time of the violation of the statute will not protect him from liability. New York Fire Dept. v. Stetson, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 125.

Where the lessee of a theater lets to another the privilege of giving performances therein, the latter admitting persons who crowd the passageways on occasions of giving performances, and the attention of the lessee is directed by an officer to the violation of the statute imposing a penalty for allowing aisles and passageways of theaters to be crowded, and the lessee promises a compliance thereafter with the statute but the infractions of the law are continued, the lessee is liable for the penalty imposed. Even the consent of the mayor will not authorize the appearance of a minor pro-escort.[31] Ordinarily the courts will not sit in review of the judgment and discretion of the legislative body,[32] or inquire into the reasons which induced the legislature to make the regulation complained of;[33] but a statute cannot be sustained if it is not a valid exercise of police power, but a vexatious and unlawful interference with the rights of private property,[34] or if it prohibits an act which is innocent in character with no tendency to affect, injure, or endanger the public health, morals, or safety,[35] as for instance a statute making it unlawful, after the opening of an exhibition or show, to sell tickets so as to reserve particular seats when not reserved by the sale of tickets therefor previous to the opening,[36] or a statute prohibiting any person from selling tickets to theaters or other public places of amusement for a price higher than that ordinarily charged by the management of such amusement places.[37]

b. Municipal Regulation. The legislature may, subject to constitutional limitations, delegate to a municipal corporation the power to regulate, license, tax, restrain, or prohibit exhibitions, shows, theaters, and other places of amusement,[38] and the incidental power implied in the creation of such a corporation to enact such reasonable ordinances in keeping with its general powers and purposes as may be needful for its well being and not inconsistent with the laws or policy of the state embraces the power to regulate in a reasonable way theaters and other places of amusement,[39] as for instance by sending fire officers to attend performances.[40] The exercise of the police power must, however, be reasonable,[41] and regulating ordinances must not be repugnant to the charter,[42] or authorizing statute,[43] under the general rule that ordinances passed under a general grant of power must be reasonable, consonant with the general powers and purposes of the corporation, and not inconsistent with the laws or policy of the state,[44] and any ordinance not strictly within these limitations is void,[45] and since a municipal corporation has such powers only as are conferred upon it by the legislature, it cannot exercise such power in the absence of the legislative authority, express or implied.[46] Thus while theaters are subject to the police power in some particulars, yet it can by no means be said that the business of conducting a playhouse is in its own nature a nuisance,[47] and, although it is proper that there should be municipal legislation looking to the regulation of those who gather to attend the theater, and although a nuisance may be created by adjoining proprietors by crowds awaiting admission to a place of amusement,[48] it is doubted whether the mere possibility that persons who are awaiting the opening of the theater door may be guilty of rough or immoral conduct, while standing in a gathering, is such an evil that the right to use the entrance should altogether be denied as amounting to a public nuisance;[49] and the validity of an absolutely repressive measure is questioned, and it is held that legislation could scarcely be devised which would not operate with harshness in some circumstances so long as it was directed against the act of the proprietor of the playhouse in merely opening his door to receive patrons.[50]

2. Moving Picture Shows. The power to regulate places of amusement and shows extends to moving picture shows.[51] Thus a city may by ordinance forbid exhibitions of immoral, obscene, or otherwise criminal moving or stationary pictures,[52] and may require the submission of films to the police authorities before

A free moving picture show in an ice-cream saloon and candy store to draw trade is not a common show within the meaning and purpose of the charter of the city of New York and city ordinances, such as requires a license to conduct it, and may therefore be conducted without a license so long as it does not amount to a nuisance. Validity of ordinance.— As Chicago city charter, art. 5, c. 45, empowering the city

B. Licenses and Taxes — 1. By Whom Imposed — a. State. The legislature may within constitutional limitations, either in the exercise of the police power or for the purposes of revenue, impose a license-tax on theaters and other places of amusement, and require them to be licensed by the proper authorities,[56] and may provide a fine for violation of the license law.[57] Such an act may apply both to permanent and established, and to transient or strolling, performances,[58] and the right to license extends to operatic performances,[59] negro or other minstrelsy,[60] merry-go-rounds,[61] flying jennies,[62] and public dance halls.[63] But only those places need be licensed which are within the statute requiring licenses,[64] and where the subject of the statute, as expressed in the title, is licenses in particular specified cases, an enactment requiring a license in cases other than those specified is void.[65]

b. Municipality. As in the case of other occupations,[66] the legislature[66a] may to prohibit the exhibition of obscene or immoral pictures, has no reference to theaters, their business not being the exhibition of pictures, an ordinance passed in pursuance of the clause, regulating moving picture shows, was not invalid as unreasonable because it did not cover theaters. The ordinance is not special and contains no discrimination against persons of the same class or engaged in the same business; the moving picture business being a separate branch of the amusement business. 2. Discretion as to Granting License. It is well settled on the ground of public policy that the power vested in a public officer to grant or refuse to license theaters and other places of public amusement, unless imperative in terms,[73] is discretionary;[74] and its exercise is not ordinarily controllable by mandamus,[75] nor subject to review by certiorari,[76] and on appeal the court will merely inquire whether a fair legal discretion was exercised,[77] for this discretion must be exercised reasonably and not arbitrarily.[78] When the power relates exclusively to the public welfare or is created for the protection of the public interests, the statute conferring it will be deemed mandatory;[79] and where the statute or ordinance is in express terms mandatory, the officer can exercise no discretion in granting or refusing the license.[80]

3. Construction and Validity of License. Licenses to conduct theatrical exhibitions or other public amusements are construed to embrace within their terms such other entertainments as are of the same general character as those specified.[81] But if not of the same kind they are not within the rule. Thus a license to keep a theater will not protect one who, by contract with the licensee, exhibits therein feats of legerdemain or sleight of hand.[82] Where a person conducts a place of public amusement under a license for nearly a year without objection on the part of the city issuing it, the latter cannot have it declared invalid on the ground that it failed to state the kind of amusement and particular place licensed as required by the ordinance.[83]

4. Duration of License. Where the statute or ordinance specifies the duration of the license, the license of course runs for that time.[84] Unless limited by statute it has been held that a theatrical license runs for one year from the date as of which the fee therefor is paid.[85]

5. License-Fees — a. By Whom Payable. The lessee of a theater cannot be required to pay a license-tax during the time that he is not in control of the theater even though it had been previously used for theatrical performances without the payment of a license.[86] On the other hand a statute authorizing the levy of a license-tax for carrying on or attending to the business of running an opera house does not authorize a tax against the owner of the building, who does not participate in the occupation carried on by his lessees.[87] Under some statutes the owner and lessee of a house used for theatrical or operatic exhibitions may settle by contract between them which one of them shall pay the license-fee, and the state is bound by the agreement.[88]

b. To Whom Payable. License-taxes imposed on theaters and other amusements, like other license-taxes, are payable to the officer designated in the statute or ordinance imposing the tax;[89] and where the statute or ordinance is silent, the local treasurer or tax collector is the proper party.[90]

c. Amount. What is a reasonable license-fee, under all the circumstances of the case, must be left largely to the sound discretion of the municipal authorities;[91] and unless the amount is so manifestly unreasonable, in view of its purpose as a police regulation, that it is apparent that the police power has been abused and made a pretext for doing what is forbidden, as, for example, imposing a tax, the courts ought not to, and will not, interfere with the municipal discretion.[92] The amount of a license-fee imposed by a municipality must, however, be such as is authorized by the statute granting the power to license.[93] Under an act giving boroughs the power to regulate, license, or prohibit theatrical exhibitions, a borough has the power to impose a per diem license-fee upon theatrical exhibitions, and the amount of such a license is not limited to the sum which will reimburse it for the pay of the police officers which it especially delegates to watch the actors during the performance.[94]

6. Revocation of License. In most licensing statutes and ordinances provision is made for revocation of licenses for cause,[95] as for instance for violating

In New York, in proceedings entitled in the name of the city, to revoke a license to conduct a concert room, brought pursuant to Greater New York Charter, § 1476, Laws (1897), c. 378, p. 520, providing for the revocation of such a license, the petition properly runs in the name of the police commissioner. Matter of New York, 52 Misc. 606, 102 N. Y. Suppl. 950.

Service of the order to show cause why the Sunday clause,[96] and as a licensee is responsible for the acts of his agents, the license is revocable, although the proscribed performance was given contrary to his orders.[97] But there is a limit to the exercise of the power of revocation, and it must not be arbitrary, tyrannical, or unreasonable;[98] and while within certain limits the discretion of the proper city official to determine when a license shall be revoked will not be controlled by the courts,[99] a general order of revocation, concededly based on an abuse of privilege by a part only of the licensees, is not a valid exercise of the power.[1] A petition to revoke, based not upon knowledge by the petitioner of the facts, but upon belief, grounds for which are given, is sufficient.[2]

7. Repeal of Statute or Ordinance; Recovery of Fees Paid. Statutes and ordinances prohibiting, regulating, or taxing theaters or shows may be expressly or impliedly repealed by statutes relating to the same subject,[3] and a statute or ordinance may be in the nature of a general provision and another passed subsequent thereto serve as a limitation of the former.[4] There is no implied repeal under a later statute or ordinance unless it is inconsistent with and repugnant to the former.[5] Where a license authorizes the licensee to conduct a public amusement and such amusement is subsequently prohibited by law, he may recover back the unearned portion of the license money paid.[6]

8. Indictment For Exhibiting Without License. Under some statutes it is an indictable offense to exhibit without a license.[7] The general rules as to allegations in indictments[8] govern indictments for exhibiting without the required license, which must set forth all the elements of the offense.[9] If charging admission is an element of the offense, averment must be made that a charge was made,[10]

the license should not be revoked should be served personally upon the licensee. Service upon one in charge of the box-office is insufficient. Matter of Sullivan, 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 1, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 586 [affirmed in 53 N. Y. App. Div. 637, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 1143].

III. ADMISSION AND ACCOMMODATION; TICKETS.[13]

A. Status of Proprietor. The proprietor of a theater exercises absolute control over the house and the audience.[14] The theater is owned by him, is private property, and is governed, so far as the public is concerned, by such rules and regulations as the proprietor may see fit to make. It is in no sense a public enterprise, and is consequently not governed by the same rules which relate to common carriers or other public institutions of a like character.[15] The proprietor derives from the state no authority to carry on his business and may conduct the same precisely as any other private citizen may transact his affairs.[16] It follows that if the proprietor of a theater sees fit to discontinue performances, the public cannot complain.[17] Furthermore the proprietor has the right to decide who shall be admitted to witness the plays he sees fit to produce in the absence of an express statute controlling his action;[18] and if any one applies at the box-office of a theater and desires to purchase tickets of admission and is refused, he has no cause of action against the proprietor of the theater for such refusal.[19]

B. Tickets — 1. CONSIDERED AS LICENSE; REJECTION OR EXPULSION OF TICKET-HOLDER. In the absence of a statute or ordinance to the contrary[20] a theater ticket is merely a revocable license to enter the part of the theater specified on it.[21] If before the holder of a ticket has entered and taken his seat, the proprietor

In California, under the civil code, section 3294, authorizing exemplary damages in any action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, when defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, exemplary damages may be awarded in a proper case in an action under St. (1893) p. 220, c. 185, making it unlawful to refuse admission to places of public amusement, although the statute provides for the recovery in such cases of one hundred dollars in addition to the actual damages. Greenberg v. Western Turf Assoc., 140 Cal. 357, 73 Pac. 1050. But the statute does not authorize a person to recover damages for injury sustained to his business by reason of the refusal to admit him to a place of public amusement; and, therefore, in an action based upon a single refusal to admit plaintiff to a race-course, evidence of other refusals was inadmissible, notwithstanding the fact that plaintiff claimed damages to his business of publishing a paper devoted to giving the public news concerning occurrences at the race-courses. Damages recoverable by husband for personal injuries to wife.— Where husband and wife are forcibly ejected from a theater, amusement under the ticket, the ticket-holder is ejected without good cause he can recover for the humiliation and disgrace;[28] and while exemplary damages may be refused, plaintiff's recovery is not limited to the price of the ticket.[29] If through the mistake of the management tickets are sold to a purchaser for a performance other than that requested and he is seated by the ushers upon that ticket, he can recover damages for wrongful expulsion,[30] and if the expulsion is accompanied with circumstances of insult and aggravation, punitive damages may be allowed.[31] In case of such a mistake in the sale of tickets, however, the management have a right to request the ticket-holder to vacate his seat and take in lieu another seat, there being no other way of correcting the mistake;[32] and if when the ticket-holder is requested to vacate the seat occupied by mistake he becomes disorderly and boisterous so as to interfere with the attention of the other persons in the theater to the play, the management may eject him, using no more force than is necessary for that purpose.[33] But unless he becomes disorderly the management may not eject him from the playhouse.[34]

2. Right of Ticket-Holder to Seat — a. In General. The right of a visitor to a seat at a theater or other place of amusement depends somewhat upon the character of his ticket.[35] If the ticket is not for a reserved seat he may take any seat he finds unoccupied and which has not been previously sold to another;[36] but he cannot take a private box seat, and if he does the proprietor may expel him;[37] nor may he after being notified by the proprietor to vacate it continue to occupy a specially located seat for which an extra charge is made by the management.[38] The neglect of a proprietor of a theater to mark a seat "taken" can give thereby sustaining personal injuries and impairing the wife's health to such an extent as to deprive the husband of her assistance in his domestic affairs, he may recover not only for injury to himself but also for the loss of his wife's services and any expense he had incurred on her account. Instructions.— Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether a patron of a place of amusement who was ejected with force had forfeited his right to remain, it is proper to refuse an instruction that if he, in his resistance, exceeded the limits of necessary protection, and employed excessive force for such purpose, he thereby became a trespasser, and could not recover; he not having used force other than in resistance of that employed to remove him, and it having been insufficient for that purpose. Arrest of ticket-holder.— Where any person visiting a place of public amusement violates any rule or regulation for the conduct of those in attendance or is guilty of any disturbance or disorder not amounting to a breach of the peace, it will not justify his arrest or any assault or attack on him, although it may justify his expulsion; but the proprietor, or those in his employment before proceeding to eject him, must first require him to leave, and then on his refusal, use such force only as may be necessary to remove him from the place or house. 38. McGoverney v. Staples, 7 Alb. L. J. (N. Y.) 219, holding, however, that in such case the management can only remove the

a stranger no right to a seat which has already been purchased by a third party.[39] The proprietor of a theater has a right to assign particular seats or parts of the place of amusement to different classes or races, so long as no discrimination is shown infringing civil rights.[40]

b. Reserved Seat. If the proprietor of a theater advertises reserved seats for stated performances and refuses to sell certain seats demanded, he is not liable to a tort action therefor.[41] If, however, a ticket is sold for a reserved seat, the ticket-holder has a right to that particular seat, and it is the duty of the proprietor to give it to him.[42] But the proprietor's failure to perform that duty is simply a breach of contract the remedy for which is assumpsit for damages for the breach.[43] Where a person holds a ticket for a particular seat in a theater, and enters, and occupies it, he is not entitled to hold it as against a prior bona fide purchaser of a ticket for the same seat where he is requested by the management to occupy another seat equally well located.[44] An ordinance prohibiting the sale of reserved seats after the doors of the theater have been opened is valid.[45]

3. Transfer and Resale of Tickets. A theater ticket being a mere personal license, given by the proprietor to the purchaser to enter and witness the performance,[46] is not salable or transferable by the purchaser, notwithstanding he has a municipal license therefor.[47] The proprietor of a theater may limit tickets of admission to be good only when presented by the purchaser thereof; and, where the transferee of a ticket is refused admission, the original purchaser cannot recover the value of the ticket from the proprietor;[48] nor can the proprietor be occupant from the seat and not from the building, there being no evidence that he is unruly or disorderly.

On refusal to accept them and becoming noisy, he was invited to go into the corridor, where the money paid for the tickets was tendered, which plaintiff refused to accept, and it was held that an action of trespass for the price of the tickets and for the inconvenience and mortification suffered would not lie. enjoined from refusing to accept tickets sold on the sidewalk because of a supposed discrimination between parties purchasing in that manner and those purchasing at the theater or at the agencies, with the intention of themselves using the tickets, the requirements of the law being satisfied where no discrimination is made by the proprietors among the persons to whom they have sold.[49] Where, however, by statute, a ticket of admission to a public place of amusement when sold is made an irrevocable license to the purchaser to occupy a place in such place of amusement during the performance, the ticket represents a right of property and is itself a species of property, and therefore transferable, in the absence of stipulations to the contrary.[50] A statute or municipal ordinance prohibiting the sale of theater tickets at more than office rates, known as ticket scalping, is invalid.[51]

A. Injuries to Persons — 1. Liability of Proprietor of Show — a. Rule Stated. The owner of a place of entertainment is charged with an affirmative positive obligation to know that the premises are safe for the public use,[52] and to furnish adequate appliances for the prevention of injuries which might be anticipated from the nature of the performance,[53] and he impliedly warrants the premises to be reasonably safe for the purpose for which they are designed.[54] He is required to use care and diligence to put and keep the premises and appliances in a reasonably safe condition for persons attending; and if he fails to perform his duty in this respect so that the premises or appliances are in fact unsafe, he may be held liable for personal injuries occasioned thereby,[55] and he will not be

Scenic railway.— The same degree of care is required for the protection of passengers in operating an ordinary scenic railway in an amusement park as is required of common carriers of passengers, which is the highest degree of care and vigilance possible consistent with the mode of conveyance and its practical operation; and in an action by a passenger for injuries by being thrown from a scenic railway, testimony for plaintiff tending to show that the injury was caused by apparatus wholly under defendant's control while plaintiff was using due care, by the car suddenly slowing or stopping, accompanied by a sound as if something interfered with the car beneath it, raised a prima facie presumption of negligence. O'Callaghan v. Dellwood Park Co., 242 Ill. 336, 89 N. E. 1005, 134 Am. St. Rep. 331, 26 L. R. A. N. S. 1054. But a passenger on a scenic railway who was warned of the danger of riding thereon assumed the risk of the ride caused by the usual motion of the car, which necessarily jerked when descending inclines, it not appearing that the car jerked in an unusual way or to a greater extent than must have been anticipated by passengers, and the proprietor was not negligent in failing to notify passengers on the scenic railway to hold on to the car, and not fall off. Contributing acts of spectators.— Where a spectator at a polo game was injured by the giving way of a guard-rail in front of the gallery, the fact that he was pushed from his seat to the floor below by the acts of spectators behind him does not relieve the owner of the building from liability for maintaining the rail in a defective condition. peculiar to the form of amusement,[62] or to the character of the habitation,[63] and as in other cases [64] recovery may be barred by contributory negligence.[65]

b. Evidence. In an action against the proprietors of a public amusement for injuries received by a patron, the gravamen of the action is negligence, and plaintiff must show that defendants were guilty of a breach of some duty to him which was the proximate cause of the injury.[66] His evidence must not leave the inference of actionable negligence open to conjecture or speculation, but must show the causal connection between the alleged negligent act and the injury,[67] and must connect defendant with the injury.[68] Under some circumstances the accident itself may be regarded in the absence of explanation as proof of the negligence charged.[69] of the building where the injuries were sustained by a person in falling from the gallery in a theater, it appearing that he was walking back of the second row of seats when he slipped or stumbled and fell over those in front and over the parapet which with the guard-rail was over three feet high, and the floor had a slope of fifty-five degrees; that he had been in the gallery before, and that the theater had been in use many years and no such accident had ever occurred.

Hole in aisle carpet.— Where plaintiff was injured by catching her foot in a hole in a theater aisle carpet as she was being shown to her seat by an usher, she was not negligent in failing to look out for holes in the carpet, in the absence of any warning that they existed, she being entitled to presume that it was safe to follow the usher. 66. King v. Ringling, (Mo. App. 1910) 130 S. W. 482, holding that where a circus tent is partially blown down during a very severe windstorm which came up very suddenly, and a patron is injured, the rule of res ipsa loquitur does not apply, neither will the inference of negligence arising from the fact that the circus employees before the storm arose had begun pulling up stakes preparatory to taking down the tent, as the burden would be on plaintiff to show that the pulling of the stakes caused the collapse of the tent.

In an action against proprietors of a moving picture show for injuries to one attending the show from the falling of a board, the burden is not upon defendants to show that they were not negligent. Flanagan v. Goldberg, 137 N. Y. App. Div. 92, 122 N. Y. Suppl. 205.

c. Negligence a Question of Fact. As in other actions,[70] negligence is a question of fact for the jury upon conflicting evidence.[71] Upon disputed facts the complaint should not be dismissed.[72]

2. Liability of Lessor. An important factor in fixing the liability upon a lessor of a place of amusement is that the premises are intended to be used by the public.[73] If he leases the premises knowing the public use is to continue, he must at least be reasonably assured that they have not deteriorated; that they are still safe for occupancy by the public,[74] and a lease does not absolve him from liability for injury from known defects at the time of lease.[75] Thus when one leases a building to another for the purpose of holding successive public exhibitions with the understanding that the former is to receive the proceeds from the sale of tickets at each exhibition until the rental is paid he must provide safe arrangements for entering and leaving the building, and is liable for personal injuries sustained by reason of his failure to do so;[76] and a fortiori he is liable if he holds out to the public that the building is safe.[77] This obligation requires affirmative action on his part, and in order that he may be exculpated to one injured by reason of the decay of the place he vouched for, it must appear that he inspected the property or in some other adequate manner fulfilled his obligation to the public before leasing the same.[78] If the impairment occurs during the tenancy another principle intervenes,[79] and the owner of the demised premises is held liable to third persons only when they are out of repair at the time of lease, in particulars which the landlord, as against third persons, is bound not to allow, but he is not liable where the tenant's use produces the injury.[80]

B. Loss of Property. The manager of a theater is not, in the absence of special agreement, an insurer of his patrons' property, although the property may consist of apparel such as is necessarily or usually worn by the patrons and laid aside by them during the play;[81] and thus the proprietor of a theater the sill of an open window at the side of the stairway leading to the gallery of a theater, in a place where men and boys, in crowding down the stairway as was usual and likely to happen at the close of a performance, were likely to knock it out of the window, as they in fact did, and it fell and injured plaintiff, who was on the walk below). V. OFFENSES INCIDENT TO THE CONDUCT OF PUBLIC EXHIBITIONS.

The common law, which sanctions prudent theatrical performances, denounces as unlawful such as are demoralizing, licentious, or obscene.[83] In many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted, or ordinances passed under legislative authority, to punish particular offenses in connection with theaters and other places of amusement,[84] as for instance, showing without a license,[85] giving obscene exhibitions,[86] selling reserved seats for a theatrical performance after the doors of the theater have been opened,[87] and similar offenses.[88]

Conspiracy to exclude theatrical critic.— N. Y. Pen. Code, § 168, subd. 5, makes it a misdemeanor for persons to conspire to prevent another from exercising a lawful trade or calling or doing any other lawful act by force, etc., and section 171 provides that no agreement, except to commit a felony, amounts to a conspiracy unless some act besides the agreement be done to affect the other. It was held that an agreement among managers of theaters to refuse admission to a theatrical critic, and his forcible exclusion from the theaters of such parties, did not amount to a conspiracy to do an unlawful act, where the agreement was not made for the purpose of preventing him from exercising his lawful calling as a critic, but the motive was merely a dislike and disapproval of the critic's writings. I. DEFINITION.

Theft or burglary insurance may be defined as insurance against loss of property by the depredations of burglars and thieves.[1]

II. COMPANIES.

A. Organization and Status. Companies or associations organized for protection against loss by theft are engaged in insurance business within the provisions of a statute relating to the organization of insurance companies,[2] and are subject to the general insurance laws.[3]

B. Authority to Insure — 1. Domestic Company. Under a statute authorizing domestic insurance companies to insure houses, buildings, and all other kinds of property against loss or damage by fire or "other casualty," an insurance company is authorized to insure against loss by burglary.[4]

1. Black L. Dict. sub verbo. "Insurance." Classified as a breach of casualty insurance see Banker's Mut. Casualty Co. v. Council Bluffs First Nat. Bank, 131 Iowa 456, 108 N. W. 1046.

3. State v. Vigilant Ins. Co., 30 Kan. 585, 2 Pac. 840.

4. Banker's Mut. Casualty Co. v. Council

2. Foreign Company. In the absence of express prohibition a company organized under the laws of one state and authorized to carry on the business of a burglar insurance company may carry on such business in a sister state.[5]

III. The Contract and Liabilities Thereunder.

A. Payment of Premium. After a policy of burglary insurance has been duly executed by the insurer, failure to pay premium does not relieve him from liability under the policy if no demand for payment has been made, and this is true, even though the policy is in the hands of the insurer at the time the loss occurs.[6]

B. Property Covered. Where the assured is indemnified against the loss, by burglary and theft, of certain property, including jewelry, the fact that the policy contained a clause referring to property contained in safes, which was left blank as to amount, does not preclude a recovery for theft of jewelry from a safe.[7]

C. Construction of Contract — 1. In General. The rule that where a policy is susceptible of two constructions the one most favorable to the assured will be adopted is applicable to policies of burglary insurance.[8]

2. General and Special Clauses. A general clause as to the liability of the insurer must be read with reference to a special agreement annexed to the policy.[9]

3. Risks and Causes of Loss — a. In General. An insurer is liable under a burglary policy for a theft committed after entrance into a building effected by such means as would constitute the crime of burglary.[10] It is not necessary that there be visible marks upon the premises of the actual force and violence used in making entry or exit.[11] An insurer is not liable for loss of property taken under claim of ownership.[12]

b. Risks Excepted and Liability Limited. As in the case of other insurance contracts,[13] liability cannot be fixed upon the insurer for losses expressly excepted from the risk,[14] or for an amount in excess of the limit stipulated in the policy;[15] and in the interpretation of exceptions and limitations as to the manner[16] or place[17] of the burglary or theft, and as to the amount of liability,[18] the courts have applied the rules governing the construction of insurance policies in general.

4. Right to Replace or Repair. Where there is an agreement to indemnify for money stolen from a safe and for damages done to the premises in an aggregate amount, and the policy reserves the right to repair the damage or replace the damaged article, the insurer is not entitled to replace the damaged property as part payment of its liability, where there has been no claim for damage to the property by the assured.[19]

D. Notice and Proof of Loss. Failure of the assured to comply with a condition requiring proof of loss in writing will defeat his recovery unless such condition is waived.[20]

County Bank, 134 Ky. 354, 120 S. W. 301; Rosenthal v. American Bonding Co., 124 N. Y. Suppl. 905; Saqui v. Stearns, 103 L. T. Rep. N. S. 583, 55 Sol. J. 91, 27 L. T. R. 105, [1910] W. N. 257.

Forcible and violent entrance.— Defendant by its policy of insurance agreed to indemnify plaintiffs for direct loss by burglary by any person who has made "forcible and violent entrance" upon the premises or exit therefrom, of which force and violence there shall be visible evidence. The policy further provided that the company shall not be liable unless there are visible marks upon the premises of the actual force and violence used. After plaintiffs' store had been opened by their clerks, and the door to the loft unlocked, two persons entered the loft by opening the unlocked door, assaulted one of plaintiffs' clerks, and robbed the store of a quantity of merchandise, and left the premises in the same manner as they entered. It was held that the goods were "feloniously abstracted" by a "forcible and violent entrance" upon the premises, and defendant would be liable on its policy, although there were no visible marks upon the premises of the actual force and violence used in making entry or exit. Rosenthal v. American Bonding Co., 124 N. Y. Suppl. 905.

Thief admitted by employee of assured.— Where the policy provided that there shall be no claim for loss by theft, robbery, or misappropriation by members of the assured's household, business staff, or other inmates of the assured's premises, the insurer was not liable for a burglary by third persons who were let into the premises by an employee of the insured who had entered into a plot with such third persons. Saqui v. Stearns, 103 L. T. Rep. N. S. 583, 55 Sol. J. 91, 27 T. L. R. 105, [1910] W. N. 257.

Use of tools or explosives.—A bank burglar insurance policy, stipulating that insurer assumes responsibility for the felonious abstraction of money from the bank safe by any person who shall have made entry into the safe by means of tools or explosives directly thereon, and for money forcibly taken from the part of the bank partitioned off by guard-rails for the use of its officers, but exempting the insurer from liability where there is an inner steel burglar-proof chest, unless the money is taken from the chest by an entry effected into it by the use of tools or explosives, directly thereon, and for loss by robbery, commonly known as hold-up, unless the working force is at work in the bank, does not make the insurer liable for loss by hold-up at night, where after the money was put into the safe, and the force at the bank had left, an officer thereof was held up and required to open the bank and safe; the word "tool" referring to burglars' tools and explosives. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ballard County Bank, 134 Ky. 354, 120 S. W. 301.

17. Michaels v. New York Fidelity, etc., Co., 128 Mo. App. 18, 105 S. W. 783.

Limitation as to place of loss.—A separate laundry under lock and key in the basement of a flat house, set aside for the use of an occupant of one of the flats, used by him for laundry purposes, for cooking certain articles, and wherein he stored trunks packed with winter clothing, is not within the provisions of a policy of burglary insurance which provides that if the assured is the occupant of an apartment, the insurance covers goods in a locked store-room provided for the exclusive use of the assured by the landlord in the same house. Michaels v. New York Fidelity, etc., Co., 128 Mo. App. 18, 105 S. W. 783.

18. Wormser v. General Acc. Assur. Corp., 94 N. Y. App. Div. 213, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 974, holding that where the policy provides that the liability of the insurer shall not exceed, under policies of this corporation, separately or together, the sum of one thousand dollars, and a special agreement annexed to the policy provides that the insurer shall not be liable for loss in excess of two hundred and fifty dollars on any one article unless otherwise expressed in the policy, the insurer will not be liable for more than two hundred and fifty dollars for the theft of a single article of jewelry, although such article was worth more than one thousand dollars.

19. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. Goffs State Bank, 150 Fed. 78, 80 C. C. A. 32.

20. Reich v. Maryland Casualty Co., 54 Misc. (N. Y.) 585, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 984, holding that where a burglary insurance policy required that the proof of loss should be in writing, duly subscribed and certified to by the assured, etc., the failure of the assured to comply with this condition of the policy would defeat his recovery. See Katzenstein v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 48 Misc. (N. Y.) 496, 96 N. Y. Suppl. 183.

IV. ACTIONS UPON THE POLICY.

A. Issues and Proof. Evidence of waiver of conditions as to notice and proof of loss is not admissible under an allegation of performance of such conditions.[21]

B. Pleading. The complaint must show ownership or possession by plaintiff of the property insured and that he has an insurable interest therein.[22]

C. Evidence. To sustain a recovery under the policy of burglary insurance, evidence of the value of the goods stolen must be definite and clear,[23] and must bring the loss by burglary or theft within the terms of the policy.[24] The mere fact that property is missing from a closet where it had been placed is not, standing alone, sufficient evidence to sustain a recovery under a policy insuring against "direct loss by burglary, larceny or theft." [25]

D. Appeal. In an action on a burglary insurance policy, the objection to the insufficiency of the proof of loss may be sufficiently raised by defendant motion to dismiss and its objection to the evidence.[26]

THEIR. Of or belonging to them: Now always preceding the noun, with the value of an attributive adjective.[11]

THEM. A pronoun which, in grammar, comes in instead of repeating the last named persons.[12] (See THEY, post, p. 283.)

22. Pearlman v. Metropolitan Surety Co., 127 N. Y. App. Div. 539, 111 N. Y. Suppl. 882, holding that a complaint alleging the issuance of a policy to a certain party by defendants and that subsequently, by consent of defendants, it was transferred to plaintiff; that on a certain day property of the kind mentioned in the policy was stolen from the premises named in the policy, does not show ownership or possession by plaintiff or that he has an insurable interest.

23. Pearlman v. Metropolitan Surety Co., 127 N. Y. App. Div. 539, 111 N. Y. Suppl. 882, holding that where the evidence is to the effect that from the books kept, it was impossible to accurately determine the goods on hand on any particular day, there can be no recovery under a policy providing that the insurer shall not be liable "if the books and accounts of the assured and daily tally of money are not so kept that the actual loss may be accurately determined therefrom, nor unless said loss shall have been established by competent and conclusive evidence."

24. Mt. Eden Bank v. Ocean Acc., etc., Co., 96 S. W. 450, 29 Ky. L. Thereunto belonging.— "These words are, in common speech, of different import, ac-

THEREUPON. A word which is employed to express a cause or condition, or is used as expressive of time.[43] In the first sense, upon that; in consequence of that; by reason of that;[44] upon this or that;[45] upon that or this; on account of that; in consequence of that.[46] As an adverb of time, without delay or lapse of time;[47] immediately without delay;[48] immediately after that; without delay; in sequence, but not necessarily in consequence;[49] immediately; at once; without delay.[50]

cording to the subject of which they are spoken. If we speak of a farm or field with reference to the ownership, we say it belongs to such a one, meaning, thereby, that it is the property of that person; if with reference to any estate of a particular name, we say it belongs to such an estate, as to the Britton Ferry estate, meaning that it is parcel of that estate; if with reference to its locality, we say it belongs to such a parish or township, meaning that it is situate in and part of that parish or township; and so with reference to a manor, we say it belongs to such a manor, meaning that it is situate in or part of that manor, in the ordinary and popular sense of the word 'part,' and not in the strictly legal sense, as part of the demesnes of the manor, or as holden of the manor or of the lord thereof." "Things belonging to a corporation" within the classification of the Spanish civil law were those belonging exclusively to the inhabitants of any city, town, or castle, or any other place where men reside; and of those things some might be used by any inhabitant of that city, town, or place, and others were for the particular use of the corporation, it being its duty to apply the fruits, produce, or rents to the common benefit of the city or town. Fountains or springs, places for holding markets and fairs, and places for the meetings of the corporation, sandy beaches or grounds on the banks of rivers, and commons or pasture ground belong to the former class, and were for the use of any inhabitant; and flocks, fields, and vineyards, also plantations and lands producing fruit and rent, were of the latter class. Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 115, 14 So. 692.

"Things common," in the civil law of Spain, are those which belong to birds, beasts and to all living creatures, as being able to make use of them, as well as to men; such are the air, the water from heaven, the sea and its shore. Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 114, 14 So. 692.

"Things common to all" are "the heaven, the stars, the light, the air, the sea." Domat Civ. L. [quoted in Morgan v. Nagodish, 40 La. Ann. 246, 252, 3 So. 636].

"Things common to mankind by the law of nature are the air, running water, the sea, and consequently the shores of the sea." Justinian [quoted in Morgan v. Nagodish, 40 La. Ann. 246, 251, 3 So. 636].

"Things in action" see Canterbury v. Marengo Abstract Co., (Ala. 1910) 52 So. 388, 389; Kirk v. Roberts, (Cal. 1892) 31 Pac. 620, 622; Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 35, 28 Am. Rep. 527; Henderson v. Henshall, 54 Fed. 320, 331, 4 C. C. A. 357. As meaning "choses in action" see Webb v. Edwards, 46 Ala. 17, 29.

"Things public," according to the classification of the Spanish civil law, were those which belonged only to mankind. Rivers, ports, harbors and high roads were among things public. Not only might the inhabitants of a place make use of things public, but also strangers could do so. No new mill or any other thing could be built on any part of the river by which its navigation might be impeded, and old buildings, obstructing the common use of things public, might be destroyed or pulled down; neither could any building or thing be erected by which the common use of high roads, squares, or market places, threshing grounds for corn, churches, etc., would be obstructed. Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 115, 14 So. 692.

THINGS PERSONAL. Things movable, or which may be carried about with and attendant upon a man's person;[64] goods, money, and all other movables, which may attend the owner's person wherever he thinks proper to go.[65] (See PROPERTY, 32 Cyc. 666.)

THINGS REAL. See PROPERTY, 32 Cyc. 655.

THINK. To believe; to consider; to esteem;[66] to cognize; apprehend; grasp intellectually;[67] to call to mind; remember; recollect; to recall anything to mind; exercise recollection; have remembrance;[68] to recollect or call to mind;[69] to form an opinion by reasoning; to judge; to conclude; to believe.[70]

THIRD COUSINS. Those who have a common great-great-grandfather;[71] the children of second cousins.[72] (See COUSINS, 11 Cyc. 1020.)

THIRD OPPOSITION. In the law of Louisiana, an intervention by the owner of property which, when not liable is seized on execution, on which, by giving security, an injunction or prohibition may be granted to stop the sale.[73] (See EXECUTIONS, 17 Cyc. 1364.)

THIRD PERSONS. All persons in the world except parties and privies.[74] (Third Persons: Benefit to as Consideration For Contract, see CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 316. Claims of to Property Seized on — Attachment, see ATTACHMENT, 4 Cyc.

I. DEFINITION.

A threat is any menace of such a nature and extent as to unsettle the mind of the person on whom it operates, and to take away from his acts that free, voluntary action which alone constitutes consent.[1]

II. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.[2]

A. Putting in Fear; Accomplishment of Purpose. Under some statutes, if the threats are intended to intimidate, it is not necessary that the

Another definition is: "A menace, a declaration of one's purpose or intention to work injury to the person, property, or rights of another." Black L. Dict. [quoted in State v. Cushing, 17 Wash. 544, 555, 50 Pac. 512].

The expression "menaces" in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 44, making the sending of threatening letters a felony, includes threats of danger to a person by the making of an accusation of misconduct against him, although the accusations are not of criminal but of immoral conduct. Reg. v. Tomlinson, [1895] 1 Q. B. 706, 708, 18 Cox C. C. 75, 64 L. J. M. C. 97, 72 L. T. Rep. N. S. 155, 15 Reports 207, 43 Wkly. Rep. 544.

The word "persuasion" is not a substantial substitute for the word "threat." Daniels v. Lowery, 92 Ala. 519, 522, 8 So. 352.

If the act intended to be done is not unlawful, the declaration is not a threat. Payne v. Western, etc., R. Co., 81 Tenn. 507, 515, 49 Am. Rep. 666.

Mere vulgar and abusive epithets do not constitute threats such as to furnish adequate cause to reduce a killing to the grade of manslaughter. Levy v. State, 28 Tex. App. 203, 12 S. W. 596, 19 Am. St. Rep. 826.

The words "threaten to kill" as used in an indictment charging that defendant threatened to kill is equivalent to "threatening to take life" prohibited by statute, and the phrase "threaten to murder" is also equivalent to the proscribed threat. Buie v. State, 1 Tex. App. 58, 60.

2. Constitutionality of statutes creating the offense has been upheld. State v. Good-person threatened should in fact be intimidated, provided the threats were calculated to do so or put in fear an ordinarily firm and prudent man.[3] Under other statutes, however, the threats must be so made, and under such circumstances, as to operate to some extent on the mind of the one whom it is intended to influence, and induce fear in him.[4] Where, under the statute, the offense consists in the act of maliciously threatening, it is immaterial whether the threats do or do not have the desired effect, and conviction can be had, although the purpose was not accomplished,[5] and notwithstanding the party menaced may not have yielded to the threat.[6] The fact that the threatened person was endeavoring to induce defendant to receive money, for the purpose of accusing him of extortion, and so could not have been moved by fear, will not prevent his conviction for an attempt to extort.[7]

B. Truth or Falsity of Threatened Charge; Justice or Injustice of Offender's Claim. Belief in the guilt of the threatened person on the part of the person making the threats is immaterial under the provisions of some statutes;[8] but the truth of the accusation may be material for the defense, in determining the intent with which defendant made the accusation.[9] Under some statutes the gist of the offense being the intent to extract or gain money or property belonging to another and to which the offender is not entitled,[10] if the person threatened is actually indebted to the offender,[11] or the latter has a good cause of action against the prosecutor,[12] he is not guilty of the offense; but it has been held that

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Threats," § 5.

The reason for this is that the guilt or innocence of the person threatened is generally immaterial, the moral turpitude of threatening, for the purpose of obtaining money, to accuse a guilty person of the crime which he has committed being as great as it is to threaten, for a like purpose, an innocent person of having committed a crime. a person whose property has been stolen has himself no power to punish the thief without process of law, and cannot claim the right to obtain compensation for the loss of his property by maliciously threatening to accuse him of the offense, or to do an injury to his person or property, with intent to extort property from him.[13]

C. Malice. Under some statutes a malicious intent must be established;[14] but the particular character of the malicious motive is of no consequence;[15] malice may be inferred;[16] and the intent is to be gathered from the effect and purpose of the threat, not from defendant's mental operations.[17]

D. Nature of Threat — 1. In General. To simply threaten is generally not a crime,[18] and mere threats in words not written is not an indictable offense at common law,[19] the intention to extort money or compel the person threatened to do or refrain from doing some lawful act against his will, being a necessary ingredient of the offense;[20] but it is an indictable offense, even at common law, to threaten personal violence or injury to the party menaced if the threat is of such a character as would be calculated to induce a firm and prudent man to part with his money and submit to the demand.[21] The threat must in general be a threat proscribed by the statute,[22] by some unlawful means sufficient to take away free consent.[23]

The word "maliciously," as used in a statute, providing for punishing one who "maliciously threatens to accuse another of any crime," means wilfully and intentionally, and not necessarily with spite and malice toward the threatened person. Com. v. Goodwin, 122 Mass. 19.

16. State v. Waite, 101 Iowa 377, 70 N. W. 596, holding that in a prosecution for maliciously threatening to accuse the prosecuting witness of a crime in order to compel him to make an affidavit that certain letters purporting to have been written by him at a certain time were fraudulent, malice was properly inferred from evidence that defendant insisted on having the affidavit, and denounced the prosecuting witness and his wife, in their own home, as liars and perjurers, with only a suspicion of guilt on which to base the charge.

2. Communication.[24] No precise words are needed to convey a threat; any words or acts calculated and intended to cause an ordinary person to fear an injury to person, business, or property being sufficient;[25] and this may be done by innuendo or suggestion,[26] and communicated by signs or by actions as well as by word of mouth;[27] and statutes now exist in all jurisdictions, including England and Canada, making the uttering of threats criminal, whether it be by word of mouth or by writing.[28]

3. Particular Threats — a. Of Criminal Charge. Under the statutes prohibiting the making of threats it is held to be an offense to threaten to charge another with a crime, or to threaten to institute a criminal prosecution,[29] whether for Lawful persuasion with a malicious motive would not be unlawful. People v. Schmitz, (Cal. 1908) 94 Pac. 419, 15 L. R. A. N. S. 717.

Request as a demand.—A simple "request" to do or not to do a thing, made by one or more of a body of strikers under circumstances calculated to convey a threatening intimidation, with a design to hinder or obstruct employees in the performance of their duties, is not less obnoxious than the use of physical force for the same purpose. A false statement that a warrant is issued to arrest a person for a crime, and that it will be served unless money is paid to stay the process, is a threat to accuse a person of a crime. Com. v. Murphy, 12 Allen (Mass.) 449.

A threat "to proceed against [a person] criminally" is equivalent to a threat to accuse such person of a crime, within N. Y. Pen. Code, §§ 558, 560. People v. Eichler, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 26, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 998.

Any crime or offense which may be prosecuted within the territorial limits of the United States is within Iowa Code, § 3871, providing punishment for maliciously threatening to accuse a person "of a crime or offense, with intent to compel him to do an arson,[30] assault with intent to commit murder,[31] or rape,[32] bastardy,[33] larceny,[34] perjury,[35] seduction,[36] or violation of the revenue laws.[37] A threat to accuse need not be a threat to accuse before a judicial tribunal, a threat to charge before any third person being enough,[38] as for instance a threat to accuse by newspaper publication,[39] or any other public accusation.[40]

b. To Accuse of Immoral Conduct Tending to Disgrace; Unnatural Offense. The threat may be of a charge of immoral conduct tending to degrade or disgrace the person threatened,[41] as for instance illicit sexual intercourse,[42] or to charge a man with an unnatural crime.[43]

c. Of Arrest. A threat to arrest under a false claim that the threatener was a police officer will justify a conviction;[44] but a threat to arrest a person in a civil proceeding is not a threat to injure his person within the meaning of a statute making the latter threat a criminal offense.[45]

d. Of Injury to Person, Property, or Credit. The threat may be to inflict act against his will." State v. Waite, 101 Iowa 377, 70 N. W. 596.

Accusing of crime is not threatening to accuse of crime. State v. Peters, 37 La. Ann. 730, holding that a statute making it a criminal offense to threaten to accuse another of a crime will not support a conviction for accusing one of a crime.

A charge of disorderly conduct is not a charge of crime. State v. Dailey, 127 Iowa 652, 103 N. W. 1008.

"Blackmail" and "extortion" compared.— "'Extortion' may be committed by obtaining property from another, with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of fear. N. Y. Pen. L. § 850. And this fear may be induced by a threat to accuse him of a crime. N. Y. Pen. L. § 851. . . . 'Blackmail' may be committed by sending or delivering a letter or writing threatening to accuse another person of a crime, with intent to extort property from him. . . . N. Y. Pen. L. § 856. And then by N. Y. Pen. L. § 857, it is provided that a person who, with intent to extort or gain money or other property, verbally makes such a threat as would be criminal under any of the foregoing sections of the article (commencing with section 850), if made in writing, is guilty of a misdemeanor. The threat under the extortion section may be written or verbal. Under the blackmail section it must be written. The making of a verbal threat such as if in writing would constitute blackmail would be a misdemeanor, under section 857. We can hardly suppose, however, that the making of a verbal threat such as would constitute extortion under sections 850, 851, would be a misdemeanor, because if in writing as well as verbal it would be extortion. It could not have been the design of the Legislature to make the same act both a misdemeanor and a felony punishable by 15 years' imprisonment." People v. Gillette, 124 N. Y. Suppl. 470, 471 [reversing 66 Misc. 516, 124 N. Y. Suppl. 420]. See also EXTORTION, 19 Cyc. 35.

The gist of the felony defined as "blackmailing" is the extortion of money, chattels, or valuable securities from a person by threatening to expose his crimes or immoralities. It is a method by which the criminal obtains the property of his victim. The end is the same as in larceny, embezzlement, robbery, burglary, or false pretenses; but the means employed are different. III. SENDING THREATENING LETTERS.[55]

A. Nature of Offense. Under many statutes it is a distinct and separate crime for a person to send threatening letters,[56] the crime being defined to be the name of the offense of sending letters containing threats of the kinds recognized by the statutes as criminal.[57] The letter need not be signed,[58] and may contain threats either of the sender or of some other persons,[59] to accuse of a crime,[60] to impute

Code, § 519, providing that extortion may be accomplished by a threat to do unlawful injury to property, can include no injury that is not of such character that, if it had been committed as threatened, it would have constituted an actionable wrong, an injury for which suit for the resultant damages could be brought against defendant, or which, if merely threatened, could be enjoined in equity, if the remedy at law were deemed inadequate. The privilege of an attorney does not constitute a defense to his prosecution for disgrace,[61] to cause annoyance,[62] or to do an injury to the person or property of another,[63] and may be for the purpose of obtaining that which in justice and equity the writer of the letter is not entitled to receive.[64] It will not excuse defendant, that he used no set phrase or form of speech,[65] for if in fact it can be found that the purport and natural effect of the latter is to convey a threat, the mere form of words is unimportant.[66]

B. To Whom Sent. The person to whom a threatening letter is sent must in general be the person threatened;[67] but even if the letter be misdirected,[68] or dropped so that the addressee may receive it and he does in fact receive it, it will support a conviction.[69]

how [73] the threats were made, and the ownership of the property intended to be extorted,[74] and when the statute makes a certain intent an element of the offense that intent must be averred by a proper allegation.[75] The indictment need not charge the offense in the language of the statute if words of similar import are used,[76] nor need allegations be made that the party against whom the threat was made was innocent of the crime or immorality of which the threat was made.[77]

B. Averment of Nature of Threat. The character of the threat should be set out,[78] as that the threat had been made to impute disgrace [79] or to prosecute for a crime; [80] and the indictment must sufficiently describe the crime of which accusation was threatened.[81] But the indictment need not set out the exact torting money by means of threats to kill averred that defendant did then and there threaten to kill and murder W, with intent then and there unlawfully and feloniously to extort money from him, the said W, such averment indicated that the threats proceeded from defendant and were within the hearing of W, and the indictment was therefore not objectionable for failure to show to whom the threats were made. Glover v. Pople, 204 Ill. 170, 68 N. E. 464. Similarly where an indictment for whitecapping alleged that an envelope containing a threatening letter to one "Jim Owens" was addressed to "Jim Owes," by which accused knowingly and wilfully caused such letter to be sent to "Jim Owens," and the evidence showed that there was no one by the name of "Owes" living at the post-office to which the letter was addressed, there was not such ambiguity in the names as to make the indictment bad. Dunn v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 25, 63 S. W. 571. St. § 6330, an indictment for threatening to accuse another of a crime punishable by law, which alleged that defendant threatened verbally and in writing to accuse another of burning his own building with intent to defraud, was held to be insufficient to charge a crime under the statute, as the indictment must show that the building was insured, and that defendant threatened to charge the owner with burning it, with intent to prejudice the insurer. words of the threat, it being sufficient that the substance be stated with certainty.[82]

V. EVIDENCE.

A. Admissibility — 1. In General. The general rules of evidence[83] govern as to the admissibility of evidence.[84] Evidence of one letter only is admissible where the indictment contains three counts for three separate threatening letters;[85] and on the trial of an accessary after the fact to a charge of sending threatening letters, in the absence of the principal, the letters so written and sent by the principal are evidence on the trial.[86] The state cannot introduce evidence as to the chastity of the wife at the time of the trial of an indictment of a husband for blackmail by threatening to accuse another of seduction of the wife.[87]

2. On Question of Intent.[88] On the question of intent evidence of the relation of the parties is admissible,[89] as is also evidence that defendant had pro-

Rep. 129.

Threatening letter.— In some jurisdictions an indictment for sending a threatening letter must set out the letter in haec verba (Tynes v. State, 17 Tex. App. 123; Lloyd's Case, East P. C. 1122), or in substance (Com. v. Patrick, 127 Ky. 473, 105 S. W. 981, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 343), while in others a failure to do so is not a fatal defect (Johnson v. State, 152 Ala. 46, 44 So. 670; State v. Stewart, 90 Mo. 507, 2 S. W. 790).

An innuendo averment is unnecessary where the threat conveyed is plainly indicated. Dunn v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 25, 63 S. W. 571. An innuendo, however, which materially enlarges the sense of the words written is had, as where the threat was "dam you, if this don't led will," the innuendo being that the meaning was "damn you, if this don't move you, lead will." Atchley v. State, 56 Tex. Cr. 569, 120 S. W. 1010.

Variance.— If the indictment does not purport to set out the exact words in which the threat was expressed and the proof is substantially the same as the allegations there is no variance. People v. Tonielli, 81 Cal. 275, 22 Pac. 678; Com. v. Bacon, 135 Mass. 521; Com. v. Goodwin, 122 Mass. 19; Com. v. Carpenter, 108 Mass. 15; Dunn v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 25, 63 S. W. 571. That the letter put in evidence in a prosecution for attempt to extort money from another, by threat to injure his property, stated that the money must be put in a certain place, "unbenonce" to any one but the person threatened, while the letter as copied in the indictment stated, that it must be put there "unhinond" to any one, was not a fatal variance. Toomer v. State, 112 Md. 285, 76 Atl. 118. But the variance is fatal where extortion by threats of criminal prosecution before a certain justice is alleged, and threats to prosecute before another justice are proved. Strange v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 315, 26 S. W. 406.

Toomer v. State, 112 Md. 285, 76 Atl. 118 (holding that in a prosecution for threatening to burn another person's property for the purpose of extorting money from him, a state's witness who testified that he had worked in the store of the person threatened, and that after the threatening letter was found he got accused to write a letter so as to compare the handwritings, could not be asked on cross-examination whether any one else than accused was suspected of the offense, as such evidence was not relevant and did not tend to contradict the witness); Reg. v. Cracknell, 10 Cox C. C. 408 (where it was stated broadly that, although the prosecutor might be cross-examined with a view to show that he was really guilty of the offense imputed to him, yet no evidence would be allowed to be given, even on cross-examination, by another witness, to prove that the prosecutor was really guilty).

cured [90] or attempted to procure [91] the arrest of the complainant, and of the truth of the charge,[92] except where the crime threatened to be charged did not involve any wrong to defendants.[93]

3. To Show Meaning of Threatening Letter. Parol evidence may be introduced to show the meaning of a threatening letter,[94] and explanatory letters, previous and subsequent to the one threatening, may be received in evidence as explanatory of the letter set forth in the indictment.[95]

B. Weight and Sufficiency. As in other criminal cases the evidence to sustain a conviction must be sufficient to support the charge alleged in the indictment beyond a reasonable doubt.[96]

VI. TRIAL.[97]

A. Questions For Court and For Jury. Questions of fact are for the jury on proper instructions by the court.[98] Thus whether there was or was not a threat is for the jury,[99] as is also the question whether the letter sent was a threatening one,[1] unless by no possible construction it could be held to involve a threat.[2] The question of intent is also for the jury.[3]

B. Instructions. As in other criminal cases instructions must correctly state the law applicable to the facts,[4] and must not invade the province of the

Proof of malicious intent see supra, II, C.

Proof of threats not proof of intent.— Threats, however wrongful and malicious, would not constitute the statutory crime, if the intent to extort money or pecuniary advantage be lacking. E. 1039 (an instruction that if the jury should find beyond a reasonable doubt from the evidence that defendant entered into employment not in good faith but for the purpose of extortion he may be found guilty is proper); Com. v. Coolidge, 128 Mass. 55 (holding that no exception can be taken to an instruction that if defendant endeavored to obtain money that was justly his due by threats, he would be guilty, but that a threat, made by one whose goods had been stolen, that he would prosecute the sup-

jury.[5] The failure of the court by proper instruction to limit the evidence tending to show defendant guilty of another crime is not error in the absence of a request therefor.[6] A refusal to instruct the jury in relation to defendant's honesty of belief cannot be objected to where the jury replied to a question from the court that defendant did not so honestly believe.[7]

W. 637 (holding that where the information charged intimidation by threatening words and acts of violence as well as by firing of guns, an instruction as to the use of threatening words was not open to the objection that the information charged that the offense was committed by the firing of guns alone).

5. People v. Choynski, 95 Cal. 640, 30 Pac. 791, holding that in a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 523, providing for the punishment of one who, for the purpose of extortion, sends a letter "expressing or implying, or adapted to imply, any threat such as is specified in section 519," when the letter does not on its face express or imply a threat, the question whether it is "adapted to imply any threat" is for the jury, and an instruction which assumes that it is so adapted is erroneous.

35. Century Dict. [quoted in U. S. v. Davis, 54 Fed. 147, 149, 4 C. C. A. 251].

Derivatively, the word means a covering, and hence is applied to such articles as are used for covering roofs, pavements, walls, and the like. The original meaning of the word refers, therefore, to the use made of the article, and not to the material of which it may be composed. In the Encyclopedia Britannica, under the title "Roofing Tiles," it is said: "In the most important temples of ancient Greece the roof was covered with tiles of white marble, fitted together in the most perfect way, so as to exclude rain;" and in a note to this article it is further stated that "marble tiles are said to have been first made by Byzes, of Naxos, about 620 B. C." In Jules Adeline's Art Dictionary, a work of recognized merit, it is stated that "Roman temples were sometimes covered with bronze tiles, laid side by side, while the roofs of Chinese temples generally consist of tiles of crane porcelain, painted green or yellow. The term 'tile' is also applied to plaques of marble, stone, or earthenware, sometimes decorated, sometimes with a uniform surface, which are used to cover walls or pavements. As a rule, they are either square or rectangular. Sometimes, however, they are triangular, or in shape of a lozenge, hexagon, or octagon. They are then capable of very varied combinations." U. S. v. Davis, 54 Fed. 147, 149, 4 C. C. A. 251.

I. DEFINITION.

Time has been defined as the measure of duration.[1] The word is expressive both of a precise point or terminus, and of an interval between two points.[2]

II. DIVISION, STANDARD, AND COMPUTATION.

The nature of time is such that it is capable of division,[3] and of the divisions which have been made, the courts will take judicial notice.[4] Although time is generally reckoned forward in such a manner as to make the period a consecutive one,[5] all rules for computing time are purely arbitrary,[6] and despite the assertion of the courts that certainty and uniformity are more desirable than the adoption of any one particular rule, the authorities on the computation of time, especially the early ones, have been in more or less confusion, and very few of the rules for computing time can be said to have a universal application.[7] Likewise time, when it concerns a legal duty, should be fixed with reference to a certain, unvarying, and uniform standard;[8] but different standards have been adopted in different states, it being held in some that the only standard recognized is the meridian of the sun or mean sun time,[9] while in other jurisdictions the courts have taken judicial notice of the common and universal use within such jurisdictions of the standard of time adopted by the railroads of the United States and Canada

"Reasonable time" see 33 Cyc. 1567.

3. Callahan v. Hallowell, 2 Bay (S. C.) 8.

The divisions comprehended in the word "time" are dependent upon the context and subject-matter of the statute in which it is used, it being held under some statutes that the word is limited in meaning to a specified day of a given month and year (East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Carloss, 77 Ala. 443), or a specified day and hour (Peck v. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co., 77 Conn. 161, 58 Atl. 757); while under other statutes, the term is held broad enough to include a month (Warwick, etc., Water Co. v. Carr, 24 R. I. 226, 52 Atl. 1030), or half year (Grosse v. Barman, 9 Cal. App. 650, 100 Pac. 348).

When used to represent a terminus rather than an interval time is synonymous with "date." Park v. Whitney, 148 Mass. 278, 19 N. E. 161.

4. See EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 856.

That the Gregorian calendar has been generally adopted is historically known, and when no mention of any other system of reckoning time is made, it will be conclusively presumed that that calendar was used. True and mean sun time distinguished.—True sun time is obtained by the means of a dial; mean sun time is what is called "standard time." What is known as simple "standard time" — "central time" — is merely the solar time of the ninetieth meridian west of Greenwich, and the difference between standard time and sun time is exactly the same over each meridian. Ex p. Parker, 35 Tex. Cr. 12, 29 S. W. 480, 790, holding that no reasonable objection can be urged against the recognition of true sun time as the correct time by which matters, such as the meeting and adjournment of courts, should be regulated.

The presumption is that common time is in 1883.[10] Where an event is determined to have happened within two points of time, it will be considered as having happened in the middle of the intermediate space of time.[11]

III. YEARS.

A year is a determinate and a well-known period consisting commonly of three hundred and sixty-five days, and in leap years of three hundred and sixty-six.[12] It is interpreted to mean twelve calendar months,[13] and, indeed, a year, twelve months, fifty-two weeks, and three hundred and sixty-five days, all denote the same total period of time.[14] Both at common law and by statute, the word "year," when used in a contract or statute, is ordinarily considered to refer to a calendar year, or the period beginning the first day of January and ending the succeeding thirty-first day of December,[15] but not always so, as its meaning in all cases is dependent upon the subject-matter and the connection in which it is used, and it may mean a period of twelve months beginning on a day other than the first of January,[16] or it may mean a political year, or the period between two that relied upon where there is nothing to show that a different mode of measuring time has been in common use. Where, therefore, the return of a summons is to be made at an hour named, standard time, the summons should so state; otherwise, it will be presumed that common time was intended. Searles v. Averhoff, 28 Nebr. 668, 44 N. W. 872.

Greenwich time.— In England, it was held that the mean sun time of the place, rather than Greenwich time, governed in matters pertaining to the sitting of a court. Curtis v. March, 3 H. & N. 866, 4 Jur. N. S. 1112, 28 L. J. Exch. 36. Subsequent to this decision it was provided by statute (43 & 44 Vict. c. 9) that whenever an expression of time occurs in any act of parliament, deed, or other legal instrument, Greenwich mean time is intended, unless otherwise specifically stated, but this statute does not apply to an act requiring bicycle lamps to be lighted one hour after sunset. Gordon v. Cann, 63 J. P. 324, 68 L. J. Q. B. 434, 80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 20, 15 T. L. R. 165, 47 Wkly. Rep. 269.

Civic time, or the time kept by the town, has been held to be the standard to be followed in matters relating to the service of process and to be presumptively correct as against the time kept by private individuals. Vermont Steamship Co. v. The Abby Palmer, 8 Can. Exch. 470, 10 Brit. Col. 381.

It has also been defined as "a period of time." Brown v. Anderson, 77 Cal. 236, 238, 19 Pac. 487.

Year of our Lord.— It is provided by statute in some states that the word "year" is equivalent to "year of our Lord" (Sawyer v. Steinman, (Iowa 1910) 126 N. W. 1123; Garfield Tp. v. Samuel Dodsworth Book Co., 9 Kan. App. 752, 58 Pac. 565; State v. Bartlett, 47 Me. 388; Com. v. Doran 14 Gray (Mass.) 37); which latter expression "has a well-settled meaning, and indicates a year of the Christian calendar, which begins January 1st and ends with the 31st of the succeeding December" (Garfield Tp. v. Samuel Dodsworth Book Co., supra).

IV. MONTHS.

It is conceded that the early common-law rule, established in England and adopted in some of the early decisions in the United States, was that, in the absence of anything indicating a contrary meaning,[26] a month in law means a lunar month, or twenty-eight days.[27] An exception existed in regard to matters arising in the ecclesiastical courts,[28] as well as matters relating to commercial

The features of uniformity of period and of divisibility into equal quarterly periods so commended the lunar month to the people of England, that by common acceptance the word "month" was understood to mean in its ordinary use a lunar month, and this meaning was held by the courts to be the one intended by the law-making power when it used it. Common usage has adopted the calendar

calendar, without regard to the number of days it may contain;[34] it is to be computed, not by counting days, but by looking at the calendar,[35] and it runs from a given day in one month to a day of the corresponding number in the next month, except where the last month has not so many days, in which event it expires on the last day of that month.[36] When a month is referred to, it will be understood to be of the current year, unless from the connection it is apparent that another is intended;[37] and where an instrument specifies the month in which something is to be done but omits the year, it is to be assumed in the absence of a contrary implication that the month intended is the one named then next ensuing.[38]

periods, and the courts hold that the law-making power should be understood to have used the term in the same sense that the people use it. Guaranty Trust, etc., Co. v. Buddington, 27 Fla. 215, 9 So. 246, 12 L. R. A. 770.

Synonymous terms.—A "calendar month," "not less than a calendar month," and "at least a calendar month," mean precisely the same thing. Whitmann's Estate, 9 Pa. Dist. 47. Neither a lunar nor a calendar month is synonymous with thirty days (State v. Upchurch, 72 N. C. 146; Bertwell v. Haines, 10 Okla. 469, 63 Pac. 702); and a warrant, made returnable in three months instead of ninety days as required by statute irregular (Waterville v. Barton, 64 Me. 321).

The term is inaccurate as applied to a period consisting of two parts of different months, as such a period in strictness consists of portions of two calendar months. Migotti v. Colvill, 4 C. P. D. 233, 14 Cox C. C. 305, 48 L. J. C. P. 695, 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 747, 27 Wkly. Rep. 744.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Time," § 5 et seq.

The number of days in a month varies, under this rule, and is necessarily limited by the number of days in the month during which the computation begins. Thus a month's notice commencing in a month of thirty days need consist only of that number of days (People v. Ulrich, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 28; Minard v. Burtis, 83 Wis. 267, 53 N. W. 509); and where the month in which the computation begins has thirty-one days, while the month in which it ends has only thirty, a calendar month beginning on the thirtieth will contain one more day than one beginning on the thirty-first, as both must end on the thirtieth (Parkhill v. Brighton, 61 Iowa 103, 15 N. W. 853). On account of this variance, a criminal statute providing for a minimum punishment of one month's imprisonment has been held to contemplate thirty days only, as the minimum punishment must be uniform at all times and in all places. McKinney v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 387, 66 S. W. 769. In another jurisdiction the word "month" as used in a sentence of imprisonment has been held to mean twenty-eight days. Com. v. Stanley, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 543.

Applicability of other rules of computation.— Rules employed in computing days have been applied, such as counting the first day (English v. Ozburn, 59 Ga. 392 [following Jones v. Smith, 28 Ga. 41), or excluding it when the word "from" or "after" is used (South Staffordshire Tramways Co. v. Sickness, etc., Assur. Assoc., [1891] 1 Q. B. 402, 55 J. P. 168, 60 L. J. Q. B. 47, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 807; Castle v. Burditt, 3 T. R. 623, 100 Eng. Reprint 768; Toronto Gas Co. v. Russell, 6 U. C. Q. B. 567). However, by virtue of the provisions of the New York statute relating to the computation of months, the rule that Sunday is to be excluded when it falls on the last day of the period is not applicable. V. WEEKS.

In its most accurate sense, a week is a definite period of time, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday,[39] and it is in this sense that it is most frequently employed in statutes and orders of court;[40] but it is also appropriately used to mean seven consecutive days beginning with any day;[41] and the week does not expire until seven full days have elapsed.[42] The question as to which of these two meanings is intended in any particular case is dependent largely upon the context.[43]

VI. DAYS.

A. Length — 1. In General. While, as appears from the definition of the term "day" elsewhere given,[44] there are distinctions, according to the sense in which the term may be used, between natural, artificial, civil, solar, and astronomical days,[45] it may be stated generally that, in the computation of a period of time measured in days and in the construction of the word "day" as used in a contract or statute, the law adopts as the unit of measurement the period of twenty-four hours extending from midnight to midnight.[46]

2. Fractions of Days. It is a general rule that fractions of days are not

B. Inclusion and Exclusion of First and Last Days — 1. General Rules. Where there is no positive statutory rule on the subject, the courts have, in reckoning, a designated number of days to ascertain the first or last day on which an act may or must be done, expressed themselves as being in favor of effectuating the intention of the parties by looking at the context and subject-matter of the instrument,[60] and of so including or excluding the first and last days as to prevent a forfeiture, if possible.[61] Either the day on which the period begins or the day on which it expires, however, must be included and the other excluded, as it is improper to include or exclude both,[62] an exception compelling the exclusion of both days existing where a statute contemplates so many clear days,[63] or where an act is to be done, or the period is referred to as being between two specified days.[64] The rule which is most commonly adopted, and the one which is prescribed by statute in many jurisdictions, is that the time within which an act is to be done is to be computed by excluding the first day and including

Rule where present interest passes.— In some cases it has been held that an exception exists where a present interest passes on the day the computation begins, as in the case of a lease, and that in such case the first day should be included in the computation. In England, although the present rule is to construe the day of the date exclusively, a distinction is drawn between the time within which an act may be done and a term limited to a certain time, as the term of a patent, it being held in the latter case that and in this connection there is no distinction in meaning between "date" and "day of the date." [68] Although a distinction was made in early cases and is still followed in some jurisdictions between computation from an act done and the day on which the act is done, it being held in the former instance that the day of the doing of the act is to be included,[69] this distinction is at present disregarded in most jurisdictions on the ground that, as a day is an indivisible point of time, an act and the day on which it is done are coextensive.[70] Where time is given until a day named, or an act must be performed by or before a certain day, the time does not, in the absence of a contrary intention, include the designated day, and the act must be done prior thereto.[71]

the patent begins at the earliest moment of the first day, and that the first day is reckoned as inclusive. Russell v. Ledsam, 9 Jur. 557, 14 L. J. Exch. 353, 14 M. & W. 574.

Whether the day of the happening of a certain event should be included as a basis from which to compute time has been a vexed question for many centuries, and, in consequence of a spirited controversy as to whether it should be included or excluded, and to remove any doubt upon the subject, Gregory IX, in his decretals, introduced the phrase "a year and a day," thus including the first and last day of the term. 2. Application of Rules to Particular Acts and Proceedings — a. Enactment and Taking Effect of Statutes. In computing the time after which, under constitutional provisions, a bill becomes a law if not returned by the governor, either the day of its presentment to him or the day of its return is to be excluded, the other included,[72] and the rule generally adopted is to exclude the first, or day of presentment, and include the last day of the prescribed period.[73] In some jurisdictions, when an act is to take effect from and after its passage, the day of its passage is included, and it is held to take effect from the earliest moment of that day;[74] while in others that day is excluded and the act becomes effective the next day.[75] When an act provides that it shall take effect, and be in force, from and after a named day, that day must be excluded from the operation of the act.[76]

b. Private Written Instruments. Although a rule prescribed by statute for computing time by excluding the first day and including the last has been held to apply exclusively to the construction of statutes,[77] it also establishes a convenient canon for the interpretation of contracts, where no different meaning is exhibited by the instrument to be construed;[78] and the general rule that where time is to run from or after a given day or date that day is to be excluded from the computation[79] applies in the construction and interpretation of contracts, and the day the contract is entered into or other day agreed upon for the commencement of its obligations is excluded in determining the time when the contract is in effect,[80] except where the contract manifests a different intention of the parties.[81] A contract to do a certain act or to be responsible for loss between two specified days is exclusive of both of the days mentioned;[82] but where performance is to be on or before a certain day, the party is entitled to the whole of that day for performance;[83] and although the words "to" or "until," when used in a contract, are ordinarily exclusive of the day to which they relate, such construction will yield to the manifest intention of the parties.[84] Where a deed or mortgage is required by statute to be recorded within a certain number of days after execution, the period is to be computed by excluding the day of execution and including the day of filing.[85]

c. Judicial Proceedings Generally. It has been stated generally that when any matter of practice or procedure is required by statute or order of court to be done within a certain number of days, the first day is excluded,[86] and that an order giving or extending the time for doing an act in court practice to a specified day includes that day as a part of the time within which the act may be done.[87]

When chattels distrained are to be sold in a specified time, the day of seizure is excluded and the day of sale included in the reckoning (Cressey v. Parks, 75 Me. 387, 46 Am. L. 753); and in computing the time in which the tenant may replevy, the day on which the distress was made is excluded (McKinney v. Reader, 6 Watts (Pa.) 34). However, under the Vermont statute requiring property distrained to be kept four days before posting, and to be posted six days before selling, the day of seizure and of posting are to be included in counting the four and six days respectively. Alger v. Curry, 40 Vt. 437.

Likewise, in determining whether an order of change of venue has been lodged with the court to which the cause is removed the required number of days before a term to entitle it to be tried at that term, the day of depositing the order should be included, and the first day of the term excluded. In computing the statutory period of limitation for the institution of a civil action or a criminal prosecution, the weight of authority favors the exclusion of the day the crime was committed or the cause of action accrued,[88] and the period allowed for pleading is generally computed by excluding the return-day of the summons or other day from which the time begins to run.[89] A statute, general in its terms, and providing that time shall be computed by excluding the first and including the last day applies to the construction of criminal, as well as civil, statutes;[90] but statutes requiring the accused to be served with the venire or list of jurors a certain number of days before trial contemplate entire days, which excludes both the day of service and the day of trial.[91]

d. Notices. In general statutes regulating the subject of notice are to be construed, as respects the computation of time, most liberally in favor of the party affected by the notice.[92] It is an established rule that when notice of so many days is required by statute, order of court, or written instrument before a certain thing is to be done, or a certain event is to occur, the day of giving, serving, or publishing the notice is to be excluded and the last day is to be included, so that if the act is done or the event occurs on the last day it is sufficient.[93] Appliis not exclusive of the day to which it relates.

In regard to pleading it has been held that a rule extending the time to plead "to" a specified day means until the meeting of the court on that day and does not include the day. Clark v. Ewing, 87 Ill. 344.

Commencement or end of term of court.— Under a statute continuing a term of court "until" the Saturday before the second Monday in July, the interpretation to be placed upon the word "until" is that the last day named is to be included. Montgomery Tract. Co. v. Knabe, 158 Ala. 458, 48 So. 501 [overruling Johnson v. State, 141 Ala. 7, 37 So. 421, 109 Am. St. Rep. 17]. However, a statute allowing a tender of damages and costs to be made at any time until three days before the commencement of the term to which the action is returnable excludes from the period mentioned both the day on which the tender is made and the first day of the term. Notice to take deposition.— In determining the sufficiency of a notice to take depositions, the day on which the notice was given should be excluded, and that on which the depositions are to be taken should be inand notices to quit,[2] as well as statutory notices relative to the support of paupers.[3] Under the peculiar provisions of some statutes, both the day of giving notice and the day of the act or event of which notice is given are excluded,[4] while under other statutes the first day is to be included and the last day excluded.[5] The usual rule of excluding the first day of a period within which an act is to be done and including the last applies where notice is required to be given or served within a specified number of days after a certain act,[6] as where notice of appeal is to be served within a certain number of days after judgment.[7]

e. Process. In ascertaining whether process has been served the required statutory time before the return-day or the day of appearance, the rule frequently adopted is to exclude the day of service and include the return or appearance day.[8] In some jurisdictions, however, the day of service is included and the cluded (Littleton v. Christy, 11 Mo. 390); and it has been held sufficient if either day is counted exclusive, and the other inclusive (Beasley v. Downey, 32 N. C. 384). Under an order allowing testimony to be taken on one day's notice, a notice given on one day to take testimony on the next is sufficient. Walsh v. Boyle, 30 Md. 262.

Where service is by publication, the day on which publication is first made is excluded, return-day excluded,[9] while in other jurisdictions either the day of service or the return-day is included and the other excluded;[10] and in still other jurisdictions, or in the same jurisdiction but under different statutes, it is held that clear days are contemplated, thus rendering necessary the exclusion of both the day of service and the return-day.[11] Where a summons must be made returnable a certain number of days after issue, the day of date is to be excluded in estimating this time.[12]

f. Judgment and Execution. The first day should be excluded and the last included in computing the period which must elapse before a default judgment may be taken,[13] or the period within which a motion to set it aside may be made,[14] and, in general, the day of the rendition of a judgment or decree is excluded in reckoning periods beginning with such rendition.[15] The day on which judgment was entered is excluded in computing the statutory time allowed for the issuance [16] or levy of execution,[17] and the same rule is applicable in construing statutory requirements that a certain period must elapse before execution may be issued.[18] Likewise, in ascertaining the proper time for the return of an execution, the day and the day on which it is completed is included. Forsyth v. Warren, 62 Ill. 68; Vairin v. Edmonson, 10 Ill. 270; Beckwith v. Douglas, 25 Kan. 229; Gilfillin v. Koke, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 172, 1 West. L. Month. 704. To the same effect see Warner v. Bucher, 24 Kan. 478.

Under Ga. Code, only the first or last day of its issue is excluded,[19] and the day from which the reckoning begins is excluded in computing statutory periods allowed to the debtor to relieve himself from the consequences of an execution against his property [20] or person; [21] but the contrary is true in computing a period which must elapse before he may take such steps.[22]

g. Proceedings For Review — (i) NEW TRIAL. A person having to or until a certain day to file a motion for new trial or papers connected therewith is entitled to the whole of that day; [23] but as to whether the day judgment or verdict was rendered is included in a period allowed for filing, commencing with that day, there is a conflict of authority, some cases holding that it should be included,[24] and others holding that it should be excluded.[25]

(ii) APPEAL AND ERROR [26] — (a) In General. It is a general rule, not only in jurisdictions where the computation of time is regulated by statute, but in other jurisdictions where it is not so regulated, that, in computing the time given or allowed by statute or order of court for the taking of an appeal or writ of error, and all the proceedings necessary to perfect the same, there should be excluded the date of rendition of the judgment, order, or decree,[27] or of the period may be counted. Knoxville City Mills Co. v. Lovinger, 83 Ga. 563, 10 S. E. 230.

2. Intervening Sundays and Holidays.[71] It is a general, although perhaps not universal, rule that, in the absence of statutory expression of a contrary intent, intervening Sundays, that is, Sundays which fall on neither the first nor last days, are to be included in computing a period of time,[72] and a similar rule is

Rule when period is measured in hours see infra, VII.

Contracts and forfeitures.— In the computation of damages for breach of contract, where a day, a week, or a month, or any other definite period, is the agreed standard of measurement, every intervening Sunday must be included and counted (Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Eastern R. Co., 121 Fed. 609, 57 C. C. A. 635); and such is also the rule applied in ascertaining the amount of a penalty or forfeiture (Pilot Com'rs v. Erie R. Co., 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 366; Keeter v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 86 N. C. 346; Branch v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 77 N. C. 347), and of demurrage (Brown v. Johnson, C. & M. 440, 11 L. J. And see Shipping, 36 Cyc. 369); but where pay is to be computed by the day, Sundays are not included, unless it has been specially agreed upon (Patterson v. Patterson, 2 Pearson (Pa.) 170).

Publication of notice.— This rule is not affected, in its application to requirements that notice be published a certain number of days, by the fact that there are no Sunday publications, for the exception of Sundays in such cases relates simply to the publication and not to the total period of time covered by the publication (Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240 [followed in Miles v. McDermitt, 31 Cal. 270]; Ormsby v. Louisville, 2 Ky. applicable where holidays intervene.[73] Sometimes intermediate Sundays and holidays are to be excluded by virtue of express statutory enactment [74] or constitutional provisions, such as those relating to the time a bill must be approved or returned by the governor; [75] and it has been held that the general rule which includes intervening Sundays applies only to periods of time which necessarily include one or more Sundays, and does not apply to a period of less duration than a week; [76] but in many cases wherein the period was shorter than a week this distinction has been either unnoticed or rejected.[77] In computing the number of days of a term of court or in ascertaining a certain day of a term of court, Sundays are to be excluded; [78] and in many instances Sundays as well as other days on which the court did not sit have been excluded from the computation on the ground that the statute prescribing the time contemplated judicial days only,[79]

a common illustration of this being found in the exclusion of Sundays in computing the number of days allowed by statute for the filing of a motion for new trial or arrest of judgment.[80] Likewise, intervening Sundays are excluded where working or business days only are manifestly intended to be included in the period of time prescribed by statute,[81] contract,[82] or constitutional provision, such as one limiting the duration of legislative sessions.[83]

I. Definition and Nature.

Title insurance refers to land or an interest therein,[1] and is an agreement whereby the insurer, for a valuable consideration, agrees to indemnify the assured in a specific amount against loss through defects of title to real estate, wherein the latter has an interest, either as purchaser or otherwise.[2] The contract is recognized as a true insurance contract,[3] being limited strictly to indemnity for loss actually suffered,[4] by reason of the defects or encumbrances against which the insurer covenanted to indemnify,[5] and the insurer is not a surety.[6] Title insurance is not mere guesswork, nor is it a wager; it is based upon careful examination of the muniments of title, and the exercise of judgment by skilled conveyancers.[7]

II. INSURABLE INTEREST.

Titles have been held to be the proper subject of insurance within the principle that an interest in any right, duty, or obligation, the impairment of which would tend to a diminution of estate, is a proper subject of insurance,[8] and that an

Gauranty of title and guaranty of certificate of title distinguished.— Where a certificate of title issued by an insurer to a landowner, as to the title of the latter, recites that the guarantor shall not be liable for damages to exceed a certain sum, and shall defend the guarantee, or his successors or heirs, as to every claim adverse to the title guaranteed, and that if the loss is less than all the land, the company shall only be liable for a proportionate share of the loss, and that the guarantor, in case it makes payments under the certificate, shall be subrogated to the rights of the guarantee, the instrument is a guaranty of title, and is not rendered a mere guaranty of the correctness of the certificate by the additional provision that the company guarantees the certificate to be correct. 7. Foehrenbach v. German-American Title, etc., Co., 217 Pa. St. 331, 66 Atl. 561, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 465, holding, however, that title insurance carries with it the idea of protection against some risk, for if there were no risk there would be no cause for insurance.

The quality of a title is a matter of opinion, as to which even men learned in the law of real estate may differ. A policy of title insurance means the opinion of the company which issues it, as to the validity of the title, backed by an agreement to make that opinion good, in case it should prove to be mistaken, and loss should result in consequence to the insured. insurable interest is at the foundation of contracts of title insurance is held to be evident from the character and the nature of the risk assumed, the value of the interest in such insurance being practically the same as that existing in other insurance of property.[9] As in other cases of insurance the interest must be such that either as mortgagee,[10] owner,[11] or purchaser of ground-rents,[12] the assured would suffer pecuniary loss by reason of the risk insured against, such as the existence of liens or encumbrances,[13] or defects in title.[14]

III. THE CONTRACT.

A. Construction. A contract of title insurance is subject to the same rules of construction as are applicable to other insurance contracts,[15] and must be examined in the light of the purpose or object for which it was made.[16] The whole agreement is to be considered and a liberal construction given;[17] if there is room to doubt the proper construction of the contract the doubt as in other cases of insurance will be resolved in favor of the assured,[18] and such construction will not be given to some provisions as will render other provisions nugatory, if all can be upheld together.[19] In cases of ambiguity all the facts and circumstances under which the contract was made may be considered;[20] but all prior negotiations are merged in the written contract to the extent that evidence thereof is inadmissible which goes to the intention of the parties, as that can be found only in the contract.[21]

B. Warranties and Conditions; Waiver. As in other branches of insurance the assured is generally required to fill out an application blank containing questions pertaining to the desired insurance;[22] and as to warranties and conditions the general principles of other kinds of insurance are applicable.[23] If upon an application for a title policy an untrue answer is given to a question, and the policy provides that an untrue answer avoids the policy, the answer is in the nature of a warranty and the matter of its materiality is not open;[24] but when a policy contains a condition which renders it void at its inception and this is known to the insurer when he issues the policy, he thereby waives the condition,[25] and generally the rules applicable to insurance agents as to the power of waiver of conditions apply.[26] A condition precedent to a right of action upon the policy, which prohibits a recovery unless the assured had contracted to sell the estate or interest covered by the policy, and the title has been declared, by a court of last resort of competent jurisdiction, defective or encumbered by reason of a defect or encumbrance for which the insurer would be liable under the policy, has no application to a case where the land is held by another party in actual adverse possession, and the assured has lost it absolutely by reason of a defect in the insured title.[27]

C. Reformation and Cancellation — 1. In General. Like other contracts,[28] a title policy may in a proper case be reformed.[29] In determining the question whether the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction are such as to justify or require a reformation of the policy, it becomes necessary to scrutinize closely the contract as written, its nature and purpose, the conditions under which it was made, and the legitimate oral evidence, if any, bearing upon the transaction;[30] and where the whole transaction tends to show that there was no mistake as to the actual terms of the agreement, but that in reducing it to writing the real date as to a part thereof was inadvertently omitted, the trial court should reform the written policy so as to make it conform to the actual agreement of the parties.[31]

Where a policy of title insurance requires notice of any adverse claim to be given to the insurer, the act of the agent of the insurer, on being informed by the insured of the existence of a mortgage against the property, in stating to insured that it amounts to nothing, and for assured to pay no attention thereto, which is relied on by assured, is a waiver of the provisions requiring notice, which will estop the insurer from urging want of notice of such claim as a defense to an action on the policy. 2. Return of Premium. Upon the cancellation [32] or amendment of a policy of title insurance by a judicial decree,[33] the holder of the policy is entitled to a return of a proportionate part of the premium paid therefor, measured by the time elapsing between the date of the policy and the date of the decree.[34] The policy-holder is not, however, entitled to the return of that part of the premium which the application for insurance stipulated might be retained by the insurer for its services in investigating the title insured,[35] or of an amount proportioned upon the diminution of risk owing to lapse of time.[36]

IV. Scope of Liability; Risks Insured and Excepted.

A. In General. The sole object of title insurance is to cover possibilities of loss through defects that may cloud or invalidate titles, and it is for the assumption of whatever risk there may be, in such connection, that the premium is paid to, and accepted by, the insurer which issues the policy,[37] the general effect and intent being to insure a valid security both as to title and against encumbrances.[38]

B. Particular Risks and Stipulations. The risks generally insured against are defects in,[39] and unmarketability of,[40] title, and liens or encumbrances;[41] and it is generally provided that in the event of suit founded upon a claim of prior title or encumbrance, the insurer agrees to defend the assured's title for and in behalf of the assured.[42] Under title policies specifying the risks insured, to warrant a recovery it must appear that the loss suffered arose from one of those risks.[43] Thus in an action upon a covenant contained in a title policy, tee, etc., Co., 176 N. Y. 65, 68 N. E. 132, holding that if there was no mistake in the agreement as made and understood between the parties, and the scrivener, in reducing it to writing, inadvertently omitted an essential element thereof, the court had the right to reform the written contract, and that if, on the other hand, this is regarded as an instance of actual mistake in the making of the contract, then the mistake was mutual, and the reformatory power of the court is properly invoked on that ground, and that in this view of the case the excision of incompetent evidence referred to did not affect the result.

S. 639, holding that the risk of loss under a contract of this kind, unlike other insurance, diminishes with the lapse of time, and as the end of the period covered by the policy approaches there is less likelihood of loss, yet to attempt to say from this basis what proportion of the premium has been earned would involve the matter in arbitrary speculation and bring up at an exceedingly unsatisfactory result, since no certain or definite rule could be evolved from that process of reasoning; whereas, on the other hand, to apportion the time during which the policy was in force to that of the unexpired period leaves no room for speculation or conjecture, does not involve an effort to measure the value of the possibility or probability of a loss, and fixes a rule which, if not wholly satisfactory, is at least definite and certain.

grounded on the eviction of the assured, to make out a cause of action, the declaration must show either an eviction under a paramount title or possession under a paramount title equivalent to an eviction, and an averment of a claim of title or of eviction under an adverse title is not sufficient.[44] The condition that no claim shall arise unless the assured has been actually evicted under an adverse title insured against is not fulfilled so as to give a right of action by the insured, by an adjudication reversing on appeal a decree confirming the terms of a sale of the lands in question and authorizing a deed therefor, to the assured,[45] although a plaintiff against whom an adverse decree is entered as to his right to the property is not bound to carry his resistance to the decree to the point of waiting to be physically expelled from the premises.[46] The stipulation in a title insurance policy that no right of action shall accrue thereon unless the assured has contracted to sell the land or the interest insured, and a court of last resort has declared the existence of a defect or encumbrance upon the title for which the insurer would be liable under the policy, does not apply where the land is held adversely and the assured has lost it by reason of a defect in the insured title.[47] A policy insuring a purchaser against any defect of title affecting the premises, or the interest of the purchaser therein, or by reason of the unmarketability of the title or by reason of any liens or encumbrances at the date of the policy, but exempting variations between the location of the fences, stoops, and the record lines, is breached by encroachments on the premises arising from the fact that the stoop, door cap, etc., of the adjoining property encroach on the premises.[48]

Ct. 151, holding that under a policy of title insurance insuring against eviction, liens, and encumbrances, the refusal of an adjoining owner to make compensation for the use of a party-wall on the line between the two premises gives no right of action to the assured, the right to compensation for the use of the party-wall being a mere chose in action, and not a lien or encumbrance which has been or could be put into judgment against the property of the assured, and hence not recoverable in a suit on the policy. The phrase "tenancy of the present occupants," stated in a title insurance policy as a defect in or objection to the title against which the insurer does not insure, is construed as meaning the tenancy which arises through the occupation or temporary possession of the premises by those who are tenants in the popular sense in which the word "tenant" is used. The phrase does not include the claim of a person who, asserting ownership in fee as against the title insured, is in actual adverse possession at the time the policy is issued. Place v. St. Paul Title Ins., etc., Co., 67 Minn. 126, 69 N. W. 706, 64 Am. St. Rep. 404. On the other hand, it is held that where a policy of title insurance excepts claims of tenure by present occupants, together with instruments, liens, encumbrances, judicial proceedings, and pending suits not shown by any public record, the policy covers the record title only, and does not insure against a claim sustainable only by proof of adverse possession. Bothin v. California Title Ins., etc., Co., 153 Cal. 718, 96 Pac. 500, holding in this connection that the word "tenure" is a term of extensive signification, and while it means the mode by which one holds an estate in land, it imports any kind of a holding, from mere possession to the owning of the inheritance.

instead of protecting the assured against matters that may arise during a stated period after the issuance of the policy, is generally designed to save him harmless from any such loss through defects, liens, or encumbrances that may affect or burden his title when he takes it.[50] There is no implied agreement to go beyond the conditions existing at the time the policy is issued and to assume a general liability to indemnify against future encumbrances, municipal or otherwise;[51] and it follows as a general rule therefore that when the assured gets a good title, the covenant of the insurer has been fulfilled, and there is no liability,[52] and a policy insuring against unmarketability by reason of liens charging the property at the date of the policy insures only against liens the rights to which are already inchoate at the date of the policy and not against a future possibility of liens.[53] From the very nature of the contract it usually bears the same date as the deed of the title which it purports to insure, and if, in a given case, there is a discrepancy between these dates, it must be due to some exceptional circumstance, which should be noted in the contract;[54] but it cannot be held as a matter of law that a policy dated subsequent to an assessment and which in terms purports to insure against liens and encumbrances, charging the property at the date of the policy, was intended to cover only such liens and encumbrances as existed when the assured took title;[55] for it is competent for the parties to make any contract to insure the title to property upon such terms as are agreeable to both parties whether the insurance operates upon defects which should come into existence after the delivery of the deeds and the entry into possession or before,[56] and it is the right of the insurer to insure the title to properties against encumbrances existing before the date of the deed or thereafter,[57] or to except or include any risk at its option.[58]

V. ACTIONS ON THE POLICY.

A. Right of Action. Title insurance being strictly a contract of indemnity,[59] and not of guaranty,[60] it is not enough in order to establish a right of recovery on the policy that the assured is able to prove the title to be defective or unmarketable; he must go further and show that he has actually suffered loss thereby.[61] Where the risks insured against are specified in the policy, to warrant a recovery thereon plaintiff must show a loss within one of the specified risks.[62]

B. Limitations. Since a title insurance policy is a contract of indemnity,[63] limitations do not commence to run until insured is evicted by the holder of a superior title, although the mortgage under which he is evicted was in existence when the title was insured.[64]

C. Pleading. The general rules of pleading[65] apply to actions on title policies,[66] and the pleader must either aver directly the facts which constitute his cause of action or set forth the circumstances from which those facts necessarily by intendment of law result.[67] An averment that defendant carelessly omitted to certify to a previous encumbrance appearing in the public records

Dist. 198, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 449, holding that a schedule attached to a policy of title insurance to show liens "which do or may now exist and against which the company does not agree to insure or indemnify" does not profess to set out all the encumbrances of liens which exist against the property as a certificate of search would do, but only specifies those liens or encumbrances which it stipulates shall not be within the protection of the policy; hence if any lien or encumbrance is omitted intentionally from this list, it is not to be inferred that such lien is practically non-existent; the inference goes no further than that the insurer, for reasons not disclosed but sufficient to itself, is willing to assume the risk of any loss resulting to the assured because of the existence of this omitted lien or encumbrance.

A contract by an insurer with one party for the benefit of a third to examine and certify a title is valid and enforceable by the third. Economy Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. West Jersey Title Co., 64 N. J. L. 27, 44 Atl. 854.

A. 127, holding that a contract against loss or damage by reason of defects of title is not, in the absence of express provision, a guaranty that the assured acquired a good legal title, but to entitle him to recover on the policy he must prove some loss or damage.

The distinction is important, for if the contract were one of guaranty, plaintiff, although he may have lost nothing, might have a right to recover; on the other hand, if the contract were one of indemnity alone, he could not recover unless he proved a loss. establishes a complete right of action on a contract to examine and certify the title;[68] and a count which alleges an encumbrance by the lien of unpaid taxes not excepted from the guaranty, plaintiff's contract to sell, and the rejection of the title because of the encumbrance satisfies a clause of the policy making defendant liable if plaintiff should contract to sell and the title should be rejected because of a defect or encumbrance not excepted in the policy;[69] but an averment in a declaration that a person named, purchased land at a tax-sale and ever since has lawfully held the land against plaintiff is not a sufficient averment that plaintiff was evicted under the title conveyed by that sale.[70] A statutory permission to plead the performance of conditions generally does not, in its application to contracts of indemnity, extend to matters which constitute the very loss for which the insurer is to be answerable;[71] but an objection that plaintiff has not alleged the notice and proof of loss and the tender of a conveyance, which are said to be necessary to perfect his right of action, is obviated by the general averment of performance of conditions required of plaintiff, as these matters do not form the gist of the loss;[72] and a complaint in an action on a policy insuring title to real estate, which alleges that, by reason of the premises, insured has suffered damages in a specified sum, is sufficient to permit proof of such damage as is the naturally and legally presumable consequences of the injury done.[73]

D. Evidence — 1. Admissibility. The general rules of evidence[74] apply to actions on title insurance policies.[75] Oral evidence of mistake in the date of the written instrument is always admissible;[76] but testimony of experts in such insurance as to what ought to have been done in the issuance of a policy in question is inadmissible to support the legal conclusion that the policy should have been different in form.[77]

2. Production of Books and Records. It would seem that in a proper case the books and records of the insurer may be procured for evidence under a subpoena duces tecum;[78] but the production of books and writings which are the private property of the insurer will not be compelled merely for the information of the public,[79] for the insurer has a vital interest in maintaining the secrecy of these books as a repository of valuable information.[80]

Where the alleged indebtedness is a mere conclusion of the pleader, without the averment of any facts to support it, and indebtedness is not legally shown, the promise to pay is nudum pactum. Taylor v. New Jersey Title Guarantee, etc., Co., 70 N. J. L. 24, 56 Atl. 152.

They have never been published, and their contents are kept secret, except as disclosed, piecemeal, in furnishing to applicants therefor abstracts of title relating to specified parcels of real estate; and the furnishing of such abstracts is carried on as a business for pay and profit. The value of the books consist mainly in the secrecy of their contents. Were the information which they afford rendered accessible to the public by other means, the demand for it through the one source now available would be diminished, if not destroyed. E. Amount of Recovery. Title insurance being strictly a contract of indemnity and not of guaranty,[81] the assured is entitled to recover only for the actual loss which has arisen by reason of the defects or encumbrances against which defendant covenanted to indemnify.[82] In a case of total loss of title, there is but one measure to be applied, and that is the value of the property lost;[83] and assured in a policy insuring the title against encroachments is entitled to recover the difference between the value of the property when purchased as it was with encroachments and its value as it would have been if there would have been no such encroachments;[84] but where, by a policy on a mortgage, an insurer agrees to insure from all loss or damage, not exceeding an amount specified, which the assured shall sustain by reason of defects or unmarketability of the title of the assured to the estate, mortgage, or interest described, or because of any liens on it or encumbrances charging the same at the date of the policy, and there is a total loss to the assured by reason of the sale of the property mortgaged under a prior mortgage in existence at the date of the policy, the insurance company is liable only for the actual value of the land, and not for the amount of the mortgage insured.[85] The provisions of such a policy do not constitute the insurer a surety for the mortgage debt, or a guarantor of its payment, nor does the insurer undertake to insure that the property mortgaged is a sufficient security for the debt; what it does undertake to do is to indemnify against loss or damage sustained by reason of defects of title and liens upon the land;[86] but where, under the condition attached to the policy, the insurer has the option to defend the suit, and it elects to defend, it must be held to do so for its own benefit, and must exercise reasonable care; if it fails to do so, it is liable for any loss caused by such failure, and the limitation in the policy of the amount of insurance does not apply.[87] One in possession of land and claiming a title in fee simple who applies in good faith to an insurer which issues to him a policy, and thereafter it is decided in partition proceedings that he has only a half interest in the land, and the assured because thereof voluntarily surrenders the premises to a purchaser at judicial sale, may recover the value from the insurer and it cannot claim that, as he never had title to the half interest, he suffered no loss.[88]

F. Offsets. Counter-claims are allowed in actions on policies of title insurance,[89] in like manner as in other actions,[90] and as in other actions a claim, in order to be the subject of counter-claim, must be due at the time of trial; [91] but where the answer sets up a counter-claim upon the note of plaintiff not due at the time of the trial, and no objection is made that it is premature, but the case is tried throughout, including the charge of the court, not excepted to, on the theory that it is a proper counter-claim, plaintiff must be held to have waived the objection that the note was not yet due.[92]

VI. TITLE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

A. Organization and Status. The business of title insurance is carried on to-day almost exclusively by insurance companies incorporated under state laws prescribing their powers and limitations and providing for state regulation;[93] and in the insurance laws of the several states these corporations are placed upon substantially the same footing and are made subject to the same rules as apply to other insurance companies excepting so far only as the character of the business transacted by these corporations from that transacted by other insurance companies.[94] In regard to these companies, there are few decisions, because this branch of insurance is modern in origin and because the organization of the companies is of such comparatively recent date that decisions bearing upon their rights and liabilities are still rare.[95]

B. Liability as Abstracter or Conveyancer — 1. COMPARED WITH LIABILITY AS INSURER. Title insurance companies sometimes combine with the business of title insurance the examination of titles and conveyancing and as to the two businesses the duty and liability of the company is radically different.[96] In all matters relating to searching titles and conveyancing the company holds itself out to the public and assumes to discharge the same duties as an individual conveyancer or attorney, and in such transactions its duties and responsibilities Probably Pennsylvania was the first to provide for the incorporation of companies to insure titles, by a statute passed in 1874 and since amended from time to time. See 42 Cent. L. J. 445 note.

In New York five or more persons may form a corporation to examine titles to real property and chattels real, to procure and furnish information in relation thereto, make and guarantee the correctness of searches for all instruments, liens, or charges affecting the same, guarantee or insure the payment of bonds and mortgages and guarantee and insure the owners of real property and chattels real and others interested therein against the loss by reason of defective titles thereto and other encumbrances thereon, and it is provided that such a corporation shall be known as a title guaranty corporation. Wadhams' Consol. Laws N. Y. c. 28, § 170. The act provides for the filing of a certificate of incorporation and specifies the contents thereof (§ 170); the manner of subscription to capital stock (§ 171); the passing of by-laws and the purposes thereof (§ 172); the issue by the superintendent of insurance of a certificate (§ 173); the filing of a certificate with the superintendent of full payment of capital stock (§ 174); and the manner of investment of the capital and funds of the company (§ 176). The act furthermore provides for the merger of corporations of this class (§ 179), and confers additional powers on certain specified title guaranty companies (§ 180).

The business has become very extensive, every considerable city having one or more title companies, which unite the business of examining titles with that of insuring them. The thoroughness which characterizes the work of these companies is attested by the remarkably small number of cases involving title insurance that are to be found in the reports. Vance Ins. 590.

are the same.[97] As insurers of titles, however, these companies enter into contracts of an entirely different nature, contracts wherein the doctrine of skill and care has no application,[98] for where a company issues its policy of insurance guaranteeing that the title is not unmarketable or defective, no question of negligence in searching can arise. The guarantee is absolute, subject only to the conditions of the policy,[99] and to an action on the title policy it is no defense that the conveyancing was done by plaintiff's conveyancer.[1]

2. Exercise of Skill and Care. The obligation devolves upon the company in such cases to exercise ordinary reasonable skill and knowledge of the profession;[2] and liability can only be predicated on negligence and misconduct in the examination.[3]

3. Damages For Negligence. Damages recoverable for negligence in searching and in conveyancing are such as are the natural and necessary result of the negligence,[4] and the company is liable for the full amount of loss caused by the negligence and not merely for the amount of insurance specified in the policy.[5]

Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 3 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 470, 477, 1 Keyes 72.

"The term applies at common law to a very large class of dues and exactions which are in the nature of fixed rights, and which cannot be lawfully exceeded. They are generally if not universally connected with some franchise which involves duties as well as privileges of a general or public nature. The right to receive fixed tolls is found in fairs, markets, mills, turnpikes, ferries, bridges and many other classes of interests where the owner of the franchise is obliged to accommodate the public, and the public in turn are protected from extortion by an obligation to pay only regular dues." McKee v. Grand Rapids, etc., St. R. Co., 41 Mich. 274, 279, 1 N. W. 873, 50 N. W. 469.

Does not mean such terms of payment as the parties may agree upon.— In reference to tolls charged for carrying coal by a railroad, in order that the charge may be a toll there must be some relation between the payment to be made and the engines, or wagons, or quantity of coal to be conveyed over the line; some measure upon which the rate, or charge, or payment is to be made. Co., 35 Cal. 606, 619.

Toll-gate.— By a not uncommon figure of speech the term is used for the road on which the gate is allowed to be erected. Fayetteville, etc., Turnpike Co. v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 578, 580. Used synonymously in statute with "turnpikes" and "toll-bars" (Northam Bridge Co. v. London, etc., R. Co., 6 M. & W. 428, 439), and "turnpike-gate" (Barnes v. White, 1 C. B. 192, 214, 9 Jur. 181, 14 L. J. M. C. 65, 1 New Sess. Cas. 504, 50 E. C. L. 192).

"Toll service," in reference to telephones, is the service rendered by placing at the disposal of the patron at the transmitting station, and the one at the receiving station, instruments connected by electric wires, by means of which the two are enabled to carry on a conversation. Central Union Tel. Co. v. Swoveland, 14 Ind. App. 341, 42 N. E. 1035, 1039.

"Toll-station," in reference to long distance telephones, a station where a message is paid for, for talking, at a certain rate of toll, governed by the location or distance of the station at which the party is. Southern Bell Tel., etc., Co. v. Parker, 119 Ga. 721, 726, 47 S. E. 194.

"Toll thorough" is a toll demandable by an express grant, by custom or prescription, on a public highway, in a public port, or for the use of public property (Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 583*q*, 9 L. ed. 773, where it is said to be so termed because the party claiming it is presumed to have had no original right to the place where he demands toll. "He must, therefore, show not only his right to toll, by custom, prescription or grant, but must show some consideration for it, some burden on himself, some benefit to the public, or that he, or those under whom he claims, had once a right to the locus in quo, which had been commuted for the toll, and this consideration must be applied to the precise spot where toll is claimed"); a toll which is taken for passing over the highway, in consideration of repair or other benefit done by the owner of the toll, but without any interest or claim in the soil (Rex v. Nicholson, 12 East 330, 340, 11 Rev. Rep. 398, 104 Eng. Reprint 129); a sum demanded for a passage through a highway or for a passage over a ferry (6 Comyn Dig. 349 [quoted in Lake Superior, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 93 U. S. 442, 458, 23 L. ed. 965]). Distinguished from "toll traverse" see Richards v. Bennett, 1 B. & C. 223, 234, 2 D. & R. 389, 1 L. J. K. B. O. S. 97, 25 Rev. Rep. 372, 8 E. C. L. 96, 107 Eng. I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A. Definitions — 1. TOLL ROAD OR TURNPIKE ROAD. A toll road or turnpike road is a road or highway over which the public have the right to travel upon payment of toll, and on which the parties entitled to such toll have the right to erect gates and bars to insure its payment.[1] The term is nomen generalissimum,[2] and includes plank roads and gravel roads for passage over which tolls may lawfully be charged and their collection enforced by the use of turnpikes or gates.[3] The word "turnpike" alone does not properly mean a road but a gate,[4]

Other definitions are: "A road made by individuals, or by a corporation, on which tolls are collected." Worcester Dict. [quoted in Neff v. Mooresville, etc., Gravel Road Co., 66 Ind. 279, 284].

L. 449], where the court said: "The word turnpike does not mean road, but it means gate, such as are used to throw across the road, to obstruct travelers' carriages and the like, until the tolls are collected." See also Northam Bridge, etc., Co. v. London, etc., R. Co., 4 Jur. 892, 9 L. J. Exch. 165, 6 M. & W. 428, 439, 1 R. & Can. Cas. 665, where it is said that "the words 'turnpikes,' 'toll-gates,' and 'toll-bars,' are used synonymously."

although it is sometimes used in the former sense and the characteristics of a turnpike road attributed to it.[5]

2. Toll.[6] As used in connection with highways, toll has been defined as a duty imposed on goods and passengers traveling public roads.[7]

3. Turnpike Company. A turnpike company is one which has the power to collect tolls from persons passing over their road, and to enforce the collection by erecting turnpikes or gates, or both, to obstruct the passage till the tolls are paid.[8] This definition, as well as that of turnpike road,[9] is broad enough to include companies owning gravel and plank roads for passage over which tolls may be charged.[10]

4. Other Terms.[11] The word "toll-gate" is sometimes used in statutes as synonymous with turnpike-gate,[12] or turnpikes and toll-bars,[13] or as meaning the road on which the gate is allowed to be erected.[14]

B. Origin and Nature. Turnpike roads originated in England independently of statute, about the middle of the eighteenth century, when certain individuals, with a view to the repair of particular roads, subscribed among themselves for that purpose, and erected gates upon the roads, taking tolls from those who passed through them. They were met with violent opposition at first and petitions were presented to parliament against them, whereupon acts were passed for their regulation.[15] As toll, plank, and turnpike roads are established by public authority and are public easements, every person possessing the right to travel thereon upon payment of toll, they are generally regarded as public highways,[16] the only distinction between them and ordinary roads or highways being that the former are constructed and maintained at private expense, and travel

A turnpike is defined as "a gate set across a road, to stop travelers and carriages until toll is paid for the privilege of passage thereon." Black L. Dict.

App. 468, 476 [reversed in 70 Mo. 562], where it is said that "toll is the price of the privilege of travel over that particular highway, and it is a quid pro quo."

It has also been defined as "an excise demanded and paid for the privilege of using the way" and construed to exclude charges for transportation. Boyle v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 54 Pa. St. 310, 314.

"Intermediate toll" is a term which has been applied to toll which is collected from persons who use a toll road at points between the toll-gates and who do not pass by, through, or around a toll-gate. See Hollingworth v. State, 29 Ohio St. 552, 553.

In Rhode Island, although a turnpike road is recognized as a species of highway and becomes a free public highway upon acceptance by the town of a deed of the road (Gardiner v. Johnston Town Council, 16 R. I. 94, 12 Atl. 888), it is not deemed a "highway," within the meaning of Gen. Laws, c. 60, § 22, providing that the proprietors of any artificial watercourse, which "has been or shall be made under, through, or by the side of any highway previously existing," shall maintain all necessary bridges over, and fences along, such watercourse (North Providence v. Dyerville Mfg. Co., 13 R. I. 45).

Character as street.— The use, as a street, by the citizens of a municipality within which it lies, of a turnpike or plank road, gives it the character of a street, to the extent that its existence as such cannot be questioned by any party other than the company which owns the turnpike or plank road. Simmons v. Passaic, 42 N. J. L. 524; State v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227. II. ESTABLISHMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MAINTENANCE.

A. Right to Establish. The right to exact tolls for the use of a road is not a common right but a sovereign prerogative, and an individual or corporation may possess such a right only under and by virtue of a grant or franchise emanating from the state.[23] This right or franchise, however, is not necessarily a corporate one, there being no fundamental objection to its enjoyment by natural persons.[24] The legislature may confer the right with such limitations and restrictions as it sees fit to impose,[25] and while county boards may lawfully grant such a franchise only when duly authorized by statute,[26] and after judicially determining the existence of the jurisdictional facts prescribed by statute,[27] a grant made by

Road ceded to state by United States.— The act of April 12, 1870 (67 Ohio Laws 46), which by its terms authorizes the collection of intermediate tolls for traveling on that portion of the national road lying in the state of Ohio, does not violate the conditions of the compact under the act of the Ohio general assembly of Feb. 4, 1831, and the act of congress of March 2, 1831, by which that part of the road was ceded to the state by the general government. Constitutionality of statute conferring authority.— Cal. St. (1893) p. 359, authorizing the county board of commissioners to grant licenses and franchises to take tolls on public roads whenever, in their judgment, the expenses of maintaining roads as public highways are too great to justify the county in maintaining them, the licensee being required to keep the road in reasonable repair, does not violate Const. art. 11, § 13, forbidding the legislature to grant any private corporation or person power to control county improvements and property. Blood v. McCarty, 112 Cal. 561, 44 Pac. 1025. them is entitled to the same presumption in favor of its validity as any other grant made by any department of the government.[28] Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, certain designated officials may build and operate toll roads,[29] and statutes requiring certain proceedings by or before designated officials must be complied with before a right to build the road exists.[30] A toll-gate erected without lawful authority upon a highway which belongs to the state or the people thereof is a nuisance and is subject to abatement as such.[31] However, the conversion of a free public highway into a toll road may be authorized, the keeping of the road in repair being deemed a sufficient consideration,[32] and vice versa a toll road may be converted into a public highway, free of tolls.[33]

B. Turnpike and Toll Road Companies — 1. Incorporation, Stock, and Stock-Holders. Toll, plank, and turnpike road companies are generally incorporated and organized under special acts or general statutes relating to such companies and providing for their organization,[34] and a valid corporation comes into existence upon a substantial compliance with all of the statutory requirements,[35] such as those relating to the making and requisites of articles of association,[36]

Time for which corporation may be created.— Although the road will be constructed of stone and gravel, a company is within the exception of a constitutional provision that no corporation, except for municipal purposes, or for the construction of railroads, plank roads, and canals, shall be created for a longer period than thirty years. Canal St. Gravel-Road Co. v. Paas, 95 Mich. 372, 54 N. W. 907. However, a legislative intent to create a perpetual corporation will not be implied from provisions conferring upon the company continued succession or a fee simple title to lands which it may condemn; and where the special act under which it is organized does not limit the term of corporate life, the limitations imposed by general incorporation laws apply, and not those of a general act for the incorporation of turnpike companies. Consolidation may be had only where there is a statute authorizing it. Thus a statute which authorizes the consolidation of companies theretofore organized does not authorize the consolidation of companies thereafter organized. Shelbyville, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Barnes, 42 Ind. 498. Neither can a turnpike company organize for the purpose of buying existing roads owned by different corporations. A sufficient number of petitioners is required under an act providing that county commissioners may authorize the formation of a corporation upon a petition of persons representing three fifths of all the lands within three fourths of a mile of the proposed road. A finding of fact by the commissioners that the number is sufficient is conclusive on collateral attack (State v. Needham, 32 Ind. 325); but it is an error of law for the commissioners to entertain and retain jurisdiction where part of the requisite number of petitioners withdraw their names before final action by the board (Hord v. Elliott, 33 Ind. 220).

2. Officers and Agents. The powers, duties, and liabilities of officers and agents of corporations of this nature are dependent upon statutes and the principles governing corporations generally.[41] In the absence of special statutory

Covington, etc., Plank-Road Co. v. Moore, 3 Ind. 510.

The residence of each and every subscriber of stock must be set forth in the articles, under the Indiana statutes (Busenback v. Attica, etc., Gravel Road Co., 43 Ind. 265); but it is not a valid objection that the residence of a few of the subscribers is not stated, where the residence of a number, whose subscriptions amount to the required statutory sum per mile of the proposed road, is stated (Fox v. Allensville, etc., Turnpike Co., 46 Ind. 31).

The description of route need not be very specific (Barnhill v. Mill Spring, etc., Gravel Road Co., 51 Ind. 354), and a map of the road may be incorporated in the articles (Miller v. Wild Cat Gravel Road Co., 57 Ind. 241). Thus an omission of the name of the state and county is not fatal, where the articles state the beginning point in a section, township, and range, as the court may take judicial notice that these are within a county in the state (Turpin v. Eagle Creek, etc., Gravel Road Co., 48 Ind. 45); and where the articles describe the proposed road as beginning at a point where two named roads touch each other at a certain corner of a certain section, and the route is described so that its line can be traced to a certain point in a certain section and range, where it terminates, a failure to state the range of the section at the point of beginning will not render the description bad (Estell v. Knightstown, etc., Turnpike Co., 41 Ind. 174). Likewise a charter of a company is not void because it cannot be determined from a mere inspection where the road is to be built or established. Reed v. Cornwall, 27 Conn. 48.

The insertion of unauthorized provisions does not render the incorporation invalid, but simply renders the company liable to forfeiture of franchise for acts done in pursuance of such provisions. Eastern Plank Road Co. v. Vaughan, 14 N. Y. 546.

37. Fox v. Allensville, etc., Turnpike Co., 46 Ind. 31 (holding that it is not essential to organization, under the Indiana statute, that the whole amount of the capital stock as fixed by the articles of association shall be subscribed); State v. Dillon, 36 Ind. 388; Vansickle v. Erdelmeyer, 36 Ind. 262 (holding that articles of association are not invalid because the amounts subscribed might be paid in instalments at one, two, or three years from a certain year, either in money or in labor, and at such times in each year as the directors might determine); Fitch v. Poplar Flat, etc., Turnpike Co., 13 S. W. 791, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 79; Hamilton, etc., Road Co. v. Townsend, 13 Ont. App. 534.

Conditional subscriptions not authorized see Butternuts, etc., Turnpike Co. v. North, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 518.

When subscriptions may be collected.—Although a valid corporation and binding subscription of stock may exist under the Indiana general plank road law of 1849, without directors, the subscriptions cannot be collected until there are directors, except the amount to be paid at the time of subscribing to defray preliminary expenses, provided by the articles or by-laws of the association. Covington, etc., Plank-Road Co. v. Moore, 3 Ind. 510.

Effect of change of termini.— Where a company induces subscriptions to its stock by agreeing to construct its road between certain termini, and thereafter procures an act changing the termini, the subscriptions are no longer binding. Manheim, etc., Turnpike, etc., Co. v. Arndt, 31 Pa. St. 317.

Additional liability.—The liability of stockholders cannot be increased without their consent, by the passage of statutes subsequent to the organization of the company, and the burden of showing the assent of a stock-holder, sought to be charged, is upon the corporation or party seeking to enforce the liability. Ireland v. Palestine, etc., Turnpike Co., 19 Ohio St. 369. Under an act providing that the stock-holders shall be jointly and severally liable for the payment of the debts of the company for an amount equal to the stock they have severally subscribed, the stock-holders are liable to the corporation creditors to the full amount of the stock subscribed, and not to the balance unpaid on said stock. Pettibone v. McGraw, 6 Mich. 441.

An agreement whereby stock-holders are to pay the amount of the company's liability on a certain judgment, such amount to be refunded to the stock-holders "out of the first moneys received from the proceeds of said road," does not require the company to apply its tolls on the judgment as a condition precedent to its recovery on the agreement. authority in any one person to call a meeting, a call for a corporate election can only be made by the president and board of directors,[42] although, under the statutes of some states, directors may be elected before the articles of association are filed.[43]

3. Powers, Privileges, and Franchises — a. In General. A toll road or turnpike company acquires its powers from the law creating it, and possesses only such powers as are expressly granted and such as are necessarily incident to the execution of those specifically granted.[44] The franchise of the corporators consists of the right to be a corporate body, while the franchises of the corporation embrace the right to construct and maintain a toll road, build tollhouses, and collect tolls.[45] Such a corporation generally possesses the express or implied power to make necessary contracts,[46] to make a valid equitable assignment of money due it on subscriptions,[47] and acquire and hold by purchase,[48] lease,[49] or condemnation,[50] such real estate as is necessary for its purposes; but its power to borrow or loan money or indorse commercial paper is confined strictly to the authority conferred upon it by statute,[51] as is its power to operate a stage line[52] or contract to carry the United States mail.[53] To be available, a franchise to such a company must be accepted,[54] and its availability lasts only during the

b. Exclusive Franchises. A franchise which is not exclusive in its terms does not confer upon the grantee any monopoly of its route and it has no remedy, even though its travel is diverted and profits diminished, against the building, in the immediate vicinity, of a free public highway which public convenience demands,[56] or against the granting of a franchise between the same points to another company,[57] or the building and use of a private road on adjoining lands.[58] However, the courts will protect it against the authorization and establishment, or use without authorization, of "shunpikes," that is, roads connecting with the toll road at points between gates and purposely designed to avoid the payment of tolls,[59] as they also will under statutes prohibiting the authorization of free public highways within a certain distance of the turnpike,[60] or where the terms at great expense and maintenance of such a road for over fifteen years by a private corporation, under an unchallenged claim of title, which was officially recognized by the county, is prima facie evidence of ownership, as against the county. C. Public Aid — 1. In General. In the absence of constitutional restrictions the legislature may authorize the granting of public aid to toll road companies,[62] but public aid may only be given to validly organized corporations,[63] and where there is legislative authority therefor.[64] The subscriptions may be made, bonds issued, or taxes levied only in the manner, form, and upon the terms prescribed by existing [65] statutes; [66] and it is essential to the validity of such subscriptions that there shall first be a compliance with statutory conditions precedent, such as the making of private subscriptions to a certain amount.[67] Where all conditions precedent have been complied with, the county official whose duty it is to make the subscription may be compelled by mandamus to do so;[68] while, on the other hand, the courts will restrain the giving of aid contrary to law.[69]

Absence of specific provisions.—An order of a county court, by which it is said that it subscribes for so many shares of stock, when concurred in by a competent majority of the court, is binding when no other mode was pointed out, and the court had authority to make the subscription. Justices Clarke County Ct. v. Paris, etc., Turnpike Co., 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 143.

Oversubscription.—Where a state subscribes a certain number of shares in a turnpike company, and afterward it appeared that, in consequence of mistake or fraud, a larger amount had been paid by the state than the actual length of the road required, it cannot recover back the overplus without offering to transfer to the company the excess of shares. 2. ASSESSMENTS AND TAXES — a. Validity and Enforcement. Under statutes providing for the aid of turnpike companies by an assessment of benefits, before an assessment may be ordered, there must be a proper application therefor,[70] and an adjudication by the body ordering the assessment that all preliminary steps have been properly taken.[71] The assessors must be appointed and notified in the manner provided by law,[72] and their report must conform to the act and order under which they receive their appointment.[73] To be valid, a tax or assessment must include all the lands within the prescribed statutory distance of the road,[74] and be made or levied by a body acting within its territorial jurisdiction,[75] and composed of a lawful number regularly convened.[76] However, an assessment

Presumptions in favor of validity of appointment.— In Indiana it has been held that the order of assessment of the board of commissioners need not name the assessors, who may be presumed to have been previously appointed by another order of the board, and that it will be presumed, without a statement to that effect in the order granting the petition, that the assessors possess the necessary qualifications. Turpin v. Eagle Creek, etc., Gravel Road Co., 48 Ind. 45. Land in two taxing districts.—At one time it was held in Kentucky that a law authorizing the collection of a tax for the benefit of a turnpike company was not invalidated by the fact that residents of the taxing district created are also residents of, and subject to tax in, another district (Bruce v. Vanceburg, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 35 S. W. 112, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 35); but subsequent to this decision, it was provided by statute (Ky. St. (1903) § 4736) that the same property shall be liable for only one turnpike tax, and that where it is situated in more than one taxing district, it shall be taxed in the district in which is the turnpike from which the property or its owner derives the greater benefit, which fact shall be determined by the fiscal court or board of county commissioners. However, if a taxpayer seeks exoneration in any one district, he must obtain the judgment of the fiscal court or county commissioners exempting him. Vanceburg, etc., Turnpike Road Co. v. Bruce, 117 Ky. 275, 77 S. W. 1118, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1404. Under an act providing for the levy of a tax on the lands outside certain cities and towns, to pay for the building of turnpikes, and to keep the same in repair, lands which at the time of the passage of the act were not in any town, but have since been included in one of the towns named, are subject, as to the future, to only such tax as the residue of the citizens of the town are liable. Donnelly v. Carpenter, 47 S. W. 336, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 675.

Incorrect listing.— The listing of a small parcel belonging to a township and used for school purposes, in the name of another person instead of the township, will not prevent the collection of the assessment (Hendricks v. Gilchrist, 76 Ind. 369), nor is it a valid ground of objection to an assessment, in an action to enjoin its collection, that the lands of persons other than plaintiffs are incorrectly described (Hopkins v. Greensburg, etc., Turnpike Co., 46 Ind. 187).

75. Pendleton, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Barnard, 40 Ind. 146.

Road in three counties.—Where a proposed road was projected in three counties, and the estimated cost was reported to the auditor of each, a tax apportioned by the auditor of one county without anything to show the appraised value of the land in the other counties is illegal. Sim v. Hurst, 44 Ind. 579.

76. Fahlor v. Wells County, 101 Ind. 167.

An assessment by more than the lawful number is void. Webb v. Brandywine Junction Turnpike Co., 55 Ind. 441.

Action by majority.— Under a statute providing for an assessment of benefits by two of the assessors under certain circumstances, where action was had by two, it will be presumed in the absence of a contrary showing that such circumstances existed as to make

may be corrected and omitted lands added or included by the original [77] assessors,[78] even after the road has been partially or wholly completed.[79] Under statutes making a tax levied for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a turnpike collectable in the same manner as other taxes, it is a lien and may be collected by distraint.[80]

b. Liability, Defenses, and Remedies of Taxpayers. Upon payment of taxes or assessments for the benefit of a turnpike company, the persons so doing, under some statutes, become stock-holders and, in a sense, involuntary subscribers to the stock of the company.[81] Like other stock-holders, their liability is limited to the extent of their subscription.[82] A person affected by an assessment may appeal from the decision of the board of county commissioners upon filing an affidavit in case he is not a party to the proceedings,[83] or he may have the collec-

Grounds of appeal.—Under the broad provisions of the Indiana statute, an appeal may be taken, among other matters, on the following questions: (1) Whether the company was legally organized; (2) whether it has a valid subscription of three-fifths the cost of the road; and (3) whether the estimate of cost was made by a competent and disinterested engineer. Alexander v. McCordsville, etc., Gravel Road Co., 44 Ind. 436.

Proceedings on appeal.—The Indiana statute authorizing such an appeal does not contemplate any pleadings; the landowners have the benefit of all legal objections which they can urge to the assessment without any formal pleading of them, and the issue between the parties is the amount of the assessment, which issue may be tried by a jury. James v. Greensboro, etc., Turnpike Co., 47 Ind. 379; Rising Sun, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Hamilton, 45 Ind. 382 [followed in Rising Sun, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Beatty, 45 Ind. 385]. On the trial of the appeal, the articles of association of the company are admissible in evidence without proof of their execution, where it is shown that they have been duly recorded as required by statute. James v. Greenshoro, etc., Turnpike Co., supra. Where, on such appeal, the assessment is reduced, certain sums are ordered to be assessed against certain designated tracts of land, other tracts are ordered to be released from assessment, and the court's action is ordered to be certified to the county auditor with directions to correct the tax duplicate to correspond with the assessment made by the court, such orders of the court do not constitute a judgment, and execution cannot issue thereon. tion of an illegal assessment restrained by injunction,[84] upon filing a complaint setting forth sufficient facts to entitle him to relief; [85] but he has no right of action against the county treasurer for turning over the tax collected to the company.[86] In an action on a note given for an assessment, the maker is not estopped to set up the illegality of the assessment by his giving the note, unless he did so with knowledge of the illegality; [87] but it is no defense to an action to collect the tax that the directors had borrowed money before the resources of the company met its charter requirement.[88]

D. Location — 1. Of Road — a. In General. It is essential to the establishment and existence of a toll road that there be a location thereof by some appropriate corporate act.[89] However, charter or statutory requirements as to the location of a turnpike road are liberally construed, it being held that the location, whether by the directors or commissioners, is sufficient where the termini are located near those designated in the charter and the general direction of the charter route is followed, even though there is a variation for the purpose of avoiding obstacles or shortening the distance,[90] and that a corporation empowered to build to or from a city may extend its road within the corporate limits.[91] The location may be shown by a plat recorded as required by statute,[92] or by the

A collateral attack will not be permitted, in such a proceeding, upon the finding of the board of commissioners regarding the organization of the company, the sufficiency of its articles of association, the estimate of the cost of construction, and the fact that the company has the requisite amount of stock to entitle it to have an assessment of benefits made. fence lines and stone walls, or other boundary lines, which mark the outer limits of the road.[93]

b. On Existing Highway. The power of the legislature to authorize the location of a toll road on a highway which has been vacated is undoubted,[94] and as a toll road is a public highway,[95] the conversion of a free public highway into a toll road does not change the character of the road but only the method of maintaining it, hence it is competent for the legislature, either directly or through the medium of lower bodies or boards, to authorize the location of a toll road on an existing highway and the collection of tolls thereon, the keeping of the road in repair being deemed a sufficient consideration for such action.[96] Such grants, however, being in restraint of the common right to use the highway free of tolls, are to be strictly construed and nothing is to be taken by implication.[97] Thus a grant of the right to appropriate part of a highway does not authorize the erection of gates and the collection of tolls,[98] especially under statutes prescribing as a condition precedent to the right to collect tolls, an agreement with the county court or other body;[99] and, in general, all charter or statutory requirements

J. L. 76), and that a provision in the charter of a turnpike company that "no gate or turnpike shall be erected or kept on any part of the highway which has heretofore been used as such" does not forbid the erection of a gate on a highway used as such at the date of the charter, but which has since been vacated (State v. Passaic Turnpike Co., 27 N. and to locate and establish toll-gates at such places [9] and such distances apart as are authorized and prescribed by its charter or by statute.[10] Under some statutes the location is made by certain public officials upon proper application therefor,[11] and it is frequently provided that gates shall not be erected within the corporate limits of municipalities or within a certain distance thereof.[12] According to some authorities, the power of location, when once exercised, is exhausted;[13] while others hold that the charters and statutes governing the company confer, either expressly or impliedly, the power of changing the location

Location on branch roads.— Under an act authorizing a turnpike company to hold and operate the turnpike road then owned by it, together with all the branch roads, and providing that such company may for five continuous miles of its road erect and keep toll-gates thereon, the company may erect toll-gates on all branch roads, as well as on its main road. The courts will construe charters and statutes so as to prohibit the location of a gate within a city, unless the enactment is so clear as to be free from doubt, as such gates within a municipality constitute a public inconvenience and interfere with traffic. Stormfeltz v. Manor Turnpike Co., 13 Pa. St. 555. of old gates and adding new ones to meet changing conditions.[14] The power to order the removal of an improperly located gate is conferred upon the courts by some statutes;[15] but to entitle an individual to restrain as a nuisance the location and maintenance of a gate at a particular place, he must show that the action of the company is without authority of law and that it inflicts upon him special injury distinct from that suffered by the public.[16]

E. Right of Way and Other Interests in Land. A toll road or turnpike company has only an easement in its right of way and other land which it occupies where such land has been acquired by condemnation or even by purchase,[17] except where the land has been purchased in fee in pursuance of power conferred by charter or statute,[18] and this easement reverts to the public on the termination of the company's franchise.[19] Except where the toll road is located on an existing public highway,[20] the company has no right to take lands without making compensation therefor, and whatever lawful contracts it makes with the landowner will be enforced both for and against it;[21] but when the easement of the company becomes vested, it has a right to take possession of its right of way and perform

Eq. 439, holding that a way for a road or turnpike reserved in a deed for lands, and laid down as such on a recorded map of the premises, does not authorize any company to occupy and use it as a turnpike, without making compensation.

Rights of settlers after incorporation.— Upon the location of the road the right of the company in respect to its right of way does not relate back to the filing of the articles of incorporation, so as to make settlers subsequent to that date, although prior to the location of the road, take their lands subject to such right of way. Riddell v. Animas Canon Toll Road Co., 5 Colo. 230.

Schutz v. Dalles Military Road Co., 7 Oreg. 259, holding that under an act of congress granting to a state certain lands to aid in the construction of a military wagon road and providing that the road shall be constructed with such width, gradation, and bridges as to permit of its regular use as a wagon road, and in such other special manner as the state may prescribe, and under a grant by the state to a corporation which does not particularly prescribe the manner of constructing the road, the undertaking of the company is to construct the road according to the provisions of the state laws for the construction of toll roads by private corporations.

32. Greencastle Southern Turnpike Co. v. State, 28 Ind. 382, holding the statute in question to be constitutional.

Extension of time.— The court is not authorized to extend the time limited by charter, by another provision of the charter providing that if the road should become and remain out of repair for twenty-five days, at any one time, a warrant may issue against the corporation from a justice of the peace, and judgment rendered that the toll-gate be opened and remain so, until the repairs are made (State v. Nonconnah Turnpike Co., (Tenn. 1875) 17 S. W. 128), nor is the failure of a turnpike company to construct its road in accordance with the requirements of the act of incorporation affected by a subsequent legislative act extending the time for the completion of the road, so as to bar an

as well as those relating to the length [33] and width of the road [34] and the material to be used.[35] In addition to these obligations, the company must, whether required by charter or not, construct bridges over all streams intersecting its road, when such bridges are needed to render passage safe and continuous.[36] The rights and remedies of persons performing work or furnishing material in the construction of the road are dependent upon statute and the terms of their contract, especially where a lien is claimed.[37]

b. Maintenance and Repair. A toll road or turnpike company is not always bound to maintain its road in the same condition as when constructed; [38] but it is obliged, both under statutes and on general principles, to keep its road in generally good repair and in a reasonably safe condition for travel.[39] This duty and obligation of the company attaches, not only to the road proper, but to adjacent information in respect to portions of the road completed before the passage of such acts, and on which tolls had been collected (People v. Kingston, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 193, 35 Am. Dec. 551 [followed in People v. Bristol, etc., Turnpike Road, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 222]).

that the evidence introduced by the prosecution be relevant [56] and sufficient,[57] and that the case be submitted to the jury with proper instructions.[58] Statutory provision is also made in some states for the appointment of inspectors to ascertain whether the road has been constructed in the manner required by law,[59] or kept in a proper state of repair,[60] and, in case the road is found not to be in good repair, for the making of an order, either by the inspectors or by the court upon the return of an inquisition, that the gates be kept open until the repairs are effected.[61] As proceedings of this character, especially when an inquisition is had, are more or less summary in nature, the record of the court or officials making the order must clearly show jurisdiction,[62] and there must be a strict compliance

Judicial notice cannot be taken of the charter of the company if it is not set out (Moore v. State, 26 Ala. 88); nor, where the indictment is against several turnpike companies for failing to keep a bridge in repair, can the court take judicial notice that the route of any one of the companies does not go over the bridge (Shelbyville, etc., Turnpike Road Co. v. Com., 9 Ky. L. Rep. 244).

The effect of such an order is that the gate ordered to be opened cannot be shut and toll demanded until the proper official certifies that the road is in proper repair (Williams v. Smith, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 166; Reg. v. Greaves, 46 U. C. Q. B. 200), it not being sufficient to evidence the determination that the road has been fully repaired by an oral declaration (People v. Martin, 56 How. Pr. (N. J. Sup. 1910) 76 Atl. 448).

Repeal of acts incorporated by reference.— Proceedings to compel a turnpike company to keep its road in repair, when in compliance with the act of incorporation, are not affected by subsequent alteration of other acts which have become a part of it by reference. In Tennessee a turnpike company is not an overseer within the meaning of a statute requiring overseers to put up signs at railroad crossings (Louisville, etc., Turnpike Co. v. State, 3 Heisk. 129), and the county court has no jurisdiction over turnpikes before forfeiture is declared, except to appoint superintendents, as provided by statute, who have power to order open the gates of a turnpike road which is not in the condition of repair required by the charter (White's Creek Turnpike Co. v. Marshall, 2 Baxt. 104). It is also held in this state that a charter providing that a justice of the peace, on information given on oath that a road has been twenty days out of repair, may, on hearing, give judgment opening the gates nearest the point complained of, does not supersede an existing statute (Shannon Code, §§ 1748–1757) giving turnpike commissioners power to condemn a turnpike road in bad repair, and throw open the gates until repairs are made. with all statutory requirements.[63] Where there exists a special statutory remedy for throwing open toll-gates of roads which are not kept in repair, a bill in equity to restrain the collection of tolls will not lie at the instance of the state,[64] nor will the making of repairs be compelled by mandamus;[65] although it seems that officers possessing plenary jurisdiction over toll roads may sue in equity to compel the making of repairs or the opening of the gates,[66] or under some statutes maintain an action for damages.[67]

b. To Individuals. Although, in constructing and maintaining its road and in erecting toll-gates and tollhouses, a toll road company is not generally liable to abutting landowners for injuries caused by necessary excavations, grading, and drainage,[68] yet an abutting owner, who suffers injury by reason of the company's proceeding without or in excess of authority, may maintain his action either for damages,[69] or for an injunction, where his injury is irreparable.[70] The company is also liable for injuries suffered by travelers on account of the defective condition of the road;[71] but an individual cannot maintain an action of injunction to restrain the collection of tolls while the road is out of repair, such right belonging to the state or public officials alone.[72]

G. Transfer of Road and Franchises — 1. To Corporations or Individuals. The general rule which prohibits the transfer, without legislative permission, of the franchise of the corporators to be a corporation, as distinguished from the franchise of the corporation to exact tolls,[73] has been applied to toll road companies;[74] and it is the rule that either the primary or secondary franchises of a toll road company, or both, together with the property necessary to an enjoyment of the same, can be alienated by deed, mortgage, or lease, or subjected to sale on judicial process, only by virtue of, and in pursuance of, statutory authority.[75] The transfer of the road and franchises, when authorized by the state, may be made to a corporation empowered to receive the same,[76] or it may be made to individuals who may or may not organize a corporation to operate the road, there being no fundamental objection to the operation of the road and the exaction of tolls by individuals;[77] but in either event the purchaser acquires the same but no greater rights and privileges than belonged to the vendor, and he takes

Toll road in several counties or townships. — In Ohio it is held that the authority granted by the act of April 25, 1904 (97 Ohio Law, p. 414), authorizing county commission-which there must be a compliance,[82] as are also the rights and remedies of persons affected thereby;[83] and where the proceedings conform to statutory requirements they cannot be later attacked on the ground that the parties were actuated with ulterior motives.[84] Where affirmative action is taken by the county or municipality,[85] and a compliance with statutory requirements is had, there is transferred to the county or municipality the use and title of the property, including the toll-gates and the sites used therefor,[86] as well as the duty of maintaining the road ers to purchase toll roads upon and along which suburban and interurban railroads are constructed, is not limited to the purchase of toll roads having both termini within the county (Ferris v. Clermont County, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. 622); and, under the Vermont statutes, it seems that a road passing through several towns may be acquired by one proceeding (Taylor v. Rutland, 26 Vt. 313). However, under the Pennsylvania statutes, no one county can be compelled to pay for any portion of a turnpike road lying within the limits of another county (In re Factoryville, etc., Turnpike, etc., Road, 19 Pa. Under a statute providing that two or more townships may vote upon the question of purchasing a toll road running into or through such townships, a township which joins in a petition for such election is bound by the joint vote in favor of the purchase, even though the vote in that particular township is against the purchase. A municipality may sell, under Vict. c. 190, § 26, a toll road which it has constructed or purchased, and, as there is no restriction in the act, the sale may be to individuals as well as to corporations. Payne v. Caughell, 24 Ont. App. 556. However, the legislature, thereafter.[87] In condemnation proceedings the actual value of all the property of the toll or turnpike company, including the franchise, is the true criterion of damages,[88] the property of a company whose franchise has expired, or is about to expire, being manifestly of little value,[89] although entitled to some equitable consideration.[90]

H. Injuries to Road and Other Property. Although the rights of a toll road company, as to that portion of its road which is within the limits of a municipality, are subject to the right of the municipal authorities to make improvements[91] in an authorized manner upon notice,[92] where its road is obstructed or its gates destroyed, or its property is otherwise injured or trespassed upon, it is entitled to its action for damages, or injunction in case the injury is irreparable.[93] In after permitting a turnpike company to surrender to a city a portion of its road lying within the city limits, cannot, against its consent, compel it to take back such portion of its road. Dry Creek, etc., Turnpike Road Co. v. Com., 3 Ky. L. Rep. 623.

Bondholders as agents.—When a turnpike road was, by valid legislative acts, placed in the hands of county commissioners, which acts provide that such commissioners shall employ or appoint such agents to make repairs to the road and to keep the gates and collect tolls, as they shall deem advisable, and such commissioners having proceeded under an invalid act of the legislature to surrender the road to the bondholders, such bondholders, on taking possession of the turnpike, do so as, and become, the agents and trustees of the county commissioners, and are to be considered appointed as such. But see Cunliffe v. Whalley, 13 Beav. 411, 51 Eng. Reprint 158, where an application for an injunction against an adjoining landowner building a tunnel beneath the road was refused.

Acquisition and loss of right.—A turnpike company which has failed to finish the construction of a road within the time limited in its charter, and has abandoned a portion of it, has no right to sue for a penalty for injuries to that portion not actually occupied (Hooker v. Utica, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 371), but a company does not deprive itself of its right to possession and its right to sue for injury thereto by mortgaging the income of its road (Farmers' Turnpike Road v. Coventry, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 389).

Injuries from drainage.—An adjoining landowner may protect himself from an unusual flow of water by damming it up so that it will flow on to the turnpike, and is not liable for the injury caused thereby (Limerick, etc., Turnpike Co.'s Appeal, 80 Pa. St. 425); but a landowner who assists a turnpike company in laying a drain to conduct water on to his land, and acquiesces in such drainage for years, cannot afterward arbitrarily close the drain, and cast the water on to the road, because of increased drainage, or because other parties may have introduced into the drain matter which does not properly belong there (Lancaster Ave. Imp. Co. v. Humphreys, 12 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 66).

addition, an obstruction of a turnpike road is indictable as a public nuisance,[94] and a destruction of, or injury to, toll-gates is indictable as such under some statutes, or as a malicious trespass.[95]

I. Abandonment of Road and Forfeiture of Franchise — 1. Matters Constituting Abandonment or Grounds For Forfeiture.[96] In general the duties or requirements enjoined upon a toll road company by its act of incorporation are conditions attached to the grant of the franchise conferred, and, whether conditions precedent or subsequent to corporate existence, must be substantially performed, or the corporation will subject itself to forfeiture.[97] A failure to literally comply with conditions subsequent is not necessarily a cause of forfeiture, however, as a substantial performance is all that is required.[98] Among the more common matters which ipso facto constitute an abandonment or are grounds for an adjudication of forfeiture are failure to construct the road or portions thereof within the time prescribed by law;[99] change in route;[1] construction of the road or erection of toll-gates in a manner substantially different from that prescribed by charter or statute;[2] failure, for an unreasonable length of time or for a longer Intent.— Under one section of the Indiana statute (2 Rev. St. (1876) p. 479, § 66) no malicious purpose or mischievous intent is necessary to constitute the offense. State v. Walters, 64 Ind. 226.

On such a prosecution it is not necessary to prove an organization of the turnpike company, nor is it any defense that the gatekeeper refused to allow defendant to pass, although he may have paid toll at another gate. Franklin v. State, 85 Ind. 99. However, it is a good defense that the road is out of repair and the company had no right to maintain the toll-gate. State v. Flannagan, 67 Ind. 140.

Plank road companies do not forfeit their corporate powers or franchises, under the New York statutes, by reason of any acts or omissions on the part of the company, officers, or stock-holders unless the same are wilful and malicious. Belfast, etc., Plank Road Co. v. Chamberlain, 32 N. Y. 651. Mere delay in constructing the road is not an abandonment of the corporate enterprise, where the company constructs the road as soon as means to do it can be obtained. Gibson v. Columbia, etc., Turnpike, etc., Co., 18 Ohio St. 396.

Partial failure.— Where part of the road has been completed within the prescribed time, a forfeiture as to that part cannot be claimed (State v. Brownstone, etc., Gravel-Road Co., 120 Ind. 337, 22 N. 2. People v. Fishkill, etc., Plank Road Co., 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 445; State v. Pasumpsic Turnpike Co., 3 Vt. 178, holding that where a turnpike was accepted by a committee appointed for that purpose by the supreme court, it must be presumed that it was originally constructed of proper width, and according to the specifications in the charter, but that a subsequent act of the company in placing their toll-gate where they have no right by law to place it, and keeping it there for a considerable length of time, is a sufficient cause for forfeiture.

Inconvenience to the public resulting from such a deviation from the statute in the construction of the road must be established before a forfeiture will be declared, where the time than that allowed by statute, to keep the road in repair,[3] provided such failure renders the road unsafe and inconvenient for traveling;[4] and abandonment of the entire road, or a material portion thereof, for a long length of time or for the time named in the statute governing forfeitures.[5] The mere extension of the territorial limits of a city so as to include a portion of a turnpike does not of itself deprive the turnpike of its character, or the owner of its right of property therein.[6]

2. Proceedings to Enforce. Although, under some statutes, the road itself, as distinguished from corporate rights and franchises, may be legally abandoned to the public without a judicial determination of abandonment,[7] or mandamus may issue to compel the tearing down of a tollhouse no longer required for the

Where a contract with a county to take immediate possession of the road pending condemnation proceedings has been made, the failure of the company to keep the road in repair does not constitute an abandonment. Bardstown, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Nelson County, 109 Ky. 800, 60 S. W. 862, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1457.

What constitutes non-repair.— Negligence is a legal conclusion when the road has been out of repair for more than six years; and a verdict finding that the road has been for that length of time in a broken and worn-out condition for its entire length, and has been and still continues to be entirely unsafe and in an unsafe condition for vehicles to pass over and upon, is sufficient to warrant a forfeiture of the corporate rights and franchises of the company. People v. Plymouth Plank Road Co., 32 Mich 248. Failure to rebuild a bridge, for a considerable length of time, thus leaving the road impassable, presents such a state of non-repair as would work a forfeiture at common law, and is also within the meaning of a statute providing for forfeiture, when the company has suspended its business for a year. People v. Hillsdale, etc., Turnpike Road, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 254.

Forfeiture of part of road.— The Indiana statute authorizes the forfeiture for non-repair of less than the whole of the portion of any road which may be within any one county (Central Plank Road Co. v. Hannaman, 22 Ind. 484); and under Mich. St. (1848) the completion of five miles of road, by a plank road company, caused the right to take toll to vest in the company, and whatever length might be contemplated by the charter this right to take tolls upon the completed part could not be affected or forfeited by the failure to keep such additional length of road in proper order (People v. Jackson, etc., Plank Road Co., 9 Mich. 285).

Y.) 445, holding that, although abandonment proceedings under an unconstitutional special act are unavailing, under the general law as to plank roads, a company may abandon portions of its roads, if the stock-holders holding or representing two thirds of the nominal capital of the company sign or consent to it, and that the requisitions of the statute are answered if, after the capital stock is reduced by forfeitures for non-payment of calls, the holders of two thirds of the capital stock so reduced, so sign, and consent.

In Connecticut, county commissioners may, on complying with statutory provisions, discontinue part of a turnpike (Waterbury River Turnpike Co. v. Litchfield, 26 Conn. 209); but under Gen. St. (1866) tit. 31, § 93, making it an abandonment if a turnpike company ceases to repair or take tolls for one year, no certificate or other act of the turnpike commissioners is necessary to make the abandonment complete (Lee v. Barkhampsted, 46 Conn. 213).

Release of all rights.—An act authorizing a city to grade and pave a street as soon as purpose of the road,[8] or the county may sue to restrain the collection of toll,[9] a forfeiture of the corporate charter, rights, and franchises for misuser or non-user may exist and be declared only by a judicial determination in a direct proceeding instituted by or on behalf of the state,[10] scire facias being the proper remedy under some statutes,[11] and quo warranto, or proceedings of that nature, under others.[12] However, as all of these proceedings as well as criminal proceedings for non-repair afford separate and distinct relief against different acts or omissions, the existence of any one remedy does not preclude resort to another.[13] In pursuing any of these remedies against a toll road company, it is necessary, especially where a forfeiture is claimed,[14] that the petition state everything necessary to constitute a cause of action;[15] that the evidence received be admissible[16]

3. Title to Road After Termination of Franchise. Upon the termination of the franchise of a toll road company by expiration of the time limted for corporate existence or by abandonment, revocation, or forfeiture, the title to the road does not revert to the abutting owners, especially where they have conveyed their rights without reservation or limitation in the first instance;[19] but the title and use of the road reverts to the public, or, more accurately speaking, the road, which has been a public highway during the time tolls were collected, continues to be a public highway disburdened of tolls.[20] Any attempted conveyance of the title by the toll road company thereafter is void and ineffectual,[21] and an attempt on the part of the company to close up the road and use it as private property will be restrained by the courts.[22]

Adverse possession by company.— Where the charter of a toll road company created a public easement in the use of the road from the date of its construction, and the public continuously availed itself of such easement, subject only to the easement granted to the corporation to take specified tolls during the term of its corporate existence, neither the possession of the original corporation, nor that of its successor, was exclusive as against the public, so as to divest the latter of its rights, by adverse possession. road company by one legislature does not prevent subsequent legislatures from supervising and regulating the exercise of such rights by remedial legislation,[24] by imposing additional burdens,[25] or by limiting the amount of toll to be charged,[26] provided the legislation is of such a character as not to impair the obligation of the contract of the company with the state[27] or the vested rights of citizens who have been exempted from the payment of toll,[28] or to so reduce the revenues of the company as to amount to a taking of property without due process of law.[29] Although such statutes are generally not retroactive in effect,[30] the force of one statute is not impaired by a subsequent statute which neither expressly nor impliedly repeals it;[31] and statutory regulations, such as those relating to the posting of toll rates, must, when valid, be complied with,[32] the company being subject to a penalty for violation of statutory regulations under some statutes,[33] and to indictment under others.[34] A municipal corporation, in attempting to regulate toll road companies, must keep within the scope of its delegated powers.[35]

Dec. 319, holding that a contract between a turnpike company and a village, whereby in consideration of an annual rental of six hundred dollars, paid by the village, the residents of the village were exempted from paying tolls on any part of the turnpike within the village, amounted simply to the collection of toll for that part of the road in a way different from the ordinary way, and was not violative of an agreement to pay the bonds by the tolls collected from the road.

A presumption that the contract was in writing and therefore binding arises where the records of the company have been lost and it appears that the directors of the company refrained for more than twenty years from exacting tolls from the person claiming exemption, who testifies that this was done pursuant to a contract made with the directors of the company at a formal meeting. sengers therein, is governed by contract between the parties,[71] or by compact between the state and the United States.[72]

3. RATE AND AMOUNT. The courts will not permit a company possessing the unrestricted right to impose tolls to make unreasonable charges,[73] nor will it uphold a legislative regulation of amount which is unreasonable as regards the company.[74] Although a toll road company has no right to charge toll for a greater distance of its road than has been constructed,[75] it has, in the absence of restrictive charter or statutory provisions,[76] the right to collect, of a person passing through a gate, toll for the total distance between two gates even though the person has traveled only a portion of that distance.[77] Where a different rate of toll is chargeable on different classes of vehicles, such as wagons, hackney coaches, and pleasure carriages, the class in which a conveyance belongs is to be determined by the ordinary meaning of the vehicles named,[78] and where a conveyance is within both a general and a specific class, it is deemed, for the purpose of toll, to be

Change in rate.—Authority to increase or reduce the rate of tolls is sometimes conferred upon the company by the legislature (Payne v. Caughell, 24 Ont. App. 556 [reversing 28 Ont. 157]) to be exercised upon compliance with certain prescribed requirements (Grumbine v. State, 60 Md. 355), and to be made applicable to all the gates (Reg. v. Bury, etc., Road Trustees, 4 B. & C. 361, 6 D. & R. 369, 10 E. C. L. 615, 107 Eng. Reprint 1093). Also statutes fixing the rate of tolls are sometimes repealed by implication as well as by express words (Southport Plank Road Co. v. Russell, 7 N. Y. St. 596); but, where the legislature, in granting the charter of the company, does not reserve the right to alter, amend, or repeal, a subsequent statute changing the rate of toll is not binding on the company until accepted by it (Middlesex Turnpike Co. v. Freeman, 14 Conn. 85), and such a subsequent statute authorizing an increase of rates is subject to repeal at any time, as it is a mere gratuity possessing none of the elements of a contract (Bryant Station Turnpike Road Co. v. Johnston, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 536). A statute passed on petition of a turnpike company, modifying its charter by permitting it to take larger tolls from carriages carrying mail, is not void for failure to serve notice of such petition on a person who had a contract to carry mail between the towns constituting the termini of the road. St. c. 110, § 3, providing that the rates fixed therein are for gates five miles apart, and in proportion for a less distance, but when there is a fraction of a road, of a mile or more, less than five miles, toll may be charged at the gate next thereto, for the fraction, in proportion that the length bears to five miles, where the distance to a town from a toll-gate and back is one mile, the company is entitled to prepayment from one passing through the gate to the town and back of the toll for the whole distance, going and coming. The character of a carriage used for carrying passengers is not changed by the fact that mail is also carried in it. Marselis v. Seaman, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 319.

A mail coach includes a coach which actually carries the public mail over the road under temporary arrangement fairly made with the post-office department, through a deputy postmaster, for the public convenience, and not for the mere purpose of evading the higher rate of toll, and the turnpike company will not be allowed to set up that the contract for carrying the mail does not conform to the directions of the act of con-

within the specific class.[78] In this connection, the words "pleasure carriage" are broad enough to include any vehicle used for the carriage of passengers,[80] such as an automobile.[81]

4. Collection and Enforcement — a. Remedies and Defenses. An action of assumpsit may be brought on an express promise to pay for the use of a toll road;[82] and, in the absence of an express agreement and of a statutory remedy, the common law provides a remedy in the action of indebitatus assumpsit.[83] As to the effect of a statutory remedy for collecting tolls, as by detaining the traveler or suing for a penalty, on the common-law right of action, the authorities are at variance, one class of decisions holding that such statutory remedies are merely cumulative,[84] and the other holding that they are exclusive and that the law will not imply a promise to pay for the use of the road, where such statutes exist.[85] Toll may be demanded at a gate in advance;[86] but a statute providing for the detention of travelers until toll is paid does not authorize the stoppage of vehicles carrying the United States mail.[87] Except as to the non-performance of express conditions precedent to the right to collect toll,[88] it is no defense in an action to collect tolls that the company has been guilty of delinquencies or has failed to comply with statutory regulations or requirements.[89]

b. Actions. An action to recover tolls is properly brought in the name of the company,[89] in the township where defendant resides, provided the action is before a justice of the peace,[91] and a complaint or petition in the nature of a common count, with the additional averment that plaintiff has complied with all statutory requirements which are conditions precedent to the collection of toll, is sufficient.[92] In such an action plaintiff is required to prove a cause of action and meet the issues raised by the pleadings, but no more;[93] and, after the case has been submitted to the jury with proper instructions,[94] the verdict and judgment should conform to the evidence.[95]

C. Liability For Injuries — 1. Grounds of Liability and Defenses. It is well established, both at common law and by statute, that a toll road or turnpike company is liable in damages for injuries sustained by reason of the non-repair and unsafe condition of its road,[96] its liability in this respect being considered to

Use of road without complaint. — When the action is defended on the ground of failure of the company to construct the road in compliance with the requirements of law, the jury may be allowed to take into consideration the fact, if in evidence, that prior to the date involved in the suit, defendant and the traveling public generally traveled the road without complaint. Statutory restriction of common-law liability.— The legislature has the right to restrict the common-law liability of toll road companies; and a statute passed in the exercise of this right does not furnish a cumulative remedy, but, to the extent that the restriction applies, supersedes the common-law remedy. General damages.—A turnpike corporation is not liable for any general damages which plaintiff may have sustained in carrying on be greater than that of public authorities for injuries received on free public highways and to be analogous to the liability of a railroad company.[97] Although the liability of the company is only to persons of whom toll is demandable,[98] and does not exist as to portions of its road which it has never operated,[99] nor continue after the road has been sold under valid foreclosure proceedings,[1] it is not affected by the fact that the road was originally a free public highway,[2] or that it is in the same condition as when constructed and approved,[3] nor, on account of its public obligations, can the company relieve itself of liability by delegating its duty to a lessee or contractor.[4] The liability of the company is for unsafe conditions in general, and covers not only holes and defects resulting from improper construction and repair,[5] but also obstructions on or near the traveled portions of the road,[6] and failure to properly guard by fences or other barriers portions of its road which are of a narrower width than that required by statute or which border on a precipice, declivity, stream, or railroad.[7] Of course it is essential to a recovery that the accident be connected with the alleged defect in the road as his business, whether such damages resulted from his not attempting to travel the road at particular times, by reason of its general badness and insufficiency, or from not being able to travel it as expeditiously, and carry as large loads, as he otherwise might and would have done. It is sufficient if toll is demandable, although none has been paid because the traveler has not arrived at a gate (Lancaster Ave. Imp. Co. v. Rhoads, 116 Pa. St. 377, 9 Atl. 852, 2 Am. St. Rep. 608); or if toll was demanded of the person injured at any gate upon the road, although he was not, at the time of the injury, passing, or intending to pass, through or near any gate (Brown v. Winooski Turnpike Co., 23 Vt. 104). Thus, it has been held that where persons riding on a toll road paid toll to a certain point, at which they usually left the road, and, on reaching it, decided, because of darkness and an approaching storm, to continue thereon, they were not thereby rendered trespassers, or precluded from recovering for injuries caused by defects in the road. St. 220, 23 Atl. 378, 27 Am. St. Rep. 685, where the liability of the company was not in question, but it was held that an adjoining landowner assumes the duty and liability of the company when he alters the road by agreement or license from the company.

The action of city employees in disturbing the surface of the road for the purpose of taking up water mains is no justification for the road being left out of repair, and does not shift the liability. Baltimore, etc., Turnpike Road v. Parks, 74 Md. 282, 22 Atl. 399. Also, if a turnpike company permits town supervisors to lay sidewalks along the line of its road, it is bound either to keep them in such reasonable repair that accidents will not happen on them, or to see that they are altogether removed; and any accident happening through neglect of this duty will subject it to liability therefor. The letting down of a gate beam upon a passing traveler, although done after the hour at which the gate-keeper was required to collect tolls, renders the company liable for injuries sustained, as the servant in question had the continuous care and management of the gate. the cause of the injury,[8] and that plaintiff acted as a reasonably prudent and careful man would have done under the same or similar circumstances;[9] but when it is shown that the road was actually in an unsafe condition, it is no defense that plaintiff's horse took fright and ran away, as the natural propensity of animals to shy and take fright, especially at obstructions, is well known and must be taken into account by the company in constructing its road of proper width and keeping it free of defects;[10] nor is the company's lack of knowledge of the defect or obstruction any defense when it could have discovered the same by the exercise of ordinary care.[11]

Slight descent.— There is no liability on the part of the company in a case where it appears that plaintiff, while driving along a turnpike on a dark night, with a lantern on the east side of his carriage, drove out of the traveled way to the west, where the ground sloped gradually from the road to the surface of the adjacent ground, a descent of three feet, and was injured by being thrown out Speer v. Greencastle, etc., Gravel Road Co., 4 Ind. App. 525, 31 N. E. 381.

Duty to indicate danger.— If, in the grading necessary to lay a plank road over a highway, two paths are presented, apparently used by travelers, one quite safe, while the other leads to a dangerous precipice, it is the duty of the company to indicate the danger in a way unmistakable at any time. Ireland v. Oswego, etc., Plank Road Co., 13 N Y. 526.

Unprotected railroad crossing.— Where a railroad and a turnpike company have their routes located over and across the same ground, but the railroad's right accrues first by priority of its charter, the turnpike company is responsible for injuries sustained by its travelers occasioned by the want of banisters and other safeguards at the crossing of the railroad, as in such case it is the duty of the turnpike company and not the railroad company to provide the same. (N. Y.) 593, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 593.

Injured person's knowledge of defect.— Travelers have a right to presume that a turnpike in constant use is kept in good condition, and are not guilty of negligence when driving at a slow pace, unless they know of the defect, or it is so obvious as to be visible to a person of ordinary care. Cox v. Westchester Turnpike Road, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 414. When the traveler knows the dangerous condition of the road, he is bound to use due care (Sale v. Aurora, etc., Turnpike Co., 147 Ind. 324, 46 N. E. 669), although it is not negligence for him to travel over a road which he knows to be defective unless it is so dangerous that a person of common prudence would decline the risk (Ashby v. Elsberry, etc., Gravel Road Co., 99 Mo. App. 178, 73 S. W. 229), or unless he could have traveled over another equally convenient road (Jonesboro, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Baldwin, 57 Ind. 86).

Negligence of third person.—A toll road company, which has failed to perform its duty, is not excused from liability to a traveler who has been injured, by the fact that another person, such as the driver of the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding, was also negligent and is liable. Danville, etc., Turnpike Road Co. v. Stewart, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 119. However, the company is not liable where plaintiff is negligent in not avoiding the driver's negligence. Thus, where an intoxicated driver attempts, by rapid driving, to pass a toll-gate without paying toll, and the keeper thereupon lowers the pole, and injures a person in the wagon, the toll company is not liable, in the absence of proof that the passenger was not negligent in failing to do his best to stop the driver. 2. Actions. An action to recover damages for injuries sustained on an unsafe toll road may only be brought within the time limited by statute,[12] and is properly instituted in a county within which the entire road lies, although the business office of the company is elsewhere.[13] To state a cause of action, it is necessary and sufficient for the declaration, petition, or complaint to contain allegations of some duty owing by defendant to plaintiff and a failure to perform that duty, together with an allegation of damage;[14] and in some jurisdictions the complaint or petition must negative contributory negligence.[15] The evidence introduced must conform to the issues raised by the pleadings,[16] and be generally confined to the state of affairs existing at the time and place where the accident occurred;[17] and it must show, in order to authorize a recovery, that the condition of the road was the proximate cause of the injuries received.[18] Where there is any evidence

J. L. 3, 34 Atl. 985 (holding that it need not be stated that plaintiff had paid toll before making use of the road; an averment that he was lawfully using the road being sufficient).

Particular acts of negligence need not be alleged, where the accident itself was sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence, as where a traveler is injured by the falling of a toll-gate pole. Hydes Ferry Turnpike Co. v. Yates, 108 Tenn. 428, 67 S. W. 69.

Place.— If the company, in pursuance of its charter, has made some alteration in the road, the new part becomes a component part of the old road, so far as the liability of the corporation is concerned, and may be described as one road. Also, it is not necessary to set forth the precise point in the road where the injury happened, but, if necessary, the objection would be cured by verdict. Noyes v. White River Turnpike Co., 11 Vt. 531.

Continuando.— It is not competent for a plaintiff to declare with a continuando for injuries occasioned by the obstruction or insufficiency of a highway, or to allege a repetition of such injuries upon divers days and times between a day specified and the commencement of the suit. And see Richardson v. Royalton, etc., Turnpike Co., 6 Vt. 496.

Condition of bridge.— In an action for injuries received because of the defective condition of a turnpike bridge, evidence that the general appearance of the structure indicated neglect and decay is admissible on the question whether the defect could have been discovered by defendant by the use of ordinary care. Pirmann v. Newport, etc., Turnpike Co., 71 S. W. 491, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1341.

The rule has been relaxed in some cases and evidence admitted to show the condition of the road in the near vicinity (Cox v. Westchester Turnpike Road, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 414), the fact that the place in question had been guarded by railings in former years (Baltimore, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Hebb, 88 Md. 132, 40 Atl. 879), the disposition of the horse, which plaintiff was driving, not only before but after the accident (Lebanon, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Hearn, 87 Tenn. 291, 10 S. W. 510), and that the road had been out of repair for several days before the accident (Baltimore, etc., Turnpike Road v. Parks, 74 Md. 282, 22 Atl. 399). In a case where plaintiff's horse became frightened at a pile of stones allowed to remain beside the road, evidence that other gentle horses had been frightened at the pile was held to be admissible to prove its unusual appearance. Eggleston v. Columbia Turnpike Road, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 146 [reversed on other grounds in 82 N. Y. 278].

Evidence insufficient to establish consent to use of bridge.— In an action for damages resulting from the collapse of a bridge, testimony of plaintiff that he did not inform the toll-gatherer that his load exceeded the on such points, it is for the jury to pass upon defendant's negligence and the unsafe condition of the road,[19] as well as plaintiff's contributory negligence;[20] and these matters should be submitted to the jury by the court with instructions which correctly define the respective duties of plaintiff and defendant,[21] and which are complete [22] and not misleading.[23]

D. Penalties For Violation of Regulations — 1. Demanding and Collecting Excessive Tolls. Statutes providing for the forfeiture of a specified sum of money by a toll-gatherer who demands and receives more toll than he is authorized to collect are aimed at excessive, rather than wholly unauthorized, tolls, and hence do not cover cases where the person from whom toll is collected is wholly exempt or the toll is wholly unauthorized;[24] nor do they cover cases where the toll-gatherer acts wholly within his rights.[25] To render the toll-gatherer alible, it is necessary that there be a demand as well as a receipt of excessive toll,[26] and that the proceedings in the civil or criminal action brought to recover the penalty be according to law.[27] authorized weight, and that he frequently drove excessive loads over the bridge without informing the toll-gatherer, not being inquired of as to the weight, is insufficient to establish a consent to his passing over the bridge. Pomeroy v. Fifth Massachusetts Turnpike Corp., 10 Pick. (Mass.) 35.

22. Brown v. Cape Girardeau Macadamized, etc., Co., 89 Mo. 152, 1 S. W. 129, holding that an instruction which predicates plaintiff's right to recover on the single fact that the roadway was not properly constructed, without requiring the jury to go further, and find the additional fact that the injury complained of was occasioned by such improper construction, is erroneous.

Criminal liability immaterial.—It is proper to refuse to charge the jury that plaintiff cannot recover unless the defect was such that a criminal indictment would lie against the company therefor. Baltimore, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Baterman, 68 Md. 389, 13 Atl. 54, 6 Am. St. Rep. 449.

2. Non-Payment or Evasion of Tolls. Statutes providing for the imposition of a penalty on persons who forcibly or fraudulently pass through or around a toll-gate without paying the legal toll are intended to punish the wrong-doer, rather than to compensate the toll road company,[28] and, being penal in nature, are not to be extended by construction beyond their clear import.[29] To subject a person to such a penalty, it must be shown that plaintiff company has a legal right to exact toll;[30] that defendant is a person subject to the payment of toll and is not within one of the exempted classes;[31] and that his acts are within the terms of the statute.[32] The proper party to sue for the penalty is the toll road company,[33] and it is of course necessary that the complaint state a cause of

32. Rives v. Wood, 15 S. W. 131, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 691; Rome, etc., Road Co. v. Stone, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 212 (holding that one who offers a bank-bill to the toll-gatherer in payment of toll, and refuses to pay in any other manner, does not incur the statutory penalty); Carrier v. Schoharie Turnpike Road, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 56; Reg. v. Haystead, 7 U. C. Q. B. 9.

Materiality of intent.—When the traveler was acting entirely within his rights, his intent to evade payment of toll is immaterial (Centre Turnpike Co. v. Vandusen, 10 Vt. 197), as is also his good faith, when his acts are within the prohibition of the statute (Detroit, etc., Plank-Road Co. v. Mahoney, 68 Mich. 265, 36 N. W. 69). However, under a statute imposing a fine upon a person turning off a turnpike with intention to defraud the company, the question as to whether he turned off bona fide, or with a view to avoid paying toll is controlling. Carrier v. Schoharie Turnpike Road, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 56.

What constitutes forcible passing.—Although statutes prohibiting the forcible passing through a gate without payment of toll are held, in one jurisdiction, to contemplate only violent passage (Bridgewater, etc., Plank Road Co. v. Robbins, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 662; Columbia Turnpike v. Woodworth, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 97), it is generally held that actual violence is not necessary to a violation and that it is sufficient if the traveler passes swiftly through the gate against the will and consent of the gatekeeper (Nichols v. Bertram, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 342; Detroit, etc., Plank Road Co. v. Fisher, 4 Mich. 37; Camden, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Fowler, 24 N. J. L. 205).
