"Tons burden" in statute construed see The Brunel, [1900] P. 24, 32, 9 Aspin. 10, 69 L. J. P. & Adm. 8, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 500, 48 Wkly. Rep. 243.

4. Roberts v. Opdyke, 40 N. Y. 259, 262.

When the term is used to represent, for convenience of calculation, two thousand pounds, the contract should and usually does so state it, as per ton of two thousand pounds. In the absence of such statement the term is construed to have its usual meaning of two thousand two hundred and forty pounds. The Miantinomi, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,521, 3 Wall. Jr. 46.

Statutory provisions.—In California twenty hundred-weight constitute a ton (Higgins v. California Petroleum, etc., Co., 120 Cal. 629, 630, 52 Pac. 1080); in Missouri a ton of hemp is two thousand pounds (Green v. Moffett, 22 Mo. 529, 537); in Pennsylvania two thousand pounds avoirdupois weight constitute a ton (Weaver v. Fegley, 29 Pa. St. 27, 70 Am. Dec. 151; Evans v. Myers, 25 Pa. St. 114, 116); in New York two thousand pounds avoirdupois constitute a ton (Many v. Beekman Iron Co., 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 188, 195).

The term has several meanings, and in one sense one person may be the tool of another. In this sense a cashier opening a safe under compulsion by robbers was the tool of the robbers, but not within the meaning of the term as used in an insurance policy against loss of money from a bank "by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon." Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ballard County Bank, 134 Ky. 354, 358, 360, 120 S. W. 301, opinion of Hobson, A. J.

The term embraces those implements which are commonly used by the hand of one man in some manual labor necessary for his subsistence. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Boston Belting Co. v. Ivens, 28 La. Ann. 695, 696].

A synonym of "instrument" especially when applied to things rather than persons see State v. Bowman, 6 Vt. 594, 596.

The term, as used in exemption statutes, is presumed to embrace such implements of husbandry or of manual labor as are usually employed in, and are appropriate to, the business of the several trades or classes of the laboring community, and according to the wants of their respective employments or professions, whether farmer, mechanic, manufacturer, or, in fact, any artisan or laborer, who may require the use of such helps to obtain his living. I. DEFINITION AND DERIVATION.

When the law of the land undertakes to declare and protect rights and establishes a standard of conduct for the purpose, any acts or omissions which disturb or impede the enjoyment of such rights may be treated as legal wrongs or torts.[1]

1. Cooley Torts 4.

The difficulty of defining a tort in accurate phraseology was commented upon by Finch, J., in Rich v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 87 N. Y. 382, 390, in the following language: "We have been unable to find any accurate and perfect definition of a tort. Between actions plainly ex contractu and those as clearly ex delicto, there exists what has been termed a border land, where the lines of distinction are shadowy and obscure, and the tort and the contract so approach each other, and become so nearly coincident as to make their practical separation somewhat difficult. (Moak's Underhill on Torts, p. 23.) The text writers either avoid a definition entirely (Addison on Torts), or frame one plainly inperfect (2 Bouvier's L. Dict. 600), or depend upon one which they concede to be inaccurate, but hold sufficient for judicial purposes."

Other definitions are: "Any wrongful act, neglect, or default whereby legal damage is caused to the person, property, or reputation of another." Standard Dict.

"Such wrongs as are in their nature distinguishable from mere breaches of contract, and are often mentioned as of three kinds: viz. nonfeasance, being the omission to do some act which a person is bound to do; misfeasance, being the improper doing of some act which he may lawfully do; or malfeasance, being the commission of some act which is positively unlawful." Abbott L. Dict.

"An act or omission which unlawfully violates a person's right, created by the law and for which the appropriate remedy is a common-law action for damages by the injured person." Burdick Torts 11.

"An act or omission, not a mere breach of contract, and producing injury to another, in the absence of any existing lawful relation of which such act or omission is a natural outgrowth or incident." "A Proposed New Definition of a Tort" by F. H. Cooke, 12 Harvard L. Rev. 335, 336.

"The infringement of a right created otherwise than by contract." Rapalje & L. L. Dict. [quoted in Jones v. Hunt, 74 Tex. 657, 659, 12 S. W. 832].

"A tortious act consists of the commission or omission of an act by one, without right, whereby another receives some injury, directly or indirectly, in person, property or reputation." Hayes v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co., 125 Ill. 626, 634, 18 N. E. 322, 1 L. R. A. 303.

"A legal wrong committed upon the person or property independent of contract. It may be either — 1. A direct invasion of some legal right of the individual. 2. The infraction of some public duty by which special damage accrues to the individual. 3. The violation of some private obligation by which like damage accrues to the individual." Ga. Civ. Code (1895), § 3807 [quoted in Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Spinks, 104 Ga. 692, 695, 30 S. E. 968; Reid v. Humber, 49 Ga. 207, 208].

"An injury or wrong committed, with or without force, to the person or property of another, and such injury may arise by either the nonfeasance, malfeasance or misfeasance of the wrong-doer." Gindele v. Corrigan, 129 Ill. 582, 587, 22 N. E. 516, 16 Am. St. Rep. 292.

"The word 'tort' means nearly the same thing as the expression 'civil wrong.' It denotes an injury inflicted otherwise than by a mere breach of contract; or, to be more nicely accurate, a tort is one's disturbance of another in rights which the law has created either in the absence of contract, or in consequence of a relation which a contract has established between the parties." Bishop Non-Contr. Law, § 4 [quoted in Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Spinks, 104 Ga. 692, 694, 30 S. E. 968; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Hennegan 33 Tex. Civ. App. 314, 316, 76 S. W. 452].

Liability for a tort "is based upon the theory, that the party liable has committed a wrong, or neglected some duty. That direct or consequential injury has resulted from the employment of immediate force, or the negligent performance of some legal duty, or in the negligent use of persons or property, whereby an injury has resulted to another." Scammon v. Chicago, 25 Ill. 424, 79 Am. Dec. 334.

"A wrong independent of contract." Bouvier L. Dict.; 1 Hill Torts 1. And see Mobile L. Ins. "Tort is an act or omission (not being merely the breach of a duty arising out of a personal relation, or undertaken by contract) which is related to harm suffered by a determinate person in one of the following ways [including interference with an absolute right whether there be measurable

The word (taken from the French) is derived from the Latin "torquere" to twist, "tortus" twisted or wrested aside. At one time in common use, it is a mere actual damage or not]: (a) It may be an act which, without lawful justification or excuse, is intended by the agent to cause harm, and does cause the harm complained of. (b) It may be an act in itself contrary to law, or an omission of specific legal duty, which causes harm not intended by the person so acting or omitting. (c) It may be an act violating an absolute right (especially rights of possession or property) and treated as wrongful without regard to the actor's intention or knowledge. This, as we have seen, is an artificial extension of the general conceptions which are common to English and Roman Law. (d) It may be an act or omission causing harm which the person acting or omitting did not intend to cause, but might and should with due diligence have foreseen and prevented. (e) It may, in special cases, consist merely in not avoiding or preventing harm and which the party was bound absolutely or within limits to avoid or prevent." Pollock Torts 19 [adopted in Jaggard Torts 2; and quoted in Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Spinks, 104 Ga. 692, 694, 30 S. E. 968; Drum v. Miller, 135 N. C. 204, 209, 47 S. E. 421, 102 Am. St. Rep. 528, 65 L. R. A. 890; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Hennegan, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 314, 316, 76 S. W. 452].

"To attempt a definition which would tell its own story on its face would be hopeless. Indeed no definition, helped out however much by explanation, can convey an adequate notion of the meaning of the word; nothing short of careful study of the specific torts of the law will answer, for there is no such thing as a typical tort, an actual tort, that is to say, which contains all the elements entering into the rest. One tort is as perfect as another; and each tort differs from the others in its legal constituents. But they all have this in common, that there must be a breach of duty paramount, or, as we shall now put it, established by municipal law; and they all lead to an action for damages. These facts must furnish our definition. Accordingly a tort may be said to be, a breach of duty established by municipal law for which a suit for damages can be maintained; or, conversely, the infringement of a private right, or a public as a private right, established by municipal law." Bigelow Torts 64.

For a discussion of the various definitions see Fiero Torts 3-5.

Limited to wrongs giving rise to action at law for damages.— The word "torts" in legal phraseology does not include all wrongful acts done by one person to the injury of another, but only those for which individuals may demand legal redress, or those which give rise to an action at law for damages. Sims v. Sims, 77 N. J. L. 251, 252, 72 Atl. 424. And see Wartman v. Empire Loan Co., 45 Tex. Civ. App. 469, 101 S. W. 499. No right of action exists at common law in favor of a wife for the enticing away of her husband and the alienation of his affections, and therefore such act does not come within the word "torts" in a statute giving a married woman a right of action in her own name for all torts committed against her or her separate property. Sims v. Sims, supra. "According to the common understanding of words, breach of trust is a wrong, adultery is a wrong, refusal to pay just compensation for saving a vessel in distress is a wrong. Yet none of these things is a tort. An order may be made compelling restitution from the defaulting trustee; a decree of judicial separation may be pronounced against the unfaithful wife or husband; and payment of reasonable salvage may be enforced against the ship-owner. But the administration of trusts belongs to the law formerly peculiar to the Chancellor's Court; the settlement of matrimonial causes between husband and wife to the law formerly peculiar to the King's Ecclesiastical Courts; and the adjustment of salvage claims to the law formerly peculiar to the Admiral's Court. These things being unknown to the old common law, there can be no question of tort in the technical sense." Pollock Torts (6th ed.) 3.

Acts for which penalty is imposed by statute.— The fact that a statute makes an act wrongful and imposes therefor a penalty to be recovered by civil action does not make the act a tort. It has been held, therefore, that an action under a statute to recover the penalty imposed thereby for receiving usury is not an action of tort within a statute allowing suits "for damages for torts" to be brought in the county in which the injury was inflicted, but is an action of debt, or in the nature of debt, required to be brought in the county of defendant's residence. Wartman v. Empire Loan Co., 45 Tex. Civ. App. 469, 471, 101 S. W. 499. In this case it was argued, in effect, that any civil wrong done, which injuriously affects the rights of person or property of another, and which is denounced by statute with a penalty attached which may be recovered by the injured party by way of damages, is a tort. But the court did not concur. "Evidently," said the court, "the term 'civil wrongs' appearing in the definitions [of tort] given, is used in a restricted and not in a broad and comprehensive sense, embracing every wrong for which an action may be maintained. . . . An action of tort, strictly speaking and as it is commonly understood, is one in which the complainant seeks to recover damages for defamation of character, the wrongful and forcibly taking of his property or injury to it, or for unlawful violence inflicted upon his person. Such an action, so far as we are informed, has never been founded and sustained on a wrongful act committed, such as the taking of usury, by the consent of the injured party, or in which he actively participated. To characterize accident that "tort" as a synonym for wrong has not become part of our current literary language. In Spenser's "Faerie Queene" it is freely used.[2]

II. HISTORY.

As in the primitive stages of racial development force and violence constituted the chief wrongs, society must at an early date have been called upon to settle many of the questions which are now placed under the head of torts, and the comparative antiquity of this branch of jurisprudence seems manifest. While this is of course mere speculation it can be said with reasonable assurance that the conception of a wrong done to the individual far antedated that of a wrong done to the state. At all events, principles applicable to such injuries as assault, battery, false imprisonment, seduction, trespass and conversion, wrongs essentially primitive, are well settled, and the same is true of abuse of process, malicious prosecution, waste, nuisance, and defamation, although the recognition of these injuries must of necessity have dated from a later epoch. Fraud, although a tort of ancient origin, governed by well developed rules, and negligence where the rules are few, are necessarily modern in the larger part of their applications, while unfair competition, interference with contractual rights and with legal remedies, violation of the right of privacy, and conspiracy are yet in process of evolution.[3]

such an act as a tort would seem to be anomalous."

"Tort" as synonymous with "private wrong," "private injury," or "civil wrong" see Rhobidas v. Concord, 70 N. H. 90, 47 Atl. 82, 85 Am. St. Rep. 604, 51 L. R. A. 381.

When used in reference to admiralty jurisdiction the term "tort" is not confined to wrongs or injuries committed by direct force, but it includes wrong suffered in consequence of the negligence or malfeasance of others where the remedy at common law is by an action on the case. Smith v. Burnett, 10 App. Cas. (D. C.) 469, 482 [affirmed in 173 U. S. 430, 19 S. Ct. 442, 43 L. ed. 756]; John Spry Lumber Co. v. The C. H. Green, 76 Mich. 320, 327, 43 N. 3. The eighth of the Twelve Tables of the Roman Law treats of torts and in its fragmentary form it is as follows: (1) Whoever shall chant a magic spell. . . . (2) If a man maim another, and does not compromise with him, there shall be retaliation in kind. (3) If with a fist or club, a man break a bone of a freeman, the penalty shall be three hundred asses, if of a slave, one hundred and fifty asses. (4) If he does any injury to another, twenty-five asses; if he sings a satirical song, let him be beaten. (5) . . . if he shall have inflicted a loss . . . he shall make it good. (8) Whoever shall blight the crops of another by incantation . . . nor shall thou win over to thyself another's grain. . . . (12) If a thief be caught stealing by night and he be slain, the homicide shall be lawful. (13) If in the daytime the thief defend himself with a weapon one may kill him. (15) . . . with a leather girdle about his naked body, and a platter in his hand. . . . (16) If a man contend at law about a theft not detected in the act. . . . (21) If a patron cheat his client he shall become infamous. (22) He who has been summoned as a witness or acts as libripens, and shall refuse to give his testimony, shall be accounted infamous and shall be incapable of acting subsequently as witness. (24) If a weapon slip from a man's hand without his intention of hurling it.

Tort and crime formerly undistinguished. —"The penal Law of ancient communities is not the law of Crimes; it is the law of Wrongs, or, to use the English technical word, of 'Torts.' The person injured proceeds against the wrong-doer by an ordinary civil action, and recovers compensation in the shape of money-damages if he succeeds. If the Commentaries of Gaius be opened at the place where the writer treats of penal jurisprudence founded on the Twelve Tables, it will be seen that at the head of the civil wrongs recognized by the Roman law stood Furtum or Theft. Offences which we are accustomed to regard exclusively as crimes are exclusively treated as torts, and not theft only, but assault and violent robbery, are associated by the jurisconsult with trespass, libel and slander. All alike give rise to an Obligation or vinculum juris, and were all requited by a payment of money. This peculiarity, however, is most strongly brought out in the consolidated Laws of the Germanic tribes. Without an exception they describe an immense system of money compensations for homicide, and with few exceptions, as large a scheme of compensation for minor injuries. . . . If therefore the criterion of a delict, wrong, or tort be that the person who suffers it, and not the State, is conceived to be wronged, it may be asserted that in the infancy of jurisprudence, the citizen depends

III. NATURE AND ELEMENTS.

A. Breach of Legal Duty. To constitute a tort, the wrong must have amounted to a breach of a legal duty owing by the wrong-doer to the injured for protection against violence or fraud not on the Law of Crime but on the Law of Tort." "Ancient Law," by Sir Henry Maine 358. A curious illustration is given by Gibbon ("Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," c. 44), who tells how one Veratius found amusement in rushing through the streets and striking in the face inoffensive travelers, while his attendant purse bearer immediately silenced their claims by the legal tender of twenty-five pieces of copper, about the value of one shilling.

Jewish law.— "No department of Jewish law is more illustrative of the great primitiveness of that system than is the law of torts. This includes a vast number of wrongs and injuries, some of which we might have expected to find treated as crimes. In earliest times the crime of murder was brought under the law of retaliation. Later, a money compensation seems to have been allowed. Under the "Book of Covenant," (Ex. XXI. 12) murder became a crime, but the guilty party had certain rights of asylum. In the case of theft, the criminal element was not distinguished; partly because the ancient saying, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," (Gen. IX. 6) had no counterpart applicable to the case of theft. The thief was, however, compelled to pay to the owner of the stolen property more than the value of the property. If he still retained possession of the stolen ox or ass — for such were the chief articles of value — he must return the beast and another as well; if he had killed or sold it, he forfeited to the owner four or five times its value. There are several other classes of wrongs which were regarded from much the same standpoint. Of these, two are the most important. When property not consisting of cattle, was entrusted to the care of another, and it was stolen, if the thief was discovered, he was compelled to pay double value to the owner. If the thief was not discovered, the question of the bailee's guilt or innocence was determined by some ordeal. (Ex-XXII. 7–9.) When cattle were delivered to another to be cared for, and an ox or a sheep was hurt, killed, or driven away, the herdsman if there were no witness, could clear himself by purgation. If it was clearly a case of theft, restoration had to be made, as the loss was due to the negligence of the herdsman. If the animal was hurt or destroyed by wild beasts, the herdsman was not compelled to make restitution. It is apparent that this is a view of the duties of the bailee which is very similar to the modern conception. An interesting development was the case of injury done to a 'hired thing,' in which case the bailor could not recover. The price of the hire was held to include insurance for damage. In the case of liability for negligence or for damage done by certain animals, there is close resemblance to more modern law. The owner of an ox which was not known to be dangerous was not responsible for the death of a man who had been gored by the ox. He was free of liability upon surrender of the ox, which seems to have been regarded as deodand, inasmuch as it was stoned to death and its flesh was not eaten. But if the ox was known to be dangerous, and was loose through negligence on the part of the owner, the owner was liable for any death caused by the ox. He could redeem himself by payment of a ransom; otherwise he must die. Corresponding regulations were enacted concerning injuries done by animals to one another, and as to wrongs committed by carelessness. In the case of damage feasant, committed by turning beasts loose in another's field or vineyard, the amount which could be recovered might not exceed that of the actual damage. For the determining of this amount, the law provided an easy method. The owner of the beasts must make restitution from the best of his own field or vineyard. (Ex. XXII. 5.) He who kindled a fire whereby the grain of a neighbor was consumed, was obliged to make restitution." Hist. Jur. by Guy Carleton Lee 116–118.

The weregeld.— The lack of a primitive perception of the difference between criminal and civil wrongs is shown when we come to the weregeld. By the law of ancient Greece, where a murder was done under the impulse of a sudden passion or insanity, the culprit, was allowed to choose compensation. In the earlier periods the form such compensation took was that of servile labor for a term of years, generally eight. In later times this was superseded by a money payment. Hist. Jur. by Guy Carleton Lee 169. In England payment of the weregeld was regulated from time to time by royal ordinance, the most complete having been published by Edward the elder (A. D. 901–924). At the head stood the king with 30,000 thrimsas or £500 of the money of the period, half of which went to the king's kindred and half to the state; an archbishop or earl, 15,000, or £250; a bishop or alderman, 8000, or £133, 6s. 8d; a priest or thane, 2,000, or £33, 6s. 8d; a ceorl or common person, 267, or 9s. In a similar way a pecuniary fine of smaller amount would relieve a man from corporal punishment for various minor offenses. "The Kings Peace," by F. A. Inderwick, Q. C. 26; Reeve Hist. Eng. L. vol. 1, p. 28.

Development of the law of torts during the 19th century.— "With a few exceptions, the principles of law applicable to torts remain much as they were in 1800. The most marked change was made by Lord Campbell's Fatal Accidents Act (1846). As the law party, which duty may exist either independent of or be created by statute.[42] That a mere moral duty has been disregarded or moral right violated and damage suffered in consequence thereof is not sufficient to give rise to an action for tort, where no legal right of plaintiff has been infringed. Such cases the law classifies as "damnum absque injuria."[5] For example, at common law a master owes stood in 1800, if a passenger was upset in a stage-coach and his leg broken, he could sue the proprietor and recover damages for the pain which he had suffered, the injury done him and the medical and other expenses which had been incurred. But if he was killed outright by the accident, his family and his executors had no redress whatever. They could not even recover his funeral expenses. His right of action was said to be personal and to have died with him. So it was a bad thing pecuniarily for the proprietor of a stage-coach if his passengers recovered from their injuries; it was to his advantage, if there was to be an accident at all, that they should all break their necks. This was put a stop to by Lord Campbell's Act in 1846. Emphasis has been repeatedly laid during the century on the important distinction between an illegal and an irregular distress. In the law of libel, the most interesting feature is the large increase in the number of occasions which the law deems privileged, and the full recognition of the liberty of the press." A Century of Law Reform, by W. Blake Odgers, 8–9.

Defamation see "The History and Theory of the Law of Defamation," by Van Vechten Veeder, 3 Columbia L. Rev. 546; 4 Columbia L. Rev. 33. For a discussion of the remedies for defamation in the middle ages see 2 Pollock & M. Hist. Eng. L. 536.

4. Action for causing death.— For examples of the creation of legal duties by statute reference must be made to the particular subjects involved. The best illustration is probably found in the case of a negligent or wanton killing of a human being. The common law gave no cause of action to the personal representative or next of kin. Carey v. Berkshire R. Co., 1 Cush. (Mass.) 474, 48 Am. Dec. 616; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 7 S. Ct. 140, 30 L. ed. 358. But by Lord Campbell's act in England (passed in 1846) which has been with various modifications incorporated, it is believed, in the legislation of all the American states, the party who would have been liable had death not ensued may be held responsible in an action for damages. See DEATH, 13 Cyc. 310.

Right of privacy.—Another illustration is afforded in the case of a violation of the so-called right of privacy. It was held by the New York court of appeals in Roberson v. Rochester Folding-Box Co., 171 N. Y. 538, 64 N. E. 442, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, 59 L. R. A. 478, that the publication of plaintiff's picture as an advertisement, without her consent, gave no cause of action. The decision encountered much adverse comment, was not followed in some of the other jurisdictions (see Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co., 122 Ga. 190, 50 S. E. 68, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 69 L. R. A. 101), and by N. Y. Laws (1903), c. 132 (Consol. Laws, c. 6, art. 5), a right of recovery was given. As to infringement of the right of privacy see infra, VI, B.

no duty to a servant to give him a certificate or testimonial of character, and therefore no action will lie for his refusal to do so.[6] Where defendant murdered a servant of plaintiff in a house which belonged to the latter, defendant was not liable for the value of the house, which plaintiff declared had become worthless to him.[7] One has no right of action against a merchant for refusal to sell goods.[8] Nor will an action lie, unless such means are used as of themselves constitute a breach of legal duty, for inducing or causing persons not to trade, deal, or contract with another;[9] for inducing another to trade his property;[10] for inducing a person to refrain from making a will in plaintiff's favor[11] or to revoke a will already made;[12] or for holding out false expectations of succeeding to certain property as heir or devisee.[13] In none of the last three cases is the injured party deprived of an existing legal right. 18. Disturbance of another's peace and quiet.— The allegation that defendants did procure one S, a spinster, to make an appointment with plaintiff to meet her under the false pretense that said S had something secret to communicate to plaintiff, that plaintiff had gone to the place appointed and that defendants had secreted themselves near and suddenly arose and shouted, blew horns, and rang bells to his disturbance, showed no cause of action. Failure to allow sick person to remain in house.— In Tucker v. Burt, 152 Mich. 68, 115 N. W. 722, 17 L. R. A. N. S. 510, plaintiff was taken ill with an infectious disease while visiting the janitor in defendant's apartment house, and on learning of the character of the disease defendant ordered her from the flat, accompanying his order with a threat that if it were not executed he would come with an officer and put her out. Unable to hire an ambulance, plaintiff made use of the street cars and by their aid and by walking reached her own home where she was immediately taken worse. It was held that defendant violated no legal duty to plaintiff, so as to render him liable for aggravation of her illness consequent upon her leaving.

Failure to apprehend thief.— A railroad conductor who permits a passenger to travel on his train with stolen goods is not liable to the owner thereof, although he is aware that the goods have been stolen, as there is no violation of any duty owed either to the public or to the owner. Randlette v. Judkins, 77 Me. 114, 52 Am. Rep. 747.

Interference with business.— Where plaintiff was entitled to all the articles to be manufactured by a certain company, he furnishing the raw materials, it was held that he could maintain no action against one who stopped the machinery of the company and obstructed its operation. Dale v. Grant, 34 N. J. L. 142.

Causing discharge of employee.— A patron of a street railway company incurs no liability to a conductor by reporting to the superintendent of the company such conductor's misconduct while on duty, toward a passenger, although in making the report he is prompted by ill-will and a desire to secure the conductor's discharge from the service of the company. Lancaster v. Hamburger, 70 Ohio St. 156, 71 N. E. 289, 65 L. R. A. 856. Dangerous or defective premises.— Where defendant, the owner of a building, leased to one B three rooms in the rear overlooking an extension on which there was a skylight, and plaintiff, a child, while visiting B, fell from the window through the skylight and was injured, defendant was not liable, as he owed no duty to plaintiff to maintain a screen across the skylight. Miller v. Woodhead, 104 N. Y. 471, 11 N. E. 57. The same rule has been applied to fire-escapes. McAlpin v. Powell, 70 N. Y. 126, 26 Am. Rep. 555.

Interruption of flow of percolating waters.— The owner of property who digs a mine or a well is not liable if he interrupts the flow of percolating subterranean waters to his neighbor's injury. Receipt of wages after assignment.— Where defendant's employers refused to accept an order by him to pay his wages to plaintiff, but nevertheless did pay for some time, when they notified plaintiff that they would do so no longer, and made payment to defendant, the receipt of the wages by defendant was not a tort for which he was liable to plaintiff. McGuire v. Kiveland, 56 Vt. 62.

Liability of directors of corporation to creditors.— Where by attachment proceedings, without any fraud or irregularity, certain bona fide creditors of an insolvent corporation secured the application of all the corporate assets to the payment of their claims, the fact that the directors of the corporation who had guaranteed the payment of such claims requested and thus induced the creditors to institute attachment suits without giving the said creditors any advantage or rights other than those which, as a matter of law, they already possessed, it was held that such directors were not liable in an action at law to the other creditors of the corporation. No liability is created against one for procuring a third party to do an act which may lawfully be forming it is not liable for mere incidental consequences injuriously resulting from it to another.[19]

B. Cases of Novel Impression. The fact that no precedent can be found for an action in tort based upon a particular act or omission is to be considered in determining whether the action will lie;[20] but where the violation of a legal right is shown, the novelty of the proceeding will not of itself operate as a bar to redress. It is an ancient maxim that "where there is a right, there is a remedy."[21]

C. Accidental Injuries. There can be no liability for purely accidental done. Emanuel v. Barnard, 71 Nebr. 756, 99 N. W. 666.

Contagious disease.— Where a railroad company in pursuance of a contract to care for its sick employees took charge of an employee afflicted with smallpox and hired a nurse and watchman to care for him, through whose negligence he escaped while delirious and communicated the disease to plaintiff, it was held that the railroad company had assumed to each individual member of the community the duty to prevent the spread of the disease and hence plaintiff had a right of action for damages arising from the breach of such duty. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Wood, 95 Tex. 223, 66 S. W. 449, 93 Am. St. Rep. 834, (Civ. App. 1902) 68 S. W. 802.

A physician, not being bound to render professional services to everyone who applies, is not liable to an action for arbitrarily refusing to respond to a call, although he is the only physician available. Hurley v. Eddingfield, 156 Ind. 416, 59 N. E. 1058, 83 Am. St. Rep. 198, 53 L. R. A. 135.

Other illustrations.— Where the owners of a foundry gave the ashes produced therefrom to the engineer in consideration of his taking them from the furnace after working hours, they were not liable for injuries to a child who fell into them and was burned while they were piled in an open lot near the foundry. Burke v. Shaw, 59 Miss. 443, 42 Am. Rep. 370. A written objection by a juror to serving on a jury with another juror, on account of the color of the latter, although frivolous, unwarranted, and unworthy, forms no basis for an action at law for damages, especially where the objection was not accompanied by either abusive language, assault, or defamation of character. "While no precedent is cited for such an action," said the court, "it does not follow that there is no remedy for the wrong, because every form of action when brought for the first time must have been without a precedent to support it. Courts sometimes of necessity abandon their search for precedents and yet sustain a recovery upon legal principles clearly applicable to the new state of facts, although there was no direct precedent for it, because there never had been an occasion to make one. The question, therefore, is not whether there is any precedent for the action, but whether defendant inflicted such a wrong upon plaintiff as resulted in lawful damages." Kujek v. Goldman, 150 N. Y. 176, 178, 44 N. E. 773, 55 Am. St. Rep. 670, 34 L. R. A. 156. So where defendant suborned witnesses to testify falsely to defamatory statements concerning plaintiff, neither plaintiff nor defendant being a party to the suit, it was held that "the fact that an action is without a precedent would call upon the court to consider with care the question whether injuries arising from the doing of a lawful act in a proper manner.[22] The doctrine is applied where defendant is confronted suddenly with deadly peril and acts instinctively or according to his best judgment at the time, even though more mature reflection would have enabled him to adopt a course which would have obviated the injury. Thus where defendant's servant seized a burning lamp and was carrying it from the room where it caught fire, and to save himself threw the lamp from him, and plaintiff, a customer, was injured, it was held that the latter could not recover.[23] And so it has been held that no recovery should be permitted, where one in self-defense fires a pistol at his assailant and wounds a third person.[24]

Rule otherwise at common law.— At common law the rule was otherwise. Thus where defendant, a member of a train band, while skirmishing with his company discharged his musket, whereby plaintiff was injured, it was held that a plea that the act was "casualiter et per infortunium et contra voluntatem suam" was insufficient, for "no man shall be excused of a trespass . . . except it may be judged utterly without his fault; as if a man by force take my hand and strike you." Reprint 1218; Anonymous, Y. B. 6 Edw. IV, 7, pl. 18. This doctrine continued to prevail in England until Stanley v. Powell, [1891] 1 Q. B. 86, 55 J. P. 327, 60 L. J. Q. B. 52, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 809, 39 Wkly. Rep. 76, decided in 1891, although in America it was repudiated earlier (1835) in Vincent v. Stinehour, 7 Vt. 62, 29 Am. Dec. 145. The modern view is now thoroughly established. See the cases cited supra, this note.

An instruction that if the jury found that "the injuries . . . were merely the result of accident" the verdict should be for defendant was held correct. An objection that the phrase "inevitable or unavoidable accident" should have been used was not sustained. Plaintiff's injuries were received while defendant's employee was ejecting a drunken man from the car. The accident was not inevitable in the sense that it must have happened. It was not unavoidable, for if the drunken passenger had not been admitted, the injury would not have occurred. Feary v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 162 Mo. 75, 62 S. W. 452. D. Method of Accomplishment; Commission or Omission. Although the wrong is usually one of commission, an act is not an essential element. The tort may consist as well in an omission to fulfil a duty imposed by law.[25]

E. Distinguished From Crime — 1. In General. As will be observed from the definition,[26] a tort consists in the violation of a duty owing to an individual. Therein it differs from a crime, which is a wrong done to the public as such.[27]

2. Merger. By the common law where the same act constituted both a tort and a felony, the private injury was deemed merged in the public wrong. But this principle is no longer in force, nor did it ever apply to misdemeanors.[28]

see Laidlaw v. Sage, 158 N. Y. 73, 52 N. E. 679, 44 L. R. A. 216.

25. Injuries may be the result "of nonfeasance . . . the omission of an act which a person ought to do; misfeasance . . . the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do; and malfeasance . . . the doing of an act which a person ought not to do at all." Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray (Mass.) 309, 311, 63 Am. Dec. 741.

Common carriers.— Thus a common carrier who without lawful excuse refuses to transport goods is liable in tort. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274, 21 N. E. 824; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Morton, 61 Ind. 539, 28 Am. Rep. 682. See CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 372 et seq. And the same is true of carriers of passengers. Nevin v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 106 Ill. 222, 46 Am. Rep. 688. See CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 535 et seq. A railroad company is liable to a passenger for injuries due to a failure to heat its waiting room when required by the weather. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 70 Ark. 136, 66 S. W. 661, 91 Am. St. Rep. 74. And where there is a negligent failure by the servants of a railroad company to protect a passenger from a drunken fellow passenger, the wrong for which the company is liable is not the tort of the fellow passenger but the negligent omission of the carrier's servants to prevent that tort from being committed. United R., etc., Co. v. State, 93 Md. 619, 49 Atl. 923, 86 Am. St. Rep. 453, 54 L. R. A. 942. See CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 602.

27. People v. Smith, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 258; Van Oss v. Synon, 85 Wis. 661, 56 N. W. 190. "The difference between crimes and civil injuries is not to be sought for in a supposed difference between their tendencies, but in the difference between the modes wherein they are respectively pursued, or wherein the sanction is applied in the two cases. An offense which is pursued at the discretion of the injured party or his representative is a civil injury. An offense which is pursued by the sovereign or by the subordinates of the sovereign, is a crime." Austin Jurispr. § 17. And see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 130.

Private and public wrongs distinguished.— "Wrongs are divisible into two sorts or species: private wrongs and public wrongs. The former are an infringement or privation of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals, considered as individuals; and are thereupon frequently termed civil injuries; the latter are a breach and violation of public rights and duties, which affect the whole community, considered as a community; and are distinguished by the harsher appellation of crimes and misdemeanors." 3 Blackstone Comm. 2 [quoted in Rhobidas v. Concord, 70 N. Nuisance.— If a nuisance affects the rights of a community, it will be considered as public and constitutes a crime, while if the injury is to the private rights of the individual and differs in kind from that sustained by the public, it will furnish grounds for an action in tort. State v. Close, 35 Iowa 570; McGhee v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 147 N. C. 142, 60 S. E. 912, 24 L. R. A. N. S. 119; Com. v. Webb, 6 Rand. (Va.) 726. See NUISANCES, 29 Cyc. 1152.

Trespass.— Trespass to real or personal property will not, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, constitute a crime unless attended by circumstances amounting to a breach of the peace (Kilpatrick v. People, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 277; State v. Wheeler, 3 Vt. 344, 23 Am. Dec. 212; Henderson v. Com., 8 Gratt. (Va.) 708, 56 Am. Dec. 160; Rex v. Storr, 3 Burr. 1698, 97 Eng. (Vt.) 226). Nor is conspiracy to commit a trespass quare clausum fregit a crime. Rex v. Turner, 13 East 228, 104 Eng. Reprint 357.

Condonation or settlement.— While a tort may be condoned, waived, compromised, or settled by the injured party, a crime, as a rule, cannot be. Fleener v. State, 58 Ark. 98, 23 S. W. 1; Com. v. Slattery, 147 Mass. 423, 18 N. E. 399. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 161.

F. Distinguished From Contract — 1. Rule Stated. As has likewise been seen, tort consists in the violation of a right given or the omission of a duty imposed by law. Therein it differs from contract, where right is granted and obligation assumed by agreement of the parties.[29] Hence to determine the form in which redress must be sought, it is necessary to ascertain source or origin. If it be found that right or duty was created independent of the consent of the parties concerned, the action is in tort; if because of such consent, it is on contract.[30] Where the only relation between the parties is contractual, the liability

"The source, whence the doctrine took its rise in England, is well known. By the ancient common law, felony was punished by the death of the criminal, and the forfeiture of all his lands and goods to the crown. Inasmuch as an action at law against a person, whose body could not be taken in execution and whose property and effects belonged to the king, would be a useless and fruitless remedy, it was held to be merged in the public offense. Besides, no such remedy in favor of the citizen could be allowed without a direct interference with the royal prerogative. Therefore a party injured by a felony could originally obtain no recompense out of the estate of a felon, nor even the restitution of his own property, except after a conviction of the offender, by a proceeding called an appeal of felony, which was long disused, and wholly abolished by St. 59 Geo. 3, c. 46; or under St. 21 H. 8, c. 11, by which the judges were empowered to grant writs of restitution, if the felon was convicted on the evidence of the party injured or of others by his procurement." Deceit or breach of contract.— Where plaintiff alleged that defendant had induced him to bid on the construction of a railway by promising to sell rails at a fixed figure saying that he had already procured the rails, it was held an action on contract. Had defendant supplied the rails there would have been no injury and hence the promise could not be separated from the statement of fact. The damage was here caused by non-performance which was the gist of the action. Dawe v. Morris, 149 Mass. 188, 21 N. E. 313, 14 Am. St. Rep. 404, 4 L. R. A. 158.

Action against livery-stable keeper or other bailee.—Where plaintiff delivered his horse to defendant, a livery-stable keeper, and it was alleged that defendant had neglected to take due and proper care, by reason whereof the said horse was kicked by other horses, it was held that there was no duty independent of the contract. Here it will be observed that the wrong of defendant consisted merely in the failure to take due care as required by the contract. Legge v. Tucker, 1 H. & N. 500, 2 Jur. N. S. 1235, 26 L. J. Exch. 71, 5 Wkly. Rep. 78. The rule is otherwise where defendant has been guilty of an affirmative act in derogation of his contract, as where the bailee of a horse allows a stranger to overdrive it. In such a case he is liable in tort. Pelton v. Nichols, 180 Mass. 245, 62 N. E. 1. See Bailments, 5 Cyc. 214; Livery-Stable Keepers, 25 Cyc. 1514.

Contract to prepare remains for burial and shipment.—A complaint in case alleging that plaintiff engaged defendants to prepare the

of one to the other in an action of tort for negligence must be based upon some positive duty which the law imposes because of the relationship or because of the negligent manner in which some act which the contract provides for is done.[31] The question in all cases is whether, if the allegation as to the contract were stricken out, any ground of action would remain.[32] remains of her husband for burial and shipment by a certain train to leave at a specified time, and that when the hour of leaving had arrived it was discovered that defendants had made no preparation for the shipment of the remains at the time specified, was held demurrable on the ground that no consideration was alleged, defendants being under no duty, independent of contract, to perform the obligation. Newton v. Brook, 134 Ala. 269, 32 So. 722.

Injuries to real estate.— One G sold to defendant certain timber with the privilege of entering and cutting the same. Thereafter G conveyed the whole tract of land to plaintiff together with his rights in the contract with defendant. Plaintiff brought suit to recover for injuries done by defendant after the expiration of the contract with G, consisting of cutting a road, flooding lands, and injuring and cutting trees. It was held that the cause of action was in tort, not in contract. Litchfield v. Norwood Mfg. Co., 22 N. Y. App. Div. 569, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 496.

Action against broker.— Where defendant was retained by plaintiffs as their broker to sell oil, and as such he made a contract between plaintiffs and one P, and it was alleged in an action on the case that defendant had failed to use reasonable diligence and care, and contriving and intending to injure plaintiffs, delivered the oil to P without requiring cash payment, it was held that the duty of defendant arose from an express contract, and not from his character as broker. Boorman v. Brown, 3 Q. B. 511, 2 G. & D. 793, 11 L. J. Exch. 437, 43 E. C. L. 843, 114 Eng. Reprint 603 [affirmed in 11 Cl. & F. 1, 8 Eng. Reprint 1003].

Action for wrongful detention of property. — Where plaintiff delivered a picture to defendant, which purported to be by the latter, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was genuine, and defendant found the picture to be spurious and refused to restore it except upon condition that plaintiff would acknowledge it to be a forgery, it was held that plaintiff might recover in tort on an allegation that he was the owner of the picture and that defendant unlawfully detained it. Bryant v. Herbert, 3 C. P. D. 389, 47 L. J. C. P. 670, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 17, 26 Wkly. Rep. 898.

Action by tenant against landlord.— Thus a tenant cannot recover in tort against his landlord for a personal injury due to the landlord's failure to make repairs as provided by contract, unless there is some other breach of duty than the mere failure to perform the covenant to repair. Where an employer fails to furnish an employee medical attendance, as he has agreed to do, the employee's cause of action is for breach of contract, and not in tort for negligence. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Hennegan, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 314, 76 S. W. 452.

Breach of contract by physician.— Where a physician who has contracted to treat a person's family for a year refuses to visit a member of the family when sent for, or to undertake the case, the right of action against him is for breach of contract only, and not for tort. Randolph v. Snyder, (Ky. 1910) 129 S. W. 562. See PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS, 30 Cyc. 1575.

Carriers.—A breach by a railroad company of an executory contract, into which it was under no legal duty of entering, to furnish the other contracting party with transportation from one point to another, is not a tort and does not give rise to an action ex delicto. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Spinks, 104 Ga. 692, 30 S. E. 968.

Principle applied.— Thus where plaintiff conveyed to defendant certain premises, taking back a bond and mortgage for a portion of the purchase-price, which was unrecorded, and defendant sold the property to a third party who took without notice, and defendant refused to pay the bond, it was held that an action was maintainable in tort upon the theory that defendant had destroyed the lien of the security given by him to plaintiff, and converted a portion of the purchase-price received from the third party. Conley v. Blinebry, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 371, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 531. Compare Knowles v. Knowles, 25 R. I. 464, 56 Atl. 775, where plaintiff's devisor deeded to defendant's intestate a burial lot as security for the latter's indorsement of a note, taking back an agreement to retransfer upon payment, and the note was subsequently merged with other indebtedness, but was not surrendered. It was held that suit would not lie in tort based upon the wrongful act of defendant in subsequently recording the

2. Tort Coincident With Contract.[33] It does not militate against the correctness of the rule just stated that a tort may grow out of or be coincident with a contract,[34] and that suit will lie in tort for an act of misfeasance or malfeasance, although a contractual relation may exist between the parties.[35] "Where there is an employment, which employment itself creates a duty, an action on the case will lie for a breach of that duty, although it may consist in doing something contrary to an agreement made in the course of such employment, by the party upon whom the duty is cast."[36] The rule has frequently been applied in actions against common carriers[37] and other bailees,[38] factors, brokers, and other deed and for the conversion of the deed. Here the cause of action arose solely by virtue of the breach of the defeasance clause, while in Conley v. Blinebry, supra, it arose out of the wrongful sale by defendant.

Carriers of passengers.— Thus where plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's railroad, was injured by the act of the latter's servant in slamming a door, it was held that "that which caused the injury was not an act of omission, it was not a mere nonfeasance; it was not merely the not taking such care of the plaintiff as by the contract the defendants were bound to take, but it was an act of misfeasance — it was positive negligence in jamming his hand. Contract or no contract he could maintain an action for that. All he would have to prove would be that he was lawfully on the premises of the railway company, and the contract is merely a part of the history of the case." Taylor v. Manchester, etc., R. Co., [1895] 1 Q. B. 134, 59 J. P. 100, 64 L. J. Q. B. 6, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 596, 14 Reports 34, 11 T. L. R. 27, 43 Wkly. Rep. 120. So, where defendant's servants wrongfully induced plaintiffs, who were passengers on its road, to alight three miles from the proper station, it was held that, although the payment of fare and a consequent duty to carry was pleaded, the cause of action was none the less in tort. "It is the negligence in putting the plaintiffs off the train before the journey was completed, which is complained of, and not a breach of the contract in not carrying them to the end of their journey." Carriers of goods.— Where the only allegation in an action against a common carrier is that he has failed to deliver the goods, the real ground of complaint is a breach of contract. This is a case of mere nonfeasance. Fleming v. Manchester, etc., R. Co., 4 Q. B. D. 81, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 555, 27 Wkly. Rep. 481. Gratuitous bailment.— Where defendant gratuitously undertook to remove several hogsheads of brandy belonging to plaintiff from one cellar to another, and in doing so one of the hogsheads was broken through negligence, it was held that, although the contract could not have been enforced, yet defendant, having undertaken it, became liable for misfeasance. agents,[39] telegraph and telephone companies,[40] physicians and surgeons,[41] and in many other cases.[42]

3. Contract as an Element of Tort. Furthermore "a breach of contract may be so intended and planned; so purposely fitted to time, and circumstances and conditions; so inwoven into a scheme of oppression and fraud; so made to set in motion innocent causes which otherwise would not operate, as to cease to be a mere breach of contract, and become, in its association with the attendant circumstances, a tortious and wrongful act or omission." [43]

39. See Factors and Brokers, 19 Cyc. 144, 214; Principal and Agent, 31 Cyc. 1608.

Conversion of property by agent.— Thus where an agent converts property of his principal which he has agreed to pay over, the principal has his election to sue for a breach of contract or for conversion. Coit v. Stewart, 50 N. Y. 17. If an agent parts with the property in a way or for a purpose not authorized he is liable for a conversion, but if he parts with it in accordance with his authority, although at less price, or if he misapplies the avails or takes inadequate for sufficient security, he is not liable for a conversion of the property, but only in an action on the case for misconduct. This was applied where plaintiff had indorsed and delivered a promissory note to defendant for negotiation under instructions not to deliver the same without receiving cash, and defendant had delivered the note to a third person under a promise to discount it and return the money. It was held that defendant's act in permitting the note to go out of his possession was an unlawful interference therewith and constituted a conversion. Laverty v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184. Where an agent exchanges property intrusted to him for sale he is liable for conversion. Haas v. Damon, 9 Iowa 589.

Fraud of broker.— For a broker employed to sell land to underestimate to his principal an offer which he has received, with intent to appropriate or to help someone else to appropriate the difference between the amount as he states it and the amount actually offered, is an actionable wrong if the fraud succeeds, although "it is true that but for the contract of agency the concealment and misrepresentation might not be a tort." Emmons v. Alvord, 177 Mass. 466, 59 N. E. 126.

40. Thus where plaintiff was in the lawful possession of a telephone instrument at his country house, the poles having been furnished by him and the connecting wire by defendant telephone company, and defendant without cause illegally cut the wire connecting the telephone box with its system, it was held, in an action for the illegal and malicious act, that plaintiff was entitled to recover damages separate and apart from his action on the contract between himself and the company. In re Cumberland Tel., etc., Co., 116 La. 125, 40 So. 590. See Telegraphs and Telephones, 37 Cyc. 1658.

41. Where a physician contracts to treat a person's family by the year in consideration of monthly payments made to him, and refuses to visit such person's child when sent for, or to undertake the case, the right of action against him is for breach of contract only, and not for tort; but if, after a physician undertakes a case, he is negligent in his treatment, attendance, etc., he is liable to an action in tort. Randolph v. Snyder, (Ky. 1910) 129 S. W. 562. See also infra, III, F, 4, a; Physicians and Surgeons, 30 Cyc. 1581.

42. See the cases cited supra, this section, notes 34, 35.

Conversion by public officer.— An action for conversion will lie to recover money received by defendant as treasurer of a township, although the relation of debtor and creditor exists. It is optional for plaintiff to bring suit in tort or on contract. Monroe Tp. v. Whipple, 56 Mich. 516, 23 N. W. 202.

Wrongful delivery of escrow.— Where a deed is delivered to one as an escrow to be kept for future identification as evidence and he puts it on record, an action may be sustained against him by the grantor named therein to recover compensation for all necessary trouble and expense to procure and perpetuate testimony that the deed was never legally delivered. Himes v. Keighblingher, 14 Ill. 469.

False and fraudulent warranty on sale of goods see infra, III, F, 4, a.

Grantor subsequently fraudulently conveying to another.—Where a grantor of land, with fraudulent intent to defeat the title of his grantee, makes a subsequent conveyance to a third person occupying the position of a bona fide purchaser, whereby the title of the original grantee is defeated, he is liable to the latter in tort. Morse v. Bates, 99 Mo. App. 560, 74 S. W. 439; Ring v. Ogden, 45 Wis. 303. But there is no liability in tort in the absence of such fraudulent intent. Ring v. Ogden, supra. The principle also applies where a grantor, by a subsequent conveyance to a bona fide purchaser, fraudulently defeats and renders worthless a mortgage or deed of trust given as security by his first grantee. Andrews v. Blakeslee, 12 Iowa 577.

43. Rich v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 87 N. Y. 382, 398, per Finch, J. Here plaintiff owned property heavily mortgaged which had depreciated by the removal of defendant's depot. To secure a return of the depot, plaintiff surrendered certain riparian rights. Because of his refusal to consent without compensation to the closing of a street, defendant maliciously broke its agreement and delayed the restoration of the depot to prevent plaintiff from warding off a foreclosure. It also instigated a sale by the mortgagee

4. Election of Remedies[44] — a. Rule Stated. From what has been said, it is seen that in many cases the party injured may bring his action in either form, since the duty violated has been both imposed by law and assumed by agreement.[45] Thus where a bank has improperly refused to honor a depositor's check, an action may be brought against it either in tort or on contract.[46] And an action may frequently be based, at plaintiff's election, either on defendant's fraud or on his breach of warranty. If the former course is adopted, scienter must be proved; but this is not necessary in the latter case.[47] So, where a party has been induced by fraud to enter into a contract and has paid money or delivered goods pursuant thereto, he may either maintain an action of deceit or, after rescinding the contract, he may recover back in an action of assumpsit what he has paid or the reasonable value of what he has delivered.[48] And there may be a right at which the property was bid off for a small sum. Thereafter the street was closed and the depot restored, the mortgagee having been induced to waive all damages. It was held that the wrongful delay in restoring the depot was a breach of contract. But outside of and beyond this there was an actual and affirmative fraud, a scheme to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means, and that this scheme of oppression and fraud, the breach of contract being only one of the elements, constituted a tort. Construction of complaint.— Plaintiff alleged that defendant falsely warranted and represented that the lameness of a horse sold by him to plaintiff resulted from an injury while in the pasture and was of a temporary character; that relying upon said warranty and representations plaintiff purchased; that the horse was in fact lame from a diseased gambrel joint which defendant well knew. Plaintiff proved a warranty and breach thereof but gave no evidence tending to show fraud. It was held that the gravamen of the action was fraud, not a breach of warranty, and plaintiff could not recover upon proof of the latter only. Ross v. Mather, 51 N. Y. 108, 10 Am. Rep. 562. The mere fact that there was an independent and collateral promise made at the time of the false representations will not turn an action essentially in tort into one on contract. The party may have his election to sue either upon the contract or for the fraud, and in either case so long as it appears that the party is entitled to the remedy he has selected, it can be no objection to the declaration because it appears from it that he was also entitled to another remedy. of election to sue either for conversion of goods or in contract.[49] The right to sue either on contract or in tort frequently arises in actions against common carriers and carriers of passengers, against bailees and innkeepers,[50] and attorneys,[51] physicians and surgeons[52] for damages suffered by clients or patients and due to ignorance, misconduct, or neglect. That the obligation in such cases is imposed by law and not solely assumed by contract is shown by the fact that a recovery may be had, although the services were to be rendered gratuitously.[53] This right

Carriers of passengers; construction of complaint.— In Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 187 N. Y. 388, 80 N. E. 197, the complaint alleged that plaintiff became a passenger of defendant, to be carried on one of its cars, and, in consideration of five cents paid, defendant agreed "safely to carry" plaintiff, and "to treat him properly and carefully," and that, after he had passed on to a platform at a station to take a train, defendant, through its employees, in violation "of the terms of said contract," assaulted him. It was held that, although plaintiff might have declared either in contract or tort, this complaint stated a cause of action for breach of contract, and not in tort. On the other hand in Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 178 N. Y. 347, 70 N. E. 857, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503, 66 L. R. A. 618, a complaint by a passenger against a railroad company to recover for injury to feelings because of insulting language used by a conductor was held to state a cause of action for tort. And in Lynch v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co., 66 Misc. (N. Y.) 573, 124 N. Y. Suppl. 169 [affirmed in 139 N. Y. App. Div. 925, 124 N. Y. Hence where plaintiff and one C went through a form of marriage and lived as man and wife for many years and thereafter plaintiff discovered the existence of a prior and undivorced wife of C, it was held that, although an action might be maintained against C for deceit, none lay for services as housekeeper under an implied contract. They were wholly irrelevant and not issuable and could not be tried. Graves v. Waite, 59 N. Y. 156. So, where a complaint alleged that plaintiff had consigned goods to defendants, who were commission merchants, for sale; that defendants had received the goods but refused to remit to plaintiff the sum due, and the complaint contained an allegation that defendants "have converted the same to their own use," it was held that the action being upon contract, plaintiff should not have been nonsuited because the pleading contained an unproven allegation adapted to the complaint in an action ex delicto. Conaughty v. Nichols, 42 N. Y. 83. An action in which the complaint demands judgment for a specific and liquidated sum, with interest, alleged to be due plaintiff and withheld by defendants in violation of the contract under which they collected it, is an action on contract, although it is also alleged that defendants "have wrongfully converted the same to their own use." If the complaint or petition in terms alleges a cause of action ex delicto and the proof shows breach of contract, express or implied, no recovery can be had, and the action must be dismissed, even though by disregarding the averments of tort and treating them as surplusage there might be left remaining necessary and sufficient allegations, if they stood alone, to show a liability upon the contract. A. F. Shapleigh Hardware Co. v. Hamilton, 70 Ark. 319, 68 S. W. 490; Fluty v. School Dist., 49 Ark. 94, 4 S. W. 278; Barnes v. Quigley, 59 N. Y. 265. In an action to recover back the purchase-money paid upon a contract for the sale of certain stock by defendant to plaintiff on the ground of fraud and a consequent rescission of the contract, the agreement as proved was for the sale of fifty shares for five thousand dollars. Defendant delivered twenty-five shares. No fraud was proved on the trial and defendant moved for a nonsuit. The court at trial term held that the action could not be sustained as one for fraud, but that, as it appeared that defendant had only transferred twenty-five shares, while the agreement was for fifty, plaintiff could recover damages for breach of the contract. This was held error, since the action, if one ex delicto, could not be changed to one ex contractu. Matthews v. Cady, 61 N. Y. 651.

58. See Election of Remedies, 15 Cyc. 261. Plaintiff brought an action for the contract price of goods sold to F & W, and subsequently discontinued it. Then he brought suit for conversion by defendant's testator, who claimed title under an execution sale. In the second action plaintiff alleged fraud, and a rescission of the contract. It was held that the bringing of the action on contract did not preclude the subsequent action for conversion, it not appearing that at the time the former was brought plaintiff had knowledge of the fraud which entitled him to rescind. Negligence of servant of independent contractor.— Upon this principle one who is injured by the negligence of the servant of an independent contractor cannot recover from the contractor's employer. See Master and Servant, 26 Cyc. 1552 et seq.

Improper construction of buildings.—A contractor who uses improper material in the construction of a hotel which when completed is unsafe will not be liable to a guest for an injury caused by such defective construction after the owner has taken possession. Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. St. 70, 21 Atl. 244, 23 Am. St. Rep. 220, 12 L. R. A. 322. In another case plaintiff, who was owner of a building, contracted with a company to install therein a sprinkler system according to plans and specifications made a part of the contract, which provided for a tank on the top of the building having a triangular support. The company contracted with defendant for the construction of such support, but in the actual construction a tie member specified in the plans was omitted by defendant. The tank having been placed thereon and filled with water to a weight of eighty-five tons, the support collapsed during a high wind owing to the absence of the tie member required by the contract, and a large loss and damage resulted to plaintiff. It was held that plaintiff could not maintain an action in tort to recover such loss from defendant, whose duty was measured by the requirements of the contract and was enforceable only by the other party to the contract. Galbraith v. Illinois Steel Co., 133 Fed. 485, 66 C. C. A. 359, 2 L. R. A. N. S. 799.

Action by master for injury to servant.— A master has no right to recover against a railroad company for a loss of service caused by the injury of a servant through the company's negligence while such servant was a passenger, as the wrong arises out of the contract between the company and the servant to which the master is not a party. Interference by third persons with relation of master and servant see Master and Servant, 26 Cyc. 1580 et seq. And see infra, VI, D, 6, h, (I).

Negligence of attorney.— Defendant, an attorney, was employed and paid by a third party to examine and report as to the latter's title to a lot of ground. He certified in writing that the title was good and the property unencumbered. Plaintiff, with whom defendant had no contractual relations, relying upon this certificate, loaned money to the third person taking as security a deed of trust for the lot. It was held that, the obligation of defendant being merely to the third party, plaintiff could not base a claim on the certificate. District of Columbia Nat. Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621.

Other illustrations.— Defendant contracted with the postmaster-general to provide a coach to convey the mails. One A, plaintiff's employer, contracted with the postmaster-general to supply horses and coachman. Plaintiff was injured while driving the coach. It was held that such duty as defendant owed arose solely from his contract with the postmaster-general, and plaintiff being neither a party nor a privy thereto, there could be no recovery. Winterbottom v. Wright, 11 L. J. Exch. 415, 10 M. & W. 109. An insurer who has been compelled to pay insurance on the life of one whose death has been caused by the unlawful act of defendant has no cause of action, since there is neither privity of contract nor any duty owing by defendant to the party insuring. "To open the door of legal redress to wrongs received through the mere voluntary and factitious relation of a contractor with the immediate subject of the injury, would be to encourage collusion and extravagant contracts between men, by which the death of either through the involuntary default of others, might be made a source of splendid profits to the other, and would also invite a system of litigation more portentous than our jurisprudence has yet known." Statute.— "No privity is necessary to support an action for a tort, but if the tort results from the violation of a duty itself the consequence of a contract, the right of action is confined to the parties and privies to that contract, except in cases where the party would have had a right of action for the injury done, independent of the contract." "Where the action is only for the breach of a contract, only the parties to it, or their privies, can maintain it. Strangers cannot sue for its negligent breach. . . . But where in a given transaction the law puts upon a person the duty to so act that he does not harm others, independent of a contract, he is liable to third parties, even though executing a contract made with a particular person, if he harms others by negligence. The question is, has the defendant broken a duty apart from the contract? If he has simply broken his contract, none can sue him but a party to it; but if he violated a duty to others, he is liable to them." Peters v. Johnson, 50 W. Va. 644, 647, 41 S. E. 190, 88 Am. Fraudulent or negligent construction work. —Where a subcontractor for the construction of concrete piers for a bridge, with knowledge of the use to which the piers were to be put, and that plaintiff, a subcontractor for the iron work, would necessarily place heavy loads and valuable property thereon, wilfully, intentionally, and fraudulently failed properly to mix the concrete and construct the piers in compliance with its contract, and knew the piers were unsafe and insufficient, so that when plaintiff attempted to use them one of them collapsed and injured plaintiff's property, defendant was liable to plaintiff for the damages sustained; defendant's duty being one imposed by law, irrespective of contract. Manufacture and sale of dangerous articles. —On the same principle one who sells and delivers to another an article which he knows or ought to know may be sold to or used by third persons, and which he knows or ought to know to be inherently dangerous to others by reason of its secret nature or of hidden defects therein, will be liable to third persons who are without fault on their part injured in the use of the same as a proximate consequence of his act or negligence, since there is in such case a violation of duty on his part independent of the contract. G. Condition of Mind — 1. Motive and Intent Distinguished. To determine what effect shall be given to the state of mind of the party seeking redress and of the wrong-doer, the distinction between motive and intent must be emphasized. The intent is purpose or object in the concrete — the stretching out, such is the figure, of the mind toward the end desired; while the motive is that which inspires that stretching out. Now the intent may be morally culpable, while the motive is good enough; the intent may be to inflict harm, while the motive is one of ordinary self-interest.[61]

2. Motive and Intent of Injured Party.[62] The fact that an action in tort for injury to a legal right may have been brought from malicious motives and with the design of harassing the tort-feasor constitutes no reason for denying redress.[63]

3. Motive of Wrong-Doer — a. Where Act Is Inherently Lawful.[64] In general the existence of an improper motive under which defendant acted will not of itself give a cause of action where no legal right of plaintiff has been infringed. An act legal in itself is not rendered actionable by the motive which induced it.[65]

Thus fraud is established, although defendant may have been actuated by no motive of obtaining any advantage for himself. Plaintiff, a riparian proprietor, erected a dam across a stream detaining the water during autumn and spring and thus insuring an equal supply at all times. Defendant, a lower riparian proprietor, opened the gates and let off the accumulated waters. It was held that an injunction could not be sustained. The fact that defendant may have insisted upon his right to the natural flow of the water from a bad motive and for the purpose of annoying plaintiff was immaterial. "Malicious motives make a bad act worse; but they cannot make that wrong which, in its own essence, is lawful . . . any transaction which would be lawful and proper if the parties were friends, cannot be made the foundation of an action merely because they happen to be enemies. As long as a man keeps himself within the law by doing no act which violates it, we must leave his motives to Him who searches the heart." Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. St. 308, 310, per Black, J.

"If a man has a legal right courts will not inquire into the motive by which he is actuated in enforcing the same. A different rule would lead to the encouragement of litigation, and prevent in many instances a complete and full enjoyment of the right of property which inheres to the owner of the soil. An idle threat to do what is perfectly lawful, or declarations which assert the intentions of the owner might often be construed as evincing an improper motive and a malignant spirit, when in point of fact they merely stated the actual rights of the party. Malice might easily be inferred sometimes from idle and loose declarations, and a wide door be opened by such evidence to deprive an owner of what the law regards as well-defined rights." Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39, 45, 28 Am. Rep. 93, per Miller, J.

"At the foundation of every tort must lie some violation of a legal duty, and, therefore, some unlawful act or omission. . . . Whatever, or however numerous or formidable, may be the allegations of conspiracy, of malice, of oppression, of vindictive purpose, they are of no avail; they merely heap up epithets, unless the purpose intended, or the means by which it was to be accomplished, are shown to be unlawful." Rich v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 87 N. Y. 382, 394.

Injury to bank.— Thus where it was alleged that defendants, maliciously intending to injure plaintiff's bank and bring its bills into discredit and prevent their circulation, had bought up and kept out of circulation a large amount of such bills and notes, refused to exchange them for other funds and demanded and compelled plaintiff to pay specie, it was held on demurrer that the declaration did not disclose a cause of action. "Motive alone," said the court, "is not enough to render the defendants liable for doing those acts, which they had a right to do." South Royalton Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 27 Vt. 505.

Injury to third person by refusal to employ or threat to discharge servant.— So, where plaintiff alleged his ownership of a certain house of the rental value of one hundred dollars, which one S was willing to pay, that defendant ordered said S to quit the house, threatening to discharge him from employment unless he did so, and that by similar threats made by defendant to other persons, plaintiff was unable to secure a tenant, it was held that no cause of action existed, since defendant could not be restricted in his right to refuse employment or to retain in his service any person, nor did the motives with which he exercised his right give a cause of action where without them there was none. Heywood v. Tillson, 75 Me. 225, 46 Am. Rep. 373.

Unfair competition.— Plaintiff alleged in its petition that it was a manufacturer of calicoes of certain designated brands and styles, which it sold in large quantities, at stated prices, to jobbers in St. Louis; that defendants, who were jobbers in that city, having on hand a limited quantity of calicoes of such brands and styles, issued circulars to retail dealers in which they offered to sell the same as long as their stock should last at prices below those asked and received from jobbers by plaintiff; that such action was taken by defendants, as plaintiff was informed and believed for the purpose of injuring the business of plaintiff, and not for any legitimate trade purposes of their own and that the effect of such action was to injure and destroy plaintiff's trade in St. Louis and the country tributary thereto, and to cause other jobbers to cancel their orders to plaintiff or to compel plaintiff to reduce its prices, thereby causing it loss and damage in a sum stated. It was held that such petition did not state a cause of action. Passaic Print Works v. Ely, etc., Dry-Goods Co., 105 Fed. 163, 44 C. C. A. 426.

A person applying for a patent is not responsible for the damages thereby sustained by another to whom the patent issued, al-

established at common law, recent decisions have modified the rule; and the same is true with regard to the erection of spite fences and the draining of subsurface water not flowing in a definite stream.[66] Some of the courts have also departed from the general rule by holding liable in tort one who engages in business for the sole and malicious purpose of interfering with and destroying the business of another.[67]

Trespass.— Defendant pleaded in justification of a trespass that certain corn, the subject thereof, had been set apart as tithes and was in danger of destruction by cattle, whereupon defendant took it to the barn of plaintiff, the owner. It was held that the plea was bad, defendant's motive being immaterial. Had the corn been destroyed, plaintiff might have had his remedy against the owner of the cattle. Anonymous, Y. B. 21 Hen. Proctor v. Adams, 113 Mass. 376, 18 Am. Rep. 500. 70. The difficulty of laying down a hard and fast rule covering all torts is manifest. Prof. Bigelow in his learned treatise has divided specific offenses into two classes. In the first, liability turns, apart from volition, upon the wrong-doer's culpable state of mind. Here are grouped deceit, and its kindred wrong, unfair competition, negligence, slander of title, and malicious prosecution. In the second class the culpability of the wrong-doer's mind is not in issue. Here appear interference with contract, either by procuring a refusal to contract or a breach of contract, seduction, defamation, assault and battery, false imprisonment, trespass, conversion, infringement of patents, trade-marks and copyrights, violation of rights of support and of water rights, nuisance, damage by animals, and damage due to the escape of dangerous things. While it is true that the state of the wrong-doer's mind is an essential element of deceit, slander of title, and malicious prosecution, the placing of negligence in this class seems scarcely justifiable.

prosecution, and unfair competition require an examination into the wrong-doer's state of mind, and the same is true to a limited extent of defamation.[71] And where a cause of action is given by statute, the malice of the wrong-doer may be made an essential ingredient.[72] So, by the weight of authority, where a qualified voter is prevented from voting, there is no cause of action unless the act of the party so preventing was malicious.[73]

4. Intent of Wrong-Doer — a. As to Accomplishment and Nature of Act — (I) Involuntary Acts. Where intent is wholly lacking, so that the act is involuntary in the strict sense of the term, there can be no liability.[74]

(II) Voluntary Acts. But in cases not of accident a voluntary and unlawful act will result in legal responsibility, although there be no design to commit a wrong.[75] This principle has most frequently been applied in actions

Negligence consists of a failure to exercise that degree of care or skill which circumstances demand? True the law cannot judge of the state of a man's mind except by his manifestations of conduct, and the behavior of the "ordinary man" under like circumstances is to be regarded as the test, for "the mind of the particular person might regard duty as too high or too low, hence the need of a common standard"; and to that extent "the question still is of the mind of a man of that standard." But it requires a far step to reach the conclusion, that "mentality is the test." See Bigelow Torts 109. Nor can we consider the motive with which a breach of contract was procured. The difficulty of classification is more strongly manifested when we come to cases of defamation. In general the state of mind is immaterial. But it is otherwise where qualified privilege and fair comment are interposed in defense.

71. In unfair competition not amounting to the procuring of the breach of an existing contract, the means used not being unlawful in themselves, inquiry is directed to the motive with which defendant acted. Can he justify under the plea of competition? See infra, VI, D, 6, a.

In both slander of title and malicious prosecution "malice in fact" is required, although in neither case is this term so restricted that it is construed to mean specific malevolence toward the injured party, being rather negative and consisting in the absence of proper motives. See Libel and Slander, 25 Cyc. 560; Malicious Prosecution, 26 Cyc. 47.

In cases of defamation, the malice involved is "malice in law" and motive is generally immaterial, being a mere matter of legal presumption, yet where the defense of qualified privilege or fair comment on matters of public interest is interposed, malice in fact is made an issue. See Libel and Slander, 25 Cyc. 411.

72. Injury to trees.— Where, in an action for wilfully trimming plaintiff's trees, the court defined the word "wilful" as "the wanton doing of an act without reasonable excuse," an instruction authorizing the recovery of treble damages in the event of the jury finding the injury to have been wilful was not objectionable as not limited to injuries from excessive trimming of the trees. Meyer v. Standard Tel. Co., (Iowa 1902) 92 N. W. 720.

Combinations interfering with employment.— While malicious motive or purpose is essential to give rise to a cause of action under Rev. Laws (1905), § 5097, forbidding combinations to interfere with or prevent others from securing employment, the malice is such as the law implies from the fact that the act complained of was unlawful and without justification. 78. Wrongful ejection.— In Davis v. Tacoma R., etc., Co., 35 Wash. 203, 77 Pac. 209, 66 L. R. A. 802, defendant was the owner of a public park. An employee, having been informed that a woman of the criminal classes had entered and gone in a certain direction, went in that direction and finding no other woman there mistook plaintiff for the person meant and requested her to leave the grounds. Discovering his mistake almost immediately, both he and defendant's manager openly apologized. It was held that defendant was liable, whether the words requesting plaintiff's departure were defamatory or not.

Ejection of passengers see CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 555.

Master and servant; Principal and agent.— Not only may defendant be liable on the ground that the relation of master and servant or principal and agent has existed between him and the wrong-doer (the wrongful act having been done by the latter, within the scope of his authority and with a view to his master's or principal's interest), but responsibility may ensue where, under the scope of authority or view to interest test, defendant would not be held. Instances may arise which justify an application of the doctrine that where one of two innocent persons must suffer from the tortious act of a third, he who gave the aggressor the means of doing the wrong must bear the consequences of the act. In cases where an act was committed without the servant's or agent's actual authority and the master or principal is held under the rule last stated, his intent can have absolutely no bearing. knowledge of its falsity, or with what the law regards as equivalent to such knowledge, and with the purpose of inducing action.[79]

b. As to Result. The question of intent with regard to the result which may be reached is largely determined by the principles of proximate cause. Whether the act is essentially illegal or constitutes a wrong because of the negligent or improper method of doing it, the tort-feasor will be liable for the consequences under the rules there laid down, and it makes no difference that he did not in fact intend the specific injury which actually occurred[80] or that any injury at all would ensue.[81]

H. Damage. There are two classes of cases of unlawful acts or omissions. In one, there being a distinct legal wrong which in itself constitutes an invasion of another's right, the law will presume that damage follows as a natural and proximate result. Here the wrong in itself gives a right of action. Nothing further is necessary to recovery, although the extent of it may depend upon the evidence.[82] The maxim "de minimis non curat lex" is never applied to defeat

Illustrations.—Thus, where defendant found plaintiff's mare in his, defendant's, field and set his dogs on her, and the mare was bitten, it was held that a request to charge that if the jury believed from the evidence that defendant "used ordinary care and diligence in driving [the mare] from the field; and that he did not intend to injure her," they should find for him was rightly refused, an intent to injure not being essential to the support of the action. Amick v. O'Hara, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 258. So where plaintiff requested the following instruction: "The erection of the slaughter-house of the defendants, if with the intention or presumed knowledge that the use of the same would result injuriously to the plaintiff, was of itself a wrongful act," it was held that a refusal was proper. "Upon the question as to whether an act constitutes a nuisance," said the court, "it is not necessary to inquire into the intention of the person doing the act. The best intentions cannot prevent an act from being a nuisance where it otherwise is such, and the worst intentions cannot make an act a nuisance where it otherwise is not." Plaintiff was injured through no fault of his own. His right to be secure in person was violated. . . . The evidence supplies grounds for inferring the constructive intent which makes a wrongful act willful. There is no reason why the appellant [defendant] might not have passed without interfering with the person of any one, and his failure to do so implies the willingness to inflict an injury which in fact he did inflict." an action for the positive and wrongful invasion of person or property.[83] Nor will the fact that the result of the wrong-doer's act has proved beneficial to the individual whose legal right has been infringed destroy the cause of action which the latter has.[84] Were the rule otherwise, the injurious acts might be continued unchecked in many instances, until a right was gained through their exercise for the period of prescription.[85] In the second class, the act or omission is not of

"As an injury or violation of his right necessarily imports damage, there can be no such thing as an injury without damage. An injury is a wrong; and for the redress of every wrong there is a remedy; a wrong is a violation of one's right; and for the vindication of every right there is a remedy. Want of right and want of remedy are justly said to be reciprocal. Where therefore there has been a violation of a right, the person injured is entitled to an action. If he is entitled to an action, he is entitled at least to nominal damages, or else he would not be entitled to a recovery. Such damages are given, in order to vindicate the right which has been invaded; and such further damages are awarded as are proper to remunerate him for any specific damage which he has sustained. It is upon this principle that a person may sustain an action of trespass for an unauthorized entry upon his land, although he shows no actual specific damage to have thereby accrued to him; or even although the defendant may prove, that such act was beneficial to the plaintiff. The law implies a damage from the injury, or violation of the right of the plaintiff." Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 288, 303, 42 Am. Dec. 739, per Storrs, J.

"The degree [of damage] is wholly immaterial; nor does the law, upon every occasion, require distinct proof that an inconvenience has been sustained. For example, if the hand of A. touch the person of B., who shall declare that pain has or has not ensued? The only mode to render B. secure is to infer that an inconvenience has actually resulted. . . . The owner of a horse might be benefitted by a skilful rider taking the horse from the pasture and using him; yet the law would give damages, and under circumstances, very serious damages for such an act. . . . The rule is necessary for the general protection of property; and a greater evil could scarcely befall a country than the rule being frittered away or relaxed in the least, under the idea that, although an exclusive right be violated, the injury is trifling, or indeed nothing at all." IV. EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

A. Proximate Cause[87] — 1. In General. In determining liability for a tortious injury, the law regards the proximate and not the remote cause. It looks only to the act or omission from which the result follows in direct sequence without the intervention of a voluntary independent cause and declines to permit further investigation into the chain of events.[88] "It were infinite," said Lord

Bacon, "for the law to consider the causes of causes, and their impulsions one upon another; therefore, it contenteth itself with the immediate cause, and judgeth of acts by that, without looking to any further degree." [89] Proximate cause has been variously defined,[90] and the courts have laid down different tests for determining the proximate cause, the principal of which are the test of natural sequence and the test of probable consequences, or consequences which should have been foreseen.[91] These tests, however, are not entirely satisfactory, and they cannot

"The proximate cause is the vis major which intervenes and usurps the place of the primary force, or unites with and overcomes it, so as to become the principal and real cause of the damage sustained; or it is the primary cause, traced back through intervening and intermediate causes, by natural and continuous succession, from the injury resulting to the wrong committed." For other definitions see the note following.

91. "The test of proximate cause is whether the facts constitute a continuous succession of events so linked together that they become a natural whole, or whether the chain of events is so broken that they become independent, and the final result cannot be said to be the natural and probable consequence of the primary cause." Quinlan v. Philadelphia, 205 Pa. St. 309, 313, 54 Atl. 1026; Thomas v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., 194 Pa. St. 511, 45 Atl. 344.

"The rule, as a practical one, may be thus stated: Having discovered an efficient, adequate cause, that is to be deemed the true cause, unless some new cause, not incidental to, but independent of the first, shall be found to intervene between it and the result." Marble v. Worcester, 4 Gray (Mass.) 395, 412.

"It is not essential that the negligence should be the direct cause of the injury. It suffices that it is the natural and probable cause. It is the natural cause when either it acts directly in producing the injury, or sets in motion other causes so producing it and forming a continuous chain in natural sequence down to the injury; thus linking the negligence with the injury by a chain of natural and consequential causation, although the former may be neither the immediate nor the direct cause of the event. But such causation cannot be proximate cause in law to arouse liability, unless an ordinarily prudent and intelligent person ought, in the exercise of such intelligence, to have foreseen that an injury might probably result from the negligence under like circumstances." Meyer v. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co., 116 Wis. 336, 339, 93 N. W. 6, per Dodge, J.

"The true rule is, that what is the proximate cause of an injury is ordinarily a question for the jury. It is not a question of science or of legal knowledge. It is to be determined as a fact, in view of the circumstances of fact attending it. The primary cause may be the proximate cause of a disaster, though it may operate through successive instruments, as an article at the end of a chain may be moved by a force applied to the other end, that force being the proximate cause of the movement, or as in the oft-cited case of the squib thrown in the market-place. 95 Eng. Reprint 1124.) The question always is, Was there an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury, a continuous operation? Did the facts constitute a continuous succession of events, so linked together as to make a natural whole, or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury. It is admitted that the rule is difficult of application. But it is generally held, that, in order to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances." A. 583], per Strong, J. It will be observed that in the foregoing quotation two tests are laid down. First, whether there was a continuous succession of events, and second, whether the injury was the natural and probable consequence which should have been foreseen. The first, while the better, is open to criticism in that the court omitted to define the nature of the intervening cause. The second is open to the serious objection that it leads to an inference that the precise form of injury should have been foreseen, whereas it is sufficient that a reasonable man must have anticipated that some injury would have resulted, although its exact nature could not previously have been defined. While the rule as thus modified has received the approval of numerous courts, it may be objected that as a matter of fact a wrong-doer may be responsible for a result which is clearly proximate, although his wrong-doing may have been committed under such circumstances that no reasonable man would have anticipated that any injury would flow.

Rule criticized.—The fallacy of such a statement consists in this, that "where there is no direct evidence of negligence, the question what a reasonable man might foresee is of importance in considering the question whether there is evidence for the jury of negligence or not. . . . The rule was applied where defendant's servant drove so negligently as to collide with the carriage of a third person whose horse took fright, ran away, and injured plaintiff, and it was held that the negligence of the servant was the proximate cause. McDonald v. Snelling, 96 Mass. 290, 92 Am. Dec. 768.

Rule explained and limited.—Where this rule has been adopted it has often been limited by the further statement that "this is not to be understood as requiring that the particular result might have been foreseen, for if the consequences follow in unbroken sequence from the wrong to the injury, without an intervening, efficient cause, it is sufficient if, at the time of the negligence, the wrong-doer might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have foreseen that some injury might result from his negligence." "If the damage would not have happened without the intervention of some new cause, the operation of which could not have been reasonably anticipated, it would then be too remote." Gilman v. Noyes, 57 N. "A proximate cause is one in which is involved the idea of necessity. It is one the connection between which and the effect is plain and intelligible; it is one which can be used as a term by which a proposition can be demonstrated, that is, one which can be reasoned from conclusively. A remote cause is one which is inconclusive in reasoning, because from it no certain conclusion can be legitimately drawn. In other words, a remote cause is a cause the connection between which and the effect is uncertain, vague or indeterminate. It does not contain in itself the element of necessity between it and its foundation of an action." [92] Each case must be decided "largely upon the special facts belonging to it, and often upon the very nicest discriminations." [93] It has been said that the proximate cause is the "efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation." [94] It is not required that it be the sole effect. From the remote cause the effect does not necessarily flow. . . . This idea of necessity — the necessary connection between the cause and the effect — is the prime distinction between a proximate and a remote cause. The proximate cause being given, the effect must follow. But although the existence of the remote cause is necessary for the existence of the effect (for unless there has been a remote cause there can be no effect) still the existence of the remote cause does not necessarily imply the existence of the effect. The remote cause being given, the effect may or may not follow." 4 Am. L. Rev. 201, 205 [quoted in Seifter v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 169 N. Y. 254, 258, 62 N. E. 349; Laidlaw v. Sage, 158 N. Wanton acts and negligence.—A distinction has been drawn between cases of wanton acts and of mere negligence. In the former the natural sequence test is to be applied, in the latter, the rule of probable consequences. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Nitsche, 126 Ind. 229, 26 N. E. 51, 22 Am. St. Rep. 582, 9 L. Co., 60 Wis. 141, 18 N. W. 764, 50 Am. Rep. 352. A contrary view is taken by the author of an extended note to Gilson v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 36 Am. St. Rep. 807, 821, who holds that there is no essential difference between the measure of liability for wilful and negligent torts except perhaps where one wilfully assumes dominion over another's property.

Ordinary consequences.—"The first, and in fact the only inquiry, in all these cases, is, whether the damage complained of is the natural and reasonable result of the defendant's act. It will assume this character if it can be shown to be such a consequence as, in the ordinary course of things, would flow from the act." Rule as to proximate cause applied.—Where employees of defendant railroad company ran a train over and severed a line of hose laid across the track for the purpose of conveying water to extinguish a fire on plaintiff's property, and if the hose had remained intact the building would have been saved, it was held that the severing of the hose was the proximate cause of the destruction of the building. The owner of land who has directed an agent to erect a house at a particular place thereon cannot maintain an action against a third person who by false representations as to the true boundary line has induced such agent to erect the house in a different place. Woodward v. Aborn, 35 Me. 271, 58 Am. Dec. 699. The doctrine also finds illustration in cases where damages have resulted from a functional disturbance caused by physical shock brought about by defendant's unlawful act or omission. Thus where plaintiff, a passenger on a railroad, was thrown to the floor, cut and bruised, his mental functions subsequently affected, and paralysis finally supervened, it was held that a verdict in his favor which constituted a finding that the paralysis was caused by the rupture of a blood vessel, the result of the shock and injury received, was justified. And see DAMAGES, 13 Cyc. 30. So, where the owner of a sea wall had given the owner of several vessels employed in building it the exclusive right to use the wall as a place of safety, and defendant placed his vessel behind the wall and refused to move it, whereby two of the builder's vessels were sunk by a storm not uncommon in the locality, it was held that defendant was responsible for the loss. And where defendants negligently moored their boats in the channel and entrance to a lock, so that the boats of plaintiffs were stopped outside, and the current rose until plaintiffs' boats were carried over the dam and lost, it was held error for the court to enter judgment for defendants on the ground that the obstruction of the channel was a cause too remote from the rise of the river. Scott v. Hunter, 46 Pa. St. 192, 84 Am. Dec. 542. By the weight of authority, if a fire has negligently been started, and wind or water carry the flame, its transmission by these means will not prevent the injury from being regarded as the direct result of the wrong. 99. If property is wrongfully taken from the owner and destroyed by fire the wrongdoer is liable therefor, not from the fact of loss by fire, but from the tort which preceded it. Harper v. Dotson, 43 Iowa 232. Where defendant negligently started a fire by sparks from its engine which spread to plaintiff's property, and the station agent and others endeavored to put it out and believed they had done so, and a fresh wind arose and started it anew, and a tenant refused to extinguish it, it was held that the chain of causation was not broken. Wiley v. West Jersey R. Co., 44 N. J. L. 247. So, where defendant sold liquor to plaintiff's slave, who became intoxicated, wandered away, and died from exposure, and it was objected that the action of the elements and the acts of the slave intervened, it was held that a verdict for plaintiff should be sustained on the ground that the injurious act of defendant continued in operation up to the time of the slave's death. damages sustained by reason of the acts of God and the forces of nature unless one has by his wrongful act or neglect augmented, diverted, or accelerated those forces in such a manner as to injure another.[1]

b. Fright and Mental Anguish. Whether fright or mental anguish can be treated as the operation of a law of nature, so as to permit recovery for injuries immediately due thereto but occasioned primarily by the wrongful act or neglect of the wrong-doer, is a disputed question and the decisions are conflicting. Cases holding in the negative are based on the ground that the injury could not have been anticipated by defendant, and hence does not fall within the rule of proximate cause, or that it would be contrary to public policy to permit recovery where a flood of litigation would ensue of such a character that injuries might be feigned without detection and damages would rest upon mere conjecture.[2] plaintiff's pasture by reason of defendant's negligence, and afterward destroyed by bears; held a question for the jury "whether it was natural and reasonable to expect that if the sheep were suffered to escape, they would be destroyed in that way"); Lawrence v. Jenkins, L. R. 8 Q. B. 274, 42 L. J. Q. B. 147, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 406, 21 Wkly. Rep. 577 (where plaintiff's cows strayed upon defendant's close through a gap in a division fence made by the carelessness of defendant's servants in felling a tree upon it, and there fed on the leaves of a yew tree and died in consequence); Lee v. Riley, 18 C. B. N. S. 722, 11 Jur. N. S. 822, 34 L. J. C. P. 212, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 388, 13 Wkly. Rep. 51, 114 E. C. L. 722 (where defendant's mare strayed into plaintiff's field, through the defect of a fence which defendant was bound to repair, and kicked plaintiff's horse); Powell v. Salisbury, 2 Y. & J. 391, 31 Rev. Rep. 607 (failure of defendant to repair his fences, by reason of which plaintiff's horses escaped into defendant's close and were there killed by the falling of a haystack).

Deviation or delay in transportation of goods or passengers.—Where plaintiff shipped certain lime on defendant's barge, and the master deviated unnecessarily from the usual course and during the deviation a tempest wet the lime, it was held that defendant was liable and the cause of loss sufficiently proximate to entitle plaintiff to recover under a declaration alleging defendant's duty to carry the lime without unnecessary deviation. Davis v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 716, 8 L. J. C. P. O. S. 253, 4 M. & P. 540, 31 Rev. Rep. 524, 19 E. C. L. 321. But in most jurisdictions, where goods are delayed in transportation by the negligence of the carrier and are subsequently destroyed without its fault, the delay is not regarded as the proximate cause, although loss would not have occurred had the transportation been effected with reasonable promptitude. Hoadley v. Northern Transp. Co., 115 Mass. 304, 15 Am. Rep. 106; Denny v. New York Cent. R. Co., 13 Gray (Mass.) 481, 74 Am. Dec. 645; Daniels v. Ballantine, 23 Ohio St. 532, 13 Am. So, where defendant's train was upset by a gale of wind, and plaintiff was injured, and it appeared that if the train had been running on time the injury would not have occurred, it was held that the delay was not the proximate cause. McClary v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 3 Nebr. 44, 19 Am. Rep. 631. To the contrary see Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Y. 500; Bostwick v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 45 N. Y. 712; Michaels v. New York Cent. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415. See also CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 443.

1. Axtell v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 9 Ida. 392, 74 Pac. 1075. If delay occurs under such circumstances that the carrier has reason to anticipate the destruction of the goods as a probable result therefrom, he will be responsible, although the actual destruction is brought about by means beyond his control. Merchants' Wharf-Boat Assoc. v. Wood, 64 Miss. 661, 2 So. 76, 60 Am. Rep. 76. Where a portion of a sand-bank fell and struck plaintiff against a moving train which had been suddenly started without signal, and the wheels of one of the cars passed over him, it was held that the immediate and direct cause of the injury was the falling of the bank, and as this was not the effect or consequence of defendant's act or omission, plaintiff could not recover. Handelun v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 72 Iowa 709, 32 N. W. 4. See ACT OF GOD, 1 Cyc. 758; CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 377.

2. Argument is not necessary to show the unfortunate effect of these decisions. The first objection can be met by saying that it is an improper application of the test of remoteness. In many of the cases where plaintiff has not been permitted to recover, injury, although not in its precise form, could have been anticipated. It is thoroughly established by modern science that physical disorder may be the direct consequence of nervous shock. To the second objection it may be answered that public policy is invoked for a purpose wholly at variance with the reasons on which it is founded. For courts to deny justice because of the difficulty of administering it amounts to self-stultification. The inconsistency is apparent when we consider that no difficulty has been experienced in cases where damages are "at large" and even mental anguish has been considered a proper ground for damages where an independent cause of action has been found to exist. In reality, it is merely an arbitrary rule. However, the weight of authority is in favor of denying a right to recover for such injury.

Rule applied.— Thus where plaintiff, a pregnant woman, was standing on a cross walk, and defendant's horse car was negligently driven so that she barely escaped injury, and, although physically uninjured, she became unconscious from fright and a miscarriage resulted, it was held that this was not the "ordinary and natural result of the negligence charged." Taft v. Taft, 40 Vt. 229, 94 Am. Dec. 389. Nor will an action lie to recover damages for disgrace and disrepute occasioned by the advertisement and sale of property in judicial proceedings instituted to foreclose a fraudulent mortgage. Gore v. Condon, 87 Md. 368, 39 Atl. 1042, 67 Am. St. Rep. 352, 40 L. R. A. 382. In Bucknam v. Great Northern R. Co., 76 Minn. 373, 79 N. W. 98, the complaint alleged that plaintiff went with her husband into the ladies' waiting room of defendant's railroad station, waiting there for the arrival of her sister, coming on defendant's train, when an employee of defendant, in charge of said waiting room, and authorized to keep it quiet and orderly, supposing that plaintiff's husband, then with her, was not in fact her husband, ordered him to leave said room, and used harsh, violent, and abusive language toward him, and made insulting and threatening demands of him; and thereupon plaintiff suffered a nervous shock, and became faint and sick, and so remained for several days. The language so used by defendant's employee was not addressed to plaintiff, nor was there any physical injury inflicted upon plaintiff's husband or herself, and at no time was she in peril or danger of personal injury by reason of the threats or acts of defendant's employee. It was held that for the language so used an action would not lie in behalf of plaintiff as for a private wrong. The court distinguished this case from Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co., 48 Minn. 134, 50 N. W. 1034, 16 L. R. A. 203, where it was held that if the negligence of a carrier place a passenger in a position of such apparent imminent peril as to cause fright, and the fright causes nervous convulsions

a recovery in such a case.[3] But in any event, if a cause of action exists independent and illness, the negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, and the injury is one for which an action may be brought.

Inapplicable to assault.— The principle that a cause of action will not lie for mere mental suffering unaccompanied, as some of the courts put it, by "physical contact" would, of course, have no application in cases of assault pure and simple, since this tort consists in an infringement of the right of personal security. See ASSAULT AND BATTERY, 3 Cyc. 1014. And see Caspar v. Prosdame, 46 La. Ann. 36, 14 So. 317. The distinction is pointed out in Williams v. Underhill, 63 N. Y. App. Div. 223, 226, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 291, where it is said that "the reason for limiting liability in actions for negligence is founded in the principle of law governing such actions, viz., that the measure of damage shall be confined to the natural and probable consequences of the act or omission constituting the cause of action. The distinction between such a case and one founded upon a wilful tort, such as assault, is very clear."

See "Fright as an Element of Recoverable Damages," 77 Am. St. Rep. 859 note; "Recovery for Damage Resulting From Nervous Shock," 15 Harvard L. Rev. 304.

Illustration.— Thus where defendant, by way of a practical joke, falsely stated to plaintiff that her husband had met with a serious accident by which both of his legs were broken, and in consequence plaintiff suffered a violent nervous shock which rendered her ill, it was held that these facts constituted a good cause of action. Wilkenson v. Downton, [1897] 2 Q. B. 57, 66 L. J. Q. B. 493, 76 L. T. Rep. N. S. 493, 45 Wkly. Rep. 525.

Criticism of prevailing rule.— "It is within the common observation of all that fright may, and usually does, affect the nervous system, which is a distinctive part of the physical system, and controls the health to a very great extent, and that an entirely sound body is never found with a diseased nervous organization; consequently one who voluntarily causes a diseased condition of the latter must anticipate the consequences which follow it. The nerves being, as a matter of fact, a part of the physical system, if they are affected by fright to such an extent as to cause physical pain, it seems to us that the injury resulting therefrom is the direct result of the act producing the fright." Accordingly it was held that recovery may be had for nervous prostration from fright caused by defendant in entering plaintiff's home in the night-time. Watson v. Dilts, 116 Iowa 249, 252, 89 N. W. 1068, 93 Am. St. Rep. 239, 57 L. R. A. 559. "Why is the accompaniment of physical injury essential? For my own part, I should not like to assume it to be scientifically true that a nervous shock which causes serious bodily illness is not actually accompanied by physical injury, although it may be impossible, or at least difficult, to detect the injury at the time in the living subject. I should not be surprised if the surgeon or the physiologist told us that nervous shock is or may be in itself an injurious affection of the physical organism. Let it be assumed, however, that the physical injury follows the shock, but that the jury are satisfied upon proper and sufficient medical evidence that it follows the shock as its direct and natural effect, is there any legal reason for saying that the damage is less proximate in the legal sense than damage which arises contemporaneously? 'As well might it be said' (I am quoting from the judgment of Palles, C. B., Bell v. Great Northern R. Co., L. R. 26 Ir. 432, 439) 'that a death caused by poison is not to be attributed to the person who administered it because the mortal effect is not produced contemporaneously with its administration.' Remoteness as a legal ground for the exclusion of damage in an action of tort means, not severance in point of time, but the absence of direct and natural casual sequence — the inability to trace in regard to the damage the 'propter hoc' in a necessary or natural descent from the wrongful act. As a matter of experience, I should say that the injury to health which forms the main ground of damages in actions of negligence, either in cases of railway accidents or in running-down cases, frequently is proved, not as a concomitant of the occurrence, but as one of the sequelæ." Dulieu v. White, [1901] 2 K. B. 669, 677, 70 L. J. K. B. 837, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 126, 50 Wkly. Rep. 76, per Kennedy, J.

Texas doctrine.— The Texas courts after a period of doubt seem to have settled on the following doctrine. There can be no recovery for mere fright neither attended nor followed by any other injury. of the fright or mental suffering the latter is then deemed part of the injury and damages are enhanced accordingly.[4]

So, where defendant had negligently allowed a pit to remain open in the highway, it was not liable to a constable thrown into it by a prisoner escaping from custody, for in such a case "the person so intervening acts as a non-conductor, and insulates" the negligence of the town from the injury suffered by the plaintiff. Alexander v. New Castle, 115 Ind. 51, 17 N. E. 200. And where a telephone wire attached to a thirty-nine foot chimney extended across the street to the top of a building one hundred feet high, and the boom of a derrick used in hoisting materials struck the wire and pulled the chimney over, and plaintiff was injured by the falling bricks, the negligence of the persons operating the derrick was the intervening and responsible cause. Leeds v. New York Tel. Co., 178 N. Y. 118, 70 N. E. 219. In an action against the proprietor of a theater for damages for the refusal of his manager to permit an officer to go upon the stage to serve a writ in plaintiff's behalf on an actor, it was held proper to direct a verdict for defendant, since the cause of plaintiff's injury was the failure of the officer to serve his process. 5. Intervention of Irresponsible Individual. Where the act of an irresponsible plaintiff or third person intervenes as the direct cause of the damage, the liability of the defendant continues unbroken.[9] In accordance with this prinfacturer of ice cream, purchased coloring matter manufactured by defendants, which was represented to be harmless, but which contained arsenic, it was held that defendants were liable for loss of custom suffered by plaintiff, since the refusals of the customers to further patronize plaintiff were not such intervening acts as would cut short the chain of events. Swain v. Schieffelin, 134 N. Y. 471, 31 N. E. 1025, 18 L. R. A. 385. And where defendant left a horse and cart standing in the street with no one to watch them, he was held liable for any damage done by them, although occasioned by the act of a passer-by who struck the horse. Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 C. & P. 190, 24 E. C. L. 520. So, where defendant's servants negligently left a signal torpedo on its railroad track and a boy picked it up, and in playing with it caused it to explode and injure plaintiff, another boy, defendant's negligence was the proximate cause. Harriman v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 45 Ohio St. 11, 12 N. E. 451, 4 Am. St. Rep. 507. And where defendant, in violation of a statute, issued a permit to one M, the owner of a grocery cart, under which M kept the cart standing in the street, the thills being tied with strings, and an ice wagon struck the wheels of the cart and turned it around, and the string broke and one of the thills struck plaintiff's intestate, killing him, defendant was held liable. Cohen v. New York, 113 N. Y. 532, 21 N. E. 700, 10 Am. St. Rep. 506, 4 L. R. A. 406. In Clark v. Chambers, 3 Q. B. D. 327, 338, 47 L. J. Q. B. 427, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 454, 26 Wkly. Rep. 613, defendant had unlawfully placed a barrier set with spikes across a private road and a third party removed it and set it across a foot-path. On a dark night plaintiff walking along the foot-path encountered the barrier and was injured. It was held that the injury was the proximate result of defendant's act. "A man," said Cockburn, J., "who unlawfully places an obstruction across either a public or private way may anticipate the removal of the obstruction, by some one entitled to use the way, as a thing likely to happen; and if this should be done, the probability is that the obstruction so removed will, instead of being carried away altogether, be placed somewhere near." Doctrine applied where defendant has set a spring gun on his property see Bird v. Holbrook, 4 Bing. 628, 6 L. J. C. P. O. S. 146, 1 M. & P. 607, 29 Rev. Rep. 657, 13 E. C. L. 667. The principle likewise applies where a person unlawfully sells liquor to one who is injured or who injures a third party while in a condition of drunkenness produced thereby. Thus where defendant, an unlicensed dealer, furnished intoxicating liquor on Sunday to A, whom later, while helpless and unconscious, he placed in a sleigh to which plaintiff's horse was attached, he was liable for the loss of the horse caused by the inability of A to drive. On the other hand, where hoisting shears were held in position by two guys, and a stevedore cast the front guy loose and did not refasten it, and the next day some boys swung on the rear guy and caused the shears to fall and break, when they would not have fallen but for the swinging of the boys, and the swinging of the boys would not have caused them to fall had the stevedore refastened the front guy, it was held that the stevedore was not liable for the injury to the shears by the fall. Tutein v. Hurley, 98 Mass. 211, 93 Am. Dec. 154. So, where defendant railroad company had negligently allowed its platform to become saturated with oil and it was subsequently fired by the carelessness of a teamster in dropping a match, causing the destruction of plaintiff's buildings, it was held that defendant was not liable, as the act of the teamster in dropping the match was not to have been anticipated as likely to occur. Stone v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 171 Mass. 536, 51 N. E. 1, 41 L. R. A. 794. And one who stores dynamite in a wooden building without giving proper warning cannot be expected to anticipate the act of one who shoots at a knot hole in the building and thus causes the dynamite to explode. 9. Thus where the injured party is an infant non sui juris the fact that his wrongful act or neglect has intervened will not exonerate defendant. Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29, 5 Jur. 797, 10 L. J. Q. B. 73, 4 P. & D. 672, 41 E. C. L. 422, 113 Eng. Reprint 1041. It is on this principle that the doctrine of "attractive" or "alluring" nuisance rests, as illustrated by the "turntable" and kindred cases. See, Negligence, 29 Cyc. 463 et seq.

Dangerous articles.— One who delivers a carboy of nitric acid to a carrier, without informing him of its contents, is liable for an injury occasioned by the leaking of the acid upon another carrier to whom it is delivered by the first in the ordinary course of business to be carried to its destination. Farrant v. Barnes, 11 C. B. N. S. 553, 8 Jur. N. S. 868, 31 L. J. C. P. 137, 103 E. C. L. 553. So where defendant sold pistol cartridges to boys of ten and twelve years of age, who left one of them lying on the floor of their home, where it was picked up and discharged by a six-year-old child, it was held that the negligence of the two purchasers of the cartridges did not break the sequence. This result ciple, where a wholesale dealer sells to a retailer an article rendered inherently dangerous by act of the vendor, the dangerous quality being secret and undisclosed, as in the case of a sale of poisonous drugs as harmless medicines, a subsequent sale in good faith by the retailer will be considered so far involuntary that the wholesaler's liability will continue.[10] This principle also applies where a manufacturer or dealer sells a machine, gun, or other article, or erects a scaffold or other structure, which is inherently dangerous by reason of secret and undisclosed defects, and the purchaser or a third person is injured in using the same.[11]

6. Intervention of Unconscious Instrument. The liability of the defendant also continues unbroken where the injury is directly caused by an unconscious instrument either set in motion by the wrong-doer, the original force imparted to it not having spent itself,[12] or made effective by his negligence, which continued to be operative at the time the injury occurred.[13]

Where defendant, the owner of a loaded gun, sent a young girl of the age of thirteen or fourteen to fetch it, with directions to take out the priming, and the girl received the gun and in jest pointed it at plaintiff's son and pulled the trigger, and the gun went off and the bullet struck the son, defendant was held liable. Dixon v. Bell, 5 M. & S. 198, 105 Eng. Reprint 1023, 1 Stark. 287, 2 E. C. L. 114, 17 Rev. Rep. 308. In Carter v. Towne, 103 Mass. 507, where defendant had sold gunpowder to a child eight years old, it was held that he was not liable for injuries caused to the child by its explosion. This, however, was on the ground that the gunpowder had been in the possession and control of the child's parents for more than a week before the injury occurred and on the day of the accident had been handed to the child by his mother to play with. Hence the wrongful act of the mother intervened.

7. Involuntary Intervention. Nor will the intervening act of the injured person [14] or of some third person [15] which is involuntary and the result of the wrong-doer's act or omission cut short the chain of causation.

8. "The Last Clear Chance." Under what is sometimes referred to as the doctrine of the "last clear chance," where the injured party has been negligent in exposing himself to peril, such negligence on his part will not be regarded as the proximate cause if the wrong-doer either became aware of the peril in time to avoid the commission of the injury [16] or, according to the views of some courts, fight with a third party with whom he and plaintiff were driving in a wagon, and the team ran away and plaintiff was thrown out and injured, defendant was held liable. Ezell v. Outland, 72 S. W. 784, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1970.

S. 41, 3 M. & R. 105; Jones v. Boyce, 1 Stark. 493, 18 Rev. Rep. 812, 2 E. C. L. 189. The rule is likewise applied where defendant has wrongfully placed a third person in a position of peril and plaintiff has been injured while engaged in the work of rescue. Thus where defendant had negligently allowed an opening in the railing of a bridge over a canal to remain unguarded, it was held liable for the death of a father, drowned while endeavoring to save his son who had fallen through the opening. Gibney v. State, 137 N. Y. 1, 33 N. E. 142, 33 Am. St. Rep. 690, 19 L. R. A. 365. And see Negligence, 29 Cyc. 500. In the preceding case the negligence consisted of an omission, that is, a failure originally to construct the bridge properly or permitting it to become dangerous, but the result is the same where the negligence is active, as where a railroad train is driven at a dangerous speed and a person is killed while endeavoring to rescue a child. Eckert v. Long Island R. Co., 43 N. Y. 502, 3 Am. Rep. 721. But the principle does not apply unless there was negligence either as to the person whose safety was imperiled or as to the rescuer after his efforts to make the rescue had begun. Jackson v. Standard Oil Co., 98 Ga. 749, 26 S. E. 60.

Avoiding danger to property.— In Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. St. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65, defendant negligently allowed piles of iron to remain on a public wharf. Plaintiff's steamboat was moored to the wharf. The river afterward rose and the boat struck on the iron. To avoid the danger it was backed into the stream, where it was struck by a floating body and sunk. It was held that defendant was liable.

15. This is most frequently illustrated where defendant's wrongful act or neglect has placed a third person in a position of peril and the endeavors of the latter to escape have injured plaintiff. The involuntary act of the third person is "but a link in the chain of causes of injury of which the defendant is the wrongful author." Ricker v. Freeman, 50 N. H. 420, 432, 9 Am. Where defendant attempted illegally to chastise a slave, and the latter, in his flight to avoid the chastisement, jumped down a precipice and fractured his leg, defendant was held liable to the owner of the slave for such injuries, since they were the direct consequence of the illegal act. Johnson v. Perry, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 569. The rule is also applicable where defendant has negligently placed himself in a position of peril and the injury has been caused by the acts of third persons in effecting a rescue. Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234. Where one has negligently placed himself in a position of peril and acting in sudden emergency makes an error in judgment, he is not thereby relieved from the original negligence if it appreciably contributed to cause injury to another. might have become aware of it had he exercised reasonable care to ascertain whether a peril which was to be anticipated did in fact exist.[17]

9. Arbitrary Rule in Certain Cases. Upon grounds of public policy, the courts of some of the states have adopted an arbitrary rule in certain cases and have established a point at which defendant's liability will cease, although logically the injury is the proximate result. The application of this rule arises most frequently in cases of fires negligently started. Recovery is here allowed in some states only by the owner of property to which the blaze has been immediately communicated.[18]

Reason stated.— "Nearly all fires are caused by negligence, in its extended sense. In a country where wood, coal, gas and oils are universally used, where men are crowded into cities and villages, where servants are employed, and where children find their home in all houses, it is impossible, that the most vigilant prudence should guard against the occurrence of accidental or negligent fires. A man may insure his own house, or his own furniture, but he cannot insure his neighbor's building or furniture, for the reason that he has no interest in them. To hold that the owner must not only meet his own loss by fire, but that he must guaranty the security of his neighbors on both sides, and to an unlimited extent, would be to create a liability which would be the destruction of all civilized society. No community could long exist, under the operation of such a principle. In a commercial country, each man, to some extent, runs the hazard of his neighbor's conduct, and each, by insurance against such hazards, is enabled to obtain a reasonable security against loss. To neglect such precaution, and to call upon his neighbor, on whose premises a fire originated, to indemnify him instead, would be to award a punishment quite beyond the offence committed. It is to be considered, also, that if the negligent party is liable to the owner of a remote building thus consumed, he would also be liable to the insurance companies who should pay losses to such remote owners. The principle of subrogation would entitle the companies to the benefit of every claim held by the party to whom a loss should be paid." Ryan v. New York Cent. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 210, 216, 91 Am. Accumulation of combustible matter.— But where a railroad company has negligently permitted combustible matter to accumulate on its right of way, it will be liable for injuries due to the spread of fire by this means, although there is no proof of negligence in starting the fire. Illustrations.— Thus where defendant negligently piled lumber along a gangway, and a team driven by one R was so negligently driven that the wheel caught the end of one of the timbers and threw it down, it was held that "if the timbers were negligently piled by the defendants, the negligence continued until they were thrown down, and (concurring with the action of R) was a direct and proximate cause of the injury sustained by the plaintiff." So where the conductor of defendant's car compelled a child, who was a passenger, to stand on the platform, and another passenger, while leaving the car hastily, pushed the child from the platform and the latter was killed, it was held that the wrongful acts of conductor and passenger had concurred in producing the death and that defendant was responsible. And where one B, who had a box of tools on his shoulder, was struck by an engine negligently driven by one of defendant's employees, and some of the tools flew through the air and struck plaintiff, it of defendant concurred with some accidental cause to which plaintiff had not legally contributed.[21] "Where there are two or more possible causes of injury, for one or more of which the defendant is not responsible, the plaintiff, in order to recover, must show by evidence that the injury was wholly or partly the result of that cause which would render the defendant liable. If the evidence in the case leaves it just as probable that the injury was the result of one cause as of the other, the plaintiff cannot recover."[22] was held that, although the injury was the result of the concurring negligence of B and defendant, the latter was responsible. Hammill v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 56 N. J. L. 370, 29 Atl. 151, 24 L. R. A. 531.

Contrary rule in highway cases.—A contrary result has been reached in some states where the injury is the result of a defect in a highway combined with an independent cause for which the defendant municipality is not responsible. Rep. 574, reviewing many authorities and holding that while a municipal corporation is only bound to exercise reasonable skill and diligence in keeping its streets safe for such use as may reasonably be expected, and is not bound to keep them in such a condition that damage may not be caused by horses who have escaped from the control of their drivers and are running away, nevertheless where a horse becomes frightened and unmanageable without any fault on the part of the driver, and this with a culpable defect in the highway produces an injury, the municipality is liable, provided the injury would not have been sustained but for such defect, the fact that the horse was at the time beyond the control of the driver being no defense. See also STREETS AND HIGHWAYS, 37 Cyc. 1.

21. Baldwin v. Treenwoods Turnpike Co., 40 Conn. 238, 16 Am. Rep. 33; Beaning v. South Bend Electric Co., (Ind. App. 1910) 90 N. E. 786; Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574. Thus if the act of a dog is the sole and proximate cause of the shying of a horse and such shying is not the result of any vicious habit of the horse, the fact that the shying contributed to plaintiff's injury will not prevent a recovery against the owner of the dog. Denison v. Lincoln, 131 Mass. 236. A somewhat peculiar view, however, is taken in Cook v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 98 Wis. 624, 644, 74 N. W. 561, 67 Am. St. Rep. 830, 40 L. R. A. 457. Here a fire started by defendant's negligence met a fire having no responsible origin and the two united and destroyed property which either would have destroyed had the other not existed. It was held that "no damage in such circumstances can be traced, with reasonable certainty, to wrong-doing as a producing cause. The one traceable to the wrong-doer is superseded by the other cause or condition, which takes the place of it and becomes, in a physical sense, the proximate antecedent of what follows."

Illustrations.—In Leeds v. New York Tel. Co., 178 N. Y. 118, 70 N. E. 219, a telephone wire attached to a thirty-nine-foot chimney extended across the street to the top of a building one hundred feet high. The boom of a derrick used in hoisting materials struck the wire and pulled the chimney over. Plaintiff was injured by the falling brick. It was held that "guilty, or responsible, concurrence in causing an injury involves the idea of two, or more, active agencies, co-operating to produce it; either of which must be an efficient cause, without the operation of which the accident would not have happened," and that the negligence of the owner of the chimney was not an efficient concurring cause. In Pollett v. Long, 56 N. Y. 200, defendant negligently constructed and maintained a dam which broke away, discharged a large quantity of water into the stream, tore out an intermediate dam and with the volume of water thus increased broke down the dam of K & S, plaintiff's assignors. The trial court charged in substance that for plaintiff to recover, defendant's negligence must have been the sole cause of the injury; that although defendant's dam was defective, if there was sufficient water in the middle pond when it gave way to increase materially the volume and force of the stream the damages for injury to the lower dam would be too remote. This was held error. The question was whether the injury would have occurred in the absence of the break in defendant's dam. "If it would it was not caused by the break, so as to make the defendant liable; if it would not, it was so caused, and the defendant was liable therefor, although other causes tending to produce the result may have been in operation,

C. Accompanying Condition. But where two distinct causes, unrelated in operation, contribute to an injury, one of them being a direct cause and the other merely furnishing the condition or giving rise to the occasion by which the injury was made possible, the former will alone be regarded as responsible for the result.[23]

D. Functions of Court and Jury. It is the province of the jury, under proper instructions, to determine whether the injury is the proximate result of defendant's act or neglect, unless the material facts are not in dispute.[24] If, how-which would not have produced it in the absence of such break." In Stone v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 171 Mass. 536, 51 N. E. 1, 41 L. R. A. 794, it was held that where defendant railroad company negligently allowed its platform to become saturated with oil, and it was subsequently fired by the act of a teamster in carelessly dropping a match, resulting in the destruction of plaintiff's buildings, the acts of defendant and the teamster were not concurrent, so as to render defendant liable.

Illustrations.— In Hope v. Fall Brook Coal Co., 3 N. Y. App. Div. 70, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 1040, plaintiff, a night switchman, was injured while coupling an engine to a gondola car. The engine had a light, but just as the car was reached there was an escape of steam from the relief valve of the cylinder or steam chest and also from the piston of the cylinder. This was due to the act of the engineer who reversed his engine to decrease motion. The steam blinded plaintiff as he reached over to make the coupling and his hand was caught between the bumpers. It was held that the cause of the injury was the action of the buffers in coming together and that the escape of the steam was merely a condition. So, where plaintiff was leading a horse behind a wagon, and defendant's dog bit the horse, it was held that "the leading of a horse behind a wagon was simply a condition, and not, in any just sense, a contributory cause of the injury. . . . The law does not pay this respect to the characteristics or prejudices of dogs." Boulester v. Parsons, 161 Mass. 182, 36 N. E. 790. The principle may likewise apply where defendant has been guilty of illegal conduct. Thus where defendant's car was driven at a prohibitive rate of speed, although this was evidence of negligence, it was not conclusive. Hanlon v. South Boston Horse R. Co., 129 Mass. 310. So, where a tree negligently permitted by a person to remain standing is blown down and strikes a passing car, injuring the motorman, the latter's right to recover is not defeated by the fact that at the time of the accident he was running his car at an illegal rate of speed. Berry v. Sugar Notch, 191 Pa. St. 345, 43 Atl. 240.

V. PARTIES.

A. Persons Wronged — 1. THE STATE. Whatever may be the limitations upon the liability of sovereign states or political subdivisions thereof, it is settled that none exist upon their right to sue for a tort committed against their corporate rights.[26] Thus trover lies for timber unlawfully taken from the public lands,[27] and an action may be brought by the state for diverting or fouling a stream.[28]

2. CORPORATIONS. "Corporations, like individuals, constantly maintain actions, the object of which is the recovery of damages for wrongs done to them."[29] Thus a private corporation may sue to recover damages which result from a conspiracy,[30] trespass,[31] nuisance,[32] or libel.[33] And a city, town, or other municipal corporation may maintain an action for trespass, conversion, or other tort committed against its property.[34]

3. Individuals. Where the cause of action has not been assigned, or where it is not assignable, the suit must be brought by the individual whose legal rights have been infringed.[35] Where the duty violated has been imposed only by statute, a cause of action is created merely in favor of individuals belonging to the class which the legislature intended to protect. This rule has been applied, for example, where a statute requires railroad engineers to ring or whistle at crossings,[36] or prohibits a change of depot,[37] or makes it a felony for a bank director to receive money on deposit with knowledge of the bank's insolvency,[38] or a misdemeanor knowingly to permit a minor to have firearms in his possession.[39] But

Nuisance.— Thus as a private nuisance is an injury to the owner or possessor of real property "as respects his dealing with, possessing or enjoying it," one who lives with his wife on premises belonging to her is not entitled to maintain an action to recover for annoyance and discomfort caused by the fumes and vapors of defendant's asphalt manufactory, although his wife and daughter became ill in consequence. Conversion of debtor's property not under attachment.—After an execution against the goods, etc., of A and his replevin bail B was delivered to the sheriff, C fraudulently converted certain goods of A to his own use, the latter having no other property. An execution was then levied on the property of B who paid a part of the judgment and sued C for said tort. It was held that no action would lie, as plaintiff had no legal interest in the goods when the injury was committed. Green v. Kimble, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 552.

Trespass and waste.—A complaint to recover of defendant for wrongfully entering upon plaintiff's land, cultivating and raising crops without right and committing waste, after plaintiff had acquired title under a will, need not allege that plaintiff had taken possession or had offered to do so. Humphrey v. Merritt, 51 Ind. 197.

Possession with assertion of ownership prima facie evidence of title.— In an action for tort to personal property, possession, accompanied by an assertion of ownership, is prima facie evidence of property. Documentary evidence is only necessary when the ownership is denied and the production of papers is called for. Bas v. Steele, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,088, 3 Wash. 381.

36. Everett v. Great Northern R. Co., 100 Minn. 309, 111 N. W. 281, 9 L. R. A. N. S. 703, holding that a statute which required an engineer to ring a bell or sound the locomotive whistle while at a crossing was not for the benefit of a person who was driving a team along a street parallel to the railway track near a crossing, but who did not intend to use the crossing.

37. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Colburn, 90 Tex. 230, 38 S. W. 153 (holding that the purpose of a statute prohibiting a change of railway depot grounds when once established is to promote the interest of the public alone by making permanent places for the transaction of business by such corporations, that it is not for the protection of individual property-owners at such places, and hence a violation does not give a right of action against the railway company in favor of an individual who has bought property and made investments on the faith of the first location, to recover for depreciation in the value of such investments caused by the removal of the depot); House v. Houston Waterworks Co., 88 Tex. 233, 31 S. W. 179, 28 L. R. A. 532.

38. Baxter v. Coughlin, 70 Minn. 1, 72 N. W. 797, holding that where the statute prohibits the doing of an act or imposes a duty upon one, for the protection of individuals, if he disobeys the prohibition, or neglects to perform the duty, he is liable to those for whose protection the statute was enacted, for any damage resulting proximately from such disobedience or neglect, and therefore an act providing that any bank director who shall receive money on deposit knowing such bank to be unsafe or insolvent, shall be guilty of felony gives a cause of action in favor of one who has deposited money under such circumstances.

39. Where a statute makes it a misdemeanor to aid or knowingly permit a minor under a certain age to violate the prohibition against handling or having in his possession or control any firearms, one who loans a rifle and sells cartridges to a child under that age is liable to one injured by the discharge of the gun while in the infant's hands. Anderson v. Settergren, 100 Minn. 294, 297, 111 N. W. 279. And see Binford v. Johnston, 82 Ind. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 508.

the fact that injuries have been received by others growing out of the same wrong-doing will not prevent a recovery.[40] Thus in cases of defamation affecting a class or group, where there is personal application of the words to any member thereof he may maintain his action.[41]

4. Assignees. The ancient doctrine which forbade the assignment of choses in action for tort still applies to wrongs against the person or which do not survive death,[42] but not to wrongs such as trespass, conversion, and negligence, where the injury is to property rights.[43] Whether there can be a valid assignment of a "pure naked right to bring an action for fraud, unconnected with any property or thing which had itself a legal existence and value, independent of the right to sue for fraud," is disputed.[44]

B. Persons Culpable — 1. Several Liability — a. Personal Acts or Omissions — (i) Public Officers. As a general principle, in cases where the defense of "act of state" cannot be successfully interposed, the public officer will be responsible to the injured party for his personal acts of wrong-doing, although committed by virtue of his office. The doctrine that the United States or a state cannot be sued without its own consent has no application to suits

Rule stated.—"The ancient doctrine was that a demand arising out of a tort was not assignable, but the modern cases restrict the principle to torts against the person, or to such as did not survive to the personal representative after death, such, for instance, as slander, assault and battery, seduction, and the like. Torts to property, on the other hand, whereby the estate of a party is destroyed or diminished, are now held assignable either by the act of the party, or by general assignments by operation of law, and the doctrine is recognized both in England and America." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Packwood, 59 Miss. 280, 282, per Chalmers, C. J. "It is now the general rule in this country that causes of action arising from torts to property, real or personal, or injuries to the decedent's estate by which its value is diminished, survive and go to the executor and are assets in his hands, and such causes of action are assignable. But it is usually held that torts to the person or character, when the injury or damage is confined to the body or the feelings . . . are . . . not assignable." North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Ackley, 171 Ill. 100, 105, 49 N. E. 222, 44 L. R. A. 177, per Phillips, C. J.

45. "No man in this country is so high that he is above the law. . . . All the officers of the government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law, and are bound to obey it. . . . Shall it be said in the face of all this, and of the acknowledged right of the judiciary to decide, in proper cases, statutes which have been passed by both branches of Congress and approved by the President to be unconstitutional, that the courts cannot give a remedy when the citizen has been deprived of his property by force, his estate seized and converted to the use of the government without lawful authority, without process of law, and without compensation, because the President has ordered it and his officers are in possession? See JUDGES, 23 Cyc. 567 et seq.; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, 24 Cyc. 421.

Rule stated.— An action cannot be maintained against a justice of the peace, it being alleged that he wilfully and maliciously received a false and groundless complaint, issued his warrant thereon, and tried and convicted plaintiff. "It is a principle lying at the foundation of all well ordered jurisprudence, that every judge, whether of a higher or lower court, exercising the jurisdiction vested in him by law, and deciding upon the rights of others, should act upon his own free, unbiased convictions, uninfluenced by any apprehension of consequences. It is with a view to his qualifications for this duty, as well in regard to his firmness as to his intelligence and impartiality, that he ought to be selected by the appointing power. He is not bound, at the peril of an action for damages, or of a personal controversy, to decide right, in matter either of law or of fact; but to decide according to his own convictions of right, of which his recorded judgment is the best, and must be taken to be conclusive evi-judicial functions, such as the assessment of property for taxation,[54] the letting of contracts,[55] the passing upon the validity of claims,[56] and acts of a similar nature,[57] although it is otherwise where there is an absence of jurisdiction[58] or where the duties imposed are purely ministerial in their nature.[59] The following have been included in the latter class: Constructing a sewer properly and keeping it in repair,[60] receiving the votes of electors,[61] collecting and returning taxes,[62] "dipping" sheep affected with scab,[63] taking the acknowledgment of a deed or other instrument,[64] granting or refusing a license to sell liquor,[65] investing public funds,[66] and seizing property or person under process.[67] Furthermore, by dence. Such, of necessity, is the nature of the trust assumed by all on whom judicial power, in greater or lesser measure, is conferred. This trust is fulfilled when he honestly decides according to the conclusions of his own mind in a given case, although there may be great conflict of evidence, great doubts of the law, and when another mind might honestly come to a different conclusion. But in a controverted case, however slight may be the preponderance in one scale, it must lead to a decision as conclusive as if the weight were all in that scale. Now it is manifest that to every controversy there are two sides, and that a decision in favor of one must be against another. And this may extend to every interest which men hold most dear; to property, reputation, and liberty, civil and social; to political and religious privileges; to all that makes life desirable, and to life itself. If an action might be brought against the judge by a party feeling himself aggrieved, the judge would be compelled to put in issue facts in which he has no interest, and the case must be tried before some other judge, who, in his turn, might be held amenable to the losing party, and so on indefinitely. If it be said, that it may be conceded that the action will not lie unless in a case where a judge has acted partially or corruptly, the answer is, that the losing party may always aver that the judge has acted partially or corruptly, and may offer testimony of bystanders or others to prove it; and these proofs are addressed to the court and jury, before whom the judge is called to defend himself, and the result is made to depend not upon his own original conviction,— the conclusion of his own mind, in the decision of the original case,— as by the theory of jurisprudence it ought to do, but upon the conclusions of other minds, under the influence of other and different considerations." 67. In determining the liability of an officer for the seizure of property under a writ, such writs "may be divided into two classes. 1 — Those in which the process or order of the court describes the property to be seized, and which contain a direct command to the officer to take possession of that particular property. Of this class are the writ of replevin at common law, orders of sequestration in chancery, and nearly all the processes of the weight of authority a distinction exists between judges of the courts of superior or general and those of inferior or limited jurisdiction. Of the former it has been well said: "It is a general principle of the highest importance to the proper administration of justice that a judicial officer, in exercising the authority vested in him, shall be free to act upon his own convictions, without apprehension of personal consequences to himself. Liability to answer to everyone who might feel himself aggrieved by the action of the judge, would be inconsistent with the possession of this freedom, and would destroy that independence without which no judiciary can be either respectable or useful. . . . Nor can this exemption of the judges from civil liability be affected by the motives with which their judicial acts are performed. The purity of their motives cannot in this way be the subject of judicial inquiry." [68] Therefore a judge of a court of record of superior or general jurisdiction is not liable to a civil action where the act complained of was committed in the exercise of jurisdiction or constituted merely an excess of jurisdiction, even though it is alleged to have been committed maliciously or corruptly, although there is no immunity where jurisdiction was absolutely lacking and the want of jurisdiction was known.[69] But the judge of a court of the admiralty courts, by which the res is brought before it for its action. 2 — Those in which the officer is directed to levy the process upon property of one of the parties to the litigation, sufficient to satisfy the demand against him, without describing any specific property to be thus taken. Of this class are the writ of attachment, or other mesne process, by which property is seized before judgment to answer to such judgment when rendered, and the final process of execution, elegit, or other writ, by which an ordinary judgment is carried into effect. It is obvious, on a moment's consideration, that the claim of the officer executing these writs, to the protection of the courts from which they issue, stands upon very different grounds in the two classes of process just described. In the first class he has no discretion to use, no judgment to exercise, no duty to perform but to seize the property described. It follows from this, as a rule of law of universal application, that if the court issuing the process had jurisdiction in the case before it to issue that process, and it was a valid process when placed in the officer's hands, and that, in the execution of such process, he kept himself strictly within the mandatory clause of the process, then such writ or process is a complete protection to him, not only in the court which issued it, but in all other courts. And in addition to this, in many cases the court which issued the process will interfere directly to protect its officers from being harassed or interfered with by any person, whether a party to the litigation or not. Such is the habitual course of the court of chancery, operating by injunction against persons who interfere by means of other courts. And instances are not wanting, where other courts have in a summary manner protected their officers in the execution of their mandates. It is creditable, however, to the respect which is paid to the process of courts of competent jurisdiction in this country, that the occasion for the exercise of such a power is very rare. In the other class of writs to which we have referred, the officer has a very large and important field for the exercise of his judgment and discretion. First, in ascertaining that the property on which he proposes to levy, is the property of the person against whom the writ is directed; secondly, that it is the property which, by law, is subject to be taken under the writ; and thirdly, as to the quantity of such property necessary to be seized in the case in hand. In all these particulars he is bound to exercise his own judgment, and is legally responsible to any person for the consequences of any error or mistake in its exercise to his prejudice. He is so liable to plaintiff, to defendant, or to any third person whom his erroneous action in the premises may injure. And what is more important to our present inquiry, the court can afford him no protection against the parties so injured; for the court is in no wise responsible for the manner in which he exercises that discretion which the law reposes in him, and in no one else." inferior or limited jurisdiction is held to a stricter degree of accountability. His powers and duties are usually strictly defined by statute and for disregarding these limitations and acting in excess of his jurisdiction he will be liable to the party injured.[70] This distinction, however, is not universally admitted.[71]

(II) INFANTS. It is thoroughly established that infants are liable for their torts;[72] and they have accordingly been held responsible for such wrongs as assault and battery,[73] conversion,[74] trespass to real[75] or personal property,[76] and

335, 351, 20 L. ed. 646, plaintiff, an attorney, had been disbarred for contempt of court, but without having been cited to show cause. Although the proceedings were not in proper form, yet the court had jurisdiction both of the offense and of the offender. In drawing a distinction between acts committed in the exercise of jurisdiction and in excess of jurisdiction on the one hand and without any jurisdiction on the other, it is said: "Where there is clearly no jurisdiction over the subject-matter any authority exercised is a usurped authority, and for the exercise of such authority, when the want of jurisdiction is known to the judge, no excuse is permissible. But where jurisdiction over the subject-matter is invested by law in the judge, or in the court which he holds, the manner and extent in which the jurisdiction shall be exercised are generally as much questions for his determination as any other questions involved in the case, although upon the correctness of his determination in these particulars the validity of his judgments may depend. Thus, if a probate court, invested only with authority over wills and the settlement of estates of deceased persons, should proceed to try parties for public offences, jurisdiction over the subject of offences being entirely wanting in the court, and this being necessarily known to its judge, his commission would afford no protection to him in the exercise of the usurped authority. But if on the other hand a judge of a criminal court, invested with general criminal jurisdiction over offences committed within a certain district, should hold a particular act to be a public offence, which is not by the law made an offence, and proceed to the arrest and trial of a party charged with such act, or should sentence a party convicted to a greater punishment than that authorized by the law upon its proper construction, no personal liability to civil action for such acts would attach to the judge, although those acts would be in excess of his jurisdiction, or of the jurisdiction of the court held by him, for these are particulars for his judicial consideration, whenever his general jurisdiction over the subject-matter is invoked. Indeed some of the most difficult and embarrassing questions which a judicial officer is called upon to consider and determine relate to his jurisdiction, or that of the court held by him, or the manner in which the jurisdiction shall be exercised. And the same principle of exemption from liability which obtains for errors committed in the ordinary prosecution of a suit where there is jurisdiction of both subject and person, applies in cases of this kind, and for the same reasons." And see JUDGES, 23 Cyc. 568.

Jurisdiction exceeded.— In Lange v. Benedict, 73 N. Y. 12, 29 Am. Rep. 80, plaintiff was convicted in a court of superior jurisdiction of an offense for which the penalty was fine or imprisonment. He was sentenced to both. After paying the fine and being released on habeas corpus, the sentence having been vacated, he brought suit against the trial judge. This, it was stated, constituted excess of jurisdiction, but the judge incurred no liability.

70. Thus a justice of the peace who, after finally disposing of a case tried before him, commits a witness to prison for contempt, exceeds his jurisdiction and is liable in damages to the party injured. "Although he had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, he was empowered by law to exercise it only in a particular mode, and under certain limitations." Clarke v. May, 2 Gray (Mass.) 410, 412, 61 Am. other specific torts.[77] Nor will their responsibility be affected by the fact that the wrong was committed by direction of parent or guardian,[78] or that the injury was caused by negligence in the management of property under the latter's control.[79] Still "the rule is not an unlimited one, but is to be applied with due regard to the other equally well settled rule, that, with certain exceptions, they are not liable on their contracts; and the dominant consideration is not that of liability for their torts but of protection from their contracts." [80] Thus it has been held that an infant will not be liable in an action of deceit for falsely representing himself to be of full age or in an action for the conversion of the goods which the vendor has been thereby induced to sell.[81] The line of demarcation between tort and contract as applied to infants is well illustrated in the case of bailments. Thus if a horse hired to a minor is killed by overdriving or through neglect, the duty violated arises solely out of his agreement to take proper care. Nor will it be permissible by a trick of pleading to convert an action so essentially one on contract into one in tort.[82] On the other hand, "if the infant does any wilful and positive act, which amounts to the election on his part to disaffirm the contract, the owner is entitled to the immediate possession." [83] Thus if he hire a horse to go to a place agreed, but goes elsewhere or beyond that place, he is guilty of conversion,[84] and if horse or wagon is injured his infancy is no protection.[85]

(III) INSANE PERSONS. "It is well settled that, though a lunatic is not punishable criminally, he is liable in a civil action for any tort he may commit. However justly this doctrine may have been originally subject to criticism on the grounds of reason and principle, it is now too firmly supported by the weight of authority to be disturbed." [86] But as "his acts lack the element of intent or intention," compensatory damages are the measure of recovery.[87] Thus a lunatic has been held responsible for the infliction of injuries causing death,[88] and for assault and battery,[89] conversion,[90] trespass,[91] and negligence in the management of his property.[92] It has been questioned whether the general rule

(iv) Married Women. A married woman is responsible for her torts,[95] although, if they were committed in the presence of the husband, she was presumed at common law to act under his coercion and he alone was liable.[96] This presumption was not absolute and, if disproved, the liability was joint.[97] In the latter case the husband must of course be joined in the action. If there is a recovery, the judgment passes against both. If the wife has a separate estate, it may be taken in execution.[98] "There is no legal presumption that acts done condition of real property); Cross v. Andrews, Cro. Eliz. 622, 78 Eng. Reprint 863. "Since in a civil action for a tort it is not necessary to aver or prove any wrongful intent on the part of the defendant, it is a rule of the common law that although a lunatic may not be punishable criminally, he is liable, in a civil action, for any tort he may commit. And this would appear to be the rule even though the plaintiff at the time of the commission of the tortious act knew that the defendant was insane and might have prevented the commission of the act, or although the insane person was under guardianship at the time, and the property which was the subject of the tort was within the care and management of his guardian." Bushwell The Law of Insanity 355.

Negligence.— Insanity may become of importance where negligence is alleged. Thus where an action was brought on that ground for the loss of a vessel of which defendant was captain, occurring during a storm, recovery was denied where it appeared that defendant was in a state of temporary insanity resulting from his efforts to save his ship. Here the facts made out a strong case in defendant's favor. It was shown that he had been on duty almost continuously for three days and nights and for the last forty-eight hours had been completely exhausted and had taken large doses of quinine. The court refused to consider the question "whether a lunatic or a person mentally incapacitated should be held responsible in all instances for his nonfeasance or failure to act," basing its opinion on the ground that taking the circumstances as a whole no negligence was shown. "What careful and prudent man could do more," it was asked, "than to care for his vessel until overcome by physical and mental exhaustion?" It is evident therefore that this case does not militate against the general rule. Williams v. Hays, 157 N. Y. 541, 546, 548, 52 N. E. 589, 68 Am. St. Rep. 797, 43 L. R. A. 253, 143 N. Such torts may be committed under either of the following circumstances: 1. Where the husband is absent and had no knowledge of the intended act. . . . 2. Where the husband is absent, but where the tort is done under his direction and instigation. . . . 3. Where the husband was present, but the wife acted of her own volition. . . . And 4. Where the tort is committed in the company of the husband, and by his command or encouragement. . . . In the first three cases they are jointly liable, and the wife must be joined. She is in reality the offending party, and if the marriage should be dissolved by divorce or the death of either spouse before judgment recovered, the liability of the husband ceases. He is joined because she cannot be sued alone. But in the last case supposed, the law considers the tort as committed by the husband, and he alone is liable. To exempt her from liability, however, requires the concurrence of his presence and his command. A wrong done by his direction, but not in his company, does not excuse her; nor does his presence, if unaccompanied by his direction." Kosminsky v. Goldberg, 44 Ark. 401, 402, per Smith, J. Knowledge of servant or agent.— If an agent to whom property has been intrusted by his principal returns the property after he knows that his principal has no title, he is guilty of conversion. Powell v. Hoyland, 6 Exch. 67, 20 L. J. Exch. 82. A servant who has received a chattel from his master may retain it until he has consulted his master; but if, after consultation, he relies on his master's title and refuses to deliver it to a demanding owner, he is guilty of conversion. Singer Mfg. Co. v. King, 14 R. I. 511. Although a person acting under the direction of another as servant is not guilty of conversion merely by carrying articles from place to place without any knowledge of wrong-doing, supposing the articles to belong to or to be rightfully in the possession of the person from whom the same are received, the rule is otherwise when he takes them knowing of the controversy as to the ownership. An action will not lie against a deputy sheriff to recover money rightfully received by him in that character. The suit must be brought against the sheriff. Colvin v. Holbrook, 2 N. Y. 126.

Failure of foreman to warn laborer.—A foreman in charge of the work for a contractor building a sewer is not liable for failure to warn a laborer of the danger of working at a particular point. Burns v. Pethcal, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 437, 443, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 499, where the court said: "If the duty omitted by the agent or servant devolved upon him purely from his agency or employment, his omission is only of a duty he owes his principal or master, and the master alone is liable. While if the duty rests upon him in his individual character, and was one that the law imposed upon him independently of his agency or employment, then he is liable."

Defective construction work.— Where defendants were appointed a committee of the board of directors of a corporation to put certain grounds in condition for a game of football, and plaintiff was injured through a defective construction of the grand stand, it was held that the negligence constituted nonfeasance and not misfeasance, and that defendants were not liable. Van Antwerp v. Linton, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 417, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 318 [affirmed in 157 N. Y. 716, 53 N. E. 1133].

Maintenance of dam.—An agent who merely carries on a mill for the owner's benefit is not liable for the maintenance of a dam at too great a height, whereby the water is set back to the injury of another mill owner, such agent not having constructed the dam. Brown Paper Co. v. Dean, 123 Mass. 267.

Misfeasance and not mere nonfeasance.— On the other hand, where an agent received stock for the purpose of transfer only and converted it, it was held that he was guilty, not of mere nonfeasance, but of misfeasance toward the owner entitled to the possession, and was liable to him for conversion. Crane v. Onderdonk, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 47, 56, where the court said: "Although an agent, for nonfeasance and omissions of duty, is not liable, except to his principals, the rule is otherwise when the act complained of is misfeasance. In all such cases he is personally responsible, whether he did the wrong intentionally, or ignorantly by the authority of his principal; for the principal could not confer on him any authority to commit a tort upon the rights or property of another." So, where defendant, an agent, had entire control of the erection of a building for his principal, and one of the workmen, contrary to his orders, removed a portion of the sidewalk, of which fact he was advised, and he failed to replace it, it was held that this was misfeasance for which he was liable. "To say," said the court, "that he only was guilty of a non-feasance — an omission of duty to his principal — does not cover the case. He not only omitted a duty he owed to the traveling public, but by his acts he increased the danger, and every day committed a wrong, and was guilty of a misfeasance, in keeping this walk torn up, and using it as a driveway, in the execution of a particular work which he had entered upon, and of which he had complete superintendence and control. Irrespective of his relation to his principal, he was bound while doing the work to so use the premises, including this sidewalk, as not to injure others. Misfeasance may involve to some extent the idea of not doing; as where an agent, while engaged in the performance of his undertaking, does not do something which it was his duty to do under the circumstances: as,

b. Liability For Acts or Omissions of Another — (i) THE STATE. To permit proceedings against the state, unless with its consent, would be tantamount to a denial of sovereignty. The state being paramount there can exist no means of enforcing the court's decrees.[7] It is true that courts of claims have been established but their jurisdiction is carefully circumscribed and frequently a cognizance of tort actions has been withheld.[8] Thus it has been held that the United States cannot be sued for damages arising from the wrongful use of a patented invention,[9] for injuries due to the fall of an elevator in a government building,[10] for the use and occupation of land for a lighthouse,[11] or for the seizure of buildings owned by a private citizen.[12] An identical principle applies to state courts of claims.[13] Nor can the courts of one country assume jurisdiction of the sovereign or ambassador,[14] or the public property of another.[15] for instance, when he does not exercise that care which a due regard for the rights of others would require. This is not doing, but it is the not doing of that which is not imposed upon the agent merely by his relation to his principal, but of that which is imposed upon him by law as a responsible individual in common with all other members of society. It is the same not doing which constitutes negligence in any relation, and is actionable." Ellis v. McNaughton, 76 Mich. 237, 241, 42 N. W. 1113, 15 Am. St. Rep. 308. Failure to make repairs to principal's property.— Whether an agent in charge of property is liable to third persons for damages caused by a failure to make repairs is in dispute. Some of the courts hold that such failure partakes of the character of misfeasance, and renders him liable (Baird v. Shipman, 132 Ill. 16, 23 N. E. 384, 22 Am. St. Rep. 504, 7 L. R. A. 128; Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co., 62 Me. 552, 16 Am. Rep. 503; Lough v. Davis, 30 Wash. 204, 70 Pac. 491, 94 Am. St. Rep. 848, 59 L. R. (II) Corporations — (A) Municipal. The liability of a municipal corporation for the tort of its officers has been thoroughly discussed elsewhere.[16] The view prevails that it "possesses two kinds of powers, one governmental and public, and, to the extent they are held and exercised, is clothed with sovereignty — the other private, and to the extent they are held and exercised, is a legal individual. The former are given and used for public purposes, the latter for private purposes. While in the exercise of the former, the corporation is a municipal government, and while in the exercise of the latter, is a corporate, legal individual." [17] In the performance of the first it enjoys the immunity which the state possesses. Instances of the exercise of governmental functions for which the municipal corporation cannot be held responsible are the collection of taxes, care of dependent and defective classes, preservation of the public health, public instruction, police protection, and the like.[18] As to the second, its status is that of a private individual. Here the municipality acts as a private corporation and in carrying mails, was not liable to seizure in a suit in rem to recover redress for a collision, and this immunity was not lost by reason of the packet also carrying merchandise and passengers for hire. The Parlement Belge, 5 P. D. 197, 4 Aspin. 234, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 273, 28 Wkly. Rep. 642. In The Exchange v. McFaddon, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 116, 137, 3 L. ed. 287, plaintiff's schooner "The Exchange" was seized under the authority of the Emperor of France and thereafter converted into a ship of war. While in the port of Philadelphia the vessel was libeled at the instance of the former owner. It was held that as a public warship of a foreign sovereign at peace with the United States she was exempt from jurisdiction. "One sovereign," said Chief Justice Marshall, "being in no respect amenable to another; and being bound by obligations of the highest character not to degrade the dignity of his nation, by placing himself or its sovereign rights within the jurisdiction of another, can be supposed to enter a foreign territory only under an express license, or in the confidence that the immunities belonging to his independent sovereign station, though not expressly stipulated, are reserved by implication, and will be extended to him." An English court, it was held, possessed no jurisdiction to order the destruction of shells belonging to the Mikado of Japan on the ground that they were an infringement of plaintiff's patent. "The goods," said the court, "were the property of the Mikado. They were his property as a sovereign; they were the property of his country; and therefore he is in the position of a foreign sovereign having property here. . . . The Mikado has a perfect right to have these goods; no Court in this country can properly prevent him from having goods which are the public property of his own country." Vavasseur v. Krupp, 9 Ch. not as a governing body, as where it maintains docks or wharves,[19] or a market house,[20] operates a ferry,[21] tows vessels,[22] or supplies gas [23] or water.[24] By a parity of reasoning a municipal corporation will not be responsible for a failure to exercise, or misfeasance in exercising, legislative or judicial powers.[25] Thus a municipality is not liable for damages resulting from a collision with one who was riding a bicycle on the sidewalk, merely because it failed to pass an ordinance forbidding the use of its sidewalks for such purpose.[26] Nor is it liable for injury caused by children who thereafter died. It was held that the city was not responsible. So, in Brown v. Vinalhaven, 65 Me. 402, 20 Am. Rep. 709, where one C was employed as nurse in a pest-house maintained by the defendant town, and, after remaining there three weeks, was allowed to depart infected in person and clothing, in consequence of which plaintiff caught the infection, it was held that defendant was not liable. Rep. 731. Thus where the city of Boston contracted with plaintiff, the owner of a greenhouse, to supply him with water for steam heating and for his plants, and through negligence in the construction of a sewer in an adjacent street, the supply pipe became uncovered and exposed to the cold, so that the water was frozen and the supply cut off, it was held that the city was liable in tort for the destruction of the plants. (B) Charitable, Etc. Whether a corporation organized for charitable purposes and conducted not for pecuniary profit but for the public welfare shall be held responsible for tort is a mooted question. The cases fall into three classes. In the first, its liability is held to be that of the ordinary private corporation.[30] In the second, all liability for the acts or neglects of servants or agents is denied.[31] In the third due care in the selection of the offending employee is made the test.[32] Similar principles apply where it is sought to hold a non-charitable corporation for the negligence of a physician or surgeon employed by it to render gratuitous treatment.[33]

The mere fact that patients who are able to pay are required to do so will not deprive the corporation of its eleemosynary character so as to render it liable to them on account of contract relations. Bequests devoted to charitable purposes if applied to the compensation of injured parties would be "thwarted by negligence for which the donor is in no manner responsible. If, in the proper execution of the trust, a trustee or an employé commits an act of negligence, he may be held responsible for his negligent act; but the law jealously guards the charitable trust fund, and does not permit it to be frittered away by the negligent acts of those employed in its execution. The trustees of this fund could not by their own direct act divert it from the purpose for which it was given, or for which the act of the Legislature authorized the title to be vested in the defendant. It certainly follows that the fund cannot be indirectly diverted by the tortious or negligent acts of the managers of the fund, or their employés, though such acts result in damage to an innocent beneficiary. Those voluntarily accepting the benefit of the charity accept it upon this condition." Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 555, 559, 60 N. W. 44, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 25 L. R. (c) Private and Non-Charitable. Whatever may have been the theory at one time respecting the liability of a private non-charitable corporation for its torts, it is now thoroughly established that it stands on the same footing as an individual.[34] Hence it will be held responsible for assault and battery,[35] false imprisonment,[36] fraud,[37] libel,[38] malicious prosecution,[39] negligence,[40] nuisance,[41] and trespass.[42] It makes no difference that the tort is one which involves a wrongful motive or intent. Exemplary damages may be recovered as against an individual.[43] "The interests of the community, and the policy of the law demand that corporations should be divested of every feature of a fictitious character, which shall exempt them from the ordinary liabilities of natural persons, for acts and injuries committed by them and for them. Their immunities for wrongs are no greater than can be claimed by others." [44] Nor will it constitute a defense that the commission of the specific wrong was beyond the scope of the corporate powers. The defense of ultra vires cannot be invoked, for the corporation will be responsible "however foreign to its nature, or beyond its granted powers, the wrongful transaction or act may be." its agents or servants, its responsibility will be governed by the rule which holds a master only when the act was within the scope of the doer's authority and committed with a view to the master's interest,[46] unless the wrong consisted in the violation of a positive duty placed upon the master by law. In the latter case, the corporation will be held accountable for the act of its employee irrespective of whether the same was within the scope of the employee's apparent powers. This is best illustrated in the case of carriers of passengers.[47]

(III) EMPLOYERS — (A) For Default of Servant or Agent. For the acts of the servant within the general scope of his employment while engaged in his master's business and done with a view to the furtherance of that business, and the master's interest, the master will be responsible whether the act be done negligently, wantonly, or even wilfully; but if a servant goes outside of his employment and, without regard to his service, acting maliciously or in order to effect some purpose of his own, wantonly commits a trespass or causes damage to another, the master is not responsible, so that the inquiry is whether the wrongful act is in the course of the employment or outside of it and to accomplish a purpose foreign to it. In the latter case the relation of master and servant does not exist

"View to master's business."—The distinction between the wrong-doing of the servant or agent committed within the scope of his authority and with a view to his master's business and where these requisites do not exist, is well illustrated by two cases, Palmeri v. Manhattan R. Co., 133 N. Y. 261, 266, 30 N. E. 1001, 28 Am. St. Rep. 632, 16 L. R. A. 136, and Mulligan v. New York, etc., R. Co., 129 N. Y. 506, 511, 29 N. E. 952, 26 Am. St. Rep. 539, 14 L. R. A. 791. In the first, plaintiff, a woman, bought a ticket at an elevated railway station and passed through the gate to get to the cars. The ticket agent followed her to the platform and charged her with having given him counterfeit money. On her denial and refusal to give him other money in its place, he called her a counterfeiter and attacked her personal reputation. He placed his hand upon her and ordered her not to stir until he had procured a policeman to arrest and search her. After detaining her for a while, he allowed her to leave when he failed to get an officer. Here the master was held liable, it being said that, "though injury and insult are acts in departure from the authority conferred, or implied, nevertheless, as they occur in the course of the employment, the master becomes responsible for the wrong committed." In the second case, plaintiff accompanied by a friend purchased two tickets, giving a five-dollar bill and received the change. A short time before, a detective had left with the ticket agent a circular describing three men who he stated were engaged in passing counterfeit five-dollar bills, telling the agent to look out for these men and if they appeared to have them arrested. Believing plaintiff was one of the counterfeiters the agent procured his arrest. Here it was held that he was not acting within the line of his duty, the court saying: "It is quite clear from the evidence that the agent was first put upon his guard and in fact set in motion, not by any direction from the defendant, but by the police. When he took the bill he knew, or at least believed it to be a counterfeit, but notwithstanding this, he gave the plaintiff defendant's property for it, whereas it was his duty, considering him merely as the agent of the defendant, to refuse it. He did not take the bill in the course of his business as agent, but for the purpose of entrapping persons that he believed to be engaged in the commission of crime. This may have been laudable enough on his part as a citizen, or as a person aiding the police, but he was not acting in the line of his duty as defendant's agent. If he had been cheated or imposed upon by the plaintiff, or if he honestly believed he had been, and then attempted to recover what he had, or supposed he had, lost by the arrest of the plaintiff, it might then be said that he was engaged in the protection of the property and interest of the defendant, and, therefore, acting within the line of his duty. But here a ticket agent of a railroad deliberately takes from a person, applying to purchase a ticket, what he believes to be a counterfeit five-dollar bill, not, of course, in good faith, or in the regular and ordinary course of his business, but for the purpose of aiding the police in the detection of criminals, and then immediately directs the arrest of the person from whom he took the bill, such an act on his part is not binding on his principal."

50. Walton v. New York Cent. Sleeping Car. Co., 139 Mass. 556, 559, 2 N. E. 101. In this case the bundle struck plaintiff. It was held that the company was not liable. "There was no evidence," said the court, "that Maxwell [the porter] was employed by the defendant to take care of his own clothing and personal effects."

the use by a coachman of his master's team for the servant's own pleasure or business;[53] and the forgery of checks and fraudulent entry of the same by a clerk.[54] Although whether the wrongful act of the servant or agent was within the scope of his employment and committed with a view to the master's business is primarily a question of fact, yet if both the facts and the inference to be drawn from them are clear, then the court may take the matter into its own hands.[55] What has been said concerning the liability of the master for the torts of his servant applies where the relation is that of principal and agent. The question is whether the latter's act or neglect is "within the scope of his agency and in the course of his employment."[56] Both the master and the principal, however, may ratify the tort committed on their behalf and thereby incur responsibility if this be done with knowledge of all material facts.[57]

St. 258, 54 Atl. 891 (where a boy who climbed on a moving wagon was struck by the driver and fell under the wheels). In this and the preceding case the servant had a right to remove the boy and in so doing would have been acting for his employer. Whether he acted for his employer in adopting such methods or gratified his own malice was a question for the jury. In Craven v. Bloomingdale, 171 N. Y. 439, 64 N. E. 169, plaintiff bought a stove for which he paid. The stove being unsatisfactory, it was returned and defendant sent another in its place, which, through error, was marked "C. O. D." Defendant's drivers were under bond and were held personally liable for any money not turned over and goods lost. After the second stove had been delivered the driver demanded payment, and, on plaintiff's refusal either to pay or return the stove, called a policeman and had plaintiff arrested. It was held that it should have gone to the jury to determine whether the driver was acting for defendant or for his own benefit and in order to escape liability. A. 111, a servant was employed to drag bales of cotton from the sidewalk into a wareroom. To frighten away some boys who were interfering with his work, he made a motion as if to throw an iron hook at them. The hook slipped from his hand and struck and injured a boy who was not among those who were interfering. It was held that the direction of the trial court to find for defendant should be affirmed.

A. 219, one M, not a servant of defendant, delivered without authority a load of the latter's coal to plaintiff. Through careless driving M broke a pane of glass in plaintiff's window. Thereafter with knowledge of these facts defendant presented a bill for the coal. This was held a ratification of M's act, establishing the relation of agent from the beginning and rendering defendant liable for the value of the glass. Here it was said: "If we were contriving a new code to-day, we might hesitate to say that a man could make himself a party to a bare tort, in any case, merely by assenting to it after it had been committed. But we are not at liberty to refuse to carry out to its consequences any principle which we believe to have been part of the common law, simply because the duty as to the method of performance;[68] and (7) where the employer accepts the work while in a dangerous state and permits it to remain so, and the injury results from its condition.[69]

(IV) PARTNERS. "A tort committed by one partner will not bind the partnership or the other copartner, unless it be either authorized or adopted by the firm, or be within the proper scope and business of the partnership." [70] Necessarily each case is a law unto itself, as its decision depends upon the peculiar state of facts shown at the trial. While the value of the following as precedents is doubtful they serve to illustrate the principle. Thus it has been held that the gift by one member of a firm of apothecaries of what he supposed to be a bottle of dandelion, but which was in reality belladonna,[71] an assault and battery committed in taking possession of property mortgaged to the partnership,[72] a malicious prosecution on a charge of larceny of firm property,[73] and a trespass in expelling a tenant and removing his goods [74] were beyond the scope of the partnership business, and that the non-culpable partner was therefore not responsible for the act of his associate.[75] But a contrary result has been reached in cases of conversion,[76] fraud,[77] negligence,[78] slander,[79] and malicious prosecution.[80]

The tenant is not the agent of the landlord in such a sense as to make the latter responsible for the malfeasance and misfeasance of the former, although it has been said that he may be made such, as where he is authorized to make repairs or keep the premises in repair and he does it so inefficiently that third persons are injured. But this rests upon the principles of agency.[82] Where no such authority has been given, and in the absence of an agreement on the landlord's part to make repairs, no responsibility will in general rest upon the owner.[83] It is otherwise, however, where the lessor has participated in the tenant's wrongdoing by leasing premises for a purpose the accomplishment of which by the lessee may reasonably be expected to cause injury;[84] where he derives a benefit

84. It has been said that an owner is responsible: (1) If he creates a nuisance and maintains it; (2) if he creates a nuisance and then demises the land with the nuisance thereon; (3) if the nuisance was erected on the land by a prior owner or by a stranger and he knowingly maintains it; or (4) if he has demised premises and covenanted to keep them in repair and omits to repair, and thus they become a nuisance; (5) if he demises premises to be used as a nuisance, or for a business, or in a way, so that they will necessarily become a nuisance. Ahern v. Steele, 115 N. Y. 203, 22 N. E. 193, 12 Am. St. Rep. 778, 5 L. R. A. 449. See also Riley v. Simpson, 83 Cal. 217, 23 Pac. 293, 7 L. R. A. 622; Kalis v. Shattuck, 69 Cal. 593, 11 Pac. 346, 58 Am. Rep. 568. It is evident that in the second and fifth classes, particularly in the latter, the landlord's liability will extend to injuries which are actually the result of the tenant's misfeasance or nonfeasance, although made possible by the antecedent act of the lessor. In the other classes, the landlord is held accountable because his own act or omission has directly produced the injury. See NUISANCES, 29 Cyc. 1204.

Rule applied in other cases.— Where the owner of real estate, on which there is a kiln for drying lumber, leases with knowledge that the kiln will be used by the lessee for that purpose, and knowing or having reason to know that such use will be dangerous to an adjoining house, he is liable to the owner of such adjoining house if it be burned by fire communicated from the kiln while managed by the lessee. Helwig v. Jordan, 53 Ind. 21, 21 Am. Rep. 189. And where defendant leased a mill having an overshot wheel which, when put in motion, became an object calculated to frighten horses, it was held that he was liable for injuries to plaintiff caused by the latter's horse having taken fright thereat; nor was it a defense that the mill was then operated by the lessee. House v. Metcalf, 27 Conn. 631. "Whoever, for his own advantage, authorizes his property to be used by another in such manner as to endanger and injure unnecessarily the property or rights of others, is answerable for the consequences. Sometimes the liability has been referred to the law of nuisance, but it exists when predicated upon negligence equally as when predicated upon an intentional wrong." Boston Beef Packing Co. v. Stevens, 12 Fed. 279, 280, 20 Blatchf. 443, per Wallace, C. J., unsafe building which afterward fell, leased for storage purposes. See also Carson v. Godley, 26 Pa. St. 111, 67 Am. Dec. 404, 2 Phila. 138. Where defendant leased premises with knowledge that the lessee intended to use them for a boiler manufactory, it was held that "one who demises his property for the purpose of having it used in such a way as must prove offensive to others, may himself be treated as the author of the mischief," but that it should have been left to the jury to determine "whether, from the nature of the business or otherwise, the defendant knew, or had from the maintenance of a nuisance by receiving rent;[85] where there are covenants for its continuance;[86] or where the lessor has otherwise made himself a party to the wrong, as by furnishing the material used in the construction of the nuisance.[87]

(B) Licensors. The owner is not liable for the acts of a licensee unless they constitute a nuisance which the owner knowingly suffers to remain.[88]

(C) Bailors. In general the bailor is not liable to third parties injured by the negligence of the bailee with respect to the article bailed.[89] But the rule is otherwise where the bailor has intrusted a dangerous article to one unfamiliar with its dangerous quality, uninstructed in its use, or incompetent to observe proper care.[90]

2. Joint and Several Liability — a. General Rule. So far as concerns the number of individuals who may be held responsible, torts are either single or joint. The class within which a particular instance of wrong-doing may be placed depends in general, not upon the inherent nature of the tort itself, but upon the method of its accomplishment, for nearly every tort is susceptible of commission by one or many. Where different persons owe the same duty and their acts naturally tend to the same breach of that duty, the wrong may be regarded as joint and both may be held liable.[91] It has been said that oral defamation is a reason to believe, that the making of steam engine boilers in his shop would be likely to prove injurious to the plaintiff. . . . He cannot be justly charged with the wrong which was actually committed by others, who were not in his employment, unless he knew, or had reason to believe, that he was letting the property for a use which must prove injurious to the plaintiff." tort essentially single; that, although two or more utter the same slander, nevertheless "the words of one are not the words of the other." [92] But in stating that a slander cannot be committed jointly, it is evident that the courts spoke with reference to the particular facts before them. The statement does not apply to cases where concert is shown.[93]

b. Distinct Injuries; Lack of Concert. As applicable to the entire range of tort actions, the proposition may be stated that where wrong-doers have not acted in concert, and separate and distinct injuries are caused by the act or neglect of each, the liability is several only.[94] Thus where animals belonging to several owners do damage together, there being a separate trespass or wrong, each owner is generally liable separately only for the injury done by his animal.[95] The fact

93. "The reason given by the old authorities, that a slander can be the utterance of but a single tongue, is not conclusive. Granting that only one person can speak the slander, still other persons may hire or procure him to utter it. In the case of other torts such persons and the actual perpetrator of the act are joint tort-feasors. Thus, a principal and agent may be jointly sued for the negligence of the latter. . . . There is no reason for any different rule in a slander case. We do not mean to suggest that the repetition by one person of a slander uttered by another is any part of the original slander. On the contrary, they give rise to two distinct causes of action. But if the two slanders were uttered in pursuance of a common agreement between the parties that such slanders should be uttered, then each is jointly liable with the other for their utterance." A joint liability, however, may exist, as in the case of a trespass by cattle, which, although owned severally, are under the joint that it is difficult to separate the injury done by each from that done by the others furnishes no reason for holding that one tort-feasor should be liable for the acts of others with whom he is not acting in concert. Furthermore, if defendant's act was several when it was committed, it cannot be made joint because of a consequence which followed in connection with the result of the same or a similar act done by others.[96] But, although such wrong-doers may not be liable to a joint action at law for damages, the equitable remedy of injunction may be sought against all of them jointly.[97]

c. Connivance and Ratification. It is the general rule that one who counsels, advises, abets, or assists in the commission by another of an actionable wrong is responsible to the injured party for the entire loss or damage.[98] But mere knowl-

St. c. 102, § 93, providing that "every owner or keeper of a dog shall forfeit to any person injured by it double the amount of the damage sustained by him"; the use of the disjunctive "or" indicates a purpose on the part of the legislature that the liability of such owner and keeper be several and not joint. Rule stated.— "All who aid, command, advise, or countenance the commission of a tort by another, or who approve of it after it is done, if done for their benefit, are liable in the same manner as they would be if they

edge that a tort is being committed against another will not be sufficient to establish liability. There exists no legal duty to disclose.[99] Nor will the mere presence of a person at the commission of a trespass or other wrongful act by another render him liable as a participant.[1] It is also well settled that the liability of one who has not actively participated may be established where the wrongful act is ratified by him.[2] But mere acquiescence in the commission of a tort after the act does not make the person thus acquiescing a party to the wrong or liable therefor as a joint tort-feasor, since, to be liable, he must not only have assented to the wrong, but the act must have been done for his benefit [3] or have been of a nature to benefit him.[4] Ratification will not be established from mere knowledge, approval, or satisfaction.[5] It has been said that "to hold one responsible for a tort not committed by his orders, his adoption of and assent to the same must at all events be clear and explicit, and founded on a clear knowledge of the tort which has been committed." Banfield v. Whipple, 10 Allen (Mass.) 27, 87 Am. Dec. 618. In Daingerfield v. Thompson, 74 Va. 136, 36 Am. Rep. 783, three persons at midnight demanded admittance to a restaurant, which was closed but had a light burning within. Admittance being refused, one of them went around to a side door, entered and told the keeper that one of the others wanted to come in. The two others being at the front door, one said, "Fire a salute." The one addressed fired a pistol and the ball went through the door and severely wounded the keeper. There was an ordinance prohibiting the discharge of firearms in the street. It was held that the person firing and the one advising the firing were jointly liable. And in Chicago-Virden Coal Co. v. Wilson, 67 Ill. App. 443, it was held that where an embankment was built on the right of way of a railroad company, and a switch was laid over the embankment for the purpose of connecting the main line of the railroad with a coal mine, the work being done by the owners of the coal mine with the consent of the railroad company and for the joint use of both, both might be held responsible for any damage caused thereby. at the trial waive his right to recover against one or more.[29] It has been held, however, that where a joint tort is charged, there can be no recovery on proof of one or more separate torts; a joint tort must be proved in order to sustain the action.[30] An instruction authorizing the jury to find against all defendants, although they believe some of them not guilty, is erroneous.[31] Nor can a joint verdict be allowed to stand as to part of defendants and be set aside as to the others. A judgment is a unit.[32]

(II) ASSESSING DAMAGES. Damages must be assessed in a single sum. They cannot be apportioned by the jury among defendants,[33] for the sole inquiry open is what damages plaintiff has sustained, not who ought to pay them.[34] Discrimination according to the relative enormity of the acts of each is not permitted.[35] Should the jury assess different amounts plaintiff should have judgment against all convicted for the largest sum found against any one of them,[36] for where no punitive damages are claimed, plaintiff is entitled to a joint verdict for what the most culpable ought to pay.[37] Where some of defendants in a single suit are only

Fixing amount of damages.— Where a hack was driven into a hole in a street, and a passenger was injured, and the passenger brought a joint action against the hack company, the one who had made the excavation, and the one under whose orders the excavation was made, it was held that it was proper to charge that, if the jury found against all defendants, they could only assess damages which resulted from their combined acts. liable for compensatory damages, a recovery cannot be had for a greater amount. The injured party in one and the same judgment cannot get compensatory damages against some of the parties and punitive damages against the others.[38] But where all of defendants were actuated by malice, all will be liable for both actual and exemplary damages.[39]

k. Indemnity. Although it is established that a joint wrong-doer who has been forced to respond in damages cannot require indemnification at the hands of his co-tort-feasors,[40] there are two classes of cases which constitute exceptions to the rule: First, where the party claiming indemnity has not been guilty of any fault except technically or constructively;[41] and second, where both parties have been in fault, but not in the same fault, toward the party injured, and the party from whom indemnity is claimed was the primary and efficient cause of the injury.[42] Illustrations of the second class are found in cases "of recovery against municipalities for obstructions to the highways caused by private persons. The fault of the latter is the creation of the nuisance; that of the former the failure to remove it in the exercise of its duty to care for the safety of the public streets. The first was a positive tort and the efficient cause of the injury complained of; the latter the negative tort of neglect to act upon notice, express or implied." [43]

l. Contribution. Where two or more have participated in the commission of a wrong, the general rule is that a right of contribution will not arise in favor of the one held responsible by the injured party.[44] But this rule is restricted to

41. In such a case contribution may be enforced against his co-members.[47]

VI. PARTICULAR TORTS.

A. Infringement of Personal Security — 1. ASSAULT. An assault has been defined as follows: "An assault is any attempt or offer, with force or violence,[48] to do a corporal hurt to another,[49] whether from malice or wantonness,[50] with such circumstances as denote, at the time, an intention to do it,[51] coupled Joint attachments.— Thus where two creditors, acting together, attach and sell goods sold by their debtor, under the honest belief that such sale is void, and one of them is compelled to pay a judgment recovered against him by the vendee for wrongful seizure and sale, he may recover contribution from the other. Joint failure to maintain bridge.— Where two counties maintained a bridge which broke and caused injury to a traveler, who recovered damages in an action for negligence against one of the counties, the latter might recover contribution. Armstrong County v. Clarion County, 66 Pa. St. 218, 5 Am. Rep. 368.

Presumption of knowledge.— Where plaintiff, a saloon-keeper, sold liquor to a habitual drunkard, and the latter's wife recovered judgment against plaintiff, who sued defendant, another saloon-keeper, to enforce contribution on the ground that the latter had also sold liquor to the same individual and thus contributed to the injury for which the wife had recovered, it was held that, as the husband was known to be a common drunkard, the presumption was that plaintiff was aware of the wrongfulness of his act, and a right to contribution was denied. Johnson v. Torpy, 35 Nebr. 604, 53 N. W. 575, 37 Am. St. Rep. 447.

48. "There must be some movement towards physical violence." Cutler v. State, 59 Ind. 300, 302. "In order to constitute an assault there must be something more than a mere menace. There must be violence begun to be executed. But where there is a clear intent to commit violence accompanied by acts which if not interrupted will be followed by personal injury, the violence is commenced and the assault is complete. Thus riding after the prosecutor so as to compel him to run into a garden for shelter, to avoid being beaten, was held to be an assault. (Mortin v. Shoppe, 3 C. & P. 373, 14 E. C. L. 616.) So where the defendant was advancing in a threatening attitude, with intent to strike the plaintiff, so that his blow would in a second or two have reached the plaintiff, if he had not been stopped, although when stopped he was not near enough to strike, it was held that an assault had been committed. (Stephens v. Myers, 4 C. & P. 349, 19 E. C. L. 548.) It is not indispensable to the commission of an assault that the assailant should be at any time within striking distance. If he is advancing with intent to strike his adversary and come sufficiently near to induce a man of ordinary firmness to believe, in view of all the circumstances, that he will instantly receive a blow unless he strike in self-defense or retreat, the assault is complete." People v. Yslas, 27 Cal. 630, 633, per Sanderson, J.

49. "Mere words cannot amount to an assault." Hence, no legal injury is committed by attempting to persuade to sexual intercourse. Prince v. Ridge, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 666, 667, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 454.

50. Thus an assault is distinguishable from negligence — a distinction which is important owing to the ruling of some of the courts that for fright or mental suffering, there being no physical injury, damages are recoverable in the former instance (that is, for wanton and intentional wrongs) but not in the latter. Prince v. Ridge, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 666, 667, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 454.

51. The accompanying words may show that plaintiff was not put in any fear. Thus where defendant laying his hand on his sword with a present ability [52] to carry such intention into effect." [53] This definition is supported by the weight of authority.

2. Battery. A battery is a consummated assault.[54] It is "an unlawful touching [55] the person of another [56] by the aggressor himself,[57] or any other substance [58] put in motion by him." [59]

3. False Imprisonment. "False imprisonment consists in the unlawful detention of the person of another for any length of time whereby he is deprived of his personal liberty." [60] An arrest under legal authority will not constitute false imprisonment.[61] But one who acts under an unconstitutional statute is not exonerated thereby.[62] Force or threat of force is essential.[63] If the detention is illegal the motive of the detainer is immaterial,[64] although motive may of course be taken into consideration in determining the question of punitive damages.[65] Merely preventing one from going in a given direction, as along a highway, will not be sufficient, for to hold otherwise would be "to confound partial obstruction and disturbance with total obstruction and detention." [66] said, "If it were not assize time, I would not take such language," it was held to be no assault. Tuberville v. Savage, 1 Mod. 3, 86 Eng. Reprint 684. See also State v. Crow, 23 N. C. 375; Blake v. Barnard, 9 C. & P. 626, 38 E. C. L. 365.

52. "There must be proof of violence actually offered, and this within such a distance as that harm might ensue if the party was not prevented." People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521, 525, 5 N. W. 982. "To constitute an assault with a gun or pistol, it is necessary that the gun or pistol should be presented at the party charged to be assaulted, within the distance to which the gun or pistol may do execution." Tarver v. State, 43 Ala. 354, 356.

53. Tarver v. State, 43 Ala. 354, 356, per Peck, C. J. And see Assault and Battery, 3 Cyc. 1022, 1066 et seq.

54. "Every battery includes an assault." Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 51 Vt. 420, 422.

55. The degree of force is immaterial except as it may bear upon the quantum of damages. "A battery is committed whenever the violence menaced in an assault is actually done, though in ever so small a degree, upon the person." Sweeden v. State, 19 Ark. 205, 213. "The wrong here consists, not in the touching, so much as in the manner or spirit in which it is done, and the question of bodily pain and injury is important only as affecting the damages. Thus, to lay hands on another in a hostile manner is a battery, though no damage follows; but to touch another, merely to attract his attention, is no battery, and not unlawful. And to push gently against one, in the endeavor to make way through a crowd, is no battery; but to do so rudely and insolently is, and may justify damages proportioned to the rudeness." 1 Cooley Torts (3d ed.) 281.

56. Actual physical contact with the person is not necessary. Thus it is a battery on the person to strike a horse hitched to the carriage in which plaintiff is riding (Clark v. Downing, 55 Vt. 259, 45 Am. Rep. 612. And see Marentille v. Oliver, 2 N. J. L. 379), or to drive a carriage against a vehicle occupied by plaintiff at the time (Hopper v. Reeve, 1 Moore C. P. 407, 7 Taunt. 698, 2 E. C. L. 554).

B. Infringement of Right of Privacy. Whether a "right of privacy" exists independent of statute, for the invasion of which by the unauthorized publication of a person's name or picture, for advertising or other purposes, an action lies, is in dispute.[68] It is assumed that the picture or the accompanying from confounding imprisonment of the body with mere loss of freedom. It is one part of the definition of freedom to be able to go whithersoever one pleases. 68. The theory that one is entitled to insist on being "let alone" was probably first publicly advanced in an article in 4 Harvard L. Rev. 193, 195 (December, 1890), entitled "The Right of Privacy." Here it was said: "Recent inventions and business methods call attention to the next step which must be taken for the protection of the person, and for securing to the individual what Judge Cooley calls the right 'to be let alone.' Instantaneous photographs and newspaper enterprises have invaded the sacred precincts of private and domestic life; and numerous mechanical devices threaten to make good the prediction that 'what is whispered in the closet shall be proclaimed from the house-tops.' For years there has been a feeling that the law must afford some remedy for the unauthorized circulation of portraits of private persons. . . . Of the desirability — indeed of the necessity — of some such protection, there can, it is believed, be no doubt. The press is overstepping in every direction the obvious bounds of propriety and of decency. Gossip is no longer the resource of the idle and of the vicious, but has become a trade, which is pursued with industry as well as effrontery. To satisfy a prurient taste the details of sexual relations are spread broadcast in the columns of the daily papers. To occupy the indolent, column upon column is filled with idle gossip, which can only be procured by intrusion upon the domestic circle. The intensity and complexity of life, attendant upon advancing civilization, have rendered necessary some retreat from the world, and man, under the refining influence of culture, has become more sensitive to publicity, so that solitude and privacy have become more essential to the individual; but modern enterprise and invention have, through invasions upon his privacy, subjected him to mental pain and distress, far greater than could be inflicted by mere bodily injury. Nor is the harm wrought by such invasions confined to the suffering of those who may be made the subjects of journalistic or other enterprises. In this, as in other branches of commerce, the supply creates the demand." Prior to the publication of this article, while the right of privacy had been tentatively presented to the courts for consideration, the decisions had been based on the theory that there had been violation of property rights. Albert v. Strange, 2 De G. & Sm. 652, 13 Jur. 507, 64 Eng. Reprint 293; Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402, 19 Rev. Rep. 87, 36 Eng. Reprint 670. In 1895, in Schuyler v. Curtis, 147 N. Y. 434, 42 N. E. 22, 49 Am. St. Rep. 671, 31 L. R. A. 286, the New York court of appeals, reversing both the appellate division (64 Hun 594, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 264) and the trial term (15 N. Y. Suppl. 787, 27 Abb. N. Cas. 387), refused to prohibit the erection of a statue of a deceased relative. The previous year United States Circuit Judge Colt, in Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co., 64 Fed. 280, 31 L. R. A. 283, while refusing an injunction against the publication of a photograph of a leading inventor on the ground that he was a "public character," intimated that a private individual would be protected on the theory that the right of privacy is an extension of the right of property. In 1899, the supreme court of Michigan, in Atkinson v. Doherty, 121 Mich. 372, 80 N. W. 285, 80 Am. St. Rep. 507, 46 L. R. A. 219, refused to restrain the unauthorized use of the name and likeness of a deceased person and took a decided stand against the existence of any "right to be let alone," basing its decision in large part on the Schuyler case, supra. But as pointed out by Cobb, J., in Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co., infra, all that was really decided here was that the right of privacy, if any, dies with the person. The point was not squarely presented until Roberson v. Rochester Folding-Box Co., 171 N. Y. 538, 64 N. E. 442, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, 59 L. R. A. 478, decided in 1902. Here the existence of such a right "founded upon the claim that a man has the right to pass through this world, if he wills, without having his picture published, his business enterprises discussed . . . or words are not defamatory, for the solution of this problem does not in any sense require recourse to the law of libel.

C. Injuries to Reputation; Defamation. By defamation is understood a false publication calculated to bring one into disrepute.[69] If understood through the sense of hearing, it constitutes slander.[70] Spoken words are not essential.[71] If understood through the sense of sight, it constitutes libel.[72] The variety of forms which the latter may assume is apparent. Thus it is libelous to suspend a lamp in the daytime before a person's house, thereby indicating that he keeps his eccentricities commented upon . . . whether the comment be favorable or otherwise," was denied, although by a divided court. A subsequent statute of that state (Consol. Laws, c. 6, art. 5) has given a cause of action for "the unauthorized use of the name or picture of any person for purposes of trade." This has been held constitutional. Rhodes v. Sperry, etc., Co., 193 N. Y. 223, 85 N. E. 1097, 127 Am. St. Rep. 945. In 1905, the supreme court of Georgia, in Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co., 122 Ga. 190, 50 S. E. 68, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 69 L. R. A. 101, reached a conclusion contrary to that of the New York court of appeals in the Roberson case. The next year it was held in Louisiana (Itzkovitch v. Whitaker, 117 La. 708, 42 So. 228, 116 Am. St. Rep. 215; Schulman v. Whitaker, 117 La. 704, 706, 42 So. 227, 7 L. R. A. N. S. 274) that taking the picture of a person accused of a crime should be postponed until his conviction, unless necessary for the purpose of identification or for detection. Speaking of the right to take the picture of an unwilling person, and to expose it when taken, it was said: "We do not know that it has afforded any ground for litigation, when not exaggerated to the point of impeaching character. Here the purpose goes much further. The picture is to remain as evidence of a damning nature." In 1907, the New Jersey court of chancery, in Edison v. Edison Polyform, etc., Co., 73 N. J. Eq. 136, 142, 67 Atl. 392, and the court of errors and appeals in Vanderbilt v. Mitchell, 72 N. J. Eq. 910, 67 Atl. 97, 14 L. R. A. N. S. 304, expressed disapproval of the Roberson case, although in the former, Stevens, V.-C., observed: "There must be limits to the so-called right of privacy. It is certain that a man in public life may not claim the same immunity from publicity that a private citizen may. Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co., supra. And as far as my researches have extended, I do not find that it has yet been decided that injury to property in some form is not an essential element to relief. It may, at times, have been a matter of doubt whether what was called 'property' was really such, and whether the injury thereto, actual or apprehended, was not so 'shadowy' as to be incapable of judicial cognizance, but still the criterion was always injury to property or to property rights." In a recent decision from Rhode Island, after an extended discussion, the court decided to adhere to the conclusion of the majority in the Roberson case, viz., "that the so-called 'right of privacy' has not as yet found an abiding place in our jurisprudence, and, as we view it, the doctrine cannot now be incorporated without doing violence to settled principles of law by which the profession and the public have long been guided." Henry v. Cherry, 30 R. I. 13, 73 Atl. 97, 109, 24 L. R. A. N. S. 991. On the other hand, in a late Missouri case, where plaintiff, an infant five years old, brought by next friend an action against defendants, who were jewelers, to recover damages for the publication by them of his picture, without his consent, for the purpose of advertising their business, the action was sustained on the ground that a person has the exclusive right to his picture as a property right of value, and may sue at law for damages for the invasion of such right. 71. There can be no doubt that slander may be committed by singing a defamatory song. Is it not possible also to commit slander by whistling? Suppose an officer of a credit association having charge of the compilation of a list of traders who were financially worthless should be asked on an unprivileged occasion whether the name of a certain merchant appeared therein and should say nothing but should whistle the tune of "He's got 'em on the list" from Gilbert & Sullivan's "Mikado," to one who was acquainted therewith. It is submitted that this would be slander, particularly if followed by special damage. Would not the same be true of a defamatory statement clicked in the Morse code by one telegrapher to another?

72. "A libel is any publication whether in writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye which exposes

[79] It is a trespass if inanimate objects are thrown upon the land,[80] or if the premises are flooded.[81] It is not essential that the land be inclosed, nor need actual damage be shown.[82] The entry need not be upon the soil itself.[83]

"Every entry upon the land of another, without lawful authority, is a trespass, though it only be trodden, and whether the land be inclosed or not, and no matter whether any damage be done or not. The gist of the action is the wrongful entry; whatever is done after that is but aggravation of damages. If a man's land be not inclosed, the law encircles it with an imaginary inclosure, to pass which is to break and enter his close. The mere act of breaking through this imaginary boundary constitutes a cause of action, as being a violation of the right of property." It is an established maxim that he who owns the soil owns likewise to the heavens and to the center of the earth. Hence placing a shaft from one building to another across a passageway of which plaintiff owns the fee is a trespass, although the shaft passes under a bridge or platform and does not interfere with the use of the passage. A bay-window built in the second story about sixteen feet above the sidewalk and projecting three feet and six inches beyond the building line is a public nuisance. Reimer's Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 373.

Airship or balloon.— Whether it would be trespass to pass over land in an airship or balloon is a question which has been asked several times but never satisfactorily answered. It is conceivable that the problem may possess more than merely academic value. Suppose an anchor works loose unknown to the aeronaut and is dragged through the air a few feet from the ground. It strikes the owner of the property inflicting serious injuries. If the aeronaut was not negligent, it would seem that there could be no recovery, unless on the theory that he was trespassing at the time. On this point of trespass, Lord Ellenborough indulged in a customary doubt. Pickering v. Rudd, 4 Campb. 219, 1 Stark. 56, 16 Rev. Rep. 777, 2 E. C. L. 32. But Justice Blackburn later on (Kenyon v. Hart, 6 B. & S. 249, 252, 11 Jur. N. S. 602, 34 L. J. M. C. 87, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 733, 13 Wkly. Rep. 406, 118 E. C. L. 249) observed: "I understand the good sense of that doubt, though not the legal reason of it." In Wandsworth v. United Tel. Co., 13 Q. B. D. 904, 919, 48 J. P. 676, 53 L. J. Q. B. 444, 51 L. T. J., said: "If the board of works were in the position of simple owners of land, or if land had been vested in them by an ordinary conveyance, I should be ex-

c. To Chattels. Trespass to personalty is complete when there is "an unlawful disturbance by force [84] of another's possession." [85] Possession, actual or constructive, or an immediate right of possession, must be shown by plaintiff. Thus if property is bailed for a definite period the bailor may not maintain an action for a trespass committed during the term.[86] But if the bailor has a right to resume immediate possession he may bring suit. His general property draws to it the possession.[87] Conversely, one who has possession, even though it be wrongful, may not be disturbed unless in the exercise of a superior right. A finder or thief will be protected except as against the owner.[88]

2. Conversion. Any distinct act of dominion wrongfully exerted over the personal property of another in denial of his right or inconsistent with it is a conversion.[89] "The distinction between trespass and conversion is this: that trespass is an unlawful taking — as, for example, the unlawful removal of the property — while conversion is an unlawful taking or keeping in the exercise, legally considered, of the right of ownership." [90] "A conversion may be either 1st, by wrongfully taking a personal chattel; 2d, by some other illegal assumption of ownership, or by illegally using or misusing goods; or 3d, by a wrongful detention." [91] It is not necessary that there should be a manual taking or that it should tremely loth myself to suggest, or to acquiesce in any suggestion, that an owner of the land had not the right to object to anybody putting anything over his land at any height in the sky." Whether shooting across another's land would be a trespass was doubted by Hawkins, J., in Clifton v. Bury, 4 T. L. R. 8, but there seems no reason why it should not be. In Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns (N. Y.) 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234, defendant in a balloon descended upon plaintiff's property. A crowd seeing him in peril entered the premises breaking plaintiff's fences and beating down his vegetables and flowers. Defendant was held liable for the acts of the crowd on the theory that he had put himself in such a situation as to invite assistance. Whether he would have been guilty of trespass had he merely sailed through the air over plaintiff's land is not determined. As aerial navigation appears to be within the limits of probability it is not unlikely that the point may one day be presented squarely to the court.

84. Trespass involves the idea of force. It means "a hurtful use of violence which is wrongful. It excludes all varieties of wrongs in which force can neither be perceived nor implied, such as negligence." Castille v. Caffery Cent. Refinery, etc., Co., 48 La. Ann. 322, 325, 19 So. 332; Gossin v. Williams, 36 La. Ann. 186. And see Trespass.

Manual interference not essential.— But by this is not meant that there need be a manual interference. Trespass lies against one who undertakes to exclude the owner from the possession with which he is vested, as in the case where defendant, a constable, levied an execution on chattels, took an inventory, and obtained security for their forthcoming, saying that if it was not given he would remove the property. It is said by a distinguished author: "There are two principal differences between the actions of trespass and trover for personalty appropriated by defendant; the first of which is, that in trespass there is always either an original wrongful taking, or a taking made wrongful ab initio by subsequent misconduct, while in trover, the original taking is supposed or assumed to be lawful, and often the only wrongs consist in a refusal to surrender a possession which was originally rightful, but the right to which has terminated. The second is, that trespass lies for any wrongful force, but the wrongful force is no conversion where it is employed in recognition of the owner's right, and with no purpose to deprive him of his right, temporarily or permanently." 2 Cooley Torts (3d ed.) 847.

be shown that defendant applied the chattel to his own use. "The test is, Does he exercise a dominion over it in exclusion or in defiance of the plaintiff's rights?"[92] Mere nonfeasance does not constitute conversion. Conversion like trespass requires a positive tortious act. "Nonfeasance, or neglect of legal duty, mere failure to perform an act made obligatory by contract, or by which property is lost to the owner, will not support the action."[93] In cases of conversion arising out of circumstances not constituting merely a wrongful detention, it is generally held that a demand by the true owner is not essential to the maintenance of an action.[94] According to the prevailing view, the purchase of property from one who has no power to dispose of it constitutes a conversion, and no demand for its return is necessary.[95] Conversion like trespass is an injury to the present right of possession.[96] Thus a finder [97] or a thief [98] may recover from all but the real owner.

By a wrongful detention. . . . In the three first named classes, there is no necessity for a demand and refusal, as the evidence arising from the acts of the defendant, is sufficient to prove the conversion. In the latter class alone, is such evidence to be required, as the mere detention of a chattel furnishes no evidence of a disposition to convert it to the holder's use, or to divest the true owner of his property." It is here held that "the rule is a reasonable and just one, that an innocent purchaser of personal property from a wrong-doer shall first be informed of the defect in his title, and have an opportunity to deliver the property to the true owner, before he shall be made liable as a tort feasor for a wrongful conversion." Independent act of dominion by purchaser. — But if the purchaser, although innocent, should exercise an independent act of dominion over the property, as if he sells (Pease v. Smith, 61 N. 4. Fraud. "Fraud consists in deception practiced in order to induce another to part with property or to surrender some legal right, and which accomplishes the end designed." [1] The impolicy of attempting a strict definition of fraud is manifest. It may assume so many varieties of form that, subject to certain essential requirements, it is best to allow the greatest freedom to the courts in dealing with each situation as it may arise.[2]

5. Slander of Title. This tort consists in the malicious publication of false statements concerning the title or property of the owner of land or goods, or of their quality, resulting proximately in damage.[3] The term "slander of title," although well established, is misleading. First, the tort is not restricted to oral defamation. "The fact that the publication is written or printed, and not oral, makes no difference in the ground of the action and goes only to the question of dissemination and consequent damage." [4] Second, the statement need not necessarily, although it usually does, relate to title. Hence it is actionable to say that plaintiff's horse was twenty-one years old when he was not more than twelve,[5] or that it was diseased; [6] or that the ore of a mine would suddenly run out.[7] In order to establish a cause of action, malice and special damage must be shown.[8]

9. It has been deemed advisable to include under the head of interference with contractual rights, many cases which are usually grouped under conspiracy, boycott, unfair competition, and kindred titles. The reason is that they are, after all, only illustrations of a few underlying principles. The question presented in every instance is, how far the law will afford redress against interference with (1) contracts not in existence and (2) existing contracts. When analyzed, the so-called unfair competition and boycott cases will be seen to fall under one or both of these heads. If goods are sold in packages resembling those in which an established product is put up, or if a trade name is adopted so similar as to be calculated to deceive, it is evident that this falls under the first head. The label or name is merely a means hy which the wrong-doer has succeeded in inducing customers not to enter into contractual relations with his competitor. If a labor union threatens to strike unless a non-union employee is discharged, it would appear that this is only a method of procuring the breach of an existing contract. To treat the first under unfair competition and the second under strikes, boycotts, or labor unions seems tantamount to ignoring a very close kinship.

Rule stated.— "I regard it as settled in this Commonwealth . . . that an action will lie for depriving a man of custom, that is, of possible contracts, as well when the result is effected by persuasion as when it is accomplished by fraud or force, if the harm is inflicted from malevolence and without some justifiable cause, such as competition in trade." May v. Wood, 172 Mass. 11, 14, 51 N. E. 191, per Holmes, J. "The next point is, whether the distinction taken for the defendants between the claim for inducing persons to break contracts already entered into with the plaintiff and that for inducing persons not to enter into contracts with the plaintiff can be sustained, and whether the latter claim is maintainable in law. I do not think that distinction can prevail. There was the same wrongful intent in both cases, wrongful because malicious. There was the same kind of injury to the plaintiff. It seems rather a fine distinction to say that, where a defendant maliciously induces a person not to carry out a contract already made with the plaintiff and so injures the plaintiff, it is actionable, but where he injures the plaintiff by maliciously preventing a person from entering into a contract with the plaintiff, which he would otherwise have entered into, it is not actionable." "As a part of the right of acquiring property there resides in every man the right of making contracts for the purchase and sale of property, and contracts for personal services, which amount to the purchase and sale of labor. It makes little difference whether the right that underlies contracts of the latter sort is called a personal right or a property right. It seems to us impossible to draw a distinction between a right of property and a right of acquiring property that will make a disturbance of the latter right any less actionable than a disturbance of the former. In a civilized community, which recognizes the right of private property among its institutions, the notion is intolerable that a man should be protected by the law in the enjoyment of property once it is acquired, but left unprotected by the law in his effort to acquire it. The cup of Tantalus would be a fitting symbol for such a mockery. Our constitution recognizes no such notion." Brennan v. United Hatters of North America Local No. 17, 73 N. J. L. 729, 742, 65 Atl. 165, 9 L. R. A. N. S. 254, per Pitney, J. "The mere procurement of a breach of contractual rights is not necessarily actionable. To constitute a cause of action the procurement must be without sufficient justification. A person who, without any motive of injuring a third person or profiting himself at the expense of a third person, honestly and bona fide in the interests of a person seeking advice advises him to break a contract with such third person, has sufficient justification." (II) Competition. If the interference is prompted merely by a desire to secure personal benefits in the course of business competition, and no unlawful means are resorted to, there can be no liability.[11] It has been said that "one may

And where a complaint alleged that defendant railroad company prevented plaintiff from being employed by a certain other railroad company by stating to such company that plaintiff was a labor agitator and connected with the order of railroad telegraphers of North America, and it further alleged in substance that plaintiff was a member of such order, and that he assisted in its organization, it was held that the complaint did not show any such malicious interference with plaintiff's business as to create a common-law liability. Morgan v. Andrews, 107 Mich. 33, 64 N. W. 869. In a Tennessee case, however, where defendant, a railroad company, published a notice that it would discharge employees who traded with plaintiff, a merchant, it was held that no action would lie by the merchant, even though the notice was published through malicious motives. Defendant, it was said, might dismiss its employees at will, for good cause, for no cause, or even for a cause morally wrong, and the exercise of this right could not be made unlawful because of the motives which prompted it. Maliciously establishing rival business to ruin plaintiff.— In Tuttle v. Buck, 107 Minn. 145, 119 N. W. 946, 131 Am. St. Rep. 446, 22 L. R. A. N. S. 599, it was held that a complaint which stated in substance that defendant, a banker and a man of wealth and in-without liability induce the customers of another to withdraw their custom from him, in the race of competition, in order that the former may himself get the custom, there being no contract; and it is no matter that such person is injured, and it is no matter that the other party was moved by express intent to injure him, motive being immaterial where the act is not unlawful." [12] This presupposes, however, that unlawful means are not employed, for if such be the case, the liability of defendant is unquestionable.[13]

fluence in the community, maliciously established a barber shop, employed a barber to carry on the business, and used his personal influence to attract customers from plaintiff's barber shop, not for the purpose of serving any legitimate purpose of his own, but for the sole purpose of maliciously injuring plaintiff, whereby plaintiff's business was ruined, stated a cause of action.

The officers and members of an association of master plumbers are not liable to suit by others engaged in the plumbing business because the association notified dealers in plumbing supplies that the patronage of members of the association would be withdrawn from them if they furnished supplies to others than master plumbers. Here it was said: "Was the desire to free themselves from competition a sufficient excuse in legal contemplation for the sending of the notices? We think the question must receive an affirmative answer. Competition, it has been said, is the life of trade. Every act done by a trader for the purpose of diverting trade from a rival and attracting it to himself is an act intentionally done and, in so far as it is successful, to the injury of the rival in his business, since to that extent it lessens his gains and profits. To hold such an act wrongful and illegal would be to stifle competition. Trade should be free and unrestricted; and hence every trader is left to conduct his business in his own way, and cannot be held accountable to a rival who suffers a loss of profits by anything he may do, so long as the methods he employs are not of the class of which fraud, misrepresentation, intimidation, coercion, obstruction or molestation of the rival or his servants or workmen, and the procurement of violation of contractural relations, are instances." A petition alleging that defendants offered to sell to the retail trade certain goods owned by them, and manufactured by plaintiff at prices lower than those at which plaintiff sold the same style and brand of goods to jobbers, with the intent and purpose of injuring plaintiff's business and not for any legitimate trade purpose is insufficient to state a cause of action. The right to offer property for sale and fix its price is incident to ownership, nor does the motive with which the act is done render it unlawful. Intimidation.— "This principle is that a combination of employers, or a combination of employes, the object of which is to interfere with the freedom of the employer to employ, or of the employe to be employed (in either of which cases there is an interference with the enjoyment of 'probable expectancy,' which the law recognizes as something in the nature of property), by means of such molestation or personal annoyance as would be liable to coerce the person upon whom it was inflicted, assuming that he is reasonably courageous and not unreasonably sensitive, to refrain from employing or being employed, is illegal and founds an action for damages on the part of any person knowingly injured in respect of his 'probable expectancy' by such interference, and also, when the other necessary conditions exist, affords the basis of an injunction from a court of equity." Jersey City Printing Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759, 768, 53 Atl. 230, per Stevenson, V. C. Defendant, a voluntary association, organized a subsidiary association known as the "Peddlers' Association" and contributed funds thereto for the purpose of "competing with the peddlers," especially those selling buggies and wagons. The association itself had no property except the fund so contributed, and the majority of its members had no buggies or wagons for sale. Defendant, through its subsidiary organization, entered upon a systematic course of interference with complainant's business of selling buggies and wagons by employing men, usually two, to follow each agent of complainant. They stopped at the same hotels and stables, started out when he started, followed him throughout the day to every prospective customer and interfered with the conversation. They took no vehicles with them and generally offered none in competition, their sole purpose appearing to be to interfere with and prevent sales by complainant's agents by means of interruptions and false statements respecting complainant and its goods and by intimidating and discouraging its agents. It was held that such action was unwarranted upon any ground or claim of competition and was an unlawful attempt to wantonly destroy complainant's annoying his employees while selling and distributing goods to his customers;[19] causing circulation of false and injurious reports concerning his business;[20] procuring his arrest and prosecution on false charges in connection with his business;[21] or claiming a lien, knowing it to be false, and thereby preventing delivery of goods.[22]

b. Existing Rights — (I) CONTRACTS OF EMPLOYMENT — (A) Persuasion. It is well established that it is an actionable wrong to procure the breach of an existing contract of employment, although the means used do not exceed mere persuasion, provided this is done maliciously.[23] By the weight of authority, the doctrine is not restricted to cases where the relation of master and servant exists. It is sufficient that the contract be one for personal services.[24] This, however, is not universally conceded.[25]

Evidence insufficient.— In an action for damages brought by an attorney charging that defendant maliciously and by false representations persuaded plaintiff's client to violate his contract with him, and to compromise a lawsuit out of court, the client testified that, when he made the compromise, he did not know that the case had been entered and one of his reasons for making it was because he had not heard from plaintiff; that defendant did not know of his contract with plaintiff, and did not mention plaintiff's name. The employees selected a physician and notified the employer to pay their hospital dues to him. The physician issued to the employees certificates entitling them to medical treatment at his hospital. The employer refused to pay the dues to the physician and notified the employees that they would be paid to a hospital and any employee not consenting to such payment would be discharged. It was held that the physician had no cause of action against the employer on the ground that he caused his employees to break their contracts, although his acts were malicious. Banks v. Eastern R., etc., Co., 46 Wash. 610, 90 Pac. 1048, 11 L. R. A. N. S. 485. "We think that the important question in an action of this kind is as to the nature of the defendant's act and the means adopted by him to accomplish his purpose. Merely to induce another to leave an employment or to discharge an employee, by persuasion or argument, however whimsical, unreasonable

(B) Unlawful Means. There can be no doubt that a cause of action exists where unlawful means such as fraud, intimidation, or defamation have been used.[26]

(C) Employment at Will. That the employment should be for a fixed and unexpired period is not required. Contracts terminable at the will of either party are within the rule where the employment would have continued but for the interference.[27]

(II) CONTRACTS NOT OF EMPLOYMENT — (A) Persuasion. It is a disputed point whether, when the rendering of services is not involved, the case stands upon a different footing. On one hand it is said that "an action cannot, in general, be maintained for inducing a third person to break his contract with the plaintiff; the consequence, after all, being only a broken contract, for which the party to the contract may have his remedy by suing upon it." [28] But the modern or absurd, is not in and of itself unlawful, and we do not decide that such interference may become unlawful by reason of the defendant's malicious motives, but simply that to intimidate an employer, by threats, if the threats are of such a character as to produce this result, and thereby cause him to discharge an employee whom he desired to retain, and would have retained, except for such unlawful threats, is an actionable wrong." Rule applied.—A railroad which by bribing the officials of a rival company obtains control of the latter's stock, causes the calling in of engineering parties so as to stop construction work, spreads abroad notices which break down the credit of the contractor and result in the seizure of his tools, and by such means prevents the completion of the road in time to earn a land grant, and then by false representations to the legislature secures a forfeiture of the lands and a subsequent grant to itself, is liable to such contractor for the damage caused by these wrongful acts. "A distinction has been sought to be made between cases where there was an unexpired time contract, and cases where the services were by the day or by piece; but I do not think that such distinction rests upon any sound reason; because, in cases of piece work or day work, there would remain for the court or the jury to decide whether, in point of fact, the service would have been continued even though it was not provided for by contract, and even though the employer had the right to dismiss the employe and the employe had the right to quit the service of his employer at any time when he saw fit. . . . In such a case the injury to the property and business of the employer would not consist so much in breaking the contract which existed, as in the loss of profits derived from the work of the laborer if he continued in the employment, and the probability or certainty of such loss would be, in each case, a question of fact." tendency is strongly toward the view that contract rights are property, that, as such, they are entitled to protection, and that malicious interference therewith gives a cause of action, although the methods employed are not inherently unlawful.[29] It has been said "that where a party has entered into a contract with another to do or not to do a particular act or acts, he has as clear a right to its performance as he has to his property, either real or personal, and that knowingly to induce the other party to violate it is as distinct a wrong as it is to injure or destroy his property. It is not a sufficient answer to say that he has a remedy against the party who has broken the contract."[30] "There is no distinction

Inducing breach of contract of sale.—Defendant, by offering a higher price and thereby inducing a third party to sell to him property which he had previously contracted to sell to plaintiff, incurred no liability in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation. "If A. has agreed to sell property to B., C. may at any time before the title has passed induce A. not to let B. have the property, and to sell it to himself, provided he be guilty of no fraud or misrepresentation, without incurring any liability to B.; A. alone, in such case, must respond to B. for the breach of his contract, and B. has no claim upon or relations with C. While, by the moral law, C. is under obligation to abstain from any interference with the contract between A. and B., yet it is one of those imperfect obligations which the law, as administered in our courts, does not undertake to enforce. But if C. makes use of any fraudulent misrepresentations, as to B., to induce A. to violate his contract with him, then there is a fraud, accompanied with damages, which gives B. a cause of action against C.; as if C. fraudulently represents to A. that B. had failed or absconded, or had declared his intentions not to sell to B., and thus induces A. to sell to another." (c) Contracts Legally Unenforceable. Whether the contract must have been enforceable at law in order that a recovery may be allowed for procuring its breach is in dispute. Some cases hold the affirmative,[40] but it seems the better view that a cause of action will exist, although the contract may not be binding in law where it would have been performed by the third party, had not defendant interfered.[41]

Defendant having also, no fraudulent means being employed, purchased from one E, a retailer, who did not know that defendant was black listed, it was held that defendant was not liable, there being no contract shown between E and plaintiff, or, conceding a contract, no fraud was present. In another case plaintiff, a real estate broker, procured C to purchase certain real estate, and C contracted with the owner thereof, whereby money deposited by him should be forfeited if C should not close the trade within thirty days. M, claiming to be interested as a broker in the sale, demanded of plaintiff a portion of the commission, and on this being denied, thereafter, with C, induced the owner of the land to refuse to carry out the contract. After the thirty days, the owner conveyed the land to M and the money deposited by C was accepted by the owner as part of the consideration. Thereafter M conveyed to C and plaintiff sued M and C on the ground that they had conspired to induce the owner of the property to break his contract, whereby plaintiff lost his commission, and that the sale and conveyance to C was in reality the same transaction which had been originally procured by the efforts of plaintiff. It was held that, as C was not bound by his contract to consummate the purchase negotiated, he had a right to withdraw and forfeit his deposit, and plaintiff had no cause of action against M and C for the alleged tort. A. 648, holding that where defendant corporation induced another to break a contract to furnish certain machines, plaintiff was entitled to recover from defendant damages sustained thereby, without proof that defendant was actuated by actual malice or ill-will.

Malice defined.— Malice, in the law, is the intentional doing of a wrongful act without justification or excuse, and a wrongful act is any act which in the ordinary course will infringe on the rights of another, to his damage, except it be done in the exercise of an equal or superior right. Brennan v. United Hatters of North America, Local No. 17, 73 N. J. L. 729, 65 Atl. 165, 9 L. R. A. N. S. 254. "At common law the remedies for breach of contract were confined to the contracting parties, and limited to direct damage and consequential damages proximately resulting from the act of him who is sued. This general rule admitted of one exception, and that was the right of action against a stranger for wrongfully enticing away a servant in violation of his contract of service with his master. The exception is said to have been based on the ancient statute of laborers. The early English cases limited the action to the enticement of menial servants, but the later cases, beginning with Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216, 17 Jur. 827, 22 L. J. Q. B. 463, 1 Wkly. Rep. 432, 75 E. C. L. 216, have extended the doctrine beyond menial servants; and by the modern interpretation of this doctrine by the English courts the rule is extended to a malicious interference with any contract. . . . The term 'malicious,' used in this connection, is to be given a liberal meaning. The act is malicious when the thing done is with the knowledge of the plaintiff's rights, and with the intent to interfere therewith. It is a wanton interference with another's contractual rights. Ineffective persuasion to induce another to violate his contract would not, of itself, be actionable, but if the persuasion be used for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff, or benefiting the defendant at the expense of the plaintiff, with a knowledge of the subsistence of the contract, it becomes a malicious act, and if injury ensues from it a cause of action accrues to the injured party." Employing Printers' Club v. Doctor Blosser Co., 122 Ga. 509, 516, 50 S. E. 353, 106 Am. St. Rep. 137, 69 L. R. A. 90, per Evans, J. "Malice, as here used, does not merely mean intent to harm, but means an intent to do a wrongful harm and injury. An intent to do a wrongful harm and injury is unlawful, and if a wrongful act is done to the detriment of the right of another it is malicious." O'Brien v. People, 216 Ill. 354, 373, 75 N. E. 108, 108 Am. St. Rep. 219 [affirming 114 Ill. App. 40], per Wilkin, J.: "It is not necessary that such interference should have been malicious in its character. If it be wrongful, it is equally to be condemned, and just as much in violation of legal right." Accordingly it was held that where a non-union employee is discharged because of a threat by a labor organization that in case he is longer retained it will notify all labor organizations of the city that the business house of the employers is a non-union one and thus subject them to loss, such interference is wrongful and an action will lie. Lucke v. Clothing Cutters', etc., Assembly No. 7,507, K. L., 77 Md. 396, 405, 26 Atl. 505, 39 Am. St. Rep. 421, 19 L. R. A. 408.

Malicious interference not established see McPherson v. Kenney, 198 Mass. 350, 84 N. E. 463, contract of copartnership. Where a labor union procures the discharge of non-union employees, by threatening a strike, it is not liable where its action is based upon a proper motive such as a purpose to secure only the employment of efficient workmen, or to secure the exclusive employment of its members provided that no unlawful means are employed. Mere knowledge of prior contract.— The mere fact that a purchaser of bonds from a committee authorized to sell at the time of the purchase had knowledge that the committee had previously contracted to sell them to another does not render him liable to such other in damages because of the sellers' breach of contract. Sweeney v. Smith, 171 Fed. 645, 96 C. C. A. 91 [affirming 167 Fed. 385].

Purchase to prevent performance of contract.— Where defendant sold the standing timber on his land, and plaintiff contracted with the purchasers to saw the same into lumber, and after plaintiff had taken his mill to the land and begun sawing, defendant repurchased the interest of one of the purchasers in the timber, and took an assignment thereof, with intent to prevent plaintiff sawing the timber, and forbade plaintiff sawing it, and obtained an injunc-

E. Interference With Domestic Relations — 1. Injuries to the Husband. As the husband is entitled both to the services and to the companionship or consortium of the wife, his unlawful deprivation of these rights gives rise to a cause of action.[45] Hence the husband may sue if she be abducted or enticed from him,[46] if her affections be alienated,[47] for criminal conversation with her,[48] or for tion restraining the other purchaser and his employees from sawing it, it was held, in an action for damages, that the contract with plaintiff was not a covenant running with title to the timber, and defendant had a legal right to forbid the sawing thereof; and, having such right, his intent was immaterial. Rule applied.—A railroad foreman who injures the business of plaintiff by refusing to employ men who deal with him and by discharging employees who do, is liable to plaintiff. "The circumstance that the defendant as the foreman of the company had the power to discharge those designed to be influenced by his communications or statements with respect to the plaintiff, and that defendant had the selection of the labor of the company, tended to make more effective his efforts to injure plaintiff in his business. We recognize the principle urged by the defence, that the employer has the right to employ those he chooses, and the same liberty is allowed as to their discharge. The authority cited by defendant is entitled to full recognition, that one may do business with those he chooses to deal with, and decline, if he pleases, the business of others. . . . It is not the exercise of defendant's choice in selecting or discharging laborers for the company that makes him liable, but he is responsible, because, in exercising that right, he indulges in language, uses threats, and pursues a line of conduct all directed at the plaintiff, and of a character to injure him in his lawful business." Graham v. St. Charles St. R. Co., 47 La. Ann. 1656, 1659, 18 So. 707, 49 Am. St. Rep. 436, per Miller, J. Where defendant had threatened that it would discharge from and refuse employment to men who patronized plaintiff, the proprietor of a boarding-house and saloon, did discharge a number of men on that account and instructed its foreman to refuse employment to the patrons of plaintiff, it was held that defendant was not exercising a legal right. "It had the same right," said the court, "to discharge its servants as all masters have under similar conditions. This right was not to dismiss the servants arbitrarily or capriciously, but for reasonable causes only." But it was otherwise with regard to the notice to future employees for defendant "had the right to determine for itself whom it would thereafter employ and the reasons upon which it might act concerned no one but itself." Abandonment not essential.—Abandonment by the wife is not necessary in order to give a cause of action for alienation of affections. Remaining with the husband "would rather add the provocation of insult to the keenness of suffering. It would continue before him a present, living, irritating, aggravating if not consuming source of grief, which even her absence might in a measure relieve." Heermance v. James, 47 Barb. (N. physical injuries to her which prevent her from fulfilling her marital obligations to him.[49]

2. INJURIES TO THE WIFE. Whatever may have been the rule at common law, the wife may now, by the prevailing view, maintain an action for the alienation of the husband's affections.[50] A recovery for criminal conversation, however, has been denied, where alienation of the husband's affections has not been proven,[51] although in some states it is allowed by statute.[52]

3. INJURIES TO THE PARENT. The parent who at the time is entitled to the services of the child may maintain an action for their loss if caused by the seduction, enticing away or harboring, assault, negligence, or other wrong of a third person.[53] Primarily this right belongs to the father.[54] But if the father be dead, or if for other reasons the mother is entitled to the earnings and services of the child, the action may be brought by her.[55] Such an action may also be main-

Rule stated.— "So far forth as the husband is concerned, from time immemorial the law has regarded his right to the conjugal affection and society of his wife as a valuable property, and has compelled the man who has injured it to make compensation. Whatever inequalities of right as to property may result from the marriage contract, husband and wife are equal in rights in one respect, namely, each owes to the other the fullest possible measure of conjugal affection and society; the husband to the wife all that the wife owes to him. Upon principle this right in the wife is equally valuable to her, as property, as is that of the husband to him. Her right being the same as his in kind, degree and value, there would seem to be no valid reason why the law should deny to her the redress which it affords to him. But from time to time courts, not denying the right of the wife in this regard, not denying that it could be injured, have nevertheless declared that the law neither would nor could devise and enforce any form of action by which she might obtain damages. In 3 Blackstone Commentaries 143, the reason of such denial is thus stated: 'The inferior hath no kind of property in the company, care or assistance of the superior, as the superior is held to have in those of the inferior; therefore the inferior can suffer no loss or injury.' Inasmuch as by universal consent it is of the essence of every marriage contract that the parties thereto shall, in regard to this particular matter of conjugal society and affection, stand upon an equality, we are unable to find any support for the denial in this reason, and the right, the injury, and the consequent damage, being admitted, then comes into operation another rule, namely, that the law will permit no one to obtain redress for wrong except by its instrumentality, and it will furnish a mode for obtaining adequate redress for every wrong. This rule, lying at the foundation of all law is more potent than, and takes precedence of, the reason that the wife is in this regard without the pale of the law because of her inferiority." 51. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 21 Cyc. 1627. The grounds on which the husband was permitted to recover under like circumstances are "the disgrace which attached to the plaintiff as the husband of the unfaithful wife,— and no such disgrace has ever rested upon the wife, if there was one, of the guilty defendant,— and, of more importance, the danger that a wife's infidelity might not only impose on her husband the support of children not his own, but, still worse, cast discredit upon the legitimacy of those really begotten by him. . . . From this statement as to the grounds or elements constituting this action, it will be seen that the principal ones cannot possibly exist or be involved in a similar action brought by a wife." tained in a proper case by one who is not the parent, but who stands in loco parentis to the child.[56]

F. Obstruction of Legal Remedies. One who impedes or obstructs another's remedy for the enforcement of a fixed and ascertained right against a third party is responsible for the injury thus occasioned. Thus where a judgment has been recovered, one who fraudulently prevents its collection by removing or assisting in the removal of the debtor or his property beyond the jurisdiction of the court is liable to the judgment creditor.[57] But there is no cause of action where no existing right has been violated, as where defendant fraudulently purchases property belonging to the plaintiff's debtor and aids him to abscond in order to prevent plaintiff from enforcing payment of his debt; since here plaintiff has no lien upon the debtor's property by attachment or otherwise. "The most that can be said is, that he intended to attach the property and the wrongful act of the defendant has prevented him from executing this intention." [58] Nor will an action lie in favor of a party against whom judgment is rendered in a case against one called as a witness on the trial who gave false testimony. Such an action "cannot be maintained, without virtually putting it in the power of every suitor to re-examine every suit, in which he is cast, and to try the witnesses for perjury by instituting against them a civil suit. This course of things would be as interminable as it is in its nature intolerable." [59] The rule applies as well to Hoefler v. Hoefler, 12 N. Y. App. Div. 84, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 1035, 4 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 1.

Interference with lien other than by judgment.— The rule applies to fraudulent interference with liens however created. Thus where a person, with the connivance of the owner, converts to his own use farm products subject to an agricultural lien, and places them beyond the reach of the lienee under the statutory proceedings, the latter may, in an action similar to case at common law, recover his damages. Michalson v. All, 43 S. C. 459, 21 S. E. 323, 49 Am. St. Rep. 857.

Damage necessary.—A petition which shows that a fraudulent conspiracy between plaintiff's debtor and defendant to withdraw the debtor's property from the claims of creditors failed, and that all the debtor's property was subjected to plaintiff's execution, and which seeks to recover the cost of subjecting the property to his execution, does not state a cause of action. Rule applied.— Thus where a creditor had placed a note in the hands of an officer for collection, and another, by persuasion, induced the officer not to collect and the debtor not to pay the debt, it was held that the creditor had no ground for an action on the case against such other. Platt v. Potts, 35 N. C. 455. And where plaintiffs sued defendant in trespass on the case, alleging that one F was indebted to them; that F had obtained a judgment against defendant for a larger sum than his indebtedness to them; that F, who was insolvent, had agreed with them that they should be paid out of his judgment against defendant, who, having notice thereof, but intending to cheat and wrong plaintiffs, settled with F himself said judgment, and took his receipt for the same, it was held that plaintiffs were not entitled to recover. Carleton v. Neal, 19 Ark. 292. But in North Carolina, under the statutes, a person who assists in removing a debtor out of the county of his residence, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, is liable to an action on the case to the creditors, which will not be barred by a bar of the original action against the debtor; and such liability will accrue, although the person aiding does not convey the debtor and his goods entirely out of the county. The measure of damages is the original debt, and it is not necessary for plaintiff to show that defendant knew of any particular debt. Godsey v. Bason, 30 N. C. 260. But merely advising a debtor to leave the county, no matter with what intent, will not amount to giving aid or assistance in removing within the meaning of the statute making any person liable who "shall remove, or shall aid, or assist in removing, any debtor out of the county in which he shall have resided for six months, with an intent," etc. Wiley v. McRee, 47 N. the adverse party who has suborned a witness to testify falsely,[60] and to criminal as well as civil proceedings.[61] But where the testimony of the perjurer is defamatory in character, and neither the person defamed nor the suborner was a party to the action, a right of recovery has been recognized.[62]

G. Perversion of Legal Remedies[63]— 1. Malicious Prosecution. The tort of malicious prosecution consists in the institution of a judicial proceeding from wrongful or improper motives and without probable cause.[64] In order to entitle plaintiff to recover, "three things must concur, viz., 1. The motive of the party instituting or prosecuting the suit or proceeding, must have been malicious; 2, the suit or proceeding complained of must have been instituted without probable cause; and 3, the suit or proceeding must have terminated in the plaintiff's favor."[65] All the authorities concur in permitting an action of malicious prosecution based upon: (1) A previous criminal prosecution; and (2) a civil action, where there has been an interference with the person or property of the present plaintiff.[66] But whether the previous institution of a civil action unattended by any interference with person or property gives a cause of action is disputed. Authorities are about equally divided. Cases answering the question in the negative proceed on the theory that the costs awarded to the successful party are to be regarded as sufficient compensation.[67] On the other hand, attention is Malicious prosecution and false imprisonment distinguished.—The distinction is found in the legality of the imprisonment itself. False imprisonment lies for an illegal arrest and detention. But if the imprisonment is under lawful process, although wrongfully obtained, the tort is malicious prosecution. "The gravamen of the offence of false imprisonment, is the unlawful detention of another, without his consent, and malice is not an essential element thereof; while in an action for malicious prosecution, the essential elements are malice and want of probable cause in the proceeding complained of." called to the fact that taxable costs are confined within very narrow limits, "and that they fall far short of affording compensation for his necessary expenses to a defendant upon whom has been forced a groundless suit by a litigious and malicious adversary, and they furnish no redress for the injury of which he has been made the victim." [68]

2. Malicious Abuse of Process. "If process, either civil or criminal, is willfully made use of for a purpose not justified by the law, this is abuse for which an action will lie." [69] "It is well to observe the difference between a malicious use and a malicious abuse of process. The former exists when legal process, civil or criminal, is used out of malice and without just cause, but only its regular execution is contemplated. There is a malicious abuse of process where a party, under process legally and properly issued, employs it wrongfully and unlawfully, and not for the purpose it is intended by law to effect." [70] The authorities upon the question of what in law constitutes a cause of action for abuse of process are in a state of some confusion and frequently this action seems to have been confounded with actions for malicious prosecution, although they are essentially different. The test is whether the process has been used to accomplish some unlawful end or to compel defendant to do some collateral thing which he could not legally be compelled to do.[71] Thus in what is probably the leading case, a captain of a vessel was arrested at a time when he could not procure bail and kept until he surrendered the ship's register.[72] Unlike actions for malicious prosecution, it need not be shown that the previous suit or proceeding has terminated.[73]

3. Unauthorized Suit in Another's Name. It is an actionable wrong to bring suit in another's name without authority, whereby injury is sustained. Neither malice nor want of probable cause are essential elements of the cause of action.[74]

74. "In a suit for malicious prosecution, the gist of the action is malice; but there must also exist the want of probable cause. And without the proof of both facts, the action cannot be maintained, though the existence of malice may often be inferred from the want of probable cause. But in an action on the case for damages for prosecuting a suit against the plaintiff without authority, in the name of a third person, the gist of the action is not a want of probable cause; for there may be a good cause of action; but for the improper liberty of using the name of another person in prosecuting a suit, by which the defendant in the action is injured. Nor is the proof of malice essential to the maintenance of such action. If the party supposes he has authority to commence a suit, when in fact he has none, and the nominal plaintiff does not adopt it, the action fails for want of such authority. In such case, though the party supposed he had authority, and acted upon that supposition, without malice, still if the defendant suffers injury by reason of the prosecution of the unauthorized suit against him, he may maintain an action for the actual damages sustained by him, in the loss of time, and for money paid to procure the discontinuance of the suit, but nothing more. Where, however, in addition to a want of authority, the suit commenced was altogether groundless, and was prosecuted with malicious motives — which may be inferred from there existing no right of action, as well as proved in other ways — then, in addition to the actual loss of time and money, the party may recover damages for the injury inflicted on his feelings and reputation." 4. Maintenance and Champerty. "Maintenance [is] an officious intermeddling in a suit that no way belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it," [75] and an action may be maintained at common law to recover damages therefor.[76] Champerty "is a species of maintenance . . . being a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant campum partire, to divide the land or other matter sued for between them, if they prevail at law; whereupon the champerter is to carry on the party's suit at his own expense."[77] In New York and other jurisdictions the common-law doctrine in relation to maintenance and champerty has been greatly relaxed and limited.[78]

H. Negligence. "'Negligence' consists in the failure to exercise that degree of care, under given circumstances, which a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances." [79] Strictly speaking it is omission, not commission, and involves a violated duty owing by defendant to plaintiff from which damage has resulted.[80]

I. Nuisance. This tort consists in wrongfully disturbing one in the reasonably comfortable use and enjoyment of his property [81] or in the enjoyment and

S. 1229, per Prentice, J., where it was added: "It is not what one does, considered of itself and apart from all other considerations, which is to be judged in determining whether there has been an exercise of ordinary care. It is to what he does as related to the circumstances under which he acts that the test is to be applied. The circumstances which thus enter into the problem presented in any given case are necessarily those which are known to the actor, either actually or impliedly. Otherwise the rule would be shorn of all its fairness. Men cannot be expected to govern their actions by what to them lies in the realm of the unknown. Their actions cannot be compared to that of others — to that of the ordinarily prudent man — in respect to the degree of prudence exhibited therein, except upon the common basis of a common knowledge as to the surrounding and attending circumstances, actual or constructive. In this way only can the circumstances be made similar, and the specific man be brought under the same circumstances and conditions as the typical ordinarily prudent one who supplies the standard of comparison. In determining the boundaries of the realm of the unknown, however, negligent ignorance is regarded as the equivalent of knowledge, and what one in the exercise of ordinary care would have discovered, is to be imputed to him as known."

Nuisance an injury to the land.— Nuisance is an injury to the land and not to the per-exercise of a common right.[82] Where the injury is to a public right, plaintiff in order to recover must show that he has suffered special injury differing in kind and not merely in degree from that suffered by the community at large.[83]

J. Conspiracy. Conspiracy consists in a combination of two or more persons [84] to effect an illegal purpose,[85] or to effect a legal purpose by unlawful means,[86] followed by acts pursuant thereto which of themselves give a right of action. The crime conspiracy is of an essentially different nature from the tort. The unlawful combination is the gist of the criminal offense. Civil actions, however, are based upon the wrongful acts followed by damage, and proof of conspiracy is important only in so far as plaintiff may be entitled: (1) To hold responsible others than the active doers of the injury; and (2) to obtain punitive damages on the theory that the acts were deliberate and intentional. It has been well stated that "an action will not lie for the greatest conspiracy imaginable, if nothing be put in execution; but if the party be damaged, the action will lie." [87]

Contra, in cases of private nuisance.— But this principle "has never been extended to cases where the alleged wrong is done to private property, or the health of individuals is injured, or their peace and comfort in their dwellings is impaired by the carrying on of offensive trades and occupations which create noisome smells or disturbing noises, or cause other annoyances and injuries to persons and property in the vicinity, however numerous or extensive may be the instances of discomfort, inconvenience and injury to persons and property thereby occasioned." VII. REDRESS.

A. Extrajudicial — 1. RECAPTION. Where personal property has wrongfully been taken, he who is entitled to its immediate possession may, subject to certain limitations, employ the necessary degree of force to regain it.[88] The exact limits, however, within which a right of recaption may be exercised are by no means settled. The circumstances of each case must figure largely in determining the question.[89] It has been held that the original taking must have been unlawful,[90] for while the power to retake is incident to the right to defend, the former is more limited, and will not be sanctioned merely for the purpose of settling disputed titles where peaceful remedies would prove equally efficacious.[91] Recaption includes the right to enter upon the real property of the wrong-doer,[92] although

89. Massachusetts has probably gone as far as any of the courts in holding that "a man may defend or regain his momentarily interrupted possession by the use of reasonable force, short of wounding or the employment of a dangerous weapon." On the other hand it has been held that the right of recaption is not to be exercised when it involves a breach of the peace for "the law more highly regards the public peace, than the right of property of a private individual, and therefore forbids recaption to be made in a riotous or forcible manner." Bobb v. Bosworth, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 81, 12 Am. Dec. 273. In accord Hendrix v. State, 50 Ala. 148. See also ASSAULT AND BATTERY, 3 Cyc. 1053, 1078.

90. Thus where fifty dollars had been lost and charged to a book-keeper, who thereafter, on receiving money with which to pay the employees, took out that sum with his salary and returned the balance, it was held that the retaking of the fifty dollars from him by force was unlawful. The court said: "Unquestionably, if one takes another's property from his possession without right and against his will, the owner or person in charge may protect his possession, or retake the property, by the use of necessary force. He is not bound to stand by and submit to wrongful dispossession or larceny when he can stop it, and he is not guilty of assault in thus defending his right, by using force to prevent his property from being carried away. But this right of defence and recapture involves two things; first possession by the owner, and, second, a purely wrongful taking or conversion, without a claim of right. If one has entrusted his property to another, who afterwards, honestly though erroneously, claims it as his own, the owner has no right to take it by personal force." Kirby v. Foster, 17 R. I. 437, 438, 22 Atl. 1111, 14 L. R. A. 317, per Stiness, J. The better rule seems to be that which recognizes the right to a fresh pursuit in order to regain "momentarily interrupted possession" (see Heminway v. Heminway, supra) of property wrongfully taken. The use of force under such circumstances appears excusable, for the right here partakes more closely of the nature of defense than the regaining of a possession which has been lost. As applied to such a state of facts, the Massachusetts rule is reasonable. But where the property is either rightfully acquired and wrongfully detained, as in Kirby v. Foster, and Hendrix v. State, supra, or peaceably acquired under a claim of right as in Barnes v. Martin, 15 Wis. 240, 82 Am. Dec. 670, the use of force is unlawful. To such cases the language of Blackstone (3 Comm. 4 [quoted in Sabre v. Mott, 88 Fed. 780, 781]) applies: "If, therefore, he can so contrive as to gain possession of his property again, without force or terror, the law favors and will justify his proceeding." But the right should never be exerted "where such exertion must occasion strife and bodily contention, or endanger the peace of society." And see ASSAULT AND BATTERY, 3 Cyc. 1078.

the entry must be made in a reasonable manner [93] and care must be exercised to do "no unreasonable or unnecessary damage." [94]

2. Entry. Peaceable entry upon real property by one entitled thereto is lawful,[95] but if done "with strong hand or multitude of people" it is generally made both a criminal offense and civilly actionable.[96]

3. Distress. At common law the landowner might distrain trespassing cattle and hold them until satisfaction was obtained. In some states, however, the right does not exist, and in many it is regulated by statute.[97]

4. Abatement. A nuisance both public and private may, generally speaking, be abated by one who is injured thereby.[98]

B. Judicial — 1. At Law. At common law redress for a tort may be obtained in actions of trespass and trespass on the case, wherein damages are awarded,[99] and of detinue and replevin whereby the specific article unlawfully taken may be recovered.[1] But the distinction between trespass and case has generally been

Case defined and distinguished.—"Case, or more fully, action upon the case, or trespass on the case includes in its widest sense assumpsit and trover, and distinguishes a class of actions in which the writ is framed according to the special circumstances of the case, from the ancient actions, the writs in which, called brevia formata, are collected in the Registrum Brevium. . . . As used at the present day, case is distinguished from assumpsit and covenant in that it is not founded upon any contract, express or implied; from trover which lies only for unlawful conversion; from detinue and replevin, in that it lies only to recover damages; and from trespass, in that it lies for injuries committed without force, or for forcible injuries which damage the plaintiff consequentially only, and in other respects." Bouvier L. Dict., sub verbo "Case."

Trespass and case distinguished.—"The principle is, that where the injury results directly from a forcible act of the defendant, the action of trespass lies; but where the injury is not immediate on the act done, but is consequential only, the remedy is case. The true criterion is, whether the injury proceeds directly or follows consequentially from the act. The distinction is thus well illustrated in the books: If a log is cast into the highway, and while in motion hits another, the injury is immediate, and trespass is the remedy; but if, after the log reaches the highway and becomes stationary a traveler falls over it and is hurt, the injury is consequential, and the remedy is case." abolished even in states where the common-law system of pleading still obtains, and detinue and replevin have been largely superseded by statutory forms of action for the recovery of chattels.[2]

2. In Equity.[3] Relief in equity by injunction is frequently granted where an injury to property rights would be irreparable and money damages would be inadequate,[4] as in cases of repeated or continuing trespasses which might ripen into a prescriptive right.[5] But injunctions have been refused to restrain the publication of a slander or libel,[6] or a threatened physical injury.[7] Nuisances may be ordered abated;[8] contracts procured by fraud may be canceled or reformed;[9] and discovery[10] and an accounting obtained.[11] But in order that

Replevin and detinue distinguished.—"It would seem that the original distinction between replevin and detinue was very similar to that between trespass and trover. Trespass de bonis asportatis was brought, not to recover the identical thing taken, but damages for the illegal taking and loss of the same, when such taking was unjust and unlawful, while trover was brought for the unjust detention and conversion of property where the original taking was lawful and proper. So replevin was originally brought to recover the possession of a chattel in specie when the original taking was wrongful, and detinue to recover the article in specie when the original taking was lawful. 3 Blackstone Comm. 144–152. Hence we find that the form of the declaration in trover and detinue are similar, it being alleged in both that the property came to the hands and possession of the defendant by finding." Contracts induced by fraud.—"Where a party has been induced to enter into a contract by fraud, he has in general, as was said in the case of Wilson v. Hundley, 96 Va. 96, 100, 30 S. E. 492, 70 Am. St. Rep. 837, the choice of remedies. He may elect to rescind the contract, if he can restore what he has received in the same state or condition in which he received it, and sue for and recover back the consideration he has paid or given; or, if he has not paid anything, repudiate the contract and rely when sued upon fraud as a complete defense, or he may elect to retain what he has received under the contract and bring an action to recover damages for the injury he has sustained by the deceit." 3. Pleading — a. General Rule. The general rules of pleading apply to tort actions.[13] The declaration must state sufficient facts to enable the court to say upon demurrer whether, if the facts stated are proved, plaintiff is entitled to recover.[14]

Recovery of personal property.— Where personal property has been unlawfully taken inasmuch as the action of detinue or replevin will generally afford adequate redress, equity will decline to interfere. Thompson v. Vernay, 106 Ill. App. 182; Sultan v. Providence Tool Co., 23 Fed. 572. It is otherwise, however, where the property is of such a special and peculiar nature that legal possessory actions with their alternative of damages under certain conditions would be clearly inadequate to assure the return of the chattel in specie. Rule illustrated.— In order to sustain an action by an administrator for an injury sustained by a threat to prosecute any person who should purchase or remove certain personal property offered for sale by the administrator, it must appear that the property was actually offered for sale at a legal sale. Burnap v. Dennis, 4 Ill. 478. Howerton v. Augustine, 130 Iowa 389, 106 N. W. 941. A count in tort which avers that defendant sold petroleum on representation that it was unadulterated and would not generate explosive gas, and that it was adulterated and generated gas which exploded, but which fails to charge fraud or knowledge on the part of defendant, does not show a cause of action. Wilkins v. Standard Oil Co., 70 N. J. L. 449, 451, (1904) 57 Atl. 258, 1134. Where an absolute deed was given as security for the grantee's indorsement of the grantor's note and the grantee's heir recorded the deed after payment of the indebtedness secured thereby, an averment of the declaration in an action against him for the wrongful act in recording the deed that it became the duty of the defendant to deliver the mortgage to plaintiff and to do or cause to be done so far as he was able all things necessary to give to plaintiff or to permit him to retain the seizin and possession of the land, did not amount to a demand and refusal to retransfer. Knowles v. Knowles, 25 R. I. 464, 56 Atl. 775. In an action by a debtor's bail against one who had fraudulently assisted the debtor to escape, a declaration alleging that the bail was compelled to pay the debt is sufficient without alleging that scire facias had issued against him. Torts connected with contracts.— In actions

b. Limit of Recovery. Recovery will be limited to the cause of action set forth in the complaint.[15]

c. Violation of Duty. Where a duty has been violated the existence and breach thereof, as well as damage, must be stated. Thus, where the action is founded on negligence, it must be alleged what duty was owing by defendant to plaintiff, the failure to discharge which caused the injury, and its breach, or such facts as will show the existence of the duty and its breach, directly and positively, and not merely by way of recital.[16] founded on torts connected with matters of contract, "so much of the contract must be stated as is necessary to make the wrong intelligible, and so much as may in any way qualify the nature and character of the wrong, and nothing more." Newell v. Horn, 47 N. H. 379; Webster v. Hodgkins, 25 N. H. 128, 135.

15. In an action for injuries to personal property, where the complaint alleged that on a certain day defendant seized plaintiff's buggy while plaintiff's team of horses was attached thereto, and overturned and upset said buggy, causing injury to horses, buggy, and harness and defendant answered by general denial, it was proper for the court to direct the jury to find for defendant if he did not upset the buggy in the manner described by plaintiff, for, under the pleadings, plaintiff could not recover for an injury sustained through any other act of defendant, such as causing the horses to run away. Wilhelm v. Donegan, 143 Cal. 50, 76 Pac. 713.

16. Hortenstein v. Virginia-Carolina R. Co., 102 Va. 914, 47 S. E. 996. "In every case involving actionable negligence, there are necessarily three elements essential to its existence: 1. The existence of a duty on the part of the defendant to protect the plaintiff from the injury of which he complains; 2. A failure by the defendant to perform that duty; and, 3. An injury to the plaintiff from such failure of the defendant. When these elements are brought together, they unitedly constitute actionable negligence. The absence of any one of these elements renders a complaint bad or the evidence insufficient." Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269, 274, 33 N. E. 1028, 39 Am. St. Rep. 261, per Hackney, J. In accord Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Fine, 163 Ind. 617, 72 N. E. 589; Flint, etc., R. Co. v. Stark, 38 Mich. 714.

Wilful injury.—A complaint for wilful injury must charge that the injuries were purposely and intentionally committed, with the intent wilfully and purposely to inflict the injury complained of. Southern R. Co. v. McNeeley, 44 Ind. App. 126, 88 N. E. 710, 714.

Alleging wilful negligence.— The charge of wilful, wanton, and reckless negligence includes ordinary negligence which can properly be shown under the pleading. Chicago City R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 109 Ill. App. 616 [affirmed in 207 Ill. 478, 69 N. E. 882]. Under 22 S. C. St. at L. pp. 693, 694, regulating the practice in actions ex delicto and providing that no person need make separate statements in the complaint in such an action, nor elect whether he shall go to trial for actual or other damages, but shall be entitled to submit his whole case to the jury under the instruction of the court, plaintiff may allege an act as negligent and also as wilful and set forth all facts going to make up the history of his alleged wrong. Du Pre v. Southern R. Co., 66 S. C. 124, 44 S. E. 580. See NEGLIGENCE, 29 Cyc. 565 et seq.

Negativing contributory negligence see NEGLIGENCE, 29 Cyc. 575.

Violation of ordinance.—A complaint for a tortious injury, based on a breach of an ordinance, should allege that the ordinance was duly enacted and still in force and effect, and should at least set out its substance. Cumberland Tel., etc., Co. v. Pierson, 170 Ind. 543, 84 N. E. 1088.

Inducing breach of contract.— In an action for maliciously inducing a third party to break its contract with plaintiff, it was not necessary to set out the statements, if any, made by defendant to such third party to induce it to break the contract, since the gist of the action is maliciously or without justifiable cause inducing another to break his contract with plaintiff, and the means by which it is done are immaterial. Nor was it necessary to set out the contract between plaintiff and such third party, where the effect of the contract was sufficiently stated so far as material. Wheeler-Stenzel Co. v. American Window Glass Co., 202 Mass. 471, 89 N. E. 28.

Interference with business.— The complaint for wrongful interference with business need not aver that the business was lawful and legitimate; the fact that it was not, if available, being matter of defense. Sparks v. McCreary, 156 Ala. 382, 47 So. 332, 22 L. R. A. N. S. 1224. A petition, in an action for unlawful interference with trade, which shows that plaintiff had regularly established routes for retailing oil from tank wagons, that it had supplied its customers with cards, which were displayed when oil was wanted, that defendant hired persons and furnished them with oil wagons to go about the streets soliciting the patronage of plaintiff's customers, and vexing his customers and falsely deprecating its wares, and that defendant caused its drivers to conceal the fact that the wagons and teams and oil were the property of defendant, is broad enough to justify a recovery for an interference with existing contracts between plaintiff and its customers; a "customer" being one with whom business men have repeated

d. Defenses. A similar burden rests upon defendant. If he relies upon a discharge [17] or upon a justification [18] or other matter of confession and avoidance, he must plead specially.[19]

C. Defenses — 1. In General. No attempt will be made to enumerate every defense that may be interposed in tort actions and such as are mentioned here will be discussed merely in general terms. Reference should be made to the particular tort as treated elsewhere.[20] The defendant must have acted in his own right or in right of his principal. One cannot volunteer in another's behalf.[21]

2. Inherent — a. In General. It would scarcely appear necessary to observe that while certain defenses are based upon the very facts which go to make up the tort sought to be established, or on contemporaneous circumstances forming a part of the transaction, other defenses depend on facts entirely dehors the occurrence.[22]

b. Necessity. In a restricted class of cases, upon principles of public policy, the law will permit the invasion of rights by private act.[23] In addition to the or regular dealings, and a customer of a retailer in oils being one to whom the retailer makes sales under contract or without contract. Dunshee v. Standard Oil Co., (Iowa 1910) 126 N. W. 342.

17. A subsequent payment of damages for a tort is an affirmative defense in an action therefor, and must be pleaded and proved by defendant, the code, section 3629, providing that any defense seeking to avoid the facts pleaded by the adverse party must be specially pleaded. Howerton v. Augustine, 130 Iowa 1389, 106 N. W. 941.

In Florida, under circuit court rule 71, in actions for torts, the plea of not guilty is a denial of the breach of duty or wrongful act and not of the fact stated, and no other defense than such denial is admissible under that plea, and all other pleas in denial must take issue on some particular fact alleged in the declaration, and under rule 72 all matters in confession and avoidance must be pleaded specially. Defenses in general.— Where a promissory note was satisfied in full, and the payee, instead of complying with a promise to return it to the maker, negligently sent it to a bank for collection, with the instruction to protest if not paid, and it was protested, the fact that the note was one which was not subject to protest constituted no valid defense to an action for injury to the credit of the maker actually resulting from the payee's own collection. At a public meeting held in anticipation of the immediate approach of the federal army, it was resolved to destroy all intoxicating liquors, and a committee of the citizens was appointed to urge the consent of the owners thereto, in consideration of remuneration from a subsequent special tax therefor. In an action by an owner against certain citizens who had been active upon the occasion, brought to recover the value of his liquors consequently destroyed, it was held that, although necessity defends as lawful what it compels, yet, to justify such destruction of private property, a state of facts must be clearly established sufficient to ex-

cases already considered, the following may be cited as illustrations: The establishment of a quarantine;[24] the removal of infected wall paper;[25] the restraint of insane persons;[26] entry upon land for the purpose of saving property in danger of loss by the elements,[27] although not where the danger to be apprehended arises directly from the act or neglect of a third party, since the owner may have redress against him;[28] entry on premises of another in order to save life;[29] entry upon adjoining lands when a highway becomes obstructed and impassable from temporary causes;[30] and the destruction of buildings to prevent the spread of fire.[31]

Rule limited.— In an action wherein plaintiff alleged that he had been induced to donate land and take stock in defendant railroad company through the fraudulent representations of its agent, and sought rescission, it was urged in defense that "the public have an interest in these enterprises which rises above the individual rights of a single stock-holder"; that the public interest forbids that one stockholder should thus discharge himself. It was held that "there is no principle known to the law which will enable a party, individual or corporate, to claim immunity for his wrongful acts, done to the injury of another's right, on the ground of public interest." Henderson v. San Antonio, etc., R. Co., 17 Tex. 560, 67 Am. Dec. 675. It is clear, however, that, although the case was correctly decided, the principle is too broadly stated.

27. "It is a very ancient rule of the common law, that an entry upon land to save goods which are in jeopardy of being lost or destroyed by water, fire, or any like danger, is not a trespass." Hence where defendant went upon plaintiff's beach and removed for the purpose of restoring to its owner, a boat cast ashore by the storm and in danger of being carried off by the sea, he is not a trespasser. Proctor v. Adams, 113 Mass. 376, 377, 18 Am. Rep. 500. In accord Drake v. Shorter, 4 Esp. 165.

28. Thus in trespass where defendant justified because the corn was set apart for tithes, and was in danger of destruction by cattle and defendant took it to the barn of plaintiff who was parson of the vill, it was held that the plea was not good, for if the corn "had been destroyed, the plaintiff would have his remedy against the destroyer." Rep. 614, where an executor brought trespass against the near relative of a deceased person who for the purpose of preserving certain jewelry from the attendants, removed it from one room to another, defendant was held liable, yet it was intimated that had it been proved not merely that the interference was bona fide for the preservation of the goods, but that it was reasonably necessary, and that it was carried out in a reasonable manner, it would have constituted a good defense. The case seems to have turned on a failure of proof.

29. While plaintiff and his wife and children were sailing, a violent tempest arose, whereby the boat and occupants were placed in great danger, and, to save them, plaintiff was compelled to moor the boat to defendant's dock. Defendant, by his servant, unmoored the boat, whereupon it was driven on shore by the tempest without plaintiff's fault, and destroyed, and plaintiff and his wife and children were cast into the water and upon the shore, and injured. It was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover. Necessity prevented him from being a trespasser. Ploof v. Putnam, 81 Vt. 471, 71 Atl. 188, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1072, 20 L. R. A. N. S. 152.

Rule stated.— "The principle as it is usually found stated in the books is, that 'if a house in a street be on fire, the adjoining houses may be pulled down to save the city.' But this is obviously intended as an example of the principle, rather than as a precise definition of its limits. The principle applies as well to personal as to real estate; to goods as to houses; to life as to property — in solitude as in a crowded city; in a state of nature as in civil society. It is referred by moralists and by jurists to the same great principle, which justifies the exclusive appropriation of a plank in a shipwreck, though the life of another be sacrificed; with the throwing overboard of goods in a tempest for the safety of the vessel; with the taking of food to satisfy the instant demands of hunger; with trespassing upon the lands of another to escape death from an enemy. It rests upon the maxim 'necessitas inducit privilegium quoad jura privata." American Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248, 257, per Green, C. J.

Rule limited.— The towing of a burning ferry-boat away from a dock at the request of her owners is not within the rule which authorizes one in case of necessity to destroy another's property to prevent spread of fire, and does not excuse the tug, where she breaks adrift through her hawser burning off, and sets fire to a vessel at anchor. Here it was said: "Without calling in question the well-settled principles, that, at common law, any person, in case of actual necessity to prevent the spreading of a fire, may prostrate a building in a block or street, without being responsible in trespass or otherwise, that the sufferer, in such case, has no legal redress for the injury, and that, in case of a danger happening by tempest, a passenger in a vessel, may, if necessary to save the lives of the passengers, throw overboard the goods of another, without being liable in trespass to their owner, I do not think the present case is brought within these principles. It cannot be held that it was necessary to set this schooner on fire in order to prevent the apprehended spread of the fire, if the ferry-boat should be left to burn in the slip, in the sense in which the word 'necessity' is understood in the principle of law referred to. The necessity must be a direct one, an obvious one, a necessarily resulting one. In the case of the building, or of the goods in the vessel, the necessity for the sacrifice, as well as the act of sacrifice, must both of them be direct, in reference to the thing sacrificed. There must be no fault, in either substituting a fancied necessity for a real necessity, or in negligently doing what is done, so that the existence of necessity comes to rest only on the fact of sacrifice, when the sacrifice would not have occurred but for the negligence. In the present case, it was entirely plain, before the towing commenced, that an ordinary hempen hawser would be likely to burn off if the flames should burst out, and it was anticipated that they would burst out. It is not contended, on the part of the steamtug, that, if the hawsers had not successively burnt off, she would not have been able to haul the ferry-boat in safety out of the way of the schooner. It must, therefore, be held to have been negligence on the part of the steamtug to tow the ferry-boat at all with a hempen hawser, and the damage done to the schooner cannot be regarded as unavoidable, however properly the steamtug may have managed the navigation after once getting the ferry-boat out into the river. The risk of the burning of the hawser must be borne by the steamtug and not by the schooner. The steamtug was, therefore, in fault, in allowing the ferry-boat to collide with the schooner and set her on fire, such collision being shown to have been directly the result of towing the burning boat with a hempen hawser." d. The Police Power. Acts otherwise tortious are justified if committed by governmental authority in the exercise of police powers and to guard the public morals, safety, or comfort.[34] The following have been held valid exercises of the police power: The arrest of one exposed to smallpox;[35] the exclusion of cattle likely to be affected with anthrax;[36] the destruction of wooden buildings erected within fire limits,[37] of decaying buildings,[38] of damaged grain,[39] or of fishing nets used in violation of statute;[40] compulsory vaccination;[41] the disinfection of rags;[42] prohibition against the carrying of lottery tickets;[43] and the regulation of the height of bill-boards.[44] But "to justify the state in thus interposing its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear, first, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; and, second, that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public interests, arbitrarily interfere with private business, or impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations. In other words, its determination as to what is a proper exercise of its police powers is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the courts."[45]

e. Illegal Conduct of Plaintiff. The voluntary [46] illegal conduct of plaintiff, when a proximate [47] or concurring cause [48] of the injury, is a bar to his recovery.[49]

"A law providing for the inspection of animals whose meats are designed for human food cannot be regarded as a rightful exertion of the police powers of the State, if the inspection prescribed is of such a character, or is burdened with such conditions, as will prevent altogether the introduction into the State of sound meats, the product of animals slaughtered in other States. It is one thing for a State to exclude from its limits cattle, sheep or swine, actually diseased, or meats that, by reason of their condition, or the condition of the animals from which they are taken, are unfit for human food, and punish all sales of such animals or of such meats within its limits. It is quite a different thing for a State to declare . . . that fresh beef, veal, mutton, lamb or pork — articles that are used in every part of this country to support human life — shall not be sold at all for human food within its limits, unless the animal from which such meats are taken is inspected in that State, or, as is practically said, unless the animal is slaughtered in that State." Rule stated.— "The general principle is undoubted, that courts of justice will not assist a person who has participated in a transaction forbidden by statute to assert rights growing out of it, or to relieve himself from the consequences of his own illegal act. Whether the form of the action is in contract or in tort, the test in each case is, whether, when all the facts are disclosed, the action appears to be founded in a violation of law, in which the plaintiff has taken part." Rule illustrated.—Thus where a sheriff was induced by defendant's misrepresentations to accept a check instead of cash for property sold on execution and, on failure to pay over in cash, was imprisoned for contempt, it was held that he could not recover damages from defendant on the ground that the latter's fraudulent conduct induced him to violate his duty. Rule stated.— "Any material misrepresentation in a label or trade-mark as to the person by whom the article is manufactured, or as to the place where manufactured, or as to the materials composing it, or any other material false representation, deprives a party of the right to relief in equity. The courts do not, in such cases, take into consideration the attitude of the defendant. Although the defendant's conduct is without justification, this, in the view of a court of equity, affords no reason for interference." Prince Mfg. Co. v. Prince's Metallic Paint Co., 135 N. Rule illustrated.— Plaintiffs, under the name of "The Fays," pretended to tell fortunes and read minds by supernatural aid. Defendants gave entertainments explaining plaintiffs' tricks and exposing their alleged occult powers. In their advertising notices, although stating it was an exposé, they gave prominence to the words "The Fays," or "The Phays," and plaintiff sought an injunction against the use of these names. It was held that the injunction should be refused, the court saying: "Persons who pretend to tell fortunes are defined to be disorderly persons. (Code Crim. Proc. § 899.) The pretense of occult powers and the ability to answer confidential questions from spiritual aid is as bad as fortune telling and a species of it and is a fraud upon the public." Where defendants induced deceased while intoxicated to drink large quantities of liquor on a wager, thereby causing his death, it was held that "even in cases where no breach of the peace is involved, and the act to which consent is given is a matter of indifference to public order, the maxim volenti non fit injuria presupposes that the party is capable of giving assent to his own injury. If he is divested of the power of refusal by reason of total or partial want of mental faculties, the damage cannot be excused on the ground of consent given. A consent given by a person in such condition is equivalent to no consent at all,— more especially when his state of mind is well known to the party doing him the injury." McCue v. Klein, 60 Tex. 168, 169, 48 Am. Rep. 260.

Where no duty to disclose exists.— Consent procured through fraudulent concealment is none the less a defense where there was no duty to disclose. Thus where defendant was charged with infecting plaintiff with venereal disease, it was held that as the latter had consented to the commission of an illegal act, defendant's silence as to his condition did not give a cause of action. Rule applied.— In an action by husband and wife for an assault and battery on her, it is a good defense that the act complained of was committed with the consent and at the request of the wife. Pillow v. Bushnell, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 156, 4 How. Pr. 9, 2 Code Rep. 19. An action for causing a writ of habeas corpus to be issued and served upon the party therein alleged to be restrained, without his authority and against his consent, cannot be maintained if it appear that the complaint was made with authority from plaintiff and at his request, expressed either directly to defendant or indirectly through some other person. Linda v. Hudson, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 385. In an action brought by the owners of a toll-bridge, in which was a draw for the passage of vessels, for damages for injuries to the draw, it appeared that a general statute required vessels passing through a drawbridge to warp through. It was claimed that by long use plaintiff had licensed vessels to sail through. It was held that defendant was not precluded from setting up the license in defense by reason of the statute; the license being merely a waiver on the part of plaintiff of all claim for damage caused by that mode of passing through, and not affecting the liability of defendant to the penalty for the public offense. Toll Bridge Co. v. Betsworth, 30 Conn. 380.

Consent a question for the jury.— In an action of tort, where defendant relies on the defense that the act was a joke, it is a question for the jury whether the parties had been perpetrating practical jokes on each other in such a way that defendant had a right to believe that plaintiff would accept his act as a joke. Motive immaterial.— The fact that the landowner may have been prompted by a malicious motive is immaterial. "One may resist another in a trespass upon his land whatever the motive in so doing may be. It is not the design of the resister but the act of the trespasser which is wrongful." Slingerland v. Gillespie, 70 N. J. L. 720, 723, 59 Atl. 162.

The force applied must be appropriate to the end designed, and therefore, where plaintiff trespassed upon defendant's close and the latter, after requesting him to leave, slapped his face, it was held that a verdict for plaintiff should be sustained. Necessity must exist.— Plaintiff's dog came upon defendant's premises and killed and maimed the latter's hens. Having been driven away, the dog came again and was killed by defendant while running toward the hen-house. It was held that a ruling that the killing of the dog was not justifiable was proper, since although it was found that defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the dog was proceeding to maim and kill other hens, it was not found that reasonable cause existed to believe that it was necessary to kill the dog in order to prevent him from killing the hens. Livermore v. Batchelder, 141 Mass. 179, 5 N. E. 275. But in Marshall v. Blackshire, 44 Iowa 475, 477, the following instruction was upheld: "It was not necessary that the dog should have been, at the very instant of the shooting, in the act of worrying or killing the defendant's chickens, in order to justify the shooting of it, but if the dog had been worrying or killing the defendant's chickens, upon his premises, and at the time he was killed, his conduct was such as to create in the mind of the defendant a reasonable apprehension of continued or renewed worrying or killing, and while under such apprehension, exercising the care and prudence which reasonable men usually exercise under like circumstances, he shot the dog, the shooting was rightful and the plaintiff cannot recover."

Driving trespassing cattle with dog.— One may drive trespassing cattle from his premises by means of a dog provided he does so in a careful manner. Totten v. Cole, 33 Mo. 138, 82 Am. Dec. 157; Davis v. Campbell, 23 Vt. 236.

Killing trespassing animals.— The killing of cattle or fowl because they are trespassing is not lawful. The proper remedy is to impound them or bring suit at law. Clark v. Keliher, 107 Mass. 406. One is not justified in killing a valuable dog without notice to the owner merely because the dog barks around his house at night or chances on one occasion to leave some tracks on a freshly painted porch or to have been detected in the hen-house where he was not doing any mischief. Bowers v. Horen, 93 Mich. 420, 53 N. W. 535, 32 Am. St. Rep. 513, 17 L. R. A. 773.

60. Sullivan v. India Mfg. Co., 113 Mass. 396. "The maxim, be it observed, is not 'scienti non fit injuria' but 'volenti.' It is plain that mere knowledge may not be a conclusive defence. There may be a perception of the existence of the danger without comprehension of the risk; as where the workman tarily assumes the risk of it, has no just cause of complaint against another who is primarily responsible for the existence of the danger." [61] This doctrine of the assumption of risk is entirely distinct from that of contributory negligence. The former may be said to arise out of implied contract; the latter is a matter of conduct.[62] Nor does the doctrine of assumption of risk depend entirely upon the

is of imperfect intelligence, or, though he knows the danger, remains imperfectly informed as to its nature and extent." Thomas v. Quartermaine, 18 Q. B. D. 685, 696, 51 J. P. 516, 56 L. J. Q. B. 340, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 537, 35 Wkly. Rep. 555, per Bowen, L. J. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 26 Cyc. 1196 et seq.

Rule applied.— Thus if plaintiff goes upon defendant's premises on which there is a sign "Beware of the dog" and is bitten, he cannot recover. But it is otherwise if plaintiff cannot read. Sarch v. Blackburn, 4 C. & P. 297, 19 E. C. L. 523.

Knowledge of some danger not enough.— The mere fact that plaintiff knew there was some danger will not prevent his recovery. "If the defendants desire to succeed on the ground that the maxim 'Volenti non fit injuria' is applicable, they must obtain a finding of fact 'that the plaintiff freely and voluntarily, with full knowledge of the nature and extent of the risk he ran, impliedly agreed to incur.'" 61. O'Maley v. South Boston Gas Light Co., 158 Mass. 135, 136, 32 N. E. 1119, 47 L. R. A. 161, per Knowlton, J. [quoted in Drake v. Auburn City R. Co., 173 N. Y. 466, 473, 66 N. E. 121]. See 20 Harvard L. Rev. 14, 91, article by Francis H. Bohlen, "Voluntary Assumption of Risk."

62. "Contributory negligence arises when there has been a breach of duty on the defendant's part, not where ex hypothesi there has been none. It rests upon the view that though the defendant has in fact been negligent, yet the plaintiff has by his own carelessness severed the causal connection between the defendant's negligence and the accident which has occurred; and that the defendant's negligence accordingly is not the true proximate cause of the injury. It is for this reason that under the old form of pleading the defence of contributory negligence was raised, in actions based on negligence, under the plea of 'not guilty.' It was said, and said rightly, in Weblin v. Ballard, 17 Q. B. D. 122, 50 J. P. 597, 55 L. J. Q. B. 395, 54 L. T. Rep. N. S. 532, 34 Wkly. Rep. 455, that in an inquiry whether the plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence, the plaintiff's knowledge of the danger is not conclusive. Obviously such knowledge may have even led him to exercise extraordinary care. But the doctrine of volenti non fit injuria stands outside the defence of contributory negligence and is in no way limited by it. In individual instances the two ideas sometimes seem to cover the same ground, but carelessness is not the same thing as intelligent choice, and the Latin maxim often applies when there has been no carelessness at all. A confusion of ideas has frequently been created in accident cases by an assumption that negligence to the many who are ignorant may be properly treated as negligence as regards the one individual who knows and runs the risk, and by dealing with the case as if it turned only on a subsequent investigation into contributory negligence." Thomas v. Quartermaine, 18 Q. B. D. 685, 697, 51 J. P. 516, 56 L. J. Q. B. 340, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 537, 35 Wkly. Rep. 555, per Bowen, L. J. "Contributory negligence prevents a recovery because the plaintiff, of his own volition, intervenes between the negligence of the defendant and the injury received, so that the former is not the sole cause of the latter. Negligence implies a voluntary act or omission. Upon the assumption that the defendant is guilty of a negligent act and that, intervening between it and the injury, the plaintiff is guilty of a negligent act also which contributes to the injury, as the defendant's negligence is not the sole juridical cause of the accident, the plaintiff cannot recover. The reason does not rest upon contract but on the inherent nature of negligence. As Mr. Wharton says: 'The true ground for the doctrine (of contributory negligence) is that by the interposition of the plaintiff's independent will, the causal connection between the defendant's negligence and the injury is broken' (Wharton Law of Negligence, § 301, and cases cited; Pollock Torts 434). On the other hand the doctrine of assumed risks rests upon a contract impliedly made before the negligent act of the defendant which caused the injury was committed. . . . By assuming the risk, the plaintiff does not intervene but waives. Intervention in order to break the causal connection between the negligent act and the injury must come in between them. The assumption of the risk does not come in between, but is in advance of both." Dowd v. New York, etc., R. Co., 170 N. Y. 459, 469, 63 N. E. 541, per Vann, J. The distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence has been well pointed out by Thompson as follows: "In order to make a coupling the cars must be thrust together either by a locomotive, or by a propulsion called 'kicking,' or 'shunting,' or by gravity. There is consequently always danger to the brakeman in the operation. If, in making a coupling, he accidentally, and without negligence, slips and falls and passes under a wheel, his injury is ascribed to one of the ordinary risks of employment, which risk he has accepted, and no damages can be recovered for it. But if, instead of using the coupling stick furnished him by the railway company, he undertakes to make the coupling with his hands and in the opera-relation of master and servant, although it is most frequently applied in such cases where the injury was within the "risks of employment," [63] for, "independently of any relation of master and servant, there may be a voluntary assumption of the risk of a known danger, which will debar one from recovering compensation in case of injury to person or property therefrom, even though he was in the exercise of due care." [64] This defense cannot, however, be pleaded in an action to recover for injuries wilfully inflicted.[65]

j. Contributory Negligence. It is a defense that the injury was produced by the coöperating personal negligence of the injured party,[66] and in some instances the neglect of a third person may be imputed to the injured party so as to preclude recovery by the latter.[67] But this applies only in cases of negligence. Where tion gets his hand crushed, this is contributory negligence, and consequently no damages can be recovered. The distinction between the two cases is that in the former case the brakeman was not guilty of negligence at all; consequently the expression 'contributory negligence' could not be properly applied to his act, but what he suffered was from a mere accident attending the known danger, the risk of which he had assumed; whereas in the latter case his own negligence and rashness brought upon him the injury which he suffered." k. Enforcement of Discipline, Regulations, and Order. Reasonable chastisement may be administered by a parent,[69] or one standing in loco parentis,[70] as a schoolmaster.[71] The master of a vessel while at sea possesses similar power over seamen,[72] and so, it has been said, does the keeper of a poorhouse over paupers.[73] Using no unnecessary force, a carrier may eject a passenger,[74] and an innkeeper a guest who is disorderly or refuses to pay or to conform to reasonable regulations.[75]

Rule stated.— "The rule on this subject is well laid down by Abbott. (On Shipping, 125.) By the common law, says he, the master has authority over all the mariners on board the ship, and it is their duty to obey his commands in all lawful matters, relative to the navigation of the ship, and the preservation of good order; and, in case of disobedience or disorderly conduct, he may lawfully correct them in a reasonable manner; his authority, in this respect, being analogous to that of a parent over a child, or a master over his apprentice, or scholar. Such an authority is absolutely necessary to the safety of the ship, and of the lives of the persons on board; but it behoves the master to be very careful in the exercise of it, and not to make his parental power a pretext for cruelty and oppression." History of rule.— At common law the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona was applied to all forms of actions ex delicto whether for injuries to person or property. This was first changed by the statute 3 Edw. III, c. 7, authorizing actions of trespass de bonis asportatis to be maintained by executors where the taking was in the lifetime of their testator. Another act passed in the fifteenth year of the same reign (c. 5) gave the like actions to administrators. It was not until a late period that executors or administrators were enabled to maintain an action for injuries to the real estate of the deceased. Such remedies were given by the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 42. Zabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 322, 333, 64 Am. Dec. 551.

c. Release and Covenant Not to Sue. Both a release of,[90] and a covenant not to sue,[91] a single wrong-doer will operate as a bar so far as he is concerned. But where given to one or more of several joint tort-feasors the effect of a release is different from that of a covenant. unless, as held by some of the courts, a cause of action against them is expressly reserved;[93] but a covenant not to sue will affect only the right to redress against the party to whom it is given.[94] "In such case the covenant does not operate as a release of either the covenantee or the other tort-feasors, but the former must resort to his suit for breach of the covenant, and the latter cannot invoke the covenant as a bar to the action against them."[95]

Libel and slander.— Preponderance of evidence only is required to maintain the defense of the truth of a criminal charge set up in civil actions for libel or slander. "If the words said to be slanderous impute to the plaintiff the commission of a crime, the defendant must fasten upon the plaintiff all the elements of the crime, both in act and intent, and to do this he must furnish evidence enough to overcome, in the minds of the jury, the natural presumption of innocence, as well as the opposing testimony. But to go further, and say that this shall be done by such a degree and quantity of proof as shall suffice to remove from their minds every reasonable doubt that might be suggested, is to import into the trial of civil causes between party and party a rule which is appropriate only in the trial of an issue between the State and a person charged with crime and exposed to penal consequences if the verdict is against him." Ellis v. Buzzell, 60 Me. 209, 214, 11 Am. Rep. 204, per Barrows, J. In accord Atlanta Journal v. Mayson, 92 Ga. 640, 18 S. E. 1010, 44 Am. St. Rep. 104; McBee v. Fulton, 47 Md. 403, 28 Am. 2. Quantum of Proof. It has been said that "in actions ex delicto it is not necessary that the plaintiff prove all the material allegations of his declaration. If he prove enough of the material allegations to make out a cause of action he is entitled to recover, even though there are other averments of the declaration which are not proved." [98]

3. Presumptions. The force of the general rule requiring proof by him who asserts is modified in some instances where conclusions are permitted to be drawn from the existence of certain facts. Thus the loss or destruction of bailed property while in the hands of the bailee will cast upon him the burden of proving his freedom from wrong-doing.[99] Again, while negligence is never presumed, yet "when a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of an explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care." It was held that the charges were divisible, and in the absence of demurrer proof of the former charge would warrant a recovery even though the west bound motorman was without fault. Chicago City R. Rule stated.— "What its [the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur] final accepted shape will be can hardly be predicted. But the following considerations ought to limit it. (1) The apparatus must be such that in the ordinary instance no injurious operation is to be expected unless from a careless construction, inspection, or user; (2) Both inspection and user must have been at the time of the injury in the control of the party charged; (3) The injurious occurrence or condition must have happened irrespective of any voluntary action at the time by the party injured. It may be added that the particular force and justice of the presumption, regarded as a rule throwing upon the party charged the duty of producing evidence, consists in the circumstance that the chief evidence of the true cause, whether culpable or innocent, is practically accessible to him but inaccessible to the injured person." 4 Wigmore Ev. § 2509.

Rule limited.— "The maxim res ipsa loquitur is itself the expression of an exception to the general rule that negligence is not to be inferred but to be affirmatively proved. The ordinary application of the maxim is limited to cases of an absolute duty, or an obligation practically amounting to that of an insurer. Cases not coming under one or both of these heads must be those in which the circumstances are free from dispute and show, not only that they were under the exclusive control of the defendant, but that in the ordinary course of experience no such result follows as that complained of. It is sometimes said that the mere happening of an accident in this class of cases raises a presumption of negligence, but causes of action, specific malevolence or ill-will toward the injured party is not required to be shown. It is sufficient that a wrongful act is done intentionally without just cause or excuse;[2] and in actions for malicious prosecution malice may be inferred from the want of probable cause.[3]

4. Province of Court and Jury. The general rule prevails in tort as in other actions that where the facts or the inferences to be drawn from them are not disputed, the decision is for the court as matter of law,[4] while disputed facts or inferences are for the jury.[5]

this is hardly accurate. Negligence is never presumed. If it were, it would be the duty of the court, in the absence of exculpatory evidence by the defendant, to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, whereas in these cases the question is for the jury. The accurate statement of the law is not that negligence is presumed but that the circumstances amount to evidence from which it may be inferred by the jury. In cases where the duty is not absolute, like that of a common carrier to exercise the highest care and skill in regard to the safety of a passenger who has committed himself to its charge, but arises in the ordinary course of business, it is essential that it shall appear that the transaction in which the accident occurred was in the exclusive management of the defendant, and all the elements of the occurrence within his control, and that the result was so far out of the usual course that there is no fair inference that it could have been produced by any other cause than negligence. If there is any other cause apparent to which the injury may with equal fairness be attributed, the inference of negligence cannot be drawn." Zahniser v. Pennsylvania Torpedo Co., 190 Pa. Rule stated.— "To maintain an action for a malicious prosecution, two essential elements must occur — malice, and a want of probable cause. The inference of malice may be drawn from a want of probable cause; but such inference is subject to be rebutted by proof that the prosecutor, though not able to show probable cause, instituted the prosecution under an honest belief that the plaintiff was guilty of the offense charged; provided such belief is founded on facts and circumstances, which would produce in the mind of a reasonable and prudent man such serious suspicion of the plaintiff's guilt as to repel the idea that the prosecutor was actuated by malice." Fraud.— In an action to recover the value of goods fraudulently purchased, it was shown, without contradiction, that defendants had at the same time purchased on credit from different dealers twice as much goods as they could legitimately handle which they had sold for cash, paying no bills and that they had informed plaintiff's agent of this, stating that they intended to pay no one but plaintiff. It was held that plaintiff was entitled to a direction in his favor. Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Russo, 125 Mich. 306, 84 N. W. 308.

Libel.— "In a civil action for libel, where the publication is admitted and the words are unambiguous and admit of but one sense, the question of libel or no libel is one of law which the court must decide." Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 202, 23 N. E. 1127, 18 Am. St. Rep. 810, 8 L. R. A. 214, per Andrews, J.

Negligence.— "Where the evidence as to material facts is contradictory, or where the facts are admitted or undisputed, and are such that reasonable men can fairly draw opposite conclusions from them, the question of negligence is for the jury; but where there is no dispute about the facts, and they are such that but one conclusion can fairly be drawn from them by reasonable men, it is the duty of the court to declare that conclusion to the jury. If the evidence is of such a conclusive character that the court, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, would be bound to set aside a verdict returned in opposition to it, it is its duty to direct a verdict for the plaintiff or the defendant, as may be proper." Trespass to chattels.— In an action of trespass for the wrongful taking of goods under a levy of an execution against a third person where the evidence of both plaintiff and defendant showed without dispute that some of the property taken belonged to plaintiff, it is not improper for the court ex mero motu, to instruct the jury that "the undisputed proof is that some of the property was plaintiff's" and when defendants "took possession of said property they were trespassers." E. Damages. This subject has been fully considered elsewhere.[6] Generally it may be said that nominal damages will be given whenever a legal right has been violated but no actual damage has been sustained;[7] compensatory damages are awarded for the effects of an injury resulting proximately and not due to any intervening, voluntary cause for which the wrong-doer is not responsible,[8] while many of the courts hold that the jury may in their discretion[9] assess in addition "punitive," "vindictive," or "exemplary" damages or "smart money," in cases where wilfulness, malice, or gross negligence is shown.[10] But in some states the Theory on which rule rests.— Exemplary damages are given "by way of punishment, for the benefit of the community, and as a restraint to the transgressor." Millard v. Brown, 35 N. Y. 297, 300. "Exemplary damages are both punitive and preventive in their purpose, as well as compensatory. They are doctrine that additional damages may be assessed by way of punishment is denied,[11] although in many of these jurisdictions, malice, wilfulness, oppression, or recklessness may be taken into consideration for the purpose of enhancing damages, which are regarded as compensatory merely, and as a salve for the humiliation or injured feelings of the party wronged.[12] It has been held that not only intended to compensate the plaintiff for his actual loss, but are also inflicted 'for example's sake, and by way of punishing the defendant.'" Sedgwick Damages 459, 464 [quoted in Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271, 293].

Constitutionality.—The rule allowing punitive damages is not in conflict with the constitutional provision forbidding more than one punishment for the same offense. "Conceding that it is against the spirit of the constitution to inflict more than one punishment for the same offense, still, the law which authorizes this action and the recovery therein of punitive damages, is not liable to condemnation. Its object is not to inflict a penalty, but to remunerate for the loss sustained. Every recovery for a personal injury, with or without vindictive damages, operates in some degree as a punishment, but it is a punishment which results from the redress of a private wrong, and does not, therefore, violate either the meaning or spirit of the constitution. . . . The arguments used in opposition to the rule proceed on the erroneous assumption that vindictive damages are inflicted by way of criminal or penal punishment, and are not given by way of compensation for the injury complained of. Such damages may operate by way of punishment, but they are allowed by way of remuneration for the wrong suffered. They are proportioned to the aggravating circumstances and wilful and reckless character of the act which occasioned the injury to the plaintiff. They are discretionary with the jury, as the damages for personal injuries always are. The actual damages which are sustained in such cases cannot be measured or determined by any certain criterion, but have to be fixed by the jury on a proper consideration of all the circumstances of the case. Where the element of wilful negligence, malice, or oppression intervenes, the law permits the jury to give what is termed punitory, vindictive, or exemplary damages; and such damages, although given to recompense the sufferer, do inflict a punishment upon the offender. But such is the effect of every judgment for damages which is rendered in an action for an injury to the person, and there would be as much propriety in the argument that, as damages in such cases always operate as a punishment, the offender, if the act be one for which he is liable to be indicted, will be thereby twice punished for the same offense, as there is that such an effect is produced when the damages are increased and made exemplary on account of the reckless conduct of the offending party." Objections stated.—"It seems to us that there are many valid objections to interjecting into a purely civil action the elements of a criminal trial, intermingling into a sort of medley or legal jumble two distinct systems of judicial procedure. While the defendant is tried for a crime, and damages awarded on the theory that he has been proven guilty of a crime, many of the time-honored rules governing the trial of criminal actions, and of the rights that have been secured to defendants in criminal actions 'from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,' are absolutely ignored. Under this procedure, the doctrine of presumption of innocence until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt finds no lodgment in the charge of the court, but is supplanted by the rule in civil actions of a preponderance of testimony. The fallacy and unfairness of the position is made manifest when it is noted that a person can be convicted of a crime, the penalty for which is unlimited save in the uncertain judgment of the jury, and fined to this unlimited extent for the benefit of an individual who has already been fully compensated in damages on a smaller weight of testimony than he can be in a criminal action proper, brought for the benefit or protection of the state, where the amount of the fine is fixed and limited by law; and, in addition to this, he may be compelled to testify against himself, and is denied the right to meet the witnesses against him face to face under the practice in civil actions of admitting depositions in evidence. F. Conflict of Laws — 1. General Rule. To determine what rule shall be applied when the laws of different jurisdictions are invoked it will be necessary to distinguish between local and transitory actions.[16]

2. Local Actions. A cause of action is local in its nature when the transaction out of which it arose could have occurred in one place only. Redress can be sought there and there alone.[17] Actions brought for the following torts are therefore necessarily local: Diversion of watercourses;[18] obstruction of highways;[19] waste;[20] and trespass or other injuries to real property.[21] Actions of

17. "These [local actions] embrace all actions in which the subject or thing sought to be recovered is in its nature local; such as real actions of waste, when brought to recover the place wasted, as well as the damages; and actions of ejectment. . . . Some other actions which do not seek the direct recovery of lands or tenements, are also local, because they arise out of a local subject, or the violation of some local right or interest. Of this class are waste for damages only; trespass quare clausum fregit, trespass on the case for injuries to things real, as nuisances to houses or lands; disturbance of right of way, obstruction, or diversion of ancient watercourses. (Per Mitchell, J.) "An action for damages for injuries to real property is on principle just as transitory in its nature as one on contract or for a tort committed on the person or personal property. The reparation is purely personal, and for damages. Such an action is purely personal, and in no sense real. Every argument founded on practical considerations against entertaining jurisdiction of actions for injuries to lands lying in another state could be urged as to actions on contracts executed, or for personal torts committed, out of the state, at least where the subject-matter of the transaction is not within the state. Take, for example, personal actions on contracts respecting lands which are conceded to be transitory. An investigation of title of boundaries, etc., may be desirable, and often would be essential to the determination of the case, yet such considerations have never been held to render the actions local. Another serious objection to the rule is that under it a party may have a clear, legal right without a remedy where the wrongdoer cannot be found, and has no property within the state where the land is situated. As suggested by plaintiff's counsel, if the rule be adhered to, all that the one who commits an injury to land, whether negligently or willfully, has to do in order to escape liability, is to depart from the state where the tort was committed, and refrain from returning. In such case the owner of the land is absolutely remediless."

replevin are likewise local and in the absence of a statute must be brought where the chattel may be situated.[22]

3. Transitory Actions — a. In General. A transitory action is founded on a wrong which might have been committed anywhere. The following torts, it has been held, give rise to suits of this character: Assault and battery;[23] conversion;[24] death by wrongful act or neglect;[25] false imprisonment;[26] libel;[27] malicious prosecution;[28] injuries to the person;[29] slander;[30] slander of title;[31] trespass or injuries to personal property;[32] and unlawful discrimination by common car-

Trespass and conversion.— Where the petition contains a single count alleging a continuing trespass and the cutting and conversion of timber growing thereon, it was held that the allegation was of a single cause of action in which the trespass upon the land was the principal thing and the conversion of the timber was incidental only and that the entire cause of action was local. Ellenwood v. Marietta Chair Co., 158 U. S. 105, 15 S. Ct. 771, 39 L. ed. 913. In accord, the cutting and removal constitute one transaction. American Union Tel. Co. v. Middletown, 80 N. Y. 408; Powell v. Smith, 42 Pa. St. 126. To this there are a few exceptions in which actions are said to be local, and must, therefore, be brought within the country where they arose. As applied to torts, these exceptions may be said to consist of (1) those where the lex loci delicti is in direct contravention of the law or policy of the forum; (2) where the remedy prescribed for the tort by the lex loci delicti is penal in its character; and (3) statutory torts, where the statute, in creating the liability, at the same time creates a mode of redress peculiar to that State, by which alone the wrong is to be remedied." Suit was brought in Vermont where contributory negligence is a bar. It was held that Quebec law governed. The court said: "Comity does not require us to take up and enforce the law of a foreign state which is contrary to pure morals, or to abstract justice, or to enforce which would be contrary to our own public policy. The law we are considering is not claimed to be open to either of the first two objections but is claimed to be open to the third, because it is so different from the law of Vermont. Some states having adopted slight difference of views between the two states, not amounting to a fundamental difference of policy, will not prevent the enforcement of the obligations admitted to have arisen by the law which governed the conduct of the parties.[42] Nor, where a cause of action for a wrong is given by the law of the place where it is committed, will the fact that the remedy differs from that of the forum, prevent a recovery.[43] Thus, where the statutes of the forum and of the locus give a right of action for death caused by negligence or wrongful act, plaintiff may recover despite a difference as to the amount of damages allowed,[44] as to the period of limitations, provided that suit be brought within the time fixed by the lex loci,[45] or as to the party in whose name the action shall be brought.[46] Where both parties, however, are non-residents and a cause of action arose out of the state in which suit is brought, on grounds of public policy some of the courts decline to assume jurisdiction in the absence of special circumstances.[47] In the absence

this view, declined to administer foreign laws unless closely analogous to their own. . . . But we believe the sounder opinion is that a court should not, in otherwise proper cases, refuse to adopt and apply the law of a foreign state, however unlike the law of its own, unless it be contrary to pure morals, or abstract justice, or unless the enforcement would be of evil example and harmful to its own people and therefore inconsistent with the dignity of the government whose authority is invoked." If the foreign law is a penal statute, or if it offends our own policy, or is repugnant to justice or to good morals, or is calculated to injure this State or its citizens, or if we have not jurisdiction of parties who must be brought in to enable us to give a satisfactory remedy, or if under our forms of procedure an action here cannot give a substantial remedy, we are at liberty to decline jurisdiction." 47. Thus the courts of New York declined to assume cognizance of an action for assault and battery committed on board of a British vessel upon the high seas, plaintiff and defendant both being British subjects. Here it was said (per Yates, J.): "It is evident, then, that our Courts may take cognizance of torts committed on the high seas, on board of a foreign vessel where both parties are foreigners; but I am inclined to think it must, on principles of policy, often rest in the sound discretion of the Court to afford jurisdiction or not, according to the circumstances of the case. To say that it can be claimed in all cases, as matter of right, would introduce a principle which might, oftentimes, be attended with manifest disadvantage, and serious injury to our own

of circumstances showing cruelty or great hardship the admiralty courts of the United States cannot be required or allow themselves to entertain jurisdiction of a case where subjects of a foreign government invoke their assistance against a merchant vessel of a foreign government.[48]

4. DEFENSES — a. General Rule. As the existence of a transitory cause of action is primarily determined by the lex loci, it follows that the same law must in general govern the defenses which may prevent recovery.[49]

citizens abroad, as well as to foreigners here. Mariners might so annoy the master of a vessel as to break up the voyage, and thus produce great distress and ruin to the owners. The facts in this case sufficiently show the impropriety of extending jurisdiction, because it is a suit brought by one of the mariners against the master, both foreigners, for a personal injury sustained on board of a foreign vessel, on the high seas, and lying in port when the action was commenced, and, for aught that appears in the case, intending to return to their own country, without delay, other than what the nature of the voyage required. Under such circumstances, it is manifest that correct policy ought to have induced the Court below to have refused jurisdiction, so as to prevent the serious consequences which must result from the introduction of a system, with regard to foreign mariners and vessels, destructive to commerce; since it must materially affect the necessary intercourse between nations, by which alone it can be maintained. The plaintiff, therefore, ought to have been left to seek redress in the Courts of his own country, on his return." Gardner v. Thomas, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 134, 137, 7 Am. Dec. 445. Laches.— But where the action "has been pending for a year, and the question as to whether the court should entertain jurisdiction had not been raised by answer, by special motion or during the trial, and we think that while the Supreme Court might, in the exercise of its discretion, have refused to entertain the action, or dismissed it on its own motion, yet the defendant, not being entitled to a dismissal as a matter of right, ought not to be permitted to lie by until the close of the trial, when its probable result could be inferred, and then successfully invoke the exercise of the discretion of the court in his favor." Contra.— Roberts v. Knights, 7 Allen (Mass.) 449, 452, where it was said, per Chapman, J.: "The argument ab inconvenienti, which is urged on behalf of the defendant, has much force. It is extremely inconvenient to one who is temporarily in a foreign country to be sued by a fellow-countryman in its courts. But it is met by an argument of equal force on the other side. If the plaintiff had no such remedy, he would often be subjected to great hardships. b. Statutes of Limitations. The statute of limitations to be applied is that of the forum where the foreign act affects only the remedy [50] and (1) does not extinguish the right, as in cases where the statute of the locus gives a title arising from adverse possession or enjoyment and does not merely limit the remedy as to the time of bringing suit,[51] or (2) is not made an integral part of the cause of action, as where the statute creates a right of action for death caused by negligence or wrongful act, and fixes a period within which the action must be brought.[52]

Rule applied.— Plaintiff sought to recover in tort against a common carrier for loss of a steam engine which the latter had agreed to transport from Illinois to Massachusetts and which was destroyed at Chicago. The bill of lading contained a clause exempting defendant from liability. By Illinois law the mere receipt without objection of the bill of lading would not raise a presumption that its terms were assented to, but such assent must be shown by other evidence. By Massachusetts law the receipt of a bill of lading without dissent exempts the carrier, assent to the shipment being inferred. Suit was brought in Massachusetts. It was held that the question whether the shipper was bound by the receipt of such a contract without dissent was one of evidence, and was to be determined by Massachusetts law. "The nature and validity of the special contract set up is the same in both states. It is only a difference in the mode of proof. A presumption of fact in one state is held legally sufficient to prove assent, to the special contract relied on to support the defence. In the other state it is held not to be sufficient. It is as if proof of the contract depended upon the testimony of a witness competent in one place and incompetent in the other." Hoadley v. Northern Transp. Co., 115 Mass. 304, 307, 15 Am. I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

Towage is defined to be the act of towing or drawing ships and vessels, usually by means of a smaller steamer called a tug.[1] A towage service may be described as the employment of one vessel to expedite the voyage of another, irrespective of any circumstances of peril,[2] and when nothing more is required than the accelerating her progress,[3] and is confined to vessels that have received no injury or

1. Bouvier L. Dict.
To tow means to drag a vessel forward in the water by means of a rope attached to another vessel, and implies that the act is done by those on board the latter. Ryan v. Hook, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 185, 191 [citing Webster Dict.; Falconer Marine Dict.]. The tug simply furnishes the means of traction to the tow, which must be steered or navigated by those on board of her. "Navigation" does not mean "towing." Ryan v. Hook, supra.

The ordinary contract of towage is one merely covering the furnishing of propelling power to move a boat or vessel from one place to another. The Fox, 15 Fed. 639, 4 Woods 199.

Ordinary towage is service rendered in ex-damage.[4] It is distinguished from salvage, which implies some degree of danger and some need of extraordinary assistance.[5]

II. STATUTORY REGULATIONS.

A. As to Lights. Steam vessels, when towing other vessels, are required by statute to carry two bright white mast-head lights vertically, in addition to their side-lights, so as to distinguish them from other steam vessels.[6] Sailing vessels in tow of a steamer are required to carry colored lights.[7]

B. As to Foreign Tugs Towing Vessels of the United States. Foreign tugs, towing vessels of the United States, are made liable to a penalty except where the towing is in whole or in part within or upon foreign waters.[8]

III. CONTRACTS.[9]

A. In General. An alleged contract for towage services must be proved before it can be enforced, or either party held liable for its breach.[10] The relation between the parties to such a contract will vary according to the terms thereof,[11] and the liability of each party to the other, as well as to third persons, may be very different in different cases.[12] The interpretation of such a contract, and what are the legal relations between the parties and the relative rights and oblipediting an undamaged ship on her voyage. The Kingalock, 1 Spinks 263, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 506.

Towage and salvage.—If there is any intrinsic difference between towage and salvage, it would appear to be only that salvage service must always be that given in rescue or relief of property in imminent peril of loss or deterioration, while towage may be applied merely in aid of a vessel against adverse winds or tides, or in difficult passages, while she is in possession of her ordinary powers of locomotion. The H. B. Foster, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,290, Abb. Adm. 222. If the vessel towed was by this means aided in escaping from a present or prospective danger, the service will be regarded as one of salvage, and the towage as merely an incident. If, upon the other hand, the vessel thus assisted was not encompassed by any immediate or probable future peril, such service will be treated as one of towage merely, and compensated as such. The J. C. Pfluger, 109 Fed. 93.

A steam tug towing a raft of logs is within this statute, although such raft may not come strictly within U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 4], declaring that "the word 'vessel' includes every description of water-craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water." Barges that have neither sails nor masts are not "sail-vessels," within U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4233, rule 8 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2895], requiring sail-vessels to carry colored lights; and, there being no direct statutory duty laid upon them to carry such lights when towed singly, the provision of section 4500 (p. 3060), imposing a penalty in such cases upon barges not having colored lights, as required by law, is of no effect. U. S. v. Miller, 26 Fed. 95.

8. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4370 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2983].

What constitute "foreign waters."— The waters of the straits of San Juan de Fuca, lying north of the dividing line between the United States and British Columbia, are "foreign waters" within the meaning of the statute. U. S. v. The Pilot, 50 Fed. 437, 1 C. C. A. 523 [reversing 48 Fed. 319]. And in such a case a British tug is not liable where the towing was done partly on the British side of the straits of San Juan de Fuca, even though it might have been done entirely on the American side, in the absence of any allegation that the British waters were entered collusively or for the purpose of evading the statute. gations resulting therefrom, are questions of law for the court; and a submission thereof to a jury is error.[13]

B. Validity. If the master of the tug,[14] or the tow,[15] exceeds his authority in making or extending a towage contract, such contract is invalid, and imposes no liability upon either party, unless the other contracting party was ignorant of the master's want of authority.[16] Of course the owner of either vessel may, if he sees fit, ratify such an unauthorized contract.[17] A contract for towage, made by the owners of a vessel, is binding on the owners of the cargo, which, as bailees, the owners of the vessel have authority to represent in all matters necessary to its transportation.[18]

C. Termination. A contract for towage may be terminated by the completion of the service contracted for,[19] or by the act of the master and crew of the tow in rendering further service impossible or unavailing.[20] The contract for

The master of a merchant steamer engaged in the transportation of merchandise has no authority to bind the ship by entering into a contract to tow another vessel on a long ocean voyage; and for breach of such a contract, when made and entered upon, he alone is liable. Nor can a ship's husband delegate his powers to the master; and if the latter, in his own name, enters into a contract of towage which is beyond his authority, the fact that the ship's husband assumed to authorize him to do so does not validate the contract so as to make it bind the ship. Where one obtained possession of boats without the owner's consent or authority, and afterward, in his own name, entered into contracts of towage in regard to such boats, which contracts he subsequently violated, it was held that mere possession, without right, is not even apparent legal authority, and one who deals with the wrong-doer in possession does so at his peril, and no lien against the boats was created by such breach of contract. Illustrations.— A tug employed to tow a schooner from imminent danger of fire took her to an apparently safe berth, and there left her, with the acquiescence of her master, agreeing to return in case of danger, if not otherwise engaged. The fire spreading, the schooner was lost, although the tug returned and used reasonable but unsuccessful effort to rescue her. It was held that the towage contract ended when the schooner was left at her berth, and that the promise to return, being without consideration, no liability attached to the tug for failing to make the rescue. Bothwell v. Vessel Owners' Towing Assoc., 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,687. The master of a ship, desiring to put her aground, entered into a contract with libellant to tow her ashore. When the ship in tow reached a suitable place, her port anchor was let go, and the tug ordered to go astern and draw the stern of the ship to the shore, so that she could be secured in that position, while another of libellant's tugs carried out a kedge-anchor. It was held that the contract of towage did not end when the port anchor was cast, but when the ship was placed in the proper position to be put aground. Wilmington Transp. Co. v. The Old Kensington, 39 Fed. 496.

20. See the cases cited infra, this note.

Illustrations.— The master of a schooner knowingly engaged a tug of inferior power to tow him to sea from Charleston harbor. In passing down the Swash channel, the schooner being under sail, with a breeze sufficient to take her to sea without the aid of steam power, she negligently ran aground on towage may also be terminated by subsequent circumstances which elevate the service into salvage.[21]

D. Liability For Breach of Contract. A tug which enters into an agreement to tow a vessel is bound to fulfil such agreement unless prevented by causes to which negligence on her part does not contribute;[22] and for a breach thereof the tug or its owner is liable in damages.[23] If the contract has been partly executed, a suit in rem may be maintained to recover damages for its breach;[24] but while the contract remains executory, an action in rem does not lie.[25] In such case admiralty will take jurisdiction by a suit in personam against the owners.[26]

E. Measure of Damages. The damages recoverable for breach of a towage contract are either such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as arising naturally — that is, according to the usual course of things — from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of the breach of it.[27] If a contract is made under special circumstances, the north side of the channel, and thereafter negligently lowered her mainsail, making it impossible for the tug to get her off. It was held that the tug did not contribute to the accident, and was not liable for any further service under the contract of towage. Wilson v. Charleston Pilots' Assoc., 57 Fed. 227. The master and crew of a coal barge in tow in the Gulf of Mexico gave a distress signal, and lowered a boat, whereupon the master of the tug cut the tow line to rescue the crew The men, on being picked up, stated that the barge was in a sinking condition, and refused to return to her, and the tug, after staying by for an hour or two, but making no effort to save the barge, finally abandoned her. The wind was blowing thirty miles an hour, with a high sea. The crew of the barge consisted of a master, engineer, and three men, and she was provided with engine, boiler, pumps, sails, and anchors, but no motive power. It was held that the quitting of the barge by her master and crew, without the intention of returning, severed the legal relation created by the contract of towage between her and the tug. The W. J. Keyser, 56 Fed. 731, 6 C. C. A. 101.

The freezing of a river is such an act of God as excuses performance of a contract to tow a vessel thereon; and it makes no difference that the party making such contract had reason to apprehend at the time of making it that such an obstruction of navigation would occur before he could perform it. Worth v. Edmonds, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 40.

23. Randerson v. Ball, 112 Fed. 1022, 50 C. C. And see the cases cited infra, this section.

Deviation from course.— A slight deviation from the direct course is not a breach of a contract for towage between two certain points where nothing was said about going direct. The Mary R. McKillop, 23 Fed. 829.

Where the time for commencing the towage service is specified in the contract, and such agreement is broken by the tug, the latter is liable for the damages resulting from causes which would not have arisen had the agreement been performed. Parmalee v. Wilks, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 539.

In case of a breach of contract by the tow the rule for the measure of damages is the contract price, less the expense necessary to complete the contract. The Vincenz Pinotti, 16 Fed. 926, holding that where the master of the vessel to be towed refuses to state what he paid to other towboats for the same labor, the court will award the contract price as damages.

In case of a breach by a tug of a contract to tow coal barges from one city to another, communicated to both parties, the damages recoverable for a breach are not only those arising naturally, according to the usual course of things, but also those which would ordinarily follow from a breach under the special circumstances so known and communicated.[28] It is otherwise, however, if the special circumstances are unknown to the party breaking the contract.[29] But a claim for damages against a tug for breach of a towage contract can only be sustained by proof of actual damage resulting.[30]

IV. COMPENSATION.[31]

A. Right to Compensation and Amount Thereof. Towage may occur in the ordinary course of navigation, or may be a means of salvage;[32] and whether it is to be paid for according to a quantum meruit, at an agreed price, by wages, or by a salvage compensation must depend upon the circumstances under which it is performed.[33] In a case of simple towage, where no price is agreed upon, only a reasonable compensation is allowed as upon a quantum meruit.[34] If a valid and binding contract is made,[35] and the price agreed upon is fair and reason-where another tug cannot be procured, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the barges and coal at the two cities. McGovern v. Lewis, 56 Pa. St. 231, 94 Am. Dec. 60.

As limited by pleadings.—Where the declaration charges that the injury sustained is the result of the total neglect and refusal of defendant to perform his contract, the damages are limited to such as naturally result from such total neglect and refusal to perform the contract, and they cannot be inflamed by evidence of a negligent performance. Pennsylvania, etc., Steam Nav. Co. v. Dandridge, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 248, 29 Am. Dec. 543.

28. Boutin v. Rudd, 82 Fed. 685, 27 C. C. A. 526, holding that a tug owner, who failed for several days to fulfil his contract to go and tow in a small schooner which had broken from her moorings in a gale, and had been found and placed, in a leaky condition, in an unsafe place, was liable for the loss of the schooner, which was driven upon the rocks by a subsequent storm, it appearing that the fact of her danger and her leaky condition was communicated to him at the time of the contract.

Evidence on question of reasonable value.—On a question of quantum meruit for the services of a tugboat, it is not improper to allow plaintiffs suing therefor to prove, as one of the running expenses, the amount and value of coal required for a trip, or to allow them to ask their witness whether the boat could "earn a livelihood" at prices less than were charged. Syson v. Hieronymus, 127 Ala. 482, 28 So. 967. But it is proper to refuse to allow witnesses to state whether they would have done the work at prices less than those charged. Syson v. Hieronymus, supra. So inquiries as to prices customary to be charged should be limited to a general custom. Syson v. Hieronymus, supra. Under an agreement to tow as reasonable as other tugs will do the same work, recovery is measured by the reasonable value of the work done, and not by what other tugs might have been gotten to do the work for. Syson v. Hieronymus, supra.

If the service rendered is extraordinary, although not amounting to salvage, something more than the ordinary charges for towing will be allowed. The Emily B. Souder, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,458, 15 Blatchf. 185. In determining the compensation under such circumstances, the value of the towing vessel and cargo, the risk incurred, the fact that the vessel was not intended or adapted for towage service, the chance of endangering the towing vessel's insurance, the time spent in, and the danger incurred by, lying by the vessel towed before the towing could commence, and the time spent in deviating from her course, may be considered, although the service rendered does not amount to a salvage service. The Viola, 52 Fed. 172 [affirmed in 55 Fed. 829, 5 C. C. A. 283]. And see The J. C. Pfluger, 109 Fed. 93. But the value of the property towed is but slightly considered in determining the compensation to be awarded. The Egypt, 17 Fed. 359.

able,[36] the tug owners are entitled to recover such price, provided the service contracted for is actually rendered;[37] but no subsequent circumstances will entitle the tug to recover more than the contract price,[38] unless thereby the towage service is elevated to a salvage service.[39] In any case the recovery for towage is subject to a counter-claim for damage to the tow caused by the negligence of the tug.[40]

Charge based on tonnage.—Under an agreement for towage in accordance with a schedule of rates based upon the tonnage of the vessel, the amount of the charge is to be determined by the actual tonnage, as to which the statement of the Lloyd's register, while no doubt generally correct, is not conclusive. The Quevilly, 98 Fed. 635, 39 C. C. A. 196 [affirming 95 Fed. 182].

But an agreement fixing the price to be paid for towing a vessel into port will not be set aside as exorbitant, although the price is considerably in excess of customary towage rates, where, owing to the perilous situation of the tow, and the fact that there was no other tug in the vicinity which could have rendered assistance, the service was in the nature of a salvage. The Atkins Hughes, 114 Fed. 410.

37. The Algitha, 17 Fed. 551.

Complete performance rendered impossible.—A contract to tow a vessel for a fixed sum from one place to another, the complete performance of which becomes impossible through no fault of either party, is an indivisible contract; and the owners of a tug rendering towage services under such a contract are not entitled to be paid pro rata, or any sum, for the towage actually performed. The Madras, [1898] P. 90, 8 Aspin. 397, 67 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 53, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 325; The Salvador, 25 T. L. R. 384, 727, 26 T. L. R. 149. Compare McCormick v. Jarrett, 37 Fed. 380, where it is intimated that the reasonable value of the towage to the point where the service terminated may be recovered. Where, during the towage service, the tow is sunk by a third vessel, the tug owners have no right of action against such vessel to recover damages for loss of the towage remuneration. Société Anonyme, etc., v. Bennetts, 27 T. L. R. 77.

Waiver of breach.—Where a tug is accidentally disabled during the performance of a towage service, the master of the tow may terminate the contract and employ other tugs, but if, on the contrary, he lies by, and again avails himself of the tug's services, after repairs have been made, he waives the breach of contract, and the tug owners are entitled to recover the contract price for the services rendered. The Lady Flora Hastings, 6 Notes of Cas. 550, 3 W. Rob. 118.

Temporary discontinuance of towage.—Where in the course of towage the tug is obliged to cast off, and then returns and completes the towage, the tug owners are entitled to be paid the price agreed upon in the towage contract if the owners of the tow do not prove any damage to have been occasioned to them by the temporary discontinuance of the towage. The Undaunted, 11 P. D. 46, 5 Aspin. 580, 55 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 24, 54 L. T. Rep. N. S. 542, 34 Wkly. Rep. 686. If the owner of the tow does not permit the tug to resume the service, he is liable for the price agreed upon as if the contract had been completely executed. Jewell v. Connolly, 11 Quebec Super. Ct. 265.

38. The Kingalock, 1 Spinks 263, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 596. For example, where the owner of a steamer, on being asked his charge for towing a dredge and two barges between two points on the Ohio river, answered that he was paid one hundred and fifty dollars by another company for a similar service, and was thereupon engaged, there was an implied contract for that sum, and he could not afterward charge by the day for the service, because of delay on account of low water. Admissibility of evidence.—In an action for towing scows, where defendant claimed that they were lost through plaintiff's negligence, evidence that plaintiff's secretary admitted that the hawser was an improper one and that the loss was due to its use is inadmissible, being only an expression of opinion, the secretary not being shown to be an expert in hawsers. American Towing, etc., Co. v. Baker-Whiteley Coal Co., 111 Md. 504, 75 Atl. 341. they see fit as to time and mode of payment of compensation.[41] If they do not stipulate in this regard, the ordinary rule that payment for services is not due until after the services are rendered will prevail,[42] in the absence of a custom of the port fixing the time of payment.[43]

C. Lien[44] — 1. In General. For towage services rendered in the exigencies of navigation there is at least a presumptive lien upon the boat.[45] Whether such presumption arises, or whether the lien exists, depends on the circumstances under which the services are rendered.[46] If it appears that the services were not to be rendered on the credit of the vessel,[47] or that the circumstances or dealings were such as to apprise the tower of that fact,[48] the presumptive lien cannot be upheld. Moreover towage service must be actually rendered in order to carry a lien; an executory contract to perform such service is not sufficient.[49] Nor does the lien attach for a supposed credit given to a vessel unless the service is clearly shown to have been rendered or furnished to the particular vessel to which the credit was given.[50] Such a lien does not oust or supplant the common-law lien

Contract made with owner.—No lien for towage furnished a vessel is presumed to arise on a contract made with the owner, and proof is required that the minds of the parties met on a common understanding that such a lien should be created. The Saratoga, 100 Fed. 480. And the rule is not different, where the person contracted with is known to be a partner in the firm which owns the vessel, because he is also acting in the capacity of master, it being within the power of the person furnishing the services to require an agreement for a lien if he intends to rely upon the credit of the vessel. The Saratoga, supra. Nor is it sufficient that the party who furnished the towage gave credit, so far as his own intentions were concerned, to the vessel, or would not have furnished them except on the belief that he was acquiring a lien for them. Special and unusual towage.—Where special and unusual towage services, such as conveying the scows of a dredging plant back and forth from the dredges to the dumping place, and moving the dredges from time to time, are rendered pursuant to a contract, any intention to create a lien for the services should be clearly expressed. dependent on possession.[51] Statutory liens for towage are given in some states.[52]

2. Property Subject to Lien.[53] The lien attaches to the vessel [54] and freight, or to the vessel, freight, and cargo, as necessity in each particular case may require.[55]

D. Recovery — 1. In General. Towage compensation may be recovered, as a general rule, by an action in personam.[56] If a lien exists upon the vessel towed, whether given by the general rules of the maritime law,[57] or by a local statute,[58] it is enforceable in an admiralty proceeding in rem by the owner of the vessel rendering the service [59] or by his assignee.[60] A common-law lien for such services may be enforced by a bill in equity in a state court.[61]

2. Costs. In an action in admiralty to recover towage compensation, costs ordinarily follow the decree, unless the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, perceives reasons for withholding them.[62]

V. Relation Between Tug and Tow.

A. In General — 1. Reciprocal Duties and Liabilities. In every contract of towage there is implied an engagement that each party, their agents and servants, will perform his duty in completing the contract;[64] that proper skill and diligence will be used on board both the vessel towed and the tug;[65] and that neither, by negligence or by mismanagement, will unnecessarily imperil the other, or increase any risk incidental to the service undertaken.[66] If in the course of the performance of this contract any inevitable accident happens to the one without any default on the part of the other, no cause of action will arise.[67] If, on the other hand, the wrongful act of either occasions any damage to the other, such wrongful act will create a responsibility on the party committing it, if the sufferer has not by any misconduct or unskilfulness on his part contributed to the accident.[68]

the giving of proper instructions as to the management of the tow.[80] These are obligations imposed upon and assumed by the tug from the nature of the employment, and for damage arising from a failure to observe them she cannot escape liability.[81] But if she performs such duties, and damage results to the tow which could not have been prevented by the exercise of reasonable care and skill in the act of towing, she is not liable therefor.[82] Nor is the tug responsible for any injury which may have happened to the tow by reason of a defect or deficiency in her condition, construction, or appointments.[83] Of course the relations between the tug and the tow may be modified by express agreement,[84] or the reasonable implication arising from the circumstances and nature of the employment in a particular case,[85] so as to make the tug the mere servant of the tow and under its direction; in which case the liability of the tug may be limited to the mere point of furnishing a sufficient motive power for the tow, while the whole responsibility as to the time and manner of making the voyage or transportation will rest with the latter.[86]

3. Duties After Disaster — a. Duty of Tug. As a general proposition, a tug whose tow is injured or disabled during the towage service, although without fault on the part of the tug, must use reasonable diligence to assist the tow and shield her from additional injury.[87] She is under obligation to do all that is reasonably within her power, according to the particular circumstances of the Inevitable accident, as applied to a case of this description, must be understood to mean an accident which occurs when both parties have endeavored, by every means in their power, with due care and caution, and a proper display of nautical skill, to prevent the occurrence of the accident, and where the proofs show that it occurred in spite of everything that nautical skill, care, and precaution could do. A tug which abandons a tow after she has grounded, leaving her in a position of danger, is liable for the injury resulting, of which the tug's negligence was a proximate cause. The M. D. Wheeler, 100 Fed. 859.

Although the tow agrees to assume all risks incident to unseaworthiness, it is still the tug's duty, after the tow becomes disabled, to make all reasonable and proper efforts to save her and her cargo, or as much thereof as possible. Any violation of such duty will render the tug or her owner liable, not necessarily for the entire value occasion and situation, to complete the towage service, or, if this is impracticable, to carry her tow to a place of safety when this can be done.[88] But the tug is only bound to employ those means which are consistent with her own safety.[89] If the tow, while in the custody of the tug, is wrecked and sunk by reason of the latter's negligence, the duty of rescue, if practicable, is upon the tug;[90] but it is otherwise where the tow is sunk without any fault on the part of the tug.[91] Before the tug can be held liable in damages, it must appear that the tow might have been saved in the exercise of good seamanship if the tug had promptly gone to her assistance.[92] Of course there may be circumstances under which, by reason of stress of weather, the only relief which a tug can afford her tow becomes of an extraordinary character, and therefore salvage service, rather than an incident of the towage contract.[93]

b. Duty of Tow. It is the duty of vessels in tow, where an injury ensues, to do all in their power to make the damages as light as possible;[94] but the party in fault has the burden of showing that the actual results of his fault, as they in fact occurred, might have been diminished by such diligence.[95] If the vessel is beached or sunk, the owner is bound to take charge of her within a reasonable time,[96] and, unless it appears that her value is small, and that she is not worth repairing or raising,[97] the owner is negligent if he does not attempt to repair or raise the vessel.[98]

B. Loss of or Injury to Tow — 1. Liabilities — a. In General — (i) Negligence or Fault of Tug — (A) In General. The owners of a tug are liable for negligence in performing the special duty they have undertaken, and not otherwise.[99] Even if negligent, a tug is not liable therefor where there of the tow and cargo, but for whatever loss is sustained over and above what would have been sustained if reasonable and proper steps had been taken to save her. McCormick v. Jarrett, 37 Fed. 380.

Negligence consists in the want of ordinary skill in navigation, and of the exercise is no direct causal connection between such negligence and the injury to the tow, which resulted directly from intervening causes.[1]

(B) Errors of Judgment. Where the master of a tug is an experienced and competent man, much must be left, as occasion arises, to his judgment and discretion in the management of the tow;[2] and a mere error of judgment on his part will not render the tug liable for the loss of her tow,[3] unless the error was so gross that it would not have been made by a master of ordinary prudence and judgment.[4]

(C) Manning and Equipping Tug. A tug owner impliedly undertakes to furnish a seaworthy vessel,[5] of sufficient capacity and power,[6] and properly of such care and diligence in handling the tow as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in the preservation of his own property. The Samuel E. Bouker, 141 Fed. 480; The Packer, 28 Fed. 156; The Niagara, 20 Fed. 152. And see supra, V, A, 2.

Emergency.—A tug is not to be held liable for the loss of a tow merely because her master, in an emergency, did not do precisely what, after the event, others may think would have been best. If he acted with an honest intent to do his duty, and exercised the reasonable discretion of an experienced master, the tug should be exonerated. The Hercules, 73 Fed. 255, 19 C. C. A. 496; The Mohawk, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,693, 7 Ben. 139. Where circumstances are evenly balanced, which indicate a choice of action in time of danger, the master's decision in the matter of navigating the vessel is conclusive, and, although he may err in judgment, it is not negligence, if he be competent. Vance v. The Wilhelm, 47 Fed. 89 [affirmed in 52 Fed. 602].

Choice of route.—Where the propriety of the general course to be taken by a tow from one port to another depends largely upon the season of the year, the state of the weather, the velocity of the wind, the probability of a storm, and the proximity of harbors of refuge, the choice of a route is usually within the discretion of the master of the tug; and if he exercises reasonable judgment and skill in his selection, he will not be held in fault, although the court may be of opinion that the disaster which followed would not have occurred if he had taken another route. The James P. Donaldson, 19 Fed. 264.

Test of negligence.—The tug cannot be charged with negligence for a mere mistake of judgment. The test is whether the course of her master is in accord with that which other prudent and intelligent men would have ordinarily deemed necessary under similar circumstances. The Packer, 28 Fed. 156. Hypercritical scrutiny into the conduct of the navigation, after the event of the disaster and in the light of that which has happened, is not the test of negligence, but prudent judgment is to be tested by the circumstances as they appeared to the master at the time he was called to act, and not as they appear to the court after the more critical scrutiny than the master could have given to them. The Wilhelm, 47 Fed. 89.

A tug master is entitled to exercise his judgment in making up his tow. The Sweepstakes, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,687, Brown Adm. 509. A request by the masters of a tow to divide the vessels composing it, and take them separately through a narrow channel, would not create an obligation on the part of the tug to do so. The Sweepstakes, supra.

Duties in this respect.— When the master of a tug undertakes to transport a barge, he must supply the means for that purpose. He must not only furnish motive power, but he must direct her location, whether on the port or the starboard side, whether she shall be the inside boat or the outside one, when and how she shall be lashed to other boats, with what fastenings she shall be secured as she is dragged through the water, whether she shall go fast or slow, when, if at all, she shall drop astern, when she shall go to harbor, how long remain there, and what shall be her course of navigation. A vessel using hawsers of great length in towing through narrow channels is bound to use the greatest caution, and must be held responsible for any accident that is caused directly from the unnecessary length of the tow, and must follow such course as not to impede navigation more than would be the case if shorter towing-lines were in use, unless extraordinary conditions of storm or danger compel the maintenance of the long tow-lines, and in such time of storm or danger the care of the tug must be measured by the conditions which exist. duty whether the tug furnishes the line to the tow or the tow to the tug.[17] But when a tug takes in tow a vessel having on board her own officers and crew, who take control and management of the fastening of the tow-line to their vessel, they are bound to see that it is securely fastened; and the tug is not responsible for any failure in this respect.[18] When the tug has full control of the vessels towed, it is her duty to arrange the order in which they shall be towed,[19] to attend to the leading hawser,[20] and to prescribe the distance apart of different tiers.[21] The tug master is bound to arrange his vessels in tow, with the view of securing the safety of all with whom he contracts;[22] and to this end regard should be had to the character of the vessels,[23] the channels through which they are to pass,[24] and all other matters bearing on their safe transportation.[25] A tug will be held in fault for taking in tow more vessels than she can manage,[26] or in undertaking to tow a vessel in circumstances of such difficulty as to indicate beforehand that the power of a single tug will not be sufficient.[27] So also it is culpable negligence on the part of a tug to undertake to tow a vessel if too heavily loaded.[28]

When experts differ as to which of two methods is the safer, the master of a steamer engaged in towing boats is not to be deemed guilty of negligence or want of skill because he towed such boats two abreast, instead of in single file, through a dangerous place. When notice is given that a boat is unfit to go in the front tier, those who make up the tow are bound to take notice thereof; and if put in the front tier without the captain's consent, it will be at the risk of the tug. The Niagara, 20 Fed. 152. In The Bordentown, 16 Fed. 270, it was held that a simple objection or protest by the captain of the tow against being put in the hawser tier was not sufficient to relieve him of joint liability, it appearing that his objection was not on the ground that his boat was unfit for that place, and that he did not object to go along with the tow in that position.

start with such speed, and so sudden a jerk, as to wrench the tow-line, is a want of reasonable care and skill.[29]

(F) Excessive Speed. It is the duty of a tug to employ such rate of speed only as is reasonably safe to her tow, considering her character and condition.[30]

(G) Stranding or Running Ashore or Aground. A tug undertaking to tow a vessel is bound to know the proper and accustomed waterways and channels, the depth of the water, the nature and formation of the bottom, whether in its natural state or changed by excavations, and is responsible for any neglect to observe and be guided by these conditions,[31] whereby the tow is grounded,[32] stranded,[33] or run ashore.[34] But where the stranding or grounding was not caused by negligence on the part of the tug she is not liable therefor.[35]

(H) Collision. A tug is bound to use all the care and diligence which prudence and caution require to avoid bringing the tow in collision with objects which may cause its injury or destruction.[36] As a general rule the vessel in tow is under the direction of the tug, and if obedient, and a collision occurs, whether between the

Duty to watch and warn tow.— It is the duty of the master of the tug to keep watch to see that the tow is following so as to keep inside the channel (The N. and W. No. 2, 102 Fed. 921), and, if he sees the tow steering directly into danger, to warn her against it (The Inca, 130 Fed. 36 [affirmed in 148 Fed. 363, 78 C. C. A. 273]; The Atlas, 12 Fed. 798).

Duty to sound.— The tug is bound to know the channel and to keep the tow in the deepest water, and she must resort to sounding where the ordinary lights and landmarks are obscured. Rules applicable in collision cases.—A vessel engaged in towing is responsible to the tow for at least the same degree of care and diligence as she is bound to exercise to avoid injuring other vessels (Nelson v. The Goliah, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,106), and hence, where the tow is injured by being brought into collision with another vessel, the question of the tug's liability is to be deter-

tug and her tow,[37] between the tows,[38] or between the tow and a third vessel,[39] the tug will be held responsible for the damage, unless the collision occurred without her fault.[40] But where both vessels are exclusively under the control, direction, and management of the master and crew of the tow, the tug is not liable for a collision.[41] Where those in charge of the vessels, respectively, jointly participate in their control and management, both will be liable if the collision was caused by the fault of both, or either, if it arose from his fault alone.[42] It is no excuse that the collision could not have been prevented at the moment it occurred, if measures of precaution have been neglected which would have rendered the accident less probable.[43] Of course it is the duty of the tow when she is placed in peril by the movements of the tug without any fault on her own part to avoid the collision if she can;[44] but when a vessel is placed in a perilous position through the fault of another vessel she is not to be held to strict rules of navigation.[45]

The tug being the motive power, the law regards her as the dominant mind in the transaction, and makes her responsible for all accidents resulting from not exercising ordinary care. The J. P. tug while passing up or down a river [46] or through a draw.[47] So a tug will be liable to her tow for the damage caused by colliding with a pier, dock, or wharf while negligently attempting to enter [48] or pass out of [49] a harbor, or to effect a landing.[50] If the collision appears to have resulted from unavoidable accident rather than from the negligence of the tug, the latter is not liable.[51] Nor is the tow entitled to recover where it appears that the injury resulted from the negligence of her own master and crew.[52]

(J) Striking or Running on to Rocks or Other Obstructions. When the tug has the control of the navigation of both vessels, those in charge must know the channel, the depth of the water, the currents, the tides, and the ascertained obstructions in the locality where they attempt to go.[53] Therefore if the towing vessel negligently strikes an obstruction, the presence of which is well known, or may reasonably be expected, the towed vessel may recover for damages sustained,[54]

Duty of master.— The master of a steamer which undertakes to tow boats up and down a river where piers of bridges impede the navigation is bound to know the width of his steamer and her tows, and whether, when lashed together, he can run them safely between piers through which he attempts to pass. Germania Ins. Co. v. The Lady Pike, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 22 L. ed. 499. He is bound also, if it is necessary for his safe navigation in the places where he chooses to be, to know how the currents set about the piers in different heights of the water, and to know whether at high water his steamer and her tows will safely pass over an obstruction which in low water they could not pass over. Germania Ins. Co. v. The Lady Pike, supra.

Navigating on wrong side of river.— Even if properly handled, a tug will be held liable for a collision between her tow and a bridge pier due to the fact that the tug was navigating on the wrong side of the river, in violation of the rules. The Three Brothers, 162 Fed. 388.

Breaking mast in passing under bridge.— The master of a tug does not exercise reasonable prudence in attempting to take a tow under the Brooklyn bridge when it is high tide, or nearly so, knowing that at mean high tide there is a margin of safety not exceeding one foot between the mast of the tow and the bridge, and the tug is liable for the damages caused by the breaking of the mast against the bridge. unless the accident happened while the tug was in the exercise of ordinary care and skill.[55] But it is well settled that a towing vessel is not negligent when the tow strikes an unknown obstruction in a regular channel.[56] She is bound nevertheless in the exercise of reasonable prudence in navigation to follow the usual and customary channels, and to observe the recognized authorities as respects sailing directions;[57] and for any injury to the tow resulting from an unnecessary deviation from the customary channel the tug is liable,[58] although the obstruction causing the accident was previously unknown.[59]

(K) Navigation Through Ice. An ordinary engagement of towage is no justification for towing in such ice as makes towage dangerous,[60] or towing in the night-time when the ice cannot be distinguished far enough ahead to avoid injury.[61] But to make a tug liable for keeping on through running ice, it must appear that the error was one which a careful and prudent navigator would not have made in the circumstances.[62] If there is no reason to apprehend danger from the ice

Departure at risk of tug.— Any unnecessary departure from the customary channel is at the risk of the tug. The Nathan Hale, 91 Fed. 682 [reversed on the facts in 99 Fed. 460, 39 C. C. A. 604]; The S. W. Morris, 59 Fed. 616; The Strathay, 27 Fed. 562. The general knowledge that a certain course was the proper course to take in consequence of some obstructions, and that it was the custom uniformly to adhere to that course, is sufficient to put upon the tug the risk of departing from it without reason. The Mascot, 48 Fed. 917 [affirmed in 57 Fed. 512, 6 C. C. A. 465]; The Mary N. Hogan, 35 Fed. 554.

Where a tug exercises her option as to the course, she is bound to the strictest care, and must be charged with liability for the loss in the absence of evidence to show that the tow was not properly following. The Triton, 129 Fed. 698, 64 C. C. A. 226.

Excusable departure.— In the case of The Belle, 89 Fed. 879 [affirmed in 93 Fed. 833, 25 C. C. A. 623], the tug was excused from liability upon special grounds only, namely, that by various excavations by the government and private parties, the channel had been considerably widened within a few years previous to the disaster and the course of navigation considerably changed, the old route being largely obstructed, thus forcing traffic to the westward.

Error of judgment.— Where both tug and tow entered upon the towing with full knowledge of the risk of navigation by reason of ice and the injury to the tow resulted from a mere mistake of judgment upon the part of the tug, she was not responsible. The Packer, 28 Fed. 156. The tug is not to be held liable upon conjecture, nor is negligence to be imputed to those in charge merely be-the tug is not liable; [63] but if the danger is obvious, the tug is liable for any injury thereby resulting to the tow, unless she exercises that degree of reasonable skill and care which the circumstances require.[64] And especially is this true where the tug continues against the protest of the tow master.[65] If the latter, knowing the circumstances, elects to go through the ice, he assumes the risk of injury,[66] and if the tug is guilty of no negligence, no liability attaches to her therefor.[67] But such assumption of risk does not relieve the tug from the consequences of her own negligence.[68] In the case of an independent contract to tow a boat through ice, or of a contract deliberately made with reference to such circumstances, a tug will not be held liable for starting upon such an undertaking; but only for some negligence or want of due care and skill in the execution of it.[69]

(L) Stress of Weather. Tugs are not liable for loss of tows resulting from proceeding into open waters in rough weather, unless the decision of their masters to do so was one which nautical experience and good seamanship would condemn as inexpedient and unjustifiable under the circumstances then prevailing.[70] They are not, however, to be exonerated merely because they acted honestly; [71] it must appear that they acted with an honest intent to do their duty, and in the exercise of the reasonable discretion of experienced navigators.[72] The question is whether the weather conditions were such at the commencement of the voyage as to justify an experienced navigator, exercising ordinary prudence, and familiar with the ordinary conditions of the proposed voyage, to undertake the trip,[73] in view of cause it appears, after the event, that the accident might not have happened if something had been done which was omitted. The question is whether they did all that other prudent and intelligent men would have ordinarily deemed it necessary to do under the same circumstances. The Packer, supra.

Choice of route.— Where the propriety of the general course to be taken by a tow from one port to another depends largely on the season of the year, the state of the weather, the velocity of the wind, the probability of a storm, and the proximity of harbors of refuge, the choice of a route is usually within the discretion of the master of the tug; and if he has exercised reasonable judgment and skill in his selection he will not be held in fault, although the court may be of opinion that the disaster which followed would not have occurred if he had taken another route. The James P. Donaldson, 19 Fed. 264. It has been held no breach of duty for a tug to take a raft of logs outside Nantucket shoals, instead of through Vineyard sound, where up to that time only one raft of logs had been taken through Vineyard sound, and that was a much smaller raft than the one in tow, which was of such weight as to sometimes overcome the power of the steamer. If the weather is fair when the start is made, and there is no reason to anticipate danger, a tug is not liable for injury to or loss of the tow due to rough weather. the qualities of the tug and the character of the tow.[74] Delay in entering upon the performance of the contract, whereby a tug and her tow are overtaken by a storm, renders the tug liable for the consequences,[75] unless under the circumstances such delay cannot be regarded as the proximate cause of the loss.[76] If prudence requires the tug to take soundings,[77] to anchor her tow,[78] to put back,[79] or to seek shelter [80] she will be responsible for the damages to the tow resulting from a failure to do so.

(M) Casting Off, Anchoring, or Landing Tow. The duty of a tug to a tow is a continuous one from the time the service commences until it is completed, and she is not justified in casting off and abandoning the tow,[81] unless the situation

To justify a start in bad weather the case must present exceptional circumstances in the staunch character of the tow itself, and the shortness of the trip; while the tugs should not only have full general fitness for the work, but such a reserve of power for service in emergencies as will fully offset, and prevent, the dangers expected to be met by ordinary tugs and tows in bad weather. In re McWilliams, 65 Fed. 251 [affirmed in 74 Fed. 648, 20 C. In Mason v. The William Murtaugh, 3 Fed. 404, it was held that, by reason of open hatches and other openings in the deck of the barge in tow, which was loaded with coal, she was unfit and unseaworthy for a trip across the bay of New York, in the state of the wind and tide then existing; that the unfitness and unseaworthiness were perfectly obvious and presumably known both to the owner of the tow and tug; and that it was negligence to undertake the trip in the weather then existing. And see The Bordentown, 40 Fed. 682. In The W. J. Keyser, 56 Fed. 731, 6 C. C. A. 101, the voyage was commenced at night. The barge was not known by the master of the tug to be in an unseaworthy and unfit condition. The openings in the deck were covered by loose planks. There were hatch covers and tarpaulins aboard the barge to cover the openings, and there was nothing unusual in the weather.

Temporary abandonment to attend to other tows.—If the tow is in good order, well manned, and securely anchored in a proper place, in the absence of special reason to the contrary, it is a common practice for the tug to leave it temporarily, and take other work; and if, during such temporary absence, the tow is swept away by an extraordinary storm, the tug is not liable for the loss. A tug is not chargeable with negligence in not knowing of a hidden projection, dangerous to her tow, at a landing place selected by such tow, and which, from its evident actual use as a landing place for such a tow, it was rea-and to keep such watch over the tow as to enable her to render whatever assistance it may need.[89]

(II) Contributory Negligence of Tow — (A) In General. Where both tug and tow are under the control of the tow's master or pilot, the tug is not responsible to the tow for any injury received while their movements are being thus directed.[90] Conversely where a tow is lashed to the side of a tug, and depends wholly upon her for motive power and steerage, the responsibility for the navigation of both is wholly on the tug, and the tow cannot be guilty of contributory negligence.[91] But when a vessel is towed astern, and is in charge of her own officers and crew, the tug has the right to demand and expect the exercise by them of ordinary care and skill [92] in the performance of all those duties which nautical skill demands in order to properly manage the tow.[93] Thus the law is abundantly settled that the tow is bound to follow the guidance of the tug,[94] to keep as far as sonable to infer was suitable for the purpose to which it was put. Powell v. The Willie, 2 Fed. 95.

Where the tug is under the directions of the pilot of the tow, it is the duty of the pilot to order the tug to stop, when fog becomes so dense as to render it dangerous to proceed, and neglect to give such order is contributory negligence, precluding a recovery against the tug for negligently running the tow ashore. If the proximate cause of the loss of the tow was the negligent steering of the tug, it is no defense to the action within the rule as to contributory negligence, that if plaintiffs had done something which they might, and, perhaps, ought to have done, but omitted to do, the accident would have been avoided. offering his boat to be towed, represents her as seaworthy, or fit for the voyage, and sufficiently strong, staunch, and sound to meet and withstand the ordinary perils to be encountered upon the voyage;[4] and the tug is not liable for damages resulting from the weakness, decay, or leaks of the tow, or other defects which render her unseaworthy,[5] and which are not known or obvious to the master of the tug.[6] But the unseaworthiness of the tow is no defense unless it caused or contributed to the injury.[7] Misrepresentations as to the character or condition of the tow, upon which the tug master relies, and in consequence of which the tow suffers injury, relieve the tug of all liability therefor.[8]

(c) Acts In Extremis. The acts and failure to act of the master of the tow after it has been put in extremis by the negligence of the tug do not ordinarily constitute contributory negligence even when erroneous.[9]

The absence of lights on the towed vessel may be negligence. The M. J. Cummings, 18 Fed. 178. It is an act of negligence for a vessel to lie at anchor in the night without proper lights, and the duty is none the less to exhibit the statutory or customary lights when being propelled by another vessel. The Arctic F. Ins. Co. v. Austin, 69 N. Y. 470, 25 Am. Rep. 221. In Silliman v. Lewis, 49 N. Y. 379, the tow did not have the light required by law. It was held that this fact alone would raise a presumption of contributory negligence, but that the want of a proper light was not a defense unless it contributed to the injury.

If improper loading or overloading of the tow contributes directly to her loss, the tug, which has been guilty of no negligence, is not liable. Neal v. Scott, 25 Ind. 440; Connolly v. Ross, 11 Fed. 342. But where a defense is set up that a barge injured by being towed against a sunken pier was too heavily loaded and was too weak, and it is not shown that she was too heavily loaded for a barge which was to perform her voyage without being subjected to the blow which she received, or that she was not sufficiently strong for the voyage she was on, the defense is not available. The Deer, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,737, 4 Ben. 352.

6. The Edmund L. Levy, 128 Fed. 683, 63 C. C. A. 235.

Distinction between obvious and hidden defects.— There is an obvious distinction between defects or unfitness for the voyage, which can be seen and must be appreciated, upon the most casual inspection of the boat, and such as cannot be so seen. If the unfitness consists in what is perfectly obvious to the master of the tug when he takes the boat in tow, then the tug undertakes to use a degree of care measured according to the obvious condition of the boat. Wilson v. Sibley, 36 Fed. 379; Connolly v. Ross, 11 Fed. 342; The William Cox, 9 Fed. 672; Mason v. The William Murtaugh, 3 Fed. 404. If the unfitness is not thus obvious, he undertakes only for that degree of care which is proper and necessary for the management of a sound and seaworthy boat (The Syracuse, 18 Fed. 828; Mason v. The William Murtaugh, 3 Fed. 404), unless the owner of the tow gives notice of her weakness or unfitness (The Syracuse, 18 Fed. 828; The Bordentown, 16 Fed. 270).

Failure to drop anchor, in view of imminent danger, will be deemed an error in extremis, and not an act of negligence. The Oceanica, 144 Fed. 301 [reversed on other grounds in 170 Fed. 893, 96 C. C. A. 69].

(D) Assumption of Risk by Tow. Where the towed vessel consents to a particular method of being towed,[10] or to the use of an unsuitable tow-line,[11] or takes the risk of a particular manœuver,[12] the tug is not liable, in the absence of negligence, for the injuries sustained as a result. So where the tow is discovered to be in a sinking condition, and the tug master promptly offers to take her to a place of safety, which offer is refused by the master of the tow, the tug is relieved of all responsibility for the subsequent sinking of the tow.[13]

(E) Abandonment of Tow by Crew. If those in charge of a tow unnecessarily abandon her, and that abandonment contributes materially to her loss, it constitutes negligence and fault on the part of the tow.[14] But where the tow is left under circumstances which involve imminent peril to the lives of those who remain on board of her, they are justified in abandoning her, and are not guilty of contributory negligence in doing so.[15] So if those on board the tow throw off the lines without authority of the master of the towboat, and damage ensue, to that extent the tow is in fault.[16]

b. Under Special Contracts. The owner of a vessel undertaking a towage service may contract for a more restricted[17] or more extensive[18] liability than the law imposes upon him. But a towing vessel cannot relieve itself by contract from liability for the failure to exercise reasonable care and skill in the performance of the service and for the safety of the tow;[19] and an agreement that a vessel shall be towed at her own risk will not exempt the towboat from liability for damages caused by her own negligence.[20] Such a provision refers merely to the

c. Vessels or Persons Liable. A suit in rem against a tug can only be sustained by evidence of negligence or breach of obligation on her part with reference to the transaction.[26] Consequently where several tugs are successively engaged in the performance of a towage contract, the liability of each begins from the time she is assigned to the service and commences her duties.[27] So where two tugs act jointly in towing a vessel, each is alone responsible for the consequences of her own negligence;[28] but for their joint negligence they are jointly responsible,[29] notwithstanding the fact that one is acting as a helper, under the orders of the master of the other.[30] Where a tug is used without the consent or knowledge of the owner,[31] or where the master does not use her in the service of the owner, or in the course of his employment,[32] the tug is not liable for damages sustained by the vessel towed. The charterer of a tug is liable for the damage caused to her tow by the inefficiency and negligent management of the tug,[33] unless the owner retains the possession and general control, and the direction of the master and crew.[34] While tug owners are responsible to others for the acts of their servants, they cannot hold the latter responsible to themselves for the negligence of each other, resulting in damages to vessels in tow.[35]

2. Actions and Lien For Damages — a. Nature and Form of Remedy. By the weight of authority the claim by a tow against her tug for damages caused by negligent towage is founded in tort, arising out of the duty imposed by law, and independent of any contract made,[36] or consideration paid or to be paid for the towage.[37] Actions for damages for the negligent performance of a towage contract may be either in personam or in rem.[38] The two forms of action should not be joined, but if no objection is made, the appellate court will not interfere.[39]

b. Jurisdiction.[40] Jurisdiction in rem is exclusive in the federal courts, and any act of a state legislature purporting to confer it upon a state court is unconstitutional.[41] On the other hand, jurisdiction over the person in such cases of maritime tort is not exclusively vested in a court of admiralty, but state courts have concurrent jurisdiction.[42]

c. Right of Action. The owner of a vessel under charter may maintain an action against a tug owner employed by the charterer for its injury through negli-

In England and Canada it is held that the admiralty court cannot entertain a cause of damage to a tow, arising from the negligence of the towing vessel, where no collision between vessels occurs. The Robert Pow, Brown & L. 99, 32 L. J. Adm. 164, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237; The Sir S. L. Tilley, 8 Can. L. T. 156. See also The Energy, L. R. 3 A. & E. 48, 39 L. J. Adm. 25, 23 L. T. Rep. N. Moreover a tug is not liable to be proceeded against in rem for damage unless her owners at the time of the accident are personally liable, and could be proceeded against in personam for the damage. 42. Baird v. Daly, 57 N. Y. 236, 15 Am. Rep. 488.

The legislation of congress on the whole subject shows that it was intended in personal suits to allow a party to seek redress in the admiralty court, if he sees fit to do so, but not to make such a course compulsory in any case where the common law is competent to give him a remedy. And this jurisdiction saved to the state courts by the judiciary act of 1789 (1 U. S. St. at L. 76, § 9), is not limited, restricted, or qualified by the act of March 3, 1851 (9 U. S. St. at L. 635), "to limit the Liability of Ship Owners," etc., unless appropriate proceedings are taken thereunder by a party interested to avail himself of the benefit thereof; and hence the courts of a state have jurisdiction of an action for damages resulting from the unskilful operation of a tug. Baird v. Daly, 57 N. Y. 236, 15 Am. Rep. 488 [reversing 4 Lans. 426].

gent towing, even before the expiration of the term of the charter.[43] Where, by the negligence of a tug, the tow and her cargo are damaged or lost, the owners of the cargo may, if they see fit, join with the owners of the tow in an action against the tug,[44] or they may sue separately, at their election.[45] Similarly the bailees of a tow injured by the negligence of a tug may sue the wrong-doing vessel in rem in admiralty, and recover the full damages for the injury.[46] So also an insurer may, in the admiralty, maintain such an action for damages against the offending vessel in his own name after payment of the loss,[47] without proof of abandonment or assignment by the assured.[48] But the fact that the tow is insured does not divest the owner of the right of action for damages for her loss, especially in the case of a mere partial insurance.[49] A recovery by the owner of an insured vessel, lost while being towed, will bar another action for the same cause.[50]

d. Pleading and Parties.[51] A libel for damages caused by the negligent performance of a towage contract should state the particular acts of negligence and misconduct on the part of the tug which produced the injury.[52] But an omission to state some facts which prove to be material but which cannot have occasioned any surprise to the opposite party will not be allowed to work any injury to the libellant, if the court can see that there was no design on his part in omitting to state them.[53] There is no doctrine of mere technical variance in the admiralty,[54] and, subject to the rule above stated, it is the duty of the court to extract the real case from the whole record, and decide accordingly.[55] In order that substantial justice may be done, the court will allow amendments to be made,[56] even at the hearing of an appeal, taking care that no injury be done to either party.[57] Where a tow is injured without its own fault, through the negli-

The insurer in such a case is the party really entitled to the damages, and, as such, the party in whose name action should more properly be brought. The Frank G. Fowler, 8 Fed. 360. There is no privity existing between the insurer and the wrong-doer, and at law he might not maintain an action against him; but in equity the insurer is subrogated to all the rights of the insured, and so acquires his claim against the injuring party. The Liberty No. 4, 7 Fed. 226. And being thus subrogated in all cases where the insured has the right against the authors of the injury, the insurer, on making good the loss, is entitled to enforce the remedy of the insured, although between him and the wrong-doer there is no direct relation or privity of contract upon which to found the action. Averment of negligence.— Where a libel charges that the existence of a sunken pier was known to the tug, and that, instead of avoiding it, the tug towed the barge on it, but does not aver that it was done negligently, and the answer avers that the accident was not the result of any negligence on the part of the tug, and the case is tried on those pleadings, the libellant may amend the libel, by averring negligence, and thus accepting the issue tendered by complainant, and the issue which was in fact tried. e. Evidence[59] — (i) Presumptions and Burden of Proof.[60] Unlike the case of common carriers,[61] no presumption of negligence on the part of a tug arises from the mere fact of an injury to her tow,[62] and the burden rests upon the tow to prove that its loss or injury was due to negligence on the part of the tug in order to render the latter liable therefor.[63] But in some cases the undisputed circumstances of the disaster may constitute a prima facie case of negligence, and put on the tug the duty of explanation.[64] Where a tug is guilty of negli-

The burden of proof does not shift during the trial; but the introduction of evidence may give rise to a presumption of fact, and thus put upon a party the burden of explaining a situation from which, in the absence of explanation, his liability would be presumed. The Bronx, 86 Fed. 808.

If a vessel in tow by one tug collides with a vessel in tow by another tug and is injured, and the two tugs are libeled in one proceeding in admiralty to recover damages for the injuries sustained, the burden of proof is on the libellant to establish negligence against each tug separately (The L. P. Dayton, 120 U. S. 337, 7 S. Ct. 568, 30 L. ed. 669); and admissions in the answer on the part of one tug cannot be used against the other tug to relieve the injured vessel of this burden (The L. P. Dayton, supra).

In cases where no questions are raised as to what caused the accident or the injury, and the circumstances are of such a character as to show that the thing which did happen would not have occurred unless there was negligence upon the part of the person having charge and control of the tug, then the presumption would apply. Pederson v. John D. Spreckles, etc., Co., 87 Fed. 938, 31 C. C. A. 308. But the rule does not apply where all the facts as to the cause of the accident are in dispute, and nothing occurred which of itself tends to show that the tug was at fault. Pederson v. John D. Spreckles, etc., Co., supra.

Where the tugs have accounted for the accident by showing a special emergency, and have definitely described movements not improbable and not necessarily inconsistent with good seamanship, all presumption of negligence from the mere fact of the accident disappears, and the burden is cast upon libellant to establish negligence by a clear preponderance of proof. Baltimore, etc., Barge Co. v. Knickerbocker Steam Towage Co., 170 Fed. 442, 95 C. C. A. 612.

Illustrations.— In the following cases the mere happening of the accident was held, under the circumstances, sufficient to cast gence in navigation, and there is an injury to a vessel in tow, the tug has the burden of proving that the injury was caused by the fault of the tow.[65]

(II) ADMISSIBILITY. As regards the adequacy of the tug, the fitness of the weather on starting, as well as regards seaworthiness in general, the question is a practical one of reasonable sufficiency for the particular trip in the judgment of skilful and prudent navigators, and on this question the custom and practice of nautical men is admissible.[66] Any competent evidence on the question of negligence on the part of the tug is admissible.[67] But where the facts from which negligence is sought to be inferred are within the experience of men of common knowledge and education, expert testimony is not proper.[68] Irrelevant evidence is of course inadmissible.[69]

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. Negligence on the part of the tug must be established by a preponderance of the testimony.[70] In order to prove negligence, it is not invariably necessary that the libellant shall show the specific all the circumstances of the case. The rule is the same in the federal courts where the case is tried before a jury.[80]

g. Damages — (I) In General. The damages in a case of this kind cannot be varied by the form of action adopted.[81] They are such as naturally and proximately arise from the non-performance of the contract.[82] In other words, the damages to be awarded are such as were in the contemplation of both parties when the contract was made.[83] When the tow is capable of being rescued, the measure of damages will ordinarily be the cost of rescuing and repairing her,[84] not exceeding the value of the vessel.[85] If the tow and her cargo become a total loss the measure of damages is the actual market value of the same at the time of the loss.[86]

(II) Division of Damages. In case of loss of the tow due to concurrent negligence on the part of both tug and tow, the damages should be equally divided

Where the injured tow is repaired at the expense of the tug owner, the liability of the tug should be limited to the cost of pumping the tow from the time of the accident till she is taken to the dry dock, the value of any personal property on board the tow, and belonging to the libellant, that is destroyed by the accident, and demurrage from the time of the accident till the time she is let off the ways, after being repaired. between them.[87] The uncertainty as to the degree of fault and its consequences, where both vessels are chargeable with them, brings the case within the reason of the rule of apportionment.[88]

(III) LIEN FOR DAMAGES. A claim for damages arising out of the negligent performance of a towage contract constitutes a lien upon the offending vessel,[89] and in some states such claims are expressly made liens by statute.[90] All parties having liens of this character are entitled to share in the distribution,[91] unless their rights have been forfeited.[92] By the weight of authority, a lien for negligent towage is entitled to priority of payment over liens on the tug for previous repairs or supplies,[93] and for unpaid premiums on insurance.[94] Such liens, in order to

Elder lienor entitled to priority over younger lienor.— Where there are several claims for damages, each arising out of negligence in performing a towage contract, and each claimant arrests the vessel at the same time, the elder lienor is entitled to priority over the younger lienor, unless he has waived or postponed his lien. The Frank G. Fowler, 17 Fed. 653, 21 Blatchf. 410 [reversing 8 Fed. 331].

92. The Battler, 67 Fed. 251, holding that where the owner of tows lost by a tug invited the insurer of their cargoes to join with him in a suit against the tug, and the insurer refused to do so, hut, after the tug's liability had been established by a decree, then filed a separate libel, it had waived its right to share pro rata with the original libellant, and was only entitled to the surplus, if any, after his decree was satisfied.

The argument of the cases holding the contrary doctrine is that, conceding the damages resulting from collision are entitled to priority over claims for supplies and the like, arising ex contractu, still the damages resulting from fault in towage arise substantially from a breach of contract, and are suffered by one who has voluntarily come into contract relations with the towing vessel, as distinguished from one who has exercised no freedom of action, as in a case of collision. And the inference drawn is that the damages, being thus essentially for breach of contract, must rank with ordinary claims arising upon contract, and fall under those arising out of tort, as in collision. retain their priority, must be enforced with reasonable diligence, having reference to all the circumstances of the case.[95]

h. Costs. In accordance with the general rule in admiralty, the prevailing party in this class of cases is generally entitled to costs.[96] They do not, however, necessarily follow the decree, and may be denied,[97] or apportioned,[98] without regard to the ultimate termination of the proceeding.

C. Loss of or Injury to Tug.[99] A tug is not entitled to indemnity for an injury it may sustain during the performance of a towage service unless such injury is caused by the fault or negligence of the tow.[1] If such is the case, and the tug is not guilty of contributory negligence, the tow is liable for the damages.[2] If both tug and tow are at fault, the damages should be divided.[3] Where two rival tugs were endeavoring to get a line to a vessel, and one of them was injured through the fault of the other, the latter was held liable for the damage sustained.[4]

VI. INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS.[5]

A. In General. Want of skill and the failure to exercise care in the management of a tow by a tug, whereby injury is caused to third persons [6] or their

95. The Young America, 30 Fed. 789.

What constitutes laches.— The rule of justice and equity in such a case clearly demands that a comparatively brief period of inactivity, where there was full opportunity for attaching the vessel, should be held to constitute laches sufficient to postpone the prior lien in favor of subsequent lienors, who were thus prejudiced by the delay, and by the want of notice. The Young America, 30 Fed. 789. Thus where libellant caused the formal arrest of a tug in proceedings against it for damages to its tow, his release thereof for the purpose of permitting it to engage in its usual business without any keeper on board was such laches as to postpone his lien to those of subsequent materialmen who furnished supplies without notice of his suit. The Young America, supra. But in the case of The Frank G. Fowler, 17 Fed. 653, 21 Blatchf. 410, where there was a difference of nineteen days only between the time of the accruing of the two liens for negligence in towage, and the tug laid up each night in New Jersey, and only touched at the city of New York at night to report the work done, and there was also necessary delay in ascertaining the first lienor's damage, it was held that this delay of nineteen days was not such laches as should postpone the first lien to the second.

Failure to call attention to specific facts of defense.— Where the answer, although denying negligence, does not call attention to the specific facts on which the defense relies, a dismissal must be without costs. Richter v. The Olive Baker, 40 Fed. 904.

Improper conduct.— It is the practice of courts of equity and admiralty, where the conduct of the successful party has been improper, to deny him costs (Pettie v. Boston Tow-Boat Co., 49 Fed. 464, 1 C. C. A. 314), and in some cases to impose them upon him (Pettie v. Boston Tow-Boat Co., supra). But it should be only in a clear case of oppression or of some malpractice that costs should be withheld (Pettie v. Boston Tow-Boat Co., 44 Fed. 382 [reversed on other grounds in 49 Fed. 464, 1 C. C. A. 314]), as where an extravagant claim is made, and rejected by the court (O'Hare v. The Brilliant, 3 Fed. 719). property,[7] is negligence for which the tug is liable, even though the tow was also at fault.[8] The third party thus injured can recover compensation from either the tow or the tug, if each has been guilty of a fault causing the injury.[9]

B. To Owners of Cargo. Where, by the negligence or fault of a tug, the cargo of the tow is lost or injured, the owner of the cargo is entitled to maintain an action against the tug or her owner for the loss,[10] although there is no privity of contract between them.[11] But if the injury to the cargo is caused by the unseaworthiness of the tow, and the tug is not guilty of negligence, the latter is not liable.[12] If the tug and tow are both negligent, the cargo owner may recover of either his whole damage,[13] unless he has been guilty of contributory negligence in employing a boat obviously unfit for the service, in which case he can recover but half his damages.[14]

B. Special Sense in United States and Canada — 1. Origin and History. In the New England states,[7] in certain middle[8] and western[9] states that have derived their institutions from New England, and in certain Canadian provinces,[10] the word "town" is used in a specific and definite sense to designate a well-known unit of local government.[11] In this sense the towns constituted the original units of local government in New England, antedating the organization of counties and forming the constituent elements of the colonies and states.[12] In their essential nature they have remained unchanged, having undergone only such modifications as have been rendered necessary by time and adaption to changed conditions.[13] It is of towns in this special sense that this article treats.

2. Nature and Status. They are involuntary territorial and political divisions, organized for the convenient exercise of portions of the political power of the state.[14] And they are furthermore quasi-municipal corporations, possessing to a certain extent corporate capacity,[15] and vested with the power to assess and collect taxes for the maintenance of schools and of the poor, for the making and repairing of roads and for other local purposes,[16] and with the general control of matters of local concern.[17] A town possesses only such powers and functions, and is subject only to such liabilities as are provided by statute;[18] and the conferring of additional and special powers upon a town does not convert it into a municipal corporation.[19]

3. Township. The word "township" is used in two senses. In one sense it is used to denote a territory six miles square surveyed and platted by the government surveyors, and divided into thirty-six sections;[20] while in another sense it is employed to describe a subdivision of the county, created by the state legislature and vested with certain powers of local government.[21]

It is in this latter sense of the term that it is used as synonymous with the word "town." [22]

II. CREATION, ALTERATION, EXISTENCE, AND POLITICAL FUNCTIONS.

A. Creation and Organization — 1. CREATION. Subject to such constitutional limitations as may exist in the different states,[23] the power to create towns and townships is vested in the legislatures,[24] and as a general rule may be exercised by either general [25] or local [26] statutes. But where a town has had a long existence and legal recognition, it is validated by prescription, and its existence and power are not open to question, either by a private individual [27] or by the state; [28] and a legal status once established is presumed to continue.[29] In some states the power to create townships is delegated to local authorities, such as county boards of supervisors or commissioners.[30] Unless required by the constitution, the consent of residents of the territory is not essential to the validity ing that townships are not corporate bodies, and under Revisal (1905), § 1318, subd. 30, can exercise only such corporate powers as are authorized by the general assembly; and, while they and other taxing districts are sometimes referred to as quasi-municipal corporations, they are but territorial sections of counties, upon which, for appropriate purposes, power is conferred to perform local governmental functions.

of a statute creating a town.[31] But when the constitution has such requirement, the legislature has no power to lower or diminish the constitutional standard.[32] So the legislature may pass general laws dividing towns into classes.[33]

2. Organization. Upon the creation of a town, its organization is a ministerial function,[34] which may be delegated to a court[35] or board of local officers.[36] The powers of such a court or board are purely statutory,[37] and substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute is both necessary[38] and sufficient.[39] Unless the statute allows an appeal from or review of the acts of the organizing board or tribunal, its action in the premises is final.[40]

3. Territory Included — a. Nature and Extent. The nature and extent of the territory included in a town are subject to statutory regulation.[41] A common provision of a general nature is that no new township shall comprise less than a certain area.[42] And even in the absence of express statutory requirement, the entire territory comprised within the town must be contiguous.[43] Subject to these limitations, however, the validity of its organization will not be affected by any peculiarity of size[44] or shape.[45]

b. Boundaries — (i) Original Location. The original location of town and township boundaries may be made either in the terms of the act of creation[46]

or in the ministerial act of organization.[47] It is sufficient that the boundaries are described with reasonable certainty.[48] If a stream is called for as a boundary the presumption is that the middle of the stream was intended,[49] unless a different location is clearly expressed.[50] Lines running to the sea do not ordinarily include the seashore;[51] but the sound boundary of Connecticut towns follows the high water mark, crossing bays and harbors, of which objects on the opposite shore are visible to the naked eye.[52] A line between two termini or corners is presumed to be a straight line,[53] unless the contrary is clearly expressed.[54]

(II) PERAMBULATION. In some states the selectmen or other officers of adjoining towns are required by statute to go over the common boundary line together at stated intervals and mark such line,[55] the proceeding being known as perambulation.[56]

(III) ASCERTAINMENT AND ESTABLISHMENT OF DISPUTED BOUNDARIES — (A) Jurisdiction. In the event the officials charged with the perambulation of the boundaries cannot agree,[57] or in case of disputed boundaries from any other cause,[58] the power to settle the dispute is vested in some states in the county board of supervisors,[59] but more frequently in the courts.[60]

(B) Procedure — (1) IN GENERAL. The proper proceeding is by petition in conformity with the statute,[61] filed in the name of the town,[62] and accompanied by notice to the other town involved.[63]

(2) COMMISSIONERS. The action of the court is taken through the appointment of commissioners,[64] upon whom is imposed the duty of ascertaining the correct boundary [65] and of reporting their findings to the court.[66] The case is then heard upon the report [67] and exceptions filed thereto,[68] and the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction [69] establishing the boundaries is conclusive.[70]

(3) EVIDENCE. In proceedings to determine town boundaries, the general rules of evidence applicable to other boundary cases will be applied.[71] Furthermore the records of perambulations by the selectmen are admissible,[72] but not conclusive.[73] Other matters admissible in evidence are the boundaries fixed by the proprietors who established the towns [74] and measurements in the deeds of individuals claiming along the town line.[75] So parol evidence is admissible whenever necessary to supplement that of a higher order,[76] and after the lapse of a long period, reputation, hearsay,[77] and acquiescence in the recognized line [78] will be entitled to respect.[79]

(4) COSTS. As a general rule the costs attending the establishment of the correct boundaries will be divided equally among the towns concerned,[80] but

B. Abolition. Existing towns may be abolished by the legislature either expressly [82] or by clear implication,[83] or the power may be delegated by the legislature to county boards.[84]

C. Alteration and Creation of New Towns and Townships [85]— 1. In General. Subject to constitutional restrictions,[88] the legislature has full power to create,[87] abolish, enlarge,[88] diminish,[89] consolidate,[90] and divide [91] towns and otherwise change their boundaries; [92] and may exercise such power directly by either general or local law,[93] or may authorize it to be exercised by local governmental boards [94] or courts,[95] in accordance with general statutory provisions.[96]

"Division" consists of the separation of a township into parts. It does not include the idea of the preservation of any previous organization, form, or shape (Livermore v. Phillips, 35 Me. 184); nor the vacation of a town and attachment of all its territory to other organized towns (State v. Wood County, 61 Wis. 278, 21 N. Unless expressly required by the constitution or statutes, such changes may be made without the consent of the people affected.[97] Lands once annexed to a borough cannot relapse to the township, but must be restored by due proceedings; [98] and diversion of a stream by a private individual cannot change a town boundary.[99]

2. Procedure — a. In General. The course of procedure prescribed by the constitution and statutes for the creation, alteration, or division of towns [1] must be substantially followed,[2] or the proceedings will be void; [3] and where provision is made for the submission of the question to a vote of the people this must be done in the manner prescribed.[4]

b. Petition. Proceedings for township changes are usually begun by petition, which must follow the statute in all important particulars,[5] both as to contents [6] and signatures.[7]

c. Notice. It has been said that the inhabitants of a township have a natural right to notice of an application for its division,[8] but a more exact statement of the law is that the provisions of the statute as to notice must be substantially followed, both as to its contents,[9] form,[10] signature,[11] and manner of service or publication.[12]

d. Commissioners or Viewers. In Pennsylvania a preliminary step in the proceeding is the appointment and report of commissioners.[13] The order appointing them must, in the language of the statute, direct them "to inquire into the propriety of granting the prayer of the petitioners," [14] and must direct them to give notice to the inhabitants of the view.[15] Before undertaking to act, the commissioners must give the required notice of the time and place of meeting; [16] they must go near enough to the proposed boundary line to get an intelligent view of it; [17] and they must direct their inquiry into the expediency of granting holding the act of 1857 applicable to proceedings begun before its passage under the act of 1834.

the petition.[18] The report of the commissioners must follow the statute;[19] it must contain an explicit opinion upon the propriety of granting the prayer of the petitioners;[20] and the commissioners are not authorized to adopt a different line that in their judgment will be more desirable.[21] It must also be accompanied by a map or plat showing both the existing lines and also the proposed new lines.[22] The court cannot alter the report, but if convinced of errors and irregularities therein,[23] may recommit it to the same commissioners, or set it aside and order a new view.[24] Upon its appearing that the report is in proper form and is in favor of an alteration in the township boundaries, it becomes the duty of the court to order the change made[25] or to direct an election by the voters affected by the change,[26] according as the statute may prescribe one or the other method of procedure.

e. Validity of Alteration and Collateral Attack. The proper method of testing the validity of alterations in township lines is by a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose,[27] which may be by quo warranto;[28] and courts usually refuse to consider collateral attacks upon such changes.[29]

escence accompanied by acts creating an estoppel;[35] but it has been held that acquiescence for a few years will not bar quo warranto proceedings by the state to set aside an action clearly illegal.[36]

3. Operation and Effect. A valid alteration of a town or creation of a new town effects a definite and perpetual change in the lines of territorial jurisdiction as established thereby,[37] subject of course to any special provisions or exceptions contained in the statute.[38] Mere change of name, however, works no change in the powers, functions, or liabilities of a town or township.[39] The inhabitants of the new town retain the same status[40] and possess the same rights therein,[41] and the old town and residents thereof lose all powers and rights in the new town except those expressly retained.[42] Officers of the old town resident within the limits of the new are ipso facto ousted from office by the change,[43] and officers chosen for the new town to fill vacancies hold only till the end of the term of the corresponding officers in the original town.[44]

4. Adjustment of Preëxisting Rights and Liabilities — a. In General. A doubtful liability is validated by twenty years' recognition by the people and officers involved in the changes;[48] and it may delegate such apportionment to local boards[49] or to the courts.[50] Where no apportionment of liabilities is provided for by statute, the interested towns may adjust their rights and obligations by mutual agreement, which will be binding on the parties to it,[51] although not necessarily upon the holders of the indebtedness apportioned.[52] In the absence of express apportionment, the old corporation retains sole right to all the general corporate property, except that located within the limits of the territory detached,[53] retains all its former powers, rights, and privileges,[54] and remains subject to all its former obligations and duties.[55] So the title to property held in trust by the old town for particular purposes[56] remains undisturbed, even though the property lies in the detached territory.[57] Where one town is constituted the legal successor of another, liability for the existing debts of the old town attaches to the entire territory of the new, including land that was not a part of the old town,[58] unless this is expressly exempted.[59] Responsibility for debts ordinarily attaches to the territory contracting them,[60] and neither change of name,[61] boundary,[62] nor corporate nature,[63] nor transfer to a different county,[64] will relieve of liability for existing obligations. But in certain cases the detached territory has been relieved of liabilities of the original town of a purely corporate nature.[65] The liabilities subject to apportionment include all those that have attached prior to the division, whether absolute or contingent,[66] and whether ex contractu or ex delicto;[67] but not those contracted subsequent to the territorial change,[68] nor annual charges for light, water, or other expense accruing after the date of the division or alteration.[69] As a general rule liabilities are apportioned among the several divisions into which the town is separated in proportion to the value of property in the respective parts as shown by the last assessment.[70] The mere fact that certain funds were expended within a certain portion does not require that such portion shall assume the entire liability for their payment.[71]

All moneys and funds on hand or due to the old town are held and applied for the use of the new ones in equitable ratio,[72] unless expressly apportioned by statute;[73] and before distribution of any fund all legal or equitable charges against it should be paid.[74] Upon the alteration of town boundaries, new territory included within a town becomes thereby subject to taxation in like manner and to the same extent as territory within the original town,[75] even though such taxation is for the purpose of paying preëxisting debts of the original town;[76] and it does not matter that inconsiderable parts of territory left or detached often escape just taxation.[77] Territory detached from a town remains liable for the payment of all taxes properly assessed and levied upon it before its separation;[78] and where still held liable for the old town's debts

it is subject to its assessment and collection laws, and to no other, for such old debts.[79] A new township formed of parts of old ones is not subject to the local tax laws of any of them;[80] but town territory relapsing by vacation into mere county territory becomes subject to county levies under general law.[81]

c. Enforcement of Rights. Upon the adjustment and liquidation of claims against towns growing out of their division or alteration in their boundaries, mandamus will lie to enforce such claims;[82] and where there has been no such adjustment, resort may be had to mandamus to compel it to be made by the proper parties;[83] or, in case of disagreement, suit may be brought in equity by one town against the other for an accounting and judgment.[84] Assumpsit will lie to recover an amount liquidated by representatives of the two towns,[85] but not to recover taxes collected by the old town and claimed by the new.[86] Upon the extinguishment of a town and the division of its territory among several others, a suit in equity may be maintained by the creditors of the original town to enforce their claims against the corporations succeeding to its property and powers.[87] Contracts for adjustment made between the bodies affected thereby pursuant to statute are not revocable;[88] and the negligence of officers making such adjustment gives no ground for rescission.[89] Payment of a joint obligation is essential to the right of contribution;[90] but where the old town remains solely liable to the creditors for the entire debt, payment by it is not essential to a recovery against the new town of the amount apportioned to it.[91] A claim that an apportionment was made under the wrong assessment is no defense where the amount claimed is less than it would be if made under the right assessment,[92] and a defense sufficient in a state court against an original action therein on town bonds will not avail against an action for contribution in a state court for ratable share of a federal court judgment on such bonds.[93] All such claims are subject to statutes of limitation;[94] but as to a judgment against the old town a portion of which it seeks to enforce against the new one, the statute begins to run only from the time of the payment of the judgment by the old town.[95] Failure for several years to elect officers and to discharge the functions of an organized town will only suspend the enforcement of claims against the town during such time.[96]

III. GOVERNMENT AND OFFICERS.

A. Government in General — 1. POWERS.[3] Although the power of the legislature to make laws governing matters of a general nature is not subject to delegation, yet the legislature may delegate to towns and townships the authority to make laws upon matters of purely local concern.[4] Such grants of authority, however, must be strictly construed,[5] so as to confer upon the towns only those powers expressly granted [6] and such implied powers as are necessary to carry into execution the express powers.[7]

2. LEGISLATIVE CONTROL. The authority to confer powers upon towns and townships likewise implies the authority to revoke them; [8] and even the powers conferred over purely local matters are to be exercised subject to the control of the legislature,[9] which, unless restrained by constitutional limitations,[10] may intervene at any time by direct enactment.[11]

B. Town Meetings — 1. IN GENERAL.[12] Both regular, annual, and special town meetings are subject to regulation by statute,[13] not only as to the business to be transacted,[14] but also as to the manner of conducting them.[15] The authority to make such regulations may be delegated to local governmental bodies,[16] such as county boards; [17] but the statute delegating such powers must be strictly followed, or the regulations made and actions taken under them will be void.[18] Regularity in the organization and action of the town meeting may be questioned only in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose.[19]

2. Application For Special Meeting. It is essential to the validity of actions taken at a special town meeting that the application for the meeting shall be in conformity to statutory requirements,[20] but substantial compliance with such requirements is regarded as sufficient.[21] The judgment of the officer to whom the application is addressed is conclusive as to the qualifications of the petitioners,[22] except upon a review by a competent tribunal in a direct proceeding authorized by law; [23] but upon the filing of a proper petition his duty to call a meeting is not discretionary, but mandatory.[24]

3. Call, Warrant, or Notice — a. In General. Unless the time, place, and objects of a town meeting are fully prescribed by statute,[25] a proper call is necessary to the validity of its transactions.[26] The usual method of calling a meeting is by warrant of the selectmen,[27] or clerk,[28] addressed to the constable [29] or other person,[30] stating the objects of the meeting,[31] the time and place,[32] and directing the giving of proper notice.[33]

b. Time of Notice. Length of notice may be prescribed by statute,[34] or, in the absence of statutory regulations, by reasonable town ordinance;[35] and failure to comply with such requirements as to notice is fatal to the validity of the meeting.[36] If no time is prescribed, reasonable notice must be given.[37] Where notice is required to be given a certain number of days before the meeting, time is usually computed by including the day on which notice is given and excluding the day of the meeting.[38]

c. Posting. Notice is properly given by the posting of either the original warrant[39] or an attested copy thereof[40] at such places as required by statute or town ordinance.[41] The usual requirement is for posting at the town hall,[42] or at the place of meeting,[43] or at a certain number of public places.[44] Such provisions have been construed to require posting, not only at the place named, but also in a position where the notices are likely to be seen.[45] After a meeting has been held, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that notices were properly posted.[46]

d. Return. In the absence of statute or ordinance prescribing the manner in which notice of meetings shall be given and what the officer's return shall contain it is not necessary for the return to state the manner in which notice was given.[47] But where the statute or ordinance particularly prescribes what the return shall contain, the requirements must be strictly followed or the meeting will be invalid.[48] The return shall be signed by the officer in his official capacity;[49] but it may bear date any time after notice and before the meeting,[50] or even the day of the meeting;[51] and may be amended at any time by the officer while yet in office,[52] or even afterward, upon satisfactory evidence shown to the court of the correctness of the amendment.[53] It has been held that the return may consist of a notice filed in the office of the town clerk, together with an indorsement by the clerk,[54] and also that oral evidence of the clerk may be waived to show compliance with the law.[55] So after the lapse of many years presumption will be indulged in favor of proper notice and return.[56]

4. Notice of Business to Be Transacted. In some states the annual town meeting,[57] or an adjournment thereof,[58] is authorized by statute to transact certain items of business without notice of such objects in the call; and in others the annual meeting may transact any business for which the town is at all competent, without such notice.[59] In other states, however, even the call for the annual meeting must contain a statement of the business to be submitted to it,[60] and in all cases only those actions of a special meeting are valid which are within the objects of the meeting as stated in the call.[61] Such statements, however, are liberally construed,[62] and it is only necessary that the general subject-matter of the business to be transacted be described with reasonable certainty in order to authorize actions upon all propositions that are properly,[63] or even incidentally,[64] embraced within it. But the language of the call cannot be construed to include propositions that are excluded either expressly or by clear implication,[65] nor can force or effect be given to expressions so general as not to convey notice of the subjects to which they relate.[66] A separate article is not necessary for every separate item of business;[67] nor does it matter that different propositions stated require different majorities for their adoption.[68] If the proposition stated is one that is likely to require the raising[69] or appropriation of money,[70] no separate statement of these matters is necessary; but a statement of a proposition to vote a tax for a certain purpose does not authorize a vote to borrow money for such purpose.[71] Where the object is stated to be to choose all necessary officers, it will include not only all officers whose election is directed by law,[72] but also all special officers who may be deemed necessary to carry out the ordinances of the town;[73] and is sufficient to authorize the delegation of the election of school officials to school-districts.[74] So statements of propositions to change school-districts are liberally construed.[75]

5. Place and Time. It is essential to the validity of a town meeting that the place and time stated in the call shall be correct,[76] and also that the meeting shall be held at the place,[77] and kept open during the time,[78] prescribed by statute[79] or valid local ordinance.[80] So where the time and place is authorized to be fixed by the warrant or notice, the meeting must be held at the time and place so fixed.[81] "At" a building named means in the building;[82] but the meeting may, by unanimous consent, be held just outside.[83]

6. Adjournments. A town meeting may be adjourned to another time and place, through exercise of inherent power, by action of the meeting itself,[84] or, where authorized by statute, may be so adjourned by the town board.[85] Notice of the time and place to which adjournment is made should be left at the original place;[86] but it has been held that failure to leave such notice does not invalidate actions of the adjourned meeting, where it does not appear that any one was misled by such neglect.[87] An adjourned meeting, being merely a continuation of the original, requires no new call or notice,[88] and may transact any business that was included in the original call.[89]

7. Organization and Conduct. A meeting is properly called to order by the clerk [90] or other person designated by statute,[91] and after the reading of the warrant or notice a moderator should be elected [92] and other necessary officers elected or appointed.[93] While in general the meeting should be conducted in accordance with parliamentary procedure,[94] yet it is not necessary to conform to the strict rules of legislative practice; [95] and a large measure of power is conferred upon the moderator of prescribing rules of proceeding, subject to alteration by the town.[96] Where a particular method is prescribed by statute for action upon certain matters, it is essential to the validity of such action that it be taken in the manner prescribed.[97] The mere fact that the moderator,[98] clerk,[99] or other officer was not chosen strictly in accordance with the proper method will not invalidate any action by the de facto officers, where it is not shown that injury resulted from the irregularity.[1]

8. Voting and Result. General election laws are usually not intended to apply to town meetings [2] unless expressly so applied; [3] and the manner of voting, and of canvassing and declaring votes at such meetings, is usually prescribed by special statute [4] or town ordinance.[5] A vote will not be invalid because of immaterial irregularities; [6] and invalid proceedings may be ratified at a subsequent town meeting [7] or by the legislature.[8] A majority vote of those present is sufficient for the transaction of ordinary business,[9] but a greater majority may be required by statute for certain purposes.[10] A vote to postpone a proposition indefinitely is equivalent to a complete disapproval thereof.[11] Unless expressly authorized by statute or ordinance, no recount of the votes may be had after the adjournment of the meeting.[12]

13. A statute prescribing the time within or ordinance, a motion to reconsider is governed by the ordinary rules of parliamentary procedure.[14] As a general rule the vote of a town meeting upon any business proposition may be received at that [15] or any subsequent meeting; [16] but there can be no reconsideration or rescission of a vote which orders the refunding of money wrongfully collected by the town,[17] or ratifies the borrowing of money already obtained,[18] or constitutes an executed contract,[19] or, in fact, of any vote under which private rights have vested before the reconsideration.[20] The rejection at one town meeting of a proposition for a contract does not prevent its subsequent acceptance if continued or renewed.[21]

10. Record of Proceedings — a. In General.[22] The functions of the clerk of a town meeting are purely ministerial, and it is his duty to record the votes as declared by the moderator.[23] A record book of a town or township containing transactions required to be recorded is prima facie proof of its contents; [24] and certified copies of the town records are also admissible evidence.[25] The entire records will be construed together,[26] and omissions in certain portions may be supplied by other entries.[27] Where the record reads "at a legal meeting," [28] or at a meeting held "pursuant to" call or warrant,[29] it is generally held to constitute prima facie evidence of lawful posting of notice [30] and of all other details of procedure necessary to give validity to the action taken,[31] especially if the record is an ancient one.[32] But some cases hold that such general statements are not sufficient evidence of compliance with all the requirements of a legal meeting,[33] and that the action will be invalid unless the record is amended so as to show the several steps prescribed,[34] or the details are proved by evidence aliunde.[35]

b. Amendment. A defective or erroneous town record may be amended so as to show the actual facts and proceedings,[36] even though the change operate which a motion to reconsider may be made does not make such motion necessary to the validity of the action taken, and the motion cannot be made after the time prescribed. Lewis v. Eagle, 135 Wis. 141, 115 N. W. 361.

to make or unmake a contract;[37] but not so as to defeat vested rights of third persons acquired bona fide after the existence of the defect and before the amendment.[38] In most jurisdictions the officer whose duty it was to make the original record[39] may, upon his own volition and responsibility,[40] make such amendment, either from his own recollection or upon information derived from others.[41] His authority to do this, however, exists only during his continuance in the office in the discharge of which he made the original record,[42] either during the same or a subsequent term.[43] But in New Hampshire the town records may be amended only by leave of court, upon a showing of the truth of the amendment.[44] Since such an amendment is made upon the responsibility of the court, it may be made by the officer even after he has ceased to hold office;[45] but it should always appear upon the record when, how, and why the amendment was made,[46] and the proper form is to annex the amendment, with the order of court allowing it, to an original record.[47] Where the officer making the original record refuses to make the amendment demanded,[48] or is dead,[49] or has ceased to hold office, the proper process is by mandamus against the officer for the time being to compel the correction.[50]

11. Review of Proceedings. As a general rule the validity of town meetings and proceedings is not open to collateral attack,[51] but may be challenged directly by persons pecuniarily interested in their effect[52] in the court and manner provided by law.[53] The proceedings are usually presumed to have been regular and valid until proved otherwise;[54] and original grounds of attack cannot be laid in the court of error or appeals;[55] but it has been held that an intention to ratify the proceedings of a previous illegal meeting will not be presumed and must be clearly shown.[56] In a proper case a certiorari will be issued to review the proceedings,[57] but not in a case where redress may be granted by other means occasioning less public inconvenience.[58]

such powers in the management of township affairs [61] as may be prescribed by statute. The board is a continuing body, preserving its legal entity, in spite of changes in its individual membership.[62]

2. Meetings, Proceedings, and Orders — a. In General. Such boards may exercise their powers only when assembled in their official capacity in valid meeting.[63] As a general rule all members must have notice and opportunity to attend; [64] but such notice is excused as to a member who is absent from the township and cannot be reached,[65] and formal notice is not essential where all the members of the board are present at the meeting and participate in the proceedings.[66] They may appoint such officers as are necessary for the orderly transaction of business, as a secretary; [67] and their proceedings are subject to the ordinary rules of parliamentary procedure.[68] In the absence of evidence to the contract presumption will be indulged in favor of the validity and regularity of proceedings,[69] but all facts necessary to confer jurisdiction must affirmatively appear.[70]

b. Power of Part of Members. A single member of a town board may perform such ministerial functions of the board as have been delegated to him; [71] but discretionary powers cannot be exercised by one member or any number of members acting or speaking separately or in meeting not duly notified and assembled.[72] A majority of the board,[73] when properly assembled and organized, in either regular or special [74] meeting, constitutes a quorum and may discharge the functions of the board.

3. Records. Town boards speak by their records,[75] which may be made and kept either by a regular, or a temporary clerk.[76] Such records are not required to be kept with formal precision, and presumption is usually indulged in favor of their regularity and sufficiency; [77] but the records are not admissible as to proceedings beyond the jurisdiction of the board.[78]

4. Parol or Extrinsic Evidence of Proceedings. As a general rule, only the records of the board may be consulted for evidence of its proceedings;[79] but parol evidence has been admitted to supplement the records,[80] and where no record was made of the meeting, the action taken has been allowed to be proved by a paper embodying such action subsequently made and signed by the members.[81]

D. Officers — 1. Creation and Abolition of Offices.[82] Within constitutional limitations, the legislature has full power in the creation and abolishing of town offices,[83] and by abolishing a town may thereby oust the officers thereof before their terms provided by the constitution have expired.[84] The towns themselves do not possess the power to create or abolish offices,[85] unless such power has been expressly delegated to them by the constitution or by statute; [86] but a town may refuse by majority vote binding on the minority to exercise its right to representation in the general assembly.[87] remaining township officers whose functions relate to the entire township must be chosen by vote of the township, including the city.[92]

3. Eligibility of Officers. The qualifications of persons eligible to town offices are usually prescribed by statute,[93] and as a general rule no other or greater qualification will be required than is expressly prescribed.[94] In Maine one may be eligible to a town office, although not a citizen of the United States;[95] but residence in a town is usually essential to qualify one for office-holding in it,[96] and the period of residence required cannot be computed by tacking on to the present period a former residence which had been abandoned.[97] Unless expressly excluded,[98] all persons within the class named as eligible are qualified, even judges or clerks of the election,[99] and persons holding other offices.[1] A provision that no person who has held office for a certain number of terms or years shall be eligible to reëlection operates from the time it takes effect to render ineligible for reëlection persons who have served the number of terms or years stated before that time,[2] but does not prevent such persons from holding over until the election of a successor where there was a failure to elect at the proper time;[3] and a statutory disqualification "hereafter" for a part of a given period refers to a period accruing after the act takes effect.[4] That a person was eligible to hold an office at the time he was elected and began to serve will not authorize him to continue to hold it after his period of eligibility ceases.[5] Acceptance of one town office does not operate as a resignation of another;[6] and a provision that one officer shall not be eligible to another office[7] not only renders him incapable of holding the office, but even of being elected to it.[8]

4. Election or Appointment and Qualification — a. Election or Appointment in General.[9] The whole subject of the selection of town officers, whether by election or appointment,[10] and the time, place, and method of procedure of such selection,[11] are usually definitely and fully prescribed by statute; and an election not held in accordance with the statutes confers no title to office.[12] In some states the elections for town officers are governed by the general election law;[13]

but in others they are governed by special laws applicable only to town elections.[14] In case of doubt in the statute the courts lean to construction giving election for all principal officers;[15] but not for mere agents or under officers.[16] Provision is usually made for elections at the annual town meeting;[17] but in some states it is competent to elect officers at an adjourned session of the regular annual meeting,[18] or even at a special meeting called for the purpose.[19]

b. Certificate of Election. The vote is usually canvassed by the officers of the meeting or by a board of commissioners,[20] and an officer has no authority to act until he receives a certificate of his election;[21] but a certificate issued by the proper authorities constitutes prima facie evidence of his title to the office.[22]

c. Qualification. Before entering upon his duties, an officer must usually take the oath of office,[23] and in some cases is required to give bond and security.[24] Where the person elected has been discharging the duties of the office it will be presumed that he was properly sworn until the contrary is proved;[25] but if it be established that the person elected failed to take the oath of office, he is not an officer de jure, and has been held personally liable for his acts.[26]

5. Records and Other Evidence of Election and Qualification.[27] The official records of the town constitute the best evidence of the election and qualification of officers,[28] and oral evidence is not admissible in a collateral proceeding to vary or contradict such records.[29] Nor, as a general rule, is other evidence, either documentary or oral, admissible in a collateral proceeding to supply defective records, until it is shown that the record containing the best evidence is lost or destroyed, or is otherwise inaccessible.[30] An exception is made in special cases in which it is no longer possible to correct the record in the usual way, as through lapse of time or the death of the clerk who made it;[31] but unless a case can be brought within this exception, the proper proceeding is by mandamus to compel the correction of the record.[32] In certain cases, especially those involving the question of whether a person acted in an individual or in an official capacity, the official capacity of a town officer is established prima facie by evidence that he has openly discharged the functions of the office,[33] or even by the testimony of the officer himself.[34] Statutes requiring the keeping of records of election and qualification of officers are usually construed to be merely directory as to matters of detail,[35] and presumption in favor of regularity of action by officers will supply minor defects in records of election [36] and of qualification.[37]

6. De Facto Officers. An officer de facto is one who, under color of election or appointment, assumes an office and performs its functions,[38] although not regularly and constitutionally chosen [39] or qualified.[40] He is to be distinguished, on the one hand, from an officer de jure, who is in all respects legally chosen and qualified; [41] and, on the other hand, from a mere usurper of an office without any color of right,[42] or one who holds over wrongfully after his term has expired and his successor has been elected.[43] The acts of an officer de facto, within the scope of the office he assumes to occupy, are valid and binding both on the town [44] and on third persons.[45] Neither his title to the office nor the validity of his acts can be attacked collaterally;[46] but his right to the office may be questioned by a quo warranto against him, or in a suit by him the authority to prosecute which is dependent upon his official position.[47]

7. Failure or Refusal to Qualify or Serve. If an officer elect fails to file oath and bond within time required by mandatory statute he will be presumed to have abandoned his office; [48] but not so while an election contest is pending,[49] nor where his time for qualifying is not limited,[50] nor where the statute prescribing time is merely directory.[51] Payment by a town officer elect of a statutory penalty for refusing to serve is no defense to a mandamus to compel service,[52] and due notice of election is equivalent to formal demand for service.[53]

8. Term of Office, Vacancies, and Holding Over. The terms for which town officers shall serve are usually fixed by the constitution[54] or by statute.[55] It is abhorrent to the law, however, that there should be a vacancy in office,[56] and such provisions are usually construed to mean that an incumbent shall hold over until the lawful election and qualification of his successor.[57] The official terms of the first officers of a township accepting incorporation under general law are fixed by the statute in operation at date of acceptance;[58] and where the constitution requires town officers to be elected by the electors or appointed by some local authority, an act extending the term of town officers cannot apply to one already elected.[59] Where the terms of two officers expire and provision is made for the election of only one, the reëlection of one of the incumbents will operate to end the term of the other,[60] and where there is only one vacancy and two officers have an equal right to hold over, neither will be recognized.[61] The erection of a portion of a township into a borough or city operates in some states to create vacancies in those township offices the incumbents of which reside in the city,[62] while in other states such incumbents continue as at least de facto township officers.[63]

9. Resignation, Disqualification, and Removal. A town or township office may be vacated by death, resignation, or removal, resignation being either a formal and voluntary surrender of the office,[64] or an informal abandonment by disqualification resulting from change of residence,[65] while removal is the act of superior authority,[66] which is usually the appointing power.[67] It is usually provided by statute that a removal of a township officer from the town shall operate to vacate his office;[68] and, even in the absence of statute, removal generally has this effect.[69] In other cases, however, it has been held that removal in itself does not operate to vacate the office.[70] So in some cases it has been held that a change of boundaries which leaves the residence of the officer outside the township will operate to vacate his office,[71] and in other cases that it will not.[72] Formal resignation should be addressed in writing to the proper officer,[73] but oral declarations by an officer of his intention to remove from the town, accompanied by his actually leaving it, have been held to create a vacancy.[74] It has also been held that a vacancy in office from resignation is not complete on acceptance, but requires appointment and qualification of a successor.[75]

10. Appointment to Fill Vacancies. Authority to appoint to a vacancy in town or township office is derived only from express statutory provisions,[78] and can be exercised only by the officer or board designated,[77] on the condition expressed,[78] and in the manner,[79] and at the time prescribed.[80] Under the statutes of some states, the appointee holds for the remainder of the unexpired term,[81] while in others he holds only until the next annual election.[82]

fixed by the towns themselves;[83] but in the other states in which township government exists, the salaries are usually fixed by statute.[84] In all cases where the salaries of officers are fixed by statute, an officer is not entitled to receive or retain any larger amount than that prescribed for any services rendered, however meritorious,[85] nor for any expenses incurred in the execution of his office,[86] even though such additional amount has been contracted for or allowed by the town board;[87] nor can his salary be reduced by action of the local board.[88] Where no salary has been fixed, the officer is not entitled to any compensation,[89] nor can compensation be presumed on the principle of quantum meruit,[90] nor from the payment of other officers,[91] nor from the custom of other towns.[92] But where a certain rate of compensation has been fixed, an officer is entitled to pay for time and services reasonably necessary for the performance of the duties imposed by law.[93] An officer is not entitled to the emoluments of his office accruing before his qualification,[94] nor is he entitled to receive pay from the township for services to the county,[95] nor to a double per diem allowance for different services to the town on the same day[96] nor for services on the same day to both town and county;[97]

and while he is in default for public funds, no claim for his services is suable against the town.[98] A county officer performing township official duties is not entitled to the fees paid the township officer before abolition of the office.[99] An officer is entitled to fees for making all records within the scope of his official duty,[1] including records of events occurring before his term begins;[2] but, in the absence of contract, not for supplying records lost or destroyed.[3]

12. Authority and Powers — a. In General.[4] Since the whole modus operandi of town organization is committed to the legislature, it has power to fix and limit the powers of town officers and to modify them at will.[5] Town and township officers are agents of limited authority, having only those powers which are conferred by statute either expressly,[6] or by necessary implication;[7] and all persons dealing with them must, at their peril, take notice of this limit of authority.[8] Nor can discretionary powers conferred upon a board be exercised by an individual member.[9] But where an officer is vested with the statutory power to perform an act, its performance by him in an unauthorized manner or at an unauthorized time will not relieve the town of responsibility to third persons who dealt with the officer without knowledge of his violation of authority.[10] In some states certain officers are ex officio vested by statute with powers and duties regularly belonging to officers in other positions,[11] and the towns are, to a certain extent, authorized to confer upon one officer the powers regularly belonging to another officer;[12] but an officer himself does not possess authority to delegate discretionary power vested in him.[13] Overseers of highways and road commissioners are public officers rather than agents or servants,[14] and, although their functions may be limited to a portion of the town, they may be officers of the town,[15] or of the state.[16]

b. Prosecution and Defense of Actions.[17] In the absence of special provision, the governing board of a town or township has authority to represent it in bringing and defending civil actions at law and in equity,[18] and, as an incident to the exercise of such power, may employ counsel;[19] or by statute or local ordinance such power of representing the town may be vested in a general agent[20] or other officer.[21] Officers on whom process is by statute to be served may employ counsel to defend,[22] at least until they can lay the case before the town board or town meeting,[23] and in general officers may employ counsel and institute suits where necessary for the performance of the duties imposed upon them.[24] Except as already stated, however, there is no implied power vested in any town officer, by reason of his position, to institute or defend actions on behalf of the town;[25] nor have any officers the authority to bind the town by a contract employing counsel in a suit in which the town has no direct interest.[26] Criminal prosecutions are a matter of special statutory provision, and authority to institute them is usually vested in separate officers,[27] whose power is limited to that expressly given.[28]

13. Duties and Liabilities.[29] Town and township officers, within the scope of ministerial duties imposed by statute or ordinance, are liable in damages for injuries to third persons by reason of their malfeasance, misfeasance,[30] or even their nonfeasance;[31] and in addition may be liable to the town for statutory penalties.[32] In the discharge of discretionary duties, however, they are not liable to third persons for errors of judgment,[33] but only for acts done maliciously,[34] corruptly or wantonly,[35] or without authority.[36] Town officers will not be liable for the wrongful conduct of other officers appointed by them, but not subject to their control or accountable to them;[37] nor will officers be liable in their official capacity for errors of judgment[38] or nonfeasance[39] in matters not pertaining to the discharge of their official duties.

14. Accounting — a. In General. It is the duty of all fiscal officers of a town to keep strict account of all public funds coming to their hands,[40] to make regular settlements with the proper officers,[41] and to account for such balances as may be found due;[42] and they will be liable in an action of conversion for all funds wrongfully received or retained by them,[43] or paid out without authority.[44] A settlement by a town officer with the auditing officials is final and conclusive as against the officer,[45] unless appealed from,[46] and even on appeal will not be modified except on the ground of fraud or mistake;[47] but such a settlement will not preclude the town from recovering funds remaining in the hands of the officer and not accounted for in the settlement.[48]

b. Appeal From Settlement With Auditors. The settlement with township auditors required by the Pennsylvania statute of all township fiscal officers may be appealed from within thirty days [49] by either the officer or a taxpayer to the court of common pleas,[50] but not to the supreme court.[51]

c. Settlement With Successor. The funds received by a town fiscal officer are held by him in a fiduciary capacity,[52] and should be kept separate and distinct, and as such turned over by him or his personal representative to his successor.[53] The retiring officer is not absolved from liability to the town by his successor's falsely charging himself with funds not paid over,[54] nor by his successor's acceptance of his note in lieu of cash,[55] unless such settlement is authorized or ratified by the town.[56] The incoming treasurer has authority to maintain an action against his predecessor for town funds,[57] and is himself chargeable with all moneys for which he has given a receipt,[58] but not for money charged to him without his knowledge in a settlement made by his deputy where such money has never been paid over by his successor.[59]

d. Actions For Official Default or Delinquency. Unless otherwise directed by statute,[60] actions to recover public moneys or property must be brought in the name of the corporation,[61] and it has been held that such actions may be in debt,[62] or in assumpsit for money had and received,[63] and that they are governed by the usual rules of pleading,[64] and subject to the usual defenses.[65] Mandamus is the proper proceeding to compel official accounting; [66] and a petition for removal of an officer for official delinquency is not barred by previous dismissal of similar application.[67] The treasurer's books and accounts are admissible in evidence,[68] and also the oral testimony of the outgoing and incoming treasurers,[69] and of other officials who examine the accounts or participate in the settlement; [70] and it has been held that such a suit against the officer opens up the entire account and permits him to introduce evidence of other errors to balance those claimed by the town.[71]

15. Liabilities on Official Bonds — a. In General. Town and township officers are not mere bailees of public funds, but hold the legal title to such funds,[72] and, together with the sureties on their official bonds, are absolutely liable to account for all sums received by them in virtue of their office.[73] Sureties have accordingly been held liable for failure of the principal to account for all public moneys received by him during his term of office, even before the date of the bond;[74] for those received or disbursed after the expiration of his term, but before his successor was elected and qualified;[75] for those received during his previous term of office,[76] unless they were shown to have been converted by him during that term;[77] for taxes collected in excess of amount due;[78] for the amount of an official warrant drawn in his favor, although for more than was properly coming to the town under the law;[79] for a sum omitted by mistake from settlement;[80] for money borrowed by him for public use;[81] for moneys lost by theft,[82] bank insolvency,[83] or loans to individuals without authority,[84] or paid to the wrong officer,[85] or out of one fund on a claim against another fund,[86] and for shortage of his predecessor which he has not taken steps required of him by law to collect;[87] but his sureties are not liable for moneys not pertaining to the officer's office voluntarily received by him,[88] for moneys not belonging to his office but ordered by mistake to be paid to him,[89] for his failure to pay to his assignee his salary,[90] for moneys retained to reimburse himself for lawful advances,[91] for lawful credits omitted in settlement,[92] for township paper issued without consideration,[93] nor for breach of bond not required by law.[94] Formal approval of a bond is not essential to its validity;[95]

nor does misrepresentation by the principal release the sureties;[96] nor can they unsettle his liquidated accounts except for fraud or mistake.[97] The sureties have been held liable on a bond given to an individual obligee, described as "town clerk," with penalty payable to "the said town clerk or his successor in office,"[98] but not on a bond executed to the state instead of to the town.[99] Under Indiana statutes the courts have ruled that sureties are liable for conversion by the officer for public money loaned by him on a note payable to himself;[1] but not for money used by him in his own business,[2] unless he fails to account for it or pay it over at the end of his term.[3] For unlawful contracts made by the officer,[4] or his failure to make annual report[5] or other delinquency, the sureties are liable only for actual damages sustained by the town, unless an additional penalty is imposed by statute.[6]

b. Actions on Bonds — (I) PARTIES. As a general rule actions for breach of town official bonds must be brought in the name of the town;[7] but in some states they are brought in the name of the state upon the relation of the town,[8] and wherever the authority to sue is vested by statute in a particular officer the suit must be in his name,[9] or upon his relation.[10] In some cases it has been held that suit is properly brought in the name of the officer to whom the bond was executed, or in that of his successor,[11] or even in the name of the official custodian of the funds sued for.[12] Suit may be brought upon the relation of an officer in his joint capacity as trustee of a civil and of a school township for money belonging to one fund applied to the use of the other;[13] but in a suit brought by him in one capacity, he cannot recover funds belonging to him in the other.[14] A mere taxpayer occupying no official position is not competent to bring suit on an official bond.[15]

(II) PLEADING. Complaints have been held fatally defective for want of specific allegation of fact showing breach of bond,[16] and in actions for failure to pay over, for want of allegation of expiration of term and election of successor;[17] but a single count has been held sufficient to cover funds of civil and school townships, both of which were covered by a single bond,[18] and allegations in different paragraphs of the same complaint will be read together.[19] In reply to an answer claiming settlement with successor, fraud in such settlement is not sufficiently alleged in a statement that defendant did not in fact pay over the money to his successor, but fraudulently procured the latter to charge himself with it on promise of immediate reimbursement.[20]

actions on town bonds are: That the township had received a dividend on a claim filed by it in a proceeding to wind up the affairs of an insolvent bank, where its funds had been deposited;[21] that a predecessor from whom money should have been collected was insolvent where no allegation is made of insolvency of his bondsmen;[22] that a township board upon settlement had accepted notes payable at a future day;[23] and that the officer had disposed of the public money otherwise than authorized by law.[24]

(IV) EVIDENCE. Official books and vouchers of the officer are competent evidence both for and against his sureties.[25] So a report of an officer showing a shortage is prima facie evidence of such shortage in a suit against his sureties on his bond,[26] but it is not conclusive;[27] in the absence of a showing of fraud, however, the report of an officer charging himself with a balance as turned over to him by his predecessor is conclusive in favor of such predecessor and his sureties.[28] Where no claim is made on account of a particular fund, evidence of payments on account of such fund is not admissible;[29] but in an action for conversion of several funds, the amount of each fund actually received and expended is admissible under the general denial.[30] An allegation of the receipt of a sum of money is not sustained by evidence of the receipt of coupons from bonds.[31]

16. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY. Criminal liability of town officers for official misconduct is wholly regulated by statute,[32] and statutes imposing penalties for failure to account for public funds,[33] and for other acts or negligence,[34] are construed strictly,[35] yet with a view to effectuating the intent of the legislature.[36] Indictments for such offenses must of course aver the particular acts which are alleged to constitute the offense;[37] and trials will be governed by the ordinary rules of evidence in criminal cases.[38] parks,[41] commons,[42] and sites for public buildings;[43] and it may also acquire title to coast lands and fishing rights;[44] but as a general rule it has only an easement, and not the fee, in land acquired for a public highway.[45] Title by prescription or adverse possession may be acquired by the town through acts or possession in its corporate capacity,[46] but it is not established by mere acts or possession of its officers and inhabitants, without corporate authority.[47] Within the scope of its corporate powers, a town may also acquire title to personal property.[48] So a town may in its corporate capacity hold property in trust, subject to the usual requirements as to certainty of the beneficiaries,[49] and of the objects for which it is to be used;[50] but it has been held that in the absence of statute a town clerk cannot ex officio hold property in trust.[51] Where the manner of acquiring property is prescribed by statute, substantial compliance with the terms of the act is necessary,[52] and sufficient[53] to the validity of title.

2. Leases. Power on behalf of the town to purchase land includes the power to lease.[54] Selectmen or other officials have no authority, by virtue of their office,[55] to execute leases, but may be given such authority by statute,[56] or by vote of the town;[57] and a vote of the town recorded by the clerk is a sufficient compliance with the statute of frauds.[58] A valid lease by one board binds its successors,[59] but an invalid lease is not ratified by electing the lessee to office.[60]

3. Regulation and Improvement. A town may, by vote duly taken at a town meeting, provide for the improvement and regulate the use of its property,[61] or delegate such power to its officers;[62] but it may not impose penalties for trespass beyond the authority granted by statute.[63] to erect a town hall,[64] or to lease quarters for use as such; [65] and it may exercise such power either through its governing board,[66] or through a special committee appointed for the purpose.[67] It may also have power to erect schoolhouses [68] and poorhouses,[69] and other needful public buildings; and the early New England towns frequently erected and owned houses of public worship.[70]

5. Disposition of Property. Within the limitations prescribed by statute,[71] a town may dispose of its property by grant, or may authorize sale and conveyance by the town board,[72] or by a special officer or committee appointed for the purpose.[73] A conveyance, to be valid, must be made in the manner prescribed by statute [74] or local ordinance, and by the proper officer or officers,[75] if acting in the proper capacity,[76] and within the time authorized.[77] A grant to a private person for a purpose of public conveyance will be construed liberally; [78] but title may be conveyed subject to restrictions,[79] and a grant of the rights and privileges of real estate on certain conditions has been construed not to convey the fee, but only a lease for an indeterminate period.[80] In case of a void contract of sale, a court of equity may grant suitable relief to both parties.[81]

6. Releases. A town, by vote of a majority of the electors, may release a doubtful claim,[82] or part of a debt by way of compromise,[83] but not an admitted debt by way of gratuity against the dissent of a minority.[84] The selectmen, or other officials constituting the governing board of a town or township,[85] have no authority ex officio to release debts [86] or causes of action [87] in favor of the town or township.

B. Contracts — 1. Capacity to Contract in General. A town may enter into valid contracts within the scope of its general corporate functions,[88] or of special authority conferred by statute.[89] But towns will not be bound, even by express vote of the majority, to the performance of contracts not within the scope of the objects and purposes for which they are created,[90] nor authorized by special statute.[91] One, however, who has received benefits under a contract with the town cannot escape payment therefor under a plea that the contract was ultra vires.[92]

Within the scope of the powers expressly conferred by statute [93] or by vote of the town,[94] and within the scope of such implied powers as may be reasonably necessary and proper for the discharge of functions committed to them,[95] town boards and other town officers may make contracts binding on the town. But they do not possess general authority ex officio to contract on behalf of the town,[96] and contracts made by officers beyond the scope of the authority thus defined are absolutely void.[97]

Authority to contract on behalf of the town,[98] especially in the case of individual[99] or special[1] officers, will be strictly construed; and all persons dealing with town officials are presumed to have notice of their limited authority.[2] Where a contract is authorized to be made by the town board, it is necessary to its validity that it be made at a meeting of the board regularly called, with opportunity for all members to be present.[3] A town is liable for money furnished upon an authorized loan, although it is embezzled by the officer to whom it is paid;[4] but the fact that money or supplies were applied to the use of the town will not validate an unauthorized contract or loan.[5]

b. Contracts by Part of Board. Where discretionary power to contract is conferred upon a town board, or is vested in a certain number of officials,[6] a contract made by an individual[7] or by a smaller number than that prescribed,[8] is invalid; but a majority of the board at a meeting duly called may act for the town in the making of contracts as in other matters,[9] and ministerial authority to direct work under a contract may be delegated to an individual.[10]

3. Making, Requisites, and Validity of Contracts. A town or township contract is complete and binding as soon as a valid proposition by one party is accepted by the other.[11] Compliance with requirements prescribed by statute[12] or local ordinance is essential to the validity of contracts; but in the absence of

4. Unauthorized or Illegal Contracts — a. In General. Where a contract is void because ultra vires[16] or illegal,[17] no recovery can be had against the town for benefits received; but it has been held that a third party cannot plead ultra vires to action on a contract that has been executed on behalf of the town,[18] and also that the contracting party is entitled to the unexpended balance of a special fund raised and appropriated for the work done.[19] If the contract is void, not because ultra vires, but merely because executed by officers beyond the scope of their authority, it is held in some cases that the town is liable to the extent of benefits which the town has received thereunder;[20] but by the great weight of authority, in the absence of ratification by the town,[21] such liability is denied,[22]

as all persons are presumed to have notice of the extent of the authority of public officers.[23]

b. Ratification. While a town cannot, by ratification, give validity to ultra vires contracts made by its officers,[24] it may ratify unauthorized contracts within the general scope of its corporate powers.[25] Ratification may be inferred from the acceptance by the town of a report of the unauthorized contract,[26] from the direction to bring suit for its enforcement,[27] and under some circumstances, from acquiescence and acceptance of benefits;[28] but as a general rule, mere acquiescence is insufficient,[29] nor will any action taken by the town without full knowledge of the contract constitute a ratification thereof,[30] nor can there be a ratification of a contract made by an officer not acting in his official capacity as the representative of the town.[31]

5. Implied Contracts. Contracts with a town may be implied upon familiar principles where services are rendered with the expectation of reward induced by actions on the part of the town or its officers.[32] But none will be implied from a mere notice that compensation is expected;[33] nor from receipt of benefits;[34] nor from the existence of a defectively executed express contract;[35] nor from the rendering of services in pursuance of other employment;[36] nor is the town under an implied obligation to refund fees illegally exacted by an officer, but not accounted for to the town.[37]

6. Construction and Operation. Where, from a consideration of both the signatures and the body of a contract executed by town officers, it appears to be made on behalf of the town, it will be construed to be the obligation of the town.[38] In accordance, however, with the general rule of law which distinguishes between the liability of a private agent and that of a public officer or agent,[39] an officer is not personally liable on a contract made by him in his own name on behalf of the town, whether authorized[40] or not,[41] unless the contract clearly indicates an intention to bind him,[42] or personal liability is imposed by statute.[43]

43. Declaration in action under statute must state facts sufficient to bring case terms and specifications in contracts which they had original authority to make,[44] but not in other contracts.[45] The right to rescind a contract with the town can be exercised only by the town itself or authorized officials,[46] and not by mere citizens and taxpayers.[47] Contracts existing between towns for the maintenance of bridges over a river separating them are discharged by the division of the towns concerned.[48]

C. Liabilities — 1. Town Expenses and Charges and Liabilities in General. A town is liable for all expenses and charges imposed upon it by statute [49] or local ordinance,[50] or incurred by officials acting within the scope of their authority,[51] including costs and attorney's fees in suits by and against the town,[52] and money paid for use by one secondarily liable;[53] and a town or corporate board will be liable for the debts of its predecessor;[54] but a town is not liable for money paid out or services rendered in its behalf by mere volunteers,[55] even though requested by officials acting beyond their authority;[56] nor for services rendered under other employment;[57] nor for expenses of officials beyond their authority,[58] or not reasonably necessary for the discharge of their duties;[59] nor is a township liable in one capacity for expenses properly chargeable to it in another capacity.[60]

Under Vermont statute, making towns liable for default or neglect of officers, they have been held liable for negligence of clerk in failing to keep a proper index to records (Hunter v. Windsor, 24 Vt. 327), and for failure to disclose upon inquiry an encumbrance of record of which he had knowledge (Jarvis v. Barnard, 30 Vt. 492; Lyman v. Windsor, 24 Vt. 575); but they have been held not liable for failure of clerk to index a record, where plaintiff was not misled by such failure (Lyman v. Edgerton, 29 Vt. 305, 70 Am. Dec. 415), or for mere statements and representations of the clerk respecting the records (Lyman v. Edgerton, supra). defendant had no property and thereafter none could be found on diligent search warrant judgment for default;[73] nor is it competent to show in mitigation of damages that the creditor may yet, by new process on his judgment, get satisfaction out of defendant's property;[74] nor can the town reduce damages for the officer's default by the sum of his expenses incurred by him in prosecuting another officer for unlawfully taking property from him;[75] but evidence of plaintiff's lack of diligence in pursuing his remedy after the officer's default is admissible in mitigation of damages.[76] Actions against the town for trespass by officers require proof of authorization or ratification by the town;[77] and actions for negligence of officers demand the same quantum of proof as other cases of this class;[78] and when the facts leave the negligence in doubt, they should be submitted to a jury for verdict.[79] Such actions may be brought against the town after the officer's death,[80] and suit may be brought against the town and the officer jointly,[81] or against the town alone without first proceeding against the officer.[82]

usually by a decided majority,[13] or it may be forbidden only to the extent of incurring indebtedness therefor,[14] or of imposing a tax beyond a certain rate.[15] And in granting such aid, it is competent for a township to prescribe reasonable conditions aside from those fixed by constitutions and statutes, compliance with which shall be a prerequisite to receipt of the aid.[16]

3. BORROWING MONEY. The town board, or other officers of a town, have no authority ex officio to borrow money on the credit of the town,[17] and loans contracted by them are void,[18] unless expressly authorized by statute,[19] or by vote of the town.[20] Where authority is derived from a statute, substantial compliance with the terms of the act is necessary,[21] and sufficient[22] to give validity to the loan. In some cases towns have been held liable for money borrowed by their officers without authority, upon proof that it was used for legitimate town purposes;[23] but by the weight of authority, such use alone is not sufficient without subsequent ratification by the town of the action of its officers in borrowing and applying the funds.[24]

4. Unauthorized Debts or Expenditures. As a general rule the legislature, within the limits of its power to authorize town debts and expenditures, may ratify those already contracted;[25] but it has been held that, where a vote of the people of the town is necessary to authorize a debt, the legislature cannot validate a debt contracted in reliance upon an invalid election, without a resubmission of the matter to the people.[26] Officers cannot be compelled to pay out money upon the strength of an illegal vote,[27] and expenditures made in obedience to such a vote may be recovered[28] unless duly ratified by subsequent action of the town.[29]

B. Administration of Finances — 1. In General. The officers entitled to the custody and control of town funds are designated by statute.[30] The proceeds of town bonds sold by an officer are the property of the town and not subject to be taken for the officer's individual debts;[31] money once paid into the town treasury is presumed, in contemplation of law, to remain therein until legally paid out;[32] and officers are responsible for money paid to an alleged town treasurer where no such office existed.[33] Town officers do not possess authority ex officio to loan town funds,[34] but may be given such authority by statute[35] or by vote of the town. An illegal loan made by its officers, however, does not prevent the recovery of the money by the town;[36] and a loan is to be distinguished from a mere deposit of funds at interest but without obligation to continue it for any specified time.[37] The general purposes for which town funds may be expended are also usually prescribed by statute;[38] but so long as the expenditures are within the general objects prescribed, the discretion of the town,[39] or of the officials,[40] cannot be controlled by the courts. Allowances in the nature of fees and commissions made to officers without warrant of law may be recovered by the town.[41] The publication of accounts of receipts and expenditures may be required by statute,[42] and a provision for publication in pamphlet form is not complied with by reading the account at a town meeting.[43]

2. Appropriations and Payment of Debts in General. It is necessary to the validity of all appropriations and payments of town moneys that they be made in the manner,[44] out of the funds,[45] and for the purposes authorized by law.[46]

It is also essential that the officers who make such appropriations or payments of town moneys shall be legally authorized to do so.[47]

3. Warrants, Orders, and Certificates of Indebtedness — a. In General. The method commonly provided for the disbursement of town funds is by warrants or orders drawn on the treasurer by the selectmen,[48] supervisors,[49] or other officers who may be authorized.[50] They may be made payable upon the completion of work or other contingency;[51] but are not binding on the town unless drawn by the proper officers,[52] within the scope of their authority,[53] for an authorized purpose,[54] and payable out of proper funds.[55] The payment of void orders or certificates of indebtedness cannot be enforced,[56] even though a tax has been collected for their payment.[57] Warrants constitute prima facie acknowledgments of town indebtedness,[58] but do not bear interest,[59] unless by special provision under statutory authority.[60] They may be negotiable in form;[61] but if illegally issued they cannot be enforced against the town even by a subsequent bona fide purchaser.[62] In some states the indorsee of a valid warrant may sue in his own name,[63] but in others suit may be brought only in the name of the original payee.[64]

An indorser is liable, however, to his immediate indorsee, in an action for money had and received, to the extent of the consideration which passed between them.[65] Warrants are usually payable in money, but may be made receivable for taxes;[66] they can be discharged by payment only to the payee or to his order;[67] but when properly paid are functus officio, and cannot be again issued in payment of other debts of the town.[68] Demand is a necessary condition precedent to suit for the collection of a warrant;[69] but where payment is refused on other grounds, exhibition of the instrument is not requisite to a valid demand.[70] The enforcement of warrants may be barred by the statute of limitations,[71] or by laches;[72] but limitations will not begin to run until the right of enforcement accrues.[73]

b. Personal Liability of Officers. Officers are not personally liable upon orders or warrants issued by them on behalf of the town,[74] even where they have exceeded their authority.[75]

C. Notes and Bonds — 1. Bills and Notes. To the extent that towns have authority to borrow money they may issue notes as evidence of their indebtedness.[76] But officers have no authority ex officio to issue notes binding on the town,[77] or to execute renewals of those outstanding;[78] and notes issued by them without authority are not enforceable against the town, either in the hands of the original payee,[79] or of a bona fide indorsee for value,[80] unless the act of the officers in issuing them has been ratified by the town.[81]

2. Bonds and Other Securities — a. In General. As a general rule towns have no inherent authority to issue bonds,[82] and can derive such authority only from statutory enactments, either general[83] or special.[84] Bonds issued by them therefore are not valid, if there has been a failure to comply with any of the requirements of the statute as to the purposes for which they were issued,[85] the conditions

b. Aid to Corporations. Constitutional provisions have been adopted in some states forbidding political subdivisions of the state, including towns and townships, to issue bonds in aid of railroads and other corporations.[94] Even in the absence of such provisions, towns do not possess the power to issue bonds for corporate aid,[95] unless such power has been clearly conferred by statute.[96] The granting of aid to private or quasi-public corporations, being beyond the ordinary functions for which townships are organized, the validity of bond issues for such purposes can be sustained only by at least substantial compliance with all the provisions of the statute authorizing the issue;[97] and the bonds will be void if the contingency upon which their issue was authorized has not happened,[98] or if the conditions precedent have not been complied with by the town and its officers, or by the corporations,[99] or if the consent of the voters has not been duly at the face value, or on deferred payments without interest, of bonds which provide for payment of accrued interest, is void. Ft. Edward v. Fish, 156 N. Y. 363, 50 N. 94. Effect of constitutional provision on issues already authorized.— Under a petition by which a subscription to a railroad and the issues of bonds was authorized only upon the construction of the railroad through a certain village, a contract by the commissioners to deliver the bonds upon construction of the road and the execution and delivery of the bonds in escrow to be delivered to the corporation upon completion of the road, the contract and bonds were rendered void by the adoption of a constitutional provision forbidding corporate aid before the construction of the road as provided (Falconer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 69 N. Y. 491 [affirming 7 Hun 499, and affirmed in 103 U. S. 821, 26 L. ed. 471]); but where the petition gives the commissioners power to fix the terms of subscription, and they subscribe to a certain amount of stock and issue bonds and deliver them in escrow to be delivered to the corporation upon the construction of the road, the rights of the corporation have so far vested that the contract is not affected by the adoption, before the construction of the road, of the constitutional provision forbidding corporate aid (Cherry Creek v. Becker, 123 N. Y. 161, 25 N. E. 369 [affirming 2 N. Y. Suppl. 514].

obtained, where this is required,[1] or the bonds have not been issued by the proper officers,[2] or if the bonds have not been issued within the time prescribed by law.[3] A vote which authorizes a subscription to one railroad is not sufficient to give validity to a subscription in aid of another, even though the two roads have been consolidated between the taking of the vote and the subscription;[4] but where the subscription has been made before the consolidation, the subsequent issue of bonds to the consolidated corporation has been sustained;[5] and it is sufficient that the name of the company to which the subscription is made and the description of the route in the petition and other proceedings are substantially correct.[6] Under statutes authorizing the issue of bonds to pay for subscriptions to corporate stock, a sale of the bonds for cash is not required, and they may be delivered to the corporation at a valuation of not less than par in payment for the stock subscribed;[7] but where they are forbidden to be discounted or sold below par, the deduction of a commission from the par proceeds renders the sale void.[8] Where signatures to a petition or votes at an election have been secured in favor of a bond issue by false and fraudulent representations and assurances, the issue of the bonds will be enjoined at the suit of the taxpayers defrauded;[9] but a complaint of fraud in the election comes too late after the bonds have been issued, or liabilities have been incurred or other subscriptions made in reliance upon the vote.[10]

c. Ratification and Estoppel to Question Validity. Bonds invalid when issued for want of statutory authority may be legalized by subsequent legislative act;[11] but it has been held that the legislature is without power to validate bonds that are void for want of authorization at a legal election,[12] as it cannot create a debt against a town without its consent. the issue of bonds, all further authority of commissioners appointed to issue the bonds is at an end;[26] but agents appointed under a void statute to issue bonds are not personally liable for proceeds received by them and applied as directed by the statute.[27]

d. Payment and Compromise. Bonds are discharged by payment,[28] or by destruction with consent of the holder;[29] and, when once discharged, may not be reissued.[30] Where the proceeds of certain taxes have been set aside by statute as a sinking fund for the payment of the bonds, the town is entitled to have them so applied rather than resort to a sale of the stock of the railroad that it has received in exchange for the bonds in order to pay the bonds.[31] Bonds of doubtful validity may be made the subject of compromise when authorized by statute.[32]

e. Actions. In an action to enforce town bonds, the declaration must show compliance with the conditions and procedure necessary to their validity;[33] but the inclusion of matters constituting surplusage does not warrant a demurrer.[34] While all the proceedings of a town in the issuance of bonds are subject to scrutiny by the courts, yet, as a general rule, the determination of questions of fact by a popular vote will not be disturbed.[35]

D. Taxation and Other Revenue[36] — 1. In General. Subject to constitutional limitations,[37] the legislature, in the exercise of its plenary power over taxation, may delegate to towns and townships the authority to impose taxes within their respective limits,[38] and may prescribe the purposes for which such taxes may be levied,[39] the amount that may be raised or the limit of assessment,[40] the persons and property subject to assessment,[41] and the machinery of assessment and collection.[42] In some states the levy must be made in either the annual town meeting[43] or in a special town meeting called for the purpose,[44] while in others the authority is vested by statute in the town board;[45] but in neither case may the power be delegated by the meeting or by the board to a committee or to other officers than those designated by statute.[46]

2. Persons and Property Liable. The persons[47] and property[48] subject to town taxation are in general prescribed by statute. All property within town or township limits is subject to assessment for common charges,[49] unless excepted by statute.[50] Where part of a township has been erected into an incorporated city the property within the city may,[51] or may not,[52] be subject to assessment for township purposes, the usual test being whether or not there is a common interest in the purpose for which the tax is levied.[53]

3. Purposes of Taxation. Within such limits as may be prescribed by the consitution and statutes,[54] towns and townships possess full power and discretion in the assessment and collection of taxes for general corporate purposes.[55] Authority to raise funds for "town purposes," "town expenses," or "town charges" applies to the ordinary expenses of the town government incident to the discharge of its distinctively corporate functions in a legitimate and appropriate manner,[56] and does not include many purposes for which it may be proper and even necessary for the township to raise funds.[57] Because of their subordinate and limited powers,[58] and because the taxpayers are entitled to know whether the taxes levied are for a legal purpose,[59] the purposes for which they are levied must be stated with reasonable certainty, and must appear on the records of the town.[60] In New England [61] and in some other states [62] no more particular statement of the purposes of such taxes is necessary than that they are for town charges [63] or town expenses,[64] but in some states a more particular statement of purposes is essential to the validity of the tax.[65] In some states taxes may be assessed only by vote of the town,[66] and in others the authority to make the levy and assessment is vested in the town board,[67] or even in the county board; [68] while in at least one state the original power is vested in the town electors, with authority in the town board to act when the electors have failed to do so.[69] If the levy is made by the town board without authority,[70] or if the amount voted or levied is in excess of the legal limit,[71] the levy is void, and tax-sales and deeds based upon it are likewise void.[72] But the validity of an authorized levy for one year is not affected by a levy made at the same time for two additional years without authority.[73]

Where taxes have been properly voted at a town meeting, a failure of the town board to direct their levy will not invalidate the action of the assessor in spreading them upon his roll.[74] The levy should be made upon the basis of the latest assessment.[75] Where the method of assessment and levy is not prescribed by statute, the assessment for state and county purposes may be adopted as the basis of the levy,[76] and in some states this is required by statute.[77] It is necessary to the validity of a tax that the records of the town meeting [78] or board meeting [79] at which it was voted shall show affirmatively substantial compliance with all statutory requirements; [80] but defective records may be amended by the proper officer [81] or by order of court upon parol or other sufficient evidence.[82]

4. Assessment. Substantial compliance with the statutes is necessary [83] and sufficient [84] as to the persons and property assessed,[85] basis of valuation,[86] and form [87] to sustain assessments for town taxes. Where a tax has been voted to continue from year to year, assessment for it may be made annually without further vote,[88] and an assessment will be presumed to be valid until the contrary is shown; [89] but an officer is under no obligation to include an assessment for a tax not legally voted,[90] and even long continued usage will not invalidate an assessment list illegally made out.[91]

5. Collection — a. In General. A town or township may enforce collection of a valid tax in the statutory mode,[92] but only by the officer thereunto duly authorized.[93] In some states the collector of town taxes derives his authority directly from the statutes,[94] while in others he derives his authority from actions of the town meeting and town board, and is subject to the general direction of the board.[95] Taxes are payable only in cash;[96] and if the collector surrenders the receipt in exchange for anything else, he becomes personally liable for the payment of the tax.[97] County commissioners have no inherent power to suspend the collection of a township tax duly levied and placed on the tax duplicate;[98] but under a statute giving the selectmen general supervision of the concerns of the town[99] they may not only suspend collection of an illegal tax, but may bind the town by a promise to repay.[1] An action cannot be brought to enforce a tax until all the steps required by statute have been taken;[2] but there is a general presumption in favor of the validity of a township tax,[3] and in a suit to collect taxes for the payment of bonds it will be presumed that the bonds are valid.[4] A declaration against a delinquent is sufficient which by fair and reasonable construction shows a substantial cause of action,[5] but not so as to one failing to aver a verified statement by the town treasurer.[6] A defective certificate may be amended on trial by the clerk so as to conform to the town record, if introduced in evidence,[7] but not otherwise.[8]

ground for an injunction,[33] and injunctions have also been refused upon allegations that the railroad subsidized was not one legally eligible to subsidy,[34] that votes were obtained in favor of the subsidy by public notice of an illegal agreement with another company,[35] that the tax levied was slightly in excess of that voted,[36] that the claim to the tax had been assigned by the railroad,[37] that the railroad company has released from the payment of the tax those persons who had paid a subsidy that had been previously levied and declared void,[38] that the indebtedness for the payment of which the tax was levied was incurred through bad and reckless management of town affairs,[39] and that the road has not been constructed within the time limit;[40] nor will injunction lie to restrain what has already been done;[41] nor is it permissible in a petition for injunction to question the finding of the town board upon a question of fact necessary to give the board jurisdiction to order the election.[42] So acquiescence by a taxpayer for a considerable time, combined with large expenditures by the corporation in reliance upon a vote in its aid, will work an estoppel;[43] but not acquiescence in frauds of which the taxpayers were ignorant.[44] A corporation in whose aid a tax has been voted is a necessary party defendant to an action to enjoin the tax,[45] and where the town officers have refused to make or permit any defense, a taxpayer may be admitted as a party defendant.[46] A petition for an injunction to restrain the levy or collection of a tax,[47] or a complaint in a specific action to prevent misappropriation of town funds,[48] must state facts sufficient to show the illegality of the action sought to be enjoined; but harmless error in the admission of evidence is not ground for reversal.[49] Judgment in favor of the validity of a bond issue rendered in one suit brought by taxpayers to test its validity is conclusive upon all taxpayers who then reside or may thereafter reside in the town.[50] Interpleader is a remedy open to one whose identical property is rated in two towns at the same time;[51] but not to one whose property is taxable partly in one and partly in another town,[52] nor to a trustee merely to be informed in which one he is taxable.[53] have been presented to,[55] and allowed by,[56] the proper officers,[57] assembled in a legal meeting [58] and acting substantially in the manner prescribed.[59] Under such statutes the action of the county board of supervisors,[60] or even of a town meeting,[61] in assuming to audit and allow a claim against the town, is void; and under a constitutional provision forbidding the legislature to audit and allow any private claim, the legislature is without power to pass upon the validity of claims against a town.[62] Personal appearance of claimants before the board is not necessary,[63] nor is it necessary that claims be supported by sworn evidence,[64] unless required by statute; [65] and the board may act upon its own knowledge of a claim.[66] A

Effect of refusal to allow claim.—Ohio Rev. St. § 4715, provides that road superintendents may enter upon uncultivated or improved lands unencumbered by crops near public roads and carry away gravel necessary for the improvement or construction of such road, and that the owner shall be paid a reasonable compensation therefor, to be assessed by the township trustees. Held, that where gravel was taken from one's land under section 4715, and an amount allowed therefor by the township trustees was satisfactory to the landowner, and the claim was certified to the county commissioners because in excess of twenty-five dollars as expressly required by section 4745, who refused to allow it, the claim still remained a valid claim against the township, which could be enforced by civil action if the trustees declined to make a levy for its payment. certificate as to the allowance [67] or rejection [68] of the claim should be issued by the board and filed with the town clerk.[69]

B. Interest. Claims against towns are governed as to the allowance of interest by the same general rules that prevail in the settlement of accounts between individuals.[70]

C. Conclusiveness of Audit and Review by Courts. The board acts in a semi-judicial capacity,[71] has a large measure of discretion in accepting or rejecting claims,[72] and its action is conclusive upon all parties [73] until reversed in a proper proceeding.[74] The board is without power to reconsider or amend its own action duly taken in allowing a claim;[75] but the same board, at a subsequent meeting, may reconsider its action in disallowing a claim.[76] Provision may be made by statute for a review of the action of the town board by the county board of supervisors,[77] and a proper and usual method is by certiorari; [78] but as the action of the board is of a judicial nature, mandamus will not lie.[79] In proceedings to set aside claims that have been allowed, the claimants are necessary parties,[80] and the provisions of the statute are controlling as to notice [81] and procedure.[82]

selectmen have authority, by virtue of their office, to settle claims against the town,[83] and, in their discretion, to submit them to arbitration.[84]

E. Payment. Town claims and orders are usually payable in money;[85] and, by agreement of the parties, may be made so payable, even though originally payable in merchandise or commodities.[86] The receiving of an order by the claimant, where not accepted in full payment,[87] does not preclude him from bringing suit for the balance alleged to be due.

VII. ACTIONS.

A. Capacity to Sue and Be Sued. Towns and townships, being merely quasi-corporations,[88] have no inherent capacity to sue and be sued;[89] but in such measure only as may be expressly conferred, which under some statutes is full,[90] and under others is limited and partial.[91] In some states towns are mere governmental agencies having no capacity of suit.[92]

B. Rights of Action. In those states in which towns have capacity to sue and be sued actions by them have been sustained in ejectment to recover possession of town lands,[93] in trespass quare clausum fregit for encroachments on land used for school purposes,[94] for use and occupation of land under a void lease by the town,[95] for breach of official duty by town officers,[96] for the enforcement of promissory notes received by them within the scope of their corporate powers,[97] and for numerous purposes within the general scope of their authority;[98] but it has been held that a town may not sue in ejectment to recover lands granted by an individual to a missionary society,[99] nor to enforce a bond exacted by the township committee acting under special authority conferred by the legislature;[1] nor, when not owning the fee in a highway, to set aside a contract relating to its control made between the highway officers and a private corporation;[2] nor, when not charged with protection of the public health, to suppress a public nuisance constituting a menace to the health of its citizens;[3] nor, in general, to enforce duties owing, not to the town, but to the state or other subdivisions thereof.[4] Towns have been held liable in assumpsit for money paid to them by mistake,[5] for money collected under a void assessment,[6] and for the amount determined by settlement to be due an officer.[7] For the enforcement of an order on the town treasurer, mandamus, and not assumpsit,[8] is the proper remedy. In New York it has been held that the remedy against towns to enforce claims arising upon contract is by mandamus to the board of supervisors,[9] and not by action on the contract;[10] but that an action may be maintained upon a certificate of indebtedness made an absolute liability of the town without the necessity of submission to audit.[11] The right to enforce a liability or prosecute a claim against a town may be given by vote of the town,[12] but no action can be based upon such a vote unless strictly within the terms of the resolution adopted.[13]

C. Management and Compromise of Litigation. In New England, in the absence of regulation by statute or local ordinance, the power on behalf of the town to compromise suits by and against the town[14] is vested in the selectmen,[15] and not in the town agent;[16] but by vote in the town such authority may be conferred upon the agent,[17] and a compromise made by him in good faith in pursuance thereof is binding on the town.[18] An agent to prosecute and defend or an attorney appointed by him has general authority as to matters of procedure in the conduct of suits.[19] So it has been held in Indiana that a township trustee has authority to accept a note with sureties in discharge of a judgment,[20] and in New York that an officer sued for legal services rendered the town has authority to compromise the suit.[21]

D. Conditions Precedent — 1. In General. Under special statutes or town ordinances authorization by town meeting,[22] by a committee,[23] or by certain officers may be made a condition precedent to suit. bonds unlawfully issued essential to the commencement of a suit for cancellation of the bonds.[25]

2. Notice or Demand. Under special statutes [26] notice of an intention to bring suit against a town may be a prerequisite to the institution of such suit, but the terms of the statute will not be extended by construction to include classes of suits not specially mentioned.[27] Presentment to the proper fiscal officer [28] and demand of payment are conditions precedent to the maintenance of suit on a town warrant [29] or order.[30]

3. Presentment of Claim For Audit. In some states statutory provisions for audit are only permissive; [31] but in others, presentment of claims in due form for audit is a condition precedent to suit upon them.[32] Accounts should be itemized, verified, and formally presented; [33] but strict and formal presentation has been held unnecessary where the board has refused payment for other than technical reasons.[34] In a suit upon claims for unliquidated damages, the amount recoverable is limited to that stated in the claim filed,[35] but an additional allegation of negligence is permissible.[36] Mandamus lies to compel audit; [37] and failure to make due presentment is matter not in bar, but in abatement.[38]

E. Defenses. In an action by a town officer for the cancellation of town bonds it is a good defense that he was authorized only to sue for an injunction upon their issue until the rights of the town were protected; [39] but in an action by a township on notes by it, neither the lack of a record [40] nor of a vote [41] authorizing their purchase is a defense; nor may an officer sued for money converted plead that he had, without authority, expended it in necessary repairs of town roads or bridges; [42] nor is it a good defense to a taxpayer's action to set aside void pending or thereafter to be brought, and the adoption of an affirmative resolution at a town meeting is not a condition precedent to the bringing thereof. Hempstead v. Lawrence, 138 N. Y. App. Div. 473, 122 N. Y. Suppl. 1037.

leases of town property that the lessee had expended a large sum upon the property or that plaintiff had made no objection to such expenditure.[43] It is a good defense to an action against a town that it is sued in the wrong capacity,[44] that the suit is not authorized by statute,[45] or that an action authorized by a vote is not strictly within its terms;[46] but in a suit against a town for money loaned it is no defense that the money was used to take up orders held by a town debtor;[47] nor, in an action against a town brought by selectmen on a vote to indemnify them for expenses of defending a suit, is want of notice of the suit any defense to the town;[48] nor, in an action by one town against another for supplies to a pauper inhabitant of the latter, may a like claim by defendant against plaintiff be pleaded in set-off.[49]

F. Jurisdiction and Venue. Jurisdiction and venue are matters of statutory regulation,[50] and a justice of the peace may have jurisdiction of suits by and against towns and townships;[51] and a suit for damages resulting from negligence of a town may be brought in another county.[52]

G. Time to Sue and Limitations. Towns and townships are subject to statutes of limitation,[53] and may avail themselves of the same.[54] Demand is necessary to start them running as in case of private persons,[55] and authorized partial payments keep a claim alive;[56] but compromise negotiations do not revive barred actions,[57] nor the mere adoption by town meeting of a report which states that an order is outstanding and unpaid;[58] and in some states at least the town board has no power to revive.[59]

Authority to sue.—New York Town Law (Laws (1890), c. 569), § 180, providing that the cost, incurred by any town officer in prosecuting any action by the town, shall be a town charge, where the officer is instructed to prosecute the action by resolution adopted by the town board, impliedly authorizes the town board, made by General Municipal Laws (Laws (1892), c. 685), § 1, the governing board of the town, to direct the bringing of an action by the town, and such direction is sufficient, in the first instance, to authorize rule has been applied to suits on notes [62] and bonds [63] made payable to officers, to officers "or their successors in office," [64] to an action in indebitatus assumpsit against a former officer for balance due upon an account stated,[65] and to a contract made with an agent for the benefit of the town; [66] but actions in the name of certain officers may be authorized by statute [67] or by vote of a town meeting,[68] and suits to restrain unlawful acts of officers should be brought against the officers themselves.[69]

I. Parties. The town itself, and not the officers, is the proper party to suits for damages resulting from acts of officers within the scope of their authority,[70] to suits for the collection of ordinary claims against the town,[71] and to suits by taxpayers to set aside contracts made by officers within their authority.[72] In a proceeding to enjoin illegal acts by an officer, not only the officer himself, but also the town board to whose direction he is subject,[73] is a proper party. Mere citizens or inhabitants of the town are without authority to engage the town in litigation at public expense,[74] but it has been held in New England that any inhabitant has the right to appear and defend a suit against the town.[75] Where a note given by two officers for a town debt has been paid by one of them, he may sue alone for indemnity; [76] and under a vote to indemnify several officers, action may be brought by a smaller number who have actually incurred the expenses.[77]

J. Process. Process for a town, to be valid, must issue and run in the corporate name [78] and be served upon the officer or officers prescribed by law,[79] and within the county of the town.[80] An affidavit made by an officer as the basis for issue of process on behalf of the town should sufficiently show his official capacity,[81] and likewise the return of process served on an officer.[82]

K. Appearance by Attorney. Authority to bring and prosecute a suit on behalf of the town is proved by indorsement of names of the board on the writ and their presence at the trial.[83]

L. Pleading. A pleading is sufficient that by fair and reasonable construction [84] states a cause of action or defense; [85] and in an action by a town a complaint is not bad for failure to allege incorporation; [86] nor, in an action against the town on an order properly signed and regular on its face, for failure to aver audit; [87] nor, in an action for a statutory penalty because in the alternative, where the statute reads in the alternative; [88] nor does surplusage vitiate.[89] But a complaint against a township in one capacity is bad where it discloses a liability only in another capacity,[90] and a failure to allege conditions precedent to the validity of a claim,[91] or that injuries by officers were within the scope of their authority,[92] or that the contract sued on was authorized [93] is fatal. So facts relied on to create an estoppel must be specially pleaded.[94] Verification of pleading may be by any town officer knowing the facts,[95] and statutes excusing "municipal corporations" therefrom have been held to include townships.[96] Towns are subject to the general rules of pleading as to amendments,[97] and under a statute requiring the filing of a claim as a condition precedent to suit, the complaint may not be amended so as to call for a greater amount than that stated in the claim as filed.[98] An objection that an action in the name of the town is not authorized is properly made by motion to dismiss,[99] and not by motion to nonsuit.[1]

M. Evidence. The usual rules of evidence are applicable to suits by and against towns.[2] In an action on a certificate of indebtedness, evidence is admissible to show that it was forged or issued without authority.[3] In an action on a contract alleged to have been validated by statute, evidence is admissible of the proceedings of the officials on which the statute was based; [4] but declarations by individual voters at a town meeting that the vote under which the obligation in suit was issued was illegal [5] are not admissible; nor is evidence by an official as to whether he would have made a contract if a certain representation had not been made to him;[6] nor, in a suit on an original indebtedness to his assignor is a certificate issued to the assignee without authority admissible.[7] A book in which the proceedings of the board of auditors are required to be kept is the best evidence of claims allowed by the board,[8] and may constitute prima facie evidence of an account stated.[9] In an action to enforce a contract against a town, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show authority of the contracting officer to make the contract.[10]

N. Trial.[11] Questions as to whether a contract was made in the manner prescribed by law,[12] as to whether a town order issued without authority has been ratified,[13] and other questions of fact[14] are for the jury, under instructions from the court.[15]

O. Judgment.[16] In a proper case officers may confess judgment on behalf of the town,[17] and judgments against the members of a town board for acts within their authority are in effect judgments against the town;[18] but not judgments against officers for acts beyond their authority.[19] Judgments by[20] or against[21] a town may not be questioned for mere irregularities, in a collateral proceeding, nor even in a direct proceeding.[22] A judgment against a township that has been divided may be revived against each portion severally.[23] A town board has authority to discharge judgments in favor of the town only on payment of the full amount thereof in money or its equivalent.[24] Ordinarily it is the duty of the town board to designate the proper fund out of which a judgment against the town shall be satisfied and to direct the necessary orders to be drawn thereon,[25] but under a special statute it may be the duty of the treasurer to pay a judgment without an order.[26]

P. Execution and Enforcement of Judgment. In some states execution may be issued on judgments against a town,[27] but in others they may not.[28] So it has been held that statutory authority to enforce by fieri facias is not exclusive of enforcement by an action of debt for balance of judgment due;[29] and again that statutory provision of a special writ of execution is exclusive of fieri facias.[30] The statutory notice to the town supervisors entitling a judgment to a place in the tax roll must be in writing;[31] and a judgment creditor cannot require county supervisors to assess more than its pro rata share against any part of a divided town.[32] In New England where execution against a town may be levied against the property of any inhabitant proprietor, one who has voluntarily paid his part of a fieri facias against the town is perpetually exempt from further liability;[33] and one whose land has been duly seized and sold under execution against the town may recover therefor in an action against the "inhabitants of the town,"[34] but not where the sale is void for defects in the proceedings.[35]

Q. Appeal and Error. Presumptions are in favor of the regularity and legality of records on appeal.[36] A township trustee signing an appeal-bond for the township is liable personally,[37] and a town meeting may direct dismissal of an appeal and payment of legal liability only.[38]

R. Costs.[39] An organized town or township[40] is liable for costs of legal proceedings on much the same principles as other parties,[41] and in appeals by the town from judgments in prosecutions under ordinances, the town is liable for costs, although a reversal is secured.[42] Costs awarded against officers suing in a representative capacity are properly charges against the town,[43] and not against the officers personally.[44]

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE OF TRADE-MARK.

A. Definition. A trade-mark may be defined as a name, sign, symbol, or device which is attached to goods offered for sale in the market so as to distinguish them from similar goods, and to identify them with a particular trader, or with his successors, as owners of a particular business, as being made, worked upon, imported, selected, certified, or sold by him or them.[1] It has been aptly described "The definition of a trade-mark, given by Mr. Upton, is as follows, to wit: 'A trade-mark is the name, symbol, figure, letter, form, or device, adopted and used by a manufacturer, or merchant, in order to designate the goods that he manufactures, or sells, and distinguish them from those manufactured or sold by another; to the end that they may be known in the market as his, and thus enable him to secure such profits as result from a reputation for superior skill, industry, or enterprise.' (Upton Trade-Marks, p. 9.) This is a good general definition, broad enough in its terms, probably, to cover every case to be found in the books, but it would not alone, perhaps, be sufficient as a test by which every individual claim of a device, as a proper trade-mark, can be tried and determined, without looking into the cases from which the definition is compiled, to see what names, symbols, figures, letters, forms, and devices have been recognized and protected as trade-marks." Statutory definitions, in most cases substantially declaratory of the common law, exist in many jurisdictions as part of the statutory regulation of trade-marks. See the codes and statutes of the several states.

C. Grounds For Protection. The obvious purpose of distinguishing the goods of one person from those of another is to enable one to reap the benefit of the good-will and reputation which he has built up for his goods by means of his honesty, skill, and industry.[6] Good-will is property.[7] The unauthorized use or imitation of another's trade-mark being a means of appropriating the benefit of the latter's good-will, the real basis of the remedy for infringement is the protection of one's property rights in his business and good-will.[8] The relief afforded,

Thus one who has adopted a trade-mark to identify his product, and who has by his skill and labor created a valuable market therefor, and who has induced public confidence in the superior quality of his goods, is entitled, so long as he deals honestly with the public, to be protected against those who, without right, attempt to appropriate his trade-mark and apply it to other goods of the same class. Epperson v. Bluthenthal, 149 Ala. 125, 42 So. 863.

however, is often expressly placed upon the ground of an exclusive property right in the use of the trade-mark itself.[9] The public is also deemed entitled to protection against imposition by the unauthorized and improper use of trade-marks.[10] But this is hardly a sound reason for affording a private remedy.[11]

"The court proceeds upon the ground, that the complainant has a valuable interest in the good will of his trade or business, and that having appropriated to himself a particular label or sign or trade mark, indicating that the article is manufactured or sold by him or by his authority, or that he carries on his business at a particular place, he is entitled to protection against any other person who pirates upon the good will of his customers or of the patrons of his trade or business, by sailing under his flag without his authority or consent." The right to a trade-mark exists at common law, and is protected even in the absence of statute,[12] although statutes exist in many jurisdictions providing for the registration and protection of trade-marks.[13]

D. Goods Subject to Trade-Mark. Strictly speaking, trade-marks are applicable only to articles of traffic, that is, such articles as are bought and sold in the market.[14] Sometimes the term is loosely applied to names and marks used in a business, but not in connection with articles of traffic.[15] This use of the term is inaccurate and probably means no more than that such names and marks will be protected under the doctrine of unfair competition.[16] A valid technical trade-mark may be acquired for use in connection with any lawful vendible commodity,[17] and it is immaterial whether such article be Another statement of rule.— "One way of designating articles of manufacture as coming from a particular maker is by a trade-mark. This, to be an effectual protection to one who has adopted and used it, must be something to which the user may have an exclusive right. It therefore cannot be anything to the use of which, for a similar purpose, others may also have a right. The

that no one can acquire an exclusive right to its use cannot become a trade-mark,[20] although it may become a trade-name,[21] and the use of it to promote unfair competition may be prevented or redressed.[22] Being an exclusive right, a trade-mark may not be used by others either alone or in connection with other matter,[23] or in other forms,[24] or in other colors.[25] Unauthorized use or imitation constitutes an infringement of the owner's rights.[26]

2. No Rights in Gross. Since the sole function of a trade-mark is to indicate the origin or ownership of vendible commodities, trade-marks cannot exist separate and apart from a business to which they point and of which they are an incident.[27] There is no exclusive ownership of names, devices, or marks which constitute a trade-mark apart from the use or application of them. There is no such thing as an abstract right, or right in gross, to any particular name or mark.[28] The property right of the proprietor is in the peculiar and added function of the word courts will not recognize trademarks which are not chosen in such a way as not to conflict with the rights of others to use common names and things, like the names of persons and places, and of colors and forms with which all are familiar." Reasons for rule.— There are two reasons for this rule. The first is that if a second trader were to adopt and use the mark of another within the same class of goods, he would thereby acquire exclusive rights to the mark as applied to his particular variety of goods, and if the first user of the mark should subsequently desire to add that particular variety of goods to his general line within the class, he would be unable to use his own trade-mark upon his own goods. Collins Co. v. Oliver Ames, etc., Corp., 18 Fed. 561, 20 Blatchf. 542. But see remarks of Cotton, L. J., in Edwards v. Dennis, 30 Ch. D. 454, 55 L. J. Ch. 125, 54 L. T. Rep. N. S. 112, and of Jessel, M. R., in In re Jelley, 51 L. J. Ch. 639 note, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 381 note. Another reason is that the public cannot know how many varieties of the same class of goods the owner of the mark makes and sells under the mark, and if they should see that mark upon other goods of the same class they would be deceived and the owner of the mark might be injured in his reputation because of the quality of goods over which he has no control. trade-mark in connection with particular goods, no one else will be permitted to use such trade-mark upon goods which, while different, belong to the same general class.[32] So where a trade-mark has been used on a particular species of goods, it cannot be thereafter appropriated by another as a trade-mark for a class of goods which includes such species.[33] Goods are in the same class when the general and essential characteristics of the goods are the same, so that the general public would be likely to be misled if the same mark were used.[34] The same trade-mark may be applied by the same person to many different classes of goods and is a valid trade-mark for each class.[35]

So, flour is intended to be made into bread. rights in the goods to which the mark has been applied. Such a right can be acquired only under the patent or copyright laws. Unless prevented by a copyright or patent, any one may make and sell goods, similar in all respects to the goods sold by another under a trade-mark.[36] Neither does a trade-mark confer a right to dictate the prices at which the trade-marked goods may be resold by a purchaser from the original owner.[37]

5. Time Limit. Common-law trade-marks do not expire by lapse of time. The right is limited only by the period of its use, and ceases only with its abandonment.[38]

6. Territorial Limits. Notwithstanding expressions to be found in some authorities to the effect that a trade-mark acknowledges no boundaries, and may be infringed anywhere,[39] trade-mark rights are confined to the limits of the country under whose laws they were acquired.[40] One person may own a particular trade-

Local law governs.—Whether one claiming a right to a trade-mark could register it in foreign countries under their laws is immaterial, but the question is whether his claim is in harmony with the local law and the court will not decide what trade-marks exist or do not exist in foreign countries.

mark in one country, and the same trade-mark may belong to another person in another country,[41] or the trade-mark may be valid in one country and invalid in another.[42] Trade-marks are, however, coextensive with the jurisdiction of the sovereignty granting the right,[43] and it is immaterial that the proprietor has not extended his business to a particular locality.[44] Treaties between various countries have to some extent made provision for the protection of the trade-mark rights of their respective citizens.[45]

II. ACQUISITION OF TRADE-MARKS.

A. Who May Acquire. Only those persons who have some connection or relation to the goods to which the mark is applied can obtain a trade-mark, because the sole function of a trade-mark is to indicate that relation,[46] and show origin or ownership of the goods. Any persons, including corporations,[47] and Infringement by acts in foreign country.— Neither common law nor registered trade-marks afford any protection against acts committed wholly in a foreign country. Vacuum Oil Co. v. Eagle Oil Co., 122 Fed. 105. An action will lie, however, where the right was acquired in this country, and the wrongful transactions emanated from here, although they were carried out in foreign countries. Mere selection and approval.—A trade-mark may be acquired to indicate that the goods have been selected and approved by one who had a reputation for so doing. Hirsch v. Jonas, 3 Ch. D. 584, 45 L. J. Ch. 364, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 228. The use of a trade-mark does not necessarily import that the articles on which it is used are manufactured by the user; but it may be enough that they are manufactured for him, that exporters,[52] importers,[53] commission merchants,[54] and other persons bearing a similar relation to the goods.[55]

B. Adoption and Use — 1. In General. A trade-mark is acquired by mere adoption and user as such,[56] subject to certain well-established rules as to what he controls their production, or even that they pass through his hands in the course of trade, and that he gives to them the benefit of his reputation or name and business style. Nelson v. Winchell, 203 Mass. 75, 89 N. E. 180, 23 L. R. A. N. S. 1150. But where the owner of a shoe store marked all of the shoes he sold "Eagle Shoes," although they were procured from various sources, so that the name did not indicate any particular brand or make of shoes, he was held not entitled to protection in the use of the name. Commercial mark distinguished.— The distinction between a "trade-mark" and a "commercial mark" in the civil law of France is pointed out by Pouillet, Marques de Fabrique, § 6, where he says: "A trade-mark is not a commercial mark. . . . The trade-mark is especially or peculiarly the mark of the manufacturer, of him who creates the product, who manufactures it. The commercial mark is that of the dealer, of him who, receiving the product of the manufacturer, sells it to the consumer." La Republique Francaise v. Schultz, 57 Fed. 37, 41. The common law makes no such distinction.

Public declaration of intent.— The mere declaration of an intention, however public, to publish a magazine or any manufactured article, bearing a particular name or mark, notwithstanding such declaration is accompanied by expenditure in connection with the intended article, cannot create a right to

3. LENGTH OF USE. It is not necessary that the word or mark should have been used for any definite or considerable length of time. A single actual use with intent to continue such use eo instanti confers a right to such word or mark as a trade-mark.[63] It is sufficient if the article with the mark upon it has actually become a vendible article in the market, with intent upon the part of the proprietor to continue its production and sale.[64] It is not necessary that the goods should have acquired a reputation for quality under that mark,[65] although expressions may be found in some cases apparently so requiring.[66] The rule is stated in many cases that the use must have been general, continuous, and exclusive, and applied to goods and used in trade under such circumstances of publicity and length of use as to show an intention to adopt the mark as a trade-mark for specific goods, and to have become known as the distinguishing mark for such goods.[67] It is believed, however, that these cases really mean no more than that such use is necessary to maintain the right to a trade-mark, and to prevent others from acquiring rights therein upon the theory of abandonment by the first user.[68] Actual use under such circumstances as show an intention to adopt and use as a

It is often the result of accident rather than design. . . . The exclusive right to it grows out of its use, and not its mere adoption."

68. This distinction is very clearly stated by the Master of the Rolls, in Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 150, 10 Jur. N. S. 55, 33 L. J. Ch. 204, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561, 3 New Rep. 259, 12 Wkly. trade-mark is the test rather than the extent or duration of the use.[69] A mere casual, intermittent, or experimental use may be insufficient to show an intention to adopt the mark as a trade-mark for a specific article.[70]

4. Affixation to Goods. In order to become a valid trade-mark, the name or mark must be in some way physically attached to the goods, and go with them into the market.[71] Use only as a name or sign upon a place of business, or in advertisements, circulars, and other similar ways, without being actually affixed to the goods is insufficient to constitute the marks so used valid trade-marks.[72] It is sufficient, however, if the mark is affixed either upon the goods themselves, or upon the package or wrapper containing them, or in any other way physically attached to the goods.[73]

5. Purpose of Use. In order to become a trade-mark, the mark must be used as a trade-mark,[74] that is to say, it must be used as a distinguishing mark for the purpose of indicating the origin or ownership of the goods, and not merely their grade, class, or quality.[75] It is unnecessary, however, to give notice that a partictrade under the mark is the larger; greater sales do not confer a better right.[81] But such priority of right is limited, as elsewhere shown, to use upon that particular class.[82] Another person may subsequently apply the same mark to a different class of goods, and if he is the first to do so, he also acquires an exclusive right to the use of the mark in the connection used by him.[83] The right of one who first used a particular device as a trade-mark is superior to that of the one who first designed, invented, or suggested it,[84] but who did not use it as a trade-mark.[85] An unlawful or infringing use,[86] or use as a mere unmeaning incident in connection with other distinguishing features,[87] or a casual, intermittent, inconsiderable, and experimental use,[88] or a use wholly confined to a foreign country,[89] is insufficient to confer priority of right, although prior in point of time.

III. WHAT MAY BE A TRADE-MARK.

A. General Rules — 1. In General. Any word, mark, or device used for the primary purpose of identifying specific goods as being of a definite origin or ownership may constitute a valid trade-mark,[90] if adopted and used as Mere priority is sufficient title against an infringer, and it is not necessary to show a complete chain of title from the first user. E. H. Taylor, Jr., etc., Co. v. Taylor, 85 S. W. 1085, 27 Ky. Burden of proof of priority.—Where two or three makers are using the same word as a mark or brand on the same class of goods at the same time, and one asserts the right to it as a trade-mark, and seeks to enjoin the others from using it, he has the burden of proof to show that he was in fact the first to use it. such,[91] provided they are such as may be exclusively appropriated without prejudice to the rights of others.[92] No sign, or mark, or form of words can be appropriated as an exclusive trade-mark which, from the fact conveyed by its primary meaning, others may employ with equal truth and equal right for the same purpose.[93] Moreover, a trade-mark must consist of some definite word, sign, or device.[94] A mere method of marking, as distinguished from the mark itself, is not a valid trade-mark.[95]

2. Distinctiveness. Must distinguish article.— "A trade-mark must be such as will clearly identify the article to which it is affixed as that of the person adopting it, and distinguish it from that of all others. (Brown, Trade Marks, § 29.) It is true, it may consist of words, as well as of symbols, devices, emblems or marks. If it consists of words, only, they must be so clear and well defined as to give notice that the articles to which they are attached are from the factory or store or dealer who has adopted the same." A representation of a star cannot by its own meaning indicate the origin or ownership of such an article as lubricating oil, nor in view of its general use as a symbol can it be appropriated as a trade-mark except in connection with other devices or words such as to render the whole characteristic. Reason for rule.— "The trade mark indicates the goods that are sold under it. They

if the mark points to some definite, although unknown, person.[98] A mark is none the less distinctive because the name of its proprietor is not generally known to the public.[99]

3. Novelty or Invention. The validity of a trade-mark does not depend upon either novelty, invention, or discovery, but is founded upon mere priority of appropriation and user as a trade-mark for a particular class of goods.[1] The only become known to the public under the name that has been adopted to indicate this particular kind of goods manufactured by a particular firm. Whether this firm makes its name a part of the trade mark or not is immaterial. It is the name and device adopted to indicate the particular goods manufactured by the plaintiffs that is the trade mark; and if they are manufactured only by the person who has adopted the name and trade mark, they could be obtained only from him. The defendants seem to lay great stress upon the fact that there was no name upon this label, as though a person could not acquire a valid trade mark unless his name was a part of the trade mark. This is a novel proposition, is not, so far as I know, supported by any authority, and seems entirely opposed to the principle upon which a trade mark when adopted becomes property which a court of equity will protect." Explanation of rule.— "Persons may be misled and may mistake one class of goods for another, although they do not know the names of the makers of either. A person whose name is not known but whose mark is imitated is just as much injured in his trade as if his name were known as well as his mark. His mark as used by him has given a reputation to his goods. His trade depends greatly on such reputation. His mark sells his goods. A rival who imitates his mark can hardly help deceiving buyers and injuring him; and for such injury, if proved, he can obtain redress. Siegert v. Findlater, (7 Ch. D. 801, 807) 47 L. J. Ch. 233, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 349, 26 Wkly. Rep. 459 (the 'Angostura Bitters' case) illustrates this. Siegert v. Findlater, 7 Ch. D. 807, 47 L. J. Ch. 233, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 349, 26 Wkly. novelty or originality required is first use in the particular connection.[2] A trade-mark may, but need not, consist of an invented word. Existing words applied in an arbitrary or fanciful way are valid trade-marks.[3] Abandoned trade-marks may be appropriated by others and become their exclusive property, even as against the original user.[4] Marks in prior use upon certain goods may be appropriated as trade-marks for a different class of goods.[5] But a mark or name so similar to an existing trade-mark of another as to create deception and confusion as to identity of goods cannot be subsequently adopted by another for the same class of goods.[6] Words, names, and marks already known and in general and common use in the trade cannot be subsequently appropriated by any one as an exclusive trade-mark.[7]

Masonic symbols.—As to the validity of the freemasons' square and compasses as a trade-mark in the United States see In re Thomas, 14 Off. Gaz. 821; In re Tolle, 2 Off. Gaz. 415. In the former it was held that such a symbol had acquired a well-known special significance and its use would be deceptive. Thacher, Acting Com'r, said: "There can be no doubt that this device, so commonly worn and employed by Masons, has an established mystic significance, universally recognized as existing; whether comprehended by all or not is not material to this issue. . . . It will be universally understood, or misunderstood, as having a Masonic significance, and therefore as a trade-mark must constantly work deception." In the latter case this view is departed from, and it is held that the masons have no monopoly in their symbols.

11. In Canada it has been held that only such misrepresentations as are contained in the trade-mark itself will bar plaintiff's right to an injunction. Templeton v. Wallace, 4 Northwest. Terr. 340.

English hallmarks.— A manufacturer of silverware is not debarred from establishing as its trade-mark in this country a combination of devices of an anchor, a lion, and the letter G, by the fact that each of these is a hallmark used on English silver, and that, used in combination, they would indicate to a buyer of English silver that the piece was sterling ware made in the city of Birmingham in 1831. All these cigars are in fact made at the Elk Factory, and they are so stamped, and when the public buy them, they are purchasing a genuine Elk cigar, made by these complainants; and I do not see that the additional label put on the box in accordance with a custom of the trade is in any just sense such a false representation as should invalidate the trade-mark." Even a personal name may lose its personal significance and cease to be a representation that the article is the manufacture of case it is not assignable,[31] an assignee who is carrying on in lawful succession the same business in which the trade-mark was acquired by his predecessors will be protected even though he does not call attention to the fact that he is an assignee and not the original proprietor, provided no direct false statements are made.[32] Trade-marks for so-called patent medicines have been denied protection substantially upon the ground that the business is a fraudulent business not fit to be protected by a court of equity.[33] This rule is too strict, as some of such preparations may possess merit. Ordinarily such trade-marks will be protected unless accompanied by misrepresentations which cannot be justified as mere dealer's talk or customary puffing of goods.[34] The mere fact that the subject-matter is a proprietary medicine will not alone deprive the owner of the right to relief.[35] A false use of the word "patent" or "patented" in connection with an article covered by a trade-mark is sufficient to bar relief against infringement.[36] But the word

c. Purging Falsehood. Where the value of the good-will represented by the trade-mark was built up by fraud and misrepresentation, mere discontinuance of such misrepresentations before suit brought will not entitle plaintiff to relief.[40] But where plaintiff is conducting an honest business, the mere fact that in times past he has been guilty of misrepresentations or fraud, which have been wholly discontinued before suit, is insufficient to deprive him of the right to protection against infringement.[41] A correction of the false statement not made until after the suit is brought will not help plaintiff.[42]

B. Particular Classes of Marks and Names — 1. Descriptive Terms and Marks — a. General Rules. It is a fundamental rule that terms merely descriptive of the goods or business to which they are applied cannot be exclusively appropriated as trade-marks or trade-names.[43] An exclusive trade-mark

"Fancy word," as used in the English statute, means a word not in common use, and having, to ordinary English people, no specific meaning, or, if it has any meaning at all, one that is obviously meaningless when used as a trade-mark for the particular article to which it is applied. In re Trade Mark Bovril, [1896] 2 Ch. 600, 65 L. J. Ch. 715, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 805, 45 Wkly. Rep. 150; In re Van Duzer, 34 Ch. D. 623, 642, 644, 56 L. J. Ch. 370, 56 L. T. Rep. N. S. 286, 35 Wkly. Rep. 294, per Lindley, L. J., where it is said: "If it is not obviously meaningless, it appears to me it has not the characteristics of a fancy word. I do not mean to say that there are no English fancy words." Lopes, L. J., said: "I think a word to be a fancy word must be obviously meaningless as applied to the article in question. I think it must be a word fanciful in its application to the article to which it is applied in the sense of being so obviously and notoriously inappropriate as neither to be deceptive nor descriptive, nor calculated to suggest deception or description. Further than that, I think, that the word must have an innate and inherent character of fancifulness which must not depend on evidence, and cannot be supported by evidence to shew that in fact it is neither deceptive nor descriptive, or calculated to be deceptive or descriptive. What I mean is that a fancy word, in my opinion, must speak for itself; it must be a fancy word of its own inherent strength." See also Davis v. Striholt, 59 L. T. Rep. N. S. 854, 855, where it is said: "A word which is not obviously an unmeaning word to an Englishman of ordinary intelligence is not a fancy word if that proposition is good. To say that every word is a fancy word because it is unknown to an average Englishman would be plainly to lay down a proposition which could not for a moment be maintained. There are many good English words descriptive of articles which are unknown to an average Englishman taking rather a high standard."

In Ransome v. Graham, 51 L. J. Ch. 897, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218, it was held that where a manufacturer places on his goods a series of combinations of letters as trade-marks, each of which serves to indicate to purchasers, first, that the goods are manufactured by the person using the mark, and second, the quality of the goods as compared with the goods respectively bearing the other marks in the series, the marks, being exclusively used by the manufacturer, are valid trade-marks, notwithstanding they are indicative of the quality of the goods to which they are applied. It is proper to register a series of marks which differ from each other only by combining in different modes a mark common to them all and peculiar to the trader, with words merely indicative of the quality of the goods marked, or symbols common to the trade. In re Barrows, 5 Ch. or drawing of the article itself is descriptive of that article and therefore not a valid trade-mark, but a mere association of ideas suggested by the picture and the article would probably not be sufficient to invalidate the trade-mark.[62] A description of the package in which the goods are sold is not a valid trade-mark.[63] Names which merely to some extent suggest the character, quality, or ingredients of an article, or some supposed advantage to be derived from using it, or some effect to be produced by its use, or the locality of its origin, have been ordinarily upheld as valid trade-marks.[64]

Picture or drawing of article to which applied.— In In re James, 33 Ch. D. 392, 396, 55 L. J. Ch. 915, 55 L. T. Rep. N. S. 415, 35 Wkly. Rep. 67 [reversing 31 Ch. D. 340, 55 L. J. Ch. 214, 54 L. T. Rep. N. S. 125, 34 Wkly. Rep. 347], a black dome as a trade-mark for black lead was sustained. (Note the distinction taken between the American and English cases.) Lindley, L. J., said: "As regards the American decisions, I quite concur in the observations made by Lord Justice Cotton. I cannot see why, according to English law, a fish should not be a distinctive mark of a fishing-line, though I can understand that a picture of a fish may not be a distinctive mark of that particular kind of fish. Why a pig should not be, according to English law, a distinctive mark for lard, or something made out of a pig, I do not know. Supposing you tanned pig-skin into leather, I do not know why a pig should not be a good trade-mark for tanned pig's hide." The court in this case overruled the decision below by Pearson, J., in which he said: "Curiously enough, though it has not arisen here, the question has been several times before the American Courts, whether a man can have as a trade-mark a drawing of the article sold, and they have decided that he cannot, because it is the common property of all the world." Merriam v. Famous Shoe, etc., Co., 47 Fed. 411. A "representation of a barrel consisting of light and dark wood, the staves being alternately composed of each color," cannot be registered as a trade-mark for flour packed in barrels similar to that represented in the picture, because in each application it is descriptive, not, indeed, of the quality of the flour itself separated from its package, and, therefore, not in marketable form, but of the marketable commodity, the barrel of flour. But when applied to sacks of flour, or to barrels of flour having staves all of one color, it is an arbitrary symbol and is registrable as a trade-mark. Ex p. Halliday, 16 Off. Gaz. 500. In L. H. Harris Drug Co. v. Stucky, 46 Fed. 624, where there was a picture of a boy suffering from cramps, with words "Cramp Cure," it was held that the picture constituted a valid trade-mark, but the words were descriptive. In Topham v. Cole, 66 N. Y. 69, 23 Am. Rep. 22, it was questioned whether a picture of a pig could be a good trade-mark for lard, but it was held that, in any event, such trade-mark was not infringed by a different picture, although also of a pig.

The distinction between the English and American cases concerning numerals as trade-marks is not very decided. On the whole, the English courts may be said to be more cautious in allowing their use than the American. No case appears to be reported in which they have admitted a numeral standing alone to be a technical trade-mark, although they have upheld their validity when used in connection with other devices, and have interfered to prevent infringement on the ground of unfair competition. Ransome v. Bentall, 3 L. J. Ch. 161. In Carver v. Bowker, British and Foreign Journal of Commerce and Trade Marks 252, Cox Man. Trade Mark Cas. 581, plaintiff, a shipper of cotton goods, stamped them, among other things, with the numbers "109," "406," "409," etc., respectively. It was held by Little, V. C., that the number "109" was in common use and descriptive of quality, and that the other numbers, although not in common use, could not be exclusively appropriated.

Distinctive printing of descriptive numeral. —A trade-mark in the symbol "½," as ordinarily printed, cannot be acquired for cigarettes made of two kinds of tobacco, half and half; but when printed in a special and unusual manner, it may be registered as a trade-mark, and be protected so far as to enjoin an imitator from using it printed in the like manner. Arbitrary numbers applied to different styles.— In American Solid Leather Button Co. v. Anthony, 15 R. I. 338, 339, the complainant, a manufacturer of buttons and descriptive and cannot be made the subject of a trade-mark.[70] It is an ordinary and legitimate use to indicate grade, class, or quality by numerals, and all the world may do so.[71] Of course even numerals may not be used as a means of promoting unfair competition.[72]

4. Letters and Initials. Letters are valid trade-marks where arbitrarily used to indicate origin or ownership, but not when used to indicate grade or quality,[73] as that is a common and legitimate use of letters open to everyone.[74] Initials of nails, distinguished certain styles which he made by certain numerals arbitrarily chosen. These were held to be valid trade-marks. The court, by Stiness, J., said: "A person may have different symbols for different grades of goods, which in the same way, will indicate both quality and origin with respect to the goods so marked. A manufacturer may adopt such symbols, not simply to mark a style or quality, but his style and his quality as well. He is entitled to have his style and his quality protected from misrepresentation, and to have the benefit of any favorable reputation they may have gained." See also Ransome v. Graham, 51 L. J. Canada.— Provident Chemical Works v. Canada Chemical Mfg. Co., 4 Ont. L. Rep. 545 [reversing 2 Ont. L. Rep. 182]; Smith v. Fair, 14 Ont. 729.

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trade-Marks and Trade-Names," § 10.

The letters "I X L," as applied to a general merchandise auction store, do not constitute a valid trade-mark by themselves, having long been in prior use. Lichtenstein v. Mellis, 8 Oreg. 464, 34 Am. Rep. 592.

Arabic and Turkish letters may constitute valid trade-marks. In re Rotherham, 14 Ch. D. 585, 49 L. J. Ch. 511, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1.

Different combinations of letters, for different styles or quality of the same proprietor's goods, are valid trade-marks, although they indicate quality as well as origin and ownership. Ransome v. Graham, 51 L. J. Ch. 897, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218.

74. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 51, 25 L. ed. 993; Vacuum Oil Co. v. Climax Refining Co., 120 Fed. 254, 56 C. C. A. 90; Shaw Stocking Co. v. Mack, 12 Fed. 707, 21 Blatchf. 1.

Like the adjectives of the language, letters and figures are open to any one to use for the purpose of indicating quality, class, or a proper name,[75] and even of a descriptive name,[76] and monograms[77] have all been held to be valid trade-marks. Letters in combination with figures or other devices, or printed in a distinctive manner, are a common form of valid trade-mark.[78]

5. Fictitious, Mythological, or Noted Names. Names of characters in fiction,[79] or mythology,[80] or of celebrated imaginary or historical persons[81] or things,[82] constitute valid trade-marks, when used as such, because they are arbitrary or fanciful and non-descriptive,[83] unless, as may be the case, they have become generic and descriptive of quality, owing to the manner of use and the general understanding.[84]

6. Newly Coined or Invented Words. Newly coined or invented words or names are generally appropriate for use as trade-marks,[85] unless in fact descripgrade. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 51, 25 L. ed. 993.

75. Frank v. Sleeper, 150 Mass. 583, 28 N. E. 213 [distinguishing Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 10 N. E. 713, 58 Am. Rep. 149].

76. Provident Chemical Works v. Canada Chemical Mfg. Co., 4 Ont. L. Rep. 545 [reversing 2 Ont. L. Rep. 182], "C. A. P." held a valid trade-mark for "cream acid phosphate."

Illustrations.— "There are strong reasons and high authority for the contention that a geographical name, when not used in a geographical sense, that is, when it does not denote the location of origin, but is used in a fictitious sense merely to indicate ownership and origin independent of location, may be a good trade-mark. For example, 'Liverpool' for cloth made at Hieddersfield, Hirst v. Denham, L. R. 14 Eq. Cas. 542, 41 L. J. Ch. 752, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 56; 'Dublin Soap' made in the United States, In re Cornwall, 12 Off. Gaz. 312; 'German Soap' made in the United States, In re Green, 8 Off. C.; Browne on Trade-Marks, §§ 184–185. Upon this distinction it is diffitrade-marks. An unfair or fraudulent use of geographical names is a frequent instance of unfair competition for which a remedy is afforded irrespective of any technical trade-mark.[92]

8. Personal Names. It has frequently been said that the name of an individual may constitute a valid trade-mark.[93] But if such statements mean anything more cult to understand why the word 'German' upon a package which expressly shows that it is made at 'Findlay, Ohio, U. S. A.,' may not be a valid trade-mark." Drake Medicine Co. v. Glessner, 68 Ohio St. 337, 355, 67 N. E. 722.

than that personal names, even one's own, may not be used as a means of passing off one man's goods or business as that of another, which would be redressed as unfair competition,[94] they are inaccurate. The mere name of an individual cannot become a valid technical trade-mark,[95] because, as between persons of the same or similar names, each has an equal right to use his own name in his own business,[96] and trade-marks being property rights are necessarily exclusive.[97] A personal name in combination with other words or devices may, however, constitute a good trade-mark.[98] So celebrated names, arbitrarily used, may constitute valid trade-marks.[99]

Picture of package.— While barrels, boxes, etc., although of peculiar size or shape, do not constitute good trade-marks, a pictorial representation of them may constitute a good trade-mark. Clinton Metalic Paint Co. v. New York Metalic Paint Co., 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 66, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 437. But such pictures may be descriptive and hence not valid trade-marks. See supra, III, B, 1, b.

The size, or shape, or mode of construction of a box, barrel, bottle, or package in which goods may be put is not a trade-mark; nor is the mechanical arrangement of bottles in boxes in which they are packed by the manufacturer capable of protection as such. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 143 Pa. St. 623, 638, 22 Atl. 755, 24 Am. St. Rep. 575, 13 L. R. A. 343, where it is said: "As a general proposition it may be said that one may imitate what is excellent in the processes and business methods of his neighbor as freely and as safely as he may imitate what is good in his moral character, as long as he infringes no right secured to him by statute, and does not fraudulently personate him or simulate his products."

Structural imitation or copying may or may not constitute unfair competitions according to circumstances. See infra, V, C, 14.

14. Imitation of dress of goods is a common form of unfair competition. See infra, V, C, 12.

12. Substance or Useful Part of Article or Package. The substance or any useful part or feature of the article itself, or of the package in which it is contained, cannot be appropriated as a trade-mark,[15] for otherwise all substances and methods useful in manufacturing and packing goods for the market would soon be monopolized without the formality of obtaining a patent even in cases where a patent could be obtained.[16] The product itself cannot be a trade-mark.[17] If the package is not patented, it is publici juris,[18] and no one can obtain an exclusive right to use it by a claimed appropriation of its form or materials as a trade-mark.[19] In Measuring marks.— In Dausman, etc., Tobacco Co. v. Ruffner, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,585, 15 Off. Gaz. 559, 560, Blodgett, J., said: "Any manufacturer of goods which are sold by the piece, such as cloths, for instance, must have the right by marks or lines to indicate where to cut, in order to remove each yard, or part of a yard, or other specific quantity. So, in regard to liquids put up, for instance, in glass bottles or similar packages, lines might be drawn, showing the half [etc.], and no manufacturer, by registering a trade-mark upon a package of that kind could prevent another manufacturer from thus showing how a measured portion of the contents of his package might be withdrawn."

There can be no trade-mark in a piece of tin, regardless of its color, shape, or inscriptions, used as a tag on tobacco, although by the use of such device said tobacco may have acquired a reputation in the market as "Tin Tag Tobacco." Lorillard v. Pride, 28 Fed. 434, 438, Blodgett, J., observing: "It seems to me it would be as reasonable to assume that the complainants could have adopted paper or wood, or a piece of cloth or leather, as a badge or indicia of their goods, as that they could have taken a piece of tin. . . . A person may appropriate any word, figure, or emblem as a trade-mark, but that does not give an exclusive right to the use of the well-known material substances upon which the word, figure, or emblem may be impressed or engraved."

An octagonal wooden stick upon which carpets were rolled so that the stick presented at its ends the appearance of two octagonal rings was upheld as a valid trade-mark for such carpets in Lowell Mfg. Any device or symbol may be protected as a trade-mark which is arbitrary in its character and selection, and does not, by its inherent character, necessarily describe the goods upon which it is employed, or contain any misrepresentation of fact with reference to the goods, their origin, character, qualities, or contents. Trade-marks of this class usually consist of devices or symbols in combination with words or names.[22] National emblems, or coats of bination with names and other devices,[28] may constitute trade-marks. Illustrations in books or stories do not constitute trade-marks, and must be protected by copyright, if at all.[29]

14. Foreign Words or Letters. Foreign words, phrases, or letters may be a distinctive device and hence a valid trade-mark;[30] but a mere foreign form of the generic name of the article,[31] or a foreign descriptive word or phrase,[32] or a mere transliteration into English of a foreign generic word is not a good trade-mark.[33] An unmeaning compound of foreign words may, however, be appropriated as a trade-mark.[34]

15. Attached Articles. An article attached to a manufactured product may be a valid trade-mark, the same as any other sign or symbol, provided it complies with the definitions relative to those subjects.[35] All trade-marks must be attached, in some way, to the goods.[36]

16. Combinations. A combination of words, or of words and devices or symbols, is a very common form of valid trade-mark, and the combination may be sustained, although the elements taken separately are not capable of exclusive appropriation.[37] Upon the other hand, the appropriation of a word in one combination does not prevent its being used by others in other combinations not likely to deceive. In other words the combination is the thing protected.[38] A peculiar collocation of words which, although descriptive in their meaning, are arbitrary in their selection and arrangement, and are not the only words which could be employed to describe the article to which they are applied, may be protected as a trade-mark.[39] In many cases of this class it is difficult, if not impossible, to say whether relief is afforded upon the ground of technical trade-mark rights in the combination, or upon the ground of unfair competition. It is, perhaps, not very material, for the latter doctrine includes the former. At all events, a deceptive imitation of such combination will be enjoined.[40] Mere length in a collocation of words not peculiarly arranged, and purely descriptive, does not make it a valid trade-mark.[41] But if any one or more of the words used be arbitrary, and distinctive, it will support the use of other words in combination with it which are either generic, personal, geographical, or descriptive, and the combination as a whole will constitute a valid trade-mark or trade-name.[42]

17. Labels. Mere labels used upon goods are not trade-marks,[43] although they will be protected against imitation upon the ground of unfair competition.[44] The authorities are divided as to whether or not so-called union labels constitute technical trade-marks, the weight of authority being in the negative.[45] By statute, however, union labels are protected in some states.[46]

Label distinguished.— A trade-mark may sometimes in form serve as a label, but it differs from a mere label in such cases, in that it is not confined to a designation of the article to which it is attached, but by words or design is a symbol or device which, affixed to a product of one's manufacture, distinguishes it from articles of the same general nature manufactured or sold by others, thus securing to the producer the benefits of any increased sale by reason of any peculiar excellence he may have given to it. Name in combination with distinctive features.— Although there can be no exclusive that only, and not origin or ownership, are not valid trade-marks.[49] It has been held that a word which at the time of its adoption was a valid trade-mark does not cease to be such and become generic merely because it has become so generally known that it has been adopted by the public as the ordinary appellation of the article.[50] Of course an arbitrary name applied by plaintiff to designate his manufacture of an article which has a generic name may be a valid trade-mark, no matter how widely known it may become under such arbitrary name.[51] But if a trade-mark has been permitted to lose its distinctiveness, and become merely right in the commercial name of an article, as "Borax Soap," yet, when it is coupled with other distinctive features, the whole may be so appropriated. Dreydoppel v. Young, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 226. In Braham v. Bustard, 1 Hem. & M. 447, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199, 11 Wkly. Rep. 1061, 1062, 71 Eng. Reprint 195, "The Excelsior White Soap" was protected as a valid trade-mark, Wood, V. C., saying: "If, in this case, the plaintiffs had sought protection for the name 'White Soft Soap' only, the same principle would have been applied (i. e., protection would have been refused). . . . But here the plaintiffs put the word 'Excelsior' before the 'White Soft Soap,' and it was not an unimportant circumstance that the plaintiffs did not simply call their article 'Excelsior White Soft Soap,' but 'The Excelsior White Soft Soap.'"

In the leading case of Selchow v. Baker, 93 N. Y. 59, 69, 45 Am. Rep. 169, Rapallo, J., after reviewing many cases on the subject, concludes as follows: "Our conclusion is, that where a manufacturer has invented a new name [as 'Sliced Animals,' 'Sliced Birds,' 'Sliced Objects'], consisting either of a new word, or a word or words in common use which he has applied for the first time to his own manufacture or to an article manufactured for him, to distinguish it from those manufactured and sold by others, and the name thus adopted is not generic or descriptive of the article, its qualities, ingredients or characteristics, but is arbitrary or fanciful and is not used merely to denote grade or quality, he is entitled to be protected in the use of that name, notwithstanding that it has become so generally known that it has been adopted by the public as the ordinary appellation of the article." a generic name, all trade-mark rights therein are lost.[52] It seems that the question should be made to turn upon whether or not the trade-mark has been abandoned.[53] Distinctive names first applied to a new product have been often protected, and frequently declared to be valid trade-marks. But it is believed that these decisions must be supported, if at all, upon the principle of unfair competition in trade rather than upon the ground of technical trade-mark.[54] When any article or substance is first produced, it must necessarily be given a name by which it may be known, and this name, being the only appellation by which it can be distinguished, becomes publici juris whenever the article itself is publici juris. A person entitled to make and sell an article must necessarily be entitled to call it by the only name by which it is known.[55] A name which designates,

b. Patented Articles. Judicial statement of distinction.— In re Palmer, 24 Ch. D. 504, 520, 50 L. T. Rep. N. S. 30, 32 Wkly. Rep. 306, Lord Justice Cotton said: "It is very true . . . that if any one during the existence of the patent had applied the name which the patentee had given to his article to an article not an infringement of the patent he would probably have been stopped by injunction, but only because, although it would not have been an infringement of the patent, it would have been a false representation that what he was selling was the patented article. In one sense, therefore, the name of the article might be called a trade-mark, but the user of it would not be a user of a trade-mark in the sense in which Messrs. continued use after expiration of the patent will not constitute the name a trade-mark.[61] Where the article is not in fact patented, as where the patent is invalid, the name is nevertheless publici juris and not a trade-mark.[62] It is always a question of fact arising upon the evidence in each case whether the name in question has come to be the name of the article, and not a mark or sign indicating the manufacturer. Unless the former is the case, the doctrine under discussion has no application.[63] A word which might become a valid trade-mark if applied to an unpatented article may not be so when applied to a patented article, because in the latter case it is more readily inferred that the word is used merely as a name to identify the article, and not as a trade-mark.[64] A name applied to many forms

"A word which might become a valid trade-mark when applied to an unpatented article may not be so when applied to an article which has the protection of letters patent. In the latter case the letters patent indicate the ownership and origin of the article, and it is more readily to be inferred that the word is used as a name merely to identify the article. Usually the protection given by a patent is far greater, though of less duration in time, than that obtained by the use of a trademark; because if an article is patented nobody but the owner of the patent can without his consent make or sell anything embodying the same principles or elements, while a trademark only secures one in the use of the name or emblem adopted by him and applied to the article. Sebastian Trade-Marks 15. One may choose to rely on the name alone; and if so, he may establish or create a trademark which will be permanent. But if he seeks and obtains the protection afforded by a patent, he is bound to yield up his monopoly with all that belongs to it at the end of the term, and the right of an article, to show ownership and origin, and not to any one particular form so as to become the generic name of a definite article is a valid trade-mark, and it is not dedicated to the public by expiration of a patent covering some or all of such articles; [65] and conversely, a name applied to only one form of a patented article is not presumably the generic name of the patented article.[66] A trade-mark in addition to, and different from, the name of the patented article itself may be acquired which will survive the expiration of the patent.[67] Trade-marks, the use of which antedated the patent, remain valid and exclusive notwithstanding the expiration of the patent.[68]

c. Books. The name or title of a book is the ordinary and usual designation and description of that particular book, given to it to be used for that purpose, and therefore it is not a valid technical trade-mark for such book.[69] Some contrary expressions may be found in the authorities; [70] but these are not well con-to the exclusive use of the name given to his goods, which might otherwise have become a trademark, will ordinarily fall with the patent itself." Dover Stamping Co. v. Fellows, 163 Mass. 191, 194, 40 N. E. 105, 47 Am. St. Rep. 448, 28 L. R. A. 448.

Right analogous to trade-mark.— In Robsidered, and if they mean more than that the name of a book may not be used or imitated to pass off one book as and for another, which would be a clear case of unfair competition,[71] they cannot be supported. A name applied to a series of books may, however, constitute a trade-mark.[72] The author's name, whether his real name or a nom de plume, does not constitute a trade-mark.[73]

d. Periodicals. The name of a periodical publication has often been said to constitute a valid technical trade-mark or to be in the nature of a trade-mark,[74] and titles of newspapers may be registered as trade-marks in the patent office.[75] Most frequently, however, the unlawful use or imitation of the title of a periodical is redressed upon the broader ground of unfair competition.[76]

IV. INFRINGEMENT OF TRADE-MARKS.

A. Definition and Nature of Infringement. Infringement of a trade-mark consists in the unauthorized use or colorable imitation of it upon substituted goods of the same class as those for which the mark has been appropriated.[82] Relief is afforded upon the ground that it is a fraud to use another's trade-mark and thus pass off different goods as and for the goods of the proprietor of the mark[83] rather than upon the ground of property in the mark itself.[84] The essence of the wrong consists in the sale of the goods of one manufacturer or dealer as and for those of another by means of such trade-mark.[85] It is only when this false ented production. It was held that his assignees after his death had no right to its exclusive use. James v. James, L. R. 13 Eq. 421, 41 L. J. Ch. 353, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 568, 20 Wkly. Rep. 434. "The principle upon which courts proceed in restraining the simulation of names in the nature of trade marks and have come to designate the business of a particular person or company, is stated in Lee v. Haley, L. R. 5 Ch. 155, 39 L. J. Ch. 284, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 251, 18 Wkly. Rep. 242, an action to restrain the use by the defendant of the name of The Guinea Coal Co., in his business. I quite agree (said Gifford, L. J.), that they (plaintiffs) have no property in the name (Guinea Coal Co.), but the principle upon which the cases on the subject proceed is, not that there is property in the word, but that it is a fraud on a person who has established a trade and carries it on under a given name, that some other person should assume the same name, or the same name with a slight alteration in such a way as to induce persons to deal with him in the belief that they are dealing with the person who has given a reputation to the name." representation is directly or impliedly made that relief will be granted in equity.[88] Of course use or imitation of a trade-mark at the instance of its owner affords him no cause of action. The doctrine of volenti non fit injuria applies.[87]

B. Actual Copying or Use. When a trade-mark is actually copied and used upon other goods of the same class, there is of course an infringement,[88] and this is true even though other words or accessories are used in connection with it, because, being exclusive, it must not be used at all.[89] But the words of a trade-mark may be lawfully used by another, if used, not as a trade-mark for rival goods, but honestly, in good faith, without any deceptive artifice, as part of a truthful descriptive statement applied to the goods.[90] Unless color is made an essential element of the trade-mark, it may be infringed by using it in the same

Exact similtude.— "It is true that in cases of this kind, as a general rule, exact similitude is not required to constitute an infringement, or to entitle the complaining party to protection; but if the form, marks, contents, words, or other special arrangement or general appearance of the words of the alleged infringer's device, are such as would be likely to mislead persons in the ordinary course of purchasing the goods, and induce them to suppose that they were purchasing the genuine article, then the similitude is such as entitles the injured party to equitable protection, if he takes seasonable measures to assert his rights and prevent their continued invasion." the other, and deception is improbable or impossible, there is no infringement.[1] In applying this test it has been said that all doubts ought to be resolved in favor of the prior trader and against the imitator.[2] Proof of actual deception of purchasers is not necessary to obtain relief. It is the probability of deception which calls for a remedy.[3] Of course actual instances of deception constitute the strongest

Picture merely of same generic character.— Equity will afford relief against the infringement of a trade-mark consisting in part of a picture or figure, although the alleged infringing picture is not a close imitation, but is merely of the same generic character, where the resemblance is such as is calculated to mislead ordinary purchasers into buying the product of defendant for that of complainant. possible proof of the deceptive character of the imitation.[4] The doctrine of infringement of trade-marks by deceptive imitation is nothing more than an application of the broader doctrine of unfair competition.[5]

3. Standard For Determining Infringing Similarity. In determining whether an alleged infringing trade-mark is sufficiently similar to be deceptive, and therefore an infringement, ordinary purchasers, buying under the usual conditions prevailing in the trade, and giving such attention as such purchasers usually give in buying that class of goods, are the standard. If such a purchaser would probably be deceived into purchasing one article thinking it was the other, there is an infringement, otherwise not.[6] Some cases hold the similarity to be an infringe-that persons seeing the two trade-marks side by side would not be deceived.[15] Ocular comparison of the tout ensemble is the best means of determining the fact of deceptive and infringing imitation.[16]

4. Question of Fact. What similarity between two marks is sufficient to deceive, and hence to constitute an infringement, is a question of fact to be determined in each case by its own circumstances.[17] As there is no distinction in this respect between cases of infringement of technical trade-marks and unfair competition, the cases are for convenience grouped under the latter head.[18]

D. Intent and Motive. Guilty knowledge or fraudulent intent is not an essential element of infringement of a technical trade-mark. It is well settled that an infringement will be restrained irrespective of the question of intention on the part of defendant.[19] This is sometimes placed upon the ground that plain-is no property right in any word or mark as such,[21] and the remedy is really based upon the sale of one man's goods as being those of another, thereby appropriating the latter's good-will.[22] The wrong and damage to plaintiff is the same whether or not it was intended by defendant. It is the invasion of plaintiff's property right in his good-will that supports the remedy.[23] Fraudulent intent may be material, however, where an accounting of damages and profits is sought in addition to injunctive relief.[24] And it has also been held that where a fraudulent intent is either admitted or proved, the imitation or copying need not be so close in order to sustain the action.[25] Persistence in the use of an infringing mark after notice constitutes intentional infringement,[26] and is strong evidence of fraud.[27] Fraudulent intent may be inferred from imitation.[28] Similar questions arise in unfair competition cases which should be consulted in this connection.[29]

E. Use on Genuine Goods. Use of another's trade-mark upon the genuine goods is not an infringement. Any one who deals in another's goods may use or sell them with the latter's trade-mark upon them, for in such case there is no deception. The mark truthfully indicates origin or ownership.[30] But the mere fact that genuine goods are used as an ingredient in a different preparation confers no right to use the trade-mark thereon,[31] and a use of the trade-mark upon repaired or rebuilt goods,[32] or upon a different grade of goods than that upon which the proprietor uses the mark, especially if inferior, and even though obtained from the same proprietor,[33] constitutes an infringement.

F. Removal and Substitution of Trade-Marks. A dealer may legally remove the trade-marks from articles made by another and purchased by himself, and resell them with his own trade-marks placed thereon.[34]

G. Refilling Marked Bottles or Packages. It is a plain infringement to take another's bottles or packages marked with his trade-mark, and refill them with spurious goods, and then sell them in the market.[35]

H. Use on Different Class of Goods. The right to the exclusive use of a trade-mark is limited to a use of it upon some particular class of goods.[36] Accordingly it is not an infringement for another person to use even the same identical

Bulk and bottled goods.— Where a distiller has different marks or labels for his bulk goods and bottled goods, a purchaser of bulk whisky may not bottle it himself, and place thereon the marks or labels used by the distiller for his bottled goods. But a manufacturer who sells to a dealer, in bulk, an article usually sold and used in small quantities, without any restriction as to its disposal, must be taken to authorize the dealer to sell it as being his vendor's manufacture. The dealer may therefore call the article by the name registered by the manufacturer as his trade-mark. Condy v. Taylor, 56 L. T. Rep. N. S. 891. The distinction between this case and the one last above cited is that there were not separate trade-marks for bulk and other goods. A purchaser of bulk goods has the right to divide it into small packages, and sell the same as originating with his vendor, according to the fact. Reason for rule.— Sebastian says in this connection: "The maker's mark has already performed its function when the goods are sold, and when it is removed from the goods the maker ceases to be responsible for the guaranty implied by its presence on them. The purchaser, by substituting his own mark, undertakes the responsibility for the quality of the goods, which are in effect selected and guaranteed by him." trade-mark upon a different class of goods from that to which the prior user applied it.[37] Goods are in the same class, within this rule, whenever the use of a given trade-mark, name, or symbol would enable an unscrupulous dealer to palm off on unsuspecting customers spurious goods as being the genuine goods of the proprietor of the trade-mark.[38] A trade-mark for a broad class is infringed by its use on a particular species of goods belonging to such class.[39] Use even on non-competitive goods may be enjoined so long as defendant deals also in competitive goods.[40]

I. Relative Merits of Goods Immaterial. Upon the question of infringement, it is immaterial whether defendant's goods are of inferior or superior quality to that of plaintiff's. In either case he has no right to sell them under plaintiff's mark, and thereby avail himself of the benefit of the good-will and reputation of plaintiff's goods.[41]

J. Marks Conferring Same Market Name to Goods. Actual physical resemblance is not the sole test of infringement. A word may be infringed by a pictorial symbol or representation of the object denoted by such word, and vice versa. If the goods of a trader have become known in the market by a particular name by reason of the trade-mark used thereon, the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market is as much an infringement as an actual copy of the trade-mark.[42] But a device or symbol is not infringed by a name unless the goods have been sold or become known under that name.[43]

K. Affixation of Infringing Mark to Goods. It has been held that a strict technical trade-mark in a name is not infringed by merely calling a similar article by that name, without affixing it to such article.[44] An injunction against infringement may extend, however, to advertisements announcing the infringing goods,[45] and a use of a trade-mark in advertisements and other announcements of rival goods may be restrained.[46]

L. Use of Infringer's Own Name. The mere fact that an infringer uses his own name in connection with the mark is not sufficient to rebut deception and prevent his use or imitation of the mark from being an infringement.[47]

M. Combination Trade-Marks. A trade-mark consisting of a combination of common elements is not infringed unless the combination is used.[48] Where only the common and non-exclusive feature is used there is no infringement.[49]

N. Contributory Infringement. One who furnishes another with the means of infringement is liable as a contributory infringer.[50]

V. UNFAIR COMPETITION.

A. Definition and Nature — 1. IN GENERAL. Unfair competition consists in passing off or attempting to pass off, upon the public, the goods or business of one person as and for the goods or business of another.[51] It consists essentially in the conduct of a trade or business in such a manner that there is either an express or implied representation to that effect.[52] And it may be stated broadly that any conduct, the natural and probable tendency and effect of which is to deceive the public so as to pass off the goods or business of one person as and for that of another, constitutes actionable unfair competition.[53] The definition is comprehensive enough

The general rule is that anything done by a rival in the same business, by imitation or otherwise, designed or calculated to mislead the public in the belief that, in buying the product offered by him for sale, they were buying the product of another's manufacture, would be in fraud of that other's rights, and would afford just grounds for equitable interference. defined is a legal wrong for which the courts afford a remedy.[54] It is a tort [55] and a fraud.[56] The basic principle is that no one has a right to dress up his goods or otherwise represent them in such a manner as to deceive an intending purchaser and induce him to believe he is buying the goods of another.[57] No monopoly is created or

"Care must be taken in these cases not to extend the meaning of the word 'unfair' to cover that which may be unethical but is not illegal. It may be unethical for one trader to take advantage of the advertising of his neighbor, but his so doing would in many instances be entirely legal. If one dealer advertises extensively and at great expense the sale of a staple article, or of any article which he has not the exclusive right to vend, his neighbor may undoubtedly endeavor to cause the customers attracted to the neighborhood by the advertising to purchase the same or a similar article at his store instead of at the store of the advertiser. What conduct on the part of a defendant will be held to constitute unfair competition is the subject-matter of discussion in cases too numerous for useful citation, but the principle applied in each case is extremely simple. As Lord Chancellor Halsbury said in the House of Lords, in the case of Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, 204, 65 L. J. Q. B. 381, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 289, 44 Wkly. Rep. 638; 25 Eng. Rul. Rule of competition.— In Coats v. Merrick Thread Co., 149 U. S. 562, 13 S. Ct. 966, 37 L. ed. 847 [followed in Centaur Co. v. Neathery, 91 Fed. 891, 34 C. C. A. 118], Mr. Justice Brown, announcing this doctrine, says: "Rival manufacturers may lawfully compete for the patronage of the public in the quality and price of their goods, in the beauty and tastefulness of their inclosing packages, in the extent of their advertising, and in the employment of agents, but they have no right, by imitative devices, to beguile the public into buying their wares under the impression they are buying those of their rivals."

The law of unfair competition seeks only to restrain fraudulent practices inducing confusion of goods and deception of the public, and it cannot be used to prevent a defendant from adopting a trade-mark or label intended to attract attention and popularize its product, although it results, and is intended to result, in better enabling it to compete with complainant, where no deception or confusion of goods is caused or intended thereby. G. W. Cole Co. v. American Cement, etc., Co., 130 Fed. 703, 65 C. C. A. 105. The doctrine of unfair competition is based on the principle of common business integrity, and equity only affords relief when this principle has been violated, and the mischief which equity will guard against is a confusion in trade-names, or in the identity of parties, or in the goods sold, so as to de-tion and confusion on the part of customers by reason of defendant's practices must appear.[61] Of course there must be actual competition before there can be any unfair competition.[62]

2. Basis For Remedy. Relief against unfair competition is properly afforded upon the ground that one who has built up a good-will and reputation for his goods or business is entitled to all the benefits therefrom. Such good-will is property, and like other property is protected against invasion.[63] The deception of the public

The adoption by a telephone company of the same number as a call for its Trouble Department as that used by a rival company previously established for its Trouble Department, enabling the newer company to learn through mistakes of subscribers of the older company of cases of trouble in the use of its telephones, was not unfair competition against which an injunction would issue. injures the proprietor of the business by diverting his customers and depriving him of sales which he otherwise would have made.[64] This, rather than protection of the public against imposition, is the true and sound basis for the private remedy, although it is often said that the remedy proceeds in part upon the theory of protection to the public against fraud.[65] No one has a right to avail himself of

The gist of an action to enjoin one from using a trade-name is, not an impairment of complainant's profits by defendant's competition, but the fraudulent representation that defendant's goods are complainant's; and the fact that a complainant is or may be injured by the use of the name is not material. another's favorable reputation in order to sell his own goods.[66] A demand for goods created by advertising belongs to the advertiser, and he will be protected therein against unfair competition by another who seeks in any way to take advantage of such advertisement to sell his own goods.[67]

3. Trade-Mark Cases Distinguished. The infringement of a trade-mark is one means of passing off the goods of one person as and for the goods of another, and, indeed, the remedy for infringement is based upon this principle.[68] Accordingly the law of trade-marks is merely a specialized branch of the broader doctrine of unfair competition.[69] The doctrine of unfair competition, although not under that name, was recognized at an early day.[70] For a long time, however, the courts apparently did not see how they could afford relief against the use of particular

Money invested in advertising is as much a part of a business as if invested in buildings or machinery, and when the goods of a manufacturer have become popular not only because of their intrinsic worth, but also by reason of the ingenious, attractive, and persistent manner in which they have been advertised, the good-will thus created is entitled to protection against unfair competition. names, signs, or symbols unless plaintiff could assert an exclusive right thereto. Accordingly, the earlier cases were decided upon the ground of trade-mark, and the principal inquiry was confined to the determination of what might be monopolized as a trade-mark.[71] Much difficulty was caused by straining the doctrines of trade-marks to cover cases which would now be readily recognized and redressed as unfair competition.[72] The present tendency is to decide every case upon the ground of unfair competition, by making the decision turn upon whether or not the effect of what was done is to pass off the goods or business of one man as those of another regardless of the existence of any technical trade-mark.[73] The law of trade-marks, however, has been too thoroughly specialized and crystallized by statute and decision to become wholly merged in the law of unfair competition. It therefore remains as a distinct subject, and furnishes the rule of decision in all cases to which it is applicable.[74] Protection against unfair competition is afforded upon the same general principles upon which technical trade-marks are protected.[75] The principal distinction between infringement of trade-mark and unfair competition is that in the latter class of cases no exclusive proprietary interest in the names or marks used to deceive is necessary to relief, while in trade-mark cases an exclusive right is necessary.[76] Another distinction frequently drawn by the cases is that fraudulent intent need not be proved in trade-mark cases, but must be shown in unfair competition cases,[77] but this is, perhaps,

"The advantage of not misusing the word 'property,' in connection with the right of the user of a trade mark or trade name, is that the proper conception of the basis of the right, administered in favor of the complainant, reconciles the decisions respecting the subject-matter. The principle is universal in these cases that one may not palm off his goods as the goods of another, and this irrespective of whether that other has a technical trade mark, is using his own name, or is using words to which he has no exclusive right whatever, providing he is using the name or mark to denote the origin or ownership of the named or marked goods." open to doubt.[78] In trade-mark cases it is not necessary to prove that the mark or name has acquired a secondary meaning, and come to indicate plaintiff's goods.[79] In unfair competition cases this is necessary, and, in fact, is the very basis of relief.[80]

4. Trade-Names. Trade-names have been frequently confused with trade-marks, and, broadly considered, they do include names which may constitute technical trade-marks.[81] More accurately, however, trade-names are names which are used in trade to designate a particular business of certain individuals considered somewhat as an entity, or the place at which a business is located, or of a class of goods, but which are not technical trade-marks either because not applied or affixed to goods sent into the market, or because not capable of exclusive appropriation by any one as trade-marks.[82] Such trade-names may, or may not, be exclusive.[83] Exclusive trade-names are protected very much upon the same principles as trade-marks,[84] and the same rules that govern trade-marks are applied

A trade-name is of a different character from a trade-mark.— It is descriptive of the manufacturer or dealer himself as much as his own name is, and frequently, like the names of business corporations, includes the name of the place where the business is located. If attached to goods, it is designed to say plainly what a trade-mark only indicates by association and use. Trade-marks, properly so called, may be violated by accident or ignorance. The law protects them, nevertheless, as property. Names which are not trade-marks, strictly speaking, may be protected likewise, if they are taken with fraudulent intention, and if they are so used as to be likely to affect such intention. Cady v. Schultz, 19 R. I. 193, 32 Atl. 915, 61 Am. St. Rep. 763, 29 L. R. A. 524. "The use of a trade name is in some respects different from that of a trade mark. The latter usually relates chiefly to the thing sold; while, in addition to this, the former involves the source from which it comes, the individuality of the maker, both for protection in trade and for avoiding confusion in business affairs, as well as for securing to him the advantage of any good reputation which he may have gained. The law of trade mark is designed chiefly for the protection of the public from imposition, that of trade name for the protection of the party entitled to it. A case, therefore, in regard to trade name is of somewhat broader scope than one relating to a trade mark." Armington v. Palmer, 21 R. I. 109, 115, 42 Atl. 308, 79 Am. St. Rep. 786, 43 L. R. A. 95. To same effect is Eastern Outfitting Co. v. Manheim, 59 Wash. 428, 110 Pac. 23.

A trade-name differs from a trade-mark in the fact that the former appeals more to the ear than to the eye, while in the case of trade-marks the reverse is the case. N. K. Fairbank Co. v. Luckel, 102 Fed. 327, 42 C. C. A. 376.

in determining what may be an exclusive trade-name.[85] Non-exclusive trade-names are names that are publici juris in their primary sense, but which in a secondary sense have come to be understood as indicating the goods or business of a particular trader.[86] Trade-names are acquired by adoption and user, and belong to the one who first used them and gave them a value.[87] Abandonment of trade-names is governed by the same rules as apply to technical trade-marks.[88] Trade-names are protected against use or imitation, upon the ground of unfair competition.[89]

B. General Rules — 1. Exclusive Right to Name or Mark Unnecessary. An exclusive proprietary interest such as a trade-mark or copyright, in the terms or symbols used to palm off the goods of one manufacturer or vendor as those of another, is not essential to the maintenance of a suit to enjoin or redress the perpetration of the wrong, but an interest in the good-will of the business is sufficient, because it is the property in the good-will which is protected in all cases of unfair competition.[90] It is only necessary to show actual or probable confusion of goods as a result of defendant's use of particular terms or symbols;

Aside from the law of trade-marks, courts will protect trade-names or reputations on the broad ground of enforcing justice, and protecting one in the fruits of his toil. Sartor v. Schaden, 125 Iowa 696, 101 N. W. 511.

Judicial summary of rule.— "It is true that a man cannot appropriate a geographical name, but neither can he a color, or any part of the English language, or even a proper name to the exclusion of others whose names are like his. Yet a color in connection with a sufficiently complex combination of other things may be recognized as saying so circumstantially that the defendant's goods are the plaintiff's as to pass the injunction line. New England Awl, etc., Co. v. Marlborough Awl, etc., Co., 168 Mass. 154, 156, 46 N. E. 386, 60 Am. St. Rep. 377. So, although the plaintiff has no copyright on the dictionary or any part of it, he can exclude a defendant from a part of the free field of the English language, even from the mere use of generic words unqualified and unexplained, when they would mislead the plaintiff's customers to another shop. Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, 65 L. J. Q. B. 381, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 289, 44 Wkly. Rep. 638. So the name of a person may become so associated with his goods that one of the same name coming into the business later will not be allowed to use even his own name without distinguishing his wares. Reddaway v. Banham, supra; Brinsmead v. Brinsmead, 13 T. L. R. 3. See Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co., 163 U. S. 169, 204, 16 S. Ct. 1002, 41 L. ed. 169; Allegretti Chocolate Cream Co. v. Keller, 85 Fed. 643. And so, we doubt not, may a geographical name acquire a similar association with a similar effect. Whatever might have been the doubts some years ago, we think that now it is pretty well settled that the plaintiff merely on the strength of having been first in the field may put later comers to the trouble of taking such reasonable precautions as are commercially practicable to prevent their lawful names and advertisements from deceitfully diverting the plaintiff's custom." very numerous where relief has been afforded upon the ground of unfair competition against a deceptive use of generic or descriptive names and marks, personal, geographical, corporate, and other names, none of which are capable of exclusive appropriation as technical trade-marks.[95]

2. Doctrine of Secondary Meaning. Words or names which have a primary meaning of their own, such as words descriptive of the goods, or the place where they are made, or the name of the maker, and which are not capable of exclusive appropriation as a trade-mark, may nevertheless by long use in connection with the goods or business of a particular trader come to be understood by the public as designating the goods or business of that particular trader. Such words have both a primary and secondary meaning. In their primary descriptive sense, they are publici juris, and all the world may use them, but they must be used in such a way as not to falsely convey the secondary meaning, for this would constitute unfair competition as tending directly to pass off the goods or business of one man as and for that of another. This is what is known as the doctrine of secondary meaning. Its perception by the courts was the genesis of the law of unfair competition as distinguished from technical trade-marks.[96] In all this

Judicial statements of doctrine of secondary meaning.— "Words or symbols naturally descriptive of the product, while not adapted for exclusive use as a trade-mark, may yet acquire, by long and general usage in connection with the preparation and by association with the name of the manufacturer, a secondary meaning or signification, such as will express or betoken the goods of that manufacturer only, and in this sense he will be entitled to protection from an unfair use of the designation or trade-name by others that may result in his injury and in fraud of the public." Standard Varnish Works v. Fisher, 153 Fed. 928, 930. In Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, 65 L. J. Q. B. 381, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 289, 44 Wkly. Rep. 638, Lord Herschell said: "The name of a person, or words forming part of the common stock of language, may become so far associated with the goods of a particular maker that it is capable of proof that the use of them by themselves without explanation or qualification by another manufacturer would deceive a purchaser into the belief that he was getting the goods of A. when he was really getting the goods of B. In a case of this description the mere proof by the plaintiff that the defendant was using a name, word or device which he had adopted to distinguish his goods would not entitle him to any relief. He could only obtain it by proving further that the defendant was using it under such circumstances or in such manner as to put off his goods as the goods of the plaintiff. If he could succeed in proving this, I think he would, on well-established principles, be entitled to an injunction. This, I think, is a very accurate expression of the law as it is laid down in the most recent and the most authoritative decisions in this country." International Silver Co. v. Wm. H. Rogers Corp., 66 N. J. Eq. 119, 125, 57 Atl. 1037. "In Wotherspoon v. Currie, L. R. 5 H. L. 508, 42 L. J. Ch. 130, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 393, Currie was enjoined from using the geographical name of 'Glenfield' in connection with the starch manufactured by him in that village. It was contended that the defendant, in describing it as made there, only told the simple truth, but the house of lords said that the mere fact that he was really carrying on his manufacture at Glenfield, and that he was, therefore, in a misleading sense, stating what was so, did not relieve him from the charge that his proceedings were intended to produce, and calculated to produce in the mind of purchasers, the belief that his article was the article of the plaintiff. The fallacy, as was said in a subsequent case, lay in overlooking the fact that a word may acquire in a trade a secondary significance, differing from its primary one, and that if it is used to persons in the trade who will understand it and be known as intended to understand it in its secondary sense, it will be none the less a falsehood that in its primary sense it may be true." International Silver Co. v. Wm. H.

class of cases where the word, name, or other mark or device is primarily publici juris the right to relief depends upon the proof. If plaintiff proves that the name or word has been so exclusively identified with his goods or business as to have acquired a secondary meaning, so as to indicate his goods or business and his alone, he is entitled to relief against another's deceptive use of such terms. If he fails in such proof, he is not entitled to relief.[97] There is an exclusive right to the secondary meaning of a name, which has been deemed a property right,[98] in the

Rogers Corp., 66 N. J. Eq. 119, 127, 57 Atl. 1037. While the common use of a word or phrase may not be exclusively appropriated as a trade-mark, there may be a secondary meaning or construction, which, although it, too, may not be registered or selected as a trade-mark, may be appropriated by the person who has developed it, and the use of which will be protected against unfair competition. Limited to particular locality.— A secondary meaning may be acquired which is limited to a particular locality, and in such cases it will be protected in that locality. Sartor v. Schaden, 125 Iowa 696, 101 N. W. 511; Cohen v. Nagle, 190 Mass. 4, 76 N. E. 276, 2 L. R. A. N. S. 964; Regis v. Jaynes, 185 Mass. 458, 70 N. E. 480. It is immaterial that defendant's preparation is more widely known and popular than plaintiff's, as this bears merely on the extent of relief. A person is entitled to protection in building up his business. Regis v. Jaynes, 185 Mass. 458, 70 N. E. 480 [citing Shaver v. Shaver, 54 Iowa 208, 6 N. W. 188, 37 Am. Limited to particular trade.— When a name denotes a special article to persons in a particular trade, but is used vaguely by persons not in the trade, it is not a misdescription to sell by that name, to persons not in their trade, articles popularly included under the name, but not strictly within the meaning of the word as used in the trade. Lee v. Haley, L. R. 5 Ch. 155, 39 L. J. Ch. 284, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 251, 18 Wkly. Rep. 242.

Name of different obsolete article.—A name may acquire a secondary meaning and be protected, although it had previously been used in connection with a different article which, however, has become obsolete and unknown in the market. In such a case the name cannot be revived and applied to a new article in competition with the one indicated by the secondary meaning of the name. Keasbey v. Brooklyn Chemical Works, 142 N. same sense that technical trade-marks are property.[99] This exclusive right is strictly limited to the secondary meaning of the word. Use by others may not be absolutely prevented. Merely the misleading manner of using it will be enjoined, leaving defendant at liberty to use it in all honest ways not deceptive.[1] It is the duty of the court to regulate the use which may be made of this class of names so as to preserve the rights of both parties with as little injury to either as is possible.[2] Practically the whole law of unfair competition is an application of these principles. Unfair competition by means of generic, descriptive, personal, and geographical names are common instances.[3]

3. Permissible Use of Secondary Meaning Names. The generic name of an article is publici juris, and all may use it as the name of that article,[4] although if it has acquired a secondary meaning, the subsequent trader may be required to accompany his use of the name with sufficient affirmative precautions to prevent deception of purchasers.[5] With this single exception, the rule is that a subsequent trader may not use even common terms or symbols, his own name, or a geographical or descriptive word, in such a manner as to cause his goods to be known in the market by the same name as that by which a prior trader's similar goods are already known and called for by the purchasing public. The trade-name for the goods of a particular trader may not be used by another as the trade-name for his similar rival goods.[6] The subsequent trader, however, may use such terms

This rule has been most clearly stated in Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. T. M. Bissell Plow Co., 121 Fed. 357, 366, per Cochran, J., as follows: "In determining whether what he is doing or has done in either of these ways amounts to such a representation, and therefore constitutes unfair competition, the test is whether it is calculated to deceive intending purchasers of such goods — that they are the goods of the first comer. It is not necessary that it should be calculated to so deceive first or intelligent purchasers. It is sufficient that it is calculated to deceive ultimate or ordinary purchasers. And ordinary purchasers include incautious, unwary, and ignorant purchasers. The law has gone further than this, and prescribed a rule by which it can be determined whether what is done by the rival trader is calculated so to deceive such purchasers. That rule is that, if what is done by such trader causes his goods to be known in the trade by the same name by which such other goods are already known therein, it is calculated to deceive such purchasers." In Baker v. Baker, 87 Fed. 209, 210, the court said: "The well-known short name by which the public styles the article of the complainant is 'Baker's Chocolate,' and thus the public regards what is presented under that name as the complainant's article, and associates the name with a particular factory of long existence and permanence. The defendant has a right to manufacture chocolate, and to acquire his own reputation under his own name, but not to use the name so as to deceive the purchaser. When he presents his article as W. P. Baker's Chocolate, he not only improperly works mischief to the pre-existing manufacturer, but he wrongs the public. . . . So long as the title contains the words which in trade and among consumers have come to be the every-day designation of complainant's goods, the chocolate so labeled will naturally be assumed to be complainant's, unless special care be taken to indicate that it is not." Baker v. Sanders, 80 Fed. 889, 26 C. C. A. 220. A man is not entitled to call his goods by a name which is an accurate and true description of such goods, when the name is one by which the goods of another manufacturer have already been described and are known to the trade, and the effect of his doing so will be to mislead purchasers into the belief that they are buying the goods of that other. American Tobacco Co. v. Polacsek, 170 Fed. 117; Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, 65 L. J. Q. B. 381, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 289, 44 Wkly. Rep. 638 [reversing [1895] 1 Q. B. 286, 64 L. J. Q. Marks conferring same name.—Where goods of a trader have acquired a specific name from the appearance of a trade-mark, no other trader will be allowed to use a mark which, although different, would cause his goods to be known by the same name. American Tin Plate Co. v. Licking Roller Mill Co., 158 Fed. 690; Johnson v. Bauer, 82 Fed. 662, 27 C. C. A. 374; Seixo v. Provezende, L. R. 1 Ch. 192, 12 Jur. N. S. 215, 14 L. T. Rep. N. are publici juris in their primary sense, and cannot be exclusively appropriated by any one.[7] But use as a name or title is not a permissible use, because, by reason of the acquired secondary meaning, such a use carries with it a false representation that the goods of that name are those of the prior trader.[8] This rule is, perhaps, not yet fully recognized by all the courts but it is a reasonable and just rule and in accord with the principle that any unnecessary or untruthful use of words or symbols causing confusion of goods will be restrained as unfair competition.[9] The range of available names is so large that there is no need of any one giving his goods the same name as that of rival goods, and the right to use all words or names in an honestly descriptive manner preserves the rights of all parties. There is an absurdity involved in permitting one to unnecessarily use deceptive features and then requiring him to neutralize them by other cautionary features which may or may not be effective. The only real precaution is the omission of the unnecessary and deceptive name.[10] The use of a name which has already become identified with rival goods is necessarily deceptive.[11]

4. Actual or Probable Deception of Customers. In order to make out a case of unfair competition, it is not necessary to show that any person has been actually deceived by defendant's conduct and led to purchase his goods in the belief that they are the goods of plaintiff or to deal with defendant thinking he was dealing with plaintiff. It is sufficient to show that such deception will be the natural and probable result of defendant's acts.[12] But either actual or probable deception

In Williams v. Mitchell, 106 Fed. 168, 171, 45 C. C. A. 265, complainant's game-board became known by the designation "Carrom Board." The circuit court of appeals said: "The defendants may not rightfully apply that name to their game as a designation or name of the game, although they have a right, as the court below decreed, to use the word in descriptive portions of advertisements so long as they use them in a purely and properly descriptive sense."

New name for new business.— "In establishing a new business the defendant had no occasion to adopt a name which would be likely to mislead the public and induce them to believe that the business which he was establishing was conducted by the plaintiffs. ignorant purchaser,[18] but not careless purchasers who make no examination.[19] The fact that careful buyers who scrutinize closely are not deceived merely shows that the injury is less in degree. It does not show that there is no injury.[20] The fact that careless purchasers are deceived merely by the use of ordinary and common form of putting up goods does not show unfair competition.[21] The class of purchasers who buy the particular kind of article manufactured, such as servants or children, upon the one hand, or persons skilled in the particular trade upon the other, must be considered in determining the question of probable deception.[22] Purchasers may be deceived and misled into purchasing the goods of one person under the belief that they are buying the goods of another person, whose goods they intended to buy, although they do not know who is the actual proprietor of the genuine goods. They are so deceived when they have in mind to purchase goods coming from a definite although unknown source, with which goods they are acquainted, although they neither know nor care who is the actual proprietor of such goods.[23] It is immaterial that the wholesale or retail dealer is not deceived in procuring his stock of goods. The ultimate purchaser is the one in view, and it is sufficient if he is likely to be deceived.[24] The manufacturer or wholesaler is liable for deception practised by a retailer to which he has contributed by affording the means and opportunity for the deception of purchasers, although the retailer himself was not deceived.[25]

Deception without knowledge of real proprietor.— "Persons may be misled and may mistake one class of goods for another, although they do not know the names of the makers of either. A person whose name is not known but whose mark is imitated is just as much injured in his trade as if his name were known as well as his mark. His mark as used by him has given a reputation to his goods. His trade depends greatly on such reputation. His mark sells his goods. A rival who imitates his mark can hardly help deceiving buyers and injuring him; and for such injury, if proved, he can obtain redress. Siegert v. Findlater, 7 Ch. D. 801, 47 L. J. Ch. 233, 38 L. 5. Question of Fact Rather Than of Law. No inflexible rule can be laid down as to what conduct will constitute unfair competition.[26] Each case is, in a measure, a law unto itself. Unfair competition is always a question of fact.[27] The question to be determined in every case is whether or not, as a matter of fact, the name or mark used by defendant has previously come to indicate and designate plaintiff's

It is not sufficient to show that by trick or device a retail dealer might be able to pass off the goods of one for those of another. Payton v. Snelling, [1901] A. C. 308, 70 L. J. Ch. 644, 85 L. tinguished upon this ground.[34] But the reasons for not requiring proof of a fraudulent intent in cases of infringement of trade-marks apply equally well to unfair competition cases,[35] for the basis of the remedy is substantially the same in both cases.[36] Unfair competition involves trading upon another's reputation and good-will, and the injury is the same regardless of the intent with which it is done. Accordingly the better view is that an actual fraudulent intent need not be shown where the necessary and probable tendency of defendant's conduct is to deceive the public, and pass off his goods or business as and for that of plaintiff,[37] especially intent to deceive is insufficient.[44] A wrongful imitation for a fraudulent purpose will be enjoined.[45] A fraudulent intent may be presumed from a similarity close enough to cause actual or probable deception or damage, upon the principle that persons are held to have intended the natural and probable consequences of their acts.[46] Mere similarity is not, as a matter of law, conclusive evidence of an intention

Judicial statement of rule.—"If a plaintiff has the absolute right to the use of a particular word or words as a trade-mark, then if an infringement is shown, the wrongful or fraudulent intent is presumed, and although allowed to be rebutted in exemption of damages, the further violation of the right of property will nevertheless be restrained. But tion to deceive.[47] But such intent may be inferred, as a matter of fact, from similarity. Form, color, and general appearance may be considered. The greater the number of points of similarity, the stronger is the inference of an intentional imitation with intent to deceive.[48] Conspicuous and unnecessary use or display where an alleged trade-mark is not in itself a good trade-mark, yet the use of the word has come to denote the particular manufacturer or vendor, relief against unfair competition or perfidious dealing will be awarded by requiring the use of the word by another to be confined to its primary sense by such limitations as will prevent misapprehension on the question of origin. In the latter class of cases such circumstances must be made out as will show wrongful intent in fact, or justify that inference from the inevitable consequences of the act complained of." Elgin Nat. of another's characteristic words or marks,[49] an untruthful use of a name previously identified with plaintiff's goods,[50] or continuance of use in the same form after notice of the facts,[51] or a change from a different mark or label to one more closely resembling that of plaintiff,[52] is strong evidence of actual fraudulent intent. 7. Affirmative Duty to Distinguish — a. Statement of Rule. It is the duty of a subsequent trader coming into an established trade not to dress up his goods or market them in such a way as to cause confusion between his goods or business and that of a prior trader. Even conceding that the later trader has an equal abstract right to use particular words, names, or marks, yet if his unexplained use of them will cause confusion and deception, he must accompany such use with affirmative distinguishing features sufficient to render deception improbable. This rule applies to all classes of names, including descriptive, generic, personal, and geographical names, which, although primarily publici juris, have acquired a secondary meaning.[54] Where a name has acquired a secondary meaning, and come to indicate the source of particular articles, the mere use of such a name by another, unaccompanied by adequate distinguishing statements, in itself amounts to an artifice calculated and intended to deceive, and constitutes unfair competition.[55]

b. Sufficiency of Differentiation. It is a question of fact in each case whether or not the goods or business of the subsequent trader have been so distinguished as to prevent any actual or probable confusion and deception. All the circumstances of the particular case must be considered.[56] It is presumed that the public uses its senses and takes note of differences which are thus disclosed.[57] But on the other hand, it must be remembered that similarity, not identity, is the usual recourse when one party seeks to benefit himself by the good name of another, so that the mere existence of differences does not necessarily show honest and sufficient differentiation.[58] A nice discrimination is not to be expected from the ordinary purchaser.[59] Although differences between the respective labels and packages exist, and are readily apparent upon comparison, yet if the ordinary purchaser is liable to be deceived by the similarities which also exist, an injunction will be granted.[60] Where the distinctive part of a name or mark is taken, minor differences afford no defense.[61] Similarity in the main distinguishing features will usually be sufficient to constitute infringement or unfair competition.[62] Alleged distinguishing features which are not so placed or used as to be sufficiently prominent to prevent deception, or which are not likely to attract attention comparably with the deceptive features, are insufficient.[63] Any artifice, such as the use of small type, to make inconspicuous the alleged distinguishing features shows unfair competition.[64] Where the trade-name is in itself deceptive, injunction lies, although there are differences in the dress of the goods, since purchasers may not be familiar with the exact appearance of the goods.[65] The mere addition of an adjective to a deceptive trade-name has no corrective effect.[66] The addition of prefixes or suffixes to a deceptive word is not a sufficient affirmative distinction.[67] Where a fraudulent intent to deceive is shown, the addition of explanatory phrases is not sufficient to prevent an injunction.[68] When a deceptive name is used unnecessarily, and a fortiori when it is used falsely, nothing except the omission of the name itself is a sufficient distinction.[69] Mere use of one's own name is not alone a sufficient affirmative distinction, where there is otherwise sufficient similarity to constitute unfair competition.[70] But where the respective names of the parties are different, use of one's own name is a circumstance to be considered and will be given greater or less effect according to all the circumstances.[71] Use of the name of the manufacturer or of the place of manufacture does not tend to distinguish the goods where the trade-name of the goods is different from either.[72] The place of actual manufacture is usually unknown to the ordinary mass of purchasers, and hence a designation of the place of manufacture in connection with otherwise infringing goods has little or no tendency to distinguish between them and rival goods.[73] The same thing is true as to the name of the maker or proprietor of the goods.[74] Use of defendant's own name in connection with an infringing trade-name aggravates the wrong, because its effect is to give defendant the benefit of the established reputation of the goods, and thus increase the benefit derived by him from his fraud.[75] A mere additional label is not a sufficient affirmative distinction,[76] especially one readily removable by dealers, or in handling of the goods.[77] The form of explanatory statements which must accompany the use of names, primarily publici juris, but which have acquired a secondary meaning,[78] depends upon and varies with the facts of each particular case. It must be framed with a view to the exact nature of the inquiry, and the causes that mislead the public.[79] The designation must be efficient and ample under the circumstances of a given situation[80] and such as will unmistakably lead the ordinary purchaser to a correct conclusion as to the identity and source of the article to which the ambiguous name is applied.[81]

Two things are required for the accomplishment of a fraud: First, there must be such a general resemblance of the forms, words, symbols, and accompaniments as to mislead the public; second, sufficient distinctive individuality must be preserved, so as to procure for the person himself the benefit of that deception which the general resemblance is calculated to produce. 8. Unnecessary or Untruthful Use or Imitation. A dealer coming into a field already occupied by a rival of established reputation must do nothing which will unnecessarily create or increase confusion between his goods or business and the goods or business of his rival. Owing to the nature of the goods dealt in, or the common use of terms which are publici juris, some confusion may be inevitable. But anything done which unnecessarily increases this confusion and damage to the established trader constitutes unfair competition.[82] The unnecessary imitation or adoption of a confusing name, label, or dress of goods constitutes unfair competition.[83] Where there is no reason for using a particular name other
