for any honest purpose. Such false use is a deceptive artifice. Accordingly where the similarity and resulting confusion are caused by any false statement or suggestion made by defendant in connection with his goods or business, a clear case for injunction is presented. No falsity will be permitted.[86a] Although plaintiff has no exclusive right in the goods themselves, such as a patent or a copyright, he may nevertheless enjoin defendant from representing either expressly or by deceptive artifice that his different article is the same as plaintiff's article.[87] Injunction lies to prevent a false and injurious use of words or names which are primarily publici juris, but which have acquired a secondary meaning. Frequent instances of this are found in respect to the use of generic and descriptive names,[88] geographic and place names,[89] names of springs,[89a] personal names,[90] names of patented articles,[91] of periodicals and books,[92] or of secret and proprietary preparations.[93] Artificial products, plainly described as such, may to that extent use the name of the genuine product.[94] The use of a trade-name upon the genuine goods in connection with which it was acquired is not unfair competition, because that is a truthful and necessary use.[95] But the use of the trade-name of goods of a particular grade as the name of goods of an inferior grade, although coming from the same source, will be enjoined.[96]

9. Damnum Absque Injuria. Where a subsequent trader has acted honestly,[97] and has sufficiently discharged the duty resting upon him to affirmatively distinguish his goods or business,[98] and has made no unnecessary or untruthful use of names or marks previously identified with a rival trader,[99] any loss or damage caused by the mere use of words or marks which are publici juris in their primary sense is damnum absque injuria for which no action lies.[1] Some cases, more especially the earlier ones, state the rule without all the qualifications here stated,[2] but in the light of the modern development of the doctrines of unfair competition, it is only such damage as cannot be avoided by reasonable limitations upon defendant's exercise of common rights that is deemed damnum absque injuria.

10. Relative Merits of Goods. It is immaterial, so far as plaintiff's right to relief is concerned, that defendant's goods are of equal or superior intrinsic merit. Defendant has no right to make use of plaintiff's good-will and reputation, or of plaintiff's advertising, to sell even a superior article. Such conduct injures plaintiff by depriving him of sales which he otherwise would have made.[3] But the injury to plaintiff and his need for relief is greater if defendant's goods are in fact inferior, for that hurts the reputation of the genuine goods for which the other goods are mistaken, in addition to depriving plaintiff of sales.[4] The rule here is the same as in the case of technical trade-marks.[5]

11. Illegality or Fraud a Bar to Relief. If a trade or calling, as carried on, is illegal, deceptive, or fraudulent, names, marks, or devices used therein will not be protected upon the ground of unfair competition, no matter how plain defendant's fraud may be, and although a proper case for relief is made out in all other respects.[6]

C. Particular Classes of Unfair Competition — 1. Descriptive and Generic Terms. Descriptive terms and generic names are publici juris and not capable of exclusive appropriation by any one, but may be used by all the world in an honestly descriptive and non-deceptive manner.[17] Any injury necessarily caused thereby to a prior trader who has previously used such terms or names is damnum absque injuria.[18] Nevertheless, even descriptive and generic names may not be used in such a manner as to pass off the goods or business of one man as and for that of another. Where such words or names, by long use, have become identified in the minds of the public with the goods or business of a particular trader, it is unfair competition for a subsequent trader to use them in connection with similar goods or business in such a manner as to deceive the public and pass off his goods or business for that of his rival.[19] Accordingly the right to use

Claims as to cures.— Statements made on the labels and wrappers of a preparation as to its medical value and the cures it has effected are so largely of matters of opinion rather than statements of fact that, although apparently extravagant, they will not justify a court of equity in refusing a preliminary injunction against an imitator, who is clearly infringing the proprietary rights of the maker. generic names and descriptive terms is regulated by the courts in accordance with certain general rules already stated.[20] Thus, such terms may not be used in such a manner as to cause unnecessary deception of the public and damage to the complainant.[21] It is unnecessary for the subsequent trader to use such terms in such a manner as to give his goods the same short-name, or trade-name, in the market as that of the prior trader's goods, for it is easy to use such terms in some other honestly descriptive way without injury to any right of either party. Accordingly such a use of descriptive terms is unfair and will be enjoined.[22] Use of descriptive terms in connection with other imitative features may be enjoined.[23] If descriptive terms are not deceptively used or imitated there is no cause of action.[24] In justifying and upholding the right of all persons to use descriptive or generic names, the courts invariably place the justification upon the ground that defendant is using such names truthfully.[25] Use of truthfully descriptive words or names may not be absolutely enjoined.[26] The true name and description of goods may be used.[27] But a false use of descriptive terms, if tending to produce confusion and deception, will be enjoined as unfair.[28] The generic name of an article may not be used as the name of a different competing article if it misleads the public as to the identity of the article purchased,[29] and this is true even apart from any imitation of labels, marks, or dress of goods.[30] Where descriptive terms or generic names have acquired a secondary meaning,[31] they may be used by subsequent traders only when accompanied by sufficiently definite explanatory statements as to unmistakably prevent deception,[32] and unless they are the generic name of the article itself, they may be used only descriptively to tell the truth about the goods, and not as the trade-name of such goods.[33] has become the "short name" by which the public generally call for a particular trader's goods, a rival trader engaging in the same line of business may not use such term in such a way that the "short name" of his goods will be the same as that of his rival's goods.[41] This rule is in complete harmony with all the general principles governing this subject.[42] Use of the market name of the goods is wholly unnecessary, and is inevitably deceptive. Defendant enjoys his full right, if permitted to use the name descriptively, to indicate the locality of origin of his goods. So used no affirmative precautions are necessary, and no deception possible. But use as the market name of the goods requires explanation, which can never completely and certainly protect both the public and plaintiff. An absurdity is involved in permitting one first unnecessarily to create deception, and then requiring him to counteract it.[43] Frequently, however, subsequent users have been merely enjoined from using the name unless accompanied by a statement sufficient to clearly distinguish their goods from the prior user.[44] Decisions

The name "Bethesda," applied to a mineral spring and the waters thereof, is a proper trade-mark and capable of protection against one who owns another spring within twelve hundred feet of that of plaintiff, although the water has the same constituents and properties, the name "Bethesda" not being a geographical designation of any district within or near which either of said springs is located. "Carlsbad Salts."— Where the city of Carlsbad, Bohemia, sole owner of the mineral springs there, for fifty years has sold the salts therefrom as "Carlsbad Salts," etc., other parties will be restrained from using these words for similar artificial production, even with the word "Artificial" prefixed. Carlsbad v. Thackeray, 57 Fed. 18. Compare Carlsbad v. Schultz, 78 Fed. 469. In Carlsbad v. Kutnow, 68 Fed. 794, the use of the word "Carlsbad" was restrained at the suit of plaintiff, the German city, which had for years evaporated the salts of Carlsbad Springs and sold them under the name of "Carlsbad Sprudel Salts." Defendant, a firm of New York druggists, put up similar salts and called them "Improved Effervescent Carlsbad Powder." Although the genuine Carlsbad salts are not effervescent, and the word "Improved" was relied upon as implying that the salts were different from those sold under the name of "Carlsbad" alone, defendants were enjoined from using the word "Carlsbad" in any form. This decision was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. Carlsbad v. Kutnow, 71 Fed. 167, 18 C. C. A. 24.

"Artificial Hunyadi."— The owner of a trade-mark or trade-name in the words "Hunyadi Janos," for a natural bitter water, is not entitled, in the absence of fraud or unfair competition, to enjoin a manufacturer of an artificial bitter water from advertising and labeling the product, "Artificial Hun-

"Apollinaris Water."— Plaintiffs having the exclusive right of selling "Apollinaris Water" in Great Britain, defendants made and sold an artificial mineral water under the name and description of "London Apollinaris Water, possessing all the properties of the natural water." An injunction was granted to restrain defendants' use of the words "London Apollinaris Water," or any other name of which the word "Apollinaris" so forms a part as to be calculated to mislead the public into purchasing the artificial for the real water of that name. The manifest tendency of the decisions at the present time is to greatly extend the limitations upon the right to use one's own name in business. The difficulties raised in some of the earlier cases have been brushed aside, and it is believed that some of such decisions could not now be supported upon the same facts.

Fraud must be shown. Where a person is selling an article in his own name, fraud must be shown to constitute a case for restraining him from so doing, on the ground that the name is one on which another has long been selling a similar article. Absolute injunction.— In Kaufman v. Kaufman, 123 N. Y. Suppl. 699, it was said that if one "cannot use his own name without inevitably representing his goods as those of another, then he cannot use his own name at all," but the injunction granted did not go to that extent. The injunction merely enjoined defendant from using the name "Kaufman" in connection with certain figures, previously used by plaintiff, and "unless in connection with it he uses his first name on a line with it and in letters of equal size." In Cash v. Cash, 84 L. T. Rep. N. S. 349, defendant was enjoined from selling frillings under the name of "Cash" upon the ground that it was impossible for him to do so without his frillings becoming known as "Cash's Frillings," a name previously identified with plaintiff's goods. This decision was, however, reversed on appeal in 86 L. T. Rep. N. S. 211, 18 T. L. R. 299, 50 Wkly. Rep. 289, which reversal is cited with approval in International Silver Co. v. Rogers, 71 N. J. Eq. 560, 63 Atl. 977, 981. This last decision was itself reversed in 72 N. J. Eq. 933, 67 Atl. 105, 129 Am. St. Rep. 722, but without disturbing this principle.

Judicial review of leading cases.—"Complainant's final contention is that the term 'Rogers goods' has acquired a secondary meaning; that it means complainant's goods. Conceding, for the sake of the argument, that it has that meaning, complainant's case fails, for there is no proof that defendant calls his goods 'Rogers goods.' What he does announce is that his ware is made by W. H. Rogers, of Plainfield, N. J. In every authoritative case upon the subject this distinction is vital. Thus, in Montgomery v. Thompson, [1891] A. C. 217, 55 J. P. 756, 60 L. J. Ch. 757, 64 L. T. Rep. N. S. 748, the defendant was enjoined from calling his ale 'Stone Ale,' but it was conceded that he might state that it was made at the town of Stone. In Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, 65 L. J. Q. B. 381, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 289, 44 Wkly. Rep. 638, while the defendant was prohibited from calling his belting 'Camel Hair Belting,' that phrase having, at least as against defendant, come to mean in the trade the plaintiff's belting, and nothing else, it was conceded that any manufacturer might inform the public that his belting was made of camel's hair, if such were the fact. In the still later case of Cellular Clothing Co. v. Maxton, [1899] A. C. 326, 68 L. J. P. C. 72, 80 L. T. Rep. N. S. 809, in which Reddaway v. Banham is explained, one of the lords says that he thought that it should be made impossible for any one to obtain the exclusive right to the use of a word or term which is in ordinary use in our language, and which is descriptive only (and proper names are always put in the same category), and goes on to say that were it not for Reddaway v. Banham he should have said that this should be made altogether impossible. The American cases are to the same effect. In Baker v. Sanders, 80 Fed. 889, 26 C. C. A. 220, already cited, while W. H. Baker was prohibited from calling his manufacture 'Baker's Chocolate,' he was allowed to say that his preparation was made by W. H. Baker. In Duryea v. National Starch Mfg. Co., 79 Fed. 651, 25 C. C. A. 139, the court refused, on the application of a plaintiff, who called his starch 'Duryea's Starch,' to enjoin the use by defendant of the words 'Laundry Starch, prepared by Duryea & Co.' Indeed I have not found any decision in which the right of a person to announce to the public that he was the maker of the goods was denied on the ground that his proper name had theretofore acquired a secondary meaning as applied to goods of that kind, and that therefore he could not use it in connection with his manufacture, except the decision of Kekewich, J., in Cash v. Cash, 84 L. T. Rep. N. S. 349. There it was held that inasmuch as the plaintiffs had established a reputation for making Cash's frillings, and inasmuch as the defendant, Joseph Cash, had also commenced to make and sell frillings, and there was a likelihood that the public might in time come to denominate his (Joseph's) frillings as 'Cash's Frillings,' to the injury of plaintiffs, Joseph Cash should be enjoined from selling any frillings at all. This rather astonishing decision, which, so far as my examination has gone, stands alone, was corrected by the appellate court and the decree made to conform to the established rule. Cash v. Cash, 86 L. T. Rep. N. S. 211, 18 T. L. R. 299, 50 Wkly. Rep. 289. Under these and other decisions that might be cited, it is plain that defendant could not be enjoined from stating that the goods were made by him merely because 'Rogers goods' had come to mean goods made exclusively by complainants." International Silver Co. v. Rogers, 71 N. J. Eq. 560, 571, 63 Atl. 977 [reversed in 72 N. J. Eq. 933, 67 Atl. 105, 129 Am. St. Rep. 722, but the principles

Leading case explained.— In Burgess v. Burgess, 3 De G. M. & G. 896, 904, 17 Jur. 292, 22 L. J. Ch. 675, 52 Eng. Ch. 696, 43 Eng. Reprint 351, Turner, L. J., said: "No man can have any right to represent his goods as the goods of another person, but in applications of this kind it must be made out that the Defendant is selling his own goods as the goods of another. Where a person is selling goods under a particular name, and another person, not having that name, is using it, it may be presumed that he so uses it to represent the goods sold by himself as the goods of the person whose name he uses; but where the Defendant sells goods under his own name, and it happens that the Plaintiff has the same name, it does not follow that the Defendant is selling his goods as the goods of the Plaintiff. It is a question of evidence in each case whether there is false representation or not." He thought that under the evidence there was then no such representation. The report shows that plaintiff was making "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies" under the firm name of John Burgess & Son, while defendant was making a similar essence under the name of W. J. Burgess. Of this judgment, James, L. J., in the subsequent case of Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co., 14 Ch. D. 748–753, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 851, 28 Wkly. Rep. 966, said: "That I take to be an accurate statement of the law, and to have been adopted by the House of Lords in Wotherspoon v. Currie." merely to afford an excuse for using his name in the corporate or firm title and thus to promote unfair competition with another of the same name, such corporate or firm-name will be enjoined.[77] A corporate name made up from the family name of the organizers of the corporation may be enjoined if it results in passing off the corporation's goods or business as those of a prior trader already known by that name, especially where it appears that such corporate name was adopted with that intention.[78] The use of personal names as part of a corporate name has been often enjoined upon the ground that, as corporate names are self-chosen, there was no necessity for selecting a confusing or deceptive name, and a distinction has been drawn between such cases and the case of an individual trading in his own name, which he must necessarily use.[79] But this doctrine has been latterly exploded, and it is now recognized that a person has an equal right to use his own name in connection with either an incorporated business or in an unincorporated business. The use is as reasonable and necessary in one case as in the other.[80] Names which are idem sonans fall within the rules applicable to Question one of evidence.—"It was argued on behalf of complainant, that while a man might use his own name in any business, if he used it fairly, he could not give it to a corporation, if it was also the name of a rival trader, and had acquired a peculiar significance in connection with that trader's business. No such rule is fairly deducible from the cases. The question being whether there was a false representation, it might, in many cases, be easier to infer such representation — as a matter of evidence — as a fact, where a corporation had, without propriety, assumed the name of a rival, than it would be to infer it where an individual of the same name came into competition with him; because, as has often been said, the whole vocabulary of names is open to those who organize a new company, while the individual is not responsible for his name, and ought, ordinarily, in common honesty, to use it and do business under it. Still the matter would be one of evidence, and not of law. This distinction is illustrated by the two cases of the International Silver Co. v. Simeon L. & George H. Rogers Co., 110 Fed. 955, and Baker v. Baker, 115 Fed. 297, 53 C. C. A. 157." International Silver Co. v. Wm. H. Rogers Corp., 66 N. J. Eq. 119, 57 Atl. 1037, 1040.

The case in hand falls directly within the doctrine of the cases cited. There is nothing, however, new in this doctrine. to do business within the state.[94] A foreign corporation cannot restrain a domestic corporation from using a corporate name similar to its own, unless that name has become a trade-mark or a trade-name.[95] This is particularly true where the domestic corporation was first formed.[96] A corporation may be enjoined from using the name of an unincorporated society or association.[97] Corporate names made up solely of generic and descriptive terms cannot be exclusively appropriated.[98] Corporation statutes usually prohibit the assumption of a name likely to be confused with the name of an existing corporation.[99]

Principle discussed.— "The complainant is in the attitude of a foreign corporation coming into this state, and seeking to contest the right to the use of a corporate name which this state, in furtherance of its own public policy and in the exercise of its own sovereignty, has seen fit to bestow upon one of its own corporations. For such a purpose a foreign corporation, ordinarily, at least, can have no standing in our courts. Such corporations do not come into this state as a matter of legal right, but only by comity, and they can not be permitted to come for the purpose of asserting rights in contravention of our laws or public policy. It is competent for this state, whenever it sees fit to do so, to debar any or all foreign corporations from doing business here; and whatever it may do by way of chartering corporations of its own can not be called in question by corporations which are here only by a species of legal sufferance. We would not be understood, however, as holding that cases may not arise where the name of a foreign corporation has so far become its trade-mark or trade-name as to entitle it to protection in our courts against infringement caused by the chartering of a domestic corporation by the same name. We only wish to hold that the present case is not of that character." Hazelton Boiler Co. v. Hazelton Tripod Boiler Co., 140 Ill. 494, 30 N. E. 339, 343.

Ground for relief.— Plaintiff in cases relating to trade-names has not any property in the particular title, but he has a right to prevent others from personating his business by using such a description as would lead cusestablished hotel or boarding-house,[2] theater or opera house,[3] a school,[4] a bank,[5] a lodge,[6] religious organizations,[7] and a library.[8] An exclusive right may be acquired in the name in which a business is conducted which will be protected by injunction against infringement.[9] But this is of course subject to the ordinary tomers to suppose they were trading with plaintiff. Lee v. Haley, L. R. 5 Ch. 155, 39 L. J. Ch. 284, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 251, 18 Wkly. Rep. 242; Boulnois v. Peake, 13 Ch. D. 513 note. The trade-name of an established enterprise is regarded as of importance, and the right to its exclusive use generally recognized. It is not in the nature of a trade-mark, and of necessity is closely connected with the good-will. It is the designation by which the company is known and addressed by its patrons. Millspaugh Laundry v. Sioux City First Nat. Bank, 120 Iowa 1, 94 N. W. 262, 263.

The doctrine de minimis non curat lex does not apply in cases of infringements on trade-names. Shoemaker v. Ulmer, 15 Pa. Dist. 159.

Use of a confusing name in the telephone directory so as to divert business is unfair competition, and may be enjoined. Scanlan v. Williams, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 114 S. W. 862.

That defendant's hotel is larger and more expensive, and caters more to transient trade, while that of plaintiffs, although taking transients, is more of a family hotel, is no defense. Martell v. St. Francis Hotel Co., 51 Wash. 375, 98 Pac. 1116.

Combination of "Inn" with place name.— A hotel proprietor may acquire a right to the exclusive use of the name of a place in conjunction with the word "Inn" for the name of his hotel. Busch v. Gross, 71 N. J. Eq. 508, 64 Atl. 754.

The name of a hotel is not necessarily connected with the particular premises where it is first established and conducted, but the owner may remove his hotel business and apply the old name to the new buildings in the same locality, even as against subsequent tenants of the original premises. Woodward v. Lazar, 21 Cal. 448, 82 Am. Dec. 751 [distinguished in Armstrong v. Kleinhaus, 82 Ky. 303, 56 Am. Rep. 894]; Busch v. Gross, 71 N. J. Eq. 508, 64 Atl. 754, "Metuchen Inn." In Hudson v. Osborne, 39 L. J. Ch. 79, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 386, defendant, proprietor of the "Osborne House" in Ludgate Hill, London, became insolvent and his business was sold to plaintiff. Defendant subsequently opened a new place but a few doors distant from his former one, calling it "Osborne House." An injunction was granted.

Generally as to local names see infra, VII, A, 4.

Right of lessee.—"Defendant leased the hotel for one year furnished and ready for occupancy. Her lease described the property as 'The Hotel Dominion.' If during the year of her tenancy the reputation of the hotel was improved by reason of her labors, that fact cannot properly be held to entitle her to the use of the name for an opposition hotel at the end of her term. Had the name been one of her own adoption, as in Wilcoxen v. McCray, 38 N. J. Eq. 466, and not one which she only became entitled to use because she was a tenant of the property of complainant, an altogether different condition might exist." O'Grady v. McDonald, 72 N. J. rules as to what may be exclusively appropriated for trade purposes.[10] A geographical name,[11] or a name merely descriptive of the business carried on,[12] cannot be exclusively appropriated as against others who can and do use the name with equal truth. The right to a trade-name in which a business is conducted is usually of only local extent, and the name will be protected against use by others only in the locality where the business is conducted and the name is known.[13] The right is coextensive with, and limited to, plaintiff's market.[14] The use of the same

The principle of dedication by expiration of the patent seems to be an erroneous one. The name is dedicated, if at all, when it is first allowed to become the generic name of the article itself. The name is just as much generic and descriptive, and therefore publici juris, during the life of the patent as it is afterward. The only difference caused by the expiration of the patent is that it enables all the world to use the name truthfully if they so desire, whereas, during the life of the patent, the name may be used truthfully only by the proprietor of the patent or his licensees. Even expiration of the patent does not, or at least should not, dedicate the name in such a sense as to authorize an untruthful and misleading use of it in connnection with a different article. Canada.— Singer Mfg. Co. v. Charlebois, 16 Quebec Super. Ct. 167.

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trade-Marks and Trade-Names," § 15.

"In the leading case of Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co., 163 U. S. 169, 16 S. Ct. 1002, 41 L. ed. 118, it is said: 'The result, then, of the American, the English and the French doctrine universally upheld is this, that where, during the life of a monopoly created by a patent, a name, whether it be arbitrary or be that of the inventor, has become, by his consent, either express or tacit, the identifying and generic name of the thing patented, this name passes to the public with the cessation of the monopoly which the patent created.' That case is also authority for the further statement that one who avails himself of this public dedication may use the generic designation in all forms with the fullest liberty, by affixing such name to the machine or product and by referring to it in advertisements, subject, however, to the condition that the name must be so used as not to deprive others of their rights or to deceive the general principle that the generic name of an article cannot be exclusively appropriated as a trade-mark, because such name is essentially descriptive, and a person entitled to make and sell an article must necessarily be entitled to call it by the only name by which it is known. Otherwise, an expired patent might be indefinitely extended, for all practical purposes, under the doctrine of a trade-mark in the name, which, of course, cannot be permitted. But the name of the article upon which the patent has expired may be used as the name of that article only because it is truthfully descriptive of that article. It is generic, and publici juris, only as applied to that particular article. It is not dedicated in gross. It is not truthfully descriptive of any other or different article than that upon which the patent has expired. Accordingly where the name of a patented article has acquired a secondary meaning, and come to indicate in the minds of the public an article of a particular type coming from a particular source, even expiration of the patent will not authorize another person to use and apply the name to a different article of the same class sold in competition with the rival goods of that name. Such use of the name is a false use which will be enjoined.[29] Even when the name is truthfully used as the name of an article of the kind formerly protected by the patent, the subsequent user must accompany his use of the name with an adequate explanatory statement affirmatively distinguishing his product from that of the the public and that the name must be accompanied with such indications as will show by whom it is made so that the public may be informed of that fact." Jaffe v. Evans, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 186, 189, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 257.

Applications of doctrine.— In Singer Mfg. Co. v. Hipple, 109 Fed. 152, 153, it was directly held that the original users of the word "Singer" as applied to sewing machines were not precluded by the expiration of their patent from enjoining its use upon machines which were not of the kind with which the name had become associated by the public. The court held that the only purpose and effect of such use was to mislead and deceive the public. Defendant relied upon Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co., 163 U. S. 169, 16 S. Ct. 1002, 41 L. ed. 118, but the court said that case sanctioned no such use, but in fact was an authority against it. The court further said: "In short, the principle of that decision is, not that the first user of a mark indicative of origin forfeits his exclusive right thereto for that purpose by allowing it to be applied for the additional purpose of designing the thing itself, but that his monopoly of it for the one purpose cannot be so enforced as to nullify the general right to apply it for the other. If, therefore, the defendant's article were in fact a 'Singer' machine, she would be at liberty to so designate it, provided she also clearly and unmistakably specified that it was not the product of the Singer Company; but the evidence, as I view it, is against her upon the main point, and therefore her manner of marking need not be considered. The machine which she puts upon the market is not a 'Singer.' That word is not, as a name for it, either necessary or appropriate. Nor can I accede to the contention that her machine is a developed or improved 'Singer'; for the proof is that it is of a distinct type which is and long has been known as the 'Domestic.' Consequently the defendant's employment of the word 'Singer' can have but one result, and that is, not to correctly identify the thing itself, but to mislead the public as to its source of origin; and, this being so, the decision in Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co. does not support, but subverts, her present position." In Jaffe v. Evans, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 186, 189, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 257, the court said: "In the present case, if the word 'Lanoline' or 'Lanolin' is generic or descriptive of the article, which we think upon the evidence adduced it is, it follows that the defendant may use the word provided its preparation is substantially the same product as plaintiffs' and the word is accompanied with indicia which show clearly that the defendant is the manufacturer. This necessarily includes the other proposition that the defendant has no right to manufacture something entirely different and call it 'Lanolin,' nor would it have the right to use that name in advertisements or labels in such a way as to deceive the public into thinking its product was the one manufactured by the plaintiffs." In Janney v. Pan-Coast Ventilator, etc., Co., 128 Fed. 121, the goods manufactured under plaintiff's unexpired patent had become known as "Pan-coast Ventilators." Defendant had previously been enjoined from infringing this patent, and thereupon substituted a different kind of ventilator, which he called by the same name. This was enjoined as unfair competition.

original trader,[30] and he must not commit any affirmative act or use any artifice or device tending to increase the deception and confusion necessarily caused by the use of the ambiguous name.[31] Although the name of the patented article may be used, an injunction will be granted against a misleading manner of using it.[32] The right to use the name depends upon a showing that the name is understood by the public to denote a patented or other article of a particular type, structure, or arrangement of parts.[33] After expiration of the patent the article may be exactly duplicated, even to the extent of using the original article as a mold or model.[34] But distinctive marks and labels long used on patented articles are not dedicated to the public by the expiration of the patent and the use of such marks and labels by another may be enjoined.[35] One who has an invalid or expired patent may still lawfully use its subject-matter, and like all other traders is entitled to protection against unfair competition.[36]

40. In Dicks v. Yates, 18 Ch. D. 76, 90, 50 L. J. Ch. N. S. 809, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 660, Lord Justice James, distinguishing unfair competition in books from infringement of copyright, said: "There is another mode which to my mind is wholly irrespective of any copyright legislation, and that is where a man sells a work under the name or title of another man or another man's work, that is not an invasion of copyright, it is Common Law fraud, and can be redressed by ordinary Common Law remedies, wholly irrespective of books are not covered by the copyright, and the mere use or imitation of the title of a book is not an infringement of the copyright upon such book.[41] Neither is the title of a book a valid technical trade-mark.[42] On the contrary, the title of a book is the generic name and description of that book, and therefore any one who is entitled to publish such book, either because the copyright thereon has expired, or because it has never been copyrighted, and who actually does publish such book, may call it by its proper name by which alone it is known.[43] But the mere fact that a book together with its name is in the public domain, by reason of expiration of copyright, or failure to secure copyright, does not authorize any person to use such name or title in connection with another and a different book in such a manner as to pass off the latter book as and for the former, or some other book known by that name. To do so constitutes unfair competition which will be enjoined.[44] These rules are but an application of the familiar principles of any of the conditions or restrictions imposed by the Copyright Acts. Supposing a man were to publish a book calling it 'Soyer's Cookery Book,' which it is not; or 'Colenso's Arithmetic,' which it is not; or . . . 'Hemy's Modern Tutor for the Pianoforte' [as in the case of Metzler v. Wood, before the Court of Appeal], which it is not, that is a Common Law fraud."

In Thomas v. Lennon, 14 Fed. 849, a performance of an oratorio advertised as "Gounod's Redemption" was enjoined, the score orchestration being different from the original and made by other persons from a piano score which had become public property, and which fact was also advertised. Injunction was mainly on the ground that it tended to deceive the public and infringed plaintiff's common-law rights.

The patent cases support this principle. See supra, V, C, 8.

"Chatter-box" cases.— In Estes v. Williams, 21 Fed. 189, 190, the complainant's book was entitled "Chatter-box." It was published without being copyrighted, and therefore became publici juris to the same extent that every book does upon the expiration of its copyright. Defendant published a book of different literary contents, and entitled it "Chatter-box." His use of that name was enjoined upon the ground of unfair competition. The point here under consideration was thus disposed of by Judge Wheeler: "Johnston had the exclusive right to put his own work, as his own, upon the markets of the world. No one else had the right to represent that other work was his. Not the right to prevent the copying of his, and putting the work upon the markets, but the right to be free from untrue representations that this other work was his when put upon the markets. This gives him nothing but the fair enjoyment of the just reputation of his own work, which fully belongs to him. It deprives others of nothing that belongs to them." This decision was followed in the later "Chatterbox" cases. "Webster's Dictionary" cases.— In Ogilvie v. G. & C. Merriam Co., 149 Fed. 858 [modified in 159 Fed. 638, 88 C. C. A. 596, 16 L. R. A. N. S. 549], it was held that the expiration of copyright upon an early edition of Webster's dictionary authorized any one to entitle a new edition thereof "Webster's Dictionary," notwithstanding the fact that such name had acquired a secondary meaning, and unfair competition, which have already been stated.[45] An imitation of a publication by which the public may be misled into supposing that it is the literary composition which they had in mind to purchase is an act of deception which injures the publisher and entitles him to relief.[46] Genuine copies of a book, although independently bound, may be sold under the name and title of the book and its author.[47] But repaired or second-hand books must not be sold as and for new books of the complete production of the original publisher, and, if necessary, an affirmative statement sufficient to prevent deception may be required.[48] It is unfair competition to pass off an early edition of a work, upon which the copyright has expired, or a new and independent revision thereof, as and for subsequent editions published by the original publishers, or their successors which are already known in the market.[49] Where the title of a book has acquired a secondary meaning, so as to denote a particular production coming from a particular source, any one who avails himself of the expiration of copyright in order to reproduce such book must accompany his use of the name with sufficient affirmative precautions to prevent deception and confusion.[50] And he must refrain from the use of any affirmatively deceptive artifice or device in or upon the book or in advertisements.[51] Generic and descriptive words cannot be exclusively appropriated as the title of a publication.[52] But even generic or descriptive words used as a title will be come to indicate a later copyrighted edition published by the successors of the original publishers of Webster's dictionary. This decision seems inconsistent with established principles, because the name was not truthfully used upon a copy of the expired book. It was unnecessarily used as the title or short name of a new and different book, which could easily have been given a distinctive name, thus avoiding all confusion and deception. Of course, any one would have the right to use the words "Webster's Dictionary," descriptively to indicate the relation of his new book to the old book of that name. See supra, V, B, 3. The earlier Webster dictionary cases all merely held that such name may be used as the title of an exact photographic reprint of the expired book. Merriam v. Texas Siftings Pub. Co., 49 Fed. 944; Merriam v. Famous Shoe, etc., Co., 47 Fed. 411; Merriam v. Holloway Pub. Co., 43 Fed. 450. These decisions were correct, because such use of the title was a truthfully descriptive use of the generic name of the book published, which may always be used if accompanied with a sufficient distinguishing statement to prevent deception. 54. Ascription of authorship.—It is settled law that where one has a right to publish literary matter, he may truthfully use the name of the author in connection with that matter. But that an action will lie for falsely representing one to be the author of that of which he is not the author, and hence if the matter is edited, added to, or changed, the facts must be plainly stated so as to avoid any misrepresentation. This was approved in Donaldson v. Wright, 7 App. Cas. (D. C.) 45. See also Martin v. Wright, 6 Sim. 297, 9 Eng. Ch. 297, 58 Eng. Reprint 605.

"Mark Twain" agreed with a publisher to allow him to publish one of his essays in a book of selections, and sent him a number from which to select, which had been published but not copyrighted. and for the previously known goods.[62] Where plaintiff himself does not know the formula of the original article whose name he has applied to an imitation of it, he is not entitled to restrain others from using the name on their imitations.[63] Of course, if the name has not acquired a secondary meaning as indicating a particular production of such article the name may be used by any one without more, for in such case it is not deceptive.[64]

11. Dramatic Productions. The name or title of a play or other dramatic production, although not a trade-mark, will be protected against unauthorized use or imitation in connection with a different production.[65] If such name is non-descriptive and arbitrary, an exclusive right may be acquired therein as a trade-name.[66] Two plays, each founded on the same novel, may each use the name of such novel, but the second user of the name must distinguish his play from the prior play.[67] The name under which dramatic performers give their performance will be protected against use or imitation by others giving similar performances,[68] provided of course the nature of the performance is unobjectionable and fit to be protected.[69]

12. Dress of Goods. Irrespective of any question of technical trade-mark, or the existence of any exclusive proprietary interest in the labels, marks, form of packages, and general dress or make-up of the goods, as they go into the market, a rival trader has no right to use or imitate such labels, marks, form of package, or dress of goods, so as to deceive purchasers and pass off his goods as those of his rival. To do so constitutes unfair competition against which an injunction will be granted.[70] This class of cases is in fact one of the commonest forms of

by reason of the appearance of such package or label.[71] Where plaintiff's use of the particular dress of goods has not been exclusive so that it has come to indicate his goods as distinguished from all others, he is not entitled to an injunction.[72] Substantially the dress of goods must have acquired a secondary meaning and come to indicate plaintiff's goods.[73] Use of the common, usual, or necessary method of putting up or marking the particular class of goods involved does not alone constitute unfair competition.[74] Use of features common to the trade or required by the nature of the article cannot be enjoined as unfair.[75] Mere use of the same color, apart from any other imitative feature, will not be enjoined.[76] But color is one of the most marked indicia of a package, label, or dress of an article, and is an important element in determining whether the combination of features making up the dress of the goods is a fraudulent and deceptive one.[77]

Similarly, the form of an article or package, like the color and other indicia, is to some extent arbitrary, because the vendor might have adopted almost any form for the packing of his goods, and having adopted and adhered to one particular form until it has become well-known to the public, he will be protected in it as far as the court can go without creating unlawful monopolies or appropriating public property to private use without legal grant. Such form cannot be used by another for the purpose of carrying on unfair competition.[78] But mere form of package standing alone could hardly ever constitute unfair competition.[79]

Minor differences are immaterial, if the whole is deceptively similar.[83] The general effect upon the eye is often given controlling effect.[84] The packages and labels must be considered as a whole.[85] The tout ensemble must not be copied.[86] New and distinctive features must not be copied or imitated.[87] Resemblance between the respective articles must be made to appear.[88] A comparison of the labels and goods themselves is generally the best evidence of fraudulent imitation.[89] Actual or probable deception must be shown.[90] Mere possibility of mistake is not sufficient to support an injunction.[91] Beyond the statement that it must clearly appear that defendant's goods are so gotten up as to be calculated to deceive,[92] no general rule can be laid down, and each case of this class must be determined by its own circumstances, and as a question of fact.[93] Refilling bottles or packages bearing another's marks, labels, or names is of course unfair competition.[94]

Illustrations.— In Humphreys' Specific Homeopathic Medicine Co. v. Wenz, 14 Fed. 250, plaintiff had for a long period manufactured and sold a series of homeopathic specific medicines, labeled with a series of numbers running from "1" to "35," each number being applied to a medicine for a particular disease or class of diseases. It appeared that the remedies were frequently purchased by the public by the numbers alone. It was held that plaintiff could be protected in the use of the serial numbers as applied to "Homeopathic Specifics," and a preliminary injunction was granted. In Kinney v. Allen, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,826, 1 Hughes 106, plaintiff, a manufacturer of cigarettes, placed upon boxes, etc., containing them, the symbol "½," printed in large red characters. Defendant sold other cigarettes witb a similarly printed "½" as a trade-mark. A limited injunction was granted to restrain defendant from using the symbol in that form, but not the symbol itself, on the ground that the symbol was not absolutely arbitrary, it being originally used to indicate that cigarettes stamped with it were composed of two kinds of tobacco in equal proportions. See also to same effect as to the same mark Kinney v. Basch, 16 Am. L. Reg. N. S. (N. Y.) 596. Numbers used by manufacturers of ribbon to designate the width of the ribbon were the common property of the trade and not the subject of a trade-mark, but a series of arbitrary numbers used to indicate the precise color or shade of the ribbons was a proper subject of protection against unlawful competition. Corbett Bros. Co. v. Reinhardt-Meding Co., 77 N. J. Eq. 7, 76 Atl. 243. Series of numbers used by a manufacturer of labels in its catalogues and in connection with its corporate name on the boxes containing its labels, not primarily to indicate origin, but to designate the color, shape, and size of the label, each kind being given a different number, do not in themselves constitute good trade-marks, and such manufacturer is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the use of the same numbers in the same way and for a similar purpose by another in connection with its own name, either on the ground of infringement of trade-mark or of unfair competition, there being no attempt to deceive in dress or style of package, and the labels themselves being such as it is open to any one to make. Duplication of gramophone records.— In Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Armstrong, 132 Fed. 711, it was contended that defendant had no right to take plaintiff's disks which it produced as records of a piece of music specially executed, and reproduce from them duplicates thereof. Judge Lacombe pronounced the question novel and interesting, but refrained from deciding it, basing the injunction which he granted upon the ground of unfair competition by dress of goods, plaintiff's labels and marks having been imitated. In the subsequent case of Fonotipa v. Bradley, 171 Fed. 951, Judge Chatfield held that aside from any question of infringement of trade-mark or imitation of label or deception where goods are cast into a distinctive form, unnecessary and deceptive imitation of the size, shape, and structure of the article itself will be enjoined as unfair competition.[97] The subsequent trader may be required to clearly distinguish his goods so that they will not be mistaken for the goods of the prior trader.[98] After expiration of a patent, all persons may make the article in the precise form in which it was made while protected by the patent,[99] especially where the subsequent maker adds distinguishing features to his goods and there are no indicia of an intent to deceive purchasers.[1] Functional features may be used and copied in the absence of any other features calculated to deceive.[2] The copying or imitation of non-functional features may be evidence of fraudulent intent constituting unfair competition.[3] Copying or imitation of the distinctive marks, ornamentation, lettering, etc., making up the dress of goods of another is unfair competition, although the article itself may be copied.[4] Making and selling repair parts for use in another's device is not unfair competition, provided they are of the public, plaintiff was entitled to an injunction enjoining such duplication of its records placing his decision upon the ground that plaintiff's property had been wrongfully appropriated. It is doubtful if this decision can be supported upon the ground upon which it was rested, because there was at that time no copyright in such records, and such records did not themselves infringe any copyright in the music reproduced. The use of the complainant's circulars by a competitor will be enjoined. Noel v. Ellis, 89 Fed. 978.

Notwithstanding the copying in some respects of plaintiff's wrapper, he was held not entitled to an injunction where defendant's bill-heads, stationery, etc., may be enjoined.[8] Circulars falsely claiming ownership of particular trade-marks and threatening dealers with suits for infringement may be enjoined,[9] but this hardly seems to constitute unfair competition in any technical sense. It is more nearly akin to slander or libel of property, and upon the authority of the patent cases, injunction will not lie in the absence of both falsity and malice, and in advance of an actual decision upon the question of infringement.[10]

16. "Successor," "Original," "Only Genuine," "Sole Proprietor," Etc. A false representation, actual or implied, that defendant is the successor to the good-will and business of an established concern constitutes unfair competition, and is ground for injunction at the suit of the original owner or lawful successor of such business.[11] A periodical or magazine may not be represented as a continuation

Circulars not sent to customers.— That defendant issued a circular advertising an article of its manufacture to some extent similar to one issued by complainant, and inclosed in the cartons containing its goods, does not constitute unfair competition, where defendant's circulars are not so inclosed, and are sent only to jobbers, and do not come into the hands of retail purchasers. of a previous existing magazine or periodical.[12] One who has sold his business and its good-will may not thereafter hold himself out as continuing the business which he has sold.[13] One who has gone out of business, the business being discontinued, cannot enjoin any one from representing himself as his successor, since he cannot be injured thereby.[14] One may truthfully represent himself as the successor to a certain business.[15] One may truthfully represent himself as being late or formerly of or with a named concern, provided there is no artifice or device connected with the announcement so as to cause deception.[16] Announcements of this character must be wholly free from any artifice or device, such as the use of different sizes of type, arrangement and display of names, etc., calculated to deceive the public and pass off the new goods or business as those of the original trader. One may tell the truth, but must tell it in a wholly truthful way.[17] The subsequent trader's use of the word "genuine," and a fortiori the words "the genuine," in connection with the trade-name of the goods, tends strongly to show unfair competition and infringement.[18] False representations that one's goods or business are the original or only goods of a particular brand is unfair competition and will be enjoined.[19] So no one will be permitted to advertise that his goods

devices, etc., used in trade otherwise than as technical trade-marks will be protected against deceptive imitation.[29] Selling or representing second-hand repaired or rebuilt goods as genuine, new goods is unfair competition.[30] Union labels, although not technical trade-marks, have been protected in equity against improper use substantially upon the ground of unfair competition.[31] Other cases are stated below.[32]

VI. STATUTORY REGULATION, REGISTRATION, AND OFFENSES.

A. State Statutes — 1. In General. Statutes regulating trade-marks, names, and labels, and providing civil, criminal, or penal remedies for violation thereof, exist in many of the states.[33] Union labels are protected by statute in who published and copyrighted the same, as to render it unfair competition in trade for the latter to afterward publish other pictures depicting different scenes merely because they contain characters in imitation of those in the earlier ones. Outcalt v. New York Herald, 146 Fed. 205.

32. False claim of "prize medal."— One to whom a prize medal has been awarded at an exposition is not entitled to an injunction to restrain one who had not obtained such a medal from falsely asserting that he had. This was placed upon the ground that the court will not grant an injunction to restrain false representations when such falsehood is not an infringement of any right vested in plaintiff. various states, either eo nomine, or by trade-mark acts broad enough to include such labels.[34] Where the right to relief depends upon a statute, the case must be brought within the terms of the statute.[35] Usually some form of registration is provided as a part of the scheme for regulation and protection either of trade-marks generally, or of some class of trade-marks, names, or labels.[36] But under other statutes no registration anywhere is required,[37] or at least not as a condition precedent to relief against infringement of a common-law trade-mark.[38] Statutory provision for the registration of trade-marks as a general rule apply only to words, marks, or symbols which have already become trade-marks by adoption and user. The purpose of registry is merely to facilitate the remedy. Registration in such cases confers no new rights.[39] Some statutes provide for the registration and protection of labels or marks which are not technical trade-marks, as for example union labels. In such cases a new right is created.[40] Rights under state registration are not infringed by acts wholly done without the state.[41]

power to enact statutes regulating trade-marks and labels, although particular statutes have been sometimes held unconstitutional for various reasons.[42] Such statutes are a constitutional exercise of the police power of the state, as tending to prevent fraud,[43] although of course particular provisions may exceed the police power as having no real relation to the mischief to be prevented.[44] State statutes prohibiting the unauthorized use of bottles or other receptacles bearing registered names or marks are constitutional and within the police power of the state.[45] Statutes making it a misdemeanor to sell or offer for sale goods as the goods of another unless contained in the original package or under the original marks affixed by the owner are constitutional and do not deprive any one of his property without due process of law.[46] The purpose of this class of statutes is to protect the public against fraud and deception, as well as the proprietor of the goods.[47] Penal statutes passed under the police power for the protection of trade-marks will be strictly construed.[48]

goods sold are not the goods indicated by the trade-mark thereon, or that the label is counterfeit, is essential to a conviction.[50] A fraudulent intent is necessary to constitute the offense and to support the recovery of a penalty.[51] The intentional sale of counterfeit labels, knowing them to be such, is sufficient to show a fraudulent intent.[52] A statute against counterfeiting labels is violated by using genuine labels in a fraudulent manner.[53] A use of a counterfeit label even on genuine goods violates the statute.[54] A statute prohibiting the sale of goods as being the goods of another's production or manufacture, unless contained in the original packages and under the marks and labels affixed by the manufacturer, is not violated by a mere representation that an article is made from certain goods manufactured by another.[55] An indictment will not lie unless the mark or label was validly registered in accordance with the statute, where the statute requires registration.[56]

To constitute the offense of using a counterfeit trade-mark the alleged trade-mark must be capable of appropriation as such and must be the exclusive property of the owner and not abandoned by him; the use must be with intent to defraud; and to establish this intent it must appear that the accused knew of the owner's rights. People v. Molins, 7 N. Y. Cr. 51. A label proved to have been in long and continuous use by manufacturers to indicate to the public the origin of their product is a trade-mark within the definition of N. Y. Pen. Counterfeiting label for agent of owner.— In a prosecution for counterfeiting a trade-mark it is no defense that the labels were procured by an agent of the owner for the purpose of procuring evidence that defendant was in the business of counterfeiting the label; it is enough that defendant printed the labels, not for the owner, but for one apparently designing to use them fraudulently. People v. Krivitsky, 168 N. Y. 182, 61 N. E. 175, 10 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 245 [affirming 60 N. Y. App. Div. 307, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 173, 15 N. Y. Cr. 441]. In the last case cited it was held no defense that the labels were printed from a plate furnished by an agent of the owner, there being no evidence that the agent had authority to have the labels printed, since without such authority one who printed them falsely made or counterfeited them.

Fraudulent use antedating statute.— In a suit to prevent defendant from fraudulently using a trade union's labels, it is no defense that he commenced using them before the statute authorizing an action to enjoin such use was passed. Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 266, 49 N. E. 308, 39 L. R. A. 508.

Under the Georgia statute of Dec. 20, 1898, under the first, third, and fourth sections, it is unlawful for any person to counterfeit or imitate another's trade-mark "with intent to deceive the public." This intent is necessary to constitute an offense under the sections named. The words quoted do not appear in the second section of the act, and accordingly the use of any counterfeit or imitation label, trade-mark, etc., is unlawful and an offense where the one using it knows that it is a counterfeit or imitation. and making unauthorized use or traffic therein a criminal offense.[57] Refilling of such bottles is also sometimes prohibited and made an offense.[58] Mere possession of registered bottles by certain classes of agents or dealers has been made prima facie evidence of unlawful use or traffic in violation of the statute.[59] So use has been made presumptive evidence of unlawful use.[60] Mere possession is not use. Use involves an act of some kind.[61]

B. Federal Statutes — 1. Constitutionality. The earlier acts of congress in regard to trade-marks have been declared unconstitutional because not based upon the commerce clause of the constitution, which is the only clause which seems broad enough to confer the power upon congress to legislate upon the subject of trade-marks,[62] unless it be the treaty-making power, which might support limited legislation confined to commerce with foreign nations and Indian tribes.[63] The power to legislate in favor of authors and inventors, under which the patent and copyright laws are enacted, does not include power to legislate upon the subject of trade-marks.[64] The act of March 3, 1881, was drawn under the commerce clause of the constitution and has been generally considered as constitutional,[65] although grave doubts have been expressed,[66] and the power of congress to legislate upon the subject of trade-marks, either under the commerce clause, or any other clause of the constitution has not yet been authoritatively determined by

66. In Illinois Watch-Case Co. v. Elgin Nat. Watch Co., 94 Fed. 667, 35 C. C. A. 237 [reversing 89 Fed. 487], it was held that the constitutionality of this act was so doubtful that the court would not exercise jurisdiction between citizens of the same state. Upon appeal, the supreme court refused to consider this question because not necessary to a de-

the supreme court, although it has been denied by a circuit court case.[67] Whatever power congress may have in respect to trade-marks, it is only such as is incidental to other subjects over which it has jurisdiction, because it is not anywhere expressly conferred.[68] The federal power does not extend to trade-marks used in commerce wholly within a single state.[69]

2. General Provisions. The act of congress of February 20, 1905, as amended, superseded all prior federal legislation upon this subject, and is the present law. In many respects the provisions of the act of 1881 were preserved and carried forward in this new act.[70] Upon compliance with the act, and subject to its conditions, the owner of a trade-mark used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several states,[71] or with Indian tribes, may register such trade-mark in the patent office.[72] Certificates of registration are issued which remain in force twenty years,[73] and may be renewed from time to time for additional like periods upon compliance with the statute.[74] Remedies at law and in equity are provided for infringement, and jurisdiction is conferred upon the proper federal courts for that purpose.[75] Injunctions granted in one district may be served and enforced anywhere throughout the United States, and the infringing labels, wrappers, packages, etc., may be destroyed.[76] The act is permissive only, and does not affect the rights of owners of unregistered common-law trade-marks.[77] It is expressly provided that all existing remedies at law or in equity shall remain unaffected.[78] No criminal remedy is provided.[79] Importation of articles bearing infringing trade-marks is prohibited and provision is made to exclude such goods from entry.[80]

3. What May Be Registered. To be entitled to registration, the mark or name must have been used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the states, or with Indian tribes,[81] and it must be a valid, existing, technical, common-law trade-mark,[82] except that any mark which was in actual and exclusive use as a

Marks serving useful purpose.— By the trade-mark act it is intended to limit the selection of marks for registration to mere arbitrary words or designs, the value of which will consist alone in their becoming fixed in the public mind through continued use on the goods of the owner, and not to permit marks to be registered which are such as will in themselves enhance the sale or value of the article to which they are applied. In re Central Consumers Co., 32 App. Cas. Construction of proviso.— The purpose of the proviso was to permit the registration of marks not amounting to technical trade-marks where they had been exclusively used as such for more than ten years, and in which the user had thereby acquired property rights, even though within the prohibited classes, unless contrary to public policy, as containing immoral or scandalous matter. Thaddeus Davids Co. v. Davids, 178 Fed. 801, 102 C. C. A. 249 [reversing 165 Fed. 792]. The proviso applies only to marks which are not technical trade-marks, and the registration of which are not prohibited elsewhere in the section. In re Cahn, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 173, holding that a mark simulating the arms or seal of a state is not entitled to registration. This proviso was not intended to provide for the registration of technical trade-marks, but permitted the registration of marks not in either of the classes prohibited by the section, if in actual and exclusive use for the required ten years. The burden of proof is on the applicant to show exclusive use by clear and convincing evidence. In re Hoff, 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 233. Pure whisky and blended whisky are in the same general class, so that the deceptive use of a mark upon a blended whisky, represented to be pure whisky, by one person is sufficient to prevent the truthful use of the same mark by another person in connection with pure whisky from being exclusive, and therefore entitled to registration under this clause of the statute. In re Wright, 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 510.

4. Proceedings For Registration. An application for the registration of a trade-mark must be made to the commissioner of patents.[97] A complete application comprises: (1) A petition requesting registration signed by the applicant;[98] (2) a statement specifying the name, domicile, location, and citizenship of the party applying, and, if the applicant be a corporation or association, the state or nation under the laws of which it is organized, the class of merchandise, according to the official classification, and the particular description of goods comprised in such class upon which the trade-mark has actually been used, a statement of the mode in which the same is applied or affixed to the goods, and the length of time during which the trade-mark has been used upon the goods specified; and a description of the trade-mark itself must be included, if desired by the applicant or required by the commissioner, provided such description is of such a character as to meet the approval of the commissioner;[99] (3) a declaration properly verified, containing a statement of the matters enumerated by the statute;[1] (4) a drawing of the trade-mark signed by the applicant, or his attorney, which must be a facsimile of the trade-mark as actually used upon the goods;[2] (5) five specimens, or facsimiles, when from the mode of applying or affixing the trade-mark to the goods specimens cannot be furnished, of the trade-mark as actually used upon the goods;[3] and (6) a fee of ten dollars.[4] The petition, the statement, and the declaration must be in the English language and written on one side of the paper only.[5] The statute expressly

A party may not segregate his trade-mark, and, by registering each of its features separately, thereby prevent the registration by another party of any particular part of the mark as actually used, notwithstanding that such registration and use by another party would cause no confusion to the trade and no prejudice to the first registrant. 99. Section 1; Patent Office Rule No. 22.

In the case of firm trade-marks a statement of the name and residence and place of business of the firm is sufficient, and it is not necessary that the name and residence of each individual partner be given. Smith v. Reynolds, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,098, 10 Blatchf. 100, 3 Off. Gaz. 214, decided under the act of 1870.

In specifying class, it is sufficient to specify paints generally without specifying any particular description of paints. Smith v. Reynolds, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,098, 10 Blatchf. 100, 3 Off. Gaz. 214, decided under the act of 1870. In an application to register a personal name under the ten-year clause, a statement of the class of merchandise as "athletic supplies" and the particular description of goods comprised in such class as "implements, apparatus, and goods used in athletic games and sports" is insufficient, and the application is properly refused, because it is impossible for the applicant to have actually used the name as a trade-mark for ten years prior to the passage of the act in connection with such newly invented games and sports as are being constantly invented. In re Spalding, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 314.

In an application for registration under the ten-year clause, it should clearly appear in the application that every condition precedent has been fully complied with. In re Spalding, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 314.

1. Section 2; Patent Office Rule No. 22.

2. Patent Office Rule No. 22.

The commissioner of patents has power to determine merely whether the trade-mark sought to be registered is subject to appropriation and has actually been used in interstate or foreign commerce. He cannot require the applicant to add to his drawing matter appearing in the specimens filed but not contained in the drawing. In re Standard Underground Cable Co., 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 320.

3. Patent Office Rule No. 22.

4. Section 1; Patent Office Rule No. 22.

5. Patent Office Rule No. 23.

requires compliance not only with its own requirements, but also with such regulations as may be prescribed by the commissioner of patents.[6] The application may be amended to correct informalities, or to avoid objections raised by the patent office, or for other reasons arising in the course of examination.[7] Applications for registration pending at the time of the passage of the act of 1905 may be amended so as to bring them, and the certificates thereunder, under the provisions of said act, and the prosecution of such applications may be proceeded with in accordance with such act.[8] If, on examination, it appears that the applicant is entitled to have his trade-mark registered, the mark must be published at least once in the official gazette of the patent office, and if no notice of opposition is filed within thirty days, the application will be allowed, and a certificate of registration will be issued.[9]

5. Interference, Opposition, and Cancellation. Whenever application is made for the registration of a trade-mark which is substantially identical with a trade-mark appropriated to goods of the same descriptive properties for which a certificate of registration has been previously issued to another, or for registration of which another had previously made application, or which so nearly resembles such trade-mark, or a known trade-mark owned and used by another, as, in the opinion of the commissioner, to be likely to be mistaken therefor by the public, an interference will be declared, for the purpose of determining priority of rights.[10]

6. Section 1.

A complete set of rules, with forms, has been promulgated by and may be obtained from the patent office. The rule of the patent office requiring the question of whether there is an interference in fact to be raised within a stated time before the examiner of interferences was within the authority of the commissioner of patents to promulgate and must be complied with. Somers v. Newman, 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 193.

7. Patent Office Rules Nos. 41–45.

8. Sections 14, 24; Giles Remedy Co. v. Giles, 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 375; In re Mark Cross Co., 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 101.

An application for registration which stood rejected by the commissioner on an appeal duly taken to him, such decision having been made more than two years before the act of 1905 went into effect, is not a "pending application" within the meaning of the statute. In re Mark Cross Co., 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 101.

9. Section 6; Patent Office Rule No. 40.

Affidavit in support of application.—Affidavits in support of an application for registration of the word "standard" as applied to phonographs, stating that the word does not indicate to affiants' minds, or to the minds of other persons in the phonograph trade, a phonograph of any particular type, quality, or character, are not convincing, if, indeed, relevant, as the affiants can only state what impression the word makes on their minds. In re National Phonograph Co., 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 142.

10. Section 7; Patent Office Rule No. 46; Johnson v. Whelan, 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 4; Case v. Murphy, 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 245; Somers v. Newman, 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 193 (holding that an interference must be raised within the time limited by the patent office rules); Rose Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Rosenbush, 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 465; Hanford v. Westcott, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,022, 16 Off. Gaz. 1181; Hoosier Drill Co. v. Ingels, 14 Off. Gaz. 785; Decision of Secretary of Interior, 13 Off. Gaz. 963.

Issues on interference.— The issue which the commissioner of patents is called upon to determine is not merely one of priority, as in a patent interference proceeding, but involves any question that might arise in an ex parte case. In re Herbst, 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 565; Schuster Co. v. Muller, 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 409, misrepresentation by one party. The only question involved is whether the right of registration will be accorded either or both of the parties. Whether either of the parties has been guilty of laches will not be considered. Phœnix Paint, etc., Co. v. Lewis, 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 285.

The title to a certificate of registration of a trade-mark, if claimed under some act or set of acts done or performed after its issue, cannot as a rule be determined in an interference proceeding. Such question is to be tried in a proceeding brought to compel the assignment of the issued certificate, or by some analogous proceeding. If a later applicant seeks to re-register the mark for any lawful reason, and it appears that his title is based on the same adoption and use as claimed by the prior registrant, he has no standing in interference, unless at least he shows that the entire right, title, and interest in the trade-mark have become vested in him. Giles Remedy Co. v. Giles, 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 375.

The decision upon an interference is conclusive upon the parties, unless appealed from, and cannot be questioned collaterally. It is res judicata. Bluthenthal v. Bigbie, 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 209; In re Herbst, 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 269; Hanford v. Westcott, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,022, 16 Off. Gaz. 1181. The decision of the patent office that a given word is valid as a trade-mark must be accepted as

The practice in trade-mark interferences follows as nearly as practicable the practice in interferences between applications for patents.[11] Any person who believes he would be damaged by the registration of a trade-mark may oppose the same by filing a written and verified notice of opposition, stating the grounds therefor, within thirty days after the publication of the mark sought to be registered.[12] Any person deeming himself to be injured by the registration of a trade-mark in the patent office may at any time make application to the commissioner to cancel the registration thereof. Such application must be filed in duplicate, and must state the grounds for cancellation and must be verified by the person filing the same.[13] If it shall appear after the hearing before the examiner of interferences conclusive in an interference proceeding between rival applicants for registration of the word as a trade-mark. U. S. Playing Card Co. v. C. M. Clark Pub. Co., 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 208.

The burden of proof, in a case of interference with a prior registration, is upon the applicant to show either that he was the first to adopt and use the mark, or that its use had been abandoned by the party who had registered it. In re Nash Hardware Co., 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 221. The party last to make application has the burden of showing prior adoption and use of the trade-mark. Bluthenthal v. Bigbie, 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 118.

The statement by a witness in an interference proceeding that a certain word was adopted and used by his company as a trade-mark is a mere conclusion, when based upon trade lists in evidence, and testimony of former witnesses. U. S. Playing Card Co. v. C. M. Clark Pub. Co., 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 208.

Reopening case.—It is discretionary with the commissioner whether or not to reopen a case for newly discovered evidence. American Stove Co. v. Detroit Stove Works, 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 304, holding in the particular case that there had been no abuse of discretion in refusing to reopen.

Avoiding decision on interference.—An applicant put in interference may withdraw his application and seek protection for his mark in the courts, thereby avoiding a decision in the interference proceeding by the patent office. Hanford v. Westcott, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,022, 16 Off. Gaz. 1181.

11. Patent Office Rule No. 46. See PATENTS, 30 Cyc. 892.

12. Section 6; Patent Office Rule No. 51; Hannis Distilling Co. v. George W. Torrey Co., 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530 (holding that leave to amend a notice of opposition after expiration of the thirty days allowed by statute, so as to carry back the date of the alleged opposer's alleged use of the mark to a period prior to that stated in the notice of opposition, was properly refused); Johnson v. Brandau, 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 348 (holding that it was error for the commissioner to sustain a demurrer upon the ground that a descriptive word is not an essential feature of the applicant's mark and that under the circumstances the registration should be denied with leave to the applicant to amend by disclaiming and omitting the word objected to by the opposer; also holding that one who has used a trade-name with a secondary meaning, although not a trade-mark, may oppose a registration); Andrew McLean Co. v. Adams Mfg. Co., 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 509 (holding that the burden of proof is on the opposer to show probable deception, where the marks are not conflicting upon their face); Hall's Safe Co. v. Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co., 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 498 (questioning whether one who has failed to properly verify his opposition within the thirty days allowed him may be given leave by the commissioner after the expiration of that time to make a proper verification); Michigan Condensed Milk Co. v. Kenneweg Co., 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 491 (holding that mere delay of the owner to assert his trade-mark rights is not ground for opposition by an infringer); Battle Creek Sanitarium Co. v. Fuller, 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 411 (holding that leave to amend an opposition should be asked, if at all, when the examiner of interferences sustains a demurrer, and that after an appeal to the commissioner, leave to amend is discretionary with the commissioner, and in the absence of an abuse of discretion an appeal from a refusal of leave to amend will not lie; also questioning whether an amendment setting up new grounds of opposition is equivalent to a new opposition and not permissible if the time limit has expired); Rogers v. International Silver Co., 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 97 (holding that a demurrer to an opposition admits all allegations of fact, and cannot be supported by affidavit; holding further that an allegation that the mark of the applicant so closely resembles the marks of the opposer as to be calculated to confuse and deceive purchasers is a conclusion of law which is not admitted by a demurrer); Hall v. Ingram, 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 454 (holding that similarity between marks may be determined on demurrer to an opposition); Buchanan-Anderson-Nelson Co. v. Breen, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 573 (same holding); Gaines v. Carlton Importation Co., 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 571 (same holding); Gaines v. Knecht, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530 (holding that a party opposing another's application for registration cannot question the constitutionality of the statute); Martin v. Martin, etc., Co., 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 59 (holding that a notice of opposition verified by attorney was insufficient even where the party was out of the country).

that the registrant was not entitled to the use of the mark at the date of his application for registration thereof, or that the mark is not used by the registrant, or has been abandoned, and the examiner shall so decide, the commissioner must cancel the registration of the mark, unless appeal be taken within the time limited.[14] In cases of opposition, and of applications for cancellation, the examiner in charge of interferences must give notice thereof to the applicant or registrant, who must make answer at such time, not less than thirty days from the date of the notice, as shall be fixed by such examiner.[15] The proceedings on oppositions and on applications for cancellation must follow as nearly as practicable the practice in interferences between applications for patents.[16] The commissioner may refuse to register a mark against the registration of which objection is filed, or he may refuse to register both of two interfering marks, or he may register the mark as a trade-mark for the person first to adopt and use the mark, if otherwise entitled to register the same, unless an appeal is taken from his decision by a party interested in the proceeding in accordance with the statute and within such time not less than twenty days as the commissioner may prescribe.[17]

6. APPEALS. From an adverse decision of the examiner in charge of trade-marks upon an applicant's right to register a trade-mark, or to renew the registration of a trade-mark, or from a decision of the examiner in charge of interferences, an appeal may be taken to the commissioner in person upon payment of the fee basco Pepper Co., 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 337 (holding that interest of petitioner is jurisdictional, and must affirmatively appear, and that facts showing injury must be alleged); Martin v. Martin, etc., Co., 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 59.

Generally as to the rule in respect to deceptive similarity as constituting infringement or unfair competition see supra, IV, C; V, B, 4, 5. Whether a mark is or is not registerable as a trade-mark, because of alleged similarity to another, depends upon the special facts and circumstances of the case. Lang v. Green River Distilling Co., 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 506. Where a doubt exists as to whether a mark which it is sought to have registered as a trade-mark is so similar to a mark already registered as to be likely to cause confusion, the doubt will be resolved in favor of the prior registrant or user in good faith. Wayne County Preserving Co. v. Burt Olney Canning Co., 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 279. See also Phœnix Paint, etc., Co. v. Lewis, 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 285.

Registration for one class of goods is no bar to registration of the same name or mark as the trade-mark on a different class of goods. McIlhenny v. New Iberia Extract of Tobasco Pepper Co., 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 337. Goods are in the same class within the meaning of the statute when the general and essential characteristics are the same. Phœnix Paint, etc., Co. v. Lewis, 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 285. See, generally, as to class of goods supra, I, E, 3; IV, H.

required by law.[18] From an adverse decision of the commissioner of patents upon the right of an applicant to register a trade-mark, or to renew the registration of a trade-mark, or from the decision of the commissioner in cases of interference, opposition, or cancellation, an appeal may be taken to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the manner prescribed by the rules of that court, and upon compliance with the conditions required in case of like appeals in patent cases so far as the same may be applicable.[19]

7. Effect of Registration. Registration under the statute confers no new rights to the mark claimed or any greater rights than already exist at common law without registration.[20] It does, however, facilitate the remedy, which may be obtained in the federal courts and enforced throughout the entire United States, and it establishes a record of facts affecting the right to the mark.[21] Registration may also be important under treaty stipulations where international protection is sought for the trade-mark.[22] Registration of matters or features which are publici juris confers no exclusive right therein. Registration does not itself create a trade-mark.[23] The trade-mark exists independently of the registration which merely affords further protection under the statute.[24] Common-law rights

18. Sections 8, 13; Patent Office Rule No. 56.

19. Section 9; Patent Office Rule No. 57. See Patents, 30 Cyc. 896. In re Mark Cross Co., 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 101, holding that a decision of the commissioner dismissing an appeal from the examiner of trade-marks upon the ground that relief should be sought by petition and not by appeal, but where he nevertheless took jurisdiction of the proceedings, and held that the application was not a pending application within the meaning of the act of 1905, was equivalent to a refusal of registration and was therefore an appealable adverse decision of the commissioner.

Review on appeal.— On appeal from the commissioner in an opposition case, the sole question before the court is the deceptive resemblance between the two marks, and the court will not determine whether either of the marks is otherwise entitled to registration. Hannis Distilling Co. v. George W. Torrey Co., 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530; Case v. Murphey, 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 245; Buchanan-Anderson-Nelson Co. v. Breen, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 573. Since the court of appeals has no power to make a system of classification, it cannot determine whether an applicant has stated the class of merchandise and the particular description of goods comprised in the class to which he seeks to appropriate his trade-mark, except as each case comes before it. In re Spaulding, 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 314.

Appeal in interference pending at passage of act.—A trade-mark interference declared under the act of March 3, 1881, but not decided until after the passage of the act of Feb. 20, 1905, is appealable under the act of Feb. 20, 1905, where the application involved has been amended to bring it under the provisions of that act. are left wholly unaffected.[25] Priority in adoption and use as a common-law trade-mark is superior to priority in registration.[26] Registration cuts off no rights of the true owner.[27] The commissioner of patents is not authorized to issue a grant of a trade-mark, there being a difference in this respect between patents and trade-marks.[28] Registration is prima facie but not conclusive evidence of ownership.[29] A certificate reciting that the statute has been complied with and that the trade-mark has been duly registered is no evidence of that fact.[30] Registration is evidence that the name is not descriptive.[31] A certificate from the patent office is evidence that what is shown to have been filed was filed at the time stated.[32] The applicant is concluded as to date of adoption and user by his sworn statement made part of his application.[33] Registered trade-marks are limited by the claim.[34] The exclusive right to use the mark is limited to use upon the class of goods for which it was registered as set forth in the statement filed in the patent office.[35] A registration must stand or fall as a whole for that which is claimed in the statement filed. If it is not valid for the entire class claimed, the registration is wholly void.[36] One cannot by registration extend the class of goods to which his mark

Remedies of true owner of mark.—Although the owner of a trade-mark has lost his right to oppose registration thereof by another, by failure to comply with the statute, he may still protect his right of property by the usual remedies at law and in equity, and he may possibly obtain a remedy through a declaration of interference under section 7, or by a proceeding for cancellation under section 13. C. English and Canadian Statutes. In England the whole subject of trade-marks is regulated by elaborate statutory provisions.[39] Registration is made a condition precedent to the maintenance of a suit for infringement.[40] But unregistered trade-marks receive a large measure of protection under the doctrine of unfair competition which is unaffected by the statutes.[41] In Canada also the subject is regulated by statutory provisions largely derived from English legislation.[42] Registration is required for trade-marks,[43] but a remedy may be had for fraudulent competition irrespective of any trade-mark registration.[44] The Canadian statute defines trade-marks more comprehensively than the American and English statutes or the common law, and includes some names and marks as trade-marks which otherwise would not be deemed such.[45] Thus personal and firm-names may be registered.[46] Use prior to registration is not essential under either the English or Canadian statutes, but registration must be followed by user if the trade-mark is to be retained.[47] Marks improperly upon the registry may be canceled and expunged upon the application of any person aggrieved,[48] and the courts may refuse to enforce improperly registered trade-marks, allowing invalidity to be set up in defense.[49]

D. Treaties With Foreign Nations. The United States has entered into many treaties and conventions with foreign nations for the reciprocal registration and protection of trade-marks.[50]

VII. ASSIGNMENTS, TRANSFERS, LICENSES, AND CONTRACTS.

A. Assignability — 1. IN GENERAL. Trade-marks and trade-names must always tell the truth and always tell the same truth, and from this it follows that they cannot be assigned except for use in the same sense as originally conveyed by the use of the name or mark. Unless use by the assignee will truthfully indicate the same origin or ownership of the same goods or business, the name or mark is not assignable.[51]

2. Impersonal Marks and Names — a. In General. If the trade-mark is of a general nature and means that the goods are of the same character and quality as have been heretofore produced by a particular person, firm, or corporation, where the element of personal skill does not enter, but only that of honesty and fair dealing, the mark may be assigned together with the business and the right to make the article or articles to which the mark has been applied, for in such cases use by the assignee involves no misrepresentation.[52] Trade-names may be assigned equally with trade-marks, provided they are not personal.[53] Abandoned trade-marks or trade-names cannot be assigned because there is nothing to assign.[54]

b. Good-Will and Business Must Be Included. A trade-mark or name cannot be assigned except in connection with an assignment of the particular business in which it has been used, with its good-will, and for continued use upon the same article or class of articles which it was first applied to, and used upon, by its original adopter, as otherwise the use by the assignee would be false and deceptive.[55] There is no such thing as a right in gross to any particular name or mark. The sole right which may exist, and which may be assigned, is a right to use such name or mark in a particular connection to signify a particular fact.[56] Trade-marks cannot be assigned in gross.[57] An attempted assignment of a naked trade-mark disconnected from any business or good-will is void.[58] The assignor must discontinue the sale of the article, as otherwise the good-will does not pass.[59] The right to use a trade-mark cannot be so enjoyed by the assignee or transferee that he shall have the right to use it on goods differing in character or species from the article to which it was originally attached, and the reason is that such a use would be an untruthful use and would deceive the public.[60] The tangible assets, book-accounts, etc., of a concern need not be included in an assignment of its trade-marks, as they are not a necessary part of its good-will.[61]

3. Personal Names and Marks. If a trade-mark or name means to the public that the personal care and skill of a particular individual were exercised in the manufacture, selection, or production of the goods upon which it is used, or in the conduct of the business, it cannot be assigned, because it can never be truthfully used by another.[62] But the mere use of a personal name as part of a trade-mark

No. 4,786, 13 Blatchf. 440, 444, Judge Shipman said: "The name, as a whole, was his trade-mark, which he had the exclusive right to use, and the exclusive use of which would pass, by assignment, to any one who had lawfully obtained from the inventor the exclusive right, also, to manufacture and sell, and who did sell, that particular article compounded according to the original formula. The property or right to a trade-mark may pass, by an assignment, or by operation of law, to any one who takes, at the same time, the right to manufacture or sell the particular merchandise to which said trade-mark has been attached. As a mere abstract right, having no reference to any particular person or property, it is conceded that it cannot exist, and, so, cannot pass by an assignment, or descend to a man's legal representatives. (Dixon Crucible Co. v. Guggenheim, Am. Trade-Mark Cases, 559.) If the assignee should make a different article, he would not derive, by purchase from Jonas Blackman, a right which a Court of equity would enforce, to use the name which the inventor had given to his own article, because such a use of the name would deceive the public. The right to the use of a trade-mark cannot be so enjoyed by an assignee, that he shall have the right to affix the mark to goods differing in character or species from the article to which it was originally attached." In Independent Baking Powder Co. v. Boorman, 175 Fed. 448, it was held that an assignee of a trade-mark which had been used to designate an alum baking powder had no right to transfer the name to a baking powder in which phosphate was substituted for alum, and that it was immaterial whether a phosphate powder was better or worse than an alum powder. "It resulted in the production of a different powder made under a materially different formula. . . . A trade-mark established in connection with one article cannot be transferred at will to another."

Question of fact as to meaning of name.— In Skinner v. Oakes, 10 Mo. App. 45, 56, Thompson, J., said: "But where the trade-mark consists of a name, how far it is capable of assignment is a more difficult question. We think that the answer to this question depends upon the effect which the use of the name in each particular instance is shown to have upon the minds of the public. If it leads the public to believe that the particular goods are, in fact, made by the person whose name is thus stamped upon them, or in whose name they are advertised, whereas they are, in fact, made by another person, then such a use of the name will not be protected by the courts; for to do so would be to protect the perpetration of a fraud upon the public." "There may no doubt be cases where the personal skill of an artist or artisan may so far enter into the value of a product that a trade-mark bearing his name would, or at least might, imply that his personal work or supervision was employed in the manufacture; and, in such cases, it would be a fraud upon the public if the trade-mark should be used by other persons, and for this reason such a trade-mark would be held to be unassignable. It is in any case a question whether the use of the trade-mark would give

by the manner of its use come to indicate merely that the article or business is the same one to which it was originally affixed or in which it was originally used, it is assignable, for it has then lost its personal significance.[65] Corporate names, although made up in part of the name of an individual, are not personal.[66] The assignee of a personal trade-mark must modify it, by the addition of explanatory statements or otherwise, so that his use of it will be a truthful use, and indicate that the assignee and not the assignor is now carrying on the business.[67] A mere license to use another's name is not assignable.[68] to the public or to purchasers a false idea as to who made the article; and a court of equity would not lend any active aid to sustain a claim to a trade-mark which should contain a misrepresentation to the public. Connell v. Reed, 128 Mass. 477, 35 Am. Rep. 397; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 2 S. Ct. 436, 27 L. ed. 706. But, on the other hand, the usages of trade may be such that no such inference would naturally be drawn from the use of a trade-mark which contains a person's name, and that all that purchasers would reasonably understand is that goods bearing the trade-mark are of a certain standard kind or quality, or are made in a certain manner, or after a certain formula, by persons who are carrying on the same business that formerly was carried on by the person whose name is in the trade-mark." Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 593, 10 N. E. 713, 58 Am. Rep. 140. In Armstrong v. Kleinhans, 82 Ky. 303, 313, 56 Am. Rep. 894, plaintiff leased a building with a tower, and used it as a clothing store, designating it, with the consent of the landlord, who paid half the expense of the sign, "Tower Palace." Plaintiff subsequently removed his business to another store, transferring the sign, without consent of the landlord, to the new house. The landlord continued the use of the name, and leased to defendant, who used the store under the name of "Tower Palace" as a clothing establishment. An injunction was refused. In distinguishing this case from Woodward v. Lazar, 21 Cal. 448, 82 Am. Dec. 751, Lewis, J., said: "But conceding the correctness of the conclusion of the court in that case, it does not sustain the claim of appellant. There the name of the hotel was not applicable to or descriptive of a particular building, but was arbitrary, and applied to the business carried on first in the building upon the leased premises and afterwards in both of the buildings. Here the name 'Tower Palace' was intended to describe and designate the place, and not the particular business, nor the person carrying it on. It never was used as a trade-mark by appellant, but simply to indicate the particular place on Market street where he did business, and consequently he never acquired the exclusive right to use the name, except as applicable to and while he occupied that building."

C. Construction, Operation, and Effect. The ordinary rules of construction apply to assignments and contracts affecting trade-mark rights.[79] An intention to part with the right to use one's own name and to transfer the exclusive right to use it to another must be made clearly to appear. It will not readily be presumed.[80] The mere transfer of a business coupled with a covenant by the vendor not to engage in the same business does not authorize the vendee to conduct the business in the vendor's name.[81] An agreement for a future assignment of trade-mark is not a present assignment of the trade-mark or good-will.[82] Successors or assignees are entitled to the same rights as the original proprietor.[83] The assignor of an assignable trade-mark will not be permitted to use it thereafter in competition with his assignee or the latter's successors,[84] for this would be an

They cannot of course be sold in gross.[89] Bankruptcy, or a general assignment for creditors, will not operate to deprive the bankrupt or assignor of the right to use his own name in his own business, although it is the same business.[90] The assignee for the benefit of creditors of a corporation does not take the right to use the name of a stock-holder as a trade-mark or a trade-name, where the corporation had a mere revocable license.[91]

E. Attachment and Execution. A trade-mark cannot be seized and sold upon execution or attachment, apart from the business in which it has been used.[92]

F. Inheritance and Succession. Trade-marks do not descend to a man's legal representatives in gross, but only in connection with the business and its good-will.[93] They do descend, however, in connection with the descent and transfer of the business.[94]

Will passing name of newspaper.— The name of a newspaper is in the nature of a trade-mark, and passes by assignment with the business in which it is used, but, apart from the business, it confers no right of ownership; and so, in a controversy to determine the owners of a newspaper plant according to the provisions of a will, plaintiffs can have no right in the name of the paper as an element of value, unless the material property itself is held to pass to them under the will. App. 45, 53, Thompson, J., said: "A point is made in behalf of the defendant Annie Oakes, that before the plaintiffs acquired the alleged right to use the name of Oakes in the manufacture of candies, she, by marrying with Oakes, had acquired a right to use his name in the same connection, of which the plaintiffs cannot lawfully deprive her. There is nothing in this point except novelty. Peter Oakes could not confer upon Annie McLaughlin, by marrying her, any higher rights in the use of his own name than he himself had. A son cannot acquire from his father the right to use his father's name as a trade-mark, if the father had parted with the right by contract (Filkins v. Blackman, 9 Fed. Cas. H. Partnership Contracts. Trade-marks and names of an individual who enters a firm formed to carry on the business in which the names and marks are used become firm assets,[2] unless the contract or circumstances show that such partner intended to contribute merely a license to use them during his continuance in the firm.[3] The question depends upon the construction of the contract, and the principles of partnership in regard to individual and firm property.[4] Trade-marks used by a firm are prima facie firm assets.[5] An assignment to a copartner of all one partner's interest in the firm passes firm trade-marks, unless expressly reserved.[6] Where one partner retires from the firm, he abandons or transfers to the remaining partners his interest in firm trade-marks and names, subject to his right to use his own name in his own business.[7] Upon dissolution, and in the absence of special contract, each partner has an equal right to use the firm-name and trade-marks, unless they are sold with the business; but if the firm-name embraces the individual name of a partner, it must be used, if at all, with suitable precautions against unfair competition.[8] Upon the death of a partner, firm trade-marks and names, like other assets, pass to the surviving partners for administration and winding up.[9] The purchaser of the business and good-will of a firm acquires the exclusive right to continue the use of the firm-name and trade-marks as against former partners, but not unless the good-will is included.[10]

VIII. Loss or Termination of Right.

A. In General. Unless affirmatively terminated in some manner, the right to protection in the use of a common-law trade-mark may continue indefinitely.[11] A certificate of registration, under the statute, continues in force for twenty years and then expires, unless renewed. But it may be renewed from time to time for like periods.[12] A custom to disregard trade-marks generally cannot be shown to destroy a valid trade-mark.[13]

B. Unclean Hands. Plaintiff's own fraud or wrong-doing may deprive him of the right to a remedy for infringement of his trade-mark,[14] or for any other form of unfair competition in business.[15]

C. Abandonment and Non-User. The title to a trade-mark or trade-name acquired by adoption and user may be lost by an abandonment of such use.[16] Abandonment is a question of fact, depending upon intent.[17] It may be that name, and that, upon the death of one of them, the right which they before had jointly, becomes the separate right of the survivor."

inferred from circumstances necessarily pointing to an intent to abandon.[18] An actual intention to permanently give up the use of a trade-mark is necessary to constitute abandonment of it. Mere disuse, although for a considerable period, is not necessarily an abandonment.[19] But a long-continued disuse may be sufficient to show an abandonment.[20] Discontinuance of use, coupled with circumstances showing an intent to give it up permanently, constitute abandonment.[21] In the absence of intentional abandonment, mere disuse will not destroy trade-mark rights, unless the mark has ceased to be distinctive, and the good-will associated with it has passed away,[22] or the mark has become identified with other goods.[23] Abandonment may be inferred by the trier of the fact from a long-continued acquiescence in infringement.[24] But abandonment is not shown, even by numerous infringements, in the absence of the owner's acquiescence.[25] Permitting a limited use by others is not an abandonment.[26] Use by licensees works no abandonment.[27] Adoption of a new mark may amount to an abandonment of the old one, but not necessarily.[28] Adoption of a new distinguishing word or mark, and the subsequent use of it in connection with the old word or mark, does not show abandonment of the latter.[29] The abandonment and discontinuance of a business and the dissipation of its good-will operates as an abandonment of the trade-marks used therein.[30] The burden of proving abandonment is upon the party alleging it. It is not favored, and must be strictly proved.[31]

D. Laches, Acquiescence, and Delay. In suits for unfair competition or infringement it is well settled that mere laches in the sense of delay to bring suit does not constitute a defense. Such laches may, under some circumstances, bar an accounting for past profits, but under no circumstances will it bar an injunction against a further continuance of the wrong.[32] Laches or delay must be accom-

Rule established by supreme court.— In Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 523, 9 S. Ct. 143, 32 L. ed. 526, an injunction was granted, although defendant had infringed for thirteen years without objection by the complainant. The court said: "The intentional use of another's trade-mark is a fraud; and when the excuse is that the owner permitted such use, that excuse is disposed of by affirmative action to put a stop to it. . . . The wrong is a continuing one, demanding restraint. . . . Mere delay or acquiescence cannot defeat the remedy by injunction in support of the legal right, unless it has been continued so long and under such circumstances as to defeat the right itself. . . . Acquiescence to avail must be such as to create a new right in the defendant. Rodgers v. Nowill, 3 De G. M. & G. 614, 17 Jur. 171, 22 L. J. Ch. 404, 1 Wkly. Rep. 205, 216, 52 Eng. Ch. 478, 43 Eng. Reprint 241. Where consent by the owner to the use of his trademark by another is to be inferred from his knowledge and silence merely, 'it lasts no longer than the silence from which it springs; it is, in reality, no more than a revocable license.' Per Duer, J., in Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 599; Julian v. Hoosier Drill Co., 78 Ind. 408; Taylor v. Carpenter, 23 Fed. Cas. Nos. 13,784, 13,785, 3 Story 458, 2 Woodb. & M. 1. So far as the act complained of is completed, acquiescence may defeat the remedy on the principle applicable when action is taken on the strength of encouragement to do it, but so far as the act is in progress and lies in the future, the right to the intervention of equity is not generally lost by previous delay, in respect to which the elements of an estoppel could rarely arise. At the same time, as it is in the exercise of discretionary jurisdiction that the doctrine of reasonable diligence is applied, and those who seek equity must do it, a court might hesitate as to the measure of relief, where the use, by others, for a long period, under assumed permission of the owner, had largely enhanced the reputation of a particular brand." In McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828, which was a suit to enjoin infringement of a trade-mark it appeared that defendant had used the infringing labels for over twenty years, during which period the complainant and his predecessors knew of such use and made no objection. It was nevertheless held that this was no ground for denying an injunction against future infringement.

"In cases of actual fraud, as we have repeatedly held . . . the principle of laches has but an imperfect application, and delay even greater than that permitted by the statute of limitations is not fatal to plaintiff's claim." infringement, does not amount to consent and is no bar to relief against a continuance of the infringement.[34] Delay is no bar to even a preliminary injunction where the legal right is clear,[35] although ordinarily mere laches or delay is sufficient to justify a denial of a preliminary injunction.[36] Laches, acquiescence, or delay, under circumstances showing an abandonment,[37] or otherwise rendering it inequitable to grant an injunction or other relief,[38] constitutes a valid defense. This rule seems to be applied with somewhat greater strictness in England than in this country.[39] The true rule to be deduced from all the decisions is that laches, one's trade-mark by another is a continuing wrong, and the right to prevent its continuance can rarely be lost by mere delay of assertion. There must be some element of estoppel. Michigan Condensed Milk Co. v. Kenneweg Co., 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 491.

S. 220, 32 Wkly. Rep. 951, Kay, J., said: "Where persons come and object, in whatever form, to the use of a trade-mark which has been used for a great number of years, it does not follow, as a acquiescence, or delay is no defense to an injunction in this class of cases, unless it has been so long continued, and is accompanied with such circumstances as to result in either: (1) An estoppel as to the particular defendant; (2) an abandonment of the trade-mark or trade-name; or (3) a loss of distinctiveness. There may be discordant expressions in some cases, but it will usually be found that circumstances existed in each case making it inequitable to grant the desired relief against defendant.[40] Laches or delay is a bar to an accounting for profits and a recovery of damages for past infringement, even though not sufficient to bar an injunction against a further continuance of the wrong.[41] Knowledge of infringement must be shown in order to establish laches or acquiescence. Even long matter of course that the use for a great number of years is an absolute bar to obtaining an injunction; but, most certainly, it throws on those who object to the use the onus of proving that it was originally a fraudulent use, and that it is calculated to deceive; and very much stronger evidence is required in such a case where there has been a long user than would be required in another case."

A moderate delay on the part of plaintiff in prosecuting an infringement of his trade-mark or trade-name, or such a delay as will enable him to obtain evidence, is no bar to his success. J., said: "In England the rule is stringent in trade-mark cases, that lack of diligence in suing deprives the complainant in equity of the right either to an injunction or an account. Our courts are more liberal in this respect. A long lapse of time will not deprive the owner of a trade-mark of an injunction against an infringer, but a reasonable diligence is required of a complainant in asserting his rights, if he would hold a wrong-doer to an account for profits and damages. This rule, however, applies only to those cases where there has been an acquiescence after a knowledge of the infringement is brought home to the complainant." See White v. Schlect, 14 Phila. infringement, if unknown to plaintiff, is no defense to an injunction, or a recovery of damages and profits.[42] Mere infringements by other persons beside the particular defendant constitute no defense,[43] unless such infringements have been so numerous and long continued that the mark has lost its distinctiveness.[44] Laches in prosecuting third persons for infringement, even amounting to an estoppel in favor of such third persons, will not avail a defendant as to whom there has been no delay or laches.[45] Prosecution of suits against other infringers may be shown to rebut the defense of acquiescence and laches.[46] Acquiescence in a non-competitive use in connection with a different class of goods or business is no bar to relief when the use is subsequently extended to competing goods or business.[47] The burden of proving laches and acquiescence is upon defendant.[48] Long delay is evidence of acquiescence, but it has been held not a defense, unless extending to the period of the statute of limitations.[49] Since infringement and unfair competition are continuing wrongs, and the injunctive remedy looks to the future, it is difficult to see how a statute of limitations can have any application.[50]

E. Loss of Distinctiveness. The exclusive right to an originally valid trade-mark is lost if such mark for any reason loses its distinctiveness and no longer indicates a particular origin or ownership. It has then ceased to be a trade-mark.[51] Indiscriminate use by a number of different persons, if continued long enough, will result in a loss of distinctiveness and destroy a trade-mark.[52] Extensive piracy by a single individual will not have this effect,[53] nor will a few scattering infringements by several persons even though not prosecuted.[54] Permitting a limited use by another is not sufficient to defeat the owner's right to prevent others from using his trade-mark.[55]

F. Generic Meaning Acquired Through Use. Where a word or name, although originally a valid trade-mark or an exclusive trade-name, has by use acquired a generic meaning, and become merely a generic name descriptive of a general kind, quality, or class of goods, it is publici juris for that purpose, and in that sense, and is no longer an exclusive trade-mark.[56] Whether such generic meaning has been acquired in any particular case is a question of fact.[57] The right once lost is gone forever.[58] It is only where the name has become generic with the owner's consent or acquiescence that his rights therein are lost.[59] A name originally a valid trade-mark does not become common property merely because the public has come to ascribe a descriptive meaning to it, due to plaintiff's use thereof.[60]

IX. REMEDIES AND PROCEDURE.

A. In General. The remedies available to redress or prevent infringement of trade-marks or unfair competition are common-law rather than statutory,[61]

Ice Co., 70 Conn. 516, 40 Atl. 534; Noera v. H. A. Williams Mfg. Co., 158 Mass. 110, 32 N. E. 1037. See Coats v. Merrick Thread Co., 36 Fed. 324, 1 L. R. A. 616 [affirming 149 U. S. 562, 13 S. Ct. 966, 37 L. ed. 847].

The question is for the court to determine from its judicial knowledge aided by reference to any appropriate authorities, or by evidence, or both. Hygeia Distilled Water Co. v. Hygeia Ice Co., 70 Conn. 516, 40 Atl. 534.

The test whether a fancy name adopted by a manufacturer as a trade-mark for certain goods has become publici juris is the question whether the use of it by other persons in connection with the same goods is calculated to deceive the public, so as to induce them to believe that in purchasing the goods so named they are purchasing goods of the original manufacturer. Consequently, a trade-mark may have become publici juris among a certain class, as between the wholesale and retail dealers who will not be deceived by it, and yet may not have become publici juris as between the retail dealers and their ordinary customers. Ford v. Foster, L. R. 7 Ch. 611, 41 L. J. Ch. 682, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 219, 20 Wkly. Rep. 818.

Merriam Co., 149 Fed. 858, 863 [modified in 159 Fed. 638], where the circuit court said: "When the word 'Webster' as applied to dictionaries, has once become dedicated to the public, it is not again subject to exclusive appropriation as a trade-mark or trade-name, nor can the public be deprived of its use on the ground of unfair competition." But the necessary qualification of this is found in Estes v. Williams, 21 Fed. 189, the first "Chatterbox" case, where the court said: "This would be true, doubtless, as to all such publications as those to which the name was applied, but not as to those essentially different." It is, of course, true that no new exclusive rights can be acquired in the title of a book, or the name of a patented article, by merely continuing to publish that same book under that same title after the copyright has expired, or by continuing to manufacture and sell an article under its generic name after the patent thereon has expired. But it is not true that no new rights can be acquired in words which are, or have become, publici juris. The whole doctrine of secondary meaning is inconsistent with such a proposition. See supra, V, B, 2. So also abandoned trade-marks may be reclaimed or reappropriated. See supra, II, C; III, A, 3. A name which has become publici juris in a particular connection may acquire a secondary meaning by use in a different connection which will be protected. Boake v. Wayland, 26 Rep. Pat. "The mere fact that the word, by association of ideas, would suggest to some persons the idea of purity or healthfulness, would not prevent its being available as a trade-mark word . . . and the fact that such association grew out of its use by the plaintiff and its predecessors would not make it common property." Restraining suit.—A person charged with an infringement of a trade-mark and against whom an action is threatened and about to be commenced cannot maintain an action to restrain the commencement of such threatened action, and the fact that an injunction against him would be a serious injury to his business furnishes no justification therefor. and depend upon state rather than national laws.[62] They are the ordinary and usual legal [63] and equitable remedies,[64] and are not taken away by statutes providing additional or cumulative statutory remedies, such as criminal prosecutions or penal actions.[65]

B. Jurisdiction — 1. Of Federal Courts. Federal circuit courts have jurisdiction of suits for infringement of trade-marks registered under the federal statute without regard to diversity of citizenship of the parties.[66] But the federal courts have no jurisdiction of suits for the infringement of unregistered common-law trade-marks, or of suits for unfair competition, unless the requisite diverse citizenship exists, in which case they have jurisdiction.[67] Since the jurisdiction of the federal courts depends upon the amount in controversy it must be made to appear that the amount or value of the matter in controversy exceeds the sum of two thousand dollars exclusive of interest and costs,[68] except in the case of registered trade-marks, as to which the statute expressly confers jurisdiction without regard to the amount in controversy.[69] Federal district courts have no jurisdiction of suits for infringement of trade-marks.[70]

Foreign infringement.—The federal courts have no jurisdiction of unfair competition or infringement of trade-marks wholly committed in a foreign country. Vacuum Oil Co. v. Eagle Oil Co., 122 Fed. 105.

68. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. v. Butler, 128 Fed. 976 (holding the averments of the bill insufficient to show jurisdictional amount, and that the value of the trade-name is not the amount in controversy, when there is no danger of destroying such trade-name); Merriam v. Texas Siftings Pub. Co., 49 Fed. 944, 947 (where the trade-name "Webster's Dictionary" was involved, and the court said: "No direct evidence was given of the amount of the matter in dispute, but it is easy to see from the testimony that the amount is such as to give this court jurisdiction"). But see Griggs v. Erie Preserving Co., 131 Fed. 359. "It is not necessary that the amount of actual damages sustained be proved for this court to retain jurisdiction and decide the question of infringement. It is enough that the parties are citizens of different states, and that irreparable damage may be sustained by a continuance of the alleged wrongful acts of the defendant. The value of the object to be gained by a bill in equity is the test of jurisdiction. The injury from which relief is sought is the wrongful appropriation and infringement by defendant of complainant's arbitrarily selected word 'Home' as a trade-mark. The remedy invokes the restraining power of the court. To restrain and enjoin future trespasses upon property rights in a proper case is one of the privileges conferred upon a court of equity, and the value derived from the exercise of such power is often difficult of ascertainment. 2. Of State Courts. The appropriate state courts have jurisdiction of actions or suits for infringement of trade-marks or unfair competition,[71] even in the case of a trade-mark registered under the federal statute.[72]

C. Parties — 1. In General. The ordinary rules as to parties in actions at law and suits in equity are fully applicable to similar actions and suits involving trade-marks or unfair competition.[73]

2. Plaintiffs. An action or suit for infringement or unfair competition should be brought by and in the name of the owner of the trade-mark, business, and good-will for which protection is sought.[74] A person without any right, title, or interest in the name, mark, or business affected has no standing to maintain

Declarations held sufficient.— A declaration alleging in substance that plaintiffs were profitably engaged in the manufacture and sale of certain valuable medicine, and that tiff.[92] Special damage need not be alleged or proved.[93] The question of fraudulent imitation will not ordinarily be determined on demurrer, but will be left to the jury.[94]

3. Damages. Ordinarily the measure of damages for infringement of a trade-mark is the loss of plaintiff's profits caused by such infringement.[95] Defendant's profits are not the measure of plaintiff's damages.[96] It will be presumed that plaintiff lost sales to the extent of the sales made by defendant under the infringing mark and was damaged by loss of the usual profits on that number of sales.[97] But where the goods are not marked with the infringing mark, it cannot be assumed, in the absence of evidence, that plaintiff lost a sale for every sale made by defendant.[98] The burden of proof is on plaintiff to show damage from particular sales.[99] No damages can be recovered for unfair competition in the absence of proof that actual deception has resulted.[1] It is for the jury to say whether a defendant fraudulently, deceitfully, and with intent to injure plaintiff's business, did manufacture in a similar name a spurious and inferior medicine in imitation of that made by plaintiffs, and by simulating the wrappers used by plaintiffs for putting up their medicine did deceive the public and thus sell large quantities of the spurious medicine, all of which was to plaintiff's injury and damage, sets forth sufficiently a cause of action for the recovery of damages. Evidence under allegations of sales by defendant.— Evidence may be offered of any number of sales, under a count for selling on a particular day and divers other days between that and the date of the writ. Taylor v. Carpenter, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,785, 2 Woodb. & M. 1. But a declaration averring that defendant, "since the 1st day of November, 1888, knowingly, willfully, and fraudulently offered for sale, and is now selling," etc., without any continuando with reference to the matter of selling, will allow plaintiff to prove only one actual sale as an independent basis of damages. English rule.— The burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show by distinct evidence the actual damage which he has suffered. The courts will not presume that plaintiff would have made all the sales made by defendant, but if plaintiff's sales have fallen off approximately to the same extent as defendant's have increased in the same region, this will be sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover this loss. falling off in plaintiff's custom was due to defendant's infringement.[2] Damages need not be proved with precision and definiteness, but it is sufficient if the evidence affords a basis for a reasonably probable estimate.[3] General damages can be awarded:[4] Nominal damages may be recovered for infringement where no actual damages are proved.[5] Exemplary damages, beyond full indemnity, should not ordinarily be given.[6] But exemplary damages for infringement may be allowed where an intention to defraud is shown.[7]

3. W. R. Lynn Shoe Co. v. Auburn-Lynn Shoe Co., 103 Me. 334, 69 Atl. 569. "It is not necessary, however, for the plaintiff in such case to prove the resulting damages in separation from other damages with mathematical certainty or anything like it. He is not to be held to precision, to the exact pound, neither more nor less, nor even to show a distinct separation in time and circumstance. It is enough if he furnishes evidnece upon which the tribunal can make a reasonably probable estimate through the exercise of intelligent judgment. Mere difficulty in making such an estimate does not authorize the tribunal to turn the plaintiff away without any damages. Of course in a given case the estimate may be too large or too small, as it may be and undoubtedly often is in that large class of cases in which damages cannot be calculated but necessarily have to be estimated. Certainly, precision is undoubtedly very desirable in the assessment of damages in such cases, but it is practically unattainable, and there is less danger of injustice in awarding judgment upon reasonably intelligent estimates than in refusing it wholly. "The theory upon which a court of equity has long acted is that a resemblance in, or an imitation of the names, signs, or marks, under which another conducts a business, is a deception practiced upon the public, and an injury to the proprietor, in the loss of custom and patronage; to redress which an action at law for damages is not a sufficiently satisfactory remedy. That is the principle we may extract from the often cited opinions of Lord Eldon in Hogg v. Kirby, 8 Ves. 215, 7 Rev. Rep. 30, 32 Eng. Reprint 336; of Lord Langdale in Knott v.

inadequate regardless of the question of defendant's solvency.[9] Formerly, if plaintiff's right or title to relief was at all doubtful, equity would refuse to entertain jurisdiction until the right and its violation had been established at law.[10] This rule has been substantially, if not entirely, abrogated,[11] and at the present day suits for infringement or unfair competition are almost invariably brought upon the equity side of the court in the first instance. The relief sought is an injunction against a continuance of the wrong,[12] and an accounting and recovery of damages and profits by reason of the past infringement.[13]

2. Bill of Complaint. The bill, petition, or complaint must state, in accordance with the usual rules of equity pleading,[14] or code pleading,[15] according to the system prevailing in the jurisdiction where the suit is brought, facts entitling plaintiff to equitable relief. This is done where facts are alleged showing an infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark,[16] or unfair competition,[17] within the principles already stated. The bill should contain averments of facts, not conclusions, showing that defendant's use of the mark or name complained of is wrongful.[18] In suits for infringement of a technical trade-mark, the existence of such trade-mark, its description, and its ownership and use by plaintiff in connection with a particular class of goods must be alleged.[19] Actual or threatened use or imita-

Profert of the instruments of title by which plaintiff acquired the property with which the trade-mark or trade-name is connected is not necessary. Such title is not in issue, and is not the foundation or gist of the action. La Republique Française v. Schultz, 57 Fed. 37. As against a wrong-doer, plaintiff need not show a formal assignment from his predecessors where he has used the mark for many years. Hostetter v. Vowinkle, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,714, 1 Dill. 329. See Bulte v. Igleheart, 137 Fed. 492, 70 C. C. Alleging express assignment of trade-mark on sale of business.— A sale of a mineral spring carries to the purchaser the right to use the trade-mark or name by which the water is known; and in an action by the purchaser to enjoin third persons from infringing, the complaint need not allege any express assignment of the trade-mark. Congress, etc., Spring Co. v. High Rock Congress Spring Co., 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 348 [reversing 57 Barb. 526]. For the principle involved see supra, VII, A, 4.

Averring registration according to treaty. — In Lacroix v. Escobal, 37 La. Ann. 533, a petition of a French citizen for an injunction against the infringement of his trade-mark and for damages and an account of tion of such trade-mark by defendant under circumstances constituting an infringement[20] must be alleged.[21] It is usual to charge that such infringement was committed fraudulently and intentionally, and such charge is perhaps essential where a recovery of damages and profits is sought.[22] But a charge of fraud is unnecessary to support a bill for an injunction only, because fraud is not necessary to constitute an infringement.[23] An averment of special damage is unnecessary in a bill for an injunction.[24] A bill for unfair competition need not show an exclusive proprietary right in plaintiff to the names, marks, or devices used by defendant to pass off his goods or business as and for the goods or business of plaintiff;[25] but it is sufficient to allege their prior use by plaintiff or his predecessors, and their acquired secondary meaning as indicative of his goods or business.[26] Of course if plaintiff is entitled to an exclusive trade-name[27] he should allege his exclusive title.[28] A fraudulent intent upon the part of defendant should be charged, as according to many cases fraud is the very essence of unfair competition, and in any event it greatly strengthens plaintiff's right to relief.[29] Actual or probable confusion and deception of the public by reason of profits was held to be fatally defective where it failed to allege that plaintiff had deposited a copy of his trade-mark in the patent office at Washington as required by the convention or treaty of April 16, 1869, between the United States and France.

Plaintiff's failure to prove the registration of his trade-mark, as alleged in the complaint, is not fatal to his recovery, where the allegations of the complaint are broad enough to admit of proof of a common-law trade-mark, and defendants do not assail the method of proof adopted, by motion for dismissal for variance or otherwise, and where, assuming the variance, defendants fail to offer any proof to controvert the existence of the trade-mark, as a matter of fact. Gaines v. Leslie, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 20, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 421.

Under an averment of ownership, plaintiff may show that he acquired title by adoption and user subsequent to the origination and abandonment of such mark by another, without alleging such details. Gaines v. E. Whyte Grocery, etc., Co., 107 Mo. App. 507, 81 S. W. 648.

Variance between device alleged and proven. —Where the petition for an injunction sets out as an exhibit, with full description, the trade-marks and device used by both plaintiff and defendant, and makes such exhibits a part of the petition by appropriate averments, an objection to the introduction of plaintiff's trade-mark and device on the ground of variance between the device declared upon and that proven cannot be maintained. Particularly is such an objection not well taken when it is raised for the first time by a request for the charge to the jury to declare as a matter of law the existence of such fatal variance. Infringement in all respects not alleged.— A bill for injunction alleging that defendant has fraudulently simulated the manufacture of the complainant and that he has successfully deceived the public by inducing it to purchase the simulated for the genuine article is sufficient on demurrer. The question is not whether defendant has in all respects imitated the trade-marks of the complainant, but whether he has so imitated them that the purchaser has been imposed on. defendant's acts must be alleged.[30] Unfair competition and infringement of trade-marks by the same acts may be both embraced in one bill.[31] But a bill for relief against unlawful competition in the sale of an article before a patent was granted therefor, and also for infringement of the patent subsequently granted, is multifarious.[32] A bill seeking to restrain the publication and sale of a book because in its text it infringes plaintiff's copyright and in its title infringes the title of plaintiff's book, which is a trade-name, is not multifarious.[33]

3. Cross Bill and Counter-Claim. In a suit to enjoin circulars and advertisements claiming an exclusive right to a trade-name, and threatening plaintiff's customers with suits for infringement, a cross bill to establish such exclusive right and praying an injunction against infringement and unfair competition is germane to the subject of the original suit.[34] So in an action under the code to enjoin infringement of a name or mark, defendant may by counter-claim assert ownership of such name or mark, and pray for an injunction and damages against plaintiff, as this is a cause of action connected with the subject of the main action.[35] But a cross bill for unfair competition is not germane to a bill for infringement of a patent.[36]

4. Plea. A plea must advance some single fact which displaces the equity of the bill.[37] A plea to a bill for unfair competition which amounts substantially to a denial of infringement with an allegation of evidential facts to disprove the charges of the bill is improper, an answer being sufficient.[38]

5. Demurrer. Demurrers in this class of cases are governed by the ordinary rules.[39] If the averments of the bill are sufficient to entitle plaintiff to any relief, a demurrer going to the whole bill is too broad and will be overruled.[40] Where

A bill which cannot be sustained on the ground that a lawful trade-mark has been infringed cannot stand for relief on the ground that defendants have injured or intend to injure the complainant by deceitfully representing and marketing their product as the product made by the complainant, where it is not alleged that defendants have attempted to practise or intend to practise such deceit. Where a bill states a cause of action which entitles the complainant to relief against the use by defendant of certain trade-marks and names in combination, it will not be held demurrable because he may not be entitled to enjoin their use separately, or to relief to the full extent prayed for. Holeproof Hosiery Co. v. Richmond Hosiery Mills, 167 Fed. 381.

Validity of geographical trade-mark.— In a suit for infringement of trade-marks and labels and for unlawful competition, an objection that the trade-marks are invalid because consisting of geographical names, etc., cannot be considered on demurrer, but is matter of defense to be raised by answer. Jewish Colonization Assoc. v. Solomon, 125 Fed. 994.

fraudulent intent and deception of purchasers is charged in the bill, it is admitted by a demurrer, and ordinarily plaintiff will be entitled to a preliminary injunction.[41] The respective names or marks may be compared and considered on demurrer, if made a part of the bill, or filed as exhibits,[42] and if it clearly appears from such comparison that there is no infringement, the demurrer will be sustained;[43] but to justify such action, the dissimilarity should be so marked as to leave no doubt in the mind of the court.[44]

6. Answer. The answer, in accordance with familiar rules,[45] must be responsive to the bill,[46] and not frivolous.[47] If an answer under oath is not waived, a verified answer responsive to the bill is evidence for defendant, and can be overcome only by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and efficient corroborating circumstances.[48]

7. Unclean Hands. It has been held that the defense of unclean hands, fraud, and misrepresentation upon the part of plaintiff is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded in order to be available.[49] But by the weight of authority, unclean hands is not strictly a defense, and need not be pleaded. Upon the fact appearing, equity will withhold its hand, upon its own motion, and in the interest of the public deny its assistance to plaintiff.[50]

8. Evidence. The evidence for final hearing or on the trial is taken in the usual manner, and subject to the usual rules.[51] The matters necessary to be

It is competent for defendant to show by cross-examination or otherwise, without pleading the same, that plaintiff's goods are not as represented by his trade-mark or advertising, and that his business has been built up on false representations which deprive him of the right to relief in equity. Uri v. Hirsch, supra. A complainant, seeking the aid of a court of equity in protection of his rights in a proprietary medicine, should be required as a part of his affirmative case to allege and prove that his preparation is what it purports to be, and is represented to the public to be, there being no presumption that such representations are true upon which a court can act. Moxie Nerve Food Co. v. Modox, 152 Fed. 493. But it would seem that there should be no presumption of fraud. The objection ought to be raised by the court. The suggestion comes with a poor grace from one who has, by imitation of plaintiff's marks, been guilty of the same fraud or imposition upon the public, if such it happen to be. Duly qualified witnesses may testify as to the meaning in the trade of the names and marks applied to plaintiff's products. Hygeia Distilled Water Co. v. Hygeia Ice Co., 70 Conn. 516, 40 Atl. 534. Witnesses may not testify that purchasers are likely to be deceived, as that is the issue to be determined upon all the evidence. Payton v. Snelling, [1901] A. C. 308, 70 L. J. Ch. 644, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 287. But see Cope v. Evans, L. R. 18 Eq. 138, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 292, 22 Wkly. Rep. 450, holding that opinion evidence of skilled witnesses that the public is likely to be deceived by the similarity is not of itself sufficient evidence of infringement. Testimony of experts and dealers is of little weight on the question of similarity and probability of deception, where the court can personally inspect and compare the goods and packages. Yale, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Alder, 154 Fed. 37, 83 C. C. A. 149. The court may act upon a mere comparison of the respective devices, and without the testimony of any witnesses. Coats v. Merrick Thread Co., 149 U. S. 562, 13 S. Ct. 966, 37 L. ed. 847; Von Mumm v. Frash, 56 Fed. 830. Although the main test of the alleged resemblance between plaintiff's and defendant's trade-marks, devices, etc., is an inspection by the court, yet the court cannot usually determine upon a bare inspection whether an ordinary customer having neither the opportunity for comparison nor time for examination would probably be deceived by the similarity of the marks. On that question the opinion of witnesses familiar with the trade and habits of the customer is of weight, and, when aided by evidence of instances of actual deception, should be controlling unless the dissimilarity between the two marks is such as to exclude any probability of deception. Drummond Tobacco Co. v. Addison Tinsley Tobacco Co., 52 Mo. App. 10. The court must be governed by its own judgment as to the similarity of the packages and labels, and is not controlled by the contrary opinion of others or by the fact that a few people have been deceived by defendant's conduct. P. Lorillard Co. v. Peper, 86 Fed. 956, 30 C. C. A. 496. Advertisements showing that defendant marketed the goods in his own name do not rebut infringement where the name itself is infringing and deceptive. Alleghany Fertilizer Co. v. Woodside, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 206, 1 Hughes 115.

The record and evidence in a prior case brought by complainant for infringement of its trade-mark, to which defendant was not a party, while inadmissible as proof of the issues on trial, was competent for the information of the chancellor as to the scope of the decision in the prior case as a precedent. Gaines v. Kahn, 155 Fed. 639 [affirmed as to this point in 161 Fed. 495].

Exhibits attached to affidavits for preliminary injunction.— Statements made in the patent office on application for registration of a trade-mark, although not set up in the bill for injunction, may come into the case as an exhibit attached to the complainant's affidavits used on the motion for a preliminary injunction and may properly be used at the final hearing. Kohler Mfg. Co. v. Beeshore, 59 Fed. 572, 8 C. C. A. 215.

A certified copy of an application for registration is admissible against defendant's objection that the law authorizing the registration of trade-marks is unconstitutional, as a statement of defendant for the purpose of contradicting his testimony. Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co. v. McElwee, 100 N. C. 150, 5 S. E. 907.

Books of registrar.— The books of the registrar of trade-marks which show marks, the registration of which has been refused, are not evidence that these marks are publici juris. Evidence of ownership.— The uncontradicted testimony of a stock-holder that the company now owns the trade-mark is sufficient to enable the jury to pass upon the question of ownership. Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co. v. McElwee, 100 N. C. 150, 5 S. E. 907.

Immaterial evidence.— The fact that the products of both parties to an action for infringement of a trade-mark are on sale at the same or different places in the same city is immaterial, but the objection cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Hygeia Distilled Water Co. v. Hygeia Ice Co., 70 Conn. 516, 40 Atl. 534.

Evidence of identity of articles.— Where the only issue is as to the similarity of the trade-marks, labels, and packages, evidence of the identity of the articles themselves is not admissible, being without the issue. Radam

9. Hearing and Determination. The final hearing or trial is had upon the pleadings and proofs as in other cases in equity,[53] or equitable actions under code procedure.[54] The whole case may be referred to a master to take the testimony and report with his opinion.[55]

10. Final and Interlocutory Decrees. The relief awarded in this class of cases consists of an injunction,[56] and where the facts warrant it a recovery of damages and profits.[57] Where damages and profits are awarded, an interlocutory decree is entered awarding an injunction, and directing a reference to a master to ascertain the damages and profits.[58] This is followed by a final decree for the recovery of the damages and profits found. The infringing mark may be ordered removed from the goods,[59] by or under the direction of a master or referee, and at the cost of defendant.[60]

11. Injunctions — a. Preliminary Injunctions. Preliminary injunctions upon motion, based upon ex parte affidavits, and in advance of a hearing upon full proofs, are granted much more cautiously than in the case of permanent injunctions upon final hearing.[61] Accordingly all the limitations and qualifications upon the granting of permanent injunctions apply with added force to preliminary injunctions.[62] In trade-mark cases it is not a matter of course to grant preliminary injunctions even where plaintiff's case seems to be made out. The usual considerations affecting the just discretion of the court in granting preliminary injunctions are fully applicable.[63] The absence of fraudulent intent, the financial

Construction of finding.— A finding in effect that the manner in which defendant has used a certain word either alone or "in combinations" is a violation of plaintiff's trade-mark or name is not a finding either expressly or by clear implication that the mere ordinary use by defendant of its legitimate corporate name constitutes such an infringement. Inequitable conduct of plaintiff.— Where the complainants refused to recognize the rights of a foreigner, the original proprietor of a trade-mark, until they thought it would be more profitable to purchase his rights in the United States and obtain a monopoly, it was held that a preliminary injunction would not be granted, but the complainants would be left to their rights at final hearing. Where defendant had abandoned a device alleged to infringe plaintiff's trade-mark before the motion for a preliminary injunction was heard, and alleged in his affidavits that plaintiffs themselves were guilty of attempting to mislead the public by a statement shown to have been false, it was held that a preliminary injunction should not be granted. responsibility of defendant, and other like considerations may be taken into account in granting or denying the injunction.[64] Preliminary injunctions rest in the sound discretion of the trial court.[65] The case must be reasonably strong and free from doubt to justify a preliminary injunction.[66] But where plaintiff's right and defendant's infringement are clearly shown, a preliminary injunction should be granted.[67] Thus where plaintiff's title to a trade-mark is res judicata, or at least established by a prior adjudication, and infringement is admitted or clearly shown, a preliminary injunction should be granted.[68] If the affidavits are conflicting upon a material matter of fact, a preliminary injunction may be denied and the question reserved for the final hearing.[69] A preliminary injunction may also be granted with full reservation of all questions for final hearing.[70] Upon the motion it is improper to pass upon the merits of an affirmative defense.[71] The balance of convenience rule is especially applicable upon motions for injunctions in trade-mark and unfair competition cases.[72] Terms may be imposed. Thus, it is not unusual to require defendant to keep an account, or to give a bond, as a condition of denying a motion for a preliminary injunction,[73] and a complainant may be required to give a bond as a condition of granting a preliminary injunction.[74] The parties may be required to put in their proof within a limited time fixed by the court as a condition of the granting or refusal of a preliminary injunction.[75] Preliminary injunctions should be no broader than the necessities

Delay of plaintiff and injury to defendant. — When delay of the owner of a trade-mark to prosecute infringers has tended to mislead the public, or has lulled defendant against whom injunction is sought into a false security, and a sudden injunction would result injuriously, it ought not to be granted summarily, but the complainant should be left to his relief at final hearing. of the case require.[76] Preliminary injunctions will usually be dissolved upon the coming in of an answer denying the fact and equity of the bill.[77] But mere affidavits denying the equity of the bill, without an answer, are not necessarily sufficient to defeat a motion for injunction.[78] A mandatory injunction will not be granted in advance of the trial or final hearing.[79]

b. Final Injunctions— (1) RIGHT TO INJUNCTION. A permanent injunction at final hearing is a matter of course and of right where plaintiff's title to the mark and defendant's infringement of it are clearly shown, and there are no countervailing equities.[80] Actual or threatened infringement or violation of plaintiff's rights must be shown.[81] Cessation of infringement, pendente lite, is no reason for refusing an injunction,[82] and even discontinuance of infringement before commencement of the suit is not necessarily a bar, especially where that fact was unknown to plaintiff and defendant contests the suit, as there may be danger that he will resume the infringement.[83] But an injunction may be denied where the infringement was discontinued in good faith, and there is no reason to believe it will be resumed.[84] An injunction will be granted against threatened infringement, even in advance of any actual loss.[85] Actual deception and damage need not be shown in order to support an injunction against infringement or unfair competition.[86] An injunction may be granted, although the use shown is too slight to warrant an accounting.[87] An injunction may be refused within the sound discretion of the court.[88] Plaintiff's right or title to the mark or name should be clear, or established at law, before injunction should be granted.[89] Where there is a real controversy between the parties as to whether both were not concerned in the establishment of the business in connection with which the name or mark is used, it is not a case for injunction until the right has been determined at law or otherwise.[90]

Where infringement shown by single sale.— Although the proof does not establish an infringement by defendant to any great extent, yet if it is shown that a dealer had an imitated article in his store and offered it for sale as genuine, proof of a single sale is sufficient to sustain a permanent injunction against the continuance of the wrong, and an action for such infringement will not be defeated solely on the ground that on the day it is brought the dealer happens not to have any of the articles on hand. and the causes that mislead the public, in the particular case.[92] The object of the court in these cases is to see how effectually unfair trade can be put a stop to, not to be astute to see how little the fraudulent business of defendant can be interfered with.[93] The degree of restraint in any particular case is always commensurate with the necessities of the situation.[94] The injunction should be no broader than necessary to prevent deception and protect complainant's rights.[95] An injunction against unfair competition by dress of goods should not enjoin any single feature, since each feature may be properly used in different forms and combinations which do not resemble plaintiff's dress of goods. It is the deceptive combination of features which should be enjoined.[96] The use of a descriptive name or mark, or other feature which is publici juris, in connection with a particular dress of goods, may be properly enjoined, although its use alone may not be enjoined.[97] Where both parties have rights in a particular mark or name, the injunction should be framed so as to preserve the rights of each as far as possible.[98] But if defendant has no special right, the injunction may be absolute in its terms, even though plaintiff has not an exclusive trade-mark right, but rests entirely upon the doctrine of secondary meaning.[99] A false or unnecessary use of a deceptive geographical,[1] or personal name,[2] the name of a book,[3] proprietary article,[4] or of a patented article, either before or after expiration of the patent,[5] or of generic and descriptive words,[6] may and should be absolutely enjoined. Where the words or symbols are primarily publici juris, and defendant uses them truthfully in their primary sense, the injunction cannot absolutely prohibit their use, but should merely prohibit their use in a deceptive manner.[7]

In secondary meaning cases, the approved form of injunction is one restraining the use of the common name by defendant, unless accompanied by a clear statement sufficient to unmistakably distinguish defendant's goods or business from that of plaintiff.[8] Quite frequently a precise form of words is required to be used in connection with the ambiguous name.[9] The injunction should be definite, precise, and particular, so that all who see it may know with certainty what is and what is not permitted.[10] A decree in such general terms as to amount to a sweeping injunction to obey the law is objectionable upon the ground of indefiniteness, and should not be granted.[11] It should enjoin specifically the use of the marks, words, or devices adjudged misleading, or an infringement, and to this specific injunction should be added a general clause to prevent merely colorable evasion. This form of decree will definitely determine that defendant may not continue the particular form of infringement or unfair competition which has been litigated and adjudicated, and it will leave him at liberty to determine for himself what other forms of inscriptions or devices he may safely and properly use.[12] It is not a proper function of a court of equity, after finding infringement, to indulge in label making, and to give its approval in advance to a changed form proposed to be adopted by defendant to avoid future liability.[13] A contrary

Decree free from uncertainty.— A decree restraining the respondents from selling specified articles in packages having thereon certain specified labels in imitation of the labels of plaintiffs or with labels and numbers thereon so nearly like those used by plaintiffs as to be calculated to induce the purchasers to believe they are the genuine manufacture of plaintiffs is sufficiently free from uncertainty, and defendants could have no difficulty in understanding what labels they are prohibited from using where the petition, which is made a part of the decree, describes fully and particularly the labels used by plaintiff. Boardman v. Meriden Britannia Co., 36 Conn. 207, holding that remedy for uncertain decree is application to correct it.

A. 657], where Jenkins, J., said: "A court of equity does not sit as an arbiter to determine in advance upon other and changed labels which the infringer may adopt to avoid the condemnation of the court. Whether such changed forms do in fact infringe is matter of fact to be determined by the court in its usual course of procedure upon complaint lodged by the party damnified. The duty of the court below was to determine whether the labels complained of in the bill infringed the complainant's right. That duty was fully performed when the court had so determined. It is not called upon to decide whether a new label proposed for adoption would infringe. This is especially so here, where the infringement was deliberate and designed."

practice is fraught with danger of injustice to the complainant. It cannot be determined a priori what effect any particular device will have in the trade, and upon the mind of the public. The new device when put in use may injure the complainant in unforeseen and unanticipated ways, and complainant should have his day in court for the determination of such question upon the evidence, and without having it in any way prejudged.[14] Upon this principle the court should not construe its injunction in advance, and say what will, and what will not, constitute a violation of it,[15] although sometimes an explanatory or interpretation clause is inserted to make clear what is prohibited.[16]

c. Violation and Contempt. Violation of an injunction may be punished as a contempt of court.[17] The president of a corporation is guilty of contempt for violation of an injunction running against the corporation.[18] An injunction restraining the use of certain marks, words, or names is violated by use thereof, although in connection with other added matter.[19]

A label was designed in Carlsbad v. Schultz, 78 Fed. 469, 472, where Judge Coxe said: "In order that there may be no misunderstanding upon the settlement of the decree the court has applied a copy of a label which, it is thought, the defendant may use with impunity as truthfully representing the water sold by him."

16. Interpretation clause.—In a case of unfair competition, where a manufacturer put up his goods in packages similar to those of plaintiff in many ways besides those of size, color, and form, it was held proper to grant an injunction against putting up and selling or offering for sale the particular form of package referred to in the bill "or any other form of package which shall, by reason of the collocation of size, shape, colors, lettering, spacing, and ornamentation, present a general appearance as closely resembling the 'Complainant's Package,' referred to in the bill and marked in evidence, as does the said 'Defendant's Second Package.' . . . But, since so much has been said about the impossibility of framing any decree which would prevent the sale of the package complained of, and yet not give complainant the monopoly of yellow paper for its wrappers, the following clause may be added: 'This injunction shall not be construed as restraining defendant from selling packages of the size, weight, and shape of complainant's package, nor from using the designation 'Buffalo Soap Powder,' nor from making a powder having the appearance of complainant's 'Gold Dust,' nor from using paper of a yellow color as wrappers for its packages, provided such packages are so differentiated in general appearance from said 'Complainant's Package' that they are not calculated to deceive the ordinary purchaser.'" To sustain a motion for contempt for violation, by means of an altered trade-mark, of a preliminary injunction against the use of a trade-mark, it must appear clearly that the ordinary mass of customers, paying that attention which persons usually pay in buying the article in question, would be easily deceived. If this state of facts be not shown to the court the motion will be denied. Swift v. Dey, 4 Rob. (N. Y.) 611. In Cartier v. May, Sebastian's Dig. 200, a motion to commit for breach of injunction was refused on the ground of plaintiff's delay for fifteen months; but the injunction was enlarged to cover new fraud, and costs were given.

Acquiescence in violation of injunction.—In Rodgers v. Nowill, 3 De G. M. & G. 614, 619, 17 Jur. 109, 1 Wkly. Rep. 122, 52 Eng. Ch. 478, 43 Eng. Reprint. 241, an injunction having been granted, restraining defendant from the use of a trade-mark containing the words "J. Rogers & Sons," he formed, in 1848, a partnership with his father (who was named John Rogers), and brother, and used the same firm-name. In 1853 plaintiff moved for committal for breach of injunction. Stuart, V. C., refused the motion, but without costs, on the ground (among others) of acquiescence by plaintiffs for five years. This holding was reversed on appeal. Turner, L. J., said: "On the question of acquiescence, I think that in a case of this description, where there has been an injunction granted by this court, there must, in order to deprive the party who has obtained the injunction of the right to move for committal upon the breach of it, be a case made out almost amounting to such a license to the party enjoined to do the act enjoined against as would entitle him to maintain a bill against others for doing that act. The party enjoined must, I think, show such acquiescence as would be sufficient to create new right in him." See also Taylor v. Carpenter, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,784, 3 Story 458.

d. Successive Injunctions and Res Judicata. The ordinary rules in respect to the doctrine of res judicata,[20] and the granting of successive injunctions,[21] have full application in this class of cases. But as infringement or unfair competition is a tort, and a continuing wrong, each deceptive "passing off" giving rise to a new and separate cause of action, a prior decree is not an absolute bar to the maintenance of a subsequent suit for a continuance of the infringement or unfair competition, especially where the subsequent acts of defendant are not identically the same as those previously adjudicated.[22] Even if a second injunction is unnecessary, because defendant is violating an injunction already granted by which he is bound, a new suit may be maintained upon the new cause of action;[23] and a fortiori this rule applies where the new acts of infringement are committed in a different district or jurisdiction, where defendant cannot be reached by contempt proceedings, or where they were committed by one not a party to the prior bill, and who cannot be punished as for a contempt, even if he could be reached.[24] Where defendant has changed his form of infringement since the prior decree, and there is any substantial question whether the new form is an infringement, that question will not be adjudicated in contempt proceedings brought to punish for violation of the prior injunction, but the complainant will be remitted to his remedy by a new bill.[25] A prior decree, although res judicata between the parties, does not preclude plaintiff in a subsequent suit from showing that acts not disclosed or contemplated in the original suit are a violation of his right as there defined.[26] To the extent that the issues are the same, a final decree in a prior suit is conclusive evidence for or against parties or privies in a second suit.[27]

Effect of prior decree without accounting.—In a suit against a corporation to enjoin its use of the trade-marks of the complainant, and to obtain an accounting of profits, the fact that a previous suit had been brought by the same complainant against the selling agent of defendant for the same purpose, and that there had been a decree for an injunction, but no decree for an accounting, in that suit, does not estop the complainant from obtaining an accounting in the second suit; it appearing that the selling agent had been employed upon a salary, and received no profits, and that for this reason no decree for an accounting was made against him. E. 1081)], where it was urged that the decision in Dadirrian v. Gullian, 79 Fed. 784, was conclusive, but the court ruled otherwise on the facts, in a trade-name case.

Summary statement of rule.—The second cause of action is not merged in the prior judgment. It is not extinguished. But what-

Although complainant has obtained an injunction against a principal, he is entitled to maintain a subsequent suit so as to have an independent injunction against an agent, and to recover the agent's profits.[28] A prior decree for an injunction against an agent is no bar to a subsequent recovery of profits against the principal.[29] A decree enjoining a corporation, its officers and agents and employees, in the usual form is no bar to a subsequent suit against the officers and agents in their individual capacity. On the contrary, it is conclusive against them where they controlled the defense in the prior suit.[30] A former decree for an injunction in another jurisdiction by which both parties are bound, and on which both rely in a subsequent suit should be followed in terms as nearly as may be in framing the decree, in a subsequent suit.[31] A prior interlocutory decree is not conclusive upon the parties in a subsequent suit.[32]

12. Accounting For Damages and Profits. Jurisdiction to decree an accounting of profits and damages is incident to, and dependent upon, jurisdiction to grant an injunction. Where an injunction is denied, equity will not retain jurisdiction for a naked accounting of damages and profits.[33] But the jurisdiction to decree an accounting does not depend upon the right to, and the granting of, an injunction at the time of the final hearing. It is sufficient if such right existed at the time when the bill was filed.[34] The general rule is that upon obtaining an injunction for infringement of a trade-mark, plaintiff is entitled to recover defendant's profits on the goods sold under that mark, and to a reference to ascertain them.[35] ever was actually decided in the first suit must be taken as conclusively established for the purposes of the second suit. Either party may rely upon what has been adjudged. The doctrine of res judicata is a sword as well as a shield. If the prior decree was in favor of complainant in the second suit, his second suit is established to the extent that the issues determined are the same. If the prior decree was adverse to the complainant, his second suit must fail, upon the facts, so far as it depends upon the issues adversely determined. These principles have been most fully developed in the patent cases, which are of course equally applicable to trade-marks, and unfair competition. David Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Eagle Mfg. A. 220, an injunction had been granted against defendant's principal in Virginia against unfair competition. The circuit court of appeals for the second circuit held that a more specific injunction might be granted against the agent selling goods with the infringing name in the southern district of New York. The court said: "Nor is the circumstance that Sanders is selling the alleged infringing packages as agent for a non-resident any ground for refusing injunction. He may not be liable for profits which his principal takes, but injunction operates upon the individual, and in a proper case the individual will be restrained from manufacture, preparation, and sale which infringe upon another's rights, whether he be principal or merely employé."

The same rule applies to cases of unfair competition merely as in technical trade-marks.[36] In such cases equity holds the infringer or unfair trader liable as a trustee for the rightful owner to the extent of the profits realized upon the infringing goods or from the unlawful or wrongful business.[37] The accounting is taken upon equitable principles, and any facts rendering the general rule inequitable will bar its application.[38] Thus laches, acquiescence, and delay is a bar to

In Avery v. Meikle, 85 Ky. 435, 450, 3 S. W. 609, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 69, 7 Am. St. Rep. 604, the court said: "We have found no case, and been cited to no authority, where there has been a violation of the trade-mark, and an injunction granted, where the party wronged has been refused an account of profits, unless he had first elected to claim the actual damages he had sustained, or delayed the assertion of his claim."

Unfair competition by advertisements.—In Williams v. Mitchell, 106 Fed. 168, 172, 45 C. C. A. 265, the unfair competition consisted solely of misleading advertisements. These were enjoined, but the circuit court refused to decree an accounting. This was held to be error. The circuit court of appeals said: "The complainants also assert error in that the decree denied them compensation for past unfair competition. In this respect, also, we think the court was in error. The decree declares that the defendants, by their imitation of the complainants' advertisements, had been guilty of deceiving purchasers and the public into believing that the game boards of their make were the game boards made by the complainants. It declares an invasion of the complainants' rights, and the complainants are entitled, upon proper proof, to compensation to the extent of the invasion."

an accounting for profits and a recovery of damages.[39] Where the amount of damages suffered, or of profits realized, is seen to be very small, or the infringing use has been very slight, equity will limit its relief to an injunction and deny an accounting.[40] An accounting will not be directed where the evidence shows that there is no rational rule by which to estimate the profits recoverable.[41] An accounting has been denied where both parties were found at fault.[42] An accounting of profits or damages will not be ordered where the infringing use of the trade-mark or trade-name was merely accidental or without actual fraudulent intent.[43]

Accounting difficult from changes made in device.— Where for many years defendant had used plaintiff's trade-mark in various shapes and forms, and for part of the time without any active objection from plaintiff, and different changes had been introduced in its shape and general appearance in the various attempts to settle the matter amicably, it was held that propositions were raised which would make it difficult to render a proper account, and that an accounting was properly denied, without prejudice to plaintiff's right to proceed at law for damages. The profits obtained by defendant after the filing of the bill are not the result of innocent infringement and may be recovered.[44] Where the infringement or unfair competition is wilful and intentional, that is to say, fraudulent, the complainant is entitled to an accounting of damages and profits as a matter of course and of right in the absence of a valid equitable defense.[45] After entry of an interlocutory decree for an accounting, the sole question before the master is the amount of damages and profits. Defendant's infringement and plaintiff's right to relief are not open questions.[46] Findings of fact made by the master upon a reference have the weight of a verdict by a jury and will not be set aside unless the evidence is reported and shows the findings to be clearly wrong.[47] Defendant must account for all profits made on all goods sold under the infringing mark or name, and not merely for those shown to be due to the infringement.[48] Where expenses [54] should be deducted in ascertaining profits. Salaries paid to managing officers should ordinarily be allowed as a credit in ascertaining the cost of manufacture and sale; [55] but not where such officers are practically the corporation and are the persons individually guilty of the unfair competition or infringement.[56] No allowance can be made for defendant's services in wronging plaintiff by his unfair competition.[57] Interest on profits may be awarded from the time of commencement of the action.[58] Damages may be recovered in equity where an injunction is granted.[59] The English rule puts plaintiff to his election. He may have either profits or damages, but cannot have both.[60] In this country both the damages suffered by plaintiff and the profits realized by defendant may be recovered.[61] The burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show damages and profits if a recovery thereof is sought.[62] The cost of warning notices issued after the granting of a Procedure relating to search warrants.— The act of 1876 provided that application for a search warrant might be made to any United States circuit court or district judge or United States commissioner, who might "within their respective jurisdiction, proceed under the law relating to search warrants." In In re O'Donnell, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,434, 14 Off. Gaz. 379, it was held that since there was no general United States statute on the subject of search warrants, the law referred to must have been the common law, and the application would therefore be denied unless the known requirements in the application or affidavit with respect to definiteness and particularity had been observed.

Questions as to who is a trader most frequently arise under the bankrupt laws, and the most difficult among them are those cases where the party follows a business which is not that of buying and selling principally, but in which he is occasionally engaged in purchases and sales. In its most extended American signification, it may embrace all who are engaged in mechanical pursuits and employments; every one who exercises an art in making and constructing for the use of others the almost innumerable articles that civilization and refinement have made necessary or convenient to the habits and business of men as social beings, whether the individual labour himself, or only oversee and direct the labours of others." TRADING STAMPS

By Edwin DuBose Smith *

I. Definition.

A trading stamp is a printed stamp, with a certain value, given as a premium by a dealer to a customer, and usable instead of money in procuring articles from the issuers of the stamps.[1] A trading stamp is not ordinary property; it is sui generis;[2] it is an artificial creation.[3]

II. Nature of Scheme.[4]

While the several trading stamp schemes now in vogue are somewhat different

It is "a draft upon another merchant, payable in goods." Com. v. Sisson, 178 Mass. 578, 581, 60 N. E. 385.

Nature of trading stamp scheme see infra, II.

"Trading stamp company" as defined by statute, is a company that gives premiums or valuable personal property in exchange for stamps or checks furnished to purchasers of merchandise. Com. v. Gibson Co., 125 Ky. 440, 441, 101 S. W. 385, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 51, citing St. (1903) § 4224.

It is not, in the full sense, property. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Weber, 161 Fed. 219, 221.

Considered as chose in action.— The stamps issued by a trading stamp company and sold to merchants who furnish them to their customers with cash purchases as premiums to promote their business, and which, under the contract between the trading stamp company and merchants purchasing them, are made redeemable, when collected or issued in the regular way, in merchandise kept in the stores of the trading stamp company, without limitation except that they must be presented in lots of a minimum quantity of nine hundred and ninety stamps, are choses in action. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Hertzberg, 69 N. J. Eq. 264, 60 Atl. 368.

3. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 Fed. 833, 835.

The trading stamp, when issued, represents a closed transaction between the merchant and the company, as well as an outstanding obligation to redeem the stamp. As a token or voucher of the sale and use of so much advertising, the trading stamp is necessarily a consumable article — an article designed for a single use in an advertising scheme. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 Fed. 833, 834.

Descriptions of methods of conducting scheme.— "It concerns the three parties interested in it, viz., the stamp company, the merchant, and the customer who buys goods from the merchant. The stamp company prints stamps of some selected color containing a design and inscription indicating what they are and the words and figures '10 cents purchased.' Any other sum may be settled upon, but 10 cents is usual, and it will be simpler to assume it is always selected. These it sells to the merchant in convenient packages or pads for an agreed price. The merchant, when requested by a customer who has made a purchase, gives him one of these stamps for each 10 cents represented by the retail price of goods purchased for which cash is paid, and agrees that he will not dispose of such stamps otherwise than to such customer upon such terms. The customer keeps the stamps he gets, pasting them in blank spaces in a small book furnished by the stamp company. The book contains 10 stamps furnished free by the stamp company, and, when the customer has pasted 990 more stamps in it, the book is filled, and upon its presentation at one of certain designated places, called 'premium parlors,' the stamp company will give in exchange for it some valuable premium in the shape of an article of merchandise. If the customer prefers, he may exchange his book for a voucher good for further purchases of merchandise at any one of certain designated stores, to wit, stores which themselves are issuing trading stamps of the same type. It is understood that the customer in filling his book is not confined to stamps issued in any one store. He may use stamps of the designated color and type received for purchases of goods, wherever those purchases were made. This circumstance makes the stamps more desirable for the customer. The stamp company by advertising, by promises to the public, by the exhibition of goods, by the circulation of books creates a demand for the trading stamps, customers ask for them, and, in order to hold or secure their trade, the merchant finds it desirable to buy them. The merchant also advertises the type of stamps he issues, and tries to commend it to the customer. Of course, he must arrange the selling price of his merchandise so as to meet the additional cost to which he is put in advertising in giving away these stamps for which he has paid and in assisting in their redemption. In like manner the stamp company must so regulate the cost of the 'valuable premiums' it gives to customers in exchange for stamps that the money it receives from the merchants will pay all expenses, provide the premiums, and leave a profit. . . . The price [customers] pay when they purchase from the merchant must be large enough to pay all expenses and give a profit both to the stamp company and to the merchant. . . . Having settled upon its type of stamp, the company secures as many merchants as it can (or thinks it wise to secure) to distribute that particular type, but in so doing it naturally seeks to avoid supplying the same type to two merchants who are competitors in the same line of business, since the value of this stamp distribution to the merchant consists mainly in the circumstance that it is himself, and not his rival across the street, who can give away this particular type of stamp." Sperry, etc., Co. v. O'Neill-Adams Co., 185 Fed. 231, 233, per Lacombe, J. Compare People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465. "Each time a customer purchases goods from a merchant and pays for them in cash, the merchant gives him a memorandum in writing — called a stamp or coupon — which expresses in money value a small percentage of the price of the goods bought and paid for, and entitles him, after he has accumulated a certain number of such coupons, to use them, to the extent of their face value, in payment for any other goods of the merchant which he may afterward desire — or goods of some other person or trading company who has undertaken to redeem the coupons. There is generally issued with the stamp or coupon a catalogue of articles from which the holder of the coupon may afterward select." Per McFarland, J., in Ex p. Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 767, 82 Pac. 429, 2 L. R. A. N. S. 588. Detailed description may also be found in Com. v. Gibson Co., 125 Ky. 440, 444, 101 S. W. 385, 31 Ky. L. In the trading stamp scheme or plan, as explained in the books, there are designed to be three parties — the customer, the merchant, and the trading stamp company. The customer is to acquire, as his benefit, a redeemable stamp; the merchant is to acquire, as his benefit, a trade advantage resulting from issuing the stamps at his shop; the trading stamp company's benefit is the money paid to it by merchants for the privilege of issuing the stamps. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 Fed. 833, 835.

mercial sense of the term "business," it is not a business at all,[7] but simply a mode or a manner of business,[8] an instrumentality or incident of a business.[9] It has been referred to as a mode or method of advertising,[10] a unique and attractive form of advertising resorted to for the purpose of increasing trade,[11] a device to attract customers or to induce those who have bought once to buy again,[12] merely one way of discounting bills in consideration for immediate payment in cash,[13] which is a common practice of merchants, and is doubtless a popular method, and advantageous to all concerned, and it is not obnoxious to public policy.[14]

III. STATUTES AND ORDINANCES.

A. Prohibiting Gifts Through Medium of Stamps — 1. Invasion of Constitutional Rights. Statutes and ordinances designed to prohibit the giving away trading stamps by a merchant with the purchase of goods, as part of the sale transaction, have been repeatedly held to be unconstitutional,[15] as being in These acts do not constitute a "business," in the proper use of that word. They are a mere means of advertising — an incident of a business — "a medium," as stated in the petition, "of co-operation and exchange for value." Ex p. Hutchinson, 137 Fed. 950, 951. "The furnishing of the trading stamps by a merchant to his customers did not constitute a business separate and distinct from that of selling merchandise, but was merely an instrumentality in or an incident to that business, being in its nature incapable of such separate existence as to constitute of itself a business in either a commercial or a legal sense." "In its ultimate analysis, the use of trading stamps by a merchant is simply a unique and attractive form of advertising, resorted to for the purpose of increasing trade. In the strict commercial sense of the term 'business,' it is not a business at all. It is simply a mode or manner of business — an instrumentality or incident of a business. When resorted to for the purpose of increasing the business to which it is annexed, it occupies the same relation to that business as newspaper advertising, circulars, dodgers, and the like; and, if the city of Atlanta can classify as a business advertising through the medium of the trading stamp, it can also classify as a business advertising through the journals of the city, or through the medium of a person employed to walk the streets with the sandwich upon which the goods, wares, and merchandise of a merchant are advertised, or the employment of a dwarf who carries upon his shoulder a barrel upon which the wares of a merchant are advertised, and who stops at every street corner and seats himself upon it." These cases, it may be remarked, are among the earlier ones to reach the courts where the question was presented; but neither the reasoning on which they were based nor the unquestioned ability of the courts pronouncing the decisions seem to have been able to withstand the overwhelming trend of opinion to the opposite view. While we might, were the question one of first impression in the courts, entertain a different opinion, we have felt impelled to follow the great weight of authority and hold the statute unconstitutional, especially in view of the fact that the federal courts have shown an inclination to hold the statute in contravention of the constitution of the United States." In Lansburgh v. District of Columbia, supra, "the decision seems to be based upon facts, tending to show a lottery in the manner the stamp business was there conducted, which do not exist in this case, and cannot be judicially found to exist as a matter of speculation or inference. The case of Humes v. Ft. Smith, 93 Fed. 857, which adopts the reasoning in Lansburgh v. District of Columbia, relates to a regulation, not the prohibition, of the stamp business." Per Walker, J., in State v. Ramseyer, 73 N. H. 31, 39, 58 Atl. 958. The Lansburgh and Humes cases have been frequently criticized, disapproved, or distinguished in later cases. Interference with lawful business.—A statute forbidding any person to sell, give away, or distribute any stamp, coupon, or other device which will enable a purchaser of property to demand or receive from another person any article of merchandise other than that actually sold to such purchaser, and further prohibiting any person other than a vendor from delivering to any person any article of merchandise other than that actually sold upon the presentation of any such stamp, coupon, or other device, violates the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States and also R. I. Const. § 10, art. 1, declaring that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall not be deprived of life, liberty, or property unless by the law of the land. State v. Dalton, 22 R. I. 77, 46 Atl. 234, 84 Am. St. Rep. 818, 48 L. R. A. 775. A statute, prohibiting gift enterprises and thereby forbidding transactions not different in principle from contracts of sale, within the constitutional rights of persons to possess and acquire property, to transact legitimate business, and to buy and sell and get gain, is violative of Declaration of Rights, art. 1, and the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution. In re Opinion of Justices, (Mass. 1911) 94 N. E. 848. So long as his manner of conducting his business does not offend public morals and work an injury to the public, it is his constitutional right to pursue, on terms equal to that allowed to others in like business, even though his methods may have a tendency to draw trade to him, to the detriment of competitors. Montgomery v. Kelly, 142 Ala. 552, 38 So. 67, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43, 70 L. R. A. 209; Ex p. Holland, 147 Cal. 763, 82 Pac. 429, 2 L. R. A. N. The scheme of giving trading stamps with sales of goods is not unlawful, as demoralizing to legitimate business. State v. Dodge, 76 Vt. 197, 56 Atl. 983. It may be that the trading stamp business tends to demoralize trade. It may be that people in moderate or straitened circumstances are prone to purchase beyond their means by the incitement of a gift after a stated amount has been expended. The farmer who attends an auction sale is often disposed to buy what he does not need, led along by the competition in the bidding or by the fact that time is allowed on the purchase. If a grocer of the city of Rochester should reduce the price of flour or coffee below cost it might tend to the demoralization of the grocery trade in that city and would certainly be exasperating to his competitors. These slight derelictions may be imprudent, but they are not the subject of legislative control. It is fundamental that the widest scope is accorded to the individual in the prosecution of his business, if only that business be lawful and be conducted in a lawful manner. Graduation of taxes.— The general assembly, by Act No. 47 of 1904, divided trading stamp companies and dealers issuing stamps to merchants or dealers into three classes. By that act, where the gross annual receipts are more than two hundred thousand dollars, the license is fixed at ten thousand dollars; where the gross annual receipts are one hundred and fifty thousand dollars or more, and less than two hundred thousand dollars, the license is fixed at seven thousand five hundred or a municipality under delegated authority[31] may, with the object of raising revenue or of regulation, or both, grant licenses to trading stamp companies for the carrying on of their business by selling stamps to merchants, the license-fee must be reasonable, and not excessive or oppressive,[32] must not be really intended to prohibit the business,[33] and must not infringe the constitutional rights and privileges of the company taxed or licensed.[34]

2. MERCHANTS USING TRADING STAMPS. The power to impose a license fee or tax upon merchants who give trading stamps in connection with their business has been generally denied,[35] but in a few cases recognized.[36] Ordinances imposing license fees or taxes upon such merchants have been declared invalid as abridging constitutional rights and privileges,[37] as constituting double taxation,[38] as taxing dollars; where the gross annual receipts are one hundred thousand dollars or less, the license is fixed at five thousand dollars. It cannot be said therefore that there was no graduation of the licenses for corporations or parties engaged in that business. State v. Merchants' Trading Co., 114 La. 529, 38 So. 443. The defense made by defendant (a trading stamp company) to the payment of a license-tax upon its business, that the statute imposing the license was unconstitutional because licenses upon that business were not graduated as required by article 229 of the constitution of 1898, is not well grounded. They were in fact graduated. State v. Merchants' Trading Co., supra.

Uniformity of taxation.— A city ordinance, imposing upon persons engaged in the business of furnishing trading stamps to merchants to be distributed among their customers for use in the purchase of other merchandise, a larger tax than that imposed upon merchants carrying on an ordinary mercantile business, is not violative of the constitutional provision requiring uniformity of taxation. Gamble v. Montgomery, 147 Ala. 682, 39 So. 353.

IV. CONTRACT BETWEEN COMPANY AND SUBSCRIBER.[43]

From the inevitable and necessary course of business there must be certain restrictions on dealings in the stamps.[44] The trading stamp company usually enters into a special contract with the subscribers as to the title [45] and use of the trading stamps furnished to them.[46] Contracts restricting the use, disposal, and transfer of trading stamps,[47] making them good only for

In Sandels & H. Dig. Ark. § 5132, authorizing cities to tax, license, and suppress certain occupations named, among them "gift enterprises," such terms mean schemes for the distribution of property into which some element of chance enters, and the statute does not confer power on a city to impose a license-tax upon the occupation of selling trading stamps to merchants, which are given by them to cash customers as a premium, and redeemed by the seller in merchandise at their face value in whatever sums presented by such customers. It is the essence of the company's business that its subscribers shall get the full benefit of its methods of advertising and assistance. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Weber, 161 Fed. 219.

The nature of the business requires that there should be a certain monopoly. If the stamps were on the market generally, thus opening the business extensively, no merchant would have any inducement to deal with the complainant. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Temple, 137 Fed. 992.

The company may dispose of it on such terms as it sees fit. It may in the first instance restrict the right to issue it for advertising purposes to such persons as it may select, and to such persons as are willing to pay for it. The public is entitled to receive it upon the terms offered, namely, that it is exchangeable for goods. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 Fed. 833.

When they are issued without limitation on the power of the holders, who have acquired them as premiums from merchants with cash purchases, to transfer them, the company issuing them has no power, by a subsequent change of its plans and contracts with its customers, to limit the transferable quality of those previously issued, which have redemption purposes,[48] or making them non-transferable on their face,[49] are valid and lawful contracts, and not contrary to public policy.[50] Under the usual contract, title to the stamp does not vest in the subscribing merchant who issues it, but remains in the trading stamp company until it has been issued in regular course of business;[51] the stamp, once issued, represents so much advertising furnished and paid for; it then is functus officio as a token of the sale and use of so much advertising.[52]

Their non-transferability is an essential element of their value, both to complainant and its subscribers. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Weber, 161 Fed. 219. While a transfer of ordinary property by the owner upon any terms usually deprives other persons of no rights, this is not always the case with the trading stamps. While it may be transferred in any way which confines its use within the purpose for which it was issued, it may not be transferred in such a way as to destroy its value as an instrument of special trade advantage or advertising, or as to deprive the company which created the value of the stamp, and which has assumed the obligation to redeem it, of its right to compensation for expenditures and for redeeming the stamps. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 Fed. 833.

By the very nature of the business, the stamps are not intended to be dealt with by the public generally, and are not transferable in the general and ordinary sense of the word. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Temple, 137 Fed. 992. It represents a somewhat complicated transaction, and, from its nature, I think there are necessary limitations upon the modes in which it may be transferred. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 Fed. 833.

Ownership of stamps.— By extensive advertising, by promises to the public, by the exhibition of goods, by the circulating of books, like exhibit C, giving a general description of the business, the Sperry & Hutchinson Company creates a demand for the trading stamp. 54. Sperry, etc., Co. v. O'Neill-Adams Co., 185 Fed. 231.

Waiver of breach.— Where, by reason of a temporary injunction, defendant was prevented from carrying out a part of a trading stamp contract with plaintiff, the fact that plaintiff after the issuance of the injunction continued to buy stamps from defendant under the contract prior to the injunction being made permanent did not waive defendant's breach, which was continued on each succeeding day after the injunction was made permanent. Sperry, etc., Co. v. O'Neill-Adams Co., 185 Fed. 231.

Defenses.— Where a contract to furnish plaintiff with trading stamps to advertise its business provided that plaintiff should have the right to add at its own expense such advertising as it might desire in any stamp books or directories of the stamp company which were distributed from plaintiff's store, "such advertising not to be detrimental to the interests of the stamp company," plaintiff was not precluded from suing defendant for breach of its contract arising out of its inability to carry out the same owing to a contract previously made with the S company, as well as the waiver of the right to sue,[55] damages recoverable,[56] evidence admissible in such actions,[57] and the trial of such actions[58] are governed by the rules applicable to other civil actions for damages for breaches of contracts.

V. INJUNCTIONS.[59]

A. In Favor of Trading Stamp Companies. In the exercise of their jurisdiction with regard to unfair trade and fraudulent business methods,[60] courts of equity will, on a proper showing made by a trading stamp company, grant an because certain advertisements put out by plaintiff after the making of the contract with defendant indicated the nature of its contract, from which the S company derived knowledge of a violation of its rights in the making of the contract between plaintiff and defendant, resulting in injunction proceedings. Sperry, etc., Co. v. O'Neill-Adams Co., 185 Fed. 231.

55 Sperry, etc., Co. v. O'Neill-Adams Co., 185 Fed. 231.

Withholding payment due.— Where a trading stamp contract bound plaintiff to pay for stamps purchased during one month on or before the 15th of the succeeding month, and on Jan. 15, 1909, it was manifest that defendant had broken the contract and intended to continue doing so, plaintiff lost none of its rights to sue defendant for such breach by withholding the instalment due on January 15th for stamps purchased as security for damages it might expect to recover in such action. Sperry, etc., Co. v. O'Neill-Adams Co., 185 Fed. 231.

56. Gagnon v. Sperry, etc., Co., 206 Mass. 547, 92 N. E. 761; Sperry, etc., Co. v. O'Neill-Adams Co., 185 Fed. 231. See DAMAGES, 13 Cyc. 1.

Measure of damages.— Where, in an action for breach of a trading stamp contract, there was no proof from which an intelligent estimate of possible profits could be made, but it appeared that plaintiff had expended over twenty thousand dollars in providing machinery, space, etc., for carrying on the work, the court properly limited plaintiff to a recovery of such expenses, and directed a verdict for that amount. Sperry, etc., Co. v. O'Neill-Adams Co., 185 Fed. 231.

Loss of profits.— Where the business of a grocer, prior to his use of trading stamps, was small and largely on credit, while after he began to use the stamps his trade greatly increased, with a greater proportion of cash sales, and the amount and nature of the business continued as long as he distributed stamps, and when he discontinued the distribution thereof his sales rapidly changed in amount and kind to the condition in which they were before the contract for stamps, and the consideration held out by the stamp company to induce the grocer to contract for the stamps was that by distribution thereof his business would be more profitable, the jury could find, in the absence of other satisfactory cause, that the increase in the sales was due to the distribution of stamps, and that the sudden fall was the natural and probable consequence of the breach of the contract, so that loss of profits could be recovered so far as the evidence showed loss of profits. Gagnon v. Sperry, etc., Co., 206 Mass. 547, 92 N. E. 761.

57. Gagnon v. Sperry, etc., Co., 206 Mass. 547, 92 N. E. 761. See EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 821, 17 Cyc. 1.

Evidence as to profits.— In an action for breach of contract to furnish trading stamps to a grocer, evidence of what percentage of the receipts in the business was profit was admissible, as estimating the profits of the business. Gagnon v. Sperry, etc., Co., 206 Mass. 547, 92 N. E. 761.

Opinion evidence.—A statement of a witness, in response to the question as to the effect of the distribution of trading stamps on the trade in a store, that the business increased and that the number of recognized customers increased from sixty-five to one hundred and fifteen, and a statement, in response to the question as to the result observed in lessening or increasing the number of customers after the stamps were exhausted, that the customers ceased on the ground that they did not care to trade at the store, and a greater part of the customers traded elsewhere, were admissible as statements of facts, and not as mere opinions of the witnesses. Gagnon v. Sperry, etc., Co., 206 Mass. 547, 92 N. E. 761.

58. Gagnon v. Sperry, etc., Co., 206 Mass. 547, 92 N. E. 761. See TRIAL, post.

Matters included in charge already given.—Where, in an action for breach of contract to furnish trading stamps to a merchant, there was evidence that a writing was signed by the parties, and that subsequently an agent of defendant took it away that he might print on the back a statement that plaintiff was to have exclusive right on a street, and the court submitted the issue whether it was understood that the contract assigned should become operative from the time of signing, irrespective of the time of the printing of the indorsement, under an instruction permitting the jury to find for plaintiff only if it was found that it was so understood, and the jury found for plaintiff, the refusal to charge that there was no evidence on which a jury could find that an exclusive contract in writing was made, or evidence on which the jury could find that a written contract was executed and delivered, etc., was proper. Gagnon v. Sperry, etc., Co., 206 Mass. 547, 92 N. E. 761.

injunction to restrain the improper use of the company's stamps by third persons,[61] or to restrain a third person from fraudulent interference with the trading stamp company's business,[62] such as interfering with complainant's contracts with subscribing merchants,[63] by inducing the latter to sell stamps in violation of their contracts with the trading stamp company.[64] An injunction will also be granted in a proper case to restrain a merchant, who is not a subscriber, from using the company's trading stamps in connection with his business without the company's permission,[65] including the reissuing of such stamps after they have become functi officio;[66] to restrain a third person from advertising that he will purchase the Fraudulent interference with business.— Defendants, having obtained quantities of such stamps, in part by purchase from merchants, and in part from customers of such merchants to whom they had been regularly issued, gave them out to their own customers in such quantities as they chose. They also advertised that they had special arrangements with complainant by which they were authorized to give double the usual number of stamps with purchases from their store, and offered to redeem any of complainant's stamps either in goods or in cash, whereas in fact they had no contract with complainant. It was held that such manner of advertising was a fraud upon complainant, and entitled it to an injunction restraining the same, as well as the use of the stamps by defendants, in so far as they were acquired by purchase from merchants in violation of their contracts; and that as there was no way of distinguishing between the stamps so acquired, and those obtained from customers of merchants having contracts with complainant who issued them in accordance with the contract, the injunction would be extended to all. 64. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Weber, 161 Fed. 219; Sperry, etc., Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 128 Fed. 800.

Interference with contract.— Complainant company issued trading stamps, which it sold to merchants under a contract that they should be given out to customers as a special discount for cash, one stamp for each ten cents worth of goods purchased. The contract provided that the stamps when so issued would be redeemed by complainant in goods when presented in books containing nine hundred and ninety stamps each, that they should only be given out in the manner prescribed, and that the property in and title to the stamps should remain in complainant. It also issued advertising books to the public, which did not give the terms of the contracts with merchants, or state the requirement that the stamps must be presented in books, but represented that each stamp was redeemable, nor did the stamps show such condition on their face. It was held that the title to the stamps while they remained in the hands of the merchant was a limited one, and he acquired no right to dispose of them otherwise than according to the contract, and that complainant was entitled to an injunction to restrain a defendant from unlawfully interfering with its contracts by inducing merchants to sell the stamps in violation thereof, and by selling the stamps so purchased to other merchants having no contracts with complainant, defendant having full knowledge of the terms of such contracts. Fraudulent advertising see Sperry, etc., Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 128 Fed. 800. Where allegations of a bill to enjoin defendants from using complainants' trading stamps that defendants were engaged in using such stamps in advertising their business without complainants' permission were not denied by any of the answers filed, complainants were entitled to a preliminary injunction. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Brady, 134 Fed. 691.

A preliminary injunction restraining defendants from using trading stamps issued by complainant, based on a finding that a portion of the stamps in defendant's possession were obtained in fraud of complainant's rights, will not be modified on application of defendants to permit them to use stamps acquired by them after its issuance in a different and lawful manner, where the question of their right to use stamps, even when so obtained, is in issue, and was expressly reserved for determination on final hearing. trading stamp company's issued stamps, and from selling stamps so purchased by him as articles of merchandise; [67] to restrain a third person from purchasing [68] or selling,[69] or from purchasing and selling issued stamps of the trading stamp company to merchants who are not subscribers of the trading stamp company; [70] or to restrain a rival trading stamp company from purchasing partly filled books containing complainant's trading stamps.[71] Upon a proper showing on the part of a trading stamp company,[72] or on the part of a merchant who is Stamp when functus officio see supra, text and note 52.

Reissuing trading stamps.— Trading stamps sold to a merchant under a contract that they are to be issued to the merchant's customers for cash purchases, and to be then redeemable at the stamp company's store, are, upon such issue, good only for redemption purposes; hence a person collecting them from such customers with the intent to reissue them, and without having contracted with the stamp company allowing this to be done, may be restrained by injunction. For example, where defendant purchased complainant's trading stamps, among others, for resale, and such purchases seriously interfered with complainant's business in issuing such stamps for redemption in articles of merchandise, etc., complainant was entitled to an injunction prohibiting defendant from advertising that he would purchase complainant's stamps, and from selling stamps so purchased as articles of merchandise. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Temple, 137 Fed. 992.

"This court has no power to restrain him from purchasing all the stamps he sees fit to purchase. It has no power to prevent him from selling stamps to persons who desire to make collections as mere matters of curiosity. It has no power to restrain him from selling them as waste paper, provided they are so canceled or in any way broken up or disfigured that they can be used only as such." Sperry, etc., Co. v. Temple, 137 Fed. 992, 994.

The court "has power to restrain him from selling them as articles of merchandise, and from advertising generally that he will purchase specifically them, or stamps which would include them, as articles of merchandise. It should go to that extent, and protect the complainant's business so far as an injunction of that character would protect it." Sperry, etc., Co. v. Temple, 137 Fed. 992, 994.

Innocent purchaser without notice.—Where defendant had been in complainant's employment long enough to know that the necessities of complainant's business in selling and redeeming trading stamps required that such stamps should not be dealt in by the public generally, he was not an innocent purchaser without notice in purchasing issued stamps for resale. Complainant was entitled to protection by injunction against a rival in the business, which sent out agents to purchase or exchange its own stamps for partly filled books containing complainant's stamps, some of which were again resold at a low price, materially interfering with complainant's business. a subscriber of the trading stamp company,[73] an injunction may issue to enjoin the collection of a tax imposed under an invalid ordinance,[74] or to prevent the passage of an ultra vires ordinance taxing merchants who use trading stamps in connection with their business.[75] However, in one case it has been held that where the obligation represented by a trading stamp is, by the contract between the trading stamp company as the maker and the merchants who buy them from the maker, made assignable without limitation except as to the minimum quantity presented at one time after having been regularly issued by the merchants to their customers, the trading stamp company could not, in the absence of special legislation in behalf of such business,[76] prevent the use by a merchant not a customer of the company of such stamps as may have been given by the customers of the stamp company to dealers and traders with them in pursuance of the contract of the company with its customers, although such use by the merchant be injurious to the business of the trading stamp company.[77]

It is for the legislature, and not the courts, to create new laws to protect new schemes of business. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Hertzberg, 69 N. J. Eq. 264, 60 Atl. 368.

77. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Hertzberg, 69 N. J. Eq. 264, 265, 60 Atl. 368, where complainant sought to restrain defendant from using in his business "or giving to persons who may trade or deal with him, any of the complainant's trading stamps . . . except such trading stamps as said defendant may lawfully obtain from the complainant, or use in his business with its consent, and except such trading stamps as may have been given by the customers of the complainant to dealers and traders with them in pursuance of the contract of complainant with such customers."

The court of chancery has no jurisdiction to issue a preliminary injunction where complainant rests his case on a rule of law, as distinguished from a principle of equity, that is unsettled and doubtful; and hence, assuming it to be a doubtful legal proposition whether a trading stamp company is entitled to control the right of transfer attaching to stamps issued by it after they have passed to customers of merchants who have purchased them, in the absence of limitation on the transferable character of the stamps, still a preliminary injunction cannot be issued to prevent a merchant from using such stamps as may have been given by the customers of a trading stamp company to dealers and traders with them in pursuance of the contract of the trading stamp company with its customers, especially in the absence of allegation that the defendant is not responsible for any amount of damages which the complainant could recover against him in an action at law. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Hertzberg, 69 N. J. Eq. 264, 60 Atl. 368.

There is no presumption that any particular scheme or plan of business, although lawful, is necessary, or even specifically advantageous, to the growth of commerce and the advance of civilization, and hence the trading stamp business is not per se one which the courts must protect. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Hertzberg, 69 N. J. Eq. 264, 60 Atl. 368.

Title retained by company.—Where the title to the paper on which the evidence of a transferable chose in action is imprinted by the owner of the paper and the maker of the instrument is retained by the maker as in the case of trading stamps, such retention of title to the paper does not interfere with the use of the paper as the token or evidence of the chose in action, and cannot, in a court of equity, be asserted adversely to the interests of the holder of the chose. Sperry, etc., Co. v. Hertzberg, 69 N. J. Eq. 264, 60 Atl. 368.

45. Standard Dict. [quoted in Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Boyle, 115 Ga. 836, 840, 42 S. E. 242, 59 L. R. A. 104].

"The genus tramp, in this country, is a public enemy. He is numerous and he is dangerous. He is a nomad, a wanderer on the face of the earth, with his hand against every honest man, woman and child in so far as they do not, promptly and fully, supply his demands. He is a thief, a robber, often a murderer, and always a nuisance. He does not belong to the working classes, but is an idler; he does not work because he despises work. It is a fixed principle with him that, come what may, he will not work. He is so low in the scale of humanity that he is without that not uncommon virtue among the low of honor among thieves. He will steal from a fellow tramp, if in need of what that fellow has, and will resort to violence when that is necessary." State v. Hogan, 63 Ohio St. 202, 215, 58 N. E. 572, 81 Am. St. Rep. 626, 52 L. R. A. 863.

"Because a man is a tramp he is not necessarily dangerous. The idea conveyed to the mind by the word is that simply of an idle, worthless fellow who wanders about the country seeking to secure a living without toil." Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Boyle, 115 Ga. 836, 840, 42 S. E. 242, 59 L. R. A. 104, where it was held that there was no presumption that tramps caught stealing a ride and brought into a train under arrest were characters so dangerous as to make it altogether unsafe for any person to be lodged in the same car with them, where it was said that stealing a ride although a crime was only a misdemeanor.

Distinguished from vagrant.—Under statutory definitions of the term it seems that while all tramps are vagrants all vagrants are not tramps. Des Moines v. Polk County, 107 Iowa 525, 532, 78 N. It is "a relative term, which, in the absence of an inflexible statutory or legislative definition, may be the source of much vexation and uncertainty." Wankon v. Fisk, 124 Iowa 464, 468, 100 N. W. 475.

"Transient foreigner" in Spanish law is one who visits the country without the intention of remaining. Yates v. Iams, 10 Tex. 168, 170.

"Transient merchant" is a transitory or temporary trader who has no intention of locating permanently (State v. Parr, 109 Minn. 147, 150, 123 N. W. 408, 134 Am. St. Rep. 759, where "permanent merchant" is distinguished); one who goes from place to place, taking with him the chattels which he offers for sale or in which he deals or trades, a person who conducts his business substantially the same as a peddler (Wausau v. Heideman, 119 Wis. 244, 247, 96 N. W. 549, where transient merchant, trader, or dealer is so defined, and where it is held that a person who as agent merely solicits orders for goods for his principal, whether by sample or otherwise, is not included by the terms). "The occupation of the itinerant or transient merchant, the mode of conducting it, closely resemble the business of hawkers and peddlers, and the methods generally practiced by them in disposing of their goods and wares. The transient merchant has no fixed place of business, but migrates from town to town, remaining only long enough to dispose of his stock of goods. He is usually a stranger in the community where he offers his goods and makes his sales, and is often wholly irresponsible. Tempting advertisements and extravagant representations in regard to the character of his stock and the prices at which it will be sold are calculated to create excitement and to deceive the unwary, who are generally without redress for the impositions practiced upon them." Levy v. State, 161 Ind. 251, 259, 68 N. E. 172. The term relates to the character of the business carried on and does not have reference to the residence of the individual. Ottumwa v. Zekind, 95 Iowa 622, 624, 64 N. W. 646, 58 Am. St. Rep. 447, 29 L. R. A. 734, construing ordinance requiring a license from all transient merchants. "Transient vender of merchandise," as used in municipal ordinance relating to licenses see Waterloo v. Heely, 81 Ill. App. 310, 315; Twining v. Elgin, 38 Ill. App. 356, 361.

Transient dealer or trader.— The ordinary meaning of the term is one who goes from place to place carrying goods for the purpose of selling, trading, or dealing in the same, as distinct from one who does the same kind of business without traveling about. Wausau v. Heideman, 119 Wis. 244, 247, 96 N. W. 549.

TRANSMISSION. The act of transmitting, or the state of being transmitted; transmittal; transference.[98] Applied to a telegraph message, a term which includes delivery.[99] In the civil law, the right which heirs or legatees may have of passing to their successors the inheritance or legacy to which they were entitled, if they happen to die without exercising their rights.[1] (Transmission: Of Deposition, see DEPOSITIONS, 13 Cyc. 961. Of Telegraph or Telephone Message, see TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES, 37 Cyc. 1665.)

TRANSMIT. A word which is sometimes used in two senses.[2] First, to send from one person to another; to communicate;[3] to send from one person or place to another;[4] to convey, to transfer, to impart.[5] Second, to suffer to pass through.[6] (Transmit: Capacity of Bastards to, see BASTARDS, 5 Cyc. 642. See also TRANSMISSION.)

TRANSMITTER. Applied to a telephone, the mouth piece, into which words are spoken, with the diaphragm, etc., immediately connected with it.[7]

TRANSMUTATION. The change of one species into another; the change from one nature, form or substance into another.[8]

TRANSPORT.[9] To remove;[10] to carry or convey from one place to another;[11] to carry, bear or convey from one place or country to another;[12] to carry; to another; it may apply to the expression of the same thoughts in other words of the same language." Rasmussen v. Baker, 7 Wyo. 117, 141, 50 Pac. 819, 38 L. R. A. 773.

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A. In General. Treason is a breach of allegiance,[1] and, on account of self-preservation being the first duty of government, is regarded as the highest crime known to the law.[2]

Its gravity is shown by the fact that it is the only crime defined in the constitution of the United States. U. S. v. Greathouse, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,254, 2 Abb. 364, 4 Sawy.

B. Specific Acts Enumerated in Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. While various and numerous acts against the sovereign and the government are classed as treason under the statutes of England [3] and Canada,[4] the constitution of the United States itself defines and limits the crime by declaring that "treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort," [5] thus not only abolishing and refusing to recognize petit [6] and what is commonly known as Treason as one of the three classes of crime see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 131.

3. English statutes.—Omitting certain provisions which have been repealed by 9 Geo. IV, c. 31; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 8; and other statutes, the principal English statute (25 Edw. III, c. 2) declares that treason consists (1) in compassing or imagining the death of the king or queen, or their eldest son and heir; (2) in violating the king's companion, or the king's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the king's eldest son and heir; (3) in levying war against the king in his realm; (4) in adhering to the king's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm or elsewhere; and (5) slaying the chancellor, treasurer, or the king's justices of the one bench or the other, justices in eyre, or justices of assize, and all other justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places doing their offices. Ludlam's Trial, 32 How. St. Tr. 1135. The crime has been further extended in England by later statutes (see Maclane's Trial, 26 How. St. Tr. 721), particularly by 11 Vict. c. 12, § 1, which in effect declares it to be treason for any person or persons, within the realm or without, to compass, imagine, invent, devise, or intend death or destruction, or any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, imprisonment or restraint, of the person of the king, or his heirs or successors, and such compassings, imaginings, inventions, devices or intentions, or any of them, to express, utter, or declare, by publishing any printing or writing, or by any overt act or deed.

4. The Canadian statutes define treason to be (a) the act of killing his majesty, or doing him any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, and the act of imprisoning or restraining him, or (b) the forming and manifesting by any overt act an intention to do so; or (c) the act of killing the eldest son and heir apparent of his majesty, or the queen consort of any king of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or (d) the forming and manifesting, by an overt act, an intention to do so; or (e) conspiring with any person to kill his majesty, or to do him any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, or conspiring with any person to imprison or restrain him; or (f) levying war against his majesty either with intent to depose him from the style, honour, and royal name of the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or of any other of his majesty's dominions or countries, or in order, by force or constraint, to compel his majesty to change his measures or counsels, or in order to intimidate or overawe both houses or either house of parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain or of Canada; or (g) conspiring to levy war against his majesty with any such intent or for any such purpose as aforesaid; or (h) instigating any foreigner with force to invade the said United Kingdom or Canada or any other of the dominions of his majesty; or (i) assisting any public enemy at war with his majesty in such war by any means whatsoever; or (j) violating, whether with her consent or not, a queen consort, or the wife of the eldest son and heir apparent, for the time being, of the king or queen regnant. 6. State v. Bilansky, 3 Minn. 246, holding that, although the statute of 1851 (Rev. St. 523, § 14) in express terms abolished the distinction between murder and petit treason, there was nothing for the statute to operate upon.

In England the crime of petit treason at common law was involved in some uncertainty and comprehended numerous cases, but by 25 Edw. III, c. 2, they were reduced to three heads: (1) Where a servant killed his master; (2) where a wife killed her husband; (3) where an ecclesiastic killed his superior. See State v. Bilansky, 3 Minn. 246; CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 131. However, that portion of the statute relating to petit treason was repealed by 9 Geo. IV, c. 31; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 8, in which offenses constructive treason,[7] but leaving congress without power to enlarge or restrict the offense.[8]

II. WHO MAY COMMIT.

Treason being a breach of allegiance,[9] it can be committed against a government only by one who owes allegiance, either perpetual or temporary, thereto.[10] Within the meaning of this rule, a citizen owes allegiance to his government so long as its courts of justice remain open to maintain peace and protect him.[11] Treason, however, differs from other crimes and offenses,[12] in that there are no accessaries, all persons being regarded as principals whose acts would, in the case of a felony, make them accessaries, such as persons who are present and are aiding, abetting, counseling, or countenancing the act,[13] or who are absent from the scene of action, but take some part in the conspiracy, no matter how small.[14]

III. AGAINST WHAT SOVEREIGNTY IT MAY BE COMMITTED.

To constitute treason against a particular government, the treasonable act must be aimed at that government. Thus, a treasonable act directed exclusively against the sovereignty of a particular state is not treason against the United States,[15] formerly constituting petit treason are declared to be murder only. See HOMICIDE, 21 Cyc. 661 text and note 15.

nor is a treasonable act against the United States treason against one of the states.[16]

IV. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.[17]

A. In General — 1. INTENT. As it is essential to the crime of treason that there be not only an intention to overthrow the government or defeat the execution of its laws, but that the intention be of a general, public, and universal, instead of a local, private, or transitory nature,[18] the intent of the parties doing alleged treasonable acts is highly important in determining whether such acts are treason, felony, or no crime at all.[19]

2. OVERT ACT.[20] The crime of treason is not complete until there is an overt act, it being not sufficient that there exist a mere conspiracy to overthrow the government,[21] or an intention to commit treason,[22] or treasonable words, whether oral, written or printed.[23]

B. Levying War — 1. IN GENERAL. Our constitutional definition of treason being borrowed from the ancient English statute,[24] the expression "levying war" contained therein must be interpreted and applied in the same sense which it bore in that law.[25] So interpreted, it means that a mere conspiracy to overthrow the government by force is not sufficient to constitute the crime of treason by levying war, but that there must be an overt act of actual levying of war.[26] More

The success of the conspiracy does not, it seems, render the acts done any less treasonable. Keppel v. Petersburg R. Co., 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,722, Chase 167. Thus, the combination of a body of men, with the design of seizing, and the actual seizing of forts and other public property of the United States, is a levying of war against the specifically, there must be an actual assemblage of men for the purpose of executing a treasonable design by force.[27] While it is not essential that any blow be struck, provided the assemblage is in condition to use force, either by virtue of its being armed with military weapons or by being so strong in numbers as to do away with the necessity of weapons, and is actuated with an intention to use force,[28] it is essential that such body of men have an intent to carry out their purpose by violence.[29]

2. Forcible Opposition to Public Law. The expression "levying war," in the sense in which it is used in the constitutional provision defining treason, includes not only formal or declared war, but also any forcible opposition, as the result of a combination, to the execution of any public law of the United States.[30] To constitute the crime of treason, under this interpretation of the phase "levying war," there must be a combination of the following elements: (1) A combination, or conspiracy, by which different individuals are united in one common purpose;[31] (2) a common purpose to prevent the execution of some public law of the United

United States, and is treason. In re Charge to Grand Jury, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,270, 4 Blatchf. 518. And see U. S. v. Mitchell, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,788, 2 Dall. 348, 1 L. ed. 410.

No. 15,788, 2 Dall. 348, 1 L. ed. 410), as the constitutional definition of treason is broad enough to include all those who enlist in or join a hostile army or assemblage after war has begun (In re Charge to Grand Jury, 30 Fed. C. Adhering to Enemies, Giving Them Aid and Comfort. The courts have experienced some difficulty in specifying the precise acts which constitute treason against the United States by "adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort," but have construed the expression to clearly include such acts as furnishing the enemy with arms, troops, supplies, information, or means of transportation,[34] and to include in a general way any act indicating disloyalty and sympathy with the enemy, and which is directly in furtherance of their hostile designs, regardless of whether the motive prompting the act is merely sympathy or pecuniary gain.[35] It seems that it is not essential, however, that the effort to aid be successful, provided overt acts are done which, if successful, would advance the interests of the enemy.[36]

Who embraced within term "enemies."— Although the distinction is not recognized in other cases, except to a limited extent in one which holds that, in case of rebellion, citizens or subjects residing within the insurrectionary district who are not implicated in the rebellion are not enemies (In re Charge to Grand Jury, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,271, 5 Blatchf. 549), it has been held that the word "enemies," as used in our constitutional definition of treason, applies only to the subjects of a foreign power in a state of open hostility to the United States, and that it does not embrace rebels in insurrection against their own government (U. S. v. Greathouse, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,254, 2 Abb. 364, 4 Sawy. 457). For a general definition of enemy see 15 Cyc. 1046.

V. DEFENSES.

Treason being such a heinous crime, the courts have been loath to recognize defenses thereto, it being held that the only defense allowable is duress or compulsion, and that only when the fear produced is one of immediate death.[37] Naturalization in the country of an enemy during time of war is no defense,[38] nor is infancy, provided the person has arrived at years of discretion,[39] nor a letter of marque which has not been recognized,[40] nor a military parole, after the war has ended.[41]

VI. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

A. Jurisdiction and Preliminary Proceedings.[42] While the jurisdiction of state courts over cases of treason against the state depends entirely upon the statutes of the state,[43] cases of treason against the United States are not cognizable in the state courts,[44] but are triable only by the United States courts located in the state and district wherein the alleged crime was committed.[45] To warrant the arrest and commitment for trial of a person, for treason, there must be a charge or affidavit alleging all the elements of the offense,[46] supported by proof showing probable cause that the crime has been committed.[47] Under both the

No. 16,096, 3 Wash. 234, holding that treason is not committed by a prisoner of war who goes from the enemy's squadron to the shore for the purpose of peaceably procuring provisions for the enemy and with the intention of securing his ransom or escaping, but who fails to either procure or carry any provisions toward the enemy with the intent of supplying them.

Persuading another to enlist, however, is not a crime, unless followed by actual enlistment of the person persuaded, under a state statute providing that it shall be high treason to aid or assist any enemies at open war with the state by persuading others to enlist for that purpose. Duress or compulsion as excuse for crime generally see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 161.

Specific applications of rule.—The rule stated in the text has been held to apply even where the compulsion was exercised by a superior military official (U. S. v. Greiner, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,262, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 396), or by a husband or wife (see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 161; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 21 Cyc. 1355).

Transfer from one federal court to another.—After a person has been acquitted on a charge of treason, but is still in the custody of the marshal and bound to answer an indictment for a misdemeanor, the court has no authority to send him to another district to stand trial on another indictment for treason. U. S. v. Burr, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,694. Where a person is arrested in a district other than the one in which the alleged treason was committed, and the courts of the latter district are not open so as to insure a speedy trial, the court will neither detain the prisoner nor order his removal to the district where the offense was committed, but will only require security to keep the peace. Same proof as on trial not required.—The constitutional requirement that there be two witnesses to the overt act is not applicable

English and United States statutes, a person accused of treason is entitled to a copy of the jury panel and the indictment.[48]

B. Indictment.[49] Although an indictment is sufficient if it follows the language of the statute under which it is drawn, without employing the phrase "levying war," [50] an overt act must be charged with some particularity as to place and circumstances, a general charge of levying war not being sufficient.[51] It must also be alleged that accused owed allegiance,[52] but the day alleged in the indictment is not material,[53] nor is it objectionable that different overt acts are charged in one count.[54]

C. Evidence.[55] After the constitutional requirement that there be testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act[56] has been satisfied by the introduction of the testimony of two witnesses to the overt act charged in the indictment, and only then,[57] it is proper to admit evidence of a collateral or corroborative nature, such as the confession of accused to the same or another species of treason,[58]

The rule is otherwise under the English statutes which provide that no person shall be indicted for high treason but upon the testimony of two lawful witnesses to the same overt act, or the testimony of one witness to the overt act and the testimony of another witness to another overt act of the same treason. Proof of overt act of co-conspirator.— If persons collect together to act for one and the same common end, any act done by any one of them, with intent to effectuate such common end, is a fact that may be given in evidence against all of them (Fries' Case, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,127); and, although one overt act in the county, or other venue where the offense is laid, must be proved, it is sufficient to prove an overt act of one of defendant's co-conspirators in such county (Reg. v. Meany, 10 Cox C. C. 506, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 500, 15 Wkly. Rep. 1082).

Proof of one of several overt acts alleged in the indictment is sufficient, where all the acts alleged are treasonable. Fries' Case, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,127.

or evidence of other overt acts, although done at another time or place,[59] especially when such evidence tends to show or explain defendant's intent or purpose, as any evidence on that point is admissible [60] at any time during the trial,[61] on account of direct proof of intent being unnecessary and often impossible to obtain.[62]

D. Trial and Punishment. Although a person cannot be convicted of treason in advising and procuring a warlike assemblage until after the conviction of one of those charged with the overt act,[63] and although proof of intention, being properly part of the evidence in chief, cannot be given in rebuttal,[64] such proof may be given in evidence before proof of the overt act.[65] It is the function of the jury to consider, under instructions from the court, the disputed questions of fact and determine whether the crime of treason has been committed.[66] The statutory punishment for treason in the United States is death or, at the discretion of the court, imprisonment at hard labor for not less than five years, together with a minimum fine of ten thousand dollars, and incapacity to hold any office under the United States.[67]

VII. MISPRISION OF TREASON.

Under an express provision of the United States statutes,[68] persons who have knowledge of the commission of acts of treason and do not disclose their knowledge to the proper officials at the earliest opportunity are guilty of misprison of treason and subject to fine and imprisonment.[69]

I. HISTORY AND DEFINITION.

From time immemorial treaties, leagues, and compacts have been made between states, tribes, and rulers.[1] There are recorded instances of treaty-making during the entire known history of the world, from the time that Joshua made the treaty with the Gibeonites until the present time.[2] A treaty is primarily a compact between independent nations,[3] and has been briefly defined as a contract between nations;[4] also, as an agreement or contract between two or more

Thus where a treaty has already been made between two or more powers, and another power desires to enter into similar treaty stipulations, it can, if the original treaty so provides, accede to the existing treaty. It happens most frequently where there is a general convention to which it is desired that all the nations shall be parties, and in which provision is generally made for accession of non-signatory powers. See the case of the Geneva Convention (Red Cross) of 1864, to which the United States acceded by a declaration, March 1, 1882. U. S. Tr. & Conv. (1889) p. 1150; U. S. Treaties in Force (1899), p. 665. There have been other accessions to treaties between the United States and one other nation, such as when Württemberg acceded in 1853 by a declaration to the treaty of 1852 between the United States and Prussia. A modus vivendi is an agreement between two or more nations as to their conduct in regard to matters in dispute pending the adjustment thereof. That is to say, it is a temporary treaty or convention limited to a period which as a general rule is very brief. Butler Treaty-Making Power, note to § 463.

Protocol has been defined as: "A document serving as the preliminary to, or opening of, any diplomatic transaction." Black L. Dict.

"A diplomatic expression which signifies the register on which the deliberations of a conference, etc., are inscribed, whence the word comes to signify the deliberations themselves." Bouvier L. Dict.

"It is used to indicate a preliminary treaty, as the instrument of Aug. 12, 1898, entered into between the United States and Spain." Bouvier L. Dict.

Informal diplomatic arrangements generally have been described as protocols and sometimes the word might include those of a more formal nature on which action is taken, such as the reference of claims to arbitration, and the agreement as to the basis of future negotiations. Horse Shoe Reef in Lake Erie was transferred to this government by protocol, and no formal agreement ever made, but the United States has continued to maintain a light-house in accordance with the agreement ever since. U. S. Tr. & Conv. (1889) p. 444.

Protocols of agreement as to the basis of future negotiations are clearly within the executive authority. Devlin Treaty Power, § 71.

Agreements as to when treaties shall be exchanged, and extending the time of treaties, have been regarded as protocols, but a protocol to determine the meaning of a clause in a treaty made after it is ratified, or as to the method of enforcement of the treaty, cannot be regarded as a part of the treaty unless ratified by the senate. Sponsions have been defined as "agreements or engagements made by certain public officers (as generals or admirals in time of war) in behalf of their governments, either without authority or in excess of the authority under which they purport to be made, and which therefore require an express or tacit ratification." compacts,[12] and cartels.[13] Sometimes such relations are established by reciprocal legislation,[14] or by exchange of diplomatic notes.[15]

II. NATURE AND GROUNDS OF OBLIGATION.

A treaty is in its nature primarily a contract between different nations,[16] and not a legislative act.[17] In the United States, however, it is more than a contract between nations,[18] being, as declared by the constitution,[19] the supreme law of the land,[20] and binding upon all the courts both state and federal,[21] and therefore obligatory upon all the people of the nation so that every citizen is under a duty to observe and respect the law of the treaty.[22] A treaty, therefore, in the United States, provided it is self-executing,[23] and its terms do not import a contract to be performed,[24] but prescribe a rule by which private rights may be determined,[25] is in the nature of a legislative act,[26] and is placed by the constitution upon the same footing as an act of congress,[27] and superior to any state constitution or law.[28] A treaty is consequently as much a part of the law of any state as its own local laws and constitution.[20] As a contract between nations, the treaty depends for its observance and performance upon the honor and integrity of the nations which are parties to it,[30] and for its enforcement in case of infraction upon diplomatic negotiations, international arbitration, or war.[31] But the treaty may give rise to private rights which as between individuals may be enforced by the courts,[32] and in such cases the courts resort to the treaty for a rule of decision as they would to a statute.[33] A nation in making a treaty does not act as the agent or representative of any individuals who may be benefited by it,[34] nor are its citizens or subjects parties to the agreement;[35] and the courts can give no redress to a party who is injured by a failure of a government to observe the terms of a treaty. A party so injured must look to his government for relief.[36]

III. POWER TO MAKE.

A. In General. While the treaty-making power of each state or nation must be determined by its own constitution and fundamental law,[37] the right of making treaties has from the beginning been very generally regarded as an attribute of sovereignty,[38] vested in and exercisable only by the sovereign or highest governmental power;[39] and therefore in nearly all federations the power is vested in the central government to the exclusion of the constituent states.[40] In the United States, the treaty-making power is vested by the constitution,[41] in the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate;[42] and by other provisions of the constitution,[43] the states are expressly prohibited from entering into any treaty, alliance, or confederation,[44] or, without the consent of congress, from entering into any agreement or compact with another state or foreign power.[45]

Compacts and agreements made prior to the constitution are not affected by the prohibition except in so far as their stipulations

The courts have no treaty-making power whatever,[46] and while in their application to private rights, the courts may construe treaties,[47] they cannot in any way alter, amend, add to, or dispense with any of their stipulations or requirements.[48]

B. Subjects of Treaties. Generally speaking the treaty-making power extends to all proper subjects of negotiation between the governments of different nations.[49] As expressed in the constitution of the United States the treaty-making power is in terms unlimited,[50] and subject only to those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the government or its departments and those arising from the nature of the government itself and of that of the states.[51] To what extent it is thus limited has been considerably discussed without being definitely defined,[52] no treaty having ever been declared by the courts to be void.[53] It would seem clear, however, that the treaty power does not extend so far as to authorize what the constitution forbids,[54] or a change in the character of the government or in that of one of the states,[55] and it has also been stated that it would not authorize a cession of any portion of the territory of a state without the consent of that state;[56] but subject to the limitations mentioned it may be said generally to extend to all matters which are proper subjects of negotiation between our government and the governments of other nations,[57] such as matters relating to extradition,[58] property rights and disabilities of aliens,[59] rights, powers, and duties of ambassadors and consuls,[60] and the jurisdiction of consular courts,[61] regulation may be in conflict with the provisions of the constitution or affect subjects placed under the control of congress. Wharton v. Wise, 153 U. S. 155, 14 S. Ct. 783, 38 L. ed. 669. See also Ex p. Marsh, 57 Fed. 719.

of commercial relations with foreign countries,[62] regulation and protection of trade-marks,[63] submission to arbitration of controversies with other governments in which public interests are concerned,[64] and the acquisition of territory.[65] The treaty-making power in the Unites States has been exercised with regard to a large variety of subjects,[66] and at different times pursuant to resolutions of the senate compilations have been made of all the treaties between the United States and other powers.[67]

IV. NEGOTIATION AND RATIFICATION.

The terms of a treaty are ordinarily agreed upon and it is signed by plenipotentiaries or commissioners who are the authorized agents of the contracting powers.[68] After such agreement and signature it must be ratified by the respective governments,[69] which in the United States is done by first referring it to the president who determines whether or not he will submit it to the senate for ratification,[70] and if it is submitted by him it must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the senate.[71] After ratification by each of the contracting powers there must be an exchange of these ratifications,[72] which constitutes the delivery and conclusion of the treaty,[73] and up to this time the treaty is inchoate and may never take effect.[74] In negotiating a treaty the United States does so as a sovereign and not as the agent of any individual or individuals who may be benefited by the result thereof;[75] and the courts have no power to interfere with the negotiation and modification of treaties, this being the prerogative of the executive.[76]

Proceedings in senate.—If the treaty is satisfactory to the president and transmitted by him to the senate it is first submitted to the committee on foreign relations. If reported favorably by the committee it is still necessary for it to be approved by a two-thirds majority of the senate and all questions relating to it are fully open for discussion. Butler Treaty-Making Power, § 465.

The power of the senate is limited to a ratification of such terms as have already been agreed upon between the president acting for the United States and the commissioners of the other contracting power. The senate, while it might refuse its ratification or make such ratification conditional upon the adoption of amendments to a treaty, has no right to ratify the treaty and introduce new terms into it which shall be obligatory upon the other power. V. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

When we speak of "a treaty," we mean an instrument written and executed with the formalities customary among nations,[77] but usage has not prescribed any particular form as being necessary for such an agreement.[78] Letters and replies thereto have been ratified as such;[79] and a written declaration annexed to a treaty before ratification explaining ambiguous language or adding new stipulations is after ratification and exchange of ratifications as binding as if inserted in the body of the instrument.[80] All that is essential is that there shall be a sufficient power in the contracting parties and their mutual consent sufficiently declared;[81] and it is not necessary that each of the contracting parties should possess the same attributes of sovereignty, it being sufficient if each possess the right of self-government and the power to perform the stipulations of the treaty.[82] A treaty to be valid must not of course be in violation of the federal constitution,[83] but when a treaty has been duly executed, ratified, and exchanged, it becomes effective and binding upon the contracting powers and the courts, not only as a contract,[84] but also upon all the states of the Union, and becomes a part of the supreme law of the land,[85] and the courts have no right to annul or disregard any of its provisions unless they violate the constitution of the United States.[86] Where the power to make a treaty exists, the courts cannot inquire whether a treaty has been properly executed,[87] or whether it has been procured by undue influence.[88] The power given to the judiciary to determine the validity of treaties is restricted to questions of form, execution, constitutionality, and effect on individuals within the jurisdiction of the court, and not to questions of a public nature.[89] In other words the court is restricted to what has been termed the "necessary" as distinguished from the "voluntary" validity of the treaty;[90] and the courts have also held that it is for the political department to determine whether a treaty is in existence.[91] So also it is incumbent upon the president and senate to first satisfy themselves as to the authority of representatives of other nations to act for such nations in the capacity of plenipotentiaries, and behind such determinations the courts cannot go.[92]

VI. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.[93]

The construction and operation of treaties viewed as contracts between independent nations are questions for the political departments of the contracting powers and not for the courts;[94] but as treaties in their effect upon private rights are in the nature of legislative acts and binding upon the courts,[95] it is often necessary where such rights are involved for the courts to construe treaties,[96] and they have authority to do so.[97] But the courts can only construe the treaty and cannot in any way alter, add to, or amend it,[98] or annul or disregard any of its provisions unless they violate the constitution,[99] nor can they dispense with any of its conditions or requirements upon any notion of equity, general convenience, or substantial justice.[1] If the terms of the treaty are clear and unambiguous the courts must recognize and enforce it as written,[2] notwithstanding the language of the treaty is inconsistent with the correspondence which preceded it;[3] but if the treaty is open to construction they should endeavor to ascertain and give effect to the inten-admits of two descriptions, necessary and voluntary. By the necessary validity is meant that which results from the treaty having been made by persons authorized by, and for purposes consistent with, the constitution. By voluntary validity is meant that validity which a treaty, become voidable by reason of violation, afterward continues to retain by the silent volition and acquiescence of the nation. It is called voluntary because it entirely depends on the will of the nation, either to let it continue to operate, or to annul and extinguish it. Jones v. Walker, 13 Fed. Cas. tion of the parties,[4] and in so doing will adopt the same general rules which are applicable in the construction of statutes, contracts, and written instruments generally,[5] and particularly those applicable in the construction of contracts between individuals.[6] Various rules have, however, been laid down expressly with reference to the construction of treaties.[7] A treaty should be construed as a whole,[8] and in the light of the circumstances and conditions existing at the time it was entered into,[9] the objects that the parties were desirous of effecting,[10] and their legislation upon the subject;[11] and if practicable it should be construed so as to give a reasonable and sensible meaning to all of its provisions,[12] and so that it may have its effect and not prove vain or nugatory.[13] The treaty should also be given such a construction as will avoid unjust or unreasonable conclusions,[14] and exclude fraud,[15] and such a construction as tends to the common advantage of the contracting parties and tends to place them upon an equality,[16] but not so as to put aliens on a more favorable footing than our own citizens.[17] Treaties should ordinarily be construed liberally,[18] and so where the treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive as to the rights that may be claimed under it and the other liberal, the latter is to be preferred.[19] The construction which has been placed upon the treaty by the parties themselves is also an important consideration,[20] and the courts will ordinarily follow the construction which has been placed upon a treaty by the political department of the government.[21] The words of the treaty are to be taken in their ordinary meaning as understood in the public law of nations,[22] and as applied to the subject-matter in connection with which they are used in the treaty.[23] Where treaties are executed in two languages both are originals and must be construed together.[24] It would be impracticable to attempt to set out the application and construction of the different treaties and treaty provisions which have been before the courts, most of which have been treated elsewhere in this work.[25]

There is this difference, however, that the language of treaties in most instances, as it comes for interpretation and construction, is but a translation from a foreign tongue, and there would be great danger of violating the spirit of such an instrument were the courts to bear too heavily upon the local technical definition and use of a word. Therefore a reasonable, rather than a liberal, construction must be given to agreements solemnly entered into by nations; and there is no authority for reading into an international treaty, under the guise of construction, extraordinary provisions not necessary to give full effect to the intention expressed."

VII. TIME OF TAKING EFFECT.

As between the contracting parties a treaty takes effect, in the absence of any provision to the contrary, from the time it is signed,[26] and its subsequent ratification relates back to that date,[27] so as to render its provisions applicable to acts done by the contracting parties between the dates of signing and ratification.[28] This rule is of course subject to the possibility of non-ratification,[29] and also to any stipulations in the treaty itself as to the time when it shall go into effect,[30] or in regard to the manner in which it shall be ratified [31] or the performance of any conditions precedent,[32] as well as to any amendments made at the time the treaty is submitted for ratification in regard to when it shall become effective.[33] So

The treaty with Cuba by its original terms was to go into effect ten days after the exchange of ratifications, but by virtue also the rule that the treaty takes effect from the time it is signed applies only to the contracting parties and its effect upon national rights.[34] With regard to individual rights a different rule prevails and the treaty is considered as taking effect only from the exchange of ratifications,[35] and does not relate back so as to affect private rights which have vested prior to that date;[36] for although a treaty is the supreme law of the land it does not become such until duly ratified as required by the constitution,[37] and it would be manifestly unjust to hold individuals chargeable with notice of or bound by its provisions until it has been finally concluded and proclaimed.[38]

VIII. RETROACTIVE OPERATION.

Under the general rule as to when a treaty takes effect with regard to private rights,[39] it is held that where rights of succession to realty are given by a treaty it is not retroactive so as to affect the succession of a person dying before the treaty was concluded;[40] but treaties of extradition may and unless otherwise provided do operate retroactively so as to apply to crimes previously committed.[41]

IX. SELF-EXECUTING PROVISIONS.

When a treaty does not require subsequent legislation to render it effective, after ratification it is the law of the land and will be enforced by the courts the same as a federal legislative act;[42] but where a treaty is incomplete within itself and requires subsequent legislation to render it effective, manifestly it cannot be enforced by the courts until such necessary legislation is had;[43] such as, for instance, where an appropriation of money is necessary to carry the treaty into effect, and until congress makes such an appropriation the treaty is incomplete, of the senate amendment providing for its approval by congress, which approval was not given until after the exchange of ratifications, it did not go into effect until Dec. 27, 1903, the date proclaimed by the president of the United States and the president of Cuba for the commencement of its operation. for under the constitution money cannot be appropriated by the treaty-making power.[44] A treaty is to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of congress whenever it operates of itself without the aid of any legislative provision;[45] but when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, or when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political and not the judicial department of the government.[46]

X. DURATION, ABROGATION, AND TERMINATION.

A. In General. Treaties may be terminated in various ways.[47] Thus if a treaty is entered into for a particular period it may be terminated by the expiration of the time limited,[48] or it may be modified or terminated by agreement between the contracting parties,[49] or it may be impliedly repealed or superseded by a later treaty covering the same subject-matter.[50] Provision is also sometimes made in the treaty for its termination by one party on notice to the other;[51] but even where there is no such provision it is legally possible, although it may constitute a breach of the treaty, for one of the parties to abrogate it without the consent or concurrence of the other.[52] A treaty may also be terminated by the absorption of one of the contracting powers into another nationality and the loss of separate existence;[53] but where sovereignty in that respect is not extinguished and the power to execute remains unimpaired, outstanding treaties cannot be regarded as avoided on the ground of impossibility of performance.[54] Treaties may be of such a nature as to their object and import that war will put an end to them,[55] and war of course supersedes treaties of peace and friendship,[56] but war does not always or necessarily dissolve or terminate treaties between the contending powers,[57] and in some cases they are merely suspended,[58] and unless waived or new and repugnant stipulations made will revive upon the cessation of hostilities.[59]

B. Right to Abrogate. Since a treaty is a contract its provisions should be faithfully observed by each of the contracting parties,[60] and not disregarded or abrogated except for good and sufficient reasons;[61] but although the treaty is on its face of indefinite duration, circumstances and conditions may arise which will justify one of the parties in disregarding or abrogating it,[62] as where there has been a failure of consideration,[63] where the state of things which was the basis of the treaty and one of its tacit conditions no longer exists,[64] or where there has been such a change of circumstances as to make its performance impossible or impracticable.[65] So also where one of the parties violates or neglects or refuses to perform the conditions of the treaty, the other may treat the obligation as terminated,[66] but a violation by one party does not of itself terminate or render void the treaty, but merely makes it voidable at the option of the other party.[67]

C. How and By Whom Abrogated. Treaties can be modified, annulled, or abrogated only by those in whom such authority is vested,[68] and not by the courts.[69] In the United States, although the treaty-making power is vested in the president with the consent and approval of the senate,[70] yet as an act of congress is equally the law of the land, and, in case of conflict, will control a prior treaty,[71] it is possible for congress to directly abrogate or indirectly render ineffective the provisions of any treaty.[72] This it may do by a formal act or resolution directly abrogating the treaty,[73] or, indirectly, by the enactment of legislation which is in conflict with the provisions of the treaty,[74] or, where the treaty is not self-executing, by failure to enact legislation necessary to carry it into effect,[75] or by a declaration of war.[76]

D. Powers of Courts. If the political departments of the government see fit to abrogate a treaty, although such action may constitute a breach of moral obligations, the courts have no power to prevent it,[77] or to declare an act of congress unconstitutional or void merely because it violates the obligations of a prior treaty.[78] It is for the executive and legislative departments and not for the judiciary to determine whether a government was justified in disregarding or abrogating the provisions of a treaty,[79] or whether there has been a violation of any of the provisions of the treaty,[80] or whether it has ever been terminated or is still in force.[81]

E. Effect of Abrogation or Termination. The abrogation or termination of a treaty operates like the repeal of a law only upon the future, and does not affect whatever of a permanent character has been executed or vested under it.[82]

XI. Conflict Between Treaties, Constitutions, and Statutes.

A. In General. The federal constitution provides that that instrument and the laws and treaties of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land, and binding upon the judges in every state, anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.[83] By this provision treaties are expressly made superior to both the constitutions and laws of the several states,[84] and while there is no express provision in the constitution as to the effect of conflicts between treaties and acts of congress,[85] they are placed by that instrument upon the same footing, each being declared to be the supreme law of the land,[86] so that neither having any inherent superiority over the other, either may supersede the other, and in case of conflict the one which is later in date will control.[87]

B. Between Different Treaties. A treaty between two nations will supersede or impliedly repeal a former treaty where it covers the whole subject-matter of the former treaty;[88] but the prior treaty will continue in force as to provisions not incorporated in the later treaty, in the absence of express words to the contrary.[89]

C. Between Treaty and Act of Congress — 1. Treaty and Subsequent Act. Under the constitution declaring both treaties and laws of the United States to be the supreme law of the land,[90] treaties and acts of congress are placed upon the same footing,[91] and an act of congress cannot be declared unconstitutional or void merely because it is in conflict with the provisions of a prior treaty.[92] On the contrary, it is always possible for congress by statute to repeal, supersede, or render ineffectual the provisions of a prior treaty,[93] and in all cases of conflict between a treaty and a subsequent act of congress the latter will control,[94] provided the statute is otherwise constitutional.[95] It will not be presumed, however, that congress intended to violate the provisions of a treaty,[96] and the general rule applies that repeals by implication are not favored.[97] The statute and the treaty should therefore, if possible, be so construed that both may stand together and each be given effect,[98] but at the same time the statute must be construed according to its manifest intent,[99] and if the conflict is clear and the statute is the later in date it will control and must be recognized by the courts regardless of political consequences.[1]

2. Treaty and Prior Act. Since a treaty and an act of congress are of equal dignity,[2] it follows that an act of congress may be repealed or superseded by a later treaty,[3] and so where the provision of an act of congress and a subsequent treaty are conflicting, the latter will control,[4] provided the treaty is self-executing;[5] but as in other cases, repeals by implication are not favored,[6] and the statute and

D. Between Treaty and State Constitution or Law — 1. Treaty and State Constitution. party chooses to seek redress,[25] which may in the end be enforced by actual war.[26] With all of this it is obvious that the judicial courts have nothing to do and can give no redress;[27] but a treaty may also contain provisions which confer rights upon the citizens or subjects of the contracting powers which are of a nature to be enforced for the benefit of private parties in the courts,[28] and such provisions being the supreme law of the land, will be recognized and enforced by the courts in the same manner as an act of congress,[29] subject, however, to such acts as congress may subsequently pass in regard to their enforcement, modification, or repeal.[30] Provisions which are not self-executing depend for their enforcement upon the enactment of such legislation as is necessary to carry them into effect.[31]

XIII. VIOLATION.

Treaties are solemn international obligations and should be faithfully observed,[32] but as an individual may break a contract so a nation may violate the provisions of a treaty;[33] but while a breach by one party is a violation of a perfect right of the other party,[34] this is a matter which the courts cannot prevent or redress,[35] or even determine whether as a matter of fact the treaty has been violated,[36] whether the complaining nation has any just ground of complaint,[37] or whether in case of violation there was any justification therefor.[38] Such matters are within the exclusive province of the political department of the government and not of the courts.[39] In the United States a treaty may be violated by a subsequent act of congress,[40] and the courts cannot on this ground declare the act to be unconstitutional or void,[41] but they may and frequently have declared state laws to be void on the ground that they were in violation of treaty provisions,[42] and as the courts themselves may violate treaty provisions by a failure to recognize private rights secured thereby,[43] they may and should refuse to sanction or lend their process in aid of any individual enterprise or proceeding which would result in the violation of treaty rights,[44] except pursuant to congressional legislation superseding such treaty provisions.[45] The violation of a treaty by one party does not of itself terminate or render void the treaty but makes it voidable at the option of the other party,[46] who may waive or remit the infraction or demand satisfaction therefor.[47] The breach becomes the subject of international negotiations and reclamations, so far as the injured party chooses to seek redress, which may in the end be enforced by actual war.[48] In the case of a federation such as the United States, the extent of the responsibility of the general government for acts committed by the different states in violation of treaty stipulations, and the power of the general government to enforce compliance with such stipulations, are at present academic questions, neither having been authoritatively passed upon and definitely determined by the supreme court.[49] The question has been raised on several occasions but a definite determination of the point has generally been avoided by diplomatic settlements,[50] and payments of indemnity when made by the United States have been coupled with a disclaimer of any liability on the part of the general government,[51] although the state department of the United States has prosecuted on behalf of American citizens claims against another federation for acts by one of its constituent states in violation of a treaty and obtained by arbitration a decision in favor of such claimants.[52]

XIV. CLAIMS AGAINST FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

Claims of citizens of the United States against foreign governments are not determined by municipal but by international law,[53] and generally speaking neither the state nor federal courts have any jurisdiction in regard to such claims,[54] except as to the adjustment of conflicting rights of different claimants after the amount and validity of the claim has been established by some other tribunal.[55] There are instances in which the courts of this country have been clothed with jurisdiction to determine the merits of claims against a foreign government,[56] but their jurisdiction does not exist unless conferred by congress,[57] and as a rule the cases in which it has been conferred are where the United States for political purposes has assumed to pay such claims.[58] Claims against foreign governments have frequently been the subject of treaty provisions,[59] and have ordinarily been submitted to commissioners or some tribunal of arbitration to determine their validity and amount.[60] While the United States has the power to make such disposition of claims of its citizens against other governments as may be necessary for the peace and welfare of the country, and may, as between its citizens and the other government, entirely extinguish them,[61] yet such claims are property rights of the citizens,[62] and under the constitution cannot be taken or destroyed by the government without compensation.[63] So also while it seems that the United

Remedy of claimant.—Where by treaty the United States extinguishes a claim of a citizen against another government, and a special mode for obtaining compensation therefor is provided by statute or by the treaty, this

States has power to submit to arbitration the claim of one of its own citizens against a foreign government,[64] it must be done with due regard to the rights of the citizen,[65] and ample provision made for him to be heard and to present the evidence on which he relies.[66] The decision of commissioners appointed pursuant to treaty to determine the amount and validity of claims is final and conclusive upon all matters within their jurisdiction and authority,[67] whether of law or fact;[68] but ordinarily their authority is restricted to determining the amount and validity of claims as against the other government,[69] and their decision is not conclusive as to the rights of different claimants among themselves.[70] After the amount and validity of the claim has been established by the commissioners, the rights of different claimants to the whole or any part of the amount thereof may be settled by the ordinary judicial tribunals,[71] and the secretary of state may properly refuse to pay over to claimants money received on an award made by commissioners while litigation over conflicting claims is pending.[72] The United States may, although the commissioners have rendered their decision, treat with the other nation for a retrial of the case, as where it is alleged that some of the claims presented were fraudulent, and may, pending such negotiations, withhold from claimants the amounts already received by the United States for distribution;[73] or it may authorize the bringing of a suit in the name of the United States to try the question of fraud, and if the claims are shown to be fraudulent may authorize the return of any moneys paid to and remaining in the custody of the United States.[74] The United States is not, in the absence of statute, liable for interest for the detention of money received by it to be distributed to claimants.[75]

I. CIVIL TRESPASS.

A. Civil Trespass Generally — 1. DEFINITION AND SCOPE OF TERM. The term "trespass" in its broadest sense means any misfeasance, transgression, or offense which damages another's person, health, reputation, or property,[1] and as used in some statutes is equivalent to "tort."[2] In this article, the term is used in a more limited sense and is to be understood as designating an injury to the person, property, or rights of another, which is the immediate result of some wrongful act committed with force, either actual or implied.

2. ELEMENTS — a. The Act — (I) TRESPASS TO REALTY — (A) In General. Direct injury to realty of another is a trespass,[3] as is any wrongful interference

1. Cox v. Strickland, 120 Ga. 104, 106, 47 S. E. 912.

Other definitions are: "Any transgression or offence against the laws of nature or society whether it relates to person or property." 3 Blackstone Comm. 208 [quoted in Grunson v. State, 89 Ind. 533, 536, 46 Am. Rep. 178].

"Any unauthorized entry upon the realty of another to the damage thereof." Bouvier L. Dict.

"Any unlawful act, committed with violence, actual or implied, to the person, property, or rights of another." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. McCombs, 55 S. W. 921, 922, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1358].

"Any misfeasance or act of one man whereby another is injuriously treated or damnified." 3 Blackstone Comm. 208 [quoted in Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. McCombs, 55 S. W. 921, 922, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1358].

2. Thus under a statute concerning venue in "trespass," libel is a trespass (Cox v. Strickland, 120 Ga. 104, 106, 47 S. E. 912), and trespass on the case is a trespass (Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 217, 13 S. W. 59, 7 L. R. A. 618; Munal v. Brown, 70 Fed. 967, 968); and under statutes relating to survival of actions, actions for deceit are "trespasses" (Tichenor v. Hayes, 41 N. J. L. 193, 198, 32 Am. Rep. 186; Noice v. Brown, 39 N. J. L. 569; Ten Eyck v. Runk, 31 N. J. L. 428, 430). But a breach of contract is not a trespass; and therefore an action against sureties on a sheriff's bond for injury resulting from his misfeasance is not within the statute relating to venue, in "trespass." Lasater v. Waits, 95 Tex. 553, 555, 68 S. W. 500.

3. Bentley v. Fischer Lumber, etc., Co., 51 La. Ann. 451, 25 So. 262; Peach v. Mills, 14 Vt. 371; Sayles v. Bemis, 57 Wis. 315, 15 N. W. 432.

Instances.— Building a levee on another's with possession.[4] And the condition of the land is not material.[5] But a mere lease of lands in plaintiff's rightful possession is not a trespass,[6] nor remaining in possession by a tenant at will after a conveyance, no demand for possession or for rent having been made,[7] nor putting cattle on one's own land,[8] nor injury to land from driving logs in a navigable stream,[9] nor inclosing one's own land.[10] Mere words do not constitute a trespass,[11] nor a mere breach of an agreement by one in possession of land.[12] Where defendant has a right to enter on plaintiff's premises and do certain acts, they are not rendered trespasses because the entry was made wrongfully.[13]

(B) Entry on Realty — (1) ENTRY IN PERSON. Every unauthorized entry on land of another is a trespass,[14] even if no damage is done,[15] or the injury is land is a trespass (Bentley v. Fischer Lumber, etc., Co., 51 La. Ann. 451, 25 So. 262), and if cutting ice on a navigable stream running on plaintiff's land is an injury to the realty it is a trespass, but not otherwise (Van Rensselaer v. Mould, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 396, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 28). So carrying off the materials of a building, severed by a trespasser (Woodruff v. Halsey, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 333, 19 Am. Dec. 329), the cutting trees by one having neither title nor possession (King v. Baker, 25 Pa. St. 186), or the taking of water from a spring by a corporation without compensation (Lord v. Meadville Water Co., 135 Pa. St. 122, 19 Atl. 1007, 20 Am. St. Rep. 864, 8 L. R. A. 202) is a trespass.

4. Bass v. West, 110 Ga. 698, 36 S. E. 244, of tenant.

5. Norton v. Young, 6 Colo. App. 187, 40 Pac. 156 (fence injured or not lawful fence); Schwartz v. McQuaid, 214 Ill. 357, 73 N. E. 582, 105 Am. St. Rep. 112 (building in dilapidated condition); Jenks v. Lansing Lumber Co., 97 Iowa 342, 66 N. W. 231 (unfenced land). See also infra, I, A, 2, d.

9. Field v. Apple River Log Driving Co., 67 Wis. 569, 31 N. W. 17.

10. Abbey v. Shiner, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 287, 24 S. W. 91, although it also incloses plaintiff's, unless there is user of plaintiff's.

slight.[16] It will be presumed that injury resulted even if it was no more than the trampling of the herbage.[17] An entry and taking possession of land of another,[18] forcibly excluding the owner,[19] or injuring the property[20] is a trespass. An entry is a trespass if obtained by a wrongful act,[21] under color of a defective grant,[22] under a tax deed void on its face,[23] or if made for an illegal purpose.[24] So, an entry by a police officer without justification,[25] or by one having a legal right but in an unlawful manner,[26] is a trespass. However, a person is not a trespasser who uses as a public way an apparently public alley, kept so by defendant, simply because he steps over the technical legal boundary.[27]

(2) ENTRY BY THING CONTROLLED BY DEFENDANT. The entry need not be in person but may be by casting something on the land controlled by the trespasser;[28]

Compare Murphy v. Lowell, 128 Mass. 396, 35 Am. Rep. 381, holding that a city is liable for stones thrown on adjacent land in course of construction of a sewer only in the absence of due care, as it had a right to construct the sewer.

Water.—An action lies for backing water on another's land by means of a dam (Montgomery v. Locke, 72 Cal. 75, 13 Pac. 401; Carleton v. Redington, 21 N. H. 291; Russell v. Scott, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 279), which causes ice jams which back up the water (Cowles v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 364, 57 Am. Dec. 287); by a log boom which causes logs to pile up and back up the water (Hueston v. Mississippi, etc., Boom Co., 76 Minn. 251, 79 N. W. 92); for damming water and then wilfully discharging it so that it floods another's land below (McKee v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 125 N. Y. 353, 26 N. E. 305, 21 Am. St. Rep. 740), or sweeps away his dam (Kelly v. Lett, 35 N. C. 50); for deflecting the water of a stream against another's land (Gulf R. v. Clark, 2 Indian Terr. 319, 51 S. W. 962), or for casting surface water on it either by a ditch (Sanderlin v. Shaw, 51 N. C. 225), or by the grade of a city street made by the city (Bloomington v. Burke, 12 Ill. App. 314); by failure to remove obstructions in the gutters (Clay v. St. Albans, 43 W. Va. 539, 27 S. E. 368, 64 Am. St. Rep. 883); by causing surface water to percolate against another's house by elevating the surface of adjoining land (Hurdman v. North Eastern R. Co., 3 C. P. D. 168, 47 L. J. C. P. 368, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 339, 26 Wkly. Rep. 489); for flowing another's land with water from an overflow of a cesspool (Weed v. Brush, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 62, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 1025), or flooding his premises on floor below by leakage of water used to scrub floors (Patton v. McCants, 29 S. C. 597, 6 S. E. 848); or for constructing a tunnel under plaintiff's land and continuously forcing water through it (Chicago v. Troy Laundry Mach. Co., 162 Ind. 678, 89 C. C. A. 470). And one who in digging a subway under a street breaks a pipe so water escapes on plaintiff's land is liable in trespass regardless of negligence. Wheeler v. Norton, 92 N. Y. App. Div. 368, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 1095 [affirming 84 N. Y. Suppl. 524]; Lersner v. McDonald, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 734, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 1125.

By blasting.— Casting earth or stones on adjoining land by blasting is a trespass (Birmingham Ore, etc., Co. v. Grover, 159 Ala. 276, 48 So. 682; Bessemer Coal, etc., Co. v. Doak, 151 Ala. 670, 44 So. 631; Scott v. Bay, 3 Md. 431; Berlin v. Thompson, 61 Mo. App. 234; Gourdier v. Cormack, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 202; Herron v. Jones, etc., Co., 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 226), as where it is done by a contractor constructing a subway under a street (Turner v. Degnon-McLean Contracting Co., 184 N. Y. 525, 76 N. E. 1111 [affirming 99 N. Y. App. Div. 135, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 948], or a canal (St. Peter v. Denison, 58 N. Y. 416, 17 Am. Rep. 258); and it is immaterial whether the blasting was done negligently or carefully (Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 10 Pac. 395, 58 Am. Rep. 556; Blackford v. Heman Constr. Co., 132 Mo. erection on another's land is a continuing trespass.[32] But mere ownership of the personalty cast on another's land does not render the owner liable.[33]

(c) Wrongful Act After Rightful Entry. Trespass to realty according to many decisions may be committed after a rightful entry;[34] but where the law is strictly followed, the courts, adhering to the requirement of a breach of the peace, hold that case and not trespass is the proper remedy when the entry on the land was rightful.[35]

(II) TRESPASS TO PERSONALTY. An act of trespass to personal property must be an interference with plaintiff's possession of the property.[36] A taking

A purchaser of the land on which is such a wall can sue as for a fresh trespass. Ross v. Hunter, 7 Can. Sup. Ct. 289.

33. Forster v. Juniata Bridge Co., 16 Pa. St. 393, 55 Am. Dec. 506, holding that property which breaks adrift without negligence and strands on plaintiff's land does not make the owner a trespasser and he may abandon it, although notified to remove it.

Georgia.— Mackenzie v. Minis, 132 Ga. 323, 63 S. E. 900, holding that where a servant whose occupation of a house on the master's premises is in connection with his service, and for the necessary or better performance thereof he is discharged, he is a trespasser if he retains possession, entering on the land and continuing to treat it as if there had been no discharge, although he contends that under the contract he cannot be discharged for three years.

Iowa.— Concanan v. Boynton, 76 Iowa 543, 41 N. W. 213, taking by mortgagee of chattels on plaintiff's land in his possession after denial of his right by plaintiff.

Minnesota.— Mitchell v. Mitchell, 54 Minn. 301, 55 N. W. 1134, holding that where administrators entered deceased's house by leave of his widow to demand his chattels and, after her refusal to deliver, remained against her protest from six thirty-six to twelve they were trespassers.

New York.— Capel v. Lyons, 3 Misc. 73, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 378, holding that, where a license to insert shoring timbers to a limited extent to protect plaintiff's building from an excavation on adjoining land was exceeded, trespass lies.

North Carolina.— Gardner v. Rowland, 24 N. C. 247, letting down plaintiff's fence to drive defendant's hogs out, instead of opening the gate.

Pennsylvania.— Shiffer v. Broadhead, 126 Pa. St. 260, 17 Atl. 592, cutting trees of a size larger than authorized by a license.

South Carolina.— Burnett v. Postal Tel., etc., Cable Co., 79 S. C. 462, 60 S. E. 1116, holding that if a company which is given permission to enter on land and construct a line of telegraph wires thereon constructs it in a different place than that designated by the owner, it is guilty of a trespass, and the owner in suing for damages is not confined to a remedy under the condemnation statutes which apply when the entry is by permission and the acts done on the land are incident to the exercise of the right granted by the owner.

Vermont.— Warner v. Hoisington, 42 Vt. 94, holding that a license to enter one part of a field is no defense to entry on another part.

United States.— Lindquest v. Union Pac. R. Co., 33 Fed. 372.

35. Beers v. McGinnis, 191 Mass. 279, 77 N. E. 768; Richmond v. Fisk, 160 Mass. 34, 35 N. E. 103 (holding that entering a sleeping room against express command after entering the house by license is not a trespass); Hill v. Bartholomew, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 453, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 944 (holding that failure to close a gate over defendant's right of way does not render him a trespasser); Hall v. Louis Weber Bldg. Co., 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 551, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 997 (holding that a license to enter and protect plaintiff's building is a defense to an action of trespass, although conditional, but an action lies for damages for breach of the condition); Boults v. Mitchell, 15 Pa. St. 371 (holding that cutting trees outside scope of a right is not a trespass as there was no tortious breach of the close).

36. O'Conner v. Corbitt, 3 Cal. 370; Bever v. Swecker, 138 Iowa 721, 116 N. W. 704; Swank v. Elwest, (Oreg. 1910) 105 Pac. 901. And see cases cited infra, this note.

Applications of rule.— Taking up an animal as an estray does not interfere with a possessory right of another (Pope v. Cordell, 47 Mo. 251); nor a purchase of goods at a wrongful sale without taking possession (Talmadge v. Scudder, 38 Pa. St. 517); and if possession is taken of part there is no trespass as to the part not taken (Leisherness v. Berry, 38 Me. 80); nor does failure to comply with directions in performing work on plaintiff's chattels interfere with any possessory right of plaintiff (Hood v. Cronkite, 29 U. C. Q. B. 98); nor acts done after taking possession (Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Walley, (Ala. 1906) 41 So. 134); nor converting goods already in possession (Henderson v. Marx, 57 Ala. 169; Davis v. Young, 20 Ala. 151; Bradley v. Davis 14 Me. 44, 30 Am. Dec. 729; Weitzel v. Marr, 46 Pa. St. 463); nor receiving goods by delivery from one who obtained them by a trespass (Archibeque v. Miera, 1 N. M. 419); and demand and refusal alone will not support trespass de bonis (Imlay v. Sage, 5 Conn. 489).

of chattels from another's possession is a trespass,[37] whether the goods so taken are converted [38] or not.[39] A mere asportation of property in plaintiff's possession,[40] or enticing away his slave,[41] or without right giving the slave orders which result in injury to him [42] is a trespass. When there is no unlawful intent and no disturbance of a right and no actual damage trespass to personalty will not lie.[43]

(III) TRESPASS TO THE PERSON.[44] An unlawful act, committed with violence upon the person of another, constitutes a trespass,[45] and where the effect of such an act is to make plaintiff nervous and unable to carry on his business, damages may be recovered, not for mental anguish, but for injury to health and business.[46] On the other hand, trespass is an appropriate remedy for injury to the person only when such injury is the direct and primary result of the act complained of,[47] and it does not lie for an act lawfully done by one in the enforcement of his rights.[48] So it has been held that mere words, although they are abusive 37. Ely v. Ehle, 3 N. Y. 506. And see cases cited infra, in this and the following notes.

Exercise of dominion over another's property without manual interference is a sufficient taking, and mere words are enough if the goods are in the speaker's power (Connah v. Hale, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 462); and a levy, inventory, and requiring a receiptor has been held sufficient (Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77; Wintringham v. Lafoy, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 735); or levy and receiptor (Phillips v. Hall, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 610, 24 Am. Dec. 108); or levy and sale (Neff v. Thompson, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 213); or locking the room where goods are (Jones v. Lewis, 7 C. & P. 343, 32 E. C. L. 647); or unlawful interference by a purchaser of realty, with the personal property of another, stored in a building on the premises either under a verbal or written contract with the vendor (Temple v. Duran, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 121 S. W. 253); but an inventory and forbidding of removal by one without legal process has been held insufficient (Hervey v. Alexander, (Hil. T. 2 Vict.) 3 Ont. Case Law Dig. 6905); Cameron v. Lount, 4 U. C. Q. B. 275). So a mere levy without taking possession is not an act of trespass (Keyes v. Howe, 18 Vt. 411); nor is a mere declaration of distress on things not distrainable, as fixtures (Beck v. Denbigh, 6 Jur. N. S. 998, 29 L. J. C. P. 273, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 154, 8 Wkly. Rep. 392); and merely expelling plaintiffs from defendant's land is not a taking of plaintiff's chattels thereon (White v. Bayley, 2 F. & F. 385, 10 C. B. N. S. 227, 7 Jur. N. S. 948, 30 L. J. C. and threatening in character, are not actionable in trespass to the person, however morally wrong they may be.[49]

(IV) TRESPASS AB INITIO. The general rule is laid down that where an entry is made or possession of property taken by authority of law, which would be a trespass but for such authority, a subsequent abuse of the authority renders the doer a trespasser ab initio,[50] and is applied to a mere failure to fulfil the conditions attached to the exercise of the right.[51] Nevertheless, the original act

Injury received from a spring-gun.—While the question of the liability of one setting spring-guns, or other man-traps, on his own premises for death or injury to another person, caused by such devices, generally arises in criminal prosecutions (see HOMICIDE, 21 Cyc. 787, 831); and in civil actions other than trespass, the question of liability in trespass has arisen and resulted in conflicting decisions, no recovery may be had in trespass where the party injured had knowledge that spring-guns had been placed on the premises (Ilott v. Wilkes, 3 B. & Ald. 304, 22 Rev. Rep. 400, 5 E. C. L. 181, 106 Eng. Reprint 674); and recovery has also been denied where plaintiff, at the time of receiving the injury, was attempting to burglarize the premises (Scheuermann v. Scharfenberg, 163 Ala. 337, 50 So. 335, 24 L. R. A. N. S. 369). On the other hand, recovery has been allowed where the person injured was a mere trespasser and was committing no crime (Grant v. Hass, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 688, 75 S. W. 342), or was committing only a mere misdemeanor, the decision in this case being placed on the ground that a person has no right to prevent or resist a trespass by using means dangerous to life or inflicting great bodily injury (Hooker v. Miller, 37 Iowa 613, 18 Am. Rep. 18).

Rule applied in case of entry on realty.—A street commissioner is a trespasser ab initio if, after rightful removal of plaintiff's shop, he sells it (Mussey v. Cahoon, 34 Me. 74). So is an officer who puts an intoxicated person in as keeper after lawful attachment (Malcom v. Spoor, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 279, 46 Am. Dec. 675); or one who, cutting grass in a highway lawfully, thereafter feeds it to his horse (Cole v. Drew, 44 Vt. 49, 8 Am. Rep. 363). Assault and battery after lawful entry on plaintiff's dwelling to remove government property may make one a trespasser ab initio (Sterling v. Warden, 52 N. H. 197); and assault on the innkeeper after lawful entry (Markham v. Brown, 8 N. H. 523, 31 Am. Dec. 209); or remaining on premises to keep possession of goods after distress has ceased to be lawful (Ladd v. Thomas, 12 A. & E. 117, 9 L. J. Q. B. 345, 4 P. & D. 9, 40 E. C. L. 67, 113 Eng. Reprint 755); or taking possession of a lunch room under writ of attachment excluding customers, etc. (Walsh v. Brown, 194 Mass. 317, 80 N. E. 465); or entry under search warrant by an officer to obtain evidence, not to search for the goods (Lawton v. Cardell, 22 Vt. 524); or by using unlawful force by breaking a door in entering to remove one's gas meter (Reed v. New York, etc., Gas Co., 93 N. Y. App. Div. 453, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 810), or other personalty (Daniels v. Brown, 34 N. H. 454, 69 Am. Dec. 505); or conversion of mill dam materials after its lawful destruction (Little v. Ince, 3 U. C. C. P. 528) renders one a trespasser ab initio. On the other hand injury by a third person to property seized under lawful authority does not make the officer guilty of trespass ab initio (Ferrin v. Symonds, 11 N. H. 363); and setting aside of the judgment under which proceedings have been taken does not render persons who took part in the proceedings trespassers ab initio (Missouri Bank v. Franciscus, 15 Mo. 303).

Rule applied to personalty.—An officer who perverts process to other uses is a trespasser ab initio (Lawton v. Cardell, 22 Vt. 524); so working an animal seized under attachment renders both creditor who does it and the constable trespassers ab initio (Lamb v. Day, 8 Vt. 407, 30 Am. Dec. 479); or working an animal taken up as an estray (Oxley v. Watts, 1 T. R. 12, 1 Rev. Rep. 133, 99 Eng. Reprint 944); or attachment at night in bad weather so that the goods are damaged renders the officer a trespasser ab initio (Barrett v. White, 3 N. H. 210, 14 Am. Dec. 352); but an excessive levy does not make the officer a trespasser ab initio, a levy being proper (Jarratt v. Gwathmay, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 237).

51. Sherman v. Braman, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 407; Gilson v. Fisk, 8 N. H. 404; Crawford v. Maxwell, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 476. And see cases cited infra, this note.

Realty.— Failure to put up bars by one having a right to construct a turnpike road on plaintiff's land (Crawford v. Maxwell, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 476), or abandonment of eminent domain proceedings after entry thereunder, and withdrawal of the condemnation money (Enid, etc., R. Co. v. Wiley, 14 Okla. 310, 78 Pac. 96) constitutes a trespass.

Personalty.—After lawfully taking up an estray failure to comply with the statute renders one a trespasser ab initio (Burton v.

must have been a trespass but for the legal justification,[52] and the abuse of process must be for the benefit of a person other than plaintiff.[53] Defendant must have been implicated in the original act of entry or taking possession.[54] And those who assisted in the original act do not become trespassers ab initio by subsequent abuse not participated in by them.[55] The general rule is sometimes qualified by requiring that the subsequent act be an act of trespass, not a mere nonfeasance,[56] or even by requiring further that the act of misfeasance be such as to warrant a conclusion that the legal authority was used as a mere cloak from the beginning,[57] and the entire doctrine of trespass ab initio has been repudiated in some cases.[58] Where the authority was from plaintiff an abuse of it does not make one a trespasser ab initio.[59] Where there is an authority in fact, and a party exceeds that Calaway, 20 Ind. 469); or after lawfully impounding cattle failure to feed and water them (Adams v. Adams, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 384); or failing to follow the statutory requirement by giving the pound keeper the written memorandum of charges as required by statute (Sherman v. Braman, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 407), or the owner notice of the impounding (Coffin v. Field, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 355); or otherwise failing to comply with essential features of the statute (Coffin v. Field, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 355); or after lawfully driving stray cattle off one's land to drive them a long way off (Gilson v. Fisk, 8 N. H. 404); or after lawful distress, irregularity in following the statutory proceedings (Kerr v. Sharp, 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 399), as failing to give notice of sale (Cornelius v. Burton, 3 Nova Scotia Dec. 337), or failing to appraise (Wyke v. Wilson, 173 Pa. St. 12, 33 Atl. 701, a third person whose goods were distrained could take advantage of the failure; Christman v. Geise, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 342); or appraisal prior to the statutory time (Brisben v. Wilson, 60 Pa. St. 452); or after lawful seizure by an officer of a seine for illegal fishing a failure to obtain judgment of forfeiture (Russell v. Hanscomb, 15 Gray (Mass.) 166); or conversion of an animal after seizure damage feasant (Dye v. Leatherdale, 3 Wils. C. P. 20, 95 Eng. Reprint 910); or of goods received under wrongful attachment (Barfield v. Coker, 73 S. C. 181, 53 S. E. 170). So a purchaser at judicial sale of goods in a vessel who moves the vessel to a more convenient place for their removal is a trespasser ab initio. Bear v. Harris, 118 N. C. 476, 24 S. E. 364.

52. Johnson v. Hannihan, 1 Strobh. (S. C.) 313, holding that an assault after entry on defendant's own land in wrongful possession of plaintiff does not render defendant a trespasser ab initio.

Applications of rule.— Retaining goods distrained, even though amounting to a conversion, is a mere nonfeasance (West v. Nibbs, 4 C. B. 172, 17 L. J. C. P. 150, 56 E. C. L. 172); or mere words; and so abuse of adjoining owners while passing along the road does not make one a trespasser ab initio, not being a trespass; although stopping does as there is no right to stop (Adams v. Rivers, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 390); or mere detaining of goods by customs officers (Jacobson v. Blake, 8 Jur. 272, 13 L. J. C. P. 89, 6 M. & G. 919, 7 Scott N. R. 772, 46 E. C. (v) Trespass by Relation. An act, lawful when committed, cannot subsequently, by a legal fiction, be converted into a trespass,[61] and an act done subsequent to the beginning of the action does not relate back so as to constitute a cause of action,[62] nor does fraud in exercising a license make one a trespasser by relation.[63] Where the act was a trespass, but not against a right, then existing in any person, plaintiff's right, inchoate, at the time but perfected before the beginning of the action, is sufficient; [64] but if the trespass was against a right then existent in a person, plaintiff's subsequently acquired right is not enough,[65] although entitled at the time to a conveyance which was made before the beginning of the action.[66]

Dec. 73; Adams v. Freeman, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 408, 7 Am. Wisconsin.— Scheer v. Kriesel, 109 Wis. 125, 85 N. W. 138, tearing down a fence under belief that it was on his land. Contra, Hazelton v. Week, 49 Wis. 661, 6 N. W. 309, 35 Am. Rep. 796, removal of logs by a purchaser from the trespasser who cut them.

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trespass," § 49.

Cases relating to personalty.— Removal of unintentionally induced by plaintiff.[74] But the act must be consciously done.[75] Upon this principle physical duress has been held a defense.[76] Mere wrongful intent may under some circumstances render conduct not actionable in itself an actionable trespass, by depriving defendant of a justification which he would have had if he had acted bona fide.[77] But bad intent will not of course render actionable as trespass an act which is not in itself an act of trespass.[78] A trespass after being forbidden is wilful and malicious.[79] And an entry pending a decision of the court to try the right is not in good faith.[80]

c. The Force. Actual force is not necessary.[81] The force implied by law will be sufficient,[82] and the law always implies force where the injury is immediate to the person and property of another.[83]

d. The Right Invaded — (I) Realty Generally — (A) Rights Essential — Possession, Actual or Constructive — (1) In General. The action of trespass is given for an injury to the property itself, rather than for an injury to some person's right therein. It follows that the person to maintain the action is the person who had possession of the property at the time of the injury. By bearing this in mind and bearing in mind further the old rule of the common law that the owner of property adversely held by another had only an action for its recovery, so that he could not convey his property right in it, etc., the rules of law as to the right of a plaintiff to support an action of trespass will be greatly illumined. The fundamental doctrines of the law of trespass, that possession is the gist of the action, that plaintiff must have actual or constructive possession, that possession alone is sufficient to maintain the action, that title is not sufficient where the property is adversely held by another, and finally, that to maintain the action no right not a right in rem to the property rather than merely a right in personam against another to get the property will support the action, as set forth below, all rest on this basic idea. And similarly, no defense in personam was good unless it was against the person in possession. A chose in action against the true owner, as a contract for purchase of land in possession of another, would not be a defense personalty by a servant of a person receiving it from the receiptor of the sheriff renders the servant liable, although ignorant of the sheriff's right. Sinclair v. Tarbox, 2 N. H. 135.

74. Wallard v. Worthman, 84 Ill. 446 (by bill of sale of chattels, absolute on its face but in fact a mere security); Pearson v. Inlow, 20 Mo. 322, 64 Am. Dec. 189 (by mistake in leading defendant to believe timber cut was on defendant's own land).

75. Young v. Vaughan, 1 Houst. (Del.) 331 (holding that driving off in defendant's drove of plaintiff's cattle running at large is a trespass if he knew they were not his or having his attention called to them did not exercise due diligence to ascertain); Brownell v. Flagler, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 282; Brooks v. Olmstead, 17 Pa. St. 24.

Accident if entirely unavoidable and without the doer's fault is an excuse. Jennings v. Fundeburg, 4 McCord (S. C.) 161.

76. Cunningham v. Pitzer, 2 W. Va. 264, 94 Am. Dec. 526.

77. Rogers v. Brown, 20 N. J. L. 119 (holding that whether seizure of goods exposed for sale contrary to a statute is a trespass depends on the intent); Gorman v. Marsteller, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,629, 2 Cranch C. C. 311 (holding that entry on land with intent to injure part of it lying in another jurisdiction is a trespass, although lawful without such intent).

Thus any unlawful exercise of authority over another's property is a trespass (Hardy v. Clendening, 25 Ark. 436; Chicago Title, etc., Co. v. Core, 223 Ill. 58, 79 N. E. 108 [affirming 126 Ill. App. 272]; Reynolds v. Shuler, 5 Cow. (N. H. 563); or driving off sheep which became mixed with defendant's drove (Dexter v. Cole, 6 Wis. 319, 70 Am. Dec. 465).

Degree of force used is immaterial if dominion is exercised over the property, against the will of the owner or person rightfully in possession. Guttner v. Pacific Steam Whaling Co., 96 Fed. 617.

to an action by the possessor against the vendee, although if the right had ripened into title it would be a good defense. Title in plaintiff is not necessary [84] unless the land is unoccupied,[85] or neither plaintiff nor any one else has actual possession.[86] The gist of trespass is the injury to possession,[87] and in England the rule has always been that actual possession was necessary,[88] and the doctrine has been followed to some extent in this country.[89] But the general rule in America is that either actual or constructive possession is sufficient to maintain trespass,[90] although cannot maintain trespass. Where plaintiff relies solely on possession it must be actual.[96]

(2) Legal Title to Land in Actual Occupation of Another — (a) Occupation Under and Not Adversely to the Owner. Mere occupation by other persons but under and not adversely to the owner does not oust his possession or prevent his maintaining trespass.[97]

(b) Occupation of Lessee — aa. Before Reentry by the Owner. The rule is well settled that the lessor has no such possession of the demanded premises before reëntry thereon as will entitle him to maintain an action of trespass,[98]

97. Alabama.— Garrett v. Sewell, 108 Ala. 521, 18 So. 737.

Connecticut.— Curtiss v. Hoyt, 19 Conn. 154, 48 Am. Dec. 149.

Kentucky.— McClain v. Todd, 5 J. J. Marsh. 335, 22 Am. Dec. 37.

Massachusetts.— Shaw v. Commiskey, 7 Pick. 76.

Ohio.— Wilson v. Crosby, Wright 288.

Principles applied as against third persons. — Occupation by a cestui que trust does not prevent an action by the trustee (Rogers v. White, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 68); nor does occupation of a store by relatives without a lease prevent recovery by the owner for trespass (Kelly v. Davidson, 7 N. Y. St. 481); so the owner's right to maintain trespass is not affected by occupation of individual rooms by tenants at will (Curtiss v. Hoyt, 19 Conn. 154, 48 Am. Dec. 149); nor by occupation of land by persons employed to hold possession (McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 465, 51 Am. Dec. 637); nor by mere temporary residence on the land by a former tenant (Garrett v. Sewell, 108 Ala. 521, 18 So. 737); nor by the making of bricks by a mere licensee (Shaw v. Cummiskey, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 76); nor by the working of a farm by his children (Russell v. Scott, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 279); nor by the raising of a single crop by one having a contractual right, not a lease (Warner v. Hoisington, 42 Vt. 94); nor by the mere remaining on land by a grantor by sufferance of the grantee (Chesley v. Brockway, 34 Vt. 550); nor by carrying on a farm "on halves," if the injury is to the inheritance (Cutting v. Cox, 19 Vt. 517); nor by occupation of another by a bare license (Percival v. Chase, 182 Mass. 371, 65 N. E. 800); nor by occupation by mortgagor after default which entitled the mortgagee to possession (Mann v. English, 38 U. C. Q. B. 240); nor even before default, in states where the mortgagee is legal owner with immediate right of possession (Smith v. Goodwin, 2 Me. 173). So it has been held that occupation of land under a bond for title is under, not adverse, to the owner and will not prevent a recovery by the owner for injury to the freehold (Southern R. Co. v. Ethridge, 108 Ga. 121, 33 S. E. 850); and possession under contract for purchase before deed has been given does not prevent a recovery by the vendor for trespass (Adams v. Farr, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 473, 5 Thomps. & C. 59), even though the full purchase-price had been paid (Jones v. Taylor, 12 N. C. 434).

Principles applied as against the occupant. —Where the grantor remains in possession of a house and cuts trees, he is liable, being either tenant at will or at sufferance or else a mere occupant (Spencer v. Weatherly, 46 N. C. 327); and a person employed to hold possession for the owner is liable for resisting the owner's entry (Looram v. Burlingame, 16 La. Ann. 199); and one occupying by license, after revocation of the license by conveyance to plaintiff, is liable for remaining in possession (Hicks v. Swift Creek Mill Co., 133 Ala. 411, 31 So. 947, 91 Am. St. Rep. 38, 57 L. R. A. 720).

whether against the tenant [99] or third persons,[1] at least where the injury is to possession only, not to the freehold,[2] except when authorized by statute;[3] and the rule is not changed by statutory abolition of forms of action.[4] Where, however, the injury is to the reversion, an action in some form lies, usually an action on the case,[5] and mere possession by his tenant is sufficient for a lessor to maintain an action for injury to the reversion without establishing any other right.[6]

What amounts to disseizin.— For the purpose of this rule entry under claim of title and removing ore is a disseizin (West v. Lanier, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 762); so is clearing and actually occupying land (Stevens v. Hollister, 18 Vt. 294, 46 Am. Dec. 154); cutting trees and building a house (Bailey v. Massey, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 167; Wadleigh v. Marathon County Bank, 58 Wis. 546, 17 N. W. 314); entering and leasing a house (Patterson v. Bodenhammer, 33 N. C. 4); entering land and tearing down wall (Percival v. Chase, 182 Mass. 371, 65 N. E. 800); levy of execution against the owner, although the levy is invalid (Jewett v. Whitney, 43 Me. 242; Allen v. Thayer, 17 Mass. 299); and a levy against a tenant at will has been held to disseize the landlord (Bartlett v. Perkins, 13 Me. 87), but not levy of execution against a third party (Shepard v. Pratt, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 32; Gore v. Brazier, 3 Mass. 523, 3 Am. Dec. 182); nor execution of writ of possession in an action against a third person (Warren v. Cochran, 30 N. H. 379); to plaintiff.[21] An entry on part of a tract under a deed claiming title does not give possession of part of the tract actually occupied by plaintiff,[22] and the entry must be sufficient to put the statute of limitation in motion.[23]

cc. After Reëntry by the Owner and Retaking Possession From the Disseizor. After reëntry and retaking possession the owner can recover compensation, called mesne profits, for the use of the land and also for injury done to it during the disseizin by the disseizor.[24] He is regarded as having been continuously invested with the freehold and possession, which before reëntry was in the disseizor.[25] This rule applies whether the possession was regained by legal proceedings[26] or the disseizee reënters personally on the land, without legal proceedings,[27] provided such entry is obtained in a legal manner,[28] or the disseizor abandons his possession and leaves the land vacant for the true owner.[29] A mere formal digging sand from a sand-lot does not constitute a disseizin (Parker v. Wallis, 60 Md. 15, 45 Am. Rep. 703); nor building and operating a railroad (Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Boyd, 63 Md. 325; Blesch v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 43 Wis. 183). So an attornment to defendant by plaintiff's tenant is not a disseizin (Buford v. Christian, 149 Ala. 343, 42 So. 997); nor does a series of trespasses constitute a disseizin (Thornton v. St. Louis Refrigerator, etc., Co., 69 Ark. 424, 65 S. reëntry is not enough, but actual possession must be regained.[30] But an actual entry for the purpose of asserting title and securing possession is sufficient.[31] After reëntry and taking possession the owner can maintain trespass against a third person for acts done under the disseizor's authority, as well as against the disseizor himself.[32] A subsequent second ouster does not defeat the action.[33] Recovery for mesne profits may be defeated, if the trespasser has held possession for the period which by statute gives him certain rights in the land.[34]

(B) Rights Sufficient — Possession, Actual or Constructive — (1) POSSESSION WITH FULL LEGAL TITLE. Possession with full legal title is sufficient to maintain trespass.[35] Entry and acts of dominion are sufficient possession.[36] If both parties are in some sense in possession, such mixed possession inures to the benefit of him who has the legal title.[37] The owner's possession of part of a tract of land not otherwise actually occupied extends to the whole,[38] and any possession by a

Possession of a tenant pending an appeal from a judgment against him in an action of forcible detainer is lawful, and sufficient to enable him to maintain an action of trespass for disturbing him in the peaceable enjoyment of the demised premises. Tobin v. French, 93 Ill. App. 18.

44. Schwartz v. McQuaid, 214 Ill. 357, 73 N. E. 582, 105 Am. St. Rep. 112 (holding that a lessee has possession of locked building with his personalty in it, although in prison and no one in charge); Van Rensselaer v. Van Rensselaer, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 377 (possession of mill sites reserved from a deed, although not occupied for some time).

Government land.— Watterston v. Jetche, 7 Rob. (La.) 20, holding that the vendee of a settler's claim can maintain an action, although not in actual possession at the time.

Personalty.— Possession of a store by the assignee of goods is not lost by temporary absence of his clerk. Cook v. Thornton, 109 Ala. 523, 20 So. 14.

45. Brown v. Notley, 3 Exch. 219, 18 L. J. Exch. 39, death of life-tenant before expiration of his lease for years to plaintiff.

46. Gore v. Brazier, 3 Mass. 523, 3 Am. Dec. 182; Langdon v. Potter, 3 Mass. 215 (judgment debtor a lessee); Cressy v. Sawyer, 18 N. H. 95.

47. Bowne v. Graham, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 411.

48. Carey v. Buntain, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 217 (holding that the possession of a widow before assignment of dower extends only to the house and grounds, not the whole tract of land); Munsey v. Hanly, 102 Me. 423, 67 Atl. 217, 13 L. R. A. N. S. 209. Compare Faith v. Yocum, 51 Ill. App. 620, holding that where plaintiff's right is equitable merely his possession is confined to his pedis possessio.

Government land.— Mott v. Hopper, 116 La. 629, 40 So. 921, approved application for homestead.

49. Georgia.— Tolbert v. Rome, 134 Ga. 136, 67 S. E. 540; Gillis v. Hilton, etc., Lumber Co., 113 Ga. 622, 38 S. E. 940, grant from one who held possession seven years.

Illinois.— Shoup v. Shields, 116 Ill. 488, 6 N. E. 502, holding that possession is coextensive with deed and title and need not be deduced from the government.

Kentucky.— Hall v. Deaton, 68 S. W. 672, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 314, forcible entry and cutting of trees.

Louisiana.— Hébert v. Légé, 29 La. Ann. 511; Bonis v. James, 7 Rob. 149; Patin v. Blaize, 19 La. 396.

Massachusetts.—Bowley v. Walker, 8 Allen 21, of land discontinued as a highway.

Michigan.— Patterson v. Patterson, 49 Mich. 176, 13 N. W. 504, widow claiming homestead.

New Hampshire.— Maxfield v. White River Lumber Co., 74 N. H. 158, 65 Atl. 832 (defective tax deed); Poor v. Gibson, 32 N. H. 415 (mistaken belief of plaintiff that his deed covered the land).

New Jersey.— Todd v. Jackson, 26 N. J. L.

tious,[50] and although title is in another.[51] Fencing land under color and claim of title gives sufficient possession to maintain trespass,[52] but is not essential,[53] nor is residence on the tract or one adjoining it.[54] Acts of possession by one person for another gives the latter possession sufficient to maintain trespass.[55] Possession under color and claim of right, to be sufficient must be actual,[56] but where possession is once actual it continues without further actual occupation or acts of possession[57] unless abandoned.[58] In the absence of actual occupancy by another, possession of part of a tract of land under color and claim of title to the whole is possession of the whole and is sufficient to maintain trespass as to any part,[59]

525, under void deed from guardian of infants.

New York.— Walker v. Wilson, 8 Bosw. 586.

North Carolina.— Lamb v. Swain, 48 N. C. 370, by servant.

Utah.— Kunkel v. Utah Lumber Co., 29 Utah 13, 81 Pac. 897.

Vermont.— Capen v. Sheldon, 78 Vt. 39, 61 Atl. 864; Doolittle v. Linsley, 2 Aik. 155.

Canada.— Young v. Milne, 28 N. Brunsw. 186; Nugent v. Parks, 11 N. Brunsw. 391; Wilson v. Sinclair, 8 N. Brunsw. 343; Payzant v. Hawbold, 29 Nova Scotia 66; Fullerton v. Brundige, 20 Nova Scotia 182, 8 Can. L. T. Occ. Notes 378, original grant with a plan covered the land but plaintiff's grant did not refer to the plan.

Claim under defective instrument executed by the owner.— McDonald v. Bear River, etc., Water, etc., Co., 13 Cal. 220 (deed not sealed, made under power of attorney); Curtiss v. Hoyt, 19 Conn. 154, 48 Am. Dec. 149; Stephenson v. Goff, 10 Rob. (La.) 99, 43 Am. Dec. 171; Fanchonette v. Grangé, 5 Rob. (La.) 510; Kernion v. Guenon, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 171; Anthony v. New York, etc., R. Co., 162 Mass. 60, 37 N. E. 780 (under unrecorded lease required by law to be recorded); Low Moor Co. v. Stanley Coal Co., 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 186 (indenture not enrolled and no livery of seizin made).

Government land.— Forst v. Rothe, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 575 (defective grant of school lands); Colwell v. Smith, 1 Wash. Terr. 92 (claim under preëmption laws).

50. Hoyt v. Van Alstyne, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 568; Littleton v. McNamara, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 417, possession by sublessee where lease forbids subletting.

51. Briggs v. McBride, 19 N. Brunsw. 202; Morrison v. McAlpin, 3 N. Brunsw. 650, mistaken belief of plaintiff that his grant covered the land.

52. McLean v. Jacobs, 1 Nova Scotia 9, holding that fencing to the waters of a harbor gives possession of part of the tract under the water.

53. Gleason v. Edmonds, 3 Ill. 448, under the act to define the extent of possession in cases of settlement on government lands.

54. Gleason v. Edmunds, 3 Ill. 448, under the act of 1837 to define extent of possession in cases of settlement on government land.

55. Capen v. Sheldon, 78 Vt. 39, 61 Atl. 864 (acts by grantor); Hadden v. White, 4 N. Brunsw. 634 (acts by relative of children of deceased claimant).

56. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Wooten, 46 S. W. 681, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 383 (holding that mere claim of ownership and repeated acts of trespass are not sufficient, as repeated cutting of timber); Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co., 144 N. C. 110, 56 S. E. 695.

Applications of rule.— Former possession by plaintiff as tenant after taking possession by a subsequent tenant is not sufficient (Donaldson v. Crane, 120 Mich. 369, 79 N. W. 569); nor is mere entry under color and claim of title (Williston v. Morse, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 17); nor entry on adjoining land and building a fence, where the adjoining owner at once removes it (Ebersol v. Trainor, 81 Ill. App. 645).

57. Holman v. Herscher, (Tex. 1891) 16 S. W. 984 (holding that where a house is locked and in charge of an agent to rent it, it is immaterial that it is at the moment unoccupied); Kolb v. Bankhead, 18 Tex. 228.

58. United Copper Min., etc., Co. v. Franks, 85 Me. 321, 27 Atl. 185.

59. Illinois.— Welch v. Louis, 31 Ill. 446.

Kentucky.— Crate v. Strong, 69 S. W. 957, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 710, deed excepting "all the old patented land" where plaintiff claims all within the bounds, believing all old patents have been located.

Maryland.— Parker v. Wallis, 60 Md. 15, 45 Am. Rep. 703.

North Carolina.— Mitchell v. Bridgers, 113 N. C. 63, 18 S. E. 91; Osborne v. Ballew, 34 N. C. 373. Contra, Smith v. Wilson, 18 N. C. 40.

Pennsylvania.— Stambaugh v. Hollabaugh, 10 Serg. & R. 357.

Vermont.— Davenport v. Newton, 71 Vt. 11, 42 Atl. 1087; Fullam v. Foster, 68 Vt. 590, 35 Atl. 484; Hunt v. Taylor, 22 Vt. 556 (written contract for purchase, although unrecorded and from one without title); Beach v. Sutton, 5 Vt. 209.

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trespass," § 40.

Possession by tenant is sufficient. Zundel v. Baldwin, 114 Ala. 328, 21 So. 420 (unless another is in adverse possession of other parts of the tract); American Tel., etc., Co. v. Jones, 78 Ill. App. 372; Lamb v. Swain, 48 N. C. 370 (good against all but one having better title).

That the land must be within the boundaries of plaintiff's deed see Lindsay v. Latham, 107 S. W. 267, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 867; Edwards v. Noyes, 65 N. Y. 125; Rice v. Chase, 74 Vt. 362, 52 Atl. 967; Fullam v. Foster, 68 Vt. 590, 35 Atl. 484.

If the claim of title is to less than the deed covers plaintiff has possession only to even though part of the tract is covered by an elder title, if plaintiff has actual possession of some part of the lappage and there is no actual occupancy by other persons of any part of the tract covered by the elder title.[60] But not if plaintiff has no possession of any part of the lappage.[61] Where, however, there is some actual possession by other persons under color and claim of title to the whole, if neither party has title and right of possession the first occupant has possession of the whole, except such part as in actual possession of the other;[62] and his possession of the part actually occupied by the other reverts without further actual entry on abandonment of possession by the other;[63] but if one party is the true owner then his possession extends to all not occupied by the other.[64] The general doctrine of possession of all from possession of a part does not apply where the tract is a very large one.[65]

(5) ADVERSE POSSESSION FOR TIME SUFFICIENT TO ACQUIRE TITLE. Adverse possession for a period long enough to acquire title by adverse possession gives the right to maintain trespass.[66]

(6) MERE POSSESSION[67]— (a) SUFFICIENCY OF THE RIGHT. It is a general rule which is supported by decisions from nearly every jurisdiction that, as against a mere tort-feasor, mere actual possession of land is alone sufficient to maintain trespass.[68] the extent of his actual claim. Hosford v. Whitcomb, 56 Vt. 651.

The doctrine applies where the nature of claim and color of title is apparent. Penn v. Preston, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 14 (uninclosed woodland if clearly a part of inclosed land); Carpenter v. Logee, 24 R. I. 383, 53 Atl. 288 (if not in actual possession of another); Gambling v. Prince, 2 Nott & M. (S. C.) 138 (extent of possession may be shown by parol); Grimke v. Brandon, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 356 (although part is across a navigable stream where plaintiff has never been). But not where there are no definitely apparent boundaries to the claim. Langdon v. Templeton, 66 Vt. 173, 28 Atl. 866, land uninclosed and without definite boundaries.

60. Green v. Bowling, 55 S. W. 1081, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1648; Williams v. Buchanan, 23 N. C. 535, 35 Am. Dec. 760; McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 465, 51 Am. Dec. 637, holding that, although defendant had acquired a subsequent adverse possession of three years, plaintiff's possession is "actual possession" of the land outside his pedis possessio. See also Burt, etc., Lumber Co. v. Hurst, 110 S. W. 242, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 270. Compare Ault v. Meager, 112 Ga. 148, 37 S. E. 185, holding that prescriptive title for period of statute of limitations is necessary.

61. McLean v. Murchison, 53 N. C. 38 (holding that plaintiff's possession is then bounded by the lines of the elder title, and so a mere trespasser can raise the point as it shows plaintiff has neither actual nor constructive possession); Williams v. Buchanan, 23 N. C. 535, 35 Am. Dec. 760.

62. Ralph v. Bayley, 11 Vt. 521 (holding that such occupant can maintain trespass against that other); Weld v. Scott, 12 U. C. Q. B. 537. Contra, Baldwin v. Braydon, 5 N. Brunsw. 169.

63. McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 465, 51 Am. Dec. 637.

Colorado.— Omaha, etc., Smelting, etc., Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 41, 21 Pac. 925, 16 Am. St. Rep. 185, 5 L. R. A. 236, taking ore.

Connecticut.— Mallett v. White, 52 Conn. 50 (possession, however recent, of a de facto trustee); Sutton v. Lockwood, 40 Conn. 318.

Georgia.— Bass v. West, 110 Ga. 698, 36 S. E. 244; McDonough v. Carter, 98 Ga. 703, 25 S. E. 938; Whiddon v. Williams Lumber Co., 98 Ga. 700, 25 S. E. 770; Markham v. Brown, 37 Ga. 277, 92 Am. Dec. 73.

Illinois.— Galt v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 157 Ill. 125, 41 N. E. 643 (sufficient against one without right of possession or authority from true owner); Morse v. Iman, 42 Ill. 150, 89 Am. Dec. 417; Snow v. McCormick, 43 Ill. App. 537 (sufficient against one not showing a better title).

Iowa.— Blunck v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1908) 115 N. W. 1013.

Kansas.— Hefley v. Baker, 19 Kan. 9; Nelson v. Mather, 5 Kan. 151.

Kentucky.— Wilson v. Bibb, 1 Dana 7, 25 Am. Dec. 118 (sufficient against all the world except rightful owner); North v. Cates, 2 Bibb 591; Crate v. Strong, 69 S. W. 957, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 710, 71 S. W. 1, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1221; Hackney v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 1 Ky. L. Rep. 357 (holding that weakness of plaintiff's title is no defense to laying tracks without condemnation or compensation).

This general rule has been held to apply, although such possession is altogether unsup-

Louisiana.— Frederick v. Goodbee, 120 La. 783, 45 So. 606.

Maine.— Davis v. Alexander, 99 Me. 40, 58 Atl. 55 (rightful as to defendant); Black v. Grant, 50 Me. 364; Hunt v. Rich, 38 Me. 195; Heath v. Williams, 25 Me. 209, 43 Am. Dec. 265; Moore v. Moore, 21 Me. 350 (sufficient against one not showing better title).

Massachusetts.— Nickerson v. Thacher, 146 Mass. 609, 16 N. E. 581 (sufficient against all but owner or person having right of possession); Manners v. Haverhill, 135 Mass. 165 (although the land is not included in plaintiff's deed); Sweetland v. Stetson, 115 Mass. 49; Kilborn v. Rewee, 8 Gray 415; Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray 441 (removal of mud and mussels from plats in plaintiff's exclusive possession).

Michigan.— Bird v. Stark, 66 Mich. 654, 33 N. W. 754.

Minnesota.— Witt v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 38 Minn. 122, 35 N. W. 862, holding that possessor can recover for building railroad tracks without showing better title.

Missouri.— Watts v. Loomis, 81 Mo. 236.

Nebraska.— Chicago R., etc., Co. v. Shepherd, 39 Nebr. 523, 58 N. W. 189.

Nevada.— Rogers v. Cooney, 7 Nev. 213; Courchaine v. Bullion Min. Co., 4 Nev. 369, good except against owner, need only be rightful against defendant.

New Hampshire.— Jenkins v. Palmer, 72 N. H. 592, 58 Atl. 42 (good unless defendant has better right of possession); Colbath v. Anderson, 63 N. H. 617; Berry v. Garland, 26 N. H. 473; Hobson v. Roles, 20 N. H. 41; Moore v. Hodgdon, 18 N. H. 144; Wendell v. Blanchard, 2 N. H. 456.

North Carolina.— Frisbee v. Marshall, 122 N. C. 760, 30 S. E. 21; Salisbury v. Western North Carolina R. Co., 91 N. C. 490; Cohoon v. Simmons, 29 N. C. 189 (sufficient against one without title or authority from true owner); Horton v. Hensley, 23 N. C. 163; Myrick v. Bishop, 8 N. C. 485.

Pennsylvania.— Fisher v. Morris, 5 Whart. 358 (sufficient prima facie); Townsend v. Kerns, 2 Watts 180; Omensetter v. Kemper, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 309, 41 Wkly. Notes Cas. 501.

Rhode Island.— Lavin v. Dodge, 30 R. I. 8, 73 Atl. 376; Carpenter v. Logee, 24 R. I. 383, 53 Atl. 288, must be overcome by a better title.

South Carolina.— Beaufort Land, etc., Co. v. New River Lumber Co., 86 S. C. 358, 68 S. E. 637; Hillhouse v. Jennings, 60 S. C. 392, 38 S. E. 596 (holding that defendant must show a better title in himself); Johnson v. McIlwaine, Rice 368 (entry by defendant under writ of possession against a third person); Gambling v. Prince, 2 Nott & M. 138 (title is not necessarily in question).

South Dakota.— Scott v. Trebilcock, 21 S. D. 333, 112 N. W. 847, sufficient to recover damages for injury to the land.

Tennessee.— Dederick v. State, 122 Tenn. 222, 132 S. W. 975; Allen v. McCorkle, 3 Head 181; Lorge v. Dennis, 5 Sneed 595; Bailey v. Massey, 2 Swan 167.

Texas.— Wilson v. Palmer, 18 Tex. 592 (prior occupancy); Paraffine Oil Co. v. Berry, (Civ. App. 1906) 93 S. W. 1089; Beaumont Lumber Co. v. Ballard, (Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 920 (for cutting trees); Collins v. Turner, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 517 (wrongdoer has no right to put possessor to proof of title).

Utah.— Marks v. Sullivan, 8 Utah 406, 32 Pac. 668, 20 L. R. A. 590, forcible entry by one not the owner.

Vermont.— McGrady v. Mitler, 14 Vt. 128 (prior possession); Sawyer v. Newland, 9 Vt. 383 (however recent, except against one having a better title); Doolittle v. Linsey, 2 Aik. 155 (mere prior occupancy).

West Virginia.— Clay v. St. Albans, 43 W. Va. 539, 27 S. E. 368, 64 Am. St. Rep. 883; Wilson v. Phœnix Co., 40 W. Va. 413, 21 S. E. 1035, 52 Am. St. Rep. 890.

Wisconsin.— Gilman v. Brown, 115 Wis. 1, 91 N. W. 227 (sufficient against all but owner or one authorized by him); Field v. Apple River Log Driving Co., 67 Wis. 569, 31 N. W. 17 (washing away land); Newton v. Marshall, 62 Wis. 8, 21 N. W. 803 (sufficient against one who cannot show better title in himself).

England.— Lewis v. Ponsford, 8 C. & P. 687, 34 E. C. L. 963 (of a house); Catteris v. Cowper, 4 Taunt. 547, 13 Rev. Rep. 682 (mere occupancy gives title against all the world except one with a better title).

Canada.— Clarke v. Harding, 17 N. Brunsw. 495; Humphrey v. Helmes, 10 N. Brunsw. 59 (to land outside plaintiff's deed, although within the limits of the adjoining lot claimed by defendant under color of title to the whole and actual possession of another part); Gaudin v. McKilligan, 7 N. Brunsw. 392 (against adjoining owner on a question of boundary); Hodgson v. Carr, 5 N. Brunsw. 499; Des Barres v. Bell, 20 Nova Scotia 482; Le Blanc v. Cutter, 2 Nova Scotia Dec. 552; Kellington v. Herring, 17 U. C. C. P. 639 (sufficient against one not authorized by owner); Boulton v. Shand, 10 U. C. Q. B. 351 (sufficient if defendant shows no better right in himself or one under whose authority he acted).

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trespass," § 38.

Possession is prima facie evidence of title and he who invades it must establish his title. If this were not so, a holder of land could be put to proof of title against the world by any one who might choose to trespass or squat upon his lands. Beaufort Land, etc., Co. v. New River Lumber Co., 86 S. C. 358, 68 S. E. 637.

ported by evidence of title.[69] So the doctrine has been held applicable although it affirmatively appears that plaintiff is without title,[70] and that title is in a third person,[71]

Extent and limits of rule.— The forcible entry statute does not alter the common-law remedy. Marks v. Sullivan, 8 Utah 406, 32 Pac. 668, 20 L. R. A. 590. And the rule applies, although defendant obtained possession by his trespass. Zundel v. Baldwin, 114 Ala. 328, 21 So. 420. Where both parties have been in actual possession, the one who first had actual and exclusive possession prevails. Coffin v. Lawson, 7 Houst. (Del.) 327, 32 Atl. 79; Kellogg v. Vollentine, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 226. And after peaceably regaining possession plaintiff may maintain trespass for a subsequent trespass. Illinois, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Cobb, 94 Ill. 55; Illinois R., etc., Co. v. Cobb, 82 Ill. 183. Sometimes the rule is qualified by a requirement that the possession be legal and peaceable (Mott v. Hopper, 116 La. 629, 40 So. 921; Litchworth v. Bartells, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 136), or rightful (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 141 Ala. 335, 37 So. 490); Ehle v. Quackenboss, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 537.

(b) Sufficiency of the Possession. All forms of occupation are insufficient to maintain trespass which are less than possession in the legal sense.[75] Possession must be at the time of the trespass [76] and must be exclusive of defendant.[77] For instance, where both parties have equal claim to possession, plaintiff cannot maintain his action.[78] Such possession, however, need not necessarily be exclusive of persons other than defendant.[79] Possession by an agent or servant is sufficient possession in the principal.[80] And it is held that a wife who, by virtue of the husband's absence, is exclusively in possession of land has such possession as will authorize an action by her for a wrongful entry on the land.[81] Fencing land ordinarily gives possession sufficient to maintain trespass,[82] but it is not essential [83] A mere entry without title does not give possession,[84] but where possession has been taken it continues without further acts of possession [85] etc., R. Co., 71 Wis. 399, 37 N. W. 225; Wadleigh v. Marathon County Bank, 58 Wis. 546, 17 N. W. 314; Winchester v. Stevens Point, 58 Wis. 350, 17 N. W. 3, 547.

75. Spencer v. Weatherly, 46 N. C. 327.

Applications of rule.— Occupation is not sufficient to maintain trespass where it is under a right to cut a limited number of trees only (Monahan v. Foley, 4 U. C. Q. B. 129); to gather seaweed on a beach (Tappan v. Burnham, 8 Allen (Mass.) 65; Parsons v. Smith, 5 Allen (Mass.) 578); the right as agent to keep trespassers away from land (Chenault v. Quisenberry, 81 S. W. 690, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 462); under a grant of an easement only (Wilson v. Sinclair, 8 N. Brunsw. 343); by a servant of a house occupied in connection with his employment (Heffelfinger v. Fulton, 25 Ind. App. 33, 56 N. E. 688; Mulberry v. Carrier, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 51; Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 1032; Hunt v. Colson, 3 Moore & S. 790, 30 E. C. L. 527; Williams v. Herrick, 5 U. C. Q. B. 613); of a school by the schoolmaster (Monaghan v. Ferguson, 3 U. C. Q. B. 484); by a mere cropper of land, not occupying it (McKeeby v. Webster, 170 Pa. St. 624, 32 Atl. 1096, holding that the tenant, not his cropper, should bring the action; Greber v. Kleckner, 2 Pa. St. 289; Carter v. Pinchbeck, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 356); or by the possessor of the key of a house given to enable him to take possession of personalty therein (Davis v. Wood, 7 Mo. 162).

76. Knight v. Empire Land Co., 55 Fla. 301, 45 So. 1025; Yellow River R. Co. v. Harris, 35 Fla. 385, 17 So. 568; Jones v. Patterson, 66 S. W. 377, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1838 (holding that there can be no recovery for acts done before); Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Shepherd, 39 Nebr. 523, 58 N. W. 189; Blair Iron, etc., Co. v. Lloyd, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 158.

77. Morgan v. Boyes, 65 Me. 124 (holding that a right of way does not give exclusive possession); Smith v. Slocomb, 11 Gray (Mass.) 280 (holding that use of land between the traveled part of a highway and the adjoining land by the owner of the adjoining land who does not own in the highway gives no exclusive possession but is a mere easement); Allen v. Suseng, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 204.

Where the trespass is to something attached to the realty by plaintiff the rule does not apply. Coffin v. Lawson, 7 Houst. (Del.) 327, 32 Atl. 79, removing a fence.

78. Bartholomew v. Edwards, 1 Houst. (Del.) 17; Shields v. Heard, 53 S. W. 820, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 992 (acts of same general character by both parties); Ramos Lumber, etc., Co. v. Labarre, 116 La. 559, 40 So. 898; Litchfield v. Ferguson, 141 Mass. 97, 6 N. E. 721; Barnstable v. Thacher, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 239; Bailey v. McNeily, 20 U. C. Q. B. 451 (holding that building a fence which is immediately torn down by the other person gives no exclusive possession).

79. Holly v. Brown, 14 Conn. 255 (joint possession sufficient); McCormick v. Huse, 66 Ill. 315.

Dedicated land.— It is possible to obtain possession although the land has been dedicated as a park. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Higginbotham, 153 Ala. 334, 44 So. 872.

Possession such as to disseize the true owner is unnecessary. Currier v. Gale, 9 Allen (Mass.) 522; Langdon v. Templeton, 66 Vt. 173, 28 Atl. 866.

80. Field v. Lang, 89 Me. 454, 36 Atl. 984 (agent); Russell v. Thorn, 1 Mo. 390 (by agent or keeper); Davis v. Clancy, 3 McCord (S. C.) 422 (agent).

81. Bien v. Fonger, 139 Wis. 150, 120 N. W. 862; Ford v. Schliessman, 107 Wis. 479, 83 N. W. 761.

82. Lake v. Briley, 5 U. C. Q. B. 136, against mere occupant of another part of the land.

83. Eureka Min., etc., Co. v. Way, 11 Nev. 171, where boundaries are clearly marked.

84. Savage v. Holyoke, 59 Me. 345 (entry twenty years before to foreclose a mortgage, with no dominion exercised); Merritt v. Quinton, 2 N. Brunsw. 209 (holding that entry on land in another's occupation and building a fence does not give possession to maintain trespass against a third person who tears it down). And see Hooper v. Herald, 154 Mich. 529, 118 N. W. 3, holding that where plaintiff did not have title to land on which he erected a fence, and was never in possession or occupancy until he entered to erect the fence, which was thereafter removed by defendant, who continued to occupy the land, plaintiff may not maintain trespass.

85. Myers v. Myers, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 306

unless abandoned.[86] Mere actual occupancy without color of title is not sufficient to maintain trespass except to land in pedis possessio.[87]

(7) Constructive Possession. Constructive as well as actual possession may be sufficient to maintain trespass.[88]

(8) Title to Land Not Occupied by Another — (a) Full Legal Title. In the absence of actual possession in any one, complete and unrestricted title to land gives the owner constructive possession sufficient to maintain trespass [89]

(holding that entry by defendant and taking a crop planted by him while in possession is not a trespass against plaintiff who entered after the planting, while defendant was out of actual possession); Langdon v. Templeton, 66 Vt. 173, 28 Atl. 866 (holding that after taking possession of unoccupied timber, the fact that no further act was done for thirteen years does not, as matter of law, show abandonment of possession); Patchin v. Stroud, 28 Vt. 394 (holding that an interval of fifteen years, the period of the statute of limitations, since the last possessory act does not as matter of law show loss of possession); Hibbard v. Foster, 24 Vt. 542 (holding that acts of possession need not be renewed from year to year; that continual claim is enough).

86. Macauley v. Kamp, 60 Ill. App. 31, holding that removal of fences shows abandonment.

Mere neglect to work a place is not abandonment of possession. Kinney v. Ferguson, 101 Mich. 178, 59 N. W. 401.

Where a tenant abandons possession, the lessor cannot sue for acts of another thereafter and before reëntry. Wickham v. Freeman, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 183.

87. Alabama.— Blackburn v. Baker, 7 Port. 284, holding that possession of one tract does not give possession of adjoining tract.

Illinois.— Webb v. Sturtevant, 2 Ill. 181.

Kentucky.— Fish v. Branamon, 2 B. Mon. 379 (ousts owner only to extent of pedis possessio); McClain v. Todd, 5 J. J. Marsh. 335, 22 Am. Dec. 37; Phillips v. Beattyville Mineral, etc., Co., 88 S. W. 1058, 28 Ky. L. Canada.— Nicholson v. Page, 27 U. C. Q. B. 318, right under patent presumed, in absence of evidence, to have begun only at date thereof.

Subsequent cure of defective title.—As a plaintiff in trespass quare clausum fregit must recover on proof of his title or possession at the time of the alleged trespass, his defective title at that time will not be aided by defendant's subsequent purchase of the land from one who may be estopped from denying plaintiff's title, although defendant may have notice of facts constituting estoppel at the time of his purchase; estoppels in pais operating only upon existing rights. Alaculsy Lumber Co. v. Gudger, 134 Ga. 603, 68 S. E. 427.

Under special statutory provisions a patentee is sometimes entitled to action for injury to land done before the issue of the patent. Brock v. Smith, 14 Ark. 431; Smith v. Morgan, 68 Wis. 358, 32 N. W. 135; Conklin v. Hawthorn, 29 Wis. 476.

Relation back of conveyances.— A grant made to correct a previous grant which erroneously described the land does not relate back to the date of the prior deed (Missouri Lumber, etc., Co. v. Zeitinger, 45 Mo. App. 114); nor does a tax deed made several years after the purchaser was entitled to it (Pierce v. Hall, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 142), or made a year after the sale as the law provided (Paul v. Linscott, 56 N. H. 347).

Unexecuted contract of sale.— Where a complaint alleged that a trespass was committed about December 1, and a contract for the sale of the land was executed December 12, and both vendor and vendee were plaintiffs, the damage to the lots was suffered by the vendor before the contract of sale was executed, and he could have recovered had he alone brought the action. (b) IMPERFECT LEGAL TITLE. Legal title is sufficient, although restricted to some extent,[96] or defeasible by third persons,[97] or subject to certain servitudes in favor of third persons,[98] or although title is defective, if the defect is not such as to wholly invalidate the title,[99] for plaintiff may sue on establishing a prima facie title.[1] But mere color of title without any actual interest is not sufficient to maintain trespass.[2] There is no such thing as constructive possession based on color of title.[3]

(9) RIGHTS LESS THAN LEGAL TITLE IN LAND NOT ACTUALLY OCCUPIED BY ANOTHER — (a) IN REM. A right less than full legal title is sufficient to maintain trespass if it is a right in rem in the land, giving right of possession.[4]

Where there is a mere technical defect in plaintiff's conveyance only the grantor can object. Arden v. Kermit, Anth. N. P. (N. Y.) 112 (title under quit rent and rent paid); Sawyer v. Newland, 9 Vt. 383 (imperfect division of land held in common). The state only can object to a technical defect in a patent. Zumwalt v. Dickey, 92 Cal. 156, 28 Pac. 212; Williams v. Sheldon, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 654, failure to seal.

2. Price v. Greer, 76 Ark. 426, 88 S. W. 985; Chenault v. Quisenberry, 81 S. W. 690, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 462; Jones v. Patterson, 66 S. W. 377, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1838 (grant to plaintiff of land not owned by grantor by deed which transferred land he did own); Blake v. Grondin, 141 Mich. 104, 104 N. W. 423 (title lost by tax-sale); Kraus v. Congdon, 161 Fed. 18, 88 C. C. A. 182.

An invalid tax title does not give constructive possession. Longfellow v. Quimby, 29 Me. 196, 48 Am. Dec. 525; Cushing v. Longfellow, 26 Me. 306; Wadleigh v. Marathon County Bank, 58 Wis. 546, 17 N. W. 314; Kraus v. Congdon, 161 Fed. 18, 88 C. C. A. 182.

A title invalid by reason of previous grant does not give constructive possession. Greer v. Bowling, 55 S. W. 1081, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1648; Racquette Falls Land Co. v. Buyce, 43 Misc. (N. Y.) 402, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 359; Rowe v. Cape Fear Lumber Co., 129 N. C. 97, 39 S. E. 748.

3. Kraus v. Congdon, 161 Fed. 18, 88 C. C. A. 182.

4. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Knight, 122 Ga. 290, 50 S. E. 124 (interest in property necessary); State v. Newton, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 455 (interest giving right of possession sufficient); Richardson v. Milburn, 11 Md. 340 (holding that a possessory right, at least, is necessary); Dorsey v. Eagle, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 321 (interest, although temporary, sufficient if exclusive); Stevens v. Adams, 1 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 587.

Application and limits of rule.— A tenant by curtesy can maintain trespass (Clark v. Welton, 1 Root (Conn.) 299), or a minister settled for a term for years or for life (Cargill v. Sewall, 19 Me. 288), or a grantee of a right springing from mere possession (Capen v. Sheldon, 78 Vt. 39, 61 Atl. 864), or a grantee of equity of redemption at sheriff's sale, as the mortgagor before entry by mortgagee has a right of possession (Fernald v. Linscott, 6 Me. 234); so entry, survey, or patent of government land is sufficient by statute (Terry v. Johnson, 96 Ky. 95, 27 S. W. 984, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 307), a lease of a pond with exclusive right to take ice is a sufficient right to sustain action in some form of an encroachment (Richards v. Gauffret, 145 Mass. 486, 14 N. E. 535), or assignment of land from one having only a right by application filed in the land-office, patent geing issued after the trespass but before the bringing of the action (Gilbert v. McDonald, 94 Minn. 289, 102 N. W. 712, 110 Am. St. Rep. 368), or a warrant for unimproved land (Baker v. King, 18 Pa. St. 138), or administrator's right to possession of land (Carter v. Jackson, 56 N. H. 364), but right of trustees of a town in its streets is not sufficient being a mere supervisory right (St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Summit, 3 Ill. App. 155; Connor v. New Albany, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 88, 12 Am. Dec. 207); nor a crown grant of a privilege of building mills in a stream, as it conveys

(b) In Personam. A mere executory right in personam will not sustain an action of trespass for injury to the land,[5] although it may give some form of action for injury to the right;[6] but an equitable title with right of possession has been held sufficient to maintain trespass.[7]

(10) Estoppel. It is well settled that defendant may be estopped to deny plaintiff's title and consequent right to maintain trespass;[8] and on the other no right in the soil (Frink v. Hill, (East. T. 1831) Stevens N. Brunsw. Dig. 744); nor a parol sale of an interest in lands, being insufficient by reason of the statute of frauds to convey an interest, as growing trees (Deland v. Vanstone, 26 Mo. App. 297; Drake v. Howell, 133 N. C. 162, 45 S. E. 539), or grass (Powers v. Clarkson, 17 Kan. 218); nor a mere right to use the sand on a railroad right of way (Vermilya v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 606, 24 N. W. 234, 55 Am. Rep. 279), nor mere right to use the land (Lomax v. Phillips, 113 La. 850, 37 So. 777, 68 L. R. A. 661); nor right to receive a patent to government land, there being no actual possession (Shoenberger v. Baker, 22 Pa. St. 396, pending proceedings as to who is entitled to the patent); nor the grant of a right to take something from the land (Duffield v. Rosenzweig, 150 Pa. St. 543, 24 Atl. 705 [affirming 144 Pa. St. 520, 23 Atl. 4], oil; Breckenridge v. Woolner, 8 N. Brunsw. 303, trees); but in some cases a parol grant invalid under the statute of frauds has been held sufficient (Ganter v. Atkinson, 35 Wis. 48, grantee of exclusive right to mine ore; Glenwood Lumber Co. v. Phillips, [1904] A. C. 405, 73 L. J. P. C. 62, 90 L. T. Rep. N. S. 741, 20 T. L. R. 531, license from governor to cut timber, giving an exclusive right to occupation).

5. Herman v. Mountain Park Land Co., 85 Ark. 208, 107 S. W. 391, 122 Am. St. Rep. 27; Sabine, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 65 Tex. 389.

Applications of rule.— Accordingly it has been held that a mere license to do something on the land will not suffice (Powers v. Clarkson, 17 Kan. 218; Balcom v. McQuesten, 65 N. H. 81, 17 Atl. 638, to cut ice; Sabine, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 65 Tex. 389, to graze cattle; Hull v. Sanctuary, 68 Vt. 57, 33 Atl. 899, to a flow of water to supply a mill); nor a contract for purchase (Newman v. Mountain Park Land Co., 85 Ark. 208, 107 S. W. 391, 122 Am. St. Rep. 27; Greve v. Wood-Harmon Co., 173 Mass. 45, 52 N. E. 1070; Gates v. Comstock, 107 Mich. 546, 65 N. W. 544; Des Jardins v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 95 Mich. 140, 54 N. W. 718, contract giving no right to possession before payment; Olson v. Minnesota, etc., R. Co., 89 Minn. 280, 94 N. W. 871; Tabor v. Robinson, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 483, contract giving future right to possession; Robb v. Mann, 11 Pa. St. 300, 51 Am. Dec. 551; McNaught v. Swing, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 467, contract giving future right to possession); or bond for purchase (Dean v. Comstock, 32 Ill. 173); or equitable right to conveyance (Steen v. Mark, 32 S. C. 286, 11 S. E. 93); or a lien on crops not in use at the time of the grant, it being a mere executory agreement (Brainard v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97); or a mere right of entry (Polk v. Henderson, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 310); or a right to enter for breach of condition (Carter v. Branson, 79 Ind. 14, condition subsequent in a deed; Ellsworth v. McDowell, 44 Nebr. 707, 62 N. W. 1082, right to reënter for breach of contract of purchase; Jewett v. Berry, 20 N. H. 36, condition subsequent); or right to annul a conveyance for fraud (Halsey v. Huse, 46 Conn. 389); or regain land from plaintiff's wife granted after decree setting aside a deed to her (O'Hagan v. Clinesmith, 24 Iowa 249); or a purchase of land adversely held, such purchase not conveying any title (Bynum v. Carter, 26 N. C. 310; Ripley v. Yale, 16 Vt. 257; Mooney v. McIntosh, 19 Nova Scotia 419 [affirmed in 14 Can. Sup. Ct. 740, 7 Can. L. T. Occ. Notes 390]. But see Cook v. Foster, 7 Ill. 652; Sanders v. Ditch, 110 La. 884, 34 So. 860); or purchase of part of a tract, "to be surveyed off" (Glen Mfg. Co. v. Weston Lumber Co., 80 Fed. 242); or purchase of and part payment for government land (Henderson v. McLean, 8 U. C. C. P. 42); or right to raise a crop on shares (Decker v. Decker, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 13; Bradish v. Schenck, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 151); or lease of a stall in a city market (Strickland v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 154 Pa. St. 348, 26 Atl. 431, 21 L. R. A. 224); nor a mere right to enter and cut trees (Perry v. Buck, 12 U. C. Q. B. 451).

Title by estoppel gives constructive possession sufficient to maintain trespass. Drake v. Howell, 133 N. C. 162, 45 S. E. 539; Phelps v. Blount, 13 N. C. 177.

hand it is held that plaintiff may be estopped to assert his right [9] or to recover in the action.[10]

(II) REALTY OF A PARTICULAR NATURE — (A) Things on the Boundary Line. Destruction by the owner of land of objects on the boundary line is a trespass against the adjacent owner, as they are tenants in common of them;[11] and so is an interference with the user by the adjoining owner of his half of the party-wall.[12] Taking and converting an object hanging over one's land from the adjacent land is a trespass, as it belongs to the adjacent owner,[13] but not the mere removal of overhanging branches, without converting them [14] unless removed

What does not constitute estoppel.— A right of way from defendant to plaintiff does not estop him from denying title to other parts of the land (Bishop v. Blair, 36 Ala. 80); nor that the locus is part of a lot the balance of which defendant purchased from plaintiff (Kissam v. Gaylord, 46 N. C. 294).

9. See cases cited infra, this note.

Acts creating estoppel see Clinton v. Franklin, 83 S. W. 142, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1053 (holding that where plaintiff sued a city for damages because of its construction of a sidewalk on a portion of a lot belonging to him, and plaintiff's son testified in his father's behalf, and made no claim to any part of the lot, or to the damages sought to be recovered, his failure to do so estopped him to make any claim against the city for damages, irrespective of his interest in the land); Immaculate Conception Church v. Sheffer, 88 Hun (N. Y.) 335, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 724 [affirmed in 156 N. Y. 670, 50 N. E. 1118]; Davis v. Morris, 132 N. C. 435, 43 S. E. 950 (holding that laying of land out as a street and recognizing it as such in grants of land on each side and permitting grantees to use it as such estops grantor from maintaining trespass against a grantee for putting a woodpile there); Joyce v. Conlin, 72 Wis. 607, 40 N. W. 212.

Acts not creating estoppel.— Porter v. Midland R. Co., 125 Ind. 476, 25 N. E. 556; Bravard v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 115 Ind. 1, 17 N. E. 183 (both holding that estoppel by acquiescence to enjoin a railroad from use of a street for its railroad does not create an estoppel to sue for the trespass); Moore v. Pear, 129 Mich. 513, 89 N. W. 347 (holding that assessing land to plaintiff does not estop a village from asserting its actual possession); De Camp v. Wallace, 45 Misc. (N. Y.) 436, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 746 (holding that license to cross land with trees cut under contract with a third person, under which contract defendant claimed a right to cut plaintiff's trees, does not estop plaintiff to assert his title where he never saw the contract or knew defendant made such a claim); Cheeney v. Nebraska, etc., Stone Co., 41 Fed. 740 (holding that a landowner who in good faith points out to the owner of adjoining land an incorrect division line, both parties being ignorant of the true line, is not estopped from denying that such line is the true boundary); Craft v. Yeaney, 66 Pa. St. 210; Heck v. Knapp, 20 U. C. Q. B. 360 (both holding that the bringing of ejectment by plaintiff against defendant does not operate as an estoppel as being an admission of defendant's possession).

10. Wrightsville, etc., R. Co. v. Holmes, 85 Ga. 668, 11 S. E. 658, a railroad director participating in locating the road and afterward buying the land is estopped to recover damages for the location.

Instances.— Removal of a partition fence, although defendant stood on his own land (Garrett v. Sewell, 108 Ala. 521, 18 So. 737); and although each adjoining owner built half and defendant only removed the half he built (Smith v. Johnson, 76 Pa. St. 191; Stoner v. Hunsicker, 47 Pa. St. 514); destruction of a line fence (Quillen v. Betts, 1 Pennew. (Del.) 53, 39 Atl. 595) regardless of which one owns the fence (Sayles v. Bemis, 57 Wis. 315, 15 N. W. 432); destruction of trees growing on the line (Quillen v. Betts, 1 Pennew. (Del.) 53, 39 Atl. 595; Relyea v. Beaver, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 547 [affirmed in 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326]; Miller v. Mutzabaugh, 3 Pa. Dist. 449; Miller v. Holland, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 622), or a party-wall (Schile v. Brokhahus, 80 N. Y. 614); cutting into a party-wall without first making compensation (Ritter v. Sieger, 105 Pa. St. 400); forcibly ejecting plaintiff from a house standing partly on defendant's right of way, although plaintiff had no interest in the house (Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 1032), constitute trespasses.

St. Rep. 621, 21 L. R. A. 729 (holding that after plaintiff's refusal railroad may remove overhanging beyond the point of overhang.[15] Digging holes and setting posts of a line fence partly on adjacent owner's land is a trespass.[16] But hanging property on a division fence is not a trespass.[17]

(B) Land Covered With Water. Trespass quare clausum lies for an entry on land covered with water,[18] or taking oysters planted by plaintiff in the common waters of the state,[19] or for entry and use of land between high and low water mark.[20] But it is not a trespass to enter on uninclosed land between high and low water mark to fish or to take oysters if there is (as in some states) a public right to do so.[21]

(D) Highways. The owner of the fee in a street [23] or highway [24] can maintain an action of trespass for acts on his land therein not justified by the right of way. This principle has been applied in various instances such as cutting trees,[25] or branches which strike the engineer as he leans from his cab); Lemmon v. Webb, [1895] A. C. 1, 59 J. P. 564, 64 L. J. Ch. 205, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 647, 11 Reports 116.

building a railroad thereon,[26] or erecting telegraph lines thereon without the consent of the owner.[27]

(E) Things Affixed to Another's Realty. The owner of land cannot recover for an injury to anything affixed to it or part of it that is owned by another.[28] On the other hand, one who owns a certain specific thing which is a part of another's realty can maintain trespass quare clausum for an injury to it as trees growing on another's land,[29] growing crops,[30] the subsoil,[31] a building,[32] or a dam.[33] The action lies by such owner, although the thing injured was attached to the land by the plaintiff under a mere license or a contract, so that no interest in the land was acquired.[34] And an action lies even against the owner of the land for an inter-

C. P. 140); or who sells the trees after removal (Clark v. Dasso, 34 Mich. 86).

Ownership of fee.— Plaintiff must own the fee of the highway to entitle him to maintain trespass (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Krueger, 30 Ind. App. 28, 64 N. E. 635), except where otherwise provided by statute (Edsall v. Howell, 86 Hun (N. Y.) 424, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 892; Douglas v. Fox, 31 U. C. C. ference therewith unless after revocation of the license and reasonable notice to remove the thing is suffered to remain.[35]

(F) Trespass De Bonis For Thing Part Of, Attached To, or Severed From Realty, in Which Plaintiff Has an Interest. Mere possession of land is sufficient right to maintain trespass de bonis for things severed therefrom during such possession.[36] Severing a part of the realty, under agreement with the owner that it should belong upon severance to the person severing, gives a right sufficient to maintain trespass de bonis for the thing severed,[37] but not if some further act is necessary [38] unless the severance was under circumstances which gave the person severing a lien.[39] Where a trespasser severed property from realty before plaintiff's right in the land accrued, but removed it thereafter, such right, whether actual or constructive possession of the land, gives plaintiff possession of the thing severed; and defendant cannot set up a jus tertii of the former owner of the land, to defeat the action of trespass de bonis;[40] but if the right is a mere temporary possession it will not sustain such action,[41] nor if the severance was by the owner so that the thing severed became his chattel before the grant of the land.[42] Where the lands are in possession of a tenant, the severance puts an end to his interest so that the owner can at once without entry maintain the action against third persons who sever and remove during the tenancy,[43] or against the tenant himself for taking after severing,[44] at least, if the taking is after and at another time from the severance.[45] While land remains in the adverse possession of another, the owner cannot maintain trespass de bonis against such holder [46] for taking things severed by him from the realty during such holding,[47] nor against a third person who takes

(H) Incorporeal Hereditaments. Trespass will not lie for the disturbance of an incorporeal hereditament,[50] such as a right of way,[51] or a mere water privilege,[52] or the right to use a church pew,[53] although such disturbance is an actionable wrong, but trespass on the case will lie.[54]

(III) PERSONALTY — (A) Rights Essential — Possession, Actual or Constructive. The gist of trespass to personalty is the injury to possession,[55] and title is not necessary to maintain trespass except where the owner has not the actual possession of the property.[56] Actual or constructive possession is necessary to maintain an action for a trespass to personalty.[57] The strict requirements of the common law are, however, often relaxed, and one having general or special property and a right to immediate possession is allowed to maintain the action.[58] The owner cannot maintain the action where possession of property is held by another

Dec. 615; Lotan v. Cross, 2 Campb. 464, holding that the action lies even against the bailee); but not if the bailment is for a term which has not expired (Lunt v. Brown, 13 Me. 236; McFarland v. Smith, Walk. (Miss.) 172).

The mortgagee may maintain an action for trespass, although the property was held by a mortgagor, where the mortgage does not expressly or impliedly give the mortgagor the right to possession. Dunlap v. Steele, 80 Ala. 424; Boswell v. Carlisle, 70 Ala. 244; Codman v. Freeman, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 306. And see Porter v. Flintoff, 6 U. C. C. P. 335.

The vendee may maintain trespass, although delivery has not been made (Parsons v. Dickinson, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 352; Beals v. Guernsey, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 446, 5 Am. Dec. 348; Poole v. Mitchell, 1 Hill (S. C.) 404; Forman v. Dawes, C. & M. 127, 41 E. C. L. 75); even against the vendor (Smith v. Sherwood, 2 Tex. 460, although thing given to vendor in exchange was destroyed before delivered; Edwards v. Edwards, 11 Vt. 587, 34 Am. Dec. 711).

81. Boynton v. Turner, 13 Mass. 391, holding that hiring a chaise by an infant gives his father who ratifies the act and, being entitled to his wages, directs him to pay the hire, a right to maintain an action against one who injures it.

82. Thornton v. Dwight Mfg. Co., 137 Ala. 211, 34 So. 187 (statutory vendor's lien on timber, after delivery to the purchaser); Ledbeter v. Blassingame, 31 Ala. 495 (right of vendee of wagon made to order, before delivery); Thompson v. Spinks, 12 Ala. 155 (statutory right of landlord to attach a crop grown on the leased land to secure his rent); Wilson v. Wilson, 37 Md. 1, 11 Am. Rep. 518 (right by verbal agreement purporting to convey after-acquired property, to property acquired thereafter); Merrill v. Hunnewell, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 213 (right to a definite number of brick, part of a mass and not separated or designated specially); Waldron v. Haupt, 52 Pa. St. 408 (right as vendor of property sold and delivered but not paid for); Payne v. Ulmer, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 516 (mere right to take ice from a canal).

83. Woodruff v. Halsey, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 333, 19 Am. Dec. 329 (mortgage even before condition broken); Buck v. Aikin, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 466, 19 Am. Dec. 535; Roberts v. Messinger, 134 Pa. St. 298, 19 Atl. 625 (statutory right of widow and children to retain property of a certain value free from claims of creditors, although there has been no administration).

84. Russell v. Gray, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 541 (holding that defendant in replevin who recovers judgment for the value of the property and collects it cannot deny title of plaintiffs therein in an action by such plaintiff for a subsequent taking by such defendant); Darby v. Anderson, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 369 (holding that where defendant claims under a lease from plaintiffs' guardian which he had no right to make, defendant cannot dispute their right); Houston v. Howard, 39 Vt. 54 (holding that if property is returned to the owner's custody after attachment, the attaching creditor is estopped against a subsequent attachment to deny that it is the creditor's).

rights in the property trespassed upon, against the owner of the land,[87] nor right against the owner to compensation for benefit rendered by the trespass,[88] the owner being entitled to the fruits of the trespass.[89] And recovery of damages for the breaking and entering only does not vest in defendant title to part of the realty severed by him.[90] Nor does the severance from the realty give title to the thing severed, even against a stranger, and the trespasser can therefore bring no action if to maintain it he must establish the ownership.[91] In general a trespasser who takes and holds possession of land for a period short of an adverse holding for the period of the statute of limitations acquires no rights against the owner to improvements therein,[92] but by statute in some states possession for a shorter time gives a right to the value of improvement made by the trespasser.[93] Defendant in trespass de bonis does not acquire title to the goods before the judgment is satisfied,[94] but satisfaction of the judgment vests the title in him,[95] which relates back to the time of taking.[96] A trespasser, however, who has obtained possession of the property, whether it be real or personal, may maintain any action which can be supported by merely establishing possession,[97] and may be described as owner in an indictment for larceny;[98] and an owner who is out of possession cannot transfer his title, unless he is aided by statute.[99]

4. Persons Entitled to Sue. Generally speaking any person may maintain trespass to realty who has sufficient possession of the land [1] as a trustee,[2] although only trustee de facto.[3] Any one in actual possession, although the title is in another,

87. Alabama.— Stewart v. Tucker, 106 Ala. 319, 17 So. 385, holding that preparing land for a crop does not divest the true owner's possession or right to plant a crop, nor give the trespasser a right against the landowner for taking the crop planted by the trespasser.

Illinois.— Cook v. Foster, 7 Ill. 652, holding that intrusion on public domain does not dispossess the sovereign, and so the purchaser of the land gets title and can sue for a removal thereafter by the trespasser of a house built by him thereon.

Kansas.— Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Mihlman, 17 Kan. 224, holding that one who enters and trespasses on land by digging a ditch does not acquire any right to restore it to its former condition.

Kentucky.— Burris v. Johnson, 1 J. J. Marsh. 196, holding that it is not a trespass for a landowner to take the frame of a boat made from timber cut on his land.

Wisconsin.— Warner v. Fountain, 28 Wis. 405, holding that trespass will not lie against a landowner who obtains possession of and removes a house built by mistake on his land.

93. Brown v. Ware, 25 Me. 411, in which it was held that where in an action of entry by the owner the intruder is paid for betterments, he is not then entitled to timber cut by a third person during his possession, as that does not enter into the estimated value of the betterments, but he is entitled to trees cut by himself, as the value of such trees has been considered in the estimate of betterments.

a joint tenant gets no new title on the death of the other tenant and so can maintain trespass for such acts.[16] An action of trespass not being assignable, an assignee of the action cannot sue,[17] except where authorized by statute.[18] In an action for personal injury to a wife the husband must be a party.[19]

5. Persons Liable[20]— a. Property-Owners. The owner of land is not liable for acts done thereon by others in which he takes no part,[21] and the mortgagee of personalty who has not taken possession is not liable for allowing it to remain on plaintiff's realty.[22] But the owner of a house is liable for its encroachment on plaintiff's land.[23]

b. The Person Actually Doing or Aiding in the Doing of the Act. The person who actually does the act is liable, although he was acting for another person,[24] and, in general, any one who aids or coöperates with another in the commission of a trespass is liable for it.[25]

c. Persons Taking no Part in the Actual Doing of the Act — (i) In General. In general where the act of trespass is done by one person other independent persons are not liable for the act.[26] When, however, the act is done by one under Extent and limits of rule.— An independent contractor building a house for the owner of the land is liable for trespasses on adjoining land committed in the course of the work (Kinser v. Dewitt, 7 Ind. App. 597, 34 N. E. 1014; Davison v. Shanahan, 93 Mich. 486, 53 N. W. 624; Ritter v. Sieger, 105 Pa. St. 400; Wallace v. New Castle, etc., R. Co., 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 347. So a servant is liable equally with his master, although acting solely for his master (Lightner v. Brooks, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,344, 2 Cliff. 287), or agent with his principal (Baker v. Davis, 127 Ga. 649, 57 S. E. 62; Burns v. Horkan, 126 Ga. 161, 53 S. E. 946; Diamond v. Smith, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 558, 66 S. W. 141); and a person acting by direction of another is liable equally with the person directing (Meloon v. Read, 75 N. H. 153, 59 Atl. 946). But an agent is not liable for the wrongful continuance of an erection made by him on another's land for his principal, whether the erection was originally lawful but thereafter became a trespass, or the wrongful erection was a trespass. Applications of rule.— An attorney in an action is not liable in general for acts done by an officer outside the authority of a writ issued therein (Ford v. Williams, 13 N. Y. 577, 67 Am. Dec. 83; Hammon v. Fisher, 2 Grant (Pa.) 330; Marks v. Culmer, 6 Utah 419, 24 Pac. 528; Sowell v. Champion, 6 A. & E. 407, 7 L. J. Q. B. 197, 2 N. & P. 627, W. W. & D. 667, 33 E. C. L. 226, 112 Eng. Reprint 156); nor is the justice suing the writ liable for such acts of such officer (Collins v. Ferris, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 246); nor is the judgment plaintiff liable for such acts of such officer (Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 Mich. 620, 30 N. W. 342, 6 Am. St. Rep. 332; Adams v. Freeman, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 117; Marks v. Culmer, 6 Utah 419, 24 Pac. 528); and so a landlord is not liable for a seizure of the wrong person's goods by a bailiff (Becker v. Dupree, 75 Ill. 167).

Liability of attorney.— If the attorney directed the doing of the specific act by the officer, he is liable in trespass. Ford v. Williams, 24 N. Y. 359; Cunningham v. Coyle, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 422; Marks v. Culmer, 6 Utah 419, 24 Pac. 528; Power v. Fleming, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 404; McClevertie v. Massie, 21 U. C. C. P. 516; Benson v. Connor, 6 U. C. C. Liability of justice.— The justice of a court of limited jurisdiction issuing a void writ is liable for acts done within its command. Inos v. Winspear, 18 Cal. 397; Perry v. Mitchell, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 537; Vosburgh v. Welch, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 175; Case v. Shepherd, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 27; McVea v. Walker, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 46, 31 S. W. 839.

Liability of party.— A party who directed the specific act of trespass by the officer is liable in trespass. Inos v. Winspear, 18 Cal. 397; Hay v. Collins, 118 Ga. 243, 44 S. E. 1002; Olsen v. Upsahl, 69 Ill. 273; McNeeley v. Hunton, 30 Mo. 332; Marks v. Culmer, 6 is in general liable for a seizure of goods authorized by his attorney,[31] general authority to collect the claim given to the attorney being enough to make the client responsible.[32] The state cannot be sued in trespass, but a plea that defendant was acting for the state does not make the action one against the state.[33]

(II) Persons For Whom the Act Is Done by Another Person.[34] A person is liable for trespasses of his agents or servants done with his knowledge,[35] or by his consent, given either before or after the act,[36] or by his direction,[37] or instigation,[38] or acting within the scope of their authority conferred by him.[39] So a master is liable if a trespass is the natural and probable result of orders given by him to his servant,[40] or if he ratifies a trespass committed by his servant or agent.[41] There can be no ratification unless the act was done for defendant,[42] or at least purported to be done for him.[43] But a principal is not liable for acts of a servant or agent done outside the scope of his authority,[44] or while acting under orders of a third person.[45]

(III) Persons at Whose Orders, or by Whose Authorization, Encouragement, Direction, or the Like, the Act Is Done by Another Person. The person authorizing the doing of an act of trespass by another is liable, whether the authorization is express,[46] or implied.[47] And one

Requisites of ratification.— The ratification must be with full knowledge of the tortious character of the act (Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271, mere appropriation of proceeds not enough; Freeman v. Rosher, 13 Q. B. 780, 18 L. J. Q. B. 340, 66 E. C. L. 780); and before action brought (Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271; Heller v. North, etc., R. Co., 148 Pa. St. 563, 24 Atl. 114).

Particular acts held sufficient to ratify.— Failure to dissent within reasonable time. Kent County Agricultural Soc. v. Ide, 128 Mich. 423, 87 N. W. 369. Acceptance of the proceeds of the trespass with knowledge of the trespass. Ferriman v. Fields, 3 Ill. App. 252; Hower v. Ulrich, 156 Pa. St. 410, 27 Atl. 37; Voss v. Baker, 28 Fed. Cas. On this ground it has been held that on seizure of goods by the sheriff, interpleading by judgment creditor on claim of goods by a third person ratifies the sheriff's trespass. So it has been held a ratification of the sheriff's act that the principal went on his indemnity bond, told him to sell, and attended and bid at the sale (Gray v. Fortune, 18 U. C. Q. B. 253. But see contra, McLeod v. Fortune, 19 U. C. Q. B. 98); and directing the sheriff to retain an unauthorized wrongful levy is a ratification (Root v. Chandler, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 110, 25 Am. Payment for benefit as affecting rule.— This general rule is not altered by the fact that defendant, after knowledge of an act which, although not in fact done for his benefit, or purporting to be done for him, does in fact benefit him, pays for the benefit. Application of rule.— On this ground it has been held that ratification by judgment plaintiff of a seizure by a sheriff cannot be ratified if plaintiff has not directed it, since the sheriff acts for the court, not for the litigant. Wilson v. Tummon, 1 D. & L. 513, 12 L. J. C. P. 306, 6 M. & G. 236, 6 Scott N. R. 894, 46 E. C. L. 236; Tilt v. Jarvis, 7 U. C. C. P. 145.

Licensing persons to cut trees on plaintiff's land renders the licensor liable (Cook v. American Exch. Bank, 129 N. C. 149, 39 S. E. 746; Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388), although acting under supposed authority as public agents (State v. Smith, 78 Me. 260, 4 Atl. 412, 57 Am. Rep. 802).

47. Marshall v. Eggleston, 82 Ill. App. 52; Sanborn v. Sturtevant, 17 Minn. 200.

Implied authority is given by pointing out plaintiff's steer to a third person as one sold by defendant to him, to the third person to kill him (Hamilton v. Hunt, 14 Ill. 472); by stopping of trains by a railroad on a common, for passengers and shippers to use common to get the train (Allegheny v. Ohio, etc., R. Co., 26 Pa. St. 355); by claim of plaintiff's land by a father, for his son to enter and occupy under the claim, where the father knows and does not object (Binda v. Benbow, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 24); or by a lease of plaintiff's land to lessee to enter and exercise rights of lessee (Marshall v. Eggleston, 82 Ill. App. 52; Snow v. McCormick, 43 Ill. App. 537; Russell v. Fabyan, 34 N. H. 218; London v. Bear, 84 N. C. 266). So a sale of part of plaintiff's realty is an implied authorization to enter and take it (Oswalt v. Smith, 97 Ala. 627, 12 So. 604; Meehan v. Edwards, 19 S. W. 179, 13 Ky. L. who orders the doing of a trespass,[48] advises it,[49] encourages, procures, or incites it,[50] or conspires with the actual doer for the doing of it [51] is liable, but mere leave and license will not render one liable.[52] Defendant need not be personally present to be liable under the foregoing rules,[53] and it is immaterial that the person directing the act was not benefited by it.[54] And therefore a person who as agent of another person directs the doing of the act is liable for it, although he is not personally interested in the act and does not benefit from it.[55]

(IV) Representatives of Deceased Trespassers.[56] At common law trespass to realty does not survive against the trespasser's representatives, but by statute in some states the executor or administrator is liable for actual damages.[57]

6. Defenses — a. Justification. Where defendant had a right to do the act his motive is generally immaterial;[58] but the act must have been done in the intentional exercise of the right.[59] The fact that a third person also trespassed on the land,[60] or that his wrongful act contributed to the damage,[61] is no defense; and trespass to plaintiff's personalty may not be justified by proceedings in executing the judgment obtained by defendant against a third party.[62] A right to build a house on another's land cannot be acquired by prescription and so is no defense.[63]

b. Waiver. An action for the value of the thing severed from realty waives the trespass,[64] but giving a bond to dissolve an attachment writ does not waive a trespass committed in levying the attachment.[65]

c. Custom. Custom is not a good defense to an unlawful act.[66]

d. Injunction. An injunction against plaintiff forbidding him to assert any rights in land is a good defense in trespass, although an appeal is pending;[67] but an injunction in plaintiff's favor against further trespass by defendant will not prevent recovery for trespasses whether done prior to or during the period covered by it,[68] nor the pendency of another action in the United States courts involving title to property in plaintiff's possession but to which defendant is not a party.[69]

e. Benefit to Property. A trespasser on real estate may not, when compensation is demanded for his trespass, urge in defense that he has benefited plaintiff by his wrongful acts.[70]

f. Acts Subsequent to the Trespass. An accord and satisfaction is a good defense,[71] but acts subsequent to the trespass not in satisfaction or release of the right of action are not a defense;[72] and a return of goods wrongfully taken by defendant will not bar an action for the taking;[73] nor will acceptance of a tender of damages under the statute,[74] a retaking of them by plaintiff,[75] obtaining possession by purchase under protest at their sale by defendant,[76] nor paying pound fees to obtain them.[77] Where an act is a public as well as a private wrong a pardon will not relieve from civil liability.[78]

g. Wrongful Acts of Plaintiff — (i) In General. Where property was transferred by the owner in fraud of creditors, a taking by a creditor without legal process is a trespass as he cannot avoid the sale except by legal process;[79] but a taking under a levy against the former owner is not.[80] Fraudulent confusion by plaintiff of his goods with those defendant had a right to take is not a defense to a taking of plaintiff's goods if they could be distinguished.[81] Plaintiff's failure to pay for goods sold and delivered is no defense in trespass for taking them.[82] A trespass is justified when committed from necessity arising without defendant's fault and from plaintiff's wrong,[83] or from accident caused by plaintiff or one with whom he is in privity.[84] In trespass to realty it is not a defense that plaintiff's act enhanced the injury.[85] Plaintiff's wrongful act does not justify an act not necessary to prevent it,[86] nor an act of aggression rather than of mere defense.[87] Entry on plaintiff's land to prevent his committing murder is justifiable,[88] but not to prevent a breach of the peace.[89]

(II) ILLEGAL USE OF REALTY. It is no excuse for trespass on plaintiff's property that he is making an illegal use of it,[90] or intends to put it to an illegal use if it is not actually so used already,[91] or an immoral use.[92]

(III) ESTOPPEL BY CONDUCT. Failure of plaintiff to oppose or object to a trespass is not a defense,[93] at least, if plaintiff does not know of the trespass.[94] Failure to notify defendant that he is trespassing does not operate as an estoppel;[95] but acceptance of compensation for the locus as a highway will estop plaintiff from denying that it is such.[96] Defendant may be estopped to set up a defense otherwise good.[97]

Landlord and tenant — Peaceable entry.— The landlord when entitled to possession is not liable in trespass for peaceable entry on the premises to a lessee holding over (Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318; White v. Naerup, 57 Ill. App. 114; Jones v. Foley, [1891] 1 Q. B. 730, 55 J. P. 521, 60 L. J. Q. B. 464, 64 L. T. Rep. N. S. 538, 39 Wkly. Rep. 510); and one who is entitled to the possession of premises can remove the property left there by a previous tenant, if he exercises care in doing so as the nature of the property demands; and if he leaves it in such a condition that the owner, by reasonable diligence, can take it uninjured, he is not bound to house it or otherwise protect it until the owner sees fit to take possession (U. S. Manufacturing Co. v. Stevens, 52 Mich. 330, 17 N. W. 934); after a peaceable reëntry the landlord may remain and remove doors and windows and the tenant's furniture (Stearns v. Sampson, 59 Me. 568, 8 Am. Rep. 442).

Forcible entry.— In some jurisdictions a forcible entry by a landlord entitled to possession does not entitle the tenant to maintain an action of trespass (Hyatt v. Wood, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 150, 4 Am. Dec. 258; Wilde v. Cantillon, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 123; Overdeer v. Lewis, 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 90, 37 Am. Dec. 440), unless he uses unnecessary violence (Overdeer v. Lewis, 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 90, 37 Am. Dec. 440).

License.— After revoking a license to occupy a house on the land, a licensee is not liable in trespass for entry and injury to it, although the house was built and occupied by the occupant by license of the landowner. Harris v. Gillingham, 6 N. H. 9, 23 Am. Dec. 701. And see Dolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 74.

Trespasser.— As against a mere intruder, who has not acquired a lawful possession, entry by the owner gives no right of action for trespass. Hoots v. Graham, 23 Ill. 81; Browne v. Dawson, 12 A. & E. 624, 10 L. J. Q. B. 7, 4 P. & D. 355, 40 E. C. L. 312, 113 Eng. Reprint 950.

Sufficiency of title.— Title as mortgagee is sufficient (Blaney v. Bearce, 2 Me. 132; Chellis v. Stearns, 22 N. H. 312; Gibbs v. Cruikshank, L. R. 8 C. P. 454, 42 L. J. C. P. 273, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735, 21 Wkly. Rep. 734); and so is a title voidable by a third person (Brown v. Pinkham, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 172); or, as against a mere licensee, a title as to which the evidence of the grantor's power to convey was slight (Blaisdell v. Morse, 75 Me. 542); but not an after-acquired title (Moore v. Crose, 43 Ind. 30; Kilborn v. Rewee, 8 Gray (Mass.) 415; Higgins v. Reynolds, 31 N. Y. 151; Buck v. Aikin, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 466, 19 Am. Dec. 535; Davis v. Elmore, 40 S. C. 533, 19 S. owner,[1] or an obstruction by the owner of access to the land,[2] or an entry and removal of a part of the realty by the owner,[3] although attached to the realty by the person in possession.[4] The weight of authority seems to be that such title is a good defense, although the person in possession has equitable right to the land.[5] But where the person in possession has right of possession against the owner, title is not a defense to an entry by the owner;[6] to one acting by his orders;[7] for a severance of things part of the realty by the owner of the land;[8]

Land held adversely.—Where statutes put the owner of land, after adverse possession for a certain time, to an action to try title it has sometimes been held that he cannot enter (Hood v. Stewart, 2 La. Ann. 219; D'Orgenoy v. Droz, 13 La. 389; Yarborough v. Palmer, 7 La. 153); or where adverse possession for a certain time gives a right by statute to the value of improvements (Bollinger v. McMinn, 47 Tex. or for the expulsion of the occupant by the owner or persons acting for him.[9]

(B) Title as Cotenant. Cotenancy or joint possession is a good defense to an action of trespass by the cotenant[10] or one authorized by him.[11] It is not a defense where there has been an ouster[12] or destruction of the property,[13] except to the extent of defendant's interest,[14] or to an action for mesne profits,[15] or in case plaintiff is in exclusive possession with defendant's consent.[16] Title as tenant in common is also a good defense in an action by a stranger to the cotenancy.[17]

(C) Agreed Boundary. Where adjoining landowners agree on a boundary they are bound by it as to subsequent acts on the land,[18] and likewise their successors,[19] and it has been held to be conclusive as to prior acts;[20] but a mere executory agreement for a survey which has not been completed is no defense for an entry,[21] nor is a completed survey not agreed upon as a boundary.[22]

(D) Force in Asserting Title. Where the owner of land with right to immediate possession uses force in the exercise of his right to enter or retake possession, the question of his liability has been variously determined. The better opinion seems to be that title and right of possession is a good defense to a forcible entry by the owner of land on one holding possession;[23] and forcible expulsion of such action for restoration of possession;[28] and the better opinion seems to be that in the absence of statute no civil action for damages lies against him in any form if no more force was used than was necessary;[29] but that if the personalty or the person of the occupant is injured by excessive force[30] or by carelessness,[31] the owner of the land is liable therefor. There are, however, good authorities which limit the right to set up title as a justification to cases where the entry was peaceable,[32] and hold that the owner is liable in an action of trespass if the entry was accomplished by force,[33] at least, if he injures the personal property or the person

Reasons assigned for rule.— There are several reasons why the law cannot suffer a forcible entry upon a peaceable possession, even though it be in the assertion of a valid title against a mere intruder: (1) Whoever assumes to make such an entry makes himself judge in his own cause, and enforces his own judgment; (2) he does this by the employment of force against a peaceable party; (3) as the other party must have an equal right to judge in his own cause, and to employ force in giving effect to his judgment, a breach of the public peace would be invited, and any wrong, if redressed at all, would be redressed at the cost of a public disturbance, and perhaps of serious bodily injury to the parties. (II) Rights Other Than Title — (A) In General. Right of entry on land is a good defense to a peaceable entry on the land;[35] but a mortgagee's right of entry does not justify injury to the land without entry.[36] A right in rem to the land is a sufficient justification for the exercise of the right thereon by the holder of the right[37] or one in privity with him;[38] but does not justify acts not author-

Applications of rule.—"School land certificates" which by statute give a right to take wood for certain purposes do not justify taking for other purposes. Smith v. Morgan, 68 Wis. 358, 32 N. W. 135. Right to take water from a spring does not justify taking from other springs and obstructing them. Louisville, etc., R. v. Higginbotham, 153 Ala. 334, 44 So. 872. Right of way for a railroad does not justify taking sand to build a round-house (Vermilya v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 606, 24 N. W. 234, 55 Am. Rep. 279), nor the building of a side-track and leaving cars standing on it (Frankle v. Jackson, 33 Fed. 371, 30 Fed. 398). Right to natural drainage does not justify enlarging the drainway. Sharpe v. Lavert, 51 La. Ann. 1249, 26 So. 100. Right to a wagon way does not justify laying a pipe line across the right of way of a railroad (U. S. Pipe Line Co. v. Delaware, etc., Co., 62 N. J. L. 254, 41 Atl. 759, 42 L. R. A. 572); nor does a way for a ditch justify wanton or unnecessary injury to fences across it (Dixon v. Clow, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 188). A way of necessity does not justify a divergence from it, unless impassable (Holmes v. Seely, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 507); nor other private way, although it is impassable (Holmes v. Seely, supra); and a way for passage does not justify discharging water and shoveling snow on the land when not done to improve or repair the way (O'Brien v. Murphy, 189 Mass. 353, 75 N. E. 700); nor making a permanent erection on it (Hays v. Askew, 52 N. C. 272; Taylor v. Coppock, 1 Del. Co. (Pa.) 190); nor the breaking down of a gate over it (Maxwell v. McAtee, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 20, 48 Am. Dec. 409; Wille v. Bartz, 88 Wis. 424, 60 N. W. 789); nor grading and leveling it so that it causes surface water to collect on adjoining land (The Redemptorists v. Wenig, 79 Md. 348, 29 Atl. 667). Right to build a dock does not justify depositing dredging material on plaintiff's oyster bed for another purpose. Post v. Kreischer, 103 N. Y. 110, 8 N. E. 365. Common of estovers is not apportionable and is extinguished by division of the land. Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 639, 25 Am. Dec. 582. Right to maintain a dam and flood land does not justify a dam higher than the grant allows. Fisher v. Paff, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 401. Right to enter and repair an easement does not justify a general entry. Pico v. Colimas, 32 Cal. 578. Right to clean out a ditch to drain a meadow does not justify cleaning it out to carry water from a mill. Darlington v. Painter, 7 Pa. St. 473. Right to unload passengers at a wharf does not justify using plaintiff's landing stage at low water when he could not have landed without, but does at high water when he could have landed but the stage was in the way. Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Dorling, 5 C. B. N. S. 821, 5 Jur. N. S. 869, 28 L. J. C. P. 202, 94 E. C. L. 821. Right to take stone for use on certain land does not justify taking it for use on other land. Thomas v. Oakley, 18 Ves. Jur. 184, 11 Rev. Rep. 181, 34 Eng. Reprint 287. Right to collect water into a tank by drains on land does not justify destruction of drains made by the landowner which do not interfere with the right, nor the erection of a tank larger than the right allowed. Corbitt v. Wilson, 24 Nova Scotia 25.

40. Merithew v. Sisson, 5 N. Brunsw. 373, holding that where a boundary is in dispute right as mortgagee does not justify the acts done under claim of title to the adjoining land.

41. Todd v. Jackson, 26 N. J. L. 525.

Applications of rule.—Expired lease after possession has been given up does not justify a reëntry and taking fittings (Todd v. Jackson, 26 N. J. L. 525; Moxon v. Savage, 2 F. & F. 182. Contra, Daniels v. Brown, 34 N. H. 454, 69 Am. Dec. 505); and tenancy at will determined by a subsequent lease is no defense to an action of trespass de bonis for taking the grass (Kelly v. Waite, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 300).

42. Smith v. Guild, 34 Me. 443 (holding that possession delivered subsequent to the trespass under a writ is no defense); Sweeney v. Montana R. Co., 25 Mont. 543, 65 Pac. 912 (holding that a grant of a right of way for a stream which has already been diverted into said way is no defense to an action for the original diversion).

Highways.— More than a mere entry must be shown to prove a trespass on a highway. Munson v. Mallory, 36 Conn. 165, 4 Am. Rep. 52. A person crossing a railroad in the city limits at a point other than a public crossing is not a trespasser. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. McCombs, 55 S. W. 921, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1358. Where a highway is impassable it is justifiable to pass over adjoining land. Holmes v. Seely, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 507.

Streets.— To erect gates so they swing open over a street, spread earth on it to improve it, or occasionally allow horses and carriages to stand on it is not a trespass against the owner of the fee in the street. Van O'Linda v. Lothrop, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 292, 32 Am. Dec. 261.

Public fishery.— One cannot obtain possession of a state oyster bed common to all citizens so as to make a taking of oysters by others a trespass. Louisville Land, etc., Co. v. Gasquet, 45 La. Ann. 759, 13 So. 171.

Great ponds of over ten acres are subject to public use in Massachusetts, and trespass will not lie by a town owning the fee for the taking of ice. West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen (Mass.) 158.

Right of way for all inhabitants of a town to the seashore is a good defense. Nudd v. Hobbs, 17 N. H. 524.

Navigable waters.— One may tie his vessel or go temporarily on a private wharf projecting into a navigable stream. Degan v. Dunlap, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 69.

Public domain.—There is an implied license to graze cattle on the public domain so that one who has unlawfully inclosed it cannot complain of an entry on it by another to graze cattle. Martin v. Platte Valley Sheep Co., 12 Wyo. 432, 76 Pac. 571, 78 Pac. 1093.

Right to hunt on another's land.— There is in general no right to enter another's land to hunt (Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 378, 46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 74; Glenn v. Kays, 1 Ill. App. 479, holding that actual pursuit of animals, although they are dangerous to man, is not justifiable; Diana Shooting Club v. Lamoreux, 114 Wis. 44, 89 N. W. 880, 91 Am. St. Rep. 898, holding that a state license to hunt gives no right to go on private lands; Paul v. Summerhayes, 4 Q. B. D. 9, 14 Cox C. C. 202, 48 L. J. M. C. 33, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 574, 27 Wkly. Rep. 215, holding that entry for fox hunting is a trespass, and discussing Gundry v. Feltham, 1 T. R. 334, 1 Rev. Rep. 215, 99 Eng. Reprint 1125, to the contrary; Blades v. Higgs, 20 C. B. N. Reprint 1474, holding that the landowner may take from a poacher game that the poacher has killed on the land; Baker v. Berkeley, 3 C. & P. 32, 14 E. C. L. 436, holding that entry into a barn to take a stag which has taken refuge there from the hounds is a trespass); unless otherwise provided by statute or constitution (Fripp v. Hasell, 1 Strobh. (S. C.) 173, holding that by custom and inference from legislative enactment the owner cannot prevent entry on wild, uninclosed lands to hunt animals feræ naturæ, although he forbids it, but that a navigable stream is sufficient inclosure to make hunting unlawful; Broughton v. Singleton, 2 Nott & M. (S. C.) 338; McConico v. Singleton, 2 Mill (S. C.) 244; Payne v. Gould, 74 Vt. 208, 52 Atl. 421, holding that the constitution of Vermont gives a right to hunt and shoot wild game on uninclosed lands of another); nor is an entry to fish justifiable (Coolidge v. Williams, 4 Mass. 140, 144); although the value of the fish taken cannot be recovered by the landowner (Beach v. Morgan, 67 N. H. 529, 41 Atl. 349, 68 Am. St. Rep. 692).

Rights of common in England.— One having a right of common may pull down a house interfering with his right (Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 10 Jur. 799, 15 L. J. Q. B. 239, 55 E. C. L. 757); although it is a dwelling-house actually occupied (Davies v. Williams, 16 Q. B. 546, 15 Jur. 752, 20 L. J. Q. B. 330, 71 E. C. L. 546, holding, however, that he must not come suddenly and without notice or demand and must do no unnecessary damage); but not if there are persons in it at the time (Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 10 Jur. 799, 15 L. J. Q. B. 239, 55 E. C. L. 757. See also Jones v. Jones, 1 H. & C. 1, 31 L. J. Exch. 506).

46. Ashley v. Landers, 9 Allen (Mass.) 250; Winter v. Peterson, 24 N. J. L. 524, 61 Am. Dec. 678.

Highways.— The fact that land is a highway does not justify a taking by the state of gravel outside its limits, nor a taking within the limits for a purpose other than to improve the road (District of Columbia v. Robinson, 14 App. Cas. (D. C.) 512 [affirmed in 180 U. S. 92, 21 S. Ct. 283, 45 L. ed. 440]); nor does it justify a road overseer in removing trees (Winter v. Peterson, 24 N. J. L. 524, 61 Am. Dec. 678), nor acts by a private individual which the town had a right to do, as taking down fences and removing trees to open the road (Hunt v. Rich, 38 Me. 195), widening the road or placing rocks, etc., on untraveled parts of it (Ashley v. Landers, 9 Allen (Mass.) 250; Hollenbeck v. Rowley, 8 Allen (Mass.) 473); nor any acts of private persons, other than use of it as a way as going extra viam without need (Gosdin v. Williams, 151 Ala. 592, 44 So. 611, taking of the herbage by the servant of a turnpike company (Adams v. Emerson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 57), the cutting of trees (Moore v. Cooley, 88 Hun (N. Y.) 66, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 624 [affirmed in 156 N. Y. 700, 51 N. E. 1092]); laying a pipe line (Hartman v. Tully Pipe Line Co., 71 Hun (N. Y.) 367, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 24), stopping in front of the house of the owner of the fee and refusing to leave (Com. v. Vondersmith, 1 Northumb. Co. Leg. N. (Pa.) 189), or protected. Possession by defendant is a good defense against one not showing a better title,[47] and possession under "record title" is, in Kentucky, by statute a defense against the true owner.[48] Equitable title without possession is no defense to an action of trespass by the holder of the legal title in possession.[49]

(B) Right to Cut Timber After the Expiration of the Time Limited in the Right. One who reserves or is granted growing trees, with a limited time in which to remove them, is a trespasser if he enters and removes them thereafter,[50] although they were cut before the expiration of the time, and the removal within the period limited was prevented by plaintiff.[51] But some courts hold that he still has title so that no damages can be recovered for the value of the timber,[52] while others hold his right is gone in toto so that he has no rights in the land and full damages can be recovered.[53]

(C) Force in Exercising Rights. A right in rem to land is a good defense to the use of force in exercising it.[54]

i. Rights In Rem of Defendant to Realty Not in Possession of Another — (I) IN GENERAL. An owner of land may justify the removal of chattels which are wrongfully on his land.[55] However, due care must be used in the removal,[56] and it should be effected with as little injury to the chattels removed as is possible,[57] and without the exercise of excessive force.[58] So the owner may forcibly take abusing the owner (Adams v. Rivers, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 390), or removing the stone and appropriating it (Root v. Prowattain, 13 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 20).

Statutory right to mine on any part of the public domain which is in possession of another for agricultural or grazing purposes does not justify mining on a part of it occupied for other purposes, as for a hotel and yard. Fitzgerald v. Urton, 5 Cal. 308.

54. Hall v. Davis, 2 C. & P. 33, 12 E. C. L. 434, holding that a license to one to enter and repair a house and entry under it gives him a right to use force necessary to expel his servant.

A right of way justifies tearing down a fence put across it (Harvard College v. Stearns, 15 Gray (Mass.) 1; Immaculate Conception Church v. Sheffer, 88 Hun (N. Y.) 335, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 724 [affirmed in 156 N. Y. 670, 50 N. Rightful possession justifies force necessary to expel an intruder (Thomas v. Marsh, 5 C. & P. 596, 24 E. C. L. 726) or an entry, although indictable force is used (Fisher v. Morris, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 358).

Applications of rule.— The owner may remove goods placed on his land without his consent (Grier v. Ward, 23 Ga. 145); or belonging to the housekeeper of an outgoing tenant, who remains after the departure of the tenant (Mead v. Pollock, 99 Ill. App. 151); or left by a servant in an outbuilding to which she retained the key (Looram v. Burlingame, 16 La. Ann. 199); or a horse hitched to his shade tree (Gilman v. Emery, 54 Me. 460); or property deposited on the land by water (Berry v. Carle, 3 Me. 269); or a seine reel (Almy v. Grinnell, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 53, 45 Am. Dec. 238, holding that after reasonable notice to remove cutting it down and pushing it into the river so that it floated off is justifiable); or muskrat traps (Crane v. Mason, Wright (Ohio) 333); or sawlogs deposited by plaintiff under agreement to remove by a certain time, not fulfilled (Knapp v. Hortung, 103 Pa. St. 400).

Notice.— It is sometimes held that notice must be given before removal. Burgess v. Graffman, 18 Fed. 251, personalty on land sold for debt.

56. Berry v. Carle, 3 Me. 269, holding that one owning a dam jointly with another is liable if he turns the other's logs which have lodged on the dam adrift over it.

57. Grier v. Ward, 23 Ga. 145; Berry v. Carle, 3 Me. 269.

game killed on his land from the trespasser,[59] or things severed from it by a trespasser,[60] and may justify interference with plaintiff's property from necessity for which defendant is not responsible.[61] The owner of land is justified in removing a structure erected wrongfully on his land,[62] or erected rightfully, after the right has terminated;[63] or in filling in excavations thereon wrongfully made by nother.[64] So the owner of a turnpike road is justified in removing obstructions thereon.[65] A trespass is not justified because done by defendant to prevent an injury to his property arising from natural condition or to obtain a benefit to himself;[66] but Fences.— The owner may remove a fence on his land. Dunham v. Stuyvesant, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 569; Stuyvesant v. Tompkins, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 61; Whalon v. Blackburn, 14 Wis. 432) or across his right of way (Ryan v. State, 5 Ind. App. 396, 31 N. E. 1127); as where the offending fence is extended up to his own fence, set inside his boundary line (Smith v. Johnson, 76 Pa. St. 191); even cutting off the fence posts is proper if necessary to prevent the resetting of them (Kendall v. Green, 67 N. H. 557, 42 Atl. 178).

Telephone poles.— The lessee may remove a telephone pole erected in a private alley on land leased by him, although plaintiff has a bill in equity for its removal pending. Maryland Tel., etc., Co. v. Ruth, 106 Md. 644, 68 Atl. 358, 124 Am. St. Rep. 506, 14 L. R. A. N. S. 427.

Dams.— An owner of land may remove the end of a dam on his own side of a boundary stream, built by the adjoining landowner across the stream; and a previous recovery in trespass is sufficient notice to remove. Marsh v. Brooks, 2 Hill (S. C.) 427.

Part of a house overhanging the land may be removed. Koester v. Cowan, 37 Ill. App. 252, holding, however, that it is not justifiable to enter on the adjoining land to effect the removal.

An encroaching foundation of a wall may be removed. Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnston, [1894] 1 Ch. 508, 63 L. J. Ch. 399, 70 L. T. Rep. N. S. 485, 8 Reports 781.

63. Prince v. Case, 10 Conn. 375, 27 Am. Dec. 675, a house erected by license which has expired by the death of the licensee and by a grant of the land to another who has taken possession.

Notice.—A lessee refusing to remove his buildings after notice as agreed and forcibly preventing the lessor is a wilful trespasser (Emry v. Roanoke Nav., etc., Co., 111 N. C. 94, 16 S. E. 18, 17 L. R. A. 699); and recovery of possession in ejectment is sufficient notice to remove (Prince v. Case, 10 Conn. 375, 27 Am. Dec. 675).

64. Dower v. Richards, 73 Cal. 477, 15 Pac. 105, holding that where a patent reserves to the United States title to gold mines, the lot owner may cave in a tunnel made by a third person searching for a gold mine.

65. Estes v. Kelsey, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 555.

66. Bolling v. Whittle, 37 Ala. 35 (holding that entry to remove a house which is partly on the land entered is a trespass); Grant v. Allen, 41 Conn. 156 (holding that an entry to change the natural flow of surface water to prevent injury to defendant's house is a trespass); Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Loop, 139 Ind. 542, 39 N. E. 306 (holding that entry and cutting trees to prevent their falling on defendant's adjacent railroad is a trespass); Dexter v. Alfred, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 259, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 592 (holding that entry to remove defendant's logs, cut by him on his own land and which he had no other means of getting out, is a trespass).

Excavations.— That defendant is engaged in excavating on his own land does not excuse his excavating under plaintiff's foundations adjoining (Bass v. West, 110 Ga. 698, 36 S. E. 244; Walters v. Hamilton, 75 Mo. App. 237); nor an entry thereafter and destruction of the building so undermined (Bass v. West, 110 Ga. 698, 36 S. E. 244); and digging a canal on defendant's own land does not justify his throwing the earth on plaintiff's adjoining land (Cherry v. Lake Drummond Canal, etc., Co., 140 N. C. 422, 53 S. E. 138, 11 Am. St. Rep. 850).

Flooding mines.— Permission to plaintiff by defendant to use a gangway in defendant's mine does not justify turning water into it and flooding plaintiff's mine. McKnight v. Ratcliffe, 44 Pa. St. 156.

Support of buildings.— Where no duty to support defendant's adjoining building is shown, plaintiff's failure to support it is no defense to its encroachment on plaintiff's land (Hutchison v. St. John Y. M. C. A., 19 N. Brunsw. 65); nor for an entry by defendant to support it, although the need of support arose from plaintiff's excavations on his own land (Hutchison v. St. John Y. M. C. A., supra).

Taking provisions from an ice-bound vessel abandoned by her captain and part of her crew is not justified because done to save the takers' lives. Guttner v. Pacific Steam Whaling Co., 96 Fed. 617.

entry on land to remove a dam thereon which diverted water on plaintiff's land is not a trespass where it was made by the landowner.[67]

(II) Force in Exercising Rights. The use of force is justifiable to defend a lawful possession of land,[68] or to eject one unlawfully trespassing on the possession of land,[69] provided unnecessary force is not employed;[70] but the trespasser must first be requested to leave if he entered quietly.[71] Of course the landowner is liable for an assault committed for a purpose other than to expel the trespasser.[72] An officer of parliament is justified in forcibly removing a member in accordance with orders from it.[73]

j. Rights In Rem to Things Affixed to Realty of Another. Title to things affixed by consent to another's realty is no defense to a taking if the landowner has a right of user.[74]

k. Rights In Rem to Personalty — (I) In General. Subject to limitations placed by some decisions on the right of entry on the premises of another,[75] title to chattels and immediate right to possession is a good defense to an action for Canada.— Reid v. Inglis, 12 U. C. C. P. 191, removal at request of proper authorities of a person making a disturbance in a church, justifiable.

Trespass on highway.— The owner of the fee in a highway is justified in forcibly holding one who is thereon not as a traveler but engaged in wilfully frightening the birds at which said owner was shooting on his adjoining land. Making arrest.—An officer entering land to serve a warrant of arrest cannot recover for an assault if he did not inform the landowner and the landowner did not know of the warrant. Bellows v. Shannon, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 86.

Requesting trespasser to desist.— It is held in England that where an attempt is made to forcibly enter on land, the owner in possession need not request the trespasser to desist before assaulting him in resisting the trespass, distinguishing the ejectment of one already on the land. Polkinhorn v. Wright, 8 Q. B. 197, 10 Jur. 11, 15 L. J. Q. B. 70, 55 E. C. L. 197; Tullay v. Reed, 1 C. & P. 6, 12 E. C. L. 16; Scott v. Brown, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 746. But in Ontario a request has been held necessary, although the nature of the assault, a shooting and wounding with a pistol, may have affected the decision. Spires v. Barrick, 14 U. C. Q. B. 420.

(Ky.) 187; Shaw v. Chairitie, 3 C. & K. 21 (holding that the owner of a house may turn out a person disturbing the peace of the family or call a policeman to do so, although the disturber has not committed an assault).

Innkeeper.—An innkeeper is not liable for having a constable remove a person who is making a disturbance therein who has assaulted him (Webster v. Watts, 11 Q. B. 311, 12 Jur. 243, 17 L. J. Q. B. 73, 63 E. C. L. 311); and he may himself remove one making a disturbance regardless of the motive for the removal (Oakes v. Wood, 6 L. J. Exch. 200, M. & H. 237, 2 M. & W. 791).

Shopkeeper.—A shopkeeper is justified in expelling by force one who refuses to leave but not in arresting him for such mere refusal not accompanied by an assault. Reece v. Taylor, 1 Harr. & W. 15, 4 L. J. K. B. 74, 4 N. & M. 470.

Licensor.—A ticket entitling the holder to enter the grand stand at a race-course is a mere license conveying no interest in the lands, and the owner of the land is not liable in trespass for ejecting the holder. Wood v. Ledbitter, 14 L. J. Exch. 161, 13 M. & W. 838.

a taking of them by the owner. The owner of goods with immediate right of possession may justify retaking them peaceably,[76] or one acting under him; [77] and for taking goods of another wrongfully and indistinguishably mixed with defendant's goods by plaintiff or his privies; [78] and one who is entitled to rescind a contract of sale for fraud is not liable for taking the goods.[79] But title to personalty in another's possession wrongfully is no defense to a taking by mistake of other property which really belongs to the wrong-doer.[80] And title is no defense where the person in possession has right of possession against the owner.[81] A prior lien is a good defense in trespass to personalty,[82] but not where defendant has contracted to postpone it,[83] or has lost it,[84] or it never was valid.[85] Title as mortgagee of chattels is a good defense for taking them,[86] at least after default,[87] although the debt was usurious; [88] but a discharged mortgage [89] or one obtained by fraud [90] is no defense. Title to some of the things taken is no defense for the taking of others.[91] A wife is not liable for using, during her husband's insanity, his personalty for support of the family.[92]

(II) RIGHT TO PERSONALTY ON LAND OF ANOTHER. According to many decisions, mere title to and right to possession of goods on land of another is not a defense for entering and taking them,[93] and this, it is held, is especially true if force is agreed,[2] or that where property is wrongfully taken by a third person and placed on the land and the landowner refuses on request to allow the owner to take it, he may enter on the land to retake it.[3]

(III) Force in Exercising the Right. Title with immedate right to possession thereof is a good defense to the use of actual force necessary to retake personalty from one withholding it.[4] The owner is not justified, however, in committing an assault or a breach of the peace.[5] The use of force is justifiable to defend a lawful possession of personalty.[6] But a mere contractual right to possession of personalty does not justify the use of force to take it, unless such right is clearly given by the contract.[7] A destruction of the property of plaintiff in defense of the person or property of defendant can certainly not be justified unless it is shown to be necessary.[8]

l. Property Rights In Rem of Persons Other Than Defendant. Title and right of possession in a third person to property in plaintiff's possession is not a good defense to a trespass thereon where defendant does not connect himself with it;[9] nor can defendant justify under other rights in a third person where he does not connect himself with them.[10] But title with right of possession in a 26. Kent County Agricultural Soc. v. Ide, 128 Mich. 423, 87 N. W. 369, holding that a right of entry of a president of a society does not justify entry to tear down and tearing down a building.

27. Alabama.— Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318 (holding that a license to enter does not justify tearing down part of a dwelling); Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 141 Ala. 335, 37 So. 490 (holding that a license to build a railroad does not justify trespass on adjoining land, although within the legal limits which might have been taken).

Colorado.— Omaha, etc., Smelting, etc., Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 41, 21 Pac. 925, 16 Am. St. Rep. 185, 5 L. R. A. 236, entry on another part of the land.

Maine.— Norton v. Craig, 68 Me. 275 (entry for a purpose or on a part not authorized); Abbott v. Wood, 13 Me. 115 (breaking down a door, ostensibly to get personalty, but really to let in an officer with an execution).

Maryland.— Moats v. Witmer, 3 Gill & J. 118, entry to take unthreshed grain where the right is merely to enter to thresh it and take grain leaving straw.

Massachusetts.— Gifford v. Brownell, 2 Allen 535 (holding that a license to take seaweed, depositing one load on licensee's land and then one on licensor's, alternately, does not justify taking a number of loads to licensee's land continuously); Davenport v. Lamson, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 72 (holding that a right of way appurtenant to a lot does not justify loading a wagon on an adjacent lot and hauling to it and then along the way).

New York.—Hall v. Louis Weber Bldg. Co., 36 Misc. 551, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 997 (holding that entry to shore up a building does not justify injury to personalty in it); Wheelock v. Noonan, 108 N. Y. 179, 15 N. E. 67, 2 Am. St. Rep. 405 (holding that a license to put a "few stones" on a lot does not justify piling stone fourteen to eighteen feet high over it and five other lots).

North Carolina.— Gardner v. Rowland, 24 N. C. 247, holding that the right to enter and take corn does not justify taking down a fence, instead of going to the gate.

Rhode Island.— McCusker v. Mitchell, 20 R. I. 13, 36 Atl. 1123, holding that going farther than the licensed distance is a trespass.

England.—Acaster v. Binney, 1 L. J. K. B. O. S. 168 (holding that license to enter a house with a key to show it to prospective lessees does not justify entry through a win-defense unless the condition is performed;[28] and, where personal to the licensee, it does not justify the doing of the act by other persons.[29]

(III) Revocation or Expiration of License. A mere license is revocable, and where it has been revoked it is not a good defense for acts thereafter;[30]

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trespass," § 57 et seq.

Licenses held revocable.—A license to maintain a structure on another's land to divert water is revocable (Foot v. New Haven, etc., Co., 23 Conn. 214), to cut and remove wood, even as to wood cut but not removed (Buker v. Bowden, 83 Me. 67, 21 Atl. 748), to pass over the land on condition (Marston v. Gale, 24 N. H. 176), to discharge sewerage on land (Sherman Line Co. v. Glens Falls, 101 N. Y. App. Div. 269, 91 N. Y. Suppl. 994), or parol license to run trains over the land (Hetfield v. Central R. Co., 29 N. J. L. 571), or to change the location of a fence, pending a sale of the land (Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439).

What constitutes revocation.— A refusal to permit entry revokes the license (Siberman v. New Amsterdam Gas Co., 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 42, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 699), so also locking a gate across a way which it had been agreed should be used pending a dispute (Hyde v. Graham, 1 H. & C. 593, 8 Jur. N. S. 1229, 32 L. J. Exch. 27, 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 563, 11 Wkly. Rep. 119); or the commencement of an action for damages by the licensor against the licensee (Lockhart v. Geir, 54 Wis. 133, 11 N. W. 245); a conveyance of land ipso facto revokes a license to do acts thereon, as a license to occupy (Hicks v. Swift Creek Mill Co., 133 Ala. 411, 31 So. 947, 91 Am. St. Rep. 38, 57 L. R. A. 720); or use a ditch and dam thereon (Hicks v. Swift Creek Mill Co., 133 Ala. 411, 31 So. 947, 91 Am. St. Rep. 720, 57 L. R. A. 720); or to mine on government land (Omaha, etc., Smelting, etc., Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 41, 21 Pac. 925, 16 Am. St. Rep. 185, 5 L. R. A. 236); or to take timber (Putney v. Day, 6 N. H. 430, 25 Am. Dec. 470; Paine v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 14 Fed. 407, 4 McCrary 586 [affirmed in 119 U. S. 561, 7 S. Ct. 323, 30 L. ed. 513]; Jarvis v. Edgett, 6 N. Brunsw. 66, license from mortgagor in possession is no defense against purchaser under foreclosure sale); or to flood lands (Cowles v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 364, 57 Am. Dec. 287; Veghte v. Raritan Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 142); or to maintain telephone wires (Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 188 N. Y. 600, 81 N. E. 1161 [affirming 110 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. Suppl. 66]); or to go on lands (Dexter v. Alfred, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 259, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 592, after notice of grant by grantee); or lay water mains (Jayne v. Cortland Water Works Co., 42 Misc. (N. Y.) 263, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 571, holding that if the grantee is not a purchaser for value he can only recover nominal damages); or to maintain a drain ditch (Wilson v. Higgins, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 582, 2 Clev. L. Rep. 411); or erecting a wall upon another's wall (Ross v. Hunter, 7 Can. Sup. Ct. 289); but a license to discharge sewerage on land has been held not revoked by a conveyance (Union Springs v. Jones, 58 Ala. 654); and a conveyance does not ipso facto revoke a license to diverge from a highway where the grantor has fenced up the old way (Prouty v. Bell, 44 Vt. 72).

but a license coupled with an interest is irrevocable and a good defense to acts done under it within the scope of the license.[31] Where a license has expired it is no defense to acts thereafter.[32]

(iv) CONTRACTS GENERALLY. A contract is a good defense for acts done under it,[33] even though plaintiff misunderstood it, if it was not obtained by fraud, accident, or mistake.[34] It is not a defense for the commission of unauthorized acts.[35] A contract concerning land which is insufficient to pass an interest in it is revocable and no defense for acts done after the revocation.[36] A license to enter land arising from a contract to perform work therefor is revocable and no defense to a subsequent entry.[37] An agreement which gives a right to part of personalty is no defense for taking all of it.[38]

(v) AGREEMENT FOR PURCHASE OR LEASE. An agreement for the sale of land does not imply a license to enter,[39] nor does an offer of sale made two years

So it has been held that where an employee, who rented a house on the land of his employer, acquired thereby the right to have persons visit the house on business or pleasure and go over the employer's land in so doing, no one as to whom the right had been acquired could be guilty of trespass in exercising the right; and, where the right was acquired by the contract of renting, it could not be taken away by a mere notice to such person, the contract remaining in force (Tutwiler Coal, etc., Co. v. Tuvin, 158 Ala. 657, 48 So. 79).

Acquiescence by grantee.— The grantee may acquiesce in the license. Selch v. Jones, 28 Ind. 255.

Applications of rule.—Where goods seized are left on the realty under license to enter and sell thereafter, it cannot be revoked (McGillis v. McMartin, 1 U. C. Q. B. 145); and license to do an act on one's own land, as build a dam which floods another's land (Veghte v. Raritan Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 142); or to enter another's land to remove one's personalty (Smith v. Pierce, 110 Mass. 35; Pursell v. Stover, 110 Pa. St. 43, 20 Atl. 403); or to shore up his building (Ketchum v. Newman, 116 N. Y. 422, 22 N. E. 1052 [reversing 14 Daly 57]); but the entry must be within a reasonable time after the revocation (Dame v. Dame, 38 N. H. 429, 75 Am. Dec. 195).

32. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Higginbotham, 153 Ala. 334, 44 So. 872, holding that license to use water from a spring pending repairs on another expires after a reasonable time to make the repairs.

33. Idaho.— Bowman v. Ayers, 2 Ida. (Hasb.) 465, 21 Pac. 405, holding that a contract with three of the four owners in common of a water ditch granting defendant a right to use water in return for enlarging it justifies his enlarging it and using water.

Indiana.—Alexandria Min., etc., Co. v. Painter, 1 Ind. App. 587, 28 N. E. 113, holding that use of gas in one's house while in arrears is not a trespass.

Kentucky.— C. F. Adams Co. v. Sanders, 66 S. W. 815, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1978 (holding that a contract of sale of personalty authorizing retaking for non-payment is a good defense to a peaceable entry on the vendee's house and retaking); Ramey v. W. W. Kimball Co., 58 S. W. 471, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 597; Andrews v. Singer Mfg. Co., 48 S. W. 976, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1089.

Maryland.— Gibson v. Kephart, 3 Harr. & J. 439, holding that a parol agreement accompanying a deed of land is a good defense to acts done under it, as taking fence rails by the grantor.

Michigan.— Finch v. Brian, 44 Mich. 517, 7 N. W. 81, holding that use of part of a piece of meat delivered to be paid for at the market price is not rendered a trespass by refusal to pay a sum demanded greater than such price.

Canada.— Walter v. Dexter, 34 U. C. Q. B. 426; McGinness v. Kennedy, 29 U. C. Q. B. 93.

34. Windle v. Crescent Pine Line Co., 186 Pa. St. 224, 40 Atl. 310.

35. Disbrow v. Westchester Hardwood Co., 17 N. Y. App. Div. 610, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 376 [reversed on other grounds in 164 N. Y. 415, 58 N. E. 579] (taking trees smaller than the specified size); Parks v. Dial, 56 Tex. 261 (holding that a right under a contract to take timber from a certain part of another's land does not justify taking from other parts).

36. Hitchens v. Shaller, 32 Mich. 496 (parol agreement to give a license to dig a ditch); Green v. Evans, 38 Mo. App. 517 (parol executory agreement for the sale of growing crops); Duryea v. Smith, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 688 (parol agreement to allow taking of gravel at an agreed price); Chesley v. Brockway, 34 Vt. 550 (holding that sale of manure does not justify its taking after a grant of the land).

37. Campbell v. Howland, 7 U. C. C. P. 358.

38. Trout v. Kennedy, 47 Pa. St. 387, holding that one agreeing to cut and saw another's trees and pile the boards for which he was to have half is liable if he takes all.

39. Fagan v. Scott, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 162; Erwin v. Olmsted, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 229; Cooper v. Stower, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 331. Contra, Mize v. Jackson, 32 S. W. 467, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 750.

before,[40] nor a parol agreement to convey;[41] and such parol agreement conveys no interest and so is revocable and no defense after revocation,[42] although the purchase price has been paid;[43] and a parol agreement for sale without actual possession under it is no defense against a subsequent vendee.[44] An express license to the holder of a contract for purchase to enter does not imply a license to cut and use trees, and is no defense to an action therefor;[45] and where entry is made under the agreement, or other acts are done under it, it is no defense for the commission of such acts if its terms are not carried out by the purchaser.[46] A certificate of purchase of public lands, afterward forfeited, is no defense to an action for cutting trees before its forfeiture.[47] Negotiations for a lease which fall through are no defense for occupation after demand for surrender;[48] but where a lease falls through after defendant's entry because plaintiff will not give a lease as agreed, defendant is not liable.[49] A sale of personalty and receipt of part payment, but without delivery, will not justify a levy on them as the goods of the vendee;[50] but where possession is delivered under a conditional sale agreement, it is held, in Pennsylvania, to be fraudulent against creditors of the vendee, and so the vendor cannot maintain trespass for a levy.[51]

(VI) AUTHORITY FROM THIRD PERSONS. Authority from a third person having no right to give it is no defense for the commission of acts which without proper authority would constitute a trespass on land,[52] and the fact that defendant

52. Alabama.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickens, 148 Ala. 480, 41 So. 469 (holding that authority from a railroad company is no defense to building a telegraph line on adjacent land); Lowery v. Rowland, 104 Ala. 420, 16 So. 88 (holding that authority from a widow before assignment of dower cannot justify cutting trees).

Illinois.—Essington v. Neill, 21 Ill. 139, holding that a wife is not her husband's agent and cannot authorize a removal of property from his lands and the conversion thereof.

Indiana.—Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Hemberger, 43 Ind. 462, holding that an adjoining landowner cannot authorize the interference with a drain, although partly on his land.

Louisiana.—Hood v. Stewart, 2 La. Ann. 219; Tourne v. Lee, 8 Mart. N. S. 548, 20 Am. Dec. 260.

Maine.—Smith v. Guild, 34 Me. 443, holding that an administrator of remainder-man cannot justify a trespass on possession of tenant by curtesy.

Maryland.—Maryland Tel., etc., Co. v. Ruth, 106 Md. 644, 68 Atl. 358, 124 Am. St. Rep. 506, 14 L. R. A. N. S. 427 (holding that permission of lessor does not justify erection of telephone pole in alley of leased premises); Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Thompson, 10 Md. 76 (holding that permission of lessor does not justify entry on lessee's possession to build a railroad).

Massachusetts.—Hersey v. Chapin, 162 Mass. 176, 38 N. E. 442 (holding that permission of tenant at will does not justify use of premises as smallpox hospital); Abbott v. Abbott, 97 Mass. 136 (holding that permission of guardian of minor child who has abandoned the homestead is no defense to use of homestead premises in widow's possession as a stable); North Bridgewater Second Cong. Soc. v. Waring, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 304 (holding that license of member of religious corporation is no defense against the corporation).

Michigan.—Kent County Agricultural Soc. v. Ide, 128 Mich. 423, 87 N. W. 369 (holding that permission of the president of a society is no defense to tearing down a barn if he had no authority to give it); Burns v. Kirkpatrick, 91 Mich. 364, 51 N. W. 893, 30 Am. St. Rep. 485 (holding that direction of a wife to remove her husband's household goods is no defense).

Missouri.—Jackson v. Pettigrew, 133 Mo. App. 508, 113 S. W. 672, holding that the cutting and hauling, from time to time, dur-believed the person giving permission had authority is immaterial;[53] but a license by a cotenant is a good defense for entry on land,[54] although it justifies a taking of part of the realty only to the extent of the licensor's interest;[55] and a license from the manager of land justifies acts thereon[56] unless wholly unconnected with the management.[57] License by a mortgagee is a good defense to an action for trespass, the mortgage debt being overdue,[58] or by tenant in possession,[59] unless the injury is to the reversion;[60] or by other person lawfully on the land by license of the owner.[61] Authority from a third person having no right to give it does not justify acts which without authority would amount to a trespass to personalty;[62] but unauthorized consent by the person in possession of personalty is a defense to an action for a trespass on it;[63] and where goods are delivered by the ing a course of years, of trees for fire wood, indicated only by the stumps left, is not such actual possession of the land by the person so doing that authority from her would be a defense, against the actual owner, to trespass by defendant.

New Hampshire.— Warner v. Badger, 65 N. H. 283, 20 Atl. 249, holding that a license from the grantee of a deed is no defense where there is no evidence of possession in him or his grantor.

New York.— Norton v. Snyder, 4 Thomps. & C. 330 (holding that a grant of a renewal of a right to quarry made in pursuance of a covenant, but after conveyance of the land, is no defense against the grantee of the land, although the deed reserved to the grantees of the quarry right the privileges they had); Lambert v. Huber, 22 Misc. 462, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 793 (holding that a deed from one having neither title nor possession as defendant knew is no defense to an entry on land).

Pennsylvania.— Pittock v. Central Dist., etc., Tel. Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 589 (holding that where a railroad has only a right of way its permission to erect a telegraph line on the way is no defense against the owner of the fee); Dunbar Furnace Co. v. Fairchild, 128 Pa. St. 485, 18 Atl. 443, 444 (holding that a grant from a life-tenant greater than his estate permitted is no defense to an entry after his death).

Texas.— Tucson Land, etc., Co. v. Everett, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 340, 78 S. W. 535, holding that permission of a lessee whose lease has not gone into effect does not justify herding horses on land.

England.— Littleton v. McNamara, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 417, holding that authority of the administrator of a sublessor obtained after the trespass does not relate back.

Canada.— Turnbull v. McNaught, 14 U. C. C. P. 375, holding that a survey for a landowner does not justify entry on land adjoining.

55. Omaha, etc., Smelting, etc., Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 41, 21 Pac. 925, 16 Am. St. Rep. 185, 5 L. R. A. 236.

56. Vernon Min. Co. v. Prescott, (East. T. 1871) Stevens N. Brunsw. Dig. 753, holding that where the agent pointed out the wrong boundary there is no liability in trespass for trees cut on the land by reason of the mistake.

57. Henderson v. Clanfield, 31 N. Brunsw. 568, holding that a manager of a farm cannot authorize digging a ditch thereon for the sole benefit of the diggers and not for the benefit of the land.

58. Carson v. Griffin, 11 N. Brunsw. 244, license to cut trees.

59. McNair v. Rochester, etc., R. Co., 14 N. Y. Suppl. 39 (life-tenant); Livingston v. Mott, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 605 (license to build a railroad).

Visit to tenant on business or pleasure.— Where a tenant by renting a house acquires the right to have persons visit his house on business or pleasure and go over the owner's land in so doing, no one for whom such right has been thus acquired can be guilty of trespass in so doing. Tutwiler Coal, etc., Co. v. Tuvin, 158 Ala. 657, 48 So. 79.

60. Devlin v. Snellenburg, 132 Pa. St. 186, 18 Atl. 1119, holding that painting an advertisement on a building in possession of a tenant is an injury to the reversion.

61. Kelly v. Tilton, 2 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 495, 3 Keyes 263.

62. Reader v. Moody, 48 N. C. 372, holding that where one made a number of shingles on vacant land, and left them there, he is entitled to maintain trespass against a person who, privately and without his knowledge, carried them off; and this, although defendant proceeded under a license from one who obtained a grant for the land on which the shingles were made, subsequently to their being made, but before their removal. Compare Stafford v. Mercer, 42 Ga. 556, holding that sale of goods by a warehouse clerk by advice of the warehouse owner does not render him liable in an action of trespass vi et armis.

63. Dean v. Hogg, 10 Bing. 345, 25 E. C. L. 166, 6 C. & P. 54, 25 E. C. L. 318, 3 L. J. C. P. 113, 4 Moore & S. 188 (consent by the owner's captain of a vessel to an entry on a person in possession trespass will not lie against the taker, although they will if he takes without delivery,[64] unless the taking is ratified.[65]

(VII) FORCE IN EXERCISING RIGHTS. In general, a right in personam is no justification to the use of force in exercising it;[66] but a license coupled with an interest and so irrevocable is a good defense to the use of force necessary to exercise it,[67] or the use of force in resisting expulsion from realty.[68]

n. Rights Given by Law — (I) IN GENERAL. Interference with plaintiff's property is justifiable in certain cases where necessary in the exercise of a public right,[69] or to prevent a great public disaster.[70] The prosecution of a public work does not excuse trespasses committed in course of it.[71] An illegal distress for rent is a trespass.[72] Right to enter and abate a nuisance is no defense to doing more than is necessary to accomplish the result.[73] One peaceably on land is not steamboat hired by plaintiff for a private excursion); Mills v. Dawson, 2 Peake N. P. 54 (consent of agent of the owner to the taking of a ship); Bransfield v. Bishop, 2 N. Brunsw. 171 (killing of an ox).

64. Plott v. Robertson, (Ala. 1905) 39 So. 771; Ely v. Ehle, 3 N. Y. 506 (delivery by a common carrier); Barrett v. Warren, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 348 (delivery by one who got by a trespass); Nash v. Mosher, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 431 (delivery by lien-holder); Marshall v. Davis, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 109, 19 Am. Dec. 463 (delivery by bailee); Talmadge v. Scudder, 38 Pa. St. 517 (taking by purchaser at sheriff's sale of goods wrongfully levied on); Brooks v. Olmstead, 17 Pa. St. 24 (delivery by wrong-doer). Contra, Rich v. Johnson, 61 Ind. 246; Spotts v. Lange, 7 La. 182; North Bridgewater Second Cong. Soc. v. Howard, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 206; Garey v. Woodward, 127 Pa. St. 251, 18 Atl. 9.

65. Wellington v. Drew, 16 Me. 51.

Applications of rule.—A verbal agreement "to dig and carry away ore" does not justify a forcible entry (Riddle v. Brown, 20 Ala. 412, 56 Am. Dec. 202); so one is not justified in resorting to force to compel another to keep an agreement allowing the use of a way over his land (Hyde v. Graham, 1 H. & C. 593, 8 Jur. N. S. 1229, 32 L. J. Exch. 27, 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 563, 11 Wkly. Rep. 119); or to fix a boundary line (Wood v. Lafayette, 68 N. Y. 181); a contract authorizing an entry on realty to take personalty without process of law is void and no defense to a forcible entry (Loftus v. Maxey, 73 Tex. 242, 11 S. W. 272; Gillett v. Moody, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 35).

67. Lambert v. Robinson, 162 Mass. 34, 37 N. E. 753, 44 Am. St. Rep. 326.

Applications of rule.—A license coupled with an interest is irrevocable, and so a necessary assault committed in course of an entry into the old post-office by a servant of a new postmaster to remove government property is justifiable (Sterling v. Warden, 51 N. H. 217, 12 Am. Rep. 80); or by a person to get his mail (Sterling v. Warden, supra); or forcible entry by one to remove rails laid by consent (Willoughby v. Northeastern R. Co., 32 S. C. 410, 11 S. E. 339; De Laine v. Alderman, 31 S. C. 267, 9 S. E. 950); or under license to obtain mortgaged personalty (Bacon v. Hooker, 177 Mass. 335, 53 N. E. 1078, 83 Am. St. Rep. 279); or forcible entry by lessor of land to remove personalty under a right reserved in the lease (Abbott v. Wood, 13 Me. 115); or by purchaser of personalty to obtain it (Long v. Buchanan, 27 Md. 502, 92 Am. Dec. 653; Nettleton v. Sikes, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 34, bark peeled from trees); or by vendee of property with a right to rescind in order to retake it (Smith v. Hale, 158 Mass. 178, 33 N. E. 493, 35 Am. St. Rep. 485).

68. Vaughan v. Hampson, 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 15, holding that one present at a creditors' meeting can maintain trespass for assault in ejecting him.

69. Morey v. Fitzgerald, 56 Vt. 487, 48 Am. Rep. 811 (passing over land adjoining a highway during temporary impassability of the way); Thurlow Tp. v. Bogart, 15 U. C. C. P. 528 (injury to a mill dam to give passage to logs, where it has not the log slide required by statute).

Abuse of statutory power to enter land and take stone for a bridge is punishable in trespass. Myers v. Howard, 4 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 113.

70. Hale v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420, in an action for blowing up a building and destroying plaintiff's goods therein to prevent the spread of a fire, the common-law plea of necessity is good, and defendant need not be resident in or owner of property in the city, nor need his own property have been in danger.

71. Lersner v. McDonald, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 734, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 1125, breaking a water main and so flooding plaintiff's premises while digging a rapid transit subway.

P. 5 (distress of sheep where sufficient other property was on the premises).

73. Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. (U. S.)

a trespasser if he forcibly breaks a gate to escape therefrom.[74] Entry on adjoining land to deposit goods wrongfully placed on one's land by the adjoining landowner is not a trespass.[75] In Michigan, an heir has only a right to partition and is liable for an entry on land in the widow's possession.[76] By statute in some jurisdictions reasonable and probable cause is a defense in an action of trespass against a justice for acts done in his official capacity;[77] but defendant must have been acting within his jurisdiction.[78] Where defendant relies on a statutory justification he must bring himself fully within its terms.[79] A statute passed subsequent to the acquiring by plaintiff of his rights in land is no defense to an action by him.[80] In general the creation of a new remedy does not affect the old.[81] That defendant is plaintiff's guardian is no defense to an injury to realty.[82]

(II) Exercise of Duty as Public Servant. Authority from the government to do an act is a justification for what would, in the absence thereof, constitute a trespass;[83] but it must appear that such authority in fact exists.[84]

Canada.— Dame v. Carberry, 10 U. C. Q. B. 374, seizure of a vessel for breach of the revenue laws.

84. Linblom v. Ramsey, 75 Ill. 246 (holding that prima facie the act is a trespass); Plummer v. Jarvis, 23 Me. 297 (holding that bona fide intent to do an official act will not take the place of legal authority).

A railway commissioner has no arbitrary power to fix the height of trolley wires crossing a railroad and the railroad is liable for

So also it must appear that the authority is valid,[85] and that it justifies the method employed to carry out the authority[86] and the particular act done,[87] and the cutting them, although placed lower than the height so fixed. Saginaw Union St. R. Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 91 Mich. 657, 52 N. W. 49.

Opening a road by ministerial officers of a township is a trespass in the absence of an express order from the township board. Navin v. Martin, (Mo. App. 1907) 102 S. W. 61; Mulligan v. Martin, 125 Mo. App. 630, 102 S. W. 59.

Entry by a policeman into a public house at one A. M. to investigate a noise is not a trespass, the door being open, although it would be otherwise in case of a private house. Rex v. Smith, 6 C. & P. 136, 25 E. C. L. 360.

Chase v. Cochran, 102 Me. 431, 67 Atl. 320; Whittier v. Sanborn, 38 Me. 32 (holding that legal authority from a school-district under which defendant justifies must be shown); Macey v. Carter, 76 Mo. App. 490 (holding that where township organization is void for want of proper petitions its officers are trespassers in opening roads).

A patrol whether legally such or not is liable for entry on dwelling of a freeman and taking his guns. Porteous v. Hazel, Harp. (S. C.) 332.

If a highway is not duly laid out acts by the proper official in opening it are a trespass. Stewart v. Wallis, 30 Barb. (N. Where a statute requires consent of landowners to the building of a sewer, the commissioner is a trespasser if he does not get it. Davison v. Burnham, Cassels Dig. (Can.) 846.

Where sanction of commissioners to removal of a school-house by trustees is required by statute, their removal without it is a trespass for which their successors can sue them. Pictou County School Trustees v. Cameron, 2 Can. Sup. Ct. 690.

Impressing a private house for a smallpox hospital is not justified by statute authorizing justices of inferior courts to "provide" such a hospital (Markham v. Brown, 37 Ga. 277, 92 Am. Dec. 73); nor is a board of health justified in so taking if not done under the statutory warrant (Hersey v. Chapin, 162 Mass. 176, 38 N. E. 442).

Failure by a municipality to exactly follow the terms of a statute giving it power to grade streets will not render the grading a trespass, as failure to advertise for bids (Aurora v. Fox, 78 Ind. 1); but if there is no order for grading made, no advertisement for bids and no contract, the grading is a trespass by the city (Delphi v. Evans, 36 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Dec. 12).

St. Rep. 31; Bright v. Bell, 113 La. 1078, 37 So. 976, holding that the condition of realty, as whether a hedge is trimmed or untrimmed, ornamental or a "blot on the landscape" will not justify its removal by individuals or members of a street board.

Where the locus is not a street a resolution of a city council to open it as such is no defense to its members for opening it. Young v. Gormley, 119 Iowa 546, 93 N. W. 565.

Selling trees in a highway is not justified by the right of the commissioner to remove them. Clark v. Dasso, 34 Mich. 86.

Removal of trees in a highway but not obstructing it is a trespass. Removal of an encroachment from a street where the dedication was subject to it is a trespass. And where an encroaching porch had existed for sixty years in the absence of evidence the dedication of the street will be taken to have been subject to it. Hagarty v. Pryor, 2 Nova Scotia Dec. 532.

Seizure in civil war of property of a United States citizen by a confederate soldier for use of his army is not a trespass. Smith v. Brazelton, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 44, 2 Am. Unauthorized entry by a sewer commissioner is a trespass. Davison v. Burnham, Cassels Dig. (Can.) 846.

Laying out a highway less than the legal width is a trespass. Perley v. Dibblee, 3 N. Brunsw. 514.

Opening land as a street by a path-master is a trespass if it is not legally a street. Crooks v. Williams, 39 U. C. Q. B. 530.

Statutory right to arrest for criminal trespass does not justify an assault if it does not appear such trespass was committed. Madden v. Farley, 6 U. C. Q. B. 210.

Mistake as to authority.— Mistaken belief that authority of a highway commissioner justifies tearing down plaintiff's fence will doing of it by defendant.[88] If any of these essentials be lacking, the attempted justification must fail.

(III) LEGAL PROCESS. Process regularly issued with full jurisdiction and valid on its face is ordinarily a good defense to acts done under its authority,[89] although there are cases to the contrary.[90] The acts done must be authorized by the process.[91] But such process is not a defense if thereafter abannot relieve from actual damages. Coffman v. Burkhalter, 98 Ill. App. 304.

Warrant to survey vacant land will not justify entry on occupied land. Harry v. Graham, 51 N. C. 460.

88. Schmidt v. Densmore, 42 Mo. 225 (holding that authority to a public official to do an act does not justify one contracting to perform the work in doing it, so authority to county commissioners to enter private land and take timber to build a bridge will not justify a contractor in so doing); St. Peter v. Denison, 58 N. Y. 416, 17 Am. Rep. 258 (holding that the right of canal commissioners to take land does not justify one digging the canal in casting earth on it); Welch v. Piercy, 29 N. C. 365 (holding that failure of a road jury to lay out the road does not justify the person appointed to open it in laying it out).

89. Sasnett v. Weathers, 21 Ala. 673; Chenault v. Quisenberry, 81 S. W. 690, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 462, holding that an order of court to cut timber and pay the proceeds into court justifies the cutting.

An execution is a good defense for the seizure of goods under it and one who without authority, having ceased to be attorney, for the judgment creditor, procures it to issue is not liable in trespass, but if at all for procuring it to issue. McQuade v. Lizars, 39 U. C. Q. B. 215.

A warrant of the superintendent of an insane asylum, properly issued under the statute, for the arrest of an escaped inmate, is a good defense in trespass against one who procured it to issue by falsely representing that the escaped inmate was still insane. An action on the case for malicious arrest is the remedy. Dobbyn v. Decow, 25 U. C. C. P. 18.

Writ of fieri facias issued on a void garnishee order is a good defense to a seizure under it, being at most irregular and liable to be set aside on motion. Karns v. Phelan, 19 U. C. C. P. 288.

Execution on foreclosure of a mortgage is a good defense in trespass, although the mortgage was fraudulently made by one not owner of the property under a scheme to fraudulently obtain possession, since the process was valid. Fulton Grocery Co. v. Maddox, 111 Ga. 260, 36 S. E. 647.

Malice or want of probable cause will not affect the validity of the process. Gray v. Joiner, 127 Ga. 544, 56 S. E. 752.

A writ of replevin is a justification for a taking under it, although plaintiff in that action fails to recover (Williams v. Scott, 30 Ala. 241), or gives insufficient sureties if satisfactory to the officer (Harriman v. Wilkins, 20 Me. 93).

Warrant for collection of taxes is a defense to the collector and he need not show that the tax was legally assessed. Wilcox v. Sherwin, 1 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 72.

Abatement on the plea of another action does not render proceedings under an attachment a trespass. Hayden v. Shed, 11 Mass. 500.

Libel against a vessel justifies the taking, although afterward dismissed. McIntyre v. Globe Iron Works, 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 433, 13 Cinc. L. Bul. 438.

Declaration that the entry is made in another right is immaterial. Crowther v. Ramsbottom, 7 T. R. 654, 4 Rev. Rep. 540, 101 Eng. Reprint 1182, allegation of taking for debt, when taking was under process to compel an appearance.

90. Barfield v. Coker, 73 S. C. 181, 53 S. E. 170, holding that where the debt has been paid on which a warrant to seize crops issued and the creditor knew it, the warrant is not a defense to him.

Where dispossess proceedings before a justice are reversed, the warrant is no defense. Eten v. Luyster, 60 N. Y. 252.

Where defendant in replevin obtains a dismissal of the action and an order of restitution, and, after accepting from plaintiffs a deed of certain land in full satisfaction for the replevied chattel, procures a writ of restitution to be issued and executed, he is liable as a trespasser, the property in such chattel being transferred to plaintiffs by such acceptance of satisfaction. Archibeque v. Miera, 1 N. M. 419.

91. Holton v. Taylor, 80 Ga. 508, 6 S. E. 15; Hoyt v. Van Alstyne, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 568; McMaster v. McPherson, 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 16.

Replevin.— Replevin by A against B is no defense for the taking of goods from the possession of C to plaintiff in replevin (Shipman v. Clark, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 446, 47 Am. Dec. 264); but may be to the sheriff (Shipman v. Clark, supra; Hallett v. Byrt, Carth. 449); except where it is otherwise provided by statute (King v. Orser, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 431); and a justification in trespass for taking goods under a writ of replevin is insufficient if it does not allege the property was not detained on mesne or final process (Moors v. Parker, 3 Mass. 310); or that a bond was given pursuant to statute (Moors v. Parker, supra).

Levy of execution not on property in the debtor's possession and not subject to levy (Holton v. Taylor, 80 Ga. 508, 6 S. E. 15; Hall v. Penney, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 44, 25 Am. Dec. 601); or not belonging to the debtor or, if belonging, exempt (Hoyt v. Van Alstyne, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 568), is a trespass.

doned,[92] nor is it a defense to persons not connected with the proceedings.[93] Process issued by a court without jurisdiction is no defense for acts done under it [94] nor if otherwise void.[95]

(IV) Exercise of Right of Eminent Domain.[96] A right to take land by virtue of an exercise of the power of eminent domain is a good defense to a taking in accordance with the right;[97] but it is no defense to an action of trespass for an entry made in exercise of such right but not in accordance with the requirements of the statute,[98] and not even then if the proceedings are dismissed by the holder of the right, after entry,[99] or if the statute under which the proceedings are taken is unconstitutional.[1] Nor is it a defense to an action of trespass for wrongful acts done in the course of a legitimate exercise of the right.[2]

Assisting an officer in executing a search warrant on his summons justifies an entry on realty (Payne v. Green, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 507); but plaintiff in an action cannot justify a taking under a fieri facias as the sheriff's assistant, as he is not an assistant but a responsible principal (Park v. Taylor, 1 U. C. C. P. 414).

But distress of more goods than necessary is not a trespass. Hamilton v. Windolf, 36 Md. 301, 11 Am. Rep. 491 (holding, however, that if more than necessary are sold trespass lies); Crowther v. Ramsbottom, 7 T. R. 654, 4 Rev. Rep. 540, 101 Eng. A rule to show cause is no defense to a taking if thereafter dismissed without taking action to adjudicate the right. Chicago Title, etc., Co. v. Core, 126 Ill. App. 272 [affirmed in 223 Ill. 58, 79 N. E. 108].

93. Reeves v. Myers, 1 U. C. Q. B. 462, holding that to justify under writ of possession, defendant must connect himself with the ejectment proceedings.

94. Bradford v. Boozer, 139 Ala. 502, 36 So. 716, holding that where a judgment is void for want of jurisdiction, a writ issued on it is no defense, although regular on its face.

Where jurisdictional facts are not alleged in the complaint as the statute required, dispossession proceedings are no defense to the landlord. Sperry v. Seidel, 218 Pa. St. 16, 66 Atl. 853.

Where the sum claimed is greater than the justice has jurisdiction of trespass de bonis lies against both the sheriff and plaintiff therein. White Water Valley Canal Co. v. Dow, Smith (Ind.) 62.

A United States district judge has jurisdiction under libel proceedings against a vessel to order its detention, although the proceedings are afterward dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Thompson v. Lyle, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 166.

Exclusiveness of statutory remedies.—The landowner is not required to proceed under the eminent domain statutes where the statutory procedure under them has not been followed, but may resort to any and all the usual legal remedies (Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Swinney, 97 Ind. 586); and may sue in trespass instead of under such statute for compensation where a foreign telegraph corporation has not complied with the law requiring it to become a domestic corporation before exercising the right of eminent domain (Baldwin v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 78 S. C. 419, 59 S. E. 67; Duke v. Postal Tel.-Cable Co., 71 S. C. 95, 50 S. R. A. 590 (holding that judgment in an action where it appeared defendant therein was agent of another does not bar an action against that other); Goodrich v. Judevine, 40 Vt. 190 (holding that the fact that defendant appeared in court in an action of trespass quare clausum against his servant does not connect him with the action and is not a good plea to establish res adjudicata).

Judgment in replevin for plaintiff therein bars an action of trespass for the same taking, but not an action for injury to realty committed at the same time. Gibbs v. Cruikshank, L. R. 8 C. P. 454, 42 L. J. C. P. 273, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735, 21 Wkly. Rep. 734.

Judgment in trover for plaintiff therein bars an action of trespass where the taking and conversion were all one act. Hite v. Long, 6 Rand. (Va.) 457, 18 Am. Dec. 719.

Judgment on forcible entry for plaintiff therein does not bar an action of trespass where the justice has power to restore possession only. Boulton v. FitzGerald, 1 U. C. Q. B. 343.

Recovery of purchase-price.—Judgment for money had and received in favor of the vendee of chattels suing to recover the purchase-price after a forcible retaking by the vendor does not bar an action of trespass for the forcible taking. Henson v. Taylor, 108 Ga. 567, 33 S. E. 911.

Reëntry after eviction.—Where a defendant in an action of ejectment has been evicted under a judgment and writ of possession, he is not estopped, on making an actual entry on the premises, from maintaining an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, and on showing title he may recover for trespass committed after the termination of the former suit. White v. Cooper, 53 N. C. 48.

A recovery in ejectment of damages as for mesne profits does not bar an action for injury done to the freehold during the disseizin (Henry v. Davis, 149 Ala. 359, 43 So. 122; Walker v. Hitchcock, 19 Vt. 634; Foster v. Foster, 10 U. C. Q. B. 607. Contra, in Minnesota. Pierro v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 37 Minn. 314, 34 N. W. 38); nor for profits accruing after the judgment and before the writ of habere possessionem (Shumake v. Nelms, 25 Ala. 126); but it bars an action for mesne profits (Cummings v. McGehee, 9 Port. (Ala.) 349; Cobb v. Wrightsville, etc., R. Co., 129 Ga. 377, 58 S. E. 862; Doe v. Wright, 10 A. & E. 763, 2 P. & D. 672, 37 E. C. L. 401, 113 Eng. Reprint 289) from the date of the demise (Fairman v. Fairman, 1 U. C. C. P. 435).

Judgment in trespass to realty if for plaintiff therein bars a subsequent action for the same act upon other parts thereof, as the act is indivisible (Pierro v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 39 Minn. 314, 34 N. W. 38); and estops defendant to deny plaintiff's title in an action for another trespass at the same place, if title was in issue (Clinton v. Franklin, 83 S. W. 142, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1053), but not if title to another part of the premises only was there in question (Providence v. Adams, 10 R. I. 184; Hunter v. Birney, 27 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 204).

Other applications of rule.—A judgment for an injury to personalty in favor of plaintiff in an action for trespass thereto does not bar an action for injury to the person from the same act (Brunsden v. Humphrey, 14 Q. B. D. 141, 49 J. P. 4, 53 L. J. Q. B. 476, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 529, 32 Wkly. Rep. 944); nor is an action of replevin for the taking of personalty a bar to an action for trespass to land committed at the same time (Gibbs v. Cruikshank, L. R. 8 C. P. 454, 42 L. J. C. P. 273, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735, 21 Wkly. Rep. 734). Damages for a permanent injury to land must all be recovered in one action, as damages resulting from a permanent erection on defendant's land which cast water on plaintiff's (Gart-

by one in possession of property bars an action by the general owner.[8] The estoppel of a judgment is coextensive with the trespass.[9] A judgment for defendant under plea of liberum tenementum estops plaintiff from showing that the land at the place of trespass was not in dispute.[10] A judgment is no defense for acts done under it in breach of a contract not to enforce it.[11] An acquittal of the criminal charge is no bar to an action of trespass for the same act, brought by the injured party;[12] but under certain statutes criminal proceedings before the magistrate bar a civil action.[13]

7. THE ACTION[14] — a. Forms of Action — (I) IN GENERAL. Trespass vi et armis is the proper remedy for a direct injury committed with force,[15] and takes the form of trespass quare clausum for a forcible violation of the right of possession of realty.[16]

(II) TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM. The entry is the gist of the action of trespass quare clausum and acts thereafter are mere aggravation.[17] This action lies for a forcible violation of the right of possession of realty.[18] It lies for removal

ner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Nebr. 444, 98 N. W. 1052); but recovery for making an erection on plaintiff's land does not bar a subsequent action for maintaining it there (Holmes v. Wilson, 10 A. & E. 503, 37 E. C. L. 273, 113 Eng. Reprint 190). So recovery by bailee of chattels bars an action by bailor for their taking (Jones v. McNeil, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 466); recovery by a mere possessor bars an action by the owner (Guttner v. Pacific Steam Whaling Co., 96 Fed. 617); recovery by a mortgagor in possession bars an action by the mortgagee, but the court will exert its equitable powers to control the disposition of the sum recovered (Elvins v. Delaware, etc., Tel., etc., Co., 63 N. J. L. 243, 43 Atl. 903, 76 Am. St. Rep. 217); recovery by a grantee of land in possession under void deed from guardian of infants bars action by any one else (Todd v. Jackson, 26 N. J. L. 525), and recovery by a vendee in possession of land for the cutting of trees thereon bars an action by the vendor, although he has not paid for it or received a deed (Hunt v. Taylor, 22 Vt. 556); but it has been held in Kentucky that an action by one who cut trees by a trespass against the vendee for the purchase-price does not bar an action by the owner, although notified to come in and defend, if brought in a foreign jurisdiction (Jones Lumber Co. v. Gatliff, 82 S. W. 295, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 616).

S. Wooley v. Edson, 35 Vt. 214; Hunt v. Taylor, 22 Vt. 556, holding that an action by vendee of land in possession under contract in which he agrees not to cut trees by a stranger bars an action by the vendor, although payment has not been made or a deed given.

of part of the realty,[19] but not for an injury committed after an entry by permission, because as already stated the wrongful entry is the gist of the action.[20] It is the remedy against a sublessee where subletting is contrary to statute,[21] and lies by a life-tenant for a severance of part of the realty.[22] It cannot be maintained for breaking and entering property not real estate.[23]

(III) TRESPASS DE BONIS. Trespass de bonis lies by a lessee whose term is to begin in futuro for destruction by the lessor of a growing crop which the lessee has agreed to buy,[24] and for taking and carrying away fixtures or portions of realty temporarily severed.[25] It does not lie in favor of a life-tenant for the severing and taking of trees. This results from the nature of his interest in the premises.[26]

(IV) TRESPASS FOR MESNE PROFITS. Trespass for mesne profits is the remedy for keeping plaintiff out of possession, brought after regaining possession,[27] and lies after judgment in a writ of entry, without showing any actual entry.[28]

sought for the tort only does not alter the rule;[33] and damages cannot be recovered in another action for the trespass to such realty,[34] although it has been held that in trespass to a tract of land lying in two states the injury to the part outside the state may be shown to enhance the damages.[35] In many states the jurisdiction of certain courts in trespass to realty is limited to cases where title is involved.[36] Common-law courts have jurisdiction of marine trespass, and this is not taken away by the establishment of the New York courts.[37]

c. Venue [38] — (i) At Common Law. Trespass to realty is a local action,[39] and cannot be brought outside the jurisdiction where the land lies,[40] and so cannot be brought outside the county where the land lies.[41] Where the locus has been annexed to another county, the action lies there.[42] Trespass to personalty is transitory and may be brought anywhere, regardless of the place of trespass.[43]

L. R. A. 416, holding that a statute providing that all personal actions, except certain named, may be commenced by trustee process, and requiring trustee writs to be returnable in the county where the trustee lives, do not give jurisdiction of an action for trespass to land committed in another state, although such action is personal, and may be begun by trustee process.

On the other hand, trespass for injuries to the person or for false imprisonment is a local action.[44]

(II) In Courts of Limited Jurisdiction. By statute in some states courts of limited jurisdiction have no jurisdiction of trespass to realty,[45] in others it is limited in such case by the amount of damages demanded.[46] In other states their jurisdiction is ousted if title comes in issue,[47] and so title cannot be given in evidence in such cases for any purpose;[48] but they have jurisdiction to try the fact of possession.[49] A state court cannot decide a federal question.[50]

(III) Under Statutes. The common-law rule that trespass to land is a local action is expressly continued by statute in some of the states,[51] and the statutes relating to venue have not in general been held to alter the rule,[52] although in some states the rule has been changed by statute or constitutional provision.[53]

Title is in issue where plaintiff, in order to establish constructive possession, relies on title (Orris v. Kempton, 105 Mich. 229, 63 N. W. 68; Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44, 38 N. W. 670; Dold v. Knudsen, 70 Nebr. 373, 97 N. W. 482); where right of possession is in issue (Ehle v. Quackenboss, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 537); or where defendant sets up a right of way, public or private (Randall v. Crandall, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 342; Whiting v. Dudley, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 373; Saunders v. Wilson, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 338; Radley v. Brice, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 539; Striker v. Mott, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 465); or where plaintiff's allegation of title is denied (Lipsky v. Borgmann, 52 Wis. 256, 9 N. W. 158, 38 Am. Rep. 735). But a plea of license does not put title in issue (Dolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 74, holding that plea that defendant contracted to sell with authority to reënter on default is a plea of license); nor the fact that the injury is to the freehold (Gregory v. Kanouse, 11 N. J. L. 62; Haley v. Wheeler, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 569); and the location of a boundary line on the land does not necessarily involve title (La Rue v. Smith, 153 N. Y. 428, 47 N. E. 796). So where one of two adjoining tenants, each, respectively, in possession of land and buildings thereon up to a dividing fence, removes the fence on to the land of the other, an action by the other for damages for the taking of the lands and buildings thereon is not an action in which title or boundaries of lands are in dispute, of which a justice could not have jurisdiction, there being no dispute as to where the fence was, and it makes no difference that plaintiff introduced evidence to show that the true line was where the fence had stood. Smith v. Schlink, 6 Colo. App. 228, 40 Pac. 478.

In Texas title is not in issue so as to oust the jurisdiction if only incidentally involved (Hatch v. Allen, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 229); nor where the action is for damages and not to determine title (Victoria v. Schott, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 332, 29 S. W. 681; Brown v. Brown, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 82; Gulf, etc., R. 53. Osmond v. Flournoy, 34 Ga. 509, holding that a constitutional provision that all civil cases shall be tried in the county where defendant resides includes trespass to realty.

The statutes in Texas give jurisdiction of trespasses to the courts in the jurisdiction where they are committed,[54] although this was formerly limited to cases where the trespass was a crime,[55] and Georgia has a somewhat similar statute.[56]

d. Conditions Precedent to Suit. Where the trespass was felony it has been held that there can be no recovery for the civil wrong till the offender has been prosecuted.[57] Statutes requiring that before action shall be brought against the government or the employees notice shall be given have been held to apply to trespasses,[58] but are strictly interpreted.[59] Where a taking of goods is not authorized by a writ the statute requiring that claim be made upon the sheriff before bringing suit does not apply.[60] Restoration of the consideration for a contract is not a prerequisite to an action for a trespass done in violation of it;[61] and a grantee of land need not return money paid his grantor by the trespasser for a void contract for timber.[62]

e. The Scope of the Action. Trespass is a personal action, and judgment in trespass can only be for damages.[63] A verdict for possession in addition to the damages is surplusage,[64] and the jury by a verdict in trespass cannot establish a disputed boundary,[65] although the true boundary may be a subject for consideration.[66] Title is not involved in the issue where possession merely is alleged.[67] But title may be put in issue and determined as a fact in trespass quare clausum.[68]

68. Weidner v. Lund, 105 Ill. App. 454; Booth v. Sherwood, 12 Minn. 426.

Under an issue as to title plaintiff must show title at the place of trespass (France v. Four-Mile Land, etc., Co., 32 S. W. 283, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 665), but not elsewhere, although it is alleged (Knowles v. Dow, 20 N. H. 135; J. L. Roper Lumber Co. v. Elizabeth City Lumber Co., 135 N. C. 742, 47 S. E. 757).

petition [70] but must state the gist of the action.[71] After pleading defendant cannot take advantage of a defect in the writ.[72] Process under special statutes must conform to the local practice.[73] In Pennsylvania where defendant is a non-resident, process in trespass to land may be served on him in an adjoining county.[74] Under statute in Wisconsin allowing arrest in trespass there is no distinction between voluntary and involuntary trespass and a warrant is proper in either case.[75]

g. Pleadings — (i) General Requisites. In general, the pleadings must contain allegations of the cause of action or defense relied on. Therefore there can be no recovery for trespass not declared on [76] or for acts not trespass.[77] And so no recovery can be had for a trespass when the action does not allege a trespass, but is brought for an injury of a different sort,[78] nor for damages not claimed by the complaint.[79] Conclusions of law should not be pleaded.[80] Evidential facts need not be alleged.[81] And an argumentative plea is bad on special demurrer.[82]

70. Des Moines Nav., etc., Co. v. Doran, 4 Iowa 553; Fogg v. Cushing, 40 Me. 315.

It is not ground for abatement that the writ omits to allege the date of the trespass (Des Moines Nav., etc., Co. v. Doran, 4 Iowa 553; Bishop v. Lyman, 6 N. H. 268); or that the act was committed with force and arms (Bishop v. Lyman, 6 N. H. 268); or notice required by a statute, the gist of the action being the breaking and entering (Fogg v. Cushing, 40 Me. 315); and in trespass quare clausum, the writ need not describe all the boundaries (Teed v. Beebe, 3 Nova Scotia 426).

71. Parris v. Brown, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 267, holding that the nature of the act and the property trespassed on must be stated.

73. McKenna v. Fisk, 1 How. (U. S.) 241, 11 L. ed. 117, holding that a writ mentioning a trespass on a warehouse and seizure and destruction of goods covers a transitory as well as a local action.

76. Iowa.— Negley v. Cowell, 91 Iowa 256, 59 N. W. 48, 51 Am. St. Rep. 344, holding that where no claim for damage from pasturage is made in a substituted petition the fact that it was made in the original petition which was put in evidence will not supply the lack.

Kentucky.— Gillen v. Wilson, 2 T. B. Mon. 11, holding that no more trespasses can be recovered for than are declared on.

Mississippi.— Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Chastine, 54 Miss. 503, act amounting to an independent trespass.

New York.— La Rue v. Smith, 153 N. Y. 428, 47 N. E. 796, act not stated as a cause of action, of a different nature from those so stated and occurring a year earlier.

Vermont.— Clark v. Boardman, 42 Vt. 667 (acts not committed on the premises described); Myrick v. Downer, 18 Vt. 360 (on declaration for a single trespass recovery confined to one act).

Canada.— Caniffe v. Caniffe, 1 U. C. Q. B. 551, holding that in trespass for destruction of a dam there can be no recovery for crossing land to get to it, where not declared on.

Illustrations.— Under a declaration in trespass to land, plaintiff cannot recover under an implied promise for use and occupation (Haskins v. Andrews, 12 Wyo. 458, 76 Pac. 588), for a conversion (Joseph Dessert Lumber Co. v. Wadleigh, 103 Wis. 318, 79 N. W. 237) against a purchaser from the trespasser (Joseph Dessert Lumber Co. v. Wadleigh, supra), for waste (Tracy v. Ames, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 500), or for a breach of the terms of a lease (Willis v. Branch, 94 N. C. 142).

78. Potter v. New Haven, 35 Conn. 520, ejectment.

79. Taylor v. Keeler, 50 Conn. 346.

Illustrations.— Where damage to a well alone from flooding is claimed there can be no recovery for flooding the land (Taylor v. Keeler, 50 Conn. 346); and in an action for value of fruit trees destroyed their value attached to the soil cannot be recovered (Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Warnecke, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 83, 95 S. W. 600).

80. Rankin v. Sievern, etc., R. Co., 58 S. C. 532, 36 S. E. 997, holding that an allegation that a trespass by a railroad was "without having acquired a right of way" is a conclusion of law.

81. Haggerty v. Potter, 111 Ill. App. 433.

Illustrations.— In trespass against a carrier for assault, it need not state that plaintiff was a passenger. Haggerty v. Potter, 111 Ill. App. 433. Surplusage, that is, unnecessary but not misleading allegations, does not vitiate the complaint.[83]

(II) The Declaration, Petition, or Complaint — (A) In General. The declaration must state the essential elements of the cause of action,[84] but no special form of words is necessary.[85] Defenses need not be negatived [88] except under special circumstances.[87] The substance of the complaint is looked to,[88] and if the cause of action stated in the declaration is a trespass it will be treated as such, although in form it is another action; [89] or if it contains the necessary allegations in trespass and lacks some of those necessary to the other cause of action; [90] or Sufficiency of complaint considered in various actions.— For taking water from a spring and injuring it (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Higginbotham, 153 Ala. 334, 44 So. 872); removal of plaintiff's pipe laid in a highway (Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 82 Pac. 66); trespass de bonis (Covington v. Simpson, 3 Pennew. (Del.) 269, 52 Atl. 349); taking goods by illegal process (Gray v. Joiner, 127 Ga. 544, 56 S. E. 752); injury to a horse (Summers v. Tarney, 123 Ind. 560, 24 N. E. 678; Bruch v. Carter, 32 N. J. L. 554); injury to woman from trespass on her husband's house where they resided (Watson v. Dilts, 116 Iowa 249, 89 N. W. 1068, 93 Am. St. Rep. 239, 57 L. R. A. 559); forcible expulsion from realty and injury to goods (Mecartney v. Smith, (Kan. App. 1900, 62 Pac. 540); injury from deadening trees (Ramos Lumber, etc., Co. v. Labarre, 116 La. 559, 40 So. 898), or carrying them off, together with parts of a building (Johns v. Schmidt, 32 Kan. 383, 4 Pac. 872); assault (Reed v. Maley, 115 Ky. 816, 74 S. W. 1079, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 209); forcible taking of property held under lien (Cooper v. Cappel, 29 La. Ann. 213); entry by a railroad on a street the fee of which plaintiff owns (Morrell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 49 Minn. 526, 52 N. W. 140); unlawful ouster of a leaseholder (Robertson v. Cleveland, etc., Mineral Land Co., 70 Mo. App. 262; Creswell Ranch, etc., Co. v. Scoggins, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 373, 39 S. W. 612), or interference with his business (Gans v. Hughes, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 615); unlawful seizure of goods (Barfield v. Coker, 73 S. C. 181, 53 S. E. 170); destruction of a sewer (Diamond v. Smith, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 558, 66 S. W. 141); entry on realty and assaulting plaintiff's servants and removing his personalty (Tallman v. Barnes, 54 Wis. 181, 11 N. W. 478); or cutting down and destroying trees (Gilchrist v. Dominion Tel. Co., 19 N. Brunsw. 553 [affirmed in Cassels Dig. (Can.) 844]).

Where wilfulness or negligence is a necessary element in a trespass it must be alleged. Baldwin v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 78 S. C. 419, 59 S. E. 67.

Forbidding trespass.— Plaintiff need not allege that he forbade the trespass (Loop v. Chamberlain, 17 Wis. 504), or prove it if alleged (Hooper v. Smith, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899, 53 S. W. 65).

85. McRae v. Blakeley, 3 Cal. App. 171, 84 Pac. 679, holding that the fact that the act was wrongful and unlawful need not be stated in those words.

Civ. App. 373, 39 S. W. 612 (holding that where plaintiff in trespass quare clausum alleges that land of an unknown is inclosed with his he must negative defendant's right to it).

88. Russell v. Meyer, 7 N. D. 335, 75 N. W. 262, 47 L. R. A. 637, holding that a declaration for forcibly entering plaintiff's land and removing a barn is trespass to realty, not conversion of personalty.

App. 454, 87 S. W. 41; Lundgren v. Crum, 47 Nebr. 242, 66 N. W. 284; Lewis v. Thompson, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 329, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 316; Montgomery v.

contains allegations of another cause of action badly pleaded,[91] or well pleaded, but the proof is insufficient to support it yet is sufficient for trespass.[92] The complaint is not bad because matters merely in aggravation are not well laid,[93] but a paper filed for another purpose cannot be recovered on as a declaration.[94] Under some codes the declaration may include a prayer for an injunction.[95]

(B) Description of Property Involved. The property involved must be described,[96] and a correct description of land is sufficient, although it applies also to land in defendant's possession.[97] The description need not be a particular description.[98] Description by metes and bounds is not necessary,[99] although not improper,[1] and it is held that any description which is sufficiently certain to identify the property is good[2] unless a special description is required by Edwards, 45 Vt. 75), or containing allegations that the trespasses were negligently (Kratzer v. Saratoga Springs, 158 N. Y. 736, 53 N. E. 1127) or maliciously (Stilwell v. Zinser, 6 N. Y. St. 10. Contra, Miller v. Clark, 78 Mo. App. 447) done.

Description by name or abuttals is not necessary. Noyes v. Colby, 30 N. H. 143.

Descriptions held sufficient.—A description is sufficient where the locus is described as a creek, although it is a lake, if the lake is part of the creek (W. K. Syson Timber Co. v. Dickens, 146 Ala. 471, 40 So. 753); or as plaintiff's property, a description of which is annexed and marked "Exhibit A" (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickens, 148 Ala. 480, 41 So. 469); or as a certain close of plaintiff in a particular county (Prussner v. Brady, 136 Ill. App. 395); or by street number (Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318); or by stating the number of acres, the survey and its general location, and the name by which the premises are generally known (Badu v. Satterwhite, (Tex. Civ. App. 1910) 125 S. W. 929); or as being in a certain county (Jean v. Sandiford, 39 Ala. 317); or as plaintiff's land in a certain county (Larkin v. Taylor, 5 Kan. 433); or town (Elliot v. Shepherd, 25 Me. 371); or by name acquired by reputation (Tyson v. Shueey, 5 Md. 540); or as in a certain part of a section of land north of a certain county drain, without giving the section number, if there is only one section north of the drain (Husted v. Willoughby, 117 Mich. 56, 75 N. W. 279); or as a mining claim of a stated size, without a reference to location certificate and patent for metes and bounds (Rico-Aspen Consol. Min. Co. v. Enterprise Min. statute.[3] But a description is bad if uncertain,[4] erroneous,[5] or misleading.[6] Part of a house may be described as a messuage.[7] The description of property refers to the time of trespass not the time of filing of declaration.[8] In Maryland and the District of Columbia, where the land or the place of trespass is located on plats, that location is absolutely controlling,[9] but the plats need not be produced in evidence but may be proved by other evidence.[10]

(c) Statement of Acts Constituting Trespass. The allegation of the acts complained of in the declaration must be positive and direct,[11] certain,[12] and not mis-

Dowl. P. C. N. S. 151, 11 L. J. Exch. 15, 9 M. & W. 249); or by name of a close to which it was annexed a year before (Brownlow v. Tomlinson, 8 Dowl. P. C. 827, 1 M. & G. 484, 1 Scott N. R. 426, 39 E. C. L. 867); and where the town in which the trespass is alleged is afterward divided and the locus set off to another town the trespass may be alleged as done in the original town (Renaudet v. Crocken, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 167).

The whole description need not be proved if enough is proved to identify the property. Goodwin v. Jack, 62 Me. 414.

Personalty.— In a suit for injury to personal property plaintiff must show what property was injured. McKenna v. Fisk, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,852, 1 Hayw. & H. 179. Personalty is sufficiently described as a "stock of merchandise formerly owned by [A.] consisting of," etc., and in a named town and building (Joseph v. Henderson, 95 Ala. 213, 10 So. 843); or as "four horses, the property of the plaintiff" (Beaumont v. Yantz, 1 Ill. 26); or that defendant "broke and entered the close of the plaintiff, situate . . . and took and carried away therefrom two hundred dozen sheaves of wheat, the personal property of the plaintiff" (Richardson v. Brewer, 81 Ind. 107).

3. See cases cited infra, this note.

Sufficient compliance with statute.— A statute requiring the name to be given is complied with by the averment "lands of the plaintiff covered with water, being the bed and channel of the river T., and under the same, in the several parishes of L. & L., in the county of G" (Beaufort v. Vivian, 7 Exch. 580, 21 L. J. Exch. 204); or requiring name or abuttals or other proper description by stating the lands or natural objects on the boundaries (Forbush v. Lombard, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 109); or the owner's name (Sawyer v. Ryan, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 144).

4. See cases cited infra, this note.

What descriptions are bad for uncertainty. — A declaration is bad which alleges the taking of documents and receipts to prove plaintiff's claim against the British government for one thousand two hundred dollars, sundry notes of hand and accounts in five books, and other papers of the plaintiff (Oystead v. Shed, 12 Mass. 506); or which alleges the taking of "chattels to the value of $1000," as the chattels must be specified (Mayfield v. White, 1 Browne (Pa.) 241); but where plaintiff is named as owner of certain lands, describing them, with a certain exception, a subsequent allegation of injury "to said premises" is not uncertain (Toner v. Eau Claire, 56 Wis. 173, 14 N. W. 55); and where defendant denies that he cut any trees he cannot claim he was misled as to which of the trees falling within the description were sued for (Plumb v. Griffin, 74 Conn. 132, 50 Atl. 1).

5. Martin v. State, 89 Miss. 633, 42 So. 601, holding that locating a house in block 8 instead of block 9 is fatal error.

Description erroneous but not misleading. — Where the close is misdescribed but defendant knows it by that description and so is not misled, it is sufficient. Hart v. Doyle, 128 Mich. 257, 87 N. W. 219; Burton v. Lazell, 16 Vt. 158.

6. See cases cited infra, this note.

Application of rule.— In trespass, for destruction of growing corn, if it is in a highway that fact should be stated (Wolf v. Holton, 61 Mich. 550, 28 N. W. 524); and where the locus is described as bounded on a public road, it will not be taken to include land to the center of the road (Pickering v. Shearer, 11 Gray (Mass.) 153; Simonds v. Chesley, 30 N. Brunsw. 303 [affirmed in 20 Can. Sup. Ct. 174); but in trespass to a "mill dam" destruction of a false dam used during repair of the regular dam can be shown (Durgin v. Leighton, 10 Mass. 56).

Applications of rule.—Plaintiff must locate the place of trespass on plats where the defense is on warrant of resurvey (Houck v. Loveall, 8 Md. 63), and cannot show possession not in accordance with the plats (Houck v. Loveall, supra; Carroll v. Smith, 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 128; Chapman v. Brawner, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 366; Holmead v. Corcoran, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,627, 2 Cranch C. C. 119); nor give evidence of trespass or other things not located on the plats and referred to in the explanation thereof (Funk v. Hughes, 5 Gill (Md.) 315; Crawford v. Berry, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 310; Mundell v. Perry, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 193; Pottinger v. Hall, 4 Harr. & M. (Md.) 349).

leading,[13] nor by way of recital,[14] and it must be alleged that the act was wrongful.[15] No special form of words is necessary, however,[16] and the words will not be construed strictly.[17] A direct statement of facts is sufficient if the wrong can be inferred from them.[18] Where the act is done by defendant's direction for his benefit it may be declared on as done by him.[19] A complaint by a disseizee in trespass for the original entry may state the continuance of the disseizin to characterize the ouster, although the recovery is for the ouster only.[20] Where only one trespass is alleged plaintiff cannot prove several,[21] except when done the same day on the same close for one general purpose.[22]

(D) Allegations of the Right Invaded. Plaintiff's right must be directly stated [23] and possession cannot be inferred,[24] except from an allegation of title,[25] which is

Application of rule.— Workings on plaintiff's mining claim must be stated definitely as to the extent of the workings (Rico-Aspen Consol. Min. Co. v. Enterprise Min. be exactly proved.[35] Any trespass whether before or after the date laid may be proved[36] if within the period of the statute of limitations[37] and before the bringing of the action.[38] Where a single act of trespass is alleged as done at a certain time several trespasses committed at different times cannot be shown,[39] but plaintiff is confined to some single day.[40] This rule, however, has been changed in some places by statute,[41] and does not apply to a number of distinct acts done at the same place on the same day and in pursuance of the same general plan,[42] nor on a succession of days.[43] A trespass may be alleged with a continuando, that is, as committed on a certain day and continued for a certain period. When this is done only one distinct act of trespass can be shown.[44] Where the time of a trespass is alleged with a continuando no act can be shown prior to the first date named.[45] But not only may a single trespass be described as continuous; "divers trespasses" may be alleged to have been committed from day to day during a certain period,[46] and where the acts are several and distinct trespasses they cannot be declared on with a continuando but must be alleged as occurring at divers times.[47] In general where "divers trespasses" are alleged as occurring within a certain period any number within the period may be shown.[48] The case differs from the statement of time with a continuando. Plaintiff may show either a single act prior to the time first alleged or any number of trespasses within the period.[49] If a single prior act is proved it cannot be abandoned and acts subsequent shown,[50] and vice versa,[51] except where statutes have relaxed the rule.[52]

(F) Allegations of Quantity and Value. The allegation of value is formal only,[53] and a greater value than alleged may be proved.[54] No value need be stated to set forth a cause of action,[55] and a declaration is sufficient which omits the quantity or value of the several items of property injured,[56] except where otherwise provided by statute.[57]

By statute in Alabama it is not necessary to allege that the land trespassed on is in the county where the action is brought. Pike v. Elliott, 36 Ala. 69.

70. Barrett v. Mobile, 129 Ala. 179, 30 So. 36, 87 Am. St. Rep. 54, holding that where a statute requires that a statement of claim must be filed before bringing an action a complaint which fails to allege such filing is bad on demurrer.

74. Tuthill v. Clark, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 642.

75. Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318.

Plea held bad for uncertainty in the scope of a license pleaded (Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318); as to which of two rights of way were intended to be put in issue (Robbins v. Wolcott, 19 Conn. 356); as to what part of the goods taken the plea of justification was intended to cover (Oystead v. Shed, 12 Mass. 506); as to the location of a boundary line (Orange v. Berry, 24 N. H. 105); as to whether the justification pleaded was intended as a public or a private way or a license (Boyce v. Brown, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 80).

76. Monks v. Dyke, 1 H. & H. 418, 8 L. J. Exch. 73, 4 M. & W. 567, holding that a plea alleging possession of a dwelling-house is misleading where defendant merely had two rooms therein and plaintiff, the landlord, had the key to the outer door.

Constructive possession by title can be shown under a plea of possession. Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412.

77. Davidson v. Pickard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 374, holding that a special plea alleging that a boundary was fixed by agreement, but not showing where, is insufficient.

Pleas held sufficient.—An answer which justifies the same trespass alleged is not bad for lack of venue where the venue was laid in the complaint. Levelling v. Leavell, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 163. An averment that certain persons were created and declared a corporation is a sufficient averment that defendant corporation was organized. Beekman v. Traver, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 67. It is not necessary to state that a warrant of a pleaded together.[78] Defendant need not plead his evidence but only the ultimate facts proved by it.[79] Defendant may be allowed to withdraw his demurrer and plead without notice to plaintiff.[80] There must be a separate plea to each count. An allegation that all the counts are for the same trespass and then justifying is bad on special demurrer.[81] Under some statutes inconsistent defenses may be pleaded.[82]

(B) Answering Entire Charge. The entire trespass as alleged in the complaint must be answered,[83] but not mere matters of aggravation,[84] for the trespass is the gist of the action, and it is enough to answer it completely; matters of aggravation need not be answered.[85] But they are admitted by admitting the principal justice was under seal. Beekman v. Traver, supra.

Applications of rule.— Liberum tenementum may be pleaded with the general issue (Hext v. Jarrell, 2 Strobh. (S. C.) 172); or with a plea denying plaintiff's right (Slocombe v. Lyall, 6 Exch. 119, 20 L. J. Exch. 95, 2 L. M. & P. 33).

79. Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318 (holding that a plea of a lease is sufficient, without setting it out); Latta v. Redden, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 426.

82. Johnson v. Eversole Lumber Co., 144 N. C. 717, 57 S. E. 518, 147 N. C. 249, 60 S. E. 1129, holding that under Revisal (1905), § 482, authorizing a defendant to set forth as many defenses as he may have, a defense, in an action for cutting timber, praying that plaintiff be decreed a trustee of the premises for the benefit of defendant, is not a waiver of the denial of plaintiff's title.

83. See cases cited infra, this note.

Applications of rule.— Justification of an entry only is bad where entry is not even an element of some of the counts. Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318. A plea answering one count only without averring that all the counts are for the same cause of action is bad in substance. McGillicuddy v. Forsythe, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 435; Rubottom v. McClure, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 505. In trespass de bonis if defendant enumerates in his justification the articles taken he must enumerate all. Sterry v. Schuyler, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 487; Hickok v. Coates, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 419, 20 Am. Dec. 632. In trespass in two counts alleging trespass at different times a justification of "the trespass" is bad. Gleason v. Howard, Brayt. (Vt.) 190. Plea of title to part of goods alleged to have been taken is insufficient. Parker v. Lewis, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,741*a*, Hempst. 721. A plea of bankruptcy to a declaration, some of the causes of action in which would not pass to the assignee, is bad. Rogers v. Spence, 12 Cl. & F. 700, 8 Eng. Reprint 1586. In trespass for assaulting, beating, and wounding, a plea that defendant gently expelled plaintiff from his house does not answer the beating and wounding. Gregory v. Hill, 8 T. R. 299, 101 Eng. Reprint 1400. To a declaration for several trespasses, including placing rubbish on the soil and tearing up and subverting it, a plea of right of way is bad. Tobin v. O'Neil, 2 Nova Scotia 60. In trespass for breaking and entering and taking goods where defendant pleaded two pleas, first that goods were not plaintiff's, second that close was not plaintiff's, each was held bad on demurrer, as each was pleaded to the whole but only answered part. Lambe v. Teeter, 20 U. C. Q. B. 82. In trespass quare clausum for cutting grass and corn and taking away hay and corn liberum tenementum is bad as it does not appear that the grass and corn taken were the same that were cut. Wilcox v. Montgomery, 5 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 312. In an action for assaulting, beating, and falsely imprisoning plaintiff a plea not answering the allegation of false imprisonment is bad. Jones v. Ross, 3 U. C. Q. B. 328. But where to a declaration in two counts defendant pleaded to "the whole trespass and all the trespasses mentioned in the declaration" it was held to be an answer to the whole. Parker v. Parker, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 236.

Rule applied in respect of particular allegations.— Tearing down a gate (Pico v. Colimas, 32 Cal. 578), tearing down a fence and consequential damage therefrom (Sayles v. Bemis, 57 Wis. 315, 15 N. W. 432), unlawful use of land after entry (Lindquest v. Union Pac. R. J. Exch. 272, 14 M. & W. 437 [affirmed in 1 Exch. 261]), taking personalty (Herndon v. Bartlett, 4 Port. (Ala.) 481; Carpenter v. Barber, 44 Vt. 441; U. S. v. Magoon, 26 trespass and pleading merely in justification,[86] and if defendant answers them as a substantive cause of action he cannot have judgment on justification of the trespass only.[87] A justification of the aggravation without justifying the trespass is bad.[88]

(c) Pleas in Abatement. The plea must clearly set forth the cause for abatement,[89] and any defect of form is fatal to the plea.[90] The remedy for non-joinder of parties plaintiff is by plea in abatement.[91]

(d) Denials — (1) On Information and Belief.[92] A denial on information and belief is bad,[93] except where otherwise provided by statute.[94]

(2) Denial of the Right Invaded. A denial of plaintiff's right is a good answer,[95] but there must be a denial of the right as alleged;[96] and whatever goes to show that plaintiff has not the right alleged can be shown under such denial.[97] A plea of land not plaintiff's puts his possession in issue.[98] Where title and possession are alleged, a plea of not possessed is good, as possession is the gist of the action.[99] Where by statute certain facts are made equivalent to possession and

Under "not possessed" defendant can show a retaking of plaintiff's cow from plaintiff of which defendant had possession as security for a debt from plaintiff with a privilege in plaintiff of driving her home twice a day to milk, and a failure by plaintiff to return her, the agreement expressly giving a right to retake in such case. Richards v. Symons, 8 Q. B. 90, 10 Jur. 6, 15 L. J. Q. B. 35, 55 E. C. L. 90.

Under plea of land not plaintiff's defendant can show title in himself (Gray v. Harding, 21 U. C. Q. B. 241); or one under whom he claims (Kellington v. Herring, 17 U. C. C. P. 639; Gray v. Harding, 21 U. C. Q. B. 241); or that he is a grantee of the mortgagor and that prior to default the mortgagor gave him right of possession (Dundas v. Arthur, 14 U. C. Q. B. 521).

Tenancy in common of the parties is not admissible under a plea denying plaintiff's possession. Wilkinson v. Haygarth, 12 Q. B. 837, 11 Jur. 104, 16 L. J. Q. B. 103, 64 E. C. L. 837; Moore v. Moore, 3 Nova Scotia Dec. 436.

they are declared on by plaintiff a denial that plaintiff is owner or in possession sufficiently puts them in issue.[1]

(3) General Issue or General Denial.[2] Any defense can be shown under the general issue that denies allegations which plaintiff must prove.[3] The general issue denies the act of trespass alleged,[4] and that it was on the land described in the declaration,[5] and under it defendant can show that the damages were less than as claimed,[6] or that they did not result from his act.[7] So also all the circumstances of the transaction can be shown.[8] A categorical denial in the answer of the statement of claim is considered equivalent to a plea of not guilty.[9] According to a number of decisions, some of which are based on statutes and rules of court, the general issue puts in issue only the wrongful act alleged, and therefore does not deny the right of plaintiff as alleged,[10] although according to the prevailing view it is held to put in issue also plaintiff's right as he has alleged it,[11]

Massachusetts.— Stone v. Hubbard, 17 Pick. 217, trespass quare clausum.

Michigan.— Under the Michigan statutes pleading the general issue does not operate as a denial of title. A special plea is essential for this purpose. Haney v. Munzar, 104 Mich. 119, 62 N. England.— In England by virtue of the provisions of the Hilary Rules, in actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, the plea of not guilty operates as a denial that defendant committed the trespass alleged in the place mentioned, but not as a denial of plaintiff's possession or right of possession of that place, which, if intended to be denied, must be traversed specially (Reg. Gen. Hil. T. 4 Wm. IV, r. 5; 1 Chitty Pl. (16th Am. ed.) 538; Jones v. Chapman, 18 L. J. Exch. 456); and in trespass de bonis asportatis, the general issue does not put in issue plaintiff's property in the goods carried off. Martin Civ. Proc. § 264. Prior to the Hilary Rules the rule was as stated in the next paragraph of text (Argent v. Durrant, 8 T. R. 403, 101 Eng. Reprint 1457; Badkin v. Powell, Cowp. 478, 98 Eng. Reprint 1195; Dodd v. Kyffin, 7 T. R. 354, 101 Eng. Reprint 1016).

Y.) 35 (trespass quare clausum); Child v. Allen, 33 Vt. 476; Brainard v. Burton, 5 Vt. 97 (trespass de bonis asportatis). And therefore if title is alleged it denies plaintiff's especially where there is statutory authority therefor.[12] The weight of authority is that under the general issue plaintiff may show title in himself to the property on which the trespass was committed, whether it was land,[13] or personalty,[14] or title in those under whom he entered the land [15] or took the personalty.[16] So defendant may show possession in himself of the land,[17] or posses-title to the land (Monumoi Great Beach v. Rogers, 1 Mass. 159; Solomon v. Grosheck, 65 Mich. 540, 36 N. W. 163; Carmichael v. Township No. 1 School Land Trustees, 3 How. sion of land in a third person rightful against plaintiff,[18] or that defendant is a tenant in common with plaintiff of the land,[19] or entered by authority of defendant's tenant in common.[20] On the same principle defendant under the general issue may rely upon an agreed boundary line,[21] or other right to the land.[22] The general denial, which is a statutory form of plea, denies every allegation of the declaration, and therefore puts in issue plaintiff's right as alleged.[23]

(4) PLEAS AMOUNTING TO THE GENERAL ISSUE. A plea which is inconsistent with plaintiff's right as alleged in the declaration amounts to the general issue and is therefore bad on special demurrer;[24] and so also is a plea inconsistent with defendant's having done the act as alleged.[25] But a plea admitting and justifying a trespass does not amount to the general issue.[26]

(5) DENIAL OF DAMAGES. Under the general issue evidence of all circumstances attending the trespass are admissible for defendant on the question of damages.[27] Facts in mitigation cannot be pleaded but must be shown under the general issue,[28] unless otherwise provided by statute.[29] A denial of value must not be modo et forma.[30]

Miscellaneous applications of rule.— That the killing of plaintiff's horse was in self-defense must be pleaded in justification. Stow v. Scribner, 6 N. H. 24. So in trespass quare clausum, it must be pleaded in justification that defendant went to plaintiff's house to demand a debt. Van Buskirk v. Irving, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 35. So the fact that plaintiff's title was obtained by fraud (Huddleston v. Spear, 8 Ark. 406; Smith v. Edelstein, 92 Ill. Justification held sufficient.— It is a good justification to an action for trespass to a several fishery that the locus was an arm of the sea; it is not an argumentative traverse, as it admits the soil to be plaintiff's but not in such a way as to include a several fishery. Applications of rule.— In justifying under a writ of a justice of the peace, it is not enough to plead it, but the judgment, the parties, the date, the justice, and the fact of his jurisdiction must be stated or else the judgment set out in hæc verba. Olmstead v. Thompson, 91 Ala. 130, 8 So. 755. Justification under the drainage law must show that plaintiff's land was legally taken and the drainage commissioner properly appointed. Pettingill v. Lawrence, 20 Ill. App. 552. A plea of a distraint for rent must show that it was made subsequent to the day the rent fell due and before the termination of the tenancy. Kizer v. Kennedy, 11 Ill. 572. A justification as town trustee in opening a road by order of the board of commissioners must state that the notice required by statute has been given. Suits v. Murdock, 63 Ind. 73; Ruston v. Grimwood, 30 Ind. 364. A justification for entering plaintiff's house and taking property which merely alleges that the property belonged to defendant and does not deny an assault charged in the complaint is insufficient. Stowers Furniture Co. v. Brake, 158 Ala. 639, 48 So. 89. Justification as tax assessors must show that defendants were legally elected as such. Allen v. Archer, 49 Me. 346. A plea of right of way must allege that it extends to servants or the justification will not extend to them. Bartlett v. Prescott, 41 N. H. 493. Justification under title in the "inhabitants" of the "Chichester, etc., School District," which is not a corporation known to the law, does not sufficiently describe them. Foster v. Lane, 30 N. H. 305. In justifying an entry to repair a wharf on failure of plaintiff to do so, the plea must state that repairs were necessary and that plaintiff was notified to repair and failed to do so. Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 B. & C. 302, 3 D. & R. 556, 2 L. J. K. B. O. S. 28, 26 Rev. Rep. 363, 9 E. C. L. 138, 107 Eng. Reprint 396.

Identity of acts justified and acts complained of.— An express averment that the acts justified are the same as those complained of is not necessary, if it appears that they are (Carridge v. Lautour, 7 L. J. K. B. O. S. 33); but the plea is bad if the identity of the acts is neither averred nor appears (Wheeler v. Me-shing-go-me-sia, 30 Ind. 402). If, however, identity is specifically alleged it is sufficient, although the acts justified are to some extent inconsistent with those alleged. Peaslee v. Wadleigh, 5 N. be made to appear;[42] but evidential facts need not be set forth,[43] nor the provisions of a public statute;[44] and matter which should properly have been deferred until the replication need not be denied.[45] Under a general statement of a justification, any particular justification coming within its terms can be shown.[46] The general issue with notice that defendant will give evidence of a particular justification is equivalent to a plea of the justification.[47] alleged as at a certain close and defendant justifies in a different place, but alleges the acts to be the same as those complained of, he need not traverse the locus, the place being immaterial.

(2) LIBERUM TENEMENTUM. Liberum tenementum is a good plea in trespass quare clausum,[48] whether the premises are described generally in the complaint[49]

Contra.— Durkee v. Varnum, 1 Root (Conn.) 410, because it does not deny plaintiff's right of possession.

In New York a distinction has been taken between an action of trespass quare clausum and an action for cutting and removing trees, holding the latter transitory and liberum tenementum a bad plea to it. Shank v. Cross, 9 Wend. 160.

It has been assigned as a reason why the plea is good, that it gives plaintiff implied color of title and is therefore not bad as amounting to the general issue (Hunter v. Hatton, 4 Gill (Md.) 115, 45 Am. Dec. 117; Millet v. Singleton, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 355); and that it admits possession sufficient against a wrong-doer but denies that it was rightful and asserts a right to possession in defendant (Ryan v. Clark, 14 Q. B. 65, 7 D. & L. 8, 13 Jur. 1000, 18 L. J. Q. B. 267, 68 E. C. L. 65; Doe v. Wright, 10 A. & E. 763, 2 P. & D. 672, 37 E. C. L. 401, 113 Eng. Reprint 289).

or a particular description is given;[50] and the right to justify under this plea is not changed by statutes regulating proceedings in forcible entry and detainer.[51] The plea admits such a possession in plaintiff as would enable him to maintain the action against a wrong-doer,[52] and asserts a right of freehold in defendant with right to immediate possession,[53] thereby putting in issue the question of whether the premises are defendant's freehold,[54] and, according to the usual doctrine, that alone is in issue.[55] The plea must be proved by deed or adverse possession for the period of the statute of limitations[56] or by estoppel.[57] A plea that the close was the close and soil of defendant is not a plea of liberum tenementum, but puts only plaintiff's possession in issue.[58]

(F) Matters in Mitigation. Unless otherwise provided by statute, facts which do not amount to a justification but are in mitigation of damages need not be specially pleaded, but may be shown under the general issue or general denial.[59] Facts which are in mitigation only, and which do not constitute a justification, should not be pleaded as a justification. They must be pleaded as mitigating circumstances and not as a full defense; or the pleading will be demurrable.[60]

Evidence admissible to support plea.— Defendant can show that he is mortgagor, under a mortgage entitling him to possession (Dundas v. Arthur, 14 U. C. Q. on not guilty,[61] unless the plea amounts merely to a denial of the trespass.[62] Where defendant pleads liberum tenementum in another, and that defendant did the acts complained of under his command, plaintiff cannot, under a replication traversing the command, show an unexpired lease to plaintiff, and that in consequence defendant had no authority to give the command. The lease must be specially pleaded;[63] and under a traverse of a plea of liberum tenementum in one under whom defendant acted, a recovery in ejectment by plaintiff against the third person cannot be shown.[64] That defendant exceeded the right pleaded in justification should be set up by a reply.[65] Fraud which makes the justification void, not merely voidable, need not be replied, but may be given in evidence under a traverse of the justification,[66] otherwise where, as is usually the case, the fraud renders the transaction voidable merely not void.[67] A denial of a justification modo et forma denies all its allegations.[68] There cannot be a new assignment unless there was a special plea;[69] but if the trespasses are justified plaintiff may then new assign other and different trespasses,[70] and if he does so, without a traverse, the action is then for them only, or trespasses not within the justification.[71] But to recover, plaintiff must show that they were different.[72] Where defendant's answer applies to a trespass other than that intended by the complaint, plaintiff should new assign.[73] The general issue continues to be an answer to the whole cause of action, notwithstanding a new assignment.[74] Where the pleas clearly put in issue the whole matter alleged there can be no further pleading except a traverse.[75] If the plea is true in part and is pleaded to the whole, plaintiff may

70. See Cameron v. Lount, 3 U. C. Q. B. 453, holding that where all of a number of trespasses are justified, a new assignment of a different trespass from "that" justified is bad. It should be from "any." And see cases cited infra, this and subsequent notes in this section.

Time and place need not be stated in the new assignment. It is sufficient to allege that the trespasses complained of were committed at other and different times, and on other and different occasions. McGillis v. Martin, 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 495.

Thus if only one trespass is proved, plaintiff cannot recover (Smith v. Ingoldsby, 9 U. C. Q. B. 207; Reeves v. Myers, 1 U. C. Q. B. 462); as the jury, if the circumstances are alike, ought to consider it the same (Darby v. Smith, 2 M. & Rob. 184); and so plaintiff should be nonsuited (Henderson v. Beekman, 4 U. C. Q. B. 150).

73. Waddell v. Corbett, 25 U. C. Q. B. 234, holding that in trespass quare clausum where defendants pleaded that the sheriff under a writ of habere facias made a warrant to his bailiff who entered, etc., a reply that the sheriff himself entered is bad as it appears there were but two trespasses and the answer was to one not complained of.

Thus where only a single act of trespass is alleged there can be no new assignment (Taylor v. Smith, 7 Taunt. 156, 2 E. C. L. 304); nor can plaintiff both traverse the justification and new assign (Spencer v. Bemis, 46 Vt. 29); as where in trespass quare clausum, land is particularly described (Smith v. Powers, 13 N. reply, as where only part of the goods were wrongfully taken.[76] If the plea is true in part, plaintiff may new assign for the part not covered thereby.[77] By statute in many states the pleadings end with the answer, and in such states the common-law rules as to necessity or propriety of a reply or new assignment do not apply.[78] Some courts hold that the justification proved must be coextensive with the trespass alleged;[79] and if defendant fails in proof of his justification to any part of the trespasses, plaintiff is entitled to a verdict without new assigning the excess.[80]

(B) Sufficiency of. A replication in confession and avoidance is good if consistent with the plea,[81] but it is bad if it changes the form of the action[82] or if it is inconsistent with the plea,[83] but not if it merely qualifies it.[84] A replication de injuria to a plea of title is bad,[85] but not to a plea in excuse in which title to other lands is pleaded as inducement;[86] and a replication de injuria does not put in issue excess in the exercise of a right pleaded as a justification.[87] A traverse must deny the whole of the answer,[88] but the form of the traverse is not strictly construed.[89] Where plaintiff replies to a plea of liberum tenementum by setting up title in himself, the reply not being the proper one, and possession being sufficient to maintain the action, which is admitted by the plea, the court will construe the reply as a denial only of defendant's plea of title, and treat the rest as surplusage.[90]

(v) REJOINDER. Where plaintiff traverses the justification, no rejoinder should be made.[91] It is not necessary to take issue on an immaterial traverse.[92] Where plaintiff new assigns trespasses extra viam defendant should deny them if he claims that all the acts were done on the way.[93]

properly joined, as trespass quare clausum and trespass de bonis.[1] A count alleging that defendant committed the act is properly joined with one alleging that his agent did it.[2] Successive trespasses of the same kind to personalty can be alleged in a single count with a continuando,[3] for where a number of separate acts of trespass in taking goods are parts of a whole transaction, the whole constitutes a single trespass,[4] and an entry on several closes at the same time is a single act of trespass for which recovery can be had in a single count.[5] A series of acts against plaintiff's possession under one plan can be united in a single cause of action.[6]

(B) Aggravations Alleged in a Single Count. In an action for trespass to realty plaintiff may in the same count with the allegation of the trespass allege damage to the realty as aggravation[7] and injury to the person, or to chattels, or the like; as for instance, conversion of chattels,[8] injury to business and taking of fixtures,[9] injury to personalty[10] or fixtures,[11] injury to the person,[12] assault and battery,[13] frightening plaintiff's wife,[14] which need not be alleged to give a cause of action[15] or proved to entitle plaintiff to recover;[16] nor will disproof of it defeat the action.[17] Proof of special damages alone will not entitle plaintiff to recover,[18] for there can be no recovery if the entry is not proved,[19] or if the entry is justified,[20] even where the distinction between trespass and case has been abolished by statute.[21]

(VIII) AMENDMENTS. Where the pleadings fail to set forth the real issue they may be amended,[22] even after the evidence is closed,[23] or even after verdict,[24] provided the complaint as amended would still be consistent with the original case and issue.[25] So plaintiff may amend the declaration by adding a count for a similar trespass, if he adheres to his original cause of action;[26] but a new cause of action cannot be added by amendment,[27] at least after the expiration of the period of the statute of limitations.[28] An amended pleading which is bad will be stricken out on motion without demurrer.[29] Where it appears that trespass is not the proper form of action, but some action may lie, plaintiff may on terms change the form of action by amendment,[30] and the scope of the action may be enlarged if the intent appears in the complaint.[31]

(IX) ADMISSIONS IN PLEADINGS. A failure to deny the allegations of the complaint or declaration admits them; and plaintiff need prove only the allegations denied.[32] So a plea of title to land in defendant liberum tenementum admits

For instance.— Title properly alleged is admitted by failure to deny it (Norton v. Young, 6 Colo. App. 187, 40 Pac. 156; Althause v. Rice, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 347); even though the land is wild and vacant (O'Reilly v. Davies, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 722); and so possession if not denied is admitted (Falmouth v. Vaughan, 11 Nova Scotia 438; Grotto v. Farish, 3 Nova Scotia 291). A plea of not guilty in trespass quare clausum admits plaintiff's title and right to possession, if they are well alleged (Nafe v. Hudson, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 381, 47 S. W. 675); and a plea of not guilty admits the correctness of the description of the land (Merritt v. Coxeter, 4 N. Brunsw. 385). Under the Utah practice act a failure to deny quantity and value admits them (Rhemke v. Clinton, 2 Utah 230); but by statute in Kentucky the amount of damages must be proved, although not denied (Mize v. Jackson, 32 S. W. 467, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 750).

In Georgia plaintiff had formerly to prove all the allegations of his complaint. Majette possession in plaintiff;[33] and the doing of the act complained of,[34] and a plea of leave and license admits possession of plaintiff and entry by defendant.[35] A plea of justification, however, does not admit facts not alleged in the declaration.[36] But a plea in justification, when not accompanied by a denial of the acts alleged, admits the facts alleged in the complaint or declaration.[37] Where, however, a general denial is joined with the justification, plaintiff must prove all the allegations of his complaint or declaration, since nothing is admitted.[38] A replication confessing and avoiding admits the allegations of the plea.[39] And a new assignment is held to admit the plea.[40] So it has been held that a motion to dismiss based on a certain state of facts admits their existence.[41] Other admissions

41. Harrison v. Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 100 N. Y. 621, 3 N. E. 187, holding that, although a complaint was so indefinite in form that it was more appropriate to an action of ejectment than trespass, yet where defendant at the outset of the trial moved to dismiss on the ground that it was in ejectment, and that the averments showed trespass only, and then moved that plaintiff elect between ejectment and trespass, and at the close again moved to dismiss on the ground that the only acts proven were trespass, all of which motions were denied, defendant cannot claim, on appeal from a verdict of trespass, that the complaint did not set up a cause of action in trespass; if the evidence proved a trespass, as, in making his first motion, he as-may be made by the pleadings, as has already been shown in another treatise appearing in this work.[42]

(x) VARIANCE. As in other actions,[43] the proof must correspond with the pleadings. Plaintiff must prove the facts of his case substantially as he has set them out in his declaration or complaint. Title or right must be proved as alleged[44] and also the description of the property,[45] and the alleged acts of trespass,[46] except in unessential details.[47] A material variance between pleading and proof is fatal;[48]

42. McBurney v. Cutler, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 203.

Instances.— Claim of title from the person through whom plaintiff claims admits his title (McBurney v. Cutler, 18 Barb. (N. Co., 154 Ind. 218, 56 N. E. 210); and allegation of numerous and continuous wrongful acts of trespass does not amount to an admission of possession in defendant (Arizona, etc., R. Graham v. Sellers, 70 Ga. 720 (holding that injury to trees used to make turpentine cannot be recovered in trespass to "mill timber"); Benton v. Beattie, 63 Vt. 186, 22 Atl. 422 (holding that in trespass for taking spruce trees on a certain lot there can be no recovery for spruce trees on a different lot).

Abuttals.— In trespass quare clausum it is necessary to prove the abuttals of the close (Tyson v. Shueey, 5 Md. 540; Wheeler v. Rowell, 7 N. H. 515; Hooker v. Hicock, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 172; Fraser v. Hunter, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,063, 5 Cranch C. C. 470); or other special description (Mattice v. Farr, Taylor (U. H. 486, holding that land need not be bounded by monuments but may be by abutting land generally; Rollins v. Varney, 22 N. H. 99, holding that points of the compass need not be exactly stated; Wheeler v. Rowell, 6 N. H. 215, 7 N. H. 515, holding that a statement that land abuts on another's on the south does not mean all along the line; Hooker v. Hicock, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 172; Fraser v. Hunter, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,063, 5 Cranch C. C. 470); and need not be proved exactly as alleged (Barden v. Smith, 7 Wis. 439; Harrison v. Brown, 5 Wis. 27, holding that where three abutters on the east are stated it is enough to prove two. And see Pitt v. Shew, 4 B. & Ald. 206, 6 E. C. L. 453, 106 Eng. Reprint 913).

An allegation of breaking plaintiff's close is proved by an entry on any part. Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray (Mass.) 441.

46. Ropps v. Barker, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 239 (as breaking and entering); Adler v. Parr, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 482, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 255 (an erection was upon plaintiff's land). But acts coming within the description are sufficient however slight they are. Thus the projection of eaves on plaintiff's land is sufficient proof of the allegation of forcibly building a barn thereon (Smith v. Smith, 110 Mass. 302); and an allegation of the erection of an obstruction over plaintiff's land proved by showing a board nailed to defendant's house but standing out over plaintiff's land (Hennessy v. Anstock, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 644). So expulsion from part of a close sustains a count for expulsion. Gesner v. Cairns, 7 N. Brunsw. 595.

The rule has been applied: Where possession in several is alleged and proof is of possession in one (Holmes v. Bagge, 1 E. & B. 782, 17 Jur. 1095, 22 L. J. Q. B. 301, 72 E. C. L. 782); where the plea is that an assault was made to prevent plaintiffs driving away defendant's gig and proof is that plaintiff seized the horse's head to obtain defendant's name and address (Gaylard v. Morris, 3 Exch. 695, 18 L. J. Exch. 297); where under an allegation of joint recovery in trespass for mesne profits, proof is made that the demise was by one alone (Ashton v. Keesar, and the evidence must be confined to proof of the allegations of the pleadings.[49] Evidence of any facts within the scope of the allegations is, however, proper.[50]

(xi) Waiver of Defects and Objections and Aider by Proceedings at the Trial or by Verdict or Judgment. Defects of form are waived if objection is not taken specially,[51] and are cured by verdict.[52] But a Place described.—In trespass quare clausum evidence must be confined to the locus described. Sullivan v. Clements, 1 Colo. 261; Waltemeyer v. Wisconsin, etc., R. Co., 71 Iowa 626, 33 N. W. 140; Longfellow v. Quimby, 29 Me. 196, 48 Am. Dec. 525; White v. Moseley, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 230; Knowles v. Dow, 20 N. Justification.—A justification not pleaded cannot be shown (Hudson v. Miller, 97 Ill. App. 74; Fidler v. Smith, 10 Iowa 587); nor can evidence of one justification be given in evidence under a plea of another. Thus under plea of accord and satisfaction, arbitration and award is not admissible (Hubbert v. Collier, 6 Ala. 269); and under a plea of an unqualified right to raise water by a dam, evidence of a qualified right is irrelevant (Corbin v. Brown, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 306). On plea of license title cannot be shown (Coan v. Osgood, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 583); and evidence of a several freehold is not admissible under plea of a joint freehold (Williams v. Holmes, 2 Wis. 129). Defendant who pleads a justification must prove it as he alleges it. Thus a license alleged must be coextensive with the trespass. Thompson v. Van Buskirk, 14 U. C. Q. B. 388. If divers trespasses are alleged and the license was revoked before all were committed, plaintiff is entitled to judgment. Marrs v. Davidson, 26 U. C. Q. B. 641. In an action by several plaintiffs when a license is alleged in defense, it is not proved by showing a license from one plaintiff only. Murray v. Haverty, 70 Ill. 318. A license to erect and maintain a wall is not proved by a license to erect merely. Alexander v. Bonnin, Arn. 337, 4 Bing. N. Cas. 799, 8 L. J. C. P. 53, 6 Scott 611, 33 E. C. L. 983. Under the plea of license a lease of land cannot be shown (Cooper v. Adams, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 87; Johnson v. Carter, 16 Mass. 443); nor a right of entry by reason of purchase of trees (Howe v. Batchelder, 49 N. H. 204); or of purchase of a growing crop (Lunn v. Turner, 4 U. C. Q. B. 282); nor a license other than an express license (Moxon v. Savage, 2 F. & F. 182; Williams v. Morris, 11 L. J. Exch. 126, 8 M. & W. 488; Lunn v. Turner, 4 U. C. Q. B. 282). But a plea of license is sustained by evidence of a stipulation in a lease of land giving a right to take possession on default (Kavanagh v. Gudge, 1 D. & L. 928, 8 Jur. 362, 13 L. J. C. P. 99, 7 M. & G. 316, 7 Scott N. R. 1025, 49 E. C. L. 316); and a plea of liberum tenementum is proved by proof of title to the locus only, not the whole close (Profile, etc., Hotels Co. v. Bickford, 72 N. H. 73, 54 Atl. 699; Rich v. Rich, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 663; Providence v. Adams, 10 R. I. 184; Smith v. Royston, 1 Dowl. P. C. N. S. 124, 10 L. J. Exch. 437, 8 M. & W. 381. Contra, Munn v. Galbraith, 13 U. C. C. P. 75); and defendant may show title to any part in the absence of proof of the exact place of trespass (Ware v. Johnson, 55 Mo. 500). A possessory right cannot be shown under plea of an easement (Darlington v. Painter, 7 Pa. St. 473); nor a particular easement under a plea of a general easement (Darlington v. Painter, supra); so under plea of a way, a way of necessity cannot be shown (Teed v. Beebe, 3 Nova Scotia 426); or a private way under a plea of a public way (Aiken v. Stewart, 63 Pa. St. 30); nor a license under a plea of contract (Carrington v. Roots, 6 L. J. Exch. 95, 2 M. & W. 248). And where a highway is alleged it is not proved by evidence of a usage, however long, of passing over a common. Emerson v. Wiley, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 68. A plea that defendant acted under "military orders" is not sustained by proof of verbal orders. Simpson v. Markwood, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 340. Where the allegation as to justification includes more than is necessary, the essential part only need be proved. Weld v. Brooks, 152 Mass. 297, 25 N. E. 719; Moriarty v. Brooks, 6 C. & P. 684, 25 E. C. L. 638. The rule as to proof of a justification is less rigid in case of notices given under the general issue by virtue of a statute than where the defense is pleaded. Manion v. Creigh, 37 Conn. 462.

50. Arrington v. Larrabee, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 512; Briggs v. Bowen, 60 N. Y. 454.

In trespass quare clausum plaintiff will not be restricted in proof to a less number of lots than is set forth in his complaint. Gardner v. Gooch, 48 Me. 487.

51. Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Co. v. McComb, 92 Ark. 297, 122 S. W. 648 (failure to give description and value of timber cut on each tract trespassed upon); Griffin v. Gilbert, 28 Conn. 493 (omission of allegation of force and arms); Foley v. McCarthy, 157 Mass. 474, 32 N. E. 669 (failure to describe the premises as prescribed by statute); Leatherbee v. Barrett, 152 Mass. 532, 25 N. E. 965; Bean v. Green, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 279 (failure to allege quantity and value); Van Dyk v. Dodd, 6 N. J. L. 129 (failure to allege quantity and value); Higgins v. Hayward, 5 Vt. 73 (omission of use of word "force").

verdict will not of itself cure the omission of an essential fact,[53] although proof of it at the trial will do so,[54] if evidence introduced for that purpose is not objected to.[55] Matters not within the issue may sometimes become a part of it and matters within it may be eliminated from it by the course of the trial. Thus, when at the trial evidence is admitted as if the pleadings raised a certain issue the case will be treated as if they did;[56] and so if plaintiff admits at the trial a justification not pleaded,[57] or if counsel treat it as pleaded,[58] or make no objection to it,[59] the verdict will not be disturbed; and if the trial is on the theory that the issue includes only certain points it will be so confined;[60] but admission without objection of evidence in aggravation before the principal trespass is proved does not preclude defendant from thereafter objecting to it on failure of such proof.[61]

(XII) BENEFIT OF PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENCE SHOWING A DEFENSE NOT PLEADED. According to some decisions defendant can take advantage of a bar to the action which was not pleaded by him but appears from plaintiff's evidence.[62] But in such cases plaintiff's evidence may be considered in mitigation of damages.[63]

(XIII) PLEADINGS ON REMOVAL FROM JUSTICE'S COURT. The pleadings on removal from a justice's court on plea of title must be the same as in the justice's court. Where title is pleaded below, that and that only can be relied on in the upper court,[64] and where the general issue was pleaded defendant cannot show title.[65] So where title and the general issue were pleaded below only the

E. 210 (holding that an averment in trespass to land that plaintiff was "owner" is sufficient after judgment); Ballard v. Leavell, 5 Call (Va.) 531 (trespass laid by way of recital instead of directly averred); Smith v. Smith, 37 N. Brunsw. 7 (holding that a verdict for expulsion and exclusion from realty and for profits will not be disturbed because recovered on a complaint in form for mesne profits).

60. Emmons v. Quade, 176 Mo. 22, 75 S. W. 103 (holding that where the trial is on theory of wilful trespass, the use of the word "negligently" in the complaint does not warrant an instruction as to it); Miller v. Rambo, 66 N. J. L. 191, 49 Atl. 453 (holding that where injury to a lot is tried on the theory that damages were limited to compensation for diminished convenience, evidence of the cost of replacing a sewer on property is improperly admitted); Butman v. Wright, 16 N. H. 219 (holding that where in trespass de bonis, evidence of the taking was put in and defendant justified under legal process, plaintiff could not thereafter show abuse of the process); Miller v. Decher, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 228 (holding that where trespass quare clausum is tried on the assumption that plaintiff has title, defendant cannot show a lease to a third person and possession by him under it).

title can be relied on above.[66] If other pleas are made, the remedy is by motion to strike out.[67] The plea of title includes any right of possession.[68] Where the statutory procedure for removal on title coming in issue is not followed by defendant, it is proper not to discontinue but to reject evidence of title at the trial.[69]

h. Evidence — (i) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF. In general, the burden of proving facts is on the person who relies on them; therefore plaintiff must prove the allegations of his complaint.[70] And the wrong must be proved as alleged by plaintiff;[71] and where defendant has set up a justification, plaintiff must establish facts admitting the justification but avoiding it.[72] The burden of proof is on defendant to establish a justification pleaded by him.[73] An improper

E. 510); title by adverse possession (Monk v. Wilmington, 137 N. C. 322, 49 S. E. 345), or good title if no possession is shown (Le Moyne v. Anderson, 123 Ky. 584, 96 S. W. 843, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1017; Bullard v. Hollingsworth, 140 N. C. 634, 53 S. E. 441). Where a statute requires that surveys of land be recorded in order to be evidence of possession, plaintiff, relying on them, must show that they were recorded. Rivers v. Burbank, 13 Nev. 398. If, however, a prima facie title is proved by the production of a deed, the burden of bringing in evidence of invalidity of the deed is on defendant. Jackson v. Gunton, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 203 [affirmed in 218 Pa. St. 275, 67 Atl. 467].

71. Mead v. Pollock, 99 Ill. App. 151; Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co., 144 N. C. 110, 56 S. E. 695.

The place of trespass must be proved as alleged, as, in trespass to land, that the act was on plaintiff's land. Thus, in trespass against a highway commissioner for removing a fence where plaintiff bounded the locus on a highway and defendant justified that the fence was in the highway, the burden of proof was on plaintiff to prove the place was in the highway. Holbrook v. McBride, 4 Gray (Mass.) 215. So plaintiff must show that a wharf whose removal was complained of was on his land and if defendant counterclaims for erecting a wharf on his land he must prove that it was on his land. Zwicker v. Morash, 34 Nova Scotia 555. But see Campbell v. King, 32 Mo. App. 38 (holding that if defendant admits the act it has been held that the burden is on him to show it was not done on plaintiff's property); McCormick v. Monroe, 46 N. C. 13 (holding that where plaintiff describes the land by metes and bounds "except two hundred and fifty acres previously granted" defendant must show the act was on the part previously granted).

72. Mason v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 74 S. C. 557, 54 S. E. 763, holding that fraud in obtaining a license under which defendant justified must be shown by plaintiff.

Matter postponing the statute of limitations must be shown by plaintiff. Thus where the statute provided that limitation should run as to injuries to timber from the date of discovery by plaintiff it was held that the burden was on plaintiff to show the date. Citizens' Bank v. Jeansonne, 120 La. 393, 45 So. 367.

When defendant pleads liberum tenementum he must prove his title to the land as alleged (Rondell v. Fay, 32 Cal. 354, holding that, if the title alleged is good in part and bad in part, defendant must show the act was done within the efficient part; Caskey v. Lewis, 15 B. anticipation in a pleading does not shift the burden of proof, but it remains as it would have been if the pleading had taken the proper course.[74] Where certain facts have been shown the person relying on other related facts is sometimes aided, in the absence of direct evidence either way, by a presumption of fact as to their existence.[75] plaintiff); as title by adverse possession (Miller v. Wolfe, 30 Nova Scotia 277, holding that payment of rent must be negatived for twenty years prior to action brought, not to trial); or by condemnation proceedings (Bassett v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 201 Pa. St. 226, 50 Atl. 772, holding that defendant must show the locus was part of the land condemned); and upon that plea plaintiff is entitled to recover if defendant fails to show title according to his plea (Carpenter v. Logee, 24 R. I. 383, 53 Atl. 288).

A public right must be proved as alleged, as a highway at the locus (District of Columbia v. Robinson, 14 App. Cas. (D. C.) 512 [affirmed in 180 U. S. 92, 21 S. Ct. 283, 45 L. ed. 440]; Weed v. Sibley, 40 Me. 356; New Windsor v. Stocksdale, 95 Md. 196, 52 Atl. 596; Danielson v. Kyllonen, 111 Minn. 47, 126 N. And see Holbrook v. McBride, 4 Gray (Mass.) 215, holding that where plaintiff bounded his land on a highway he must prove that the locus was not in the highway, although defendant alleged in justification that the act was done in the highway); or a public common (Wilbur v. Peckham, 22 R. I. 284, 47 Atl. 597).

An easement must be proved as alleged, as a prescriptive right of way. Black v. O'Hara, 54 Conn. 17, 5 Atl. 598; Pennington v. Lewis, 4 Pennew. (Del.) 447, 56 Atl. 378.

Legal authority must be proved as alleged. Thus the sheriff must show that a sale of goods which he attached as the vendor's was bad as in fraud of creditors (Cook v. Thornton, 109 Ala. 523, 20 So. 14); and where goods are taken for non-payment of a tax, defendant must show a tax due and a right to take as collector (Woodbridge v. Conner, 49 Me. 353, 77 Am. Dec. 263).

Consent or license must be proved as alleged. Northern Trust Co. v. Palmer, 171 Ill. 383, 49 N. E. 553; Collier v. Jenks, 19 R. I. 493, 34 Atl. 998.

A right by contract must be proved as alleged. Columbia Land, etc., Co. v. Tinsley, 60 S. W. 10, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1082; Williford v. Williams, 127 N. C. 60, 37 S. E. 74.

74. Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318, holding that an allegation in the declaration that the trespass was against the will of plaintiff does not put upon him the burden of proving non-consent; defendant must plead and prove plaintiff's consent.

75. See cases cited infra, this note.

If an act of trespass is proved it is presumed to be wilful (Watkins v. Gale, 13 Ill. 152); so as to enable plaintiff to recover the value of logs at the time of their conversion rather than the value of the standing timber (Mississippi River Logging Co. v. Page, 68 Minn. 269, 71 N. W. 4); or the value of ore without deduction for cost of mining (St. Clair v. Cash Gold Min., etc., Co., 9 Colo. App. 235, 47 Pac. 466); and there is no presumption in defendant's favor that the act was justified (Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. Suppl. 66 [affirmed in 188 N. Y. 600, 81 N. E. 1161], holding that a telephone company must prove a license to enter and attach its wires to plaintiff's land); although it is a continuing trespass whose origin was prior to defendant's acquisition of title (Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. Suppl. 66 [affirmed in 188 N. Y. 600, 81 N. E. 1161]); but where a boundary is in dispute the presumption of wilfulness fails (Gunn v. Harris, 88 Ga. 439, 14 S. S. 593); and on proof that defendant took some of the trees from plaintiff's land for which he sues, plaintiff cannot show that defendant had no land in the vicinity and so must be trespassing on some one, to raise a presumption that the rest were taken from plaintiff's land (Sorrel v. Carlin, 23 La. Ann. 528).

Proof of title to land raises a presumption that the holder is in possession (Griffin v. Creppin, 60 Me. 270; Stone v. Perkins, 217 Mo. 586, 117 S. W. 717); although she is a married woman and she and her husband entered into possession (Van Nostrand v. Hubbard, 35 N. Y. App. Div. 201, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 739); and title and possession shown are presumed to continue till an ouster is shown (Brimmer v. Proprietors Long Wharf, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 131).

A notice that defendant is going to do an act justifies a presumption that the doing of it thereafter was by him. Gourdier v. Cormack, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 200, blasting on adjoining land.

A trespass by a servant in the course of his employment is presumed to be at his master's direction. Carter v. Pinchbeck, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 356.

One who buys and pays for property is presumed to be the owner. Kelly v. Davidson, 7 N. Y. St. 481.

Entry by a person having right of entry is presumed to be under the right. Benson v. Bolles, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 175; McGrady v. Miller, 14 Vt. 128.

Where a trespass renders proof as to damage difficult the presumption is against the trespasser. Hence if defendant mingles ore taken from plaintiff's land with his own, plaintiff can recover the whole unless defendant proves how much is his (Little Pittsburg Consol. Min. Co. v. Little Chief Consol. Min. Co., 11 Colo. 223, 17 Pac. 760, 7 Am. St. Rep. 226; St. Clair v. Cash Gold Min., etc., Co., 9 Colo. App. 235, 47 Pac. 466); and the presumption as to number, quantity, and value of articles of personalty taken is against the trespasser (Harris v. Rosenberg, 43 Conn.

(II) ADMISSIBILITY — (A) In General. The evidence must be relevant to the fact to be proved,[76] but in general any relevant evidence is admissible,[77] except hearsay,[78] although not sufficient in itself without other evidence supplementary to it;[79] and it is admissible if offered in connection with an offer of proof of such 227); but proof of the taking of property raises no presumption that defendant took other property in the same place which was found to be missing, in the absence of proof of opportunity to take, as that it was there immediately before and missed immediately after (Harris v. Rosenberg, supra).

Alterations and interlineations in a document made by a public officer are presumed to have been made prior to execution, as an execution. Wilbur v. Wilbur, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 405.

Defendant's name on wagons raises a presumption that they were in use in his service (Leubuscher v. Bailey, 52 Misc. (N. Y.) 661, 102 N. Y. Suppl. 756); and his denial coupled with failure to call his foreman who was in court does not rebut it (Leubuscher v. Bailey, supra).

The rule of the criminal law that a man is presumed innocent till proved guilty does not apply to a civil trespass. Bonelli v. Bowen, 70 Miss. 142, 11 So. 791.

Direct proof of want of consent by plaintiff to cutting timber on his property does not prevent a recovery; the acts of plaintiff and other evidence before the jury could create an inference that plaintiff did not consent. Bufford v. Little, 159 Ala. 300, 48 So. 697.

Evidence of expense entailed by defendant's trespass is not admissible where not offered for the purpose of claiming its amount. W. K. Syson Timber Co. v. Dickens, 146 Ala. 471, 40 So. 753.

Applications of rule.— General reputation of defendant cannot be shown for any purpose. Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383, 29 N. W. 876, 6 Am. St. Rep. 305. Acts done by defendant on other land are not admissible, nor the amount paid his agents for the work there. Avery v. White, 79 Conn. 705, 66 Atl. 517. In trespass by a tenant against his landlord the duration of negotiations for the lease is immaterial, and also whether plaintiff complained to the police of the trespass. Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318. Where possession only is in issue evidence is not admissible to show a right not possessory. Fisher v. Dowling, 66 Mich. 370, 33 N. W. 521. And where title is in issue, evidence of mere possession by consent of the owner is irrelevant. Hunter v. Hatton, 4 Gill (Md.) 115, 45 Am. Dec. 117. Evidence of a conviction for violating the oleomargarine law is not admissible in an action for a forcible seizure of other oleomargarine. Medairy v. McAllister, 97 Md. 488, 55 Atl. 461. In trespass for cutting trees where plaintiff testified that he was keeping them for lumber and he got several thousand feet of lumber some years before, evidence that said lumber is still in his mill and its condition is irrelevant. Hathaway v. Goslant, 77 Vt. 199, 59 Atl. 835. In an action for cutting timber on plaintiff's land, evidence as to the number of trees cut within six years on land lying some distance from that of plaintiff was irrelevant. Avery v. White, 83 Conn. 311, 76 Atl. 360. In trespass against a railroad for purchasing stolen ties evidence that afterward it required sellers to make affidavit that they were not stolen is presumptively prejudicial and irrelevant. Holladay-Klotz Land, etc., Co. v. T. J. Moss Tie Co., 79 Mo. App. 543. In trespass quare clausum, evidence as to defendant's reason for filing a prior bill of equity against plaintiff concerning the property, and as to the nature of negotiations for settlement of the differences, was immaterial. Co-operative Bldg. Bank v. Hawkins, 30 R. I. 171, 73 Atl. 617.

77. Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271.

Applications of rule.— Where ratification is in issue evidence of repudiation by a principal of his agent's act done outside the scope of his authority is admissible. Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271. Plaintiff may testify as to the trespass. Gray v. Joiner, 127 Ga. 544, 56 S. E. 752. As bearing on the weight and credibility of plaintiff's evidence that a tax payment was intended to pay taxes on two tracts the amount of the payment is admissible. Trexler v. Africa, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 395. Inaccuracy does not render evidence inadmissible but goes only to its credibility. Bassett v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 201 Pa. St. 226, 50 Atl. 772. The identity of property taken by defendant with that held by plaintiff under writ of replevin may be shown by the officer who executed the writ. Woodward v. Garey, 2 Walk. (Pa.) 447. Where it appeared that plaintiff's property injured was being used illegally by him he can show that he had made an honest effort to comply with the law. Fowler v. Harrison, 39 Wash. 617, 81 Pac. 1055.

78. Catchot v. Ocean Springs, 78 Miss. 509, 29 So. 468; Carmichael v. Township No. 1 School Land Trustees, 3 How. (Miss.) 84.

Limitation of rule.— Hearsay is admissible to show how plaintiff obtained knowledge of the trespass, although not to prove the act. Gordon v. Cook, 47 Mich. 248, 10 N. W. 357.

79. Pike v. Elliott, 36 Ala. 69 (holding that evidence of a trespass by defendant on plaintiff's land is admissible without first identifying the land as the same as that de-supplementary evidence,[80] or if followed by proof of it.[81] Relevant evidence is admissible, although it also tends to prove a trespass other than that complained of,[82] or tends to show a defense not set up if properly restricted.[83]

(B) Title and Claim of Title. Where plaintiff relies expressly on a title by grant or of record he must prove it, and evidence of a title otherwise derived is inadmissible,[84] and in proving documentary title all deeds in the chain of title are admissible.[85] In disproving title in general, anything is admissible which tends to invalidate it, as that plaintiff's title was invalid,[86] or that his right is a scribed in the complaint, although this must be done at some time during the trial); Heinrichs v. Terrell, 65 Iowa 25, 21 N. W. 171 (holding that a deed in the chain of plaintiff's title is admissible, although defective, as other evidence may cure it); Perry v. Jefferies, 61 S. C. 292, 39 S. E. 515 (holding that evidence of the act is admissible, although the witness states the date as prior to that laid in the declaration as the date can be otherwise shown); Stratton v. Lyons, 53 Vt. 641 (holding that evidence of title is admissible, although insufficient in itself).

80. Keim v. Warfield, 60 Miss. 799, holding that in an action for cutting trees evidence of one person that he counted the stumps at the point where plaintiff claimed defendant had cut is admissible in connection with an offer to prove that another person saw defendant cut the trees there.

81. Wolf v. Wolf, 158 Pa. St. 621, 28 Atl. 164, holding that proof that persons were seen cutting trees at a certain place is admissible to show possession of plaintiff where it is followed by their testimony that they were cutting for plaintiff.

82. Lee v. Lord, 76 Wis. 582, 45 N. W. 601, holding that in an action for cutting and removing logs marked "A" evidence of the cutting of other logs is admissible if it tends to show how many of those so marked were taken and the recovery is limited to those so marked.

83. Heilbron v. Heinlen, 72 Cal. 371, 14 Pac. 22 (holding that under a denial of plaintiff's possession defendant may show fifteen years' possession in himself, although he did not plead the statute of limitations); Quillen v. Betts, 1 Pennew. (Del.) 53, 39 Atl. 595 (holding that evidence of location of a line fence is admissible, although it also tends to show a license not pleaded).

84. See cases cited infra, this note.

Thus plaintiff must prove a title to land by the document or record if he formally sets it out in the complaint (Mayo v. Spartanburg, etc., R. Co., 40 S. C. 517, 19 S. E. 73); or relies on title derived from the former owner (Twyman v. Knowles, 13 C. B. 222, 17 Jur. 238, 22 L. J. C. P. 143, 76 E. C. L. 222).

85. See cases cited infra, this note.

A deed of adjoining land, reserving the locus, is admissible as to the construction of the deed to the locus. Louk v. Woods, 15 Ill. 256.

An ancient deed reciting that the grantor was heir of the patentee of the land is admissible against a mere trespasser, plaintiff claiming title through it and it only. Jackson v. Gunton, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 203 [affirmed in 218 Pa. St. 275, 67 Atl. 467].

Lost deeds.— If a deed is lost proof of its contents is not admissible except on proof of its formal execution and its substantial contents. Edwards v. Noyes, 65 N. Y. 125.

Misdescription.— An error in the name of the county does not render the deed inadmissible if the description was sufficient to warrant a finding that the land trespassed on was that conveyed. Silliman v. Whitmer, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 243 [affirmed in 196 Pa. St. 363, 46 Atl. 489].

Execution.—Where both parties claim under the same instrument it is admissible without proof of its execution. Helton v. Belcher, 114 Ky. 172, 70 S. W. 295, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 927.

That the deed is of the land in question must appear. Clary v. Kimmell, 18 Md. 246.

Where defendant alleged ownership of the trees cut, the court erred in excluding a deed offered by defendant granting to it all the timber on the lands described in the complaint, among others. Wilmer Lumber Co. v. Eisely, 163 Ala. 290, 50 So. 225.

86. Lankford v. Green, 62 Ala. 314; Tolles v. Duncombe, 34 Mich. 101.

Illustrations.—A judgment against defendant's lessors in an action to determine adverse claims is admissible against him where he specifically claims the land under the lease. Blew v. Ritz, 82 Minn. 530, 85 N. W. 548. Title in a third person is admissible where plaintiff relies on title alone without possession. Tolles v. Duncombe, 34 Mich. 101. So defendant may show that plaintiff's deed, although recorded before the trespass, was not delivered till afterward (Maxwell v. Mitchell, 61 Me. 106), that title had passed from him by reason of bankruptcy (Lankford v. Green, 62 Ala. 314), that he never had it, as his grantor had previously conveyed it (Howe v. Farrar, 44 Me. 233, prior mortgage of personalty; Walker v. Swasey, 2 Allen (Mass.) 312), or that a sale of personalty was invalid from lack of authority in the agent who made it (Deitsch v. Wiggins, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 539, 21 L. ed. 228). Deeds not connected with the original source of title are not admissible to show title in defendant, where plaintiff shows a complete chain of title, as they do not invalidate it. Kentucky Land, etc., Co. v. Crabtree, 113 Ky. 922, 70 S. W. 31, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 743. In an action for damages to saloon fixtures removed from a leased building, evidence of the issuance of a liquor license to a third person, and of the failure of plaintiff to secure a mere easement;[87] but parol evidence is not admissible to contradict a deed.[88] Where the title generally is alleged by either party to the action it may be proved by acts of ownership,[89] or by a contract or agreement between the parties in cases of trespass to personalty,[90] or even to realty, where equitable title is sufficient to maintain trespass,[91] or admissions of title,[92] or declarations by one in possession that he holds for the claimant,[93] although declarations by the claimant in possession or those under whom he claims are inadmissible,[94] except to characterize the possession where title by adverse possession is claimed.[95] Of course the general rule that res inter alios acta are not admissible applies to trespass.[96] Evidence of title is admissible, although the plea putting it in issue is bad in form for duplicity.[97] A mere claim to the land without possession is no evidence of title, and so is inadmissible to show title,[98] except where otherwise provided by statute;[99] but in some cases, while this rule is recognized, yet claim of title is admitted "for what it is worth," the reason of the rule not being clear.[1] Where plaintiff is in possession claim of title is admissible,[2] and wherever for any reason claim of title is admitted in evidence, evidence is admissible in rebuttal.[3] license, was inadmissible to show that the third person, and not plaintiff, was the owner of the fixtures. Temple v. Duran, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 121 S. W. 253.

(c) Possession. Possession of plaintiff may be shown by acts of possession,[4]

87. Smith v. Slocomb, 11 Gray (Mass.) 280.

88. Lawrence v. Wilson, 160 Mass. 304, 35 N. E. 858 (holding that subsequent declarations by the maker of a deed are not admissible to invalidate it); Hancock v. McAvoy, 151 Pa. St. 439, 25 Atl. 48 (holding that where plaintiff puts in evidence a deed to a burial lot evidence by the secretary of the cemetery company as to plaintiff's right of burial is not admissible).

89. Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 378, 46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 74 (holding that possession under color and claim of title is admissible); Quillen v. Betts, 1 Pennew. (Del.) 53, 39 Atl. 595 (holding that pointing out boundary lines is admissible as an act of ownership); Gordon v. Cook, 47 Mich. 248, 10 N. W. 357 (holding that a conversation as to splitting rails to fence the land is admissible as an act of ownership); McCusker v. Mitchell, 20 R. I. 13, 36 Atl. 1123 (location of division fence).

90. Henson v. Taylor, 108 Ga. 567, 33 S. E. 911.

91. Arnold v. Pfoutz, 117 Pa. St. 103, 11 Atl. 871, contract for sale to plaintiff.

92. Gilbert v. Felton, 5 Gray (Mass.) 406. Contra, Mason v. Park, 4 Ill. 532, holding that the title deeds are the best evidence. And see Gilchrist v. McLaughlin, 29 N. C. 310, holding that moving a fence to conform with the description of land recovered in ejectment is admissible against defendant to show an admission of boundary.

93. South Hampton v. Fowler, 54 N. H. 197.

94. South Hampton v. Fowler, 54 N. H. 197.

95. Morss v. Salisbury, 48 N. Y. 636.

96. Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383, 29 N. W. 876, 6 Am. St. Rep. 305 (holding that a judgment to which plaintiff was not a party is not admissible against him); Connor v. Johnson, 59 S. C. 115, 37 S. E. 240 (holding that evidence of a boundary established by defendant and a third person under whom plaintiff does not claim is irrelevant); Davis v. Moyles, 76 Vt. 25, 56 Atl. 174 (holding that where plaintiff claimed through a grantee of land from the state who had petitioned the legislature to grant him the land, alleging its confiscation by the state from petitioner's father, the petition is no evidence of title nor of the petitioner's relationship to the original owner as against a third person).

97. Crockett v. Lashbrook, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 530, 17 Am. Dec. 98.

98. Gray Lumber Co. v. Harris, 127 Ga. 693, 56 S. E. 252; South Hampton v. Fowler, 52 N. H. 225.

Tax receipts and assessment books are not admissible. Irwin v. Patchen, 164 Pa. St. 51, 30 Atl. 436.

A certificate from the state commissioners of public lands certifying that a patent was issued to plaintiff's grantor is not admissible. Reed v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Wis. 399, 37 N. W. 225.

99. Yellow River R. Co. v. Harris, 35 Fla. 385, 17 So. 568, holding that in Florida receipts by receivers of a public land-office are prima facie evidence of title.

1. Irwin v. Patchen, 164 Pa. St. 51, 30 Atl. 436 (tax receipts and assessment books); Thompson v. Brannon, 14 S. C. 542 (plats made for plaintiff's grantor).

2. Wylie v. Railes, (Kan. App. 1898) 55 Pac. 523, by title papers of plaintiff's lessor.

A plat is admissible to identify the land and show extent of grantee's claim. Guentherodt v. Ross, 121 Mich. 47, 79 N. W. 920.

3. South Hampton v. Fowler, 54 N. H. 197 (records of plaintiff's grantor, a town showing non-claim); Beaver v. Filson, 8 Pa. St. 327 (repairs by others of property claimed by plaintiff without claim made by him).

4. See cases cited infra, this note.

Survey.— A survey being claim of title may characterize a subsequent act as possessory which would otherwise not be so regarded (Kidder v. Kennedy, 43 Vt. 717); but is not in itself an act of possession or title (Kidder v. Kennedy, supra).

or by admissions of defendant,[5] and may be shown by any person who knows the lines and corners or who can prove plaintiff's possession.[6] But acts which show rather a claim of right than actual possession are inadmissible to show possession.[7] And proof of plaintiff's possession may be rebutted by proof of possession in other persons,[8] or by explanation of acts which apparently show possession,[9] or by admission by plaintiff of possession in defendant,[10] but not by acts which do not oust plaintiff's possession.[11] Title is evidence of possession,[12] but not a void deed of the land.[13] However, it has been held that where possession is actually shown to be in defendant, the mere fact that title is shown to be in plaintiff is not evidence of possession in him.[14] Where possession of land is shown matters which characterize it and show its extent are admissible both as to possession by plaintiff[15]

Entry by plaintiff's agent claiming title for plaintiff and making a survey is evidence of plaintiff's possession. Little v. Downing, 37 N. H. 355.

Entry and staking out land.—Where it appeared that plaintiff entered and staked out vacant land and erected buildings thereon he may show to prove defendant's knowledge that this was the customary way of taking possession in that town. Cook v. Rider, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 186.

5. Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 232, 9 N. W. 712.

6. Ledbetter v. Fitzgerald, 1 Ark. 448.

7. Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412, holding that a survey by a mortgagee is not evidence of possession, unless an intent to take possession is shown, although it would be if the grant were of the fee.

Payment of taxes on land is not evidence of possession. Langdon v. Templeton, 66 Vt. 173, 28 Atl. 866; Tillotson v. Prichard, 60 Vt. 94, 14 Atl. 302, 6 Am. St. Rep. 95; Reed v. Field, 15 Vt. 672. Contra, Merwin v. Backer, 80 Conn. 338, 68 Atl. 373; Merwin v. Morris, 71 Conn. 555, 42 Atl. 855.

8. Heilbron v. Heinlen, 72 Cal. 371, 14 Pac. 22, holding that under a denial of plaintiff's possession defendant may show possession in himself for fifteen years, and it is immaterial that the statute of limitations was not pleaded.

9. Houghtaling v. Houghtaling, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 194, holding that where plaintiff put up a fence every time defendant took it down to drive across the land, defendant may show that it was done at defendant's request.

10. Barton v. Cordy, 1 C. & P. 664, McClell. & Y. 278, 12 E. C. L. 376, holding that notice to defendant to quit possession as plaintiff's tenant is an admission of his possession.

Inquiry as to whether the reason defendant cut a tree was that he claimed adverse possession is not an admission of possession. Clark v. Boardman, 42 Vt. 667.

11. Niles v. Patch, 13 Gray (Mass.) 254 (holding that the secret intent with which acts of third persons is done is immaterial); Gordon v. Cook, 47 Mich. 248, 10 N. W. 357 (holding that possession of a third person subsequent to the trespass is immaterial to disprove plaintiff's possession shown at the time).

12. Van Buskirk v. Dunlap, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 233, 2 West. L. Month. 125, equitable title. Although it is of course controlled by proof of actual possession in another. Davis v. Alexander, 99 Me. 40, 58 Atl. 55.

13. Jackson v. Todd, 25 N. J. L. 121.

14. O'Neale v. Brown, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,514, 1 Cranch C. C. 79.

15. See cases cited infra, this note.

In aid of proof of peaceful possession title is admissible. Bossier v. Jackson, 114 La. 707, 38 So. 525; Nicol v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 44 La. Ann. 816, 11 So. 34.

To define the limits of possession a deed is admissible (Wahlé v. Laubersheimer, 174 Ill. 338, 51 N. E. 860; Chenault v. Quisenberry, 43 S. W. 717, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1632; New Windsor v. Stocksdale, 95 Md. 196, 52 Atl. 596; Winter v. Peterson, 24 N. J. L. 524, 61 Am. Dec. 678, deed of adjoining farm including locus which was a highway), although defective (McDonald v. Bear River, etc., Water, etc., Co., 13 Cal. 220, deed lacking seal; Dubuque v. Coman, 64 Conn. 475, 30 Atl. 777, deed improperly executed under a power in a will; Chicago v. McGraw, 75 Ill. 566; Kentucky Land, etc., Co. v. Crabtree, 113 Ky. 922, 70 S. W. 31, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 743, holding that if defendant shows perfect title the admission of plaintiff's deed must be restricted to this purpose; Robison v. Swett, 3 Me. 316; New Windsor v. Stocksdale, 95 Md. 196, 52 Atl. 596; Hadden v. White, 4 N. Brunsw. 634, unregistered deed without livery of seizin); or a private survey (Aughenbough v. Johnston, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 317, and defendant can show his possession of an adjoining lot to define the extent of plaintiff's possession of the locus (Dewey v. Bordwell, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 65); but plaintiff's bankruptcy does not characterize or define possession subsequent to it (Lankford v. Green, 62 Ala. 314); nor does a former possession by persons other than plaintiff (Smith v. Bingham, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 97).

To show color of title a deed is admissible, although defective (Taylor v. Corley, 113 Ala. 580, 21 So. 404, tax deed; Southern R. Co. v. Ethridge, 108 Ga. 121, 33 S. E. 850, holding, however, that a bond for title is not admissible as color of title prior to payment of purchase-price); or a town charter (Town of Newcastle v. Haywood, 68 N. H. 179, 44 Atl. 132).

To characterize the holding defective partition proceedings are admissible (Grimes v. Butts, 65 Ill. 347); or defective dower proceedings (Nickerson v. Thacher, 146 Mass.

and by defendant.[16] As the question of possession of realty is one of fact, an answer to the question as to what person has been in possession of real estate since a specified date is admissible.[17]

(D) Connection of Defendant With the Act. Where an act of trespass is proved to show that it was done by defendant his admission that he did it is admissible.[18] So also is evidence that he threatened to do it,[19] or that he did similar acts in accordance with a preconceived plan,[20] or received compensation for the doing of the act,[21] or authorized it,[22] or ratified it,[23] or that it resulted from his act.[24] A mere accusation against defendant is not admissible to prove that he did the act,[25] nor is previous malicious conduct alone,[26] nor mere evidence that a third person did the act without showing that defendant was responsible for it.[27] Threats of a third person to do the act are admissible to show defendant did not do it,[28] but not the fact that plaintiff sued a third person some time before for a similar trespass.[29]

609, 16 N. E. 581); or a contract of purchase (Rose v. Ruyle, 46 Ill. App. 17, parol to show possession is rightful; Moore v. Moore, 21 Me. 350); or of settlement between defendant and the lessor of plaintiff (Wylie v. Railes, (Kan. App. 1898) 55 Pac. 523).

To show knowledge in defendant of the extent of plaintiff's claim allegations in writs in former actions by plaintiff against him are admissible. Robison v. Swett, 3 Me. 316.

16. Le Blanc v. Nolan, 2 La. Ann. 223, holding that title is admissible to show the beginning of adverse possession, although the action is limited strictly to questions of possession.

17. Diamond v. Lawyer, 117 N. Y. Suppl. 94.

18. Mecartney v. Smith, (Kan. App. 1900) 62 Pac. 540; McGill v. Ash, 7 Pa. St. 397.

Minutes of a town officers' meeting are admissible to show the town committed the trespass. New Windsor v. Stocksdale, 95 Md. 196, 52 Atl. 596.

19. Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 232, 9 N. W. 712 (threat to evict); Morrow v. Moses, 28 N. H. 95 (threat to burn house); Chapman v. Kincaid, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 150.

20. Cox v. Crumley, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 529, holding that in an action of trespass for entering upon plaintiff's land and beating him evidence that defendant on the same night similarly beat two other persons is admissible.

21. Carter v. Fulgham, 134 Ala. 238, 32 So. 684.

22. Alabama.— Fulgham v. Carter, 142 Ala. 227, 37 So. 932, holding that a statement of the trespasser at the time of the act, showing by what authority he professed to act, is admissible, although not conclusive, where there is other evidence of the agency.

Connecticut.— McAllin v. McAllin, 77 Conn. 398, 59 Atl. 413.

Massachusetts.— Bigelow v. Dawson, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 97, holding that a contract between a railroad and its contractor is admissible on the question of whether it authorized the act done by the contractor.

Minnesota.— Leber v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 29 Minn. 256, 13 N. W. 31, holding that an answer stating that the acts were done by defendant's contractor and were necessary to the performance of the contract is an admission that they were done by defendant's direction.

Texas.— Jess French Piano, etc., Co. v. Phelps, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 385, 105 S. W. 225, holding that a notice from a general manager of defendant piano company to its local agent that a music dealer advised them to look after their piano is admissible to show that it authorized the taking.

Wisconsin.— Gerhardt v. Swaty, 57 Wis. 24, 14 N. W. 851, holding that where defendant's minor son hauled off logs cut on plaintiff's land, using his father's team, it will be presumed that he acted in his father's behalf under his directions.

23. Sinclair v. Stanley, 69 Tex. 718, 7 S. W. 511, holding that a power of attorney expressly ratifying a trespass in ejecting a tenant is sufficient.

24. Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 317 (holding that to show that dust cast on plaintiff's land was cast by plaintiff's mill, evidence that it cast dust on land similarly situated is admissible as it showed it was capable of it); Jesse French Piano, etc., Co. v. Phelps, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 385, 105 S. W. 225 (holding that where defendant left plaintiff's house unfastened after an unlawful entry plaintiff may show the condition of the house on his return home some time after, and that various articles were missing).

25. Allison v. Little, 85 Ala. 512, 5 So. 221, holding that records of a church imputing the cutting of trees to defendant and appointing a committee to compromise are irrelevant.

In Michigan it was held that defendant could be asked whether plaintiff had not had him arrested for the trespass. Gordon v. Cook, 47 Mich. 248, 10 N. W. 357.

26. Harrison v. Jurgielewiez, 28 La. Ann. 238.

27. Wolf v. Wolf, 158 Pa. St. 621, 28 Atl. 164.

28. Susong v. Ellis, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 80.

29. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ring, 102 Md. 677, 62 Atl. 801, holding that in trespass for cutting trees where plaintiff had sued a third person before for a similar injury the amount claimed in that suit is no evidence that the present injury was done by some one else.

(E) Circumstances of the Act. All the circumstances entering into the act can be shown. Thus all the facts surrounding the act are admissible as parts of the res gestæ,[30] and the circumstances under which the trespass was committed may be shown to characterize it.[31]

(F) Intent and Motive. Acts done long after the trespass are not admissible to prove malice,[32] nor does the act itself ordinarily show malice;[33] but acts of trespass other than the one sued for are admissible to show malice,[34] or acts accompanying the trespass;[35] and the relations of the parties may be shown,[36] and defendant's treatment of other persons similarly situated.[37] Prior threats of defendant are admissible for the same purpose.[38] To rebut an inference of malice defendant may show that the act was done under claim of title,[39] or he may show a decree in his favor upholding his title, although appealed from,[40] or the directions given by him to his servant who actually did the act,[41] but not declarations by defendant made after the fact.[42] To prove that the act was intentional, knowledge of plaintiff's claim may be shown.[43] Where defendant had a right to do the acts complained of it is not error to admit evidence of the motive which induced him to exercise his right.[44] Where declarations of intent and of the reasons therefor are admitted the other party may go fully into such reasons and evidence of facts throwing light on them is admissible.[45] To show a conspiracy to evict plaintiff the consideration in a grant of the premises by plaintiff's husband to defendant is admissible.[46]

(G) Place of Trespass. It is not necessary to prove location and boundary by any particular method.[47] Proof of place of trespass as on plaintiff's or defend-

30. Carter v. Fulgham, 134 Ala. 238, 32 So 684 (statements made by defendant's agent at the time of taking chattels); Tomlinson v. Booth, 2 Root (Conn.) 32 (in an action for shooting plaintiff's horse evidence that plaintiff was disorderly and crowding defendant); Perry v. Jefferies, 61 S. C. 292, 39 S. E. 515 (evidence of what plaintiff said to defendant's agent at the time of their trespass); Golding v. Williams, Dudley (S. C.) 92 (insulting words used to plaintiff's wife at the time of a trespass to his land).

Application of rule.— To characterize the act notices forbidding trespass which defendant saw are admissible. Gosdin v. Williams, 151 Ala. 592, 44 So. 611. And plaintiff may show that an assault took place in the house occupied by him. Brown v. Wheeler, 18 Conn. 199. Evidence of facts showing good faith is proper, although not sufficient to amount to a justification. Columbia Land, etc., Co. v. Tinsley, 60 S. W. 10, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1082. In an action for enlarging a millrace it is proper to show the uses to which defendant put the water and their manner of clearing it. Haines v. Haines, 104 Md. 208, 64 Atl. 1044.

32. Newton v. Holford, 1 C. & K. 537, 47 E. C. L. 537, nine months.

33. Miller v. Clark, 78 Mo. App. 447, mere taking of personalty.

34. Perry v. Jefferies, 61 S. C. 292, 39 S. E. 515.

35. Perkins v. Towle, 43 N. H. 220, 80 Am. Dec. 149.

36. Winter v. Peterson, 24 N. J. L. 524, 61 Am. Dec. 678, holding that the fact that the parties had quarreled is admissible, although not the history of the quarrel.

37. Winter v. Peterson, 24 N. J. L. 524, 61 Am. Dec. 678, holding that to show that cutting of trees by the road overseer in a road over plaintiff's land was malicious plaintiff can show that he did not cut trees of other persons which were an equal obstruction.

38. Chapman v. Kincaid, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 150.

39. Perry v. Jefferies, 61 S. C. 292, 39 S. E. 515.

42. Clark v. Boardman, 42 Vt. 667.

43. Gray Lumber Co. v. Harris, 127 Ga. 693, 56 S. E. 252, a statement by president of defendant corporation that he knew plaintiff claimed the timber and that they were going to get it.

44. Rhodes v. Bunch, 3 McCord. (S. C.) 66, holding that where plaintiff was evicted by the owner of land because he was a common vagabond and dealer in illicit trade with negroes his character may be shown.

45. Marcy v. Stone, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 4, 54 Am. Dec. 736.

46. McAllin v. McAllin, 77 Conn. 398, 59 Atl. 413.

47. See cases cited infra, this note.

Applications of rule.— It is not necessary to prove boundary by a certified copy of a county surveyor's survey (Jeffries v. Hargis, 50 Ark. 65, 6 S. W. 328); nor by deed of adjoining land where said land is a boundary (Tomlinson v. Rizer, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 444); but an ancient surveyor's bill is admissible (Moore v. Cooley, 88 Hun (N. Y.) 66, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 624); or evidence by a surveyor of a survey in defendant's presence, pending suit (Gunn v. Harris, 88 Ga. 439, 14 S. E. 593); or a map to show the location ant's land is not objectionable as proving title by parol.[48] Evidence of the condition of the land at the time of the trespass must clearly relate to that time.[49] The original location of land can be shown by a person present at the locating.[50]

(H) Justification in General. Where a justification is in issue anything is, as a general rule, admissible which tends to prove it[51] or to invalidate it.[52]

(I) License. Acts from which a license or the reverse might be inferred are admissible;[53] and where the act in question was necessary to the exercise of an express license that may be proved.[54] A void agreement may be shown to prove a license,[55] and so may a void deed.[56] Subsequent declarations by plaintiff are admissible to show a license.[57]

(J) Damages — (1) IN GENERAL. Similar acts done since the trespass are not admissible.[58] Evidence as to the various items going to make up the measure of a turnpike, although not filed as the statute requires (Estes v. Kelsey, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 555). It may be shown that a surveyor made a map and survey for use at the trial. McCusker v. Mitchell, 20 R. I. 13, 36 Atl. 1123.

Where plaintiff bounds his close on a highway user is admissible to define its boundaries. Pickering v. Shearer, 11 Gray (Mass.) 153.

A plot is admissible to show the situation of the premises. Adams v. Lorraine Mfg. Co., 29 R. I. 333, 71 Atl. 180; Eastland v. Fogo, 66 Wis. 133, 27 N. W. 159, 28 N. W. 143.

The location of land by a private survey can be shown to be incorrect. Arnold v. Pfoutz, 117 Pa. St. 103, 11 Atl. 871.

48. Grevenberg v. Borel, 25 La. Ann. 530.

49. Florida Southern R. Co. v. Parsons, 33 Fla. 631, 15 So. 338, as a map, where the question at issue was whether the land had been cut into building lots.

50. Hogmire v. McCoy, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 351.

51. Ward v. Green, 11 Conn. 455 (holding that where defendant justifies an assault as in attempting to make an arrest he may show by the court records that the arrest was made two days later and plaintiff convicted and punished); Columbia Land, etc., Co. v. Tinsley, 60 S. W. 10, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1082 (holding that where defendant claims to have paid plaintiff's agent for a trespass and that plaintiff got the money, the agent's bank account is admissible to show what became of the money); Hendrickson v. Dwyer, 70 N. J. L. 223, 57 Atl. 420 (holding that a receipt by plaintiff of rent paid by defendant to a third person is admissible against plaintiff to show either authority of the third person to lease or acquiescence in the lease).

An offer of judgment not accepted by statute in Massachusetts is not admissible. Greve v. Wood-Harmon Co., 173 Mass. 45, 52 N. E. 1070.

52. Alabama.— Terry v. Williams, 148 Ala. 468, 41 So. 804, holding that where defendant claimed title, under a conditional sale agreement, to goods taken, while plaintiff claims that the agreement was to receive a loan, plaintiff may show that defendant was a pawnbroker.

Connecticut.— Harris v. Ansonia, 73 Conn. 359, 47 Atl. 672, evidence of lack of means admissible to explain delay in bringing suit.

Georgia.— Henson v. Taylor, 108 Ga. 567, 33 S. E. 911, holding that where in an action for taking goods defendant relies on a tender of the goods to him by plaintiff before the seizure and negotiations leading to it, plaintiff may show the goods were bought of defendant and were defective.

New Jersey.— Oliver v. Phelps, 20 N. J. L. 180, holding that where distress is pleaded plaintiff can give in evidence anything which tends to show there was no right to distrain.

Pennsylvania.— Fisher v. Paff, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 401, holding that where a right by deed to flood lands by means of a dam is claimed and the dam is destroyed, in the absence of direct evidence of its height plaintiff can show the present dam floods more land.

53. Daffin v. C. W. Zimmerman Mfg. Co., 158 Ala. 637, 48 So. 109 (holding that in trespass for damages to land by cutting timber, evidence was admissible that the logs were delivered to defendant, as tending to show that the trespass was committed by defendant, and with its knowledge and consent); Terry v. Williams, 148 Ala. 468, 41 So. 804 (holding that in trespass for taking personalty evidence that plaintiff was "sitting in a corner of the house crying" is admissible); Pennsylvania Co. v. Ellett, 35 Ill. App. 278 [affirmed in 132 Ill. 654, 24 N. E. 559] (holding that daily use of land is evidence that it was by agreement, not tortious); Halfpenny v. Pennock, 33 U. C. Q. B. 229 (holding that a wife's standing by and permitting the taking of her husband's goods, used by her during his prolonged absence, is some evidence of leave and license); Dawson v. Murray, 29 U. C. Q. B. 464 (holding that evidence of an entry under an award of fence viewers made with consent of defendant is evidence of leave and license).

54. Newberry v. Bunda, 137 Mich. 69, 100 N. W. 277, holding that under a license to build a fence defendant may ask witness whether the cutting out of branches of trees complained of was necessary.

55. Woods v. Toombs, 36 Tex. 85, void because consideration was confederate money.

56. Caldwell v. Morganton Mfg. Co., 121 N. C. 339, 28 S. E. 475, holding that a deed of an easement made after the trespass to correct a former defective deed is not admissible under plea of easement, although it would be under plea of license.

57. Keane v. Old Colony R. Co., 161 Mass. 203, 36 N. E. 788.

58. Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 317, action of damages may be shown,[59] but not evidence of damage as a whole where plaintiff is not entitled to recover for all the items.[60] Where direct evidence of injury has been given corroborative circumstances may be shown.[61] Where injury to property is shown defendant may show that it resulted from other causes.[62]

(2) Injury to Business. To show injury to an established business, the amount of the business before and after the trespass is admissible,[63] and its general condition before the injury.[64] Thus loss of profits of an established business may be shown,[65] and probable profits in the future, judged by the past profits.[66] To show the quantum of damage, a removal to an inferior store as a result of a trespass is admissible.[67]

(3) Injury to Land. The difference in market value of land before and after a trespass may be shown by evidence of the amount of permanent injury where it is not objected to.[68] On the question of damages to realty, the jury may take into consideration knowledge acquired by a view made under direction of the court.[69] To show that fear of injury from acts was reasonable, injury to other property similarly situated may be shown,[70] and evidence of the effect on the premises.[71] Evidence of value of property taken is admissible, although an action of replevin brought by plaintiff is pending.[72] To show how much of a lot of ore defendant mingled with his own came from plaintiff's land, defendant can show the work done and the amount taken from plaintiff's mine.[73] Where the damages are the cost of restoring premises, or the value before and after, whichever is least, evidence under both theories is admissible, that admitted under the theory not adopted to be disregarded.[74] An injunction obtained by plaintiff to restrain the continuance of the trespass is not admissible for defendant on the question of damages.[75] Where plaintiff does not give evidence of damage which he might under the pleadings, defendant cannot do so.[76] A witness may state facts on which damage is predicated, but cannot give his opinion as to the amount of the damage.[77]

(4) Evidence of Value. Value may be shown by evidence of agreement for throwing dust on plaintiff's land by operation of a mill.

59. Hueston v. Mississippi, etc., Boom Co., 76 Minn. 251, 79 N. W. 92. As how the removal of a brick wall built to keep water from plaintiff's foundations injured them. New Windsor v. Stockdale, 95 Md. 196, 52 Atl. 596.

60. Slingerland v. International Contracting Co., 43 N. Y. App. Div. 215, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 12 [affirmed in 169 N. Y. 60, 61 N. E. 995, 56 L. R. A. 494].

61. Razzo v. Varni, 81 Cal. 289, 22 Pac. 848, holding that after evidence by plaintiff of sickness resulting from fright, she may show that she was then nursing a child six months old, to show that her condition was such that fright would so affect her.

62. Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 317.

For instance, on claim that sickness resulted from fright caused by defendant's trespass to her realty, defendant may show that a discussion of the possible arrest of her son might have caused the fright. Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 680, 39 Pac. 56.

63. Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159, 25 Pac. 1114, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291; Keables v. Christie, 47 Mich. 594, 11 N. W. 400.

To show extent of damage in trespass to realty evidence of damage to plaintiff's goods and return of them by customers is admissible. Ketcham v. Newman, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 57, 3 N. Y. St. 566 [reversed on other grounds in 116 N. Y. 422, 22 N. E. 1052].

71. Cozzens v. Higgins, 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 451, 3 Keyes 206, 33 How. Pr. 436, holding that a photograph of the premises at the time is admissible.

72. Krider v. Lafferty, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 303.

73. St. Clair v. Cash Gold Min., etc., Co., 9 Colo. App. 235, 47 Pac. 466.

between the parties which fixed a value,[78] or by showing value in similar cases,[79] or by the cost of the property [80] and the amount of use it has been subjected to,[81] or by value at a period long prior if there is evidence that it is unchanged;[82] and the value to the owner may be given as one test where it has a special value to him,[83] and may be proved by the opinion of witnesses;[84] but the basis of the opinion may be brought out on cross-examination.[85] A refusal of a vendee to complete his purchase because of the trespass is not evidence of value.[88] Where evidence of value has been given, evidence to the contrary can be given in rebuttal.[87] To show injury to land, evidence of its value and its condition before and after is admissible,[88] and an estimate by persons familiar with the land of the amount of damage is not bad as opinion evidence.[89] Evidence of the value of land is admissible in order to restrict damages to an amount not in excess thereof.[90]

(5) Evidence in Mitigation or Aggravation. On the question of exemplary or punitive damages, accompanying circumstances giving character to the act may be shown by plaintiff,[91] and defendant is entitled to offer evidence in rebuttal thereof.[92] So also it is permissible for defendant to offer evidence of

78. Weaver v. Mississippi, etc., Boom Co., 28 Minn. 534, 11 N. W. 114, holding that to show the value of the use of land the amount defendant had agreed to pay is admissible as an admission, but defendant can show the circumstances under which the agreement was made to rebut the inference, as that it was made pending an injunction and defendant had to accept or suffer irretrievable loss. Weaver v. Mississippi, etc., Boom Co., 28 Minn. 542, 11 N. W. 113.

The purchase-price of land is admissible to show its value. Gates v. Comstock, 113 Mich. 127, 71 N. W. 515.

79. Sweeney v. Montana Cent. R. Co., 25 Mont. 543, 65 Pac. 912, holding that the value of land may be shown by showing the value of adjoining land and its relation to the land in suit by maps. But evidence of the amount paid for the attachment of telephone wires on another house with no evidence as to their location, character, etc., is no evidence of the value of such use of plaintiff's house. Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. Suppl. 66 [affirmed in 188 N. Y. 600, 81 N. E. 1161].

82. Griffin v. Martel, 77 Vt. 19, 58 Atl. 788.

83. Hughes v. Stevens, 36 Pa. St. 320, timber cut on furnace lands.

84. Argotsinger v. Vines, 82 N. Y. 308 (the value of wood cut on plaintiff's land); Hughes v. Stevens, 36 Pa. St. 320.

85. Dunbar Furnace Co. v. Fairchild, 121 Pa. St. 563, 15 Atl. 656, holding that where an opinion has been given as to the value of timber to the owner of land for timbering his mine, witness may be asked as to the cost of cutting, hauling, and placing the timber.

86. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ring, 102 Md. 677, 62 Atl. 801.

87. Martin v. Erwin, 74 N. J. L. 337, 65 Atl. 888, cutting of ornamental vines.

In an action for attaching telephone wires to plaintiff's house where defendant testifies, the privilege was of no value and was never paid for, plaintiff may show defendant had paid for it. Bunke v. New York Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 97 N. Y. Suppl. 66.

88. Gosdin v. Williams, 151 Ala. 592, 44 So. 611.

Language and conduct of defendants may be given in evidence as to wantonness, malignity, etc. Shaftall v. Zipperer, 133 Ga. 488, 66 S. E. 253, 27 L. R. A. N. S. 442; Johnson v. Hannahan, 1 Strobh. (S. C.) 313.

Misleading actions.—Misleading plaintiff into believing defendant owned an adjoining lot and consented to the erection of windows overlooking it is admissible in an action for nailing them up. Omensetter v. Kemper, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 309, 41 Wkly. Notes Cas. 501.

Evidence of motive is admissible as bearing on the measure of damages where a wilful trespass is alleged. Sunnyside Coal, etc., Co. v. Reitz, 14 Ind. App. 478, 39 N. E. 541, 43 N. E. 46. And see Kentucky Stave Co. v. Page, (Ky. 1910) 125 S. W. 170.

92. Roth v. Smith, 41 Ill. 314.

Applications of rule.— That an entry was to make a survey may be shown to rebut malice (Machin v. Geortner, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 239); or that it was to search for furniture (Bohun v. Taylor, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 313). Good-will toward plaintiff is admissible to rebut malice. Cannon v. Overstreet, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 464. In an action for whipping plaintiff's slave it may be shown that plaintiff had authorized defendant to do so three circumstances in extenuation of it.[93] Matter not admissible as a justification may be admissible in mitigation of damages.[94] Defendant may show in mitigation that he was acting in good faith,[95] as under advice of counsel,[96] under an invalid but apparently good title,[97] under legal process which appeared to be valid,[98] or other circumstances connected with the trespass which show a good motive.[99] Matter offered in mitigation, however, must not be too remote in time,[1] and must have some tendency to mitigate the damages.[2]

(K) Pecuniary Condition of Defendant. Where a right to punitive damages has been shown plaintiff may show the pecuniary ability of defendant.[3]

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY — (A) In General. Plaintiff must establish his case by a clear preponderance of evidence.[4] A preponderance of the evidence is sufficient proof of a justification,[5] although where the trespass is also a crime years before and he had done so then. Boling v. Wright, 16 Ala. 664. In trespass to realty it may be shown that plaintiff had agreed to give up possession. Farwell v. Warren, 51 Ill. 467.

93. See cases cited infra, this note.

Applications of rule.—An apparently good paper title is admissible in explanation (Caston v. Perry, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 104); so it may be shown that tearing down of plaintiff's building was done peaceably to prevent violence by a mob (Reed v. Bias, 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 189). Non-payment of rent, notice to quit, etc., may be shown in trespass for assault and battery, trespass to realty and injury to personalty. Allen v. Champion, Wright (Ohio) 672. Where force is shown defendant may show provocation by plaintiff. Huftalin v. Misner, 70 Ill. 55 (holding, however, that provocation must have been so recent as to create a presumption that the act was a result of it); Dempsey v. Dobson, 174 Pa. St. 122, 34 Atl. 459, 52 Am. St. Rep. 816, 32 L. R. A. 761.

94. McAllin v. McAllin, 77 Conn. 398, 59 Atl. 413 (holding that an injunction against plaintiff's remaining on the premises is admissible in an action for forcibly disseizing him in mitigation of damages, if at all); Turner v. Poston, 63 S. C. 244, 41 S. E. 296 (holding that an invalid deed to defendant is admissible in an action for entering and plowing the land); Cannon v. Overstreet, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 464.

Proof of license.—A license is proved by an agreement to give possession of realty at a future date, and entry and taking possession on that date (Feltham v. Cartwright, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 569, 9 L. J. C. P. 67, 7 Scott

it is sometimes held that it must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[6] Where the evidence is conflicting, the verdict will not be set aside as against the weight of evidence,[7] nor will it be set aside if the evidence is slightly contradictory.[8] Want of good faith is not conclusively proved by evidence that a deed in plaintiff's chain of title was forged.[9] The act itself may because of its nature be prima facie evidence that it was wilful and malicious,[10] but may be rebutted by evidence of good faith.[11]

(B) Plaintiff's Right Other Than Possession. Proof of title against a mere trespasser need not be as complete as in an action to recover the land.[12] Possession is prima facie evidence of title to maintain trespass,[13] or possession under claim facie evidence of title to things on it and appurtenant to it.[22] A recovery in ejectment is conclusive evidence of plaintiff's title against defendant in ejectment proceedings or one claiming under him.[23] A judgment for plaintiff in forcible entry is sufficient to enable him to recover in trespass for mesne profits.[24] A recital in an ancient deed is sufficient evidence of facts necessary to make it a valid grant.[25] Lineal descent alone does not show title to land of the ancestor.[26] A conveyance of land to defendant's grantor, reserving the timber as a result of a compromise of their conflicting claims to the land, is not sufficient evidence of title to the timber.[27]

(c) Defendant's Right Other Than Possession. Defendant must prove his title by a preponderance of the evidence.[28] Title deeds are not the sole means of proving title in defendant.[29] A record title in defendant together with possession of part of the premises is sufficient evidence of title,[30] but not if neither defendant nor his grantors is shown to have had possession.[31] Where plaintiff proves a patent and mesne conveyances to himself, a series of deeds to defendant, not running back to a valid title, will not warrant a verdict for him.[32] Against plaintiff in possession an ex parte survey is not evidence of title,[33] nor a written acknowledgment of surrender of the premises by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, with no entry by the latter;[34] and an assignment of a mortgage without assignment of the debt and without entry is no evidence of title in defendant.[35] A conveyance to defendant without proof of possession in the grantee or title, or possession in his grantor, is no evidence of title in him.[36] Possession in defendant's grantors without proof of a claim of title is not evidence of title by adverse possession.[37] A deed from a foreign corporation is no evidence of title without proof of the creation of the corporation.[38] Recitals in deeds in defendant's chain of title and possession long continued are sufficient evidence of a lost deed if consistent with no other theory.[39]

(d) Possession in Plaintiff. Plaintiff's possession of land is prima facie proved by title.[40] Where actual possession is relied on it is not shown by isolated acts of trespass, although under claim of title,[41] nor by a series of acts not done under claim of right;[42] and evidence showing possession subsequent or probably subsequent to the trespass is insufficient to show trespass at the time;[43] but possessory acts repeated during a considerable period of time under claim of right,[44] or an exclusive control,[45] are sufficient, and, in general, the acts need only be such as

As for instance a survey made to locate a lake, advertisement of the land for sale, and notification to a stockman to keep his stock off (Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Turman, (Cal. 1892) 30 Pac. 966); cutting trees on wild land (Young v. Shulenberg, 165 N. Y. 385, 59 N. E. 135, 80 Am. St. Rep. 730, 31 N. Y. Civ. Applications of rule.— Payment of taxes and riding along the highway running over the land is not sufficient evidence of actual possession. Powers v. Hatter, 152 Ala. 636, 44 So. 859. One who contracts with the owner of timber to cut and deliver it to the owner's mill gets no possession in course of doing it. Fitzgerald v. Elliott, 162 Pa. St. 118, 29 Atl. 346, 42 Am. St. Rep. 812. Cutting trees on wild land for fifteen years gives no possession, although it would if the land were neglected and title claimed. Doolittle v. Linsley, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 155. Use of vacant land for pasture in common with others is no evidence of possession. Temiscouata R. Co. v. Clair, 38 Can. Super. Ct. 230. Casual acts of a transient or temporary nature, not showing apparent object of taking possession as owner, do not give possession. Gidney v. Bates, 10 N. Brunsw. 395. Occasional use by a mechanic of land near his shop to deposit wood on, etc., does not give possession. Moore v. Hodgdon, 18 N. H. 144. Possession of a pier in a navigable stream does not give possession of the bed of the stream. Dixson v. Snetsinger, 23 U. C. C. P. 235. And use of water in a mill pond is no evidence of title or possession of the land covered by it. Bartholomew v. Edwards, 1 Houst. (Del.) 17.

43. Henry v. Davis, 149 Ala. 359, 43 So. 122 (holding that judgment in ejectment relating only to possession at the time the action was brought is not sufficient evidence of possession prior thereto); Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co., 144 N. 44. Bileu v. Paisley, 18 Oreg. 47, 21 Pac. 934, 4 L. R. A. 840; Burnham v. Davison, 17 Nova Scotia 388.

Applications of rule.— As for instance, entry, partial fencing, slight cultivation, cutting timber, and continuous public acts of ownership (McLean v. Farden, 61 Ill. 106); use of mining ditches in course of mining operations for two seasons (Bileu v. Paisley, 18 Oreg. 47, 21 Pac. 934, 4 L. R. A. 840); raising corn two years on a small isolated tract on which no one resided (Douling v. Hickman, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 170); occasional trespass under continual claim of title (Hibbard v. Foster, 24 Vt. 542); entry and selling timber from time to time and exercising acts of ownership (Sawyer v. Newland, 9 Vt. 383); staking off marsh and cutting the grass each year, the land being incapable of other possession (Davison v. Burnham, Cassels Dig. (Can.) 846; Burnham v. Davison, 17 Nova Scotia 388); frequent cutting trees on woodland during a long period of years (Kilborn v. Rewee, 8 Gray (Mass.) 415; Fitch v. Gosser, 54 Mo. 267. Contra, Barnhill v. Peppard, 3 Nova Scotia Dec. 491); or on a woodlot (Chandler v. Walker, 21 N. H. 282, 53 Am. Dec. 202; Machin v. Geortner, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 239); and such cutting for the statutory period gives title so that the action lies against the grantee of the record owner (Argotsinger v. Vines, 82 N. Y. 308). So working of a mine by plaintiff and an admission by defendant that the taking by him of ore was wrongful is evidence of possession in plaintiff. Wild v. Holt, 1 Dowl. P. C. N. S. 876, 11 L. J. Exch. 285, 9 M. & W. 672. Constructing a series of canals by which marsh lands were flooded twice a day and finally converted into firm soil gives possession. McCulley v. Blair, 15 Nova Scotia 435.

The acts may be done by a third person acting for plaintiff. Proprietors Monumol Great Beach v. Rogers, 1 Mass. 159, possessory acts of a proprietor of common lands inure per se to the benefit of the corporation.

In New Brunswick it was held that fastening a net annually for twenty years to a tree on a small, uncultivated island, collecting driftwood on it, and once pasturing a calf there gave no possession. Gidney v. Bates, 10 N. Brunsw. 395.

45. Carrine v. Westerfield, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 331.

Thus use of a church for worship and keeping it locked at other times gives possession. Carrine v. Westerfield, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 331. Fencing or cultivating land by plaintiff's agent for him gives possession. Van Buskirk v. Dunlap, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 233, 2 West. L. Month. 125. It has been held, however, that where a fence had been completed on three sides only, plaintiff had not obtained exclusive possession (Allen v. Su-are usual and customary in taking possession of land of the character of the land in question.[46] Actual residence is not an essential feature of possession,[47] nor actual inclosing of the land.[48] Where the law requires that the land be inclosed, inclosure by natural objects is sufficient.[49] Where plaintiff actually enters upon land and takes possession, it extends to boundaries clearly marked out by him,[50] even though plaintiff has no color of title.[51] Things appurtenant to the soil can be taken possession of by clear acts of appropriation, although not removed.[52] The evidence of retaking of possession by a disseizee must show actual possession.[53] Mere designation of property in another's possession as belonging to plaintiff does not give possession.[54] That defendant erected his fence inside his boundary line is no evidence of possession in plaintiff up to the fence.[55] Whether plaintiff has made out sufficient possession to go to the jury is a question for the judge.[56]

(E) Possession in Defendant. The evidence of possession need only be of acts such as are usual in taking possession of land of the character of that in dispute.[57] A single act of trespass does not give possession to defendant to defeat an action of trespass brought against him,[58] nor a number of separate acts of trespass,[59] nor remaining on the land for a time conducting operations there, where no intent to take possession is shown; [60] but entry and acts of dominion and control give ties, and cutting timber shows only an intent to cut the timber and then abandon the land.

Sufficiency of evidence to connect defendant with act considered.—Authority to build a railroad and actual operation of it when built is prima facie evidence that defendant built it (Gilchrist v. Dominion Tel. Co., 20 N. Brunsw. 241); defendant's liability is proved prima facie by evidence that the act was done under the supervision of his agent (American Horse Exch. Co. v. Naughton Co., 97 N. Y. Suppl. 384); or by direction of his agent (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hill, 115 Ala. 334, 22 So. 163); or by the agent acting within the scope of his authority (McKay v. Botsford, 10 N. Brunsw. 550, holding that where defendant's employee sold boards of a third person on defendant's premises and gave defendant the money and defendant said it was the best thing to do, the jury are justified in finding the act was within the scope of his employment); where gravel was taken by persons with wagons of the same color as defendant's it is not sufficient evidence that he took it (Greve v. Wood-Harmon Co., 173 Mass. 45, 52 N. E. 1070); and in an action for cutting and removing timber, proof that some of it was cut by defendant was insufficient to charge it with responsibility for all the timber missing from plaintiff's land during an indefinite period of two or three years. ratified it;[68] and where the action is for consequential damages it must appear that the act causing the injury was wrongful.[69]

(G) Damages.[70] The evidence must not be too remote in time or place,[71] nor insufficient as a basis for an inference,[72] and must show that the damage resulted from the act;[73] but in general no particular form of evidence is requisite.[74] Extent of injury may be shown by a view merely,[75] or from photographs and testimony of what was done with no evidence measuring the damages in money.[76] Possession is prima facie evidence of a right to recover full damages.[77] It is not necessary to show the exact amount of damage done, but damages may be given for what the jury are reasonably satisfied was done.[78] The act may itself be sufficient evidence to justify exemplary damages.[79] The fact that it was done intentionally, in known violation of plaintiff's right, will justify exemplary damages;[80] but evidence of negligence alone is not enough,[81] nor evidence of acts prior to the act and not a part of it;[82] and if good faith is shown the damages for things severed from the realty will be confined to their value in situ.[83] If there is some evidence to support a verdict for compensatory damages to its full amount it will not be set aside as excessive,[84] although the evidence was conflicting.[85]

the appropriate remedy for injuries resulting from mere negligence or which are not the immediate consequence of the act complained of,[86] trespass lies for the recovery of damages which are the natural and necessary consequences of a tort committed with force.[87] And it is not necessary that the particular injury should have been contemplated if some injury was the unavoidable result.[88] It is a principle of universal application that every trespass gives a right to at least nominal damages,[89] even though the act was a benefit to plaintiff.[90] One whose property rights have been invaded by a tortious act can without proof of any amount of damage recover a nominal amount for the purpose of vindicating his right.[91] But plaintiff is confined to nominal damages where no actual injury

Co., 129 Ga. 377, 58 S. E. 862); nor for loss of services of a slave killed or permanently injured in addition to damages for the injury (Johnson v. Perry, 2 Humphr. (Tenn). 569).

98. See also infra, I, A, 7, i, (V).

damages growing out of the act as its direct and natural result can be recovered, although accruing after action brought.[99] But there can be no recovery for special damages accruing after the date of the writ,[1] or for damages which were not the necessary and natural result of the acts complained of.[2] And if the damages would furnish grounds for a distinct suit they cannot be recovered.[3]

(III) TRESPASS TO PERSONALTY. For a taking and converting of personalty its value is ordinarily the measure of damages,[4] which value is determined as of the time of the taking,[5] and is the market value, if the thing has a market value,[6] and not their special value to plaintiff.[7] The value must be allowed as damages when there is a complete taking,[8] and interest on the value from the time of taking should be given,[9] and damages for any injury done in the taking may be added.[10] Where the personalty is not converted or destroyed, the measure of damages is compensation for the injury.[11]

For injury to chattels the diminished value is ordinarily the measure (Cookman v. Nill, 81 Mo. App. 297, mending articles injured and curing horses injured is part of this);

(IV) ENTRY ON AND INJURY TO REALTY. The difference in the value of land before and after the trespass is the general rule as to the measure of damages for an injury to the land itself,[12] and this means the difference in value of the entire tract, not merely the ground at the exact place of injury.[13] But where the

and the value should be proved to enable the jury to determine it (Snedecor v. Pope, 143 Ala. 275, 39 So. 318). Where, however, personal property in the actual use of the owner is injured by a trespasser so that the owner is deprived of the use of it, the special damage necessarily and proximately attendant on such privation may be proven to augment the damages beyond the diminution in value of the thing injured. Graves v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 76 N. J. L. 362, 69 Atl. 971.

But see Sabine, etc., T. R. Wisconsin.— Carl v. Sheboygan, etc., R. Co., 46 Wis. 625, 1 N. W. 295, holding that for building a railroad in the street the value of the use of that part of the street is not the measure of damages.

United States.— Frankle v. Jackson, 30 Fed. 398, holding that for building a rail-land can be restored to its former condition at a cost less than the diminution in value, if it is not restored, the cost of restoration,[14] plus compensation for loss of use,[15] is frequently laid down as the measure of damages. However, the application of this principle is confined to cases where the cost of restoration is less than the difference in the value of the land before and after the trespass,[16] and of course it is limited to cases where cost of restoring the specific land is less than the value of the land.[17] Evidence of cost of restoration is admissible only to reduce, not to increase, the damages above the diminution in value of the land resulting from the trespass.[18] It is of course improper to allow damages both for diminution in value and for restoration of the property to its former condition.[19]

(v) CONTINUING TRESPASS TO REALTY.[20] Damages for all the injury to the land which results from a single act of trespass to realty are recoverable in a single action;[21] but where the act is not a single act of trespass but a continuous road in the street in front of a lot the measure of damages is the diminution in value of the lot.

Applications of rule.— Permanent damages resulting from throwing dirt on plaintiff's land can be recovered. Such as throwing down trespass or series of trespasses which amounts to an appropriation or an attempt to appropriate the land itself or its use to the use of the trespasser, the damages are to be assessed for the trespass only, and not as if for the permanent appropriation of the land,[22] although where defendant has the right to appropriate the land or an easement therein by eminent domain plaintiff is, according to some decisions, allowed a recovery in trespass of the entire loss as for a taking.[23] The plaintiff's fence and piling earth on his land by a contractor in making a fill in an alley beyond plaintiff's lot (Tegeler v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. App. 162, 68 S. W. 953); or from casting sand and mud thereon (Cherry v. Lake Drummond Canal, etc., Co., 140 N. C. 422, 53 S. E. 138, 111 Am. St. Rep. 850); or from deposit of coal culm in a stream (Bailey v. Mill Creek Co., 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 186; Hoffman v. Mill Creek Coal Co., 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 631); or from cutting holes in plaintiff's wall and inserting girders to support defendant's building (Ritter v. Sieger, 105 Pa. St. 400); or from constructing a road on plaintiff's land (Ziebarth v. Nye, 42 Minn. 541, 44 N. W. 1027); or from burning a pile of driftwood on plaintiff's land which protected it from washing by a stream (Walker v. Davis, 83 Mo. App. 374).

Co., 21 Minn. 358; Carl v. Sheboygan, etc., R. Co., 46 Wis. 625, 1 N. W. 295; Blesch v. Chicago, etc., Co., 43 Wis. 183; Sherman v. Milwaukee, etc., R. measure of damages for an appropriation of the use of the land by a continuing trespass is the worth of the use of the property,[24] except where the doctrine is held that the recovery is based on a permanent appropriation of the land by defendant.[25] If defendant takes possession of the land and ousts plaintiff in jurisdictions where trespass will lie at all in such a case without a reëntry,[26] the value of the land is not the measure of damages,[27] but only the value of its use;[28] and the value of the use is the measure of damages after reëntry[29] plus damages for any injury done to the premises,[30] and, according to some authorities, expenses incurred in regaining possession.[31]

(VI) ENTRY AND TAKING AWAY PROPERTY — (A) In General. For an entry on realty and severing and removing a part of it the measure of damages is in general the value of the thing taken as it was in situ before the taking,[32] although there are decisions holding that the value of the thing after severance is given is the measure of damages.[33] Where the value of the thing detached from

The difference in the rental value with and without the encroachment is the usual measure of the worth of the use (Eno v. Christ, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 24, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 400); and this applies in respect of the entire tract if the tract is affected (Kenyon v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 29 N. Y. App. Div. 80, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 386; Leigh v. Garysburg Mfg. (B) Cutting and Removal of Trees — (1) TREES VALUABLE FOR TIMBER. For cutting and removing trees actual damages are recoverable, although the trespass was not wilful.[37] Although the decisions are not harmonious, it is generally held that in trespass for cutting and removing timber trees their value at the time and place of felling is the measure of the damages to be awarded,[38] where defendant did not act wilfully [39] and there was no damage to the land beyond the cutting,[40] although some decisions give their value as of the time when they first become a chattel,[41] at least when the action is for their value rather than for the injury to the land.[42] The value at the place to which the severed logs have been removed cannot be recovered under either view.[43] Some decisions have stated as the measure of damages the difference in the value of the land before and after the cutting of the timber,[44] at least where the value of the timber alone would not be adequate compensation,[45] or have permitted plaintiff to recover the value of the timber or for the depreciation in the land, according as one or the other furnishes the larger measure of damages.[46] So some decisions allow the value of the trees and the diminution in the value of the land, if any, caused by their removal.[47] And it has been held that if the action is trespass quare clausum, and not trespass de bonis, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the land before and after the trespass.[48]

(2) TREES NOT VALUABLE FOR TIMBER. It is very generally held that the measure of damages for trees which are not valuable for their timber is the injury to the land that is caused by destroying them, as it is obvious that an allowance of the value of the trees would not be an adequate compensation for the trespass. The rule has been applied in respect of timber trees not ready to cut,[49] fruit trees,[50] trees which were part of a sugar bush,[51] ornamental or shade trees,[52] or trees used for windbreak;[53] and it has been held that plaintiff may recover either the value of the trees or the injury to the land at his election.[54]

(3) Wisconsin Highest Market Value Doctrine. By statute in Wisconsin where defendant wrongfully cuts plaintiff's trees, plaintiff can recover their highest market value in whatever condition defendant has put them, between the cutting and the trial,[55] unless the cutting was within one of the express provisos of the statute, limiting the liability if the cutting was done by mistake and defendant files an affidavit to that effect,[56] or was done in good faith under claim of title.[57] The rule of the statute applies to a suit begun before its passage.[58] It applies to a cutting on the public domain,[59] and applies if the cutting is by an agent where defendant on discovery of the facts refuses to give up the logs.[60] So it applies where a person, having a contractual right to cut timber, cuts timber not within the purview of the contract.[61] An equitable action to set aside a deed Sufficiency of affidavit.— An affidavit by one of several joint defendants is sufficient if made in behalf of all. Brown v. Bosworth, 58 Wis. 379, 17 N. W. 241.

Where the act was done carelessly and negligently filing the affidavit is no excuse. Brown v. Bosworth, 58 Wis. 379, 17 N. W. 241.

A mistake of law is no excuse as a cutting under an oral reservation invalid because in contradiction of a deed. Schweitzer v. Connor, 57 Wis. 177, 14 N. W. 922.

Facts held to show that cutting was not by mistake see McNaughton v. Borth, 136 Wis. 543, 117 N. W. 1031.

57. See cases cited infra, this note.

A cutting is not in good faith where defendant knew all the facts but believed his title paramount (Warren v. Putnam, 68 Wis. 481, 32 N. W. 533); although he learned them after his purchase of the land (Warren v. Putnam, supra); or after the cutting but before the removal (Cook Land, etc., Co. v. Oconto Co., 134 Wis. 426, 114 N. W. 823); nor is the cutting in good faith if the authority under which the act was done does not give a right to cut (Smith v. Morgan, 68 Wis. 358, 32 N. W. 135, school lands' certificate). The owner whose title has been divested by a tax-sale is liable for cutting if he knows the fact (Fleming v. Sherry, 72 Wis. 503, 40 N. W. 375); and so is his grantee with knowledge (St. Croix Land, etc., Co. v. Ritchie, 78 Wis. 492, 47 N. W. 657), although if he did not it is an open question (Smith v. Sherry, 54 Wis. 114, 11 N. W. 465).

Good faith in fact is enough and defendant need not show that it was reasonable (Fleming v. Sherry, 72 Wis. 503, 40 N. W. 375); and where land has been conveyed by the United States to a state, one who receives a certificate of entry from the United States land-office in good faith is not liable (Befay v. Wheeler, 84 Wis. 135, 53 N. W. 1121); and mere notice of plaintiff's claim without knowledge of the facts on which it is based will not affect defendant's good faith (Fleming v. Sherry, supra; Warren v. Putnam, 68 Wis. 481, 32 N. W. 533).

and recover damages for cutting trees is not within the statute.[62] Nor does it apply to an innocent purchaser of the timber or logs from the trespasser,[63] and in an action against a purchaser the burden of proof of notice is on plaintiff.[64] So the statute does not apply to actions against the personal representative of the wrong-doer or a purchaser from him.[65] The statute does not authorize interest on the value allowed.[66]

(c) Mining and Removal of Minerals. Although it is held in some jurisdictions that the measure of damages in trespass for severing and taking minerals is the value of the thing severed after it becomes a chattel,[67] the measure of damages in such action is generally held to be its value in situ;[68] and this is the rule in equity.[69] Of course, if injury is done to the land beyond the value of the mineral extracted, this also must be compensated.[70] The cost of running levels, drifts, etc., to find the ore cannot be deducted,[71] nor the use by defendant of workings in his own mine.[72] Where defendant mingles the ore taken with his own, plaintiff can recover the value of all unless defendant shows how much came from plaintiff's land.[73] The rate at which leases are made on mining lands is not a proper measure of damages, for one taking ore as a trespasser is not to be put on the footing of a lessee.[74]

(VII) Measure of Damages as Affected by Plaintiff's Interest. Possession of land is sufficient right to recover for an injury to possession, although title is in a third person.[75] Where a trespass injures the property itself, not merely the possession of it, there are two doctrines as to the measures of damages. The first one, which best accords with reason and the nature of the action in the light of its history,[76] is that possession of property is sufficient right for the recovery of the whole of the damage against a mere trespasser, although title or other right to the property is in a third person, and the injury is not to possession merely but to property itself.[77] But plaintiff's possession must be real, not

76. See "Disseizin of Chattels," 3 Harvard L. Rev. by James Barr Ames. Trespass is not now and never was, as is clearly shown by the article above referred to, an action for injury to a right. It was its weakness in that regard that gave rise to the action on the case. Trespass is and always has been an action for injury to the thing, and whoever had the thing could recover for the whole injury, although he might be answerable over.

77. See cases cited infra, this note.

A tenant in possession can recover the whole of the damages against a mere trespasser for an injury to the freehold or to personalty, whether such tenant be a life-tenant of land (Fay v. Brewer, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 203, waste; Perry v. Jefferies, 61 S. C. 292, 39 S. E. 515, cutting of trees; Willey v. Laraway, 64 Vt. 559, 25 Atl. 436, holding that a tenant in dower is answerable to the reversioner for injuries to the inheritance and so can recover them against a trespasser); or a tenant for years of land (Cook v. Champlain Transp. Co., 1 Den. (N. Y.) 91, wrongful destruction of premises; Sturgis v. Warren, 11 Vt. 433, severing and carrying a part of the realty).

A coöwner in possession can recover the whole of the damage. Hasbrouck v. Winkler, 48 N. J. L. 431, 6 Atl. 22 (personalty); Hibbard v. Foster, 24 Vt. 542 (realty).

Possession under a special property is sufficient for recovery of the whole damage as possession as mortgagor of realty (Elvins v. Delaware, etc., Tel., etc., Co., 63 N. J. L. 243, 43 Atl. 903, 76 Am. St. Rep. 217; Kunkel v. Utah Lumber Co., 29 Utah 13, 81 Pac. 897; Attersoll v. Stevens, 1 Taunt. 183, 9 Rev. Rep. 731), or of personalty (Becker v. Bailies, 44 Conn. 167), or possession of personalty as lien-holder (Phillips v. Hall, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 610, 24 Am. Dec. 108; Conard v. Pacific Ins. Co., 6 Pet. (U. S.) 262, 8 L. ed. 392 [affirming 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,647, Baldw. 138]).

One in possession of land can recover the whole of the damages, for an injury to the freehold, although title is in a third person whether plaintiff has a bare possession merely (Illinois, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Cobb, 94 Ill. 55; Owings v. Gibson, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 515; North v. Cates, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 591; Reed v. Price, 30 Mo. 442; Paraffine Oil Co. v. Berry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 93 S. W. 1089; Baker v. Cornelius, 6 Tex. Civ. Ct. 575, wharf and bridge in public waters); possession coupled with color or claim of title (Nelson v. Mather, 5 Kan. 151; Hall v. Deaton, 68 S. W. 672, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 314; Todd v. Jackson, 26 N. J. L. 525, holding that one in possession under a void deed from the guardian of infants can recover the whole damage and no one else can; Dewey v. Osborn, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 329, possession after recovery in ejectment); although such possession was forbidden by statute (Oklahoma City v. Hill, 6 Okla. 114, 50 Pac. 242, holding that where plaintiff's possession was in violation of a statute forbidding occupancy of land before thrown open to entry, he can recover damages up to the time when the secretary of the interior renders his decision on defendant's application for the lots, giving them to him); possession under contract for purchase (Hueston v. Mississippi, etc., Boom Co., 76 Minn. 251, 79 N. W. 92, holding that plaintiff must show such a right that her recovery will bar that of the owner and that here he has equitable title so it would, but that a bare possession would not; Gartner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Nebr. 444, 98 N. W. 1052, holding that full recovery may be had for trees cut by trespass, although plaintiff in his contract of purchase agrees not to cut trees till land has been paid for; Hunt v. Taylor, 22 Vt. 556; Johnston v. Christie, 31 U. C. C. P. 358); possession of public lands under an application for them (Mott v. Hopper, 116 La. 629, 40 So. 921); or under a land-office receipt (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Clark, 2 Indian Terr. 319, 51 S. W. 962).

The value of things severed from land before plaintiff got possession but removed after can be recovered by one in possession (Glenwood Lumber Co. v. Phillips, [1904] A. C. 405, 73 L. J. P. C. 62, 90 L. T. Rep. N. S. 741, 20 T. L. R. 531, holding that merely colorable.[78] The second doctrine, which is supported by numerous cases, is that the recovery of damages by plaintiff in possession is limited by the extent of his right.[79] Where plaintiff has no possession his damages are of course where plaintiff has a lease with a right to cut trees defendant cannot set up the title of the crown to trees severed before plaintiff took possession); but one who severs wood on government land and piles it thereon has possession, although he took as a trespasser, so he can maintain trespass against a bare trespasser who takes it or destroys it (Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Lewis, 51 Fed. 658, 2 C. C. A. 446).

Possession of personalty is sufficient right to recover for the whole of the damage to it, although title is in a third person, whether it be a bare possession (Gibbs v. Chase, 10 Mass. 125; King v. Orser, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 431, holding that a sheriff cannot show that the goods belonged to plaintiff in a replevin suit against a third person and that he took them under the writ, as under New York code the writ would justify a taking only from defendant in the replevin suit; Criner v. Pike, 2 Head (Tenn.) 398, since plaintiff is either owner or answerable over to him; Rhemke v. Clinton, 2 Utah 230, possession being title as to all the world but the owner; Fisher v. Cobb, 6 Vt. 622; Wustland v. Potterfield, 9 W. Va. 438; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Greenberg, 117 Fed. 135, 55 C. C. A. 151, holding that plaintiff can recover because liable over to the owner; Guttner v. Pacific Steam Whaling Co., 96 Fed. 617; Mason v. Morgan, 24 U. C. Q. B. 328, bailee; Irving v. Hagerman, 22 U. C. Q. B. 545, recovery by bailee, as master of a vessel for freight he is carrying); possession under assignment void by statute (Barker v. Chase, 24 Me. 230, full recovery, although debt for which assignment was made had been paid); possession under special property (Fisher v. Cobb, 6 Vt. 622); possession as vendee under a conditional sale agreement (Wooley v. Edson, 35 Vt. 214, the reason is that plaintiff is answerable over to the owner or his assent is assumed in the absence of his interference); possession as mortgagor with the mortgagee's consent (Luse v. Jones, 39 N. J. L. 707).

78. McDowell v. McCormick, 121 Fed. 61, 57 C. C. A. 401, holding that if plaintiff's possession is colorable merely, not bona fide, the rule does not apply to a taking by sheriff under a writ of replevin against third persons.

79. Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 5 (realty); Gwaltney v. Scottish Carolina Timber, etc., Co., 115 N. C. 579, 20 S. E. 465 (realty and personalty); Johnson v. Meyer, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 383, 2 Clev. L. Rep. 81 (realty).

A tenant of land in possession can recover only damages to his estate whether he be a life-tenant (Zimmerman v. Shreeve, 59 Md. 357; Rockwood v. Robinson, 159 Mass. 406, 34 N. E. 521, unless he has a power of disposition of the property), or tenant for years (Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159, 25 Pac. 1114, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291; Uttendorffer v. Saegers, 50 Cal. 496; Nivin v. Stevens, 5 Harr. (Del.) 272; Eten v. Luyster, 60 N. Y. 252, holding that a lessee can recover for the destruction of a building which he had erected with privilege of removal, and also the value of his unexpired term; Gourdier v. Cormack, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 200; Fisher v. Grace, 27 U. C. Q. B. 158), except where he is required by the lease to repair all damages (Gourdier v. Cormack, supra).

A tenant in common can recover damages only to the extent of his interest as such tenant, whether the property is realty (Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Higgins, 69 Ill. App. 412; McGill v. Ash, 7 Pa. St. 397; Winters v. McGhee, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 128; Rowland v. Murphy, 66 Tex. 534, 1 S. W. 658; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McMurrough, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 216, 91 S. W. 320); of which plaintiff has exclusive possession claiming exclusive title (Jackson v. Todd, 25 N. J. L. 121); or personalty (Daniels v. Brown, 34 N. H. 454, 69 Am. Dec. 505, holding that if half the joint property is taken plaintiff can recover half the value of that taken; Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388, holding that if the whole value is recovered new trial will not be granted but amount in excess will be deducted; Long v. Monck, 22 U. C. C. P. 387).

A tenant at sufferance can only recover nominal damages for destruction of grass. He cannot recover for injury to the turf. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Torrey, (Tex. App. 1891) 16 S. W. 547.

A right to the use of land merely will not justify a recovery of an amount commensurate with the injury to it (Farnsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 3 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 30, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 735); but only the value of the use (Delamater v. Folz, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 528, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 711, holding that one having qualified possession under a contract for laying a sewer can recover the value of the injury to his use of the premises as necessary to fulfil his contract; Farnsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., supra, cutting telegraph wires).

Possession of land with title in a third person does not authorize a recovery for injury to the freehold. Advance El., etc., Co. v. Eddy, 23 Ill. App. 352 (recovery limited to injury to possession); Waltemeyer v. Wisconsin, etc., R. Co., 71 Iowa 626, 33 N. W. 140; Hunter v. Hatton, 4 Gill (Md.) 115, 45 Am. Dec. 117 (holding that plaintiff may show title in order to entitle himself to greater damages than a mere possessor could recover); Rau v. Minnesota Valley R. Co., 13 Minn. 442; Poor v. Gibson, 32 N. H. 415; Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101; Kelly v. New York, etc., R. Co., 81 N. Y. 233; Frisbee v. Marshall, 122 N. C. 760, 30 S. E. 21 (recovery limited to injury to possession); Russell v. Meyer, 7 N. D. 335, 75 N. W. 262, 47 L. R. A. 637 (holding that one in possession can re-limited to the injury to the right for which the action is brought.[80] The recovery by an executor or administrator for a trespass on decedent's land during the lifetime of the decedent is for full damages, as the whole right of action goes to him, not excepting the injury by reason of the permanent nature of the damage.[81]

(VIII) MEASURE OF DAMAGES AS AFFECTED BY DEFENDANT'S INTEREST. Where defendant in trespass has a right in the property, plaintiff's damages cannot include the injury to such right,[82] nor can it include damages for an injury to the right of one under whom defendant acted.[83] cover only nominal damages for removal of a barn); International, etc., R. Co. v. Ragsdale, 67 Tex. 24, 2 S. W. 515 (holding that one who sells his land but retains possession by verbal agreement can recover only nominal damages for destruction of timber, although he afterward buys back the title); Ford v. Schliessman, 107 Wis. 479, 83 N. W. 761; Wadleigh v. Marathon County Bank, 58 Wis. 546, 17 N. W. 314 (holding that a recovery by plaintiff for the full damages would not bar an action by the owner).

Title and possession does not warrant a recovery for property severed if it has been sold to a third person. Wallace v. Goodall, 18 N. H. 439.

Possession and equitable title in plaintiff do not authorize a recovery of the damage for an injury to the freehold. Salisbury v. Western North Carolina R. Co., 98 N. C. 465, 4 S. E. 465 (premises conveyed to trustees by mistake, which conveyance had been annulled before action brought); Van Buskirk v. Dunlap, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 233, 2 West. L. Month. 125.

Possession of land under a contract for purchase does not warrant a recovery of the damages for an injury to the freehold. Southern R. Co. v. Ethridge, 108 Ga. 121, 33 S. E. 850.

Possession of personalty with title in a third person does not warrant a recovery of its value when taken (Anthony v. Gilbert, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 348); but only the value of its use to the party whose right of possession is invaded (Temple v. Duran, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 121 S. W. 253).

A mortgagee can recover the amount which will compensate him for the injury to his security. Elvins v. Delaware, etc., Tel., etc., Co., 63 N. J. L. 243, 43 Atl. 903, 76 Am. St. Rep. 217.

Applications of rule.—A coöwner cannot recover damages for his coöwners either to realty (Lowery v. Rowland, 104 Ala. 420, 16 So. 88; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Cusenberry, 86 Tex. 525, 26 S. W. 43; McDodrill v. Pardee, etc., Lumber Co., 40 W. Va. 564, 21 S. E. 878, license to defendant from other owner); or to personalty (Lefebre v. Utter, 22 Wis. 189); or a remainder-man or reversioner for injuries not to the inheritance (Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 77 Ill. 275; Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 317; Van Deusen v. Young, 29 N. Y. 9). Where plaintiff has only a right to dig ore on the land, his damage is not the value of the ore but the injury to the right. O'Connor v. Shannon, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. Applications of rule.—A life-tenant of land cannot recover against the reversioner damages for injury to the reversion. Willey v. Laraway, 64 Vt. 559, 25 Atl. 436. Title in defendant will prevent a recovery of damages for an injury to the property (Baker v. Cornelius, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 27, 24 S. W. 949); or a recovery of the value of part of the realty severed and taken (Baker v. Cornelius, supra). A. 151, retaking by trespass on plaintiff's realty); and defendant in replevin who retakes the property can show his ownership on the question of damages (Fowler v. Stonum, 6 Tex. 60). A tenant of land holding over can recover only nominal damages for the loss of the land by an entry of the landlord contrary to the statute of forcible entry. Reeder v. Purdy, 41 Ill. 279; Thiel v. Bull's Ferry Land Co., 58 N. J. L. 212, 33 Atl. 281.

Against one who attaches personalty as the property of the general owner a lienholder can recover only the value of his lien (Outcalt v. Durling, 25 N. J. L. 443); and if the attachment is for a claim against one having possession under an interest the general owner can only recover the value of the property less such interest (Chaffee v. Sherman, 26 Vt. 237).

Against a lessee of land, plaintiff, claiming under a prior agreement with the lessor and occupancy, can recover only nominal damages unless he shows the duration of his interest. Twyman v. Knowles, 13 C. B. 222, 17 Jur. 238, 22 L. J. C. P. 143, 76 E. C. L. 222.

Against a mortgagee the mortgagor can recover only the value of his equity. Street v. Sinclair, 71 Ala. 110 (taking of personalty); Swigert v. Thomas, 7 Dana (Ky.) 220.

(IX) INJURY TO BUSINESS. A recovery may be had in an action of trespass for an injury to business which is the immediate consequence of the trespass.[84]

(X) NON-PECUNIARY INJURY. Compensation may be recovered for resulting pain,[85] fright,[86] and mental suffering,[87] shame and humiliation,[88] inconvenience,[89] and invasion of privacy.[90]

(XI) INTEREST. Interest on the value of the property destroyed from the time of trespass has been held to be part of the measure of damages in an action of trespass,[91] or at least the jury may award it if they see fit to do so.[92]

Contra.— Ford v. Schliessman, 107 Wis. 479, 83 N. W. 761. Compare Murray v. Mace, 41 Nebr. 60, 59 N. W. 387, 43 Am. St. Rep. 664, holding that compensation for mental suffering of the injured party is a legitimate element of damage, in actions for trespass to property, where the unlawful act is inspired by fraud, malice, or like motives. But in cases where the wrong consists in the taking or destruction of personal property without fraud, malice, or other aggravating circumstances, the measure of damage is compensation for plaintiff's loss, which is ordinarily the value of the property, with such incidental damage as may be shown to be the natural and proximate result of the act charged.

92. See cases cited infra, this note.

Applications of rule.— Rule applied in an action for taking slaves (Hair v. Little, 28

In some cases interest has been disallowed because of the form of the verdict rendered therein.[93]

(XII) REMOTE OR SPECULATIVE DAMAGES. No recovery can be had for merely remote [94] or speculative damages.[95] Damages are given as compensation, recompense, or satisfaction to plaintiff for the injury actually received by him from defendants, and they must be the natural and proximate consequence of the act complained of.[96]

(XIII) HAZARDS FROM TRESPASS NOT RESULTING IN LOSS. There cannot be any recovery for a mere hazard or danger arising from a trespass which never in fact led to any loss or detriment.[97]

(XIV) DAMAGES PREVENTABLE BY CARE ON PLAINTIFF'S PART. If part of the damages result from plaintiff's neglect to employ the ordinary and obvious means to prevent the injury there can be no recovery therefor.[98] Upon this principle, where the property can easily be replaced in the market, injury merely from lack of the thing taken or injured is not recoverable.[99] But where the nature of the property is such that it cannot readily be replaced in the market or not so promptly as to prevent injury special damage resulting to plaintiff merely from lack of it can be recovered.[1] But the rule excluding a recovery

Discretion of jury.— In some jurisdictions it is held that plaintiff is not entitled to interest as matter of right, but only in the jury's discretion. Wehle v. Haviland, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 399.

In Maine it is not recognized as "the exact measure of damages." Longfellow v. Quimby, 29 Me. 196, 48 Am. Dec. 525.

Applications of rule.— Damages for injury done cattle resulting from destruction of a fence cannot be recovered for an indefinite period thereafter (Berry v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 50 Cal. 435); as after a reasonable time to rebuild has elapsed (Smith v. Johnson, 76 Pa. St. 191); and the cost of replacing a few rods of fence, not an injury arising to a subsequent year's crop, is the measure of damage for its removal (Loker v. Damon, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 284). Where plaintiff's cattle are wrongfully driven from a pasture and he had notice he cannot recover for their starving some time after. Story v. Robinson, 32 Cal. 205. Where plaintiff sued the city for damages for digging a ditch and making a dam on his land and they were held not liable he cannot recover against the party liable for loss of use during this period as it resulted from his own error, although he can recover for loss of use necessarily resulting. Cavanagh v. Durgin, 156 Mass. 466, 31 N. E. 643. So the danger of fire from brush cut by a trespasser and piled on defendant's lands is not an element of damage, being too remote and speculative and the obvious remedy being to remove it. Chase v. Clearfield Lumber Co., 209 Pa. St. 422, 58 Atl. 813.

99. Sims v. Glazener, 14 Ala. 695, 48 Am. Dec. 120.

Applications of rule.— Plaintiff cannot show that he was compelled to work as a day laborer to replace corn taken (Sims v. Glazener, 14 Ala. 695, 48 Am. Dec. 120); nor, in an action for taking clothes, can he show the condition of his family as to clothes unless it appears defendant knew their condition (Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271).

1. See cases cited infra, this note.

Applications of rule.— The rule has been applied in respect of a loss from being deprived of plaintiff's house and furniture (Moyer v. Gordon, 113 Ind. 282, 14 N. E. 476); damages from being deprived of use of a mill by taking materials of the sluiceway (Hammat v. Russ, 16 Me. 171); or a part of the machinery (Jolly v. Single, 16 Wis. 280); damages to crops from carrying off all plaintiff's slaves from his plantation (Johnson v.

in case the consequences were avoidable only requires that plaintiff should exercise good faith and fair dealing.[2]

(xv) Expense Incurred in Avoiding Injurious Consequences of Trespass. Expense incurred by plaintiff by reason of the trespass in the effort to avoid the injurious consequences of it can be recovered.[3]

(xvi) Counsel Fees and Expenses of Litigation. Counsel fees and other expenses of the litigation are not ordinarily recoverable as part of the damages.[4]

S.) 447, 14 L. ed. 217); inconvenience resulting from ouster from a shanty convenient to plaintiff's lumbering operations (Tracy v. Butters, 40 Mich. 406); peculiar value of a leasehold to plaintiff by reason of his business which he had established there (Allison v. Chandler, 11 Mich. 542); loss from being unable to run a hotel during the summer by reason of the taking of the furniture which could not be replaced in time (O'Horo v. Kelsey, 60 N. Y. App. Div. 604, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 14); loss of annual output of fish by destruction of a fish trap (Gwaltney v. Scottish Carolina Timber, etc., Co., 115 N. C. 579, 20 S. E. 465); cost of feeding plaintiff's stock by reason of destruction of his pasture (Cosgriff v. Miller, 10 Wyo. 190, 68 Pac. 206, 98 Am. St. Rep. 977); loss of profits on logs where plaintiff's boom was destroyed causing their loss, defendant not showing plaintiff could have procured others (Auger v. Cook, 39 U. C. Q. B. 537).

2. Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 117. And see cases cited infra, this note.

Applications of rule.— Plaintiff need not remove his own cattle from his pasture where defendant turns his cattle in and puts them back every time plaintiff removes them, but can recover for injury to them from overstocking. Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 117. Where plaintiff was ejected from her home and thereby compelled to remain in the street all night to the impairment of her health defendant was not entitled to an instruction that if it was dangerous to her health to remain out all night she could not recover if she failed to go in. Mecartney v. Smith, (Kan. App. 1900) 62 Pac. 540. Plaintiff need not gather up his chattels which defendant has taken from his possession and scattered about (Eten v. Luyster, 60 N. Y. 252); and his sickness excuses him from repairing a fence to prevent injury by stock (Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. McMurrough, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 216, 91 S. W. 320).

3. See cases cited infra, this note.

The rule has been applied in respect of expense in reducing the damages. W. K. Syson Timber Co. v. Dickens, 146 Ala. 471, 40 So. 753. The amount necessarily paid for treatment for an injury to an animal is recoverable (Summers v. Tarney, 123 Ind. 560, 24 N. E. 678); and cost of keeping it during the illness (Taylor v. Hayes, 63 Vt. 475, 21 Atl. 610). So a recovery may be had for prospective medical attentions made necessary in the future by reason of injury to plaintiff's person (Hickey v. Welch, 91 Mo. App. 4); and cost of removal on eviction (Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159, 25 Pac. 1114, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291. Contra, Tobin v. French, 93 Ill. App. 18); also for repairs made in consequence of the trespass (Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 460); cost of replacing the thing destroyed (Reynolds v. Braithwaite, 131 Pa. St. 416, 18 Atl. 1110, water pipe cut); cost of restoring the land (Bentley v. Fischer Lumber, etc., Co., 51 La. Ann. 451, 25 So. 262); expense and trouble of getting and putting back escaped cattle by defendant's removal of plaintiff's fence and cost of rebuilding the fence (Coffman v. Burkhalter, 98 Ill. App. 304); expense of recovering personalty taken by defendant (Dennison v. Hyde, 6 Conn. 508); as for instance the amount paid by the owner of a horse at a wrongful sale on execution after asserting the title and protesting against the sale (Ford v. Williams, 24 N. Y. 359); and where defendant wrongfully seized plaintiff's goods and a third person then took them from him against his will it was held that plaintiff could recover from defendant the amount he had to pay the third person in order to get them back (Keene v. Dilke, 4 Exch. 388, 18 L. J. Exch. 440). Such expenses have been allowed even in cases where incurred in course of another action, as of replevin (Bird v. Hempstead, 3 Day (Conn.) 272, 3 Am. Dec. 269; Haviland v. Parker, 11 Mich. 103); but not the costs of an action for setting aside a judgment under which they were taken (Holloway v. Turner, 6 Q. B. 928, 9 Jur. 160, 14 L. J. Q. B. 143, 51 E. C. L. 928; Loton v. Devereux, 3 B. & Ad. 343, 1 L. J. K. B. 103, 23 E. C. L. 155, 110 Eng. Reprint 129). So there are some decisions which hold that under a general allegation of loss of time, and expense in regaining property taken under execution against a third person, evidence of expenses in proving plaintiff's right before a sheriff's jury is not admissible (Wilson v. Eills, 2 N. Brunsw. 497); that expenses incurred in prosecuting criminal proceedings against the trespasser are not recoverable (Bendich v. Scobel, 107 La. 242, 31 So. 703); that expense of a chancery action, to determine ownership of land still pending, cannot be recovered in an action of trespass for injury to it (Murray v. Pannaci, 130 Fed. 529, 65 C. C. A. 153).

Preliminary proof.—Evidence of the amount paid as expenses is admissible without first showing that such amount was reasonable. After showing the amount paid, it could be shown by other testimony that the amount was reasonable. Williams v. Newberry, 32 Miss. 256.

Extenuating circumstances cannot be shown in mitigation of actual damages (Henderson v. Lyles, 2 Hill (S. C.) 504), as in trespass for forcibly taking possession of slaves that defendant acted on a well founded belief that plaintiff who had possession under a replevin bond was about to place them beyond the reach of legal process (Fowler v. Stonum, 6 Tex. 60); or advice of counsel in an action for forcibly ejecting plaintiff (Moyer v. Gordon, 113 Ind. 282, 14 N. St. 553, 29 Atl. 276), cannot be shown in mitigation of actual damages.

Damages — Removal of erection.— That an unlawful erection by defendant railroad on plaintiff's land was ordered removed by the president as soon as he heard of it cannot be considered in mitigation of damages. Kentucky Midland R. Co. v. Stump, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 316.

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trespass," § 143.

The measure of damages is the value of the use during the time of detention, together with any damages done them if they are returned (Fields v. Williams, 91 Ala. 502, 8 So. 808; Warfield v. Walter, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 80; Hart v. Blake, 31 Mich. 278; Jones v. McNeil, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 466; Hance v. Burke, 73 Tex. 62, 11 S. W. 135), or put in another form the difference in their value at the time and place of taking and the time and place where returned (Clark v. Bates, 1 Dak. 42, 46 N. W. 510); but where part only is recovered which is greatly enhanced in value, the enhanced value cannot be set off against a recovery of the value of the balance (Caskins v. Davis, 115 N. C. 85, 20 S. E. 188, 44 Am. St. Rep. 439, 25 L. R. A. 813).

Return to a coöwner with plaintiff is sufficient. Nightingale v. Scannell, 18 Cal. 315.

Where the vendor under a conditional sale agreement sells his interest, the vendee's right to recover full damages for a taking by a third person is not affected by the vendor's obtaining possession from the trespasser. Wooley v. Edson, 35 Vt. 214.

7. Walker v. Fuller, 29 Ark. 448; Hanmer v. Wilsey, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 91.

If plaintiff accepts the proceeds of a sale of the property taken that may be shown in mitigation. Ferguson v. Buckell, 101 N. Y. App. Div. 213, 91 N. Y. Suppl. 724; Van Brunt v. Schenck, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 414.

also that the return is before the beginning of the action,[8] or if he otherwise assents to its disposition.[9] So if the property while in defendant's possession is taken under legal process against plaintiff in favor of a third person,[10] or even in favor of defendant himself,[11] this fact may be shown in mitigation of damages, and it may be shown in mitigation of damages that the goods did not belong to plaintiff and that they have gone to the use of the owner, although defendant in taking them acted without authority.[12] As against a special owner defendant may show a return of the goods to the general owner,[13] and in such case if the special owner is paid the amount of his lien he cannot recover the value of the goods.[14] However, defendant cannot himself apply the property taken to an obligation due from plaintiff.[15] Recovery by a mortgagee of land for injury to it is admissible in mitigation in an action by the mortgagor for the same injury.[16] Defendant may of course show that the damage was enhanced by plaintiff's acts,[17] and if evidence in mitigation is allowed plaintiff can give evidence in rebuttal.[18]

(XVIII) DEDUCTIONS FOR LABOR EXPENDED IN COMMITTING TRESPASS. Where a trespass is wilful the strict rule of compensation is not applied,[19] and no allowance will in general be made defendant for the value of his labor expended in committing it;[20] but damages will be given without deduction for labor

What is not an acceptance.— Mere opening of boxes by the owner to appraise them is not an acceptance (Connah v. Hale, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 462); nor an actual return and leaving the property on plaintiff's premises, not assented to by him (Hanmer v. Wilsey, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 91); and an offer to return cannot be shown if not accepted (Hanmer v. Wilsey, supra). But see Wooley v. Carter, 7 N. J. L. 85, 11 Am. Dec. 520.

Where defendant has injured the goods, defendant's motion for a return of goods in mitigation will be denied. Griffin v. Martel, 77 Vt. 19, 58 Atl. 788.

8. Hanmer v. Wilsey, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 91.

9. Davenport v. Ledger, 80 Ill. 574 (holding that where a mortgagor procures a first mortgage to replevy from a second mortgagee who took the property, the mortgagor can recover in trespass for the taking only the difference between the value at the time of taking and retaking on replevy); Hendrickson v. Dwyer, 70 N. J. L. 223, 57 Atl. 420 (holding that sums paid by a trespasser to a third person as lessor and which the owner received go to reduce the damages against the trespasser).

10. Bates v. Courtwright, 36 Ill. 518 (holding that plaintiff's consent thereto will be implied); Kaley v. Shed, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 317 (in which it was said that under these circumstances they go to plaintiff's benefit as much as if they had been returned); Wehle v. Haviland, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 399; Higgins v. Whitney, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 379; Montgomery v. Wilson, 48 Vt. 616.

Although defendant by using property attached became a trespasser ab initio the rule applies. Lamb v. Day, 8 Vt. 407, 30 Am. Dec. 479.

The reason of the rule is that, the property having been rightfully appropriated in paying debts of the owner, he has received satisfaction for its value, and he ought not again to recover the same value. Bates v. Courtwright, 36 Ill. 518.

11. Bates v. Courtwright, 36 Ill. 518, 520 (in which it was said: "The owner receives the value of his property by virtue of legal process, the same in one case that he does in the other; and to that extent his claim for damages is mitigated"); Hopple v. Higbee, 23 N. J. L. 342. And see McAfee v. Crofford, 13 How. (U. S.) 447, 14 L. ed. 217. Contra, Hanmer v. Wilsey, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 91.

expended,[21] and the same rule has been applied where the act was negligent,[22] but, in general, good faith is the test.[23]

(XIX) EXEMPLARY DAMAGES. Where a trespass is committed under circumstances of aggravation, exemplary or punitive damages, sometimes called "smart money," may be given by the jury,[24] not as compensation alone for the (holding that no deduction for working expenses will be made in an action for wilfully taking ore); Durant Min. Co. v. Percy Consol. Min. Co., 93 Fed. 166, 35 C. C. A. 252; Bolles Wooden-Ware Co. v. U. S., 106 U. S. 432, 1 S. Ct. 398, 27 L. ed. 230.

Act of agent.— The rule applies where the wilful act was done by defendant's agent. Sunnyside Coal, etc., Co. v. Reitz, 14 Ind. App. 478, 39 N. E. 541, 43 N. E. 46.

Although committed under mistake of law a trespass is wilful within the rule. Sunnyside Coal, etc., Co. v. Reitz, 14 Ind. App. 478, 39 N. E. 541, 43 N. E. 46.

Taking timber from United States land is sufficient prima facie evidence that it was wilful. U. S. v. Homestake Min. Co., 117 Fed. 481, 54 C. C. A. 303.

21. Colorado.— United Coal Co. v. Canon City Coal Co., 24 Colo. 116, 48 Pac. 1045, holding that for wilful mining of coal the measure of damages is its value when severed, without deduction for severance.

Illinois.— Bull v. Griswold, 19 Ill. 631, holding that in trespass for wilful taking wheat the value of the harvested crop is the measure of damages, without deduction for harvesting.

Indiana.— Sunnyside Coal, etc., Co. v. Reitz, 14 Ind. App. 478, 39 N. E. 541, 43 N. E. 46 (holding that the value of coal after it is severed, without deduction for cost of severance, is the measure of damages where the act was wilful, and plaintiff can recover the highest market value between taking and conversion); Ellis v. Wire, 33 Ind. 127, 5 Am. Rep. 189 (holding that where wheat in a field is forcibly taken and sold plaintiff can recover the highest market value between taking and sale, without deduction for defendant's labor).

Iowa.— Negley v. Cowell, 91 Iowa 256, 59 N. W. 48, 51 Am. St. Rep. 344, holding that for a wilful trespass on land and occupation of it the damages are not limited to compensation for the use but plaintiff can recover the fair market value of the crops.

Kentucky.— Jones Lumber Co. v. Gatliff, 82 S. W. 295, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 616, holding that where logs are wantonly cut, plaintiff can recover their value at the place they were sold to defendant.

Minnesota.— Mississippi River Logging Co. v. Page, 68 Minn. 269, 71 N. W. 4, holding that for wilful severance of logs their value at the time and place of conversion is the measure of damages.

Texas.— Emporia Lumber Co. v. League, (Civ. App. 1907) 105 S. W. 1167, holding that the value of trees in the condition into which defendant manufactured it is the measure of damage for taking in wilful or grossly negligent disregard of plaintiff's boundary line.

Vermont.—Whiting v. Adams, 66 Vt. 679, 30 Atl. 32, 44 Am. St. Rep. 875, 25 L. R. A. 598.

United States.— U. S. v. Homestake Min. Co., 117 Fed. 481, 54 C. C. A. 303 (holding that the enhanced value of ore at the time it is converted to defendant's use is the measure of damages for a wilful taking); Cheeney v. Nebraska, etc., Stone Co., 41 Fed. 740 (holding that the value of stone after it is quarried is the measure of damages for a wilful taking).

doctrine is occasionally held that exemplary damages cannot be recovered,[46] or at least that the court will be slow to inflict them where defendant has been punished criminally.[47] It is not necessary to a recovery of exemplary damages that plaintiff recover substantial actual damages.[48] There is considerable conflict of authority on the question of the liability of a master or principal for exemplary damages for acts committed by his agent or servant. This conflict of authority is not peculiar to acts of trespass and the whole question is considered elsewhere in this work.[49]

j. Costs. As has been shown in another volume of this work, it is a rule of almost universal application under the statute relating to costs, that in actions at law the prevailing party in the action is entitled to costs unless there is some special statute which on the facts of the case takes it out of the operation of the general rule.[54] This rule applies to actions for trespass as well as other actions at law,[55] and the prevailing party is of course entitled to full costs if a statute expressly so provides.[56] The question of costs in actions of trespass is almost entirely regulated by statutes specially relating to that class of action; and varying to a considerable extent in their provisions. Some statutes give plaintiff full costs if the court certifies that the trespass was wilful and malicious.[57] Under these statutes it is for the court before whom the action is tried to determine whether the trespass was wilful and malicious, and this refusal to so certify will not be reviewed.[58] So some statutes allow a reduction of costs in case of unintentional trespass if damages are tendered.[59] Under some statutes plaintiff is entitled to full costs if he recover in trespass quare clausum, regardless of the issue or the amount recovered,[60] but usually in such an action, if it is brought in a court

A mere voluntary trespass is not wilful and malicious within the meaning of such statutes. It should appear to be done mala fide, or with an intention to injure or vex plaintiff, or with a consciousness of violating right. Heath v. McInroy, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 277.

When involuntary.— Trespass is involuntary where done under a mistake of fact as to the land being defendant's (Brown v. Neal, 36 Me. 407); or its being land on which he has actual permission to go (Brown v. Neal, supra); but not where done under a mistake of law as to his rights (Brown v. Neal, supra); or want of care in ascertaining them (Brown v. Neal, supra); and a trespass on land is negligent, although involuntary when done by mistake of fact, caused by lack of care, as to the land being defendant's (Brown v. Neal, supra).

Effect of refusal or acceptance of offer.— If plaintiff refuses he is liable for costs thereafter. If he accepts and continues the writ, the tender is deducted from the recovery and his right to costs is determined by the residue. Slack v. Brown, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 390.

of general jurisdiction costs are by statute dependent on the amount of recovery [61] or occasionally on the amount demanded,[62] unless it appears that title is involved, in which case plaintiff is entitled to full costs if he recovers judgment.[63] Title

If more than the sum prescribed by statute is recovered plaintiff can recover full costs. Sutherland v. Venard, 32 Ind. 483; Hower v. Gamby, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 338 (a recovery of five dollars and thirty-three cents is the same as five dollars, thirty-three and one-third cents); Stewart v. Hughes, 1 Del. Co. (Pa.) 143.

If less than the statutory amount is recovered by plaintiff statutes have variously provided that on a recovery plaintiff is entitled to no more costs than damages (White v. Fuller, 36 Conn. 149; Bishop v. Seeley, 18 Conn. 389; Mackison v. Clegg, 95 Ind. 373; Dodd v. Sheeks, 5 Blackf. Some Pennsylvania decisions, however, draw a distinction between cases where costs are awarded by the verdict of the jury or an award of arbitrators, and cases where they are awarded by the court. In the former case it is held that plaintiff if successful is entitled to full costs irrespective of the amount of recovery or whether title was in issue (Painter v. Kistler, 59 Pa. St. 331; Wilkinson v. Grey, 14 Serg. & R. 345; Hinds v. Knox, 4 Serg. & R. 417); and assign as a reason why the court is bound while the jury are not, that there being no measure of damages in those cases which fall within these statutes, the jury are not bound to give damages eo nomine, but may substantially do the same thing in another form, by increasing the costs to the amount of the damages intended to be given (Hinds v. Knox, 4 Serg. & R. 417).

See 46 Cent. Dig. tit. "Trespass," § 164.

The record must show that title was involved so as to be decided and settled; in order to entitle plaintiff to full costs it is not sufficient that title merely came in question incidentally (Bishop v. Seley, 18 Conn. 389; Weiand v. Dillinger, 1 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 115); however, the fact that title was involved so as to be decided may appear either from the pleadings or the evidence (Ward v. Bartlett, 1 N. H. 14); or by a certificate from the trial court (Arnold v. Kellogg, 25 Conn. 248; Miller v. Howard, 4 Pa. Dist. 70; Bowers v. Taylor, 3 Del. Co. (Pa.) 334).

Where possession only is alleged title is not in issue (Burnet v. Kelly, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 406); this, it has been held, is true, although evidence of title is admitted for the purpose of defining the extent of the possession (Burnet v. Kelly, supra); and so is not in issue in trespass generally as possession is in general the only right involved (Wausau Boom Co. v. Plumer, 49 Wis. 112, 4 N. W. 1072); and the only right denied by the general issue (Bishop v. Seeley, 18 Conn. 389; Ostrom v. Potter, 104 Mich. 115, 62 N. W. 170; Squires v. Seward, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 478).

If the right alleged is not denied title is not in issue. White v. Fuller, 36 Conn. 149; O'Reilly v. Davies, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 722. It is not in issue where defendant admits the title alleged but denies other allegations of the plea (Lynk v. Weaver, 128 N. Y. 171, 28 N. E. 508; Dunster v. Kelly, 110 N. Y. 558, 18 N. Plea of a right to enter and remove plaintiff's personalty from the land does not put title to the land in issue. Corcoran v. Webster, 50 Wis. 125, 6 N. W. 513.

Issues made by pleadings but not submitted to jury.—Where the recovery is not on an issue involving title, it is not in issue, although in issue under the pleadings, as where it is not involved in the only issue submitted to the jury (Robbins v. Sawyer, 3 Gray (Mass.) 375; Pevare v. Towne, 57 N. H. 220); or is not involved in the issue on which plaintiff recovered (Crosby v. Moore, 6 N. H. 57, not involved in the count in which title was in issue; Shall v. Green, 34 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 418, plea of title to part but trespasses shown on other parts only; Squires v. Seward, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 478; Burhans v. Tibbits, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 74, recovery solely for a chattel on the land, jury finding title to the land to be in defendant; Brainerd v. Casey, 37 Vt. 479, issue of boundary in which the jury found the boundary was as defendant claimed but that the trespass was on plaintiff's land). But see Ryder v. Hathaway, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 96, holding that where defendant pleaded title but the recovery was for trespass on part of the land not claimed by him, plaintiff could recover full costs, although the question of title had been settled in a previous trial and the present trial was only to determine damages).

If plaintiff alleges title it is in issue if denied by the pleadings (Labeau v. Labeau, 61 Mich. 81, 27 N. W. 861; Ames v. Meehan, 63 Wis. 408, 23 N. W. 586; Lipsky v. Borgmann, 52 Wis. 256, 9 N. W. 158, 38 Am. Rep. 735); as where defendant alleges he has no knowledge on the subject and puts plaintiff to his proof (Willard v. Baker, 2 Gray (Mass.) 336); or denies each and every allegation of the complaint (Crowell v. Smith, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 182 [affirmed in 102 N. Y. 730]; Dempsey v. Hall, 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 201).

If the general issue is pleaded with notice that title would come in question title is in issue. Mansfield v. Church, 21 Conn. 73; Walters v. Tefft, 57 Mich. 390, 24 N. W. 117; Washburn v. Tinkham, 8 N. H. 507; Radley v. Brice, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 539.

Where plaintiff claims damages for an injury to the freehold, title is in issue in states holding that in such case he must prove title. Kelly v. New York, etc., R. Co., 81 N. Y. 233; Crowell v. Smith, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 182 [affirmed in 102 N. Y. 730].

If defendant pleads title it is in issue, whether alleged as in himself (Adgate v. Stores, 2 Root (Conn.) 160; Budd v. Stille, 16 N. J. L. 263; Hill v. McMahon, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 324, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 431); or a third person under whom defendant claims (Farrell v. Hill, 69 Hun (N. Y.) 455, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 402).

Miscellaneous cases where title was held to be in issue.—Where the question was whether or not the locus in quo was a highway title is in issue (Anderson v. Buchanan, 8 Ind. 132; Heath v. Barmour, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 444; Dinehart v. Wells, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 432); or a public or private way (Hall v. Hodskins, 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 15; Heaton v. Ferris, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 146; Merring v. Sparrer, 1 Del. Co. (Pa.) 457). So also where plaintiff alleges title and possession and defendant alleges entry under a deed of the land from himself to plaintiff, reserving to himself the right to enter and commit the acts claimed to be a trespass (Powell v. Rust, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 567, Code Rep. N. S. 172); and an action for damages for trespass on plaintiff's land under water in the Hudson river, and for impairment of his navigable access to his uplands, where the question was whether plaintiff's easement of right of way to and from his uplands by water was appurtenant to such land, and whether his ownership of the lands under water was absolute, or so qualified as to preclude him from complaining if the government deposited dredged material thereon, title to real estate is involved (Slingerland v. International Contracting Co., 43 N. Y. App. Div. 215, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 12 [affirmed in 169 N. Y. 60, 61 N. E. 995, 56 L. R. A. 494]).

Although the issue included other matter title is in issue if involved and the verdict is general. Spalbergh v. Walrod, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 162.

Where constructive possession from title is relied on without proof of actual possession it is in issue (Booth v. Sherwood, 12 Minn. 426; Dickerson v. Wadsworth, 33 N. J. L. 357); even though defendant admits it at the trial (Dunckel v. Farley, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 180; Brown v. Majors, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 495, semble; Hubbell v. Rochester, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 115).

Where title is involved in the first trial plaintiff can recover full cost, although not involved in the second. Ryder v. Hathaway, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 96; Bachelder v. Green, 38 N. H. 265.

Where title is in issue on a second trial, but was not at the first, plaintiff cannot recover full costs of the original suit. Woodbury v. Parshley, 10 N. H. 392.

the meaning of the statutes relating to costs.[64] Where by a statute an action of trespass to land is removed from the justice's court to an upper court on plea of title, plaintiff is generally entitled to full costs on a recovery,[65] and if defendant recovers on the issue of title he is entitled to costs.[66]

k. The Trial[67]— (I) Mode and Conduct of Trial in General. All the issues in trespass quare clausum must be tried, although it appears on an issue of possession that plaintiff has not possession.[68] Several actions of trespass to the same close on the same day between the same parties may be tried together in the discretion of the trial court.[69] An equitable defense on which the validity of the legal defense rests must be tried first and not both issues given to the jury.[70] Plaintiff may abandon the action as to some of the trespassers and proceed only for others.[71]

(II) Questions For the Jury. Questions of fact on which evidence is presented are in general for the jury,[72] and the inference to be drawn from the

An admission of title at the trial will not deprive plaintiff of his costs if it was in issue under the pleadings. Niles v. Lindsley, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 610, 8 How. Pr. 131.

It is not necessary that the action be brought first in the justice's court and then removed to entitle plaintiff to full costs if title came in issue. Hill v. McMahon, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 324, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 431; Rogers v. McGregor, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 531.

Granting a certificate that the action was brought to try a right so that plaintiff is entitled to costs is in the discretion of the court. McGillivray v. McIsaac, 2 Nova Scotia 155.

Title is in issue where plaintiff alleges title and defendant denies it and avers title in himself (Huddleston v. Johnson, 71 Wis. 336, 37 N. W. 407); or defendant pleads a right of way generally, although the recovery is for acts done outside the way (Heath v. Barmour, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1).

If plaintiff recovers on the plea of title he gets full costs, although title was not contested at the trial (Carpenter v. Britton, 61 N. H. 430), or defendant suffered a default (Locklin v. Casler, 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 43), or recovered on other issues (Tuthill v. Clark, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 642).

If plaintiff does not recover on the issue of title he is not entitled to full costs, if the damages recovered are less than a certain sum fixed by the statute, and so is not entitled to recover where the action is changed so as to become a new action in the upper court as where plaintiff new assigns there and defendant pleads not guilty (People v. Rensselaer C. Pl., 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 647. Contra, Van Pelt v. Phillips, 24 N. J. L. 560); or plaintiff enlarges his ad damnum (Chambers v. Wambough, 28 N. J. L. 530). So plaintiff is not entitled to full costs if he recovers on an issue other than that in which title was pleaded as where title is pleaded as to part and the recovery is on other parts. Morss v. Salisbury, 48 N. Y. 636; Shull v. Green, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 311; Morss v. Jacobs, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 90.

Exclusive possession where there is some evidence of mixed possession and no valid title is shown in the other party is a question for the jury. Hale v. Monroe, 28 Md. 98. Possession in defendant's grantor (Smith v. Morrow, 14 N. Brunsw. 200); or character of occupancy where the terms of the contract do not distinctly appear (Robertson v. George, 7 N. Necessity of cutting trees to build a line fence is for the jury. Newberry v. Bunda, 137 Mich. 69, 100 N. W. 277.

Title where the evidence is conflicting is for the jury (Grove v. McAlevy, 5 Pa. Cas. 124, 8 Atl. 210); but they must be properly instructed as to what constitutes title (Boreing v. Hurst, 45 S. W. 522, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 184).

Nonsuit or direction of verdict.— Plaintiff may be nonsuited if he fails to make out a case (Downing v. Howlett, 6 Colo. App. 291, 40 Pac. 505); or the court may direct a verdict for defendant (Crookshank v. Kellogg, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 256). Where plaintiff gives uncontradicted evidence of possession a verdict may be directed for him if his possession is the issue. Des Barres v. Beil, 20 Nova Scotia 482. Where plaintiff shows thirty years adverse possession a verdict may be directed for him if his title is the issue. Argotsinger v. Vines, 82 N. Y. 308. Where trespass to land is admitted but it is denied that it was done wrongfully, plaintiff is entitled to a peremptory instruction for damages (Johns v. Cumberland Tel., etc., Co., 80 S. W. 165, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2074); and where there is no evidence to support a justification it is error to refuse to instruct the jury submitted to the jury.[81] So where there is no evidence to support a particular issue, it need not be submitted to the jury.[82] The jury may reconcile conflicting testimony on the theory of a mistake.[83] Questions of law are for the court and it is erroneous to submit them to the jury.[84]

(III) INSTRUCTIONS. The rules relating to instructions in actions generally, considered in another part of this work,[85] apply in actions of trespass. The charge of course should correctly state the law,[86] and a requested instruction misstating the law is properly refused.[87] Instructions given should be accurate [88] and not misleading [89] or contradictory.[90] So instructions should not be given which are not applicable to the issues made by the pleadings [91] or evidence;[92] which ignore in plaintiff's favor (Barrett v. Mobile, 129 Ala. 179, 30 So. 36, 87 Am. St. Rep. 54).

82. See cases cited infra, this note.

Applications of rule.— Thus where there is no evidence to warrant punitive damages it is not error to charge that as to this the jury must find for defendant (Carter v. Fulgham, 134 Ala. 238, 32 So. 684); or to nonsuit plaintiff on that point and leave only the question of actual damages to the jury (Baldwin v. Postal Tel. Co., 78 S. C. 419, 59 S. E. 67).

84. Gusdorff v. Duncan, 94 Md. 160, 50 Atl. 574.

Whether a writ was duly executed.—An instruction leaving it to the jury to find whether a writ was duly executed, without informing them what would constitute such execution, is bad. Gusdorff v. Duncan, 94 Md. 160, 50 Atl. 574.

Whether defendant was unlawfully on the premises.—An instruction leaving to the jury the question of whether defendant was unlawfully on premises without instructions as to what facts in evidence would, if believed, make it unlawful, is bad. Gusdorff v. Duncan, 94 Md. 160, 50 Atl. 574.

Title.— Where defendant claims title and that plaintiff is a trespasser, if the court has defined what is necessary for plaintiff to show to prove title it must define also what defendant must show where it charges that defendant can recover if he has title. Illustration.— Where defendant is not in possession under the widow of the late owner of a dwelling-house, a charge as to her right to possession is misleading. Harnit v. Thompson, 46 Ill. 460.

Refusal of requested instructions which are misleading is proper. Wilmer Lumber Co. v. Eisely, 163 Ala. 290, 50 So. 225; Bufford v. Little, 159 Ala. 300, 48 So. 697.

W. 103; Howie v. California Co., 35 Mont. 264, 88 Pac. 1007 (questions of license not involved or negligence not raised by the pleadings).

Thus an instruction founded on negligence is erroneous when the action is not for negligence but trespass. Emmons v. Quade, 176 Mo. 22, 75 S. W. 103.

New York.— Ogden v. Jennings, 62 N. evidence,[93] issues,[94] pleas,[95] or defenses;[96] which give undue prominence to parts of the evidence,[97] which assume the existence of facts in controversy;[98] as to which no evidence has been offered,[99] which assume that pleadings contain an admission when such is not the case;[1] that there is a conflict in the evidence when there is none;[2] which disparage testimony which has been permitted to go to the jury[3] or which misstate the degree of proof required.[4] It is very generally held to be the duty of the court to give requested instructions correct in point of law and applicable to the case[5] unless such instructions are covered by Vermont.— Clark v. Boardman, 42 Vt. 667, holding that possession of defendant's grantors in possession under claim of right gives him title when there is no evidence of any such claim by them.

Instruction bad as ignoring evidence.— Mere instruction that defendant's prior possession will defeat plaintiff's recovery is improper where there is evidence of possession in plaintiff prior to defendant's prior possession, as it ignores such evidence. Applications of rule.— Charge that plaintiff "is entitled to recover . . . all damages proved to have been sustained by him on account of the trespass committed by the defendant . . . as alleged in the declaration" assumes that defendant committed the trespass and is had. Small v. Brainard, 44 Ill. 355. In trespass to land where it appeared that defendant had moved on a section of plaintiff's pasture which plaintiff has a lease of, an instruction that defendant is not liable if he had no more stock in his close than allowed by law is bad, as assuming that defendant owned the section, although there was also testimony that he had leased another section in the pasture. Wisconsin.— Whitney v. Brunette, 3 Wis. 621, holding that refusal to charge that a prior sale by the owner of personalty would defeat plaintiff's right to recover based on possession under a subsequent attachment against the vendor is error as the jury would infer valid transfer from "sold."

other instructions given;[6] but the mere omission to charge as to some phase of the case, in the absence of a request therefor, is not assignable as error.[7] If a charge states a general proposition of law correctly a party who wishes it made more specific must request it.[8] In giving instructions, technical or legal terms may be used if properly defined.[9] The court may instruct the jury to find for plaintiff if they find certain facts to be true, said facts being all the facts involved in the issue.[10] If such is the case the court may charge that there was evidence tending to show certain facts,[11] and may point out the evidence;[12] and where the trespass is admitted may properly define the elements of the damages more fully than was done in the complaint.[13] An instruction which is correct on the whole is not bad because certain statements are objectionable if controlled and explained by other statements,[14] and if it is erroneous and a party requests it be corrected by giving certain instructions a statement to the jury that that was what was meant by the charge is sufficient.[15] Where a charge is more favorable to a party than he is entitled to he cannot complain of it, although erroneous;[16] nor of an erroneous statement of law on an immaterial point where a correct statement would have been of no benefit to the party;[17] nor of other errors of law which do not prejudicially affect him.[18]

6. Merwin v. Morris, 71 Conn. 555, 42 Atl. 855 (holding that where the court has charged that if plaintiff grantor was disseized at the time of making a deed, it is void, defendant cannot complain of a refusal to charge that to entitle plaintiff to recover he must show that he retook actual possession); Jenks v. Lansing Lumber Co., 97 Iowa 342, 66 N. Illustrations.— Where the damages are properly restricted to those covered by the evidence the omission to specifically charge that an element of damages averred, as to which no proof was offered, could not be recovered is not error where it was not requested. Henson v. Taylor, 108 Ga. 567, 33 S. E. 911. Where it is charged that the declaration and the plea form the issue, in the absence of a request, the court need not charge that the trespasses involved were those committed before the action was brought. (iv) VERDICT AND FINDINGS. As is the case with verdicts in other actions,[19] the verdict in actions of trespass is sufficient, although informal, if the meaning is clear,[20] and may be amended in such case by the court.[21] The verdict need not find specifically the damages to each article in an action for injury to personalty,[22] but is bad if uncertain [23] or inconsistent,[24] or not decisive of the case,[25] or if it fails to cover all the issues,[26] or includes damages which plaintiff is not entitled to recover.[27] A finding on the controlling issue alone is sufficient.[28] Surplusage in a verdict may be disregarded.[29] In an action for trespass, where numerous acts of trespass were charged in the complaint, and a general verdict was rendered for plaintiff, it was error to direct a verdict for defendant notwithstanding the general verdict, although special findings as to certain trespasses apparently conflicted with the general verdict.[30]

l. New Trial. A new trial will not be granted unless error was committed at the first trial,[31] which must be made to appear affirmatively;[32] but if it appears to define "unlawful" cutting as used in the charge is not prejudicial to defendant.

19. See TRIAL.

23. Cheswell v. Chapman, 42 N. H. 47 (holding that a general verdict on a traverse of a plea of a way and a new assignment of acts extra viam is bad); Holman v. Kingsbury, 4 N. 24. Turner v. Beatty, 24 N. J. L. 644, holding that where defendant pleaded not guilty and also a justification, a verdict of guilty on the first and not guilty on the second is bad. But a general verdict of not guilty has been held good in such a case. Cooper v. Morris, 48 N. J. L. 607, 7 Atl. 427.

25. Stiles v. Estabrook, 66 Vt. 535, 29 Atl. 961, holding that where both parties claimed a division fence had stood on the line but differed as to the location a finding that plaintiff has acquired title to the disputed land by adverse possession is not decisive of the case.

26. Hanly v. Levin, 5 Ohio 227.

27. Price v. Greer, 76 Ark. 426, 88 S. W. 985, holding that in trespass for cutting trees on several tracts of land, some of which were not shown to be plaintiff's and the amount cut from each tract not being shown, a verdict for the gross value of all the timber cut is bad.

28. Buntin v. Duchane, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 56; Curl v. Lowell, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 25 (holding that a verdict for defendant on a plea in bar entitles him to a verdict on the general issue also); McNeil v. Train, 5 U. C. Q. B. 91.

Where the best evidence in plaintiff's possession was given when more convincing evidence might have been obtained the verdict will not be set aside for failure to obtain it. Crozer v. New Chester Water Co., 148 Pa. St. 130, 23 Atl. 1123.

Verdict for greater damages than the court directed is not ground for a new trial. Lough v. Coleman, 29 U. C. Q. B. 367.

32. See cases cited infra, this note.

Thus it must appear that the law was erroneously given to the jury (Tappan v. Burnham, 8 Allen (Mass.) 65), that the finding that errors were committed a new trial will be granted,[33] unless they were not prejudicial to the party asking the new trial,[34] or were too insignificant to affect the result.[35] A verdict clearly against the evidence will be set aside,[36] and where a verdict is set aside by the trial court on the ground that there is no evidence to support it a new trial will be granted if there was such evidence.[37] Where the evidence is conflicting a verdict approved by the trial court will not be set aside,[38] nor where there is any evidence to support the verdict.[39]

m. Judgment.[40] Defendant is entitled to judgment if he obtains a verdict on one of several justifications pleaded,[41] or if on several pleas he obtains a general verdict in his favor.[42] So on a special verdict that plaintiff owned the land but defendant did not trespass on it defendant is entitled to judgment.[43] Plaintiff is in general entitled to a judgment for nominal damages if he establishes a trespass.[44] Recitals in a judgment should contain only what is involved in the jury's finding.[45] Where the contrary does not appear in the record matter essential to the validity of a judgment will be presumed.[46]

n. Appeal and Error. Formal objections cannot be first made on appeal.[47] It is prejudicial error if the court fails to follow a statute relating to costs,[48] or was contrary to law (Shreves v. Liveson, 2 N. J. L. 247), or that instructions given were inapplicable to the evidence (Duncan v. Stalcup, 18 N. C. 440).

33. See cases cited infra, this note.

Illustrations.—Where in trespass to distinct parcels of land defendant proves title to one a new trial will be granted where a verdict is given for plaintiff generally without apportioning damages (White v. Smith, 9 N. C.) 332; Fowler v. Stonum, 6 Tex. 60); or where actual damages are largely in excess of the verdict (Coffman v. Burkhalter, 98 Ill. admits testimony as to trespass committed after filing the declaration, although there is no distinct proof of it;[49] but it is harmless error to admit improper evidence if it had no effect on the verdict,[50] or to exclude evidence which if admitted could not have altered the result,[51] or where the issue included the general question as to whom the land belonged, not to submit the issue as to another's title at the same time plaintiff's was submitted.[52] Instructions will be presumed correct unless the contrary is shown.[53]

2. Joint Liability in Defendants — a. Definition. "Persons who unite in the commission of a trespass" are joint trespassers.[67] Joint trespass is a term applied to "two or more persons who unite in committing a trespass."[68]

b. The Act. The act is a joint trespass where done by two or more persons acting in concert and coöperation,[69] although they did not personally participate in the specific act causing the damage,[70] or although all their acts were done separately, if done with a common purpose.[71] Any one who aids, abets, assists, or advises a trespasser in committing a trespass is equally liable with the one who does the act complained of.[72] It is essential, however, that there be some coöperation and concert of action between them,[73] and to render liable as joint fense. A recovery would be a bar to any subsequent action by any of the plaintiffs for the same cause. The defendant is in no way inconvenienced in making its defense, and it is to its benefit that it may adjudicate in one suit its liability to all who have an interest in the freehold. The difficulty of apportioning the damages, in case of a recovery, between the life-tenant and the remaindermen, in no wise concerns the defendant; for it will be protected in any event by the judgment"); McIntire v. Westmoreland Coal Co., 118 Pa. What is not aiding and abetting.— Since, in an action against defendant for trespass upon plaintiff's land by one to whom defendant sold timber on his own land, defendant could offer evidence as to the location of the line between his and plaintiff's line on the question of whether the purchaser trespassed upon plaintiff's land, he did not by offering such evidence aid or abet the purchaser in committing the trespass. Thus it is not enough that defendants were present and together at the time the trespass was committed (Eddy v. Howard, 23 Iowa 175); and several owners of animals trespassing together are not liable jointly (Cogswell v. Murphy, 46 Iowa 44); and where a master is liable for his servant's acts he is not liable as a joint trespasser if the servant acted jointly with others, but was not authorized to (Guttner v. Pacific Steam Whaling Co., 96 Fed. 617). The buyer of timber, who goes over the line on adjoining land and cuts timber thereon, is alone responsible trespassers those who did not actively participate in the commission of the trespass, it must appear that they did something by way of encouragement, advice, or suggestion which led or helped to lead to the commission of the trespass.[74] Persons ordering an act are jointly liable with those who do it.[75] Principals are jointly liable with their agents,[76] and partners with their copartners.[77] When they direct the commission of the act, and where the act is done by one for the benefit of another and afterward ratified by him they are joint trespassers.[78] But there is no joint trespass where defendant's independent acts contributed to the result,[79] or where they coöperated to do a lawful act and in doing it some of them committed a trespass.[80]

c. Defenses. A license is a good defense.[81] And a release to one of the joint tort-feasors discharges all,[82] as does a satisfaction by one tort-feasor,[83] and partial payment by one operates for the benefit of all.[84] The general rule is that a several judgment against one joint trespasser does not bar an action against the others,[85] but there must be satisfaction of judgment against one in order to bar action against another.[86] Satisfaction of one judgment satisfies all, although they are for different amounts,[87] and partial satisfaction precludes any recovery of more than the balance due on the judgment so partially satisfied.[88] It has been held, however, that a judgment in favor of one who did the act bars an action against one who was alleged merely to have incited the other to it,[89] and a previous partial therefor, and the seller is not liable, where it does not appear that he was responsible for the buyer mistaking the boundary, or authorized the cutting (Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Co. v. McComb, 92 Ark. 297, 122 S. W. 648).

recovery against one is a defense pro tanto in an action where he is a joint defendant.[90] Payment to one cotenant is not a bar to an action by another cotenant previously begun.[91]

d. Extent of Liability — (I) In General. A verdict against all defendants jointly cannot be sustained unless all are shown to have been implicated in the trespass,[92] nor against all for all the trespasses where several are alleged, unless they all took part in each trespass.[93] But if all participated in all the acts alleged there can be a joint recovery against all.[94] Where one or some only of several joint defendants are proved guilty plaintiff can recover against them alone, the others being acquitted,[95] and may waive the trespass shown against some only and prove one either against all the other defendants,[96] or only some of them.[97] Plaintiff, however, cannot waive a joint trespass proved against all defendants and show one against part only.[98] Nor where plaintiff has produced evidence of a trespass committed by part of the defendants can he prove an additional trespass by all, even against those who are proved to have committed the first trespass proved,[99] or by part, some not being implicated in the first trespass proved,[1] except where there are several counts in the complaint.[2] A trespasser is not entitled to contribution from a co-trespasser if he pays the whole judgment.[3] defendants jointly,[5] and cannot be apportioned among them,[6] except where otherwise provided by statute.[7] In general, the damages are to be estimated according to the injury inflicted by the most culpable defendant.[8] This rule does not apply, however, where exemplary damages are sought.[9] It is said that if plaintiff seeks aggravated damages he ought to select the party against whom he desires to get such damages.[10]

e. The Action — (i) VENUE. Under some statutes the action may be brought in the county of the residence of either defendant,[11] but if it appears that the trespass was not joint, there can be no recovery against a non-resident, although it appears he was separately liable.[12]

(ii) PLEADING. Joint trespassers may be sued either jointly or severally.[13] Plaintiff need not set out his evidence in the complaint.[14] Where defendants justify jointly they must set forth a defense good for all defendants,[15] and a joint justification by all in rejoinder to a replication to an affirmative plea by part only is bad;[16] but a joint plea of "not guilty" amounts to a separate denial by each defendant.[17] As in other actions, to sustain the defense, the proof must conform to the pleading.[18]

(III) EVIDENCE. Statements by defendant subsequent to the commission of the trespass are admissible to show that he was a joint trespasser.[19]

(IV) TRIAL — (A) In General. Joint defendants in trespass are not entitled as of course to separate trials,[20] and the court may in its discretion refuse them.[21] Where part of defendants plead the general issue, it is proper to try the issue as to them.[22]

(B) Questions For the Jury.[23] Whether the act complained of was committed by defendants jointly is a question of fact for the jury.[24]

(V) VERDICT. A general verdict for plaintiff is equivalent to a finding that all of the defendants are guilty,[25] and is bad if the evidence does not implicate one of the defendants.[26] A verdict against some of the defendants is good, although it does not name the others.[27] Where a verdict is against one joint defendant on evidence applying to both, a verdict cannot be entered against the other.[28] Proof of a joint trespass on one count entitles plaintiff to a verdict, although he fails to prove one alleged in another count.[29] Directing a verdict where there is no evidence against a defendant is within the judge's discretion.[30]

(VI) COSTS. Where plaintiff recovers in separate actions against co-trespassers, he is entitled to costs in each action;[31] but where plaintiff recovers in an action against one joint trespasser while an action against another is pending, and, on plea of payment, dismisses said pending action, defendant therein is entitled to costs.[32]

(VII) NEW TRIAL. Where the verdict is erroneous as to one co-defendant only, he should make a separate motion for new trial.[33]

(VIII) JUDGMENT. In trespass against several, jointly separate judgments are erroneous,[34] except where otherwise provided by statute,[35] and a judgment cannot be given in favor of one if the jury find against the others but make no finding as to him.[36] It is not necessary that all be found guilty, but verdict and judgment may be given against one or more or all, in accordance with the facts.[37]

C. Statutory Actions For Penalties and Multiple Damages — 1. Provisions of the Statutes. Statutes in many states give a special remedy for cutting trees or other things growing on land by allowing the recovery of treble damages[41] or a penalty.[42] Other statutes allow the recovery of treble damages for a forcible disseizin,[43] for malicious injury to personalty,[44] or give a penalty for entry on realty without the owner's consent.[45] These statutes, it has been said, are to be strictly construed.[46]

2. The Right Invaded. Title alone, without actual possession, is sufficient to enable an owner of land to recover treble damages for cutting and removing trees or other products of the land,[47] or to recover a penalty for such cutting and removal given by statute;[48] and according to some decisions the owner of the title need not have either actual or constructive possession, but may bring the action against one in adverse possession,[49] although the weight of authority is that the statutes do not change, the common-law rule requiring either actual or constructive possession.[50] According to some decisions the statutes are regarded as not creating

What is an inclosure.— Under a statute giving a penalty for wilful entry on inclosed lands to shoot, etc., inclosure means more than an imaginary boundary line. It must be surrounded by visible objects, natural or artificial, and an imaginary boundary line is not sufficient. So it is more than a joint inclosure with adjoining lands, although plaintiff has the exclusive shooting rights over such other land. Payne v. Gould, 74 Vt. 208, 52 Atl. 421.

a new cause of action, but merely as affecting the measure of damages for a common-law action of trespass.[51] Under this view if a right would be sufficient to support an action of trespass at common law, it would be sufficient under the statute; but if not sufficient at common law it would not be sufficient under the statute.[52] While it has been held that possession under color of title and claim of ownership is sufficient to maintain the action,[53] in most jurisdictions the cause of action is only available to the owner of the fee.[54] Bare possession in plaintiff without title is not enough;[55] nor possession under contract for purchase, in an action against the vendor;[56] and so where title to the locus is in defendant, plaintiff cannot recover.[57] One from whom the land was obtained by fraud is not liable in this form of action, unless plaintiff was a purchaser for value without notice of the fraud.[58] While absence of proof of title cannot be supplied by mere proof of possession,[59] actual possession under claim of right and color of title is a sufficient prima facie showing of ownership to throw upon the party contesting the title the burden of rebutting the presumption so raised.[60] No higher evidence of freehold is necessary than in trespass at common law.[61] Defendant is not allowed to show title in a third person with whom he does not connect himself.[62] In any case it is of course clear that if plaintiff has neither title nor possession he cannot recover.[63]

3. The Intent. To authorize a recovery, the violation of the statute must be wilful [64] or accompanied by inexcusable negligence or carelessness;[65] but malice or evil intent is unnecessary.[66] It has been held, however, that where the liability is stated broadly in the statute and certain exceptions made, no others are a defense.[67] The act is wilful, although defendant did not know that the land belonged to the one who was in fact the owner, but thought he was trespassing on lands of another than such owner,[68] as it is enough that defendant knew he had no right to cut.[69] But where defendant acted in good faith the element of wilfulness is lacking.[70] The rule applies both where the statute expressly excepts liability in such cases [71] and where it does not.[72] In such a case, belief in good faith that defendant was legally entitled to commit the acts complained of is essential.[73] In some jurisdictions the bona fide belief of a right to do the act is sufficient defense if the belief was reasonable,[74] even though the act was forbidden by plaintiff.[75] There can be no recovery under the statutes where the trespass was casual or involuntary.[76]

4. Persons Liable. One who causes the trespass to be committed is liable.[77] An employer is liable for the act of his servants acting within the scope of his authority,[78] but not for acts committed by them without his authority, express or implied.[79] Nor is a partner liable for the acts of his copartner which he did not know of or assent to.[80] A purchaser for value in good faith is not liable,[81]

nor is a mere purchaser who took no part in the trespass, although he took with notice.[82]

5. Defenses. Consent or license of the owner is a good defense,[83] but must authorize the act done,[84] and defendant is not liable if he is within the exceptions contained in the statute,[85] or had authority under a statute for the act.[86] Possession under contract for purchase is no defense.[87] Nor is it a defense that the act benefited the land,[88] or was done to protect defendant's adjoining land.[89] Payment to one tenant in common does not discharge liability to another.[90] remedy to be pursued, the common-law principle applies that when a statute gives a penalty and provides no remedy, an action of debt is the appropriate remedy because the sum demanded is certain and fixed.[2]

(II) COMPLAINT. The declaration or complaint must show that the action was brought under the provisions of the statute relied on,[3] so that defendant may shape his defense accordingly.[4] It must allege all the facts which the statute makes necessary to constitute a cause of action,[5] as that plaintiff was the owner,[6] that the act was done wilfully,[7] the place of its commission,[8] that plaintiff did not consent to the acts complained of,[9] and that defendant had no interest in the thing taken;[10] but for this purpose it is ordinarily held sufficient to describe the cause of action in the language of the statute.[11] There is a conflict of authority as to whether it is necessary to specify the statute on which the action is based. According to some decisions no reference to the statute is necessary provided the facts stated constitute a cause of action within its provisions.[12] Other decisions, however, take the contrary view.[13] If it clearly appears that the action was

What reference sufficient.—According to some decisions it will be sufficient for this purpose that the declaration conclude with an averment that the trespass was contrary to the statute for such cases made and provided, the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action within the statute being alleged. Black v. Mace, 66 Me. 49; Dunbar Furnace Co. v. Fairchild, 121 Pa. St. 563, 15 Atl. 656; Hughes v. Stevens, 36 Pa. St. 320. This, however, would be insufficient in Vermont. Montgomery v. Edwards, 45 Vt. 75. But it has been held in that state that a count in trespass for cutting down and carrying away a tree from plaintiff's land, which commences like a count in trespass quare clausum fregit, but concludes with an allegation that the trespass is "contrary to the statute in such case made and provided, based on the statute it is not necessary that the complaint should allege that the act was done contrary to the form of the statute.[14] An allegation of the exact time of cutting is not necessary,[15] nor a description and statement of the timber cut on each tract.[16] But the declaration should set out and distinguish the different classes to which the trees belonged where there are different penalties annexed to the felling of different trees.[17] It is not necessary to negative mere exceptions in the statute,[18] unless under the wording of the statute they form part of plaintiff's cause of action.[19] Nor is plaintiff required specifically to allege that he is entitled to treble damages for the acts complained of.[20]

(III) ANSWER. It is not necessary to affirmatively plead that the act of which complaint was made was a casual or involuntary act.[21] This may be shown under a general denial;[22] nor is it necessary to plead that defendant had probable cause to believe that the land trespassed on was his own.[23] But where defendant relies on an implied license to do the acts complained of he should specially plead the facts relied on to create such implied license.[24] If the answer admits the trespass and denies only that it was knowingly and wilfully committed, the admission is sufficient to show that the act complained of was wrongful and unlawful.[25]

(IV) VARIANCE. The proofs must conform to the pleadings, and if the complaint alleges a malicious destruction of property it is not supported by evidence of a taking.[26]

d. Evidence — (I) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF. The burden of proof is on plaintiff to prove the elements of the trespass, including his title,[27] the wilfulness of the act,[28] and that it was without his consent.[29] The burden of proof of matters of justification is on defendant,[30] such as a right of way,[31] or a whereby the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the defendant treble the aforesaid value of said tree, &c.," will be construed to be a count for the penalty prescribed by the statute (Comp. St. § 32, p. 550), and not a count in trespass at common law. Keyes v. Prescott, 32 Vt. 86.

right of a third person under whom he acted.[32] It has been held that the burden is on defendant to show that the act was done by mistake,[33] or that defendant had exercised reasonable care;[34] and where the statute provides that where certain facts appear the liability shall be limited or defeated, the burden of showing them is on defendant, as probable cause,[35] that the act was done casually or involuntarily,[36] or under bona fide claim of right.[37] Where defendant lost his title by fraud, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that he is a bona fide purchaser.[38]

(II) ADMISSIBILITY. Title may be shown by parol evidence, if not objected to.[39] On the question of possession and abandonment of a right of way by a railroad, the fact that there was a continuous road-bed embracing the locus is admissible.[40] To show consent, knowledge by plaintiff of the act complained of is admissible,[41] and so is his failure to object.[42] To show value, the price in an adjoining town may be given,[43] and the value of stumpage on the land,[44] but not the use made of a tree which is not shown to be the one cut.[45] Value of standing trees may be shown by their market value, as lumber, at the mill where it was sawed, less the cost of the intermediate steps.[46] Accompanying acts are admissible to show the character of the trespass,[47] and to show probable cause to believe the land his own, a bona fide claim of right is admissible,[48] or a license from a supposed agent to show good faith,[49] and to rebut good faith evidence of fraud is admissible.[50] Evidence of a previous controversy as to cutting of trees on other lands is properly excluded as irrelevant,[51] as is also evidence of a license to cut other trees.[52] A recital of payment of value in a deed from a third person is not evidence of its payment as against the true owner of the land.[53] Evidence of title to realty is irrelevant in an action for double damages for malicious injury to personalty thereon, and therefore inadmissible.[54] A notice forbidding the trespass is admissible where given by the real party in interest.[55] The act may be proved before connecting defendant with it where plaintiff undertakes to make such proof thereafter.[56]

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. The proof need not be beyond a reasonable doubt.[57] Possession under color and claim of title is sufficient prima facie evidence of title,[58] which is not rebutted by proof of title in another forty years before,[59] and putting in evidence a deed to defendant of all certain land except a portion belonging to plaintiff admits plaintiff's title.[60] But a mere deed without evidence of possession in either grantor or grantee is not sufficient proof of plaintiff's title,[61] although the claim of title runs back to the state.[62] Wilfulness is sufficiently proved by showing defendant went out of his way to do the act which was of no benefit to him;[63] and under statutes placing the burden of proof of mistake or bona fide claim of right on defendant, the act alone is sufficient prima facie proof of the cause of action.[64] Admissions by a partner in a matter pertinent to the business are sufficient evidence against the other members of the firm.[65] A prohibition in a lease is prima facie evidence of non-consent.[66]

e. Damages — (I) WHAT IS TO BE MULTIPLIED. Where the statute gives treble the damage done, the damage to the land is trebled, not merely the value of timber or other thing taken,[67] and the value of the land with and without the trees is a proper test;[68] but damages for trespasses other than the injury to the land,[69] purely consequential damages,[70] or indirect injury cannot be trebled.[71] Where the statute gives treble the value of the thing severed such value only can be trebled,[72] and the market value of the thing severed is the measure of damages to be multiplied.[73] Interest will not be allowed on the treble damages,[74] nor can interest on the single damages be trebled.[75] In trespass for cutting trees the statutory penalty is not the measure of damages where defendant pleaded title in a prior action by plaintiff for the penalty.[78]

(II) How the Multiplication Is to Be Made. The usual practice is for the jury to find single damages and for the court to treble them,[77] and the court must do so [78] in the absence of an affirmative finding of the excuse given by the statute, although it appears in the evidence.[79] The upper court will treble the damages on appeal if the trial court does not.[80] But in Missouri the doctrine is held that the jury can only find the fact of trespass and the court determines whether the evidence warrants the increased damages; [81] and in Kansas it is held that the treble damages must be assessed by the jury; [82] and the courts of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania hold that either method is proper.[83] Nevertheless, the court can only treble the damages where it clearly appears that the court gave only single damages.[84]

(III) Recovery of Actual Damages. Single damages can be recovered where such are shown, but plaintiff does not bring himself within the terms of the statute allowing a penalty or enhanced damages.[85]

f. Trial — (I) Instructions. The rules applicable to instructions generally [86] apply in actions of the character under consideration. Thus instructions which have a tendency to mislead the jury are erroneous,[87] and when requested are properly refused.[88] An instruction is properly refused if there are no facts in evidence to which it relates.[89] A party cannot complain of an instruction which on the undisputed facts does not prejudice him.[90]

(II) QUESTIONS FOR THE JURY. Questions of fact are for the jury,[91] and it is for the jury to determine whether the trespass was of a nature to warrant enhanced damages,[92] or whether the trespass was wilful or careless, so as to subject defendant to a penalty;[93] and in case of a default the jury must determine the amount of the damages.[94] Where the testimony is conflicting, the case will not be taken from the jury.[95]

(III) VERDICT. A general verdict of guilty authorizes a judgment for the multiple damages given by the statute,[96] except where it does not necessarily apply solely to the issue under the statute,[97] and in jurisdictions where the jury has the right to multiply the damages a general verdict is held to include them[98] unless the record shows affirmatively that single damages only were given.[99]

g. The Judgment. In an action for a penalty, the judgment must be for some multiple of it.[1]

h. Costs. The general statute as to costs applies if there is no special provision in the statute under which the action is brought.[2] In general, it is held that as damages are given only to the owner, the action relates to realty, and plaintiff is entitled to costs regardless of the amount of the recovery;[3] but there are cases holding that plaintiff must pay costs if the recovery is less than a certain sum;[4] but in such case the damages as multiplied, not the single damages, are a right to maintain the action if in possession where it appears that defendant is in possession.

Where the general verdict included trees cut both before and after the revocation of a license to cut, damages cannot be multiplied (Smith v. Morse, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 318, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 126); nor where the statute allows general damages to be trebled but the declaration included a claim for conversion of personalty (Yeamans v. Nichols, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 500).

the test.[5] Where, in pursuance of a statute, a judgment for treble damages is rendered upon a verdict ascertaining the actual damages sustained, no costs will be taxed against the successful party on account of a tender made by the other, if the tender was less than the amount of the judgment. It is not sufficient that it was as great as the verdict.[6]

i. Appeal and Error. When the pleadings do not appear from the record it will be presumed that the general issue was pleaded.[7] A party cannot complain of errors in his own favor.[8] Where the trial court has trebled the damages erroneously, judgment will be entered on appeal for the damages given by the jury,[9] and so also where the record does not disclose a case for trebling.[10]

II. CRIMINAL TRESPASS.[11]

A. At Common Law — 1. In General. No trespass to property is a crime at common law unless it is accompanied by or tends to create a breach of the peace.[12] This is so, although the act be committed forcibly,[13] wilfully,[14] or maliciously.[15] Something more must be done than what amounts to a mere civil trespass, expressed by the terms vi et armis. The peace must be actually broken or the act complained of must directly and manifestly tend to it, as being done in the presence of the owner, to his terror or against his will.[16]

2. To Personalty. Forcible trespass to personalty differs from robbery in that it lacks an animus furandi.[17] The taking of personalty from the direct possession of the owner by actual force is a forcible trespass,[18] and there is no liability in the absence of actual force,[19] except where there is a display of force which intimidates the person in possession,[20] or is calculated to alarm or intimidate,[21] or tends to a breach of the peace.[22] The taking must be from the actual presence of the prosecutor,[23] but need not be expressly forbidden by him.[24]

3. To Realty. Questions relating to criminal liability for trespasses to realty are considered elsewhere in this work.[25]

B. Under Statutes — 1. In General. By statutes in various jurisdictions many civil trespasses have been made criminal.[26] These statutes are not intended to redress private wrongs or determine title to property.[27] The purpose is to protect the actual possession of real estate against unlawful and forcible invasion and to remove occasion for acts of violence and breach of the peace.[28] The term "trespass" as used in these statutes is not in general used in its broadest sense.[29]

2. Elements of the Offense — a. The Act — (i) In General. The act must involve a common-law trespass.[30] It is not the purpose of the statutes to make that a criminal trespass which would not be a civil trespass.[31]

(ii) Cutting and Removal of Trees. Under statutes making it an offense to cut timber on the land of another, actual cutting is necessary,[32] and the injury must be substantial.[33] The cutting of a number of trees at one time is a single offense,[34] although the trees are not contiguous.[35] Either cutting or carrying away is an offense under some of the statutes,[36] but if the cutting and carrying away are all part of a single transaction the offense is a single one.[37] Where the statute prohibits merely the cutting of timber asportation is not necessary to constitute the offense.[38] A wrongful entry is not necessary to constitute the offense.[39] It has been held that all standing or growing trees are "timber" within statutes prohibiting cutting of "timber" on lands of another,[40] although there is authority for the position that wood suitable for fuel only is not "timber" within the meaning of the statutes.[41] Oak and hickory trees standing on the border of a public highway and on the land of an owner abutting on the highway are "shade trees" within a statute punishing the cutting down of "shade trees."[42]

(iii) Trespass on Inclosed or Cultivated Lands. Under statutes making it an offense to trespass on inclosed or cultivated land there can be no

State v. Malone, 46 Ark. 140. Fla. Rev. St. § 2516, has not been repealed. Long v. State, 42 Fla. 509, 28 So. 775. Pamphl. Laws 352 as to wilful trespass are repealed by Pamphl. Laws 82. conviction for a trespass committed on open or uncultivated land.[43] An inclosure is sufficient, although it incloses fields owned by one other than prosecutor,[44] or is out of repair,[45] or is not a "lawful fence" under the fencing laws;[46] and any barrier sufficient to protect the land from depredation is a sufficient inclosure, whether natural or artificial,[47] except an artificial barrier placed there for a purpose other than that of inclosing.[48] If cultivation is necessary by the terms of the statute the state of cultivation must have existed before the trespass.[49] But it is not necessary that a crop be growing at the time.[50]

(IV) TRESPASS AFTER NOTICE OR WARNING. Unlawful entry after being forbidden is the gravamen of the charge.[51] The word "premises" as used in the statutes prohibiting entry after warning means any real estate, and is not limited to the curtilage of a dwelling-house.[52] The statutes have no application to customary or private ways on land leading to highways from property on which the owner had built tenement houses to which the only access was over such ways.[53] The notice given must be actual notice,[54] and must be perfectly clear and explicit.[55] The notice must be given by the person in possession[56] or his agent[57]

57. Arrington v. State, (Ala. 1910) 52 So. 928.

What agency sufficient.—Where an employee of a landowner was only a rider on the plantation to see that the negroes worked, and there was no proof that he was the landowner's general agent, he had no sufficient contract of management of the land to give warning to an alleged trespasser, so as to establish the offense of trespass after warning. Arrington v. State, (Ala. 1910) 52 So. 928. But a general superintendent of a coal, iron, and railway company has, by virtue of his office, authority to instruct another agent of the company to warn persons not to trespass on the company's premises, in violation of Cr. Code (1896), § 5606, providing that a person who, without legal cause, enters on the premises of another after warning not to do so shall be punished as therein prescribed. Morrison v. State, 155 Ala. 115, 46 So. 646.

A warning given by one as an officer of the law, and not as the owner's agent, will not sustain a conviction of trespass after warning, although he was also an agent of the owner, with authority to warn trespassers. Templin v. State, 159 Ala. 128, 48 So. 1027.

unless the statute provides otherwise.[58] It must be given before the entry,[59] except where the statute, in terms, applies also to a refusal to leave after notice,[60] in which latter case defendant must be unlawfully on the land when it is given.[61] The notice may be oral or written.[62]

b. The Right Invaded. Most of the statutes making trespass an offense are intended to protect possession,[63] and the offense is one against possession.[64] Under these statutes the prosecutor must have actual or constructive possession,[65] but it is not necessary that he have a fee simple title [66] unless the statute so provides.[67] The possession required may be by someone occupying under the prosecutor's direction.[68] Some statutes, however, are designed to protect the owner against injuries to the freehold, and under these statutes it is essential that the prosecutor have title,[69] although possession under these statutes is unnecessary.[70]

58. Bryce v. State, 113 Ga. 705, 39 S. E. 282 (holding that the notice may be given by three classes of persons: the owner, the person entitled to possession for the time being, or the authorized agent); Beggs v. State, 122 Ind. 54, 23 N. E. 693 (owner or occupant or agent); State v. Green, 35 S. C. 266, 14 S. E. 619 (holding that the notice may be given by the equitable owner or tenant at will).

Who is owner or tenant.—Where a tenant leases land for a calendar year, but does not go into actual possession until several days after the first of January, the tenant for the former year is the owner or tenant of the land, under Cr. Code (1902), § 186, providing that every entry after notice from the owner or tenant prohibiting the same, shall be a misdemeanor, and one entering on the land on January 1, after such notice, is guilty of a misdemeanor. State v. Gay, 76 S. C. 83, 56 S. E. 668.

One occupying land under an invalid parol lease is not such a tenant as can give a valid notice under this statute, at least against one entering under the owner in accordance with law, although equity might give him specific performance of his parol agreement for a lease. Unauthorized lease.—A prosecution under Pen. Code, art. 687, making it criminal to enter on land of another, and remove rock, sand, etc., without consent of the owner, cannot be maintained where complainant's only title to the land from which sand is alleged to have been taken is an unauthorized lease from the state. c. The Intent — (i) Where Statute Is Silent as to Intent. In accordance with the general rule that the existence of a criminal intent is an essential element of a statutory offense,[71] the weight of authority is that criminal intent is an essential element of the statutory offense of trespass, even though the statute is silent as to intent, and if the act prohibited is committed in good faith under claim of right, color of title,[72] accidentally,[73] or in ignorance,[74] no conviction will lie, the view taken being that when the statute affixes to a trespass the consequences of a criminal offense, it will not be presumed that the legislature intended to punish criminally acts committed in ignorance, by accident, or under claim of right, and in the bona fide belief that the land is the property of the trespasser, unless the terms of the statute forbid any other construction.[75] It has been frequently held, however, in jurisdictions where this view prevails, that a mere belief in the right to enter is insufficient to exonerate defendant. There must be proof of a claim of title or of facts upon which he could reasonably and bona fide believe he had the right.[76] On the other hand, there are numerous decisions in which the statutes relating to trespass, although silent as to intent, are construed as making the act an offense irrespective of any specific criminal intent. In other words all must take care that the statutory prohibition be observed, and if they fail to do so they act at their peril and render themselves liable to the punishment prescribed by the statutes.[77] The failure to take care that the statutory direction is observed evidences the criminal intent, or rather supplies it.[78] Where this view prevails the fact that defendant acted in good

(II) Where Statutes Require a Specific Intent — (A) In General. Where the statute makes a specific intent an element of the offense, it is of course obvious that there can be no conviction where such intent does not accompany the act;[81] and it has been uniformly so held on prosecutions based on statutes which in describing the offense use in characterizing the act forbidden such words or terms as "knowingly,"[82] "wilfully,"[83] "unlawfully and wilfully,"[84] "knowingly and wilfully,"[85] "maliciously,"[86] "wilfully and maliciously,"[87] or "wilfully or maliciously."[88] In consequence, where the statute on which the prosecution is based contains any of the words or terms enumerated in describing the act prohibited, a conviction will not lie, in case the act was committed by defendant in a bona fide belief that he had the right to do so,[89] or where the act is committed

88. Com. v. Williams, 110 Mass. 401, holding that under a statute providing for the punishment of one who "wilfully or maliciously" injures a building, it is not enough that the injury was wilful and intentional, but it must have been done out of a spirit of cruelty, hostility, or revenge.

89. Connecticut.— State v. Foote, 71 Conn. 737, 43 Atl. 488, holding that wilful injury, within the meaning of Gen. St. § 1423, providing that every person who shall wilfully injure any public building shall be punished, etc., is an injury done wantonly, or with an evil intent, and does not include a slight injury to a building done under an honest although erroneous belief of authority in the performance of a supposed duty.

with the owner's consent.[90] It has been held, however, that the belief in the right to do the act complained of must have a fair and reasonable foundation,[91] and that whether there is or is not is a question for the jury to decide from all the facts and circumstances of the case.[92]

(B) Scope and Meaning of Terms Descriptive of the Act Forbidden — (1) "WILFUL," "WILFULLY." In another treatise in this work it has been said that the term "wilfulness" is "vague in its meaning," [93] and this statement is fully borne out by the divergence of views which an examination of the decisions discloses. But however much the decisions may differ as to the scope and meaning of the words "wilful" or "wilfully," as used in statutes of the character under consideration, it is probable that they all agree on the proposition that it means something more than a voluntary act and also something more than an intentional act which in fact is wrongful.[94] It includes the idea of an "act intentionally done with a

Palmer v. State, 45 Ind. 388 (holding that where one has for a long time been in the habit of using a way across the land of another, and he believes in good faith that he has a right to use it, he will not be guilty of "malicious" trespass for removing a fence placed across such way); Windsor v. State, 13 Ind. 375 (holding that while a person without color of title could not defeat a criminal prosecution, for malicious trespass upon lands, by setting up title in himself; but where he has a paper title apparently valid on its face, and claims in good faith to be owner, and is in possession, by himself or by another occupying by his direction, a prosecution for malicious trespass to the damage of a third person will not lie, although such person, in the end, prove to have the better title).

Minnesota.— Price v. Denison, 95 Minn. 106, 103 N. W. 728, severing growing crops from lands of another in the honest belief of a legal right to do so.

Missouri.— State v. Newkirk, 49 Mo. 84, breaking and severing from building of another, plank partition, platform scales, etc., under mistaken view as to right.

New York.— McMorris v. Howell, 89 N. Y. App. Div. 272, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 1018, holding that a statute making it an offense to "wilfully" sever from the freehold anything attached thereto does not apply to one who, being employed to make repairs in the interior of a building, in order to gain admittance broke the padlock which had been placed on an unoccupied part thereof by one claiming to own the building, as against the employer of the person arrested.

W. 1062 (holding that under a statute providing a punishment for "knowingly" cutting timber on the land of another, to render one guilty of the offense he must knowingly cut timber on land not his own; and a conviction will not be sustained where it appears that the ownership of the land is in extreme doubt, defendant believing it to belong to him); Yarbrough v. State, 28 Tex. App. 481, 13 S. W. 775; Lackey v. State, 14 Tex. App. 164 (carrying away timber from land of another believing that the person from whom he bought the timber was the owner).

Virginia.—Wise v. Com., 98 Va. 837, 36 S. W. 479 (tearing down fence under claim of right believing it to be his own); Dye v. Com., 7 Gratt. 662; Ratcliffe v. Com., 5 Gratt. 657 (removal of fence under bona fide claim of right).

Canada.— Ex p. Donovan, 15 N. Brunsw. 389 (holding that where timber is cut under a bona fide claim of right, wilfulness is negatived); Reg. v. McDonald, 12 Ont. 381 (removal of gate in bona fide belief in right to do so); Reg. v. Davidson, 45 U. C. Q. B. 91.

To what acts statutes apply.— Statutes to punish malicious trespasses are intended to apply to acts of trespass upon the property of another without color of title or claim of right bona fide, and not feigned for the occasion, and not to cases where there is a bona fide claim of right to the property. Evidence insufficient to show bona fide claim.—In a prosecution, under Code, § 1070, for the wilful and unlawful entering upon the lands of another and carrying off wood, defendant, in support of a plea of jurisdiction under a bona fide claim to the land, gave in evidence an entry of public land, reciting that he had entered and located "640 acres of land in Caldwell County, N. C., on the headquarters of Wilson's creek, beginning on a pine . . . and runs southeast 40 poles, thence northeast, and various other courses so as to include 640 acres." No survey was ever made, and no grant made by the state. It was held that the entry was insufficient to support a claim to the land. State v. Calloway, 119 N. C. 864, 26 S. E. 46.

wrongful purpose." [95] The principal conflict in the decisions is on the question whether it includes malice. The sense of the words has been variously described as follows: "Wilfulness" embodies an element of "malice." [96] "Wilfully" means intentionally, malevolently, with a bad purpose, an evil purpose, without ground for believing the act to be lawful,[97] "with an evil intent and without justifiable excuse." [98] "With a bad or evil purpose, as in violation of law, or wantonly and in disregard of the rights of others, or knowingly and of stubborn purpose, or contrary to a known duty, or without authority, and careless whether he have the right or not." [99] On the other hand it has been held that the term "wilfully" does not include malice; it is sufficient that the act was done intentionally and with design;[1] that malice to the person injured is not included in the term.[2] One who commits a trespass on property after being forbidden to do so, and without any bona fide claim thereto or license to enter, commits the trespass "wilfully."[3]

(2) "Maliciously." If the act forbidden is described by the statute as malicious, something more than a mere intentional or wilful trespass must be shown.[4] Malice, it is said, implies a spirit of hostility, cruelty, or revenge;[5] an evil mind in doing the act forbidden,[6] but absolute recklessness and indifference to the consequences of an act dangerous to the person and property of others supplies malice.[7] The malice must ordinarily be directed against the person injured,[8] although this is unnecessary where the act is of a dangerous character and is committed with such recklessness as to be tantamount to malice toward all men,[9] or where the statute expressly provides that under enumerated circumstances it shall not be necessary to show that the offense was committed from malice toward the owner of the property.[10] Malice is not present where the trespass is committed for the sake of gain.[11]

(3) "Wantonly." "Wantonly" may be defined as the reckless disregard of the lawful rights of the person against whose property the trespass has been committed.[12]

3. Against Whom Prosecution May Be Brought. The possession invaded must be the possession of some person other than defendant.[13] He is not liable for acts done while he was himself in actual possession,[14] or when he acted by direction
