return,[44] or which are improperly returned and do not constitute a part of the record cannot be considered.[45] But where the command is vague, if the recitals of the writ express the desire of the court to be informed of the matter returned it may be considered, although not specifically commanded.[46]

d. Validity of Existence of Municipal Boards or Officers. On proceedings to review the action of a municipality or of a public board, unless authorized by statute, the court has no power to inquire into or determine its legal existence.[47] But if so empowered, the authority to appoint the board, its own judicial qualification to act as it did, and the manner in which it exercised its functions are open to inquiry.[48]

e. Title to Land. Questions of title to land which may have arisen in the proceeding cannot be tried on certiorari.[49]

2. Scope of Review — a. As a Rule Confined to Record — (1) In General. Except where otherwise prescribed by statute or authorized by the practice,[51] it is the general rule that in ascertaining whether or not the inferior court or tribunal had jurisdiction, and proceeded regularly in making the determination complained of, the reviewing court is confined to the consideration of the record returned in obedience to the writ, by which the error, if any, must appear.[52]

Proof of change or interlineations.— The court may hear proof that exceptions taken to the decision of the inferior court had been interlined and materially changed after they were signed and certified. Smith v. Joiner, 27 Ga. 65.

(II) ERRORS CONSIDERED[53] — (A) In General. The reviewing court will only consider such errors as are properly assigned and presented with reasonable certainty,[54] or, where so restricted, the alleged errors set forth in the application or petition for the writ.[55] But this rule is inapplicable on a trial de novo in the reviewing court.[56] So, when necessary to the furtherance of justice, the court will notice substantial error, although it was not made the subject of objection or exception,[57] as where it is apparent that the inferior tribunal or officer had no jurisdiction,[58] exceeded its jurisdiction,[59] or that the aggrieved party had no opportunity to object.[60]

(B) Harmless Error. Mere technical irregularities or formal errors not affecting the merits of the case and by which the complaining party was not prejudiced, may be disregarded.[61]

(III) MERITS OF CAUSE.[62] Except where the scope of the review under the common-law writ has been enlarged, the court cannot, on review of a final determination, consider the merits of the controversy,[63] questions on the merits

Evidence of want of authority to make

(B) Return Not Conclusive — (1) IN GENERAL. If the facts and errors are extrinsic and do not appear by the record they may be shown aliunde.[87] Where the writ is allowed ex parte, on the return thereto, such matters, other than those properly inquirable into by the writ, may be shown to the court, as would, if shown in the first instance, have induced the court to refuse the writ.[88] This rule has been changed in many jurisdictions by statutes permitting evidence dehors the record to be read by either party on the hearing.[89]

(2) JURISDICTIONAL FACTS. The want of jurisdiction, when arising from matters not appearing in any way on the proceedings,[90] or the existence of return.— Where no claim is made that a return of a public board signed by its president is unauthorized or forged evidence is not permissible to show that in fact it was not the return of the body. Nehrling v. State, 112 Wis. 637, 88 N. W. 610.

Additional facts which cannot be shown by a further return cannot be presented or considered. People v. Board of Contract, 39 N. Y. App. Div. 30, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 334.

Improper admission of evidence.—An averment in the return that evidence improperly admitted was not considered is not conclusive. Haven v. Essex County, 155 Mass. 467, 29 N. E. 1083.

A suggestion that a question not raised below might have induced the action taken cannot be considered. People v. Zoll, 97 N. Y. 203.

Contradiction by predecessor in office.—A return by the legal custodian of the record cannot be contradicted by his predecessor in office who entertained the proceedings. Matter of Evingson, 2 N. D. 184, 49 N. W. 733, 33 Am. St. Rep. 768.

The deposition of a single judge is insufficient to contradict the recitals of an order made by the whole court. Parsell v. State, 30 N. J. L. 530.

Affidavits taken after the granting of the writ are inadmissible. Milam v. Sproull, 36 Ga. 393.

A mere voluntary statement of facts made between the parties for the purpose of preparation for argument is not conclusive until filed with the clerk. State v. Robinson, 38 N. J. L. 267.

An issue of fact cannot be made up in the revisory court to supply omissions in the record or to control its recitals. Independent Pub. Co. v. American Press Assoc., 102 Ala. 475, 15 So. 947.

After a decision on the merits a certiorari cannot be reinstated to permit the defeated party to take fresh proofs. Garretson v. Barker, 66 N. J. L. 158, 48 Atl. 514.

The jurisdiction cannot be aided by extrinsic evidence if the record can be perfected. Luke v. Schleger, 3 Kulp (Pa.) 505.

Proof dehors the record cannot be taken of course but a motion must be made. Cullen v. Lowery, 2 Harr. (Del.) 459.

Damages.— Where the papers in the action give no intimation of damages evidence of such damages is inadmissible, but otherwise if defendant had appealed and amended his pleadings in the reviewing court. Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617, 11 N. W. 409.

Payment of judgment.— The court will look into evidence as to payment after judgment and before execution. Beyerly v. Hunger, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 354; Merkle v. Schwoyer, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 291.

In Georgia, without cause shown for delay, a traverse of the truth of the return to a certiorari, although filed before the case is reached, is too late if filed after the first term. Hirt v. Linton, 59 Ga. 881.

facts which if apparent would have ousted the jurisdiction, may be shown aliunde.[91]

(3) Evidence to Show Nature of Action. Under some circumstances, as where the jurisdiction is doubtful, the court will hear proof of facts not disclosed by the record, to show the nature of the action, the pleadings, defense, or the like.[92]

(4) Fraud, Partiality, Etc. Evidence dehors the record is permissible to show fraud, partiality, corruption, or extortion.[93]

(5) Support of Application. It has been held that the plaintiff may present affidavits to support the application on which the writ was granted as well as to controvert affidavits interposed by the defendant.[94]

(v) Papers Used on Application. Where by a provision of the statute[95] the court is permitted to consider the papers on which the writ of certiorari was granted, if the return to the writ meets all the allegations of the writ and of such papers and traverses them, the hearing must be confined to the papers stated in the return.[96] But if the return to the writ admits the facts stated in the writ, or the papers on which the writ was granted, or is silent as to them, such facts become important and must be considered on the hearing,[97]

In Tennessee statutes authorize the reviewing court on dismissal to enter final judgment. Weigand v. Malatesta, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 362; Roddy v. Bacon, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 253; Marshall v. Hill, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 101.

In Texas after affirmation of a judgment that defendant had no title to property claimed and dismissal of an appeal from such affirmation the reviewing court should render judgment of dismissal. Barclay v. Cameron, 25 Tex. 232.

In West Virginia when certiorari is used as an appellate proceeding the superior court may affirm the judgment of the inferior court, set aside or annul it and enter up such judgment as the inferior court should have entered, or remand the cause as in a case brought up on error. would be difficult if not impossible to reach the ends of justice without so doing, no final judgment can be rendered, but the cause must be remanded for further proceedings, or a new trial,[32] or it may be remitted for modification or correction,[33] or with directions or instructions to the court below as to further proceedings.[34]

6. RESTITUTION. On annulling the proceedings below, the reviewing court may order restitution to a relator who has suffered by the illegal action.[35]

7. EFFECT OF JUDGMENT. The judgment may be entered against all the parties to the original judgment.[36] An affirmance of the adjudication complained of establishes the rights of the parties as originally found,[37] and the determination stands as of the time when made.[38] On reversal, the whole case falls,[39] as well as incidental proceedings dependent thereon.[40] If the matter is one of general public interest, the reversal inures to the benefit of all persons similarly affected as well as those who sued out the writ.[41] In determining the general liability of a municipality, the court does not adjudicate the sufficiency of the particular claim presented.[42]

New trial.— Under N. C. Laws (1777), c. 1, § 6, and Acts (1779), c. 4, § 1, providing that trial in caveat causes shall be in the county court of the county where the premises are situate, on the reversal of a judgment in such cause by certiorari the new trial must be had in the county court, and not in the reviewing court. 8. Compliance With Judgment. Where a judgment of reversal is at once complied with, the relator cannot complain of a failure to wait until the time for a rehearing had elapsed.[43]

S. Costs[44] — 1. At Common Law. At common law no costs were allowed on certiorari, hence, in the absence of statutory regulation, neither party may recover them.[45]

2. By Statute — a. In General. The allowance of costs in these proceedings is now generally regulated by statutes, which permit their recovery by the prevailing party,[46] but to authorize such a recovery the case must be clearly within the terms of the statute.[47]

People v. O'Brien, 3 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 552, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 63. On final disposition.— Under a provision permitting costs of taking a case to the superior court only where that court makes a final disposition of the case, if a new trial is ordered, only such costs as have accrued in the superior court should be adjudged. Haire v. McCardle, 107 Ga. 775, 33 S. E. 683.
Special proceeding.— S. D. Comp. Laws, § 5189, providing that in special proceedings the clerk shall tax costs in favor of the prevailing party, does not apply to certiorari brought to a court. Kirby v. McCook County Cir. Ct., 10 S. D. 196, 72 N. W. 461.
The reversal of an execution is not within a statute giving a right to costs on reversal

b. On Affirmance. In some of the states costs are allowed on affirmance, but not on reversal.[48] This is said to be because the costs will abide the final result.[49]

c. Discretion. In many of the jurisdictions the allowance of costs is discretionary.[50] In such case they may be refused to a successful party who has unnecessarily sued out the writ instead of pursuing other available remedies,[51] or where the award will entail hardship.[52] Nor will they be awarded against the plaintiff, when a material error is corrected,[53] or against a public board which, in the exercise of judicial functions, made an honest mistake of judgment and was guilty of no corruption or wilful wrong.[54] But in such a case the costs may be awarded against the persons[55] or political subdivision on whose behalf such board acted.[56]

d. Amount. Where no special provision for the amount of costs to be allowed has been made, the sums allowable on a special proceeding should be awarded,[57] or the amount recoverable in an action at issue on a question of law,[58] together with the necessary disbursements in the proceedings.[59] If the amount is required to of proceeding, when by the statute costs are given as a penalty for vexing the opposite party who has the merits with him, by mere matters of form. Atkinson v. Crossland, 4 Watts (Pa.) 450.

be fixed by the court, the clerk cannot tax any costs without an order from the court so to do.[60]

e. Additional Costs. Sometimes, by statute, on dismissal of the writ or affirmance of the judgment below, the court may award interest in addition to costs.[61] But a statute permitting additional costs in specified cases, where a gross sum is taxable as costs, or on certiorari against a public officer, is inapplicable to certiorari generally, although a stated sum is allowed as costs.[62]

f. Application For Costs. Where a judgment of reversal makes no provision as to costs, a special application should be made therefor.[63] An application to the appellate court to tax attorney's fees as costs cannot be considered where no judgment was rendered and the adverse party is not before the court.[64]

g. Security For Costs. Unless required by statute, security for costs need not be given to secure the writ,[65] or on removal of the cause.[66]

T. Appeal and Error[67] — 1. Right of Review — a. In General. A court's determination on certiorari may generally be reviewed by the tribunal, if any, possessing appellate jurisdiction over such court.[68]

b. Amount in Controversy.[69] In some states a review cannot be had unless the amount necessary to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court is involved.[70] In ments cannot be awarded. A chairman of a board, who alone has notice of the petition and who appears and dismisses it, can tax for his travel and attendance only. Ipswich v. Essex County, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 519.

In West Virginia, in cases in which the writ is made a substitute for the writ of error, the supreme court has no jurisdiction, unless the amount in controversy exceeds the jurisdictional amount. other states, however, a review may be had irrespective of the amount involved in the controversy.[71]

2. APPEAL OR ERROR. In some jurisdictions appeal may be resorted to for the review of the determination made on certiorari proceedings.[72] In others resort may be had to error.[73]

3. PARTIES. An appeal may be prosecuted by a party named in the writ,[74] or, on his decease pending an appeal, his personal representatives may be substituted.[75]

4. TIME OF TAKING. The appeal must be taken within the time prescribed by statute, the provisions of which cannot be altered or extended by the parties.[76]

5. RECORD. To authorize a review of the alleged errors, the record should contain a proper bill of exceptions.[77] It seems that the petition for the writ should not be included in the record,[78] and so with a petition which has not been sanctioned. Such a petition should be embodied in a bill of exceptions and certified or verified by the judge who refused to sanction it.[79] Affidavits not read below, or there acted upon, form no part of the record.[80]

Reversal of justice's judgment.— Where a justice's judgment is reversed on certiorari by the circuit court an appeal to the supreme sive to the writ will be disregarded.[82] On error, the court is confined to matters stated in the record.[83]

b. Errors Considered — (I) In General. The appellate court will only consider the errors which are presented [84] and specifically pointed out.[85] In some jurisdictions, however, where the cause is removed by writ of error, special assignments of error are not required, but those stated in the affidavit for the writ will be deemed sufficient.[86]

(II) Formal Errors. Mere formal errors, or errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, will be disregarded.[87]

(III) Objections Not Taken Below. As in other cases, rulings below to which no objection was made or exceptions taken cannot be objected to for the first time in the appellate court,[88] but an exception to a refusal to dismiss the writ is not waived by proceeding to argue on the merits.[89]

c. Findings of Fact. Findings of fact based on competent evidence will not be reviewed.[90]

d. Interlocutory Orders. An appeal will not lie from orders made in the certiorari proceedings, which are not final in their character. Thus an appeal will not lie from an order refusing to quash a writ,[91] from an order reversing an order quashing a writ,[92] from an order denying an application made on the hearing,[93] from an order denying a motion to require amendment of the return [94]

or directing a further return,[95] or from an order directing the clerk to send up a transcript of the record and proceedings.[96]

e. Discretionary Action. Unless the discretion of the court in allowing, refusing, sustaining, or dismissing the writ, or in determining disputed questions of fact involved, is arbitrarily exercised or abused, a determination made in the exercise of such discretion will not be interfered with.[97]

f. Conclusiveness of Determination Below. Appeal or error will not lie where the court below had exclusive jurisdiction or its determination was conclusive.[98]

7. Presumptions. If the return does not deny the allegations in the writ and the application therefor, the right to sue out the writ will be conclusively presumed.[99] So in the absence of the writ, if the parties submitted their case without objection, it will be presumed that the writ was waived or lost.[1] It will also be presumed from the absence of the writ that no sanction was given;[2] in the absence of anything to the contrary that the writ issued regularly;[3] that the omission of the return was by the negligence of the clerk;[4] and, where no reason for dismissing the writ appears, that a sufficient reason existed.[5]

8. Judgment. By statute, in some jurisdictions, on error to review the dismissal of a certiorari, a judgment may be rendered in accordance with the law and facts.[6] But on appeal from a refusal of the writ no determination can be made as to the validity of matters upon which the proceedings sought to be reviewed are founded.[7] If the irregularity does not affect the merits the court will not reverse, but will substitute the proper determination.[8] On affirmance the appellate court may authorize an application below to vacate the determination appealed from and to amend the writ;[9] but has no power to require a further return.[10]

VI. LIABILITY ON BONDS OR UNDERTAKINGS.[11]

A. Condition and Breach Thereof. A condition that the proceeding shall be prosecuted in the court above contemplates that it shall be prosecuted or followed up to a conclusion.[12] Hence, if the certiorari is dismissed because of failure to prosecute it according to the rules and practice of the court, the condition is broken.[13] Nor is it a defense that the writ was not allowed, where the principal had the benefit of a hearing and determination thereon.[14] However, a condition to prosecute with effect, or to perform the judgment rendered in the cause, is not broken by the dismissal of the writ for informality in granting it[15] or for failure to comply with a rule requiring better security.[16] Nor is the unsuccessful determination of present proceedings a breach of a condition to pay such costs and damages as may be recovered in any action thereafter brought.[17]

B. Extent of Liability. A condition to abide by the judgment binds the surety to perform it and pay the sum recovered,[18] but the liability only extends to the amount of the penalty.[19] If the conditions do not include all the statutory requirements the surety is liable to the extent of such conditions, or commensurate with the undertaking.[20] A condition to pay damages and costs does not obligate the surety to pay the debt.[21] An obligation by one to whom a judgment has been paid to restore, on reversal, the debt or damages for which the judgment was obtained, and costs, imposes no liability for the costs of reversal.[22]

C. As Between Surety on Bond For Writ and Surety on Appeal-Bond. As between the surety on a bond to procure the writ and the surety on appeal from the determination thereon the latter is primarily liable.[23]

D. Release or Discharge From Liability. If the party giving the bond is successful,[24] or the writ is dismissed for want of jurisdiction,[25] or is dismissed and the costs paid because of the election of the relator to appeal, there is no liability on the bond.[26] A statute[27] permitting sureties for the prosecution or defense of any suit to obtain a release by requiring the plaintiff to give counter security applies in favor of sureties on certiorari without regard to the status of the party.[28]

E. Judgment. By statute a summary judgment may be rendered on the bond,[29] but otherwise if such a proceeding is not authorized.[30] So by statute judgment may be rendered against the principal and surety at the same time[31] or on a new trial.[32] A judgment in excess of the penalty may be amended.[33]

CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE

By Frank W. Jones and J. Breckinridge Robertson

I. DEFINITION AND ELEMENTS.

A. Definition — 1. CHAMPERTY. Champerty,[1] which is a species of maintenance,[2] has been defined to be the unlawful maintenance of a suit, in consideration of some bargain, to have a part of the thing in dispute, or some profit out of it;[3] a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant, campum partire, to divide the land or other thing sued for between them if they prevail at law, the champertor agreeing to carry on the suit at his own expense.[4]

1. Derivation.—Champerty originally spelled "champarty" is said to be "derived from an old French law term, champart, which was used to denote a customary field rent, consisting of a certain part of the crops in kind; which answers to the ordinary case in this country of renting a farm for a part or share of the produce." Small v. Mott, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 403, 405. But by Blackstone it is derived from the words "campi partitio." 4 Bl. Comm. 135 [quoted in Verdier v. Simons, 2 McCord Eq. (S. C.) 385, 392].

12. "These pests of civil society, that are perpetually endeavoring to disturb the repose of their neighbors, and officiously interfering in other men's quarrels, even at the hazard of their own fortunes, were severely animadverted on by the Roman law, 'qui improbe ceount in alienam litem, ut quicquid ex condemnatione in rem ipsius redactum fuerit inter eos communicaretur, lege Julia de vi privata tenentur;' . . . and they were punished by the forfeiture of a third part of their goods, and perpetual infamy." 4 Bl. Comm. 135.

The Roman law by its provisions for preventing groundless and vexatious suits required that plaintiff should take an oath that the suit was not commenced from malice, and that he believed his case to be legal and just. Defendant was required to swear that in his belief plaintiff had no just claim. The advocates on both sides were required to take similar oaths. Where plaintiff failed in his suit, he was fined in a sum which was sometimes a tenth part of the demand, and in cases of great malice and vexation plaintiff was further punished by a decree of ignominy. Thallhimer v. Brinckerhoff, 3 Cow. (N. Y.)

B. Early English Doctrine — 1. At Common Law. According to the better doctrine the various statutes enacted in England concerning champerty and maintenance[13] were in substance merely declaratory of the common law, the fundamental principles of the law upon this subject being well established prior to the statutes.[14]

2. In Equity. The court of chancery in the main followed the courts of law in treating champerty and maintenance in all its forms as illegal, and went further in some respects, giving relief against or refusing to enforce transactions not strictly involving champerty or maintenance but savoring of it.[15]

C. Modification of Common Law — 1. In General. The rigid doctrine of the early common law has been greatly modified and relaxed in England by modern decisions;[16] and maintenance now seems to be confined to the intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing litigation.[17]

Contract savoring of champerty.—An agreement may amount to champerty or maintenance, or savor of champerty, though made between persons not standing in the relation of solicitor and client, or in any analogous relation, and such agreement, if not amounting strictly to champerty or maintenance so as to constitute a punishable offense, may still be against the policy of the law and mischievous and such as a court of equity ought to discourage and relieve against. 2. In the United States. The courts of the states of the United States having the English common law as a basis of their systems of jurisprudence differ as to the extent to which the principles of the common law and the provisions of the early English statutes should be deemed to have been introduced into their respective systems.[18] The tendency of the courts, however, is strongly in the direction of relaxing the stringency of the doctrine of the common law so as to permit greater liberty of contract between an attorney and client than was formerly allowed, and this for the reason that the peculiar condition of society which gave rise to the doctrine has in a great measure passed away.[19] In some of the states the common-law doctrine seems to have been accepted by the courts in general;[20] in some the doctrine has been accepted only in part;[21]

III. CONTRACTS AND CONVEYANCES PROHIBITED.

A. Assignment of Right of Action —1. IN GENERAL. It is now the well-nigh universally accepted doctrine that the bona fide purchaser or assignee of a mere right of action is not guilty of champerty or maintenance;[23] nor will the fact that it may become necessary for the assignee to institute legal proceedings against enforcing a champertous contract was applied. In Fetrow v. Merriwether, 53 Ill. 275, it was held that there was no law in Illinois against purchasing claims on speculation, or for the purpose of prosecuting them in the courts. In Newkirk v. Cone, 18 Ill. 449, it seems to have been considered that the statute defining the offense of maintenance had superseded the common law.

In Louisiana public officers connected with courts of justice, such as judges, advocates, attorneys, clerks, and sheriffs, cannot purchase litigious rights which fall under the jurisdiction of the tribunal in which they exercise their functions, under penalty of nullity, and of having to defray all costs, damages, and interest. Buck v. Blair, 36 La. Ann. 16; Duson v. Dupré, 33 La. Ann. 1131; Consolidated Assoc. v. Comeau, 3 La. Ann. 552. to protect the thing assigned from unjust claims brought against it invest the transaction with the character of maintenance.[24] And one who has an interest in the subject-matter of a suit is not guilty of maintenance by buying the interest of plaintiff or defendant pendente lite, and thereafter prosecuting or defending the suit himself.[25]

2. Assignment of Equitable Title. A bill by an assignee for specific performance of a contract to convey land conditionally is not open to the objection of champerty, where the assignor had complied with the conditions of the contract previous to the assignment, and the complainant is only attempting to convert his equitable title into a legal one.[26]

3. Assignment of Right to File Bill in Equity. The assignment of a bare right to file a bill in equity for a fraud committed upon the assignor is void, being contrary to public policy and savoring of the character of maintenance.[27]

assigned just as any other cause of action may be, and where the assignee agrees to pay a portion of the amount recovered to the assignor such assignment and agreement do not constitute champerty.[28]

5. Effect of Indemnity Against Costs. While it is not maintenance to purchase an interest in the subject-matter of a suit,[29] yet if the vendee indemnifies the vendor against all the costs that have been or may be incurred by the vendor in the prosecution of such suit the transaction amounts to maintenance.[30]

B. Assignment or Transfer of Chattels in Adverse Possession — 1. Rule at Common Law — a. In General. Choses in action, as contradistinguished from things in possession, were not assignable at common law; the reason of the rule being to prevent maintenance and to discourage litigation.[31] Hence, where personal property was in the adverse possession of a third person claiming it as his own, the sale or assignment of such chattel, even by the real owner, was held to be against public policy and void.[32] If, however, the possession of the third per-

The mere fact that a third party sets up a hostile claim is not sufficient to bring the case within the rule, but the possession must have been acquired and asserted in good faith in order to change the title of the owner into a right of action. Carlos v. Ansley, 8 Ala. 900; Dunbar v. McFall, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 505.

Time of assignment.— Whenever the question is raised that nothing passed by an assignment or grant, by reason of the fact that at the time thereof possession was in another adverse to the assignor or grantor, then the time to which the assignment or grant is to relate is the time when the bargain for the assignment or transfer was finally concluded between the parties; and consequently any intermediate adverse possession before the son was derived from and held in subordination to that of the owner, as in the case of a bailment, such owner might sell or assign such chattel, and his vendee would have the right to sue for its recovery, if the possession was improperly withheld.[33]

b. Judicial Sales. The rule against maintenance, where the property in question was in adverse possession at the time of sale, does not apply to a judicial sale or to a sale made by a public officer under legal process.[34]

2. Rule in United States. The rule now recognized in most of the states of the United States is that the sale or assignment of personal property which at the time of such sale or assignment is in the adverse possession of a third person claiming title thereto is not open to the objection of champerty or maintenance,[35] and a person may assign his equity of redemption in securities held by a third person, even pendente lite, without being guilty of maintenance.[36]

C. Contracts Between Attorney and Client — 1. For Contingent Fees — a. Where Attorney Defrays Costs — (i) At Common Law. Contracts between attorney and client by which the former agrees, in consideration of having a part of the money or thing recovered, to support at his own expense the litigation of the latter or to indemnify the latter against costs and charges are regarded as being within the prohibition of the ancient common law against champerty, and also of the early English statutes.[37]

(ii) In the United States — (A) In General. Such contracts are likewise regarded as champertous in states which have adopted, even in a modified form, the common-law rule in regard to champerty and maintenance.[38]

(B) Where Common-Law Rule Is Not Recognized. In states in which the common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance has not been adopted it has been held that there is nothing contrary to law, morals, or public policy in a contract by an attorney to recover land or other property for an interest in it, even though he also agrees to pay the costs and expenses.[39]

b. Where Client Defrays Costs — (I) In Absence of Statutory Provisions — (A) In General. Where the attorney does not undertake to support the litigation at his own expense, or to indemnify the client against costs and charges, but merely agrees to render the ordinary services of an attorney, in consideration of receiving a percentage of the money or a part of the thing recovered, the courts are not agreed, in the absence of statute, as to whether this constitutes champerty or not.[40] One line of decisions declares that this does not constitute

Agreement for fixed sum and percentage.—

(B) Claims Against United States. Agreements to pay contingent compensation for professional services of a legitimate character before the courts, or departments of the government of the United States, or commissions appointed under treaties to examine claims are not in violation of any rule of law or public policy.[43]

(II) Under Statutory Provisions — (A) In England. By statute, in England, a solicitor retained to prosecute any suit or action is prohibited from stipulating for payment of his fee only in the contingency of success in such suit, action, or proceeding, or from contracting for any portion of the subject-matter of the suit as his fee.[44]

(B) In the United States. In some states of the United States, by special statutory provisions, agreements between clients and attorneys whereby the latter were to conduct the litigation and receive as their compensation a certain percentage of the thing recovered in case of success, and nothing in case they were unsuccessful, are declared to be champertous and unenforceable.[45] In other states the statutes expressly provide that an attorney may stipulate with his client for a part of the subject-matter of the suit as compensation for his services, contingent upon the success of the litigation.[46]

Where a client gave a note to his attorney for services to be rendered in a certain suit, and at the same time executed an instrument by which he agreed to allow him one half the damages that might be recovered, the court held that the note and agreement formed but one contract, and both were champertous and void. Dumas v. Smith, 17 Ala. 305. See also Elliott v. McClelland, 17 Ala. 206, to the same effect, where the agreement was for a percentage of the claim or for a fixed sum, at the attorney's option.

See 9 Cent. Dig. tit. "Champerty and Maintenance," § 24.

c. Where Costs Are Advanced as Loan. It is neither against public policy nor champertous for an attorney to loan his client money with which to pay costs of suit, nor to advance money necessary to carry on the suit as needed, when such advances are made as a loan, with the express or implied understanding or agreement for its repayment, and there is no contract of indemnity against the client's liability to pay costs.[47]

d. Where Fee Is Lien on Judgment. Under statutes prohibiting attorneys from contracting for contingent fees it has been held that a contract by an attorney to conduct a suit, the client agreeing to pay him a certain amount to be retained by the attorney out of the money when collected, is not champertous.[48]

2. Assignment or Purchase of Subject-Matter of Suit — a. In General. The doctrine seems to be well recognized that an attorney while holding that relation cannot, as a general rule, make a valid purchase of the subject-matter of litigation of his client, and the same is voidable at the option of the client.[49]

In Massachusetts it has been held that where the right to compensation is not confined to an interest in the thing recovered, but gives a right of action against the party, though pledging the avails of the suit or a part of them as security for payment the agreement is not champertous; but such an agreement would be champertous if there was to be no personal liability on the part of the client. Blaisdell v. Ahern, 144 Mass. 393, 11 N. E. 681, 59 Am. Rep. 99 [distinguishing Ackert v. Barker, 131 Mass. 436; Belding v. Smythe, 138 Mass. 530].

Burden of proof.— Where an attorney purchases the subject-matter of litigation from his client, he has the burden of proving the perfect fairness and equity of the transaction. Burnham v. Heselton, 82 Me. 495, 20 Atl. 80, 9 L. R. A. 90.

Purchase from third party.— In Evans v. Wilkinson, 6 Rob. (La.) 172, it was held that the purchase by one who had acted as attorney for defendant of a valid title to the land in litigation from persons not parties to such litigation was not the purchase of a litigious right which is declared to be null and void by the Louisiana code. See also Chenango Bank v. Hyde, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 567.

In New York an attorney is prohibited by statute from purchasing or becoming in any manner interested in buying a bond, note, or other thing in action with the intent and for the purpose of bringing an action thereon. Browning v. Marvin, 100 N. Y. 144, 2 N. E. 635; Moses v. McDivitt, 88 N. Y. 62; Maxon v. Cain, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 270, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 855; Ramsey v. Gould, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 398, 8 Abb. Pr. In order to bring an attorney within the terms of this statute there must be proven an intent to obtain title for the purpose of commencing an action. Moses v. McDivitt, 88 N. Y. 62; Creteau v. Foote, etc., Glass Co., 40 N. Y. App. Div. 215, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 1103; Tilden v. Aitkin, 37 N. Y. App. Div. 28, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 735; Van Dewater v. Gear, 21 N. Y. The statute does not apply to the purchase of chattels (Van Dewater v. Gear, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 201, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 503), to a purchase of stock in a corporation (Ramsey v. Gould, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 398, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S.

b. After Judgment. An attorney employed to institute suit for the recovery of property is not precluded after judgment from acquiring an interest in the property in controversy, as it is then no longer in litigation.[50]

c. In Liquidation of Precedent Debt. A grant or assignment of an interest in the subject-matter of the suit made by the client to his attorney in consideration of a precedent debt is not contrary to public policy or champertous.[51]

3. Agreement Not to Settle or Compromise. There are cases which hold that a contract with an attorney, in which it is agreed that the attorney shall prosecute the claim and receive a fee from the amount to be recovered and that the claim shall not be compromised without the consent of the attorney, is void.[52]

4. Contracts With Political Body. The contract of an attorney with a state or other political body for a fee contingent upon the amount recovered is not champertous, the reason of the law ceasing where a state is a party.[53]

(N. Y.) 174, 39 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 62), to a suit brought in a justice's court (Goodell v. People, 5 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 206), or to a contract by a layman (Irwin v. Curie, 171 N. Y. 409, 64 N. E. 161). And where an attorney has purchased a bond, mortgage, or other evidence of indebtedness, with a view to the protection of other interests, and not with the primary object of bringing suit thereon, the fact that he is subsequently compelled to bring suit in order to enforce his claim does not bring him within the prohibition. The transfer or assignment to counsel of specific parts of judgments which have been rendered, or to be rendered, is essentially different from a contract by which they are to have a part of the thing in dispute for maintaining a suit for its recovery. Price v. Carney, 75 Ala. 546.

Purchase of judgment.— In the absence of statutory enactment there is nothing to prevent an attorney from buying a judgment for the purpose of issuing an execution thereon and collecting the debt. Denton v. Willcox, 2 La. Ann. 60; Brotherson v. Consalus, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 213; Warner v. Paine, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 630. So the purchase of a senior judgment by a junior judgment creditor, an attorney at law, was held not to be void as being within the prohibition of the statute "to prevent abuses in the practice of the law" where it was made for the mere purpose of securing the younger debt. D. Contracts Between Laymen — 1. In General. By the common law, and in most of the states which have adopted the common law or enacted statutes on the subject, an agreement by a third person other than an attorney to defray the expenses of a suit in which he has no interest, or to give substantial support in aid thereof in consideration of a share of the recovery is champertous.[54]

2. Agreements to Furnish Evidence. An agreement to furnish such evidence as shall enable the party to recover a sum of money, or other thing, by action, and to exert influence for procuring evidence to substantiate the claim on condition of receiving a portion of the thing recovered is champertous.[55]

Indemnity against costs.— An agreement by navy agents, during the pendency of a suit in the admiralty court, to indemnify against the costs of the proceeds if prize-money was not recovered, in consideration of one-fifth share of the moneys which might be recovered, was held to be a case of champerty. Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. Jr. 139, 10 Rev. Rep. 46.

Correlative agreement to proceed with action not essential.—Where A advanced to B a sum of money, upon his agreement to pay to A one third of any damages he might recover in an action for tort B then had pending, it was held that this agreement amounted to champerty and was void; that in order to constitute champerty it is not essential that there should be an undertaking on the part of a litigant to proceed with the action. Aid in levying execution.— Where A, holding a judgment against B, agreed with D that if he would discover property of B on which execution could be levied he should receive as compensation for his services one third of the amount realized on execution, it was held that the contract was not champertous, and would not have been so even had D agreed to pay a part of the expense. Hickey v. Baird, 9 Mich. 32.

A contract to communicate information on terms of getting a share of any property which may thereby be recovered by the person to whom the information is given is not in itself champerty; but if the contract further provides that the person who gives the information, and who is to share in what may be recovered, shall himself recover the property, or actually assist in the recovery of it, by procuring evidence or similar means, then the contract is contrary to the policy of the law and void. Rees v. De Bernardy, [1896] 2 Ch. 437, 65 L. J. Ch. 656, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 585. But see Casserleigh v. Wood, 14 Colo. App. 265, 59 Pac. 1024, where plaintiff supplied documentary evidence necessary to establish the citizenship of the locator of a mine in which defendants claimed an interest, by which they were able to prove their claim, and agreed to defray the expenses of litigation for a contingent fee payable out of the recovery, and the court held that since defendants desired to bring a suit to assert their claim which a verdict in their favor established to have been well founded, the contract was a valid agreement to assist in establishing a meritorious claim and was not within the statute.

3. Benevolent Aid. The rule seems to be well established that a person is not guilty of maintenance who furnishes assistance, in money or otherwise, to a poor man to enable him to carry on his suit.[56] And it has been held that such a defense would be good to an action of maintenance, where defendant acts in good faith, even where it is shown that had he made full inquiry he would have ascertained that there was no reasonable or probable grounds for the proceedings which he assisted.[57] But such a transaction must be entered into with the view of subserving the ends of justice alone, and if it is turned to the purpose of speculation by a stipulation for a share of the verdict or judgment it will amount to champerty.[58]

4. Employment of Non-Professional Agents. A person acting in good faith may lawfully employ a non-professional agent to aid and assist him in conducting a suit, in like manner as he may employ an agent in any other lawful business, and where the latter for a sufficient consideration undertakes to save the principal harmless from all costs and damages it is not maintenance, and a recovery upon the undertaking will be sustained.[59]

5. Effect of Interest — a. Actual Interest. Where a person promoting the suit of another has any interest whatever, legal or equitable, in the thing demanded, distinct from that which he may acquire by an agreement with the suitor, he is in effect also a suitor according to the nature and extent of his interest. It is accordingly a principle that any interest whatever in the subject-matter of the suit is sufficient to exempt a party giving aid to the suitor from the charge of illegal maintenance. Whether this interest is great or small, vested or contingent, certain or uncertain, it affords a just reason to the party

b. Supposed Interest. So it has been held that one may lawfully agree to promote a suit where he has reasonable grounds to believe himself interested, though in reality he is not interested.[62]

curity, it was held that the mortgagee being in no way interested in the result of the litigation, and it being merely an employment by the mortgagee of an agent to attend to the litigation for which he was entitled to be paid as well as to be reimbursed for any moneys expended for the benefit of and at the instance of the principal, the transaction constituted neither champerty nor maintenance. Advertisements to persons interested for subscriptions to defend suit.—An injunction having been granted to restrain defendants from infringing a patent for nickel plating, they gave notice of appeal and published in a newspaper an advertisement inviting the trade to subscribe toward the expense of the appeal. 6. Effect of Relationship — a. In General. Where a party is related by ties of consanguinity or affinity to either of the parties to a suit he may rightfully assist in the prosecution or defense of such suit either by furnishing counsel or contributing to the expense thereof, and may in order to strengthen his position purchase the interest of another party in addition to his own; agreements of this character being well-nigh universally upheld as valid.[63]

b. Where Aid Is For Speculative Purposes. The kinsman is not allowed, however, to maintain such suit as a speculative venture based upon an agreement to share in the proceeds of the litigation in case the suitor should recover.[64]

E. Contracts to Procure Claims For Collection. In some jurisdictions an attorney is prohibited by statute from entering into agreements to divide fees with or give any valuable consideration to a third person, upon such person placing claims in his hands for collection, such agreements being declared champertous and void.[65]

F. Conveyances of Land Held Adversely — 1. In General. The conveyance of land held adversely by a third person is a common-law offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment. The declaratory act of Henry VIII (32 Hen. VIII, c. 9), prohibits under prescribed penalties the buying or selling of any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor is in actual possession of the land or of the reversion or remainder.[66] In the United States, where lands are an article of commerce, the title passing from one to another with great rapidity, the ancient Agreement beyond common object.— While it is true that it is proper for persons having a common interest to agree to unite in the prosecution or defense of an action, such agreement must not extend beyond the common object had in view; thus, an agreement between several owners and tenants of land in a parish to unite in defending any suit commenced against any of them by the present or any future rector for the tithes of articles covered by certain specified moduses and binding themselves not to compromise or settle, such agreement not being limited to their continuance in the parish or to any particular time, would be illegal. By the prior of two wills the eldest son of an heir at law of a testator took an estate tail in remainder. By a subsequent will this remainder was taken from him and limited to another person. The subsequent will was admitted to probate but the heir contested its validity. Afterward a compromise was effected. The heir and his son were alleged to have made a sub-agreement between themselves as to the first will (under which the son would take), and then both joined to resist the second will, which gave the estate completely away to strangers. It was held that this was not an agreement savoring of champerty. Bainbrigge v. Moss, 3 Jur. N. S. 58.

Seduction and breach of promise.— Under the Tennessee code, allowing a father to sue for the seduction of his daughter, though there has been no loss of service, it is not maintenance for a daughter living with her father to prosecute, with funds furnished by him, a suit for seduction and breach of promise of marriage. Graham v. McReynolds, 90 Tenn. 673, 18 S. W. 272.

"It was a principle conformable to the whole genius and policy of the common law, that the grantor, in a conveyance of land, unless in the case of a mere release to the party in possession, should have in him, at the time, a right of possession; for the original simplicity of that law admitted of no estate in lands which was not clothed with the immediate seizin and possession thereof." Cassedy v. Jackson, 45 Miss. 397, 402.

Object of statute.— In Slywright v. Paige, 1 Leon. 166, 167, it was said that the meaning of 32 Hen. VIII, c. 9, concerning maintenance, was to "repress the practises of many, That when they thought they had title or right unto any Land, they for the furtherance of their pretended Right conveyed their interest in some part thereof to great persons, and with their countenance did oppress the possessors." In Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 45, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 787, it was said that "the object of the statute, as well as of the common law, was, doubtless, to prevent the buying up of controverted legal titles, which the owner did not think it worth his while to pursue, upon mere speculation; so that in fact, it might properly be deemed the mere purchase of a law-suit."

Michigan.— Since March 1, 1847, when Rev. Stat. (1846), p. 263, § 7, destroyed the common-law doctrine, lands may be conveyed notwithstanding they are at the time held adversely to the grantor. Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 430. Previously the common law that land held adversely could not be lawfully conveyed had been held to be in force (Bruckner v. Lawrence, 1 Dougl. in others the common law has been held to be in force;[69] while in some, statutes have been passed declaratory of the common law.[70]

2. What Constitutes Adverse Possession — a. In General. Pedis possessio is not necessary,[76] but there must be such acts on the part of the adverse claimant as will indicate to the world that he has taken actual possession, the sufficiency of which is a question of fact for the determination of the jury.[77]

c. Duration of Possession. It does not require any length of adverse possession to make a sale and conveyance of land possessed by another champertous and void. The fact that it is adversely held is sufficient.[78]

d. Possession By or Under Persons Having Contingent or Limited Estates or Interests — (I) In General. Possession of land by or under persons having a contingent or limited estate or interest therein is not such an adverse possession as to avoid a deed made by the owner for champerty and maintenance.[79]

(II) By Bankrupt. The sale by an assignee in bankruptcy of lands of which he has permitted the bankrupt to remain in possession is not champertous, the possession of the bankrupt not being adverse to the assignee.[80]

(III) By Former Owner After Execution or Tax Sale. The possession of the former owner or his grantee after the sale of his land on execution or for taxes is not adverse to that of the vendee.[81]

(IV) By Mortgagor or Vendor. The possession of land by a mortgagor or a vendor after the execution of the mortgage or conveyance is not adverse to the mortgagee or grantee, so as to avoid conveyances made by the latter;[82] but a stitute possession, but when there is no one on the land against whom an action can be brought to try the right there is no adverse possession. Moss v. Scott, 2 Dana (Ky.) 271.

b. Assignment of Lease. An assignment of a lease for lives is void, if the premises are adversely held by another claimant of the same leasehold estate.[1]

c. Contracts As to Land Held Adversely. An agreement, the consideration of which is the division of land adversely held upon its recovery,[2] or a share of the proceeds of the sale of land so held,[3] is champertous. On the other hand an agreement to buy land and convey an undivided interest to another, who is then to bring suit for its recovery and to pay his share of the costs is not champertous.[4] Similarly, a purchase of land under an agreement whereby the purchaser is to pay a certain price, if he can recover it from those in adverse possession, the proceedings to be instituted in the purchaser's name and at his expense, is valid.[5]

d. Conveyances After Entry. A conveyance by a person who, having the right to enter, has formally and peacefully entered on the land is good to pass his title, notwithstanding another person was in actual and adverse possession of the same land at the time of such entry and conveyance.[6]

execution sale of lands held adversely is void as against the adverse holder;[8] but one who claims under the judgment debtor has not such an adverse possession as will avoid a conveyance made by a purchaser under an execution on the judgment.[9]

f. Conveyances Between Kindred. Relationship by blood or marriage may justify maintenance,[10] but will not, save in exceptional cases, avoid the effect of champerty.[11]

g. Conveyances Between Patentees. The purchase by a junior patentee of the title of the elder patentee to lands held adversely to the latter is champertous.[12]

Effect of motive.—"We think, therefore, that if the rule justifying mere maintenance between relatives is to be extended so as to allow the party to contract for his compensation out of the property to be recovered in any case, it can only be carried so far as is consistent with the idea that he is influenced by that desire to benefit his relation, which the law approves, and not so far as to sustain a contract which entirely excludes that idea, and shows that he acts wholly from motives of self-interest, having bought his relative's right to litigate for a mere nominal consideration." j. Conveyances by Occupant. A conveyance is not void as being champertous, if the grantor is in actual possession at the time of its execution.[17]

k. Conveyances by State. The common-law rule and the statutes making conveyances of land held adversely void do not apply to conveyances made by the state, since the state is incapable of being disseized.[18] It seems, however, that a grant by one state may be champertous as to another state;[19] and the fact that a champertous conveyance is made by the executive officers of a state will not purge it of that vice, as being an act of the state, since only an exercise of legislative power can accomplish that result.[20]

l. Conveyances by Tenant in Common or Coparcener — (I) IN GENERAL. Conveyances by tenants in common or coparceners of land adversely held by their cotenants, are champertous, where it is shown by certain and satisfactory evidence that the tenant in possession has, by specific and unequivocal acts, renounced his allegiance to his cotenants.[21] Similarly a conveyance made by a tenant in common while the land is adversely held by a grantee of his cotenant is invalid.[22]

(II) TO COTENANT. A conveyance by one tenant in common to his cotenant of his undivided interest in land held adversely is not champertous.[23]

m. Conveyances in Performance of Lawful Executory Contracts or to Correct Mistakes. q. Conveyances Pendente Lite. A bona fide conveyance of land in dispute made after the commencement of the suit by plaintiff is not void for champerty or maintenance.[32] But a purchase of land while a suit concerning the title to it is pending, if made with knowledge of the suit, is void for champerty.[33]

r. Conveyances With Consent of Occupant. Where a person holding lands adversely assents to a conveyance thereof to a third person the transaction is not champertous.[34]

s. Devises. Devises are not within the rule against conveying pretended titles.[35]

t. Mortgages and Assignments Thereof. The weight of authority is to the effect that a mortgage of land adversely held or an assignment thereof, when the land is held adversely to the mortgagee, is void as to the person in possession.[36]

u. Purchase by Occupant of Outstanding Title. The statute to prevent the buying of pretended titles was not intended to prevent a person in possession from confirming his title by purchasing the rights of others, but

IV. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

A. Of Prohibited Contracts Generally — 1. As Between the Parties — a. In General. Both in England and the United States agreements founded upon considerations tainted with champerty or maintenance are regarded as against public policy and void.[42] If the facts show maintenance or champerty the form of contract adopted by the champertor to defeat the effect of the law will be disregarded.[43] And a court of equity will not, any more than a court of law, encourage by its process a commission of the offense of champerty or maintenance, but will refuse to enforce a contract which it sees to be tainted with it.[44]

b. Recovery For Services Rendered. Though an agreement between an attorney and client be void for champerty, the attorney is nevertheless entitled to compensation for his services in prosecuting the action to judgment.[45] In estimating the attorney's recovery, the jury should not take into consideration the compensation agreed upon,[46] further than to limit it to that amount.[47]

c. Restoration of Status Quo. Where a champertous agreement has been executed, and the party has received some benefit therefrom, the law will not interfere in his behalf to restore to him possession of property parted with or money paid out under such agreement.[48]

2. As to Defendant — a. In General. The fact of a champertous contract between an attorney and client in no wise affects the obligation of defendant to plaintiff. It is the champertous contract, the sale of the litigious right, and not the right itself, which the law avoids.[49] Conversely the laws against champerty and maintenance cannot be used as offensive weapons against defendant.[50]

b. Abatement of Action. Some courts have ruled that if the fact that a suit is being prosecuted upon a champertous contract comes to the knowledge of the court in any proper manner it should refuse longer to entertain the proceeding.[51] The weight of authority, however, supports the rule that the fact that there is an illegal and champertous contract for the prosecution of a cause of action is no ground of defense thereto, and can only be set up between the parties when the champertous agreement itself is sought to be enforced.[52] Some courts draw a title, as against the person in adverse possession, remains in the grantor, in whose name an action for the possession must be brought, whether for his own or his grantee's benefit.[64] Where, however, the conveyance is valid as between the parties, the legal title passes to the grantee as against all other than the disseizor.[65]

3. Effect of Knowledge of Adverse Holding — a. In General. In order to avoid a conveyance by one out of possession, on the ground of an actual adverse possession by another under claim of right, actual notice of such adverse holding is not required, but the notice implied from possession is sufficient.[66]

b. As Affecting Liability to Penalty. A person who sells or purchases land without the knowledge that there is a subsisting adverse possession is not liable to the statutory penalty for selling or purchasing a pretended title, though the seller is in the first instance presumed to be cognizant of the situation of the land.[67]

4. Acquisition of Title After Repeal of Act. A title acquired by the grantee in a conveyance which was void by reason of an adverse possession, after the enactment of a statute permitting such conveyances, is valid.[68]

5. Question of Law or Fact. The question whether a deed is void for maintenance is a question of fact to be determined by the jury,[69] as is the question whether an action is prosecuted for the benefit of the vendor or the vendee.[70]

V. Remedies.

A. Prohibited Contracts Generally — 1. Action For Damages — a. Right of Action. An action will lie at common law to recover damages for maintenance.[71]

b. Pleading. In a common-law action for maintenance, the declaration need not charge the maintenance to have been committed contra formam statuti, it being a wrongful act at common law, and the statutes relating to maintenance being only declaratory of the common law, with additional penalties.[72] Nor need the declaration allege that defendant was not interested in the action maintained; for if he was so interested it is a matter to be pleaded by him.[73]

c. Evidence. In order to maintain an action for champerty or maintenance, it is necessary to establish that the transaction was against good policy and justice, or tended to promote unnecessary litigation.[74]

2. Criminal Prosecution — a. At Common Law. Champerty was a misdemeanor at common law and punishable as such.[75] In the United States, where-

Burden of proof.— In an action for the penalty prescribed by 1 N. Y. Rev. Laws, p. 173, § 8, against one who sold land held adversely while he had no title, the burden is on him to show that he did not know that the land was held adversely. Etheridge v. Cromwell, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 629.

72. Pechell v. Watson, 11 L. J. Exch. 225, 8 M. & W. 691.

Pendency of suit.— In an action for maintenance it is necessary to allege in the declaration not only the pendency of a suit but also to designate the particular court in which it was pending, together with the time and circumstances. ever the common law has been adopted, the common-law rule against champerty must be regarded as in force, so far as applicable, where it has not been specifically modified or repealed by statute.[76]

b. By Statute. Champerty is also prohibited in England by various statutes, commencing as early as the Statute of Westminster I, c. 25, all of which enact heavy penalties for their violation.[77] In some of the states of the United States champerty is made an indictable offense by statute.[78]

3. Discovery. Discovery is not enforceable in equity in cases of champerty and maintenance, and a plaintiff should not be compelled on examination to answer questions touching an alleged champertous agreement.[79]

B. Conveyances of Land Held Adversely — 1. Between the Parties — a. Action on Covenants. Where a conveyance is void for champerty and maintenance no action on the covenants contained therein lies in favor of the grantee against the grantor, the transaction being an offense at law for which the parties may be punished.[80]

b. In Equity. A rescission of a conveyance or of a contract to convey will be decreed in chancery, if it is void for champerty and maintenance, though the parties are in pari delicto. Adverse possession alone is sufficient cause for rescission.[81] Similarly, restoration may be compelled where, after a decree rescinding a contract, the vendee surrenders to the vendor, which decree is subsequently

In Ontario the criminal law of England, as it stood on September 17, 1792, was adopted as the common law of Ontario, by the provincial act of 40 Geo. III. Contra.— Ruffin v. Johnson, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 604, in which it was held that the maker of a deed will not be heard in equity to allege, against the averment of his deed, that it was champertous because the land was adversely held at the time of the conveyance.

Heirs may defeat the enforcement of their ancestor's contract for a conveyance by showing that it was champertous, but they cannot obtain the annulment of a champertous conveyance by their ancestor, where they are out of possession, and the conveyance has been unquestioned for many years. Bryant v. Hill, 9 Dana (Ky.) 67.

reversed and the original contract confirmed.[82] A court of equity will not, however, interfere either to compel the vendor to refund the purchase-money, or to enjoin him from prosecuting his action for it against the vendee, but will leave the parties to their remedies, if any, at law,[83] unless the vendor has made fraudulent representations in regard to the property at the time of sale.[84]

2. Against Occupant — a. Of Grantee. The grantee in a conveyance of land adversely held is not entitled to sue the occupant in his own name, save in those jurisdictions in which the common law has either never been recognized or has been abrogated by statute.[85] Where the conveyance is void not only as to the person in adverse possession, but also as between the parties, no action lies for the benefit of the grantee;[86] but where, though void as to the occupant, it is valid as between the parties, an action may be maintained in the name of the grantor for the benefit of the grantee.[87] When it has been apprehended that a deed might be attacked on the ground of an adverse holding at the time it was made, not infrequently counts have been inserted in the declaration on the title of the grantor and of the grantee, so that if the suit should fail as to the one it might succeed as to the other.[88]

b. Of Grantor. A grantor is not precluded from recovery on the ground that he has executed a deed to a third person to lands held adversely by a third person. Such a conveyance, though absolutely void, does not work a forfeiture of title.[89]

82. Castleman v. Combs, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 273, in which it was further held that a conveyance by the vendor after the decree of rescission, but before the entry of the mandate of the supreme court reversing the decree, was a transaction pendente lite, and did not affect the vendor's rights.

c. Defenses. It is no defense to an action for the recovery of land adversely held that plaintiff has previously made a champertous conveyance of it. Such an unlawful conveyance is only a defense, where it is itself the foundation of the action.[90]

3. Of Occupant. The person in possession of land cannot sustain a bill in equity for the avoidance of a deed executed to another by a person claiming adversely to the tenant, on the ground that the deed is void in consequence of his adverse possession.[91]

I. CREATION AND VALIDITY.

A. Definition and Origin — 1. IN GENERAL. In the broadest sense charity includes whatever proceeds from a sense of moral duty or from humane feelings toward others, uninfluenced by one's own advantage or pleasure.[1] It means this in those Lord's day statutes which limit business and labor to what is done from "necessity and charity."[2] In the much debated phrase of the Pennsylvania constitution, an "institution of purely public charity," it denotes a "gift to promote the welfare of others," including what is done or given gratuitously in relief of the public burdens or for the advancement of the public good.[3] The principle of charity was recognized, even before the adoption of Christianity, by the Roman law, from which certain of its characteristics were incorporated into the law of England;[4] it was known also to the Jews, who early favored aid toward self-help, and education suitable to that end, but except in cases of actual necessity disapproved of alms-giving as being the lowest form of charity;[5] and probably, as Sir Edward Coke observed, in the reign of Elizabeth, "no time was so barbarous, as to abolish learning and knowledge, nor so uncharitable, as to prohibit relieving the poor."[6] The oft recurring prayer,[7] "This do in work of charity," in the earliest appeals to the English chancellor by those who had no remedy, shows that the common, if not the equitable, concept of the term under Christian influences was the same in remote and modern times.

cery its signification was chiefly derived from the preamble of the English statute,[8] and in a legal sense those purposes came in England to be treated as charitable which are therein enumerated, or which by analogy were deemed within its intendment.[9] The Statute of Elizabeth was repealed in England in 1888,[10] but the repealing act incorporated and continued in force that preamble.[11] With other early English statutes it was brought over by the American settlers as part of their common law. This was the view taken by the supreme court of the United States in the Girard Will case[12] which, under the influence of the then recent investigations of the English record commissioners and of Mr. Binney's celebrated argument in the case, overruled one of its previous decisions.[13] And while the question, What is a charity? is often said in America to be principally regulated and determined by the Statute of Elizabeth,[14] yet the prevailing view has been that trusts for charitable uses which, prior to its enactment, were sustained by the English chancery under its general equity powers are within the original and inherent equity jurisdiction over charities, even where the English statute is not in force and independently thereof. Such appears to be now the accepted doctrine in the majority of the states of the Union.[15]

Purposes named in 43 Eliz. c. 4 — Validity and history of this enumeration.— The preamble of this statute enumerated the following charitable purposes: the relief of aged, impotent, and poor people; the maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners; schools of learning, free schools and scholars in universities; the repair of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, sea-banks, and highways; the education and preferment of orphans; relief or maintenance for houses of correction; marriage of poor maids; aid and help of young tradesmen, handicraftsmen, and persons decayed; relief or redemption of prisoners or captives; aid or ease of any poor inhabitant concerning payment of fifteens, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes. 1 Chitty Stat. (5th ed.) tit. Charities, p. 68. That some of the purposes here mentioned are not charitable see Income Tax Com'rs v. Pemsel, [1891] A. C. 531, 61 L. J. Q. B. 265. Some of these objects were provided for by earlier statutes, such as the impotent poor, scholars in universities, piers and jetties, walls and bridges; and the whole enumeration in the Statute of Elizabeth substantially appears more than two hundred years earlier in the "Vision of Piers Plowman." See 8 Harv. L. Rev. 69, note 70. Referring to the objects named in the preamble to the Statute of Elizabeth, Gray, J., in Drury v. Natick, 10 Allen (Mass.) 169, 177, said: "No one can read this sentence without perceiving its aim to have been to show by familiar examples what classes or kinds of uses were considered charitable, or so beneficial to the public as to be entitled to the same protection as strictly charitable uses, rather than to enumerate or specify all the purposes which would fall within the scope and intent of the statute, much less every possible mode of carrying them out. It is accordingly the well-settled construction of this ancient act, both in England and America, that in determining what uses are charitable within the statute, courts are to be guided not by its letter, but by its manifest spirit and reason, and are to consider not what uses are within its words, but what are embraced in its meaning and purpose."

decisions a public charity begins only when uncertainty in the recipient begins, and while in a private trust the gift will fail and revert to the donor or his heirs, when the beneficiaries are so uncertain, or so incapable of taking, that they cannot be identified or cannot legally claim its benefits, yet in the case of a charitable gift it is immaterial that the beneficiaries are indefinite or not ascertained, or that the trustee is uncertain or incapable of taking.[18]

4. View of Statute of Elizabeth in Particular States. In Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin a marked divergence is found, chiefly as the result of local statutes.[19] In Virginia the legislature in 1792 passed an act repealing all English statutes, and particularly the Statute of Elizabeth;[20] but the Virginia acts of April 2, 1839, and of March 10, 1841, excepted gifts and devises from the rule that indefinite and uncertain charities will not there be sustained.[21] In Pennsylvania, although the Statute of Elizabeth was never adopted by the colony or state, and no separate court of chancery has ever existed there, yet it recognized the doctrine of charitable uses as part of its jurisprudence.[22] In Rhode Island not only was the Mort-

18. See cases cited supra, note 17. These decisions are carefully reviewed and compared in Troutman v. De Boissierre Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home, etc., Assoc., (Kan. 1901) 64 Pac. 33. Five judges constituted the majority of the court; and the view of the two dissenting judges, one of whom was Doster, C. J., was that the designated class of beneficiaries must have a claim upon the public, which claim must be founded in nature and humanity, as for the nurture and education of the young, the healing of disease, retreats for the insane, or support of the indigent, and cannot grow out of or exist in the private conventions, class associations, or artificial distinctions of men; and that in order to avoid the rule against perpetuities, the beneficiaries must constitute a public or quasi-public class standing, as a class, in such relations to society that it is under obligations of charity to them, as laborers in the world's work. For opinion on rehearing see (Kan. 1903) 71 Pac. 286.

main Act[23] restricting gifts of realty to charitable uses treated as too late to be a part of its common law, but this jurisdiction of chancery was held not to originate in statute, or to be confined to the Colonial Act of 1721, which specified only two kinds of charitable trusts, and which, like the Statute of Elizabeth, was held to be retrospective, and hence to include all charitable gifts theretofore, as well as thereafter, valid at common law.[24] In California the Statute of Elizabeth is rejected as inapplicable to our social and political condition.[25] In Michigan the Statute of Charitable Uses, with other English statutes, was repealed in 1810;[26] and the revised statutes of 1847 of that state, in expressly abolishing uses and trusts, except as therein authorized and modified, without distinguishing between charitable and other uses,[27] corresponded to what was also done in New York in 1788,[28] and later in Wisconsin[29] and Minnesota,[30] though in New York the ancient law of charitable trusts has recently been restored by statute.[31] In other jurisdictions,[32] as in Massachusetts, Maine, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Illinois, Georgia, and Kentucky, the Statute of Elizabeth has been referred to in recent years as a guide, and as being substantially a part of the common law of the state.

gift is a public charity when there is a benefit to be conferred on the public at large, or some portion thereof, or upon an indefinite class of persons; and its benefits may be confined to special classes, as decayed seamen, laborers, farmers, etc., of a particular town or county.[35] One characteristic of a public charity is that it cannot exist under a grant or gift for profit or for a consideration in return.[36] Hence gifts to existing schools that are not free or public, or to other private pecuniary enterprises, even though they may indirectly serve charitable ends, are not of this class;[37] while the mere fact that a charitable institution such as a hospital requires and accepts payment from some of its patients,[38] or that a hospital maintained by a railroad corporation for its employees is in part supported by monthly contributions from all its employees does not deprive it of its character as a charity.[39] In the case of a private trust which is too indefinite to be carried into effect the donee or legatee takes the legal title only, and a trust results by implication of law to the donor or his representatives or to the testator's residuary legatees or next of kin;[40] but when a trust may by its terms be applied to objects not charitable in the legal sense, or to persons not defined by name or class, it fails of effect because too indefinite to be carried out.[41]

2. CHARITIES FAVORED BY THE LAW. Trusts for public charitable purposes are favored in the courts of equity administering them, except as modified for special purposes of policy by the Statutes of Mortmain and Superstitious Uses.[42] They are construed as valid when possible, and are often upheld where private trusts would fail.[43] A gift in trust for a charity not existing at the date of the gift, and the beginning of whose existence is uncertain, or which is to take effect upon a contingency that probably may not happen within a life or lives in being and twenty-one years afterward, is valid, if there is no gift of the property

meanwhile to or for the benefit of any private person.[44] In consequence of such favor gifts of this character are sustained, though vaguely expressed,[45] and, when a deed is clearly for a charitable use, the trustees named therein take the legal estate in fee, though the deed does not in terms run to their heirs and assigns;[46] and though the instrument of gift makes no provision for a conveyance to trustees the donated property becomes immediately charged with the trust in the hands of either the executors or heirs.[47] Equity will not permit these trusts to fail because its particular purposes are uncertain,[48] or for want of a trustee, though no existing donee is named;[49] from which it results at common law that though the gift to a charitable use is to a voluntary association or an unincorporated society, which is uncertain, indefinite, and fluctuating in its membership, the court will nevertheless, under the common-law rule at least, uphold it and appoint a trustee to take and administer the fund according to the terms of the grant.[50] Even in those states like New York, where formerly the statutes did not

St. Rep. 713; Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 539) are confined to gifts to charities generally, with no uses specified, no trust interposed, and either no provision made for an appointment, or the power of appointment delegated to particular persons who die without executing it (Methodist Episcopal Church Missionary Soc. v. Chapman, 128 Mass. 265; Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 539). Associations formed solely for the mutual benefit of the contributors, though sometimes called "private charities," are not public or general charities in the view of the Statute of Elizabeth or of a court of chancery, but favor charitable trusts, gifts to charitable, benevolent, scientific, or educational institutions are not against public policy, or restricted beyond what is strictly required by the statutes.[51]

3. PERPETUITIES.[52] It is not a valid objection to charitable gifts that they are made perpetual.[53] A bequest of a fund to trustees "the income only to be paid semi-annually to my nephew A. and his heirs," is not a charity, but an attempted private perpetual trust, and A is entitled to receive the entire fund.[54] So a trust cannot be created for the benefit of the grantor's descendants forever,[55] nor can he create a trust for one of a series of his descendants successively, unless such an one could be ascertained within a life in being and twenty-one years afterwards.[56] The rule against perpetuities does not apply to charitable gifts with no intervening gift to or for the benefit of a private person or corporation, or to a contingent limitation over from one charity to another; but it does apply to a grant or devise to a private person, although limited over after an immediate gift to a charity.[57] Hence perpetual trusts cannot be created for a charity which do not vest within the time limited for ordinary trusts.[58] In those states where charitable or religious trusts are not distinguished from other trusts the rule against perpetuities applies to both alike.[59]

4. ACCUMULATIONS. Questions of greater difficulty arise as to the validity of provisions for accumulating indefinitely for charitable purposes. The common-law rule confining the accumulation of annual income to the same limit as exists for the creation of future estates was found so inconvenient that in England and some of the United States[60] it was still further restrained by statute.[61] The English statute was known as the Thellusson Act,[62] which established narrower limits beyond which no person should by deed, will, "or otherwise howsoever, settle or dispose of any real or personal property," so that the income thereof should be wholly or partly accumulated, except in certain cases, among which charitable trusts were not specified; and it was held that a will made after this statute, which directed an indefinite accumulation for a charitable purpose, could not be carried out in the mode prescribed.[63] Where no statute exists upon the subject, as is the case for the most part in America, it would clearly be unreasonable that the accumulation go on forever, as there would then be no benefit to the charity; or, as the charitable object itself is favored by the law, that it should be subject to the same rules as an accumulation for private purposes. The proper course doubtless is that the limits of an accumulation for the benefit of a charity be controlled by a court of equity within reasonable and desirable bounds.[64] Such control does not follow by analogy the rules as to other trusts, and even an accumulation of a reasonable part of the income of property for so long a period as one hundred years may be allowed.[65] In Illinois, in the absence of a statute as to accumulations, the donor's general intent in favor of the charity prevails, but the trust for accumulation, which is treated as merely a mode for managing the gift, is subject to the rule against perpetuities.[66]

II. CHARITABLE PURPOSES.

A. In General. The principal objects of charity, as established by the decisions of the courts, are: (1) Relief of Poverty and Distress; (2) Advancement of Learning; (3) Religion. The first two of these are clearly indicated in the enumeration of the Statute of Elizabeth;[67] the third, though not expressly there named, except as to the "repair of churches," is held to be fully within the spirit and intendment of the statute.[68]

B. Relief of Poverty and Distress — 1. May Be Combined With Other Purposes. The above purposes may be legally combined in a single gift. Thus a bequest of residuary personal estate to "the poor and the service of God" is valid as a charity;[69] and so is a devise for "the furtherance of Conservative principles and religious and mental improvement," since, while a gift to further conservative principles may not alone be charitable, the gift is to be construed as intended for all these principles in combination.[70]

2. Gifts For Indefinite and Special Purposes. Relief of poverty includes as valid charities gifts for the poor indefinitely,[71] or for the poor of a particular parish, church, or place,[72] and gifts for the benefit of the poorer classes or for the indigent insane;[78] such as gifts to aid or establish hospitals, dispensaries, asylums, orphanages, inebriate retreats, and the like;[74] also bequests for letting land to the poor at low rentals,[75] for free excursions for poor children,[76] or for emigrants to particular colonies;[77] or in aid of the poor rate.[78] A bequest to a town of a fund to be used by it for the support of the poor means prima facie that only the income of the fund is to be expended;[79] and when it is clear that the income only was intended to be applied for such a purpose, or for purposes of education, equity will enjoin the appropriation of the principal to any building or improvement of real estate.[80] A bequest "to the poor" of a certain county means technically those whom the county is legally liable to support, and its county board has the right to the custody and control of the fund.[81] A gift is always bad as a charity if the objects defined by the donor go beyond those defined in or by analogy to the Statute of Charitable Uses; but relief of poverty need not be expressed in so many words as the object when it is clear that that was intended, as in the case of income to be distributed "amongst respectable single women of good character above the age of sixty years, to be paid by monthly instalments, but so that no recipient shall receive more than 10*l* per annum."[82]

are those who would take under the statute of distributions, though the trustees might have selected from a larger class, or the court of chancery might exercise the power of selection.[98] In all gifts to poor relatives those who become rich before distribution are to be excluded.[99] In general a gift to the "poor" or "poorest" of a special class can be only treated as charitable when it can be construed as a gift to those actually poor, and not to the least wealthy of a prosperous class;[1] and while a gift to a town for the relief of its poor, or for their education, is usually held not to be too vague,[2] a bequest to "the most deserving poor of" a certain city has been treated as void for uncertainty,[3] as any worthy object may be said to be "deserving."[4] The fact that a charitable institution is so described or limited as to show that the inmates are expected to have some means, and to contribute by payment and bequests to its support and development does not make it less a charity.[5]

4. Gifts to Friendly or Voluntary Societies. A friendly society established to raise a fund by the subscriptions, fines, and forfeitures of its members to provide for the widows of deceased members is not a charity. If on the decease of all its members a part of the fund remains unexpended it cannot be applied to charitable purposes under the cy-pres doctrine, but falls into the testator's residuary estate; and there is no resulting trust in favor of the legal personal representatives of the members.[6] But a friendly society formed to provide a fund for sick and distressed members, their widows and children, by the receipt of voluntary donations,[7] or such an association as a theatrical fund society,[8] whose rules provide for the relief of contributors or their orphans, is a charity, if its rules show that poverty is a necessary ingredient in the qualification of applicants for its benefits, and its fund may be administered cy-pres.[9] Generally in America unincorporated societies or voluntary associations, such as religious societies, are held capable, at common law, of taking as beneficiaries in a trust;[10] but in those states where the beneficiary must be certain, unincorporated societies, such as the Salvation Army, cannot receive the benefit of gifts in charity.[11] This is the rule in New York, even under the statute of 1893.[12] In Pennsylvania a benefit society organized or chartered for purposes of mutual benevolence among its members only, even though it does not make profit or declare dividends, is not an association for charitable uses, as its benevolence begins and ends at home.[13] In California a duly organized educational society, if governed by a constitution and having regularly elected officers, though unincorporated, can take charitable devises.[14] In general as a public charity is, in legal contemplation, derived from gift or bounty, a fund collected by rates and assessments, being in no respect derived from bounty or charity, or a subscription by a benefit society for mutual relief, is not charitable and does not require the intervention of the attorney-general in suits respecting it.[15]

cating young persons in "the domestic and useful arts;"[34] to worthy but not prosperous literary persons;[35] for the diffusion of useful knowledge and instruction among the working classes,[36] or to promote the knowledge of a particular language, such as the Irish language at Trinity College, Dublin;[37] for a trust "for educational purposes,"[38] either where no limit of space is expressed, or where the gift is confined in terms to a particular locality,[39] and although the limit, though real, is not geometrically exact, as in the case of a gift to a town "and vicinity";[40] for a gift to a town of a fund the income of which is to be "applied, under its direction, to the support of public schools in said town,[41] in such way as the town shall judge best"; and to "providing school books for the public schools,"[42] although this last clause does not authorize the town to buy books and present them to the regular scholars personally.[43] As charitable gifts are construed liberally, a fund to establish a school for poor children will not be limited to the town as it then was, but as it may be extended in territory or divided.[44] A bequest for "the education of poor children, or towards the maintenance of a good common school in said district," has been held to apply only to white children, where a subsequent statute authorized colored children to participate in the benefits of the common schools.[45] A bequest for the support of a free English school for the instruction of youth, "wherever they belong," does not limit the instruction to male children only.[46] A bequest to support "a school for the use of poor children" cannot be applied to a public school where both poor and rich children are instructed.[47]

2. TRUSTS FOR EDUCATION. A trust for education is not void because it does not define the mode of execution or the nature of the work to be done.[48] But the founder of such a charity may give directions for its management or place restrictions upon the use of his gift. spelling books and the Bible," is a valid charity.[49] The founder of scholarships in a college may also prefer his relatives for the enjoyment thereof;[50] in which case if, for any reason, the provision for the benefit of the next of kin fails, a residuary provision in favor of the college will apply both to void and lapsed legacies.[51] So a charitable gift may be made originally for a limited period or during the pleasure of the donor;[52] though, after it is accepted and acted upon, he cannot add new restrictions burdensome to the donee.[53] The donor may also limit the gift to a particular class of persons, such as the maintenance of a schoolmaster or the increase of teachers' salaries;[54] founding a school for the sons of gentlemen;[55] or for the higher education of young women to be selected in a certain order;[56] the diffusion of useful knowledge among workingmen;[57] a school for indigent scholars;[58] the education of the children of a certain county,[59] or of a certain district in a city,[60] or of poor orphans of a county to be selected by the county court or town officers.[61] The absence of power in the charter of an incorporated college to aid worthy indigent students does not affect its right to avail of a general law allowing all incorporated colleges to receive donations and manage them for the uses for which they were given.[62]

D. Religion — 1. In General. Gifts for the advancement of religion were held charitable long before the Statute of Elizabeth, and are by analogy within that statute, though the "repair of churches" is the only reference thereto in its summary of purposes.[63] "No object is more clearly charitable, in the sense of the law, than the advancement of religion and education;"[64] and a bequest to a religious institution is prima facie a bequest for a charitable purpose, though, as some religious societies are not charitable in the legal sense, a gift to them generally may be too broad for the gift to be upheld.[65] In general a gift of property, to be lawfully applied for an indefinite number of persons by bringing them under the influence of religion, is prima facie charitable in the legal sense;[66]

donations of real or personal estate made to particular churches, when without restriction as to the use to be made of the property, are gifts to be applied for the promotion of public worship and of religious instruction which necessarily influence an indefinite and varying number of persons, though many of them may not be church members; and if in trust they have all the elements of a public charity.[67]

2. Gifts For Benevolent Purposes Distinguished — a. In General. It appears to have always been the policy of the law to distinguish between religious purposes and those of benevolence, and this is the case in the laws of Michigan and perhaps of other states.[68] The mere fact that an ecclesiastical organization is made trustee of an eleemosynary charity does not give a sectarian character to such a charity which, in the general scope of its benevolence, will be treated by the civil courts as essentially unsectarian when the donor has not disclosed a contrary intent.[69] Bequests for building, endowing, or ornamenting a church,[70] for keeping in repair any part thereof, such as a chancel or spire,[71] the pulpit,[72] or a window or monument therein,[73] or building or repairing a parsonage,[74] are charitable, as are also gifts for establishing or keeping up its chimes, organ, or clock;[75] for a course of sermons to be preached in a certain church building during every Lent,[76] or for a sermon, and to pay singers, on Ascension Day.[77] But a bequest for the maintenance and repair of a private chapel or a gift to the chaplain thereof is not charitable.[78]

b. Gifts For Churches Corporate and Unincorporated. A gift to a designated or described church or religious congregation is valid when it can be clearly seen what congregation is intended.[79] Thus a grant to a church, or for the use of a church, in a certain town is good at common law; the parish is the cestui que trust and the title vests in the pastor and his successors, rather than the congregation.[80] Its successor, if it ceases to exist, will be any other society holding the same faith which may succeed it.[81] So far as a denominational name is material such fundamental distinctions as exist between Trinitarians and Unitarians may be resorted to to define and limit the trust, but not usually lesser and more refined shades of doctrine existing in different branches of the same church.[82] A gift for the use of the ministry is valid even when there is no definite body capable of receiving and holding as trustee;[83] but when there is a definite number of persons ascertainable and clearly indicated for its benefits by the terms of the gift, it is not a public charity, however carefully restricted to religious uses only.[84] In those states where charitable trusts are not favored, a bequest or devise to an unincorporated religious society is invalid for want of a definite person to take the legal title.[85] This applies to a donation to the Church of England, that not being a corporate body.[86] In other jurisdictions it is immaterial that the church is not incorporated;[87] and a gift to trustees for such a society is often held valid when a like

gift directly to the society would fail for indefiniteness of beneficiaries.[88] Religious societies are necessarily allowed a wide discretion in dealing with their own funds, received in great part from voluntary contributions, which cannot be adapted to the criterions of a valid trust, or support a charity in perpetuity; such as procuring portraits of their ministers, erecting tablets or monuments to their memory, or providing excursions for the children.[89] A fund given to be invested in making Christmas presents to the scholars of a certain Sunday school has been held not a charitable gift;[90] but the general rule in such cases is that all the objects to which a society, by the usages of a denomination, may appropriate its funds are to be regarded as charitable, though similar objects would not be treated as charitable under a secular trust.[91] And when ecclesiastical duties are enjoined under a charitable foundation, the court of chancery will not determine whether they are properly performed, but will leave such questions to the ecclesiastical authorities.[92] Gifts to missionary societies, foreign or domestic, are charitable;[93]

so are gifts to a bible or tract society,[94] or to the missionary cause of a particular denomination,[95] or to a preachers' aid society, though incorporated in another state.[96] In all such cases the implication of an intent to create a public charity arises either from the character of the body to which the gift is made or from the publicly avowed purposes of its organization and action.[97] A trust for a parish school or for the poor of the church is germane to the objects of a church;[98] and so of a bequest to a church for establishing a support for a city missionary;[99] but an ecclesiastical society cannot by agreement apply a bequest intended for the support of its pastor to the support of a free school, nor can it thus divert a fund left for a school to the support of the ministry.[1]

c. Gifts For the Ministry. Gifts to maintain a preaching minister,[2] for a pension for a perpetual curate,[3] or for unbeneficed curates[4] are charitable. Immediate gifts to ministers of religion personally, or to those ministers who shall be selected by a designated person, are private gifts;[5] but a general gift for the benefit of the ministers of any place or denomination, or a perpetual gift for any of such ministers, is charitable.[6] So is a gift for the endowment of a professorship in a theological seminary;[7] for the education of students of a

"Endowment" defined.— "Endowment" in section sixty-two of the English Charitable Trusts Act of 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137) refers to an endowment made for a specified and particular purpose or trust, and does not include the investment by a charity of its voluntary contributions in land or other permanent securities. particular locality in the ministry of a specified congregation;[8] or for the support of a course of eight sermons to be preached annually in Lent, in a certain church, on specified subjects.[9] A gift to the minister of a certain Roman Catholic chapel, "and his successors, ministers of the same chapel, for ever, as an addition to his stipend of such chapel," has been held in England to be intended for the benefit of the office and the church, and not of the individual ministers, and to be void as a perpetual trust;[10] so a bequest to "the then minister" of a certain church is void;[11] and a bequest to an individual minister of religion is not made charitable by the expression of a wish that he apply it generally for the benefit of others.[12] A gift for the purchase of advowsons or presentations is not charitable.[13] In West Virginia, where the law of charitable trusts is not adopted, and the beneficiaries must be certain, a bequest of income to be applied annually to the pastor's salary of a certain church was held void for uncertainty,[14] but a bequest in trust for such a purpose of a fund which the testator himself held as trustee is valid.[15]

d. Gifts For Burial-Grounds or Monuments. A grant for the maintenance of a churchyard or burial-ground in connection with a church or religious society, or of a public burial-ground, or a burial-ground for all persons of a certain race, class, or neighborhood, is doubtless in the nature of a dedication for a pious or charitable use.[16] But in the absence of statute a trust for the support of graves, or of tombs or monuments outside of churches, when not intended for a public benefit, is not a charitable use but a private trust.[17] And it is at least doubtful whether the cemetery of a burial society whose articles of association contemplate the burial there of its own members only, but which has long permitted the interment of other inhabitants of the community, upon the payment of certain fees, not from a charitable motive, but as a source of private profit, can in the absence of express statute be regarded as held for a public charitable use.[18] An unlimited bequest to a corporation authorized to acquire property by bequest or devise and incorporated to cremate the dead in the quickest, best, and most economical manner appears to be charitable and valid.[19]

e. Gifts For Bibles and Religious Education. Gifts for the circulation and distribution of bibles and other religious books and tracts are charitable.[20] So any gift or bequest of money for the purpose of printing and circulating works of a religious tendency, or of extending the knowledge and influence of a particular religion,[21] is a charitable gift or bequest which a court of equity will sanction and uphold by settling, when possible, a scheme therefor, without making distinctions between one kind of religion and another.[22] If the tenets of the sect to be aided inculcate doctrines adverse to all religion, or subversive to all morality, the court will not assist the execution of the bequest, but will declare it void; but it will not avoid the bequest when the tendency of the tenets is not immoral, though it may consider them foolish or devoid of foundation,[23] as in the case of a bequest for the purchase of a library on spiritualism,[24] or the circulation of the works of Henry George on the land question.[25]

f. Validity of Gifts Derogatory to Christianity. In the Girard Will case,[26] where the will excluded ecclesiastics or ministers of any sect from holding or exercising any station or duty in the college in Philadelphia thereby founded, but did not exclude the teaching of Christianity therein, this was held not derogatory to the Christian religion as a part of the common law in Pennsylvania; but under a devise to "The Infidel Society of Philadelphia, hereafter to be incorporated . . . for the purpose of building a hall for the free discussion of religion, politics, &c," it was held in that state that such a society would probably never be incorporated there, and that a court of equity would not enforce such a gift as charitable in any sense.[27] In England, while penalties formerly attached to the observance of any forms of religion except those of the Established Church, trusts for the promotion of all forms of religion appear to be now lawful, as the result of the toleration acts.[28] The legality at common law of teachings impugning the doctrine of the Trinity and of bequests to assist them was at one time doubted;[29] but later a bequest for the aid of Unitarian congregations was held valid, and this is now the accepted doctrine in both England and America.[30]

3. Pious and Superstitious Uses — a. In General. In early times the meaning of such words as "pious" and "godly" was not limited to objects of a religious or eleemosynary character, but embraced all purposes originating in motives of philanthropy, including the repair of bridges or harbors as well as the repair of churches or relief of the poor.[31] In England, until the Reformation, and more particularly until the reign of Edward VI, pious and charitable gifts were not confined to aiding schools, churches, or living persons, but extended to masses, prayers, perpetual obits, and lights for the souls of the founders, their families, and friends;[32] but by force of statutes enacted in that reign and later, gifts for the latter purpose were abolished in England and became known as "superstitious uses" and as pertaining to a false religion.[33]

b. Gifts in Aid of the Roman Catholic Religion For Masses, Etc. In England a gift to aid in restoring the papal supremacy was held void, as contrary to public policy;[34] and the following were also invalid: a bequest for the purpose of bringing up children in the Roman Catholic faith;[35] or to "Roman Catholic bishops" and their successors in Ireland, where they are not particularly named, and at a time when such offices were not known to the law in Ireland;[36] or to such purposes as the superior of a convent or her successors might judge expedient;[37] although it was also held that such illegal gifts were not void for the benefit of the heir or executor, but were to be applied cy-pres as the king might appoint under the sign manual.[38] And there, as in Alabama and Wisconsin, gifts for prayers or masses for the departed are invalid,[39] chiefly on the ground of want of living beneficiaries; while in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Kansas, Iowa, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Province of Ontario, and Ireland such gifts are upheld, at least when intended for the benefit of the testator or other named persons.[40] In New York a bequest for prayers for the souls in purgatory was held to be too indefinite;[41] but a like bequest for the testator personally was there held valid, the strict English doctrine as to superstitious uses being at the same time treated as contrary to the spirit of our institutions.[42] A trust in a Catholic bishop and his successors for the use of his churches is held not to violate the rule against perpetuities,[43] and to be a trust, of which the courts will take cogizance and assume control, as a charitable and pious use, to prevent abuse, perversion, or destruction.[44] A bequest for building a Catholic convent in a certain town is a gift in trust to persons vested with power under the church laws to direct as to the erection of such buildings.[45]

4. Religious Purpose Must Be General — Gifts to Religious Orders. Religious purposes have been said to be charitable only when they tend directly or indirectly toward the instruction or edification of the public, or bettering their condition.[46] An annuity to an individual, so long as he spends his time in retirement, devotion, and self-denial, is not charitable, nor is a gift to a voluntary association of persons, so long as they live together in retirement and perform acts of devotion.[47] Where the main object of a will was the education for the Presbyterian ministry of the testatrix's nephew, if he so chose, in which event the final balance of her estate was to be paid to him when ordained, otherwise the whole of her estate to go to a college for the education of Presbyterian ministers, this was held to be a private benefit to him and not a religious use, though the Presbyterian church might be incidentally benefited.[48] Religious orders of men bound by monastic vows are forbidden by statute in England, making void gifts for their support or aid.[49] So far as brotherhoods and sisterhoods aim at relief of distress they are lawful and probably charitable;[50] if they have no charitable objects beyond self-improvement or companionship they are like clubs; an immediate gift to such an institution is a valid private gift to its members,[51] but as a perpetual trust it is void for remoteness.[52] A Young Men's Christian Association whose work is partly charitable but whose purposes are also social, including the giving of lectures and entertainments for its members, athletic exercises, and the sale of food at a coffee or lunch counter, is not a public charitable association.[53]

E. Other Purposes Enumerated in Statute of Elizabeth — 1. Aged and Impotent. Under the enumeration in the preamble to the Statute of Elizabeth of the "aged" and "impotent" a gift to widows and orphans of a parish is a valid charity;[54] in such case, and in the case of a gift to the "aged," it is not necessary to express that they are also poor,[55] or to limit the benefit of the public purpose to a particular area, such as a parish or county, though it may be so limited.[56] A gift of a fund to pension off the "old and worn-out clerks" of a firm is a good charitable gift, and comes within the enumeration of "impotent" as well as "aged."[57]

2. Disabled Soldiers, Mariners, or Orphans. As maimed soldiers and mariners as well as orphans are expressly mentioned in the Statute of Elizabeth, a bequest "for the benefit of disabled soldiers and seamen who served in the Union army in the late war of the Rebellion in the United States, their widows and orphans," is a good public charity.[58]

3. Gifts to the Government — Relief of Public Burdens. A gift to the government,[59] or to build a house of correction or sessions house,[60] or a town house,[61] in aid of the poor-rate,[62] or for police and other rates, and defraying the expenses of registering voters[63] are also for charitable purposes; but a bequest for the building of "a Catholic reformatory for boys" in a certain state is held prima facie void for uncertainty, though capable of being made certain by evidence.[64]

4. In Aid of Captives, Prisoners, or Slaves. The words "Relief or redemption of prisoners or captives," in the Statute of Elizabeth, include those in prison under condemnation of crime, as well as persons confined for debt, and support gifts for distributing bread and meat among them annually, or for enabling poor imprisoned debtors to compound with creditors.[65] An ancient trust, established when insolvency was a crime, in favor of "poor prisoners" in London, meaning adult prisoners for debt, after it had lapsed because of the abolition of imprisonment for debt and the closing of debtors' prisons, cannot, it seems, under any scheme, be applied to the education of convicts' children.[66] A gift of land to raise money to prosecute offenders is not good as a charitable use;[67] and on the other hand a bequest tending to encourage offenders, such as purchasing the discharge of poachers for non-payment of fines or expenses under the game laws, is against public policy and void.[68] The words "ports and havens" appear to include within their equity common ponds or watering-places.[69] Prior to the Civil war in the United States it was held in Mississippi that a bequest in trust to send the testator's slaves to Liberia, there to remain free, was a valid trust;[70] but later it was held that the American Colonization Society, incorporated in Maryland for the emancipation and colonization in Africa of American slaves, could not take a legacy to interfere with slavery by the emancipation of slaves, at least not in the United States,[71] or for supporting slaves in Liberia.[72] In Massachusetts it was held that, as a fugitive slave was not a criminal by the laws of that state or of the United States, a bequest to trustees to be expended in their discretion for the benefit of fugitive slaves might be used by them to relieve the distress of such slaves or to buy their freedom.[73]

F. Purposes Not Enumerated in Statute of Elizabeth. Many other gifts for purposes beneficial to the community are held to be charitable, though not falling under any of the twenty-one classes of trusts named in this statute.[74] Thus, although the statute expressly mentions only "repair of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, seabanks, and highways," yet the improvement of a town or city and the support of public buildings therein are held to be within its Test of charitable quality.— "What is the tribunal which is to decide whether the object is a beneficial one? It cannot be the individual mind of a judge for he may disagree, toto coelo, from the testator as to what is or is not beneficial. On the other hand, it cannot be the vox populi, for charities have been upheld for the benefit of insignificant sects, and of peculiar people. The answer must be that the benefit must be one which the founder believes to be of public advantage, and his belief must be at least rational, and not contrary either to the general law of the land, or to the principles of morality." Per Fitz Gibbon, L. J., in In re Cranston, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 431, 446.

spirit and intent;[75] and this includes a gift of real or personal property for a public park or garden,[76] even when the land given to a city therefor is beyond the corporate limits;[77] improvement of the streets, or the planting of shade or ornamental trees on waysides or within school-house grounds or other public places,[78] or the "paving, lighting, cleansing and improving" a town,[79] or the erection of public monuments to military men of rank.[80] So a bequest of residue to the chancellor of the exchequer for the time being "to be by him appropriated to the benefit and advantage of my beloved country Great Britain," is a valid charity bequest.[81] Although such objects as public libraries,[82] societies for improving the cultivation of vegetables and extending their use,[83] for curing maladies of quadrupeds or birds,[84] or for the prevention of the slaughter of living creatures for food or for vivisection[85] are chiefly matters of modern growth, yet all these are held to be charitable purposes; and so is a gift to continue a periodical for the protection of animals,[86] or to a society for the prevention of cruelty to children,[87] or for the promotion of temperance by suppressing the liquor traffic;[88] or a gift to trustees to be "applied for the promotion of agricultural or horticultural improvements, or other philosophical or philanthropic purposes, at their discretion;"[89] or a gift to a city or town of waterworks when the water is to be supplied to both rich and poor without charge;[90] or for beautifying and improving the grounds of its waterworks.[91] A parliamentary grant of a duty on coal imported into a town to aid the pecuniary inability of its inhabitants to protect it from the encroaching sea was held to be a gift to a charitable use;[92] and so of a gift by parliament of a duty on coal imported into London, for the purpose of rebuilding St. Paul's church after the great fire in London.[93] So a condition that the free inhabitants of ancient tenements in a borough should have a right of dredging for oysters in an estuary of the sea has been sustained as charitable because, in the language of Lord Cairns, it is "a public trust or interest."[94] So of a bequest for the benefit of a volunteer corps, though if it is conditional on the appointment of the next lieutenant-colonel it is void for remoteness, as he may never be appointed;[95] or for the increase and encouragement of good servants;[96] a gift for deserving but unsuccessful literary persons;[97] a "Rest Home for worthy working girls," or an "Old Ladies Home";[98] or "a retreat and home for disabled, aged or infirm and deserving American mechanics,"[99] or for establishing life-boats,[1] or for assisting emigrants;[2] or poor immigrants and travelers passing through such a city as St. Louis to settle in the west;[3] or a theatrical fund association,[4] or for a fire-department relief association,[5] or a fire-engine and house.[6] A gift to further advocacy of a change in a state constitution, and for "the attainment of woman suffrage in the United States" has also been recently held in Illinois to be charitable,[7] contrary to the view taken earlier in Massachusetts.[8] A gift to protect citizens of African descent in their civil rights and to prevent discrimination against them is a valid charity;[9] as is also a gift for the civilization and improvement of certain Indian tribes,[10] or for ameliorating the condition of the Jews in Jerusalem.[11] Under a bequest of income to a town, conditioned under penalty of forfeiture for its violation, which is to "be invested yearly in 'United States flags,' to be used within the said town on all proper occasions," the town may apply a reasonable part of the income to flag-staffs, halliards, and the like.[12] Masonic lodges, when classed as charitable institutions in state statutes, will be recognized as such by the courts;[13] and generally such lodges are held charities as to the funds they receive for charitable uses, though not as to those received for the entertainment of their members.[14]

G. Purposes Not Charitable. A legacy for the public encouragement of yacht racing, though aiding toward good seamanship, is not a public charity.[15] So of a private society for practising vocal music;[16] of trusts to feed sparrows,[17] or for keeping the testator's clock in repair at his home,[18] or to aid a company obliged to keep a stock of corn for the London market, and to sell it when the lord mayor directed.[19] As the gift must be expressly or by necessary implication for the public benefit, a private museum, or a library established by private subscription for the use of the subscribers, is not a charity.[20] An appropriation by congress for the benefit of a local corporation created by state laws, such as the World's Columbian Exposition, to help it out of financial difficulty, and enable it to complete its undertaking at Chicago, though aiding a great public enterprise, is not a charitable trust.[21] A legacy toward contributions for the political restoration of the Jews to Jerusalem was early held not charitable.[22] The same is true of a gift for the advancement of civilization generally, or for improving the "social welfare" of the people.[23] A provision by will for a brass band to march to the testator's grave on holidays and "other proper occasions" and play funeral marches is void as a charity.[24] Charities, being permanent foundations, do not include country schools under the voluntary system in Pennsylvania, which are temporary in their object and formation.[25]

III. OTHER STATUTES AFFECTING CHARITIES.

A. Statutes of Mortmain — 1. IN GENERAL. The rule of public policy, which forbids estates to be inalienable indefinitely in the hands of individuals, does not apply to charities established for objects of public and lasting benefit, and courts will in favor of charities readily infer an intention in the donor that they should be perpetual, even when no trust is expressly declared.[26] The earliest form of charity consisted of gifts of land to religious houses, and as one effect of such gifts was that the crown or any intermediate lord lost the military and other services due from the tenant, statutes were early passed in England forbidding land to be so conveyed, under penalty of forfeiture to the lord of the fee or to the crown.[27] In England many charitable devises have been defeated

27. The earliest complete statute was 7 Edw. I, c. 2, passed in 1279. As various evasions of this statute were devised by the ecclesiastics, further acts were passed to defeat them, namely, 13 Edw. I, cc. 32, 33; 18 Edw. III, c. 3; 15 Rich. II, c. 5, which statutes imposed forfeiture of the lands on all direct or indirect gifts of lands to or for religious houses, and extended the law to under the Mortmain Act of 9 Geo. II, c. 36, enacted in 1736, and substantially reënacted in 1888,[28] prohibiting dispositions of land to charitable uses, unless by deed made twelve months and enrolled in chancery six months before the donor's death. But that statute, like some of the earlier mortmain acts, was wholly English, being dictated by local policy, and did not extend to Scotland, Ireland, or the Colonies.[29] It differed from the earlier acts in that the crown could not defeat the right of the donor's representative to recover a gift of land, if followed by the donor's death within a year.[30] In America this statute is always treated as never adopted here as part of our common law.[31] In England the matter is now

While charitable trusts were originally molded into shape chiefly by ecclesiastical tribunals this statute, like the Statute of Elizabeth, was enacted by a legislature in which the lay element predominated, and its declared intent was whereas "gifts or alienations of lands, tenements, or hereditaments in mortmain, are prohibited or restrained by Magna Charta, and divers other wholesome laws, as prejudicial to and against the common utility; nevertheless, this 'public mischief' has of late greatly increased, by many large and improvident alienations or dispositions made by languishing or dying persons, to uses called 'charitable uses,' to take place after their death, to the disherison of their lawful heirs." This act avoided the gift or conveyance only so far as related to the charitable use. Young v. Groves, 4 C. B. 668, 56 E. C. L. 668; Doe v. Pitcher, 2 Marsh 61, 3 M. & S. 407, 6 Taunt. 359, 1 E. chiefly regulated by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act of 1891, which does not extend to Scotland or Ireland,[32] and the Local Government Act of 1894.[33] In Ohio it is held that a state statute, avoiding a bequest for charitable purposes if the testator dies within twelve months leaving issue, is constitutional.[34] It is against the policy of the mortmain acts and the practice of the English chancery to invest charity money in land, at least prior to the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act of 1891;[35] but it is only in a very special case that the court will sell a charity estate.[36]

2. Affecting Corporations. Corporations were formerly held incapable, under the statute of wills, of taking by devise,[37] but in equity they were permitted to accept a gift for charitable uses.[38] A corporation may now be the trustee of a charity when the trust is not inconsistent with the purposes of its organization.[39] In New York, under the early statute of wills authorizing a devise of inheritable estates to any person except bodies corporate and politic, it was held that charitable corporations were within the exception,[40] but a devise to a natural person in trust for such a corporation was good, though the corporation itself could not have taken.[41]

B. Statute of Uses. Uses having been introduced into England by the ecclesiastics to avoid the statutes of mortmain, the effect of this statute was to convert the beneficiary's interest into a legal in place of an equitable estate;[42] and, as land was not devisable at common law, a gift, when the system of uses was introduced, of the use of land to a corporation was rendered void by the Mortmain Act.[43] But the Statute of Uses applied only to private trusts; and, as the beneficiaries in charitable trusts need not be capable of taking the legal title,[44] the statute does not apply to these trusts which in their nature are so continuing and executory that they cannot be terminated and executed without violence to the donor's intention, especially when the trustee appointed by the donor has a discretion as to the method of promoting the objects intended.[45] If land is conveyed in trust for a church in a certain town, under certain regulations and contingencies, and the church is never organized or the regulations observed, the use does not pass but remains in the grantor and his heirs.[46] A devise of land to an unincorporated charitable society is not necessarily void because of the devisee's nonexistence, but the legal title descends to the heir at law in trust for the society.[47] In New York,[48] Wisconsin,[49] Michigan,[50] and Minnesota[51] uses and trusts were both early abolished by statute.

C. Statutory Limitations Upon Amount. Grants and gifts to charities are often subject to statutory limitations, such as the provision in Georgia that devises shall not be made to charitable or civil institutions of more than one third of the testator's estate to the exclusion of his wife or descendants;[52] which provision is violated by a devise in remainder to charity of the testator's entire property, depriving a child of the power of disposition and reducing its interest to a life-estate;[53] and, when the statute is thus violated, the devise is not valid to the extent of one third of the estate, although other statutes enable the court of chancery to effectuate a testator's purpose by approximation, by giving effect to his charitable intent "in a manner next most consonant with the specified mode prescribed."[54] Under the New York statute of 1860,[55] by which only one half of a testator's estate is devisable to charitable or educational institutions, debts and the widow's dower are first to be deducted in determining the value of his estate, and he cannot give to different purposes in the aggregate more than he could give to one;[56] the act applies only to gifts to a class of certain private corporations, and not to gifts to municipal corporations,[57] or to a permanent charitable devise to trustees.[58] More frequently the limitation is as to the amount which charitable institutions may take and hold; and such a limitation is not violated by a gift which carries the total beyond it, but the title to the valid part of the gift only vests in the beneficiary and is void as to the excess; or if delivered and accepted, and it is a trust that is not indivisible, it is subject to being divested as to the excess.[59] It seems, by the weight of authority, that such a bequest may be made valid as to such total by a legislative increase after the testator's death.[60] A limitation upon the amount of land that can be held by a religious corporation does not apply to a Young Men's Christian Association.[61] A charter limiting a charitable corporation's property to a fixed sum is not modified by a general law authorizing such corporations to take property in trust without any expressed limit.[62] In the absence of a statute fixing the limit to which a charitable corporation can receive and hold real estate, the donor's heirs cannot question the grant by showing that the corporation has real estate sufficient for its corporation ends; the state only can raise such objection, unless the heirs are so authorized by statute expressly or by necessary implication,[63] although heirs and devisees, whose interests are directly affected, have in some states been permitted to impugn gifts to corporations not competent to receive and hold such gifts.[64]

church, and not against the power of testamentary disposition.[65] Such legislation was a marked feature of the early history of this country, it being held under the early state statutes in New York, by whose statutes land could only be devised to natural persons, that churches could not take lands by devise;[66] nor could the state, or the United States, or "the people of the United States," as trustee;[67] and in Connecticut, that the churches could so take only when expressly authorized to do so by charter.[68] In Delaware they could take lands only by deed,[69] and a bequest to a church of the proceeds to arise from the sale of land is void as being a gift of realty.[70] In Illinois, by the act of 1845, substantially reënacted so late as 1872, they were restricted to ten acres of land.[71] In Kentucky the limit was made fifty acres;[72] in Tennessee five acres at one place.[73] The inability of a foreign religious corporation to hold real estate does not extend to realty which is directed by will to be converted into personalty.[74] In Maryland, article 38 of the Bill of Rights declared void bequests to or for ministers of the gospel made without the prior or subsequent sanction of the legislature.[75] Charter authority to take land by purchase does not exempt the corporation from the mortmain statutes by which it cannot take by devise,[76] or enable it to take a bequest of personal property.[77] A statute which authorizes religious societies to take gifts of land "for purposes of public worship" does not apply to a devise to a church of a parsonage, library, and other personal property;[78] nor does an act which authorizes the conveyance of land for the residence of a minister authorize a devise of land, or a bequest of money, for that purpose.[79] only to themselves. When a testator, in appointing trustees, designates them by official titles instead of by name they take as if they had been designated by their proper names.[80] In England, when trustees are directed to be appointed for a charity, evidence of the fitness of such of them as are not appointed ex officio is required, and their written consent to act must be produced.[81] A bequest to the consistory of a church is, in effect, a bequest to the corporation itself, and the church members are to have the benefit of the bequest as controlled by the consistory.[82] So a bequest "to the trustees" of an institution is a bequest to and for the benefit of the institution, though those having charge of it are called managers in the charter.[83] Whenever a person gives property by will, and points out the object, the property, and the way it shall go, a trust is created, unless the will clearly shows that his expressed desire is to be controlled by the trustee, and that the trustee shall have an option to defeat it.[84]

2. Corporations — a. In General. A corporation may now be the trustee of a charity.[85] A municipal corporation may in its corporate capacity accept a gift of real or personal property left to it in trust for charitable purposes, such as the erection of a court-house or town house for public use,[86] or the repair of highways and bridges,[87] and may as trustee hold and execute the trust.[88] When duly authorized to accept a charity fund, it can appoint agents or trustees to manage the trust, being itself responsible for them and its security.[89] If it is afterward incorporated, the identity of the municipal corporation is not lost, and the property held by the inhabitants of the town in trust passes to the city on the same trust, without the action of any court, and trustees cannot be appointed for such cause alone, to manage the funds in place of the city.[90] So, where a city charter was repealed, and a new one granted, its area being enlarged from two square miles to nearly one hundred and thirty, the city's title under a trust for charity was not affected.[91] And where a town in New York was not capable of taking when a bequest for its benefit was made in Massachusetts, but was afterward empowered to do so in New York, the fund was ordered to be paid to it.[92] As municipal corporations only have power to receive money when so authorized by charter or statute, they can only take property in trust for charitable purposes which are within their enumerated powers and duties,[93] and be required in equity to administer the trust.[94] Hence, if not expressly authorized by statute, a municipal corporation cannot, by the apparent weight of authority, accept a trust for aiding the worthy poor;[95] nor can it accept a bequest on condition that it support a clergyman.[96] But in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and California a municipal corporation may be a trustee for public purposes germane to its duties, without express authority given by statute, such as aiding its poor;[97] by erecting hospitals for the indigent, the blind, or the lame;[98] by starting young artificers in business;[99] and in Missouri by relieving emigrants passing through such a city as St. Louis on their way to settle in the west.[1] Parishes, as well as towns, cities, or counties, may take and hold in trust lands or funds given for purposes of education,[2] and school districts may take a bequest for the support of schools.[3] But a city, having no legal power to support or aid "indigent deserving persons not paupers," cannot legally be made trustee of a gift for such a purpose.[4] A gift to a state in trust to apply the fund in executing a lawful governmental function is valid; but if the state refuses to accept the trust no substitute trustee can succeed to its sovereign powers in administering it.[5]

b. Corporations Not Yet Formed. By the common law a charitable gift to a corporation as trustee is held good, though it is not to be incorporated until after the donor's death, in the case of a will;[6] or in the case of a deed, until after the deed is delivered.[7] This is the doctrine even in some of those states,[8] like Virginia, where the beneficiaries must be certain, it being there held that, while a devise in presenti, to take effect immediately on the testator's death, is void when the beneficiaries are numerous and uncertain, yet an executory devise to take effect upon condition that incorporation follow within a reasonable time, that is, within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years thereafter, is valid.[9] So a dedication of land to a public or charitable use may remain in abeyance until the proper grantee or city comes in esse, when it will vest in such grantee or city;[10] and the trustees of a charity may be impliedly authorized to apply for and accept an act of incorporation to carry out the testator's plans.[11] But a legacy to a charitable institution described as in being cannot be treated as made to an institution to be created;[12] nor can an institution already established at the date of the will receive a bequest to such as "may be established."[13] By the early decisions in New York, Indiana, and Connecticut there must be an existing trustee capable of taking at the testator's death;[14] and if a will prescribes certain rules and methods of government for a proposed institution not in being, it will not be sustained upon the ground that, without applying for a special act, the institution may be incorporated under the general law which provides for a plan of incorporation different from that presented in the will.[15] A charitable gift to a foreign incorporated association is also valid;[16] but incorporation after the gift has not always been permitted to act retroactively and validate the gift.[17] A misnomer in designating a corporation, when the object intended can be ascertained by evidence, or a change of name or place, or an increase in the number of its corporators, or naming a county where it is not located does not invalidate a charitable gift thereto.[18] If a corporation takes property for purposes which are in themselves valid, but which the corporation is incompetent to execute, the donor's heirs cannot take advantage of such inability, but the objection must be raised by the state, unless other provision is made by statute expressly or by necessary implication.[19] A gift to an unincorporated association becomes the property of the association as a body, and not of its members.[20] When real estate is devised to such an association and no person exists in whom the title may vest, the title descends to the heir at law for its benefit, and upon its incorporation it will be entitled to receive the property.[21]

3. Trustees For Charities Based Upon Voluntary Contributions. The jurisdiction of chancery over charities extends to such as are founded or supported by voluntary contributions or subscriptions when there is property impressed with a charitable trust;[22] but the members of a committee formed to receive such gifts are not trustees but agents; some of them cannot require the others to account, and even if the subscribers were suing for that purpose the attorney-general would be a necessary party to the suit.[23] A relief fund raised by donations of the people for the immediate relief of the sufferers from a large conflagration in a town is a private and not permanent or general charity; it is limited to a specified class of persons in being, and if an unexpended balance remains after the immediate object is fulfilled, and the donors are unknown, such balance cannot properly be applied by those having the fund in charge, in aid of the poor rates of the town, or continued in trust, but a scheme will be devised by a court of equity to repair the losses of the sufferers by the fire.[24]

4. Trust Does Not Fail For Want of Trustee. Under the common-law rule, though no donee, or a donee incapable of taking and holding the property, is named for a gift or dedication of property to charitable uses, it will not fail, as a court of equity or the legislature may appoint trustees, and a charitable trust is not permitted to fail for want of a trustee.[25] So equity will supply any defect arising from the trustee's death, disability, removal, or failure to accept the trust.[26] Trustees should not be appointed who are hostile to those for whom a charitable gift was made.[27] In states which do not follow these rules there must be defined trustees, so indicated that they shall be as clearly ascertained as in the case of a grantee in a deed.[28] A bequest to the "acting treasurer" of a certain association or society sufficiently designates the trustee intended.[29] A bequest does not fail if the agencies for carrying it out cease to exist, or are changed by the legislature.[30] So, upon the death, in the testator's lifetime, of a trustee named by him, the gift survives for the benefit of the charity which is the cestui que trust, though at law the legacy would lapse.[31] When the discretion reposed in the trustee is of a personal nature the gift lapses, inasmuch as the means of certainty as to the execution of the donor's wishes are lost by his death.[32]

the instrument of gift, or by parol evidence as to the surrounding circumstances.[33] Thus, the "Trustees of the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church" may take under a devise "to the trustees or those who hold the funds of 'the Theological Seminary of Princetown, New Jersey,'" where the former corporation is shown to have been generally known as the "Theological Seminary at Princetown," and no other body answers the description in the will.[34] So a legacy to the "Fund for Disabled Ministers of the Presbyterian Church" will go to the "Presbyterian Board of Relief for Disabled Ministers, and the Widows and Orphans of Deceased Ministers," where it appears that the latter is the only corporation engaged in relieving such ministers when disabled; that the testatrix knew and approved of this Board, and that no such body existed as that named in the will.[35] So, as to donees and beneficiaries, though no such organization exists as the Sisters of Charity, the court in Massachusetts will not permit a charitable trust therefor to fail for want of a trustee, but will itself undertake its administration.[36] So a legacy to the "Hahnemann Hospital at Chicago, Illinois," will go to the Board of Trustees of "the Hahnemann Medical College," for the benefit of its hospital, where it appears that "Hahnemann" was not applied to any other body in Chicago, and the testatrix frequently visited the hospital.[37] And a legacy to the "Chicago Training School for Nurses" will go to the "Illinois Training School for Nurses," where it is shown that the latter, being in Chicago, is the only like institution there, and that the testatrix was interested in that school, and contributed to its support.[38] A bequest to the "Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society of Maine" may be received by the "Trustees of the East Maine Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church," if the former does not exist, and the later was incorporated to maintain the cause of domestic missions in Eastern Maine, where the testatrix lived when she died.[39] Error in the name of a designated institution, causing a certain institution among several to be selected by the court, involves, when depending upon parol evidence, a finding of fact which will be disturbed only for palpable error.[40]

6. GIFTS TO MAIN OR SUBORDINATE BODIES OR OBJECTS. When a charity is given to a subordinate object or body of a charitable religious institution the trust vests in the main society in aid of which it is granted.[41] This applies when the bequest is to the unincorporated department of a corporation;[42] but the gift to the latter must appear to be in ease of the former.[43] In those states, like Maryland, where a trust is valid only when it can be enforced by a court of equity, a bequest to a religious corporation in trust to invest the fund and pay the income to an unincorporated, voluntary association, such as the "Auxiliary of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church," the trust is void.[44] A bequest to the Methodist church of which his wife might be a member when she died, for such purposes as "the conference might deem most advantageous for said church; more especially," belongs to such church only when ascertained upon his wife's death.[45] A gift to a diocese which is subdivided before the testator's death, but without schism or change of doctrine, may be divided between the two new dioceses.[46]

7. Discretion of Trustees. A gift to a charity may, by the common law, leave the selection of its objects and purposes to trustees.[47] And even a testamentary gift in remainder to such charities as shall be deemed most useful by the legal representative of the tenant for life is a valid charity.[48] When such discretion is exercised fairly and honestly, the action of the trustees within the limits of the discretion confided to them is not subject to control by the courts.[49] A bequest to the testator's executors for education, enjoining upon the school commissioners of the county to see that the fund is properly applied, and that "they get their rightful share of my estate," does not enable the commissioners to interfere with the trust fund.[50] But where the testator's executors were directed by his will to erect and transfer a church to the Presbyterian church, provided the nucleus of a congregation could be found in the neighborhood, it was held that the church trustees, and not the executors, were to judge whether there were enough persons to organize a church.[51] To constitute a charitable trust, the trustee's discretion must be confined to charitable objects;[52] and such discretion can never be so wide and indefinite that the trustee's conscience cannot be held to the carrying out of some purpose by a court of equity.[53] A gift to the trustees of a church to devote the income to such destitute and needy churches in the state as they may select, so as to promote the cause of religion, is not void for uncertainty.[54] But a discretion vested in trustees will not, it is held, sustain such broad purposes as "the increase and prosperity of the gospel,"[55] or "for the benefit of institutions of learning under the superintendence" of a conference of the Methodist church.[56]

If no rule or order of selection of the beneficiaries is provided by the founder of a charity, there is a necessary power of selection in the trustees.[57] When the founder clearly fixes or prefers a particular mode of administration and selection, that mode must be preferred and followed. Where, for instance, a testatrix declared in her will a preference for one method of administration, "if the same can be made practicable and legal"; and, if not, then for other methods in a certain order, the first method is to be preferred, and, if that is impracticable, then the others must be pursued in their designated order.[58] Under a gift "to such charitable institutions and objects as his trustees may determine, and in such manner as they may think fit," the English practice is to direct the trustees to submit, for the approval of the judge at chambers, a proposal showing to what charitable institutions and objects, and in what sums respectively, they propose to apply the funds in their hands.[59] In the case of a public trust, unlike that of a private trust, many powers of the trustees may be exercised by a majority, but the powers thus exercised are usually those of administration only.[60] The trustees' misapplication of the income of a charity, if made in good faith and continued for many years, will not be lightly disturbed;[61] and charitable trusts, when obscure and ambiguous, have frequently been construed by usage.[62]

8. Trustee's Refusal or Resignation. As in the case of other trusts, the trustee of a charity may so distinctly repudiate and disavow the trust, and hold the property adversely as to acquire a complete legal and equitable title.[63] A charity does not fail, nor does a charitable gift revert to the donor, when the trustees named by him decline to accept and execute the trust.[64] Usually a designated trustee can refuse to accept a charitable trust; but a town after accepting such a trust cannot renounce it.[65] The donor, after conveying in trust for a charity to trustees, cannot appoint new trustees, if he has not reserved the power, but it is for the court to appoint the new trustees.[66] If trustees appointed to hold land for a charity decline the trust or fail to execute it, the heirs at law may hold it in trust or other trustees may be appointed by a court of equity.[67]

B. Beneficiaries and Objects — 1. Certainty and Definiteness — a. In General. A donation to charity must always be reasonably certain in its material terms; this applies not only to a clear designation of the class of persons in whose behalf it is created and the nature and quality of their interests, but also to the property donated, and the manner in which the trust is to be performed.[68] When the class has been designated, uncertainty and indefiniteness as to the individuals and numbers to be benefited are necessary and essential elements to the creation of a valid charitable trust;[69] and such a trust will not, by the common law, be permitted to fail either for want of a trustee or because its particular purposes are uncertain.[70] The endowment of a certain hospital "for the support of charity patients" shows a sufficiently definite class of persons to be benefited.[71] A bequest in trust to pay a certain sum as income to the "proper authorities" of an incorporated church, to assist for the ministry young men of the church to be selected by the pastor and church council, is not void for uncertainty.[72] But a bequest to enable the families of the testator's late workmen at B or their children to become apprenticed, or to emigrate abroad, is not a charitable trust, and fails as a gift to individuals because of uncertainty.[73] So a devise of realty which only describes the devisees as "those members . . . of the Society of the Most Precious Blood who are under my control, and subject to my authority, at the time of my death" is void for uncertainty in the beneficiaries.[74] And where a testator left his property "to be distributed to such persons, societies or institutions as they may consider most deserving," the trust was held too indefinite to be carried into effect, as the beneficiaries were not defined by name or class.[75] In general a gift in trust to be distributed to the poor of a particular town, parish, or county, according to the discretion of a trustee, the rector of a church, or a court of equity, is not void for uncertainty in the beneficiaries.[76] A charitable institution may take, when capable of identification, though it is only indicated by the descriptive name of a particular charity.[77] The Connecticut statute is stricter than the common-law rule in requiring certainty in the beneficiaries, or at least a definite class of persons, and an ascertained mode of selection;[78] but even in that state a bequest in trust for building and maintaining, in a certain town, a church of a particular denomination is not too uncertain as to the beneficiaries, whether they be regarded as those who attend the proposed services or as the inhabitants of the town.[79] Where the English law of charitable trusts is rejected by statute or decision, as was formerly the rule in New York,[80] and is still the case in Virginia,[81] Maryland,[82] Minnesota,[83] Michigan,[84] and probably also as to realty, though not personalty, in Wisconsin,[85] the beneficiaries must be certain and capable of enforcing the trust in a court of equity.[86] In Virginia the gift must be to definite beneficiaries, and in such form as will enable a court of equity to control the trustees' discretion and ascertain whether they have committed a breach of trust.[87] In Maryland and West Virginia a trust for the benefit of indefinite beneficiaries or objects is invalid whenever the same gift made directly to such beneficiaries or objects would not be sustained.[88] In Maryland a gift for the use of necessitous Methodist churches in the United States is held too indefinite;[89] as in New York is a devise in trust for the support of a missionary "in preaching the gospel in the destitute, distant regions

In Virginia a gift in trust to a named Roman Catholic bishop, or his successor, for the benefit of an unincorporated association known as the "Sisters of St. Joseph," is invalid because of the uncertain and fluctuating nature of the beneficiaries; but under the early legislation of that state charitable gifts in favor of the literary fund or of schools are sustained, which without the statutes would have been held invalid. of the west;"[90] and, in North Carolina, bequests "for home missions,"[91] or for "foreign missions and to the poor saints."[92] In states favoring charitable trusts, a bequest for all the religious societies in a city,[93] or for the poor churches in a city,[94] or to a Catholic bishop "for Roman Catholic charitable institutions in his diocese;"[95] or a trust to aid "indigent young men" of a certain town or state in fitting for the evangelical ministry,[96] is valid. In Wisconsin, under the statute provision[97] that "express trusts may be created . . . for the beneficial interests of any person or persons, when such trust is fully expressed upon the face of the instrument creating it," a bequest for a charity is not invalid because its beneficiaries are uncertain;[98] and they are sufficiently designated by a conveyance to the trustees of an incorporated religious society for the use of its "members."[99] In New York every perpetual trust, in which an ascertained beneficiary was lacking, or in which the purpose was not clearly defined, was long treated as void;[1] but now, by the act of 1893,[2] no gift "to religious, charitable, or benevolent uses, in other respects valid, shall be deemed invalid by reason of the indefiniteness of the beneficiaries."[3]

The New York statute.— The narrow view long entertained in New York, and culminating in the decision in Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29, 28 N. E. 880, 41 N. Y. St. 951, 27 Am. St. Rep. 487, 14 L. R. A. 33, setting aside a large bequest in the will of that eminent jurist, Hon. Samuel J. Tilden, for a library and reading room in New York city, finally resulted in such general dissatisfaction as to occasion the enactment of N. Y. Laws (1893), 703, § 1, which provided: "No gift, grant, bequest or devise to religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses, which shall, in other respects be valid under the laws of this state, shall or be deemed invalid by reason of the indefiniteness or uncertainty of the persons designated as the beneficiaries thereunder in the instrument creating the same. If in the instrument creating such a gift, grant, bequest or devise there is a trustee named to execute the same, the legal title to the lands or property given, granted, devised or bequeathed for such purposes shall vest in such trustee. If no person be named as trustee then the title to such lands or property shall vest in the supreme court." See Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, 55 N. E. 568; Dammert v. Osborn, 140 N. Y. 30, 35 N. E. 407, 55 N. Y. St. 586; Hull v. Pearson, 36 N. Y. App. Div. 224, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 324. By section two of this act the supreme court has control of such gifts, and the attorney-general is to represent the beneficiaries and

b. Beneficiaries Indefinite or Restricted. A characteristic of a public charity also is that it must, consistently with existing laws, be applied for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, which number may include the rich as well as the poor.[4] However numerous or uncertain those may be who are ultimately to be benefited by a charity, yet it will be sustained whenever they can be ascertained by the donor's general purpose, especially when they are sufficiently indicated to bind the conscience of the trustee to whom he has given a power of selection,[5] even in a jurisdiction where only courts of law exist, and the execution of the trust cannot be judicially compelled.[6] So dedications of land for charitable or public purposes are usually held good without definite donees to take title, as the legislature or a court of chancery may appoint trustees who may maintain actions in regard to the land.[7] The gift, if public and for the benefit of undetermined persons, need not be to a charitable institution.[8] A bequest to aid free public schools is valid, being as definite as to beneficiaries as the rules governing the subject require;[9] and the validity of such a bounty is not affected by the fact that the state has provided for the maintenance of such schools for all children of school age enforce such trusts; and, as recently amended (by N. Y. Laws (1901), c. 291) the court may, when the circumstances have so changed as to render impracticable or impossible a literal compliance with the terms of the instrument, "upon the application of the trustee or of the person or corporation having the custody of the property, and upon such notice as the court shall direct, make an order directing that such gift, grant, bequest or devise shall be administered or expended in such manner as in the judgment of the court will most effectually accomplish the general purpose of the instrument, without regard to and free from any specific restriction, limitation or direction contained therein; provided, however, that no such order shall be made until the expiration of at least twenty-five years after the execution of the instrument or without the consent of the donor or grantor of the property, if he be living."

The Pennsylvania statute.— In Pennsylvania it was provided by the Act of April 26, 1855 (Pub. Laws (1855) 331), that "no disposition of property hereafter made for any religious or charitable use, shall fail for want of a trustee, or by reason of the objects being indefinite, uncertain, or ceasing." within the territory intended to be benefited.[10] Public charities are said to begin where definite trusts end;[11] and the beneficiaries thereunder are never required to show that they contributed to, or have any personal interest in, the trust property, as their interest is measured by, and limited to, the uses for which the property is held.[12] A bequest for the aid or benefit of defined persons is not a charity, but a trust only, and subject to the rule against perpetuities; such as a gift to be distributed among certain poor families named, or certain persons identified in the bequest or gift.[13] A gift to charity may restrict admission to its advantages to a class of humanity, and still be public. It may be for the blind, the mute, those suffering from special diseases, for infants or the aged, for women or for men, or for different callings or trades. It is public when the classification is determined by some distinction which involuntarily affects any of the whole people, although only a small number may be directly benefited.[14] In the case of a school, it is no objection to its validity that the school exists for the benefit of a restricted class of persons.[15] The distribution of its income may also be private, to private persons, and by a private hand.[16] But distinct public quality in the trust is always required, and if the instrument creating it allows the fund to be applied to purposes not charitable, the gift fails as a charity.[17] Where a testator left a part of his estate, which he had himself maintained as a museum and pleasure-ground for the benefit of the public, who were admitted thereto under certain restrictions, to his son with an annuity for their continued maintenance in the same way, and the son accepted the gift with the assurance that this should be done, it was held that no charitable trust was created, as it was not intended that the public should acquire any rights.[18]

c. Doubtful Beneficiaries, How Ascertained. Under the common-law rule the beneficiaries may not only take when they are uncertain, but when ambiguity and difficulty is found in determining who they are, or what are the purposes intended, the court may decide this by considering the whole scope of the instrument,[19] or by admitting parol evidence as to the surrounding circumstances,[20] as has often been done in determining what charitable corporation was intended by the terms employed;[21] or it may employ the fund, according to the testator's general intention, to another similar charity, under the cy-pres doctrine,[22] or it may sanction an agreement or compromise for dividing the fund between the different claimants.[23] A charitable gift cannot be sustained when no beneficiary is indicated, and no person is appointed to select the beneficiary.[24] Whenever a discretion is given by the founder of a charity to trustees to select the beneficiaries out of a class, it is not, under the common law, necessary that they be designated by name or specifically pointed out.[25] Thus a bequest in trust to the executive committee of the American Peace Society, to be expended in the cause of peace, is held sufficiently definite as to the beneficiaries.[26] So a bequest for the benefit of such charities as the testator's trustee or executor shall think proper has been repeatedly upheld.[27] In carrying into effect, by means of a scheme, a charitable bequest for religious purposes, when the terms of the gift are indefinite, the religious views of the donor have sometimes been regarded, but it is not a rule that they will be in more than a restricted sense.[28] If each denomination of Christians had one missionary society bearing its name, and a bequest were left simply to "the Missionary Society," the testator's professed religious belief would throw light upon the meaning, as it could not well be presumed that a zealous Catholic could intend thereby a Protestant missionary society, or that a zealous Trinitarian intended such a gift for a Unitarian society.[29] But where a fund was bequeathed by a Catholic to found "St. James' Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum" and a hospital, it was held that the founder's religious belief was not to be considered, and that the name did not show intent to make the charity denominational, or to subject it to the control of the Catholic church.[30] If, following a schism in a church or ecclesiastical organization, a legacy is claimed by each of two bodies which bear the same name, it will go to that claimant which retains the church edifice, if any, and which is recognized as the true organization by the church authorities under the ecclesiastical principles and usages accepted by the organization before the division took place.[31] If the beneficiaries are clearly indicated it is not necessary that they be in existence when the gift takes effect. Thus, it seems that a bequest in trust for the poor of an incorporated parish or city is valid, though there are no poor there at the date of the testator's death.[32] A gift to trustees for the benefit of a voluntary unincorporated association has been held valid where such an association could not itself take because of indefiniteness.[33]

d. Certainty as to Objects Intended. Certainty of objects and certainty of beneficiaries are so closely related that, in the main, the same rules apply to both as to definiteness in the gift. A distinction exists between a trust that is void for uncertainty, and an uncertainty that is simply indicative of an absence of intent to create a trust. When it is sought to show by implication, as from the use of precatory words following a gift, that a trust was intended, an uncertainty as to the object, or as to the subject of the trust, will be a reason, though not necessarily conclusive, for holding that no trust was designed by the testator; in the absence of convincing proof, it will never be assumed that the testator intended a void trust,[34] but the trust will be administered cy-pres by the court of chancery.[35] A gift of money to trustees to be expended "in the purchase and distribution of such religious books or reading as they shall deem best" sufficiently defines the objects intended, as the word "religious" refers prima facie in this country to literature which tends to promote the Christian religion.[36] But Christianity is a part of the law of the land, so as to entitle the courts to base their judgments upon it, only so far as its precepts have been incorporated in the law as a component part thereof.[37] A devise of property in trust "to the cause of Christ, for the benefit and promotion of true evangelical piety and religion" to be distributed as the trustees "may think fit and proper," is sufficiently certain,[38] as is also a devise for "the dissemination of the gospel at home and abroad."[39] It has been held that a bequest for education should indicate its character;[40] but that appears not to be the prevailing view, especially when the mode of application is left to the discretion of trustees,[41] or when education at a particular institution or place is mentioned.[42] In Indiana a gift in trust to executors to be applied "to the education of colored children in the State of Indiana" is held not void for uncertainty;[43] but a devise "to the orthodox protestant clergymen of Delphi, and their successors," to be expended according to their discretion, "in the education of colored children, both male and female," the object being stated to be "the moral and religious improvement and well-being of the colored race," was there held too vague both as to the trustees and beneficiaries.[44] In Pennsylvania an early devise of real and personal property to the unincorporated Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, to be applied under its direction "for the distribution of good books among poor people in the back part of Pennsylvania; or to the support of a free school, or institution, in or near Philadelphia," was held not invalid for indefiniteness.[45] In Texas a devise to a county "for the benefit of public schools" is held sufficiently certain;[46] but a deed of land for an academy to "German citizens comprising the neighborhood six miles west of Brenham, in the east edge of the Labade Prairie, Washington County" and to "trustees yet to be appointed by said citizens" was void for uncertainty as to both the trustees and the beneficiaries.[47] Wherever charitable trusts are not favored, they will only be sustained when their objects are clearly and precisely defined.[48] Thus, in Virginia, a bequest to trustees for such purposes as they consider may promise to be most beneficial to the town and trade of Alexandria is void.[49] A devise to "a public seminary" is not too indefinite, but may be applied to the seminary of the testator's county, or to any seminary which his executor or a court of equity may select.[50] A gift for building a church or a Catholic convent in a certain place is not too indefinite;[51] but in a bequest "for a Catholic reformatory for boys" in a certain state, "reformatory" is a word of too wide and uncertain signification to support the gift.[52] In Wisconsin, where the beneficiaries must be certain, a bequest "to be used" by a certain bishop "for the benefit and behoof of the Roman Catholic Church" held to be too indefinite, it not being determinable whether the entire church or a particular church is intended;[53] although a general gift to a bishop would seem to be for the church at large, or for the diocese, according to the circumstances. When a fund is left for distribution among different charities or among the destitute, the mode of distribution must be definitely pointed out.[54]

2. PARTIAL INVALIDITY. If distribution is provided for to a class not the proper objects of charity, as well as to those who are so, the whole gift is rendered void.[55] So, when charitable purposes are so mixed up in an instrument with other purposes of so indefinite a nature, or so indefinite as to the division of the fund for different purposes,[56] that the court cannot execute them, or when the description includes purposes which are legal, but may or may not be charitable, the whole gift fails for uncertainty, even though a discretion is vested in the trustees.[57] On the other hand, when the legal and illegal provisions are separate and divisible, or when the trustees are given a discretion to apply the fund either to a legal or an illegal object, the trust is valid for the legal object, and its application will simply be restrained within the bounds of the law.[58] When so restrained, that part of the fund as to which an invalid trust is created belongs to the donor.[59] Equity does not ordinarily assist a volunteer claiming the benefit of an imperfectly executed deed, but in the case of charities, defective instruments are often aided by the court;[60] they must, however, be merely defective, and not void or incomplete, for equity will not give life to a void or non-existing instrument, such as a will or deed.[61]

V. CONSTRUCTION AND VALIDITY OF CHARITABLE GRANTS.

A. Charities How Favored. The courts always give effect to charitable gifts when that can be done consistently with the established rules of law; and, without forcing any rule of construction they resort, if necessary, to the most liberal rules the nature of the case admits of.[62] Even if the charity is, at the time of the gift, incapable of taking or not in existence, equity will appoint a trustee, and the title will vest as soon as the charity acquires capacity to take.[63] In the construction of donations to charitable corporations the purpose for which the Rules of construction.— In Rotch v. Emerson, 105 Mass. 431, 433, Wells, J., states the following among other rules for construing charitable bequests: "The terms used are not to be measured separately, but each is to be considered in its relation to the entire provision, and the general meaning of each restricted by its associations, and made subordinate to the main purpose. . . . If the main purpose is apparent, to institute or endow a charity, it will not fail by reason of a want of definiteness in the specification of the objects towards which its benefits are to be directed."

donee was incorporated may be considered;[64] and a second gift to a charity is properly interpreted as was that previously established.[65] A distinction is made in construing charitable gifts between those parts of the instrument which define the gift and its purposes and those which relate only to the mode of administration.[66] In construing such instruments courts of equity consider charity as the substance, while in other instruments the simple intent of the donor and the mode in which it is to take effect, are deemed of the substance.[67] A gift by will may be upheld, although the testator refers to some past or intended declaration of the particular charity, which declaration is not made or cannot be found, and although the selection of the objects of the charity, and the mode of application are left to the discretion of trustees; and even though the trustees refuse the gift, or die, or their appointment is revoked in the testator's lifetime, causing a lapse of the bequest at law.[68] Where, for instance, a will shows that a plan for carrying out the testator's object was afterward to be developed and left with his executor, a failure to do so will not by the common law override his general charitable intent and render the provision void.[69] This applies though the testator's plan, as communicated to his trustee by parol, proves to be only general and fragmentary.[70] The requirements of the statute of wills and the statute of frauds, by which the entire scheme of a charity should be in writing,[71] do not prevent an unincorporated charitable society from taking under a devise of realty for its benefit, if its by-laws sufficiently designate its objects as coinciding with the purposes of the devise.[72] Whenever a will making bequests to charity has to be judicially construed to clear up ambiguities, the expenses of the suit, including an attorney's fee for the defeated party, are to be paid out of the testator's estate.[73] Even when a charitable gift is adjudged void for uncertainty, yet, if it has been well and faithfully administered, all expenses of caring for the property should be paid from the estate, and reasonable compensation be made for its management.[74] As to income misapplied by the trustees of a charity, they will be required to account for it, without regard to the bar of the statute of limitations; but an application of income made in good faith and continued for many years will not be readily disturbed, especially after the lapse of a considerable time.[75] Upon the removal of the trustee of a charitable relief fund for fraud or malfeasance he may be allowed expenses incurred with the approval of its board of control, but not commissions as trustee, or counsel fees, or other disbursements made in resisting such board's claim to the trust fund.[76]

B. Property Included in Charitable Gifts and the Right, Title, or Interest Acquired. As charities are favored by the law, and are presumed to be perpetual, a deed to trustees for a charitable use, such as religious worship, passes prima facie a fee, though it does not run to their heirs and assigns.[77] So a devise of land to a corporation for charitable purposes passes a fee simple in the land, though it contains the words "so that the profits or interests arising therefrom be annually appropriated to the objects of said societies forever."[78] Where a testator ordered his real estate sold, and the proceeds divided among certain persons, excepting and reserving twenty acres of woodland "forever for the use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church to hold their camp-meetings on," the twenty acres were held to pass to his devisees subject to a perpetual easement in favor of the church members for camp-meetings.[79] A devise of the rents of a "house" given to charity carries the rents of not only that part of the lot on which the house stands, but of the whole lot.[80] A bequest of a fund to a town, to be used by it for the support of the poor, means prima facie that only the income of the fund is to be so expended.[81] The equitable interest of the beneficiaries under a charitable trust becomes fixed at the time of their selection or appointment.[82]

C. Conditions in Grants to Charities. A gift in trust for charity, when made conditional upon a future and uncertain event, is subject to the same rules and principles as any other estate dependent upon a condition precedent; if the condition is never fulfilled the estate never arises, and if it is too remote and indefinite, it fails ab initio under the rule against perpetuities.[83] So whenever an estate is given or granted, not upon condition, but as a conditional limitation, it is void if it does not take effect within the time limited by the law against perpetuities.[84] There is a wide distinction between deviation from the founder's intention as to the objects of the charity, and a deviation from the directions as to the management; between conditions, precedent or subsequent, and administrative limitations as to the control and management of the trust.[85] Conditions attached to grants for charitable purposes must be performed within a reasonable time, if no time is named. A gift of land to a town for a school-house "provided said schoolhouse is built by said town within one hundred rods of the place where the meeting-house now stands," is upon condition subsequent, and is forfeited by a delay of twenty years to comply with the condition.[86] So, under a grant of a lot on condition that a church be erected thereon, and that it shall "forever thereafter be used as a house of worship," there is a forfeiture if, after the church is erected, the property is sold and conveyed to secular uses.[87] A bequest to a Unitarian church and society, "so long as they maintain their present essential doctrines and principles of faith and practice," is forfeited by a change to a Trinitarian system of faith and practice.[88] If a church is endowed on condition that "the black gown shall be worn in the pulpit" so long as legal, the condition is a continuing and valid one which must be complied with in order to secure the continued benefit of the fund.[89] Conditions subsequent, especially as applied to charities, are not favored by the law;[90] and a condition subsequent, created by the use of such a word as "provided," does not prevent the vesting of the property in a charitable corporation, for its corporate purposes.[91] Under a devise of land for an old ladies' home, which the testator does not endow, but providing for a reverter, if sold or used for any other purpose, this condition subsequent is not broken by a delay of three years in opening and establishing it, or by letting the land to pay taxes, insurance, and repairs.[92] But an absolute legacy to a church, accompanied by the words "I suggest" its use for completing the spire, if unfinished, or for the work at the church mission, or if that is abandoned for relief of the poor of the church, does not create either a condition or a trust.[93] And so of the expression of any desire, request, or hope, when, upon the whole instrument, it does not amount to a command.[94] So a mere specification of the use to which the property is to be applied, as "for common school purposes," without any provision for reëntry or forfeiture, is not upon condition.[95] A court of equity may relieve against conditions, when, in view of changed circumstances or otherwise, they become more burdensome than the trustee is willing to assume.[96]

D. Condition or Trust. A condition is distinct from a trust, though every trust implies a condition that the trustee will administer it faithfully.[97] A conveyance on condition may enable the grantor to enter for condition broken, but when the conveyance is in trust the only remedy is against the trustees.[98] In general a conveyance for a perpetual charitable use does not create a conditional estate, but a trust for the charitable use which is not liable to be defeated by non-user or alienation, without an express condition therefor.[99] The words, in a deed to a religious society, "in trust nevertheless, and upon condition always," may import a trust, but do not necessarily create a condition.[1] Where money was paid from the royal chest of Spain for land in Mobile conveyed to the king of Spain "for the purpose of building thereon a parochial church, and dwelling house for the officiating priest," the king was held not to be a trustee for the church.[2] Nor can there be a trust upon a direct gift to a clergyman or other person without restriction.[3] A conveyance of land, with a church thereon, to a bishop to be "forever held for the use of the Protestant Episcopal church" in a certain town, creates merely a trust, and is not upon a condition involving a forfeiture.[4] A conveyance of a site for a church, providing, as part of the consideration, that the "church, when on said site, shall, when not in use by the" corporate grantee congregation "be open for use to" other specified denominations, creates a trust in favor of the latter which equity will enforce.[5] A bequest to a college, to aid students by loans of free scholarships, is not a trust, but a valid gift directly to the college, to be used by it within the scope of its corporate functions.[6] So a residuary bequest to certain churches "to buy coal for the poor of said churches," without direction to invest the principal and expend the income, does not create a trust, but merely dictates the manner in which the property is to be used.[7] And a grant or gift to a religious society, "the interest thereof to be paid to their minister forever," is a gift to the society.[8] A devise to a certain church "absolutely, to be used by said church in aiding the cause of home and foreign missions equally," is an absolute and valid gift to the church, and not a trust, if the church is incorporated and authorized by statute to receive gifts for missions.[9] A gift to an incorporated missionary society, whose work includes both domestic and foreign missions, is not received by it as a trust because of the donor's direction to apply it to domestic missions.[10] In general any gift to a religious society is a gift in trust for its proper objects.[11]

E. Donor's General Charitable Intent — Gifts For "Benevolent" and "Philanthropic" Purposes. It is immaterial whether the purpose is called charitable in the gift, or what the donor's motive may have been, if the object sought to be attained is charitable and legal in its nature.[12] As a charitable gift, above all others, is to be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat, it appears at one time to have been thought that, under the rule whereby when a word has two meanings, one of which will effectuate, and the other defeat, the donor's object, the court is bound to select that meaning which will carry out his intention, the word "benevolent" might be treated as equivalent to "charitable."[13] It may still be true, as was held formerly, that "benevolent," when coupled with "charitable," or any equivalent word, or used in such connection, or applied to such public institutions or corporations, as to manifest an intent to make it synonymous with "charitable," may have effect according to that intent.[14] Thus, a trust in favor of "human beneficence" and "charity" may be valid in view of the context.[15] So a bequest of a fund to be distributed "among and applied to such objects and purposes of benevolence and charity, public or private, including educational or charitable institutions and the relief of individual need, regardless of nationality or color, as the trustees for the time being shall deem worthy thereof," is a valid public charity.[16] A bequest "to charitable and deserving objects" has also been held good as a charity;[17] and so has a bequest "in trust, to be used purely and solely for charitable purposes,— for the greatest relief of human suffering, human wants, and for the good of the greatest number."[18] In general as many acts dictated by kindness or good will are benevolent which are not legally charitable,[19] a gift in trust to be applied "solely for benevolent purposes," in the trustees' discretion, is usually held void as a charity.[20] In New Hampshire "benevolent objects" may, upon the whole instrument of gift, be synonymous with "charitable objects."[21] In England a legacy for such "charitable or public purposes as my trustee thinks proper" has very recently been held too vague and uncertain.[22] It has also been held that "charitable and benevolent institutions" in a certain city, when designated as beneficiaries, must be both charitable and benevolent;[25] and that a gift to "benevolent, religious, or charitable institutions" is void, because, by force of the term "benevolent," it embraces objects which are not charitable in a legal sense.[24] So a gift to be expended, according to the discretion of the trustee, "in acts of hospitality or charity," not being confined to charitable purposes only, is void for uncertainty.[25] A bequest "for religious and charitable purposes" is held in Maryland to be void for uncertainty;[26] and in Wisconsin even a gift "for charitable purposes" is held to be too indefinite.[27] A gift of money "for some one or more purposes, charitable, philanthropic, or ," while not bad because of the blank, can be used only for charitable or philanthropic purposes, and as thus limited is not valid as a charity.[28] Gifts for public purposes at specified localities are held good;[29] and so of purposes conducing to the benefit of a county.[30]

F. Surplus and Deficiency. When the whole of a fund is given to a charitable foundation, a surplus subsequently arising, but not specifically disposed of, will be applied to the same or like charitable objects.[31] In such cases, where there has been an unexpected surplus, courts of equity have frequently authorized the application of the surplus by increasing the number of charitable objects, or by increasing the amounts paid to the beneficiaries, or by founding new cy-pres charities.[32] Where property was devised for a grammar school at a certain place, whose inhabitants would be greatly benefited by extending the gift to general branches of education other than the learned languages, and a scheme was decreed accordingly, it was held, when thereafter it was found that there was still a large surplus income, that the court had full jurisdiction to extend the application to such income beyond the mere literal intention expressed by the testator, provided the income be applied to subjects connected with that intention.[33] So if a testator's estate is in excess of his legacies of definite sums of money, although his will declares that he disposes of his entire estate, there is an intestacy as to the excess, as the rule as to imperfect enumeration does not apply when a sum of money is named in a will.[34] If on the other hand there is a deficiency of assets and nothing to show what the testator intended to do in that event, all general pecuniary legacies abate equally, and no legal distinction is made in this regard between legacies to individuals and legacies to public charities.[35]

G. Equitable Conversion. The doctrine of equitable conversion of realty into personalty[36] is important as applied to charities in those states, like Wisconsin, where the statute of uses and trusts, and the prohibition of perpetuities apply to gifts of real property for charitable uses, but not to gifts of personal property. By that doctrine a provision in a will for the investment of the testator's real property in a fund for the maintenance of a charity is a direction to convert such property into money, and such direction is effective from the time when the will takes effect, that is, from the testator's death.[37] And the blending of real estate and personal property in one fund for all the purposes of the will is evidence, though not conclusive, of an intent to have the whole estate treated as personal property, even when there is no real necessity therefor.[38] If such conversion is directed for a particular but void purpose, the doctrine of equitable conversion does not apply;[39] and if one of several bequests is void, there is a resulting trust pro tanto for the heirs at law.[40] A simple power in executors to sell lands for the payment of debts chargeable therewith does not work a conversion, as the duty to sell must be imperative.[41]

VI. ADMINISTRATION AND MANAGEMENT.

A. Methods of Administration. The administration of charities by the English chancellor involved two distinct powers, one under the sign manual of the crown, and the other under the general equity jurisdiction over trusts.[42] The former, which was not a judicial power of expounding and carrying out a donor's intention, but was a prerogative power of disposal by the crown in opposition to such intention, and of ordaining what he had not expressed, appears to have been exercised in only two classes of cases, namely: 1st, bequests to particular uses charitable in their nature, but illegal, as for a superstitious use, such as for a form of religion not tolerated by law; 2d, gifts of property to charity generally, without any trust interposed, and in which either no appointment is provided for, or the power of appointment is delegated to persons who die without exercising it.[43] The chancery power of administration of charitable trusts is distinct and different from the jurisdiction exercised under either the prerogative, or the judicial, power of cy-pres. The judicial power of administering a charity is not necessarily restrained because the instrument creating it restrains the powers of the trustees therein named; and when the controlling purpose appears to be the preservation of the charity, the directions for management are subject to the presumption that the founder knew that the judicial power existed, and implicitly agreed that it might be exercised when necessary.[44] So far as the chancellor's power and the cy-pres doctrine of the civil law were ultra-judicial, they are not recognized by the courts of equity in America, where the power, when a donor's particular intention fails, to execute his general intention as nearly as possible, is solely dependent upon the equity jurisdiction.[45] Most of the cases, English and American, which reject or condemn the doctrine of cy-pres, relate chiefly to that part of it exercised by the sign manual.[46] The general American rule now is that instruments creating charitable trusts are to be "so construed as to give them effect if possible, and to carry out the general intention of the donor, when clearly manifested, even if the particular form or manner pointed out by him cannot be followed."[47] This doctrine applies only to gifts to charitable uses, and not to trusts in general.[48]

47. Mr. Justice Gray in Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 163, 2 S. Ct. 327, 27 L. ed. 397. In Moore v. Moore, 4 Dana (Ky.) 354, 366, 29 Am. Dec. 417, Robertson, C. J., said: "We are satisfied, that the cy-pres doctrine of England is not, or should not be, a judicial doctrine, except in one kind of case; and that is, where there is an available charity to an identified or ascertainable object, and a particular mode, inadequate, illegal, or inappropriate, or which happens to fail, has been prescribed. In such a case, a Court of Equity may substitute or sanction any other mode that may be lawful and suitable, and will effectuate the declared intention of the donor, and not arbitrarily and in the dark, presuming on his motives or wishes, declare an object for him. A court may act judicially as long as it effectuates the lawful intention of the donor. But it does not act judicially when it applies his bounty to a specific object of charity, selected by itself merely because he had dedicated it to charity generally, or to a specified purpose which cannot be effectuated; for the Court cannot know or decide, that he would have been willing that it should be applied to the object to which the Judge, in the plenitude of his unregulated discretion and peculiar benevolence, has seen fit to decree its appropriation — whereby he, and not the donor, in effect and at last, creates the charity."

room for question.[50] Leases directed by the testator for so long a period as sixty years, with covenants for their perpetual renewal, operate as a substantial alienation of the premises;[51] and long leases will not be set aside when made by trustees who are given an unlimited discretion.[52] The fact that the powers of the donor's trustees are restrained by him does not limit the judicial power to direct an alienation, and thus make specific land inalienable forever.[53] As charities are established for objects of public, general, and lasting benefit, the courts will readily attribute an intention to the donor that they should be as permanent and perpetual as any human institution can be, whether so declared in terms or not.[54] But whenever an alienation of the estate becomes essential to the beneficial administration of the charity, from the lapse of time, or changes as to the condition of the property and the circumstances attending it, as happens especially in this country, because of our rapid growth, the court of chancery may authorize an alienation or sale of the property, and an investment of the proceeds in other funds or in a different manner, care being taken that no diversion of the gift is permitted.[55] This jurisdiction has been exercised notwithstanding a provision that "the trustees shall not alienate the land on which the school-room stands," it being held that such a provision will not prevent a court of chancery from permitting, in case of necessity arising from unforeseen circumstances, the sale of the land and the application of the proceeds to the purposes of the trust.[56] It has also been exercised where there was a specific direction that funds given to charity should be invested in certain named stocks, and in the course of time such investments became impracticable;[57] where a devise was made of a given tract, in trust to support a Congregational minister, and the trustees were directed "from time to time to lease the said farm for a term of not more than seven years nor less than three years, extraordinaries excepted," and a decree authorizing an absolute sale was declared to have been within the proper jurisdiction of the court;[58] and where it was directed that the principal of the fund to arise should be loaned only on real-estate security, it was declared that "if that particular form of security should fail or become unavailable, the trustees might be authorized to loan upon other sufficient securities without impairment of the trust."[59] So a decree for the sale of property conveyed to two charities, to be used by them jointly, and an apportionment of one half of the proceeds to each for a separate building, was made where it was shown that, by a change of circumstances, the location of the property had become unsuitable for the purposes intended, and that a structure to be used in common was impracticable.[60]

C. The Cy-Pres Doctrine — 1. Rules Applicable. The equity doctrine of approximation and that of cy-pres are both judicial principles of construction and not of administration.[61] The cy-pres doctrine, unlike that of approximation, as applied judicially, relates only to charitable gifts, and also to such gifts as are valid.[62] There must be a real necessity for finding another like object, and this is not determined by the advantage to the beneficiaries, but solely by the fact that a strict adherence to the original plan will destroy or impair the donor's general purpose.[63] A charitable gift which is illegal because contrary to the express words of a statute cannot be carried out cy-pres; but this rule is held in England not to apply when the gift is void only because it is contrary to the policy of the law.[64] When there is a particular definition of the objects intended, the court may not always be able to find another object so nearly answering a general purpose as to justify it in applying the doctrine of cy-pres;[65] and when it is clear that the donor intended only one mode of doing a charitable act, as an essential part of the gift, the court cannot apply the money cy-pres, if the particular mode of doing the act fails.[66] If the object is to build a church in a certain parish, and the parish will not permit it, it cannot be executed elsewhere;[67] but where a school was founded for the education of children within a certain district, which district was by statute converted into a dock, a scheme was framed for applying the funds of the charity cy-pres.[68] So where a college which was a beneficiary suspended, the fund was applied to another college, it being held that if the first college resumed its work, it would again receive its benefits.[69] The objects to be benefited need not be a permanent and enduring class.[70] But a bequest to a charitable institution which has ceased to exist in the testator's lifetime cannot be disposed of cy-pres,[71] a rule which does not apply if the institution comes to an end after the testator's death, but before the legacy is paid.[72] In England a gift does not lapse when made to a charitable institution which has once existed, but has ceased to exist;[73] but, in applying the cy-pres doctrine equity is always more ready, in the case of a gift to a charitable institution which has never existed, to infer a general charitable intention than to infer the contrary.[74] Property devised to one purpose, such as education, cannot, it seems, be judicially diverted to another purpose, such as religion, to relieving the poor or the sick, or to general charity,[75] although in one case Lord Eldon extended a large bequest for the poor inhabitants of several parishes beyond the purposes expressly pointed out by the will, to the instruction and apprenticing of the children.[76]

2. Trustee's Discretion and Court's Power of Selection. A gift by will of residuary estate to the testator's executor, "to be disposed of by him for such charitable purposes as he shall think proper," is an unconditional gift to charitable purposes, to carry out which a scheme will be framed by the court, if the executor accepts the trust, and then fails to make a selection, or if he applies only a small portion of the fund to charity.[77] And whenever there appears a general intention in favor of a class, and a particular intention in favor of individuals of a class to be selected by another person, and the particular intention fails because that selection is not made, the court will carry into effect the general intention in favor of the class, and will itself exercise the power to select the particular object of the charity.[78] But in England it has very recently been held by the House of Lords that a bequest to be applied for "such charitable or public purposes as my trustee thinks proper" is void for uncertainty.[79] There is a broad distinction between a gift direct to a charity or charitable institution and a gift to a trustee, to be by him applied to a charity; in the former case, the court gives the fund to the charity as a mere ministerial act; while in the latter case the court's jurisdiction over the trustee enables it to guard against a breach of trust, manifest incapacity, or the application of the funds to purposes foreign to the charity.[80] It is without jurisdiction to sanction, without the consent of the governing board of the trust, a scheme which ousts the board from its right of administering the trust, when it is capable of being effectuated, and no breach of trust is shown.[81] If the donor clearly intended his trustee to apply the fund according to his judgment and discretion for objects not of a permanent nature, the court will order it paid to him without a scheme.[82] After a scheme is once settled by a decree in chancery, the court has power to alter it from time to time, as circumstances may require, since the control of administrative functions is entirely distinct from conditions, either precedent or subsequent, imposed by the founder of the charity.[83] Even in those states which reject the English doctrine of parens patriæ and cy-pres, as well as in those which apply the fund cy-pres, the courts will sustain a charity when the plan and scheme for its management are left to trustees, and will uphold them in the fair exercise of their discretion;[84] but they will not do this, and will hold the trust void when the donor, merely expressing a preference for one kind of charity, as for education, has given the trustees such extensive power and discretion to use the fund for other charitable purposes that there is no designated class of persons who can claim the benefit of the trust;[85] and this is especially the case when the trustees are such irresponsible bodies as a "joint board of finance" to be appointed by the conference of a church, which a court of equity cannot control.[86] Discretionary power in a trustee may be implied as well as express.[87] When the trustee exercises such a discretion and applies the fund to a particular definite charity, under a scheme devised by him under the superintendence of a court of equity, his duties and powers terminate, and the trust is discharged.[88] The right of a donee to receive payment of the fund given for charity is not postponed until after a scheme is prepared for its application.[89]

3. LIMITS TO CY-PRES DOCTRINE. In order that this doctrine may apply, the donor's general charitable purpose for an object mentioned by him must be of such a kind that the court can satisfy itself that some other object can be found, answering in a reasonable degree and most nearly consonant, to such purpose.[90] If, for instance, a grant has long since been made, to tenants by the lord of the manor, of certain woods, in consideration of the repair of a particular portion of long sea-dykes, and the sea afterward recedes from that part of the manor so protected, a scheme may be settled for the management of such a charity cy-pres, as by providing for the repair of the whole or of other parts of the sea-dykes surrounding the manor.[91] So property once devoted forever to a charitable purpose for which there is scope at first, such as the release of those taken captive by Barbary pirates,[92] or the education of poor children in a certain district by an incorporated academy, and its successors, which academy is abandoned on the establishment of the public schools;[93] if, in the course of time, the object of such charity ceases, the property will ever after be applied, if possible, to some other like charitable purpose. So if money is directed to be set apart to buy land for establishing a soup kitchen and cottage hospital for a certain parish, in such manner as not to violate the mortmain acts, the benefit of the poor of that parish being evidently intended, if no land in mortmain can be found in or sufficiently near the parish to carry out that intent, a reference may be made to see if other modes may not be found of providing soup and medical attendance for such poor without a building for either of the purposes named.[94] In a case which came before Lord Bacon in 1619, where lands had been given before the Reformation to be sold, and the proceeds applied, one half to the making of a highway from the town in which the lands were, one quarter to the repair of a church in that town, and one quarter to the priest of the church to say prayers for the souls of the donor and others, the lord keeper declared the establishment of the uses for making the highway and repairing the church, and directed that the remaining one quarter, which could not because of the change of religion be applied as directed by the donor, be divided between the poor of the same town and the poor of the town in which the donor resided.[95] If a man and woman, each made a legatee by the same will, afterward marry in the testator's lifetime, both will take; and if two societies, to which legacies are given, amalgamate before the testator's death, the combined society is entitled to both legacies.[96] A bequest to a charitable corporation does not lapse because the corporation has discontinued part of its charity work,[97] or has closed one of its branches.[98]

4. EARLY ENGLISH DECISIONS NOT NOW RELIABLE. The early English decisions upon this doctrine, especially as applied under the sign manual, are not now reliable, as later the court of chancery repeatedly declared that the doctrine had been pushed to an extravagant length, and must be restrained.[99] According to such earlier decisions a charity devoted generally "to the poor" was not too vague;[1] but the court might limit such gifts, ut res magis valeat, as, under a gift to "poor inhabitants" of a parish, to the poor not receiving alms or parochial relief,[2] and this may still be the law, though the court doubtless has power to select proper objects of the charity without regard to whether they would operate to the relief of the poor rates or not.[3] So a general gift of money to a certain parish was decreed to the poor of that parish;[4] and when no use was mentioned in the instrument of gift it was held that it may be decreed to the use of the poor.[5] Where also a legacy was given "to the poor," and it appeared that the testator was a French refugee, it was directed to be given to poor refugees.[6] As late as 1767, Lord Chief Justice Wilmot said that the court thought that "one kind of charity would embalm the testator's memory as well as another."[7] A bequest by a Jew for establishing a jesuba or assembly for reading the Jewish law, being contrary to the established religion, was applied, under the sign manual, for the support of a Christian preacher and chapel at a foundling hospital — a result which could not be more than a pretense of carrying out the testator's intention.[8] In Massachusetts, and probably in most of the states, a gift for the poor of a particular church is now a valid charity;[9] while in New York it is held that a perpetual trust in a town for the benefit of its poor, when not limited to those for whose support the town is made liable by statute,[10] or to the poor of a certain church, is void for indefiniteness;[11] and in Connecticut a bequest for "the most deserving poor of" a certain town is held too uncertain.[12]

D. Supervision and Visitation. A scheme of charity is to be distinguished from a scheme or plan for administering it; in the former, while the courts may be expressly or impliedly empowered by the donor to direct the particular manner of carrying out the scheme, they cannot impinge upon, change, or modify the nature of the charity as established by the donor, or modify the manner of administration which he has particularized.[13] Their supervisory power often enables them to control the trustees or visitors in the direction and management of the trust, and this may be done under the power of visitation, but they have no authority to interfere with the just exercise of the trustees' powers and duties.[14] Only corporations, ecclesiastical or eleemosynary, and not civil or public corporations, are said to be visitable.[15] At common law the founder of the charity and his successors or heirs were the visitors, and if they became extinct or could not act, or became attainted, the visitorial power devolved upon the crown.[16] When there is a local visitor, the court of chancery has no jurisdiction over any subject within his cognizance.[17] The founder may delegate his power of visitation either generally or specially; he may appoint a particular mode in which a portion of the visitorial power shall be exercised, as by appointing a special visitor for a particular purpose and no further, in which case the power of a general visitor will be circumscribed to that extent.[18] The question whether a testator, in founding a charity, and appointing trustees has made them visitors depends on the nature of the powers delegated to them, rather than on the name by which they are called in the instrument of foundation; and no technical or precise form of words is necessary for the appointment of either general or special visitors.[19] A college or hospital, chartered by the state, but founded and endowed by private benefaction, is a charity, but also a private corporation;[20] and in all such cases, as the duties of visitor are strictly domestic, his power is confined to offenses against the private laws and regulations of the corporation, and he has no cognizance of acts of disobedience to the general laws of the land.[21] In New York it was early held that the court of chancery had no power of visitation.[22] Now, under the state constitution of 1894,[23] and the acts of 1895[24] and of 1896,[25] imposing upon the state board of charities the duty of visiting and inspecting all institutions of a "charitable, eleemosynary, correctional or reformatory character," such institutions are those in which indigent persons are supported by taxation, and do not include such eleemosynary institutions as the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, though its work is aided by an allow-

E. Supervision by Legislature. The legislature cannot, without the consent of the donor, materially change the execution of a charitable trust, unless there exists an exigency for such change;[28] but if the purposes of the charity may be best carried out and promoted by a change in the administration of the trust, without a diversion thereof, the legislature, as parens patriæ, may direct such a change.[29] The legality of a charity as a perpetual trust may be established by special act of the legislature, as well as by the courts acting under the general rules of law.[30]

S.) 119, 18 L. ed. 502, there was an action of ejectment by the heirs of William Stanley to recover for breach of condition a tract of land, situated in the city of Hartford, Connecticut, devised by the ancestor to an ecclesiastical society and their successors, and sold to the defendant by the trustees of such society, in pursuance of an act of the legislature of Connecticut. That act authorized the trustees, together with a third person, to sell the lands in the manner therein prescribed, and to invest the proceeds at interest, in bonds and mortgages of real estate of double the value of the amount invested, appropriating the interest to the use of the society, in the same manner, and subject to the same use, as the rents or income of said property were by will required to be appropriated. In his will the testator devised all his real estate to the ecclesiastical society, "provided, that said real estate be not ever hereafter sold or disposed of, but the same be leased or let," etc. The plaintiffs contended that this imported a condition, a breach of which forfeited the devise, and that the act in question was unconstitutional and void. In the circuit court for the district of Connecticut there was a judgment for the defendant, and the case was brought up on error. Judgment affirmed. After denying the plaintiffs' contention that there was a condition, the court said: "There is another ground of defense to this action that we are of opinion is equally conclusive against the plaintiffs. . . . In England, and in this country where a court of chancery exists, a charity of the description in question is a peculiar subject of the jurisdiction of that court, and in cases of abuse or misuse of the charity by the trustees or agents in charge of it, this court will interpose to correct such abuses, and enforce the execution of the charitable purposes of the founder. So, as lapse of time, or changes as to the condition of the property and of the circumstances attending it, have made it prudent and beneficial to the charity to aliene the lands, and vest the proceeds in other funds or in a different manner, it is competent for this court to direct such sale and investment, taking care that no diversion of the gift be permitted. . . . This power, in the State of Connecticut, it appears, is exercised by its Legislature, as in the present instance. . . . We cannot doubt that the power exists in the Legislature, and it is not for this court to revise the facts upon which it has seen fit to exercise it."

F. Place of Administration. The courts will not administer a foreign charity.[31] The charity is administered according to the law of the donor's domicile;[32] and the fact that it is to be administered abroad does not make the gift void, especially when it does not appear that it is not a valid charity in the foreign country.[33] A bequest to a charity, or upon a trust to be administered in another state or country, when lawful in the place of the testator's domicile, may be sustained in the state in which the fund is to be administered, though it contravenes the statute of the latter state against perpetuities, since it is not the policy of one state to interdict perpetuities in other states.[34] If the gift is clearly against the public policy of the state called upon to administer it, its courts may decline to administer it and remit the fund to the testator's domicile, but they cannot properly divest the title and transfer it to others.[35] A devise of land must be executed and be valid where the land lies;[36] and a devise of land in one state may be valid, when it would be invalid in the place of the devisee's domicile.[37] The validity of a charitable bequest of the proceeds of the sale of land owned by the testator in another country or state is determined by the law of his domicile;[38] and where a domiciled Australian gave money by his will to an English corporation for the purchase of land in England for charitable purposes, which gift would, if made by an English will, be invalid under the mortmain acts, it was held that those acts do not apply to colonial wills, and that the bequest was valid.[39] The legality of a gift to a foreign corporation usually depends upon the ability to take under the laws of the place where it exists or is domiciled;[40] but a foreign religious society cannot by comity have a better right than domestic corporations to take property by devise.[41]

Elizabeth the danger of misappropriation by trustees of property affected by charitable trusts led to the passage of several statutes to redress such abuses through charity commissions;[42] in the time of Charles II informations by the king's attorney-general began to supersede such commissions, and by this method charitable trustees could be called speedily to account.[43] Yet, although our ancestors, in such states as Massachusetts, brought with them the elements of the law of charitable uses, the form of proceeding by commission under the Statute of Elizabeth never prevailed there.[44] In England this practice is now in its turn superseded by the institution of permanent charity commissioners, to whom accounts must be rendered,[45] and having not only jurisdiction of inquiry and control over the corpus of charitable estates, but also judicial and administrative powers in connection with the chancery jurisdiction over this topic, subject to appeal,[46] when authorized by the attorney-general, or by the board, to the chancery division. Such powers include the right to authorize a sale, exchange, mortgage, charge, or lease of a charity estate; to sanction repairs and improvements, usually from the income of the estate; the purchase of land, redemption of rent charges, compromise of claims, the institution of legal proceedings,[47] with or without the assent of the attorney-general; certain powers of framing schemes under the cy-pres doctrine; and power to instruct and advise, with indemnity to those who act under their advice and direction.[48]

2. BY THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.[49] In England the attorney-general must represent all general charities, but his presence is not universally necessary as to specified individual charities.[50] Generally in America a decree affecting a distinctly public charity is without effect unless the attorney-general is a party to the proceedings.[51] Usually, that officer may be brought in by amendment, when necessary.[52] When the public is the beneficiary of a charitable trust, the attorney-general is the only necessary party to a suit instituted by the trustees in relation to their powers and duties.[53] But suits to enforce charitable trusts are properly brought in the name of the attorney-general with a relator, when the action is substantially for the latter's benefit.[54] In such case, if no public interest appears, the relator cannot have the information retained as a simple bill in equity;[55] and if the decision is against the information the relator is liable for the costs of the litigation.[56] When the relator has the chief interest in the suit, the attorney-general, after consenting to the use of the name of the state on his behalf, cannot withdraw and terminate the suit to his prejudice.[57]

3. SUITS BY TRUSTEES.[58] Acting trustees may file a bill in equity in their own names for the transfer of a public charity to new trustees, making the attorney-general a defendant;[59] and when so made a party, any beneficiary having an interest in the trust may proceed in equity to compel its performance.[60] That officer is not a necessary party to a bill for the instructions of the court as to the administration of a public charity, when the gift is in the hands of trustees charged specifically by the donor with its management for the cestui que trust, and no charges of waste or mismanagement are made against them.[61] When such charges are made the donor's heirs do not, by proving them, gain a right to have a resulting trust or beneficial interest declared in their favor.[62] In England it has even been held that the attorney-general is not a necessary party to a suit by freemen, on behalf of others, to establish that corporate property was held in trust for them individually.[63] In New York where, contrary to the earlier statutes and decisions, charitable gifts and trusts are now valid by statute though the beneficiaries are indefinite, the attorney-general is, under such statutes, to represent the beneficiaries and to protect and enforce the trusts, he is a proper party to a proceeding for the construction of the donor's will, had before the beneficiaries have been selected by the trustees.[64] No private person, such as a taxpayer in a town which is the beneficiary, or an individual contributor to a charitable fund raised by subscription, can maintain an action to enforce the exercise of a public charity in his favor, when not himself a beneficiary.[65] The lack of chancery jurisdiction does not affect the validity of charitable bequests when sufficient in form.[66] Laches is a defense to a suit to enforce a charitable trust in which the public have no interest.[67] And although a real information will not be defeated by informalities that are not substantially prejudicial to a defendant,[68] yet an information filed on behalf of one charity, which is found to have no title, cannot be carried on for another charity.[69]

VII. MODIFICATION AND TERMINATION.

A. In General. Property once devoted unqualifiedly to a charitable purpose cannot be withdrawn by the donor, nor can the trustee release the trust after acceptance.[70] So a charity cannot be altered, as to its purposes or management, by any agreement between the donor's heirs and the donees or their trustees.[71] Thus, if a gift for a public library is made to a town, on condition that trustees consisting of the selectmen, school committee, and settled ministers of the town shall hold the fund as trustees, expend the income and manage the library, subject to the approval of the town, a statute subsequently incorporating a library corporation to take, with the assent of the town, the property held by the trustees, and hold and apply it in the same manner as if held by them, is unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract, and as unnecessarily authorizing both the taking of property already devoted to a public use for another such use, and a change of management without the parties' consent.[72] So when the income of a fund is left to a religious society for the purpose of maintaining a free school, the society cannot divert it to the support of the ministry or any other object;[73] nor can its doctrines be materially changed as to what is preached when the instrument of gift prescribes certain doctrines.[74] A gift for the education of poor children in a certain district is not defeated by the subsequent adoption by the legislature of the common-school system, and the abandonment of the district schools.[75] Where one of the early "school societies" existing in Connecticut for the education of the children of poor families, for which a bequest had been made in trust, was later abolished by the legislature, the trust was held not thereby terminated, but those having the fund in charge were held justified in applying it to the purchase of books and other necessaries for the poor children of the town.[76] If the trust is not a public charity, but is created by deed for the benefit of a congregation for the maintenance of a particular form of faith and worship, it may be terminated by the unanimous vote of the congregation and the trustees to change their faith and form of worship.[77] The court of chancery, even when its aid is invoked by the trustees, interposes, it seems, only for the benefit of the beneficiary.[78] The founder of a charity always has a standing in court to restrain the diversion of the donated property from the purposes for which it was given.[79] Even as to charities, equity will not, in the absence of bad faith, necessarily interfere in trivial matters, such as the application of fifteen dollars to a person not within the class intended to be benefited.[80] And a bequest to a town to establish a public library is not defeated merely by the failure of the town to pay the expenses required by the will.[81] A grant for charitable purposes may be set aside for undue influence, like other conveyances; but this will be done only when the donor has clearly been deceived or deprived of free agency.[82] Such a grant may be set aside for mistake as well as for fraud; but this does not enable such a charitable institution as an orphan asylum, which has received an orphan gratuitously, to revoke the charity on ascertaining that the orphan has a small pension from the government.[83] When the trustee named in a gift by will to a charity declines to accept the trust, and a new trustee is appointed, all the powers of selection originally given pass to him as appurtenant to the trust.[84] In those states, where at the death of the founder of a charity there must be an existing trustee capable of executing the trust,[85] if trustees capable of taking the legal estate are originally appointed so that a valid use is raised, the court of chancery, having acquired jurisdiction, may supply any subsequent defect arising from the death or disability of the trustees or their refusal to act.[86] In such a case, under the New York practice, where an alumni association raised a fund and transferred it to the institution of which they were alumni, for the establishment of a professorship on certain terms and conditions, it was held that, there being no provision for a reverter to the donors, as a judgment directing the transfer of the fund to the association was erroneous as abrogating the trust, it should be modified by directing its specific performance, failing which the fund would be required to be paid into court or to trustees of the court's appointment.[87]

B. Reverter. When the donor of a charity expressly provides for a reverter in his gift, the trustees' legal title endures only so long as does the use it was created to protect.[88] In general, when no power of revocation is reserved, the trustees' abandonment or abuse of the trust does not cause the trust to fail or the property to revert.[89] In common-law states, and under the laws of New York, a valid bequest to charity is not revocable on account of failure by the trustees to comply with any conditions attached thereto, unless a power of revocation is expressly reserved in the will.[90] In Pennsylvania, Illinois, West Virginia, South Carolina, and Kentucky, in grants to a charity for a special purpose, the property reverts to the donor or his next of kin, when that purpose ceases.[91] So upon the dissolution of a charitable corporation, the title to its lands at once reverts to the donor,[92] subject to debts incurred by the corporation.[93] In New York invalid bequests fall into the residuary estate under the general residuary clause of a will, and void bequests to residuary legatees go to the testator's next of kin.[94] In Massachusetts, Missouri, and Louisiana there is held to be no reversionary interest in the donor of an unconditional gift to charity;[95] and in Virginia that there are no resulting trusts with respect to charities.[96] In Pennsylvania it is also held that when an incorporated charitable institution has ceased its operations, and, having sold its property, holds the proceeds subject to the order of the court, the wishes and recommendations of the contributors are not absolutely controlling as to its decree; and if such institution be a temporary home for poor children, it is within the court's discretion to award the fund to a children's aid society rather than to a hospital and dispensary.[97] If the fund provided by the donor is insufficient to carry out his purpose, and enough is not secured from other sources, his gift has been held to revert to him.[98] But in general in those states which accept the doctrine of cy-pres, there is no reverter when the gift can be applied to a similar charity; as, where income was left "to establish a female academy" in a certain town, it was held that the trustees might apply it to a school in a school district where the academy was situated when the fund became insufficient for an independent school.[99]

VIII. CHARITABLE CORPORATIONS.[1]

A. In General. Charitable corporations are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms of the founders of them, to such purposes and in such manner as they have directed, such as hospitals and colleges.[2] The principal features of such corporations are that they have no capital stock, and that their members can derive no profit from them.[3] The fact that charitable corporations receive pay for services rendered does not alter their character.[4]

B. Public Aid. In the absence of express legislative authority a municipality has no power to make appropriations, by the exercise of the taxing power, to sustain or aid charitable institutions which are not public or municipal agencies.[5] But the legislature may authorize local authorities to raise money by local taxation and pay the same over to local charitable corporations, for the purpose

Its funds are derived mainly from public and private charity; its affairs are conducted for a great public purpose, that of administering to the comfort of the sick, without any expectation, on the part of those immediately interested in the corporation, of receiving any compensation which will enure to their own benefit, and without any right to receive such compensation. of carrying out designated charities through the instrumentality of private corporations.[6]

C. Liability For Torts. A charitable corporation is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligent or tortious acts of a servant in the course of his employment, where such corporation has exercised due care in his selection.[7] While this rule of law is well established, the reasons assigned for it are not uniform. Some courts hold that the funds of a charitable corporation cannot be appropriated to payment for an injury arising from the neglect or wrong-doing

Illustrations.— In McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529, a leading case, it was held that a patient could not recover for injuries caused by the negligence or incompetence of a hospital interne or of an attending surgeon. In Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital, 101 Fed. 896 [affirmed in 109 Fed. 294, 47 C. C. A. 122], where there is a thorough and able discussion of the subject, it was held that a patient in a public hospital, chartered as a charitable corporation, although under private management, cannot recover from such corporation for injuries resulting from the negligence of a nurse employed in the hospital, in whose selection due care was used. In Perry v. House of Refuge, 63 Md. 20, 52 Am. Rep. 495, a charitable corporation was held not liable for an assault committed by one of its officers on an inmate of the institution. In somewhat analogous cases it has been held that railroad and other corporations, having in their regular employ physicians and surgeons whose duty to those corporations requires them to care for the sick and injured among the corporations' employees, are not liable to those employees for the malpractice or negligence of such physicians and surgeons, when there has been no negligence in selecting them. The funds intrusted to it are not to he diminished by such casualties, if those immediately controlling them have done their whole duty in reference to those who have sought to obtain the benefit of them. There was no attempt to show that the trustees had in any respect failed in the performance of their duty. If they had made suitable regulations, had selected proper persons to fill the position of surgeons, then, whether those persons neglected to perform their duty, or whether another person, as the house pupil, not selected for the office of surgeon, assumed without authority to act as such, and injury has thus resulted, the plaintiff has no remedy against the corporation."

In Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 98, 126, 33 Atl. 595, 31 L. R. A. 224, where the defendant was held not liable for the negligent conduct of physicians and nurses employed by it, the court said: "It is perhaps immaterial whether we say the public policy which supports the doctrine of respondeat superior does not justify such extension of the rule; or say that the public policy which encourages enterprises for charitable purposes requires an exemption from the operation of a rule based on legal fiction, and which, as applied to the owners of such enterprises, is clearly opposed to substantial justice. It is enough that a charitable corporation like the defendant — whatever may be the principle that controls its liability for corporate neglect in the performance of a corporate duty — is not liable, on grounds of public policy, for injuries caused by personal wrongful neglect in the performance of his duty by a servant whom it has selected with due care."

10. Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital, 109 Fed. 294, 303, 47 C. C. A. 122 [affirming 101 Fed. 896], where defendant corporation was held not liable for the negligence of a nurse in its employ, the court saying: "That a man is sometimes deemed to assume a risk of negligence, so that he cannot sue for damages caused by the negligence, is familiar law. Such is the case of common employment, and such are the cases of athletic sports and the like. . . . Such is the case at bar. One who accepts the benefit either of a public or of a private charity enters into a relation which exempts his benefactor from liability for the negligence of his servants in administering the charity; at any rate, if the benefactor has used due care in selecting those servants."

2. Instruments covering both real and personal property have been held to be valid subject to the condition that, if the transferrer performs the specified act, title shall revest in him.[3] There is some dissent from this definition in regard to whether title passes to the mortgagee, and many courts, influenced by the prevailing doctrine regarding real-estate mortgages, have held that legal title does not pass to the mortgagee but that he merely gets a lien.[4]

II. MORTGAGE DISTINGUISHED FROM PLEDGE.

A. In General. The distinction between a pledge and a chattel mortgage is that in the case of a pledge title remains in the pledgor, while in the case of a mortgage it passes to the mortgagee subject to be divested.[5]

B. Rules of Construction. Where a transaction giving security is accompanied by a bill of sale, it will ordinarily constitute a mortgage rather than a

Eq. 311; Bayne v. Brewer Pottery Co., 90 Fed. 754); but in England by reason of the Bills of Sale Act including chattels real in inventory of articles given as security invalidates the entire instrument as a bill of sale (Cochrane v. Entwistle, 25 Q. B. D. 116, 59 L. J. Q. B. 418, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 852, 38 Wkly. Rep. 587), although it may be valid as to the property other than the chattels personal (In re Bansha Woollen Mills Co., 21 L. R. A mortgage is a pledge, and something more; for it is an absolute pledge, to become an absolute interest if not redeemed in a certain time. Doak v. State Bank, 28 N. C. 309.

Mere delivery or deposit of goods as security is not a mortgage of them but a pledge (Hamilton v. Wagner, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 331; Day v. Swift, 48 Me. 368; Eastman v. Avery, 23 Me. 248); and the same is true of a mere delivery of a promissory note (Evans v. Darlington, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 320), of a bill of sale (Copeland v. Barnes, 147 Mass. 388, 18 N. E. 65), of stock certificates (Mechanics' Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Conover, 14 N. J. Eq. 219; Lewis v. Graham, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 106), even when accompanied with authority to sell on non-payment of the debt (Huntington v. Mather, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 538) and effected by an instrument under seal (Vanstone v. Goodwin, 42 Mo. App. 39) or of a bill of sale, copies of gaugers' returns, and warehouse receipts (Conrad v. Fisher, 37 Mo. App. 352, 8 L. R. A. 147) as security; even though the transfer was absolute where pledge,[6] for the true test is the intention of the parties in regard to the effect of the agreement.[7] Although it has been held that the law favors a pledge rather than a mortgage,[8] where the debtor who is giving the security retains possession of the property the presumption seems to be that the parties intended a mortgage,[9] because a pledge is not valid without a change of possession.[10]

III. FORM AND REQUISITES.

A. In General. Although the prevailing doctrine regarding chattel mortgages is that title is transferred,[11] it has been held that the absence of words of conveyance from an instrument does not prevent it from being a valid mortgage.[12] the note secured recited that the securities were deposited as collateral (Wilson v. Little, 2 N. Y. 443, 51 Am. Dec. 307). But see May v. Eastin, 2 Port. (Ala.) 414, where chattels were delivered as security under an agreement to return them if the creditors should be reimbursed for advances and the transaction was held to constitute a mortgage. Compare Surber v. McClintic, 10 W. Va. 236, where an assignment of property to indemnify the assignees as sureties on assignor's bond, to be returned or reassigned on a termination of the liability, was held to be a pledge merely.

6. Williams v. Rorer, 7 Mo. 556; People v. Remington, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 282, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 824, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 98, 36 N. Y. St. 282 [affirmed in 126 N. Y. 654, 27 N. E. 853, 37 N. Y. St. 962]. Contra, Ex p. Fitz, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 519, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,837.

Mortgage rather than pledge is the nature of the transaction where an absolute bill of sale is executed for the purpose of giving security (Tedesco v. Oppenheimer, 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 522, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 1073, 74 N. Y. St. 420, 2 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 411) and the instrument is to be void provided the sellers do certain acts (Schoenrock v. Farley, 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 302; Barrow v. Paxton, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 258, 4 Am. Dec. 354; Wood v. Dudley, 8 Vt. 430); and where the instrument reads "I hereby agree to give up all claim to the watch, &c., if all claims due to you from me are not paid by" a day specified (Bunacleugh v. Poolman, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 236), gives security on a chattel, authorizes possession to remain in debtor, and provides for sale in case of default, even though the words used are "I hereby pledge and give a lien on" (Langdon v. Buel, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 80), or transfers the legal title to a note, with power to collect and a provision for accounting for any surplus over the amount secured (Wright v. Ross, 36 Cal. 414).

7. Janvrin v. Fogg, 49 N. H. 340 (holding that, where an instrument was intended to take effect as a chattel mortgage but was invalid, it could not take effect as a pledge, even though possession was transferred to the creditor); McCoy v. Lassiter, 95 N. C. 88. Compare Parshall v. Eggert, 54 N. Y. 18 [affirming 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 367], where a contract of pledge ineffectual for want of delivery of the goods was held not to be valid as a chattel mortgage.

Although the lender supposed that the deposit of a bill with him as security created a mortgage, it was held that such was not the case. Copeland v. Barnes, 147 Mass. 388, 18 N. E. 65.

Parol evidence of intention is not admissible to show that an instrument in the form of a chattel mortgage was intended merely as a pledge. Whitney v. Lowell, 33 Me. 318.

The transaction was held to be a pledge where the creditor was put in possession of the property and given authority to sell on debtor's failure to pay the debt at maturity (Brownell v. Hawkins, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 491); where it was agreed that the lender should have a lien on lumber for advances and that all consignments to market should be on his account (Bogard v. Tyler, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1452, 55 S. W. 709); where shares of stock were indorsed in blank and delivered to a creditor as security for a note (Spreckels v. Macfarlane, 9 Hawaii 166); and where the instrument read that a part owner "pledged, hypothecated, and mortgaged" his interest in a boat to a coöwner (Thoms v. Southard, 2 Dana (Ky.) 475, 26 Am. Dec. 467). Compare Williams v. Nichols, 121 Mass. 435, where it was held that merely recording a bill of parcels in the city registry as security for a debt did not render the transaction a mortgage.

E. 709. Compare Baldwin v. Owens, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 352, 51 S. W. 438, where a writing purporting to be a bill of sale reserved a right to the vendor to take possession in case of default, and it was held that the agreement constituted the vendor a mortgagee.

Written instruments in the form of mortgages which were intended to give a statutory lien on crops but were ineffectual for failure to comply with the statute have been held to operate as mortgages,[13] for, unless the contrary is provided by statute, no particular form of words is necessary,[14] and the defeasance may be on a Sufficiency of words of transfer.— A valid mortgage of personal property may be created by a writing which uses the word "mortgage" only without any other words of conveyance (Mervine v. White, 50 Ala. 388), which merely stipulates that rent shall be paid before certain crops are removed (Weed v. Standley, 12 Fla. 166), or which states that the property shall "belong" to the creditor till a debt is paid (Thompson v. Blanchard, 4 N. Y. 303). See also Adoue v. Jemison, 65 Tex. 680, where an agreement giving one who advanced money to cultivate a plantation the privilege of disposing of the crop and applying the proceeds on the indebtedness was held to constitute a mortgage.

Reserving a lien in an instrument has been held to create a mortgage (Harris v. Jones, 83 N. C. 317; Byrd v. Wilcox, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 65), a charge against the property in the nature of a mortgage (Sawyer v. Gerrish, 70 Me. 254, 35 Am. Rep. 323), or to operate as a mortgage (Whiting v. Eichelberger, 16 Iowa 422), even though no right to take possession was conferred by the instrument (Woodlief v. Harris, 95 N. C. 211).

Mortgage or power.— An instrument giving a creditor a right to take possession of goods, sell them, and apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of a debt is not a mortgage but a mere power, for it transfers no title. McGriff v. Porter, 5 Fla. 373; Holmes v. Hall, 8 Mich. 66, 77 Am. Dec. 444.

No mortgage was created by an agreement whereby the maker of a note promised to pay it out of the proceeds of some personal property, but the payee was given no authority to sell the property (Britt v. Harrell, 105 N. C. 10, 10 S. E. 902); by a credit agreement whereby the owner of a stock of goods agreed to do a cash business, make weekly reports, use only specified sums for expenses, and make no change in business without the lender's consent (Clement v. Swanson, 110 Iowa 106, 81 N. W. 233); or by a mere letter which authorized the bearer to mortgage certain property to any one who would advance a certain sum (Newson v. Beard, 45 Tex. 151). Compare Gushee v. Robinson, 40 Me. 412, where it was held that no mortgage was created by an indorsement on a note that personal property purchased thereby should be holden to one of the signers as security.

Texas.— Johnson v. Brown, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 485, holding that where a mortgage was so drawn that a person reading it could not have understood it otherwise than as a lien upon the property described, and it had been duly registered, it was properly received in evidence in an action to foreclose. Compare Harris v. Croley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 510, where an agreement to pay notes in lumber, which was secured by a trust deed, was held to constitute a mortgage.

Giving grantee authority to take possession and sell makes the transaction a mortgage, provided the surplus after satisfying the indebtedness is to be returned to the grantor (Frost v. Allen, 57 Ga. 326; Roe v. Town Mut. F. Ins. Co., 78 Mo. App. 452; Fowler v. Stoneum, 11 Tex. 478, 62 Am. Dec. 490. Contra, Camp v. Thompson, 25 Minn. 175)

separate instrument from the agreement.[15] A statute providing that a bill of sale given as security should be "in accordance with" certain forms has been held not to mean that the instrument should be "in" such form.[16]

B. Necessity For Writing. A verbal mortgage is good between the parties thereto[17] and against those having actual notice of its existence,[18] provided the oral agreement contained all the elements which were necessary to constitute a valid written mortgage;[19] and where possession is immediately taken and retained or the property left undisposed of is to be given back to him (National Bank v. Lovenberg, 63 Tex. 506).

Provisions that the transfer shall become absolute upon non-payment at a day certain have been held not to prevent the transaction from being a mortgage. Smith v. Quartz Min. Co., 14 Cal. 242; Anonymous, 3 N. C. 182.

15. Lobban v. Garnett, 9 Dana (Ky.) 389; Ring v. Franklin, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 1.

The absence of a condition of defeasance was held not to prevent an instrument from operating as a mortgage when it recited that it was intended as one to secure certain debts and gave the mortgagee a power of sale (Reagan v. Aiken, 138 U. S. 109, 11 S. Ct. 283, 34 L. ed. 892) and where there was no provision for applying the surplus after payment of the secured debts to the satisfaction of other claims (Schneider v. McCoulsky, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 501, 26 S. W. 170).

Construing instruments together.— It has been held that an agreement in a bill of particulars should be construed as part of the mortgage it accompanied and as modifying its effect (Edgell v. Hart, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 380); that an agreement written on a mortgage while on file and signed should be construed with the mortgage so as to constitute an extension (Grimes v. Rose, 24 Mich. 416); and that agreements executed contemporaneously with a mortgage must be treated as part of a single contract even though they are not recorded (Alexandria First Nat. Bank v. Turnbull, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 695, 34 Am. Rep. 791; Blakeslee v. Rossman, 43 Wis. 116). But see Singer v. Wambold, 82 Wis. 233, 52 N. W. 178, where an agreement collateral to a mortgage was held to be no part of it, although executed at the same time.

16. Thomas v. Kelly, 13 App. Cas. 506, 58 L. J. Q. B. 66, 60 L. T. Rep. N. S. 114, 37 Wkly. Rep. 353 [affirming 20 Q. B. D. 569], holding, however, that assigning future acquired property was such a breach of the statutory regulations as to invalidate a bill of sale because it was impossible to comply with the requirement for a description of the property.

Compliance with English statutory form.— The bill of sale was held to be void because of defects in form, where it was executed by two persons as grantors who were not jointly interested in the property (Saunders v. White, [1901] 1 K. B. 70, 70 L. J. K. B. 34, 83 L. T. Rep. N. S. 712, 8 Manson 31, 49 Wkly. Rep. 127); where the acknowledgment of receipt of consideration by the grantor was omitted (Davies v. Jenkins, [1900] 1 Q. B. 133, 69 L. J. Q. B. 187, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 788, 7 Manson 149, 48 Wkly. Rep. 286); where it provided that the grantee might seize the goods if the grantor failed to produce his receipts for rent, rates, and taxes after a verbal demand, when the statute required that the demand be in writing (Davis v. Burton, 11 Q. B. D. 537, 52 L. J. Q. B. 636, 32 Wkly. Rep. 423 [affirming 10 Q. B. D. 414]); and where it purported to be a license to the grantee to enter and sell the chattels and pay himself out of the proceeds (Ex p. Parsons, 16 Q. B. D. 532, 55 L. J. Q. B. 137, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 897, 3 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 36, 34 Wkly. Rep. 329 [disapproving In re Hall, 14 Q. B. D. 386, 54 L. J. Q. B. 43, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 795, 33 Wkly. Rep. 228; In re Cunningham, 28 Ch. by the mortgagee, it has been held that a parol mortgage is valid against all third parties.[20]

C. Construing Instruments to Be Mortgages[21] — 1. Assignments. The assignment of personal property as security for a debt is usually regarded as constituting a mortgage of the property,[22] and it has been held that a mortgage of book-accounts operates as an assignment of them.[23] The element of giving security for a debt to be paid in the future is essential, and therefore general or partial assignments for the benefit of creditors[24] do not constitute chattel mortgages.[25]

21. Agreements were held to constitute mortgages where it was agreed that property paid for by checks on a bank should belong to the bank till the money thus checked out was repaid (Kollock v. Emmert, 43 Mo. App. 566), and where a retiring partner who had sold out to his copartner was employed to sell the firm goods at retail and the copartner agreed to pay a specified sum in instalments as the purchase-price of the stock (Bragelman v. Dane, 69 N. Y. 69). Compare Lessing v. Grimland, 74 Tex. 239, 11 S. W. 1095, where two contracts were held to constitute a mortgage and not a sale.

W. 236 [affirming 33 Mich. 319], where a mortgagor assigned to the mortgagee the net proceeds of mortgaged lands and it was held not to be a mortgage on the proceeds of the land.

Subject-matter of assignment.— The doctrine that the assignment of property as security operates as a mortgage has been applied to assignments of insurance policies (Dungan v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 46 Md. 469; Matthews v. Sheehan, 69 N. Y. 585), of leases (Polhemus v. Trainer, 30 Cal. 685; Breese v. Bange, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 474; Woodward v. Crump, 95 Tenn. 369, 32 S. W. 195), of an expectant legacy (Bacon v. Bonham, 27 N. J. Eq. 209. But see Kilbourne v. Fay, 29 Ohio St. 264, 23 Am. Rep. 741, where an assignment of an unpaid legacy was held not to be a mortgage because it was not a proper subject-matter for a mortgage), of shares in a corporation (Campbell v. Woodstock Iron Co., 83 Ala. 351, 3 So. 369; McLean v. Lafayette Bank, 4 McLean (U. S.) 430, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,889), and of the interest in a building contract which amounted to a mortgage of the materials (Hurd v. Brown, 37 Mich. 484). Compare Yenni v. McNamee, 45 N. Y. 614, where a shipping receipt was assigned as collateral security, without setting apart the property, and it was held that this constituted a mortgage as between the parties.

Effect of reserving benefit to grantor.—The statutes declaring that a deed of trust which reserves a benefit to the grantor shall be void have generally been held not to apply to chattel mortgages in the form of trust deeds. Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316, 85 Am. Dec. 178; Chapman v. Hunt, 14 N. J. Eq. 149; Delaney v. Valentine, 154 N. Y. 692, 49 N. E. 65 [reversing 11 N. Y. App. Div. 631, 42 N. Y. Dec. 458, holding that it was not a badge of fraud to provide in a trust deed for the payment of the balance to the grantor.

W. 733, where a mortgage of leased chattels, executed by the lessee, was held to be in legal effect an assignment of the lease.

24. Assignments for benefit of creditors distinguished from chattel mortgages see Assignments For Benefit of Creditors, 4 Cyc. 128, note 27.

25. Mortgage or assignment for benefit of creditors.— The transaction was held to be a mortgage where the transfer was only to become absolute on the non-performance by assignor of some specified condition (Belding-Hall Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 125 Mich. 54, 83 N. W. 1001; Dearing v. McKinnon Dash, etc., Co., 165 N. Y. 78, 58 N. E. 773, 80 Am. St. Rep. 708 [affirming 33 N. Y. App. Div. 31, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 513]. Compare Davidson v. King, 47 Ind. 372, where the rule was applied although the parties to the agreement treated it as an assignment), although there was a collateral agreement authorizing the collection of the assigned notes without providing for a distribution of the proceeds (Bradley v. Hargadine-McKittrick Dry-Goods Co., 96 Fed.

2. Bills of Sale — a. In General. Where an absolute bill of sale is intended as a mortgage it will be construed to be one,[26] for the clause of defeasance may be on a separate instrument[27] or by parol.[28] An absolute bill of sale cannot, however, be shown to have been intended as a mortgage to the prejudice of third persons,[29] or where it was executed for a fraudulent purpose.[30]

914, 37 C. C. A. 623), or although the transfer was to a trustee (Beckman v. Noble, 115 Mich. 523, 73 N. W. 803); where it was for the purpose of securing payment of a continuing indebtedness (Parsell v. Thayer, 39 Mich. 467; Taylor v. Missouri Glass Co., 6 Tex. Civ. App. 337, 25 S. W. 466); and where the net surplus of the proceeds after paying the debt and expenses of converting the stock into cash was to be returned to the assignor (Doggett, etc., Co. v. Bates, 26 Ill. App. 369; Schwab v. Owens, 10 Mont. 381, 25 Pac. 1049); but a deed conveying property absolutely to a trustee to sell it and distribute the proceeds among creditors operates as an assignment (Tuttle v. Merchant's Nat. Bank, 19 Mont. 11, 47 Pac. 203).

Rule in Canada.— An assignment of property in trust to sell and pay the proceeds to creditors operates as an assignment for benefit of creditors when all creditors are included (Kirk v. Chisholm, 26 Can. Supreme Ct. 111), and as a mortgage when less than all are included (Archibald v. Hubley, 18 Can. Supreme Ct. 116).

Parol evidence of intention is admissible under the law of Arkansas to show whether an instrument was intended as an assignment for the benefit of creditors or a mortgage. Apollos v. Staniforth, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 502, 22 S. W. 1060.

Tests for determining doubtful cases are: "Did the relation of debtor, and creditor, subsist before the alledged sale? . . . Was there a great disparity between the value of the property, and the price agreed to be given for it? Did the vendor continue bound for the debt?" If any of these facts exist they go to show that a mortgage was intended. Eiland v. Radford, 7 Ala. 724, 726, 42 Am. Dec. 610.

b. When Given as Security. When a bill of sale is executed merely as security it is generally held to be a mortgage.[31] So, where a borrowing and lending is designed at the time of executing the instrument,[32] or there is a continuation of indebtedness on the part of the seller,[33] the bill of sale, although absolute in form, will operate as a mortgage.

Bill of sale in payment.— A creditor agreed to take certain property of his debtor in full payment, and a bill of sale was executed and recorded. A further agreement was also recorded by which it was agreed that the vendor was to remain in possession as clerk and sell the goods, remitting net proceeds semi-weekly. The insurance was transferred but the sign over the store remained the same, and the purchaser remitted a small portion of the proceeds over and above the amount of the debt which was supposed to be paid. It was held that the bill of sale and the written contract did not amount to a mortgage of the goods. P. J. Peters Saddlery, etc., Co. v. Schoelkopf, 71 Tex. 418, 9 S. W. 336. Compare Hammer v. O'Loughlin, 8 Wash. 393, 36 Pac. 257, holding that, where the debt was paid and no right to the property or proceeds was reserved, the transfer was not by way of mortgage.

34. Distinction between effect of mortgage and conditional sale is that in a mortgage, although the time of payment is past, there is an equity of redemption which continues until foreclosed or barred by the statute of limitations; in a conditional sale if the condition of payment is not complied with at or before the time limited the sale becomes absolute. Contra.— Perkins v. Loan, etc., Bank, 43 S. C. 39, 20 S. E. 759; Talmadge v. Oliver, 14 S. C. 522, which hold that such a reservation of title is in the nature of an equitable mortgage and must be in writing.

See 9 Cent. Dig. tit. "Chattel Mortgages," § 23.

The transaction was a conditional sale where it stipulated that if the amount received by the vendor was not returned by a certain date the purchaser was to have the property for that amount (Chapman v. Turner, 1 Call (Va.) 280, 1 Am. Dec. 514), and where the risk of loss was to be on the vendee after a stated time (Critcher v. Walker, 5 N. C. 488, 4 Am. Dec. 576).

That the grantee's title was to become absolute did not make the transfer a conditional sale when the value of the property was nearly double the amount of the sum borrowed. Williamson v. Culpepper, 16 Ala. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 175.

Where the purchaser was to continue liable for the purchase-price in case the property sold for less than enough to pay the balance of the purchase-money, the reservation of title to the seller was held to be in the nature of a mortgage and to create a valid lien between the parties. Barney, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Hart, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 223, 1 S. W. 414.

The Texas statute declaring that reservations of title to property as security for the purchase-price shall be held to be chattel mortgages has the effect of making a sale on a condition a mortgage (Garretson v. De mortgage if title and possession vest in the vendee at the time of the sale.[36] It has been held that where the circumstances are doubtful courts of equity incline against conditional sales.[37]

b. Effect of Agreement For Redemption. Although a bill of sale purports to convey an absolute title, it will take effect as a mortgage if it gives the vendor a right to "redeem" the property[38] or is to be void upon the performance of some act by the vendor.[39] When the alleged clause of defeasance takes the form of an agreement to resell the property at a fixed price, attendant circumstances must be examined to determine the nature of the transfer. It may be shown to be a mortgage by evidence that the vendor's obligation continued,[40] that he bound him-

Poyster, (Tex. App. 1890) 16 S. W. 106; Clark v. West Pub. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 527), and a provision authorizing the vendor to take possession without refunding money already paid on default by the vendee is subject to the latter's rights as mortgagee (Harling v. Creech, 88 Tex. 300, 31 S. W. 357).

36. Turner v. Brown, 82 Mo. App. 30; Gaither v. Teague, 29 N. C. 460; Tufts v. Haynie, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. 494. Compare Burdick v. Coates, 22 R. I. 410, 48 Atl. 389, where a mortgage of personalty, recorded ninety-eight days after execution and followed twelve days later by a transfer of possession, was held not to be a conditional sale which became absolute on vendee's taking possession.

An absolute sale with a mortgage back was held to have been effected by the dealings of the parties in Damm v. Mason, 98 Mich. 237, 57 N. W. 123; Strong v. Hoskin, 85 Wis. 497, 55 N. W. 852; Herryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 235, 26 L. ed. 160.

Where notes are given for the purchase-money the transaction seems to be an absolute sale with a mortgage back to secure payment of the notes. Tufts v. Beach, 8 Colo. App. 33, 44 Pac. 771; Baldwin v. Crow, 86 Ky. 679, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 836, 7 S. W. 146; Woodman v. Chesley, 39 Me. 45; Straub v. Screven, 19 S. C. 445; Foster v. Calhoun, Dudley (S. Rep. 661, where a note given for the purchase-money recited that the vendors did not part with any title till the purchase-money had been fully paid and it was held to be an instrument in writing in the nature of a mortgage.

Right of vendee to demand repayment without regard to loss of property shows the transaction to be a mortgage. Robinson v. Farrelly, 16 Ala. 472; Berry v. Glover, Harp. Eq. (S. C.) 153.

4. Equitable Mortgages. In those jurisdictions where transfer of legal title to chattels is essential to the creation of a chattel mortgage, it has been held that an equitable mortgage may be made in spite of some obstacle which prevents a passage of title.[45] So there are cases holding that an equitable mortgage is created by an agreement founded on a valuable consideration to give a mortgage,[46] by giving an irrevocable power of attorney to collect rents,[47] by depositing five hundred dollars provided the slaves purchased neither ran away nor died and it was held to be a personal covenant merely and not a mortgage.

property as security,[48] or by authorizing one advancing money to hold a lien on property.[49]

5. Leases. An agreement for the hire of chattels at a specified rent is not a mortgage of them,[50] and the addition of a clause in the lease reserving a lien for rent does not necessarily change the nature of the instrument and cause it to become a chattel mortgage;[51] but where such a clause is inserted it has been variously held that the instrument operates as a mortgage, or is in legal effect a mortgage of the property.[52]

6. Trusts. One of the common forms which a chattel mortgage takes is a deed of trust, and the fact that the transfer assumes this form does not affect the nature of the transaction or make it any the less a mortgage.[53]

The instrument was a mortgage where the pretended lessor was to remain in possession, cultivate the crop, and receive one third in return for his labor (Davis v. Akers, 73 Mo. App. 531, holding that it was therefore void as a chattel mortgage on future crops); where it stipulated that the property should not be removed from the premises as long as any of the rent remained unpaid (Smith v. Worman, 19 Ohio St. 145); and where it contained a proviso that on default the rights of the lessees should be determined and the property might be reclaimed by the lessors (Frank v. Denver, etc., R. question whether a transaction is a sale or a mortgage is for the jury,[54] because it ordinarily depends upon the intention of the parties;[55] but the construction of a written instrument which is alleged to constitute a mortgage raises questions of law which must be determined by the court.[56]

b. Admissibility of Evidence. Parol evidence of intention, to show that a bill of sale absolute on its face was in fact a mortgage, was formerly restricted to cases in equity where there was fraud or mistake.[57] Now such evidence is almost universally admitted in equitable proceedings without proof of the existence of fraud,[58] and it is allowed in a great many jurisdictions in actions at law,[59]

Fouke v. Fleming, 13 Md. 392, where a conveyance of specified chattels to a trustee, with power to sell to pay certain debts, was held to be a quasi mortgage, and hence was not rendered void by a reservation of the surplus.

Mortgage or trust.— A conveyance by a partner of his share in firm property to secure his individual debt and providing that his net interest only should be subjected has been held to be a mortgage and not a deed of trust (Millhiser v. Pleasants, 118 N. C. 237, 23 S. E. 969); but the court refused to construe the instrument to be a mortgage where property was conveyed with an express agreement that it should be sold to pay certain debts, but that any residue should be resold to grantors if within a year they paid the secured debts (Iron Cliffs Co. v. Beecher, 50 Mich. 486, 15 N. W. 558), and where a negotiable note and mortgage securing it were transferred to indemnify the transferee against liability on certain acceptances, to be retransferred on a termination of the liability (Warren v. Emerson, 1 Curt. C. 349, where the fact that the bargainor was illiterate, poor, and needy, added to the insufficiency of the consideration, was held to show that a security was intended.

64. Giving of note.— Where a note was given the transfer was held to be a mortgage (Smith v. Tilton, 10 Me. 350) and where no note was given it was a strong circumstance to show a sale (Robinson v. Farrelly, 16 Ala. 472).

Sufficiency of evidence.— Where it was shown that grantee exercised absolute control over goods and claimed to be absolute owner, the transaction was held to be a sale (Bodman v. Fisher, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 698, 15 S. W. 8), and where there was a bill of sale of a newspaper and the manager testified that he had recognized the grantee as owner and had bought an interest from him, but that he had received money from the grantor to run the paper, the court held the evidence insufficient to justify a holding that the bill of sale was a mortgage (Cochrane v. Price, (Md. 1887) 8 Atl. 361). So, in determining whether a conveyance of a slave was a conditional sale or a mortgage, the retention of the slave by the owner, the existence of a previous debt on his part, and the fact that the grantees were not negro traders justified the court in construing the instrument as a mortgage. Desloge v. Ranger, 7 Mo. 327. Compare Hatfield v. Montgomery, 2 Port. (Ala.) 58, where there was no testimony rebutting a denial of an alleged parol agreement for redemption con-

IV. FORMALITIES ESSENTIAL TO CREATION OF VALID INSTRUMENT.

A. In General. Since at common law a valid mortgage could be created by parol,[65] informalities in the signature of a written mortgage will not invalidate it,[66] unless certain requirements are made necessary by statute,[67] such as that chattel mortgages shall be executed in like manner as mortgages of real estate,[68] or that mortgages of household property shall be signed by both husband and wife.[69] The mortgagor need not sign the instrument with his own proper name if the signature used by him sufficiently discloses his identity,[70] and, although it was tained in the answer to a bill to redeem and the sale was held absolute.

65. See supra, III, B.

Stamping.— A chattel mortgage may be read in evidence, although not stamped, in the absence of proof that the stamp was fraudulently omitted. Fenelon v. Hogoboom, 31 Wis. 172. So, where mortgage notes were stamped but the mortgage deed itself was not, because it was not thought necessary, it was valid and binding. Plunkett v. Hanschka, 14 S. D. 454, 85 N. W. 1004. Compare Griffith v. Hershfield, 1 Mont. 66, where it was held that a county recorder was not authorized to determine the value of gold dust described in a mortgage which was presented to him for record and could not know what stamp should be affixed thereto before he recorded it.

66. Alabama Warehouse v. Lewis, 56 Ala. 514; Breene v. McCrary, 52 Ala. 154, which hold a signature by mark to be sufficient. But under statute a signature by making a mark is not good where the mark is attested only by a witness who attests by means of his mark. Houston v. State, 114 Ala. 15, 21 So. 813.

Signature by a trustee under a deed of trust by way of mortgage is not essential to the validity of the instrument, although it is material on the question of acceptance by the trustee. Dewoody v. Hubbard, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 9.

67. Strict compliance necessary.—Statutes which prescribe the manner in which mortgages of goods and chattels shall be executed and recorded must be strictly complied with. Hill v. Gilman, 39 N. H. 88.

Instruments conveying both real and personal property, it has been held, must be executed as chattel mortgages in order to be valid as to the personal property conveyed. Long v. Cockern, 128 Ill. 29, 21 N. E. 201 [affirming 29 Ill. App. 304]. But see Strouse v. Cohen, 113 N. C. 549, 18 S. E. 323, holding that although an instrument purporting to be a mortgage of a married woman's realty and personalty is invalid as to the realty, because the husband does not join in the body thereof, this does not invalidate it as to the personalty.

69. McKelvy v. Kolbe, 89 Ill. App. 661, holding that a mortgage executed by a married woman without the signature of her husband was void, although her husband had abandoned her.

What constitutes "household goods."— It has been held that the term "household goods" means goods suitable to the condition and station of the mortgagor which are used by him for personal, home, or household convenience (Peter Schoenhofen Brewing Co. v. Merrion, 67 Ill. App. 123), and also that the goods must be in use by the family as well as in their possession (Green v. McCrane, 55 N. J. Eq. 436, 37 Atl. 318).

Mortgages securing purchase-money for household furniture have been held not to be within the purview of the statutes requiring joint execution by husband and wife (Pease v. L. Fish Furniture Co., 70 Ill. App. 138; Mantonya v. Martin Emrich Outfitting Co., 69 Ill. App. 62), or of a general statute requiring chattel mortgages executed by a married man to be signed by his wife (Twombly v. Randall, MacArthur & M. (D. C.) 48).

A chattel mortgage is only void as to exempt property because it was executed by the husband alone. Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330, 57 N. W. 181.

Signature of wife not required.— Under Wis. Rev. Stat. (1898), § 2313, requiring that a chattel mortgage must be executed by the mortgagor's wife, it is not necessary that the wife execute a mortgage covering exempt property to make it valid against creditors of the mortgagor, since they could not be benefited by having the mortgage declared void. Cunningham v. Brictson, 101 Wis. 378, 77 N. W. 740. Compare Strickland v. Minnesota Type-Foundry Co., 77 Minn. 210, 79 N. W. 674, holding that a mortgage of exempt property to secure the purchase-price need not be signed by the mortgagor's wife, notwithstanding it was not executed directly to the seller.

70. Taylor v. Bowen, 84 Mo. App. 613. See also Walrath v. Campbell, 28 Mich. 111, holding that a mortgage executed by a religious society was valid, in spite of a misnomer, where the identity of the society was clearly shown.

The signature to a partnership mortgage may be in the name of one of the partners if the instrument covers partnership property and is given to secure a partnership debt (Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 79 Iowa 290, 44 N. W. 551), or in the firm-name without the use of the names of any of the partners (Hendren v. Wing, 60 Ark. 561, 31 S. W. 149, 46 Am. St. Rep. 218).

required that a mortgage be subscribed, signing at the bottom of a schedule annexed thereto was held not to be necessary.[71]

B. Acknowledgment[72]— 1. Necessity. Acknowledgment is necessary to render the instrument valid against creditors and third persons,[73] but between the parties[74] or against persons with actual notice[75] a mortgage is effectual, although it is defectively acknowledged or not acknowledged at all. The necessity of acknowledgment may be superseded by the mortgagee taking possession of the mortgaged property before the rights of third parties intervene,[76] and in cer-

The president of a corporation may sign with his own name a chattel mortgage which purports to be made by the corporation and such signature is not rendered invalid because the president affixes his personal seal. Sherman v. Fitch, 98 Mass. 59.

The presumption that the schedule was annexed before the instrument was executed is sufficient to render the instrument valid in the absence of proof to the contrary. Belknap v. Wendell, 21 N. H. 175.

Blank spaces in a chattel mortgage, which are filled in after the execution of the instrument, must be filled in accordance with the agreement of the parties. Ward v. Watson, 24 Nebr. 592, 39 N. W. 615. See, generally, ALTERATIONS OF INSTRUMENTS.

Proof of execution.— The execution of a chattel mortgage is not proved by production of a copy thereof and a certificate of acknowledgment attached thereto certified by the town-clerk. Maxwell v. Inman, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 265. Compare Edwards v. Hushing, 31 Ill. App. 223, where the proper execution of a chattel mortgage was held to be a question for the jury.

No person other than a purchaser or a creditor can complain of an absence of acknowledgment. Chase v. Tacoma Box Co., 11 Wash. 377, 39 Pac. 639; Scruggs v. Burruss, 25 W. Va. 670.

Recording a defectively acknowledged instrument is ineffectual to impart constructive notice of the contents of the instrument to subsequent parties. Kothe v. Krag-Reynolds Co., 20 Ind. App. 293, 50 N. E. 594; St. Paul Title Ins., etc., Co. v. Berkey, 52 Minn. 497, 55 N. W. 60; Selking v. Hebel, 1 Mo. App. 340.

The copy of a lost mortgage must be acknowledged to entitle it to record. Porter v. Dement, 35 Ill. 478.

Necessity for reacknowledgment after alteration.— Where a mortgage is invalidated by an alteration by consent of the parties after it has been acknowledged, it must be reacknowledged before it is again placed upon the record. Harvey v. Crane, 2 Biss. (U. S.) 496, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,178, 3 Chic. Leg. N. 341, 5 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 218. But see Milton v. Boyd, 49 N. J. Eq. 142, 22 Atl. 1078, holding that when a mortgage was altered to include other property and then reacknowledged it took effect as to the property originally included from the time of the original acknowledgment.

tain jurisdictions by filing the instrument for record[77] or by having it duly witnessed.[78]

2. CERTIFICATE. The certificate must set forth that it was the mortgagor who acknowledged the mortgage[79] and state which partner acknowledged a mortgage executed by a firm,[80] but need not state the venue.[81] It should be signed by the officer taking the acknowledgment[82] and sealed with the official seal.[83] A certificate regular in form, if shown to be false, makes the mortgage void as to creditors of the mortgagor[84] and third parties acting in good faith.[85]

3. SUFFICIENCY — a. In General. Statutes relative to the acknowledgment of chattel mortgages are in derogation of common law and should be strictly construed.[86] While a statutory requirement that the justice taking an acknowledgment enter a memorandum thereof is not rendered unnecessary by record of the mortgage,[87] entry on the justice's docket is not necessary to make the mortgage valid between the parties,[88] and superfluous matter will not render a docket entry void.[89] Acknowledgment of a firm mortgage by one partner is sufficient, although

General statutory provisions regarding acknowledgments have been held applicable to chattel mortgages. Hooker v. Hammill, 7 Nebr. 231.

An acknowledgment by a wife that she has relinquished dower in a mortgage of both personalty and realty will not create a valid encumbrance on her interest in the personalty, as to third persons. Carle v. Wall, (Ark. 1891) 16 S. W. 293.

Omitting name of mortgagor from acknowledgment clause is a fatal defect in the acknowledgment. Lenehan v. Akana, 6 Hawaii 538.

Omission of the word "acknowledged" from the justice's entry is not fatal if words having the same legal effect are used. Jesse French Piano, etc., Co. v. Meehan, 84 Ill. App. 262.

Proof of docket entry is unnecessary in an action of replevin by the mortgagee (Calumet Paper Co. v. Knight, etc., Co., 43 Ill. App. 566), for it will be presumed that the justice taking the acknowledgment made the proper entry (Harlow v. Birger, 30 Ill. 425).

A docket entry is not rendered void by failure to make the heading in the statutory form (Crescent Coal, etc., Co. v. Raymond, 57 Ill. App. 197), or by a misnomer in describing the mortgagee as "L. Fish" instead of the "L. Fish Furniture Co." (Pease v. L. Fish Furniture Co., 176 Ill. 220, 52 N. E. 932 [affirming 70 Ill. App. 138]).

his name does not appear in the firm-name,[90] and a mistake in date as to the year when the acknowledgment was taken does not invalidate it.[91]

b. Place. The place for acknowledgment may be fixed by statute,[92] but a statute designating the place where a chattel mortgage shall be acknowledged is satisfied by an acknowledgment before a justice in a village located in the district where the mortgagor resides[93] or before a justice in the district where one mortgagor resides;[94] and recitals in the mortgage as to the residence of the mortgagor are not conclusive.[95]

c. Who May Take. An acknowledgment may be taken by a justice of the peace,[96] although he be only a de facto officer,[97] or by a county recorder,[98] but a justice is disqualified who is a party to the mortgage.[99]

C. Affidavits of Good Faith[1] — 1. The affidavit should be put on file along with the copy of the mortgage to render it valid against a purchaser. Marsden v. Cornell, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 449. Compare Mowry v. White, 21 Wis. 417, holding it sufficient to have the affidavit placed on file in the clerk's

2. SUFFICIENCY — a. Form — (I) IN GENERAL. Slight departure from the form prescribed by statute will not render an affidavit invalid,[8] while in the absence of statutory requirements the form of the affidavit is immaterial,[9] so that affiant's failure to sign is not fatal;[10] but omission of a material clause from the statutory form will render the affidavit invalid.[11]

(II) STATEMENT OF SUBSTANTIVE FACTS. If the consideration for the mortgage is a debt, the affidavit should contain a statement as to how such debt arose[12] and the amount thereof,[13] and it must show that the consideration set forth in the instrument is the real consideration for the conveyance.[14] According as the mortgage is given to secure a debt, liability, or agreement, the affidavit must be so varied as to verify the real transaction between the parties.[15] Such facts as are stated in the mortgage need not be repeated in the affidavit when a specific reference is made to them,[16] for under such circumstances matters in the mortgage must be regarded as part of the affidavit.[17]

(III) JURAT. The jurat[18] should indicate the person who took the oath to the affidavit;[19] and, while it has been held that an oath before a justice of the peace of another state was sufficient,[20] the mayor of a foreign town was not a proper officer to administer the oath.[21]

b. Time of Execution. An affidavit need not be made on the day the mortgage was executed.[22]

402. See also Nichols v. Bingham, 70 Vt. 320, 40 Atl. 827, holding a mortgage void where the amount of indebtedness stated in the affidavit was reduced to the actual sum, by indorsing the excess as payment on the mortgage note.

15. Parker v. Morrison, 46 N. H. 280; Tarbell v. Jones, 56 Vt. 312. See also Sumner v. Dalton, 58 N. H. 295, holding that, where a debt and a liability were secured by a chattel mortgage and the affidavit spoke of the debt only, the mortgage would be good as to the debt, although invalid as security for the liability.

Indemnity mortgages.— An affidavit in an indemnity mortgage, which merely states that the mortgagor is indebted to the mortgagee in a sum certain, is bad, because it does not conform to the actual facts (Baldwin v. Benjamin, 16 U. C. Q. B. 52), and a defect in this respect cannot be cured by the conditions contained in the mortgage (Blandy v. Benedict, 42 Ohio St. 295). In describing the contingent indebtedness the number of notes on which the mortgagee is surety, their amount, and the date of their maturity should be given. It is not sufficient to give a gross amount (Winslow v. Hart, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 567, 2 Clev. L. Rep. 387) and an affidavit is insufficient which fails to give the name of the payee of the notes and to state that they were put in circulation (Thropp v. Knight, (N. J. 1894) 28 Atl. 1037); but the affidavit was sufficient where the actual transaction between the parties was disclosed and it was stated in the affidavit that "there is nothing now due and the utmost that may become due is" a sum mentioned (Horowitz v. Weidner, (N. J. 1895) 31 Atl. 771). Compare Southern v. Wilcox, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 251, 1 Clev. L. Rep. 170, where, on the facts, it was held that the relation between mortgagor and mortgagee was that of principal and surety.

18. Form of jurat.— An omission of the words "Before me" and of the date from the jurat of an affidavit is a fatal defect (Archibald v. Hubley, 18 Can. Supreme Ct. 116); but a jurat is not rendered invalid by the notary's failure to affix his notarial seal (Ashley v. Wright, 19 Ohio St. 291), to specify his residence (Vincent v. Snoqualmie Mill Co., 7 Wash. 566, 35 Pac. 396) or his official capacity (Magowan v. Baird, 53 N. J. Eq. 656, 33 Atl. 1054); and it has been held that the omission of the words "So help us God" from a statutory affidavit did not render it invalid (Comey v. Pickering, 63 N. H. 126).

19. An affidavit is sufficient where it recites that "Samuel Ward and Marcum and Lennon, the parties to the foregoing chattel mortgage, being . . . duly sworn, each for himself," made oath to the required facts (Marcum v. Coleman, 10 Mont. 73, 24 Pac. 701), and in spite of the omission of the word "severally" in an affidavit made by two which failed to specify which had "sworn and affirmed" the affidavit (Moyer v. Davidson, 7 U. c. Who May Execute Affidavit. A trustee in a mortgaged deed of trust may make the affidavit of good faith necessary to the validity of a chattel mortgage.[23] So an affidavit by an agent is sufficient[24] where the absence of the mortgagee is accounted for;[25] and one of several co-mortgagees has authority to make the affidavit as agent for the others.[26] The spouse of the mortgagor need not join in the affidavit unless a necessary party to the mortgage,[27] but a third person who is secured by a mortgage must have someone make an affidavit in his behalf as to the validity of his claim.[28]

D. Attestation — 1. In General. Where a chattel mortgage can be created without a writing, informalities in the attestation of the written instrument will render it ineffectual to support the mortgage when it is subsequently executed. In re Wise, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 760, 7 Ohio N. P. 103; Engleright v. Annesser, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 73, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 406.

Co., 79 Fed. 695, 48 U. S. App. 219, 25 C. C. A. 147); but the instrument must be recorded after the affidavit has been executed and attached (Alferitz v. Scott, 130 Cal. 474, 62 Pac. 735).

not invalidate it,[29] and statutory requirements as to attestation merely form a condition precedent to the admission of the instrument to record;[30] but it has been held that statutory requirements regarding attestation must be strictly complied with.[31] Disputed questions as to proper attestation should be left to the jury.[32]

2. Who May Be Attesting Witnesses. The mortgagee is not a competent attesting witness for his own mortgage,[33] but attestation may be made by a notary public in his individual, as well as in his official, capacity,[34] and if he acts officially it is no objection that he is also attorney for the mortgagee.[35]

Wisconsin.— McCourt v. Myers, 8 Wis. 236, where a purchaser of the goods with full notice of the undelivered mortgage prevailed over the claims of the mortgagee. But see Gilmore v. Roberts, 79 Wis. 450, 48 N. W. 522, where a chattel mortgage purporting to secure notes payable to mortgagee "or bearer" was held to be valid and to follow the notes in whosesoever hands they might be, although it was never delivered to the mortgagee and he never had any interest in it.

See 9 Cent. Dig. tit. "Chattel Mortgages," § 136.

Delivery to one of several mortgagees named in an instrument renders it effective as to all and cannot be restrained by the use of words on the part of the mortgagor so as to take effect as to one only. Hubby v. Hubby, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 516, 52 Am. Dec. 742.

2. STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS FOR DELIVERY OF COPY TO MORTGAGOR. Under a statute making a mortgage void unless it shall appear on the instrument, over the signature of the mortgagor, that a full and complete copy was delivered to him by the mortgagee, it was sufficient to have the statement inserted in the body of the mortgage and signed before the mortgage was executed.[43]

3. PROOF OF DELIVERY — a. In General. A delivery will be presumed[44] when the note and mortgage are found in the possession of the mortgagee,[45] and may be inferred from the acts of the mortgagee assenting to and adopting a recorded mortgage.[46]

b. Recording as Delivery. Recording a mortgage at the instance of the mortgagor does not amount to a delivery,[47] but where a chattel mortgage is executed in pursuance of a previous agreement to give security the registration of the instrument constitutes a sufficient delivery.[48]

A return of the instrument to the mortgagor after delivery, for the purpose of having the mortgagor's signature witnessed, was held not to avoid the instrument. Berlin Mach. Works v. Security Trust Co., 60 Minn. 161, 61 N. W. 1131.

A constructive delivery only has been held to be sufficient, as where the mortgage was pasted on the front page of an account-book, the accounts in which it assumed to convey. Lydia Pinkham Medicine Co. v. Gibbs, 108 Ga. 138, 33 S. E. 945.

43. Commercial State Bank v. Interstate Elevator Co., 14 S. Dak. 276, 85 N. W. 219, 86 Am. St. Rep. 760. Compare Kennedy v. Hull, 14 S. Dak. 234, 85 N. W. 223, where a lease of a building which reserved a lien for rent was held not to be within the purview of such a statute.

44. Presumption as to time of delivery.— In the absence of testimony the law presumes that a chattel mortgage is delivered on the day of its date. Schweinber v. Great Western Elevator Co., 9 N. D. 113, 81 N. W. 35.

45. Wickler v. People, 68 Ill. App. 282; Foster v. Perkins, 42 Me. 168 (where there was also evidence of a delivery to the register). Compare Molineux v. Coburn, 6 Gray (Mass.) 124, holding that proof of the execution and registration of a chattel mortgage and of its subsequent possession by the mortgagee was sufficient to authorize a jury to find it had been delivered.

46. Thayer v. Stark, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 11. Compare Sargeant v. Solberg, 22 Wis. 132, where one who had received money to invest used it and executed a mortgage to the lender which was recorded and delivered to a friend (but not agent) of the lender and there was held to be a sufficient delivery, although a letter informing the lender of these transactions miscarried.

47. McFaddin v. Ross, 14 Ind. App. 312, 41 N. E. 607; Wadsworth v. Barlow, 68 Iowa 599, 27 N. W. 775; Oxnard v. Blake, 45 Me. 602; Miller v. Blinebury, 21 Wis. 676.

A fortiori record was not equivalent to delivery where the mortgage was taken off the records in a short time and the mortgagor told the recording clerk it was merely to protect the property from creditors and the mortgagee had no knowledge of the execution of the instrument. McCourt v. Myers, 8 Wis. 236.

Forwarding the mortgage directly to the mortgagee from the recording office has been held to constitute a valid delivery. Com. v. Cutler, 153 Mass. 252, 26 N. E. 855.

Massachusetts.— Jordan v. Farnsworth, 15 Gray (Mass.) 517, holding that it was for the jury to determine whether there was in fact a delivery when the mortgagor had delayed for a year to record the mortgage.

Michigan.— Field v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 606, 32 N. W. 838, where the form of the requested security had not been agreed upon, but there was a delivery to the attorney of the mortgagee.

Missouri.— State v. O'Neill, 74 Mo. App. 134.

Nebraska.— Rein v. Kendall, 55 Nebr. 583, 75 N. W. 1104, holding that the mortgagee would be prima facie entitled to possession against an attaching creditor.

North Dakota.— Keith v. Haggart, 2 N. D. 18, 48 N. W. 432, where a certified copy of the recorded instrument was sent to the mortgagee.

Wisconsin.— Sargeant v. Solberg, 22 Wis. 132.

See 9 Cent. Dig. tit. "Chattel Mortgages," § 138.

Ratification.— Where a mortgagee ratifies the act of the mortgagor in sending for record, this constitutes the registration a sufficient delivery as effectively as a previous agreement for the giving of the mortgage would have done. Storrs v. Sharp, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 549.

Record of the instrument is essential in order that it shall be deemed to be delivered by reason of its having been executed in accordance with a previous agreement, and an agreement on the part of the mortgagor to file the mortgage will not avail the mortgagee unless it is carried out. Mull v. Dooley, 89 Iowa 312, 56 N. W. 513.

4. Acceptance — a. In General. Acceptance on the part of the mortgagee is essential to make a mortgage a valid instrument,[49] and a subsequent acceptance will not relate back.[50] While it will be presumed when the mortgage was executed in pursuance of a previous agreement,[51] such an inference cannot be drawn from the beneficial character of the instrument to the detriment of intervening creditors.[52] It has been held that a mortgage in the form of a deed of trust must be accepted by the beneficiaries named therein.[53]

b. Sufficiency — (i) Generally. It is a sufficient acceptance of a mortgage if a creditor to whom it is executed is notified of its execution and does nothing which shows an intention to reject it,[54] does some act which shows his acquiescence thereto,[55] or ratifies some act of an unauthorized agent in assuming to recognize or procure the mortgage.[56]

(ii) Trust Mortgages. The trustee in a mortgage to secure certain named creditors must be authorized by the beneficiaries in order to accept for them,[57] but

Sufficiency of previous agreement.— It has been held that the previous agreement for giving a mortgage was not sufficient where the specific part or quantity of goods to be covered was not agreed upon. Cobb v. Chase, 54 Iowa 253, 6 N. W. 300.

The return of the mortgage to the mortgagor after registration has been held not to affect the sufficiency of the delivery. Kuh v. Garvin, 125 Mo. 547, 28 S. W. 847.

Acceptance must be with full knowledge, and where mortgages in favor of creditors which had been executed and filed were accepted by them without knowing that they were given to secure new notes, it was held that there had been no delivery which would render the mortgage valid against an attachment. Burlington Nat. State Bank v. Morse, 73 Iowa 174, 34 N. W. 803, 5 Am. St. Rep. 670.

55. Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313, 66 N. W. 222, holding that where the mortgagee, in answer to the question whether she was satisfied with what her agent had done in regard to the mortgage, said: "Well, I am satisfied if I get my pay, and not before," she did not thereby contradict her testimony that she gave her attorney authority to take possession of the property.

Where ratification relates back.— Although a ratification of a mortgage will not ordinarily relate back to the detriment of third persons (Oxnard v. Blake, 45 Me. 602), it was held that where there was a previous arrangement to give security, the subsequent ratification of a mortgage which had been executed and delivered to the mortgagee's attorney for filing would relate back to the date of filing (Field v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 606, 32 N. W. 838).

Where several mortgages were executed and filed by a mortgagor without the knowledge of the mortgagees, it was held that the one first ratified would be entitled to priority (Oxnard v. Blake, 45 Me. 602), and the refusal of some creditors to accept the mortgages executed to them did not impair the validity of those which were duly accepted (Brown v. Platt, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 324).

Admissibility of evidence as to time.— On an issue as to when a chattel mortgage was accepted by the mortgagee, evidence of statements made by him as to such acceptance, when he received a telegram announcing its execution, is admissible. Fischer Leaf Co. v. Whipple, 51 Mo. App. 181.

National State Bank v. Sweeney, (Iowa 1897) 73 N. W. 476.

the acceptance by the creditor is sufficient when communicated to the trustee without notifying the mortgagor.[58]

H. Sealing. It is not necessary to the validity of a chattel mortgage that a seal be affixed to it.[59]

V. CONSIDERATION FOR MORTGAGE AND THE DEBT SECURED.

A. Necessity. Every chattel mortgage to be valid and enforceable must be supported by a valuable consideration.[60]

Effect of absence of consideration.— It has been held that when a mortgage is without consideration the mortgagee has no right to possession of the property (McGhee v. Tobias First Nat. Bank, 40 Nebr. 92, 58 N. W. 537) and cannot foreclose the mortgage (Krag-Reynolds Co. v. Oder, 21 Ind. App. 333, 52 N. E. 458).

No proof of consideration is necessary against a purchaser from the mortgagor beyond the recital of consideration in the mortgage, where the only issue is in regard to the title to the property. Webb v. Mann, 3 Mich. 139.

Under a statute making any mortgage for a consideration under £30 void, it was held that a bill of sale for £30, £15 of which was payable on demand and was immediately demanded, was not necessarily void. Davis v. Usher, 12 Q. B. D. 490, 53 L. J. Q. B. 422, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 297, 32 Wkly. Rep. 832.

W. 419, where an agreement on the part of a mortgagee to take possession of mortgaged goods and sell them at retail was held to be a sufficient consideration to support a mortgage. See also Hincks v. Field, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 247, 37 N. Y. St. 724, where a first mortgage contained a provision that if it proved ineffectual a second should be executed and it was held that the consideration of the first was sufficient to support a second made in pursuance of such provision.

Evidence of an adjustment of mutual pre-existing claims between the mortgagor and mortgagee is competent to be weighed by the jury, as tending to show a full and sufficient consideration for a mortgage given simultaneously with such adjustment. Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 86.

Where several debtors are jointly liable and each executes a separate mortgage to the common creditor to secure the portion for which he is primarily liable, the benefit accruing to each debtor is sufficient considera-which apply in the case of simple contracts will prevent certain acts from affording a sufficient consideration to support a mortgage.[62]

2. Assuming and Releasing Obligation. It furnishes a valid consideration to support a chattel mortgage for the mortgagee to go as surety on an obligation of the mortgagor [63] or to release one who was formerly surety for the payment of an

tion to support the mortgages. Spivey v. Grant, 96 N. C. 214, 2 S. E. 45.

There was not a sufficient consideration to support a mortgage where it was given by a religious society to secure the salary of its pastor which had not been fixed in the manner required by statute (Walrath v. Campbell, 28 Mich. 111), or where a second mortgage was given to secure the same debt secured by the first and there was no cancellation of the first mortgage or note and no extension of the time of maturity of the indebtedness (Hume v. Eagon, 83 Mo. App. 576).

62. McCartney v. Wilson, 17 Kan. 294 (where a mortgage given an officer in consideration of his releasing the mortgagor from jail was held to be void because not supported by a consideration which the law would recognize as such); Kusworm v. Hess, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 224, 1 Cinc. L. Bul. 315 (holding that a mortgage given to secure the purchase of furniture used to equip a house of prostitution was invalid).

When a usurious loan is secured by a chattel mortgage it renders the mortgage invalid (Moore v. Woodward, 83 N. C. 531), and the mortgagor can bring trover against the mortgagee for selling the mortgaged chattels (Leslie v. Hoffman, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 475). But see Spaulding v. Austin, 2 Vt. 555, where a surety on a note was secured by a mortgage, and the fact that the note bore usurious interest was held not to affect the surety's right to the property. Compare Drennon v. Dalincourt, 56 Mo. App. 128, where a statute rendered a mortgage invalid if the mortgagee exacted or received usurious interest, and it was void if the mortgagee exacted and received such interest.

See 9 Cent. Dig. tit. "Chattel Mortgages," § 71.

The validity of an indemnity mortgage is not affected by the circumstance that it provides that the mortgagee shall have no remedy by sale of the property till he has paid the debt (Tarver v. Roffe, 7 Ala. 873); that the contingent liability does not become fixed till after a levy of attachment on the property (Rogers v. Abbott, 128 Mass. 102); that the mortgage does not appear on its face to have been given for a contingent liability (Goodheart v. Johnson, 88 Ill. 58; Warren v. His Creditors, 3 Wash. 48, 28 Pac. 257. Contra, Johnson v. Murchison, 60 N. C. 286), provided the purchaser of the mortgaged property bought with notice and only gave in payment a preëxisting debt (Sherman v. Estey Organ Co., 67 Vt. 550, 32 Atl. 483); that there are several mortgagees and no two are liable on the same paper (Wheeler v. Nichols, 32 Me. 233); that the indorser's own paper is exchanged for the original indorsed instrument (Fraser v. Toronto Bank, 19 U. C. Q. B. 381); or that the surety did not by his indorsement incur a legal liability, provided he paid under an honest belief that he was legally liable (Robinson v. Mann, 2 Ont. L. Rep. 63).

When there is no allegation or proof of fraud a mortgage to secure sureties for existing and future contingent liabilities is valid and will be enforced in a court of equity. Irwin v. Wilson, 56 N. C. 210. Compare Sparks v. Brown, 33 Mo. App. 505, holding that in the absence of fraud a mortgage to secure the mortgagee's contingent liability as surety for the mortgagor to an amount not greater than the debt is valid against a subsequent mortgage.

A mortgage by a cosurety to secure claims which may arise against him for contribution is valid. Steele v. Farber, 37 Mo. 71.

After a discharge of a surety he cannot allege as a breach of the condition of a mortgage the non-payment of the note secured at obligation;[64] and with even greater reason the assumption of primary liability for the debt or obligation of another will afford a valid consideration.[65]

3. EXTENDING TIME. An extension of time for the payment of a debt,[66] or for the performance of a conditional contract of sale,[67] or an agreement not to sue on an overdue note[68] furnishes a sufficient consideration to support a chattel mortgage.

4. MORTGAGES SECURING FUTURE ADVANCES. When executed in good faith and not for the purpose of protecting property from creditors, a mortgage given to secure future advances alone,[69] or an existing debt and future advances,[70] is valid the time originally provided for. Newsam v. Finch, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 175.

No excuse for an absence of a written instrument witnessing an indemnity mortgage is afforded by the circumstance that the suretyship of the mortgagee affords a valid consideration therefor. Oyler v. Renfro, 86 Mo. App. 321. Compare Wood v. Evans, 98 Ga. 454, 25 S. E. 559, where a parol agreement to give a surety a mortgage was carried out before he had notice of an intervening mortgage to a third person, but it was held that the surety was postponed to the claim of the intervening mortgagee.

W. 111, where a release of the right against property acquired by a parol agreement to execute a mortgage was held to be a sufficient consideration to support a mortgage executed by a third person.

65. Smith v. Post, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 516, even though the assumed obligation has not been discharged. Compare Green v. Kelley, 64 Vt. 309, 24 Atl. 133, where a former surety became primarily liable on the debt and the former principal became his surety, and this was held to furnish a valid consideration for a mortgage from the new surety to his principal.

and enforceable to the extent of the amount due at the time when adverse rights attach to the property [71] or the mortgagee exercises his right to take possession.[72]

5. Past Indebtedness. It has been said that mortgages to secure antecedent debts are regarded by the law with no disfavor and under proper limitations are constantly upheld;[73] and while it is true that an existing debt is a valid consideration for the execution of a mortgage as between the parties and their assigns,[74] and that such a mortgage is not fraudulent against creditors,[75] such a consideration does not put the mortgagee in the position of a purchaser for value so as to entitle him to prevail over the rights of a defrauded vendor.[76]

What must appear in the instrument.— While a mortgage cannot be made to cover future advances by a secret agreement between the parties which is not expressed in the instrument (Divver v. McLaughlin, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 596, 20 Am. Dec. 655), it was held not to be invalidated because it did not disclose what part of the sum it purported to secure was to be advanced in the future (Brace v. Berdan, 104 Mich. 356, 62 N. 6. Bona Fides of Debt. A chattel mortgage is prima facie executed for a good consideration when it recites that it is given to secure a promissory note[77] or for future advances in a specified sum;[78] but the presence of the mortgage note among the mortgagor's papers after his death is strong evidence of bad faith.[79]

C. The Debt Secured — 1. In General. A mortgage may be given to secure the performance of a contract or of any other act by the mortgagor,[80] but where, as is usually the case, a mortgage is given to secure the payment of money the language of a mortgage will generally be liberally construed to enable it to cover all obligations from the mortgagor to the mortgagee which were intended to be secured,[81] and a round sum secured by a chattel mortgage may be shown

Failure to state the amount secured does not prevent an equitable proceeding to foreclose a bill of sale which is executed to secure a certain indebtedness owing from the vendor to the vendee. Blake v. Corbett, 120 N. Y. 327, 24 N. E. 477, 31 N. Y. St. 31.

What debts are covered.— A mortgage executed to secure a specific loan and all other debts owing from the mortgagor to the mortgagee (Collier v. White, 97 Ala. 615, 12 So. 385) or to secure an accommodation indorser on three described notes and to save him harmless from all other damages he might suffer by reason of the use of his name as indorser (Ripley v. Larmouth, 56 Barb. to be made up of certain specific items of liability due the mortgagee from the mortgagor.[82]

2. Between What Parties. A chattel mortgage may be made to cover separate debts owing to different persons,[83] and it seems to be unobjectionable to have a mortgage run in favor of a third person;[84] but it has been held that the debt, liability, or agreement which a chattel mortgage is given to secure must be strictly between the mortgagor and mortgagee.[85]

3. Counsel Fees. Although equity will not allow a mortgagee to clog the equity of redemption with an oppressive agreement,[86] a provision allowing attorney's fees charged against the mortgagee to be added to the mortgage debt has gagor. Compare State Bank v. Vance, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 168, where a recital in a subsequent mortgage that the property was bound by a prior one to secure a certain debt was held equivalent to an agreement that the latter mortgage should secure that debt. See also Spencer v. Pierce, 5 R. I. 63, holding that a mortgage included an amount due for service under a sealed contract of employment.

been held not to avoid a chattel mortgage,[87] and a stipulation to indemnify the mortgagee against all costs, trouble, and expense is also valid and enforceable.[88]

4. Description — a. Generally. A chattel mortgage[89] must, subject to exceptions, contain such a description of the debt or other obligation secured as is sufficient, in connection with the inquiries suggested by the instrument, to enable a third person using due diligence to ascertain the nature and extent of the obligation secured.[90] Where the amount of the obligation is known to the parties the rule in some states is that the mortgage must definitely state the extent of the encumbrance;[91] but a statement of the gross amount of the obligation secured is

The withdrawal of an attorney's claim in so far as it affected the rights of the client for whom he acted has been held not to affect the validity of the conveyance as to other creditors thereby secured. Mills v. Pessels, 55 Fed. 588, 13 U. S. App. 49, 5 C. C. A. 215.

Amount of fee.— The stipulation in the mortgage does not control the amount to be added when the foreclosure is by suit. A reasonable amount only can be recovered (Grangers' Business Assoc. v. Clark, 84 Cal. 201, 23 Pac. 1081) and the amount is not measured by the attorney-fee statute or by what was paid in fact (Aultman, etc., Co. v. Shelton, 90 Iowa 288, 57 N. W. 857). It has been held that a commission of ten per cent (Commercial Nat. Bank v. Davidson, 18 Oreg. 57, 22 Pac. 517) and one of twenty per cent (Balfour v. Davis, 14 Oreg. 47, 12 Pac. 89) for an attorney's fee was excessive. See also Keokuk Falls Imp. Co. v. Kingsland, etc., Mfg. Co., 5 Okla. 32, 47 Pac. 484, holding that if there is doubt as to the mode of computing counsel fees the mode most favorable to the debtor must be adopted.

Necessity for actual expenditure.— No fee can be added to the mortgage debt unless the mortgagee has in fact employed an attorney (Benson Bank v. Hove, 45 Minn. 40, 47 N. W. 449) to act in respect to foreclosure which would come within the terms of the stipulation (Moore v. Calvert, 8 Okla. 358, 58 Pac. 627); but the failure of a legitimate effort to get hold of the property does not affect the validity of a charge (Reisan v. Mott, 42 Minn. 49, 43 N. W. 691, 18 Am. St. Rep. 489). Compare Fechheimer v. Baum, 43 Fed. 719, holding that an attorney was entitled to the stipulated fees, although the foreclosure had been enjoined.

The design to secure future advances need sufficient,[92] and it is not necessary that the mortgage itself should contain a full description of the debt to prevent its being fraudulent against creditors.[93]

H. 109), for an omission of the name of the payee and maker in the description of the note may be supplied by parol (Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 53 (statutory); Holmes v. Hinkle, 63 Ind. 518); and although the date of the note is not given the mortgage is valid if the note is described with reasonable certainty (Weber v. Illing, 66 Wis. 79, 27 N. W. 834). Compare Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 786, 26 L. ed. 779, holding that parol evidence is admissible to identify the debt, although the debt is in fact represented by several notes, none of which are described. But see Cincinnati Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Combs, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 523, 58 S. W. 420, holding that a chattel mortgage reciting that it was executed to secure "a certain sum of money" advanced to mortgagor under a contract entered into on a day named, and that a note was executed therefor, is so uncertain as to amount that it does not, although recorded, operate as constructive notice to purchasers or creditors.

A mortgage of a crop for a stated year and for every year thereafter until the debt is fully paid is not void for uncertainty as to the debt secured, since parol evidence is admissible to show that it is still unpaid. Truss v. Harvey, 120 Ala. 636, 24 So. 927.

A statutory requirement for the statement of the actual consideration in certain instances has been held not to apply to a mortgage given by the purchaser of furniture to the seller, at the time of sale, to secure a part or the whole of the purchase-price. Day v. Cohen, 165 Mass. 304, 43 N. E. 109. But the details of statement made necessary by statute were not complied with in Rood v. Welch, 28 Conn. 157; Page v. Ordway, 40 N. H. 253.

Provisions of Ontario Chattel Mortgage Act are met where it is stated in a chattel mortgage that the consideration therefor is the indorsement of a note, for it is only necessary to state the facts and not their legal effect. Robinson v. Mann, 31 Can. Supreme Ct. 484. Compare Boulton v. Smith, 18 U. C. Q. B. 458 [affirming 17 U. C. Q. B. 400], holding a mortgage to be defective in not showing the terms, nature, and effect of the mortgagee's liability incurred by indorsing the mortgagor's paper.

In England, unless a bill of sale given for security sets forth truly the consideration for which it is given, it is void in toto, even between the grantor and grantee (Davis v. Goodman, 5 C. P. D. 128, 49 L. J. C. P. 344, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 288, 28 Wkly. Rep. 559, confirmed by "Bills of Sale Act 1882," § 8); but inaccuracies in statement of consideration will not invalidate bill if true consideration appears from the context (Roberts v. Roberts, 13 Q. B. D. 794, 53 L. J. Q. B. 313, 50 L. T. Rep. N. S. 351, 32 Wkly. Rep. 605), for strict literal accuracy of statement is not required (Ex p. Johnson, 26 Ch. D. 338, 48 J. P. 648, 53 L. J. Ch. 762, 50 L. T. Rep. N. S. 214, 32 Wkly. Rep. 693), but this information cannot be obtained from a reference to another instrument (Sharp v. McHenry, 38 Ch. D. 427, 57 L. J. Ch. 961, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 606).

Erroneous portions of the description may be omitted and the true portions alone may be regarded, when that of itself is sufficient to designate the debt secured. Dodge v. Potter, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 193.

The fact that a renewal note has been given is sufficient to account for a misdescription of the debt secured by a mortgage. Barrows v. Turner, 50 Me. 127; Clark v. Houghton, 12 Gray (Mass.) 38.

95. Crafts v. Crafts, 13 Gray (Mass.) 360; Moses v. Hatfield, 27 S. C. 324, 3 S. E. 538. See also Foster v. Cramer, 19 Colo. 405, 35 Pac. 747, holding that where a mortgage was intended to secure payment of a certain note, of even date therewith, payable on or before March 14, 1887, but by mistake the mortgage recited that the sum of money secured was payable on or before March 14, 1886, according to the tenor of a certain note "bearing even date with this deed," the facts were sufficient to put third persons upon inquiry.

A discrepancy of over three hundred dollars between the statement of the consideration in the commencement of the mortgage, and a subsequent accurate statement of the debt secured in the body of the mortgage does not render a chattel mortgage fraudulent and void per se. Kaysing v. Hughes, 64 Ill. 123.

false description of the debts secured transfers no title to the property by virtue of which the mortgagee can assert a claim in an action at law.[96]

c. Misstatement of Amount. The fact that a chattel mortgage states a sum greater than the actual liability of the mortgagor to the mortgagee does not of itself render the mortgage void at law,[97] but overstatement[98] of amount always requires explanation[99] and is a circumstance from which a jury may infer Extrinsic evidence is admissible to identify the debt secured, where the date of the note does not conform to the date of it as stated in the mortgage (Clark v. Houghton, 12 Gray (Mass.) 38), where the sum described in the mortgage is different from that in the note (Johns v. Church, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 557, 23 Am. Dec. 651), and where the note differs from the mortgage in various other respects (Paine v. Benton, 32 Wis. 491). Compare Rock v. Collins, 99 Wis. 630, 75 N. W. 426, 67 Am. St. Rep. 885, holding that a description of a note in a chattel mortgage given to secure it which incorrectly states the amount at a larger sum than it bears, but otherwise describes it correctly, there being but the one note in the mortgagee's hands payable by the mortgagor, is sufficiently certain to uphold the validity of the mortgage.

96. Jewett v. Preston, 27 Me. 400, holding that where the notes described were not executed other notes held by the mortgagee against the mortgagor could not be substituted therefor. Compare Follett v. Heath, 15 Wis. 601, holding that in some cases the mortgagee may succeed by having the instrument reformed in a court of equity. But see Bramhall v. Flood, 41 Conn. 68, holding that the correction of such a mistake would not affect the rights of creditors who obtained a lien by attachment while it continued.

Although the condition of a mortgage recites that the debt secured is absolute, evidence is admissible to show that the obligation secured was in realty contingent. Goodheart v. Johnson, 88 Ill. 58; Kackley v. State, 91 Ind. 437; Sparks v. Brown, 33 Mo. App. 505; McKinster v. Babcock, 26 N. Y. 378 [reversing 37 Barb. (N. W. 296, holding that, to render a chattel mortgage void in law because taken for a larger amount than was in fact due the mortgagee, it must appear that it was so taken intentionally and not by mere mistake in computation or otherwise.

See 9 Cent. Dig. tit. "Chattel Mortgages," § 108.

98. An understatement of the amount due does not affect the validity of the mortgage (Cushman v. Luther, 53 N. H. 562; Beers v. Waterbury, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 396), but the sum stated limits the amount secured (Beers v. Waterbury, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 396). Compare Cushman v. Luther, 53 N. H. 562, holding that a mortgage may be sustained as a security for a note, notwithstanding the amount of the note is understated in the mortgage, if it appears that the note is the one which the parties to the mortgage in good faith intended to secure.

99. Lawson v. Alabama Warehouse Co., 80 Ala. 341, holding that where a chattel mortgage recited the indebtedness secured as five thousand dollars, but it appeared that two thousand eight hundred dollars only was loaned at the date of the mortgage and the residue was to be advanced at times and in sums to suit the mortgagee's convenience, the explanation was sufficient to relieve the instrument of any imputation of fraud.

A large difference between the debt and fraud,[1] in which case the mortgage is rendered invalid as against creditors of the mortgagor.[2]

5. FUTURE ADVANCES INCLUDED. A mortgage containing a provision that it shall cover future advances will only secure the kind of advances contemplated by the parties,[3] but a provision that future transactions should be based on the same security will make the mortgage cover all future indebtedness,[4] and such an instrument has been held to secure advances made after the maturity of the mortgage.[5]

6. PERSONAL LIABILITY OF MORTGAGOR. When a chattel mortgage is executed to secure a note, the mortgagee may recover in an action at law the amount recited in the mortgage to be due and to be secured thereby, although the note was never signed;[6] and where mortgaged personal property is taken away by a title paramount to that of either of the parties, the mortgagor continues liable the amount given in the mortgage is strong evidence of fraud. Wallach v. Wylie, 28 Kan. 138. Compare Bailey v. Burton, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 339, holding a mortgage for three hundred dollars on five hundred dollars' worth of property, to cover a liability of one hundred dollars for a suretyship obligation, to be void against creditors, although, prior to the attaching of their liens, it was reduced to one hundred dollars and the property delivered.

A slight excess is not sufficient to stamp the deed with fraud, where there was no actual fraudulent intent on the part of the mortgagee. Van Patten v. Thompson, 73 Iowa 103, 34 N. W. 763; Corbin v. Kincaid, 33 Kan. 649, 7 Pac. 145. See also Kiser v. Carrollton Dry Goods Co., 96 Ga. 760, 22 S. E. 303, holding immaterial a variance between a mortgage for five thousand dollars and a debt of four thousand three hundred and ninety-eight dollars secured thereby.

If the real amount of a mortgagee's claim is not known at the time of making the mortgage, an overstatement of the amount by mistake is no evidence of fraud and does not invalidate the instrument. Reynolds v. Johnson, 54 Ark. 449, 16 S. W. 124.

5. Hill v. Nelms, 86 Ala. 442, 5 So. 796. Compare Douglas v. Smith, 74 Iowa 468, 38 N. But see Fort v. Black, 50 Ark. 256, 7 S. for the mortgage debt,[7] provided there was an original undertaking to pay it.[8]

7. Priority of Different Debts Secured by Same Mortgage. Where one mortgage secures several notes due at different times and there is no special provision to the contrary, they have priority of lien in the order of their maturity.[9] Where two distinct kinds of liability are secured, the proceeds must be applied primarily to the payment of the liability first mentioned in the mortgage.[10]

8. Right of Secured Creditor to Benefit of Indemnity Mortgage. A chattel mortgage to secure an accommodation indorser of a note inures at the maturity of the note to the benefit of the holder,[11] unless the mortgage has been assigned by the surety, when the right of the principal creditor to the mortgaged property seems to be cut off.[12]

9. Rule Against Including Other Indebtedness. A chattel mortgage given to secure a certain indebtedness therein expressed cannot be extended to become a lien for another and different indebtedness,[13] except perhaps by agreement

Admissibility of evidence to defeat liability.— Where a mortgagee is not guilty of laches in prosecuting a suit to recover mortgaged property attached by a creditor of the mortgagor, evidence of a settlement by the debtor with the attaching creditor is not admissible in an action by the mortgagee to recover the mortgage debt. Mason v. J. S. Hughes & Co.'s Banking House, (Kan. 1898) 52 Pac. 885.

8. Weed v. Covill, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 242, holding that, where a chattel mortgage contained no agreement to pay the debt secured and no recital or declaration that the mortgagor is personally indebted, there is no personal liability on the mortgage.

What constitutes an agreement to pay.— A recital that a chattel mortgage is given to secure certain notes which the mortgagors "hereby agree to pay" is a promise to pay the mortgage debt (Dinniny v. Gavin, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 298, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 485); but the liability of three mortgagors was not changed from that expressed in notes given by them because of a promise in the mortgage to pay the whole sum (Kelley v. Maxwell, 7 Ohio St. 239).

Subrogation.— Where a chattel mortgage was given on logs to secure the payment of accommodation paper, with the understanding that the mortgagor was to saw the logs, sell the lumber, and with the proceeds take up the paper, and the mortgagor did sell the lumber, the claim of his vendee, who had no notice of the mortgage, had priority over any claim of the chattel mortgagee, or any claim by way of subrogation of the holders of the paper to secure which such mortgage was given. Marquette First Nat. Bank v. Weed, 89 Mich. 357, 50 N. W. 864.

Surety as trustee.— Where a mortgagee relying on the security of his mortgage went as surety on other notes of the mortgagor, it was held that he held the surplus of the mortgaged property over an amount sufficient to protect himself as trustee for the benefit of the holder of the note. Taxes on the mortgaged property which have been paid by the mortgagee cannot be added to the mortgage debt, because the statute allowing it applies only to mortgages of between the parties,[14] and such an agreement cannot be enforced to the detriment of creditors[15] or junior encumbrancers;[16] but the substitution of new notes as evidence of the mortgage debt does not render a mortgage open to the objection that it has been extended to cover a new indebtedness,[17] especially where such a substitution was contemplated at the time of giving the mortgage.[18]

10. Time of Payment — a. In General. In general it is not necessary to state the time for performance of the mortgage obligation.[19] When no time is specified in a mortgage for the performance of the obligation on which it is conditioned, the law will require it to be performed within a reasonable time;[20] but where the mortgage secures an existing debt and no time for payment is specified it is due as soon as given.[21]

b. Statutory Limitation on Term of Credit. Under a statute[22] requiring a renewal affidavit to be filed at the expiration of two years after record of a mortgage, it has been held that a mortgage is not rendered invalid because the mortgage provides for a longer term of credit than two years.[23]

VI. DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTIES AND PROPERTY.

A. Of the Parties. A chattel mortgage, to be effectual against third persons, must point out the parties so that a third person by its aid, together with the aid of such inquiries as the instrument itself suggests, may identify them.[24]

B. Of the Property — 1. RULE STATED. As against third persons the mortgage must point out the subject-matter so that the third person may identify the property covered by the aid of such inquiries as the instrument itself suggests;[25]

Rapids Parlor Furniture Co., 58 Fed. 286, 16 U. S. App. 221, 7 C. C. A. 225, 22 L. R. A. 817, where a mortgage to secure overdue notes was not void but was construed to require a demand and refusal before it became absolute.

A mortgage securing the payment of an overdue note "according to its tenor" will be understood to be conditioned on the payment of the note in its then existing state. Pettis v. Kellogg, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 456.

A mortgage given to indemnify a surety is due as soon as judgment is rendered against the surety on his contract. Conley v. State, 85 Ga. 348, 11 S. E. 659.

An alteration of the note postponing maturity so as to make it conform to the mortgage in respect to the time of payment does not render the transaction fraudulent per se as to creditors. Meixsell v. Williamson, 35 Ill. 529.

App. 530, where the earlier doctrine of the supreme court was followed and it was held that a mortgage providing for payment at the end of two years was bad because days of grace must be added and that would extend the credit beyond the permitted limit. See also Friend v. Johnson, 68 Ill. App. 661, where a mortgage was held not to be open to the objection that the debt secured did not mature within two years.

A chattel mortgage with blank left for the insertion of the name of the mortgagee is of no validity against a vendee of the mortgagor. Herr v. Denver Milling, etc., Co., 13 Colo. 406, 22 Pac. 770, 6 L. R. A. 641.

Where statutory provisions require the mortgage to show the profession, trade, or occupation of the parties, these requirements must be regarded as matters of description, intended for the purpose of identification, and not as indispensable requisites of the mortgage without which it can have no effect as against third persons. A direct statement of possession by the mortgagor is not necessary, but it is sufficient that such a conclusion should be drawn as an inference from the other facts stated. Alfernitz v. Ingalls, 83 Fed. 964, construing Nevada law.

An error in locating the property did not render the description in the mortgage insufficient, where the mortgagor owned no other property of a similar nature (King v. Howell, 94 Iowa 208, 62 N. W. 738; Pettis v. Kellogg, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 456), and it was held that a misdescription of a lot of land on which the mortgaged property was temporarily located could be rejected as surplusage (Spaulding v. Mozier, 57 Ill. 148); but a mortgage of goods in the residence of the mortgagor will not pass goods in a warehouse in another state (Mackey v. Jenkins, 62 Mo. App. 618), and a subsequent removal of the property will not make the statement of location good (J. H. North Furniture, etc., Co. v. Davis, 76 Mo. App. 512). See also Latta v. Bell, 122 N. C. 641, 30 S. E. 15, holding that when property was described as located in a certain room property which was outside the room was not included in the mortgage. Compare Goff v. Pope, 83 N. C. 123, holding evidence admissible to identify an engine misdescribed as to location.

Failure to locate is not fatal when the description is otherwise sufficient for the purpose of identity (Crescent Coal, etc., Co. v. Raymond, 57 Ill. App. 197; Holmes v. Strayhorn-Hutton-Evans Commission Co., 81 Mo. App. 97; Jones v. Workman, 65 Wis. 269, 27 N. W. 158); but when there was also an omission to state the ownership of the chattel the description was bad (Nicholson v. Karpe, 58 Miss. 34), as was a description of "300 railroad ties" without locating the ties (Stephenson v. Seaboard, etc., R. Co., 86 N. C. 455), and of a stock of goods which failed to state where they were to be found (Jaffrey v. Brown, 29 Fed. 476). See also Ormsby v. Nolan, 69 Iowa 130, 28 N. W. 569, holding a merely that chattels are in a certain county,[30] or in a certain city or town,[31] with nothing more, in agricultural communities a statement that the mortgaged property is in the mortgagor's possession in a certain county seems to be sufficient.[32] A fortiori where the mortgage contains an additional provision forbidding removal of the chattel from a certain county the description is sufficient.[33]

3. Mortgage of Part of a Mass of Property. A mortgage of a specified number of chattels out of a larger number or of a specified quantity out of a larger mass which does not furnish data for the separation of the mortgaged chattels is, when there is no separation or delivery, void for uncertainty,[34] but mortgages of description with many details insufficient when the property was not located.

Location of mortgaged lumber.— It is a sufficient location of mortgaged lumber to follow a description in general terms with a statement that it is on a specified dock in a certain city (De Graff v. Byles, 63 Mich. 25, 29 N. W. 487), in the lumber-yard of a certain company on a certain creek (Sommer v. Island City Mercantile, etc., Co., 24 Oreg. 214, 33 Pac. 559), in a certain mill-yard and mill-pond (Morse v. Pike, 15 N. In Texas a mortgage of a stated number of animals included in a larger herd is not void for uncertainty, but confers upon the mortgagee the right to select them, which right he may exercise by suit to foreclose and the sequestration of such animals; and such a mortgage when recorded is constructive notice to an execution creditor of mortgagor of mortgagee's right to select. Avery v. Popper, (Tex. 1898) 48 S. W. 572 [modifying (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 951]; Ox-

part of a larger mass of grain of uniform grade and quality,[35] lying in bulk, have been sustained.[36] The mere fact that mortgaged articles are mingled with articles not mortgaged does not affect the mortgage lien on such of the mortgaged articles as can be identified,[37] and a defect in a mortgage, from lack of separation or other identification of the property meant to be covered, may be cured by such subsequent action of the parties as removes doubt as to identity of the property mortgaged.[38] So where there is a sufficient designation of the property included it is permissible for a mortgage of a mass of property to except certain articles which would be included under the general description,[39] even though the exception may be of property which is by law exempt from attachment and execution.[40]

4. Necessity For Enumeration. Stock in trade may be described in a mortgage thereof by general terms, as all the property of that nature in a certain store,[41] and a schedule or particular enumeration of the mortgaged chattels is

If nothing appears to show that the chattels mortgaged are only part of a larger number of the same description the courts will sustain a mortgage, the only description in which is of number or bulk. Panhandle Nat. Bank v. Emery, 78 Tex. 498, 15 S. W. 23.

If the total number of a certain kind owned by mortgagor is less than the number mentioned in the mortgage the mortgage is valid as to the whole. Croswell v. Allis, 25 Conn. 301.

Actual notice of the mortgage by the adverse claimant will postpone him, even though the description does not separate the part mortgaged from a larger mass. Hall v. Ballou, 58 Iowa 585, 12 N. W. 475.

The words "stock on hand" of a baker were held insufficient to describe property which was intended to be covered by a mortgage. Rocheleau v. Boyle, 11 Mont. 451, 28 Pac. 872.

What passes as "stock in trade."— Clothing and furnishing goods did not include boots and shoes (Clement v. Hartzell, 57 Kan. 482, 46 Pac. 961), unfilled prescriptions were not considered part of a stock of drugs (R. C. Stuart Drug Co. v. Hirsch, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 583), and "'groceries' contained in a 'country and village store'" did not include pails, shovels, and the like (Fletcher v. Powers, 131 Mass. 333); but a horse and wagon, sleigh and harness, used in carrying on the business passed as a part of the stock of goods (Arnett v. Trimmer, 43 N. J. Eq. 488, 11 Atl. 487), although an iron safe, not for sale but for private use, was not included (Curtis v. Phillips, 5 Mich. 112). See also Chapin v. Garretson, 85 Iowa 377, 52 N. W. 104, holding that ladies' notions, consisting of hats, etc., and all other goods now on hand or to be purchased and used in the business of a general millinery store, included only such property as was described immediately following.

Notes and debts due a firm do not pass under a mortgage of its stock in trade. Kemp v. Carnley, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 1.

A question for the jury.— Whether "drug stock" included show-cases, bottles, funnels, etc., used in the drug store was held a question for the jury. Kern v. Wilson, 73 Iowa 490, 35 N. W. 594, 82 Iowa 407, 48 N. W. 919.

When property becomes part of a stock of trade.— Goods which are merely bargained for, but not received at the mortgagor's place of business, do not become a part of his stock in trade (Curtis v. Wilcox, 49 Mich. 425, 13 N. W. 803), nor do goods which are temporarily received and then removed without becoming a portion of the stock kept on hand for sale (Robinson v. Norton, 108 Ga. 562, 34 S. E. 147). But see Stephens v. Pence, 56 Iowa 257, 9 N. W. 215, holding that salt stored in an adjoining shed and kerosene temporarily on the pavement in front of the store are covered by a chattel mortgage on "our entire stock of goods, wares and merchandise . . . in the store-room . . . being No. 21."

Subsequent removal of the stock does not render the description insufficient, whether such removal is contemplated and provided for (Brown v. Thompson, 59 Me. 372) or not (Wheelden v. Wilson, 44 Me. 11).

An omnibus clause in a chattel mortgage to the effect that all the property located on certain premises is included therein has been held to be a sufficient description of property (Rhutasel v. Stephens, 68 Iowa 627, 27 N. W. 786; Goulding v. Swett, 13 Gray (Mass.) 517; Streeter v. Johnson, 23 Nev. 194, 44 Pac. 819; Harris v. Allen, 104 N. C. 86, 10 S. E. 127), even though there is a detailed list of part of the property covered by the mortgage (Veazie v. Somerby, 5 Allen (Mass.) 280; Goulding v. Swett, 13 Gray (Mass.) 517; Harding v. Coburn, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 333, 46 Am. Dec. 680; Merritt v. Kitchen, 121 N. C. 148, 28 S. E. 358); and such a clause regarding all the personal property of a railroad appurtenant to its construction and operation has been sustained (Buck v. Seymour, 46 Conn. 156), although the opposite conclusion was reached in regard to a similar clause covering future goods, wares, etc., to be brought upon the premises (Buskirk v. Cleveland, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 610). But see Santa Fé Electric Co. v. Hitchcock, 9 N. M. 156, 50 Pac. 332, holding that the mortgage of the entire assets of a business does not necessarily include a mortgage of its good-will. Compare Darden v. Gerson, 91 Ala. 323, 9 So. 278, holding that a mortgage of all the mortgagor's interest in a plantation included the rents of his wife's statutory separate estate.

Effect of describing part in greater detail. — Where a description in general terms is followed by a specific description of the property, the latter description has been held to limit the former to the goods therein described. Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106, 59 N. W. 419, 45 Am. St. Rep. 394; Matthews v. Sniffen, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 200.

The terms "furniture," "fixtures," etc., which were used in a chattel mortgage to describe the property covered thereby, have been held to include a piano, billiard tables, and paintings (Sumner v. Blakslee, 59 N. H. 242, 47 Am. Rep. 196); the appliances, implements, and instruments used in carrying on a business (Brody v. Chittenden, 106 Iowa 524, 76 N. W. 1009); and a wooden statue of an elephant which was used as an advertising sign (Curtis v. Martz, 14 Mich. 506); but not wagons and teams used to deliver goods from the mortgaged store (Van Patten v. Leonard, 55 Iowa 520, 8 N. W. 334), or a house (Kuschell v. Campau, 49 Mich. 34, 12 N. W. 899).

What articles pass as appurtenances.— A mortgage of a leasehold interest in land includes all erections on the land for manufacturing purposes, in the absence of a contrary intention expressed in the mortgage. Breese v. Bange, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 474. A mortgage of a "threshing machine" includes the horse-power apparatus accompanying it. Osborne v. McAllister, 15 Nebr. 428, 19 N. W. 510. E. 358, holding that a description of personal property in a chattel mortgage, stating in general terms its character, and specifically stating in what building and rooms it is situated, is sufficient.

does not render the description insufficient or affect the validity of the mortgage.[43]

5. Non-Existence of Other Property. The scarcity or plenitude of chattels similar to those mortgaged is an element to be considered in determining the sufficiency of the description of the chattels covered by the mortgage,[44] and the non-existence of other property to which the terms of the mortgage could a warehouse (Bacon v. Thompson, 60 Iowa 284, 14 N. W. 312), and the apparatus of an electric light company was held to include its street lamps (Ramsdell v. Citizens' Electric Light, etc., Co., 103 Mich. 89, 61 N. W. 275); but an agreement that tools should not pass as appurtenances was binding in favor of a subsequent mortgagee (Frederick v. Devol, 15 Ind. 357). A mortgage of the implements, machinery, and tools in a foundry included "patterns" (Eason v. Miller, 15 S. C. 194), and the sugar on the premises passed by a mortgage of a refinery and all the machinery and effects therein (Thurber v. Minturn, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 27); but an engine-house and scales located at a distance did not pass with a mortgage of an elevator building (Frey v. Drahos, 6 Nebr. 1, 29 Am. Rep. 353), and saw-logs on hand did not pass under the clause "all the supplies I now have on hand" in a mortgage of a sawmill (Conner v. Littlefield, 79 Tex. 76, 15 S. W. 217). Compare Nelson v. Howison, 122 Ala. 573, 25 So. 211, holding it sufficient to name the principal articles and include the rest as appurtenances.

An iron safe has been held to be included in a mortgage of a stock of goods and all fixtures and utensils in a store. McCall v. Walter, 71 Ga. 287; Tollerton, etc., Co. v. Anderson, 108 Iowa 217, 78 N. W. 822.

Description with reference to property held by mortgagor at a specified date.—The phrase "stock on hand at the time of expiration" was held to refer to the expiration of the mortgage and not to the time when an insurance policy on the goods would expire. Citizens' Coal, etc., Co. v. Stanley, 6 Colo. App. 181, 40 Pac. 693.

A chattel mortgage need not recite that the property is in the mortgagor's possession in the vicinity or that he has no other like property in the vicinity. Holmes v. Strayhorn-Hutton-Evans Commission Co., 81 Mo. App. 97.

A mistake in enumerating the composite parts of a herd of cattle will prevent the herd from passing under the mortgage. Mt. Pleasant First Nat. Bank v. Davis, 38 Nebr. 238, 56 N. W. 975.

43. Van Heusen v. Radcliff, 17 N. Y. 580, 72 Am. Dec. 480. Compare Winslow v. Merchants Ins. Co., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 306, 38 Am. Dec. 368, holding that the description was sufficient as to such property as could be identified.

Where a mortgage describes in general terms the property to be covered and refers to a schedule annexed, which latter states that it is "an inventory of personal property mentioned and referred to in the annexed mortgage," only that property passes which is mentioned in the schedule (Broadhead v. Smith, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 499, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 760, 29 N. Y. St. 817); but property referred to merely in an annexed schedule, and not covered by the general description preceding, will not pass (Williams v. Leonard, 26 Can. Supreme Ct. 406).

Description sufficient with schedule.— A description of the property conveyed by trust deed as "the stock of merchandise and all other personal property now contained in the store-room occupied by" R in F, "listed and invoiced and of the value of $3,113.92 as per schedule made" was held sufficient when accompanied with the schedule (State v. Cooper, 79 Mo. 464), since a schedule annexed to the mortgage is a part of the mortgage (Page v. Kendig, (N. J. 1887) 7 Atl. 878). But compare Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Self, 77 Mo. App. 284, holding that an inventory describing the mortgaged goods could not be considered because it was not recorded.

Effect of a schedule is to cut down a general description to goods enumerated therein. Partridge v. White, 59 Me. 564.

Description by reference.— A description of the property mortgaged by reference to another mortgage, where the property is specifically described, is sufficient, not only as between the parties but as to third persons (Thompson v. Anderson, 94 Iowa 554, 63 N. W. 355; Kneller v. Kneller, 86 Iowa 417, 53 N. W. 271; Chicago Title, etc., Co. v. O'Marr, 18 Mont. 568, 46 Pac. 809, 47 Pac. 4); and a reference to a schedule annexed to another mortgage is also sufficient (Newman v. Tymeson, 13 Wis. 172, 80 Am. Dec. 735).

44. Ames Iron Works v. Chinn, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 88, 38 S. W. 247. Compare Willey v. Snyder, 34 Mich. 60, holding good, as against a subsequent purchaser, a mortgage of "one Durm bull, known as the Grinnalls Bull,— said bull is four years old and weighs about 2,400 pounds."

Sufficiency of description where there is other similar property.— A mortgage of "a brindle cow about 3 years old and her increase" was sufficiently accurate, although the mortgagor had another cow of about the same description (Harkey v. Jones, 54 Ark. 158, 15 S. W. 192), and a description of cattle by age, sex, ownership, and location was sufficient, although they were in a pasture with cattle belonging to others (Waggoner v. Oursler, 54 Kan. 141, 37 Pac. 973).

apply frequently renders valid a description in a mortgage which otherwise would be too indefinite.[45]

Where the mortgagor had no other property of the kind covered by the mortgage there was held to be a sufficient identification by describing the property as "eighteen cows, three yearling heifers, five heifer calves," etc. (Desany v. Thorp, 70 Vt. 31, 39 Atl. 309); "one three year old Jersey, . . . one brown cow six years old, crumpled horn" (Johnson v. Brown, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 485); "one bay horse eight years old, weight about 1,200" (Peters v. Parsons, 18 Nebr. 191, 24 N. W. 687); "twenty-three head of horses and mules, . . . all situated on their range on the South Loup river, . . . above described chattels are now in their [the mortgagors'] possession and are owned by them" (Wiley v. Shars, 21 Nebr. 712, 33 N. W. 418); "one hundred and twenty head of feeding cattle now on feed in Audrian county, Mo." (Mexico First Nat. Bank v. Ragsdale, 158 Mo. 668, 59 S. W. 987, 81 Am. St. Rep. 332), "one hundred and eighty head of Merino and Cotswold sheep" owned and possessed by B in said county (Crisfield v. Neal, 36 Kan. 278, 13 Pac. 272); "fourteen mules, now on my plantation in Russell county" (Hurt v. Redd, 64 Ala. 85); and a mortgage of "ashes," being all the ashes in the sole ashery of the mortgagor is sufficient (Dunning v. Stearns, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 630).

A mortgage on "our entire stock of goods" is valid where the mortgagor firm has but one stock. Kiser v. Carrollton Dry Goods Co., 96 Ga. 760, 22 S. E. 303.

Misstating the horse-power of a mortgaged engine did not render the description insufficient when the mortgagor had but one engine in his possession. Lamar v. Coleman, 88 Ga. 417, 14 S. E. 608.

46. Sufficiency of location.— The locus of mortgaged property was sufficiently indicated where it was stated to be in the mortgagor's possession in or about a certain village (Fordyce v. Neal, 40 Mich. 705), in a certain county and state (Wilson v. Rustad, 7 N. D. 330, 75 N. W. 260, 66 Am. St. Rep. 649), or in a certain county and the counties thereto adjoining (Lapowski v. Taylor, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 624, 35 S. W. 934). Compare Golden v. Cockril, 1 Kan. 259, 81 Am. Dec. 510, holding that locating in the territory of Kansas was insufficient. But see Williams v. Crook, 63 Miss. 9, holding that a statement that a mortgaged horse was in the possession of the mortgagor was a sufficient location to render valid a description by age and color.

As affected by nature of property.—A statement of the county of the mortgagor's residence is not a sufficient location of a mortgaged horse to enable a third person to identify it (Barrett v. Fisch, 76 Iowa 553, 41 N. W. 310, 14 Am. St. Rep. 238); but the reverse was true where a herd of cattle were mortgaged instead of a single horse (Brown v. Holmes, 13 Kan. 482).

Location on land in possession of mortgagor.— Mortgaged animals were sufficiently located when they were said to be on the mortgagor's farm (Kenyon v. Tramel, 71 Iowa 693, 28 N. W. 37) or plantation (Hurt v. Redd, 64 Ala. 85) in a certain county; and a fortiori location in a certain feed lot on a farm is sufficient (Evans-Snyder-Buell Co. v. Turner, 143 Mo. 638, 45 S. W. 654).

The land where the mortgaged animals are are sufficiently identified by stating some of their characteristics in respect to age, color, height, sex, and weight,[47] or by indicating their marks and brands,[48] or is sufficiently described by a statement that it is a range on "Loup" river (Wiley v. Shars, 21 Nebr. 712, 33 N. W. 418) or by giving the government subdivision of township, range, and section (Jordan v. Hamilton County Bank, 11 Nebr. 499, 9 N. W. 654).

Discrepancy in location will render a description bad, just as much as the misstatement of color, marks, etc. Baer v. Whittaker, 57 Ark. 151, 20 S. W. 1087.

Nebraska.— Shreck v. Spain, 30 Nebr. 887, 47 N. W. 419 (holding sufficient to constitute notice to a subsequent mortgagee "one dark brown mare, age five years, weight about 1,200 pounds, of the value of $175, and one dark brown mare, right hind foot white, age five years, weight about 1,200 pounds, of the value of $175"); Rawlings v. Kennard, 26 Nebr. 181, 41 N. W. 1004 (age, color, and weight).

See 9 Cent. Dig. tit. "Chattel Mortgages," § 90.

Misstatement of age of mortgaged horse does not render the description faulty (Peters v. Parsons, 18 Nebr. 191, 24 N. W. 687); and this principle of disregarding errors in statement of the age of mortgaged animals has received general affirmation (George R. Barse Live-Stock Commission Co. v. Turner, 56 Kan. 778, 44 Pac. 987; Redfield First Nat. Bank v. Koechel, 8 S. D. 391, 66 N. W. 933; Harris v. Kennedy, 48 Wis. 500, 4 N. W. 651). Compare Tolbert v. Horton, 33 Minn. 104, 22 N. W. 126, where horses which were three years old coming four were held to be properly described as four-year-old horses.

Misstating the color of a mortgaged animal has been held not to render a description insufficient or invalid (Adamson v. Fagan, 44 Minn. 489, 47 N. W. 56; Harris v. Woodard, 96 N. C. 232, 1 S. E. 544); but a description was insufficient where a bay mule was described as gray (Bowman v. Roberts, 58 Miss. 126) and where the number of white feet of a mortgaged horse was misstated (Rowley v. Bartholomew, 37 Iowa 374). Compare Hutton v. Arnett, 51 Ill. 198, holding that a mortgage of "one yoke of oxen, seven or eight years old; one of said oxen is a brindle in color, with the point of his horn broken off; the other is a spotted one in color. Also one yoke of oxen four years old, color red" would not warrant mortgagee's claim in trover to three head of cattle about eight or nine years old, and one of them three years old last spring, and all of red color.

Change in color of a mortgaged horse does not affect the validity of the mortgage. Turpin v. Cunningham, 127 N. C. 508, 37 S. E. 453, 80 Am. St. Rep. 808, 51 L. R. A. 800.

The possibility of describing with greater detail, as where a stallion of a well-known name is simply described as a sorrel horse, tends to render a description insufficient. Montgomery v. Wight, 8 Mich. 143, construing Canadian statute.

In spite of a sufficient location of the property a mortgage of "three yoke of oxen" (McCord v. Cooper, 30 Ind. 9) or of a herd of steers by age and number (Caldwell v. Trowbridge, 68 Iowa 150, 26 N. W. 49) was held insufficient.

Describing mortgaged "bulls" as "stags" was held fatal to the validity of the mortgage. Becker v. Dalby, (Iowa 1901) 86 N. W. 314.

The species of mortgaged animals need not be stated to render the instrument valid between the parties thereto. Frick v. Fritz, (Iowa 1902) 88 N. W. 961.

Texas.— Ballinger Nat. Bank v. Bryan, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 673, 34 S. W. 451.

See 9 Cent. Dig. tit. "Chattel Mortgages," § 91.

Effect of mistake.— A mortgage of twenty-five head of cattle branded with "(=) on left side and Z on both hips" was held insufficient to cover eighteen branded with "(=)" on the left side and the remaining seven with Z on both hips. New Hampshire Cattle Co. v. Bilby, 37 Mo. App. 43. But see Ft. North Nat. Bank v. Red River Nat. Bank, 84 Tex. 369, 19 S. W. 517, holding valid a mortgage describing the property as so many head of steers, branded as follows: "about seventy-five head are branded TEX, and about twenty head are in various brands," although only sixty-two head were branded.

Misstatement of brands and height of a mortgaged mare may be rejected when the rest of the description is sufficient. King v. Aultman, 24 Kan. 246. But see Packers Nat. Bank v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 114 Iowa 621, 87 N. W. 653, holding it error to instruct a jury that they might disregard a misdescription of brands in determining the sufficiency of a description.

registration in a herd-book.[49] In the absence of a sufficient location of the property description of animals by color, age, etc., is insufficient;[50] but a description of the mortgaged animal in great detail was held to be sufficient to identify it, even though there was no statement as to where it was to be found.[51]

(II) Increase. A chattel mortgage will not be deemed to cover after-acquired property unless the intention that it should is clearly expressed,[52] although it has been held that the young of mortgaged animals pass as an incident to the original property;[53] and between the original parties to the mortgage

Construction of description.— Successive descriptions differing in material respects should be construed as applying to different property rather than to the same chattels. Norfolk Nat. Bank v. Wood, 33 Nebr. 113, 49 N. W. 958. See also Gammon v. Bull, 86 Iowa 754, 53 N. W. 340, holding that two mortgages, the first describing the property as "one brown horse, nine years old, named Charlie," and the second, as "one bay horse, nine years old, named Charlie," should be treated, in foreclosure of the second, as referring to different horses.

A fortiori a description is insufficient which contains neither age, color, etc., nor location. Everett v. Brown, 64 Iowa 420, 20 N. W. 743.

51. Adams v. Hill, 10 Kan. 627. See also Shum v. Claghorn, 69 Vt. 45, 52, 37 Atl. 236, 238, where it is said that "a statement of the location of the animal, or the designation of special marks, will often be necessary to perfect a description when the mortgagor has others of the same sex, age and color; but we think a mortgage ought not to be held invalid for the want of such further description, unless it appears that the mortgagor owned other animals answering the description given."

A statement of ear brands on a mortgaged steer was held to be insufficient to identify it in the absence of a sufficient location of the property. Andregg v. Brunskill, 87 Iowa 351, 54 N. W. 135, 43 Am. St. Rep. 388.

52. Robinson, J., in Iowa State Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 98 Iowa 631, 636, 67 N. W. 677.

Excess not included.— A mortgage of three hundred hogs on premises of mortgagor, "being all the hogs that I have," was held not to include an excess of twenty-one above that number. Chipman v. Weiny, 112 Iowa 702, 84 N. W. 905. Nor does a mortgage executed in April, 1879, describing the property as certain hogs from "six weeks to two years old" include hogs that in January, 1880, were described as being "about ten months old." Boggs v. Stanky, 13 Nebr. 400, 14 N. W. 392.

Fleece of mortgaged sheep thereafter growing was held not to pass with the sheep when it was not specified that the fleece or increase should pass (Santa Ana First Nat. Bank v. Erreca, 116 Cal. 81, 47 Pac. 926, 58 Am. St. Rep. 133), and "increase" was held not to include fleece but offspring only (Alferitz v. Borgwardt, 126 Cal. 201, 58 Pac. 460. Contra, Alferitz v. Ingalls, 83 Fed. 964). But see Cox v. Beck, 83 Fed. 269, holding that, where sheep and their increase are mortgaged, the young lambs and fleece on the sheep at the time the mortgagee takes possession for foreclosure is necessarily included in the mortgage, but that purchasers of such as previously have been separated and sold by the mortgagor in possession take without reference to the mortgage.

The description was sufficient to pass the increase of the mortgaged animals against adverse claims by third persons, where the mortgage read that it included "all increase of said mares" (Hopkins Fine Stock Co. v. Reid, 106 Iowa 78, 75 N. W. 656), all the cows and calves of the mortgagor that may be raised on his farm during the season (Cleveland v. Koch, 108 Mich. 514, 66 N. W. 376), or "six hundred head of sheep, consisting of wethers, ewes and lambs, and their increase for the year 1882" (Corbin v. Kincaid, 33 Kan. 649, 7 Pac. 145).

53. Cahoon v. Miers, 67 Md. 573, 11 Atl. 278, holding that since the legal title to the mortgaged property was in the mortgagee, the legal title to the offspring of all mortgaged female animals was in him also; and that this title could be asserted against a third person, even though the mortgagor retained possession. To same effect see Meyer v. Cook, the product of mortgaged property, such as the increase of female animals, will pass to the mortgagee without any special provision to that effect.[54]

b. Book-Accounts. When existing book-accounts[55] are mortgaged the names of the debtors and the several amounts they owe should be set forth in the description of the accounts.[56] Where the accounts do not exist the transactions should be specified whereby the future accounts are to arise,[57] and the place specified where accounts are to be earned by the use of a mortgaged machine.[58]

Additional requirements.— In order that offspring of mortgaged animals shall pass to the mortgagee in the absence of any clause including them, the mortgagee must show either that they were conceived before the mortgage was executed or he must take possession of the original mortgaged property. Burden of proof rests on the mortgagee to show what, if any, increase has taken place (Gammon v. Bull, 86 Iowa 754, 53 N. W. 340), and as against a person levying an execution on two mares of the mortgagor, a mortgagee of one of them in order to recover a colt must adduce evidence that it was dropped by the mare covered by his mortgage (Boggs v. Stanky, 13 Nebr. 400, 14 N. W. 392). See also infra, VII, B, 1, c, (II), (B).

St. Rep. 392, holding it sufficient to describe the accounts as to accrue from the sale of certain merchandise, also mortgaged, and situated in a certain building.

A mortgage does not operate to pass future accounts unless the description is sufficient to cover them (Nugent v. John McNeil Shoe Co., 62 N. J. Eq. 583, 50 Atl. 628) and the parties expressed their intention to have them pass by the terms of the written instrument (Lormer v. Allyn, 64 Iowa 725, 21 N. W. 149).

59. A growing crop is defined as one only that is at the time nourished and supported by the soil and not yet cut or threshed. Ford v. Sutherlin, 2 Mont. 440.

Increase of live stock not included in a description must designate the time or year of growth[60] and the land on which the crop is to be produced;[61] but it is not necessary for the mortgage to specify mortgage of "all the crops produced and products raised or grown hereafter on said premises." Desany v. Thorp, 70 Vt. 31, 39 Atl. 309.

60. Dodds v. Neel, 41 Ark. 70; McConnell v. Langdon, 2 Ida. 892, 28 Pac. 403; Barr v. Cannon, 69 Iowa 20, 28 N. W. 413; Eggert v. White, 59 Iowa 464, 13 N. But see Truss v. Harvey, 120 Ala. 636, 24 So. 927, sustaining a mortgage of "all crops of corn, cotton, and other produce which I may raise."

During the continuance of a mortgage was held a sufficient designation of time of growth of mortgaged crops (Hall v. Glass, 123 Cal. 500, 56 Pac. 336, 69 Am. St. Rep. 77), and so the conclusion has been drawn that a mortgage was only intended to cover crops raised before the maturity of mortgage notes, which rendered the statement of time of growth sufficient (Hahn v. Heath, 127 N. C. 27, 37 S. E. 63; Taylor v. Hodges, 105 N. C. 344, 11 S. E. 156).

Description of crops as growing, without a specification of the year, is also sufficient. Luce v. Moorehead, 73 Iowa 498, 35 N. W. 598.

Crops of a certain year "and each succeeding year" until the debt is paid has been held sufficiently definite as to time. Truss v. Harvey, 120 Ala. 636, 24 So. 927; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Mann, 2 N. D. 456, 51 N. W. 946.

"My entire crop grown the present or next year" is likewise sufficiently definite as to time. Holst v. Harmon, 122 Ala. 453, 26 So. 157.

"Out of the first cotton that may be gathered" has been held a good specification of time. Stearns v. Gafford, 56 Ala. 544.

61. Keith v. Ham, 89 Ala. 590, 7 So. 234 (holding that the mortgage is good in equity, although the land is not designated); Redfield v. Montgomery, 71 Miss. 113, 14 So. 199; Crinkley v. Egerton, 113 N. C. 142, 18 S. E. 341; Weil v. Flowers, 109 N. C. 212, 13 S. E. 761; Gwathney v. Etheridge, 99 N. C. 571, 6 S. E. 411. Compare Atkinson v. Graves, 91 N. C. 99, where a mortgage of a bale of cotton to be made during the year was held to operate merely as an executory contract, because of uncertainty.

Sufficiency of designation of place.— It is sufficient to state in a mortgage of a crop that it is to be raised on land in a certain county, township, range, and section (Shepard v. Barnes, 3 Dak. 148, 14 N. W. 110; Muse v. Lehman, 30 Kan. 514, 1 Pac. 804; Strolberg v. Brandenberg, 39 Minn. 348, 40 N. W. 356; Minor v. Sheehan, 30 Minn. 419, 15 N. W. 687; Reinstein v. Roberts, 34 Oreg. 87, 55 Pac. 90, 75 Am. St. Rep. 564), as where the portions of the section on which the mortgaged crops were to be raised were indicated by acres and points of the compass (Chicago Lumber Co. v. Hunter, 58 Nebr. 328, 78 N. W. 619); and it has also been held sufficient to describe the crops merely as being raised in a certain county (Hamilton v. Maas, 77 Ala. 283; Johnson v. Grissard, 51 Ark. 410, 11 S. W. 585, 3 L. R. A. 795 [followed in Henderson v. Gates, 52 Ark. 371, 12 S. W. 780]; Hughes v. Abston, 105 Tenn. 70, 58 S. W. 296. Contra, Muir v. Blake, 57 Iowa 662, 11 N. W. 621; Commercial State Bank v. Interstate Elevator Co., 14 S. D. 276, 85 N. W. 219, 86 Am. St. Rep. 760).

Particular designations.—It was a sufficient identification of the land to refer to it as "my place" (Seay v. McCormick, 68 Ala. 549), the G place in D county (Durham v. Atwell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 316), the T plantation in L county (Stephens v. Tucker, 55 Ga. 543), the land of the mortgagor in N county known as the "timber claim" (McConnell v. Langdon, 2 Ida. 892, 28 Pac. 403), lands in a certain county leased of a certain person (Wetlin v. Mount, 73 Miss. 526, 19 So. 201), or as a certain "forty-acre field" (Krone v. Phelps, 43 Ark. 350). Compare Woodlief v. Harris, 95 N. C. 211, where the description, which was held sufficient, was "on lands owned or rented" by the mortgagor.

What lands are included.— "All my lands" was held to include a parcel recovered by suit from the mortgagor ten days after the mortgage was given. Brown v. Miller, 108 N. C. 395, 13 S. E. 167 [following Rawlings v. Hunt, 90 N. C. 270]. So rented lands were included in a mortgage of crops grown on "my lands, or any other lands that I may cultivate, or aid in or cause to be cultivated" (Cobb v. Daniel, 105 Ala. 335, 338, 16 So. 882), but an adjoining farm rented by the mortgagor was not included in a mortgage of growing corn on his farm in section 35, in B county (Mayer v. Keith, 55 Mo. App. 157), and land rented by croppers who paid a portion of their crop to the mortgagor by way of rent was held not covered by a mortgage of cotton to be raised by the mortgagor assisted by his family and hired help (Blount v. Lewis, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 59 S. W. 293). Compare State v. Logan, 100 N. C. 454, 6 S. E. 398, where the description embraced all the crops grown on the mortgagor's lands.

Where a specific location of a five-acre tract was wrong it was held that the mortgage did not cover crops grown on another tract on the same farm. Darr v. Kempe, 54 Ark. 91, 15 S. W. 14.

Where land is conveyed and mortgaged together with "the crop . . . to be raised by us," no other crop is mortgaged save that to be grown on the land sold. Pettis v. Sullivan, (Miss. 1897) 21 So. 607.

Misstating the name of the lessor of lands in a mortgage of the crop by the lessee did not render the description bad. Hunt v. Shackleford, 56 Miss. 397.

Misstating the government subdivision on which a crop was to be raised was fatal when or state in terms the nature and kind of crop intended to be conveyed to the mortgagee.[62]

7. Construction[63] and Determination of Description — a. Admissibility of Extrinsic Evidence. As even a detailed description of the subject-matter of a mortgage is frequently insufficient when taken alone to indicate the property conveyed,[64] the general rule of law is that parol evidence is admissible, whether the description be general or specific, to identify the subject-matter of a chattel mortgage and to separate it from other property of a similar kind.[65] So parol evidence is admissible to show that particular chattels are included by a general description,[66]

both range and township were misstated (Adams v. Dubuque Commercial Nat. Bank, 53 Iowa 491, 5 N. W. 619); but a misdescription of range should be disregarded when location by section and town is correct (Love v. Putnam, 41 Nebr. 86, 59 N. W. 691. Contra, Wadena First Nat. Bank v. Hendrickson, 61 Minn. 293, 63 N. W. 725).

62. Woodlief v. Harris, 95 N. C. 211; Coughran v. Sundback, 9 S. D. 483, 70 N. W. 644. But see Rountree v. Britt, 94 N. C. 104, rejecting as too vague a mortgage describing the property as "my entire crop of every description."

An undivided part of fractional interest in a crop may be mortgaged, either by specifying the fractional interest which is to pass to the mortgagee (Shepard v. Barnes, 3 Dak. 148, 14 N. W. 110; Johnson v. Rider, 84 Iowa 50, 50 N. W. 36; Melin v. Reynolds, 32 Minn. 52, 19 N. W. 81; Advance Thresher Co. v. Schmidt, 9 S. D. 489, 70 N. W. 646), a fractional number of acres (Zehner v. Aultman, 74 Ind. 24), the first twenty acres planted with certain grain on the specified farm (Wade v. Strachan, 71 Mich. 459, 39 N. W. 582), or by stating that the mortgagee is entitled to the first pickings up to a certain amount (Watson v. Pugh, 51 Ark. 218, 10 S. W. 493; Stephens v. Tucker, 58 Ga. 391; Senter v. Mitchell, 5 McCrary (U. S.) 147, 16 Fed. 206). But see Wattles v. Cobb, 60 Nebr. 403, 83 N. W. 195, 83 Am. St. Rep. 537, where the attempt was made to mortgage three hundred and forty acres of corn, a part of a growing crop of four hundred and twenty-five acres, but was unsuccessful, as it was not uniform in quality or capable of identification.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that a certain crop was grown during the year designated in a mortgage. Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351.

What mortgage is construed to cover.— A written clause in the mortgage of a crop that it was "to the extent of one hundred bales of cotton" was held not to limit the printed description which covered the entire crop raised. Comer v. Lehman, 87 Ala. 362, 6 So. 264.

63. "Written descriptions of property are to be interpreted in the light of the facts known to and in the minds of the parties at the time. . . . A subsequent purchaser or mortgagor [sic] is supposed to acquire a knowledge of all the facts, so far as may be needful to his protection, and he purchases in view of that knowledge." Cooley, J., in Willey v. Snyder, 34 Mich. 60, 61.

64. Necessity for outside evidence.— "Most personal property must, from the nature of the case, be described in such general terms as to leave no other alternative, but to resort to parol evidence to identify it. Apparently it seems a more bald description to say 'all my household furniture,' than to enumerate the articles, and describe them as 'two dozen of chairs, five tables,' &c.; but in reality the latter will require extrinsic evidence to identify the property, as much as the former would." Including property not owned by the mortgagor at the request of the real owner and without stating the true ownership to the mortgagee will have the effect of transferring the property to the mortgagee when the mortgagor subsequently acquires the property. Berghoff v. McDonald, 87 Ind. 549.

The description of the after-acquired property must be such that it can be identified (Fraser v. Macpherson, 34 N. of the property covered by the mortgage does not render the mortgage invalid as to the part which is correctly described.[83]

d. Province of Court and Jury. Where the question in regard to the description contained in a chattel mortgage is one of construction merely, its decision is for the court;[84] but the identity of the property claimed with that described in the mortgage is a question for the jury,[85] and so is the question whether the recitals, aided by inquiries suggested, would enable third persons using diligence to identify the property intended to be conveyed.[86]

VII. SUBJECT-MATTER OF A CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

A. Present Interests — 1. In General. All personal property subject to absolute sale can be mortgaged,[87] and it makes no difference that the property is exempt from attachment and from levy and sale upon execution, for exemption is a privilege of the debtor, not a limitation upon his power to dispose of his property voluntarily.[88]

Necessity for reformation.—A chattel mortgage erroneously describing the property cannot be the basis of an action in claim and delivery, without first having the description reformed. 2. PARTICULAR CASES — a. Buildings.[89] A building erected by one person on land of another, although prima facie a part of the freehold, nevertheless, if erected under an agreement with the owner of the land that it may be moved, remains personalty and is the proper subject of a chattel mortgage.[90]

b. Furniture. Furniture in a building, where not a fixture, may be mortgaged as personal property.[91]

c. Intangible Property. As a rule intangible property may be mortgaged, and hence chattel mortgages of choses in action,[92] shares of stock,[93] and other claims and intangible rights[94] have been held valid; but where what is sought to be mortgaged consists merely in a license and does not amount to a property right the mortgage will convey nothing.[95]

Mortgages of furniture.— Under this statute, providing that mortgages may be made upon furniture in hotels, lodging, or boarding-houses to secure the purchase-money of the articles mortgaged, it has been held that the mortgage need not be given to the seller of the articles, but may be given to one who advances the money wherewith they are pur-

enumerated are not absolutely void, but as between the parties and against all other persons except creditors of the mortgagor and bona fide purchasers such mortgages are valid;[97] and a mortgage is valid as to property enumerated by the statute, notwithstanding it also covers property not authorized.[98]

4. Sufficiency of Mortgagor's Interest — a. In General. It is not necessary to the validity of a chattel mortgage that the mortgagor have an absolute title to the property mortgaged, but he must have some interest therein.[99] A mortgage of property in which the mortgagor has no interest whatever is void,[1] and ratification by the real owner cannot make it valid as against a subsequent purchaser without notice;[2] but it seems that almost any interest in chattels will warrant the giving of a chattel mortgage thereon to the extent of such interest,[3] as where

As to what is within the statute, it has been held that the furniture must have been actually used in a hotel or boarding-house (Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 318), and that the use of the property in a saloon will not suffice (Gassner v. Patterson, 23 Cal. 299).

What constitutes verbal mortgage in violation of Cal. Civ. Code, § 2922.— After the giving of a mortgage on growing wheat to P, the latter made other advances of money to the mortgagor, and on receiving from him certain of the wheat when it was grown applied the proceeds to the unsecured debt under a verbal agreement to that effect with the mortgagor. It was held that this verbal agreement was not a verbal mortgage in violation of Cal. Civ. Code, § 2922, since its effect was rather to extinguish the mortgage on the crops to which it applied than the creation of one.

99. Partnership mortgages.—When a member of a partnership gives a mortgage of partnership property to secure his individual debt, it covers the entire interest of the firm, subject to the claims of his copartners in the mortgaged property, and the lien of the mortgage becomes absolute upon the whole property covered thereby, if he afterward secures a release of such claims. Rep. 259. Compare Roberts' Appeal, 60 Pa. St. 400, holding that an enabling act for mining and manufacturing corporations did not authorize a mortgage of chattels.

The mortgagee acquires only the interest of the mortgagor. Rainey v. Nance, 54 Ill. 29; Warner v. Porter, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 26, 1 West. L. Month. 104.

There is no "order and disposition doctrine" as to mortgages, and the execution of a chattel mortgage of property which has been in the open possession of, and offered for sale in the regular course of business by, the mortgagor does not give the mortgagee any rights as against a person whom he knows all the time to be the real owner. Bray v. Flickinger, 69 Iowa 167, 28 N. W. 492. But see Carr v. Lester, 90 Ala. 349, 8 So. 35, where, under a statute, a mortgage of a piano which had been left in the possession of the mortgagor for four years by its owner was held valid.

3. Mortgagor need not be in possession.— A chattel mortgage by the general owner of the mortgagor has an equitable interest in certain property [4] or owns an undivided share.[5] property is valid notwithstanding the goods are at the time in the hands of a third person who has a claim to have a special interest therein. Hughes v. Stubblefield, 21 Ill. App. 216; Brown v. Allen, 35 Iowa 306; McCalla v. Bullock, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 288. But see Fletcher v. Drath, 66 Mo. 126, holding that the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to one advancing money and taking a deed of trust upon personal property not in the possession of the grantor in the deed of trust, but in the possession of a third party.

Leased property.— Chattels held by the buyer on a lease and not to become his till wholly paid for may be mortgaged by the seller to another person before the price is fully paid, and such person will acquire a title superior to that of the conditional buyer. Everett v. Hall, 67 Me. 497.

Interest after forfeiture.— After the seizure of a vessel and cargo for a supposed breach of the navigation laws and after confession thereof by the owner, he has still such an interest therein as would enable him to make a valid mortgage to some of his creditors as against others who attach upon the final restoration of the property by the government. Mitchell v. Cunningham, 29 Me. 376. But see Beattie v. Boyle, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. 201, where it was held that a mortgage of personal property made six days after the decree of forfeiture thereof for violation of the revenue law as to illicit distilling, but before the sale, was invalid.

Mortgage by an administratrix.— Where the administratrix and several children of the intestate united in a mortgage of personal property belonging to the estate, the rights of creditors not being in controversy, the mortgagors could not object to the mortgage on the ground that the property was in the hands of the administratrix for distribution and liable to the demands of creditors and next of kin. Clagett v. Salmon, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 314.

Property in custodia legis.— It has been held that the owner of property may mortgage it, although it is in the hands of an officer who has levied an attachment (Parsons v. Merrill, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 356. Contra, Hudson v. Lamar, 74 Mo. App. 238) or execution (Gardner v. Bunn, 132 Ill. 403, 23 N. E. 1072, 7 L. R. A. 729) upon it; but such a mortgage made to one who has notice of the levy to secure a prior debt is invalid as against the creditor in execution (Thompson v. Van Vechten, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 373). In Parsons v. Merrill, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 356, the mortgagor died before judgment, which dissolved the attachment, and it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to have the property delivered to him on payment of the officer's fees. See also Pindell v. Grooms, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 501, where a defendant in replevin was allowed to mortgage the property in controversy, because choses in action were properly subject to mortgage and the mortgagee's equitable title entitled him to the benefit of the judgment in the replevin suit.

Where the mortgagor obtained title by fraud, the mortgagee not being an innocent purchaser, the mortgage was held invalid. Fletcher v. Drath, 66 Mo. 126.

What are not defects in mortgagor's title. — Mere failure to pay for goods purchased on credit in the usual course of business will not prevent the purchaser from executing a mortgage thereon. Lippincott v. Shaw Carriage Co., 25 Fed. 577. Compare Codman v. Freeman, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 306, holding that the title of a mortgagee could not be defeated by showing that the mortgaged chattels were purchased by the mortgagor with money which he fraudulently reserved from his creditor upon the settlement of his estate as an insolvent debtor. See also Wetzel v. Webb, (Cal. 1893) 33 Pac. 1105, where the evidence was held to justify a finding that the mortgagor had title.

A mortgage of goods which the mortgagor is under contract to sell to another has been held valid. Buckingham v. Dake, 112 Fed. 258, 50 C. C. A. 492.

A husband's rights in his wife's chattels is sufficient to authorize him to mortgage them. Wolfe v. Bate, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 208. Compare Eddy v. McCall, 71 Mich. 497, 39 N. W. 734, holding that where a mortgage was signed by both husband and wife it was immaterial which one owned the mortgaged property.

As against the general owner or the mortgagor's assignee for the benefit of creditors, a mortgage by one having a special interest is invalid where the mortgage was not delivered or the mortgagee did not obtain possession. Cook v. Kelly, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 358.

Equity of redemption sufficient.— A mortgagor of personal property in possession has, even after condition broken, a mortgageable interest therein until such right is foreclosed either by sale or perhaps by lapse of time (White v. Quinlan, 30 Mo. App. 54; Smith v. Coolbaugh, 21 Wis. 427); and until foreclosure the junior mortgagee has a right to redeem or whatever other rights the mortgagor had (White v. Quinlan, 30 Mo. App. 54). See also Burnham v. Citizens' Bank, 55 Kan. 545, 40 Pac. 912, holding that, where goods were mortgaged with power to sell and possession delivered to the mortgagee, the mortgagor reserving one half of the proceeds of sales to be made during a certain month, and afterward the mortgagor executed a second mortgage subject to the former, the second mortgagee acquired the right to one half of the proceeds of the sales for the month specified. Compare Kimball v. Sattley, 55 Vt. 285, 45 Am. b. Inchoate or Incomplete Title. It has been held that a person in possession of chattels not paid for and which, by the terms of the sale to him, were to remain the property of the seller until paid in full has a mortgageable interest therein[6] and may give a mortgage of the goods themselves which will be valid against attaching creditors and subsequent mortgagees whose mortgages were given after the property was paid for.[7]

B. Future Interests — 1. At Law — a. In General. At common law[8] a chattel mortgage upon property subsequently to be acquired, in which the mortgagor has no present or potential interest, is void against subsequent purchasers and attaching creditors,[9] even though given to secure the purchase-price of the ell, 22 Minn. 561, where, under a contract by A to deliver to B one third of a crop of wheat to be set apart at the threshing machine, the right of B could be mortgaged, so that the title to the third, when set apart, would vest in the mortgagee. Compare Citizens' State Bank v. Abbott, 80 Iowa 646, 45 N. W. 576, holding that where cattle shipped by the purchaser to a man with whom he had a contract to sell them on commission for half the profits, after deducting the cost price, are mortgaged by the consignee to a bank which has paid the shipper's drafts for their cost price before they were sold, the mortgagee is entitled to their possession as against the shipper.

App. 538, 51 Pac. 590, where it was held error to instruct that a chattel mortgage was invalid to the extent that it covered goods not paid for as to the sellers of those goods. But see Taylor v. Barker, 30 S. C. 238, 9 S. E. 115, where defendant sold to B certain machinery, the contract providing that, until paid for, the title to the machinery should remain in defendant. Plaintiff, through whose agency the machinery was sold and who had actual notice of the stipulation, took a mortgage on the machinery to secure his own debt and recorded it. Defendant subsequently took new notes from B and took a mortgage on the machinery as security. It was held that as when plaintiff took his mortgage the title to the machinery was in defendant, B had no power to give that mortgage and it could not be asserted as a lien prior to defendant's.

Estoppel on mortgagee.— The acceptance of a chattel mortgage estops the mortgagee to assert that a prior transfer of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor was a conditional sale, reserving title until payment was made. Sprague v. Branch, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 575.

8. Statutory provisions.— In Dakota, under Dak. Civ. Code, § 1704, a lien might be created on property not yet acquired or not yet in existence (McKay v. Shotwell, 6 Dak. 124, 50 N. W. 622); and a similar rule prevails in North Dakota by N. D. Code, § 4680 (Bidgood v. Monarch Elevator Co., 9 N. D. 627, 84 N. W. 561, 81 Am. St. Rep. 604), but the lien attaches only to the extent of the mortgagor's interest when he acquires the property, and hence, where the mortgagor was a tenant and under the terms of his agreement with his landlord never acquired an interest in any specific grain, the mortgage conveyed nothing (Bidgood v. Monarch Elevator Co., 9 N. D. 627, 84 N. W. 561, 81 Am. St. Rep. 604).

When the carrier delivered them the store was in possession of D, a mortgagee of M, under a mortgage covering after-acquired property. The goods were sold under the mortgage and bid in by the mortgagee, from whom they were replevied by the consignor. c. Potential Interests — (I) Generally. Where the mortgagor has a potential interest in the article to be produced or to be acquired in the future, the general rule is that he may mortgage it.[16] Thus he may mortgage future earnings or wages if he has a present contract whereby he expects to obtain them, whereas without such a contract an assignment thereof would be bad,[17] and a mortgage of present property will carry future property which is incident thereto;[18] but there must be a present interest and a mere hope or expectancy is not sufficient.[19]

(II) Applications of Rule — (A) Crops — (1) When Growing. The most frequent example of a mortgage of property in which the mortgagor has a potential interest is the mortgage of crops; and it is the almost universal rule that a mortgage of growing crops is valid;[20] and a crop is held to be a growing

(N. Y.) 127); but as between the parties themselves other property may be substituted for that included in the mortgage (Simmons v. Jenkins, 76 Ill. 479; Bell v. Shrieve, 14 Ill. 462).

Furniture is treated the same as stock in trade.— Thus, where a mortgage of furniture in a coffee-house contained a stipulation that if any of it should be sold and other property purchased in its place the latter should be subject to the same lien and the mortgagor would execute a new mortgage, this provision was held not to bind after-acquired property. But see Preston v. Leighton, 6 Md. 88, holding that where a mortgage was given to A of a stock in trade with all additions thereto, and a third person later tortiously took possession of what property there was on hand, the burden was on him to show what portion of the goods on hand when the mortgage was executed passed into his hands.

one from the time when the seed is placed in the ground.[21] The mortgage lien attaches to the crops while growing and continues even after they have been gathered and removed from the land;[22] and, it has been held, follows the proceeds after a sale thereof.[23]

(2) When Unplanted. Where a mortgage is given on crops, the seeds to produce which have not been sown, it is held in some jurisdictions that the mortgage is void as being a mortgage on future property;[24] but in most cases such mortgages are upheld either by force of express legislative enactment[25] or on the

Under this statute D, owner of land, mortgaged crops to P on January 4. On March 28 D deeded to A, who thereupon rented back to D, taking D's note for rent. (3) Ownership of Land on Which Crop Is Raised — (a) In General. A mortgage of crops to be grown on land in which the mortgagor has no interest at the time of executing the mortgage is void,[27] but on the other hand it is not necessary that the mortgagor have an absolute title to the land. A person in possession as purchaser, but who has not yet paid the purchase-price, and consequently has only an equitable interest therein,[28] or a mortgagor of land after condition broken,[29] may either of them give a valid mortgage of the crops thereon.

(b) Leased Lands — aa. Generally. A landlord has no such interest in or title to crops grown on the rented land as can be made the subject of a valid chattel mortgage;[30] but a lessee of land whose term has commenced[31] has such an interest therein as will enable him to make a valid chattel mortgage of the crops to be grown thereon.[32] The right of a tenant to mortgage the crops depends upon the continuance of the lease, and hence if he mortgages crops to be grown at a later time than that for which he has hired the premises,[33] or if the lease is terminated before the crops are sown,[34] the mortgage is void; but if the crops are growing when the lease expires the mortgagee may have them.[35]

bb. Land Cultivated on Shares. Where the terms of a lease of land provide that the landlord shall receive a portion of the crop grown by the tenant as rent for the use of the demised premises it is ordinarily true that either the landlord[36] or the bankruptcy, or makes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors before possession is taken by the mortgagee, the opportunity for completing the lien is gone.[54]

2. IN EQUITY. It is the settled American rule, following an early decision of Judge Story,[55] that a mortgage of future property, although invalid at law, is good in equity as against the mortgagor and all persons claiming through him, with notice, or voluntarily, or in bankruptcy, even if the mortgagee has not taken possession of the property and the mortgagor has done no new act to confirm the mortgage.[56] The mortgage operates as a contract to assign as soon as the mort-

Exch. 161, 13 M. & W. 838); but it has been held that the license to take possession of mortgaged property is revocable, and therefore a seizure by the mortgagor by force and against the will of the mortgagee would not make the mortgage valid as to after-acquired property (Single v. Phelps, 20 Wis. 398; Chynoweth v. Tenney, 10 Wis. 397).

Mere taking of possession by the mortgagee has been held not to amount to a ratification and a delivery by the mortgagor has been regarded as essential. Jones v. Richardson, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 481.

passage of recording statutes no formal delivery of the mortgaged chattels is necessary when the instrument is recorded.[61]

B. As a Substitute For Recording. As transferring possession of the property to the mortgagee was the original means of assuring the validity of a chattel mortgage, and most statutes read that recording is necessary unless there is a change of possession, it follows that recording is not necessary when the mortgagee takes possession of the property at the time the mortgage is executed,[62] for an immediate and continuous change of possession is the best possible notice of the mortgagee's rights.[63]

C. Defects Cured by Possession.[64] Besides rendering registry unnecessary, it has been held that possession by the mortgagee will cure any defects in the instrument, such as insufficient description of the property[65] or improper execution of the mortgage,[66] whereby the record is prevented from giving the usual notice of the mortgagee's rights.

What defects are cured.—It has been held that delivery of possession of the property to the mortgagee will render the mortgage valid when the defects in it are minor ones (Chapman v. Sargent, 6 Colo. D. Sufficiency of Taking Possession — 1. GENERALLY. To constitute a sufficient delivery of the property to the mortgagee there must be an actual transfer of possession and control;[67] it should be absolute, unequivocal, and notorious, and such as to advise the world at large of the change,[68] as in the case of an absolute sale.[69] The possession of the mortgagee must be exclusive[70] and it should be

App. 315, where it was held that acts in taking possession of personal property under a writ of attachment or execution, which would make a levy valid as against subsequent purchasers or attaching creditors, is likewise a sufficient transfer under a chattel mortgage to prevent the mortgaged property from being taken in execution for the debts of the mortgagor.

Compliance with any condition precedent to the passing of title, such as measuring lumber from a larger mass, must be shown before there can be a delivery of the mortgaged property (Seckel v. Scott, 66 Ill. 106; Frost v. Woodruff, 54 Ill. 155); but it seems to be different where the mortgagee is given a power to select a certain amount from a homogeneous mass of coal (Weld v. Cutler, 2 Gray (Mass.) 195) or bricks (Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 N. Y. 258).

Possession by a common agent of both continuous,[71] or he will not be protected by the mortgage as against creditors of the mortgagor.

2. As Affected by Nature of Property. The mortgagee need only take such possession as the nature of the property admits of, and removal of bulky or semi-stationary articles is not required;[72] so that it is sufficient for the mortgagee to accept a constructive delivery of the property and then continue his control over it by means of a custodian or keeper,[73] or by retaining the key to the room where the property is stored.[74] Some sort of continued custody in behalf of the mortgagee is essential, however, even though the property is in the open.[75]

3. By Agent — a. In General. It is sufficient for the mortgagee to retain possession through the medium of an agent, for the acts of control done by the agent are regarded in law as the acts of the mortgagee.[76] The agent must have mortgagee and mortgagor has been held to be a sufficient transfer to protect the mortgagee against a creditor of the mortgagor who levied an attachment after the mortgageee had advertised and sold the property. See also Chicago Title, etc., Co. v. O'Marr, 18 Mont. 568, 46 Pac. 809, 47 Pac. 4, where an agent, placed in charge of mortgaged property, subsequently agreed to hold possession as agent for other mortgagees, and it was held that, when the agent transferred possession on an order from the first mortgagee, the transferee held as agent for all parties.

A temporary loan to the mortgagor of the chattels covered by the mortgage does not render insufficient the possession of the mortgagee. Garner v. Wright, 52 Ark. 385, 12 S. W. 785, 6 L. R. A. 715; Eagle v. Rohrheimer, 21 Ill. App. 518; McMahill v. Humes, 21 Ill. App. 513; Farnsworth v. Shepard, 6 Vt. 521. In McMahill v. Humes, 21 Ill. App. 513, a mortgagor of horses merely hitched them to the mortgagee's rack for a half hour, and then borrowed them, and it was held that the mortgagee's possession was not long enough to apprise all parties of the change of ownership.

H. 286. Compare Weld v. Cutler, 2 Gray (Mass.) 195, where there was a mortgage of four hundred tons of coal, part of a larger pile, and it was held that there was a sufficient delivery when the mortgagee took possession without removal and appointed the mortgagor his agent to sell the coal. But see Atchison v. Graham, 14 Colo. 217, 23 Pac. 876, where a mortgage covered horses in a livery-stable, and after default the mortgagee went to the stable and "checked off" the horses and left an agent in charge of them, and it was held not to be a sufficient change of possession, since the mortgagor still fed and cared for them and used them in his business.

Where the key was left with the mortgagor it was held that there was not a sufficient change of possession. Drury v. Moors, 171 Mass. 252, 50 N. E. 618. Compare National Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 13, where the mortgagors gave the attorney for the mortgagees the keys, went with him through the hotel, opened the doors of the various rooms, and exhibited the mortgaged furniture, and it was agreed that the property covered by the mortgage should be considered as stored for the mortgagees, the attorney taking away a napkin as a symbol of the delivery of the whole, but the court held that this was not an actual and continued change of possession.

Sufficiency of custody.— Mortgaged cordwood was piled by a roadside and the mortgagee visited the place daily for a week and afterward from one to three times a week and sold a small quantity of it, but it was held not to be a sufficient delivery against an attaching creditor of the mortgagor, because the wood was not marked in any way and no person was left in charge. Wilson v. Hill, 17 Nev. 401, 30 Pac. 1076.

b. Who May Be Agents. Although it cannot be said as a matter of law that the mortgagor can never retain possession as agent for the mortgagee,[79] he is generally regarded as incompetent to act as agent in accepting a delivery of the property.[80] Since the mortgagor's possession must be exclusive and mutual possession is not sufficient,[81] it is usually insufficient for the mortgagee to retain possession through a servant or employee of the mortgagor,[82] although there is no objection in having the same clerks or salesmen continue their previous employment.[83]

4. TIME OF TAKING POSSESSION. It has been required that the mortgagee shall take immediate possession upon the execution of the instrument,[84] but there is authority for a more liberal rule which only requires that the mortgagee take possession before any adverse rights attach to the property[85] and the require-of the goods to the mortgagor for current sales and new mortgages were to be executed on the additions to the stock, but it was held that this was not a sufficient transfer of possession to excuse a failure to record the mortgage.

Agent's change of allegiance.— Where property in the possession of a warehouseman as agent for the mortgagor was set apart in the warehouse for the mortgagee, it was held that this destroyed the privity between the warehouseman and the mortgagor and that the former became the agent of the mortgagee alone. ment for an immediate change of possession is satisfied by a transfer as soon as it can reasonably be made.[86]

5. Transfer of Part of Property. Delivery to the mortgagee of part of the property included in a mortgage will ordinarily render it valid as to the part delivered,[87] but under a statute declaring a mortgage void without delivery transfer of part of the property has been held insufficient and the mortgage was void even as to that part which was delivered.[88]

6. When the Property Is in the Hands of a Bailee.[89] When property covered by a mortgage is in the possession of a bailee of the mortgagor an actual delivery is not necessary to constitute a transfer of possession,[90] but the bailee must hold the property for the mortgagee in order to make the mortgage valid against third persons without record.[91]

Mortgagee's possession as pledgee.— It has been held that when a mortgagee takes possession subsequently to the execution of the mortgage he holds the property by way of pledge (Falk v. Decou, 8 Kan. App. 765, 61 Pac. 760; Blumenthal v. Lynch, 25 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 85, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 382); and an attempt to sell under the mortgage does not render the pledge void (Blumenthal v. Lynch, 25 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 85, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 382). Compare Rowley v. Rice, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 333, where future-acquired property was mortgaged together with an existing stock of goods and the mortgagee subsequently took possession of the entire stock, and it was held that if the transaction was bona fide he could hold them as a pledge.

Claims accruing after execution of the mortgage.— Where a mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property subsequently to the execution of the instrument this will not make the mortgage valid against those creditors whose claims have accrued between the time when the instrument was executed and the time when possession was taken (Landis v. McDonald, 88 Mo. App. 335; Keet, etc., Dry Goods Co. v. Brown, 73 Mo. App. 245), although it is good against antecedent creditors (Landis v. McDonald, 88 Mo. App. 335).

7. DETERMINATION. The question whether there has been a sufficient delivery of mortgaged chattels to the mortgagee is ordinarily one of fact for the jury to determine,[92] and the burden of proving a transfer of possession is on the person who claims under the unrecorded mortgage.[93]

IX. WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

It sometimes happens that the nature, validity, construction, and effect of a mortgage has to be determined in a jurisdiction other than that where the contract was made. Where the place of contract and the locus of the property mortgaged coincide, the laws of that jurisdiction will govern the interpretation

N. S. 115, 24 Wkly. Rep. 1000. Compare Caulfield v. Van Brunt, 173 Pa. St. 428, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 538, 34 Atl. 230, where mortgaged property was sold with the consent of the mortgagee to a purchaser who had the right to return it if the goods were not satisfactory, the contract for the purchase-money was assigned to the mortgagee, and it was held that the mortgage was valid without record because the property was in the hands of a bailee who held for the mortgagee.

Necessity for notice to bailee.— Although there is authority to the effect that when property in the control of a bailee is mortgaged and the instrument is not recorded, it is not necessary to notify the bailee in order to effect a transfer of possession which would make the mortgage valid (Case v. Burrows, 54 Iowa 679, 7 N. W. 130; Sansee v. Wilson, 17 Iowa 582; Thomas v. Hillhouse, 17 Iowa 67), it has been held with better reason that it is essential to give notice to the bailee of the mortgagee's claim (Strahorn-Hutton-Evans Commission Co. v. Quigg, 97 Fed. 735, 38 C. C. A. 395). Compare Corning v. Records, 69 N. H. 390, 46 Atl. 462, 76 Am. St. Rep. 178, where the bailee was entitled to retain possession till the end of a specified term and it was held that it was not necessary to notify him because an attaching creditor of the bailor who executed the mortgage could not disturb his possession.

The notice was not sufficient where a mere demand was made on the bailee, which was not accompanied by a written notice that the mortgagee had taken possession of the property (Beskin v. Feigenspan, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 29, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 750), or where the attorney for the mortgagee merely told the mortgagor's tenant in possession that he took possession of the property for the mortgagee and that the tenant should not let it go out of his possession without authority from the law (Wild v. Porter, 59 N. Y. App. Div. 350, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 839).

The bailee of an attaching officer may by consenting to hold the goods as the agent of the mortgagee effect a sufficient change of possession to render record of a mortgage unnecessary. Wheeler v. Nichols, 32 Me. 233.

Property stored in warehouse.— Where plaintiff took a mortgage on flour, took the warehouseman's receipt therefor, and afterward requested the warehouseman to segregate the particular flour from a large quantity belonging to the mortgagor, it was held to be a good segregation to put plaintiff's mark on certain flour belonging to the mortgagor which stood separate from the rest (Squires v. Payne, 6 Cal. 654); but such acts would not constitute a delivery if the mortgagor himself were the warehouseman (Story v. Cordell, 13 Mont. 204, 33 Pac. 6), unless the mortgagee at once took possession of the warehouse under a mortgage of that also and retained exclusive possession of that and of the goods (Smith v. Skeary, 47 Conn. 47). See also Campodonico v. Oregon Imp. Co., 87 Cal. 566, 25 Pac. 763, where growing crops were to be stored with a warehouseman in the mortgagee's name, and it was held that a mistake of the warehouseman in issuing receipts in the name of the mortgagor did not prevent the transaction from constituting a valid transfer of possession.

In Lydia Pinkham Medicine Co. v. Gibbs, 108 Ga. 138, 33 S. E. 945, both plaintiffs, when asked by the court whether there was any question of fact they wished to have submitted to the jury, insisted that a verdict be directed in their own favor, and it was held not to be error to direct a verdict under the circumstances.

A question of fact.— Whether there has been a transfer of possession is a question of fact and the finding of the superior court that there has not been a delivery is a finding of fact and is final. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Oldham, 142 Mass. 379, 8 N. E. 115.

Must not interfere with policy of law.— In order that the doctrine of comity shall be applied to uphold mortgages valid by the laws of another jurisdiction, it is required that the effect of sustaining the mortgage shall not interfere with the settled policy of the lex fori (Dearing v. McKinnon Dash, etc., Co., 165 N. ated in one jurisdiction and the mortgage is executed in another, the law of the place where the property is situated will usually govern.[95]

X. FILING, RECORDING, AND REGISTRATION.

A. Statutory Provisions. The object of the almost universal statutes requiring that a mortgage unaccompanied by a change of possession must be recorded to be valid against third persons is to prevent fraud and deception.[96] As such statutes would have no extraterritorial effect, they have been held not to require the filing of instruments executed in another jurisdiction;[97] but an act requiring deeds and conveyances of personal property to be recorded has been held to apply to mortgages.[98] No matter how strict the requirements of the

But see Hardaway v. Semmes, 38 Ala. 657, where it was held that a mortgage must be recorded if the property had a fixed situs within the state at the time the mortgage was executed, even though the parties reside in another jurisdiction.

98. Magee v. Carpenter, 4 Ala. 469; McGregor v. Hall, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 397. But see Standefer v. Chisholm, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 449; Killough v. Steele, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 262, which hold that, under the registry acts of Alabama, a mortgage of personal property need not be recorded.

Early statutes applicable to chattel mortgages.— An early act of Virginia in regard to recording transfers was held to apply to chattel mortgages as well as to conveyances of land, and without record one was invalid against creditors (Hodgson v. Butts, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 140, 2 L. ed. 391), and an early Hawaiian statute was held to require the recording of chattel mortgages as well as those on real estate (Hardy v. Ruggles, 1 Hawaii 409); but prior to 1839 mortgages of personal property on consideration good and valuable at law did not need to be recorded in Arkansas (Merrill v. Dawson, Hempst. (U. S.) 563, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,469. To same effect see Kitchell v. Bratton, 2 Ill. 300, construing an early statute in Illinois).

No application to preceding mortgages has been the decision regarding the retroactive effect of a recording statute (Foster v. Berkey, 8 Minn. 351), and the law in force at the time the mortgage is executed is applicable (Lienau v. Moran, 5 Minn. 482).

Construction of statutes.— Although it has been held that the words "in good faith for value" in a recording statute apply only to subsequent encumbrancers and purchasers and not to creditors (W. W. Kimball Co. v. Kirby, 4 S. D. 152, 55 N. W. 1110), it was decided in another jurisdiction that the words "without notice" in the code applied to creditors as well as to subsequent purchasers (Bacon v. Thompson, 60 Iowa 284, 14 N. W. 312; Allen v. McCalla, 25 Iowa 464, 96 Am. Dec. 56; McGavran v. Haupt, 9 Iowa 83). Compare Hinchman v. Point Defiance R. Co., 14 Wash. 349, 44 Pac. 867, where it was held that a recording act are, they are not objectionable as interfering with the right of property.[99]

B. Effect of Recording — 1. Equivalent to Change of Possession. Where a mortgage is recorded change of possession is not necessary to the validity of the instrument,[1] for registration supplies the place of a transfer of possession,[2] even where the deed expressly provides that the grantee shall take and hold the property,[3] and fully rebuts any inference of fraud which might otherwise arise from the continued possession of the grantor.[4] comma in the statute should be transposed so that three classes would be protected from unrecorded transfers, to wit: (1) creditors, (2) subsequent purchasers in good faith, (3) subsequent encumbrancers for value and in good faith.

99. Burdick v. Coates, 22 R. I. 410, 48 Atl. 389.

Repeal or modification by subsequent statutes.— It has been held that a statute declaring that unrecorded chattel mortgages should be void was not modified by a later act making mortgages good between the parties and those having actual notice of them because the latter act applied only to real-estate mortgages. Cardenas v. Miller, 108 Cal. 250, 39 Pac. 783, 49 Am. St. Rep. 84, 41 Pac. 472. The act to prevent secret sales, etc., of goods and chattels was held not to be changed by alterations in the law regarding the registration of transfers of real estate (Cannon v. McMichael, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 225; Gill v. Griffith, 2 Md. Ch. 270), and an act providing that failure to pay the debt secured would not vest in the mortgagee a right to possession did not do away with the necessity of delivery or record within twenty days after the execution of the instrument (Hope v. Johnston, 28 Fla. 55, 9 So. 830). See also Brown v. Harris, 67 N. J. L. 207, 50 Atl. 689, where a subsequent act was held not to repeal an earlier one relating to the recording of chattel mortgages and the court discuss the principles of construction which govern in such cases. Compare Otis v. Sill, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 102; Porter v. Parmly, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 445; Wood v. Lowry, 17 Wend. (N. Mistakes in date of instrument.— Although it has been held that record was constructive notice where the mortgage was by mistake dated a year later than the recording (Jacobs v. Denison, 141 Mass. 117, 5 N. E. 526) or a year prior to the date of the instrument accompanying it (Partridge v. Swazey, 46 Me. 414), where a mortgage of all the material "now in a shipyard" was recorded as being dated seven months earlier than its actual date, it was held not to be valid to defeat a purchaser's title (Stedman v. Perkins, 42 Me. 130).

Assumed name.— It has been held that record of a mortgage was constructive notice, although the instrument was executed under an assumed name. Record does not give constructive notice of the contents where the mortgage is fraudulent (Niepschield v. Reuss, 92 Ill. 3. Against Creditors — a. In General. Contests between creditors of a mortgagor and a mortgagee with an unrecorded mortgage usually arise in some action against the creditor who has seized the property upon judicial process, or in setting up a defense to foreclosure proceedings; and the law is that an unrecorded mortgage leaves the property as open to seizure by creditors upon an attachment writ,[18] or by virtue of an execution issued on a judgment recovered against the

A purchaser from the mortgagee under a power of sale contained in a mortgage is in no better position against the creditors of the mortgagor than the mortgagee would be mortgagor[19] as if no mortgage existed; and to this extent it is true that an unrecorded mortgage is void as to creditors.

b. Effect of Late Filing. Mere delay in filing is not an incurable defect, and as soon as the filing is completed the general rule is that the mortgage becomes valid and operative against general creditors of the mortgagor whose claims antedate the execution of the mortgage.[20] A fortiori late filing has this effect where the claim arose subsequently to the registration of the instrument,[21]

What constitutes a lien.— Although a creditor must ordinarily acquire his lien by levying on the property (Thomas v. Farley Mfg. Co., 76 Iowa 735, 39 N. W. 874), it has been held that a sufficient lien is acquired to justify a creditor in holding property against an unrecorded mortgage by an adjudication that the mortgagor is a bankrupt (In re Gurney, 7 Biss. (U. S.) 414, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,873, 9 Chic. Leg. N. 255, 4 L. & Eq. Rep. 28, 15 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 373), by a statutory provision that the assets of an insolvent estate be distributed ratably (Currie v. Knight, 34 N. J. Eq. 485), by possession of the property by a receiver appointed in a suit by a creditor (Smith v. Fletcher, (Ark. 1889) 11 S. Rule in Missouri.— Under Mo. Rev. Stat. (1899), § 3404, unless a mortgage is recorded or possession taken under it, it is void as to all persons. The interpretation of this is to the effect that if a creditor's claim antedates the mortgage, such creditor must obtain a lien before the mortgage is recorded or possession is taken; but if the creditor's claim arises subsequently to the mortgage he can obtain priority over the mortgage, even though possession is taken before he obtains judgment, because the concealment of the mortgage gave the mortgagor a false credit and justice demands that the creditors must take precedence over the mortgagee. Landis v. McDonald, 88 Mo. App. 335.

Rule in New York.— Although it was formerly regarded as necessary for a creditor whose claim antedated the execution of a mortgage to obtain a lien on the mortgaged property before record in order to prevail against the mortgagee (Sullivan v. Miller, 106 N. Y. 635, 13 N. E. 772; Kennedy v. Watertown Nat. Union Bank, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 494; Stewart v. Beale, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 405), it was held that a lien was unnecessary where the claim arose during the time that the mortgage was withheld from record (Stewart v. Beale, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 405; Smith v. Clarendon, 3 Silv. Supreme (N. Y.) 136, 140, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 809, 25 N. Y. St. 219), provided the creditors eventually secured a specific interest in the property by levy of attachment or execution (Smith v. Clarendon, 3 Silv. Supreme (N. Y.) 136, 140, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 809, 25 N. Y. St. 219); and this distinction between claims antedating and postdating the mortgage has been abandoned and the law now is that an unrecorded mortgage is void as to creditors with or without liens (Karst v. Gane, 136 N. Y. 316, 32 N. E. 1073, 49 N. Y. St. 740 [affirming 61 Hun (N. Y.) 533, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 385, 41 N. Y. St. 361]; Bullard v. Kenyon, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 374, 53 N. Y. St. 731 [reversing 66 Hun (N. Y. 476, 39 N. E. 11, 62 N. Y. St. 843 [reversing 69 Hun (N. Y.) 578, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 21, 53 N. Y. St. 261]; Crouse v. Schoolcraft, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 160, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 640. See also Castleman v. Mayer, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 515, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 229, where the same doctrine was applied in the case of a

d. Who Are Creditors. The person who seeks to establish a superior equity to a mortgage, unrecorded but bona fide, must ordinarily show that he belongs to the class of creditors who are entitled to attack the mortgage because it was not duly recorded.[25]

4. Against Purchasers — a. In General. Another class of persons who compete with the mortgagee for rights in the mortgaged property are included under the general term purchasers, and the law is that with the mortgagor in possession of the property registration is essential in order that a mortgage be valid against bond fide purchasers of the property from the mortgagor,[26] or against subsequent fraudulent mortgage; and compare Talman v. Smith, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 390, on doctrine of bona fide sale). The reason is that although a creditor must acquire a lien on the property before attacking the mortgage it is not the existence of such lien which makes the mortgage void as to him, but he can assert an interest in the mortgaged property only as he could assert an interest in any other property of the debtor. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Baker, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 387, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 266. See also Industrial Loan Assoc. v. Saul, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 188, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 837, where it was held that a warehouseman in possession of mortgaged chattels was in a similar position to a judgment creditor in making an attack on a mortgage for lack of registration. An illustration of the effect of requiring a lien is found in a case where a creditor sued the mortgagee at law for damages caused by the foreclosure of an unrecorded mortgage and failed to recover because he had no specific interest in the property which was damaged. Murtha v. Curley, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 393. Compare Field v. Ingreham, 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 529, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 1135, 74 N. Y. St. 306, where an unrecorded mortgage was held to be void against an existing contract creditor, although the property was such that the mortgagor could have claimed it as exempt.

Rule in Canada.— A creditor need not have a lien to attack an unrecorded mortgage whether his claim antedates or postdates the execution of the mortgage. Clarkson v. McMaster, 25 Can. Supreme Ct. 96.

When claims originate.— It has been held that a creditor's claim arose during the period that the mortgage was withheld from record when he took renewal notes during that period (Cutler v. Steele, 85 Mich. 627, 48 N. W. 631; Sanger v. Guenther, 73 Wis. 354, 41 N. W. 436), or did anything on the basis of the non-existence of the unrecorded mortgage (Root v. Harl, 62 Mich. 420, 29 N. W. 29). Compare Dempsey v. Pforzheimer, 86 Mich. 652, 49 N. W. 465, 13 L. R. A. 388, where the subsequent creditor who was entitled to avoid a mortgage was allowed priority, although he accepted a mortgage on the same property to secure his claim instead of taking legal proceedings.

Creditors.— Where a liability for indorsing negotiable paper has not become fixed the indorser is not a creditor within the provisions of the statute (Karst v. Gane, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 533, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 385, 41 N. Y. St. 361), and a person claiming under a contract which merely gives him the right to take possession of the stock in trade of another and conduct the business with a provision that property thereafter acquired should be shared was held to be neither a creditor nor a purchaser (Balcom v. Julien, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 349); but it has been held that one who takes from the executors of an estate a note of a third person to the testator as part of his patrimony becomes on that date a creditor of the maker within the meaning of the Michigan statute (Cutler v. Huston, 158 U. S. 423, 15 S. Ct. 868, 39 L. ed. 1040). See also Cutler v. Steele, 85 Mich. 627, 48 N. W. 631, where it was held that a creditor could attack a mortgage, although the renewal note to secure his debt was given by the mortgagor as indorser instead of as principal debtor.

Creditor need not show that he could not make good his claim out of other property belonging to the debtor than that which is covered by the mortgage. Ruggles v. Cannedy, (Cal. 1898) 53 Pac. 911.

Claimant with laborer's lien.— A creditor who has availed himself of his right to file a lien is an encumbrancer by operation of law and stands on the footing of a creditor from the time his claim accrued, and not merely of an encumbrancer from the time his lien was filed; so he can prevail over a defective mortgage, although he knew of its existence at the time the lien was filed. 5. Effect of Notice — a. On Rights of Purchasers. When a contest arises between a mortgagor and a purchaser of the mortgaged property the knowledge or lack of knowledge of the purchaser regarding the existence of the mortgage becomes at once a material and important circumstance, for, except in a few jurisdictions, it is held that a mortgage is valid against a purchaser with notice thereof, although it has not been recorded,[30] or has not been renewed or refiled according to statutory requirements.[31] But the wording of some recording statutes has been so distinct and the declaration that unrecorded mortgages are void has been put in such unambiguous language that in those jurisdictions a purchaser is not affected by notice of an unrecorded mortgage.[32]

b. On Rights of Creditors. In those states where a purchaser is not affected by his knowledge of an unrecorded mortgage, a creditor's knowledge is also immaterial, and to this list must be added jurisdictions which distinguish between purchasers and creditors and make notice material in respect to the former and immaterial as to the latter.[33] There remain some jurisdictions however, where

Of what recital is not notice.— It has been held that a recital in a bill of sale that property is subject to a chattel mortgage of particular date is not notice of a verbal agreement between the seller and mortgagee to substitute other property for that described in the mortgage. Wynne v. Admire, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 45, 23 S. W. 418. Compare Clark v. Barnes, 72 Iowa 563, 34 N. W. 419, where a recital that a mortgage was made subject to a mortgage recorded at P, coupled with a warranty against other encumbrances, was execution,[36] for insufficient description of the property,[37] or on the ground that it is fraudulent.[38] Where a sale of mortgaged property is made expressly subject to the mortgage, it is also true that the purchaser is postponed thereto in spite of defects which would invalidate the instrument.[39]

d. What Constitutes Notice — (i) In General. It is usually considered sufficient to postpone a person claiming in competition with a mortgagee for him to have constructive notice of the unrecorded mortgage,[40] or to know of facts which would put him to inquiry;[41] but there is authority for more rigid requirements held not to be notice of an unrecorded mortgage.

Sufficiency of recital.— It has been held sufficient for the recital of a prior encumbrance to be put in an affidavit of good faith executed by the mortgagor and attached to the second mortgage (Eastern Brewing Co. v. Feist, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 681, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 29); and where mortgaged chattels were purchased at a greatly reduced price subject to all the liabilities that are against them in the way of debt either by note, judgment, or mortgage, the purchaser was considered as having purchased only the equity of redemption therein (Carter v. Bennett, 6 Fla. 214). Compare Garrison v. Quick, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 93, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 895, where a person in possession of a watch, under a bill of sale, as security for a debt, jointly with the owner executed a mortgage thereon to a third person, which recited that it was subject to the debt secured by the bill of sale, and agreed with the mortgagee to deliver the watch to him in case of default. It was held that the chattel mortgage and agreement to deliver the watch were a second mortgage, and on default the holder was not obliged to deliver the watch until the payment of his claim.

A recital of postponement to recorded mortgages only postpones to mortgages which are recorded in the proper county. Whitney v. Browne, 180 Mass. 597, 62 N. E. 979.

Taking right, title, and interest.— The holder of a second chattel mortgage, who takes only the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor in the property, cannot attack the validity of the filing of the first mortgage. Rosenbaum v. Foss, 7 S. D. 83, 63 N. W. 538. Compare Tuite v. Stevens, 98 Mass. 305, where an assignee conveyed all his right, title, and interest in property covered by a chattel mortgage, and it was held that he transferred only the equity of redemption and not the assignee's right to contest the validity of the mortgage.

40. Allen v. McCalla, 25 Iowa 464, 96 Am. Failure to inquire must arise from bad faith, and not merely from negligence in order to charge a person with constructive notice. Millar v. Olney, 69 Mich. 560, 37 N. W. 558.

The circumstances were sufficient to charge a claimant with notice where he admitted and it has been held that notice must be full, clear, and explicit so as to designate the specific property bound by the mortgage by marks or numbers, or by other description, capable of identifying it.[42] It seems to be sufficient, however, if notice is received at any time before the actual payment of the purchase-money.[43]

(II) Agent's Knowledge. Although many considerations enter in, the general rule is that the knowledge of an agent or attorney regarding an unrecorded or defective chattel mortgage is the knowledge of his employer.[44]

(III) Subvendees. While one who purchases from a second mortgagee with knowledge of a prior unrecorded mortgage and of the claims to preference that he knew of the mortgage but did not know that it was unpaid (McCormick v. Venable, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 152, 34 N. Y. St. 717), where the mortgagor and a third person both testified that the claimant was informed of the mortgage (Mendenhall v. Kratz, 14 Wash. 453, 44 Pac. 872), where the answer to interrogatories stated that no notice had been communicated to him but failed to state whether he had "seen" the mortgage or not (Miles v. Blanton, 3 Dana (Ky.) 525), where the attaching creditor was told that if he attached "it would be him and the bank [mortgagee] for it" (Aultman, etc., Mach. Co. v. Kennedy, 114 Iowa 444, 87 N. W. 435), and where the purchaser was a cousin of the mortgagor and knew when he received his mortgage that the mortgagor had theretofore given a mortgage on the same chattels, and it did not affect the result that the mortgagor said the first mortgage had been paid and the purchaser examined the records and found no mortgage on file (Goodwin v. Bayerle, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 62, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 20). Compare Williams v. Bresnahan, 66 Mich. 634, 33 N. W. 739, holding that the question of actual notice was properly left to the jury where a clause to the effect that the goods were "free and clear from all liens, conveyances, incumbrances," etc., had been erased from claimant's mortgage.

Knowledge was held not sufficient to put a claimant on inquiry where he was informed that there was a mortgage but was told that it was on other property (Simpson v. Huison, 88 Ala. 527, 7 So. 264), where he had knowledge of an unrecorded lease which conferred a mortgage lien on crops by an unusual covenant to that effect (Wilkerson v. Thorp, 128 Cal. 221, 60 Pac. 679), and where he knew merely of the existence of a debt for unpaid purchase-money of land upon which the mortgaged cotton he bought was raised (Bell v. Tyson, 74 Ala. 353). See also Hesser v. Wilson, 36 Iowa 152, where a person furnished materials to a manufacturer to be manufactured for him and the manufacturer mortgaged them to a creditor without knowledge of the adverse rights, and it was held that mere knowledge of the contract of manufacture would not charge the creditor with notice.

A purchaser was not charged with notice by reason of a public sale under an improperly recorded chattel mortgage which took place in another part of the county from that where he lived (London v. Youmans, 31 S. C. 147, 9 S. E. 755, 17 Am. St. Rep. 17), or by the execution of an instrument in writing purporting to deliver possession of cattle forty-five miles away (Blanchard v. Ingram, 2 Indian Terr. 232, 48 S. W. 1066). Compare Lawrence v. McKenzie, 88 Iowa 432, 55 N. W. 505, where knowledge by a creditor that certain persons were in possession of defendant's books of account and claimed them as mortgagee's was held not to charge him with notice that such persons claimed the accounts themselves. See also Marsden v. Cornell, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 449, where a mortgage had not been renewed as required by statute, and it was held that one purchasing the property with knowledge of the mortgage, but without notice of the amount due thereon, was a bona fide purchaser.

Prepayment.— Where a mortgagor ordered machinery for a purchaser who prepaid him, an unrecorded mortgage for the purchase-price in favor of the seller prevailed against the claims of the purchaser for he was not a subsequent purchaser in good faith. Deeley v. Dwight, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 300, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 60, 32 N. Y. St. 616. Compare City Bank v. Easton Boot, etc., Co., 187 Pa. St. 30, 42 Wkly. Notes Cas. made by the holders thereof will be postponed to the first mortgage,[45] a subpurchaser without notice of the unrecorded mortgage will take free from such encumbrance, even though his vendor had notice.[46] It is also held that a subpurchaser with notice of the unrecorded mortgage will nevertheless take the property free from encumbrance when the vendor,[47] execution creditor,[48] or attaching creditor[49] through whom he claims obtained his rights against the property without notice of the adverse interests.

(iv) Burden of Proof. The burden of proving notice seems to rest on the attacking party, and so it is held that a mortgagee claiming against a purchaser in possession must show that the latter had actual knowledge of the mortgage;[50] but where a subsequent encumbrancer attempted to enforce his lien it was necessary to show that he took without knowledge of the prior encumbrance.[51]

6. Modifying Circumstances[52] — a. Form of the Instrument — (i) Generally. The requirements for recording mortgages are not affected by the form of the instrument. So registration is necessary to make a transfer valid against creditors where it assumes the form of an absolute sale given to secure a debt,[53] or a sale of

W. 540); but mere inadequacy of price is not conclusive against the good faith of the purchaser (Boydson v. Goodrich, 49 Mich. 65, 12 N. W. 913). Compare Luce v. Moorchead, 77 Iowa 367, 42 N. (II) Collateral Agreements. Although a mortgage is accompanied by a collateral agreement, the latter need not be filed for record where it does not constitute part of the mortgage,[58] and lack of record of the accompanying agreement has been held not to prevent the court from construing the agreement and the mortgage to be a single contract.[59]

b. Nature of Property[60]—(I) In General. Where a mortgage covers both real and personal property it seems to be necessary to record it as a chattel mortgage in order to give the mortgagee a valid lien against a creditor on the personal property included;[61] but a chattel-mortgage statute has been held inapplicable to railway mortgages of rolling-stock and movable property.[62]

W. 178), where it provided for the payment of the debt in monthly instalments (Shuler v. Boutwell, 18 Hun (N. D. Place of Filing — 1. GENERALLY. Under a statute requiring a mortgage on property in the actual possession of the mortgagor to be filed in the county where the holder of the property resides, it has been held that a mortgagor was not in the "actual possession" of the property when he had left it in charge of his brother who added to the stock, made sales of it, and paid debts with the proceeds. C. 317, where a mortgagor contemplated moving to the county where the property was situated before he executed the instrument and it was held that registration in that county was valid when he did actually move there shortly after the filing. Compare Avery v. Wilson, 47 S. C. 78, 25 S. E. 286, where the same result was reached on practically similar facts.

Non-residents of the state have been denied the advantages of provisions in recording statutes and compelled to rely on a change of possession (Cook v. Hager, 3 Colo. 386; Arkansas City Bank v. Cassidy, 71 Mo. App. 186; Smith v. Moore, 11 N. H. 55. Compare Watson v. Thompson Lumber Co., 49 Ark. 83, 4 S. W. 62, where a mortgage filed by a foreign corporation was held not to give it priority over a creditor who sued before foreclosure, for the corporation had no residence within the state, and mortgages must be filed in the county where the mortgagor resided); but a more usual doctrine seems to be that in the absence of the mortgagor from the state the mortgage should be recorded in the locality where the mortgaged property is (Hardaway v. Semmes, 38 Ala. 657; Hunt v. Bowen, 75 Ga. 662; Ames Iron Works v. Warren, 76 Ind. 512, 40 Am. Rep. 258; Whitney v. Browne, 180 Mass. 597, 62 N. E. 979) at the time of the execution and delivery of the mortgagee resides,[75] or where the mortgaged property is located.[76] Under the provisions of other acts, however, courts have held that the place for record is determined by the situs of the property,[77] or of a greater part thereof.[78] When the county of the mortgagor's residence and the county where the property is are not identical, it has been held that record must be made in both counties,[79] or that it may be made in either county at the option of the mortgagee.[80]

2. DETERMINATION OF MORTGAGOR'S RESIDENCE. To establish the fact that a mortgage was properly recorded it must be proved that the mortgagor resided in the recording district where the mortgage was filed.[81] Although recitals in the instrument as to residence have been held to be sufficient to make out a prima facie case,[82] they are not evidence of such residence[83] and do not preclude third persons from showing that such place was not in fact the residence of the mortgagor.[84] It has been held sufficient, however, to prove a transient residence mortgage (Marquette First Nat. Bank v. Weed, 89 Mich. 357, 50 N. W. 864. See also Stirk v. Hamilton, 83 Me. 524, 22 Atl. 391, where it was held that the burden was on a mortgagee suing an attaching officer in trover to show that a mortgage executed by a nonresident mortgagor was recorded in the place where the property was at the time the mortgage was executed).

Situation of property.— Where horses were kept and used in a state during the traveling season of three months they were held to be "situate" in the state within the meaning of the recording laws, although they belonged to a livery-stable keeper who resided in another state. (Va.) 39, where a canal-boat was mortgaged which plied between points in two counties and record of the mortgage in one of these counties was held sufficient, although the mortgagor resided in the other county.

Ungrown crops.— Under a statute providing that mortgages shall be filed in the town, city, or village where the property is situated it has been held that a mortgage of crops to be raised in the future could properly be filed in the recording district where the land on which the crops were to be raised was situated. Miller v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co., 35 Minn. 399, 29 N. W. 52; Hostetter v. Brooks Elevator Co., 4 N. D. 357, 61 N. within the county,[85] although a temporary absence does not have the opposite effect.[86]

3. INSTRUMENTS EXECUTED BY JOINT MORTGAGORS. Where a mortgage is executed by a firm or by other joint owners of the property and the place of record is determined by the residence of the mortgagor, the law is that the mortgage must be recorded in every recording district where any one of the joint mortgagors resides.[87]

What constitutes residence.—A person executed a mortgage in Big Rapids on August 3 and it was recorded there on August 13, the mortgagor being there at that time. The previous July the mortgagor had left his home in Grand Rapids intending to change his residence to Big Rapids and leaving directions for the sale of his home in Grand Rapids. His family remained in Grand Rapids till August when they joined him in Big Rapids and remained till the following spring when they all returned to Grand Rapids. It was held that the residence of the mortgagor continued to be in Grand Rapids and that the record of the mortgage in Big Rapids was not notice to creditors. Cass v. Gunnison, 68 Mich. 147, 36 N. W. 45. Compare Brittenham v. Robinson, 18 Ind. App. 502, 48 N. E. 616, where a person executed a mortgage in Indiana and it was recorded there, and three months later his family moved there from Pennsylvania. The mortgagor remained in Indiana all the time and intended to make it his permanent residence. It was held that the mortgage was properly filed in Indiana as that was the place of residence of the mortgagor.

Where one mortgagor is a non-resident it has been held sufficient to file the mortgage in the township where the resident mortgagor has his domicile (Smith v. Burnett, 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 594, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 344), especially where that coincides with the seat of business of the firm making the mortgage (Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254).

88. See cases cited infra, this note.

Adjudication on specific boundaries.—It has been held that although a mortgagor resided in that part of Brooklyn township which was also in the city of Cleveland, the mortgage must be deposited in the clerk's office of Brooklyn township (Canfield v. Lathrop, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 51, 1 Clev. L. Rec. 67), and that chattel mortgages upon property in Flatbush, King's county, should be filed in the office of the clerk of that town and not in the office of the register of King's county (Martin v. Rothschild, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 410). Compare Griffin v. Karter, 116 Ala. 160, 22 So. 484, where it was held that certain legislative acts divided Blount county into two recording districts and that a record of a mortgage of personalty executed by a resident of the western division and recorded in the eastern division did not import notice.

Overlapping districts.— Where a township or part of a township is annexed to the corporate limits of a city or village where the office of the county recorder is kept, but is not a part of the township in which the office is kept, such recorder's office does not become the place for deposit of chattel mortgages executed by residents of such annexed territory; the act of February 24, 1846, and the amendments thereto, making the office of the county recorder the place for deposit of chattel mortgages only when the instrument is executed by a resident of the township where such office is kept. Curtiss v. McDougal, 26 Ohio St. 66.

Incorporated villages and boroughs.— Although the statute provides that in each town chattel mortgages shall be filed in the office of the town-clerk thereof, it does not require the filing of mortgages in the office of the recorder of incorporated villages, the proper place for such filing being the office of the town-clerk of the township in which the village was situated. E. Sufficiency of Filing — 1. In General. A chattel mortgage is usually recorded by delivering the instrument itself or a true copy thereof[89] to the registration officer; and if the delivery is to the person in charge[90] of the proper recording office[91] and is accompanied by directions to such person to record it,[92] that constitutes a sufficient registry of the mortgage, for the mortgagee is not

W. 237, where the act requiring chattel mortgages to be filed with the clerks or recorders of cities or villages where the mortgaged property was situated was held not to include boroughs created under special acts of the legislature.

89. True copies.— Filing a copy was held not to be constructive notice of a mortgage where the copy filed contained a clerical mistake as to the amount (Ely v. Carnley, 19 N. Y. 496); but an immaterial clerical defect in the copy would not affect the validity of the filing (Gillespie v. Brown, 16 Nebr. 457, 20 N. W. 632).

Acknowledgment of the copy has been held necessary to entitle it to record. Porter v. Dement, 35 Ill. 478; Cross v. Carstens, 49 Ohio St. 548, 31 N. E. 506.

90. Oats v. Walls, 28 Ark. 244, holding that it did not devolve upon a party to show that his deed was put into the hands of the recorder or his regular deputy; the one in charge and performing the duties of the office had sufficient authority for such purpose. Compare Keating v. Retan, 80 Mich. 324, 45 N. W. 141, where it was held that the deposit of a chattel mortgage among the files in the city clerk's office, and an entry of the filing in the city clerk's record book, constitute notice of the rights of the mortgagee, although the indorsement on the mortgage shows that it was filed with a deputy clerk, whose appointment was unauthorized by the city charter.

Where no one is present, merely leaving the mortgage on the clerk's table in the recording office does not constitute a sufficient filing. Crouse v. Johnson, 65 Hun (N. Y.) 337, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 177, 47 N. Y. St. 559.

Where the recording officer was outside the township, sitting as a juror, mortgages left with him were not filed within the meaning of the statute. In re Jones, 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 708, 7 Ohio N. P. 225.

92. Town v. Griffith, 17 N. H. 165; Low v. Pettengill, 12 N. H. 337 (where the mortgage was intrusted to the mortgagor to be filed, who requested the clerk to "keep it out of sight for a few days" and it was held the clerk had no authority to record it till the instructions were withdrawn). But see Case v. Jewett, 13 Wis. 498, 80 Am. Dec. 752, where the mortgagor requested the recording clerk to place the mortgage at the bottom of the pile where it could not be seen, and it was held that such action was beyond the scope of his authority, and that the mortgagee would not be prejudiced thereby.

Instructions as to recording.— Under the Arkansas statute which provides that a mortgage indorsed, "This instrument is to be filed but not recorded," with the signature of the mortgagee, shall be filed by the recorder and become a lien on the property it covers, it has been held sufficient to indorse on the mortgage "This is to be filed" (Price v. Skillern, 60 Ark. 112, 29 S. W. 37), or "To be filed but not recorded" (State v. Smith, 40 Ark. 431) when followed by the mortgagee's signature. But see Dedman v. Earle, 52 Ark. 164, 12 S. W. 330, where a mortgage was given to the recorder with oral instructions that it was to be filed but not recorded and it was held not to be filed for record till instructions were given to record it.

Instructions must come from mortgagor.— Where a mortgagor sent a mortgage to the register on Saturday without the knowledge of the mortgagee and instructed the clerk to "keep the inclosed in your possession" and on the following day the mortgagee went to the register, got the mortgage and accepted it, and returned it to the clerk for record, it was held that the mortgage could not be considered as deposited till Monday morning. responsible for the mistake, carelessness, negligence, or criminality of the recording officer.[93]

2. Effect of Withdrawal From the Files. Since filing a mortgage often takes the place of the more elaborate and expensive operation of having it copied into a book of records, withdrawal from the files will destroy the validity of the registration, provided the mortgagee is responsible for such withdrawal,[94] and has

Errors by recording officer.— It has been held that a mortgage was sufficiently filed in spite of a mistake by the recording officer in putting down a wrong name in place of the mortgagor's (Seibold v. Rogers, 110 Ala. 438, 18 So. 312), in reversing the names of the parties (T. B. Townsend Brick, etc., Co. v. Allen, 9 Kan. App. 230, 59 Pac. 683), in misstating the date of the maturity of the mortgage debt where the contestant purchased the property before either the true date or the mistaken date (Buck v. Young, 1 Ind. App. 558, 27 N. E. 1106), in stating in the certificate of record that the mortgage was recorded in full instead of being deposited with the clerk as provided by law (Grounds v. Ingram, 75 Tex. 509, 12 S. W. 1118), or in failing to make an indorsement of filing on the mortgage itself (Bailey v. Costello, 94 Wis. 87, 68 N. W. 663). Compare Perry v. Bragg, 111 N. C. 159, 16 S. E. 10, where the failure of the clerk of the superior court to affix his seal as required by statute did not prevent the subsequent record of the instrument from being sufficient.

Record standing in the handwriting of the mortgagor does not affect the validity of registration. Merrill v. Dawson, Hempst. (U. S.) 563, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,469.

Compliance with statute.— The record of chattel mortgages in separate volumes of the numerical series kept in the offices for all purposes, in which volume only conveyances of personal property are recorded, as indicated on the back of such volume, was held to be a substantial compliance with the requirements of a recording statute. Hume Bank v. Hartsock, 56 Mo. App. 291. The provisions of a recording statute requiring a town-clerk to enter in his book certain facts touching each chattel mortgage filed in his office have been held directory only and the validity of the mortgage depends on the filing alone. Smith v. Waggoner, 50 Wis. 155, 6 N. W. 568. The absence of a memorandum of leaving the mortgage has been held not to affect the validity of the record (Holman v. Doran, 56 Ind. 358); and it has been held unnecessary that the mortgage should be spread upon the record (Craig v. Dimock, 47 Ill. 308). Compare Griswold v. Sheldon, 4 N. Y. 581, where the court queried whether a mortgage upon a stock of goods written in a book lettered "Day Book" containing an inventory of the goods and store accounts, and deposited in a desk in the clerk's office where personal mortgages are kept, in pigeonholes, was properly filed.

Recording bill of sale as such does not answer the requirements of the statute as to mortgages, so as to render it valid as such. Hill v. Marston, 178 Mass. 285, 59 N. E. 766.

Ratification of unauthorized record is valid, provided the act of recording was ratified before the rights acquired in derogation attached to the property. Blair v. Ritchie, 72 Vt. 311, 47 Atl. 1074. Compare In re Guyer, 69 Iowa 585, 29 N. W. 826, where one agreeing to accept a mortgage for a debt from a merchant, executed by him whenever he becomes financially embarrassed, was held thereby to authorize the merchant to have such mortgage recorded for him when executed on such contingency.

Where actual knowledge is conveyed by an imperfect record of a mortgage it will charge one with notice of the mortgage. Piper v. Hilliard, 58 N. H. 198. Compare Hulsizer v. Opdyke, (N. J. 1888) 13 Atl. 669, where claimants of property who were charged with actual knowledge of the execution of a mortgage were not allowed to take advantage of imperfections in the record.

Month. 306; Gruner v. Star Printing Co., 40 Wis. 523. Compare Swift v. Hall, 23 Wis. 532, where an agent, sent to see whether a mortgage was on file, misunderstood his instructions and removed it from the files and it was held that the lien thereof continued against one who with knowledge of the facts attached the property while the mortgage was absent from the files.

no valid excuse therefor.[95] But it is held, in accordance with the general rule that the mortgagee is not responsible for the misconduct of the recording officer, that an unauthorized withdrawal will not impair the sufficiency of the recording.[96]

3. Necessity For Indexing. Since the mortgagee is only required to deposit a mortgage for record and is not prejudiced by the negligence or mistakes of the recording officer, it follows that the failure of the clerk to index the mortgage does not invalidate the record.[97]

4. After Removal of the Property —a. To Another County. Where the removal of mortgaged property does not transfer it to another jurisdiction, no doctrine of comity need be relied on to decide that the original filing, made before the removal, is sufficient; and so in the absence of statute it is held that refiling after removal is not necessary.[98] Statutes requiring a refiling after removal have been held to apply only to cases where the removal was made with the consent of the mortgagee.[99]

The reason for the rule has been said to be because the statute does not require the indexing of the filing of chattel mortgages as it does of mortgages of real estate. Dawson v. Cross, 88 Mo. App. 292.

After a mortgage has been recorded in extenso withdrawal from the files does not impair the effect of the filing. Stevenson v. Colopy, 48 Ohio St. 237, 27 N. E. 296.

Proof of withdrawal.— It has been held that there was a presumption against an alleged withdrawal of a mortgage from the files (Vanarsdale v. Hax, 107 Fed. 878, 47 C. C. A. 31), for the clerk cannot properly let it be taken away even by the mortgagee himself, and an entry by the clerk of the withdrawal upon the margin of an index is unofficial (Woodruff v. Phillips, 10 Mich. 500). See also Wilson v. Leslie, 20 Ohio 161, where the withdrawal of a mortgage for seven hours was held not to invalidate the filing because there was fraudulent collusion by an attorney to enable an attachment to be levied while the mortgage was withdrawn.

b. To Another State.[1] Where a mortgage has been duly recorded and the property is left in the possession of the mortgagor, it is usually held not to be necessary to record the instrument again in the event that the mortgagor removes the property to another state;[2] but there are some statutory provisions to the effect that new record shall be made within a certain time after the property arrives in the new jurisdiction.[3]

Fraudulent connivance of the mortgagor and mortgagee at the removal of the mortgaged property from the premises will destroy the lien of the mortgage. McNichols v. Fry, 62 Mo. App. 13, 1 Mo. App. Rep. 707.

In construing a statute requiring refiling within six months after the removal of the property, it has been held that a mortgage was effective against one who purchased within the six-months' period, although the mortgage was never recorded (Malone v. Bedsole, 93 Ala. 41, 9 So. 520), and where the property had been out of the county of original record for more than six months but not in any one county for that length of time, the mortgage was valid without refiling (Wilkinson v. King, 81 Ala. 156, 8 So. 189; Hundley v. Calloway, 45 W. Va. 516, 31 S. E. 937). Compare Reed v. Spikes, (Tex. App. 1890) 15 S. W. 122, where it was held that the Chattel Mortgage Act (Tex. Gen. Laws (1879), c. 127) did not repeal article 4341, requiring the refiling of a mortgage within four months after the property had been removed to another county with the mortgagee's consent.

Necessity for original record.— It has been held that due registration after the removal of the property renders the mortgage valid for all purposes, although there was no registry in the county where the property was when the mortgage was executed. F. Time of Filing — 1. IN GENERAL. It has been held that a mortgage need only be filed as soon as it can be with reasonable diligence and exertion in order to satisfy statutes requiring record to be "forthwith"[4] or "immediate,"[5] and this amounts to almost the same as a requirement that filing shall be within a reasonable time.[6] Where a certain number of days is given in which to record a mortgage, the period begins to run only from the time when the instrument is delivered,[7] and in computing time the day of execution is excluded and the day of recording included.[8]

2. WHEN RECORDING RELATES BACK. Where there has been compliance with the requirement of a statute either that a mortgage should be filed "forthwith," "within a reasonable time," or within a specified time, it is held that the filing relates back to the time the instrument was executed and cuts out intermediate claimants.[9] not recorded in the state to which the property had been removed, it would take precedence over an attachment levy which was made within the time allowed for such registration. Compare Beall v. Williamson, 14 Ala. 55, where it was held that an earlier statute requiring record of a mortgage on property brought into the state did not apply to purchasers, so that a mortgage valid in the state where it was executed would prevail over the rights of a purchaser, although not recorded, in Alabama); Hubbard v. Andrews, 76 Ga. 177 (holding that a foreclosure against property brought into the state was valid against the rights of a bona fide purchaser, when the foreclosure was made within the six-months' period allowed for registration of property after removal. Compare Peterson v. Kaigler, 78 Ga. 464, 3 S. E. 655, where it was held to be necessary to register a mortgage when the property was only casually brought into the state and returned after a short period); Blythe v. Crump, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 885 (holding that record was unnecessary in the state to which the property had been removed where sufficient time for registration did not elapse between the removal and the sale of the property to a third person).

Filing forthwith.— A mortgage executed at eleven P. M. and filed the following morning at seven immediately upon the opening of the clerk's office was held to be filed with reasonable diligence (Baker v. Smelser, 88 Tex. 26, 29 S. W. 377, 33 L. R. A. 163 [reversing 6 Tex. Civ. App. 751, 26 S. W. 905]); and in the absence of intervening rights filing the mortgage within four days of execution was a sufficient compliance (Corbin v. Kincaid, 33 Kan. 649, 7 Pac. 145); but where a chattel mortgage was mailed to the recorder in due course and should have reached him the same day but did not arrive till the third day, this was held insufficient to support a finding that it was filed forthwith (Hackney v. Schow, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 613, 53 S. W. 713). Compare Cameron Ice Co. v. Wallace, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 141, 50 S. App. 437, 43 Pac. 813, where the indorsement on a mortgage by the clerk was held to be proof that it had been recorded, but as the mortgage was in court away from the records, it was further required that the mortgagee prove that the mortgage was on file at the time when defendant's levy on the property had been made.

12. Head v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 181; Holmes v. Sprowl, 31 Me. 73; Jacobs v. Denison, 141 Mass. 117, 5 N. But see Holman v. Doran, 56 Ind. 358 (where parol evidence as to time was admitted to contradict the entry by the recorder because the officer was not required to make such an entry); Jones v. Parker, 73 Me. 248 (where it was held that the entry of the date upon the back of a mortgage only showed the date of record by inference and could be overcome by evidence showing the contrary).

Sufficiency of indorsement.— Although it has been required that the time when a mortgage is received must be noted "in the book" of records and on the mortgage (Handley v. Howe, 22 Me. 560), it is immaterial that the latter is marked "Entered" instead of "Received" (Monaghan v. Longfellow, 81 Me. 298, 17 Atl. 74); and the words "filed for record" have been held to indicate sufficiently that a permanent deposit of the mortgage was made (Cook v. Halsell, 65 Tex. 1. Contra, Brothers v. Mundell, 60 Tex. 240, where the words "for record" were held to be wrong and to invalidate the filing because the instrument should have been filed for permanent deposit so as to be at the disposal of any inquirer). It has also been held that the indorsement of the clerk upon a mortgage was not invalidated by his own omission to specify the book in which record was made (Head v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 181), or to state the time of day when the instrument was filed (McLarren v. Thompson, 40 Me. 284; Bishop v. Cook, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 326); but the certificate was insufficient when it stated that an instrument was filed in the register's office which "purported to be a copy of such chattel mortgage," and that a copy of such mortgage was "a true copy of the original mortgage on file in this office" (Richardson v. Shelby, 3 Okla. 68, 41 Pac. 378). Compare Stevens v. Whittier, 43 Me. 376 (where the following entry was held sufficient: "East Livermore, Aug. 13, 8 P. M. Received 8 P. M., August 13, 1853. Book 1st, page 158 and 159. Attest, A. Barton, Town Clerk. Fees, 29, paid,"); Fuller v. Rounceville, 31 N. H. 512 (where the following entry was held sufficient: "Rec'd June 4, 1850, 6 o'clock forenoon, and recorded page 38, vol. 2, and examined by me. Wm. B. Crane, Town Clerk.").

Unauthorized indorsement by the clerk, contrary to the instructions of the one who gave him the mortgage, has no effect and hence cannot be used to show that the instrument was recorded. Town v. Griffith, 17 N. H. 165.

13. Adams v. Pratt, 109 Mass. 59, where a chattel mortgage contained a certificate of record, and below such certificate a memorandum referring by asterisks to the mortgage. The body of the mortgage did not contain a complete description of the property, but the memorandum furnished the necessary description. It was held that if the asterisks and note were part of the mortgage at the time it was made and before it was left for record the certificate of record was conclusive evidence that such memorandum and the asterisks were recorded when the mortgage was recorded.

H. Renewal and Refiling[14] — 1. In General. In several states there are statutory provisions requiring that a chattel mortgage must be refiled within a specified number of years after the original record[15] in order to be valid against third persons;[16] but it has been held that a single refiling at the end of the first period was a compliance with the statute and that a second refiling was not necessary at the end of a subsequent period.[17]

2. Sufficiency of Renewal — a. Generally. The renewal statement required for the continuation of a chattel mortgage may by some statutes be indorsed on the original mortgage,[18] or on a true copy thereof,[19] which is then put on file; but in others such an indorsement is insufficient and it is required that a separate statement of the interests of the parties be filed.[20] The renewal statement must be made by the mortgagee and an unauthorized statement by the mortgagor

Refiling act repealed.—The object of the act of 1880, respecting chattel mortgages, which is to save the necessity of refiling, is, under the terms of the act, accomplished by filing the mortgage, or a copy of it, with the affidavit required by the act of 1878, and by having the original mortgage duly acknowledged and recorded. State v. Vosseller, 43 N. J. L. 553. Compare Ransom v. Schmela, 13 Nebr. 73, 12 N. W. 926, where it was held that a mortgage not refiled as directed by Rev. Stat. (1866), c. 43, § 74, still retained its priority against a subsequent mortgagee in good faith, because the act requiring refiling had been repealed before a renewal could be effected.

of the property is therefore insufficient to answer the requirements of the statute.[21]

b. Contents of Renewal Statement. The statement exhibiting the interest of the mortgagee in the property is sufficient if it is made in good faith, with reasonable care, and is substantially accurate;[22] but it was held to be faulty where it failed entirely to state the amount due,[23] understated it by a large amount,[24] or failed to designate the time and place of the original filing.[25]

c. Form of Renewal Statement. It has been held that the jurat attached to a renewal statement could be administered by a deputy city clerk,[26] and that the oath need not appear on the affidavit but that it may be shown by evidence aliunde that the statements were made on oath duly administered.[27] Where a jurat

Sufficiency of statement of amount of mortgagee's interest.— It was held sufficient where it was stated in an affidavit of renewal that a certain named sum "constitutes the amount of interest" of the mortgagees in the property mentioned therein (Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117, 27 N. W. 899), or that the amount mentioned in a mortgage constituted the mortgagee's interest therein (Miller v. Jones, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,576, 15 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 150), but where the mortgage secured an unexpired lease and there was nothing to show whether any rent remained due a statement that the mortgagee's interest remained unchanged and was hereby renewed for the amount above written was insufficient (Briggs v. Mette, 42 Mich. 12, 3 N. W. 231). Compare Platt v. Stewart, 13 Blatchf. (U. S.) 481, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,220, where it was held that a statement in renewal of a mortgage given to secure rent that "the interests of the parties, . . . remain unchanged, except so far as the same have been altered by the payment of rent accrued" was insufficient, under N. Y. Laws (1833), c. 279, § 3.

Statement of extension of the debt must be made in the affidavit for renewal, and it is not sufficient to state the time to which the mortgage is extended. Cope v. Minnesota Type Foundry Co., 21 Mont. 18, 52 Pac. 617. See also Chafey v. Mathews, 104 Mich. 103, 62 N. W. 141, 27 L. R. A. 558, where the mortgage showed on its face that it was to a continuing indemnity, and it was held unnecessary to state in the affidavit of renewal the actual amount of the matured indebtedness so long as the obligations, matured and unmatured, exceeded the sum stated.

Annexing other instruments.— Separate instruments may be construed together to furnish a sufficient statement for renewal, and this was done where affidavits were made by mortgagee and mortgagor at the same time and on the same paper, which made it apparent that there was an agreement to extend time for payment of the indebtedness and enabled creditors to know the time of such extension (Hamilton v. Seeger, 75 Ill. App. 599), but not where no reference was made to a prior agreement between the parties which was written on a different sheet of paper, even though this agreement was filed along with the statement (Beers v. Waterbury, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 396).

No enumeration of the mortgagors is required in a renewal affidavit and it is sufficient to state the amount of the claim secured and that it is just and unpaid and a statement is annexed showing the interest of the mortgagee in the property at the time it is made. 26. Tower v. Welker, 93 Mich. 332, 53 N. W. 527.

Sufficiency of signature to jurat.— Where the jurat to a renewal affidavit was signed "W. F. Cooley, Recorder," and the record showed the existence of the village of M; that there was in said village an office of village recorder; that the affidavit was filed in the office where the original mortgage was filed; that said C certified on said affidavit the proper venue; that it was filed in his office, and affixed to his signature was the word "Recorder," it was a sufficient designation of his office to render the affidavit valid. is attached to a renewal affidavit, it seems to be necessary that it stated the venue of the proceedings.[28]

d. Time of Refiling — (i) In General. Where a certain period, such as thirty days, is given within which to refile a mortgage, any effort to renew the record before the period commences is ineffectual,[29] and it has been held that refiling after the period has elapsed is of no avail either;[30] but there are other decisions to the effect that late refiling makes the mortgage valid from the date thereof.[31]

(ii) How Computed. A mortgage is refiled in apt time if it is renewed on the day the debt matures;[32] and it has been held that days of grace are to be reckoned in if the instrument secured by the mortgage is entitled to grace.[33] Although the last day of the period be Sunday, it is to be counted nevertheless;[34] but it has been held that fractions of a day are to be disregarded.[35]

3. When Refiling Is Not Necessary — a. Generally. It has been held that a mortgagee's failure to refile a chattel mortgage is not excused by the mortgagor's removal from the state[36] or by the fact that the mortgage has become

Supreme Ct. 695. Contra, Lockwood v. Crawford, 29 Kan. 286, holding that the year within which the affidavit for the renewal of a chattel mortgage must be filed begins to run from the hour of the day on which the mortgage was originally filed.

Refiling the same day a year later has been held to be sufficient when the refiling was earlier in the day than the original filing (In re Landman, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 398), but when the refiling was later in the day than the original filing it was insufficient (Lockwood v. Crawford, 29 Kan. 286). But see Thomson v. Quirk, 18 Can. Supreme Ct. 695, where it was held to be sufficient if the second filing was made any time during the day a year hence on which the mortgage was originally filed.

Refiling a fixed number of days before the lapse of time.— It has been held to be a sufficient compliance with the statute in regard to time of filing when the refiling was made one day (Armstrong v. Ausman, 11 U. C. Q. B. 498), and when it was made seventeen days (Burchinell v. Gorsline, 11 Colo. App. 22, 52 Pac. 413; Burrill v. S. N. Wilcox Lumber Co., 65 Mich. 571, 32 N. W. 824) before the period for refiling expired.

36. Richardson v. Shelby, 3 Okla. 68, 41 Pac. 378.

Filing after removal of no avail.— Under the statute requiring the filing of a copy of a chattel mortgage after one year from the filing of the original in the clerk's office of the town where the mortgagor resides, a refiling in the town in which he formerly resided is absolute;[37] but advertising the property for sale before default in refiling under a power of sale contained in a mortgage renders renewal unnecessary.[38]

b. Execution of New Mortgage. It has been held that taking a new mortgage within the time for refiling the old one will continue the lien on the property if the transaction is bona fide,[39] for a copy refiled is to be regarded in effect as a new mortgage,[40] and a failure to refile will not invalidate a subsequent mortgage on the same property and between the same parties,[41] except as to those creditors who levied during the continuance of the default.[42]

c. Possession by Mortgagee. It is unnecessary to refile a chattel mortgage when the mortgagee has taken possession before the time for refiling arrives,[43] or before the lien of the competing creditor has attached to the property,[44] even though after default by the mortgagor of the condition of the mortgage,[45] or after the period for refiling has elapsed.[46]

d. Rights Accruing Before Default — (i) In General. When the rights of contesting parties in mortgaged property become fixed by the levy on the property,[47] or by an assignment thereof,[48] before the time for refiling arrives, such rights will not be affected by a subsequent failure to renew the record.

(ii) By Purchase. It is usually held that a person who purchases mortgaged property within the period when the mortgage is valid without refiling cannot later object that the instrument was not properly filed at the time when renewal should have been made,[49] for the term "subsequent purchaser" in of no avail when he has become a non-resident of the state. Dillingham v. Bolt, 37 N. Y. 198, 4 Transcr. App. (N. Y.) 110, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 221.

XI. FRAUD AT COMMON LAW AND UNDER THE RECORDING ACTS.

A. At Common Law. Formerly a sale without a transfer of possession was fraudulent per se in England, but the modern rule there and in many of the jurisdictions of the United States makes retention of possession by the vendor after a sale only prima facie evidence of fraud and admits of explanation and of proof that the transfer was in fact bona fide.[51] As a frequent purpose of a mortgage is to give security and at the same time to permit the mortgagor to have the benefit of the mortgaged property, there is a strong reason why retention of possession by a mortgagor should not amount to fraud at law in the absence of any recording statutes.[52] In some cases it has only been necessary to decide that Rule in California.— Under the statutes of California the mortgagee must have actual possession of the mortgaged property in order to prevail over creditors of the mortgagor, without regard to the actual good faith or the payment of a valuable consideration (Woods v. Bughey, 29 Cal. 466); and the mortgagee's possession must be consistent with the face of the deed in order to avail him against creditors of the mortgagor (Meyer v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 322). A mortgage will not be validated by the mortgagee's taking possession before a creditor's lien attaches. Edmondson v. Hyde, 2 Sawy. (U. S.) 205, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,285, 5 Am. L. T. Rep. (U. S. But see Matter of Fischer, 94 Cal. 523, 29 Pac. 961, holding that where a mortgage of certain property was valid without a transfer of possession, it would not be invalidated because it included property of a different nature which must be delivered to effect a valid mortgage.

Considerations valuable at law.— Under the statute of frauds a mortgage given for a valuable consideration is not made void by the mortgagor retaining possession; but if given for a consideration not considered valuable in law possession must be taken by the mortgagee or the mortgage must be recorded. King v. Bailey, 8 Mo. 332.

Question of fraud is for the jury where a mortgagor is permitted to remain in possession under a recorded mortgage. Heidiman Benoist Saddlery Co. v. Schott, 59 Nebr. 20, 80 N. W. 47.

No explanation need be given as to why the possession was left with the mortgagor; it is sufficient to prove good faith. Denver First Nat. Bank v. Lowrey, 36 Nebr. 290, 54 N. W. 987.

Only a purchaser without notice can claim the benefit of the statute raising a presumption of fraud where the mortgagor is suffered to remain in possession, and a person has no standing to object till he shows that he paid value and acted in good faith. Sanford v. Jensen, 49 Nebr. 766, 69 N. W. 108.

58. Chaffee v. Atlas Lumber Co., 43 Nebr. 224, 61 N. W. 637, 47 Am. St. Rep. 753.

Sufficiency of averments of fraud.— The averments in a bill seeking to have a mortgage set aside and annulled on the ground of fraud "that said mortgage was made and received with the intent to hinder, delay, and defraud" the creditors of the mortgagor, and "that said mortgage reserves a benefit to the grantor," is not a sufficient averment of fraud, in the absence of substantive and traversable allegations of other facts and circumstances showing the fraud complained of. Kidd v. Morris, 127 Ala. 393, 30 So. 508.

Partial invalidity.— Where a mortgage was given in part to defraud creditors, it is void in toto (Marbourg v. Lewis Cook Mfg. Co., 32 Kan. 629, 5 Pac. 181; Winstead v. Hulme, 32 Kan. 568, 4 Pac. 994), and the same doctrine has been applied where a mortgage was fraudulent in part under the statute of frauds (Russell v. Winne, 37 N. Y. 591, 5 Transcr. App. (N. Y.) 52, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S.

property and follow it with a continued change of possession was generally regarded as a suspicious circumstance and has been held to make the transfer prima facie void as to creditors,[60] so that the burden of proof is on the party claiming under the mortgage;[61] but such possession has been held not to amount to prima facie evidence but to be merely a circumstance for the consideration of the jury.[62]

3. Province of Court and Jury. Since the doctrine in most jurisdictions is that retention does not render a mortgage fraudulent per se, the question of actual fraud should be submitted to a jury,[63] and where there is a valid consideration for the mortgage the retention of possession by the mortgagor need not be explained in order that the question of fraud be submitted to the jury.[64] Even in those states where the retention of possession is fraudulent per se, the question whether possession was retained must be submitted to the jury.[65] The finding of the jury on the question of fraud is conclusive,[66] except where the court is justified in granting a new trial.[67]

4. Reserving to Mortgagor the Right to Retain Possession. A stipulation in a mortgage that the mortgagor may remain in possession of the mortgaged property for a time does not render the mortgage invalid,[68] but is only one circum-

What constitutes a sufficient explanation.— It is not a sufficient explanation of the continued retention of possession by the mortgagor that "he wished to use the mortgaged chattel" (Randall v. Cook, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 53), or that it was necessary to enable him to pursue his vocation, as where a horse belonging to a traveling missionary was mortgaged (Doane v. Eddy, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 523).

stance to go to the jury along with the other facts of the case on the question of fraud.[69]

C. Duress.[70] When a mortgage is obtained under threats of illegal action which would be to the detriment of the mortgagor, the instrument is held to be executed under duress and cannot be foreclosed.[71] Such a defense is personal to the mortgagor, however, and cannot be raised by his creditors for the purpose of having the mortgage set aside.[72]

D. Fraud on the Mortgagor. Where a chattel mortgage is signed and delivered, it must be deemed valid until the contrary is shown by a clear preponderance of the evidence; but where there is sufficient evidence to raise the question of fraud in the procurement of the mortgage it should be submitted to the jury.[73] Where fraud against the mortgagor in the procurement of the mortgage

What constitutes an authority to retain possession.— Where a chattel mortgage specifically defines the circumstances under which the mortgagee shall become entitled to the possession of the property, the law implies an agreement that it is to remain meantime in the mortgagor. Hall v. Sampson, 35 N. Y. 274, 91 Am. Dec. 56.

Heath v. West, 28 N. H. 101; Curtiss v. McDougal, 26 Ohio St. 66.

71. As to duress generally see CONTRACTS.

What constitutes duress.— It was held to constitute duress for a creditor fraudulently to obtain possession of his debtor's property and to refuse to surrender it unless a mortgage was executed for a larger amount than was owed (Lightfoot v. Wallis, 12 Bush (Ky.) 498) and for a judgment creditor to go to his debtor at night and threaten to remove household goods to satisfy an execution unless a mortgage were executed, where the debtor was sick and needy (McAffrey v. Richards, (Tenn. Ch. 1900) 59 S. W. 1064).

Duress by sheriff.— Threats by a sheriff to levy unless a mortgage were executed to secure a claim put in his hands for collection were held to amount to duress under the statutes of Michigan in regard to sheriffs (Van Dusen v. King, 106 Mich. 133, 64 N. W. 9), but a mortgage to secure to an officer final costs in a criminal suit, with the understanding that the officer would pay a fine imposed on the mortgagor in the suit, was not void as given in duress where no warrant had been issued for the arrest of the mortgagor (Converse v. Safford, 17 Kan. 15).

Ratification of mortgage.— Where a chattel mortgagor, without objection, allows the mortgagee to take possession of the property, knowing that he will incur expenses in advertising the same for sale as mortgaged property, and the mortgagee does incur such expenses, the mortgagor is estopped to claim that the mortgage is void because made under duress. Sornborger v. Sanford, 34 Nebr. 498, 52 N. W. 368. Compare Sanford v. Sornborger, 26 Nebr. 295, 41 N. W. 1102.

Duress was properly pleaded and therefore could be set up as a defense in Riggs v. Wilson, 30 S. C. 172, 8 S. E. 848.

73. Hall v. Scott, 59 Wis. 236, 18 N. W. 8. Compare Watkins v. Stockett, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 435, holding that fraud in obtaining an absolute conveyance of slaves to secure a loan of money may be inferred from facts and circumstances, from the character of the contract, or from the condition and circumstances of the parties.

What constitutes fraud.— Where a creditor induces his debtor to execute a mortage by a promise to furnish further advances and the mortgagee does not furnish such advances and had no intention of doing so at the time of the making of the mortgage, this furnishes a ground on which the mortgagor can avoid the instrument. Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51, 86 N. W. 391; Gross v. McKee, 53 Miss. 536. But see Louchheim v. Gill, 17 Ind. 139, where an uneducated man was induced to sign a mortgage on the representation that it was a note, but this was held not to be a sufficient misrepresentation of fact to vitiate the instrument.

The mortgagor's certificate or declaration that a mortgage is valid is no defense for the mortgagee where the mortgagor sets up fraud, for the mortgagor may show that he was induced by fraud to give the certificate. Wilcox v. Howell, 44 N. Y. 398, holding that such a certificate was not negotiable.

Duty of mortgagor.— Where a mortgagor was induced to give a new mortgage by false representations regarding the property inis sufficiently established by the evidence the mortgage cannot be enforced against him.[74]

E. Mortgages of Consumable Property. Where the property covered by a mortgage was consumable and was intended by the parties to be consumed by the mortgagor, the transaction is prima facie colorable and fraudulent,[75] but it has been held that such an arrangement did not amount to a fraud at law or fraud per se.[76] A fortiori the transaction will be sustained if made in actual good faith and the property was only consumable in part.[77] However, there may be chattels so transient in their existence that they cannot generally be mortgaged.[78]

F. Possession by Mortgagor After Default. Although it has been held that a chattel mortgage is not void merely because the mortgagor is allowed to retain possession of the property after condition broken,[79] such possession is cluded therein, he could not set up this fraud in an action of detinue brought by the mortgagee without tendering back the original mortgage. Henderson v. Boyett, 126 Ala. 172, 28 So. 86.

No fraud was shown where the mortgagee allowed an insignificant amount of mortgaged hay to be fed to horses belonging to the mortgagor but took possession before adverse liens were acquired and acted throughout in good faith. The institution of foreclosure proceedings with reasonable diligence rebuts any presumption of fraud arising from retention of possession by the mortgagor after default. Simerson v. Decatur Branch Bank, 12 Ala. 205. Compare Armstrong v. Broom, 5 Utah 176, 13 Pac. 364, where foreclosure proceedings were instituted within the ninety-day period allowed for the mortgagor to remain in possession after default and a lis pendens was also filed within that period, and this was held to be sufficient to protect the interest of the mortgagee against creditors who levied an execution on the property while it was still in the possession of the mortgagor.

Retention prolonged an unreasonable time after default by the mortgagor in the condition of the mortgage becomes a badge of fraud. Sandlin v. Anderson, 76 Ala. 403; Benedict v. Renfro, 75 Ala. 121, 51 Am. Rep. 429; Hopkins v. Scott, 20 Ala. 179; Simerson v. Decatur Branch Bank, 12 Ala. 205. Compare Mitcham v. Schuessler, 98 Ala. 635, 13 So. 617, where it was held that indulgence by the mortgagee for an unreasonable time after the law day was a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining the bona fide of the mortgage in its inception.

After mortgagee has intervened as a claimant of the mortgaged property, possession thereof by the mortgagor does not raise an inference of fraud. Sandlin v. Anderson, 82 Ala. 330, 3 So. 28.

Fraud per se.— Suffering property covered by a chattel mortgage to remain in the hands of the mortgagor for an unreasonable time after default is a fraud per se, and is not open to explanation. Stanley v. Citizens' Coal, etc., Co., 24 Colo. 103, 49 Pac. 35 (statutory); Reed v. Eames, 19 Ill. 594; Bock v. Schindler, 85 Ill. App. 361. But see Wilson v. Rountree, 72 Ill. 570, where possession by the mortgagor was held not to be fraud per se where the mortgagee merely had an election to declare a default.

81. Elliott v. Colorado Springs First Nat. Bank, 2 Colo. App. 164, 30 Pac. 53; Hewitt v. General Electric Co., 164 Ill. 420, 45 N. E. 725 [affirming 61 Ill. App. 168]; Atkins v. Byrnes, 71 Ill. 326; Burnham v. Muller, 61 Ill. 453; Meixsell v. Williamson, 35 Ill. 529; St. Louis Iron, etc., Works v. Kimball, 53 Ill. App. 636.

Giving a new mortgage has been held not to be an excuse for a mortgagee's failure to take possession of the mortgaged property after the maturity of a former mortgage. Brereton v. Bennett, 15 Colo. 254, 25 Pac. 310.

When default occurs.— By Ill. Rev. Stat. c. 20, § 3, a chattel mortgage is only valid for two years, and it is necessary for the mortgagee to take possession then whether the mortgage debt has matured or not (Cook v. Thayer, 11 Ill. 617), and if by the terms of a mortgage the debt matures in a less time the mortgagee must take possession at maturity (Burnham v. Muller, 61 Ill. 453). Compare Jones v. Noel, 139 Ill. 377, 28 N. E. 805 [affirming 38 Ill. App. 374], where it was held that under Starr & C. Stat. Ill. p. 1633, par. 4, which provides that a chattel mortgage shall only be good until the maturity of the entire debt secured, a mortgage conditioned upon the mortgagor paying, "on or before two years from date," certain notes, all of which fell due before the expiration of said two years, was not valid as to third persons after the maturity of the notes unless the mortgagee took possession. And see supra, V, C, 10, b.

What constitutes a reasonable time.— The time within which a mortgagee must take possession after default to relieve himself of the imputation of fraud depends upon the circumstances of each case (Arnold v. Stock, 81 Ill. 407; Reed v. Eames, 19 Ill. 594), and the mortgagee must obtain possession as soon as he can reasonably do so (Cass v. Perkins, 23 Ill. 382). It was held that a mortgagee had not satisfied the requirements in this respect when he did not take possession of the mortgaged property till two months (Brereton v. Bennett, 15 Colo. 254, 25 Pac. 310; Lemen v. Robinson, 59 Ill. 115), till three months (Baer v. Hansen, (Colo. App. 1901) 66 Pac. 448), or till nine months (Shannon v. Wolf, 173 Ill. 253, 50 N. E. 682 [reversing 68 Ill. App. 486]) after the maturity of the mortgage indebtedness. But see Buckley v. Lampett, 24 Ill. 604, holding it sufficient to render valid the mortgage where the mortgagee endeavored to take possession on the day following default, and continued his efforts until successful. And compare Reese v. Mitchell, 41 Ill. 365, where possession taken two days after default was held not to be within a reasonable time where a constable gagee has been made absolute by foreclosure, there seems to be no objection to a return of the property into the custody of the former mortgagor.[82] had levied on the property in the meantime. See also Hay v. W. W. Kimball Co., 55 Ill. App. 263, holding that a delay of one day after maturity in taking possession of a mortgaged piano would postpone the mortgagee to one who purchased the piano from the mortgagor on the day after maturity.

Permissible delay in taking possession after default.— It has been held sufficient for a mortgagee to take possession of the mortgaged property within two days (Crocker v. Burns, 13 Colo. App. 54, 56 Pac. 199), within four days (Wooley v. Fry, 30 Ill. 158), within ten days (Gray v. Helm, 60 Miss. 131), or within thirty days (Perry v. Bragg, 111 N. C. 159, 16 S. E. 10) of the time when default in performance of the condition of the mortgage occurs. Compare Allen v. Steiger, 17 Colo. 552, 31 Pac. 226, where debts secured by a chattel mortgage matured on Saturday and it was held to be due diligence for the mortgagee to take possession on the Monday next following.

Delay of five months after decree of foreclosure does not entitle the purchaser of the mortgaged property at an execution sale to restrain sale under foreclosure decree rendered prior to the execution sale. Hamilton v. Carter, 12 Wash. 510, 41 Pac. 911.

A purchaser before the maturity of the mortgage will prevail over the claim of the mortgagee where he purchased in ignorance of the mortgagee's rights and the mortgagee extends credit to the mortgagor from year to year after the maturity of the mortgage till the latter became insolvent. Cleckley v. Hull, 30 Ga. 838. But see Sondheimer v. Graeser, 172 Ill. 293, 50 N. E. 174 [affirming 72 Ill. App. 41], where a purchaser before maturity of the mortgage was not allowed to prevail because of the retention of possession after default; and the court looked to the real person in interest and not the nominal plaintiff in determining who was making the objection.

Who may raise objection.— Between the parties retention of possession after condition broken does not affect the validity of the mortgage (Hallack v. Tritch, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,956, 10 Chic. Leg. N. 219, 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 293); but it has been held that notice of the existence of the mortgage will not prevent a creditor (Stanley v. Citizens' Coal, etc., Co., 24 Colo. 103, 49 Pac. 35) or a purchaser (Lemen v. Robinson, 59 Ill. 115) from raising this objection.

Until maturity of a junior mortgage the junior mortgagee can derive no advantage from the delay of the first mortgagee to foreclose. Cunningham v. N. O. Nelson Mfg. Co., 17 Ill. App. 510; Lyman v. Smith, 21 Wis. 674. Compare Lanier v. Driver, 24 Ala. 149, holding that as the junior encumbrancer may enforce his mortgage after its maturity, he cannot complain of the negligence of prior encumbrancers subsequent to that time.

Personal representatives of a deceased mortgagor are not third persons against whom the mortgagee loses his rights, unless he takes possession upon a default in performance of a condition in the mortgage. Sumner v. McKee, 89 Ill. 127.

Rights of third persons affected by mortgagee's delay.— A mortgagee should take or endeavor to take possession of the mortgaged chattels immediately upon maturity of the debt, and if he fails to exercise due diligence in this particular he will lose his lien as against a purchaser from the mortgagor during the default. Travis v. McCormick, 1 Mont. 148, 347.

Contest between successive mortgagees.—A second mortgagee, who takes possession as soon as his debt is due, will be preferred to a first mortgagee who has permitted the debtor to retain the property for an unreasonable time after his debt matured (Ballinger v. Rezner, 60 Ill. App. 43); and where two persons having chattel mortgages on the same property permit the property to remain in the possession of the mortgagor an unreasonable length of time after the maturity of their respective mortgages, the one first acquiring possession of the property is entitled to priority of lien (Atkins v. Byrnes, 71 Ill. 326; Constant v. Matteson, 22 Ill. 546). But see McCreary v. Hannah, 60 Ill. App. 449, where it was held that a first mortgagee need not take possession till the maturity of a second mortgage made prior to default in the condition of the first mortgage. See also Smalley v. Ellet, 36 Ill. 500, where the objection that the first mortgagee allowed the property to remain in the mortgagor's possession was not established by the evidence.

82. Hempstead v. Johnston, 18 Ark. 123, 65 Am. Dec. 458; Hanford v. Obrecht, 49 Ill. 146; Cunningham v. Hamilton, 25 Ill. 228; Funk v. Staats, 24 Ill. 632. Contra, Williams v. Kelsey, 6 Ga. 365, where there was no delivery to the purchaser at the foreclosure sale and the property remained continuously in the mortgagor's possession. But see Weiller v. Johnston, 65 Ga. 743, where the mortgagor in possession surrendered the mortgaged property in satisfaction of the debt and it was held that a valid title passed although possession never changed.

Evidence of fraud in fact.— Where a mortgagee let the mortgaged property to the mortgagor after foreclosure, it was held that this was a circumstance more or less cogent from which the jury might determine actual fraud, although it did not amount to fraud in law. Reynolds v. Patterson, 4 Ill. App. 183.

Sufficiency of delivery.— Where a constable foreclosing a mortgage put the goods in a room belonging to the mortgagor but retained the keys himself, there was a sufficient change of possession, although the servant of the mortgagor was temporarily left in charge (Dorland v. Bradley, 66 Ill. 412); and where there was a bona fide delivery of keys and of gibs of an engine without which it could not run, to the mortgagee, and he

G. Who Can Attack Mortgage as Fraudulent. Only creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers of the property who act in good faith can assail a chattel mortgage for fraud,[83] and it has been held that the attacking party must show himself to be something more than a mere creditor at large,[84] and a levy must be made on the chattels before their delivery to the mortgagee.[85]

H. Power of Sale in Mortgagor — 1. In General. On principle and public policy it should not be regarded as fraud per se to give a mortgagor a power of sale, but only as a circumstance for the consideration of the jury.[86]

2. Doctrines of State Courts. In Alabama, if the proceeds of sales made by virtue of a power of sale in a mortgage are required by a provision in the mortgage to be turned over to the mortgagee at stated periods, the mortgage is not fraudulent per se,[87] but a collateral agreement for turning over the proceeds has intrusted them to a person whom he employed to take them to the mill in the morning and bring them away at night, there was held to be a sufficient change of possession, although the same operatives remained in the mill (Funk v. Staats, 24 Ill. 632).

83. Howe v. Cochran, 47 Minn. 403, 50 N. W. 368; Ellingboe v. Brakken, 36 Minn. 156, 30 N. W. 659; Carroll Exch. Bank v. Carrollton First Nat. Bank, 50 Mo. App. 92; Pyle v. Warren, 2 Nebr. 241. Compare Cook, etc., Co. v. Hunt, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 314, 45 S. W. 153, holding that creditors not named as beneficiaries in a deed of trust could not question the validity of a subsequent deed on the ground that the prior deed had been executed. See also Hazlett v. Babcock, 64 Minn. 254, 66 N. W. 971, holding that the statutory presumption of fraud arising from the continued possession of the mortgagor only arose in favor of creditors of the mortgagor and purchasers from him.

A subsequent mortgagee must show that he accepted his mortgage without actual knowledge of the prior encumbrance which he alleges is fraudulent, but the constructive knowledge from record does not preclude him from raising the objection of fraud. Caulfield v. Curry, 63 Mich. 594, 30 N. W. 191. To same effect see American Lead Pencil Co. v. Champion, 57 Kan. 352, 46 Pac. 696, where the second mortgage was expressly subject to the prior one.

Release of the proceeds by the mortgagee after they have been turned over to him does not invalidate the mortgage, in the absence been held not to prevent an inference of fraud at law.[88] A fortiori the absence of any provision for accounting renders such a mortgage fraudulent and void as to creditors.[89]

In Arkansas leaving the mortgagor in possession of a stock of goods with a power of sale does not make a mortgage fraudulent when the proceeds of sales are to be turned over weekly to the mortgagees,[90] but in the absence of such an agreement for an accounting the mortgage is presumptively fraudulent,[91] and it has been held that a mortgage on a stock of goods from which sales are made by the mortgagor and to which goods are added by him is fraudulent in law and invalid.[92]

In Colorado, where a mortgagor is allowed by the terms of a mortgage to remain in possession of mortgaged property and sell it as his own, this constitutes fraud in law and renders the instrument invalid;[93] and a collateral permission to sell or apply proceeds of sales for the mortgagor's benefit has the same effect.[94]

In Connecticut, where no rights of third persons intervened, it was held that a mortgagee was entitled to a decree declaring a lien on the goods at the time the bill to foreclose was filed, although the mortgage gave the mortgagor a power of sale.[95]

In the District of Columbia, formerly, the reservation in a mortgage of a right for the mortgagor to dispose of the property rendered the transaction fraudulent and void,[98] but now the contrary rule is in force by reason of decisions in the supreme court of the United States.[99]

In Florida a mortgage of a stock of goods allowing the mortgagor to sell at his discretion without accounting for the proceeds has been held to be fraudulent per se as to creditors,[1] but the defense of fraud arising from such a provision cannot be raised by an assignee of the mortgagor[2] or by anybody except a third person whose claim is founded on a valuable consideration.[3]

In Georgia a mortgage with power of sale in the mortgagor is not fraudulent per se, for the code authorizes mortgages which shall attach to additions purchased to replenish stock;[4] but the mortgage can only cover goods equal to the amount on hand at the time the mortgage was executed.[5]

In Hawaii a clause in a mortgage of stock in trade allowing the mortgagor to retain possession till default and to sell the goods in the ordinary course of business is not conclusive evidence of fraud, but is open to examination.[6]

In Idaho, in the absence of a provision for turning the proceeds of sales over to the mortgagee, a provision in a mortgage giving the mortgagor authority to remain in possession and to sell makes it absolutely void as to creditors.[7]

In Illinois, where a mortgagor is authorized to remain in possession of a mortgaged stock of merchandise and to sell it at retail for his own benefit, the mortgage is absolutely void.[8] The agreement for such sale need not be contained in the instrument, and is equally effectual to invalidate the mortgage when shown to exist from attendant circumstances,[9] and it does not render the mortgage valid to require the mortgagor to account to the mortgagee for the proceeds of all sales,[10] or to hold them as agent for the mortgagee.[11]

In Indiana, under the statute making fraud a question of fact,[12] a mortgage giving the mortgagor a power to sell the mortgaged stock of goods and requiring him to account for the proceeds to the mortgagee is not fraudulent as a matter of law,[13] and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the mortgagor was required to account for the proceeds of sales.[14]

Agreements allowing sale.—It has been held that allowing a mortgagor to remain in possession of a stock of wines did not necessarily imply a power to sell, although he was a trader in liquors (Cleaves v. Herbert, 61 Ill. 126), and an agreement for sale was not established by facts showing that the mortgaged goods were not separated from the other stock belonging to the mortgagor and that the other stock was not of sufficient value to pay the mortgage debt (McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Dirreen, 38 Ill. App. 203); but where the mortgagee knowingly permitted the mortgagor to make sales in the ordinary course of trade the mortgage was void (Barnet v. Fergus, 51 Ill. 352, 99 Am. In Kansas, where a mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession of a mortgaged stock of goods and make sales therefrom without accounting for the proceeds, the mortgage is void.[17] It is not necessary that there be an agreement permitting the mortgagor to sell, and it is sufficient that sales are made with the knowledge and consent of the mortgagee;[18] but an arrangement for accounting for the proceeds of sales to the mortgagee will prevent the inference of fraud as a matter of law and justify the court in submitting to the jury the question of actual bad faith.[19]

In Kentucky allowing a mortgagor to retain possession of a stock of goods and continue to sell and replenish the stock in the ordinary course of business is a badge of fraud,[20] but no presumption of fraud arises where the proceeds of a sale of the stock are to be applied on the indebtedness due the mortgagee by the mortgagor.[21]

In Maine, although a mortgage allows the mortgagor to remain in possession of the property, make sales therefrom, and replenish the stock with the proceeds, it may be valid and will cover additions thus acquired.[22] A fortiori a power of sale in the mortgagor for the purpose of paying the mortgage debt does not render the mortgage fraudulent.[23] Nor does it where there is a provision for an accounting.[24]

In Maryland a mortgage has been held not to be invalid, although accompanied by a collateral agreement which allows the mortgagor to make sales from the mortgaged goods but requires him to turn the proceeds over to the mortgagee to be applied on the mortgage debt;[25] but such a mortgage does not cover future additions to stock, and the mortgagee asserting his lien has the burden of showing that the goods claimed were on the premises at the date of the mortgage.[26]

In Massachusetts a chattel mortgage of a stock in trade is not fraudulent per se, although the mortgagor is allowed to make sales therefrom and use the proceeds to replenish the stock.[27]

In Michigan a mortgage allowing the mortgagor to make sales from the mortgaged stock and apply the proceeds to his own use or to keep up the stock is not void in law, but the question of actual fraud must be submitted to the jury,[28]

In Minnesota, where a mortgage of a stock of goods contains a provision authorizing the mortgagor to sell in the ordinary course of trade, or there is a collateral understanding between the parties to the same effect, the instrument is fraudulent as a matter of law.[30] The existence of a collateral agreement allowing sales is one of fact to be submitted to a jury,[31] and it has been held that a stipulation that proceeds be paid directly on the mortgage debt will prevent the inference of fraud as a matter of law.[32]

Agreements authorizing sale.— Proof of sales by the mortgagor after the giving of the mortgage is not sufficient to show the existence of an agreement allowing mortgagor to sell (Filebeck v. Bean, 45 Minn. 307, 47 N. W. 469, where a mortgage stipulated that it should cover all future additions to stock, that the mortgagor should keep up the stock at all times to its present value, that until default he might use and enjoy the same, but that if he made any attempt to sell any part of it without the written consent of the mortgagee, the latter could take possession, and it was held that it did not expressly or by implication provide that the mortgagor could sell the mortgaged stock as his own.

Interpretation of mortgage.— The reservation of the right to make sales must appear so clearly from the face of the mortgage that all contrary evidence would be excluded as contradicting its terms, in order to justify a court in declaring it void on its face. Britton v. Criswell, 63 Miss. 394. Compare Baldwin v. Little, 64 Miss. 126, 8 So. 168, where a mortgage conveying a stock of merchandise and all future additions thereto was held not to be fraudulent on its face because it did not expressly authorize the mortgagor to continue

In Missouri, where a mortgage contains a stipulation whereby the mortgagor is allowed to make sales from the stock covered by the mortgage without accounting for the proceeds to the mortgagee, it is fraudulent as a matter of law and void as to creditors,[34] and an agreement for sale not contained in the mortgage itself is equally effectual to invalidate the mortgage it accompanies,[35] provided the two are contemporaneous,[36] but the question whether such an agreement exists is for

A provision for monthly accounting to the trustee in a mortgage deed of trust and for payment to him of all the proceeds to be applied, under his direction, to the payment of current expenses and in making purchases to replenish stock has been held not to prevent an inference of fraud in law. A mortgage was fraudulent as to a second mortgagee, where, prior to the giving of the second mortgage, the first mortgagee permitted sales to be made from the mortgaged goods without requiring that the mortgagor account for the proceeds. Sparks v. Brown, 46 Mo. App. 529.

Provisions in mortgage constituting a power of sale.— It has been held that to constitute a mortgage fraudulent upon its face the right of the mortgagor to remain in possession and dispose of the property must be a necessary inference from the wording of the instrument (Voorhis v. Langsdorf, 31 Mo. 451; State v. Nelson Distilling Co., 60 Mo. App. 437, 1 Mo. App. Rep. 169); and such an inference did not arise from the circumstance that the mortgage purported to cover after-acquired property (St. Louis Drug Co. v. Robinson, 81 Mo. 18; Thompson v. Foerstel, 10 Mo. App. 290), even though the goods were described as "now kept and offered for sale at my wareroom" (Hewson v. Tootle, 72 Mo. 632. But see State v. Busch, 38 Mo. App. 440, where it was held that a power in the mortgagor to substitute other goods for those originally covered made the mortgage void), that the mortgagor was allowed to supply any breakage, loss, or waste in the mortgaged sawmill (Jennings v. Sparkman, 48 Mo. App. 246), or that machinery, tools, and fixtures were to remain in the possession of the mortgagor for the purposes of his trade (State v. Tasker, 31 Mo. 445). But see Lodge v. Samuels, 50 Mo. 204, holding that a mortgage of the stock in trade of a manufacturer, whereby the mortgagor was to remain in possession and continue the business, was void as to creditors and purchasers.

In the absence of agreement a sale of the mortgaged goods by the mortgagor and a conversion of the proceeds to his own use does not invalidate the mortgage and render it fraudulent so that it will support an attachment. Hopkins v. Hastings, 21 Mo. App. 263.

Proof of agreement.— Where a mortgage included all the property used, bought, or belonging to the mortgagor "in the course of his usual trade or business," the same to be kept in his store, and there was evidence that the store was open and that the mortgagor employed a clerk, it was held that this would support a finding that he was selling the property for his own use. the jury.[37] A requirement that the mortgagor shall account to the mortgagee for the proceeds of all sales prevents the inference of fraud as a matter of law and renders the mortgage prima facie valid.[38]

In Montana a mortgage authorizing the mortgagor to remain in possession of the mortgaged property and to sell it at retail is not void unless the proceeds are applied to the mortgagor's own use.[39]

In Nebraska, in the absence of a provision that the proceeds of sales shall be applied on the mortgage debt, a mortgage authorizing the mortgagor to remain in possession of the mortgaged chattels and sell them is conclusively fraudulent.[40] Where the proceeds of sales are to be accounted for by the mortgagor, the mortgage is only presumptively fraudulent,[41] but the burden of proving good faith is on the mortgagee or those claiming under him.[42]

Sufficiency of accounting.—Where the mortgagor accounted for proceeds to the mortgagee but did not pay over the proceeds, it was held that the mortgage was not fraudulent as to creditors (Dunham v. Stevens, 160 Mo. 95, 60 S. W. 1064), and where a mortgagee received monthly payments without demanding an account, he was held not to have waived his right to such an accounting (Kerbs v. Zumwalt, 86 Mo. App. 128). Compare Vermont Marble Co. v. Achuff, 83 Mo. App. 42 (where it was held that a mortgagee could not allow a mortgagor to retain possession of the mortgaged chattels, bestow labor and skill upon them, and then sell them in the ordinary course of business, and only require him to account for the first cost of articles sold, without making the mortgage fraudulent); Smith-Wallace Shoe Co. v. Wilson, 63 Mo. App. 326, 1 Mo. App. Rep. 749 (where an agreement for an accounting was held to be sufficient, although there was a further stipulation that the mortgagee should make future advances for replenishing stock).

Keeping stock up.—An agreement to replace the property sold with other property of the same kind does not render valid a mortgage which would otherwise be void (McCarthy v. Miller, 41 Mo. App. 200); but an oral permission to sell on condition of keeping the stock up would only authorize sales in accordance with the condition (St. Louis Drug Co. v. Robinson, 81 Mo. 18). Compare Janssen v. Stone, 60 Mo. App. 402, 1 Mo. App. Rep. 101, where it was held that there was no presumption against a mortgagee that all the original stock was sold after three months.

Actual fraud was established where it was shown that the mortgagor continued to run the business as his own for eight months after the mortgage was given, without changing the name over the store and without rendering any account of proceeds of sales to the mortgagee. Where a mortgage expressly forbids sales, it is not fraudulent by reason of a permission for the mortgagor to remain in possession and carefully use the mortgaged goods which consisted of "wines, liquors, and cigars" on the premises, whether for consumption or otherwise. What constitutes a power of sale.—A power for the mortgagor to retain and use the mortgaged property does not necessarily imply that he is given a power of sale. Hedman v. Anderson, 6 Nebr. 392; Williams v. Evans, 6 Nebr. 216.

In the absence of any agreement allowing sales, it has been held that the mortgagee's consent that a small portion of the mortgaged property be turned over to a third person in payment of a debt would not of itself render the mortgage fraudulent and void as to creditors. Chicago Lumber Co. v. Fisher, 18 Nebr. 334, 25 N. W. 340.

41. Davis v. Scott, 22 Nebr. 154, 34 N. W. 353; Turner v. Killiam, 12 Nebr. 580, 12 N. W. 101.

Sales without consent of mortgagee.—Where a few articles of small value were sold by the servant of the mortgagor without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee, there was no ground for a conclusive presumption of fraud (Whitney v. Levon, 34 Nebr. 443, 51 N. W. 972), and it has been held that the mortgagee may either disavow such sale and retake the property, or ratify it and recover the proceeds of the sale (Burke v. Pender First Nat. Bank, 61 Nebr. 20, 84 N. W. 408, 87 Am. St. Rep. 447). Compare Houck v. Heinzman, 37 Nebr. 463, 55 N. W.

In Nevada, where there is a necessary inference from the face of a mortgage that the mortgagor may remain in possession and make sales for his own benefit, it is fraudulent per se and void,[43] and the same is true where the mortgagor is left in possession under a collateral agreement that he may make sales.[44]

In New Hampshire, where a mortgage of a stock of goods is accompanied by an agreement between the parties that the mortgagor may continue in possession and sell for his own benefit and sales are actually made, it is void as to creditors,[45] but the question as to the existence of such an agreement is one of fact.[46] Under the statute requiring written permission from the mortgagee to authorize sales,[47] it has been held that the written permission is subject to explanation by parol evidence,[48] and it is consistent with good faith for the mortgagor to sell and receive the proceeds as agent for the mortgagee.[49]

In New Jersey a mortgage of merchandise authorizing the mortgagor to sell in the regular course of business is not fraudulent per se,[50] for the mortgagor will be considered as acting as agent for the mortgagee.[51]

In New Mexico, where a mortgagor is allowed to retain possession of the mortgaged property and dispose of it in his own name in the usual course of business, the mortgage is void as to creditors.[52]

Sufficiency of agreement.— Actual sales by a mortgagor of the mortgaged merchandise with the mortgagee's knowledge and without his objection, is evidence of an assent thereto (Putnam v. Osgood, 52 N. H. 148); and an intention that proceeds of sales shall not be applied to the mortgage debt and that the mortgage is to protect the property from creditors is equivalent to an understanding that the mortgagor may dispose of it for his own benefit (Gerrish v. Gerrish, 63 N. H. 128).

A subsequent agreement allowing the mortgagor to sell and followed by sales in fact will render the mortgage void. Putnam v. Osgood, 52 N. H. 148.

While the law imposing a penalty for selling mortgaged chattels without the mortgagee's consent permits selling with his consent, it does not by that fact validate a mortgage as against creditors, under which the mortgagor retained possession for his own benefit. Putnam v. Osgood, 52 N. H. 148.

48. Wilson v. Sullivan, 58 N. H. 260, holding that fraud is not to be inferred from the omission of the mortgagee to declare, in a written permission of sale of the property, that the proceeds of the sale are to be applied to the extinguishment of the mortgage debt.

In New York, when a mortgagor is left in possession of the property[53] under an agreement that he may sell it and apply the proceeds to his own purposes, the mortgage is void in law and the question of actual fraud is immaterial.[54] Actual sales by the mortgagor need not be proved,[55] but there must be an agreement authorizing the sale,[56] and when there is none in the mortgage the existence of a collateral understanding between the parties is a question of fact and may be submitted to a jury.[57] When the stipulation regarding the power of sale further Suppl. 623, where a mortgagor was allowed to remain in possession of a stock of goods covered by an unrecorded mortgage for fifteen months and make sales therefrom without accounting for the proceeds, and it was held that a creditor could bring an action against the executor of the mortgagor's insolvent estate under the statute allowing a creditor to maintain an action to set aside any act of the debtor in fraud of creditors. But see New York Security, etc., Co. v. Saratoga Gas, etc., Co., 88 Hun (N. Y.) 569, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 890, 69 N. Y. St. 55, where the personal and real estate of an electric light company were covered by a mortgage and it was held that the mortgage was not fraudulent merely because the mortgagor was permitted to use and sell the property and apply proceeds for supplies, repairs, and general expenses.

An actual good motive will not serve to redeem the mortgage. Marston v. Vultee, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 129.

Action to set aside mortgage by creditor without judgment.— Where a chattel mortgage allowed the mortgagor to remain in possession of the mortgaged stock and apply the proceeds in the course of business and the mortgage had not been recorded, it was held that a creditor without a judgment could bring an action under N. Y. Laws (1897), c. 417, § 87, to have the mortgage set aside as an act in fraud of creditors. Boshart v. Easton, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 241, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 623 [affirmed in 67 N. Y. Collateral agreement.— An agreement allowing the mortgagor to sell the mortgaged stock need not be contained in the mortgage to make it fraudulent in law as against creditors of the mortgagor. Southard v. Benner, 72 N. Y. 424.

57. Manufacturers', etc., Bank v. Koch, 105 N. Y. 630, 12 N. E. 9; Gardner v. McEwen, 19 N. Y. 123; Williston v. Jones, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 504; Vreeland v. Pratt, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 307, 42 N. Y. St. 582; Gorman v. Park, 100 Fed. 553, 40 C. C. A. 537.

Proof of agreement.— It has been held that an agreement to allow the mortgagor of chattels to retain possession and sell may be shown by parol evidence or may be inferred from the acts of the parties. Hangen v. Hachemeister, 114 N. Y. 566, 21 N. E. 1046, 24 N. Y. St. 526, 11 Am. St. Rep. 691, 5 L. R. A. 137. Such an agreement may be inferred from the circumstance that the mortgagee permitted such sales to be made (Southard v. Benner, 72 N. Y. 424; Divver v. McLaughlin, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 596, 20 Am. Dec. 655), or where the mortgage was given to secure a preëxisting debt and the mortgagors were to remain in possession and carry on the business and apply the proceeds first to the expenses of the business which required a substantial part of the resulting product (Wait v. Bull's Head Bank, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 17,043, 19 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 500), but is not necessarily established by proof that sales of stock were made by the mortgagor with the mortgagee's knowledge (Frost v. Warren, 42 N. Y. 204; Wise v. Rider, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 782, 69 N. Y. St. 716; Hanrahan v. Roche, 22 Alb. L. L. 134) of a clause in the mortgage that the mortgagor was "to keep about the same stock on hand" (Stedman v. Batchelor, 4 Silv. Supreme (N. Y.) 544, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 37, 28 N. Y. St. 436), or by showing merely that the mortgagor is to be allowed to remain in possession till default (Simis v. Hodge, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 410, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 228, 21 N. Y. St. 955), and it is not sufficient that the creditor expected that part of the proceeds would be applied by the mortgagor for his own benefit (Brackett v. Harvey, 91 N. Y. 214). Compare Hincks v. Field, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 247, 37 N. Y. St. 724, where the business was to be sold in bulk and if any sales should be made at retail they would be simply for the purpose of placing the stock in a better condition for a sale in bulk, and it was held that there was no agreement for sale which would make the mortgage fraudulent in law.

requires that the proceeds shall be turned over to the mortgagee, this prevents the inference of fraud as a matter of law and the validity of the transaction depends on the actual intent of the parties,[58] but a collateral agreement to pay the receipts to the mortgagee is of no avail.[59]

In North Carolina, where a mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession with a power of sale, the mortgage is presumptively fraudulent,[60] and unless this presumption is rebutted by evidence the mortgage is fraudulent in law.[61]

58. Spaulding v. Keyes, 125 N. Y. 113, 26 N. E. 15, 34 N. Y. St. 588; Brackett v. Harvey, 91 N. Y. 214; Miller v. Lockwood, 32 N. Y. 293; Conkling v. Shelley, 28 N. Y. 360, 84 Am. Dec. 348; Ford v. Williams, 24 N. Y. 359; Ostrander v. Fay, 3 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 431, 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 586; Farmers' Bank v. Cowan, 2 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 88, 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 588, where it was agreed that mortgaged logs should be sawed into lumber and delivered to the mortgagee at a stated price which should be credited on the mortgage debt and the transaction was held not to be fraudulent in law.

An actual application of the proceeds of sales toward the extinguishment of the mortgage debt in accordance with the terms of an agreement is not necessary (Conkling v. Shelley, 28 N. Y. 360, 84 Am. Dec. 348; Sperry v. Baldwin, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 120), and it has been held sufficient that the mortgagee supposed the proceeds were to be applied in payment of the mortgage debt (Southard v. Pinckney, 5 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 184), for the proceeds are nevertheless to be credited on the sum secured by the mortgage Sperry v. Baldwin, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 120); Smith v. Ely, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,044, 10 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 553), and a subsequent judgment creditor may have an account taken of the sales made (Ellsworth v. Phelps, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 646); but failure to turn over proceeds of sales to the mortgagee according to agreement may be evidence of actual fraud (Rochester City Bank v. Westbury, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 458). In Sperry v. Baldwin, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 120, a second mortgagee of a stock of goods allowed sales to be made therefrom, and the first mortgagee knew of the sales, but it was held that the creditors of the mortgagor could not insist on having the proceeds credited on the first mortgage because the first mortgagee was not a party to the arrangement by which the sales were authorized. Compare Brackett v. Harvey, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 502, where the proceeds of sales were to be turned over to the mortgagee except such part as was necessary to replenish stock and support the mortgagor's family and it was held to be actually fraudulent, since one third of the mortgage debt remained unpaid at the end of two years.

Putting an agent of the mortgagee in the store to look after the mortgagee's interests has been held sufficient to rebut the inference of fraud in law arising from a power of sale in a mortgage on merchandise and to justify the court in submitting the question of fraud to the jury. Manufacturers', etc., Bank v. Koch, 105 N. Y. 630, 12 N. E. 9.

59. Ball v. Slafter, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 353.

Sufficiency of agreement to pay over proceeds.— A mortgage was held not to be fraudulent as an inference of law where the proceeds were to be paid to the mortgagor or used to replenish stock and new mortgages were to be executed on the additions thus acquired every sixty days (Brackett v. Harvey, 91 N. Y. 214; Kerr v. Dildine, 6 N. Y. St. 163); where the mortgagor was authorized to take good business paper and turn it over to the mortgagee, even though there was an understanding that he might use a portion of proceeds of sales for his own benefit (Brackett v. Harvey, 91 N. Y. 214); but where the accounts obtained from sales made on credit were to be turned over to the mortgagee at once, but not applied on the mortgage debt till collected, the transaction was fraudulent per se (Rochester City Bank v. Westbury, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 458); and it is not sufficient to prevent the mortgage from being fraudulent in law for the mortgagor to agree to pay over a certain sum monthly or more or less according to the profits (Randall v. Carman, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 84, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 53, 69 N. Y. St. 466).

C. 335 (where it was held that such a mortgage approached the verge of being on its face fraudulent in law); Cheatham v. Hawkins, 80 N. C. 161 (where the wording of the instrument in not allowing the mortgagees to take possession unless there was an "unreasonable" depreciation in value was held to be most cogent intrinsic evidence of fraud).

61. Boone v. Hardie, 87 N. C. 72.

The inference of fraud was not rebutted by proof that the debt secured was bona fide and that the insolvency of the mortgagor was unknown to the mortgagee. Holmes v. Marshall, 78 N. C. 262.

The presumption of fraud was rebutted by testimony of the mortgagor that at the time of making the mortgage he expected other money with which to discharge the debt and had no intention to defraud his creditors (Phifer v. Erwin, 100 N. C. 59, 6 S. E. 672); and by evidence that the mortgage was executed to secure the purchase-price of new goods and that large amounts had been paid on the mortgage debt in a short time (Kreth v. Rogers, 101 N. C. 263, 7 S. E. 682).

A right to replenish stock necessarily im-

In North Dakota, although it has been held that a mortgage authorizing the mortgagor to make sales from the mortgaged stock is not fraudulent per se, when the mortgagor is required to keep an accurate account and turn over proceeds daily,[62] a subsequent decision inclines strongly to the view that a doctrine of constructive fraud exists which will be applied on a proper occasion.[63]

In Ohio a mortgage is void without regard to the actual intent of the parties when it allows the mortgagor to remain in possession and sell, either by a stipulation upon the face of the mortgage[64] or by a collateral understanding between the parties;[65] but it has subsequently been held that a requirement that the proceeds of sales be turned over to the mortgagee prevents the inference of fraud as a matter of law.[66]

In Oklahoma, where the mortgagor was authorized to sell a mortgaged stock of goods in the ordinary course of business, pay necessary expenses, and replenish stock, the mortgage was void as a matter of law as to creditors, without regard to the actual intent of the parties.[67]

In Oregon, when a stipulation in a mortgage or an agreement collateral to it permits the mortgagor to have full power to dispose of the property, the mortgage is per se fraudulent and void,[68] but in order that a disposition by the mort-plies a right for the mortgagor to sell. Bynum v. Miller, 89 N. C. 393.

Application of proceeds.— Where one of a firm of mortgagors was authorized to sell goods and receive proceeds as agent for the mortgagee, the proceeds coming into such agent's hands extinguished the mortgage debt pro tanto and further use of such proceeds by the agent created a new debt which was not secured by the original mortgage. 62. Red River Valley Nat. Bank v. Barnes, 8 N. D. 432, 79 N. Security Co. v. Great Western Elevator Co., 6 N. D. 407, 71 N. W. 130, where it was held that the mortgagee lost his lien on property sold with his consent, although the mortgagor converted the proceeds.

63. Bergman v. Jones, 10 N. D. 520, 88 N. W. 284, where a chattel mortgage of firm property, executed to secure preëxisting individual debts of partners, which allowed the mortgagors to continue the business, reserved the right to sell the mortgaged goods for cash and out of the proceeds to replenish the stock and pay the expenses of the business, and which provided for the payment of the net proceeds of the business to the mortgagees, was held to be void, as its effect was to delay partnership creditors and it was primarily for the benefit of the mortgagors.

Necessity and effect of actual sales.— In the absence of an agreement actual sales by the mortgagor of the mortgaged property will not make the mortgage fraudulent in law (Ford v. Miller, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 603, 5 Ohio N. P. 512); but where the mortgagor has authority to sell, his failure to take advantage of such an agreement will not render the mortgage valid (Griefenkamp v. Beal, 21 Ohio Cir. In Rhode Island whether a mortgage containing a power to the mortgagor to sell is fraudulent is a question of fact for the jury,[70] but legal title to future-acquired property will not vest in the mortgagee[71] until he obtains possession of the property.[72]

In South Carolina whether a mortgage which gives the mortgagor a power to make sales from the mortgaged stock, replenish it, and carry on business is fraudulent or not is a question of fact.[73]

In South Dakota, where a mortgage allows the mortgagor to make sales from the mortgaged stock and appropriate the proceeds for his own use, it is presumptively fraudulent only,[74] and where the mortgagor is to account for proceeds the mortgage is not even presumptively fraudulent.[75] In either case the question of good faith is one of fact.[76]

In Tennessee a mortgage of a stock in trade is void in law when the mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession and make sales at retail.[77]

In Texas a mortgage which allows the mortgagor to remain in possession of the mortgaged property and dispose of it is fraudulent per se by force of legislative enactment.[78]

Sales by mortgagor as agent.— The former doctrine that the mortgagor might sell as agent for the mortgagee and account for the proceeds without rendering the mortgage fraudulent (Hickman v. Perrin, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 135) must be regarded as overruled (Tennessee Nat. Bank v. Ebbert, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 153). Compare Saunders v. Turbeville, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 271, where the mortgagor had the right to continue selling, but was required to account for proceeds, and it was held not to be evidence of fraud that he applied a portion of the proceeds to pay a debt not secured by the conveyance, where the mortgagees were ignorant of such application.

A mortgage on part only of the stock of goods offered for sale by the mortgagor is within the prohibition of the statute. Avery v. Waples, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 672, 49 S. W. 151.

Prior to the statute it had been held that a mortgage of the kind under consideration was not fraudulent in law and that it was a usurpation of the province of the jury for the court to hold it so. Scott v. Alford, 53 Tex. 82, where the case of Peiser v. Peticolas, 50 Tex. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 621, in which the court incline to the doctrine of fraud in law, is explained on the ground that the court were sitting in the joint capacity of judge and jury and that there was actual fraud. Compare Bettes v. Weir Plow Co., 84 Tex. 543, 19 S. W. 705, holding that the statute was but a declaration of the common law.

In Utah a mortgage on a stock of goods is void if it permits the mortgagor to remain in possession and sell in the usual course of trade,[79] and it is immaterial whether the permission is contained in the mortgage or in a collateral agreement.[80]

In Vermont a mortgage which allows the mortgagor to sell portions of the mortgaged property and replace it with other property of similar kind and value is not fraudulent per se.[81]

In Virginia a mortgage deed of trust which allows the mortgagor to deal with the property as his own and make sales therefrom is inconsistent with the idea of a bona fide security and is fraudulent per se.[82]

In Washington a mortgage upon a stock of merchandise is not rendered fraudulent per se by an accompanying parol agreement that the mortgagor may remain in possession, make sales at retail, and use part of the proceeds to replenish stock, but the question of fraud depends on the actual intent of the parties.[83]

As between the parties, it has been held that the statute declaring a mortgage with power of sale in the mortgagor to be fraudulent per se has no application. Parker v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1891) 27 S. W. 1071.

A conditional sale of goods to a merchant under an agreement by which title is not to pass till the purchase-price is paid is not within the provisions of the statute making invalid mortgages of goods exposed for sale. Bowen v. Lansing Wagon Works, 91 Tex. 385, 43 S. W. 872.

Agreements allowing sale.— Where the maker of a deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage disposed of a few articles of merchandise after the deed was delivered, but without the knowledge of the trustee, and it did not appear that the maker knew the exact time when the deed was delivered, an agreement allowing the grantor to remain in possession was not established sufficiently to invalidate the deed. Byrd v. Perry, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 378, 26 S. W. 749.

Sales by the mortgagor as agent.— It has been held, both before (Crow v. Red River County Bank, 52 Tex. 362) and after (Bettes v. Weir Plow Co., 84 Tex. 543, 19 S. W. 705) the passing of the statute on this subject, that sales by the mortgagor as agent do not render a mortgage fraudulent in law. Compare Smith v. Moore, (Tex. App. 1891) 15 S. W. 910, where there was a simulated change of possession and a pretense that the mortgagor sold as agent for the mortgagee and the good faith of such arrangements was held to be for the jury.

79. McKibbon v. Brigham, 18 Utah 78, 55 Pac. 66, holding that a compliance with the recording statute which required that a mortgage must be accompanied by an affidavit of good faith and recorded when the mortgagor remained in possession did not render such a mortgage valid.

But see Wilson v. Wallace, 67 Vt. 646, 32 Atl. 501, where, subsequently to the execution of a mortgage, the parties entered into an agreement whereby the mortgagor was authorized to dispose of the entire mortgaged property by a single transaction and for his own benefit and it was held that this agreement rendered the mortgage invalid as to creditors of the mortgagor.

(Va.) 410 (where the court reason that, since the mortgagor could sell the mortgaged property free from the lien of the mortgage, there could be no inducement to take the mortgage as security and it must have been accepted for the purpose of defrauding other creditors).

An implied power for the mortgagor to remain in possession and make sales is equally effective in making a mortgage void. Perry v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 755. But see Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 390, where it was held that the court would not presume fraud unless the terms of the instrument precluded any other inference.

The mortgage was not fraudulent where one of the mortgagors was authorized to attend to the business of selling the stock at retail under the control of the mortgagee, who could require a sale at auction at any time (Marks v. Hill, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 400), or where a deed of trust conveying land, farming implements, horses, cattle, etc., and allowing the grantor to remain in possession for three years, provided that the property might be sold within the three years at the instance of the grantor (Sipe v. Earman, 26 Gratt. In West Virginia a mortgage of merchandise which authorizes the mortgagor to remain in possession and sell is fraudulent in law and void as to creditors,[84] but a mortgage to secure purchase-money, accompanied by a parol authority to make sales and use the proceeds to replenish stock, has been held to be valid as to subsequent creditors of the purchaser.[85]

In Wisconsin a mortgage was formerly[86] fraudulent on its face when it allowed the mortgagor to continue in possession of the mortgaged stock of goods, make sales therefrom, and appropriate the proceeds to his own use,[87] and it was also fraud per se to allow the mortgagor to dispose of the property by an agreement collateral to the mortgage;[88] but there must be an agreement or understanding between the parties[89] and the existence of one was a question of fact.[90] provision for application of proceeds, where it appeared that they were applied in payment of the ordinary expenses of the business and in reduction of claims against the mortgagor for which the mortgagee was liable as surety, and it further appeared that no goods were added to the stock after the giving of the mortgage.

The former doctrine was that a mortgage permitting the mortgagor to make sales from the mortgaged stock was fraudulent on its face (Byrd v. Forbes, 3 Wash. Terr. 318, 13 Pac. 715), unless the proceeds of sales were to be accounted for to the mortgagee (Langert v. Brown, 3 Wash. Terr. 102, 13 Pac. 704), for then the amounts received would be credited on the mortgage debt, whether they were received by the mortgagee or not (Warren v. His Creditors, 3 Wash. 48, 28 Pac. 257).

85. Conaway v. Stealey, 44 W. Va. 163, 28 S. E. 793.

What constitutes a power of sale.— It was held that an absolute power of sale could be inferred from a provision in a deed that the mortgagor bound himself to keep always on hand a stock of goods equal in quality, description, and value to the property therein mentioned (Garden v. Bodwing, 9 W. Va. 121); but merely extending a trust deed to future-acquired property does not make it fraudulent as allowing the mortgagor to replenish stock when there is no power of sale (Baer Sons Grocer Co. v. Williams, 43 W. Va. 323, 27 S. E. 345).

86. The present doctrine, in force by virtue of 1 Wis. Annot. Stat. (1889), § 2316b, allows the mortgagor to make sales and apply the proceeds on the mortgage debt without rendering the mortgage fraudulent.

N. 85, 2 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 405, 4 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 378. But see Roundy v. Converse, 71 Wis. 524, 37 N. W. 811, 5 Am. St. Rep. 240, where it was held that an implied permission for the mortgagor to sell would not make the mortgage fraudulent, in the absence of proof of an understanding that the proceeds might be applied to the mortgagor's own use.

An application of any part of the proceeds of sales to the mortgagor's own use made the mortgage fraudulent, although the balance was to be applied on the mortgage debt. Blakeslee v. Rossman, 43 Wis. 116.

Application of proceeds.— Where a portion of the proceeds from sales of the mortgaged stock were paid into the mortgagee's bank and checked out and the bank officials were familiar with these transactions, this was held to show an agreement that the proceeds might be applied to the mortgagor's use in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Durr v. Wildish, 108 Wis. 401, 84 N. W. 437. Compare Chas. Baumbach Co. v. Hobkirk, 104 Wis. 488, 80 N. W. 740, where one mortgagee testified that he supposed the mortgagor would use the proceeds to pay debts and for the support of his family, and the other mortgagee denied that there was any such agreement but admitted that he knew the manner of conducting the business, and this was held to show an implied agreement that the mortgagor might apply the proceeds of sales to his own use.

Proof of agreement.— Where a mortgage included a drug stock and other articles not intended for sale, and there was a stipulation that the mortgagor might remain in possession and should keep the property in as good condition as it then was, it was held that sales by the mortgagor were not authorized. Kalk v. Fielding, 50 Wis. 339, 7 N. W. 296.

Where property was included by mistake it was held that the parties could release it from the lien of the mortgage without rendering the transaction fraudulent. Allen v. Kennedy, 49 Wis. 549, 5 N. W. 906.

Holding possession for benefit of mortgagee, as where materials were manufactured by the mortgagor on a contract with the mortgagee, does not render a mortgage void as to creditors of the mortgagor. Knapp v. Deitz, 64 Wis. 31, 24 N. W. 471.

In Wyoming, under the statute[91] declaring that mortgages giving the mortgagor a right to sell at retail shall be valid, it has been held that application of the proceeds of sales toward payment of the mortgage debt is not necessary.[92]

3. Doctrine of Federal Courts. In deciding whether a mortgage containing a power for the mortgagee to sell is fraudulent per se or whether its validity depends on the actual intent of the parties, the federal courts follow the doctrine of the state court in which the controversy arose,[93] for this is regarded as a rule of the law of property;[94] but in the absence of binding adjudications, it would be held that the question of fraud in a mortgage of the kind under discussion would be one of fact for the jury.[95]

4. Doctrine of English Courts. The question of fraud is to be determined as one of fact, although the mortgagor remains in possession of the mortgaged property with a power of disposal,[96] and the same doctrine is law in Canada.[97]

5. Effect on Property Not Included in Power of Sale. Where a power of sale contained in a mortgage covers only a part of the property subject thereto, it has been generally held that, although the mortgage is void in part, it is valid as to the property not included in the power of sale;[98] while the more

The mortgagee's power of sale, where it was agreed that either party might sell the property at a certain price or better and apply proceeds on the mortgage debt, has been held to authorize him to sell for cash only, and hence the purchaser could not set off a balance due him from the mortgagor against the latter's share of the purchase-money. 92. McCord v. Albany County Nat. Bank, 6 Wyo. 507, 46 Pac. 1093, holding that a mortgage containing a power of sale and covering after-acquired property would be a prior lien on after-acquired property as against a subsequent mortgage, although the second mortgage specified the goods on hand and those that might be acquired and the earlier one did not.

Constructive fraud in a chattel mortgage is cured when the mortgagee rightfully takes possession before levy on the property under process against the mortgagor. State v. Roever, 55 Mo. App. 448. Compare Fergus Falls First Nat. Bank v. Anderson, 24 Minn. 435, where the chattel mortgage was fraudulent as to creditors, but the mortgagor surrendered possession of the property before the mortgage was attacked and it was held that such surrender rendered the mortgage valid.

E. 959, where an insolvent debtor gave a chattel mortgage to certain creditors, which was recorded, and then made an assignment for the benefit of creditors and put his assignee in possession, and the assignee of the mortgage replevied the mortgaged property, bid it in at the mortgage sale, and took possession, and it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to the chattels, as against a subsequent execution creditor, even though the mortgage and assignment were void, because the insolvent, if he chose, might have preferred such creditors by turning over his property.

Delivery to the mortgagee after levy will not render valid a mortgage which is void because of an agreement that the mortgagee may retain possession and sell the mortgaged property. Quinn, etc., Brewing Co. v. Hart, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 393, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 388, 16 N. Y. St. 321.
