of a tenant in possession,[15] even though he held possession jointly with the prosecutor.[16] A husband cannot be convicted for an entry on his wife's lands, after having been forbidden by her to enter.[17] One who hires a contractor to cut timber is not liable for "wilfully" cutting timber on the lands of another, where the contractor by mistake cuts timber on lands which he has no right to cut over, and where this is done without defendant's knowledge or consent.[18]

4. DEFENSES. An alleged defense must be credible as well as natural and reasonable.[19] A license is a good defense,[20] but not for acts done after it has been revoked,[21] or to persons other than the licensee,[22] or for acts not within the scope of the license.[23] That the act benefited the land is not a defense.[24] Legal cause or just excuse is expressly a defense under some statutes,[25] but not avoidable necessity.[26] It is no defense that the entry was to visit a person on the land,[27] at the request of a third person;[28] that defendant was prosecutor's tenant on other lands;[29] that defendant had a contract to repair the premises which had been rescinded;[30] that the house on the premises entered after warning was vacant and unoccupied;[31] that the act was not done lucri causa,[32] or that it was done to invite a civil suit for the trespass.[33] So it is not a defense that defendant failed to foresee or expect indictment.[34] Under some statutes it has been held that if the prosecutor is in actual possession of the land trespassed on, it is no defense that defendant had title thereto. It has been so held under statutes making it an offense to trespass on lands of another after being warned[35] or to unlawfully and wilfully demolish, injure, or remove any building, or fence,[36] or to cut down or destroy valuable timber on the land of another.[37] So it has been held that defendant cannot show title in a third person as a defense.[38]

C. Prosecution and Punishment — 1. Affidavit or Complaint, and Warrant. In prosecutions for trespass begun before a justice of the peace, or other inferior court, by affidavit, or complaint and warrant, the affidavit or complaint must state, with definiteness[39] and certainty,[40] every substantial matter necessary to constitute the offense as defined by statute;[41] but the affidavit is generally considered sufficient when it follows[42] or substantially follows the language of the statute.[43] As, in some jurisdictions at least, the warrant in a prosecution

41. Binhoff v. State, 49 Oreg. 419, 90 Pac. 586, holding further that where the statute denounces acts done only by persons of a particular class, and under particular conditions, the exceptions constitute a material part of the offense and must be negatived.

Particular allegations necessary.— It is necessary that the affidavit state the name of the owner of the property (Withers v. State, 117 Ala. 89, 23 So. 147), and the injury to the property (State v. McKee, 109 Ind. 497, 10 N. E. 405), together with the amount of damage (State v. McKee, supra), and some identification or description of the premises, although a general description will suffice (State v. French, 120 Ind. 229, 22 N. E. 108, 735; Fogarty v. State, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 477, 6 Ohio N. P. 248. And see Randle v. State, 155 Ala. 121, 46 So. 759; Mayhall v. State, 146 Ala. 124, 41 So. 290). On a prosecution for trespass by entering upon land after being forbidden to do so, an affidavit which does not allege that the land on which accused entered was the land upon which he was forbidden to enter is fatally defective (State v. Young, 21 Ind. App. 546, 52 N. E. 760); but when an affidavit for unlawfully and wilfully entering upon the land of another alleges the possession of an agent for the owner named, the owner is in constructive possession, and the allegation of possession is sufficient (State v. Yellowday, 152 N. C. 793, 67 S. E. 480). An allegation that the lawful occupant of the land forbade the entry thereon is sufficient as against a special plea in bar that ownership was in a third person, as the fair inference is that the person alleged to be the lawful occupant was a tenant lawfully in possession. before a justice of the peace answers the purpose of an indictment,[44] it too must state an offense;[45] but this requirement is satisfied when the warrant incorporates the allegations of the complaint or affidavit by reference,[46] and amendments of both the affidavit and warrant are freely allowed.[47]

2. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION[48] — a. Requisites and Sufficiency in General. In passing upon the sufficiency of an indictment or information for trespass, the courts apply the tests applicable to indictments and informations generally,[49] such as the rules that while an indictment must set out every matter which is necessary to give a description of the offense charged,[50] and is bad if its allegations, when taken as true, are not inconsistent with the innocence of accused,[51] it is generally sufficient if the allegations are couched in the language of the statute creating the offense,[52] or if an offense is charged with such certainty as to apprise accused of the offense charged against him and enable the court to pronounce judgment according to the law of the case.[53] Mere matters of evidence need not be alleged,[54] nor need defenses be anticipated;[55] but exceptions must be negatived when, in the enacting clause, the statute makes them a part of the description of the defense.[56]

b. Particular Allegations — (I) THE ACT. While the means employed by accused in committing the trespass need not ordinarily be alleged,[57] where the statute is directed against the doing of a specific act, the indictment must substantially at least follow the language of the statute in describing the act.[58]

(II) DESIGNATION OF PARTY INJURED. The name of the owner of the property upon or against which the alleged trespass was committed, or, as sometimes stated, the name of the injured party, must be stated in the indictment.[59]

(III) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY INJURED. The property must be described [60] with particularity and accuracy where the offense is against a particular kind of property; [61] but otherwise only generally, no specific description being required, on account of the locality of the trespass being a minor element of the offense,[62] and a statement of the county and state, coupled with the owner's name, is frequently held sufficient.[63] person in possession is the lessor or is simply in control. Haynie v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 204, 75 S. W. 24.

State v. Watrous, 13 Iowa 489; State v. Myers, 20 Mo. 409. A misjoinder is not fatal when not prejudicial to the interests of accused (Long v. State, 42 Fla. 509, 28 So. 775); but under a statute specifying two acts in the conjunctive, an indictment which charges the doing of one act only is fatally defective (State v. Moultrieville, Rice (S. C.) 158).

59. State v. McConkey, 20 Iowa 574.

An allegation that the land belongs to the "estate," or to the estate and heirs, of a named person, is not indefinite under a statute directed against the cutting of timber on the lands of another (Boarman v. State, 66 Ark. 65, 48 S. W. 899; State v. Paul, 81 Iowa 596, 47 N. W. 773); but in such a case it is improper to allege title in the executor of the estate, unless followed by allegations showing that the will vested title in him; the proper averment is one of ownership in the devisees, if any, or in the heirs (McMillan v. State, 160 Ala. 115, 49 So. 680).

Where the property is the separate property of a married woman, it is proper, under the Texas statute so providing, to allege ownership either in her or in her husband. Hames v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 562, 81 S. W. 708.

(IV) VALUE OF PROPERTY INJURED. The value of the property need not be alleged,[64] unless the statute requires it to be of some value,[65] or the fine to be imposed is regulated by the value of the property.[66]

(VI) INTENT. Where the statute creating the offense makes intent an element, the statutory language descriptive of the intent must be substantially followed in the indictment;[69] but words such as "wilfully," which are not used in the statute, need not be inserted in the indictment,[70] and it is sufficient to employ the statutory language without enlargement.[71]

3. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE. The offense must be proved as charged in the indictment,[72] and a material variance is fatal to conviction.[73] However, matters which are not essential to the description of the offense need not be proved Value at time of trespass.—An averment that timber was removed on a certain day and was worth a certain amount is a sufficient statement that it was worth that amount when it was removed. State v. Blackwell, 3 Ind. 529.

But see State v. Shadley, 16 Ind. 230, holding that, under a statute different from the one involved in the above cases and prescribing a fine of five times the value of the property, an information which states the value of the property need not go further and allege the damage to the owners of the property.

What are equivalent expressions.— Under a statute using the word "knowingly," an indictment employing the word "unlawfully" is insufficient, as the two words are not equivalent in meaning. State v. Arnold, 39 Tex. 74; State v. Stalls, 37 Tex. 440.

In Tennessee, the word "unlawfully" is held to be broad enough to include "wilfully" and "knowingly" and to be sufficient in an indictment, but this decision was made to meet a judicial construction of the statute (Dotson v. State, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 545), and not on account of the words being used in the statute (State v. Hartman, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 384).

Possession and ownership.— On a prosecution for trespass, it devolves upon the state to prove that the property was not defendant's. Belverman v. State, 16 Tex. 130; Werner v. State, 93 Wis. 266, 67 N. W. 417. A charge of a single act of trespass upon the lands of two persons is not supported by proof that the lands belong to one only (Eubank v. State, 105 Ga. 612, 31 S. E. 741); nor is an allegation of ownership supported by proof of possession as agent, for whatever physical occupancy and control the agent may have exercised was in his representative capacity and merely went to constitute the possession of his principal (Jackson v. State, 124 Ga. 135, 52 S. E. 155). However, there is no variance between an allegation of ownership and proof that the person in possession was a lessee (Fogarty v. State, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 477, 6 Ohio N. P. 248), nor between an allegation that the property belonged to a certain person, and proof that the title and management were in him and that other persons were interested in the profits thereof (Long v. State, 42 Fla. 509, 28 So. 775).

as laid in the indictment,[74] and under the provisions of some statutes, a variance which is not material to the merits of the case may be cured by an amendment of the indictment.[75]

4. Evidence. While the state, in a prosecution for trespass, is required to prove all the elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt,[76] prima facie proof of ownership in a person other than accused is sufficient to cast upon defendant the burden of proving affirmative defenses, such as a right to enter, or a bona fide belief of a right to enter,[77] supported by reasonable grounds.[78] Evidence tending to show the commission of the offense as charged is relevant and admissible,[79] as is also evidence bearing on the defenses of accused;[80] and the courts act with liberality in receiving evidence touching on the character and extent of the title and possession of both prosecutor and defendant, as showing their respective rights and defendant's good faith.[81] It is of course essential to a conviction

Unnecessary allegations, which relate to no element which is a necessary ingredient of the offense charged, may be treated as surplusage and need not be proved. Shrouder v. State, 121 Ga. 615, 49 S. E. 702.

For the purpose of showing defendant's knowledge and intent, it is proper for the state to show that a previous prosecution against accused for a similar trespass upon the same land was settled by accused agreeing not to go on the land again. Champion v. State, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. 627, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 777.

The evidence must relate to the time and place of the alleged trespass. Thus, evidence of an offense committed after the issuance of the warrant is incompetent as a ground of conviction (Chappell v. State, 86 Ala. 54, 5 So. 419); and in a prosecution for trespass after warning, an objection is properly sustained to a question asked defendant, whether the open space in front of the post-office and the row of houses, where the one lived against whom he had gone to collect a bill, was not used by the public at will, where it did not appear with sufficient clearness that the space referred to was the space in respect to which the warning was given or where defendant was arrested (Morrison v. State, 155 Ala. 115, 46 So. 646).

Matters affecting the credibility of a witness, such as the fact that while he testifies as to the ownership of the property alleged to have been taken by accused, he is unable to distinguish and separate it from other similar property, is no ground for excluding his testimony. that the evidence support the verdict;[82] but in determining whether or not it does, title is frequently held to be sufficiently proved by parol evidence,[83] and intent, by the presumption which arises from the act itself.[84]

5. TRIAL, PUNISHMENT, AND REVIEW. It is the province of the jury to determine the guilt or innocence of accused by passing on the facts[85] under instructions by the court which not only correctly define the elements of the offense,[86] but state the law as to the defenses of accused,[87] where there is any evidence tending to sustain such defenses.[88] While the court should not charge upon the weight of evidence,[89] it may enumerate acts and conduct which, if established by the evidence, would authorize a verdict of guilty,[90] and it is proper for the court to refuse a requested instruction which asserts no proposition of law,[91] or which contains a misleading,[92] erroneous,[93] or incomplete statement.[94] A special verdict must state all the elements of the offense,[95] together with the value of the property,[96] and the punishment is of course regulated by statute.[97] Upon a joint indictment

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

A. Nature and Scope. In Texas, in which state principally this form of action is resorted to, the action of trespass to try title serves the purpose of an action of ejectment, but in it the question of title as well as the right to possession is determined, and as fully settled as it would be in a suit to quiet title.[1] Almost all manner of conflicting claims to land, regardless of which of the contending parties may have possession, can be therein determined.[2] In Texas, in this action, it is not necessary to prove an actual trespass by defendant, except in cases where there is no controversy about the title but only as to boundaries, and where plaintiff having superior title charges defendant with trespassing on his land.[3] Since trespass to try title is a simple remedy for determining conflicting and disputed claims to land, irrespective of its actual occupancy or possession, for the purpose of this action the owner may consider himself as having been ousted by an adverse claimant, even though such claimant has never been in actual possession of the land.[4]

But in South Carolina an actual trespass by defendant must be proved in order to enable plaintiff to maintain this action.[5]

B. Title to Support Action — 1. In General. In trespass to try title plaintiff can recover only by proving title in himself from the state, or a superior title from a common source.[6] Even as against a naked trespasser, plaintiff must prove his title to the land, not only against defendant but as against all other persons.[7] The holder of the bare legal title may, however, maintain an action of trespass to try title.[8] Plaintiff must show title in himself at the commencement of the action,[9] and if it appears that he has parted with his title before that time he cannot recover;[10] and a remainder-man cannot bring trespass to try title during the existence of the life-estate.[11] A mere executory agreement to convey land, a deed being required to give plaintiff title and right to possession, will not support an action of trespass to try title;[12] but an executed parol contract for the sale of land, the purchase-money having been paid, the possession taken, and valuable improvements placed thereon by the vendee, will constitute such a title in the vendee as will enable him to bring this action.[13] One claiming land under a bond to convey such land may recover against a mere trespasser, although the consideration has not been paid.[14] An assignment of land not under seal will not, however, invest an assignee with such a title as will enable him to maintain trespass to try title.[15] A mortgagee is not entitled to bring an action of trespass to try title, even though there has been a default in the payment of the sum secured by the mortgage, as his remedy is a suit to foreclose.[16] The vendor of land has the superior title thereto until the purchase-money is paid, and may bring an action of trespass to try title: (1) Where the conveyance is executory, as where a bond for title has been given;[17] (2) where a mortgage for unpaid purchase-money is given simultaneously with the deed;[18] and (3) where an express lien is retained in the deed for the payment of the purchase-money.[19] Since in Texas a verbal partition of land is valid, one who has thus acquired ownership may bring an action of trespass to try title.[20] The title of plaintiff in such an action is sufficiently established where he shows that defendants entered possession as tenants and retain such possession, and further shows the death of the landlord and plaintiff's heirship.[21] A less estate in land than a fee simple may form the basis of an action to try title.[22] Where a regular probate proceeding shows a valid administration, an order to sell land at public or private sale, and the return of the sale, which does not, however, show whether the sale was public or private, and an order of confirmation, the title is thereby prima facie vested in the purchaser and he may maintain an action of trespass to try title.[23] In trespass to try title, where plaintiff claims as the heir of the former owner who executed a deed of trust of the premises, where neither the trustee, nor the mortgagee nor his assigns, nor those claiming under void sales by the trustee are in possession, the payment of the mortgage debt is not a condition precedent to plaintiff's recovery.[24] Persons claiming title as against a judgment debtor under a sheriff's deed are not required to connect him with the sovereignty of the soil, in order to recover judgment against him in an action of trespass to try title.[25]

2. Undivided Interest or Title to Part of Land. Proof of an undivided interest in the land in controversy will authorize a recovery of the entire tract sued for as against a stranger to the title.[26] But actual possession of a part of a tract of land, under a conveyance of all of it, cannot prevail as to another part of such grant against an elder title to all of such other part and actual possession of a part of the latter tract.[27] In an action of trespass to try title, to recover an entire tract of land, plaintiff may recover the whole or any part thereof according to his proof of title, legal or equitable.[28]

3. Title Acquired After Accruing of Cause of Action or Commencement of Suit. Plaintiff must have such title as is necessary to sustain an action of trespass to try title at the time such action is begun.[29] Plaintiff in an action of trespass to try title having prima facie a good title at the time of instituting such action, has, however, a right to protect himself by buying in an outstanding title even after issue joined.[30]

4. Title Acquired in Defective Judicial Proceedings. In an action of trespass to try title a subsequent purchaser at a sheriff's sale may show that a prior sheriff's sale of the same land, as the property of the same defendant in execution, was fraudulent and void, although there have been no proceedings in equity setting aside such prior sale.[31] When an action is brought to recover land allotted to a plaintiff in partition, his right to recover against a defendant showing no title will not be defeated by showing the invalidity of the proceedings under which the partition was made, as such plaintiff has an undivided interest and is therefore entitled to recover against a mere trespasser.[32] Where realty is attached in a pending suit, a sheriff's sale made after the death of defendant in such suit upon whom no personal service of process had been made will not vest in the purchaser such a title as will enable him to maintain an action of trespass to try title.[33] A marshal's deed to the United States under a void execution, together with a judgment in favor of the United States against the ancestor of plaintiff, on which such execution and sale under it were based, and a deed from the United States to plaintiff in consideration of the payment of the judgment, show no title in the United States and do not prevent an action of trespass to try title by plaintiff or his ancestor.[34]

5. Adverse Possession. Plaintiff in an action of trespass to try title may rely upon a sufficient adverse possession,[35] but where he does so, the full statutory time must have run before the commencement of the suit to enable him to recover.[36] Limitations run in favor of the possession of land by the federal government, and its grantee may, in an action of trespass to try title, raise the defense that the government had acquired title by possession for the statutory period.[37]

Actual possession.—Where plaintiff and defendant each claim title to land by limitation, introducing sufficient evidence to recover against the true owner, and each is in actual possession of a part only, claiming title as against the other to the whole by constructive possession, whatever may be the rights of either as against the true owner neither acquires title as against the other to any of the land which is not in his actual possession, and plaintiff cannot maintain trespass against defendant showing the same character of title. of an Indian reservee under a treaty with the Indians, and defendant claims under an older patent from the government, plaintiff must prove the location of the Indian reservee as well as that he succeeded to the rights of such reservee.[38] In Texas, by virtue of statutory provisions, the location and survey of public land under a head right certificate, bounty warrant, land scrip, or any other evidence of right to such land recognized by the laws of that state, give sufficient title to authorize the maintenance of an action of trespass to try title.[39] Under the statute giving a bona fide settler who has bought one section of agricultural land the right to buy three pastoral sections, such a settler who has applied for

Right determined by priority of survey.— Where in an action of trespass to try title it appeared that plaintiff had title by patent to the land under a survey made on a certain date, and that defendant had title by patent to the same land under another survey made two days later, it was held that the prior survey constituted an appropriation of the land which would enable plaintiff to recover. 7. Paper Title. Where in trespass to try title plaintiff makes out a prima facie paper title and defendant fails to prove title in himself, plaintiff is entitled to recover.[41]

8. Equitable Title. In the courts of Texas an equitable as well as a legal title will support an action of trespass to try title,[42] but in the federal courts it has been held otherwise.[43]

9. Title From Common Source. In trespass to try title, when the parties to the action claim through a common source of title, it is not necessary for plaintiff

Mistake in reference to record of deed.— The right of a plaintiff having superior title to recover in trespass to try title is not defeated by the fact that a deed in his chain of title refers to another deed for the description of the property conveyed, by giving the names of the parties and the date of such deed, but misstates the page of the record on which it shall be found. to deraign title back of such common source;[44] and in Texas there is an express statutory provision to this effect.[45] When it is shown that both plaintiff and defendant claim title from a common source, and that of the two titles emanating from such source the former's title is the superior one, plaintiff then has a right to recover,[46] unless defendant shows a title superior to the common source which

Defect in title of common source.— In trespass to try title one of the parties cannot assert that the other is not entitled to the land because of an irregularity in procuring the patent under which both claim. Cuellar v. Dewitt, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 568, 24 S. W. 671.

Complete chain to common source necessary.—Where plaintiff in trespass to try title fails to connect himself by a complete chain of title with the common source, he cannot recover. San Antonio Mach., etc., Co. v. Campbell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 110 S. W. 770.

Necessity for common source.— It makes no difference whether the title defendant claims under is good or not, if that title is not derived from the same source with that of plaintiff, because possession with evidence of claim under any title not derived from the same source as plaintiff's is sufficient to require plaintiff to prove a superior title. Story v Birdwell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 847. See also Haney v. Brown, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 55.

Evidence must connect defendant with common source. Where a plaintiff suing for the recovery of land desires to relieve himself from proving a chain of title connecting himself with the sovereignty of the soil, by establishing it from a common source, he must not only show a title to himself originating in the common source, but he must also see that the evidence connects defendant's claim of title with the same source. Hendricks v. Stone, 78 Tex. 358, 14 S. W. 570; Halley v. Fontaine, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 33 S. W. 260.

Plaintiff without title.— Even when the parties claim through a common source, he has acquired, or that the title never vested in the common source.[47] The rule of common source is, however, one of evidence and not of estoppel,[48] and does not preclude the parties from asserting any other title. On the contrary, either party has the right to assert as many different and conflicting titles as he may be able to produce.[49] Where plaintiff in trespass to try title claims only an undivided interest, he must prove the amount of interest to recover against one who also has an undivided interest, from a common source of title.[50]

10. Title Acquired Through Foreclosure of Mortgage or Other Lien. A purchaser of lands at a sheriff's sale, in an action of trespass to try title to recover such lands from a third person, must show a title in the person against whom the execution issued.[51] The purchaser at a sheriff's sale in foreclosing a vendor's lien, although a third party, may maintain trespass to try title against a subsequent vendee in possession.[52] Where in an action of trespass to try title no direct attack is made on a deed obtained by defendant at a sheriff's sale, plaintiff cannot

Necessary to show common source without title.—Where in trespass to try title both parties claim under a common source, one party cannot defeat a recovery by the other by merely showing that a person other than the common grantor at one time held the title, but he must show at least prima facie that the common grantor was without title. Cocke v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 46 Tex. Civ. App. 363, 103 S. W. 407 [distinguishing Ellis v. Lewis, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 81 S. W. 1034]. See also Foster v. Johnson, 89 Tex. 640, 36 S. W. 67.

Common source a question of evidence and not of estoppel.—"The whole question of common source is one of evidence and not of estoppel. The plaintiff, in order to prevail, must recover upon the strength of his title, and this may be shown by evidence of common source and the superiority of his title from that source; but it by no means follows, when this is done, that the defendant is not permitted to overcome and destroy the effect of the prima facie title established by the plaintiff, by evidence tending to show that this title is worthless and that the plaintiff has no superior title." Rice v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 87 Tex. 90, 26 S. W. 1047, 47 Am. St. Rep. 72 [affirming 6 Tex. Civ. App. 355, 357, 24 S. W. 1099].

Defective title insufficient.—The effect of the proof of common source by plaintiff cannot be met and overcome by defendant merely by showing that he claims land under another source of title which is defective and legally insufficient as evidence of title. He can prove any title which he possesses, but he cannot escape from the rule of common source by showing a different chain of title under muniments which do not invest title in him. recover by showing that the consideration for such deed was inadequate, unless such inadequacy is gross.[53]

11. Weakness of Defendant's Title. In an action of trespass to try title, plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the strength of his own title and not upon the weakness of the title of his adversary.[54]

C. Possession of Plaintiff. In trespass to try title plaintiff may recover by virtue of priority of possession, without proof of title as against a mere trespasser.[55] Proof of such possession raises a presumption of ownership;[56] but

W. 753, holding that where a city has title to land dedicated to it as a street, and has not lost it by limitation, and takes possession of the land, it is not a trespasser against whom the actual possessor can recover by merely showing his possession.

Actual possession.— In order for plaintiff in trespass to try title to recover on the strength of possession alone, he must show that it was actual and corporeal and not merely constructive. Lea v. Hernandez, 10 Tex. 137; Lynn v. Burnett, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 79 S. W. 64.

Time of possession.— Where plaintiffs, in trespass to try title against trespassers, show title by a prior possession, recovery by them will not be defeated because they have not been in actual possession for several years. this presumption is rebuttable, being a rule of evidence and not a rule of property.[57]

D. Possession of Defendant. Where it appears that defendant took possession as the tenant of plaintiff, plaintiff is entitled to recover.[58] Trespass to try title will lie against a landlord, although he never was in possession, entry having been made by his tenant.[59] Where in trespass to try title defendant is a lien-holder in possession, he cannot be dispossessed, unless plaintiff discharges his lien.[60]

E. Notice to Quit. It has been held that as against a person not entitled to possession, but who is a mere trespasser, notice to quit is not necessary before an action of trespass to try title can be brought.[61]

F. Defenses — 1. In General. In trespass to try title defendant may impeach a conveyance under which plaintiff claims, by showing that it was obtained by duress or fraud, or that the consideration of it was the compounding a felony.[62] But one in possession of land as a mere trespasser, having no title, cannot show want of registry or notice of plaintiff's title,[63] or the invalidity of plaintiff's patent,[64] or that plaintiff did not pay a valuable consideration for his title.[65] The fact that plaintiff did not pay to the sheriff the costs of a former suit, under which he obtained title, will not avail defendant.[66] A defendant who denies possession and claims title by a sale under execution against plaintiff will not be heard to object to the validity of the title prior to plaintiff's possession.[67] Where the only claim of the occupants of land is a title by adverse possession, the fact that such land is occupied by them as community property constitutes no defense.[68]

2. Title or Right of Possession of Third Person. It is a good defense to trespass to try title for defendant to show a valid,[69] outstanding legal title to the land sued for, superior to that of plaintiff,[70] although defendant does not connect himself therewith;[71] but in case of an outstanding equity, defendant must connect himself therewith for it to constitute a defense.[72] In trespass to try title an outstanding superior title in a third person to a part of the land claimed will not defeat a right of recovery as to the part for which plaintiff can prove his title.[73]

3. Equitable Defenses. Where the distinction between law and equity is recognized, an equitable title cannot be set up as a defense against a legal title, in an action of trespass to try title;[74] but where this distinction is disregarded in an action of trespass to try title a defendant may set up an equitable title only.[75]

One who asserts equitable title to land cannot defeat the legal title without showing that the holder of the same purchased with notice of the equitable claim, or that he is not a purchaser for value.[78]

4. Title or Right of Possession of Defendant. Irrespective of title, one in actual possession of land is entitled to retain possession as against naked trespassers.[77] Trespass to try title must be brought against the tenant in possession, irrespective of ownership, and it is no defense for defendant that he holds under a will for the benefit of others.[78] Title in defendant cannot be shown by a promise under seal to make a title in fee simple at some future time to the land in controversy, provided the passage of an act of congress can be obtained to authorize such conveyance.[79] A landlord admitted to defend the title for his tenant will recover against plaintiff who had purchased the land at a sheriff's sale under an execution against the tenant, if he proves such title as will enable him to recover against the tenant himself.[80]

5. Defending Cotenant's Title. A person claiming as a tenant in common of an estate in lands, not being a trespasser, can defend his cotenant's title as well as his own in an action of trespass to try title.[81]

6. Set-Off and Counter-Claim. In a suit to try title to land and to recover damages, defendant may plead in reconvention,[82] praying that the pretended title of plaintiff may be canceled and that a writ of possession and damages may be awarded to him.[83]

G. Successive Actions. A second action by an unsuccessful plaintiff in trespass to try title must be brought within the time prescribed by statute.[84] And under the statute now in force in Texas a final judgment in an action of trespass to try title is conclusive, and a second action cannot be brought at all.[85]

H. Joinder of Causes of Action. Both equitable and legal causes of action or defense may be united in an action of trespass to try title;[88] and it is no misjoinder of causes of action to claim, in an action of trespass to try title, damages for trespasses committed on the premises, such as destroying timber, tearing down fences, and the like.[87] One who claims title to land may bring one action against all the tenants in possession, although they may severally possess title, but the deed lacks the corporate seal, the grantee takes such an equitable title as will permit him to plead the equitable title of his grantor, in trespass to try title by the holder of the legal title. Independent suit.— A plea in reconvention or cross bill occupies the same attitude as an independent suit, so that the determination of the main suit will not affect the reconvention or cross bill. Defendant in the main suit is plaintiff in the cross bill, and plaintiff in the main suit, against whom the cross bill is filed, occupies the position of defendant, with reference to the pleading. distinct portions of it, and defendants may protect themselves from the joint judgment for damages by showing the character and extent of their possession.[88] Several owners of distinct parcels of the entire tract of land cannot, however, maintain a joint suit for the recovery of the entire tract, but each must sue for his respective part.[89] Where a sheriff levies on and sells land as the property of one who has in fact no interest in the land, but only lives on it with the real owner, a joint action of trespass to try title will not lie by the purchaser against such person and the real owner.[90] Defendants in such an action may sever, although they have jointly pleaded not guilty, on showing that each holds under a separate claim of title, neither having any interest in that part of the land claimed by the other.[91] Where in trespass to try title the petition alleges a joint taking of the land by two defendants, and they without objection to the joint action defend jointly, they cannot complain of a judgment against each for a several parcel of land, the rent thereof, and the value of the crop thereon, as they are not prejudiced by a judgment which declares a more limited liability than that demanded.[92]

II. PROCEEDINGS.

A. Jurisdiction and Venue — 1. JURISDICTION. In Texas the district court has jurisdiction of actions of trespass to try title.[93] Since the Texas courts have both law and equity jurisdiction, an action of trespass to try title based upon or involving equitable principles may be determined therein.[94]

2. VENUE. An action of trespass to try title should be brought in the county where the land in dispute, or a part thereof, lies.[95] Where the land sued for lies in a county other than that in which the suit is brought, the defect of venue as a defense must be suggested by a proper and seasonable pleading.[96]

B. Limitations and Laches — 1. LIMITATIONS. As is the case with other actions,[97] an action of trespass to try title cannot be maintained unless it is brought before the expiration of the period prescribed by statute.[98]

when there is no adverse possession, neither limitation nor the rule of stale demand begin to operate against one claiming the equitable right until some act has been done by the holder of the legal title indicative of an intention to claim adversely.[2] Where defendant asserts an equitable title sufficient to afford a good defense, and does not seek affirmative relief, pleas of laches and stale demand are not available.[3] Coverture will defeat a plea of stale demand when interposed against an equitable right asserted by a married woman.[4]

C. Parties — 1. Parties Plaintiff. An action of trespass to try title must be brought in the name of the real party in interest, and one person cannot maintain this action in his own name for the use and benefit of another.[5] Remaindermen are proper parties plaintiff,[6] and so are the heirs,[7] and the widow and children [8] of the deceased owner of the land in controversy. The administrator is a proper party plaintiff to an action brought by the sole heir of his intestate.[9]

2. Parties Defendant. Under the Texas statute, defendant must be the person in possession, if the premises are occupied, or some person claiming title thereto in case they are unoccupied.[10] A purchaser of title pendente lite may be made defendant with the consent of plaintiff.[11] The public surveyor, whose duty it is to measure the land for the rightful owner, may be joined as a defendant with the adverse claimant.[12] The refusal of the court to make defendant's vendee a party, even though he might properly have been made one, is not an error of which defendant can complain.[13] Where several parties claiming interest in land are not made defendants, it is not error to try the case as to the parties in court, where no partition is sought, as the interested parties not joined will not be bound thereby.[14] But where partition is sought, all persons owning any interest in the land must be made parties.[15] In Alabama it has been held that, in an action of trespass to try title, instituted against a mortgagor in possession, the mortgagee, if entitled to the right of entry, may be admitted as a party defendant.[16]

3. INTERVENTION. The right to intervene in an action of trespass to try title is governed by the general rules regulating this right.[17] Where an action of trespass to try title is brought against the tenant in possession, the landlord may become or may be made a party defendant.[18]

4. BRINGING IN WARRANTOR AND OTHERS. Under the Texas statute, the real owner or warrantor may make himself, or be made, a party defendant;[19] but such warrantors should not be brought in at such a time or in such a manner as to unreasonably delay the trial of the case.[20] Any other person who claims or has any interest in the premises or any part thereof, which is adverse to plaintiff, may be brought in and made a defendant.[21] A defendant in possession by virtue of his wife's claim cannot have proceedings in an action of trespass to try title suspended until she can be made a co-defendant.[22] The fact that one of the parties to an action of trespass to try title claims under a deed alleged to be void does not make it necessary that the vendor in the deed should be made a party to the action.[23]

D. Process. Plaintiff's writ should be indorsed with a notice that the action is brought to try the title to the land, as well as to recover damages,[24] unless as in Texas it is provided by statute that such indorsement shall be made upon the petition.[25] Where defendant resides in a district other than that in which the land is situated, plaintiff is not bound to have him served in the district where he resides, but may proceed in the usual course by original, alias and pluries, until defendant is served in the district where the land lies.[26] A variance between the description of the land in the petition and the citation, consisting of a difference

E. Surveys and Abstracts of Title — 1. Surveys. In an action of trespass to try title a survey may be ordered by the court, where the locus in quo cannot well be ascertained otherwise.[28]

2. Abstracts of Title. Under the Texas statute either party may by notice in writing duly served demand an abstract of the title or claim of his adversary to the land in question, and when this is done the documentary evidence of title is confined to the matters contained in such abstract.[29]

F. Pleading — 1. Declaration or Petition — a. In General. Where the form and contents of a declaration or petition are provided by statute,[30] it must of course conform to the statutory requirements; a substantial compliance, however, being sufficient.[31] But where no form is prescribed, it may be in the usual form of one in trespass quare clausum fregit.[32] After appearance and plea to the declaration or petition, no objection can be taken to any defect therein.[33] An action of trespass to try title remains such, even though the petition also contains a prayer for partition.[34]

b. Interest and Possession of Plaintiff. Under the Texas statute[35] the petition must state the interest which plaintiff claims in the premises, whether it be in fee simple or otherwise;[36] and, if he claims an undivided interest, that must be stated and the amount thereof.[37] It must also be stated that plaintiff was in possession of the premises or entitled to such possession.[38] But an allegation of ownership in plaintiff, and of adverse claim by defendant, is sufficient without alleging possession or right of possession in plaintiff.[39] It is not necessary for plaintiff to state the evidence of his title, but if the petition purports to do so the substantial elements of the title must be stated.[40] And where plaintiff alleges generally his ownership of the land in question, but proceeds to set out the facts constituting his title, a general demurrer to the petition should be sustained if the facts set out do not constitute a good title.[41] It is not necessary for plaintiff to allege that both he and defendant claim title from a common source in order to entitle him to prove that fact.[42] In Alabama it has been held that where the declaration alleges that plaintiff was seized of the premises in question on a certain day and month, it will be presumed that the time of the seizin was previous to the commencement of the suit, although the year is not stated.[43]

c. Description of Land. The land in controversy should be described with so much particularity and precision that defendant will be informed of what he is to defend against, the court for what it is to render judgment, and the officer executing the writ of possession of what he is to give possession to the successful party.[44] And where the description of the land given in the petition is so inaccurate

Sufficiency of particular descriptions.—The premises may be sufficiently described by a particular name by which they are known (Crabtree v. Whiteselle, 65 Tex. 111), by their boundaries (Boydston v. Sumpter, 78 Tex. 402, 14 S. W. 996. See also Cook v. Spencer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 91 S. W. 813), by number (Hamner v. Eddins, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 192; Edwards v. Smith, 71 Tex. 156, 9 S. (Ala.) 365; Slack v. Dawes, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 520, 22 S. W. 1053. Compare Halley v. Fontaine, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 33 S. W. 260). A description may be sufficient which describes the premises by the structures or improvements erected thereon (Echols v. Jacobs Mercantile Co., 38 Tex. Civ. App. 65, 84 S. W. 1082), or by reference to a map, deed, or other document describing the property (Edwards v. Smith, 71 Tex. 156, 9 S. W. 77; Croft v. Rains, 10 Tex. 520; Bracken v. Barnes, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 326; Henry v. McNew, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 288, 69 S. W. 213). But an insufficient description will not be cured by reference to a deed, in which the description is as indefinite as that given in the petition. Halley v. Fontaine, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 33 S. W. 260.

Rejection of false description.—Where the petition correctly describes the land sought to be recovered by general description and by history of the title, and then in attempting to bound the land by giving the names and directions of the adjoining surveys gives a false description, the latter will be rejected. Bayne v. Denny, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 435, 52 S. W. 983.

Mistake cured by indorsement.—Where the declaration in some of the counts describes the land by the wrong township number, and the indorsement on the writ shows the correct number, the misdescription is corrected by such indorsement. Hamner v. Eddins, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 192.

and incomplete as not to identify the land, and it is impossible for the land in dispute to be contained in the description given, the petition is demurrable.[45] A declaration which fails to describe the premises properly is not cured by a special finding specifically locating the land.[46]

2. Plea or Answer — a. In General. Under the Texas statute, defendant need file only the plea of not guilty, which should state in substance that he is not guilty of the injury complained of in the petition filed by plaintiff against him;[47] but when other pleas are filed, the material facts necessary to constitute the defense or right to relief set up must be alleged[48] in a clear and unequivocal manner.[49] Where defendant files an admission of plaintiff's cause of action set forth in the petition, except so far as it may be defeated by the facts of the answer constituting a good defense, the court must direct a verdict for plaintiff, unless on inspection of the pleadings of defendant there are allegations showing a right in defendant to the possession of land, notwithstanding the ownership of plaintiff, and, where there are no such pleadings, there is no basis for a judgment for defendant.[50] And an answer is insufficient where the matters pleaded therein have no legal significance, and in no way affect the rights of the parties to the action.[51] Where defendant seeks to recover land which is part of a larger tract, he should in his plea set out by metes and bounds the particular part to which he claims to be entitled.[52] A defendant is not entitled, under a plea of reconvention, to recover land not sued for by plaintiff;[53] and where defendant interpleads his grantor on his warranty, it is proper to sustain exceptions to that part of the latter's answer in which he seeks a recovery against plaintiff for a debt disconnected with the subject-matter of such action, in the absence of any allegation that plaintiff is insolvent, or that there is danger that such grantor will lose his debt if his claim is not adjudicated therein.[54] A plea setting up that defendant is entitled to the land by prescription under the statute of limitations is not inconsistent with the plea that he is entitled thereto in right of his wife as heir.[55] In trespass to try title to land for which defendant has been induced by plaintiff's fraudulent representations to exchange land in another county, an answer setting up such representations and asking judgment for damages therefor, and for a cancellation of the deed to the latter tract, is not multifarious.[56] Where a plaintiff sues to recover on a note given for the purchase-price of land and to enforce a vendor's lien, and defendant by pleading the statute of limitations forces plaintiff to change the action to one of trespass to try title, and joins issue therein and rests his case on the question of title without offering to pay the balance of the price, his right to plead his equities is lost.[57]

b. Disclaimer. A defendant who has no claim to the land in controversy may avoid the consequences of an action of trespass to try title, by confessing the trespass, disclaiming the title, and tendering the damages.[58] If a defendant, in an action of trespass to try title, pleads not guilty and at the same time files a disclaimer as to the entire tract of land sued for by plaintiff, his plea should be disregarded, and plaintiff should have judgment for the land, unless damages are claimed, in which case it puts upon plaintiff the proof of the trespass only.[59] Under the Texas statute, where defendant claims a part of the premises only, his answer is equivalent to a disclaimer of the balance.[60]

c. Withdrawal of Plea. The withdrawal of defendant's plea should not be allowed, if the rights of plaintiff would be materially affected thereby.[61]

3. Reply. Where defendant pleads his title specially and asks for affirmative relief, if plaintiff has matter in avoidance he must put in a reply alleging it.[62]

4. Amended and Supplemental Pleadings. Plaintiff may by amended petition allege a trespass subsequent to the institution of the suit,[63] title acquired by him since the date of the alleged ouster,[64] and may describe a tract of land and a chain of title other than those described in the original petition.[65] A supplemental petition should not embody a description of the land according to a survey made since the action was begun, unless such description operates as a reply to the averments in defendant's answer.[66] And it is not proper in an amended petition to allege a sale of the land in controversy after the commencement of the suit, and the prosecution of the suit in the name of plaintiff for the grantee's benefit.[67] An averment of coverture, in a supplemental pleading in replication to defendant's plea of limitation, is good as against a general demurrer.[68] Where, during the trial and without defendant's concurrence, plaintiff agreed that judgment might be rendered in favor of certain interveners for a part of the land and of himself for the balance, but filed no pleading setting up title derived from such interveners, he is not entitled to judgment for the portion of the land agreed upon, since to be available he must set up such agreement by supplemental pleading.[69] Where defendant answers that the deed under which plaintiff claims is really only a mortgage, plaintiff may amend so as to demand foreclosure in case his deed should be declared a mortgage.[70]

5. Issues, Proof, and Variance — a. In General. In accordance with the general rules of pleading in civil actions,[71] in an action of trespass to try title only such matters are in issue as are properly put in issue by the pleadings and the proof.[72] And to authorize a judgment for the relief demanded there must be

Admission of defendant's possession.— Under the Texas statute (Rev. St. (1895) art. 5228) providing that the plea of not guilty, or any other answer to the merits, shall be an admission by defendant that he was in possession of the premises sued for, such plea does not admit that the premises sued for are included in the calls of any particular muniment of title (Echols v. McKie, 60 Tex. 41; Blume v. Rice, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 32 S. W. 1056), and a plea of not guilty is not such an admission of possession as will support a judgment for rents (Green v. Benton, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 92, 22 S. W. 256). This plea merely relieves plaintiff from the formal proof of possession, and does not admit possession as to defendant's warrantor over against whom he asks judgment. The fact that limitation has been specially pleaded will not, however, preclude a plaintiff from establishing any other title upon which he may rely.[79]

b. Matters Provable Under Plea of Not Guilty or General Issue. Under the Texas statute,[80] with the exception of the defense of limitations which must be specially pleaded,[81] any matter of defense, whether legal or equitable, may be proved under the plea of not guilty.[82] But if defendant wishes to assert an independent equitable title not involved in the issue as to title directly in controversy, he must present the facts by proper averments.[83] Under the plea of not guilty defendant may give in evidence any special matter of defense,[84] but where he pleads not guilty, and in addition sets up special defenses, his plea of not guilty is thereby waived except only so far as to impose upon plaintiff the burden of showing a prima facie right to the land in controversy, and he is restricted in the introduction of evidence to such as tends to establish his special defenses.[85] A special plea of limitation does not, however, deprive defendant of any defense available under the plea of not guilty.[86] Where not guilty is the only plea filed by defendant, plaintiff may introduce evidence in rebuttal or avoidance of affirmative matter admitted under such general issue, without having alleged the same in his pleadings. But where not guilty and a special plea other than limitation are filed, plaintiff cannot rebut or avoid the evidence put in under the special plea without himself making allegations under which the evidence offered by him would be admissible in other cases.[87] In South Carolina it has been decided that defendant need not plead his title specially.[88]

c. Variance. As is the case in other civil actions,[89] the allegations and proof in an action of trespass to try title must substantially correspond,[90] and any material variance between the proof and allegations is fatal to a recovery.[91] But where

The question is one of notice, and while a plaintiff is generally allowed to show facts in confession and avoidance of any defense admissible under a plea of not guilty, when defendant notifies plaintiff by a special plea what defense he will rely upon, and thus cuts himself off from any defense other than the one so pleaded, plaintiff must then plead such facts as he may wish to prove in avoidance of defendant's special plea. the proof substantially supports the pleading, the fact that there is a variance as to some immaterial matter is not fatal,[92] if the adverse party is not surprised or misled thereby.[93]

G. Evidence — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. In an action of trespass to try title, it devolves upon plaintiff to show title in himself;[94] and until he makes out at least a prima facie case defendant is not required to offer any evidence at all.[95] As has been previously stated, however, proof of plaintiff's possession of the land in controversy raises, as against a mere trespasser, a presumption of ownership,[96] and plaintiff establishes a prima facie case by showing a common source of title and the superiority of his title from that source.[97] As in other civil actions,[98] the burden is upon plaintiff to establish at least prima facie every fact essential to his case, and as to the existence of which he has the affirmative under the pleadings.[99] Thus plaintiff in trespass to try title, who contends

Civ. App. 113, 86 S. W. 936; New York, etc., Land Co. v. Votaw, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 52 S. W. 125 (holding that where plaintiff alleges that he is the owner of certain lands, and that defendant has fenced a portion of such lands and claims a tract which embraces within its limits portions of plaintiff's lands, and casts a cloud upon his title, the burden rests upon plaintiff); Renner v. Peterson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 867 (holding that where plaintiff claims as an actual settler on state school lands he must rely upon the strength of his own title, and the burden of proof is on him to show that he was an actual settler at the time he made his application); Estell v. Kirby, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 8; McKinney v. Baldwin, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 12, 36 S. that lands claimed by defendant are included in the former's grant or location, has the burden of proving such fact.[1] And one cannot recover in trespass to try title by alleging and proving that he owned some undivided portion of the land, without establishing what that portion is.[2] One claiming by collateral descent must show who was last entitled to the land, and his death without issue, the line of descent from him, and the extinction of all other lines of descent which would be preferred to the claimant, and the death of all intermediate heirs between himself and the ancestor.[3] Plaintiff having made out a prima facie case entitling him to recover the land in question, the burden then shifts to defendant to offer evidence in rebuttal,[4] and the burden is upon defendant to establish any matter of affirmative defense.[5] The fact that defendant took a lease from plaintiff's devisor to the land in dispute is such an admission of plaintiff's title as will cast upon defendant the burden of showing a paramount title.[6] Where a grant of

Civ. App. 86, 21 S. W. 941; Medlin v. Wilkens, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 465, 20 S. W. 1026 (holding that where defendant in trespass to try title denies that he is in possession of the land sued for, but says that he is in possession of other land, the burden is on plaintiff to prove him in possession of the land in controversy).

One claiming under a junior location has the burden of showing that the land included within it does not conflict with a previous location under a prior patent. Allen v. Worsham, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 525.

Heirship.— One claiming under an instrument purporting to have been made by heirs must prove their heirship. McCoy v. Pease, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 303, 42 S. W. 659. And the heirship of grantors cannot be proved by their grantees, by deeds in which they allege their heirship, nor by a petition in another suit between other parties. Watkins v. Smith, 91 Tex. 589, 45 S. W. 560.

Identifying land.— Where plaintiff claimed title to land as a part of a certain grant which he had described with reference to a certain creek, the burden is on him to identify the land sued for as a part of the grant, and to show the existence and location of the creek. land introduced in evidence in an action of trespass to try title contains what purports to be an actual survey, it will be presumed that a survey was actually made;[7] and the presumption is that a surveyor actually surveyed all lines called for by him in a survey certified to by him, and the party asserting the contrary has the burden of proving it.[8] Where it is shown that a patent for the land in controversy was issued, it will be presumed that the field notes and certificate of the survey were duly returned to the land-office within the time prescribed by law.[9] Where defendants claim under an alleged transfer of a land certificate, their proof of which is not legally admissible, and it is shown that they and their grantors have made open, notorious, and continuous claim of title to the land for nearly fifty years from and after the date of such alleged transfer, and have paid all taxes on the property, and that during such time plaintiffs have made no claim of title, a transfer of such certificate will be presumed.[10]

2. Admissibility[11] — a. In General. Subject to the general rules as to relevancy, competency, and materiality of evidence, which obtain in civil actions generally,[12] any evidence is admissible in an action of trespass to try title which tends to prove or disprove plaintiff's case or defendant's defense thereto.[13] Thus plaintiff may give in evidence a notice served by him on defendant, apprising him of his title and of his intention to claim rent.[14] And where plaintiff claims under an executor's deed made by defendant's father, declarations by plaintiff to defendant that he bid the land in at the executor's sale for defendant's father are admissible in evidence against him.[15] Evidence that plaintiffs by their acts had for many years asserted title to the land in question, and had conveyed it by deeds of trust, which were recorded long prior to the time that they asserted any right to the land, is admissible.[16] But evidence that plaintiff has not paid taxes on the land since the commencement of the action,[17] or that defendant was in possession of adjoining land not included in the controversy,[18] is inadmissible. Where plaintiff parted with his title to the land after the commencement of the action, evidence offered by his counsel, not for his benefit but for the benefit of the purchaser, is not admissible.[19]

Defendant's abstract of title.— Plaintiff may show common source of title by introducing in evidence defendant's abstract of title filed in the suit. Gonzales v. Batts, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 50 S. W. 403.

An instrument creating a lien on land as security for a deed cannot be considered as conveying the title to the grantee, and is not admissible as a muniment of title. Hardy v. Brown, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 385.

Necessity for filing recorded instruments and giving notice see Riddle v. Bickerstaff, 50 Tex. 155; Halbert v. De Bode, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 58; Hendricks v. Huffmeyer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 777.

W. 52; Cook v. Dennis, 61 Tex. 246; Kimbro v. Hamilton, 28 Tex. 560 (holding that the patent under which plaintiff claims is admissible as evidence of the genuineness of the certificate on which it issued); Peck v. Moody, 23 Tex. 93 (holding that conveyances of certificates of claims for bounty land cannot be received as evidence of right or title, without evidence that they have been presented to the commissioner of claims for registration and approval); Chambers v. Fisk, 22 Tex. 504; Jones v. Menard, 1 Tex. 771; Fields v. Burnett, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 108 S. W. 1048; Simmonds v. Simmonds, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 79 S. W. 630; Ward v. Cameron, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 240; Lynch v. Pittman, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 553, 73 S. W. 789; Walker v. Peterson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 33 S. W. 269; Olcott v. Ferris, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. 848; Busk v. Lowrie, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 414.

A transfer of a land certificate made before the issuance of a patent to the transferees, and hence not a link in the chain of title of their remote grantees, is nevertheless admissible in favor of such grantees, where such certificate is afterward referred to in a deed of partition between the transferees, and is necessary to show what land was partitioned to each transferee. Talbert v. Dull, 70 Tex. 675, 8 S. W. 530.

22. Lindsay v. Hoke, 21 Ala. 542 (holding that where several plaintiffs join in an action of trespass to try title, a deed conveying the land in controversy to some of them is admissible in evidence for the grantees therein named); Herndon v. Vick, 89 Tex. 469, 35 S. W. 141 [reversing (Civ. App. 1895) 33 S. W. 1011]; Bassett v. Martin, 83 Tex. 339, 18 S. W. 587; Ballard v. Carmichael, (Tex. 1891) 17 S. W. 393; Burns v. Goff, 79 Tex. 236, 14 S. W. 451 (holding that a deed passing title from defendant's remote grantor, who is not shown to have previously acquired the title, is admissible in evidence; the objection that the grantor in that deed is not shown to have previously acquired title going to the probative value of such deed and not its admissibility); Arnall v. Newcomb, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 521, 69 S. W. 92; Boston v. McMenamy, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 272, 68 S. W. 201 (holding that a recorded deed of the premises to plaintiff's ancestor having been received in evidence, it is not error to admit a subsequent unrecorded deed in evidence, to the ancestor from the same grantor); McCrory v. Lutz, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 62 S. W. 1094 [affirmed in 94 Tex. 650, 64 S. W. 780] (holding that where certain property intended to be conveyed was omitted from a deed by mistake, a subsequent deed rectifying the mistake is admissible); Ferguson v. Ricketts, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 975 [reversed on other grounds in 93 Tex. 565, 57 S. W. 19]; Watkins v. Atwell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 404; Green v. White, 18 Tex. Civ.

deeds,[23] judicial proceedings, judgments, and official conveyances,[24] surveyor's field

App. 509, 45 S. W. 389; McCown v. Terrell, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 29 S. W. 484; Carothers v. Covington, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 1040; Baird v. Patillo, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. 813; Jones v. Reus, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 628, 24 S. W. 674 (holding that a deed to defendant, which his testimony shows was intended to convey part of the land in controversy, is admissible, although it does not in fact convey such land); Roemer v. Shackelford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1892) 23 S. W. 87; Womack v. Slade, (Tex. Civ. App. 1892) 20 S. W. 947; Wallace v. Pruitt, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 231, 20 S. W. 728; Cox v. Hart, 145 U. S. 376, 12 S. Ct. 962, 36 L. ed. 741; Hollingsworth v. Flint, 101 U. S. 591, 25 L. ed. 1028; White v. Thacker, 78 Fed. 862, 24 C. C. A. 374.

A deed which is not connected with the source through which a party claims title is not admissible in evidence in support of such title. Hawley v. Brooks, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 316. See also Stubblefield v. Hanson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 94 S. W. 406. And it is improper to admit in evidence a deed offered by plaintiff to show common source of title, where he fails to connect defendant's title with such deed. Boston v. McMenamy, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 272, 68 S. W. 201.

Bond for title.— Since a bond for title acknowledging the receipt of purchase-money conveys to a grantee an equitable interest, on which he may maintain trespass to try title, a bond for title is admissible in evidence, although plaintiff has been guilty of laches and no decree for specific performance or occupation of the land by either party has been shown. Neyland v. Ward, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 369, 54 S. W. 604.

Admissibility of lease.—A written lease of the land in controversy, from plaintiff to defendant, is admissible to show by what right defendant was admitted into the possession of the land. Collins v. Davidson, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 73, 24 S. W. 858. See also Camp v. League, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 92 S. W. 1062. But it is proper to exclude a lease of school lands to plaintiff's grantor, where the lease has been abandoned and canceled, and the grantor has afterward made an application to purchase such lands. Abilene Live-Stock Co. v. Guinn, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 885.

Deed executed after action brought.— Where plaintiff is the equitable owner of the land when the action is begun, a deed conveying the legal title, although executed after suit brought, is admissible. Vineyard v. Brundrett, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 147, 42 S. W. 232. And a deed executed after the commencement of the action is admissible to show a ratification by the grantor of the act of another in executing a deed prior to the action, as his attorney in fact. McCulloch County Land, etc., Co. v. Whitefort, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 314, 50 S. W. 1042. Where an amended petition is founded upon conveyances to the petitioners, executed after the commencement of the action, such conveyances are properly admitted in evidence. Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 355, 18 S. W. 734.

A deed executed by an attorney in fact is admissible, although the authority of the attorney is not shown, where it is the common source of title under which both parties claim. Glover v. Thomas, 75 Tex. 506, 12 S. W. 684.

A void deed under which defendant claims may be put in evidence by plaintiff to show common source of title. Wren v. Howland, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 87, 75 S. W. 894; Culmore v. Genove, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. 83.

Uncertainty or inadequacy of description.— A deed which recites that it is a substitute for one "made heretofore, in which the situation of the land was not properly described." is admissible for the purpose of showing title in the grantee. Curdy v. Stafford, 88 Tex. 120, 30 S. W. 551 (reversing (Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 823]. It is error to exclude, because of uncertainty of description, a deed through which defendant claims title, offered together with various other conveyances showing a regular chain of title from the original grantor; such deed being offered to show privity of possession and continuity of claim, for the purpose of establishing a claim by adverse possession. Craig v. Cartwright, 65 Tex. 413. Deeds are admissible in evidence, although the land described in them is different from the land set forth in the petition, if it is shown that the land is in fact the same. Gray v. Kauffmann, 82 Tex. 65, 17 S. W. 513. A deed, the description of which is insufficient to identify the land, and which is on its face apparently inaccurate and incomplete, is inadmissible. Thomas v. Tompkins, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 592, 105 S. W. 1175. Where there is neither written allegation nor proof that the description of land in an instrument recorded subsequent to a deed between the same parties was intended as, or in fact was, a description of the land in controversy, such description should not be considered for any purpose. Turner v. Cochran, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 63 S. W. 151.

Although an instrument not under seal cannot convey the legal title to land, yet, in an action of trespass, it may be competent evidence to show a license or authority from the owner of the land to defendant to enter thereon. Floyd v. Ricks, 14 Ark. 286, 58 Am. Dec. 374.

23. Schleicher v. Gatlin, 85 Tex. 270, 20 S. W. 120; Garner v. Lasker, 71 Tex. 431, 9 S. W. 332; Eels v. Blair, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 462; De Garcia v. Lozano, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 280.

24. Collins v. Ball, 82 Tex. 259, 17 S. W. 614, 27 Am. St. Rep. 877; Smith v. Gillum, 80 Tex. 120, 15 S. W. 794 (admissibility of mortgage and foreclosure proceedings); Beall v. Chatham, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 94 S. W. 1086; Greer v. Bringhurst, 23 Tex. Civ. App.

notes, maps, plats,[25] exemplifications, transcripts, and certified copies[26] is admissible, subject to such general rules of evidence.

582, 56 S. W. 947; Benson v. Cahill, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 1088 (holding that where in an action of trespass to try title no question of innocent purchaser is involved, a record of probate proceedings material to prove the chain of title is admissible, although not recorded in the county where the land is situated); Buchanan v. Park, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 807; Baldwin v. Roberts, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 563, 36 S. W. 789; Galbraith v. Howard, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 32 S. W. 803; Ingram v. Walker, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 74, 26 S. W. 477; Evans v. Martin, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 331, 25 S. W. 688 (admissibility of petition for partition and appointment of administrator).

A controller's certificate showing the rendition of the land for taxes to defendants, and that it was not rendered by plaintiff or those under whom he claims, is admissible to prove ownership. Hirsch v. Patton, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 499, 108 S. W. 1015.

Replevin bond.—Where a defendant has disclaimed any interest in the land, and sets up that he is only a tenant, his replevin bond may be introduced to show that he replevied the land and therefore claims an interest therein. Capt v. Stubbs, 68 Tex. 222, 4 S. W. 467.

Admissibility of official conveyances see Burns v. Goff, 79 Tex. 236, 14 S. W. 1009 (admissibility of deed of foreign guardian made by order of foreign court); Ammons v. Dwyer, 78 Tex. 639, 15 S. W. 1049; Snow v. Starr, 75 Tex. 411, 12 S. W. 673; Wilkins v. Owens, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 110 S. W. 552 [reversed on other grounds in 114 S. W. 104] (holding that where the application and order for the sale of realty belonging to an estate does not cover the land sold, and the order confirming the sale does not identify the land, neither the administrator's deed nor subsequent deeds thereunder are admissible in evidence); Moore v. Kempner, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 86, 91 S. W. 336; Perry v. Blakey, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 843; Collier v. Couts, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 485 (holding that a sheriff's deed is properly admitted in evidence to show privity of claim between defendant's predecessor in title and himself, where there is testimony tending to show that it rested upon a valid judgment against that predecessor, as adverse possession need not be in the same person for the entire period, in case a privity of claim is shown to exist between those in possession); McCown v. Terrell, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 29 S. W. 484; Baird v. Patillo, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. 813.

Admissibility of judgment and order see Harvey v. Edens, 69 Tex. 420, 6 S. W. 306; Frederick v. Hamilton, 38 Tex. 321 (holding that a judgment relating to land which is not recorded in the county where the land lies is properly excluded); Shirley v. Walker, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 110 S. W. 995; Teague v. Swazey, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 102 S. W. 458 (holding that where an order for a guardian's sale gives a minute description of the land, the failure of the order confirming the sale to contain a full description does not affect its admissibility); Barrett v. McKinney, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 93 S. W. 240; Veatch v. Gray, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 145, 91 S. W. 324; Tinsley v. Corbett, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 633, 66 S. W. 910; Ferguson v. Ricketts, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 149 (holding that where plaintiff claims under a sheriff's deed issued on execution sale under a judgment rendered in another county against defendant's grantor, the judgment, execution, and return are admissible); Owens v. New York, etc., Land Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 601 (holding that a judgment vesting title to land in plaintiff's ancestors is admissible against one whose ancestors were not parties to the action, as a muniment or link in plaintiff's chain of title); Clark v. Groce, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 453, 41 S. W. 668; Driggs v. Grantham, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. 408; Hendricks v. Huffmeyer, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 93, 38 S. W. 523 (holding that an order of sale made by a probate court, although not admissible for the purpose of showing title in any one to the land described therein, may be admitted to show in connection with other evidence what land was intended to be described in a prior decree of partition of the lands described in the order).

W. 736 (holding that an abstract of title made by a county clerk and certified by him to have been taken from the record of deeds in his office is admissible); Simmonds v. Simmonds, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 79 S. W. 630; Karnes v. Butler, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 62 S. W. 950; Barton v. Davidson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 400; Burleson v. Collins, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 28 S. W. 898 (holding that where plaintiff attacks as a forgery the deed under which defendant claims, a certified copy of such deed from the records of the proper county is admissible, in connection with evidence that the original was executed by the person who was the common source of title); Bosse v. Cadwallader, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 260.

3. Weight and Sufficiency. The general rules which govern in other civil actions in regard to the weight and sufficiency of evidence are applicable to actions of trespass to try title, and a preponderance of evidence showing any material fact in issue is sufficient, the degree of certainty demanded in criminal prosecutions not being required.[27] A charge that a party to this action must establish his case

4. Effect of Plaintiff's Evidence of Common Source. In making proof of a common source of title, plaintiff has the right to introduce his evidence for that purpose only, and when so introduced it will not be considered for the purpose of showing title in defendant, unless introduced by him. The proof of common source does not mean that defendant has title under the claim proved, but that he claims to have title under it.[29]

Evidence sufficient to make prima facie case.— Evidence that plaintiff was an actual settler on an agricultural section on the date of his application to purchase it, and also other sections as additional land, and that the lands were all awarded to him on his application, makes a prima facie case in his favor in trespass to try title. Walker v. Marchbanks, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 303, 74 S. W. 929. Possession of a land certificate with a blank indorsement thereon, prior to its location, followed by a location, is, when unexplained, prima facie evidence of title. Fisher v. Ullman, 3 Tex. H. Trial [30] — 1. Order of Proof. In trespass to try title, deeds constituting links in a chain of title need not be introduced in the order of their execution, beginning with the original grant from the sovereign, but the order may be varied to suit the convenience of the party offering them, subject to the direction of the court in its discretion.[31]

2. Nonsuit. Under a statute providing that at any time before the jury retires plaintiff may take a nonsuit, but he shall not thereby prejudice the right of an adverse party to be heard on his claim for affirmative relief,[32] where in an action of trespass to try title defendant asks that his title be quieted, the court may hear and grant his plea, although plaintiff has been nonsuited.[33]

3. Questions For Jury. As in other civil cases,[34] questions of law are for the determination of the court,[35] and questions of fact are for the jury.[36] An issue not raised by the pleadings and the evidence should not be submitted to the jury,[37] but issues so raised should be submitted.[38] Where plaintiff establishes his title by undisputed evidence, and defendant fails to show a superior title, it is proper to direct a finding for plaintiff.[39] Where all the evidence tends to prove a fact, so that but one finding can be made by the jury, it is proper for the court to withdraw the issue from them and decide the matter itself,[40] and where, there is no conflict in the evidence, and it fails to prove or tend to prove the allegations of plaintiff, a verdict may be directed for defendant.[41] The case should be sub-

Evidence as to possession.— Before the court is authorized to direct a verdict for plaintiff, based on the presumption of ownership from prior possession, against one entering without title, the evidence must be conclusive, leaving no room for doubt as to the fact of actual possession, and it is not enough that the evidence is without conflict in establishing the facts relied on to show actual possession, but these facts must themselves conclusively prove such possession. Burden of proof.— In an action of trespass misleading,[48] too broad,[49] argumentative,[50] ambiguous,[51] conflicting, inconsistent, or contradictory.[52] A requested instruction may be refused when it has been substantially embodied in the instructions given by the court,[53] or where it is in part inaccurate,[54] or on an immaterial or unessential matter;[55] but it is erroneous to refuse proper instructions upon a matter in issue not already covered.[56] Mere errors of form such as are not calculated to mislead the jury or prejudice the rights of the parties are immaterial.[57] Instructions embodying abstract propositions of law not applicable to the case on trial should not be given, as they tend to confuse the jury.[58] An erroneous instruction cannot be complained of by the party whom it favors.[59]

5. Verdict and Findings — a. In General. The rules obtaining in civil actions generally are applicable as to verdicts or findings in actions of trespass to try title.[60] Thus the verdict or findings must be specific, certain, and consistent,[61] to try title, it is not error to charge as to the burden of proof. Moore v. Dunn, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 371, 41 S. W. 530.

Weight and sufficiency.— In trespass to try title an instruction as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence is erroneous. Staley v. Stone, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 299, 92 S. and should conform to the pleadings,[62] and be responsive to the issues,[63] and to the charge of the court.[64] A natural and fair construction should be placed upon the verdict,[65] and a verdict which is general, although not very formal, will support a judgment.[66] Where the trial below is by the court alone, without any special findings of fact or law in the record, it will be presumed on appeal that the court did find facts to be such as would support the judgment.[67] Where defendant claims title, and the jury finds against defendant's claim but disagrees as to plaintiff's title, the finding against defendant does not entitle plaintiff to judgment.[68] In trespass to try title against two defendants, although their plea be joint, the jury may find against one and for the other.[69] Where a plaintiff makes a claim against some of defendants as to the whole title to the premises in controversy, but against others only on a question of boundary, the trial being by the court, there is no error in announcing the decision as to the former controversy before proceeding to try the latter.[70]

b. Description of Premises. The verdict in trespass to try title must describe with reasonable certainty the premises intended to be covered thereby.[71] The verdict of the jury may, however, be aided by a reference to the pleadings to identify the premises;[72] and it is not error for the court to explain its findings by referring to a map filed therewith, which was used by one of the witnesses in connection with his testimony but not offered in evidence.[73] Where the question of boundary is raised between owners of adjoining lots, the jury should determine by their verdict the exact location of the dividing line.[74]

I. Judgment and Enforcement of Judgment — 1. Judgment[75] — a. In General. A judgment in an action of trespass to try title, although informal, if it adjudge the damages found by the jury and a writ of possession, is sufficient.[76] As in other civil actions the judgment must be in conformity with the pleadings[77]

appeal is taken by defendants but never perfected, the fact that defendants continued in possession of the land does not affect the conclusiveness of the judgment as far as the title to such land up to the date of the rendition of such judgment is concerned.[91] In Texas the wife of defendant, who is joined with him as defendant, is not liable to a personal judgment for use and occupation and for costs, where the husband claims as the purchaser himself.[92]

b. Description of Land. It is necessary to the validity of a judgment in trespass to try title that it should describe the land recovered with sufficient certainty to identify it.[93] But the description of the premises in a judgment is sufficient, where it follows the pleadings and furnishes sufficient means to identify the land.[94]

c. Disclaimer. Upon disclaimer by a defendant in trespass to try title, a judgment should be entered for plaintiff for the land in controversy, and for defendant for the costs of the action.[95] Where the defendants disclaim as to a part of the land in controversy, judgment should be entered for plaintiff for such part,[96] and if defendant, after disclaiming as to a part of the land, lays claim by metes and bounds to the remainder, and it is found that he is entitled thereto, judgment should be entered for him therefor.[97] Where plaintiff obtains judgment in an action to recover land, defendant having pleaded not guilty and having also filed a disclaimer as to a portion of the land sued for, such defendant is not prejudiced by the entry of a judgment against him for all the land sued for by plaintiff.[98] Where in trespass to try title one of defendants pleads not guilty, and also that he holds possession only as a tenant of his co-defendant, and the co-defendant obtains a judgment against plaintiff, judgment should not be rendered against such defendant as in the case of an ordinary disclaimer.[99]

d. Reforming Judgment. By consent, the court after judgment may reform the judgment and permit plaintiff to dismiss or remit the judgment against one or more of several defendants.[1]

2 Enforcement of Judgment. On a recovery in trespass to try title of a whole or a part of the land sued for, plaintiff is entitled to a writ of possession for that which is recovered.[2] But a writ of possession cannot be awarded against persons other than defendants who entered upon the premises recovered, prior to the institution of the action.[3] The enforcement of a judgment adjudging the land to plaintiff and the value of the improvements thereon to defendant is expressly provided for by statute in Texas.[4]

J. New Trial. In trespass to try title it is not error to refuse to postpone the hearing of a motion for a new trial to permit the moving party to acquire an outstanding superior title relied on by him to defeat a recovery.[5]

K. Appeal and Error.[6] In Texas the determination of the lower court, in an action of trespass to try title, is reviewable either by appeal or by writ of error.[7] A question not raised, or which has been abandoned, in the court below, will not be considered on appeal.[8] As a general rule the action of the court in instructing the jury will not be reviewed without a statement of facts or a bill of exceptions.[9] And by rule of court in Texas, in the absence of any assignment of error, an appellate court will not consider any error but one of law appearing upon the record.[10] The action of the lower court, even though erroneous, will not be disturbed where the appellant was not prejudiced thereby.[11] It will be presumed that the action of the lower court and the judgment thereof is in accordance with law, in the absence of anything in the record showing otherwise.[12] Where the interest of the parties can be rightly severed, the appellate court may affirm as to some of the parties and reverse as to others.[13] Where an issue was raised in the court below which should have been submitted to a jury, the cause will be remanded for a new trial.[14] But where a question has been fully presented to the jury,

Quashing writ of possession.— Where a writ of possession, executed after a petition in error to have the judgment revised on which the writ issued, has been filed and served, it is not too late to file a motion to quash the writ. and there is evidence to support their verdict, the judgment of the lower court will not be disturbed.[15] The appellate court will remand the cause and will not, acting upon the evidence in the record, reform and affirm a judgment where the description of land in a petition was inaccurate, uncertain, and insufficient to identify the land, and there were no allegations of extraneous facts which would clear up the misdescription and uncertainty.[16] Where several defendants claim to have made improvements, the appellate court may remand the cause in order that the pleadings may be amended so as to describe the respective portions of the land in controversy, which defendants claim to have improved.[17]

L. Costs[18] — 1. In General. In an action of trespass to try title, where defendant litigates title to the whole or to a part of the land in controversy, in the event plaintiff recovers any part of the land so litigated he is entitled to recover costs;[19] but where plaintiff fails to maintain his action the costs should be adjudged against him.[20] And where plaintiff by amendment sets up a new cause of action,[21] such as title to the land sued for, acquired after the institution of the action,[22] he makes himself liable to pay all costs which have accrued up to the time of the amendment.

2. Effect of Disclaimer A defendant in an action of trespass to try title, who does not desire to contest the title of plaintiff, may absolve himself from the payment of costs by entering a disclaimer as to the land for which suit is brought, provided plaintiff sees fit to prosecute the matter no further and accept the disclaimer.[23] But in an action of trespass to try title and for damages for the unlawful detention, defendant, even though he disclaims title, will be held liable for the costs if he is found liable for damages for the detention.[24] A defendant who denies plaintiff's right to any portion of the lands sued for, but afterward disclaims as to a part of them, is liable for the costs accruing up to the date of filing the disclaimer;[25] and the same rule applies where defendant first claims a part of the land and subsequently disclaims as to that part or to a part of that part.[26]

III. DAMAGES, USE AND OCCUPATION, IMPROVEMENTS, AND TAXES.

A. Damages. Both actual and exemplary damages may be awarded to plaintiff in an action of trespass to try title.[27] One who makes an unauthorized entry on land in possession under a lease is liable to the tenant for the actual damages sustained by him on account of such entry, but damages for permanent injury to the land cannot be recovered by the tenant.[28] Where, after an action of trespass to try title has been brought, defendant buys at a sheriff's sale, under execution against plaintiff, the land in dispute, plaintiff is entitled to such damages as he had sustained before the sale.[29]

B. Use and Occupation — 1. IN GENERAL. In trespass to try title the reasonable value of the rents and profits arising from the use and occupation of the land, as well as the land itself, is recoverable.[30] Damages for such use and occupation are to be computed from the time when the title was cast upon plaintiff,[31] and the possession of defendant became adverse.[32] And rents accruing up to the time of the verdict are recoverable.[33] One who, in fencing in land belonging to him, incloses a tract belonging to another and uses the entire inclosure as his own, is liable for the use and occupation of the land belonging to the latter, although he never disputes the latter's title or right of possession.[34] Rent cannot be recovered for the use and occupation of land where defendant is in possession under a valid lease,[35] or under a voidable deed purporting to convey the land in fee simple with covenants of warranty, until such deed is repudiated and possession demanded.[36] On a recovery of land which would have been unproductive without the improvements placed upon it in good faith by defendant, plaintiff is not entitled to recover rent.[37] Damages for use and occupation can only be recovered when the facts authorizing such recovery are alleged and proved.[38] And if there is any reason why defendant is not liable for rent, it should be set up in the answer.[39]

Agreed rental value.—Where plaintiff has entered into a written rental contract with a person who agreed to pay him a certain sum for the use of the land, defendants by unlawfully withholding possession of the land and refusing to allow the plaintiff to put his lessee in possession become liable for the agreed rental value. Burge v. Hinds, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 134, 101 S. W. 855.

2. Set-Off Against Improvements. Where in an action of trespass to try title there is a claim for valuable improvements made in good faith, the owner of the land is entitled to set off against such claim the value of the use and occupation of the land.[40]

3. Effect of Disclaimer. If defendant in an action of trespass to try title desires to put an end to the action and prevent the recovery of damages for a longer period of occupancy, he should make a disclaimer in open court, or in some other manner, and yield the possession to plaintiff.[41] The fact that a defendant files a disclaimer in trespass to try title will not, however, absolve him from liability to pay the rental value of the land during the time he occupied it.[42]

C. Improvements — 1. In General. Where plaintiff prevails in an action of trespass to try title he is entitled to the improvements placed upon the land by defendant, as well as to the land itself.[43] In Texas, however, there is express statutory provision for compensation to possessors in good faith, who have made permanent and valuable improvements upon the land of another.[44] And, independent of statute under the principles of equity, one who has in good faith placed improvements upon the land of another is entitled to recover their value.[45]

2. Good Faith. The question of good faith is one of fact to be determined by Rental value of improvements excluded.— Under Tex. Rev. St. (1895) § 5278, the value of the use and occupation should be estimated without reference to the improvements. Morris v. Wells, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 363, 66 S. W. 248; Mahon v. Barnett, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 45 S. W. 24; Lumpkin v. Nicholson, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 108, 30 S. W. 568. Formerly the rule was otherwise. Evetts v. Tendick, 44 Tex. 570. Where it is found that defendant's improvements were not made in good faith, plaintiff should be allowed the rental value of the land inclusive of the improvements, instead of rent for the land alone. Gilley v. Williams, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 43 S. W. 1094.

No judgment against owner for excess.— The statute allowing a party who is ejected from land the value of his improvements, when he is shown to have been a possessor in good faith, and deferring the owner's right of possession until he pays such party the excess of the value of such improvements over the rents, is valid, but such statute cannot be extended beyond its letter, and a judgment awarding damages against the owner cannot be sustained. Constitutionality of statute.— This statute is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts. Cahill v. Benson, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 30, 46 S. W. 888.

Value of property not enhanced.—Where the value of the property for which the action is brought is not enhanced by the structures erected upon it, as where buildings are placed upon the right of way of a railroad, which interfere with the use of such right of way, there can be no recovery for such structures as constituting valuable improvements. Olive v. Sabin, etc., R. Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 208, 33 S. W. 139.

Nature of improvements.— The law of improvements in good faith under Tex. Rev. St. art. 4813, is applicable to such improvements as have been placed upon the land under such circumstances as to make them a part of the realty, but does not apply to such as have been placed upon land under such circumstances as to constitute them personal property. Harkey v. Cain, 69 Tex. 146, 6 S. W. 637.

Good faith and possession necessary.— Improvements on the land of another, not shown to have been made in good faith or while defendant was in possession, cannot be allowed in an action of trespass to try title brought by the owner. Ferguson v. Cochran, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 30. See also Overton v. Meggs, (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 105 S. W. 208.

the jury under proper instructions by the court,[46] depending upon the circumstances of the particular case in which it is asserted.[47] As a general rule to constitute one a possessor in good faith, he must not only believe that he is the true owner, and have reasonable grounds for the belief,[48] but he must be ignorant that his title is contested by one having a better right.[49] But there may be cases when, although aware of the adverse claim, the possessor may have reasonable and strong grounds to believe such claim to be destitute of any just or legal foundation, and so be in possession in good faith.[50] And he may also have good faith where he makes an innocent

How good faith established.— "The existence of good faith is a fact to be established in such cases by evidence of other facts tending to show that the person asserting it at the time he made improvements on the land believed himself to be its owner and had grounds for such belief such as would ordinarily be satisfactory to one unlearned in the law but of ordinary intelligence, after having made such inquiry as the law presumes every person desiring to buy land will make and as an ordinarily prudent man for his protection ought to make." Mistake in boundary line.— Where, owing to a mistake as to his boundary line, defendant improves plaintiff's land under an honest belief that it is his own, he is a possessor in good faith within the meaning of the statute and, on recovery of the land by plaintiff, is entitled to compensation for improvements. Houston v. Brown, (Tex. 1888) 8 S. W. 318. See also Gatlin v. Organ, 57 Tex. 11. But where a person purchases a lot without showing the slightest diligence to ascertain its boundaries, and as a result erects improvements partly on another's lot, he cannot, in an action against him establishing the true boundary, claim compensation as for improvements made in good faith. Werkheiser v. Foard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 108 S. W. 983.

Void tax title.— It cannot be held as a matter of law that improvements made by a purchaser were not made in good faith because he held under a void tax title. Schleicher v. Gatlin, 85 Tex. 270, 20 S. W. 120; Louder v. Schluter, 78 Tex. 103, 14 S. W. 205, 207; House v. Stone, 64 Tex. 677; Hill v. Spear, 48 Tex. 583; Netzorg v. Green, 26 Tex. Civ. Want of proper acknowledgment.— The mere fact that a deed is invalid for want of a proper acknowledgment does not preclude the vendee from being a possessor in good faith. Veeder v. Gilmer, 47 Tex. mistake in point of law, for instance as to the construction of a demise, the due execution of a power, and the like, where, although aware of the opposing claim, he may have taken possession in full confidence of his title. Of course, however, when one is cognizant of the claims of another he must have reasonably strong grounds to believe in the soundness of his own title, otherwise he cannot claim as a holder in good faith.[51]

3. Proceedings For Recovery of Compensation. Where defendant seeks to recover for improvements he must allege adverse possession in good faith,[52] the making of improvements,[53] and must state specifically the grounds constituting his claim of good faith.[54] And where the making of improvements[55] and good faith[56] are not alleged, evidence as to these matters is inadmissible. The time when the improvements were made must also be alleged.[57] Where there are several defendants, each having a distinct and separate claim to a portion of the land and improvements thereon, each of such defendants in his pleadings must make distinct from his co-defendants his claim to the land and improvements.[58] Where an action is brought for an entire tract of land and plaintiff has recovered an undivided half thereof, being found to be a tenant in common with defendant, and there is no prayer for partition, there can be no adjudication as to defendant's right to improvements, this being ascertainable only in a partition proceeding.[59] Defendant is not precluded from recovery for improvements by the fact that his answer is found to have misdescribed the land on which they were made, such misdescription being based on a mistake as to his boundary which is the main question at issue in the suit, unless it appears that his mistake was the result of negligence.[60] In trespass to try title the burden is upon defendant to show that he has improved the land,[61] and the value of the improvements.[62] The value of the land with and without such improvements must also be shown by him.[63] Evidence of a tax-sale at which defendant purchased is admissible in support of a claim for improvements made in good faith;[64] and a void tax deed is admissible for this purpose.[65] Evidence that defendant was ignorant of plaintiff's existence and of his claim to the land is properly admitted on the issue of good faith.[66] In accordance with the general rules on the subject,[67] instructions upon questions as to which no evidence has been offered are properly refused;[68] and instructions are proper which conform to the pleadings and the evidence offered in support thereof.[69] Error in submitting to the jury the right to recover for improvements of one who has parted with his interest is harmless where he recovers nothing.[70] A verdict giving to each defendant the same amount for improvements is unwarranted where there is sufficient evidence to show that the improvements of the respective defendants are of different values.[71] Where there is a verdict for plaintiff merely for the land, and there is evidence that the value of the rents and damages is the same as the value of the improvements, it will be inferred that the jury set off one against the other.[72] Although a parol gift of land constituting part of a homestead is void, a purchaser from the donee in possession, who places improvements on the land in good faith, is entitled on a recovery of the land by the donor to a personal judgment against such donor for the value of the improvements.[73]

D. Reimbursement of Taxes Paid. The payment of taxes on land by a trespasser in possession gives him no right to reimbursement from the true owner in an action by the latter to recover possession.[74] In order for defendant to recover for taxes paid on the land in controversy, in an action of trespass to try title, he must not only prove that he paid the taxes but that plaintiff failed or neglected to pay them.[75] Where a vendor suing the vendee for land offers to do equity by refunding the price paid with interest, the vendee cannot recover taxes paid by him without showing their amount, or excepting to the vendor's offer for failure to include them.[76]

I. DEFINITION.

A trial is the judicial examination of the issues between the parties, whether they be issues of law or fact.[1]

II. NOTICE OF TRIAL AND PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS.[2]

A. Preliminary Proceedings in General. A trial without an issue is erroneous.[3] In the absence of a replication to affirmative pleas, which are not abandoned, it is error to proceed to trial on other pleas and issues,[4] over the objec-

It is error to go to trial without a plea, in the absence of counsel, although there is an affidavit of defense filed. The court, however, might have ordered the affidavit to stand as a plea. tion of defendant,[5] or in his absence.[6] But according to some decisions, if the parties appear and go to trial without making the objection that the issues are incomplete, or proceed with the trial by agreement, it will be considered, after verdict, as a waiver of this defect,[7] on the principle that parties by consent may dispense with formal written issues,[8] and, as a similiter may be put in to a plea at any stage by an attorney or by a party himself, it is not error to proceed to trial without it.[9] Where the issues are once made up, the court may ignore its order that the cause be remanded to rules to permit plaintiff to file an amended petition, if the record does not disclose the filing of such petition, and where defendant was in court at the time the trial was had and did not object thereto.[10]

B. Trial of Separate Causes at Same Time. A pending trial should be concluded before members of the jury are charged with another case. Hence, it is improper to withdraw a case after the evidence is all in, proceed to other business with some of the same jury, and afterward resume and finish.[11] However, it has been held that where the court suspends the trial of a cause, and impanels a jury, hears evidence, receives a verdict, and renders judgment in another cause, it is not a ground for reversal of a judgment in the latter cause.[12]

C. Separate Trials in Same Cause. In a civil action defendants are not entitled to a separate trial as a matter of right,[13] and this is so, although they may have pleaded different defenses.[14] Whether a severance shall be granted is in the discretion of the trial court,[15] and this discretion will not be reviewed on issue to a jury on one plea while other pleas containing new matter remain undisposed of, and defendant is absent and plaintiff is in default in pleading. Gunning v. Heron, 25 Fla. 849, 6 So. 856.

appeal,[16] unless it can be clearly seen that the discretion was abused.[17] The court will, on good cause shown, direct separate trials on separate issues between plaintiff and several defendants.[18]

D. Trial of Causes Together.[19] The court may order several causes of the same nature in which the parties are the same to be tried together;[20] and where several actions are brought by one plaintiff against different defendants, or by different plaintiffs against one defendant, and the issues are the same in each action, the court may, in order to avoid unnecessary delay and expense, order them to be tried together.[21] It has been held that the order may be made, although defendants employ different counsel, and the evidence in the several cases is different.[22] The order does not have the effect of merging the several actions into one. Its only effect is that the suits be tried together.[23] Each case retains its distinctive characteristics and the judgment in each case is several.[24] And if

Effect of special statutes.— Wis. Rev. St. § 2844, providing that a separate trial between plaintiff and any of the several defendants in an action on a joint contract may be allowed by the court whenever in its opinion justice will be thereby promoted, is inapplicable to the case where one defendant is served and the other appears voluntarily. Setting aside of severance.— Where in an action against several defendants to recover an undivided interest in lands, plaintiffs tender to any defendant claiming any particular tract the right to a severance, they cannot, after defendant has accepted a severance, and the case has so stood for years, have it set aside on the sole ground that in case of their success, difficulties might arise in the adjustment of equities if the whole controversy was not tried at the same time. Stipulation that causes be tried together.— Plaintiff having brought two actions against the same defendant on the same written guaranty, it was error to dispose of both cases on the evidence taken in one, in the absence of any stipulation that both cases should be tried together, or that the one tried should govern the other, or that the evidence taken should be considered as taken in both cases. the proceedings and judgment in either of the cases are erroneous, such error must be fatal to that judgment, although the others may be free from error.[25] It is within the discretion of the trial judge at what time to submit each case to the jury.[26] Where the defenses in the several cases are different it is erroneous to order them to be tried together.[27] But error in ordering a trial of separate causes together is harmless if the final result reached was right.[28]

E. Trial of Separate Issues[29] — 1. In General. Whether all or a part only of the issues in an action shall be tried at one time, and which shall be tried first, is a question of justice and convenience, and ordinarily a matter of fact to be determined at the trial term;[30] as is also the question whether legal or equitable issues shall be first tried.[31] But that one should be first tried which will be most likely to dispose of the whole case.[32] Where two causes of action are united in one petition, or two defenses in the same answer, one in law and one in equity, there must be separate trials;[33] but where there are several defendants the issues

Du Bose v. Kell, 76 S. C. 313, 56 S. E. 968. If a legitimate equitable counter-claim is pleaded, on the determination of which depends the prosecution of the main action, then, although an improper note of issue is filed for a special term, the equitable issues may be first tried there, on a seasonable motion being made, and the legal issues stayed until after the equitable issues had been decided. Where defendant pleads matter available as a defense either at law or in equity it is not error for the court to refuse to segregate and try the equitable issues first (Bennett v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 164 N. Y. 131, 58 N. E. 7 [affirming 26 N. Y. App. Div. 363, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 833]; Sweeney v. Pacific Coast El. Co., 14 Wash. 562, 45 Pac. 151); although the defense is presented in the guise of an equitable counter-claim and the statute provides that where there is a counter-claim, the nature of the counter-claim shall determine the manner of trial (Bennett v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 18 N. Y. App. Div. 410, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 459).

must be so tried that each defendant will have an opportunity to be heard on all the matters affecting his interests.[34] Error in the order of trial of issues will not be ground for reversal where no prejudice resulted therefrom.[35]

2. Matters in Abatement.[36] Objections like the denial of plaintiff's right to sue should be heard before the merits are reached, so as to prevent unnecessary costs and delay;[37] but it is to a great degree a matter of discretion with the trial court whether an issue upon a plea in abatement should be submitted to the jury together with the issue upon the merits,[38] unless tried together by consent.[39] If the issue on the plea in abatement appears to the court to be important, it should be first tried and found before evidence is heard on the merits.[40] The question of the final liability of one defendant cannot be submitted to the jury in connection with and as determining a plea to the jurisdiction.[41]

3. Issues of Law and Fact. Where there are issues of law and issues of fact raised by the pleadings, the issues of law should be determined before proceeding to the determination of the issues of fact,[42] and this is so on new trial, although the issues of fact have once been tried.[43]

F. Notice of Trial and Note of Issue[44] — 1. In General. In the absence of statute providing otherwise, the parties to a cause, when the court has properly obtained jurisdiction over them, are not entitled to a notice of the trial, or of fixing a day for trial,[45] other than the setting of the case on the docket.[46] But where an order in a cause provides that the same shall be heard in vacation on a day to be fixed by the judge of which notice shall be given to the counsel of all the parties, the judge is without jurisdiction to proceed when neither the party nor his counsel has received the notice.[47]

2. UNDER STATUTES AND RULES — a. United States. Under the federal practice, an amended answer unless stricken out by the court nullifies a notice of trial served by plaintiff before the amendment,[48] but a continuance from term to term by consent does not.[49]

b. California. Under the California statutes five days' notice of the setting of a cause for trial is required,[50] and dismissal of the cause for failure of plaintiff to appear on the trial, without any showing that such notice has been given, is reversible error.[51]

c. Connecticut. In Connecticut the filing by plaintiff of a request for entry of an action on the jury docket, after thirty days from the return-day, is insufficient to warrant placing the cause on the jury docket then, but such request not having been recalled was a continuing authority, and plaintiff was not required to file another request within ten days after joinder of issue of fact.[52]

d. Florida. Under the statutes of Florida, where issue was joined on all of defendant's pleas except one, as to which motion to strike had been filed before the beginning of a term of court, and the cause had not been entered on the trial docket by reason of the pending motion, the trial court could, after disposing of the motion, order the case placed on the trial docket for the term.[53]

e. Illinois. Under the Illinois statutes, the notice of trial is not invalid because the cause is not tried on the first day on which it appears on the calendar, the calendar being continuous.[54] Under rules of court in Cook county, the notice must be served on the opposite party, or his attorneys, or someone representing them.[55]

f. Iowa. In Iowa, under a rule that the court may, in its discretion, by order entered of record, permit notices of trial to be entered at a certain time, the order need not be general but may be restricted to a particular case.[56] Under a rule, providing that a case once continued, where an answer is on file, a ten days' notice must be given prior to the term at which the party desires the cause to be tried, causes in which the answer is filed subsequently to the continuance are not included.[57]

g. Michigan. The Michigan statutes provide for a written notice of trial to be served fourteen days before the first day of the term at which the cause is to be tried.[58] If it states that the cause will be brought on for hearing at the next term of court, it is not inoperative because not dated.[59] It cannot be served until after the return-day in the writ.[60] It must be signed by the party or attorney giving it,[61] and may be served by mail on a party who appears in person.[62]

h. Minnesota. Under the Minnesota statutes, the term for which a notice of trial may be given includes a special term as well as a general term.[63] Where, after the commencement of an action, defendants and their attorneys remove from the state the notice may be served on the attorney at his place of residence in the state to which he has removed.[64] An amendment of the pleadings, of a cause at issue, which has been duly noticed and placed on the calendar, does not necessitate another notice of trial.[65] A cause not tried at the term for which it is noticed need not be noticed for a subsequent term, but where an appeal is taken from an order granting a new trial, pending which the proceedings are stayed, upon affirmance a new notice is necessary.[66] An error in the notice will not invalidate it if it does not mislead the opposite party.[67]

i. Montana. Under the rules of the district court in Montana attorneys residing at the county-seat, as well as those residing elsewhere, interested in a case and not present at the setting thereof, must be notified by the clerk of the setting thereof.[68]

j. New Jersey. Under the New Jersey statutes, the provision for short notice of trial refers to cases in which defendant asks the favor.[69] Where defendant is not misled thereby notice may be given to his attorney of record after a lapse of several years, although such attorney is then clerk of the county.[70] If given to plaintiff personally, and left at the office of his attorney who has been absent from the state one year, it is sufficient.[71] Plaintiff's oath is sufficient to prove service of the notice.[72] If mailed, proof of mailing, by depositing in the post-office properly directed, is prima facie proof of service, but may be repelled by the affidavit of the attorney to whom it was directed stating that it was not received.[73]

k. New York — (i) NOTICE OF TRIAL. The New York statutes require notice of trial to be served fourteen days, or in case it is given by mail sixteen days, before the term at which the cause is to be tried.[74] A deposit of the notice in the post-office at any hour of the day, without regard to the closing or departure of the mail, is sufficient,[75] and, if the notice is properly mailed, the fact that it

Suppl. 109. But where, without objection in the presence of both parties, a day is fixed for trial so that plaintiff may examine defendant before trial, and defendant consents to the examination, plaintiff is not entitled to a notice of trial from defendant. Haven v. Meteer, 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 617, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 192.

Shortening time of notice.— The court has no power to shorten the time of notice required by statute over a party's objection; and judgment entered against him on such short notice is irregular and should be vacated without imposing conditions. Grindal v. De Lano, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 823, 21 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 224.

Waiver of proceedings under previous notice.—Where, before the close of a circuit at which a cause is pending, it is noticed for a subsequent circuit, the notice should contain a reservation to the effect that the cause will nevertheless be tried at the current circuit, if reached; otherwise the adverse party may treat the motion as a waiver of proceedings under previous notices of trial. Effect of want of notice.— In the absence of notice of trial and note of issue, an order directing the clerk to place the cause on the trial term calendar as of its date of issue, which order contained no provision for the filing of notice of trial or note of issue, is unauthorized. is not received does not affect the right of the court to make an order of reference thereon.[76] The notice of trial must be given for the same term at which the note of issue is filed,[77] and this statutory requirement cannot be evaded by the stipulation of attorneys.[78] It cannot be served before joinder of issue,[79] and is premature if served before answer, although the answer is served on the same day.[80] The court has no power to relieve a party where notice has not been filed in time.[81] Plaintiff has a reasonable time after the issues are made up to prepare for trial and is not required to bring the case on for trial until such time.[82] If he then fails to bring it on, defendant should bring it on.[83] If proper notice has been served, and the attorney of the opposite party declines to receive the same, the proper practice is to bring the case on for trial and not to file a motion to compel the attorney to receive the notice.[84] The notice must identify the cause to which it relates.[85] In determining its sufficiency, the court will inquire whether the party has been misled thereby.[86] It is sufficient, where in fact it has not misled, if it correctly specifies the term, although incorrectly stating the day of the commencement thereof.[87] Where several defendants appear, each is entitled to notice and the court cannot dispense with it;[88] but where of several defendants some plead and others default, the cause may be noticed before an interlocutory judgment is taken as to the defendants in default.[89] Where the notice is irregular, the party receiving it should return it promptly.[90] Where an amended pleading is served after service of the notice of trial and filing of note of issue, a new notice of trial must be served and a new note of issue filed,[91] although the pleading be an answer not setting up a counter-claim,[92] or, the amendment be in the amount of damages asked,[93] or, in changing the venue,[94] or, although the amendment creates no new issues between the original parties, if it brings in new parties,[95] unless the court, as a condition of permitting the amendment, orders the case to retain its place on the calendar,[96] or, unless the court is satisfied that the amendment is made in bad faith.[97] But the fact that the time for amending pleadings has not expired, at the time of noticing for trial, will not invalidate the notice, if in fact no amended pleading is actually served.[98] If served at a time when all proceedings are stayed by an order of court it is invalid.[99] When a trial, entered upon, has been discontinued to permit the bringing in of another party,[1] or to permit an amended pleading to be filed, where the order does not dispense with a new notice, a new notice of trial is necessary.[2] It is too late to make objection for the first time to a want of a new notice after an amendment of the pleadings when the case appears for the second time on the calendar.[3] Although a case was ready to be noticed for trial when notice was served, new issues created by the subsequent service of a reply must be noticed for trial before the cause can be placed on the calendar for trial.[4] Where defendant appeared by a firm of attorneys, the notice may be served on the survivor of such firm, although no substitution has been made.[5] If the cause is not placed on the calendar at the term for which the notice is given, an inquest cannot be taken at a subsequent term upon that notice.[6]

(II) NOTE OF ISSUE. The note of issue should show what the issue for trial is,[7] and state the day and term for which the notice of trial has been given.[8] It must be filed at least two days before the commencement of the term for which the case is noticed for trial, or the case will be stricken from the calendar,[9] and

Waiver of objections.— By answering under an extension granted on condition that the issue be of date of the original time for answering, and that plaintiff be permitted to serve short notice of trial for the next succeeding term, and afterward amending as of course, and retaining in the meanwhile a notice of trial served before answering, defendant waived any objection that the notice of trial was inapplicable to issues made by pleadings served after the notice. it cannot be filed before the cause has been noticed for trial.[10] A fee of three dollars is required on filing a note of issue in certain of the New York courts, and it will not be refunded, although the action be discontinued.[11]

l. North Dakota. The North Dakota statutes provide for notice of trial and note of issue preliminary to bringing an issue to trial, and this although the cause has been on the trial calendar on an issue of law.[12] If the notice correctly states the month and year, it is immaterial that it contains an error in the date of the commencement of the term.[13]

m. Pennsylvania. In Pennsylvania, under rule, parties are entitled to notice of trial.[14] Where plaintiff gives the notice, it is not necessary for defendant to do so likewise;[15] but, defendant claiming a set-off, must give the ten days' notice as well as plaintiff;[16] and, if the same is to be proved by acknowledgment of the party, he must so expressly state in the notice, otherwise he will be compelled to bring an action for the matter claimed as a set-off.[17] Where the requirements have been complied with a party is entitled to proceed to trial in the absence of the opposite party, although such party had in fact no notice of the date of trial.[18]

n. South Carolina. Under the South Carolina statutes notice, if by mail, must be served sixty days before the day fixed by law for the commencement of the term.[19]

o. South Dakota. Under the South Dakota statutes the filing of an amended complaint necessitates a new notice of trial and note of issue.[20] When the case is reached on the calendar, after having been properly noticed by defendant, he is entitled to a trial thereof, or to a dismissal of the complaint.[21] Notice of trial operates as a withdrawal of a demurrer to the answer.[22]

p. Utah. Under rule providing that the clerk should make up a trial calendar before each term, including all cases at issue noticed for the term prior to the making up of the calendar, that notice of the placing of any case upon the calendar might be made by serving the opposite party with a copy thereof, and that cases not placed upon the calendar under the rule should not be heard except for good cause shown, either plaintiff's attorney or defendant's attorney must serve the notice before each term of court to entitle the case to be tried at that term, or, in the absence of the notice, a special order of the court must be made setting it for trial.[23]

Neglect of clerk.—An affidavit of a party's attorney to the effect that the failure to file a note of issue was due to the neglect of a clerk to comply with instructions so to do, when unaccompanied with the name of the clerk, or reasons why the affidavit of such clerk was not presented by him showing how the omission occurred, was insufficient to justify an order placing the cause on the general calendar for trial. q. Washington. The Washington statutes requiring notice of trial contemplate notice that the cause will be set for trial and not notice of the time when the cause will be tried.[24]

r. Wisconsin. Under the Wisconsin statutes either party may notice a cause for trial after it is at issue and the failure of plaintiff so to do is not a cause for nonsuit.[25] A party who has not noticed a cause for trial cannot compel his adversary who has so noticed it to proceed with the trial.[26] All defendants who have appeared in the case are entitled to notice.[27] A mistake in the notice, if it does not mislead, does not vitiate it.[28]

s. Canada. In Canada the time for serving notice of trial is regulated by the practice of the superior courts of common law in England.[29] Notice of trial is essential in interpleader and feigned issues as in ordinary cases,[30] and is necessary, although the cause is referred to the county court sittings by an order made in the queen's bench.[31] It cannot be given before the cause is at issue,[32] or while it is pending on appeal.[33] Where defendant has time to plead de novo, a new notice of trial is required;[34] but not so where it is postponed by order of the judge on defendant's application.[35] If a new trial is granted upon payment of costs, notice of trial cannot be given before the costs are paid.[36] It may be given before an order of revivor is confirmed, if given after the order is made and for a day later than that of the confirmation of the order,[37] or given pending a summons to dismiss an action for breach of an order to examine, where the judge who granted the summons struck out the part relating to stay, and the summons was afterward enlarged without any mention of a stay.[38] The time prescribed by rule for giving notice of trial cannot be shortened except by consent, or unless short notice of trial is imposed as a term of granting an indulgence.[39] Short notice of necessity has reference to the state of the cause and not the convenience of the parties.[40] Sundays and holidays are excluded in computing five days necessary for short notice.[41] The first day is excluded and the last day included.[42] The notice must be served on the solicitor personally, notice to his clerk,[43] or by shoving it under the door of his office,[44] being insufficient. If a mistake in a notice is such that it cannot mislead defendant's attorney it will not vitiate the notice.[45] An application to set aside a notice for irregularity must be made without delay,[46] and before trial.[47] The notice is merely irregular if it states the wrong venue,[48] or is signed by one partner of plaintiff's attorneys when the other partner appears as attorney of record,[49] or where the pleadings are not closed.[50]

3. WAIVER OF NOTICE OR IRREGULARITIES THEREIN. Notice of trial [51] or irregularities therein [52] may be waived. a cause will be presumed to be there in pursuance of law in the absence of any showing to the contrary.[62] If omitted from the printed docket by mistake a cause will be ordered placed thereon.[63] But where the statute requires some action by the clerk to place the cause on the calendar, it is not properly for trial without such action.[64] Where issues are made up at the same time the clerk should regard the directions of plaintiff's counsel as to the order in which the cases should be docketed.[65] Where notice within a given time is required to entitle a cause to a place on the calendar, a party is not entitled to have it placed thereon by showing that although the notice was not given his clerk was instructed to give the same.[66] Upon failure of plaintiff to docket a cause within the time prescribed by law, defendant may docket the same.[67] Issues against separate garnishees, no joint indebtedness to defendant being alleged, cannot be docketed as one suit.[68] The court has some discretion in the regulation of its calendar.[69] Where the court consists of divisions, the control of the docket is entirely with the judge of the division to which the cause is assigned.[70] Where suits identical in every respect are filed for the purpose of obtaining the allotment of one of them to a certain division of the court, the first assignment of one will carry the others to the same division.[71] Where a petition combines a legal and an equitable cause of action, the clerk cannot place it on the jury calendar over defendant's objection.[72] A party in default cannot complain that a cause was improperly docketed.[73] A cause retaining its place on the docket by a subterfuge of the parties should upon discovery of the subterfuge be sent to the foot of the docket.[74] An objection to an irregularity in the allotment of a case must be timely made, otherwise it is waived.[75] The objection that a case is improperly on the docket comes too late if made for the first time on the day of trial.[76] It is likewise waived by an application to adjourn the trial,[77] or by a consent to a reference.[78]

Special and criminal terms.— It is provided by Va. Code, c. 158, § 33, that at any special term any civil cause may be tried which could lawfully have been, but was not, tried at the last preceding regular term (Patton v. Hoge, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 443); but under Conn. Gen. St. (1902) § 454, no contested issue can be tried at a special session of the superior court except by written agreement of the parties or their counsel, unless twenty days' notice of the time and place of such session shall be given (O'Keefe v. Scovill Mfg. Co., 78 Conn. 286, 61 Atl. 961). Under the Pennsylvania act of April 10, 1782, passed with the intention of accelerating trials by providing for the calling of a special court, a joint defendant is entitled to such a court, although he has a resident partner who could remain to defend the cause, and who did not join in the application. Ex p. Holker, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 111, 1 L. ed. 311. On the other hand, it is held that a special court will not be ordered on the ground that one of plaintiffs has assigned all his interest to the other, and that the latter is about to depart from the country. Kunckel v. Baker, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 169, 1 L. ed. 85. It seems that a court may set aside a court rule providing for separate civil and criminal terms, and try civil causes at a criminal term. Co., 51 Fla. 198, 41 So. 398, holding that the Florida circuit court rules expressly confer upon the court power to hear and dispose of a demurrer during the term it is filed, in its discretion.

The fixing of a time in vacation for the trial of a cause is within the express powers, conferred by the Indiana statute, upon a judge granting a change of venue. Aurora F. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 46 Ind. 315 [followed in Germania Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 46 Ind. 331]. In Georgia such a time may be fixed for the hearing of a cause only with the consent of and notice to the parties. Dixon v. Hawkins, 100 Ga. 5, 27 S. E. 188.

Proceeding with the trial in defendant's absence is no abuse of discretion, where defendant's counsel have been notified by letter both under and independently of statute, an action can neither legally be tried nor assigned for trial until issue is joined [82] and the parties are afforded opportunity to prepare their proof.[83] While it is reversible error to compel a party to go to trial, over his objection, at a term during which the action is not legally triable,[84] the time of trial is often fixed by stipulation of parties,[85] and a party is held to waive irregularities relating to the time of trial when he fails to object thereto at the earliest opportunity.[86] In this connection, it seems that a party of the day set for hearing. Richards v. Enlow Cattle Co., 5 Nebr. (Unoff.) 327, 98 N. W. 659.

82. Smith v. Redmond, 141 Iowa 105, 119 N. W. 271; Dougherty v. Porter, 18 Kan. 206, holding that St. (1871) c. 116, § 5, directing that actions shall be triable at the first term after issues have been made up ten days, means ten days after issues have actually been made up, and not after they should have been. And see Forwood v. Forwood, 67 S. W. 842, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 18, holding that the fact that the answer of an intervener is made a cross petition does not postpone the time of trial, where such cross petition does not change the only issue in the case.

Trial during same term.— Under Nebr. Code Civ. Proc. § 281*a*, an action may be tried at the same term at which issues have been joined. Osgood v. Grant, 44 Nebr. 350, 62 N. W. 894. In West Virginia, on the other hand, no case not matured and ready for trial before the commencement of a term can be tried at such term. Higginbotham v. Haselden, 3 W. Va. 266. The Kansas statutes have been construed to mean that an issue at law is triable at any time, but that an issue of fact is not triable at the term of court at which it is joined, over the objection of a party to the action, unless such issue of fact is joined by permission of the court upon the overruling of a demurrer adjudged to be frivolous. Eureka v. Ross, 64 Kan. 372, 67 Pac. 849 [following Gapen v. Stephenson, 18 Kan. 140].

Delay of one term.— Under the practice of some jurisdictions, the parties are entitled to a term, after the pleadings and issues have been made up, to prepare for trial, and a cause is not triable, except by consent, until after such term has elapsed. Elliot v. Solzkotter, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 581; Boyer v. Roberts, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,754, 1 Cranch C. C. 73.

The filing of amended pleadings, however, does not change or postpone the time of trial (Wells v. Wells, 118 Ga. 812, 45 S. E. 669; Swope v. Burnham, 6 Okla. 736, 52 Pac. 924), and it is not reversible error to proceed immediately thereafter with the trial (Taylor v. Hosick, 13 Kan. 518; Burkholder v. Farmers' Bank, 67 S. W. 832, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2449), especially where the adverse party does not ask for a continuance (Quigley v. Beam, 137 Ky. 325, 125 S. W. 727). The filing of a petition for equitable relief, as ancillary to a statutory garnishment proceeding, is nothing more in effect than an amendment of the original cause of action and does not necessarily postpone the trial of the case. Gunn v. Gunn, 103 Ga. 607, 30 S. E. 541.

The distance of the subject-matter from the place of trial is only one of the elements to be considered in determining whether the parties are afforded ample opportunity for preparation, and is not of itself conclusive that sufficient opportunity has not been afforded. And see Huffman v. Hardeman, (Tex. 1886) 1 S. C. Order of Calling and Hearing Causes — 1. In General. A cause cannot be heard, in opposition to the wishes of either party, before it stands regularly for hearing,[88] and causes should ordinarily be tried in the order in which they are entered on the trial docket.[89] But the court has power and discretion to take up a case out of the regular order,[90] for good cause,[91] provided the parties are not prejudiced thereby,[92] and a cause may properly thus be taken up to prevent a continuance by reason of anticipated absence of leading counsel.[93] After a cause is once regularly set for hearing, it may be reset without regard for priority,[94] and

Trial of part of case.—A court cannot try part of a case before it is called in its turn and leave the remainder untried. Gerber v. Marzoni, 3 Rob. (La.) 370.

Assignment for hearing.—A rule providing that the court may on the first day of the term make an assignment of the trial causes, which shall fix the day of the term on which each case shall be tried, does not require the court to make assignments. Slocum v. Brown, 105 Iowa 209, 74 N. W. 936.

89. Osgood v. Grant, 44 Nebr. 350, 62 N. W. 894.

Harmless error.— Under Rev. St. (1895) art. 1287, providing that suits shall be called for trial in the order in which they stand on the docket unless otherwise ordered by the court, it not being shown that defendant has any meritorious defense, a judgment rendered for plaintiff will not be reversed because the suit was called for trial out of its regular order. Bartlett v. S. M. Jones Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 103 S. W. 705.

90. Bonney v. McClelland, 138 Ill. App. 449 [affirmed in 235 Ill. 259, 85 N. E. 242]; Fergus v. Miln, 128 Ill. App. 434; Ramseyer v. Heissler, etc., Co., 60 Ill. App. 317; French v. Howard, 14 Ind. 455; Cooley v. Seymour, 9 La. 274.

Application of rule.— About ten months after beginning a suit, and almost five months after suing out an attachment and levying on property of a defendant, plaintiff, on demand of defendants on a notice of almost a month, was compelled to go to trial. Defendants admitted in open court that all of the witnesses whose attendance plaintiff said on a motion for a continuance was necessary and desirable at the trial would testify, as plaintiffs in their affidavit had claimed. It was held that there was no abuse of discretion in advancing the cause for trial. Fergus v. Miln, 128 Ill. App. 434. So it has been held not erroneous to advance a cause for trial out of its regular place on the calendar, where no showing was made against the motion to advance it, and where it had been pending nearly nine years, and there had been two previous trials. O. S. Richardson Fueling Co. v. Seymour, 235 Ill. 319, 85 N. E. 496.

The power may be exercised with the consent of all counsel interested in cases on the docket (Hines v. Brunswick, etc., R. Co., 51 Ga. 218); or where it appears from the record that there is no defense (Matthews v. Bates, 93 Ga. 317, 20 S. E. 320; Duggar v. Lackey, 85 Ga. 631, 11 S. E. 1025).

Consolidated actions.— The order in which consolidated actions shall be tried is in the discretion of the trial court, and its ruling is not reviewable. Jones v. Jones, 94 N. C. 111.

Moving papers.—An affidavit of facts showing that the defense is made in good faith so as to entitle the cause to hearing on the regular call of the docket must not only show good faith but a good defense as well. Titsworth v. Hyde, 54 Ill. 386.

A call of the docket for the purpose of continuing all cases except such as are undefended is a regular call of the docket as to an undefended case. Collins v. Gauche, 23 Ark. 646.

Notice to parties of advancement of cause. —The court having power under Pr. Act, § 16 (Hurd Rev. St. (1905) c. 110, § 17), to advance a cause on the docket for trial, plaintiff is presumed to know that it might make such an order, and both parties are bound to take notice of the action of the court, and special notice is not required in the absence of statute or rule of court requiring it. Bonney v. McClelland, 235 Ill. 259, 85 N. E. 242 [affirming 138 Ill. App. 449].

upon a day upon which a cause has been properly set for trial,[95] or thereafter,[96] and the court may pass over intervening cases and try the case. Where the statute requires cases to be called in their order, the court thus calling them may set cases ready for trial on a day thereafter.[97] A statute providing that the court may for good and sufficient reason order a cause heard out of the regular order confers on the court a wide discretion,[98] and what is a good and sufficient reason is for the trial court to determine, which determination will not be reviewed unless the trial court has grossly abused its discretion.[99] But such statute does not confer power upon the court by rule to permit cases generally to be taken up and disposed of out of the regular order.[1] In the absence of acts amounting to a waiver of error, where a case has been improperly called a judgment rendered therein should be set aside.[2] But error in advancing a cause on the docket,[3] and trying it out of its order,[4] is waived by consenting to go to trial.

2. The Short Cause Calendar — a. In Illinois. The Illinois statutes provide a short cause calendar, on which cases, for the trial of which not more than one hour is required, may be placed upon ten days' notice to the opposite party and upon filing an affidavit that the cause will not occupy more than one hour's time.[5] Unless the affidavit is filed, it is error to place the cause upon such calendar.[6] Personal service of the notice on defendant, his agent or attorney is required.[7] Where the last day of the notice falls on a Sunday, defendant will be entitled to no further time.[8] It is not necessary to serve a copy of the affidavit, and if the same is served a mistake therein is not ground for complaint, unless someone has been injured thereby.[9] If, upon receiving the notice, the adverse party has any Presumption as to time of placing on calendar.— Where it does not appear when a cause made its first appearance on a short cause calendar, the fact that it was not called for trial for more than a month after the service of notice raises a presumption that the clerk did not put the case on the calendar till after the lapse of ten days from the service of the notice. objection to the suit going upon such calendar, he must appear and make his objection known.[10] An objection to the notice, or to any irregularity in its service, comes too late when the case is reached for trial.[11] The cause must be at issue before it is noticed for trial on the short cause calendar,[12] otherwise it should be stricken from the calendar;[13] but a motion to strike a cause from the short cause calendar must be made in apt time[14] and based on sufficient grounds,[15] otherwise any grounds of objection for trying the case on the short cause calendar are waived.[16] A suit stricken from a short cause calendar because of an arrangement for a settlement may be properly restored to the short cause calendar in case of failure of the settlement.[17] The beneficial plaintiff being entitled to control the action may have the cause stricken from the short cause calendar when placed there by the nominal plaintiff without his consent.[18] Much discretion is reposed in the trial judge as to what he will do in respect to allowing causes to remain upon, be tried on, or be stricken off the short cause calendar;[19] and it is within his discretion to keep on with the trial of a cause on such calendar after more than one hour has been consumed in its trial,[20] even though the trial occupy half a day.[21] Monday of each week is by rule of court set apart for trial of causes on the short cause calendar, but this does not prevent the court from continuing the hearing of such cases from day to day if necessary in order to clear the docket.[22] The calendar is personal to each judge, and a continuance takes the case from the calendar.[23] A consent to the trial of a cause when reached on such calendar is a waiver of any error in overruling a motion previously made to strike the case

from such calendar.[24] Where a cause has been placed on the short cause calendar, it cannot again properly appear on the regular trial calendar until placed there by order based on notice to the opposite party, or his counsel; and this is true notwithstanding the cause has been stricken from the short cause calendar "without prejudice." [25]

b. In New York. In New York the power of a trial court to order an action to be taken from its regular place on the calendar, and placed on a short cause calendar for speedy trial, if justice so requires, is recognized,[26] the statutory provisions for preferring causes on the calendar not being exclusive; [27] but the fact that a case is entitled to a preference thereunder does not determine its right to a place on the short cause calendar.[28] An order which places a cause on the special calendar of short causes for trial must be served on the opposite party before the action can be brought to trial under it. If such service is omitted, and an inquest taken under the order, the inquest will be set aside on motion.[29] One day's notice of such order is sufficient.[30] A motion to transfer a case to such calendar will be denied, where the moving affidavit admits that it will be necessary to examine several witnesses on the part of the moving party, and the affidavit of the opposite party states that he will be obliged to examine at least six witnesses.[31] Where the record of the cause will determine the issue, it is error to refuse to place such cause on such calendar.[32] It is no abuse of discretion to set for trial on the short cause calendar on defendant's motion, an action for breach of contract of employment, because it would cut off plaintiff from obtaining the damages he might have obtained, had the trial of the case been delayed until it could have been tried on the regular calendar.[33] An order placing a cause on the short cause calendar should not be granted a party where he has failed to pay motion costs awarded to his opponent by a prior general term of court.[34]

3. Preferred Causes — a. In General. A trial court may, in its discretion, for good and sufficient cause, direct that a case be advanced and tried out of the regular order on the docket.[35] It is sufficient reason for preferring a case that the property in dispute is held in the interest of a municipal corporation, and that not sufficient that the notice of trial contains an allegation that plaintiff claims a preference and states the ground of such claim.[65] The application to prefer the cause cannot be entertained at chambers, but must be made at the opening of the court;[66] and unless made on the day for which the notice is given, the right to preference is lost.[67] It must be made at the commencement of the term for which the notice of trial is served,[68] although the notice of trial was not followed by a note of issue.[69] Failure to move at the proper time is fatal to the right of preference,[70] and cannot be cured by again noticing the case for trial for a later term and making the motion at the opening thereof.[71] Nor can the right be revived by an amendment of the complaint which does not change the cause of action.[72] The right to a preference is not lost by not applying for it during the time when a stay order and order requiring security for costs are in effect.[73] It is not necessary that a case be on the calendar when the notice of trial and application for preference are served,[74] nor that plaintiff notice his cause for the first term after issue,[75] the only condition prescribed being that the notice of application should be served with notice of trial, and that the application should be made at the term at which it is noticed.[76] Where the right to give a cause a preference on the trial calendar does not appear from the pleadings, the order giving the preference should be obtained before notice of trial, and served either before or with the notice, otherwise the right to preference is waived.[77] An application for preference is one addressed to the discretion of the court, and to the end that it should be exercised favorably or unfavorably to the applicant, some facts should be presented to the court other than that the case is one that might be preferred, and it is not sufficient that the pleadings disclose that it is a case which from the nature of the action might be preferred.[78] A preference cannot be granted until all issues of fact are made up.[79] It should not be granted merely because there is no opposition.[80] Causes entitled to preference are entitled to preference over causes on the calendar for the term at which the preference is moved, and not, unless for good cause shown, over issues on preceding calendars awaiting trial;[81] but if the court does prefer the same over issues on preceding calendars, the action of the court will not be interfered with, although seemingly without justification.[82] In case the pleadings are amended after order granting preference, a new notice of trial and note of issue are required.[83] If it appears to the judge that something has occurred since the cause was put on the preferred calendar which renders it

Application of rule.— Where an action for the death of an infant was brought by his administrator, the mere fact that the infant was of tender years and was killed while playing in an air shaft into which defendant caused certain material to fall does not entitle plaintiff to a preference under Code Civ. c. Under Rules of Court. A rule which permits a plaintiff in certain cases, on affidavit that the defense is merely for delay, and on five days' notice, to bring up his cause for trial, contravenes no constitutional enactment.[86] A failure by a defendant to verify a special plea by his own affidavit, when the plea is not by law required to be so verified, is not a cause for trying a case out of its order under such rule.[87] Where a rule of practice provides that an action may be preferred if defendant be imprisoned under an order of arrest in an action, or if the property of defendant be held under attachment, it may be preferred at the instance of plaintiff as well as at the instance of defendant; [88] but plaintiff is not entitled to a preference under such rule where defendant has given bail and been discharged from arrest.[89] Under the rules in New York city, actions brought for the foreclosure of mortgages or mechanics' liens may be placed on the preferred calendar, on application, where it appears to the court that the trial will not be a protracted one, or that for any special reason the case should be promptly disposed of.[90] Under these same rules, all issues and special proceedings to be tried by jury, and any issue in an equity action as to which parties are entitled by law to a jury trial, are to be placed on a special calendar; and as to these cases and issues it is not necessary to claim a preference in the notice for trial or to make an application for preference, but the application may be made at any time after service of notice of trial and placing the case on the calendar,[91] upon two days' notice.[92] A rule giving a preference to all equity cases is not applicable when an action at law has become an equitable one by interpleader proceedings.[93] Applications under the rules need not conform to the requirements prescribed for applications under the statutes.[94]

Sufficiency of order of transfer.—An order "that this cause is stricken from the equity docket, per ordinary docket," entered upon a motion in proper form to transfer the case to the ordinary docket, is sufficient to show the court's intention to so transfer the case, it being thereafter treated by both parties as an ordinary action. Change from equitable to legal action.—Where a cause of action to foreclose an equitable lien is properly brought in equity, defendant is not entitled to have it transferred to the law docket, although by giving bond he releases the lien and reduces plaintiff's claim to a mere money demand. Failure of the court to order the transfer in a proper case on motion of a party is error.[3] But if neither party moves to transfer, and the cause is not transferred on the court's own motion, it is the duty of the court to render judgment according to the rights of the parties.[4] Where courts of law and equity have concurrent jurisdiction of the issues raised by the answer or cross bill the cause should not be transferred to the equity docket,[5] but judgment will not be reversed because of such transfer unless prejudice appears.[6] So, if the decision of the issues in an action at law would be decisive of those raised on an equitable counter-claim, a transfer of the cause to the equity docket is properly refused.[7] Likewise, where the controversy is not of equitable cognizance a motion to transfer it to the equity docket should be refused;[8] and the transfer of the action to the equity docket is error,[9] and does not confer jurisdiction,[10] unless the transfer is made by consent of parties, in which event the equity court may render a law judgment therein.[11] However, the error is not prejudicial if there is no disputed question of fact for the jury to pass on,[12] or if the court arrived at the only result which could have been reached on a trial by jury.[13] Similarly, where the controversy is of equitable cognizance, a motion to transfer it to the law docket should be refused,[14] and the transfer of such cause to the law docket is error.[15] Where, in an equity proceeding, the greater part of the testimony had been taken by depositions, many of which could not have been used in a trial at law, the court acted within its discretion in refusing, after the evidence was taken for a determination of the case in equity, to transfer it to the law docket for trial.[16] It is not error to refuse to transfer to the equity docket a case involving the question of the existence of a partnership, although on it being determined that a partnership existed between the parties it will be necessary to transfer the case to the equity docket and have the partnership settled.[17]

Applications of rule.—Where defendant in a damage suit settled with plaintiff, and paid him the entire proceeds of the settlement, notwithstanding notice of an attorney's lien for fifty per cent of the amount that might be received from defendant, an action by the attorneys to enforce their lien against defendant in the damage suit is an action at law, and a motion to transfer the cause to the equity calendar was properly denied. in a legal action, may be had on motion of either party,[19] although the court is not bound to make such transfer unless requested.[20] However, the court may on its own motion make such transfer,[21] and proceed to try the cause, in accordance with the principles involved, either equitable or legal, as set up in the pleadings.[22] Before the transfer of a legal issue in an equity cause can be made to the ordinary docket, either party may require every equitable issue to be first disposed of,[23] unless the exercise of equitable jurisdiction is made to depend on the result of the legal issues, in which event the transfer may be made at once.[24] Where the equitable issue is transferred, the legal claim should be tried by the jury in the ordinary action and if the judgment is in favor of the claim, it may be suspended until the determination of the equitable issue.[25] When a suit is commenced by ordinary petition and an answer or cross bill sets up an equitable defense, either party has the right, by motion, to have such issues as were, prior to the adoption of the code, exclusively cognizable in chancery tried in the manner prescribed in cases of equitable proceedings and to have the suit transferred to the proper docket,[26] a refusal on the part of the court to do so being error;[27] or the court may of its own motion transfer the cause.[28] Where no motion to transfer is made,

Showing grounds for change.—In a suit to recover possession of real estate, defendant's claim to transfer the case to the equity docket was properly refused, where he did not state the nature of his equitable defense, and it being inferable that he depended on a title bond, there was no suggestion that it was not forfeited, or that he had paid or offered to fulfil the contract on his part. it is discretionary with the trial court to try the issue or to order it transferred.[29] If the court improperly transfers legal with equitable issues, and rightfully adjudges in favor of an equitable defense to the action, it may properly refuse to retransfer the legal issues to the ordinary docket, because the action has been defeated and there is nothing to try at law.[30] Where the grounds of a motion to transfer a cause from the chancery to the law court are not established on the face of the pleadings proof must be taken and presented to the court upon the question.[31]

3. Time For Moving Transfer. The motion to transfer the cause should be made at the time of filing the answer to the original petition,[32] and cannot be made until after the answer is filed.[33] In case there is an unreasonable delay,[34] the motion should be overruled. It comes too late after several orders have been made in the cause,[35] after the cause has been noticed for trial by both parties,[36] or if not made until fifteen months after the institution of the suit,[37] or after the case had been prepared for trial[38] or after one trial of the cause,[39] after the jury has been impaneled,[40] after the trial has progressed for two days and a half,[41] or after a cause is submitted for trial and proof taken[42] or partly taken,[43] unless the party moving is for the first time by the evidence apprised of the facts affecting the jurisdiction.[44]

4. Waiver of Error in Transfer. Error in transferring a cause from the law to the equity docket is waived if not objected to at the time.[45] Such error is also waived if at the trial plaintiff expressly declines a hearing before a jury,[46] or consents to the transfer.[47] But merely going to trial does not waive the error of the court in thus changing the form of action.[48]

E. Striking Cause From Docket or Calendar. Where the court discovers that it has no jurisdiction of a cause,[49] or that the interests of all parties have become vested in one of the parties thereto,[50] it should strike it from its docket. Such action does not place the cause out of court, so that it cannot again be brought before the court in some mode,[51] but merely suspends further proceedings till some other steps are taken by which a final disposition thereof can be made.[52] The fact that an attorney agreed to give notice of all proceedings to his adversary does not bind the court to permit a cause to remain on its docket when reached in the absence of such notice.[53] Upon a motion to strike the cause from the calendar, the court will not consider questions going to the merits of the action,[54] or defects of form in the note of issue.[55] Where the issue represented on the calendar was not made up before the case was placed on the calendar,[56] or has been superseded by a new issue,[57] or is improperly on the list,[58] or a reply creating new issues is filed, on an order requiring a reply without providing that the case should remain on the calendar without further notice,[59] the cause will be stricken from the docket on motion. And an improper denial of a motion made in apt time to strike a case from the calendar, and proceeding with the trial over the protest of the objecting party, is reversible error.[60] A motion to strike from the calendar is made in time if made when the cause is reached on the day calendar;[61] otherwise, however, where made several weeks after the case has been placed on the calendar and on the day the case is called for trial;[62] or several years after a judgment in the case has been rendered and after the court has lost control of the judgment.[63] So where an action has been docketed some time before a motion to dismiss for failure to pay the docket fee is made, the motion to dismiss is properly overruled.[64] And where the clerk, of his own volition and without plaintiff's consent, left the case off the docket for a year, and after its reinstatement by order of court, defendant obtained a continuance, it was proper to refuse to strike the cause from the docket.[65] The right of plaintiff to move to strike the cause from the calendar because all necessary defendants are not before the court is waived where after receipt of defendant's notice of trial plaintiff gives notice of trial.[66] Moving to strike from the docket is not the proper manner for a defendant to obtain a jury trial in a mechanic's lien suit.[67]

F. Holding or Passing Cases Pending Engagement of Counsel. Absence of an attorney,[68] or, where there are several, of the principal attorneys,[69] is a sufficient cause for passing a cause temporarily and resetting it for trial. prejudicial error to require a party to proceed to trial in the absence of one of his counsel.[70] A verbal arrangement between counsel that a cause should not be proceeded with until counsel for defendant could appear is subject to the disposition of the case as directed by the trial judge, who has the control of the calendar, and who may insist on the action being tried when reached.[71] Where an appellate court has adopted a rule that engagements of counsel in the lower court will not be regarded as a reason for continuance or postponement of a cause in the appellate court, the lower court should not commence the trial of a cause when counsel is engaged in the supreme court.[72] There being a conflict of rules between the superior and city courts as to the engagements of counsel, the rules of the superior court govern.[73] The circuit court of the United States is a court of record in the county in which it sits within the meaning of a rule providing for the passing of a case, where counsel is engaged in the trial of a case in a court of record within the county.[74]

IV. CONDUCT OF TRIAL.[75]

A. In General. A trial according to the course of the common law is a trial before a jury under right rulings made by the trial judge in the presence of the jury.[76] All matters necessary to the proper administration of justice in a court, which are not regulated by precise rules, are within the discretion of the judge.[77] He should allow cases to be heard on their merits, wherever possible, without doing positive violence to rules of procedure and practice.[78] It is his duty to give the case such direction as will prevent a result which would be inconsistent with the law,[79] and he must conduct the proceedings on some consistent theory,[80] and rule in accordance with his best judgment on every question raised which is pertinent to the issues.[81] A case at law cannot be tried on equitable principles,[82] nor a jury case by the court without consent of the parties.[83] An equitable action tried in a court of law must be tried in accordance with the practice in jury trials.[84] Cross complaints entitling defendant to affirmative relief should be tried by substantially the same rules as a complaint.[85] A change of the presiding judge during the trial is not necessarily prejudicial error.[86] Where defendants appear jointly, plead jointly, but are represented on trial by separate counsel, only one of such counsel should be permitted to cross-examine a witness.[87] Where there are several counsel, the leader may interfere and take the examination out of the hands of the junior.[88] A party cannot be heard in person and by counsel,[89] nor can he delegate his wife to appear for him.[90] Only one counsel can be heard on each side upon the trial of a question of fact.[91]

B. Presence of Judge.[92] It is the duty of the trial judge to be present from the opening until the close of the trial.[93] This is necessary in order that he may superintend the proceedings and give protection and security to the parties interested in the trial and to restrain counsel in their arguments from traveling outside of the record or transcending the bounds of legitimate discussion.[94] If he finds it necessary to absent himself from the court when a trial is in progress, he should suspend all proceedings until he has returned.[95] It has been held that if the judge absent himself during the trial for a considerable length of time, without the consent of the parties, the judgment should be reversed.[96] And on the other hand it has been held that absence of the judge during the trial with the consent of the parties is not a ground for reversal,[97] especially where a deputized attorney is left in charge.[98] So it has been held that judgment should not be reversed because of the judge's retirement to chambers, when he could see and hear what was going on and no prejudice appears to have resulted;[99] and that the absence of the judge during trial should in no case operate as a ground for reversal where it affirmatively appears that no prejudice resulted.[1]

C. Publicity of Proceedings.[2] A statute providing for private trials of issues of fact in certain actions does not authorize the court to forbid in such cases the publication of the testimony.[3] A party is not entitled as of right to have an offer of proof made publicly to the court.[4] In England the court will order a private hearing of a cause if the parties request it;[5] but, except as to cases which relate to lunatics or wards of the court, cases in which the whole object would be defeated by a trial in public, and cases in which the practice of the ecclesiastical courts is preserved, the court has no power to order a trial in private.[6]

D. Appointment and Services of Interpreter.[7] A court has power, in its discretion,[8] independent of statute,[9] to appoint an interpreter to translate the evidence into intelligible English, and a witness may translate to the court plaintiff's book of account, kept in a foreign language.[10] The court's refusal to require an interpreter is not error unless the discretion is abused.[11]

E. Appointment and Services of Stenographer.[12] A statutory provision for taking down evidence and noting exceptions by a shorthand reporter appointed by the court is not exclusive;[13] and, although his notes are made the best authority in any matter in dispute, the court may modify the notes in accordance with what may judicially be found to be the facts.[14] In the absence of prejudice, a refusal to employ a stenographer for the trial of a cause is not reversible error,[15] nor is the refusal to instruct the stenographer to take down every word which is said by the judge in the progress of the trial in the hearing of parties and the jury, as the stenographer is only required to report such remarks of the judge as are addressed to the jury or counsel in their presence and concerning the case.[16] All or none of the testimony should be taken down in writing, and therefore a request to have the testimony reduced to writing, if not made at the beginning of the trial, is properly refused.[17] The absence of the official stenographer for a few minutes, unknown to the judge, and unnoticed by counsel, does not render the proceedings while he was gone void or erroneous.[18]

F. Presence of Parties or Attorneys.[19] A party has the right to be present at the trial.[20] After issue joined, the court may permit either party to proceed to trial at the time the case is set, in the absence of the opposite party[21] or his attorney, when the court has done all it could to secure his presence,[22] and it not appearing that counsel could not have been present.[23] So the court may in the absence of counsel question a witness, when counsel on his return is given an opportunity to examine the witness,[24] may render a decision,[25] or may require an attorney to impanel a jury in the absence of his client.[26] Where courts render decisions in the absence of counsel, they should direct notice to be given to the parties' attorneys.[27]

G. Adjournments Pending Trial. A court has power to adjourn a cause pending trial.[28] Where, by statute, the power of a court to adjourn a case is limited as to time, a longer adjournment than the period prescribed by statute deprives the court of jurisdiction.[29] A motion by a party which necessitates an adjournment is equivalent to an application therefor,[30] but a demand for a bill of particulars is not.[31] It is within the discretion of the court whether it shall adjourn a case, to wait for witnesses to arrive, and allow the case to stand open and permit the evidence to be introduced after the witnesses arrive;[32] or to wait for a witness who has not been subpœnaed but who has merely promised to attend the trial,[33] or a witness who has not been subpœnaed, sworn, or placed under rule as a witness.[34] So it is within the discretion of the court whether it shall adjourn, after other testimony has been given, to enable a party to procure the testimony of an expert [35] or other witness,[36] or to enable defendant to obtain or produce a paper in evidence.[37] It is likewise discretionary with the court whether or not it will adjourn court to permit counsel to talk with witnesses who have come in since the trial began; [38] or to permit a party to get a copy of a document, where proof of the substance of the document was sufficient on the question involved, and he had an opportunity to obtain that on the trial and declined to do so; [39] or to permit a witness to leave court to search for papers mentioned in a subpœna duces tecum served on the witness a short time before he was sworn; [40] or to direct a deed of land to be executed by the sheriff to one of the parties; [41] or whether it will adjourn court on the ground of the illness of defendant's counsel, when the case proceeded in the same manner as if counsel had not been ill; [42] or on the ground of surprise, because of a variance between the allegations of the petition and the proof adduced, as to a written instrument, when the evidence is immaterial; [43] or in order that counsel may have an opportunity to examine a deposition which has been taken in the case, so as to enable him to move to suppress the same; [44] or to enable a party who objects to the admission of a judgment as evidence to file a bill of exceptions to the judgment and obtain a supersedeas; [45] or to consider a motion to amend the process in another case affecting the one on trial; [46] or to permit a party to procure authenticated copies of the laws of another state.[47] A court is not bound to suspend the trial of a cause to enable a party to procure additional evidence.[48] It is error to decline to adjourn a case until a witness who has departed without the consent of the party can be brought in on attachment,[49] or on account of the non-arrival of depositions which constituted defendant's case, and which should have arrived before the trial and were expected to arrive; [50] or to decline to adjourn to the following day when witnesses who have been in attendance all day leave before the cause is called for trial at six o'clock in the afternoon.[51] In granting a request for an adjournment pending trial, the court may impose conditions.[52] On the court's refusal to postpone the trial at the request of a plaintiff, he is not required to submit to a dismissal in order to obtain a review of such order.[53]

If the pleadings attempt to raise an issue plaintiff is entitled to open and close, although it is questionable whether they do so. Boehm v. Lies, 60 N. Y. Super Ct. 436, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 577.

Where a complaint is confessed and avoided and the answer is wholly denied and also confessed and avoided, defendant has the tendency to support such issue,[64] and this rule is applicable notwithstanding the opposite party may have the burden of proof on an intermediate matter.[65] But in determining who has the affirmative of the issue, it is not so much the form as the substance and effect of the issues which is to be regarded.[66] Ordinarily admission by defendant of a prima facie case for plaintiff entitles him to open and close,[67] and this right is not lost because plaintiff does not introduce any evidence.[68] However, to entitle defendant to open and close, because of admissions made by him, such admissions must cover the entire cause of action,[69] and be so clear and comprehensive as to leave nothing, no matter how inconsequential, to be proved by plaintiff to establish a prima facie case;[70] and if the general issue be pleaded, an right under the code to open and close. Judah v. Vincennes University, 23 Ind. 272.

Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. McNally, 105 S. W. 124, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1357. And where, in an action on a promissory note containing a provision for attorney's fees, written notice of intention to sue, as required by law, was alleged, an admission in the answer, limited to the execution of the note, and accompanied by a denial of the allegation as to notice of intention to sue, is not sufficient to entitle defendant to open and close. admission of plaintiff's right of action on another part of the record will not avail.[7] In some of the states, in order to entitle defendant to open and close his admission of plaintiff's cause of action, except as it is attempted to defeat the same by facts which constitute, if true, a good defense must be entered of record.[72] While in others it must be made by the pleadings.[73] If defendant by admission is willing to undertake the burden of proof, he must make such admission before the trial begins.[74] Such admission comes too late if made after the written declaration and specification of defense has been read to the jury,[75] after plaintiff has made a prima facie case,[76] after the evidence is concluded,[77] or after the opening argument has been made.[78] Where there are several defendants, each defendant must file the statutory admission if plaintiff's right to open and close is to be precluded.[79] The right cannot be obtained where after the admission is made it is withdrawn.[80] In jurisdictions where the admission must be filed, to be effective, it must be filed before the announcement of ready for trial.[81]

2. Several Pleas and Issues. Where there are several issues and plaintiff is called on to sustain any of them, the right to open and close is with him.[82] It has

Insufficient admissions.—Where the admissions made by defendant entered of record are not sufficient to relieve plaintiff of the necessity of showing any fact or of introducing any evidence necessary to authorize recovery, it is error to deprive plaintiff of his right to open and close. Meade v. Logan, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 110 S. W. 188.

An admission of all facts necessary to be proved by plaintiff in order to make out a prima facie case does not preclude defendant, who thereby obtains the right to open and close, from introducing evidence to show that plaintiff has no title to a note on which he sued defendant as maker, he suing as an indorser. been held, however, in a jurisdiction where the matter of opening and closing is within the discretion of the court, that the court may in its discretion permit defendant to open and close where the main issue is with him.[83]

3. Co-Parties. Where there are several defendants and the burden is on plaintiff as to each of them, he is entitled to open and close.[84] Where the burden of proof is upon one of two defendants, and as to the other the burden is on plaintiff, the order of argument is in the sound discretion of the court.[85]

4. Trial of Causes Together. Where several causes are tried together by consent, the party who is plaintiff in the cause standing first on the docket is entitled to open and close.[86]

5. Time For Claiming. The right to open and close must be claimed and denied in order that complaint may be made of denial.[87] It must be claimed at the opening of the case.[88] The party claiming the right must make it affirmatively appear.[89] Where there are two defendants a claim by one comes too late after the answer of the other is read.[90] Objection cannot be made for the first time on appeal that the right to open and close was given the wrong party.[91]

b. Attachment and Garnishment Proceedings. If, however, the plea only partially admits the commission of the acts charged, it is not a plea of justification and does not entitle defendant to open and close the argument.[93] Where the issue is on a traverse to an attachment affidavit, plaintiff has the right to open and close.[94] Plaintiff also has this right where the property is claimed by an interpleader,[95] where plaintiff admits the transfer to the intervener prior to the d Contracts. In actions on contract plaintiff is entitled to open and close when defendant denies a breach of the contract,[21] denies that plaintiff has performed his obligations thereunder,[22] or denies that the contract is as set out in the petition,[23] or where the defense is that the contract is founded on an illegal consideration [24] or was procured by fraud;[25] where the breach is admitted and justified,[26] or the claim is made that the contract was abrogated by agreement;[27] or where the defense is performance [28] or payment,[29] or defendant relies on a custom,[30] or where defendant claims the contract to be conditional,[31] or that the transaction is tainted with usury [32] or fraud,[33] or where the defense is discharge under the Insolvent Debtors' Act,[34] or where defendant admits the entire case stated in the petition but claims a breach of a condition contained in the contract,[35] or that he has paid the purchase-price in a note not due.[36]

e. Condemnation Suits. In condemnation cases, where the right to condemn is admitted, defendant is entitled to open and conclude the argument.[37]

f. Proceedings By or Against Executor or Administrator. Upon an issue on a plea of plene administravit the burden is on plaintiff.[38] In proceedings to impeach an executor's account the executor is entitled to the opening and closing.[39] A party claiming property in the hands of an administrator is entitled to open and conclude.[40] Where the administrator files a general denial to a claim against the estate he may thereafter withdraw the same, assume the burden of the issues, and secure the right to open and close.[41]

g. Libel and Slander. Where defendant to a suit for libel or slander pleads justification he assumes the burden of proof and is entitled to open and close,[42]

Justification in part.—A partial plea of justification will not entitle defendant in a slander suit to open and conclude. Taylor v. Chambers, 2 Ga. App. 178, 58 S. E. 369. In libel, when there is no general issue, but although he also pleads the general issue,[43] notwithstanding he denies that the publication was malicious or that the words were slanderous.[44] Where he pleads justification as to part and not guilty as to the residue, he is entitled to open as to the first defense.[45] Defendant is entitled to open and close where the answer is merely in mitigation of damages;[46] but not where it is a mere argumentative denial,[47] or merely denies malice and damages,[48] nor if he does not offer evidence in support of his plea.[49]

h. Set-Off, Counter-Claim, or Cross Bill. Defendant is entitled to open and close where he admits plaintiff's cause of action and pleads a counter-claim or set-off,[50] or where plaintiff voluntarily withdraws the only claim disputed by defendant.[51] If, in addition to a counter-claim, defendant files a general denial he is not entitled to open and close.[52] So it has been held that where the counter-claim affirmatively asserts the same matter which the denials of the answer put in issue, plaintiff has the right to open and close.[53]

i. Plea of Tender, Payment. Where the defense is payment or tender the burden is on defendant and gives him the right to open and close.[54]

j. Trespass. Defendant has the burden on a plea of liberum tenementum,[55] or that the trespass was justifiable, and is entitled to open and close.[56]

7. Effect of Denial of Right to Open and Close. There is a wide divergence of views in respect of the effect of a denial of the right to open and close, and decisions even in the same jurisdiction are not always reconcilable. a justification is pleaded as to part, and judgment is suffered by default as to the residue, plaintiff is entitled to begin. Wood v. Pringle, 1 M. & Rob. 277.

party entitled thereto is reversible error.[57] Other decisions, however, take a diametrically opposite position to the above view, and hold that it is never a ground for reversal[58] or for setting aside the verdict.[59] So it has been variously held that a denial of the right will necessitate a reversal unless the record shows that no prejudice resulted,[60] or where it appears that prejudice resulted,[61] where it does not appear that no prejudice resulted,[62] where prejudice may have resulted,[63] or where the evidence did not demand the verdict.[64] So other decisions have held that, to warrant a reversal or the allowance of a new trial, injury to the party complaining must affirmatively appear;[65] that there is no available error where it is apparent that no prejudice resulted,[66] or that substantial justice has been

In support of this view it is said: "The right to open and conclude, in a jury trial, is of prime importance. The right to open is important. It enables the party to give direction to the case, very often to choose the ground on which the battle shall be fought. And the right to conclude is more important still. Even in fair and legitimate argument, the party concluding has the advantage of knowing precisely the line of his opponent, and therefore of directing his attention to it, and arraying everything in the case, that fairly illustrates and sustains his view of it." done,[67] or where the verdict of the jury is merely advisory [68] or was more favorable to the complaining party than he was entitled to.[69] In some jurisdictions where the matter is subject to the discretion of the court, this discretion is not reviewable in the absence of an abuse thereof,[70] and in others it is absolute and not subject to review.[71]

8. Waiver of Right. The right to open and close is waived where the opposite party is permitted to open without objection.[72] A party must open if he desires the right to reply.[73] If both parties waive the opening argument, the right to reply is lost.[74] But if defendant makes an argument, plaintiff is entitled to close, although he did not open.[75]

made in court is restricted to such features thereof as to which an offer is made; otherwise, evidence might be introduced without giving a party an opportunity to object.[78] Evidence of experiments which have no legitimate bearing upon the issues before the jury should be excluded.[79] Permission to perform experiments in the presence of the jury cannot be demanded as a matter of right, but it is within the discretion of the trial judge to grant or refuse such permission.[80] The judge should be guided by the apparent importance and weight of the proposed experiment and the time it is likely to consume.[81]

2. IN PERSONAL INJURIES' CASES. In personal injuries' cases plaintiff may be permitted[82] or the court has the power, under proper circumstances, to direct plaintiff to do[83] a physical act in the presence of the jury that will illustrate or show the character of his injuries; but the propriety of such order rests largely in the discretion of the trial court and will only be reviewed on showing a plain case of abuse of discretion.[84] A physical examination suggested for the first time after the close of the evidence,[85] or during the argument,[86] is properly denied. The court may also permit the torn clothing of the injured party to be introduced in evidence, in its discretion, if thereby the manner in which plaintiff was injured or the character and extent of the injury can be better explained.[87] But it may be reversible error to permit a dramatic exhibition, in the presence of the jury, as a demonstration of the extent of plaintiff's disability,[88] or for the purpose of appealing to their feelings;[89] and it is error for the court to send the jury and the parties to make a physical examination of plaintiff out of the presence of the court.[90] It is within the discretion of the trial court to grant or refuse a request to permit a jury to visit the home of a party whose counsel claims that she is too badly injured to appear in court.[91] Where injuries are sustained by breaking machinery, the court may order defendant to permit plaintiff to cut a portion of the machinery for examination and test.[92]

J. View and Inspection[93]—1. In General. The jury may inspect a paper in evidence.[94] At common law, the trial judge may, in real and personal actions, permit the jury in his discretion, with or without the consent of the parties, to view the property in litigation, or the premises where any material fact occurred,[95] or may require a party to produce an object in court for the inspection of the jury.[96] The view may be granted, although the condition of the property has changed since the time of the injury complained of,[97] if the change is not material;[98] but it should not be granted where it appears that material physical changes have occurred in the character of the premises between the time of the injury and the time of trial,[99] or, where the place is a well-known street and there is nothing com-

Meanwhile the attention of the judge, who was in the court room, but near the door which led into the judge's room, was called to the fact that the door was closed, and he had it partly opened, but not enough so that any one in the court room could see what was going on. plicated in the facts, or obscure in the locality.[1] Where bodily production in court of an object is impossible the court may permit a view thereof at a convenient place to which it may be brought.[2] It is within the discretion of the court to refuse to permit representatives of the parties to accompany the jury on their view of premises to which the action relates, although it is the better practice to grant such permission.[3] Whether the jury shall be permitted to view the premises,[4] or at what period during the progress of the trial they shall be permitted to do so,[5] is in the discretion of the court and will not be reviewed where no abuse is shown. willing witness,[17] or caution a witness not to disclose his testimony to other witnesses,[18] or criticize witnesses for apparently improper conduct;[19] and, where the recall of a witness is entirely discretionary with the court, may say that he would not have permitted the witness to be recalled if he had known what his testimony would be.[20] So he may say to counsel when such is the case that he is not allowing the witness a sufficient time to answer the question.[21] He should not, however, say anything calculated to influence the testimony of a witness,[22] or comment on the credibility of witnesses.[23]

L. Examination of Witnesses by Trial Judge. It is within the authority of the trial judge to examine witnesses for the purpose of eliciting facts material to the case.[24] Indeed circumstances may arise upon the trial which will render such action on the part of the court necessary.[25] Nevertheless the rules governing the examination of witnesses by counsel apply as well to the examination of witnesses by the court.[26] He should not ask leading and suggestive questions of a hestitating witness during the cross-examination of such witness,[27] or ask questions concerning immaterial matters that are calculated to arouse the passions of the jury.[28] So in the conduct of the examination the court should be careful not to indicate by words or manner his disbelief of the witness,[29] and should not make remarks or comments on the witnesses or their testimony which may tend either to magnify or diminish in the minds of the jury the effect of such testimony either as to credibility or value.[30] Although the conduct of the examination is improper the judgment will not be reversed if it is apparent from the verdict that no prejudice resulted.[31]

M. Remarks and Conduct of Judge[32] — 1. In General. During the trial, the judge should refrain from making any unnecessary comments which might tend to a result prejudicial to a litigant,[33] and when calculated to influence the minds of the jury, such remarks constitute ground for reversal.[34] Nevertheless, not every unguarded remark of a trial judge, in the presence of the jury is ground for reversal. To be so, it must be shown to be prejudicial to the rights of the party complaining, or at least appear probable that prejudice resulted.[35] It is not enough that there is a possibility that the remarks were prejudicial.[36] And it is ordinarily held that error in making improper remarks is cured by instructing the jury to disregard the remarks.[37] So a remark objectionable in itself which did not reach the ears of the jury is not a ground for reversal,[38] for remarks made during the discussion as to the law to be incorporated in the instructions, although ordinarily improper to be made in the presence of the jury, constitute no ground for reversal when the jury were present by agreement of counsel.[39]

2. Comments on Weight of Evidence. As is shown in a subsequent chapter, where the subject is considered at length, it is the rule in most jurisdictions that the trial judge in charging the jury must carefully refrain from expressing or intimating his opinion on the facts in the case,[40] and in the great majority of jurisdictions it is equally well settled that it is erroneous for the judge to express or intimate an opinion on the facts by remarks made during the course of the trial.[41]

Comments on expert testimony.— Comments of the court tending to weaken or strengthen the effect of expert testimony are improper as encroaching on the province of the jury (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Du Bois, 56 Ill. App. 181; Thompson v. Ish, 99 Mo. 160, 12 S. W. 510, 17 Am. St. Rep. 552; Herndon v. Springfield, 137 Mo. App. 513, 119 S. W. 467), and a ground for reversal if probable that prejudice resulted (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Du Bois, 56 Ill. App. 181) but not otherwise (Thompson v. Ish, 99 Mo. 160, 12 S. W. 510, 17 Am. St. Rep. 552; Herndon v. Springfield, 137 Mo. App. 513, 119 S. W. 467).

What is not an opinion on weight of evidence.— A chancellor's remark: "You may prove that, though it may do you no good," is not an opinion expressed as to the weight of the evidence, where an objection to the introduction of the evidence, showing that a person who was a party to a transaction out of which the suit has grown was at a time prior to the transaction a director of the bank sought to be held liable. Continental Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 449. In an action for broker's commissions, a remark of the judge, on overruling a motion to strike testimony, that "I think that this evidence under the whole record now disclosed is proper," and ruling at the time was reserved in order to ascertain if the evidence would show the full extent of the authority, "I think that this evidence was proper, and the motion is overruled," is not prejudicial as a remark on the weight of evidence. Fritz v. Chicago Grain, etc., Co., 136 Iowa 699, 114 N. W. 193. The statement of the court, on refusing a motion to strike out the testimony of a witness, that "the jury will determine what weight is to be given this testimony," is proper; this not being a comment on the testimony, but the statement of a reason for not striking it out. Sotebier v. St. Louis Transit Co., 203 Mo. 702, 102 S. W. 651. For other illustrative cases see American Standard Jewelry Co. v. Hill, 90 Ark. 78, 117 S. W. 781; Kaack v. Stanton, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 495, 112 S. W. 702; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Shepard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1909) 118 S. W. 596.

The Massachusetts statute, providing that courts shall not "charge juries with respect to matters of fact," refers only to instructions given after the evidence has been heard and the arguments of counsel concluded, and does not apply to remarks made by the judge during the examination of witnesses. Partelow v. Newton, etc., R. Co., 196 Mass. 24, 81 N. E. 894.

The Connecticut statutes of 1888 permit the court in submitting questions of fact to make such observations on the evidence as it thinks proper. Beach v. Travellers' Ins. Co., 73 Conn. 118, 46 Atl. 867; State v. Fetterer, 65 Conn. 281, 32 Atl. 394.

In Rhode Island the expression of opinion by the judge on matters of fact is not ground of exception, unless the party against whom it operates yields to it and does not argue against it, and then only in the discretion of the court, if incorrect and injurious to the party. Hartshorn v. Ives, 4 R. I. 471.

In the federal courts, the opinion of the trial court expressed to the jury on matters of fact, which are ultimately submitted to the same effect as if given in a formal instruction to the jury,[42] and, if they are calculated to mislead the jury and prejudice the rights of one of the parties, they constitute a ground for reversal.[43] However, an expression of opinion on the weight of the evidence is not necessarily a ground of reversal. Improper comments on evidence are ordinarily considered cured where the court instructs the jury that they are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact,[44] and the judgment will not be reversed where it is apparent that no prejudice resulted,[45] as where the undisputed evidence shows the fact to be as stated by the judge,[46] or where them for their decision, is not reviewable error in a national court so long as no rule of law is incorrectly stated. Rucker v. Wheeler, 127 U. S. 85, 8 S. Ct. 1142, 32 L. ed. 102; U. Instances of remarks held ground for reversal.— Where counsel on cross-examination is directing his questions to matters pertinent and material, a remark as follows: "It is just as important as it is to ask him what he had for breakfast"— is, in a close case, ground for reversal. Chicago City R. Co. v. Enroth, 113 Ill. App. 285. Where during the examination of a witness the court, referring to the witness, remarked, "Evidently, sir, this man is making his evidence out of whole cloth," such remark was calculated to discredit the witness, and was prejudicial error. Swenson v. Erickson, 90 Ill. App. 358. In an action against an administrator to recover for support of an infant child of deceased, defendant claimed that plaintiff agreed to care for the child without compensation. In answer to an objection to the argument of defendant's counsel, the court remarked that it appeared there "was no original agreement by the terms of which there was to be payment made." It was held that the remark was error prejudicial to plaintiff. Coldren v. La Gore, 118 Iowa 212, 91 N. W. 1066.

Effect of instructions directing jury to disregard remark.— While ruling against defendant's objection to certain evidence offered by plaintiff, a remark of the court that he preferred that if there was to be any stealing done on technicalities the supreme court should say so, it was ground for reversal, although the jurors were subsequently cautioned by the court in an attempt to remove the impression and leave the jurors unprejudiced as to the main issue. Kramer v. Northwestern El. Co., 91 Minn. 346, 98 N. W. 96. So in an action against father and son for negligence of the son in driving the father's team, the court's remark to counsel, in the presence of the jury, that, "from the manner of these parties on the stand, the court does not believe" there was a bailment of the team, made in connection with the other remarks showing a belief that the son was acting as the father's servant, was prejudicial to them, although the court warned the jury not to be influenced by the remark. the issue on which the court expressed an opinion was decided in appellant's favor.[47]

3. Remarks on Admission or Exclusion of Evidence. Error cannot be assigned to remarks of the trial judge necessary in deciding a motion to reject evidence offered.[48] So the court may comment on the materiality and value of evidence, in rejecting it,[49] and may state what is or is not proper testimony on an issue, where objections to testimony are continually being made.[50] He may state that no more questions will be allowed as to matters which the court had ruled to be irrelevant.[51] In admitting evidence, he may state the theory of its admissibility,[52] and in passing on the competency of evidence may state that it is "very competent."[53] Even though remarks made in ruling on evidence are improper, the judgment will not be reversed where it is apparent that no prejudice resulted.[54]

4. Comments on Credibility of Witnesses. The question of the credibility of the witnesses is solely for the determination of the jury,[55] and it is improper for the court to comment on or express an opinion directly or by implication on the credibility of the witnesses.[56] The reason is that words or conduct of the trial judge may on the one hand support the character or testimony of a witness, or on the other may destroy the same, in the estimation of the jury; and thus his personal and official influence is exerted to the unfair advantage of one of the parties, with a corresponding detriment to the cause of the other.[57] However the judgment will not be reversed for error in commenting on the credibility of witnesses where it is apparent that no prejudice resulted.[58]

5. Statements as to Whether Evidence on Certain Matters Has Been Introduced. An incorrect statement by the judge that evidence material in its nature had or had not been given is ground for reversal where it is probable that prejudice resulted.[59] But the mere statement by the court as to what it understood a witness to testify to is not prejudicial where the witness had in fact testified as the court stated.[60]

6. Remarks as to Law of Case. Remarks of the trial judge calculated to mislead the jury as to the law governing the case constitute reversible error.[61] But judgment will not be reversed on account of a remark of the judge to the jury that all questions raised by the demurrer have been settled by the supreme court in a companion case, where the pleadings were substantially the same as in the case on trial, such being the fact;[62] and remarks of the court in a discussion with counsel as to the law applicable to the case, in the jury's presence, which announced a correct rule of law, if error, do not constitute prejudicial error.[63]

7. Remarks Showing Bias of Judge or Tending to Create Prejudice Against Party. Remarks of the trial judge showing bias in favor of one of the parties constitute prejudicial error.[64] So it is ordinarily held to be reversible error for

Remarks not necessarily tending to discredit witness.— Reference by the trial judge to certain witnesses as "saloon keepers and gentlemen of elegant leisure," although not a remark to be approved, did not constitute reversible error, as it did not necessarily tend to discredit the testimony of such witnesses. Frankfort v. Coleman, 19 Ind. App. 368, 49 N. E. 474, 65 Am. St. Rep. 412. Where the trial court, in response to an objection to a question, stated that while the witness was not sufficiently informed on the subject to testify, in deference to a possible construction of the opinion of the supreme court on a former appeal, he would overrule the objection. It was held that the fact involved having been established without dispute by witnesses for both parties, the remarks of the court were not prejudicial and did not have a tendency to destroy the credibility of the witness. Souchek v. Karr, 83 Nebr. 645, 120 N. W. 210. him to make remarks which will tend to excite prejudice or hostility in the minds of the jury toward one of the parties and sympathy for the other,[65] and it has been held in a number of cases that the error is not cured by directing the jury to disregard the remarks.[66]

8. CENSURE OR DISPARAGEMENT OF COUNSEL. It is perfectly proper for the court to censure counsel for manifestly improper conduct,[67] such as making an unwarranted attack on a witness[68] or persisting in asking questions which the court had ruled were improper,[69] or improperly interfering with the examination of a witness by opposing counsel.[70] It is improper, however, for the court to censure counsel for alleged misconduct on his part in cases other than the one on trial,[71] or to say to the jury on request of counsel for written instructions that such requests were never made except when counsel was angry with the court,[72] and it is reversible error to ask questions of a witness which reflect on the integrity of counsel, nothing having developed to warrant the court in so doing,[73] or without justification to make remarks calculated to disparage counsel in the eyes of the jury,[74] or to assume

Illustration.— In an action of trespass, based on the fact that defendant's building extended over on to the land of plaintiff, it was reversible error for the court to state to the jury that plaintiff had refused to adopt the court's suggestion that the parties should permit the jury to assess the entire damages sustained by plaintiff, and to refer to plaintiff's refusal in such a manner as to lead the jury to believe that the court thought that plaintiff was stubborn, and that the action was brought for spite. Allen v. Kidd, 197 Mass. 256, 84 N. E. 122.

Remarks held not to show bias.— Where plaintiff's physician, on cross-examination in a personal injury case, said that he hoped plaintiff would in time be able to walk without a cane, a remark of the judge, "You expect what is probable; your hope may be very improbable," was not error, on the ground that it showed bias for plaintiff. Devlin v. New York City R. Co., 116 N. Y. App. Div. 894, 102 N. Y. Suppl. 430. In an action under the civil damage laws on a liquor dealer's bond, a statement by the court to the jury that "nobody here is entitled to anything but their legal rights, and that is all anybody is asking for," was not prejudicial to defendant, the remark being general and applicable alike to both parties. It was held that the remark, if not justified, was not prejudicial.

Remarks not objectionable.— The use by the court of "this man" as the term to designate plaintiff, and "Mr. Johnson," as that to designate defendant, in announcing an interlocutory ruling, is not subject to the criticism that it tended to cast a slur on the former. a manifestly hostile attitude toward counsel of one of the parties.[75] An attorney at law as an officer of the court is entitled to such treatment from the trial court that the interest of his client will not be prejudiced.[78]

9. Remarks in Denying Motion For Nonsuit. Remarks by the judge in overruling a motion for nonsuit are not charges to the jury within the constitutional prohibition against charging the jury on the facts.[77] Nevertheless in overruling such motion the court should not make remarks tending to discredit the witnesses of a party,[78] or intimate his opinion as to what the verdict should be,[79] nor make remarks as to the nature of the action, inconsistent with instructions subsequently given and that are misleading to defendant;[80] but the court may, in discussing with counsel his reasons for his ruling on a motion for nonsuit, refer to the evidence and say what it would be sufficient to establish.[81]

10. Remarks in Ruling on Motion to Direct Verdict. Where the judge correctly gives binding directions to the jury, remarks that he may make before doing so,[82] or in connection therewith,[83] are immaterial and not assignable as error. While the better practice is to send the jury out of the room when a motion for peremptory instruction is to be made, argued, or decided, there can be no reversal because of remarks of the court thereon in the presence of the jury on denying the motion, where there was no exception and no request that the jury retire.[84] So it has been held that a remark of the trial court in denying a motion to direct a verdict for defendant to the effect that the record may show that the court considers this one of the close cases which should go to the jury, and that different minds might draw different conclusions from the evidence, was not prejudicial to plaintiff.[85]

11. Miscellaneous. It is reversible error for the court, in the presence of the jury, and before all the witnesses have been examined, to state that he will dismiss the suit at defendant's cost,[86] to emphasize information of counsel as to the result of a trial in the court from which the cause was appealed, and reprimand opposing counsel for objecting to such statements,[87] or to make misleading remarks which naturally cause a party to refrain from introducing all his evidence whereby

Instructions counteracting effect of previous remarks.— There is no ground for the contention that the court's remarks in denying a nonsuit tending to influence the minds of the jury against plaintiff's right to recover upon the evidence presented by him, where the court, after making such remarks, instructed the jury that the court has nothing to do with the facts or evidence in the case, that the jury were the sole judges of the effect and weight of the testimony, and that, having heard all the evidence, it was the jury's duty to carefully consider it, applying thereto the law declared by the court. prejudice results to him.[88] On the other hand, it is not error or at least not prejudicial error, for the court to remark that certain matters between the parties had been adjusted, when they admittedly had been,[89] to suggest a settlement of the case,[90] to state to counsel for the parties that one of the jurors is sick, and inquire whether counsel will go on with eleven jurors by consent; [91] to remark that court would be adjourned if necessary to allow plaintiff's counsel to secure the attendance of a witness; [92] to make remarks in settling the pleadings not in the presence of the jury as to the desirability of an early trial; [93] or to say, in declining to grant a continuance, that the case had already been sufficiently manipulated on the docket for the convenience of counsel,[94] or, where one of the parties is plainly trifling with the court, for the court to so characterize his conduct; [95] to express a doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant the court in submitting an issue to the jury; [96] to say in response to an inquiry of counsel that he does not care to have the law discussed; [97] or to caution jurors not to be guided by newspaper articles or to express condemnation of such articles; [98] or, after the jury has been fully instructed as to the issues, to say that it seemed to him that the matter had narrowed itself down to certain questions; [99] to remark to one of the counsel, in the hearing of the jury, that he and such counsel agree as to the law of the case; [1] to notify counsel that his client who has been unruly and disobedient to the orders of the court will be attached for contempt; [2] to make remarks which were part of a discussion following a suggestion made by the complaining witness; [3] to say that a particular decision is not applicable to the case on trial; [4] to say that, if certain illegal evidence already admitted without objection had been objected to, he would have excluded it; [5] or, in denying instructions, to state that they do not conform to his view of the law.[6] So it is not misconduct warranting a reversal that during the trial and when reading the evidence to the jury, the judge moved to a table within the bar in front of the jury,[7] or spoke to a witness in an undertone in the presence of the jury,[8] or, at the close of the argument, secured from defendant's attorney a transcript of the testimony of some of the witnesses.[9] And where a witness came into court in a drunken condition, the court properly had him arrested, although in the presence of the jury, since his presence under such circumstances and in such condition was an offense to the court and jury, and he was in contempt.[10]

must be specially called to the attention of the trial court when made,[11] and a correction thereof asked,[12] or they must be objected to [13] or excepted to at the time.[14]

N. Misconduct of Parties. When the attention of the court is called to alleged misconduct of a party it may investigate the matter openly in the presence of the jury, or in the first instance privately and out of the hearing of the jury. The latter is the preferable course unless the fact of such charge has in some way reached the ear of the jury, in which case it may be better that the jury should know the entire truth, rather than render a decision with a suspicion in their minds of something wrong.[15] The misconduct of parties during the examination of witnesses before the jury is no ground for new trial, where the judge, upon his attention being called to it, promptly ordered it stopped and threatened to punish the offending party in case of repetition of the offense.[16] A judgment should not be reversed for misconduct of a party where it is apparent that such misconduct was not prejudicial.[17]

O. Presence and Conduct of Bystander. In an action for breach of marriage promise, there was no error in refusing to grant a mistrial because plaintiff's mother fainted during the argument of the case.[18] It is not a ground for the reversal of a cause that the judge of the same circuit consults with counsel of the successful party during the trial where there is no evidence that the jury were prejudiced thereby.[19]

P. Waiver of Irregularities in Conduct of Trial. The parties to an action may consent to a departure in the usual course of the trial, or may waive irregularities therein, either expressly or impliedly.[20] Thus the losing litigant cannot complain of an irregularity in the trial of which he had notice and to which he consented previous to the verdict.[21] So voluntary compliance with an erroneous order of the court is a waiver of the right to except.[22] Errors in rulings by the court during the progress of the trial, which are clearly corrected by it before the trial closes or in the charge of the court to the jury, are not generally fatal to the judgment.[23]

V. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.[24]

A. Introduction, Offer, and Admission of Evidence in General —

1. NECESSITY AND SCOPE OF PROOF[25] — a. In General. A party may as a general rule offer evidence to prove the truth of any fact pleaded by him and not admitted,[26] although the averment is informal,[27] and although the evidence only slightly tends to prove the issue.[28] The relevancy of evidence offered is determined by the pleadings.[29] Although the court may have erroneously stricken from the pleadings averments to which evidence offered would be relevant,[30] and although a plea tenders an immaterial issue, if issue has been taken thereon, it is error to reject testimony in support of it.[31] A party may also introduce evidence of collateral facts having a tendency to show that the testimony of witnesses on one side is more reasonable than that of the other,[32] or, within the sound discretion

Improper view of premises.—Where a party participates in a proceeding by attending at the prothonotary's office and striking the jury, and by being present at the view of the premises, he waives an objection to the view on the ground that it was had without being allowed by the court. Evidence as to qualifications of expert.—He cannot after a witness has qualified as an expert introduce opinions of other experts as to the qualification of the witness to draw correct conclusions in the science. Tullis v. Kidd, 12 Ala. 648.

Where there have been several trials of a case, he may account for the production of

of the court, of collateral facts tending to show the probability of the main fact.[33] It is no objection to the admission of evidence that it does not prove plaintiff's whole case, if it be a link in the chain of evidence afterward to be given,[34] and, where the issue is not strictly defined, it should be admitted if it would be competent in any view of the case, which might be thereafter taken.[35] Where there are several issues, evidence is admissible to support one issue, although it has no tendency to support another issue;[36] and a party is not precluded from giving evidence material to any issue because the decision of another issue may be such as to preclude him from relying on the facts proved by such evidence.[37] Where issuable allegations are made in the complaint and admitted in the answer, it is not necessary to introduce the pleading.[38] The court cannot compel a party to introduce evidence to sustain an issue;[39] and a party is not required to put in evidence letters as to which he is examining a witness,[40] or documents he has given notice to produce;[41] nor, when offering a letter of his adversary, to offer his letter to which the letter offered was in reply.[42]

b. As Affected by Opening Statement. A party is not confined in his evidence to the facts recited in the opening statement of his counsel to the court;[43] and it has been held that if the evidence is competent under the pleadings the fact that it is inconsistent with the case stated in the opening does not render it inadmissible,[44] although there is authority to the contrary.[45] Statement by counsel of what they expect to prove, in opposition to the statement on the other side, is not sufficient to lay a foundation for letting in testimony otherwise inadmissible.[46]

c. As Affected by Admissions. A party is bound by the admissions of his pleadings, and cannot complain of the sufficiency of evidence to show a fact so admitted;[47] by agreements of his counsel as to what admissions are contained in the pleadings;[48] by express or implied admissions of fact by his counsel at the trial,[49]

Withdrawal of admission.—An admission once made cannot be withdrawn. Colwell v. Lawrence, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 643, 24 How. Pr. 324 [affirmed in 38 N. Y. 71, 5 Transcr. App. 307, 36 How. Pr. 306]. But if the admission by formal admissions of record made by his counsel,[50] or by suggestions on the record by his adversary, without objection by him;[51] and, when he ignores his pleading and insists that the only question for trial is one then specified by him, he thereby waives all other grounds of defense.[52] An admission of a judgment implies the validity of the judgment;[53] but an admission that there was such a contract as was offered in evidence implies merely its execution and not its contents.[54]

d. As Affected by Stipulations and Agreed Facts. Agreements as to certain facts in a case are evidentiary, concluding the parties so far as they go,[55] and cannot be withdrawn by one party without the consent of the other or an order of court.[56] However, the agreement does not preclude either party from introducing additional evidence not inconsistent with the stipulated facts;[57] and a stipulation that a party is competent to testify on certain subjects does not preclude the opposite party from cross-examining him on these subjects.[58] If by stipulation testimony taken in another case is read, no objection can be taken to it that was not taken upon the trial at which it was admitted.[59] Unless the purpose of the evidence is limited by agreement, the facts agreed upon are in the case for all proper purposes.[60] The judgment will be on the finding of facts and not on the agreed case.[61] In the absence of other evidence, the agreed statement must show all the facts necessary to a recovery if one is to be had.[62]

e. Uncontroverted Facts. It is not error to admit relevant evidence, although the adverse party admits the fact sought to be proved,[63] and on the other hand the court is not bound to hear evidence of admitted facts.[64] However, a party is not bound to accept in evidence an admission in lieu of a record where the admission was not broad enough to embrace all the facts which such record disclosed; and even if it had been sufficiently comprehensive in this particular it would not preclude the party of his strict legal right to have the record read, because the parol admission of a party made in pais is competent evidence only of those facts which may lawfully be established by parol evidence; it cannot be received to supply the place of existing evidence by matter of record.[65]

2. Offer of Proof — a. Propriety of. In order to enable a trial court to determine whether facts sought to be proved by a witness are admissible in evidence, it is proper to make an offer to prove the facts which the party assumes his questions will elicit.[66] In considering the propriety of a refusal to permit counsel to make a formal offer of testimony, because a similar offer had already been made and ruled, much must be left to the sound discretion of the judge.[67]

b. Necessity For. A question, addressed to the party's own witness if objected to, must be followed by an offer of what is expected to be proved by the answer of the witness, if it is desired to complain of the exclusion of the question,[68]

"If the question is in proper form and clearly admits of an answer relevant to the issues and favorable to the party on whose side the witness is called, it will be error to exclude it. Of course, the court, in its discretion, or on motion, may require the party, in whose behalf the question is put, to state the facts proposed to be proved by the answer. But if that be not done, the rejection of the answer will be deemed error or not, according as the question, upon its face, if proper in form, may or may not clearly admit of an answer favorable to the party in whose behalf it is propounded." on the theory on which he sues,[88] or so limit the issues as to make an offer a mere formality,[89] it is not necessary for the party to state definitely what he proposes to prove. And where the court refuses to admit in evidence the contract upon which plaintiff sued, treating it as void, and, in granting plaintiff leave to amend its petition, declares that no change in pleading could affect the court's construction of the contract, plaintiff's submission of the case to the jury without renewing his offer to introduce the contract after the amendment of its complaint does not preclude it from basing error on the exclusion.[90] An intimation by the court on cross-examination that a certain line of proof is incompetent will not excuse defendant's failure to offer the same if he desires to complain of its exclusion.[91]

The offer need not be confined to the specific answer if both relate to the same subject-matter (Johnson v. Winston, 68 Nebr. 425, 94 N. W. 607), unless other questions each of them before the court.[19] The court may require the offer of proof to be in writing,[20] although not requested so to do by opposing counsel.[21] The offer must be confined to admissible evidence;[22] if the offer is of a witness, it should be confined to matters as to which he is competent.[23] The court is bound to accept the allegations of the offer as true for the purpose of ruling thereon.[24] Where an objection to an offer is not put on the ground of the improper method of making the offer, that objection cannot avail in the appellate court.[25]

(II) DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE. An offer of documentary evidence must be accompanied by the documents offered.[26] If offered as a whole they must be admitted or rejected as such,[27] and the whole of it must be read if required.[28] If it is desired to offer certain portions of the document merely, they must be specifically pointed out.[29] The offer of an instrument includes the certificates thereto,[30] or file marks placed thereon by public officers,[31] and bills of item referred to in the instrument.[32] The offer of the record of a suit includes motions on file and the answers thereto,[33] but not the copy of a note on which the suit was founded.[34] The offer of an instrument is not an offer of the assignments,[35] or other indorsements thereon.[36]

documentary evidence, by directing the same to be submitted to the counsel and court, without stating its purport.[42] The better practice is to have the jury retire;[43] but an offer in the presence of the jury is not error in the absence of a request that the jury retire,[44] although the offer be of incompetent evidence.[45] Where defendant excepted to the court's refusal to permit a witness to answer certain questions objected to, it was within the court's discretion to permit defendant to make its offer of proof in the presence of the jury for the purpose of reserving its bill of exceptions.[46] Counsel may, in the presence of the jury, state his offer to prove in as many forms as is necessary to present the question in any phase favorable to him, but the court may on motion, or by rule or order of court, require the offer to be stated out of the hearing of the jury.[47] But evidence of the same kind as that previously ruled incompetent should not be repeatedly offered in the hearing of the jury, and if so offered, even though rejected, may be ground for reversal.[48] The court may require the question of the admissibility of evidence to be raised by interrogatories instead of by an offer to prove in order to prevent abuse.[49]

e. Time For Making. The court may permit an offer of proof to be made after the exclusion of the evidence;[50] but the exclusion of evidence is not error, when the offer to prove is not made until after its exclusion,[51] unless made immediately thereafter.[52]

3. Introduction of Documentary Evidence[53] — a. In General. It is not necessary to serve the opposite party with a copy of a writing or give him an opportunity to inspect it before the trial.[54] But he must be permitted to inspect it before it is admitted.[55] A document may be read at any time after it is proved.[56] If properly in evidence, it may be read to the jury by a witness who has no personal knowledge of the facts.[57] It is ordinarily in the discretion of the trial judge whether it shall be read or put in the hands of the jury.[58] A document is not put in evidence by handing it to opposite counsel for inspection,[59] by placing it on the files of the court,[60] by having it identified by a witness and marked by the stenographer,[61] by admonishing a witness to consult the document,[62] by its production on notice [63] and inspection by the opposite party,[64] or by proof of its execution.[65] However, where the court and parties treat an instrument as in evidence, a formal introduction is waived,[66] and the reading of a document by a witness without objection,[67] or such reference thereto by counsel in his examination as necessarily leads the jury to the conclusion that they are listening to testimony concerning the contents thereof,[68] or other treatment thereof by both parties as if in evidence,[69] puts it in evidence. A written résumé of books in evidence may be admitted,[70] and if there is no objection the court may permit a witness to state deductions from bulky documents.[71] So if it is necessary to take the deposition of a large number of witnesses to prove payments made by them, it would be admissible to have an intelligent and brief summary of the essential facts stated by them made up in such form that the court or jury might understand it without the necessity of hearing all that the witnesses had to say.[72] Letters should not be admitted in mass for the jury to read or not as they please.[73] withdrawn and superseded by an amended pleading is not in evidence unless it is introduced like other evidence.[75]

4. Admission and Exclusion or Withdrawal of Evidence — a. In General. The admission of evidence is a question for the judge, and the jury has no right to disregard evidence although erroneously admitted.[76] The extent to which evidence of collateral matters may be admitted rests in the discretion of the court.[77] In determining the admissibility of evidence, the pleadings should be liberally construed,[78] and ambiguous evidence should be given the construction favoring admissibility.[79] Where the court is evenly divided as to admission, the evidence should be rejected.[80] Where there is a sharp conflict in the evidence the rulings with respect to the admission and exclusion of evidence should be especially accurate.[81] The court may of its own motion rule out irrelevant, immaterial,[82] or opinion,[83] but not secondary, evidence;[84] or it may exclude improper evidence, although not properly objected to,[85] but need not do so.[86] The court may on its own motion exclude an improper question,[87] as a question calling for hearsay evidence,[88] or for immaterial as well as material evidence.[89] However, the fact that the court permitted an answer to an improper question furnishes no ground of complaint if the answer was proper testimony,[90] or could not have damaged the party objecting.[91] It is not the question but the response to it, when incompetent and improper as evidence, upon which error can be assigned.[92] Evidence once generally admitted cannot be offered again.[93] In doubtful cases evidence may be admitted and the effect adjudged afterward;[94] but the practice of admitting all the evidence adduced

What is not proper rebutting testimony illustrated.— Where, in an action for the death of a pedestrian attempting to cross a street cartrack at night, plaintiff offered testimony as to the absence of signal lights at the place, at the close of defendant's case, it was not error to exclude similar testimony; the evidence being not in rebuttal, and no

chief.[19] The fact that it was not then introduced does not make it discretionary with the trial court to subsequently exclude it.[20] So it has been held that when the character of evidence, whether it be rebutting or not, depends upon the effect which the jury may give to evidence which was introduced to rebut, it is not error to admit it, although its tendency as rebutting evidence is doubtful.[21] On the other hand, it is not competent for a party to go into a collateral matter on cross-examination and afterward rebut the testimony so called out,[22] or to introduce evidence to rebut matters which are not proved but merely attempted to be proved.[23] And witnesses should not be permitted to reiterate their testimony under the guise of rebuttal.[24] So the admission of improper or immaterial evidence on behalf of one party without objection will not justify a resort by the other party to immaterial and irrelevant evidence to rebut it.[25] The general rule is that parties cannot create a right to try an immaterial issue or introduce irrelevant evidence by mere silence or consent, when they might have had the adverse evidence kept out or stricken out.[26]

e. Provisional or Conditional Admission of Evidence. While the practice is not favored, the courts sometimes admit evidence which on its face appears to be reason being given tending to appeal to the discretion of the court, nor excuse given for not offering the testimony when the other was given. Higgins v. Los Angeles R. Co., 5 Cal. App. 748, 91 Pac. 344. A witness for plaintiff stated on cross-examination that he had not testified in a justice's court that the work performed by plaintiff had not been completed as specified. A witness for defendant testified that plaintiff's witness had testified in the justice's court that the contract was not completed, whereupon plaintiff's witness was recalled and asked to state what he testified to in the justice's court relative to the contract. It was held that objection was properly sustained to the question, as it did not specifically meet any of the testimony offered by defendant. Wood v. Washington, 135 Wis. 299, 115 N. W. 810. inadmissible subject to the right to strike it out.[27] Thus evidence not competent and relevant at the time it is offered may be admitted on the condition that the party introducing it will subsequently introduce other evidence which will make it admissible.[28] Where testimony is introduced on condition that counsel shall subsequently introduce other evidence making it relevant and competent, and this is not done, the court may strike out the evidence of its own motion,[29] and it should strike out such evidence when a proper request is made therefor.[30] However, in the absence of such request, error cannot be assigned to the failure of the court to strike out such evidence.[31] Where documents are received in evidence subject to objection, and are not afterward excluded, they must be treated as properly before the court.[32]

f. Limiting the Number of Witnesses — (I) POWER OF COURT TO MAKE OR RESCIND ORDER. Ordinarily, the court has the right, in its discretion, to limit the number of witnesses,[33] and the number of depositions to be read, to prove a particular fact.[34] The rule has been applied when the fact is collateral to the main issue,[35] or the testimony is for the purpose of impeaching a witness,[36] or is expert[37]

or opinion evidence.[38] There are, however, cases holding that the court cannot limit the number of witnesses to a controlling and controverted fact,[39] especially during the time that witnesses are being examined.[40] But the court may even as to such facts limit the right of a party to call witnesses to the extent of ordering that additional witnesses shall be called only at the cost of the party calling them.[41] It is improper for the court to limit the number of witnesses which may be called by defendant to a particular number, where those witnesses who are called by him appear to be hostile.[42] Where an abuse of discretion in limiting the number of witnesses is clearly shown, an exception will lie.[43] In counting the number of witnesses to any point witnesses who prove incompetent,[44] or have no knowledge of the matter in dispute,[45] or who testify to the fact as experts,[46] or who testify thereto, although not specially called for that purpose,[47] must be counted. The parties to a cause may by stipulation limit the number of expert witnesses.[48] A rule limiting the number of witnesses permitted to be called to establish a fact does not apply to a fact that can only be established by a number of observations.[49] The court may, after limiting the number of witnesses, permit a party to introduce more than the number limited.[50]

(II) Time of Making Order. The better practice is to make the order before any witnesses are introduced,[51] but the order may be made when the witness whose evidence is excluded is called.[52]

g. Effect of Admission.[53] Evidence introduced in a case may be availed of by either party without reintroduction;[54] if elicited on plaintiff's cross-examination by defendant, plaintiff is entitled to the benefit thereof[55] as part of his case in chief.[56] Evidence admitted generally is presumed to be admitted for any legal purpose for which it is admissible,[57] although introduced for a special purpose.[58] But it cannot be used for an improper purpose.[59] Where by express ruling it is limited to one purpose, without exception, it cannot be used for another purpose.[60] Where the admissibility of evidence depends on disputed facts, the court should admit the evidence with instructions on the rules of law governing the different states of fact as they may find them.[61] Evidence received subject to a charge to be given is in the case, although no charge be given thereon.[62]

h. Rulings on Admission or Exclusion of Evidence. A party who objects to the introduction of evidence is entitled to a ruling from the court which should go into the record;[63] and a failure of the court to rule on evidence received subject to objection,[64] upon request so to do,[65] is error. However, it is held that in the absence of such request a failure to rule on the evidence offered is not error,[66] and although the court has erred in failing to rule on the admission or exclusion of evidence, the judgment will not be reversed therefor if no prejudice could have resulted.[67] The court having warned the jury to disregard certain evidence need not repeat its ruling on motion to strike out this evidence;[68] nor need it repeat a ruling excluding evidence.[69] Improper evidence should not be admitted at counsel's risk,[70] but should be excluded in express terms,[71] or the intention of the court to exclude the evidence made to clearly appear.[72] The exclusion of an answered question excludes the answer as well as the question.[73] Counsel who is unable to comprehend the reason for the exclusion of evidence is entitled upon request to a statement from the court of its reasons for exclusion.[74] Evidence cannot be excluded without assigning a reason, where the probability is that the reason for the exclusion could have been obviated if known.[75] The giving of an incorrect reason for the proper exclusion of evidence does not taint the ruling with error.[76]

1. Withdrawal of Evidence. When competent evidence is once put into a case it becomes the property of all the parties for use in the case, and cannot be withdrawn by the party offering it,[77] or withdrawn by the court on its own motion.[78] This is so although it be only in part competent,[79] unless the evidence in the first instance was admitted over the objection of the opposite party,[80] or unless it was elicited on cross-examination.[81] But where improper[82] or immaterial[83] evidence has been admitted the court may permit its withdrawal, or may, on its own motion, withdraw the testimony from the jury,[84] at the close of the trial.[85] The court may permit the withdrawal of original exhibits upon the substitution of copies or duplicates,[86] and such withdrawal and substitution do not constitute a withdrawal of the evidence.[87] A withdrawal by plaintiff of one of several counts in a petition carries with it the evidence admitted under the count withdrawn.[88] An objection to the withdrawal of evidence must assign a reason.[89]

to offer his evidence progressively;[94] and it has been said that in those cases which depend on more than one fact it cannot be a matter of much importance at which end of the testimony the proof is commenced.[95] According to some decisions, the right of a party to introduce evidence, relevant and competent when offered,[96] or which he promises to make relevant and competent by other evidence to be subsequently introduced,[97] is absolute and not subject to the discretion of the court; while others hold that the exercise of the right is within the discretion of the court.[98] In one state the decisions apparently hold that the court cannot control the order in which the party introduces his evidence, whether relevant and competent at the time the offer is made, or not.[99] This doctrine, however, so far as the reported decisions show, finds no support in the decisions of any other jurisdiction.[1]

(II) Evidence Whose Admissibility Depends on Proof of Other Facts.[2] According to the great weight of authority, in order to entitle a party to introduce evidence as a matter of right, it must be admissible at the time when it is offered. If proof of other facts is necessary to render it admissible the court may properly reject it,[3] or require proof of such facts before admitting it.[4] However, it is very generally held that the court may in its discretion admit evidence in advance of the introduction of other facts on which its admissibility depends,[5] and other decisions, without going so far, hold that such action on the part of the court is harmless error when such other facts are subsequently proved.[6] Nevertheless, when evidence of the character under consideration is admitted out of its regular order, it is usually on a promise made by the party, or upon express requirement by the court, that proof of facts on which the admissibility of the evidence depends shall subsequently be made.[7] The better practice, it has been said, is not to depart from the rule requiring such preliminary proof except under particular and urgent circumstances,[8] and then only conditionally upon assurance of counsel that he will furnish such proof.[9]

b. Stage of Trial at Which Evidence Admitted — (I) General Rules Governing Procedure. In order to prevent injurious surprises, and annoying delays in the administration of justice, rules of practice, looking to the orderly introduction of evidence by the respective parties, are essential. The trial has its regular stage of process, and the evidence should be introduced with reference thereto.[10] "Otherwise, the trial will be in perpetual confusion." [11] The general rule is, that plaintiff having the burden of proof must in the first instance produce all the evidence he has in support of his case, then defendant must offer all his evidence in defense, plaintiff then replies, confining his evidence to a direct answer to defendant's case.[12] Ordinarily the rebutting evidence offered by him upon whom the burden of proof rests concludes the introduction of evidence, but not always. Within the discretion of the court, for good reasons, in furtherance of justice, the other party may be permitted to introduce evidence in response to that called forth by the rebuttal testimony,[13] but nothing further in chief, except by permission of the court.[14]

(II) Discretion of Court in Enforcing Rules. The rules set forth in the preceding section, it has been said, are rules of practice, and are considered as under the control of the court, and subject to be varied in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion.[15] They must be enforced or relaxed by the court in further-

Application and extent of rule.— The rule has been applied where the omission is inadvertent (Denver v. Dunsmore, 7 Colo. 328, 3 Pac. 705); where the evidence had been erroneously rejected when offered at the proper time (Dutton v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 630); where it is clear that no improper advantage has been sought in withholding it and no necessary injury will occur to the opposite party through surprise (Offenstein v. Bryan, 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1); where the opposite party is given an opportunity to reply (Meade v. Bowles, 123 Mich. 696, 82 N. W. 658); or makes no objection (Alling v. Forbes, 68 Conn. 575, 37 Atl. 390); where plaintiff has made prima facie case (Bedford, etc., R. Co. v. Rainbolt, 99 Ind. 551; Mayer v. Walker, 82 Tex. 222, 17 S. W. 505); or although plaintiff does not make a prima facie case on opening (Cutbush v. Gilbert, 4 Serg. & R. And plaintiff having the right, during the introduction in chief of her evidence, to assume that defendant would read the deposition it had caused to be taken, it was not an abuse of discretion, on defendant's failure to do so, to allow plaintiff to read it after defendant had concluded the introduction of testimony. In exercising its discretion by permitting a party to introduce evidence out of its regular order, the court should not prejudice the rights of his adversary by cutting off his right to reply to the new matter.[42] The court may, in its discretion, refuse to permit a party to introduce evidence in chief, on surrebuttal, where the ground alleged for its introduction is that the party had just learned that the witness would testify favorably for him.[43]

c. Harmless Error in Admitting Evidence Out of Order. As it is presumed that the jury considers the evidence in its entirety, irrespective of the time and order it is introduced,[44] and as the order of proof is ordinarily deemed to be a matter within the discretion of the trial court,[45] the action of the court in requiring, or permitting, evidence to be introduced out of its proper, logical, and regular order is not ground for reversal, unless it appears to be a great abuse of discretion and the other party is prejudiced thereby.[46] Thus it has been held that no prejudicial error results from the consent of the court to the introduction, as part of the party's case, of evidence which is strictly speaking rebuttal evidence,[47] or to the Powers v. Hazelton, etc., R. Co., 33 Ohio St. 429.

Introduction of evidence after close of trial or argument.— A judgment will not be reversed because certain evidence was allowed to be introduced after the close of the trial, where substantially the same evidence was given during the trial, and no evidence in contradiction thereof was offered (Phillips v. Richardson, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 282), or where the other party does not request a continuance or opportunity to prevent further testimony (American Bridge Co. v. Robinson, 31 Wash. 407, 71 Pac. 1099). It is also held not to be reversible error to permit the introduction of evidence after plaintiff's counsel has concluded his argument (Hill v. Miller, 7 La. Ann. 621), or after the argument on both sides has been concluded (Crawford v. Furlong, 21 Kan. 698), especially where the counsel for the adverse party is given an opportunity to reargue the case on the additional testimony and it appears that, even if the evidence had been excluded, the verdict would necessarily have been the same (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Roberts, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 76, 78 S. W. 522).

introduction, in rebuttal, of evidence which should have been given in chief,[48] or to the reception, in surrebuttal, of testimony which would have been more properly received in rebuttal.[49] Similarly, there will be no reversal for a refusal of the court to admit certain evidence at a particular stage of the case, where no harm has resulted.[50]

2. Reopening Case — a. In General. A motion to reopen a case for the purpose of introducing further evidence in the cause is addressed to the sound discretion of the court,[51] which is not subject to review,[52] unless there has been an abuse

Where a case has been tried by the court without a jury, it is proper for the court to permit a party to reopen his case and introduce further evidence. Burgener v. Lippold, 128 Ill. App. 590. Where the district court, after trial of a case without a jury, takes it under advisement, and a party on the next day applies to introduce further testimony, which is refused for the reason that it should have been presented at the proper time, the court on appeal cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion. thereof.[53] While the exercise of the court's discretion should not be hampered by unreasonable conditions,[54] such discretion is judicial and not arbitrary.[55] It should be reasonably exercised so as not to injure the opposite party through surprise or otherwise,[56] and so as not to deprive either party of the opportunity to introduce material evidence;[57] and an improper exercise thereof may warrant a reversal.[58] Where a good reason is given for the prior omission to introduce evidence, the request to reopen should ordinarily be granted.[59] The discretion of the court in reopening the case and permitting the introduction of further evidence is properly exercised, where the evidence so introduced has been omitted through inadvertence or mistake on the part of counsel,[60] of a witness,[61] of the court,[62] or is newly discovered; [63] or where the opposite party attempts to take advantage of some formal point inadvertently overlooked,[64] where the counsel charges that the judge has misstated the evidence in his recapitulation thereof to the jury,[65] or where a party has been surprised by the testimony of a witness.[66] And, on the other hand, if the moving party fails to show good cause for reopening the case, it is a proper exercise of discretion to refuse to permit him to do so.[67] The discretion of the court is not abused by refusing to reopen the case to admit merely cumulative evidence,[68] especially where no diligence was used to secure the evidence; [69] to permit the taking of further evidence, the existence and materiality of which were known to the party offering it before the case was closed; [70] on account of the sickness of the party, when his counsel announced ready during the absence of the party and failed to ask a postponement; [71] in the absence of any showing as to the materiality of the evidence or the reason it was not sooner produced; [72] to permit further testimony in behalf of one party after the other parties' witnesses have gone away,[73] when failure to sooner produce did not occur through oversight;[74] where the witness sought to be introduced was in court upon subpœna of plaintiff before the motion was made;[75] by declining to permit a witness to be recalled for the purpose of stating what his testimony was;[76] to ask him in regard to a statement made by him in the presence of plaintiff's intestate, which was not contradicted by the intestate, nor was his attention particularly called to it;[77] to permit a party to show the impertinency of testimony which was competent at the time it was offered;[78] by refusing permission to defendant to introduce expert evidence to impeach entries in an account-book, when he had not reserved the right or asked permission so to do and the suspicious entries were open to an ordinary inspection of the book;[79] or by declining to permit parties, or witnesses, who reside in the county where the case is tried, but not present until after the evidence is closed, to then testify.[80] It is abused when the court permits amendments to the pleadings to be made after the evidence is closed and then declines to hear evidence on the new issues;[81] refuses to allow plaintiff to produce additional evidence sufficient to avoid a nonsuit, unless defendant would be prejudiced thereby;[82] or refuses to permit depositions to be read after argument, having previously improperly refused an adjournment on account of the non-arrival of the depositions;[83] or where the court after plaintiff's opening argument declines to permit an important witness of defendant who became sick to testify;[84] and if, after the close of the evidence, material evidence on a controlling point in the case is discovered and the witnesses are in court, it is an abuse of discretion for the court to deny admission of such testimony, where it does not appear that the testimony would have taken the opposite party by surprise.[85]

b. Thus it has been held proper to reopen the case and admit evidence after a party has rested where the evidence has been inadvertently omitted,[87] or is only such as the opposite party might have anticipated; [88] where the opposite party attempts to take advantage of some formal point inadvertently overlooked; [89] where the evidence offered is shown to be newly discovered; [90] or where the purpose of the evidence is to correct evidence previously offered.[91] On the other hand the court may properly refuse to reopen the case to admit facts shown to have been within the knowledge of the party before he rested his case,[92] or which would be ineffectual for the purpose offered.[93]

can it be considered an abuse of discretion to reopen a case for further evidence, where it is not claimed that the adverse party suffered any injustice,[99] or where the court permits him the same latitude in introducing further evidence.[1] Likewise there is no abuse of discretion in refusing to reopen a case for the admission of merely cumulative evidence,[2] evidence to refute other evidence immaterial to any issue,[3] parol evidence to prove title where it is not shown that the written evidence is either lost or destroyed,[4] or evidence, the existence and materiality of which were known to the party offering it before the close of the case,[5] and which it does not appear that he could not have produced before the close of the case.[6]

Amendment after argument of motion.— If, upon the conclusion of the argument of a motion for a nonsuit, plaintiff so amends his declaration that the facts newly alleged, if proven, would entitle him to recover, it is error to either refuse a motion by him to reopen the case to allow the submission of additional evidence in support of the amendment, or to impose upon plaintiff, as a condition to the grant of such a motion, that he shall not himself be further sworn as a witness. Pitts v. Florida Cent., etc., R. Co., 98 Ga. 655, 27 S. E. 189.

What is an abuse of discretion.—Where, in an action for the price of cotton, defendant's whole case rested upon the existence of a custom, plaintiff ought to have been permitted to reopen his case, after motion for a peremptory instruction for defendant, and prove, if he could, the non-existence of the custom, and the discretion of the court was improperly exercised in refusing to permit him to do so. But if the introduction of such additional evidence takes the adverse party by surprise, he should be allowed time and opportunity, if desired, to meet

further evidence it will hear after the case has been reopened.[28] Thus if the court grants leave to introduce further specific testimony, it is discretionary with the court whether it will permit the introduction of other evidence than that specified,[29] and, unless an abuse of this discretion appears, refusal to permit evidence other than that specified is not ground for reversal.[30]

d. Right of Opposite Party to Reply to Additional Evidence. If the other party can show that he can probably repel evidence which the court permits to be introduced after reopening the case,[31] and that it takes him by surprise,[32] the court should permit him to do so,[33] and should postpone [34] or continue [35] the case, upon his request immediately made that the court should do so.[36]

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trial," § 101.

But see Rainwater v. Elmore, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 363, holding that if an affidavit of a party sets forth that justice to the party requires that the witness shall be put under the rule, the court has no discretion but must do so.

Sufficient separation.—Where a witness was allowed to hear the opening of the case, and being the first witness sworn was, after his examination, separated from the other witnesses, this was a sufficient separation. State v. McElmurray, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 33.

Reëxamination.— The court has discretion to permit witnesses to be reëxamined at any time before the verdict, although they were the hearing of the others,[41] or that a witness be excluded while the deposition of another witness is read.[42] The discretion of the court will not be reviewed on appeal,[43] unless there is a manifest abuse thereof.[44] Witnesses in rebuttal should not be put under the rule.[45] As to whether a particular witness, or witnesses, should be released or excepted from the rule is within the sound discretion of the court.[46] Where a witness is excused from the rule on the statement of counsel that he will not be called as a witness, it is not an abuse of discretion on the part of the court to decline to permit him to testify even as an impeaching witness.[47] And where witnesses are put under the rule, and excluded from hearing the testimony, there is no error in refusing to allow a physician summoned as a witness by defendant to hear plaintiff's testimony so that he may be used as an expert.[48]

Matthews v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 130 Ky. 551, 113 S. W. 459. It is not an abuse of sound discretion to allow the president of a company which is a party to remain in the court room, although he was a witness, and the other witnesses were put under rule, since the court may allow a corporation's agent to remain in the court room to assist in managing its case. attorney,[50] who is a witness in the case, cannot be put under the rule for the exclusion of witnesses, and the doctrine applies, although the parties are numerous.[51] The doctrine also applies to parties in interest, although not parties to the record.[52] The party should, however, be called first,[53] and if he then declines to testify, the court may exclude him from the court room while other witnesses are testifying.[54]

3. Agents and Officers of Parties. Where the party is necessarily absent, his agent, whose presence is required by counsel on account of his knowledge of the case, should not be excluded.[55] Where defendant is a corporation it is not error to refuse to permit an officer[56] or employee[57] thereof to remain for the purpose of advising with counsel, unless it appears that he has been put in control of the litigation.[58] And where two officers of a corporation are witnesses, one of them may be put under the rule.[59]

4. Disobedience of the Rule. The court may, in its discretion, permit a witness who has disobeyed the rule to testify,[60] especially if the witness has not heard any of the evidence,[61] or if it does not appear that harm resulted there-

Heaton v. Dennis, 103 Tenn. 155, 52 S. W. 175.

Who may complain of exclusion.— The only person who would be in a position to complain of the exclusion of a party from the court room would be the party so excluded, and no error is committed by the trial court in refusing to order the party so excluded to come into the court room, at the instance of the opposing party, for the purpose of identification by a witness. Knowledge of witness of matters testified to by other witnesses.— Where a witness who is under the rule has been told what a witness for plaintiff had sworn, the court may in its discretion permit such witness to testify as to matters tending to impeach plaintiff's witness. Illustration.—Where a witness was placed under the rule, but violated it by remaining in the court room during the examination of other witnesses, but it appeared that he unintentionally violated the rule on account of being deaf and believing that he had been discharged therefrom, and that he heard but little of the evidence, and that plaintiff's counsel was unaware of his presence in the court room during the examination of other witnesses, there was no abuse of discretion in permitting such witness to testify for plaintiff. International, etc., R. Co. v. Hugen, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 326, 100 S. W. 1000.

from,[62] or if the witness is called to testify to a different branch of the case from that testified to by other witnesses.[63] And if the disobedience is without the fault of the party calling the witness, it must permit him to testify,[64] and leave the party calling him to suffer such loss as an impairment of the witness' credit may sustain by disobedience of the rule.[65] It is the witness and not the party who should be punished.[66] The court's discretion is reviewable on appeal,[67] if the abuse thereof is apparent.[68] If the rule has been disobeyed with the knowledge or by the procurement of the party seeking to use the witness, the court may refuse to admit the testimony.[69]

5. Time and Manner of Making Application For Exclusion. The application for an exclusion of witnesses from the court room will be refused if it is not made until after testimony has been received.[70] The proper practice is to furnish opposing counsel with a list of witnesses so that they may be put under the rule;[71] but failure to furnish a complete list will not deprive a party of the right to call a witness who in fact was not in the court room during the progress of the trial, and has not been put under the rule.[72] But the court may decline to permit such witness to testify if his evidence is merely cumulative and if no reason is assigned for failure to have him summoned in time to be put under the rule.[73]

6. Right of Attorneys to Confer With Excluded Witnesses. Attorneys should not be allowed ad libitum to confer with witnesses who are under the rule, but conferences should be held in the presence of an officer.[74]

to interpose an objection to the question;[90] or instructions should be asked that the objectionable matter be disregarded.[91]

c. Requisites and Sufficiency of Objections — (I) IN GENERAL. Objections to the introduction of evidence should be made openly.[92] They must be based on proper assumptions of fact.[93] And an objection to evidence which assumes facts in dispute under the pleadings is properly overruled.[94] An objection to a question is to be judged by the then state of the case.[95]

(II) DEFINITENESS REQUIRED. An objection to evidence must be so definite as to enable the court to intelligently rule upon it,[96] and to show the opposite party the point of the objection,[97] and must be specific enough to show the trial court its harmful bearing from the standpoint of the objector.[98]

If the objection is to a document it must be addressed to the document and not to the testimony of a witness as to its execution. Shumate v. Heman, 181 U. S. 402, 21 S. Ct. 645, 45 L. ed. 916 [affirming 156 Mo. 534, 57 S. W. 559].

If the objection is to a question on the ground that it calls for a conclusion it should separate the good from the bad and be lim-

tion of a witness to a question including several different propositions, part of which are not subject to the objection; that ordinarily it is incumbent upon the examiner to frame his question so that in its entirety it is free from the objection made, which otherwise the objection should have sustained.[1]

(IV) STATEMENT OF GROUNDS OF OBJECTION — (A) Necessity — (1) GENERAL RULE. The general rule is that an objection to evidence must state the specific grounds on which it is based;[2] that an objection which states no ground therefor will not suffice.[3] This rule is so well settled and has been applied ited to so much as asks for a conclusion. Selma St., etc., R. Co. v. Campbell, 158 Ala. 438, 48 So. 378.

Erroneous instructions.— When on a general objection the court admits evidence partly competent and partly incompetent and then by instruction designates the incompetent evidence as competent, it commits reversible error. Budd v. Brooke, 3 Gill (Md.) 198, 43 Am. Dec. 321.

obviated.[49] A general objection to a question is also sufficient where a specific objection,[50] or repeated specific objections, have been made to the same line of questioning,[51] or where there is no evidence in support of any cause of action alleged.[52] Where evidence is excluded on a general objection the action of the court will be sustained if any tenable objection to its admission in fact existed.[53] But if no possible ground appears upon which the ruling of the court in excluding evidence can be sustained a reversal will follow.[54] The fact that the objection is not specific will not prevent a review of the ruling of the court, and a reversal, if the testimony was competent.[55]

If counsel offering the evidence asks opposing counsel to make a specific objection, which he declines to do, the rule is otherwise. Colburn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 109 Wis. 377, 85 N. W. 354. The object of making objections is not solely to enable the objecting party to insist on error in the appellate court but also to enable counsel putting the questions to avoid error and more effectually to prove his case or defense.

On appeal it will be assumed in the absence of any request on the part of the opposing party, or the court, to make the objection more definite, that it was understood, and that the ruling was placed upon the right ground. Tooley v. Bacon, 70 N. Y. 34.

If the true objections could not have been obviated on being stated, the ruling of the court will be sustained in excluding evidence without regard to the grounds of objection stated by counsel. Miller v. Van Tassel, 24 Cal. 459.

Limitation of rule.—Where a witness is asked what a party, in whose behalf he is called, had said about the litigation, an objection that a self-serving declaration is thereby called for is sufficiently indicated by the use of the word "incompetent," and the addition of the words, "irrelevant and immaterial," does not so far detract from its force as to render it unavailing on review. (B) Requisites and Sufficiency of Statement — (1) IN GENERAL. In applying the rule that the objection must state the specific grounds on which it is based it has been held that if the objection is on the ground that there is a variance between the pleadings and proof, it must specify wherein the variance consists;[73] if that there is better evidence, the nature of such evidence must be disclosed;[74] if, on the ground of incompetency, the reasons why it is incompetent should be pointed out;[75] if that an instrument is not made and certified according to law the objection must point out in what respect it is lacking;[76] if that it has been altered it must point out wherein the alteration consists;[77] if that a proper bill of particulars has not been served, it must point out the defects in the bill;[78] if that preliminary facts have not been proved it must specify what is lacking.[79] If the objection is that a hypothetical question does not correctly state the facts it must point out wherein the defect lies,[80] and if it is asserted that a hypothetical question varies from the proof, it should be pointed out in which respect the question does so vary.[81]

(2) SPECIFICATION OF GROUNDS AS AFFECTING GROUNDS NOT SPECIFIED. It is a rule of universal application that the objection is deemed to be limited to the ground or grounds specified and does not cover others not specified.[82] In other words, where specific grounds are stated the implication is that there are no others,[83] or if others that they are waived.[84] If the objection is to the identity of an instrument, it is not met by an objection to the competency of the witness.[85] If the objection is to the competency of the witness,[86] or that he is not qualified as an expert,[87] an objection to the competency of the question asked is not sufficient. An objection on the ground of variance raises no question that the evidence was hearsay.[88] An objection that a copy of a contract was not shown to be a true copy does not raise the question that no sufficient reason was shown for not producing the original.[89] An objection to the relevancy, competency, and materiality of the subject-matter of a question raises no question as to its form.[90] So an objection that sufficient facts are not stated will not raise the question whether the facts assumed have been proved.[91] An objection to the introduction of a document based on the incompetency of the witness offering it does not raise the objection that the document was incompetent because of extraneous matter.[92] An objection to the competency of a witness on the ground of interest does not raise the question of his competency on the ground of public policy.[93] An objection that a deed was defectively acknowledged does not raise the objection that the execution was not duly proven.[94] An objection to the competency of an attorney that it is not shown that he was not acting for his client is not sufficient to raise the question that an attorney is not competent to testify without the consent of his client.[95] And an objection that the evidence is in its nature inadmissible is not raised by an objection that the evidence cannot be introduced under the pleadings.[96] But an objection that the testimony is not in the cognizance of the witness, an expert,[97] or of any witness,[98] is sufficient to challenge the evidence for incompetency as expert testimony.

(v) Joint Objections. Evidence is properly admitted over a joint objection by several parties where it is competent as to any of them.[99] Where evidence is admissible as to one party, others desiring to object must make the objection in such form that the appellate court can clearly see the error complained of.[1]

(vi) Objection Embracing Two Subjects. If an objection is double and one of the grounds assigned is untenable, error cannot be assigned to the overruling of the objection. No duty rests on the court to separate that part of the objection which is tenable from that part which is not.[2]

d. Time For Making. For reasons which are perfectly obvious, an objection to the introduction of testimony must be made in apt time,[3] at the earliest possible opportunity after the objection becomes apparent.[4] However, it cannot be made in advance of the offer of the evidence sought to be introduced.[5] And where a question is so framed that the court cannot say whether an answer thereto would be inadmissible until after the answer is given, an objection to the question is premature.[6] It must be made at the trial,[7] and at the time the evidence is offered,[8]

Where evidence has been taken and filed out of time, but no motion to suppress has instructions,[44] limited to a particular issue,[45] or disregarded by the appellate court.[46]

(B) Application of Rule. The failure to object when evidence is offered waives previous objections to the admissibility of the fact testified to,[47] and objections to depositions previously made on motion to suppress.[48] So a failure to object waives objections that the witness was not sworn;[49] that the answer states a legal conclusion;[50] that the opinion of an expert is based on an ex parte statement;[51] that there was an irregularity in the taking of an affidavit;[52] that there is a variance between the evidence and the pleadings;[53] and that the evidence is hearsay[54]

of the same kind,[81] or by cross-examination in relation to the objectionable matter.[82]

(v) By Failure to Repeat Objections. Where an objection to evidence is distinctly made and overruled, it need not be repeated to the same class of evidence to save the objection,[83] although the question is asked of another witness.[84] The court may treat the objection as a continuing one;[85] but if the evidence, when offered, is on objection excluded,[86] or if a question asked and objected to is not answered by the witness,[87] it is necessary to repeat the objection when the evidence is again offered or the question asked. Where an objection is once specifically made, it is sufficient for the party thereafter to state that he objects on the same grounds as before.[88]

(vi) By Other Acts. A party cannot object to the introduction of evidence of a fact when he permits the same fact to be testified to without objection,[89]

Application and extent of rule.— The rule applies, although the court in ruling on its admission states that if it should be shown evidence is admitted subject to be supplemented by other evidence which is not introduced,[18] where evidence is admitted by consent, but subject to objection,[19] where the witness testifies without a question being addressed to him,[20] where a question is answered before a sustained objection thereto has been interposed [21] or after an objection thereto has been interposed and sustained,[22] or if the witness testifies beyond the ruling of the court prescribing the limits within which he may answer.[23] It is not necessary where the evidence was admitted over repeated objections and exceptions,[24] or after deliberate discussion.[25]

b. Grounds. It is a sufficient ground for a motion to strike out that want of knowledge of a witness testifying appeared on cross-examination after the court had ruled that the witness was competent,[26] or that the answer to a question asked is not responsive; [27] and it is error to deny a motion to strike out an answer to be improper it should be excluded from the consideration of the jury. Cassell v. Vincennes First Nat. Bank, 169 Ill. 380, 48 N. E. 701.

to a proper question, when such answer is irresponsive.[28] So it has been held sufficient ground to strike out that the answer is indefinite,[29] or that evidence is prejudicial hearsay.[30] And evidence received subject to be connected should be stricken out on motion where it is not so connected.[31] Relevant evidence should not be stricken out, although the witness is not positive in his opinion or recollection;[32] although the source of information of the witness is meager;[33] although the evidence is in part contradictory,[34] even though such witness be a party,[35] or because the credibility of the testimony of a witness is shaken on cross-examination,[36] or is so modified on cross-examination as to render it of little value,[37] or although the witness suppresses or alters his testimony.[38] But where the cross-examination shows that the witness is not testifying from his personal knowledge, it is error to decline to strike out his testimony.[39] A party cannot insist that pertinent and relevant evidence be stricken out because insufficient;[40] but the court may under such circumstances exclude the testimony,[41] unless there is some testimony to sustain the party's case.[42] The mere fact that evidence is prejudicial to a party is no ground for moving to strike it out.[43] Evidence competent for any purpose,[44] and evidence adduced by the party moving, although illegal,[45] cannot be stricken out on motion. That a witness testifies to a document not introduced but the introduction of which would make the testimony clearer is not ground for motion to strike out;[46] nor is the fact that a party, par-

Limitations of rule.— The rule that, where a portion of the testimony is unobjectionable, the party moving to strike out must designate with precision the particular portion challenged, has no application where the whole answer is subject to the objection made. Sterne v. Mariposa Commercial, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 516, 97 Pac. 66.

Unintelligible answer.— The motion may be overruled if it is addressed to a portion of an answer of a witness, if the balance of the answer would be unintelligible. Y. Suppl. 1129].

Part of answer uncontroverted.— Where the motion is addressed to certain testimony, the overruling of the motion cannot be justified on the ground that a portion of the testimony embraced in the motion is material, where such portion is a mere incident the improper with such certainty as to leave no doubt as to the evidence challenged.[51] It must specifically assign a tenable reason for striking out the evidence;[52] and the statement of one ground of objection is a waiver of all other grounds.[53] Where a motion to strike out evidence is made on several grounds stated in the conjunctive, it need not be denied where only a part of the grounds are well taken.[54] The motion must include all the similar objectionable evidence and is not controverted. Antle v. Craven, 109 Iowa 346, 80 N. W. 396.

Restatement of motion.— Counsel for defendant objected to a line of evidence elicited on cross-examination, and moved to have it excluded. The court sustained the objection, and, on inquiry as to whether the motion would be sustained, replied that a part of the evidence ought to stand, but that a part of it might be irrelevant. It was held that the motion to strike should have been restated in such a manner that it could be determined what evidence was intended to be left in the record, and on failure to restate the motion defendant may not urge error on appeal. d. Necessity For Previous Objection. Where it is not apparent from a question that the answer will be inadmissible, the question need not be objected to, to entitle the opposing party to move to strike out the answer.[57] Ordinarily, however, where evidence is admitted without objection, the overruling of a subsequent motion to strike out is not error,[58] especially where no reason is given

Issues not raised by pleadings.— If the evidence is in support of an issue not raised by the pleadings, and manifestly unjust to the party complaining, the court should exclude it on motion, after the evidence has closed, and instruct the jury to disregard it. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 321, 44 S. W. 589.

case [71] or defense,[72] or the conclusion of the evidence,[73] after the close of the case,[74] or after the case has been partly argued,[75] where there is nothing to excuse the delay.[76] If the objection goes to the competency of the witness it is too late to move to strike out after the close of the testimony.[77] Where, however, the direct examination does not show the incompetency of the testimony,[78] or the ground for the exclusion of the evidence appears for the first time on cross-examination,[79] the motion to strike out may be made as soon as the impropriety of the evidence appears. The motion is premature if addressed to evidence the competency or relevancy of which may thereafter be made to appear [80] The court, however, may on motion strike out evidence improperly admitted, although the motion was not made in due time,[81] and it may do so at any time during the day of trial,[82] at the close of plaintiff's case,[83] before the case is given to the jury,[84] at any stage of the case,[85] or even after the closing arguments.[86]

f. Hearing and Determination of Motion. Unless the right to have the evidence stricken out clearly appears the court is not bound to strike it out.[87] In determining the propriety of the motion the court cannot pass on disputed facts.[88] It is not error for the court to take the motion under advisement where the ruling sustaining the motion is accompanied by an instruction to the jury not to regard the testimony.[89] Where the court is evenly divided the evidence should not be stricken out.[90]

g. Waiver of Motion. Similarly where the objection to the evidence is subsequently withdrawn,[91] or the evidence is stricken out by consent,[92] no error can be assigned on the action of the court in denying the motion; and the same result follows where the moving party refuses to consent to an offer of the other party to withdraw the evidence, thus causing it to remain before the jury.[93]

3. Exceptions[94] — a. Necessity For. To make an objection available on appeal, it must be followed by an exception,[95] which must appear in the bill of exceptions.[96] The place of an exception cannot be taken by a request to exclude the evidence from the jury.[97]

b. Form and Requisites. The exception should show by which party it is taken, and if it relates to the admission of evidence, whether it was taken to the remarks of the judge in respect to its admissibility, or to his refusal to admit such evidence.[98] It must be based upon a prior objection.[99] It must be specific and show clearly what was excepted to,[1] and must state the grounds of objection.[2]

An exception cannot be taken in gross.[3] It must specify the questions and answers to which exception is taken.[4] An exception to the reading of each answer and question of a deposition is insufficient.[5] If to the exclusion of evidence, it must show what the witness would have answered in response to the question.[6] But where an objection to the competency of a witness is sustained, it is not necessary to state in the exception what the party offering him expected to prove by him.[7]

c. Time For Taking. It is very generally held that exceptions to rulings on evidence must be taken at the trial,[8] at the time the ruling is made,[9] before the retirement of the jury,[10] and before the jury has delivered its verdict.[11] They must be taken at the time the court decides to admit or reject the evidence, but if then noted they may be reduced to form later,[12] and entered on the minutes.[13] If to a question, the exception must be taken before other questions are asked.[14] Exceptions to rulings limiting the number of witnesses should be taken at the time the rulings are made.[15]

d. Waiver of Exceptions. An exception to the exclusion of evidence is waived, if the party declines to re-offer the evidence upon a withdrawal of the objection,[16] unless in the meantime the witness has departed;[17] or by action of the party inconsistent with the exception;[18] or if the exclusion is based upon an assumed fact, as to the existence of which counsel upon request declines to throw doubt.[19] An exception to the admission of evidence is waived by a demurrer to the evidence, or a motion to dismiss for insufficiency;[20] but not by failure to except to the overruling of a motion that the evidence be stricken out,[21] or by a subsequent amendment of the record making the evidence admissible.[22]

App. 615, 82 S. W. 205.

Nebraska.— Faulkner v. Gilbert, 61 Nebr. 602, 85 N. W. 843, holding that where the answer admits the execution of a contract sued on, it is prejudicial error to receive evidence on the trial tending to show that such contract did not exist at the time the answer admits defendant executed it, or for some years thereafter.

New Hampshire.— Gibson v. Boston, 75 N. H. 405, 75 Atl. 103; Finkelstein v. Keene Electric R. Co., 75 N. H. 303, 73 Atl. 705, holding that, in suit for injuries to a passenger, error in admitting the conductor's report, stating that the accident was wholly due to plaintiff's want of care, was prejudicial to him.

New York.— Statler v. George A. Ray Mfg. Co., 195 N. Y. 478, 88 N. E. 1063 [reversing 125 N. Y. App. Div. 69, 109 N. Y. Suppl. 172]; Connolly v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 179 N. Y. 7, 71 N. where the same, or substantially the same, evidence has been previously received without or over objection,[37] and it does not appear that the evidence, when admitted the second time, exerts more influence than when admitted the first time,[38] or that other prejudice has resulted.[39] The drawing out of improper testimony from a witness on cross-examination is harmless, where the witness has testified to the same effect on direct examination,[40] as it is also harmless for a witness to reassert, when called in rebuttal, a statement which he had made on his examination in chief,[41] or to restate, on redirect examination, what he testified to on cross-examination.[42]

(II) By Other Evidence — (A) In General. A rule which has been stated and applied many times by reviewing courts is that the admission of improper and objectionable evidence is harmless error, where the fact involved is fully and clearly established by other evidence which is competent.[43] This rule applies

d. Matters Requiring no Proof — (i) Matters of Common and Judicial Knowledge. As matters of law, such as the contents of a statute, require no proof, the admission of evidence tending to prove the same is harmless error.[84] So too it is not prejudicial to admit evidence to establish matters which, in the absence of any evidence, the court or jury would be presumed to know,[85] or which necessarily follow, as legal conclusions, or presumptions from the facts already established.[86] It is thus unprejudicial to receive evidence relating to a matter of claiming under a chattel mortgage property attached by plaintiff does not attack the bona fides of the mortgage, and on its face it shows a consideration, error in admitting testimony as to the amount of indebtedness secured thereby is harmless. Rights and liabilities.— It is error without prejudice to admit evidence bearing on the rights (Union Sheet Metal Works v. Dodge, 129 Cal. 390, 62 Pac. 41; Toluca, etc., R. Co. v. Haws, 194 Ill. 92, 62 N. E. 312) and liabilities (West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Martin, 154 Ill. 523, 39 N. E. 140; Blumenthal v. Union Electric Co., 129 Iowa 322, 105 N. Even though the facts of the case are such as not to call for any application of the rule of care testified to by a witness, the admission of his testimony is harmless where it is obviously true (Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Wilkinson, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 48, 110 S. W. 470).

Matters adjudicated.— It is harmless error to admit evidence bearing on the validity of orders in a probate proceeding, when such question has been finally adjudicated (Kalteyer v. Wipff, 92 Tex. 673, 52 S. W. 63), as it is also harmless, in an action upon a judgment, to admit in evidence the full transcript of the court proceedings leading up to the judgment (Whitley v. General Electric Co., 18 Tex. Corporate existence.— One who has dealt with a corporation, as such, cannot complain of the admission of incompetent evidence to prove incorporation, as the establishment of the fact of the dealing between the parties renders unnecessary proof of corporate existence. Legality of marriage.— After plaintiff's marriage has been proved by competent evidence, in an action in which its validity was attacked, defendant is not injured by the admission of a copy of a decree of divorce which the court takes judicial notice,[87] or for a witness to express an opinion on a matter of common knowledge, experience, or observation.[88] Where, as a matter of law, a person is bound to know a certain thing, it is not reversible error to admit evidence for the purpose of showing knowledge or lack of knowledge.[89]

(II) Construction of Writing in Evidence. Although the construction of contracts and other written instruments is ordinarily one of law for the court,[90] and parol evidence affecting such writings is generally incompetent and inadmissible,[91] the admission of testimony tending to show the intent of the parties to a clear and unambiguous instrument, or their understanding of its terms and the construction put upon it by them, is harmless error when in consonance with the plain meaning of the instrument and the interpretation given it by the court.[92]

lost.[2] Conversely, the erroneous admission of written evidence may be cured by proper oral testimony on the same point.[3] But in order to effect a cure in such cases the subsequent evidence must be substantially the same as that improperly admitted.[4]

(2) Evidence Curing Defects and Supplying Omissions. The admission of incompetent testimony where subsequently explained by the witness so as to work no prejudice will not constitute reversible error.[5]

(B) Evidence Admitted in Favor of Adverse Party. Error in the admission of evidence offered by one party is cured where practically the same evidence is afterward introduced by the adverse party,[6] or elicited on cross-examination.[7] Similarly defects or omissions in evidence introduced by one party may be cured or supplied by evidence subsequently introduced by his adversary,[8] or brought out on cross-examination.[9] But an error in admitting evidence is not cured by the objecting party offering evidence in rebuttal thereof.[10]

(c) Evidence Rendering Incompetent Evidence Admissible — (1) IN GENERAL. The erroneous admission of evidence, which is at the time inadmissible, is cured by the subsequent introduction of evidence which renders it admissible.[11] Thus error in admitting evidence as part of the cause of action which can be relevant only in rebuttal is harmless where it afterward becomes relevant in rebuttal.[12] Similarly cross-examination on a fact not brought out on direct examination is harmless, where the fact is subsequently shown.[13] But the fact that evidence, incompetent for the purpose for which it was offered and admitted, subsequently becomes admissible for another purpose, as the case is developed, does not render the ruling harmless.[14]

(2) SUPPLYING NECESSARY PRELIMINARY PROOF.[15] The order of proof is largely within the discretion of the court, and the admission of evidence without the requisite preliminary or connecting proof is not prejudicial error, where such proof is subsequently introduced,[16] or offered, and withdrawn only on the opposite

(B) Direction of Verdict. Where the court instructs the jury to return a verdict in favor of one party to an action, without submitting to their determination any issue in the case, error in the admission of evidence during the trial is harmless,[41] the same rule governing in such case as if the trial had been to the court without a jury.[42]

(C) Special Findings. A special finding by the jury may render objections to the admission of evidence unavailable, when the objections might otherwise be tenable,[43] as where it shows that their verdict was not affected by such evidence,[44] or that it was based upon other evidence.[45] But if there is but a single issue in a case and a general verdict, and there are no findings upon subordinate questions, error in admitting evidence as tending to prove the main issue is not cured by a statement of the jury that they have not considered it.[46] And where the finding indicates that the inadmissible evidence had some influence on the jury, the error is prejudicial.[47]

(D) Appellant Not Entitled to Favorable Decision in Any Event. Where the evidence for the party on whom rests the burden of proof fails to sustain the burden, the erroneous admission of evidence for the adverse party is harmless.[48]

damages are recovered,[52] or where the amount recovered is not excessive.[53] And the same rule applies where the jury renders a verdict for defendant,[54] or finds that plaintiff is not entitled to any damages[55] on the issue to which the improper evidence related.[56] But where inadmissible evidence must have been taken into consideration in order to make the damages equal the verdict, its admission is prejudicial error.[57]

and influenced their verdict.[61] On the other hand it is held in some cases that error in admitting improper evidence is not cured by striking it out, unless it appears that such evidence did not affect the verdict.[62] In order to effect a cure the withdrawal must be as broad as the admission,[63] and the charge must be sufficiently definite to clearly identify the portion to be withdrawn,[64] and so explicit and unequivocal as to preclude the inference that the jury may have been influenced thereby.[65] Moreover the withdrawal must be by act of court and not of counsel;[66] it may be made of the court's own motion or at the request of a party.[67]

(B) By Withdrawal of and Instructions to Disregard Evidence. The general rule is that, if inadmissible evidence has been received during a trial, the error of its admission is cured by its subsequent withdrawal before the trial closes and by an instruction to the jury to disregard it,[68] or even by an instruction to dis-

to striking the improper evidence out of the case.[70] There is this exception to the rule, where the evidence thus admitted is so impressive that in the opinion of the appellate court its effect is not removed from the minds of the jury by its subsequent withdrawal, or by an instruction of the court to disregard it, the judgment will be reversed on account of its admission, and a new trial will be granted.[71] According to another line of cases, error in the admission of evidence cannot be cured by instructing the jury to disregard it,[72] unless from the whole case it is reasonably clear that the evidence did not prejudice the party so objecting.[73]

In any case whether or not the improper reception of evidence is prejudicial depends upon the relation of the evidence withdrawn to all the evidence in the case, how long it is left with the jury, and the surrounding circumstances.[74] Where the incompetent evidence thus admitted is the only evidence bearing directly on the question at issue, its withdrawal by instructions cannot cure the error.[75] But where there is other evidence to support the verdict, it will be presumed that the instructions were obeyed and the error, in its admission, cured.[76] Moreover the withdrawal or cautionary instruction must be absolute,[77] and broad enough to cover all the evidence improperly admitted.[78]

(c) By Instructions — (1) IN GENERAL. It has been said, and with good reason, that the practice of permitting illegal evidence to go to the jury, and afterward endeavoring by the giving of oral or written directions to divert their minds from the consideration of such evidence, is one that should not be encouraged,[79] and it is said that where illegal testimony has been admitted by the court, nothing short of a direct and unequivocal charge to the jury, that they must disregard the illegal proof, can cure the error of its admission.[80] On the other hand it is held in many cases that an error in admitting improper evidence may be cured by an instruction which in effect directs the jury to disregard such evidence;[81]

which renders it immaterial,[82] or which so explains it that it can work no prejudice to appellant,[83] which takes away from the party offering it all possible advantage which he might have gained from its introduction,[84] or which renders it impossible that the jury could have been misled.[85] Thus the admission of improper evidence is no cause for reversing a judgment, if the court afterward peremptorily instructs the jury that it is incompetent,[86] or insufficient to establish the fact for which it was introduced,[87] or that the facts sought to be established by such testimony, if proven, would not warrant a recovery, or constitute a defense, as the case may be.[88] But error in admitting incompetent evidence is not cured by giving an instruction showing that it is incompetent or irrelevant, where the effect is to mislead the jury to the prejudice of a party.[89] The admission of improper testimony on the question of damages is not cured by proper instructions on the measure of damages,[90] unless the objectionable evidence is explicitly withdrawn from the consideration of the jury,[91] or it is apparent from the verdict that appellant was not harmed thereby.[92]

tion by an instruction requested by the objecting party, the objection as to admission is deemed to be waived.[95]

(3) Submitting Proper Issues and Ignoring Others. Where the instructions of the court direct the attention of the jury only to the specific issues in the case,[96] and the issue sought to be proved by the improper testimony is not submitted to the jury,[97] error in the admission of such evidence is without prejudice. If, however, the evidence thus improperly admitted must have been misleading to the jury, the error will not be obviated by such instructions.[98] And where the testimony legally before the jury does not warrant their verdict, the ignoring in the charge of testimony erroneously admitted does not cure the error in its admission.[99]

it is not a ground for reversal that a party is permitted to withdraw evidence introduced by him where no prejudice thereby results to his adversary.[7] Conversely where a party is refused permission to withdraw testimony which his opponent would have had the right to put in evidence, the error is harmless.[8] The striking out of evidence too indefinite to be considered,[9] or which could not have affected the result,[10] is not assignable as error. So striking out evidence is not ground for reversal where there is sufficient other evidence of the same facts,[11] or where the court afterward correctly directs a verdict.[12] Nor can a party complain of a correct ruling striking out testimony, although the objecting party did not give his reasons for asking such ruling.[13] It is not error for a court to refuse to strike out evidence which has been admitted by agreement,[14] or which is immaterial,[15] irrelevant,[16] unnecessary,[17] or cumulative,[18] and which could not have affected the result.[19] Nor is a party injured by a refusal to strike out objectionable testimony, if the same party afterward introduces the same testimony,[20] or if counsel afterward concede the facts stated in such testimony,[21] or if the facts sought to be proved thereby have been established by other and competent evidence.[22] But the refusal of the court to strike out incompetent or irrelevant testimony which might have caused prejudice against the party is reversible error.[23]

b. Cure of Errors. Error in striking out testimony is cured by the subsequent reinstatement thereof before the case is submitted to the jury,[24] or by the subsequent admission of other testimony on the same point.[25] Error in refusing to strike out certain testimony is cured by subsequently striking it out,[26] by an instruction to disregard it,[27] or by other instructions rendering such refusal non-prejudicial.[28]

3. Exclusion of Evidence[29] — a. Prejudicial Effect in General — (I) General Rules. It is ordinarily held that the exclusion of competent material evidence on a question in issue is reversible error;[30] but if it appears that such exclusion did not prejudice the complaining party,[31] and could not have affected the Effect of failure to avail of permission to reintroduce evidence.— Failure on the part of the objecting party to avail himself of permission to reintroduce the evidence stricken out is a waiver of any objection to striking out such evidence. Where the evidence is in direct conflict, the exclusion of competent evidence is a matter of much more consequence than it would be in a case where the testimony on the point was substantially all one way. Chlanda v. St. Louis Transit Co., 213 Mo. 244, 112 S. W. 249; Keller v. Morton, 63 Misc. (N. Y.) 340, 117 N. Y. Suppl. 200. Thus where the evidence is so conflicting that it is doubtful whether plaintiff has sustained his burden of producing a preponderance of evidence, almost any error in the exclusion of evidence offered by defendant becomes material. Fink v. Glauber, 121 N. Y. Suppl. 297. Where the evidence on some of the important phases of the case is sharply conflicting and the conclusion is determinable only on the credibility of the witnesses, the error in excluding evidence of the good character of accused is prejudicial. In re Darrow, (Ind. App. 1908) 83 N. E. 1026.

The exclusion of proper evidence directly corroborative of the evidence of a party, in conflict with the testimony of the adverse party, is prejudicial. Hanson v. Kline, 136 Iowa 101, 113 N. Illustrations.— Error in the exclusion of evidence is harmless where a different construction of a statute adopted on appeal renders the evidence immaterial. Smith v. Hazard, 110 Cal. 145, 42 Pac. 465. It is harmless error to exclude evidence that some of plaintiffs have died, where the action was not abated, or the issues changed, by such deaths. Mason v. Finch, 28 Mich. 282. The exclusion of proof in support of a right to reform a sheriff's deed, executed pursuant to a sale under a tax judgment, was not error, where the court was without jurisdiction to reform the deed. case as subsequently developed, and its rejection, if offered subsequently, would have been erroneous.[36]

(III) Evidence Not Beneficial to Appellant. It is not error to reject testimony on a trial, which, if permitted to be offered, could have been of no benefit to the party.[37] Thus where evidence offered by a party to prove a certain fact does not tend to establish such fact,[38] or is insufficient for that purpose,[39] or tends to prove the issue in favor of his adversary,[40] the exclusion of such evidence is not prejudicial, if no other evidence as to the fact is either introduced or offered.[41] On the other hand the exclusion of evidence, which may form a link in the chain of testimony, is error, although it may not be sufficient of itself to establish the proposition for which it is offered,[42] and this, although at the time no disclosure is made by counsel of an intention to prove the additional facts to establish such proposition.[43] The mere fact that the rejected evidence would have been futile if received does not show that its rejection was not prejudicial, because the proposer might have introduced other evidence or have otherwise changed his course at the trial if the ruling of the court had been right and his rejected evidence had been received.[44] Similarly the fact that the objecting party has not made a case for the jury does not negative the presumption of prejudice, for his failure to make a case may be the result of the error complained of.[45]

(IV) EVIDENCE IMPROPER FOR PURPOSE OFFERED. When evidence is offered accompanied with a statement that it is offered for a particular purpose, its rejection is not reversible error, because it is admissible for another purpose not called to the attention of the court,[46] especially where such other purpose is wholly inconsistent with the theory upon which the proponent is trying the action,[47] or where the evidence, if received, could have but slight effect.[48]

(V) EVIDENCE OFFERED FOR IMPROPER PURPOSE. The exclusion of evidence, technically admissible, is no ground for reversal, where it appears that it was offered to establish a void transaction,[49] or as introductory to other evidence which was in itself inadmissible.[50]

(VI) EFFECT OF DETERMINATION. The improper exclusion of evidence is often rendered harmless by the findings of the court or jury.[51] Thus the exclusion of evidence is harmless error where the jury finds as a fact the matter which such evidence would have tended to show.[52] So where the jury find against the existence of a fact, the exclusion of evidence assuming its existence becomes non-prejudicial.[53] Similarly when an issue of fact is determined in favor of the excepting party, the exclusion of evidence offered by him on that issue is not prejudicial,[54] unless it appears that the excluded evidence tended to increase or diminish in

For example where plaintiff was not permitted to introduce the first step in the proof of his case, and had no interest therefore in offering any evidence to avoid the proof of the other side, which he might have done if the court had given him a standing in the case which would have made it avail him to do so, the judgment was reversed. Error in excluding evidence in mitigation of damages is not prejudicial where the damages assessed are not excessive (Carty v. Boeseke-Dawe Co., 2 Cal. App. 646, 84 Pac. 267; Kirby v. Lower, 139 Mo. App. 677, 124 S. if error, is harmless.[59] Thus, in an action for personal injuries or wrongful death, any error in excluding evidence of negligence on the part of defendant is harmless, where it appears that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery.[60] Similarly, where plaintiff fails to sustain his case, any error in excluding evidence offered by defendant is harmless, since, in such case, no disproof is necessary.[61]

it by the rejected evidence,[63] or where the verdict or decree is based on other sufficient evidence.[64] Illustration of the application of this principle is found in holdings that, where the fact in question is otherwise sufficiently established, no prejudicial effect attaches to the erroneous action of the court in limiting cross-examination,[65] or the number of witnesses;[66] that the rejection of the testimony of an interested witness is not prejudicial where testimony regarding the same fact is given by disinterested witnesses;[67] and that the exclusion of documentary evidence is harmless error, where the contents thereof or the claim sought to be supported or defeated by such evidence is clearly established by other evidence.[68] The rule, however, applies only where the fact involved is clearly established by other evidence, and not where the evidence is conflicting,[69] or possibly where the evidence excluded is of more probative value than that admitted.[70]

(B) Evidence Already Admitted. As a party cannot be injured by the rejection of cumulative evidence, it is no ground for review that the court erroneously excluded evidence, where the same or substantially the same evidence had already been admitted,[71] especially where the evidence admitted is direct and that excluded is indirect.[72] Thus, where a written instrument is already in evidence, it is harmless error to deny a party the privilege of showing matters contained therein, either by oral testimony [73] or by deposition; [74] while conversely the exclusion of documentary evidence is harmless, where testimony has already been given concerning the contents thereof or the matters sought to be shown thereby.[75] In accordance with the rule, it is also frequently held to be error without prejudice to exclude questions and answers which, on account of the same witness having already given identically or substantially the same testimony, would amount to a mere repetition,[76] or, where the witness has testified to the facts in detail, to

Interrogatories propounded before trial.— It has been held that error in permitting the president of defendant corporation to refuse to answer certain interrogatories propounded to him before the trial is not cured by the introduction of evidence at the trial tending to show the facts in regard to the matters rement.[88] Indeed, the error may be cured without the excluded evidence being actually admitted,[89] provided the party offering it is subsequently given an opportunity to introduce it, either by express offer and permission of the court,[90] or by the adverse party withdrawing his objection,[91] as the party is deemed to waive the original error when he refuses to accept full reparation thereof.[92] In some cases, error committed in rejecting written evidence may be cured by the subsequent reception of oral evidence establishing the fact sought to be proved,[93] while, conferred to in such interrogatories. Gunn v. New York, etc., R. Co., 171 Mass. 417, 50 N. E. 1031.

W. 616).

The erroneous exclusion of substantive evidence is not cured by its subsequent admission to impeach a witness (Fisher v. Monroe, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 326, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 995; Garcia v. Sanders, 90 Tex. 103, 37 S. W. 314), unless the jury is not instructed that

(B) Through Same Witness. The rule that error in the rejection of evidence is cured by the subsequent reception of the same evidence [99] finds its most frequent application in cases where substantially the same testimony as that objected to and excluded is elicited from the same witness on further examination.[1] Thus its admission is for purposes of impeachment only (Spence v. Owen County, 117 Ind. 573, 18 N. E. 513).

of particular evidence when the facts sought to be elicited are subsequently covered in full by the testimony of other witnesses,[8] provided the credibility of such witnesses is not shaken,[9] and it is clear that no harm has resulted to the party first offering the evidence.[10] This is true even where the excluded evidence is documentary and the admitted evidence is oral testimony,[11] or where the subsequent witnesses are offered by the adverse party, as the proponent of the excluded evidence has the benefit of cross-examination.[12]

immaterial and outside the issues,[14] or where it assumes the existence or proof of the fact sought to be established by the evidence in question and thus gives the party all the benefit which he could have derived from its admission.[15] On the other hand, the error is not eradicated, but is aggravated, by instructions which lay emphasis upon the fact which the excluded evidence would have tended to prove or disprove.[16]

Stipulation relating to new trial.— Any support or defeat is afterward withdrawn.[19] Also a party whose tendered evidence has been erroneously rejected waives the error when he objects to the same or similar evidence offered by the other party,[20] as he also does by amending his pleadings, where the evidence has been erroneously held inadmissible under the pleadings.[21] However, it is not essential to the preservation of the rights of a party taking an exception to the exclusion of testimony that he urge the same ground of objection by an exception to an instruction given or refused.[22]

VI. ARGUMENTS AND CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.[23]

A. Right to Argue Case to Jury — 1. In General. A party litigant has the right to address the jury by his counsel where there is an issue in the case to be submitted to the jury,[24] and the party is not in default.[25] This is so although the facts may appear plain to the court.[26] This right includes the right to reargue the case where after argument the original instructions are withdrawn and materierror in exclusion of evidence at a jury trial is waived by a party stipulating as a condition to refusal of new trial that the court should decide the issues on the testimony given at the jury trial. Dooley v. Burlington Gold Min. Co., (Ariz. 1909) 100 Pac. 797. However, a party is not obliged to consent to unreasonable conditions in order to obtain a new trial on the ground of improper rejection of evidence. Heath v. Shelby, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 228.

Judgment or directed verdict.— It has been held, in an action to recover on a written agreement by defendant to pay certain notes and an account against a decedent, that a judgment for the amount of the account only, entered on a verdict directed by the court, which direction was not excepted to, does not preclude plaintiff from insisting on an exception to the exclusion of the notes when offered in evidence (Rowell v. Dunwoodie, 69 Vt. 111, 37 Atl. 227); but that where, in a bastardy proceeding, defendant failed to object to the judgment for support rendered against him, or to move for its modification, such failure will be regarded as a waiver of any supposed error of the trial court in refusing to hear evidence offered (Scott v. State, 102 Ind. 277, 1 N. E. 691).

Motion for continuance and argument of demurrer.— Where counsel enters his appearance only for the avowed purpose of moving for a continuance and arguing a demurrer, which he states as the limit of his authority, it is not error for the court to decline to permit him to argue the case on the merits. ally different instructions are given, if a seasonable request is made;[27] but not the right to reargue the case where the jury after retirement requests additional instructions, in which event the right of reargument is discretionary with the court.[28] Where the issues are issues of law only,[29] where the evidence is not sufficient to sustain a verdict,[30] where there is nothing fairly debatable,[31] or where the facts are admitted and capable of but one inference[32] the court may decline to permit counsel to address the jury. So the court is not bound to hear arguments as to the admissibility of evidence,[33] and it may also decline to permit an attorney who has testified for his client to address the jury in that cause.[34] But the court may, in its discretion, permit such counsel to address the jury, although a rule of court prohibits it.[35] To furnish the basis of complaint a denial of the right of argument must be express and not by implication,[36] and must not have been acquiesced in by counsel.[37]

2. Waiver of Right. The right to argue the case to the jury may be waived,[38] and is waived by counsel's silence and failure to demand the right to argue upon a query in the presence of the court, after inquiry by opposing counsel whether he desired to argue the case,[39] or by replying to the court, in answer to an inquiry as to whether he desired time to argue the case that he only wishes for time to prepare instructions.[40]

B. General Considerations Affecting. The conduct of counsel in presenting their cases to juries is a matter to be left largely to the ethics of the profession and the discretion of the trial judge.[41] Counsel may bring to his use in the discussion of the case well-established historical facts and may allude to such principles of divine law relating to transactions of men as may be appropriate to the case.[42] He may argue matters of which judicial notice is bound to be taken,[43] and state matters which the law presumes,[44] and he may indulge in impassioned bursts of oratory, or what he may consider oratory, so long as he introduces no facts not disclosed by the evidence.[45] It is not impassioned oratory which the law condemns and discredits in the advocate, but the introduction of facts not disclosed by the evidence.[46] It has been held that he may even shed tears during the argument, the only limitation on this right being that they must not be indulged in to such excess as to impede or delay the business of the court.[47] It is for the court and not counsel to lay down to the jury the rules of law for their guidance,[48] and if counsel advises the jury to disregard the instructions it is the duty of the court to stop him at the instance of the adverse party or of its own motion.[49]

C. Regulation of Argument by Court — 1. In General. License of speech of counsel in addressing the jury is largely within the discretion of the trial court,[50] which has power to regulate or control the argument,[51] and it is its duty to interpose to restrain counsel from indulging in unwarranted and improper argument and illustrations before the jury,[52] and it may reprove or rebuke counsel, in the presence of the jury, for the use of contemptuous language and conduct tending to bring the court into contempt,[53] and in proper cases may punish by fine and imprisonment.[54] So it may interrupt counsel for the purpose of excluding from the consideration of the jury improper testimony admitted in behalf of his client,[55] and may properly direct counsel to desist from discussing to the jury immaterial evidence,[56] or evidence that has been ruled out,[57] or evidence admitted but for one purpose as to its bearing on other issues.[58] It may rule out improper statements made during argument,[59] and instruct the jury to disregard counsel has tears at his command, it may be seriously questioned whether it is not his professional duty to shed them whenever proper occasion arises. It would appear to be one of the natural rights of counsel, which no court or constitution could take away. It is certainly, if no more, a matter of the highest personal privilege.

them;[60] and may prohibit counsel, whose associate is arguing the case to the jury, from making audible suggestions to such associate during the argument,[61] or may, where counsel attempts to influence the jury by reading findings of fact in a similar reported case, dismiss the panel.[62] Where an attorney persists in arguing matters outside of the record, after repeated objections by the opposite party and admonitions by the court, it is ground for setting the verdict aside and awarding a new trial,[63] or the court may suspend the argument and discharge the jury,[64] or the judgment may be reversed by the appellate court.[65]

2. Limiting Number of Arguments. The number of attorneys who may address the jury for either side is within the discretion of the trial court.[66] Where there are several counsel on a side, the court may require that objections for each party be made by but one counsel at a time.[67] But the court may permit more than one attorney for a party to address the jury.[68]

3. Limiting Time of Argument.[69] The court may exercise a reasonable discretion in limiting the time for arguments to the jury,[70] or to the court;[71] but it should not limit the argument merely from considerations of personal convenience.[72] The court may interpose and stop counsel in his argument where it becomes obvious that he is consuming time unnecessarily,[73] or may urge counsel who has been speaking for a long time to hurry his argument,[74] and the appellate court will not interfere unless this discretion has been abused.[75] For a limitation of the time for argument to authorize a reversal, it must amount practically to a denial of the right to argue the cause.[76] The discretion of the court is not abused

by limiting the time to seven minutes on a side in a suit on the short cause calendar in which but few witnesses were sworn;[77] or to fifteen minutes on a side[78] where the issues are not complicated[79] and the amounts involved are small;[80] or to twenty minutes on a side[81] where the amount involved is sixty dollars,[82] or where the evidence is not conflicting and the instructions are simple;[83] or to forty-five minutes in an action for personal injuries where there was little material conflict as to the facts of the case;[84] or to an hour and a half on a side in a personal injuries case,[85] or in a slander suit;[86] or to thirty minutes on a side, in such a case, where the evidence is brief and the issues are plain,[87] or to forty-five minutes in such suit,[88] or by limiting the time to ten minutes.[89] It is abused, where the evidence is conflicting, by limiting the time of counsel for one party to five minutes,[90] or by an intimation made when limiting the time that the verdict must be made within a few minutes, under the alternative of the jury remaining over from Saturday until Monday.[91] Liberality should be extended in assigning the time for argument, so that the jury may not think the court regards the claim of plaintiff as of no consequence.[92] Where the greater portion of the time allotted counsel is consumed by interruptions by the court and by opposing counsel, without special fault on his part, he should be granted additional time.[93] If counsel wishes to complain of the shortness of time allotted him, he should consume the time allotted and then if he cannot complete his argument should except to the court's refusal to allow him additional time.[94]

is permitted to do so, it is reversible error to refuse defendant's request to answer.[3] After the arguments are concluded, counsel has no right to address the court or jury upon the law or facts of the case, except by leave of the presiding judge.[4] While it is the duty of counsel to present the whole case as he relies upon it in his opening argument,[5] and while, in conclusion, he should be confined to the points, grounds, and authorities exhibited,[6] the fact that he is not confined to a strict reply to the arguments of opposing counsel is not ground for reversal[7] where it does not appear that he was permitted to wander from the issues in the case.[8] When plaintiff has the close, he cannot complain that he was not allowed to anticipate and answer the defense in opening.[9]

D. Scope and Effect of Opening Statement[10] — 1. In General. In a case involving issues of fact, a party is of right entitled to make an opening statement to the jury,[11] and may outline what he expects to prove,[12] unless it is manifest that such proof is incompetent.[13] The time when such statement should be made,[14] and its general manner and character,[15] are within the discretion of the trial court, such discretion being subject to review only when abused to the prejudice of the party complaining.[16] The purpose of an opening statement is to advise the jury of the facts relied on by plaintiff as constituting his right of action, together with the principles of law applicable thereto,[17] and the party making it is bound thereby.[18] In making such statement, counsel has no right to state his views of the law of the case,[19] to introduce matters foreign to the issue before the jury,[20] to refer to subjects about which the jury should not have heard,[21] to read documents that he intends to offer in evidence,[22] or to state an anticipated defense[23] and his answer to it;[24] nor can he argue the facts of the case.[25] And it is ground for reversal to call attention in such statement to collateral matters calculated to prejudice the jury,[26] unless the court warns the jury not to accept it as evidence.[27] And it has been held ground for reversal that counsel in a personal injury case stated that plaintiff had a wife and children.[28] On the other hand it is not ground for reversal that counsel states that the case has been to the supreme court;[29] that the nature of the action is other than that alleged in the complaint, if defendant is not misled thereby;[30] that defendant took a change of venue without stating the reason for the change;[31] or that counsel discusses an issue tendered by his pleadings, which he afterward abandons,[32] refreshes his recollection by referring to an account-book,[33] refers to the wealth of the opposite party and states that such party is trying to crush his client,[34] refers to matters extraneous to the case, evidence of which is excluded when offered,[35] or on retrial states that the appeal was taken by defendant.[36] So mere reference to extraneous matter, which is excluded when offered, is not error,[37] especially where the reference is made in good faith,[38] and where no request was made for an instruction that such statement was not proper for the consideration of the jury.[39] The court may permit plaintiff, in opening, to omit the reading of the pleadings.[40] Counsel may in his opening argument state that he could not produce a material witness and the reasons why he could not do so,[41] or excuse his failure to introduce the books of his adversary, the court not having permitted him to do so.[42] Failure of counsel in his opening statement to recite all the material facts necessary to a recovery will not warrant the court in taking the case from the jury,[43] nor will the mere fact that there is a substantial variance between the statement and the pleadings warrant a judgment in favor of the opposite party.[44]

2. Statement of Facts Which Preclude Recovery. If plaintiff, in opening, distinctly states facts, the existence of which absolutely preclude his recovery, the court may dismiss the complaint upon the opening statement.[45] But, in order that the entry of a judgment against a party on his opening statement be authorized, the admissions therein should be distinct and such as absolutely preclude a recovery.[46] Nothing should be taken without full consideration against the party making the statement. He should be allowed to qualify or explain it so far as the truth will permit.[47] "The practice of disposing of a case upon the mere opening of counsel is generally a very unsafe method of deciding controversies, where there is or ever was anything to decide." [48] If counsel in opening distinctly states that he relies solely on a certain specified cause of action set out in the complaint, he thereby waives any other ground of recovery stated in the complaint.[49] Neglect of defendant to refer to a certain defense in his opening statement does not bar the establishment of such defense on trial.[50]

E. Presentation of Evidence.[51] No improper inferences arise from the exercise by an attorney of his duty in talking with witnesses before the trial.[52] As a general rule, in cases not determined by a single central fact, the party should be permitted to offer all his evidence before submitting to a ruling of the court on its sufficiency.[53] Counsel in examining witnesses should not comment on answers to his questions until the time for argument has arrived,[54] or on sustained objections to questions by his adversary; [55] but harmless questions or comments are not ground for reversal,[56] nor will they authorize the trial court to withdraw object of evidence was to show that a written instrument relied on by defendants was a forgery.[70] Where the court suspects that the statement is not made in good faith he may order it made out of the hearing of the jury.[71] Asking defendant, in a suit for death caused by his negligence, whether liability insurance had been secured at the time of the accident has been held reversible error in the absence of a reprimand by the court and a special instruction requiring the jury to disregard the matter.[72] It has been held, however, that the judgment will not be reversed if it is apparent from the verdict that the jury were not influenced by the improper statement.[73] The fact that counsel asks an improper question that is not objected to until answered is not ground for reversal.[74]

F. Scope of Argument and Comment[75] — 1. Confining Arguments to Law and Evidence. The arguments of counsel must be confined to the law and the evidence in the case under consideration,[76] and it is error for the presiding justice to permit counsel in addressing the jury to proceed with his argument upon asserted facts not in evidence and having no legitimate pertinency to the issue,[77] where such line of argument is seasonably objected to,[78] unless the court admonishes the jury that they must try the case on the law and the evidence, and not on statements made by counsel.[79] If counsel misstated evidence as to a material matter, and it is apparent that such misstatements were likely to mislead the jury,[80] or there is doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict,[81] or the evidence on the issues is evenly balanced,[82] or the verdict rendered is excessive,[83] the judgment should be reversed. Especially is this true when the court takes no steps to correct the error.[84] However, a misstatement of the evidence will not be ground for reversal if in respect of a matter of trifling or of no importance.[85]

2. Stating or Reading Law to the Jury, or to the Court in the Presence of the Jury.[86] Counsel may, in arguing the case to the jury, state the positions of law on which he relies,[87] and what he believes the law to be,[88] if he does not encroach on the province of the court to finally state the law to the jury.[89] He may state so much of the law, as he asserts it to be, as will enable him to lay before the jury an intelligent idea of the force, effect, and bearing of the testimony on the case;[90] on the other hand it has been held that he should not be permitted to discuss before the jury any points upon which the court has decided,[91] or to criticize opinions on legal questions expressed by the court during the trial,[92] or by the appellate court on a former appeal,[93] or to refer to rejected prayers for the purpose of influencing the conclusions of the jury upon the facts in evidence.[94] According to many decisions it is improper to permit counsel to read law to the jury.[95] But according to others the court may in its discretion permit counsel to read law to it in the presence of the jury,[96] if the law read be good Reason for rule.— On the trial of civil cases, decisions of courts and especially their comments upon the facts of cases should not be read by counsel to the jury. instructions.[31] It is not good practice for an attorney to read to the jury the instructions which he proposes to ask,[32] but such conduct is not cause for reversal.[33] It is improper for counsel in his argument to the jury to state that he would not ask for instructions, and that the case was not one which needed instructions.[34] The fact that one of plaintiff's attorneys wrote the charge which was given to the jury, and that he told the jury in his closing argument that, if the charge did not contain a certain word, he was willing for them to find for defendant, will not warrant a reversal, the instruction containing such word.[35]

6. Reading or Stating Scientific Authorities to Jury.[36] The reading of books of medicine and science to the jury is not allowable,[37] unless the court cautions the jury that they are not authority but are read merely for the purpose of illustration;[38] and error in reading to the jury from a medical book is not cured by sustaining an objection to the question whether the witness had read the extract.[39] Where, however, counsel reads from a standard authority without objection this will not be ground for reversal.[40] And the court has a wide discretion to permit counsel to quote from books of science by way of illustration, as long as nothing is introduced that may affect the jury as evidence.[41] The reading from books of statements of facts and opinions in relation to the case on trial is reversible error.[42] While the practice is not to be commended, it is not reversible error for the court to permit counsel to read from a magazine article criticisms of the character of business in which defendants are engaged,[43] or to read articles from newspapers, the substance of which could properly have been stated by counsel.[44]

7. Use of Objects and Diagrams.[45] The court may in its discretion permit counsel to make use of physical objects in illustrating his remarks to the jury,[46] and may permit counsel in opening his case,[47] or in closing his case in argument before the jury to use diagrams,[48] the jury being informed that the diagram is not evidence;[49] or to refer to calculations,[50] although such diagrams and calculations have not been put in evidence. If counsel claims that the diagram he desires to use before the jury in making his opening statement is correct and offers to show by witnesses that it is correct, it is error to deny him the right to use the diagram in making his opening statement, and such error is not cured by the admission of the diagram during a subsequent portion of the trial upon proof of its correctness.[51]

8. Reading or Commenting on Special Interrogatories. Where the statute authorizes special interrogatories to be submitted to the jury, counsel has the right to read such interrogatories to the jury and to comment on them and to tell them how to answer the same,[52] and may array the evidence necessary to be considered in answering them,[53] and explain what findings will support a general verdict,[54] and, although improper, it is not reversible error to comment on such interrogatory and tell the jury that it is a trap by which they should not be caught.[55] It is improper for counsel to request the jury to give specific answers not supported by the evidence,[56] to say to the jury that such interrogatories were asked merely with a view ultimately of reversing the case in the event of an adverse judgment,[57] or to direct the jury to find their general verdict and answer the special interrogatories so that they may agree with their general verdict;[58] or where the jury has found a general verdict and has failed to answer the special interrogatories and is sent back for that purpose, to say that the special interrogatories are practically covered by the general verdict.[59]

9. Comments on Evidence.[60] Counsel should not be subjected to unreasonable restraint in commenting on the evidence,[61] but should be allowed a wide latitude,[62] this being matter for the sound discretion of the trial judge.[63] He may discuss such facts as are in evidence without limit or restriction,[64] but may not urge the

and if prejudicial to the rights of the opposite party is ground for reversal,[87] but not otherwise.[88] Thus it is improper where the domicile of a party is the issue to say that the party was dodging the officers of the law in one state and another,[89] or to say of a party that he was like a upas tree, shedding pestilence and corruption all around him, and that no man who lived in his neighborhood could have anything but a bad character; [90] or where on proper objection by defendant certain testimony was excluded to argue that defendant had taken advantage of a technicality; [91] or in a suit for libel to remark that judgment had been rendered against defendants in another action for libel and that they stood convicted as libelers of character,[92] or in such case to say that plaintiff committed the murder charged in the alleged libelous article; [93] or in a case involving the conduct of a national bank to denounce national banks in general and state that in all failures they have habitually perpetrated fraud upon honest creditors; [94] or to make remarks tending to impress the jury with the idea that a witness for the opposite party was hired or otherwise influenced to swear falsely,[95] or was tampered with by one of the parties [96] and induced to stay away; [97] or to state that corporate agents will always try to swear you out of court,[98] or that it is a part of their contract to swear for the company or be discharged; [99] or to state that a witness is in the employ of a party and comment on his non-production; [1] or to state as a reason for failure to produce a witness who had testified on a former trial for plaintiff that the witness had since been employed by defendant and it would be unsafe to produce him; [2] or to state that if employees of defendant corporation had not testified in the manner desired by defendant they would have been discharged; [3]

or want of negligence of the employer turns on the question whether the witness was negligent or not,[17] and may state that experience shows that unfavorable testimony would have resulted in a dismissal of the witness.[18] He may call attention to the conduct and the manner of the witness while on the stand.[19] Where there is a conflict in the testimony counsel may claim that the witnesses of his adversary swore falsely.[20] If one of his own witnesses has given testimony favorable to the opposite party and has been contradicted by other witnesses, he may argue that the witness has committed perjury and has been bribed.[21] So the method in which a party conducts his case in court is a matter of legitimate comment by opposing counsel, even though in strict law the party has the right to conduct his case in that manner.[22] But conduct of counsel in seeking to render ineffective the remarks of opposing counsel by making him appear ludicrous is improper, and ground for reversal.[23] Refusal to allow counsel to comment unfavorably on the testimony of a witness, although justified by the facts, is not ground for reversal where he is subsequently given an opportunity to do so but does not avail himself of the opportunity.[24]

11. Comments on Non-Production of Evidence or Witnesses.[25] Counsel may comment on the absence of evidence, which is in the possession of the opposite party, which should naturally be introduced;[26] or where depositions were taken at several places, he may comment on the failure to take depositions at the place where the fact to be proved was best known,[27] on the failure to produce the deposition of an employee of defendant familiar with the facts who was sick at the time of trial,[28] on the failure of a party to ask his witness, who is shown to be familiar with a material fact, concerning such fact,[29] or on the action of the adverse party in excluding relevant and material evidence on the ground that it was a privileged communication.[30] He may also comment on the failure of his adversary to produce more than two witnesses to a fact, which if true should be known to many people.[31] So the non-production of documents, in possession of a party, which he has been notified to produce at the trial,[32] or which the court has ordered him to produce,[33] is proper subject of comment by counsel. But it is improper for him to comment on the non-introduction of books excluded by the court,[34] or which the court has declined to order the party to produce on the ground that they contain incriminating matter,[35] or to comment on the failure to produce evidence which would not have been competent.[36] So where defendant introduces no evidence but rests when plaintiff rests, no adverse presumption arises because of its omission to introduce any evidence, and adverse comment because of such omission is improper.[37] It has likewise been held improper for counsel, during the conduct of the trial, to comment on the failure of the adverse party to call witnesses where such witnesses are incompetent [38] or equally accessible to either party,[39] when there is no evidence that the witnesses could have been produced,[40] or where the evidence shows that the party knew nothing of the witnesses' whereabouts.[41] And if one of the parties admits what the other expects to prove by absent witnesses, he cannot comment on the failure to call them, although they subsequently appear.[42] Such comments are likewise considered to be improper unless such witnesses are shown to be cognizant of the facts in the case,[43] and within the jurisdiction of the trial court.[44] So also it is improper to comment on the failure of a party's attorney to testify in his behalf.[45] Improper comments on failure to produce witnesses and the use of their depositions will not constitute ground for reversal, where testimony of other witnesses is to the same effect.[46] So comments on failure to produce witnesses,[47] or on the refusal of defendant's wife to permit an inspection of the locus in quo until told that the court had so ordered,[48] is not ground for reversal where no prejudice results. But it has been held prejudicial error not to sustain objection to argument commenting on the opposite party's failure to produce a witness whose testimony would have been merely cumulative, especially where counsel argued that her testimony related to material facts and would not merely have supported an examined witness as to an immaterial fact.[49] If comments are made on the failure of the adverse party to introduce witnesses, his counsel may refer to anything which the evidence discloses which tends to explain such failure.[50]

12. Comments on Failure of Party to Testify.[51] Counsel may comment on the failure of a party to testify in explanation of testimony against him,[52] and may read to the jury interrogatories which he refused to answer and his ground for such refusal and comment thereon[53] where the party is present at the trial,[54] if the circumstances are such as to justify comment.[55] The rule as to comments on failure of parties to testify is governed by the same considerations as control comments on the introduction or non-introduction of any other witness.[56]

13. Comments on Prior Proceedings in Cause.[57] Matters shown by the files, not pertaining to the trial at bar, and not brought before the jury in connection with it, cannot be made use of in argument;[58] hence it is error for counsel to state to the jury what appeared in affidavits for continuance at a previous term,[59] to read the record of facts shown by an affidavit for change of venue and to comment thereon,[60] to state the result of a former trial,[61] or what the rulings on a

Applications of rule.— It has been held error in personal injuries cases to state that plaintiff has refused to submit to a physical examination (Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Walden, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 87), or that defendant had for a long time tolerated a practice admittedly dangerous (Heald v. Concord, etc., R. Co., 68 N. H. 49, 44 Atl. 77), or where the case grew out of a collision with a street car, for counsel in his closing argument to challenge defendant to make experiments showing the distance in which such car could be stopped (Little v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 72 N. H. 61, 55 Atl. 190); where the negligence complained of is want of a watchman, to say that other persons had been injured at the same place on that account (St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Boyd, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 93, 88 S. W. 509); where the injuries occurred at a railroad crossing, to say that he could show how many hundred persons had come near being killed at the crossing and ask the jury to set a price on human life (Schaidler v. Chicago, etc., R.

or to indulge in denunciations based on assumed facts.[81] It has accordingly been held error for the court to permit counsel in summing up to read to the jury a paper which has not been introduced in evidence,[82] to state its contents to the jury,[83] to convey to the jury the impression that the writing is adverse to his opponent,[84] to refer to it in argument,[85] and state what it would show,[86] or to comment on evidence which has been improperly admitted,[87] or base an argument thereon,[88] unless such evidence was admitted without objection,[89] or over a general

Co., 102 Wis. 564, 78 N. W. 732); where plaintiff is a minor, to say that it is against public policy to place minors who have no means of support but their labor in dangerous occupations, which tended to make paupers of them, dependent on the jury for support (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 73 Tex. 232, 11 S. W. 185); to intentionally misquote the deposition of a physician so as to include in the statement of injuries sustained a portion of the body of the patient, there being a question whether the injury extended to such portion of the patient's body (Lake St. El. R. Co. v. Shaw, 203 Ill. 39, 67 N. E. 374 [reversing 103 Ill. App. 662); in an action for injuries to an elderly person for defendant's counsel to say that the statute only gives a limited amount for injuries resulting in death and that the amount sued for is largely in excess of such amount (Olfermann v. Union Depot R. Co., 125 Mo. 408, 28 S. W. 742, 46 Am. St. Rep. 483); to refer to injuries received by another at the same time and place at which plaintiff received his injuries and to refer to plaintiff's condition in life (Evans v. Trenton, 112 Mo. 390, 20 S. W. 614); to appeal to the jury on account of a supposed public interest in the matter (St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Boyd, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 93, 88 S. W. 509); to say that defendant had failed to take care of plaintiff and furnish him with food and a doctor after he was injured (Greenville Oil, etc., Co. v. Davenport, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 624); or where the action was for negligence causing the death of a child which was struck by a car not equipped with a fender to say that ordinary care required street cars to have fenders (Carney v. Concord St. R., 72 N. H. 364, 57 Atl. 218). So it is improper to say that the jury, in determining the amount of the verdict, should take into consideration that defendant will appeal (Selby v. Detroit R. Co., 122 Mich. 311, 81 N. W. 106); that if the verdict is too small the appellate court will not raise but if too large will cut it down and therefore the jury should err on the right side (Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Nesbit, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 209, 88 S. W. 891); to permit counsel to ask the jury to give his client compensation for the expenses of the litigation (Britton v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 118 Mich. 491, 76 N. W. 1043); or where a city is defendant for plaintiff's attorney in reply to a reference by defendant's attorney to the amount of the claim made to the city counsel "on the basis of a prompt adjustment, but without prejudice to her rights in the event of a suit" to say that the city counselor had himself recommended to the city council that a larger amount be paid plaintiff (Ross v. Detroit, 96 Mich. 447, 56 N. W. 11); or where the uncontradicted evidence showed that a release intended for defendant was made to another by mistake, to argue that the release was not intended for defendant (The Oriental v. Barclay, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 193, 41 S. W. 117); or to state by inference that he had certain testimony which he could have introduced (Wood v. Augostines, 72 Vt. 51, 47 Atl. 108); or that he could show certain facts but for the incompetency of a witness (Blaisdell v. Davis, 72 Vt. 295, 48 Atl. 14); or for plaintiff's counsel to state that defendant had made an offer of judgment (De Grazia v. Ferretti, 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 761, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 403 [reversing 31 Misc. 805, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 1124].

objection.[90] So it is error to permit counsel to comment upon evidence incompetent in itself, but subject to be made competent by other proof which is not adduced,[91] to use evidence admitted for one purpose for a purpose for which it was not admissible,[92] or to express regret that the court should have excluded certain evidence from the jury.[93] It is error for counsel to comment upon excluded evidence and to treat it as evidence,[94] especially where this is done over objection and the admonition of the judge,[95] or to state facts of his personal experience,[96] or his own knowledge of the facts unless he has testified thereto as a witness,[97] or refer to matters of common knowledge outside of the issue where harm may be fairly inferred to have resulted,[98] or insinuate that he has knowledge of facts,[99] which are calculated to prejudice the opposite party, or comment to the jury on his reasons for asking for instruction, where such reason does not appear on the record,[1] or to read

Failure of court to charge on improper argument.— A counsel in his argument to the jury commented, over the objection of the adverse party, on evidence which the court had excluded because immaterial. The adverse party requested the court to charge that the jury should disregard any statement concerning evidence which had been offered, but rejected. The court failed to charge on the question. It was held that the argument of counsel was reversible error. Hanstad v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 44 Wash. 505, 87 Pac. 832.

to the jury records or opinions in other cases out of proceedings in which the cause at bar originated,[2] or instructions given on a former trial between the same parties in a different action.[3] Comments on matters not in evidence will not operate to reverse where no prejudice resulted,[4] and if counsel discusses facts not in evidence, he cannot complain if opposing counsel is permitted to do the same,[5] although he objects thereto and no objection was made to his doing so.[6]

15. Statements as to Damages. Counsel may properly state to the jury the amount of damages claimed in his declaration,[7] or the amount of damages which he thinks will be fair compensation for personal injuries received;[8] and he may state that damages are to be assessed for the future as well as for the past, where there is evidence tending to show a continuing injury.[9] It is not proper, however, for him to state that the law fixes the damages at a designated amount;[10] and it has been held that where such statements are approved by the court the judgment should be reversed.[11] But where the court instructs as to the measure of damages and the verdict shows that the jury were not influenced by an improper statement of counsel as to the measure of damages, there is no ground for reversal.[12] So it has been held that a statement as to damages, which counsel does not complete and which he offers to withdraw when interrupted, and does not argue further is not a ground for reversal;[13] and that remarks which merely go to the amount of damages, although erroneous, are not ground for reversal because the verdict could be remedied by remittitur if excessive;[14] and a statement that if the jury fixed plaintiff's damages at too low a sum the court could not raise it will not operate to reverse where there is nothing in the verdict to indicate that any portion of it was due to the improper statement.[15]

16. Reference to Verdicts in Similar Cases. It is improper and usually a ground for reversal for counsel in argument to refer to verdicts in similar cases and state the amount of damages awarded, and that such verdicts had been sustained by the courts.[16] If, however, it is apparent from the verdict that the jury was not influenced thereby, the verdict will be permitted to stand.[17]

17. Reference to Protection of Defendant by Insurance or Other Indemnity.[18] It is highly improper and ordinarily a ground for reversal for counsel in argument to tell the jury that defendant is insured against or has indemnity against any verdict rendered against him in the case on trial.[19] Where, however, the court censures counsel and directs the jury to disregard the remarks and no motion is made for a mistrial the reviewing court will not interfere;[20] and the reviewing court will not reverse where the jury was instructed to disregard the remarks and the evidence on the merits is strongly in plaintiff's favor.[21] It has also been held that where the fact that defendant carries casualty insurance is brought out by him on cross-examination of one of plaintiff's witnesses, he cannot complain that continual references by plaintiff to such fact influenced the jury to return a liberal verdict.[22]

18. Appeals to Sympathy, Passion, or Prejudice[23]— a. Appeals to Sympathy. Appeals to sympathy so long as they are based on the facts in the case are not ordinarily considered improper and furnish no ground for complaint.[24] Some flights of eloquence, and the introduction of some touches of pathos in the discussion of the case, is allowable, provided there is no violation of the rule against the discussion of facts not in evidence, or which are not inferable from the sworn testimony in the case.[25] However, appeals to sympathy based on matters not in evidence and which cannot in any legitimate way be brought to the attention of the jury, may be ground for reversal.[26]

b. Appeals to Passion or Prejudice — (I) In General. In addressing the jury it is improper for counsel, by reference to extraneous matters, to appeal to the passions and prejudices of the jury;[27] and when the language used is such as evinces a studied purpose to arouse the prejudices of the jury based upon facts not in the case, the court cannot overlook it or consider that a party against whom such effort has been made has had a fair consideration of his case at the hands of the jury.[28]

(II) Appeals to Prejudice Against Corporations as Such. It is very generally held improper for counsel in argument to make statements calculated to prejudice the jury against a party who is a corporation, because it is a corporation.[29] Whether such remarks will authorize a reversal depends on the particular language of the remarks, the circumstances under which they were made, and the probability that the jury were influenced thereby. Not all improper remarks will justify a reversal. If it does not appear probable that the jury was improperly influenced the judgment should not be reversed.[30] It is otherwise, however, where it appears probable that the verdict was influenced by the improper remarks.[31]

(III) Appeals to National, Patriotic, Sectional, Local, or Racial Prejudice. Appeals to national, patriotic, racial, sectional, or local prejudice in argument are very generally condemned,[32] and may or may not constitute reversible error according to the circumstances of the case and the nature of the remarks made. It has accordingly been held that if it is apparent or probable that the verdict was affected by the remarks the judgment should be reversed,[33]

Newman v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., 64 Miss. 115, 8 So. 172.

Remarks held not to warrant reversal.— It is not reversible error for counsel in a personal injuries case for injuries resulting in death to say that railroad companies have somehow or other fixed, by an act of the legislature, a limit beyond which jurors cannot go (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins, 125 Ill. 127, 17 N. E. 1); or that thousands of men annually lost their lives by negligence of railroads in failing to provide proper and suitable appliances for operation of their machines, and that more employees lost their lives from this cause than were killed in the war between Russia and Japan (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 99 S. W. 634, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 734); or "You should render such a verdict here as will teach this railroad company it must obey the law," and "give us such a sum of money as will show the railroad company that it cannot violate the law" (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Chandler, 70 S. W. 666, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 998, 72 S. W. 805, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2035).

App. 475, 23 S. W. 46.

Remarks held to authorize reversal.— It is reversible error for counsel in a suit against a corporation to say that corporations have no soul, no conscience, no sympathy, and no God, and that the only way to reach them is to make them pay money (Western, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 115 Ga. 715, 42 S. E. 74); to say that they have rights that other parties do not have, that they can condemn graveyards and disturb the resting place of the sacred dead (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 26 S. W. 998); to say that these bloated corporations that can run their road right through a man's house or yard ought to be severely dealt with (Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Cooper, 70 Tex. 67, 8 S. W. 68); to say that railroad corporations will not do justice to any one unless compelled to do so, that they will tell parties injured to sue and will fight them with all their power, and take any advantage they can regardless of the merits of the case, and to advise the jury to make them pay the last cent (Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Kutac, 72 Tex. 643, 11 S. W. 127); to say of such a corporation defendant that it murders people and kills innocent women and children sometimes (Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Story, 63 Ill. App. 239); or to state that such corporations can prostitute justice and to say that the facts pointed strongly to subornation of perjury by defendant corporation (Masterson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 102 Wis. 571, 78 N. W. 757); or in a suit against a railroad corporation, by one of its employees, for personal injuries, for counsel to read to the jury a newspaper paragraph calculated to convey the idea that railroad corporations are wholly indifferent to the lives and safety of their employees (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Brogonier, 13 Ill. App. 467); or to read to the jury a newspaper article, entirely irrelevant to the facts of the case, commenting on the utter disregard by corporations of the rights of private citizens (Williams v. Brooklyn El. Argument not objectionable to rule.— Argument of counsel for a negro to a jury of white men that the negro was entitled to the same rights in court as a white man, and was equal to the white man before the law, was merely an argument for justice, and was not objectionable as appealing to the prejudice of the jury. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. McCoy, (Civ. App. 1909) 117 S. W. 446. So in action for injuries it was held not erroneous for plaintiff's counsel to refer to her as "this honest German girl," though nearly all the members of the jury were Germans, it not appearing that counsel sought a verdict because his client was an "honest German girl." On the other hand the judgment should not be reversed where it is not probable that prejudice resulted.[34]

(iv) REFERENCES TO POVERTY OR WEALTH OF PARTIES. Statements in argument unsupported by evidence, relating to the poverty of one of the parties or the wealth of the other, are very generally held improper,[35] and this impropriety may or may not be ground for reversal according to circumstances. If the court directs the jury not to consider such statements,[36] or tells the jury that the parties stand on an equal footing,[37] such statements will not ordinarily warrant a reversal. But it has been held otherwise where the trial court refused to withdraw the remarks from the jury,[38] and such statements are ground for reversal when coupled with a persistent effort to induce the jury to favor a resident as against a non-resident.[39] A mere reference to the poverty of plaintiff when shown by the evidence will not be ground for reversal;[40] and where there is evidence of plaintiff's want of means it is legitimate argument to state that the rudeness of plaintiff's plans used in evidence was due to that fact.[41] So it has been held not improper to state that the reason why plaintiff returned to work before fully recovering from his injuries was because he had to work to support his family, especially where counsel disclaimed any intent to influence the jury as to the amount of recovery;[42] and it is within the fair province of argument to refer to the standing and wealth of a party when such reference is pertinent to a plausible argument competent in the cause, and is not in any way made an issue before the jury.[43]

19. RETALIATORY STATEMENTS AND REMARKS.[44] Improper language used in argument is not ground for reversal, where such language was provoked by the remarks of counsel for the adverse party,[45] unless it appears quite plainly that the verdict was influenced thereby;[46] and especially is this true where exceptions to the argument are sustained,[47] and the jury specifically instructed to disregard it.[48] Moreover, the rule applies, although the language used would clearly authorize a reversal in the absence of such provocation.[49] So, where a party while testifying, charged the counsel of the adverse party with the suppression of evidence, and the counsel replied that the party was a liar, and the court reproved the counsel, his remark was not ground for reversal.[50]

G. Admissibility of Evidence to Rebut Statements. As statements of counsel to the jury on summing up are not testimony, evidence cannot be introduced to contradict them.[51] Statements of counsel as to what he expects to prove do not have the weight of testimony, and if not proved are to be disregarded, and hence evidence not otherwise competent cannot be admitted to discredit a statement which there is no attempt made to prove.[52]

H. Withdrawal or Correction of Improper Remarks.[53] Where an improper remark of counsel in argument is promptly withdrawn,[54] and the with-

The practice of using language in an argument referable to facts not in evidence, and calculated to rouse the prejudices of the jury against a party to the cause, should not be permitted. But when such language is used in response to similar language used by the adverse counsel, and equally unauthorized, the party provoking such a course of argument will not be heard to complain on appeal. Thus where counsel goes outside the record and makes unwarrantable statements favorable to the character of a witness, he cannot complain if opposing counsel, in answer thereto, makes unfavorable statements not warranted by the record. Sterling v. Detroit, 134 Mich. 22, 95 N. W. 986. But, although a party may be estopped to complain of the other party going out of the record in argument, by himself going out of it, the estoppel arises only when he is followed out of the record by the party undertaking to reply, and does not serve as a license to ignore the record generally. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dickens, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 124.

Illustration of rule.— In an action against an employer for personal injuries to plaintiff's son, plaintiff's counsel, in his address, said: "Lay aside the fact that this man — you cannot give him compensation for suffering he undergoes when he sees his boy crippled for life. Your hearts rush out to him in sympathy, but you cannot do that. But you can compensate him for his pecuniary loss, and you can do something that will perhaps make it more safe for me, and your boy, and mine, and everybody else that has occasion to deal with these people, to see that they treat us as reasonably prudent men ought to treat others." although counsel voluntarily withdraws the remarks.[76] If the court refuses to withdraw from the jury improper remarks of counsel by an appropriate instruction, this will ordinarily be ground for reversal.[77] It has been held, however, that the mere failure of the court to rule on objections to alleged improper remarks of counsel is not equivalent to overruling the objections.[78] An exception does not generally lie to a remark of counsel, but to the refusal to instruct the jury in regard thereto, when seasonably requested so to do.[79]

I. Objections and Exceptions[80]— 1. In General. A party has the right to have the stenographer enter upon his notes any objectionable remarks made by counsel in argument.[81]

2. Necessity For. While an improper argument should be checked by the trial court, without waiting for counsel to object,[82] and the court should caution the jury against being influenced by improper considerations urged therein;[83] yet, in order that such remarks may be considered on appeal, an objection thereto must be made at the trial and a ruling had thereon.[84] It is sufficient, however,

The mere fact that objection to an improper argument is sustained does not necessarily cure the injury inflicted. Donk Brothers Coal, etc., Co. v. Tetherington, 128 Ill. App. 256.

Absence of request to limit evidence.— In a broker's action for compensation, where the complaint in an action by the alleged purchaser against defendant was introduced to show the purchaser's willingness to buy, a refusal to instruct the jury to disregard comments of defendant's counsel on certain allegations as comments on matters not in evidence was not error in absence of a request by plaintiff to limit the evidence to the point suggested when the complaint was offered. that there is by implication an adverse ruling,[85] and it is not necessary that the objection and exception be repeated upon repetition of the improper argument.[86] No question is raised by mere objection and the court's admonishing counsel to keep within the record.[87] An agreement of counsel that an argument shall not in fact be objected to, but shall be considered as excepted to, the court not being called upon to deal with the objectionable remarks at the time they were made, raises no question for review.[88]

3. Requisites of. The objection must be specific,[89] and must state the reason of the objection,[90] unless the ground of objection is self-evident.[91] And, an objection on a ground that it is not tenable will not suffice to save an objection on another ground that is tenable.[92] So if the objection is to the entire argument it will be unavailing, where parts only thereof are improper.[93] An exception to improper remarks is in itself not sufficient but the action of the trial court must be invoked by motion to exclude, or otherwise.[94] It is sufficient that objection be made to the judge and exception taken to the ruling, without interrupting the argument.[95] The extent to which an exception is taken to the remarks of counsel is a question of fact for the trial court.[96] The record must clearly show the misconduct and it is not sufficient that it shows a ruling of the court founded on affidavits of opposing counsel as to what statements were made.[97]

4. Time of Making. It must be made when the objectionable language is used and the exception must be taken when the ruling is procured.[98] It must be made before counsel closes his address.[99] The court should allow counsel to interrupt his opponent who is making an improper argument to the jury;[1] and a refusal to do so is error;[2] but counsel's right to complain of failure of the court to permit this to be done is waived if no objection is taken to the court's ruling forbidding interruption.[3] It comes too late, if made the first time after verdict,[4] especially where the remarks appear to have been provoked by what was said by opposing counsel,[5] after an agreement on a verdict has been announced by the jury,[6] after the case has been submitted to the jury,[7] or after the jury has retired.[8] If to language used in the opening statement, it must be made before the testimony has been taken.[9] If exception is taken to language, the propriety of which depends upon proof to be thereafter made, it is not error for the court to decline to rebuke counsel, although questionable whether the proof warrants the remark, the court's attention not being again called thereto.[10]

J. Harmless Error.[11] A judgment will not be reversed because of improper arguments or conduct of counsel where the verdict is right and shows that the improper acts of counsel had no influence thereon.[12] To warrant a reversal it must appear probable that the acts complained of influenced the jury in arriving at their verdict.[13] If, however, it is apparent that the acts complained of were prejudicial,[14] as for instance, where the verdict is greatly against the preponderance of the evidence,[15] or is excessive,[16] the judgment should be reversed. VII. PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY.[19]

A. General Considerations Affecting. It is a rule of practically universal application that questions of law are for the determination of the court.[20] It is obviously the right of every suitor to have the opinion of the judge upon questions of law material to the proper determination of his case. The jury are not qualified to determine such questions, and they are calculated to confuse, embarrass, and mislead them.[21] In consequence, it is erroneous to instruct the jury that they are judges of the law,[22] and to submit questions of law to them,[23] and requested

Instructions held not to submit questions of law to jury.— The court does not submit a question of law to the jury by instructing them to find liability upon finding all the constitutive facts which are stated in the instruction (Abbitt v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 Mo. App. 640, 81 S. W. 484); by telling them that it is for them to determine whether a certain act under all the circumstances of the case amounted to negligence, negligence having been fully defined in the instructions (Conner v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 146 Ind. 430, 45 N. E. 662); by charging that they are to determine whether due and proper care was used (Schmidt v. Sinnott, 103 Ill. 160), or whether canceling a contract and rescinding it did not mean the same in common parlance (Lett v. Horner, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 296), or that both the questions of probable cause and malice are for the jury to determine and find from the evidence (Lewton v. Hower, 35 Fla. 58, 16 So. 616); by instructing that they are to determine the issue on the evidence (Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Anthony, 12 Ind. App. 126, 38 N. E. 831), or that, if the changes made in a building were so different from the old plans as to provide for a new and materially different job plaintiff was not bound by the old contract (Cook County v. Harms, 108 Ill. 151); by telling the jury what negligence is by defining the duty resting on a party and the consequences of a failure to perform it (Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Hubbard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 25), or that they are to find for plaintiff if they find from the evidence that he has made out his case as laid in the declaration (Laflin, etc., Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322, 23 N. E. 389, 19 Am. St. Rep. 34, 7 L. R. A. 262; North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Zeiger, 78 Ill. App. 463), or that they are to so find, if they believe from the evidence that he has proven his declaration or any one count thereof in manner and form as therein set forth (Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harris, 162 Ill. 200, 44 N. E. 498); or if, after stating the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action, by instructing that if plaintiff under the instructions herein became vested with a cause of action (Davenport v. The City of Hannibal, 108 Mo. 471, 18 S. W. 1122); or to notice and consider the extent to which some instructions qualify others (Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Hanthorn, 211 Ill. 367, 71 N. E. 1022); so that the burden of proof was on defendant to prove by a preponderance of evidence that plaintiff was negligent, unless plaintiff's evidence showed such fact, in which event the verdict should be for defendant (Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Conway, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 68, 98 S. W. 1070), is not objectionable as submitting to the jury the question on whom the burden of proof rested.

Instructions not obnoxious to rule.— The construction of documents is not left to the jury by an instruction that several documents in evidence must be construed together. Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Prentiss, 157 Ill. 506, 42 N. E. 157; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Matthews, 48 Ill. App. 361.

When submission not erroneous.— It is no ground of exception that the court submitted the construction of a written instrument to the jury, if such submission was at the request of the party excepting, and, if the true legal construction of such instrument be against such party. Raudon v. Toby, 11 How. (U. S.) 493, 13 L. ed. 784. And where the jury correctly decides the legal effect of a writing, the submission of the question to them is harmless error. refused.[6] However, it is generally held that the rule that the interpretation of written instruments is for the court does not apply where the writing is ambiguous and must be solved by extrinsic unconceded facts,[7] or where the dispute is not as to the legal meaning of documents, but as to their tendency to prove one side or the other of an issue of fact and different inferences may be fairly drawn from them as to what the truth was. Under these circumstances it is for the jury to say what is the proper inference.[8]

5. FOREIGN LAWS. What is the law of a foreign jurisdiction is a question of fact for the jury to determine, unless the evidence is uncontradicted and consists entirely of statutes and law reports,[9] in which event their construction and effect are usually for the determination of the court;[10] but where the decisions are conflicting, or where inferences of fact must be drawn,[11] or bear upon the subject only collaterally, or by analogy,[12] or when conflicting expert testimony is introduced,[13] or the only evidence is the testimony of an attorney of the foreign state, especially when inconclusive,[14] the question of what is the law of the foreign state must be submitted to the jury.

6. Existence and Terms of Oral Agreements. The existence and terms of an oral contract are questions of fact for the jury;[15] but the terms when ascertained are to be construed by the court, and it is error to leave this question to the jury.[16]

7. Questions of Identity. Identity of person is a question of fact for the jury,[17] as is also the question of identity of causes of action.[18]

8. Intent. An issue, involving the determination of the mental attitude or intent of a person or persons with respect to acts done by them, is for the jury,[19] even though the evidence be not conflicting.[20] A question of intent is always a question of fact. The rule that a man is taken to have intended the probable result of his own acts is at most a rule of evidence to be applied by the triers in inquiring into the intent, but is never a rule of law.[21]

9. Time or Place. Where place becomes material, under conflicting evidence,[22] or if the time of doing an act becomes material,[23] the question of place or time is for the jury.[24] So what is a reasonable time is ordinarily a question of

Applications of rule.—Thus the jury should determine under which of two contracts money has been paid by one to another (Indiana, etc., R. Bank v. Ingalls, 130 Mass. 8); whether a transaction was intended as a sale or as a lease (Iroquois Furnace Co. v. Ross, 76 Ill. App. 549); whether the abandonment of a criminal prosecution was in consideration of a certain act or as the consequence only (Grover v. Bruere, 9 N. J. L. 319); what was the intention of the parties with reference to a sum of money paid by a sheriff selling property under a mortgage to the mortgagee (Teague v. Maddox, 150 U. S. 128, 14 S. Ct. 46, 37 L. ed. 1025); in what capacity and with what intention a party took possession of certain property, whether as his own or as belonging to someone else (Miersch v. Bivin, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 135; Gilkey v. Peeler, 22 Tex. 663); or whether a party abandoned one residence and took up another, the question being as to his citizenship (Rucker v. Bolles, 80 Fed. 504, 25 C. C. 24. Applications of rule.—Thus, whether a certain conversation occurred before or after the delivery of a deed (Wilson v. Irish, 62 Iowa 260, 17 N. W. 511); whether a blank in a bond was filled in before or after delivery (Keen v. Monroe, 75 Va. 424); which of fact.[25] But where the facts are undisputed and different inferences cannot be drawn therefrom, the question is one of law for the court.[26]

10. Meaning of Equivocal Words and Phrases. The meaning of words and phrases, in the connection in which they are used, is a question for the jury, when fairly susceptible of more than one reasonable interpretation.[27]

11. Questions of Philosophy, Art, and Science. Questions of natural philosophy,[28] art,[29] and science[30] are not matters of law, in respect of which it is the duty of the court to charge the jury.

12. Miscellaneous Questions of Law or Fact. The nature of the action[31] or the form in which it should be brought[32] is a question of law. The question whether a person is precluded from equitable relief by the staleness of his demand,[33] or the legal consequences of failure to complete work in accordance with a contract therefor,[34] or the measure of the landlord's duty to a tenant who had abandoned the premises,[35] or what constitutes ownership,[36] is for the court and not for the jury. The question of the boundary line between two counties,[37] of the reasonableness of the rule of a carrier,[38] whether statements claimed to be a part of the res gestæ are really such,[39] whether machinery was included in a mortgage and whether the same was sold in accordance with the power contained in the mortgage,[40] whether failure to serve process has worked a discontinuance of an action,[41] whether certain facts do or do not constitute a sale,[42] whether and under two instruments on the same subject, one being undated, was first executed (Coons v. Chambers, 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 439); when and by whom words found under the signature of a note were written (Burr v. Williams, 20 Ark. 171); or whether one suit was disposed of before a second was commenced (Ball v. Biggam, 6 Kan. App. 42, 49 Pac. 678) are questions of this nature and for the jury to determine.

W. 740); whether a lot is an "out-lot" within the meaning of a statute, and has been inhabited as such (Savignac v. Garrison, 18 How. (U. S.) 136, 15 L. ed. 290); whether certain pieces of wood are shingles, or mere chips (Morton v. Fairbanks, 11 Pick. what circumstances the making and indorsing of a note by a partner binds his firm,[43] what are the duties of a carrier,[44] what compensation is fixed by statute as compensation to trustees for their services,[45] whether on uncontroverted facts the act incorporating a town and the assessment of a tax under it are constitutional and valid,[46] whether a person in possession of property is entitled thereto,[47] what part of the testimony of a witness consists of statements of fact and what part of conclusions of the witness,[48] how far parol evidence is inconsistent with the record,[49] whether an act is that of a religious or charitable association so that it may be done on Sunday within the exception of a law,[50] whether the record of a foreign judgment is properly authenticated,[51] whether municipal authorities had a legal right to assign children of African descent to separate schools,[52] whether a certain institution was required to have a license to practise medicine,[53] as to the weight to be attached to an admission made by a party in a former action, wherein he was opposed by a different defendant,[54] as to the authority of plaintiff's attorney to bring the action,[55] whether a contract should be reformed,[56] or whether a party whose witness has given unfavorable testimony was surprised as affecting his right to show inconsistent statements by the witness[57] are questions of law to be determined by the court. So it is a question for the jury whether a certain result is a necessary sequence of the operation of natural laws,[83] whether duress entered into a particular transaction,[84] whether the facts relied on to constitute probable cause are established by the evidence,[85] whether a person acted honestly or in good faith,[86] whether goods tendered under a contract of sale were of merchantable quality,[87] or whether there is sufficient evidence to shift the burden of proof from one party to the other.[88] Where, in the absence of an official stenographer, the court and counsel disagree, or are in doubt, as to the testimony given by a witness,[89] or the court has forgotten whether there was, or was not, any evidence in support of a particular material point,[90] it is proper to leave the matter to the jury.

C. Questions of Mixed Law and Fact. It is very generally declared to be erroneous for the court to submit a mixed question of law and fact to the jury,[91] unless under proper instructions from the court.[92] In other words, where the evidence presents mixed questions of law and fact, it is the duty of the court to submit the evidence to the jury with hypothetical instructions as to the law applicable to the facts as they may find them,[93] or to direct the jury to find the facts, and then to apply the law to the facts so found and render judgment.[94] The first of these two methods is the one most commonly adopted.[95]

D. Reservation of Questions of Law. Under the practice in some jurisdictions, the court may reserve questions of law to be determined after a verdict has been rendered.[96] The points of law thus reserved,[97] and the facts upon which they arose,[98] must be stated specifically in the record,[99] and such reservation should refer, on its face, to questions of law of controlling effect.[1] Where the real point reserved, and actually decided, is one of law, the judgment will not be reversed because the point reserved was bad in form in presenting on its face a question of fact.[2] If the reservation refers to questions that do not affect a material aspect of the case,[3] or if it embraces a mixed question of law and fact,[4]

Application of foregoing principles.— Thus on questions of title, it is error for the court to leave the whole question to the jury, but it should be instructed what facts, if proved, are sufficient to show title in either party, under which instructions the jury must determine in whom the evidence shows the title to be vested (Greenwade v. Mills, 31 Misc. 464; Egan v. Bissell, 54 S. C. 80, 32 S. E. 1); if the fact of disseizin is in issue, the court should instruct what constitutes disseizin, and the jury should decide whether upon the facts presented there has been a disseizin (Dunn v. Hayes, 21 Me. 76); the question as to what in a given case is a "reasonable time" (Green v. Dingley, 24 Me. 131; Derosia v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 18 Minn. 133); or what is a "reasonable" search and inquiry for a person, upon whose life property rights depend (Clarke v. Cummings, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 339); or as to whether a person has used "due diligence" (Davis v. Herrick, 6 Ohio 55); or whether acts other than actual restraint of one's liberty alleged to constitute duress exist and whether they had such influence on the mind of a particular person to overcome his will (The Oriental v. Barclay, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 193, 41 S. W. 117) are matters to be submitted to the jury under proper instructions, unless, upon the facts presented, the question can be determined by the court by the application of well-settled legal principles (Pollak v. Davidson, 87 Ala. 551, 6 So. 312; Derosia v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 18 Minn. 133). Where the question whether a man acted with probable cause is material, as in actions for malicious prosecution, the court should instruct the jury what facts will amount to probable cause, and leave it to them to determine whether such facts are disclosed by the evidence. Conflicting recitals.— A reservation which contains several points, the recitals in some of the points being irreconcilable with those in others, so that upon the same reservations plaintiff would be entitled to judgment and upon others of which judgment ought to be rendered for defendant is bad. it is erroneous. The general question whether there is any evidence that will support a verdict,[5] or that will support a particular essential issue,[6] may properly be reserved.[7] The reservation of a question whether there be any evidence which entitles plaintiff to recover is a good reservation, without further statement upon the record of the facts upon which the point is based.[8]

E. Effect of Erroneous Submission of Questions of Law to Jury. The erroneous submission of questions of law to the jury will not be ground for reversal where no prejudice resulted to appellant.[9] Error in submitting a question of law to the jury is harmless where the jury decides the question correctly,[10] of law to the jury, the case is submitted on an erroneous theory, the causes which produced the verdict must be largely a matter of conjecture, and the judgment should be reversed.[22]

VIII. TAKING CASE FROM JURY.

A. Considerations Governing Exercise of This Function — 1. In General. Whenever the evidence adduced presents an issue of fact, which if determined in plaintiff's favor would entitle him to recover, the case should be submitted to the determination of jury.[23] Where there is some evidence,[24] although

Where undisputed evidence is of such a character as to preclude a ruling thereon, as a matter of law, in behalf of one party, such party cannot complain that the issue was submitted to the jury. Tracy v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 76 Vt. 313, 57 Atl. 104.

What is not undisputed evidence.— The testimony of one witness as to the intoxication of insured before his application for insurance was not undisputed evidence precluding submission to the jury, where the witness was uncertain as to the time, and his memory appeared defective. Des Moines L. Ins. Co. v. Clay, 89 Ark. 230, 116 S. W. 232.

In Massachusetts it is held that the fact that there is no testimony directly contradicting evidence in favor of defendant is no ground for directing a verdict in its favor, since the jury have a right to disbelieve its witnesses in toto. McGourty v. De Marco, 200 Mass. 57, 85 N. E. 891; Lindenbaum v. New York, etc., R. Co., 197 Mass. 314, 84 N. E. 129.

In Pennsylvania where the evidence is oral, although not disputed, the case is necessarily for the jury. Perkiomen R. Co. v. Kremer, the facts are admitted,[35] or only one inference can reasonably be deduced therefrom,[36] or the evidence is such that the jury could only guess which one of several causes produced a certain result,[37] or such that mere conjecture alone could induce the jury to find the verdict that is sought,[38] or such that it would not warrant the jury in finding a verdict in favor of the party introducing such testimony,[39] the court should withdraw the case from the jury. But although there be no conflict in the evidence, the case is for the jury where the witnesses are interested,[40] where one of the parties to the contract sued on is dead,[41] where the facts admit of different constructions or inferences,[42] where the ultimate facts depend solely on the truth of the statements made by the witnesses or other evidence offered, or where the ultimate facts must be determined by inferences and deductions from evidence, or by weighing and estimating the value of facts stated, as warranting a particular finding which can only be proven indirectly by circumstances.[43] Where the sole question is one of law, it is proper for the judge to discharge the jury and decide the case.[44]

When the contents of a writing are proved by parol evidence, admitted without objection, the case will not be withdrawn from

from the evidence the case is for the jury;[47] and this is so, although the evidence is uncontradicted.[48] When facts proved without dispute require the exercise of reason and judgment, so that one reasonable mind may infer that a controlling fact exists, and another, that it does not exist, there is a question of fact.[49]

4. WAIVER OF RIGHT TO HAVE CASE TAKEN FROM JURY. The right to have the case taken from the jury for want of sufficient evidence is waived where defendant fails to make a proper request therefor or to make such request seasonably. Failure to take the proper steps is equivalent to an admission that the evidence is sufficient to go to the jury.[50] So where a party, after his motion to withdraw the case from the jury is overruled, introduces evidence in his own behalf, he waives error in overruling the motion.[51] This principle has been applied where the procedure to withdraw the case from the jury was by demurrer to the evidence,[52] by motion for dismissal or nonsuit,[53] or for a directed verdict.[54]

B. Demurrer to Evidence[55] — 1. Definition and Nature. A demurrer to evidence is analogous to a demurrer to pleading,[56] and although not precisely similar to a motion for nonsuit, bears a close analogy thereto.[57] It arises on an issue in law on the facts established by the evidence,[58] and is a proceeding by which the court in which the action is pending is called upon to decide what the law is upon the facts shown in evidence.[59]

2. Right to Demur. Either party may demur to the evidence introduced by his adversary in support of the affirmative of an issue.[60] But the party upon whom the burden of proof rests cannot demur to the evidence of the other party, for he cannot assume that he has made out his case.[61] The right to demur to the evidence is not "stricti juris" and should not be allowed when there is no colorable cause of demurrer,[62] and is not permissible in a case tried on an agreed statement of facts.[63]

3. OPERATION AND EFFECT. A demurrer to the evidence raises the question of the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the issue of fact in support of which it is offered.[64] Except in a few states where an anomalous and indefensible rule of procedure has grown up,[65] the rule is well settled that when a party demurs to the evidence, no evidence introduced by him can be considered on the demurrer. By demurring to his adversaries' evidence he waives his own.[66] On a demurrer to the evidence, the evidence must be considered in the light most favoring the

65. In Virginia and West Virginia the evidence of both parties is put in the demurrer, and the party demurring does not waive the benefit of his evidence in all respects. The rule in these states is that the party demurring to the evidence admits the truth of his adversaries' evidence, together with the just inferences which can be drawn therefrom and waives all of his own evidence conflicting with that of his adversary, together with the inferences from his own evidence which do not necessarily result therefrom. Reason for rule.— The demurrant attacks the evidence of his adversary, and, in the very nature of things, this attack cannot be aided by his own evidence. The sufficiency of the adversary's evidence to support the issue upon his part is the only question presented by the demurrer, and this question must be determined without reference to the evidence of the demurring party; indeed, such party does not and cannot have any evidence. The evidence of the adversary is alone involved in the issue raised by the demurrer. Fritz v. Clark, 80 Ind. 591.

adversary of the party demurring.[67] The court cannot weigh conflicting evidence or determine its effect, but must consider as true every part of the case of the party resisting the demurrer;[68] all facts which the evidence in support of the issue tends to establish, or which may reasonably be inferred therefrom, are taken as admitted, and all evidence conflicting therewith is considered as waived.[69] Forced and violent inferences are not, however, considered as admitted.[70] If a party does not object to the admission of evidence at the time it is offered, the objection cannot be taken on a demurrer to the evidence,[71] and according to the weight of authority, a party by demurring to the evidence waives any objections taken to the admission of the evidence demurred to,[72] although there is authority to the contrary;[73] and by demurring to the evidence a party cannot deprive his adversary of the right to make available questions upon rulings excluding evidence.[74] Defects in the pleadings cannot be considered as a reason for sustaining a demurrer to the evidence,[75] but by demurring to the evidence a party does not waive his objections based on such defects. 4. Time For Demurrer. The demurrer cannot be made until all of plaintiff's proof is heard;[77] but according to the weight of authority it should be interposed at the close of plaintiff's evidence.[78] The demurrant may, however, cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses.[79] A joinder in the demurrer is a waiver of the objection that the demurrer was not interposed in time.[80]

5. Form and Requisites of Demurrer. A demurrer to the evidence must be in writing,[81] and all the testimony on both sides should be inserted in those jurisdictions where evidence of the demurrant may also be considered in passing on the demurrer.[82] But in most jurisdictions evidence of the demurrant should not, according to the well settled practice, be inserted in the demurrer. This is because the court cannot consider it for any purpose in passing on the demurrer.[83] Written portions of the evidence are sufficiently incorporated in the demurrer by reference thereto.[84] The demurrer must definitely state what facts favorable to the adverse party the evidence tends to establish,[85] and not merely the evidence conducing to prove such facts.[86] Judgment will not be rendered on a loose and uncertain statement of facts in the demurrer, even though there be a joinder, but the court will set aside the demurrer and award a venire de novo.[87] The record need not state that the evidence set forth is all that was offered,[88] and, where the evidence is plain and direct, it is not necessary to state the inferences deducible from it;[89] nor is it necessary to specify in what particulars the evidence is insufficient to warrant a judgment.[90]

6. JOINDER IN DEMURRER. There must be a joinder in demurrer before the court has authority to pass thereon,[91] and it is reversible error to render judgment on a demurrer where there has been no joinder therein.[92] Whether the court shall compel a joinder in demurrer is a matter within its discretion.[93] This discretion, however, is not an arbitrary but a judicial discretion, the exercise of which is subject to review.[94] A joinder in demurrer should not be compelled until a statement of the evidence is set out in the demurrer.[95] Where the evidence is all matter of record as in writing, unless it is very clearly sufficient, the court will compel a joinder,[96] because the facts which it proves are certain and cannot be varied.[97] So if the evidence, although parol, be clear and uncontradicted, a party has the right to demur to it, and his adversary should be compelled to join.[98] Parol evidence is sometimes certain and no more admitting of any variance than a matter in writing.[99] The reason for the rule requiring joinder in case of the two classes of evidence just considered has no application in the case of parol evidence which is loose and indeterminate, in which case, unless the demurrant distinctly admits of record every fact which the evidence fairly tends to establish, or which may fairly be inferred from it, the other party will not be required to join in the demurrer.[1] If evidence be given on both sides, and be complicated and conflicting, the court will not compel a joinder.[2] By joining in the demurrer, the opposite party admits that the evidence is correctly set out,[3] and the court will infer what the jury might infer.[4] If the demurree refuses to join, except on terms which the court disapproves, the court will direct a verdict against him.[5] By joining issue on demurrer to plaintiff's evidence the cause is withdrawn from the jury and submitted to the court.[6]

7. WITHDRAWAL OF DEMURRER. After a party has filed a demurrer to the evidence and before any joinder therein by the other party, the court may permit a withdrawal of the demurrer.[7]

8. HEARING AND DETERMINATION — a. When Sustained. The whole operation of conducting a demurrer to the evidence and of directing the admissions which the party demurring shall make is under the control of the court.[8] The circumstances under which a demurrer to the evidence will be sustained have been variously stated as follows: Where there is a total failure of proof;[9] when plaintiff's evidence is prima facie insufficient for a recovery;[10] where the evidence would not sustain a verdict;[11] where there is no evidence to sustain plaintiff's cause of action;[12] where evidence introduced by plaintiff is clearly insufficient to form the basis of a judgment for him;[13] if on any theory of the evidence plaintiff cannot recover;[14] if plaintiff's evidence shows affirmatively that he is not entitled to recover;[15] where no evidence is introduced tending to prove the cause of action set up;[16] where the evidence does not reasonably tend to show a cause of action;[17] where there is an entire failure to prove one fact essential to the existence of the cause of action;[18] when plaintiff's testimony is wholly insufficient to prove the material allegations in his declaration;[19] where the evidence demurred to fails to prove any defense;[20] where the evidence does not show a prima facie case,[21] or when there is a fatal variance between the allegations and the proof.[22]

b. When Overruled. Where plaintiff's evidence construed most strongly in his own favor fairly sustains every fact essential to his cause of action, the demurrer should be overruled.[23] In some jurisdictions, when the case is tried before a jury, the demurrer is sustained only when there is no substantial evidence whatever in support of some essential fact of plaintiff's case;[24] in others, the demurrer is sustained when the evidence, although conflicting, so decidedly preponderates in favor of defendant that a verdict for plaintiff would be set aside by the court on motion.[25] The demurrer should be overruled where the evidence is sufficient, if believed, to justify a verdict for plaintiff,[26] where the evidence fairly tends to sustain any cause of action,[27] if the proof sustained one of several counts[28] or one of several elements of damage alleged,[29] or a right to recover nominal damages.[30] And where several defendants join in a demurrer and a case has been made out against one of them, the demurrer should be overruled.[31]

c. Judgment on Demurrer. On issue joined, on demurrer to the evidence, the sole question for determination is whether the evidence does or does not support the issue.[32] If a demurrer to the evidence is sustained, final judgment is properly rendered for the party demurring[33] without giving his adversary opportunity to offer any further evidence whatever.[34] In most jurisdictions if the demurrer is

In Kansas, by special statutory provision, the court, after sustaining a demurrer to the evidence, may reopen the case and permit other evidence to be introduced. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Glen Elder Bank, 46 Kan. 376, overruled, plaintiff is entitled to judgment.[35] It is not competent for defendant to reopen the merits and retry the issues by a jury.[36] In other jurisdictions, after demurrer overruled, defendant is permitted to introduce his evidence and submit the case to the jury.[37] Where the demurrer is overruled, the court has no power to assess damages[38] except in cases where they are liquidated.[39] The damages may be assessed either before or after the decision on the demurrer. In the first instance, they are assessed by the jury originally impaneled conditionally on the overruling of the demurrer; in the second, they are assessed by another jury impaneled for that purpose.[40] Upon sustaining a demurrer to evidence in support of a plea, judgment in favor of plaintiff should be rendered on the plea.[41] If there are several defenses, the sustaining of a demurrer to the evidence in support of one of them does not withdraw from the jury the evidence as to the others.[42] If an appeal be taken, the appellate court will review the evidence and render such judgment as it warrants.[43]

9. Waiver of Objections to Rulings on Demurrer. Where, at the close of plaintiff's case, the court refuses an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, defendant may save the point by standing on his demurrer and abandoning the case at that point.[44] But where defendant fails to take this course, and introduces evidence in his own behalf, after his demurrer has been overruled, he thereby waives objection to the court's action thereon,[45] especially where such evidence supplies the deficiencies of plaintiff's evidence,[46] except that the appellate court may consider the same in connection with all the evidence in the case.[47] But the fact that, after a demurrer to the evidence is overruled, defendant asks instructions on other theories, does not waive whatever point may be properly raised under the demurrer.[48]

10. Harmless Error in Rulings on Demurrer. Error in refusing to compel plaintiff to join in a demurrer to his evidence is harmless where the evidence set forth in the demurrer shows that plaintiff is entitled to recover.[49] So error in overruling a demurrer to evidence is harmless where evidence supplying the omission is afterward introduced by either party,[50] or where the court afterward sets aside its order and allows plaintiff to take a nonsuit, and reinstates the cause;[51] and although a demurrer to evidence is not applicable to proceedings in equity, an order sustaining it is not a ground for reversal where plaintiff's case is defective for want of equity.[52] Where the court erroneously entertains a demurrer to evidence of defendant on whom is the burden of proof, this will not warrant a reversal if the facts be found for defendant.[53] And refusal to allow an amendment to the grounds of demurrer to the evidence by adding another ground was not prejudicial to defendant, where it had a right to and did argue in its petition for writ of error the point proposed to be made and relied on by the amendment.[54]

C. Dismissal or Nonsuit[55] — 1. Power of Court to Grant. In many jurisdictions the rule is that plaintiff cannot be nonsuited against his will for lack of evidence,[56] or on any other grounds.[57] But in other jurisdictions the power of courts to allow nonsuits against plaintiff's consent in a proper case is well settled.[58]

2. Operation and Effect of Motion. A motion for nonsuit is in effect a demurrer to the evidence,[59] is governed by the same principles,[60] and presents for the consideration of the court a pure question of law.[61] It admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence and every inference of fact that can legitimately be drawn,[62] and on such motion the evidence will be interpreted most strongly against defendant.[63] It submits to the court the single question whether plaintiff has proved a case sufficient to be submitted to the jury.[64]

3. Form and Requisites of Motion. The motion should state the particular ground or grounds on which it is based,[65] so that the attention of the court and counsel may be called thereto, and an opportunity given to obviate the objections.[66] It must specify wherein the evidence is insufficient,[67] unless it be shown that there was a defect which could not have been remedied if plaintiff's attention had been called to it.[68] Thus a motion to dismiss "on the usual grounds," [69] "because plaintiff has shown no right to recover," [70] has "failed to prove the cause of action alleged," [71] that there is no evidence of defendant's negligence,[72] on the ground of plaintiff's contributory negligence without specifying wherein plaintiff was negligent,[73] or on the ground that there was no evidence to show a violation of law by defendant in an action against him for a penalty [74] is too general to be considered and should be overruled. A motion on the ground that plaintiff "had failed to prove a single allegation of his complaint" has been held sufficiently definite.[75] If the ground stated is that the testimony has not shown a fair preponderance in favor of plaintiff, it is an implied admission that the case is for the jury.[76]

4. Time For Motion.[77] A motion for nonsuit for failure of evidence must be seasonably made.[78] It is premature and should not be sustained when made before the close of plaintiff's evidence.[79] According to some decisions it should be made at the close of plaintiff's case,[80] according to others it may be made at the close of all the evidence,[81] at least if defendant's evidence does not supply the defect, and all the evidence is insufficient to sustain a verdict,[82] or when the entire evidence is such that if the motion had been denied and a verdict found for plaintiff it would have been the duty of the court to set the verdict aside as not supported by the evidence.[83] Under the statutes of one state, the motion may be made at the close of plaintiff's evidence, and if overruled may be renewed at the close of all the evidence.[84] The motion comes too late after the case has been submitted to the jury,[85] or after the court has given a peremptory instruction and discharged the jury,[86] or after judgment.[87]

5. HEARING AND DETERMINATION OF MOTION.[88] When a motion for compulsory nonsuit is based on the opening statement of counsel, plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of all allegations in the pleading, all facts referred to by his counsel, and all his offers of proof.[89] So on motion for nonsuit, plaintiff is entitled to the most favorable construction of the evidence that can be given it. All the facts given in evidence to support the material allegations of the declaration or complaint are taken to be true, and plaintiff is entitled to the most favorable inferences deducible from the evidence.[90] All the relevant evidence received must be given

97. Storck v. Mesker, 55 Mo. App. 26; Means v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 126 N. C. 424, 35 S. E. 813. The court may take a motion for nonsuit, for insufficiency of proof, made at the close of plaintiff's case under advisement and sustain it at the close of defendant's case if defendant's evidence does sidered on the hearing of the motion,[98] but where a defense pleaded by defendant is established by plaintiff's evidence, a nonsuit is properly granted.[99] After motion made, the court may in its discretion permit plaintiff to introduce further evidence before passing on the motion,[1] and usually does so as a matter of course. When the statute of limitations would be a bar to a new action, refusal of the court to permit plaintiff to adduce additional evidence is error.[3] Such refusal is likewise error where to allow the production of additional evidence, would occasion no unreasonable delay or interfere with the trial.[4] When the motion is sustained, plaintiff's case should be dismissed without prejudice to another action and without judgment on the merits.[5] Upon denial of the motion the court cannot give judgment for plaintiff, but the case should go to the jury.[6]

6. When Granted or Refused — a. On Trial by Jury — (I) When Granted. It has been said that to avoid a nonsuit, the evidence of plaintiff must be sufficient to raise more than a mere surmise or conjecture that the fact is as alleged. It must be such that a rational, well-constructed mind can reasonably draw from it the conclusion that the fact exists.[7] The circumstances under which a nonsuit will be granted for insufficiency of evidence have been variously stated as follows: Where plaintiff does not prove a sufficient case to go to the jury; [8] where it appears not supply the defects of plaintiff's evidence. Manning v. Manchester Mills, 70 N. H. 582, 49 Atl. 91.

Limitations of rule.— The above rule does not mean that in every case where the trial court might properly grant a new trial for insufficiency of evidence for plaintiff, it should grant a motion for nonsuit, if made after both parties rest their case, but only that it should do so in very clear cases, which is practically the rule which controls in directing a verdict. In re Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 82 Pac. 57; Colt v. Sixth Ave. R. evidence would not sustain a finding for plaintiff;[14] or where his counsel, in making his opening statement, admits or states facts which preclude a recovery.[15] But the statement must not only be insufficient, but must contain admissions fatal to the action.[16] The motion should in no case be granted merely because counsel in his opening statement fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, because, notwithstanding the opening statement, the evidence might warrant a recovery.[17] Where defendant relies on an affirmative defense, plaintiff may move the court to instruct that the plea is not supported, the issue thus raised to be decided by the rules of nonsuit.[18]

(II) When Refused. To authorize a nonsuit, it has been said, the evidence must be so conclusive that all reasonable men in the exercise of an honest and impartial judgment can draw but one conclusion from it.[19] The circumstances under which a nonsuit should be refused have been variously stated as follows: When the essential elements of plaintiff's cause of action are admitted by defendant's pleading;[20] where plaintiff makes out a prima facie case,[21] unless a verdict for plaintiff would be against the clear weight and effect of the defensive evidence whatever may be its character;[22] when, on the evidence adduced, plaintiff is entitled to have his case, as made by his pleadings,[23] submitted to the jury;[24] when the

if it amounts to more than a scintilla;[32] where the evidence would authorize a finding for either party,[33] where upon any construction which the jury is authorized to put upon the evidence, or by any inference they are authorized to draw from it, plaintiff is entitled to recover;[34] or where the evidence in any reasonable view, giving plaintiff the benefit of the most reasonable inference, will support a verdict in his favor.[35] It is not a ground for nonsuit or dismissal that recovery must be limited to nominal damages,[36] or to only a portion of the amount sued for in the petition,[37] provided a cause of action of any kind is stated in plaintiff's petition and supported by the evidence.[38] Where there are several defendants and the evidence warrants a recovery as to one of them only, a motion to nonsuit as to all should be denied.[39] The same is true where there are several plaintiffs and but one of them is shown to have a cause of action.[40] A general motion to dismiss an action by several plaintiffs should be denied, where a cause of action is shown as to two.[41] A nonsuit goes to the whole of a case, and it is error to sustain a nonsuit as to part of plaintiff's cause of action.[42]

Limitation of rule.— Where the sole object of the recovery is damages, a failure to prove substantial damages is a failure to prove the substance of the issue and entitles defendant to a judgment of nonsuit, or a judgment that the appellant take nothing by his action. Where plaintiff relies for recovery on several acts of wrong or negligence, proof of any one of them, itself actionable, is sufficient to prevent a nonsuit. Brooks v. Atlanta, 1 Ga. App. 678, 57 S. E. 1081.

The admission of improper evidence is not ground for nonsuit.[43] Where a petition sets forth a cause of action against all of the defendants and one fails to answer, the allegations against him are to be taken as true, and a nonsuit should not be rendered in his favor.[44]

b. On Trial by Court. According to some decisions where the case is tried without a jury, on motion for nonsuit or dismissal at the close of plaintiff's evidence, the court should decide the motion according to the preponderance of the evidence.[45] Other decisions, however, hold that the rules as to nonsuit are the same whether the trial is by the court or by a jury.[46] According to these decisions the motion is not addressed to the court sitting as a jury when the latter has been waived, but is a question of law alone submitted to the judgment of the court as such, and the court sitting as a jury has no more concern with it than it could have with the decision of a question on demurrer to a pleading.[47]

7. Exceptions to Rulings. If a motion for nonsuit is sustained an exception by plaintiff lies to the sustaining of the motion.[48] In some jurisdictions the granting of a motion for nonsuit is purely a matter of discretion, and a denial of the motion is not ground of exception by defendant.[49] And, in some jurisdictions, while the refusal of the motion is reviewable, the remedy is by motion for new trial and not by exception.[50] In other jurisdictions the right to except to the denial of the motion is recognized.[51]

8. Waiver of Error in Rulings on Motion. It is well settled that error in overruling a motion for dismissal or nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case is waived where defendant introduces evidence which supplies the defects in plaintiff's proof,[52] and according to the weight of authority, such error is waived by

Questions raised by exception.—Where it is the practice for defendant to except to such ruling, the exception merely raises the question whether there is sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict for plaintiff. Szuchy v. Hillside Coal, etc., Co., 150 N. Y. 219, 44 N. E. 974.

Where there are several defendants, plaintiff's failure to except to a nonsuit as to one or more of them amounts to an abandonment of the joint action and an election to proceed against defendant not discharged. Ellis v. Almand, 115 Ga. 333, 47 S. E. 642.

In North Carolina it was held in Means v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 126 N. C. 424, 35 S. E. 813, construing Act (1897), c. 109, as amended by Act (1899), c. 131, that, if defendant introduced evidence after making a motion to dismiss, he thereby waived any rights he had under said motion. But at the close of all the evidence he might renew his motion to dismiss, and this motion stood upon a con-is renewed at the close of all the evidence.[54] Nevertheless, it is the rule in a num ber of jurisdictions that defendant does not waive an erroneous ruling on a motio for nonsuit by introducing evidence after the motion is overruled, unless in s doing he supplies the defects in plaintiff's case.[55] If he does not, the motio may, without further renewal, on a proper assignment of error, be sustained an a nonsuit granted on appeal.[56]

9. Harmless Error in Rulings on Motion. The erroneous denial of a nonsui for want of sufficient evidence is harmless error, where subsequently to suc denial the defect in plaintiff's proof is supplied by evidence introduced by eithe party.[57] If, however, the omission is supplied in part only the judgment shoul sideration of the whole evidence introduced by plaintiff and defendant. This construction has since been made the law by the legislature. Acts (1901), c. 594. See McCall v. Southern R. Co., 129 N. C. 298, 40 S. E. 67; Parlier v. Southern R. Co., 129 N. C. 262, 39 S. E. 961.

be reversed.[58] So also error in denying a motion for nonsuit is harmless where the court instructs the jury to find for defendant,[59] where both parties demand a judgment on the merits by final submission of the cause,[60] or where a judgment for nonsuit at the close of all the evidence is denied.[61] Erroneously granting a nonsuit is harmless where the jury, under proper instructions, would have been bound to find against appellant,[62] where defendant was entitled to have a verdict directed,[63] or where plaintiff's case was so radically defective that it could not have been remedied by further proof.[64] However, if there is any evidence sufficient to go to the jury the granting of the motion is prejudicial error;[65] and in at least one state it is held that this is so even though the court would be justified in setting aside the verdict as against the weight of the evidence.[66]

warrant it,[69] although statutes require issues of fact to be submitted to the jury.[70] Such action does not deprive the party against whom the verdict is directed of his constitutional right to a jury trial;[71] nor is this power in any way affected by the fact that statutes expressly confer on the parties the right to demur to the evidence.[72]

b. Direction Subject to Opinion of Court. In some jurisdictions the court has power to direct a verdict, subject to the opinion of the court, when the sole question presented is whether plaintiff, on the undisputed facts, is entitled to recover.[73] Such action is not proper when there are disputed facts to be settled on conflicting evidence,[74] or where exceptions have been saved to the court's rulings on the admissibility of evidence.[75]

Setting aside verdict and directing verdict for opposite party.—Where the court directs a verdict for plaintiff, without submitting anything to the jury, so that Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that on a special verdict the court may direct a general verdict, does not apply, and the verdict is not directed "subject to the opinion of the court," so that section 1185, providing that in such case the court can set aside the verdict and direct a judgment, does not apply, it cannot, after the trial has closed and the jury been discharged, set aside the verdict and direct one for defendant; but it has authority merely to set it aside and grant a new trial. 2. Nature and Effect of Motion to Direct Verdict. A motion to direct a verdict is in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence and is governed by practically the same rules,[76] and concedes as true the evidence in behalf of the adverse party with all fair and reasonable inferences to be deduced from it.[77] It does not question the sufficiency of the pleadings, but raises merely the question of the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a verdict against the moving party.[78] But the court may examine the writ, which is not part of the pleadings, and say that no proper pleading under the form of action brought would warrant a recovery under the proof adduced.[79] The same question presented by a motion for a nonsuit may be raised by a motion to direct a verdict.[80] A motion by defendant to direct a verdict is an abandonment of a plea of set-off.[81] A motion by plaintiff to direct a verdict against one of two defendants is in effect a dismissal as to the other defendant.[82] material points;[88] where, although the evidence is conflicting, a conceded fact shows that the evidence on one side cannot be true;[89] or, where by giving to the opposite party the benefit of the most favorable view of the evidence the verdict against him is demanded,[90] a verdict should be directed. So the trial court may properly direct a verdict against plaintiff on the opening statement of counsel where he states or concedes facts which clearly show that plaintiff is not entitled to recover.[91] The power to direct a verdict on counsel's opening statement must, however, be exercised with caution and never without careful consideration and opportunity for counsel to explain and qualify his statement so far as truth will permit.[92] And the mere fact that the statement falls short of stating facts sufficient to warrant recovery will not authorize the direction of a verdict.[93] And where counsel merely outlines the case, leaving the details to be supplied by the testimony, a verdict should not be directed on the ground that no case is stated.[94]

(B) When Denied. Doubts should in all cases be resolved in favor of the submission of the case to the jury.[95] It is only when the court can find no evidence which in its deliberate and ultimate judgment is entitled to be weighed that the jury should be instructed in terms that there is no evidence to support the burden of proof which rests upon the party.[96] A verdict should not be directed except in cases where the evidence is so conclusive that reasonable minds could not differ as to the result to be reached.[97] A verdict should not be directed unless

Reasons assigned in support of doctrine.— The rule that a verdict may be directed whenever the proof is such that a decision to the contrary might be set aside as against the weight of evidence would be both uncertain and delusive. There is no standard by which to determine when a verdict may be thus set aside. It depends upon the discretion of the court. The result of setting aside a verdict and the result of directing one are widely different and should not be controlled by the same conditions or circumstances. In one case there is a re-trial. In the other the judgment is final. One rests in discretion; the other upon legal right. One involves a mere matter of remedy or cannot, in any case where the right of trial by jury exists and the evidence presents an actual issue of fact, properly direct a verdict; if in such a case it is dissatisfied with the verdict because against the weight or preponderance of evidence, it may be set aside, but a new trial must be granted before another jury, and the direction of a verdict under such circumstances is reversible error.[19] So in Massachusetts, it has been said that if the evidence is such that the court would set aside any number of verdicts rendered upon it, toties quoties, then the cause should be taken from the jury, by instructing them to find a verdict for defendant. On the other hand, if the evidence is such that, although one or two verdicts rendered upon it would be set aside on motion, yet a second or third verdict would be suffered to stand, the cause should not be taken from the jury, but should be submitted to them under instructions.[20]

b. When Verdict Directed For Plaintiff. Where plaintiff has clearly made out his case and there is no evidence to the contrary,[21] where defendant relies on an affirmative defense and the evidence introduced would not warrant a finding procedure. The other determines substantive and substantial rights. Such a rule would have no just principle upon which to rest. While in many cases, even where the evidence is sufficient to sustain it, a verdict may be properly set aside and a new trial ordered, yet, that in every case the trial court may, whenever it sees fit, direct a verdict and thus forever conclude the parties, has no basis in the law, which confides to juries and not to courts the determination of the facts in this class of cases. 56. Application of foregoing principles.— Applying these principles it has been held that where, in an action to recover the value of certain cattle, there is no evidence as to

d. When Verdict Directed For One of Several Plaintiffs or Defendants. Where one of several plaintiffs has no cause of action, a separate verdict against him should be directed;[57] and when there is no liability shown on the part of one of several defendants, a separate verdict should be directed in his favor,[58] before the case against his co-defendants is submitted to the jury.[59] So where plaintiff fails to prove which one or more of several defendants was guilty of the negligence charged, it is proper to direct a verdict for defendants.[60] Where there is evidence as against one co-defendant, a request for a verdict in favor of all is properly denied;[61] and, on the other hand, a request for a verdict in favor of all the defendants should be denied if there is evidence to support a verdict against any of them.[62] In some jurisdictions, in certain cases, a verdict may be directed in favor of both plaintiff and defendant against third parties who are cited and make default.[63]

e. When Verdict Directed on One or More Counts. Where there are two counts in the declaration, and the proof sustains one of them, but not the other, the value of the cattle or the amount of plaintiff's damages (Hearne v. Strahorn-Hutton-Evans Commission Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1889) 51 S. W. 867); where in an action for malicious prosecution, there is no evidence showing want of probable cause (Doty v. VanVechten, (Iowa 1899) 79 N. W. 1041, 50 N. W. 46; Hoffman v. Richards, 98 Mich. 489, 57 N. (Pa.) 438); where, in an action for money expended for defendant at his request, there is no evidence of any such request (Tanenbaum v. Feist, 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 368, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 748); where in a suit on a bond there is no proof of its contents (Herod v. State, 15 Ind. App. 648, 43 N. E. 144, 44 N. a verdict should be directed on the one not sustained,[64] and the refusal of the trial court to so rule warrants a reversal of a judgment in plaintiff's favor, unless it appears that defendant could not have been prejudiced by such refusal.[65]

f. Direction of Verdict on Agreed Statement of Facts. Where a case is submitted on an agreed statement of facts, the court's charge must be based on facts specifically admitted.[66]

4. Direction of Verdict on Motion by Both Parties. The trial court has power to direct a verdict when requested by both parties.[67] There is considerable lack of harmony as to the effect of motions by both parties to direct a verdict, in respect of questions of fact. The rule is well settled in some states that the effect of such motions is under no circumstances a waiver of a right to jury trial by either party, and confers no power on the court to determine questions of fact.[68] On the other hand, while the decisions of the lower federal courts are not altogether in harmony,[69] the following rules are now definitely settled by the supreme court of the United States. Where both parties ask for a directed verdict and do nothing more, they thereby assume the facts to be undisputed, and request the court to find the facts, and they are concluded by the finding made by the court upon which the resulting instruction of law is given.[70] But, notwithstanding the fact that both parties ask for a directed verdict, this does not exclude either of them on the denial of his motion from the right to have the case go to the jury in accordance with subsequent special requests asked on his behalf.[71] Or stating this latter proposition in somewhat different language which was quoted with approval by the supreme court, "the fact that each party asks for a peremptory instruction to find in his favor does not submit the issues of fact to the court so as to deprive the party of the right to ask other instructions, and to except to the refusal to give them, nor does it deprive him of the right to have questions of fact submitted to the jury if issues are joined on which conflicting evidence has been offered." [72] In a number of other jurisdictions the rule is very similar to that which obtains in the federal courts. The general rule is that a request by both parties for the direction of a verdict amounts to a submission which it is desired should be passed on by the jury.[76] The request to go to the jury may be made at any time before the directed verdict is actually rendered by the jury,[77] but not thereafter.[78] If the submission be as to part of the facts only, it is error for the court to decide the questions not submitted.[79]

5. Application and Proceedings Thereon — a. Form and Requisites of Motion. The motion need not be in writing, unless a statute so requires;[80] but in order to preserve an exception to the overruling of the motion, a written instruction directing a verdict must be presented at the time the motion is made.[81] It is not sufficient that such instruction be offered later with other instructions submitting the case to the jury.[82] The motion should be absolute and without reservation.[83] There is some conflict of authority as to the necessity of stating grounds of the motion for directing a verdict. According to some decisions the motion should state specifically the grounds on which it is based.[84] According to other decisions,

Reason for rule.— Every party is entitled to present to the court for its decision such legal questions as he thinks arise upon the testimony, without being subjected to the penalty of losing his right to have the case submitted to the jury. And it is only when no request is made to go to the jury that he will be held to have waived that right. If the rule were otherwise, it would never be safe to ask for a direction of a verdict. Switzer v. Norton, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 173, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 350.

Where question is one of law.—Where, after the denial of a motion for a nonsuit, defendant asked to go to the jury upon certain propositions only, which was denied, and a verdict directed for plaintiff, if there was no question for the jury upon the matters as to which there was a request, the remaining questions are to be disposed of by the court, the right to a jury being waived. See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trial," § 398.

Reason for rule.— It is due to the court

if the motion is based on the legal insufficiency of the evidence to sustain a recovery, it is sufficient if the question is raised in general terms,[85] and in one case it is said that the better practice is to state the specific grounds of the motion, but that this is not essential.[86] Where the declaration contains two counts and either of them is sustained by the evidence, a motion by defendant for a general verdict will be denied.[87] The court cannot be called upon by a motion of this character to make special findings of fact.[88] The motion should not be complicated with statements as to the law.[89] It is not necessary to state reasons for the grounds alleged.[90]

b. Time For Motion. A motion to direct a verdict may be made when the opposing party has rested his case,[91] or it may be made after all the evidence on both sides is in.[92] If overruled before the case is closed, it may be renewed when all the evidence is in, and there is no inconsistency in then sustaining it.[93] In some jurisdictions it is held to come too late after final submission of the cause,[94] and the opposing counsel that their attention should be called to the precise defect in the evidence, or the omission of evidence, that the party claims entitle him to the direction of the verdict. It is due to the court to enable it to pass understandingly upon the motion, and it is due to counsel that he may, if possible, supply the defective or omitted evidence if permitted to do so by the court. Tanderup v. Hansen, 8 S. D. 375, 66 N. W. 1073; Smalley v. Rio Grande Western R. Co., 34 Utah 423, 98 Pac. 311.

Applications of rule.—A mere general statement that under the evidence plaintiff is not entitled to recover, or that defendant is entitled to a verdict, or that plaintiff has not made a sufficient case to go to the jury, does not specify any grounds for the direction of a verdict for defendant. Smalley v. Rio Grande Western R. Co., 34 Utah 423, 98 Pac. 311. If the motion is based on a variance between the pleadings and proof, the variance must be particularly specified. Zellers v. White, 208 Ill. 518, 70 N. E. 669, 100 Am. St. Rep. 243; Probst Constr. Co. v. Foley, 166 Ill. 31, 46 N. E. 750.

Qualification of rule.— The rule that a motion for a directed verdict and the direction must specify the particular grounds is qualified to the extent that, where it is made manifest on what question of law the case was taken from the jury, and the defects on which it was based do not admit of correction, a failure to specify grounds does not justify a reversal. Smalley v. Rio Grande Western R. Co., 34 Utah 423, 98 Pac. 311.

Waiver of grounds not specified.—A motion to direct a verdict on specified enumerated grounds excludes all grounds not enumerated. Crissman v. Erie R. Co., 123 N. Y. App. Div. 61, 107 N. Y. Suppl. 827.

Applications of rule.— Thus an instruction that the evidence is insufficient to sustain plaintiff's case as charged in the declaration (Ames, etc., Co. v. Strachurski, 145 Ill. 192, 34 N. E. 48); that plaintiff has failed to prove defendant's negligence and his own freedom from contributory negligence (Cowles v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Iowa 1902) 88 N. W. 1072); or, in an action to recover a debt barred by a discharge in bankruptcy, that plaintiff has failed to establish a new promise as required by law, or prove any transaction on the part of defendant that would make him responsible for the debt (Tompkins v. Hazen, 165 N. Y. 18, 58 N. E. 762), has been held to be good.

after other instructions have been asked and given,[95] or at the time the other instructions are presented;[96] while in others it is held that even though the jury has been instructed and the cause submitted,[97] or after the jury have disagreed,[98] or after the jury have returned a verdict contrary to the evidence,[99] a verdict may be directed in a proper case.[1] Ordinarily, it is error to direct a verdict before the opposing party has rested,[2] or without giving him an opportunity to introduce testimony in rebuttal,[3] unless there are defects in the proof which could not be cured by additional testimony.[4] A motion made by defendant, at the close of plaintiff's case, will not be entertained unless defendant elects to rest on plaintiff's showing.[5] But the fact that defendant has testified as plaintiff's witness will not defeat the motion.[6]

c. Hearing and Determination.[7] On motion to direct a verdict the court assumes to be true the evidence of the opposite party, who is entitled to the most favorable construction that it will properly bear and to the benefit of all reasonable inferences arising therefrom.[8] Only evidence tending to prove his case will

If the motion is sustained, it is the practice in some jurisdictions for the court to direct the jury to return a verdict in favor of the party moving therefor, and then enter judgment on the verdict.[10] In others, the court discharges the jury and enters judgment for the party entitled thereto,[11] and thus to order judgment, without verdict, is at most a harmless irregularity and no ground for a new trial.[12] The direction of a verdict is not a technical "instruction" and may be made orally.[13] But the better practice is to put it in writing.[14] The court should state reasons for its action in directing a verdict,[15] and its failure so to do has been held reversible error.[16] That the evidence will not support a verdict is a sufficient statement of the reason.[17] The court is not required to make and file specific findings of fact.[18] Where several pleas are interposed, the direction should designate the plea on which the verdict should be based;[19] but the omission of such designation is harmless where the verdict necessarily results from the evidence.[20] Any statement of the court, in the presence of the jury, which indicates its views as to what the verdict should be will be deemed a direction of a verdict.[21] The mere fact that the court, before directing a verdict for plaintiff, stated that he intended to do so is not error.[22] Where a motion for judgment is overruled, and the moving party does not rest his case, no judgment is rendered against him,[23] but the trial proceeds as if the motion had not been made.[24] Where

Extent of rule.— The rule applies notwithstanding a statutory provision that when the sufficiency of the evidence is challenged, the court shall discharge the jury and direct a final judgment. Rinear v. Skinner, 20 Wash. 541, 56 Pac. 24.

defendant's motion is sustained, plaintiff should be given an opportunity to take a nonsuit,[25] but he cannot be compelled to do so;[26] and if he refuses, it is proper to direct a verdict against him and render final judgment thereon,[27] unless the evidence is not only insufficient to make out plaintiff's case but shows that defendant is entitled to a judgment on the merits.[28] In some jurisdictions plaintiff is not entitled to a dismissal without prejudice,[29] while in others, if the motion be made by defendant at the close of plaintiff's case, the only judgment that can be rendered against plaintiff is that of nonsuit.[30] A party may withdraw his motion at any time before it has been acted upon by the court.[31] In New York, and some other states where a similar code is in force, a party does not waive his right to go to the jury by asking that a verdict be directed in his favor;[32] but, if his motion be overruled, he must then specifically request what particular facts he desires to have submitted to the jury.[33] The motion is equivalent to a submission to the court of all questions of fact upon which the verdict of the jury is not thus requested.[34] The giving of a peremptory instruction for one party to an action is in effect a withdrawal of all other instructions for both parties.[35]

6. Refusal of Juror to Obey Direction. When a peremptory instruction is given, the jury may be compelled over their protest to return a verdict in accordance therewith.[36] And the refusal of a juror to obey the court's instruction subjects him and those who encourage him to punishment for contempt.[37] The court may, in case of the jury's refusal, direct the entry of a verdict without their assent,[38] and its action, although technically irregular, will not be cause for reversal where no injury has resulted to defendant.[39] A verdict of eleven jurors, if given by direction of the court, will be accepted.[40]

7. Exceptions to Rulings. The rulings of the court on motions to direct verdicts are subject to exception.[41] Where the motion is made by defendant at the close of plaintiff's case and is overruled, defendant must rest or he waives his right to except,[42] unless he renews his motion at the close of all the evidence.[43] The overruling of a motion to direct a verdict, made at the close of plaintiff's case, is not error, even though plaintiff's evidence be deficient, if such deficiencies be afterward supplied by defendant's evidence.[44] Objection must be made and exception taken specifically to the direction of the verdict, and it is not sufficient to merely enter a general exception to the final judgment.[45] The objection may be in general terms, and it is not necessary that a request be made to have a particular issue submitted to the jury.[46] An exception to the court's ruling upon a motion for a peremptory instruction is a sufficient exception to the peremptory instruction itself.[47]

8. Waiver of Error in Ruling on Motion to Direct Verdict. An exception to the ruling of the court denying a motion to direct a verdict for defendant made at the close of plaintiff's evidence is not waived, where defendant does not thereafter introduce any evidence, and a formal announcement that he rests his case is not necessary.[48] But where, after denial of his motion for a verdict at the close of plaintiff's case, defendant introduces evidence,[49] the error, if any, in the ruling is waived, unless the motion is renewed at the close of all the evidence,[50] in which case the whole of the evidence, that introduced by plaintiff originally and that introduced by either party subsequently, must be taken into consideration.[51] So, if defendant fails to offer an instruction with his motion,[52] or if he submits a peremptory instruction with a series of instructions,[53] he thereby waives, upon appeal or writ of error, his right to raise objection to the action of the trial court in refusing to peremptorily instruct in his favor. But the fact that defendant afterward submits his case to the jury is not a waiver of his right to have the refusal of such an instruction reviewed.[54] Where, after the refusal of a trial court to direct a verdict in his favor, defendant allows the jury to be discharged, and consents to a trial before the court, he will be held to have waived the error, if any, in regard to the ruling on his motion for a verdict.[55] Consent by both counsel that the court may direct a verdict for defendant is a waiver of all objections to such ruling.[56]

9. Harmless Error in Ruling on Motion to Direct Verdict. Error in granting or refusing a motion to direct a verdict will not operate to reverse where it is apparent that no prejudice could have resulted to the rights of the party complaining of the action of the court in respect of the motion.[57] As regards error in directing a verdict it has accordingly been held that the error is harmless where the question involved in the suit is solely one of law upon which the court rules correctly;[58] where the party against whom the verdict was directed could not succeed in any event;[59] where the court would have set aside a verdict for the party against whom it was directed;[60] where the right of the party in whose favor verdict is directed to judgment is established either by record evidence or admitted facts so as not to be dependent upon the credibility of oral testimony;[61] where the evidence would have justified the court in discharging the jury and rendering judgment in favor of the party for whom the verdict was directed;[62] where, pending proceedings for review, a final judgment has been rendered in another proceeding between the same parties which conclusively determines the question at issue in favor of the party for whom the verdict was directed;[63] or where the court withdraws its direction to find a verdict and the question is left to the jury.[64] So the direction of a verdict on an untenable ground will not be ground for reversal where the evidence is insufficient to sustain a recovery.[65] So where a demurrer to the evidence would have been sustained, an instruction to find for efendant after the jury have indicated an intention to find for plaintiff is not versible error.[66] In respect of erroneous refusal to direct a verdict, it has been ld that the error is harmless if the record shows that the final judgment is right,[67] here the defects in plaintiff's case are afterward supplied by evidence offered y defendant,[68] where the verdict is for the party making the motion,[69] or where ie moving party has been granted a new trial;[70] and in one state it is held that ie reviewing court will under no circumstances reverse because of a refusal of ie trial court to direct a verdict.[71] On the other hand, if on the evidence a erdict for plaintiff could lawfully have been rendered, the direction of a verdict or defendant is error, which necessarily injures plaintiff.[72]

E. Withdrawal of Juror. The withdrawal of a juror by direction or leave f court produces a mistrial and effects a continuance,[73] and it is error, when a arty has been permitted to withdraw a juror, to enter judgment against him on he merits.[74] A motion to withdraw a juror must be based on matters occurring t the trial,[75] the granting of the motion being in the discretion of the court,[76] hich discretion is subject to review only in cases of abuse.[77] It is ground to ithdraw a juror, that the trial court made an improper remark and misstatement f law, which was applauded by the juror,[78] or that plaintiff persistently charged rimes to his brother, defendant, that had no possible relation to the questions n issue.[79] It is not a ground for the withdrawal of a juror that a juror asked uestions of a witness and indicated a possible disbelief of the witness;[80] and a notion to withdraw a juror to enable the moving party to obtain additional vidence should be denied where the moving party does not appear to have exer- ised diligence in seeking prior to the trial to obtain such evidence.[81] So where lefendant's objection to a question asked by plaintiff's counsel of a juror as to whether the juror was insured against accident was sustained, the court stating hat counsel might ask whether the jurors were stock-holders or interested in any nsurance company, and plaintiff's counsel did not thereafter pursue the matter, lefendant was not entitled to a mistrial.[82] As a condition of granting the motion he court may impose the condition that the party making the motion pay certain osts.[83] If the party deems the condition imposed unsatisfactory, he should decline to accept the order on the terms imposed and proceed with the trial.[84]
